REUNION
AND DEDICATION OF

AT ARLINGTON, VA.

NATIONAL CEMETERY

BY THE

SECOND CONNECTICUT HEAVY ARTILLERY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1896.

To My Comrades —

57288

Fully appreciating the distinguished favor which you have conferred upon me for thirty years by being your permanent Secretary, I take great pleasure in presenting to you this memorial as a souvenir of our pleasant gathering at Arlington, Va., on October 21, 1896.

I am also pleased to gratify your frequent requests for Mrs. Kilbourn's picture. She has been my constant helper in my work for the Association, having attended every reunion but one, and pinned on your badges and button-hole bouquets, and proudly wears on her hand the handsome diamond ring you gave her at Winsted. At the right of the monument can be seen the beautiful banner of blue silk, embroidered by herself and presented to the Association in 1894.

The picture of A. G. Bliss of Washington, D. C., the "member of Co. E" and Vice-President of the 6th Corps Association at Washington, is that of him to whose indefatigable exertions we are indebted for all the arrangements at Washington and Arlington that made the occasion such a complete success.

Since this has been in the publisher's hands the tragic death of Lieut. S. A. Granger has saddened all our hearts. His picture is herewith presented as a memorial of him who, although not officially upon the committees, took the greatest interest in all matters relating to the monument and dedication, and in everything connected with the Association.

The list of dead is necessarily imperfect. Will comrades or others, noticing errors or omissions, kindly notify me.

DWIGHT C. KILBOURN, Secretary.

THE EXCURSION.

ON the morning of October 18, 1896, about a hundred and fifty persons assembled at the depot of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at Jersey City, N. J., as members of the excursion party, destined for Winchester, Va., and Washington, D. C., to dedicate the monuments erected by the State of Connecticut in honor of its 12th Conn. Infantry and 2d Conn. Heavy Artillery Regiments.

At nine o'clock, three well-filled passenger coaches and one sleeper slowly started out of the junction, and were soon speeding over the marshes and bays and through the varying rural scenes of New Jersey, where the innumerable advertising signboards lend such a charm to the views and furnish contemplative subjects for the traveler and make the underground journey under Philadelphia in a smoky tunnel a great relief. Arriving at Baltimore, a good dinner awaited us in the dining-room, and at two o'clock, with an additional sleeper added, we left for Washington, arriving there at three, and took on a number more of the excursionists. After a short delay we started out for Harper's Ferry over the "Metropolitan Branch," passing over ground that was once the scene to many of us of weary marches, tiresome camp life, unpleasant skirmishes, and bloody battles—and the "boys" were busy locating various places to memory dear. One incident we shall long remember, the passage over a deep gorge or ravine, upon a seemingly frail trestle-work, while workmen were busy erecting an iron bridge. "A bridge of sighs" truly it was.

Due at Harper's Ferry at 4.30, we reached it at about six, and after a short stop we proceeded up the Shenandoah in the darkness to Winchester, which we reached at nearly seven, finding a large crowd awaiting us. Captain Dudrow, connected with the B. & O. road, had met us at Baltimore and assigned accommodations for all at the various hotels and boarding-houses ; so that there was very little confusion, and soon all were enjoying good suppers at pleasant, comfortable homes.

In the evening nearly all attended the services in the different churches, some of which had prepared special exercises in honor of their Northern guests.

"In the slumbers of midnight, our cares flew away
And visions of happiness danced o'er our mind."

At morning's dawn the rested slumberers awoke, not roused as we were thirty-two years ago by booming guns and shrieking shell and the pit-a-pat of the minnie, nor summoned to deadly combat by hurrying orderlies, but by the farmers' carts rattling along the stony street, and the whistle of the factory and the fragrant smell of the cooking breakfast. How suggestive of the past that morning table — fried chicken, lamb chops, corn bread ! Oh, memory of Berryville !

At an early hour assembly was made in front of the Court House beneath which the bones of Lord Fairfax rest, and the pickaninnies furnished amusement gathering in stray pennies. Then line was formed, and, escorted by the Union Cornet Band of the city we marched to the national cemetery, half a mile distant on the Berryville Pike, and participated in exercises of the dedication of the monument to the 12th Conn. Infantry.

