

Class F 74 —

Book W 24 —

LIGHT

VOLUME III.

656
420

FROM

MARCH 7,

TO

AUGUST 29,

1891,

_____
WORCESTER, MASS.
_____

I N D E X.

	No. Page		No. Page		No. Page
Abduction by an Indian,	588	Chatham Athletic Club,	150	Festival of Bayreuth, The	565
Acrostic, Extraordinary	448	Chatauquans at Lakeview,	463, 501	Fifteenth, The Old	477
Advice to a Young Man,	171	Chestnuts,	425	Fifteenth Regiment,	534
Aletheia's Gift,	211	Chicamauga Incidents,	135	Fifty-Cent Fourth, A	424
Albany, In	387	Choirs, The Church	119, 143	Fishing No, on the Sabbath,	563
Almanac 1811,	355	Churches, New	109	Fiske, E. R.	435
Almanac of 1814, An	377	Church of Armenia, The	448	Fitch, Austin G.	515
Amateur Sport, 220, 245, 344, 372, 447, 524 573, 581, 620	524	Church Notes, 5, 28, 52, 77, 117, 128, 149 173, 197, 221, 244, 281, 320, 345, 385, 409 420, 441, 464, 500, 512, 532, 580, 620	409	Flag, The Old	445
Annie O'Brien,	612	Clark, T. A.	445	Flashes,	48, 68, 110, 216
Aristotle, The Rediscovered Treatise of	105	Clifton Springs,	61	Fly Fishing,	470
Around the World,	238	Clocks, Old	227	Folk-Lore Congress,	419
Arrow Heads,	45	College Lotus Eating,	399	Galbraith, Rev. John	166
Assault, That	486	Collier, Asa R.	435	G. A. R., Post 10, 105, 129, 159, 180, 334	334
Assessors, Board of	462	Colorado, A Day's Excursion in	36	Garret Fruit,	253, 410
Athletics, Worcester	69	Combs, Simon E.	222	Gates, Remarks of President, at Amherst Alumni Reunion,	109
Athy, Miss Annie	363	Coming Events,	21	Genius, A	448
Babies, Pilgrim	224	Company A,	324	Gettysburg Monument,	297
Bacon, Peter C.	18	Company E, 15th Regiment,	448	Ghost, The College	252, 282
Baker, Mrs. Frances Shedd	623	Conant, Edwin	31	Glimpses of Beauty,	489
Baldwinville Fair,	536	Conaty, Rev. T. J.	510	Goelet Farm, The Old	339
Ball, Rev. G. S.	582	Contrasts,	178, 487	Good and Old,	585
Bancroft, George, and Round Hill School	134	Co-operation,	299	Goodnow, E. A.	6
Bannister, Jas. S.	41	Couldn't Remember,	395	Gospel of Home Trade, The	245
Bark,	238	Country Walk, A	85	Greek, Pronouncing Modern	513
Barnum's Show,	427	Crowding,	499	Green Street as it was,	86
Bartlett, Solon	8	Cuba, A Trip to	349	Half Holiday,	395
Base Hits,	141	Cushing's Battery,	608	Halifax, Vermont,	620
Base Ball, 191, 209, 272, 294,	421	Cutter-Wright,	324	Hamlin, Hannibal	445
Beggars, English, of Today	518	'Cycles,	65	Hammond, Mrs. S. L.	167
Beginnings,	231	Day We Celebrate, The	431	Hancock Club,	163
Ben Hur, What Inspired	171	Denholm, W. A.	30	Handel Festival, The	465
Bennington,	585	Devens & Cheever,	434	Hathaway, I. D.	323
Bennington, Worcester at	584	Dickens, The Genius of	380	Heard, Nathan F.	47
Benson, Dr. L. M.	329	Diggins, Capt. P.	502	He Wouldn't Risk It,	301
Bickford, Chas. J.	487	Dorr, Rev. Henry	166	Hidden Treasures,	59
Bicycle Club, Bay State	290	Doyle, Rev. J. H.	7	High School Graduates,	407
Bicycle Notes,	298	Earle, William B.	373	High School Graduation,	418
Bill, Ledyard	349	Easter,	86	His Father's Old Friend,	214
Bird's Mistake, A	213	Eat, Good to 15, 40, 63, 88, 112, 187, 207 256, 278, 306, 330, 354, 378, 402, 426, 450 472, 496, 523, 547, 571, 591, 619	207	History Repeats Itself,	114
Books and Bookmen, 10, 34, 58, 82, 106, 130 154, 178, 202, 226, 250, 274, 286, 300, 307 326, 339, 350, 374, 398, 422, 442, 451, 466 490, 514, 524, 538, 562, 584, 610	130	Eaton, Prof. T. E. N.	322, 369	Hollyhocks,	465
Boston Letter, 129, 179, 347, 383,	488	Eklund, Mrs. H. W.	516	Holmes, Mrs. Mary J.	434
Boston Slums,	606	Electrical Exhibition,	44, 71	Holy Cross College,	5, 13
Boston Station Man,	9	Electric Plants,	227	Homes, Separate	204
Bowser, Mr.	475	Electrocution,	487	Hopkins, Judge John	198
Boy Choir Causes a Scene,	176	England's Rulers,	345	Horatio Nelson,	180
Boyden, Elbridge	102	Entertainments, 4, 28, 56, 89, 92, 100, 140 148, 173, 175, 199, 234, 245, 247, 272, 294 329, 344, 392, 487, 533, 569, 584	140	Horticultural Society, Worcester County	62
Boys' Club,	346	Episcopal Church Club,	301	Houghton, Josiah P.	463
Brooks, Bishop	227	Errors Rectifi d,	105	Household, 16, 64, 111, 160, 184, 230, 280, 305, 332, 356, 381, 405, 429, 453, 473, 497, 521, 549, 593	280
Brooks, Chas. E.	54	Evangeline, To the Land of 526, 561,	596	House Warming (Blanchard's)	369
Brown, A. Swan	272	Explanatory,	507	Howland, W. A.	517
Brown, John	258	Eyes and Ears,	469	Hudson, Mrs. H. O.	557
Brown, Lyman	404	Faces and Pictures,	492, 516	Indians,	181
Brown, Theodore P.	359	Fads, Artistic	189	Indian Territory Letter,	153, 325
Camp Life,	232	Farr, Geo. W.	444	In School,	238
Canada, A Worcester Boy in 201, 225,	259	Fashion,	39, 87, 183, 206, 254	Instance, An	228
Catholic Total Abstinence Union,	535			In the Streets,	177
Chamberlain District Farmers,	157			Intruder, An	149
				Ismael P'asha,	541

	No.	Page		No.	Page		No.	Page
Jacking Deer,		208	Old Hundred,		590	Story of a Green Veil, A		12
Jersey, Bits from		478	Old Times,		566	Street Venders,		494
Johnny's Violets,		302	Over on Our Street,	57, 114, 248, 425, 550,		Stubby's Bouquet,		133
Journal, The		177	567			Sunday School Lesson,		129
Just for Fun,		38	Pale Spring Days, The		312	Sunday School Parade, A		62
Kane, Owen E.		273	Parker, Amos A. (centenarian)		270	Sweden,		267
Kendall, Mrs. Maria		584	Parker, A. A. (assessor)		435	Teaching and Stone Walls,		286
Kent, Mr. and Mrs. Ezra		128	Particular,		37	Tennis,		533
Kinnicutt, Mrs. E. W.		107	Pat, A Love Story,	352, 376		Tennis Club, Winslow	417,	411
Knowles, Elisha S.		486	Paxton Teacher,		273	Ten Times One are Ten,		66
Knox, Henry F.		461	Pearl Street, On		153	Then and Now,		9
Ladies, For the		14	Pierce, Miss Lillian J.		532	Thomas, Rev. Wm. H.		167
Lake, At the	353,	427	Pilgrims vs. Strangers,		408	Too Previous,		103
Lake Park,		569	Plain Speaking,		38	Total Abstinence,		273
Lakeside,	262,	524	Plays and Players,	8, 37, 85, 155, 191, 260,		Treasury Express,		225
Lakeside Boat Club,		609	347, 489, 537			True Sketch, A		328
Latin Fun,		21	Pleasant Street Baptist Church,		174	Truth, The		263
Leicester, 4, 17, 173, 190, 215, 262, 273		298,	Poet, A		85	Twins,		595
333, 382, 409, 416, 463, 476, 488, 533, 535,		581, 620	Portraits, The	126,	196	Two Corner Stones,		513
Lemon Trick, The		446	Power, Rev. J. J.		210	Typothetæ, Worcester		263
Lexington, Va. Letter,		297	Pratt, Joseph		126	Twenty-First, The		582
Lexington. Who brought news of the battle,		162	Prison, An Escape from		410	Twenty-First in Upton,		604
Library, Free Public		79	Problem, A		235	Universalist Ministers,		322
Library Additions, 210, 397, 421, 478, 519, 542,		567, 590, 613	Proprietor, His Idea of a		132	Universalist Anniversary,		336
License in Washington,		251	Putnam, C. C.		271	Upton's Historic Houses,		537
Liquor Problem, The		303	Queer,		21	Van Bibber's Kleptomania,		156
Little Carey,		60	Quiet Retreat, A		532	Volapuk, 23, 38, 66, 83, 113, 139, 147, 187,		187
Longley, J. O.		94	Quincy,		428	213, 229, 258, 277, 323, 358, 383, 444		494
Lost Baby, The	84,	108	Quinn—Gaffney,		348	511, 535, 560, 615		370
Lothrop's Opera House,		605	Race Course, The		420	Wall, Caleb		485
Lottery Ticket, The		541	Rainy Day, A		13	Wallis, Sir W. P., England's Senior Admiral,		534
Lowell,		607	Rebellion, The, 1861—1891		299	Washburn, W. Ansel		444
Male Ginevra, The	400,	430	Reform Club,		613	Washington Letter, 9, 57, 177, 258,		479
Mansfield and Elmira		319	Relics,	428, 439, 459,	506	W. C. T. U.		611
Maple Sugar,		231	Revenge, The Girls		401	2d, W. C. T. U.,		188
Marble, E. T.		78	Reverie of a Sportsman,		503	Week, The 20, 29, 53, 92, 116, 140, 164,		460
Marine Band, The		81	Rice, Hon. Henry C.		142	212, 236, 260, 285, 310, 360, 384, 432,		597
Marriage, A Strange		468	River, A		238	508, 556, 597		348
Marsh, Simeon B.		313	Rogers, William		189	Wesby, Irving		213
Mechanics Association,		104	Roland for an Oliver, A		475	White, Rev. H. J.		176
Mechanics Hall,		136	Runaway, Our		560	Who Did Sin?		197
Medfield, In		394	Sanderson—Demings,		566	Why?		623
Medfield, Historical Echoes from		463	School and College, 7, 21, 32, 42, 47, 55, 56,		76, 93, 95, 101, 118, 125, 161, 165, 173, 185,	Willard, Miss		491
Memorial Day at Arlington,		335	200, 233, 236, 237, 248, 257, 268, 275, 287,		295, 320, 333, 337, 351, 357, 361, 368, 382,	Williams, Gus		291
Memorial Day Speakers in Worcester		310	383, 396, 399, 407, 408, 431, 448, 455, 493,		591, 615	Windle, Willie W.		441
County Towns,		272	Schools, Our	338, 401, 494,	566	Winslow Tennis Club,	417,	386
Memorial Sunday,		395	Scientist, For the		486, 512	Woman's Suffrage League,		18
Merrill, Wm F.		395	Sea or Desert,		540	Wood, Watson L.		114
Metcalf, Caleb B.	559,	609	Selectmen of Worcester,		323	Worcester, A Stranger's Impression of		459
Methodist Pastors,		167	Selfish Man, A		564	Worcester's Disgrace,		247
Millbury Letter, 11, 46, 55, 81, 117, 138, 149,		190, 433, 484	Sherman, Gen.		61	Worcester in 1870,		615
Miller, Henry W.		331	Sherman at the Tomb of Ward,		14	Worcester in Washington,		587
Mississippi's Sources,		440	Shires of England,		334	York, England,		81
Monadnock,		369	Shrewsbury,	262, 474,	618	Young, Brigham, Letter from		81
Monarch of the Pool, The		249	Sioux City Corn Palace,		534
Monroe, A. C.		403	Sixth Regiment, The		151
Morse, Miss Faith		479	Slavery Massachusetts		512
Musical Creed, A		585	Smith, Charles M.		543
Music and Books,		463	Smoking in College,		299
Music—Fatal Masterpieces,		591	Society of Antiquity,		449
Music Festival,	511,	532	Sons of Veterans,		494
Names Grow, How		531	South End News, 179, 199, 284, 311		324
Natural History Camp,	501,	588	348, 382, 392, 454
Natural History, The Study of		276	Sports, Amateur	220,	245
Newton, Tyler	127,	243	Sports, Interscholastic		358
No Irishman,		502	Sprague, Gen. A. B. R.		296
No License, Dr. Cheever on		115	Spring Poem, Not a		255
Nurses, Trained		408	Staples, Hon. H. B.		558
O'Connor, Harding		362	Sterling,		613
Old Book,		425	Stiles, Chas. A.		524
			Stiles, Major F. G.		470

Poetry.

Aftermath,	379
Allegory, An	401
An Ancient Rose,	179
Apple Blossoms,	227
Awaiting the Benediction,	153
Ballads of Blue and Gray,	587
Baltimore, The Fifteenth in	550
Banshee, The	158
Barnes, J. L., Lines on the Death of	205
Baron Monopoly,	182
Bivouac of the Dead,	298

I N D E X .

	No. Page		No. Page		No. Page
By and By,	53	Solitude,	251	Davis, Harry S.	389
City's Jubilee, The	238	Sons of Veterans,	411	Denholm, W. A.	25
Class Ode, W. P. I.,	200	Spoon, A Souvenir	584	Dickinson, G. S.	413
Clear in the East,	491	Spring,	143	Dorr, Rev. Henry	166
Club Man's Daughter to the Club Man, The	419	Spring Poem, A	285	Eaton, Prof. T. E. N.	365
Comrades,	299	Springtime,	143	Ellis, Frank H.	145
Comrades, Draw Near	304	Thoughts of Easter,	86	Fire Engines,	222, 223
Crocus, The	5	To Phoebus,	484	Galbraith, Rev. John	166
Crown Them,	297	Transition, Part I,	333	Goodnow, E. A.	1
Curse of the Day, The	373	Transition, Part II,	355	Hastings, Alice I.	389
Custer's Last Charge,	397	Two Nights in One	86	Hazelden, C. P.	389
Decease of Three Divines,	229	Violet, The	363	Heald, Lucy D.	389
Electric Car, The	615	Wanted, Men	83	Holmes, O. W.	603
Envy Not,	83	What a Boy Can Do,	383	Hopkins, John	193
Fort Snelling,	591	Whispering Pines,	249	Ingraham, H. B.	290
Gethsemane,	273	Who Knows?	597	Jones, Lt. Gov. E. F.	152
Greece,	182	Whom Do Men Say That I Am?	589, 611	Knowles, E. S.	481
Hills, The	53	Winnower to the Winds, The	484	Lakeside Boat Club House,	601
Holyoke Valley,	485	Wishes,	14	Lemont, B. A.	290
Inspiration,	494	Yellow, White and Purple,	59	Lowell, J. R.	579
In the Twilight	68			Marble, E. T.	73
Jennie,	377			Mechanics Hall,	104
Johnstown, A Ballad of	107			Metcalf, C. B.	559
Judges of Israel, The	590			Morgan, Lulu A.	389
Julia,	239			Newton, Tyler	127
La Grippe,	331			Otis, H. G.	457
Life's Beauties	83			Parker, A. A. (a centenarian)	270
Lift Up Thine Eyes,	582			Parker, Amos A. (assessor)	457
Lost, Yet Saved	155			Pleasant Street Baptist Church,	169
Mastery,	128			Power, Rev. J. J.	241
May 30,	301			Pratt, Joseph	121
Moen, P. L.	224			Public Library, Worcester,	79 80
Mohammedan, A	348			Sherman, Wm. T.	315
My Love,	380			Smith, Charles M.	543
My Peace I Give to Thee,	103			Southgate, H. M.	413
Nature's Cup of Cold Water,	57			Sprague, A. B. R.	289
Only,	138			Staples, Hon. H. B.	553
On Worcester Hills,	239			Talbot, Thomas	457
Our New Recruits,	359			Tatman, C. T.	413
Philosopher, The	362			Wall, Caleb A.	370
Poet's Song, The	546			Ware, Louie E.	413
Recompense,	255			Warren, E. H.	389
Resurgam,	251			Washburn, W. Ansel	529
Resurrection, The	428			"Wheelbarrow The"	148
Rollaway, A	565			White, Rev. H. J.	176
Sabbath Dawn, A	9			Windle, Willie W.	291
Sergeant Jasper,	234			Universalist Pastors—Rev. S. P. Sanders,
Secret of Joy,	29			Rev. A. Case, Rev. C. H. Tillotson,
Send Them Home Tenderly,	152			Rev. J. G. Adams, Rev. L. M. Bur-
Sherman and Corse,	14			rington, Rev. T. E. St. John, Rev. B.
				F. Bowles	317

Illustrations.

Adams, Harry A.	145
Ames, H. H.	389
Assessors, Board of	457
Ball, Geo. S.	577
Bartlett, Solon	8
Becker, E. C. A.	583
Beckers Business College	opp. 583
Bennett, Albert L.	145
Boyden, Elbridge	97
Boys' Club	opp. 346
Brennan, Stanley C.	145
Brooks, C. E.	49
Brown, A. Swan	265
Brown, Theodore P.	341
Burtelle, A	413
Clark Building,	583
Clark, T. A.	437
Combs, Simon E.	217
Conaty, Rev. T. J.	505
Copeland, A. C.	290
Daniels, Fred H.	145

LIGHT

VOL. III. No. 1. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

E. A. GOODNOW,

The Oldest Bank President in Worcester.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

CHOLLAR, PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.,

NEW FURNITURE!

Our extensive warerooms are now filled with New Furniture, to which we ask the attention of purchasers. We are confident that no such complete stock adapted to the wants of all buyers was ever on exhibition in this city. In our CHAMBER SUITE department you will find some very handsome things, in Oak, Maple and Mahogany. Our Bird's Eye Maple Suites are beauties.

PARLOR FURNITURE.

New Goods arriving daily. We have Parlor Furniture for all. If you do not want plush in your parlor, we can show you a large display of Suites, in Rugs, Tapestry, and Silk Coverings. Hall, Dining-Room and Library Furniture in Great Variety. See our goods, get our prices and terms before deciding on your Furniture.

247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

J. PLAMONDON,

→ FINE BOOT AND SHOE REPAIRING, ←
398 Main Street, Corner Pearl, up two flights.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE

permanently eradicated by the

ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,
92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

→ ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING ←

Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,
Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.
Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold
on commission.

MRS. S. M. KEYES.

FIRE INSURANCE!

EDW. E. LONGLEY,

339 Main St., Worcester.

We make a specialty of insuring Dwellings and Household Furniture under the latest and most approved forms, at lowest rates.

MME. GARCEAU,

* ARTISTIC DRESS MAKING. *

Ball Dresses, Wedding Dresses and Gowns of the latest Parisian style a specialty. Call and examine Patterns and Styles.

Room No. 1, 245 Main Street.

Fine Groceries and Provisions,

I obtain Mrs. Morgan's Home Made Bread fresh every afternoon and am prepared to take orders and deliver it on short notice.

I also have Home Made Cake and Cream fresh every day.

C. E. MINCKLER,

16 Woodland Street, Worcester.

Telephone No. 181-4.

GOOD NEWS ABOUT SHORT-HAND!

Students mastering the art and taking positions at ten dollars per week after two months' study at

HINMAN'S BUSINESS COLLEGE.

Since securing the right for Worcester to teach the wonderful

"New Rapid" System of Shorthand

students are learning to write forty to sixty words per minute in four weeks, and eighty to one hundred words in eight weeks. By this system pupils can do better work in three months at a cost of $30 than by other systems requiring eight months to a year at $80 to $100.

N. G. TUCKER.

W. F. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON,
SANITARY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.

56 Pleasant Street,

Worcester, Mass.

Anidrosis Sanatorium.

Mechano-Therapy system, and electricity when indicated, these three methods combined in one, and each bath includes the whole for same money. No better combination of therapeutic agents in expediting the elimination of wastes and poisonous products of said wastes, which is sure to occur if retained in the blood. Excretion has got to keep pace with retrograde metamorphosis or Mother Nature is handicapped and internal disensions very likely will occur in the shape of Rheumatism, Kidney, Liver and Stomach Diseases, Congestions, Sluggish Circulation and thousands of other diseases having origin in vitiated blood.

Dr. Conant's Compound Vapor Bath in connection with Massage by first-class operators, and electricity when indicated to expedite a cure. All under medical supervision. Does not conflict with Oxygen Treatment.

W. V. PHILBRICK, M. D.

901 Main Street, Worcester.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1891.

No. 1

Genesis, I, 4.

There can be no better thought with which to lead off the second year of LIGHT. For fifty-three weeks the paper has regularly visited the homes of subscribers. That the future may improve the quality of the paper and also its prospects is the chief end and aim of LIGHT.

Hereafter, G. A. R. Encampments will seem to lack something. We always felt that Sherman might be present and if he didn't come he usually sent some cheery word. Somehow or other, he seemed very near to old soldiers, whether they were in Maine or California. The Old Hero, about three years ago, said he would have to hurry up and die or there would be no one but militia left to bury him. His old comrades bore him to his grave and hallowed his memory with their tears. Vale, General!

Anent the death of Secretary Windom, a reader of LIGHT suggests that it was God's way of emphasizing His disfavor of the Free Coinage Scheme. No better and stronger words have been uttered against the craze than those which came from the lips of the Secretary. If anything were lacking to give them weight, that want was met in his sudden ending. Of course his opponents might take just the opposite view, that it was a punishment, but the thought is expressed here as LIGHT heard it. Certain it is that little has been heard of the matter since Windom's death.

It is a very poor question that has not two sides. Recently, a long disregarded ordinance, with reference to the hitching of horses has been enforced. One might suppose that the owner of the horse had hitherto had no interest in the matter; that he was willing that his steed should run and smash things. His own judgment and experience are given no weight whatever. If a man leaves his horse unhitched, he believes that he will stand. If he runs and does damage, the owner is liable. It would seem that individual judgment should count for something.

Again, horses run, if they run at all, through fright. If thus scared, will a common weight and strap prove an effectual hindrance? Will not the weight, itself, prove a missile of no trifling consequence as it is dragged along? Near City Hall we have recently had an illustration of how a frightened horse may perform. No owner of a horse complains that he and the public should be safe; but he does ask that his knowledge of the steed that he has driven for a term of years should count for something.

A market man says, "Now there's my horse. That animal isn't going to move unless his driver tells him to go. You might go out there and hit him with a club; but he wouldn't stir. 'Scare him' that's impossible. When the boys are out taking orders, they grab that weight, all covered with rain, snow or mud, and attach it to the horse and then how are they to get their fingers clean as they try to write orders? I tell you our orders are written in mud and I don't see any use in it, when I know what the horse is. Don't you suppose I would hate to have him run away? I guess I have more interest in the matter than any one else."

All these complainers are law abiding citizens and will carry out every provision of the law. There will be no effort at evasion on their part, no resort to kitchen dives nor attempt to conceal their horses about their persons as certain portions of our community try to hide their intent to nullify the action of a majority of their fellow citizens. Till the newness wears off, weights and straps will be at a premium. Small boys ought to be able to turn, now and then, an honest penny.

Father Matthew's Temperance Society of Green Street sends out its first annual report of the Trustees. The picture of Theobald Matthew graces the title page and cover. More than a hundred years have passed since this Apostle of Temperance appeared among men. He long since passed off the stage of action but his work or its results continue. It is a source of pardonable pride to those who built the hall that their society has an abiding place and that they can go in and out through their own portal. Much good has been done by this organization and the future promises no less. Anything that will in any way lessen the evil of Intemperance deserves a God Speed.

Every year we see men and women going up to the Legislature of their respective states to have wrongs righted. Sometimes the law makers can help them, more often, the very best that can be done is merely superficial. The source of the trouble is not sounded. Charity is not the only item that begins at home. Let the latter be happy and the public will care very little whether there be annual or biennial sessions of the legislature. A well ordered home is the foundation of a peaceful and successful republic. Fletcher of Saltoun said, "I care not who makes the laws if I may write the ballads of a people." The characteristics of the individual are fixed early in life.

A certain Worcester business man writes at his desk many hours daily. Beneath the plate glass over which his pen sweeps are the photographed faces of his wife and children. They are before him constantly. It is safe to say that he does not belong to a club. Home is club enough for him and the originals of those faces await his home coming with burning interest. Here is the unit of Anglo-Saxon Society. Anything that debases the home strikes at public welfare. Everything that makes home happy entrances the progress of civilization. LIGHT's mission is to the homes of this city and to every home into which it may come. There are many parts which go to make up the happy home.

Calling it thus does not make it so. It does not rest upon one member but upon all, though, primarily, the burden is upon the parents. Very likely, as they are, so will be the children. Smiling faces beget similar ones. That swearing father who beat his boy for profanity only made a fool of himself. The Albany Law School Professor who lectured, half tipsy, before a College Preparatory School on Temperance did not advance the cause, though he did say, "Young man, do as I tell you not as I do." Horace Bushnell of Hartford, Conn., always read the paper aloud at the breakfast table and, at subsequent meals, the morning news was discussed. There was no sin nor infamy emanating from that home.

"No time" is the cry in this hurrying, bustling age; but a Boston Editor takes time to read aloud at the tea table to his children and it is an hour that no member of the family would fail to meet. We have time for what we wish to do. Minds are hungry as well as bodies and parents and teachers must feed them. That people which exalts home is safe against onslaught, whether from without or within. The man who has a home that is dear to him will die, if need be, to protect it. The more homes we can have, the safer we are from mob rule. No rioting, when every man is a householder. In this mechanical city such an end is possible.

In a well directed home, the children are taught obedience. Recently a prominent physician said, "Nothing helped your children more in their illness than their readiness to comply with my directions. They did as they were told. While your children were taking medicine when ordered, another patient, at first, by no means so ill, died. There was no reason for her death save her unwillingness to do as she was bid. Had she obeyed when directed to take her potions I have no doubt that she would be alive today." The question of unquestioning obedience, thus becomes a practical one and the integrity of our home circle may depend upon it.

So then the 51st Congress is at an end. It has not had an altogether peaceful existence. Noise and uproar, more than ever, have characterized the body whose actions, long since, gave to it the appellation of, the National Bear Garden. There must be something wrong in the make up of affairs when one political party constantly insists that the other is determined to destroy the Nation and so sets about blocking all the wheels of Legislation. If then, the majority upon whom rests the responsibility, sees fit to so arrange matters as to proceed with Legislation, why should the minority make such a fuss. President Hayes said, "He serves his party best who serves his country best." Sometimes men will appreciate that statement. Certain men have delighted to poke fun at Hayes's administration; but every advancing year is making appear better and better. More downright attention to the country's need and less party would be better

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 339 Main Street, Burnside Building.
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, MARCH 7, 1891.

LIGHT, with this number, enters upon its third volume and second year.

As in the past, its effort will be to put in form for preservation the facts and fancies in which Worcester people are interested.

It is your paper, in that you are at liberty to send in for insertion what you would like to see in print.

By "you" is meant every reader.

Every one of you can think of some one who would like to receive weekly visits of LIGHT.

If you will send in the name, a sample copy will be sent.

All local happenings and incidents, may find a permanent location in our columns.

What the old Waverly magazine has been to Boston and vicinity, LIGHT would like to be for Worcester City and County.

There must be literary people in the future.

Now, they can make their beginning here.

Scan carefully every column of reading matter and advertisements and see if there is a word that you would have left out?

Says one father, "I place no paper in the hands of my children so confidently as I do LIGHT". Many thanks.

About Folks.

Frank J. Metcalf of Ashland, lately teaching in Barre, has accepted a place on LIGHT and began work, last Monday.

In Printer's Ink for Feb., Mr. George R.
Kennedy of the Telegram has an exceedingly valuable article on advertising called out by a previous article in the number for Jan. 28 and written by M. M. Gillam of Wanamaker's store, Philadelphia. With the ins and outs of the question of "Absorbition," LIGHT has nothing to do. It does, however, recognize in Mr. Kennedy's words a grip on the subject that excites admiration. He certainly knows what he is talking about and all advertising agents will do well to call for the number and read the article.

Miss H. Revere Johnson, a decorative artist from New York, who is stopping in this city for her health gave an exhibition yesterday of her work in oils and water colors, at her room in the Knowles building.

Next Thursday evening there will be an illustrated lecture at Association Hall on "The Home of Evangeline," Mrs. Alice J. Osborne of Boston will assist by the singing of ballads.
The entertainment is under the auspices of the Maritime Provinces Association.

The Chamberlain District Farmers' Club will meet at the residence of Francis P.
Stowell, corner of Salisbury and Forrest streets, on Thursday next, at 7.30 p.m. The subject of discussion will be "Ought Amateur Farming to be Encouraged?" The essay will be by A. S. Lowell. The public is invited.

The electrical exhibition is now in full running order though new features are added every day, so that one has to go frequently in order to see all the new things. There is no one who cannot find something which is of particular interest to him. It is an exhibition for everybody. It shows the progress that has been made in recent years in nearly all the arts and sciences. A person is able to see in a compact space the leading products of the brains and hands of the workmen of this city.
LIGHT will endeavor next week to describe some of the most noticeable of the inventions.

The Society of Antiquity.

The regular meeting last Tuesday evening was made specially interesting by a very instructive paper on the "Athenian Acropolis," prepared and read by Mr. H. H. Chamberlin.

The second of the series of three socials of the Continentals was held at Continental Hall, Tuesday evening. The affair was wholly informal, there being no orders, the dances being arranged to suit the moods of the dancers.
Only members and their families were present.
The last of the series will take place March 17 and will be on a larger scale than the others have been. The Continentals will appear in full uniform.

The death of Messrs. W. A. Denholm and Edwin Conant remove from our city two well known men. Both prominent in their respective fields. One in his prime, the other, aged and long withdrawn from active labor. Mr.
Denholm as a member of the Old South
Church was very active in its councils. Mr.
Conant will long be remembered as the Library benefactor of Sterling. In LIGHT for March 14 considerable space will be allowed to these late Worcester business men.

A hygienic supper illustrating the recent lectures of Rev. J. J. Lansing, was served at Salem Street Church, Tuesday evening, by Mrs. A. E. Stearns' assisted by a corps of young ladies. An entertainment, which followed the supper, consisted of readings and whistling solos by Miss Lula Isaacs; songs by Mr. Edward McGrath; piano duet by Misses Fannie Hair and Florence Scott; flute solo by Joshua B. Blair, and a trio, cornet, piano and flute, Elmer E. Pratt, Miss Hair and Mr. Blair. The next entertainment in the course will be a concert, March 17.

George D. Kelley, the younger son of the late ex-mayor, Dr. F. H. Kelly, and now a student in Harvard Medical School, has received an appointment in the Massachusetts
General Hospital.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

"Master and Man," a melodrama of the best type, has been drawing good audiences at the Worcester Theater Thursday and Friday evenings. It will be presented this afternoon and evening for the last time. Dominick Murray and Ralph Delmore have leading parts, and are supported by a fairly good company.

George A. Baker's Bennett and Moulton
Opera Company will occupy the Worcester Theater during next week. The company is well known and very popular in this city and will undoubtedly have large audiences. Miss Ethel Vincent is leading lady, filling the position so long held by Miss Irene Murphy. Joe Armand and Arthur Wooley are well known to Worcester lovers of opera, and their clever acting has made them many admirers.

Charles A. Paige, the genial advance agent of George A. Baker's Bennett and Moulton
Opera Company, is in town this week, looking after the interests of his company.

LEICESTER.

Mr. and Mrs. David A. Reeves entertained a party of friends Thursday evening, at their residence on Pleasant street. Among the invited guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Walter Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur R. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Sargent, Mr. and Mrs. George
H. Waite, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Midgley, Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Evans, Mr. J. Sidney
Whittemore, Miss Kate W. Cowles, Mr. F.
Willard Trask, Miss Lula Stone, Mr. Myron
W. Sprague, Miss Ida F. Warren.

Progressive whist was the game indulged in.
Mrs. Sargent won the ladies' first prize, Miss Cowles the second; which provoked so much laughter that it is hoped she will win the sequel in the near future.

The gentlemen's prizes were awarded to Messrs. Sargent and Whittemore.

The delightful entertainment provided by the hostess was enjoyed by all, and at the close of the evening all must have felt as Bailey has expressed it—that we live in deeds not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings not in figures on a dial. We should count time by heart throbs. He most lives who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

BETTINA.

March 5, 1891.

No one should buy a piece of sheet music anywhere until he has looked over my catalogue of 3300 pieces at 10c. each. Whatever composition you desire, vocal or instrumental, it is here at 10c. very likely. There is not a shopworn sheet in the lot. I never ask over five cents a sheet for music shopworn. New, perfect, clean sheets, fresh from the printers 10c. a copy. Regular sheet music, uniform in every particular, with what you have paid other people 25 to 50c. a sheet for; 3251 other choice compositions all 10c. each.

The list includes the newest pieces and the best of the old. Catalogue of the 3300 sent free to any address.
All music ordered therefrom, sent postage paid.

My self-playing organ now on exhibition is very entertaining. I invite all to try it, players or not.

Sole agencies for Ivers & Pond, S. G. Chickering, Newby & Evans and Prescott Pianos; also Crown organs.

Piano tuning and moving. All instrument Strings.

Steele's orchestra for entertainments, etc.

Violins of rare value for sale.

C. E. STEERE.

492 Main; one flight up. Next door to Boston Store.

Church Notes.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The total amount of the offerings just made by Union Church for the Home Missionary Society is $1,001.95.

The choir of Plymouth Church for the coming year has been made up as follows: Mr. A. E. Pennell, tenor and director; Mrs. J. M. Niles, soprano; Miss Alice Hammond, alto; Mr. D. E. Spencer, bass; Mr. George E. Brown organist and a chorus of forty voices.

At Plymouth Church tomorrow the pastor will preach morning and evening at the usual hours. The evening sermon will be the first of a series on the book of Ruth.

A C supper will be served next Tuesday evening at Park Church.

BAPTIST.

The young people of Main Street Baptist Church gave a snow festival in the Sunday School room Wednesday evening, Feb. 25, 1891.

PROGRAMME.

Piano Duet, Miss Alice L. Guy, Miss Florence Hendrick; The Snow Flakes were: Miss May Thayer, Miss Mary Thayer, Miss Nina Harlow, Miss Mira Smith, Miss Ella Smith, Miss Florence Davenport, Miss Mary Davenport, Miss Marietta Parmelee, Miss Rena Forsyth, Miss Marguerette Legg, Miss Minnie Guy; The part of Jack Frost was taken by Master Josiah Perry; Mandolin and Guitar Duet, by Miss Starbuck and Miss Cheney; In the Snow Shovel Drill were Miss Lillian Parsons, Miss Nellie J. Roache, Miss Ida Blake, Miss Florence Churchill, Miss Jennie Lewis, Miss Emma Hall, Miss Bessie Starbuck, Miss Mary Starbuck, Miss Mabel Knox, Miss Bertha Reeb, Miss Florence Hendrick, Mrs. Walter Brown, Miss Annie Alton, Miss Minnie Howe, Miss Grace Solomon, Miss Alice L. Guy. After the entertainment, refreshments, in the shape of jellies, coffee and candy were served. Mr. Frank Ward was captain of the Snow Shovel squad. After the drill, the shovels were sold at auction by Mr. E. G. Guy. The success of the entertainment was due to the efforts of Miss Ruth E. Beane.

The regular monthly social of the Ladies Charitable Society of the Pleasant Street church was held in the church vestry Tuesday evening. Supper was had early in the evening and was followed by a conundrum party. The following musical program was also rendered: Song, "The Gondola Waits" Mrs. Webster Thayer with violin obligato by H. G. Quimby; harmonica duets, Elbert Strong and Harry Wheeler; piano solo and song, Miss Edith Lemoine; song Miss Minnie Skinner.

UNIVERSALIST.

The Ladies' Social Circle of the First Universalist church will meet in the church parlors Tuesday afternoon and evening Mar. 10. Monday evening, Mar. 2, the Nameless Whist Club held their fortnightly meeting as usual at Hotel Kenmore.

METHODIST.

At Grace Church next Tuesday evening there will be a Milk Maid Drill, followed by a literary and musical entertainment.

The Swedish M. E. church of Thomas Street will hold a Bazaar in Mechanics Hall, beginning Wednesday Mar. 18 and continuing through the 21st. An interesting feature of the opening night will be a double marriage.

The young men's class of Grace church gave an entertainment Thursday evening consisting of organ overture, "Stradella" by Louis Mason; reading by Eben Francis Thompson; zither duet by Misses Lizzie and Marguerite Miller; reading by Rev. John Galbraith of "Vision of Sir Launfal;" piano duet by Misses Ethel and Bessie Stockwell and singing by a quartet of young men.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

Sacred Heart. Rev. T. J. Conaty has issued a Calendar, that for March being the first in the series. The intent is to give all the church days and to acquaint the people of the church with such facts as they ought to know. The limits of the parish are given and its regulations stated. In a word it is a careful compend of data pertaining to that church, and to the members must be invaluable.

Y. M. C. A.

Special efforts have been made to secure a large attendance at the 915 meeting tomorrow, at the rooms. Mr. Otis Parker, the new assistant secretary will lead the meeting. There will be a grand mass meeting for boys at three o'clock, when addresses will be made by Harvard College students. The men's meeting at four will also be addressed by the college students.

It is proposed to make the men's meeting next Sunday a memorial service to Mr. W. A. Denholm, who was formerly president of the association. If it is decided to hold such a service the exercises will consist of addresses by prominent business men, who were acquainted with Mr. Denholm.

The association paper will probably appear about April 1. It will consist of eight pages and a cover and will be named "Worcester's Young Men."

The reception to the clerks of the city, Tuesday evening was a very pleasant affair. Over four hundred young men responded to the invitations sent out. The guests were received in the lower rooms by the officers of the association. They were entertained with piano solos by Miss M. B. Jennison, Gertrude E. Nash, Hattie E. Ellenwood and Lottie Lamson. The gymnasium was also open for their inspection. Shortly after eight, refreshments were served in Association Hall by Caterer Yeaw. An entertainment was given here also which consisted of a piano solo by Lottie Lamson and a Roberts dumb bell drill by a squad from the gymnasium. In conclusion remarks were made by Secretaries Gale, Meade and Parker and President C. F. Rugg, A. A. McLaughlin, J. B. Hunt and Charles H. Morgan, explanatory of the work of the association.

Paul Plummer, the physical director has announced his intention of resigning, as he desires to undertake further studies. He will leave his present position June 1 and will then divide his time between the University of Vermont and the School for Christian Workers at Springfield. Several names have been proposed for his office, but the directors will consider the matter carefully and secure the best man possible.

Secretary Gale will attend the convention of New England secretaries to be held in Brattleboro, Vermont, March 19-22.

Plans are under consideration for a reception to the Swedish young men of the city.

Secretary Gale will speak at the Dewey Street Baptist Church tomorrow forenoon.

Rev. Archibald McCullagh, D. D. of Plymouth Church is to give a series of three lectures for the benefit of the Association. The subjects and dates are "From St. Paul to the Golden Gate," March 19; "From the Alps to Vesuvius," March 26; "Famous Scenes and Historic Places in the British Isles," April 2.

The plan, spoken of in last week's LIGHT, of making a special room for the juvenile department, is being carried out. The correspondence, toilet and janitor's rooms have all been made into one large room. Game-tables and the juvenile papers will be placed in the room. Assistant secretary Meade will have charge of this department.

The Bible training class is now very large and a division will probably be necessary. There will also be started soon an evangelistic Bible class.

The association course was completed Thursday evening, when a concert was given by the Norwegian Concert Company which consists of Miss Sigrid Lunde, soprano; Miss Agot Lunde, contralto; Mr. Wulf Fries, violoncello; Mr. Grant Drake, accompanist; Miss Maud Murray, reader. The concert was excellent and, the audience being enthusiastic, nearly every number was encored.

FIRST UNITARIAN.

J. Edward Fuller, Jr., who has accepted a position in Chicago, entertained the choir, of which he is tenor, at his father's residence in North Worcester, Friday evening. A pleasant evening was passed, with vocal and instrumental music.

For Long Distance Telephone,
For a good 7 per cent investment on real estate.
For a safe chance to Double your money in a short time,
For Accidental Life or Fire Insurance,
For Excursion tickets to Chicago, St. Paul and all Points west,
For all kinds of railroad or steamship tickets,
For Foreign Exchange and Drafts at Lowest Rates
Apply to G. Y. Lancaster, Gen'l Agent, 434 Main street, opposite Front St., Worcester, Mass.
P. S. Orders promptly attended to; satisfaction guaranteed.

Walter H. Mellen, after a seven weeks trip abroad, has reached home just in time for some real old fashioned weather.

THE CROCUS.

"Rest, little sister," her sisters said—
Viol t purple, and wild-rose red—
Rest dear, yet, till the sun comes out,
Till the hedges bud, and the grass blades sprout.
We are safe in the kindly earth, and warm—
In the upper world, there is sleet and storm.
Oh wait for the robin's true, clear note,
For the sound of a drifting wing afloat;
For the laughter bright of an April shower
To call and wake you, sweet Crocus flower."

But brave-heart Crocus said never a word,
Nor paused to listen for note of bird,
Or laugh of rain-drop . . . In rough green vest
And golden-bonnet, herself she dressed
By the light of a glow-worm's friendly spark,
And softly crept up the stairway dark,
Out through the portal of frozen mold
Into the wide world, bleak and cold.
But somehow, a sunbeam found the place
Where the snow made room for her lifted face.
—Madeline S. Bridges, in The Ladies' Home Journal.

Edward Augustus Goodnow.

The great mass of active stirring business men of our land today, began life well along towards the end of the first half of this century; but Mr. Goodnow, who uses only his initials in writing his name, was born in 1810, the 16th day of July. In a recent summer, when walking with Mr. Moody, the noted Evangelist was quite distanced by our octogenarian. Puffing and blowing, the Northville man said "I'd like to know just how old you are. I don't believe you are a day beyond sixty-five." Mr. Goodnow is one of the men about whom the almanac is constantly telling a lie.

He is another of the hill town products, for his birth place is right under the shadow of Wachusett, in Princeton. The old, capacious house, built in 1786, the early Goodnow home, is still standing. It was, for many years, a hotel and is yet in the Goodnow possession. The family is of Sudbury origin. Whoever takes up the history of that interesting old town will find much of interest and frequent mention of the name. To that town, three brothers, Edmund, John and Thomas came in 1638. Edmund lived on North street, near the church. He built the Garrison House and died in 1688 aged seventy-seven years. John Goodnow, a Boston merchant, gave the Goodnow Library to the town and his father, John, lived to be more than one hundred years old, the last survivor in Sudbury of the soldiers of the Revolution. Edmund Goodnow and wife are buried in the old cemetery of Wayland, once a part of Sudbury. Mary Goodnow was killed and scalped by the Indians in 1707. Edward Goodnow was the Princeton pioneer and on his way thither, he wooed and won, in Northborough, his future wife. To them was born another Edward, who was the father of our Mr. Goodnow. His mother was Rebecca Beaman, a member of the family long prominent in Princeton and neighboring towns. The old Beaman home is still standing, a large stone structure passed by those who go north from the village to take the carriage way to the top of the mountain. Her great age at death, eighty-seven years, may, in part, be ascribed to the vigorous exercise of her early days, when she took her turn in carrying the mail to and from Worcester. If such living did not kill early, it seemed to have a wonderfully prolonging effect. The family consisted of six sons and two daughters. One child died in infancy. The remainder grew to maturity; but all are now dead save Mr. E. A. Goodnow; his brother, Mr. William B., who lives on the old homestead, and his sister, Mrs. Lois R. Hastings, for some time a boarder at the Bay State House.

The young Goodnows had to walk one mile to school and in addition to instruction received here, Mr. G. went three terms to Hopkins' Academy, in Hadley, thus summing up his opportunities in this direction. He expected to be a teacher and studied with this end in view, but he never taught. At twenty, he went into a general store in Princeton working for an elder brother with whom, he afterwards formed a partnership, lasting for ten years. In conducting trade with Boston, it was necessary to make weekly trips thither and Mr. G. was his own teamster, being obliged to spend much of one night each trip on the road. In 1836 the firm added a third member and began the manufacture of shoes. Later, Mr. E. A. Goodnow withdrew and began making shoes by himself. In 1847, he left Princeton for a wider field finally coming to Worcester, in 1852. Familiar with the shoe trade, he bought out a small concern and began jobbing on a small scale along with retail trade. After four years, he sold out the retail trade, and established himself under Mechanics Hall, where Hanson's music store is, doing the first exclusively jobbing business in Worcester. The first year the enterprise amounted to $130,000. At the end of ten years it reached nearly $400,000.

This period found him at the beginning of the Civil War. His confidence in the success of the Union Arms never faltered. In his native town, he was one of the original eight who, then, made up the Free Soil Party of Princeton. From the start, by encouragement of word and purse, he helped the cause. Thirteen clerks enlisted from his employ. One had his pay continued and his place reserved against his return. He purchased bonds in the face of apparent discomfiture of the Federal cause. On the formation of colored regiments, he was among the first to subscribe, heading a paper with $500 for this purpose. When the National Bank Act was passed, he was particularly active in establishing the First National Bank in Worcester; the one of which he has been so long, the president.

When the war ceased, he closed out his store and rested for a while. The First National Bank of Worcester organized June 5, 1863, was the second chartered in the state, the First of Springfield, only, being before it, and it stands number seventy-nine in the whole country. Parley Hammond was the first president and of the directors associated with him only Mr. Goodnow and the Hon. C. B. Pratt are now living. Mr. Goodnow succeeded to the presidency Jan. 8, 1867, and from that date to the present, he has been at his post. Of the success of this institution it is unnecessary to discourse. Its reputation is well known.

Let us, however, call on Mr. Goodnow in his private room at the bank. He is always there, believing in thorough attention to the duties of his office. The large table at which the directors sit occupies the middle of the room. An open grate gives a cheerful appearance to the interior. Upon a bracket, under a glass case, is a model of Pilgrim Monument at Plymouth. At the end of the room, in a large frame, are the pictures of the men associated with Mr. Goodnow at the time of organizing the bank. In the windows and upon the mantel-piece are photographs of the buildings that he has erected for town and college. In the bank proper is a large painting of John Brown, having all the intensity in his face of one of Cromwell's Ironsides.

This is the room in which the disposition of millions of dollars has been determined and here his friends are received. Here, too, he considers the many requests that are constantly coming to him for all sorts of causes. His management of the bank affairs has been so successful that in 1881, the directors passed a resolution, putting on record their belief that the prosperity of the institution was largely due to his wisdom and faithfulness.

For many years, Mr. Goodnow has been conspicuous in his giving to meritorious causes. Impecunious churches have found in him a ready contributor, not only his own particular body but others as well. The City Mission has long been a favorite of his and to secure free seats in a certain church he has given large sums. Towards several educational institutions, he has also been very liberal, conspicuous among these are Mt. Holyoke, Wellesley, Northfield, Oberlin, Berea in Kentucky, and Hampton in Virginia. He gave $15,500 for the erection of a library and dormitory at Grinnell, Iowa, and as much more for the building of an edifice for the Huguenot Seminary in South Africa. This institution is carrying along the system so long fostered at Mt. Holyoke by the great founder, Mary Lyon, and today, from fifty to sixty young women, securing an education, are recipients of bounty from him. He founded a John Brown professorship in Washburn College, Kansas. He has given to the Polytechnic of Worcester, and to the High School of our city, he gave the bust of General Grant and the memorial tablets, having the names of High School boys who lost their lives in the Rebellion. In Mechanics Hall hang life size paintings of General Garfield and Vice-President Wilson, gifts from this aged banker.

To the Y. W. C. A. he has been especially liberal, giving not only a fund of $5000, in memory of his wife, Catharine B., but also, on the determination to build, adding $10,000, to the building expense.

For his native town he has built and equipped an elegant library building. Standing on a commanding eminence, it has a wide and beautiful view and, from whatever point it is approached it is itself an object of architectural beauty. He also gave towards the construction of the adjacent Town Hall, so that the entire gift amounts to about $40,000. The two buildings were dedicated with impressive services, September 6, 1887. With the exception of a trusteeship of the Westborough Reform School, received from Governor Andrew and renewed by Governor Bullock he has held no public office.

Mr. Goodnow's first wife was Harriet, a daughter of Dr. Henry Baggs, the leading physician of Princeton. She lived five years and again Mr. Goodnow married, this time, Mary Augusta, Dr. Baggs only surviving daughter. She, too, lived only five years after marriage. In 1846, he was wedded to Catharine Bowman, eldest daughter of Seth Caldwell Esq., of Barre, with whom he lived for twenty-five years. She was a sister of Mrs. Charles E. Stevens of Boynton street and also of the wife of the late Deacon George Kendall. By his second wife, he had one son who died in infancy and in his memory the organ in Plymouth church was given while the chimes in the same church commemorate his wife. All of his family except his third wife are buried in Princeton. He has erected, in Rural Cemetery, in red sandstone, a monument modeled after the one to the memory of the Pilgrims in Plymouth, and here the third Mrs. G. rests.

On coming to Worcester. Mr. Goodnow boarded for several years, but he finally bought his present residence, corner of Cedar and Oak streets. This was built by Dwight Foster and from him the purchase was made. Here, in a green old age Mr. Goodnow lives and receives his friends, only recently a reception being given to the young daughter of Dr. McCullagh of Plymouth church, the one of which Mr. Goodnow is a member. Aged as is our subject he yet has many years of effective service before him, should he attain the years of Bonum Nye, North Brookfield's Bank President and Mr. Benchley, so long the oldest Bank President in Norwich, Conn. There seems to be no reason why he should not, for regularity and carefulness have long been his mottos. He has traveled but little, making trips west to Chicago, south to Atlanta and Savannah and East as far as Portland. He is pretty thoroughly devoted to Worcester.

Dr. Walter T. Clark of 49 Pearl street was married last week at Portland, Me., to Miss Annie M. Greely of that city. On their return from a wedding trip to New York, they will reside at "The Wellington," on Wellington street.

LIGHT hereby acknowledges a pleasant note from George D. Walworth, once a High School boy, now in the wholesale cigar business, 488 State street, New Haven, Conn. That is Yale town you know.

A. Otis Davis, formerly of the High School and later of Hinman's Business College is now treasurer of the Ætna Knitting Company. He reports business good and he believes in the McKinley Bill.

Census taker—"And—er—are you an idiot, madam?" Madam—"Dear me! There it is again. So many people get that idea from seeing the husband I married."

School and College.

More Fayerweather for colleges. The most recent development of the will contest is of decided interest to colleges. Already named for large sums, the proposition of the residuary legatees to give their part to the colleges indicated gives quite a new coloring to the affair. Apparently, there will be less sympathy than ever with the effort to break the will.

Superintendent I. Freeman Hall, Leominster, Mass., says: Teachers ought to be encouraged in their dislike for cast iron methods which cramp and hamper them. Power and skill are not developed mechanically, nor by imitation.

LIGHT could give the name of a gentleman, now the principal of a Massachusetts High School, who nearly paid his way through college, by working vacations in a boot shop. Two or three terms, he trenched a little on term time; but he persevered and there was no one ahead of him in his class. It is the will that is wanted, not the way.

The Evening Gazette of this city has recently printed three interesting communications from Prof. Woodward of St. Louis on the subject of "Manual Training." There seems to be quite a waking up concerning this subject.

Mr. Chas. H. Morgan of 28 Catharine street invited professors and recent graduates of the Polytechnic Institute to meet at his home, Friday night, the 27th ult., to discuss the best way of securing means to realize on Mr. Bigelow's recent gift. Remarks were made by Profs. Alden and Higgins. While nothing definite was done, such gatherings must result in eventual good.

The Faculty of the Polytechnic refuses permission to the boys to enter the Intercollegiate Athletic Association of America, thinking too much time would, thereby, be taken from regular school work. Now boys give your extra time and energy to taking a good place in the New England Association.

Miss Sarah Eliza Barrett, W. H. S. '83; Mt. Holyoke '88, is now teaching in Wellfleet, on Cape Cod, where she is the assistant in the High School. For a time after leaving college, she taught in McGregor, Iowa.

Smith College.

Washington's birthday is Smith's gala day, the only day when a reception is given where gentlemen can be invited. So this year, as Monday was the day celebrated, the guests, many of them, came Saturday. Saturday evening a concert was given by the Trinity Glee Club in the town hall, which the college girls and their friends attended in full force. We were favored with fine weather Sunday so the churches were full and the promenaders passed up and down Elm street all day. The music at vespers was unusually good, and Assembly Hall was crowded. Monday morning the in-coming trains were full of college men, and there were many sleighing parties and one or two private dances, preliminary to the regular program. That began at half past two with a concert by the college Glee and Banjo Clubs in Assembly Hall, the enjoyment of which was added to by the many pretty faces and dainty dresses in both the Clubs and audience, only a promise, however, of what came later on. After the concert there were afternoon teas in the College Houses and at Mrs. Snow's, which were largely attended by those fortunate enough to be invited. There was hardly a breathing space before the reception in the evening, the crowning event of the day. The hall and the adjoining rooms were all thrown open, brightly lighted, and here and there couches covered with cushions placed in the corners, and on the stairs cushions were also put, and many cozy tête-a-têtes were given an opportunity for being. At one end of the library, President and Mrs. Seelye received, assisted by a committee from different classes. The reception began promptly at half past seven and soon after the large rooms were crowded with the wearers of dress-suits and their fair friends. Some one said "Sophia Smith smiled on us as she looked down from the wall." Surely portrait never looked on fairer scene and happier beings. The program consisted of three promenades and five square dances. The programs had been made out before for the gentlemen and the various meeting places were crowded. The numbers were very short and as every light was out before ten o'clock it hardly seemed begun before it was over, the long looked forward to evening. Many stayed to chapel the next morning but by night even the stragglers were gone and Northampton and Smith College had resumed their usual appearance. Nearly all the guests were college men, Harvard, Yale and Amherst having the largest representation. The Worcester people present outnumbered those from any other town. Beside the thirteen or fourteen college girls, as guests there were Messrs. W. H. Hildreth, Burbank, Reed, Whitcomb and Phillips from Amherst; Baldwin from Harvard; Mears from Williams; and Lancaster and Childs from Worcester itself.

Amherst College.

The prospectus of the Summer School of Languages, to be held in Amherst July 7 to August 10, 1891, has just appeared. Among the instructors is the name of Miss Townsend, Worcester High School, who is to conduct classes in Cæsar. Professor Montague, as in former years will be the director of the school, and will be assisted by nearly a score of well known instructors.

Dr. Charles S. Lamson, formerly pastor of the Salem street church in Worcester, paid Amherst a visit last week, and assisted at some of the exercises.

Wesleyan.

On the evening of the twenty-first of February the Freshmen celebrated Washington's birthday in true patriotic style. Arrayed in white robes they proceeded to the back campus where a huge bonfire was lighted and, as it sent its columns of smoke upward, they rallied around it and sung songs in honor of the Father of his country, while the sound of the fish horn could be heard for a great distance round about. Soon they left this and honored the lady members of the University with an elegant display of fireworks in front of the dormitory. Finally, when all had become quiet, and the Sophomores had gone to rest, thinking there was no further danger that the cannon would be fired, away off to the south, on Asylum Hill, it was heard booming, and thus the celebration lacked nothing to make it a success. So now a cane will add to the appearance of each verdant Freshman and he will enjoy all other privileges of which he has been thus far deprived.

On Monday evening, the twenty-third, the students, faculty and some members of the alumni gathered in Armory Hall to perpetuate the memory of the Father of their country and to partake of a banquet. The hall was well decorated with the national colors as well as those of the college, while upon the tables were plants and flowers. Professor Winchester was introduced as toast-master and amused the company for some time with his ready wit. There were toasts upon the various interests, enlivened now and then by a song, and a general good time was enjoyed by all present. This is the first time anything of this kind has occurred on the part of the whole college, but its decided success leads us to hope that it will be followed by many more, as only on such occasions do students, faculty and alumni come together and talk over the interests of the college in a plain, matter-of-fact way.

The Glee Club has been very successful this year, and has just returned from a week's trip, which gave general satisfaction.

Professor Van Benschoten has just returned from a trip among the preparatory schools, where he has been delivering lectures upon the Ancient Greeks and the literature of that age.

Professor Winchester recently delivered a series of nine lectures, upon the Queen Anne Period, before the students of John Hopkins University, and has been engaged to do the same for those of the Garret Biblical Institute next week. He is a most interesting lecturer having a full, clear voice, and certainly at no loss for something to say, so that wherever he goes he wins universal praise and admiration.

Because of its interfering so much with the term examinations, the time for the Junior exhibition has been changed from the last of the winter term to the first of the spring term.

The Y. M. C. A. recently sent a delegation of students to the convention of college associations at Williamstown. Much religious interest was awakened and great good done for the students of the college.

The students listened to a highly interesting lecture last Thursday evening delivered by Mr. Fox of New Haven. His subject was the Great Schools of England, and was illustrated with stereopticon views. This is the third of a course of lectures for students which proves fully as instructive as interesting.

ABOUT FOLKS.

Comrade "Jerry" Lamb has got back. He reached these parts Sunday night. The rainy season in California promised him more water than he cared for. He very thoughtfully brought LIGHT a piece of brick from the first mission established in San Diego in 1769. He didn't throw it at us for fear of putting us out, but he gently placed it in our hands. As the carrying away of relics is expressly forbidden, LIGHT is beset by strange thoughts as to just how "Jerry" got that brick. But then, an old soldier should never be questioned too closely. We are all glad to see him.

Dr. Edwin T. Painter, who has had such a varied experience in his Berlin Koch Lymph treatment, is now reported in a very hopeful condition. Unless he rashly undertakes the home trip too soon, we shall probably see him, by and by, well and strong.

Rev. James H. Doyle.

