"What's that?"
Frank balled himself mentally. His foot had bounced over an rock, and it rattled from one side of the boat to the other with every wash of the waves.
"Sounded like a tin can," Klenger remarked.
"I'll get out of it," Sweeper said. "We can't talk to him. He's not here."
"How do you know that?" Frank asked.
"I saw him. The ruck stopped."
"How long, Sweeper?" the stranger told him.
"Frank treated with respect. But it was short-lived."
"In an hour or so," Sweeper said.
"I didn't pull the tender right up to the boat. And I didn't spread canvas all over the bottom of it!"
He pointed off the carpenter.
"What, kid," he ordered. "Get up!"
Frank stood up, and Sweeper turned to the stranger.
"This is one of the scoopers you were talking Suddenly a helicopter appeared out of a cloud, and Frank's heart quickened with hope. The chopperthe sun as the plane dipped toward the sea.

Frank shouted and waved his arms wildly. He saw an arm extend itself through the plane's window and wave back, and a few minutes later the helicopter hovered over the boat.
The plane halted thirty feet above the water, and hung in the air. The pilot looked down at Frank and bobbed his head in a friendly gesture.
"Frank!" he called anxiously. "Can you hold on moment longer?"
"I will, Joe!"
Frank grinned happily. He had never been so glad to see anyone in his life!
"I'm all right, Joe!" he assured his brother. "Just get me out of this soup!"
The pilot laughed with relief. "Okay," he called.
"Hi!"
The pilot dropped a nylon rescue line toward the boat, equipped with a breeches buoy, which dropped a few yards away from Frank.
Frank swam to the buoy and threw his legs
over the trouserlike boom.
The pilot of the helicopter held the plane's posi-