The afternoon of this day was devoted to visiting the battlefield of the Opequan, locally known as the "Hackwood Farm," gathering bullets, sticks for canes, and such other relics as could be found, while the kodakers touched the button at nearly every spot, and some fine views were gathered in. Night came and we again encamped, some at the Taylor House, as in years long ago, while others bivouaced in other houses, and waited for the morning call.

At half-past eight, Tuesday morning, our train left Winchester for Cedar Creek, and in about half an hour stopped at the little station, and the party, now of two hundred or more, were soon scrambling over the ledges and hills, all anxious to find where some one was wounded, or some comrade was killed in the bloody carnage of thirty-two years before. It was not easy to identify the ground from memories thirty years old, but, after two hours, the re-assembling parties all seemed to be satisfied with their visits, and, boarding the train with their relics of the battlefield, were soon landed back in Winchester for dinner.

Upon our return from Cedar Creek after dinner, at 1.30 P. M., our train left Winchester for Washington, stopping nearly two hours at Harper's Ferry which time was well improved by parties visiting Bolivar Heights, Jefferson's Rock, and other objects of historical interest in this wild, romantic city. The train reached Washington about six o'clock, and the excursionists went to the various hotels provided for them.

On the morning of October 21st, at nine o'clock, the members of the regiment were provided with a special train on the electric road to Arlington, crossing Long Bridge, and were landed at the "Sheridan" gate of the national cemetery. A walk of quarter of a mile took us to the Mansion House and which we knew as Gen. DeRussey's Headquarters, in rear of which the Auditorium had been elegantly draped and festooned for our dedicatory exercises.

THE DEDICATION.

THE first exercise of the day was the annual reunion of the Regiment, the details of which will be found in another chapter. After this business meeting was closed, the exercises proper of the dedication began.

The rostrum was occupied by the 6th Regiment United States Cavalry Band, the various officers of the association, by invited members of the 12th Regiment Association, General H. G. Wright, former commander of the 6th Corps, and his daughter, Mrs. Wright Smith, an adopted daughter of the 6th A. C.; by reporters of the Washington papers, and other friends; while the seats in the auditorium were filled by a large audience of Connecticut residents of the city.

The exercises were opened by "The American Guard March," rendered by the band.

The President, Lieutenant F. M. Cooke, introduced our former comrade, Captain (now Rev.) James Deane of Crown Point, N. Y., who offered the following

"INVOCATION

"Infinite and almighty God, Creator of ourselves, and Author of every liberty that we may rightly enjoy, to Thee we lift our prayer as we gather here, on this ground made sacred by its memorials of sacrifice.

"Be Thou near to us, the living, who assemble to do fitting honor to the memory of our comrades dead. Sanctify to us all the reminders that make fresh appeal to our hearts in this hour, and help us to prize more truly our land and its choicest institutions, for the maintenance of which our comrades gave themselves so freely.

"Make Thou the story of their devotion yet more pregnant with the power of a worthy impression upon our hearts, and in our homes as well; that those now growing beside us, upon whom must soon devolve the gravest responsibilities of our citizenship, may learn the lesson, and grow equally in the knowledge and the love of country, of liberty, of truth, and of Thyself. Help us to the exercise of a fitting purpose and spirit in the different elements of our present service, and to that constancy and faith in all the duties of our citizenship which is becoming on the part of those whom Thou hast called to so great privileges, and the cherishing of such inspiring memories.

“So may Thy blessing rest upon us, and upon all whose thoughts turn toward this place to-day. So may Thy providence effectually protect our land and nation through all the chances and changes of the future, and make our country increasingly the harbinger of hope for the world. All which of present grace and future favor we ask in the name of Thy Son, our Redeemer. AMEN.”

Then the “Recollections of the War,” a grand medley of war songs from the band, followed, after which Comrade William E. Disbrow of Company H, now Quartermaster-General of the State of Connecticut, briefly presented the monument to the Association in behalf of the State of Connecticut.

The rendering of “The Soldier’s Farewell” by the band called forth great applause, and then Captain Edward W. Marsh received the monument in behalf of the Association, as follows :

“We are thankful that the State of Connecticut has made provision for the erection of one monument for every regiment, in order to commemorate the deeds of her sons who served in the War of the great Rebellion.