The young man whose death the papers chronicle and whose funeral was attended at St. Anne's Church, Thursday, at 10 a.m., was one whom all respected. My own acquaintance with him began when he entered the High School in 1875. His course in the school was one of uninterrupted pleasure to his teachers and associates. No intentional wrong doing was ever laid at his door. He fully appreciated the advantages that the school afforded and he labored to get all that they could give. Once a week I took a newspaper from his hand at my gate and, always, he had the same smiling face. Then came college and there, too, his record was excellent. Then the Theological School and the work to which he was called. But the labor was to be brief. The climate of New England was too harsh and, away from his childhood's home, he was ordained in remote Colorado. And there, too, he died but his remains are brought back to Worcester to be buried with his kindred. His classmates meet and recount his virtues, offer sympathy to the friends and close the earthly record of another member of '79. Though the grave may hide him, his gentle boyish face will not soon fade from the memory of those who knew him. His age at death was twenty-nine years.

A. S. R.

Plays and Players.

Ovide Musin, the violinist, was recently created an officer of the order of Nisham Mfchar by the Bey of Tunis.

The theatrical managers of Baltimore protest against the passing of a city ordinance taxing the playhouses $5 a day during the season.

George F. Marion, whose Jonah in "A Brass Monkey" delighted Worcester Theater patrons recently is to star in an Italian character sketch called "Mr. Maccaroni." Marion's Italian imitations are great.

William Millette is a proud man. His piece, "All the Comforts of Home," has attained the rare honor of a continuous performance. For behold, just as the curtain is descending on the London presentation of the play at the Globe Theater, the curtain of Hermann's Theater, New York, will rise on another presentation of the same play, and ere the New York curtain is finally rung down, that of the Baldwin Theater, San Francisco, has been sent up upon yet another presentation of the play. And before the San Francisco company have bowed their good nights to the plaudits in the Baldwin auditorium, the footlights of the Globe Theater, London, are again turned upon yet another performance of the piece.

"The Clemenceau Case" has proved such a financial success that now a dramatization of Albert Ross' nasty novel, "Thou Shalt Not," by Max Freeman is soon to be brought out in New York. It is to be hoped that it will be short lived.

Little Elsie Leslie is very sick with diphtheria.

The Lyceum is to be the name of Boston's new theater. Rich Harris and Atkinson are to be the managers, and contracts have been made with Charles Frohman to furnish simultaneous productions there of all the new comedies brought out in New York. A strong stock company will be one feature of the new house, which will be dedicated, Sept. 21, with Belasco and De Mille's "Men and Women."

William N. Daniels of this city and a recent graduate of the New York Dental College will locate in New Haven.

The exhibition of the oil paintings of J. M. Stone and the water colors of H. W. Rice, both of Boston, at the Art Students' Rooms, this week, has been very largely attended, in spite of the disagreeable weather. Some of the most noticeable productions of Mr. Rice were "Castine," "Up for Repairs," "Grandmother's Garden," "October, Cape Cod," "Interior of Carpenter's Shop," "Old House, Castine," "Pasture," "Low Tide, Cape Cod," and "Fish Houses, Cape Porpoise." Mr. Stone's work includes "Lenkopolis," "Summer Dream," "Algerian Tambourine Girl," "Head of an Algerian Girl," "Spanish Girl at the Opera," "Dawn," "Night," three war pictures, "A Blowy Day's Work" and several studies in heads. At the close of this exhibition the "Summer Dream" will go to the Academy of Design in New York. The Art Students' Club is now in a very prosperous condition. The membership at present is twenty-two active, forty-seven honoraries and four associates, but there are sufficient applications now on hand to double the list. The Saturday afternoon sketching class, which numbers about thirty is now working from living models and is making excellent progress under the able instruction of Mr. J. M. Stone. There is also another sketching class which meets Monday evenings. Anyone may join these classes by first joining the club. During the week beginning May 18, J. H. Greenwood of this city will give an exhibition of his work in oils and during the week of April 20 the club will hold its eleventh annual exhibition.

Solon Bartlett.

LIGHT is able to present to its readers a picture of this young man whose unexpected death carried sorrow to so many hearts. His record is another instance of life ending almost before it had begun, for it seems only yesterday that he was talking of his prospective work in the New Jersey school to which he was going. He was one of eleven children, born to his parents in Boylston. Though he spent his earliest days on the farm, he was not satisfied with the prospect there, and, when in his early teens, came to this city to prepare for the Technical School. In the High School, he was noted for his diligence and application. That he might carry through his work in the "Tech" without interruption, he was out of school, two years working in a market on Lincoln street. He also taught in the evening schools. Clad in a white garment, he drove his horse around the streets at Worcester's North End, till he knew them perfectly. Then came his course in the higher school and all who had to do with him speak most highly of his honesty and industry. He was graduated in 1889. He was one of the first in his class to secure a position and that in Lawrenceville was reckoned one of the best, then open. In the best sense, he was a self-made man. He had all of the fixedness of purpose and sternness of resolution, that have so long characterized New England's human products. In his chosen field, it seems probable that few would have surpassed him had he lived. As it is we can only discuss possibilities and probabilities.

SOLON BARTLETT.

[F. P. Rice, Photo.]

The statement of his death came without any premonition to his Worcester friends and acquaintances. His mother was summoned to his bedside; but arrived too late to see him in life. On the 23d of February at the early age of twenty-three years and eleven months, he ceased to labor and to live. On the arrival of his remains in Worcester, they were borne to the home of Mr. Lorenzo Barnes, a cousin of his mother's, at No. 22 Lancaster street and there at 10 a.m. on Tuesday, his late associates gathered and Dr. H. T. Fuller, Principal of the Institute spoke words of consolation to all. Thence to Boylston where his funeral was held in the Congregational church at 2 o'clock p.m. Here earlier friends and relatives gathered. He was an own cousin of the Brothers, Walter and Arthur Flagg, brokers of this city. The burial and end of earth for our friend and pupil! While he lived, he did run well. The record though brief is excellent.

Grundstrom—Engdahl.

Last Saturday evening at the home of August F. Engdahl, 18½ Home Street, his daughter Agnes H. was married to Mr. Charles G. Grundstrom of the firm of Lundberg & Lybeck Summer Street, and himself a prominent member of the Brigade Band. The Rev. H. W. Eklund pastor of the Thomas St. M. E. church performed the ceremony. Our Scandinavian citizens were present in large numbers. The bride was attired in a rich suit of corded silk, cut en train, handsomely embroidered with orange blossoms and leaves, and trimmed with duchess lace. A headdress of Swedish myrtle and a long tulle veil completed the costume. Miss H. H. Victoria Pohlman, Miss Matilda E. Hokanson and Miss Battie Grundstrom attended the bride. The first named as maid of honor, wore a becoming dress of blue surah silk draped with point lace and carried a bouquet of cut flowers, which she presented to the bride at the close of the ceremony. Her companions were dressed in soft cream colored fabrics with gloves to match. Oscar Svenson Denis O. Grundstrom and Gustaf Johnson in conventional black acted as groomsmen. Following the marriage came a reception of an hour in the parlor, after which Caterer Yeaw served a wedding dinner in the dining room. Music during the evening was furnished by the Brigade Band Orchestra of which Mr. Grundstrom is the leader. The happy twain, now one, started at 12.29 Sunday morning for a trip to New York, and points south and west. They will be away two weeks. Numerous and valuable gifts were received as follows, handsome bronze chandelier from O. D. Grundstrom, father of the groom, piano lamp and silver pie knife from S. Svenson and family, silver service from Lundberg & Lybeck, French marble clock, with bronze ornaments, from the Brigade band, silver cake basket from Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Thomas, silver pickle jar from Olaf Magnuson, silver soup tureen from Gustaf Johnson; silver pickle jar from Annie Nordstrom; silver card receiver Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Arvidson; silver cake basket from Carl Olsson and Carl Nilsson; framed picture Carl Janson and F. Nordstrom; silver fruit knives from Miss Hilda Gustafson; table linen from Miss. Mary Grundstrom; richly framed picture of Othello with bamboo easle from Denis Grundstrom, and table linen from Mrs. J. P. Hokanson. That the future of the wedded pair may be as happy as their marriage is the wish of all their friends.

Just Four Score.

Worcester air must be conducive to longevity, for 80th and even 90th birthday celebrations are very common. The last one of note was observed Friday night Feb. 27, at the home of Charles M. Gould, 52 Providence street. A pleasant party of relatives chiefly gathered to do him honor. There were H. C. Graton and wife, W. H. Pierce and wife, Charles F. Gould, Clifton Gould and Bertie Gould, and Mrs. Carrie Strong and daughter of Fitchburg. During the evening, Mrs. Henry C. Graton, Mr. Gould's daughter, presented him with a purse of money in gold. The time was pleasantly passed with games and music.

There were four generations represented in the gathering, Mr. Gould, in whose honor the event was celebrated, Mrs. W. H. Pierce, his daughter, Mrs. Carrie Strong, his granddaughter, and Mrs. Strong's little daughter. Mr. Gould carries his years well, another pleasant characteristic of our aged people. He still enjoys life and long may he continue to do so.

In sixteen cities of Virginia the negroes own property worth $3,824,542, the greater part of which is real estate. In Richmond their possessions amount to $820,138.

Washington Letter.

Feb. 21, 1891.

The government clerks, and especially those in the Interior Department, have not been working very hard lately. Monday the department closed at noon in order to honor the memory of Ex-Secretary Stuart of Virginia; Tuesday all the departments were closed on account of the burial of Admiral Porter, and are closed today for General Sherman's funeral in St. Louis. Next Monday is a national holiday and when that is over we will try to settle down to steady work again.

The day of the Porter funeral was the warmest known here for February, the temperature rising to 72° at noon. I pitied the regular troops of the escort in their heavy cape overcoats, the marines particularly, for the artillery and militia stopped on the Georgetown side of the Aqueduct bridge but the marines kept on to Arlington. Anyone who knows what a quagmire the road from the bridge to Arlington, through Fort Meyer, is can realize what a hard march it must have been to the soldiers clad in their heavy overcoats and marching on such an unusually warm day. The admiral's grave is in an almost ideal location in front of the old Lee mansion, just over the crest of the hill overlooking the Potomac and Washington and parallel to the grave of Sheridan. Between the two graves is ample space for two more and who, with any regard for the "eternal fitness of things," does not hope that here will ultimately be buried the remains of Grant and Sherman.

Congress is now trying by a feverish activity to make up for the time lost in squabbling, early in the session. Neither party dares to delay the regular appropriation bills as the end of the session is so near and so much remains to be done. I was down at the House a few days ago and listened to the debate on the Indian Bill. It does not tend to increase the respect for that august body, as a whole, to observe an honorable member eating a huge apple as he talked and distributing apple seeds and oratory with a fine impartiality. An intellectual face is a rarity in Congress. In surveying the House of Representatives one sees a varied assortment of faces; some cunning and sharp, some stolidly indifferent, some old and care-worn, but very few that are "sickled o'er with the pale cast of thought." The Tenth district has reason to be proud of its representative's distinguished appearance; his pale, clear-cut features brought out into strong relief by his white hair make him a marked man to the strangers who crowd the galleries. An interesting question is now being raised in Congress, will Speaker Reed receive the usual vote of thanks extended to the retiring speaker at the close of the session? Hitherto, except in the case of Speaker Keifer, unanimous consent to the resolution has been asked and received, but in view of the stormy scenes in the present House and the violent passions excited, a unanimous vote of thanks is regarded as an impossibility.

Much excitement is shown by the District tax-payers over the proposition to charge half the expense of maintaining the new Zoological Park at the District. They say if Congress sees fit to appropriate money for a national monkey show they cannot see the justice of making them pay half the expense of feeding them. It does seem like crowding the mourners a little to make a little territory of ten miles square, with a population of three hundred thousand, the equal of a nation of sixty-two millions, in paying for an institution which they had no voice in establishing. Washington already has an extensive system of parks, probably equal in extent to any in the country and which it maintains without a murmur but it strongly objects to increasing its already heavy burden of taxation for the purpose of assisting the national government in collecting a menagerie.

The Post Office question is assuming an interesting phase. The present building is a leased one, besides being too small. The new building will not be ready for occupancy for five years and the lease of the present quarters expires in June. The owners of the building will not renew the lease except at such an exorbitant rent that the government refuses to pay it and there are no other suitable quarters available, so the question is: "What is the government going to do? One proposition is to erect a one-story frame building on one of the reservations, to serve until the new building is finished, but the promised spectacle of the Post Office at the capital of the nation housed in a shed is not an edifying one. Worcester can sympathize with Washington in its Post Office tangle. Both cities have money enough appropriated to build suitable edifices but the question there seems to be "where," while here it is "when."

WINFIELD.

Then And Now.

One hundred years ago girls were not allowed to attend any of the public schools of the country. When the first high school for girls was opened in Boston 1825, there was such an outcry against the innovation, and so few girls applied for admission, that after a year or so the scheme was abandoned, and was not again attempted until 1853. In 1774 the first academy for women was opened by Moravians in Pennsylvania; in 1789 the first seminary for women in New England was inaugurated in New Bedford, Mass.; and Mary Lyon, in 1836, founded a college for women, in that state, on the broadest of basis ever before attempted. Oberlin College was opened on the co-educational plan in 1833, and Antioch College in 1852. But these were innovations which met much discussion and opposition, even among women themselves. To-day, however, this prejudice against the scientific education of women has nearly disappeared. Even the older and more conservative institutions, like Harvard and Columbia, are, if not opening their front doors to women, at least making side entrances, called annexes, whereby they may enter.

Almost every college has already one or more women professors or assistant professors. Even Harvard has admitted women as assistants in its astronomical department; while women, as Dean Rachel Bodley of the Pennsylvania Women's College, and Alice Freeman Palmer, of Wellesley, have held the positions of heads of colleges. Women scientists are being given state and national government appointments. One woman is assistant mycologist at Washington; others are engaged in taking meteorological observations. Missouri's state entomologist is a woman. Michigan University has several women professors and assistants in the departments of microscopical botany, anatomy, bacteriology, pathology, and obstetrics. In other colleges can be found women at the head of departments of botany, chemistry, etc.; and the principal of the Denver School of Mines is a woman. In ethnology and archaeology shine such bright names as Alice Fletcher, Erminie Smith, and Amelia B. Edwards. Many of these have received high college degrees, and are "fellows" of distinguished scientific societies in this country and Europe. Many women here and in England are acting, or qualifying themselves to act, as druggists and dispensers of medicine. —New England Magazine for February.

A Sabbath Dawn.

Just as the night is departing,
And the light renews its power,
Far in the gloom of the East sky
Comes a gleam of the Sabbath Hour.

It brightens and wanes and brightens,
It fades like a dream of the past;
In a sleeping world it flashes,
A world that is strifeless at last.

From the heavens come down the snow flakes,
In a rapid uncertain motion;
Now falling steadily downward
Now blown, like waves of the ocean.

In houses with queer-shaped chimneys
On roofs that their owners defend;
In elms and sugar stored maples
The flakes are ceasing, descend.

While the pliant pines are bending
With the weight of their load above;
Like soldiers with heads uncovered,
Standing at the grave of one they love.

And as the snow that has fallen
Hushes all noise and din;
So Heaven's peace and grace cover
Earth's struggle, its sorrow and sin.

So from the light of this Sunday,
We know a Timeless Day will return;
Bringing life to hearts that are fainting
And joy to souls that now mourn.

—H. R. Hildreth.

Boston Station Man.

"I never go into the Boston & Albany Station that I do not step in the door to the woman's waiting room to hear that remarkable negro announce the trains. As many times as I have heard it I have never quite made up my mind whether it is alive or not. Just before a train is to start he enters the lower door and walks straight to the first radiator. There he leans an elbow, and cast his eyes about the room slowly, wetting his lips as he sweeps the crowd. There is no expression in his face as he cries out in an even, loud voice: "Train for Beacon street, Chapel Station, Longwood, Brookline, Cypress street, Reservoir, Chestnut Hill, Newton Centre, Newton Highlands, Eliot, Waban, Woodlawn and Riverside—5.35 train on track number 4."

Each of these stations is thrown of as if he took it from a box inside himself and spat it out. Then he turns about and goes out to return in five minutes or so and call out another in exactly the same manner. I always wonder what becomes of him at night. Is he shut up in a box in the baggage room, and wound up every day? What would happen to the road were he to run down? I am sure he will some fine day. On Saturday I thought I saw evidences of it. He was calling out the 5.20 train for "Newton, Newtonville, West Newton, Auburndale, Riverside, Woodlawn, Waban, Newton Highlands and Newton Centre 5.20 train on track number 3." The words came very slowly, I thought each was his last and imagined I heard a whirl of wheels inside him. He finished it safely, however, and I fancy some one oiled him up while he was getting ready to announce the next train, for that came all right."—Boston Home Journal.

Light heard this same party go through his list, this time on the through line. After he had finished, having noticed an error in his order, we made bold to say "you got your order reversed in Wellesley Hills and Wellesley." Nothing could have been more crushing then the reply. "I am aware of de fact, Sah."

Books and Bookmen.

The March magazines are here, filled as usual with a wealth of wit and wisdom. What a work it must be to decide just what shall go in and what shall be left out.

The Century for March. Contents:

Portrait of William Cullen Bryant, Frontispiece; General Crook in the Indian Country, Capt. John G. Bourke, pictures by Frederic Remington; The Faith Doctor, II. (Begun in February), Edward Eggleston; The Century Club, A. R. Macdonough, pictures by A. Brennan, C. A. Vanderhoof, and from portraits in possession of the club; Australian Cities. The Anglo-Saxon in the Southern Hemisphere, George R. Parkin; Moonlight, Celia Thaxter; Aux Invalides, Edgar Fawcett; The Memoirs of Talleyrand, Talleyrand; Plain Living at Johnson's Island, described by a Confederate Officer, Lieut. Horace Carpenter, pictures by W. Taber, Malcomb Frazer, A. B. Davies, Harry Fenn, W. H. Shelton, from photographs and sketches; A Mystery of the Sea, a true story, Edwin K. Butolph; Through Eastern Thibet and Central China, W. Woodville Rockhill, pictures E. L. Major, Otto H. Bacher, from photographs and Tibetan objects; The Eutopian Pointer, David Dodge; Give me not Tears, Rose Hawthorne Lathrop; Colonel Carter of Cartersville, F. Hopkinson Smith, pictures by E. W. Kemble; Penhallow, Edith Robinson, pictures by Will H. Low; Resume of Fremont's Expedition, M. N. O., pictures by V. Perard, Harry Fenn, George D. F. Brush, Frederic Remington, A. Lambourne, and from photographs, etc.; The Origin of the Fremont Explorations, Jessie Benton Fremont, picture by Frederic Remington, and portraits; Rough Lines in Rough Places, Micajah McGehee; Montgomery and Fremont, New Documents on the Bear Flag Affair, Josiah Royce; Three Gold Dust Stories, J. F. B. Marshall.

TOPICS OF THE TIME.

The People and Finance, Unregarded Literary Standards, Walter Howe, Organized Municipal Reform, Success with Honor.

OPEN LETTERS.

Mr. Lodge on Civil Service Reform, William B. Aiken, Henry Cabot Lodge; Working Girls' Clubs, Florence Lockwood; Two Monuments, Horace F. Cutter; What of the Desert? J. W. Gregory; Two Interviews with Robert E. Lee, W. W. Page; Washington and Talleyrand, Cephas Brainerd; Madame de Renouard on Talleyrand and Bonaparte.

BRIC-A-BRAC.

To Her Quill Pen, F. A. Stokes; The Looked-for Man, M. G. George; Reflections, C. D. Stewart; I Kill er Cat, V. F. Boyle; The Poet Undone, J. K. Bangs; Han's Hundred Dollars; The White, White Rose, W. P. Carter; The Smoker, Charles Henry Luders.

The picture of Bryant was taken so long ago that, were it not named, no one would recognize it. The public has grown to expect a Homeric face for our sage. General Crook in the Indian Country is adventurous enough to suit the most inveterate reader of scalp hunting books. The Century Club is a readable account of this famous Association of New York's men of brains. Australian Cities takes us to the uttermost parts of the earth, where now Confederation is talked about. Plain living at Johnson's Island is another picture of War Times from a Confederate stand-point. The memoirs of Talleyrand are as usual of absorbing interest.

We have more of Fremont and his expeditions and we cannot well have too much of such accounts. They lie at the foundation of our history. As heretofore, not the least interesting parts of the magazine are the departments at the end. Topics for the Times and Open Letters are real indications of what men and women are thinking and doing today. Bric-a-brac will probably be read first by many. The continued stories by Edward Eggleston and F. Hopkinson Smith are exceedingly entertaining.

Lippincott's for March starts off with a story by Frederick S. Cozzens, the author of Sparrowgrass Papers. Almost forgotten today, but the story, "The Sound of a Voice" is a good one. We can't help running off into one of Tennyson's stanza's in "Break, Break, Break" "The sound of a voice that's still." Very many will be interested in the Letters of Horace Greeley. What a Bible the Tribune was about thirty-five years ago! Walt Whitman, the Old Gray Poet, is here over his own name and beside there is an excellent sketch by Mr. Traubel. The frontispiece, Whitman's face, is one of the best pieces of work that we have seen in many a day. Three Famous Old Maids is the story of Misses Austen Edgeworth and Mitford. Perhaps they are little read today; but they gave our grandparents a deal of pleasure. At the end of the book there is interesting reading on "The French Invasion of Ireland". Reading Bans, Cosmopolitanism and Culture, etc. Exteriously and interiorly the March Lippincott is attractive.

The March Budget of Good House-keeping comes to hand with Miss Parloa's third Morning in the Kitchen holding the place of honor. That is a beautiful story which Mary Clark Huntington tells with the title At Flood Time. Easter Eggs, by Emma J. Gray. Florence M. Gray brings in a fine basket of fish, and tells how to prepare them. An illustrated article from the pen of Anna M. Bradford is devoted to Decorative Fancies of Linen. A Student of Human Strength and Weakness devotes the paper on Household Table Drinks. There are various ways of serving oysters. Items on cream, fashion and fancy, poems and some interesting minor articles, all doing their part toward making up a number that vies in interest with any that precedes it. Clark W. Bryan, Springfield, Mass.

Again our table is piled high with the magazines of the month. In Babyland the stories and pictures are fully up to the standard of excellence. The Story of the Toys is continued. At Dot's House will please all the children and the illustrations The Lost Babies, Through Mamma's Glasses, and Making kisses will touch the hearts of the mothers of the little people. D. Lathrop & Co., Boston. Price 50 cents.

The Household Monthly, price 50 cents, published in Boston, is a magazine with many items to interest those who must have a low priced book or they cannot have any. The Short Talks are full of instruction on current topics of the times. There are stories, poems, cooking, fashion and in fact it has a taste of what some more expensive books have in quantity. For the amount of reading, and the quality of its articles, it is to be recommended to all.

Our Little Men and Women, another of the Lothrop magazines for the little ones is at hand. Willie's Spelling Lesson comes first but Lady Gay is the principle story of this number. Then the tale of the dog who would not churn, the scrap about the little king of Spain, Fruits of a Sunny Land, An Odd Insect and poems and illustrations fill the book.

The Atlantic Monthly is full of instructive matter. In the Contributor's Club there is material enough for a full fledged novel. Really, a Roman of the Romans has more incident than some popular latter-day tales. Miss Murfree's and Mr. Stockton's stories will be greedily seized by some. All of us have our favorites and LIGHT has especial pleasure in Richard Grant White by Mr. Church. The writer has done the reading public a service in giving us this sketch, quite too short, of Mr. White. Few lovers of good English have not taken delight in the latter's words on our language. They are in everybody's library, and everybody has profited by them. Francis Parkman appears in his Capture at Louisburg by the New England militia. The service that Mr. Parkman has rendered history is inestimable. Truth is stranger than fiction and frequently much more interesting. My Schooling by James Freeman Clarke will entertain a wide circle. We are reminded, somewhat, of J. Stuart Mill's Reminiscences. The State University in America is exceedingly apropos, now, in the multitude of writings on educational subjects. The Speaker as Premier is purely political.

Heredity will be read by Dalton's disciples, and Hadley's Railroad Problems of the Future is suggestive and valuable. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The Puritans vs. the Quakers, a review of the persecutions of the early Quakers and Baptists in Massachusetts with notices of those persecuted and of some of their descendants and tributes to Roger Williams and William Penn and the distinguished characteristics of the Early Quakers by Caleb A. Wall.

This is a paper read by Mr. Wall by invitation before the Worcester Society of Antiquity. Mr. Wall is known as a man of deep conviction and varied and extensive knowledge of local affairs. Considering his descent, it is natural that he should look upon some of the earlier practices in these colonies with anything but favor. There are few of us who cannot look back to slights upon ourselves or our ancestors. All religious denominations have had their persecutions and, generally, have thriven upon them. The writer throws into his sketch the nervous energy for which he has been noted. The well known instances of harsh usage are recounted. They were harsh and cruel. No one can deny this; but we of today cannot undo the deeds of our fathers. It may do us good as it prompts us to greater charity toward those who do not agree with our beliefs and manners. There are those who would use just as little leniency in dealing with Salvation Army people for instance. The thirteenth chapter of 1st Corinthians should be read daily, by the world at large. Mr. Wall gives interesting genealogical data of his own ancestry. To say that this is one of Mr. Wall's most carefully prepared sketches is to give it all possible praise. It may be obtained from him direct, or at Putnam, Davis & Co.'s Book Store.

Composition and Rhetoric by Practice with exercises adapted for use in High School and Colleges by William Williams, B. A. Boston, D. C. Heath & Co. 1891.

This book is not too complex. It opens with an orderly discussion of the sentence, followed by simple rules in punctuation. Style is very clearly considered. Figures of Speech, Qualities of Style, Letters, Kinds of Discourses, and Versification are all treated well. Correcting compositions has useful hints and Proof Reading and Marking are valuable to every one who thinks of writing for the press. One of the very best features of the book is the multitude of examples given. No one can learn wholly from precept. He must have example and in this respect no Rhetoric excels this one. The pupil who goes thoroughly through this book ought to be well equipped for composition, as far as the book can help him.

Ballou's Dollar Monthly for March brings its accustomed pleasant array of fact and fancy. Mrs. Cornelia Wesson Boyden, a frequent contributor to LIGHT, has an excellent sonnet, The Future. Explorations of Canada and Cod Fishing in Iceland are excellent descriptive sketches. The short stories are, as ever in this magazine, bright and pointed. G. D. Studley, 23 Hawley St. Boston, $1.50 per annum.

The Biglow Papers by James Russell Lowell, Boston and New York, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1891.

Anything by Lowell, whether new or old, is deserving of the public's attention. In this handsome volume, the Publisher's give us the first title page with all the quirks and turns that made the series so popular when they were first issued. It is considerably more than a generation since people began to laugh over the fun in these Yankee dialect performances. That there were Yankees enough every body knew but they did not appear in prose nor verse. When, in the misty future, this form of speech is lost, the scholar will turn to Mr. Lowell's Biglow Papers to find how the natives had allowed the English language to change in their two hundred years of non contact with the outside world.

Whether it be note to the Title Page, Proemium, or Letters Proper, there is not a dull word in the book. An unfailling test of the excellence of the wit is the fact that the people born since the times that called forth these papers still find them interesting and entertaining. Many of the characters, named, have become fixtures in our literature. Bird o' Freedom Sawin and the Rev. Mr. Wilbur are as well known as Ichabod Crane and Sir Roger de Coverley.

While the Two Series have been much read and studied by people young and old there were not a few who couldn't comprehend all the allusions in the papers. As a book for school reading, explanations were sometimes called for that teachers could not give. The want is now supplied and full notes supply all former wants. A copious index enables the reader to quickly turn to any desirable point in the book.

Most writers have some poem or poems by which they would prefer to be remembered. Dr. Holmes would rest his fame on The Chambered Nautilus, Mr. Whittier on The Reformer. What Mr. Lowell considers his best we cannot state but there certainly are those who would not hesitate to place the Biglow Papers among the most original specimens of verse that America has produced.

The children will rejoice over the coming of St. Nicholas whose table of contents follows:

Frontispiece, Cæsar and Pompey, from a study by J. H. Dolph; Cæsar and Pompey, verse, Tudor Jenks; The Fortunes of Toby Trafford, chapters XVII, XVIII, XIX, XX, J. T. Trowbridge, illustrated by Henry Sandham; Jingle, There was once an excellent Emu, Isabel Frances Bellows, illustrated by Albertine Randall Wheelan; Good-Bye, A Woodland Episode, verse, Oliver Herford, illustrated by the author; Huz and Buz, Laura E. Richards, illustrated by P. Andra; Elfie's Visit to Cloudland and the Moon, VIII, IX, Frances V. Austen, illustrated by E. J. Austen; The Turtle and the Katydid, verse, Harry Robinson, illustrated by Albertine Randall Wheelan; What and Where? Verse, Anna Hamilton; My Autograph Book, I, Edward Livingston Welles, illustrated; Pictures, The Investigating Committee; The Boy Settlers, chapters X, XI, Noah Brooks, illustrated by W. A. Rogers; Out of Childhood, verse, Helen Thayer Hutcherson; Jingle, A Little Boy Named Johnny, Cornelia Redmond, engrossed and illustrated by C. T. Hill; Khoda's Visit, Amy Wilson, illustrated by Miss Hardy; A Polar Bear for a Jailor, Edmund Collins, illustrated by E. T. Adney; An Opinion, verse, John Kendrick Bangs, illustrated by A. Brenon; The Alligators' Funeral, Elizabeth Bisland, initial drawn by C. T. Hill from a photograph; Cause and Effect, verse, Margaret Vandegriff, illustrated by C. T. Hill; Linus, DeWitt C. Lockwood, illustrated from a photograph by T. J. Cherrington; The Midnight Sun, Herbert L. Aldrich, illustrated from photograph by the author; Bobby's Christmas Dream, Laura Lyon White, illustrated by R. B. Birch; A Little Girl's Diary in the East, Lucy Morris Ellsworth, illustrated from a drawing by H. D. Nichols and from photographs; His Profession, verse, Er. Malcolm McLeod; Pau'ine and the Policeman, Benjamin Webster, illustrated by H. A. Ogden; Alphabet Song, Emma C. Dowd; Jack in the Pulpit, The Letter-box, Pictures, A Mean Revenge, Drawn by G. T. Richards; The Riddle box, (illustrated).

Constance Winter's Choice is the title of one of the new novels from the house of Rand McNally & Co. Its author, Anna Louise Beckwith, has taken for her heroine a girl whose mother was disappointed in not being allowed to carry out her plan of going upon the stage, but instead was persuaded that married life was better for her and finally yielded to the entreaties of her friends and married Mr. Winter. Her daughter inherits all her mother's ambition, and it is of her life upon the stage, her devotion to her art, and at the last her decision that art is not all, but that the tribute of one loving heart is more than all the compliments of a friendly public. She throws herself into her art with fierce energy, determined that love shall not supplant it but her health breaks under the severe strain of the constant warfare of Love and Art, and then she turns wearily to the quiet home life and the true love so long awaiting her, having "weighed love against the world."

Through the courtesy of John A. Whitney and Alvah Metcalf of Ashland, LIGHT becomes the possessor of a Fac-Simile impression made Sept. 17, 1856 of Benjamin Franklin's paper, The New England Courant, printed Feb. 11, 1723. It is No. 80 of the series, has two small advertisements and has, as its principal article the address of King George I in the opening of Parliament the 11th of October, the preceding year. The very worst possible patent outside and inside of today is a whole library compared with it. The reprint is made on Franklin's press and is itself aged enough in appearance to pass for the original.

The following from Sidney S. Rider's paper, published in Rhode Island will find many appreciative readers in LIGHT. Will Bookselling become a lost art?

"It is with real sadness that Book Notes records the fact that Mr. H. Gregory, who keeps one of the two book stores now remaining in Providence, has displaced a portion of his book stock to give place to a cheap stock of confectionery. There have been days when a good book seller was regarded as an educator by his fellowmen, and as such was considered as much deserving of support as were any of the educated classes. Alas, those days have departed. It is something of a tumble for a man to come down from selling Tacitus to Taffy, from Burns to Butter-scotch, from Puttenham to Peanuts. The struggle for existence of the poor book-sellers is really terrible. There is but one end to it, unless a remedy is applied.

The Cosmopolitan for March is, as usual, a remarkable production. Frederic Villiers, under the heading "The Story of a War Correspondent's Life" relates his experience during the trouble, several years ago, between the Servians and the Turks; Edmund Collins gives an account of the work of Protestant Missions; under the title "In Darkest America," Edmund Collins discusses the future of the Indian; in "A Protected Queen," Mason A. Shufeldt describes life in Madagascar. Other articles are "Beauty on the French Stage" by Edouard Mahé; "We Will Forget," a poem by Lucy Bostwick; "The Cream City," (Milwaukee) by Captain Charles King; "Rhamsinitus and the Wise Thief" (from the Egyptian) by M. Allen Watson; "Municipal Reform" by Oliver S. Teall; "Trick and Tricksey" a poem by John V. Cheney; "Professor Ezekiel Harkinson's Plan" by H. H. Barall; "Slovenly Americans" by Julien Gordon; "Speculation as a Fine Art" by D. G. Watts; "Coquette" a poem by Ruth Johnston; "Labor Unions and Strikes in Ancient Rome" by G. A. Danzegier; "How I Shot my first Elephant," by MacMahan Challinor; Review of Current Events, by Murat Halstead; Social Problems by Edward Everett Hale; "On Certain Recent Volumes of Verse" by Brander Matthews.

SWEDISH BREAD. Some day, when you have nothing else to do, call in at Lundberg & Lybecks, 103 Summer street, and see the kind of staff on which life is sustained in Sweden. It is made in disks, ten inches in diameter, indented like waffles, and with a hole in the middle. At home in Sweden, bread making in some families comes only twice a year. After baking, it is strung on a stick or pole like wheels upon an axle and then hung up. Barrels of flour are sometimes thus used and, in old age, the bread becomes very hard; but good teeth is the rule in Sweden and dyspepsia is rare. Among American lads, the temptation to use a disk of such bread as a go cart, now and then, would be almost irresistible.

Percy, who had just come out of skirts, was one day strutting around in his first suit of jacket and trousers, when a lady remarked, "Hello! I guess some one has new clothes." With crushing force came the reply, "Them ain't clothes—them's pants."

Millbury Letter.

The Social Union will hold its regular quarterly meeting at the 1st Congregational church, Tuesday, March 12th. The Union will keep the school question ball rolling, by again making it the subject of discussion. Rev. A. M. Crane of the Baptist church will open the discussion.

The temperance sentiment among Millbury people seems to be at a low ebb; at least the expression of it is so. It has been the rule, for the last few years, to have a series of union Sunday evening meetings in the Town Hall, with addresses by noted speakers from abroad, or by the pastors of the local churches. These meetings were for the purpose of rousing the people to vote license and, undoubtedly, have had much to do with securing a no vote. This year there is no movement in this direction and prohibitionists are stating that they will either not vote at all on the question, or will vote for no license. The cause of this change in sentiment is not hard to find, and lies in the fact that certain influential parties have been allowed to carry on their liquor business undisturbed and that drunkenness has been rife upon our streets. These prohibitionists say, "A license law enforced is better than a prohibitory law unenforced," but before they go to the polls let them ask themselves, will the license law be any better enforced than the prohibitory law has been?

A party of twenty-five from this town attended the "Cantata of Ruth," last week at the Old South Church, Worcester. They returned home highly pleased with the entertainment and proud to be able to call Miss Nellie Broadbent friend, and say she is from Millbury. It is a pleasing fact, also, that Mrs. Mitchel formerly sang at the 1st Congregational church in this town and that Mr. Little was a Millbury boy. In fact some of Worcester's most noted singers have, from time to time, occupied positions in Millbury choirs. Among these may be mentioned Mrs. Anna Brierly Hall, Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. Emma Dearborn Harris, Mrs Webster Thayer, Mrs. Inez Budding Murdock and Miss Luella Flagg.

The members of the Natural History Society were entertained at their regular monthly meeting Monday evening, by Mr. Joseph Jackson, principal of Woodland street school, Worcester, who read a paper upon "Our Native Plants and Flowers." This subject, set forth in the speaker's graceful style and embellished with short anecdotes and bits of choice poetry, made a most pleasing and profitable entertainment. During the evening, the President, Dr. Geo. C. Webber announced that Prof. Stone, formerly principal of the Millbury Academy, will be present at the annual meeting of the society and deliver an address.

"This talking all night on the sleeping car is a shame," said the Rev. Mr. Bolus. "No body can go to sleep," "Just you talk a little while, John," said his wife. "They'll all go to sleep right off."

The dimensions and history of Cleopatra's Needle in Central Park, New York, are these: The shaft of this obelisk, which is a single stone, is sixty eight feet high and weighs 443,000 pounds. It is but seven feet square at the base and about five and a quarter feet where the sloping of the top begins. The material is syenite, a stone. The obelisk was originally set up at the city of On (Gen. xLI., 45-50), 1565 B. C. In B. C. 22 it was moved to Alexandria and A. D. 1880-81 was brought to New York City.

Doctor—"Well my fine little fellow, you have got quite well again. I was sure that the pills I left for you would cure you. How did you take them—in water or in cake?" "Oh, I used them in my blow-gun!" Ex.

The Story of a Green Veil.

WRITTEN FOR LIGHT BY JACK SHEPHERD.

"Why Charles, where are you off to, so early in the season?" said Herbert Pemberton to his friend Charles Colgate as they met in the Pennsylvania depot in Philadelphia, early in April.

"My mother is ill and I am going home, to Maine to see her. I regret very much leaving the clinic, those lectures on the throat are fine," said Mr. Colgate. The young men were both students of the Jefferson College.

"I am really sorry to hear that, and that you must leave at this time when you will lose so much. Then turning to a young lady beside him, he said, "Let me introduce you, Mr. Colgate, to my sister Sue. She is going to Portland on a visit to our uncle, Richard White. We hesitated about her taking so long a journey alone, but perhaps you will allow me to leave her in your care, as you travel the same way?"

Charles Colgate was an extremely shy young man, yet in spite of a blush that mounted to his forehead, he answered in hearty tones, "Certainly, I shall be most happy," and barely glanced at, as he bowed to, the slender, petite figure. The young lady was enveloped in a dark blue cloak and her face was completely hidden by a thick green veil.

"She has her checks," said her brother, "I shall feel relieved of much anxiety, good-bye and many thanks."

"Good-bye Sue, love to the folks in Portland," then in a whisper, he continued, "You have for an escort, one of the finest fellows in our class, the leading man." "I will take good care of Miss Pemberton," answered his friend, as he turned to assist her on the train that had just steamed into the depot.

She had only an umbrella and a small handbag with her and they were soon seated together in the center of the car.

Mr. Colgate arranged curtains and windows to suit his fair companion and rolling up his large plaid, placed it under her feet for a cushion.

She thanked him in low soft tones and then both remained silent for some time.

Charles Colgate could never make conversation, small talk was much less familiar to him than Greek. Acting was his province and little acts of kind forethought performed quietly for both old and young had gained him a high place in the esteem and favor of his lady friends.

As he sat by this young lady he felt unable to think of a single thing to entertain her and wondered painfully what he should do during this long tête-à-tête ride. The morning papers were a refuge for a while and under their shelter he looked now and then toward his companion. He admired the slender pretty foot, neatly booted and rested against his plaid. She had drawn off her gloves and her well-shaped hands, destitute of rings were quite a pleasant study for the young man who was somewhat of an artist. He did not dare to raise his eyes any further. He could not imagine why she kept that heavy, green veil down so persistently; drawn closely and fastened in a firm knot at the back. It had been quite March-like and windy, for it was still early in April, but in the car it seemed unnecessary.

The seat in front of him became vacant about this time and with the remark that he would make more room for her, he took it. Here with pencil and sketch-book he drew different views of the larynx. He was absorbed in this work and Miss Sue had a fine opportunity of studying Mr. Colgate.

She was an uncommonly pretty, attractive girl. Her face was full of sweetness and varied expression with fine, dark blue eyes, a somewhat large mouth with beautiful teeth and an abundance of silky, chestnut hair, curling naturally, all combined to make her picturesque and charming.

Why should such a pretty girl wear that ugly, green veil? During the week previous to her journey, a little nephew while playing with her had drawn his handkerchief too roughly across her eyes and the edge had entered one so sharply as to produce inflammation. To prevent further trouble from cinders or dust she had been advised to keep her veil down.

From behind it she could see, though unseen, and survey critically her silent partner. He was shorter than she at first supposed but broad shouldered and muscular, with a noble head and keen, intelligent eyes. As he sat bending earnestly over his book, she felt intuitively that though unconventional and timid in society, he had real character and could be both brave and kind in the path of duty.

Some time must have passed for she found herself suddenly awakened from a sound sleep by the car stopping as they entered the New York depot.

Mr. Colgate escorted her to the waiting room but she refused his invitation to dine as she had luncheon in her bag. He left her, promising to return and see her on the train. After a lunch he entered a store to buy a cigar and then looking at his watch turned once more to the depot.

The train for the north started earlier than he supposed and he found the passengers for New England had left the room and were entering the cars.

Miss Pemberton had no doubt become anxious and he would find her on the train. Just at this moment he saw a green veiled head as it withdrew from the window of a car. He said "that is she, and I am all right now," and following in the wake of that green veil soon sat down beside its owner, once more placing his shawl as a foot-cushion for his companion. The cars began to move, they were off once more. But what did it mean? The feet that rested on the cushion were almost twice the size of the ones he had so admired, and the shoes were the comfortable half-shoes worn by old persons and not the pretty, little boots he well remembered. He looked at his companion's hands, they were covered with drab woolen mittens and raising his eyes to her head, he saw under the green veil some grey hair.

What was he to think? Had some fairy changed the young and slender girl into this old woman? He had been misled by that green veil.

In great trepidation he looked in all directions for Miss Pemberton. What would she think of him for neglecting her? He could not see another green veil anywhere and he stretched his neck and turned his head till his eyes ached. But it was of no avail, nowhere did he see Miss Pemberton.

Nevertheless she was there and not very far from him. On the second seat back of him, a young girl bowed her head upon the seat in front of her, apparently to rest but really to laugh till she cried over the comically anxious conduct of her former bashful and silent companion.

If he had looked on the shelf above her head he would have seen the veritable green veil he so longed to behold now.

The heat and fatigue had compelled her to remove both bonnet and veil for a season, and the pretty head with its clustering curls was not recognized by Mr. Colgate.

He finally left the car and made a desperate search for that green veil, but returned soon quite pale and sat down in such a desponding way, Miss Sue Pemberton was again obliged to hide her laughing eyes from view.

At a half-way station a number left the train, among others the old lady with the green veil. In the confusion, Miss Pemberton having donned her bonnet and veil once more slipped into the seat beside Mr. Colgate who had moved to the window and was busy looking out at the passengers.

They were soon again moving on and her companion turned around to behold another green veil beside him. His eye was too quick, not to recognize the dainty feet and hands and springing up he forgot all shyness in his evident joy at finding her once more. "Why," he said, "I thought I had lost you, and have blamed myself for being so careless of your comfort." "Oh, I have taken this journey too often to be lost," she replied with a merry laugh, "I was a few seats back of you and could not very well move or reach you until now."

This incident seemed to break the ice between them and for an hour or two they enjoyed the society of one another very cordially.

As twilight came on, they entered a station at which they stopped twenty minutes for tea. Miss Pemberton after supper removed her green veil and folded it up for the night, as the glare of the sunlight was past and it would be dark when they took the boat at Boston for Portland.

In the meanwhile Mr. Colgate was walking around the platform of the station which opened into the refreshment room from the doors on either side.

He had not yet seen Miss Pemberton without her obnoxious, green veil and as he stood taking the few whiffs of the last end of his cigar, he saw, as he supposed, Miss Pemberton, at any rate a lady with a green veil, leave the room and hurry across the platform to a train going south. This was all wrong, he must stop her, and rushing around the station he reached the car only to see her disappear within; he followed her calling, "Miss Pemberton, you are taking the wrong train." But she did not stop and he came up to her as she was leisurely taking her seat. He touched her shoulder and then realized that he had made a mistake for this was a middle-aged quakeress who now removed her veil from her face and putting it in two or three folds back on her long, sugar-scoop of a bonnet, looked at him with mild surprise.

He turned quickly and, hastening back to the depot, saw to his chagrin the train for the north moving quite rapidly out of the depot. It was too late. He could not possibly reach it and this was the only one connecting with the Portland boat. "What an unfortunate fellow I am," he said to himself, "is it my fault, or is it that green veil?"

In the meantime Miss Pemberton had her turn, looking for Mr. Colgate and was more ready to cry than to laugh, when she found he did not appear. She dreaded reaching the boat alone in the dark and regretted deeply the loss of a companion whom she had begun to appreciate and enjoy.

Their acquaintance however was not to end here, for when his mother had recovered from her illness, he accepted a position as clerk in a summer hotel in the Catskill Mountains, where in July he saw among the guest's names, Miss Pemberton's and her mother and brother. He felt some embarrassment at the thought of meeting them.

Would not Herbert twit and joke him mercilessly for his mistakes and awkwardness? Still he longed to hear the voice of his fair, fellow-traveller again and see her face, which though unknown to him, he had mentally pictured many times.

He met them in the evening as he stood on the piazza steps. Herbert greeted him as cordially as ever, with a hearty hand-shake, saying, "Why Charles how good it is to see you here. Let me introduce you to my mother and here is Sue, you remember Sue."

She offered him her hand with a smile and blush saying in low tones, "Mr. Colgate must remember my green veil much better than he remembers me."

He looked in glad surprise and admiration at her countenance, so full of sweetness and intelligence.

He felt intuitively that her kind heart had withheld her from enjoying a joke at his expense and his awkward contre-temps had never been spoken of.

Such delicate tact and fore-thought for another did not lessen Sue's many charms for Charles Colgate and although he was working against many disadvantage that attend on poverty he received such sympathy and inspiration from Sue Pemberton during those summer months, that before many years he had mounted high the ladder of fame and fortune and Dr Colgate's companion through life was the heroine of "The story of a Green Veil."

A RAINY DAY.

Little Four-years-old opened his eyes, scrambled out of bed and resolved to go out with his sled to play as soon as possible. He tried to hurry with his dressing, and jerked around so Mama, who is helping him dress, found much difficulty in keeping him still long enough to get his clothes in their accustomed useful places. Dressing over, he expressed a desire to go out at once.

"It is raining today and you cannot go out to play," said Mama.

"What does God make it rain for today?" said little Four-years-old.

"Water is very useful" began Mama.

"Wasn't there a lot more than was used yesterday?" pursued the youthful interrogator, thinking of the water lying on the icy places and frozen ground, which the sun had melted from the ice and snow yesterday.

"Never mind," said Mama, whose time was precious and many household duties were to be performed before baby awoke, and could not keep answering questions that would only lead to others, "Come to breakfast." Every cloud instantly vanished from his youthful sky and joyously he came to the breakfast table and entered into the discussion of his meal with an enthusiasm that only those know who have no burdensome care.

Breakfast over, he went to the window and a cloud is seen on his face as he realizes he must stay in the house; then he flattens his nose against the pane, determined to get as near out of doors as he can, and looks at the fast disappearing snow and masses of hard ice which melts more slowly. The irregularity of it caught his eye; he looked at the large pieces and small pieces and they began to take forms of animals in a procession; then he thought of the procession of animals he had seen last summer and immediately he thought "circus" and with a bright sunny face he turned from the window and looked at the chairs and other furniture of the sitting room and great possibilities at once came into his imaginative vision. His adapting himself to a rainy day and driving away a cloudy face is an example worthy of emulation in some older people.

Meanwhile busy Mama, a half hour later, entered the sitting-room and was greeted with "Look out, Mama, Don't you see the circus?" Mama failed to see the "circus" but, instead she saw that her already overcrowded day's work has been added to by the condition of the sitting room.

"This is the elfelant," explained Four-years-old "and here's his bill," pointing to Papa's cane thrust through a coat sleeve which hung over the back of an arm chair. "I mean his valise" he corrected. Mama smiled and said "You mean trunk, don't you?" "No, valise," he insisted. "Do you think if elfelants had trunks they would carry them in their teeth?" Just then a wail from baby called Mama hastily from the room and she did not stop to answer. Then the circus proceeded and a tent was erected out of a shawl over chairs and when Mama next appeared, Four-years-old was in the "tent" out of sight with Mama's work-basket. Spools were set up for the people who came to the circus and pins and needles were scattered around and other mischief done.

Mama looks under the "tent" and there sits Four-years-old looking rather guilty but trying to look innocent.

"Oh, how could you," began Mama looking at the pins, needles, spools, balls, etc., and thinking of the work it would be to straighten out the basket.

"I didn't do it," said Four-years-old, "I staid here and they came here theirselves to see the circus."

"Who came here," asked Mama rather mystified.

"Those folks," he said, pointing to the spools, balls, etc.

"Didn't you scatter those things around," asked Mama, hardly knowing what to say.

"No-o-o," he said looking at the shawl.

Now Mama was alarmed thinking her boy had told a deliberate falsehood.

"Come out here," and Four-years-old came out looking rather sheepish.

"Now didn't you get Mama's workbasket and scatter those things around?" said Mama.

"We-I-I," began Four-years-old, "I s'pose my hands did do it, but I thinked all the time I wasn't doing it."

"Wasn't it naughty to do so?" said Mama, "and to make poor Mama so much work."

Two little arms were instantly thrown lovingly around Mama's neck and a bright little face hid in her neck.

"I'm sorry my hands did it Mama."

"Isn't it telling a wrong story to say your hands did it and not you? Do you think your hands would have done it if I had cut them off?"

"Wouldn't you been put to jail and hanged if you had?" quickly asked Four-years-old.

Just then the door bell rang and Mama glancing despairingly around the disordered room, quickly smooths her ruffled hair, thinking callers had come, and went to the door only to find the postman with the mail; when she returned to the sitting room, Four-years-old was gathering up the contents of the workbasket, and throwing all together in the basket.

"I'm a giant," he said "I'm putting all these people in jail for cutting little boys hands off."

Mama was busy looking over the mail and presently Four-years-old said:

"Ar'n't I a good boy for picking up these things for you?"

"I think you would have been better if you had not scattered them," said Mama.

"How could I have helped you by picking them up if they were not on the floor?"

Baby again called Mama from the room and Four-years-old went on with his giant playing. Mama with all the housework, dinner, Baby, etc., may be excused for not stopping to answer all the questions of this sharp little questioner. After dinner, Four-years-old went to the dining-room to stay until Mama tidied the sitting room and amused himself by placing the chairs in a row with his rocking horse in front and played "horse cars."

"Change cars for the depot; this car for Lincoln Square" he shouted to Mama as she passed through the room.

"When you get through playing put the chairs back in their places," said Mama.

"Yes, I will," said Four-years-old, "I will help you some more."

Then Mama rocked the dear little baby to sleep and tucked her away for her nap, and with a sigh of relief thought she could rest herself for awhile. Baby was cutting some stubborn teeth and her rest had been broken for several nights. Four-years-old was tired of playing by himself and wanted some stories told by Mama. "Mama is tired," she said as she gave up trying to rest with him in the room. "But I'll sit right here and mend your stockings and you can tell me a story." Then she began to search for thimble, scissors, etc., which were found in rather a promiscuous pile in her workbasket.

Four-years-old looked at her reproachfully and said:

"If I was a Mama I'd tell my po-o or little boy all the stories he wanted; what would you do without your little boy to help you?" Then seeing the workbasket made him think of giants and he immediately wanted to hear about "Jack and the beanstalk."

Mama said, "Now Four-years-old, I have told you that story many times and if you want to hear it again you must tell it yourself."

"Well," said Four-years-old trying to look wise, "Once upon a time there lived a little boy named Jack all alone with his mother and a cow." Mama smiled and said nothing. "One day," continued Four-years-old, "when his mother went to market Jack sold that poor cow for a pint of beans. When his mother got home all there was left of the cow was a pint of beans." Four-years-old stopped to think what came next, and not being quite certain of the story but never at a loss for something to say, continued:

"Then his mother gave him some broth without any bread and whipped him soundly and put him to bed."

Mama smiled again but said nothing. Four-years-old paused again to consider and then went on.

"That night after his mother had thrown the beans out of the window, the beans began to grow and they grew up higher and higher and higher until they got up to God's house."

"Four-years-old," said Mama, "you must not say that, that is not the way to tell the story."

"Didn't the bean stalk grow way up in the sky?" asked Four-years-old.

"That's the story," said Mama.

"And isn't that God's house?" pursued Four-years-old.

"Yes," said Mama.

"Well," said Four-years-old, "how could the bean stalk grow up there without going to God's house?"

Just then the door bell rang and callers occupied the time that should have been spent by Mama in making the impressionable little mind clear in regard to stories and facts. Do we ever stop to think that at the age when the stories of that every interesting old lady, Mother Goose, are first told, the little minds are too pure to have the slightest doubt of their not being actual occurrences. Then as time goes by, the little minds develop and they perceive by the natural order of events, that such things could not have happened. Is it not then that they lose that sweet trust and confidence that is part of a spotless nature? Is it not something that we long to keep, yet cannot keep in them, that perfect incapability of committing sin? Is it not then that we begin to pray that our little ones may be delivered from evil with a fervor never before needed? As the rainy day passed away Mama's thoughts constantly reverted to Four-years-old and that night along conference was held by Four-years-old and Mama during which he was set right in regard to the perplexing questions of the "rainy day."

Steam heating is one of the necessities of the age, and the right kind of heater saves time, money and worry. Parties building new residences or blocks during the coming season will profit much by calling and examining the Royal Steam Heater at 39 Pearl street, or sending a postal card to the manager. Reliable estimates and practical workmanship guaranteed. The best of recommendations are furnished by the prominent business men of the city. The style of this magnificent heater can be seen on Page 22. The Heywood Foundry are the manufacturers.

For the Ladies.

The sun shone in Boston, the streets were as clean as if the woman who takes in back stairs to scrub had been around, the hand organ man played Annie Rooney and the man with a basketful of bronze-paint bottles to sell calmly gilded his ancient derby hat for the benefit of the crowd. While the stores in Worcester are filled with old winter goods on sale at reduced prices, Boston shops have bloomed out in a delightfully spring-like style. These are a few of the novelties I saw:

Plush capes—the material a brown plush with an extra heavy pile, and shot with white threads at irregular intervals. Plush capes braided around the edge and up the front with fuzzy silk braid applied in a sort of turkoman effect. The points in the fronts of many plush capes are growing into long square tabs. I saw a pretty cloth cape, made of three overhanging ruffles of gray cashmere, collar and yoke combined, the collar very high and edged with curled black silk ravelings.

The neat little chappie coats are longer than last year, and have two tiers of pockets instead of one, that is, above every large pocket flap is a small one.

I saw some charming bonnets. Everything seems to be the new flat poke, with a puff of velvet round the edge. I saw a dainty construction in white velvet, this shape, at the rear two high loops of white velvet ribbon reared themselves between two yellow velvet roses. These roses, by the way, obtain large, and might easily be made at home by taking a two inch wide bias band of velvet, gathering the raw edges and draw them tightly together, with a little ball of dark brown velvet in the centre. One flower garden was composed of a puff of green velvet, a wreath of purple violets, a crown of openwork gilt lace, loops at the back of green velvet, in which nestled a cluster of tea roses. It sounds like the Meadows, but put it on a pretty woman's head and the result would be ravishing. By the way, bonnet strings are made of velvet, quite long, and three inches wide. The velvet is not lined but simply cat-stitched onto itself in a flat hem. Gilt ribbon is popular, I saw some two inches wide, with bits of green, red and blue glass sewed on occasionally, with a jewel-like effect. Hat trimmings are growing higher than ever. I saw feathers and ribbon loops on the rear of a scarlet hat which would certainly add ten inches to the wearer's height.

Everybody who is anybody wears trimming on her skirt nowadays. I saw innumerable bias ruffles, sometimes running all around, but generally missing the back breadth. I also saw a new dress at a fashionable modiste's of brown wool, on the skirt was a foot wide bias flounce, edged with gros grain ribbon, and with the ribbon set on for a heading. The flounce was not gathered, but pleated at intervals of five inches in sets of three overlapping side pleats. I saw one skirt which had a row of rosettes around the hem; the effect was like shell trimming, which is also used. The dress in the height of style seems to be a light colored frock, slightly en traine (even for the street), drawn back as tightly over the hips as can be done without tearing the material. In addition, buy as many yards of ribbon as you can afford, and tie around your neck, with short loops and long ends falling over the back of your skirt. The ribbon is generally black.

All signs in millinery and art point to an early spring. It is to be hoped that nature wont fail to point to the same thing.

Men's puff scarfs are being brought out in the color of a thunder cloud, which is an excellent color everywhere except in a man's face.

The keepers of fowls should take their animals in nights. Boas made of green irrides-cent cock's feathers have appeared.

Boston will soon have a dog show at which a good many Worcester animals will make their debut. Sara Bernhardt played opposition to a hen show in New York. Will she exhibit her asp in rivalry to a pug show in Boston, is being asked.

Silver and diamond jewelry 's a fad,
Did it ever occur to you?
White shoes minus heels make pretty girls glad,
Did it ever occur to you?
Girls of sixteen wear their hair hanging loose,
But a sixteen of sixty's always a goose,
I presume it's occurred to you.

E. MINIFER.

Sherman at the Tomb of Ward.

As everything connected with General Sherman is sacred now to the heart of this great nation, to which he had become an idol of affection and of gratitude, I send a reminder of an event of local interest of which he was the principal figure.

Some years ago, General Sherman attended a fair of the New England Agricultural Society at Worcester, as its guest. Its president, the genial Dr. Loring, did everything in his power to make it of interest and pleasure to him as well as to the public to whom he was the great attraction. While there a pilgrimage was made by the society and its guests to escort the General to the tomb of General Artemas Ward, an officer of the Revolutionary army, in the neighboring town of Shrewsbury. After a gathering at the grave the company was entertained by George Sumner, Esq., at his summer house in Shrewsbury. There was no speech making, but many a select thought came to many hearts at this tribute of recognition and affection by this great captain of modern warfare to the humble untaught patriot soldier, whose weapon was the flaming sword of fiery zeal; whose shield, his stout heart of unwavering devotion. A thought came to me in this connection which has lain dormant in my brain till now when called up, by so many anecdotes and reminiscences connected with General Sherman by his departure from the battlefield of life to the Silent Camp of the immortals; following close the escorting spirits of Devens and of Porter.

