The size of the terror and the paper system. The real effects are directly the reverse of these. The subject has been so completely mystified by writers who have accommodated their theories to the existing state of things, rather than to the frinciples of the system, that a simple analysis, such as all can comprehend, may not be maccoptable to our readers, or usuless to the mation, by showing how cunningly this modern device herforms all the functions and answers all the objects of oid exploided despotisms.

issuing paper money is sufficient proof that the privilege is worth the price at least.

The triffi is, it is worth twice, thrice, and four times the price. The sum is reimbursed over and over again out of the profits of the institution, which profits are derived from the profits of the institution, which profits are derived from the profits arise grangaphy from lending its credit (some people iney call it money) to individuals for the ordinary purposes of trade and speculation. The person trading or speculating in this borrowel capital is doing a losing praises of the bark discount, and afford him the means of tiving bedides whereas if he traded or speculated on his own capital, he could disponse with the profit necessary to pay the interest on the basis loss. As it is, however, he puts this profit on the price of the coramodity in which he has invested the bank loss, and it is paid by the consimers of the article. on the price of the commedity in which he has invested the bank leen, and it is paid by the commers of the article.— Who are the great consumers! The fermirs and the tabering classes, constituting nine-teachs of the people of the United States, whe thus pay the bank interest.

This pretanded equivalent paid to the government for the privilege of picking the pockets of the people, is a sheer imposition. The people receive a bonus far a therter, which enables a banking company to humbing them out of three of four times the mount. Yet they imagine themselve spacially benefitted by such a capital bargain. The banking company says, we will give you a thousand dollars for the privilege of receiving back four or thousand, and the people erry amen?

Cranting to any small fraction of a community the prividirecting to any small increase of a community the privi-lege of making :paper money is then, in other words, be-stowing on them a possession of that privilege. The mem-hers of this corporate body, therefore, eccupy the position which a privileged order of nobility occupied under the foundal System; only with this slight difference, that the series of the latter paid them a tax in labor, while those of the former has them in money.

the latter paid them a tax in labor, while those of the former pay them in tunney.

Since the adoption of the paper system in Europe and the United States, and the consequent enormous extension of the bastard representative of mo ey, this species of depreciated currency-lab become the grest mession of ettaming and preserving the old, substance of exclasive priviliges, while the form is changed. As thus: nothing can be more self-system, we think, than that whoeve possesses the exclusive privilege of creating what is received as an equivalent for the labors of the proper, possesses at the same time that command of all kinds of services from that people. The revival, theighter, of the property are an equivalent of the people, possesses at the same time the command of all kinds of services from that people. The revival, theighter, of this tew of dependence in a new forter, that is to say, in the abope of a paper currency, is, to all the perposes of oppression, a restactitation of the old founds system. In inevitable effect is to create great inequalities of property, which are every where fatal to the liberties of the old founds.

The approaching struggle, is not one which derives a factitious consequence from the hyperbole and cant of contending and amtitions eaders. It is vital—is for liberty, for the enjoymens of the fixing of our labours and the rights wrested from oppression by the bood of obtained, and most indispensable to the dignity and hippiness of freedom. A victory now will lead to a veryes of impassing, which without violating any vested rights; without doing injustice to any corporate body or occasioning any violent reaction in the monotory system, will stinothly, dustily and imperceptibly free us and one pasterity from the great, curse imperceptibly free us and our posterity from the great curs of the times, most perfect the reign of soversing men and forester put an end to their of separations.
