PREFACE

TO THE

THIRD and LAST SECTION of PART THE SECOND.

IN publishing all that remains to complete the SECOND PART of these Travels, the author has the satisfaction of making some addition to his former remarks, upon certain antiquities which appear to him likely to illustrate, in a very remarkable manner, the customs, and the religion, and the language of ANTIENT GREECE.

Ever since the first notice of the characters of the Greek alphabet upon the terra-cotta vases, found in the sepulchres of the south of Italy, decided the fact of their Hellenic origin, a hope had been entertained, that new and copious sources of information, touching the arts and literature of Greece, would be brought to light by researches among among the tombs of the mother country. Nearly half a century, however, elapsed, from the time that this expectation was originally excited, without any considerable discovery being made tending towards its fulfilment. Above twenty years ago, the author was at Naples with his friend the late Sir William Hamilton, who had long indulged this expectation, when the return of two English gentlemen, Messrs. Berners and Tilson, from their travels in Greece, (who brought with them terra-cotta vases similar to those called Etruscan, but which they had derived from sepulchres in Græcia Propria.) tended greatly to its fulfilment. These, and other vases, discovered by Englishmen travelling in Greece, or by their agents living at Athens, have been occasionally discovered; but they were principally vessels of libation, or small pateras and cups, with little or no ornament, excepting a plain black varnish, or, at the most, a few lines hastily scratched with a sharp instrument upon their surfaces, or traced in colour by way of cincture or border. Nothing that could be considered as fair specimens of Grecian painting, nor any inscriptions, appeared upon those terra-cottas. What the result of the author's own researches in Græcia Propria was, may be seen by reference to the account he has published in the former Section, and especially in the Sixteenth Chapter, to which an engraving is annexed, representing the principal terra-cottas therein described':

yet few persons have been more zealous in their researches after such antiquities than he was; because he had for many years looked forward to the contribution they might offer to the taste and the literature of his country. Since his departure from Athens, some excavations made by the two rival artists, Lusieri and Fauvel, whose merits he has before noticed, began to realize the prospect so long, and so generally, formed. Their discoveries were followed by a still more extensive examination of the soil near Athens, conducted under the patronage of several persons from this country; but by none more successfully than by Mr. Dodwell, by Mr. Graham, and by Mr. Burgon. The representation of a fine vase belonging to Mr. Dodwell has been already published²; but the more important discoveries of Mr. Graham, and of Mr. Burgon of Smyrna, as connected with the arts and the literature of Greece, and with a subject so often alluded to in these Travels, demand all the attention which it is now in the author's power to bestow upon a topic he has already discussed.

Mr. Graham, being at Athens, caused an excavation to be made near the supposed site of the Academy, on the left-hand side of the antient paved-way, leading from Athens to Thebes. Such was his success, that he discovered and brought to this country nearly a thousand vases, of a nature and quality so extraordinary, that in some instances, as will presently appear, nothing like them had ever been seen before.

(2) See Moses's Collection &c. of Vases, Plate 3. Lord. 1814.

before. Their discovery amounts to nothing less than the development of a series of original pictures, painted upon the most durable of all substances, representing the arts, the mythology, the religious ceremonies, and the habits of the ATHENIANS, in the earliest periods of their history. Upon some of these vessels, the colours, the gilding, and the lettering, remain as fresh as when they were deposited in the tombs of Attica, more than two thousands years ago. Upon one Athenian tripod chalice is pictured the altercation between Minerva and Neptunc for Attica; at which all the superior Gods of Greece presided: consequently, this chalice has been made to exhibit a complete PANTHEON, by a series of designs, equal in the style of their execution to any of the Grecian paintings preserved upon the terra-cottas of Nola in the South of Italy; and, to add to the value of this curious mythological document, the Greek names of all the assembled Deities are inscribed above their heads, in very legible characters.

The style of painting upon those vases varies so considerably, that almost every branch of the art known to the Greeks may be observed upon them; from the most ancient specimens of the style called monochrome by *Pliny*¹, where the figures were delineated only as shadows, by a black colour traced upon a red ground; down to the period in which more elaborate designs, in the monochrome style, were represented, by an outline of the liveliest vermilion,

(1) "Secundam singulis coloribus, et monochromaton dictam," &c. Plinio, lib. xxxv. Hist. Nat. tom. III. p. 417. L. Bat. 1635.

*vermilion*², upon a surface which is perfectly white. This last style of painting differs from every other, in one lamentable character; that, instead of sustaining the action of acids, which are commonly used in cleansing these *vases*³, they will not bear even the application of water; and being found covered with dirt, it is very difficult to develop the vermilion painting uninjured. Fortunately, one of the finest pictures in this style has escaped; and the whole of the design has been rendered visible, by carefully scraping the surface with very sharp knives; changing them often, so as to preserve an edge as keen as possible⁴: The subject represented⁵ appears to relate to the popular and affecting story of the visit paid by Electra to the tomb of her father Agamemnon, when she discovers the votive offerings already left there by her brother Orestes, previous to their interview; a story related differently by Euripides and Sophocles, and of course, like any other popular tale, liable to many varieties of relation and of representation.

The

(2) Murice tinctoria; the φοίνιξ of the Greeks. In more than one instance, regal robes are represented upon the Athenian terra-cottas, of a vermilion colour.

(3) The generality of the Grecian vases will sustain the highest temperature of a Porcelain furnace, without any alteration in the colours upon their surfaces.

(4) The whole success of this experiment is due to the patience and skill of ONE to whom the author has been before indebted for the embellishment of his Travels, and to whose taste and talents he owes the design whence the Frontispiece to this Volume has been engraved. First, by tracing the outline upon the vase itself, to ensure the utmost fidelity; and afterwards, by imitating the hue and disposition of the vermilion colour with all possible exactness; a faithful copy has been delineated of an Athenian monochrome picture.

(5) See the Frontispiece.

The journey of Orestes is denoted by the symbol of the staff which he bears in his left hand: and the curious circumstance of the chaplet, as connected with sepulchral vows, will not be viewed without interest¹, by persons who have noticed the frequent examples of resemblance between antient and modern customs; as it clearly proves, that the chaplets suspended in the hands of angels upon the old monuments of our churches had their origin, like many other of our religious customs, in Heathen superstitions and ceremonies².

Another circumstance discovered by the paintings upon those vases, is too important to be omitted in a work which professes to treat of the antiquities of Greece. The origin not only of the Ionic volute in architecture, but of the symbol denoting water, as it has been figured by Grecian sculptors in their marble friezes and cornices, and upon antient medals and gems, and was used for borders to their pictured vases, appears, from an entire series of designs upon the terra-cottas found by Mr. Graham, to have been derived from a superstitious veneration shewn to a certain aquatic plant, as yet unknown; but which will not long escape the notice of botanists, to whom the plants of Greece shall become familiar. It is represented under such a variety of circumstances, and with so many remarkable associations, that no doubt can remain as to the fact. Sometimes this figure alone is introduced, with an aquatic bird swimming towards it: in other instances Genii are represented as fostering it³; and the curvature is so formed, as to exhibit the origin of this well-known border.

In one example, the same volute is borne by a winged Genius in the *right hand*⁴; and in other instances, the plant appears terminated by its flower, as in a state of fructification; a Muse, or Genius, but without wings, being introduced as holding a mirror over it. When to the form of the flower, which is threefold, the volute appears on either side, we have the representation of an ornament conspicuous upon the cornices of many of the most magnificent temples of Antient Greece; it then appears in this manner:

From all which it may appear to be evident, as the author has

has elsewhere affirmed, that in the painting and sculpture of the antient Grecians, exhibited on their sepulchral vases, and gems, and medals, and sacred buildings, and whatsoever else had any reference to their religion, nothing was represented that ought to be considered merely as a fanciful decoration. The ornament, in itself, was strictly historical; it consisted of symbols, which were severally so many records of their faith and worship. Like the hieroglyphics of Egypt, they were the signs of a language perhaps known only to the priests; but it was circumscribed by the most rigid canons; and, while the matchless beauty of the workmanship demanded admiration, the sanctity of the symbolical representation excited reverence.

With regard to the great antiquity of those pictured vases, as a proof that the author does not err in referring some of them to the most remote periods of the Grecian history, he has only to mention the style of writing which they sometimes exhibit. In this view of the subject, a vase discovered by Mr. Burgon, and now in his possession, is doubly valuable; because the inscription it has preserved¹, while it manifests the great antiquity of the vase itself, also makes known in the most satisfactory manner the uses to which these vessels were appropriated, before they were placed within the sepulchres. It represents on

(1) For the description of this remarkable Vase, and the inscription found upon it, the author is entirely indebted to Thomas Burgon, Esq. of Smyrna; who not only supplied him with a fac-simile of the inscription, but also brought to Cambridge his own valuable designs, faithfully copied from the original vase, which is at present in Turkey.

on one side a charioteer, *seated*² in his car, drawn by two horses at full speed; he is urging them with a goad which he bears in his right hand, and guiding them with a long wand; this he holds in his left hand, and to the extremity of it two balls are fastened. Upon the other side is seen the image of Minerva, represented by a picture so uncommonly antient, that nothing like it has ever appeared. The painting consists of three colours; a dingy red, black, and white. The figure of Minerva is delineated in the black colour; but her attire is red, and her face, hands, and feet, are white. Instead of a helmet, she wears upon her head the red fez, now in use among the modern Greeks; from the top of which a crest rises, like that of a helmet. Instead of the Gorgon upon her shield, a Dolphin is represented; thereby denoting her antient relationship to Venus and Astarte. Her hair falls straight down her back; and it is collected into a queue, pointed at the end: this part of the design is traced in a wavy zig-zag outline, which is purely Etruscan. The same may be said of her zone, and the border of her red petticoat, whereon the labyrinthine maze is figured, but in the driest Etruscan taste. Instead of an Owl above her head, there appears a Harpy: there is, however, an Owl over the figure of the charioteer. Minerva is represented in the act of combating: and before the figure of the Goddess,—that is to say,

signifying either

I · AM · A · PRIZE · GIVEN · BY · ATHENS

or, supposing AΘENEON to mean the festival,

I · AM · THE · PRIZE · OF · THE · ATHENÆA

The oldest form of writing was that from right to left, as it here appears: the Greeks derived it from the Phœnicians. Next they wrote βουστροφῶνδον; and afterwards wholly from left to right. This vase, as it is evident, was a prize obtained at Athens, because it bears the “arms and crest” of the city, in the images of Minerva and the Owl. Probably it was gained at the festival, when competitors came from all parts of Greece, and the victors received ἰδρύαι filled with oil, which were vessels made of terra-cotta, and painted, as it appears from the following curious passage of *Pindar*¹, thus rendered by the author’s learned friend the Rev. Charles James Blomfield, when corresponding with him upon the subject of this truly archaic inscription :

“ The songs have twice proclaimed him victor in the “festivals of the ATHENIANS; and the produce of the olive, “contained

“ contained in burned earth, has come to Argos in the “ variegated circumference of vases².”

It is not unlikely that the word ΑΘΕΝΕΟΝ alludes to this great festival; called Atheneæ before the title of τὰ Ἀθηναῖα was changed to τὰ Παναθηναῖα. This is said to have happened after the time of Theseus or *Erichonius*³; although the term τὰ Ἀθηναῖα occur in the modern Scholiast on Aristophanes. According to Mr. Blomfield, the word in question is the old genitive, from Ἀθῆναι⁴. Yet it must be observed, that the use of ΑΘΛΟΝ with the genitive of a city is very unusual; and another learned Hellenist, R. P. Knight, Esq. believes that it never was thus used, nor with any other Ἀγωνοθέτης. Mr. Knight adheres to the opinion that ΑΘΕΝΕΟΝ means the festival; but he does not carry back the antiquity of the vase much beyond the sixtieth Olympiad, five hundred and thirty-six years before the Christian æra: allowing, however, for the age of this remarkable vase, a period equal to two thousand three hundred and fifty-one years.

It remains now to add a few words respecting the other subjects treated of in this and the preceding Sections of PART THE SECOND. A casual reader, who has not considered the importance of attending to every object likely to serve as a land-mark in the topography and geography of GREECE, may perhaps think that too much attention has sometimes been bestowed upon the existence of a fountain; or of a bridge over an insignificant stream; or of a tumulus; or of the capital or shaft of a Doric or of an Ionic column; or any other apparently trivial relique connected with the antient history of the country;—not being aware, that, in very many cases, these remains are the only beacons we can have, to guide our course, in penetrating the thick darkness now covering this “land of lost Gods and men;” and in adapting passages from antient authors for the illustration of its antiquities and history. Such objects, noticed by one traveller, are afterwards made use of by another, as clues to discoveries of much greater importance. It sometimes happens, that a large portion of antient history may be proved to have a connection with the meanest vestige of a former age. This is particularly true of Inscriptions: the scholar, who seeks only the gratification of his literary taste by the archaïcal characters, or by the sense conveyed in an inscription, may deem the insertion of such poor fragments as contain only a single name, or an imperfect legend (perhaps consisting of half a line, and sometimes of half a word), altogether unnecessary. He will be ready to ask, wherefore an inscription at Marathon, containing only the letters KAIN, and these too in very large capitals, was deemed worthy of a place in this work? To which there is this answer: It was necessary to prove that the ruins, where these letters appeared, were truly Grecian; and

and to afford, by an accurate specimen of the characters, as much information respecting their antiquity as it was possible to afford;—for by attention to such circumstances, more intelligence is frequently conveyed by a few letters, than by whole pages of dissertation.

In the examination of this Last Section of PART THE SECOND, the Reader will find many things unnoticed by former travellers; although some of the discoveries made by the author have found their way into other publications, without any notice of the person from whom they were originally derived. Owing to the unavoidable delay that has attended the publication of this part of his work, it was natural to expect that this would happen: having never withheld what he knew, when applied to for information respecting the country, he may attribute to his own disregard of anticipation any use that subsequent travellers have made of his observations. Before he visited Greece, the sites of several places, famous in antiquity, were as much unknown as many that still remain to be pointed out. He succeeded in ascertaining some of them for the first time; for example, the cities of TITHOREA and PLATÆA; the Corycian Cave, near DELPHI, &c.: and by his discovery of an Inscription in the DEFILE OF TEMPE¹, the exact locality of that celebrated PASS can never again become a subject of dispute.

With regard to subjects of Natural History, such as Botany and Mineralogy, the author has kept these, as much as possible, from interrupting his narrative, where it related

(1) See page 292 of this Section.

either to statistical or to classical information. But as it is important to mark the situation of newly-discovered and non-descript plants, he has introduced the new species only, as they happened to occur, in the Notes; always accompanying their insertion with a description of their discriminative characters, as in former instances;—an entire List of all the Plants found during these travels in GREECE, EGYPT, and the HOLY LAND, being added in the Appendix. His mineralogical remarks would have been more extensive, had the appearance of simple minerals been more frequent; but it is chiefly in a geological view that there is any thing yet worthy of observation in the LEVANT; and even to the geologist, the eastern shores of the Mediterranean, and those of the Archipelago, exhibit little variety. The mountains are so uniformly of limestone, that, with respect to GREECE, if we except the breccia formation around MYCENÆ, and in the substratum of the rock of the Acropolis at ATHENS, hardly any other substance can be found¹. In the north of GREECE, indeed, and in MACEDONIA, some very remarkable changes occur; as, the serpentine breccia, or verde-antico, in THESSALY; and that curious aggregate of black amphibole and white feldspar, called by Italian lapidaries “bianco é nêro antico,” in MACEDONIA. Other varieties of hornblende porphyry occur also in THRACE; particularly one variety, resembling lava, in the great plain of Chouagilarkîr, near the foot of a chain of mountains called Karowlan, a branch of RHODOPE.

A contrary

(1) Dr. Holland (Travels, &c. p. 397. Lond. 1815.) thinks “that the great limestone formation of GREECE and the Isles is particularly liable to the phenomena of earthquakes.”

A contrary rule has been observed in writing the Supplement, which contains an account of the author's journey from Constantinople to Vienna. Here, as the subject related principally to the mines of Transylvania and Hungary, instead of compressing his mineralogical observations into the form of notes, he was frequently compelled not only to give them a place in the text, but sometimes to sacrifice other topics of discussion, in order to introduce them. As to mineralogy, indeed, unless some judicious mode of nomenclature be adopted by the concurrence of writers upon this subject, instead of the jargon now prevalent, the science will become characterized by confusion as fearful as that of Babel. Not only every new writer, but every new professor of mineralogy, and almost every dealer in minerals, conceives himself authorized either to introduce new names, or to revive old appellations that had long been laid aside: hence it follows, that in naming any simple mineral, or mineral aggregate, in order to be intelligible, it is necessary to use a list of synonyms, which is every day increasing². It is easy to propose propose a remedy for this evil. The Geological Society of London,—whose “TRANSACTIONS” already reflect so much credit upon their institution, and are become so deservedly popular,—assisted, if possible, by deputies from other Societies, might establish a British, if not an European system of Nomenclature. And surely if the valedictory observations of the celebrated and venerable Bishop WATSON, upon the GREAT NATIONAL IMPORTANCE of mineralogical studies, be worthy of regard¹, the æra of an universal Peace will not pass without some effort being made for this purpose.

In the description of the Gold and Silver Mines of Hungary, the mineralogical associations of the precious metals, and the whole process relating to the German method of treating their ores, have been detailed within a small compass, and, it is hoped, in a perspicuous manner, that they might become intelligible to every reader. While collecting materials for this addition to his work, the author was assisted by information from the Archdukes Anton and Reiner, brothers of the present Emperor of Germany, during their visit to those mines; and by the Professors established at Schemnitz under the patronage of the Crown. In giving it to the Public, he is actuated by a hope, however vain it may prove, that the Government of this country, now no longer engaged in foreign wars, will

(1) “A Mineralogical College should be instituted; and skilful men should be sent out, at the public expense, to collect, from every quarter, all that is at present known on the subject.” Bishop Watson's Miscellaneous Tracts, vol. II. p. 438. Lond. 1815.

will turn their attention to the immense resources of wealth which this nation possesses within itself,—lying neglected, through want of a proper attention to its mines, and of the encouragement which it is its best interest to afford to mineralogical studies. It was the mines of Macedonia that enabled PHILIP to subdue all the turbulent factions, the colonies, and the states of GREECE: and if the Government of Great Britain were zealously to engage in mining speculations, either by joining with individuals in carrying on researches for this purpose, or by contributing the patronage necessary for the encouragement of such inquiries, Nature has not denied to this country the means of enriching herself by subterraneous treasure. Many of the barren mountains of Scotland consist of metalliferous strata. The same porphyritic rocks are found in our island that have for centuries provided the miners of Hungary and Transylvania with employment, and their rulers with wealth. Geological Societies are forming in different parts of the kingdom: the nation is therefore awake to the importance of such researches; and the most favourable opportunity is presented of multiplying the means of industry, and thereby opening new sources of wealth. The whole of the western coast of Scotland, that is to say, the main land opposite to Skie, Rum, Canna, Egg, and Coll, from Loch Hourn to the head of Loch Sunart, consists of metalliferous granite (gneiss), abounding in garnets, and other associations of metallic bodies. The strata of the islands of Iona, Coll, Tyr-i, Rum, and Skie, consist of syenite porphyry, hornblende slate, gneiss, pitchstone porphyry, trap, &c.; and these are the matrices of the precious ores found in Hungary and Transylvania. The higher parts of the Cuchullin mountains of the Isle of Skie, in particular, consist of strata of the identical porphyry which is known to be metalliferous¹, lying upon basalt. The author carefully examined all those islands, and the opposite main land of Great Britain, before he undertook his last journey to the Continent: and from what he has since seen of foreign mines, he is convinced that a proper attention has not yet been paid to the importance of our own mountains.

In the account of antient copper coinage, as of all other cupreous antiquities, the author has always used the word bronze—a term now become absolutely necessary—to distinguish the old chemical compound of copper and tin, from that of a later age, consisting of copper and zinc, or *orichalcum*², which is called brass. Thus, at the end of the Seventh Chapter of this Section, he mentions “Roman, or ecclesiastical brass coins.” There was no such substance known in the heroic ages, nor in the time of the Peloponnesian war, when copper began to be used for coinage in Greece, as that compound which we call brass: and perhaps there is no better test to decide at once the distinction between a genuine antique bronze, and those spurious imitations of the works of the Antients, whereof there exists a complete manufacture at Naples, than to submit the suspected metal

to

(1) The Saxum metalliferum of Born.

to any chemical test which may determine the presence of tin, or of zinc, in a state of combination with copper: for if there be a particle of zinc in the mass, the work, consisting of brass, and not of bronze, is thereby proved to be either of modern date, or at best a specimen of orichalcum, and therefore of Roman origin³.

In the acknowledgment of literary obligations, the author has been scrupulously exact; perhaps more so than, in some instances, might seem necessary: but it was his wish to discharge every debt of this nature,—for two reasons: first, because by so doing he presents his Reader with a view of the society in which he has lived, and introduces to his notice some of the friends with whom he has conversed: secondly, because those parts of his work which are exclusively his own, and for which he alone is responsible, may the more easily be recognised. Upon the present occasion he is desirous of acknowledging a communication of an interesting nature from his friend the Rev. G. A. BROWNE, M. A. Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, which constitutes the first article of the Appendix to this Section. It relates to a fragment of Nicetas the Choniote, which is not to be found in any of the printed editions of that historian. The original is preserved in a Manuscript belonging to the Bodleian Library at Oxford. It is mentioned by Mr. Harris, in his “Philological Inquiries,” and was first published by Banduri, in his Imperium Orientale; afterwards by Fabricius, in his Bibliotheca; but, owing to the extreme difficulty of comprehending the sense of the author, no correct version of it had appeared. The task of rendering this fragment intelligible was kindly undertaken by Mr. Browne; and as it mainly relates to former observations, respecting the real perpetrators of the ravages committed among the Fine Arts in Constantinople, it is now printed, with Mr. Browne's valuable Notes, at the end of this volume. To JOHN GWALTER PALAIRET, Esq. of Reading, the author is further indebted, for a revision of the following pages, after they were prepared for publication. To mention other obligations were only to repeat former acknowledgments: but he will not close this Preface without expressing his thanks to RICHARD PAYNE KNIGHT, Esq.; to the Rev. Dr. KAYE, the present Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge; and to that celebrated traveller, JOHN HAWKINS, Esq. of Bignor Park, Sussex; for the polite attention which they have shewn to inquiries affecting the accuracy of this work.

One loth - - - - =	4 quintales (drachmæ).
One quintale - - - =	4 deniers.

As an illustration of the use of this Table, the following statement may be made of the average proportion of Gold and Silver in the Hungarian Ores :

	Lot.	Qu.	Den.
One mark of gold from the Bakabanya ore , contains	3	2	0 of silver .
One mark of silver from the Schemnitz ore , contains	0	0	4 of gold .
One mark of silver from the Cremnitz ore , contains	0	0	15 of gold .

In the account of the Mines, and last Chapter of the Supplement, allusion is sometimes made to German Money; the value of which may be thus rated. It is counted in rixdollars, florins, and kreutzers.

	Flor.	Kreutz.
One rixdollar of Vienna is equal to	1	30
One florin - - - - =	0	60

But the common reckoning is in florins and kreutzers.

To reduce the German Money to its equivalent in English Money, the following rule may be observed :

The value of a florin in the Imperial dominions, as Hungary, Austria, Bohemia, if paid in silver, is about two shillings of our money; or 2s. 2½d. if the course of exchange at Leipsic be as high as six rixdollars to the pound sterling. Because six rixdollars are equivalent to nine florins (nine florins being reckoned equal to a pound sterling, 'at Vienna, or at Prestburg, when the pound sterling is worth six rixdollars at Leipsic), therefore, reckoning the florin at two shillings, the kreutzer, being $\frac{1}{60}$ of that sum, is rather less than two farthings.

of our Ambassador,) jocularly inquired, whether we had abandoned the undertaking. But as soon as we informed him, that we had not only carried off the Goddess, but that she was "under weigh" and upon her voyage to Smyrna, to secure a passage to England, he expressed so much astonishment, that, with uplifted hands, he exclaimed, in his mother-tongue, "Affè! se anche pensaste di rimovere l'Acropoli, non avrete mai il mio permesso!" We remained a week in Athens after this event; and during that short period we saw more of the manners of the inhabitants than we had before done. At the Governor's, it is true, our observations were restricted to the gravity of his countenance, the fumes of his pipe, and the flavour of his coffee: but Lusieri introduced us to some Greek families of his acquaintance; and our Consul invited us to a ball, given in honour of a couple betrothed to each other. Many of the Athenian ladies are very handsome. Until the period of their marriage, the greatest care is used in adorning their persons, and in preserving the beauty of their complexions: but they are almost as much secluded from common view as the incarcerated virgins of the Turkish charems. Every house belonging to a Greek of any consideration has its Gynæcéum; and unless a stranger be intimate enough with the master of a family to penetrate to the retirement set apart for its female relatives, he may come and go without meeting meeting any one of them. It has been believed that this custom among the Athenians, of shutting up their women, is an imitation of the manners of their Turkish lords; but, in fact, it was the original practice of the antient inhabitants of the city, and it has continued among their descendants until the present day. When any one of the Athenian ladies ventures into the streets, either upon the occasion of a public festival, or in her way to and from a public bath, she makes her appearance veiled, and so wrapped up, that it is impossible to judge either of her person or of her age: and this also was antiently the custom, as we learn from the account Dicæarchus has left us of the women of Thebes¹. Divested of this attire, her figure at home, contrasted with the disguise she exhibited abroad, is singularly striking. Among all the travellers who were admitted into female society at Athens, or who have related from report what they did not actually see, there has been no writer more faithful or more happy in his representation than Chandler. It seems as if the subject had, for once, raised his feelings to the temperature necessary for animated description; and he briefly sketches a glowing portrait of a Grecian virgin in her secluded apartment².

Her trowsers, which in winter are of red cloth, and in summer of fine calico or thin gauze, descend from the hip to the ankle, hanging loosely about her limbs; the lower portion embroidered with flowers, and appearing beneath the shift, which has the sleeves wide and open, and the seams and edges curiously adorned with needle-work. Her vest is of silk, exactly fitted to the

Her employment here is seldom varied: the time which is not spent in the business of the toilette, and at meals, is given to spinning and embroidery. Reading or writing seems to be entirely unknown; or to be considered rather as the vulgar occupation of clerks and scriveners, than of persons of taste and rank. The accomplishments of the Grecian, as of the Turkish ladies, are few in number: some few among them are able to touch, rather than to play upon, the dulcimer or the guitar; and to dance, but without the slightest degree of elegance or of liveliness.

Description of a Ball.

We visited the ball to which we had been invited; and found a large party of the wealthiest matrons of the Greek families, seated in a row, with their daughters standing before them. When the dancing began, we were called upon to assist, and we readily joined in a circle formed by a number of young women holding each other by their hands the form of the bosom and the shape of the body, which it rather covers than conceals, and is shorter than the shift. The sleeves button occasionally to the hand, and are lined with red or yellow satin. A rich zone encompasses her waist, and is fastened before by clasps of silver gilded, or of gold set with precious stones. Over the vest is a robe, in summer lined with ermine, and in cold weather with fur. The head-dress is a skull-cap, red or green, with pearls; a stay under the chin, and a yellow forehead-cloth. She has bracelets of gold on her wrists; and, like Aurora, is rosy-fingered; the tips being stained. Her necklace is a string of zechins, a species of gold coin; or of the pieces called Byzantines. At her cheeks is a lock of hair, made to curl towards the face; and down her back falls a profusion of tresses, spreading over her shoulders. Much time is consumed in combing and braiding the hair after bathing; and at the greater festivals, in enriching and powdering it with small bits of silver, gilded, resembling a violin in shape, and woven-in at regular distances. She is painted blue round the eyes; and the insides of the sockets, with the edges on which the lashes grow, are tinged with black." Chandler's Travels in Greece, p. 123. Oxf. 1776.

hands in the middle of the room. From the figure thus presented, we supposed that something like a cotillion was about to be performed; but the dance, if it may be called by that name, consisted solely in a solemn poising of the body, first upon one foot, then upon the other; the whole choir advancing and retreating by a single step, without moving either to the right or to the left. The gravity with which this was performed, and the pompous attitudes assumed, were so uncommonly ludicrous, that it was impossible to refrain from laughter. In order, however, to apologize for our rudeness, we ventured to propose that the most easy figure of a French or of an English dance might be introduced; which was attempted, but pronounced too fatiguing. At this moment the eyes of the whole company were turned upon the fat figure of a matron, who, rising from the diván on which she had been seated, beckoned to another lady still more corpulent than herself, and, as if to assert the superior skill of her countrywomen in an exercise for which she had been considered famous in her youth, promised to exhibit the utmost graces of an Athenian pas de deux. Immediately several whispers were made in our ears, saying, "Now you will see how the Grecian ladies, who have studied the art, are able to dance." The two matrons stationed themselves opposite to each other in the centre of the apartment; and the elder, holding a handkerchief at either extremity, began the performance, by slowly elevating her arms, and singing, accompanied by the clapping of hands. It was evidently the dance of the Gipsies, which which we had often seen in Russia, particularly in Moscow¹; but here it was performed without any of the agility or the animation shewn by the Tzigankies, and had been modified into a mere exhibition of affected postures, consisting of an alternate elevation and depression of the arms and handkerchief, attended now and then with a sudden turn and most indecorous motion of the body, neither of the dancers moving a step from the spot on which she had originally placed herself. In all this there was nothing that could remind us, even by the most distant similitude, of the graceful appearance presented by the female Bacchanals, as they are represented upon the Grecian vases. But as we had seen something more like to those pictured choreæ among the islands, there is no reason to conclude that all the antient features of the Grecian dance have been entirely laid aside. One of them is certainly retained in every part of Greece; namely, that characteristic of antient dancing which is connected with the origin of the exercise itself, and of a nature forcibly opposed to all our ideas of decency and refinement. It was probably owing to this circumstance that the Romans held dancing in such low estimation². The most discreet females of Modern Greece, practising what they conceive to be the highest accomplishment of the art, deem it to be no degradation of the virtues virtues which they certainly possess, when they exhibit movements and postures of the body expressing, in our eyes, the grossest licentiousness. Possibly it may have been from observing such violations of decorum, that some travellers, in their accounts of the country, have calumniated the Grecian women, by imputing to them a general want of chastity. Yet there is no reason to believe that any charge of this nature has been deservedly bestowed: on the contrary, we find that the latest descriptions of the manners of the inhabitants afford a much more favourable representation of their moral character³. That they are exceedingly superstitious, cannot be denied; but even their superstitions are rendered interesting, in having been transmitted, unaltered, from the earliest ages of the Grecian history. Among these may be noticed the wearing of rings, as spells⁴; the practice, upon any sudden apprehension, of spitting into their own bosoms⁵; the alarm excited by seeing serpents in their houses⁶; the observance of lucky or unlucky days⁷; the various charms and drugs which are supposed to facilitate child-birth¹; the ceremonies attending sneezing²; offerings made of locks of hair³; a veneration for salt⁴; with their various modes of divination. To collect and enumerate all of them, would require a longer residence in the country. An attention to such examples of antient ceremonies and superstitions is however useful; because, having been transmitted from father to son, and being found at this day in countries widely separated, they serve to assist an inquiry into the origin of nations; and if they do not enable us to trace a connection between different branches of the same stock, with as much certainty as the relationship of languages, yet they sometimes tend to confirm the truths which are thereby suggested. In such an inquiry, perhaps there will be found nothing more perplexing than the evident analogy between some of the customs of the present inhabitants of Greece and those of other nations, differing both as to situation, and in every peculiarity of language; such, for example, as may be observed in comparing the funeral ceremonies of the Albanians with those with those of the Wild Irish and the *Abyssinians. It is quite impossible that these three nations can have had a common origin; because nothing can be more striking than the radical difference in their speech. The Albanians call the Sun Diel; among the Irish it is called Gideon, and by the Abyssinians Tsai; and a similar distinction may be noticed in comparing all their other nouns. Khéne, in Albanian, signifies the Moon; in Erse it is Djallack; and in Abyssinian, Tcherka. Yet the remarkable feast in honour of the dead, as practised by the Albanians, exactly corresponds with the Caoinan of the Irish, and the Toscar of the Abyssinians. There is not the smallest difference; and a coincidence so extraordinary, attending the funeral rites of such distant nations, is utterly unaccountable.

Upon

(5) They interrogate the deceased as to his reasons for quitting the world, crying out, "WHY DID YOU DIE? WHY DID YOU DIE?" (See Hobhouse's Travels, p. 522. Lond. 1813.) The Reader will find the same circumstance related also by Guillette. The Irish make use of the same questions, and in a similar manner enumerate all the good things which the deceased enjoyed. (See the former Section, Chap. III. p. 73. Note 1.) Among the Abyssinians the ceremony is precisely the same. "A number of hired female mourners continually keep up a kind of fearful howl; calling at times upon the deceased by name, and crying out, "WHY DID YOU LEAVE US? HAD YOU NOT HOUSES, AND LANDS? HAD YOU NOT A WIFE THAT LOVED YOU?" &c. &c. (See Salt's Travels in Abyssinia, p. 422. Lond. 1814.) Judging solely from the analogy thus pointed out, it would appear that the Celts, Albanians, and Abyssinians, were descended from the same stock as the Arabs and Egyptians, among whom the same ceremony also exists. Mr. Salt was also greeted in Abyssinia (near Dixan, upon entering Tigre from the sea-coast) with the Halleluïa, as it is practised in Syria. (See p. 242.) "The women," says he, "greeted us with the usual acclamation, Heli, li, li, li, li, li, li, li, li!"

 Departure
 from Athens.

Upon the last day of November, at four o'clock P. M. we set out from Athens, for Marathon, accompanied by our friend Lusieri, the Tchochodar, Ibrahim, and our Interpreter, and the Guides with our baggage; our little Danish dog, and his gigantic companion Koráki, the Epidaurian wolf-dog, running by the side of us. The English Consul, and some other Greeks, mounted on very beautiful horses, and in their best apparel, accompanied our cavalcade, as a mark of their respect, to a considerable distance from the city; amusing us until they took their leave with the game of Djirid. In this manner the Turks usually begin their journeys. We crossed a small river which falls into the Cephisus, and saw upon our left a tumulus that appeared to have been opened. After this, we proceeded, through olive-plantations, to a village called Kakúvies^s, at two hours' distance from Athens; and here we passed the night. The next morning, continuing our journey towards Marathon, we saw upon our left, about a mile from Kakúvies, among some olive-trees, a marble Bas-relief representing two figures, with part of an Inscription; of which we could only trace the following letters, belonging perhaps to the name of some family:

Kakúvies.

Such imperfect Inscriptions are only worth observing when they serve, as perhaps this does, to denote a sepulchral monument, and thereby to mark the course of the antient road road near to which the tombs were constructed. Other travellers may hence be guided to the proper spot for making excavations. We had seen fragments of terra-cotta vases at the village of Kakivies, taken from graves that had been accidentally opened by the peasants in the neighbourhood. We observed a pleasing village upon Mount Pentelicus, towards the right: the mountain is now called Pendeli. This village retains its antient name Κεφίσια, almost unaltered in its present appellation, Kevisia. It is mentioned by Wheler². Here Herodes Atticus had one of his country-seats. Cephisia was famous for the birth of Menander; and when Herodes Atticus retired to this spot, during the reign of Marcus Aurelius, PAUSANIAS OF CÆSAREA, author of the Description of Greece, followed him as one of his pupils. Wheler says it is situated upon the stream that falls from Pentelicus into the Cephisus. As we continued our journey, we passed quite round this extremity of the mountain, leaving it upon our right. The country then became more uneven: we were always among hills, until we reached a village belonging to the Disdar of Athens, called Stamata, (written Stamati by Wheler³;) distant

Chandler informs us, that one of the Marbles presented to the University of Oxford by Mr. Dawkins was brought from this village. (See Travels in Greece, p. 160. Oxf. 1776.) Mr. Hobhouse obtained here a marble bust as large as life, and of fine sculpture. The same author refers to a description of this place by Aulus Gellius, lib. i. cap. 2. & lib. xviii. cap. 10.

(3) It is also written Stamati. Chandler (p. 160); and by Mr. Hobhouse (p. 425). We have preferred an orthography which we believe to be nearer allied to the name of this place as it is pronounced by the inhabitants.

five hours from Athens. Hence we descended a mountain, by an antient paved way; having the sea and a port in view. Then crossing over a rocky hill, the village of Marathon appeared, in a beautiful plain below. Traces of the old paved-road again occurred; and the earth appeared, in many places, to be stained with the red oxide of iron. Lusieri made a hasty sketch of this renowned village, in the author's pocket-volume of Notes'. From this spot it appeared to be surrounded by mountains; because the extensive plain which afterwards opened towards the right, as we advanced, and at the north-western extremity of which Marathon is situated, was then concealed from us, by part of a mountain to the right of the village. We passed some ruined chapels, and a tower, at the base of the mountain; and continued our route to the Village of Marathon by the side of a small river, whose present appellation is Keynurios Potamos, or New River. Its antient name was Charadrus: it descends from mountains which are now called Kallingi, traverses the Plain of Marathon, and then falls into the sea. Wheler did not visit this village; but going by a different road into the plain, passed by it, leaving it upon his left hand; by which he lost the finest view, not only of the Plain of Marathon, but of all the interesting objects which associate associate in the same prospect. It is three hours distant from Stamata, and eight hours from Athens, or about twenty-four miles²; and it is situated at the north-western extremity of a valley which opens, towards the south-east, into the great PLAIN OF MARATHON. The plain itself is quite flat; and extends along the sea-shore, from the north-east towards the south-west. Our first employment, after arriving here, was to delineate the whole of this grand perspective with as much accuracy as possible; and for this purpose, upon the following morning (Dec. 2), we ascended the mountain which is immediately behind the village, proceeding about half a mile farther towards the north-west. The earth was covered with the blossoms of a beautiful species of Crocus,—a singular sight for Englishmen upon the second day of December; and in the midst of these we began our pleasing task³.

The

(2) It would exactly equal twenty-four miles, if three miles were allowed, according to the usual computation, for each hour; but the country is uneven and rocky, and perhaps the rate of travelling across it, with horses, does not here exceed $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles per hour. This therefore allows an interval of twenty miles, or 160 stadia, which greatly exceeds the measurement antiently allowed for the distance between the two places. "If we suppose," says Mr. Hobhouse, (Journey through Albania, &c. p. 438. Lond. 1813.) "that there was formerly a nearer road by Vraona (Brauron), the difference will be considerably diminished."

(3) A Sketch, from which the annexed Engraving has been made, was soon completed; having nothing to recommend it but the fidelity of the outline; and this, it is hoped, will be found to be correct. But the Drawing which upon this spot exercised all the abilities of Lusieri, was of a very different description: it comprehended every thing that truth and genius and taste could possibly bestow, upon the representation of scenery already ennobled and consecrated by deathless deeds of bravery and virtue;—of scenery which Nature herself has proudly and profusely adorned with every splendid.

PLAIN OF MARATHON.

The view of the Plain of Marathon from this eminence embraces an extent of three miles from the village to the sea. Upon the right are seen¹ the villages of Marathon and Bey, a mountain called Croton, a part of Pentelicus, and the more distant summits of Attica towards Sumium. Upon the left is a mountain called Stauro Koraki, or Raven Cross. In front lies the plain, intersected throughout its length by the Charadrus, as before mentioned. The opening between the mountains into this plain is twelve stadia, or a mile and a half English, in width. Beyond the village of Bey, at the extremity of the plain towards splendid feature, and by all those hues, and by that majesty of light and shade, which are so peculiarly characteristic of the Grecian landscape. The work undertaken by Lusieri required, therefore, many hours for its completion. As an artist, he was always slow in delineation; but it was the tardiness of the most scrupulous accuracy; for he frequently laid on even his colours upon the spot; and he always introduced into his drawings the minutest details, without diminishing the grandeur of the principal objects. Perhaps while this is written, his View of Marathon, although calculated to form the ground-work of a picture which would be regarded almost with veneration in a national gallery, yet remains, with many other of his valuable designs, in his portfolio at Athens, reserved for additional touches by its fastidious master. However this may be, since it has fallen to the author's lot to bear testimony to its excellence, he is anxious that some memorial, however frail, may serve to snatch it from oblivion. Always preferring the gratifications of genius before the acquirement even of a competency by the sale of his numerous productions, so long as the means of a livelihood are afforded by the small stipend he has obtained, Lusieri is not likely to invite the notice of amateurs, either to the merits or even to the existence of his own performances. This is one cause why so little has been known of his best works: and another may originate in the opposition made to his fame, by that rivalry from which the path of merit is rarely exempt, but which has never been more conspicuous than among candidates for distinction in the graphic art, from the days of Protogenes, down to the time of Don Battista.

towards the sea, is seen the conspicuous TOMB raised over the bodies of the Athenians who fell in the memorable battle against the Persians. Even the section recently made near its summit, with a view to open it, is visible from this place, like a dark line traced from the top towards the base. Farther on appears the Marathonian shore, where the Persian army landed; and close to the coast, upon the right, a marsh, wherein the remains of trophies and marble monuments are yet visible. Beyond all extends the sea, shewing the station of the Persian fleet, and the distant headlands of Eubœa and of Attica.

From the Village of Marathon we descended into the PLAIN, by the bed of the Charadrus river; and crossing it, came first to the village of Bey, and afterwards to another village called Sefairy. These names are written as they were pronounced. We endeavoured to ascertain the etymology of the last; and the inhabitants told us that the word Sefairy signifies The war. Very little reliance, however, is to be placed upon information so obtained. Near to this place is one of the ancient wells of the country. The villages of Bey and Sefairy may possibly occupy the sites of Probalinthus and Ænoa, cities of the TETRAPOLIS² of ATTICA: they are situated at the foot of the mountain called Croton; along the base of which, between this mountain and the Charadrus river, extends the road road to Athens, in a north-westerly direction¹. Passing round the foot of this mountain to the right, that is to say, towards the west, in a part of the plain which lies between Croton and another mountain called Agherlich, lying towards the south-west, we came to the village of Branna, pronounced Vranna, and generally believed to be a corruption of the antient Brauron. To this village it was that Wheler descended, by a different route, as before mentioned, from that which we pursued; "over a ridge," he says², "where the mountains of Nozea and Pendeli meet." Owing to this circumstance, he does not appear to have travelled along the old road from Athens to Marathon, which the Athenian forces must have passed, in their way to the plain; because we have already noticed the remains of an antient paved-way in the journey we took, and he mentions no appearance of this kind. Vranna, which he, more lyrically, calls Urania, is situated, as he describes it to be, "between two mountainous buttresses:" but they do not belong to the same mountain, there being a separation between them; and they bear the two distinct names of Croton and *Agherlich*³. At Brauron, the Athenian virgins

(3) They are distinctly alluded to by Chandler, who followed Wheler's route, and considers the mountain now called Agherlich to be a part of Pentelicus. "We soon entered," says he "between two mountains; Pentele ranging on our right; and on the left, one of Diacria, the region extending across from Mount Parnes to Brauron." (See Trav. in Greece, p. 160. Oxf. 1776.) Chandler further says, that the two mountains are divided by a wide and deep water-course, the bed of a river or torrent antiently named Erasinus.

virgins were consecrated to Diana, in a solemn festival which took place once in every five years. No woman was allowed to marry until she had undergone this ceremony; the nature of which has never been explained. All that we know of it is this: the solemnity was conducted by ten officiating priests, who offered a goat in sacrifice; the virgins were under ten years of age; and they wore yellow gowns; which circumstance of their dress is the more remarkable, because the laws respecting festivals ordained, that, at the Panathenæa, no person should wear apparel dyed with colours'. A yellow vest is a mark of sanctity with the Calmuck tribes; among whom the priests are distinguished by wearing robes of this colour'. At this festival, they sang the poems of Homer. In the Brauronian temple there was preserved, until the second Persian war, the famous image belonging to the Tauri, which, from some accounts, appears to have been of wood⁴: but there are confused relations concerning it; and the tradition of its fall from heaven refers rather to its meteoric origin, as an Aërolite, or atmospheric stone. It was worshipped by the antient inhabitants of Taurica Chersonesus under the name of ORSILOCHE; and was called by the Greeks, the Dæmon Virgin, or Diana. When Iphigenia fled from Taurica Chersonesus, the Athenians maintained that this image was brought by her to Brauron. Here it remained until Xerxes conveyed it to Susa; whence it was again removed by Seleucus, and given to the Laodiceans of Syria; in whose possession it continued so late as the second century of the Christian æra¹.

Antiquities in the Plain of Marathon.

Tomb of the Athenians.

Leaving Brauron, we began our search after the remains of antient monuments, tombs, and trophies, in the open Plain towards the sea; being anxious to discover if any thing yet remained, which might be considered as still preserving, upon the spot, a memorial of the famous battle of Marathon. A lofty Sepulchral Mound has been already mentioned, as a conspicuous object from all parts of this territory. We pursued our course towards it, in a south-easterly direction. We had no sooner reached this Tumulus, which stands about six furlongs from the shore, than we entered a passage which had been recently excavated towards its interior²; and in the examination of the earth, as it was originally heaped from the Plain to cover the dead,

(1) See Part I. of these Travels, p. 510, Note (2). There were many instances of a similar reverence being entertained for Meteoric Stones among the Antients. We find them described as "Images that fell from Jupiter." There was an "image" of this description in the Temple at Ephesus. (See Acts xix. 35.) Another was preserved at Ægos Potamos, where it originally fell: and, according to some authors, the Palladium of antient Ilium was of this nature, although by others described as a wooden image.

(3) It is said that this excavation was made by Monsieur Fauvel, a French artist at Athens.

we found a great number of arrow-heads, made of common flint, such as the inhabitants of the stony mountains in North America, of Mount Caucasus, and of some parts of Persia, now use as a substitute for iron, lying confusedly together, mixed with the soil. We collected many of these⁴. It is remarkable, considering their great antiquity, that they did not appear in any degree decomposed or discoloured: the colour of their surfaces was not changed: but this is explained by their situation, being at a considerable depth in the earth, where they had been protected from the action of the atmosphere, which would have altered their appearance, and given to them a whiter colour in a short time, had they remained exposed upon the surface of the soil. The recent section that has been effected, with a view to ransack the other hidden contents of this Tumulus, although it presents to the spectator a chasm which is visible even from the village of Marathon, at the distance of two miles and a quarter, has been of little consequence. The work was very ignorantly conducted; as the operation does not extend below the visible base of the Mound and the present level of the Plain; whereas it must be evident, that, during so many centuries, the pressure of such an enormous cone (which of course was much larger, and more lofty, when it was first raised, than it now is) must have caused the base of it to sink

(4) Mr. (now Sir William) Gell, and other travellers, have also since collected many of these arrow-heads in the same place.

sink very considerably beneath the surface of the soil. In order to find the conditory of the Sepulchre, if the bodies were not promiscuously heaped towards the centre of the Mound, it would be necessary to carry the excavation much lower. Various opinions prevail concerning it. Some have believed it to be the Tomb of the Athenians: others have pretended that it is the Sepulchre of the Plateans. The Stelæ upon its summit have long disappeared. It is one hundred and eighty feet in circumference, when measured at the base; and the distance from the base to the vertex, measured along the surface of the cone, equals thirty feet. The account given by Pausanias is plain and decisive; and it seems clearly to prove that this is the TOMB OF THE ATHENIANS; for the other monuments, mentioned by him as being near to that Sepulchre, may also be observed; as will presently appear. The name which he uses, applies forcibly to this Tumulus: he does not call it Μνημα, but Τάφος; a word still retained in the modern appellation Tépe, which is given to every antient tomb of this form throughout the country. Its situation is moreover pointed out; for he says, that it stood ἐν τῷ πεδίῳ. Having therefore the words of Pausanias' as our guide, and being in view of this conspicuous Tumulus upon the Plain, it is impossible to believe that it can be any other than what he terms it, ΤΑΦΟΣ ΑΘΗΝΑΙΩΝ. His account of Marathon is one of the finest specimens specimens of his writing; and although it is rare indeed to find any instance of sublimity, or even of elevated style, in any of his descriptions, there is something in his "nocturnal sounds of the neighing of horses", and the apparitions of armed combatants upon the Plain," which remind us of Cicero³:—"SÆPE ETIAM IN PRÆLIIS FAUNI AUDITI, ET IN REBUS TURBIDIS VEREDICÆ VOCES EX OCCULTO MISSE ESSE DICUNTUR." It has been sometimes surmised that this lofty Mound might have been heaped over the bodies of the Persians; but the conjecture does not accord with the account of their overthrow into the Lake at the southern extremity of the Plain (distant at least two miles from this spot), and into the sea. Pausanias mentions, indeed, a tradition concerning the burial of the Persians by their conquerors; but he gives it no credit; affirming that not a vestige could be discerned of any sepulchre wherein they were interred; and believing it to be more probable that their bodies were cast into any trench, as chance offered⁴.

Near to the Tomb of the Athenians were two other monuments mentioned by Pausanias; the one being for the Plateans and for Slaves; and the other (μνημα Μιλτιάδου) the Monument of Miltiades, not being therefore a τάφος, was hard hard by it'. Now it is very remarkable that the remains of two sepulchral monuments remain very near to the large Tumulus, standing in a line with it, towards the south. Their foundations are of the white marble of Mount Pentelicus. One of them resembles the remains of a monument by the Via Sacra, near to *Eleusis*¹. It is a large square pedestal, which may have supported Stelæ, or a Trophy. Such a structure is actually mentioned by Pausanias; who says, that the Athenians were commanded by an Oracle to erect a Trophy (λίθου λευκοῦ) at Marathon, to the hero Echetleus, who distinguished himself in the battle, armed only with a *plough*². During our examination of this Monument, Lusieri, having finished his drawing of the Plain from the village of Marathon, arrived, and here joined us; and being much struck by the masonry of the square pedestal, immediately sat down, and began to make a delineation of it'. This he also finished before he quitted the spot; and we admired it too much to omit the mention of it. The other Sepulchre, between this and the Tomb of the Athenians, is shaped more like a tumulus, the base being circular; but it was the smallest smallest of the three, and evidently had never been so considerable, either as the Tomb of the Athenians, or this Monument with a square basis'. Judging therefore from their appearance, and also being guided by the order in which they are named by Pausanias, we were induced to believe the small circular Tomb to be that of the PLATÆANS; and the more magnificent MONUMENT to have been that of *MILTIADES*⁶. Some peasants were ploughing upon the Plain, a little to the north of these Tombs, among cotton-grounds and corn-land: and Mr. Cripps, being desirous of examining the soil, as well as of inquiring after any antiquities the husbandmen might thus discover, put his own hands to the plough, and made several turns with it himself. He found only a rich and light soil, of sufficient depth to answer all the best purposes of agriculture, whenever the inhabitants shall shall be delivered from the burden of Turkish tyranny, and enabled to bestow upon the land the care and labour requisite in its proper cultivation.

Afterwards, proceeding towards the south, and passing again the Tomb which, following Pausanias, we have called that of the Athenians, we came to a rivulet discharging itself into the sea, from a Marsh, or swamp, at the foot of a mountain called Agherlichî. The distance of this marsh from the Charadrus is a mile and a half, or twelve stadia. Here we observed that we were in the midst of Marathonian reliques of every description. The remains of Sepulchres, Stelæ, Soroi, and the ruins of marble trophies, appeared upon either side of the rivulet, and in the midst of the more stagnant waters of the marsh. Besides the Stelæ, we also found here some larger architectural pillars, and the capital of a Doric column. We saw also the cornice of an immense marble Soros, lying upon the basement of a magnificent tomb; the foundations as of a Temple; and a very fine piece of sculpture in white Pentelican marble, representing a Female Figure seated in a chair. The drapery of this Torso, for it is nothing else, is very fine: the head, part of the arms, and the feet, are wanting; but the left hand remains beneath the right elbow; the Statue having been represented with its arms gracefully folded. In its present imperfect state, it is impossible even to conjecture for whom this statue was originally designed; for it is an erroneous opinion, that, among antient images of the Heathen female Divinities, the sedent posture denoted any one of them in particular. It is true that Ceres was frequently so characterized: but upon the

the remains of a pictured tripod chalice of terra cotta found near Athens, and now in the author's possession¹, Venus is represented in a sitting attitude, with the inscription ΑΦΡΟΔΙΤΗ over her head; and, what is more remarkable, she is not there depicted according to the received opinion with regard to the Grecian Venus, as founded upon the description of her statue by Praxiteles at Cnidus, but as a matronly woman, in rich drapery; corresponding with the appearance presented by this statue, and consistently with her relationship to the Phrygian Pessinuntia, the Syrian Astarte, and the Egyptian *Isis*². The Marathonian Statue, considered with respect to its locality and the circumstances of its dedication, independently of its merit as a work of art, would be a valuable acquisition among the best reliques of Grecian sculpture, even in its present ruinous condition. We found it lying in a pool of water, upon a small island

P. after his return from his travels in Greece; who, during a successful excavation made among the Athenian tombs, discovered and brought to this country a collection of Greek Vases, which may be considered as unrivalled, both in their number and in their importance; as illustrating the arts, customs, superstitions, history, and mythology of the Antient Grecians.

(2) That Venus, among the Antients, was sometimes represented as a young and beautiful woman, naked, we learn from the story of the Cnidian Statue by Praxiteles; but it is at the same time evident, that the people of Cos rejected the same statue, upon this account. There seems reason for believing that many of the statues by Grecian sculptors, considered as representing Venus, and particularly the famous statue called that of the Medicæan Venus, were statues of Aspasia the concubine of Cyrus, whom the Greeks represented with the symbols and attributes of Venus, as the Dove, Dolphin, &c. from the particular favours that were said to have been conferred upon her by that Goddess; and probably the Cnidian Venus was nothing more than a statue of Phryne the mistress of Praxiteles, whose portrait Apelles painted for his Venus Anadyomene.

and these did not appear to be of great antiquity.

Having concluded our examination of the southern extremity of the Plain, which is here bounded, beyond this marsh, by the eastern termination of Mount Pentelicus, projecting into the sea, and forming a small bay, we began to traverse its principal extent, parallel to the shore, from its south-western towards its north-eastern extremity. For this purpose we passed once more the lofty conical mound or Tomb of the Athenians, and the Monument which we have called that of Miltiades. Proceeding through the cotton grounds and the corn land, and leaving the village of Sefairy towards our left, we came again to the Charadrus; and having crossed its channel, we found upon the north-east side of it the remains of another monument, somewhat similar to that of Miltiades; close to which there is an antient Well, answering, by its position, to that of Macaria, mentioned by Pausanias: indeed there is no other which can be considered as being properly within the Marathonian Plain, if we except that which is near to the village of Sefairy; and which does not so well coincide with the description of Pausanias, because he is evidently proceeding towards the muddy Lake at the north-eastern extremity, which which he mentions immediately afterwards, previously to his quitting the spot for the Cave of Pan, at some distance from the Plain, beyond the village of Marathon, towards the north-west. Leaving the Well, we continued, through rich corn land, until we reached the borders of that famous Lake, or fen, into which the Persian army were driven by the victorious Greeks. We found it overgrown with tall reeds and bulrushes, but well suited, by its unfathomable depth of water and mud, to confirm the probability of the fact related concerning it; and capable, at this day, of engulfing the most numerous army that might attempt its passage. It occupies the whole of this extremity of the Plain, between Mount Stauro Koráki and the sea, reaching quite up to the base of the former; along which a narrow defile, exactly like that of Thermopylæ, and in the same manner skirting the bottom of a mountain, conducts, by an antient paved-way, to a village now called Shuli; perhaps the antient Trycorinthus, which occurred in the road from Marathon to Rhamnus. The resemblance between the two straits is indeed remarkably striking; for a spring, at the foot of the mountain, crosses the antient paved-way, as do the hot springs of Thermopylæ. As soon as we had reached this defile, we perceived at once what had been the main cause of the prodigious destruction which here befel the Persian army; and why so fatal a disaster particularly distinguished this swampy Lake. The appearance of the place is the best comment upon the catastrophe: it is, in fact, a pass which a smaller band than that of the Spartan

Spartan heroes, under Leonidas, might have easily guarded against the myriads of Darius: and the story of the battle shews plainly that the vast overthrow which here took place must have been owing as much to the Persians themselves as to the valour of the Greeks. In the beginning of the fight, an interval of eight stadia separated the two armies; and this precisely corresponds with the distance, as before mentioned, between the Charadrus and the Stelæ at the foot of Mount Agherlichi. It was therefore beneath this mountain that Miltiades ranged his troops; having the Platæans upon his left wing, towards Brauron; and his right towards the sea, commanded by Callimachus. The Charadrus perhaps separated the hostile legions. That the Greeks were repulsed after their first onset, seems very probable; not only from the obstinate combat that ensued after they made the attack, but also from the situation of the mound raised over their dead, where the combat was the most severe, and which still serves to mark the situation of the Grecian line. Afterwards, when victory began to declare itself in their favour, it is related, that the right wing of the Grecian army turned the left of the Persians upon their centre, and, by throwing the main army into disorder, dispersed it in the Plain. Here it was again intercepted by the Platæans and Greeks stationed upon the left, and driven across the Charadrus; whence, flying in the utmost confusion, the whole body made at once for the defile we have mentioned; where the only passage was afforded by an antient paved causeway, causeway, hardly wide enough to admit of two persons abreast of each other, and which remains at the present day. Every other attempt to escape must have been fruitless, as the sea or the lake intervened to oppose it. The consequence, therefore, of so vast a multitude all rushing towards one narrow outlet, must be obvious; for it would be similar to that which so recently befel the French army, in its retreat from Moscow, at the sanguinary passage of the Beresina;—heaps of dead bodies choking the only channel through which any chance of a retreat is offered, the fugitives either plunge into the abyss, or turn their arms upon each other; and the few who escape drowning, or being crushed to death, fall by the hands of their comrades. Historians, in their accounts of the Battle of Marathon, simply relate, that the Persians were driven into the Lake, without being aware of the defile whereby they were ensnared: but it is very remarkable, that in the two memorable invasions of Greece by the Persians,—the first under Darius, when they were defeated at Marathon; and the second, only eleven years afterwards¹, under Xerxes, when they encountered the Spartans at Thermopylæ,—the curious circumstance of a natural defile, exactly similar in either instance, should have tended so materially towards the renown acquired by the Greeks.

Return to
Village.

The day was now far spent; and, as the evening drew on, we returned towards the village of Marathon, having completed our survey of the Plain. The climate in Greece, during winter, is delightful; and the winter months are the most proper for travelling in the country. The morning had been cloudy; but before noon the sky became clear; and at sun-set it exhibited that mild serenity which our own Poets consider to be peculiarly characteristic of an English autumn¹. It reminded us of that "even-tide" in the year which a late Writer² has forcibly described as the season when "we regard, even in spite of ourselves, the still, but steady, advances of time." And if there be a spot upon earth pre-eminently calculated to awaken the solemn sentiments which such a view of Nature is fitted to make upon all men, it may surely be found in the Plain of Marathon; where, amidst the wreck of generations, and the graves of antient heroes, we elevate our thoughts towards HIM "in whose sight a thousand years are but as yesterday;" where the stillness of Nature, harmonizing with the calm solitude of that illustrious region which was once a scene of the most agitated passions, enables us, by the past, to determine of the future. In those moments, indeed, we may be said to live for ages;—a single instant, by the multiplied multiplied impressions it conveys, seems to anticipate for us a sense of that Eternity, "when time shall be no more;" when the fitful dream of human existence, with all its turbulent illusions, shall be dispelled; and the last sun having set in the last night of the world, a brighter dawn than ever gladdened the universe shall renovate the dominions of darkness and of death.

Present Village of MARATHON.

EXCEPTING ONE or two houses belonging to Turkish families which are not constantly resident, the present village of Marathon consists only of a few wretched cottages, inhabited by

by Albanians. Some remains, as of a more antient settlement, may be observed behind these buildings, towards the north-west. We made a vain inquiry after the Cave of Pan; being well convinced that so accurate a writer as Pausanias would not have mentioned a natural curiosity of this kind, without good proof of its existence in his time; and from its nature, it is not probable that any lapse of time should have caused its disappearance. Our Albanian guides, however, either did not know that any such cave existed, or they did not choose to accompany us thither; and we have since learned, that we passed close to it, before our arrival at Marathon, in our road from Athens. Other travellers have found it; and they describe it to be a stalactite grotto, similar, in its nature, to the several caves of Parnassus, Hymettus, and Antiparos, although upon a smaller scale: and this circumstance in its history of course explains all that Pausanias has written concerning the various phænomena with which that cavern abounds¹; the eccentric shapes which the stalactites had assumed in the second century, being, by him, referred to animal and other forms; as Joseph Pitton de Tournefort, in the first year of the eighteenth century, with equal gravity, refers the ramifications of alabaster, in the Grotto of Antiparos, to

We left Marathon on the morning of the third of December, being accompanied by our friend Lusieri as far as the mill, where the road to Athens separates from that which leads to Kalingi and to Thebes; and here we saw him for the last time. At this mill there are the remains of an aqueduct, with arches, covered with ivy. From hence we began to ascend a part of the mountain Parnes, now called Noziã; with a strong accent upon the last syllable. In the same manner, the modern name of the island Ceos is not pronounced, as written, Ziã, but Ziã. Our ascent was along the course of the Charadrus, which we were surprised to hear the Albanians call, in this part, Charadra; a different name being given to it in its passage across the plain. The scenery around us now became mountainous, and broken into masses; resembling that which is so frequently represented in the pictures of Gaspar Poussin. The soil was covered with a beautiful Heath, together with the gaudy blossoms of the Crocus which we had found in the Plain of Marathon; and a variety of the evergreen Oak, or Quercus Ilex, with prickly leaves. We saw also, everywhere, the Velanida, or Quercus Ægilops. Of the Ilex the Romans first made their civic crowns; but they

they afterwards used the Esculus for that purpose°. A noble race of dogs is found over all this district; and the same may be said of almost all wild and mountainous territories. The animal appears to degenerate in proportion as he is removed to more cultivated regions, and among a civilized people. Even the common mastiff appears nowhere of such magnitude and strength as in the wildest parts of Turkey³, or in the passes of the Apennines; and the genuine race of the wolf-dog of Ireland is now become almost extinct in that country. As an association corroborating this remark, wherever these dogs appeared in our route, we observed also a wilder tribe of Albanians, than those who accompanied us from Marathon; wearing upon their feet the Scythian *labkas*⁴, or old Celtic sandals, made of goat's-skin, with the hair on the outside; and the still more curious appendage to their dress of the Celtic kilt, as worn by antient Romans, and now found also in the Highlands of Scotland⁵. shaking the hem of his pelisse¹, made signs to us to be upon our guard. Our Epidaurian wolf-dog, Koráki, was himself as large as any of the Newfoundland breed, and he kept the fiercest of his mountain brethren at bay; but an amusing sight was afforded by the little Danish pug, mentioned in a former Part of these Travels², who ran by the side of him; for although any one of the Albanian dogs might almost have swallowed him, he grew so insolent under the protection of Koráki, that he bade defiance to all of them; and not one of them ever deigned to notice the furious assaults he made upon them, whenever they came in his way. Notwithstanding Ibrahim's fears, and his calumnies with regard to the inhabitants of these mountains, whom he described as a set of lawless banditti ready "to kill and eat" every Turk and Christian within their power, we preferred them far above the other inhabitants of this country; and we never had occasion to confide in their integrity that we repented of our rashness, or to apply to them in vain for hospitality. They sometimes, it is true, plunder the Turks; but but such instances are always acts of retaliation upon their oppressors, who spare no opportunity of robbing them of every thing they possess : and even a Turk, who has confided in their solemn pledge for his security, and thus ventured under their protection, is never known to experience any violation of their engagement. But no reliance whatsoever ought to be placed upon the descriptions given of this people by the Turkish or Grecian inhabitants of the towns : with as much reason may a faithful account of the Cossacks be expected from a RUSSIAN, as of the Albanians from a GREEK or a TURK.

(1) A sign of caution universal among the Turks, which it is not very easy to describe. The Reader taking the upper corner of the lappel of his coat delicately between his fore-finger and thumb, gently shaking it, and extending the other three fingers of his right hand, will have it practically illustrated. The Turks, from habitual indolence, use many such expressive signs, to avoid the trouble of speaking. A common sign to express "beware!" among the Italians, is that of drawing down the right corner of the right eye with the fore-finger of the right hand: and if it be necessary to express extreme caution, they draw down the corners of both eyes with both hands; extending, at the same time, the corners of the mouth with the two little fingers, into a hideous grimace.

We traversed some elevated plains upon the side of Parnes. The scenery, as we ascended, became more bold, but less beautiful, because more lofty and therefore more denuded ; the rocky surface being more disclosed, but broken into masses, and dispersed with wildness and grandeur. From the heights we saw the island of Zia, with the opposite promontory, and all the summits and coast, of Eubœa. Afterwards we had an amazing prospect, at a great distance before us, towards the north, of all the Bœotian Plain, and of its surrounding mountains³.

(3) As it has been rather hastily remarked—it matters not where, but the observation is likely to occur again—that the same geological features cause everywhere similarity of landscape ; and that a vast plain, or a lake, surrounded by high mountains in one country, will necessarily resemble all other plains, and lakes, surrounded by high mountains in other countries ; the author will take this opportunity of denying the fact : and, according to his former practice, he will now specify the particular territory which resembles, in the nature of its scenery, this view of the great plain of Bœotia. It possesses too much beauty to be unknown to many of his readers : it is that part of

CHAP. II.

Kalingi.

Upon the highest part of this route over Parnes, we noticed some ruins; and perhaps hereabouts were the altars and the bronze image mentioned by *Pausanias*¹. Soon afterwards we entered the village of Kalingi, distant about five miles, or one hour and a half, from Marathon. Here we saw a fragment of white marble which had evidently been used in some antient building. From Kalingi, or Kalinga (for the pronunciation varied), we descended to a village whose name we have not preserved; consisting only of two or three dwellings, and as many mills; but situated in the most picturesque manner, in a valley adorned with beautiful trees, surrounded by mountains and the most stupendous rocks. From this sequestered spot we continued our journey, through a delightful and fertile valley, to another village, called Capandritti, distant three hours from Marathon, and one hour and a half from Kalingi. This place is mentioned by Wheler, as famous for good wine;

Italy which is beheld, in the Apennines, from the heights above the cataract of Terni in UMBRIA. The Bœotian territory being as highly diversified, accordingly as it is richly cultivated, or in parts wild, and filled with stately forests full of majestic oaks and pines; or interrupted and broken by bleak and naked rocks; presenting to the eye an amazing variety of colour, in its fields, and woods, and precipices. Indeed it may be said, that, amidst the changeful scenery which Nature is ever exhibiting to the eye of a traveller, it rarely happens that any very accurate resemblances can be traced; and he who does not at all times command the power of delineation by his pencil, may consider himself to be fortunate, if, by any faithful comparison, he be enabled to convey to the minds of others an impression of what they have not seen, derived from what they have seen. Thousands have seen the rich territory of Umbria, not one of whom will ever behold the Plain of Bœotia.

wine; and he believed that the antient town of Ænoa occupied the site either of Kalingi or Capandritti. The village is situated at the end of the valley, upon an eminence; and it consists of a great number of Albanian houses. After descending from Capandritti, we again ascended an opposite hill, and arrived at the village of Magi, inhabited also by Albanians; but they appeared better clothed than is usual in this country, and every thing about them wore an appearance of industry and cleanliness. Magi is only half an hour's distance from Capandritti. Leaving this village, we saw in a plain close to the road a marble Soros, without its operculum, sunk into the earth, and almost level with the soil. In a short time we entered a defile between mountains; and rode, for two hours, along a pass which may be described as truly Alpine; the scenery being extremely sublime, and the mountains very high, and disposed into masses of great grandeur. This pass is very narrow; and it continues by the side of a deep water-course, perhaps enumerated among the rivers of Greece, but, like many of them, occasionally dry, and it was now without water. Hence we descended into the spacious plain which we had seen at such a distance from the heights of Parnes, and which we have every reason to consider as the land of Tanagra; a plain of such extraordinary beauty, extent, and fertility, that the sight of it alone is sufficient to explain all that antient authors have written concerning the contests maintained for its possession, between the

the inhabitants of Attica and of Bœotia. In a former note, the author has compared it to the rich plain of Umbria, near Terni in Italy; which it resembles, by its highly diversified aspect of cultivation and wildness; of fields and forests; of corn-land, and vineyards, and olive-grounds, and woods, and rocks, and mountains. The importance of its possession is therefore at once made manifest. The city of Oropus' was a valuable possession, in securing the command of this territory. It stood upon the Attic side of the Asopus, about three miles from the sea. Originally it belonged to Bœotia: the Athenians in the second century held it in their possession¹. It had been frequently a subject of contention between the inhabitants of the two countries²: this is twice mentioned by *Strabo*³. Wheler, who visited the site of the antient city, mentions the contest, as for the possession of the town only, between the Thebans and *Athenians*⁴, but takes no notice of the extensive and fertile plain on the Attic side of the Asopus; in which, and by its borders, there were other towns, now occupied by

by Albanian villages⁶. Psaphis was of this number, and perhaps Cænoa; although it be exceeding difficult to fix the position of the latter town, which Wheler has stationed upon the top of *Parnes*⁷, and Chandler in the Plain of *Marathon*⁸. The circumstance of its being one of the four cities of *Tetrapolis*⁹ is certainly strong for its position in the Marathonian district; and we had reason to think that the remains of it may possibly exist in the Plain of Marathon, as we have before shewn¹⁰.

Descending into this plain, we passed a village called Shalishi, where we observed an ancient fountain. This place is distant three hours from Magi, and six hours and a half from Marathon, equal to about twenty miles.

(6) This may be owing to the circumstance mentioned by Wheler of his descent from Parnes to Marcopoli, when "it was dark;" (Ibid.) and of his early departure thence in the morning, perhaps before it was light, according to the usual mode of travelling in Greece.

(9) Wheler has attempted to prove, from Stephanus Byzantinus (See Journ. into Greece, p. 455.), that Tetrapolis was itself a city; but the words of Strabo are clear and decisive as to the import of that appellation, which was a district of Attica, containing the four cities of Cænoa, Marathon, Probalinthus, and Tricorythus, founded by Xuthus, who married a daughter of Eretheus king of Athens. Of Xuthus it is said by Strabo, ἦκισε τὴν Τετράπολιν τῆς Ἀττικῆς, Οἰνοῦν, Μαραθῶνα, Προβάλινθον, καὶ Τρικωρυθόν. Strabon. Geog. lib. viii. p. 555. ed. Oxon. Mr. Hobhouse (Travels, p. 444. Lond. 1813.) mentions a village called Cænoe, to the north of the Asopus.

(10) It is plain, from a passage in Thucydides, that Cænoa was a frontier citadel, upon the confines of Attica and Boeotia: the Athenians were wont to garrison it in troublesome times. Ἡ γὰρ Οἰνὴ οὕσα ἐν μεθορῶσι τῆς Ἀττικῆς καὶ Βωιωτίας, ἐτερείχιστο, καὶ αὐτῷ φρουρίῳ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι ἐχρῶντο, ὅποτε πῶλεμος καταλάβοι. Thucyd. lib. ii. cap. 18. p. 95. ed. Hudsoni. Oxon. 1696.

CHAP. II.

We had no sooner entered the plain, than we were struck by the appearance of a large insular knoll or hill rising out of it, beautifully adorned with oak and pine-trees, and upon the top of which there was a tower; one of many edifices of the same nature which may be observed throughout Bœotia, built perhaps for alarm and defence, during the period of the Latin domination¹. We passed, across the plain, to the right of this tower, leaving it upon our left hand. After a ride of two hours from Shalishi, we came to a village called Ænea, or Ennea, situated upon an eminence. It is now in ruins; but it has a large tower and some walls remaining, among the ruins of several houses. There is no antient name with which the modern appellation of this place appears to correspond, except Ænoa; but this place is much too near to the site of Tanagra to have been an antient town. Continuing our journey through the plain, we passed the ruins of other houses and towers, proving, however, that it was once a very populous district. We now began to ascend the higher parts of the plain towards the north and north-west, and drew near to the mountains upon the opposite side of it to those we had quitted. Here we had a noble view of the whole Gulph of Euripus; to which we were now so close, that we could discern the buildings upon the opposite shore of Eubœa. We could not so plainly perceive the the narrow strait where the bridge of *Yakindee*² now is; but we saw the two seas upon the opposite sides of the Euripus. At the distance of two hours from Ænea, we arrived at the village of Skemata, where we halted for the night. The great plain over which we had been travelling was called by the Albanians Bratchi; but after our arrival at Skemata, we observed that the inhabitants bestowed the name of Nacra, or Nacri, both upon the plain and upon their village. Our total ignorance of the Albanian language would render it absurd if we were to attempt to trace any connexion between this word Nacra, and Tanagra, the antient name of the city and district lying to the north, and perhaps to the south, of the Asopus; although the names of places are so likely to continue in any country, that it would be an unjustifiable omission if we were to neglect altogether the attention that is due to such corresponding circumstances. But the fact that more than all proved our vicinity to a spot once occupied by some ancient city, was the prodigious number of antient medals which were brought to us by the people of this place during the evening that we remained with them. Our interpreter had been seized with an attack of the Malaria fever; caught perhaps in the marshes of Marathon: and we had given to him a dose

Medals.

(2) The name given in the country to the bridge which now connects Eubœa with the continent of Greece. Mr. Hobhouse visited the spot. He describes the water as rushing "like a mill-race" under this bridge, and as being "not much more than four feet deep." "A strong eddy is observable on that side from which it is about to run, about a hundred yards above the bridge." See Hobhouse's Travels, p. 453. Lond. 1813.

of ipecacuanha, as the usual preparative for administering the bark. Shivering with a violent paroxysm, and under the influence of the nausea excited by the medicine he had taken, the poor fellow came into the hut (where we were seated upon an earth floor, hastily devouring a baked turkey which the Albanians had brought for our supper), beseeching us to deliver him from the crowd he had gathered around him, by asking for old coins; and he placed before us his cap half filled with bronze medals. We had scarcely time to examine a third of these, before men, women, and children, came flocking in, each of whom added something to the stock. A considerable part of them turned out to be of little or no value; either Roman coins of the Lower Empire; or Greek medals so injured by use and by time, that little could be discerned upon them. Many, however, were purchased by us of a better date, and in better condition, at the usual price which we always paid, of two parāhs for each bronze medal. After this we obtained, with more difficulty, a few that were of silver, from the women; but these constituting a favourite ornament of their head-dresses, they very reluctantly consent to sell. We had not seen so many medals in one place since the visit we paid to Hexamillia, in the Isthmus of Corinth. Among them were medals of Philip the father of Alexander; or of Philip Aridæus; with the figure of a youth on horseback, perhaps Alexander upon Bucephalus, and this curious monogram, after the word ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ, Ϙ, for ΦΙΛΙΠΠΟΥ: also medals of Thessaly, Bœotia, Phocis, Ætolia; but not one of Attica. Besides these were medals of cities; as of Pelinna—a very rare medal, struck after the Achaian

Achaian League, with the legend entire, ΠΕΛΙΝΝΑΙΩΝ,—Larymna, Chalcis, Thebes; and two which peculiarly interested us at the moment, from the present unknown situation of the city; namely, of Tanagra, with the Omega differently written in the legend, being ΤΑΝΑΓΡΑΙΩΝ upon one, and ΤΑΝΑΓΡΑΙΩΝ upon the other. We asked the peasants where these medals were found in such abundance; and they referred us, for the spot, to some Ruins that did not appear to us to be of much importance, which we had passed a short time before our arrival at *Skemata*¹. They seemed

(1) The name of this place is written Scimitari by Mr. Hobhouse (See Trav. 459. Lond. 1813.); and Skimatàri by Mr. Hawkins. The last of these travellers has recently communicated to the author the result of his own observations upon the spot, with regard to the site of Tanagra; and it is highly probable that the coins found by the peasants in such abundance were discovered among the ruins of that city. Those ruins are at a place called Grimàthi, near Skemata, or Skimatàri. Mr. Hobhouse also mentions, that a copper coin of Tanagra was brought to him, by the peasants, from the same place; which he writes Grematha.

Extract of a Letter from Mr. HAWKINS to the Author, concerning the Asopus, and the Situation of Tanagra.

“ I am not much surprised at your omitting to notice the Asopus in your Journal, which, at this distance from its source, is in Winter a muddy torrent, and for eight months of the year wholly dry. Journeying from Parnes towards Thebes, soon after leaving the banks of this river, the plain ceases, and you reach a gently undulating territory, in which is situated the Albanian village of Skimatàri, inhabited by forty families. Here you were so near to the ruins of Tanagra, that I am surprised that you missed them. They are at a spot called Grimàthi, about three miles to the S. W. at the end of a ridge of hills which extend from thence several miles towards Thebes. The ground, too, has a gradual descent from these ruins towards the Asopus and the great plain beyond it, which it proudly overlooks, and which, I have no doubt, it formerly commanded. There are no well-preserved remains of public edifices, or of walls, at Grimàthi: the ruins are in such a state as hardly to deserve notice, did they not serve to point out the situation of Tanagra. I am, I believe, the first traveller who has

has visited them. Grimàthi is between two and three hours distant from Sikanno, and six hours from Thebes: it lies within the territory of Skimatàri. As I have no intention of publishing the narrative of my travels, but only the result of them, the following story of an adventure, similar to one of your own, is much at your service, and may amuse your readers.

“At the distance of about a mile eastward from Grimàthi, and at the same distance southward from the village of Skimatàri, there is a ruined Greek Chapel, in which I found an Ionic Capital of white marble, in fine preservation. I was so struck with the beauty of its proportion, that I resolved to convey it, if possible, to the shore of the Gulph, and thence on board the vessel which was there in attendance upon me. But it was first necessary to secure the permission of the Papas of the village of Skimatàri, to remove it from the sacred inclosure; and, in the next place, to contrive some mode of conveyance for it, in a country where the use of wheels is unknown. The protection of an Archon of Livadia, who at this time farmed the revenues of the village, powerful as it was, together with that of his Soubashi or Turkish intendant, would have scarcely sufficed to overcome the first of these difficulties, had the stone been in reality what is here called ‘a consecrated stone,’ i. e. a part of an altar; nor in this case would I have had recourse to such protection; for my intercourse with the peasantry of Greece had been uniformly conducted with a scrupulous regard to their religious feelings. The Papas, however, after a due inspection of the altar of the Chapel, as well as of the situation in which the Capital stood, pronounced that the stone might be removed without committing the crime of sacrilege; and we had now no further difficulty than that of contriving the means of transporting it about six or seven miles across the country.

“For this purpose a raft was made, of the branch of a Vallania oak, whereon the Ionic Capital was laid; and a pair of oxen were fetched from the village to drag it; a rope being first tied to the stem of the branch, and then to the yoke. A considerable time elapsed before all this preparation was completed; the oxen being taken from the plough, and their owner showing some reluctance to attend them. At last, however, the signal was given by my friend the Soubashi, an Arnaut Turk; and the oxen being goaded and cheered, put themselves in motion;—but, alas! they had not proceeded with the marble an hundred yards, before one of them fell, and refused, most obstinately, to rise again. It was evident that this arose from lassitude; for the oxen were of a small weak breed, and young; or perhaps it arose from the natural stubbornness of their disposition: but I soon perceived that the peasants attributed it to a very different cause; and, in fact, after another trial had been made, by cheering and goading these poor animals, traversed. They were situated upon a gently rising ground, to the left of the road as we came. As to the time of their finding them, it agreed with what we had always heard in Greece; that is to say, after heavy rains, when they are more easily perceived upon the soil, and are left in the channels made by rain water.

Upon the fourth of December we set out for Thebes, at the distance of five hours, or fifteen miles. Three-quarters of an hour after leaving Skemata, the village of Bratchi was upon our left, and Macro and Megalo Vathni upon our right: but the two last were not in sight. We then quitted the Plain of Bratchi; and having crossed an eminence, immediately entered the noble Plain of Thebes. This will animals, and the refractory ox had joined his companion in dragging the marble about a furlong farther, and then dropped, their owner loudly proclaimed the impossibility of removing 'the consecrated stone,' as he called it, any farther. Even the Papas, who was more enlightened, shook his head, and would no longer assist; so that, were it not for the zeal of the Soubashi and of my attendant, no further attempt would have been made. The former, however, being a Mussulman, did not so readily believe in this supernatural interposition, and with direful imprecations and threats at length obliged the owner of the oxen to make one more effort. The beasts were now, with great difficulty, forced again upon their legs, and driven forward for a few yards, when they fell again, and their master exultingly cried out, 'Did I not tell you it was impossible? You are now convinced of it! nor would all the oxen in the world be able to move the stone one inch farther.'

"To this opinion the Papas assented, as well as the other peasants. Even the Soubashi seemed to feel a flash of conviction, for he too desisted, and became silent; and in this state of things it would have been useless, and certainly wrong, to prosecute the attempt. I relinquished it, however, with reluctance; and the mortifying history of my failure is, without doubt, recorded as a miracle wrought by the Patron Saint of Skimatari."

serve to confirm an observation before made, that every principal city of Greece occupies its peculiar plain, surrounded in a most remarkable manner by a natural wall of mountains: and, in alluding once more to the fact, the author must of course repeat what he has already said; but too much stress cannot be laid upon it, because it will enable the Reader to take, as it were, a mental survey of the country; and the mere name of any Grecian city, by this circumstance of association, will convey with it, whenever it is mentioned, a correct, although an imaginary picture of its appearance and situation; especially to the minds of travellers who have once seen any similar instance of this nature. The country is naturally distributed into a series of distinct craters, each containing a spacious and level area, admirably adapted to the purposes of maintaining and defending as many different colonies¹. Among the mountains that thus surround the Plain of Thebes, the snow-clad ridges of Parnassus, and of Helicon, are particularly conspicuous. It may easily be imagined, without much description, what scenes

Surrounding Scenery.

(1) The most practical method of exhibiting this position of the Grecian mountains, and the contiguity of plains thus surrounded, although in an imperfect manner, is by placing together a number of saucers with broken lips, upon a table; the first of which may be supposed to contain the Plain of Athens, the second that of Thebes, the third that of Larissa, &c. &c.; for these plains are all so many vast basins of limestone, with high and broken sides, through which the rivers flow. Attention to this circumstance of external character in the general appearance of limestone, upon the outer crust of the Earth, may enable us to form a reasonable conjecture as to the nature of the surface of the Moon; which exhibits, when viewed through a telescope, precisely the same features, by the disposition of the mountains visible upon its surface; and hence it may be inferred, that the Moon's surface is similar to that of the Earth.

scenes for the painter such a country must afford—what subjects for poetry it must contain: heaven and earth seem to be brought together: the mountain tops appear shining above the clouds, in regions of ineffable light, as thrones for immortal beings; and the clouds, collected into stupendous volumes of inconceivable splendor and of every possible form, come rolling around the bases of the mountains, as if bringing the majesty of their celestial conductors towards the earth. Under the influence of so many sublime impressions, the human mind becomes gifted as by inspiration, and is by nature filled with poetical ideas. The muses have ever made such scenes their favourite abode; and it is upon this account that they have haunted Helicon, and Parnassus, and all the heights and the depths, the vales, and the rocks, and the woods, and the waters, of Greece:—nor can an example be adduced, where, in any country, uniformly flat and monophanous, like Scythia or Belgium, the fire of imagination has ever kindled. It is not that Greece owed its celebrity to an Orpheus and a Pindar, and the long list of poets it produced, so much as it is, that those illustrious bards owed the bent of their genius to the scenes of nature wherein they were born and educated. Even Homer himself, if he had been a native of oriental Tartary, and had been cradled and brought up under the impressions made by such scenery, and under the influence of such a climate, would never have been a poet.

Journeying along the south-west side of this plain, the fine view of THEBES at last appeared, within two miles of us, upon an eminence near the mountains, to the left, interspersed with groves of cypress-trees; a mosque and a minaret being its most conspicuous edifices. Having suffered more than any other city of Greece, it has little within its walls worth notice;—but that little must not be disregarded. Beheld externally, it wears a more imposing appearance; and the view of it from a distance in the plain shews how greatly nature contributed to aid the operations of art in its antient fortifications. When it is thus seen, it still assumes all the aspect of a great city. Prodigious ramparts, and high mounds of a very artificial form, appear upon the outside of it; a deep fosse surrounds it; and the traces of its old walls may yet be discerned. We entered, by an antient gate, about noon. Half the arch of this gate, and one of the buttresses, remain. Soon afterwards arrived the English Consul of Patras, Mr. Strani, from Livadia, in company with an English officer, Captain Lacy. We accompanied these gentlemen, upon the usual visit of ceremony, to the Wawode; and then we all dined together, upon such fare as the place afforded. We were in a wretched house, belonging to a poor Greek, who was the apothecary of the place, but who gave us all he possessed, namely, a welcome. Our interpreter being again attacked by his fever, we were forced to go into the town ourselves for provisions; and the consequence was, the loss of our fine wolf-dog, Koráki; who disappeared, and could not be found. We were so attached to this faithful animal, that we spent the rest of the day in vain endeavours to recover him; and we offered a reward to any of the inhabitants

who should find him, and take him safe to Signor Lusieri at Athens'. The next morning, our Consul Strani, and Captain Lacy, set out for Athens. Soon afterwards, we had a singular opportunity of judging of the state of medicine and surgery in this part of Greece, by the example which our host afforded. To the business of an apothecary he joined every other branch of the medical and surgical professions. A wealthy Turk, followed by his pipe-bearer and a train of other attendants, entered the yard, and made application to our Æsculapius for relief from an excruciating pain in one of his teeth. A bargain was instantly set on foot between him and the Greek; and upon promise of instant relief, a sum of money was paid. The Turk was then told, that the only hope of relief would be afforded by the extraction of the tooth. To this the patient assented, with great calmness and fortitude. Being seated upon a log of wood, in the open air, the operator thrust into his mouth a most terrific instrument, and presently out flew two of the soundest teeth in his head. It was a job not to be mended by apology; so, with matchless presence of mind, the Greek began to cross himself, telling his patient to call again the next day if the pain should return, as there was still an ugly-looking tooth remaining, which perhaps would prove troublesome, but it might be removed in a twinkling. When his patient had quitted the premises, finding that we were disposed to rally him a little upon his dexterity, he made no secret of what had happened, but produced the two teeth, without even a speck upon either of them; saying, the Turk had asked for a sight of what he had lost, but was easily persuaded that some hungry turkeys, which had strolled into the yard and were making a great noise, had gobbled all that he desired to see.— So much for his skill in this particular branch of his calling! As a physician, he entertained very high ideas of the efficacy of pills made of yellow silk and live spiders, in the cure of a quotidian, tertian, or quartan. However, as Englishmen, we had little reason to ridicule the Greeks for such superstitions with regard to the cure of an ague; since there is no part of Europe where the nostrums recommended as remedies for that disorder are so barbarous, as among the middle, and sometimes among the higher classes of society in our own country.

Thebes.

The antiquities of Thebes principally claimed our attention. In coming from the gate into the town, near a public fountain, there is an antient buttress or bastion, where, upon a large block of stone, we found one of those affecting inscriptions, of which two were given in the account of the island of *Cos*¹; commemorating, as public benefits, the examples of women, who had rendered themselves illustrious by their virtues.

It sets forth, that "THE SENATE AND THE PEOPLE (honour) THE DAUGHTER OF THEOGITON, THE WIFE" of some person whose name is partly lost, "ON ACCOUNT OF HER VIRTUE AND MODESTY."

And upon the opposite side of the street we found another, recording the grateful tribute of a citizen to Domitian, son of Vespasian, and brother of Titus, both of whom might have visited Thebes, for their father accompanied Nero into Greece. Whatsoever contributes towards the history of Vespasian's family, may be deemed worth preserving. Having risen from the humble station of a farrier, to that of a Roman sovereign, he was the first of the Emperors who was succeeded by his son upon the throne. It states, that "ARISTIDES, WITH HIS CHILDREN, AT HIS OWN EXPENSE, (honours) DOMITIAN, A SON OF THE EMPEROR CÆSAR AUGUSTUS VESPASIAN:"

In the age of Alexander, there was at Thebes a painter of the name of Aristides, by some believed the inventor of encaustic painting; but this is disputed by *Pliny*², who, in his his valuable account of this artist, has made us acquainted with two very curious facts. The first is, that picture-cleaners did as much mischief in his time as they do now¹. The second, that it is an error to suppose that the Greek painters, who generally represented the human countenance by a single outline in profile upon the terra-cotta vases, were not as well acquainted with the art of delineating the passions as the best of our modern artists. Take, for example, the interesting anecdote which Pliny has afforded, among others, of the dying mother lying wounded and bleeding among the victims in the sacking of a city, whose infant was represented as creeping to reach her breast, while in her countenance were pictured all the emotions of tenderness and fear, lest her child, wanting the milk, should suck the blood of its parent; a picture upon this account so highly valued, that Alexander caused it to be removed to Pella, the place of his nativity². Above four hundred years had elapsed from the death of this celebrated painter, when Vespasian visited Greece; but as professions and names continued in the same family in that country, and were often transmitted together to succeeding generations,

(2) "ARISTIDES Thebanus: is omnium primùm animum, pinxit, et sensus omnes expressit, quos vocant Græci ETHÈ: item per turbationes: durior paulò in coloribus. his son might have found in Thebes a painter to represent his father's battles, who thus commemorates his gratitude for the patronage conferred upon him. It happened at a time when it was particularly the practice of the Romans to employ Grecian artists in such representations: and the graphic³ illustrations of those conquests which Vitus himself had achieved were not long afterwards exhibited in Rome, where they remain at this day.

A very correct topography of antient Thebes might be composed from the traces still discernible. The situation of its *seven gates*⁴ might be ascertained: and as a beginning of this part of the work, it will be evident that the entrance, near to which these inscriptions were found, was that called, from the fountain we have mentioned, "the Crenæan Gate." The city was demolished, it is true, above two thousand years ago, when Alexander invaded Greece: but since its restoration by *Cassander*⁵, very little was done to it, which could possibly alter the appearance of its dykes and ramparts: upon these, time has little influence; and their situation and form serve to point out the position of the gates. Thebes was almost a deserted village in the age of *Strabo*⁶:

but Pausanias says its seven gates remained in his time¹; and he has written rather a copious account of its antiquities². The present town appears to occupy little more than the site of the old Cadmæan Acropolis; which is the opinion of Wheler, and of *Pococke*³: and in the harmonious adjustment of those masses which remain, belonging to the antient walls, we saw enough to convince us that the story of Amphion was no fable; for it was a very antient custom to carry on immense labour by an accompaniment of music and singing. The custom indeed still exists both in Egypt and in Greece. It might therefore be said, that the walls of Thebes were built at the sound of the only musical instrument then in use; because, according to the custom of the country, the lyre was necessary for the accomplishment of the work.

We saw in two instances, upon stones in the walls of a church, the traces of inscriptions which were no longer legible: but in another wall we found the following; informing us, that in antient Thebes, as in London, there were different companies, or communities, established for the different vocations. It is rendered moreover interesting by containing the name of the city; thereby confirming our knowledge of the spot: and it purports, that “TIMOCLES, THE SON OF TIMOSTRATUS, is honoured BY THE COMMUNITY OF THE ARTIFICERS AT THEBES.”

CHAP. II.

There is another line upon the stone, but it is written in much smaller characters, and cannot now be read. In this inscription it appears to be written ΔΙΟΝΥΣΩ, but this must be an error¹.

Near the door of the Church of St. George, there is an inscription of some length, beginning "Lysippus the son of Trallion," &c. ΛΥΣΙΠΠΟΣ ΤΡΑΛΛΙΩΝΟΣ κ. τ. λ. but it contains only a list of names; and as a very considerable part of it is concealed by the base of a small pillar, the imperfect copy we made of it is not worth publishing. Many scraps of this kind might be added, which would serve only to swell the volume, and they are therefore omitted. We thought we should obtain something of more consequence, from the positive assurances made to us by several Greeks, that the Sepulchre of St. Luke was preserved within a chapel upon the outside of the town, towards the east; and that a long inscription, proving the fact, existed upon the tomb. We hastened to the sanctuary said to contain this remarkable relique, and found a beautiful Soros of white marble, with an inscription thereon; the first first sight of which convinced us of the astonishing ignorance of the Greeks of Thebes, whose priests could not undeceive their countrymen with regard to its pretended origin. They shewed to us, indeed, the word ΤΥΜΒΩΝ upon the monument; and the chapel being dedicated to St. Luke, thence concluded that this Soros must contain his reliques. Its operculum is beautifully sculptured, so as to exhibit in relief, upon its sloping sides, the resemblance of a thatch made of the foliage of the laurel. The oblong sides of the Soros are channelled into indented pannels, three on each. Upon the south side of the tomb there is an inscription in the middle pannel; and the other pannels, to the right and left of this, are ornamented with a rose, or sun-flower, in the center.

The inscription has been already published by *Wheler*¹, and by *Spon*², and by *Muratori*³ from the Travels of Du Loir; but as no accurate copy has yet appeared, we shall insert our own; stating at the same time, in the Notes, the different Readings that have before been published. It is remarkable that, among four travellers who have copied a legend of only ten lines, fairly inscribed upon the marble, there should be so much disagreement⁴. It relates to a person of the name of Nedymus; and from the mention made of the soul's immortality, in the last line, line, it is supposed that he was a Christian. If this be true, it must have been some Christian who had imbibed the doctrine of the pre-existence of the soul; as appears from an allusion to it in the fifth line; but the general tenor of the composition, and some of the particular expressions, rather prove that it was written by one of the later Platonists.

The following is a literal translation of the original.

"MY PARENTS, HONOURING MY BODY, WEPT AROUND A SENSELESS TOMB, SINCE SUCH IS THE TRIBUTE TO THE DEAD: BUT I, A SOUL, WENT TO THE ABODE SUITED TO ME. MY NAME WAS NEDYMUS, IN TRUTH THE GENTLE SON OF THE ITALIAN ADAF. I HAD NOT EXISTED LONG IN A PREVIOUS STATE; THEN I WAS BORN TO NUMBER A FEW YEARS, ALWAYS IN MOTION, HAVING MY PECULIAR COURSE TO RUN, FROM WHICH I COULD NOT ESCAPE; FOR THE DESTINY WHICH IS ASSIGNED TO EACH MAN, THAT HE MUST FULFIL; SINCE KINGS MUST DO THE SAME. MY FATHER ZOSIMUS WROTE THESE LINES ON MY ACCOUNT, FEELING AN IMMORTAL REGRET FOR AN IMMORTAL SOUL."

Upon the north side of the same Soros there is also an inscription; but the buttress of one of the arched niches of the altar of the chapel has been erected against it, in such a manner as to leave only a few of the characters visible. Upon a slab near this tomb we also saw the following:

Ε Π Ι Ζ Η Ν Ω Ν Ι Η Ξ
Α Κ Λ Ι Δ Ο Υ Χ Ρ Η Ζ
Τ Ο Υ

The chapel seems evidently to have been erected posterior to the construction of the tomb, from the manner in which one of its inscriptions has been concealed by the altar; and it is also evident, that it was built of materials derived from some more costly edifice. We observed fragments of the Verde Antico; and some inscribed marbles have been broken to form the pavement.

Returning from this chapel towards the town, we were struck by the very artificial appearance exhibited by a lofty hill upon the eastern side of it. The shape of this hill will best best be comprehended from a sketch made of it at the time. Perhaps there can be no doubt but that it formed a part of the antient fortifications; as there is another hill, equally artificial, near to it; and between the two there seems to have been the eastern gate, or entrance, to the old city. It consists, as to its form, of two cones, with truncated summits; the one smaller than the other. The smaller cone stands upon the larger, as upon a pedestal; thereby leaving room for a road all round its base, and having, in consequence of its truncated summit, a level plane, or terrace, upon its top¹. The whole of this hill is now covered by turf, and no attempt has yet been made to injure its form by excavation.

But the most curious part of the antiquities of Thebes is in the Church of St. Demetrius, and upon the western side of it. There may still be seen the rarest specimens of architecture in Greece; namely, several beautiful capitals of that chaste and antient pattern of the Corinthian order; which is entirely without volute for the corners, and has a single wreath of the simplest Acanthus foliage to crown its base. There is not in Europe a single instance of this most elegant variety of the Corinthian in any modern structure. In fact, it is only known to those persons who have seen the very few examples of it that exist among the ruins of the Grecian cities. There is no trace of it among the ruins of Rome; yet, in point of taste, it is so exceedingly superior to the more ornamented and crowded capital which was afterwards introduced, that both the rival connoscenti of Athens, Lusieri and Fauvel, have designed and modelled it; and they have spoken of its discovery as forming an epocha in the history of the art. In one or two instances, the attention of the antient sculptor to simplicity has been so severe, that even the edges of the foliage have not been raffed (to borrow from the builder's vocabulary), but expressed in gross; and, consequently, the admirers of excessive minuteness, in the detail of little parts, would call such capitals, unfinished; although the grandeur of design, when viewed at the distance in which such objects were intended to be seen, especially in the majestic temples of Greece, be thereby considerably augmented. It is to this cause that the Doric, in buildings of so much vastness, owes its superiority over all the other orders of architecture—to that simplicity which is the very soul of grandeur; where nothing that is little can be tolerated for an instant. Excessive minuteness of design, and of execution, may suit the puny imitations of Grecian architecture seen in the buildings of modern cities; upon the same principle that it is allowable in a piece of Chinese carving in ivory; because works of this kind are fitted for a small scope of observation; but when such minuteness is introduced into the vast features of a gigantic style, it becomes superfluous and contemptible.

CHAP. III.
Population of Thebes.

THEBES contains about three hundred houses¹, and it is governed by a Waiwode. Including the inhabitants of its suburbs, it has a numerous population; but no accurate calculation of this can be made, because no reliance can be placed upon the contradictory statements which are given to travellers. Du Loir, in the middle of the seventeenth century, affirmed, that he found THEBES as well peopled as Athens, and better provided with the necessaries of life. Spon computed its population at three or four thousand souls²; but he was not one entire day in the town, and his information could only have been obtained from the Greek with whom he lodged³. THEBES has one advantage over Athens, in being well watered⁴; and to this circumstance, in former times, might be attributed the number and beauty of

(1) Five hundred, according to Mr. Hobhouse (Trav. p. 278. Lond. 1814.); two mosques; and four churches.

(2) "Trois ou quatre mille ames, en comprenant les faux-bourgs." Voyage en Grèce, tom. II. p. 55. A la Haye, 1724. Mr. Haygarth also makes the number of inhabitants "about 4000." See Notes, &c. to Part. I. of Haygarth's Greece, a Poem, p. 166. Lond. 1814.

(3) Wheler says they left Livadia, "January the twenty-fifth, about eleven in the morning," and Thebes by day-break Jan. 26; but this must be an error; for he also states that they passed the night, after leaving Livadia, at a place called Megalo-molci, before they reached Thebes, where they arrived at noon. See Wheler's Journey into Greece, pp. 330, 331, 333. Lond. 1682.

of its gardens⁵, and the plantations now decorating its suburbs. At present, however, we must consider the remains of this city as almost unknown: the travellers who have passed through it, and who possessed abilities for the undertaking, wanting the leisure or the liberty of exploring it, rather teach us to despair of reaping any information upon the spot, than to expect discoveries among the ruins. One of the earliest writers by whom it is mentioned in modern times⁶, with the true gallantry of a Frenchman, supplies the absence of literary intelligence, by a lively encomium upon the extraordinary charms of its living beauties; and especially of its Jewesses, which, in his opinion, he says, “valent bien des pierres et des tombeaux.” We could neither dispute nor confirm the accuracy of his observations respecting the Theban women, since nothing can be more difficult than to obtain a sight of them; and of this indeed he complained⁷. The same reserve and jealousy with respect to its female inhabitants was characteristic of Thebes in the first periods of its decline. Its women are mentioned by Dicæarchus, as being remarkable for the reserve and modesty of their behaviour⁸; and he describes their antient costume as corresponding corresponding with the same disguise in which alone we were constrained to view them; passing the streets like so many mute and moving spectres, veiled from head to foot, leaving nothing visible of their features but their eyes, and these peering indistinctly through two holes in the drapery covering their faces¹. The time cannot be far distant when society will be upon a different establishment in this country; when the hidden treasures of Greece, of every description, will at least become liable to observation; and Thebes, for so many ages "illustrious only in its misfortunes²," will again revive, becoming conspicuous for the importance of its contributions to History and to the Fine Arts. Although described by antient writers as retaining none other vestige than its name, of what it once had been, yet we find that so late as the second century, its gates were not only entire, but Pausanias was enabled to collect their several appellations³. The inhabitants also pointed out to him their antient

(5) The statues of Thebes seem to have been the productions of the most celebrated artists of Greece. Their materials, besides stone and marble, consisted of bronze, and of cedar. The Thebans had wooden statues, so antient, that they were said to have been made from the prows of the ships of Cadmus (Pausan. Bœotica, c. 16. p. 742. edit. Kuhnii). Naturalists may have overlooked the very curious notice of the Elk, which occurs in Pausanias, after the description he gives of the statue of a Triton, and which does containing the SEPULCHRE OF PINDAR, there were also a Gymnasium and a Stadium contiguous to the *Heracléum*¹. The Stadium will doubtless be hereafter discovered, and the future knowledge of its situation will serve as a beacon guiding to the buried vestiges of the Gymnasium and the Temple. In this edifice there were colossal statues of Hercules and Minerva in Pentelican marble, the workmanship of *Alcamanes*². It is therefore almost impossible, that the antiquities enumerated by Pausanias can have been all removed from the ruins of a city placed at such a distance from the coast, and so remote from the military operations of the Romans after the age of the Antonines, and from all those means which afforded to them a facility of ransacking the Grecian cities for works of art; neither is it likely that Thebes has been despoiled of its valuable remains to serve as building materials for the Turks; because there is no place near enough to render it a convenient object of resort for such a supply; and Turks are not likely to use extraordinary exertions upon any occasion of this nature. The probable conclusion therefore does not much differ from the notions now entertained of this rare animal. He says it is found in the country of the Celts, and that it is called 'Αλεῆ, (ibid. p. 750.) being half a stag, and half a camel; of rare occurrence; and only casually taken, in hunting other wild beasts.

(1) It is uncertain of what nature this edifice was. Pausanias does not once call it a temple, although it is several times mentioned by him. The words Ἐντραῖθα Ἡρακλεῖόν τεινον are, by Amaseus, rendered "Herculis illic templum:." and it is very usual to consider every structure as a temple which is noticed by Pausanias as containing statues.

therefore must be, that within the mosques, baths, and dwellings of its present inhabitants, and, above all, beneath the soil now occupied by the town and by the suburbs, many of its antiquities lie concealed from observation.