The hero o'er the grave of the hero kneels
In a kinship of spirit that forever is young;
The years, their immortal deeds between,
Are but as yesterday, when it is gone.
The later war pays homage to the Revolution,
Its genius, in the school of science trained,
Bows to the diamond rough by stern experience polished;
The fires of patriot'sm, that kindle the elder's soul,
Warm with transmitted heat—
Through worthy sire—this noble son.
And Ward and Sherman, in soul, are one.
Worcester, Feb. 23, 1891.

H.

Caleb A. Wall gave the first of his addresses for this season, on the first settlers and their locations in the different sections of the city, Friday evening, Feb. 13, at the residence of Leonard Cheney on Sagatabscot Hill, near the spot where the first permanent settler in Worcester lived, and where the first child was born. This will be followed by similar meetings and addresses at other historic points, including Tatnuck, Quinsigamond Village, and other places, till the whole field is covered. The addresses already printed, containing Mr. Wall's accounts of the first settlers at North Worcester and Eastern Worcester, are on sale by him, and at the book store of Putnam, Davis & Co. The "Eastern Worcester" publication contains a specially interesting account of the Scotch-Irish Presbyterian immigrants of 1718, who were among the first settlers in Worcester, and also of the captivity and escape from the Indians of the boy Samuel Leonard, Jr., whose father's settlement was on what is now Lake Park, where a monument to the memory of the heroic youth is urged by the speaker to be placed.

Wishes.

BY MRS. A. H. HINMAN.

I wish that I a golden chain might lie
Upon my own love's neck of ivory,
Or I would be soft laces round her throat
That I might all her gentle breathings note.

Or, I would even be a rose! and fair
To nestle softly in her shining hair,
Or yet about her waist—a simple zone,—
Or anything to prove her all my own.

I'd lie so soft upon her snowy neck
I would not e'en the faintest whisper check,
And I would press her dainty waist so light
I would not even be unclasped at night.

There should no other rose in shining hair
With my own form, and perfume e'en compare.
Greatly would I enhance her every charm
And shield her from the slightest dream of harm.

I'd be a dainty fan with'n her hand,
And prove myself a light and magic wand
To cool the blushes on her velvet cheek,
And make her gentle loving words to speak.

Her slender golden bracelet I would be,
And prove her my own darling captive, free
To bend and swoon to my lordly selfish will,
And yet, I'd love and long to serve her still.

A precious jewel in her tiny ear,
I'd softly pause her faintest word to hear.
No breathing form should ever fail to pay Homage to her fair face and queenly way.

Sherman and Corse.

At this time when everybody is talking of the dead General and the outgoing Postmaster of Boston these stanzas, so familiar and prompted by the signalling at Altoona Pass are quite in place. They were written by Bliss, the Evangelist.

Ho! my comrades, see the signal
Waving in the sky;
Reinforcements now appearing,
Victory is nigh.

See the mighty host advancing,
Satan leading on;
Mighty men around us falling,
Courage almost gone.

See the glorious banner waving,
Hear the bugle blow;
In our leaders name we'll triumph
Over every foe.

Fierce and long the battle rages,
But our help is near;
Onward comes our great commander,
Cheer, my comrades, cheer.

CHORUS.

"Hold the fort, for I am coming,"
Jesus signals still;
Wave the answer back to Heaven,
"By thy grace we will."

They have been sung by all English speaking people. Sankey sang them in Great Britain and in Dublin when a funny actor in the theater said, "I feel Moody, in fact I am Sankeymonious;" the galleries at first hissed and then sang "Hold the Fort," till the clown gave in. The message of Corse in return to Sherman's was not pious; but it was emphatic "I am short an ear and minus a cheek bone; but I can whip H—I out of them yet." The holding of the Boston Office did not depend upon himself or we might have a different result from his peaceful departure when his successor enters.

Salvini de L'Arimate, a Florentine, invented spectacles about the close of the twelfth century. He would have kept his secret to himself had it not been for Father Alexander de Spina, another subject of the same State, who, having found it out by his ingenuity, was too generous to withhold so useful a discovery from the world.

Lovers of Good Tea and Coffee

Should buy their goods where they can depend on always getting a pure, fresh article, of the best quality. Our many patrons will testify that this is true of the

*New England Tea Co.,***

273 MAIN STREET.

Give us a trial and be convinced.

D. A. HOWE.

MRS. MORGAN'S

Private School and Kindergarten,

Y. M. C. A. Building, 10 Elm Street.

SPRING TERM (PENS APRIL 6, 1891.)

W. H. TWICHELL,

Gold, Silver and Nickel Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechanic St., Worcester, Mass.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,

BOOK * BINDING

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES

at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,

W. L. BROWN, Manager.

L. J. ZAHONYI,

Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Good to Eat.

Cocoanut Cookies.

One cup sugar, one cup of butter, one-half cup of milk, two eggs, one cup of dessicated cocoanut, one teaspoon baking powder sifted in flour enough to roll, not too stiff. No. 2 one cup of butter, two cups of sugar, one cup of milk, four eggs, one teaspoon of soda, six cups of flour; roll out, sprinkle thick with cocoanut, then roll lightly to press the cocoanut into the dough; cut in any shape desired. Pumpkin Custard.

Cut a pumpkin into inch square pieces, stew slowly until thoroughly cooked, then press through a colander or sieve. To every pint of pumpkin add a piece of butter about twice the size of a walnut, half a teaspoonful of salt (scant), one pint of good milk, half a teaspoon each of mace and cinnamon, one teaspoon of ginger, one cup of sugar, and four well beaten eggs. Bake in a pudding dish, without crust, or in pie-tins with a light crust. Graham Biscuits.

Put one quart of graham flour into a bowl. Rub into it thoroughly two ounces of butter or lard. Add teaspoon of salt and two teaspoons of baking powder. Mix and rub again, until thoroughly blended, then add sufficient milk, about half a pint, to make a soft dough. Turn out on the board, knead lightly, roll into a sheet about three quarters of an inch thick. Cut into biscuits. Place in greased pans and bake in a quick oven twenty minutes.

Oatmeal Flour Gems.

Oatmeal flour one cup, wheat flour one-half cup, one and one half teaspoonfuls baking powder, one egg, one cupful of milk, one half teaspoonful of salt. Sift the oatmeal, wheat-flour, baking powder and salt. Beat the egg and add to the milk; stir into the dry ingredients, and beat well. Bake in hot oven in gem pans.

Raised Oatmeal Biscuit.

Dissolve one rounded tablespoonful of butter in a pint of hot milk; when lukewarm, stir in one and one-half pint of oatmeal flour, and one-half pint of white flour, one well beaten egg, a little salt, one tablespoonful of sugar, one-half yeast cake; work the dough until smooth. In the morning knead well, and roll out half an inch thick, cut into rounds, and bake when light.

Oatmeal Flour Pudding.

Two cups of oatmeal flour, one half-teaspoonful salt, one cup of molasses, one cup of milk, sweet or sour; one cup of chopped raisins, one half cup of sliced citron, one teaspoonful of soda, one egg, steam three hours.

I never yet read a recipe for whipping cream that did not give directions for skimming off the froth as fast as it rises, during the beating process. This makes long and tiresome work of it, and more than all that, it is quite unnecessary.

If the cream is thick and very cold, as it should be, it can be done much more satisfactorily.

Place the cream in a deep bowl with a round bottom, and whip with a large Dover egg beater. Do not skim, but beat briskly, and in the course of from five to ten minutes you will have a quantity of the most delicious whipped cream. If you are obliged to beat it longer it will be because the cream is perhaps a trifle too thin or too warm.

It is quite different from the frothy substance which is constantly skimmed off the cream in the other way of preparing it, and if kept in a cool place, it will remain unchanged for twenty-four hours or longer.

After it is whipped, sweeten to taste with powdered sugar and flavor.

Mary M. Ward.

ALWAYS ON HAND!

VENISON, TURKEYS,
GEESE,

WILD GAME,
CHICKENS,
DUCKS,

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb,

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

EDWARD B. CLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

THE CRITERION

Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

DIAMONDS,

WATCHES,

JEWELRY

At Reasonable Prices.

J. P. WEIXLER, JEWELER,

323 Main St., Mechanics Hall Jewelry Store.

Diamonds, Watches, Sterling Solid Silverware, Rogers' Brother's, 1847, Silver Plated Tableware, Gold and Silver-Headed Umbrellas and Canes, Opera Glasses, Gold Spectacles and Eye-Glasses, Gold Pens and Pencils.

Fine Watch and Jewelry Repairing Done Promptly, in a Thorough Manner, and at Reasonable Prices.

J. P. Weixler,

323 Main Street,

MECHANICS HALL BUILDING.

75 SLEIGHS

AT YOUR OWN PRICE.

Now is the time to buy. Plenty of sleighing ahead. Indications for the next six weeks.

Cold Weather and Snow.

Parties buying now, if they wish, I will store their Sleighs through the Summer free of charge. With some who have no room to store, this an offer worth considering. Buyers should buy now, and save at least 20 per cent.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,
OPP. THE COMMON.

The superiority of

*ROSE CREAM LOTION*

lies in the fact that it contains no Oils or Greasy Substances, no Chemical or Mineral Poisons, and will not injure the most delicate skin. Can be applied at any time; quickly absorbed. Ladies troubled with catchy fingers, working on silk and satin, will find it an excellent remedy. It will not leave the hands sticky.

For Gentlemen's use after shaving it is without an equal.

Try it. Get a

SAMPLE BOTTLE FREE.

Large bottles, 25c. Found in all first-class Drug stores. Prepared by

PERKINS & COMPANY, Sole Proprietors,
Worcester, Mass. BUSH & CO., Wholesale Agents.

STENOGRAPHY, WITH USE OF TYPEWRITER,

In CLASS or PRIVATE lessons. Thorough instruction. Personal attention given each student.

Rates for copying upon application.

MISS M. FRANCES DYER,

(Elevator). The Brunswick, 49 Pleasant St.

C. G. MARCY, BALL ORDERS, PROGRAMMES AND WEDDING INVITATIONS
A SPECIALTY. 398 MAIN ST., COR. PEARL.

ARTISTIC PRINTING.

STARKIE'S DYE HOUSE,

254 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Ladies and Gents' Garments

Dyed and Cleansed

in a Superior Manner.

Tailoring Establishment.

Custom-Made goods at almost Ready-made Rates.

254 MAIN STREET.

Horace Kendall,

DEALER IN

Furniture, Ranges, Carpets

AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Goods sold on instalments if desired. Prices as low as any house in New England.

No. 319 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Mechanics Hall Building.

Household.

Soda Will Save Fuel.

A young friend of mine said to me one day: "We are fond of string beans, and they are the cheapest fresh vegetable one can buy, if only it did not take so long to cook them; but unless I plan to have them on baking or ironing day I cannot afford them. It seems absurd to keep an extra fire for two hours just for a little mess of beans."

Have you had her experience? Try a little soda—just a generous "pinch" of soda for a common mess of beans, put into the water in which you boil them, will cook the toughest beans tender in an hour or less, and detract nothing from their flavor. The same is true of boiled onions, beets, tough meats, etc. In boiling a ham, always parboil in soda water, then take it out, and wash and scrape well, add clear water, and you will be surprised to see how much more sweet and tender your ham will be.

A piece of fresh beef that has lain just long enough to become a trifle suspicious may be so renewed by parboiling in soda water as to be above reproach when placed before the most delicate nostrils. In the case of beef-steak or roast, a thorough rinsing in cold soda water will prove quite effectual, when the taint is so slight as to be wholly on the exposed surface.—Good Housekeeping.

Fever and restlessness in children is frequently caused by indigestion. If you find the skin of the little one hot and dry, recall if you can what she ate for supper. Give the child a warm bath, then give it a cupful of warm water to drink. In a few minutes the undigested food will be thrown off the stomach, and the child will soon be sleeping soundly.

To go back to the arrangement of the table, never be without some ornament for its centre. A common wild fern in a small pot is always pretty, and will last a long time, even if it does grow. A piece of India silk wrapped about the pot itself, gives a pleasant touch of color. Flowers are always suitable and lovely but not always available. Most people have window plants. One of these may be set in a discarded basket, which gilding or bronze powder has reclaimed.

Don't attempt to turn a cake out of a pan till it has stood for about three minutes; then spread a cloth double on the board, take the pan in both hands, hold it down close to the cloth and turn it downwards quickly, letting the edge of the pan touch the board. Move the cake about on the cloth, gently to dry; and when one side is dry, deftly turn it on the other. Never put a cake away till it is quite cool and firm. It is a good plan to wash up all the utensils you have used, while the cake is baking, then you will be on hand to watch it.

If a recipe calls for the use of soda, and you do not have it on hand, do not attempt to use baking powder instead, for the result is ruin.

Never try to patch up a poor fire, and do not use wood to force a defective fire, or your baking will be uneven.

Plunge the stems of wilted and drooping flowers into hot water to about one third their length, taking care that the blossoms are untouched. This process drives the "sap" back into the flowers, and causes them to revive in a short time.

Keep a little beeswax tied up in a cloth to rub your flatirons with, and you will find that even a white shirt to be done up will soon become a pleasant work.

When acid of any kind gets on clothing, use spirits of ammonia to neutralize it, and then apply chloroform to restore the color.

Learning to ride a bicycle is certainly a school of experience, but students do hate the fall term.

OLD SAWS PUT TO USE.

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever," and a well-fitting shoe maketh the foot fine.

Artistic shoes for dress occasions.

"Handsome is that handsome does," and that which makes tired feet comfortable does handsomest of all.

Grover's soft shoes for tender feet, are found only at Mechanics Hall Shoe Store.

"One bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," and a place where you may be sure of getting good shoes which fit nicely and wear well, is not to be forgotten.

Fine custom shoes made to measure.

"Tis not safe to swap horses while crossing a stream," but see that you have a good one before starting in.

An extra pair of good shoes on hand, is never a poor investment.

"He laughs best who laughs last," and they whose feet are nicely and comfortably shod will be sure to laugh at the right time.

Good goods and lowest prices, are sure to please.

"All's well that ends well,"—buy shoes at

Mechanics Hall Shoe Store,

325 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

EZRA A. DAY.

The Readers of Light
I most cordially invite
To call at my

Model Drug Store

When in want of anything
They would expect to find

In a metropolitan establishment of its kind.

Respectfully,

Geo. E. Fairbanks, Druggist,

10 FRONT STREET.

J. W. GREENE, PLUMBER.

Dealer in Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces. Steam and Gas Fitting. Jobbing in all its branches promptly attended to. Telephone Connection. 51 Main Street, Cumming's block.

Worcester Coal Company,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

COAL. COAL.

General office, 18 Pearl St., Y. M. C. A. Building; Yards, 23 Manchester St. and 319 Southbridge St.

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *
NO. 156 MAIN STREET,
H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

FURNITURE AND CARPETS,

355 Main Street, Worcester.

CUT THIS OUT.

The Cheapest Place in Worcester to Buy

FIRST-CLASS
Parlor Furniture.

Plush Parlor Suites, 7 pieces, upholstered by skilled workmen in first-class shape, and we believe them to be the finest Suites ever offered at the price, $50.

Having a large stock of Low and Medium-Priced PARLOR SUITES, our stock of Fine Suites and Odd Pieces, upholstered in Tapestry, Silk Brocatelle, and Plushes in all the new and Latest Styles of upholstery, cannot be excelled at prices from $75 to $225.

OUR RUG PARLOR SUITES
AT $100

are very fine. We have them at lower prices. Also those that cost more money.

We can furnish your house complete with Furniture, Carpets, Crockery and Stoves.

Goods sold on four months' time at cash prices.

PINKHAM & WILLIS,

355 Main Street.

LEICESTER.

By inadvertance the poem read at the birthday party of Miss Jordan was not inserted last week. It is given here in full.

[Commemorative of the birthday of Miss Scelia Jordan February 25, 1891.]

BY GEORGE L. GROUT.

To rejoice and be glad, is the song that we sing,
'Tis the ripening harvest that follows the spring;
We rejoice in this land, the home of our birth
In the friends that we love, and this beautiful earth.

To rejoice and be glad is the song that we sing,
The hearts to make glad is the tribute we bring;
We live for each other, aloud lift the strain
With voices in unison, soft the refrain,
The homes of our childhood, be joyous with mirth,
Be radiant, these moments, 'tis the eve of thy birth.

As dew on the petal the sunlight doth meet,
'Tis thus that we gather, choice friendships to greet,
As companions and classmates unite round the hearth
We'll welcome with joy, this eve of thy birth.

As sunbeam and cloud unite their soft light,
'Tis thus we have gathered, say, didst thou invite?
The loved and the true, dost thou prize their rich worth
As we celebrate this, the eve of thy birth?

As the brooklets that gather and ripple along
In their silvery channels grow wider and strong;
So with hearts all united, in joy and in mirth
We will sing of this day, 'tis the eve of thy birth.

These parents and loved ones who've watched o'er our way,

Oh gather them hither on the eve of this day
And with reverence renew, as we prize their true worth
As we honor this day and the eve of thy birth.

As the season of youth, its pleasures go past
All too bright and enchanting, too precious to last;
"Turn back, oh time in thy flight!" to the hearth
And welcome again the eve of thy birth.

The spring time is with us, oh would it might last
As we dream of the future the present is past;
We live for each other be it sorrow or mirth
As we cling to sweet memories and friendship of earth.

We live for each other, is the song that we sing,
And this be the tribute and joy that we bring;
Be radiant these moments, with love and with mirth
As we welcome this day the eve of thy birth.

And thus we have gathered to bring thee our love,
'Tis the best of our treasure—the gift from above;
And as spring time returns to adorn the bright earth
We'll welcome as ever the eve of thy birth.

Davis Art Company, 18 Pearl street, opposite the Post Office, have sold an unprecedented lot of etchings during the last two weeks, thereby taxing their very best efforts for artistic framing. They have just opened some dainty new designs in cream and gold, the latest New York style. The exhibition of water colors at the Art Students' Club, combined with their late special etching exhibit, has made it necessary to increase help in their work rooms, and add to their stock of mouldings. They hope by personal attention and unique designing to keep pace with Art in all its choicest features. Each day brings some novelty from the hands of local artists, and bits from abroad help to keep alive the interest, to the lovers and patrons of Art.

J. Edward Fuller has decided to risk his fortunes in the boundless west. Success to you. You went through the High School successfully, won honors in the Boston School of Technology and have discharged faithfully the duties laid upon you since. Surely success awaits you in your new field.

Charles H. Stearns, who recently sold his Pleasant street bakery to Charles M. Rogers, was presented, Tuesday evening, by his former employees, with a gold-headed ebony cane. The presentation speech was made by Benjamin F. Barhydt. Mr. Stearns and his wife left yesterday on the Raymond excursion to California.

THE CLARK

SAWYER CO.

478 to 482 Main St.

- Blue Pagoda Decorated Tea Sets,
56 pieces, $2.78
- Decorated English China Tea Sets,
56 pieces, regular price, $9.00, $6.87
- Decorated English China Tea Sets,
56 pieces, regular price, $12.00 $9.99
- Blown Tumblers, 50c. doz
- Vinegar Cruets, 10c. each
- Fairy Night Lamps, 25c. each
- Lummons' Match Safes, 10c. each
- Gold Band Pitchers, 23c. each
- Decorated Salt and Pepper Shakers, 10c. each
- Decorated Oat Meal Bowls, 19c. each
- Majolica Covered Butter, 25c. each
- Decorated China Bowls, 19c. each

THE CLARK-SAWYER CO.

478 TO 482 MAIN STREET.

ELECTRICITY

Never were people more eager to know the latest advances in this great study and never was there a better opportunity to see what can be done by and with it than now.

The Rink is open all the day and far into the night. Careful and watchful attendants are ready to show visitors every attention.

The fathers died too early. They lost all this. What will the people of the future say of us? Can they get as far beyond us as we are ahead of the past?

Every thing that Electricity has been turned to, as yet, is found in the Rink Exhibition.

The building is lighted by Electricity of course thus disclosing the world of wonders that Worcester tradesmen and mechanics have on exhibition.

Down the centre of the room runs the Electric car, Ride on it. Above it floats, on wheels the Electric boat, Ride in it.

The motors are all moving and making things move. One of these days, there will be practicable applications of this principle which will move humanity along mightily.

Dont forget to go up stairs west end and see the map of Lake View.

This is the place where Worcester workingmen are to find homes hereafter. Choose your building lot and then see Mr. Bigelow about it.

He will give you reasonable rates. This exhibition is for instruction and pleasure, you will find both if you visit it.

It's a grand Exhibition, grandly carried out. New things added daily thus far. Tickets of admission include one ride on the Electric Car or Boat.

General Admission, 25c.

Six Tickets for $1.

Children, 15c.

Ten for $1.

Death of Watson L. Wood.

Watson L. Wood, the father of C. W. Wood, the well known lawyer, passed away suddenly at his home in Geneseo, Ill., on Friday night. As soon as the sad news reached Mr. Wood he telegraphed to have the body brought to Worcester. The deceased was for many years a citizen of Worcester, and will be pleasantly remembered by those who recall his familiar figure. He was born in Woodstock, Vt., and when but a lad of 17 came to Worcester, without any money, to push his way to business success. He began life by engaging as a laborer on the old Moore Farm, which was situated opposite the present site of Trinity Church. After working here for five years he went to work with Eli Goulding in his brick yard and learned to manufacture bricks, establishing himself independently in business in 1845. His yard was a portion of the old Paine estate just off Lincoln street, and his residence for a number of years was at 183 Lincoln street, in the old white house now occupied by Principal E. Harlow Russell of the State Normal School. Before starting in business for himself he married in 1839. Two children were born of this marriage, Lizzie Wood in 1842, who passed away last year, and C. W. Wood in 1844. Mr. Wood moved to Burncoat street in 1855, where he purchased a farm and continued in business until 1886, when he went west. Mr. Wood married a second time, and this wife survives him. Mr. Wood furnished the bricks out of which Mechanics Hall was constructed, and also those for several of the school buildings. These will remain as a monument to a self-made man.—Spy Feb. 23

The remains of Mr. Wood reached this city Thursday the 26th, and his funeral was held at his son's residence, 20 Belmont St. on the following day at 11 a.m. Dr. Wm. H. Thomas of Trinity gave a timely and touching address, concerning the aged man who had made his last journey back from the west to sleep in New England. The burial was in Rural Cemetery.

Peter C. Bacon.

Had Worcester's distinguished lawyer lived in the days of Cicero, the latter had found another example for his De Senectute, for Mr. Bacon, in the later years of his life, he lived to be more than eighty years old, took up the study of mathematics in the shape of Differential and Integral Calculus. In his college days, at Brown, little stress was laid upon this branch and, consequently, the study was new to him; but he none the less mastered it. The immediate reason for his taking up the study was his having a case of inchoate right of dower, a wife being older than her husband. His query was as to the value of that right. To find an answer, he sought a mathematical friend, who assured him that there was a value and showed him how and where it might be found. He proceeded to buy books upon the subject and so thoroughly did he study, that he acquired an excellent knowledge. At times, a friend assisted some; but the work was his. This is an excellent illustration of the will and determination of the man.

When a man, sixty or past, was asked why, at that age, he undertook the study of law, he replied, "That I might acquire it the sooner." "Never too late to mend" nor to learn.

Mudge—"You don't catch me getting up with the lark any more." Yabsley—"That's what I said. I tried it one day last week and everyone I met thought I had been out on a bat."

The United States Marine Corps was established in Revolutionary times. Congress in November, 1775, authorized the enlistment of two battalions of marines.

Glycerine was discovered by Scheele about 1779, and termed by him the "sweet principle of fats," and further studied by Chevreul, termed the "father of the fatty acids."

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

Already!

Though the snow falls constantly and easily, yet the ladies are looking at and buying Tennis Flannels.

The first lots from abroad tell the story of new combinations that are very, very nice.

Especially is this true of the Anderson Tennis Costume Flannels. Some of them are in the most delicate hair line stripes of various colors, while others are in pronounced shades in stripes and plaids.

The most beautiful, though, are the new English Tennis Costume Cloths, with the loveliest combination of dainty silken stripes, or plaids formed of silken bars.

These exquisite goods and the Anderson beauties cost 62½c a yard.

We have Tennis Flannels, though, low as 25c, 33c, 37c, 42c, 50c.

The Tray Cloths, nice and fine, at 10c each, are exactly what the ladies want. The miserable day, recently could not stop the interest in them.

At the medium dress goods section there's a beauty for a little.

All Wool and a yard wide Flannels in spring weights. This grade and quality last year cost you 37c a yard, but somehow or other this year, 25c is all that you have to pay for them.

You will like these flannels, and they will give you excellent service.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

NEW YORK

Dry Goods Store,

234 and 238 Main St.

1 Case Scotch Ginghams, worth 25c per yd., for 12 1-2 per yd.

1 Case Indigo Prints, worth 8c per yd., 6 1-2 per yd.

1 Case Fancy Shirting Cambrics, worth 7c per yd., for 5c per yd.

1 Case Fancy Percales, worth 12 1-2c per yd., for 10c per yd.

1 Case Best Ginghams, worth 12 1-2c, for 10c per yd.

3 Cases Unbleached Sheeting, 15 yds. for $1.

2 Cases "Fruit of the Loom," 12 yds for $1.

Z. F. Little & Co.,

234 and 238 MAIN ST.

❖ * WHITNEY'S * LINEN * STORE. * ❖

HANDKERCHIEFS

Ladies' Colored,
Bordered,
Hemstitched,

For FEBRUARY
SALE.

* * * *

Handkerchiefs marked down from $3 per dozen to 12 1-2 each.

Whitney's Linen Store

TEMPLE PLACE, BOSTON.

The Week.

CITY.

Feb. 27—Funeral of Solon Bartlett at 22 Lancaster street. Burial in Boylston.

Watson L. Wood buried from the home of his son, Charles W., 20 Belmont street.

Rev James J. Doyle died yesterday in Denver. Colorado. A good life ended early.

Delia Brow run down at Plymouth street crossing.

28—A mania for poisoning dogs prevalent especially at Lake View. Hydrophobia inverted.

Mar. 1—Ex-Mayor Winslow sixty-four years old today.

The 2d W. C. T. U. hold consecration meeting in their new restaurant, 245 Front street.

2—W. A. Denholm dies at his home, 18 West street; fifty-four years.

Edwin Conant of 12 State street dies; eighty years.

3—School Committee vote to allow Prof. Boas to measure school children.

Classmates of '79, W. H. S., meet to take action on the death of the Rev. James H. Doyle.

4—So much snow that nothing could happen. The measuring edict of the School Committee the chief thing talked about.

5—Funerals of Rev. James H. Doyle, Mr. W. A. Denholm and Edwin Conant, Esq.

Alumni of Polytechnic meet and organize. They wish to be incorporated.

COUNTY.

Feb. 26—Brookfield raided by burglars during the snow storm.

Rev. Fr. McCoy of Westboro, ill.

Big No License meeting in Milford.

A. W. Edson of the State Board addresses Rutland farmers concerning school supervision. Also, J. B. Knox of Worcester gives Army Reminiscences.

27—Christian Crusaders flourishing in Spencer.

28—Henry C. Knowlton dies in Gardner. Prominent business man.

Railroad smash-up on the B. & A. near Rochdale.

Mar. 1—Charles Hudson dies of heart disease in Clinton; sixty-five years.

C. A. Denny and wife of Leicester start for the South.

2—Town meeting day throughout the county. No license still ahead.

3—Alvin T. Currier dies in Whitinsville; fifty-nine years.

Congregational Church in Shrewsbury rededicated.

4—Harrison Howe dies in Gardner; seventy-two years.

Albert Goodrich dies in Clinton; seventy-four years.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Kelley celebrate fiftieth anniversary of marriage.

COMMONWEALTH.

Feb. 27—Parker Pillsbury of New Hampshire talks to Liberal Union Club in Boston on Anti-Slavery. Almost a voice from the tombs.

Annual meeting of the Longfellow Memorial Association. Progress reported. The body is flourishing.

The Legislation proposes to "sit down" on junketing.

St. Paul's in Boston votes not to sell property. The landmark will stand.

28—Master Workman John McCarthy, K. of L. 240, arrested in Lynn, for conspiracy. The first arrest of the kind ever made in the state.

Bishop Paddock of Boston seriously ill.

Mar. 1—Arrest of a gang of opium smugglers in Boston.

Union memorial services for Porter and Sherman in East Boston.

2—Warden Lovering will discharge several guards at the Charlestown prison.

3—Legislature does not rule junketing out. Too bad!

Governor Russell has a son born to him. Doubtless the lad will make just as much noise as any other baby. He is a Russeller to begin with.

Governor Russell sends special message to Legislature on the evils of the Sweating system. "High as Heaven his name we'll shout" if he succeeds in doing away with the Devilish practice.

4—Biennial sessions defeated in the House. Abolition of Poll Tax passes. Now if the "poor" citizen can sell his vote, there will be nothing lacking to make him happy.

5—Judge Robert C. Pitman of the Superior Court dies in Newton; sixty-five years.

NATION.

Feb. 27—Senator Henry W. Blair of New Hampshire nominated as Minister to China. Confirmed at once.

New York Central R. R. blockaded by ice. Unparalleled.

Yuma, Ari., destroyed by floods.

28—Senator George Hearst of California dies in Washington; seventy-one years. Brights disease and heart trouble.

Leprosy fully developed in New Orleans. Direct Tax bill passes the Senate.

Ex-Mayor Hart nominated for the Boston Post-mastership. He was at once confirmed. Of Course Boston will now get Harty, good usage.

Wm. W. Doherty nominated to succeed United States Marshall Lovering.

Mar. 1—"Puck" Meyer's ashes scattered to the winds from the top of the Statue of Liberty, New York.

Senator Manderson of Nebraska to succeed Ingalls as president of the Senate.

2—Public debt increasing. Philadelphia will have a new mint building.

General observance among Methodists of the centennial of John Wesley's death.

3—Prospect that the French Spoilation bills will be paid.

Congress votes $50,000 for Oklahoma sufferers. The boomers have become bummers and beggars.

4—Congress adjourns, Speaker not able to read his title clear. Democrats objected. Never mind. He will pick his flint and try again.

Mrs. W. H. Stoddard, once principal of Mt. Holyoke Seminary, died in Northampton; seventy years.

President signs Copyright bill. The Vassar heirs and college compromise.

5—Muddle over the Governor in Connecticut thicker than ever.

Governor Hill of New York continues to make himself arbiter in Connecticut affairs. What a Hill!

WORLD.

Feb. 27—Lady Russel wishes to be divorced from Lord Russel. What noble men!

Emperor William incensed because his secretary talks.

Ex-Empress Frederick leaves Paris, almost in disguise. There is no end of trouble in store for Europe yet.

28—Paris still in commotion over the recent visit of Ex-Empress Frederick. What has become of French politeness?

And now French artists will not exhibit in Berlin. How spiteful.

Mar. 1—War clouds lowering over Europe. France and Germany very restive. Russia seeking to weld Finland more closely to herself. Trouble brewing.

Canada in a tumult over coming election. New York, at last, decides to start on the Grant monument.

2—The Pope congratulated on his eightieth birthday.

Statue to the memory of John Wesley unveiled in front of City Road Chapel, London.

3—Osman Digma making his way towards Berber.

4—British Steamer Victoria abandoned in Firth of Portland.

Leonard W. Jerome, an American resident in England, and father-in-law of Randolph Churchill, dies in Brighton; seventy-three years.

5—Canada still votes Conservative; but by a reduced majority.

Strong opposition to the nomination of Sir Charles W. Dilke from all quarters.

Sat Under The Sign.

He was a real pretty young man, and he was gotten up in the highest style of art. He sat in the cable car, next to the stove, and regarded with evident admiration a pair of very positive, very large checked and very new trousers, which he pulled up carefully at the knees to prevent any tendency to bagging.

The car rattled and clattered along, and all the passengers gazed in upward vacancy, as all cable car passengers do. Finally a fair maiden who sat opposite the young man saw something and giggled after the fashion of her kind. Then she looked at the nice young man and giggled again, then she nudged her fair companion, and the fair companion gazed across the car, looked at the young man's head, and then snorted. All this annoyed the nice young man, who had been looking very wise, and when two or three other passengers joined in the chorus he began to wriggle and quit looking wise. The laughing increased and grew and spread, and the nice young man grew desperate. He got up to see what it was over his head that caused the unseemly cachinnation. He found it. It was one of those big cardboard signs that adorn cable cars. It was printed in black letters, and it read:

"The young man sitting beneath this car is one of our customers. He is very fussy and hard to please, but my! isn't he elegantly dressed? he has on a pair of our $3 pants."

The nice young man left the car, left it in haste, in anger, leaving behind him some very naughty words that smelled of sulphur.—Kansas City Globe.

Worcester had a like incident, when one of the most immaculately dressed young men in the city walked down Maple Street with one of Barnaby's placards hooked to his back with this inscription. "This suit was bought at Barnaby's for $3.75." It was a fellow High School pupil who put it on. The delight of the youngsters was great; but the victim's wrath was direful.

School and College.

Polytechnic Institute.

The Camera Club held its bi-weekly meeting last Saturday evening at Boynton Hall, instead of as usual at the Y. M. C. A. building. But little business was transacted, the evening being spent in experimenting with flash light photos. Each member brought with him his camera and took and developed two pictures. Several members of the club have been practising lately with silhouettes with varying success.

A meeting of the board of editors of the W. P. L., was held Tuesday. Michael J. Leyden was elected an editor from the Middle Class. No action was taken regarding the election of a representative from the Apprentice Class, this being left until the new management of the paper takes place in April.

The petition which was to be presented to the Faculty, asking for the April vacation to begin one week later, has evidently gone the way of other enterprises which are set on foot, for instance the subscription for the purchase of a new flag, and the project of choosing a school pin.

The Senior class was occupied last Saturday, in conducting a test of the efficiency of the boiler in the Salisbury Laboratories.

The class is enjoying a good laugh at the expense of one of its number who was beaten at his own game. It seems there was an old piece of hose lying about, and he conceived the idea of passing it through an opening in the floor, going down stairs and holding one end to his victims ear, whilst a confederate was to shout through the other end. Arrangements were soon made, and our friend having duly adjusted the pipe to the ear of one of the workmen in the employ of the institute, whom he wished to astonish, gave the signal to go-ahead. But it so happened that there was a joker at each end of the line, and the one upstairs carefully connected his end of the hose to a faucet. When then No. 1 gave the signal, he was to say the least, most suddenly surprised and chagrined to see a good sized stream of water take the machinist in the head. The excitement which ensued, was quelled by the professor in charge appearing on the scene, and allowing the would be joker to become a minus quantity for the remainder of the day.

The Apprentice Class seems to have an unusual amount of enterprise. Although scarcely six weeks in the school, its members are organizing a musical club, and one rehearsal of the orchestra connected with it, has already been held. No officers have as yet been elected as the project has not taken definite enough form. The orchestra however at present consists of C. N. Chambers, leader, 'cello; E. L. Burdick, piano; E. W. Davenport, flute; R. W. Emerson, 1st violin, L. V. Magaw, 2nd violin, and W. J. Baldwin, cornet. Beside these, the class contains a considerable amount of banjo and guitar material.

The Historical Society held its regular meeting last Thursday. The subjects of the essays read were taken from early English history.

Lake '90, the well known foot ball man of Harvard, paid the school a short visit Saturday.

Mount Holyoke.

Amherst Glee and Banjo Club gave a concert in the College Chapel Tuesday evening. Previous to the concert between the hours of half past seven and nine they were tendered a reception by the Sophomore class. The reception rooms were beautifully decorated in class colors of pink and white, and the soft light from under many pink shades fell upon as pretty a scene as the college ever witnessed. The windows and mantles were banked with palms and ferns: cosy corners were furnished with tete-a-tete chairs and inviting divans. The president, Mrs. Mead, assisted in receiving and with her charming manners and infinitely tact won the hearts of all the guests. On entering the gentlemen were presented with boutoniers of pink and white carnations. To assist the young men, young in their collection of "memory bells," and to save them their usual inconvenience of having to select bric-a-brac of chair tassels, tidies, etc., a table was amply supplied with suitable souvenirs of the occasion. Dainty refreshments in pink and white were served throughout the evening. The concert began at nine o'clock and their new programme was well rendered and thoroughly enjoyed by a large audience, especially a solo by Mr. Walter Hildreth.

Dr. McCullagh lectured last Friday evening before the young ladies, in a highly interesting and intellectual style.

Latin Fun.

Sic transit drove a tu ponc tandem temo ver from the north. He is visiting his ante, Mrs. Dido Edux, and intends stopping here until ortum. He et super with us last evening, and is a terrible fello. He lambda man almost to death the other evening, but he got his match, —the other man cutis nos off and noctem flat urna flounder.

Queer.

Statistics figure out strange results. The American Almanac for 1835 has two pages of tables carefully reckoning the value of a wife's right of dower according to the ages of herself and husband. These range from 16 to 90 years for the wife and from 22 to 84 for the husband. Of course, if the husband is the older the value of the wife's interest in his estate is supposed to be greater. If she be 16 and he 84 her right is worth $22.10 on the $100, On the contrary, if she be 90 and he 22, her right of dower has still a value, viz., 11 cents on the $100. Actuaries compile queer data.

Nice Cake.

Beat one-half pound of butter to a cream, add to it, by degrees, one-half pound of powdered loaf sugar and one pound of flour; when these are well mixed, add four eggs well beaten, yolks and whites separately, and half a pint of sweet milk; beat all well together, flavor with a few drops of essence of rataña, and bake in a buttered mold in a moderate oven for an hour.

COMING EVENTS.

(LIGHT solicits notices of future events for this column. They should be sent as early in the week as possible.)

Saturday, March 7.

RINK.—Electrical exhibition.

NATURAL HISTORY HALL.—Class in entomology for beginners, 2 30 p.m. Meeting of Volapuk Club, 7 30 p.m.

Sunday, Mar. 8.

Y. M. C. A.—Morning prayer meeting, 9.15 a.m. Boys' meeting 3 p.m., Men's meeting, 4 p.m.

GRACE CHURCH.—Union meeting of Women's Foreign Missionary societies of Methodist churches of this city, 3 p.m.

Monday, Mar. 9.

Meeting of Women's Educational Circle with Mrs. Lane, 56 Orange street, 7.30 p.m.

RINK.—Electrical exhibition.

NATURAL HISTORY HALL.—Class for beginners in Volapuk, 7.30 p.m. Meeting of Higginson Botanical Club, 7.30 p.m.

CURTIS HALL.—Coffee party of the First Presbyterian church, 7.30 p.m.

Tuesday, Mar. 10.

GRANGE HALL.—Meeting of Worcester Grange, conferring of first and second degree, 7.45 p.m.

RINK.—Electrical exhibition.

NATURAL HISTORY HALL.—Class in osteology, and anatomy, 7.30 p.m. Meeting of Ridgway Ornithological Club, 7.30 p.m.

KNIGHTS OF HONOR HALL.—Third Anniversary of Worcester Assembly No. 152, R. S. G. F., entertainment by Ideal Concert Company, 8 p.m.

CURTIS HALL.—Coffee party of the First Presbyterian church, 7.30 p.m.

OLD SOUTH CHURCH.—Supper and Social of Ladies Benevolent Society, 7.30 p.m.

GRACE CHURCH.—Milk-maids drill, 8 p.m.

PARK CHURCH.—C supper, 8 p.m.

Wednesday, Mar. 11.

RINK.—Electrical exhibition.

NATURAL HISTORY HALL.—Class in comparative anatomy for beginners, 3 p.m. Class in elementary botany, 3 p.m.

HORTICULTURAL HALL.—Concert and dance of 'Triumph Circle, Good Will Lodge of Odd Ladies, 8 p.m.

COLONIAL HALL.—Recital by pupils of the School of English Speech 8 p.m.

Thursday, March 12.

RINK.—Electrical exhibition.

NATURAL HISTORY ROOMS.—Class in animal histology 8 p.m.

HORTICULTURAL HALL.—Meeting of Worcester County Horticultural Society, paper by Mrs. Fannie A. Dean of Edgartown on "The Columbian Discovery—Its benefits to Horticulture," followed by discussion, 2.30 p.m.

ALL SAINTS CHURCH.—Preaching by Rev. W. B. Frisby, of the Church of Advent, Boston, 7.30 p.m.

ASSOCIATION HALL.—Stereopticon views and ballads on "The Home of Evangeline," 8 p.m.

Friday, Mar. 13.

RINK.—Electrical exhibition.

NATURAL HISTORY HALL.—Meeting of Brewster Ornithological Club 7.30 p.m.

SALEM ST. CONG. CHURCH.—Lecture by Rev. I. J. Lansing on "Vocal Training—Things to be learned and unlearned," 7.45 p.m.

KNIGHTS OF HONOR HALL.—Celebration of third anniversary of Worcester Assembly of Good Fellows, 8 p.m.

ESTEY'S DINING ROOMS.—Reunion and supper of Co. D, 4th Mass. Heavy Artillery, 8 p.m.

Saturday, Mar. 14.

NATURAL HISTORY HALL.—Class in entomology, 2.30 p.m. Meeting of Volapuk Club, 7.30 p.m.

RINK.—Electrical exhibition.

WORCESTER OXYGEN COMPANY.

Dr. J. W. Gould and T. D. Bristol, M. D., have opened elegant quarters for the dispensation of Compound Oxygen in Rooms 10 and 11, Lincoln House Block. They have decided to place the price of tickets entitling the holder to one months' treatment at $10, until May 1st. Entrance 368½ Main St., or 1 Elm and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than at

ORDER NOW

EVANS & COMPANY,
Manufacturers of
Fine Monumental Work,
131 Central Street, near Summer.

Steinway PIANOS

The recognized Standard Pianos of the world; pre-eminently the Best Instruments at present made: exported to and sold in all art centers of the globe: preferred for public and private use by the greatest living artists.

Kranich & Bach Faultless Pianos

24,000 made and sold and not a dissatisfied customer.

Haines Brothers' Superb Upright PIANOS.

The Best Upright Piano at a reasonable price in the market. The favorite Piano of Mme. Adelina Patti and other noted artists.

C. L. GORHAM & CO.,

454 MAIN ST., Worcester, Mass.

About Folks.

The first grand concert and ball of Wachusett Encampment of Odd Fellows held at Horticultural Hall last week Friday evening was a splendid success. The attendance was large and select. Putnam and Babcock's Orchestra furnished the music and Estey provided the supper at his dining rooms.

A party of friends surprised Mr. M. B. Walls at his home, 182 Main street, last week Friday evening and presented him with a writing desk, Mrs. M. P. Higgins making the presentation with an original poem. It was Mr. Walls' thirty-ninth birthday.

Poe's Raven in the last Fitchburg Town Talk croaks a fine tribute to Charles S. Chapin, the High School principal, whom Worcester reared and furnished to our sister city. Mr. Raven you know a good thing when you see it.

The Norwalk Hour (Conn.) has a tender, sympathetic and appreciative notice of Frank P. Thomas of that city who died on Feb. 12th, of consumption. He was the son of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Thomas of Worcester. For five weeks before his death his sufferings were intense, but he bore them with Christian resignation. The Hour says: "A young man of keenest intellect and unusual intelligence he clung to life with the utmost tenacity until within the past few weeks, when he has longed and prayed for the happy release. The young wife, with mother and father, and all the bereaved family, will receive the prayerful sympathy of a large circle of sympathizing friends."

Mr. E. I. Comins, so long the principal of the Woodland Street School, has sufficiently recovered from his recent illness to warrant his going south. He and his wife have gone to Washington, whence they go to Durham, N. C., where they will make quite a stop.

Plymouth Church vestry Thursday evening, Feb. 26, was the scene of a very pretty entertainment, given by the King's Daughters of the Friday Lend-A-Hand Club, which is not, as generally supposed, an organization connected with Plymouth Church, but is composed of young ladies representing various denominations. At eight o'clock the curtain rose, showing a platform tastefully arranged, palms forming the chief feature of the decoration. The entertainment was based on the Oriental scenes in the Bible. The program was as follows: Series of tableaux to be guessed by the audience—The Sweeper, Miss Margaret Dickinson, The Widow's Mite, Miss Jennie Ballou, Hagar and Ishmael, Miss Edna Thayer and Freddie Miller; The widow and Elijah—widow, Miss Carrie Stockwell, Elijah, Miss Margaret Dickinson; reading—Jephtha's Daughter, Miss Lillian Denny; tableau—Jephtha's Daughter, Miss Fannie Day; Song—He was Despised, Miss Edith Smith; Tableau, Faith, Hope, Charity—Faith, Miss Elizabeth Boyd, Hope, Miss Fannie Day, Charity, Miss Myra Thayer; reading—Healing of Jairus Daughter, Miss Edna Thayer; tableau—Esther and the King, Esther, Miss Maud Howe, King, Miss Florence Syvret; tableau—Rebecca at the Well, Miss Ada Carter; reading—Parable of the Ten Virgins, Miss Edna Thayer; chorus—The Ten Virgins; song—Too Late, Miss Anna Smith; reading—"Healing of the Lepers" from Ben Hur, Miss Lillian Denny; tableau from Ruth—Naomi, Miss Syvret, Ruth, Miss Boyd, Orpha, Miss Denny; solos from Cantata of Ruth, Miss Anna Smith, Mrs. Briggs, Miss M. E. Whipple. During the evening there was an intermission, during which Misses Stockwell and Marvin served the audience to home made candies, and Misses Day and Keith supplied cocoa and Russian tea.

ESTEY

Pianos and Organs

Richardson Piano Comp'y,

42 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

WORCESTER

Illuminated Advertising Company,

General Office, 311 Main St., Room 13,

C. E. SQUIER. F. H. BEALS.

Advertisements Artistically Displayed by a powerful Electric Light upon 600 Square feet of Canvas.

DISPLAY:

Worcester, opposite Mechanics Hall.
Springfield, opposite Opera House.
Providence, Turk's Head

WHENEVER GOOD

Eatables

are desired they will always

be found at

Eben W. Hoxie's,

305 and 816--818 Main Street.

A. S. NEWCOMB,

Market and Oyster House,

Fish of all kinds. Planter and Shipper Choice Grade of Oysters. Telephone connection 206-2.

223 MAIN ST., WORCESTER, MASS.

Worcester Dress Cutting School,
45 Pleasant St.,

For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circulars.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H. Howland, D. D. S.

Dentists. 11 Pleasant St., Worcester, Mass.

Residence, 61 West Street.

W. A. ENGLAND,

DEALER IN

FINE WATCHES,
CLOCKS, JEWELRY
& OPTICAL GOODS.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.

394 Main Street.

J. B. Woodworth,

* ARCHITECT *

492 Main St., Worcester

THE BOSTON HERALD

Is clean, reliable, independent, bright. The best newspaper for the family.

Subscription 50 cents a month, postage paid.

LARGEST CIRCULATION

A pamphlet of information and abstract of the laws, showing How to Obtain Patents, Caveats, Trade Marks, Copyrights, sent free. Address MUNN & CO. 361 Broadway, New York.

VOLAPÜK.

(All Volapük words used here have been given in former numbers of the LIGHT.)

Sugiv mälid.

Volapük labom a durative mood kel no binom found in Neljapük (English.) Dlinob miligi. I am drinking milk now.

In order to express the idea that I am in the habit of drinking milk, we add tonab i to tense arguments, or the adverb ai immediately after the verb.

Aidlinob miligi u dlinob ai miligi. I am in the habit of drinking milk. Tonab at can be added to any of the tense arguments to show duration.

Aoigolob al jul u ägolob ai al jul. I will go to school. (meaning habitually.) Eijutil pledömis u ejutil ai pledömis.

You have usually enjoyed playthings. Oilabot sauni gudik u olabot ai sauni gudik. You will have good health.

This durative form must be used wherever there is an idea of continued action, consequently all phrases of general application must be so expressed.

Pen aibinom (u binom ai) stenüdikum ka glaf.

The pen is mightier than the sword. Pök pekoeföl aibinom (u binom ai) pelafad-euyöföl.

Fault confessed is half redressed. Flen in ned, vo aibinom (u binom ai) flen.

A friend in need is a friend indeed. This durative form cannot be used with the negative, the adverb being used in its place.

Dlinom nevelo miligi. He never drinks milk. Kosien badik nedom nevelo kusadeli.

A bad conscience need no accuser. The durative ai is prefixed to relative pronouns to indicate ever, soever.

Aikel, whoever. Aikelos, whatsoever. Aikelüp, whenever.

To ladyekabids, aiceinöl, ever changing; to ladyeks, aifagik, far reaching; to adverbs, ailiko, howsoever.

Interrogatories are shown dub pronouns kim u kif? who? kis? what? ladyeks, kiom? kiof? kios? which? what?

From these we obtain. Kimik? what kind of? Kiöp? where? Kimiko? in what manner? Kiüp? when? Kimna? How many times? Kikod? Why? Kim binols? Who are you? Kif binofs? Who are they? (feminine)

Kis binos? What is it? Pulas kiom binom dutlik? Which of the boys is diligent? Podi kiom egivol mote? Which apple have you given to mother? Jipuli kiof löfom? Which girl does he love? Labom jisonis fol, kiofi osumol? He has four daughters, which will you take? Buk kimik elemol? What kind of a book have you bought? Odunol kimiko atosi? In what manner will you do this? Ekömol kimna al domc at? You have come how many times to this house?

Kiöp hat binom? Where is hat? Kiüp ogolol? When will you go? Kikod edunol atosi? Why have you done this? When these are not used the silab li is prefixed or suffixed to verb to indicate interrogation.

Vom li löfof man? Does the woman love the man? Li ägolom al fanön fiti? Has he gone to catch fish? Li can be placed before nouns or adjectives a. s.

Ligletik binom dom? How tall is the house? Li Charles? Charles?

When it is used with the impersonal verb it must be the full adverb liko. Liko binos? How is it? Liko tötos? How it thunders? Liko nifos? How it snows? Simple assent is si, yes. Intensified assent is leno, yes indeed. Simple negation is no, no. Intensified negation is leno, not at all. Negative interrogative is no, li. Li labol buki? Si. Do you have the book? Yes. No labob buki. I have not the book. Leno binom gitik. Indeed it is not right. Man no, li milagon nati? Does not the man admire nature? When the object of the verb is a pronoun in the third person, taking place of the subject, it must be rendered by ok called the reflexive pronoun.

A Sagom oke. He said to himself. A Sagom ome. He says to him (some one else.) Vatukom oki. He washes himself. Ok is sometimes put between the root and pronoun. Vatükokof. She washes herself. But it is simpler and better understood by all nations to use separately and decline. Logob obi (u oki) I see myself. Hetofs okis. They hate themselves. Hetofs, ofis. They hate them (others.) Ekanitof oke. She has sung to herself. When myself etc., is simply emphatic, it is the word to use. Läds it desidofs golön. The women themselves desire to go. Reciprocal idea is shown by adjective balvotik each other, or adverb balvoto. Logoms balvotiki } They see each other. Logofs balvoto } Sagofs balvotike } They say to each other. Sagofs balvoto }

The relative pronoun is kel, who, which, what, and takes the pronoun endings kelom, kelof, kelos. Vom, kelofi elogol. The woman whom you have seen. Elogob mani, kel äpenom buki at. I have seen the man who wrote this book. Pened olik, kel pegetom. Your letter which has been received. Aobinom balid, kel ogekömom. He willthe first who will return. Bad, keli mans dunoms lifom pas oms. The evil which men do lives after them. Mans anik, kels äbinoms us, äililoms osi. A few men who were there heard it. Läd e vümadog, kelis elogobs. Lady and lapdog whom we have seen. Kelof sagof atosí no binof flen obik. Who says this, she is not my friend.

When a wheel is in motion, does the top move faster than the bottom? Nine people out of ten, says an exchange, would cry nonsense at the mere question. Both the top and the bottom of the wheel must of necessity, it would seem, be moving forward at one and the same rate—i. e., the speed at which the carriage is travelling. Not so, however, as a little reflection would convince you. The top is moving in the direction of the wheel's motion of translation, while the bottom is moving in opposition to this motion. In other words, the top is moving forwards in the same direction in which the carriage is progressing, while the bottom is moving backward, or in the opposite direction. That is why an instantaneous photograph of a carriage in motion shows the upper part of the wheel a confused blur, while the spokes in the lower part are distinctly visible.

When it is used with the impersonal verb it must be the full adverb liko.

Liko binos? How is it? Liko tötos? How it thunders? Liko nifos? How it snows?

Simple assent is si, yes. Intensified assent is leno, yes indeed. Simple negation is no, no.

Intensified negation is leno, not at all. Negative interrogative is no, li. Li labol buki? Si.

Do you have the book? Yes. No labob buki. I have not the book.

Leno binom gitik. Indeed it is not right. Man no, li milagon nati? Does not the man admire nature?

When the object of the verb is a pronoun in the third person, taking place of the subject, it must be rendered by ok called the reflexive pronoun.

A Sagom oke. He said to himself. A Sagom ome. He says to him (some one else.) Vatukom oki. He washes himself. Ok is sometimes put between the root and pronoun.

Vatükokof. She washes herself. But it is simpler and better understood by all nations to use separately and decline.

Logob obi (u oki) I see myself. Hetofs okis. They hate themselves. Hetofs, ofis. They hate them (others.) Ekanitof oke. She has sung to herself. When myself etc., is simply emphatic, it is the word to use.

Läds it desidofs golön. The women themselves desire to go. Reciprocal idea is shown by adjective balvotik each other, or adverb balvoto.

Logoms balvotiki } They see each other. Logofs balvoto } Sagofs balvotike } They say to each other. Sagofs balvoto }

The relative pronoun is kel, who, which, what, and takes the pronoun endings kelom, kelof, kelos.

Vom, kelofi elogol. The woman whom you have seen. Elogob mani, kel äpenom buki at. I have seen the man who wrote this book. Pened olik, kel pegetom. Your letter which has been received. Aobinom balid, kel ogekömom. He willthe first who will return. Bad, keli mans dunoms lifom pas oms. The evil which men do lives after them. Mans anik, kels äbinoms us, äililoms osi. A few men who were there heard it. Läd e vümadog, kelis elogobs. Lady and lapdog whom we have seen. Kelof sagof atosí no binof flen obik. Who says this, she is not my friend.

When a wheel is in motion, does the top move faster than the bottom? Nine people out of ten, says an exchange, would cry nonsense at the mere question. Both the top and the bottom of the wheel must of necessity, it would seem, be moving forward at one and the same rate—i. e., the speed at which the carriage is travelling. Not so, however, as a little reflection would convince you. The top is moving in the direction of the wheel's motion of translation, while the bottom is moving in opposition to this motion. In other words, the top is moving forwards in the same direction in which the carriage is progressing, while the bottom is moving backward, or in the opposite direction. That is why an instantaneous photograph of a carriage in motion shows the upper part of the wheel a confused blur, while the spokes in the lower part are distinctly visible.

When myself etc., is simply emphatic, it is the word to use.

Läds it desidofs golön. The women themselves desire to go. Reciprocal idea is shown by adjective balvotik each other, or adverb balvoto.

Logoms balvotiki } They see each other. Logofs balvoto } Sagofs balvotike } They say to each other. Sagofs balvoto }

The relative pronoun is kel, who, which, what, and takes the pronoun endings kelom, kelof, kelos.

Vom, kelofi elogol. The woman whom you have seen. Elogob mani, kel äpenom buki at. I have seen the man who wrote this book. Pened olik, kel pegetom. Your letter which has been received. Aobinom balid, kel ogekömom. He willthe first who will return. Bad, keli mans dunoms lifom pas oms. The evil which men do lives after them. Mans anik, kels äbinoms us, äililoms osi. A few men who were there heard it. Läd e vümadog, kelis elogobs. Lady and lapdog whom we have seen. Kelof sagof atosí no binof flen obik. Who says this, she is not my friend.

When myself etc., is simply emphatic, it is the word to use.

Läds it desidofs golön. The women themselves desire to go. Reciprocal idea is shown by adjective balvotik each other, or adverb balvoto.

Logoms balvotiki } They see each other. Logofs balvoto } Sagofs balvotike } They say to each other. Sagofs balvoto }

The relative pronoun is kel, who, which, what, and takes the pronoun endings kelom, kelof, kelos.

Vom, kelofi elogol. The woman whom you have seen. Elogob mani, kel äpenom buki at. I have seen the man who wrote this book. Pened olik, kel pegetom. Your letter which has been received. Aobinom balid, kel ogekömom. He willthe first who will return. Bad, keli mans dunoms lifom pas oms. The evil which men do lives after them. Mans anik, kels äbinoms us, äililoms osi. A few men who were there heard it. Läd e vümadog, kelis elogobs. Lady and lapdog whom we have seen. Kelof sagof atosí no binof flen obik. Who says this, she is not my friend.

When myself etc., is simply emphatic, it is the word to use.

Läds it desidofs golön. The women themselves desire to go. Reciprocal idea is shown by adjective balvotik each other, or adverb balvoto.

Logoms balvotiki } They see each other. Logofs balvoto } Sagofs balvotike } They say to each other. Sagofs balvoto }

The relative pronoun is kel, who, which, what, and takes the pronoun endings kelom, kelof, kelos.

Vom, kelofi elogol. The woman whom you have seen. Elogob mani, kel äpenom buki at. I have seen the man who wrote this book. Pened olik, kel pegetom. Your letter which has been received. Aobinom balid, kel ogekömom. He willthe first who will return. Bad, keli mans dunoms lifom pas oms. The evil which men do lives after them. Mans anik, kels äbinoms us, äililoms osi. A few men who were there heard it. Läd e vümadog, kelis elogobs. Lady and lapdog whom we have seen. Kelof sagof atosí no binof flen obik. Who says this, she is not my friend.

When myself etc., is simply emphatic, it is the word to use.

✦ * SPRING * ✦ WOOLENS * ✦

✦ * Our ✦ Opening ✦ of * ✦

Choice Domestic and Foreign Woolens, Selected for
Our Custom Department.

Gentlemen who wish to examine the Latest Novelties in these Goods should Call and examine them.

✦ * * THE * * ✦

WARE-PRAATT CO.'S

408 and 412 MAIN STREET, WORCESTER.

NON=SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.

Incorporated in the City of Worcester, Sept. 17, 1889. A great co-operative institution and fraternal order, paying sick and accident benefits and an endowment of $500 at the end of five years. Over 600 members in Worcester; three local assemblies, and two more in process of formation. $8760 already distributed in sick benefits. $14,331.63 reserve.

For full particulars, and documents carefully explaining the plan and scope of this rapidly growing fraternity, call on or address J. O. H. WOODMAN, Secy., 339 Main St., Worcester, Mass. Burnside Building.

GET THE BEST!