“We are especially thankful that it is our privilege to locate the one perpetuating the valor of our own regiment upon these beautiful grounds, which have been forever set apart and consecrated as a burial place for the dead heroes of our beloved country.

“That not far away is the memorial of our late commander and leader, the distinguished General Sheridan, who was so great a favorite with us, and in whom we placed the most implicit confidence, whether in camp, on the march, or in time of battle.

“This monument will remain a perpetual witness to the patriotism of the 2,700 and more men who enlisted in the 19th Connecticut Infantry and the 2d Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery for the purpose of sustaining the union of these United States and the integrity of our great Republic.

“More than this, it will remain a memorial of the 500 and more men killed and wounded in the various engagements on the battle-field.

“It is also a memorial of those members of our organization who have died since the close of the war.

“We behold also our own monument, dedicated before the final roll-call that shall summon each and every one of us before the Judge of all the earth.

“On this occasion, and in the presence of these witnesses, we declare anew our allegiance to the government, and our faith in the starry flag which is the symbol of our Union.

“We believe now, as we did in the past, in the preservation of this Union.

“We believe that religious liberty and civil liberty should be inseparable.

“We believe that religion, morality, and knowledge are essential to good government and the happiness of mankind.

“Comrades, do not we speak your sentiments when we accept with gratitude this gift from our State, realizing the intent and spirit of our beloved commonwealth in its presentation, and with a full understanding of all it means to us and those who shall come after us.”

Captain Marsh's address was followed by music, “My Lodging is on the Cold Ground,” after which Hon. A. C. Hendrick, mayor of New Haven, and Chaplain Bradford, representing the 12th Regiment Connecticut Infantry, made brief remarks.

The following poem by Comrade DeWitt C. Sprague was omitted, owing to the illness of its distinguished author :

AT ARLINGTON.

Dear Arlington ! thy vernal bloom is shed,
 Thy summer loveliness has passed away,
 But Autumn comes, ere Winter's icy sway,
 To deck thy sod with purple, gold, and red.

Connecticut, these sacred mounds for thee
 Enfold thy children's dust, and now we bring
 To their dear memory our offering,
 Although the song of praise should loftier be.

BREVET-COL. A. H. FENN.

Thy sons, proud State, thy faithful sons have bled
 On many a glorious field for Freedom's right,
 To crush the tyrants or Rebellion's might,
 Through many a deadly breach heroic led.

Their deeds require no storied column high,
 No voice of eloquence, no flattering song ;
 They are our heritage, and they belong
 To Fame and Freedom, and shall never die.

Though massive granite crumble all away
 And perish every trophy of their fame,
 Still their proud memory would live on the same,
 Preserved and honored to the latest day.

They rear themselves a living monument
 Who for their country fight, or die for her ;
 Earth's tenderest bosom is their sepulchre ;
 That's hallowed ground with which their dust is blent !

Ah ! Freedom knows and guards the lonely grave
 That bears the touching epitaph, " UNKNOWN !"
 Blessing the sod, she claims it as her own,
 While eyes unseen weep o'er the nameless brave.

Tread softly ! Freedom's voice hath blessed the ground !
 Here sleep her children. Never, never more
 The drum will rouse, or cannon's awful roar.
 Rest on, O honored dead, in peace profound !

When thou shalt come again, O gentle Spring !
 Bedeck with mantle green each lowly bed,
 Fresh immortelles with dewy fingers spread,
 And let thy feathered choir the requiem sing.

Major A. H. Fenn, now a judge of the Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut, then delivered the following

ORATION.

It is not my purpose to recite, except in the briefest possible way, those events that constitute what might be called the history of our regiment, — that history, the best, I think, of all regimental histories, the masterpiece among such works, was written by a comrade tender and true, whom we loved in life because he first loved us, and who to-day is, as I trust, with the great majority of our old associates, waiting (and they will not have long to wait) to extend to us who still survive an old-time welcome on the other side. That history is written also on every brain, and in every heart, of those who once wore its uniform, and marched beneath its flags as they floated upon the front of battle, and led to victory for our cause, and death for the right. This is enough for us. It should be enough for those for whom we fought. A word only, then, of that concerning which, if fully told, the world could not contain the volumes which would be written.