Our success at Skemata in collecting medals made us more than usually diligent in our inquiries among the silversmiths at Thebes. Upon our return from the morning's excursion, we paid a visit to all the persons we could find of this description, and we collected several valuable reliques. Among these were, a marble bust of Venus, of very diminutive size; and one of a Vestal, exquisitely modelled in *terra cotta*¹. These antiquities had been evidently votive offerings; for they had no marks of fracture as if broken from small statues, but were so shaped as to admit of their standing upright, either upon the altars, or within some of the numerous Hiera of the antient city. We also collected many silver and bronze medals of the Macedonian kings and cities of Greece. Some of the silver medals had the rude globular form which characterizes the oldest coinage of the country: they exhibited in front the figure of the Bœotian shield; and upon their obverse sides, an indented square with this monogram ⊕ in the centre. The other silver medals were of Thebes, of Corinth, and of Athens. The Macedonian silver consisted of medals of Alexander, and of Cassander. We also procured many bronze coins; among these were several of Bœotia, of very diminutive size, with the

the usual symbol of the shield before mentioned, and with the legend ΒΟΙΩΤΩΝ. It will not be necessary to give a particular description of all the bronze coins found here; because they are less worth notice than medals in silver; being more modern. They consisted of the coins of the Macedonian kings, particularly of Alexander, and of Cassander; the latter appearing with the legend entire, ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΚΑΣΣΑΝΔΡΟΥ, and with a portrait of that monarch; one of the few instances where a portrait occurs upon Greek medals. Of the bronze coins of cities, may be mentioned, as the most rare, those of Abdera, with the legend ΑΒΔΗΡΙΤΕΩΝ; of Thespia, ΘΕΣΠΙΕΩΝ; of Athens, ΑΘΕΝΑΙΩΝ; of Elatea, representing a bull's head with fillets, and the legend ΕΛ; and lastly, a bronze medal, which, with one exception alone, is perhaps unique, of Ilesium in Boeotia. We have no other authority for the name of the city, than the mention made of it by Homer as a city of Boeotia, in his catalogue of the ships¹. It represents in front the armed head of Pallas; and for its reverse, the head of a goat encircled by a laurel wreath, containing the letters ΙΛ. Mentelle, author of the Géographie Ancienne, in the French Encyclopédié, observes, that it should be written without the aspirate²; but *Eckhel*³ writes it Hilesium; and he has attributed attributed to Ismene a bronze medal, which he describes as being unique, but it is evidently of Ilesium, for it has the same reverse; and he confesses that the letters were not sufficiently perfect to decide the name of the city to which it belonged⁴.

During the afternoon of this day we made the entire circuit of Thebes, returning by the western side; and we computed the circumference of the present town as about equal to two English miles and a half. Beneath a ruined tower upon the walls, at the outside of the town, we observed a massive Soros of one entire block of marble, serving as a cistern beneath a fountain. It is close to the public road. Upon this Soros there appeared a very curious bas-relief, representing, in rude and most antient sculpture, the figure of a Phoenix, perched upon the pinnacle of an obelisk⁵. In the position of a Soros so near to one of the antient fountains of the city, there is certainly nothing remarkable, because it is a custom common to all Turkey; but such is the habitual indolence of the Turks, that although they make this use of the sepulchres

(5) A valuable observation is made by Pausanias, to prove that the colony under Cadmus was not Ægyptian, but Phœnician. He says, that a statue of Minerva shewn in Thebes, as being dedicated by Cadmus, was not called Σαῖς, according to her Ægyptian appellation, but that it bore her Phœnician name of Σίγα. Τοῖς οὖν νομίζουσιν εἰς γῆν ἀφικέσθαι Κάλμω τὴν Θεβαῖδα, Αἰγύπτιον, καὶ οὐ Φοίνικα ὄντα, ἕστιν ἰναντίον τῷ λόγῳ τῆς Ἀθηναῖς ταύτης τὸ ὄνομα, ὅτι Σίγα κατὰ γλῶσσαν τὴν Φοινίκων καλεῖται, καὶ οὐ Σαῖς κατὰ τὴν Αἰγυπτίων φωνήν. *Pausan. sepulchres of the nations which formerly surrounded the Ægean, and eastern parts of the Mediterranean, they will never bestow much labour upon the removal of such immense and ponderous tombs: the fountain must be near to the spot where the tomb is situated, or they will be contented to carry on their ablutions without placing any cistern beneath it. If therefore so accurate a writer as Pausanias, being upon the spot, as he declares himself to have been¹, has, in his description of this place, mentioned circumstances so remarkable as the contiguity of a sepulchre and a fountain near to the public way, we may perhaps recognise the objects he has alluded to; for this Soros may have been the TOMB of HECTOR, and the fountain near to it the *ŒDIPODIA*²; where, according to the name it consequently received, the Thebans maintained that Edipus washed off the blood with which he was contaminated, after the murder of his father³. It is true that Pausanias uses the word τάφος to signify the Tomb; and this word he generally applies to a Tumulus. There is also another

(1) The ruins of the house where Pindar lived (the only building which Alexander suffered to remain at the destruction of Thebes) were shewn to Pausanias: and it is in speaking of a Sacristy, containing a statue, contiguous to these ruins, which the inhabitants opened only upon one day in the year, that Pausanias alludes to his own Autopsy, in these words. another tomb mentioned by him as near to the same fountain; but the remarkable representation of a Phœnix upon an Obelisk of the Sun, as having risen from its ashes, seems to be peculiarly adapted to the story of the removal of Hector's ashes, in obedience to the Oracle, from his Trojan grave, to become an object of reverence in the city of *Cadmus*⁴. The superstition respecting this bird is older than *Herodotus*⁵; and in after ages the Phœnix appeared upon

(5) Ἔστι δὲ ἄλλος ὄρνις ἱρὸς, τῷ ὀνόματι Φοῖνιξ. (Herodoti Euterpe, lib. ii. p. 117. Lond. 1679) The superstition concerning this bird existed in Egypt long before the time of Herodotus, who saw there a representation of the Phœnix, and says it bore a resemblance to the Eagle: (Ibid.) The same may be said of the figure on the Theban bas-relief, which might be taken for an Eagle, but for the circumstance of the Heliopolitan Obelisk, or Pillar of the Sun, which refers it at once to the Phœnix. The earliest Thebans could not have been unacquainted with the notions entertained of the Phœnix; because its very name, and perhaps the origin of its fabulous history, were Assyrian. Ovid tells us from whom it received its appellation:

"Solis avi specimen ———
Una est quæ reparat, sequæ ipsa reseminet, ales; Assyrii Phœnica vocant."—— Metamorph. lib. xv.

And Claudian, by whom it is repeatedly mentioned, having dignified the history of the Phœnix with all the majesty of his Muse, expresses himself in language that would not have been inapplicable as an epitaph upon the Soros here mentioned; admitting that it really enshrined the deified reliques of the son of Priam.

antient monuments as a symbol of reviving nature, especially upon the Roman medals'. With so many existing monuments of the earliest ages of history and poetry, presented to the casual notice of a transitory traveller, it will not surely again be affirmed that no vestige remains of the Bœotian capital. Perhaps indeed it may be doubted, whether, in any part of Greece, there could be found a nobler association of sublime and dignified objects than was here collected into one view: the living fountain—the speaking sepulchre—the Cadmæan citadel—the Ogygian plain—overwhelming the mind with every recollection that has been made powerful by genius, and consecrated by inspiration; where every zephyr, breathing from HELICON, and PARNASSUS, over the mouldering fabrics of THEBES, seems to whisper, as it passes, the names of Epaminondas and Pindar and Homer and Orpheus.

Albanian Market.

The next day, December the sixth, there was, as it is usual in the Greek towns, a Sunday market for the Albanians; and this afforded a very desirable sight for us, because it enabled us to view a multitude of that people from all parts of the country, and to inspect the produce of Bœotia, in the commodities brought by them for sale. They appeared in all the colours of their extraordinary costume, which is supposed to exhibit the sort of dress worn by the Macedonians in old time. It has been already represented in a former part of these Travels¹; and its resemblance to the habits of the Celts has also been pointed out². They brought to this market, corn, and oxen, and fish, and butcher's meat, and wood. We entered into a place where they had assembled to eat their food together; not as at an ordinary, but rather an Albanian pic-nic, to which every individual contributed something that he had conveyed with him from his own home. This food, packed in a cleanly manner by their women, consisted principally of heavy corn-cakes baked in wood embers, and of dried fruit. Game abounds in the country; but they have a remarkable prejudice, which, as it also characterized the antient inhabitants of Greece³, and is still universal, ought to be mentioned. They will neither eat a hare, nor touch it after it has been killed: and so powerful is their aversion from this animal, that no Albanian servant can be prevailed upon to take the skin from a hare, or even to remain in the house where it is dressed⁴. Some of these Albanians came from Skemata; where they said they had seen our Epidaurian dog, during the preceding evening; and that he had been to the house where we had lodged, in search of us. In the course of the day a letter arrived from Captain Lacy, who informed us that he had also seen him, about six miles from Thebes: so that the poor animal had scoured the whole country, and was apparently making his way back to Athens; which indeed proved to be the case².
in

Sect. 2. of these Travels, Broz. 1814.— Their military dress, with all its embroidery, is however much better represented by a coloured plate in Mr. Hobhouse's Travels (facing p. 133. London, 1813), which exhibits an Albanian warrior to the life: and for a full account of this remarkable people the Reader is particularly referred to Mr. Hobhouse's Work.

Journey to Cithæron and Platæa.

On Monday afternoon, December the seventh, being the fourth since our arrival, we left Thebes, at three o'clock, by the *Gate of Electra*³, pursuing the route marked out by Pausanias, as leading towards Mount CITHÆRON and PLATÆA, in the hope of finding some vestiges of that city; no remains of it having hitherto been discovered. Leaving the town, there is an aqueduct, in the wall of which we saw a bas-relief representing an equestrian figure, with one of his horse's fore feet resting upon the marble cylinder of a well, as in the act of striking it with his hoof. This evidently alludes to the Bœotian story of the Hippocrene fountain, produced where the earth was struck by the hoof of Bellerophon's horse *Pegasus*⁴; and it confirms what the author

(2) Such a loss may appear to be of little importance to a Reader by his fire-side; but it was seriously regretted on our part; for it deprived us of a guard upon whose fidelity and watchfulness we could always rely, and whose sagacity seemed almost human. He would sometimes go forward with the baggage-horses upon a journey; and when the owner of the horses dismounted the baggage, he never quitted it until we arrived.

author has said elsewhere of the antiquity of those massive marble cylinders placed over the mouths of wells in Greece; as at Athens, and Argos: for the well represented by this bas-relief resembled, as they do, externally, an antient altar; and it might be mistaken for one, but for the remarkable position of the horse, which plainly refers to the real subject intended to be represented. On the outside of the town, upon this southern side of Thebes, there is a fountain; perhaps the same described by *Spon*³ as that which the Antients called Dircé, and which flowed into the Ismenus. The view of the Cadmæan Citadel is here very grand; and it is by much the finest view of Thebes. It appears to stand amidst several broken eminences, towering above all of them, and commanding the great plain which extends towards the right and left, reaching from east to *west*⁴. Beyond the plain, towards the north, appear the wavy summits of the mountain boundary. We continued through pasture land to Platānā, distant two hours from THEBES; a small village, consisting only of seven cottages, but perhaps retaining, in its name, a derivative from the antient appellation

This Greek fable originated, according to Bochart, in the corruption of a Phœnician word. (*Vid. Not. Clerici in Varior. Not. Hesiod. p. 347. Edit. Robinson. Oxon. 1737. appellation of PLATÆA. The whole of this part of the plain, through which the Asopus flows, is still called Platana, as far as the village of Purgos to the west; where there is one of those ruined towers common in the plains of Bœotia, probably the remains of forts constructed for alarm and defence, during the period of the Roman power; but as it is likely that they were erected upon the site, and with the materials afforded by the ruins of the Grecian towns, they are always worthy of notice. We arrived at Platänä one hour before sun-set, and immediately set out for the source of the Asopus. This river maintains the character of almost all the Grecian streams, being only a winter torrent; and so dry in summer, that it may be passed without observation; a circumstance that happened to us in this month of December, as we journeyed from MARATHON to THEBES¹. The source of it is erroneously placed by geographers² in Mount CITHÆRON. It does not rise in the mountain, but in this plain, at the foot of CITHÆRON, as we shall presently show. A minute attention to the relative position of objects near the village of Platänä will here be requisite; that it may enable us to correct the very erroneous description of this district published by the Abbé Barthelemy, to illustrate his account of the battle of Platæa, from the observations of *Barbié du Bocage*³. The Asopus is there deduced from the heights heights of CITHÆRON, whence it flows from the south towards the north, through an imaginary valley, separating into two channels which do not exist; and PLATÆA is placed upon the mountain to the south of these separate streams. We had this map upon the spot; and finding it to be so false and confused, that it was wholly irreconcilable with the scene itself, the author, with the very imperfect means he possessed, made a more accurate survey; but this document has since been lost. However, from the notes written at the time, he is able in some measure to supply its place; and for the purpose, it may be proper to recapitulate a little of what has been said before. Platănă is about six miles to the south of Thebes. To the south-west of Platănă upon CITHÆRON, now bearing the name of Elatæa, is a place called Cocla, in view, and as it were hanging upon the side of the mountain. Due west is Purgos, with its ruined tower, at the extremity of the plain of Platănă. Turning from the south towards the east, to the south-east of Platănă village, there are some ruins: first, of a chapel, upon a hill at about gun-shot distance, in which we saw an antient bas-relief; and somewhat farther on, in this direction, are the ruins of a village, and of another chapel, standing upon the site of an antient temple, whose dilapidations are observable in the large hewn stones lying all around the area it occupied. Below this chapel is the SOURCE OF THE ASOPUS; not upon CITHÆRON, but in the Platæan plain, below the mountain. From its source, winding round to the right, thereby inclosing the land wherein the village of Platănă lies, and flowing at first from the south-east towards the north-west, it afterwards turns off towards the north and north-east, separating the antient Theban plain from that of Platæa; and thence, pursuing its course towards the Gulph of Euripus, it there falls into the sea. The appearance of the source is that of a little well in the midst of a small marsh; and close to it are the vestiges of some antient structure, perhaps the Hieron of the source itself.

Night put a stop to our farther researches, after our visit to the source of the Asopus; and we returned to the village of Platānū without having as yet found any remains of the city of PLATÆA. To our great surprise, the inhabitants of Platānū entertained traditions remarkably connected with the history of the place. They spoke of a great battle having happened here in former times; and said they would conduct us in the morning to the spot where it was fought; for they knew it well, both from the circumstance of its being more fertile than any other part of their land, and from the various bits of iron, lead, and other antiquities, which they had always been accustomed to find there. They spoke also of a Palæo-castro, in the direction of Cocla, but less distant; situated upon a projecting part of Cithæron, where they occasionally find medals. The most interesting conversation we ever had with the Albanians took place this evening, among the inhabitants of Platānū. The owner of the little hut where we lodged, welcomed us, as we entered, with the usual hearty hospitality of his countrymen: seating himself upon the clean and well-swept floor of his dwelling, with his back leaning against his upright sacks of corn, he bade his wife be brisk, and get a cake of bread ready, and bake it upon the hearth, while he peeled the onions; "for," said he, "the strangers shall eat and be merry." The cake was soon prepared, and covered with glowing embers; the wife every now and then pushing the hot coals aside, with her fingers, to see when the edges of the dough began to crack¹. Presently it was all uncovered; and taking it from the fire, she wiped off the ashes with her woollen apron; and then, breaking it nicely into shares, she gave to each person present a smoking portion, accompanied by a large peeled onion. The custom is, to eat the onion raw, with the hot cake of the unleavened bread: and this diet we relished, with a little salt, to the full as much as did our host himself; who setting the example, encouraged us, by adding, that "his sacks were all full, and that we need not fear to eat plentifully." His neighbours, attracted by curiosity, joined the circle round his hearth; and a fresh cake was made for them; another and another being afterwards devoured. When they had all eaten, as it sometimes happens among people who are well fed, a conversation began upon the faults of their rulers, and the grievous oppressions under which they laboured. We then began to perceive that these poor peasants are not so entirely ignorant of the antient renown of their country, or of its present resources, as might be supposed. They said,

(1) Cakes of bread, thus baked upon the hearth and covered with the embers, were called, by the Antient Greeks, Σποδίται ἄρτοι, 'Εγκρυφίαι. (Vid. Athenæi Deipnosoph. lib. iii. c. 27. Suid. Hesych.) If baked upon the embers, the bread bore another name. Ἄρτου δ' εἶδος ἰστί και ὁ ἀποπυρίας καλούμενος, ἐκ' ἀνθράκων δ' ὀπτάται. καλεῖται δ' ὄστος ὑπό τινος ζυμίτης. Athen. said, that the land they cultivated had once been tilled by a race of famous warriors; and that it would be found now, as formerly, full of heroes, if a leader were to present himself. The family of our host consisted of himself and his wife, and eight sons and daughters. His boys were stout and sturdy, and his girls extremely beautiful. He said that the daily expense of his household amounted to three parûhs a head; and that his annual payment to his Turkish masters came to an hundred and fifty piastres more, which he found it a very difficult thing to supply. Allowing, therefore, that the amount of his earnings barely equalled his expenditure, his income altogether, for the maintenance of a wife and eight children, would not be equal to twelve pounds sterling of our money, according to the average of exchange between England and Turkey¹.

The next morning, Tuesday December the eighth, we were surprised to find the ground covered with snow, it being the first time we had seen snow in Greece. The inhabitants of Platânâ told us so great a quantity fell in the preceding winter, that they were confined to their cottages during several weeks;—a remarkable circumstance in so low a situation, and in such a latitude². It affords a striking confirmation of the accuracy of Thucydides, who, with reference to this part of Bœotia, has related, that a great deal of snow fell during the night when the Plataeans fled to Athens, and left their city; taking the road towards Thebes, in order to deceive their enemies who were

were stationed there³. We set out with our host, to visit the place still pointed out, by the tradition of his countrymen, as the field of THE BATTLE OF PLATÆA. In our way thither, we passed a very small stream, called, by the people of this village, Platänä river: it falls into the Asopus. And near to it there is an antient well, distinguished as such by being covered with a massive marble cylinder, whose interior is worn into deep furrows by the ropes formerly used in drawing water. To mark the situation of this well as precisely as possible, it is necessary to state, that the whole distance to the ground called The field of battle by the people of Platänä, is not more than a mile to the north-east of their village; and this well is about half way thither. The stream near to it may perhaps be that of the Gargaphian fountain, mentioned by Herodotus when he notices the station of the Lacedæmonian soldiers, before the battle of *Platæa*⁴: it was near to the Asopus, and upon the right wing of the Grecian army at the foot of *Cithæron*⁵. And the well seems to correspond, as to its situation, with the sacred well of Pausanias; but there were no ruins by the side of it⁶. The peasants still entertain traditions and superstitious notions concerning another well, somewhat farther on, more accordant with

with his account' of the inspiring properties of the ΦΡΕΑΡ 'ΙΕΡΟΝ, and whose situation will be particularly described. Every object of this kind, not being liable to change, will be eagerly sought for by travellers, as the antient topography of Greece becomes more known; for the time is fast approaching when the history of the battle of Platæa will be illustrated by an accurate survey of the scene of action. The position of the sacred well is falsely assigned in the plan of the battle by Barbié du Boccage. Instead of being sought for towards Cithæron, or in the plain immediately below the mountain, as he has placed it, the vestiges, perhaps of the Temple of Apollo, and the well itself, may be found quite in a contrary direction. That we may describe the spot with so much precision as to become guides for others who come after us, it will be necessary to mark its situation, with reference not only to the village of Platånä, but to the main route from Thebes to the Peloponnesus. In the road which leads from Thebes to the Morea, about a league and a quarter from Thebes, there is a bridge over the Asopus, now called "the Morca bridge;" and here, according to the tradition of the inhabitants, was the camp of Mardonius, or, as they style him, "the Generalissimo of the grand army of the Medes:" and certainly there is nothing in their tradition contradicting what historians teach us to believe was the real position of the Persian camp. From this bridge (which, as a landmark, no traveller will be at any loss to discover) turning out of the road, and crossing the Asopus to the south-west, about a mile mile up the plain of Platănă, is the well considered by the inhabitants as the "sacred well." Among several large antique stones, lying by the side of it, they pointed out to us a piece of rude, and very antient sculpture, considered by them as now exhibiting the marks of horses' feet; but which is evidently nothing more than a part of an architectural ornament belonging to some temple once erected near to this well, probably that of Apollo, which was in ruins in the time of *Pausanias*², and with whose situation, from the remarkable circumstance of the well itself, and its reputed sanctity even at the present time, it seems so accurately to correspond. The form of the grooving in the stone exhibits this appearance, which has given rise to the absurd notion of an impression made by the feet of horses. All along this plain, from the Morea bridge to the well, the peasants, as they till the soil, find bits of iron and of lead, together with antient coins: from this circumstance, and the great fertility of the soil, they maintain that this was the field of the memorable battle of Plataea. The road leading from Thebes to the Peloponnesus is the present boundary boundary of the territory of *Platănă*¹; which is however very extensive, as the people of Platănă informed us; for they say it reaches to a very considerable distance, winding in a fine fertile plain between Platănă and Purgos. We observed no tombs either upon or near to the spot assigned by tradition for the scene of such a memorable contest; but in going from Platănă to Cocla, just before arriving at the latter place, we found the ruins of the city of PLATÆA; and here we saw some antient sepulchres without the walls of the Citadel²; also afterwards, in descending from Cocla towards LEUCTRA, we noticed tumuli in the Plataensian plain; corresponding with the account given by *Pausanias*³; more than one of them being surmounted by a ruin in stone.

Platănă of course takes its present name from the ground whereon it stands. The ruins of PLATÆA, which no traveller before us had noticed, are situated upon a promontory, projecting from the base of CITHÆRON. The place has now the usual appellation bestowed upon the ruins of Grecian citadels: it is called Palæo-Castro; but it must not be confounded with Cocla, being at least a mile nearer to Platănă than that village. In going from Platănă to Palæo-Castro, before arriving at these ruins, we saw the tombs before mentioned: then we arrived at the walls of PLATÆA; standing rather in an elevated situation, upon the promontory which here stretches out from the mountain. Those walls walls are of the earliest kind of military structure, and almost Cyclopæan; consisting of very considerable masses, evenly hewn, and well built. Here the peasants, in ploughing the soil, find their labours frequently obstructed by large blocks of stone; and the earth is filled with broken remains of terra cottas. The upper part of the promontory is entirely covered with ruins: among these we found some pieces of serpentine porphyry, but the buildings in general appear to have been constructed with common limestone. Some labourers then employed among these ruins had found upon the spot a few small silver coins, which they sold to us. The legend not being entire upon any one of them, we can only conjecture, from the subjects represented, that they are of Chalcis in Eubœa. In front they exhibit the same head of Ceres that appears upon the smaller Carthaginian medals; and upon their obverse sides, an eagle devouring a serpent, which may be considered as an invariable type of the medals of Chalcis. Besides these, both here and at Platænâ, we obtained a few very small bronze coins of Bœotia, with the usual symbols—the Bœotian shield, a trident, and the legend ΒΟΙΩΤΩΝ. Not a single medal of Platæa could be procured, here or in any part of Bœotia; nor is there a single example of such a medal in any European collection. It has been said, in order to explain this, that the city was destroyed at a very early period; but after its restoration, first by Philip, and afterwards by Alexander, it continued to be inhabited until a very late age. Pausanias, in the second century, gives an account of the curiosities of the city, and relates the traditions of its inhabitants.

inhabitants'. Future travellers, who have leisure for making excavations, will find this spot very likely to answer the purposes of such an undertaking; and to reward them for the labour it will require. The ground-plot and foundations of temples are visible among the vestiges of the citadel; and the remains of towers are conspicuous upon its walls. A remarkable proof of the great antiquity of mural turrets in military architecture was afforded in a former Part of these Travels; and of this style of structure were the fortifications of PLATÆA. In the account given of the citadel by Thucydides, we further learn that it was also protected by a fosse: yet such was the simplicity of the means used for securing those ancient fastnesses, compared with the complicated works of a modern fortress, that when the Thebans, after their vain attempt to surprise the city, were endeavouring to effect their escape, they cut the wooden bolt of the gates asunder; a woman having supplied them with a hatchet for this purpose.

Coela.

About a mile beyond the ruins of PLATÆA, is the modern village of Coela. Here we also collected some bronze medals of Beotia, from the inhabitants. It is situated upon an an eminence upon the side of CITHÆRON, at one hour's distance from Platānā. Descending from Cocla towards LEUCTRA, which retains something of its antient name, although pronounced Leftra, or Lefca, we noticed several tombs; and upon a lofty conical hill, about half way between these two places, we observed the remains of an antient fortress. Below this hill, upon the left hand, about a quarter of a mile from the road, we saw also some columns, and the remains of a temple, since formed into a chapel. The peasants told us that there was an inscription in the pavement of this building; but after working for some time, to no purpose, in search of it, by removing the earth and rubbish which covered the pavement, we abandoned the undertaking. The modern chapels which exist everywhere in the vicinity of Thebes, and indeed over all Bœotia, constructed from the ruins of old Pagan sanctuaries, prove the vast number of antient Hiera and temples which formerly abounded in the country. We observed them in all the Bœotian plain, at Palæo-Castro, and throughout the whole route towards THESPIA and HELICON. Having crossed the hills which separate the plain of PLATÆA from that of LEUCTRA, we arrived at the ruins of the latter place; which though but a village of Bœotia, became so conspicuous, owing to the victory obtained here by the Thebans under Epaminondas, over a very superior force of the Spartans, that the traces yet remaining of its antient monuments are like those of a considerable city. This famous battle was fought on the eighth of July, in the year 371 before Christ. On the side of the Thebans only three hundred were slain; but the Spartans lost four thousand¹, who were every one put to death, together with their king Cleombrotus; and they forfeited, for ever, the empire of Greece, which they had retained during three centuries². Wheler seems to have mistaken the ruins of LEUCTRA for the remains of another city. They are situated at the distance of three hours from *Cocla*³. The ground for a considerable space is covered with immense fragments of marble and stone; among which the inhabitants have long laboured in vain to introduce the plough for the cultivation of the soil. We saw them employed in breaking a huge bas-relief, and labouring hard to remove the foundations of antient edifices: but the remains of the trophies, temples, and walls of LEUCTRA will resist their utmost unremitted efforts for a long time to come. Half a mile farther on, upon the brow of a hill, above the plain of Leuctra, is Rimocastri. We continued journeying along this plain towards Neocorio; and about two miles from LEUCTRA we passed upon our right the remains of an antient town, now called Phria, whose vestiges are very considerable. It was here that Wheler found several inscriptions; but none of them enabled him to ascertain the original name of the place⁴. Near the road was observed a bas-relief representing

CHAP. III.

Ruins at Phria.

(1) Pausanias states the numbers very differently; making the loss of the Thebans only equal to forty-seven, and that of the Spartans, one thousand.

representing a human figure with a lance or spear, standing by a horse. Thence turning towards the left, we crossed a river which runs from HELICON into the plain, and saw the shaft of a column lying in the channel of it. We then ascended gradually towards the side of HELICON, now called Zagără, and came to the village of Neocorio, considered by Wheler as antiently THESPIA: it is distant one hour, or three miles, from LEUCTRA. There are so many ruins near to this place, at the foot of HELICON, that we could not confirm the observations of Wheler as to the exact situation of THESPIA. The ruins at Phria have perhaps more pretension to the name of THESPIA than the village called Neocorio, where there is not a trace even of the broken pottery which is always found upon the site of antient cities, nor of any antiquity whatsoever¹. At a short distance from Neocorio, before our arrival there, upon our right, we thought we had found the situation of THESPIA, by the quantity of ruins we there observed: but its position is by no means certain; nor have we since been satisfied with what other travellers, whom we consulted, have said upon the subject. If Neocorio be considered as now occupying the site of THESPIA, not a vestige remains of the antient city. Even the inscription which Wheler discovered upon the pedestal of a statue serving for the altar of a church Doubts respecting the supposed situation of Thespia.

(5) The very name of the place is against the notion of its having ever been an antient city. Neocorio signifies New-town; in opposition to Palæo-corio, and Palæo-castro, names generally applied to places where there are ruins.

church was not found at Neocorio, but in its neighbourhood; and this we sought for in vain¹. We observed, indeed, a few letters belonging to a Greek inscription, in a chapel above the village of Neocorio; but these stones might all of them have been brought from Phria, which is hard by, and which has evidently served as a quarry for the inhabitants of all this district, whenever building materials were required. As the ruins at Phria do immediately succeed to those of Leuctra, in journeying from PLATÆA to MOUNT HELICON, it seems probable that they can be no other than those of THESPIA. At Neocorio we failed in obtaining one essential requisite for throwing light upon this subject; namely, Thespian medals: for by attention to local circumstances, connected with the discovery of the antient coins of Grecian cities, many doubts may be removed concerning the situation of those cities: and if scholars, visiting Greece, would be careful to notice the particular symbols which predominate upon gems, as well as upon medals, in particular places, before these reliques are indiscriminately mixed together, to be classed according to the cabinet theories of untravelling antiquaries, much of the confusion introduced by the writings of the latter might be precluded². The particular symbol that that might be said to predominate among the medals found here, was that of a radiated female head, represented in front; and upon the obverse side, a warrior, leaning with his right arm upon his right thigh, his right foot being elevated and supported by a pedestal: this figure holds in his left hand a spear. Such medals we often found in Bœotia; but never with any legible inscription. We obtained at Neocorio two very remarkable bronze coins, having a beautiful full face in front of each, differing from the former; and upon their obverse sides was the letter Φ in a chaplet or wreath of laurel. Perhaps these are medals of Phocis; but being found upon this spot, it is possible that they might belong to Phria, and that an antient town of this name once stood where the ruins now are, which bear this appellation. From these observations, it must be evident that some employment remains for future travellers in this part of Bœotia; and above all, that the situation of THESPIA, although nearly that which Wheeler has assigned for it, has not yet been satisfactorily ascertained.

Perhaps we may be more fortunate in marking the position of places in MOUNT HELICON. As there is no map to illustrate the topography of HELICON, it was necessary to be more than usually attentive to the observations of Strabo and Pausanias: no description of the mountain having been given by any modern author; nor, at the time of our journey, was there any thing known of the antient road from LEUCTRA and THESPIA to LEBADÉA. It had always been customary to avoid the mountain, and to proceed to LEBADÉA by a circuitous route along the level country.

CHAP. III.

Yet it must have been evident to any one who had read the learned work of Barthelemy, respecting the imaginary Travels of Anacharsis, that, being guided by Strabo and by Pausanias, he proceeds from PLATEA, to LEUCTRA and to ASCRA; as a common route in going to LEBADÉA. We were therefore convinced, that if we could discover the old route in which ASCRA was situated, we should not only be gratified by visiting the birth-place of HESIOD, but perhaps discover also the site of THE GROVE OF THE MUSES, which was also in HELICON; although neither of these places had then been recognised by any modern traveller.

Discovery of the old Route through Helicon.

After a very diligent inquiry at Neocorio, we were informed that a defile, or pass, of Mount Helicon conducted to LEBADÉA; and that this road might be used, instead of the more usual way by the plain. As we remained in this village during the night, we had an opportunity of examining many of the peasants concerning this route. Attracted by a natural curiosity to see strangers, several of them came from other dwellings to the cottage where we lodged. They told us, that if we would send our baggage round by Palæo Panaja, and Mazi, we might go over the mountain, by the Monastery of St. Nicholo, to Sagärä, or Sackra, and afterwards descend by another Monastery of St. George, to LEBADÉA. "It was," they said, "a mountain pass; and the shortest way: " but being the old road, narrow and stony, and difficult " for travellers, it had long been disused, except by the " peasants; and the other route had been considered as " more convenient for travellers." This was precisely the sort of information we had been desirous to obtain. In many parts parts of Greece, where the antient paved road has fallen to decay, and the parts of it have been torn up, it has been abandoned: in the passage of a mountain, the destruction of the antient pavement would therefore in all probability cause the road to become so bad as to occasion the entire desertion of the whole route; and that this was the case in the present instance, will presently be made manifest.

We passed the night, as we had done at Platână, in the midst of Albanians, stretched around a hearth upon the same floor with us; their cattle occupying one half of the room, and the family the other. The same simplicity appeared in all things relating to their manner of life,—the same disinterested hospitality and cleanliness: for although the best Albanian cottage has no hole in the roof whereby the smoke from the hearth may escape, yet the walls and the floor, being covered with clay or plaister constantly swept, are so perfectly clean, that neither vermin nor dirt of any kind can be harboured; nor is there in these dwellings the same liability to contagion which exists in the divâns and couches of more lordly mansions. For the rest, the condition of the Albanian peasantry, who cultivate the plains of Greece, is so much the same, and their way of living so uniform, that the description of a single family may apply to the whole community. The great plains of Bœotia and Thessaly may be said to surpass every other in the world in beauty and fertility. To us the plain of Bœotia appeared as a vast natural garden. Yet the labouring peasants, who are all of them Albanians,—for the idea of industry in Greece has no other association than that of an Albanian peasant,—complain everywhere of oppression: and indeed the labours of the plough can hardly be considered as a peaceful occupation, in a land where the husbandmen appear in the fields armed as for battle. Such, however, seems to have been the condition of the country ever since the days of Homer: and when the traveller enters one of the houses, every thing he sees calls to mind the simplicity of manners which characterized the inhabitants of Hellas in the first ages of its history. The bread is always made into cakes, which are baked upon the hearth beneath the embers and ashes: while this is preparing by the women, the men are engaged in peeling and splitting the onions to be served with it. The master of the house, after receiving his guests, as it has been before stated, takes the post of honour, by seating himself against the sacks of corn, which often occupy a considerable portion of the floor of his cottage: there he remains, issuing his orders to his family until the meal is over; when he encourages his guests to take their rest, by first setting the example, and consigning himself to sleep, without moving from the spot where he finished his repast.

Mount Helicon.

The next morning, December the ninth, we left Neocorio, and immediately began to ascend MOUNT HELICON in a n. w. direction, above the village; passing the ruined chapel before noticed, which we believed to be the building where Wheler found the inscription relating to THESPIA. Below us, upon our right hand, there was a rivulet, formed by

by a stream of water falling from HELICON, towards the plain of Neocorio, or THESPIA; and beyond this, upon the opposite side of the dingle through which this rivulet fell, standing upon an eminence, we saw a village, called Panaja'. Our road conducted us along the north-east side of the mountain; and in about an hour we arrived at the little Monastery of St. Nicholo, situated within a sheltered recess of HELICON. The description of this remarkable scene shall be given from the notes written upon the spot, without the slightest alteration. A more delightful place can hardly be found in the romantic retreats of Switzerland. It was surrounded on all sides by the mountain; one small opening alone presenting a picturesque view of a ruined tower belonging to Panaja, upon an eminence; in front. The air was filled with spicy odours, from numberless aromatic plants covering the soil. A perennial fountain, gushing from the side of a rock, poured down its clear and babbling waters into the rivulet below. A thick grove almost concealed the monastery; and every tree that might contribute to its beauty and luxuriance seemed here to be the wild and spontaneous produce of the mountain. Nothing interrupted the still silence of this solitude, but

(2) The number and variety of the trees growing near the Monastery of St. Nicholo were so remarkable, that we made a list of them: and as the natural productions of HELICON are probably the same now that they were formerly, this list will serve to give the Reader an idea of the Grove of the Muses, as it existed during the celebration of the ΜΟΥΣΕΙΑ.

the humming of bees, and the sound of its falling waters. As we drew near to the fountain, we found it to be covered with moss, and with creeping plants, extending everywhere a pendant foliage over all the fabric constructed round it, and hanging from the trees by which it was shaded. Such are the natural beauties of this Aonian bower. It may now perhaps be proved, that there is nothing in its physical character likely to occasion half the interest which will be excited by its antient history.

Monasteries and chapels, throughout this country, may generally be regarded as favourable indications of the former situation of the shrines and sanctuaries of Antient Greece.

places of worship; and the simple altars they put together, consisting often of little more than so many rude heaps of stone, were afterwards enlarged, and more regularly built, as the number of their followers increased. Contiguous buildings were then added to those altars, and monasteries were erected. In this manner, many of the most valuable antiquities were either buried, broken, and destroyed, or they were accidentally preserved; according as they were required for the purposes either of laying foundations, or for making lime; or as they were casually suited, by their shape and size, to facilitate the barbarous masonry now seen in all the walls and pavements of these ecclesiastical structures. At the same time, if we attribute such a style of building entirely to the Modern Greeks and to the Turks, we may perhaps be liable to error. The works of the Antients themselves were sometimes characterized by similar disorder: and very curious evidence may be adduced to prove that even the walls of Athens, in the time of the Peloponnesian war¹, exhibited that style of building now generally considered as the peculiar characteristic of a Mahometan dynasty and a barbarous people; the most discordant masses being collected from other works, and the Stélæ of the sepulchres mixed with stones

(1) This evidence occurs in the First Book of Thucydides; and, considering the curious fact it contains, it has been remarkably overlooked by those who have written upon the subject of the antiquities of Athens. stones of all shapes and sizes in the materials then used; just as they now appear when heaped together, as it is commonly believed, by Romaic or by Turkish workmen. That the Antients may, therefore, have left examples of this promiscuous disorder, even in their works, is evident: but in seeking for inscriptions, and fragments of sculpture, a traveller is seldom more successful than among modern ecclesiastical buildings. The capitals of the columns of antient temples often serve in the Greek chapels for Christian altars: and when these chapels have been erected upon the site of a Heathen temple, those capitals not unfrequently denote the order of architecture observed in the original edifice, when every other trace of its history has been lost. The Monastery of St. Nicholo is among the number of modern fabrics constructed from the ruins of a long-forgotten shrine; and, fortunately, a clue to its pristine celebrity has been here preserved in the manner we have mentioned. In a church near to the monastery we found a long inscription upon the shaft of one of the pillars, distinctly mentioning the ΜΟΥΣΕΙΑ, or GAMES SACRED TO THE MUSES; which Pausanias says were CELEBRATED NEAR A GROVE, UPON MOUNT HELICON; and containing the names of THE CONQUERORS IN THOSE GAMES, WHEN AURELIUS CALLICLIANUS THE SON OF SOTERICUS WAS PRESIDENT, AND AURELIUS MUSEROS WAS ARCHON. This inscription therefore, added to circumstances of collateral evidence, subsequently adduced, satisfied us of the propriety of the route we had chosen; for it had already conducted us to THE FOUNTAIN AGANIPPE, AND THE GROVE OF THE MUSES. Being in possession of this

this important clue to the knowledge of other objects, the guidance afforded by Strabo and by Pausanias is sufficient for the rest. The rivulet below becomes at once the PERMESSUS, parent of AGANIPPE; called TERMES-
*Pausanias*¹; and flowing, as he describes it, in a circuitous course, from MOUNT HELICON. Both the fountain and the river were sacred to the MUSES. Wheler calls this rivulet TERMES-SUS, and very accurately describes its course, as beheld by him from the ruined tower at Panaja: and he considered Panaja as having been antiently CERESSUS, a citadel of the Thespians. But he distinguishes the TERMES-SUS of Pausanias from the PERMESSUS of Strabo; saying, that the former falls into the Gulph of Livadostro, and the latter into the *Lake Copais*². This distinction, whether correct or not, has not been admitted by the commentators upon Pausanias; for they expressly state, that the two names apply to the same river³. Wheler, who seems to have taken uncommon pains in seeking for antiquities that might enable him to ascertain the situation of THESPIA, although he visited Neocorio upon one side of HELICON, and the Monastery of St. George upon the other side, yet knew nothing of this ancient road leading through the mountain from the former to the latter place: consequently, the remarkable fountain here falling into the PERMESSUS, and the remains of antiquity near to it, together with the other interesting objects occurring along this route, entirely escaped his observation. Yet with what zeal did he endeavour to penetrate the recesses of Helicon; retracing often his own footsteps, to find a position for the fountain HIPPOCRENE, and actually obtaining, with difficulty and danger, a distant prospect of the Vale of ASCRA, into which this road would have easily conducted him!

Inscription relating to the
ΜΟΥΣΕΙΑ.

In the Inscription, of which the following copy is a fac-simile, the M occurs in the same form as in an inscription at Telmessus. There are also other proofs of its being written in a late age; and were it not for the intelligence it affords respecting the place where it was found, we should not deem it worthy of being inserted in its entire state.

that way were hindered: only alighting, I made shift to clamber up the rocks somewhat higher, until I came to look down into a place encompassed round with the tops of mountains; so that the inclosed space seemed to me to be a lake frozen and covered with snow." It will afterwards appear plainly that this was Ascrea; and thither Wheeler was directing his steps, in his endeavour to ascend Helicon, from the Monastery of St. George, on the side of Lebadæa.

That not a trace may be lost of any inscription belonging to this place, we shall now add the only remains of this kind that we could discover about the spot, however little worthy of notice they may be in any other respect.— Upon a small stone we observed the following letters:

Ε Π Ι ΕΥΚΑΙΡΗΩΣ

And upon another,

Δ Μ Μ Α Τ Ρ Ι Α

Γ Ε Ρ Α Σ Ο Ι Μ Ω
C I Ε Ρ Ο Ι Ο Υ Α Υ
Κ Δ Ι Κ Τ Ο Ι Τ Ο Ρ Α

These imperfect legends, and the vestiges of ancient architecture in the walls of these buildings, are sufficient to prove that the monastery and its church occupy the site of some more ancient shrine: and the allusion to the Games here solemnized in honour of the Muses plainly indicate its real nature. Having therefore Pausanias in our hands, we began a further examination of the spot, comparing the different objects with his description. The sacred Grove, according to him, was in Helicon (ἐν Ἑλικῶνι), at a distance from THESPIA, which was not in Helicon, but beneath, that is to say, at the foot of the mountain'. In the time of Pausanias, the Grove was surrounded by inhabitants;

(1) Ὑπὸ τὸ ἕρος τῶν Ἑλικῶνα, κ. τ. λ. Pausan. Βαροτ. c. 26. p. 761. ed. Kühnii.

inhabitants; and thither the Thespians annually resorted², to celebrate Games in honour of the Muses, which were called ΜΟΥΣΕΙΑ. It is to these games that the inscription we found within the church evidently relates: and as the pillar whereon it is inscribed may possibly still remain upon or near to the spot where this festival was commemorated, we may proceed thence towards the FOUNTAIN AGANIPPE and the RIVER PERMESSUS, being guided by the words of Pausanias; for the fountain then occurs upon the left hand, exactly as he has described it³. From the monastery, a path, winding through the Grove now covering this part of the mountain, conducts to the spot where, upon the left hand, the water gushes forth in a clear and continued stream. The work about the fountain was, until lately, very antient; and not long ago there was an antique cistern in front of it; but the present monks, finding the work in a ruined state, undertook to repair it, and thus destroyed much of its original and venerable appearance. In its state of restoration, however, it is not without picturesque beauty; for they have merely erected an arcade of stone, whence the water issues; and this is already adorned by moss and by creeping plants, as before described. The walks about the fountain, winding into the deep solitude of HELICON, are

Higher up the mountain, at the distance of twenty stadia (two miles and a half) from this Grove, and from the FOUNTAIN AGANIPPE, was the FOUNTAIN HIPPOCRENE, fabled to have sprung from the earth, when struck by the hoof of *Pegasus*¹: and here the inhabitants exhibited to Pausanias a most antient votive offering made of lead, “inscribed,” says he, “with that poem of Hesiod’s which is called ‘WORKS.’”²

CHAP. IV.

Plants of Helicon.

FROM the Grove of the Muses we descended towards the PERMESSUS; and crossing that rivulet, quitted this charming scene, and continued our journey, north-west, towards the higher parts of MOUNT HELICON. The weather was stormy: and as we ascended almost to the summit of this part of the mountain, we saw only the Snow-drop in bloom, although we had left the Crocus and Erica in full flower about Marathon; but all Bœotia is colder than Attica. We have already alluded to the fact of snow falling in January, so as to bury the doors of the cottages. This happens also at THEBES. In ATHENS, snow is rarely seen; but when it falls there, it is considered as a promising indication of a good crop of olives for the ensuing summer. Pausanias relates¹, that no unwholesome plants are found in HELICON: perhaps he did not place Fungi in his class of vegetables: we noticed a white mushroom that is not considered eatable in England. Many however of the Fungus tribe are much esteemed in foreign countries as a luxurious food, which the inhabitants of our country consider as being poisonous². In Russia, they are almost all eaten indiscriminately, salted, and thus kept for winter use.

use. It is observed by Martyn, that many have suffered disease, and some even death, from eating voraciously or incautiously of fungusses; but that it is doubtful whether many of them be really poisonous, in the strict and proper sense of the word³. The other plants, as we ascended the mountain, were, Thyme, Sage, and Balm; with few or no trees, excepting the Vallonia Oak, appearing as a shrub. In the lower parts of Helicon, as about the Monastery of St. Nicholo, and in sheltered places nearer to the summit, the Vallonia grows to a tree of considerable magnitude. Wherever the naked surface of the mountain was disclosed, we found the rocks to consist of primary limestone. A craggy narrow path, along which our horses proceeded with difficulty, conducted us to the heights above Sagără, or Sacra, whence the mountain has received its modern appellation; and not, as Wheler relates, from the abundance of the hares found upon it. Here we observed a part of the antient paved causeway, which formerly led from THESPIA to ASCRA and to *LEBADÉA*⁴. Crocusses, and other early plants, were in flower. The weather, which had before been boisterous in this elevated region, was changed suddenly to the finest temperature of spring. We saw from hence all Bœotia, with here and there more distant regions and towering summits, whose whose bearings by the compass we immediately ascertained. The following statement will give the situation of the principal objects thus viewed from the N. E. side of HELICON; and the Vignette to this Chapter will serve to exhibit the appearance presented by the highest mountain of Eubœa, bearing East and by North from the same point of view; the sea being here admitted into the prospect.

Mountain CITHÆRON, called Elatœa . . . S. E. And between the mountain CITHÆRON and the spectator, in this line of observation, the high tower near Panaja, occurring as the first principal object.

HELICON concealed all the other western and southern points of the panoramic circle.

The Plain of LEBADÆA appeared through two gaps or openings of the mountain, bearing N. and by E. and E. N. E. the villages of the Greater and Lesser Mulchy being at the foot of HELICON in this direction; and beyond them, in the plain, the village of Topola.

Our road extended S. E. and N. W.—The distance from Neocorio to this spot is reckoned a journey of two hours; and it required almost another hour to descend into the deep valley in which Sagãrã is situated. The view of it, from above, somewhat resembles the appearance of the remarkable Vale of Ursilen, or Ursaria, in the passage of St. Gothard, in the Alps: but it is still more inclosed; and it is walled in by bolder acclivities, being entirely surrounded by high rocks, and by the towering summits of

HELICON.

HELICON. Below is seen a level plain, whose woods and corn-fields are almost buried in the deep bosom of the mountain. A very steep and rugged descent at last conducted us into this sequestered vale; and as we drew near to the village of Zagārā here situated, the same pleasing notes of shepherds' pipes which we had heard at St. Nicholo, with the cheerful noise of bells tinkling in the groves, seemed to give gladness to the scene, and again to welcome our coming. A river, flowing across this valley, divides the village into two parts; one being high above the other, on the right hand. The lower part stretches into the level plain: and above the upper part, a small white edifice appears rising among thick embowering trees, as such buildings are often seen in Swisserland, commanding every beauty and advantage of situation: it is called the Monastery of Panaja, or the (all holy) Virgin.

There is every reason to believe that this village of Zagārā occupies the site of the antient ASCRA, the place of Hesiod's nativity¹. Its distance from THESPIA accords very accurately with that mentioned by *Strabo*², of forty stadia; either supposing THESPIA to have stood where Phria now is, or where Wheler places it, at Neocorio; and its situation cannot have been remote from either of those places, on account of its distance from LEUCTRA. The site of Zagārā also also corresponds with the account given of ASCRA, in a fragment of the poems of Hegesinous, preserved by *Pausanias*¹. Its fertility is mentioned by *Homer*²; and this character is given of it, in the inscription found upon the tomb of Hesiod, by the people of Orchomenus³. It should be also stated, that the only arable land in all HELICON is this of Zagără, which is remarkable for its fertility, and has been cultivated from immemorial time. Although a valley, its elevation is very considerable; and being surrounded by lofty rugged rocks, it is exposed in summer to the most vehement heat, as it is to extreme cold in winter; when it is continually covered with snow. In this respect it answers to the account given of it by Hesiod himself⁴. It is also to be observed, that Pausanias, speaking of ASCRA, seems to consider it as connected, by its situation, with the Hieron and Grove of the Muses. The two places occurring successively in the same passage over the mountain, are therefore therefore associated in his description of HELICON; the mention of one inducing an allusion to the other⁵. Having stated the names of those by whom the Hieron of the Muses was first consecrated, he terminates the sentence by adding⁶, that "the same persons founded ASCRA." Every observation of Pausanias is particularly valuable; because he passed this route himself, and his remarks were made upon the spot. This may be gathered from what he has said of the condition of ASCRA. He relates, that in his time nothing remained of it but a single tower; and that of every thing else, even the remembrance had perished⁷. But the observations of Strabo are more decisive in confirming the opinion here given. Speaking of ASCRA, he says it was situated "in a lofty and rugged part" of HELICON, at the distance of forty *stadia*⁸ from THESPIA. The name of the place seems also to be still preserved, although corrupted, in the modern appellation of this village: for, with a transposition only of the two first letters, ASCRA becomes Sacra; and (Strabon. Geog. lib. ix. p. 594. edit. Oxon.) These words therefore of Strabo, ἰφ' ὑψηλοῦ καὶ τραχίως τόπου καμμένη, and still more the appearance of the place itself, prove the classical accuracy of Kennet, in describing Hesiod's occupation as that of a shepherd keeping his "sheep on the top of HELICON;" (See Lives and Characters of the Grecian Poets, Part I. p. 47. Lond. 1697.); and they serve to nullify the critical objection made to that biographer by the learned Professor Robinson, editor of the Oxford Hesiod; who, in the dissertation prefixed to his edition of Hesiod's Poems, makes the following remark: "Rus plerumque se abdebat Hesiodus, ibique in vallibus (non jugis, ut narrat ingeniosissimus βιόγραφος) HELICONIS pastor erat." Vid. Dissertat. in Vit. Ἡσιόδοι, p. 4. Oxon. 1737.

and although it be commonly written Sagārā, as the modern name of HELICON, in books of travels, the pronunciation of the word is Sacra, or Sackra; evidently being rather a corruption of the old name of the place, than an allusion, as Wheler supposes¹, to the number of hares found upon the mountain. Many instances of more remarkable changes may be observed in the modern names of places in Greece, still retaining indisputable traces of their original appellations. Here then the shepherd, and poet, Hesiod, fed his flock; although in a *valley*², yet near the *summit*³ of HELICON: and amidst the rugged rocks surrounding this valley, we saw shepherds, guarding their sheep and goats; and heard them piping their tuneful reeds, as when the Muses first vouchsafed to the Ascræan bard their heavenly inspiration⁴. Around the village are many fountains and streams, falling into the river upon whose banks it is situated; and there are woods near it⁵. After passing this place, we advanced

This species of HELLEBORE, whose virtues were so highly extolled by the Antients, was first illustrated by Tournefort (Voyage du Levant, tom. II. p. 474.); and an original drawing of the plant, taken for him by Aubriet, has been lately engraven, and published in the Annales du Muséum d'Histoire Naturelle. We also found upon Helicon the "Scarlet Oak," (Quercus Coccifera, Linn.); and the "Flax-leaved Daphne," (Daphne Gnidium, Linn.)

among the boldest rocks imaginable, exhibiting the liveliest colours. Thence we began once more to ascend, by a narrow, rough, steep, and stony path, as before; and soon gained the highest point of all this passage over HELICON; commanding a prospect, which, in the grandeur of its objects, and in all the affecting circumstances of history thereby suggested, cannot be equalled in the whole world. The eye ranges over all the plains of LEBADÉA, CHÆRONÉA, and ORCHOMENUS; looking down upon the numerous villages now occupying the sites of those and of other illustrious cities. From the spot where the spectator is placed, the most amazing undulation of mountain scenery descends in vast waves, like the swellings of an ocean, towards PARNASSUS, whose snowy bosom, dazzling by its brightness, was expanded before us with incomparable grandeur⁶.

Summit of Helicon.

As we began to descend from this place, we passed another fountain, pouring its tribute into other streams that, on this side HELICON, fell, in noisy, rapid, and turbulent courses, from the summit of the mountain. An antient paved causeway, of which we had before observed the frequent remains, again occurred, and it was continued to the distance of a quarter of a mile; conducting us to a magnificent terrace, elevated, as it were, above all Greece, and actually commanding the principal features of the country. Hence, as we continued to descend, the Monastery of St. George appeared in view, below us, bearing north and by west; and that part of HELICON which extends into the plain of LEBADÉA, north-east. We then arrived at a village called Regania, or Kotúmala, for it has recently changed even its modern name. This village is distant one hour and three quarters from Zagără. It is situated where the sage, the poet, and the painter, might wish to spend their days; amidst such a marvellous assemblage of great and sublime features as no other region can exhibit; exciting feelings which the view of no other country can call forth;—all the mountains and plains of HELLAS being here displayed in one living picture. The effect produced by it upon the mind of the traveller is transitory; because new objects succeed, and dissipate the impression;—alas! it fades even as he writes¹.

The Papas, or priest, at Kotúmala, told us that this village had changed its name from that of Regania, the name of a neighbouring fountain. It is about one fourth of the way down the mountain, on the side of LEBADÉA. Hence descending towards the plain, we passed

(1) If the notes written immediately after viewing this prospect from HELICON be of this nature (and they have been transcribed exactly as they were suggested at the time), it may be conceived with what feeling the following stanzas would be read, calculated to convey to every reader of taste and genius that vivid impression which can be communicated by no other hand:

the remains of an aqueduct, and also the ruins of an antient city, upon a hill, which we left towards our right. A small chapel, as usual, had been constructed from the ruins. We then continued along the side of the lower part of the mountain, again noticing an antient paved causeway: this appeared in different places, during the rest of the day's journey. At the distance of one hour from Kotúmala, there is a fountain; and at two hours' distance a village called Panori^s, upon the left, beyond which there is another fountain;—trivial occurrences when regarded merely as fountains, but on no account to be disregarded by the writer of a book of travels intended to illustrate the antient topography of Greece; where every fountain was consecrated to some Deity; and every insignificant rivulet, as the country becomes more known, will be an object of importance, in serving as a land-mark. We passed two bridges built over small streams descending from the mountain; and then came in sight of LEBADÉA, which was covered covered with a white, milky fog, the never-failing indication of bad air. Its inhabitants are consequently subject to agues during the summer; and strangers, of course, are more liable to such fevers. The rest of our road was over that part of the base of HELICON which projects into the plain of LEBADÉA; and the view of this plain, appearing below us, with its numerous villages, and the courses of the rivers through it, was very pleasing. We did not arrive at LEBADÉA until it was almost dark. Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, such is the extraordinary situation of the town, that it presented a very remarkable appearance, amidst the surrounding gloom of rocks, which here rise in perpendicular elevations, at the extremity of an extensive plain. It occupies the two sides of a ravine, growing narrower as you advance towards a lofty naked precipice; upon whose summit appears an antient fortress, towering over all the scene. At the foot of this precipice, below the fortress, is situated the Hieron of the famous oracle Trophonius; and the rushing waters of the Hercyna, flowing thence through the ravine, called to mind the extraordinary history of the cavern of that oracle, whose present appearance and situation we were now particularly anxious to explore.

the Archon.

We were conducted to the house of a rich Greek merchant, of the name of Logothesi, the Archon or chief of LEBADÉA; a subject of the Grand Signior, since well known to other English travellers for his hospitality and kind offices. His brother had been beheaded for his wealth, two years before, at Constantinople. In the house of this gentleman gentleman we had an opportunity of observing the genuine manners of the higher class of Modern Greeks, unaltered by the introduction of any foreign customs, or by an intercourse with the actions of other countries. They seemed to us to be as antient as the time of Plato, and, in many respects, barbarous and disgusting. The dinners, and indeed all other meals, are wretched. Fowls boiled to rags, but still tough and stringy, and killed only an hour before they are dressed, constitute a principal dish, all heaped together upon a large copper or pewter salver, placed upon a low stool, round which the guests sit upon cushions; the place of honour being on that side where the long couch of the diván extends along the white-washed wall. A long and coarse towel, very ill washed, about twelve inches wide, is spread around the table, in one entire piece, over the knees of the party seated. Wine is only placed before strangers; the rest of the company receiving only a glass each of very bad wine with the dessert. Brandy is handed about before sitting down to table. All persons who partake of the meal, wash their hands in the room, both before and after eating. A girl, with naked and dirty feet, enters the apartment, throwing to every one a napkin: she is followed by a second damsel, who goes to every guest, and, kneeling before him upon one knee, presents a pewter water-pot and a pewter bason, covered by a grill, upon the top of which there is a piece of soap. An exhibition rather of a disgusting nature, however cleanly, then takes place: for having made a lather with the soap, they fill their mouths with this, this, and squirt it, mixed with saliva, into the bason. The ladies of the family also do the same; lathering their lips and teeth; and displaying their arms, during the operation of the washing, with studied attitudes, and a great deal of affectation; as if taught to consider the moments of ablution as a time when they may appear to great advantage. Then the master of the house takes his seat, his wife sitting by his side, at the circular tray; and stripping his arms quite bare, by turning back the sleeves of his tunic towards his shoulders, he serves out the soup and the meat. Only one dish is placed upon the table at the same time. If it contain butcher's meat or poultry, he tears it into pieces with his fingers. During meals, the meat is always torn with the fingers. Knives and spoons are little used, and they are never changed. When meat or fish is brought in, the host squeezes a lemon over the dish. The room all this while is filled with girls belonging to the house, and other menial attendants, all appearing with naked feet; also with a mixed company of priests, physicians, and strangers, visiting the family. All these are admitted upon the raised part of the floor, or divdn: below are collected meaner dependants, peasants, old women, and slaves, who are allowed to sit there upon the floor, and to converse together. A certain nameless article of household furniture is also seen, making a conspicuous and most revolting appearance, in the room where the dinner is served; but in the houses of rich Greeks it is possible that such an exhibition may be owing to the vanity of possessing goods of foreign manufacture: the poorer class, certainly, whether whether from a regard to decorum, or wanting the means of thus violating it, are more cleanly. The dinner being over, presently enters the 'Ραψωδός, or Homer of his day, an itinerant songster, with his lyre, which he rests upon one knee, and plays like a fiddle. He does not ask to come in, but boldly forces his way through the crowd collected about the door; and assuming an air of consequence, steps upon the divdn, taking a conspicuous seat among the higher class of visitants: there, striking his instrument, and elevating his countenance towards the ceiling, he begins a most dismal recitative, accompanying his voice, which is only heard at intervals, with tones not less dismal, produced by the scraping of his three-stringed lyre. The recitative is sometimes extempore, and consists of sayings suited to the occasion; but in general it is a doleful love-ditty, composed of a string of short sentences expressing amorous lamentation, rising to a sort of climax, and then beginning over again; being equally destitute of melodious cadence, or of animated expression. The 'Ραψωδία that we heard, when literally translated, consisted of the following verses or sayings, thus tagged together:

“ For black eyes I faint !
 For light eyes I die !
 For blue eyes I go to my grave, and am buried !”

But the tone of the vocal part resembled rather that of the howling of dogs in the night, than any sound which might be called musical. And this was the impression made upon us everywhere by the national music of the Modern

Greeks; that if a scale were formed for comparing it with the state of music in other European nations, it would fall below w every other, excepting only that of the Laplanders, to which nevertheless it bears some resemblance. The ballads of the Greeks appeared to us to be, generally, love-ditties; and those of the Albanians to be war-songs, celebrating fierce and bloody encounters, deeds of plunder, and desperate achievements. But such general remarks are liable to exception, and to error: other travellers may collect examples of the Romaic and Arnaout poetry, seeming rather to prove that a martial spirit exists among the Greeks, and a disposition towards gallantry among the *Albanians*¹. One of these 'Ραψωδοὶ entertained us, during dinner, every day that we remained in LEBADEÁ. When the meal is over, a girl sweeps the carpet; and the guests are then marshalled, with the utmost attention to the laws of precedence, in regular order upon the diván; the master and mistress of the house being seated at the upper end of the couch, and the rest of the party forming two lines, one on either

Lond. 1812.) Also two popular choral songs in the Albanian or Arnaout dialect of the Illyric, in the Notes to "Childe Harold," p. 133.—However, the stanzas taken from different Albanese songs, p. 97, breathe all the martial spirit of the ballads that we heard among the Arnaouts; particularly the tenth, where the poet, with all the fire of his own genius, has transfused into his lines the most genuine character of his original sources:

"Dark Muchtar his son to the Danube is sped,
Let the yellow-haired Giaours view his horse-tail with dread;
When his Delhis come dashing in blood o'er the banks,
How few shall escape from the Muscovite ranks."

either side ; each person being stationed according to his rank. The couches upon the diváns of all apartments in the Levant being universally placed in the form of a Greek Π , the manner in which a company is seated is invariably the same in every house². It does not vary, from the interior of the apartments in the Sultan's seraglio, to those of the meanest subjects in his dominions ; the difference consisting only in the covering for the couches, and the decorations of the floor, walls, and windows. After this arrangement has taken place, and every one is seated cross-legged, the pewter bason and ewer are brought in again ; and again begins the same ceremony of ablution, with the same lathering and squirting from all the mouths that have been fed. After this, tobacco-pipes are brought in ; but even this part of the ceremony is not without its etiquette ; for having declined to use the pipes offered to us, they were not handed to the persons who sate next to us in the order observed, although the tobacco in them was already kindled, but taken out of the apartment, and others of an inferior quality substituted in their stead, to be presented to the persons seated below us. There are no people more inflated with a contemptible and vulgar pride than the Turks ; and the Greeks, who are the most servile imitators of their superiors, have borrowed many of these customs from their lords. Costly furs are much esteemed esteemed by both, as ornaments of male and female attire; that is to say, if they be literally costly; as the finest fur that ever was seen would lose all its beauty in their eyes if it should ever become cheap. Their habits are only esteemed in proportion to the sum of money they cost; changes depending upon what is called fashion being unknown among them. The cap of the infant of Logotheti consisted of a mass of pearls, so strung as to cover the head; and it was fringed with sequins, and other gold coin, among which we noticed some of the latest Christian emperors, and of the church. The dress worn by his wife was either of green velvet or of green satin, laden with a coarse and very heavy gold lace; the shoulders and back being further set off with grey squirrel's fur. There is yet another curious instance of their scrupulous attention to every possible distinction of precedence. The slippers of the superior guests are placed upon the step of the divân: those of lower rank, of the unfortunate, or dependant, are not allowed this honour; they are left below the divân, upon the lower part of the floor of the apartment, nearer to the door. About the time that the pipes are brought in, female visitants arrive to pay their respects to the mistress of the house, who, upon their coming, rises, and retires with the women present, to receive her guests in another apartment. On one of the days that we dined here, it being the day of a Greek festival, two Albanians, with their wives and children, came to visit the archon. These peasants, upon entering the room, placed each of them a sack of provisions in one corner of the apartment, and then came forward to salute their landlord.

(2) Hence may be understood what is meant by " holding a diván," as well as the origin of that expression ; the members of a Council, or of any State assembly, being thus seated.

When

When the women advanced, they touched his hand only, and then placed their own hands to their foreheads, making the sign of the cross, as in Russia: but the children took his hand and kissed it, applying afterwards the back part of it to their foreheads.

The famous Ali Pasha of Joannina had already exacted tribute from the inhabitants of LEBADÉA. The archon informed us that he had been more than once to convey it. He spoke much of the riches of Joannina, distant seven days' journey, telling us that it contained 7000 houses. The mother of his wife was a native of that city, and a very handsome woman. Being in the costume of the place of her nativity, as she herself informed us, it was evident, from her appearance, that the elder females of Epirus dress better, and in a more comely manner than those of Greece: they bind up their braided hair around the head, after the manner represented in antient sculpture¹; and they wear a more decent and becoming apparel than the Greek matrons; of whom, in general, nothing is conspicuous but what ought to be concealed.

Joannina.

LEBADÉA contains fifteen hundred houses. A commerce is here carried on, in the produce of Attica, Bœotia, and Thessaly. The archon received an order from Constantinople, the day after our arrival, to purchase the worth of fifty thousand piastres in oil; for which purpose he sent to Athens, to buy up all the oil that could be found. He told us that the produce of Attica, in oil, exceeded that of all the rest of Greece. The streets of the town are narrow and ill paved. Water is seen falling in all directions; so numerous are the conduits and channels for supplying mills and reservoirs from the bed of the Hercyna. This river issues with great force from beneath a rock, a few paces from the old HIERON OF TROPHONIUS. Among all that now remains of the antiquities of Greece, there is nothing better authenticated than this most curious place; the site of it being distinctly ascertained by the cavities grooved in the rock for the reception of the votive offerings. The only uncertainty respects the Adytum, where the oracle was supposed to reside; for although the mouth of this place seems very accurately to correspond with the account given of its entrance by Pausanias, the interior has never been explored in modern times. As it was very near to the house of Logotheti, we had frequent opportunities of visiting the spot, and of making all the inquiry in our power. Every thing belonging to the Hieron appears to exist in its original state; except, that the vows have been removed from the niches where they were placed; and that the narrow entrance, supposed to lead to the Adytum, is now choked with stones and rubbish. The women of Lebadæa kindle fires here while washing their linen, and the sides of it are consequently covered with soot. This aperture in the rock is close to the ground. Immediately below it, in the front of the little terrace above which the niches were cut for the dona votiva, a fountain issues, from several small pipes often out of repair, into a bath, the interior of which is faced with large hewn stones and pieces of marble: here the Lebadéan women wash their linen; and at the distance of a few paces from this bath, as before stated, is the spot where the river Hercyna bursts forth, receiving almost in the instant of its birth the tributary streams from the fountain. The river therefore may be described as having two sources; and this agrees with the account given of it by Pausanias. The bath was used by those who came to consult the oracle; for these persons were obliged to purify themselves, and, abstaining from the use of hot baths, to wash in the river *Hercyna*¹. Indeed nothing can accord more accurately with the present appearance of the place than his description of the Hieron; and we ought to rely upon it with the greater confidence, because we receive it from a writer always accurate, who in this instance is pre-eminently entitled to notice, having not only visited the spot, but also himself descended into the Alytum, and consulted the oracle. "WHAT I HERE RELATE," says he², "WAS NOT RECEIVED AT SECOND-HAND, BUT EITHER AS BY OCULAR DEMONSTRATION I HAVE PERCEIVED IN OTHERS, OR WHAT I HAVE PROVED TRUE BY MY OWN EXPERIENCE." Laying aside the reserve he sometimes assumes, with regard to the sacred mysteries of the country, he gives a succinct and very interesting detail detail of all he witnessed upon the occasion; and his readers, with a prospect of the scene itself, become almost as well acquainted with every thing that was necessary to sustain this most curious example of antient credulity, as if they had themselves been present with him; the jugglery of a stupid superstition, as far as it related to the oracle, being easily divined, without any præternatural communication from Trophonius. The two sources are called, by Pausanias, the waters of LETHE and MNEMOSYNE, or, in other words, the Water of Oblivion, and the *Water of Memory*¹. But a remarkable observation previously occurs, respecting the place where they rise: he says², they are both of them (ἐν τῷ σπηλαίῳ) "WITHIN THE CAVERN." Hence we may learn that the Adytum and the Cavern were two distinct things: the first was a small aperture within the other: and the appellation ΣΠΗΛΛΑΙΟΝ was applied to the whole of the chasm, or range of precipitous rock, around the place, which contained not only the "sacred aperture" (στόμα τὸ ἱερόν), but also the source of the Hercyna, and perhaps the Grove of Trophonius, with all its temples, statues, and other votive offerings. The stoma is described, as it now appears, to have been a small opening like unto an *oven*³; and it was near to the terrace or floor; for the votary, lying down, was thrust into it with his feet foremost; the rest of his body being rapidly hauled in afterwards by some person or persons persons within the Adytum. These leading facts being stated, an accurate description of the place, according to its present appearance, will be rendered more perspicuous: and it is proper that it should be well understood, because it serves to illustrate a very curious part of the religion of Greece, and all that Plutarch, and Pausanias, have written upon a subject, for whose investigation Archbishop Potter dedicated an entire chapter of his work*.

The main body of water which constitutes the principal source of the Hercyna is very different from that of the fountain represented in the Plate. The first is troubled, and muddy; the second, clear, and much better fitted for use. The first is evidently the gushing forth of some river, from a subterraneous channel, that had been previously exposed to the surface; having been swallowed up, during its course, in some chasm of the earth. This appears, both from the substances found floating in the water, and from its perturbed muddy aspect. We observed at this principal source an antique terra-cotta cylinder, used formerly to compress the current within a narrower channel: it was fixed into the rock with cement and tiles. That this was the source called LETHE, must be evident; because the other, being close to the throne of MNEMOSYNE, as will presently appear, was necessarily the Water of Memory: and perhaps the origin of the name of the Water of Oblivion, and the superstition thereon founded, may be deduced from this singular circumstance of its re-appearance after being once buried;

receiving a new birth after its resurrection, as it were oblivious of its former course. The Antients could not have been ignorant of this part of its history, because it is obvious to all who examine the water. Wheler, when he had seen the force with which it gushes forth, and examined the nature of the current, said¹, “ I do not call it the Fountain ; but think that some other rivers from the Helicon do make it rise here, by a subterraneous passage under the mountain :” and in a preceding paragraph he describes it as coming “ with such a plentiful source out of the mountain, that it turneth twenty mills in the town, not a bow-shot off its rise.” But this writer, in the map prefixed to his work², has marked the disappearance of two rivers into the earth, south of LEBADÉA,—the one during its descent from Helicon, and the other from Anticyra ; and has traced what he conceived to be their subterraneous courses, by dotted lines, towards this source of the Hercyna. The same therefore might antiently have been said of the river that was believed to happen to those who drank of its water,—that it assumed a new state of existence, forgetful of the past³: and having once received a name derived from any thing marvellous or remarkable in its history, it is easy to account for the appellation bestowed upon the neighbouring fountain, and all the other circumstances of association connected with the spot ; since nothing was more common among antient nations, nations, particularly in Greece, than to erect a vast and complicated superstructure of superstition upon the most contracted and insignificant foundation. There was something in the nature of the scenery here, which tended to excite the solemn impressions that were essential to the purposes of priestcraft. The votaries of the Oracle were conducted through a *Grove to the Hieron: having reached the consecrated precincts of the divinity, they could not avoid being struck by its gloomy and imposing grandeur. It is surrounded with rocks, bare and rugged, rising in dreadful precipices to a great height, where the silence of the retirement was only interrupted by the roaring of waters bursting with uncommon force from their cavernous abyss. The most sacred part of the Hieron, containing the narrow entrance to the Adytum and the receptacles for the offerings, is a perpendicular rock of black marble. It faces the east. The niches are above the Adytum, to the right and left of it: they are of different capacities and shapes, and amount to twelve in number. The most capacious is an entire chamber of stone, containing a stone bench. This, according to Pausanias, may have been the throne of Mnemosyne: it was near to the Adytum; where those, who came from consulting the oracle, being seated¹, underwent the necessary interrogatories. This chamber is five feet ten inches from the ground. The whole of it is hewn in the solid rock, like to the sepulchres of Telmessus in Asia Minor; being twelve feet eight inches in length, eleven feet three inches in width, and eight feet eight inches high. The stone bench within is eight feet nine inches long, fourteen inches wide, and eighteen inches in height. There are two niches, one on either side of the opening to this chamber; and seven others to the left of it, in the face of the rock. Immediately below the chamber, a little towards the left hand, is the Stoma, or sacred aperture of the Adytum. A Figure is represented, in the Plate, as pointing to it. It is small and low, and shaped like an oven; and this Pausanias affirms to have been the form of the artificial masonry adapted to its mouth: it is, in fact, barely capacious enough to admit the passage of a man's body. The inhabitants of Lebadea refused to Monsieur Fauvel, of Athens, the permission of clearing out the rubbish from the opening, through fear of an *Avaniä*¹ from the Turks; who might suspect them of having discovered a concealed treasure. The work might be accomplished, and with little labour; having the proper utensils, and the consent of the Waiwode. We made some progress towards it; and after obtaining permission from the Turkish governor, endeavoured to prevail upon some workmen to assist us; but they were deterred by their fears, and would not, for any consideration, begin the labour. There was therefore no other alternative than that of putting our own hands to the task: and we so far succeeded, succeeded, as to enable Mr. Cripps to introduce the whole length of his body into the cavity; where being provided with a long pole, and thrusting it before him, he found at last the passage to be entirely closed. The difficulty of carrying on the work within so narrow a space becoming insurmountable, and the Oracle being deaf to our entreaties of assisting us by his advice, we were compelled to abandon the undertaking.

The stone chamber, with seats, answering to the description given by Pausanias of the throne of Mnemosyne, (for he says² it was not far from the Adytum,) it follows, of course, that the fountain, springing into the bath below, was also that which afforded the Water of Memory. At present, it serves to supply the town of LEBADĒA with its best water, adding greatly to the picturesque beauty of this remarkable scene; and this is further heightened by deep shadows in all the cavities of the rock, by a number of pensile plants adorning the face of the precipice, and by an old stone bridge of one arch, crossing the Hercyna a little below this place. Pausanias mentions another curious circumstance, which seems to prove that the small opening above the bath can be no other than the mouth of the Adytum: it is this; that the place where the Oracle resided was surrounded by a wall of white stone, not exceeding the height of two cubits³, inclosing a very small area. The diameter of such a peribolus must have been very limited; because it could only extend from the face of the precipice precipice to the brink of the river; that being at the distance of nine feet four inches from the stoma, or mouth, of the Adytum. And the reason why the wall was only two cubits in height, is also explained by the appearance of the stoma; for this was all the elevation necessary to conceal it from sight. Near the same peribolus were two sanctuaries; the one (οἴκημα) being sacred to the good daemon, and the other (ἱερὸν) to good luck'. It is impossible to say what the real nature of those sanctuaries may have been. That they were any thing rather than temples, must appear from the want of space for such edifices. The present town of LEBADEA seems to occupy that part of the consecrated district once covered by the *Grove of Trophonius*²; and above this is the rocky recess called by Pausanias ΣΠΗΛΑΙΟΝ, and ΑΝΤΡΟΝ ΚΟΙΛΑΟΝ, containing the sources of the Hercyna. The whole space from the antient city, along the banks of this river, to the residence of the Oracle, was covered with temples, Hiera, images, and every species of votive decoration. The statues were by the best sculptors of Antient Greece: and when we read that a work of Praxiteles was among the number of its ornaments³, we are little inclined to doubt the fidelity of the historian, who, speaking of LEBADEA, says, that its decorations were not inferior to those of the most flourishing cities of Greece⁴. Yet it is now so completely stripped of all its costly ornaments, that with the exception of the interesting remains at the sources of the river, our search after antiquities was almost made in vain. We could not obtain a single medal; and the few that we saw, upon the head-dresses of the women and children, were wretched ecclesiastical coins, or the still more barbarous impressions of the Turkish mint. We ascended to the Citadel, erected upon the summit of the rock above the Hieron of Trophonius; and found there the capital of a large pillar, of that most antient and rare variety of the Corinthian order, described in our account of Thebes. It is wrought of the hard black marble of the rocks whereon the citadel stands. Within the fortress we noticed a few fragments of antiquity, less worthy of notice than this capital; and in a Mosque near it, some inscriptions; but only one of them is entire, and this has been already published by Wheler: it is upon a block of marble over the door of the minaret. Another imperfect legend is upon a stone in the same building, also noticed by *Wheler*⁵: they were moreover both published by his companion *Spon*⁶. The name of the city occurs in these inscriptions variously written,—ΠΟΛΙΣ ΛΕΒΑΔΕΩΝ, and ΛΕΒΑΔΕΙΩΝ. From the fortress we observed the bearings of Chæronæa and Orchomenus.

The wine of ORCHOMENUS is also sold here: it is as good as old hock, having a similar flavour, but with less acidity: it is sometimes of the colour of the clearest spring water. The honey of LEBADEA is sent to the Grand Signior's seraglio; but in our opinion it was much inferior to the honey of ATHENS. We had brought some of the Athenian honey with us: they were both placed upon the table of the archon, to be compared: that of ATHENS was paler, but as clear as crystal; and so inspissated, that it might be cut with a knife.

ON Thursday, December the tenth, we made an excursion across the plain, from LebadĒa; and passing a bridge, took a north-west direction, towards some hills, over which we rode, following the antient paved way to CheronĒa. Descending these hills, we crossed a rivulet, and entered the Plain of CheronĒa; thus divided from that of LebadĒa, but resembling the latter in its beauty and fertility. It extends from east-south-east to west-north-west; being about two miles in breadth, and ten or twelve in length. This plain is bounded towards the north-west and west by Parnassus, which entirely closes it in on that side, and exhibits one of the boldest and most striking barriers in nature, visible the whole way from LebadĒa; its sharp ridge alone being covered with snow, but all below appearing in bleak and rugged masses of primary limestone, of a grey aspect, except the base, and this is covered with shrubs and coppice. Parnassus universally bears, at present, the name of Lakūra: it stands, to all appearance, quite solitary; as if it suffered no other eminence to dispute with it the smallest portion of that sanctity, which originally extended over every part of the mountain¹.

Visit to Capranū.

The Ruins of CheronĒa are on the western side of this plain: a village called Capranū now occupies the site of them, distant only two hours, about six miles, from LebadĒa.

This we were enabled to ascertain by the antiquities we discovered upon the spot. The first inscription that we found mentions the inhabitants of CHÆRONĒA. It was upon a marble, in the corner of a small chapel at Capraná; and highly interesting at the moment of our arrival among the ruins of the city. It states, that “THE SENATE AND PEOPLE OF THE CHÆRONĒANS HONOUR THE EMPEROR MACRINUS.”

Hard by, upon the ground, we saw another inscription, upon marble, also satisfactory on account of its concurring local testimony. This last sets forth, that “CHAROPEINA, DAUGHTER OF TIBERIUS CLAUDIUS DIDYMUS, A PRIESTESS OF DIANA, IS HONoured BY THE CHÆRONĒANS, FOR HER VIRTUE AND RELIGIOUS ATTENDANCE ON THE DEITY.” The legend is as follows.

We noticed the remains of a small temple, perhaps that of Diana, in two ruined buildings, still standing, in the same line of a range of ancient tile-work, once covered with marble; also in the shafts of columns of highly-polished grey granite, eighteen inches in diameter, lying near to the spot. Close to the little chapel we saw also two capitals of columns; one of the Corinthian order, barbarously executed; and another belonging to the Ionic, in better taste, but of small size. Opposite to the door of this chapel appears PARNASSUS, with its shining snowy summit; and between both, in the same line, is the lofty rock whereon the Acropolis of Chæronæa was situated; as appears by the remains of its walls.

Aqueduct.

The next thing that attracted our notice, was a beautiful antique fountain, with five mouths; supplied, by means of a small aqueduct, from the neighbouring rock, wherein the Coilon of the Theatre of Chæronæa was excavated. In its present state, this fountain is entirely made up of fragments from the ancient buildings of the city. Here we saw some large pedestals, granite shafts, small Doric capitals,—and a mass of exceeding hard blue marble, exhibiting, in beautiful sculpture, the leaves and other ornaments of the cornice of a temple. There was a cistern at this fountain, with an inscription in honour of DEMETRIUS AUTOBULUS, A PLATONIC PHILOSOPHER.

Following the aqueduct towards the theatre, we found, upon the right hand, a subterraneous passage, seeming to go under the theatre. The entrance to it is like that of a well, lined with antient tiles: the whole is closed, and covered with masonry. At the entrance there are two inscriptions, beautifully cut; but a part of one of them alone is legible, belonging to a metrical composition.

This well is about twelve feet in depth. Having descended to the bottom, we found an arched opening, offering a passage towards the w.n.w. but immediately afterwards inclining towards w.s.w. Proceeding along the vaulted passage, to the distance of one hundred and fifty paces, we came to the mountain where the Coilon of the theatre has been hewn. The source of the fountain is upon the north-western side of it; for by striking the ground there, a cavity may be observed. The vaulted roof of this subterraneous passage, once undoubtedly an aqueduct, is formed with antient tiles; and the workmanship at the source of the fountain is of the same nature.

Theatre.

We next visited the THEATRE, perhaps one of the most antient in Greece, and one of the most entire now remaining. It faces the N.N.E. looking across the plain to a village called Karamsa, situated at the base of the opposite mountains. The Coilon is now in as perfect a state as when it was first formed: it is hollowed in the rock, above the ruined edifice before mentioned and the fountain, to the s.s.w. of the latter. Nothing is wanted belonging to this part of the theatre, but the marble covering for the seats. There is this reason for believing that they were once covered with marble; they are only twelve inches high, and seventeen inches and a half wide; sufficient space is therefore not allowed for the feet of the spectators. The magnificent theatre constructed by Polycletus in Epidauria, whereof a description was given in a former part of these Travels¹, contained a space equal to eighteen inches behind each row of seats, for the feet of the spectators; and fourteen inches in front for the stone benches; making a total of two feet eight inches for the width of every seat. The Proscenium of this theatre still remains: it is forty-eight paces in width.

Acropolis

The ACROPOLIS is above the theatre, and the road leading to it is cut in the side of the rock. Like the Acro-Corinthus, it covers the top of a lofty precipice. This precipice is mentioned by *Pasanius*²; and yet it is somewhat remarkable, that that neither he, nor *Strabo*³, who also notices the city, make any mention of the theatre. "Above the city," says *Pausanias*⁴, "is a precipice called PETRACHUS." Here was preserved a small image of Jupiter⁵. The very antient walls of this citadel yet remain all around the summit; flanking the edges of the craggy precipice: they are of massive but regular workmanship, and offer an astonishing monument of the perseverance and enterprising labours of the antient inhabitants.

(1) See the former Section, p. 630. Broxbourne, 1814.

(2) Bœotica, p. 793. ed. Kuhnii.

Chæronéa was not the original name of this city⁶; it had more antiently been called ARNE: this appellation is given to it by *Homer*⁷. Its plain, celebrated by the poet for its fertility, became very memorable for the battles that were here fought;—for the defeat of the Athenians by the Bœotians, in the fifth century before Christ; for the victory obtained by Philip over the allied armies of Thebes and Athens in the fourth; and for that which Sylla obtained over the forces of Mithradates in the first. At about an hour's distance from the village, a most conspicuous tomb, remarkable for its size and elevation, still remains, an everlasting monument of the ensanguined field, resembling the Tomb of the Athenians in the Plain of Marathon. It is very distinctly mentioned by Pausanias: he says it was raised raised over the Thebans who fell in the engagement against Philip¹. This tomb is now called Mangoola. When viewed at the eastern extremity of the plain by a person going from Lebadæa to the village of Romaïko, in the road to Orchomenus, it is seen to the greatest advantage, being then backed by Parnassus, and in a line with its summit, standing close to its base. A Pasha called Hachi, passing this way, hoisted upon it the Turkish standard;—the only circumstance related concerning it by the present inhabitants.

Agamemnon.

CHÆRONÆA was the birth-place of Plutarch: its other memorabilia were few in number. The famous sceptre of Agamemnon, celebrated by Homer as that made by Vulcan for Jupiter, had been regularly transmitted, by the hands of Hermes, Pelops, Atreus, and Thyestes, to the Argive king, and was here preserved in the time of Pausanias. The Chæronæans paid to it divine honours; holding it in greater veneration than any of their idols². It seems to have been held among them after the manner of a mace in our borough towns; for the same author relates, that they did not keep it in any temple prepared for its reception, but that it was annually brought forth with appropriate ceremonies, being honoured by daily sacrifices; and a sort of mayor's feast seems to have been provided for the occasion; a table covered with all sorts of eatables being then set forth.

In the church of this village were found, at the altar, four beautiful granite columns, each column of one entire piece. The altar itself is an antient pedestal of blue-and-white marble, four feet four inches in length, and four feet wide. Close to this altar, on the left hand, was a beautiful capital of a Corinthian pillar, measuring two feet six inches square at the top, of that antient style of the Corinthian which we lately described in the account of the antiquities of Thebes; but this is the most valuable specimen of it we have anywhere seen; the workmanship being exquisitely fine, and the marble uninjured. In the sanctuary of the same church, upon the right hand of the altar, we also saw the marble THYMELE of the Charonéans; a magnificent antique chair finely sculptured, and hewn out of a single block. It was brought, in all probability, from the Theatre: and this will add another example to those already mentioned³, proving the real nature of the Λογείον, or Θυμέλη, and the frequent recurrence of a Cathedra of this kind either within or near to the remains of the Grecian theatres: it is also remarkable that the Greek peasants upon the spot call it Θρόνος. The church itself, as a receptacle of precious reliques from the ruins of Charonéa, has tended to the preservation of some of them, but to the destruction of others. The most valuable antiquities have been used as common building materials. A very hard kind of marble, of a blue-and-white colour, is particularly prevalent among the remains of this city. Within the church we noticed, in the wall, not less than five inscriptions upon a marble pedestal. The writing appeared to have been added at different times, as the

They have been here printed so as to correspond with their appearance upon the marble; for they all relate to the same subject, namely, the dedication of a slave to the God SERAPIS: the translation of one of them will therefore be sufficient; and for this purpose we shall select the fourth, because the legend is there quite perfect; and the letters in the fourth and fifth were better graven, and more legible, than in the three preceding inscriptions.

“ ON THE FIFTEENTH DAY OF THE MONTH ALALCOMENIUS (October), PHILOXENUS BEING ARCHON, ALEXON, THE SON OF RHODON, DEDICATES HIS OWN SLAVE DIONYSIA, AS SACRED TO THE GOD SERAPIS, HAVING REMAINED BLAMELESS WITH HIM, ALL HER LIFE. HE HAS MADE THE DEDICATION THROUGH THE COUNCIL, ACCORDING TO THE LAW.”

In the fifth and last inscription, the dedication of the slave is made in the month BUCATIUS (January¹), “ THE SONS OF CRATON AND EUGITA CONSENTING THERETO.”

In the evening we returned, by the same road, again to Lebadéa, and had a fine prospect of the town. About half an hour's distance from it there is a fountain. The stream which we crossed before in the morning, by a bridge, is not the Hercyna, but one of its branches: this river becomes

The word MENOΣ Mr. Walpole thinks should be written MEINOΣ, the Bœotians using EI for H: but we have thought it right to print our copy as it was made from the original, believing it to be written MENOΣ, and MHNOΣ, upon the Marble. “ In the Acharnenses of Aristophanes (it is observed by Mr. Walpole) the Bœotian says Θειβαδ. divided, and distributes itself into several small channels, whereby it is rendered very beneficial to the inhabitants, in watering a number of gardens and cotton-grounds.

On Friday, December the eleventh, we set out for ORCHOMENUS; proceeding first to the village of Romaiko, bearing N. N. E. distant one hour and three quarters from Lebadéa. At the church here we saw the most remarkable bas-relief which exists in all Greece, whether we consider the great antiquity of the workmanship, or the very remarkable nature of the subject represented. It is executed upon a block of the blue-and-white marble that is common in the country, and abounds among the ruins of Chæronéa, six feet six inches long and two feet wide, and represents an aged figure, of the size of life, with a straight beard, in a cloak, leaning by his left arm upon a knotted stick like a black-thorn or crab, and with his right hand offering a locust to a greyhound, who is rising upon his hinder feet and stretching himself out to receive it. Whether this figure be intended to represent Hercules with the dog of Hades, as mentioned by *Pausanias*¹, or the shepherd Hesiod, whose tomb existed in the neighbourhood, others may determine. From the age of the person represented, it seems little likely that there is, in this bas-relief, any allusion to the superstitions concerning Actæon among the *Orchomenians*². Pausanias, by whom they are noticed, also relates that there was a Temple of Hercules, containing an image of the Deity³, at the distance of seven stadia from Orchomenus, near the sources of the Melas, a small river falling into the Lake Cephissis. The figure here exhibited has upon his head precisely the sort of scull-cap now worn by the Greeks and Albanians⁴; but this, as a part of the old costume, is of such high antiquity, that we find it worn by Mercury, as he appears upon the silver medals of Ænos in Thrace. The style of the sculpture is Græco-Etruscan, and perhaps it may be considered as one of the earliest specimens of the art: the hands of the figure, and the dog, are well executed, but the rest is rude and angular. We have since heard that there is an inscription below the feet of the figure, but we were never able to procure a copy of it: this, if faithfully transcribed, so as to exhibit a fac-simile of the characters, might enable us to determine the age of the workmanship; but we have no hesitation in saying, without having seen the inscription, that it will be found to belong to that period of the art of sculpture in Greece, alluded to by Quintilian, when a resemblance to the style of the Etruscans characterized the works of the Grecian artists⁵. This is further denoted

(4) The sketch, from which an engraving has been made for this work, cannot pretend to accuracy; it was made almost from memory: but the original has lately excited considerable curiosity; and as no view of it has hitherto been published, it was thought that this might assist a description of it, until some more faithful representation shall appear.

denoted by the great length of the body and limbs, and a certain simplicity in the manner of the execution, casier to recognise than to describe. There is a cavity in the head of the figure, which seems to indicate that a gem, or a piece of metal, was originally introduced into that part of the sculpture. The peasants relate that they found this bas-relief in the river, near to the spot where it is now placed. It was probably intended to close the entrance to some sepulchre.

Visit to Screpú.

Hence we continued our excursion through vineyards as old as the time of *Homer*¹, and watery lands, to another village called Screpú. Just before our arrival, we crossed a bridge over a river, called Black Water by the inhabitants (Mauronero). The river MELAS may therefore be here recognised, retaining something of its antient appellation². According to Strabo, it flowed between Orchomenus and *Aspledon*³. Before passing the bridge, we saw towards our right, at a short distance in the plain, a large tumulus. When upon the bridge, this tomb is directly in front of the spectator. Near to the bridge are remains of the antient paved road. That Screpú is situated in the midst of the ruins of ORCHOMENUS, will plainly appear by the inscriptions we found upon the spot. Indeed, these inscriptions had been

With regard to the Tumulus near Screpú, as this is one of two remarkable tombs mentioned by *Pausanias*⁴, and as his description of the other connects that with the Treasury of Minyas (concerning whose situation there can be little doubt to a person upon the spot), perhaps we shall not err if we consider this to be the identical mound heaped over the bones of Hesiod, when the Orchomenians removed them from the territory of *Naupactus*⁵.

We were conducted, upon our arrival at Screpú, to the Monastery there. In the wall of this building we found three inscriptions upon one tablet: and of these, the two first relate to a sum of money which had been paid by the *Lord of the Treasury*⁶ to Eubulus, in the archonship of Thynarchus; and the bonds, which are kept in the hands of some people of Phocis and Chæronéa, whose names are mentioned, are cancelled⁷. v. 1.) occurs in Homer, II. r. 117. where the Scholiast observes that the form is Æolic. The Bœotian, in the Acharnenses, uses Θεῖβαθι. (See also Etymol. Mag. 583. 4.)

The inscriptions of Orchomenus give the names of some of the Bœotian months, one only of which had been hitherto found on any marble. (See Muratori, i. 140.) In the ancient authors no more than seven have been met with; but from these inscriptions we are able to add another, Theluthius, which was also in use at Delphi. (See Corsini Fast. Att. p. 442.) The following list shews the correspondence of some Bœotian months with the Attic.

In this monastery is the well or fountain mentioned by *Pausanias*¹; and there are, besides, two antient wells remaining in the village. Almost every thing belonging to Orchomenus remains as Pausanias found it in the second century. It was evidently then in ruins, for he mentions the causes of its destruction². Its most antient name was MINYEIA; and its inhabitants were called Minyeans long after the name of the city was changed to Orchomenus. They are mentioned, under this appellation, in the verses that were inscribed upon the *Tomb of Hesiod*³. A colony from Orchomenus founded Teos. In the days of its prosperity it was distinguished, among all the cities of Greece, as one of the most illustrious and renowned⁴; and its opulence was such, as to render it, before the age of *Homer*⁵, the subject of a saying common in the country. Strabo, citing the the poet's allusion to its riches, extols its wealth and power¹. The Graces were said to have chosen Orchomenus for their place of residence, owing to a most antient Hieron founded by Éteocles, wherein they were here honoured with a peculiar veneration²; and on this account they were called Eteoclean, by *Theocritus*³. It is rather extraordinary, that in so many examples of allusion to Orchomenus as it is easy to adduce from different authors, no instance occurs where any notice has been taken of the Charitiesian Games that were here celebrated in honour of the Graces. The ΜΙΝΥΕΙΑ, indeed, are mentioned by the Scholiast upon *Pindar*⁴; and possibly they may have been the same. The CHARITESIA attracted competitors from all parts of Greece; as we shall presently show by the inscriptions that we copied here, commemorating the victors at those solemnities. It was with much delight and satisfaction that we found ourselves to be admitted to such a muster-roll; for within the list we read the name of SOPHOCLES, SON OF SOPHOCLES THE ATHENIAN, who is recorded as having obtained the prize for his talents in TRAGEDY. He was a descendant of the famous Greek tragedian of that name⁵. These inscriptions are within the church or chapel belonging to

to the monastery. There are two of them: they occur upon two long slabs of a dark colour, near the entrance; one being on either side of a sort of buttress facing the aisle. They are of no other utility in the structure than as common building materials, for which any other stones of the same size might be substituted. Our desire to obtain them for the University of Cambridge induced us to make an earnest solicitation for the purchase of them, to Logotheti the Archon of Lebadéa, who is the owner of the estate, and whose secretary accompanied us during this day's excursion. The Archon insisted upon presenting them to us without payment; saying that he was under great obligations to Englishmen, in being protected by their Government; and he promised to send them, with his next cargoes, to Aspropiti, where ships were freighted for British ports; to be forwarded to the University; for which purpose alone we sought to obtain them:—but they have never arrived. Indeed a rumour prevails, that some more fortunate individual has since removed them, with other views: yet the author will not terminate this part of his narrative, concerning what it is almost his duty to state, without making a last effort, by humbly entreating their possessor, whoever he may be, to consecrate those valuable reliques to the general interests of Literature, by depositing them in either of the two principal Universities, or in the National Museum.

The first inscription states, that “ IN THE ARCHONSHIP OF MNASINUS, WHEN EUARES THE SON OF PANTON WAS PRESIDENT OF THE CHARITESIAN GAMES, THE FOLLOWING WERE CONQUERORS IN THOSE GAMES.” Their employments, names, and countries, are then subjoined:

The Reader may recollect that this inscription is in Meletius his Geography; but a comparison of the present copy with his, will shew that the Greek Archbishop has omitted the digamma, and thereby deprived it of its archaic character. Some observations made upon it by Mr. Walpole are subjoined in a Note¹. The recurrence of EI, for H, and for AI, as in ΘΕΙΒΕΙΟΣ, ΑΘΑΝΕΙΟΣ; and of Α, for Η, in this latter word; will not escape the erudite reader. Concerning the digamma, occurring not less than six times in this inscription, the author owes it to the pious memory of his most learned grandfather², to insert here a few remarks published by him upon this subject half a century ago, which have been often borrowed, without any acknowledgment being made of their author. “The Saxons used the digamma in the beginning and middle of the words, just — 11. ΠΑΥΛΥΤΔΟΣ.—The digamma was placed sometimes in the commencement of a word, whether it began with a lenis or aspirate, as in Fouclav, Φάναξ, Φανήρ, and many others; sometimes in the middle, as in αΦυροῦ, in the Delian Inscription; and Συγεγένεσι in the Sigean, where the υ is written instead of it. (See Chishull ad Sig. Mar. and Lanzi.) In the Heracleian Tables we have this form, Εἰξ, for ἔξ, Εἰτιος, for ἔτιος. The affinity between the sigma and digamma is shewn in many instances. The Æolians, says Salmasius, (de Re Hell. p. 431.) ‘partim Νυμφάφων dicebant, partim Νυμφάσων.’ Hence the Latins wrote sex from the Greek ἕξ. In parts of Greece, says Priscian, they say mulia for musa. In the Lacedæmonian dialect they pronounced, without any aspiration, παι μωα, for πᾶσα μῶσα. (See Lanzi on the Tuscan Language.) Walpole’s MS. Note.

(2) See the Life of William Clarke, M.A. Residentiary of Chichester, in the Biographia Britannica.

as the Æolian Greeks¹ used it, who spread as far as the sides of the Hellespont, and lived nearest to their Saxon ancestors, the Thracians. Thus we have the initial *digamma*² in weather, work, weight, wool, whole from ὄλος; worth, worthy, from ἄθλος; wise, from the same root as ἴσημι; wreck, break, from ῥήσσω: and thus in the middle of words, to prevent the coalition of vowels, as πᾶα-πᾶν, to see; ἡα-πᾶν, to look on; ἡυ-πᾶν, deceit; πᾶα-πᾶνε, a scoffer.”

The

(1) Note by the author of the Extract above cited, on the words “Æolian Greeks.” “In pronouncing both Greek and Latin, the sound of the digamma was familiar and well known. The Æolians expressed this sound by a particular character, and so possibly might the other Greeks; but this does not seem sufficiently evinced; for the Antients speak of the digamma as peculiar to the Æolians. Thus Terentianus:

‘Nominum multa inchoata literis vocalibus

Æolicus usus reformat, et digamma præficit.’

“The different powers of it were these: It was inserted between two vowels in the middle of words, or before a vowel at the beginning, with the sound of a V consonant. Or its more peculiar property was, expressing the sound of the Greek ov, or our W. The Romans had from the beginning the letter V, which fully answered the first of these purposes; and therefore, when the Emperor Claudius introduced the inverted digamma to supply what was wanting in their alphabet, it could only be intended to express this last sound. So Quintilian explains it: ‘In his servus et vulgus Æolicum DIGAMMA desideratur.’ i. e. to shew they were pronounced servus, and vulgus. But be this as it will; the Saxons certainly borrowed the form, as well as the power of their p from the Æolians; the two transverse strokes, which were divided in the Æolian digamma p, being joined together in theirs. By this means they possessed a letter which the Romans wanted, and which all the languages more immediately derived from the Latin, as the French, Spanish, and Italian, have not. This letter, therefore, which has been sometimes objected to, as a mark of barbarism in the Teutonic language, is really a proof of its primitive and high original.”

CLARKE'S Connexion of Coins, c. 2. p. 42. Lond. 1767. Note [d].

(2) Note by the same author, upon the words “initial digamma.” “Upton's remarks upon Shakespeare, p. 207. Instead of the digamma, they sometimes used the asper, as ἄβη-ος, happy. ‘Græcorum DIGAMMA, Germani, Saxones, Belgici, et Britanni, partim simplicem U, partim duplicem faciunt; idemque hi durius, illi suavius, alii lenius ut liquidum U, pronuntiant.’ Ariæ Mont. Præfat. in Bibl. Heb. p. 1.”

Ibid. c. 2. p. 43. Note [e].

The next inscription is twofold ; because it relates not only to the Charitesia, but also to the games called ὈΜΟΛΟΜΙΑ, solemnized in honour of Jupiter Ὀμολώϊος, who was worshipped in Boeotia. It differs therefore, in some degree, as to the subject, and also to the writing ; but the form is the same, and it contains a list of the Victors. The age of the writing is manifestly different ; because for ΕΙ we have Η, ΡΑΥΝΙΔΟΣ, for ΡΑΥΑΦΥΔΟΣ, &c. there being no recurrence of the digamma. It is here that we find mention made of Sophocles, son of Sophocles the Athenian, who obtained the prize in Tragedy. He is stated by Suidas, in a passage before cited, to have been an Athenian, a writer of tragedies, and a descendant of SOPHOCLES, who flourished after the seven principal tragedians. The names of others, as Aminias and Callistratus, are also known ; and Zoïlus, mentioned in the fourth line as a Paphian bard, and son of Zoïlus, obtained the victory in the Pythia upon another occasion, as appears from an inscription preserved by *Muratori*³. The words which Muratori applied to a record of this nature⁴ may be cited with reference to this valuable inscription : “ AD ILLUSTRANDA CERTAMINA GRÆCORUM MUSICA, THEATRALIA, LITERARIA, EGREGIUM MARMOR.” Here we have neither the name of the Archon, nor of the person who presided.

Both the church and the monastery now occupy the site of the Hieron of the Graces, and have been built out of its ruins. This appears not only from these inscriptions, but also from the circumstance of the fountain in the monastery mentioned mentioned by *Pausanias*¹, thereby denoting the spot. The Hieron of Bacchus seems also to have been connected with that of the Graces, from the manner in which they are coupled by the same author², who says of the latter that it was (ἀεχαιότατον) most antient. The honours rendered to the Graces by the Orchomenians are alluded to by *Pindar*³, by *Theocritus*⁴, and by *Nonnus*⁵. Both *Casaubon*⁶ and *Kuhniius*⁷ quote their testimonies. Little could it have been imagined, by either of those learned commentators, that some remains of the sanctuary itself might yet be recognised; and that actual catalogues of the Victors at the Charitesian Games might still be referred to. This circumstance ought to excite an expectation, that other documents, if not more antient, yet perhaps fully as interesting, will hereafter be brought to light upon the same spot. We were unable to copy the whole of the inscriptions that we found; and perhaps some of them would be considered as destitute of any archaic and palaeographic character. One of them evidently belongs to an ecclesiastical establishment, founded here long after the Christian æra. It is in the wall of the monastery church; and, as a specimen of calligraphy, it is highly deserving of notice; being executed upon marble in so elaborate and beautiful a manner, that every letter is sculptured in relief: it may serve, therefore, as a specimen of the style of the age when it was written. (8) The author found an inscription of this kind at Kaffa in the Crimea, bearing date A. D. 1400. It is in the Armenian language, and the letters are all sculptured in relief. For a further account of it, see "Greek Marbles," p. 8. No. VIIII. The original Marble is now in the University Library at Cambridge.

A similar inscription also occurs behind the altar, extending all round that part of the building; but it was more than half concealed by a huge stack of poles, and these we did not attempt to remove. There are others of a remote age, but very imperfect: one upon a cylindrical pedestal within the church, relating to Orchomenus, written Erchomenus; and one at the door of a house in the yard of the monastery, mentioning the ΧΟΡΑΓΟΙ of the festivals of Bacchus, and the Victors at the games solemnized in honour of that God; thereby affording additional reason for believing, as before stated, that the Hiera of the Graces and of Bacchus were within the same Peribolus. And as at ATHENS an antient sun-dial remained near the Theatre of Bacchus, so, upon this spot, where the Orchomenian Dionysia were observed, we had the satisfaction of seeing the public (Σκιαθηρικὸν) time-piece, or town-dial, of the citizens of ORCHOMENUS. It was a large marble tablet, in the wall of the church. The gnomon had long disappeared; but every thing else was entire. The (στοιχεῖα) *letters of the dial*¹, for numbering the hours by the earth's motion, were ten in number, Α, Β, Γ, Δ, Ε, Ζ, Η, Θ, Ι, and they were all sculptured in relief upon the surface. The remarkable illustration thus afforded of a Greek epigram in Athenæus, has given an an additional interest to this curious relique°. As to the age of the workmanship, it is very uncertain. Owing to the manner of carving the letters, like so many caméos, and to the existence of the H among them, it is probably not of remote antiquity. At the same time, the epigram cited from Athenæus, in a Note, sufficiently proves that such dials, and so inscribed, existed towards the end of the second century; and it is also evident that the H must have occurred in the same situation, among the ten letters, when that epigram was composed.

After leaving the monastery, now called that of "the Holy Virgin," we found close to it, towards the west, the ruin of a structure that had been surmounted by a dome of a conical form, built with very large stones. The entrance to it still remains entire, but the upper part of the dome has fallen: a single block of marble over this entrance resembles,

(2) When the author, after his return to England, mentioned this circumstance to the late Bishop Horsley, and shewed to that learned prelate a sketch of the dial, it suggested instantly to the mind of that profound scholar an explanation of the following Greek epigram:

Ἐξ ὧραι μόχθους ἰκανώταται, αἱ τὲ μετ' αὐτὰς
Πράγμασι δεικνόμεναι, ΖΗΘΙ λέγουσι βροτοῖς.