The BAY STATE or GLENWOOD Range and Parlor Stoves.

THEY HAVE NO EQUAL.

WE ALSO CARRY A LARGE LINE OF GAS AND KEROSENE
CHANDELIERS, TABLE LAMPS, AND FIRE-PLACE GOODS.

466 Main St. O. S. KENDALL & Co.

CHARLES L. WRIGHT.

CHARLES H. WOODCOCK.

"WEST SIDE MACHINE CO.,"

Manufacturers of the improved "Wright Drill," embracing features not applied to other drills.

The "Wright Counter Shaft and Clutch," just patented. The cheapest, most positive in its action, with scarcely perceptible shock or jar, and decidedly the best device for the purpose ever in the market. Every one interested is cordially invited to come and see it. The "Woodcock Universal Door Opener." By simply pressing a button on either side of the door, it causes the door to swing open. Can be quickly and cheaply applied to any door. Must be seen to be appreciated. A Carpenter's Gnaw for Hanging Doors accurately and very quickly. No carpenter can afford to be without it. "The Swivel Crotch Center." No more broken drills by work catching. Hundreds of dollars saved. "A Cuff Holder." The cheapest and best ever seen. We are prepared to make the most reasonable terms for all kinds of special machinery. Repairs promptly done and satisfaction guaranteed. Factory less than two minutes' walk from Pleasant-street cars.

No. 28 Bellevue Street, Worcester, Mass.

E. W. COFFIN,

Store Fixtures

310 Main Street, Worcester.

Name this Paper.

LE * JOLLY * FRENCH * DYEING
AND * CLEANSING * HOUSE.

First-Class Work at Short Notice.

Reference for Laces and Lace Curtains, Gross & Strauss.

Coupon | Cut out this coupon from
LIGHT, and bring it with you and get 10 per cent discount from regular prices. | Coupon

C. T. MELVIN, PROPRIETOR, WALNUT ST.

PHOTOGRAPHER
*****

Underwood

Children's
Portraits
A Specialty

*****
326 Main, op. Mechanics Hall

F. S. BLANCHARD & CO.,

* PRINTERS. *

Book, Newspaper, Catalogue, Church, Society, Wedding and Commercial Printing of every kind executed in the best modern style.

No orders too large; none too small.

154 FRONT ST.

LIGHT

VOL. III. No. 2. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

NEWS SOCIETY
BUSINESS
PERSONALS
MUSIC
DRAMA
LITERATURE
ART
OFFLAND '90

W. A. DENHOLM,

One of the Founders of the Boston Store.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

Lawrence, Photographer.

By Act of the Legislature the Name of the

CHOLLAR, PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.,

is changed to

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

In addition to our very large Furniture business, we have a Complete Upholstery Department with skilled workmen constantly employed. Special attention paid to Upholstering Parlor Suites of Single Pieces, with all the New and desirable Coverings to Suit our patrons. HAIR MATTRESSES and BEDDING of our own manufacture, warranted to be of Superior quality. OLD HAIR MATTRESSES made over and returned the same day. CABINET WORK DONE AT SHORT NOTICE.

247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.
PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

J. PLAMONDON,

FINE BOOT AND SHOE REPAIRING,
398 Main Street, Corner Peabody, up two flights.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE

permanently eradicated by the

ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,
92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING

Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,
Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.

Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold on commission.

MRS. S. M. KEYES.

FIRE INSURANCE!

EDW. E. LONGLEY,

339 Main St., Worcester.

We make a specialty of insuring Dwellings and Household Furniture under the latest and most approved forms, at lowest rates.

MME. GARCEAU,

* ARTISTIC DRESS MAKING. *

Ball Dresses, Wedding Dresses and Gowns of the latest Parisian style a specialty. Call and examine Patterns and Styles.

Room No. 1, 245 Main Street.

Fine Groceries and Provisions,

I obtain Mrs. Morgan's Home Made Bread fresh every afternoon and am prepared to take orders and deliver it on short notice.

I also have Home Made Cake and Cream fresh every day.

C. E. MINCKLER,

16 Woodland Street, Worcester.

Telephone No. 1814.

GOOD NEWS ABOUT SHORT-HAND!

Students mastering the art and taking positions at ten dollars per week after two months' study at

HINMAN'S BUSINESS COLLEGE.

Since securing the right for Worcester to teach the wonderful

"New Rapid" System of Shorthand

students are learning to write forty to sixty words per minute in four weeks, and eighty to one hundred words in eight weeks. By this system pupils can do better work in three months at a cost of $30 than by other systems requiring eight months to a year at $50 to $100.

N. G. TUCKER.

W. T. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON, SANITARY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.

56 Pleasant Street, Worcester, Mass.

Millinery Opening

AT THE NEW PARLORS OF

Misses Cashell & Layden,

Room 3, Burnside Building,

339 * MAIN * STREET,

Friday, March 20.

Take the Elevator.

W. A. ENGLAND,

DEALER IN

FINE WATCHES,
CLOCKS, JEWELRY
& OPTICAL GOODS.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.

394 Main Street.

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *

NO. 156 MAIN STREET,
H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1891.

No. 2

Go on, and the light will come to you.
—Jean D'Alambert.

Perhaps! But keep going any way. The Indian composed some stanzas of alleged poetry. It was just after his conversion. He was full of fervor and zeal. He wished to read his effort to certain parties. They listened; but all they heard was "Go on, go on" constantly repeated and when he assured them that he had a hundred verses of the same sort, they begged off from further hearing. Sometimes, it is better to wait. In this case you might get LIGHT sooner.

Some are wondering whether Dr. McCullagh's sermon on the Book of Ruth was suggested by the present uproar over Boas.

Now that we have Boas and Ruth, the query naturally arises as to the where-a-bouts of the other one of the trio, Naomi?

Nor is an answer lacking, for from all parts of the city there comes, when the question of measurement arises, the cry "Nay, O My!"

"To be or not to be" measured. That is the question. What a fortunate thing it is that men can read and think and decide for themselves and that, after all, this is a free country.

Longfellow enjoined humanity to "be not like dumb driven cattle!" Do you happen to know any one who is? Most people seem to have a way of speaking their own minds, especially in Worcester.

Everybody says that trade is dull; but absolute stagnation is avoided by the activity in other directions. Wits and words are very, very lively.

"If we can only get through March!" That is the refrain in store and street, yet the much abused month is not without its redeeming features. It brings to us the very first touch of spring in the shape of the Crocus.

Little glimpse of color, it perseveres in spite of snow and cold. The very first to appear this year was a dainty bit of yellow that opened out Wednesday in that earliest place, the Russell's, on Harvard street.

It is well worth crossing the street to see it. Fully ten days late, as the Crocus has come for several years past, it was none the less gladly welcomed. Two years ago, when the flowers appeared, eyes looked in joy upon them that, ere the snows of another winter came, were to close in eternal sleep.

For years, LIGHT has looked for the coming of this flower, and each time counts winter gone when the harbinger of spring appears. Last week two stanzas were given, taken from the Ladies Home Journal. Just a little premature; but none the less delightful; an announcement perhaps,

"So runs the world away." The old yellow building, corner of Main and Walnut streets, is coming down. It is on classic ground. Here, in the early days of the century, the youthful Worcesterites were put through their courses, and given their start in life. After the school house, came the building, doubtless reckoned magnificent in its day, in turn to give way to what will probably be deemed antiquated in the future.

Is it possible for us to build so that our work will not be called fussy and unsightly at some time? Abroad, churches are very seldom torn down to make room for better ones. Those built a thousand years ago are still in use, still objects of beauty and of veneration. The ancient City Hall of many a Continental burg is still attractive and useful. They were not built on contract. Our people are too careless.

Many don't know what comfort is. They imagine a house to be a house, no matter what its shape or finish. A dry goods box with chimneys and lightning rods would come just as near being a house as many of the structures that are gradually climbing up the sides of Worcester's hills. Go to the Public Library and call for works on Architecture and see what can be done.

Then another thing! Why continue to pay rent all our lives? Few men of middle life have not paid out for hire of houses, more than a good home would have cost them, if they had gone about the matter right. Worcester has ample conveniences for helping such as wish to help themselves.

She has Savings Banks and Coöperative Building Associations, both of which are ready to help the working man. He may just as well have a happy home of his own as to half live in another man's house. If home be happy as it is, it may be doubly so under one's own vine and fig tree.

How about the boys in these sloppy, dismal days! There's no place for marbles. Too early for base ball and too sloppy for snow ball! What is a fellow to do anyway? His country cousins, in these wet, trying seasons are playing hide and seek in the barn, on the hay, and a right glorious time they are having too. They never want for amusement but the city boy is driven to his wit's end.

The chances are that his noise will drive him out of the house, for his mother is nervous, and, as boys are gregarious, he seeks others of his kind. If mischief doesn't follow, then have home impressions been better than they usually are. Down back of the house, in some secluded nook or corner they try the deadly cigarette and no wonder the boy becomes old before his time.

Never mind his noise! Keep him at home, when he isn't at school. You don't allow your girls to run at will over the whole city. Your boys are running great risks. They are just as good as the girls and need just as much supervision. When you get a spare moment, take one if you can't get it else, and go with him to the electrical or some other equally instructive exhibition and just note how his eye brightens. He is easily interested.

The chances are that you will grow young yourself. Then when you reach home and you are seated at the supper or breakfast table or around the fire just prompt that lad to tell the story of what he has seen. His power of observation will have been wonderfully increased and if encouraged his powers of expression will correspondingly improve. There are other schools than these that the city supports. Every parent should be a teacher.

It really looks as though the proposed electrical railway of Worcester, Leicester and Spencer would be a reality. What glorious excursions can then be had along this scenic route. Hills and valleys; forests and flowers! What a breath of country air this improved communication will bring to Worcester's very doors. The next thing will be a proposition to annex all these outlying towns. When our city begins to get ambitious like Chicago, she may become absorptive.

The multitude of visitors that throng the Art Student's rooms in the Walker building bears effectual testimony to the taste that is rapidly developing in Worcester. Every possible encouragement should be given to such agencies. We are sometimes called a provincial city; but Art and Science are Cosmopolitan. Laying hold on these will very rapidly break down any wall of exclusiveness that some might wish to rear. The day cannot be far away when the Knowles donation will be made evident in its results. As yet it is hidden, buried. Whether uncovered by the St. Wolstan Society or any other organization, the city is becoming ripe for its benefits.

The man with a weather eye must have had it well filled recently. All sorts and from all directions. To be sure, the snow has not equalled that of March 1888, possibly it will not again, in our day; but it has been enough to make the snow shovel brigade laugh and to bring frowns upon the faces of those who have goods to sell. Cheer up friends! This can't last always. There is not enough of such weather to hold out. Already, the skies look as if they were well rid of an immense burden. The earth is being enriched by this load of moisture. To be sure the snow is delaying the crocuses; but they will be all the brighter when they do come. When they do, if you haven't a garden of your own, go and look over the fence of your fortunate neighbor, and look at his treasures.

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 339 Main Street, Burnside Building.
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Church Notes.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The ladies of the Summer Street Church met Tuesday afternoon and evening. A supper was served and Chaplain Louis N. Beaudry gave a lecture on his experiences in Libby prison.

The ladies of Salem Street Church held their customary monthly social Tuesday evening. The entertainment consisted of an exhibition of club swinging by L. C. Havener, character songs by Bert Gray and musical selections by a banjo sextet. Mr. Gray was encoed four times.

The Ladies Faith and Work Society of Park Church held their regular meeting Tuesday afternoon and in the evening served a C supper. An entertainment was also given after the supper. It consisted of a piano solo by Harry Mullett; reading by J. E. Shea; solo by Mrs. L. W. Briggs; solo by Mrs. Carrie French Hancox; a duet by Mrs. L. W. Briggs and Mrs. A. B. Scott; a piano solo by Harry Mullett; solo, Mrs. Hancox. Fred Blake was accompanist.

At Plymouth Church tomorrow the pastor will preach morning and evening at the usual hours. The evening sermon will be the second of a series on the book of Ruth.

The quartet of Pilgrim Church has been selected and consists of J. Vernon Butler, organist and director; Mrs. J. W. Pitts, soprano; Mrs. J. H. Howell, contralto; George L. Butler, tenor; J. H. Howell, bass. All of these singers are well known in Worcester with the exception of Mrs. Pitts, who comes from Burlington, Vt., where she has been for several years the soprano soloist at the College Street Church. The quartet will be assisted by a chorus of forty well-trained voices. The musical committee have reason to be pleased with their success in securing such excellent talent.

METHODIST.

A milk-maids drill was given at Grace

Church Tuesday evening. The milk-maids were Misses Lucy Richardson, Cora Lowell, Nellie Cole, Nellie Laying, Flora Minor, Lina Peck, Minnie McIntyre, Edith Thompson, Mabel Pierce, Alice Ross, May Foster, Carrie Clark, Maud Darell, Florence Lowell, Lydia Kirschner, and Nellie Chandler. The drill was conducted by John Grace. After the drill the milk-pails and stools were sold by auction. There was also a miscellaneous entertainment during the evening in which the participants were Miss Fanny Perkins, Miss Susie Sargent, Miss Cora Sanders, Ben Whitmore and Ethel Cross.

Trinity. Friday evening, March 20, the Whatsoever Circle of King's Daughters of Trinity Church give an entertainment at Mr. E. A. Kelly's corner Cedar and Fruit streets.

The M. E. Social Union of Worcester held its regular meeting in Trinity Church, Monday, March 9. The attendance though small was enthusiastic and no better nor more interesting gathering of the Union is on record. The entire speaking was directed to memorialize John Wesley, the hundredth anniversary of whose burial the evening commemorated.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The First Presbyterian Church held a fair in Curtis Hall, Monday and Tuesday evenings. There were the usual booths where were for sale all kinds of fancy work and ice cream, coffee and pastry. Tuesday evening, the articles remaining unsold were disposed of by auction, Mr. J. Armour being the auctioneer. An entertainment was also given consisting of piano solo by Miss Russell; reading by Mr. McPherson; song, Miss M. Jenkins; song, Mr. Dudley; reading, Mr. McGarvin; piano solo, Miss Moore; music by the choir; reading, Thomas Atkinson, Jr.; banjo solo, Miss Reynolds; reading, Miss Satchworth; piano solo, Miss M. Nichol. The object of the fair was to raise money to pay for the church lot. The attendance was large both evenings.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

The second entertainment of the Salem Street Church course will be a vocal and instrumental concert and will be given next Friday evening. Those who will take part are Mrs. May Sleeper-Ruggles, Miss Gertrude Inez Buss, Miss Jennie Morrill, Mr. B. A. Barber, Miss J. S. Whittemore and Miss J. S. Newcomb. The church choir and glee clubs will also assist. The program will include anthems, glees, solos, duets and selections from different cantatas. The list of participants is a guarantee for a very fine entertainment. The next entertainment in the course will be a lecture by Rev. T. F. Clark of Brooklyn on "Through Japan Across the Pacific" and it will take place March 27.

"Aunt Polly Bassett's Yankee Singin Skewl" was given in Horticultural Hall Monday and Tuesday evenings under the auspices of the Second Womens Christian Temperance Union. It is a stock entertainment owned by the Bassett family of Brooklyn. They travel over the country, giving their entertainment and draw the material for the chorus from the Sunday Schools of each city. The association under whose auspices it is given receives a part of the profits. The program was as follows:—Opening chorus, "Auld lang Syne", Skewl; Song, "Merrie Bird", by little Dorcas Tubbs; Ye Scientific Frog, Obediah Snooks; Yankee Doodle, Bijah Noggles; Song, "Ye Vegetable Wife", Jedediah Basset; Jeddy's so bashful, Kethura Slaughter; Poor tittle toodle de-do, Majorie Basset, Skewlmarm; Chorus, "Hen Convention, Skewl; Spellin Match, by ye little folke; Cousin Jedediah, Skewl marm Marjorie Basset; Two parte Songe, Patience and Hope; Worldlie Songe, "Josiah and hys Sally" Jedediah Basset; Songe and Chorus, "Uncle Sam's Farm, Joel Trott; "Yankee Courtin" Jedediah ande Jerushy; "The Old Oaken Bucket", Skewl; There was a Man, Skewl marm Majorie Basset; "Nid, Nod, Noddin", Skewl.

The attraction at the Worcester Theater Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Wednesday matinee, March 16, 17, 18, will be a notable one, in the special engagement of the rising young romantic actor, Alexander Salvini; who has come to the front ranks of the leading artists of this country, in the portrayal of his Heroes of Romance. Monday evening, March 16, Mr. Salvini will appear in "Don Cæsar De Bazan;" Tuesday evening, "A Child of Naples;" Wednesday matinee, "Don Cæsar De Bazan;" Wednesday evening, "The Three Guardsmen." Mr. Salvini has excellent support, and his performances are attended by large and fashionable audiences. His performance is in English.

ABOUT FOLKS.

Frank Roe Batchelder reached Worcester Wednesday morning. He reports a happy sojourn in Washington; but of course he is happy to get back to Worcester. Most folks are. The only exceptions are those who are brought back. He is still with the Hon. J. H. Walker and our Representative may congratulate himself that his correspondence is so well Franked.

The ninety-eighth regular meeting of the Worcester Congregational Club will be held in the rooms of the Y. M. C. A., Monday, March 16, at five o'clock. It will be ladies' night. The subject for discussion will be: "Our Public School System, How to Improve it," which will be opened by Mr. A. W. Edson, agent of the State Board of Education, followed by Dr. T. M. Balliet, superintendent public schools, Springfield. This is a pertinent theme. Nothing in the range of possible subjects should excite more interest now. There are times when Plymouth Rock and Cotton Mather should be in retirement. Messrs. Edson and Balliet will treat the matter in a way to interest and profit all.

Louis Childs, formerly of W. H. S., who has been residing in Richmond, Ray County, Mo., for over two years, has, after a course of study in his uncle's office, Mr. Black of Richmond, been admitted to the bar. He leaves for Siam in June, where he will be assistant clerk in the office of his brother, Mr. Jesse Childs, a successful lawyer and also a pupil in the High School, as well as a graduate of Amherst College, Class of '82.

The Week.

CITY.

- Mar. 6.—Evening schools close a very successful year.
The will of Edwin Conant, Esq., discloses a number of public benefactions.
Dr. McCullaugh addresses the Sons of Scotia.
- 7—Small fire in Spooner's stable rear of Bay State House.
French citizens rejoice over liberal gains in the Dominion.
- 8—Representative Walker expresses his respect for Major McKinley and Speaker Reed.
- 9—M. E. Social Union discusses John Wesley at Trinity Church.
Light Infantry discusses the proposed trip to Baltimore.
One of the worst nights of the season. Slush more than ankle deep.
Nathan F. Heard dies suddenly, 67 years.

- 10—James E. Banister dies, No. 26 Maple Street, 37 years.
The taking down of old building, corner Main and Walnut streets begins today.
- 11—Lieut. L. G. Bigelow elected Captain of Battery B.
President G. Stanley Hall addresses the Women's Club on Physical Education.
- 12—Miss Helen A. Nixon, a High School graduate dies, 1 Webster street, 24 years.
W. B. Harding, Esq., addresses Democratic Club on Subsidies.

COUNTY.

- 5—Shrewsbury Grange celebrates 15th anniversary.
Henry Klebart, Webster, stricken with paralysis, 74 years.
- 7—The Worcester, Leicester and Spencer R. R. charter granted. Capital $250,000.
Robert Taft died in Uxbridge yesterday, 71 years.
- 9—Westboro Board of Trade has first annual dinner.
Leicester has parties from all the neighboring towns. It is a pleasant place.
- 10—Daniel Crowley and Charles Rose killed in Blackstone by the fall of a railroad bridge.
Singletary Pond so high that Millbury feels endangered.
- 12—Alfred Hanley found dead in bed in Westboro, aged 55 years.

COMMONWEALTH.

- 6—Redistricting question agitating the Legislature.
House votes yes on Mr. Ledyard Bills proposition to approve the Federal Election's bill.
John March, Autinz Wack and an unknown woman killed by the cars near Palmer.
- 7—Massachusetts Club dines Postmaster Hart and United States Marshal Doherty. Lots of talk.
- 8—Incendiary fire in Salem. Northwest Beef Company's quarters.
Civil service Commission in Boston indignant over the non-appointment of Postmaster Corse.

- 9—Bishop Benj. H. Paddock of the Massachusetts Episcopal Diocese dies in Boston, 63 years.
The Census reveals 40 per cent of the population of the state within a radius of eight miles from the State House.
- 10—Committee in Legislature unfavorable to changes in the public bar law.
The R. R. committee proposes to give sleeping car passengers the right to say whether the upper berth shall be up or down if the same is not sold. Very sensible.
- 11—Prof. Goodwin of Harvard receives valuable manuscript of Aristotle.
Prof. Perry of Williams and Representative Cogswell speak before N. E. Tariff Reform League.

- 12—Celebration in Boston of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the elevation of Archbishop Williams to the Episcopacy.
Governor Russell appoints April 2d as Fast day. Early for base ball.

NATION.

- 6—The Coroner of New York summons some R. R. notables. C. M. Depew gives $20,000 bonds. 'Tis good to see the law catch big fishes once in a while.
Ex-Gov. and Ex-U. S. Senator Joseph Hill of Georgia, dies in Madison. An aged citizen.
- 7—Talmage's tabernacle to be built on a mortgage. Queer foundation.
Clothing manufacturers in Rochester, N. Y., order a lock out. 20,000 people interested.
City Hall of Philadelphia costs $20,000,000 and the end is not yet. It is as bad as the Albany Capitol.
- 8—Wife and daughter of the late Secretary Windom will remain in Washington.
- 9—Brattleboro, Vt., High School in an uproar. Principal's authority defied.
Fayerweather Will contest settled. Colleges will fare well.
- 10—General Sherman's children say they do not need outside help. Manly, just like their father.
General Miles is to have a vacation. He deserves it. Soon he will be Miles away.
- 11—General John M. Palmer elected to the U. S. Senate from Illinois. A Democratic victory.
- 12—Democrats renominate Governor Davis in Rhode Island.
Attempt to wreck train near South Norwalk, Conn. Help needed in those parts.

WORLD.

- 6—Dr. Seegart, an English physician, dies at the gaming table in Monte Carlo. Death won this time.
France to excavate at Delphi for five years. May publish books but Greece will have the finds.
- 7—American maltreated by Customs officials in Italy. He appeals to the U. S. Consul.
Paris police to suppress race course gambling. Races, without gambling, will be like "Hamlet" with Hamlet left out.
McCarthy's new paper The National Press appears.
- 8—Prospects that the population of Iceland will wholly emigrate to America.
Spanish protest against annexation of Cuba to the U. S. Who is annexing anything?

- 9—Seets, the lion tamer, killed in London. That animal wasn't so tame.
At Clitheroe, near Manchester, England, one Jackson abducts his wife. Queer kind of courting that.
- 10—Irish factions still at war.
Hebrews still persecuted in Russia. They will, all, have to come to America.
- 11—The German Reichstag is unfavorable to the admitting of women to the learned professions.
- 12—Prince Napoleon on his death bed declares the Empire impossible. Hereafter France must be Republican. So say we all of us.
At least seventy lives lost in the recent English blizzard. What would have happened had they had an American one?

SECRET OF JOY.

Weary and sad with my journey alone,
As o'er mountain, through valley I roam,
I sink down to rest by the side of a stream
Flowing fresh from its high mountain home.

Just beneath at my feet, in the bed of the stream,
A rock the swift water divides,
Hence, onward it flows divergent and free
In two everwidening tides.

As I watched it flow swift on its way,
Ever dancing and joyous and glad,
I sighed "How unlike our life's journey,
So dreary, and lonely, and sad."

Thus with my own gloomy thoughts communing,
I had sat there I know not how long,
When I heard a low sound from the water
Like a murmur or half whispered song.

I looked, and I saw in the river,
Two raindrops pass side by side,
And I heard them say to each other,
As they floated along with the tide,

"Now this is the point in our journey they say,
Where the rocks the swift waters divide,
On our choice at this place our whole future depends,
And each for himself must decide."

"The stream on the left is so calm," said the one
"Who could for a moment delay,
How nice it will be to sail under the trees,
Sheltered from sun all the way."

"Oh, no that is dull," said the other
Always resting and floating at ease,
I'll choose the rough way past the mill and the meadow
I care not for the shade of the trees."

Now the one who had chosen the left way,
So free from all toil and all strife,
Soon tired of the unchanging motion,
And longed for more work and more life.

But the other found life ever pleasant,
Now dancing, now turning a mill;
And he saw that helping another
Would the thoughts of his own sorrow still.

And so with keen interest I watched them,
As they went on their way alone,
Till at last they were lost in the distance
On the breast of the great sea unknown.

I awoke—I must have been dreaming,
For the sun was now sinking to rest,
Every bird in the forest around me,
Was asleep in his own downy nest.

As now through the darkness I hastened along,
There seemed peace—within and around;
The world and my hopes seemed the brighter that day
For the secret of joy I had found.

Oliver Wendell Holmes says: The human race is divided into two classes,—those who go ahead and do something, and those who sit still and inquire, "Why wasn't it done the other way?"

William Alexander Denholm.

Our mission is to the living rather than to the dead; but when a face, once familiar in our midst, fades from us, it is meet that we should reproduce it and to tell the story of the owner's life. A little more than half a century is not long for a human life, but into that time some men manage to crowd an immense amount of work. Such was the record of Mr. Denholm.

Dundee, that name so famous in Scottish history, away to the north on the Firth of Tay, was the place that gave our subject birth May 8, 1837, and he never lost any part of a Scotchman's love for heathery hillsides, though he had long been a loyal citizen of the United States. While an infant his parents moved to Glasgow where his youth was spent, though the continued residence of friends and relations in Dundee bound him to the latter place.

His father was John Denholm a foundry man born in Berwick-on-the-Tweed. The Tweed country is that forever associated with the name and history of Sir Walter Scott. In fact, the latter's body rests in Dryburgh Abbey. Melrose was the apple of his eye among ruins and his home was Abbotsford, all on the Tweed. Berwick is near the sea, and the old place is frequently named in the contests incident to the days of Cromwell and the succeeding hundred years. So then, in Mr. Denholm's antecedents were traces of both the Highlands and the Lowlands. His mother was Jessie Milne of Perthshire an excellent name, fragrant in Scottish Annals. Of Mr. Denholm's father's family, two brothers, James and John yet live in Great Britain, one brother died years ago in South America, while his only sister, Jessie Milne, is the wife of Thomas Hamilton, so long in the Boston store.

The schools of his native land gave him but little for he was only thirteen years old when the death of his father rendered it necessary for him to go to work, and he was in a retail store three years. He afterward thoroughly learned the muslin business in the extensive house of McDonald and when only twenty years of age he came to New York in the firm's employ. But he did not at first like America and he vowed that when his year was up he would return to Scotland for good. The year ended a little prematurely through the failure of the house and he hastened across the Atlantic. As frequently happens, however, Freedom's air had filled his nature in a way he was not conscious of till he had left her and only three weeks of life on the other side followed before he started for America again. This time he had been secured by a Mr. Wood, a representative of Linder, Kingsley & Co., of New York. For some years he was with this house, though his latest business in New York was in the Commission House of Robert Struthers. His residence at first was in Williamsburg and it is not a little interesting that the Presbyterian church to which he belonged was the one which furnished Pastor Conrad to the Old South, Mr. Denholm's Worcester church home. Later he went to Passaic, New Jersey, where he erected a house, now the home of A. Swan Brown the well known President of the Scottish Syndicate.

In 1870, he came to Worcester, having formed a partnership with William C. McKay of Boston, though a native of the Dominion. Their first location was at the south-east corner of Main and Mechanic streets in the store now managed by Edward L. Smith, son-in-law of Mr. Denholm. Here their business grew till new and larger quarters were necessary. These were found September 21, 1881, in the new block, facing Park street, erected by Mr. Jonas C. Ark. One department after another was added, till finally the number reached was twenty-four. Mr. McKay died in May, 1884 when reorganization of the business was effected. A younger brother of the deceased partner, Mr. R. J. McKay and Mr. James J. Hughes were admitted, and the Boston Store continued under its old name, Denholm & McKay.

During all these years, Mr. Denholm held all the many branches of his business in his own grasp. Whoever might be at the head of a department there was no one who knew more of its condition than the chief proprietor. Such devotion to business routine could have only one ending. The wonder is that the strain was endured so long. He made repeated trips abroad; but he never got far from his business. It was a sort of a deception that he practiced towards himself. Save, when on the ocean, he was seldom a day without some communication with the store. The rest that he sought, he did not get. He never threw aside the weight. Probably, he never felt that he could. Friends repeatedly counseled long journey's, but he could not be prevailed to take them. He has, in these twenty years, spent considerable time away from the store, but not away from the business. In traveling, he usually took some one or more of his family with him, always wishing to have sharers of his pleasures. His peculiar activity was never better illustrated than when he left the steamer once at Queenstown and went by rail to Belfast that he might speak in a Sunday School there before his vessel was due in Liverpool.

My last conversation with him was on the day before Christmas. It was impossible to not observe the weary, worn look of his face and to wish that he would drop everything and rest. The next day he was on his way to the south; but he had waited too long. The trip was injurious rather than beneficial and he speedily returned to his home. This he subsequently left only a few times. Slowly and surely the tendency was downward, till the end came at 5:25 a.m. on the morning of Monday, March 2d.

Mr. Denholm was particularly happy in his home relations. He never looked happier than when, seated in his carriage, he was riding to and from his store. It had been better had he ridden more. He confined himself too closely to the routine of his business.

This city of ours has seen the growth of the Boston Store from its opening with eighteen employees to its present condition with 171. The public also realizes the intense application necessary to secure this result. To go from one branch of his business to another, to hold everything in his own hands was his ambition and he succeeded in doing what he attempted. The price, however, for this success was a great one.

He was one of the charter members in the Scotch Syndicate, organized in 1879. This great body, commanding a great capital, has its stores in many of our large cities and through its purchases is able, in some cases, to nearly control the market.

As a member of the local Scotch Society, he was prominent and useful. Any one who has ever met him and his associates as they recalled memories of Auld Scotia will remember how exceedingly happy he was in rejoinder and repartee. He effectually contradicted that ugly saying of Sydney Smith as to a Scotchman's appreciation of wit. No Robert Burns festival was complete without him, though the last was held in his absence and all future meetings must miss him.

He held no city office. Though frequently requested to allow the use of his name in connection with the city government, he steadily refused, the cares of his business taking all his time. It is a pity that more successful men of affairs cannot be induced to act for the public weal.

Early in his American life, Mr. Denholm married Miss Grace McLey of Glasgow. To them have been born five children, three daughters and two sons. The girls are all graduates of the Worcester High School. One son William J. is now in his senior year and the other, John, is in the entering class of the same school. The oldest daughter, Lizzie, is the wife of Mr. E. L. Smith, who is at the old Boston Store stand on Main and Mechanic streets. They have a son, thus securing to the deceased merchant a representative of the third generation. The second daughter, Jessie, is at home, while the third, Grace, is the wife of Harry A. Cook of Mr. E. L. Smith's store.

For several years, the Denholm residence was on West street, north of Cedar, but some time ago they removed to their present abode, No. 18 of the same street. Some years since, Mr. Denholm imported several fine Shetland ponies and these in front of a low double phaeton have been noteworthy objects driven through our streets. Though diminutive in form they seem to be able to draw all that can get into the vehicle.

No one could ever meet Mr. Denholm, many times, without finding that he had very decided literary tastes. In fact, for the local press, he contributed many excellent accounts of his various rambles and it was apparent that had not business held him with iron grasp, he would have done much in this direction. His father had hoped to make a physician of him; but that plan failed, as we have seen. Mr. Denholm, however, fully supplemented his early instruction by faithful study in later years and few men had keener relish for good things in verse or prose. In our latest conversation, he detailed his reflections as he spent some time in the summer by the sea side. It is possible that the haven of eternal rest was already being pictured before him for the chief thought with him was, "And there shall be no more Sea."

On coming to Worcester, he became a member of the Old South Church with which he was identified to the end. He taught in the Sunday School, was superintendent of the same and in all the counsels of the church was prominent. In the new building matter no voice was more listened to than his. In buying and holding property near by, he very particularly aided the society.

In the Y. M. C. A. he also was an important figure, contributing to the building fund and for nearly two years, he was president, resigning only when it was apparent that further devotion to its duties was impossible along with his own pressing duties.

Here, then, is the story. Into the building that he had helped to erect, the procession moved on Thursday the 5th inst. "I am the resurrection and the life" are the solemn words, resounding through the stately structure as the body is borne down the aisle to repose, briefly, before the pulpit from which the Rev. A. Z. Conrad preaches the funeral sermon. He is assisted in the exercises by the Rev. Joseph Lovering, the pastor of the church, while the new edifice was building. The great audience room is completely filled. Here are gathered not only the employees of the store, but representatives of the various bodies with which he was connected. Anchoria Lodge of Odd Fellows mourned a member lost. The Royal Arcanum also bore witness to fealty. There were many Scotchmen present who came to look for the last time upon their fellow countrymen. His Sunday School class also was there. There, too, were bank officers, the Mayor and other members of the City Government and a large number of those who were, for a time, away from their business that they might pay their tribute of respect to the deceased.

The address of the pastor was earnest, vigorous and pointed. The moment was one, calculated to draw upon the preacher's deepest sensibilities. The body, before him, was that of a man who had labored diligently that the church itself might stand; he was one who had most cordially welcomed that pastor to this church. What wonder, then, that he should speak eloquent words over the departed. He named energy as the chief characteristic of the man, a statement that no hearer would contradict. His love for his home and the value of that institution Mr. Conrad set forth, most forcibly.

When all was over, the procession moved away to Hope Cemetery where, when the season advances, the burial will take place and when again the roses bloom they will blossom over both of the founders of the Boston Store.

Alfred S. Roe lectures in Leominster on "War Memories," on the 18th, under the auspices of the Womens Christian Temperance Union of that town. He also talks on "Just a Glimpse of Europe" before the pupils and friends of the Ashland High School, Friday night, the 20th, next.

The late Rev. James H. Doyle was one of the men who believed in being cheerful under all circumstances. Illness and weakness did not lessen his good nature. Like many other young men of his religion he had aspirations to the priesthood; but he never dwelt upon them lest he might not have a vocation. In school, one day, his teacher said, "Holiday is only a holy day," "Yes, but there is a difference" says the boy, "for one is spelled with a y, the other with an i."

Our vigilant and progressive hat man, Ed. B. Clapp, is having great improvements made in the front of his store. His gents furnishings will be more attractive than ever in their new settings.

Edwin Conant, Esq.,

And the Harvard Class of 1829.

The recent death of the oldest member of the Worcester County Bar and his connection with Harvard's most famous class render reference to him and his associates especially appropriate now.

A native of the town of Sterling, he ever retained an exceeding fondness for her and her interest. He was born Oct. 20th, 1810. He studied law with Rejoice Newton and William Lincoln in Worcester. Beginning practice in Sterling in 1832, he remained there four years and then came to Worcester, where his home has been since, though he was a practitioner for only about ten years. Inheriting great wealth from his father, Jacob Conant, he has had enough to do in looking after its investment and progress.

His first home in Worcester was on the site of the present St. Johns Episcopal church and a memorial window from him and is in the edifice for his daughter.

While yet a law student, he gave a Fourth of July Oration in Worcester in 1831 and in 1836, he was elected President of the Worcester Agricultural Society, thus indicating his love for Natural History, still further indication of which is seen in his bequest to Worcester's Natural History Society. With an abundance of leisure, plenty of means and refined tastes it is not strange that his private library was one of the finest in the city.

Mr. Conant's first wife, whom he married in 1832, was a daughter of Hon. Joseph Estabrook of Royalston and sister of the late Mrs. Isaac Davis. Both his children, now dead, Elizabeth Anne and Helen Maria, were by his first wife. His last wife was Elizabeth S., daughter of Joseph Wheeler, Jr., who was son of Rev. Joseph Wheeler, formerly Unitarian clergyman in Harvard, and afterwards register of probate in Worcester from 1776 till his death in 1793.

For many years his home was at the corner of Harvard and State Street. Very rarely were people seen about the house and citizens who have passed it daily, for years knew nothing of the kind gentleman who resided there. His deeds of kindness were not ostentatiously done, but his gifts to the town of Sterling could not well be hidden. There, a substantial building and a well equipped library will long bear tribute to his love and generosity.

He died at 11 a.m., March 2d and his funeral was observed the Thursday following. A former pastor, the Rev. E. H. Hall from Cambridge conducted the services, which were attended by many of our most respected citizens. His will discloses many public benefactors, his Alma Mater receiving the final and largest share.

The Class of 1829, has long been famous, not only for its intrinsic merit, but through the poetic refrains of its genial Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. Had there been no Homer, we should have known much less of Achilles. The poet has so often and so tenderly sung the praises of '29 that all the world seems to know the class. There was an unusual number of men whom the public has cared to honor. George T. Bigelow was Chief Justice of Massachusetts, and in "The Boys," Dr.

Holmes calls him the Judge. Benj. Robbins Curtis was a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and a dissenter from the infamous Dred Scott Decision: James Freeman Clarke all will remember as Boston's famous preacher and also the Rev. Chandler Robbins: Prof. Benj. Pierce. Harvard's great teacher of Mathematics, Samuel F. Smith who wrote "America," Wm. Henry Channing another great preacher, and others. Near by us were the late Ex-Mayor George W. Richardson of Worcester and the Rev. Samuel May of Leicester.

From 1851 to 1877, both years inclusive, Dr. Holmes prepared poems, called in his published volume, "Songs of 1829." From these, many pictures of his class-mates may be selected. He says himself that he gets more questions about "The Boys" than about any other one. Of Judge Bigelow mention has, already, been made. The Hon. T. B. Crowninshield was the "Speaker;" Hon. G. T. Davis, "Member of Congress" though Isaac E. Morse and John J. Taylor were members also. The "Reverend" was James Freeman Clarke, though there were other notables. Prof. Pierce was the "Boy with the grave mathematical look;" Judge Curtis, the boy "With the three decker brain" and Samuel T. Smith was mentioned, "And there's a nice youngster of excellent pith" etc.

In 1885 there were sixteen survivors of the Class of fifty-nine original members. Today just half the number can answer to the roll. The following letter from the Rev. Dr. May will explain itself. It was written in Leicester, March 9th.

"The survivors of the Harvard Class of 1829 so far as I am informed, are now: Edward L. Cunningham, Newport, R. I.; Samuel A. Devens, 13 Chester Sq., Boston; William Gray, p. o. box 1689, Boston; Oliver Wendell Holmes, 296 Beacon street, Boston; Samuel May, Leicester; Samuel F. Smith, Newton Centre; Charles S. Storrow, 192 Beacon street, Boston; John J. Taylor, Owego, Tioga Co., N. Y.

The youngest of the above passed the line of eighty years in December last; and of course they are all to be regarded as "minute men."

There is a 9th "brother," who has so long been wont to attend our meetings, and in every way he could to identify himself with the class, that we always count him in: but he was not a graduate, having left college before he had completed his course, viz., Moses P. Stickney, an Episcopal clergyman, still doing a little service as such, being in his 84th year, of Royalton, Vt."

The Class Poem for 1876 has a peculiarly happy ending and if it be at all prophetic we shall be blessed with 1829 associations for many a day. That it may be true is the wish of all lovers of Dr.'s Holmes, May, Smith and others.

1876. "AD AMICOS"

"The boys we were, the boys we'll be
As long as three, as two, are creeping
Then here's to him - ah! Which is he?
Who lives till all the rest are sleeping;
A life with tranquil comfort blest
The young man's health, the rich man's plenty,
All earth can give that earth has best,
And heaven at four score years and twenty."

Sweetness and light—The cake our mother used to bake.—Boston Transcript.

School and College.

Williams College.

Williams College has not been so happy for a long time as she was on last Tuesday. The morning papers announced the fact that the Fayerweather will had been entered for probate, and we were sure of our $100,000. This, however, had been expected and did not cause much excitement. Later in the day the rumor spread around College that we were to be presented with three new buildings. This was startling news, but soon confirmed. Mr. F. F. Thompson, who has supported our annual course of lectures and concerts, and who gave so very liberally to the fund for the Mark Hopkins Memorial building so recently completed, now comes forward with a proposition to build for the college a series of three new buildings, namely, chemical, physical and biological laboratories. Of these the college has been in need for some time. It means a new expansion here in scientific work. The buildings are to be put up one each year so that all will be done for the great college centennial in 1893.

Dr. Carter, who is now at the head of the College has been very energetic in getting money for its work. During his term of ten years, he has, including these last gifts, added to the endowment of the College over a million dollars. All the friends of Williams hope he may keep on in the good work.

Worcester Polytechnic.

A meeting of the school Y. M. C. A., was held last Sunday afternoon. In the absence of E. L. Smith, it was lead by vice-president Derby, Messrs. Freed, and A. H. Smith the delegates appointed to attend the recent convention at Williamstown, made their report, after which Rev. C. M. Southgate gave an informal talk.

Queer enough after the copy for last week was all in, the plan for a school-pin took a new start. The senior class held a meeting and appointed A. L. Rice and H. H. Tracy, a committee to invite the lower classes to cooperate with '91 in its selection. This they did, and the joint committee of the upper three classes after examining several designs, finally decided upon one, which, at a meeting of the whole school last Monday they submitted for acceptance. Here, however, the pin which was merely a gold bar bearing the letters W. P. I., and the class number, surrounded by a semblance of a vine, met with very violent opposition. The meeting was very largely attended, and much interest manifested. Finally a premium of five dollars was offered for the best design, and competition left open until to-day noon. The result of it all, is that many of the students are looking for the prize, and in all probabilities, the committee will have a large number of sketches from which to select. There is little doubt now but that the school will be able to adopt a handsome pin, and one which will not, like the first one submitted, be an eye sore to present and coming classes.

Another new society was formed last week which like every-thing here, is intended for work. Several of the Civils and Chemistry became interested last winter in the subject of sewage, and after talking the matter over with Profs. Kinnecutt and White, organized this society, to be known as the Sanitary Engineer's Club. A constitution was adopted, and the following officers elected. Pres. F. B. Knight, '92; secretary and treasurer, Nathan Heard, '93; executive committee, the President, A. D. Flynn, '93. Any student of the Civil, Chemistry or Political Science Courses, is eligible to membership. The object of the club is the study of sewage and its disposal, water supply, aqueduct, etc.

A better school for such an organization, can hardly be imagined, for Worcester and its sewage system, is attracting much attention, and Dr. Kinnecutt, who is one of the patrons of the society, is an acknowledged authority upon the subject, he having for the last two or three years devoted much time to it.

Semi-annual examinations in those studies which are taken but during a quarter of a year, have commenced, recitations are receiving something of a shaking-up, and everyone is preparing to settle down for the "home stretch" after vacation.

The last number of the W. P. I., under the present management, will appear next week. With this issue, the senior editors, Messrs. Kinsley, O'Regan, Dunbar and Bayard retire, and the paper passes into the control of the class of '92. It has been unusually well conducted during the past year and Messrs. Kinsley and O'Regan are especially deserving of credit for their work upon it. The Middlers who now take it in hand, have heretofore shown considerable lack of interest in this representative of the Institute's journalism, having until recently had but one man on the staff, hence the withdrawal of the senior delegation will handicap the paper more than usual.

High School.

The Senior class has effected the following organization: President, Charles P. Haselden; vice-president, Miss Daisy Keyes; secretary, Miss Lulu Morgan; treasurer, Harry Ames; executive committee, Harry S. Davis, chairman, Miss May Winn, George P. Davis, Miss Grace Dean; J. Morrissey, Harry A. Billings, Miss Alice Brown.

McKay & Hughes! It will sound rather queer for a while. But used often enough, the tongue will get accustomed to it as will the ear also. A rose by any other name will smell as sweet. The Boston store, under its new management will still open its doors wide to the public. The gentleman whose names are now at the head, have had long experience in their business. They may be said to have grown into it. They have both profited by their intercourse with Denholm and McKay.

A party of friends of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Tarbox of 49 Irving street made a surprise call at their home, Monday evening, it being the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage. Mrs. Tarbox was presented by A. H. Winslow, in behalf of the company, with a silver basket filled with silver dollars. Mr. Tarbox was not present, being detained in Boston by business. The guests were entertained by Mrs. Tarbox, music, games and refreshments serving to pleasantly take up the time until a late hour.

The Chickering Piano.

The High Artistic Reputation of the Celebrated Instrument.

The splendid record which the Chickering piano has achieved during nearly three-quarters of a century past has placed this instrument in a most eminent position in the musical world.

The list of celebrated musicians who have indorsed the Chickering piano includes the most famous artists of the last half century.

The tribute which has been paid this instrument has been especially valuable on account of the large number of public performances given by these artists when they have used their favorite instrument, the Chickering piano.

Messrs. Chickering & Sons have maintained the high standard of their manufacture, and have, therefore, been well enabled both to add to the fame and increase the reputation of their instruments.

In the last and present season the American public have had the opportunity of hearing De Pachmann, the famous virtuoso, in his performances on the Chickering piano. It has been universally conceded that the instrument used by this artist has been thoroughly responsive to his needs, and has been a chief factor in aiding his remarkable success as a pianist.

The De Pachmann recitals have been a sensation in the musical world, and both the artist and his instrument have been awarded the highest commendation from the most critical quarters. The daily press has in many instances made special mention of the Chickering Piano at the De Pachmann concerts, and has praised this instrument in unqualified terms for its marvelous qualities.

The great success attained by Madame De Pachmann in her recital at Chickering Hall this week is told in another column. Her delicate manipulation of the instrument charmed beyond expression the elegant audience assembled, which included a number of professional players. Mme. De Pachmann won every heart; and undoubtedly one reason of her great success lay in the fact that this artiste used a piano which responded so felicitously to her dainty touch. The charm of the player was enhanced by the charm of the instrument.

The progress made by the Chickering piano is one of the notable indications of the advance of the trade generally. This firm is not content with things which even content their patrons, but are on the alert for such improvements as study or mechanical ingenuity can devise. Their progress during 1890, when new scales and styles were introduced, is a matter of record. The present year will probably prove its parallel, for the onward march of invention cannot be stayed, the development of the happy results of artistic taste and practical mechanical skill cannot be checked. Bright as has been the record of the Chickering piano, with its ample list of eminent players, its significant display of medals and prizes, the future we are convinced is destined to outshine the past.

The reader who fails to scan A. H. Hinman's advertisement will lose a good chance to find out something about a short cut to short hand writing.

---

DENHOLM & McKAY,

SPECIAL NOTICE.

ACCORDING TO THE PROVISIONS OF OUR CO-PARTNERSHIP PAPERS, WE, THE SURVIVING PARTNERS OF THE FIRM OF DENHOLM & McKAY, ARE UNDER OBLIGATIONS TO PAY THE HEIRS OF THE LATE WM. A. DENHOLM HIS ENTIRE INTEREST IN SAID FIRM WITHIN 60 DAYS. IN ORDER TO DO THIS, WE FIND IT NECESSARY TO MATERIALLY REDUCE OUR PRESENT VERY LARGE STOCK AS QUICKLY AS MAY BE POSSIBLE, AND TO THIS END THE STORE WAS CLOSED ON FRIDAY, MARCH 13, THAT WE MIGHT MAKE A DECIDED MARK-DOWN ON ALL OUR GOODS. WE OPEN ON THIS SATURDAY MORNING AT EIGHT O'CLOCK, AND WILL OFFER OUR ENTIRE STOCK AT PRICES LOWER THAN WERE EVER BEFORE OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC OF WORCESTER. FOR FULL PARTICULARS SEE SATURDAY, SUNDAY AND MONDAY MORNING PAPERS.

R. J. McKAY,
J. J. HUGHES,

SURVIVING PARTNERS OF DENHOLM & McKAY.

---

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s New Books.

The Sisters' Tragedy,
With Other Poems, Lyrical and Dramatic. By T. B. ALDRICH.
Crown 8vo, gilt top, $1.25.

Francis Wayland.
Vol. 4 of American Religious Leaders. By Professor JAMES O. MUR-
RAY, of Princeton. 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.
An excellent book on an illustrious educator and a great religious leader.

The Crystal Button.
Or, Adventures of Paul Progression in the Forty-ninth Century. By CHAUNCEY THOMAS. Edited by GEORGE HOUGHTON. 16mo, $1.25.

This story is a long look forward to the vast progress which may be made in the next three thousand years, through the orderly evolution of the forces and intelligence now operating in science, and in the realm of humane and religious thought.

Captains of Industry.
Second Series By JAMES
PARTON. 16mo, $1.25.

Brief biographies of nearly fifty persons who in various ways have contributed to the world's resources for progress.

The Biglow Papers.
By JAMES RUSSELL L. WELLS.
First and Second Series in one volume.
Popular Edition. 12mo, $1.00.

A Browning Guide-Book.
A Guide-Book to the Poetic and Dramatic Works of Robert Browning. By GEORGE WILLIS COOKE.
Crown 8vo, gilt top, $2.00; with sets of Browning, $1.75.

As it is in Heaven.
By LUCY LARCOM. 16mo, $1.

A timely book for Easter, containing reflections on the future life—reflections so fresh and devout, that they will appeal with peculiar charm to all serious-minded readers.

Easter Gleams.
Charming Easter Poems. By LUCY LARCOM. 75 cents. An excellent Easter gift.

John Wesley.
A timely book on this great religious leader. By Canon OVERTON, Rector of Epworth. With Portrait and
Index. $1.00.

* For sale by all Booksellers. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

Books and Bookmen.

Are we to lose, altogether, the gentle occupation of book selling? Will some future
Phillips chronicle this business among other lost arts? The huckstering off of a lot of gilt edged tawdry along with dry goods, groceries, etc., is not book selling in its best sense. The man who sells me a book must be one who, himself, loves books. When he opens to a page, there must be in his eye that glance of affection that a lover casts upon his maid. A book is something more than a combination of paper, ink, thread and cloth. What a benefactor is he who can make others see and feel this pleasure that he takes in his books.
The book lover will never sigh for diversion.
Rather will he crave more hours that he may look upon his beloved. How are the mighty fallen! How few stores are now given wholly to this most useful calling! In all sorts of ways they are bolstering up their cause. Now it is blank books and toys. Anon, wall paper is piled up and a Providence firm has moved in candy.

Of course there are dealers in old books, but they too suffer from the encroachments of so-called cheap literature; too often only cheap nastiness. Ladies love to go shopping.
They like to turn over pretty prints and patterns. Why can't they also see beauties in the infinite varieties of the book binders art. Let the book-seller be encouraged and the publisher, he who prints good books, let his name be written among the benefactors of his race.

In the good old University town of Oxford, England, there are many book stores. We run upon them in all sorts of places. They are big and little. Do the three thousand students in the city render their existence possible or are the citizens more bookish than the dwellers in, say Worcester? They are excellent books, too, that the Oxford seller puts out; none of the tinsel, Dutch metal covered stuff that dazzles the eye in our places of sale.
Oh for the days of Lackington and others of his guild when there was money in the business as well as honor and pleasure. Give the book-sellers a chance.

The March Wide Awake bristles with good things, from Margaret Sidney's inimitable Pepper Serial to Miss Poulsson's Scandinavian Witch Story; from Hon. John D. Long's article on "Our Government," with its page portrait of Hamilton, to Mrs. William Claffin's Letter on the behavior of young people to their elders and superiors; from Oscar Fay Adams' illustrated visit to Winchester College to hear the boys sing the famous old Commencement song, "Dulce Domum," to Mrs.
Ormsbee's graphic account of "How Grandmother's Spoons Were Made;" from articles by the learned men of the Smithsonian Institution the four sparkling pages of original anecdote known as the "Men and Things" pages; these and many more stories, poems, pictures and articles give a wide range of first-class family reading. Wide Awake is $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, publishers, Boston.

The Ladies Home Journal, Philadelphia, for this month has the usual number of interesting and instructive articles. Several columns are given up to the Prince of Wales and his family. A paper with a portrait of Mrs. Gladstone will attract all who see this number of the magazine. The two chapters of Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney's story are thoroughly enjoyable. A column for those who wish to earn their own living; Dr. Talmage talks on the influence of a good woman;

The Editor's page; The King's Daughters;
the question page; the needle work; the fashion papers; and the recipes; all go to make up a paper that might be called a magazine, it is so full of magazine literature. A new department is taken up this month on Art edited by Maude Haywood.

The Pansy, published by D. Lothrop and Company, Boston, is at hand. I am sure its little readers cannot fail to be pleased with its contents. It is different from the other magazines in that it has a portion for each week, as if it were a paper, and bound at the end of the month. Nothing could be nicer than its stories to read to the children on Sunday.
Price $1.

The Cottage Hearth is another of the good magazines to come to our desk. Its first article is on Africa, the Angola coast line. The talk with young girls by Hope Harvey is one of the best things in the magazine. Sketches of Blanche Willis Howard and Anna Sewell are pleasant reading to those who would know about the authors of the day. The story "Out of the Snow" is ended satisfactorily, but there is another continued story to take its place in interest. Unlike most of the magazines the Hearth has two pages of music. It has many papers on many topics of interest, and is in every sense of the word a home magazine.

The Practical Mechanic for February, F.
S. Blanchard and Company, publisher, Front street, is as usual an excellent number. Aside from the full and complete description of Worcester and other machinery there are some wise words on money stringency, etc. It is highly creditable that our city can maintain such an excellent publication. $1 per year.

St. Nicholas has for its frontispiece a study of two puppies asleep. There is a poem accompanying it. Four chapters of "The Fortunes of Toby Trafford" will delight those who are following him in his various doings.
"Elfie's Visit to the Moon and Cloudland" is sure to charm all who read the wonderful things seen in those rarely visited regions.
"My Autograph Book" is one of the best articles in this number, telling about and giving fac similes of many noted autographs. The "Boy Settlers" turn their first furrow and begin corn planting in this number. A short story by Amy Nilson, of how Rhoda went visiting and her troubles with a much furbelowed frock that she was expected to wear.
A story of Greenland, about a bear and how a little girl saved her brother from him, is interesting to those who like adventure. A sketch by Elizabeth Bisland; a Christmas dream; a bit about Alaska; and several pages of "A Little Girl's Diary in the East" together with a short story of "Pauline and the Policeman" forms the principal part of the magazine, but there are poems, and pictures, and the puzzles, and Jack-in-the-pulpit, and the letter box, to interest all who wish to be entertained or instructed.

"The last three years have seen a steady falling off in the total number of books published in England. Last year there were 5,735, including new books and new editions; in 1889, 6,067; and in 1888, 6,591. A year ago the London Academy accounted for this decrease on the theory that the newspapers, reviews and magazines were supplying the wants of the public and were taking the place of books. The English figures for 1890 go to confirm this view; but the extraordinary productivity of American authors has turned the tide upward in this country. The figures for 1890 are not much below the maximum for 1886, when the extraordinary number of 4,676 books was published.

In this country famous writers, especially novelists, are turning more and more to the newspapers for a first market for their works, and the influence upon the book trade of the newspaper and of the half dozen great magazines is a matter that may become of as great importance in this country as it now seems to be in England.—New York Press.

A wide range of readers will be pleased with the March New England Magazine. The lover of Rebellion matter will turn to Harvard College in the War and he will be charmed thereby. Some Recollections of Slavery is all too short. The scientist will enjoy the "Early History of Electricity in America." "A Master from the States" in Western dialect is excellent. "Indian Corn as our National Flower" is well worked out; but Miss Clarke forgets that in National flowers and symbols we are not given to including that which is useful. The mule would be better in most respects than the eagle, but Americans would scoff at the idea. So with the idea of Maize as our emblem. The thought of Johnny Cake material in connection with the national flower would excite merriment from the beginning. It won't do, though it is beautiful. "A Way-faring Man" is a sad realistic picture of a tramp. "Photographic Illustrations in Poetry" is a fine adaptation of the amateur's power. "The Problem of the Unemployed" is for the benefit of the Political Economists and those who love their fellow men. "In an Old Attic" is natural enough to make one feel cobwebs all over head and elbows. Prof. Jameson of Brown brings his "History of Historic writing in America" down to the time of the Rebellion. "New England in New York" is a very good picture of the New England society in Gotham. In addition to these named are many other short stories and choice bits of verse. Published at 86 Federal street, at $3 per year. The New England Magazine deserves success.

From Colony to Commonwealth, stories of the Revolutionary days in Boston by Mina Moore Tiffany, Boston. Ginn and Company, 1891.

Here is a little book of one hundred and eighty pages that is calculated to inspire a love of national history in the childish mind. From diverse authentic sources the writer has drawn words and pictures till she has produced a most delightful work. There are maps, too, to make clear the topography of eastern Massachusetts one hundred years ago. The Memorial History of Boston furnishes many of the illustrations and excellent they are. It seems probable that the average boy will grow an inch, at least, in reading this record of the struggle of his sires against foreign oppression. As for men portrayed here there are George III., Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Hutchinson, Samuel Adams, Joseph Warren, Israel Putnam and General Washington. It is impossible to over estimate the value of such a book in its influence on children. The child that reads this or hears it read unless stupid is sure to grow up a loyal, patriotic citizen. Writer and publishers are deserving of praise as well as profits. It is admirably adapted for supplementary reading in the earlier grades of the schools. In addition to the portraits named, there are twenty-six other excellent maps and pictures of scenes and incidents.

Magazine of New England, History, Vol. 1, No. 1, $2 per annum, quarterly. R. H. Tilley, Newport, R. I.

Mr. Tilley after a year of work over his Genealogical Notes, ambitiously sets out on a grander voyage. All his former readers will surely wish him great success in this undertaking. There are all sorts of Historical Journals, already in existence; but there certainly ought to be room for this one. To the gleaner, in historic fields, this pamphlet will be particularly welcomed. Our two hundred and fifty years of adventurous living ought to furnish material that is practically inexhaustible. From some topics in the number the following are selected, "The Early History of Bangor, Me.," "The Original Liberty Hall, Boston, Mass.," "Ancestry of General Grant," "Parentage of Roger Williams," etc. Old church records will be a special feature of the publication and Queries, Announcements, Wants, etc., will be prominent features. Lovers of history and genealogy had better send for a copy.

Dreams by Olive Schremer. Roberts Brothers, Boston, 1891. 60 cents.