The Nineteenth Connecticut Infantry was the response of Litchfield county to the call of the President for additional troops at the close of the Peninsula campaign in the summer of 1862. It sprang, armed and equipped, from the loins of the people, and joined, full voiced, in the answering cry, "We are coming, Father Abraham, three hundred thousand more." Our first service was under and in a Slough. To be the scavengers of Alexandria did not seem very glorious, but it was like the path of glory in this, that it led many of our dear comrades to the grave. Call not such deaths untimely, or too early.

" Before the fight to fall out of the ranks,
Dead and unslain,
To miss their glorious guerdon of God's thanks
That die for men.

" To fade before the sunset, when the noon
Brightens the brow,
Hush, rebel heart, nor answer thou 'Too soon,'
When God calls 'Now.'

" Whoso has loved the light, for him the sun
Will rise anew,
Whoso has done his best, leaves naught undone
That man can do."

Then came our detail in the forts, long continued, fully occupied, arduous in many ways, useful to the country in all ways, resulting in our transference to another branch under the name of the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, and fitting us to better perform the signal service waiting for us in the field.

Then came the 17th day of May, 1864, and from that time forward I shall here only say, wherever the history of the deeds of the Army of the Potomac, under Grant and Meade, and of the Army of the Shenandoah, under Sheridan, and of the old Sixth Corps, under that gallant and beloved son of Connecticut, whom God has spared to be with us here to-day, Maj.-Gen. Horatio G. Wright, in that last year of the war, from the Wilderness through Cold Harbor to Petersburg, back to Washington, to Winchester, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek, Petersburg again, Hatcher's Run, Sailor Creek to Appomattox, shall be inscribed, pointing with proud finger to that record every surviving member of our regiment may say, "All of this I saw, and part of it I was." So much the living may say. But what of the dead who strewed its pathway everywhere? They died that the nation might live. And, thanks be to God, the nation lives, and they have their reward.

The State of Connecticut erected this monument in honor of our regiment, and in memory of its dead. It was fitting that it should do this; fitting, also, that such memorial should be placed in a national cemetery. The vines* journeyed or rested, by the stars, wherever we went or were. And when we journey no more, but rest forever more, the vines still cluster about us, and the stars glow in lustre above.

And it is fitting, also, that this monument should stand in this particular cemetery and place. It was in this vicinity that much of our useful service was performed. Here, some of our fallen comrades sleep. Here, in the future years, in an especial degree, those who in the love of our country seek to pay respect and do reverence to its defenders will come and linger and adore. This will be Freedom's and Fame's eternal camping ground, and glory will here abide forever, and keep safe and holy this bivouac of the dead.

We are here to-day to dedicate this memorial. And yet, how true is the thought expressed in the immortal words of Abraham Lincoln, at Gettysburg, that such dedication cannot be made by words. It comes from action. Not from the lips, but from the life. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to that cause for which they died; the cause of free government ; to the establishment, upon sure and stable and immovable foundations, of that union of states, which, though many, shall be one, and, though denoted by separate stars, shall constitute a single glorious constellation, whose radiance shall irradiate and enlighten the world.

As we stand here to-day, a flood-tide of memories, rich, tender, and precious, rush in upon us with overwhelming force. The present, with all its thoughts, cares, activities, and duties, vanishes, and is submerged. In place of this, the scenes of the past come vividly to view. We see again the white tents spread over the plain, the blazing camp fires, the sentries pacing lonely beats in the silence of the night, the skeletons in rebel prison cells, the fevered and delirious soldiers in tent or hospital. We hear the bugles. We see the rush to arms, the rally round the flags. We feel the shock of battle. We look into the sweet faces of living comrades, and then only a moment later we look down upon those same faces lying at our feet, calm, still, and radiant with the peace of God that passeth all understanding,— the faces of those who have fought a good fight, who have finished their course, who have kept the faith ; who, as the Master died to make men holy, themselves died to make men free.

Oh, brothers in the past, brothers now, brothers forever ! — the state from which you went, the country for which you died, dedicates this monument to your memory, consecrates it to you with its gratitude, hallows it by its love. Oh, sacred trust committed to these stones, to stand through centuries to come and tell to all the story of those who so loved their native land that they counted it a privilege to die in its defense ! But not for this only will it stand ; not merely to point to the past, to speak of those whose work is ended, but also, nay, rather, to show from the past to the present and to the future the path of duty in which they led, and we who live, and those who come after us should follow.