Mr. Walpole, to whom the circumstance was mentioned, introduced an etching of the dial, together with the epigram cited by the Bishop from the Anthologia, at the end of the Herculesia. It is however an illustration that did not escape the erudition of Kircher, who quotes Athenæus for the epigram, in his chapter "De Horologiis, seu Sciatheicis Veterum," and thus explains it:

"Sex horæ laboribus sufficiunt, sequentes negotiis destinantur,

ZHΘI verò, id est, 7, 8, 9, 10, cœnales vocant.

Ita ut A, B, Γ, id est, 1, 2, 3, laboribus; Δ, Ε, Ζ, id est, 4, 5, 6, negotiis civilibus; Ζ, Η, Θ, Ι, denique, id est, 7, 8, 9, 10, cœnali refectiōni deputarentur."

resembles, both as to its size and form, the immense slab that covers the portal of the Tomb of Agamemnon at Mycenæ. There can be no doubt but that this ruin corresponds with the account given by Pausanias of the TREASURY OF MINYAS. Enough yet remains to prove that the covering was a dome; and the description given of it by that author¹ will also confirm this observation. Therefore they, who, of late years, have disputed the existence of domes in very antient architecture, maintaining that the Tomb of Agamemnon, being constructed by horizontal projections of stone, does not constitute what may properly be considered as a dome, will find a stumbling-block in the Treasury of Minyas. It is true that this building was considered, even by the Antients themselves, as one of the wonders of the world²; equally worthy of admiration with the Walls of Tiryns, and the *Pyramids of Egypt*³. In a different direction from the monastery, going towards the east, at a short distance, we found a tumulus, with several pieces of marble lying near it; and this may be the Tomb of Minyas also noticed by Pausanias, and remarkably distinguished, in his description of Orchomenus, from the Treasury of that monarch⁴, or we should have considered the latter as being his magnificent sepulchre.

Here we found part of an inscription, but in too imperfect a state to afford any information. However, as the most glimmering ray respecting a place of such celebrity will be eagerly sought for by every learned reader, we shall insert even this fragment. It is part of a decree. In the sixth line is δέδοχθη τυ δαμου, which is the common Bœotian form of δέδοχθαι τῷ δαμῶ. In the seventh line, τῶν πολιτῶν is evident for τῶν πολιτών. In the ninth line, κατασκευάττη is put for κατασκευάζει; the Bœotians using ττ for ζ, as in φράττω for φράζω; and η for ει. In the tenth line, ἐν τυ ἱερῷ is properly put for ἐν τῷ ἱερῷ.

There are some remains of the Acropolis of ORCHOMENUS; a part of the walls and of the mural turrets are still visible. them a delicious food, whether fresh or salted. It cannot, however, be a healthy place of residence in the summer, because the land is universally swampy, and contains pools of stagnant water. The children wear small stones about their necks, which are found here, and are superstitiously regarded: for their parents would not allow them to be sold, or even taken off to be examined. Of this nature, perhaps, were the stones mentioned by Pausanias as a principal object of veneration among the Orchomenians, who believed them to have fallen from heaven: unless indeed, as some are inclined to believe, substances that had really fallen from the atmosphere were preserved in this city, and, as at Ægos Potamos, worshipped by the inhabitants. That the old superstitions of Greece are by no means altogether eradicated, must be evident to every traveller who visits the country. As we returned in the evening to LEBADÆA, the secretary of the Archon, considered a man of education among the Greeks of that city,—speaking of the tops of the mountains, and particularly of Parnassus, which he perceived attracted our attention continually towards it,—said in Italian, “It is there that the old Gods (antichi Dei) have resided, ever since they were driven from the plains:”—and observing that we were amused by his observation, he added, with great seriousness, “They did strange things in this country: those old Gods are not fit subjects for laughter.”

ON the morning of December the 14th, we left LEBADEÁ; and proceeded in a N.W. direction, across an undulating district, towards PARNASSUS; keeping the road to DELPHI, now called Castrì. After journeying three hours, having passed over a ridge of hills, the antient boundary between PHOCIS and ΒΕΟΤΙΑ, previous to our descent into a valley that reaches quite up to the base of Parnassus, we enjoyed a glorious prospect of that mountain; which the author has vainly endeavoured to represent by the annexed Plate. They who have beheld Snowdon from Anglesea will have anticipated this scene by a miniature representation: and as it brought to our recollection the sublime Druidical Chorus of Mason's Caractacus, we were ready at every instant to exclaim, "Hear, thou king of mountains, hear!" It was at this time almost without a cloud; its upmost ridges being white with snow: below these, appeared a wide expanse of naked and rugged rocks, exhibiting hues of silvery grey, peculiar to Parnassus: still lower, towards the base, and in the sheltered recesses of the valley, were trees, dispersed or collected into thickets and tufted groves; presenting altogether such a region of bold and dignified scenery—of varied and broken eminences, of wilderness, and woodland, and pasture—as we have seldom seen. Among the thickets we saw the Arbutus, and Myrtle, and Vallonia Oak, flourishing luxuriantly; and we recognised a sort of tree that we had first observed in going up Mount Gargarus, in Troas; which we had called the Ivory Wood of Ida; because, whenever we attempted to cut it, we found it to be so hard and brittle, that it was like making an incision into a piece of ivory. It is at first very heavy; but after it has been kept a short time, it loses both its weight and strength, and breaks like a dried willow. We do not know its botanical name; having lost the specimens that we collected during its fructification.

After descending into the valley, we saw between thirty and forty eagles collected upon one spot; and we observed, upon our right, two immense rocks towering above the road. The huge masses they exhibit, added to a striking effect produced by their ochreous colour, gave a surprising degree of grandeur to the fore-ground of the magnificent picture that was here presented to the eye. Upon the top of the higher rock is a remarkable ruin, corresponding with the description and situation of the monuments (τὰ μνήματα) of Laius and his followers, according to *Pausanias*¹; but perhaps originally a tower of observation and defence, upon the frontier of Phocis. It is of a circular form; built, like the wall of Tiryas, with those huge stones (denoting the Cyclopéan style of structure), which the Antients had the art of raising to such heights, and of placing together upon the acclivities of rocks, without any cement, in the most regular manner. We ascended to examine the workmanship, and were struck with the enterprise and skill manifested in its construction. It agrees, in all its circumstances, with what Pausanias has said of the place where Œdipus murdered his father; for this happened upon the frontier of Phocis, near to a spot where three roads met—the roads leading from Daulis, Lebadéa, and DELPHI; just before entering the military pass, or defile of Parnassus, called Schiste, or the *way cut*². Upon the left hand, in descending, descending, is an antient fountain. The structure upon the rock, although very near to this fountain, is not visible from it; because the rock only is seen on this side, the ruin facing in an opposite direction: but the traveller wishing to find it, may be guided by its bearing from the fountain, which is E. N. E.; the road from Lebadéa to Delphi continuing, as before, north-west.

Schiste.

After we had crossed this valley, we began to ascend PARNASSUS, by the pass of Schiste, having lofty precipices on either side of us; and upon our right, very high among the rocks, we observed several caverns as we rode along the defile. The remains of the old pavement of the Via Sacra are seen in different parts of this route, and indeed the whole way from Lebadéa to Delphi. The road, now become stony and very bad, was rendered the more difficult, by offering a continued ascent until we arrived at a part of it immediately under the summit of PARNASSUS; which preserves its primitive appellation of Lycorea, now pronounced Lakürü. This mountain is much inhabited, and by an industrious race, who cultivate the vales, and even the declivities, to a very great height above its base. Where its sides are very steep, they plant vineyards, opposing walls to the torrents from the rains or melting snows, that the hopes of the husbandman may not be washed away. We were now at six hours' distance from Lebadéa: and here the road began to descend, and the streams from Parnassus to take their course in an opposite direction down the other side of the mountain; so that DELPHI is evidently not situated upon the side towards Bœotia. This descent descent continues uninterruptedly for four hours, through the boldest scenery in the world. The rocks are tremendous in magnitude and height: they consist of primary limestone, characterized, as to its colour, by those grey and silvery hues before mentioned, and containing veins and beds of marble. In this part of Parnassus there are but few trees, save only upon the heights; and these are covered with pines. Precipices everywhere surround the traveller, except where the view extends through valleys and broken cliffs towards DELPHI; giving that powerful solemnity to those scenes of Nature which formerly impressed with religious fear the minds of votaries journeying from the most distant parts of Greece, and here approaching the awful precincts of the Pythian God.

We saw the mouth of a natural cavern, in an inaccessible situation above the road. At the distance of four hours from Delphi, we crossed a river, running from Parnassus towards the Bay of Crissa. After journeying another hour, we left a village called Arracovia, pronounced Rhacovi, upon our right; the scenery exhibiting everywhere the same degree of grandeur. Afterwards, we arrived at a village, still preserving the antient appellation of CRISSA in its modern name, now pronounced Crissú. Never was there any thing more romantic than the appearance of this place. It is situated in a grove of olive-trees, distant only one hour from Delphi; being surrounded by lofty eminences; and so abundantly supplied with streams of living water, that it appears falling in all directions, for the supply of its various mills and fountains. The name and appearance of this place, place, added to the various fragments of marble and other remains of antiquity about it, may perhaps enable us to fix the disputed position of Crissa; concerning whose situation there are errors even in the writings of antient authors¹. An antient scholiast upon Pindar pretends, that under this name of Crissa was designated the city of Delphi; the two places, owing to their vicinity, being confounded together. Other writers, as Pausanias, and the author of the Etymologicon Magnum, have supposed that Crissa was the same place as Cirrha; but the falsity of this opinion seems to have been demonstrated by Ptolemy and Pliny. After reviewing all that has been written for the illustration of this subject, whether by the Antients, or by several modern geographers—as Casaubon, Freret, Gédoyn, and others², it was concluded by *Mentelle*³, as an opinion also adopted by D'Anville, that Cirrha was the port, and Crissa the city. It had given its name to an extension of territory near the gulph of that name, called, by Strabo, Ἐδαίον, or “The Happy;” a distinction to which it was entitled, by its fertility, and the peculiar beauty of its situation. The possession of great wealth rendered the Crissæans arrogant and unjust. They not only levied a tax upon all vessels frequenting their port, but at last demanded contributions, considered as impious, from all those who passed through their their territory in pilgrimages to Delphi. In consequence of these extortions, the Council of the Amphictyons sent to consult the Oracle: and it was decreed, that Crissa should be destroyed, and its inhabitants reduced to slavery; and that their territory should be left uncultivated, as a district sacred to Apollo, to Diana, to Latona, and to Minerva. A war ensued in consequence, which lasted ten years; when, after a long and bloody siege, the town was taken and entirely rased, and all the survivors found within its walls were sold as slaves. Crissa is mentioned by *Pliny*⁴, but not by Strabo: and this circumstance induced Larcher to believe that the city was rebuilt within a short time after Strabo's writings appeared⁵.

Just before our arrival at DELPHI, we had a view of the sea; appearing like a small lake through an opening of the sides of the mountain, being a part of the Bay of Crissa. It was beginning to grow dark as we drew nigh to Castri, the name of a wretched village, now occupying the site of the sacred city; and the road was almost impassable. At length we saw this truly wonderful place, covering a lofty eminence upon the south side of the mountain, that is to say, upon our right, immediately beneath some high perpendicular precipices, whence a chasm of the rifted rock admits the waters of the CASTALIAN FOUNTAIN to fall from PARNASSUS towards the sea. Such is the general aspect of the place. The village consists of about seventy houses, whose inhabitants are Greeks: and wherever Greek peasants are found in the villages, instead of Albanians, want and wretchedness are generally apparent. We were conducted to pass the night in the poor cottage of the poorest peasant of this poverty-struck village; who, with a wife and many children, living in sickness and in sorrow, greeted our coming with that gladness which the afflicted feel, when they have some one to whom they may relate the story of their woes; even if this be the only consolation they are likely to experience.—The Tchohodar was for conjuring up a supper, after his usual manner, à coup de bâton: but by this time less persuasion was necessary to convince him that a method of catering more consonant to British feelings must be adopted, if he intended to pursue his journey with us any farther; neither were the people of Castri disposed to crouch quite so much as usual before every dastardly Turk with whom they might encounter: they had put to death seven domineering Moslems a short time before, and had cast them all together into a hole which they afterwards closed. We had brought with us bread and honey, and rice and coffee, from Lebadéa: Antonio filled a pitcher with the excellent wine of Parnassus: and making our host and his family sit down with us, we were presently all feasted, and as merry as if the most propitious oracles from the Pythia had been vouchsafed to every one of the party.

Its Antiquities and Natural Curiosities.

In the morning we began a very careful examination of the antiquities and natural curiosities of DELPHI, the most extra-

extraordinary place in all Greece, whether with reference to the one as to the other; and we shall detail them with all the minuteness in our power. We had reason to believe, that the remarkable circumstances related of the place and manner wherein the Pythian oracles were delivered, would lead to the discovery of some mephitic exhalation upon the spot, similar to that of the Grotta del Cane, near Naples. The Tripod stood over a crevice, or narrow mouth of a cave; and the Pythia, being seated thereon, was afterwards attacked by convulsions: she is moreover described as pale and emaciated, and as resisting the officiating priests, who compelled her, although reluctant, to be seated upon the Tripod, where she was forcibly detained. But our search after this vapour was unsuccessful: in answer to all our inquiries concerning the Adytum, the only information we obtained from the inhabitants was, that no place corresponded with our description, except the hole where they had buried the seven Turks; and this was closed. A very remarkable passage occurs in Stephanus of Byzantium, which may possibly still lead to the discovery of this place. He says, there was at Delphi an Adytum, constructed of five stones, the work of Agamedes and *Trophonius*³. Amidst the Cyclopæan masonry of the city, it is therefore possible that the remains of this gigantic structure structure may yet be found. They will of course be sought for in the middle of the city; for the same superstition existed concerning Delphi that now belongs to Jerusalem; namely, that it stood in the middle of the whole earth: and the navel' of the earth was shewn in the midst of the Temple of Apollo, as it is in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Near to a fountain, and church, called that of St. Nicholo, we found an inscription upon marble, in honour of the Emperor HADRIAN, stating that "THE COUNCIL OF THE AMPHICTYONS, UNDER THE SUPERINTENDANCE OF THE PRIEST, PLUTARCH, FROM DELPHI, COMMEMORATE THE EMPEROR."

We then went towards the CASTALIAN FOUNTAIN, which is on the eastern side of the village. It is situated beneath a precipice one hundred feet in height, upon the top of which a chasm in the rock separates it into two pointed crags; and these, towering above Delphi, and being a part of Parnassus, have been sometimes considered and erroneously described as the tops of that mountain, which has therefore been said to have a *double summit*³. There is nothing nothing in journeying through this country likely to affect a literary traveller more than the view of this FOUNTAIN CASTALIOUS: its being so easily and surely identified with the inspiring source of Grecian poetry, and at the same time combining great picturesque beauty with all the circumstances of local interest, added to the illustration afforded by its present appearance of the manner in which it was originally decorated and revered, render it one of the most impressive sights it is possible to behold. Pausanias, entering the city from Bœotia, found it upon his right hand, exactly as it occurred to us upon our arrival, after following the same road the evening before. It was therefore now upon our left, and upon the east side of the town. The Gymnasium mentioned by the same author stood a little farther on, in this direction: the site of it is now occupied by a monastery, called that of Panaja, being sacred to the Virgin. As we drew nigh to the Castalian fountain, we found, lying among the loose stones in the road, one of the original marble vows formerly placed by the side of the Via Sacra, leading from the fountain to the Temple, now trampled under foot by every casual passenger. It was a representation of the Gorgonian visage, as it is seen upon the most antient terra-cottas, gems, and coins of Greece, generally with the features frightfully distorted, and always with the tongue protruded¹; derived perhaps, originally, originally, from the appearance presented by the shadows seen upon the Moon's disk; for when that planet is at full, a rude figure of the human countenance may be imagined as similarly displayed: and the superstitions respecting the Γοργόνη κεφαλή being also those of the Diva triformis, constituted a part of that worship, which was paid unto the Moon'. The present example, as to the form of the stone, exhibits a perfect circle: and when this image appears upon ancient coins, however irregular the form of the medal may be, an evident design to circumscribe the whole symbol; including the snakes of the hair, &c. by a circular line, may be observed. This is particularly apparent upon certain medals of *Parium*⁴ and *Abydos*⁵; in many of the pateras of Grecian terra-cotta, where this figure may be noticed as having been impressed with a mould or die in the bottom of the vessel; and upon those Gorgonian heads of gilded earthen-ware which were discovered by the Earl of Aberdeen, connected by bronze wires, and forming a chaplet round the skull of a dead person in a sepulchre near *Athens*⁶. That the meaning of this symbol had never been rightly understood by our antiquaries, the author endeavoured to prove by former observations upon the Earl of Aberdeen's discovery.

discovery'. The Gorgonian head has been believed to denote lubricity, but its real signification is death; and it is one of the most remarkable circumstances concerning this image, that, long after its original signification (as a "memento mori") was lost, it should have found its way, from the oldest temples of the Pagan world, into Christian churches; where it yet appears, either in their painted windows², or carved roofs; as it also does among heraldic ornaments.

The remains of THE FOUNTAIN CASTALIUS exhibit a large square shallow bason, with steps to it, cut in a rock of marble; once, no doubt, the Castalian Bath; wherein the Pythia used to wash her whole body, and particularly her hair, before she placed herself upon the Tripod, in the Temple of Apollo. Upon the opposite side is a stone seat, also hewn out of the same rock. This bason is filled with the water of the fountain. Above the bason rises the perpendicular precipice to its clefted summit before mentioned, which is at the height of about an hundred feet. In the face of this precipice are niches scooped in the rock, for the votive offerings; one very large receptacle of this kind being upon the right hand, and three smaller exactly in front of a person facing the precipice. Upon the left hand, a large wild fig-tree, sprouting above the water of the fountain upon that side of the bason, spread its branches over the surface of the rock; which was further

RE: A STUDY OF THE THERMAL STABILITY OF POLYETHYLENE

Enclosed for the Bureau are two copies of a report describing the results of a study of the thermal stability of polyethylene. The study was conducted in the Department of Chemistry, University of Chicago, Chicago, Illinois, during the period from August 1952 to December 1953. The study was conducted under the direction of Professor R. W. Lenz, and the results were reported at the Annual Meeting of the American Chemical Society, New York, New York, further ornamented by a most luxuriant garniture of shrubs, ivy, moss, brambles, and pensile plants, some of them in flower, mingling together their varied hues over the red and grey masses of the marble³. The larger votive receptacle upon the right is still an object of reverence among the inhabitants; a Christian Tabernacle having succeeded to the Hieron of its Pagan idol. It is now a chapel dedicated to St. John; an antient basso-relievo, perhaps a part of the original vow for which it was excavated, being substituted in the place of an altar. The other three niches are empty. There is an opening in the rock towards the left of the fountain, where, in certain seasons, the melting snows and torrents from Parnassus pour down, through a chasm, in a vehement cataract: and above, within the cleft, a cavern is visible, which Wheler most unreasonably judged to be the Antrum Corycium, or Grotto of the Nymphs⁴: to this it could have no resemblance, owing to its diminutive size and situation. The real CORYCIAN CAVE had not been ascertained by any traveller, until we arrived at Delphi: and although we

(3) We brought from the FOUNTAIN CASTALIUS the Silene congesta of Sibthorpe; also "the Friar's Cowl," Arum Arisarum of Linnæus; and a non-descript species of "Gromwell," Lithospermum Linn.—cum nonnullis aliis, seu immaturis, seu floribus, foliisve mutilatis, atque Deo illi Delphico solùm cognitis. We have called this new species of Lithospermum, from the very remarkable nature of the place where it was discovered, LITHOSPERMUM PYTHICUM. Lithospermum foliis undulatis, inferioribus lanceolato-oblongis, superioribus bracteisque cordato-oblongis; hirsutis. Planta habitu ferè L. orientalis, seu Anchusæ orientalis Linnæi; sed foliis angustioribus, valdè-undulatis, floribusque majoribus atque inflatioribus distincta.

we had the satisfaction of obtaining intelligence of that marvellous grotto, we were prevented by the depth of the snow, in the part of Parnassus where it is situated, from paying a visit to the spot. The description given of it by the inhabitants of this village of Castri, who call it "Sarand'auli," the "forty courts," corresponded with that of Pausanias, who states its distance from Delphi as equal to sixty stadia: they further added, that it is capacious enough to contain three thousand persons. One of them, who had formerly belonged to a gang of banditti, and made no secret of the fact, told us, that it was a place of rendezvous for the robbers of Parnassus, and that he had often resorted thither with his comrades. It lies to the north of Delphi, towards the heights of the mountain. Other travellers, availing themselves of our discovery with regard to this cave, have been to visit it: and one of them, by the inscription which he there found, has confirmed every observation concerning it, before published by the author of these Travels¹. The cavern alluded to by Wheler, in the cleft above the Castalian fountain, was formerly accessible, by means of stairs also cut in the marble rock: but a part only

(1) That is to say, seven miles and a half, reckoning the Stadium at an English furlong. Pausanias, however, does not state the distance from Delphi to the Corycian Cave with precision. He only says, that to one going from Delphi to the summits of Parnassus, at the distance of sixty stadia there is a brazen image; where the descent begins to the Corycian Cave. Ἰόντι δὲ ἐκ Δελφῶν ἐπὶ τὰ ἄκρα τοῦ Παρνασσοῦ σταδίους μὲν ὅσον ἕξκοντα ἀποτίρω Δελφῶν, ἕστιν ἀγάλμα χαλκοῦν, καὶ μόνον ἐνζώνω ἀνδρὶ ἡμῶνους τε καὶ ἵππους ἐπὶ τὸ ἄντρον ἔστιν ἄνοδος τὸ Κορύκειον. Pausaniae Phocica, c. 32. p. 877. ed. Kuhnii.

only of the steps remain; and it would be difficult now to approach it. The water of the Castalian fountain is cool and pleasant to the taste. Wheler quaintly describes it³, as “fit to quench the thirst of those hot-headed poets, who, in their bacchanals, spare neither God nor man; and to whom nothing is so sacred, but they will venture to profane it.” After passing from the bath, or bason, below the votive receptacles, it falls down southward, in a deep and narrow channel, towards the Pleistus, separating mount Cirphis from *Parnassus*⁴; and having joined that river, it runs by the ruins of Crissa, into the Crissæan Bay. In the first part of its course from the fountain, it separates the remains of the GYMNASIUM, where the Monastery of Panaja now stands, from the village of Castri, as it probably did from the old city of Delphi; for going from the fountain to that monastery, we noticed the situation of the ANTIENT GATE leading to Bœotia. Wheler mentions⁵, that in returning from this monastery, by the fountain, into the village, he “observed a great piece of the rock tumbled down, and almost buried: on one side of it, that lay a little hollow, he saw letters written, in large, but strange characters, so as that he, and his companion Spon, could make nothing of them.” We expected, from this description, nothing less, at the least, than the remains of a genuine Pelasgic inscription; but were grievously disappointed when we found the identical mass alluded to by Wheler, with a few indistinct traces of his “large but strange characters.” The stone itself was part of the work before the Eastern Gate of the city. There was a wall upon the right hand, formed of rude masses of rock, which was ruined by a lapse from the mountain above; and the piece of rock mentioned by him was thereby impelled from its position: but the characters upon it are evidently common Greek letters: we plainly observed A, Y, N, and some others that were visible enough to prove there could have been nothing “strange” in the inscription, when he saw it.

Gymnasium.

The remains of the GYMNASIUM are principally behind the monastery. The foundations were there sustained by an immense bulwark of hewn stone, projected from the sloping ground, so as to offer a level area whereon the structure stood. The antient city was built in a theatrical form¹, upon a series of such terraces rising one above the other; and a similar front-work of hewn stone is still seen in different parts of the immense Coilon, or semicircular range, which its buildings exhibited upon this abrupt declivity of Parnassus. Within the monastery we found the capitals of pillars, broken friezes, and triglyphs. Upon a marble Cippus, beautifully adorned with sculptured foliage, and crowned with the Lotus, we read the words

And

(1) It is very pleasing to a traveller, and perhaps may not be less so to his readers, to find an observation of this kind, (describing the form of a city that has ceased to exist for ages) written upon the spot, anticipated by those who visited Delphi eighteen centuries ago: this, in fact, is almost literally the remark made by Strabo as to the form of the city: he says, Τὸ δὲ νότιον οἱ Δελφοὶ, περῶδες χωρίον, ΘΕΑΤΡΟΕΙΔΕΣ, κατὰ κορυφὴν ἔχον τὸ μαντεῖον καὶ τὴν πόλιν, σταδίων ἑκατάεκα κύκλον πληρούσαν. Strab. Geog. lib. ix. p. 606. ed. Oxon.

And within the sanctuary, behind the altar, we saw the fragments of a marble Cathedra; upon the back of which we found the following inscription, exactly as it is here written, no part of it having been injured or obliterated; affording, perhaps, the only instance known of a sepulchral inscription upon a monument of this remarkable form:

It is in honour of a youth of Larissa in Thessaly, who died at eighteen years of age. As to the words χρήστος and ἥρωος, it may be remarked that all the epitaphs upon Larissæans, which Spon has preserved, contain these words*. There were many cities having the name of Larissa; consequently the city whereof the youth here commemorated was a native, has the distinction of Πελασγιώτης. It is mentioned by Strabo, in his description of Thessaly†: although situated out of the Pelasgiotis, it had the name of Larissa Pelasgia.

After

After visiting the remains of the Gymnasium, we went to see those of the STADIUM. They are situated upon the highest part of the slope whereon Castri is built, above the village, and a little to the west of it, under a precipice formed by some rocks, which also there rise in a perpendicular form. We noticed very considerable foundations of antient buildings, in our way up. This Stadium is even more entire than that of Athens; for the marble seats yet remain: they consist of the same substance as the cliffs around Delphi; and at the curved or upper extremity of the Stadium, they are hewn in the natural rock. The area being clear from rubbish, and in a very perfect state, we were enabled to ascertain its length with accuracy; and this we found to be equal to two hundred and twenty paces. We stepped it twice, in order to ascertain this point: and admitting that our paces were about equal to the same number of yards, this will allow, for its length, six hundred and sixty feet; thereby exceeding the length of the antient metre which bore the name of the Olympic Stadium; for this, making the eighth part of a Roman mile, was little more than two hundred and one yards¹.

From a part of the mountain to which the lower extremity

(1) The Olympic Stadium exactly equalled $201\frac{4}{5}$ English yards. Mr. Vernon, measuring with great care the length of the Stadium at Athens, found it equal to 630 English feet. (See Wheler's Journ. into Greece, p. 375. Lond. 1682.) Wheler says its breadth equalled 26 or 27 geometrical paces; which, allowing 5 feet English for each geometrical pace, makes its breadth equal to $43\frac{1}{2}$ or 45 yards.—From this it appears that the Delphic Stadium was of the same dimensions, or nearly so, as the Stadium Panathenæicum, at Athens.

of the Stadium is joined, we enjoyed a fine prospect of Salona, the antient AMPHISSA, situated upon the side of a hill; also of the Bay of CRISSA, and a town called Galaxy towards the west; the Gulph of CORINTH; and the mountains of ACHAIA. Hence we descended to the Monastery of Elias; and found in the church belonging to it two architraves of Parian marble, of very great magnitude. Judging from the impossibility of conveying such masses to the spot by any means which the present inhabitants possess, and also by the immense foundations of a building here, it is plain that this monastery was erected upon the site of one of the principal temples of DELPHI. A square stone at the door had an inscription on all sides of it; but in such a mutilated state, that nothing could be made of it. Upon one side, some letters, finely cut, and of small size, appeared in the following manner:

Monastery

The reader is left to use his own conjectures as to this imperfect legend: we are unwilling to omit any thing so likely to excite curiosity as an inscription, however mutilated, relating to this remarkable place. There were traces of another, upon a mass of Parian marble; but the letters were so much effaced, that it was impossible to copy any of them.

Cverus.

Leaving the Monastery of Elias, we found a recess hewn in the rock, either for a sepulchre, or for an oracular cave. The walls of the temple noticed at the monastery extend near to it. Within this recess there are arched cavities upon the right and left; and there is one in the front, lined with painted stucco, having two smaller cavities over it; and above the whole, a bull's head, very finely sculptured in the stone. Hard by, there is an alcove, or grotto, of a semicircular form, also hewn in the rock, with a seat all round the interior, finely cut out of the solid stone. When seated in this grotto, the view extends across the whole Coilon of the antient city of Delphi (before described as having a theatrical form, owing to the natural shape of this declivity of Parnassus), towards the Castalian Spring, and the Gymnasium in the entrance from BÆOTIA; looking down at the same time over the numerous terraces rising one above another whereon the city was built. Indeed, to have a faithful conception of what Delphi was, it is only necessary to imagine an antient theatre, with terraces of stone in the place of seats, rising one above the other, of sufficient width to admit of temples and other public buildings upon those semicircular terraces; the Stadium being the uppermost structure of the whole series; and the Castalian Spring, and the Gymnasium, at the right extremity of the Coilon. The front-work of these terraces, being perfectly even and perpendicular, is everywhere artificial: it exhibits a Cyclopéan masonry, adapted to the natural declivity of the rock. This masonry remains in many places entire; but as it does not now continue throughout the whole extent of the semicircle, a hasty observer might conclude, that the detached parts were so many separate foundations of the different temples of the city. There is enough remaining to enable a skilful architect to form an accurate plan of Delphi: but it should be fitted to a model of Parnassus; for in the harmonious adjustment which was here conspicuous, of the works of God and man, every stately edifice and majestic pile constructed by human labour, were made to form a part of the awful features of the mountain; and from whatever quarter DELPHI was approached, a certain solemn impression of supernatural agency must have been excited, diffusing its influence over every object; so that the sanctity of the whole district became a saying throughout Greece, and "ALL PARNASSUS WAS ACCOUNTED HOLY'."

Passing from the alcove to the village, we saw upon the left, about half way up the declivity towards the Stadium, the front-work of one of the terraces before mentioned, and, afterwards, very great remains of the same kind occurred close to the path. As we were then making careful inquiry after inscriptions among the inhabitants, we were

were conducted into the court of a house situated over the centre of the antient city, where we found several architectural remains with inscriptions, in a mutilated state; the last of which repaid us for all our trouble, as the legend seemed to imply that we were upon the site of the TEMPLE OF APOLLO. The first, however, consisted only of the words "CALLISTRATUS, SON OF CALLISTRATUS," and a part of the word DELPHI.

Within a stable belonging to the same house there was a slab of marble, partly buried. The part above ground measured six feet two inches, by two feet six inches. It was inscribed in the most beautiful manner, with a series of decrees, in columns, added at different times, and in different languages; the characters of one inscription differing in size from those of another. But the stone being inverted, the characters appeared all topsy-turvy; and it was so much damaged, that when we found what the fatigue would be of making an exact copy of the whole, we had not the courage to attempt it. Some of these inscriptions were in Greek; others in Latin: and the latter were of great length. The Greek began thus could not copy them. Upon three or four we read the names of ARCHONS, and upon one the word ΗΡΑΚΛΕΙΟΥ. But the last, and by far the most important, in its evident allusion to the Temple, mentions a family who had consigned their son to the care of the priests. This being discovered upon the spot, will be considered as more interesting than any thing else which we found at DELPHI. It states, that "THE FATHER AND MOTHER OF AMARIUS ΝΕΡΟΣ, WHO HAD BEEN HONOURED BY THE SENATE OF CORINTH WITH REWARDS DUE TO HIM AS SENATOR AND OVERSEER OF THE FORUM, PUT THEIR SON UNDER THE PROTECTION OF THE PYTHIAN APOLLO."

Cause of the
 of Castri.

In consequence of some dispute between the agents of Ali Pasha and the inhabitants of Castri, the Pasha has laid the village under contribution, to pay him the sum of thirty purses; equal to fifteen thousand piastres. This they are unable to do; and of course every thing they had has been taken from them; which may serve to explain the present ruined state of the place. In its present condition, there is not in all Lapland a more wretched village than Castri. The other villages upon Parnassus, especially Arracovia, are comparatively wealthy; the soil being extremely fertile, and the natural industry of the inhabitants, many many of whom are Albanians, being very great. The wine produced over all the south side of the mountain is excellent; and there is not a resident Turk to be found.

Upon our return to the house where we had lodged, we examined a few medals that our host had collected among the inhabitants, during our absence; and we obtained one, in silver, of very great rarity. It was a small medal of ÆTA in Thessaly, in excellent preservation, and the die remarkably fine. In front it exhibits the head of the Nemæan Lion, champing the arrow of Hercules between his jaws; and upon the obverse side, the naked figure of the hero, in the moment of his apotheosis upon Mount Æta, his head radiated, and holding his knotted club between his hands, with the legend ΟΙΤΑΙΩΝ; thus written from right to left, ΝΙΩΤΑΙΩ. This exceedingly rare medal is not known to exist in any other collection excepting that of the Abbé Neumann, at present forming a part of the Imperial cabinet at Vienna; where, however, there is no example of it in such perfect preservation. It may be considered as one of the finest specimens of the Grecian art'. And as it might be proved that Virgil, who was not less an antiquary than a poet,

Speaking of this silver medal of Æta, the author says, "*Hæc atque alia diversa Musei Pelleriniani, utraque ærea, Ætaorum solæ sunt monetæ, quæ ad nostra tempora in apricum protulit ætas. CHAP. VII.

AFTER we had taken some refreshment, we set out for Arracovia, distant three hours from Delphi, intending to pass the night there; as it is much higher upon Parnassus, and a better place for procuring guides to the summit of the mountain, than the miserable village we had quitted. At about half an hour's distance from Delphi, we found the remains of an antient square building, nobly constructed with large masses of stone, put together without any cement. As we continued along this route, we observed niches cut in the rocks above the road, on our left hand. One place, in particular, near to Delphi, exhibited several works of this kind; among others, the appearance of a large door hewn in the solid stone, which had been subsequently severed by the effect of an earthquake. It is close to the road, and well worth notice; because hereabouts might have been one of the outworks of the city, or an arch covering the Via Sacra. We now entered the rich lands of Arracovia, full of the neatest vineyards, cultivated in the highest order, and seeming to extend over the mountain without any limitation, so as to cover all its sides and declivities; and actually rising into parts of it so steep and elevated, that they would not have been tenable but for the industry of the inhabitants; who have built walls to protect them from torrents, and buoyed up the soil by means of terraces, to prevent its being washed away. The finest vineyards upon the banks of the Rhine are not managed with greater skill and labour than than those of Arracovia, upon the south side of Parnassus. The land is most carefully weeded; and it is kept so clean and free from rubbish, that the stones are collected and placed in heaps; a little hollow space being left around each vine, to collect the moisture. The plants are all of them old stocks, from which they suffer only one scion to sprout for the year, and this is afterwards pruned again. The wine from these vineyards is excellent. The view throughout this journey, of all the Plain of Salona, and of the Bay, backed by the mountainous district of Achaia in Peloponnesus, cannot be described; for it would be idle to repeat continually the words grand, and magnificent, as applied to the sublimest appearances in nature, without being able thereby to suggest the slightest conception of the real scene¹.

Prospect.

The village of Arracovia is rich in comparison with Castri. It contains two hundred and fifty houses, inhabited by Albanians and by Greeks, “without a Turk” among them. This expression, “without a Turk,” is throughout Greece a saying

Condition of the Inhabitants.

(1) This has been felt by all who have attempted to describe fine prospects without the pencil. “As far as language can describe, Mr. Gray pushed its powers,” observes the Editor of his Memoirs. “Rejecting every general unmeaning and hyperbolic phrase, he selected the plainest, simplest, and most direct terms: yet, notwithstanding his judicious care in the use of these, I MUST OWN I FEEL THEM DEFECTIVE. (See Mason's Note to Gray's Letter to Wharton; Mathias's Edit. vol. I. p. 469. Lond. 1814.) Perhaps Gray never succeeded more happily, than when, laying aside description, he simply said, of a view in Westmoreland, “I saw in my glass a picture, that if I could transmit to you, and fix it in all the softness of its living colours, would fairly sell for a thousand pounds.” (Ibid. p. 455.) The most faithful descriptive language may present, it is true, a picture to the mind; but then it is not the identical picture. “The imagination,” says Mason, “receives clear and distinct images, but not true and exact images.” (Ibid.)

saying of exultation; and it is never uttered but with an expression of triumph and of gladness. Yet some have pretended that there is a mildness in the administration of the Turkish government, which would be ill supplied by the substitution of any other European dynasty in its place; that the people are not taxed beyond what they are well able to bear; and that they possess the means of redress against tyranny and oppression. Leaving to all such writers the very difficult task of proving what they have thus affirmed, and judging solely by our own experience, we can only say that the land, divested of its Mahometan governors, would be a land, whose inhabitants might "eat bread without scarceness, nor lack any thing in it;" unless indeed, and this is not improbable, it should fall under the dominion of Russia; when it would become "a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness."

Arracovia is situated at such an elevation upon the mountain, that a change of temperature was sensibly felt by us all; and after sun-set it became very cold. We passed the night in a small hut, writing letters to our friends in England. Parnassus affording sensations at our fingers' ends, to which we had long been strangers, we found it expedient to maintain a considerable fire in the centre of our little dwelling; which, filling the room with smoke, brought tears of acknowledgment down our cheeks, for the seasonable warmth it afforded so near to the seat of Apollo. When we had finished our letters, as it was our usual practice, we entered into conversation with the inhabitants collected to gaze at the strangers who were their guests; and and we were much amused by the traditions they still entertained. The people of Delphi had told us that there were only five Muses, and that the opinion as to there being nine in number was a heresy. Such disputes about the number of the Muses existed in antient times, and the Arracovian Greeks reduced their number to three. The only thing that surprised us was, that any notion of the kind should yet remain upon the spot; although all the fountains of Parnassus, of Helicon, and of Pindus, were once sacred to them. We have before proved, in what we related of Platæa, that the memory of Antient Greece is not quite obliterated among its modern inhabitants; and some additional facts were gathered here, however unworthy of further notice, to confirm and strengthen our former observation.

On Wednesday morning, December 16th, at nine o'clock, we set out, with four guides, for the SUMMIT OF PARNASSUS; returning a short distance, by the road to Delphi, and then turning up the mountain towards the right, but with our faces towards Delphi, until we had climbed the first precipices. After an hour's ascent, we had a fine view of one of the principal mountains of the Morea, now called Tricûlä; the Bay of Crissa looking like a lake, bounded by the opposite mountains of Peloponnesus. In fact, as we had formerly, from the Theatre at Sicyon, seen the very heights we were now climbing, so we were now looking back towards all that region of Achaia, and towards its more distant summits. After having surmounted the first precipices, we found a large crater, with a village in it, called Kallidia, or

Callithea, the summer residence of the Arracovians; who cultivate the plain at the bottom of this crater, and, during the hottest part of the year, come hither to collect its harvest. Thence turning from the former line of our ascent, we proceeded in an opposite direction; and after two hours' progress, looked down, from a great height, upon Arracovia. At twelve, having estimated the thermometer, we found that the mercury had fallen to 44° of Fahrenheit. Presently we came to another plain, with a well in it, full of clear water quite up to the brim. Here we halted, and regaled ourselves with bread and wine. It now began to be cold; the road being, as before, steep, but admitting the horses to follow us the whole way. At this place vegetation began to disappear. Expressing a wish to see a bulbous plant, extolled by the natives for its restorative virtues (which they eat, root and all, in vinegar), one of the guides was forced to descend in search of it. Another plant, because it contains a fluid of a milky colour, they give to women whose breasts fail to yield milk'. Thence climbing the mountain on its north-eastern side, we found it bleak, and destitute of herbage; and higher up we passed through snow, lying in patches. At length we reached a small plain, which is situated upon the top of the mountain, and also in the bottom of a crater, containing a pretty large pool of water, frozen over. In this respect the summit of this mountain mountain resembles that of the Kader-Idris in Wales. The sides of the crater, rising in ridges around this plain, are the most elevated points of PARNASSUS. We climbed the highest of them, which was upon our left hand; but with great difficulty, as the sides were a glacier, covered with hard and slippery ice; and our fingers, in spite of our exertions, were benumbed. At last, however, we reached the upmost peak, and, having gained a footing upon its top, stood in pure æther; for although there were clouds below, we had not one above us. It was now two o'clock P. M. If the wind had blown from the north, we could not have remained an instant in this icy region, being little prepared to encounter such a sudden change of temperature. Even with a soft breeze from the west, we had no sooner exposed our thermometer, than the mercury fell two degrees below the freezing point, and we had not seen it so low since we left the north of Russia.

Having been for years in the practice of climbing mountains, the author must still confess that he never beheld any sight of the kind like that which he saw from the SUMMIT OF PARNASSUS. He possessed no other means at the time of ascertaining its elevation, than by attending to the objects visible in the horizon; and he determined their relative position by the compass. It is impossible therefore to state what the height of Parnassus may be; but he believes it to be one of the highest in Europe. The Gulph of Corinth had long looked like an ordinary lake; and it was now reduced to a pond. Towards the north, beyond all the plains plains of Thessaly, appeared Olympus, with its many tops, clad in shining snow, and expanding its vast breadth distinctly to the view. The other mountains of Greece, like the surface of the ocean in a troubled calm, rose in vast heaps, according to their different altitudes; but the eye ranged over every one of them. Helicon was one of these; and it is certainly inferior in height to Parnassus. A mountain before mentioned, called Tricála, in the Morea, made a great figure in that mountainous territory: it was covered with snow, even the lower ridges of it not being destitute. Our guides said that this mountain was near to Patras. We looked down upon Achaia, Argolis, Elis, and Arcadia, as upon a model. Almost every part of the horizon was clear, except towards the east and north-east, and the north-west; our view being obstructed towards the Ægean and Mount Athos, as well as towards Epirus, by being above the clouds; which concealed every object towards those points of the compass; although the day was remarkably fine for our purpose in other respects. The frost was however so piercing, that we were in haste to conclude our observations.

To our great astonishment, as we were preparing to descend from this place, we saw the peasants who had the care of our horses arrive with the poor animals, quite up to the pool of frozen water upon the summit. We do not remember an instance where this is practicable upon any other mountain equally lofty. Horses have been conducted near to the summit of some mountains; as St. Gothard, and St. Bernard, in the Alps; but not quite to the top, especially where there is a glacier. Upon inferior mountains, indeed, as upon Skiddaw in Cumberland, persons have rode, and with ease, to the highest point. We had terrible work, afterwards, in conducting them down the icy declivities; being under the cruel necessity of turning them adrift in certain parts of the descent, and then leaving them to slide, either upon their sides, or upon their backs, until they were intercepted by rocks, or by huge masses of rough stones, lying loose at the bottom of each glacier.

The summit, and all the higher part of Parnassus, is of limestone, containing veins of marble, and great quantity of a blue lumachella, wherein are imbedded very large entrochi. The surprising appearance of such shells at this enormous elevation is very remarkable. We found them upon the highest peak, and over all the mountain. Similar phenomena have since been noticed upon the summit of *Mount Libanus*¹. But all the limestone of Parnassus is not thus characterized. We observed also, near the top of it, a hard

(1) By the most enterprising traveller that ever undertook to explore unknown regions,—BURCKHARDT; now traversing the remotest districts of Nubia.

a hard grey homogeneous carbonate of lime, with all the appearance of a primary formation. In places where the melting snow had disclosed the naked surface of the rock, we noticed the most remarkable effect of weathering that, as far as our knowledge extends, has ever been observed. A spontaneous decomposition of the stone had taken place, in consequence of the attacks of air and moisture during a series of ages; and this had occasioned rifts and fissures to a considerable depth. Among these, we found a specimen of the homogeneous carbonate just mentioned; which had separated from its parent mass by spontaneous decomposition; and thus, being exposed to accidental fracture, exhibited the primary form of regularly crystallized carbonate of lime; being a rhomboïd, whose obtuse angle precisely equals that of Iceland spar. An incipient transition may also be noticed, in the same specimen, towards a secondary form, in the neat truncation of one of the solid angles of the rhomb¹. This first suggested to the author an idea, since confirmed by repeated observation, that, in all homogeneous minerals, such has been the tendency towards crystallization, that the inclination of surfaces disclosed by fracture will frequently point out the degree of inclination of the lateral planes belonging to the primary crystal; and thereby determine the nature of the stone, and of its chemical constituents. Mineralogists, infinitely superior to him in the science, had before proved that this is the case with regard to the fragments of substances that have resulted from

from a regular process of *crystallization*²; but the same observation had not been extended to bodies considered as amorphous. Nothing is more common, however, than the primary angle of crystallized silica, among the fragments of common quartz, when found in the form of sand or gravel; of the primary angle of carbonate of lime, in the fracture of a shell; or, upon a much grander scale, in the fissures of beds of chalk, as in the cliffs upon the south coast of Britain; also of the primary angle of corundum in the fracture of emery; together with many other examples that might be adduced, all of which would be rather out of place here. The author, indeed, apologizes for the little he has been tempted to introduce upon the subject, owing to his predilection for a favourite branch of Natural History; and believing, as he does, that if more attention were given to the circumstance, it would not only be serviceable to the science in general, but to the purposes of commerce, as connected with the sale of precious minerals, and with mining speculations.

We have described all the higher region of Parnassus to be "bleak, and destitute of herbage;" but it is necessary to state, that this expression must be received with some limitation. A few rare plants may be noticed here and there, even to its very peak. And where this is the case, those Alpine herbs are often characterized by woolly leaves;

as if Nature had provided their foliage with an investment suited to the rigours of their situation. We found the Alpine Daphne, sprouting through the snow and ice, quite up to the summit: also a beautiful species of Cineraria; and a new species of Cherleria, whose short half-shrubby stems, divided outwards into innumerable branchlets, terminated in little stars of leaves; these were so closely matted together as to resemble little cushions lying upon the ground. We also collected, upon this mountain, specimens of a Pine, belonging to the same section of the genus Pinus with the Balm of Gilcad and *Silver Fir*¹; but most resembling the latter species; and differing only in having the leaves pointed, without any notch at the end, and narrower than we have ever seen in that species. We were however unfortunate in not finding either the cones or the blossoms; and must therefore reluctantly leave the pine-groves of Parnassus still enveloped in obscurity. The other plants found here are mentioned in a note².

We now began to descend the north-west side of the mountain, having ascended by the side facing the south-east. Soon after leaving the summit, our guides pointed to one of the lower ridges of Parnassus, which commanded our passage down, and to which they gave the name of Lugari, or Lycari; perhaps the LYCOREA of Pausanias. The peasants in the plains of BÆOTIA call the whole mountain by the name of Lakûrâ; but those who reside upon PARNASSUS still retain among them its antient name; calling the heights, by a general appellation, Parnassû, and one of the ridges, in particular, Lugari. In our way down, our course afterwards bore towards the east. Rugged and steep as was the descent, our only difficulty related to the horses; being alarmed for their safety when the persons appointed to conduct them turned them adrift, as they often did, leaving them to roll, or to slide upon their backs, down the most fearful declivities. At seven o'clock P. M. in a woody region of the mountain, we arrived at a monastery,

from which, however, it appears to be very distinct: but as the blossoms were in a decaying state when we gathered them, we leave the species for future illustration.

monastery, called that of the Virgin of Jerusalem; beautifully embowered in the midst of pine-groves, overlooking the mountains of the Locri and the Dryopes, and the extensive plains which are watered by the Cephissus. It stands about three fourths of the journey down; but we spent nearly as much time in descending to the spot from the summit as in going up from Arracovia. We left that village at half after nine in the forenoon, and reached the top of Parnassus at two P.M. At three P.M. we began to descend, and did not arrive at the monastery before seven; so that we had now employed ten hours in the whole undertaking. We were shewn, by some of the monks, into a large empty room, without an article of furniture, but containing a spacious hearth and a chimney, where we kindled a fire; and heaping a large quantity of wood, we passed the night very comfortably, although stretched upon the bare floor. This monastery contains fifty priests, who expressed more astonishment at our coming, and seemed more curious and inquisitive, than any we had before met in Greece: but their ignorance might be compared to that of the other wild tenants of their lofty wilderness; and their simplicity was such, that it disposed even our guides to laugh immoderately at every remark they made. They are called Caloyers; a name probably known in Greece long before the introduction of Christianity; being simply derived either from καλὸς ἰερεὺς, the "good priest," or from καλὸγῆροι, signifying "good old fathers." Their order is that of St. Basil, for there is no other order among the Greeks; and they profess chastity and obedience. Their way of living is very austere, austere, for they wholly abstain from flesh. Most of their time is taken up in barbarous devotional ceremonies; either in a recitation, against time, of the Psalter, or in bowing and kissing the ground; nor is it possible to conceive that a Cree Indian, capering before his idol in the wilds of North America, exhibits a more abject debasement of human intellect, than a Caloyer in the exercise of his μετάνοιαι, or bowings; three hundred of which he is obliged to perform every twenty-four hours¹. The one half of these bowings is performed in the first two hours of the night; and the other half at midnight, before they arise to matins, which are to begin four hours before day, and to end with the dawning of the morning. In summer time, the day breaks upon them, and the sun rises, before their devotions are ended; so that they have scarcely the time and the liberty of convenient and natural repose². These devotions are evidently Heathen ceremonies; and the services are also almost Heathen. A traveller might have found the same mummerly practised two thousand years ago. Judging indeed from these vigils, wherein all their devotion appears to consist, the religion of Christ seems to be as foreign to those who call themselves its priests, as if it had never existed; for, with the exception of now and then a hymn, sung in honour of the Virgin, or upon the festival of some Saint, nothing connected with the history of Christianity, or its worship, seems to have been introduced.

Being curious to know whether such a thing as a Bible, or even a copy of any one of the Gospels, in their own language, existed among them, we asked permission to examine the books of their church; but they had none; nor were any of them able to read: neither had they any library or manuscripts belonging to the monastery. But when we spoke of the χειρόγραφα found in the monastery at Patmos, they seemed perfectly to understand us, and said that there were many such in the Monastery of St. Luke. This indeed is confirmed by what Wheler has said of that monastery, who mentions its manuscripts, and himself purchased an Evangelistary during his visit to the place¹. It was written, he says, in capital letters. He saw also a fair copy of the Works of St. Chrysostom, a manuscript of the twelfth century; and others written upon vellum.

Velitza.

The next day, December 17, proved rainy. We left the Monastery of the Virgin, and set out in a N. W. direction for Velitza; keeping to the left, along the side of the mountain, and descending during the space of half an hour. We had heard at Lebadéa of great ruins at Velitza; and if our time had permitted, it had been our intention, on the preceding day, to descend thither from the summit of Parnassus; instead of proceeding by the way of the monastery where we passed the night. In this manner we should have followed the footsteps of Pausanias: and it was the account given by him of the journey over Parnassus, from Delphi, which excited a suspicion in our minds that the ruins at Velitza

(1) Journey into Greece, p. 323. Lond. 1682.

Velitza could be no other than those of TITHOREA, a city whose situation had not been ascertained at the time of our journey; and in this conjecture we were right. The archon of Lebadéa called them the ruins of Thebes; owing to a confused tradition of the destruction of a city of PHOCIS of this name still extant among the natives. There is a Palæo-castro at about an hour's distance from Velitza, which is called Thiva, or Thebes. It is situated where the Cachales falls into the Cephissus. The former river they still call Cachâ Rami, and Cachâle; saying that the name signifies Evil Torrent; "an appellation," they affirm, "bestowed upon it because it destroyed (Thiva) Thebes." Of the city thus called Thebes, whatever its real name may have been, no other vestige remains than a few stones, or traces of walls, in the soil near the bed of the CEPHISSUS. Not so of TITHOREA, whose discovery gave us the highest satisfaction, and whose remains are very considerable. They are situated upon the N. E. side of Parnassus, close to the foot of the mountain. In our journey thither from the monastery, at the distance of about two miles and a half from the latter, we passed a ruined village, called Neocorio. Somewhat farther on, we saw, upon our left, a tumulus constructed of stones. As the rain continued, our road became very bad. About an hour and a half after leaving the monastery, we arrived at another village, with a fountain built of large stones, called St. Mary's. Continuing along the base of Parnassus, we came to two very large pits: upon the edge of each was a tumulus of earth; and beyond them we observed the foundation of a square structure, built built of very considerable masses of stone. The place is now called "the Giant's Leap." It is distant about one hour from Velitza. Presently we came to another tumulus, whereon a Turkish sepulchre had been constructed; and afterwards we attempted to cross the bed of the torrent Cachales; but were obliged to make a circuitous route, owing to the great height of its banks, which resembled precipices. After passing it, we saw some sepulchres hewn in the rock, close to our road; being the tombs of its antient inhabitants, here and there disclosed, near to their city. Then we arrived at the walls of TITHOREA, extending in a surprising manner up the prodigious precipice of Parnassus, which rises behind the village of Velitza. Their remains are visible to a considerable height, upon the rocks, and even one of the mural turrets. In this precipice, above the ruins of the city, there is a cavern, concerning which we were told some marvellous stories by the peasants; but as the weather was unfavourable, and the approach difficult, we did not ascend to examine it. The water of the Cachales was at this time rushing in a furious torrent down the steep of Parnassus: it appeared of a milky colour, owing to the white calcareous matter with which it was impregnated.

Delphi, and TITHOREA, on different sides of the mountain, were the halting-places of those passing over Parnassus', at the distance of eighty stadia from each other²; being situated as the towns of Aoste in Piedmont, and Martinach

Martinach in the Vallais, are with regard to Mount St. Bernard in the Alps. The distance was somewhat greater to those who travelled by the carriage road¹. The guides who accompanied us from Arracovia, on the Delphic side, to the summit of Parnassus, did propose to descend during the same day to Velitza; but from the length of time we spent in our passage, we had only been able to reach the Monastery of the Virgin of Jerusalem. The whole district on Parnassus towards the south was Delphic; and Pausanias relates, that all the country on the northern side was called TITHOREA. "As to the name of the city," says he², "I know that Herodotus, in that part of his history in which he gives an account of the irruption of the Persians into Greece, differs from what is asserted in the oracles of Bacis: for Bacis calls this people Tithorenses; but Herodotus says, that when the barbarians invaded this country, the inhabitants fled to the summit of Parnassus: and he calls the city, ΝΕΟΝ; and the summit of Parnassus, ΤΙΘΟΡΕΑ³. It appears, therefore, that all the country was at first called TITHOREA; but that in process of time, when the inhabitants collected themselves into one city, that which was once called

The alteration of κιμίνη into κιμίνην, which suggested itself to Dr. Parr, is confirmed by Stephens, Valla, and Falckenaer; and the emendation of ἐπ' αὐτῆς, for ἐπ' ἰωῦτῆς, proposed by Wesseling, renders the whole sentence clear and satisfactory. called ΝΕΟΝ came to be denominated TITHOREA." The olives of this city were always, as they now are, few in number, but excellent in quality; and they were so highly celebrated, that they were conveyed as presents to the Roman Emperors¹. They still maintain their antient reputation, being now sent as an acceptable offering to the Pashas and other grandees of Turkey. The village of Velitza contains about eighty houses. The chief produce of the land is wine, cotton, and corn. The wine is excellent. This village belongs to Logothesi, archon of Lebadéa: his brother resides here, to collect his rents, who paid us a visit upon our arrival. The people of Velitza expressed great joy at seeing us; being simple and superstitious enough to believe that the fall of rain was owing to the coming of strangers. They had not seen rain before, they said, for an entire twelve-month. During the melting of the snow upon Parnassus, there is, however, such a supply of water, that the Cachales is hardly fordable on horseback, although its bed is very wide. Here we heard again the absurd story of the destruction of Thiva (Thebes) by means of this torrent; meaning by Thiva the Palæo-Castro, at a short distance in the plain;—a story altogether destitute of probability. But a people who could believe that a visit paid to their village by a couple of travellers caused the rain to fall upon their land, are capable of giving faith to any thing. They are at present in a most wretched condition, owing to the extortions of Ali Pasha,

(1) Pausanias, lib. x. c. 32. p. 881. ed. Kühnii.

Pasha, or of those who have plundered in his name. In the short space of six months, they had paid to his tax-gatherers, as they told us, eighty purses; being equivalent to forty thousand piastres. Poverty is very apparent in their dwellings; but the cottages of Phocis are generally as much inferior to those of Bœotia, as the latter are to those of Attica. Nor can it be otherwise, where the wretched inhabitants are so oppressed by their lords. The whole of the earnings of the peasant is here taken from him; he is scarcely allowed any means of subsistence. Add to this the frequent calamities of sickness and fire; and "plague, pestilence and famine" will be found to have done their work. This village had been twice burned within one year, by banditti, who come generally from Epirus, or from the Straits of Thermopylæ, or from Joannina, or from Zeitún, or from the neighbourhood of Joannina and Zeitún. As one source of consolation, in the midst of so much misery, the inhabitants told us "they had no Turks resident among them." Such is the forlorn condition of the present inhabitants of TITHOREA! It was widely different in former times; although it began to decline soon after the Christian æra. Pausanias relates, that the Tithoreans began to experience an adverse fortune one generation before his time². The vestiges of the Theatre were however then visible, and the Peribolus of the *antient Forum*³. We did not find the Theatre; which must be attributed entirely to our want

(2) Pausanias, ibid. p. 879.

of proper observation; because this, of all other things, is the most likely to remain. But we did find, what we should least have expected to see remaining, namely, the Forum mentioned by Pausanias. It is a square structure, built in the Cyclopéan style, with large masses of stone; but laid together with great evenness and regularity, although without any cement; the work being not so antient as the architecture of Argos, of Tiryns, or of Mycenæ. The walls of the city were executed in the same manner; and they were fortified with mural turrets, as at Plataea. The other memorabilia of TITHOREA, in the time of *Pausanias*¹, were, a Grove, consecrated to Minerva, containing her Temple (ναός) and statue; and a monument (μνημα) to the memory of Antiope and Phocus. At the distance of eighty stadia from TITHOREA was the *Temple of Esculapius*²; and at the distance of forty stadia from this temple there was a Peribolus, containing an Adytum, sacred to *Isis*³. The Tithoreans held a vernal and an autumnal solemnity in honour of this Goddess: and so purely Egyptian were the sacrifices then offered, that the custom of swathing the victims in folds of linen⁴, after the same manner wherein the Ibis, and the bodies and parts of bodies of other animals, were deposited in terra-cotta vessels now found in the subterraneous cavities beneath the Pyramids of Saccára, was considered as a necessary operation. From the account given by Pausanias of

of the ceremonies that were practised during the celebration of these Egyptian solemnities at TITHOREA, we may collect sufficient information for the illustration of that strange custom in Egypt; a subject hitherto involved in the utmost obscurity⁵. Here we find that certain birds called *Meleagrides*⁶, together with other animals, were sacrificed to *Isis*⁷, WRAPPED UP IN LINEN BANDAGES, AFTER THE EGYPTIAN MANNER OF SWATHING THE VICTIMS. After making this curious observation, it is further remarked, by the same author, that the Egyptians celebrate their festival of Isis when the Nile begins to rise⁸: and hence it may be inferred (as the Tithorean solemnity was an imitation of the Egyptian festival, even in such minute parts of the ceremony as the swathing of the victims, also described as being *buried*⁹ near to the *sacred Adytum of Isis*¹⁰) that the burial of the swathed animals in the earthen pots at Saccára took place in the same manner, and at the celebration of the same festival.

In the sanctuary belonging to the church of Velitza, we found an inscription which confirmed our conjecture with regard to the original name of the city whose ruins we had so fortunately discovered. It commemorates a tribute of honour rendered to NERVA, with an enumeration of his titles, Having before printed this inscription, together with a critical illustration of it, for which the author was indebted to the profound erudition and to the kindness of Dr. PARR, he must refer the reader to the publication in which it appeared¹; adding for the present only, that the date of it may be accurately ascertained. NERVA is here mentioned as being Consul for the fourth time: and he died at the end of January, A. D. 98. in a little less than a month after he had been declared, for the fourth time, Consul². We noticed some other inscriptions upon sepulchres; but they were merely names, as ΤΙΜΟΚΡΑΤΗΣ, ΕΥΘΥΜΑΧΟΣ, and ΣΩΙΚΡΑΤΕΙΑ. Very few medals could be collected at this place; and those few were either Roman or Ecclesiastical brass coins.

"It was probably," observed Dr. PARR, "written ΤΟΔ;" although in numerals the line be sometimes omitted. Sir WILLIAM GELL has since visited TITHOREA, and found the writing to correspond with Dr. PARR's learned conjecture. It is written ΤΟΔ.—Sir William Gell found also this inscription upon a sepulchre within the church:

Palæo-Castro.

AFTER leaving Velitza, we again crossed the Cachales, and descended into the plain towards Turco-Chorio, where Wheler separated from his companion *Spon*¹. In our way, we visited the Palæo-Castro, so often mentioned to us under the name of THEBES (Thiva). There is nothing to be seen upon the spot, save only the traces of some walls, almost indiscernible; every other vestige having been long ago erased, to make way for the plough. It is situated on the s. s. w. side of the CEPHISSUS, at an hour's distance from Turco-Chorio, which is here in view, standing a little elevated, towards the east, upon the other side of this river. The distance to Tithorea is nearly the same; and the tradition of the Tithoreans, that this was Thebes, and that it was destroyed by an inundation from their torrent Cachales, is silly enough; as the inundation, if it ever proved destructive of a city here, must have proceeded from the CEPHISSUS. This river, flowing to Screpû (Orchomenus), is here denominated, by the natives, Sindaliû. Possibly the ruins

(1) "Thursday the ninth of March (167 $\frac{1}{2}$), being thus separated from my companion, I left Turco-Chorio, bending my course eastwards, to go to Thalanda. The first thing that diverted me, in that solitary condition, was, that I soon found myself on a long straight way, fortified with a deep ditch on each side, leading to certain hills, which I saw a good way off before me. This I took as a good omen, portending success to my undertakings; it seeming to admonish me that I should not fail to be guarded by God's good providence, so long as I travelled in the straight way of virtue and true piety, to my heavenly country, which is on high."—Journey into Greece, p. 463. London, 1682.

ruins here may have been those of LEDON, a city abandoned in the time of *Pausanias*²; who says that the people to whom it belonged did not reside among the ruins of their city, but near to them. It has been usual to suppose that Turco-Chorio stands upon the site of ELATÉA³; to which there seems to be no objection, for it stood in the plain watered by the Cephissus, and it was near to AMPHICLÉA, where Dadi now stands. The gentle rise of the plain, from the river towards the walls of the city, is moreover distinctly mentioned by *Pausanias*⁴, and it is a characteristic feature of the topography of Turco-Chorio. Elatéa was, next to Delphi, the largest city in all Phocis. There was another town of this name in Thessaly, near to *Gonnus*⁵. It stood within the defile leading to the Valley of Tempe. Every degree of certainty with regard to the position of the two cities, ELATÉA and LEDON, must be afforded by others, better provided with facts for ascertaining their real situation; particularly with inscriptions found upon the spot. Here we observed the mercury in our thermometer, which at noon indicated 52° of Fahrenheit. As the spacious and open plain of Palæo-Castro offered a favourable point of observation for determining the situation of many principal objects, and especially of TITHOREA, whose relative position respecting those TITHOREA—south-west and by south; situated at the feet of precipices, and upon the south-south-east side of a chasm of Parnassus, whence rushes the torrent Cachales. Upon the other side of this chasm, there is a way up to the summit of the mountain; being in all probability the road from Delphi as mentioned by Pausanias. The highest peak of Parnassus towers into the clouds above the chasm close to which Tithorea is placed; and exactly in a line with it; so as to appear immediately over it.

From the Palco-Castro we turned towards the north-west and by north, passing the Cachales by a bridge, and leaving a small village called Vourna, of course written Bárna, on our right hand. Here Parnassus projects into the plain; so that we crossed over this foot of the mountain, and, descending, passed a river called Karapótami, or Madam's River, by a bridge. Soon afterwards we entered the town of Dadi. Here we found ruins almost as much worth notice as those of Tithorea. Upon a hill beyond the town, where there now stands a small church, antient walls may be observed, similar in their architecture to what we have already described at the latter place. They extend all around the hill; and one of the mural turrets is yet standing. We know not the antient city whereto these ruins belong. It must have been a place of great consideration; probably it was the AMPHICLÆA of *Herodotus*¹, called AMPHICLĒA by Pausanias. It was denominated OPHITEA by the Amphictyons, when a decree was passed for the destruction of the towns of *PHOCIS*². Its inhabitants referred this last appellation, signifying the City of the Serpent, to one of those popular tales that were common in Greece. They related, that a wealthy citizen, wishing to conceal his infant heir from the fury of his enemies, hid him within a *vase*³; where a wolf, attempting to devour the child, was repulsed by a serpent serpent which had coiled itself around the vessel, and guarded the infant. The father coming in search of his child, and perceiving the serpent, hastily threw his dart at it, and killed both the serpent and his son. Overwhelmed with affliction for his loss, which was aggravated upon hearing from some shepherds of the serpent's guardianship of the infant, he caused their two bodies to be consumed upon one pile, and consigned their ashes to the same sepulchre¹;—and from that time the city was called ΟΡΗΙΤΕΑ. It was near to the *Cephissus*², and to ΜΟΥΝΤΑ: corresponding therefore, as to its situation, with the position of Dadi, pronounced Thathi. There was at AMPHICLEA a Temple of Bacchus, wherein persons afflicted with sickness were received, to pass the night, as in the Temples of Æsculapius; and where the God communicated to the patients, in a dream, the remedies proper for their respective maladies³. Dadi is now a very considerable town for this part of Greece. It is built, like Delphi, in the form of a theatre; upon a series of terraces rising one above the other, facing the plain traversed by the Cephissus, towards the north, or north-east. It contains seven hundred houses, and some good shops; but the people are not so industrious, nor are their houses so cleanly, as those of ΑΤΤΙΚΑ. We did not remain with them more than an hour; but continued our journey towards Bodonitza, situated in the passage of ΜΟΥΝΤ $\text{C}\epsilon\text{T}\alpha$, above the descent to the Straits of Thermopylæ. Upon leaving the town, appear the ruins we have mentioned : they are situated upon an eminence towards the left.

CHAP. VIII.

We now rode along an antient military way, and by an aqueduct and an antient fountain, as we descended by a gradual declivity from Dadi into the Plain of Elatæa. Upon our right hand, near to the road, there was a Tumulus of earth. Entering the plain, we passed the Cephisus, by a bridge of five arches, handsomely, if not well constructed ; and then continued by the side of the river for a short distance, having it upon our right hand. The plain through which this river flows is rich land⁴. Soon afterwards we quitted its banks, and, crossing the plain, began to ascend a part of ΜΟΥΝΤ $\text{C}\epsilon\text{T}\alpha$ ⁵, which bounds the Plain of Elatæa upon its northern side, opposite to PARNASSUS. Here we saw the foundations of ruined walls upon our left ; and,

Homer extols it in this passage :

$\text{Οἱ}\ \tau'\ \acute{\alpha}\rho\alpha\ \pi\acute{\alpha}\rho\ \pi\omicron\tau\alpha\mu\acute{\omicron}\nu\ \text{Κηφισσόν}\ \delta\dot{\iota}\omega\nu\ \acute{\upsilon}\lambda\iota\omicron\nu.$

(5) The name of $\text{C}\epsilon\text{T}\alpha$ was more particularly applied to that part of it which rises immediately over the Straits of Thermopylæ ; but the descriptions given by Livy and by Strabo of the mountain are so perspicuous, that there can be no difficulty in identifying it with these heights above Bodonitza, towards the south-west ; for they are a continuation of the same mountainous barrier, separating PHOCIS from the territories of the LOCRIS. The passage of Strabo is too long for insertion here. $\text{It}\ \beta\epsilon\gamma\iota\upsilon\varsigma,\ \text{T}\acute{\omicron}\ \delta\prime\ \acute{\eta}\rho\omicron\varsigma\ \delta\iota\alpha\tau\acute{\iota}\nu\epsilon\iota\ \alpha\pi\acute{\omicron}\ \text{Θερμοπυλῶν}\ \kappa\alpha\acute{\iota}\ \tau\eta\varsigma\ \alpha\upsilon\alpha\tau\omicron\lambda\eta\varsigma,\ \kappa.\ \tau.\ \lambda.$ (Vid. *Strabon. and, as we continued to ascend, a ruin upon our right; denominated, by the people of the country, the Church of St. John. Higher up, we rode by a ruined village, and a mosque built of its materials: the place is called Mergenary. Thence, encountering a very bad road, and a narrow pass, as we ascended higher up the mountain, our situation being very elevated, we again observed the bearings of the principal objects; and noted them in the following order:

Bearings from the Summit of MOUNT CETA.

A very high Mountain, perhaps the top of MOUNT ATHOS, visible across the GULPH OF MALIA	n. n. e.

We were now upon the summit of all this part of CETA: and as the descent begins here to the Straits of Thermopylæ, this is perhaps that eminence of the mountain which bore the appellation of CALLIDROMOS, possibly from the astonishing beauty and grandeur of the prospect, visible along this part of the Via Militaris. Some have considered the heights impending immediately over the site of the hot springs at Thermopylæ as the Callidromos; not considering that Cato occupied the summit of that name with a part of the Roman army, and that it was in the most eastern part of the chain of Æta'. As soon as we began to descend, we were beyond measure surprised with the immensity and magnificence of the scene that opened all at once upon us. It comprehended the whole of the GULPH OF MALEA, looking like a lake in the vast depth below, commanded by the towers of Bodonitza, which appeared enthroned upon a conical and lofty hill among the craggy summits that were heaped close under our view, also overlooking all the plain between Mount Æta and the sea. Every part of this fine prospect has been ennobled by the genius of Sophocles, who adapted his tragedy of the Trachiniæ entirely to the scenery here. He has even enumerated the particular trees found upon this summit of ÆTA, and makes Hercules select them for his funeral pile;—the oak, the wild olive, and the *pine-tree*¹. He also alludes to a species of bird, which now inhabits these groves². We were therefore viewing the very objects which inspired the poet with with the design of his play¹. Upon the right, the *Cenæan Promontory*² of EUBŒEA projected into the middle of this fine picture³, where Hercules set up those altars upon which he sacrificed to *Cenæan Jupiter*⁴. Towards the left, extended, in many a wavy line and sinuous projection, the summits and shores of THESSALY. The sun was setting: and as deeper shadows began to curtain the many tints which enlivened the distant objects, we had the further gratification of seeing the full moon rise in all her splendor, to give new beauties to this indescribable scene. We remained for some time fixed to the spot, gazing with fresh wonder, at every instant. It possessed more than any effect of transparent painting can possibly represent, because the hues and the lights and the shadows varied at every moment. At last the sea appeared of a rich blue colour, somewhat darker than the sky, which was also blue. The higher mountains of Thessaly had the most vivid dyes: upon some of their tops the parting rays of the sun left streaks streaks of an intense colour, and of a dazzling brightness. Presently, all the surface of the gulph shone with the reflected beams of the moon, as if it had been a flood of liquid silver. As soon as this appearance ensued, the lateral features of the mountains began to fade, and to disappear, as their distance from the eye increased; their outline being still preserved, so that the more remote exhibited only masses like waves in the horizon, covered by one uniform pale tint, unvaried by any difference of hue or of shadow. Nearer to the view, the colours were of a deeper cast; investing the sides and declivities of the chasm through which our descent lay, and the towers of Bodonitza, with bolder and darker dyes: but even here, in the fore-ground, and over all the precipices, and broken rocks, which appeared on either side crowned with thick-set forests of oak and pine trees, some parts might be observed less severe; but these transitions were grey, and they harmonized beautifully with the shadows among which they appeared.
and

Hence we descended to Bodonitza; and not being permitted to enter the fortress, we passed the night in the village which is below it. As we entered, we observed part of an antient paved-way and an aqueduct; but there were no other antiquities about the spot; neither marbles nor inscriptions; nor could we procure a single medal. The poor inhabitants were unaccustomed to the sight of coffee; an article of a traveller's fare almost essential to his existence in Turkey, and common enough in all the great towns. Their wine was also bad: so that we fared but ill in this part of our journey. The next morning (Dec. 19.) we examined the outside of the citadel; but all the interference of our Tchohodar could not procure us admission to the interior. We saw plainly that it had ever been an important bulwark in guarding this passage. There are remains of antient walls below the hill upon which it stands, as of a town below the Acropolis; resembling the works already described at Tithorea and Dadi. Some have supposed that Bodonitza was Opus; but this cannot be true, because Opus, capital of a southern district of Locris bearing its name, could not therefore belong to the Locri Epicnemidii. Its situation in the midst of a defile of ΜΟΥΝΤ ΟΕΤΑ, leading to Thermopylae, and not upon the coast, although at no great distance from it, is so remarkable, that in the description given by antient writers of the cities of the Locri, something applicable to its characteristic position and appearance might be expected. We have already proved that it could not have been Opus; but there is great probability that it was Thronium; and the appearance of the citadel will add strength to this opinion. First it should be observed, that Thronium is mentioned by Ptolemy as having a mediterranean situation; and Strabo makes the same observation concerning it¹. But it was not far from the coast; because Polybius, after speaking of the conference held with Philip in Locris, upon the coast, near to the town of Nicæa, adds, that it was adjourned adjourned until the day following, when it was determined that it should be renewed upon the shore towards *Thronium*². It was also situated by a river called ΒΟΑΓΡΙΟΥΣ, and near to its embouchure. Strabo calls this river a *torrent*³. Homer gives the same description of its situation⁴. The river which flows from Bodonitza into the gulph, is now called Alimána. This could not have been the position of Nicea; for that city stood by the sea shore⁵. Scarphe, although its situation was elevated⁶, was only a village between Thronium and THERMOPYLÆ⁷. Heraclæa, more antiently Trachis, was in the *Trachinian Plain*⁸, upon the northern side of the defile. Other towns of the Locri might be mentioned, whose situation was even more remote; and towards the south, some of them belonging even to the fétid inhabitants⁹ of Locris, the Locri Ozolæ upon the Gulph of Corinth. The reason why so little notice has been taken of Bodonitza, is, that travellers visiting Turco-Chorio, and thence proceeding towards the north, have gone by Mola along the coast; although the ancient paved causeway leading to Thermopylæ from Elatæa follow this defile of Mount Œta. If we have recourse unto Latin authors for our information respecting Bodonitza, and among these to Livy, in the hope that a place so remarkable has not escaped the notice of an historian, who has written an elaborate description of all the country in the neighbourhood of Thermopylæ; we shall be far from arriving at any thing decisive. With regard to Mount Œta, we are told by him¹, that the range of mountains bearing this appellation was so extensive, that it ran through all Greece; dividing it into two parts, as the Apennines divide Italy: only that portion of it being properly called ŒTA, which is heaped up into ridges towards the east. The highest part of all was called Callidromos; accessible, however, to an army,—because Cato drave the Ætoliæns, having vanquished them, from this summit²: and there was a valley lying at its foot, only sixty paces wide, through which a road led to the GULPH OF MALEA; answering to that valley wherein Bodonitza is situated. There are four towns belonging to this neighbourhood with whose situation we are altogether ignorant; Cnemis, Alpenus, Tichius, and Rhoduntia: two of them (the first and last) being

(1) " Id jugum, sicut Apennini dorso Italia dividitur, ita mediam Græciam dirimit. being described by Strabo as by nature fortified³; and Livy, relating an attack made upon the two last towns, speaks of the difficulty to which Flaccus was exposed, in his attempts to scale their citadels⁴. Perhaps, after all that has been urged, it will be plain that Bodonitza was THRONIUM. At the same time, something should be said of Cnemis; for the mountain of this name, whence the Locri Epicnemidii received their peculiar appellation, was contiguous to Mount Ceta, and to the Gulph of Malca; and the characteristic description given of the town of Cnemis in two words (χαρσίον ἐγγυμνόν) by Strabo may be considered applicable to the situation of the present citadel; but the position of Bodonitza, respecting the ΧΕΙΜΑΡΡΟΣ flowing by it to the gulph, added to the correspondence of its appearance with the evident etymology of THRONIUM, and the difficulty of assigning to the latter any other situation, afford strong presumption for believing that it stood here. It must however be confessed, that this is not the spot where Thronium is placed, according to the observations of Melétius, in his *Geography*⁵. He would infer, from an inscription found at a place called Palæo-castro, that THRONIUM was situated elsewhere. The references we have already made to Ptolemy and Strabo decidedly prove that it was not upon the shore; but the latter latter mentions a port, distant twenty stadia from Cnemis, above which, at an equal distance of twenty stadia (κατὰ τὴν μεσόγειον), THRONIUM was situated; and there may have been the inscription to which Melétius alludes¹.

We now set out upon the most interesting part of all our travels,—an expedition to the STRAITS OF THERMOPYLÆ: and we began the day's journey with increased satisfaction, because we had already discovered, that, in quitting the usual track of travellers by the coast, we were actually following the antient military way, mentioned by Livy, as it was prepared and paved by the states of Greece for the passage of their armies; and, consequently, that we were now treading in the footsteps of those Spartans who with Leonidas guarded this defile at the invasion of Xerxes. The remains of the old paved road will long continue; because it is the common practice of passengers to avoid the pavement; preferring an easier path, by the side of it. Although the whole of this road is a descent from Bodonitza, we nevertheless continued to proceed at a considerable height above the level of the marshy plain of Mola and the sea. The hills around us were covered with trees; and we found some rare plants growing beneath them, both among the rocks, and over the rest of this narrow valley². We had journeyed

(2) The following Note contains the Plants we collected in the Defile of Thermopylæ:

Scarlet Oak—Quercus coccifera, Linn.

Rough Bindweed—Smilax aspera, Lin.

Common Rue—Ruta graveolens, Lin.

in this manner for about an hour, when, having passed several stadia of the antient pavement, we suddenly found ourselves

Ground Germander—Teucrium Chamædrys, Linn.

Common Olive—Olea Europæa, Linn.

Heath-leaved St. John's Wort, supposed to be the Képis of Dioscorides—Hypericum Coris, Linn.

Some of these plants were gathered at the Hot Springs in the narrowest part of the Pass, close to the Via Militaris.

Here we also found a very aromatic little shrub, branching almost from the ground, the younger branches quadrangular, and rough, with short hairs pointing downwards; the leaves linear, very blunt, a little channelled above, closely pierced on both sides with little concave dots, and ciliated with a few strong bristles at the edges, and disposed close to each other in four rows on the small branches, the large ones being always leafless: as the leaves grow older, many of their ciliæ fall off, and they appear nearly naked. The inflorescence is terminal in a kind of spike an inch and a half long, and composed of about five whorls of flowers, the uppermost of which are so close as to touch each other, but the undermost gradually a little more distant: the bracts are lanceolate and ciliated at the edges, and extend beyond the whorls, but fall off soon after the season of flowering: the calyx is bilabiate, and a little compressed, with two prominent ciliated edges, and sparkles with numerous little fiery-coloured dots; the mouth bilabiate, ciliated, and thickly set with long white hairs; the upper lip divided to the base, into two very narrow segments; the upper lip tridentate; the seeds four, naked in the bottom of the calyx, but one of them only appears to come to maturity, which is of an inversely ovate form. Unfortunately, all the flowers were fallen before we saw it. It will however appear, from the above description, that the plant (with the exception of the corolla, which is yet unknown) hath the essential character both of THYMUS and THYMBRA; and even when the blossom is discovered, unless it shall prove different from that of either of the above genera, must still remain ambiguous. As the compressed sharp edges of the calyx, however, are certainly a more decided character than the hairs at the mouth, which we have observed in plants of this order, otherwise very different both in character and habit; and as the habit of our plant approaches considerably to that of THYMBRA; that the knowledge of it may not entirely be lost, suffice it at present to describe it as a dubious species of that Genus, by the name of THYMBRA? AMBIGUA.—THYMBRA? floribus verticillatis spicatis, spicis elongatis; foliis quadrifariam imbricatis, linearibus, ciliatis, utrinque punctatis obtusissimis; bracteis lanceolatis flores excedentibus.

ourselves in a small plain surrounded by mountains, just before the descent to the narrowest part of the Straits falls off abruptly, by a steep and uninterrupted declivity. Here we observed, close to the antient way, upon our right, an antient TUMULUS, whereon the broken remains of a massive pedestal, as a foundation for some monument, were yet conspicuous. In its present state, it is sufficiently entire to prove that the form of this pedestal was square, and that it covered the top of a conical mound of earth; which is the shape common not only to antient sepulchres in general, but in particular to those of Greece; as appears in the examples already adduced of the Tomb of the Athenians in the Plain of Marathon, and the Tomb of the Thebans in the Plain of Chæronéa. It consisted of large square blocks of a red marble breccia, some of which remained as they were originally placed: others, dislocated and broken, were lying by, with a considerable fragment of one of the wrought corners of the pedestal. The surface of this red marble breccia was entirely encrusted with a brown lichen; and the stone itself, by weathering, was so far decomposed upon its surface, that it resembled common grey limestone; proving thereby the great length of time it has thus remained exposed to the action of the atmosphere¹. It is hardly necessary to allege any additional facts to prove to whom this tomb belonged: being the only one that occurs in in the whole of this defile, and corresponding precisely, as to its situation by the military way, with the accounts given of it by antient authors, there can be no doubt but that this was the place of burial alluded to by *Herodotus*², where those heroes were interred who fell in the action of Thermopylæ; and that the Tumulus itself is the POLYANDRIUM mentioned by Strabo, whereon were placed the five STELÆ; one of which contained that thrilling Epitaph³, yet speaking to the hearts of all who love their country.

The same appellation of POLYANDRIUM, as applied to a sepulchre, occurs in Pausanias, with reference to the Tomb of the Thebans near *Chæronéa*⁴: and the only difference between the two is, that the Chæronéan tumulus is larger than this:

this: they are both alike in shape. We have not thought it right, in relating our discovery of this tomb, to introduce any remarks that were made afterwards; but the reader, wishing to have its history yet further ascertained, will find additional testimony concerning it in the account which follows. The description of its exact situation, with regard to the scene of those events which have consecrated to a perpetual memory the narrow passage of Thermopylæ, will serve to strengthen the opinion here maintained with regard to the tomb itself; for it is placed upon the top of the very eminence, within the defile, to which all the Greeks retired, excepting only the Thebans: "AND THERE," says *Herodotus*¹, "IS THE TUMULUS, IN THE WAY TO THE DEFILE, WHERE THERE NOW STANDS THE STONE LION TO LEONIDAS." They retired to this spot, answering also to the situation of their camp; for this was within the wall that closed the passage; there being a little plain here, extending along the valley towards Bodonitza: and there is no other place "within the wall" where their camp could have been situate, as will presently appear. In the description of the position held by the Greeks at THERMOPYLÆ, Leonidas is represented as not being within sight of the Persian army²; which would have been the case if he had been anywhere further advanced towards the north. When the Spartans

Spartans composed the advanced guard, during the day upon which a person was sent by Xerxes to reconnoitre, they had descended from their camp, and were seen at the entry of the defile, *without the wall*³, a little removed from the south-east side of the small bridge where the Turkish dervène now is, upon the outside of the old wall :—for these Straits are still guarded as a frontier pass ; and they are as much *the Gates*⁴ of Greece as they were when Xerxes invaded the country ; neither is there any reason to doubt, that, with respect to so narrow a passage, any remarkable circumstance related formerly should be irreconcilable with its present appearance. Indeed, some of the most trivial facts, casually dropped by historians, guide us to particular parts of the defile where the events took place. For example, it is mentioned by Herodotus, that the Spartan soldiers, upon the occasion alluded to, were found “ combing their hair ”.⁵ Whoever has seen the inhabitants of the country thus occupied, must have observed that this operation of cleansing the hair is also accompanied by ablution, and that it takes place, of course, by the side of some fountain. The mere circumstance of being stationed near to a fountain, often suggests to the persons persons so situate the propriety of this duty. Observing therefore the little change that has taken place in Greece, in any of the customs among its inhabitants which relate to their way of life, it might be expected that a fountain still exists, denoting the spot where the Spartans were seen upon this occasion. Whether the probability be admitted or not, the sequel will shew that this is really the truth.

Hence the descent becomes rapid towards the narrowest part of the Straits; and the military way leading through thick woods covering the declivity, is in many places broken up by torrents, as it is described by Strabo. In about three quarters of an hour from the POLYANDRIUM, we arrived at the WALL mentioned by *Herodotus*¹. The remains of it are still very considerable; insomuch that it has been traced the whole way from the Gulph of Malea to the Gulph of Corinth, a distance of twenty-four leagues; extending along the mountainous chain of ÆTA from sea to sea, and forming a barrier towards the north of Greece, which excludes the whole of Ætolia and Thessaly. In this respect it resembles the wall of Antoninus, in the north of Britain. It may be supposed that we did not follow it beyond the immediate vicinity of the Straits of Thermopylæ, where it begins; but this fact, as to its great length, was communicated to us by our guides; and it was afterwards confirmed by the positive assurance of our Consul at Zeitûn. It is built with with large and rudely-shaped stones, which have been put together with cement; and in many places the work is now almost concealed by the woods and thickets that have grown over it.

Immediately after passing this wall, upon the outside of it, and upon the left hand, is seen the fountain before alluded to; precisely in the situation that must have been occupied by the Spartans, when reconnoitred by command of Xerxes. It is shaded by an enormous Plane-tree (Platanus Orientalis) of unknown antiquity, self-sown in its origin, and one of many that may have flourished upon the spot ever since the Lacedæmonian soldiers were seen at this fountain, combing their hair, and amusing themselves with gymnastic exercises². Indeed, if the stories related by antient authors of the great age of the Oriental Plane-tree, in certain instances, were to be admitted as true, the present example might only be considered as an immediate offspring of some venerable plant found here upon that occasion; for the battle of Thermopylæ was fought only four hundred and eighty-one years before the Christian æra³, and Pausanias tells of a plane-tree in Arcadia supposed to have been planted by Menelaus; so that the age of the tree, when he saw it, must have been thirteen hundred years. It is well known that the seeds of the Platanus Orientalis remain upon the tree, in little balls, until the spring; as they do not ripen early in the autumn. We found many of the seed-vessels in a mature state, hanging from the branches: and being desirous of bearing away a living memorial from a spot so celebrated, we gathered many of them'. Thence, leaving the fountain, we entered the extensive bog, or fen, through which a narrow paved causeway offers the only approach to all the southern parts of Greece. This causeway has, upon either side of it, a deep and impassable morass; and it is further bounded by the sea towards the east, and the precipices of Mount Ceta towards the west. Here is situate the Turkish dervène, or barrier, upon a small narrow stone bridge, which marks the most important point of the whole passage; because it is still occupied by sentinels as in antient times; and is therefore, even now, considered as the ΠΥΛΑΙ of the southern provinces. The Thermæ, or hot springs, whence this defile received the appellation of THERMOPYLÆ, are at a short distance from this bridge, a little farther on, towards

and Thermæ.

(1) The seeds of this tree were afterwards sown by the author in a garden belonging to the Fellows of Jesus College, Cambridge, where they sprang up; and there is one tree now standing in that garden, which has been thus raised. It is in a flourishing state; but its height at present does not exceed eleven feet, and its girth is only seven inches in circumference. The Oriental Plane-tree is not a plant of very quick growth; but in warm latitudes, especially if it be near to water, it attains a most astonishing size. Ælian relates the adoration that was paid by Xerxes to a tree of this sort in Phrygia. The marvellous Plane-tree of the Island of Cos has been described in a former Part of these Travels. Pliny mentions a Plane-tree in Lycia that had mouldered away into an immense cave, eighty feet in circumference. The Governor of the province, with eighteen others, dined commodiously upon benches of pumice placed around it. Caligula had a tree of the same kind, at his villa: the hollow of it held fifteen persons at dinner, with all their attendants.

towards the *north*²: the old paved causeway leads to those springs, immediately after passing the bridge. They issue principally from two mouths at the foot of the limestone precipices of ÆTA, upon the left of the causeway, which here passes close under the mountain, and on this part of it scarcely admits two horsemen abreast of each other; the morass upon the right, between the causeway and the sea, being so dangerous, that we were near being buried with our horses, by our imprudence in venturing a few paces into it from the paved road. These springs, formerly sacred to *Hercules*³, are still called Thermæ. They are half way between Bodonitza and Zeitún. We dismounted, to examine their temperature: and, as it was noon, we first estimated the temperature of the external air; it equalled 51° of Fahrenheit. The temperature of the water, within the mouth of the springs, amounted to 111°; being 31° less than the temperature of the hot springs at Lydia Hamam near Alexandria Troas; which are nearly at the same height from the level of the sea⁴. Yet the water appeared very hot when we placed our hands

(2) "In ipsis faucibus." Livius.

(3) All hot springs and warm baths were sacred to Hercules; but those of the Pass of Thermopylæ were especially consecrated to him; and all the surrounding country was rendered illustrious by his history. This appears particularly from the Trachinæ of Sophocles; references to which have been already made.

(4) See a former Part of these Travels, Section the First of Part II. Dr. Holland says, he "found the temperature to be pretty uniformly 103°, or 104°, of Fahrenheit, which is even less than our statement; but perhaps Dr. H. did not place his thermometer quite so far within the mouth of these springs; for this would cause a difference equal to seven or eight degrees of Fahrenheit. See Travels, &c. by Henry Holland, M.D. p. 382. Lond. 1815.

hands in it; and smoke ascended from it continually. The water is impregnated with carbonic acid, lime, salt, and sulphur. It is very transparent, but it deposits a calcareous incrustation upon the substances in its neighbourhood. The ground about the springs yields a hollow sound, like that within the crater of the Solfaterra near Naples. In some places, near to the springs, we observed cracks and fissures filled with stagnant water, through which a gaseous fluid was rising in large bubbles to the surface. The fetid smell of this gas powerfully bespeaks its nature; for it is sulphuretted hydrogen. Having before alluded to the accuracy with which Sophocles adapted the scenery of the Trachiniæ to real appearances around the Sinus Maliacus, it may be worthy of remark, that even this trivial circumstance, of the gaseous ebullition through crevices of the earth at Thermopylæ, did not escape his observation. He makes a curious use of it, in the scene between Dejanira and the Chorus; when he causes the former to relate, that some of the wool stained with the blood of the Centaur Nessus, falling upon the Trachinian Plain, in a place where the sun's rays were the most fierce, there boiled up from the earth 'frothy bubbles'. The audience who were present during its representation, and who were well acquainted with all that was worthy of observation in the Plain of Trachinia, must have regarded with a high a high degree of satisfaction the appropriation of its physical phenomena to an interesting story; because it was interweaving facts, whereof many of them had been witnesses, with the machinery of a fable, which, as a popular superstition, was of course listened to by them with all the attention due to the most solemn truths. And, at this distance of time, it gives a new interest to the most beautiful productions of the Grecian drama, to be informed, that the Poet, in his descriptions, did not merely delineate an ideal picture, but that he adapted the mythological tales of his country to the actual features of its geography, and to its existing characteristic phenomena. We have before proved that the antiquities of Mycenæ were made subservient to his plan of the Electra; and perhaps it will hereafter appear, as Greece becomes better known, that the observations we have now made, respecting the Trachinæ, may be extended to all the other productions of his Muse.

The nature of this narrow pass at Thermopylæ has been sufficiently explained: it is owing entirely to the marshy plain which lies at the foot of a precipitous part of Mount Œta, between the base of the mountain and the sea. This marsh never having been drained, is for the most part one entire bog; and there is no possibility of obtaining a passage by land along the shore, from south to north, or rather from south-east to north-west, except over the paved causeway here described. The most critical part of the Pass is at the hot springs, or at the bridge where the Turkish der-vêne is placed. At the former, the traveller has the mountain close to him on one side, and a deep bog on the other. A handful of brave troops might therefore intercept the passage of the mightiest army that Persia or any Eastern nation ever mustered; as we find they did, until a path was pointed out for the troops of Xerxes, which conducted his soldiers, by a circuitous route over the mountain, to the rear of the Grecian camp. This path was also pointed out to us¹: it is a little beyond the hot springs, towards the north; and it is still used by the inhabitants of the country, in their journeys to Salona, the antient Amphissa. After following this path to a certain distance, another road branches from it towards the south-east, according to the route pursued by the Persians upon that occasion.

The defile, or strait, continues for a certain distance beyond the hot springs; and then the road bears off, all at once, across the plain, towards Zeitûn. It is still paved in many places; and it thereby marks exactly the line of march observed by Leonidas and the Greeks, in their daring attack upon the Persian camp, in the night before their defeat, when they ventured out of the defile. But we found it impossible to ascertain precisely where Heraclæa stood, distinctly as it is mentioned by *Livy*², or to mark the course of the Asopus river.

(1) "The Persians, says Procopius, found only one path over the mountains: now there are many; and large enough to admit a cart or chariot;—ἀμειπῶν σχετῶν τι οὐδῶν. (De CEdip. lib. iv.)" Walpole's MS. Journal.

river. Several streams may irrigate this plain; which, at the time of our passing, were all combined into one flood, by the inundation of the Sperchiús towards its mouth. This last is the main river, and indeed the only one to be noticed: it comes from a plain which extends round Mount Æta towards the west. It was upon our left as we passed from the hot springs to go to Zeitún; and it joins the marshy plain of Thermopylæ towards the Sinus Maliacus. We looked back towards the whole of the passage with regret; marvelling, at the same time, that we should quit with reluctance a place, which, without the interest thrown over it by antient history, would be one of the most disagreeable upon earth. Unwholesome air, mephitic exhalations bursting through the rifted and rotten surface of a corrupted soil, as if all the land around were diseased; a filthy and fetid quagmire; "a heaven fat with fogs;" stagnant but reeking pools; hot and sulphureous springs; in short, such a scene of morbid nature, as suggested to the fertile imagination of antient Poets their ideas of a land poisoned by the "blood of Nessus," and that calls to mind their descriptions of Tartarus; can only become delightful from the most powerful circumstances of association that ever were produced by causes diametrically opposite;—an association combining, in the mere mention of the place, all that is great, and good, and honourable; all that has been embalmed as most dear in the minds of a grateful posterity. In the overwhelming recollection of the sacrifice that was here offered, every other consideration is forgotten; the Pass of Thermopylæ becomes consecrated; it is made a source source of the best feelings of the human heart; and it "shall be had in everlasting remembrance".

Hence we passed over the swampy Plain of Trachinia, in the midst of the worst air of all Greece, overgrown with tall reeds, and inhabited by buffaloes; animals, almost amphibious, delighting in stagnant pools and watery plains, and always seeming to thrive the best where the human race thrives the worst. The marshes of Terracina in Italy are full of them; and the lands of Lower Egypt, inundated by the Nile. We crossed the river Sperchius, by means of a stone bridge: it was at this time overflowing its banks, flooding all the land near to it; and rolling, like the Nile, in many a muddy vortex. Upon the stone bridge the Turks have established a dervène, as a barrier, upon this side of the defile; which may be considered as the Gate of Phthiotis and THESSALY. It is held by Albanians, who collect a tribute from passengers for the privilege of passing. Soon after crossing this bridge, the ground gradually rises, towards the north, from the flooded and marshy land. We saw a large tumulus in the plain; and immediately afterwards arrived at the town of Zeitún, distant three hours' journey from the hot springs of Thermopylæ.

Zeitún.

Zeitún may be described as a miniature model of ATHENS. The town had suffered grievously by fire three months before. It has been believed that Zeitún was the

the ancient LAMIA; and we were of this opinion: but Meletius, the archbishop of Joannina, entertained different sentiments. We found his work upon Geography in the Consul's house, and it was the first time we had seen it. The name of this place has been written Zeituni and Zituni, but its inhabitants write it Zeitun. One argument which may be urged against the opinion that Lamia was here situate, is this; that there are no antiquities upon the spot. We could find nothing as a trace of the former existence of any Grecian city. The town is governed by a Waiwode, a Disdar, and a Cadi; but all these together, with several Beys who reside here, are under the dominion of Ali Pasha, and they tremble at the sound of his name. There are from eight hundred to a thousand houses in Zeitun, and about a thousand shops. The inhabitants are Turks and Greeks. Their commerce is altogether ruined: it consisted in the exportation of silk, cotton, and corn. We could not avoid remarking a very great resemblance between the Albanian women of Zeitun, and those of India whom we had seen with our army in Egypt: they resemble that Indo-European tribe called Gipsies in England, whose characteristic physiognomy has a degree of permanence that no change of climate seems to affect.

On Sunday, December the twentieth, we left Zeitun, about half after eight A. M.; and began to ascend the mountains of THESSALY; leaving to our left the mountain *OTHRY*S, now called Kata V'Othry. The weather was delightful, but the mountains very generally covered with snow. As we left Zeitun, we saw, near to the town, a tomb constructed constructed in the old Cyclopæan manner: it was what is called a Cromlech in Wales, consisting of two uprights, with a large slab laid across: near to it there was a cistern, probably a Soros. There is a paved road, or antient military way, over this mountain. The rocks of the mountains have here an ochreous appearance. After riding to the top of a very steep and high mountainous ridge, north of the town, we halted to make observations by the magnetic needle.

This mountain stands in the same line of direction as the Plain of the Sperchius, and the course of that river; that is to say, n. w. and s. e. and at the end of the visible part of the plain, as if it terminated there.

The peasants who were our guides, told us that the Sperchius and many other streams flow from that mountain. It is called Veluchia, or Velûkia, by the natives; and they say it stands in Agrâfa. On its top there is a plain; and in winter, they say, a lake. It should also be observed, that OTHRYS is still called Kata V'Othry; and it is not situated as laid down in maps, to the north of the river Sperchius, but, as before stated, to the south-west.

Thence

Thence descending towards the north, at the distance of three hours and a half from Zeitán, we passed a Turkish dervène, and again paid tribute. Afterwards we crossed a very extensive plain of good and rich land, but entirely uncultivated, and covered over with brush-wood and with dwarf oaks. At the distance of an hour and a half from the dervène, we saw upon our left, in a cultivated spot, the remains of some antient buildings, and two tumuli; one on either side of the old military way. The prospect in other respects was bleak and desolate, like that of Flintshire in North Wales. This plain is called Dowclu. At its extremity, we passed a river by a bridge. We saw, towards our left, a large lake among some mountains: our guides called it Limne Dowclu. Here we observed that the faithful little dog, who had followed us in all our travels, was missing; and he was become so great a favourite with all our party, owing to his odd appearance and uncommon sagacity, that even the Tchohodar vowed he would not proceed without him;—a singular instance, in a Turk, of attachment to a dog. The consequence was, that one half of the party measured back their steps all the way to the dervène, while the rest waited at the bridge with the baggage. There they heard the cries of the little animal; who had posted himself upon the top of a very lofty hill, that he might survey the country, and, if possible, discover our route; and was uttering his distress most lamentably, in consequence of the approach of some one, who was also heard calling to him. As soon as he saw Mr. Cripps, he ran to him as if shot from a gun; and leaping upon his horse, remained seated behind his saddle saddle until he arrived once more at the bridge. By this time, evening was coming on; and we were overtaken by a Tartar Courier from Tripolizza in the Morea; who pretended that he had been only one day upon his journey, and that he expected to arrive at Constantinople in six days. This appeared to us to be impossible. Afterwards, our journey was continued through woods; and we often observed the remains of a paved road. The guides frustrated our plan of seeing THAUMACIA, now called Thaumaco, by going a shorter road to PHARSALIA, and leaving it upon our left; thereby shortening the distance at least three hours. THAUMACIA contains the remains of antient walls, and it ought to be visited. It is situate upon the top of a hill. We were surprised, soon afterwards, to find that the plain over which we had been travelling was very highly elevated; for after ascending a gentle slope, upon leaving the woods, there was suddenly exposed to our view one of the most marvellous prospects in all Greece. To the north-east we surveyed the immense Plain of Crocus; and, looking down, beheld summits of many mountains far below us. The antient paved-way, by which we descended, bore off in that direction. We asked the guides whither the other road conducted; and they said, to Valos; shewing that the antient name of ALOS is still preserved;—for throughout Thessaly they have a practice of prefixing a β before the original name, which is pronounced V; as β 'Othry, for *OTHRY*S; and β 'Alos, for *ALOS*¹. Our descent hence continued along the old road, which

which was much broken up, and in some parts entire; but whether entire or broken, we were compelled to ride upon it, as there was no other. Another immense prospect now presented itself; and at almost an equal depth below us, to that before mentioned. It was the PLAIN OF PHARSALIA, so renowned for the great battle between the armies of Julius Cæsar and Pompey, when twenty-four thousand soldiers of Pompey's army were made prisoners of war. It was fought on the twelfth of May, forty-eight years B. C. The pleasure of beholding this magnificent prospect was greatly diminished by our want of knowledge of other objects. The eye roamed over distant summits, as if it surveyed a world of mountains: but our guides were so ignorant, that they could not tell us one of their names; and we might in vain attempt to form conjectures of them by the wretched maps which exist of all this country. Soon afterwards it became dark; and the rest of our journey this day proved so fatiguing, that it was with much ado we could sit upon our horses to reach the end of it. A long, laborious, and difficult descent was to be got over: after many an anxious inquiry of our guides concerning the distance yet remaining to our place of rest,

The Argo, however, was launched at Aphetæ. ALOS was upon the river Amphrysus, in PHITHIOTIS, at the northern termination of Mount Othrys, distant sixty stadia from IRONE. See Stephanus de Urbib. &c. p. 66. Ed. Gronovii, Amst. 1678. Its situation is more fully pointed out by Strabo, as cited by Gronovius in Note (26) of the same edition. The geography of THESSALY remains now, as it ever was, in a state of great uncertainty.

about two hours after darkness began, the illuminated minarets of PHARSALUS¹, now called Pharsa, comforted us with the assurance that the khan was near.

The Reader would perhaps smile if he knew what sort of comfort the khan itself afforded, when we arrived. All these places are alike in Turkey. There is not a dog-kennel in England where a traveller might not lodge more commodiously than in one of these khans; and the caravanseerais are yet worse than the khans. A dirty square room, the floor covered with dust, and full of holes for rats, without even a vestige of furniture, is all he finds as the place of his repose. If unprovided, there is not the smallest chance of his getting any thing to eat, or even straw to lie upon. In such an apartment we were permitted to pass the night;—unable even to kindle a fire; for they brought us green wood, and we were almost suffocated with smoke;—not to mention the quantity of vermin with which such places always abound, and the chance of plague infection from their filthy walls. This subject is merely touched upon, that persons who have not visited Turkey may know what they ought to expect, before they undertake a journey thither. Yet, even to all this, weariness, and watchfulness, and shivering cold, and other privations, will at last fully reconcile travellers, and make them long for such a housing. In these places there is no separation of company;—masters and servants, cattle-drivers and guides, and every casual passenger of the road, lie down together.