Following the picture of a beautiful face, that of the writer, comes the above title. Ralph Iron was the name assumed in her story of an African Farm. In these days of African story as set forth by Haggard, one turns to a book whose preparatory note is written in that Dark Continent, wondering whether he is to find the more of the later Englishman or of that earlier one who wrote another African fancy, Rasselas. We find neither. The book is peculiar to itself. It has the glow of southern skies, and titles that suggest the desert and the wilderness. Why write of dreams? Ik Marvel's Dreamland has spoiled most readers for any thing of the kind from other writers; but here are dreams and more. Here are thoughts, and hopes and aspirations and glimmers of the life to come. There is nothing of the Edgar Allen Poe in the fancies. They are not of the earth, earthy. They are of the spirit, and only souls with soul cravings will care to read them. For the quiet hour when we would be lifted from our surroundings and thus forget our besetments we will gladly read Dreams.

Educational Review edited by Nicholas Murray Butler, Ph. D., March, 1891. "The Growth of New England Colleges by Arthur M. Comey is a very effectual contradiction of the oft repeated statement that less persons go to college today than formerly in this part of the country. Taking the colleges themselves for a term of years, a steady upward growth is shown. "The Primary School in the Middle Ages," by Brother Azarias, has facts enough; but the peculiar way of putting things does not make it attractive. There is the "Second Part of Herbartian System of Pedagogics" by Charles De Garno and "The Psychological Study of Children" by Joseph Jastrow closes the list of set articles. Discussions are had on the "Pronunciation of Greek" by G. C. Sawyer, "Imagination in Mathematics" by Larkin Dunton, and Henry Wood gives the "Results of the Prussian Commission on School Reform." Editorials on "The Work of the Bureau of Education," "Compulsory Study of Greek," "President Eliot's Report," "Politics in South Carolina," "School Text Book Legislation" and "Inauguration of President Thwing are all specially valuable. The Reviews of current educational literature are entertaining and instructive. $3 per year.

The Speakers' Library, the latest and most popular library gems for public and parlor entertainment, edited by Daphne Dale. Chicago and Philadelphia, Elliott & Beezley, 1891.

This book, obviously, was prepared by a reader, one who recognized and appreciated a good thing in prose or verse. The old and popular selections are here as well as those of a later date. If an interested party will reflect for a moment and recall the name of any particular favorite and then turn to The Speakers' Library, the chances are that he will find it. From the family circle, the best place in the world for reading aloud, to the public platform, this book cannot help being exceedingly valuable. Nor need the reader be a so-called elocutionist. Any one with an ear and a voice will enjoy these papers. Perhaps the very best that can be said of it is that were the choicest pieces in Garrett's 100 Choice Selections be taken in sufficient number to make up these four hundred pages we should get no better collection. The Worcester agent is Mrs. H. A. Skinner, who may be addressed at No. 3 Cottage street.

The Davis Art Company is still keeping up with the times and in the store, on Pearl Street, opposite the Post Office, is making an attractive showing. In the window may be seen a large and choice assortment of easels. They are well worth the careful inspection of all art lovers. Entering, the visitor finds a fine array of goods to please the eye. They are cheap or costly and, oftentimes, a bit of real beauty can be purchased very cheaply owing to the modern methods of reproduction. Cheapness and necessary worthlessness long since parted company. Easter is approaching and this firm will be ready with an excellent assortment of cabinet frames and novelties for your inspection. Call and see.

Any fantastic manner of fastening a jacket is approved, and the more impossible the fastening seems the more fashionable is the garment. One of the latest models has the fastening on each shoulder only, and nowhere else, and it is put on like a true jersey. It is certainly more novel than beautiful or convenient.

A Day's Excursion in Colorado

BY DAVID EDMUND MARCH.

In no part of the world has the grandeur and beauty of nature been unfolded to a greater degree than in the state of Colorado. It is equally true that the state can boast of no fairer or more interesting locality than the city of Colorado Springs and its environments. The town is situated on a Mesa or tabieland nearly six thousand feet above sea level and about five miles east of the foot hills of the Rocky Mountains. West of the town and between it and the foot hills, is found that world renowned spot, the Garden of the Gods, interesting, not only on account of its peculiar situation and grotesque forms in sand and lime stone, but also on account of its beautiful coloring. The land south of the Garden and intervening between Colorado Springs and the foot hills, is rolling and broken by sharp ridges. Standing on the high plateau west of the town and looking south and toward the foot hills, one can form an idea of how the ocean might look were it to become petrified during a storm. This strange configuration is very striking. Within easy driving distance from Colorado Springs the Cheyenne Canons, north and south, beautiful with their rushing streams and splashing, sparkling cataracts, penetrate the mountain range. Williams Canon, that mighty monument to nature's Architect and Builder entering the mountains farther to the north, leads to the Cave of the winds. Midway between these canons Ute Pass climbs the steep mountain side and winds its circuitous way westward. This pass was formally the wagon road to Leadville. Over it were hauled both ore from the mines and provisions for the miners. Since the advent of railroads, however, it has fallen into comparative disuse. Manitou, the Saratoga of the west, is situated in a snug little wedge shaped valley, penetrating the foot hill directly west of Colorado Springs. Here tourists and invalids find shelter in fine hotels and drink health and happiness from sparkling iron and soda springs. Such, in memory ever dear and fascinating, was our starting point.

It was on one of those beautiful summer mornings, for which Colorado is so famous, that we stood on the platform of the Denver and Rio Grande railroad station waiting for the train. We were off for a day's pleasure; a visit to that mighty work of nature, the Grand Canon of the Arkansas River. The air was clear and bracing making motion a delight; in fact it was one of those days when from the high ground in the rear of the town the shining summits of the Spanish Peaks can be seen a hundred miles away, on the southern horizon.

The ride over the brown plain seems monotonous at first, but one soon learns to love a Colorado landscape, so different is it from our own New England. At first sight the soil seems unable to support anything approaching an eastern man's idea of vegetation. Upon closer inspection, however, little stalks of dry grass with bunches of seeds at the top, are discovered. This is the famous Buffalo grass, upon which cattle fatten as upon the choicest of grain. The green shoots from the roots of this grass, nourished and coaxed by the showers of spring and early summer, having forced their way through the hard earth, give a look of freshness to the landscape. The broad expanse of prairie is covered, also, with a most wonderful carpet of wild flowers. First and very early comes the blue Anemone. Then a little white star-shaped flower forces its way through the earth to the sunlight. Each succeeding week adds new varieties, until crimson, purple, blue, white, orange and yellow are blended into one magnificent mass of color and the brown floor of the plain is hidden with a carpet woven by Omnipotence. The expression, "Wild flowers of Colorado," has become synonymous with beauty and variety. This state of verdure, however, lasts only while the showers continue to fall. Later the hot sun and wind deprive the grass stems of moisture, leaving them dry and brittle. The flowers also disappear and the soil again takes on its unproductive appearance. It is said that appearances in other things are often deceitful, but they are always so in regard to this Colorado soil. The gray brown of the prairie is, here and there, broken by the gleaming green of wheat fields, made more green by contrast with the prevailing dullness, where by bringing to his aid the clear mountain streams, the farmer raises crops that might well make New England husbandmen envious; in fact, it requires only the life-giving properties of water applied at regular intervals and the farmer's culture, to make this apparently barren waste not only "Blossom as the rose" but also "Give seed to the sower and bread to the eater." Thickets of willows and groves of cottonwood, growing along the water courses, thread the plain with lines of green like the veins of a leaf. Here and there herds of cattle or droves of horses either feed on the grass or with distended nostrils dash away from the track at sight and sound of the train. These are life giving touches to the picture.

The railroad runs almost due south until Pueblo is reached. Pueblo is a growing young city, quite unique in some respects, but in others, much like a majority of western towns. In the past, when it was a frontier town, Pueblo was very lively, so far as all kinds of iniquity make a town lively. It is improving, however, and has even reached the beatific state of having on its statute book, a law forbidding any person to conduct a faro bank or other game of chance on the ground floor of any building. Gambling must go up higher. Pueblo is built upon sandy bluffs bordering the river. The surroundings of the city are not picturesque. The dry brown prairie covered with bunches of cacti or sabre plant and tufts of coarse grass and sage brush, does not make an inviting landscape. But when the strong winds that prevail during a part of the year, catch up the sand and hurl it through the streets in clouds of alkali dust, then more than ever one wishes for the green sward of New England. During the remainder of the year, Pueblo has a beautiful climate. The city contains large manufacturing establishments, both smelting and steel works, also beautiful residences and fine public buildings. In strong contrast may be seen the adobe huts of low caste Mexicans, built under the bluffs along the banks of the river. The city is fast becoming a great railroad centre, the Missouri Pacific, the Santa Fe, and the Rio Grande north, west and south. Taking the branch running west, we continued our journey to Canon City where we stopped for dinner.

Although not as large as Pueblo, Canon City is a thriving town. It is the centre of a large coal producing district which furnishes the best coal found in Colorado. Here the locomotive that had drawn the train to this point was detached. A powerful freighter, capable of hauling the train up the steep grade into the canon, took its place.

Now all was expectation. We were about to visit one of the famed spots of the world. Were we to meet with disappointment? In our most sanguine mood we had not pictured half the grandeur unfolding in ever increasing ratio as we advanced. On entering the canon it seemed, at first, like an ordinary railroad cut of considerable breadth, but the sides grew higher and more precipitous, the channel of the river narrower, until there was only room for the seething current and the narrow shelf upon which lay the rails of the track. The height of sublimity is reached about half way up the canon, at the Royal Gorge. Here the narrow shelf that has supported the railroad disappears entirely and the chasm is bridged. Iron arms extend from one rocky wall to the other and from these a bridge is suspended. Imagine yourself standing upon what seems a frail iron structure, the rushing, roaring, yellow current of the great river in a channel not over one hundred feet wide beneath you, and perpendicular walls of rock rising to a height of over two thousand feet above you, and you will have some idea of the Royal Gorge in the Grand Canon of the Arkansas. Eternal twilight and the voice of the onrushing river reign.

The question may be asked, "What force in nature produced this gigantic cleft into the very heart of the range." The answer is, "The same force that in the spring covers the brown plain with the beauty of green grass and many colored flowers." Water might well be called the Patron Saint of Colorado. Falling gently in the showers of spring or running quietly along in irrigating ditches, it furnishes both food for man and beast and beauty to the landscape. Rushing with irresistible power, and often in great volume, from the highest peaks it has worn away the solid rock of the mountains and opened avenues to the very heart of the range. But for the existence of these mountain canons, it would have been almost impossible to build railroads to the great mining centers or to have the easy communication with the Pacific Slope, now enjoyed.

In a short time the train moved on to the little station at the western end of the canon. Here we parted from the great freight engine. The regular locomotive was again attached and we were soon speeding toward Colorado Spring.

A visit to this exhibition of nature's power may well be considered as one of the events of a life time. The beholder is filled with awe and reverence, and experiences a sensation similar to that produced by strains of martial music. Truly, in the beauty and majesty of Colorado's scenery, nature's music is heard in ever varying tones. There are the soft notes of showers, of springing grass and flowers. There are the merry dancing measures of the beautiful mountain brooks, whirling over their rocky beds and falling in sparkling cataracts to the plain. But in the Grand Canon, with the mighty voice of the river shut in and echoed and re-echoed by the towering cliffs, the bass notes are heard in thunderous tones and the diapason of nature's great organ not only furnishes the accompaniment, but also swells into the anthem's theme.

"To him who in the love of nature, holds
Communion with her visible forms, she speaks
A various language."

Particular.

The following anecdote, which I recently heard, is too good to be lost: especially as the parish in question is not the only one which needs the reproof of the Doctor's ready wit.

The people in one of the out parishes in Virginia, wrote to Dr. Rice who was then at the head of the Theological Seminary in Prince Edwards for a minister. They said they wanted a man of first rate talents, for they had run down considerably, and needed building up. They wanted one who could write well, for some of the young people were very nice about that matter. They wanted one who could visit a good deal, for their former minister had neglected that, and they wanted to bring it up. They wanted a man of very gentlemanly deportment for some thought a great deal of that. And so they went on, describing a perfect minister. The last thing they mentioned was, they gave their minister $350; but if the doctor would send them such a man as they described, they would raise another $50, making it $400. The doctor sat right down and wrote a reply, telling them they had better forthwith make out a call for old Dr. Dwight, in heaven; for he did not know of anyone in this world who answered this description. And as for Dr. Dwight he had been living so long on spiritual food, he might not need so much for the body and possibly he might live on $400.

S. J. A.

A not-very-old grandmother had her four-year-old grandson accompany her on a shopping tour this week; while walking about the little fellow persisted in walking in all the water he possibly could. He was requested not to do it; still he persisted. His grandmother turned to him and said: "Harry, do you hear me?" "Yes;" said he, "and I should think the whole United States would hear you."
—Clinton Courant.

A Worcester business man was recently telephoned by his wife to bring home a yeast cake. In some way, he was a trifle late. "What makes you so late" is the question which greets him? I had to stop to buy a razor". Be it known he has not shaved for years. "What are you going to do with a razor, are you going to cut off your whiskers"? Business man, is radiant as he hands over the yeast cake and says "Going to raise bread with it of course".—Tableau.

Bancroft studied how to prolong life, believed that fat meant an early decline, and that the race of life was for the lean. Up to within five years he rode four or five hours a day on horseback; then he was thrown and took up pedestrianism, and soon was able to walk four or five miles a day, and kept it up, except when sick, until within a few days of his death. "He was almost a sun worshipper;" always did his work in the morning and in a sunny-room.

As Others See Us.

From Worcester County.

"I think your paper excellent and fills a place long vacant in Worcester. I hope the people will appreciate and place it on a firm foundation."

From Michigan.

A. S. Roe, Editor of Light:

"I have preserved every copy from the original one, with a view to having them bound, and should feel sorry to lack one copy to complete the volume. Since making my home in the west, I value the paper next higher than the correspondence of my dear friends in Worcester and I find myself looking forward to Monday morning of every week with wonder in my mind whose familiar face I shall see engraved on LIGHT's first page. This morning I was agreeably surprised and pleased to see that of a personal friend, Mr. Jerome Wheelock, who has been so successful in life, taking for a business motto, "God helps them that help themselves. Diligence is the mother of good luck." He justly deserves the record behind his picture, and is indeed a man who has set a grand example which would be wise for every young man to follow who has a desire to succeed in life; let nothing stand in the way, remove or overcome every obstacle, it can be done. Mr. Wheelock has proved that it has been done."

From Connecticut.

"I am much interested in your paper and knowing it cannot fail to be valuable would like to subscribe for one year."

ENTERTAINMENTS.

The "Confederate Spy" will be played at Horticultural Hall next Friday evening under the auspices of Industry Council, Junior Order of United American Mechanics. The cast will be the same as when the play was given at the First Universalist Church, January 9. It consists of George E. Burr, Walter B. Cummings, Edward B. Fish, William J. Clarke, Wilson A. Spiers, Charles H. Rowe, Fred B. Conklin, J. Herbert Adams, Mellie W. Brigham, Miss Emma G. Mills, Miss Myrtle E. Northrup, Miss Lottie M. Hubbard and Fred W. Hoppin.

Worcester Lodge, No. 107, Order of the Fraternal Circle celebrated its first anniversary at Continental Hall, last week Friday evening. The entertainment was given by the Worcester Ideal Concert Company. Lalone's orchestra furnished music for dancing and Zahonyi provided refreshments. The attendance was very large.

The Woman's Relief Corps held its annual bean supper and entertainment in Grand Army Hall last week Friday evening. The entertainment consisted of a piano solo by Miss Minnie Rice; a song by Harry Robinson with Miss Mamie Ruddy, accompanist; reading by Miss Mae Lawrence; a song by Mrs. Webster Thayer with violin and piano accompaniment by Master Ernest Smith and Miss Emma L. Call; readings by Mrs. Lizzie Bowen; a song by Miss Emma Mills; a reading by Miss Lettie L. Haskell and a song by Harry Robinson. In conclusion Past Commander J. B. Lamb gave an account of his recent travels in the West.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

Years ago, when Nat Goodwin was giving imitations of popular actors throughout the country, Frank Mayo met John Ellsler in Pittsburg. Mayo had been to see Goodwin's performance and he was gloomy. Said he, "Have you seen young Goodwin?" Ellsler replied that he had. "How did you like his imitations?" Ellsler said they were immense. "Um-m," mused Mayo, "What did you think of his imitation of me?" "Great," exclaimed Ellsler, "it is the best thing he does." Mayo was silent for a moment, then, with impressive force, he ejaculated, "I'm blanked if I don't change my style of acting."

Henry E. Dixey is reported as having reformed, and has not touched liquor or tobacco for a year.

John M. Ward and wife (Helen Dauvray) have become reconciled.

Eugene Oudin, late tenor of the McCaull Opera Company, has made an immense success in London, where he has become the greatest musical favorite ever sent abroad from America.

The Dramatic News recently published a sensational four page article on the last days of Lester Wallack, charging that the end of his life was embittered and hastened by the perfidy and dishonesty of his lieutenant, Theodore Moss, and then contradicted the whole thing in a four line item in the next issue.

Rice's Evangeline, after conquering the rest of the English speaking world, is going to Australia.

Sol Smith Russell met with a serious loss last week by the burning of the Russell building in Minneapolis in which much of his money was invested.

Melodrama will be heard no more after this season. The tremendous success of "The Fakir," "A Straight Tip," "City Directory," "Natural Gas" and the rest, has set every manager crazy after farce comedy. Fanny Rice, the Casino favorite, has joined the majority and will star in a concoction called "Everything Goes." It is to be hoped for her sake that it will.

At the meeting of the Sons of Scotia in St. George's Hall last week Friday evening, resolutions, relating to the death of W. A. Denholm, the first president of the society, were adopted and Rev. Dr. McCullagh of Plymouth Church gave an eloquent address on the characteristics of the Scotch people.

A new whist club was formed at Hotel Kenmore last week Friday evening. Those present were Mayor and Mrs. F. A. Harrington, Gen. and Mrs. R. H. Chamberlain, Alderman and Mrs. A. Frank Gates, Capt. and Mrs. H. R. Williamson, Inspector and Mrs. D. H. Hayter, Mr. and Mrs. Waldo E. Sessions, Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Sessions, Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Woodcock, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Banfield, George Sessions, Miss Fannie A. Goss. The evening was spent playing whist, the first prizes being won by Frank E. Sessions and Mrs. F. A. Harrington. The club will be named at a later meeting. The meeting last evening was held at the residence of W. E. Banfield, 3 Crown street.

Just For Fun.

Some years ago, there walked into one of the stores on Main street, a man, who by his very cut, clearly showed himself a countryman, and in his way, asked, "if they kept hats?" It was a dry goods store and Tom J. was on deck, and he it was to whom the question was propounded. His ready answer was, "Why, of course, we are very low in that line just at present, but if you will walk down this way, I think I can fit you out." He thereupon took the man to the rear of the store and placing him before one of the mirrors in the cloak department, told him to wait a moment and he would bring him just the thing. Going to the closet, where the employer as well as the employees kept their apparel, he selected one of his employer's derbys, and having brushed it up in good shape, took it out to the would-be purchaser, telling the man that the hat was a little bit shop worn and on that account, he would make the price cheap. The hat proved a fit, and the man, after admiring himself in the glass awhile, bought it, paying a fair price for the same. The question with Tom now was, how could he account to his employer for the missing hat. True to his natural honesty, he decided to make a clean breast of the affair, and so he did, for after a short time the hat was missed, and in answer to inquiries he told how it had been sold to increase the sales for that particular day, and while the proprietor might criticise the selling, he could not find fault with the salesman.

One afternoon while talking with one of Tom's customers, (and by the way he had many) I was very much amused by the recital of a joke he had played on the very person with whom I was talking. She opened the conversation by saying, "That b'y is the divil." "Would ye think it, but one Sunday whin me old man and meself has just returned from mass, and I was after giting a dacent bit to ate, who should walk in but two of the neighbors, and rushing up, grabbed hould of me two hands and hoped I would not forget thim in my great fortune. I was thunderstruck, and th'ot they ware foolin when who should come in but two men, wishing long luck and plenty of it, and before I could regain my senses, I had a house full, all of thim congratulating me and wishing me good luck. I felt that mad that I could turn thim all out, when the idea came to me that Tom J. had been putting them up to it, and true enough, would ye believe it, that young divil had tould all me friends how I had been after fallen heir to $50,000 by he death of a rich relative in Ireland, and they had all come to make happy with me. Truly I forgive the b'y, for who could get angry with the likes of him."

N.

Plain Speaking.

There are people who take pride in their bluntness of speech and who seem to do away with the little niceties of politeness in dealing with their fellows. The clergyman, mentioned in the following true story, evidently thought heroic measures necessary.

A great many years ago a certain hill top in an old New England town, was crowned with a church, or meeting house, as it was called in those days.

The minister who preached in this church owned a little land and a cow, as the custom was in the olden time. South of this church-crowned hill-top and towering above it was another elevation known by the bible name of Mt. Ararat. The rocky sides of this mount made insecure footing for man or beast. It happened one day that the good minister's cow strayed from her pasture and attempted to climb Mt. Ararat. Like many another, "Who thinketh he standeth" she lost her footing and, falling on the sharp rocks at the foot of the precipice, was killed. The flock, one and all, hastened to condole with the pastor and express their sympathy for him. The minister fed upon the milk of wordy human kindness as long as he could without becoming too thin in flesh and then delivered the following exhortation from the pulpit. "I have lost my cow; you say you pity me. but you lie for pity brings relief". History fails to state the result of this direct communication from the good pastor, but if such a thing occurred in these days, in all probability, instead of getting a new cow, the minister would get a new pastorate or retire to private life.

D. E. M.

VOLAPÜK.

(All Volapük words used have been given in former numbers of the LIGHT.)

SUGIV VELID.

Fractions are shown by vöd dil meaning part, a. s. teldils kil, three halves; luldils fol, four fifths; tumdils tels, twenty hundredths.

Percent is dötum. Dötum 20 equals 20 per cent.

Per is a, a vig, per week.

Sentabs bals a düp, ten cents per hour.

Time is shown as follows:

Düps telsefol mekoms deli bal.

Dels vel mekoms vigi bal.

Vigs fol e dil mekoms muli bal.

Muls bassetel, vigs lulsetel, u dels kiltum mälselul e földil bal, mekoms yeli bal.

Dels viga penemoms.

Balüdel, Sunday.

Telüdel, Monday.

Kilüdel, Tuesday.

Folüdel, Wednesday.

Lulüdel, Thursday.

Mälüdel, Friday.

Velüdel, Saturday.

Zäl, holiday.

Muls penemoms—

Balul, January.

Telul, February.

Kilul, March.

Folul, April.

Lulul, May.

Mälul, June.

Velul, July.

Jölul, August.

Zülul, September.

Balsul, October.

Babul, November.

Batul, December.

Babul is a contraction of balsebabul, and batul is from bassetelul, ul is the ending of mul, month.

Tim dela pajonom ai dub

Düp mäld, sixth hour, u

Mäl su glok } Six on the clock.

Mäl lenglok }

} six o'clock.

In writing dates the usual order is year, month, day. 1891, kilul 9id.

The indefinite pönops are:

As subsats

Alim, each.

Ans, some (persons or things.)

Bos, something, anything.

Ek, some one, any one.

Nek, no one, nobody.

Nos, nothing.

Som, such (a one.)

It, self (after a possess. pron.)

Balim, votim, each other, one another.

As ladyeks.

Alik, each, every.

Anik, some, any.

Bofik, both.

Lölik, whole, entire.

Mödik, much, many.

Mödumlk, several.

Nemödik, a little, few.

Nonik, none, not any.

Semik, a certain.

Somik, such.

Teldik, many a.

Valik, all.

Votik, other.

Ladvelibs (adverbs) are formed from ladyeks e subsats dub posilab o; a. s. gudik, good. gudiko, well.

gudlik, kind; gudliko, kindly.

dom, house; domo in house.

There are many ladvelibs arbitrarily formed a. s.

So, thus. Te, only. Fi, nearly.

Tu, too. Za, about. Fö, in front.

Ge, back. Is, here. Pö, behind.

Us, there, Bo, of course. Ba, possibly.

Kimna? How many times? Kiöp? Where?

Kikod? Why? Kiüp? When?

No. No. Ai, Always.

Anu, at this moment. Denu, again.

Jünu, until now. Nog, still, yet.

Nu, now. Ofen, often. Ya, already.

The English expression I am as tall as you is rendered:

Binob sö gletik ka ol.

The principal conjunctions are:

ä. and at same time; ab, but; as, as, in the capacity of; äs, as like; asif, as when; bi, because; das, that; dat, in order that; do, although; du, during; e, and; i, also; ibo, for if; if; jus, till; ka, than; kludo, therefore; na, after; ni, neither, nor; pläs, besides; sis, since; so, so; u, or; uf, either; va, if, whether; ven, when.

Se spod obik.

Fa Paul Champ-Rigot, in Paris;—

Potob ole poedoti fa Victor Hugo, ko lovepolot volapükik fa ob. Ba ovilol lovepolön omi in "LIGHT" in püks kil.

Fa. A. Ritter, in Zürich;—

Labobs klubis in Bern, Solathurn, St. Gallen, Gossau, St. Gall, Zürich. Klub de St. Gallen binom balid e gletikün klubas jveizik. Klub de Zürich labom kopanalis za 20.

Binob potan in glebür de Zürich, e ogälos obi spodön ko potan melopik.

Vöds no jünu pegivöl.

Pot, mail; poed, poetry; vil, will; Jveiz, Switzerland; kopanal, member; potan, postman; glebür, chief office; gäl, jov; spod, correspondence; melop, America.

F. L. HUTCHINS.

Every one who approaches us owes something of his character to our influence, and the effect does not stop there. Like a magnetic current, it passes on from one to another; and no power of computation can ever measure its strength or its extent.

Lovers of Good Tea and Coffee

Should buy their goods where they can depend on always getting a pure, fresh article, of the best quality. Our many patrons will testify that this is true of the

*New England Tea Co.,***

273 MAIN STREET.

Give us a trial and be convinced.

D. A. HOWE.

MRS. MORGAN'S

Private School and Kindergarten,

Y. M. C. A. Building, 10 Elm Street.

SPRING TERM OPENS APRIL 6, 1891.

W. H. TWICHELL,

Gold, Silver and Nickel Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechanic St., Worcester, Mass.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,

BOOK * BINDING

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES

at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,

W. L. BROWN, Manager.

L. J. ZAHONYI,

Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Fashion.

Gold tinsel ruching will be of great assistance to those who have to depend on their own fingers for the manipulation of bonbonnières to send to their friends. It is bright looking, and easily used in ornamenting bags, baskets, flower tubes covered with brocade, plush, and so forth. The rose and chrysanthemum petal ruchings, too, are useful, for they save all the trouble of sewing on each petal separately.

The newest hair-pins, intended for those whose hair is too heavy to be retained in place by ordinary ones, are in the form of a double spiral pin and are literally screwed into the hair, and can only be taken out with some difficulty.

If the after Lent costumes are very light in color it must be noted that the very great delicacy in the tint is tempered by the darker figures, which bestrew the whole fabric at intervals and which are of larger size. Discs, palm leaves, crescents and other figures, are used more or less shaded in soft wools. Plain fabrics are sometimes combined with these large figured materials with good effect, particularly for short women. For early spring this attractive fabric will prove most acceptable for they are not alone appropriate, but have wearing qualities, and are for the most part in very artistic colorings.

There are softest, loveliest, fleeciest, plaided woolens with a surface as downy as a peach, and these are made on the bias, very simply, but very carefully so as to display all their finest qualities and the perfection of the weaving.

Woolen fabrics are far more in demand for the early spring costumes than those of silk. In fact, the most lovely silks are left entirely out of the category of fashion for spring street costumes, and crepe de chine takes their place for house gowns.

Apropos of the coming change in the fashion of sleeves it should be borne in mind that the modes which come to us from abroad are more or less exaggerated, the great mass of fulness in the upper sleeve, which we have been tolerating for a whole season, is much more exaggerated than any sleeve seen on imported models. In foreign fashions it is always safe to follow the moderate effects. Paris and London both send the modes which we are always making more and more ultra to suit the taste for extreme which seems to be indigenous to our country. The best models still have sleeves which are full on top but less full than formerly unless the real gigot sleeve is worn and that is used on dresses alone.

It is a mistake to think that the spring styles because they are simple are not elegant and even beautiful. Graceful lines and a lavish display of lovely tints go to make a very charming group of essentials, and may produce a harmonious effect. Richness of fabric is not the most striking characteristic of the season's modes, although there is a wonderful showing of exquisite material both for street as well as for house gowns. In cottons, for later on in the season, the fabrics are as beautiful as anything ever exhibited here.

The very full coachman's cape promises to be very popular and can well take the place of the fur shoulder cape in the first warm days of the spring, when heavy garments are irksome.

ALWAYS ON HAND!

VENISON, TURKEYS,
GEESE,

WILD GAME,
CHICKENS,
DUCKS,

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

EDWARD B. CLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

THE CRITERION

Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

DIAMONDS,

WATCHES,

JEWELRY

At Reasonable Prices.

J. P. WEIXLER, JEWELER,

323 Main St., Mechanics Hall Jewelry Store.

Diamonds, Watches, Sterling Solid Silverware, Rogers' Brother's, 1847, Silver Plated Tableware, Gold and Silver-Headed Umbrellas and Canes, Opera Glasses, Gold Spectacles and Eye-Glasses, Gold Pens and Pencils.

Fine Watch and Jewelry Repairing Done Promptly, in a Thorough Manner, and at Reasonable Prices.

J. P. Weixler

323 Main Street,

MECHANICS HALL BUILDING.

75 SLEIGHS

AT YOUR OWN PRICE.

Now is the time to buy. Plenty of sleighing ahead. Indications for the next six weeks,

Cold Weather and Snow.

Parties buying now, if they wish, I will store their Sleighs through the Summer free of charge. With some who have no room to store, this an offer worth considering. Buyers should buy now, and save at least 20 per cent.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,

OPP. THE COMMON.

The superiority of

*ROSE CREAM LOTION*

lies in the fact that it contains no Oils or Greasy Substances, no Chemical or Mineral Poisons, and will not injure the most delicate skin. Can be applied at any time; quickly absorbed. Ladies troubled with catchy fingers, working on silk and satin, will find it an excellent remedy. It will not leave the hands sticky.

For Gentlemen's use after shaving it is without an equal.

Try it. Get a

SAMPLE BOTTLE FREE.

Large bottles, 25c. Found in all first-class Drug stores. Prepared by

PERKINS & COMPANY, Sole Proprietors,
Worcester, Mass. BUSH & CO., Wholesale Agents.

STENOGRAPHY, WITH USE OF TYPEWRITER,

In CLASS or PRIVATE lessons. Thorough instruction. Personal attention given each student.

Rates for copying upon application.

Miss M. FRANCES DYER,

(Elevator). The Brunswick, 49 Pleasant St.

C. G. MARCY, BALL ORDERS, PROGRAMMS AND WEDDING INVITATIONS A SPECIALTY. 395 MAIN ST., cor. Pearl.

ARTISTIC PRINTING.

STARKIE'S DYE HOUSE,

254 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Ladies and Gents' Garments

Dyed and Cleansed

in a Superior Manner.

Tailoring Establishment.

Custom-Made goods at almost Ready-made Rates.

254 MAIN STREET.

Horace Kendall,

DEALER IN

Furniture, Ranges, Carpets

AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Goods sold on instalments if desired. Prices low as any house in New England.

No. 319 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Mechanics Hall Building.

Good to Eat.

Orange Cake.

Two cups of sugar, two cups of flour, one-half cup cold water, yolks of four eggs, whites of two eggs, two teaspoons Royal baking powder and the juice and grated rind of one orange. Beat the yolks and sugar, then add juice and rind of orange. next add the water, then flour and powder and last the whites of two eggs beaten stiff. Bake in three deep Washington pie tins. Beat the whites of two eggs stiff, add two cups of powdered sugar and the juice and grated rind of one small orange. Put this between the cakes and on top for frosting. L. A. W.

Lilla's Gems.

One egg, (well beaten) two tablespoonfuls sugar and one of butter, pinch of salt, one cup sweet milk, one teaspoonful soda dissolved in the milk and two teaspoonfuls cream of tartar sifted in flour enough to make a thick batter, bake in gem pans.

To Cook Potatoes Kentucky Style.

Slice potatoes thin, let them remain in cold water one-half hour. Drain and put into a pudding dish with salt, pepper and some milk, enough to nearly cover them. Bake till done (about one hour) and before serving put small bits of butter on top. S. J. A.

Ginger Puffs.

One-half cup each of sugar, molasses and water, one egg, one-fourth cup butter, two cups flour, one-half teaspoon soda and one teaspoon each of ginger and cinnamon. Drop on tins and bake. P. E. W.

Coffee Jelly.

One half box gelatine, soak in one-half pint cold water one-half hour, add one-half pint boiling water, add one-half pint strong boiled coffee, one cup sugar, pinch of salt and a few drops of vanilla, then strain into mould. L. A. W.

Cream of Clams.

Put one tablespoon of butter in sauce pan, when melted stir in a tablespoon of flour till smooth, add one quart of hot milk, a dozen clams chopped, pepper and salt and a little nutmeg. BESSIE.

Sponge Drops.

Beat to a froth three eggs, and add one cup sugar, stir into this one large cup flour, in which one teaspoon cream of tartar and one-half teaspoon soda are thoroughly mixed, flavor with lemon, drop by the teaspoon on buttered tins about three inches apart. Bake in a quick oven and watch closely as they will burn easily. L. A. W.

Tutti Frutti.

Soak one box of gelatine in one pint of cold water one half hour, add one pint boiling water, keep on the back of stove till dissolved, remove and add juice of two lemons, two cups sugar, strain and pour over the following fruits arranged in a deep bread dish or mould: three sliced bananas, two oranges divided into sections, one cup English walnuts, one-half cup stoned raisins. Set on ice to harden. L. A. W.

Orange Frosting.

The juice of one orange and sugar enough to make quite stiff, makes a very nice frosting for any kind of cake. S. J. A.

"All too soon these feet must hide
In the prison cells of pride;
Loose the freedom of the rod,
Like a colt's for work be shod."

Artistic Shoes	M	Sensible shoes
for	E	for
dress occasions.	C	comfort and service.
	H
	EZRA A. DAY.
	N
Tender and difficult	I	Heavy shoes feet fitted	C	for
with great care.	S	hard rugged service.
	H
Dainty styles in	A	Children's shoes
low	L	in
shoes and slippers.	L	good variety.
	S
Fine custom	S	School shoes which shoes	H	fit well
made to measure.	O	and wear well.
	E
	S
Each and every pair	T	Lowest prices to be warranted	O	found on
as represented.	R	goods of same quality.
	E.

"Accuse not Nature, she hath done her part:
Do thou but thine."

Mechanics Hall Shoe Store,

325 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

EZRA A. DAY.

The Readers of Light
I most cordially invite
To call at my

Model Drug Store

When in want of anything
They would expect to find

In a metropolitan establishment of its kind.

Respectfully,

Geo. E. Fairbanks, Druggist,

10 FRONT STREET.

J. W. GREENE,

P L U M B E R.

Dealer in Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces.
Steam and Gas Fitting. Jobbing in all its branches promptly attended to. Telephone
Connection. 51 Main Street, Cumming's block.

Worcester Coal Company,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

COAL. COAL.

General office, 18 Pearl St., Y. M. C. A.
Building; Yards, 23 Manchester St. and 319
Southbridge St.

P. & W.

A Pointed Question :

ARE YOU GOING TO GET MARRIED ?

If so, call and examine the Largest Stock of

HOUSE FURNISHINGS

in WORCESTER COUNTY, embracing

Furniture, Carpets, Crockery, Stoves and Ranges !

Chamber Set, 8 Pieces, $20.00
Parlor Suite, 7 Pieces, 45.00
All Wool Carpets, 65c. a yard
Dinner Sets, 112 Pieces, $9.39

ANDES RANGES,

Size 8 inch, for only

$20. $20.

And we can sell you a Good 7-inch Range
FOR $15.

Crawford Ranges.

We have them in all sizes and styles.

GOODS SOLD ON FOUR MONTHS' TIME AT CASH PRICES.

PINKHAM & WILLIS,

355 Main Street.

About Folks.

Mrs. G. W. Hubbard and her daughters, Misses Lottie and Addie, gave a reception last evening to a party of friends of the young ladies, in their apartments in the State Armory. Dancing was enjoyed from 8.30 to 12 o'clock, Steere's orchestra furnishing the music. During the evening refreshments were served by the hostess. A very pleasant time was enjoyed. The guests were J. Herbert Adams, Clarence R. Goddard, Walter H. Fuller, Ed. N. Norton, Arthur E. Richardson, George E. Burr, Charles F. Davis, Albert L. Bennett, Edward Powers, Harry Ames, Stanley C. Rood, Edward B. Fiske, A. C. Mirick, George M. Coe, Walter B. Cummings, M. W. Brigham, Miss Emma C. Mill, Miss Edith Sessions, Miss Laura J. Sessions, Miss Flora J. Burton, Miss Eva L. Truscott, Miss Mary Scott, Miss Sadie Hetherington, Miss Lizzie Warren, Miss Lizette Draper, Miss Clara B. Rood, Miss Isabel Harrington, Miss Cora L. Fisher, Miss Alice E. Denny, Miss Myrtie Northrup.

Ben T. Hammond is arranging for a series of recitals to be given at his studio, during Easter week.

The Misses Cashell and Layden will open their new millinery parlors in the Burnside building, next Friday. Both ladies have just returned from New York, where they have been for several weeks studying the latest styles in spring millinery. They are at present fitting up their fine apartment and by next Friday will be prepared to show all the newest fancies in millinery.

James S. Banister.

For many a year, the boys and girls of the High School have noticed at regular hours, a young man of erect stature and alert bearing go in and out at 23 Maple street. It was natural that they should note him for at his home for a long time one or more of their teachers have resided with his mother. Mr. James S. Banister was from 1870 to April last the book-keeper for E. G. Higgins & Co. and always attentive to his duties.

For some time past, however, he has been in failing health, and on Tuesday morning died at the age of thirty-eight years.

He was the son of Samuel Banister who was formerly the proprietor of the Exchange Hotel, corner of Main and Market Streets. His death will bring sadness to a wide circle and beyond that there are those who will sorrow with those who are in grief. Mr. Banister was educated in our public schools passing three years in the High School in Mr. Peterson's day. Coupled with unusual quickness of thought and aptness in learning, he had a refinement of taste that was noteworthy. Study was his pastime. In May last, he passed the Civil Service examination and while lying upon his sick bed in October last received an appointment in the Pension Office in Washington, too late, however, to be of any benefit to him. The funeral, a private one, was had at his late home at 11 a.m. Thursday, Dr. Merriman and the Rev. Mr. Bliss attending. The burial was in Rural Cemetery.

THE CLARK

SAWYER Co.

478 to 482 Main St.

LAMP SALE !

On TUESDAY, MARCH 17th,

We shall commence a sale of Lamps at Greatly Reduced
Prices. This will include Hundreds of Lamps which we propose to close out, without regard to cost.

See Monday's and Tuesday's papers for further particulars.

THE CLARK-SAWYER CO.

478 TO 482 MAIN STREET.

DYNAMOS.

The Rink Exhibition in spite of the very worst weather ever seen in Worcester flourishes.

Excursion trains from the vicinity of Worcester are beginning to run to the Exhibition.

What will the excursionist see? All that Science and Art have done to utilize this, one of the grandest discoveries in all time.

Could Volta whose name is found in every estimate of the power of Electricity visit the Rink he would be as much astonished as the veriest boy from the country. Modern research has grown away beyond him.

Were Galvani to happen in, he would jump as nimbly as did those frog's legs upon which he first experimented. He saw the beginning of the road leading up to the present.

Who can see the end? Many a boy who looks on today will be the improver, the inventor tomorrow. Dreams will yet be realized.

The Rink is a world of delight to the thoughtful person, old or young. Many an eye will open wider as it looks upon some of the results of Edison's magic genius.

The ancient days were those of fancies and imagination. The present is one of realizations.

New England Tradesmen and Mechanics have here placed their wares and on all sides are evidences of thought, study and work.

Fail not to go many times to see these wonders all under one roof.

General Admission, 25c.

Six Tickets for $1.

Children, 15c.

Ten for $1.

School and College.

Why doesn't Nature equalize things? Why don't those boys and girls who have a burning thirst for knowledge and whose purses are so very, very short have some of the money that their neighbors possess in abundance? Why don't some of those young people whose parents are so anxious to have them learn have just a trifle of that care and anxiety themselves? Why don't brains and money go equally by descent? Why don't, p'shaw! Why don't a thousand things? It is Nature's way of keeping things active in this hurrying, bustling world of ours. A father may be ever so anxious to have his child turn out well; but he can't buy the certainty. "Every man must work out his own salvation." A truth just as applicable in the mental as in the spiritual world. But there is light ahead for every worker, and thinker. Don't misunderstand. Hours over an open book, is not necessarily working. A fool could hold a book open wide.

Just what do the men want? Should criminals be kept in absolute idleness? Perhaps the adopters of the following resolutions would have them killed. They forget that Concord is a Reformatory. The trades are degraded only when such resolutions are drafted and voted.

The City Council of the Carpenters' Union at a meeting at Boston yesterday, unanimously declared that the establishment of trade schools in penal institutions directly tends to degrade the dignity of honest workmen by scattering throughout the state a lawless class of irresponsible mechanics, who are enabled, by reason of the institution maintained at Concord, to associate upon terms of equality with law-abiding, upright and respected mechanics, and it was resolved that the Council believes that the establishment of such a school by the state is an improper exercise of authority and an unconstitutional expenditure of public money. It was decided to co-operate with the plumbers and all other tradesmen who should make an effort to have the trade school complained of abolished.

The Kindergarten of Mrs. Morgan in the Y. M. C. A. building is well worth a visit from any parent who likes to see children happy. The prompting there received is sure to tell throughout all the subsequent school life of the child. There have been several attempts at this kind of schools in our city; but in 1884 two ladies set about the matter in earnest. They were the wives of the Rev. Mr. Stimpson of the Union church and Mrs. David W. Pond, now of New Jersey. A most excellent instructor was found in the person of a Miss Bardwell and the school was opened in the south part of the large double house, then standing on the corner of Harvard and Dix streets. The front room, lower floor, was the one occupied, the same being rented for the purpose, from Mr. Luther M. Lovell. Never was there a happier group of little folks than that which, each morning, gathered in the sunny room. Nor did all the radiance come from without for the kind smile of the teacher was light and gladness to all those childish hearts. Most excellent progress was made and many a sad heart was left when Miss Bardwell went away to Philadelphia.

Then came Miss Kilham from Beverly. A most delightful lady. She speedily won all the infantile hearts entrusted to her care. In time, it was necessary to move the building

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

Have you heard the whispers?

One of these days there will be a notable gathering in Mechanics Hall.

It won't be of great people with great titles.

It will be of young people whose names are dearer than life in the hundred homes of Worcester.

We won't tell you now what that event is to be, we will leave that to the newspapers who will tell it in all its glory when the proper time comes.

What we want to tell you this very moment is that in anticipation of that event we have secured between 500 and 600 yards of the very whitest and loveliest—

Habutai Silks

That the heart of a young girl could wish, expressly for this very event of which we have hinted.

If your little girl is one of the happy expectants, then you will be delighted at the news we bring you this morning.

These lovely Habutai Silks are exactly what created so much enthusiasm here last year at $1.00 a yard.

We knew that our little girl friends would be longing and teasing for a pretty dress on the evening when all Worcester will be out to see them.

So we got these beautiful Habutai Silks and shall sell them:—

For Seventy-Five Cents a Yard.

Our Habutai is a delightful silk, and the price brings it within reach of all.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

down to Dix street and the sun touched quarters were lost. At first, rooms were found with Mrs. Clarke, corner of Chestnut and Bowdoin streets, and then came the final move to the Y. M. C. A. building and the merging of the schools of Mrs. Morgan and Miss Kilham. The result has been a most happy one. Parents who wish to see their little ones happy and prosperous at the same time will let them begin their schooling here. The tender blossom, too delicate for rude blasts at first, will here become accustomed to external things and prepared for the shock of school exposure.

Will. L. Smith, W. H. S., 86, Tech, '90, reached home Thursday, March 6, all the way from Colorado. He has been since graduation in the employ of the Union Pacific R. R. but the recent elevation of Jay Gould to the headship thereof was not a happy event to employees. There have been wholesale discharges all along the line. Smith, however, is not discouraged, but will try the West again soon. In his Colorado rambles, he called on Harry Blackmer at Colorado Springs and proclaims the latter hearty and well. He is now the clerk for El Paso County Court. Our friend's picture of business in the West is not inspiring. Dullness is no name for the condition of affairs. Everywhere men are willing to work for their board. "Did you become a silver man through your associations?" "Well no, not to any great extent but it was as much as my life was worth to say so there." He says Worcester boys can be found everywhere. In Denver, he met D. W. Stevens, now in the employ of the Citizens Water Company.

WHITNEY'S on TEMPLE PLACE,

March * Sale * of * Embroidery * Goods.

—
 Sorrento and Gobelin
 Art Squares.
 —

—
 Silk and Linen
 Embroidery
 Materials.
 —

SEWING SILKS AT

❧ WHITNEY'S ❧

ON TEMPLE PLACE, BOSTON.

The Electrical Exhibition.

The Electrical and Mechanical Exhibition at the Rink completes its third week today. On account of the bad weather the attendance was at first very light. But now the building is crowded every day. There is probably no one who cannot find something there which is of especial interest to him, so great is the variety. Nor was Mr. Bigelow compelled to send elsewhere in order to get such a variety for most of the exhibitors are Worcester manufacturers, inventors and merchants. LIGHT found several Worcester industries represented of whose existence it had not known before. Other people find the same true with them. We do not believe there is a city anywhere which can show a greater variety of manufactures and inventions than Worcester hands, machines and brains are producing.

Considerable attention is given at the exhibition to the progress that has been made in electrical science. All the power is furnished by two dynamos located in Charles Baker's shop on Foster street. The motors are nearly the same as those used at the former exhibition, being of the Daft pattern. The principal advance seen in connection with these two machines is the use of carbon brushes instead of copper ones. The electric car and boat are operated by the single trolley system, though later the car will probably be run by storage batteries. Wires have also been arranged so that those who ride in the car will receive mild electric shocks. These are considered very beneficial to people afflicted with rheumatism and like diseases.

O. S. Kendall, in connection with the exhibit of stoves, shows an arrangement for cooking by electricity. Two cylinders are fastened where the grate generally is, and by simply turning a switch, these are made red hot.

The Franklin Electric company of Peabody exhibits an interesting electric plant. A seven and one half horse power motor runs a dynamo which in turn runs fifty, sixteen-candle power incandescent lamps and eleven small motor with fans attached. A motor running a dynamo is not a usual nor an economical combination but it is necessary here as an engine cannot be located in the small space given. This company also shows a motor adapted to a hoisting machine. Its advantage over the bulky engine and boiler formerly used is at once apparent. The principal superiority the company claims for its machine is its simplicity.

The Eureka Electric Company of New York also has an electric plant, consisting of several large motors and dynamos. Many of the incandescent lights in the building are run by these dynamos. The two dynamos in Baker's shop which supply power for the whole exhibition are of this company's make.

There are also many minor applications of electricity about the building. A C. & C. motor is running a Wheeler & Wilson sewing machine.

E. H. Hammond exhibits an electric mail box, arranged so that a bell, located in the house, will ring when a letter or paper is put into the box or taken out. Messrs. Harry and Fred Ramsdell of the Polytechnic Institute have a novel exhibit. A roller skate with a small motor attached runs on a circular table with considerable speed. Storage batteries beneath the table supply the current. A canoe is exhibited with a motor and screw propeller attached to the stern. In this line there are also the exhibits of the various electrical dealers of the city, consisting of batteries, bells, telegraph instruments and many contrivances for applying electricity to household uses. These exhibitors are C. H. Page & Co., Waters & Culver, G. W. Barnes and E. J. Leland. The Washburn & Moen Co. have an attractive exhibit of wires and cables of all kinds.

The steam and hot water heaters are well represented by several dealers. The best exhibits in this class are shown by the Royal Steam Heater Co. of Pearl street and Wm. Allen & Sons of this city. The Royal Steam Heater is manufactured by the Heywood Foundry Co. of Gardner. It can be used for either steam or hot water. It has a peculiar grate which keeps the outside of the fire-pot clean. It is made of steel plate and as the outside casing is easily removed, there is no great difficulty in clearing the heater. A part of the Rink is heated with steam generated by one of these boilers. There are at present over one hundred and fifty of these heaters in use in this city, which alone proves their efficiency. They are made in all sizes for all kinds of heating. A large cut of one of the heaters appeared in an advertisement in LIGHT several weeks ago and there are two smaller ones in this week's paper.

Wm. Allen & Sons, proprietors of the Worcester Steam Boiler Works, exhibit two heaters, the Allen Improved Steam Heater and the New Standard. The former is a very superior boiler, being perhaps one of the best and most thoroughly built of its class in the market. It is made of steel throughout and the name of the builder is alone a guarantee for first class workmanship. It has a patent oscillating grate which is operated with the doors closed, so that there is no dust. A cut of the heater is given in this column. This heater is found in many of the finest residences in this city and also in such places as the Court House at Dover, N. H., the Friends' School of Providence, R. I., the Delta Kappa Epsilon Society's house of Amherst, Mass., and in the opera houses of Amesbury and South Framingham. These heaters are built in sizes varying from five to sixty h. p. The New Standard is designed for a cheaper boiler, though it is far superior to the ordinary cast-iron affair. It probably has a greater heating surface than any other and it can be used for either steam or hot water. The steam plant of the Worcester Electric Light Station, constructed by this firm, is considered the finest in the country. It consists of eight one hundred and fifty horse power boilers. Aside from the construction of steam heaters the company manufactures boilers of all descriptions and machinery for bleaching. This is one of the oldest manufacturing firms in the city.

Heaters are also exhibited by H. C. Fish and E. H. Reed.

O. S. Kendall and Smith & Adams have the best exhibits of stoves and ranges. Kendall shows the Bay State and the Glenwood ranges, which can probably be beaten by no others. He also has a very pretty display of fire-places and mantels, chandeliers, lamps and baby carriages.

Smith & Adams have the Richmond and the Palace Argand ranges. The company say they have had excellent success in selling the Richmond. It is made in every variety to suit all uses. The Palace Argand shown is a large, all steel range, piped for hot water and having a spiral grate. This company also has a fine display of fire-places, with birch, cherry and oak mantles, tiles and French plate mirrors.

The people of Worcester as well as the company, may be proud of the exhibition of the Norton Emery Wheel company of this city. This is now probably the leading manufacturer of emery supplies in the world. Besides the regular line of wheels the exhibit includes many specialties which are made by no other firm. One of these is a pot wheel. This is used for smoothing the insides of pots and kettles, which were formerly left rough. A great variety of wheels, from the size of a pea to some two feet in diameter, made for Browne & Sharpe, the famous tool makers of Providence, are shown. Another specialty is the dry rubbing stone. This takes the place of the oil-stone. It is made in different shapes to fit all tools. The elastic wheel is another specialty made by this company. It is a thin wheel of emery and is used to cut the hardest iron just as a circular saw cuts wood. The manufacture of these requires a special process, as the ordinary method of melting the material and shaping it in kilns, leaves the stones too brittle. The wheels are not entirely emery, but corundum is mixed in in different quantities according to the degree of hardness required. Corundum is harder than emery, consisting of small particles of rubies and sapphires. When an extremely hard wheel is desired it is made entirely of corundum.

Messrs. E. A. Richmond & Co. exhibit a light-coupe Rockaway, and a close top Goddard buggy, also harness, robes and carriage furnishings. The Rockaway, which is lighted by electricity is a model of elegance and comfort, the body of interior is lined with green morocco leather, the edges being trimmed with broad silk lace. The upper part of interior is finished in quilted and tufted satin also of green. The glass used for doors, partitions, etc., is of bevel edge French crystal plate and gives the carriage a brilliant appearance. The Goddard buggy is also a model of fine work and beautiful finish. It is lined with green wulfling cloth of finest texture.

Arrow Heads.

As experienced naturalists can judge of the size and form of a fish by a scale or a fin, or of a bird or animal by fragments of their bones, in like manner can the archeologist judge of the intelligence, and advancement in the scale of civilization, of the pre-historic peoples of the earth from their sacred and domestic utensils, and their implements of war, which are constantly coming to the light from their hiding places in the earth.

Let us take for our present illustration the arrow-heads of the aboriginal Indian, and the location the valley of the Columbia. These are found in all stages of development from the crudest idea, and rudest construction, to the most finished work of art. Possibly, in some cases, this may have been occasioned by the difference in the mechanical skill of different members of the tribe, but not always. There is ample proof of the growth of the arrow point idea. The oldest were made of some soft material and hardened in the fire. These show no trace of tools upon their surface, and by exposure to the elements show a lighter shade on the surface than in the center. They are made in the shape of a harrow, with crescent, or moon-like horns at the base. Then follow those made of flint or soft petrified roots of trees, of the same form, roughly made, and must have set clumsily upon the staff, and liable to be broken off in the flesh. Later we find them in the form of leaves, rough, rugged, and rude, and like the previous ones, coarsely made in the form of animals; turtles, beavers, birds, snakes, fish, deer-heads and heads of the horned sheep. Those were not so numerous, and of but little better finish.

None of the above were made of topaz, agate, or cornelian, but in some of the early work obsidian was freely used. Next, by the genius of some advanced thinker, came a new departure, of a new design, not of objects but for use. The points were made more tapering, the sides chipped to resemble saw-teeth, made thin over the whole surface, instead of half-way as formerly; back, long and sharp, the part fastened to the shaft curved in so as to be strongly held in place by the deer thong. A better material displaced the old. Agate could be chipped and split. Topaz was brought from a distance and wrought with more care. Various kinds of chalcedony were sought for, possibly on account of their beauty, and wrought in a most delicate manner, to perfection. Of this latest development there seems to have been really three forms, viz., those cut to hold the sinew on both sides and direct in the centre. Those cut on the sides by cutting out and backward; and those begun at the base and worked toward the centre. The last two had sharp barbs at the base, the first only on the edge.

The making of these arrows is unknown to the Indians of this locality at the present day, and as one chief has expressed it, "They were made a long time ago". Lewis and Clark describe a tool used in their construction shaped like a deer's horn, and several such are still in existence, found on the Columbia. Just what was used to break large spalls from the body of the stone is not known. Some have thought a large stone was placed upon the sharp edge of another and wedged at the sides so as to support it, and that the heat of the sun broke it in the line of the pressure. Even if this would reduce the size it would not do the work of spall making. The generally received opinion is that this was done, and the head shaped by pressure, or sharp blows, upon the edge, in the line of cleavage, with a flat bone like the rib of the deer, or even a piece of hard-wood, which they learned by practice how to shape, to make them most efficient in doing the work. I think it is found impossible to do such delicate work on these hard and brittle substances with tools of hardened metal. It is doubtful if flint, such as is found in other States, has been found on the Columbia. Flint and agate can be hardened, and case hardened, in the sun. I believe stone pestles were sometimes used as hammers in doing the coarser kinds of work. E. N. MERIAM.

The Marine Band of Washington which plays at Mechanics Hall Fast day and night under the management of Mrs. Lillie Wilkinson, has a national reputation, equal to any band in this country. All visitors to Washington will recall with pleasure the grand rendition of national airs by the famous leader, John Philip Sousa and his band. In addition to the band, M'lle Marie Decca, the most brilliant of sopranos, will give selections. In writing of her singing the Washington Post says: "The Flawless purity of her voice is admirably adopted to bravura and stacato singing." In Boston, Feb. 9th, M'lle. Decca was recalled nine times.

Y. M. C. A.

The morning prayer meeting will be held at the rooms tomorrow and Samuel A. Pratt will be the leader. Secretary Gale will give a "Chemical Talk" to the boys at three o'clock. The men's meeting will be a memorial service to the late Mr. W. A. Denholm. The following ex-presidents have been invited to speak: F. A. Clapp, Charles Ballard, A. L. Burbank, H. M. Wheeler, L. P. Goddard, H. H. Merriam, C. B. Knight, Geo. C. Whitney, C. D. Tucker, Edward Whitney, S. W. Cooke, J. O. Bemis, Wm. Woodward, James Logan. The business men's reception will take place March 31. There will be an entertainment and exhibition gymnasium drills.

Since the item printed elsewhere in this paper concerning the "Confederate Spy" was set up it has been announced that Mr. Alfred Van Dusen will take the rôle of Col. Willard in place of Mr. W. A. Spiers. It is also announced that there will be dancing from 10 to 1 o'clock.

Horticultural Hall,

March 20, 1891,

"THE

Confederate Spy,"

By Classes 5 and 14 of the Universalist Sunday School, for the benefit of the Junior Order United American Mechanics. Admission 25 cents. Reserved seats 35 cents. Curtain rises at 8 sharp.

THE CHICKERING Piano! AND De Pachmann.

At the close of his first American concert tour, M. de Pachmann addressed to Messrs. Chickering & Sons a letter, of which the following is a translation:

NEW YORK, April 12, 1890.

MESSRS. CHICKERING & SONS:

Gentlemen—As it is my intention to take with me to Europe, for my personal use, a concert grand,

* * * * * The Chickering pianos are the noblest products of the piano-maker's art, and respond, as do no others, to every requirement of the most exacting virtuoso; in other words, they attain the highest point of perfection and are the model instruments of the world. Respectfully yours,

VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN.

After a few months' sojourn in the Catskills and at Saratoga, during which M. de Pachmann acquired a closer acquaintance with the Chickering Piano, the eminent virtuoso sent the manufacturers the following:

"THE WILLOUGHBY," SARATOGA,
AUGUST 25, 1890.

The Chickering Piano rightfully stands alone, for on this earth it is not only unsurpassed but unequalled. I can give logical and æsthetic proofs of my assertion. When one asks: Why do these unique manufacturers attain perfection? the answer is: Because they have endeavored to secure (as no others have done) and have succeeded in securing the nearest possible approach to the tone of nature, to what is known as the human voice; the Chickering piano sings like a lovely voice. This is no compliment, but the expression of my innermost conviction, if I may harbor an opinion on this subject.

Yours truly,
VLADIMIR DE PACHMANN.

Worcester Representatives,

S. R. Leland & Son,

446 Main Street, Worcester.

ORDER NOW

and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than at

EVANS & COMPANY,

Manufacturers of

Fine Monumental Work,

131 Central Street,

near Summer.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

Heywood Foundry Comp'y,

GARDNER, MASS.