So, in the providence of God, let us trust that it will prove. Thus, and thus only, shall it come to be, that the dead of our regiment shall not have died in vain. During the war we contributed to, and largely constituted the defense of the nation's capitol, on this side of the Potomac. As then, so now, and hereafter, may it be. Where we stood, this memorial stands; where we went, if there be need, other regiments bearing the same emblem of state and nation shall go, actuated by the same purpose, animated by the example set for them in the past. Because our regiment lived and did its duty, others like it will live and do theirs also. Thus, while warring only for a perishing imperialism, the old guard of France, at Waterloo, died, though it would not surrender. Our regiment, standing for the eternal rights of man, also never surrendered. And it will never die. As I look into the visages of my surviving comrades here to-day, I see beneath the wrinkles and waste and wear of thirty superadded years, the same fires that glowed in your youthful faces and led you on to battle then. I feel, I know, that the spirit that animated and nerved our regiment then has not lessened or weakened as the ranks have melted and lessened and gone down. It will live while we live. And when he who shall be so unfortunate as to be the last survivor of us all shall stand alone, he will stand anxious for the final summons to come, and ready in prompt response to shoulder arms and forward march into the great beyond, with the battle cry of freedom, and the shout of victory on his lips, that shall be taken up and carried on as though by our again united and unbroken ranks, by countless millions yet unborn, and through unnumbered ages yet to come.

ABOUT THE MONUMENT.

At the close of the oration, the audience, accompanied by the band, sang "America," under the leadership of Stephen Maslen, the builder of the monument.

The comrades then marched to the monument which had been beautifully draped by Superintendent Drum, and unveiling it grouped themselves around it, and were photographed by L. C. Handy, the war photographer of Washington, D. C.

A basket-lunch had been provided by Mrs. A. G. Bliss and daughters, which was greatly relished and enjoyed by nearly all the comrades.

At half-past one in the afternoon a squadron of the 6th

U. S. Cavalry, under command of Col. Samuel S. Sumner, gave a parade and drill upon the drill-ground of Fort Meyers, directly in rear of the cemetery. It was an interesting reminiscence of more than thirty years ago, when the artillery brigade and Gen. "Bob" Tyler was often induced to show some proficiency in military movements upon these grounds, and our vote of thanks was certainly only a feeble expression of our feelings. Thus ended, with our return to Washington and subsequent sight-seeing, this pleasant trip.

THE REUNION.

The 30th annual reunion of the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery was held in the amphitheatre of Arlington Cemetery, Virginia, on Wednesday, October 21, 1896, at 10 in the forenoon. It was called to order by the President, Lieut. F. M. Cooke. The Secretary's, Treasurer's, and Historian's reports were read and accepted.

The following comrades were elected officers of the Association for the ensuing year :

President — Capt. James Dean, Crown Point, N. Y.
Vice-President — Lt. Chas. A. Reynolds, Noroton, Conn.
Secretary and Historian — D. C. Kilbourn, Litchfield, Conn.
Asst. Secretary — E. S. Roberts, East Canaan, Conn.
Treasurer — Chas. W. Hinsdale, Litchfield, Conn.

The Executive Committee to be appointed by the President and to have power to arrange for next reunion. The following report was presented :

Report of the Committee of the Second Conn. Heavy Artillery Association Regarding Honorary Membership.

Your committee, to whom was referred the resolution presented by Comrade A. G. Bliss, at the last annual reunion of this Association, beg to submit the following report :

The resolution referred to is as follows :

WHEREAS, as the membership of this association is surely thinning year by year, and in view of the expectancy of human life the association must soon cease to exist, unless recruited from some source other than from those who served in the glorious old regiment to which we belonged ;

FREDERICK M. COOKE

Therefore, in order to perpetuate this association, and also that the name and fame of the 19th Conn. Infantry and 2d Conn. Heavy Artillery may be preserved and handed down to posterity, be it

Resolved, That the sons of those who belonged to said organizations shall be eligible to honorary membership in this association, provided that candidates for such membership shall have attained the age of 18 years, and shall be in good repute in the community in which they reside. Be it further

Resolved, That applications for such honorary membership shall be presented to the executive committee of this association, which committee shall report to the association for favorable action only the names of such persons as are found to possess the essential qualifications enumerated above. Be it further

Resolved, That a viva voce vote of the association shall be had upon the report of the executive committee, and that on receiving a majority vote and upon the payment of — annual dues, candidates shall be constituted honorary members of the association and shall be qualified to participate in its proceedings.