We

We had been scarcely long enough, in our sorry chamber at Pharsalus, to sweep away some of the dirt upon its floor, when other Tartar Couriers arrived; travelling as the former one (who passed us upon the road with dispatches), night and day. It was curious to see how these men take what they call their Cāf (refreshments), at one of these khans. The horse is left standing in the court; while for the space of about ten minutes, or during the interval of changing horses, the Tartar squats (for it cannot be called sitting) with his back against the wall, supporting himself upon the soles of his feet, and inhaling rapidly the fumes of his pipe upon his lungs; sending it back in curling volumes through his nostrils. Then, if he can procure about as much muddy coffee as would fill the bowl of a table-spoon, he utters his Alhandilla! (God be praised!) and continues his expedition with renovated energy. The surprising journeys undertaken by these men on horseback, and the rapidity with which they are performed, are such as, if related, would exceed belief. In fact, there are no couriers in the world who are capable of sustaining similar fatigue for an equal length of time; not even the Russian Feldlégers in their Pavoskies. The Tartars are sent as couriers to all parts of the empire: and it is upon this account that the dress they wear is considered the safest disguise any European can put on, who is compelled to travel alone through the Turkish provinces.

AFTER leaving the old boundaries of Græcia Propria, the traveller, in the wider fields of THESSALY, finds an altered region, and an altered people. The difference is perceivable from the instant that he has passed the heights behind Zeitún. THESSALY was the Yorkshire of Antient Greece, as to its country and its inhabitants. A vulgar adage in England, maintaining that “if a halter be cast upon the grave of a Yorkshireman, he will rise and steal a horse;” and the saying, “Do not put Yorkshire upon us,” as deprecating fraud; express the aphorisms antiently in use respecting the Thessalians, who were notorious for their knavish disposition; inasmuch that base money was called Thessalian coin, and a cheating action Thessalian treachery. Do not these facts tend to validate former observations concerning the effect produced by different regions upon the minds of the natives?—for Thessaly has not forfeited its archaic character; and with regard to the shrewd peasantry of Yorkshire, however we may be disposed to make the exception, and to dispute the application of an illiberal pleasantry, we shall not be able to banish it from the language of common conversation. The boundaries however of Thessaly have varied as often as the appellation it has received¹. Its most antient denomination denomination was Pelasgia; wherefore Homer always calls it Pelasgicon Argos. He does not once mention it under the name of Thessaly. It has also borne the various names of Pyrrhæa, Æmonia, Pandora, Nesonis, and lastly Thessaly. It is divided by *Strabo*¹ into the four districts of Phthiotis, Estiæotis, Thessaliotis, and Pelasgiotis; all of which *Ptolemy*² ascribes to Macedonia.

Pharsalus.

We found but few antiquities remaining of the ancient PHARSALUS. Like other towns and villages of THESSALY, Pharsa is so entirely under Turkish domination, and has been so long in the hands of Moslems, that if they have not destroyed the reliques of its former state, they have always hid them from a traveller's view. The name alone remains to shew what it once was. South-west of the town, indeed, there is a hill surrounded with antient walls, formed of large masses of a coarse kind of marble. There is also the lower part of a Gate. And upon a lofty rock above the town, towards the south, are other ruins of greater magnitude; shewing a considerable portion of the walls of the Acropolis, and remains of its Propylæa. This place, as it is usual, is called Palæo-castro. Livy mentions a PALÆPHARSALUS³; and Strabo notices the new and the *old city*⁴. The modern town is situate at the foot of a mountain commanding a very extensive view towards the north of the Plain of Pharsalia, extending extending east and west. In the court of the khan, and in other parts of the town, we saw some steps made of enormous blocks of stone. Pharsa contains two thousand houses; but, for its inhabitants, a far greater proportion of Turks than of Greeks. There are four mosques; and the cistern, within the courts and inclosures of these sanctuaries, and of the houses, do doubtless contain inscriptions; but we could not procure a sight of any one of them. This place is an Episcopal See, under the Archbishopric of *LARISSA*⁵. Strabo mentions the old and the *new town*⁶. It is also often noticed by Livy, and by other writers⁷.

Population

Monday, December 21, we left Pharsalus, in a thick fog. In a quarter of an hour we saw a Tumulus, or Polyandrium, the usual indication of a field of battle; as in the instances already so often adduced. We came to a bridge of fourteen arches; five whereof were large, and the rest of incon siderable and disproportioned size. The situation of this bridge, with respect to Pharsa, very accurately agrees with a remark made by *Appian*⁸ as to the interval between Pharsalus and the river ENIPEUS. We cannot possibly therefore have a better beacon for the situation of the contest between Cæsar and Pompey; as indeed the tomb shews, marking the heap raised over the dead upon that memorable occasion. Mr. Walpole is also of this opinion; although he does not notice the tomb in his Journal; neither did we observe the cotton plantation which he mentions: but this is of little moment. He mentions the course of the river, and the situation of the field of battle, in his Journal'.

the Plain.

From Pharsa to Larissa, the road is excellent. It is almost entirely over plains covered with fine turf, without a single stone, but sometimes interspersed with a fine gravel. The soil is very rich. The Plain of Pharsalia, which we crossed first, riding during an entire hour at a jog-trot, resembled the scenery in Cambridgeshire; so much so, that we could not avoid noticing the circumstance; being similarly flat and dreary, without inclosures, exhibiting pasture mixed with ploughed land, and dykes near the road, beyond which were shepherds with their flocks: only, instead of the Royston crows, we had nobler flights of eagles and vultures. A dense fog, concealing the distant mountains, rendered the similitude more striking. After we quitted this plain, we crossed over some hills of trifling elevation; and then descended into the immense campaign of LARISSA, once the greater plain of the Pelasgi. The soil here is the finest that can be imagined; the land, although in many parts uncultivated, uncultivated, being smooth and flat, but, even in places where the plough had passed, very negligently kept, and full of weeds. In this plain are some of the most remarkable tumuli known, both as to their size and to the regularity of their form. Lucan seems to have had the numerous sepulchres of Thessaly in contemplation, in one of his splendid digressions².

(1) "The traveller cannot miss finding the field of battle, now overgrown with cotton: it is, says Appian, μεταξύ Φαρσάλου τε πόλεως καὶ Ἐνιπέως ποταμοῦ. The Enipeus flows into the Apidanus, which is received by the Penæus."

Numerous Sepulchres.

At some distance from our road, we saw several parties of Turkish sportsmen, coursing, on horseback, with negro attendants, and with very fine greyhounds. The plough in this country is drawn either by a pair of oxen or by two buffaloes. As we drew nigh to LARISSA, the fog dispersed; and the atmosphere becoming clear, we saw a chain of mountains, like a great wall, stretching east and west, and bounding all the plain towards the north. At the base of this vast barrier is situated the town of LARISSA, extending in a long line, and making a magnificent appearance. We counted not less than twenty-four mosques and minarets. Here we saw, once more in use, those antique cars, drawn by oxen or by buffaloes, with solid wheels, which we had observed in the Plain of Troy, and whereof a representation was given in a former Part of these Travels'. We noticed, also, other wheeled carriages, for the first time since we left Constantinople for our travels in the Levant. The very sight of them proved our approximation to northern regions, and that we should now more frequently encounter the genuine Thracian and Sarmatic habits.

Larissa.

As we entered Larissa, and rode along the streets, we saw very few antiquities: they consisted of the broken shafts of Corinthian pillars, and cornices. The cemetery near the town, by the prodigious quantity of marble it contains, hewn into the most barbarous imitations of Turkish head-dresses, such as calpacks and turbans, offers a convincing testimony of the havoc made by the Moslems of Larissa, among works of Grecian art, during the long period that this city has been in their possession. We found here some ancient sepulchral marbles, used for Turkish tomb-stones, with Greek inscriptions, mentioning merely the names and countries of the deceased: but no other inscription, nor a single entire column, could be seen. There was a conak at this place; but we found it to be absolutely uninhabitable, and the people belonging to it were as insolent and fierce as savages. We therefore resolved to wait upon the Bey, taking care to be accompanied by our Tchohodar. After making our way through a throng of slaves and attendants, we found him in a sumptuous apartment, fitted up after the Eastern

Evil disposition of its inhabitants.

Eastern manner; sitting, not upon the couch, but upon the floor of the diván, playing at backgammon with another elderly personage, who had the distinction of a green turban. He was surrounded by effeminate looking young men, who were sprawling upon the same floor, and either smoking or sleeping. Having made our complaint as to the state of the conak, and the behaviour of the people, he ordered us to be conducted to the house of a Greek Bishop; but recommended caution to us how we ventured among the inhabitants; describing them to be a vicious and ungovernable set of men², over whom he had himself, he said, no authority, not daring to punish any one of them.

We remained all the following day at Larissa, endeavouring to obtain some account of the present state of the city and of its inhabitants; but this, which is always a difficult undertaking where the majority consists of Moslems, was made particularly so in the present instance, by the evil disposition of the populace towards strangers who are Christians. Never will the traveller find a place where Franks are less respected. When we appeared in the streets, the boys followed us, pelting us with stones; and the slightest attempt to check their disorderly behaviour endangered our lives. Everywhere we heard the same opprobrious expressions, of

“ Christian

(2) They had the same character when Pococke was here, in the middle of the last century. “The people,” said he, “both Turks and Greeks, have a bad character; and it is dangerous travelling near the city.” Pococke’s Description of the East, vol. II. Part II. chap. vii. p. 153. Lond. 1745.

Dr. Holland cites “a geographical work of some merit, composed in the Romanic language (Γεωγραφία Νεωτερική), where they are characterized as Μισοχριστοί εις ακρό, και θηριώδεις: HATERS OF CHRIST TO THE HIGHEST DEGREE, AND BRUTAL.” See Holland’s Travels, 8^c. p. 269. Lond. 1815.

Medals.

“Christian dogs!” “Rascally Infidels!” “Accursed of God!” Much of this was owing to our being compelled to send the Tchohodar about the town upon business: when he was with us, we were less interrupted by insult. We ascertained, however, the number of houses in Larissa: they amount to seven thousand; and there are about thirty mosques¹. Some few Greeks and Jews reside here; but the principal part of a population amounting to 20,000 individuals, consists of Mahometans. The shops are numerous and good; and among the goldsmiths we found some valuable silver medals, particularly one of large size, in the highest state of perfection, of the Locri Opuntii. We bought also some of Larissa; and a bronze coin of the greatest rarity, of Pelinna, with the legend entire, ΠΕΛΙΝΝΑΙΩΝ; together with silver coins of Thessaly, ΘΕΣΣΑΛΩΝ, and gold coins of Philip and Alexander. We were told by the goldsmiths that antient medals are often found at Pharsa, and that they are brought to Larissa for sale. One of the goldsmiths regretted that we had not arrived a little sooner; having, as he said, melted as many silver medals, a short time before, as afforded a mass of the pure metal weighing half an *oque*². Making great allowance for this most exaggerated statement, we may nevertheless nevertheless believe that medals pass frequently through the hands of these workmen in Larissa: and as the large silver coins of the Locri Opuntii are among the finest specimens of the Grecian art³, travellers, coming after us, will do well to attend to the circumstance. In the shops of this city we observed almost every thing that is sold at Constantinople, and much of German ware besides, especially glass. Tea is also sold here, and of good quality. Where there are so many Turks, the commerce in other respects cannot be considerable; yet Thessaly must export a great quantity of corn, as the inhabitants are unable to consume the produce of their land. The earthenware sold at Larissa is so beautiful, that it may be considered as the only place where modern pottery exists, resembling, as to its purity, brightness, and elegance, the antient terracotta of Greece: it comes from a manufactory near Salonika, where the Thericlean art may be said to exist in its original perfection⁴. We saw some vessels of red clay, with as fine a varnish, and as elegant a form, as those which are taken from the sepulchres of Athens; and they were very strong, although almost as thin as paper. Being obliged to continue our journey on horseback we had not the means of conveying any of them away with us. The town is situated upon the PENEUS, now called Salambria; and there is a very handsome bridge over the river, the buttresses being lightened by perforations:

(1) Pococke mentions fifteen thousand Turkish houses, only, which must have been an exaggeration; fifteen hundred Greek, and about three hundred Jewish, families. (Description of the East, vol. II. Part II. p. 153. Lond. 1745.) Dr. Holland, four thousand houses, and 20,000 inhabitants. See Holland's Travels, &c. p. 266. Lond. 1815.

perforations : it consists of sixteen arches, eight large arches, and eight that are of much smaller size. From this river the inhabitants are well supplied with fish ; particularly carp, roach, and eels. Rain fell profusely during this day ; and it caused such a flood in the river, that it rose almost to the top of the higher arches¹. We found many fragments of the Verde-antico marble used even for the common purposes of paving : perhaps this may be accounted for by a circumstance that will be related in the sequel ; the discovery of a substance very similar to this breccia, in the neighbourhood, lying in its natural state. Some priests applied to us for a charitable donation for their monastery, pretending to be very poor : this practice is common common in Turkey, wherever there are monasteries. In the street near to the bishop's house we saw the capital of a Doric pillar; and such detached fragments are all the remains we could find of the Temples^s of this famous city. Not but that many more considerable reliques of its antient splendor may exist, and would be brought to light, if we were permitted to enter the courts and mosques of the intolerant Turks, who hold the supreme rule here, and oppose every inquiry of this nature. Before we quit the subject of the antient Larissa, it may be proper to remark, that, owing to the number of cities to which this appellation was common, some confusion has been introduced into the geography of Greece. And this seems also to have happened among the Romans; for Livy makes a careful distinction^s between the noble city of Thessaly, of this name, and another, called Larissa Cremaste: yet how often have they been confounded by the moderns! Livy is relating an expedition of the Romans from the northern point of Eubœa to the opposite continent, to attack Larissa Cremaste; but it does not hence follow that this city was upon the coast: indeed the words of

(1) " The river Peneus runs on the west and north of this town, and is crossed by a stone bridge of many arches. Procopius says, ' This river which washes the town is borne on with a gentle current to the sea,' εἰς μάλα προσηνῶς: De Edif. lib. iv. The same author describes the country in the vicinity as extremely fertile and well-watered. Indeed, no plain in Greece can be more productive than that of Larissa, particularly in corn and cotton : it is still the 'campus opimus Larissæ.' Hor. In its greatest length, it is twenty miles. The market of Larissa is well supplied with all kinds of provision ; particularly with excellent fish caught in the Peneus. The circuit of the town is from three to four miles : the inhabitants are, in number, about 14,000 Turkish families, 1600 Greek ; and there are 2000 Jews. The Greek at whose house I lodged, complained of the unhealthy air of the place. From the window of my room I looked over the river, and part of the plain, backed by the snow-covered summits of Olympus, which, extending in a great length of line from east to west, brought to mind the exact meaning of the μακρὸς Ὀλυμπος of Homer. The height of this mountain has been given at 800 toises. I find in Plutarch, that Xenagoras measured it accurately with instruments (ἐν ὀργάνων), and found the perpendicular height to be more than ten furlongs (πρὸς τὴν καθέρον). See the Life of Paulus Æmilius. The height of Pelion, Pliny informs us, was also taken by Dicaearchus, by order of the Ptolemies, and was found to be 'ΜCCL passuum ratione perpendiculari.'" Walpole's MS. Journal.

Strabo decidedly prove the contrary¹. It had also the name of *Pelagias*²; and it had been called Cremaste from its situation, (being as it were suspended) upon a high rock. It is therefore not improbable that this may have been an antient citadel of the more modern Larissa upon the Penëus, at some considerable distance from the other, and in a precipitous situation, above the plain. The author thinks he can almost prove this to have been true; for the inhabitants now give the name of OLD LARISSA to a Palæo-castro which is upon some very high rocks, at four hours distance towards the east. The place is visible from Larissa. This Palæo-castro, therefore, may have been LARISSA CREMASTE, if it were not also the PELASGICON ARGOS of Homer, where Achilles reigned, and whence he received the appellation of *Larissæus*³. And perhaps we may gain other information also from this circumstance; for nothing more seems to be necessary to explain why the Citadel of Argos in PELOPONNESUS was called Larissa, and the Citadel of Larissa in THESSALY was denominated Argos, other than this circumstance of their similitude as to situation and appearance;

JUPITER was also called Larissæus, not, as some have supposed, from this city of Larissa, but from the Argive citadel of that name (where there was a Temple of Jupiter), as it plainly appears from Strabo, lib. viii. Vide Stephanum, lib. de Urbib. p. 419. *Not. 72. edit. appearance; each of them having been constructed upon the top of a high and almost inaccessible rock.

On Wednesday, December the twenty-third, we left Lavissa, and set out for the VALLEY OF TEMPE. This name, authorised by a long acceptance, is now generally used; but the Gorge, or Defile of Tempe, would be a much more appropriate appellation. That any dispute should have arisen among the Moderns as to the situation of the place itself, is truly marvellous; because it still preserves its primeval name, pronounced TEMBI; and there is no place in all Greece whose locality it is less difficult to determine. An inscription discovered by us within the defile, and which will hereafter be more particularly noticed, will set this matter in a clear light. According to the plan hitherto observed in these Travels, we shall avoid anticipating observations that were subsequently made; but set before the Reader the substance of our Notes, according to the order in which they were written upon the spot. Mr. Walpole considers the Defile of Tempe, and the Vale of Tempe, as two distinct places. His opinion, and the observations of another learned and accomplished traveller, our common friend, Professor *Palmer*⁴, upon this subject, are subjoined in a note⁵. Excepting that the defile is rather wider, and expands

(5) "In order to understand clearly what the Antients have said concerning Tempe, it is necessary to keep in mind, that there are two distinct places, having distinct characters of scenery belonging to them;—the Defile of Tempe; and the Valley of Tempe.

"I shall begin with the first.—The river Peneus flows for three or four miles through a gorge more into the form of a valley at its extremities, we see no reason for insisting upon the distinction. The dales of Derbyshire

a gorge between the mountains Olympus and Ossa, which rise on one side of it, almost perpendicularly: on the other, they afford space for a narrow road formed in the rock, running along the river side. Some of the mountains in Borrowdale by Keswick resemble those in the defile of Tempe, both in shape, and in their wild and barren aspect. The manner in which the rocks at Matlock rise from the border of the river reminds us of those at Tempe: but to make the resemblance more striking, nothing but the grey limestone rocks at Matlock should be seen, divested of all the verdure with which the oak and mountain-ash adorn them; and they should rise to a greater height. The defile of Tempe could never have been represented by the Antients as picturesque or beautiful. Livy, speaking of the lofty mountains there, uses these words: 'Montes ita utrinque abscissi, ut vix despici sine vertigine quadam simul oculorum animique possint.' Pliny's words are not quite so strong: 'Ultra visum hominis se attollere dextra lævaque leniter convexa juga.'

"On the top of the mountains overhanging the narrow parts of the defile, on the side where Ossa rises, are the remains of antient forts. Here might be the spot where Livy says, 'ten armed men could defend the Pass with ease.' Dec. v. lib. iv. In this part also is to be seen the inscription, first observed by Dr. Clarke, cut in the rock; stating, that 'L. CASSIUS LONGINUS FORTIFIED TEMPE.' In searching different writers, to see whether any mention is made of this person, I have been fortunate enough to find the following words in Julius Cæsar (lib. iii. De Bello Civili): 'L. Cassium Longinum in Thessaliam misit Cæsar.' There can be no doubt that this is the person alluded to: we are therefore in possession of another interesting fact,—the very age of the inscription.

"The word Tempe, says Vossius (in Melam), from being applied to the Thessalian defile, was afterwards used when the Greeks spoke of narrow passes: thus, in Theophanes, the Passes of Taurus are called Τέμπε τῆς Καλικίας. Anna Comnena calls Tempe, Κλεισοῦραι; a word employed by the Greeks now as meaning a defile. Another Byzantine historian, Georgius Acropolita, speaking of a Pass through which the Strymon flows, says, 'The common people call such places, Κλεισοῦραι.'

"Respecting the situation of the other part of Tempe, called the Valley, Pococke speaks in a very undecided manner. He doubts whether it lies at the south-west entrance of the defile, near Baba; or at the north-east extremity. As I passed through Tempe in December, at a time when it was impossible to judge correctly of the natural beauties of the country, I shall not speak, from my own observations, more positively concerning this celebrated valley; but shall subjoin a valuable Note from the Journal of my friend Professor Palmer, who saw it in the spring of the year 1806, Derbyshire and Cumberland, and the dingles of Wales, are by some called valleys, and by others considered rather as defiles, or passes; but these distinctions exist only in the names given to them.

the most favourable season, as he was travelling southward from Salonica. From his statement, there can be little doubt that the valley was situated towards the north-eastern entrance of the Defile of Tempe.

“ ‘ May 13, 1806. After riding nearly an hour close to the Bay, we turned S. through a delightful plain, which, after a quarter of an hour, brought us to an opening between Ossa and Olympus, the entrance to a Vale, which, in situation, extent, and beauty, amply satisfies whatever the Poets have said of Tempe.

“ ‘ The country being secure, we were able to view the scene from various situations. The best view is from a small hill about one mile S. from the Chán. Looking E. you have then Ossa on your right hand: on your left, a circling ridge of Olympus, clothed with wood and rich herbage, terminates in several elevations, which diminish as they approach the opening before mentioned. In the front is the Vale, intersected by the Peneus; and adorned with a profusion of beauties so concentrated, as to present under one view a scene of incomparable effect.

“ ‘ The length of the Vale, measured from the station to the opening by which we entered, I estimate at three miles; its greatest breadth, at two miles and a half.

“ ‘ Extending your view northwards, the Vale opens towards a rich plain which bounds the Bay of Salonica; high above whose waters is seen majestic Athos. This interesting feature has hitherto been unnoticed: indeed, it can only be noticed in very favourable circumstances of weather and situation of the observer.’—MS. Journal of Professor Palmer.

“ ‘ To this spot, then, described by Professor Palmer, must be applied the epithets used by the Antients, when speaking of Tempe,—nemorosa, umbrosa, viridantia, καλὰ. The opinion of the Emperor Julian should not be overlooked. During his residence in Greece, he probably had visited this interesting spot. In a letter to Libanius, he places ‘ the Thessalian Tempe only second to the celebrated Grove and Temple of Daphne in Syria.’ ” upon this side of the city, there were many Greek sepulchral marbles; also the operculum of a Greek Soros. Here we read some valedictory inscriptions, of which the two following may serve as specimens; for they are hardly worth notice, except as a proof that the cutters of tomb-stones in all ages have been generally illiterate men.

Tumuli.

Being once more in the open Pelasgic Plain, we were struck by the appearance of the numerous tumuli then in view; many of them were extremely large, and in excellent preservation. They did not seem to have been opened and ransacked for the hidden treasure which it is possible some of them contain, as it has often happened in Tartary; but, upon some of them, small huts had been constructed, as dwellings for the shepherds. We observed these tumuli on both sides of the Pençus, and the whole way to the Defile of Tempe, the entrance to which is distant three hours and a half from Larissa. Our road over the plain was along the old military paved-way; and we passed a marshy lake, said to be dry in summer, by means of this causeway. It can be no other than the Palus Nesonis, Military Way.

Nesonis Palus.Nesonis,

Nesonis, mentioned by *Strabo*¹ as near to Larissa, which, as usual, is inaccurately placed in the maps published for Barthelemy's Anacharsis. The river, swollen by the late rain, had inundated the land near to its banks; and this marsh was therefore full of water, so as to resemble a lake.

The scenery was now uncommonly fine; OLYMPUS being all in view towards the north, covered with snow. More towards the east, Ossa, upon our right, made a conspicuous appearance. Towards the south-east, and rather behind our route, as we journeyed towards Tempe, appeared ΜΟΥΝΤ ΠΕΛΙΟΝ. But the view of OLYMPUS engrossed our particular attention, owing to the prodigious grandeur into which its vast masses were disposed. We had never beheld a scene of bolder outline; for the only diminutive objects in this grand prospect were the distant herds of cattle, grazing in detached groupes upon the plain in the fore-ground². All the rest consisted of parts of such magnitude, that, in their contemplation, animated nature is forgotten³: we think only

(2) The sketch which the author made of this scene, as a memorandum, has been considered a faithful representation by other travellers; and therefore it has been engraved for the Plate annexed. It will serve to shew the reader the nature of this highly-poetic land. The form of Olympus, and the undulating line presented by its "many tops," has been accurately taken.

(3) This feeling is finely expressed by Cumberland. The poet is described as viewing the prospect from the summit of Skiddlaw, in Cumberland.

What is that atom I espy,
That speck in Nature's plan?—
Great heaven! is that a man?

only of that Being who is represented in the immensity of his works; and we thereby indulge the same feelings which first induced the benighted heathens to consider the tops of their mountains' as habitations of "THE MOST HIGH GOD?"

Drawing near to the base of this mighty rampart, which seems to interrupt all communication between the plain of the Pelasgi and the more northern territories, the entrance to the defile of Tempe begins to appear, like a breach in a wall. Suddenly one of the guides, a Greek, conducting a baggage-horse, began to sing, in a loud tone of voice, a popular ballad in Romaic, expressing a dialogue between the two mountains, Olympus and Ossa; which still retain their original names in the country, although a little altered in the appellations Ο ΕΛΙΜΠΟΣ ΚΑΙ Ο ΚΙΣΣΑΒΟΣ. The dialogue relates to a dispute between the two mountains, as to the length of the season when they are concealed by snow.

And hath that little wretch its cares,
Its freaks, its follies, and its airs?
And do I hear the insect say,
' My lakes, my mountains, my domain ?'
O weak, contemptible, and vain !
The tenant of a day.

Say to old Skiddaw, ' Change thy place,
Heave Helvellyn from his base,
Or bid impetuous Derwent stand
At the proud waving of a master's hand."

snow³. We dined near a village called Yan: between this place and Larissa there are many vineyards. Afterwards we continued our journey by the side of the PENEUS, until we arrived at Baba, situate at the entrance of the VALE OF TEMPE. There are many Turkish villages within the mouth of this valley, at its Thessalian extremity; and as we could find no antiquities upon the spot, we knew not where to place any of the Grecian towns that were said to have occupied the same position. Perhaps Baba may have been the antient Gonnus, for this was in the entrance to TEMPE: and there was also a city called Elatéa, near to Gonnus, and within the *defile*⁴. It is proper that the reader should be made fully acquainted with the nature of this extraordinary passage: and first, in order to give him some notion of the appearance of Tempe, it may be said, that it resembles the pass of Kyllcrankie in Scotland, and that of Dovedale in Derbyshire; but it is upon a much grander scale; for Olympus upon the left, and Ossa upon the right, form the two sides of the pass. Owing to some tremendous revolution in the face of nature, these two mountains were separated from each other, having been been originally one and the same entire mass; and in the bottom of the cleft formed by their division, flows the Penëus. If ever the waters of the Black Sea shall be so far drained and evaporated as to leave only a river flowing through the Canal of Constantinople, then the Thracian Bosphorus will become what Tempe is now. That a sea, like the Euxine, once covering the whole of Thessaly, was drained by the opening of this chasm between Olympus and Ossa, is not only evident, from the position of the strata on either side of it, but the fact has always been so traditionally transmitted, as to become a theme of poetical allusion, if not a portion of recorded history'. A powerful torrent, occupying in some parts of Tempe nearly the whole of

(1) The passages subjoined, from Herodotus, Lucan, and Ælian, will shew how prevalent this opinion was among the Antients: it had always been a tradition in Thessaly. The whole of the 129th chapter of the Seventh Book of Herodotus is taken up with this subject, from which we can only insert an extract.

of the passage from side to side, is therefore exhibited by the PENEUS; flowing with great rapidity from the west-south-west to east-north-east; that is to say, from the Pelagic to the Pierian Plain, which begins at the eastern extremity of the defile. By the side of this torrent, and at the western entrance, as before stated, stands Baba. To the south-south-east of Baba, that is to say, towards the right, but at a considerable elevation above this village and the river, upon Mount Ossa, is a village called Ampeldkia; one of the most extraordinary places in all Turkey; because, being situate in the most secluded spot of the whole empire, and where no one would look for the haunts of active industry, it carries on an extensive commerce, the effects of which were once severely felt by our own manufacturers in Britain. We left the main route to visit this village, and ascended, from Baba, a part of Mount Ossa. The way up is by a paved road; and it is full of a green chlorite schistus, containing veins of white marble and of white quartz. In the description of Larissa, fragments of the Verde-antico were said to have been observed in the pavements of the city, and that the substance itself existed in the neighbourhood. It was to this part of Tempe that allusion was then intended; reserving for the account of the place itself, any further notice of the discovery of this beautiful mineral, in its natural state; because it is singularly connected with the antient geography of the country. That the antients obtained their green marble from this place, we shall endeavour to prove.

Quarries

CHAP. IX.

Quarries might now be wrought¹ for the Verde-antico in this part of Mount Ossa. Those parts of the mountain which are above the defile consist, in many places, of green schistus veined and spotted with white. Much of this substance has been used for the military road through the Defile of Tempe, and about the village of Ampelákia. But the discovery of a natural deposit of this rare kind of marble, so near to the Penëus, may be attended with other consequences than merely making known the locality of a curious mineral: it may throw some light over the dark recesses of Tempe, by pointing out the situation of one of its antient cities; because we may now shew that Ampelákia perhaps originally occupied the site of the antient ATRAKIA, and that the original situation of Ampelákia agreed with what *Livy*² and *Stephanus*³ have told us of the antient city. Ampelákia was formerly situate lower down, towards the defile; but the inhabitants removed their village to these heights, owing to the incursions made upon them by the Turkish troops, in passing this way. The site of the old city ATRAKIA is manifested by this discovery of its green marble; because the Verde-antico was called Atracian marble.

There is a very curious and scarce treatise of Blasius Caryophilus, commonly called Biagio Garofolo, a Neapolitan, "De Marmoribus Antiquis." It was printed at Utrecht in 1743. This writer satisfactorily proves that the marble called Verde-antico by the Italian lapidaries, is in fact the *Marmor Atracium*⁴; and the Atracian marble was called Θεσσαλή λίθος, by *Julius Pollux*⁵. It is mentioned by Paul Silentiarius, among the marbles placed by Justinian in the church of St. Sophia at *Constantinople*⁶. The appearance therefore

(6) It should therefore seem that the Atracian, rather than the Lacedæmonian green marble, was used for the ornaments of this edifice. The author, who has bestowed some pains upon the subject, was once induced, by an observation of Pliny, to believe that the green columns in St. Sophia were of Lacedæmonian marble. (See Tomb of Alexander, p. 42. Note k. Cambridge, 1805.) The Lacedæmonian was one variety of the Verde-antico; but it was green and black, instead of green and white. Caryophilus, after citing Silentiarius, says, "De octo columnis quæ posuit Justinianus in templo Sanctæ Sophiæ, Silentiarius intelligit πρασίνους τοὺς ἀξιοβανιάστους, admirandas prasini coloris, ut habet Codinus (de Orig. According to Caryophilus, the marbles used by the Greeks amounted to forty-one varieties; and the information is too valuable to be withheld. They were as follow :

1. Hymettus.—The marble of Hymettus was so much esteemed in Xenophon's time, that temples, altars, shrines, and statues, were made of it throughout Greece, but especially at Athens.
2. Pentelicus.—First mentioned by Æschines, who lived in the 86th Olympiad. Also by Theophrastus. Λιθοτομίας Πεντελικῶν.

Corinth, if every other trace of its existence had disappeared, might in a similar manner be ascertained, by the prevalence of the marmor conchyte about the place. Other instances could also be adduced; but it would lead us too far from the main subject.

We entered the modern village, whose name, although written Ἀμπελάκια², is always pronounced Ambelákia, because the Greeks pronounce $\mu\pi$ as we do β . All the heights around it are covered with vineyards, and its wine is the best flavoured of any that we tasted in Greece. It is of a red colour, and resembles claret. The town consists of four hundred houses³, as it were hanging upon this side of Mount Ossa, above the Pass of Tempe: it contains no Turkish inhabitants, and enjoys a state of freedom, forcibly contrasted with the condition of other places, in the same neighbourhood, although not exempted from imposts. We might almost have imagined ourselves to be in Germany. The inhabitants

(2) This word, as it is thus written, is said to signify "The little Vineyard," (αἰ ἀμπεδος vinea); but by attending to the etymology of antient names after their corruption into a modern language, the greatest confusion may be introduced. As a proof of this, we shall mention only one instance. The word NAUPACTUS has been corrupted by the Turks into Aneh Bakht; and this, if it have any meaning, should signify "The mirror of fortune." The word Ampelákia is by Dr. Holland written Amphilochia. (See Travels in the Ionian Isles, &c. p. 287. Lond. 1815.) which was the name of a district of Acarnania, upon the Sinus Ambracius.

(3) Beaujour reckons the population at 4000 souls,—"living," as he happily expresses it, "like bees in a hive." We state the number of houses as it was given to us by the merchants of the place. If Beaujour's account of the population be not exaggerated, the number of the houses is possibly greater. *Voy. are many of them from that country; and they are a thriving, healthy-looking people. They wear the Eastern dress; but they have introduced many foreign manners and customs among those of Greece. Some German merchants, upon our arrival, sent to us the last Frankfort Gazettes; and soon afterwards they paid us a visit. As we intended to pass the night here, we accompanied them to see their staple manufactory for dying cotton thread of a red colour, which not only supports and enriches the inhabitants, but has given rise to a commerce so considerable, that whole caravans are laden with this cotton for the markets of Pest, Vienna, Leipsic, Dresden, &c.; and hardly a day passes without some exports being made, which are carried even to Hamburg. The fabric for dyeing the cotton, however, causes such a consumption of wood, that it will make a sad havoc among the natural beauties of the Vale of Tempe.

We shall now briefly describe the process used in preparing the cotton for exportation; referring our readers, for more particular information, to the valuable work of Felix Beaujour upon the "Commerce of Greece;" where the subject is treated with all possible minuteness, and, at the same time, with a degree of accuracy that entitles its author to the highest credit'. About this time the merchants of Ampelkia began to feel the effect of the preference given to English cotton thread in the German markets; and it was a subject of their complaint.

complaint. "They foresaw," they said, "that the superior skill of the English manufacturers, and their being enabled to undersell every other competitor upon the Continent, would ultimately prove the ruin of their establishment." This no doubt is owing to the improvement adopted in Great Britain of spinning cotton thread in mills, by means of engines that are worked by steam, which has caused such a considerable reduction in its price;—all the thread made at Ampelákia being spun by manual labour. The beautiful red tincture of the Turkish cotton will, however, long maintain its pristine celebrity. It has never been perfectly imitated in England. The English cotton thread is much finer, but it has not the tenacity of that which is manufactured in Turkey; neither is its colour so durable. The whole population of Ampelákia, amounting to four thousand souls, including even the children, is occupied in the preparation of this single article of commerce; the males in dyeing the wool, and the females in spinning the thread. A delightful picture of industry is thereby exhibited; and the happy effects of active employment, in a land otherwise oppressed by a general stagnation of its energies, is remarkably conspicuous, in the health, in the cheerfulness, and in the good feeling to which industry always conduces. Spindles only are used in making the thread: there is not a spinning-wheel in the place. Beaujour states this as one cause of the excellence of the cotton thread here manufactured². Although but a village, Ampelákia contains twenty-four four fabrics for dyeing only. Two thousand five hundred bales of cotton (each bale weighing two hundred and fifty pounds) are annually dyed here, the principal produce of the manufacture being sent to Vienna. We visited several of the fabrics: they contain a number of vessels for steeping the cotton. The substance used for the colouring principle is the root of a species of madder (Rubia) found at Churdix and Bachir, in Asia, which comes to them from Smyrna; but whether or not it differs from the common madder of dyers (Rubia tinctorum) we could not learn. The Ampeldakians call this root Lizar, written Aly-zari by *Beaujour*¹. They prepare the dye by pulverizing the root, and then mixing it in a caldron with water; in the proportion of an hundred parts of water to thirty-five of the madder; adding afterwards bullocks' blood. But a principal part of the art seems to consist in the process of preparing the cotton to receive the dye. It is frequently dipped in a saponaceous lye, made with oil and a weak solution of soda. The cotton is trodden in this solution during several days successively; being also carefully rinsed and dried as often as it is taken out of the lye. They also use a small portion of sheeps' dung in preparing the lye². After this, it is dyed in the madder; and lastly,

(1) Ibid. tom. I. p. 265.

(2) Dr. Holland says, the cottons are first exposed to three leys, of soda, ashes, and lime, mixed in nearly equal quantities; then follows a soda bath, and afterwards a process of "galling and aluming:" after this, the dye is given, which is finally perfected by a bath alcalized with soda; the ley being made to boil until the colour takes its proper tint. See Holland's Travels, &c. p. 289 (Note). Lond. 1815.

lastly, to fix and heighten the colour, it is boiled in another lye of soda. The French, who long ago endeavoured to establish a fabric for dyeing cotton at Montpellier, and who borrowed the art from the Greeks, pretend to have met with success by adopting a process very similar to that which is here described³.

In the course of this evening, the inhabitants shewed to us several antient medals found about the place and in its neighbourhood. Many of them were similar to what we had seen in Larissa, but some were new to us. There was one with a head full-faced in front, and a horse upon the obverse side, which we had never seen before; also another with this legend as a reverse, $\begin{matrix} \text{ATIC} \\ \text{IPYTA} \end{matrix}$. Some curious Cuphic coins were also brought, that were struck under the Caliphs. We had seen similar coins in silver at Platea, and neglected to buy them, thinking they had been Turkish: the same were also observed at Larissa, and at Marathon.

Thursday, December the twenty-fourth, we were an hour occupied in descending from Ampelákia into the Vale of Tempe. Having regained our route, as soon as we began to proceed through the defile, we observed that the river Penëus was much swoln, and very muddy; but we could perceive no appearance corresponding with Pliny's account of the unmingled waters of the *Eurotos*⁴, probably owing to the flooded flooded state of the river. Such appearances are common to many other rivers; and therefore there is every reason to believe Pliny's account to be correct. The river called by him Eurotos, is the Eurotas of Strabo; who says, that it is named Titaresium by Homer. Lucan calls it *Titaresus*¹; and by Strabo's epitomiser, it is denominated Europos. The Penëus here occupies the whole of the valley, from side to side; with the exception only of the narrow pass afforded by the old paved causeway of the military way, which extends along the right bank of the river. Fragments of the Atracian marble appeared in different parts of this pavement; to make room for which, even the solid rocks were cut away from the side of the Penëus. Here the scenery possesses the utmost grandeur. The precipices consist of naked perpendicular rocks, rising to a prodigious height; so that the spectator can scarce behold them from below without giddiness. Livy's description, therefore, in addition to its intrinsic grandeur, has all the majesty of truth: RUPES UTRINQUE ITA ABCISÆ SUNT, UT DESPICI VIX SINE VERTIGINE QUADAM SIMUL OCULORUM ANIMIQUE POSSIT.

(3) Tableau du Comm. de la Grèce, p. 287. Note (1).

(1) See the beautiful and valuable description of the rivers in the sixth book of Lucan's Pharsalia. The account of the unmingled waters of the Titaresus and Penëus is borrowed from Homer. Οὐδ' ὄψε Πηνειῶ συμμίσγεται, κ. τ. λ. It is thus given by Lucan:

" Solus in alterius nomen cum venerit unde,

TERRET ET SONITUS ET ALTITUDO PER MEDIAM VALLEM FLUENTIS PENEI AMNIS. The various colours which adorn the surfaces of these rocks can only be expressed by painting: and how beautiful would be the effect, if these masses were faithfully delineated, in all their distinct or blended hues, of ashen grey, and green, and white, and ochreous red, and brown, and black, and yellow! Such description by the pen suggests no distinct image to the mind. High, upon their utmost peaks, both to the right and left, we saw the ruins of an ancient fortress, once the bulwarks of the defile, whose walls were made to traverse the precipices, in a surprising manner, quite down to the road. The cliffs are so perpendicular, and the gorge is so narrow, that it would be absolutely impossible for an army to pass while the strait was guarded by these fortifications. In this part of the defile, as the author was beginning to scale the heights towards the right, with a view to examine the ruins more narrowly, his attention was caught by the appearance of some Roman letters in the face of the rock, which had been purposely planed for their reception.

(2) In the valuable "Histoire de l'Empire de Constantinople, par Du Fresne," we find this Defile of Tempe, and the Defile of Thermopylae, again rendered conspicuous by the wars of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. The former then retained its name. "Les Grecs appelloient ainsi certains détroits qui sont entre les hautes montagnes d'Olympe et d'Ossa, séparées par une petite vallée où plaine raboteuse longue environ de quarante stades, et large en quelques endroits de cent pieds, en d'autres moins; au milieu de laquelle le fleuve de Penée descendant des rochers avec bruit et impetuosité prend son cours, puis se décharge dans le Golfe Thermaïque, en sorte qu'en cette plaine il n'y a passage au plus que pour quatre ou cinq hommes de front. Alexis et Sgure logerent quelques troupes au haut de cette montagne pour garder le pas." Hist. de Const. liv. i. c. 30. p. 23. Paris, 1657.

He found that they belonged to an inscription, which has preserved, in legible characters, the whole history of these fortifications. This inscription is upon the right hand, about twelve feet above that part of the antient way where the rocks have been cut to leave a passage for the road; and it contains the name of the Roman general by whom the defile had been fortified. As this name has been since found by Mr. Walpole, in the third book of Cæsar's History of the Civil War, with the time of this officer's mission into Thessaly, the date of the inscription is very accurately ascertained. The reader will also remark the very curious writing of the word TEMPE; I being substituted for E: admitting, perhaps, this easy explanation, that "every soldier is not a Cæsar."

It is, however, a valuable inscription; because the geographical position of Tempe was not before so completely ascertained: for a long time it remained a matter of doubt and disputation. Pococke was entirely ignorant of its situation¹: not that he neglected to make the distinction between the Valley and the Defile, but that he knew of neither, as applicable to Tempe. This has been satisfactorily proved by a writer, who has published the most ingenious dissertation upon the subject that has yet appeared; and who, without visiting Greece himself, accurately accurately ascertained the situation of the place; and moreover shewed, that Pococke actually passed through Tempe, without knowing where he was². In his observations upon the site of Tempe, this author says³, "How are we disappointed, by finding that scarcely any modern traveller has paid a visit to Thessaly; while Bœotia and Phocis have had numerous describers. The country of Achilles; the region of the battle of Pharsalia; the favourite scenes of poetic creation, should have claimed a little more attention. The consequence is, that the site of Tempe is controverted, or unknown; and Busching, a geographer of the first name and character, says of it, "On la cherche aujourd'hui, et on ne la reconnaît plus." Cellarius had before expressed his difficulties on the subject of Tempe; confessing that he was puzzled by Catullus, in the epithet he gives it, of "Phthiotica Tempe." But that difficulty seems easily to be removed, by the recollection that there were several places with the same name of Tempe; and there might have been one of them in Phthiotis. Thus *Ovid*⁴ speaks of CYCNĒIA TEMPE; which was a place in Bœotia, from the fable of Cygnus:

Cygnus: but the Tempe usually meant by the Poets was in Thessaly; and both Horace and Ovid distinguish it from the others, by calling it *THESSALA TEMPE*¹. And in Virgil's fourth *Georgic*² we have PENEIA TEMPE. Theocritus also speaks of ΚΑΤΑ ΠΕΝΕΙΟΝ, ΚΑΛΑ ΤΕΜΠΗ.

The descriptions given of TEMPE by *Pliny*³, by *Ælian*⁴, and by *Livy*⁵, all concur in representing it as a narrow, beautiful, wooded, rocky glen, with a sounding river flowing through the bottom, between steep and lofty banks, along which there was a narrow difficult pass. Catullus describes it as surrounded by superimpendent woods⁶. According to Herodotus, it was an entrance (ἰσβολή) from Lower Macedonia into Thessaly, by the Penæus, and between Olympus and *Ossa*⁷; where the Greeks, before they fixed upon Thermopylæ, first intended to arrest the progress of the Persian army. We may now therefore see with what surprising precision the author before cited fixes upon the real spot; being guided only by the clue suggested to his classic mind from the hints and allusions of the ancient historians⁸. the descriptions of the Poets we can derive no great light. The 'Zephyris agitata Tempe' of Horace, and the 'frigida Tempe' of Virgil; the epithets umbrosa, opaca, virentia, are constantly bestowed upon this oft-sung dale; but woods will perish⁹, and barbarism will destroy. These are bad landmarks: we must look for others. The mountain will still raise its head, and the river will not cease to flow. Olympus (though a modern might not choose it for one of the steps of his ladder to heaven) is yet *a mile high*¹⁰; and the rapid Pençus is well known to Turkish Greece by the name of *Salampria*¹¹. That the Pençus rolled through the middle of it, I have repeatedly said, and am confirmed in the assertion by Pliny, Strabo, and Ovid; but the two first-mentioned authors have thrown such lights on one of the methods of investigation I mentioned, namely, its bearing to particular objects, that I marvel how it could have been mistaken: it appeared to them that TEMPE was directly between Ossa and Olympus. THE FACT IS, THE VALE IS ACTUALLY FORMED BY SOME OF THE HEIGHTS OF OLYMPUS TO THE WEST, AND OSSA TO THE EAST. How then Pococke and Busching could possibly have departed from these mountains, to look for it elsewhere, cannot easily be explained."

explained." And that they did so, as it has been observed by this writer, is not less remarkable than that one of them, Pococke, should have selected for his TEMPE, first, a plain, according to his own description¹, extended to the Penëus from the Convent of St. Demetrius, at the distance of two leagues, through the middle of which flowed no river whatsoever; and afterwards "a valley, two miles wide²." It is difficult to believe that a scholar, such as Pococke was, could have been ignorant of the descriptions which antient authors have left of this celebrated station. It appears from *Polybius*³ that TEMPE was the only passage from the Lower Macedonia into Thessaly; but the description given of it by Livy is so scrupulously exact, and withal so characteristic of the scenery⁴, that it is impossible to mistake it. Even the particular fortification where we found the inscription now given, is mentioned by him; for he says⁵, "it was garrisoned in

As for the descriptions given of TEMPE by Pliny and by Ælian, they agree as to the geographical features of the place, but do not possess, altogether, the force, and fidelity, and copious brevity of Livy. Of the two, as that of Pliny is the most concise, if we subjoin what he has said, it will be sufficient: no future traveller will then be at any loss to reconcile the appearance of this defile, with all that the ancient poets⁶, historians, and geographers, have said of TEMPE.

Ælian.

IN the rocks above us, we observed several cavernous apertures; and some of them seemed to have been made by art. Ælian mentions places of the same kind, as being natural recesses¹. At a great height over the defile, eagles, reduced to the size of hawks, “were sailing with supreme dominion.” Below, in the chasm, the sides of the river were covered with plants, some of which, even in this season (December), were in flower. All the lower part of the rocks was covered with Vallonïa and dwarf oaks, and evergreen trees and shrubs; thick laurels hanging quite over the military way. Enormous plane-trees, which have flourished here for centuries, extend their branches over the Penëus, and their large roots into the torrent. It was with the laurel of Tempe that the victors in the Pythia were crowned². The inhabitants of Delphi came every ninth year to gather it; because Apollo, according to a Thessalian tradition, had been crowned with it; and had appeared in their city bearing a branch of the Tempian laurel, after his purification from the slaughter of *Pytho*³. Such was the sanctity of the place, that altars smoking with incense filled all the valley with unremitted odours; and travellers passing through through this defile, beheld on every side of them the celebration of some divine rite, as a testimony of the continual sacrifice that was here offered¹. It was impossible not to participate for an instant the RELIGIO LOCI: we decorated our horses' heads with the laurel, and carried branches of it in our hands. But far different are now the tenants of the Vale of Tempe, from those who once guarded its odoriferous shrines. A ferocious banditti occupy all the haunts of the Pagan priests; and when these robbers issue from their lurking-places, instead of the sacred victims that bled upon its altars, the unwary traveller is immolated². Close to us, upon our left, the Penēus rushed with a rapid current, and with such force that it carried with it trees of immense magnitude. The length of this defile, taken in its whole extent, from its entrance at Bāba to its termination at the northern extremity, is reckoned, in the country, as an hour's distance, "to a horse walking moderately fast." We use the expression as literally as it can be translated. This corresponds with the distance mentioned by Pliny, in the passage that has been already cited, of five Roman miles for the length of Tempe,

CHAP. X.

However beautiful the scenery may appear to a traveller's eye within the pass, it is proportionably ugly when he leaves it. As soon as the gorge opens, and a view of the Pierian Plain is exhibited to him, he beholds a disagreeable, swampy flat, covered with dwarf-trees, reeds, and thorns. Here we overtook a caravan from Ampelákia, as it was crossing a long stone bridge over the Penēus. This bridge was a quarter of a mile in length, having several arches, and a Turkish inscription over the middle arch³. The caravan consisted of twenty-six camels, preceded by an ass. There had been much rain; and the Penēus had overflowed the neighbouring country, so as to impede our progress: and one of the horses fell with a part of our baggage, which also delayed us. After floundering in mud and swamps for about three hours, we came to the shore of the GULPH OF THERMA. Here a most beautiful view opened upon us, of the Pierian region, skirting the base of OLYMPUS along the coast. The summits of the mountain appeared covered with deep snow, the highest point bearing west-north-west; and the modern citadel of HERACLĒA, now called Platamonos, standing upon a promontory in the Appearance upon leaving the Defile.

HeraclĒa.

(3) It has been since swept away by a flood. Dr. Holland was informed at Athens, that "it was proposed to re-build it more nearly within the entrance of Tempe; and that Baron Haller was to be entrusted with the design and superintendance of the work." See Holland's Travels, &c. p. 296, and Note. Lond. 1815.

the middle of this enchanting scene¹. About an hour before arriving at Platamonos, we crossed a small river falling into the gulph. The islands of Sciathus and Scopelus were both visible from this part of our route. Among the cattle feeding in the plain near the sea, we saw a very fine breed of sheep; but it was mixed with a breed of a very inferior kind. About an hour before we reached Platamonos, we passed a little river, which here discharges itself into the sea. When we arrived at the base of the rock upon which stands the citadel of Platamonos, we were told that the Turkish garrison would admit no Christians within the walls of the fortress: we therefore halted for the night at a small village situate below the castle. A Greek shopkeeper resides upon the spot. Olympus was now without a cloud, and his towering summit shone with the most dazzling whiteness. The highest point is shaped like a tumulus: lower down the mountain are forests. At this village there is a khan, containing several antient pillars, with Doric capitals inverted, now serving as pedestals for the columns. We observed other antiquities about the building, which are the remains of HERACLÉA, whose situation corresponded accurately with this of Platamonos, as appears by a passage of Livy, describing

(1) The author halted to make a sketch of this fine prospect: it will enable the reader to judge of the parts which compose it, although it cannot do justice to such a scene. It was mid-way between Dium and Tempe; and it stood upon a rock, having the sea in front, with a river upon one side of it; and upon the land-side it was necessary to scale the walls. Its situation is, moreover, precisely that which Scylax has assigned for Heracléum, in the way to Dium, Pydna, and Methone, upon the Gulph of Therma'. We saw an antient aqueduct for supplying a fountain, the water being received into a Soros of white marble, serving as a cistern. The length of this Soros was seven feet nine inches; its breadth, three feet ten inches; its depth, three feet two inches. Its sides were nearly seven inches thick. Below the Soros, as an additional reservoir, there was a marble bason, ornamented with grooving, four feet four inches in diameter; and there were some large slabs, as of the remains of a temple, in front of the khan. The Turkish cemetery is below the walls of the fortress, and close to the village. We witnessed the funeral of one of the garrison. The body was barely covered with earth: and a priest remained afterwards, during a considerable part of the evening, calmly speaking to

to the deceased; for the purpose, as we were told, of instructing him in the way to heaven. During a conversation which we held here upon the subject of the mountain Olympus, the people of this place informed us, that it would be impossible to get to the summit in the winter; but that the priests of a village called Scamnya (pronounced Scamni), upon the side of Olympus, and upon the left of the road from Platamonos to Katarina, go annually, upon the twentieth day of June, to perform mass upon the top of the mountain. This is one of the most curious instances of the remaining ceremonies of the antient religion of Greece. Perhaps the old altar may yet remain whereon the sacrifices to Jupiter were offered; for the antients had conceived a notion of the great height of Olympus, from a story, that letters traced on the ashes of that altar remained a long time undefaced; but Xenagoras, who measured it, found it not to exceed an English mile and a quarter'. During the whole of this night, caravans were passing, and principally from Ampelakia; causing such a bustle in and about the khan, that it was impossible to get any rest. The bells, and noise of the camels, and the bawling of their drivers, continued to maintain uproar until the morning.

Leaving Platamonos, the next day, to go to Katarina, we crossed a small river, alluded to by *Livy*²: it can only be considered as a river after heavy rains. We then saw

Scamnya upon our left, hanging upon the side of Olympus, like one of the villages in the Alps. From Scamnya, a person may ascend the summit in about four or five hours: it is distant five hours and a half from Platamonos. There is another village, distant six hours from Platamonos, from which the ascent to the summit of the mountain is considered the easiest and best: it is called Careá; the á being pronounced broad, as in our word calf. How delightful would be a summer residence in one of the towns or villages near to this mountain; to be spent in excursions for correcting the geography of all the region it occupies, and in the study of its natural history! We saw to the east, and at a vast distance across the gulph of Therma, MOUNT ATHOS, called (τὸ Ἁγίον Ὄρος) The Holy Mountain, looking like an island. The view of it was so clear and distinct, that we made a careful delineation of its appearance³, as viewed from this part of Pieria. Its bearing at the time was due east. To make an English word of its modern Greek name, as it is now pronounced in the country, it ought to be thus written; Áyonoros. Hence we continued along the base of Olympus, through groves of plane-trees and tall reeds, traversing a long tract of swamps and mud, as upon the preceding day. After journeying in this manner for three hours, we arrived at a khan, situate half way between Platamonos and Katarína. The plain here is called Kallidia, or Kallithia: but to what circumstance of beauty it owes this appellation it is difficult to conjecture, being the most disagreeable swamp we had ever passed; containing, however, great quantity of ducks, geese, and turkeys. Near to this khan we observed an antient well; and, after leaving it, we arrived, in half an hour, at a place, where there is an old military paved-way, leading from Katarīna down to the sea. An antient port is there situate; and our guides told us that there had been a village, called St. Theodore, at the port, which was destroyed about four years ago. Hereabouts we crossed the Malathrīa river by a bridge. Its source is in Olympus; and there is a Palæo-castro in its neighbourhood, at three hours distance from Katarīna, upon the mountain, where there are many antient marbles and ruins. We heard of this Palæo-castro in the whole of this route; but can form no conjecture as to its original history. That Dium was not there situate, is evident; because Dium was only seven stadia from the sea'; but it seems also plain that the Malathrīa was the Enipeus, to which Perseus advanced upon the retreat of the Roman army; when the fires in his camp were visible to the garrison in the citadel of Heraclēa. He caused the river, as it is said, to serve him instead of an outwork and fortification, as its passage was difficult: the via militaris here situated being the Saltus, mentioned by Livy as the

the only pass into *Macedonia*². The whole of this district is unwholesome for the passage of an army; and it is as unwholesome and as ugly as any part of the Pomptine marshes in Italy. We saw no other moving objects than buffaloes, wandering through pools filled with reeds, and deep with mud. Just before we reached the town of Katarīna, we had to ford two rivers; the first being called *Mauro-Nero*³, or black water, answering to the Greek MELAS (a name common to many Grecian streams); and the second bearing the appellation of Pellica: they both unite before they fall into the *Thermæan Gulph*⁴. To our surprise, we observed nearly a hundred hogs wallowing in the mud of these rivers; proving that the population is not entirely Turkish. Near the place where the Pellica is commonly passed, we saw, among some large plane-trees, a small chapel, about which were the ruins of a temple of the Doric order. We observed a large triglyph, a pillar, and the remains of its foundation. We copied three Inscriptions which we found among these ruins. The first was upon a pedestal, near the river; inscribed, as it purports, by

We were almost buried in the quicksands in crossing the branches of this river, for it was widely flooded. The classical Reader will of course feel anxious to fix the antient name of

of these rivers, flowing through a country concerning which even ancient geographers seem to have had no precise ideas. The southern limits of Pieria are differently defined by Ptolemy and by Strabo, although it be so naturally bounded by the Defile of Tempe, where the plain terminates'; and for the courses and names of the rivers flowing from Olympus towards the Gulph of Therma, we have very little information; that little having been rendered less by the loss of the latter part of the Seventh Book of the Geography of Strabo. From all, however, that can be collected concerning the Mauro-Nero and the Pellica, it is evident, as will more plainly appear in the sequel, that they jointly constitute the Baphyrus of Livy. But it will then be asked, where are the remains of Dium, whose situation was near to the Haliaemon?² for although a position have been assigned in modern maps for a place called Stan-Dia, and D'Anville admits of its existence³, we could could hear nothing of it in this part of our journey. In viewing this region the whole way from Platamonos to Katarina, the parts which compose it are so exceedingly vast and distinct, that any seeming confusion of its antient geography may have originated in two causes: First, that the boundaries of Thrace and Macedon were continually liable to change: and secondly, that different appellations were applied to one and the same place. There was a time, as we have before proved¹, when the limits of Thrace extended to the Isthmus of Corinth; consequently, by very old writers, the mountains, rivers, and cities of Bœotia, Phocis, and Thessaly, would be considered as Thracian: and this may explain the reason why the old Scholiast, upon the Argonautica of Apollonius Rhodius, mentions Pieria as a mountain of *Thrace*². It was also owing to this cause that Orpheus was called a Thracian, whose sepulchre was long shewn in Pieria. The same indecision attaches to the antient geography of Macedonia. Its natural barrier to the south was of course formed by the Defile of Tempe and the Penæus river, where it is placed by the oldest geographer, Scylax, who has been considered as the inventor of geographical tables³. But in a later age, when the Macedonians were restricted within narrower boundaries, the the Lydias and the Haliacmon were its utmost southern limits, as appears from Herodotus'. In journeying along the western side of the Thermæan Gulph, the whole district, from the mouth of the Penëus to that of the Axius, is one swampy plain, bounded on its western side by the chain of Olympus: to the south of it is seen Ossa; and upon the east it is terminated by the sea. There are no hills, nor other natural barriers to form subdivisions; so that whether called Botticæa, or Pieria, or Perrhæbia, it is all one and the same plain.

After leaving the ruins of the Doric temple, being obliged to turn towards the left, out of the ordinary route, in order to avoid the inundation at the confluence of the two rivers, and to effect a passage over another branch of the Pellica near Katarina, we observed a most remarkable tumulus on a hill near to the village of Spee. This corresponds with the situation which *Apollodorus*³ has assigned for the TOMB OF ORPHEUS. It is moreover mentioned by the Epitomiser of Strabo, that there was a village belonging to the city of Dium, called *Pimpléa*⁶, where Orpheus was said to have died. This tumulus is of immense magnitude: its form is perfectly conical; and upon its vertex there are trees growing growing of great size. But the Tomb of Orpheus was only twenty stadia from *Dium*¹; and this tumulus is about the same distance from Katarina. The site of it, according to Pausanias, was marked by a pillar, upon the right hand, at the distance of twenty stadia from Dium, going from the city towards the Pierian mountain². There was upon the pillar (ὄδγία λίθου) an amphora of stone; and this vessel, according to a vulgar tradition of the inhabitants, was supposed to contain the bones of Orpheus. In this description, Pausanias has furnished us with all the apparatus of the oldest Pelasgic sepulchre: for the pillar (κίων), answering also to the stélé of Homer, bespeaks the presence of a sepulchral mound, as its pedestal; and it is for this reason that we prefer translating the word ὄδγία by amphora, rather than by urna; because the former was used in Greece for sepulchral monuments, and was of itself considered as a *symbol of death*³. As to the belief entertained by the natives of its containing bones, it was consistent with the notions respecting funeral rites in the time of Pausanias, when it was more usual to burn than to bury the dead. It is difficult difficult to explain what Pausanias means by his allusion to the Pierian Mountain, because there was no other mountain than Olympus near to Dium; but perhaps this part of it in Pieria might have been so denominated. There is scarcely a mile that the literary traveller will proceed along the western side of the Thermæan Gulph, without regretting the loss of almost all information respecting its antient geography. If, as it was before observed, we had the seventh book of Strabo in its entire state, this loss might have been in some measure supplied; but for the rest, all our usual resources fail us here. In such a dearth of intelligence concerning the rivers and the cities of Pieria, it behoves us to examine the only documents antiquity has afforded us with the greater assiduity; and particularly, to compare the observations of Livy with the modern state of the country. But even Livy's observations, perspicuous and valuable as they generally are upon subjects of this nature, tend rather to perplex than to guide us in our researches here; for whereabouts may we look for the river *Mytis*⁴, the town of *Agassa*⁵, and the river *Ascordus*⁶? or how discriminate between the widely-overflowing course of the *Baphyrus*⁷, and that of the *Enipeus*⁸? and what becomes of

of the Haliacmon, which Livy only once mentions? According to him, there were two pylæ into Macedonia, each of which he calls a saltus; meaning, evidently, a narrow pass, with a paved causeway (via militaris), that might be easily defended. Tempe was one of these; and there was another near Dium. The latter saltus could be nothing more than a causeway to facilitate the passage of the Mauro-Nero and Pellica, or, as we have before suggested, of the Malathria, where its remains now exist. In describing the latter, he says that the whole space between Olympus and the sea was here only a mile; one half of which was occupied by the mouth of the Baphyrus, "LATE RESTAGNANS," and the rest by the Temple of Jupiter and the town of Dium, leaving only a very small portion, which could be easily fortified. Then he describes the Macedonian king, Perseus, as abandoning this passage, leaving it open to the Roman troops, and flying to Pydna. The Roman Consul advances, and in two marches comes to Dium, pitching his tents by the Temple of Jupiter, with a view to preserve it from insult; and himself entering the city. The following day he marches to the river Mytis; the day after, to the town of Agassa; and upon the fourth he is by the river Ascordus. In his retreat, first to Dium, and afterwards to Phila, he is followed by Perseus, who enters Dium, and repairs the fortifications which had been laid waste by the Romans: and then advancing to the distance of five miles from Dium, pitches his camp by the Enipeus; making the river, on account of the difficulty of its passage, serve him instead of a rampart. Then begins the siege of Heracléa on the part of the Romans, which is stated to be mid-way between Dium and Tempe, at the distance of five miles from Phila; and it is also related that the garrison in Heracléa perceived the fires in the camp of the Macedonian king, upon the other side of the Enipeus. This valuable document is the only clue now afforded to the geography of the country between Platamonos and Katarina. The Reader will use his own conjectures, after comparing it with the description we have given of the country; but to us it seems probable that the Mauro-Nero river was the BAPHYRUS, and the Malathria the ENIPEUS; and that Katarina was Dium. The remains of the Temple of Jupiter we have already described; and it is evident, from Livy's description, that the site of this temple was at a certain distance from the town; because the Roman Consul, after pitching his tents by the side of it, quits the camp to enter the city. The situation also of the tumulus we have described as the Tomb of Orpheus, by its distance from Katarina, affords further presumption confirming the identity of this place with Dium, and, consequently, the propriety of the name thus given to the tomb. The only difficulty obviating such an arrangement is the want of a position for the Haliacnon, which, according to the Epitomiser of Strabo, flowed by Dium to the Thermæan Gulph^s. It is very very remarkable that this river is only once mentioned by Livy, who has so diffusely illustrated the topography of this district; and his allusion to it is not introduced with any reference to Dium: it occurs in another part of his history¹, where the city of Elimea, instead of Dium, is described as being upon that river. The Haliacmon is also mentioned by Herodotus, and under some circumstances that might connect it with the mingled streams of Mauro-Nero and *Pellica*²: but not a syllable is said of Dium; and he places it farther to the north, by associating it with another river, Lydias, which, according to Ptolemy, fell into the gulph of Therma, near to the mouth of the Axius.

Here we saw the old Pelagic car again in use, as we had seen it in Thessaly and in Troas, drawn by two oxen yoked. We then entered Katarina. It is a small town, surrounded with wood, situate in the narrow plain which Livy mentions, between Olympus and the sea; and upon the very roots of the mountain, whose summits tower above it in the highest degree of grandeur which it is possible to conceive. There is no place where the whole outline formed by the many tops³ of Olympus may be seen to so much much advantage as from Katarīna. Perhaps they were rendered more distinct in consequence of the snows whereby the mountain was at this time invested. It appeared like one vast glacier; and for some time after our arrival we enjoyed the satisfaction of gazing at its *splendid*³ and majestic form.

Katarīna consists of about one hundred and forty houses⁴, principally inhabited by Greeks, who are governed by an Agha. Its commerce consists entirely in the exportation of corn, to the amount, annually, of between two and three thousand *quilots*⁵. It is sent to be shipped at a port which bears the same name as the town. Judging from the general internal appearance of the place, its condition must be very wretched: but, externally viewed, it has a pleasing aspect, owing to the trees which surround it, and to its mosque rising among them. The Turkish mosques, generally constructed with domes, and always accompanied by one or more towers, as minarets, give an air of elegance, and sometimes of grandeur, even to the villages. In the middle of the town we saw a Soros of white marble,

On appréciera les mesures Turkes avec plus de justesse encore, en indiquant leur rapport avec les poids. Le quilot de Salonique pèse 85 okes en blé Macédonien, et celui de Constantinople 22. marble, of such magnitude and beauty, that we were convinced it could have belonged to no mean city. Upon our inquiring where it had been found, we were told that it had been brought from the Palæo-castro of Malathria, before mentioned, situate in Mount Olympus, at three hours distance from Katarina, where there were others of the same nature, and a great quantity of antient marbles; but that some Franks visiting the spot about three years before, and after being employed in copying inscriptions, removing something, the real nature of which was not known, the Agha, suspecting them of having discovered a concealed treasure, had ordered as many of those marbles as could be broken to be destroyed, and the rest to be conveyed from the place; in consequence of which order this Soros had been brought to Katarina. Such was the substance of the story. The natives entertain a tradition that the sea once extended beyond its present boundary, over all the plain of Katarina, to the foot of Olympus; reaching quite up to that Palæo-castro, whose inhabitants, they say, then carried on an extensive commerce. Who the travellers may have been, thus designated under the name of Franks, it is difficult to determine. We at first believed them to have been Dr. Sibthorpe and Mr. Hawkins. Afterwards we supposed that Mr. Tweddell, in his journey from Salonica, visited those ruins: and, if this be true, great as the regret must be which is felt for the loss of his valuable journals¹,

(1) See the account of their "extraordinary disappearance," in the valuable work published by his brother,—"Remains of the late John Tweddell," &c. Lond. 1815.

and deeply as that loss is now deplored by every person of taste and literature in Europe, it will be increased by this circumstance; because Mr. Tweedell would have made the discovery of a city in this part of Pieria an important point in the illustration of its general topography: and if he there found, as it is very probable he did, any antient inscriptions among the ruins, it is unnecessary to add a syllable as to the use that he would have made of them. Being therefore without any clue, either to the name of the city, or to the history of its sepulchres, which, from the evidence afforded in this single Soros at Katarina, may be considered as regal, our curiosity was strongly excited to repair ourselves to the spot; but in this we were disappointed. The Agha, to whom we sent our Tchohodar with a request for that purpose, positively refused his assent: and when we applied to the inhabitants for guides to conduct us thither, even in spite of the Agha's refusal, we found that no one dared to accompany us. The Greek inhabitants, to whom we applied, told us, that if we were determined to go to the Palaco-castro, we must remain in Katarina until we could enter into some contract with the robbers who dwell there, and who are the only proper guides to such deserted places. This we would willingly have done; but our time of remaining in Turkey would not admit of such delay; and we were therefore reluctantly compelled to abandon the undertaking. The persons whom the Greeks of Katarina designate by the name of robbers, are probably nothing more than the Albanian mountaineers of Olympus; a set of men to whom any traveller may trust his safety, and in whose honour we would would gladly have confided. But it must be confessed, that their own countrymen, the Arnauts of Katarina, speak of a sturdy set of depredators in Olympus, whom they say even Ali Pasha has not been able to extirpate; and who sometimes lay the villages under contribution.

When our Tchohodar returned from the Agha, he had orders to procure lodging for us in the little cottage of an Arnaut, or Albanian peasant: and here we found a cabin, small indeed, but in neatness and cleanliness it might have vied with the dwelling of a Dutch boor. The floor consisted of the hard and well-swept earth; and the walls were covered with a yellow plaster, kept so clean, that it was without spot. This being the evening of the twenty-fifth of December, our thoughts were directed homewards, to our beloved country, in the recollection of the happiness and social mirth diffused around the hearths of Englishmen, by the annual recurrence of their greatest festival: and bating the privation sustained in so long an absence from all that was most dear to us, we had no reason to complain, either of our fare, or of our accommodation. We were regaled, it is true, in no spacious apartment; nor had we any other seat or couch than what the bare earth afforded; but this we had long learned to prefer before the sofas and cushions of the Turks or Greeks, which always swarm with vermin. As for our banquet, we must have been indeed fastidious if we had been dissatisfied on this account; as, in addition to our own provisions of bread and coffee and tea, from Larissa, a huge Albanian turkey smoked upon the floor; and, after a plentiful repast, the evening of our Christmas-day day was spent in comfort and repose. Future travellers in Greece will do well to profit by our experience, with respect to the Albanian peasantry,—a race as distinct as possible from all the other inhabitants of the country. We never had reason to complain, when we consented to forego the accommodation offered in Greek houses for a night's lodging beneath their humbler sheds. The Greeks are, for the most part, indolent and profligate, vain, obsequious, ostentatious, poor and dirty. The Albanians are industrious, independent, honourable, cleanly, and hospitable. They are a hardier and a healthier race; passing their lives, sub dio, either in the fields or upon the mountains: their sons possess a manlier disposition than the offspring of the Greeks, who are always effeminate; and the daughters of Albanians are not characterized by those relaxed habits and that early fading which may be observed in the Grecian damsels. A girl of Grecian parents scarcely attains her twentieth year before she begins to exhibit the marks of a premature old age; and all the Grecian women exhibit a matronly appearance long before they enter into the marriage state. Some of them are, it is true, exceedingly beautiful; and Nature seems to have been more lavish in the distribution of female charms among the Grecian than among the Albanian women; because the Albanian women have almost all of them the complexion and the features of gipsies: but then the former seldom display the natural beauties which they possess; they make their appearance disguised by cosmetics and paint, and by the artificial ornaments of false hair; tricked out, at the same time, by all sorts of finery, and smelling of essences and of musk. The Albanian

Women.

Albanian women are fond of finery,—and, indeed, where are the women, except in highly civilized society, who are not fond of it?—but the Albanian finery consists, principally, in a display of colours strongly contrasted; and their dress is remarkable for the scrupulous attention to cleanliness by which it is distinguished. As the costume is uniformly the same, a description of the dress worn by one of the Albanian women will serve to give a general idea of the appearance exhibited by all of them. It consists of the following articles of attire; the difference between the lower class and the higher, in their apparel, being found only in the costliness of its materials.

1. A napkin fastened tight over the forehead, falling to the shoulders behind, and in front, on either side of the head, below the chin.
2. Great quantity either of silver or gold coin, hanging about the temples and under the chin, and braided behind into the hair, which hangs in long tresses down the back, reaching to the calves of the legs; the rest of the hair being only visible above the ears and temples.
3. An embroidered shift, richly worked in front, and covering the arms as far as the hands.
4. A sash, or girdle, of blue stuff.
5. Short plaided hose, with lively colours, like those worn by Scotch Highlanders.
6. Slippers of yellow leather.
7. An embroidered jacket over the shift, reaching to the elbows and ankles; trimmed round the lower skirts with fringe.
8. Another richly embroidered jacket over the first, but without sleeves, reaching only to the knees.

After

After all, a faithful drawing of this costume would represent it much better than any description can do: but costumes of the inhabitants of different nations, however accurately designed and coloured as to the dresses, almost always fail in the delineation of characteristic features; because nothing but a faithful portrait painter can trace those modifications of the human countenance which denote particular regions¹.

On Saturday, December the twenty-sixth, we left Katarina; journeying towards the east, over a wretched sandy common covered with brakes². In the plains near Katarina, the Arnaut shepherds are seen armed with large pistols and poignards. Their dogs make a singular appearance, wearing body-clothes; the only instance we had ever seen of the same kind. The animals under their care, besides sheep, were hogs, buffaloes, and oxen. The Christian inhabitants of this district complain heavily of Turkish oppression: the sight of a family stripped of all its property, for no other reason than that of professing the Christian religion, is not uncommon: the consequence is, that some pretend to be Mahometans whose hearts are well disposed towards Christianity; and many have no definable religion whatsoever. In the road from Katarina to Kitros, the termination of Olympus towards towards the west, or rather west-south-west, becomes visible; and after its declension in that direction, begins the acclivity of another mountain, also of considerable height, which at this season was entirely covered with snow; continuing the great chain or mountain barrier, in the same line with OLYMPUS and OSSA;—these three being all that are in view, like a vast wall between Macedonia and Thessaly, reaching from the earth to the clouds. In this road from Katarina to Kitros, there are two places where antiquities are found; both of them being upon the left of the route. We turned out of our way to visit them. The first place occurs distant only three quarters of an hour from Katarina; at a village which lies in a valley towards the left; not visible from the road. Here we found several fragments of sculpture and architecture; and among them the following inscription, upon a monument erected, as it is stated, by “ULPIA THE DAUGHTER OF HERMÆUS, TO ULPUS RUSTICUS, HER DEAR HUSBAND.” The form of the Omega is curious.

(1) A remarkable proof of this occurs in the magnificent work of Mons. de Choiseul. In that work, the dresses worn by the Grecian women in the islands of the Archipelago are faithfully designed; but the females themselves are all Parisian. In English books of voyages and travels, the delineation of countenance is even less attended to; as in Cook's Voyages, where the inhabitants of the Pacific Ocean were represented with Grecian features. With respect to the inhabitants of Turkey, the work of Mr. Hobhouse may be mentioned as the only publication containing any faithful pictures of the women of the country.

The inhabitants told us that there were other inscriptions in the church of this village; but so much delay was likely to be incurred in getting it open, that we could not wait to see them. The next occurred at an hour's distance from Katarina; where, in the wall of a small chapel, near to the road, we found

We observed here marks of the foundations of a temple; and upon the mountain, still farther to the left, there were other vestiges. It is somewhat singular that the natives now call the place where the antiquities lie, by the name of MAKEΔONIA. "It is a name," they said, "which they always give to the land there; not to any Palæo-castro." The roads were deep, and full of mud, rendering our journey tedious and disagreeable: we were however amply repaid for all our fatigue, whenever we looked back towards Katarîna; for then we beheld OLYMPUS, not only in undiminished glory, but seeming of greater magnitude than ever, being without a cloud to obscure any part either of its summit or sides; all its vast masses and deep chasms being displayed, so that the eye might range from its broad base upwards to its craggy tops, now radiant with bright and shining light, reflected from accumulated snows, and contrasted with the dark shadows of its awful bosom; beneath which, most beautifully picturesque, appeared the woods of Katarîna, with the dome and minarets of the town conspicuous among the trees. an hour's distance from this chapel, ascending a hill, we had another noble prospect, but in an opposite direction : it commanded the whole of the THERMÆAN GULPH ; MOUNT ATHOS appearing plainly to the east : also upon the opposite side of the gulph we saw distinctly the white walls and buildings of SALONICA. Far beyond a range of hills situate at the back of the city, and towards the north, we saw a very elevated snow-clad mountain ; and upon inquiring its name, were told that it is called Maleshivo. This can be no other than the SCOMIUS of Thucydides. We must continue the detail of objects hence visible, because it is made from notes written upon the spot. In the open sea, to the south of Mount Athos, we saw islands, and several high lands that seemed like islands, not one of whose names can be ascertained by any map of Greece : possibly the latter may have been the promontories of Ampelos and Canâstræum. From this spot we also surveyed the whole of the plain surrounding the extremity of the Gulph of Therma. In this plain, upon the right hand, standing towards the sea, is an immense Tumulus, making a conspicuous and remarkable appearance, as the only principal object : it is now called ΤΥΜΒΟΣ by the Greek peasants. Thence we came to the village of Kitros, or Kitro, distant three hours from Katarina. Before we reached the village, we saw, upon our left, the ruins of a chapel ; marking, perhaps, the site of an antient temple. Here we dined upon olives, onions, and biscuit, with very good wine, which we bought in the place. Kitros is indisputably the Macedonian ΚΥDNA, a name antiently corrupted into the

the more memorable appellation of ΠΥΔΝΑ¹, whose geographical position is pointed out by an observation of Livy, when he states that Ænia, upon the other side of the gulph, fifteen miles to the south of Thessalonica, was opposite to ΠΥΔΝΑ². The alteration of Kydna into Pydna, as mentioned by Stephanus, must have been a corruption of the earliest antiquity; for, before the time of Herodotus, it was written Pydna by Scylax of *Caryanda*³: however there is some testimony, even in its modern name, of the truth of the remark made by Stephanus;—if that name may be called modern, which is mentioned in the Epitome of *Strabo*⁴. Here we learn that the embouchure of the Haliacmon was to the north of Dium, in Pieria; and that the city of ΠΥΔΝΑ occurred in the same district, bearing the appellation of Kitros. The same may be gathered from Ptolemy; only with this difference, that the places are enumerated in a contrary order, from north to *south*⁵. It is desirable to fix with with certainty the position of a place rendered so remarkable in history. It was in the plain before *Pydna*¹ that the great battle was fought between the Macedonians and the Romans, when the former, by their signal defeat, forfeited for ever their freedom, and Macedonia became a Roman province². The conspicuous tomb before mentioned decidedly marks the spot; and its immense magnitude is explained by the event of that battle, when twenty-five thousand of the Macedonian army were left dead upon the field³. It is the same species of sepulchre which Strabo has called Polyandrium; and this tumulus was in all probability noticed by him in that part of the seventh book which has unfortunately perished. It seems to have been a custom of the Greeks, derived from their remote ancestors, to raise a mound of this kind upon every spot signalized as the theatre of any important contest. In the course of these travels, and within the compass of a single volume, we have shewn that there is not a part of Greece which has been rendered illustrious as the field of any memorable battle, but a tomb of this description now remains, as a monument of the place where it was fought. This may be proved with reference to Marathon, Thermopylæ, Platææ, Leuctra, Chæronæa, Pydna, and Pharsalia. The

Macedonians

(2) This battle was fought on the twenty-second of June, b. c. 168; when twenty-five thousand men of the army of Perseus king of Macedon were slain by the Romans within the compass of an hour. It began at three o'clock in the afternoon, and ended before four. Vide Plutarch. in Vit. Paul. Æm. &c.

(3) Ibid. Plutarch says, that the whole valley, even to the feet of the mountains, was covered with dead bodies.

Macedonians and Greeks, after their battles with the Persians, with the Romans, or with each other, have always done this: but the same custom does not appear to have existed among the Romans in Italy, where there are no other tumuli than the barrows of the Celts, which are common to all Europe and Asia. In the great battle that was fought between Hannibal and the Romans, under *Flaminius*⁴, near the Lake Thrasymenus, in Perusia, fifteen thousand Romans were left dead upon the field: yet there is no tumulus of this kind to mark the spot; insomuch that it is not now precisely known where the battle of Thrasymene took place; some believing it to have happened at Ossaia, and others at the Ponte di sanguigno, between Torricella and Crotona. But the POLYANDRIUM of the battle of Pydna, like that in the Plain of Marathon, and the others here alluded to, is a conspicuous, nay, almost an everlasting monument, of that sanguinary conflict; and the Albanian shepherds, tending their flocks around it, although unconscious of its covering the mouldered reliques of their ancestors, are the unaltered descendants of the same race of heroes who fought and died for the liberties of MACEDON;—“mighty men, as of old, men of renown; girded with the weapons of war.” This place has been rendered memorable for the shedding of other blood than that which flowed so copiously in the battle of Pydna: it was here that Cassander massacred Olympias the mother, Roxana the wife, and and Alexander the son of *Alexander the Great*¹. And, as if it were destined in after-ages to maintain a pre-eminence among the scenes that have witnessed human slaughter, it was at Kitros, and along this road to Salonica, that the French prisoners, when compelled by the Turks to march from the Morea to Constantinople, suffered every cruelty that the malice of their enemies could inflict: many of them, after seeing their drooping companions put to death by their conductors, because they were unable, through sickness and fatigue, to continue the route, were constrained to carry the heads of their comrades in sacks, that an accurate return of the whole number might be made upon their arrival in the capital.

Leuterochori.

From Kitros we went to the village of *Leuterochori*², situate upon an eminence near to the gulph, distant about five miles from *Kitros*³. From this place we intended to pass by water to Salonica; but when we arrived, we discovered that the persons who conducted our baggage, instead of halting, as they had been ordered to do, had proceeded forward with it to Lebáno. The space between Leuterochori and Kitros agrees with the distance mentioned by Strabo's Epitomiser,

(3) We were only one hour in going thither; which, at the usual rate of travelling in Turkey, makes it rather less than five miles: but distances computed by time are not to be relied upon, unless performed with caravans of camels, which are generally preceded by an ass going a foot's pace, at the rate of a league an hour.

Epitomiser, of forty stadia between PYDNA and METHONE⁴: and the last-mentioned city occurs in this order, according to the description given of Macedonia by *Scylax*⁵. But these are not the only reasons for believing that Leuterochori stands upon the site of METHONE. After leaving this place, in the road to Salonica, the territory of the Bey of Seres immediately begins; and, according to the antient boundaries of the two regions, METHONE was the last town of Pieria; upon leaving which, the traveller entered *Botticea*⁶. This seems to prove an inaccuracy of the former geographer, in placing the Haliacmon river southwards towards Dium; because, according to the older authority of Scylax, enumerating the places from south to north, along the western side of the Gulph of Therma, this river occurred after passing the city of METHONE⁷. It was at the siege of Methone that Philip lost the sight of his right eye, when struck by an arrow from the citadel; a circumstance perhaps as well attested as any fact in history, being related by *Strabo*⁸, by Diodorus, *Diodorus*¹, by *Pliny*², by Solinus, and by *Justin*³. With regard to the particular river across which Philip swum upon that occasion, as to most of the others crossing this route in their passage from Olympus, there will always be some uncertainty; unless their antient names were to be determined by a residence in the country; because the appearances vary so considerably in different seasons of the year. The traveller journeying through this country at the melting of the snow, or after the annual rains, would find his search for a single stream repaid by half a dozen; and during the dry season, perhaps, nothing answering to his notion of a river would occur. The author finds a note in his journal, stating, that he did not pass a single river between Katarina and Lebano; a distance of six hours. At the latter place we halted for the night. The whole of this journey from Katarina was through a country, *fertile*⁴ perhaps, but looking most wretchedly; and it may be conceived what a state the roads were in, from the circumstance of our making no further progress during an entire day. At Lebano we were conducted to the same khan where the poor Frenchmen, before mentioned, were halted for the night, during their horrid march to Constantinople. "They were seen," said the inhabitants, "carrying the heads of their their wives and of their children, and of others who had been their companions upon the road, whom the Turks had beheaded as fast as they fell sick by the way, because they were unable to keep up with the rest." Many of them fell for want of food, and some through grief and despair. It is said that at this place they excited the commiseration even of Mahometans, who carried food and water for them to the khan where they were lodged⁵. Whether Lebáno was the antient ALORUS or not, depends entirely upon the manner in which we are permitted to read a short passage, as given from *Strabo*⁶, respecting the distances of Methone, Pydna, and Alorus. If by seventy stadia be intended the distance of the two last from each other, then Lebáno is proved to have been ALORUS; but if this be assigned as the distance between Methone and Alorus, which seems to be the reading in this instance, Lebáno is not situate far enough towards the north.

Alorus.

We left this village two hours before sun-rise; and kept to the left, along the plain at the extremity of the Gulph of Therma, at some distance from the sea, to avoid the swampy shores,

(5) Whosoever shall become the faithful historian of the events as they occurred within a short time after the breaking out of the French Revolution, will find that the annals of the world do not furnish more dreadful instances of human suffering than were compressed within the period of a few years towards the close of the eighteenth and beginning of the nineteenth centuries. To some of those afflicting sights the author of these Travels was an eye-witness: it seemed as if that BEING, who is "of purer eyes than to behold evil, and cannot look upon iniquity," had withdrawn his countenance from the earth: for it was such a season as Habakkuk has called "THE HIDING OF HIS POWER."

shores, and the mouths of the rivers, which were all inundated. Then we turned to the right; and in two hours came to a large river, which was much flooded, called Inge Mauro. This river we passed by a flying bridge. A poor Turk attended the ferry, living in a wretched hovel constructed of osiers and mud. We observed here a change in the dress of the peasants. Over the white cotton Albanian shift and short petticoat, they wore a black vest made of goats' hair, without sleeves; and for their head-dress, white cotton handkerchiefs, with bunches of red silk over their foreheads, and silver ornaments in their ears. Continuing our journey across wet and dirty plains, we arrived, in three hours from the Inge Mauro ferry, at another large river, with a similar mode of passage, called Kara-smack by the Turks, and Mauro-smack by the Greeks; the difference being only in the epithet, as applied to the name of the river¹. Here we began to see a little cultivated land; our previous journey during this day having been through flat commons covered with water and mud. Two hours after passing the Mauro-smack, we saw, towards our left, a village called Yanitza, at the base of a mountain, by the foot of which flows the river *Vardar*². We crossed this river by a wooden bridge formed

(1) This river must be the Lydias, after having received the waters of the Erigon: but Herodotus mentions the confluence of the two rivers, Lydias and Haliacmon; the latter of which was farther towards the south. Vid. Herodotum, Hist. lib. vii. c. 127. p. 419. ed. Gronovii.

The current was extremely strong: it is the AXIUS of Herodotus; separating the Mygdonian from the Bottiwian territory³, where Pella stood; and it is now called the Vardar. The same river is also mentioned, under the name of AXIUS, by the venerable *Scylax*⁴. As we surveyed the marshy district in which PELLA was situated, we wished to note every thing that characterized the place of Alexander's nativity; but it is remarkable, that so soon as the traveller quits the Grecian territories, where every object became conspicuous either in its name or in some circumstance of situation or history, he is left almost without a clue to the ancient geography of the country. Owing to this circumstance, the mountain at whose base the village of Yanitza now stands is without a name. The site of Pella, however, is said to be known, which cannot have been far removed from the same spot; and it would indeed be marvellous if it were not well known⁵, after such a description as that and to the high mountains beyond Caradar, eight days' journey from Salonica. Those shepherds relate, that in a swamp, which trembles when a man walks upon it, there is a spring, which rises from the earth so as to form a river upon the spot eleven yards wide from bank to bank. Soon afterwards it becomes augmented by seven other tributary streams (called rivers by the shepherds); but the true source of the Vardar, they say, is this powerful fountain." *Cripps's MS. given by Livy of its locality¹. The allusion made to Pella by Herodotus is less descriptive of its position². In visiting places that have been rendered illustrious by the birth of famous men, it is natural to inquire if there be any thing in the scenes of their infancy and youth which was likely to turn the mind towards the characteristic bent it afterwards assumed. We have already described a country which was the nursery of inventive genius and poetry: it will therefore now be curious to examine the nature of another land whence a spirit of martial enterprise, of high ambition, and the most unbounded prospects of conquest, of dominion, and of glory, derived their origin. The inhabitants of mountains, and of maritime districts, of inland territories, lakes, and marshes, or of extensive arid plains and deserts, are so generally characterized by dispositions bearing some stamp of their native region, that it were almost as nugatory to dispute the with what Beaujour has said of Yénidgé; and if so, it is highly probable that it stands upon or near to the site of Pella: for Beaujour adds in a Note; "Il ne reste plus de Pella que quelques ruines insignifiantes: mais on voit encore le pourtour de son magnifique port, et les vestiges du canal qui joignait ce port à la mer par le niveau le mieux entendu. the fact, as it would be to expect sublimity in the soul of a Dutchman, or any thing hostile to freedom in the mind of a Norwegian. With regard to the scene of Alexander's birth, it may be truly said, all that Nature hath anywhere exhibited of vast and sublime objects, possessing either greatness, or beauty, or utility, had their counterpart here: mountains, and hills, and valleys, and plains, and rivers, and seas, and islands, were spread before his eyes from the hour of his birth; and these, too, were simultaneously invested by every feature peculiar to all seasons; by upland ice and snow; by lowland verdure, and by summer suns; by barren rocks, and by fertile fields; altogether constituting such an assemblage of the works of Nature, as suggested to the bard of Israel his sacred theme of power and might and majesty and *dominion*³. Almost the first object on which his sight rested, was the awful form of Olympus, believed to be the throne of Heaven itself,—the seat of all the immortal Gods⁴; the grandeur of whose appearance can only be felt by those who come here to view it. There is a passage in Herodotus which mentions this prospect as beheld by Xerxes from THERMA; but who would have supposed, simply from observing the situation of these places in a map, that Olympus appears of such magnitude from the modern town of Salonica, as to fill all all the prospect towards the western side of the Thermæan Gulph, and actually to dazzle the eyes of the beholder with the radiance reflected from its snow-clad summit¹? Instead of seeming remote from the place of observation, so prodigious is its magnitude, that when the clouds disperse, which are often collected around the mountain, it appears to be close to the view.

News of the Plague.

After we had crossed the bridge of planks, and were proceeding in our route, we heard the disagreeable intelligence that the plague was raging with great vehemence in SALONICA. Rumours of the same nature had before reached us during the journey from Larissa; but reports of the plague in Turkey are so liable to exaggeration, that we had paid no attention to them. We heard that many of the inhabitants were leaving the city; and some Tartars told us that the number of deaths had daily increased to an alarming extent. There was, however, no alternative for us, but to venture into the midst of the contagion; for our resources were expended, and we were in want of all kinds of necessaries. We saw upon our left, in the plain, near to a village called Bounarchi, an immense tumulus of earth; retaining still, among the inhabitants, the name of τύμβος; and near to it there was another of smaller size. In this plain, four-wheeled carriages were in use. About two hours' distance from the Vardar, we arrived at a miserable village, called Tekâle, or Tekélly. There were several antiquities

about this place; among others, some granite columns, and a very beautiful operculum of an immense marble Soros. As we viewed the mountains lying to the north of THESSALONICA, and compared their appearance with the forlorn blank that characterizes all the maps of the country between the Hebrus and the Axius, we could but regret that they have been so rarely visited by travellers. The whole of *Æmathia*² is as a void space in antient geography. We know nothing of Pæonia or Pelagonia, or of the whole region westward to the borders of Illyria. There must now be a communication along the *Via Ignatia*³, from the north of the Gulph of Therma to the Illyrian coast of the Adriatic; and this, some future traveller will do well to explore:—for where are the cities of *LYCHNIDUS*⁴, and ÆGÆ, called also *Melobotira*⁵, and

(3) The whole passage of Strabo concerning the Via Ignatia should be read with attention: it defines with great perspicuity the boundaries of Illyria, Epirus, and Macedonia. We shall only insert the following passage, relating to the beginning of its course from Epidamnus to Thessalonica.—Ἡ μὲν οὖν πᾶσα Ἰγνατία καλεῖται, ἣ δὲ πρώτη ἐπὶ Καρδανίας λίγεται ἕρως Ἰλλυρικοῦ ἐπὶ Λυχνιδίου πόλεως καὶ Πυλῶνος, τόπον ὀρίζοντος ἐν τῇ ἀπὸ τὴν τε Ἰλλυρία καὶ τὴν Μακεδονίαν ἐκείθεν δὲ ἐστὶ παρά βαροῦντα διὰ Ἡρακλείας, καὶ Λυγκιστῶν, καὶ Ἐορδῶν, εἰς ἙΔΕΣΑΝ καὶ ΠΕΛΛΑΝ, μίχου Θισσαλονικίας. *Strabon. (4) See the Vignette to the next Chapter. STRABO calls it Lychnidius. It is thus mentioned by LIVY: "Nuncius ex Macedoniâ venit, Eropum quemdam corrupto arcis præsidii que præfecto, Lychnidum cepisse; tenere et Dassaretiorum quosdam vicos et Dardanos etiam concire." *Livio, Hist. lib. xxvii. c. 32. and more antiently *Ædessa*¹, the regal seat of the Macedonian kings²? We entered Macedonia in the hope that, of all its antient cities, this at least would not escape our researches; for in ÆGÆ were preserved the sepulchres of Alexander's predecessors: and a superstition existed concerning the burial of the kings of Macedon, similar to that which is so well known in Italy with regard to the Popes; that their dominion would cease when the bodies of the sovereigns were no longer buried in the same cemetery. The discovery therefore of the ruins of ÆGÆ would be particularly gratifying; because, in the examination of the regal tombs of the Macedonians, we should for the first time be made acquainted with their manner of burial, and able to ascertain whether the Grecian Soros was of Macedonian or of Ægyptian origin³;—a very important point of antient history, that which relates to the Aborigines of Greece resting mainly upon this single fact, which has never been determined. The remains of Soroi are very common in Macedonia: we have already alluded to their appearance at Katarina, and other places along this route; and they are seen as cisterns in Salonica: but the use of such sepulchres may have been introduced long after the fall fall of the Macedonian empire: and as all our inquiries respecting Ægæ' were made to no purpose, we are unable to illustrate that very curious part of the history of the Macedonians which relates to their mode of sepulture. Every inquiry concerning this people is becoming revived, with a redoubled interest, in the knowledge we have that they were of the same race with the nation now called Albanians; and that the latter have preserved the manners, customs, and language of the Macedonians, almost unaltered, from the earliest ages. It is therefore only by a careful examination of the antiquities occurring along the Via Ignatia, and by a strict attention paid to the habits and superstitions of the Albanians, that any additional light can be

One of these queries related to Edessa, and to the Sepulchres of the Macedonian Kings. He has, in consequence, recently been permitted to make the following extract from a manuscript Letter of his friend Mr. Fiott, of St. John's College, Cambridge, to his fellow collegian, Mr. Hughes; whereby it appears, that Mr. Fiott has succeeded in discovering the spot, and actually went himself into one of those sepulchres. "If a Firmān could be procured from Ali Pasha of Joannina, I am confident," says Mr. Fiott, "that there would be found at EDESSA treasures of antiquities. The place is now called Vodina: it is a delightful spot. There are sepulchres cut in the rock, which the superstitious inhabitants have never plundered; because they are afraid to go near them. I went into two, and saw THE BODIES IN PERFECT REPOSE, WITH SOME KINDS OF ORNAMENTS, AND CLOTHES, AND VASES; but touched them not, and paid little attention to them; being at that time a novice in the sexton trade, and ignorant that a traveller could gain celebrity and honour by robbing the bodies of the dead. There is a beautiful inscription in the town. The fall of waters is magnificent."—Fiott's MS. Letter. To this it may be added, that Beaujour also mentions Vodina as the antient EDESSA. *Voy. be thrown upon the earliest annals of the Macedonians, or any thing be recovered respecting that extraordinary nation. It may be remarked, that the learned writers of their history, as it was published in the middle of the last century¹, who with the most patient investigation seem to have ransacked every source of information with regard to the Macedonians, have left their readers entirely in the dark concerning their *funeral customs*²: so that nothing is yet known of the form of their sepulchres, although we have a decisive document to prove that the Macedonian rite of burial³ differed from the ceremony in use among the Greeks. Plutarch, indeed, has once made an allusion to the tombs of the Macedonian kings, at ÆGÆ, when he mentions that the Gauls, whom Pyrrhus left to garrison the city, had violated the regal sepulchres, and stolen out the gold and silver they contained. All that we learn from this is, that a custom which was common to all Eastern nations, that of burying with a deceased person his most costly ornaments, existed also among the Macedonians; but this practice was so general in remote ages, that owing to the laws against violating the sanctity sanctity of a tomb⁵, and the universal respect always paid towards its preservation⁶, many of the monarchs of antiquity, as a measure of policy, made the tombs of their ancestors answer the purpose of places for hoarding their wealth⁷; perhaps corresponding with those deposits alluded to in inscriptions under the denomination of "THE MOST SACRED TREASURY⁸." It is remarkable that the monuments of Macedonian power, of every description, should be so rare as they are in this country. While the whole of Greece, Egypt, and the most distant parts of Asia, partook of the magnificence of Alexander, there is hardly a trace of his existence

(5) By the Salic law it was enacted, that whoever violated a tomb should be banished as a monster from the society of men; and that none should give him refuge, not even the members of his own family, under the severest penalties.

(6) So great respect has ever been given to sepulchres, that the most zealous Christian princes have extended it even to those of the Heathens. For besides the Emperor Constans, who of all monarchs most abhorred Paganism, the Canons of the fourth Council of Toledo (Concil. Tolct. 4. Canon. 45.), together with those of that of Meaux (Canon. 72.), or Paris, make the violation of a grave a capital crime. The Moslem Emperors, particularly Selim, after the conquest of Egypt, returning to the Holy Land, and seeing the tombs of Christian princes in Jerusalem who, under Godfrey of Boüillon, recovered that country from the Mahometans, prohibited their violation.

(7) Hyrcaus, high-priest of Jerusalem, seeing the city besieged by Antiochus, took out of David's sepulchre three thousand talents.

(8) See Part II. of these Travels, Section the First, Chap. VI. p. 160. Brozè. 1812. The opinion therefore entertained by the Turks of concealed wealth among the ruins of Greece and Syria may possibly have originated in the occasional discovery of treasures in the tombs. Dr. Holland says, (Travels, p. 526. Lond. 1815.) that he could not convince even Ali Pasha of "the improbability that there should be concealed treasures among the ruins:" possibly the Pasha had good reason to believe in a contrary opinion. The immense treasure found by the Russians in Tartarian tombs has been alluded to by the author, upon a former occasion. See "Tomb of Alexander," p. 51. Cambriège, 1805.

existence remaining in his native country. It is yet more singular that the coins of Philip and Alexander are seldom found in Macedonia, although they are so common elsewhere.

The rest of our journey from Tekde was over the plains of the Vardar. After a ride of two hours, we arrived at Salonica;—the Thessalonica of a former age, and more antiently called THERMA'. Before we entered the town, we saw in the level plain upon our left hand, close to the road, the largest and most perfect conical tumulus which perhaps exists in all Turkey. The circumference of its base measures two hundred and seventy-seven paces; and the distance from the base to the summit from sixty-six to seventy yards. In the silence of history concerning this tomb, it is permitted to conjecture, that it may possibly cover the remains of those Thessalonians who fell in the battle fought here against Philip the Second; no other instance having occurred likely to cause a tumulus of this magnitude so near to the walls of Salonica.

(1) Stephanus (de Urbib. p. 306. ed. Gronov. Amst. 1678) says it was antiently called HALIA, ἡ γὰρ παλαιὰ ἱκαλεῖτο Ἀλία; but from Strabo we learn that its antient name was THERMA: ἡ Θεσσαλονίκη ἐστὶν πόλις, ἢ πρότερον ΘΕΡΜΗ ἱκαλεῖτο, κ. τ. λ. Vid. Excerpt. Strabon. Geog. lib. vii. p. 480. ed. Oxon. It was so called from some hot baths in its neighbourhood. Pococke found some hot springs at four miles distance from Salonica. CHAP. XI.
 Hospitality and Kindness of the English Consul.

WE were conducted to the house of Mr. Charnaud, the English Consul; of whose hospitality and most liberal offices every traveller of late years hath given grateful testimony¹. We shall begin our account of Salonica, by adding our memorial to the rest: because, at a time when the plague was so rife that his gates had been closed against all intruders, and even his provisions were daily received through one of those turning machines that are used in convents, he nevertheless threw open his doors for us, and welcomed our coming, in a manner which we can never forget. It was indeed a luxury to us to spend two or three days in his comfortable mansion, during the long journey from Athens to Constantinople; as it was almost the only place of real rest, amidst the severe fatigue which a traveller must encounter, who undertakes to perform this route by land:—and to the comfortable accommodation afforded in his house, Mr. Charnaud was enabled to add the advantages of polished society; possessing himself the easy manners and the information of a gentleman who has been liberally educated. Having introduced us to his family, he also invited to meet us, a French surgeon, and another gentleman of the name of Abbott, who is called the Father of the Levant Company, brother to a merchant whose house we had frequented at Constantinople. Mr. Abbott desired that we would use his house as our home while we remained; and and he introduced us to the ladies of his family. Here we found, as at Mr. Charnaud's, some affable and pleasing women, seated, after the Eastern manner, upon the couches of a diván, who entertained us by their vivacity, and great curiosity to know all the objects of our journey. To our surprise, they amused us with anecdotes respecting our friends and acquaintance at Constantinople; and seemed to be as well acquainted with all that had taken place when we were last in that city, as if they had actually mingled in the society there. Having congratulated them upon possessing such cheerfulness, in the midst of a city which had been described to us as the very centre of contagion, they laughed, saying, they never troubled their heads by thinking of the plague: if it came, they must take their chance: that it was confined principally to the bazars, in the lower part of the town, and to the quarter inhabited by the Jews, with whom they had no intercourse. Unfortunately, this part of the city contained almost the only antiquity worth seeing in the place—the Propylæa of the antient Hippodrome, or of the Forum: and we had determined not to leave Salonica without obtaining a sight of the famous alto-relievos there preserved. This, it was said, we might do, if we were only careful not to suffer any person to touch us: and as our excellent friend Mr. Charnaud, more concerned than any other person in the consequences of our going thither, was urgent that we should see all the antiquities, we determined to venture. We had escaped the contagion in Bethlehem, where the plague raged with even greater fury; and had therefore reason to hope that the same precautions we had there used might also be the means of our safety here.

The

Walls of the City.

The walls of Salonica give a very remarkable appearance to the town, and cause it to be seen from a great distance, being white-washed; and, what is still more extraordinary, they are also painted. They extend in a semicircular manner from the sea, inclosing the whole of the buildings within a peribolus, whose circuit is five or six miles; but a great part of the space within the walls is void. It is one of the few remaining cities that have preserved the form of its antient fortifications;—the mural turrets yet standing, and the walls that support them being entire. Their antiquity is perhaps unknown; for although they have been ascribed to the Greek Emperors, it is very evident that they were constructed in two distinct periods of time; the old Cyclopæan masonry remaining in the lower part of them, surmounted by an upper structure of brick-work. The latter part only may properly be referred to the time of the Greek Emperors, being also characterized by the method of building which then became very general, of mixing broken columns, and fragments of the earlier productions of Grecian architecture and sculpture, confusedly among the work¹. Like all the antient and modern cities of Greece, its

(1) The author has before proved, from Thucydides, that such heterogeneous materials were used in constructing the walls of Athens, so long ago as the Peloponnesian War. See p. 99 of this Volume, and Note (1).

Mr. Walpole seems to have observed a separation between the antient and modern walls of Salonica. His situation of the Hippodrome may not perhaps be found to agree with that which the author has assigned for it, in the sequel, between the Rotunda and the sea. The beautiful Inscription which he found upon a marble Soros, and the account he has extracted from Camenitates, of the destruction of many of those monuments, will be considered, as it is by the author, a valuable addition to this part of his work.

“ In its wretched aspect within is forcibly contrasted with the beauty of the external appearance, rising in a theatrical form,

CHAP. XI.

“ In some parts, the distance between the antient and modern walls of the city is very small: the circuit therefore of Thessalonica, formerly, may not have been much greater than it is now; about six miles. A third of the town is occupied by the Jews; and in their quarter are seen five Corinthian columns supporting an entablature, over which are many figures in alto-relievo. At the south-east end of the town is the site of the Hippodrome. Some of the Christian churches, as those of Santa Sophia and San' Demetrius, have been converted into mosques: the number of Greek churches is now sixteen. Besides the Jews, who amount to 20,000, there are 12,000 Turks, 10,000 Greeks, and some Bulgarians.