This Heater is unsurpassed for excellence of workmanship and is the best in the market. Now is the time to secure estimates. The following is one of a great number of testimonials from our leading citizens:

WORCESTER, MASS., April 12, 1890.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER:

Gentlemen—Having used one of your Heaters for two seasons with satisfaction, I can recommend it to anyone, as it will do all they claim. Respectfully,

JOHN E. ALLEN, 917 Main Street.

Branch Office, 39 Pearl Street, Worcester.

Millbury Letter.

The fact that at least, a part of the people of Millbury are in earnest in their advocacy of a superintendent of schools, is shown by the republican nominee for member of the school board, Dr. Geo. C. Webber. It is no disparagement to his opponent, Mr. Henry Cronin, a young man of education and ability, to say that a better selection could not be made by the voters at the Town Meeting next Monday, than to elect Dr. Webber. He is an enthusiast on the subject of education, has given it much attention and has large experience in school matters. The fact that he is heartily in favor of the employment of a superintendent of schools, together with the knowledge of his wide circle of acquaintances among leading educators of the state no doubt had much to do with his nomination at the caucus. The ringing chorus of ayes by which the nomination was made shows, not only the esteem in which the Dr. is held, but also the trend of public opinion on the school question.

Rev. Geo. A. Putnum gave utterance to the faith that is in him on the temperance question, with no uncertain sound, last Sunday morning. His theme was, "the great sinfulness of placing a stumbling block in our neighbors path." He demonstrated to those present that however lax the enforcement of the prohibitory law may have been during the first year, it would be the height of folly to remove the liquor traffic from under the ban of illegitimacy. To license the rum shop would be to place the business beside that of the grocer or butcher and make it legal to sell rank poison to the weak or the unsuspecting. If the rum seller must carry on his nefarious traffic, let it be as a criminal breaking the law with every sale and laying himself liable to fine and imprisonment, rather than as a law abiding citizen, protected and nourished by his fellow townsmen.

On account of the storm, Prof. Roe had a small audience at the 1st Congregational church last week to listen to his "Passion Play" lecture. Those who braved the storm, however, went away feeling amply repaid for their outlay of money and labor. "A fine lecture," was the verdict. We hope to hear the Professor again.

Two of Millbury's most prominent citizens and their wives have departed from this land of changeable climate of smiles and tears, with a majority of tears, to escape the trying spring weather. Mr. Richard Buck and wife have gone to Europe for a three-months sojourn. Hon. L. L. Whitney and wife are travelling in the central part of our own country. They will visit Hot Springs, Arkansas, for the benefit of Mrs. Whitney's health. From there they will proceed as far west as Omaha.

C. L. Gorham & Co. have just published several excellent musical compositions by Mrs. Harriett Adams Conrad, wife of Rev. A. Z. Conrad of Old South Church. "My Hiding Place" is a sacred solo for either soprano or tenor. The words and music are both by Mrs. Conrad and it is dedicated to her father, Winburn Adams. "Christ the Lord is Risen Today" is an Easter piece for quartette and chorus. "In Heavenly Love Abiding" is a hymn the words of which were written by A. E. Waring. "He is Risen" is also an Easter piece, the words being written by Rev. A. Z. Conrad. It is for quartette and chorus. All the music may be obtained from C. L. Gorham & Co.

WORCESTER OXYGEN COMPANY.

Dr. J. W. Gould and T. D. Bristol, M. D., have opened new and attractive rooms for the dispensation of Compound Oxygen in Rooms 10 and 11, Lincoln House Block. Price of tickets entitling the holder to one month's treatment will be placed at $10 until May 1st. Entrance 368½ Main St., or 1 Elm.

When you are at the Electrical Exhibition call at the Glass Blowers' Stand and ask to see

DR. GRAY'S EAR TUBE, which prevents and cures Deafness. It is manufactured and sold there. The General Office of the Company is at Colosse, N. Y.; Branch Office, 166 Tremont Street, Boston.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H. Howland, D. D. S.

Dentists. 11 Pleasant St., Worcester, Mass

Residence, 61 West Street.

SALEM STREET CHURCH

Course * of * Entertainments.

March 20.—VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT,

Consisting of Anthems, Glees, Solos, Duets, and selections from different cantatas. The following will take part:

Mrs. May Sleeper-Ruggles, Miss Gertrude Inez Buss, Miss Jennie Morrill, Mr. B. A. Barber, Miss J. S. Newcomb, pianist, Miss E. J. Whittemore, pianist, assisted by the church choir and glee clubs. Admission 25 cents. Tickets for remaining 5 entertainments 75 cents.

WORCESTER

Illuminated Advertising Company,

General Office, 311 Main St., Room 13,

C. E. SQUIER. F. H. BEALS.

Advertisements Artistically Displayed by a powerful Electric Light upon 600 Square feet of Canvas.

DISPLAY:

Worcester, opposite Mechanics Hall.
Springfield, opposite Opera House.
Providence, Turk's Head

WHENEVER GOOD

Eatables

are desired they will always

be found at

Eben W. Hoxie's,

305 and 816-818 Main Street.

A. S. NEWCOMB,

Market and Oyster House,

Fish of all kinds. Planter and Shipper Choice Grade of Oysters. Telephone connection 206-2.

223 MAIN ST., WORCESTER, MASS

School and College.

Williams College.

E. N. K. Mears is vice-president of the base-ball association.

At the spread of the Philotechnian debating society last week Messrs. Perkins and Mears responded to toasts.

The Art Association has had on exhibition during the past week a remarkably fine collection of etchings.

Two exhibitions will be held in the gymnasium during the present month. The first will come on the eighteenth and the other a week and a half later. Beside the regular athletic contests which can be held inside, there will be boxing and wrestling matches and gymnastic exercises including tumbling and pyramid building.

The base ball team is taking daily practice in preparation for the opening of the season. A southern trip will be taken during the Easter recess. As a game has been arranged with Holy Cross, our team will play in Worcester sometime during the base ball season.

Rev. Dr. Daniel Merriman of the class of '63 conducted chapel service on Sunday morning the fifteenth of February.

On last Friday and Saturday evenings at the opera house here, the opera "Romeo and Juliet", of which so much has been expected, was presented to a crowded house with great success. It will be repeated later in Troy and North Adams.

Mount Holyoke.

The parlors rang with laughter last Saturday evening. The doors opened upon a court about to consider a divorce case. The judge and jury sat in solemn silence and the peals of mirth from the audience failed to bring even a flicker of a smile to their faces. When the defendant, Mr. O'Connor, (Miss Mabel Grant N. C.) and the plaintiff, (Miss Miriam Gray, Worcester) carrying the infant and followed by seven small children, made their appearance the merriment boiled over. The costumes were "too funny for anything," and many a housekeeper in that quiet village could tell how she ransacked and chests to aid the young ladies. Mrs. O'Connor's bonnet was said to be two hundred years old, and some of the jury-men's cravats would have passed muster in 1776. The plea for the plaintiff on the grounds of her husband's drunkenness, desertion and abuse of the children would have moved the hearts of any audience, and the appearance of the hump-backed, idiotic, bandaged and battered children produced no small effect. The plea for the defendant, as an argument based on fiction, was a great success and loudly applauded. The testimony of the witnesses, the little side shows of domestic felicity, and the judge's droll charge to the jury were well brought in. The case was settled by a compromise, and at last accounts the family seemed reconciled to fate.

The Medal received by the college at the Paris Exposition, 1890, has been on exhibition the past week in the chapel.

Holy Cross College.

Rev. Henry J. Shandelle S. J. preached at Uxbridge last Sunday, and Rev. A. A. Maes S. J. at Boston.

Rev. M. A. O'Kane S. J. is officiating at Leicester in the Lenten services during the absence of the regular pastor.

Base ball has received great impetus at the college during the past week. At a meeting of the base ball association, last Sunday, John W. Larkin '92 was elected Manager and Dennis O'Neil, Jr. captain of the team. The nine is exceedingly strong this year, being much strengthened by the addition of Stafford. The gymnasium presents a scene of great activity every night as the drill is carried on under the direction of O'Neil. This is O'Neil's first year as captain of the team and his fourth as a member. He is a thorough ball-player and is skilful in detecting the weak points of an opposing team. O'Neil's place is at first base while Mahony '62 covers second. The two Lynch brothers cover short and third in a very creditable manner. As an infield, this is, perhaps, the strongest that the College has ever had. Cain and Stafford will do the pitching and Merritt the catching. The outfield is not yet determined. Should Worcester fail to have a team, Manager Larkin will probably hire the ball grounds for Fast Day and have some strong college nine, probably Dartmouth, to contest with.

The following Worcester boys appeared on the honor list at the monthly reading of the marks for February: Thomas B. Cunningham, John F. Spellman, William I. McLaughlin, John P. O'Brien and Frank M. Phelan.

The monthly elocution will take place Saturday morning.

The Dramatic Club will appear at Leicester St. Patrick's night in an entertainment consisting of "The White Horse of the Peppers," in the first part and concluding with vocal selections appropriate to the occasion, given by the College Glee Club.

Rev. A. A. Maes will deliver a scientific lecture at Turners Falls, Tuesday, March 17.

The Class of Philosophy has finished its course in Mechanics and has commenced its study of Astronomy.

Harvard.

Wednesday evening, March 4, there was a pleasant gathering of Worcester Harvard boys at the Parker House, Boston. It was the occasion of the annual dinner of the "Worcester Club" of Harvard. Sixteen in all sat at the table, a large increase over former years. At the head sat the President, Henry B. Washburn, and at the foot the Secretary, John D. Baldwin. S. M. Gates and Charles M. Thayer were the especial guests of the Club. The others present were R. H. Washburn, C. Bullock, L. Davis, R. K. Shaw, H. C. Lakin, C. B. Earle, E. H. Wood, W. S. Adams, A. B. Wood, D. O. Earle, H. W. Doe and W. H. Morse, Jr. After all had done justice to the feast, the president declared the election of officers for the coming year, in order. J. D. Baldwin was elected president and C. B. Earle was elected secretary. As the younger members of the club were a little timid, there was little speaking. However, Chas. M. Thayer with his wit, H. W. Doe with his singing, and W. S. Adams with his music upon the piano, added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening. Another dinner next year is assured, perhaps also some in Worcester in years to come.

It was the wish of the late Edwin Conan that the money which he left to Harvard should be used for a building that should bear his name. Both a new reading room and a new dormitory are badly needed, and one or the other will probably be built with this gift.

The Harvard 'Varsity crew have already begun to row on the Charles river.

Wellesley College.

The work of the Christian Association of the college is not merely the support of the social meetings. The purpose is to keep the students informed of aggressive Christian work by taking some share in it. We have a missionary representing us in foreign mission work in India, another in home work in New York city, besides many other interests in which we can financially take but a small part.

March 4, Miss Helen Rand told us of the work for the past year done by the Cottage Settlement in New York.

March 5, our delegates to the convention of the Student Volunteers for foreign missions, held in Cleveland, gave us most interesting accounts of the meetings.

Sunday evening Miss Gregg, our missionary in New York, told us of the work she is doing as our representative there.

March 9, Mr. R. G. Moulton, for sixteen years connected with the University Extension Movement of Cambridge University in England, and who has been sent to this country at the request of certain universities to introduce the system here, lectured upon "Macbeth."

March 10, Mr. Moulton lectured in the morning on "Macbeth as a Greek Drama." In the afternoon he gave two lectures upon "Literary Study of the Bible," and in the evening spoke of the University Extension.

Nathan F. Heard.

For many years the name of Heard has been a prominent one in our city annals. Mr. Nathan F., was born in Worcester in 1824, and died March 9th. He was educated in our public schools. As a young man, he was engaged in railroad work in the West, where he married. The name of his wife has been frequently seen in LIGHT as a valued contributor. He has been in various employments in our city, though latest with Washburn & Moen Company. His residence was at 26 Boynton, where his pastor, the Rev. Dr. Merriman, attended his funeral, Thursday last. He leaves two children, a son, Nathan, in the Polytechnic and a younger daughter. Mr. Heard was a courtly gentleman of the old school.

Worcester Dress Cutting School,
45 Pleasant St.,
For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circular.
Mrs. L. F. Walch.

✦ * SPRING * WOOLENS * ✦

✦ * Our * Opening * of * ✦

Choice Domestic and Foreign Woolens, Selected for
Our Custom Department.

Gentlemen who wish to examine the Latest Novelties in these Goods should Call and examine them.

✦ * THE * ✦

WARE-PRATT CO.'S

408 and 412 MAIN STREET, WORCESTER.

NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.

Incorporated in the City of Worcester, Sept. 17, 1889. A great co-operative institution and fraternal order, paying sick and accident benefits and an endowment of $500 at the end of five years. Over 600 members in Worcester; three local assemblies, and two more in process of formation. $8760 already distributed in sick benefits. $14,331.63 reserve.

For full particulars, and documents carefully explaining the plan and scope of this rapidly growing fraternity, call on or address J. O. H. WOODMAN, Secy., 339 Main St., Worcester, Mass. Burnside Building.

GET THE BEST!

The BAY STATE or GLENWOOD Range and Parlor Stoves.

THEY HAVE NO EQUAL.

WE ALSO CARRY A LARGE LINE OF GAS AND KEROSENE
CHANDELIERS, TABLE LAMPS, AND FIRE-PLACE GOODS.

466 Main St.

O. S. KENDALL & Co.

Flashes.

Mirth is the medicine of life;
It cures its ills, it calms its strife;
It softly smooths the brow of care,
And writes a thousand graces there.

—Anon.

Hearts, like apples, are hard and sour
Till crushed by Pain's resistless power,
And yield their juices, rich and bland,
To none but Sorrow's heavy hand.

—Dr. J. G. Holland.

Ah! Who can tell how hard it is to climb
The steep where Fame's proud temple shines afar?
Ah! Who can tell how many a soul sublime
Has felt the influence of malignant star
And waged with Fortune an eternal war;
Checked by the scoff of Pride, by Envy's frown,
And Poverty's unconquerable bar,
In life's low vale remote has pined alone,
Then dropped into the grave, unpitied and unknown!
—Beattie.

Be firm! one constant element in luck
Is genuine, solid, old Teutonic pluck;
See you tall shaft; it felt the earthquake's thrill Clung to its base, and greets the sunrise still.
—O. W. Holmes.

If I can stop one heart from breaking,
I shall not live in vain;
If I can ease one life the aching,
Or cool one pain,
Or help one fainting robin
Unto his nest again,
I shall not live in vain.

The women have many faults,
The men have only two.
There's nothing right they say,
There's nothing right they do;
But if the men do nothing right,
Say nothing that is true;
What precious fools we women are
To love them as we do.
—Mrs. W. Scott.

E. W. COFFIN, Store Fixtures

310 Main Street, Worcester.
Name this Paper.

LE * JOLLY * FRENCH * DYEING AND * CLEANSING * HOUSE.

First-Class Work at Short Notice.
Reference for Laces and Lace Curtains, Gross & Strauss.

Cut out this coupon from LIGHT, and bring it with you and get 10 per cent discount from regular prices.

C. T. MELVIN, PROPRIETOR, WALNUT ST.

PHOTOGRAPHER *****

Underwood
Children's
Portraits
A Specialty
*****
326 Main, op. Mechanics Hall

F. S. BLANCHARD & CO.,

* PRINTERS. *

Book, Newspaper, Catalogue, Church, Society, Wedding and Commercial Printing of every kind executed in the best modern style.

No orders too large; none too small.

154 FRONT ST.

LIGHT

VOL. III. NO. 3. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

NEWS
SOCIETY
BUSINESS
PERSONALS
MUSIC
DRAMA
LITERATURE
ART
LOVELAND'S

CHARLES E. BROOKS,

Late Treasurer of Worcester County Horticultural Society.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

Blair, Photographer.

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

BUYERS * OF * FURNITURE

Will find it to their interest to examine our Stock, which is the largest in the city, and note our prices, which are the lowest, before purchasing elsewhere. Our new PARLOR SUITS are beautiful in design and of superior workmanship. Our new CHAMBER SUITS in all desirable woods, handsomely finished. Dining Room, Library and Hall Furniture adapted to the needs of all housekeepers. ROLL TOP DESKS and CABINET BEDS. For another season we have the exclusive sale of the WAKEFIELD RATTAN COMPANY'S CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES. We exhibit a large invoice of new and beautiful designs, and at reduced prices. We sell for cash, or on liberal terms.

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

1839

1890.

S. R. Leland & Son,

Chickering & Sons,
Knabe, Fischer,
Behr Bros.,
W. P. Emerson,
Hallet, Davis & Co.,
Sterling

PIANO AGENCY.

Manufacturers

"Eclipse" Cornets and Trombones.

Importers of

BAND INSTRUMENTS

and Musical Merchandise.

Largest Stock, Finest Goods,
Lowest Prices, Easy Payments.
Satisfaction Guaranteed

446 Main Street, Worcester.

WORCESTER OXYGEN COMPANY.

Dr. J. W. Gould and T. D. Bristol, M. D., have opened new and attractive rooms for the dispensation of Compound Oxygen in Rooms 10 and 11, Lincoln House Block. Price of tickets entitling the holder to one month's treatment will be placed at $10 until May 1st. Entrance 368½ Main St., or 1 Elm.

MME. GARCEAU, * ARTISTIC DRESS MAKING. *

Ball Dresses, Wedding Dresses and Gowns of the latest Parisian style a specialty. Call and examine Patterns and Styles.

Room No. 1, 245 Main Street.

Fine Groceries and Provisions,

I obtain Mrs. Morgan's Home Made Bread fresh every afternoon and am prepared to take orders and deliver it on short notice.

I also have Home Made Cake and Cream fresh every day.

C. E. MINCKLER,

16 Woodland Street, Worcester.

Telephone No. 181-4.

GOOD NEWS ABOUT SHORT-HAND!

Students mastering the art and taking positions at ten dollars per week after two months' study at

HINMAN'S BUSINESS COLLEGE.

Since securing the right for Worcester to teach the wonderful

"New Rapid" System of Shorthand

students are learning to write forty to sixty words per minute in four weeks, and eighty to one hundred words in eight weeks. By this system pupils can do better work in three months at a cost of $30 than by other systems requiring eight months to a year at $80 to $100.

N. G. TUCKER.

W. F. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON, SAN T-RY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.

56 Pleasant Street, Worcester, Mass.

MECHANICS HALL, Worcester.

Mrs. Lillie Wilkinson, - - Manager.

APRIL 2, (Fast Day.)
AFTERNOON AND EVENING.

THE UNITED STATES MARINE * BAND

OF WASHINGTON.

MR. JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor.

Assisted by

Mlle MARIE DECCA, Prima Donna Soprano
from Her Majesty's Opera, England.

The United States Government has given a limited leave of absence to the Marine Band, for the purpose of exhibiting the high degree of musical excellence it has attained, in a few special concerts in the principal cities only.

Prices, 50c., 75c. and $1.
All Seats Reserved.
Sale commences at Gorham's Music Store, Monday, March 30.

W. A. ENGLAND,

DEALER IN

FINE WATCHES,
CLOCKS, JEWELRY
& OPTICAL GOODS.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.

394 Main Street.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H. Howland, D. D. S.
11 Pleasant St.,

Dentists. Worcester, Mass

Residence, 61 West Street.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1891.

No. 3

Light! Nature's resplendent robe;
Without whose vesting beauty all were wrapt in gloom.

—Thompson.

Again our Scottish poet gives us a theme. If Sophronisba was not a success, much that he wrote was. He certainly appreciated light.

Just now grade crossings seem to fill the public mind. Which shall they be? Over or under?

Both ways have their earnest advocates, and both sides produce as arguments what other cities have done. Where the situations are similar, this reasoning is excellent.

Rochester, New York is cited as a case where the R. R. goes into the air, up above the streets. True, but the Flour City had no alternative. The R. R. could not go under. There was a river in the way.

The Genesee River flows through Rochester at such a level that before the R. R. was elevated, high water was likely to nearly touch the bridge. It is a stream that at times pours a vast quantity of water over the Falls and it had the right of way.

What then? That stream had to be regarded. It was not a question of lowering the track four or five feet, for that would just put it in the water. To go below the water and tunnel the river would be too subterranean. There was nothing left but to go over.

Is Worcester similarly situated? Hardly. Nature has no obstacle that cannot be overcome readily and a partially sunken track, so that a moderate grade will cross it will be a much less conspicuous object than a tressle or a heavy wall. Elevated railroads are not things of beauty.

London has pretty effectually demonstrated what can be done in the way of covering tracks. Nor are the streets made unsightly or inconvenient thereby. Boston, too, has many streets and avenues passing over the railroads and the passer does not realize what is under. Would a deep way cut under a great bridge please? Let our own Southbridge street tunnel answer.

As for going around, we should like to have our depot where it can be reached in as little time as possible. We cannot, entirely, eliminate space. Street cars cannot do it. A station at Barber's or on the other side of Pak-achoag will not accommodate the public. Our present station is well enough, with the necessary adaptations.

Names are frequently misnomers. They sometimes go by contraries, but that New York maker of beer, located on East River, had a particularly happy appreciation of the fitness of things when he named his manufactory "Hell Gate Brewery."

Did you ever happen to know one that was not? The Old Brewery and Five Points region of New York city were very good pictures of what the surroundings are. If they be not the confines of Pluto's domains, then what are they?

In another column, the Rev. Mr. Southgate of Pilgrim church calls attention to what might be made a most instructive and inspiring spectacle in our city. Nothing that we can do for our children is too good for them. The City of Brooklyn, long since, demonstrated how effective Children's Day might be made.

Can Worcester do something of the same kind? There are thousands of children in our Sunday Schools who would be delighted to take part in a display arranged for their special benefit. They love music; they love the procession. Why not carry out the suggestions on the letter? They are feasible.

Let there be a meeting of the City's S. S. Superintendents called and let the matter be fully discussed. Then before each S. S. the subject can be brought. Our first march might not be so successful as subsequent ones, but there is no doubt that it would eventually go and prove as popular as it has in other places. The way the boys joined in the Bicentennial parade shows how the young people enjoy a procession.

There is encouragement in numbers and the children will find in such a display a chance to see just how many there are, in our city, who, like them, are climbing up the hill. The preparation for the day will keep young people under influences that are beneficial. All these ends must be made to subserve the greater one of pure living. The Christian life is what we seek.

What is the matter with the Bigelow gift to the city and Institute? Is it hanging fire. Is there some one lacking to touch it off? There are too many good men interested in the scheme to allow it to dally long. Besides there ought to be money enough in our city to give it the plant and the proper impetus. The plan needs a wider hearing.

When Americans get restive under the burdens they bear, they had better turn to such a book as the English "Financial Reform Almanack" and notice what royalty costs the British Empire. LIGHT is under obligations to George T. Tribe for the sight of a copy. Some day the people will rise and pitch the whole concern into the Thames and begin anew.

The enterprise of the Telegram in bringing to Worcester for a lecture Major McKinley is worthy of notice. Probably no American is now so generally known the world over as Ex-Ohio Representative. His speech cannot help being an interesting one, whether those who listen believe in his bill or not.

Worcester appreciates the Drama too.

Readers from Boston and elsewhere have delighted audiences, public and private. Last Tuesday night Librarian S. S. Green addressed a class of Shakespeare lovers at the home of Mr. J. Edwin Smith on Ashland street. He spoke on some of the leading characters in Othello.

Again Progressive Springfield comes to the desk of LIGHT and as usual the presentation is most excellent. One wonders how the bills are paid for the typography, pictures, everything are of first class character. Does the Board of Trade stand back of it? It certainly could not do better than to push along such an enterprise. In it we find more of the insurance Companies of Springfield, a good chapter devoted to the public library; book publishing business and something of ancient Springfield. When is Worcester going to do something like this?

Can I see a falling tear
And not feel my sorrow's share?

Long living in our city and acquaintance with the younger generations has given to LIGHT so extended a knowledge of those who are on the threshold of life that almost every day a name is mentioned which, at once, arouses a mental picture. The individuals, seem as when, in youth, the High school was daily sought. The papers of Friday, March 13, had this notice: "In this city, March 11, Helen A., daughter of Solomon and Mary H. Nixon, died aged 25 years, 1 month and 8 days." Many who read could not recall the school girl face, nor did they know the womanly grace that had succeeded those years of school life. To a circle of cherished friends however, she was all in all. It might be said that she was a bird that had never left the parent nest, for the home in which she died, No. 1, Webster street, was the very one in which she was born. An only child, she received the very tenderest care, and all that parents could do for a child was done for her. For two years past, she has suffered from illness, yet not so as to arouse apprehensions on the part of relatives until recently. The destroyer knows no distinctions and the young as well as the old are sought. The friends and associates who gathered to hear the Rev. Mr. Stebbins conduct her funeral felt that nothing too good could be said of the gentle spirit that had passed before. Life is but a span, a breath, and then the long hereafter. That of the surviving parents will have lost much of its zest; but they must realize how thoroughly all sympathize with them.

James A. O'Reilly was another promising High School boy whom illness drove from his studies. He was a good, careful lad, active and zealous in school matters, a good debater and one who would have certainly made his mark had he lived. He was the nephew of Col. James M. Drennan of this city and of the Rev. Fr. Drennan of Amherst but formerly of St. Anne's Church. He died at his mother's home 32 Providence street, March 14, at the early age of 17 years, 11 months and 19 days. His funeral was observed in St. John's Church Monday, the 16th inst., and the body was buried in St. John's Cemetery. Friends and kindred gathered about the casket and mourned the end of many hopes and aspirations, at any rate, for this life. His associates will long mourn his death.

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 339 Main Street, Burnside Building,
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, MARCH 21, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Church Notes.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The second entertainment in the Salem Street Church course was given last evening. It consisted of a vocal and instrumental concert. It took place too late for LIGHT to give an account of it in this week's paper, but those who took part were Miss Gertrude Inez Buss, soprano; Mrs. F. W. Ruggles, contralto; B. A. Barber, baritone; Misses E. G. Whittemore and J. S. Newcomb, pianists and the church choir and choral society. Mr. B. D. Allen was director and organist.

The third entertainment in the course will be given next Friday evening, the 27th. It will consist of a lecture, "Through Japan Across the Pacific," by Rev. T. F. Clark of Brooklyn. This is the last of his series "A Knapsack Tour of the World." Rev. Mr. Clark has won a very extensive reputation by his lectures and, as this is considered one of his best, a very interesting lecture is assured.

A pleasing entertainment will be given at Park Church next Friday evening. The program will consist of selections by the Cecilia Quartet, the members of which are Mrs. E. H. Plaisted, Mrs. M. E. Davis, Miss Lillian Whittemore and Miss Annie Dean; a Japanese parasol drill by sixteen young ladies from Pilgrim Church, under the direction of Miss Stella M. Haynes; readings by Miss Edith M. Gould; piano solos by Miss Elva M. Sawin and guitar and harmonica solos by Mr. C. E. Flint. Miss Eva M. Coughlan will be the accompanist. The entertainment is arranged by Miss Gould.

"The Last Night at Bethany," which will be given at Pilgrim Church next Sunday evening, is composed by C. Lee Williams, organist of Gloucester Cathedral, England, and is largely after the model supplied by J. S. Bach's numerous examples. The librettist, Joseph Bennett, has selected as his theme the last visit of our Lord to the house of Martha and Mary, hence the name of the work, "The Last Night of Bethany." The music is profoundly devotional, tenderly expressive and in harmony with the best traditions of sacred art. The structure of the choruses and the treatment of the harmonies accord with the method of English church music. The soloists will be Mrs. J. W. Pitts, soprano; Mrs. J. W. Howell, contralto; Mr. Geo. L. Butler, tenor; Mr. J. H. Howell, bass; and a chorus of over forty voices.

The Piedmont Branch Chapel on Elliott street was dedicated last Sunday at 3 o'clock. The program was as follows: Invocation; singing, "Hear Our Prayer" by Piedmont Quartet; Scripture reading by Rev. C. M. Southgate; singing, "Redeemed" by the school and congregation; building committee's report in giving up the keys, E. T. Marble; receiving of keys, H. B. Lincoln; singing, "Rock of Ages," Piedmont quartet; history of mission by Mrs. J. G. Murdock; history of Sabbath School by W. H. Moulton; singing, "We are Children" by the school; brief addresses by C. Henry Hutchins, J. G. Murdock, W. H. Moulton, James Wilson, Rev. Mr. Tuttle and Mrs. Kelley, an aged lady who has spent much of her life upon the "Island" waiting for the gospel; Prayer of dedication by the pastor; singing, "Be Thou Still" by the Piedmont quartet; an address by the pastor, Rev. D. O. Mears, D. D.; doxology and prayer and benediction. The collection taken during the services amounted to $4675. There were also $800 raised by a special collection taken at Piedmont Church in the forenoon. The small chapel was crowded to the doors. Several young men, interested in the Branch, acted as ushers. The regular weekly services at the Branch are as follows: Sunday,—Sunday School, 2 45 p.m.; gospel meeting, 3-30 p.m.; prayer meeting, 7 p.m. Monday—ladies industrial class, 7 p.m.; Wednesday—ladies prayer meeting, 7-30 p.m.; Saturday—children's meeting, 2 p.m.—children's sewing school 3 p.m.

Miss Albeana Bean, a member of the Branch, has given up her life to missionary work and will be educated by the Branch.

METHODIST.

Grace. Monday evening under the supervision of Mr. Charles H. Carpenter, the Chinese members of the Sunday School, gave a very interesting entertainment to about seventy-five guests. A supper was served by Caterer Yeaw, so distinctively Chinese dishes were not in order; but Hu Keon gave a very valuable sketch of his own life before music was rendered by the Chinese on their own peculiar instruments.

There will be parlor entertainment at 123 West street, Monday evening, March 23 at the home of H. J. Cutting, for the purpose of lessening the church debt.

Webster Square.—"The Willing Workers will hold an Easter sale and entertainment, Thursday evening, March 26. Ice cream and cake served during the evening.

UNIVERSALIST.

A Young Peoples' Christian Union has been started at the First Universalist Church, the first meeting being held last Sunday, one hundred people being present and many taking part. Regular meetings are to be held each Sunday evening previous to the regular preaching service. The meetings will be lead-by the young people. The church is strong in the number of its young folks and it is expected that the new organization will be carried on with much enthusiasm and profit.

The Adams' Square Mission will be started in a short time. It will be sustained by the Sunday School of the First Church, all of its many organizations which have been created for benevolent work contributing to its work. The church is in a prosperous condition, large audiences being present at its services and sittings being rented each Sunday. It is expected that the society will contribute towards the erection of All Souls Church on its new lot on Woodland street. This building will be erected during the summer. The fiftieth anniversary of the First Church will be celebrated on June 3d. It is expected that all the former pastors will be present and participate in the services. The accomplished choir which has furnished the music of the church during the past year has been engaged for the coming year.

The Ladies' Social Circle of the Universalist Church will meet in their parlors on Tuesday afternoon, March 24. An attractive entertainment will be given in the evening.

Y. M. C. A.

Mr. Jerome H. Wheeler will lead the morning meeting at 9.15. The men's meeting at 4 o'clock will be addressed by Rev. V. M. Simons and Geo. A. Putnam will sing. At the boy's meeting, Deacon Edward Jerome will give an address and his daughters, Nellie and Grace, will sing.

Next Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock there will be a meeting of the ladies of the city to complete the organization of the Women's Auxiliary.

The business men's reception will take place March 31. Its object is to give the business men of our city an idea of the work which the association is doing. There will be addresses by prominent business men from Boston, New York and Springfield. There will also be illustrations of gymnasium work by classes of thirty men and fifteen boys under the direction of Paul Plummer.

The room for the junior department is now completed and a meeting will soon be held to arrange this division of the work. Hereafter the membership fee for the junior members will be one dollar for limited membership and five dollars for full.

Secretary Gale and Physical Director Plummer attended the secretaries' convention at Burlington, Vt., this week.

Unmindful of the roses,
Unmindful of the thorn;
A reaper tired reposes
Among his gathered corn;
So might I, till the morn.

Cold as the cold Decembers,
Past as the days that set,
While only one remembers
And all the rest forget—
But one remembers yet.

—Christiana Rossetti.

A wonderful thing is a seed,
The one thing deathless forever,
The one thing changeless—nterly true,
Forever old and forever new,
And fickle and faithless never.

Plant blessings and blessings will bloom;
Plant hate and hate will grow;
You can sow today—tomorrow shall bring
The bloom that shows what sort of a thing
Is the seed, the seed that you sow.

The Week.

CITY.

Mar. 13—Co. D, 4th Mass. Heavy Artillery has reunion. J. O. Bemis made president, Aug. Stone, vice president; M. W. Maynard, secretary and treasurer.

It isn't Ash Wednesday, but James goes for Wolf, just the same. Queer combination of names. Wolf not wolfish.

Class of '87 Belmont Street School has reunion. Festive occasion.

14—Important hearing on grade crossings. E. W. Vaill Chair Company suspends.

15—Piedmont Branch Chapel dedicated in the Island Ward.

Y. M. C. A. has memorial exercises for W. A. Denholm.

Reform Club deprecates the coming era of license. So do others

16—Ninety-eighth meeting of the Congregational Club listens to excellent papers from Messrs. Edson and Balliet on the public school question.

17—Fine day for St. Patrick's parade. Excellent showing.

Portrait of D. Waldo Lincoln presented to the Light Infantry.

Tables turned. This time it is the lawyers who are sued. Mrs. Holman, objecting to terms of settlement, brings action against Messrs. Rice, King and Rice.

18—E. E. Longley goes out of business. Succeeded by Allen & Green.

Successful opening of Swedish Fair.

19—Mr. Joseph Lovell goes down to Medfield to live with his son Albert. He will be missed.

A. A. Hixon elected librarian of the Horticultural Society.

Lincoln Street Club organized. Part of St. John's Episcopal Church.

COUNTY.

11—Womans' Relief Corps of Warren has a very successful Historical entertainment in Town Hall.

12—Patrick Moore of Hopedale commits suicide. 56 years.

13—Electric Railway to Spencer in order. Meeting held and Samuel Winslow made President.

Westboro Law Enforcement League proposes to act. Good.

14—In Berlin, Mrs. H. P. Brigham reaches 90th birthday.

15—Whitinsville opens first street railway.

16—Millbury and Sterling vote license. Lancaster a good "No."

James Jeffrey killed on R. R. track in Clinton. About 50 years old.

17—A recount demanded in Millbury in behalf of L. T. Herrick, would be Selectman.

Douglass' delayed vote announced in favor of License. Sorry!

18—Another sensational confession in the Webster Hoyle murder case.

19—Mrs. Elizabeth Upham dies in Webster. 77 years.

COMMONWEALTH.

13—Alexander Hamilton Post G. A. R. New York visits Gettysburg Post, Boston. What stories must have been told!

Memorial exercises for late Principal Blackington, Boston. Emerson school.

Legislative Committee will not visit Chicago. One junkett less.

Wm. T. Smith of New Bedford dies in Washington.

14—Intercollegiate Athletic Association meets in Springfield and settles upon May 27 as Field Day.

In Boston, in Interscholastic Sports Worcester Academy takes third place. Brace up boys!

15—U. S. S. Galina and U. S. Tug, Nina, went ashore near Gay Head last Friday night and are now at the mercy of the waves.

Boston Italians restless over the lynching of their New Orleans compatriots.

La Grippe attacks Boston. Our turn next.

16—Boston and Springfield Italians talking about the N. O. matter. Where is Worcester?

17—Public bar law will remain as it is.

It is possible that the legislature will limit the amount of land that churches may hold exempt from taxation. It might do worse.

Fire in Smith block, the largest business block in South Framingham.

18—Bill reported in the legislature to tax churches above assessed value of $50,000.

19—Very impressive memorial exercises in Music Hall, Boston, for General Charles Devens. Prayer by Rev. Phillips Brooks. Speeches by Generals Corse and Francis A. Walker and by Ex-President Hayes.

NATION.

13—Gov. Hill of New York applies for New York's share of the return from Direct Tax.

President Harrison has appointed 2754 Postmasters. No wonder he has to go duck hunting.

14—Disastrous fire in Syracuse.

Jesse Seligman of New York has drawn on Baron Hirsch for $2,400,000 to help Jewish immigration. "Samwell of Posen" is happy.

The Italian murderers lynched in New Orleans. Justice is satisfied. Vigilante days of California recalled.

Minor Griswold, long a funny man, known as "The Fat Contributor" dies in Sheboygan Falls, Wis. He was latest on Texas Siftings.

15—New Orleans sentiment unanimous in support of the recent lynching.

Representative Spinola of New York, sick in Washington.

16—Judge John R. Brady dies in New York, 67 years.

17—Still the pot seethes in the country over the New Orleans trouble. The latter place is as quiet as Warsaw. Somehow or other the citizens got rid of some bad stuff.

Commander-in-Chief Verzey orders a general observance of the 25th anniversary of the G. A. R. April 6.

18—New Orleans jury begins work on the riot question.

19—Yale lads haze a tutor. Revenge is sweet.

At Cleveland, Rev. McQueary, suspended for six months for heresy. He resigns from the ministry. Quear(y) proceedings.

WORLD.

13—Germany will not have American Pork. Her taste for sausage needs improving.

Lots of Americans at the Queen's Drawing Room. Tuft hunters in high feather.

14—Dr. Ludwig Windethorst dies in Berlin. 79 years.

Hamburg S. S. Servia arrives in Plymouth, England. 18 days from New York. English S. S. attacked by Portuguese. War may follow.

15—Irish factions fighting at Newry. Nothing new about it either.

16—General Campenon dies in Paris, 71 years.

Parnell's political death prophesied.

17—Italy much disturbed over the N. O. affair. If the troubles will only keep the Italians in Italy!

Prince Napoleon dies in Rome. The French called him Plon-Plon. He was a true son of his Father, that Jerome who deserted his American wife to wed this man's mother. The Empire becomes still more a vision of the past.

One hundred and fifty-two British Peers found to own 1,539 rum shops. Yet to help such as these, some would repeal the McKinley Bill.

Steamer Utopia with 700 Italian emigrants aboard sinks off Gibraltar. End of Utopian Schemes, 200 Italians will not be hanged sure.

18—London and Paris in communication by telephone.

19—London naval architects praise Yankee ships.

Captain of the Utopia arrested for negligence.

BY AND BY.

BY JOHN C. CRANE.

Beneath the fields all snowy white
The violets sleeping lie,
The murmur of the brooks is hushed
'Till days of By and By.

The time of Spring draws on apace,
The sun is mounting high—
Our song birds in a southern clime,
Are waiting By and By.

When wintry blasts have ceased to sweep,
To northern honies they'll fly,
Then will we welcome as they come—
The days of By and By.

With birds, and flowers, and running brooks
And greenest pastures nigh,
We'll bless His name who gives to us
The wished for By and By.

The Hills.

The valley hidden, and its tree-decked stream
Within the darkness of resistless night!
Beneath the stars that through dull vapors gleam,
The hills are plain from base to topmost height.
Like these great hills our thoughts of things to be!
Life's valley darkened where earth's shadow lies
The soul's high thoughts of immortality
Arise triumphant to the voiceless skies.

C. L. CLEVELAND.

Millbury, Mass.

The sweetest lives are those to duty wed,
Whose deeds, both great and small,
Are close-knit strands of one unbroken thread,
Where love ennobles all.

Charles Edwin Brooks.

Some most meritorious lives are passed in almost complete quiet; at any rate exciting very little of the clamor and uproar that attend others. At the same time these lives have answered the great end for which they were created. Such duties, as were encountered, were promptly and thoroughly discharged. Nothing was ever shirked; if possible, responsibilities were anticipated. The thousands, who in the past ten years, have gone in and out, at Horticultural Hall will agree that these reflections apply fitly to him, who, for nearly twelve years, was treasurer, librarian and custodian there.

Lineage is becoming, more and more, a subject of interest to Americans. The time was when disgust with the Old World and its trammels or the excessive work, necessary to living in the New, made our ancestors exceedingly careless in relation to all those who had preceded them. Of the Brooks family, however, thanks to a later member, we are able to find an unbroken line from that Thomas Brooks, who in 1636, was found in Watertown, later in Concord. Seemingly, a large share of our early settlers made a stop, longer or shorter, in Watertown. From him have descended the most of those who bear this name in America. To him and his wife, Grace, were born five children. Joshua, one of these, was a resident of Concord. The latter's son, Daniel, died in Concord in 1733. Daniel's son John, died, full of years, in Acton, in 1777. One can't help thinking that some or all of his nine boys became minute men in those days when the embattled farmers fired their famous shot. Two at least bore the title of Captain and they may have won it fairly, clad in Continental homespun. One was Samuel, born probably, in Concord, in 1729-30 and who came to our, then, town of Worcester and settled just north of Adams' square. His wife was Mrs. Hannah (Davis) Brown, whom he married in 1755. He survived till 1817, his wife dying two years later in her 95th year. A descendant, in our city, yet holds, as precious heirlooms, the knitting needles with which she beguiled many an hour, long after they had ceased to be useful. Her industrious habits continued even after she had lost the power to direct her hands aright. The old Brooks homestead was just east of where the new school house is, on the Chaffin house site. The school house stands on what was long known as Brook's Corner.

A younger brother, Nathaniel, settled at what is known as Greendale in 1767 and lived to be 97 years old. He had eight children and thereby was responsible for more of the Worcester family than Samuel who had only one child. The house that Captain Nathaniel B. built on his settling is still standing on the West Boylston road.

Captain Samuel's only son, Samuel, had a somewhat chequered career. He was not content to remain at home; but was of a speculative turn and so became a trader or country merchant in Haverhill, N. H., where he married a widow, Mrs. Anna (Bedel) Butler. Business reverses, afterwards, prompted him to remove his family of ten children to Stanstead, Canada, where his father had purchased a farm for him. It is well known that certain townships in the dominion were almost entirely settled by migrants from the States. Here the remainder of his life was spent and here he and his wife were buried. Many of his descendants are prominent citizens of Canada today. A son, George Washington, was a Canada Rebel in '48 and as such was held in prison six months and lost all his property. A daughter, Mary M. became the wife of Geo. W. Nesmith, long one of the most conspicuous of New Hampshire jurists, who died last year at the advanced age of nearly ninety years. Deacon Samuel's sixth child and fourth son, Nathaniel, known in Worcester as 2d, came to this town in 1818 and thereafter made it his home. He was one of ten children. He was known as 2d on account of his great uncle at Greendale. His grandson preserves an old pocketbook once belonging to Nathaniel 2d, in which he chronicles his beginning to board at George Brooks, on the above named year. He married Mary Chadwick of an old Worcester family, whose name is found on the block near the foot of George street, where the New York Store is, and in Chadwick Square. The old mansion of this family is still standing on the road from Worcester to West Boylston.

Capt. Samuel Brooks, whose body was first buried in the old Mechanic Street ground and afterward moved to Hope Cemetery, left a large property to his grand children.

Deacon Nathaniel, 2d, thus fell heir to quite an amount and he purchased the farm in South Worcester coming down, so the deed says, from Joshua Hale who built the first paper mill in Worcester. The house in which he lived for many years was built in 1820 and stands on Chelsea Street near Cambridge, now the home of Alexander Belisle, Jr. Here these good people reared their family of eight children. Of these only twins, Nathaniel N. of Oakham and Mary C. Anderson of Boston, survive.

Charles Edwin was the second child, born August 15, 1824; but his older brother, John Adams, died so early, he always was rated as the oldest of the family. On his father's farm of more than one hundred acres, his childhood and youth were spent. The public schools were attended till he went to the Worcester County Manual Training School, the institution which preceded the Worcester Academy and here his school life ended. Some of his early years were spent in the Spy office. Afterward he followed the grocery business for some years as a partner in the firm of Brooks & Stearns at No. 8 Front street where is now Fairbank's Drug Store. Mr. John Stearns is now in Bradford, Vt. In 1864, favored by Chaplain Horace James of the 25th Mass. Infantry, he went to Newbern and was there some time in the Commissary Department. On returning to our city, he was, for a while, in the Worcester Skirt factory, a concern which grew to be the Worcester Corset Company. The president of the company was David H. Fanning, Mr. Brook's brother-in-law.

In 1879, began the work which has, most prominently, connected him with Worcester life and recollection. In the fall of that year, he was made a sort of general supervisor, sharing with Mr. E. W. Lincoln, the general responsibility for the well being of the Horticultural Society. He was ever present and ever vigilant. Everything was in place and he knew just where everything was to be found. Seemingly, there were many years of future usefulness for Mr. Brooks; but illness came and after a few days of pain he died Dec. 22, 1890.

He married Dec. 2, 1851, Miss Elizabeth Capron Fanning of Jewett City, Conn., as already indicated, a sister of Mr. David H. Fanning. Their home has long been at 54 Queen Street. To them were born three children; the oldest, Ella, died at the age of five years; Arthur A. was graduated from our High School in 1875, the valedictorian of his class and he took high rank in his Harvard class of 1879. Subsequently, he taught in Scranton, Penn., and for one year in our own High School. Afterwards, he took a course in the Divinity School of Harvard and has been since 1886 the pastor of the First Unitarian Society in Greenfield. The younger son, Walter, F., was also graduated at the Worcester High School, Class of 1877, College Course. He did not, however, go to college, but soon after graduation entered the banking house of Wm H. Morse, where he is today. He is also the Secretary of the Security Associates. To his care and diligence as well as deep interest in genealogical matters may be ascribed the possibility of this article. Quite likely, at some future time, his data, most carefully arranged, will develop into a book.

Pictures, yet preserved, of Mr. Charles E. Brooks, and his wife in their early days bear ample testimony to the gentleness of their characters. Nor were such traits wanting to the end. There was nothing Mr. Brooks could do to aid the seeker that he did not undertake. In his prime, Mr. B. was six feet tall and, reared on the farm, he had the activity and good habits usually propagated there. In the days of old fashioned base ball, he was one of the best players and, on the Common, made many a heavy hit. Also, he was not averse to a bout at wrestling. In 1875, Oct. 22, he became a member of the Worcester Agricultural Society. Jan. 10, 1886, he was made a life member of the Bay State Agricultural Society and was a member of the Society of the Sons and Daughters of New Hampshire. The first meeting of the Horticultural Society after his death was distinguished by the adoption of resolutions of respect. These were drawn up by Mr. James Draper and were of a most appropriate character. Preceding these, President Henry L. Parker had spoken very appreciatively of the deceased officer.

The Brooks family has been Congregational for generations. At least three of Mr. B.'s ancestors in direct line were deacons and, in Worcester, they were members of the Old South Church. Mr. Charles E. Brooks was one of the fifty-two members who left Plymouth Church to form the new Piedmont and of this body he was clerk from the beginning to the date of his death. At the annual parish meeting Jan. 12, '91 on motion of Deacon Chas. T. Haynes, very commendatory resolutions were adopted and placed on file. On December 24th, Dr. D. O. Mears, his pastor, spoke the final words over his body at his late home and all that was mortal was borne away for burial in Rural Cemetery. The life of Charles Edwin Brooks has been an excellent example of faithfulness, honesty and devotion. A good officer.

School and College.

"High School Scholars have formed a new organization, to be known as the Raccoon Club. Its purpose is social enjoyment. H. F. Estabrook is president." LIGHT well remembers when to call another boy a "coon" in the High School was a casus belli. How things do change!

Unintentional injustice was done Dr. O. W. Holmes in last week's LIGHT. His class poems have been continued to 1889 inclusive. All have appeared in the Atlantic Monthly and all have been in his very best vein. Fortunate '29.

Worcester Polytechnic.

The catalogue of the Polytechnic Institute for 1891 will be issued next week. The number of instructors and assistants registered is 22; the number of students 196 or 25 more than ever before. These are classified as follows: Past-graduates, 3; seniors, 35; middlers, 40; juniors, 65; apprentices, 53. The next junior class can hardly be less than 70, and by these figures the large growth of the Institute for the last two years, especially, is clearly apparent. With the increased facilities afforded by the Salisbury Laboratories, and the still growing demand for the graduates of the Institute, this growth may be expected to continue till limited by the room and resources of the school.

Examinations for admission may hereafter be divided, only the preliminary examination will not count unless the candidate is successful in, at least, three subjects. Certificates of Principals of preparatory schools, may, at the discretion of the Faculty, be substituted for the preliminary examination, but not for the final examination in Algebra, Geometry, French and advanced English.

The new course in Physical and Political Science makes a good start with six students in the junior class, and quite as many are expected for next year.

Gifts to the Institute during the year include about $18,000 from Mr. Stephen Salisbury (in addition to the $100,000 previously reported) for the completion and further equipment of Salisbury Laboratories, the gift of one and one-fourth acres of land and grading of the same from the same benefactor, electrical apparatus and machinery, chiefly from the Westinghouse company of Pittsburg to the value of $500, and some money and books for the library.

In a private note to LIGHT, Dr. H. T. Fuller mentions the improvement in his health through his stay in Lakewood, N. J., and the departure from L. after a two weeks' stay of Mrs. Judge Staples and Miss Dewey for New Haven. He also subjoins the following interesting data concerning the village itself.

This place now vies with Atlantic City as a Spring resort. It is about forty miles southwest of Long Branch, ten miles inland from coast, on a sandy ridge running parallel with the coast line, and surrounded by belts of pine forest. The temperature at this season averages about seven degrees warmer than at New York, but the chief factor in its salubrity, especially for throat and lung troubles, is the dryness of the ground. It so rapidly absorbs moisture that in a few hours after a very heavy rain, one may walk almost everywhere, on or off the streets, without dampening more than the soles of his shoes.

Geologically, the structure of the region is interesting. The sinking of artesian wells reveals the character of the strata to the depth of 500 feet. Sand predominates. This is overlaid with coarse gravels of the tertiary period, and interleaved with marls and bog iron ores.

THIS SHEET

Music, 10 cents a copy; 3000 other popular pieces same price!

- |  |   |
|--|---|
| INSTRUMENTAL. Grand Valse de Concert; Hause. In the Mill; Ernest Gillet. Massa's in the Cold Ground; Var Snow. Skirt Dance; for banjo. Modjeska; Louthian. Fresh Life; Spindler. Love's Dream After the Ball; Czebulka. Hilarity; Luhnner; op. 150, No. 2. Thou-a-d and One Nights' Waltz; Strauss. Wine, Women and Song; Strauss. La Fille du Regiment, 4 hands; Strabbog. Little Huntsman Waltz; Koeder. Love Star Waltz; Roeder. Le Tremolo; Rosseller. 39th Separate Co. March; Baldwin. The Mill; A. Jansen. | Oh, Would that the Rose had Wings, Abt; corset and piano. Invitation to the Dance; Von Weber; 4 hands. VOCAL. Watching for Her Absent Boy; Shelley. Don't Forget Your Grand-Dad; Hardman. Ahoy! Ahoy! Millocker. Arthur and Martha; Lloyd. Dream Memories; Lennox. That's Why He Loves Me; Atwood. Waltzing as She is Waltzed; Selden. The Strap that Mother Used to Fan My Pants. The Message from the King; Pinsuti. Beautiful Dreams of the Past; by Shelley. Queen of the Earth Pinsuti. In O.d Madrid Troten. |
|--|---|

Sole agency for Ivers & Pond, Newby & Evans, S. G. Chickering and Prescott Pianos; also Grover Organs; an Organ that plays itself is on exhibition.

Instrument Strings. Rare Violins. Pianos tuned and moved.

C. E. STEERE,
492 Main; one flight up. Next door to Boston Store.

Worcester citizens will receive with pleasure the announcement that the famous Marine Band of Washington will pay the city a visit Fast day afternoon and evening. There has always existed about as much mystery in the general mind about this Marine Band as there was about the famous Strauss orchestra of Vienna. Hundreds and hundreds of our citizens have heard the Marine Band just as they had witnessed the performances of the Strauss orchestra in far away Vienna; but popularly speaking the Marine Band has been comparatively unknown to our own people. This is the nation's band and it ought to be good. It is. Among the many royal, imperial, court and government national bands there are none more excellent or delightful to listen to than the United States Marine Band stationed at Washington. And especially has this been true since the appointment of its present conductor, John Philip Sousa, a most thorough and competent musician and composer. The Marine Band afternoon concerts on the White House lawn have long been a feature of the summer social life of the capital. Congress has recently appreciated the importance of this band and extra appropriations have been made to increase its efficiency by adding both regular and reserve members to it that the highest standard may be attained. For the first time in its history the Marine Band will make a tour of the country, Mr. Sousa and his red-coated musicians having been granted a leave of absence. The Marine Band concerts will fill Mechanics Hall as it was not filled even by the famous Blue Danubians.

Battery B.

Dr. Wm. T. Souther's Emergency lectures before the Battery Boys have had a most excellent effect in prompting them to look up questions, hitherto quite overlooked. In the examinations which followed the lectures twenty-six passed successfully, all members of the Battery, save Geo. W. Hubbard a G. A. R. man in charge of the Armory. When we reflect that nearly all of those examined are mechanics with little pretension to scholarship we must think the showing fine.

Certainly thoughts are prayers. There are moments when the soul is kneeling, no matter what the attitude of the body may be. —Victor Hugo.

Millbury Letter.

Once more, in legislative body assembled, the people of Millbury have exercised their rights as freemen; in other words the annual town meeting has been held and laws and appropriations made for the ensuing year. The meeting, which was largely attended in the afternoon, was presided over by Mr. C. B. Perry in a most satisfactory manner. The appropriations aggregate $29,472.50 an increase of $472.50 over last year. The following officers were elected: Selectmen, W. A. Harris, Dr. Robert Booth, P. W. Wood; town clerk, Ira N. Goddard; town treasurer, David Atwood; auditor, Dr. J. R. Lincoln; collector, H. A. Ryan; overseers of the poor, Henry E. Newell, John Broadbent, Freeman Van Ornum; school committee for three years, Dr. George C. Webber; assessors, Hervey Park, David T. March, H. L. Bancroft; trustee of town library, George F. Chase; trustee of cemeteries, N. H. Sears; board of health, Dr. George C. Webber for three years, S. N. Rogers for two years, James H. Ferguson for one year. Six constables were also elected.

It is to be regretted that the town is to have a legalized rum traffic during the coming year, but such is the fact as the citizens voted license by twenty-six majority. Let the officers and people alike bend their energies and exert their whole strength to have the license law enforced, since we have voted to place it upon the statute book.

On the other hand, the people of Millbury may congratulate themselves upon the overwhelming vote to employ a school superintendent. This is a long step forward and can only result in great good to the schools of the town, if given a fair trial.

The Australian Ballot was used for the first time here, in a town election, and seemed to give general satisfaction.

The town started the movement, (which should be pushed to an early completion), for building a new school house on Burbank Hill, by appointing a committee to confer with the school board, furnish plans and estimates and report at a future meeting. The present building is not fit for school children to occupy and has been condemned by Inspector Dyson. As soon as this committee is ready to report, a special town meeting should be called and the matter not allowed to go over until next year.

Our citizens of Irish birth or extraction celebrated St. Patrick's Day with a parade. The A. O. H. made a fine appearance as the members, wearing their new regalia and headed by Hobart's Drum Corps, twelve pieces, marched through the principal streets of the town.

Chamberlain District Farmers' Club will meet at the residence of H. J. Allen, Salisbury street, next Friday at 7.30 p.m. Subject: "Does the Agricultural Literature of the Day Benefit the Farmer?" Essay by S. A. Burgess.

At Cooley's Hotel in Springfield yesterday, the Homeopathic Medical Society of Western Massachusetts held its annual meeting. Fourteen members were present. Dr. Horace Packard of Boston University and Dr. J. P. Sutherland of the N. E. Medical Gazette were entertained. Dr. J. P. Rand of Worcester was elected President for the ensuing year.

School and College.

Wellesley.

Rev. Mr. Bakeman, of Chelsea, at one time pastor of the Main Street Baptist Church of Worcester, preached in the chapel Sunday.

Miss Fessendon, State Superintendent of the Y. W. C. T. U. spoke upon the necessity of securing young workers in the cause of temperance, on Sunday evening.

A reception was given to the Sophomores by the Faculty Monday afternoon. Among the guests from Worcester were Mr. and Mrs. Abercrombie, Mr. and Mrs. Truesdell, Miss Brainerd from the Worcester Academy, and Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Lincoln and Mrs. Shaw.

The Beethoven Society gave its annual concert Monday evening.

Holy Cross College.

The Easter holidays begin Wednesday morning.

C. E. McGillicuddy, W. H. S. '88, took part in the play presented by the Dramatic Club at Leicester, St. Patrick's night.

Rev. Michael Hughes S. J. and Mr. Charles B. Macksey, S. J. of the Boston College Faculty, paid us a visit last Tuesday.

The graduation theses of the graduating class will all be handed in before the Easter holidays, from which will be chosen those that will be spoken at the commencement exercises.

Rev. M. A. O'Kane preached at North Brookfield Tuesday night.

Polytechnic.

At last we are to have a school-pin. The final decision was made last Monday noon at another meeting of the school. The committee that had the matter in charge, received over fifty designs from both students and outsiders. Of this number, three were submitted, from which a choice was to be made by the entire school. One was the work of a local jeweler; the second was designed by W. F. Burleigh '92, and the third by Sumner A. Kinsley '91. Of 90 votes cast at the meeting, the latter received 71, and hereafter members of the Institute will wear a pin made from Mr. Kinsley's sketch. The body of the pin is a triangle, bearing the words "Lehr und Kunst," the school motto. Within this is the number of the class, and without, the letters W. P. I. enclosed in three circles, one on each side of the triangle, and partly covered by it. The back ground is of scroll-work. The whole makes a very compact, handsome and neat pin, and one which is symbolic of the Institute. A motion to have the design copyrighted, was unfortunately not carried. A committee consisting of F. A. Bigelow '91, and W. F. Burleigh '92, was chosen to get prices for the pin from the several dealers.

The story to the effect that Prof. Eaton is to leave for his California ranch this coming vacation, is without foundation. As soon as he can dispose of his place and settle up affairs here, Prof. Eaton intends to leave for a warmer climate, as his health of late has been very poor, but this in all probability will not be before summer.

As the warm days approach, interest in Athletics once more is revived, and more or less practising of one sort or another is going on every afternoon about the grounds. Last week Friday, a meeting of the Athletic Association was held. Officers were elected as follows: President, F. E. Bradford '91; vice-president, A. E. Culley '92; secretary, J. F. Bartlett '92. D. A. Bullard '93, was chosen foot-ball manager, and Andrews '92 captain of the base-ball team.