Your committee has given due consideration to this matter, and while the sense of this Association has heretofore been adverse to the establishment of an honorary membership, it is believed that, as our comrades are rapidly falling out of the ranks, the time is now propitious for such action.

It must be apparent that without some steps of this nature are taken to augment our numbers our Association must necessarily cease to exist in a few years at the most.

Your committee believes that the perpetuation of this Association is desirable, not only as a means of handing down to posterity the name and fame of the glorious old regiment in which we served, but also as a means of instilling into the breasts of our posterity that patriotic ardor which is the safety of the Republic.

By pursuing this course we shall be but following in the footsteps of many semi-military societies, among which may be mentioned the society of the 14th Conn. Regiment, which, at its reunion held in 1893, adopted a resolution providing for the admission to honorary membership of sons of its members.

During the first two years that the resolution was in operation twenty-four sons availed themselves of the opportunity thus afforded, and the wisdom of such action is becoming more manifest every year.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the resolution after it shall be amended by inserting "fifty cents" in the hiatus, and by adding at the close of the resolution the words "but shall not be entitled to a vote on strictly business matters."

A. G. BLISS,	} Committee.

JAMES DEANE,

Upon motion, the report was accepted and the committee discharged.

It was then moved that the resolutions offered by the committee be adopted, and after a long debate the resolutions, as amended, were adopted.

The following report of the Monument Committee was received and accepted.

To our Comrades—

The General Assembly of Connecticut, at its session of 1893, passed a resolution authorizing the Quartermaster-General of the State to erect for each regiment of the State engaged in the rebellion a monument at a cost not to exceed one thousand dollars, and to be placed in some national cemetery or battlefield, the plans and location to be approved by the regimental association, and subject to certain conditions specified in said act and resolution.

A special meeting of this regiment was held in Bridgeport early in 1894 to take the matter into consideration, whose action resulted in the appointment of a Monumental Committee, consisting of Comrades F. A. Lucas, D. C. Kilbourn, W. H. Lewis, A. G. Bliss, and H. S. McKinney. They procured different designs and reported the same at the reunion in New Milford in 1894. The association adopted the design of Comrade Kilbourn, and continued the same committee, and voted that the monument be located at Arlington Cemetery, Virginia, that Judge Fenn be invited to deliver the oration at its dedication, and that we would accept the provisions of the act of the legislature.

The committee then proceeded with their duties. Mr. Kilbourn went to Washington, and was by Senator O. H. Platt introduced to Gen. Batchelor, the Quartermaster-General of the United States army, and who was pleased to give us lot 100 in Section B for the site.

In 1895, Comrade W. E. Disbrow of Company H became the Quartermaster-General of the State of Connecticut, and the plans and specifications were handed over to him for execution.

It was expected that the monument would be erected in 1895, but various circumstances interfered, and your committee reported the progress made to the reunion at Lakeville in 1895, and were again continued as the committee, and W. H. Whitelaw was added to it; and it is mainly through his efforts that the excursion and transportation arrangements were made.

Various circumstances have delayed the dedication until now, and in closing our report we wish to thank you all for your continual assistance and support.

We append the builders' description of it for your preservation, and hope that future generations may recognize its beauty and feel proud of this recorded gratitude of our commonwealth.

ARLINGTON.

PROBABLY no cemetery in the world will be more celebrated or honored in the future than this National Cemetery at Arlington, Virginia. It is the last resting-place of more than sixteen thousand men, who died upon the battle-fields around their country's capital in its defense when it was menaced and attacked by foes upholding a slaveholders' rebellion.

"MEN WHO DIED THAT THEIR COUNTRY MIGHT LIVE."

The history of these beautiful grounds is interesting as an incident of the home life of Washington.