“ Near the city walls, by the sea-shore, is a sarcophagus, now used as a reservoir for water. This is one remaining out of the many monuments of this kind, with which the city formerly abounded; and which were converted by the inhabitants of Thessalonica, in the tenth century, to the following use.—‘ To defend the part of the city open to the sea from the attack of the enemy, (says Cameniates, who wrote an account of the destruction of this city,) sarcophagi were thrown into the water; or, to use his own words, tombs cut out of one single stone, in which the Greeks antiently deposited their dead; Έκ μονολίθου γυγλυμμένοι τύμβοι, ἐν οἷς παλαι τοὺς ἱαντῶν νεκροὺς ἐνεταφίαζον Ἕλληρες. These were covered by the sea; and placed at small distances, to prevent the enemies' ships approaching.’

“ Perhaps the sarcophagus we saw was one brought to the sea-side for the purpose just mentioned; or it may have been recovered from the sea. On one side of it is a Greek Inscription, in hexameter verse, cut in letters of a low age. The four following are the concluding lines, written with that simplicity so characteristic of the Greek compositions of this kind:

ΟΙΤΑΥΤΩΜΕΤΟΙΗΣΘΕΝΟΗΣΕΝΟΙΑΜΗΑΤΕΣΘΑΙ

Walpole's MS. Journal.

We shall subjoin a copy of this beautiful Inscription, in the common Greek characters:

Τεῦξε δὲ τοῦδε τάφου φίλιος πῶς εὐτροπος αὐτῆ
Οἱ τ' αὐτῷ μετόπισθεν ὕψος ἔχει ἀμπαυσῆσαι form, upon the side of a hill surrounded with plantations of cyprus and other evergreen trees and shrubs. The houses are generally built of unburned bricks, and, for the most part, they are little better than so many hovels. The citadel stands in the higher part of the semicircular range from the shore; and there is a bastion, with a battery, at either extremity of the arc towards the sea, but no fosse on the outside of the walls'. Cassander changed the name of this city from Therma to Thessalonica, in honour of his wife, the daughter of Philip Amyntas, and a sister of Alexander the Great. For the truth of this, we have the high authority of *Strabo*³; therefore, however plausible the opinion of some antiquaries may be³, who would maintain that the change originated in a victory gained by Philip the Second, few will be inclined to adopt their belief. In consequence of the subjection of Macedon to the Roman power, after the fatal battle of Pydna, the country was divided into four districts, and Thessalonica was made the capital of the second. This city was the residence of Cicero, during a part of the time that he remained in exile. Many of the Emperors had divine honours rendered to them in Thessalonica;

(1) Beaujour, to whom the author acknowledges himself indebted for additions made to his own Notes, says of its fortifications, " Dans l'état actuel, elle est ouverte à la plus-foible escadre; et tout vaisseau armé en guerre peut y entrer, et de-là canonner la place, qui n'a pas, pour se défendre, quatre canons montés, et pas un canonier qui sache pointer." *Felix Beaujour Comm. de la Grèce, tom. Thessalonica; but Jupiter, as the father of Hercules, was its patron divinity. In the days of its prosperity, Thessalonica boasted of an Amphitheatre for gladiators, and also a Hippodrome for the solemnization of the public games. The Emperors Valerian and Gallienus raised it to the rank of a colonial city. In the citadel, according to *Beaujour*⁴, there may still be seen some pillars of the Verde-antico, or Atracian marble; from the quarries of which, on the other side of the gulph, it was not remotely situate. Those pillars are believed to be the remains of a temple of *Hercules*⁵. There is also a triumphal arch, erected under Marcus Aurelius; and, as an Inscription sets forth, in honour of ANTONINUS and FAUSTINA:

It is the old Greek citadel, or Acropolis; but the towers are said to have been built by the Venetians. the colossal Torso of a female statue, said to be that of the sister of Alexander the Great, daughter of Philip Amyntas, and wife of Cassander, from whom the city received its name. The remarkable tradition certainly entitles this Torso to some consideration. At the feet of the figure is represented the stern of a ship.

The day after our arrival, we visited the other principal antiquities of the place; but there may be many concealed, which we did not see. Beaujour mentions several fine structures of the Lower Empire; and he says, that Thessalonica ranks next to Athens, in the number of works left by the antients'.

Propyleum of the Hippodrome.

Our first visit was paid to that celebrated piece of architecture, which is represented, by a series of beautiful and very accurate engravings, in the splendid work of Athenian *Stuart*². This building is called, by the Spanish Jews who reside here, the INCANTADAS; meaning thereby, "enchanted figures." Being situate in the Jews' quarter, it marked at this time the very focus of the plague contagion. In consequence, however, of the alarm the disorder had occasioned, this part of the town was almost deserted; and we had leisure to examine the building, safe and unmolested. We found a magnificent Corinthian colonnade, consisting of five pillars supporting an entablature, and having four void spaces between the columns for entrance, as we supposed, into the Hippodrome, or the Forum; the design of the structure, and the subjects thereon thereon represented, being calculated for a magnificent PROPYLÆUM. The style of the workmanship, upon the whole, denotes the decline of the Arts; but there are parts of the sculpture that are very fine, as may be seen by reference to Stuart's valuable publication³. Over the entablature is an attic, adorned with figures in alto-relievo. These figures, upon the side next to the street, are:

- I. A representation of VICTORY.
- II. A Female, called HELEN by Stuart.
- III. A Male Figure naked, perhaps that of PARIS, in the old Grecian cap, with a Bull's Head by his side; but called that of Telephus by Stuart.
- IV. GANYMEDE carried by an Eagle.

Behind these figures, upon the opposite side of the structure, as a reverse, are:

- I. A BACCHANTE playing a Flute.
- II. BACCHUS, with a Panther.
- III. ARIADNE.
- IV. LEDA, with the Swan.

Stuart had adopted a notion, that all these figures related to some play of Euripides; and consequently explained them with reference to his tragedies. In his plan, elevation, and section of the Incantadas, he has given part of an Inscription which he observed upon the lower part of the entablature, extending below the whole length of the frieze⁴:

Ν Γ Ε Γ Ε Ν Η Μ Ε Ν Ο Ν Υ Π Ο

This escaped our notice; but imperfect as it is, some conjecture, conjecture, as to the history of the building, may perhaps hereafter be thereby suggested. The figure of Leda is made reverse to that of Ganymede; and the four reverse figures are executed in sculpture very inferior to that of the four front figures above the inscription. The figure of Paris, in the old Grecian cap, with the bull's head, is in a capital style of sculpture; but that of Ariadne behind, is very badly executed. Behind the figure of Victory is the Bacchante, who is playing the flute. The whole of the sculpture is executed in the marble of Mount Pentelicus: probably, therefore, it was brought from Athens; for the columns are of Cipolino marble. These double alto-relievos are made to sustain the upper architrave of the attic, after the manner of Caryatides: it consists of three pieces, the joints being over the two middle Caryatidæ. If this building were not intended, as we have supposed, for a Propylæum to the Hippodrome (which was consistent with the taste and customs of antient Greece), it may possibly have answered as part of a square inclosure for an agora, or forum; but even in this case it must appear to have been one of the entrances to the same. Beaujour thinks that it was erected in the time of Nero; and he considers the alto-relievos as the finest pieces of Grecian sculpture that have escaped the ravages of time and of barbarians'. The figures are as large as life. Many attempts have been made, both on the part of the English and French, to get them removed; but the Turkish Pasha, to whom applications were made for that purpose, would not not give his consent. The diameter of the Corinthian columns equals three feet six inches; but the soil has risen so considerably, that all the lower part of their shafts is buried.

After seeing the Incantadas, we went to the ROTUNDA; an edifice built after the model of the Pantheon at Rome. The great prevalence of the worship of the CABIRI in Macedonia and Thrace has induced some to believe that this was a temple consecrated to their mysteries. Beaujour maintains, that he can prove this fact from the subjects represented upon the medals of Thessalonica, and that the temple was built under *Trajan*². In the beautiful dome of this edifice there is a circular aperture, as in that of the Pantheon. The inside of the building is covered with Mosaic, like the dome of St. Sophia at Constantinople. In front of it, we saw a magnificent marble Béna, or pulpit, ornamented in basso-relievo. We saw also at a fountain this part of an Inscription; mentioning the name, either of Cassander, or of some citizen of CASSANDRÉA, upon the Isthmus of *Pallene*³.

 drome.

In the space between this Rotunda and the sea, was situate the Hippodrome; a magnificent area, in form of an ellipse, surrounded by an immense Coilon, whose major axis, measured from north to south, equalled five hundred and twenty yards in extent, and its minor axis one hundred and sixty. To the west of it was the palace of Diocletian, supported upon arches, the vestiges whereof are still visible. The mention of this Hippodrome will not be introduced without an allusion to the massacre that once inundated its area with human blood; for it was here that Theodosius, the Roman emperor, who is extolled by antient writers as a sovereign blessed with every virtue, principally wreaked his vengeance on the inhabitants of Thessalonica, for the death of one of his officers; when he caused six thousand innocent persons, without distinction of age or sex, to be cruelly butchered within the space of three hours; for which Ambrose afterwards caused him to do public penance in the church.

Church of St.
 Sophia.

From the Rotunda we went to see the church of St. Sophia. Mr. Charnaud accompanied us. This building is now a mosque, corresponding in all its proportions with that which bears the same name in Constantinople; but being of less magnitude. It is, however, exceedingly well worth seeing, owing to the columns of Verde-antico which it contains: they are mentioned by *Pococke*¹. There is also here another extraordinary Béna, or Suggestum, made also of the Verde-antico, with steps leading up to it; the whole being of one entire mass of this beautiful substance.

The

The quantity of it in Salonica seems only to be explained in the vicinity of the city to the place where we observed its natural deposit in the Vale of Tempe. They have a tradition, that when St. Paul preached at Thessalonica, he delivered his discourse from this pulpit. Insignificant as such a tradition may appear, it is nevertheless noticed by almost every traveller who has written an account of the place. Pococke mentions it, but with some difference; for he refers the place of St. Paul's preaching to a subterraneous church beneath the mosque of St. Demetrius. This mosque we also visited: it was once the metropolitan church. Its form is that of a cross. Pococke calls this the most beautiful mosque in the town: on each side is a double colonnade of pillars of the Verde-antico, with Ionic capitals; and the whole of the interior was lined with marble, great part of which remains. It is about seventy yards long, and forty wide. There is also another mosque, called Eski Djumna by the Turks, which was once a temple sacred to the Therméan Venus. This we did not see. Beaujour says of it³, that the Greeks spoiled it, by endeavouring to make it cruciform. It was a perfect parallelogram, seventy feet long, and thirty-five feet wide; supported on either side

(2) Pococke says these pillars are of white marble. (See Description of the East, vol. II. Part II. p. 151. Lond. 1745.) It is very possible, that under the circumstances of our seeing the buildings of Salonica, an error of this kind may have escaped our observation; but Beaujour has the same remark: "La nef du milieu est un beau vaisseau, soutenu par deux rangs de colonnes de vert antique," &c. Tableau du Comm. de la Grèce, tom. I. p. 43.

side by twelve columns of the Ionic order, of the most elegant proportions. The six columns of the Pronaos still remain, although concealed by the wall of the mosque. "If," observes the same author¹, "the country belonged to a civilized people, it were an easy matter to unmask the Temple of the Therméan Venus from its Gothic disguise; when, of all the chaste monuments of antiquity, next to the Theséum at Athens, this edifice would appear in the most perfect state of preservation: now it can only be seen through its plaster covering:"—and he adds, that he "passed three years in Salonica without suspecting any thing of its real nature."

Shooting
Excursion.

The next day (December 30) Mr. Cripps accompanied Mr. Charnaud upon a shooting excursion into the country, to provide game for our journey; the Consul being very partial to this amusement, and glad to meet with a companion as fond of it as himself. "We shall find plenty of game," said he; "but you must promise to take away with you all the hares that we may kill: for the people of this country hold a dead hare in such detestation, that if I were to dress one for your dinner, I must take the skin off and roast it myself; and the consequence would be, that none of my servants would remain in the house where it was flayed, or come into the room where it was eaten." This very antient superstition was before alluded to in this Work: it was connected with the worship of Diana.
The

(1) Tableau du Comm. de la Grèce, tom. I. p. 45. Paris, 1800.

The author employed nearly the whole of this day in seeking for other antiquities. The only objects that he observed in the city worth notice, besides what has been already described, were the two triumphal arches of Augustus and of Constantine. The first is called The Gate of the Vardar: and although less noticed than the other, it is a work far superior in point of taste. It was raised after the battle of Philippi, in honour of Octavius and Anthony. For its dimensions the author is indebted to the accurate work of Beaujour; not being able to take more than a general view of it, owing to the state of Salonica at this time; although he was accompanied by the Tchohodar and a Janissary. Its height is eighteen French feet, the lower part of it being buried to the depth of twenty-seven more. The span of the arch is twelve feet. The vault within is sculptured, and the entablature is adorned with chaplets. When viewed externally, there are two bas-reliefs, one on each side, representing the two conquerors standing before a horse led by a boy. The masonry of the arch consists of square blocks of white marble, six feet thick; and upon one side there is an inscription, containing the names of all the magistrates then in office. This arch is on the western side of the town. It originally terminated a street that ran through the whole of the antient city from east to west. At the western extremity is the Arch of Constantine, before what was called the Gate of Cassander; so that this superb street was terminated at either extremity by a triumphal arch. That of Constantine yet remains entire, as to every thing but its marble covering; which has been in great measure removed. Its original height was about sixty feet; but now, owing to the accumulation of the soil, it is not much more than forty. The span of the main arch is about thirty feet. Upon the south side is a bas-relief, representing the triumph of Constantine, who appears in the act of addressing his troops. Pococke believed this arch to be of the age of the Antonines. The brick-work about it is perhaps good proof to the contrary; and of this the piers entirely consist. It was certainly a most costly and magnificent monument, whatever opinion may prevail as to the taste of the workmanship. There is no instance known of a triumphal arch that was more richly adorned with sculpture. It is quite marvellous to consider the labour that must have been bestowed upon it, if we judge even from its present state. It consisted originally of three arches, built of brick, and cased with marble; and there were niches in the front between the arches, which of course were filled with statues. The piers all round were adorned with three compartments of basso-relievos, one above another, each relief being four feet two inches deep, divided by others that were twelve inches deep, covered with foliage and flowers. The author went twice to visit it; once upon this occasion, and afterwards upon leaving Salonica. It is situate in a very crowded part of the city, which made his stay dangerous, and would have rendered its examination at any time difficult; but he was convinced, from the view of it, that the work is not older than the time of Constantine.

The

The sculpture is evidently that of the decline of the arts; and in some parts of it, inferior to what we often see in our country churches. But as to the objection, so particularly levelled against Pococke, who admired the work, of a want of perspective in the sculpture¹, this is altogether nugatory; and with regard to the sweeping assertion, that perspective was strictly attended to in the best ages of the art², it is almost superfluous to add, that the finest works of antiquity afford direct proofs to the contrary³.

The other antiquities of Salonica consist of marble Soroi, found in different parts of the town, as cisterns, both in the courts of the houses, and in the streets. There is no place in Turkey where a greater number of false medals are offered for sale; for generally, whatever may become the practice when English travellers are more numerous in this country, the genuine coins of antiquity are too cheap, to admit of the possibility of their fraudulent imitation, for purposes of gain. In speaking of spurious coins, the traveller should be upon his guard against considering as such, the large silver tetradrachms of Thasos and of Heraclea Syntica, sold frequently by the Jews of this city; which, with every appearance of being factitious—a rough surface and want of sharpness in the edges of the letters, as if cast in a mould of sand, are undoubtedly genuine. The quantity of such medals, and the carelessness of their fabrication, was owing to the low price of silver at one period in Macedonia, in consequence of the abundance of its precious metals. Its enemies in every period of history seem to have entertained a greater dread of its mines than of the valour of its native troops. In the regulations for a new order of government made after the conquest of Macedonia by Æmilius, the Romans allowed the inhabitants their freedom and the administration of their own laws, paying only half the tribute that they usually paid to their kings; but they were prohibited from working any mines of gold or of silver. The principal wealth of Macedonia consisted in its mines; of which it had many, of all kinds of metals, but particularly of gold. In Pieria, according to Aristotle, under its ancient kings, large quantities of gold were found in the sand, in lumps of considerable magnitude. The country between Thessalonica and Stagira was also famous for its mines; but by far the most celebrated were those in the mountain Pangæus, which Philip added to his dominions. It was thence that the Thasians drew their enormous wealth. Philip derived annually from those mines a thousand talents of gold¹. Having expelled the Thasians, and rebuilt the ancient city of Crenides, he called it, after his own name, Philippi. Here he established regular assaying-houses, with skilful refiners; and made such advantage of the possession of the Pangæan gold, gold, that he obtained the empire of all Greece by means of the treasure he thence extracted. Yet, in this enlightened age—if under these circumstances any age may be said to possess this character, such is the blind policy, even of a British Government, that mineralogy is made a study of subordinate consideration; and it is classed as a fashionable pursuit, among the amusements of natural history, rather as a polite accomplishment, than as a source of national power².

Salonica is governed by a Pasha, who in his absence appoints a Musulim. Its population, according to the latest estimate that has been made, amounts to sixty thousand souls³. In this number are comprehended thirty thousand Turks, sixteen thousand Greeks, twelve thousand Jews, and a mixed population of Gipsies and Æthiopian slaves, amounting to two thousand. It is situate in $40^{\circ} \cdot 41' \cdot 10''$ of north latitude, and $20^{\circ} \cdot 28''$ of east longitude, reckoned from the meridian of *Paris*⁴. The whole population of Macedonia amounts to seven hundred thousand individuals, which allows three hundred and seventy persons for every square league⁵; and that of all Greece has been calculated as equal to one million, nine hundred, and twenty thousand. Thessaly contains three hundred thousand; Ætolia, Phocis,

(3) Tableau du Comm. de la Grèce, p. 53. Paris, 1800. We had received from Mr. Charnaud a different statement of its population; making it amount only to 53,000; in which number were supposed to be included, 15000 Jews, and 8000 Greeks; the rest being Turks. But as Beaujour has since published a very accurate work, containing a detailed account of the population of Salonica, and resided himself upon the spot, we have not deemed it proper to differ from the account he has given.

and Bœotia, two hundred thousand; and Attica only twenty thousand. The inhabitants of the Morea amount to three hundred thousand; and those of Epirus to four hundred thousand. The most fertile districts of Greece are, Macedonia, Thessaly, and the eastern parts of Phocis and Bœotia. The agricultural productions of Attica, owing to the lightness of its soil, are confined to barley and olives. The Morea is susceptible of every species of culture; and the mountainous region of Epirus is of all others the most barren¹.

Commerce of Salonica.

The principal commerce of Salonica, for which its situation is so favourable, consists in exporting the corn, cotton, wool, tobacco, bees-wax, and silk, of all *Macedonia*².

This

(1) Tableau du Comm. de la Grèce, p. 22. Paris, 1800.

(2) It also carries on a considerable trade in carpets, and in a coarse kind of cloth used by the Grand Signior for clothing the Janissaries. It is said also to export timber, from the forests at the foot of Mount Olympus, near Katarina. The Manuscript Journal of Mr. Walpole contains the following statement on the subject of the Commerce of Salonica.

“Mr. Charnaud, the English Consul, furnished me with the following information :

“The Beys of Salonica, ten in number, are the monopolists of the corn. They sell annually such a quantity as brings into circulation the sum of 1,500,000 piastres.—300,000 kiloes of corn are annually exported from the plains of the Vardar, from Cassandra, and Panomea, near Salonica. Each kilo may be valued, including the bribe given to the Beys to allow the exportation, at five piastres.

“30,000 loads of cotton were annually sent from Salonica by land into Germany. Each load consists of 100 okes. This quantity, valued at one piastre and thirty paras the oke, including the duty at the custom-house, gives the sum of 5,250,000 piastres. The cotton comes from Serres (eighteen hours distant from Salonica) and the neighbouring plains. A quantity was exported annually by sea, valued at 3,000,000 piastres.

“The exportation of tobacco made to Alexandria, on the average of different years, was 15,000 bales; the quantity exported to Satalia by Albanian and Bosniac super-cargoes, who bring money to make their purchases, was 3,000 bales; and the quantity exported every year to different parts of Europe was 20,000 bales. The annual sum in circulation for the first purchase, and other charges of this article, amounted to 1,661,519 Turkish piastres.” Walpole's MS. Journal.

This wealthy region, only the half of which, however, is cultivated, has that crater-like form so often alluded to by the author as characteristic of the limestone formation; one side of the bason being broken, and open towards the sea. It extends therefore from east to west, in the form of a horse's shoe; having the maritime termination of Mount PANGÆUS, whereof the Isle of Thasos is a continuation towards the east, and that of OLYMPUS and OSSA towards the west. The eastern extremity of this vast semicircle is guarded by the citadel of Cavallo, and its western termination by Platamónos and the Pass of Tempe. Its northern boundary is the Mountain SCOMIUS, which is itself a branch of PANGÆUS. The chief part, therefore, of the exports of Salonîca is produced in the rich territory embraced by the arms of this semicircle: and its focus may be found in the land of Sêres, fifteen leagues to the north of Salonîca; a plain watered by the river Strymon, which rises at the foot of Scomius, and falls into the Sinus Strymonicus, or bay of Amplipolis, after a course of twenty leagues. Almost all the cotton exported from Salonîca grows in that plain; and its cultivation employs the inhabitants of three hundred villages there situate. Tobacco, for which the soil of Macedonia is particularly favourable, flourishes to the east and west of the banks of the Vardar, particularly over all Bottiaea, the district of ancient Pella, where Iénigé, pronounced Yénigé, is now situate, between the Lydias and the Axius. But there are plantations of tobacco over all the country to the north of Salonîca, and eastward as far as Cavallo; only that of Yénigé bears the highest price. It is even preferred before the famous tobacco of Latakia in Syria, in consequence of its balsamic odour. The leaves of this kind of tobacco are very small; and almost all of it is reserved for the use of the Grand Signior's seraglio: it is called Yénigé Kara-sú, and it sells as high as five or six piastres the *oke*¹, whereas the price of other good tobacco does not exceed seventy paráhs. When it is mixed with the leaf of another kind of tobacco, growing also in the neighbourhood, and called Ptisi, it is said to exhale the fragrance of violets; and on this account is highly esteemed in the Turkish *charems*². With regard to the wool and silk, the best is brought to Salonica from Thessaly; the former as an article of exportation originating in no particular district: for, in a country where agriculture is so much neglected, a very considerable portion of it must necessarily be employed in pasture. The same may be said of other inconsiderable exports; as honey, wax, opium, &c. The imports of Salonica are principally from England: they consist of cloth, muslin, tin, lead, iron and hard-ware, watches, jewellery, glass, porcelain, furs, spices, sugar, and West-India coffee. This last article is often sold in the Levant under the name of Mocha coffee, particularly at Smyrna, whence it has been sometimes shipped, and brought back again to England under that name.

(1) According to Beaujour, the oke of Salonica is equivalent to fifty ounces, which makes the average price of this tobacco (reckoning twelve ounces to the pound) rather less than two shillings per pound.

The government of Salonica is vested in the hands of a Pasha of three tails; excepting only that part of it which relates to the administration of civil justice; and this rests with a magistrate who is called a Mollah. Short as our abode was in this place, we yet saw enough of the society among the Franks, to regret that we could not prolong our stay, even in spite of the plague³. In the evening, Mr. Charnaud and Mr. Cripps returned from their shooting excursion, bringing with them a plentiful stock of game. The quantity around Salonica, judging only from the description they gave of their day's sport, must be great indeed. It consists of pheasants; both red and grey partridges, the former being as large as pullets; hares, woodcocks, snipes, wild-fowl, quails, &c. All the Frank inhabitants are, consequently, sportsmen. The Albanian hunters practise the old method of shooting with a stalking-horse; that is to say, by carrying the picture of a horse or of a cow, behind which they conceal themselves, and thence take aim at their unsuspecting prey through a hole in the picture. Their method of killing quails is the same as

(3) Above all, should be mentioned the pleasing society afforded by the families of Mr. Charnaud and Mr. Abbott, the latter of whom is styled "the Father of the Levant Company." Mr. Flott, who has since visited Salonica, says of it, in one of his letters to a friend setting out for Greece: "Here you will see the best and most pleasing of sights,—an honest, open-hearted Englishman, Mr. Charnaud, who will shake you manfully by the hand, and give you a hearty welcome. For the rest, Salonica is famous for Jews, filth, and fecundity. Every family, especially every Consular family, exhibits from six to ten children, mostly girls. Take care that some of them do not weaken your national prejudices for the antient Greek, and insensibly inspire you with a far greater admiration for the suavity of the modern."

CHAP. XI.

Prices of

that practised by the native inhabitants of the Crimea: they knock them down with sticks as soon as they rise, and are very dextrous in so doing. All sorts of provisions are cheap in the market of this city. A turkey costs only twenty-five paráhs; a goose, twenty. Fowls are so despised, that the poorest inhabitants will hardly eat them. The bread is excellent. In our Consul's house we had *caimack*¹ and fresh butter; the latter badly made: but this is the only place in all Turkey where we recollect having seen fresh butter at the meals of its inhabitants. The Franks keep good tables; but their large houses are better adapted to a long Macedonian summer than to the short period of their winter; being airy in every sense of the word, and very cold. Their only fuel is wood; and this is very scarce. During summer, however, the merchants retire to other houses situate in the country. A terrible malária prevails in that season near the mouths of all the rivers, and by the borders of lakes, and in all the plains; especially where there are cotton-grounds². In the summer months, the best plan for Englishmen in the Levant is to fix their residence as near as possible to the tops of the mountains; for their manner of diet and natural habits render them so peculiarly susceptible of the dangerous effects of bad air, that it has been said of them, "they suck it up, as a sponge absorbs water:"

water:" and this is so strictly true, that of all the English who have visited Turkey, hardly one has returned without bearing serious testimony to the fact.

We shall not quit the subject of Thessalonica without adding a few words upon the figure made by the Jews of this city in the history of our religion: for as the Greek Church had the blessing and honour to be taught by the Apostles themselves, whatever may be the abject state of superstition into which it has since fallen, it were strange indeed if the inhabitants of our nation, indebted to Christianity for superior advantages of civilization and science, did not regard with some degree of interest the country whence Greece itself received the "things which belonged unto her peace." In some respects, Thessalonica is the same now it was then: a set of turbulent Jews constituted a very principal part of its population: and when St. Paul came hither from Philippi, where the Gospel was first preached, to communicate the "glad tidings" to the Thessalonians, the Jews were in sufficient number to "set all the city on an uproar³." In the several jurisdictions afterwards established for the government of the Church, we find Aristarchus constituted, by that apostle himself, to preside at Thessalonica, and Epaphroditus at Philippi. This latter place, as it was the scene of his remarkable imprisonment⁴, is rendered peculiarly

(4) "Loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis; and from thence to PHILIPPI, which is the chief city of that part peculiarly illustrious ; but the whole of Macedonia, and, in particular, the route from Berçea (now pronounced Veria) to Thessalonica and Philippi, being so remarkably distinguished by his sufferings and adventures, becomes as a portion of Holy Land. In the Second Epistle which he sent from Athens to the busy commercial inhabitants of this city, we may gather, from his mode of arguing with them, something of their Jewish propensities and covetous disposition : and viewing what Thessalonica now is, it is impossible not to be struck with the force of this appeal : “ We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you ; NEITHER DID WE EAT ANY MAN’S BREAD FOR NOUGHT ; but wrought with labour and travel, night and day, THAT WE MIGHT NOT BE CHARGEABLE TO ANY OF YOU’,” The major part of the Thessalonians of the present day, that is to say, the Jews, are precisely the sort of men to be influenced by such a style of persuasion ; and there is not one of them whose way of life does not afford a reasonable comment upon this passage of St. Paul. It was in the Jewish synagogue, both in Thessalonica and at Berçea, that the first promulgation of the Christian tenets was delivered to the inhabitants of those cities : therefore to visit the identical spot where St. Paul preached (which has always been an object of inquiry and curiosity among the Christians of Salonica), instead of repairing to the churches which were erected so long long afterwards, attention should be directed towards the places of Jewish worship; especially as the rigid adherence of the Jews to all their antient customs, and to their old resorts for purposes of spiritual and temporal occupation, has ever been invariable^o.

It was not in our power to prosecute any inquiry among the Jews of this place; owing, as we have already stated, to the infected condition of that particular part of the city. We had already encountered more risque than our worthy Consul deemed prudent: and we found it difficult to obtain, without extreme danger, the things from the bazars that were wanted for our journey. Our interpreter's clothes were quite worn out: and in order to provide him with apparel, it was absolutely necessary that some cloth should be procured. For this purpose we were at last compelled to rest satisfied with a coarse kind of manufacture of white woollen worn by the Albanian shepherds, which was fumigated, and passed through water. With this mountain vest, as heavy and as thick as felt, and one of those Pelasgic bonnets upon his head, shaped like a scalp, which his ancestors the Greeks have worn ever since they were known as a people³, he came prepared to accompany us upon the morrow, morrow, in a costume suited to the wild country we had yet to traverse.

The last moments of this day were employed in taking once more a view of the superb scenery exhibited by the mountains Olympus and Ossa. They appeared upon this occasion in more than usual splendor;—like one of those imaginary alpine regions suggested by viewing a boundary of clouds, when they terminate the horizon in a still evening, and are gathered into heaps, with many a towering top shining in fleecy whiteness'. The great Olympian chain, and a range of lower eminences to the north-west of Olympus, form a line which is exactly opposite to Salonica; and even the chasm between Olympus and Ossa, constituting the Defile of Tempe, is hence visible. Directing the eye towards that chain, there is comprehended in one view the whole of Pieria and Botticea; and with the vivid impressions which remained after leaving the country, memory easily recalled into

Grecian commerce. They are worn by all the inhabitants of the Levant, whether Moslems or Christians, males or females. The Greeks wear this sort of cap simply as a hat; the Turks surround it with a turban; and the women adorn it with a handkerchief, tassels, and fringe. (See Beaujour, Tabl. du Comm. &c. tom. II. p. 117.) The portrait of Manual Palæologus, engraved as a Vignette to Chap. I. Sect. I. of Part II. of these Travels, represents him with one of these caps, as they were then worn by the Greek Emperors.

(1) Persons who have never beheld a lofty chain of snow-clad mountains, like the Alps and Pyrenees, may have a faithful conception of their appearance, by attending to the resemblance exhibited by clouds under such circumstances. As a proof how very much the two are like each other, it may be mentioned, that the author some years ago viewing the Rhetian Alps from the plains of Suabia, was so completely deceived, having mistaken them for a bank of clouds, that until he drew nearer to the defile at Fuesen he could not be persuaded that the white objects he saw towering in the horizon were mountains.

into one mental picture the whole of Greece; because it is portioned out by nature into parts of such magnitude, possessing, at the same time, so many striking features, that after they have ceased to appear before the sight, they remain present to the imagination. Every reader may not duly comprehend what is meant by this; but every traveller, who has beheld the scenes to which allusion is made, will readily admit its truth: he will be aware, that whenever he closed his eyes, with his thoughts directed towards that country, the whole of it became spread before his contemplation, as if he were actually indulged with a view of it. In such an imaginary flight, he enters, for example, the Defile of Tempe from Pieria; and as the gorge opens towards the south, he sees all the Larissæan Plain: this conducts him to the Plain of Pharsalia, whence he ascends the mountains south of Pharsalus; then, crossing the bleak and still more elevated region extending from those mountains towards Lamia, he views Mount Pindus far before him, and, descending into the Plain of the Sperchius, passes the Straits of Thermopylæ. Afterwards, ascending Mount Æta, he beholds, opposite to him, the snowy point of Lycorea, with all Parnassus, and the towns and villages at its base; the whole Plain of Elatea lying at his feet, with the course of the Cephissus to the sea. Passing to the top of Parnassus, he looks down upon all the other mountains, and plains, and islands, and gulphs of Greece: but especially surveys the broad bosoms of Cithæron, of Helicon, of Parnes, and of Hymettus. Thence roaming into the depths and over all the heights of Eubœa and of Peloponnesus, he has their inmost recesses again submitted to his contemplation. Next, resting upon Hymettus, he examines, even in the minutest detail, the whole of Attica, to the Sumian Promontory; for he sees it all, and all the shores of Argos, of Sicyon, of Corinth, of Megara, of Eleusis, and of Athens. Thus, although not in all the freshness of its living colours, yet in all its grandeur, doth Greece actually present itself to the mind's eye;—and may the impression never be removed! In the eve of bidding it farewell for ever, as the hope of visiting this delightful country constituted the earliest and the warmest wish of his youth, the author found it to be some alleviation of the regret excited by a consciousness of never returning, that he could thus summon to his recollection the scenes over which he had passed.

Departure
from Salonica.

ON the following morning, December 31, at ten o'clock, having all things in readiness for a very arduous journey through the rest of Macedonia and Thrace, to CONSTANTINOPLE, we took leave of our friendly host and his most amiable family; and being mounted on horses that would not have disgraced the race of Bucephalus, and accompanied by Mr. Kreen, the Consul's secretary, who accompanied us part of the way, we rode through the eastern gate of the city. Entering the plain without the walls, we passed a tumulus at half an hour's distance from the town, almost as large as the one we measured in coming from Tekâle. It is also close to the road upon the left hand. In the cemetery without the walls of Salonica, the shafts of antient columns may be observed. We afterwards saw a mound, on which there seemed traces as if a fortress had stood there: beneath it were the remains of walls, and hard by a fountain, the water of which was received into the operculum of an antient Soros. Thence passing over some hills, in two hours' time we entered a defile, where we saw ruins upon the heights above us, as of a fortress on either side. There is also part of an *aqueduct*¹. We then descended into the very extensive and fertile plains of

(1) The author finds an insular note upon a blank leaf of his Journal, which mentions that there are some inscriptions to be seen at a place called Daoot, or Daût, kally; distant two hours from Salonica: but of the place so named, or its situation, he can offer no other information.

of Lagadno and Baleftchino; so called from two villages having these appellations. The land here is low and marshy. Upon the south-western side of this plain is a large lake: it was upon our right, our route being south-east. This lake is called that of St. Basil: it is perhaps smaller during the summer, because it seemed to us to bear the marks of being flooded: a small river runs into it. In this plain there are little tumuli close to the road, marking the distances². They are easily distinguished from antient sculphres, because their size is more diminutive; and when used as marks of distance, they occur in pairs, one being on either side of the way. In this manner they appear in the whole route to Constantinople. The air here is very bad. The land, notwithstanding its watery aspect, was much cultivated, and the corn looked extremely well. They have a very fine breed of sheep, like that of the South-downs upon the Sussex coast in England; among which, however, we saw some with horns, of a very bad kind; having black wool. After quitting this plain, and ascending some hills to the south-east, we arrived, at sun-set, at a village called *Clissele*³, distant seven hours from Salonica: and here we were compelled to remain for the night, as there was no place place farther on, within any reasonable distance, where we might hope to rest. We slept in a conack belonging to the post-house; a wretched hovel, admitting neither light nor air, except from the door; and this we were glad to keep shut.

Clissele.

(2) The author more than once alighted from his horse to measure the distance, by paces, from one of these stations to the next ensuing, and found it to equal two Roman miles, of a thousand paces each. They are much more frequent, and occur with greater regularity, as the traveller approaches Constantinople.

Leaving Clissele, on the first day of the New Year, we proceeded eastward, along the side of a chain of mountains bounding the level country towards the north. In this manner we entered a fertile plain, which, like that we crossed on the preceding day, has two names. It is called Seraivashitchi, and Gálvashtchi. The road here was in many places wide enough for a carriage. About half an hour after we began our journey this day, we observed before us, at some distance, in the road the most remarkable appearance caused by rocks, that we had ever beheld. At first we mistook them for ruins, somewhat resembling Stonehenge; but as we drew near, we were surprised to find that the supposed ruins were natural rocks; rising perpendicularly out of the plain, like a Cyclopéan structure, with walls and towers; the road passing through the separations between them.

Remarkable
Rocks.

Lake Beshek.

We then descended towards another lake, which was upon our right, and of greater magnitude than that of St. Basil, the lake we had passed the day before. It extends at the feet of this chain of mountains, from west to east; and is called the Lake Beshek. There are two towns of the same name, the Lesser and the Greater Beshek. We observed some boats upon the lake. It is about twelve miles miles in length, and six or eight in breadth¹. The plain, in which this lake lies, may be considered as a continuation of the

(1) This was our conjecture as to its dimensions; but Mr. Walpole states them somewhat differently; which only shews how uncertain all computations by the eye must prove, of the extent of a lake, or inland sea. Nothing is more liable to cause deception, especially when such a piece of water is surrounded by high mountains. The following extract from Mr. Walpole's Journal will give the whole of his Journey from Salonica to Cavallo; or, as he writes it, Cavalla.

“ At seven hours’ distance from Salonica we reached Klissala; passing, on the right, two beautiful lakes, and two towns, called the Greater and the Lesser Beshek. Of these lakes, the first and smallest appeared to be twelve miles in circumference: the larger may be fifteen miles in length, and five in breadth. Many kinds of fish are caught in them, said to be excellent. It is not easy to point out the names which the lakes antiently bore: Johannes Cameniates, who wrote in the year 904 his account of the destruction of Thessalonica, does not give them. His account of the lakes I shall transcribe. ‘ In the middle of the plain are two broad lakes, like seas, overspreading the greater part of it. They are productive of great advantages, containing fish, large and small, of different species, and very numerous; of which they afford a most plentiful supply to the neighbouring villages, and to Thessalonica.’ Ούτινος ἐν μέσῳ, κ. τ. λ.

“ The next day we reached the Strymon, about ten hours’ distant from Klissala. I passed the river at its mouth, in a triangular ferry-boat, flowing with a quiet even course. Basil, in a letter to Gregory of Nazianzum, speaking of the river, says: ‘ The Strymon flows so gently, and its waters are so quiet, that it scarcely appears a river.’—σχολασιότροφόν ῥέματι περιδιμνάζων. Epist. 19. At a little distance were some small vessels riding at anchor, which had come to take in cargoes of corn. The mountains to the north-east are connected with Pangeus (placed by Dio Cassius, 47) near to Philippi, in which the gold mines were worked; giving to Philip and his son Alexander a revenue equal to three millions of our money, annually.

“ Some ruins of Roman work, near the mouth of the Strymon, mark probably the site of Amphipolis; a colony from Athens, and a city of importance in the Peloponnesian war. From this place the Athenians drew great sums of money, and were supplied with timber for their fleet. (Thucyd. lib. iv.) We find, from an epigram of Antipater, that in the age of the Antonines some remains of the Temple of Diana were extant here:

Λοῦπὸ τοῦ Αἰδοπίης Βραυρωνίδος ἕχνη νηοῦ
Μίμνει. —————

The epigram is important, on account of the mention made in it of the situation of the city on each side of the river, ἐπ’ ἀμφοτέραις ἐκκεκμηθεῖ ἡδῶν. In the time of Thucydides, the river flowed round it, περιῤῥέοντος τοῦ Στρυμόνος; and hence, he says,

the same plain wherein that of St. Basil, or St. Fasili, is placed. We can find no notice that has been taken of this magnificent piece of water by any modern writer. Stephanus of Byzantium mentions a city and lake of the name of BOLBE; leaving us quite in the dark as to its situation'; and the LAKE BOLBE is said by Thucydides to be in Macedonia, but he does not notice the city². From Thucydides we learn, that it had a communication with the sea, towards AULON and BROMISCUS: and this may be true of the Lake Beshék, says, it was called Amphipolis. (lib. iv.) Some travellers say the ruins at the mouth of the river are called Chrysopoli. If this be true, we have a proof that Amphipolis stood here; for the city, though in ruins when Antipater wrote the lines already mentioned, rose again, and was called Chrysopolis: this we learn from Tzetzes on Lycophron, ver. 416.

"From the mouth of the Strymon to Pravasta, I count five hours. This place is situate between two plains, and is distant from the sea three hours. There are here many iron works; and the fortresses at the Dardanelles are supplied from this place with balls for the cannon. The mountains containing the iron ore run in a direction from Orfano, near the Strymon, to Pravasta. At three hours' distance is Cavalla, situate on a piece of land projecting into the sea, opposite to Thassus, and united by a low isthmus to the continent of Macedonia. Some derive the name from the resemblance they find in the position of the town to the figure of a horse; the hinder part of which is turned to the sea, and the head to the land. But it appears to be only an abbreviated corruption of Bucephala, the antient name of the place. The distance altogether from Salonica to Cavalla is between eighty-five and ninety miles, going in a N. E. direction. Near the gate of the town, as you leave Cavalla, are two antient sepulchres, with Latin legends on them: these have been already published. One of these monuments, near a mosque, had the word PHILIPPIS inscribed on it. It was probably brought away from that place, distant, according to the Jerusalem Itinerary, nine miles; according to Appian (lib. iv.) twelve." Walpole's MS. Journal.

same lake is also noticed by Aristotle. These are perhaps all the allusions to it in antient history: but with regard to the TOMB OF EURIPIDES, our information is copious and decisive. A whole host of authors may be cited to determine the position of this most remarkable monument. Plutarch, Vitruvius, Pliny, Aulus Gellius, Stephanus, and the author of the Itinerary from Bourdeaux to Jerusalem, all point to its situation near BROMISCUS, in the VALLEY OF ARETHUSA¹. There is some difference in the manner of spelling the name of the city;—some, as Thucydides, writing BROMISCUS; and later writers, as Stephanus, transposing the second and third letters of the word, and writing BORMISCUS. By Stephanus, BORMISCUS is mentioned as a town of Macedonia, where Euripides was lacerated by a kind of dogs, called, in the Macedonian tongue, ESTERICES². It would be curious to ascertain whether an etymology for this name exists in any appellation given to a peculiar breed of dogs among the northern nations of Europe³. Stephanus adds, that

(1) A Greek epigram of Dionysius asserts, that the poet died of old age, and, contradicting the statement made by other authors as to the cause of his death, thus mentions the situation of the sepulchre:

from the wounds inflicted by the teeth of the Esterices, Euripides fell sick and died'. Thus it does not appear that he was torn in pieces by those animals, as some have related; but that he lost his life in consequence of a disorder occasioned by his being bitten by a pack of enraged hounds'. He might therefore have died of the disorder called hydrophobia. His sepulchre was constructed by order of Archelaus: it was at the confluence of two streams; the water of the one being poisonous, according to *Pliny*⁶; and the other so sweet and salutary, that travellers were wont to halt and take their meals by its refreshing current. This is more fully stated by Vitruvius, from whom Pliny borrowed his account⁷. Ammianus Marcellinus minutely describes its

(5) See the passage before cited from AULUS GELLIUS. The circumstance attending the death of Euripides is thus related by DIONORUS: Τίνες ἐὲ λήγονσι, παρ' Ἀρχελάδῳ τῷ βασιλεῖ Μακεδόνων κατὰ τὴν χῶραν ἐξελθόντα, κσι περιεσίην καὶ ἐιασπασθῆναι, κ. τ. λ. its situation in the *Valley of Arethusa*¹. Other authors, as *Plutarch*², describe it to be (περὶ Ἀρέθουσαν) near to ARETHUSA; which may be reconciled to the preceding statement of its situation at BROMISCUS; for Wesseling affirms, that the two places were near to each other³. If we had been allowed leisure for the inquiry, we should not have despaired finding so remarkable a monument, described as to its situation under circumstances of such precision; especially as it may have been observed by travellers so late as the thirteenth century⁴: but in its present condition, Macedonia is not a country for researches requiring any deviation from the main route, even if the object be ever so nigh at hand. We congratulated ourselves upon being able to obtain, unmolested, a sight of this illustrious region; and to make of it such a sketch, as, having no other merit than its fidelity, may gratify others by a view of the country where EURIPIDES passed his latter days; and of the very LAKE whose borders were his favourite haunts when he encountered the catastrophe that gave to ARETHUSA'S VALE the

the honour of his grave. But in order to make the reader more fully comprehend the nature of this valley, and of the country, it is necessary to continue the narrative of our journey.

In two hours after leaving Clissele, having entered the valley with the mountains upon our left, and the lake upon our right, we came to the Greater Beshek, called Trana Beshek; more properly to be styled a village than a town; situate upon the side of this fine piece of water, commanding a beautiful prospect. After passing this place, we collected some rare plants, and one in full flower which was quite new to us. The minerals also became highly interesting. The mountains were of granite; and although very high, they were covered from their bases to their summits with olive-trees. There were also Vallonïa oaks of enormous size, and the most immense planc-trees. But to our very great satisfaction, we observed masses of the most uncommon of all the varieties of granite, a sort of syenite, which may indeed be considered as *hornblende porphyry*⁵, being the same that is called "bianco é nero" by Italian lapidaries. This very rare substance having never before been observed in its natural state, and being only made known to mineralogists from the sculpture of the antients, is therefore specifically styled, in Florence and in Rome, BIANCO E NERO ANTICO. It is mentioned by Ferber, in his "Travels through Italy;"

Italy;" and its great beauty is the subject of an allusion¹, when he is describing a kind of marble found near the harbour of Porto Ferrajo, in the Tuscan territory. It consists of oblong parallelepiped crystals of opaque white feldspar, imbedded in black hornblende, the amphibole of *Haüy*². An opaque white colour in *feldspar*³ is perhaps always to be attributed to incipient decomposition in the stone; so great is its tendency to undergo an alteration of this nature upon being taken from its native quarry. These loose fragments were all in such a state of decomposition, owing to this change in the feldspar, that they crumbled, and were easily broken in our hands. Upon drawing nearer to the mountains upon the left, whence these fragments had been detached, we had the further satisfaction to discover the same substance in its natural deposit: the whole mountain apparently consisting of no other substance⁴. In another hour

(4) The author will take this opportunity to correct a very absurd error respecting the etymology of this word feldspar, which has become prevalent, probably from the venerable Haüy having fallen into it himself. It is said to signify "field spar;" and thus Haüy (tom. II. p. 25. "FELD-SPATH, c'est-à-dire, Spath des champs") derives it from our common English acceptance of the word field; whereas it means mountain-spar; being a constituent of granite, and therefore called feld-spar, from the old northern or Danish word for a mountain, feld, or field; as "Dovre Feld," the highest mountain in Norway.

(5) We brought away as many specimens as we could conveniently carry with us on horseback; and some of them are now in the author's collection in the University of Cambridge, where they have been placed with the fragment of a large vase found at Saïs in Egypt, manufactured by the antients of the same substance. The quarries whence it was derived by antient lapidaries are entirely unknown.

hour and a half, coasting the borders of the BOLBEAN LAKE, we came to the Lesser Beshek, called Micra Beshek; and having passed this little town, which, by the way, is larger than the town called Greater Beshek, the view became very beautiful; and the appearance exhibited by the town, situate upon a promontory stretching into the lake, had something of the fine character of the scenes in *Switzerland*⁶. Soon afterwards we came to the western extremity of this little inland sea; and entered a defile, following for about an hour a river flowing out of it. In this defile, above the precipices on the right hand, are the ruins of a monastery. The rocks here rise to a great height on each side. They are entirely of schistus, covered with enormous plane-trees and Vallonïa oaks. After having quitted it, we arrived, in five hours from the time of our leaving Clüssele, at a dervéne, or pass; with a view of the sea in front. This defile seems to offer a natural boundary between Macedonia and Thrace; and the appearance of the dervéne induced us to suppose that it was now considered as a frontier pass: but upon inquiry, they told us that they regarded the Strymon, four hours farther towards the east, as the separation: and this, in fact, was the antient limit between the two countries. From this place to MOUNT ATHOS they reckon the distance as only equal to sixteen hours; which nearly corresponds with what we had been told in Salonica; whence the computed distance is two days and a half; or a journey journey of thirty hours : but we had been only twelve hours upon the road from Salonica. The place where this derève occurs is called *Khan Erenderi Bauz*¹.

Mount Athos :

So many persons had visited MOUNT ATHOS, that we gave up all thoughts of going to see the monasteries which are there situate ; but we should not have formed this resolution at the time, if we had not fully believed, that the valuable journals of Mr. TWEDDELL, would have communicated to the world every information that was hoped for, respecting the libraries and other curiosities of that mountain. Mr. Charnaud had given to us at Salonica an account of Mr. Tweddell's labours upon MOUNT ATHOS, and of the precious harvest he had reaped, from which we supposed that a gleaning would be hopeless after such a husbandman had quitted the field. From some sketches made by his artist Preaux, we were enabled to judge of the scenery in the recesses of the mountain ; which very much resembles that of Vietri (the school of Salvator Rosa) in the Gulph of Salernum, in Italy. To what fatal circumstances the loss of all this literary treasure may be attributed, the Public is now informed by the valuable work which his brother has edited² : it is a loss the more to be regretted, as Tweddell.

(1) "The names of places in this part of our journey began to be in Turkish : and having no good maps of the country, and the inhabitants being for the most part Turks, we found it very difficult to obtain any information respecting our route." Cripps's MS. Journal.

another century may pass away without giving birth to one so fitted for the task he had fulfilled, as was this lamented scholar. His life fell a sacrifice to the undertaking³; for it was in consequence of a fever which attended the accomplishment of this arduous journey, that he died at *Athens*⁴. That he made discoveries of an important nature relating to Greek manuscripts in the libraries of Mount Athos, is perhaps not positively known; but there is good reason to believe that he did, because the author has since purchased a valuable

Letters, together with a republication of his "Prolusiones Juveniles;" and a body of most satisfactory evidence, touching the extraordinary disappearance of his manuscript journals, drawings, &c. &c. after they had been consigned to the care of the British Ambassador at Constantinople. Thus every doubt is done away as to this mysterious transaction. It is to be feared that if any other part of Mr. J. TWEDDELL's observations upon Greece ever see the light, it will only be in the garbled form of Extracts, made from his writings by those who had the ransacking of his Papers, (See Appendix to Tweddell's Remains, p. 466.) which will be published, as perhaps they have been already, without any acknowledgment being made of their real author. Of the work edited by Mr. R. Tweddell, it can only be said, that there has been nothing to compare with it since the original appearance of GRAY's Letters, as published by Mason. Unhappily for the cause of taste and genius, it only serves to make known the extent of the loss which Literature has sustained.

(4) The subject is too painful to bear more than this brief allusion: but as the author, in the endeavour he made to recover some of Mr. TWEDDELL's property at Constantinople, experienced reproof rather than encouragement,—and as he has reason to believe that the theft of a Greek manuscript which was committed in one of the monasteries by persons who had seen Mr. TWEDDELL's JOURNALS was owing to intelligence therein contained,—he will not remain altogether silent as to the fact. The subsequent death of one, who was principally concerned in that transaction precludes the possibility of his communicating more upon this subject. See, however, "Tweddell's Remains, Appendix, p. 368. Lond. 1815."

a valuable manuscript of the GREEK ORATORS, from a Greek Prince, who thence obtained it; and because subsequent travellers, in their letters to England, mention the existence of a manuscript of HOMER, and another of ARISTOTLE, as being now there'. But the fact of such manuscripts existing in any of the libraries at MOUNT ATHOS has always been disputed; because persons who have been there, not having themselves observed any of these κειμήλια, are unwilling that others should have the credit of their discovery. The same disputes have taken place with regard to PATMOS, both before and since the discovery of the Manuscript of PLATO; the most positive assurances being given to travellers, that no manuscripts worth notice could be found there;—although that Codex was there purchased, in despite of such ignorant assurances; and although there yet exist in the library of the Patmos Monastery another manuscript, entitled “DIODORUS SICULUS,” and WRITTEN UPON VELLUM², with the nature of whose contents we are altogether unacquainted. One cause why these Codices have so often escaped observation is, that the manuscripts in all the Greek monasteries have been considered by their possessors as so much lumber: and although they

(1) These manuscripts are particularly mentioned by Mr. Fiott, of St. John's College, Cambridge, in a schedule of literary information respecting a journey to Mount Athos and all the north of Greece, prepared by that gentleman for the use of his friend and fellow collegian, Mr. Hughes.

they sometimes refuse to part with them without an order from the Patriarch or the Capudan Pasha, they generally consign them to a heap of rubbish in a corner of their book-rooms, allowing only to printed volumes a place upon the shelves. "Every monastery," says the Consul Rycaut, "hath its library of books, which are kept in a lofty tower, under the custody of one whom they call Σενοφύλακα, who also is their steward, receives their money, and renders an account of all their expenses: but we must not imagine that these libraries are conserved in that order as ours are in the parts of Christendom; that they are ranked and compiled in method on shelves, with labels of the contents; or that they are brushed and kept clean, like the libraries of our colleges: but they are piled one on the other, without order or method, covered with dust, and exposed to the worm." The monks of Mount Athos are as ignorant and as avaricious as their brethren in other parts of Greece. They have great revenues; and the contributions brought to them by travelling monks, especially by those of Russia, contribute to keep them rich, fat, and indolent. Studious pursuits are not very compatible with a state of society where every stimulus to action is annihilated: the consequence is, that when any traveller gains admission to their libraries, and examines the condition of their books, he finds that they have never been opened; that the leaves stick together; that worms fall out of their old wooden covers; and

and that they are nearly hid by dust. The monasteries themselves, according to their appearance as exhibited in the designs which Mr. TWEDDELL caused to be made of them, are like so many little fortresses in the midst of the most sublime solitudes; the mountain Athos being as craggy and rugged as one of the peaks of Caucasus. Although commonly called Hagion Oros, its summit still bears the name of "ΑΘΩΝΑ. The principal monasteries are those of Santa Laura, Batopedi, Chiliadar, and Ibero; each of which pays annually to the Turkish government a rent of about a hundred dollars. But there are sixteen others, paying each half that sum, or somewhat less, according to their pretensions of poverty; one or two being wholly exempt from all impost, and are therefore called Kesim, a Turkish word signifying "free from taxes." The sum total of the contribution levied upon the monasteries of Mount Athos is only equal to a thousand dollars; not amounting to a thousandth part of the gifts annually made to them by the princes and priests of Russia, Moldavia, Walachia, and Georgia. "He that sees," says Rycaut', "the various coverings they have for their altars, the rich ornaments they have for their churches, will not easily apprehend those people to be very poor. Amongst their other treasures, they have a representation of Christ in the Sepulchre, which they call επιτάφιο, exposed every Good Friday, at night, rich with gold and precious stones. Most of their monasteries can represent the history of its foundation, foundation, not in paint or colours, but in embroideries of gold, and pearl, and other precious stones, intermixed with singular art and curiosity. They have also variety of rich vestments for the priests, especially in the four chief monasteries, where are many chests filled with such robes as are used at the celebration of divine service: their basons, ewers, dishes, plates, candlesticks, and incense-pots of precious metal, are not to be reckoned, many of which are of pure gold or of silver gilt. They have crosses of a vast bigness, edged with plates of gold, and studded with precious stones, from whence hang strings of oriental pearl. The covers of their books of the Gospel, Epistles, Psalters, and Missal, are often embossed with beaten gold, or curiously bound up with cases of gold, or silver gilt, or plain silver." Add to all this, that, as in times of Paganism, when every suppliant who approached the altar, overwhelmed by the magnificence of the Heathen rites, felt that his devotions were incomplete unless he left behind him something, however humble, as a vow, were it only a handful of flour and salt; so, independently of the donations made during the splendid ceremonies which are exhibited by the monks of Mount Athos upon the high festivals of the year, the common procession (εἰσόδος) which is made in the time of divine service is conducted with such state and pomp, that the poorest devotee finds himself unable to depart without paying some token of his adoration. The skill of begging is no where practised with more address: and although the Greeks be both poor and covetous, yet there are few uninfluenced either by ostentation or superstition, who do not bestow some alms upon the monasteries. Some of them who have exercised a predatory life, and lived by plunder and violence, believe that they shall atone for the sins they have committed by sacrificing a portion of their misbegotten wealth upon the HOLY MOUNTAIN. The contributions thus made, and registered, in the books of a single monastery (Santa Laura), besides the extraneous collections from foreign countries, amounted in the short space of six months to the sum of two thousand dollars'. It may therefore easily be imagined what sort of poverty is sustained by the priests of Mount Athos; for in this account of their resources, not a syllable has been said of their landed property, which is considerable, both within the Peninsula and upon the main land. Their number is calculated to amount to six thousand; of whom about two thousand are abroad, begging for their lazy brethren at home. In the time of Strabo, there were within the Peninsula, and upon the mountain, no less than five cities*, mentioned also by Herodotus' and by Thucydides'; namely, Dion, Olophyxus, Acrothoon, Thyssus or Thysus, and Cleonæ.

From Khan Erenderi Baux our journey lay towards the north-east, through a maritime plain, covered with large trees of the Platanus Orientalis, the Vallonïa, and common Oak. In two hours we arrived at another dervêne, and a little khan, situate close to the gulph. Thence we rode entirely along the shore, having cliffs above us upon our left, and the sea upon our right; so close to us, that, some times, our horses' feet were in the water. As soon as we had doubled this point of land, we beheld all the north-eastern side of the SINUS STRYMONICUS. The weather, however, was very hazy; a hot Sirocco wind then blowing. Upon the opposite side of the gulph we saw the ruined city of AMPHIPOLIS, now called Eski Kaléh, the old fortress; also Orphano-palæo, or antient Orphano. We crossed the river STRYMON in our way to this place, by a flying bridge. On the south-west side of the river the shore is flat and sandy, full of pools of stagnant water, and the air is of course unwholesome. There is here a large khan; and camels were feeding in the fen, having upon their backs heavy saddles, which they always wear, ready for use. Some vessels were at anchor within a small port, which lies more to the south-west, distant about a mile from the ruins of the old fortress of Amphipolis, freighting with corn for Constantinople. We saw one ship with three masts, one Martingale, and other small craft, which the Turks call Girlingitch. After we had crossed the ferry, we passed through the ruins of the city, consisting principally of walls that exhibit more of Roman than of Greek masonry; the materials of the work being round stones and tiles put together with cement.

cement. We saw also part of an Aqueduct. Upon the hills to the east, the traces of an Acropolis may be discerned, by the marks left in the soil¹. We dined in the midst of the ruins, upon the pedestal of a marble column, and by the side of an antient covered well, which is within a small cavern; there are steps leading down to it. The situation of AMPHIPOLIS, the origin of its name, and the date of its foundation, are so decidedly fixed by Thucydides, that it would be idle to attempt proving its position elsewhere: if it had not been for this circumstance, the antiquities we found afterwards at Orphano might have induced us to suppose that AMPHIPOLIS was there situated². But the testimony of Thucydides is here doubly valuable; because, in addition to his rigid adherence to truth, he has himself told us that he was summoned, during the Peloponnesian war, to the relief of AMPHIPOLIS; before it surrendered to Brasidas, the Lacedæmonian general³. Of all authors, he is therefore the most likely to afford accurate information with regard to the city; for it was owing to his failure in that expedition that he was doomed to the exile in which he wrote his history. According to him, it was a colonial city of the Athenians, situate near the mouth of the STRYMON: the river flowed round it, being upon either side, and from this circumstance the city was called by its founder AMPHIPOLIS⁴. The place where it stood, had been formerly denominated the nine ways. Its origin, when Thucydides wrote, was not of antient date. It was founded by Agnon son of Nicias, who at the head of an Athenian colony built a city here, sixty-one years after the first Persian invasion⁵. The loss of AMPHIPOLIS was severely felt by the Athenians, who had been accustomed to derive from it, besides an annual revenue in money, a supply of timber for their navy. The different style of masonry, and the mixture of Grecian and Roman work, visible among the ruins of this city, is explained in the circumstances of its history: it was ruined and rebuilt more than once. Although antient geographers have scarcely mentioned it, yet their commentators have collected a number of facts and allusions to it, which serve to supply the loss; and, among these, no one has more largely contributed than Wesseling, in his Notes upon the Itinerary

(5) The first attempt to found a city here was made by Aristagoras the Milesian, after his flight from Darius; but it was frustrated by the Edonians. Thirty-two years afterwards, says Thucydides, the Athenians sent hither a colony, which was destroyed by the Thracians: and in the twenty-ninth year after this event, another colony, led by Agnon son of Nicias, founded AMPHIPOLIS. There is no instance of any Grecian city whose history is more explicitly and fully illustrated. Vid. Thucydidem, lib. iv. cap. 102. p. 272. ed. Hudsoni.

Itinerary from Bourdeaux to *Jerusalem*¹. He has given an epigram of Antipater, descriptive of its condition in the age of the Antonines; by which it appears that a temple of Brauronian Diana was then conspicuous among its ruins². Wesseling also proves from various authorities³, but especially from Tzetzes upon Lycophron, that Amphipolis rose again from the ruined state in which it is described by Antipater, and took the name of CRYSOPOLIS. But it had many names which Wesseling has not mentioned; and its Turkish name of Iamboli, or Emboli, is derived from one of them; for it was called EÏON; out of which the Greeks made Iampolis, and the Turks Iamboli, or Emboli. Its other names were, *ACRA*⁴, MYRICA, CRADMENA, and *ANADRÆMUS*⁵. It is mentioned tioned by Constantine Porphyrogenetes among the cities of Macedonia. The name of CHRYSOPOLIS was still retained in the sixteenth century. Belon mentions its ruins at the mouth of the Strymon; and he says the peasants called them *Chrysopoli*⁶.

After leaving these ruins, we ascended a hill; and having passed over the top of it, descended immediately upon Orphano, which is said to be distant eight hours from Khan Erederi Bauz; but we performed the journey in five hours. It is situate at the foot of the ridge, upon one side, as Palæo-Orphano is upon the other⁷. This circumstance, added to the similarity of the names of the two places, would rather tend to confirm the opinion entertained by D'Anville of *Amphipolis*⁸,—that the name did not imply an ambiguous position with regard to the river, but a city whose position was ambiguous respecting two countries, or, as seems now to be the case, a city on the two sides of a hill; one part being detached from the other for the convenience of its port. Were it not for the observations of Thucydides, this might appear to be very probable; and the opinion would be strengthened by what we have to state further concerning Orphano. It is now a poor village, consisting of

of about fifty houses ; and there is a small fortress upon the side of the hill, with about twenty other dwellings. Orphano is distant not more than a mile from the shore : a small river runs through it, which there falls into the sea.

The quantity of antient medals brought to us, during the evening that we remained in this place, was so great, that we were occupied until a late hour in the night in selecting and purchasing them. We fixed the price, as usual, at two paráhs for every medal in bronze, and one piastre for every silver medal, without making any distinction afterwards which might cause altercation or bargaining. Every person who arrived with bronze or silver medals knew at his coming what he was to receive if we made any purchases ; and we took care never to deviate from the price we had fixed, however desirable the acquisition might be. A few were offered at a higher price ; and upon our refusing to give it, they were taken away. In this manner we lost some silver medals of Thasos ; but in general the persons who brought them were very glad to get what we proposed : having sold any to us, they afterwards spread the news about the place, and sent others with more. In this manner we purchased one hundred and twenty-six medals in bronze, and six in silver : many of them were rare, and some had never been seen by us before. But among the bronze medals, the number that we saw of AMPHIPOLIS was very remarkable. There were also coins of ALEXANDER and of PHILIP. A beautiful little silver medal, having on one side a lobster or cray-fish, and upon the other a dolphin, is still unknown to us. The medals of Amphipolis

Amphipolis were evidently struck in different periods; for the reverses differed, and the legend was variously added. Upon one we saw the head of Apollo in front; and for the reverse, a lamp burning: upon a second, the reverse was a cow; upon a third, a horse galloping; and so on; the same front appearing with a variety of obverse types. Here we obtained those most antient medals of AMPHIPOLIS, which some Numismatic writers have erroneously ascribed to LESBOS; representing in front the Centaur Nessus with Dejanira; and for reverse, nothing more than an indented square. Others of AMPHIPOLIS had the bearded head of Jupiter, cinctured by a fillet, or diadem, in front,—if this be not intended for the portrait of PHILIP, the son of Amyntas; for reverse, a horse prancing. The following were the different legends of the Amphipolitan medals; the first, and oldest, being in the βουστρεφῆδον manner of writing:

1. A M
2. A M Φ I
3. A M Φ I Π Ο Λ Ι Τ Ω Ν
4. A M Φ I Π Ο Λ Ι Τ Ω Ν
5. A M Φ I Π Ο Λ Ε Ι Τ Ω Ν

There were not less than fifteen different kinds of medals of this city alone, three of which were in silver, representing the centaur Nessus, &c. We also found here medals of PELLA;—head of Pallas in front; reverse, a bull at pasture; ΓΕΛΛΗΣ. A medal of PHILIPPI, of the greatest rarity;—head of Hercules in front; and for reverse, a tripod, with the legend ΦΙΛΙΠΠΩΝ. Also a medal of AUDOLEON KING OF PÆONIA;—armed head, full face, in front; and upon the obverse side, an equestrian figure in full speed, with some of the letters of the word ΑΥΔΩΛΕΟΝΤΟΣ. Coins of the Roman Emperors were also observed here: but we rejected many of them because they were ill preserved. We saw one of ALEXANDER SEVERUS, representing in front the image of Ceres, bearing in her right hand a patera, and in her left a sceptre, with the word ΑΜΦΙΠΟΛΕΙΤΩΝ; and for the reverse appeared the head of the Emperor, with this legend, ΑΥΤΩ·ΜΑΡ·ΣΕΥ·ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΣ. The bronze medals of ALEXANDER the Great had simply a bow and quiver, or a club and quiver, with the initials B. A. or the word ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ; and those of PHILIP, an equestrian figure, naked, or a radiated head, and the legend ΦΙΛΙΠΠΟΥ or ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ Φ or ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΦΙΛΙΠΠΟΥ, with a thunderbolt. Others, with a female head, decorated with laurel in front, and for reverse a stêlé within a laurel chaplet, as the same head appears upon the medals of THESSALONICA, seem to have been struck by Cassander, in honour of his wife, the sister of Alexander the Great, and to exhibit her portrait. It is not every reader that will tolerate a long Numismatic series; therefore with these general observations we shall close the list; adding only, that a volume might be written in illustration of the medals found at Orphano alone.

Our course from Orphano (January the third) was east-north-east, through the fertile plain of Mestania, lying between two chains of mountains; upon our right and left.

It

It is highly cultivated. We saw some neat plantations of tobacco and corn: the wheat looked uncommonly well. Upon the left, or northern side of our route, were many Turkish villages, upon the mountains, situate towards their bases; distinguished always as being Turkish by their mosques and the tall minarets rising amidst groves of cypress and poplar trees. Another proof of a Turkish population was afforded in the frequent recurrence of public fountains close to the road. The reason given to us, why so many villages are stationed at a distance from the highway, was this; that the Turkish soldiers always plunder, and sometimes ruin, a town or village in passing through it; and therefore a situation is preferred which is not liable to their ravages. After riding four hours, we came to a khan, called Kunarga, and saw the fragments of antient columns near the spot. The whole of our journey through this plain was extremely agreeable. The mountains upon our left were very high and massy, but not covered with snow. There were many Turkish cemeteries near the road; and in these we observed several antient columns. At the end of the plain there were not less than six or seven fountains upon one spot, shaded by large plane-trees. Here we could not have been far distant from the ruins of PHILIPPI, which were upon the slope of a mountain to the left of our route: possibly therefore this groupe of fountains, so remarkably distinguished by the venerable grove beneath which they appear, may have been the same whence that city derived its antient appellation of ΚΡΗΝΙΑΣ; because this name was not applicable to its fountains within the city, but to those those in its vicinity¹. They poured forth such copious streams of water, according to Appian, that all the land below them was a *marsh*². After we had left them, we ascended a hill by an antient paved road about four feet wide, the remains of which had often occurred before during the day's journey. From the heights we had a fine view of Pravista, situate in a defile; and beyond it of a noble plain, flat as the surface of a lake, surrounded by high mountains. It reminded us of the plains of Greece; and as it is a geological character peculiarly characteristic of the great limestone formation, around the shores of the Archipelago, it will be proper to annex a delineation of its appearance in perspective³. It was THE GREAT PLAIN OF not more than forty-five miles from Salonica, whence it bears north-east. Its fertility, now become a proverb over all Turkey, is mainly due to the annual inundations of the Strymon. Except towards the south, where this river makes its exit, the PLAIN OF SERES is surrounded in the manner here described; having the highest ridges of auriferous PANGÆUS towards the east, Mount SCOMIUS towards the north, and Mount CERCINA upon the west. This plain also produces silk, as its name implies; a term, however, equally applicable to cotton, or to any fine flax⁵. The valuable work of Felix Beaujour, cited in the Notes, contains accurate statistical information, concerning this wealthy district. The name has been variously and sometimes erroneously written; either *Sérres*⁶, *Serræ*⁷, or Ceres. There was a nation or tribe in India that had this appellation Séres: it is mentioned by Pliny as a people from whom the Romans derived their course silk for spinning⁸; and their country

Equestrian Turkish
Ladies.

We met two parties of Turkish women of quality on horseback; a sight we had never before enjoyed, in any part of the Turkish empire. Their appearance was singular enough; for they came towards us, riding astride, with their veils on; each horse being richly caparisoned, and conducted by a pedestrian attendant. These ladies had also their female slaves on horseback. As soon as they perceived us, they caused their horses to be led out of the road, and to be placed so that their backs might be towards us as we passed; lest they should be profaned by our beholding the only part of their faces visible through their thick veils, namely, their eyes. We rode bareheaded by them; a mark of our respect, however, which they were not likely to understand, and might have misconstrued into impertinent assurance.

The dogs in this country, as in many parts of Macedonia, wear body clothes; and these animals offered us the last remaining traces of the Macedonian costume. After entering Thrace, which is generally inhabited by Turks, we saw no more Arnauts or Albanians. When the Arnauts perform journeys on horseback, instead of allowing their women to ride also, they make them go before on foot in the mud. After this we descended to Pravista, distant six hours and a half from Orphano.

Pravista.

Nothing ever exceeded, in dirt and wretchedness, the condition of this town; or ever equalled the horrid filth of the khan there. The streets were knee deep in every species of excrementitious ordure. It was therefore by no means desirable to move from the gate of the khan, except with a view to get away from the place; and this we were anxious to do as quickly as horses could be procured. While this was going, the author made a sketch of this building, as it was literally falling to pieces; but the view of it may give a tolerably correct picture of what is considered as an inn in TURKEY. A Tartar courier having arrived, has seated himself at the entrance, to take his caïf; not choosing to encounter the vermin with which the apartments are swarming. His horse, ready to start, is waiting his departure, in the middle of the court. In a gallery, surrounding the area, is seen our Tchohodar; who has been to his devotions, in one of the little cells, or rooms, that open into this court. The other figures are travellers halting at the khan. This place is distant six hours and a half from Orphano; our route by the compass having been

It has been before observed, that whenever a V occurs in the pronunciation of the names of places, the letter, if written, would be β : therefore Pravista would become Περαβιστα; and this may be nothing more than a corruption of the antient Drabiscus of *Strabo*¹, and Drabescus of *Thucydides*², with whose situation it remarkably corresponds. The modern name is written Praveste by *Paul Lucas*³, and Pravasta by *Mr. Walpole*⁴.

Philippi.

After leaving Pravista, we descended, towards sun-set, into the Plain of Sères, and were about two hours in crossing this part of it from the south-west towards the north-east. Upon our left, but rather behind our route towards the west, we saw a very high mountain covered with snow, called Nevroscope; and directly to the left of us, bearing north-west, another mountain, called Drama. In passing DRAMA, to our subsequent mortification, we also passed the ruins of PHILIPPI; without being aware at the time of the loss we had sustained; although had we attempted to deviate deviate from the main route, it might have been impracticable. Such was the rebellious and distracted state of the country at the time of our journey, when almost every place was infested either by rapacious insurgents or by banditti. DRAMA is mentioned, not as a mountain, but as the name of a town, in the very curious History of Constantinople, written at the end of the twelfth and beginning of the thirteenth century, by Geoffroy de Ville-Hardouin, who places it in the VALLEY OF PHILIPPI⁵; so called from the CITY of that name, which, according to the Itinerarium Hierosolymitanum, was only ten miles from (Cavallo) NEAPOLIS⁶. Belon saw its ruins in the sixteenth century, and spent two days in their examination. He found there the remains of a magnificent Amphitheatre; and a number of Soroi, of the marble of the place, of such magnitude, that nothing to compare with them existed anywhere else⁷.

He mentions, moreover, the colossal remains of a Temple of Claudius, besides inscriptions, and numberless (infinies) statues; and enormous marble columns, both of the Doric and Ionic order, beautifully sculptured, and in a marvellous style of structure¹; insomuch, that he considered the ruins of no other city equally calculated to excite admiration². The abundance and beauty of its marble is explained by the circumstance of a vein of that substance being observed by Belon within the walls of the city³: but, independently of the high estimation in which every literary traveller will hold its classical antiquities, its celebrity as the scene of St. Paul's imprisonment imprisonment' with Silas, and that apostle having addressed one of his Epistles to its inhabitants', will cause PHILIPPI to be regarded with no common sensations of interest and curiosity. Afterwards, ascending the mountainous boundary of the plain on its north-eastern side, by a broad antient paved way, we had not day-light enough to enjoy the fine prospect of the sea, and of the town of Cavallo upon a promontory. At some distance lies the isle of THASOS, now called Tasso: it was indistinctly discerned by us; but every other object, excepting the town, began to disappear as we descended towards Cavallo; where we halted for the night; having been three hours upon the journey from Pravista.

II. p. 377. Paris, 1780.) Gruter has given a very imperfect specimen of them (tom. I. p. 129. No. 10.) There is a fair annually held among these ruins.

Cavallo.

At Cavallo we fell in with the route followed by Belon, in his journey from Mount Athos to Constantinople, after his excursion to the gold and silver mines at *Siderocapsa*⁶, the CHRYSITES of the antients. Belon is the only person who has published an account of those mines, once the celebrated resources of the Macedonian power. 'They are two days' journey from Salonica. The Turkish government sometimes made

And, at midnight, Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them. And suddenly there was a great earthquake," &c. Acts xvi. 23, 24, 25.

(5) There is an allusion to this event, and its consequences, in the beginning of the Epistle to the PHILIPPIANS. "The things which have happened unto me, have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel: so that MY BONDS, for Christ, are manifest IN ALL CÆSAR'S COURT, and to all others." Philipp. i. 12, 13.

made a clear profit by them of thirty thousand gold ducats annually. When Belon visited them, there were about five or six hundred furnaces, for smelting, dispersed up and down the mountain. The ores consisted of auriferous pyrites, and of galena, the sulphuret of lead. The bellows were worked by water-wheels; and the method of separating the gold from the silver was the same as that now practised in Hungary, by means of *nitrous acid*¹. This is the sum and substance of all the observations made by Belon upon the spot; except as to the number of the workmen, above six thousand of whom were employed in the works. Of course, those mines are not better conducted than other establishments in Turkey, where labour and skill are requisite; but it were to be wished that some more detailed and scientific account could be obtained concerning them. The turbulent state of the country, at the time of our journey, rendered a visit to them impossible; for all the Pashas were at war not only with the Grand Signior, but with each other; and they respected a firmán as if it were so much blank paper. Belon was two days in journeying from Siderocapsa to Cavallo; but he observes that he might have gone by sea in half a day².

Leunclavius

(1) Indeed the whole description given by Belon is so applicable to the process used at Cremnitz, that it is evident they must have had a common origin. They use the same term, LECHS, to express the result of the crude fusion: and Belon says, the names given at Siderocapsa to metallic bodies were neither Grecian nor Turkish; but that the inhabitants borrowed them of the Germans, or, as he calls them, Almans; q. d. ALEMANNI.

(2) "De Siderocapsà allant par mer à la ville de la Cavalle, il n'y auroit que demie journée de Chemin," &c. Belon. Premier Livre des Singular. c. 55. f. 55. Paris, 1555.

Leunclavius says that the original name of Siderocapsa, at the conquest of Macedonia by the Mahometans, was Sidrus; called Syrus by the *Turks*³. The same author has alluded to a notion of Belon's, which, although ingenious⁴, is without any foundation in history; namely, that Cavallo was antiently *Boucephala*⁵. There was a city called Bucephaléa, built by Alexander in India, near the river Hydaspes, in honour of his horse Bucephalus; also a port of Attica called Bucephala; and the inhabitants of a $\delta\eta\mu\omicron\varsigma$ of Thessalonica were called *Bucephalita*⁶: but no where in history is there any mention made of a town with this name in Thrace; neither does there exist any medal of such a city. As to the modern name Cavallo, or Cavalla, it may have been given in consequence of the most trivial circumstance; such as the existence of a statue of a horse; exactly as the Piræus at Athens received the appellation of Porto Leone, from a statue of a lion. The real history of its antient name is suggested by its situation; for, owing to its maritime position, and to the absence of any other city between Amphipolis and Abdera, excepting Philippi, which was at some distance from the coast, it is evident that Cavallo was NEAPOLIS; the city mentioned in the history of the "Acts of the Apostles," where St. Paul landed, after his voyage from Troas, and from the island of Samothrace.

Neapolis.

*Samothrace*¹. Indeed this is so obvious, that it is marvellous how it escaped the observation of such writers as Belon and Leunclavius. Let the plain text of the sacred historian set this matter in a conspicuous point of view. "AND A VISION APPEARED TO PAUL IN THE NIGHT: THERE STOOD A MAN OF MACEDONIA, AND PRAYED HIM, SAYING, COME OVER INTO MACEDONIA, AND HELP US. AND AFTER HE HAD SEEN THE VISION, IMMEDIATELY WE ENDEAVOURED TO GO INTO MACEDONIA. THEREFORE LOOSING FROM TROAS, WE CAME WITH A STRAIGHT COURSE TO SAMOTHRACIA, AND THE NEXT DAY TO NEAPOLIS; AND FROM THENCE TO PHILIPPI, WHICH IS THE CHIEF CITY OF THAT PART OF MACEDONIA." The promontory, whereon Cavallo is built, stretches into the sea, so as to form a port on either side of it: hence the advantageous situation of NEAPOLIS as an emporium of maritime commerce. The western port, where the town chiefly stands, is good, according to the report of the inhabitants, even for large vessels. Cavallo contains five hundred houses: its population consists of Turks and Greeks, but principally of Turks. The greater part of the town is situate within the walls of the citadel. Its commerce is confined solely to the exportation of tobacco and cotton, without any corn. We had not time to make any careful inquiries for medals; but we observed other antiquities of more or less note. A very large aqueduct still remains upon two tiers of arches, and in perfect order: it it now conducts water from MOUNT PANGÆUS to the citadel. Two precipices of this mountain which D'Anville considers as a branch detached from *Rhodope*², approach so near the sea, as to form narrow defiles on its beach, the passages of which were once closed and defended by walls. These brows of the mountain are now called Castagnas: and opposite to a point, directly under the farthest of these Castagnas, is situate the Isle of THASUS; famous for its quarries of a splendid white marble, which in all respects resembles the *Parian*³.

As we rode out of (Cavallo) NEAPOLIS, (Monday, January the fourth,) we saw a monolithal Soros, supplying the place of a cistern, close to a very antient well. It consisted of one entire block of marble; whereon, in large and distinct characters, we observed the following Inscription; which was also noticed and copied by Belon, upon the same spot, a century and a half before our coming :

The mouth of the well consisted of two pieces of marble, which had once been fastened together by cramps of metal, either of brass or iron; but they had been long removed. The marble was deeply furrowed by the ropes used in drawing water; a circumstance which has been previously considered in this work as affording a reasonable criterion for judging of the antiquity of wells, where this appearance is exhibited. Beyond the well is the aqueduct, conveying water to the citadel. Belon mentions the time when this aqueduct was restored to its pristine use, and the name of the Pasha to whom the inhabitants were indebted for the benefaction¹. The same person removed the Soros we have now described, with two others of similar form and magnitude, from the suburbs, and caused them to be placed, where they now are, by the public wells of the town'. His name was Ibrahim Pasha, or, as Belon writes it, Abrahin Bacha. Speaking of the three marble Soroi, he says, they were each of them eleven feet long, five feet high, and six feet wide. He has also given the inscriptions that were upon the two others, which we did not see*. According to his account of the public donations made by Ibrahim Pasha to Cavallo, it appears that NEAPOLIS rose again from its ruins under his auspices. The inscriptions which he has preserved, as being found in the place, are all of them Roman; but this would hardly have happened, if, as he supposed, the city has existed ever since the time of Alexander the Great. Paul Lucas also passed through Cavallo:

haute montagne, tousiours suyant la coste par le conduit, jusques à tât qu'elle trouue vne vallée; et à fin de la faire passer, il à fallu luy faire de grâdes arches hautes à l'equipollent, pour la rendre de la montagne en la ville, en sorte que les arches dudit conduit ont plus de trente toises en hauteur: et pour la grande commodité des eaux de ceste fontaine, la ville qui estoit deshabitée à esté rendue fort peuplée." *Les Observations de plusieurs Sing. trouuées en Grèce, &c. par P. *Cavallo*³: but neither he, nor subsequent travellers, mention having seen here any Greek inscription. The other antiquities described by Belon are rather characteristic of a Roman than of a Grecian colony; namely, the cisterns of a hardened cement, like what is found at *Baice*⁴. In short, there seems to be little ground for believing that the deductions he has made from Pliny and Mela, to prove that this town was Boucephala, have any reference to Cavallo: but, to increase the confusion thus introduced into the geography of Macedonia, he has also maintained that its more antient name was Chalastra (by him written *Chalastrea*⁵), a town situate upon one of the *Macedonian lakes*⁶, towards the *Therméan Gulph*⁷. With much more reason might he have called it Phagres; because Thucydides relates⁸, that when the Pierians were expelled their country, they

(3) And the account of his journey proves that the lapse of a hundred years has effected no change in the mode of travelling in Macedonia. It is really curious to observe how accurately the time spent by Lucas upon this route corresponds with the rate of our progress. He arrived at Cavallo upon the 11th of January 1715. they inhabited a town of that name, situate under PANGÆUS, and beyond the STRYMON.

Upon quitting the town, we ascended a part of MOUNT PANGÆUS, now called Pangea, by a paved road, and had a fine view of the Bay of Neapolis. The top of the hill, towards the left, was covered with ruined walls, and with the antient aqueduct, which here crosses the road. From hence we descended by a paved road, as before, towards the north-east, until we arrived upon the shore of the bay, which is upon the other side of this promontory; the ISLE OF THASOS being in view, towards the south-east. Looking to the east, we saw the high top of SAMOTHRACE, which makes such a conspicuous appearance from the Plain of Troy. To the south, towering above a region of clouds, appeared the loftier summit of MOUNT ATHOS.

After leaving this bay, we crossed another mountain, and by a paved road, as before. As we descended from it, we observed the remains of an antient gateway, which once closed this military way. Continuing our descent, we arrived upon a plain, where we saw some gipsies, and passed over a small river; and came, in two hours from the time of our leaving Cavallo, to what is termed in the country a Tchiflick, or country-seat of a Turk, called Charpantá, situate upon the side of a hill; above which, towards the left, were the ruins of a fortress, and of walls with mural towers. We have endeavoured to mark the position of these ruins with the more precision, because they are unknown. It is impossible that a citadel here could have belonged to ABDERA; because this was a maritime city, at the embouchure embouchure of the river Nestus: nor is it easy to say what its name was; for of the Roman colonies, there was not one, especially along this territory, but some allusion to it may be found in history. Perhaps this citadel may have been the asylum of those fugitive Pierians, alluded to by Thucydides under the name of *Phagres*¹: but the event to which the origin of Phagres is ascribed, has reference to the fifth century before Christ; and the style of building visible in these ruins can hardly be supposed characteristic of so remote a period². From this place our journey extended over a long and dreary plain, full of bogs; having upon our right a view of the sea, of Mount Athos, Samothrace, Thasos, and several smaller islands; and upon our left, bordering the plain from the south-west to the

(2) For the antiquity of Phagres, we must allow a period considerably exceeding two thousand two hundred years. The foundation of the Macedonian empire is by Thucydides ascribed to Alexander of Argos in Peloponnesus, father of Perdiccas. The Pierians, driven out of their country, established themselves upon the Sinus Strymonicus, or Bay of Neapolis; which from them took the name of the Gulph of Pieria, and retained this appellation to the time when Thucydides wrote his history, as he expressly states: καὶ ἔτι καὶ νῦν Πιερικὸς κόλπος καλεῖται ἢ ὑπὸ τῷ Παγγαίῳ πρὸς θάλασσαν γῆ, κ. τ. λ. (Thucyd. Hist. lib. ii. c. 99. p. 144. ed. Hudsoni.) That we are not liable to much error in the position here assigned to Phagres, may be made plain from Scylax; who, enumerating the cities of Thrace, places Amphipolis, Phagres, Galepsus, Cesyma, and other emporìa, towards the Isle of Thasos; as Vossius reads the text of that very ancient geographer. (Scylac. Caryand. Periopl. ed. Gronov. p. 64. L. Bat. 1697.) But according to the celebrated Chronicle of the Arundelian Marbles, Alexander the Argive, father of Perdiccas, died 462 years before Christ: therefore the building of Phagres took place nearly twenty-three centuries ago.

the north-east, the lofty range of the mountains of RHODOPE. We met several parties of travelling Tartars, the couriers of Turkey, going at their usual expeditious rate. Some of them halted to speak to our Tchohodar; and told him that they had all been detained, owing to the turbulent state of the country, and particularly owing to some dissensions at a place called Fairy, in the road to Constantinople; that the road had been for some time shut in consequence of those troubles, but that it was now again open. After passing this desolate plain, about two hours and a half from Charpantú, we crossed the rapid torrent of the Karasú river, by a ferry of flat-bottomed barges. It was much flooded, owing to the late rains; and the turbid water looked like a rolling tide of liquid mud. This river being the NESTUS of the antients, we inquired diligently after the ruins of ABDERA, situate upon the eastern side of its embouchure¹; but could gain no intelligence of this most powerful city of all THRACE², the fair colony of the ΤΕΙΗ³, famous for its Epicurean philosopher, Democritus⁴. To the north-west, at the base of a high mountain, we saw a town called Kaiabúnar, in a beautiful situation:

situation: above it, upon the summit, is the residence of a Turkish saint. Afterwards, we overtook a large caravan of tobacco: it was conveyed in twenty or thirty waggons, drawn by buffaloes, and going to Constantinople. At sun-set we arrived at Yeniga: here we found the inhabitants discharging their *tophaikes*⁵ and pistols, to celebrate the beginning of the Ramadan; which made it dangerous to appear in the streets. During this fast, they abstain from every indulgence that can be considered as the smallest gratification of sense—even from smoking, or drinking water—the whole time that the sun is above the horizon: the consequence is, that the moment sun-set is proclaimed by the (Muezzinn) crier of a mosque, from a minaret, the Moslems abandon themselves to the most profligate excesses;—and woe be to the (Djowr) infidel Christian, who happens to fall in their way during the moments of their frantic licentiousness! There is, however, much pretence in the rigour with which the Turkish fasts are said to be observed; as in all countries, where similar privations are enjoined by religion. There are some of the Moslems, no doubt, who observe the strictest abstinence; owing to the sincerity of their devotion: but there are many others who

(5) So the word is written by Lord Byron, in his delightful Poem. The word means a musket; but the tophaïke is a long slender rifle, very different in its form from our common musket. Some of those barrels that we saw here were six feet in length.

“ Though too remote for sound to wake will both eat and drink, when they can do this without being observed by one of their own religion. The Dervishes are, of all others, the most likely to violate the rules prescribed by the Korān, when they have an opportunity ; and we often supplied them with the means. When alone with us, they would eat pork, and drink wine, and laugh at the absurdity of considering such things to be forbidden. But the most amusing instance of this kind was afforded, during the Ramadan, by our Tchohodar. Having observed that the poor fellow, in his fatiguing journeys, took no refreshment when we halted for this purpose, although naturally corpulent and fond of good living,—but that he had the additional mortification of seeing us feed heartily upon such occasions,—we endeavoured, by every persuasion, and by putting before him the best provisions that the country afforded, to induce him to break his fast. It was all to no purpose : he shook his head and sighed, saying, that it was “ contrary to his religion, and therefore impossible.” At last we hit upon an expedient which enabled us to keep him in better plight for the future. We wrapped up the legs of a baked turkey in paper, with bread and salt ; and when he was upon the road, at a distance from any town or village, where he could not be observed by any other Moslem, one of us, coming behind him, conveyed the packet into his hand. He no sooner saw what it contained, than, muttering his (Allhamdu li'llah) “ God be praised ! ” with great energy, he fell to work, making as hearty a meal as any of us had done before : and in this manner we took care afterwards that he should be regularly supplied, leaving him to

to slake his thirst, as he could, from the fountains we passed on the road.

We found no medals, nor inscriptions, nor any other antiquities at Yeniġa. It contains about two hundred houses. The inhabitants are all Turks, who carry on a commerce in tobacco. The post is here established, or it would be a place of little note. During the whole night, the noise of a large drum, continually passing, added to the uproar of the Ramadan: and as it is almost an act of religious duty among the Moslems to prevent people from taking rest during the nights of this fast, it may be supposed that our sleep was not very sound. In the morning, (Tuesday, Jan. 5,) before we left the town, observing that it was a market day, we examined the things brought for sale. There was a good supply of corn and of garden vegetables; also a great quantity of timber, in planks, ready for building, brought by peasants from the mountains. Four-wheeled waggons are very generally used here; but they are slightly and ill constructed, and little calculated for the bad roads about Yeniġa.

About an hour's distance from the town, we came to the dwelling of a Turkish saint. He lived in a little round stone building, near the road, which had more the appearance of a small antient temple than of a modern structure. Opposite to the door was a red flag; and below it, a box to receive parâhs, as pious donations from passengers. These saints in Turkey are either persons bereft of reason, or who affect to be so; and they are very much revered. The same flat and swampy plain appeared to the east of Yeniġa

that we had seen before we reached it; and the same ridge of high mountains throughout its whole length upon our left, extending east and west. This plain is two or three days' journey in length; and, like the rest of THRACE, it exhibits little worthy of observation. The sea enters into it by a narrow mouth, and forms a wide salt-water lake. We came to the edge of this lake at two hours' distance from Yeniga. It was covered with different kinds of water-fowl: there was one of immense size, resembling a swan as to its body and neck, but having a long bill shaped like a spoon. At the northern extremity, or inland termination of this lake, we came to a large and picturesque ruin, as of an abbey or monastery, of very great magnitude. There was a paved causeway leading through the fen to and from this building. Almost the whole of the walls, and many of the mural towers, were yet standing. It had once been fortified. Within this structure we found the remains of a church and of a chapel, evidently formed out of an edifice that had been more antiently erected to serve purposes of war rather than of peace; the interior of the ecclesiastical part of the building exhibiting arches that had been walled up, and walls plastered over and painted by some of the early Christians. We found fragments of Grecian sculpture; among others, the breast of a female statue covered with drapery, and finely executed in white marble. The remains of portals, or propylæa, were visible, with three gates in each place of entrance. There was one upon the western side of the building: and here we observed, among the foundations, the grand style of Grecian

Grecian architecture, consisting of large blocks of marble placed evenly together without any cement. In the walls of the church we saw large slabs of Thasian marble, finely grooved, as for the ornaments of a Heathen temple. The modern name of this ruin is Boûr Kalis. We shall perhaps be also able to ascertain its antient appellation and history; for we have already afforded data sufficient to prove, that this was the Citadel of BISTONIA; and that the lake was the Palus Bistonis. We procured a few coins upon the spot; but they gave us no information, being all of them either Cuphic or ecclesiastical. But the situation of so considerable a lake in this part of THRACE, added to the appearance of an ecclesiastical ruin among the vestiges of a more antient citadel, will guide us to the name of the original inhabitants to whom they belonged, and prove them to have been the Bistonians, a people mentioned by Herodotus, through whose territory Xerxes marched, in his way to invade Greece¹. BISTONIA was an Episcopal See, within the *Archbishopric of Trajanopolis*²: this explains the appearance of ecclesiastical buildings among the ruins of the antient citadel.

The Lake Bistonis is mentioned by *Strabo*¹; and it is called (μεγάλη λίμνη) the great lake of that name². It is also mentioned by *Pliny*³, and by *Scymnus Chius*⁴: yet such appears to have been always the forlorn condition of THRACE, that we find hardly a single allusion to it in any other writer; and a feature in geography, which if found in Greece would have been the subject of constant allusion, is almost as little known as one of the lakes of America. Yet the Bistonians were of sufficient importance to render their name applicable, in the language of poetry, to the whole of THRACE: and in this sense they are mentioned by *Lucan*⁵. The distance of the RUINS OF BISTONIA (for by this name we may now call them) from Cavallo, agrees so nearly with that stated in the Jerusalem Itinerary for the interval between NEAPOLIS and PYRGIS, that we may with good reason adopt this latter reading, instead of Purdis, in consequence of the turretted appearance of the ruins; which remarkably confirms a suggestion of Wesseling, in his notes upon upon that *Itinerary*⁶. The city of BISTONIA is mentioned by *Stephanus*⁷; but he takes no notice of the lake. The ruins are surrounded by a swamp, into which falls one of the two rivers mentioned by Herodotus; thence flowing into the Lagoon, close to the building. The air of this place is of course pestilential during summer. The land of the Bistonian territory appeared to us to be less cultivated than the rest of the country; owing, perhaps, to the abundance of food supplied by the fisheries upon the *lake*⁸: it is wholly given up to pasture. We saw a fine breed of sheep here; but, as usual, it was mixed with a very bad sort.

As we proceeded, the high range of RHODOPE was still upon our left, consisting of denuded mountains. They are called Karowlan; and the plain here bears the name of Chouqilarkir. Our road was due east. We met several rough-looking fellows, who were all armed, and came towards us, firing off their tophaiques. We expected some interruption from them; but they contented themselves with questioning the Tchohodar, who, with a large ataghan, and two loaded pistols in his girdle, held his carabine cocked all the while he was answering them. At the distance of two hours and a half from Gymmergine, to which town we were going, we rode through a river, called Kürü-tchi: it is considerable only during heavy floods. The tombs of Turkish saints, like the dwelling of one before noticed, are distinguished by a little red flag, and a box to collect alms. But the most remarkable appearance in this route, was the number of cemeteries, situate in desert places over which the road passes; containing, severally, from three to four hundred graves, with grave-stones, and no village being near to them. The wells in THRACE differed from any we had ever seen. There is a kind of well which may be considered as universal in Europe: it may be observed from the shores of the Icy Sea to the Mediterranean; namely, that which exhibits the antient and simple mode of raising water by a huge lever, having at one end a counterpoise to the bucket, formed by fastening on large stones: and this sort of well sometimes appears in THRACE. But there is another, more common, and perhaps more antient: this consists of an arch, from which, by a covered flight of ten or fifteen steps, persons are conducted to the level where the water rises. The Turkish improvement of the fountain is also often seen: and as this plan is much to be preferred, both for its convenience and cleanliness, it is very remarkable that it should be thus frequent in the most barbarous countries, even by the way-side, far removed from any habitations; and also in the poorest towns of Italy; while fountains are so rare in the wealthiest cities of Britain. There are parts of England where this luxury, which would be so conducive to the health of the inhabitants, is almost unknown. When we were within an hour and a half of Gymmergine, we passed the ruins of another city, or town, upon our left, called by the name of Mycena Kalis. The walls were very thick, and had been constructed of large pebbles, imbedded in mortar; a style of masonry inconsistent with any conjecture, as to the antiquity of the building, excited by the remarkable appellation now borne by these ruins. In another quarter of an hour we passed a river called Aksu; and at sun-set arrived at the large town of Gymmergine, written Commecine by *Belon*¹. According to the Pandects of Leunclavius, these names are corruptions of Gumulza, called Gumulzina by the Turks². About half an hour before we entered the town, we saw a large tumulus.

It will be necessary here to recapitulate a part of the preceding observations; because the geography of this country is so little known, that there is no notice taken in any modern map, either of the great plain we had passed, or of the remarkable range of high and bare mountains, extending east and west, at whose feet this plain lies. The mountains evidently constitute a part of the great chain of RHODOPE: they now bear, as was before stated, the name of Karowlan; and the plain is called Chougilarkir. Many villages and towns lie out of the road, upon the south side of the long Rhodopæan chain. In fact, if we would seek for an accurate description of this part of THRACE, it is only to be found in Herodotus; and upon this account, the best map of the country is that which was published by *De Lisle*¹, because it was adapted to the text of the historian. Herodotus, relating the march of Xerxes towards Greece, enumerates with great fidelity all the principal objects².

It was at Gymmergine that we received the first authentic intelligence of the disastrous state of the country towards the east; and we heard the news that Fairy, a town through which it would be necessary to pass, in our way to Constantinople, had been taken by the rebels, and was now in their hands; its former inhabitants having fled to Mary, the antient MARONÉA. We found, however, from the arrival of Tartar couriers, that the road was considered as being open; the rebels in possession of Fairy having given notice that travellers might pass unmolested.

Gymmergine contains one thousand houses: of this number, four hundred belong to Greeks, sixty to Jews, fifteen to Armenians, and the rest to its Turkish inhabitants. There is here carried on an inland commerce, in the sale of corn, cotton, tobacco, wool, &c. As we passed through the streets, we were insulted and pelted by the rabble. The Turks calling us Djowrs; and even the Greeks, seeing that we were escorted by a Tchohodar, mistook us for French prisoners going to Constantinople, and reviled us accordingly. In the midst of all this tumult, seeing some Greek (Guyumdji) silversmiths at work, we asked them for (Γαζέτες πάλαιες) medals; but they hurried us away through fear of the Turks; promising, however, to come to the khan. In the evening, the minarets were illuminated for the Ramadan. Being feverish, and troubled with pains in the joints, whether owing to bad air or to fatigue, we took the advice of our old Tchohodar, and followed his example, by going to the public bath. "You will come out of it," said he, "as supple and refreshed as if you were born again." When we came to this place, we only wished that some such painter as Hogarth had delineated the scene that was here exhibited. The interior of the bath was full; and it might have been deemed a cavern of the Furies. We beheld a dark vault, in which a number of ghastly and pallid figures, with lamps faintly glimmering through the steam, came in shrouds, as from the tombs, to stare upon our faces. They had bald heads, with whiskers or long beards; and as they exposed their bare arms, we observed that they were tattooed and marked with gunpowder. Being conducted along the gloomy passages, we heard such horrid howling and incantations, that we feared to proceed; for the sounds were increased and confused by echoes and reverberations from the vaulted roofs. At last, being prepared for the sudatory, we were led to an inner vault, and inhaled an atmosphere in which we felt as if we should be suffocated, until we were relieved by a copious perspiration excited by the hot vapour filling the chamber. After this, the attendants proceeded to their usual office of kneading and cracking the limbs and joints; considered by the Turks as a great luxury, but by us as so exceedingly unpleasant that we soon put a stop to the operation, and returned to the khan.

Guyumdji.

Here we found the (Guyumdji) silversmiths, waiting for us, with a number of medals for sale. If we may depend upon what these men affirm, silver coins alone are found: possibly the peasants bring silver only for sale, as the bronze would not be purchased for melting. All the medals offered to us here were of silver; and it is remarkable that the greater number consisted of medals of

Rhodes,

Rhodes, differing in their dies. Some of them were bad medals of Alexander; or of the Roman emperors, Trajan and Antoninus Pius; and there were many Consular coins;—also the large silver tetradrachms of Heracléa Sintica, most of which were spurious; but whether antient or modern forgeries we could not tell; the metal was not sonorous, nor the work sharp; the die being indistinctly developed, and the surface rough.

The following morning (Jan. 6), being that of the celebration of a Greek festival, great difficulty occurred in procuring either horses for the road, or any *Surudji*¹ to accompany them. The author, with the Tchohodar, waited upon the Agha, and made known his situation; at the same time exhibiting his firmán and passports. The Agha boasted that the firmán was to him a matter of little consideration: “he knew how to do his duty towards Djowrs, without any such authority.” The conference ended, however, in his sending an officer to enforce the attendance of post-horses at the khan. The persons who came with them betrayed a manifest reluctance: first arrived a Turkish Surudji, with his own, and two horses; afterwards, a Greek guide, with five other horses. The two first horses being ready, and the Surudji impatient to start, Mr. Cripps and the author set out with this man; leaving the Tchohodar to follow with Antonio and the other guide with the baggage. We had not proceeded more than half an hour from Gymmergine, before the Turkish Surudji who

who was with us, in an authoritative tone, commanded us to halt, and wait until the rest of the party should arrive : and upon our persisting in continuing our journey, the miscreant drew forth his *ataghan*¹, and, threatening to stab Mr. Cripps, made him descend from his horse, and stand in the mud ; using every menacing expression at the same time. We were armed only with one of the large Turkish poignards, which we were accustomed to use in digging the roots of plants, when we collected specimens for our herbarium ; but two Englishmen, even if unarmed, ought to be a match for one Turk, with all his weapons : it would have been no difficult matter, therefore, to rid ourselves of this fellow and to gallop off with the horses ; but we waited very patiently, and even endeavoured to pacify our mutineer until the Tchohodar came ; who said it was necessary to endure it all ; that we should be impaled alive if we ventured to strike any of the inhabitants ; that it was well nothing worse had happened ; there being neither government nor religion in the country, and he wished we were well out of it. The ill humour of the Surudji proceeded solely from his long fast, for the Ramadan ; but the whole district was in a state of open rebellion, and bade defiance to

to all authority. We traversed again the long and dreary Plain of Chouagilarkir for two hours, when we arrived at a bridge of eight or nine arches. Half an hour from this bridge we passed a small village; and one hour afterwards another village, with an antient bridge of eight arches over a small river. We then came to another village and a ruined bridge, distant four hours from Gymmergine. In this manner we continued riding through this dreary plain for another hour, when it began to grow dark: and as the Surudjees were so surly that they refused to answer any of our questions, finding that we were close to a village called Tchafst-tcheyr, or Shaft-tcheyr, we resolved to halt for the night. Here a new difficulty occurred, for we could not prevail upon any of the inhabitants to lodge us: but as it gave occasion to one of the most remarkable instances of hospitality perhaps ever known, it becomes a duty to relate our adventure more particularly.

The rascally Surudjees who were with our baggage had already dismounted it, and were leaving us upon the bare earth, when an old Turk, casually passing, and hearing some altercation between these men and the Tchohodar, demanded the cause of the dispute. Being informed that these men refused to proceed any farther, and that some poor Djowrs^a were

(2) Lord Byron's beautiful poem of the GIAOUR having given rise to frequent inquiry as to the proper mode of writing this word, whether DJOUR, or GIADUR; it may be proper to add, that both are correct, the difference being only local. Our learned orientalist, the Rev. George Cecil Renouard, has observed, that the Turks of the Islands use Djour, and all the Moslems of the Continent, Ghiaur.

were in danger of being exposed all night houseless in the mud, he ordered the Surudjees to bring our baggage to his house, and bade us all follow him. This being done, we were received into an open inclosed court, while a room was prepared for us. As soon as we were conducted to this apartment, we found the floor covered with clean mats, and a blazing fire already kindled. The owner of this dwelling was not rich; yet he caused a supper to be sent to us from his little charem, where it was prepared by his women. Of the sacrifice thus made to hospitality by a Moslem we were not yet fully aware. We were supplied with every thing necessary to our comfort and repose; and the next morning, when we rose to depart, horses were waiting for us at the door. To our regret, as well as surprise, when we tendered payment for our night's lodging and provisions, our benevolent host would accept of "nothing," as he said, "but our good wishes;" and bidding us (Urlarula) a good journey! withdrew from our sight. Soon after quitting this hospitable mansion, perceiving that a volume of plants belonging to our herbarium was missing, one of us returned in search of it; and found that the family, who had so kindly entertained us, had actually carried out and broken the earthen vessels out of which we drank water; and were besides busily employed in completing the ceremony of purification, by fumigating the mats, and scouring the room which they conceived to have been defiled by the presence of Christians. The inconvenience, therefore, and the loss, which our visit to this liberal Moslem had occasioned in his family, will shew to what an extent

the virtue of hospitality is sometimes carried among the Turks. This village of Tchafst-tcheyr is at the eastern extremity of the great plain of Chouagilar-kir, and it is the last which it contains towards the east. We rejoiced when we left it; being heartily tired of the sight of a country with so little variation in its appearance, and so disfigured by its fens and desolated soil.