The directors of the Athletic Association, held a meeting Tuesday. It was voted to have the Spring Field Day May 15th. The board decided to dispense with the services of a trainer the coming season, the general opinion of the members being, that "less rubbing and more running" will be more effective. H. L. Dadmun '91, was chosen captain of the team which is to go to Springfield to the N. E. I. A. A. sports. Arrangements were also made for a series of class base-ball games as heretofore. The Apprentices have already picked out their nine, and the men have been measured for suits.

E. W. Lazell of Spencer, class of '90, who, during the past year has been instructing in chemistry at the Institute, left Thursday to accept a position as assistant chemist with the Pennsylvania Lead Company, Mansfield Valley, Penn. This is the company of which Francis C. Blake '76, who died but a few weeks since, was President, and Mr. Lazell is to take the same position that Mr. Blake took, when he first went into its employ. There are also one or two '89 men at the same place.

High School.

Interest in athletics at the High School is now revived as of yore and the effort made by each class to win the banner for the coming year will be strong. Calculation as to the winning class is of necessity very vague, owing to the lapse of a year and a half in which there have been no reports whatever. However, this seems only to increase the zeal of those interested, both those having reputations to sustain, and the ones intending to act the part of "dark horses." The 23rd of May has been fixed as the date for the field-day, and, judging from present indications, the occasion will be in nowise lacking in the usual interest.

The boating banner offered by a friend to be contested for by the different class crews has been accepted. The Athletic Association will, in all probability, appoint and maintain four-oared crews from the three upper classes to compete annually for the banner, which, by the way, is to match the one hanging in Room 7, won by the departed champions of '90. This competition will give a zeal to rowing heretofore lacking at the school, and which may show its result in college crews in years to come.

The Senior class are at the present waiting in doubt, both as to a subject for their bust presentation, and as to their orator. Gen. Sherman was generally favored, but the difficulty of procuring a bust has arisen and now the names proposed are Garfield, Sheridan, Louisa M. Alcott and Charles Dickens. W. W. Orr, who was to have delivered the oration at the presentation has declined, and now H. H. Chamberlain, Hector Bellisle, T. F. Cummings and W. J. Denholm are mentioned for the position.

At the meeting of the Eucleia March 13th, the following question was debated: Resolved that the law of primogeniture is just and expedient.

At the last meeting of the Sumner Club, the question was discussed: That the assassination of Julius Cæsar was beneficial to the Roman People. One of the unusual features of the meeting was an original poem by D. G. Burrage, entitled "The Sumner Club."

The Alethia debated whether there could be two living beings with such lack of sympathy as to be unable to be friends. A novel question.

On the 20th Miss Mary Bridgman addresses the Altheia, and Messrs. Abbott and Hodges speak before the Sumner. All are teachers of the High School.

The High School ball team for the season of '91 has been made up as follows: McCann, Rafferty, McAleer, Philpot, Knowles, Zaeder, Edmundson, C. A. Gray, Denny and Cullen. McCann will be found in the pitcher's box, and will captain the nine. C. A. Gray, who has in the past successfully managed the team will handle the nine this year. Zaeder will fill his usual place on first base. Denny and Gray will play left and centre field respectively. The other men's positions have not been fully decided on, but will be placed according to their strength in a position.

The rhetorical exercises Thursday consisted of an original essay by Miss Pierce, junior class, read by Miss Knowles, subject, "Recent Indian Outbreak." Vocal solo, "Fiddle and I," with piano and violin accompaniment, Mr. Gray, senior class. Declamation, extract from "Grady's Address at Boston Banquet," Mr. George Mathews, senior.

The officers of the High School Athletic Association are as follows: President, W. A. McAleer; vice president, H. S. Davis; secretary, H. A. Billings; treasurer, H. H. Hill; board of directors, the officers ex-officio and G. A. Davis, E. M. Shattuck, E. A. Denny, E. C. Witherby, F. J. Zaeder, F. H. Bigelow; field marshal, W. A. McAleer; referee, H. A. Adams; starter, J. J. Donahue; timers T. H. Hurley, F. S. Pierce and E. A. Denny; judges, J. H. Dennis, L. T. Nelson, Jr., Frank Bement and E. M. Mellus.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

Next Tuesday evening, March 24, the Ladies Aid Society of Pilgrim Church offer a delightful evening's entertainment which promises to be one of the best this busy, enterprising church has ever given the public. It will consist of character songs by one skilled in that line, banjo playing by Mr. Percival, a noted teacher of the art in Boston and Miss Alma Leathers of this city, a promising pupil of his, followed by the beautiful Cantata of the Flowers given by the members of the choir connected with the church. This is full of sparkling music and bright words. Much labor has been spent in preparation for the evening and it is sincerely hoped the friends of the church will be present in such numbers that the result will bring substantial aid to the ladies towards their pledge for the building fund.

"The Great Metropolis," a melo-drama of excellent quality, which has been playing to good audiences Thursday and Friday evenings, will be presented again this afternoon and evening. It had a long run in New York early in the season and has received the favor of the press wherever played. Forrest Robinson is an actor of considerable talent, and the realistic wrecking scene in which experienced life savers take part, is the finest piece of stage mechanism produced in this city.

The first and only appearance in this city of the renowned English actors, Mr. and Mrs. Kendal, will be next Wednesday, March 25. The most refined and fashionable audiences have crowded their performances in New York city and Boston. Mr. Seymour Hicks, a young actor of much promise, and a writer of distinction, is a member of the supporting company. Tickets are now on sale at the box office.

Among the coming entertainments which are awaited with interest, the concert to be given Easter Monday by the Arlington Banjo Quintet takes a prominent place. This is the fourth annual concert by this club. They will be assisted this year by the Boylston Banjo, Mandolin and Guitar Club of Boston, the Worcester Ideal Banjo, Mandolin and Guitar Club, Miss Marie Louise Chandler, a graduate of the School of English Speech of this City and the Cecilia Quartet. The members of the Arlington Club are F. B. Fisher, A. B. Weixler, C. H. Morse, L. R. Bradford and W. F. Boswell.

"The Devil's Mine," a western drama of high order, will be presented by an excellent company, at the New Worcester Theatre Monday and Tuesday.

Washington Letter.

The colored people of Washington have been greatly excited this last week over an attempt of General Ordway, commander of the District National Guard, to disband the two battalions of colored troops that represent their race in the militia. The reason given for the general's arbitrary action is the failure of Congress to appropriate a sufficient sum to maintain the militia at its authorized strength, but the colored troops contended that, if the appropriation was too small and a reduction of the force was necessary, the companies to be disbanded should be those which inspection should prove to be the least efficient. The negro seems to have a natural fondness for blue coats and brass buttons and the members of the two battalions took an individual pride in always turning out with full ranks and in the best of trim. The prominent colored citizens of the city met and passed resolutions of indignant remonstrance when the order was issued, and a committee was appointed to wait upon the Secretary of War and the President to try and induce those authorities to suspend the order of disbandment. The committee met with the most gratifying success—the President assured them that the order would be recalled, which has since been done, and now "peace, blessed peace" broods over the armories of the colored militia. The deficiency of the appropriation is to be met by public subscription and a sufficient sum has already been pledged to render it certain that the necessary amount will be raised. The general sentiment in Washington seems to be that the President has acted wisely, and that four hundred well-drilled and disciplined colored soldiers are better in the militia, under martial law, than out of it.

Washington adds one more to the list of cities which have a street railroad in successful operation the cars of which are run by storage batteries. Last week the new line was opened to Ekington, and the cars run by their novel power as smoothly and rapidly as could be wished for. But the horses don't like them to judge by their actions when they are driven near one. Perhaps they are trying to show their resentment at being deprived of a chance to earn an honest living; but they should be congratulated on their coming emancipation from pulling street-cars. For what company, when it has been thoroughly proved that the storage system is safe and practicable, is not going to adopt it?

Speaking about new railways, another new line is being constructed which will be a real benefit to this city, Alexandria, and the host of people who visit Mt. Vernon. An electric railroad is nearly completed to connect those three points and it can not fail to be a paying investment. The only way of reaching Mt. Vernon at present is by steamboat and the fare for the short trip, $1.25, is nothing short of robbery. The line will also run by the gate to Arlington Cemetery, so another band of legalized brigands, the 'bus people, will find their profits materially reduced.

There is a good story going the rounds on Secretary Foster. The treasury is only open to visitors from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and on the Secretary's return from a cabinet meeting, during the second day of his incumbency of the office, a vigilant watchman refused to allow him to re-enter the building. Expostulations were unavailing as the watchman took him for one of the numerous cranks who besiege the government departments and had not a newspaper reporter, who was acquainted with both the watchman and Secretary, come along the cabinet minister would have staid outside. This story has a little moral to it somewhere and also emphasizes the fact that there is no limit to a reporter's acquaintance.

The Capitol is lonesome now-a-days—the Capitol not the capital—and the watchmen have an easy time of it. As far as the resident population is concerned it seems to make very little difference to them whether Congress is in session or not. Their interest is all in the Departments, where every family in the city has some member employed or hopes to have, and the sickness or absence of a secretary or commissioner having the power of appointment is of more moment to them than the comings and goings of any number of political celebrities on Capitol Hill. WINFIELD.

OVER ON OUR STREET.

A small boy dwelling in these precincts is much interested in the story of Elijah and Elisha, and when asked what it was that the prophet gave to his successor, he very honestly replied, "His mantle piece."

There are some newly married people here as well as those long wedlocked. Mr. Young-husband is fond of coffee cake, and he one day, intimates that a bit of that delicacy would not come amiss, his way. Mrs. Y., ever intent on her liege lord's happiness, makes the cake and puts it before the Benedict. He tastes but does not laud. Something is wrong. "Isn't it good" says the maker. "It seems rather dry," replies the newly married. "Well, I am sure," says his wife, "I don't know what ails it, I put in half a pound of freshly ground coffee." She knows how to make that cake now. I might have stated that one of her first purchases at the grocery after marriage, consisted of one pound of sugar and four of coffee. After all, she was not so much worse than a very prominent business man, on our side, who had never ordered for the family. There were six of them including the servant and two children. As he went out his wife said, "Won't you order some beef steak today?" "Of course" is the reply and off he hurries. He rushes into the market and leaves his order. "How much" is the query. He had not thought of that; but there was nothing small about him so he says, "Oh, fifteen or sixteen pounds." Imagine the reception he got at noon. He was properly instructed thereafter.

One of our elder citizens is sometimes absent minded. Only a few days ago, he was in great distress about his overshoes. They could not be found. There was great commotion, but he could not find them. "If you girls don't stop carrying off everything and hiding it, I'll know the reason. I'll take everything up to my room and then I'll see whether things can be let alone." Finally, sitting down in despair over his loss one of the girls, looking at his feet says, "Why father you have your overshoes on now." Sure enough there they were, just where he had put them himself. Thus that matter blew over; but he had a worse time when he couldn't find his undershirt that he knew ought to be in a certain drawer. "I can't see any use in hiding a shirt. What do I want to go hunting all over the house for to find that garment. If you women haven't anything to do but to keep me trotting around to find my clothes, I think it's high time you did." In the course of an hour, reduced to the necessity of wearing another garment, found for him, he proceeds to change. Then he finds that he has been wearing two undershirts and the lost is found. Tableau. It is intimated that Mr. Bowser, supposed to be a Detroitier, has relatives over on our street.

On frosty mornings, the porous brick sidewalks over our way, "are a vain thing for safety." One morning a down townner was hastening along with unseemly speed when with no chance to save himself, he went down with a crash. His momentum was such that he rolled over and over and I feared lest he had broken his bones and rushed to his rescue. Not so two school girls, High school girls at that, their laughter was uncontrollable. One was very tall and the other exceedingly brief, well the long and the short of it was, in that case, they laughed till, exhausted, they had to lean against the fence for support. The poor man limped off wondering what there was funny about it. It was just the old difference between seeing and being seen. When they recovered themselves, the girls recognized their impoliteness and neither would, today, allow that she even smiled.

Alfred S. Roe will lecture in Sterling, next Wednesday evening on "Homes and their Surroundings." The Village Improvement Society is chiefly interested.

Miss Lulu J. Rawson leaves Creelman's Shorthand School to take the position of stenographer in the office of Harry E. Hill, Esq., 344 Main street, city.

Charles J. Malmberg of the firm Malmberg & Bernstrom in this city has sold his interest in the firm to John Olson of Brockton, Mass. The name of the firm now is Bernstrom & Olson.

NATURES CUP OF COLD WATER.

The raggedest butterfly a'winging
About the garden bed,
From the rollicking roses a'winging,
Has perfume without stint
About him shed.

To the least-repentant profligate bee
That ever wore a gown,
The clovers yield their well-filled store-house key,
Beggars once more, to smile
Without a frown.

Upon the wannest of the daisy tribe,
Who flirted all last night,
As royally, as if she'd been the bride
O' the rose whose heart she scorned,
Fall dew drops bright.

To the deafest of the duelling ants
Thru-ting his poison sting,
The forest-choirs most sacred Sabbath chants—
With poplar-leaves for harps
The breezes sing.

And dear Nurse Night in her sleep-fringed gown
In every balmy bow'r,
The paupers and beggars—has tucked each down
Under a dew-spun spread
O' a summer show'r.

—Helen Worthington Rogers.

Books and Bookmen.

A journey among book stores is the most delightful of excursions and a genuine book-hunter has adventures to which those of Gordon Cumming are tame in comparison. To be sure his life may not be endangered but the discovery of a rare local history in a mass of trumpery gives to him sensations that the African hunter never experienced at the sight of whole herds of gemboks and elephants. A society for the encouragement of book hunting is in order.

Handbook of Historic Schools of Painting by Deristhe L. Hoyt, Instructor in Massachusetts Normal Art School, Boston. Ginn and Co., 1890.

The most of books that treat upon Art are either too technical or costly for the average student. Here, however, in two hundred and ten pages is condensed a deal of information calculated to enlighten the honest seeker after knowledge. All the schools of painting are explained and their representatives considered. An intelligent preface is followed by a few pages of definitions, sufficient to make clear the subject. Then come the various schools in order of age. Finally we have a table of technical terms used in painting and a very fine pronouncing index of all the artists referred to in the text. The expense of the book is so small that any school can afford to possess it. In fact few can afford to be without it. In a word, it is a book to be at one's elbow readily reached for frequent references.

The Architects and Builders edition of the Scientific American for March.

Again we have visions of comfort and happiness to be had in Castles in Spain so far as many readers are concerned. But these creations of the architect's fancy reduced to solid brick and mortar by the builders art are pleasant to contemplate. Residences built after these plans ought to stand for generations as do those constructed abroad. Our people have, generally, built for the day only. With wealth and leisure, will come greater care and elegance. Messrs. Munn & Co. of New York are doing missionary work.

Power Through Repose by Annie Payson Call, Boston. Roberts Brothers, 1891.

There is an abundance of good advice in this book. If we could only take it and practice its teachings. We all grant the desirableness of Repose and would be Emersons and Garrisons if we could. But so many of us have the blood of choleric ancestors in our veins that all maxims and resolutions are flung to the winds when the test comes. This is not, ostensibly, a medical book, yet it may be a question whether it be not worth more for health than many a work of longer and more intricate title. It is especially valuable reading for Americans who know next to nothing of repose. With us, all is work, bustle and confusion. The human engine is made to rush at its topmost speed, till some day, a crash comes. Perhaps this little book may avert some catastrophes of this kind. The trouble is, those who need it most will not read it. They won't have time. When they are down on a sick bed, perhaps they will listen to the reading of its lessons and will resolve to practice somewhat. The Germans have named American nervousness "Americanitis" and a good name it is. No German ever had it. It takes several generations of growth on this continent to generate the complaint in all its intensity. Power Through Repose is a good antidote. Our booksellers will be glad to order it for you. It will prove cheaper than doctors' calls.

Good-Night Poetry (Bedside Poetry). A Parent's Assistant in Moral Discipline, compiled by Wendell P. Garrison, Boston. Ginn and Co., 1891.

Wendell Phillips Garrison is a good combination of names. The compiler, we must think has arranged here the results of observation and practice, perhaps in his own family circle. It is by no means a Hymn book nor yet a book of Common Prayer, but in the best shape of the printer's art may here be found eighty-five selections from thirty-six authors arranged to illustrate above two hundred traits, characteristics and situations. Everything is finely indexed so that a very little searching gives us what we want. From the preface we quote the following, "Do what we will and can, the moral discipline of our children oftenest falls short alike of our prayers and of our endeavor." Many parents realize this and make such effort as they can to stem the tide of evil influences. One of the best plans is to read to our little ones and here is something at our command. The child will not call it preaching. He will be interested before he knows. Mr. Garrison very ingeniously arranges his verses from Alpha to Omega. Another man might not make the same selections nor the same arrangement; but till he can make a better, this collection is entitled to a deal of reading and contemplation. A good book! He who makes one, cannot have too much praise. Mr. Garrison draws on Cowper, Campbell, Emerson, Wordsworth, Leigh Hunt, Lowell, Whittier, Shelley, Southey, Longfellow and a score of others who are household words in many a home. Frequent reference to these words will tend to make home more homelike, the most desirable of ends.

As for Dr. Holmes, "Though his voice was a little hoarse, he chatted in merry mood of Congressional doings. He much disliked Free Silver Coinage; but of Womans' Suffrage, he was unwilling to express an opinion. In this matter he has not the settled conviction of his friend, Whittier. His publishers will put out soon a small book containing three of his most popular poems, and it was quite refreshing to hear him say, just like a school girl, 'I think it would be splendid.' The Doctor had just received from England a box of rose scented soap. The six cakes cost £1, 57, or over a dollar a piece. His verses on Contentment occur at once. To his modest wish for just one Stradivarius and one recumbent chair he might have added one box of choicest soap."

American Folk-Lore Society.

The American Folk-Lore Society was organized January 4, 1888, for the collection and publication of the Folk-Lore and Mythology of the American Continent. The membership fee is three dollars, payable on the first of January in each year.

This publication has little or no rivalry in its peculiar field. It is a most excellent gathering together of facts that otherwise would be lost to learning.

Journal of American Folk-Lore. Contents of No. 12, Vol. IV., January-March, 1891. Second Annual Meeting of The American Folk-Lore Society (Report of Proceedings); The Natural History of Folk-Lore, Otis T. Mason; Dissemination of Tales Among the Natives of North America, Franz Boas; Causes of the Present Religious Excitement Among the Indian Tribes, (from several contributors); Some Hawaiian Pastimes, H. Carrington Bolton; Folk-Lore of Stone Tools, Frederick Starr; Gems Possessing Interest Connected with Folk-Lore, George Frederick Kunz; The Daughter of the Sun, A Legend of Tsimshians of British Columbia, James Deans; Games and Popular Superstitions of Nicaragua, Mrs. Gue. ro; Iroquois Notes, W. M. Beauchamp; Waste Basket of Words; Folk-Lore Scrap-book; Record of Folk-Lore; Notes and Queries; Local Meetings and other Notices; Bibliographical Notes.—1 Books,—2 Journals. Published for the American Folk-Lore Society by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York.

Table Talk comes this month with all the articles fully equal to those of former numbers. Page after page is given up to answering the questions of perplexed housekeepers. We think this magazine must aid its hundreds of readers in a way that none other does, for its answers are clear and simple in every detail so that beginners need have no trouble in understanding them. The price of the magazine is but a dollar a year, and we are sure it is worth the money.

The Home Magazine, edited by Mrs. Logan, has its first illustration in color this month. There are portraits of Sherman, Bancroft, and one of Mrs. Logan. The short story as well as the continued ones, the society notes, items on fashion, and a paper on "Home Education for men," all go to make up a magazine that may well be read in every home in the country.

Told in the Hills is one of the new books by Marah Ellis Ryan, and is a story of the Western country. Two brothers, Charles and Jack Stuart promise their dying mother to care for, and protect the little girl Annie, who is an orphan and has always lived in the family. If one brother forgot or neglected the trust, the other was to take up the burden. Charles falls in love with Annie but deserts her to marry another, and Jack to save her from disgrace gives her his name. Then he goes West and joins himself to a band of Indians, telling his brother he will never call him brother again. Annie with her boy remains in the old home. Jack Genesee, as his Indian friends call him, goes as guide to a party of eastern people who have come to hunt in the mountains, and falls in love with the young girl of the party. The wife and the children of Charles die and he goes west to find Jack and hear of Annie and the boy. Jack meets a tragic death, but before he dies he gives Annie and her boy back to Charles that he may fulfill the trust so long ago broken. He explains to Rachel Hardy his love, why he could not ask her to marry him, though he felt sure of her love, and when he dies she makes her home where she can see his grave, and gives her life to the work among the Indians, who were his dearest friends. The story is one of thrilling interest and well told in all its parts. Rand, McNally & Co.

Go Right on Girls, written by Annie H. Ryder and published by D. Lothrop Co. of Boston, is a book which we wish might be put into the hands of every young girl in the country. It is written especially for them, though those of advanced years may well take to themselves much of its advice. She says each girl has one or more gifts, but that so many are engaged in looking at and envying others their talents that they fail to use those given themselves. Even the smallest of gifts, if it be only the power to keep the temper, or hold the tongue, or be patient, may be of use and in fact Miss Ryder would have all her readers believe that these small gifts are what the world calls for today. "One thing is sadder than doing our own work, and that is, failing to do the work that God counted on our doing for Him." Three things we must have to work well and those are, strong body, strong mind, and strong character. For the first or these, study the Venus de Milo and directions are given about the exercise, rest, food, etc., to bring the physical beauty of Venus. She tells of the doings of the Demon, Excess, and the Imp, Excitement that goes with him. Miss Ryder claims, and justly too, that bodies may be defiled by neglect, as well as by immorality. Then for the strong mind she gives a list of reading and all the exercise for the making of a strong mind, for she says we should be disgusted with the physical beauty of Venus if when she opened her mouth there issued therefrom only senseless chatter and vapid nothings. She advises all who can, to go to college. "Read for amusement, for instruction, and for the uplifting of the soul." She says again, "Though books increase at the rate of 25,000 per year, if you can digest but twenty-five of them, then that is the number for you to read. Chapter six is on cultivating the beautiful, and Chapter seven, "An appeal for Home", is itself worth the price of the book. Five chapters are given to the five stones of character which she names as, Perseverance, Self-Reliance, Compassion, Self-Control and Aspiration. These cannot fail to be helpful to all who peruse them. We can recommend the book as one that will guide in the right direction every girl into whose hands it may be placed, if she will read and think, and act on its rules for living Price $1.

The New England Magazine.

Every American who wishes to be abreast of the times, and keep thoroughly in touch with the progress of the age all the world over, cannot afford to ignore the Canada of today. In view of the close connection that may soon exist between the two countries, everything that teaches something new about the social and political life of the Dominion should interest all intelligent Americans. The New England Magazine recognizes this growing interest in Canada, and is publishing a series of articles on Canadian topics, of broad and not local interest. The April number will have an article on Canadian Art and Artists by W. Blackburn Harte, which is showing the growth of the art life in Canada reveals incidentally the strange public indifference toward everything outside of commerce. American artists recalling the early days here will read the article with more than ordinary sympathy.

General Sherman, shortly before his death, by written contract, put his memoirs in the hands of Webster & Co., of New York. They, carrying out the spirit of the contract, are about to bring out a cheap edition of his celebrated work; with a brief appendix by the Honorable James G. Blaine, including the closing years of General Sherman's life, his last illness, death and funeral pageant. The work will be in one volume and will contain the full text of the original memoirs. It will be sold at $2.00, all former editions having been sold at $5.00 The proceeds of the work will be devoted to the interests of those whom General Sherman has left dependant for support upon the income of the estate.

Phrenological Journal for March, Fowler & Wells, publishers, New York. The contents for this month are as follows: George Bancroft, sketch and portrait; Lavater's Method of Drawing Silhouettes, illustrated; sketch of James Deville by Charlotte F. Wells; The Nose, (Studies from Lavater) by L. M. Mil-laid; sketch of Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth by the editor; Why is Phrenology Opposed? by Prof. Nelson Sizer; Boots in Winter; Words from a Graduate; Greeting, W. J. Hunter; several articles on child culture; articles on the science of health; notes in science and industry; editorial items; answers to correspondents.

LIGHT acknowledges a very pleasant call from Mr. H. T. Wing, Treasurer of the town of Grafton. The steady faithfulness of such men as Mr. Wing have given to Grafton and other Worcester County towns their deserved prosperity.

George Andrews Cook of this city graduated from Long Island College Hospital Brooklyn, N. Y., March 12. Beside receiving his diploma as M. D., he was one of thirty-eight out of a class of eighty-two awarded a special certificate in physical diagnosis. He has worked hard for his degree and his friends all wish him success. He will probably locate in Marlborough, Mass.

Hidden Treasures.

Those who go down to the sea in ships are not the only ones to see strange sights. Mr. Samuel Waite, in clearing away the old yellow building, corner of Main and Walnut streets, is happening upon something daily. Strange that an apothecary's scales and weights should have been covered over; but they were and today are in excellent preservation. In the wall is found a circular of Dr. Dio Lewis dated Jan. 14, 1867, advertising his physical training. Still older is a hand bill dated Oct. 14, 1844, setting forth that on Wednesday following at Lowell's Livery Stable, Mechanic Street, near U. S. Hotel will be sold a large quantity of manure. T. W. and C. P. Bancroft are the auctioneers, Henry J. Howland, 171 Main street, is the printer.

Stranger still, away back under the floor a tombstone was disclosed having the following inscription, "In memory of Mrs. Elvira Johnson, wife of Mr. Charles Blanchard died Jan. 30, 1811, aged 26 years.

Oh, ye who in silent despondency languish,
That the friend you so loved to earth is no more,
The voice that recalled her can soothe your deep an-guish
And He that bereaved, shall in kindness restore."

Who will rise to explain the finding of the stone in such a place?

Yellow, White and Purple.

BY NORA A. M. ROE.

The Snow Queen scorned the Crocus,
For bringing hints of Spring,
And covered her deep in a snow drift,
The poor little quivering thing.
But the sunshine made her a garment,
To protect her from the storm
And close in its golden glory
She wrapped her shivering form.

Her sister, a beautiful banner,
Flung out to the morning bright,
Its purity rivaled the snowdrift,
A banner of woven light.
Dear Crocus in purpling beauty,
You show to admiring eyes
Of mortals, a wonderful purpose
That darkness and shadow defies.

Oh, Crocus, the North Wind's fury,
Hath never discouraged you,
You rise from the gloom and darkness
To whisper that skies of blue
Hang over the clouds and tempest,
A message to me you bring,
A message of light and sunshine
With colors of Christ the King.

Can it be that Librarian S. S. Green has any designs on the public? Yet he announces the opening of the new library, April 1st. Suppose the doors should be closed then? What a gigantic joke it would be. LIGHT purposes to devote considerable space March 28 to Library matters.

A picturesque occupation, that of Louis E. Booth, who goes to Waukegan, Ill., to take pictures of the new works there, as they are building. He is in the employ of Washburn & Moen and is a graduate of the Polytechnic, Class of '90. He will also assist in draughting.

Mrs. J. Edgar Davis has had a month's outing in the West. She was in Troy, Ohio, and in Indianapolis, visited her son Paul, now in the employ of the Pettis Dry Goods company.

LIGHT acknowledges the favor of a copy of "Le Worcester Canadien" or a compilation of facts pertaining to our French residents. It will be found particularly valuable to all our citizens whether native or otherwise. The editor is J. Arthur Roy.

Miss Mary O'Connor, known to the public as Miss Mary Laurens reached home early in the week, having met with great success in her singing through the South and West. She is a sister of Eugene A. O'Connor, the well known artist of Walker Block. Engagements will call her away again soon.

Miss C. H. Munger, so long and so favorably known as a Worcester teacher, is still at Clifton Springs. While she is able to sit and direct she has very little use of her limbs. Some weeks since she conducted, thus, a very successful gymnastic drill.

The first man to greet the writer on reaching the top of the great tower in Paris was a keeper who said "What Corps were you in?" recognizing my G. A. R. button. "The Sixth," said I. "I was in the 2nd, the 69th N. Y.," was his next remark. A Frenchman, he had served in Col. Corcoran's regiment and had returned to France after the War. That meeting was about as near Heaven as any could be in this life.

Little Carey.

[WRITTEN FOR LIGHT BY MRS. A. S. HEARD.]

John Carey McAllister was the grandiloquent title he claimed. The first time I saw Carey he was down on all fours, his wooley head bent forward, while he alternately gave a whiff at the woodfire he was lighting in one of those immense fireplaces which you find in every room in Southern homes, and then he would turn the whites of his eyes around toward me, peering with the curiosity natural to his race, at the Yankee, half hidden in the draperies of an immense bed. Finally the fire gave forth a brisk blaze and after as much delay as he thought prudent, he quietly rose and withdrew, closing the door softly behind him.

John Carey McAllister was ten years old, a rather slightly built active little darkey, not very black with a decidedly wooley head.

His father had been in the employ of my brother at Corinth, Miss., during the war, and had died leaving Carey in my brother's care.

It was now late in November, 1865, and we were in Louisiana, at a delightful plantation which A— was farming.

Of course all the colored people were free, and their services had to be paid for, yet most of those who had formerly been slaves on this plantation, were still there.

My father, brother and I were of a staunch Republican family of the North. Ill health had sent him south before the war begun. In the excitement of the battle before Corinth he caught up a gun and hurried on to the battlefield, but was promptly sent back by an officer who knew him and his inability to discharge the duty of a soldier. Business called my father south as far as New Orleans and I accompanied him.

We decided to visit my brother on the way down, and this was my first insight into real southern life.

The owners of the plantation were delightfully charming people and friends of A—'s. The spacious rooms, rarely equalled in the northern homes, broad piazza's encircling the house, numberless French windows making ingress and egress very easy. The rich green of the trees and the richly blooming flowers, principally roses, made it very attractive to me.

It might be wearisome to my readers if I were to describe the beauties of the place, the lovely forests with the long graceful swaying fringing moss, natural draperies, and here and there dotted among the trees, the stately palmetto stalks glistening in their rich dark green. Strolling along the banks of the river, as we very freely discussed events of the war, we would notice sticking up above the dark water what appeared to be decayed trunks of old trees, but upon our near approach they would disappear with a chug, and I was informed that those dark objects were alligators, and that they really did, sometimes, catch and drag off a little pickaninny, who was incautious enough to venture too near.

We took a walk one morning through the negro quarters, a regular shed, with snug little cabins on either side, in uniform size and order. We made a call upon old Aunt Chrissie who had charge of the nursery cabin.

At that time I believe there were eight babies there, all in separate wooden cradles and fast asleep, as it was the hour for their morning nap. Th's fact did not seem to trouble Aunt Chrissie, for she did not hesitate to pick up first one and then another poor little creature, giving each a good shake, and then sitting it up straight, she would say, "Wake up Ben, wake up Alec, de ladies hab come to see yer" and the little wooley heads would turn toward us, rolling up the whites of their eyes and opening their mouths in wonder.

They behaved remarkably well, however, and I shall always remember that scene in the little log cabin in Louisiana.

Another ramble we took, ended by our returning by the way of the negro quarters, where upon hearing peculiar sounds issuing from an unoccupied cabin, Mr. T. raised his finger toward us, saying, "sh", but motioning us to draw near.

Through the cracks, we saw four little darkies, one of whom was John Carey McAllister, who was "patting Juba" vigorously, while the others gave their whole attention to keeping time, in the, to them, fascinating dance whose peculiar measure completely captivates them. We did not disturb them but went quietly away.

When we returned to the north, my brother decided to return with us, taking Carey along.

It grew bitterly cold before we reached home, and poor little Carey discovered that "up north," it was not like the Sunny south. However, he seemed quite happy and contented, and very much pleased with the nice new warm clothes A— bought him.

When Spring and Summer came he was happy as the day was long.

I can see him now, and how delighted he was one Sabbath morning in June, when we took him as our little coachman to drive us to Jubilee to attend the service in the College Chapel. He was jubilant, the morning was perfect, and he had on a new bright pink shirt, which was his special admiration and then he was to drive, and he was very proud of being trusted to drive a pair of beautiful grey horses.

That year we had a great quantity of very fine plums and Carey was very fond of them. One day in August we were all very busy canning and preserving plums, for they were at their finest point at this time. My father had a farm of several hundred acres of land a few miles out of the city, and it was here we were living. In one of the hills was a coal mine, from which our family supply was procured. Quite a quantity of coal had been dug and brought near to the entrance, some months before, being left until needed. The spring rains had loosed the earth directly over the covered entrance, and some of the beams had fallen in carrying the earth and sod with them, completely shutting the mine up and cutting off access to the coal.

On this day my brother was superintending the excavation of this debris from the mouth of the mine and Carey was there to be ready to render any little service he could, or that might be necessary, and had been sent up to the house for a pitcher of ice water.

He came and got the water telling me at the same time with great satisfaction that they would soon reach the coal, as they had dug a hole large enough to slip through.

I gave him a handful of plums and he rolled his pleasant black eyes at me, smiling and thanking me, as he hurried on with the water.

I never saw little Carey again alive.

It seemed but a moment after he had gone, that A— came flying up to the house crying out to my father, "Come quickly, Carey has fallen into the mine, and will be smothered to death with foul air." He caught up a strong rope which he evidently had in mind, and turning to go back with all possible speed, was followed by my father, and indeed we all, or at least several of us, hastened to the scene of the calamity. My brother was very much distressed as were all. George, a boy of seventeen, who was one of the workman, said, "Take hold of my hand and I think I can reach him with my other hand." Quicker than I can write it, the attempt was made, but no sooner did George stoop down over the opening than he fell as if struck dead; then the excitement increased. Hastily laying George on the grass under the shade of some trees, while one was at the same time enlarging the opening, my brother tied the rope around his waist, and called to my father and John (another workman) to hold fast in case the gas overpowered him, but he must get him out. This they did, and holding his breath, he made a dive and caught his clothes and succeeded in pulling him out.

Of course he was perfectly limp and lifeless, still every attempt was made to restore him. My little sister, who was a fearless rider, had at the moment George dropped senseless, gone at once for her pony, which she mounted with only a bridle, and bounded away for the Doctor, whom she brought back just after poor little Carey was taken out. The doctor did all that could be done, at our request, although he assured us from the first that the boy died as soon as he fell in, or as we think, he slipped in. That is, he had no idea of the danger, and indeed I do not think that any of the rest had thought that it had been so entirely closed as to create such deadly vapor.

It seemed that when Carey brought the water down, all stopped work to take a drink, not noticing that Carey had gone up to the opening, and he must have slipped in at once, for when they turned round to renew their work seemingly only a few moments before suspended, Carey was gone and they knew at once what had happened. The weather was intensely hot, and the interment must take place the next day. My brother got on a horse early the next morning and rode to the nearest cemetery, (our lot was in the city) and the trustees would not let us bury the poor little innocent black in the grounds; he was black and that was enough. He then rode to another and they also refused; then he came home and reported, and we said, why did we ask of these selfish people this favor. We will bury him in the pasture under the trees, and so a lovely spot was chosen surrounded by three shapely trees on a beautiful height, and a grave was dug for little Carey, and at four o'clock in the afternoon, quite a number of interested friends walked with us, and the pastor of the little church near us, who spoke words of tenderness and of Christ's love for all his children especially for the little soul which was now as white as any, and Carey had a funeral such as few have, who fill important and much larger spheres.

Though twenty-four years have passed since then the little grave with a simple fence, enclosing the three trees, yet marks his resting place.

Clifton Springs.

You ask me to tell you something about Clifton Springs, more than I have yet been able to, in my hurried letters. I left Worcester at 8.12 p.m. in the comfortable sleeping car, Puritan, and arrived in Syracuse about 7.30 next morning where we had breakfast during our wait of about an hour and a half. So far we had come on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad but now we take a branch road that runs a little farther south and is called the Auburn road on account of Auburn being situated upon it I suppose. About half way from Syracuse to Rochester I saw the great prison buildings as I came by Auburn and that was as near as I ever care to be. Clifton Springs is sixty-four miles from Syracuse and we reached here in less than three hours from time of starting. It seemed a very long ride as we had to take the accommodation train. The station at our destination was quite pretty and neatly kept, and is in quite a little valley so that you can look up to the Sanitarium buildings, which are of course the most important ones in the place.

Clifton Springs is a very pretty village of about twelve hundred inhabitants, while the people who come here for their health, in the warm weather, number between five and six hundred more. There are at present only about two hundred patients; and as the advertisements of the stores at home say, "Come early and avoid the rush, and so secure better attention" so might well be said of Clifton Springs and certainly it is now, all any reasonable person could wish for, but I am told that when the houses are full, it is not so easy a matter. So if you are thinking of coming, I would advise any time in the year, with the exception of July and August. I mean, for the best medical treatment; aside from that, it must be delightful in those months. Forty years ago a young man, by name Dr. Henry Foster, came here and found a little shanty built over one of the numerous sulphur springs for which the place is celebrated. He was charmed with the country and believed that the waters would prove beneficial to sick people. He had very little money but he made a beginning of this great enterprise, one of the buildings of which now covers three and one-half acres. This is the oldest one of the buildings and is, I am told, to be rebuilt when the amount of money on hand will warrant. One feature of the whole thing, which we might all do well to copy, is that they do not rely much on trust, but pay as they go along. That is why Dr. Foster will not undertake the new building just yet, but it will come in time and before long. A large and beautiful annex has already been built, and is partly occupied, as many prefer to be in the new building and do not object to going over to the main building for their meals, which are all served there. You know, I think, what I neglected to state in the first place, that this is called the Mecca of school teachers, who through over-work have become tired out, run down, or broken down, and I can assure you from personal experience that a more restful, peaceful and healthful place it has never before been my good fortune to find. There are two former Worcester teachers here now; and although I am a newcomer, while they have been here much longer their experience gives the same result, that Clifton Springs is one of the best places in the world to be helped in mind and body and I think one might well add, soul, for while the place is not in the least sectarian, it is decidedly Christian; and the gentle kindly influence which emanates from every one, from Dr. Foster down to the humblest servant, is indeed most grateful to the the nervous weary invalid and I doubt not has considerable to do with their recovery. This is also a resort for clergymen and missionaries and their families, and to the three classes I have mentioned, all the treatment of this Sanitarium (with the exception of throat and lung troubles) is absolutely free, while the charge for those is very low, for example, you can buy six tickets for a dollar and a half, and that means six calls from the physician in whose charge such cases are, with whatever medicine or treatment he may think best and your ticket covers it all, so you see how very slight the cost is. Your only expense with the exception mentioned is your board which can be governed according to circumstances and condition of your pocket book. Rooms with board, can be had as high as twenty dollars a week and from that down to three fifty, so all can be suited. I have a very large pleasant room with three windows, furnace heat and as nice table board as I could ask for, and pay five dollars a week. The treatment consists largely of baths of which many kinds are given, all under physicians orders of course. There are many brooks about here and right in sight of my boarding place are two close beside each other, one being pure water while the other is sulphur. The sulphur forms a beautiful coloring upon everything over which it flows for any length of time; so that a sulphur brook is indeed a thing of beauty to the sight as it comes tumbling down from the hills above in a succession of charming waterfalls. The country abounds in hills and woods and small rivers or big brooks; so there are very delightful walks and drives but those I have in anticipation, as my strength is not quite equal to much exertion yet. There is much more I want to tell you, about the beauties of the place, but I must leave that for some other time as my letter is already too long for a good night's rest I fear. Many people, in fact nearly all, object, when they first come, to the odor of the sulphur; but a few days stay and you do not notice it at all. Here is an incident said to be true. A lady came here for treatment. The first night of her stay the physician who was to have charge of her case was called up as she wished to see him at once. He went to her room and found her seated at a wide open window, wrapped in a shawl, with her register closed and a pillow against it. She began with "Doctor, you told me when I came here there wasn't any danger of fire or gas as all the heat came from steam pipes from the engine room, three hundred feet away from this building; and here the gas has been pouring into my room ever since I came, and all I can do does no good, and I should have suffocated long ago if I hadn't had my head out of the window so long that I know I've caught my death cold." The good doctor waited until he could get in a word edgewise, and then mildly remarked that "It was the sulphur and she had better shut the window." The method of treatment is perhaps better described in these words that are printed upon the back of our physician's card than in any others. "Not aiming in our treatment of disease to sustain any particular theory of medicine, but to use in a liberal spirit all known remedial agents" There is also a large gymnasium and all patients able to exercise are invited to meet one hour each morning under a competent teacher. "The exercises comprise a system of light gymnastics, and the Jenness Miller movements." A pleasant reading room and library furnish all that could be wished for in a literary line, while the society composed as it is, largely of people of intellect, and coming as they do from all parts of our own land and many foreign ones with their varied experiences, makes a very pleasant atmosphere in which to dwell for a long or short time as the case may be. I never saw so many cheerful invalids. While I hope you may never be obliged to come here I wish it might some time be your good fortune to enjoy Clifton Springs as much as I am now doing and which seems to offer every necessity, convenience, comfort and enjoyment which money can procure or an invalid desire.

I. C. L.

Clifton Springs, N. Y.

General Sherman.

One of the prominent parts in our Hero's character was his dislike of fuss and ceremony. When in 1836, he made the trip with the G. A. R. from San Francisco to Portland, he distinctly stated that he wanted neither fear nor favor. Four hundred and fifty people were crowded into accommodations designed for just one third the number. Naturally, there was much trouble in getting food. Here the General announced that he would take no usage not accorded to every other man. As a consequence, it was no uncommon thing to see the Veteran's tall form looming up among the men of lesser rank and stature, calmly waiting his turn, full of fun and badinage. It was given out for him, that he would like to be let alone and his wish was respected. Whatever conversation he had, he started himself. He was not even bored for autographs. The trip was thus creditable, alike to him and to the veteran soldiers who would have been glad to hear General Sherman talk and to take him by the hand.

Mr. L. D. Goddard, an old member of the 15th Regt., the one of which General Devens was colonel retains some very pleasant memories of the deceased officer. He says that at Poolsville, he called his officers together and gave them some advice as to their conduct that they should maintain before their men, closing with "Gentlemen, if you would be respected, respect yourselves." Later when Ball's Bluff had witnessed the signal discomfiture of the regiment and the taking prisoner of many men, there came the trip to Richmond and the scenes in Libby. Mr. Goddard was placed in charge of his fellow unfortunates and to them he repeated the Colonel's advice. The result may be seen in the words of the Richmond Whig and Examiner which proclaimed them the best of a bad lot. "The best and cleanest men are those of the 15th Massachusetts." Sometimes impressions are lasting.

Our city has society after society. Some are purely social, clubs only. Others are church organizations or bodies whose membership is restricted to a certain class or sect. Not so the Worcester County Horticultural society. At its hall on Front street it has long been a prominent factor in furthering the culture of fruits and flowers. It has had a little more than fifty years of existence though its chartered career dates from March 3d, 1842. On the 19th of September, 1840, several gentlemen, anxious to encourage Horticulture met and effected an organization as follows: President, Dr. John Green; vice-presidents, Dr. Samuel Woodward, Stephen Salisbury; recording secretaries, Benjamin Heywood, L. D. Newton, J. C. B. Davis; corresponding secretaries, William Lincoln, Dr. Joseph Sargent with, ten trustees. From that day to the present the officers of the society have included some of the best names in Worcester Annals. On the 13th, 14th and 15th of the next month the society had its first exhibition, the same being in Friends Hall, opposite the old Waldo block, on Main street. The late Stephen Salisbury was wont to say that the founding of the society was due more to William Lincoln than to any other one person. To Edward Winslow Lincoln, a nephew of the latter, certainly much credit for the Society's success must be attributed. From 1861 to the present, he has been secretary and his reports, couched in that English for which he is so noted, have become Worcester classics.

In 1850, land was bought on Front street, and the present hall was begun. In 1851, it was occupied and since then has been a popular place of entertainment. It originally cost about $18,000.00, a large sum to carry. Daniel Waldo gave $3000.00 and the late Stephen Salisbury contributed very liberally towards clearing off the indebtedness. The societies only revenue, save that from $1000.00 given by the late Judge Dewey for the purchase of books, arises from the rental of the Hall. So popular, however, is this place, the income is no inconsiderable sum. The Presidents in order have been Dr. John Green, Isaac Davis, John Milton Earle, Stephen Salisbury, D. Waldo Lincoln, Alexander H. Bullock, George Jaques, J. Henry Hill, Francis H. Dewey, Geo. W. Richardson, George E. Francis, O. B. Hadwin, Wm. T. Merrifield, Stephen Salisbury Jr., Francis H. Dewey and Henry L. Parker. Mr. Lincoln's predecessors as secretaries in addition to those named earlier were Samuel F. Haven, George Jaques, John Gray Jr. and J. Henry Hill. The present membership roll bears above eight hundred names, while those who have belonged and have ceased for any reason would bring the number up among the thousands.

One of the most valuable features of the society, is its library. This comprises above 2000 volumes of bound books and nearly one-half as many pamphlets. It was begun in 1844 and for several years was stored and cared for by the late Clarendon Harris. It had excellent sponsors to begin with. They were Dr. Green, Frederick W. Paine, Isaac Davis, S. F. Haven, William Lincoln, Anthony Chase, Samuel H. Colton and Clarendon Harris. In September, 1862, the library was moved to its present quarters and then started upon a much wider field of usefulness. With the possible exception of the society of a similar name in Boston no organization in the country possesses a better collection of books devoted to Horticulture. There is also a well stocked reading room wherein may be found all the papers and periodical, peculiar to the society's aims. The librarians have been as follows: Anthony Chase, Clarendon Harris, Edward W. Lincoln, George E. Francis Edward W. Lincoln, John C. Newton and Charles E. Brooks.

While Worcester does not possess a veritable art gallery and as yet cannot boast her Gainsborough nor Stuart, yet she has some places in which may be seen the portraits of many who have contributed to the prosperity of our city. No more notable place, in this connection, can be found than the main hall of the Horticultural Society. Beginning at the right as we enter and were we able to tell the story of every face found upon the walls, we should have a very good history of Worcester. The first portrait is that of Frederick W. Paine, one of the most scholarly men ever resident in Worcester, a grand uncle of Nathaniel Paine, cashier of the City Bank. He was the last chairman of the town board of Selectmen 1847-8. He died in 1869. The next, is that of Clarendon Harris and who does not like to linger over that gentle face. Just the man to love flowers and books for he was once a book-seller, happily before the blight of excessive greed fell upon the occupation. How he loved nice editions of Fables. His little house, corner of Elm and Linden street, was crammed full of them. Then comes Dr. William Workman. His name is not in our directory now but he was long a favorite practitioner of medicine. He had his M. D. from Harvard in 1825. We shall pause a while before the portrait of Stephen Salisbury, for it is not so long since he was a familiar figure in our city. He loved the Horticultural Society and it has reason to fully reciprocate. John Milton Earle recalls the days of Anti-Slavery excitement and the establishment of the Daily Spy for he was its founder in 1845. He was a man of decided convictions and fearless in expressing them. An Earl-King indeed! George W. Richardson was once Mayor of Worcester and was a Harvard classmate of Dr. O. W. Holmes. The white crowned head of Isaac Davis is next and a pleasant one it is, to contemplate. An Ex-Mayor and city benefactor, he has left honorable children to perpetuate his name and memory. Dr. John Green's kindly face next looks down upon us. His figure, we are familiar with in the public library and his nephews, Samuel S. and James Green all of us know. The portrait of Daniel Waldo is particularly valuable, for it is said to be the only picture of him in the city. It has never been engraved. He was the predecessor of H. W. Miller in business, where Smith & Adams are now. Levi Lincoln was the first Mayor of Worcester and the father of E. W. Lincoln the Society's Secretary. Judge Francis H. Dewey had two series of presidencies, holding the office longer than any other man. Daniel Waldo Lincoln combined the names of two honorable citizens and was himself a worthy son of worthy sires. At the time of his sudden death he was president of the Boston and Albany railroad. Alexander H. Bullock was Mayor and Governor as well as scholar and orator. George Jaques is remembered in the public hospital, very largely owed to his generous bequest. John C. Ripley, formerly cashier of the Citizens Bank is still remembered in the name of a street called for him. The last portrait, a crayon, all the others are in oil, is that of General Thomas Chamberlain, father of General Robert Chamberlain and himself for many years, the Court Crier. He died in 1855. All the spaces are filled. What shall be done with the picture of J. Henry Hill which is about ready for presentation? Will another tier be begun? If so, glasses will be necessary to appreciate.

The regular Thursday exhibitions of the Horticultural Society have long been the events to which hundreds have looked forward with great interest. Unquestionably the influence of this Society has been very great in stimulating and in maintaining a generous rivalry in the growth of fruits and flowers. May its influence never be less.

A Sunday School Parade.

Let me bespeak the illumination of LIGHT upon a scheme so attractive and so feasible that for six years I have wondered it has not even been suggested. I refer to an annual parade of our Sunday Schools. In such cities as Brooklyn and St. Louis, such a celebration is one of the events of the year. Worcester with the numerical strength and the prestige of her churches, ought to make it proportionately successful. We can only estimate the numbers, but a single one of our denominations enrolls something over five thousand in its Sunday Schools. Ten thousand is a low estimate of the available number of suitable age in the city, while the surrounding towns might easily swell the ranks. Imagine some brilliant day in May or June, with these multitudes of bright girls and lively boys, class by class, school by school, banners flying, streamers waving, white dresses gleaming, bands playing, passing along the sidewalk of Main street from Lincoln Square to the South End countermarching, reviewed at the City Hall, and massing in the Common for a grand chorus of selected songs! Who that has ever seen such a sight can forget it? Let a few of our energetic superintendents combine to start and carry through the movement, and another most beautiful celebration is added to our enjoyment.

C. M. SOUTHGATE.

A day, an hour of virtuous liberty
Is worth a whole eternity in bondage.
—Addison.

Lovers of Good Tea and Coffee

Should buy their goods where they can depend on always getting a pure, fresh article, of the best quality. Our many patrons will testify that this is true of the

*New England Tea Co.,*

273 MAIN STREET.

Give us a trial and be convinced.

D. A. HOWE.

MRS. MORGAN'S

Private School and Kindergarten,

Y. M. C. A. Building, 10 Elm Street.

SPRING TERM OPENS APRIL 6, 1891.

W. H. TWICHELL,

Gold, Silver and Nickel Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechanic St., Worcester, Mass.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,

BOOK * BINDING *

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES

at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,

W. L. BROWN, Manager.

L. J. ZAHONYI,

Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Good to Eat.

Rolls.

In the morning place one pint of milk, two tablespoons of sugar and a piece of butter size of an egg on back of stove till the butter melts, then add little salt, one-half a yeast cake dissolved in water, and flour to make quite thick, cut down with a knife at noon, at four o'clock cut down and roll out, spread with butter, cut and fold over, let rise again and bake in hot oven. B. A. W.

Squash Biscuit.

Mix one cup sifted squash, two cups of sweet milk, and two tablespoons of sugar together. A little salt, one teaspoon of soda and two of cream tartar sifted in flour enough to handle and bake like cream tartar biscuits. P. E. W.

Thick slices of cod, halibut and salmon are nice broiled. Sprinkle with salt and cook twenty minutes, spreading with butter when done. Shad and mackerel can be broiled whole. Lay the skin side down at first, and turn several times, seeing that it does not scorch; place on a hot platter and butter well. Bluefish are very fine if broiled until half done, then laid in a buttered dripping pan, with shavings of butter put thickly over them, and set into a hot oven until finished.

Cup Cake.

A perfect cup cake is made with a cup of butter, three cups of sugar, one cup of cream or sweet milk, six eggs, three and a half cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of cream-tartar and one of soda. Flavor the cake with vanilla.

Apple Jack.

Make the same as apple pie, leaving out the sugar and spice; when done take the upper crust from the under one, spreading half the apple on the inside of each crust; sprinkle a handful of sugar and put small pieces of butter on the apple, and lay the upper crust, apple side up, on the under one. Eat while warm, as it is not good when cold.

Oatmeal Fritters.

One egg well beaten, add one teacup of cooked oatmeal and beat well, one half teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sugar, one half teacup of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of baking powder mixed with the flour before adding, and enough flour to make a good thick batter. Drop in small spoonfuls in hot lard and fry brown. Don't have the spoonfuls very large, or the cakes will not be done in the middle.

Creamed Potatoes.

Peel eight large potatoes, carefully removing all eyes and specks, boil quickly in salted water until perfectly done. Remove at once from the water, put into the bowl with a quarter of a pound of butter, salt and pepper and a gill of cream. With an egg-beater whip to a cream, remove to a hot dish and serve immediately.

Boston Brown Bread.

One and one-half teacups flour, one and one-half teacups corn meal, one and one-half teacups rye or Graham flour, two and one-half cups milk, slightly sour, one-half cup syrup, a little salt, one teaspoonful soda; mix with a spoon, place in a two quart basin; steam three hours. If there is neither rye nor Graham flour at hand, make it with two cups of flour and two and one-half of meal, and the rest as above given.

ALWAYS ON HAND!

VENISON, TURKEYS,
GEESE,

WILD GAME,
CHICKENS,
DUCKS,

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass

EDWARD B. GLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

THE CRITERION

Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

Worcester Dress

Cutting School,
45 Pleasant St.,

For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circular.

Mrs. L. F. Walch.

E. W. COFFIN,

Store Fixtures

310 Main Street, Worcester.

Name this Paper.

LE * JOLLY * FRENCH * DYEING
AND * CLEANSING * HOUSE.

First-Class Work at Short Notice.

Reference for Laces and Lace Curtains, Gross & Strauss.

Cut out this coupon from LIGHT, and bring it with you and get 10 per cent discount from regular prices.

Coupon

Coupon

C. T. MELVIN, PROPRIETOR, WALNUT ST.

P. & W.

HOUSE FURNISHINGS.

A new departure. You ought to know all about it. There are many advantages in the new way, without need of any sacrifices of whatever was of importance in the old and trusted methods.

Men and women come to the leading FURNITURE HOUSES to get as nearly all that is needed for complete furnishing of the home as possible.

For that very reason we deal largely in CARPETS. We claim to keep as good Carpets as any one can keep, or any one cares to buy. We also claim to keep as good a Carpet for as little money as an honest workman can afford to pay to make pleasant his home.

We have also determined to keep as good a STOVE, or as good a RANGE, as any lady wants to buy, and we have them for as little as you may care to spend at this time.

We know right well that ever so many honest, hard-working men would like good things for their wives if they only had the money to spend for them.

We meet all such men with the offer of FAIR CREDIT on FURNITURE, CARPETS, STOVES, etc., and make such arrangements as will enable them to own good goods without any embarrassment to them.

The CRAWFORD RANGE is a grand good one. It has been sold in this city for years. It is made from the best iron, castings heavy and handsome; the ornamentation is in good taste, all well put together.

What we sell is the CRAWFORD GRAND, which combines all the good points of the old styles with all the latest improvements in grates and checks, with the double oven attachments which enable you to bake in both at the same time.

There is everything to commend this stove to the ladies of Worcester County. It will save them many hours of discomfort. It is always ready to do its work. It is easy to handle. It is almost impossible to get it out of order. We have them at three prices—$30, $35, $40.

It will be necessary for you to see them in order to see the points of difference in favor of the CRAWFORD.

We have stoves as low as $15, but we go our strength on the CRAWFORD, because we believe in it.

We have added Stoves to our business because it is a necessity. Hundreds wanted to get their whole outfit from us. Heretofore we stopped short at Stoves. Now we are ready to give you a complete outfit, FURNITURE, CARPETS, STOVES.

All at fair prices.

CASH OR CREDIT.

PINKHAM & WILLIS,

355 Main Street.

This Season's 'Cycles.

As the season for bicycling is just opening, it may not be out of place to consider some of the different machines. The exhibit of L. M. Alexander of 195 Front street, at the Electrical Exhibition gives an excellent idea of the progress that has been made in the past few years in the manufacture of 'cycles. The safety seems to have almost exclusively taken the place of the ordinary high wheel. All the machines shown, save some of the cheapest boys' wheels, have ball bearings on all wheels and pedals.

The Psychos, imported machines, are seen in great variety. The ladies' Psycho, weighing 38 pounds and guaranteed to carry a lady weighing 200 pounds, costs $140.

The King of Diamond Psycho, weighing from 38 to 43 pounds costs $140. These machines are probably the most beautiful of any on the market and there are probably none better made.

The New Mail has always been a popular machine. The 1891 safety costs $100, or if nickeled, $115. With the spring head and band brake it costs $135. The ladies' New Mail sells for $100 and the boys', with cone bearings, for $35.

The Union No. 12 has a spring frame and sells for $135. No. 13 is the same, only it is built for ladies. No. 9 has a solid frame and the price is $115. No. 10 is for either ladies or gentlemen and sells for $115. The ladies Swift sells for $135. It weighs 43 pounds. The gentlemen's Swift, model A, sells for $135 and model D, for $100. The American Light Rambler for gentlemen weighs 50 pounds and costs $135. It has cushioned or solid tires as the purchaser may wish, though the former cost a little more. The ladies' machine sells for $125. Its weight is 45 pounds. The Ideal Rambler, all ball bearings, for boys and girls sells for $65.

The Hickory safeties are winning favor wherever seen. The skeleton in the exhibit rides one of these. Mr. Alexander will soon receive a very fine sample. It is finished in the natural wood, has all ball bearings, drop forgings, steel tubings and a chain dust-guard. No pains have been spared to make this machine in the very best manner possible. It will sell for $150.

The Eagle Light Roadster, a high wheel with the small wheel in front, costs $132 50. The Criterion is a $100 machine. It has all ball bearings and a 1 1/4 inch cushioned tire. It is imported. The Rivals vary in cost from $75 to $115. The Bostons sell for from $60 to $85. The combination for ladies or gentlemen costs $75. These have all ball bearings and steel tubings. The Tremonts, boys' machines, may be had for from $25 to $60. All grades have ball bearings save the $25 one. The Gendrons are made in all grades and at all prices. The Little Giant is for boys or girls. It costs $35.

If anyone is interested in the process of manufacture of bicycles Mr. Alexander can show the drop forgings of the Light Rambler.

As the insurance men say, "accidents will happen" and the bicyclist is liable to occasionally have a broken wheel. Whenever such is the case, if he will take his wounded steed to Mr. Alexander's repair shop it will be speedily made nearly as well and strong as when first ridden. Mr. Alexander's telephone number is 342-3.

FOR THE SPRING OF 1891.

THE CLARK SAWYER CO.

In making our announcement for the season we would call attention to the fact that we shall continue to offer

ONLY STANDARD GOODS.

