Lull'd in the countless chambers of the brain,
Our thoughts lie linked by many a hidden chain ;
Awake but one, and lo, what myriads rise !
Each stamps its image, as the other flies ;
Each, as the various avenues of sense,
Delight or sorrow to the soul dispense,
Brightens or fades ; and all, with magic art,
Control the latent fibres of the heart.

IT would be quite a waste of time to attempt an analysis of the feelings of interest, with which an Ackworth Scholar will receive and refer to, the present volume. To him, such a delineation would be useless, and by few others would it be understood. The manner in which the annunciation of the work has been received, forms a very satisfactory proof, that, among the causes which gave rise to its publication, those feelings were not incorrectly estimated; and confers a pledge, that this apparently dry production will not be unacceptable to those for whom it was principally designed.

It must be unnecessary to remark, that, in a List of Names, like the present, perfect orthographical accuracy cannot be attained. The incongruities exhibited by the numerous Maps and Gazetteers which have been consulted, render this almost impossible in respect to the names of small Villages or Hamlets: and the names of Individuals and Families, where the authorities were doubtful, could not be settled by any other rule, than probability. Pains, however, have been taken to render the work as correct as possible.

The short opportunity afforded for the reception of Subscribers' names, may, it is feared, have deprived many of the means of procuring the Catalogue on the Subscription terms. Yet the number of Subscribers encouraged a larger edition than was originally intended: and these circumstances render it proper, materially to lower the proposed price to Non-Subscribers. The book may be had at Ackworth School, and at 86, Houndsditch, London; and all country Booksellers can procure it at any time from Harvey and Darton.

*This small work may possibly fall into the hands of some persons little acquainted with the Institution to which it relates. For the information of these, is inserted the following slight sketch of its history, &c., extracted, with slight alteration, from a descriptive sheet, accompanying a line Engraving of the School, which was published a few years since.**

Ackworth School is situate between the villages of High and Low Ackworth, three miles south of Pontefract, in the West Riding of Yorkshire. The building is of freestone, obtained from the neighbourhood; and it was erected in 1757, 1758, and 1759, as an appendage to the Foundling Hospital in London. It cost £13,000; which sum was defrayed, partly by voluntary subscriptions, and partly by aid of parliament. The house was applied to its original purpose, for twelve years, and afterwards remained unoccupied till 1777. In this year, it was purchased, with eighty-four acres of land, by Dr. John Fothergill and three others, for £7,000; and in 1779, was opened as a public school for children of the Society of Friends, to which purpose it has been ever since applied. Various additions have been made to the buildings, and the landed estate has been increased to about 242 acres; the whole property being now estimated at about £30,000. The affairs of the institution are under the immediate management of the superintendent, resident at the school; but all matters of importance are referred to a committee of twenty-eight friends, in the vicinity of Ackworth, and to an other committee of the same number, who, with the treasurer, meet in London. The instruction of the children devolves on eighteen teachers. The boys are under the care of four school-masters, with five apprentices; and five school-mistresses, with four apprentices, have the charge of the girls. The regular branches of instruction are reading, spelling, writing, arithmetic, English grammar, and geography; but there are a few to whom the last two branches are not taught. Sewing, knitting, &c. of course, form part of the employment of the girls. Many of the elder boys are introduced to an acquaintance with the more useful parts of the mathematics; and a class, consisting of twenty of the most advanced, receive instruction in the Latin language. Besides attending to their school-duties, the boys are frequently employed in farming or gardening, and the girls in various domestic occupations. There are three examinations of the children in the course of the year, the principal of which, takes place at the time of the Annual General Meeting of the friends of the institution. Children are admitted between the ages of nine and fourteen. £10 per annum is to be paid for each child; but the average cost is about £18, including clothing, stationery, &c. The number of scholars is limited to 300, viz. 180 boys and 120 girls, rather more than 100 being admitted and dismissed annually. The number admitted, since the opening of the school in 1779, to the present time, is 5511; and an average calculation will show, that, from among the children of Friends in this country, about one-seventh receive some part of their education in this establishment. Ackworth School, 7th mo. 1831.