Our road from Tchafst-tcheyr offered a continual ascent over a mountain, in an easterly direction, for an hour, until we arrived at a village called Kallia Gederai; situate exactly midway between Thessalonica and Constantinople. This wild and elevated region is upon the heights of the celebrated promontory SERRIUM, once inhabited by the Cicones, who assisted Priam against the Greeks; and whose capital ISMARUS was therefore destroyed by Ulysses, in his return from Troy. SERRIUM is mentioned by *Herodotus*¹. There was upon this promontory, in antient times, a little town of the same name; perhaps where Shepshe now stands. In the passes of this mountainous district we frequently met with aged Greek peasants playing upon the tambourgi, or long Turkish drum, in honour of the Ramadan, and thus collecting paráhs from the Tartars, and from other travellers. In three hours we came to the village of Shepshe, where we saw a party of armed Turks as a patrolle, keeping a look-out, to watch the incursions of the rebels, rebels, and give an alarm at their approach. Another hour's journey brought us to a place called Peresteria; and in five hours from the time of our leaving Kallia Gederui we came to the dervène, which marks the boundary between the territories of Gymmergîne and Fairy: it is also the half-way of this mountain-pass. The road here is frequently paved; being a part of the old Roman High-way, leading from Rome to *Constantinople*¹. Soon after leaving the dervène, we had a fine view of the ÆGEAN, and of the islands SAMOTHRACE, IMBROS, and LEMNOS. Our whole day's journey was over a mountainous region. About one hour before we arrived at Fairy, a noble prospect was again displayed, of all the GULPH OF ÆNOS, with SAMOTHRACE, and the more distant islands of the ÆGEAN SEA.

Fairy is situate upon the eastern side of the mountain SERRIUM, and at the western extremity of another plain, which begins after passing over this mountain; the next in succession to that of Chouagilarkir. It is distant eleven hours and a half from Tchafits-tcheyr, and within the antient territory of the CICONES. As we drew nigh to what had been the town only six days before, we perceived that the devastations made by Ulysses in his march had been renewed; Fairy exhibited one wide heap of smoking ruins:—yet amidst these ruins we were to seek for a night's lodging. We had been on horseback this day from one hour before sun-rise, until an hour hour after sun-set, when we rode into its deserted streets. On every side we saw nothing but the remains of houses consumed, and the terrible evidences of the sacking and burning of a town by a host of furious insurgents. The caravanserai alone remained standing; but in such a state of disorder, and so crowded with cattle, that it would have been preferable to lie down upon the reeking ashes of the place: the whole floor of it was covered with dung and mud. The khan had been burned; but in lieu of it, a kind of booth had been erected, by putting together a few planks, where coffee was sold to the rebels: and, as we were forced to consign ourselves into their hands, we considered that we should be safer in a place of public resort, than where we were liable to the attacks of more private marauders. Hitherto we had seen only a few armed individuals collected about this booth, who offered us no molestation. We agreed therefore with the owner of it, to remain with him until the morning. All the former inhabitants of Fairy had deserted the place; and fled to another town called Mary, the

ISMARUS of *Homer*¹ and *Virgil*². It afterwards bore the name of ΜΑΡΟΝΕΑ. Stephanus mentions the Lake ΜΑΡΙΣ³, whence Mary. This was the renowned city of the CICONES which experienced the vindictive rage of Ulysses, when it was reduced by him to the condition in which we now beheld *Fairy*⁴; and in an age when the predatory warfare of these countries was much the same that it is now. The armed mountaineers of Rhodope may be considered as the faithful representatives of the allies of Priam; and their manners as little ameliorated by any trace of civilization. What a night did we pass among them, in the coffee-booth at Fairy! While day-light remained, few of them made their appearance; but as soon as darkness enabled them to venture forth from their lurking-places, the booth became filled with fiercer ruffians than we had seen since our visit to the Circassians of Caucasus. Their coming was announced by the firing of their tophaihes; first first at a distance, and then close to the booth. As our miserable shed was open to all the winds of heaven, and we wished to keep a lamp burning, we were employed in patching paper over some of the holes, and in covering the crevices with our packing clothes, when we found them suddenly torn down by these fellows without, who presented their grim visages, looking through the apertures in the sides of the booth, to see who were within. All this while the firing of their tophaikes continued so close to us, that we expected at every instant to receive a random shot. Presently a party of them rushed into the booth, and became clamorous for coffee. While this was serving⁵, they seated themselves rudely by us, stamping the butt-ends of their muskets, and kindling their pipes at a *mongúl*⁶ that stood for that purpose. At sight of these men, our Tchohodar became very uneasy. He had seated himself in a corner of the booth with his ataghan and pistols in his belt; but loosing his girdle, he now examined his weapons, and placed them in due readiness before him. We were then lying upon our baggage, and affected sleep; although with as little somnolency as might be expected in the midst of such

(5) "This custom of calling for coffee in a public booth in Turkey answers to the practice among our lower orders of calling for beer or spirituous liquors. The coffee is presented in cups that hold about as much of this beverage as would fill a table-spoon, and as thick as mud; the thicker the better. For this the guest pays one paráh. A Turk will enjoy his evening with as much gaiety and satisfaction, who spends six paráhs for his coffee, and two for his tobacco, as an Englishman who spends two shillings in beer: and he has another advantage over the Englishman, in not becoming intoxicated with what he drinks, although his spirits be equally exhilarated." *Cripps's MS. such company. To say that we were not alarmed would be ridiculous; but it was hardly possible to refrain from laughter, at seeing, occasionally, the old Tchohodar, who pretended to be engaged in his devotions, every now and then taking up slyly the hem of his garment¹, when he observed that we regarded him, to express his horror at our situation. A ferocious looking Turk, with a dark blue turban about his temples, the fringe of which almost covered one side of his face, came in with three others about midnight, and seemed to conduct himself as a chief among these rebels. Our Tchohodar addressed him with the usual salutation among the Moslems, "Salam aleikoum, Effendi!" "Peace be with you, Sir!" but he made no reply. While he was drinking his coffee, pointing to us, he said, in a surly tone, "Who are these French dogs? and what is their business here?" "They are not Frenchmen, Effendi!" said the Tchohodar, "but the greatest enemies of Frenchmen: they are Englishmen, and the friends of all true Moslems!" "Don't tell us of Englishmen," said he, evidently displeased, and striking the floor with the butt-end of his tophaïke: "we know none of your distinctions: a djour is a djour! dare you deny that?" The Tchohodar added, that "he was not disposed for contradiction; that it was truly Ramazan² time; and not a season for quarrelling:"—upon which which another of the gang said, "Yes! it is Ramazan time; and we mean to celebrate it: we have lighted one fire already in Fairy for the Ramazan; and we intend to light other fires before the Ramazan is ended!" To all which the Tchohodar only contented himself by repeating, "In sha'llah! In sha'llah!" Afterwards they fell to relating their exploits: and this conversation served to tranquillize them a little; for about two hours after midnight they retired, and left us in quiet possession of the booth. When they were all gone, the Tchohodar went to prayers in good earnest, exclaiming loudly, Ma sha'llah! And holding up his hands, to express more forcibly his sense of our deliverance, he said, and there is no reason to doubt the truth of it, that if he had produced the firmán which he had in his bosom, instead of deriving protection from it, we should all of us have been put to death. Indeed the death of Mr. Wood, when in a similar situation among the rebels north of Constantinople, has been attributed entirely to his want of discretion, in not concealing the firmán and letters of authority he carried with him; for they offered him no molestation until he made known the nature of his passports; when he was instantly shot.

the sacking
of Fairy.

The moment that day-light appeared, we hastened to the caravanseraï for horses : and here we learned, that out of one hundred horses, formerly kept there for posting, only sixteen remained. Two hundred and thirty persons were killed at the taking of the town, before the rebels set fire to it : they entered during the night, exactly as they visited us at the booth ; only in greater number, and with cannon ; nobody knowing whence they came. Ninety houses were entirely burnt to the ground, besides the mosque, khan, &c. ; and others were so completely destroyed, that of a large town nothing now remained but its ruins, in the midst of which stood the caravanseraï and the coffee-booth. The rebellious mountaineers are said to perform their incursions from the most distant places, with surprising rapidity. They poured into Fairy, on the night of its capture, like a torrent, after firing a few rounds of artillery. The inhabitants having nothing to defend the town but their small arms, it was soon in flames. A dreadful scene of blood and tumult then ensued : to the noise of the conflagration were added the howling and shouts of the rebels, and the shrieks of the poor inhabitants. No one of the fugitives had yet ventured to return to the scene of so much horror : but the Tartar couriers passed through the place ; and, as there was no other road, we had been constrained to do the same ; not expecting, however, to meet with so much peril as we had encountered during this fearful night. The fact was, that the Pashas throughout all Thrace and Macedonia were then in a state of warfare ; either among themselves, or with the Turkish government : and there was no road entirely free from the danger danger either of the insurgents, or of those bands of plunderers, who, profiting by the distracted state of the country, poured down from the mountains upon the plains. When those robbers meditate an attack, the expedition they use is such, that they overwhelm the inhabitants before any intelligence is received of their approach; and the blow being altogether unexpected, is always successful. The alleged cause of the disorders at Fairy was said to be nothing more than a dispute between the Agha and his Tchohodar; when the latter having fled from his master, returned with a band of insurgents, and set fire to the town; plundering it of every thing that could be carried off, and murdering the inhabitants'. The flames were seen as far off as Kishan, distant eight hours from Fairy, in the road to Constantinople. The Agha escaped, and took refuge in Mary.

Cause of the disaster.

We observed a few vestiges of antiquity in Fairy, particularly the large marble capital of a Doric column; also an ancient fountain: but the state of the place allowed us neither the leisure nor the inclination to look for works of art. We had the greatest difficulty in getting horses; a strong opposition being made to our hiring those at the caravanserai.

Difficulty of quitting the town.

River
Hebrus.

REJOICING in our escape from Fairy, we made good speed across the plain, and reached the banks of the Maritza river in three quarters of an hour, which is counted an hour's distance from the town. This river is the HEBRUS of *Scylax*¹ and *Herodotus*². We found it to be much swoln, broad, and muddy³. Our passage over it was effected by means of a rope ferry with a barge. As soon as we landed upon the eastern side, we received the fallacious congratulations of the ferrymen, upon having escaped the territory of the rebels; but this was only true as far as it related to those who burned

"Sed Prætor, paullo post, hæc de Maritza subjicit: Alii sedes constituebant versus inferiores partes, et eum fluvium quem lingua vulgaris, ut antea dictum est, Maritzam vocat. Reapse quidem is HEBRUS est, qui versus ÆNUM oppidum excurrrens, ibidem in Ægæum se pelagus effundit. Sed quia cum hoc et alii se conjungunt annes, ac majorem efficiunt: iccirco nomen etiam apud accolos mutat. Flumina verò que Prætor ab HEBRO sive Maritza recipi commemorat, alia non est necesse recenseri, quod Turcicis nostris illustrandis non serviant." He mentions, however, two; the Harda and the Tunsa; which, he says, Chalcondyles often calls Tienarus; perhaps the TÆARUS of Herodotus. Vide Chalcondylem, Hist. de Reb. Turcic. p. 413. Paris, 1650.

burned Fairy; the country eastward being infested by other predatory bands. This allusion to the passing out of one territory into another is very antient, with reference to the HEBRUS: it formerly divided the CICONES from the APSYNTHI. Rivers, as natural boundaries, long maintain a distinction between inhabitants of the same country: no lapse of time has annihilated the distinction between the Trasteverini and those Romans who dwell upon the opposite side of the Tiber. This great maritime plain, watered by the Hebrus, was antiently called DORISCUS, from a regal citadel of that name, used as a bulwark by Darius in his war with the *Scythians*⁴. A small part of it, that which intervenes between the promontory Serrium, and the river, was rendered famous by the review and muster of the army of Xerxes, who here numbered his forces, previous to their descent upon *Greece*⁵. The same place is mentioned by *Pliny*⁶, and by *Ammianus Marcellinus*⁷. The regal citadel was upon the western side of the embouchure of the *Hebrus*⁸:

as ÆNOS, called APSYNTHUS by *Strabo*¹, was upon the eastern. The large silver medals of ÆNOS are the boldest specimens of the very antient coinage of Greece. We had the good fortune to procure one of the finest of these coins at Kishan: it will presently be described. There were five cities of this name; but the Thracian ÆNOS was the most renowned. It received its denomination from one of the companions of Ulysses who was there buried²; and it is celebrated by *Homer*³ as the city whence the Trojan auxiliaries came from THRACE. respecting the HEBRUS, which has escaped the notice of geographers: it mentions the names of all the tributary streams received by this river in its course⁵; and among others, the Tearus, at whose fountains a Stélé was erected by Darius, with a remarkable inscription preserved by the historian⁶. The sources of the TEARUS occur to the north of Constantinople, in the neighbourhood of Kirk Iklisiè; and as the name of the river is still preserved in modern maps, with hardly any alteration⁷, it were to be wished that some traveller would pay a visit to the spot. Herodotus relates, that the water of the Tearus was celebrated for its medicinal properties⁸. There are other curious circumstances respecting the HEBRUS, to which little attention has been paid. According to Plutarch, it once bore the name of *RHOMBUS*⁹; and there grew upon its banks the

the identical plant now constituting a principal part of the commerce of the country; being then used, as it is now, for its intoxicating qualities¹: and the mention made of it by Plutarch is so antient an allusion to tobacco, and to the practice of smoking, that from this circumstance alone we are almost tempted to doubt the authenticity of the treatise (περὶ ποταμῶν) attributed to him². It is moreover related of the HEBRUS by Pliny, that its sand was auriferous³; and Belon has confirmed this observation, by stating that the inhabitants annually collected the sand for the gold it contained⁴. Perhaps the old mythological story of its bearing

(2) Many authors expressed their doubts as to the real author of the treatise περὶ ποταμῶν, which bears the name of Plutarch; and among others, Sigismundus Gelenius, who published an edition of it, together with the Periplus of Arrian, and the Epitome of Strabo. In his dedication (ad Anselmum Ephorin. medicum) he says, "Plutarchum vero hunc Chæronensem illum non esse stylus satis arguit, et alioqui titulus nudum Plutarchi nomen habet. Attamen hunc quoque ex vetustissimis quibusque sua hausisse crebra auctororum citatio declarat." The objection was however refuted, and the authenticity of the work forcibly maintained by the arguments of Philip. Maussacus, who subsequently edited the same treatise; adding a dissertation, entitled "Judicium de Plutarcho et scriptis ejus, in quo Libellus de stuminibus magno Plutarcho Chæronensi probabiliter vindicatur."

We passed this river at a season of the year when the mouths of the Danube are sometimes frozen; but there was neither the appearance of ice, nor anything in the temperature of the water corresponding with the notions entertained of the HEBRUS by the Romans, and particularly by Horace.

seemed to have bidden a long farewell to beautiful scenery ; nothing now being exhibited but the bleak inhospitable fields and swamps of THRACE : yet, in the distant perspective, mountains appeared all around us ; the horizontal line of the sea being broken by the heights of Samothrace, by Lemnus, and by other islands. Every traveller will recollect how much shorter distances appear in mountainous regions, even when journeying slower, and over bad roads, than when traversing an extensive campaign, where the dull uniformity of the prospect excites weariness and disgust. About half the way to Kishan, we came to the village of Achooria : it is inhabited by Greeks. From this village, all the rest of our journey to Kishan was over the same maritime and wretched land of the APSYNTHI. We arrived at Kishan about three o'clock in the afternoon : it is situate at the eastern extremity of the plain of the HEBRUS, upon the side of a mountain, towards the termination of the range of RHODOPE ; distant eight hours from Fairy ; twelve from Æno, the antient ÆNOS ; and twelve from Gallipoli, the antient CALLIPOLIS.

“ The banks of the Maritza are covered with tamarisks. Nothing, however, can be more uninteresting than the wide open plain through which this river runs. The general appearance of the country is not relieved by many marks of civilization or of culture ; the eye, as it wanders over the bleak inhospitable Thracian plains, is arrested only by some of those artificial mounds of earth, marking either the site of some battle, or the spot where the bodies of the slain were heaped and entombed together ; or, in later times, the place where the standards of the Musulman invaders of Greece were fixed, when the army was encamped. When or whence the Hebrus took the name of Maritza, it is not easy to determine ; but I find it in the history of Georgius Acropolita, (p. 64.) who lived in the year 1222 : Εἶπον, ὅν καὶ Μαρτζαν ὁ χυδαῖος κατονομάζει λαός. “ Hebrus, called commonly Maritza.” *Walpole's MS. CALLIPOLIS. In stating these distances, it should be observed, that the Tartar couriers perform the same in half the computed time, and sometimes in less than half'. We heard fearful tales of the state of the road at Kishan, and rumours big with the perilous adventures of passengers; the country being described as full of robbers, and the villages as being entirely deserted. Some of the inhabitants came to us, to make very anxious inquiries respecting the condition of Fairy°. As Kishan is a large town, and carries on a considerable inland commerce, we were very diligent in our inquiries among the silversmiths for works of antient art. Our success, however, would hardly have been worth notice, if we had not met with a Greek physician, who had many fine silver medals, and willingly sold them. Many of these were Roman coins; particularly a very fine one of Nero; but almost all of them were said to be found at Ænos. The large large coarse silver tetradrachms of Heraclea Sintica were common here, as all over this country. We bought a silver one of Philip, with the impression which is common to the medals of Alexander the Great; namely, the portrait of that monarch, decorated as Hercules, with the lion's spoils; and for reverse, a sitting figure of Jupiter, with the legend ΦΙΛΙΠΠΟΥ. Such medals are, therefore, evidently the coins of Alexander's successor, Philip Arideus. But we obtained here two beautiful silver medals of Ænos; one being smaller than the other, which is a tetradrachm; but both having that interesting representation of the head of Mercury, which proves the great antiquity of the scalp-like cap, now called Fez, from Fez, as it is worn by all the nations of the *Levant*¹. The reverse of these medals exhibit a goat, with this legend, ΑΙΝΙΟΝ. The extraordinary boldness of the relief caused by the die, exceeds that of any other example in the whole numismatic series of antient Grecian coinage. Sometimes the medals of Ænos have the same head of Mercury, wearing the Petasis instead of the Fez; and sometimes the Fez is represented pointed, like the Ionian mitre upon the Grecian statues. An approximation to this latter form, may be observed in the sort of cap worn by Harlequin, upon our stage; the whole Pantomime of Harlequin, having been originally derived from Greece; whence it was imported into Italy by the Venetians; and still preserving, among modern nations, a very curious mythological representation, founded founded upon the dramas of the antients. Thus we see Harlequin, as MERCURY, with the herpe in his hand, to render himself invisible, and to transport himself from one end of the earth to the other; wearing, at the same time, his petasus or winged cap; and being accompanied by Columbine, as PSYCHE, or the soul; an Old Man, who is CHARON; and a Clown, MOMUS the son of Nox, whose continual occupation was mimicry and ridicule of the Gods. When, instead of the short sword called herpe, he is represented with the Caduceus he received from Apollo; this is evidently nothing more than the virga divina, or divining rod of miners, over whom Mercury presided; on which account he is also represented with a bag of money in his hand, as a god of *thieves*². The divining rod was the most antient superstitious practice resorted to in the discovery of precious metals. The use of it was left in Cornwall by the Phœnicians; and down to a very late period, we find it called by its antient name, *Caduceus*³. Indeed, some of the representations of Mercury upon antient vases, are actually taken from the scenic exhibitions of the Grecian theatre; and that these exhibitions were also the prototypes of the modern pantomime, requires no other confirmation than a reference to one of them, taken from D'Hancarville, and engraved for this work; where MERCURY, MOMUS, and PSYCHE, are delineated exactly exactly as we see Harlequin, the Clown, and Columbine, upon the English stage¹.

(1) "The Tartars are public couriers, much respected for their good conduct and fidelity. Their name by no means indicates their origin, as they are taken indifferently from all the provinces in the empire, and are distinguished by the Tartar calpac, which they wear instead of the turban. They are strong and hardy; and perform their journeys with wonderful celerity. As there is no such establishment as a general post, a certain number of these Tartars are attached to the court, to the army, and to the governors of provinces, and are occasionally despatched to all parts of the empire." Thornton's Turkey, vol. The commerce of Kishan is inland; it consists in supplying the Mediterranean districts, by means of caravans, with cotton, corn, and tobacco. This is a large town; and it is in a better condition than the other towns of THRACE. Our journey this day, by the mariner's compass, was from south-west to north-east." Cripps's MS. Journal.

The Greek physician, from whom the medals we bought here were principally obtained, entertained us, by giving an account of the manner in which the medical profession is exercised among the Turks. "When a rich Turk," said he, "is very ill, he sends for a physician; and however dangerous his disorder may be, a negotiation commences between the doctor and his patient, as to the price of the cure. The price is of course augmented in proportion to the alarm excited by the malady. A bargain is then concluded upon the following conditions: that half the stipulated sum be paid down immediately, and the whole sum if the patient recover. The physician then goes boldly to work, prescribing whatever he pleases. If his patient die, he has already secured a very ample fee; and if he recover, the case is still better." It was formerly said in England, that a large wig and a gold-headed cane were sufficient to constitute a physician; and it is literally true of Turkey, that a calpac and a pelisse are the only requisites for the exercise of the profession.—An English officer, who arrived in Constantinople during our first visit to that city, was accompanied by an Italian domestic, who had served him with fidelity, but gave him warning the morning after their arrival. The officer, being loth to part from a trusty servant, asked him the reason of this extraordinary conduct.

(1) See the Vignette to this Chapter.

"I have no complaint to offer," said the Italian: "but I can earn more money here by turning physician, and therefore must wear a different dress." The next day he presented himself to his former master in the medical calpac and furred robe, laughing heartily at his own metamorphosis: and this man, before our return to the capital, had despatched as many of his fellow-creatures as the most eminent practitioner in Turkey.

This evening, at sun-set, we had the same ushering in of uproar that we witnessed in Yemga; and a brilliant illumination round the mosque and minaret, proclaiming another holy night of Ramadan, announced to all true Moslems, that "PARADISE HAD OPENED ITS DOORS, AND THAT THE GATES OF HELL WERE SHUT²." The pleasantest Ramadan which the Turks have, is that which happens in this season of the year (January), because the days spent in fasting are short, and the nights of revelling so long, that, before morning, they are quite weary of their debaucheries, and readily consign themselves to sleep, until the sun again sinks below the horizon. They have also another advantage in a winter Ramadan; in not being liable to the same degree

Ramadan.

(2) See Rycaut's Ottoman Empire, p. 160. Lond. 1670. This was the burden of a vocal serenade which a Turk gave us during this night, accompanying his voice by a tambour, so as to have rather a mournful but a pleasing effect.

"During the Ramadan, I often listened to the songs or hymns of the Turks in the streets; and Antonio, assisted by the Tcholidar, would translate them for us. For the first time, however, I heard one this night in Kishan, that was truly harmonious. It was from a Turkish improvisatore, who accompanied the measure of an extemporaneous hymn with a tambour." Cripps's MS. Journal.

of thirst; when they are forbidden, during the day, to moisten their parched lips with a drop of water, although rendered feverish by the excesses of the preceding night, and by the heat of their climate. As this fast is regulated by the course of the moon, it occurs earlier in each year than it did in the preceding; and thus progressively falls within every month¹.

Saturday, (Jan. 9.) we left Kishan, and rode first to Bulgar Kieu, distant one hour; afterwards to Malgara, three hours farther towards the east; journeying over a hilly country, and a stony road. The mosques were in ruins, and the land desolate. At Malgara, however, we were surprised by the sight of fine white bread. In the street of this place we saw the fragments of a beautiful marble cornice. Thence we proceeded five hours farther to a place called Develi, or Devili; passing over the most bleak and solitary plains imaginable. This part of THRACE resembles the stéppes in the South of Russia; and to add to the similitude of the two countries, there are here tumuli precisely similar to those of Tartary. Just before we descended from a ridge of hills (which separated two of these these extensive plains) into Develi, there were two such mounds as large as any we had seen in Kuban. Upon the top of this ridge there is an elevated plain; and upon one side of it, one of the two tumuli, commanding a view westward of all the level country towards Kishan, and the Plain of the Hebrus. The other tumulus, standing upon the other side of the same elevated plain, that is to say, upon the brow of the descent towards Develi, commands all the region eastward; so that almost the whole of THRACE is here visible; and a more dreary prospect can hardly be conceived: it afforded a melancholy memento of our having for ever quitted the fine scenery of Greece.

(1) See Rycaut's Ottoman Empire, p. 161. Rycaut shows, from Poccocke's "Notæ de Arabum Moribus," that the institution of the Ramadan was originally founded upon a Jewish fast. "The institutions of this month of Ramazan proceeded from Mahomet himself, in the second year of his prophetic office, which he did not assume until he had fully completed forty years; having before, in imitation of the Jews' Fast of ASHURA, (Leviticus xvi. ver. 29.) in memory of the overthrow of Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea, enjoined to the Arabians the same time of abstinence; but afterwards, apprehending it dishonourable to be beholding to the Jews for the invention of a Fast, instituted the Ramazan."

At Develi we slept in a small but good khan, and more comfortably than usual. Some suspicious-looking fellows met us this day on horseback, and the whole district was full of alarm. No other conversation took place among the Tartars who arrived at the khan, than that which related to the disordered state of the country: and each new-comer seemed to vie with his predecessor in fearful tales of banditti, and of the ravages committed by hordes hordes of insurgents. The rainy season had now set in; the only winter known upon the shores of the Archipelago. Snow falls sometimes in considerable quantity during the month of January; but upon the whole it is considered as a rare occurrence.

Prayers of the Moslems.

In a room adjoining our apartment, some Turks were engaged in their devotions; and, whenever we have seen them so occupied, whether in the mosques, or in the public streets, or in private dwellings, we always regarded them with respect; for however we may be disposed to revile the Turkish religion, there is perhaps no Christian but might find an example worthy of his imitation in the behaviour of a Moslem during his prayers. If we may judge of genuine piety by external appearances, the Mahometans are, of all people, the most sincere in their worship. They are never seen to wander during their prayers, or to neglect them, or to utter a parcel of words by rote, with their thoughts intent upon other matters, like many of those persons who pretend to hold a better faith: their whole soul seems to be absorbed by the solemnity of the exercise, and their thoughts so perfectly abstracted from every earthly consideration, that it is impossible to behold them without participating the reverence they manifestly feel. But this behaviour may be attributed to the very great stress laid by their Korán upon the duties of prayer. Mahomet called it THE PILLAR OF RELIGION; and the Turks maintain that in this act of devotion, they ought to be so intent and fixed, that no possible event can have power to divert their attention; not even the command of the Sultan himself, nor any alarm of fire or other imminent peril. How beautiful is the description given by Busbequius' of the whole Turkish army engaged in one solemn act of public devotion². Yet Rycaut affirmed, that of all the nations and religions he had known, the Turks were the most hypocritical. "These are they," said he, "who love to pray in the marketplace and in the corners of the streets, to have praise of men; for it is observable with the Turks, that where they find the most spectators, especially of Christians, to choose that that place, how inconvenient soever, to spread first their handkerchief, and then begin their prayers." We know not how to acquiesce in the truth of these observations. We saw much of the Turks, and we had one who was daily our companion; but, bating a little treachery as to the strict observance of their fast, together with the dissolute practices of their Dervishes, we would say generally, of the whole race, that the Turks are the last people upon earth who deserve to be called hypocrites in their religion. Rycaut wrote at a time when the prejudices against Moslems were very high, and when his own countrymen had not lost the strong tincture of fanaticism they had acquired under Cromwell. There are many virtues common to the Turks which would do honour to any nation; and above all, that reverence for the Deity, which renders the taking of his name in vain to be a thing unheard of among them: add to this, their private and their public charities; their general temperance and sobriety; their donations for the repose and the refreshment of travellers', and for the establishment of public baths and fountains; their endowment of hospitals; their compassion for animals; the strict fidelity with which they fulfil their engagements; their hospitality; the attention shewn to cleanliness in their frequent ablutions; and many other of their characteristics, which forcibly contrast them with their neighbours;—and we shall shall be constrained to allow that there can hardly be found a people, without the pale of Christianity, better disposed towards its most essential precepts. That they have qualities which least deserve our approbation; and that these are the most predominant, must be attributed entirely to the want of that "leaven," which in "leavening the whole mass" hath not yet extended its influence to this benighted people: for their ignorance is so profound, and it is so universal, that they may be considered as generally destitute of any intellectual attainment whatsoever. The highest offices of the state are administered by individuals taken from the dregs of society; and when admitted to the friendly intercourse and conversation of those among them who are the most looked up to, either on account of their elevated rank, or probity of character, we were constrained to regard them rather with affection than with esteem; as claiming the same degree of regard, mingled with pity, which is excited by the goodness and simplicity of very benevolent, but very illiterate, old women.

It rained incessantly during our journey (Jan. 10) from Develi to Yenijick, a distance of three hours; and afterwards the whole way to Tekirdagh, otherwise called Rhodosto, which is seven hours from Develi. The roads, deep and very slippery, lay through a hilly country; but so dreary and disagreeable in its aspect, that we were glad to use all the expedition in our power. Sometimes the appearance of the road was visible for miles before us; extending over a waste tract of land, which might be truly said to undulate; for it had the appearance of waves in the sea. We halted for a few few minutes in a coffee-shop in the village of Yenijick; because we heard that the Hidouts, or banditti, were close to us, in a neighbouring village. A large party of Turks, journeying from Tripolizza in the Morea, was also collected here, deliberating in what manner to proceed. As we composed altogether a numerous party, it was agreed that we should join forces, and travel in company. Accordingly, we set out, making too formidable a procession for a few robbers to attack; and in this manner reached Rhodosto, without interruption. This is a large town: it is the BISANTHE of *Herodotus*¹. Here we again beheld the PROPONTIS, or Sea of Marmora. The khan was large, and as filthy as usual; but the caravanserai much worse. That the Reader may duly comprehend the distinction between them, it is necessary to bear in mind, that the caravanserai is the old inn of Turkey, where the Tartars generally lodge. The khan is considered as an improvement of a later age; but an English barn would be preferable to either. The caravanserais are surrounded by mangers for the cattle; above these mangers are a series of about forty fire-places, extending along the walls, for travellers to cook their victuals; with a small space where they may lie down, with their feet reaching quite into the manger.

The next morning, we enjoyed the sight of a most beautiful effect of sun-rise, from the window of the khan.

Clouds were rolling over the opposite Asiatic coast in crimson volumes of the most vivid dye; the upper parts being of a lively purple, and all the sea in front of a dazzling whiteness. Opposite to the town, a little fleet of Turkish galiotes and caïques were at anchor³. Rhodosto has little of the appearance of a very antient town: it is without walls; and we found no antiquities upon the spot. Belon confounded it with *PERINTHUS*⁴; whose situation is pointed out by its retaining the later name of HERACLÉA. That Rhodosto was antiently BISANTHE, is clearly shewn by *D'Anville*⁵, from the circumstance of the latter having taken the name of Rhædestus. It is placed by *Ptolemy*⁶ in THRACE, which corrects an error of *Stephanus*⁷, who assigns it a situation in MACEDONIA, near to THRACE. Ptolemy says it was called RHADESTA. Benjamin of Tudela is the first writer by whom it is named *Rodosto*⁷: he describes it as a Jewish University, near to Constantinople, distant two days' journey from Péra. According to Stephanus, BISANTHE was was a Samian colony; and it was considered as the native place of an elegiac poet, of the name of *Phædimus*¹. This is the same town which Pliny calls RESISTON, although he mentions Bisanthe and Resiston as two distinct places². Rhodosto contains ten thousand houses. It has more Greeks than Turks for its inhabitants, besides Armenians and Jews. The whole commerce of the place consists in the exportation of corn, wine, fish, and wool, to Constantinople. Being situate due north of the Island of Proconnesus and Cyzicus, we were rather surprised at the extent of the prospect across the PROPONTIS, without any intervening land³. The situation of the Proconnesian Isles was plainly marked by the heap of clouds hovering over them; but none of them were visible. Among those islands, upon the coast of Anatolia, the vessel, with the journals and property of ATHENIAN TWEDDELL, was wrecked in its passage from the Piræeus to *Constantinople*⁴.

Inhospitable
Thrace.

The same bleak, inhospitable country was again exhibited upon our leaving Rhodosto to go to Turkmales, which lies eastward, at the distance of six hours; and afterwards the whole way to Eski Eregli, three hours and a half farther. Tumuli were in view the whole way. These Thracian barrows are exactly similar to the tombs upon the opposite coast of Anatolia, especially to those of the Plain of Troy; and the circumstance circumstance of their similarity, has been urged as an argument against the opinion that any of the Trojan mounds related to the heroes who fell during the Trojan War. But this fact should rather be adduced in support of that opinion; for it goes to prove that the tumuli in Troas are similar to those which it was the custom of the neighbouring nations, in the time of the war of Troy, to raise over the bodies of deceased warriors. Had any other kind of antient sepulchres been pointed out in the Plain of Troy, than such as correspond in their present appearance with the manners of the age in which the war happened, there would have been good cause for denying that these were alluded to by Homer; but in the perfect agreement of their forms with those of the old Pelasgic sepulchres, the probability of their presumed origin is rather strengthened than diminished.

The distance from Rhodosto to Eski Eregli, before stated, is computed as a journey of nine hours and a half; which, according to the common mode of reckoning, would make it equal to $27\frac{1}{2}$ geographical miles: but this is not true; and the fact is, that they reckon distances in this part of Thrace by the time in which waggons are drawn by buffaloes. The imposing name of this place deceived us, as it has cheated others. Eski Eregli signifying old Heracléa, we supposed that we should see here the ruins of that city, which also more antiently bore the name of PERINTHUS. But finding neither medals nor any considerable vestige of antiquity upon the spot, and that it was no maritime place, we inquired if there were any Palæo-castro in the neighbourhood; and we learned, that at two hours' distance, we had left, upon our right hand, the PORT and THE RUINS OF THE ANTIENT CITY. According to the report of the peasants, medals are often found there; and they relate that several columns and inscribed marbles are now lying among those ruins. There is a copious account of them in the Travels of Cornelius Le Bruyn; and the previous descriptions of Spon and Wheler mention inscriptions, pedestals of statues, and architectural remains, found there. The port is good for large vessels; but the inhabitants no longer carry on any commerce. They call the place Báyúk Eregli; that is to say, HERACLÉA MAJOR: and it is very probable that there antiently did exist a lesser town at Eski Eregli, which was called HERACLÉA MINOR. Báyúk Eregli, as its name implies, is now the larger village of the two: it contains about one hundred houses, and a monastery; also another old monastery, which is in ruins. The only remains of antiquity that we could discover at ĒSKI EREGLI, consisted of a few fragments of small pillars, and a marble with the following Inscription, cut in very large characters:

was used by the Greeks; who did not consider it as valedictory, according to our acceptance of the term; but rather as answering to salve, or gaude; or, as we should say, “Good luck to ye!” They used the word χαῖρε when they drank to any one’s health, and as a morning salutation when they met in the streets¹. The appearance of the few antiquities that we found here, may serve to point out a place for PERINTHUS as distinct from HERACLĒA; which therefore received the name of the older city; and thus to account for the appellation of Eski Ereğli; especially as it has never been ascertained when the name of HeraclĒa was substituted for that of Perinthus. In the posthumous Commentary of Holstenius (the best elucidator of ancient geography) upon the work of Stephanus Byzantinus, as it was edited by Theodore de Ryck, there is a description given of a *medal of Perinthus*²; this in front exhibited the head of Hercules, with the legend ΤΟΝ ΚΤΙΣΤΗΝ; and for reverse, the club of Hercules, around which appeared ΠΕΡΙΝΘΙΩΝ Β ΝΕΩΚΟΡΩΝ. The reason therefore is evident, why Perinthus took the name of HeraclĒa; although it be unknown when this change was introduced³. It was the

the most considerable of all the maritime cities of THRACE; and is described, in the Itinerary of Antoninus, as situate between Tyrallum and *Cænophrurion*¹. We saw nothing of the remains of the Macrontichos, or long wall, constructed by Anastasius at the beginning of the sixth century, which here extended from the Euxine to the *Propontis*². When Byzantium became Constantinople, it caused the decay of HERACLÉA; whose See, notwithstanding, enjoys the pre-eminence of metropolitan, in that province of Thrace which is distinguished by the title of *Europa*³. We regretted that we did not visit this place, as we had been advised to pass the night there: but its being situate an hour's distance out of the main road, while we expected to find the remains of the old city at Eski Eregli, prevented our going thither.

A very curious circumstance in the natural history of the swallow was made known to us accidentally at this village. In the course of our search for antiquities, happening to visit the shop of a poor barber, we observed, as we were speaking to the owner, in a room with a ceiling so low pitched that our heads almost touched it, a swallow enter, two or three

(2) It began a little to the east of Heracléa, and terminated near a place called Dercon, upon the shore of the Euxine. The Emperor Anastasius caused it to be constructed as a barrier against the incursions of many foreign nations, who had penetrated even to the environs of Constantinople.

three times, through a hole purposely left for its admission, over the door. Without regarding either the number or the noise and motion of so many persons in this small room, it continued its operation of building a nest, although within our reach, against one of the joists. It was impossible not to admire the activity of this little animal; the velocity with which it went and returned; but above all, the happy confidence which it seemed to enjoy, in its security from molestation or injury. The owner of the shop entertained the superstition which is common to all nations⁴ that are visited by this bird, and which is alluded to by *Sophocles*⁵, concerning the sanctity of his little guest; deeming himself fortunate fortunate in being thus honoured by one of Apollo's messengers. He told us, that the same swallow had annually visited him for many years; but that this year it came earlier than usual; that it paid him handsomely for its lodging; its presence being considered as a most fortunate omen, whereby customers were attracted to his shop whenever the swallow arrived.

Selymbria.

January the 12th, we set out for Selyvria, the SELYMBRIA of *Herodotus*¹, distant three hours from Eski Eregli. The termination BRIA, so common in this country, answered in the Thracian language to the Greek ΠΟΛΙΣ², and to the Celtic DUNUM. The old Roman road is entire in many parts of the route: it is paved with black marble, resembling trap or basalt. We observed it both upon this and the preceding day; and it may be traced hence with great ease the whole way to Constantinople. The small tumuli for marking distances also occur with greater regularity, in pairs, one on each side of the road, in the approach to the capital. At Selyvria there is a bridge of thirty arches, over a nameless river. The town contains two thousand houses. This place may be considered as retaining, unaltered, the appellation given to it by Strabo, who calls it SELYBRIA; and the β being pronounced V, it becomes SELYVRIA.

CHAP. XIV.

From Selyria to Bâyûk Tchekmadjî, the road lies entirely along the shore of the PROPONTIS. We passed through Crevâtis, situate upon the beach, with a square tower and a bridge of thirty arches, making a conspicuous figure in the approach to it. Bâyûk Tchekmadjî, signifying the great bridge, has a series of four stone bridges raised upon arches; over which, and along the old paved way, we passed by a lake to the town. The lake extends northward to a considerable distance. At Bâyuk Tchekmadjî there is a fine harbour. The town contains two hundred houses; of this number about sixty belong to Turks. Here we halted for the night. The next morning (Jan. 13), we rode to Kâtchûk Tchekmadjî, or the Little Bridge, commonly called Ponte Piccolo in the Italian, which is the most general language of the Levant. This place is distant three hours from Bâyûk Tchekmadjî. It is nothing more than a village by the sea side, surrounded by marshes and pools; being remarkable only for its unwholesome situation, and dangerous Maldria during summer. It commands, however, a pleasing prospect of the Sea of Marmora; because all the vessels are seen passing, that sail from the Archipelago or from the Black Sea. Hence we proceeded three hours more to the capital; and having entered CONSTANTINOPLE, near to the spot where Mahomet effected the memorable memorable breach that gave a death-blow to the Roman Empire, we completed our Levantine tour. In the space of about eleven months, we had made a complete survey of the ÆGEAN and eastern shores of the MEDITERRANEAN seas; having coasted all ASIA MINOR, the HOLY LAND, EGYPT, the Islands of the ARCHIPELAGO, GREECE, MACEDONIA, THRACE; and here were returned safe to the same port whence we sailed in the Grand Signior's corvette, the year before, for the Dardanelles.

the Populace.

As we rode through the streets of the city towards the quay, opposite to Tophana, the Turkish rabble, seeing a party of infidels on *horseback*¹, could not be restrained from offering their accustomed insults and violence. Consequently, we had some large stones thrown at us. We used all the expedition possible to get to the harbour, where we left our horses, and hired a boat to take us across; leaving also the Tchohodar and Antonio to settle with the Surudjecs, and to follow afterwards with the baggage. Near to the shore, in passing down to the harbour, we saw the most beautiful Soros we had ever beheld. It consisted entirely of the green Atracian marble, or verde-antico, in five pieces. Upon one side of it a cross was represented; proving that the workmanship was executed in the time of the Christian Emperors: but it was a tomb fit for the proudest proudest sovereign of the Eastern Empire. We heard a report afterwards, that our Ambassador had claimed it for the Nation ; therefore it may possibly now be in England.

Landing at Tophana, we hastened up to our former lodgings in Péra; and, upon our arrival, found two English Gentlemen, both belonging to the University of Cambridge—Mr. (now Sir William) Gell, and Mr. Dodwell—in possession of the apartments we had formerly occupied. These gentlemen received us in the kindest manner; and having welcomed our safe return from a long and perilous expedition, requested that we might all board together beneath the same roof; politely ceding a part of their lodgings to accommodate us. Here, therefore, we established ourselves for the remainder of the winter season; enjoying their friendly and polished society; and mutually participating the usual hospitality of the different envoys then resident at the Porte. And here, too, having brought to a successful termination the account of these Travels, as far as it relates to GREECE, EGYPT, and the HOLY LAND, this SECOND PART of the narrative might terminate; but as the Reader may be curious to accompany the author upon his journey home, since it includes an excursion to the Hungarian Mines, we shall make the rest of our observations form a Supplement to this SECTION; after giving a cursory statement, in the following Chapter, of the manner in which our time was spent during our second residence in the Turkish Capital.

MANY things conspired to detain us in Constantinople, from January until the beginning of April. The rebel troops of Hachi Pasha then occupied all the district north of the city; and it was necessary to wait until they retired to the vicinity of Yassy. A journey over-land is moreover impracticable, until the snow melts upon Mount HÆMUS. Add to this, the inevitable consequences of ill health among Englishmen, who, in such a climate, venture to live too much as they would do in their own country, upon a meat diet with beer and wine, however abstemiously used. There was hardly one of our countrymen, then resident in the capital, who did not experience occasional attacks of intermittent fever. The author was brought to the point of death by a quinsey so alarming as to occasion a locked jaw; and the disorder would have terminated his existence, had it not been for the skill and humanity of Dr. Scott, Physician of the British Embassy; who, although suffering himself under a violent chronic rheumatism, nevertheless bestowed unremitting attention upon his patient; and ultimately obviated the dangerous tendency of an inflammation that nothing seemed likely to subdue'. Constantinople is by no means a healthy place of residence, for persons who have not lived long enough there, to become inured to the vicissitudes of its climate. The sudden changes of temperature, owing to the draught of wind through the straits, either of the Black Sea, or of the Sea of Marmora, render such persons liable to the most fatal effects of obstructed perspiration; and what these effects are, few of the inhabitants of other countries can have formed any adequate ideas'. A single example, to which the author was an eye-witness, may serve to afford some conception of the disorders occasioned by the climate. Soon after our arrival, upon the anniversary of our Queen's birth-day, the liberation of the Maltese slaves took place. It had been acceded to by the Turkish government, owing principally, as it was believed, to a forlorn hope of the Capudan Pasha, that he should thereby be able to obliterate the evil impression caused by the atrocious murder of the Beys in Egypt; whereof all Europe then rang from side to side. At all events, testimony. The author deeply laments that he has only the melancholy satisfaction of paying this tribute of respect and gratitude to his worthy friend, when he is no longer living. He had retired to a small estate in Scotland; and the news of his death was lately announced in the public papers.

(1) "Le Tramontane, che in Napoli et in Roma son così salubri; qui son di mala qualità: perche portano dal mar nero molti vapori grossi, che esala quel mare, per esser fangoso, e per lo concorso di tanti fiumi grandi che vi entrano, e della palude Meotide." (Viaggi di Pietro Della Valle, p. 90. Roma, 1650.) The author then proceeds to describe an effect, or rather a sign, of Mal'aria, which no other writer has noticed. "Tutti i tetti, fatti con tegole e canali, come quelli di Roma, si vedono sempre coperti di quella Ruggine Gialla, ò come la vogliamo chiamare, che in Italia l'hau emò per inditio di Mal'aria." Ibid.

events, it was said to be a business concerted between him and our ambassador; and, if due to the exertions of the latter, nothing can be more worthy of praise. We were at the palace where the ambassador resided, when these poor men came to offer their thanks to the British nation. It was an affecting sight. Some of them had been nearly half a century in chains; and many were to return to their relations after being thought dead for several years. One of these men, washing his linen in the open air, and being stripped, as somewhat heated by the work, felt a most agreeable and cooling breeze beginning from the north; the wind, which had been southerly, then changing. In a short time he was seized with a stiffness in all his limbs, attended with fever, and followed by delirium; his jaw locked; and, notwithstanding the skill and constant attendance of Dr. Scott, before twenty-four hours had elapsed, he was no more. Such are the blessings of what is often described as a delightful and luxurious climate². There can scarcely be found a spot upon earth more detestable than Péra; particularly in the most crowded part of it. We might be said to live in cemeteries; the only water used for drinking, passing through sepulchres to the feverish lips of the inhabitants, filled with all sorts of revolting impurities, and even with living animalculæ. The owner of the hotel where we resided, wishing to make some repairs in his dwelling, dug near the foundation, and found

found that his house stood upon graves, yet containing the mouldering reliques of the dead. This may perhaps account for the swarms of rats; not only in the buildings, but in the streets; whither they resort in such numbers at night, that a person passing through them finds these animals running against his legs. The prodigious multitude, however, of the rats is not owing to any want of cats; for the latter constitute the greater nuisance of the two. They enter through the crazy roofs, which consist only of a few thin planks, and render the smell of the bedchambers much more offensive than that of a dunghill. Some of these cats are of a very uncommon breed; and they are remarkable for their great beauty. One evening, as the author was adding these notes, there descended from the trap-door of the roof, and came prowling into his room, a cat of such astonishing size and beauty, that he at first mistook it for some fiercer animal. It had long hairs like the Angora breed; and the colour of its fur was white, tipped with a golden yellow: its tail standing erect, like that of a squirrel, was flattened by the position of its hairs, which stuck out on either side, so as to make it a span wide: its ears were high and pointed, covered also with long hairs; and it had a bushy ruff about its neck: its large eyes shone like two topazes. An endeavour was made to detain it by shutting the door; but it effected its escape by the way that it came, and never appeared afterwards. This curious and beautiful example of the feline tribe was equal in size to a large fox. A species more common frequented our apartments, which comes from Persia, and is of a blue colour. We visited the menagerie belonging to the Grand

Grand Signior, where we saw but few rare animals; and all of them are wretchedly kept. The only thing worth seeing was a lion of superior size, that had belonged to Hassan Pasha, and used to follow him like a dog; but at last, having slain one of his keepers, it was chained within the menagerie for life.

Upon the Queen's birth-day, another ceremony took place; the laying of the first stone of the New Palace for the British Ministers at the Porte; at this we also attended, in company with all the English then resident. The former building had been consumed by fire. The gaieties of the Carnival were greatly increased this year in Péra, in consequence of the expulsion of the French from Egypt; and the Turks were rather more tolerant than usual in their behaviour towards the English. Masquerades were frequent in all the houses of the foreign ministers; and there were also public masquerades, in taverns, open to all comers: the latter of course formed of the lowest company, and being for the most part nothing better than the most public exhibition of disgusting sensuality. The only circle that can be called by the name of Society in Péra, is formed by the families, secretaries, chaplains, interpreters, and agents of the different envoys: and this may be considered as naturally exhibiting an entertaining masquerade, without any licence from the season of Carnival. It is the same in all seasons; a mixed and motley assembly of many nations and languages. The chief amusement at their evening parties, consists in card-playing. The French government, always famous for the skill with which it conducts political intrigue, when it wishes to employ a spy who may collect the state secrets of the ministerial hive at Péra, take care to send one who is an adroit gambler; and who, by his address among the women, becomes a popular man at their card-tables; the generality of the young men being engaged in dancing. One or two such spies had at this time obtained situations in our army; and they have since proved themselves to be the traitors we at that time suspected they were. Yet it was amazing to observe with what eagerness the company of these men was courted, and with what incredible facility, the unsuspecting Ministers of the different nations became their dupes. At last arrived General Sebastiani himself, said to have been originally a postillion; and whose intellectual attainments certainly did not belie the report. This man, the avowed ambassador of the French government, dressed like the trumpeter of a puppet-show, soon acquired such influence, by his affectation of gallantry, and by his unequivocal language even with those young women who had the greatest reputation for chastity, that, according to his own vulgar expression, he might be said "to have had the whole diplomatic body under his thumb." Yet there is no place where so much fuss is made about a point of etiquette as at Péra; and this sometimes gives rise to a very amusing exhibition. At a ball, before dancing begins, the gentlemen stand up first, without their partners; and a general scramble, with altercation, ensues for precedency. A stranger would suppose that at least half a dozen duels were to be fought the next morning; but, like all all blustering, it generally ended in words only. It is impossible, however, to hear the cause of so much agitation without laughter.—“ Sir, this is my place! I am to dance with Prussia!”—“ You’ll pardon me, Sir! Russia goes down another set.”—“ Gentlemen, I must beg you will give way; England is my partner!” Admitted to the supper-table, he sees with surprise some of the ladies wrapping up roasted woodcocks, and other edible animals, whole, and putting them into their pockets¹. If attracted towards a corner of the room, where the number of calpacs and whiskered faces announce a party of the Dragomans, he finds them bartering some antique medal or gem, or settling the price of a shawl, or offering for sale an embroidered handkerchief; or perhaps two Greek physicians disputing their mode of practice. Upon the sofas round the room, the elder Greek women, with heads and hands in constant motion, displaying their long ringlets of false or dyed hair, are bawling to each other in Romaic, and in a tone of voice the most shrill and inharmonious. This description of one evening assembly in the apartments of an ambassador at Péra, applies equally to all; for there is not the smallest variety to be observed in going from one house to another; the same amusement, the same conversation, and the same company, are found in every other palace.

Turkish Government.

From Péra, casting our reflections towards Constantinople, that a few general observations may be introduced, respecting the actual state of the country, before we take a final leave of it; we find the Turks, whose possessions are the objects of this diplomatic hive, living as unconscious of its existence as if there were not a single foreign minister at the Porte. Always holding the envoys in utter detestation and contempt, and compelling them to submit to the meanest degradations whenever an audience is granted in Constantinople, the Turks never bestow a thought upon such persons after they have quitted the city. In the mean time, it may be said of them, that "their portion is prepared;" and while they remain insensible of the schemes for their downfall, which are daily becoming more mature at Péra, the different parts of their vast empire may be said to hang together by a cobweb ligature. One of their Viziers, about a century ago, Djîn Ali Pasha, was for removing all such troublesome guests as foreign envoys to the Princes Island, nine miles from *Constantinople*¹; considering them to be nothing better than so many civil spies: and who, as a faithful member of the Turkish cabinet, ought to blame the Vizier's policy? There was every reason to believe, at this time, that Turkey could not long exist as an independent empire; and yet, as we sometimes say of human decrepitude, it seems to have "taken a new lease." Its resources are, however, daily becoming more and more feeble; for although

(1) See Sir James Porter's accurate "Observations on the Government and Manners of the Turks," p. 151. Lond. 1771.

although the Turks be individually wealthy, the government is poor. The taxes, badly levied in the first instance, are worse collected; and whole provinces, in a state of open rebellion, pay no contribution. Every one must be aware with what gigantic steps Russia was encroaching upon the side of Circassia and Georgia; making the additions to her immense empire resound in Europe as so many conquests; whereas they ought only to be considered as gained by the inundations of a great flood, whose dams have gone to decay. But lamentable indeed would be the event of Turkey becoming dependent upon Russia; still more so of seeing the Russian flag hoisted upon the towers of Constantinople. The expressive words of Buonaparte, "DIEU ME GARDE DES RUSSES!" ought to be adopted as a motto for the arms of Turkey. Once in THEIR possession, Constantinople, like its opposite neighbour Chalcedon, would soon be without a vestige to tell where it stood; and Athens would be razed from the earth. Russia, however, was gradually advancing, and, under some pretence or other, annually approaching from the north. Towards the south, the Beys were every day rendered more formidable in Egypt; being aided by the hostile dispositions of the Pashas of Syria and the Dey of Algiers. Upon the west, as a wolf ready to sally from his den upon the neighbouring folds, was couched Ali Pasha; and, from the frontiers of his territory even to the Black Sea, were hordes of banditti, ready to side with the stronger party, or to pillage both, when any favourable opportunity for so doing might be presented. More towards the Danube were collected the menacing forces of Pasvan Oglou; who, with with his comrades in arms, regarded triumphantly the coming overthrow of the Ottoman power. By the people, he was beloved and protected; and wonderful it was that he did not reap the full fruit of those talents, and of that energy, which, to inspire universal esteem and admiration, wanted only to be known and appreciated according to their due value. It remains, therefore, only to speak of the state of the empire upon its eastern side. Here the Pasha of Amastra was becoming formidable; so that the Porte, every where surrounded by enemies, like the scorpion encircled by fire, waited only the last act of despair to inflict a wound upon itself. This wound was afterwards given in the dreadful disturbances that followed the establishment of the Nizami Djedid': but to the amazement of all those who were well acquainted with the internal state of the Turkish empire, it has still survived; and the most impotent of human beings, cooped up with his eunuchs and concubines in an old crazy hutch at the mouth of the Thracian Bosphorus, still exercises a nominal jurisdiction over many millions of human beings, inhabiting the fairest and most fertile portion of the earth.

of the City.

That many valuable antiquities may be purchased in Constantinople, by making application to persons who pay annually a sum of money for the privilege of collecting, washing, and sifting the produce of the common sewers of the city, city, was stated in the First Section of this PART of the author's Travels². The circumstance was made known to us by a Greek physician, one Dr. Inchiostro, who often sold coins and gems, purchased of these people, in the palaces of the envoys. Having bought of him a few things thus found, he conducted us, upon our second visit to the city, to the place where the mud-washers carry on their labour. The persons so employed were Turks: we found them with large tubs filled from the draining of the streets, which they passed through fine wire sieves; and it is said that they become rich by the things thus obtained. We bought of them a carnelian intaglio, representing Apollo in the chariot of the sun, drawn by four horses; one of the subjects common to the *vases*³ and gems of Greece, and especially prevalent among the antiquities of this city. But there is another source of wealth, for which a higher rent is paid; namely, the sweeping of the bazar where the jewellers carry on their trade. Here all the dust is collected, and carefully examined; and that articles of value are constantly found in it, is evident in the sum paid for collecting it. Small bits of gold and silver are of course found; but we were told that diamonds, which the dealers carry about in paper packets, are dropped and lost, and make a part of the gains. The number of diamonds exhibited to us by the merchants, in this bazar, was very great. If we asked for precious stones, when we were accompanied by a Janissary, the merchants, who are generally Armenians, would shake their heads, and say they had none: such articles of trade never being exhibited in shops, as in London; but carried secretly in the girdles and pockets of the dealers, and generally in their bosoms. When a traveller ventures alone into the bazar, he finds them all seated, cross-legged, upon their counters; and having prevailed with one of the dealers to produce his stock of gems, the rest readily follow the example. Little white paper packets are then opened, which are filled with diamonds, almost all of them being what are called roses; and many blemished, which are sold very cheap. For amethysts, we paid as high as two piastres the carat, because they were called sapphires; having a rounded pebble form, and a great intensity of colour. Cats' eyes, of all kinds, are very common; whether of quartz, penetrated by amianthus, or of chalcedony, with small translucent specks in the centre, behind which they apply a green foil. The last are always sold coarsely mounted. There is no place where they understand better the art of burning topazes, so as to give them a bright red colour, when they are sold under the name of balass' rubies. A remarkable remarkable fine one of this description was bought by Madame Tamara, wife of the Russian minister, for one hundred and twenty sequins. The same lady had formed a collection of precious minerals, exceedingly valuable on account of their beauty and rarity; among others, a ring stone of rock crystal, containing capillary Epidote and capillary red Titanium, in the same specimen; the only example known of such an association. But the most curious article of jewellery, in the bazar at Constantinople, is the Chrysolite of *Klaproth*²; whose natural locality is entirely unknown. The Chrysolite is not highly valued as a gem; but we could never succeed in our search after a regular crystal of this substance. Before our arrival, the Russian minister's lady had, however, bought a mass of Chrysolite as big as a turkey's egg; but attaching no value to it in that form, she had ordered it to be cut, and mounted as a necklace and bracelets. Persons have sometimes been puzzled to explain the appearance of emeralds in the East-Indies, because they are not the natural productions of that country³; but it is very probable that they were originally carried thither by Armenian merchants from Constantinople. A regular intercourse has always existed between Turkey and India. Couriers from from Constantinople arrive in Bombay within forty-five or fifty days from the time of their departure. The porcelain of China, brought over-land upon the backs of camels, is exposed for sale in Grand Caire, Smyrna, and Constantinople. We saw some porcelain dishes for containing Pilau, that had been thus conveyed; and they were a yard in diameter. The same trade with China existed in the time of the Romans; and at the introduction of these porcelain vessels into Rome, they were bought at enormous prices, and were esteemed by the Romans of the Augustan age, as articles of the highest luxury and magnificence. These were the Vasa Murrhina of *Pliny*¹; as may be proved from Belon; who says that the Greeks still called them, in his time, "La Mirrhe de Smirna," from Murex, a shell, called by the French the *Porcelain Shell*²; the fine vitrified superficies of porcelain resembling in its lustre and polish the surface of the murex.

Vasa Murrhina.

As almost every article of trade in Constantinople has a separate market appropriated to the sale of it, so there is a special bazar for that remarkable mineral called Keff-kil,

(1) "Oriens murrhina mittit: inveniuntur enim ibi in pluribus locis, nec insignibus, maxime Parthici regni: præcipue tamen in Carmania, &c. Splendor his sine viribus, nitorque veriùs, quam splendor: sed in pretio varietas colorum, subinde circumagentibus se maculis in purpuram candoremque, et tertium ex utroque ignescentem, velut per transitum coloris purpura rubescens, aut lacte candescens." *Plinio, Hist. *Keff-kil*³, after it has been rudely manufactured into large bowls for pipes, which the Turks export to Germany and to France; where they bear the names of Meerschaum, and Ecume de Mer, from the circumstance of their floating in water. We had some difficulty in finding out this bazar; but at last, being directed to Ouzoun Tcharchy, in the Fildjiandji Khan, we were conducted into a square court, like that of all other khans, surrounded by a wooden gallery; where, upon the floor of the gallery, we found the dealers in the pipe-bowls made of Keff-kil; each dealer having a large pile of those bowls heaped upon a mat in an adjoining apartment. Hither come those merchants, who export them by the caravans to Pest in Hungary, where they are re-manufactured. In the state for exportation they are every one of them as large as a man's fist, and look like a coarse manufacture of common pipe-clay; all the lustre and elegance which they afterwards exhibit being the result of subsequent management in Hungary and in Germany. There is perhaps no instance of any kind of clay giving employment to so many hands, or after its original manufacture passing through such a variety of modifications, and ultimately obtaining such enormous prices: therefore, as we have obtained further information respecting its natural history, we shall add a few remarks to those already published⁴ upon the subject of this curious mineral.

 this mineral.

This remarkable clay, which the Turks call Pataal Tash, is by them believed to exist only in three different places; Nemely Kiry, Cara Yook, and Saca Koy; near a town in Asia Minor, called Eski-Shehr, or Old City; supposed by some to be the antient HIERAPOLIS, between Phrygia and *Lydia*¹; but Hierapolis is called by the Turks Pambouk Kaldh-si. The first of these places, Nemely Kiry, is distant eighteen leagues from Eski Shehr; the second, twelve leagues; and the third, lying behind a mountain called by the Turks Boz Daaghi, and by the antient Greeks Messoghis, is distant fifteen leagues from the same town of Eski Shehr. These are the places where it is now found in Asia; but there are pits opened for digging the same substance in the *Crimea*²; and also others near Thebes in Bœotia, which were observed by Mr. Hawkins. The Asiatic Keff-kil, or Pataal Tash, is first discovered on the surface of the earth, by its whitish appearance; and in its primitive state, it is a white moist soft substance, as easily cut with a knife as a piece of cheese.

(1) For the first part of these observations respecting the Asiatic locality of this clay, the author is indebted to Mr. Hawkins, to whom the information was communicated in a letter from the Dragoman Pisani, written at Brusa. The situation of Hierapolis is here given from Stephanus Byzantinus; who says of it, 'ΙΕΡΑΠΟΛΙΣ, μεταδὲ Φρυγίας καὶ Λυδίας πόλις, κ.τ.λ. (Steph. Lib. de Urbib. &c. p. 411. edit. Berkelii, L. Bat. 1688.) For the situation of this city, see also Strabo, lib. xiii. Ptolemy, lib. v. and the Itinerary of Antoninus. It was renowned for its hot springs, and for the mineral incrustations they deposited. "Hierapoli Phrygiæ effervet aquæ calidæ multitudo, ex qua circum hortos et vineas fossis ductis immittitur. Hæc autem efficitur post annum crusta lapidea, et ita quotannis dextra ac sinistra margines ex terra faciendò inducunt eam et efficiunt his crustis in agris septa." Vitruvius, lib. viii. cap. 3.

cheese. The people of the country, under a stipulated grant from the Governor, collect this clay, by cutting or digging it off in large lumps, and while in a soft state; in which state it may be kept for six months, and upwards, if carefully covered with its own raspings: they then work it into tobacco-pipes, beads, and soucoupes' for coffee; the first being the chief and most profitable branch of trade in which it is employed. After it has been wrought, it becomes desiccated, and contracts that degree of hardness under which it appears when sold for pipes; but even then, when heated, it is easily penetrated by any sharp instrument, and may be scratched by the nail. Either owing to its superabundance, or to the unskilfulness of those employed in collecting it, a great waste takes place in the manufacture of it; and no use whatsoever is made of the chips at Eski Shehr: but it seems the Jews have of late exported a certain quantity, which gives rise to a conjecture, either that they have converted, or that they are endeavouring to convert it to some useful purpose*. And there is no doubt but that if this substance was found nearer to the British manufactories, the nature of its properties would cause it to be applied to many valuable

(3) The form of the soucoupe in Turkey is not that of a patra, like our saucer: It is literally an under-cup; and sometimes of gold, or silver, richly ornamented with gems.

(4) Perhaps for supplying the baths, where it has been used in cleansing the hair of the women, (See Part I. of these Travels, Chap. XXII.) In a subsequent letter to Mr. Hawkins, dated also from Brusa, it is stated, by Mr. Pisani, that "a great number of cart-loads of the dust or fragments of the Keff-kil, had lately been sent to Constantinople by a Jew, who bought them in Eski Shehr, at the rate of one parâh per oke."

valuable uses. The mine is worked so far as the vein of the Keff-kil extends; which it does, in some places, in a perpendicular, and in others in an oblique direction, five, ten, and fifteen yards in depth. When a vein is exhausted, the miners look out for another, and work it in the same manner until the whole is consumed; leaving the old mine in the state of an empty useless pit, exhibiting an opening about three yards in diameter. No subterraneous communication has been discovered, by means of a level, between the different beds of this substance; nor is there an instance, answering the reports that have been published, of a fresh exudation of the Keff-kil, in any of the exhausted pits. The manufactory, in its present situation, is almost exclusively confined to the working of bowls for tobacco-pipes. The dealers repair to Eski Shehr, where they purchase the pipe-bowls, at the price of from three to a hundred parâhs each: the last price is demanded when they are very large, and embellished with gilding. They are then carried to Constantinople, to the bazar we have now mentioned, and to Smyrna; whence they are exported to Hungary, Poland, Germany, France, and Russia.

Drug-market.

Another very curious sight in Constantinople is the bazar where the drugs are sold; a long dusty covered place, like Exeter Exchange in London, but much larger. The powerful smell exhaled from the spices and simples here exposed to view, but particularly from the rhubarb, is perceived in the approach to this bazar; almost every vegetable production of the east, used medicinally, or as a perfume, and many mineral substances, are here offered for sale. Opium appears in large black balls or cakes, looking like Spanish-liquorice. These balls are cut smoothly with knives, to shew the interior of each mass; and half a dozen, or more samples, at different prices, are placed together. The cheapest and worst opium is of a brown colour, filled with stalks and leaves; that of the highest price approaches almost to a jet-black, and is perfectly free from impurities. Other articles are, the wood of aloes, incense, and all sorts of fragrant and other gums; also the white oxide of arsenic, and the red, and yellow, sulphuret of arsenic or realgar, and orpiment; of which last substance a depilatory is made for the use of the Turkish baths. The other commercial objects worth notice, in this filthy and crowded city, (besides the Manuscript bazar and other things noticed in the preceding volumes) are the shops for stationary-ware and bookbinding. The bookbinders of Constantinople surpass all other in the neatness, the elegance, and the perfection of their craft. This may perhaps be attributed to the high price sometimes paid for binding the beautiful manuscripts entrusted to their care. Every leaf is secured with the utmost attention and skill; and the books, bound by Turkish workmen, open with the utmost evenness and facility. In the embellishment of the covers, and in the cases made to contain the volumes, both taste and ingenuity are shewn¹. Pocket ink-stands, pocket-books,
in

(1) See the long account of their "cunning workmanship," in the valuable Travels of DELLA VALLE. "I libri, si legano sommamente bene; e si adornano con molte galanterie di colori finissimi, e d'oro; in particolar di azzurro ultramarino, con fogli; amini, books, and pasteboard cylinders, for containing rolled paper, are made by them in a style of neatness that has never been equalled, amini, e compartimenti allor modo: e le coperte ancora bene spesso laorate di fuori con diverse impronte, jatte, come io credo, con le stampe." (Viaggi di Pietro Della Valle, il Pellegrino, p. 98. Roma, 1650.) The name of DELLA VALLE often occurs in books of Travels, because it is included among those of other authors who have visited the Levant, as a matter of course; but his merit has been little attended to; and some travellers have spoken of his writings without ever reading them; as it would be easy to prove. He began his journey early in 1614, and ended it in 1626. His work was published in the form of Letters, which were written to a Neapolitan physician, who was his friend. Being of an antient and noble family, and possessing all the advantages of a good education, he received the surname of "The illustrious Traveller." In the opening of his work he says, "A voi, miei Posterì: che, la Dio mercè, quantunque restato già solo, in Roma, di questa famiglia ne' tempi addietro distinti in più rami, et assai piena di gente," &c. A very principal merit of his work appears in the readiness with which he traces the reliques of antient customs in the manners of the inhabitants. To mention many of these would extend this criticism beyond the limits of a note. A very curious instance occurs at the end of his Letter, dated Baghdad (Jan. 2, 1617.); where he describes a custom among the women of powdering their hair with MITKA; which substance, according to the mineralogical nomenclature of the age when he wrote, he calls TALC. "Del quale le Donne ne fanno vna poluere da spargesene i capelli et i veli, che sopra'l nero fà molto bene, parendo argento; onde anche la chiamamo in Arabico Mai-elfodhidha; cioè Acqua di argento, con tutto che veramente sia poluere, e non acqua: sorte di ornamento, che anche à tempi antichi, come habbiamo in Trebellio Pollione, fà usato da quell'effeminato di Gallieno Imperadore, il quale soleua spargersi i capelli, più riccamente, di limatura d'oro." His account of this custom is the more valuable, as Casauton, Salmasius, and Gruter, unable to comprehend what the historian meant by gold dust of sufficient levity to be used as powder for the hair, in their Commentary upon Trebellius Pollio, have passed in silence the words "Crinibus suis AURI SCORREM asperit." (Vid. Trebell. Poll. in Vit. Gallien. ap. Hist. August. Script. tom. II. p. 232. L. Bat. 1672.) There are few books of Travels that can be compared with the work of DELLA VALLE for liveliness and information. The interesting account of his marriage with Maani, a Syrian damsel of Baghdad, is told in a delightful manner. She accompanied him during his travels for five years, and died at Mina upon the Persian Gulph. DELLA VALLE caused her body to be embalmed, and carried it about with him, during four years that he continued to travel after her death. At length he had the mournful satisfaction of giving her an honourable interment, equalled, considering the low prices for which these are sold. In the same shops are also found paper lanthorns, which are so ingeniously contrived as to be adapted for the pocket, but will draw out to great length when required for use. The Turks carry them through the streets at night, at the end of their long pipes. Lastly, in passing through all the Turkish towns, a traveller will not omit to notice the shops for tobacco, and the manufacturers of pipe-tubes; for these indeed constitute the first and principal sights that attract his regard. The cleanliness with which the tobacco is kept and exposed in neat glass jars, and the many varieties of this herb offered for sale, are worthy of attention. That which bears the highest price is of a fine golden colour, and is deliciously fragrant; being so totally different from the stinking weed commonly used in England, that the smell of it is pleasing to the most delicate olfactory nerves; and we never met with any person who disliked it. There is, however, a great deal of art used in preparing it; nor will it bear a sea-voyage; for when brought to this country it loses almost all its agreeable properties. The manufacturers of pipe-tubes are seen at work every day in the shops belonging to the street leading to the sea-side opposite to Péra; and there is also an open bazar for the sale of such tubes, which are called Tchibouques.

ment, at Rome, in the cemetery of his ancestors. This celebrated traveller died in 1652, at the age of sixty-six years. The best edition of his Travels is not that which is here cited; but a later, printed at Rome, in four vols. 4to. in 1662. The French edition, in four vols. 4to. printed at Paris in 1670, is perhaps the worst extant; but there are many other.

*Tchibouques*¹. They are made by boring straight stems of the cherry-tree, or of jessamine, with the bark on, six feet in length, by means of a turning wire augur, to which a mouth-piece is afterwards fitted of amber, ivory, bone, or horn, sometimes adorned with gems, or, wanting such costly materials, with pieces of coloured glass. A tchibouque of cherry-tree wood, with a fine shining bark, of five feet in length, or one of the jessamine, six or eight feet in length, tipped with pale-coloured opaque amber, sells for about two guineas of our money: but as the rank of a person is displayed by the costliness of his pipe, it may be imagined to what an extent this price is sometimes carried. The jessamine tchibouque of the Capudan Pasha was adorned spirally with diamonds, extending from the amber mouth-piece along the tube; so that the price of a tchibouque may vary from twenty pardhs to twenty thousand piastres. Whoever should attempt to describe the manners of the Turks, without giving some account of the tchibouque, would very inadequately fulfil his purpose; because the ceremony of the tobacco-pipe is so materially connected with all their state affairs and private domestic habits, and the important place it holds in the history of their commerce and manufactures

(1) Sometimes Tchibouque is used to signify the whole apparatus of the Pipe, which consists of three parts; the bowl, the tube, and the mouth-piece.

is so conspicuous, that to neglect this subject, would be to omit a leading characteristic of the nation. The employment of tending a stem of the cherry-tree, or of the jessamine, during its growth, is often productive of food for a whole family. To prevent the bark from splitting, it is kept constantly guarded by a swathing of wet linen rags; and the utmost care is used to preserve it from becoming crooked, by constantly watering and tending the plant. But as a perfectly straight stem is always a rare article, fraudulent imitations are sold, which are prepared with such ingenuity as sometimes to defy the nicest inspection. These are made by splicing together different pieces of the wood, and afterwards covering the whole over with fresh slips of bark, fastened on with glue. The bowls for these tchibouques are generally made of a fine red or black earthenware, plain, or ornamented with gilding. There is a particular sort of red clay more highly esteemed than any other for this purpose; the bowls made of it are therefore stamped with Turkish characters; and they are always sold plain, without any ornament of gilding.

As we resided nearly three months in Péra, after our return from Greece, our visits to Constantinople were made leisurely and often; sometimes being accompanied by a Janissary, but more frequently without any such incumbrance. Now and then an unpleasant adventure occurred; owing to the ill behaviour of a few fanatical Turks; but, generally speaking, such instances were rare, and they were reprobated even by the Turks themselves. Once the author received a violent blow from a ragged beggar, who came behind him, and was offended because, in a narrow part of the pavement, he had not room to pass. An alarm being given, the Janissary, who was at some distance, came to the spot, and would have put the offender to death, if he had not been prevented; the Turks, who witnessed the assault, sitting in their shops, encouraging him so to do. A disguise might be adopted, but not without risk, which would secure a Christian from all such attacks, and from any chance of observation; and perhaps it is a disguise worn sometimes in Constantinople; namely, the habit worn in the streets by Turkish women; disclosing only the eyes. In meeting one of the persons so wrapped up, it is impossible to distinguish either sex or age: the feet being concealed by a pair of clumsy boots, and the whole figure veiled by a thick covering of cloth. Nobody presumes to address persons so habited, even in the most crowded *bazars*¹. This plan might be further aided, if the disguised person were attended by some woman of the country acquainted with the language.

outer WALL OF THEODOSIUS, by which the city was antiently fortified on its western side, from the Propontis to the Bay of the Golden Horn. The more we saw of this city, the more we had reason to be convinced that it remains as it was found at its conquest by the Turks. The same Aqueduct that was built by the Roman Emperors, still supplies the inhabitants with water; and the interior of St. Sophia manifestly proves the indisposition of the Turks towards the destruction of the buildings they found. Indeed this part of their character was noticed long ago^s, and in an age when all sorts of intemperate censures were lavished upon them by their vindictive enemies the Christians; as if it had been considered a holy thing to curse and to calumniate the Moslems^s. The impression made upon us by once more seeing seeing this celebrated MOSQUE, was the same that we have before described¹. There is so much of littleness and bad taste in the patch-work of its interior decorations, and of confusion in the piles and buttresses about it, when viewed externally², that we hardly considered it more worth visiting than some of the other mosques of Constantinople; for example, the superb Mosque of Sultan Solyman, or that of Sultan Achmed near the Hippodrome, which, although constructed contrary to the sound rules of architecture, is nevertheless, without exception, the finest building the Turks ever raised³. But that of Sultan Solyman may fairly vie with the boasted chef-d'œuvre of *Anthemius of Tralles*⁴. However, as St. Sophia has always excited considerable interest, owing to the circumstances of its history, and to the difficulty of obtaining a sight of it; and, moreover, as it has been suggested to the author that any correct views of the interior would be considered valuable additions

On the other hand, the Turks in their prayers, as translated by PAUL LUCAS, (Voyage en Turquie, tom. I. p. 84. Amst. 1744.), keep an even pace with their Christian enemies. "Loignez, ô grand Dieu, à l'oppression des Infidelles, la desolation, et la ruine entiere de toutes leurs villes. Amen."

There are six minarets belonging to this mosque; from the top of which may be viewed the finest prospect in the whole world.

additions to this Work, he has annexed its faithful portraiture, represented, in two points of perspective, by an early traveller; whose work, before cited⁵, is become so rare, that the only copies of the original designs likely to be met with, are contained in the cumbersome and costly folios of *Anselm Banduri*⁶, which are also by no means common. The FIRST Plate exhibits the Interior of St. Sophia, viewed towards the place where the high altar originally stood; the SECOND, the interior of the same building, as it appears to a person who is standing beneath the *dome*⁷, and viewing the entrance; shewing, through the middle door of the Pylæum, the descent by a flight of steps into the body of the mosque. We shall accompany these views with an historical description, corresponding with ciphers upon the plates, principally derived from the same work.

It equals 105 feet in diameter, and only 18 in depth; although elevated 165 feet above the pavement of the mosque. The diameter of the Dome of St. Peter's at Rome, equals 133 feet, and that of St. Paul's in London, 100 feet.

This second view represents the western part of the interior of St. Sophia, which is more beautiful than any other part of the structure. Perhaps the whole building may appear to greater advantage, when it is illuminated for the Turkish festivals; but at other times, it is always gloomy. The windows are ill contrived, and they are worse preserved; the only

only light admitted, passes through little round panes of glass, smeared with the plaster in which they are fixed, and covered with dust. All the interior of the dome is lined with mosaic, disposed into figures and ornamental work. This the Turks have besmeared with white-wash; hoping thereby to conceal the mosaic painting: but as the investment falls off, the mosaic becomes again visible; particularly when viewed from the galleries, whence we copied part of an Inscription, in the ceiling of the dome, before given¹.

After taking leave of St. Sophia, we visited one of the magnificent cisterns which were constructed for the ancient city. It was the CISTERNA MAXIMA, upon the south-west side of St. Sophia; now used as a kind of rope-walk, or place to spin silk. The pillars and arches, supporting the roof, still remain; and the area beneath them is very extensive. Le Chevalier, whom we afterwards met in Paris, told us of four others, and has published an account of them; but that which he describes as the CISTERNA BASILICA, at a place now called Géré-Batan, to the north-east of St. Sophia, cannot be the same alluded to by *Gyllius*².

Cisterna
Maxima.

Gyllius.

The wonderful cistern, described by Gyllius, in all probability, yet remains for the observation of some future traveller; unless it be the same with that we have now mentioned; since it is impossible to believe that a subterraneous structure of brick-work, covered with terrace, containing three

three hundred and thirty-six Corinthian columns of marble, each column being forty feet nine inches in height, can so entirely have disappeared as to leave only, what Le Chevalier styles, its "emplacement." Besides, he has mistaken altogether its relative position respecting St. Sophia; for this is described by Gyllius as westward of that edifice, at the distance only of eighty Roman paces from it; which rather identifies it with the magnificent reservoir we visited. The words of *Gyllius*⁴ are in substance as follow: "The Imperial Portico, and the Imperial Cisterna, stood in the same place: the Imperial Portico is not to be seen, though the CISTERNA is still remaining. Through the carelessness and contempt of every thing that is curious in the inhabitants, it was never discovered, but by me, who was a stranger among them, after a long and diligent search. The whole ground was built upon, which made it the less to be suspected that there was a Cisterna upon the spot: the people not having the least suspicion of it; although daily drawing water out of wells which were sunk into it. I entered by chance a house where there was a descent into it, and went aboard a little skiff. The master of the house, after having lighted some torches, rowing me here and there across through the pillars, which lay very deep in water, I thus discovered it. He was very intent upon catching the fish wherewith the cistern abounds, and speared spreared some of them by the light of the torches. There is also a small light which descends from the mouth of the well, and reflects upon the water, whither the fish usually resort for air. This CISTERNA is three hundred and thirty-six feet long, a hundred and eighty-two feet broad, and two hundred and twenty Roman paces in circumference. The roof, and arches, and sides, are all of brick-work, covered with terrace, which is not the least impaired by time. The roof is supported with three hundred and thirty-six marble columns. The space of intercolumniation equals twelve feet. Each column is above forty feet nine inches in height¹. They stand longitudinally in twelve ranges, and latitudinally in twenty-eight. The capitals of these columns are partly wrought after the Corinthian order, and partly left unfinished. Over the abacus of the capital of every column is placed a great stone, which seems like another larger abacus, and supports four arches. There are abundance of wells sunk into this CISTERNA. I have seen, when it was filling, in the winter-time, a large stream of water, falling from a great pipe, with a mighty noise, until the columns up to the middle of their capitals, have been covered with water. This CISTERNA stands (versus occidentem æstivum) WESTWARD of the church of St. Sophia; being distant from it about eighty Roman paces."

on the side of the Hippodrome which is opposite to the Mosque of Sultan Achmed; and it has been conjectured that this was the Palace of the Emperors. Possibly it may have been a part of the BASILICA. The Imperial Palace, according to Zonaras, cited by *Gyllius*², stood near to the BASILICA, or University Library. The destruction of this marvellous Library was passionately lamented by Malchus, a learned Byzantian, who wrote the History of Constantinople; deducing it from the reign of its founder down to the time of the Emperor *Anastasius*³. The BASILICA was a College, or University, for the instruction of youth, governed by a President or *Master*⁴. He had under him twelve persons as *Lecturers*⁵, to each of whom a number of Students was assigned; and these Lecturers were held in such high estimation, that upon all state affairs they were summoned to council by the *Emperors*⁶. In the reign of Basilicus, there happened a great fire in Constantinople, which began in the brazieries; and consuming whole streets, with many stately edifices, wholly destroyed the BASILICA, together with its Library, containing six hundred thousand volumes.

Among other curiosities, there was a Manuscript of the Iliad and Odyssey of Homer, written in letters of gold, upon a serpent's gut, one hundred and twenty feet in length'. Georgius Cedrenus, cited by Gyllius, speaking of this Library, gave the same account of it that was affirmed by Zonaras; adding, that it contained "THE HISTORIES OF THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE GREATEST HEROES IN THE SEVERAL AGES OF THE WORLD^s." Gyllius believed that the form of the BASILICA was quadrangular, in opposition to those who had described it as an octagon^s.

Afterwards, we saw the AQUEDUCT by which the Cisternæ of the city were principally, if not wholly, supplied. It is called by the Turks Bosdoghan-kemer; and was first erected by Hadrian, before the foundation of a new city by Constantine, and called after his name. Subsequently, it bore the name of Valens, and of Theodosius. Being ruined by the Avars in the reign of Heraclius, it was repaired by one of the Constantines. In a later period, Solyman, surnamed the Magnificent, finding it gone to decay, caused it to be again restored. It consists of a double tier of arches, built with alternate layers of stone and brick, similar to the work seen in the walls of the city.

Upon a following day, we undertook an expedition entirely round the walls of Constantinople. We had before done the same; but our military companion wished to examine the appearance of the fortification on the land side, where the memorable breach was antiently effected at the Gate of St. Romanus. We began from the Seraglio point, coasting towards the south and west, until we came to the *Tower of Marmora*⁴; where the WALL OF THEODOSIUS begins, at the Heptapyrgium, or Castle of Seven Towers; and whence it traverses the whole western side of the city, from the Propontis to the Bay of the Golden Horn. In our way we copied several inscriptions, yet remaining in the part of the fortifications facing the sea; but they allude only to repairs formerly done to the works, and have been all before published⁵. The famous PORTA AUREA is within the Heptapyrgium; it was discovered, and is described, by *Le Chevalier*⁶. The only part of the walls worth seeing is, in fact, that part beginning here, which was built by Theodosius; fortifying the city on the land side. It is flanked with a double

(4) See the Topographical Chart of Constantinople, by Kauffer, as engraved for this Work, at the end of the Volume.

(5) We saw also an immense shaft of a column of red porphyry, lying in the sea, off the Seraglio point; the water being as limpid as the most diaphanous crystal. Making the circumstance known to our ambassador, we offered to undertake its removal to England, and to the University of Cambridge, if he would obtain for us a permission to that effect. This was, however, denied to us with some asperity; and a report states, but with what truth others may determine, that the said Column now constitutes a part of the collection since offered by him for sale in this country.

The same promiscuous mixture of the works of antient art—columns, inscriptions, bas-reliefs, &c.—seen in the walls of all the Greek cities, is here remarkably conspicuous. But the ivy-mantled towers, and the great height of this wall, added to its crumbling ruined state, give it a picturesque appearance exhibited by no other city in the Levant: it resembles a series of old ruined castles, extending for five miles from sea to sea. This may be considered nearly as the exact distance; perhaps it is rather less than more: but we measured it with all the care in our power. A person walking quick might perform it in an hour. The whole circumference of the walls of Constantinople measures eighteen English miles; and the number of mural towers amounts to four hundred and seventy-eight; inclosing a triangular space whose three sides equal five, six, and seven miles each. The antient city of Byzantium must also have been triangular; for the Acropolis occupied the vertex of the triangular promontory, or point of the ΚΕΡΑΣ ΧΡΥΣΕΟΝ, (which afterwards gave its name to the Bay) where the Seraglio now stands¹. So late as the termination of the second century, when the austere Pescennius Niger was engaged in carrying on his warlike preparations against Severus, BYZANTIUM yet flourished; boasting the most powerful citadel of Thrace, and being illustrious for its strength and riches². It was then surrounded by a wall made of such immense quadrangular masses of stone, and so skilfully adjusted, that the marvellous masonry, instead of disclosing to view the separate parts of which it consisted, seemed like one entire mass³. "The very ruins," says Herodian, "shew the wonderful skill, not only of the persons who built it, but of those also by whom it was dismantled⁴." There are now no suburbs on the land side. this side, by Mahomet, at the capture of the city in 1452, may undoubtedly be pointed out. It is particularly conspicuous near to a gate which occurs before arriving at the Gate of Adrianople, in going from the Heptapyrgium towards the Bay of the Golden Horn. This gate is now called Top Kapou, or CANNON-GATE; the words Kapou, and Kapoussi, signifying nothing more than a gate or place of entrance; as Selivri Kapoussi, the GATE OF SELIVREA; Yeni Kapoussi, the NEW GATE, &c'. And, as if Providence had designed that the hand of Nature should point out to future ages the place whence its dreadful visitation was poured upon this devoted city, trees of the most venerable age, self-planted in the breach, have here taken root, and serve to mark the spot where the last of the Palæologi gloriously fell. Of eighteen gates that once existed on this side of Constantinople, only seven are now remaining. Possibly it may have been formerly used as a retreat for Nuns: but they relate one of their romantic traditions concerning a Princess, who secluded herself upon this rock, because it had been foretold that she would die by the bite of a serpent; adding, that she ultimately encountered here the fate she sought to avoid.

(3) The Reader is particularly referred to all that GYLLIUS has written upon the subject of Constantinople and its environs. (De Bosp. Thrac. et De Topog. Constantinop. apud Gronov. Thesaur. Græc. Antiq. vol. VI. L. Bat. 1699.) GYLLIUS was sent by the French Government, under Francis the First, into the Levant, to collect MSS.; where, being forgotten by its Ministers, he was in danger of starving, and enlisted himself into the Turkish service. Afterwards he fled to Rome, and published his Travels.—The valuable work of the French architect GRELOT, (Paris, 1680), will be particularly useful, for its account of the Mosques, and for views of these buildings: also the Travels of PIETRO DELLA VALLE, (Viaggi, &c. Roma, 1662. 4 tom. in 4to.) and the Imperium Orientale of ANSELM BANDURI, (2 tom. folio, Paris, 1711.) Among more recent publications, the useful Topographical Description of Constantinople, by Dr. JAMES DALLAWAY, (Lond. 1797.) Also the pleasing Voyage de la Propontide et du Pont-Euxin, en deux tomes 12mo. par Mons. LE CHEVALIER; Paris, 1800. One of the best works extant upon Turkey, is the Voyage au Levant, par CORNEILLE LE BRUYN, 4 tom. 4to. à Rouen, 1725. To enumerate others would be superfluous: the complete collection of authors, who have written upon the subject, would constitute a library. We are expressly informed, by Pliny, of the cause whence the appellation of AURICORNUS was given to the *promontory*⁹.

Hence the Sinus afterwards received the appellation of the Bay of the “Golden Horn,” and ultimately was itself called “The Golden Horn.” Antient navigators, who were always coasters, applied the term *Ceras*¹⁰ to the projections of the land; it could not therefore be used to signify a bay, or harbour: in fact, Ceras was the old name for a promontory. The island of Cyprus, from the number of its promontories, was called *Cerastis*¹¹. How different from the character borne by the Karaïte Jews of the Crimea! whose virtues have rendered even the opprobrious name, derived from their Turkish brethren, an honourable title; for their place of residence is called Tchifût-kaleh, the "Castle of Miscreants."—Having reached the extremity of the Sinus Byzantinus, which, according to *Strabo*², measured about seven English miles and a half from Byzantium, we came to the confluence of two small rivers, the CYDARIS and the *BARBYSES*³, abounding with innumerable fishes⁴, and giving to this part of the bay the name of Sweet, or Fresh Waters. Here we landed, to view a sort of public garden, laid out after the French manner, and forming a wretched imitation of our Vauxhall. The place of the Winter Season.

WE had a fall of snow during this winter at Constantinople, but it was very transitory. The temperature of the season will be best observed by attending to the diary of observations upon the thermometer, at the end of the volume. The mercury fell only once so low as thirty-seven degrees of Fahrenheit; this happened upon the eighteenth of March. Its average altitude, during the three colder months, might be reckoned as about equal to fifty degrees; being sometimes as high as sixty-four. But accounts are given by authors of a diminution in the temperature of this climate, during certain winters, that are quite inconsistent with the notions we entertain of countries situate in the forty-first parallel of latitude, which is the latitude of *Constantinople*¹. In the year 756, there happened so severe a frost that all the northern coast of the Euxine was covered with ice, reaching an hundred miles from the shore, and extending to the depth of forty-five feet. Afterwards snow fell upon the ice, which, by raising the surface thirty feet, made the whole mass seventy-five feet in thickness: the sea, says *Gyllius*², resembled

There was a subsequent frost, of which he was an eye-witness; when the bay of the Bosphorus was so choked with ice, that the watermen could not row their boats to and fro, without previously breaking the ice with their oars³. Well may Ovid, therefore, be credited, when he so beautifully celebrates the freezing of the Euxine off the mouths of the *Danube*⁴.

The passage over Mount Hæmus was not considered as being open this year before the end of March. About the same time our Ambassador made it known to us, that it was the intention of the Porte to send a Minister Plenipotentiary to Paris; and that we might avail ourselves of this opportunity to travel under his protection. To this proposal we gladly assented; and an application being made for the purpose to his Excellency in Constantinople, and to the Reis Effendi, the plan was approved of, as being mutually advantageous; because the addition of our party would add strength to that of the Turkish Ambassador. allowed a few days to get ready for the journey, our Ambassador advised us to prepare some travelling uniform, with a little more lace and finery than usual; as it would be necessary, both for our safety and convenience, that the Turkish escort should be impressed with an opinion of our being persons of rank: and we were instructed to maintain as much outward parade as possible, that we might not be ill-treated by our companions during the journey. This political disguise we had some difficulty in providing; not only from the dearth of materials at Péra, but also from the want of any pattern sufficiently tawdry. At last we luckily met with a cavalry uniform, left by the French ambassador Sebastiani, which served us as a model: it consisted of a hussar jacket, &c. of brown cloth, faced with black velvet, and trimmed with gold-lace, fringe, and frogs; which exactly suited our purpose. We received orders from Constantinople to join the Turkish Ambassador on the evening of the first of April, at the Ponte Piccolo, or Kâtchük Tchekmadjeh; where his Excellency intended to halt for the night, after the public ceremony of his procession from the capital would be concluded. The last day of March, we were busily employed in consigning to the care of our excellent friend and banker, Mr. Barbaud, (from whom we experienced many acts of kindness) several cases containing the things we wished to send to England, and in taking leave of those friends we were never likely to see again; particularly the Neapolitan minister, COUNT LUDOLF¹, and the

the German Internuncio, BARON HERBERT². To these noblemen we had been indebted for acts of disinterested friendship and uninterrupted hospitality during the two successive winters that we resided in Péra. Upon our last visit to COUNT LUDOLF, knowing that we were fond of mineralogy, he presented to us the most magnificent specimen of wood-opal that has yet been discovered. It had been given by the Capudan Pasha to his famous naval architect Le Bruyn ; but when the latter fled to Petersburgh, to enter into the service of the Emperor of Russia, it was consigned to the Neapolitan Minister. This enormous mass, consisting wholly of the sort of opal called Cacholon, weighs one hundred and forty-seven pounds eight ounces; being three feet five inches in circumference, and two feet two inches in length. It was said to have been found in *Bulgaria*³.

exemplary Nobleman, see p. 248 (Note) of the valuable "REMAINS OF THE LATE JOHN TWEDDELL," edited by his brother, the Rev. Robert Tweddell, (Lond. 1815):—a work of which it may justly be said, that nothing like it has appeared since the original publication of Gray's Letters by Mason.

(2) Baron De Herbert, as the Austrian Minister at the Porte, had the peculiar title of INTERNUNCIO. See the commemoration of his talents and virtues, in the work above cited, p. 316. (Note.)

(3) The son of Count Ludolf was lately in England; and visiting the University of Cambridge, the author had the satisfaction of making known to him, at his public Lectures in Mineralogy, the scientific use to which his father's magnificent gift had been applied. The Rev. George Cecil Renouard, of Sidney College, Chaplain to the British Factory at Smyrna, mentions the existence of a prodigious deposit of opal in one of the small islands opposite to Vourlah in the Gulph of Smyrna.

which result from the decomposition of siliceous bodies; the whole beauty of the noble opal, and all that constitutes its distinction from semi-opal, being due to such decomposition. The supposed opal, discovered at Alexandria in Egypt, certainly owed its remarkable properties to the circumstance of its having remained for such a length of time exposed among the ruins of the city; as it proved to be a mass of glass¹; a substance extremely liable to exhibit opalescence when decomposed by weathering.

Afterwards, we called at the house of the celebrated engineer Kauffer, whose name is often mentioned in books of travels². He received us upon his death-bed, putting into our hands the valuable maps, which had been already engraved, from his surveys of the Topography of Constantinople and the Sea of Marmora. We received his permission to publish them upon a reduced scale in England, and they are now added to this Volume. He regretted that he could not shew to us many original and valuable papers belonging to his collection, owing to the critical state of his health; and he died soon after our departure. On the morning of this day, a noise was heard upon the stairs of the hotel leading to our apartments; and looking over the balustrade, we saw our fine Epidaurian wolf-dog, Koráki, which we lost at Thebes, actually dragging up a Greek sailor, who held him by a rope, and who came with him from Athens, bringing letters from our friend Lusieri, and from the Consul at Tenos, to whose care Lusieri had consigned the dog, to be forwarded to Constantinople. We have already related the manner in which this noble animal was found, making the best of his way to Athens, after we lost him at *Thebes*³. The author also took leave of a Greek Prince, ALEXANDER BANO HANTZERLÏ, owing to whose friendly offices he was enabled to purchase some valuable Greek Manuscripts; and received commissions for books that he desired to have sent to him from Paris; among others, the famous French Encyclopédie, in thirty-five folio volumes⁴.

All things being in readiness, on the morning of April the first, about ten o'clock, we set out from PÉRA, in a cavalcade of seventeen horses; being joined by Signor Franchini, as dragoman, in the Tartar habit, going also to Paris, who added six horses to our nine; and the master of the hotel, Vïbert, who insisted upon seeing us to the end of our first day's journey, having also joined the party, accompanied by his servant, adding two more horses to the rest, increased our cavalcade to the number we have mentioned. It had been said that the Turkish Ambassador would not leave Constantinople before noon; but as we were to make a circuit of three hours round the extremity of the Bay, it was probable that we might fall in with his procession upon the road. We had therefore put on our splendid splendid gala dresses, and garnished our caps with plumes, that we might obey the instructions we had received, and do him all the honour in our power. In this manner we rode through the streets of Péra, being greeted by the inhabitants, who filled the windows to witness our departure; all of whom were known to Signor Franchini, and most of them to us. The baggage-horses were very heavily laden; but they performed their work with apparent ease. It was near one o'clock P.M. before we had doubled the extremity of the Bay. We passed the river Kyat Khánah at the "Sweet Waters," and once more beheld all around us a genuine Thracian prospect; bleak, desolate, and barren. The weather felt cold, although 50° of Fahrenheit; a tempestuous Tramontane blowing from the north. We made nearly the whole circuit of the Bay, coming almost to the Seven Towers, before we turned off in the road to Kútchúk Tchekmadjeh. Upon this road we met many of the Turkish grandees returning, who had escorted their ambassador out of the city. Signor Franchini spoke to some of their attendants, who told us that he left the city in very great pomp, and that we should probably overtake him, as he was proceeding very slowly. The whole distance from Constantinople to the Ponte Piccolo is only three hours, about nine miles; but it is five hours from Péra.

Cavalcade

Appearance of the Ambassador.

About half an hour before we reached this small town, we overtook the train of the Ambassador. He was on horseback, dressed in great state, escorted by about fifty other horsemen, and preceded by his secretary, the Prince Mârúzi; by a guardian of the prince, Signor Francopulo, a native of Naxos, and a large party of dragomans; all dressed in embroidered scarlet pelisses, and on horseback. His carriage followed him; one of those arabâhs, or close Turkish wag-gons, the inside of which is concealed by lattice-work: it is the sort of machine wherein the women of Constantinople are dragged about the streets when they take the air.

Upon our arrival at Kûtchûk Tchekmadjeh, we found what a different thing it was to travel in the suite of a Moslem Ambassador; our present reception in this place being compared with that which we experienced but three months before; and it convinced us of the opposite impressions that may be made upon the minds of travellers under such different circumstances. Before, all was filth and wretchedness. Now we found a most cleanly and excellent house prepared for our reception; the staircase and the rooms being well washed, and every thing looking comfortably. We had scarcely taken possession of it for the night, when a message came from his Excellency, inviting us to visit him. Being conducted to the house where he lodged, we were shewn into the room where he was. We found a little man wrapped up in large pelisses, sitting in one corner of a small apartment, much more mean than that which he had provided for us. He addressed us by a title he always used in speaking to us afterwards during the journey; calling us Bey-Zadehs! and bidding us be welcome, received us with a degree Excellency.

(1) Bey-Zadeh signifies, literally, "Son of a Prince;" but the expression is sometimes used merely as an expression of politeness in conversation.

degree of civility and cordiality we had rarely before experienced from a Turk. As soon as we were seated, he sent for Prince Mürûzi to act as interpreter, who came accompanied by Signor Francopulo; and we had some lively and pleasant conversation. The Ambassador's head had been filled, in Constantinople, with the most extravagant stories as to the danger of the road we had to travel over; and was evidently terrified by the thoughts of his journey. He produced a little Turkish Manuscript from his bosom, which was an Itinerary of the route from Constantinople to Paris, and contained brief notices for travellers of the places of repose. This he made the Prince translate for us. It was such an Itinerary as that which Wesseling edited; from Bordeaux to Jerusalem; stating little more than the distances of the stations from each other.⁶ We told him that the first part of our journey related to a country of which he must be much better informed than we could be; as it has been seldom described by any travellers whose writings were known to us; but that after passing the Turkish frontiers, we would give him daily information concerning the district he had to traverse: that the dangers which filled his imagination were of a nature to exist only in his own country; and that we would become responsible for his safety in the land of the Christians. He then wished us rest and peace! telling us, when we thanked him for our excellent accommodations, that we should have much better in large towns.

The next morning (April 2), a Turkish officer and a Tartar came from the Ambassador, to inquire after our health, health, and to tell us, that having sent messengers to Constantinople, he could not continue his journey before ten o'clock A. M.; and that it was his intention to proceed only three hours during the day, as far as Bâyûk Tchekmadjeh; but that his usual rate of travelling would be about six or eight hours each day. He set off, however, about nine. We followed him, and met the bearer of his credentials coming back to give us notice that the Ambassador had left the place, and that he was proceeding slowly upon our account. We soon overtook the whole cavalcade, ascending a hill; and the appearance made by the persons composing it was very striking: there were about forty horsemen, without including the baggage-horses. Upon this occasion the Ambassador led the procession; wearing a green turban, and a robe of dark fur. Prince Mârûzi rode by his side on a prancing grey Arabian horse; he was dressed in satin robes, covered with a rich embroidered scarlet pelisse. The decorations of his steed were, if possible, more costly than those of his person; the housings and saddle-cloths being all of rich embroidery, and his broad Turkish stirrups gilt and burnished. Next followed the Prince's grooms, with led horses; then a suite of officers, private secretaries, and dragomans, in sumptuous dresses, all on horseback; and after these, the bearers of carpets, pipes, coffee-pots, &c. The Ambassador's credentials were carried in an embroidered porte-feuille, made of scarlet leather, wrought with gold thread, after the manner in which small pocket-books are sometimes worked that come from Turkey. article of convenience or luxury had a separate carrier. A silver chalice, containing water, was borne by a horseman appointed expressly for that purpose; and it was covered with a scarlet cloth. To all these was added a numerous armed escort, which closed the train. In a small embossed case, suspended by embroidered straps, with gilt studs, passing over his shoulders, the Ambassador carried a copy of the Korân, beautifully written: this, worn as an amulet, hung behind him, over the back part of his pelisse. Mûrûzi (because the Greeks are servile imitators of the fashions of their superiors) wore a similar appendage; but with this difference; instead of a manuscript of the Korân, his little shrine contained an illuminated code of the Four Gospels. Presently we overtook the Ambassador; and having been instructed not to approach him bareheaded, which is displeasing to the Turks, but to put our hands upon our breasts, making a slight inclination of the body; we addressed him in the usual form of salutation,—“SABANG SAIR OLA EFFENDI¹!” Good morning to you, Sir!—to which he replied, “SABANG SAIR OLSOÛN²,” May your morning be happy! and then took our station next to his Excellency, observing afterwards the solemn silence held by the rest of his attendants. For some time, nothing interrupted this stillness but the sound of our horses’ feet; until the Ambassador, dismounting, dismounting, entered into his arabâh. After this, we were joined by Signor Franchini and Signor Francopulo, who accompanied the Prince as a kind of guardian upon this expedition. Our conversation with this last gentleman began by his offers of service upon the road, and by his communicating to us the reasons that induced him to undertake so long a journey: these were, principally, the youth and inexperience of Prince Mârûzi, and the dangers to which he might be liable in visiting such a city as Paris. By conversing with him, we discovered that we had visited his house at Naxos, where we had been hospitably entertained by his wife; he being then in Constantinople. This circumstance served to recommend us; for he recollected receiving letters, mentioning our arrival upon that island. He then gave us an excellent character of the Turkish Ambassador; describing him as a man of the most upright integrity and virtue; rigorous in the observance of all the duties enjoined by his religion, but very amiable and benevolent. As a specimen of his exemplary qualities, he mentioned his behaviour to his wife, who had lately fallen a victim to the plague; and it will also serve to shew the strong predestinarian disposition of the Turks. From the hour that she was seized with the disorder, he remained with her; administering nourishment to her with his own hands; and when she died, he would not leave the room without imprinting a parting kiss upon her lips. Once afterwards, during the journey, he mentioned to us himself the loss he had sustained in the death of a woman who was his only source of happiness; and as he spake of the comfort he derived from the consciousness that he had not deserted her in her utmost need, we congratulated him upon his marvellous escape from the contagion; but he would not allow the expression to be used:—"How could that be called an escape," he asked, "which was only a continuance of his appointed time?"

Aspect of the Country.

The country exhibited the same desolate appearance which it wore when we were here in January: the spring this year being very backward, its approach had wrought no change in the dreary aspect of the scene. At the end of three hours we reached Bâyûk Tchekmadjeh, approaching it, from the south, by its four successive bridges. We found the whole place abandoned; owing to the alarm which our Tartar couriers had excited, in preparing for the arrival of the Ambassador. The dread of being pillaged by the Turkish grandees, causes the people everywhere to fly at their approach. We had therefore choice enough of lodgings; for every place of habitation was deserted. The house to which we were conducted, was as clean as the dwelling of the most fastidious Hollander. This town consists of forty houses, and contains one hundred and sixty Turkish inhabitants. It carries on commerce in wine and corn.