The love marriage of Washington and Widow Custis was never blessed with children, but she came to Mount Vernon with her two children, John Parke Custis and Martha Custis. Martha, a lovely girl, died at the age of sixteen, and John became the sole heir of immense estates; and, instead of going to college and becoming a clergyman, as Washington wished, he ran away from school, and at the age of nineteen, in 1774, married a Maryland beauty, Eleanor Calvert, and soon bought of the Alexanders the present tract, now known as Arlington, of about 1,100 acres, naming it after the Earl of Arlington, one of the early grantees of Virginia lands. Custis espoused the cause of the colonies, and was an aid of General Washington during the Revolutionary war, and died of the camp fever at Yorktown immediately after the surrender of Cornwallis. Washington adopted his two youngest children, George W. P. Custis and Eleanor Custis, and thenceforward they lived as a part of his family.

Upon reaching manhood, shortly after the death of General Washington, G. W. P. Custis erected the present mansion house, modeling it after the ancient temple of Theseus of Athens. The location plainly shows the wise and cultivated tastes of its owner — upon one of the bluffs on the west shore of the Potomac, near the great highway from Georgetown to Alexandria, the two then great commercial cities of the upper Potomac, overlooking the newly-laid-out capital city of an incipient nation. To this classical mansion, in the midst of grand old forest trees and views of entrancing beauty, its founder brought Mary Lee Fitzhugh as bride in 1803, and for more than half a century Arlington was the home of a hospitable, wealthy, quiet Southern gentleman farmer, to whose open doors patriots, statesmen, and scholars were ever welcomed by all the pleasant grace and courtesy that refinement and wealth could offer. Here he gathered in those many years all the fruits of such a life — elegant paintings (and he himself was a painter of no mean ability), a library of rare and valuable books, curios, and specimens, and, more valuable than all, innumerable relics of Mount Vernon and George Washington's career.

Only one child was born and reared in this lovely home, a daughter, Mary, who in 1831 married a young lieutenant in the United States army, Robert E. Lee, a descendant of Richard Lee, a younger son of the Earl of Litchfield, who came to America in 1641 as colonial secretary under Sir William Berkeley, and they thereafter lived until the Civil War in this Arlington home.

In 1857 Mr. Custis died, devising Arlington to his grandson, George W. C. Lee, subject to the life use of his parents.

The story of Lee's refusing the command of the Union army, and casting his abilities with the slave power, is too well known for repeating. He resigned on April 20, 1861, and two days later he and his family left Arlington, as it proved to be, forever. It was soon occupied by the Union troops, and has ever since been under government control. In 1864 it was purchased by the government at a tax sale for $26,100; but at the death of Mrs. Lee, in 1873, her son instituted recovery proceedings, which culminated in 1883, after a long litigation, in the government purchasing it for $150,000, and thus acquiring a good title. During the Civil War it was used chiefly as official headquarters, and known to our own regiment as General DeRussey's headquarters, of the Defenses south of the Potomac, and we had a number of men detailed there as guards, clerks, or in similar services.

In 1864, owing to the overcrowded condition of the various cemeteries about Washington, it was a perplexing question how to dispose of the more than 8,000 interments. General Meigs, quartermaster of the armies, ordered interments at Arlington, and they began on May 13, 1864, by the burial of a Confederate veteran, L. Reinhardt of the 23d North Carolina Regiment. During the remainder of the war a large number of burials were made, and after its close the remains of those who had been buried upon the battlefields, or at the forts or hospitals, were removed to Arlington, until there are now lying on this sacred soil more than 16,000 bodies of men engaged in that great struggle for freedom, of which 2,111 are "unknown."

Of this great number of martyrs, the following were members of our own regiment:

In the words of another:

"These heroes are dead. They died for liberty—they died for us. They are at rest. They sleep in the land they made free, under the flag they rendered stainless, under the solemn pines, the sad hemlocks, the tearful willows, the embracing vines. They sleep beneath the shadows of the clouds, careless alike of sunshine or storm, each in the windowless palace of rest. Earth may run red with other wars — they are at peace. In the midst of battle, in the roar of conflict, they found the serenity of death. I have one sentiment for the living and dead — cheers for the living and tears for the dead.”