Our journey (April 3), from Bâyûk Tchekmadjeh to Selivria, was like travelling over the stéppes of Russia. We set out at seven o'clock A.M., and saw some peasants coursing with greyhounds. After riding for four hours, we came to a small village, called Pivatis, in the midst of this frightful waste.

waste'. Here the Turks halted for their dinner. We saw the remains of an old castle, and some columns, with large square blocks of stone. Thence following the shore of the Propontis, upon an eminence before descending into Selivria, we saw two large tumuli. The description given of these maritime towns of the Sca of Marmora by Le Bruyn, above a century ago, proves, that if they have undergone any alteration, it has not been that of improvement. They are little better than villages. Le Bruyn says*, that "four of them would not have been sufficient to furnish materials for an ordinary town." When we entered Selivria, distant two hours from Pivatis, we found matters much in the same state as on the preceding evening; but the inhabitants had not quitted their houses quite so abruptly. The doors were all locked, and most of the effects removed or concealed. We were, in consequence, indulged with an accommodation in the citadel. While we were preparing our dinner, the Agha sent us a basket of fruit. Selivria is surrounded by vineyards; and great attention is paid to their cultivation. They make here excellent wine; and send to Constantinople, corn, wine, straw, and charcoal.

Stephano*, ne pourroient pas faire toutes quatre une ville médiocre; et ces lieux, de même que le reste de la côte de la Propontide, ne sont habitez que par des Juifs, des Turcs, et des Grecs. Leur trafic, comme celui des autres ne consiste qu'en cotons, en soyes, en laines, en fruits, en cuirs, en oyseaux, et en semblables marchandises." Voyage au Levant, par Cornelle Le Bruyn, tom. 1. p. 217. à Rouen, 1725.

The town contains two thousand houses. All the Greeks, Armenians, and Jews, live separated from the rest of its population, in the citadel, where there is a Greek church and a monastery. We visited a schoolmaster who taught what is called the literal, or antient Greek, to about fifty scholars. In leaving the Greek church, which contains nothing else remarkable, we observed part of a column of the verde-antico. The monastery contained a bishop and three caloyers. There was also a school in this town for teaching the modern Greek. The harbour is good; and the town naturally and artificially fortified.

Upon the fourth of April we left Selivria, at six A. M., passing over a bridge of thirty arches. At two hours' distance from the town, we quitted the maritime road; and taking our leave of the PROPONTIS, turned off towards the north; viewing the same open campaign country as before, in which peasants were coursing among antient tumuli, as upon the preceding day, with greyhounds. We met a long retinue of horses, going for sale to Constantinople, tied by their tails and heads as in England. After travelling five hours, we came to a village called Kunneklea, where the Turks dined. The soil here consists of a sandy loam; but it is very rich. They employ fourteen oxen for a single plough: an English labourer would do equal work with half that number. As we drew nigh to *Tchorlu*¹, we began to observe a little wheat. We arrived at Tchorlu at two two P. M., after a journey of eight hours, or twenty-four miles; meeting upon the road strong parties of suspicious looking men, all well armed. Here we saw the ruins of Turkish baths, a neat mosque, and a minaret. Tchorlu is the TURULLUS of antiquity; written Tzorolus by the Byzantine historians: it consists of nine hundred houses; and the town is paved with black marble. There are more Turks than Greeks among its inhabitants. Its commerce is internal, in barley, wheat, and wine. Our accommodations here were excellent; being lodged in a large airy room, with a clean white shining floor. The owner of the house was a Greek; a cheerful and obliging man; but the other houses were all empty, and the doors barricadoed, which the Turks had to force open in order to gain possession. If the Grand Signior should choose to travel through his dominions, he would not find an inhabitant in any of the towns to receive him: for no sooner does the news arrive of the coming of Turks of distinction, than the people betake themselves to flight; and the stillness of death prevails in all the streets. Hitherto, the whole way from Constantinople, we had not observed a plant in flower; excepting, in sheltered situations, the vernal Crocus, which appeared with white and with yellow flowers. Here we began to observe the Blue-Bottle (CENTAURIA CYANUS), and other early dwarf plants. We saw also the ruins of an antient structure, built after the Roman manner, with red tiles.

observed this morning a very extraordinary serpent, moving upon the grass: it had a large blunt and thick head; but in other respects it resembled a common viper. Mr. Cripps descended from his horse and killed it; and with that abhorrence of a reptile, terrible in its aspect, and perhaps dangerous, we were glad to see it lifeless. Carrying it, however, in his hands to shew to the Ambassador, who was seated in his arabâh, he received a mild but pointed reproof, against the wantonness of depriving an animal, unnecessarily, of life.—“Bey Zadeh!” said he, “had that poor serpent done anything to injure you? Are you the happier because you have deprived it of life?—Do not carry with you a proof of your cruelty; it may be unlucky: the same God who made you, created also the serpent; and surely there was room enough in this wilderness for both of you!” At noon we came to a fountain, with Turkish inscriptions, where the whole procession halted for public prayer. We have before mentioned the imposing appearance of the Moslems during their devotions; but any person, with a spark of genuine piety in his breast, could not have beheld this sight unmoved. The Ambassador and all his train of Turkish attendants took off their superb shawls to spread as carpets before them; then, kneeling down beneath the canopy of heaven, they poured forth their offering of praise and thanksgiving, with a fervency of spirit, and an awful solemnity of manner, that filled us with respect and admiration.

At six hours' distance from Tchorlu, we turned a little out of the road to the village of Caristrauia, where the Ambassador dined with his suite. Here we found the Agha
 of

of Burghaz going to Constantinople, who returned to accompany the Embassy. The country is level and well cultivated. All the way from Constantinople, we had experienced high winds and cold weather; but this day, at noon, it suddenly changed; and the sun's beams were so ardent, that we could scarcely endure their powerful heat. We then proceeded to Burghaz, which is distant four hours from Caristrania, and ten hours from Tchorlu.

Burghaz.

The robbers, to the number of five hundred men, had lately been quartered here, and almost destroyed the town. It consists of two thousand houses; of which number three hundred belong to Greeks. The shops are good; and the commerce carried on with the interior of the country is not inconsiderable, in the sale of wine, flax, and pottery. The internal appearance of Burghaz is better than that of Turkish towns in general. It is famous for a neat manufacture of the small terra-cotta bowls for Turkish pipes; and for salted shrimps, which are caught in the Black Sea. We bought some of the former: they were all stamped with a Turkish inscription, as a peculiar mark of the manufacture. This mark is, however, imitated by the dealers in the bazars of Constantinople; because a superior article of the kind would not sell without it. Englishmen have no reason to deride the Turks for such prejudices: the makers of sealing-wax in London, who have long surpassed the Dutch manufacturers in that article, are yet compelled to retain the old Dutch inscription. During our journey this day, we had the first view of the chain of MOUNT HÆMUS; called by the Turks the Balkan, signifying "a difficult defile among rocks."

escort.

Hasilbalem.

April 6.—The Ambassador found it necessary to increase the strength of the escort, owing to the accounts he received of the state of the country. Our number of horsemen, upon leaving Burghaz, exceeded one hundred; and we had besides a considerable party on foot. The country exhibited no marks of cultivation, excepting near the villages; but in the middle of this day's journey, it no longer wore the denuded aspect of the Plains of Thrace. We began now to meet with underwood, and dwarf oaks. After six hours' journey from Burghaz, we turned out of the road to the village of Hasilbalem, at half an hour's distance from the main route, that the Ambassador might get something to eat; but finding nothing, we supplied him, from our store, with an *Adrianople tongue*¹; the rest of the Turks staring with amazement to see him accept food from a Djowr. We then continued our journey; the Agha of Burghaz attending us in person, on a beautiful grey horse, superbly caparisoned. The extent and magnificence of our procession, as we were told by Signor Francopulo, afforded a tolerable representation of the cavalcade of the Princes of Walachia going to take possession of their dominions. From hence to the Port of Ineada, in the Black Sea, is a journey of fourteen hours; and to the nearest maritime place, Æsopoli, only of twelve hours. The town of Kirk Ikklisie, or the "Forty Churches," appeared upon a sloping ground, near near to the base of the great range of HÆMUS, backed by mountainets, whence we supposed the Black Sea might be visible. Nothing was talked of, among the inhabitants, but the ravages committed by the robbers. A Tartar, employed by the British Ambassador, had been lately murdered; and, as they told us, eleven persons who were in his company.

(1) The dried tongues of buffaloes bear this name. Great quantities of these tongues are brought in barrels to Constantinople. We carried them to Egypt. They are very excellent.

We entered Kirk Iklisie by a gate; a large but miserable town, surrounded by a wall. It contains three or four thousand houses, (only five hundred of which belong to Greeks,) several mosques, and many shops: but dirt and wretchedness are everywhere conspicuous. The traveller will find here the worst accommodations of the whole route. We were stowed into a small and mean apartment, with hardly room to move, in an elevated part of the town, called the Quarter of the Greeks; at a considerable distance from our worthy Moslem protector, who sent, however, to ask if we fared well; and we answered in the affirmative, not choosing to interrupt his repose with trivial complaints. They make here an inspissated juice from boiled grapes, which we remembered having seen at Ineada, or Tineada, upon the Black Sea; the THYNNIAS of antiquity. It is also sold in Constantinople. They form it into rolls, about a yard in length, containing walnut kernels. Persons fond of sweet-meats are very partial to this mixed preparation; the taste of which resembles altogether that of almonds with raisins. The whole trade of Kirk Iklisie consists in the sale of this conserve, and wine, and corn. The wine is of a bright gold colour, very pleasing to the eye, eye, and like the Champagne wine in flavour; but having a greater degree of strength. If properly managed, it might rank among the choicest wines of the whole world. Although this town be so near to the Black Sea, the small river, upon which it is situate, takes an opposite course, and, after joining the Maritza, falls into the Archipelago. In its modern appellation of Dearaderi, we recognise the old classical name of a river at whose sources Darius left the inscription which is preserved by Herodotus'. The springs of the TEARA cannot be remote from the walls of the town. We were extremely desirous of going in search of them, to see if any remains of the monument, left by the Persian monarch to commemorate his visit to the spot, might now be discovered; but the state of the country precluded all possibility of venturing, without a powerful escort, to any distance from the route.

Wednesday, April 7.—After our departure from Kirk Iklisie, we penetrated farther into the hilly country; travelling among trees, and observing many fine plants beginning to bloom. In spite of the good Ambassador's reproof, we destroyed this day another very large serpent, without his knowledge. The inhabitants are a mixed race of Bulgarians and Malo-russians. At ten o'clock, after four hours' journey, we reached a village called Hericlér, where we breaktasted, and then proceeded four hours farther to Kamara, another village, which we found in a state of utter waste and desolation;

lation; the banditti having burned the dwellings, after killing or wounding many of the inhabitants. When we arrived, there was not a creature to be seen; the former inhabitants having abandoned the place. We took possession of the entire village. Towards evening, the owner of the house where we lodged ventured to his dwelling, from the mountains, bringing with him his son: the poor child and his father seemed to be almost starved. With what delight did we welcome their coming to their own little cottage; and set before them such food as we had brought with us! For a moment, gladness got the better of their despair; and they began to chatter with our attendants; having found, in the midst of their wretchedness, that even strangers could act as friends. They said that the rest of the villagers were afar off in the mountains, whither some of them had succeeded in removing their cattle at the first intelligence of the coming of the robbers; and cautioned us to be upon our guard, and to keep together during the route; as it was certain that all our motions were watched, and that we were then surrounded by hovering hordes, who were only prevented by fear from attacking the Embassy.

We were employed the whole of April 8, in climbing hills, and in penetrating woods, which consisted of small and stunted trees. We saw pelicans lying dead in the road, and were unable to explain the cause. In every village that we passed through, we observed storks building their nests, without being molested by the inhabitants. The strange noise they make in wooing, resembles the kind of alarum, called a clack, used in cherry-orchards to drive away away birds. A small and drizzling rain, the usual characteristic of a mountainous atmosphere, beset us the whole way. Our guides, owing to the mist, deviated from the route; and as they misled us, we began to suspect treachery. Antonio, with our Janissary, wandered into one of the forests, and were nearly lost: they returned very much alarmed, saying they had seen armed horsemen in the woods. The Ambassador, being much terrified, twice detained the whole cavalcade, within the space of a single hour, to offer prayers for the safety of the Embassy. In four hours we reached the miserable village of Fachi, where we changed horses; and at five hours' distance from Fachi, we came to Beymilico, another wretched village, where there was a complete dearth of provisions. The inhabitants of this place had only returned to it eight days before; having abandoned it through fear of the robbers. Notwithstanding their extreme poverty, their houses were clean; and the beauty of the women was very remarkable. With the exception of a single Turk, they were all Bulgarians, professing the Greek religion, and speaking the Bulgarian language, which hardly differs from the Malo-russian'.

Beymilico.

We left Beymilico at six the next morning, (Friday, April 9); and after a ride of five hours, principally over plains covered with underwood, we arrived at the town of Carnabat. Throughout all this country, greyhounds are used; and we frequently observed persons coursing. After passing passing over a hill, like the Sussex South-Downs, we beheld the town; making a neat and pleasing appearance with its white minarets. We descended into Carnabat with the whole cavalcade of the Embassy; altogether amounting to above a hundred horsemen, besides sumpter-horses, four baggage-waggons, and the Ambassador's arabâh. Here we found a clean and excellent public bath, not inferior to any in Constantinople; and plenty of good wine, limpid and colourless as water, tasting like cider. Carnabat contains seven hundred houses, whereof two hundred belong to Greeks. The country near it is well cultivated; and its situation in a plain, at the foot of a ridge of hills, is very agreeable. Whether owing to its want of commerce, or to what other cause, we did not learn, Carnabat had hitherto escaped the ravages of the robbers; who had collected in sufficient force to attack towns of equal size. One class of its inhabitants might be considered as emblems of its uninterrupted tranquillity; namely, storks: for these birds appeared in such prodigious numbers around the town, that they seemed to have made it their own metropolis.

April 10.—After traversing the extensive campaign of Carnabat, we entered a mountainous region, and then descended into another plain, where we saw the ruins of a village that had been burned by the rebels; but not a house remained entire*. Upon the rise of a hill farther on, there was was another village, called Dobralle, out of our route; but we repaired thither, after being four hours on horseback, for rest and refreshment. At Dobralle, the peasants were playing upon rude pipes, resembling, in their form and tone, our clarinets; sufficiently so to convince us that we here saw the instrument in its original state, in the hands of Bulgarian shepherds. Thence, resuming our journey, we entered what is called the Boccaze, or narrowest passage of the Balkan: for hitherto we had been somewhat surprised that nothing like Alpine scenery characterized the approach to Mount HÆMUS: nor is this range of mountains anywhere remarkable for grandeur of scenery or for great elevation. The defile here, however, might be considered as possessing somewhat of that character, but in no eminent degree: it was a hilly pass, full of woods of oak trees. In the midst of it we crossed a rapid river, called *Kamtchi-sù*¹, and saw, at a distance, a mountain entirely covered with snow; but there was nothing to remind us of the greater Alpine barriers. The appearance of MOUNT HÆMUS may rather be likened to the Welsh scenery; where every swelling mountainet is insular; and nothing is seen of that towering of broken cliffs and heights, one above and sometimes in another; so that no part of the country can be considered as secure. Besides the rebels, there are also troops of landitti, who scour the country, availing themselves of its distracted state, to plunder either party whenever an opportunity occurs." Cripps's MS. Journal.

(1) The meaning of this word, as interpreted for us, was said to signify "water falling into the Black Sea;" perhaps as distinguished from the rivers flowing towards the Archipelago.

above another, which distinguishes the cloud-capped, congregated summits of the Alps and Pyrenees, and the regions of Caucasus and Lebanon.

Upon quitting this defile, and descending towards a large scattered village, called Chaligh Kavack, which we reached in four hours from Dobralle, we saw, upon our left, a very high and large tumulus. This village lies between two mountains, and consists of two hundred houses: half its population being Turkish. We were therefore surprised by seeing the place filled with women; as it is always customary among the Turks to conceal their females: but this was explained when we were told that all the women of the neighbouring villages had fled to Chaligh Kavack, to move out of the way of the robbers. We lodged with a Bulgarian family, in which we found some handsome damsels very ready to converse; but they spoke no other than the Bulgarian language. From its resemblance to the Malo-russian, however, we gathered enough of their discourse, to learn, that the villages in the neighbourhood were entirely abandoned; yet, harassed as the inhabitants had been by the rebel troops, they all spoke well of Pasvan Oglou, the rebel chief; and we could plainly perceive that the women wished him success. They said that the disorders of the country were owing to robbers, and not to his troops; that he never robbed villages, or plundered the poor of their effects.

Sunday, April 11.—Having distributed some little presents among the family of our host, we left its members all happy. The Ambassador had quitted the town long before we were ready to follow him. As we proceeded this day, the scenery became grander, and had more of an Alpine appearance. Many plants were in flower; some of which we collected. Near the village of Chaligh Kavack, the author found a most elegant little annual plant, which has never been described; a new species of Speedwell (VERONICA), with fine blue flowers upon long slender peduncles. The leaves are nearly rhomb-shaped, or rhomb-ovate, and deeply lobed; the large lobes being again divided on their outer margin. The flowers are solitary, and measure about half an inch across; the two upper segments of the calyx being shorter than the others. The whole plant, in the largest specimens which we could collect, is only about three inches in length; and every part of it, up to the blossom, is covered with a delicate viscous pubescence. To this beautiful non-descript Veronica, we have given the name of *VERONICA PUMILA*¹. In the route between Constantinople and Rustchük, we found not less than four new species, besides other rare plants; a new Star of Bethlehem (ORNITHOGALUM), a new Periwinkle (VINCA), a new Germander (TEUCRIUM), and this new Speedwell (VERONICA). Not to interrupt, therefore, the narrative, by allusions to these plants exactly as they occurred, we shall subjoin

subjoin a list of all of them in the margin*; because the most common plants are here made interesting by the circumstances

(2) A non-descript species of ORNITHOGALUM, from four to six inches in height, with the radical bulb the size of a small chesnut; the leaves from about a quarter to a third of an inch in breadth, but narrowing towards the base; the uppermost embracing the stem, and generally extended a little beyond the flowers. We have called it ORNITHOGALUM OLIGOPHYLLUM. Ornithogalum foliis lanceolato oblongis scapo æquantibus, glabris; corymbo paucifloro; filamentis subulatis.

A non-descript species of Germander, (TEUCRIUM Linn.) with straight wooly stems, and very hairy elliptic-lanceolate blunt leaves, above an inch in length, some whereof are entire, and others with two broad scollops on each side, towards the point; the flowers bearded at the mouth, and about an inch long. Two other species of TEUCRIUM have been already described; the TEUCRIUM HETEROPHYLLUM of L'Heritier and Willdenow, a Madeira plant; and the TEUCRIUM HETEROPHYLLUM of Cavanilles, published in the Sixth Volume of his Icones Plantarum, a plant from South-America; from both of which our TEUCRIUM is manifestly distinguished by the flowers not being pendant; by the shortness of the peduncles; by the different form and hairiness of the leaves; and from the latter species more particularly, in having the upper leaves not deeply three-lobed, but bluntly crenate. We have called this new species TEUCRIUM SESSIFOLIUM.

Teucrium foliis hirsutis sessilibus obtusis, inferioribus lanceolatis integerrimis, superioribus bracteisque crenatis, elliptico-lanceolatis; floribus axillaribus solitariis; pedunculis brevissimis.

A non-descript species of Periwinkle (VINCA, Linn.) differing from the VINCA MINOR (which it resembles in size) in having blunt oval leaves, ciliated at the edges; and not inclining to lanceolate, or pointed, as in that species; and from the VINCA MAJOR also differing, in having the calyx scarcely half the length of the tube of the blossom, and the leaves regularly oval, not enlarging towards the base, and only about a fourth part so large: the stems measure from four to nine inches in length, and the largest leaves about an inch and a quarter. We have called it VINCA PUMILA.

circumstances of their locality and association. We had several fine views, from the openings of a narrow defile of the Balkan, as we began to descend towards a plain, and to the village of Dragoelu, inhabited by Bulgarians, where we halted for dinner. In the plain around this village, and the whole way hence as far as Shumla, the land is cultivated like a garden. The increasing appearances of industry, and of its blessed companions, health and cleanliness, began to suggest to us that we were leaving Turkey, as the blighting influence of its government was becoming gradually less visible. In descending to Dragoelu, the eye may be said to revel in the delightful prospect which this change exhibits. As far as the sight extends, but at a great depth below the traveller, rich plains are seen, spreading before the view all the wealth of husbandry in its utmost abundance. The mountains are cultivated even to their summits, and covered with vineyards, and the plains with plantations of fruit-trees, growing among the green corn; being now in blossom, their their gaudy flowers, above the deep verdure of the fields, exhibited the most cheerful smiling aspect imaginable.

After having taken our refreshment, we proceeded along the valley, and over a level country with broad and good roads, four hours farther to Shumla. One hour before we reached this place, we again crossed the river Kamtchi-sù; and close to it there was a small village, where we saw a large camp of Gipsies, who are the smiths of Bulgaria. They had placed their waggons so as to form a square court, with covered sides like sheds, in the middle of the village. In these courts of the Hamaxobii, we have the original form of all the Greek houses, and of all northern nations; like those now seen even in Finland and Lapland, and among all the Scythian tribes. For the rest, the Bulgarian Gipsies are exactly like those of England; the women were squalling about, telling fortunes, with their usual wild and tawny looks. Here they are called Tchinganci. The town of Shumla is very considerable, and it is well fortified with ramparts and a double fosse: it contains from sixteen to eighteen thousand houses; about twelve hundred of which belong to Greeks, Jews, or Armenians. As we drew nigh to the works, four of its principal inhabitants, accompanied by about fifty soldiers bearing arms, came to meet the Ambassador at the gate of the town; and having kissed the hem of his robes, after the Turkish manner, mounted their horses, and conducted him to the house prepared for his reception. We had excellent quarters assigned for us in the house of a Greek, close to that of the Ambassador, who sent a message to

Upon this occasion there is a cessation from labour during three days; rejoicings are made, and presents distributed. Corban, or Courban, signifies a sacrifice; it is generally the sacrifice of a lamb, which is sent to some one as a gift.

Medals.

As we were to remain at Shumla until the thirteenth, we sent forward an express message to Bükorest, to our friend Mr. Summerer, then residing as agent for the British nation at Bükorest (with whom we had contracted an intimacy at Péra), requesting that he would send a carriage and horses to meet us, after our passage of the Danube, at Rustchük. The Ambassador also ordered carriages for all the principal persons of his suite to be brought to the same place; and wrote to the Prince of Walachia, announcing his approach. We thought we had now quitted altogether the land of classical antiquities; but to our surprise we obtained in this place three Greek medals: we found them upon the evening of our arrival, in the hands of a silversmith; and if the shops had not been shut the next day, owing to the festival of the Courban Bairam, we had reason to believe that we might have purchased others. These medals are curious, and therefore they merit a particular description. The first is nothing more than a silver medal of Alexander the Great. It exhibits the head of the king as Hercules, decorated with the lion's spoils; with the common reverse of a sitting figure of Jupiter, beautifully executed. As it serves to call to mind Alexander's Expedition into Mæsia, and his passage of Mount Hæmus, it derives an additional interest from the circumstance of its locality. But the medal itself is remarkable: it has neither legend nor monogram; and it affords the only instance we ever ever saw of a fine reverse upon the medals of Alexander. Generally, the style of workmanship exhibited by the reverses of Alexander's medals is very inferior to that which the portrait displays; but this is by the hand of a superior artist.

The second is a medal of Rhescuporis, king of THRACE in a much later age. He was the uncle of the young Prince Cotys the Fifth. After sharing the sovereignty with him, about the seventh year of the Christian æra, he put him treacherously to death. His ferocious and ambitious character is described as the very opposite to that of his victim, who, to the mildness of his manners, joined an accomplished and liberal mind. Ovid addressed to Cotys one of his Epistles¹. Rhescuporis ruled over those wild and desolate Plains of THRACE, which we had so recently traversed; and the character of the people has not altered, in all the centuries that have since elapsed: they were constantly in a state of insurrection². It was to Augustus that he owed his kingdom: and during the lifetime of that Emperor, he restrained his ambitious projects within

(1) In which Cotys is represented as distinguished by his application to literature and poetry. When we consider that the Roman Poet is writing from the barbarous region of his exile to a Thracian Prince, the following lines, upon the effect of such studies, are read with additional interest:

“ Adde, quod ingenuas didicisse fideliter artes,
Emollit mores, nec sinit esse feros.
 Nec regum quisquam magis est instructus ab illis,
 Mitibus aut studiis tempora plura dedit.
 Carmina testantur; quæ, si tua nomina demas
 Thracium juvenem composuisse negem,
 Neve sub hoc tractu vates foret unicus Orpheus;
 Bistonis ingenio terra superba tuo est.”

within due bounds ; but, upon the death of his patron, he gave full scope to his designs of aggrandizement, and took possession of the more cultivated and fertile territories belonging to *Cotys*¹. It is necessary to insert this brief sketch of his history, in order to account for the remarkable fact of such a coinage, under Rhescuporis, as that which we have now to describe ; for this medal is of Electrum, a compound of gold and silver ; known to the Antients in a very early age, whereof antient specimens are very uncommon. It might have been after the death of Cotys, when the auriferous mines of Macedonia fell into the hands of *Rhescuporis*², that Electrum was thus employed ; for as this mixed metal is known to exist in a natural state, it is more probable that the Electron medals of Rhescuporis were struck in the natural compound, than that any such amalgamation was chemically prepared in the beginning of the first century, and in such a barbarous country, for the purpose of coining. Having possession of the Macedonian mines, Rhescuporis might have employed for this purpose the amalgamation of gold and silver, obtained, by a simple process, from the sulphurets, after the sublimation and separation of the sulphur and the lead³.

(2) Ibid. For the manner in which Rhescuporis afterwards fell into the hands of Tiberius, see Suetonius in Tiber. Paternulus, &c. He was conducted to Rome ; and being convicted in the Senate of the death of his nephew, and the violent usurpation of his dominions, was sentenced to a perpetual imprisonment, and banished to Alexandria in Egypt ; where, for his subsequent conduct, he was put to death.

(3) This process will be fully explained in the sequel, when we treat of the Hungarian mines.

Owing to the ignorance of modern nations respecting the metallic substance, called ΗΛΕΚΤΡΟΝ by the Greeks, this word is commonly translated amber; and the most gross errors have been tolerated, even among learned men, owing to their inattention to its real nature. A single instance will serve to show how commonly the word has been misunderstood. We may take it from the account given in the Æthiopics of Heliodorus, of the ring which Calasiris gave to *Nausicles*⁴. The bevel of it contained an Æthiopian amethyst, set (ἠλέκτρον) in amber, as some have supposed; but electrum here signifies a mixed metal of gold and silver, with which the couches of the antients were sometimes studded and embossed, as we learn from *Aristophanes*⁵. Upon this medal is represented, on one side, a figure of Victory, with the legend ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣΡΑΣΚΟΥΠΟΡΙΔΟΣ; and upon the other side, the head of Cotys, with the words ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣΚΟΤΥΣ.

The third, was a bronze medal of MARCIANOPOLIS, struck under Alexander Severus; the head of that Emperor and his wife being represented in front, with the legend ΜΑΡ.ΑΥΡ.ΣΕΥΗ.ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ; and upon the obverse side, a figure of Justice holding the scales, with a cornucopie, and this legend, ΝΠΓΙΟΝΛΦΗCΤΟΥΜΑΡΚΙΑΝΟΠΟΛΙΤΩΝ.

Marciana, from whom this city received its name¹, was the sister of Trajan. A similar medal, struck under Julia Domna, is noticed in the valuable work of *Harduin*², with this legend, ΜΑΡΚΙΑΝΟΠΟΛΕΙΤΩΝ · ΥΠ · ΑΥΡ · ΑΜΙΑΝΟΥ.

The city thus called MARCIANOPOLIS was in MÆSIA INFERIOR; and it was the capital of the country. D'Anville has placed it near the confluence of two small rivers, flowing towards the *Euxine*³. "The name Marcenopoli may be still in use; but it is said that the Bulgarians more frequently call it Prebislaw, or The Illustrious City." The fact is, that Shumla may now be considered as the capital of Bulgaria; a country comprehending all the district antiently called Mæsia Secunda, or MÆSIA INFERIOR; and it is very likely that this town was itself MARCIANOPOLIS; which is rendered the more probable by the discovery of such a medal upon the spot. Cellarius has collected the only information concerning Marcianopolis; for it is remarkable that the city is not mentioned by *Mentelle*⁴. According to the Tabula Peutingeriana, cited by *Cellarius*⁵, it was a mediterranean town, twenty-four miles from ODESSUS; and it is described by

by Zosimus as a chief city of THRACE. The same writer also places it in MÆSIA⁸. Never had any country more striking natural boundaries; being separated from THRACE, upon the South, by MOUNT HÆMUS as by a wall; and upon the North, by the ISTER: and in distinguishing that division of territory, which, among modern geographers, bears the name of Bulgaria, (the most fertile plain perhaps of the whole earth, defended by its immense southern barrier,) too great attention cannot be paid to the definitive chain of HÆMUS, extending from east to *west*⁹. In this rich territory, Shumla is so centrally situate, that it is peculiarly qualified, both as to its locality and magnitude, to rank as the principal city, at least of this part of the country, and perhaps of all Bulgaria. The Bulgarian language is no where more generally spoken than it is in the whole Passage of the Balkan: at Shumla, the number of the Turks, of course, tends to the introduction of Turkish names; but the two languages are not likely to be confounded, since nothing can be more opposite. The Bulgarian language most resembles the Malo-russian, both being dialects of the *Sclavonian*¹⁰. We expected to have found a resemblance between the language of Bulgaria and the Erse; and for this reason,—that many names of places towards the ISTER, encountered the Celts, or Gauls, these are the people alluded to'. Although the Scordisci were almost annihilated, in the time when the Roman power extended into this country; yet their Celtic names of places, in many instances, remained, as in all those towns that had the Celtic termination of dunum. We were, however, disappointed in tracing any other resemblance between the Bulgarian and the Erse, than what exists in the names of numbers. More alliance may be observed between the Albanian and the Erse, than between the latter and the Bulgarian; although they have nearly the same name for water; and their names of the units are very similar. We shall exhibit a brief comparative Vocabulary, by which the difference between the Bulgarian and the Erse will not be less striking than between the Bulgarian and the Albanian; while the Turkish, differing, toto cælo, from all the rest, marks its discrepancy in nothing more conspicuously than in the names of numbers.

Population
of Shumla.

Shumla contains from sixteen to eighteen thousand houses, whereof about twelve hundred belong to Greeks, Jews, and Armenians. Its commerce is chiefly with the interior of the country, and consists principally in wine. There are, however, abundance of braziers here, who supply Constantinople with the articles of their manufacture; also a great number of tailors, kept constantly at work in making Turkish habits, to be sent to the capital. The cause of this manufactory originates in their getting the German cloth at a lower rate than the merchants in Constantinople; which enables them to undersell, at a great profit, the makers of Turkish apparel in that city.

The situation of Shumla, with regard to its fertile plains, somewhat resembles that of Lebadéa in Greece: it is placed between two mountains; and it resembles Lebadéa in another particular, namely, in the unwholesomeness of its air. Some of our party paid dearly for the day we spent here; being attacked by intermittent fever; particularly the author, who experienced this malady as violently as in any part of his travels, and was not free from it until he arrived in Transylvania.

Transylvania. Perhaps this might be attributed to our having ventured to eat animal food; which should be avoided as much as possible, where there is the slightest suspicion of a Malária. The Agha sent us a lamb, according to a Turkish custom, as a sacrifice and a present for the festival of the Courban Bairam. Prince Mûrûzi and Signor Francopulo came to dine with us; but it was observed that all who tasted animal food, were more or less affected with fever after our stay here; excepting those persons of the Embassy who resorted to the hot vapour baths of the town, and sustained the utmost influence of the sudatory. The Ambassador spent nearly an entire night in the bath; going thither the evening after his arrival. The next morning we visited him, and found him so exhausted by his bathing, that he was sleeping upon the divân of his apartment. To our surprise, we saw also his slaves sprawling upon the same divân, and fast asleep. The Turkish Secretary and Treasurer were the only persons who were awake, sitting with grave faces, and in perfect silence, opposite to each other. We entered into conversation with them for a few minutes; taking care to speak in a low tone of voice, not to arouse the sleepers. Prince Mûrûzi afterwards told us not to wonder at seeing slaves admitted to so much familiarity; as throughout Turkey the slaves are regarded with parental tenderness; the most menial servant always ranking higher than the officers of the Turkish army; the military profession being considered the lowest in the empire.

CHAP. II.

Tatchekeui.

April 13.—This morning we left Shumla, and continued our journey, travelling over plains in the highest state of cultivation. After riding three hours, we came to a village called Tatchekeui; the inhabitants were Turks. We had here an opportunity of knowing the sort of treatment we should have experienced if we had arrived in any other manner, than as forming a part of the suite of a Turkish Ambassador. The inhabitants would not permit us to pass their doors unmolested. Through the influence of the Ambassador, having gained admission into one of their houses, we were called upon to retire whenever a female wished to pass in or out; and the Turks would have driven us from the village at the points of their poignards, but for his powerful interference.

Remarkable
Quadruped.

The same cultivated land appeared in leaving Tatchekeui; but the country became afterwards rather more hilly. We had a journey of six hours from this village to the town of Lazgarat, where we passed the night. The houses were almost all cottages; but neat and clean. In the room where we slept, the foot of a mole was suspended by a string from the roof, as a remedy for disorders of the head. During our journey this day, we noticed in the plains a small quadruped, that we have reason to believe is a non-descript animal. It resembled a squirrel; but it burrowed in the ground like the Súslick of the South of Russia, which it also resembles; yet differing, in being larger than the latter, and in having a broad tail like a squirrel. We made several attempts to get near enough to one of these animals, to give a more correct description; but upon our approach, they disappeared beneath the soil. We saw them afterwards in Hungary. The harrows used in this country have a remarkable form: they are not set with sharp straight pointed teeth, but resemble the sort of machine used in the South of England for denchering. Two hours before we arrived at Lazgarat we saw, between the road and a small village, two immense tumuli, whereon large trees were growing: similar sepulchres appeared all around Lazgarat; perhaps the monuments of some great battle fought here; either in the expedition of Darius, son of Hystaspes, who, marching against the Scythians, encountered the Getae, (reputed Thracians,) before arriving at the ISTER; or in that of Alexander, when he fell in with the Celts or Gauls; or during the inroads made by the Roman armies.

Lazgarat.

At Lazgarat we began to notice the German or Dacian stoves for heating apartments; and the manners of the people rather denoted the inhabitants of the North than of the South side of the Danube. A considerable migration from Dacia, into Moesia Inferior, took place under the auspices of the Romans in the third century; when that austere soldier, the deservedly illustrious Aurelian, despairing of being able to maintain the conquest of Trajan beyond the ISTER, abandoned DACIA; and retired, not only with the troops, but also with many of the inhabitants; establishing their abode in Moesia, where they were afterwards suffered to remain; insomuch that a part of Moesia became became distinguished as a new province, under the appellation of the DACIA OF AURELIAN. Lazgarat may contain some of the descendants of that colony. It now consists of three thousand houses, of which one-third belongs to Christians of the Greek Church. There are several good shops in the place; but it was evident that the Turkish part of its population was not accustomed to the sight of Franks; because, whenever we were out of sight of the Ambassador, we were pelted with mud or stones. This day we saw many villages, pleasingly situate, through which our road did not conduct us; and everywhere the land was neatly kept and well cultivated: a very unusual sight, considering that the whole of this country is under the dominion of Turkey.

April 14.—We left Lazgarat at six o'clock A. M. and, after a journey of five hours, reached the town or village of Torlach, where we dined. At noon, the mercury in Fahrenheit's thermometer stood at 66°. Torlach is a place of considerable size; and the land around it is highly cultivated. It contains more Turkish than Greek inhabitants. At two hours' distance from Torlach, we came to a large village called Pisanitza, pleasingly situate upon the side of a hill. Here the Ambassador, perceiving that the author could hardly retain his seat upon his horse, owing to a violent paroxysm of fever, which then came on, proposed to halt for the night. We had been seven hours on horseback; and Rustchük, upon the Danube, our place of destination, was five hours farther: we would therefore gladly have rested under under such circumstances; but some of the Embassy were impatient to proceed; and rather than be regarded as the cause of delay, we declined his Excellency's friendly proposal. Scarcely had we quitted Pisanitza, when a heavy rain falling, the water ran in torrents along the road. It continued, without one moment's cessation or diminution, during the rest of the journey; so that every member of our party was wet to the skin. But the most remarkable circumstance attending this shower-bath was its effect upon the author's fever; proving the efficacy of cold bathing, at least in this instance, very satisfactorily: instead of augmenting his malady, he felt himself so much relieved by the copious drenching to which he was exposed, that it gave him strength to proceed, and to keep up with the Tartars, who were foremost in the cavalcade¹.

Torlach.

As we drew nigh to the Danube, what with the rain, and perhaps the general chilliness and humidity of the atmosphere near so vast a river, we seemed almost to breathe water. The first sight of Rustchák, situate upon its southern side, exhibited a novel and striking appearance: it was announced to us by the appearance of a countless number

(1) It has been thought right to mention this trivial circumstance, because a similar mode of treating fevers has been recently practised with some degree of success; and it is well known that the Physicians of Naples use iced water in such cases: but in this instance, the benefit experienced was only temporary; the disorder returned, after intermission, and with greater vehemence.

of white chimneys, together with mosques and minarets, seemingly imbedded in rich garlands of flowers, because rising in the midst of trees that were quite covered with blossoms. Beyond this pleasing prospect we beheld the Danube, which is here two miles wide; but it had not the appearance we expected at this distance from its source: its shores are low and mean, without the slightest feature of sublimity; the channel is filled with a number of little shallows and paltry denuded islets, which, by dividing the current, diminish its grandeur. Those who form their ideas of the majesty of the Danube from the extent of its course, will, perhaps, in no part of its channel, find them realized by viewing the torrent. The author may, perhaps, be considered as in some measure qualified to give a faithful description of the character of this river; having visited the principal parts of it, from its source to its embouchure. It is almost always yellow with mud; and, throughout its whole course, its sands are auriferous: but, in dignity and sublimity of scenery, it can nowhere be compared either with the Rhine, or with those magnificent rivers which fall into the north of the Gulph of Bothnia; or with the Severn, or even with any of the principal pellucid waters of Wales. As we descended towards its banks, we arrived at the entrance of the town of Rustchúk; fortified with ramparts, and a fosse with drawbridges. It contains twenty thousand houses, whereof seven thousand belong to Armenians and Greeks, and the rest to its Turkish inhabitants. A considerable commerce is here carried on with Vienna; in consequence consequence of which the town has an extensive trade in cloth, indigo, corn, and wine. It is well supplied with provisions of every kind; and to us, who had long been strangers to such articles of luxury, the sight of white bread and fresh butter was no unwelcome treat. The Greeks and Armenians live in a part of the town separated from the quarter inhabited by the Turks. We had the greatest difficulty in procuring a lodging. After an hour's search, we were received into the dwelling of a poor Ragusan, who had suffered twelve years' confinement, owing to having his feet frozen in Russia. Nothing could be more wretched than our accommodations: the room allotted to our use was like a dungeon, and so dark that we were forced to burn candles during the day, as well as during the night. The rain fell incessantly during the whole of the fifteenth, and prevented our stirring out. The Janissary, who had accompanied us from Constantinople, told us he should profit by this circumstance to take his Caïf; which he accomplished by sending for a band of those wretched prostitutes who dance with castagnettes, and howl to the beating of a tambourine, for the amusement of the Turks. Viewing, beneath a shed, a party of Bulgarians who were thus employed, this man sat the whole day, smoking, and receiving the visits of the other Janissaries belonging to the Embassy; giving to each man a little cup of coffee upon his arrival. The dance, if it might be called by that name, which so highly delighted these Janissaries, that every now and then we heard them crying out to express their joy, was exactly similar to the performances of the lowest class of Almehs in Egypt: it was nothing more than a series of distortions and indecent gestures, exhibited by a single performer, who, when exhausted, was relieved by another; the whole being adapted to the measure of a song, marked by the castagnettes, and by the beating of a tambourine.

Passage of the Danube.

Upon the sixteenth of April we crossed the Danube. Upon the opposite side of the river, carriages belonging to the Prince of WALACHIA were waiting to convey the Ambassador to Bukarest. There was also one for our use, sent by our friend Mr. Summerer. The town upon the northern or Walachian side of the river, where we landed, is called *Giurdzgio*¹: it enjoys a considerable commerce, and its shops are well supplied with wares. What with the confusion of horses and carriages for so large a party, the breaking of ropes and harness, and the total want of equipage in some instances, it was some time before the Embassy was again progressive. Some of the Turks had never been seated before in any wheeled vehicle; and as the coaches began to move, they thrust their bearded heads through the windows, exhibiting the most pitiable looks imaginable. To us the change was hardly less remarkable; a year and a half having elapsed since we left Russia; during all which time we had been employed travelling, without being once accommodated with any wheeled carriage.

We could not boast, however, of much luxury in the alteration; the whole country upon the northern side of the river, owing to the heavy rains, being in a state of inundation, and the road deep in mud. During two hours, we were dragged over a level plain; but we found the floods, in some parts of it, so high, that the bottom of all the carriages became filled with water. At mid-day we reached the first station north of the Danube, distant two hours and a half, at a place called Tiya; a miserable village, where the post is established: yet here we observed the first indication of the comforts and customs of northern nations, in the appearance of a wooden bedstead; more used, however, as a Turkish diván than as a bed; being covered with a mat, whercon a person sat, cross-legged, smoking tobacco. Tiya has preserved in its name the only vestige of TIASUM; laid down with marvellous precision and accuracy by the learned Cellarius°. From Tiya we proceeded, this day, as far as Kapoka, or Kapuka, another small village, distant five hours and a half from Tiya: before we reached it, we were detained in the rain, owing to the breaking of a bridge, that had been carried away by the torrent half an hour before we arrived. The confusion caused by this accident was such as might be expected among so many persons, speaking a number of different languages, and in the the midst of a crowd of travellers helpless as the Turks. Horsemen, carriages, guards, Janissaries, Tartars, peasants, postillions, baggage-waggons, and baggage-horses, were presently all huddled together, impeding every operation, and adding, by their uproar, to the noise of the waters. The rain at the same time continued to fall in torrents. An escort, sent by the Prince of Walachia to meet the Ambassador, had arrived upon the opposite side; but all their attempts to make themselves heard by the members of the Embassy were vain; yet they continued bawling, although they might as well have called to the cataract. In this manner we remained until towards midnight; when, by means of a rope and a canoe, a passage became practicable to the remaining piers of the bridge upon the opposite side; and we gladly availed ourselves of the opportunity to cross over. The Ambassador, however, would not venture. When we reached the other side, we found the persons whom the Prince had sent, owing to their dread of the Turks, more busily employed than they would else have been, working with the peasants towards the repairs of the bridge. We returned, therefore, to the Ambassador to make known this circumstance, and the prospect there was of his being able to pass. After this, having scarcely any shelter in the carriage, which was wet throughout, and the author's fever increasing to such a degree that he was almost delirious, a covering was found in one of the cottages; but the baggage being all on the other side of the river, and the rain still continuing, so that it could not be opened, there was no other alternative than to remain reeking reeking upon the bare floor until the morning. The good Ambassador, whose own situation was scarcely preferable, sitting in his coach during the night, almost in the midst of a deluge, was nevertheless not unmindful of our situation; sending provisions, and messengers to inquire after our safety. This village, Kapoka, is perhaps the ΝΑΡΟΚΑ of the Tabula Pentingeriana, cited by *Cellarius*¹, and the same with the Νάποκκα of Ptolemy.

Kapoka, or Napouka.

April 17.—This morning, by means of boats brought from other parts of the river, and a temporary bridge, the whole of the Embassy, together with the baggage, was conducted over, and we were again enabled to continue our route. The whole country from the Danube, as far as Bukorest, appeared to us to be little better than one of the stéppes of Russia, and more likely to remain a desert; because the stéppes, although uncultivated, are very capable of culture; but the Walachian plains exhibit a more incorrigible soil. Some accounts, however, represent the country as very capable of producing grain; and it has been stated that the Turks call it Cara bogdana, or The Land of Black Corn. It is abandoned to woods or to pasture; but in many parts so destitute of fuel, that the inhabitants, as a substitute, use cow-dung, or any kind of dried weeds. The whole of Walachia may be described as an inclined plane, sloping towards the Danube, and traversed by very numerous numerous rivers, flowing almost in parallel courses, so as to meet that river nearly at right angles. In the sands of these rivers the Gipsies collect gold-dust, which they put into quills, and thus bring it to the towns for sale. Owing to the general flatness of the country, perhaps the roads may be excellent in any other season of the year than that in which we travelled; because the stéppes of Russia, which it so much resembles, particularly favourable for expeditious travelling, become nearly impassable when the rainy season sets in. That Walachia was once more productive, may be inferred from the following circumstance. Trajan having sent hither a colony of thirty thousand men to cultivate the land, the Romans were enabled to obtain supplies from it, for the use of their army, during the war with the Scythians and Sarmatians. It is true that both Walachia and Moldavia were then comprised within the limits of a single division of Dacia. There are some salt mines, as there were formerly¹; whence the Hospodar of Walachia derives a principal part of his revenue; which is reckoned below par if it do not amount annually to twelve millions of *piastres*². Yet a more wretched state of slavery can hardly be imagined than the condition of a Hospodar of Walachia. Not only is this Prince obliged to degrade himself by the most abject submission towards the Grand Signior,

Signior, who for the slightest misconception, or offence taken, deprives him at once of power, property, and life; but he is moreover compelled to cringe to all the creatures about the court, and especially to the Greek Princes, whose avarice he is forced to gratify by continual presents. He is never without numerous enemies watching to effect his downfall. Eagerly and dearly as this honour is nevertheless purchased, it is rarely possessed more than two or three years; for, whenever the Porte has need of money, the Hospodar of Walachia is cashiered and dismissed, as a matter of course, and the principality again sold to the highest bidder: yet, as the persons appointed to this situation have seldom any scruples in their mode of gaining money, they do amass enormous wealth. The Hospodar, whom we found as the reigning Prince, had been displaced three times; yet was always rich enough to recover his situation. It was expected at this time that his fourth dethronement would soon happen; and Prince Mârûzi, who travelled with us, was the person considered as likely to become his successor. The event depended only upon the strength of their respective purses, and the superior address of either party in managing the arts of bribery. In the view, therefore, of such a system of knavery and corruption, it may be easily imagined what attractions the Capital of Walachia possesses for Greeks and Jews. The peasants, as it may be supposed, are stripped of every thing they ought to possess; and the whole population is reduced to the lowest state of vassalage. Yet, in the midst of their wretchedness, living in huts built of mud, mud, and thatched with reeds, without one comfort of life, the Walachians' always appeared to us to be cheerful. The postillions who drove us were remarkable for their gaiety; aiming at speed even in the deepest mud, and galloping their horses at a furious rate, with shouts and songs, whenever it was possible to do so. Nothing appeared to us more remarkable than the language. It is not enough to say of it, that it is nearly allied to the Latin; it is in many respects purely so; the difference between our way of speaking Latin, and theirs, consisting only in the pronunciation. All the principal names of things that a traveller requires, particularly of provisions, are Latin words*. To what can this be attributed but to those colonies which the Romans sent into this country? For although the colony sent by Trajan was afterwards withdrawn, in great measure, by Aurelian, to the southern side of the Danube; yet the introduction of thirty thousand persons into a district which did not exceed eighty leagues from east to west, and forty from north to south, and their residence for so considerable a period upon a spot where there were hardly any other inhabitants

(1) The original name of this people is derived from Vlach; which, in the Illyrian language, signifies a herdsman; hence, Wlachi, and Walachia, "VLACH bedeutet im Dalmatisch—Slavischen einen Hirten; daraus bildeten die Griechen ihr Wlachi, und andere Sprachen ihre Walachen." Mithridates, p. 723. Berlin, 1809.

(2) According to Thunmann, as cited by Adelung, half the Walachian language consists of Latin words; the other half is made up of words derived from the Greek, Gothic, or Turkish, and Slavonian languages.

"Thunmann fand, dass die Hälfte der Thracisch-Walachischen Wörter Lateinisch, die andere Hälfte aber theils Griechisch, theils Gothisch oder Türkisch, besonders aber Slavisch ist." Mithridates, p. 724. Berlin, 1809.

inhabitants at the time, must account for the existence of their language as the predominating tongue. And what renders this the more probable is, that the present native inhabitants call themselves (Ρώμιν) Romans; pronouncing the word, like the Greeks, with the *Omega*³.

In their customs they retain many of the Roman superstitions. Their religion is said to be that of the Greek Church: and if a number of the most ridiculous forms and absurd ceremonies may bear the name of religion, it is perhaps nearer to the Greek than to any other. But in the meat-offerings made for the dead, we observed customs that were strictly Roman, although not peculiar to the Roman people; such as the placing a dish of boiled wheat upon the body of a dead person. This we saw afterwards in Bûkorest. The Romans used bread for the same purpose⁴: and in the Book of TOBIT we read, "POUR OUT THY BREAD UPON THE BURIAL OF THE JUST⁵." The great antiquity and universality of funeral feasts, has rendered an allusion to them frèquent among all antient writers; and whatever may be the age of the writings called Apocryphal, the references, therein made to this curious practice, constitute a species

Religion.

(3) This opinion has been also adopted by Adelung; and it is surely the most obvious method of explaining the fact. "Sie nennen sich selbst Rumanje oder Rumukje, d. i. Römer, weil sie zum Theil von denjenigen Römischen Colonien abstammen, welche die Kaiser von Zeit zu Zeit hierher verpflanzten, und welche nebst allen freyen Unterthanen des Reichs durch das Gesetz des Kaisers Caracalla 212 das Römische Bürgerrecht hatten, daher sie gewisser Massen ein Recht, auf diesen Nahmen haben." Mithridates, p. 723. Berlin, 1809.

species of internal evidence of their authenticity. In the Book of ECCLESIASTICUS, it is said, that "DELICATES POUED UPON A MOUTH SHUT UP, ARE AS MESSES OF MEAT SET UPON A GRAVE!": alluding to the custom mentioned in the Prophecy of JEREMIAH, when foretelling the calamities that shall befall the Jews, it is said, that "THEY SHALL NOT BE BURIED . . . NEITHER SHALL MEN GIVE THEM THE CUP OF CONSOLATION TO DRINK FOR THEIR FATHER OR FOR THEIR MOTHER¹." Sometimes allusion has been made to these funeral feasts in antient inscriptions, recording legacies made for their maintenance; as in that remarkable fragment from Ravenna, cited by Faes, in his Commentary upon *Gyraldus*²; to which the Reader is referred for a copious body of information concerning the EPULÆ FERALEs.

Bükorest.

As we drew near to Bükorest, we had a view of the high snowy mountains of TRANSYLVANIA, forming a barrier behind it. The postillions belonging to all the carriages drove at a furious rate, in spite of the deep impression made in the soil by the wheels. The Ambassador's carriage was foremost in our procession. As it approached the town, we saw a complete camp, formed on the outside of Bükorest, with an immense body of horsemen drawn up before the tents tents, like an army of cavalry, with silk banners, and other military ensigns, waited to receive the Grand Signior's representative. Suddenly, a signal being given, they came down upon us in a regular charge, at full speed, making a sham attack upon his Excellency's carriage; and then, with great management and skill, wheeled off to the right and left, exhibiting a grand and crowded tournament of the Djerid; discharging, at the same time, their pistols and tophaikes in all directions. The effect of this manœuvre was to include our whole suite, as if it were drawn into a vortex; and away we went, carriages and cavaliers, all floundering through the deep mud, as fast as our poor horses could speed: many of them falling, were left in the rear; the rest, in full gallop, seemed to be running races with each other. Presently, our tumultuous host was met by the Hospodar himself, and his attendants, coming out of the town; when there was a general halt. The Prince, a venerable old man, came towards us on horseback, most sumptuously arrayed, both as to his horse and himself; attended by his two sons, upon prancing chargers, as richly caparisoned. Their housings shone with every costly ornament; their horses being covered with cloths of gold, richly embroidered. After the usual forms of salutation, the Ambassador and Prince Mürûzi were taken from their carriages, and placed within two coaches of state. The throng was now immense; and the whole way this enormous procession moved, it passed through thick files of spectators, ranged on either side, among whom were bands of music playing. The Prince of Walachia's musicians, on horseback, preceded, as we entered Bukorest. In passing through the streets, our carriages were subjected to a continual and extraordinary concussion; being dragged over the trunks of trees and other large logs of timber, placed transversely instead of pavement, as in the road from Petersburg to Moscow; forming a kind of raft floating upon liquid mud, which, as the timber sank with the weight upon it, sprang up through the interstices. All these pieces of wood were loose; and being thus put into motion, the whole seemed like a broken floating bridge, between the disjointed parts of which there was apparently danger of being buried. As soon as an opportunity was offered of getting clear of the procession, we quitted it, and were taken to the dwelling of Mr. Summerer, acting as English Consul; perhaps one of the best houses in all Bukorest; where our young host received us, as he did many other of our countrymen, with disinterested kindness and hospitality; and he continued to shew to us unremitting attention during our stay. We remained with him until the twenty-sixth: indeed hospitality could hardly be more seasonable; the author being nearly the whole of the week confined to his bed: and, as if the nature of the fever he had caught, like a murrain, attacked both men and quadrupeds, his fine Argive wolf-dog (from Epidauria), who sickened at the same time, and apparently in the same manner, here expired by his side.

the Hospodar.

Upon the nineteenth, the Hospodar sent his pages, saying that he was prepared to give us an audience, and expected to see us; upon which message Mr. Cripps'¹, accompanied by Mr. Summerer, went to the palace. Afterwards he visited all the principal Boyars, or nobles of the country, resident in the city. Our society here, besides our host, consisted of Mr. Chirico, brother of Mr. Summerer, Consul for Russia; Mr. Marcellius, the Austrian Consul; General Barotzi, from Hermanstadt; and their families: from all of whom it might be supposed that our information concerning this country and its capital, would be satisfactory. Yet we found it very difficult to gain any decisive intelligence respecting the statistics of Walachia; so various and contradictory were the statements. There are two points alone wherein all agreed; namely, that of two classes of inhabitants, the one rich and the other poor, (without any middle class); the former were entirely occupied in defrauding each other; and the latter, without any occupation whatsoever excepting that of living "from hand to mouth," were almost in a state of starvation. Whence then, it will be asked, originates the wealth of Walachia? If you inquire in what its wealth consists, the inhabitants will answer, "Wine, barley, hay, honey, butter, hides," &c., as glibly as if all these possessions were everywhere to be found. Yet some of the articles thus enumerated are insufficient for the consumption of the inhabitants. The quantity of wine made in the year preceding our arrival, was estimated at eleven millions of piastres; but they had been obliged to import, over and above this quantity,

to

(1) For much that follows respecting the trade, &c. of Bukorest, the author is indebted to Mr. Cripps's MS. Journal.

quantity, from other countries, for the consumption of their own, as much as amounted in price to six or eight millions more : and a similar observation applies to some of their other productions. The account given of the produce of Walachia is, moreover, always exaggerated ; for such are the blighting effects of the most selfish despotism, that cultivation is throughout neglected : if the peasant, by any contrivance, can barely obtain the means of subsistence, he seeks for nothing beyond it. The whole population of Bukorest does not exceed eighty thousand individuals ; but the number of carriages kept amounts to four thousand. The fact is, that the streets are often almost impassable in any other way than upon wheels ; and even in this manner it is not always easy to go through them. The Prince sent his own carriage to conduct Mr. Cripps and Mr. Summerer to his audience ; but in the way thither, the drivers were unable to proceed ; and these gentlemen were under the necessity of making application to the principal Boyar for persons to assist in conducting the carriage to the Palace. The account given by the Merchants of Bukorest of their commerce, makes it, however, very considerable ; the whole of the trade is in the hands of Greeks. The exports, according to their statement of them, consist of wool, butter, wheat, barley, honey, yellow berries', tallow, wax, and timber ; all these articles are sent, sent, by way of Varná, to Constantinople, accompanied by a firmán, upon Government account, for the Porte. Other exports are, a species of Walachian wine, to Russia, called Fokchany; also salt, and salted provisions; and they receive from Russia, in exchange, furs, linen, rhubarb, tea, leather, &c. They also send to Germany about thirty thousand hogs, and an immense quantity of horned cattle, horses, and other animals; hare-skins, hides, honey, wax, and tanned leather; receiving from that country almost every thing they have, from the cheapest necessaries up to the most expensive luxuries.

On the twenty-first, we visited the Archbishop, at the Metropolitane Convent. This Monastery contains fifty monks, of whom twelve are the superiors. His Grace received us with great civility, and shewed us the church, in which, there is nothing remarkable excepting the body of St. Demetrius, exhibited as a relique. Like most other ecclesiastical reliques, it has its duplicates. The priests of Moscow also exhibit a body of St. Demetrius, in one of the churches of the Kremlin°. In this Monastery, there is a good Library, and also a printing-press for printing religious books in the Walachian language. They pretend also to have a collection of manuscripts; and we spared no pains to have this matter ascertained. The Archbishop, who is called the Metropolitan, in answer to our inquiries concerning the manuscripts, told us, that the affairs of the Library were so badly

badly conducted that the books were all in disorder; and no one knew where to find anything: that this mischief was mainly to be attributed to the Prince himself, who set the example; and to the other Boyars, who, as often as they borrow books and manuscripts from the Library, neglect to return them. We saw some Latin manuscripts of the Poets, but of no value; none of them being older than the latter end of the fifteenth century. But it is not to be inferred, from our want of observation, that there are not very curious manuscripts belonging to this Library; either in the houses of the Boyars, or that the Greek Princes have conveyed to Constantinople, or at the Palace of the Hospodar, or in the midst of the confusion of the Library itself. There is a public school, where the antient, or, as it is always styled, the literal Greek, is taught; and another, called Domnà Balescha, for the instruction of youth in Latin, French, Italian, German, and Walachian. Almost the only edifice, considered as an antiquity in Bâkorest, is a church, built under the auspices of Charles the Twelfth. The walls of the peribolus are nearly a quarter of a mile square. At present, this building is used entirely as a kind of Magdalen hospital for prostitutes; and the church is appropriated to their use. Perhaps there is no city of equal size in the world, where there are so many whores as in Bâkorest. Of all other towns it most resembles Moscow. The Ceremony of the Resurrection, exhibited with so much splendour in the Russian capital, took place here, on the morning of the twenty-fifth, in the Palace of the Hospodar. Upon this occasion, the Metropolitan presents flowers to the ladies of his family, as the signal signal for beginning those presents which it is then usual to make so universally; a custom already described in the account of Russia. Mr. Cripps, who attended, received, from the hands of the Princess, the bouquet given to her by the Archbishop. The khans, for the reception of its merchandize, are extremely large and good; the shops, too, are of such considerable size, and so well supplied, that it is probable a greater variety of commodities would be found upon sale here than in Constantinople. The inhabitants have no public amusements; and the dulness of their winter season is proverbial. The three Consuls of England, Germany, and Russia, transact the affairs not only of their respective nations, but also of other countries. The establishment of an agent for England was quite recent; it took place with a view to facilitate the communications between England and the Porte: but being attended with great expense, and with very little utility, it was thought that it would not long continue; perhaps, before this time, it has been abolished. During winter, the season is sufficiently rigorous to admit of trainage, or the use of sledges, for all sorts of conveyance. The Gipsies, who are here very numerous, are distinguished into several classes: the first, as slaves, are employed for service in the principal houses; the others work as gold-finders and washers; or as itinerant smiths; or stroll about as musicians: some of the Gipsies are dealers in cattle. It is singular enough, that in whatever country we have found this people, their character for thieving is always the same; rarely committing flagrant acts of rapine and plunder, but being everywhere notorious for a knavish and pilfering disposition; disposition; insomuch that the very persons, who complain of their depredations, are generally disposed to do so jocularly; rather considering them as knaves than villains. But the Walachian Gipsies are not an idle race; they ought rather to be described as a laborious people; and the greater part of them honestly endeavour to earn a livelihood. It is this part of them who work as gold-washers. They have great skill in finding, where their labour is likely to be attended with success. Their implements consist of a board, two or three feet wide, and four or five feet long, with grooves cut transversely; and it is edged on both sides with a wooden rim: woollen cloths are sometimes spread upon this board, which being held as an inclined plane, the sands of the rivers are poured, mixed with water, upon it: the weightier sediment falls into the grooves, or it is retained by the cloth, which is afterwards washed in a water-cask; and then, by a common severing-trough, the sand is separated from the gold. But they are often skilful enough to collect auriferous pebbles, stamping them, and washing the powder. The surface of the plains consists of sand and pebbles, containing gold. Generally they sell the gold, thus found, in the form of dust: but some of them, who have been accustomed to work as blacksmiths, have ingenuity enough to smelt the gold into small ingots; using, for that purpose, little low furnaces, and blowing the fire by portable bellows, made of buckskin. The construction of these bellows is as simple as it is antient: they are made by fixing an iron air-pipe into the skin of the neck of the animal, and by fastening two wooden handles to that part of it that covered the feet. Baron Born, describing the iron-works of the Walachian Gipsies, cites a mineralogical writer, of the name of *Fridwalsky*¹; who, in proving their antiquity, tells of an inscription found near Ostrow, relating to a COLLEGIUM FABRORUM; adding, that probably “the denomination of the PORTA FERREA, given to a pass on the Turkish frontier, is hence derived.”

ON Monday, April 26, we left Bükorest, accompanied, during the first stage of our journey, by our friend Mr. Summerer. The Turkish Ambassador had already preceded; but as we no longer travelled on horseback, having purchased a small open carriage, there was little doubt of our being able to overtake him. The inhabitants of Bükorest are not allowed the privilege of remaining out of the city during the night, without an express permission from the Hospodar: owing to this circumstance, and the badness of the roads, we parted from our worthy friend at Bälentin, distant only four hours from Bükorest. The trees were not yet in leaf; and the country exhibited a complete desert, flat and uncultivated. At Maronches, or Marunice, three hours farther, at noon, we observed the thermometer 68°. of Fahrenheit. We then passed through Gayest, a village distant three hours; and Kirchinhof, three hours more; round which village the country was better cultivated: and as it was the Easter week, the amusements which are common during the same season in Russia were here in full force. We saw villagers in their best attire, diverting themselves with swings and turning machines. The Walachians have a curious custom in the treatment of their horses upon a journey, which we have not elsewhere observed: whenever they halt, be it but for a moment's rest, they begin to rub the eyes of these animals, and to pull their ears. We could discover neither the cause nor the use of this practice; but the horses, being accustomed to it, would perhaps be uneasy if it were omitted; and it was evident, from the care and constancy with which it was done, that it was considered as refreshing and salutary. At the distance of four hours from Kirchinhof, we came to Pitesti, having travelled the whole day over plains. Just before our arrival at Pitesti, we crossed the river Dumbovitza, by means of a barge. The Hospodar had granted us an order for forty-three horses, and had also, unknown to us, directed that the chiefs of all the villages should be responsible for our being well supplied with lodgings and provisions. It was therefore owing to this circumstance that, upon our arrival at Pitesti, five or six of the principal inhabitants came to visit us. We were surprised at the circumstance; and still more so when they begged to know our wishes, saying, that they had received orders from the Prince to supply us with everything we might require. Pitesti contains a hundred houses; and, judging from their external appearance, the inhabitants are wealthy. The land around is well cultivated, and the wine of this place is excellent.

Our journey on the following day, (April 27,) furnished us with remarkable proofs of the attention shewn to the passage of Turks of distinguished rank in the countries through which they travel. Fortunately for the poor inhabitants, their journeys are very rare. The preparations made to facilitate the expedition of the Turkish Ambassador must have cost an amazing sum of money. The roads were now very bad, and they had been worse at the time of his passing.

passing. In consequence of the state of the main road, the inhabitants had actually constructed not only a new-raised causeway by the side of it, but also a prodigious number of temporary bridges, some of them of great length, over the worst parts of the route. We travelled through a flat country three hours to Múnichest, often profiting by these preparations. Three hours beyond Múnichest, we came to Corté D'Argish, where the view of the village with its church, and of mountains covered with forests, and of more distant summits capped with snow, reminded us of the Tirol. Corté D'Argish, at a distance, resembled Inspruck. We saw here the remains of a Roman temple that had been constructed with terra-cotta tiles. The houses, small but extremely clean, were built entirely of wood. From this place we took with us four men, besides the postillions, to assist during the route; as we had a journey of five hours to perform to the next station, Salatroick, through the mountains: the pass begins after leaving Corté D'Argish. High snowy summits were now in view, belonging to the great Carpathian barrier, which separates WALACHIA from TRANSYLVANIA. We soon found, that, had it not been for the preparations made to facilitate the progress of the Ambassador, this route would have been impracticable until a more advanced season of the year. Leaving Corté D'Argish, we crossed a river, and began to ascend the mountains, among which Salatroick is situate; a very small and poor village; but the houses are as clean as the cottages of Switzerland. Upon our arrival, we learned that the Turkish Ambassador had slept in this village only the night before; and that he had left the place for Boitza the same morning. As we did not find good horses here, we prevailed upon the postillions who came with us to continue the journey as far as Kinnin, distant thirteen hours beyond Salatroick. We left Salatroick at half after four A. M. From this place to Kinnin, the road may truly be considered as an Alpine Pass; except that the mountains are covered, even to their summits, with trees: and the views, although in some instances grand and striking, are not to be compared with those in the Alps. The more distant mountains appeared loftier, being covered with snow. After travelling eight hours and a half, we came to Perichan: the roads were in such a state that it was with difficulty we could proceed. We found a bridge broken in our route, which it took us an hour and a half to repair; and, after all, we passed at the risk of breaking the legs of our horses. At a more favourable season, the distance between Salatroick and Kinnin is reckoned as only equal to six hours. From Perichan to Kinnin the distance is five hours, through a rugged mountainous defile. The forests and the views, in this part of the passage, are very grand. We crossed over a rapid river, to Kinnin, the last place in the dominions of the Prince of WALACHIA. Soon after leaving Kinnin, a peasant, stationed as a sentinel, at a hut by the way-side, marks the limit of the principality: a small torrent, flowing through a chasm between the mountains, and thence falling into the Aluta, is the precise boundary between this part of WALACHIA and TRANSYLVANIA. The welcome sight of the arms of the Emperor of Germany,

Germany, painted on a board, and placed upon the side of a mountain above this torrent, announced the agreeable intelligence to us, that, by passing a little bridge which appeared before us, we should now quit the Ottoman Empire. Upon the Transylvanian side of the same torrent, another peasant, standing before another hut, is also stationed as a sentinel. After crossing this torrent, we began to climb a steep and difficult ascent, by a most dangerous road; consisting, in parts of it, of a mere shelf of planks, really hanging over a stupendous precipice, beneath which rolled the rapid waters of the Alûta. This river is accurately described by Ptolemy, as dividing DACIA towards the north, and flowing *impetuously*¹: it has, moreover, preserved its antient name unaltered; notwithstanding the positive assertions both of Cluverius and Cellarius, that it is now called Alt, or Olt, by the inhabitants². The scenery here is of the most striking description: the bold perpendicular rocks; the hanging forests; the appearance of the river, flowing in a deep chasm below the road; and the dangerous nature of the pass itself; all these contribute to heighten its sublimity. The masses of rock above us were covered with a beautiful white saxifrage, in full bloom, displaying the richest clusters of flowers. It is certainly one of the most remarkable Passes in Europe, if not in the whole world; and might be rendered impregnable, simply by throwing down the shelves, or artificial wooden roads, which, in many parts of it, offer the only means of access. If these aërial bridges had not been repaired for the Ambassador, it would have been out of our power to have proceeded through several parts of the route; yet this singular defile, and all the Alpine region connected with it, is scarcely noticed in any of the maps yet published of the country. It should be laid down as the Pass of Rothenthurn, or of the Red Tower; for it has been so denominated, in consequence of the ruins of a very massive old red tower, and of a wall extending over part of the mountain which is above the Pass, two hours beyond the Lazaret. In this part of our route, we met some of the Ambassador's carriages returning to Bükorest. A conspicuous change was already manifested in the manners of the inhabitants, by the appearance of women employed as men in agricultural labour; a custom common in all parts of Germany. As our baggage underwent an examination at the Lazaret, two hours from Kinmin, we halted for the night, and slept in the Director's house. The host and his family were Germans; and we were struck by the general appearance of cleanliness, not only in this house, but everywhere along the route where there were any German inhabitants. Yet, to shew how different our ideas are of the same people, under different circumstances, the author confesses he once considered the Germans in a far different light. An Englishman, who is suddenly removed from the cleanly habits of his own country into the interior of Germany, infallibly complains of the boorish manners, and the dirt of the inhabitants; but, after long travelling in Turkey, the contrast offered upon entering Transylvania, where little white-washed cottages, and wholesome apartments, are opposed to the wretchedness and the filth everywhere conspicuous among the Moslems, makes a very different impression upon his mind; and the same people, who seemed dirty in comparison with the English, are cleanly when compared with the Turks.

April 29.—We continued along the mountainous pass that we have before described, and above the river. At two hours' distance from the Lazaret, we came to Rothenthörn, or the ruins of the red tower before mentioned, and to Boitza; where our baggage was submitted to a second scrutiny¹. The officer of the Customs had some of the Boitza minerals upon sale; but he asked considerable prices for them. We were rather surprised by observing a fine specimen of the hydrous green carbonate of copper (malachite), for which he asked four ducats. He had also a few

Minerals.

(1) A trifling circumstance occurred here, that gave us very great cause of regret. Mr. Wahlenturg, principal Dragoman of the Imperial mission to the Porte, had confided to our care a shale, as a present that he wished to send to his sister in Vienna; but never having mentioned to us any thing as to its contraband nature, it remained as a separate parcel in the carriage, and was seized, simply because it was sealed and directed to a person in Vienna. If it had been mixed with the articles of our own apparel, no notice would have been taken of it. The officer was faithful to his trust; for nothing that we could offer him would induce him to resign it.

few of the ores of gold, from the Boitza mines; and particularly that extraordinary and rare association of the native gold, with crystallized sulphuret of antimony; hitherto peculiar to the mines in the neighbourhood of this place. The mountains of Boitza are connected with a chain that stretches on both sides of the river Maros, the MARISUS of Strabo. The whole way from this place, as far as Deva, they consist of Syenite porphyry, (the saxum metalliferum of *Born*¹), covered with limestone, slate, or sand. The principal mine of Boitza has been worked in a variety of the Syenite porphyry, differing from the common variety, in having large pieces of feldspar scattered through its substance. The uppermost gallery, when Baron Born visited these mines², was excavated in limestone, which is superincumbent on the porphyry, and covers large valleys; but the deeper gallery ran in sandstone, until it reached the argillaceous rocks. The veins and fissures consist of the sulphurets of zinc (blende) and lead (galena), containing both gold and silver. Some specimens exhibit the native gold, adhering, at the same time, to the zinc and to the lead. A hundred weight of the ore of Boitza, after stamping, yields

(1) Kirwan calls the metalliferous stone of Born, "Clay Porphyry;" and describes it as indurated clay, containing hornblende, feldspar, mica, and quartz. Its colour, he says, is generally some shade of green, mostly dark, even inclining to black.

(2) See "Travels through the Bannat of Temeswar, Transylvania, and Hungary," described in a Series of Letters to Professor Ferber, and published by R. E. Raspe, *Letter 13. p. 127. yields eight pounds of metallic powder, containing from two to six German ounces of silver; and, as all the silver of Transylvania and Hungary contains gold, that of Boitza averages two ounces of gold to every pound weight of silver. A list of all the auriferous minerals, exhibited for sale at Boitza, is subjoined in a note³.

After leaving Boitza, the country again became open; and we descended from the mountains into the fertile territories of Transylvania. Here every thing wore a new aspect;—immense plains of waving corn; jolly, smiling peasants; stout cattle; numerous villages; nothing, in short, that seemed like the country we had quitted. At four hours' distance from Rothenthûrn, we arrived at HERMANSTADT, formerly called *Cibinium*⁴: it had also the name of Hermanopolis; whence Hermanstadt, from a Greek Emperor of the name of Hermannus, supposed to have been its founder⁵. It is the capital of the province, a large and opulent opulent town, full of inhabitants, situate in a campaign country. HERMANSTADT contains fifteen thousand inhabitants. A theatre is opened only during the summer. There are three monasteries in the town for men, and one convent for women. The monasteries are, one for Ex-Jesuits, one for Catholics of the Franciscan order, and one for Greek monks of the order of St. Basil. There are, besides, two public schools; one for Protestants, and one for Greeks. In the square there is a statue, the name of which we did not learn. The sight of handsome female faces at the windows was so new to us, that we seemed to be suddenly transported into another world. The Turkish Ambassador, with his suite, had entirely filled the principal inn: we drove to a second, where we were well treated; and should have been willing to think so, even had the case been otherwise.

Having brought with us a letter of recommendation from the Lady of Baron Herbert, the German Internuncio at Constantinople, to Baron Bruckenthal, a venerable nobleman, who had been the reputed favourite of Maria Theresa, we presented it soon after our arrival; and were invited to spend the whole of the following day at his house, and to see his immense collection of pictures, antiquities, and natural history. We then waited upon the Governor; and, after having paid our respects, made our visit to the Turkish Ambassador, to inquire if we could render him any service. We found all the Turks collected into one room, busily inspecting a large dish, containing several pounds of fresh butter. It happened that this butter, being of a most excellent quality, was of a bright yellow colour. This they had never seen before: it could not therefore, they argued, be good butter, and might be poisonous. Yet butter was wanted to prepare their pilau, and they had nothing to use as a substitute. In this dilemma, the Ambassador immediately asked us if we had any objection to taste the butter; being convinced that none of his party would touch it if we refused. We soon removed their fears; but we could not convince them, either here, or in the journey afterwards, that a yellow colour in butter was no proof of its inferiority. "The butter of Stamboul," they said, "was white, and therefore purer¹."

April 30.—We went early to visit Baron Bruckenthal, after settling some dispute at the Custom-house, and were employed the whole morning in the examination of his collection of Pictures; perhaps the largest in the possession of any private individual in Europe. It contains many works by all the best masters; and they are indisputably originals. A part of his collection related to England. We saw A View of London by *old Griffier*², representing a fair by the side of the Thames; all the persons present being painted as wearing horns. This picture would be considered very valuable in England; because

(2) John Griffier was born at Amsterdam in 1645. He went to England, and settled in London. His son Robert, also a painter, was born in England in 1688. Robert was living in 1713.

because it affords a view of London, detailed with the utmost minuteness, as it existed towards the termination of the seventeenth century, when there were many windmills in the midst of the city, and fields now covered with squares and streets. There was also a View of Windsor, by the same master; and beautiful portraits of Charles the First and his Queen Henrietta, by Vandyke, in his best manner; together with other fine pictures, also by Vandyke. We noticed a most valuable picture by Albert Durer, a portrait of himself; besides paintings of the Italian masters. This collection was rich in the works of painters unknown to us; as a Holy Family by Liebens, and others by Von Quas and Alpinas and Bourbas. There was also a picture by Bocchorst, with a date 1641; a large Scripture-piece, taken from the history of Jacob, by Cornelius Zuftesin; the Angel and Shepherds, by Osenbeck; a beautiful Moonlight Scene, by Elsheimer; a Pilate washing his hands, by Rembrandt; with a fine picture by Cornelius Janssen, and another by Van Balen, the first master of Vandyke. Those of the different schools of Italy were principally pictures by Titian, Tintoret, Guido, Corregio, Andrea del Sarto, the Caracci, and Alessandro Allori, otherwise called Bronzino; but there were many by other distinguished masters. To enumerate them would be inconsistent with the design of this work: nor should we have mentioned these, but from the remoteness of their situation, with regard to all the other repositories of the fine arts in Europe. After examining the collection of pictures, we went to the dinner-table, where we had an opportunity opportunity of witnessing the old German ceremonies and manners; the Governor being present, and much company. The wines were served in porcelain coffee-cups, and the dishes brought round to the company, one by one. The venerable Baron gave us his oldest Tokay, and other wines of Hungary and Transylvania; bidding us drink "health to the Saxons," saying that he was himself a Saxon; alluding to their colony in Transylvania. The dresses of the gentlemen were rather singular: they appeared in short-cut coats, or jackets, with bag-wigs and swords. The ladies too, affecting all the air and hauteur of a high German court, yet held their forks perpendicularly, grasping the handles as if they were holding walking canes, in a manner that would be thought singularly uncouth and barbarous in our country: but it is curious enough that whole nations are characterized by a peculiarity in the usage of the fork at table. D'Archenholtz, in his "Tableau D'Angleterre," says, that "an Englishman may be known anywhere, if he be observed at table; because he places his fork upon the left side of his plate." To this we might add, that a Frenchman may also be recognised at table, in using the fork alone, without the knife; a German, by planting it perpendicularly into his plate; and a Russian, by using it as a tooth-pick. After dinner we repaired to the Baron's Library: this we found to be full of useful, rather than of rare books. It contained only one manuscript, a Missal; but it was such a one as in England would be estimated beyond all calculable price; for it contained, on every leaf, a painting by Albert Durer, as an illumination; the colours being as fresh as they were when when first laid on. This Missal had been purchased of Albert Durer, for the use of a Convent of Nuns. We next visited the Collection of Minerals, consisting principally of gold ores: we shall therefore only mention five remarkable appearances of this metal; because they peculiarly characterize the Transylvanian ores of gold. Of all these, the Baron possessed the most magnificent specimens.

1. Laminary native gold, in large leaves, upon ferruginous quartz.
2. Laminary native gold, on crystallized sulphuret of antimony.
3. Native gold, crystallized in octahedrons, and in tetrahedral prisms; from Boitza, and from Abrudbanya in Transylvania.
4. Gold, mineralized by tellurium, from Nagyag in Transylvania; both crystallized, and in laminary forms.
5. Gold as exhibited in globules upon the tellurium, by the disengagement of the *sulphur*¹.

Vases.

We were then shewn a collection of Greek Vases, called here, as in many other places, Etruscan: also a numerous series of antique Gems, both Intaglios and Caméos. Lastly we inspected, with as much attention as our time would admit, the collection of Medals belonging to the Baron, which would require a week's examination. We could only attend to a small part of it. Among the Greek medals we observed a gold medallion of Lysimachus, as large as an English crown piece; the only one, we believe, which is known of that magnitude: and among the Roman series, a remarkably rare, and perhaps unique, bronze medal of Pescennius Niger.

(1) According to Professor Berselius of SWEDEN, gold exists in the ores of tellurium only as a sulphuret. By the application of heat, the sulphur is therefore evaporated, and the gold becomes, consequently, developed. This opinion was communicated to the author by the Professor himself, during his late visit to Cambridge. The new doctrine, however, of the atomic theory, in chemistry, will throw further light upon the subject of the tellurets of gold.

In the afternoon, the Baron's Secretary accompanied us to the house of a dealer in minerals, where we found some of the rarest of the Transylvanian ores; but, discovering that we were Englishmen, we had no sooner agreed to any of his prices, than he increased his demands; and to such a degree, that we found "even gold might be bought too dear:" we were therefore constrained to leave the most valuable specimens unpurchased.

We left HERMANSTADT, May 1.—Owing to a particular request made by the Turkish Ambassador, we accompanied him out of the town. Going first to the inn where he was, we were surprised to find him without any of his attendants, sitting alone in his carriage, and resolved to start without them, as none of his party were ready. After leaving Hermanstadt, we passed through the river CIBIN, whence the town had its name of CIBINIUM²; there being no bridge. Having reached the western side, the Ambassador

Ambassador halted until his suite came over. In the first part of our journey, the roads were very bad, and almost impassable. The village of Magh is reckoned only one German mile' distant from Hermanstadt; but we were half the day in reaching it. After ascending a hill, we saw the village below us; and when we arrived, the Turks were desirous to dine before we left the place. We had great difficulty in procuring horses for so large a party; which made us resolve to quit the Embassy, and to represent to the Ambassador that it would not only be inconvenient, but perhaps impossible, for so many carriages to travel post at the same time. One German mile beyond Magh, we came to Reismark. The costume of the women along this route is very remarkable; because it resembles that of the Arabs, particularly in the attire of the head: but among all the inhabitants of Transylvania, there has never been any people connected with the Arabs, or with their ramifications. According to Pliny, the original inhabitants were Getæ, afterwards called Daci by the Romans. The people were governed by their own kings, until Trajan reduced the country to a Roman province. Afterwards, they were successively subdued by the Sarmatae, the Gothi, and the Hunni; and, lastly, the Saxons, driven by the conquests of Charlemagne, established themselves in DACIA, since subdivided subdivided into the various partitions of Hungary, Transylvania, Walachia, and Moldavia. The Saxons principally concentrated themselves in Transylvania, or MEDITERRANEAN DACIA, a fertile region, surrounded with forests and metaliferous mountains²; and to their coming must be entirely attributed the origin of its cultivation³. All its principal towns were built by them: the traces of their language are still retained; and it is from them that Transylvania received the name of Sibenburgen, or the *Region of Seven Cities*⁴.

From the description given by modern historians of the inhabitants of Transylvania, they may be divided into three distinct families; the SICULI, a barbarous race, descended from the antient Scythians, now inhabiting the districts contiguous to Russia and *Moldavia*¹; the HUNGARIANS, who dwell along the borders of the Marisus; and the SAXONS upon the south towards Walachia, and upon the north towards *Hungary*². In going from Reismark to Muhlenbach, which is one mile farther, we saw some high snowy mountains upon our left, and another ridge running parallel upon our right; the route lying chiefly over plains. These are the two connecting branches that were before mentioned, extending from the Carpathian range, all the way from Deva to Boitza. The roads being execrable, our driver, who was quite a boy, endeavoured to avail himself of a greensward slope, by the way-side, to conduct the carriage over an easier track. In doing this, however, he exposed us to rather a serious accident; for, being gradually carried to an elevation above the highway, whence there was no visible descent, he became alarmed; and, endeavouring too suddenly to regain the original route, overset the carriage: so that we fell from the top to the bottom of the slope; being thrown out with great violence. Unfortunately, too, this accident happened in the midst of the long train of carriages belonging to the Embassy; and the Turks, who are exceedingly superstitious, immediately regarded it as a bad omen, portending some other disaster. We were stunned by the violence of the shock, but sustained no other injury. At sight, however, of this catastrophe, much more formidable in its de Hongrie, &c. &c. There is a curious Memoir, by D'Anville, on the Province of Dacia, in the Académie des Inscriptions, tom. XXVIII. pp. 444—468, (read July 24. 1755.) Paris, 1761. It is accompanied by a Map of antient DACIA, as it was formed into a province by Trajan; including Walachia, Transylvania, the Bannat of Temeswar, and part of the North of Hungary, then inhabited by the JAZYGES METANASTÆ to the West, and the BASTARNÆ to the East; and extending from the TIBISCUS, to the TYRAS, or Danaster.

its appearance than reality, the Ambassador ordered all the Embassy to halt, and the persons belonging to it to descend from the carriages and horses. Having now recovered from the effect of our fall, and wondering what they were going to do, we saw all the Moslems sedately withdrawing from the side of the road, until they got among some trees: here they spread their shawls upon the ground, and immediately, beginning to prostrate themselves, fell earnestly to prayers. As soon as they had ended their devotions, they came kindly inquiring after our safety, and assisted us in raising the carriage, and in setting every thing to rights. We then proceeded as before, and presently arrived at Muhlenbach, where there was but one bad inn: this we ceded to the members of the Embassy, taking our lodging for the night at a filthy post-house; determined, however, to profit by the first opportunity, either to deviate from the main route, or to press forward with greater expedition, that we might avoid the inconvenience of travelling with so large a party, where the post is badly supplied, and accommodations are rare. This opportunity occurred upon the following day.

Szasavaros.

Monday, May 2.—We set out from Muhlenbach, and passed through Sibot, the first *post*¹, to Szasavaros, a post and a half. We had then a violent storm, accompanied by lightning and thunder; and there fell torrents of rain.

The

(1) A post signifies one German mile, but not necessarily one station: these are sometimes a post and a half, or two posts, distant from each other; or even more.

The roads, which were bad before, now became so deep, owing to the mud, that the Embassy could not proceed. With some difficulty, however, we advanced one post and a half farther, and arrived at Deva; having found every where difficulty in procuring horses. The country evidently exhibited an appearance of improvement. There was now a small town at the end of every stage; and the houses appeared in better condition. Upon a high rock above Deva, are the remains of a Citadel, said to have been constructed by AUGUSTUS; probably by TRAJAN; as Roman coins are found here, both of that Emperor, and of his successors. We bought one or two of TRAJAN, and one of FAUSTINA. It was nearly dark when we entered Deva: we were surprised by the number of persons, both men and women, in a state of intoxication. Its vicinity to the mines may account for this circumstance². The Mine of Nagyag is distant about fifteen English miles, in the heights of the mountains, lying upon the north side of the Maros. As we had brought a letter from Baron Bruckenthal, of Hermanstadt, to Mr. Franzenau, director of the works at the Mine of Nagyag, we determined to quit the main route, and to visit Nagyag the next day. For this purpose, the postmaster of Deva recommended that we should leave leave our carriage with him; and he engaged to provide for us a light open car, with four horses, which would be better suited to the narrow road we had to ascend, and in which we might be conveyed with ease and expedition.

Tuesday, May 3.—We crossed the impetuous current of the Maros, by means of a ferry. Strabo, to whose inestimable writings, as to sun-beams, we have long been accustomed to repair, for the light of antient geography, begins to fail us in DACIA: but he has left an allusion to this river, which we may use as valedictory in quitting the countries by him described. He mentions it¹, under the name of MARISUS, as flowing through the territories of the GETÆ, and falling into the DANUBE; omitting, however, to notice its confluence with the TIBISCUS, now called Theysse, or Teisse, which takes place long before its junction with the DANUBE, at *Segedin*². The Maros is also mentioned, by Herodotus, as flowing out of the country of the AGATHYRSI, and nearly according to its present appellation³: he calls it MARIS. We find it denominated MARUS by *Tacitus*⁴. The same river is the MARISIA of Jornandes, and the MAROUS of other other writers⁵. In the portion of his work now cited, Strabo has also mentioned a remarkable distinction observed among the antients, in speaking of the DANUBE. It bore this appellation from its source as far as the Cataracts; but all those parts of the river in the vicinity of the GETÆ, below the Cataracts as far as the EUXINE, were denominated ISTER⁶. The Maros is here a very considerable river: we saw many commercial barges; some sailing down, others working against its rapid torrent. The Maros on the north, the Tibiscus on the west, the Danube on the south, and a small river, called the Tchernia, on the east, inclose the Bannat of Temeswar within so regular a parallelogram, that its form is rhomboidal; the town of Temeswar being in the centre.

the Tellurium
Mine.

Sekeremb, or Nagyag.

“The Iron Gate.” A lofty range of mountains extends along the northern side of the Maros: after crossing the river, we began immediately to climb these heights. The roads were not bad; but almost the whole journey to Nagyag was up a steep ascent: we were five hours, although drawn by four horses in a light car, before we reached the small town where the mine has been opened. As Transylvania is the only country in the whole world where tellurium has yet been discovered¹, our curiosity was greatly excited to view the Nagyag mine. At last the prospect of it opened, with great boldness of scenery, quite among the summits of this mountainous region, and in a manner highly picturesque and striking². The situation of the mine was distinguished by an immense heap of discarded minerals, thrown out in working it: above this heap appeared the buildings of what is now called *Nagyag*³. Upon the right hand towered a naked perpendicular rock, rising to a point, upon which stood a large wooden crucifix. Upon the left, another mountain, of milder aspect, and principally covered with brushwood, contrasted beautifully with the rugged form of the lofty rock of the Crucifix. Between the two appeared the mine and the town; and beyond all, the

(3) The original and proper name of this place is Sekeremb; but as the village of Nagyag, at an hour and a half's distance below it, was the nearest inhabited spot when the mine was discovered, Sekeremb has borrowed the name of the place to which the miners resorted before the town was built, which is now called Nagyag.

the summits of more distant mountains surrounding Nagyag. The whole village has been undermined: the works are not only carried on upon a grand and extensive scale, but they are conducted with a degree of neatness for which the Germans have long been famous in mining: and there are some ingenious contrivances, found nowhere else, both in the manner of airing and cleansing the mine, and in digging and raising the ore, which cannot be detailed without explanatory charts.

Having presented our letter to the Director, we were most kindly received by him, and permitted to examine every thing: he also allowed us to inspect every variety of the ore, and to make whatever purchases we pleased: but some specimens of the tellurium are so exceedingly rich in gold, that, in the sale of them for the Crown, it is necessary to weigh them, and to estimate the price according to the proportion of the gold they contain. This kind of ore is always kept locked in particular warehouses; and it is portioned into different lots, which are placed in chests. The common ore lies exposed in heaps, at which labourers are seen busied with hammers, selecting and breaking it for the further operation of stamping. The town, surrounded by mountains and forests, consists of the warehouses, washing-houses, stamping-mills, a council-house, a church, and the dwellings of the miners, which altogether amount to some hundred buildings. The temperature of its elevated situation renders the land around Nagyag unfit for agriculture; consequently nothing is going on, although the utmost activity prevails, excepting what relates to the business and interests of the mine. When this mine was first discovered, the mountains around it were covered with forests; but the timber necessary for the works, especially for timbering the mine itself, has cleared the neighbourhood of large trees, so that wood is now brought from distant parts, being floated upon the Maros, at the foot of the mountains. Deva itself is visible from this spot; and nothing can be more beautiful than the commanding prospect here afforded of the valley in which it lies. The history of the discovery of this mine deserves particular attention; as it contains a remarkable testimony to the universality of an opinion among miners, that lambent flames, which are sometimes observed playing upon the surface of the earth, denote the presence of metallic veins in the fissures below. It comes to us upon the respectable authority of Born himself; some of whose observations upon the Nagyag mine will be found incorporated with our own: therefore it ought to be related as nearly as possible according to the tenour of his own words. The flame here alluded to may be considered as ranking among existing phænomena, of which there is a remarkable example at the Pietra Mala, near Feligara, in ITALY: and as it is a gaseous emanation of HYDROGEN, whereof no metallic substance, however pure, is destitute, the fact is more worthy the consideration of chemists than the attention they have hitherto shewn to it seems to imply. The circumstance is thus related by Born, in one of his Letters to *Professor Ferber*¹.

“ A Walachian, whose name was Armenian John, came to my father, then possessed of a rich silver mine at Csertes, telling him, that as he constantly observed a flame issuing from, and playing upon, a fissure in the Nagyag forest, he was of opinion that rich ores must be hid under ground. My father was, fortunately, adventurous enough to listen to this poor man's tale ; and accordingly he drove a gallery in the ground which the Walachian had pointed out. The work went on some years without any success; and my father resolved to give it up. However, he made a last drift towards the fissure, and there he hit the rich black and lamellated gold ores, which were first looked upon as iron glimmer, but appeared what really they are as soon as assayed by the fire. This happy accident caused my father to pursue the work to the utmost of his power: accordingly, he distributed some shares among his friends, and had the work carried on with regularity.”

Manner in which the Mine was discovered.

Soon after, other fissures were discovered, all running parallel to each other, in the direction of the valley of Nagyag, from south to north, and dipping from west to east. The veins break off as soon as they reach the red slate, with which all the valleys are covered. When Born visited Nagyag, the mine had only been worked to the depth of sixty fathoms: its depth is now one hundred and fifty. The mountains are entirely composed of porphyry, covered with red clay, or red argillaceous schistus, and sand-stone. The vein rocks consist of red feldspar and white quartz, of that kind which is vulgarly called fat quartz. The richer ores are laminary, splendent, of a dark grey colour, approaching to black, and in some instances quite black. The lamellæ may be separated with a needle; and they are malleable and ductile in a certain degree. There is also here found a very rich kind of ore, which is finely woven into the texture of a reddish feldspar, resembling the arsenical white ore of Saxony. Among the rich ores, native silver sometimes occurs, mixed with gold. Another variety is called, by the miners, cotton ore: it consists of little native silvery gold grains, in tellurium, adhering to an argillaceous matrix. But in all the richer ores (which are so productive of precious metal that the smallest particle being placed, with a little borax, upon the tube of a common tobacco-pipe, and submitted to the blow-pipe, becomes easily reduced to a bead of pure gold) not a particle of native gold can be discerned, either by the naked eye, or by the aid of the most powerful microscope. The gold, in these ores, is therefore completely mineralized, either by the tellurium acting as an acid, or by sulphur; and in either case it must be considered as unique in its kind. From the resemblance of its laminary form and splendid grey colour to antimony, it was at first considered to be that metal; and for a long time, under the names of aurum problematicum and aurum paradoxum, it puzzled all the chemists of Europe. Sometimes an effect of crystallization has given to this laminary substance a rude resemblance of Hebrew characters; and to such appearances the name of aurum graphicum was given. When Klaproth detected, in the analysis of this ore, the presence of a new metal, and bestowed bestowed upon it the name of TELLURIUM, its real nature became more fully developed; but the manner in which the gold is combined with tellurium has not yet been determined. The sulphuret of antimony is sometimes found either as a radiated crystallization, in the midst of the ore, or in the form called plumose, owing to the minuteness and length of its crystals. We saw also very fine specimens of the red sulphuret of arsenic, both in masses and crystallized, which had been found here; also yellow pulverulent oxide of antimony, and white pulverulent oxide of arsenic; lying, in both instances, among crystals of their sulphurets. All the semi-metals found at Nagyag, when carefully analyzed, are found to contain minute portions of gold. The author, by the simple process of cupellation, after the easy manner he has described¹, has detected gold in all the specimens he brought from this mine. But the richer ores, consisting principally of tellurium, contain, in a hundred weight of the ore, from ninety to three hundred and forty German ounces of silver; and each mark of silver yields twelve or thirteen ounces of gold, or two parts gold and one part *silver*². But all the ores do not contain silver, although all of them contain gold. Even the common ore, when exposed to the heat of a charcoal furnace, after burning with a beautiful blue colour like that of salt cast upon ignited coal, and yielding a peculiar smell which has been compared, but improperly, to that of horse-radish, may be taken out, and it will be found spotted all over with minute globules of gold. One specimen which we treated in this manner has above a hundred spheroidal particles, or beads of gold, which appear all over its surface. We purchased several specimens of the tellurium, both in its massive and crystalline form'. The richer ores, as soon as they are brought up from the mine, are carried in wooden troughs to

(1) This method of cupellation was invented by W.H. Wollaston, Esq. M.D. Secretary to the Royal Society: it is the easiest and most expeditious mode of adapting the blow-pipe to the development of gold, silver, copper, &c. from their ores.

(2) The ounce of the German miners, according to Raspe, (see Pref. to Born's Letters, p. 39.) is equal to one half-ounce English. The following table of weights was given to us by Mr. Gayo, the Director of the Laboratory at Cremnitz:

to the separating rooms, and there parcelled, as nicely as possible, by officers who act under oath: the poorer are separated in the wash-works, by iron sieves; a process which we shall more particularly detail, when we treat of the mines of Schemnitz and Cremnitz. In these ores the tellurium appears in minute dark specks, or veins, in a hard grey rock, somewhat resembling the appearance of the oxide of tin in the common tin-ores of Cornwall. Provisions are extremely dear at Nagyag, being carried thither by porters, or upon horses, and therefore the wages of the miners are higher than in other places: nevertheless, Born calculated that in the course of twenty years, above four millions of florins, in gold and silver, had been produced, clear of all expenses, by the Nagyag mine. At the time of our arrival, it had been constantly worked during sixty years; and it was fully as productive as at any period of its prosperity. Whether it were owing to the high wages given to the miners, or to the salubrious state of the atmosphere at so great an elevation, we could not learn; but we remarked that we had never seen such robust miners as those of Nagyag. A party of them descending to their labour, each bearing in his hand a large lamp, resembled the German miners figured in the work of George Agricola^s; and their countenances countenances indicated a degree of health and cheerfulness not usually characteristic of such employment. Towards evening, having finished our examination of the tellurium mine and its productions, we paid for our specimens, and took leave of the Inspector. Our descent to Deva was so rapid, that we reached the banks of the Maros in three hours and a half; and being ferried over to Deva, packed up our minerals, and prepared to continue our journey.

Dobra.

May 4.—Came from Deva to Dobra, through the most beautiful scenery imaginable. Our route lay by the side of the Maros; flowing through a narrow, rocky, but fertile valley, between mountains covered with tufted woods of fine old beech and oak trees, waving their branches quite over the road. The high banks of the river were diversified by rich beds of many-coloured flowers, yielding the most refreshing odours; and all the air resounded with the singing of birds. In the first part of the journey, however, as far as Lesnek, the roads were as bad as when Born's carriage was dragged over them by eight oxen, besides the four horses of his vehicle; but afterwards, near Dobra, they became better. At Dobra we found a crowded fair, and Gipsies begging in the midst of the uproar. A change in the manner of building houses, seemed to indicate a different tribe of inhabitants; the dwellings being constructed as among the nations inhabiting inhabiting the shores of the Baltic, with whole trunks of trees piled horizontally one above another. From Dobra we were accompanied by two hussars as guards, owing to the robbers who infest the frontier of the Bannat of Temeswar. Our first stage from Dobra was to Czoczed. Between this place and Kossova, the next station, we crossed a high ridge of mountains separating Transylvania from the Bannat of Hungary: a small church upon the summit marks the point of division between the two countries. We passed a sleepless night in the small post-house at Kossova, being tormented by bugs; and some that we saw were as large as wood-lice. The hussars accompanied us as far as Lugos. The next morning (May 5) we rose at three o'clock, and, when day-light appeared, set out for Fazced; where we found a good inn. Here we overtook all our old Turkish friends belonging to the Embassy. The Ambassador seemed glad to see us safe, asking questions about the mines; but it was impossible either to make him comprehend the peculiar inducement which had tempted us to visit those of Nagyag, or to excite in his mind any curiosity respecting mines in general. Prince Múrúzi accompanied us the next post, from Fazced to Bossar. The hussars being in full speed the whole way before us, our postillion insisted upon pursuing them, galloping his horses at a furious rate. We passed the Turkish escort upon the road; and the officer who commanded it called to us, saying it was unlawful to drive at such a rate; but nothing that he or we could say served to check our insensate charioteer; and we performed performed the distance to Bossar in less than three quarters of an hour. Hence, to Lugos, is one post and a half. The Prince begged to continue with us, preferring the expedition with which we travelled, to the more stately procession of the Ambassador and his suite. Lugos is a large town. We saw here one of those solemn processions for rain, accompanied by choristers, which are often seen in Catholic countries. From Bossar to this place the road had been greatly infested by banditti, who had practised the most unheard-of cruelties to extort money; having cut off a woman's tongue, and one of her breasts, and roasted the feet of a priest. They had also bound chains of red-hot iron round the bodies of the poor peasants, to force them to confess where they had concealed their money. These miscreants were many of them Walachians, and we were surprised to hear that they were principally Gipsies. The alarm, however, had nearly subsided, by the apprehension of most of their gang. We found one hundred and fifty of them imprisoned at Lugos, six of whom were already condemned to be executed in the course of the week. We went to see the chief of the gang; a ferocious looking culprit, with long bushy hair. He was chained by the neck, arms, feet, and waist; regarding all who approached him with the wildness of a savage.

Climate of the Bannat.

From the time that we entered the Bannat, at Kossova, the country appeared like Flanders; being flat, and entirely destitute of trees, excepting in the neighbourhood of the villages. The air of the Bannat is not good: agues and inflammatory fevers are extremely prevalent. The sudden transitions transitions of temperature are as from July to January. At Lugos, a pound of mutton cost only twopence-halfpenny of our money. Loaf-sugar sold as high as half-a-crown. After leaving Lugos, we passed through Kisseto, and Rikass, to TEMESWAR, the Capital of the Bannat; a neat and large fortified town, but in a low and swampy plain. We arrived in the evening, about six o'clock. Red Tokay wine sells here for two florins a pint: the common wine of the country is very good. The Bannat, surrounded as it is, on every side, by rivers, excepting towards the east, may be considered as a peninsula: it is about one hundred and thirty-two English miles in length, and ninety, or a hundred, in breadth. The soil is extremely fertile. Silk plantations spread almost over the whole country; and orchards of peach, cherry, and plum trees are common. But all the inhabitants of Temeswar are affected by the bad air, so that a healthy-looking person is hardly to be seen among them. Born says¹, that, when he was here, he "fancied himself in the realms of death, inhabited by carcasses in fine tombs, instead of men." At a dinner, to which he was invited, "all the guests had a fit of their fever; some shivering, others gnashing their teeth." The inhabitants of the Bannat consist of Illyrians, or Raizes, who are a Scythian people; of Walachians; Gipsies; and Germans. The town of Temeswar is situate upon the river Thames; written Temes, or Tamis, whence its name is derived²; at a small distance from a lake,

Bad air of the Bannat.

Komlos.

Aspect of the Country.

IT was not to be expected that we should pass through such a morbid atmosphere as this of Temeswar, without experiencing some of the effects of its bad air; for where the inhabitants cannot secure themselves from the attacks of fever, strangers are almost sure to become its victims. We were all more or less affected by it; but the servants, probably from being less attentive to their diet, were seized with such violent paroxysms, during the first part of our journey, that after leaving the town, we could only proceed three posts, (May 6,) as far as Komlos. Here a calf was killed, at the door of our chamber; and within the same hour part of it was served for our dinner. In this country, as in Flanders, the traveller has no sooner quitted one place of relay, than he sees the church belonging to the next, during his whole route. These straight roads in the Bannat are excellent, and the post-horses are generally good. The prospect exhibits immense pastures, with herds grazing; cows, sheep, and horses; or wide fields, without inclosures, covered with corn. Various aquatic fowls frequent the plains; among which we saw storks with red legs and bills. The Hungarian dress, commonly called called Hessian in England, consisting of pantaloons, with military half-boots to which spurs are fastened, is so universal, that it is worn both by boys and men. The remains of small Roman tumuli, used as marks of distance along the old Roman roads, are as common here as in Turkey. At Komlos we were amused by seeing a party of Walachians, in a group, seated upon the ground, playing with cards, noisy and quarrelsome; offering, together with their language, strong proofs of their resemblance to other descendants of the Romans, in Italy, who are constantly thus occupied in all the principal towns of that country. A disposition for gaming cannot well be considered as a national characteristic; because it is found in every country, however barbarous or enlightened: yet there are some tribes more universally distinguished by this vice than others; as the wild Irish, and wilder Calmucks. Gaming is perhaps unknown among the Turks, who are nevertheless fond of amusements which exercise the understanding without gratifying avarice. The real truth is, that although youth and liberality have been considered as the excitements of a passion for play, the disposition is always an indication of selfishness; therefore barbarous nations will be found the most addicted to gambling.

May 7.—Campaign country, and good roads, as before, to Moksin; a place remarkable only for its beautiful Greek church, which would be exhibited as a curiosity even in London. Thence to Kanitsha, where we crossed the river Theiss, the western boundary of the Bannat. By the side of this river, the mercury in Fahrenheit's thermometer, at noon, noon, stood at G1°. The Theiss is the TIBISCUS of Ptolemy, and the TIBESIS of Herodotus. By Latin authors it was termed *PATISSUS*¹. It rises in a mountain called Kalkberg, in the county of Maromarus, upon the confines of Transylvania and Russia; whence it traverses all UPPER HUNGARY westward: afterwards, flowing from north to south, and receiving many tributary streams, especially the Marisus, before its junction with the Danube, it falls into that river, near to Belgrade. Such is the astonishing quantity of the fishes taken in this river, that a thousand carp have been sold for less than four shillings of our money: indeed it has sometimes happened, that the fishermen, wanting purchasers, have either fattened hogs with them, or cast them again into the water². This marvellous fecundity has been attributed to the communication which the waters of the country have with the *salt mines*³. Certainly there is no part of the world so productive in this respect. The Bedrac, which falls into the Tibiscus near to Tokay, is, in summer, so full of fishes, that the inhabitants say it is then swelled by their prodigious number: and, with regard to the Tibiscus, a saying is current in the country, that “it contains two parts of

of water and one of fishes.' It antiently separated DACIA from the land of the JAZYGES METANASTÆ, who still retain the name of Jaz, and a different language from that of the *Hungarians*⁴. Having quitted the Bannat, we proceeded through Horgos, over sandy roads, to Segedin; a wretched dirty stragglng town, with a small fortress. The inn here, called the Gulden Adler, was filthy and detestable; the mistress of it being drunk and insolent. There had been a fair, which was now concluded. We saw nothing that was good in Segedin, excepting its bread; and this was of an excellent quality. It served, during the wars with the Turks, as did many more obscure towns of Hungary, to intercept the Turkish armies in their progress towards the rest of Europe; which caused the country to be denominated, by Christian nations, the shield and impregnable bulwark of CHRISTIANITY⁶.

Saturday, May 8.—We found the roads so much improved, that we diminished the number of our horses; hiring only four for our carriage, and three to convey the baggage. All the country between Segedin and Ketschemet,

CHAP. IV.

Ketschemet, a distance of thirty-six English miles, is flat and swampy. It improves a little towards Ketschemet, because it is more cultivated; but the rest resembles Kuban Tartary, being full of stagnant pools, where nothing is heard but the croaking of toads. The rye was beginning to be in ear. Two posts before arriving at Ketschemet, is a place called Felegyhaza: it seemed like a newly-built town, or large village, full of handsome structures, but erected in a straggling manner, like the houses in Moscow; and after a plan more resembling that of a camp, than of a fixed place of residence. There are some public edifices at Felegyhaza: the post-house here was the best that we had seen, and the inn good; but the inhabitants rude and insolent to strangers. As soon as we began to perceive that this behaviour was characteristic of the people, we tried the experiment of treating them in their own way; which invariably made them become more civil. The inn at Ketschemet, called the Buck, was large and tolerably clean. Great preparations were now making in all parts of this country for their fairs, of which they have one nearly every week at Ketschemet, during the summer. To these fairs resort merchants from distant parts of Europe. One of them, a merchant from Trieste, arrived with a fine lady, who was his wife, and took possession of the room next to ours. The whole of his merchandize consisted in Saints: he had brought a sufficient cargo to supply all the fairs in Hungary. White Tokay sold here for two florins and a half the bottle. The red wine of Buda is clear, strong, and of a good flavour; but but heating and astringent in its quality. Hitherto we had found all the district we had passed through inhabited by a Walachian peasantry, having seen few genuine Hungarians. The Walachians of the Bannat bear a very bad character; and perhaps many of the offences attributed to the gipsies may be due to this people, who are the least civilized and most ferocious of all the inhabitants of *Hungary*¹. The prisons were full of them. Many of the disorders committed by the Walachians in Transylvania and the Bannat have been attributed to the influence of their priests, who are called Popes. It has been calculated that in twenty executions for capital offences, there is always one *Pope*². The gipsies of the Bannat get their livelihood, like those of Walachia, by rambling about as blacksmiths and itinerant musicians. In winter they cut spoons, ladles, troughs, and other implements of wood. During summer they go nearly naked, and are then employed in washing gold from the sand of the rivers and plains. Their manipulation has been fully described by Francis Dembsher, in an Appendix to the Letters of Born to *Ferber*³: its very simplicity denotes its antiquity; and it is probably practised now, by these gipsies, as it was by the Romans in the same country. It consists in nothing more than pouring the sand, mixed with water, over an inclined plane; the heavier particles of the gold remaining upon the surface, while the lighter siliceous particles and impurities are washed away. This, in fact, is the plan pursued in the great washing-houses at Schemnitz, only upon a larger scale. Sometimes the inclined plane is covered with woollen cloth, to which the gold adheres: wanting the cloth, the gipsies now and then use, for the same purpose, the more antient substitute of a fleece. The manner of collecting gold dust in sheep's fleeces, upon inclined planes, is represented in the curious old work of *George Agricola*¹. In the rivers of Colchis, the custom is still retained of placing sheep-skins in the beds of the Phasis, and other auriferous streams, to collect particles of gold: hence the dedication of such fleeces to the Gods, and the fabulous history of the Argonautæ as far as it related to the golden fleece. The more common manipulation among the gipsies of the Bannat, is very like that of Walachia which we have already described. It is performed by means of a plank of lime-tree, six feet in length, and an inch and a half in thickness. At the upper extremity is a small trough; and across the board are ten or twelve grooves or furrows, cut in the wood. This plank is elevated at one end, at an angle of about forty-five degrees. The sand is put into the trough, at the upper upper end; and thence, by plenty of water, washed down the sloping of the board². The gold dust falls, during this process, into the higher grooves, whence it is scraped or brushed off. It might be supposed that a great deal of gold is lost by this careless method of collecting it: but long experience has made the gipsies very expert; they know how to distinguish the richer from the poorer sands; and a careful examination of the sand, after they have washed it, proves that hardly a particle of gold escapes them during the operation. The families supported by gold-washing are very numerous; but the gains of each are very inconsiderable, being barely sufficient to excite their industry, although the value of many thousands of florins of gold be annually produced in this manner³. The auriferous sand is not only taken from the beds of the rivers, but likewise from the banks, and even from pits in the adjacent ground. These pits are commonly four feet or more in depth. In digging them, the workmen find four strata. The first is a stratum of vegetable mould; the second, loam, and an alluvial deposit of pebbles; the third consists of the auriferous sand and pebbles; and the fourth, of *slate, clay, marle, and coal*⁴. The auriferous stratum is constantly parallel to the bed of vegetable mould, and the coal as constantly lies below it. The gold obtained by washing is always native, and in the form of a fine dust: the sand containing it is also mixed with black and splendid splendent particles of highly magnetic iron, garnets, and mica. Among the animals of the country should be noticed a race of shepherds' dogs, of a white colour and noble size; also a breed of immense mastiffs: some of them were as large as the famous dog taken at Belgrade, some years ago in the possession of the King of Naples. The oxen are remarkable for the superior size of their horns. The horses used for posting are often excellent; but the management of the post is ill regulated, and of course badly conducted. We observed at Felegyhaza a particular breed of hogs, very long in the back, and of great size, of a sandy colour. Ketschemet is a considerable town: it contains sixty-five thousand inhabitants. It would be absurd to say that all the women of this country are scolds, because the few that we saw were so; but it is a fact, that we hardly entered into any dwelling without finding a scolding housewife. The mistress of the inn at Ketschemet made every part of it resound with her vociferations: and we were considerably amused by the circumstance, as a long time had elapsed since we had been in a country where any thing like authority could be said to reside in the female part of the community. The great Plain, lying between the Theyss and the Danube, in which Ketschemet is situate, was that which the Jazyges Metanastæ formerly inhabited: it is two hundred and fifty miles in length, and almost an equal number in breadth; and the boorish race now tenanting this district are singularly distinguished, in their manners and customs, from the inhabitants of the rest of Hungary. In the sandy heath between this place and Pest were formerly held the Diets

Jazyges.

Diets and great assemblies of the people; and here they elected the antient sovereigns of Hungary. Upon those occasions, the plain was covered with a camp, containing from eighty to a hundred thousand tents.

May 9.—We came from Ketschemet to PEST, a distance about equal to thirty-six English miles: it is divided into six posts, or stations. The first part of this distance, although well cultivated in some places, is flat and sandy, as far as Inares, the third post from Ketschemet; resembling the steppes of Russia, not only in its aspect, but also with regard to its plants and animals. We collected some rare plants in this sandy district; and often noticed an animal like a squirrel, burrowing in the sand, like the Sáslic of the South of Russia. Numbers of these little quadrupeds appeared running into their burrows. 'They are of the Marmot kind; resembling that animal in their mode of life'. These plains would be, in fact, a continuation of the Russian steppes, extending from the Danube not only to the country south of Woronetz, but even to the most eastern part of Siberia, were they not separated from them by an abutment of the range of the Carpathian mountains, which divides them from the Campo Longo of Russia and Moldavia.—We met some caravans laden with Hungarian tobacco. At Inares there was a neat and good inn, where we dined. Thence proceeding through the villages of Ocsa and Soroksar,

(1) Perhaps the Arctomys Citillus, mentioned by Dr. Townson (Travels in Hung. c. 4.); but differing from the Sáslic. Describing the same plain, Born says that it is covered with the Glarea Linnæi, mixed with small broken shells.

CHAP. IV.

Soroksar, we had no sooner quitted the last than we beheld the spires of PEST, and the citadel of BUDA, situate upon different sides of the Danube, at the foot of a chain of mountains, which rise with grandeur upon the western side of the river. The Danube separates the two cities, in other respects one. BUDA is upon an eminence above the western, and PEST below upon the eastern bank. PEST is a very large and handsome city. We were conducted to its principal inn, called The Seven Electors. The streets are full of shops; and there are two theatres: there is also a handsome theatre at BUDA. We were quite surprised by the magnificence of these two cities, of which so little intelligence has been communicated to other parts of Europe. PEST, situate in a plain, is adorned with public edifices, erected in a style of grandeur and elegance: it also boasts of a University, although as little known to the Universities of ENGLAND, as Cambridge and Oxford are to its Hungarian professors. All its buildings are constructed of a porous lumachella, brought from the quarries of Buda, upon the other side of the Danube: its form is quadrangular; and it gives its name to all the neighbouring country, which is hence denominated Comitatus Pesthiensis; the whole of Hungary being divided, like Great Britain, into counties. Between the two cities, PEST and BUDA, there is an immense bridge of boats, three-quarters of a mile in length. During the wars with Turkey, this place suffered much, being often taken and retaken: it is entirely commanded by the citadel of BUDA, so that every part of it was exposed to the cannon from the opposite heights. As soon as we arrived, we hired a lackey, and

and sent him to engage a box at the theatre; whither we afterwards repaired, to see the comedy of "Peter the Great and his favourite Mentchikof." The theatre was dark and small; and the piece so dull, and ill performed, that we did not remain until its conclusion.

May 10.—This day the Turkish Ambassador arrived, at another inn, called The White Boat. As soon as we had breakfasted, we waited upon the Governor of PEST (Baron Leeuwen), and afterwards upon the Governor of BUDA, (General Orft), requesting a passport, and permission to visit the mines of Schemnitz and Cremnitz. We were assured that we might go to any of the Hungarian mines, without any other passport than that which we had brought from Constantinople. At Buda we heard that the Diet would soon be assembled at Presburg, and that the Prince of the Palatinate was there. We were permitted to see the palace belonging to his Highness, as it was furnished by the present Emperor of Russia, after the marriage of the Prince with his sister. It was really magnificent: indeed there are few finer palaces in Europe; and the furniture bespoke the wealth and pomp of the sovereign by whom it was presented. Among other articles, there was a table of very great size, which consisted entirely of massive silver, embossed, and ornamented with sculpture: the other tables were each of one entire mass of coloured glass. We saw also a superb collection of the most costly *minerals of Siberia*¹.

The

(1) Among these may be mentioned a superb crystal of Wolfram (the ferruginous Scheelin of Haüy and of Brogniart), in its matrix; also a ruby of the size of a hazel-nut; and many of the gold ores of Siberia.

CHAP. IV.

The ball-room was of immense magnitude; and many of the other apartments were adorned with the richest tapestry of Petersburg, copied after paintings by some of the best masters. The view from a balcony of the palace, elevated upon a rock above the Danube, exhibited one of the most striking sights we ever saw; owing to the peculiar nature and grandeur of the objects presented to the eye: it consisted of an extensive prospect of the Danube, diversified by islets covered with trees, the long bridge of boats, and the whole city of Pest, with all the campaign country intervening between this river and the Tibiscus, the gardens of the palace, and the suburbs, backed by lofty mountains which surround the city. Buda is well built, and more magnificent in its appearance than Pest; but both together, added to the advantages of their situation upon the Danube, their numerous gardens and diversified appearance, make this a delightful place of residence. Before the invasion of Hungary by the Turks, Buda was the capital of the country. Some writers have believed that it was either the CURTA of Ptolemy, or the AQUINCUM of the Itinerary of *Antoninus*¹; but, according to Bonfinius, the antient name of Buda was *SICAMBRIA*²; and it was called Buda, from Bleda, Sicumbria.

Bleda, the brother of Attila, who had received that appellation³. Several Roman antiquities remain in different parts of the town⁴. By the Germans, Buda is called Offen, or, as we should say, Oven; owing to its natural sudatories, or *hot baths*⁵. It is divided into two parts, Upper and Lower. They still shew the remains of structures built here by Matthias Corvinus, king of Hungary, and by his predecessors. This city was taken by Sultan Solyman, August 20, 1526; and recaptured by Ferdinand the First, king of Bohemia, brother of the Emperor Charles the Fifth, in the following year. In 1529, by the treason of the garrison, it fell again into the hands of Solyman, who afterwards laid siege to Vienna. It remained in possession of the Turks until the famous siege of Buda in 1686, when it was again taken, (Sept. 2.) after a terrible conflict, in which several young noblemen of England acted as volunteers. Lord George Saville, second son of the Marquis of Halifax, signalized himself at this siege, and died of the wounds he received. The young Fitz-James, natural son of James the Second, was also wounded upon the occasion⁶.

Among the artillery that fell into the hands of the victors, were four pieces of cannon, of enormous calibre, called the *Four Evangelists*¹. In the citadel were found a great quantity of valuable manuscripts and rare books, belonging to the library of the antient kings of Hungary: these were removed to Vienna, by order of the Emperor. The lower town, or suburb of Buda, is inhabited by Jews; the upper, covering the heights above the Danube, resembles, by its situation and appearance, an antient acropolis. In the lower town there are natural *hot springs*², supplying the baths for which it is renowned; but in the hill whereon the citadel stands there are also fountains, in which the temperature of the water is so different, that a person immersing his hand can hardly endure the coldness. The inhabitants of Buda amount to twenty-two thousand; those of Pest, to sixteen thousand³; making altogether a population equal to thirty-eight thousand persons.

Upon our return from Buda to Pest, we dined with Baron Leeuwen; and were introduced to the Baroness, a lady

Hungary, that were little to his honour: for as his Governor diverted the allowance that was given for keeping a table, and sent him always to eat at other tables; so, though in the siege of Buda there were many occasions given him to have distinguished himself, yet he had appeared in none of them." lady of the most extraordinary beauty, unaffected simplicity, and polished manners. She conveyed us in her carriage to visit a garden in the neighbourhood of Pest, laid out according to the English taste. The Baroness Lecuwen had the name of Bodanovich before she married; and being nearly related to an English Countess, she made many inquiries respecting our Country. We then went to the principal theatre, to see the comedy of Inkle and Yarico performed in the German language. The price of a box, to contain six persons, was three florins. The other theatre of Pest is appropriated solely to the amusement of the lower class of inhabitants; and the performances continue from morning until midnight; the audience changing with every piece that is acted. We repaired thither for a few minutes; and found, as we expected, a representation in which all sorts of absurdities and buffooneries were introduced, adapted to the taste and capacities of the persons present. After the comedy of Inkle and Yarico, we were amused, at the principal theatre, by a ballet. A new female dancer made her début, under circumstances somewhat extraordinary; being far advanced in pregnancy. This woman obtained unbounded applause; but in the astonishing leaps and turns she made, the exhibition was rather painful than pleasing. We were much struck by the general beauty of the Hungarian women at Pest: perhaps there is not in the German empire a town where there are so many handsome females in proportion to the number of inhabitants; inhabitants; and it is said that they are more remarkable for the elegance and taste of their dress than the women of Vienna.

University.

May 11.—After breakfasting with the Governor, we were conducted to the University. Entering the Public Library, we were met by the Professors; who requested that we would inscribe our signatures, and the places of our residence in England, in a register containing the names of all foreign visitants. As soon as we had so done, and also added that we were members of the University of Cambridge, we were amused by a question from the principal Lecturer, who came towards us with a large atlas in his hand, requesting that we would point out to him the situation of Cambridge; as neither he, nor any of his brother Professors, had ever heard of the existence of such a University. When we had satisfied his curiosity in this respect, as he was making a pompous explanatory speech in Latin, we begged he would spare himself the trouble of an apology; assuring him, that if he were to honour Cambridge with a visit, a similar question might be put to him respecting the situation of the University of Pest. The Public Library is a very spacious room, resembling, as to its interior, the form of our Senate House at Cambridge. It contains all the best editions of the classics, and also some manuscripts; but none of the latter merit a particular notice. The cabinet of Natural History is more remarkable: it contains sixty thousand minerals; but they are displayed without classification, classification, and the specimens are of the most ordinary kind. The compartment relating to Botany has been better attended to; the plants being systematically arranged, according to the Linnæan system, and they are in good preservation. There is, moreover, a valuable and very extensive Zoölogical collection of quadrupeds, birds, fishes, reptiles, and insects: also a magnificent Museum of preparations in wax, for students in Anatomy: this part contains a revolting exhibition of monsters. The annual revenue of the University amounts to twenty thousand pounds sterling of our money; four thousand of which are reserved for the payment of its Professors. The Botanic Garden is near the town: it is maintained in good order, and serves as a promenade for the higher class of inhabitants. We prevailed upon our fellow-travellers, the Turkish Ambassador, and Prince Márúzi, to accompany us thither; thinking that a garden might possibly be suited to Turkish taste; but persons educated in Constantinople are invariably characterized by a total disregard of all objects connected in any degree with taste or with literature. We afterwards conducted them to Buda, to visit the palace: here nothing attracted the Ambassador's notice, excepting the rich tapestry.

Among the few antiquities we saw in Pest, we noticed a large column of red porphyry in the principal street, and three pillars of the Giallo Antico marble in the coffee-house. battalions of infantry, and a company of grenadiers. The religious sects here are Catholics and Lutherans: the languages, Hungarian and German. The commerce is carried on by Greeks: it consists in corn, wine, tobacco, pottery, horses, and almost every article of luxury or convenience. Perhaps the only manufacture known in the place, and which seems to be peculiar to Pest, is that of turning upon a lathe the large tobacco-pipe bowls of the Keff-kil, imported from Constantinople. Some that we brought with us from Turkey were re-manufactured here. They are soaked in water during twenty-four hours, before they undergo this process: and one cause of the extraordinary price afterwards demanded for these pipes, arises from a loss sustained in the operation; a great number of them proving porous, and full of small cellular cavities like worm-holes, after they have begun to turn them upon the lathe; these are therefore cast away, as worth nothing. The public buildings of Pest, besides those already mentioned, are, the Hospital, situate without the town; and the Barracks, having the appearance of a palace occupying an entire street: the front of this building is ornamented with statues. There are also two Convents, one of which is for Franciscans, besides the Public Baths.

Public Buildings.

This day, being the last of our remaining in Pest, the Governor gave a splendid public dinner; and in the evening, after the theatre, being accompanied by his lady, he partook of a small supper at our inn, with a view of meeting the Turkish Ambassador, who came accompanied by

by Prince Múrázi. The next morning, (May 12.) having taken leave, with great regret, of the Baron and Baroness Leeuwen, by whom we had been so hospitably entertained, we crossed once more the bridge of boats to Buda, and took the road to Gran. Our journey conducted us through a delightful valley, covered with corn, having on each side of it mountains planted with vineyards to their summits. All this part of Hungary is highly cultivated, rich, and populous. The traveller sees everywhere pleasing villages, filled with healthy inhabitants; and the towns are not only clean, but elegant. The aspect of the country is also rendered gay in this season of the year, by the appearance of cheerful peasants working in their vineyards, with their wives and children: perhaps there is no part of the world where a better attention is shewn to the culture of the vine. Having left the Danube upon our right, the road extending between the mountains upon the left, we passed through Woroschwar and Dorogh, where we quitted the grand route to Vienna, in order to visit the mines of Schemnitz and Cremnitz. In more than one instance we observed the Latin, as a general language, in use among the inhabitants. We heard it spoken in the post-houses, by Hungarian gentlemen, who were travelling; and probably it has continued in this country as it was left by the Romans when they were possessors of the Dacian mines. Indeed there is no part of Hungary where Latin is not understood, even by the lower orders. Their pronuntiation of Latin ought, therefore, to be considered as likely to resemble the Roman:

and that it really does resemble the Roman pronuntiation, may be proved by a curious specimen of Hellenistic Latin preserved by Constantine Porphyrogenetes, in his *Ceremonial of the Byzantine Court*¹. We had no sooner left Dorogh, than we saw the town of Gran, with its fortress, upon a hill; resembling, upon a smaller scale, by its upper and lower town, the acropolis and city of Athens. The road lay through a most fertile valley: indeed the whole of this district, owing to the abundance of its productions, the beauty and grandeur of its scenery, and the flourishing state of its inhabitants, is almost unparalleled. In the midst of the numerous gardens and orchards, we saw abundance of cherry-trees, and vineyards everywhere. The old citadel of Gran stands upon a high limestone rock above the Danube; commanding the river so effectually, that it might easily prevent the passage of a single boat. The approach to the town is through an avenue of trees, planted, as in Flanders and Germany, upon either side of the public road. Gran is well built, and very clean. It was selected by a British Catholic, brother of an English Peer, as a place of residence for his family; after being prevented, by the Test Act, from serving in the English army.

army. Dr. *Townson*² informs us that he was hospitably entertained in the house of this gentleman, a Mr. Dormer, who had obtained the rank of Major in the German service. That a town of such magnitude and striking appearance, instead of being conspicuous in our best maps, should hardly be found in any one of them, is remarkable³. It was called Strigonium, but more antiently ISTRIPOLIS; and the county is now named Strigonia. It contains the tombs of some of the Hungarian kings⁴, and was once the metropolis of the whole country⁵. Its destruction by the Tartars is mentioned by *Ranzanus*⁶. In its present state, Gran contains about 6000 inhabitants.

Speaking of this city, he says: "STRIGONIUM oppidum Hungariae in ripis Danubii situm, a Budâ quo secundo flumine descenditur, triginta millibus passuum distans, arcem habet in edito colle munitissimam et pulcherrimam. Flying-Bridge.

Its archbishop enjoyed many and extensive privileges; among others, that of crowning the kings of *Hungary*¹, and of creating nobles throughout the whole extent of his archiepiscopal domain. It is famous for its warm baths²: and Dr. Townson notices a manufacture for extracting magnesia from the water, which is impregnated with Epsom salt; a hundred cubic inches yielding 700 grains of the sulphat of magnesia, together with a small portion of the carbonate and of the *muriate*³. The Danube is here of very extraordinary breadth, compared with its general appearance: we passed it by means of a flying-bridge, consisting of a large platform constructed across two barges, and held by other boats at anchor;—the most convenient kind of ferry known for the passage of large and rapid rivers. This kind of bridge is capable of conveying, at the same time, a great number of carriages, cattle, and passengers. The flying-bridge of Gran was provided with several small houses, a large bell and cupola, images, &c.—In the evening we arrived at Parkany, situate, with regard to Gran, as Pest is respecting Buda. It is a small village, at the confluence of the Gran with the Danube, Danube, containing an excellent inn. Here, having left the post-road, we hired horses according to what is called the *Vorspan*⁴ in Germany; a species of impost upon the peasants; the price being by one-third less than the expense of *post-horses*⁵.

May 13.—We journeyed from Parkany by Kömend, *Zelitz*⁶, and Lewa, to Bakabanya; where there are mines of gold and silver. The country we passed through resembled the county of Kent; and was remarkable for its high degree of cultivation. It was ten o'clock P. M. before we reached Bakabanya, in one of those delightful evenings common at this season of the year. The mine of Bakabanya is hardly mentioned by Born, although the works here have existed above four hundred years. Nothing can be more agreeably picturesque than its situation, between the town and the mountains; amidst groves of fruit-trees, that

(4) The Vorspan is used as a substitute for post-horses, where the latter cannot be had. The word Vorspan is likewise used for those horses which, during war, are required by Government for the transport of stores, ammunition, sick, wounded, &c. This Vorspan is seldom paid.

(5) We paid only two florins for eight horses, one post, from Parkany to Kömend. Where great expedition is not required, a reduction of expense, equal to two-thirds of the price of posting, may be effected by travelling with the Vorspan horses.

(6) "We met upon this road an immense caravan of corn, marching towards the Danube. The appearance of this beautiful country, although surrounded by mountains, reminded us of the county of Kent. The cottages are remarkable for their great cleanliness; and there are numerous villages. The district between Zelitz and Lewa is the most beautiful imaginable, being full of rich meadows and fields of corn, everywhere thick set with noble oaks. We passed the Gran in a boat, before arriving at Lewa, a small but clean village; where, after some hesitation whether we should proceed by Bath or Bakabanya, we decided for the latter, on account of its mines." Cripps's MS. Journal.

that were now covered with blossoms; being also shaded by enormous oaks and other large trees of the forest. The inhabitants consider their MINE of Bakabanya as ranking next in importance to those of Cremnitz, not only for the gold it annually yields, but also for the silver. In our account of the Tellurium mine at Nagyag, we noticed some instances where the ores of gold did not contain silver; otherwise it might be stated as a general observation applying to all the mines, whether of the north of Hungary, or of the Bannat, or of Transylvania, that every ore containing GOLD, contains also a certain portion of SILVER. This was afterwards stated to us by Professor Passern at Schemnitz, and by others acquainted with the Hungarian mines, as an observation admitting of no exception. And vice versá, every mineral, considered as an ore of SILVER, however pure the silver may appear, is also said to contain GOLD; even the richest sulphurets of that metal, called vitreous and *ductile silver ore*¹.

The next morning (May 14) we were occupied in collecting minerals from the *mine*². The ore dug here consists of clay and ochreous quartz. It is richer in gold than

(1) This does not, however, agree with Klaproth's analysis of the sulphuret of silver, who makes it to consist of eighty-seven parts of SILVER, and fifteen of SULPHUR. See Analytical Essays, vol. I. p. 140. Lond. 1801.

(2) Besides the rich ore of the mine, which consists of quartz penetrated by auriferous clay, and by the oxide of iron, we obtained here the following minerals:

1. Native gold, in quartz.
2. Black silver, with auriferous pyrites.
3. Sulphuret of silver, containing gold.
4. Black silver, with primary crystals of the sulphat of barytes, &c. &c.

than that of any other mine in all Hungary; but it does not hence follow that this is the most productive mine. It is hardly necessary to state, that the poorest mines have sometimes the richest ores; as in the example of the mine of native silver at Königsberg in Norway. Owing, however, to the rich quality of the Bakabanya ores, they have a method of estimating their value which reverses the method of calculation used at Schemnitz. The ores of the latter are called silver ores; those of the former, gold ores. The miners of Schemnitz calculate that one mark of their silver contains so many deniers of gold: those of Bakabanya, that a certain weight of their gold contains so many *lotos*³ of silver. We obtained a great variety of specimens, but none of them equal in beauty to the minerals of Transylvania; among others, the rare mineral lately alluded to; namely, the ductile sulphuret of silver. It is more common at Schemnitz. The magistrates of the town accompanied us to see the mine and the works for stamping and washing the ore. In these there was nothing remarkable, excepting the manner of exhibiting the arenaceous gold and silver in the wash-houses. This is done by a person holding in his hands a wooden vessel, containing the mud of the mine attenuated with water, which is shaken by repeated concussions of the vessel against his body. During this operation, and frequently changing the water, the gold is gradually driven towards the side of the machine, in the form of a yellow shining mud; and the silver is seen following it, in a state of extreme division, not unlike steel filings. We were admitted into the Bakabanya mine by means of a level, with the greatest possible facility:—but having to relate our visit to the larger mines of Schemnitz and Cremnitz, we shall not particularly describe its interior. The mountain itself is formed by an abutment of argillaceous schistus; dipping under the great plain which extends towards Tyrnau, and to the *Danube*¹.

Schemnitz.

The principal part of the road from Bakabanya to Schemnitz exhibits that grandeur of scenery which is represented by the best pictures of Gaspar Poussin: but some parts of it display the richer and milder dispositions of landscape characteristic of the paintings of Claude. The views of Schemnitz in approaching the town, and of Wind-schadt and Siegelsberg before reaching it, would be considered, by all admirers of beautiful scenery, as well worth a journey thither, independently of any other inducement. The road, although constructed in the midst of mountains, is not inferior, either in breadth or excellence, to any of the roads about London; and the traveller, surrounded by the sublimest natural scenery, sees to his surprise the greatest artificial labours accomplished with neatness, ornament, and economy; beautiful roads through recesses, and over steeps, that would otherwise be impassable; churches crowning the most elevated summits; towns and villages; gardens and vineyards; all decorating, without diminishing, the wild grandeur grandeur of the Hungarian Alps. If, for any other country and climate than his own, an Englishman were disposed to quit his native land, he might well be tempted to fix his residence in this part of Hungary; to enjoy the beauties of nature, where the inhabitants, owing to their elevated situation, breathe a pure, wholesome, and bracing atmosphere; and are remarkable for active industry, and civility to strangers. By whatsoever side Schemnitz is approached, there is a full hour's ascent before getting thither: but the acclivity has been rendered as easy as it was possible to make it; and in no part of it will the stranger complain of being retarded.

the town.

Upon our arrival, we found the town prepared for the reception of the two princes, Anton and Reiner, brothers of the EMPEROR. The inn to which we were conducted deserves to be mentioned, as perhaps superior to every other in Europe; and certainly as the cleanest in the world. Such was the extraordinary neatness of the apartments, and of every thing belonging to them, that we would not permit the servants to bring our baggage into the chambers we occupied. It is true that this might be in some measure owing to the expectation, universally entertained at the time, that the town would become filled with visitants of rank from Vienna, accompanying the suite of the two Princes: but the houses of Schemnitz are generally kept clean: many of them might vie, in this respect, with the neatest dwellings in Holland. There is here a College of Mines; and in no part of the world is the national importance of the science of Mineralogy more fully manifested. The

Chemical Laboratory.

College consists of one hundred and twelve students, of all nations; but principally from Germany. There was one student, however, even from Spain; where mineralogy is at its lowest ebb. The Chemical Laboratory belonging to this College is very spacious; and it is well furnished, at the expense of the Crown, with the apparatus necessary for making experiments. There are two Professors who deliver public lectures, Passern and Möhling; besides a number of persons employed in giving private instruction. Professor Passern delivered lectures in Chemistry and Mineralogy. Professor Möhling's lectures were confined to the mechanical arts, and to the labours necessary in mining operations: these Lectures were illustrated by a great variety of models and mechanical instruments. Professor Möhling also bears the title of a Counsellor of Mines. Soon after our arrival, we waited upon these gentlemen: and it is impossible for us to do justice, in this brief acknowledgment, either to the hospitality with which they received us, or to their patient and unremitted attention to all our inquiries; and to the readiness of their communications upon all subjects, when we applied to them for information. They conducted us to the Laboratory, where we found the students busily occupied in assaying the different ores, and in other experiments of metallurgic chemistry. These young men, who appeared to be generally about eighteen or twenty years of age, or upwards, wore the uniform of the mines. Some of them were of noble families; but the same uniform, designating an officer of the mines, is worn by all the students, from the prince to the son of a peasant. It consists of a jacket of grey cloth, with gold gold epaulets; black pantaloons; a girdle of black leather, with a gold clasp in front; and a short black leather apron, which is the most singular part of the dress, as it is not worn in front, but hangs behind. In this uniform they are considered as being properly clad, even to go to Court, if it were necessary; wearing it at the public balls and assemblies: and the same dress was worn, upon all public occasions, by the two brothers of the Emperor, during the time they remained in Schemnitz.

May 15.—As we desired to accompany their Highnesses during their descent into the mines, and they were not expected before the evening of the next day, we hastened forward to Cremnitz, that we might avail ourselves of the interval before their arrival to visit the works at that place. The road to Cremnitz lies nearly due north of Schemnitz. It passes through forests, and beneath hanging woods, or by the side of rivers, among the most beautiful villages. The first half of this distance is by a descent, from Schemnitz to a place called Yalack. At two hours' distance from Schemnitz, we came to what is called the Lead Foundry, and halted to visit the fabric. It consists of several furnaces, employed in roasting pulverized galena, or sulphuret of lead, so as to expel the sulphur. This powder is spread out over a very lengthened superficies, upon the whole of which a flame is powerfully and continually impelled; being confined at the same time beneath the low arched roof of the furnace; the workmen from time to time raking the galena as it becomes partially fused, until the whole of the sulphur is driven off. After leaving Yalack, we ascended the whole way to Cremnitz, the oldest mining-town in all

Hungary. Rain fell abundantly. Fortunately for us, upon our arrival at Cremnitz, a young Italian of Trieste, named Gayio, hearing of the coming of strangers, called at the inn; and after introducing himself as an agent of the mines and inspector of the mint, offered to conduct us to every thing worthy of notice. It is to his kindness that we are indebted for the accurate information we obtained respecting every thing that regards the mines of Cremnitz. Having first obtained permission from the magistrates and superior officers, he conducted us to the principal mine, prepared for the coming of the two Archdukes. This mine is the private property of individuals: it was visited by Joseph the Second, by Maximilian, and by other princes; being always selected for that purpose, owing to the extraordinary facility of its entrance. The passage into it is so commodious, that we were conducted in a carriage drawn by horses, which had been placed ready for the arrival of the Archdukes. We were two hours employed in the examination of its interior; being conducted to the vein of gold ore by levels kept everywhere clean and dry. The miners were then employed in digging this ore; and as they had laid open a very rich part of it, we took the picks into our hands, and fell to work ourselves, that we might the better understand the nature of the vein. It consisted of white quartz, containing auriferous silver ore, and auriferous pyrites. The latter, when properly stamped and washed, yielded from two to three drachms of GOLD in the hundred. The direction of the vein was north and south, being at the same time inclined from the west towards the east, according to an angle which varies from 25° to 30° and 40°. We brought brought away several specimens of the ore, which we detached ourselves from the vein. Like many of the Hungarian auriferous ores, it consists of clay, quartz, galena, and the oxide of iron, traversing a porphyritic rock beneath a superincumbent stratum of slate. To the east of Cremnitz, it is separated from Neusohl by a steep mountain of the same porphyritic rock, covered with slate. Some years ago, the superficies of this mine, being too much excavated, gave way, and fell into the cavity of the mine, leaving an opening, in the form of a vast and frightful crater, like that of Fahlun copper-mine in Sweden, where the same accident occurred. When we had brought our specimens of the ore out of the mine, and examined them by day-light, we perceived that they all consisted of the same substance; that is to say, of auriferous quartz, speckled with minute glittering particles of auriferous pyrites, and penetrated either by a buff-coloured clay, or by an argentiferous sulphuret of lead, and the oxide of iron. Having visited the interior of this mine, Signor Gayio conducted us to the Imperial Mine, to view the enormous machinery by which the pumps are worked for draining water from the mines; and the ore and rubble raised; and the workmen conveyed up and down. In every thing we witnessed, both here and in Transylvania, the art of mining is conducted upon so magnificent a scale, and at the same time with such discreet economy, that it must be confessed the Germans have left other nations far behind them in managing these important resources of national wealth. This is the first impression, made by viewing their superior skill skill and industry in the art of mining; the apparent ease, neatness, and advantage, with which the works are carried on; the spacious entrances to their mines; their dry, airy, and cleanly levels; and the great encouragement given to the study of mineralogy, and to all mining speculations. But upon a strict inquiry made into the statistics of the mines of Cremnitz, a second impression followed: it then seemed to us as if their golden age was passed; owing to conviction we had of the poverty of the German Government, and of its inability to advance the sums necessary for carrying on the works. There are several mines at Cremnitz; some belonging to individuals, others to the Crown. With regard to those belonging to the Crown, upon the success of which the welfare of all the others depended, such had been the distracted state of the continental affairs, that Government, of late years, had been compelled to appropriate to other purposes the money necessary for their support: in consequence of this circumstance, at the time of our arrival, the public works languished, and the directors had been induced to have recourse to many impolitic and frivolous expedients. The average profit of these mines to individuals is reckoned as about equal to the gains derived from them by Government.

We shall now detail the whole process for the reduction of the ore, from the first moment of its excavation, until the development of the precious metals; as the same mode of treatment is used for all the Hungarian ores, and they are all brought to Cremnitz to be smelted. Of the precious metals contained in the Cremnitz ore, silver being predominant, dominant, the value of the ore is always estimated according to the silver: and as it was said of the Bakabanya ore, that one mark of the gold contained from three to four lotos of silver, so at Cremnitz they reckon the average value of the ore by saying that one mark of the silver contains from nine to twenty deniers of gold. The last process, that of separating the gold and silver, is very curious; and we shall therefore be minute in its explanation. Of all the works seen at Cremnitz, those of the grand Laboratory employed for this purpose are the most interesting; because they relate to an operation which is no where else conducted upon so grand a scale, nor indeed does there exist such a National laboratory in any other country. Although it may be considered as one of the finest chemical exhibitions in the world, it is rarely shewn to strangers. Germans delight in making a mystery of every thing; but this process for the separation of the gold and silver being one of the principal resources of their empire, foreigners ought not to wonder at any difficulty hitherto found in obtaining admission to the Laboratory.

I. The first operation with the produce of the MINE is of course that, common to all mines, of stamping the ore. But the richer ores are not submitted to the *stamping machines*¹. They are carefully broken with hammers into small pieces, about the size of beans; which being mixed with lead,

a single operation of the furnace is sufficient for their reduction¹.

Crude fusion. With regard to the common ores, after being stamped and washed, they are brought, in the form of a fine powder or sand, to Cremnitz. Here they are exposed to what is called the crude fusion; being simply smelted into a compound regulus, which is called lech; consisting of all the following metals, besides sulphur,—gold, silver, lead, copper, iron, arsenic, bismuth, and cobalt.—This is the first operation.

Evaporation
of the Sulphur.

II. The second operation relates to the treatment of the lech, or result of the first crude fusion. This is exposed to a furnace, the fire of which is regulated in the following manner. First, there is placed a layer of wood; then a layer of charcoal; and, lastly, a layer of the lech, broken into pieces. The fuel being ignited, the lech is here roasted for the evaporation of the sulphur.

Enriched
fusion.

III. A third operation then follows. After the lech has been roasted, they add to it powder of the richer ores; and the whole is smelted in another furnace. This is called the second fusion, or the fusion enriched.

IV. The result, or regulus, obtained from the second fusion, is then carried to another furnace. Here it is again smelted, with

(1) That is to say, it is reduced to a regulus, containing lead, and silver and gold: the separation of these metals is described in the sequel.

with the addition of the richest ores. This third fusion is called the fusion upon lead; because when the furnace is tapped, and the metal begins to flow into a receiver made with charcoal and clay, they cast lead upon it*: this, after melting, combines with the gold and silver, and falls to the bottom of the vessel. During this operation, the lighter metals—such as copper, iron, cobalt, bismuth, and arsenic—rise to the surface, and are raked off in the form of scoriae, which they carry, as lech, to be fused again in the first operation. The lead thus combined with gold and silver is collected into large crucibles, and carried to the fourth fusion, or fifth operation, for the separation of the lead. This will now be described.

V. The furnace used for the separation of the lead is called a purification furnace. The shape of it resembles a hollow sphere, whereof the upper part is so contrived, that it may be taken off like a lid, being raised by large chains². Here the richest ores that can be procured are added to the compound of lead, silver, and gold: and the whole is fused; not with charcoal, but by means of a flame drawn over the superficies, uninterruptedly, for twenty-four hours at the least. During this process, the lead becomes calcined.

(2) Sometimes, instead of casting pure lead into the receiver, they use for this purpose an ore of lead, as galena, which, by the intense heat, fuses in the same manner, amidst the other metals.

(3) A beautiful model of the purification furnace is exhibited to the students at Schemnitz, by Professor Mühling: but even the model is of enormous size; and without an engraved representation, the description of it must be defective.

CHAP. IV.

A portion of it is absorbed by the bottom of the furnace, consisting of wood-ashes and silica; another portion escapes in a gaseous form; but the greater part is raked off as it rises to the surface, in the form of galena, by men employed with instruments for that purpose. During all this operation, the gold and silver concentrate more and more; until at the last they are found, pure and combined together in a cake of metal, at the bottom of the purification furnace. Then follows the sixth, and the most beautiful of all the operations;—that of separating the gold from the silver.

Beautiful process of separating the Gold from the Silver.

VI. The cake, or combined regulus of gold and silver obtained from the purification furnace, is separated into thin pieces in this manner. It is melted, and, in a state of fusion, cast into cold water. By this means it is obtained with a very extended superficies, and easily divided into a number of thin scales. These are put into immense glass retorts, of a spherical form, nearly filled with nitric acid. Here the silver dissolves; a gentle heat being communicated to the retorts, to accelerate the solution. It has been usual to exclude foreigners from the great Laboratory where this takes place; but as we had witnessed every operation, we were also permitted to view the interior of this chamber. The sight was beautiful. It was a spacious and lofty hall, filled with enormous globes of glass, ranged in even rows, whence the nitrous gas was escaping, in red fumes, to the roof; the solution of the silver being visible in all of them, by the effervescence it caused; the gold falling at the same time, time, in the form of a black powder, to the bottom of every retort. After the solution of the silver is completely effected, the acid containing the silver, by augmenting the heat, is made to pass into another retort, and the gold is left behind in the former vessel. Afterwards, increasing the heat to a great degree on the side of the silver, the whole of the acid is driven off, and the silver remains beautifully crystallized within the retort. All the glass globes containing the crystallized silver are then cast into a common furnace, where the glass, by its levity remaining on the surface of the metal, is removed in the form of scoriae. This is the last operation. The gold is smelted into ingots of 12,000 florins each. The annual produce of gold and silver at Cremnitz amounts to 800,000 marks of SILVER, and 3000 of GOLD. The nitric acid, of which such an immense proportion is used in separating the gold from the silver, is not wasted during the process; much of it is collected during its evaporation, to be used again. A great quantity of this acid is made in the Laboratory, by distilling equal parts of sulphat of iron and nitrat of potass; the product falling into the large glass retorts before mentioned. In the assaying laboratory, instead of the long process we have described for extracting the precious metals from their ores, two simple and easy experiments are sufficient. The first is a trial of the pulverized ore by cupellation. About a tea-spoonful of the pulverized ore, first weighed, is put into a small cupel, made of calcined bones: this being exposed to the heat of a powerful furnace, the lead, semi-metals, &c. are either absorbed by the cupel, or they are sublimed: nothing remains afterwards in the cupel, but a small bead of combined gold and silver; and by the proportion of its weight to the original weight of the ore, the value of the latter is determined. The gold is then separated from the silver, by the solution of the latter in nitric acid; and the difference of the weight of the gold, from the whole weight of the two metals combined, determines the quantity of silver dissolved by the acid. We were permitted to practise these experiments in the assaying laboratory, and to bring away with us the results, together with specimens of the ore, in the various appearances it assumes during the six different operations to which it is exposed. An hundred pounds weight of their richest ore contained from four to five marks of silver; and each mark of the silver about fifteen deniers of gold. We next saw the Mint. At this time six machines were employed day and night, with four men to each. They used what are called swinging levers; coining only pieces of seven creutzers. A long time had elapsed since there had been a gold coinage. All the silver bullion sent from England to Germany was brought here for coinage: it was considered as being remarkable for its great purity. Their specimens of gold ore, even when it is most rich, have nothing beautiful in their appearance. We bought, however, at Cremnitz, other minerals, that were both beautiful and rare. The most remarkable are mentioned in a Note¹.

The situation of Cremnitz is so elevated, that the Church of St. John, near the town, is believed to stand upon the highest point of all Hungary. Notwithstanding the fine season of the year when we visited this place, we were glad to have our rooms heated with stoves. It is the oldest of all the towns where there are mines: and of the seven famous mining districts—those of Schemnitz, Cremnitz, Neusohl, Königsberg, Bakabanya, Libeten, and Tiln—CREMNITZ, although not the most abundant in precious ore, is said to be the richest. Its deepest mine has been worked to the depth of three hundred fathoms: but there are several mines here; some belonging to the Crown; and others divided into shares among a number of private individuals: by purchasing one, or more, any person is allowed to become a proprietor.

WE left Cremnitz (May 16) in the afternoon, and returned to Schemnitz. Here we found all the inhabitants assembled, waiting the coming of the young Princes; the windows being filled with spectators. The town was brilliantly illuminated, and the noise of cannon announced their approach. It was, however, nearly midnight before they arrived: a great concourse of the miners and other spectators preceding the carriages, and shouting "Vivat!" gave us the first news of their being in the town. The whole procession passed the windows of our inn. Never did Princes travel with less ostentation. The two Archdukes were in a common German waggon, drawn by the horses of the peasants, with peasants for their postillions: they were followed by a train of similar vehicles, and some baggage-carts. During the whole night, the noise of drums, musical instruments, and fire-works, kept up a rejoicing in the streets until the morning.

Princes.

May 17.—We were occupied the whole day in inspecting, buying, and packing minerals, assisted by the two professors, Passern and Möhlting, who came to visit us. Some specimens of crystallized sulphuret of antimony being offered to us for sale, containing flakes of native gold among the crystals, crystals, Professor Möhling suspected that the association had been artificially contrived; and upon placing the specimens in hot water, the gold became disengaged from a gum cement, and the trick was manifest. This induced us to submit our Transylvanian specimens to the same trial, and one or two of them proved equally spurious; that is to say, the antimony and the gold were severally genuine, but their association was false. Professor Möhling, and one of the students, Mr. Pistl, dined with us. From these gentlemen, and from our own subsequent observations, we obtained the following particulars respecting the MINES OF SCHEMNITZ.

Schemnitz.

The whole town of Schemnitz is undermined; and to such a degree, that some of the houses have already fallen, owing to excavations beneath their foundations. All the metallic veins extend north and south; their inclination or dipping being from west to east, at an angle of about 60°. They run parallel to each other. The principal veins are six in number; but there are many smaller ramifications from these, which often prove very rich. The six principal veins are as follow; beginning from the west, and proceeding eastward.

Theresa-
schadt.

I. The first is called Theresa-schadt. In this vein the matrix of the ore is principally clay, and red ferruginous jasper, or sinople, so penetrated by clay, and by the oxide of iron, that it is often friable. The ore itself is for the most part lead, the matrix being everywhere traversed by small veins and crystals of quartz. The average width of this vein is two fathoms: its depth unknown.

II. The

II. The second is called the Hospital vein, and corresponds with that of Theresa; but it is broader, being about twenty-two fathoms wide, although not pure throughout this width. It contains many foreign substances belonging to the mountain in which it lies. It is distant from the Theresa vein 120 fathoms.

CHAP. V.
Hospital
Vein.

III. The third vein, or parallel, eastward of the preceding, is called *Oberbiber-stohl*n. From this vein the whole county of the mines receives its appellation. Its ores are divided into 128 shares; whereof 125 belong to the Crown, and three to individuals. The distance of the *Oberbiber-stohl*n from that of the Hospital is eighty fathoms. This vein differs essentially, in its nature, from the others. The matrix of the ore is clay, but without sinople: it contains a great deal of lime, and a small portion of quartz; but the principal part of its crystallizations are due to the lime.

Oberbiberstohl.

IV. The fourth vein is called Johan-schadt. It contains the same ores as the third; the best being found at a great depth. Its distance from the *Oberbiber-stohl*n equals a hundred fathoms.

Johan-schadt.

V. The fifth vein is that of Stephano-schadt, at present the most famous of all the mines of Schemnitz. This vein occurs between Schemnitz and Wind-schadt: and it should rather be considered as an assemblage of several contiguous parallel veins than of one alone, reaching to the breadth of eight fathoms; but since the intermediary minerals are rich in precious ore, a name has been given to the whole as of a single vein. Its distance from that of Johan-schadt is

schadt.

300 fathoms. The works carried on in this vein are upon a more magnificent scale than in any of the others; the galleries are better constructed, and the machinery is of greater magnitude, and more costly: but it is never exhibited to strangers; even their Highnesses the Archdukes were not permitted to descend into this mine.

Green-stohn.

VI. The sixth vein is that of Green-stohn, a vein hardly known. It is the last which has been discovered at Schemnitz. The matrix of the ore is schistus, indurated clay, and pyrites.

The two first veins lie near to the surface, and are very rich: they were the earliest discovered. The remains of their rich ores lie in the neighbourhood of Schemnitz, to the north of all the other mines. The riches of the third and fourth veins lie at the depth of 1000 fathoms, upon the south of Schemnitz, towards Wind-schadt. The greatest produce of the Schemnitz ores, and which continued only during eight or ten years, was derived from a ramification of the third vein, distant 2000 fathoms south of the town, and called Siegelsberg. In the year 1763, the proprietors obtained, in one week, 1763 marks of silver: the manner of calculating being always, as before stated, how many lots of silver are contained in a hundred weight of the ore, and how many deniers of gold in every mark of the silver. From the fifth vein, that of Stephano-schadt, in the short space of fourteen days, were obtained 700 marks of pure silver. Eight men having sunk a shaft into the same vein, realized in fifteen days a clear profit of 80,000 florins. During the time

time they were employed in this work, they made their appearance with visages as black as if their faces had been rubbed with the dust of plumbago: possibly, this fact may serve to explain the nature of the ore. The mine of Siegelsberg, at present, offers little profit; but as the ore always contains a portion of gold, they continue to work it, notwithstanding its poverty. The whole length of the excavations at Schemnitz equals 3000 fathoms; and these mines have been worked during six or seven centuries. The quintal (hundred weight) of the third vein once produced 2200 lotos of pure silver; and the average of silver in the quintal does not exceed, in general, more than from five to ten lotos of that metal. All these remarks apply only to the Imperial mines. Westward of Schemnitz there are many other mines, which belong only to individuals: concerning these, it is difficult to obtain valid information.

The manner of working the mines is fourfold. First, by a horizontal level, following the direction of the VEIN. Secondly, by an inclined plane, ascending according to its inclination; forming always stages of wood, as galleries for the workmen. Thirdly, by an inclined plane, descending in the contrary direction. Fourthly, by an excavation on either side of the VEIN, which is the most frequent at Schemnitz; owing to the great width of the veins.

working the Mines.

The number of miners at Schemnitz, employed by the Crown, amounts to 8000: at Cremnitz there are only 1500. Formerly they all carried arms; but this custom no longer exists.

exists'. Their payment is regulated by the ore which they find. When this is very rich, they are paid according to the quantity and quality of the ore raised: when it proves poor, they receive wages. The stamping-works of Schemnitz contain a thousand hammers, each hammer stamping daily three quintals of ore; and they are worked every day in the week, excepting Sunday. The whole expense to Government of working these mines is estimated at 50,000 florins per month; and the profit, clear of all expense for the same space of time, amounts to 12,000 florins. The average value of the ore of Schemnitz is thus rated: a quintal (cwt.) of the ore contains from five to ten lotos of silver; and one mark of the silver, from three to six deniers of gold: but this is liable to very considerable variation. One quintal of the ore of the Oberüber-stohln vein has been known to yield 2200 lotos of pure silver, after its separation from the gold.

In the evening of this day, (May 17,) we visited Baron de Stågen, who, by making application to Count de Sporck, the nobleman entrusted with the care and education of the two young Princes, obtained permission for us to accompany them into the mine of Wind-schadt, upon the following day.

May 18.—We rose at six o'clock; and at seven were presented by Count de Sporck to their Highnesses the Archdukes.

The

(1) It is to the kindness of the Archduke Anton that the author owes this information; together with some other facts concerning the mines of Schemnitz, which his Highness condescendingly communicated.

The elder of the two, the Archduke Anton, asked many questions of our travels, in all of which he displayed a very considerable degree of information; and kindly invited us to accompany him upon his visit to the mines of Cremnitz. Being told that we had recently returned from an expedition thither, he mentioned several things concerning those mines, which added to our stock of information. We then set out for the Wind-schadt Mine, one of the most considerable in the neighbourhood of the town. In our way thither, the Count de Sporck informed us that there are 42,000 inhabitants in the environs of Schemnitz, almost all of whom are employed in the mines. This estimate rather exceeded the account given of their population by the persons resident in Schemnitz, who affirm that there are within the town 25,000 inhabitants, and about the same number of individuals employed in working the mines situate in the environs. Both males and females begin to labour so early as six or seven years of age, and continue the employment until they die. Upon our arrival at Wind-schadt, we entered the mine by a level floored the whole way with planks, and so spacious, that three persons, with ease, might walk abreast of each other. The entrance to the mine was adorned with garlands, in honour of the two Princes; and a discharge of artillery announced the moment of their descent. The floor and sides of this mine were so clean, that a lady in her court apparel might have accompanied us, as through the apartments of a palace. We continued to a very great distance along this level, conducted by the light of torches. When we reached the vein at its termination, the Archduke Anton asked several questions respecting the produce and associations of the ore, proving that he was well acquainted with mineralogy. By the answers given to his Highness, we learned, that the richest ores of this mine lie much lower than the level whereby we entered;—that the ore upon a level with the horizon does not contain more than from five to eight lotos of silver in the quintal. After having visited two or three veins, in different directions, (those of the Wind-schadt Mine being various in their determination,) we were conducted to a chamber brilliantly illuminated, and prepared for the reception of their Highnesses. As we approached the entrance, a large transparent painting exhibited an inscription, mentioning the day on which the two Archdukes had honoured the Wind-schadt Mine with their presence. As soon as they entered the illuminated chamber, a band of musicians, stationed in an elevated gallery of the mine, above our heads, began to play national airs. As a curious accompaniment to this music, there were then seen two men, descending through a shaft of the mine to the spot where the two Archdukes were placed: these persons being let down into the presence of their Highnesses, began to exemplify the manner in which the sides of the mine are boarded, and the timbering applied. After this, an officer of the mines, accompanied by one of the miners, descended into the lower works; and presently returning, brought up with him some specimens of the ore, and several beautiful minerals, minerals, to be presented to the two *Archdukes*¹; the musicians continuing to play during the whole time. Having quitted this mine, we were conducted to another part of the town of Wind-schadt, where we descended by a staircase to the depth of two hundred and eight fathoms; and afterwards along a level to a considerable distance, where we were shewn an hydraulic machine for pumping the mines: it consisted of two parallel levers, worked by a water-wheel, and which is stopped by means of friction. It is impossible to give further description of such machinery without models or charts.

In the evening, a comedy was acted by the young students and ladies of Schemnitz. Madame Möhling performed the principal female character: and after the comedy there was a ball, in honour of the Archdukes. We were invited to both. Their Highnesses complimented the inhabitants by appearing as miners; wearing the peculiar dress which has been already described as the uniform of the mines, at the theatre, and afterwards at the ball. It was highly gratifying to us to bear testimony to the countenance and judicious patronage bestowed by the German Government upon every thing connected with the science of mineralogy, and with the art of mining. The dances

Highnesses.

(1) Upon this occasion, their Highnesses most condescendingly presented a portion of those minerals to us. The Archduke Anton gave to the author a magnificent specimen of the crystallized sulphuret of antimony; which he has since often exhibited, during his Mineralogical Lectures in the University of Cambridge.

dances consisted of minuets and waltzes. During the time the latter continued, being stationed with the two young princes in the center of the apartment, around which the waltzers flew with surprising velocity, there was no possibility of retreating; nor did there seem to be any prospect of an end to the rapid whirling of the couples thus engaged, until about midnight, when the royal party retired.

May 19.—Their Highnesses set out this day to visit the mines of Newsohl and Cremnitz. A mechanist of Schemnitz brought to us a very ingenious model, representing the interior of one of those buildings now established in many parts of Hungary where there are mines, and called “a wash-house.” This sort of building is also, and most properly, denominated “a house of economy.” As we brought this model to England, where we have never seen any building of the same kind, we shall give a brief description of a wash-house that we visited near Wind-schadt, in company with the Conseiller des Mines. He assured us, that since the establishment of wash-houses has become general, the gains derived from them equal the whole profit of working the mines. They afford a curious proof of the truth of the old adage, that “necessity is the mother of invention;” for there is every reason to believe, if the produce of the mines had not diminished, the wash-houses would never have existed. For these houses, all the discarded minerals are now collected which have for ages been heaped as waste; and all the stones used in filling void places in the mines. Women and children are employed upon these minerals, minerals, in the wash-houses, at the low rate of four or five kreutzers for each day's labour. They are seated at different tables, where they work in the following manner.

A series of washing-troughs are ranged one below another, from the roof to the floor of the building; having iron sieves at the bottom, increasing in the width and coarseness of their texture from the lower to the higher sieve; the highest sieve being wide enough to let stones of a certain size pass through; while through the lower sieves nothing passes but gravel, and ultimately nothing but sand. A wheelbarrow, filled with the waste of the mines, is emptied into the upper trough, and there washed. All the stones that do not pass through the first sieve are then taken to the first table to be examined, and the ores picked out; those that are caught by the second sieve, to the second table; and so on with the rest. In this manner an immense quantity of discarded ores, that were cast away when mines were less economically worked, are recovered and prepared for smelting. But the sand which ultimately escapes through the lower sieve is directed with the streams of water through channels, until it is made to fall over inclined planes covered with woollen cloths; and thus a very considerable quantity of wash-gold is arrested in its progress by the cloths; in the same manner that the Gipsies of Transylvania and Walachia obtain gold dust, by washing the sands of their rivers. The Conseiller assured us that the profit from a single wash-house is so great, that it has, in many instances, entirely suspended the labours of mining; in order to attend solely to this branch of revenue.

The

The most beautiful minerals of Schemnitz, (those, indeed, which may be considered as almost peculiar to its mines,) are amethysts; invested by efflorescent manganese-spar, in a minute crystallization upon the surface of the amethystine crystals. The most valuable are, those rich sulphurets of silver, called, by the Germans, *Weisgulden Erz*¹; which is so malleable, that medals have been struck from the unwrought ore, in honour of regal visitants; particularly of *Augustus the First of POLAND*². We saw several collections of minerals from the Schemnitz mines; and they all contained more or less of this ore. The sulphurets of silver are found both in the massive and crystallized state. In the massive state it is associated with white earthy pearl-spar, and with quartz crystals. Its association with the latter is so remarkable, that sometimes it appears upon the tops of the quartz crystals as if it had been fused over them; or applied with a camel's hair pencil when in a moist state³. Sometimes they are so penetrated by the black sulphuret of silver, as to appear of a jet

(1) Literally signifying, "White-money ore;" because silver is coined from it. This ore is also called Glaz Erz; which means shining or vitreous ore: but the name is often improperly translated glass-ore. The sulphuret of silver is found abundantly in the Stephano-schadt mine of Schemnitz.

(2) It consists of eighty-five parts of pure silver, combined with only fifteen of sulphur; being so fusible, that it melts even in the flame of a candle.

(3) The other minerals of Schemnitz, besides the ores of gold and silver, are exceedingly numerous: and among them may be mentioned,

1. Primary crystallizations of quartz, improperly called crystallized chalcedony.
Such specimens are probably brought hither from Transylvania.
2. Phosphates and carbonates of lead, crystallized.

a jet colour : and in no other country are the dodecahedral crystallizations of quartz exhibited under such a variety of singular shapes and aggregations⁴. Native silver is found in the Stephano-schadt mine; and very beautiful crystallizations of red antimonial, or ruby, silver. Fossil coal has been known for many years, in different parts of Hungary. In the Bamat, it is found beneath the stratum of auriferous sand whence the Gipsies obtain their wash gold. Lately it had been dug at Schemnitz; but it was considered rather as a curiosity than an article of utility. Professor Passern exhibited to us some large specimens of what is called brown coal, found near Schemnitz.

May 20.—We were employed in collecting and analyzing minerals, and in making experiments, in the public laboratory, with the students of the College of Mines; who are called practitioners. Almost all the students smoke tobacco; seldom making their appearance in a morning without tobacco-pipes in their mouths. They had recently discovered

Laboratory.

3. Red plumose hydro-sulphurets of antimony, crystallized.
4. Primary diaphanous crystals of the sulphate of barytes.
5. Red sulphurets of arsenic, crystallized, &c. &c.
6. Red antimonial silver, crystallized in quartz, with the sulphurets of lead and iron.
7. The white silver of Werner; rich in gold. It is a triple sulphuret of lead, iron, and antimony, containing silver and gold.
8. Beautiful diaphanous crystals of the sulphuret of zinc, of a yellow topaz colour.
9. Stalactite magnesian limestone, investing crystals of the sulphate of barytes, &c. &c.

(4) Owing to this circumstance, Scopoli composed a work entitled "Crystallographia Hungarica," which is filled with these mineral deformities.

discovered an art of varnishing the most common earthenware pipes, so as to give them the colours of the noble opal. This is done simply by dipping the earthenware in the solution of silver in nitric acid, after its separation from gold, and then exposing it to the heat of a porcelain furnace. Such a varnish might perhaps be introduced with advantage into our potteries.

May 21.—We visited the most celebrated collections of minerals at Schemnitz and in the neighbourhood; particularly one (belonging to the Conseiller des Mines at Wind-schadt) remarkable for the superior beauty and abundance of the amethysts it contained. The owner afterwards conducted us to the Council-chamber of the mines belonging to the Crown. It resembled a bank; several clerks being employed writing at their desks. Upon shelves were exhibited the most magnificent specimens of the sulphurets of silver that had been lately found. Such specimens are here exposed for sale, according to their weight, to accommodate students in mineralogy; without the smallest increase of price in consequence of their beauty or rarity; being estimated only according to the value of the silver they contain. We bought several; and sent them to England, together with specimens of every kind of ore found in the *Hungarian mines*¹.

(1) There is one remarkable ore called (Tiger Erz) Tiger Ore, which is found also at Freyberg. (See Brochant, "Traité de Minér." tom. II. p. 134. Paris, 1808.) It consists of the black sulphuret of silver, imbedded in its matrix, in the form of black spherical nodules, on a grey porphyritic rock; so as to resemble the spots upon a tiger's or leopard's skin: and hence its name.

May 22.—We rose at five this morning, to accompany Mr. Charles Pistl, by his appointment, into the Paquer-stohl; one of the largest and deepest mines of Schemnitz, situate precisely beneath the dwelling of one of its principal inhabitants. We descended one hundred and eighty yards; and were then conducted, by levels as airy and spacious as the corridors of a fine theatre, to different parts of the mine, where labourers were working the ore. Here they shewed to us an inscription, containing the names of the Emperors MAXIMILIAN and JOSEPH THE SECOND; with the dates of their respective visits to the interior of this mine. The Emperor Maximilian descended into the Paquer-stohl, A. D. 1779. All the Imperial mines have a connection with each other; offering, in their whole extent, a subterraneous passage, which reaches to the astonishing length of three thousand fathoms, nearly three miles and a half. The sight of the interior of the Paquer-stohl convinced us that there are no other mines in the world like those of Hungary. How wretched in comparison appear the mines of Cornwall and Wales! where it is sometimes necessary to creep upon the hands and knees, wet through, over all sorts of rubbish, in order to pass along a level from one shaft to another. Even the antient mines of Sweden are inferior in comparison with these of Schemnitz. The mode of descent into our English mines is always attended with difficulty, and almost always with danger: but the inside of an Hungarian mine may be compared to the interior arrangement of one of our best frigates, where space has been so husbanded, and cleanliness so strictly maintained, that nothing is seen out of its place, and there is room enough for every operation. Our ascent was not quite so agreeable; because curiosity induced us to effect a passage up one of the shafts, perpendicularly, by the side of the pump: here, besides the great fatigue of the undertaking, we were constantly exposed to falling showers of water from the machinery. After some hours, however, of great exertion, we rose once more into the town of Schemnitz.

Review of the Corps of Miners.

In the evening, their Highnesses, the two Archdukes, returned from Cremnitz. The house of the Bergritter was illuminated for their reception, in the most elegant manner; and the whole corps of miners was reviewed by the two Princes, from a balcony belonging to this house. The sight was very striking. The miners appeared clad in their working dresses, bearing all their implements, as for their usual labour; each person having in his hand the lamp with which he descends into the mine. By an ingenious and well-contrived movement of the whole corps, when the Archdukes came to view them from the balcony, they were placed in such array, that their lamps, as they stood, exhibited the initials A and R, in illuminated letters, covering the whole square. This evolution was effected in an instant; so suddenly and so perfectly, that it had a very grand effect.

Collection of Models.

May 23.—Professor Möhling exhibited and explained to us the collection of models used in his lectures to the students. Every part of the machinery, the furnaces, and other works belonging to the mines, are modelled upon a small scale, and most ingeniously adapted for the instruction of the students. The whole cost of this apparatus, apparatus, as of the instruments used in the laboratory of the College, is defrayed by the Crown; and every possible encouragement and assistance is given to the young men in the progress of their studies: they are allowed masters in all the branches of science useful in mining, particularly in trigonometry, mechanics, hydrostatics, chemistry, mineralogy, and geology. Afterwards, we made an excursion in the environs of Schemnitz, with a view to examine the nature and structure of the mountains in its vicinity. We found them to consist of a hard argillaceous porphyritic rock, or of basalt, or of slate. To the north of Schemnitz is a hill, fitted up as a "Mount Calvary," which consists of argillaceous schistus, containing mica, and detached fragments of jasper, incumbent upon basalt. The manner in which the veins of metal run, and the matrices of their ores, we have already described. All the water of the mines is collected into a reservoir, where a considerable deposit is made, both of gold and silver, in the mud that subsides. The town of Schemnitz itself merits more description than we have bestowed upon it. From the mountainous nature of the territory on which it stands, the buildings, scattered up and down, some being stationed upon eminences, and others in low situations, exhibit a picturesque appearance. As a place of residence, it is very agreeable; and the windows and fronts of the houses, being painted of different colours, give an air of gaiety to the streets'.

In the evening, a ball was given in honour of the Archdukes by the citizens. Here they again appeared, in the uniform of the mines; and gave great satisfaction, by their general condescension, and by the ease and affability with which they conducted themselves. The Archduke Anton gave us an account of the mines of Newsohl'; and told us of a cataract well worth seeing, at the distance of five hours from Newsohl, which he had visited. His Highness described it as the fall of a river, which, in the first moment of its descent, is divided into seven parts; causing altogether a very magnificent cascade. Upon this occasion, after thanking them for all the favours they had conferred upon us, we took leave of their Highnesses.

from Schemnitz.

May 24.—This morning, with great regret, we bade adieu to Schemnitz, and to the many pleasing acquaintances we had formed in the town. Owing to some mistake made by us, or by the post-master, we were only able to proceed one next to this the Hungarian; then the German; and lastly, the Latin. The town is built like Moscow. Owing to the number of gardens that intervene between the buildings, it covers a great extent of ground in proportion to its size; the houses standing like so many separate villas; and a person, paying visits, has sometimes quite a journey to make, in going from one dwelling to another." Cripps's MS. Journal.

(1) At Newsohl are copper mines. It is a pretty town, situate upon the river Gran. There is here a tower worth seeing: and the citadel merits observation, owing to the curiosity it contains of a church entirely covered with copper, wherein are many beautiful figures carved in wood, and some reliques. Its bridge is also noticed as being remarkable, on account of a fine building erected for stopping timber that is floated down the Gran, from the country higher up the river, to supply the works in the mines. The brave Count Charles de Bucquoy, Knight of the Golden Fleece, and General of the Imperial army, fell, covered with wounds, at the siege of Newsohl, in 1621, after taking the towns of Presburg, Tyrnaw, Altemberg, and some others. one station upon our journey to Presburg, as far as Stamboch. To this place the descent is uninterrupted the whole way from Schemnitz; a most delightful down-hill journey, winding among mountains, through forests, and by plantations filled with verdure and flowers.

May 25.—From Stamboch we descended into a vast plain, extending the whole way to Presburg, and to the Danube; and leaving behind us the great chain of the Sarmatian mountains, which separated the Jazyges Metanastæ from the antient inhabitants of *Poland*², we came to Bath. From this place, to Lewa, the country is quite flat, abounding in pasture and corn land. From Lewa to Verebely it is as level as Flanders, and very rich in corn. In going from Verebely to *Newtra*³, the country was more uneven. We met upon the road a number of Gipsies, as vagrants; who came towards us with music, and began dancing the English hornpipe. Afterwards they exhibited an Hungarian dance, which reminded us of the *whirling Dervishes*⁴. At Newtra,

(3) "At Newtra there are five or six hundred houses. The country around this place is very beautiful. We hired here such fine horses, that nothing but the want of a proper conveyance prevented my sending them to England, for the breed. Upon asking the price of two that were attached by ropes to our carriage, the owner said that one of them had cost fifty-five florins (about 5*l.* 10*s.*), and the other thirty-four florins (about 3*l.* 8*s.*)." *Cripps's MS. a party of hussars were raising recruits by means of a national dance. Six hussars, standing in a circle, and beating together their large spurs, kept time to some music that was playing.

Freystadt.

May 26.—From Newtra to Freystadt, the country, although flat, was exceedingly beautiful; owing to its great fertility, its beautiful woods, villages, and the neatness of the houses. The same scenery continued during all the distance from Freystadt, through Tyrnaw to Sarfó, and to Czekles. Tyrnaw makes a splendid appearance from a considerable distance, owing to its public buildings. It was burned down about the year 1678, and afterwards entirely rebuilt, being now one of the principal towns in Hungary. From the number of its churches and convents, it has been often called "the Little Rome." Its population, however, amounts only to seven thousand inhabitants. Tyrnaw was once the seat of the University now established at Pest: it was removed in consequence of the more central situation of the latter city. At Czekles there is a magnificent palace of Prince Esterhazy, whom the author had formerly known at Naples, where this Prince resided as Minister, in a style of great grandeur; but his own palace, in Hungary, surpasses, in external appearance, any of the palaces of Italy. It had all the appearance of a place of residence for the mightiest monarch of Europe. The grounds are laid out in the English taste, with a park round the palace, and green-green-houses. It may be said generally of the small towns in this part of Hungary, that they exhibit a much better taste in architecture than is common in our English towns. The streets are wide and straight; and where there are villas, or even the houses of private Hungarian gentlemen, they are adorned with specimens of the Grecian architecture. The whole of this country abounds in corn and wine. The roads are really superb the whole way from Newtra to Czektes, and to PRESBURG.

The view of Presburg is beautiful; the hills being cultivated for vineyards to their very summits. In the approach to the city, on this side, the Danube is not visible. We found the town filled with a prodigious concourse of people from all parts of Europe, and the streets crowded with carriages, owing to the approaching Diet: the assembly, however, was not expected to open its proceedings for some days. The Emperor had arrived; and we had the greatest difficulty in procuring lodgings at the principal inn. The next day (May 27) we waited upon the Governor, General Merveld; and upon his Excellency Count Palfy, the Chancellor of Hungary. His Highness the Archduke Ferdinand was at the palace of the Count. They told us that the Emperor would be at the Theatre in the evening, but that there was nothing worth seeing in the place. The town is well built, and contains 20,000 inhabitants, one-fourth of whom are Lutherans: and there are many Jews, who are not suffered to reside nearer to the mines. The Danube is here very rapid, and nearly half a mile wide. Presburg is the capital of a county that bears its name; and after the conquest of Buda by the Turks, it became the capital of Hungary. The body of St. John, bishop of Alexandria, is preserved in the metropolitan church. By the Hungarians it is called Poson; and by Latin authors, POSONIUM. The author of the Itinerary of Germany mentions it under this name¹. The Castle, like a Grecian acropolis, is situate upon an eminence sloping towards the river, which is covered by the buildings of the town: among these are many erected in the Italian taste, giving an air of grandeur to the streets. The first notice of Poson in the Hungarian Chronicles does not bear date anterior to the eleventh century; when the citadel was besieged by Henry the Third of Franconia, surnamed the Black, who succeeded his father Conrade in 1039². Of the earlier history of Presburg, we have little information. Henry the Third, after he had reduced the petty princes of Italy, made war upon the Hungarians, in consequence of their having put out the eyes of their king, *Peter*³. The citadel of Posonium is mentioned by Ranzanus, as belonging

(3) John Turocius, called De Thurocz, in his Chronica Hungarorum, makes this happen in 1047; but the war happened in 1048, after the consecration of Pope Clement II. by whom Henry and his wife Agnes were crowned. Henry died at Bottenfeld in Saxony, in 1056, being choked with a piece of bread. belonging to Pannonia, and remarkable for its strength and beauty'. Other allusions to it occasionally occur in the historical and geographical books of those authors who have written upon Hungary'. It seems to be the same place that is mentioned by Bonfinius, under the name of Pisonium; whose origin he has somewhat fancifully deduced from the Pisos of Rome'. The materials for an antient history of Hungary, from the first conquest of Pannonia by Julius Caesar, are extremely defective; and even these are now not to be collected in the libraries of the country. Some conjecture respecting the state of literature in any nation may perhaps be formed by examining the booksellers' shops belonging to its capital; and with this view, we eagerly inspected those of Presburg; but no prospect could be more barren: there was not a single volume worth a moment's notice, either upon sale in the town, or mentioned in any of their catalogues. In this respect, Presburg is inferior to Pest.

We have little further to add with regard to this country. It might perhaps be expected, that a traveller, after journeying through the whole of Hungary, should say something of those rich wines which form so important an article of its produce. The inhabitants have every inducement to drink wine, because they have no beer; and the water is detestable, from one end of the country to the other. It is rare, indeed, to meet with a wholesome spring; so generally impregnated are all the fountains with acids, saline substances, or other mineral ingredients: and with regard to the generality of its wines, these are little suited to the palates of more northern nations. They would have been rather adapted to what the taste was in our country, when Sack and Malmsey were the delight of our convivial tables, than to the vitiated palates of Englishmen, habituated, as they now are, to a factitious astringent beverage, received, by common consent and courtesy, under the name of Port. But, after all that can be said of the Hungarian wine, the opinions of different individuals are so opposite, in this respect, that one traveller will condemn what another has extolled. Perhaps, therefore, the best judgment may be afforded by comparison. The finest wine of Tokay is very like that of Cyprus: it has the same sweetness; and it is also characterized by that slight effervescence, from which the Commandaria of Cyprus is never exempted. To compare it with other preparations brewed by English housewives; it is somewhat like Mead, or very luscious old Raisin wine; and therefore we ventured to pronounce it bad. The wine of Buda, we thought, was better; better; because it has more of a vinous flavour. But nothing is more probable, than that the very reasons we have now urged in affirming the bad quality of genuine Tokay, may be considered by others as proofs of its excellence. An Hungarian, tagging his Latin aphorisms to the end of all his observations, would say of our remarks, "De gustibus nil disputandum."

In the evening, we visited the public walks, which, owing to the approaching Diet, were crowded with visitants of all nations. Afterwards, we repaired to the Theatre, a very handsome structure, and obtained seats in the pit. The Emperor, with all the younger branches of his family, were present; and sate in one of the side boxes, near the stage. His resemblance to the Archduke Anton struck us, the moment we entered. The sincere pleasure he seemed to feel in whatever contributed to the mirth and gratification of his children, was participated by the spectators, with whom he was evidently popular. His family are remarkable for that light yellow hair, almost white, which is characteristic of the Germans in general¹.

Friday, May 28, we left Presburg, at one o'clock P. M. and crossed the Danube by a bridge of boats. We were obliged to wait some time, because this bridge had been opened to admit the passage of barges freighted with merchandise going down the river from Vienna. A flying-bridge was waiting upon the opposite shore. The ease

ease and expedition with which the enormous bridge of boats was again adjusted and fastened, according to its original situation, surprised us. It is remarkable, that we have no representation, in any of our books of Travels, of the flying-bridges used upon the Danube and the Rhine, many of which are really magnificent structures, adorned with considerable elegance. The novelty of their appearance; the crowd of passengers, carriages, and cattle, wafted with such marvellous facility from shore to shore; may be reckoned among the most curious sights of the countries where these bridges are used. The road to Vienna, on the southern side of the Danube, besides its superior excellence, presents one of the most beautiful prospects to the eye that can be conceived. It is shaded by trees of great size; and as it follows the sinuosities of the Danube, the traveller commands a prospect of the river, which is seen meandering most majestically upon the right. Near Deutch Altenburgh, we halted at a custom-house, where our passports were demanded: we supposed this place denoted the old boundary between Hungary and Germany. Upon an eminence towards the left, in the half-way from Presburg, there are the remains of a very antient fortress, consisting of a square tower and some ruined walls. After the officers had made their usual visit, the scrutiny was attested upon our passports; and a counter-mark was given to us, to enable us to proceed without further interruption, Altenburgh.

Deutch Altenburgh is a small fortified town, with a citadel, which has the air of an antient structure: indeed the

the name ALTEMBURGH signifies an *old fortress*¹. A description of this citadel, and of its fortifications, written by John Martin Stella, was dated from the fortress itself in 1543;² whereby it appears that, as a bulwark, it guarded the only passage from Hungary into *Germany*³. The Hungarians call it Ouzwar; a name in their language signifying nothing more than Castle, or Citadel, which comes very near to our word Tower. About a quarter of an hour after leaving Deutch Altemburgh, opposite to a Gothic church, we saw a conical hill, which appeared to us to be an old Celtic tumulus, although of very considerable magnitude. When these tumuli are of great size, it becomes difficult to distinguish them from the mounds raised by the Romans within their camps and by their citadels. In our journey this day, we observed many little burrowing quadrupeds, which we supposed to be Hamster rats⁴; proving a great nuisance to the farmers of this country, by the ravages they commit; but it is not easy to point out a more fertile territory than the whole whole of the district between Presburg and Vienna. The inhabitants had already mowed their hay. We dined at Reiglesbrun; and proceeded to Fischamend, a town upon the side of the Danube, surrounded by fine woods. Here we found an excellent inn.

The next day (May 29) we continued our route, admiring the great richness of the country, the beauty of the roads adorned with large trees, and the fine views which the Danube occasionally presented. As we approached Vienna on its eastern side, the prospect we had of the city disappointed us: many of the smaller towns in Germany, and even some of its villages, exhibit more grandeur. But this view of it is not the best: that from the south-east is more favourable¹. The principal public building is the Cathedral of St. Stephen, which is said to be much higher than St. Paul's of London: but having a single spire, instead of a majestic dome, its external appearance is by no means equally magnificent. The aspect of the interior of the city, however, as we entered the streets, fully corresponded with the expectations we had formed; some of the edifices being highly ornamented; and a general air of grandeur prevailing, as in the towns of Italy; where, from the manner of lodging several families in the same building, the houses, in loftiness and magnitude, resemble externally so many palaces.

And

And now, having brought our readers to VIENNA, we shall here leave them; pursuing, without observation, the rest of our journey, through Germany and France, to England. Other writers have anticipated our description of this part of the European Continent; and the Second Part of the author's Travels has been already extended to its due length. It shall suffice therefore to add, that after remaining in Vienna until the middle of July, where we collected many valuable books, and some manuscripts of classic authors, we hastened, by the way of Munich, Augsburg, and Strasburg, to PARIS. Here we had an interview with Napoleon Buonaparté. It was granted to us by that extraordinary man, in consequence of the kindness shewn by the author's late brother, Captain George Clarke, when commander of the Braakel, to a part of the French army which he convoyed from Egypt to *Marseilles*². In Paris we became acquainted with several Members of the Institute; and constantly attended the public Lectures of Haüy in Mineralogy, of Faujas de St. Fond in Geology, and of Fourcroy in Chemistry. At Paris we were also introduced to the celebrated Werner, during a visit that he made to his rival, Haüy; the French Capital being at that time thronged by men of science from all parts of Europe. After remaining in Paris until the end of September, we set out for Boulogne; and thence sailing to Dover, were once more safely landed in our beloved Country.

Of this dissertation by Crophius it must however be remarked, that it is among the most curious articles in the whole Thesaurus of Gronovius. In the fifteenth century, Gyraldus of Ferrara published a dissertation, replete with erudition, "De Sepulturâ, et vario Sepeliendi Ritu;" which, however, is rendered of tenfold value, by the learned Commentary of John Faes, as edited by Jensius, in the complete edition of the works of Gyraldus, tom. II. L. Bat. 1696. See tom. I. p. 685. But this learned dissertation relating to the Funeral Rites of the Greeks, Romans, Hetrurians, Ægyptians, and Jews, takes no notice of the sepulchres of the MACEDONIANS.

In Exodus (vii. 11, 12.) it is said, that "THE WISE MEN AND THE SORCERERS . . . CAST DOWN EVERY MAN HIS ROD, AND THEY BECAME SERPENTS." They were therefore divining rods: and it is to be remarked, that the Caduceus of Hermes is generally represented with two serpents. (See Vignette to Chap. XIII.) "Itaque VIRGULA DIVINA primò ex incantatorum impuris fontibus defluxisse videtur in metalla." Agricola de Re Metallicâ, lib. ii. p. 27. Basil. 1657.

But the Swallow, among all nations, has been superstitiously revered as the Herald of the Sun, and therefore was considered by the Greeks as the Messenger of Apollo; to whom, whom, as to all the principal Deities, the name of Jove was applicable. It is to the same Deity, by the name of Apollo, that Electra addresses herself, "Λναξ Ἀπολλον (ver. 1393.), δ Ἀνκει Ἀπολλον (ver. 1396.), as tutelary God of Mycenæ: and the lamentation of this bird for Itys, who was the son of Progne, clearly proves it to have been the Swallow.

Lond. 1777.*) mentions similar customs of the same people. "Wine," he says, "is thrown upon the grave, and frankincense burned around it, to drive away evil spirits and witches. This done, they go home; bake bread of wheat flour, which, to the expiation of the deceased, they eat; plentifully drinking, to be the better comforted themselves. The solemn shrieks, libations of wine, and fumigations about the tomb, continue during some days, nay, even some weeks, repeated by the nearest relations." His account of the howling interrogation which takes place at the sinking of the corpse into the grave, seems to prove the Celtic origin of the Walachians, and of the Romans their forefathers. "At this moment, the friends and relations of the deceased raise horrid cries. They remind the deceased of his friends, parents, cattle, house, and household; and ask for what reason he left them." Ibid. Upon the subject of their settlement in Walachia, and the origin of their name, the following observations occur in the Decads of Bonfinius. "VALACHI enim è Romanis oriundi, quòd eorum lingua adhuc fatetur, quum inter tam varias Barbarorum gentes sita, adhuc extirpari non potuerit, ulteriorem Istri plagam, quam Daci ac Getæ quondam incoluere, habitarunt. nam citeriorem Bulgari, qui è Sarmatiâ prodiere, deinde occuparunt. E legionibus enim et coloniis, à Traiano, ac cæteris Romanorum Imperatoribus, in Daciam deductis, Valachi promanarunt. APPENDIX.

No. I.

ON THE

under BALDWIN Earl of Flanders, A.D. 1205.

IN the beginning of the First Section of this PART of the author's Travels, he endeavoured to prove that the City of Constantinople, since it fell under the dominion of the Turks, has undergone fewer alterations than took place while it continued in the hands of their predecessors; maintaining that "Christians, and not Turks, have been the principal agents in destroying the statues and public buildings of the city¹." This opinion is strongly supported by the observations of *Belon*², who, in the middle of the sixteenth century, accompanied Gyllius in his travels: and if it be true, as has been asserted, that Belon published the remarks made by Gyllius, without an honourable acknowledgment of their author, those observations may possibly be due to the higher authority of Gyllius himself. A convincing testimony of the disregard shewn to the Fine Arts by the Roman soldiers in the conquest of a city, is afforded in the well-known history of the capture of Corinth by the Consul Mummius; but the ravages committed in Constantinople by the Christian armies in the beginning of the thirteenth century have been studiously withheld from observation. Nicetas Choniates, who was present when the barbarians, under Baldwyn earl of Flanders, took the city by storm (A. D. 1205), left an enumeration of the noble statues they destroyed: but this part of his work is not to be found in any of the printed editions of that historian; having been, perhaps, fraudulently suppressed¹. It is however preserved in a MS. Code of Nicetas, which was given to the Bodleian Library at Oxford by Sir Thomas Roe, Bart. upon his return from Constantinople in 1628, after being Ambassador from the King of Great Britain to the Ottoman Porte. The Rev. GEORGE ADAM BROWNE, M. A. Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, has presented to the author the following elegant and most accurate version of this interesting fragment. Those who may choose to consult the original, will find it inserted in the *Bibliotheca of Fabricius*². The account it gives of the mischiefs done by Baldwyn's army is so particularly suited to what the author has already said upon the subject, and withal so exceedingly curious in itself, that he is convinced every reader of this work will be gratified by seeing it, divested of the obscurities and incongruous metaphors of the Byzantine historian.

Mr. Browne has accompanied his translation of this fragment with some valuable Notes. Alluding to the difficulty of rendering it intelligible, he says: "I have endeavoured to follow the original text as closely as I could; although I have found occasional difficulties in so doing, as I did not always exactly comprehend what the honest Greek meant by some of his expressions. Wolfius, who published at Augsburgh, in the year 1557, a Latin translation of Nicetas's History,

(1) "It was perhaps designedly omitted," (says Mr. Harris.) "through fraud, or shame, or both." See Harris's Philological Enquiries, Part III. chap. 5. p. 302. Lond. 1781.

(2) It is not, however, in the last and best edition of Fabricius, printed at Hamburg in 1801; but the reader will find it in the edition cited by Mr. Harris; or in that of Hamburg, 1714. Vol. VI. chap. 5. p. 405.

History, together with the Greek text, has given a very just account of his style. I will quote his words:—‘Ex affectatione nescio cujus insolentis elegantiae et poeticae dictionis æmulatione, in salebras sæpè incidit, et duris, ne ineptis dicam, utitur metaphoris; in proœmio præsertim, ubi cumprimis disertus videri cupit: quòd si totam historiam simili oratione involvisset, in latomias ire, quàm molestiis conversionis conflictari maluissem.’ Now what Wolfius has said of the proœmium, is very true of the fragment I have translated, and of whose existence Wolfius was ignorant. By the way, both Harris and Gibbon are mistaken in supposing that this narrative of Nicetas, which is extant in a MS. copy in the Bodleian Library, was first published by Fabricius, in the sixth volume of his Bibliotheca Græca, anno 1714; since it first appeared in Banduri’s Antiquities, anno 1711, together with a Latin translation, and some notes. Banduri mentions that the fragment exists also in a MS. in the Library of the Vatican.”

A FRAGMENT of NICETAS THE CHONIATE

By the Rev. G. A. BROWNE, M.A. Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

“From the very commencement³, they [the Latins] displayed their national covetousness; and struck out a new system of rapine, which had escaped all the former despoilers of the Imperial City; for they opened and plundered all the TOMBS OF THE EMPERORS, in the Heroûm, at the great Church of the Apostles. They sacrilegiously laid their hands upon every golden ornament, and every chalice which had been studded with pearls and precious stones. They gazed with admiration at the

the body of JUSTINIAN¹, which after so many centuries exhibited no mark of decay; but they refrained not from appropriating to themselves the sepulchral ornaments. These western barbarians spared neither the living nor the dead; but beginning with GOD and his servants, they shewed themselves, upon all occasions, indiscriminately impious. Shortly afterwards, they tore down the veil of the sanctuary in the great cathedral [Sancta Sophia], which in itself was highly valuable; but its golden border was the object of their cupidity. Their wants, however, were not yet supplied; for these barbarians are insatiable. They cast their eyes on the brazen statues, and consigned them to the flames. The colossal image of JUNO, which stood in the Forum of Constantine, was melted into staters. Four oxen could scarcely draw the head of this statue to the Imperial Palace. The SHEPHERD OF IDA was next dislodged from his base, where he was standing with VENUS, in the act of presenting to her the golden apple of discord. But what shall I say of that ²FOUR-SIDED MONUMENT OF BRASS, whose height rivalled the loftiest pillars in the whole city! Who is there, that did not admire its various devices? On its sides were represented birds pouring forth their vernal melody; the ploughman's toils; the shepherd's relaxations; the very bleating of the sheep; the frisking of the lambs. The sea itself was engraven: and multitudes of fish were beheld; some in the act of being taken; others overpowering the nets, and again dashing into the deep. In another part, a troop of naked Cupids were sporting, and pelting apples at each other, whilst laughter shook their sides. The monument itself terminated in a pyramid, on whose apex stood a female figure, which turned at the slightest impulse of the air, and hence was denominated 'the Hand-maid of the Winds.' This exquisite piece of workmanship was delivered over to the flames; and at the same time they destroyed AN EQUESTRIAN FIGURE of more than mortal size, which stood upon a tabular plinth, in the Forum Tauri. Some conjectured this statue to represent Joshua the son of Nun, stretching out his hand to the sun going down, and commanding it 'to stand still upon Gibeon.' The better informed recognised it to be the statue of BELLEROPHON mounted on PEGASUS; for the horse was represented, like that winged steed, unbitted, and spurning the ground with his hoof; a horse every way ³worthy of his rider, and one that could tread

(1) The sepulchre of Justinian was of pure gold, as we learn from some wretched verses of Corippus:
"Donec Apostolici subeuntes atria templi
Incluta sacro possissent membra sepulchro, Quod prius ipse sibi puro construxerat auro."

(2) Cedrenus has described this wind-obelisk, and says that it was erected by Theodosius the Great: he calls it Ἀνιμαδόβελιστος, instead of Ἀνιμαδοβόλιον.

(3) Banduri has given ἀλλοζών. Fabricius reads ἐλλοζών, which I prefer.

on air as well as on earth⁴. There was a story very generally credited, and the tradition has reached to our times, that the image of a man was concealed in the horse's left-foot, fore. By some, this image was said to represent a *Venetian*⁵; by others, one of the Western nations who were not in alliance with the Romans; or, lastly, a Bulgarian. Great labour had been bestowed in properly securing the hoof, so that the secret might not be discovered. When the horse was afterwards cut into pieces, and, together with its rider, consigned to the flames, a brazen image was found buried in the hoof, wrapped in a cloak of woollen texture: the Latins threw it into the flames, without troubling themselves to decipher the meaning. These barbarians, who had no love of what is beautiful, spared not the images

(4) In Banduri's Collection of the Antiquities of Constantinople, there are Four Books by an anonymous author: in the first of which we meet with a description of the same Equestrian Statue in the Forum Tauri. His words are: "In the middle of the Forum is an Equestrian Statue, which some consider to represent Joshua the son of Nun; others, Bellerophon. It was brought from Antioch. The porphyritic base of this statue was inscribed with the history of the *Russians, who were finally to destroy the city itself. To avert this destruction, there was a small bronze Figure † of a man, with his knees bent, and his arms bound. The left foot of the horse explained the meaning of the characters engraved."

(5) The text of the Fragment as published by Banduri, differs occasionally from that of Fabricius. An inspection of the MS. itself could alone determine which is the more correct. And if we may judge from the Latin translations, they did not always agree in the meaning of different passages: for instance, in the account of the Equestrian Statue in the Forum Tauri, Banduri reads, 'Εκ τοῦ τοῦ Βυζαντιῶν γένους τοῦ ἐπὶ τοῦ αἵματος: and translates it, "Cujusdam esse ex factione Venetâ," referring to the Blue Faction of the Circus. The text in Fabricius runs thus, Τοῖς μὲν ἰκ τοῦ τοῦ Βυζαντιῶν!" and the translation is, "Ex Venetis aliquem referre sunt qui tradiderunt." In my opinion, it refers to the Blue Faction of the Circus, and not to the Venetian people. I am confirmed in this opinion by the passage which I have translated from the Anonymous Author, where he speaks of this same magical Image; and then mentions the future destruction of the city by the 'Russians,' as Banduri seems to understand the passage. The words are, μικλόντων ὄρωσ πολεμῶν πάλιν. For ὄρωσ we should doubtless read ὄρωσιον: and these Russians were no other than the Faction of the Circus, between whom and the Blues there existed a mortal hatred. You are aware, that of the 'Four factions,' the Red and Green had coalesced against the Blue and White: hence, an image of the Blue Faction was secretly placed in the statue, as a charm against the violence of the opposite faction. In the description of the Charioteers, Banduri has given the word ὄρωσιον in the text; for which, in his note, he proposes to substitute Ἐξέστηον. But the word is clearly ὄρωσιον: and refers to the Red Faction, so often mentioned.

* See the subsequent Note (5).

† The celebrated Palladium, which has given its name to images of this description, "the Safe-guards of cities," was secretly conveyed from Rome, where it had rested since the time of Romulus, to his new city, by Constantine. These images were denominated στούχια, and τέλεσματα. From this latter word sprung the Arabic word Tilemat, and our word Tullman.

images which stood in the Hippodrome, and all the other precious works of art, but coined them into money; exchanging what was precious for what was vile, and giving for small pieces of money what had been wrought at an immense expense. First, they doomed to destruction the mighty statue of *HERCULES TRIHESPERUS*¹. The hero was represented recumbent on an osier-basket, the lion's skin thrown over him: the fierceness of the animal was visible even in the brass, and seemed to affright the idle multitude around: he was sitting without his quiver, his bow, or his club: his right leg and arm were extended to their utmost; his left knee was bent, and he was resting his left arm on the elbow: the rest of his hand was extended, the open palm denoting his dejection of mind: his head was gently reclined; and he seemed pensive and indignant at the labours which Eurystheus, as his superior, had imposed upon him, through envy rather than necessity: his chest was ample, his shoulders broad, his hair curled, his buttocks brawny, his arms sinewy, and his size equal to the idea which Lysippus had conceived of the real Hercules: he was indeed the master-picce in brass of that artist. The statue was of such magnitude, that his thumb was equal to the waist, and his leg to the size of an entire man; and yet this HERCULES, such as I have represented him, could find no favour from barbarians, who affected to prize fortitude above the other virtues, and to arrogate the possession of it to themselves.—They next laid their hands upon the statue of the ASS LOADED, AND THE ASS-DRIVER FOLLOWING; which Augustus had erected at Nicopolis, near the promontory of Actium, from an incident which had occurred to him the night before the battle of Actium. As he was reconnoitring the camp of Antony, a man met him, driving an ass: upon being questioned by Cæsar, who he was, and whither he was going, he replied, 'My name is Nicon', and the ass is called Nicanter, and I am going to Cæsar's camp.' Nor did they spare the HYÆNA and the SHE-WOLF which had suckled Romulus and Remus; but for the sake of a few staters of brass, they destroyed and melted down these memorials of the origin of their race. Also the statue of the MAN WRESTLING WITH THE LION; and the RIVER-HORSE OF THE NILE, whose hinder-parts terminate in a tail with prickly scales; and the ELEPHANT shaking his proboscis; and the SPHINXES, with the faces of women and the bodies of wild beasts, furnished with wings as well as feet, and able to contend in air with the mightiest birds; and the UNBITTED STEED, with his ears erect, neighing, and proudly

(2) This story is related, with some little variation, by Plutarch and Suetonius. In Plutarch, whom Suetonius follows, the man replies, "My name is Eutyches (Fortunate); and the name of the ass is Nicon (Victorious)." Vide Plutarch, Life of Antony; and Suetonius, Oct. Cæs. Augustus.

proudly pawing the ground. There was a group, also, consisting of SCYLLA with the fierce animals into which half her body had been changed; and near her was the ship of Ulysses, into which these animals were leaping, and devouring some of the crew. In the Hippodrome, also, was placed the BRAZEN EAGLE, the work of Apollonius Tyaneus, and a wonderful monument of his magical power. That philosopher, when visiting Byzantium, had been asked for a charm against the venomous bites of the serpents which then infested the place. For this purpose he employed all his magical skill, with the devil for his coadjutor, and elevated² upon a column a brazen Eagle. Great was the pleasure it afforded; and the sight attracted and detained the beholders, in the same manner as mariners were formerly rivetted by the songs of the Sirens. The wings of the bird were expanded for flight; but a serpent in his talons, twining around him, impeded his soaring. The head of the reptile seemed approaching the wings, to inflict a deadly bite; but the crooked points of the talons kept him harmless; and instead of struggling with the bird, he was compelled to droop his head, and his breath and his venom expired together. The eagle was looking proudly, and almost crowing out, Victory! and from the joy of his eye one might suppose that he intended to transport the dead body of the reptile through the air. Forgetful of his circling spires, and no longer venomous, the serpent remained as a warning to his species, and seemed to bid them betake themselves for ever to their hiding-places. But this figure of the Eagle was more admirable still, for it served as a dial: the horary divisions of the day were marked by lines inscribed on its wings; these were easily discernible, by the skilful observer, when the sun's rays were not intercepted by clouds. But what shall I say of the STATUE OF HELEN? how shall I describe the white-armed daughter of Tyndarus, with her taper neck and well-turned ancles?—she, who united all Greece against Troy, and laid Troy in ashes; who, from the coast of Asia, visited the shores of the Nile, and finally revisited her native Sparta. Did she soften these barbarians? did she subdue these iron-hearted? No, verily! she, who once captivated all beholders, was now powerless:—and yet she was adorned, as for a public spectacle, with all her drapery; her vest, transparent as the spider's web; her fillet, and the coronet of gold and precious stones which encircled her brow, and dazzled by its splendour: her hair was partly confined in a knot, and partly waving in the wind, and flowing to her knees; and the figure, though cast in brass, seemed fresh as the descending dew, while while her swimming¹ eyes provoked love: her lips, like the rose-bud, were just opening, as if to address one, while a graceful smile met and enraptured the beholder. But the joy which sparkled in her eye, and the well-arched brows, and the grace and symmetry of her whole person, no description can adequately convey to posterity. But, O HELEN! matchless beauty! scion of the Loves! Venus's peculiar care! choicest gift of Nature! prize of victory! where were your nepenthes, and that sovereign balm of all ills, which *Polydamna*², the wife of Thone, bestowed upon you?—where were your irresistible philtres? why did you not employ them now, as formerly? I believe that Destiny had decreed that you should perish by fire—you, whose very image ceased not to inflame the beholders into love! I might almost add, that, by consigning this your image to the flames, the Latins avenged the manes of their ancestors³, and the destruction of their paternal city, Troy! But the mad and unfeeling avarice of these men will not suffer me to indulge a pleasantry:—whatever was rare, whatever was beautiful, they coveted and destroyed. Those verses⁴, which Homer sang in thy praise, O beauteous Helen! were in vain addressed to illiterate barbarians, who were ignorant even of their very alphabet. Another circumstance must also be mentioned: Upon a column was crested A FEMALE FIGURE, in the prime of youth and beauty: her hair was collected together, and flung backward: the height of the pillar was not beyond the reach of a person whose hand was outstretched: the figure itself was unsupported; and yet its right hand held with as much ease the statue of a Horse and its Rider as if it had been a goblet of wine; one foot of the horse being placed in the palm of the hand. He who sat upon the horse was of a robust appearance, clad in mail, with greaves on his legs, and ready for battle; the horse was creaking his ears to the sound of the trumpet; his neck was lofty, his nostrils snorting, and his eyes displayed his desire for the course; his feet were raised in air, and as if in the attitude of springing to the fight. Near to this statue, and close to the eastern goal of the Circus, which belonged to

to the *Red faction*⁵, were placed the figures of VICTORIOUS CHARIOTEERS, as lessons of their art: by their gesture, if not by their voice, they exhorted the drivers not to slacken the reins as they approached the pillar (called Nyisse)⁶; but, reining in their steeds, to turn them in a narrow compass, and, lashing them to their full speed, compel the adverse charioteer to make a larger sweep, and thus to lose ground, even though his horses were swifter of foot, if he were less skilful in the management of them.—Another group of surprising and exquisite workmanship in brass closes the description. On a square plinth of marble, AN ANIMAL rested, which at first sight might have been taken for an Ox, only that its tail was too short, and it wanted a proper depth of throat, and its hoofs were not divided. ANOTHER ANIMAL, whose whole body was covered with rough scales, which even in brass were formidable, had seized upon the former animal with his jaws, and nearly throttled him. There were different opinions concerning these animals, which I shall not attempt to reconcile. Some imagined them to represent the Basilisk and the Asp: others, the Crocodile and the River-horse of the Nile. I shall content myself with describing the extraordinary contest between them; how both were mutually injuring and injured; were destroying and destroyed; were struggling for the victory; were conquering and conquered. The body of one animal was swollen from the head to the feet, and appeared greener than the colour of the frog; the lightning of his eye was quenched, and his vital powers seemed failing fast, so that the beholders might have imagined him already dead, only that his feet still supported and kept his body upright. The other animal, which was held fast in the jaws of its adversary, was moving his tail with difficulty; and, extending his mouth, was in vain struggling to escape from the deadly gripe. Thus each was inflicting death upon the other; the struggle was the same, and the victory terminated in the common destruction of both. These examples of mutual destruction I have been led to mention, not only from the sculptured representation of them, and from their taking place among fierce and savage beasts, but because this mutual carnage is not unfrequent among the nations which have waged war against us Romans?—they have massacred and destroyed each other, by the favour of Christ towards us, who “scattereth the people that delight in war;” who has no pleasure in blood; who causes the just man “to tread upon the Basilisk and the Asp,” and to “trample the lion and the dragon under his feet.”

(5) Vide Gibbon, 40th chapter, who has described the different factions of the Circus,—the Green, the Red, the White, and the Blue.

(6) For a particular description of the Chariot-race, we must look to the 23d Book of the Iliad, and read the instructions of Nestor to his son Antilochus; nor should we omit the lively and glowing description of a chariot-race, with its attendant accidents, in the Electra of Sophocles, ver. 700.

(7) The Byzantine Historians were fond of giving to their countrymen the appellation of Romans; as Constantinople had long been the seat of Empire, and was considered as a New Rome.

COLLECTED DURING THESE TRAVELS, IN GREECE, EGYPT, AND THE HOLY LAND.

ALPHABETICALLY ARRANGED.
/////////

N. B. In this List will be found about sixty NEW SPECIES; the distinctive characters of which being fully described in the Notes to the Three Sections of PART THE SECOND, the Generic names only of the new-discovered Plants are now given.

When the name of no Botanical writer occurs after the specific appellations of Plants which have been described by other authors, that of Linnaeus is to be understood.

The English vulgar names, having often no reference to the Latin, but being sometimes quite at variance with them, were placed before the scientific appellations in the body of the work; but as this could not be done consistently with an alphabetical arrangement, they have been now introduced as they were placed in the Appendix to the FIRST PART of these Travels; immediately following the Linnaean. Perhaps it might have been as well if they had been wholly omitted; but there are persons who desire their insertion.

This plant is remarkable for the various kinds of leaves which it bears at the same time: the leaflets or segments of the winged leaves, upon some branches, being quite entire; upon others deeply pinnatifid; and upon others both sorts growing intermixed: so that the most accurate Botanist, not being aware of its versatility, might suppose that different specimens, cut from the same plant, belonged to two different species. Even on the flowering branches both sorts occur; but the divided leaflets are most prevalent on the younger shoots, and the entire ones on those that are more rigid and woody.