We have now in stock a full and complete line of the best Wall Papers in the different grades, manufactured in the United States; together with an excellent line of English and varnished goods, and we feel that those who appreciate original and high-class designs and to whom refined and modern color effects are of interest, can, we think, very profitably make selections from the moderate priced line of high class goods now in our stock.

Goods shown cheerfully.

Work done promptly and prices guaranteed.

Call and see us.

THE CLARK-SAWYER CO.

478 TO 482 MAIN STREET.

EDISON

is not in Worcester, but the RINK is full of indications of his GENIUS.

FRANKLIN

has slept in his grave for more than a century, but the LIGHT-NING that he drew from the clouds has been chained and made to do man's bidding

Visit the Rink and behold how excellent a servant ELECTRICITY is.

It takes the place of candles, oil and gas

It supplants steam and water power. It gives horses and mankind a rest.

By means of it, the smith welds his iron and, wonder of wonders, it is reduced to that most prosaic of occupations, Cooking.

Its possibilities are boundless.

Never has there been such an exhibition in our city.

The inclosure is a place of wonders.

Take the children there and prove the truth of this statement.

While the young are wild with enthusiasm, their elders are not wanting in praise.

One visit is not enough. Buy a package of tickets and take the family.

It is a long time since Worcester has offered an entertainment equal to this.

New things added daily thus far.

Tickets of admission include one ride on Electric Car or Boat.

General Admission, 25c.

Six Tickets for $1.

Children, 15c.

Ten for $1.

VOLAPÜK.

(All Volapük words used have been given in former numbers of the LIGHT.)

SUGIV JOLID.

Egivob vödís 375 e bi kanols meköñ 1554 vöds se subsat alik e if elenadols omis labols vödís lemödik.

Gen (gender) no sbinom in Volapük äs in nelijapük a. b. (atos binos, that is) no attention is paid to gender unless it is specially desired to indicate same, when it is done by prefixes om, öm and ji, a. s.

jeval	omjeval	ömjeval	jjeval
horse	stallion	gelding	mare.

Some words are naturally manik, a. s.

man	pul	xol	fat
man	boy	ox	father.

Some are jilik

vom	kun	mot	läd
jiman	jixol	jifat	jisöl.

Compound words are formed by the possessive ending a.

Dela buk	delabuk	} day-book.
of day book	book of day
büda	bid	} imperative.
of command	specie specie of command

vöda buk	vöda buk	} dictionary.
of word book	book of word

dela lit	delalit	} day-light.
of day light	light of day

Subsat sukölpläpodi binom ai kimfal, ab ven pläpod labom mali whither u direction towards the kimfial i can be added to either the pläpod u subsat a. s.

Golob ini dom.

I go into the house.

Seitom buki su tabi.

He lays the book on to the table.

And sometimes on the adverb.

Golob domi.

I go homewards.

This use of the ending i is not necessary to a correct understanding of sentences and may be ignored altogether. Plapöds (prepositions) can be made from any subsat susceptible of a prepositional sense by adding ü a. s.

Nenü, in name of.

Vegü, by way of, via.

Komu, before, in presence of.

Kodü, by reason of.

Some have been formed arbitrarily, and require some attention as to meaning and use.

Olenadolsös sukami.

1. Al, to (motion); to (in order to); to (indirect object).

Agolob al potacem al sedön moni al son obik. I go to the postoffice to send some money to my son.

2. Al, towards, in the direction of.

Vien ecenom al leftüd.

The wind has veered towards the east.

3. Bifü, before (position).

Man stanom bifü glüg.

A man is standing before the church.

4. Bufü, before (degree).

Bizugolöd snati bufü labem.

Choose honesty before wealth.

5. Büfü, before (time).

Stemnaf onakömom büfü düp mälid

The steamer will arrive before six o'clock.

6. Da, through (across).

Stägs zipöloms da fot.

The deer wander through the forest.

7. Domü, at (the house of).

Lödob domü bakel.

I live at the baker's.

8. Dub, through (means); with (instrument).

Meliton cädi dub fumäl.

One attains distinction through industry.

Aflapom obi dub spatin.

He struck me with a stick.

9. Fa, by (indicating personal agent).

Päfunom fa mölodel, He was killed by an assassin.

Padunos fa nek, It is done by nobody.

Pästimom fa pösods mödik, He was esteemed by many persons.

10. In, (at) in (during), in (into, with movement); in (into, denoting change).

In London, in zendel, ägolob in cänöp al cänön ceki in mon.

In London, at midday, I went into a bank to change a check into money.

11. Ko, with (in company with).

Ogolob ko blod obik, I shall go with my brother.

(With, as an instrument, is expressed by dub or me, which see).

Ko, before o, is replaced by ke by some Volapükists.

12. Lä, near.

Dedham binom lä Boston.

Dedham is near Boston.

10 x 1 are 10.

The boys of the Ten Times One Club gave a very pleasant social to the members of the Sunday School of the Church of the Unity last Friday night in the parlors of that church.

Most of the younger members of the Sunday School took advantage of the invitation and passed a most enjoyable evening with the boys with soap bubbles, bean bags, and games of all descriptions.

The Ten Times One Club is composed of ten boys but one over thirteen years old.

These boys take for their motto "Ten times one is ten." They have done a great amount of charity in the last two years. Last evening's social was another of their kind acts. The boys who compose the club are: Chas. Fletcher, John Harrington, Percy Felch, Eddie Martin, Samuel Mason, Howard Miles, Frank Butler, Willie Braham, Howard Knowlton, and Willie Estabrook.

This practical application of Dr. Hale's story is excellent. Dr. Hale was an early pastor of the church and this is just the place to practice the theory. Remember your motto, boys, and make it true. To do it you will have to look out for 1 and 2 and 3 and all the rest. Your aim is a good one.

SALEM STREET CHURCH

Course * of * Entertainments.

MARCH 27—Lecture by

Rev. T. F. Clark, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Subject: "Through Japan Across the Pacific."

This is the third and last of Rev. Mr. Clarke's series, "A Knapsack Tour of the World."

Lecture begins at 8 p. m.

Admission, 25 Cents.

WHITNEY'S on TEMPLE PLACE,

March * Sale * of * Embroidery * Goods.

Sorrento and
Gobelin
Art Squares.

Silk and Linen
Embroidery
Materials.

SEWING SILKS AT

✦ WHITNEY'S ✦

ON TEMPLE PLACE, BOSTON.

About Folks.

The Bryant Circle, C. L. S. C., held its one-hundred and fiftieth meeting Tuesday evening. The program included an address by Mrs. C. W. Sears, the first president of the circle, reminiscences by Mr. Eben Foskett and other members. It was a testimony meeting, nearly all of the members telling of the great benefit they had received. Rev. C. H. Pendleton read a paper on Shakespeare, dealing particularly with Hamlet, and the regular lesson in geology was studied under the direction of the president, Mrs. E. M. Overholser. This is the oldest and largest Chautauqua circle in the city. At present there are about thirty-three members. During its eight years of existence it has had on its role one hundred and thirty different names. The circle meets on alternate Tuesdays at Becker's Business College rooms. The next meeting will be held March 31.

Mrs. Jennie Abbott Mattoon will give her fifth annual reception to her pupils and friends, Monday, April 6. These receptions have been held heretofore in Horticultural Hall, but at the last two, that hall has been too small to accommodate the large number who attended. This year the reception will be held in Mechanics Hall. Aside from the usual order of dances the following fancy dances will be given by different pupils: sailor's hornpipe, Highland Fling, cachucha, Tyrolienne, tambourine dance, scarf dance, rose dance, minuet solitaire, octagon and court quadrille. Further announcements will be made in our advertising columns next week.

One of the prettiest dances of the season was given at Continental Hall last evening. It was arranged by several members of the Senior class of the High School and the tickets were sold by subscription. The platform, on which Marcy's orchestra was stationed, was very tastefully decorated with palms. The grand march, at eight o'clock, was led by W. E. Fairbanks and Miss Effie Cousens of Cohasset, followed by C. Albert Gray and Miss Mabel Chamberlain, Fred A. Bigelow and Miss Alice Rheutan, Harry Fairbanks and Miss Jennie McCready, Frank S. Pierce and Miss Flossie Stone, C. Fred Goddard and Miss Dottie Prentice. The dance occurred too late for LIGHT to obtain the names of all present, but the subscribers were F. C. Bradford, A. J. Bassett, Frank Clark, Henry Gross Foster Goodwin, S. Frank Gates, F. B. Hall, L. C. Havener, Richard Hammond, George Eddy, John Nelson, Louis Southgate, Wm. Norcross, F. D. Sibley, Will Sibley, E. H. Robinson, Walter Hunt, Wm. Stark, H. A. Billings, E. C. Belknap, Frank W. Washburn, Wm. Bemis, Morton Crane, Harvey Wheelock F. G. Curtis, B. W. Grout, Isaac Rheutan, W. W. Dadmun, Fred Whitte more, H. J. Kettell, and Karl Bonney. The dance order consisted of fourteen numbers and during an intermission supper was served by Rebboli. The floor was managed by C. Albert Gray, assisted by F. A. Bigelow, Wm. E. Fairbanks, Frank W. Washburn and S. Frank Gates.

Electrical Exhibition.

The Richardson Piano Company of Pleasant street has a large exhibit of pianos and organs. The famous name "Estey" which is on all of them tells at once that there is quality as well as quantity there.

C. L. Gorham & Co. have a fine display of Haines' pianos.

S. R. Leland & Son exhibit the famous Chickering pianos. They show also a case of beautiful wind instruments of their own manufacture. The Eclipse cornets, made by this firm have a wide reputation.

On the promenade above the electric car, Underwood, the photographer, shows specimens of his work which are worthy of the highest praise.

The combination microscope, seems to be having about as good a sale as any of the exhibits. It is made in New York by F. A. Burden. The stand at the Rink is in charge of E. E. Arrington. The microscope consists of a high power lens, sufficiently strong to show the animal life in water and one of lesser power for the examination of flowers, insects and minerals. When you are at the exhibition if you will stop at this stand, which is on the north promenade, Mr. Arrington will show you some strange things.

IN THE TWILIGHT.

BY CORNELIA WESSON BOYDEN.

Twilight shadows gently stealing
'Cross the room with footsteps slow,
While the air seems softly pealing,
With the chimes of long ago;
And the firelight, flickering, glowing,
Paints its pictures on the wall,
And the moon, its faint gleams throwing,
Sheds its radiance over all.

Midst the shadowy glooming sitting,
Musing o'er the silent past
While its phantoms ever flitting,
Cluster round me swift and fast;
And the memories, surging, thronging,
Fill my heart with saddest pain.
And a weary, hopeless longing
For the lost to come again.

For the hand with touch caressing
That in childhood days I felt,
For the voice in tender blessing
As beside my bed she knelt;
For those gracious counsels given
Ah! how few we ever keep,
Pointing out the way to Heaven
Though the path be rough and steep.

But how vain is all this dreaming,
Vain the tears that fill mine eyes,
For between the white clouds gleaming
Looks that dear face from the skies;
And the peace and joy there shining
Free from trouble, care and pain,
Ah! my heart cease thou thy pining,
Would'st thou call her back again?

Life with all its various turnings,
Bitter heartaches, hopes deferred,
Full of envy, jealous burnings,
Right and wrong so often blurred;
Is it worth the weary fighting
With the powers that sway us all,
Bitter wrongs that have no righting,
Guarding footsteps lest they fall?

Ah! who understands God's meaning,
When He planted in each breast
Such desires, forever teeming
With life's passions, and no rest
Ever comes the conflict easing,
While we linger here below,
Always struggling, never ceasing,—
Heavenly Father, help bestow.

Dark the twilight shadows creeping,
Settle down to deepest gloom,
And the stars like bright eyes peeping
Gance within the sombre room;
And my weary eyes uplifting,
Through the window meet their gaze,
While the sky with soft clouds drifting,
Spreads a veil of purest haze.

FLASHES.

I like the man who faces what he must
With step triumphant, and a heart of cheer;
Who fights the daily battle without fear;
Sees his hopes fail, yet keeps unflinching trust—
That God is God; that somehow, true and just
His plans work out for mortals; not a tear
Is shed when fortune, which the world holds dear,
Falls from his grasp; better, with love a crust
Than living in dishonor; envies not;
Nor loses faith in man; but does his best,
Nor ever murmurs at his humbler lot,
But with a smile and words of hope gives zest
To every toiler; he alone is great,
Who by a life heroic conquers fate."
—Sarah K. Bolton.

READY.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

Thursday, Friday, Saturday,

THREE * GRAND * OPENINGS !

MILLINERY, CLOAKS and SUITS, CHILDREN'S OUTSIDE GARMENTS.

We invite all our ladies to visit us the remaining days of this week.

We shall display for their examination what has been decreed by QUEEN FASHION as the correct styles in HATS and BONNETS for the Spring and Summer of 1891.

We will show what is suggested in CLOAKS and SUITS for the ladies, and also the latest style in OUTSIDE GARMENTS for the children.

Nothing more than this invitation will be needed to interest you.

Our friends know the character of our EXHIBITIONS, and they will not find anything less complete or less beautiful this year than in former years.

OPENING DAYS,

Thursday, * Friday, * Saturday.

DEPARTMENTS,

Millinery, Cloaks and Suits, Outside Garments.

A cordial invitation to all.

On second floor. Take either elevator.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

Z. F. Little & Co.

New Spring Garments.

Our full line of

Ladies', Misses' and Children's Garments

is now ready. We can please you in Quality, Style and Price if you will give us a call.

KID * GLOVES.

A brand new stock for Easter.

OUR BAIRITZ REAL KID GLOVES AT $1
A PAIR.

You will like. We warrant them. Please try a pair.

Z. F. Little & Co.,

234 and 238 MAIN ST.

Worcester Athletics.

A little more than twenty years ago, Worcester was one of the best known cities in New England, not perhaps so much through any particular prowess of her own, as on account of the annual regatta of Harvard and Yale on her Lake Quinsigamond. Were those times to come again, the sons of the oarsmen of old would find a far different Worcester from that in which their fathers paraded and sang songs and pounded the side walks with their bangers. Doubtless there were many people who objected to so much effervescence and were rather glad when the tide carried the boys to Springfield and finally to New London.

There are others, and they are not a few, who rejoice in anything that indicates exuberant life. He must be pretty old who doesn't throw up his hat and hurrah when his side wins. Perhaps he is a thorough neutral and hasn't any side. If so, he is an object of pity. Either for us or against us! Let absolute neutrality be confined to the judicial bench and there only.

However, despite the absence of the annual June hurly burly that came when crimson and blue met to try issues, the city has managed to struggle on and, now and then, has had a gala day at the lake. Professional oarsmen have swept over the placid waters of Quinsigamond. Even Hanlon has stretched his muscle there, while College crews have, at times, given variety to the scene.

Coming from the Lake to our Agricultural Ground, for several successive years, most intense interest has been had over the intercollegiate sports contested there. It is a pity, that Springfield with her proverbial "Get there" disposition and energy has absorbed the Association this year. What will happen in '92 it is too early to tell now.

What Worcester has lacked for a long time is a strong, flourishing, patriotic and enthusiastic organization of young men to take an interest in legitimate athletics. A body of men who will frown upon anything crooked but who will give time and talents to the furtherance of genuine nerve and muscle.

We have had Base Ball Clubs of varying degrees of worth. We have had boat races and walking matches, bicycle and running races; but nearly everything has been in a hap hazard, go as you please way.

Now it would seem that the organizing of the Worcester Athletic Club was the signal for a long step forward for Worcester Athletics. It is not a little notable that many boys reared in our city, have in college excelled in manly sports, yet on coming back to their homes, seemed to lose nearly all interest. If our new body can keep up the old spirit, it will be a power for good, Duly incorporated by the State, with a fund of $10,000, a membership of over three hundred of the best blood in Worcester, there is no reason why these five and two-fifths acres of land at Lake Quinsigamond should not prove a veritable Olympian Field. Let this be put into proper shape and let good men continue to direct the club and there will be no lack of Athletic culture in the future.

There is one addition that this or some other club should take in hand at once, and that is

Geo. J. Davis

HEADQUARTERS FOR BASE BALL, TENNIS, FISHING TACKLE, BICYCLES, CUTLERY, GUNS AND AMMUNITION.

Only Agent in Worcester and vicinity for
A. G. SPALDING & BROS.

Base Ball Uniforms. Bicycle and Athletic Suits made to order.
Outfitter to all the Leading Clubs.
Agent for the Stover and Gendron line of Bicycles; best in the market.
About March 25th, I shall receive a carload of

BOATS AND CANOES.

Nothing is left out to make my stock complete.

Geo. J. Davis

363 Main Street, Cor. Foster.

the arranging of adequate swimming baths. With this beautiful lake at our command, there is no reason why it should not be utilized in every possible manner. The City must do something of the sort for the mass of boys and men; yes, and for womankind also, but here is a chance for the hundreds who are able to pay for improved facilities.

The names already prominent in the Association are a sufficient guarantee of the way things will be managed. They are men well known in the city and some of them have reputations far beyond the confines of our Worcester. It was only a few years ago that Colonel Samuel E. Winslow was leading his Harvard Nine to victory whenever the ball was opened. His connection with the club at Cambridge marked the high water mark of there excellence in the national game.

Worcester citizens, then, watched with interest his doings and since have been pleased to see him an officer on Governor Brackett's Staff and the Chairman of the Republican City Committee and now they expect to see splendid results from his directing of the Worcester Athletic Club.

LIGHT must not be considered invidious if all the names of prominent men are not mentioned, for all are worthy, but this week only a few are selected. It is not expected that those who won honors on the field, in college, will necessarily strip for the contest here; but they can render a far greater and better service by giving the coming generations a good start.

Among the young men who made Base Ball a success at Amherst, no one is remembered more favorably than Mr. Rufus S. Woodward. He went from our High School in 1877, one of the most active of an exceedingly active class, and in college he speedily forged to the front in athletics. To this day, he is accorded an enthusiastic greeting whenever he returns to Alma Mater; and he merits it; for behind the bat he covered as much ground as any catcher of his day.

The H. S. class of '78 had another boy who went to college and won distinction in the same part that Woodward played so well. John I. Souther is referred to and were he in our city today, no one would serve his kind better than he. As a Yale man he wore the blue and a right royal son he was and is. As a teacher in the High School, he was of great service in directing the boys in these sports. In his Wisconsin home, Hurley, there is no doubt that he keeps track of what Worcester is doing in his favorite sport.

Among the Athletes of today, Harry L. Dadmun has a reputation beyond our limits. As a nimble footed runner, he has very few rivals. We shall hear from him frequently.

Nor is the Athletic Association the only agency for physical culture in our midst. At the Highland Academy, great stress is laid on bodily excellence. At the Polytechnic, all the time and attention that can be spared are given to manly sports. The High School boys have made some excellent records and this year they are again to contest for the banner presented to the school by George S. Dickinson. At Holy Cross, Base Ball has long been the favorite sport and this year the outlook for a good nine is excellent.

"Yon Yonson," an Anglo-Swedish comedy, which is something new to the theater-going public, will hold the boards at the New Worcester Theater the latter part of next week. Gus Heege is the star, and has ample opportunity to display his excellent qualities as a comedian.

ORDER NOW

and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than at

EVANS & COMPANY,

Manufacturers of

Fine Monumental Work,

131 Central Street, near Summer.

HERE WE ARE AGAIN?

The Old Favorites.

Association Hall, Y. M. C. A.
Building,

EASTER MONDAY, MARCH 30, 1891,

Fourth * Annual * Concert

OF THE

ARLINGTON * BANJO * QUINTET,

ASSISTED BY

Boylston Banjo Mandolin and Guitar Club, of Boston,

Worcester Ideal Banjo Mandolin and Guitar
Club,

Miss Marie Louise Chandler, Reader,

And the Cecelia Quartet.

RESERVED SEATS, 50 CENTS.

For sale at the Ware, Pratt Co.'s.

When you are at the Electrical Exhibition call at the Glass Blowers' Stand and ask to see

DR. GRAY'S EAR TUBE, which prevents and cures Deafness. It is manufactured and sold there. The General Office of the Company is at Colosse, N. Y.; Branch Office, 166 Tremont Street, Boston.

School and College.

College is not so unattainable as many would have us think. Here is the record of a young man who lived within twenty-five miles of Boston. He was prepared for College in the village High School, that institution that has done so much for New England-scholarship. He was admitted to Boston University. He was to board at home. For one year or till he was eighteen years old he had his railroad fare at pupil's rates, afterward at regular commutation. His tuition was conceded to him by the college. He bought his own books, second hand, when possible. He retained nearly all of these for subsequent use and reference. He belonged to a College Secret Society; but he incurred very few expenses aside from necessity. Each summer, he worked in a factory, earning there about one hundred and fifty dollars. This was turned over to his father regularly. At the end of his four years, he left college when he was twenty-one years old, and the amount paid out by his father, above what his son had earned did not exceed one hundred dollars. There had been no pinching of the stomach, no niggardliness with reference to books, clothing and college bills; but the total amount was as stated. To many a boy and girl along the railroads leading into Boston, the University has proved a veritable Godsend. Its advantages have been appreciated by people as far away as Worcester.

For High School Pupils who sit in Room 19.

West himself thus gives an interesting account of his painting the "Death of General Wolfe:" "When it was understood that I intended to paint the characters as they had actually appeared on the scene, the Archbishop of York called on Reynolds and asked his opinion. They both came to my house to dissuade me from running so great a risk. Reynolds began a very ingenious and elegant dissertation on the state of the public taste in this country and the danger which every innovation incurred of contempt and ridicule, and concluded by urging me earnestly to adopt the custom of antiquity, as more becoming the greatness of my subject than the modern garb of European warriors. I answered that the event to be commemorated happened in the year 1758, in a region of the world unknown to Greeks and Romans, and at a period of time when no warriors who wore such costumes existed. The subject I have to represent is a great battle fought and won; and the same truth which gives law to the historian should rule the painter. If, instead of the facts of the action, I introduce fictions, how shall I be understood by posterity? I want to mark the place, the time, the people, and to do this I must abide by the truth.

"They went away then, and returned when I had the painting finished. Reynolds seated himself before the picture, examined it with deep and minute attention for half an hour; then, rising, said to Drummond, 'West has conquered; he has treated the subject as it ought to be treated; I retract my objections; I forsee that this picture will not only become one of the most popular, but will occasion a revolution in art.'"

ROYAL STEAM HEATER,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

Heywood Foundry Comp'y,

GARDNER, MASS.

This Heater is unsurpassed for excellence of workmanship and is the best in the market. Now is the time to secure estimates. The following is one of a great number of testimonials from our leading citizens:

WORCESTER, MASS., April 12, 1890.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER:

Gentlemen—Having used one of your Heaters for two seasons with satisfaction, I can recommend it to anyone, as it will do all they claim. Respectfully,

JOHN E. ALLEN, 917 Main Street.

Branch Office, 39 Pearl Street, Worcester.

WHENEVER GOOD

Eatables

are desired they will always
be found at

Eben W. Hoxie's,

305 and 816-818 Main Street.

✦ ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING ✦

Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,
Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.

Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold on commission.

MRS. S. M. KEYES.

J. PLAMONDON,

✦ FINE BOOT AND SHOE REPAIRING, ✦

398 Main Street, Corner Pearl, up two flights.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE

permanently eradicated by the

ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,

92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

The Electrical Exhibition.

The Electrical Exhibition is now in the very prime of life. All the exhibits are in place and the attendance is very good. Regular weekly excursions from the surrounding towns are arranged and many of our friends from the country are taking advantage of the opportunity of attending the exhibition at reduced rates. To a certain extent, the amount seen and learned by the different visitors depends on each person himself. There are so many exhibits in the building that most of them have quite small spaces and unless the visitor is careful to see everything and ask about all he sees, he does not secure all the benefits. If, every time one goes to the Rink, he determines to get all there is to be gotten from the exhibition, he will feel amply repaid for several visits.

There are new inventions at this exhibition which are as remarkable as any the world has ever seen, but wonderful inventions are so frequent in this age that they seem to have become quite commonplace. Worcester people have an opportunity to form some idea of the magnitude and importance of the industries of their city. There are industries represented at the Rink having a national reputation, which are unknown to many of our citizens. If the truth alone were told about the many advantages of this city, it would exceed by far the inflated accounts of many of the cities of the West, which are trying to boom themselves.

Mr. Bigelow has arranged in the northwest corner of the Rink, two rows of chairs with wire springs and wire mats on the floor so that people may receive electric shocks here as well as in the electric car. He is very enthusiastic over the curative properties of the electric current and desires to have all the visitors at the exhibition try a shock, particularly if they are troubled with rheumatism or kindred diseases.

Not all the visitors will understand the importance of the exhibit by Otis C. White of the Slide-rod, Ball and Socket Joints, but a skilled mechanic sees at once the great advance which this invention will bring about. It is not a very complicated mechanism, in fact, its simplicity is one of its greatest advantages. In its simplest form it consists of three pieces of cast iron, which, when placed together, form a ball with a hole through one diameter, and a socket with a small lever for varying the size of a socket. The ball is placed in the socket and a rod is put through the hole in the ball. This rod may be given motion in almost any direction, vertical, rotative or diagonal. By one turn of the lever the ball is tightened in any position and the rod is made immovable. It would be impossible to tell all the uses to which this may be applied but if any one is interested, let him call on the inventor at the Rink and he can tell you so many applications for his inventions that it will be difficult to remember them all.

B. G. Luther & Co, of 45 Hermon street exhibit a new machine for matching boards, which must create a revolution in this work. Its principal features are as follows: It has a power feeder; it is readily adapted to boards of all widths by means of a lever, the grooves and tongues always being exactly in the center and it is arranged so that all the parts are very readily cleaned. A manufacturer in this city who is using one of the machines says that it makes a difference of from fifty cents to one dollar per day in the cost of production of matched boards.

Gray's glass blowers from Colosse, N. Y., are located at the eastern end of the building. They make and sell all sorts of fanciful figures in glass. They also have an ear tube for preventing and curing deafness.

While the exhibit of W. L. Leighton of 44 Exchange street is not large and might be easily passed unnoticed, yet it is worthy of mention because it represents a business in which there are but few firms in the country engaged. They make watch and clock jewels. The jewels are turned on a lathe by a pointed instrument covered with diamond dust. The better grade are made from rubies and sapphires and the poorer quality from garnet and agate.

The exhibitors of bicycles are L. M. Alexander, Holland & Havener and Iver Johnson. Mr. Alexander's exhibit, in the east gallery, is the largest. Though he has the ordinary high wheels, yet nearly the whole of his exhibit is composed of safeties. This simply shows the degree to which the safety has taken the place of the ordinary. This exhibit has one of the most novel features in the whole exhibition. It is a skeleton riding a bicycle. It is the property of Sterling Elliott of Newton, the maker of the Hickory Club safeties. The thought came to him last year that it would be a good plan to mount a skeleton on one of his bicycles to show the position a rider should take and the motion of the legs. At the same time he would have a good advertisement. It was first exhibited at the Mechanics Fair at Boston last fall. Mr. Alexander has it mounted on a pedestal at the rear of his exhibit. It is run by a small Franklin motor. The electric wiring was done by C. H. Page & Co. Two small incandescent lamps in the skeleton's eyes add to the effect. Mr. Alexander is agent for the Union, Psycho, Rambler, Swift, Eagle, Rivals, New Mail, Giant, Hickory, Gendron, Tremont, Boston and Criterion. He has the very finest wheels made as well as some, that, though cheaper are excellent machines. In connection with Mr. Alexander's exhibit, A. F. Dunkerton shows a collection of picks and keys.

Holland & Havener, on the floor in the center, have a good display of safeties and ordinaries. They are agents for the Featherstone, Victor, Columbia, Broncho, Hartford, Jupiter and Little Giant. They have on exhibition the bicycle on which Windle made the world's mile record of two minutes and twenty-five and two-fifths seconds, last summer, at Peoria, Ill. They also sell the People's type-writer.

Iver Johnson exhibits the Diamond safety for which Holland & Havener are agents.

Pinkham & Willis, the popular house furnishers, have two booths very tastefully arranged. One contains an oak chamber set and the other a dining room set. Both contain many beautiful and costly rugs, carpets and tapestries. No one need think of going out of town to buy house furnishings of any kind when they have such a large stock as is found at this firm's store-rooms. They also have for sale the Crawford ranges.

Barnard, Sumner & Co. have a very beautiful display of rugs, carpets and tapestries. The name of this firm alone is a guarantee that their exhibit would be of the first class.

No one who visits the Rink should fail to call on Charlie Goodwin and try some of his egg lemonade. If you wish he will heat it for you by electricity. The apparatus for doing this is the invention of Mr. H. H. Bigelow. It is placed in the glass of lemonade, the current is turned on and in a few minutes the lemonade is steaming hot. Charlie Goodwin Jr., the parrot, is at the stand with his "papa" and is as entertaining to the crowd as ever. Charlie Goodwin also sells LIGHT.

Stockwell & Pratt, the opticians of 338 Main street, have a fine exhibit of all kinds of optical goods, including eye-glasses, spectacles, lenses, telescopes, microscopes, reading glasses, opera glasses, and also drawing tools and thermometers.

E. W. Coffin exhibits a coffee grinder and the "candy king," a show-case for displaying candy.

The Davis Art Company at 18 Pearl Street, under the direction of Mr. J. B. Crocker is still at the front in novelties in all that pleases the eye. Not only is there an immense stock of new things to be sold, but the firm will undertake to regild old frames and to repair them in any needed way. In short, it is the purpose of the company to keep step with the forward movement of Art in this city of ours. As tastes develop and improve, satisfaction may be found in this Art Depository.

Also, LIGHT is favored with a Roster of A. B. R. Sprague Post 24, G. A. R., of Grafton. As we read the names of the veterans, it seems not a little queer that so many were members of the 15th Regiment or of the same numerals reversed, viz., the 51st, or General Sprague's old command. The General is held in the very highest esteem in Grafton and his presence will call out a hall full, any time. Recently, Mr. Wing with others gave to the Post a beautiful memorial volume to contain the names and records of all members of Post 24. John E. McClellan is commander of the Post; a good name in Grafton annals. One of that clan was among those who lost their lives during the Rebellion.

Mrs. Mary B. Lane attended the hearing, before the committee on Public Health, at the State House last week Friday, in regard to the manufacture and sale of alcoholic confections. Among the speakers were Miss E. P. Gordon and Mrs. M. E. Cheerey of Boston and Mrs. Lane. The matter was discussed for about two hours, but as the defenders of the confections were not prepared with their plea, a continuance was granted until next Monday at the same place.

That staunch Worcester citizen, William E. Warren of 21 Fruit street had a quiet birthday on the 11th inst. He has passed his 55th mile stone, and hundreds of his friends wish for many returns of the day. To push the world a little further into the sun shine has always been his motto. If he could have his way, there would be very little wrong doing in this world.

✦ * SPRING * WOOLENS * ✦

✦ * Our ✦ Opening ✦ of * ✦

Choice Domestic and Foreign Woolens, Selected for
Our Custom Department.

Gentlemen who wish to examine the Latest Novelties in these Goods should Call and examine them.

✦ * THE * ✦

WARE-PRATT CO.'S

408 and 412 MAIN STREET, WORCESTER.

NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.

Incorporated in the City of Worcester, Sept. 17, 1889. A great co-operative institution and fraternal order, paying sick and accident benefits and an endowment of $500 at the end of five years. Over 600 members in Worcester; three local assemblies, and two more in process of formation. $8760 already distributed in sick benefits. $14,331 63 reserve.

For full particulars, and documents carefully explaining the plan and scope of this rapidly growing fraternity, call on or address J. O. H. WOODMAN, Secy., 339 Main St., Worcester, Mass. Burnside Building.

GET THE BEST!

The BAY STATE or GLENWOOD Range and Parlor Stoves.

THEY HAVE NO EQUAL.

WE ALSO CARRY A LARGE LINE OF GAS AND KEROSENE
CHANDELIERS, TABLE LAMPS, AND FIRE-PLACE GOODS.

466 Main St. O. S. KENDALL & Co.

WORCESTER Illuminated Advertising Company,

General Office, 311 Main St., Room 13,
C. E. SQUIER F. H. BEALS.
Advertisements Artistically Displayed by a powerful Electric Light upon 600 Square feet of Canvas.

DISPLAY:

Worcester, opposite Mechanics Hall.
Springfield, opposite Opera House.
Providence, Turk's Head

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *

NO. 156 MAIN STREET,
H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

Now is the Time to Buy a

CARRIAGE!

at a Small Profit.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,

OPP. THE COMMON.

FINE PLEASURE

CARRIAGES!

For COMFORT, STYLE and DURABILITY UN-SURPASSED.

Driving Harness, Robes, Mats, Whips and Stable Furnishings.

E. A. Richmond & Co.,

30 and 32 WALDO STREET.

A. S. NEWCOMB,

Market and Oyster House,

Fish of all kinds. Planter and Shipper
Choice Grade of Oysters. Telephone connection 206-2.

223 MAIN ST., WORCESTER, MASS

LIGHT

---

VOL. III. No. 4. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

---

E. T. MARBLE,

A Director of Worcester's Free Public Library.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

BUYERS * OF * FURNITURE

Will find it to their interest to examine our Stock, which is the largest in the city, and note our prices, which are the lowest, before purchasing elsewhere. Our new PARLOR SUITS are beautiful in design and of superior workmanship. Our new CHAMBER SUITS in all desirable woods, handsomely finished. Dining Room, Library and Hall Furniture adapted to the needs of all housekeepers. ROLL TOP DESKS and CABINET BEDS. For another season we have the exclusive sale of the WAKEFIELD RATTAN COMPANY'S CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES. We exhibit a large invoice of new and beautiful designs, and at reduced prices. We sell for cash, or on liberal terms.

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

1839
S. R. Leland & Son,
Chickering & Sons,
Knabe, Fischer,
Behr Bros.,
W. P. Emerson,
Hallet, Davis & Co.,
Sterling

PIANO AGENCY.

Manufacturers
"Eclipse" Cornets and Trombones.
Importers of
BAND INSTRUMENTS
and Musical Merchandise.
Largest Stock, Finest Goods,
Lowest Prices, Easy Payments.
Satisfaction Guaranteed
446 Main Street, Worcester.

The Worcester Oxygen Company
have opened new and attractive rooms, Nos. 10 and 11
LINCOLN BLOCK for the popular
Compound Oxygen Treatment
under care of an experienced Physician. Tickets including 30 treatments at reduced rates until May 1. 36<sup>8</sup>/<sub>2</sub>
Main st., or No. 1 Elm st., up one flight,
Dr. J. W. GOULD. T. D. BRISTOL, M. D.

MECHANICS HALL.
Mrs. Lillie Wilkinson, - - - Manager.
APRIL 2, (Fast Day.)
AFTERNOON AND EVENING.
THE UNITED STATES
MARINE * BAND
OF WASHINGTON.
MR. JOHN PHILIP SOUSA, Conductor.
Assisted by
Mlle MARIE DECCA, Prima Donna Soprano
from Her Majesty's Opera, England.
The United States Government has given a limited leave of absence to the Marine Band, for the purpose of exhibiting the high degree of musical excellence it has attained, in a few special concerts in the principal cities only.
Prices, 50c., 75c. and $1.
All Seats Reserved.
Sale commences at Gorham's Music Store, Monday,
March 30.

J. B. Woodworth,
* ARCHITECT *
492 Main St.,
Worcester.

SALEM STREET CHURCH
Course * of * Entertainments.
FRIDAY, April 3—Lecture by
Rev. I. J. LANSING.
Subject: "Around the Fire of a Hunter's Camp."

The lecture consists of very interesting rem-iniscences of Mr. Lansing's vacations, spent in the Adirondacks.
Tickets for remainder of course (three entertainments), 50 cents; children, 35 cents
Single admission, 25 cents. Lecture begins at 8 o'clock.

N. G. TUCKER. W. F. TUCKER.
N. G. TUCKER & SON,
SANTRY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.
Dealers in Plumbing Materials.
56 Pleasant Street. Worcester, Mass.

MECHANICS HALL.
Mrs. JENNIE ABBOTT MATTOON'S
Fifth Annual Reception,
MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 6TH.
MUSIC BY BRIGHAM'S ORCHESTRA.

Doors open at 7. Dancing by the pupils will commence precisely at 8 o'clock.
At the conclusion of the pupils' program there will be an opportunity for others to participate in the dancing, which will continue until 1 o'clock.

FLOOR TICKETS
Can be obtained of MRS. MATTOON at GRAND ARMY HALL, on the Afternoon of March 25 and April 1st; also, at GORHAM'S MUSIC STORE.
PRICE - - - $1 FOR EACH PERSON

GALLERY SEATS
on Sale at
Gorham's, Monday, March 23, at 9 a. m.
First three rows in West Gallery and first row in North and South Galleries, 75 cents; all other Gallery Seats, 50 cents.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1891.

No. 4

Let your light so shine before men,

—Matthew v, 16.

The Book of Books gives no better advice. To follow the same should be man's highest aspiration.

Wasn't Mechanics Hall full? Did it look much like a dead issue?

LIGHT is not a judge of that kind of post mortems, but an impression of exceeding liveliness was the one received at the meeting.

Worcester appears to have opinions of her own, or she readily echoes those of the Ohio statesman. It didn't look as though there were many dissenting opinions there.

Major McKinley had made a name before he became chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and thereby the manager of the Tariff Bill. The public heard of him when he introduced the suit of clothing bought of Leopold Morse in Boston, as a refutation of the latter's arguments.

His appearance would attract attention anywhere. Add four inches to his stature, round him out with seventy-five pounds of flesh, put on a blue coat and a buff vest and he might sit for a portrait of Daniel Webster.

He has the same smooth face, dark hair and sunken eyes, so deeply sunken in fact that no one in front of him could tell their color. His voice, however, is not Websterian. Congressional wrangling has given it a rattle like a loose string on a piano, especially when he attempts emphasis.

But it was a famous victory. From first to last they were a pleased looking lot of men who sat back of him. Merchant, lawyer, teacher, manufacturer, priest; they were all there and all seemed happy and accordant, and apparently all were ready to boom McKinley for any office he might wish.

Jones and I get quite excited in the evening now and then

When we get to talking tariff and our different views defend;

For that man, though shrewd in business, is a real old-fashioned crank,

All the sound advice I give him he rejects without a thank.

He is great on free trade doctrines, do you say, "now what of that?"

I can answer very shortly—he's a red-hot Democrat,

And to me, the other party, all his arguments seem thin

I'm a strong protection fellow and my side is sure to win.

Wife and children get disgusted when they hear us waging war,

(Two such men in real dead earnest I am sure you never saw;

And one night my little daughter, said as only children can,

"Papa, is that 'Bill M'Kinley' such a dreadful wicked man?"

E. G.

But in all this, there is just one drop of alloy. How does it happen that, amid all this prosperity, the farmers' lot is no better. Why is it that he can hardly pay his taxes? That his farm will not begin to sell for what it would in 1870? Having legislated for the manufacturer, would not a little attention to the farmer's needs be in place?

The Messenger of this city, very judiciously remarks that no factions need apply, referring to the coming hither of Parnell's emissaries who wish to carry hence, funds to keep up an Irish quarrel. To unbiased spectators, it really looks as though Parnell's anxiety was more for the money to be had than for the cause he has claimed to champion. How are the mighty fallen!

On March 12, the Northern Christian Advocate of Syracuse, N. Y., the Methodist paper for Central New York, published a semi-Centennial number. The paper is exceedingly valuable and creditable. The Advocate has been taken by our father and grandfather from the beginning and we can produce a receipt given for a subscription to Volume 11. The moving from Auburn to Syracuse, years ago was a very long step forward.

The Rev. Father Bodfish, speaking as an American Catholic, says the public school is not an American institution and that leading Americans are beginning to doubt the utility of educating all upon a common plane. There always will be those who need special schools; but LIGHT doubts there being any such wide spread sentiment as the gentleman names, at any rate not in Worcester.

Worcester loyalty to the public school has long been proverbial. Few cities have better attended schools, or teachers who take more pains to adapt themselves to the wants and needs of individual pupils. There is, however, a decided need, now, and that is the abolition of the half holiday Wednesday and the granting of a full holiday Saturday.

Does it not seem a little strange that people should have felt it necessary to raise a fund to help along the family of Secretary Windom? A property of $150,000 would be thought a comfortable one, generally, especially when the family was small, yet $50,000 was given by fifty men. Is it another application of the Scriptural maxim, "To him that hath shall be given." Money without stint has been poured into the laps of the Grant family.

Were any of these people positively suffering? Was it improper for any or all of them to go to work? Would not the same amount given to suffering poor, those who are in distress through illness have done quite as much good? There are suffering, starving people in our land who are forgotten.

The recent decision of the Treasury Department that a tax, paid into the Revenue by a rum seller, is in no sense a license, is quite encouraging to the man who believes that the business should be placed under a ban. Some how or other the public has felt that the government sort of stood back of the traffic and, by taking money, sanctioned it. If it doesn't, why so much the better. Pity it should tax the business at all. Money obtained thus is blood money. All the ins and outs of the rum curse are not yet understood.

It was a very good showing that our citizens made before the Board of Aldermen, last Wednesday night. Let us hope that an impression was made. No city would establish a quarantine or pest house contrary to the wishes of tax payers. It does seem as though moral pest houses might be similarly classed. If the business be a necessary evil, put it, keep it where the people want it.

A recent number of the New York Press had an effective picture representing Death clasping an eight story tenement house in his arms, with a grin of satisfaction at the possibilities within his reach. Thousands are thus sleeping with Death hovering near them. In crowded cities where land cannot be purchased for a covering of gold, such tall structures may be necessary; but there is no need of them here. Spread out and live nearer the ground. Mother Earth loves her children. Like Red Jacket they should rest upon her bosom.

The Amherst gathering at the Bay State House, Tuesday evening last, was a very cheerful assemblage, one calculated to cheer the heart of the new president, Mr. Gates, who was present as guest. Worcester Alumni of all colleges are noted for the heartiness of their receptions. Our Polytechnic Institute has three Amherst Professors, Smith, Kimball and Eaton and Professor Smith was called upon to respond for his institution and did so very effectively. Of course the speech of the President was a carefully prepared showing of the College over whose interests he has been called to preside and was, in every way, highly creditable to him. LIGHT regrets its inability to give his words completely.

One ought to know pretty well, before assuming the rôle of a prophet. Last Saturday, week, the Boston Traveller had three columns or less of matter about prospective changes in the pulpits of the New England Conference. Those pertaining to Worcester were extensively copied in our city papers. This is much like the question, "Who will be nominated at the next convention?" You can tell better after the convention. It is writing against time and space. LIGHT ventures this prediction that out of the seven remarks for Worcester, aside from the well known removal of Messrs. Dorr & Galbraith, the Traveller is not right in more than two other cases. When one comes to possibilities, the chances equal the continued product of all the members of the Conference. Probability is an entirely different thing. Some folks ascribe all these changes, etc. to Providence. Others lay them to another agency beginning with P., viz., the Presiding Elder.

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.
Offices, 339 Main Street, Burnside Building,
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Hereafter, it will be understood that all articles in LIGHT, not ascribed, save recipes,
squibs, fashion and household notes were
written for this paper.

Next week LIGHT will have a full statement of the make up of all church choirs for the coming musical year.

In the latest Printers Ink, Mr. George R.
Kennedy, again makes excellent points on the subject of advertising. He rings more changes on "Suppose" than the Peak Family ever did on their bells.

About Folks.

The 2nd W. C. T. U. invite all their friends to help eat a turkey dinner in their new rooms near the viaduct, on Front street next Tuesday, from 6 to 9 p.m. These very hard working and devoted women deserve the utmost encouragement from the public. Generous friends have contributed and now if hungry folks will go in and eat, some of the extra cost of moving may be met. Don't forget the hour.

George C., Herbert F. and Gertrude A.
Burrage are home from Cornell for a two weeks' vacation.

George. K. Robinson, son of William L.
Robinson of this city, has joined the Ullie Akerstrom company for the rest of this season.

E. H. Forbush has accepted an appointment on the state commission for the extermination of the gypsy moth.

The wife of the Rev. John Galbraith has gone to Torrington, Conn., to visit her mother, Mrs. Weed. Her two children accompany her.

Miss Flora Randolph of Alfred Center, Alleghany Co. N. Y., a student in Wellesley College, is spending the Easter vacation with Miss, Geraldine Longley, 19½ Crown St.

School and College.

Polytechnic.

The Seniors completed their class organization at a meeting held Wednesday noon.
After one or two informal ballots the following were unanimously elected officers for Commencement: Class Poet, A. L. Rice, Barre; class orator, S. A. Kinsley, Worcester; tree orator, H. L. Dadmun, Worcester. Two days before another meeting was held at which George W. Booth of Southbridge, a civil, was chosen valedictorian. For this office a list of eight candidates, as is the custom, was submitted to the faculty, and from this list the names of seven were returned approved. The list as returned contained the following names:
G. W. Booth, Southbridge; A. L. Rice, Barre;
H. P. Eddy, Worcester; B. A. Gibson and G.
Alley, Clinton; W. H. Baird, Indiana; and I.
F. Rogers of this city. The contest was quite close, requiring thirteen ballots before a choice was made, Eddy, Rice and Booth leading.

C. H. Dunbar, '91, left for New York Wednesday, chiefly on business concerning the '91 class-book. He was also authorized to get bids for the school-pins from Tiffany and other
New York jewelers.

Dr. Smith's Senior division in civil government varied its usual recitation Wednesday by holding a town meeting. The warrant, which was drawn up in due form and comprised thirteen articles, was posted on the bulletins for one or two days before. The principal subjects to be acted upon were: To see if women should be allowed to vote for town officers; if the town should control the electric light system; if a concrete walk should be laid from the Salisbury Laboratories to Boynton street; if a fire-engine should be bought, etc., etc. Organization was effected with H. L. Dadmun, moderator, and F. C.
Hodgman, clerk. Interest centred chiefly on the Woman's Right's clause, and the debate became quite vigorous. However, the conservatives won, and the measure was defeated by a large majority. The meeting probably gave the class a better idea of the "New England town meeting" than could be got in any other way, besides also affording something of a diversion.

The catalogues for this year were given out Wednesday afternoon, and everybody looked to see if his name was in it. The junior class is now the largest in school numbering sixty-four men.

G. C. Gordon, '94, of this city, was quite badly hurt Wednesday morning in the wood-room of the shop. While fooling with another fellow he accidentally drove the blade of a knife through the palm of his hand, severing an artery. He was taken to the Hospital.

Wednesday afternoon the Juniors had their initiation to a five hour semi-annual examination. The exercise was in trigonometry and the disgusted and weary looking line of would-be mathematicians which straggled down from chapel, was a unit in favor of last fall's plan of hourly examinations each month.

A select party of clay pigeon shooters from
'91, held a field-day Thursday near North pond.

Twenty-seven men are now making up summer practice in the shop. Heretofore but fifteen or sixteen have been accommodated, but the presence of some of the machinery from the Bigelow gift has increased the capacity of the iron-room.

J. F. Rogers, '91, of this city, will probably take the place vacated by Mr. Lazell, as assistant in the laboratory.

The athletic directors had a meeting Tuesday, at which it was voted to hold this spring, a series of cross-country runs, open to the entire school. The first is to be to Barber's Crossing and back, the second to New Worcester, and the third to Tatnuck. Twenty points are counted for the first man in at each run, nineteen for the second, and so on for the first twenty runners. After the three runs have been held, the man having the largest number of points to his credit will receive a gold medal, the second largest number a silver medal, and the third one of bronze. Moreover the first six in each contest are to receive souvenir badges. The class whose representatives score the most, will receive a banner, made up with the class colors. The last run of the three is to take place Saturday, May
2. It is thought that with such liberal prizes as these to compete for, the series will bring out a large number of contestants, and much interest and rivalry is anticipated.

Holy Cross.

The annual debate of the B. J. F. will be held about the last of May. The following disputants have been appointed: S. A. Jennings, '92; James D. Newton, '91; Patrick T.
O'Brien, '91 and Charles W. Collins, '91.

Rev. C. C. Jones, S. J., will preach the Easter sermon at St. Anne's church.

Rev. Fr. Maes, S. J., will preach at Natick
Easter Sunday.

The Philomathic Debating Society are to have a prize debate in Fenwick Hall on the evening of April 23. Messrs. Cosgrove, Hennessy, Lenihan and Ryan have been appointed as disputants.

Smith College.

The examinations at the end of the term begin tomorrow and vacation begins next
Wednesday, April 1.

Friday is the last day for required gymnasium practice and an exhibition will be given by the Freshman class.

There is also to be a very fine Analysis class Friday, with Passion music.

The campus is looking green already, and the girls are beginning to plan their Spring walks, though examinations are the most frequently discussed topics this week.

Marble-Houghton.

"Hear the merry wedding bells
Golden bells!

What a world of happiness their harmony foretells."

Thursday evening, Albert Curtis, youngest son of E. T. Marble, No. 936 Main street, was married to Miss Lilla B., daughter of the late Stillman Houghton. Both were graduates of the class of '85, W. H. S., and the lady has a excellent reputation as a vocalist of rare sweetness of voice. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. D. O. Mears. On returning from a short wedding journey the young people will reside with the parents at 986
Main street. The marriage took place at 6 p.
m. and from 7 to 10 a large number of friends were received.

Church Notes.

BAPTIST.

The dedication of the new Pleasant street edifice has been deferred to April 21st.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The announcement that the sacred cantata, "The Last Night at Bethany" would be sung at Pilgrim Church last Sunday evening served to draw a very large audience. The cantata was composed by the organist of Gloucester Cathedral, England, for the Gloucester music festival. It tells the story of the Holy Week in a very beautiful manner. The soloists were Mrs. J. W. Pitts, soprano; Mrs. J. W. Howell, contralto; Mr. Geo. L. Butler, tenor; Mr. J. H. Howell, bass.

The Ladies Benevolent Society of Plymouth Church held an Easter sale Tuesday afternoon and evening, in the church vestry. The sale opened at three o'clock in the afternoon and the fancy articles, contributed by the ladies, were readily disposed of. Supper was served at six o'clock. At eight o'clock an entertainment was given under the direction of Mrs. John W. Townsend and Mrs. E. H. Wentworth. The first number was a trio for piano, violin, and mandolin performed by Miss Edith Boyden and the Misses Clark. Then twelve little girls gave a very pretty broom drill. Seven little girls followed with a musical sketch, each girl representing one day of the week. The concluding number was an allegory "The triumph of Christianity." The parts were as follows: Girl of the world, Miss Edith Putnam; art, Miss Edith Boyden; music, Miss Clark; fame, Miss Fannie Reed; wealth, Miss Edith Jourdan; Christianity, Miss Alice Sawyer; the angel, Miss Julia Davenport; cupid, Donald Taft; violinist, Miss Eva Becher. About four hundred attended the sale, which was very successful. All were much pleased with the entertainment.

At Plymouth Church tomorrow, the pastor, Rev. Dr. McCullagh will preach morning and evening at the usual hour. At 3:30 o'clock there will be a concert exercise by the Sunday School. There will be special Easter music at the morning and evening service. The choir will have the assistance of J. N. Truda, violinist.

The sacred cantata, "The Daughter of Jairus," will be given Sunday evening at Central Church by the united choirs of the church with Miss Maud Davis, Mr. Alfred Thomas and W. A. Anderson as soloists.

METHODIST.

The Whatsoever Circle of Kings Daughters of Trinity Church gave a delightful entertainment last week Friday evening at the house of E. A. Kelley, 45 Cedar street. Two violin selections were rendered by a sextet composed of Miss Florence M. Sears and her pupils, Flora Whittemore, Nellie Gardiner, Louise Beaumont, Austin Coates, Arthur Squires. Jean Ingelow's poem "Seven Times one are Seven," was then read by Miss Sears and each of the seven parts was illustrated by tableaux. The tableaux were: Exultation, Romance, Love, Maternity, Widowhood, Giving in Marriage, and Longing for Home. The names of six well-known books were next presented in tableaux and the audience requested to guess them. The Pilgrim in his Progress brought down the house. The doors were then thrown open into the room where candy was for sale and a pleasant social hour was passed. Flash pictures of the stage and its decorations of palms and flowers were taken at the close. Those who bore the principle parts in the tableaux were: Susie Brown; Flora Bristol; Maud Howe; Ada Santum and children; Blanche and Herbert Kelley, bride and groom. and Wm. B. Tower, clergyman; Maud Syvret.

Rev. Dr. W. H. Thomas of Trinity Church has been preaching a series of evening sermons this week. His subjects were as follows: General subject, "A walk in the footsteps of Jesus;" Sunday evening, "Jesus honored by the multitude;" Monday, Jesus and the religious enemies of religion;" Tuesday, Jesus and his own disciples;" Wednesday, "Jesus in the garden of sorrows;" Thursday, "Jesus before human tribunals;" Friday, "Jesus crucified;" Easter Sunday morning, "In the midst of the throne, a lamb as it had been slain."

The fourth quarterly conference of Trinity Church was held last Sunday, Rev. Dr. Geo. S. Chadbourne, presiding. Trustees were elected as follows: Emerson Warner, president; Joseph Dennis, vice-president; Dwight Smith, secretary and treasurer; Winthrop B. Fay, Charles S. Goddard, A. F. B. Kinney, Alexander McGregor, Sylvanus Sears, Edward Wright. The following were elected members of the board of stewards: S. O. Heald, G. C. Bryant, David G. Tapley, Dr. D. S. Ellis, William B. Harding, C. G. De Costello, C. W. Wood, C. S. Goodard, C. R. Rogers, J. C. Greene.

This Church is much regretting the coming moving of Dwight Smith to Boston.

Laurel Street. The Quarterly Conference has unanimously asked for the return of Mr. Sanderson for a fifth year.

Both Swedish churches ask for return of present pastors, Rev's Eklund and Witting.

Y. M. C. A.

Tuesday afternoon, a meeting was held to organize the Women's Auxiliary. General Secretary Gale gave an outline of the work to be done and a board of directors was elected as follows: Mrs. Geo. C. Whiting, First Baptist Church; Mrs. C. L. Thompson, Pleasant Street Baptist; Mrs. F. M. Overholser, Main Street Baptist; Mrs. S. J. Chamberlain, Dewey Street Baptist; Mrs. W. W. Johnson, Lincoln Square Baptist; Mrs. Charles Marston, South Baptist Church; Mrs. William Deane, Adams Square Baptist; Mrs. Geo. W. Vinton, Free Baptist; Mrs. Alexander, French Baptist; Mrs. Edward Jerome, Old South; Mrs. S. W. Russell, Central; Mrs. Charles Robbins, Union; Mrs. Wesson, Salem Street; Mrs. Merritt, Summer Street; Mrs. C. H. Stearns, Plymouth; Mrs. G. H. Miller; Piedmont; Mrs. F. H. Mighill, Pilgrim; Mrs. G. H. Howland, Church of Covenant; Mrs. C. W. Bowker, Park; Mrs. Albert Bryant, Belmont; Mrs. Chas. Hall, Hope; Mrs. Woodside, Lake View; Mrs. C. W. Sears, Trinity; Mrs. M. M. Townsend, Laurel Street; Mrs. John Davis, Grace; Mrs. Rollins, Webster Square; Mrs. Trask, Coral Street; Mrs. Blaisdell, Church of Christ; Mrs. Frank Frye, All Saints' Episcopal.

Today, at 3 o'clock there will be a meeting of the boys to organize the junior department. All boys invited.

Physical director Paul Plummer is ill at his home in Chelsea. He has the "gripe." Mr. Harry Wentworth has charge of the gymnasium classes during Mr. Plummer's absence.

The morning meeting at 9 15 will be lead by Mr. S. B. Brooks. The meetings are now being very well attended and considerable interest is shown. There will be the usual boys' meeting at 3 o'clock which will be different from any yet held. The speaker for the men's meeting at 4, has not yet been engaged. As is the custom with the Association, the Easter services will be held Sunday, April 5.

Dr. McCullagh's lectures have been postponed till later in the season.

The reception committee will meet Monday evening to make arrangements for the business men's reception, which has been postponed till April 6.

Mr. S. T. Livermore has presented the Association with a robin which is a very fine singer.

Mr. Otis Parker has given the Association two pictures which have been hung on either side of the clock near the entrance. Similar gifts from others would be very thankfully received by the Association.

The Association paper will appear as early in April as possible.

Plans are already being made for the summer work and it is likely that more will be done this year than has been done before.

Plans are under consideration for the building of a Gospel Wagon by the Association.

Y. W. C. A.

On Easter Monday the class work of the Association will be exhibited and a cordial invitation is extended to both men and women to see the result of the winter's work. The following classes have been maintained during the past twenty weeks: Sewing, taught by Mrs. H. M. Carr and Mrs. M. S. Fowler; millinery taught by Mrs. Frank Wheeler and several assistants; cooking, taught by Mrs. L. W. Humphrey; dress cutting, taught by Mrs. A. S. Newcomb; fancy needle work, by Mrs. S. H. Moulton and assistants; singing, taught by Miss H. L. Ellsworth; writing, taught by Miss Mary Chapin; French, taught by Miss E. B. Rice, and reading and physical culture taught by Miss A. I. Evans. The number of pupils has been two hundred and eighty one. Weekly sessions of each class have been held. Now at the close of this class work they invite all interested to see what they have done. In the reading room, tables will be placed on which the handiwork will be placed. During the evening a program of music and readings will be given in the hall by members of Miss Ellsworth and Miss Evans classes. This will be followed by a musical drill, showing the physical work. An address of welcome will be made by the president, Mrs. C. F. Rugg. This exhibition is free to all who wish to attend.

W. R. C.

On Friday eve, April 3, the Ladies' Relief Corps will give an entertainment in G. A. R. Hall. Mrs. S. F. Babbitt and Mr. T. H. Blood will give their laughable rendering of Widow Bedott. Always good and always sure to draw. Everybody is urged to attend.

Edwin Tyler Marble.

During the past fifty years, had there been no hum of machinery in the town and city of Worcester, today these hills and dales would not be dotted with the abodes of nearly a hundred thousand people. Among the enterprises which have thus contributed to the good of this multitude, no one is worthy of better mention than that which, for twenty-eight years, has sent out to all parts of the world cloth finishing machinery over the firm name of Curtis & Marble. It is to the junior member of that firm that LIGHT, this week, introduces its readers.

The family has long been identified with the town of Sutton, for one of the early settlers there was Freegrace Marble whose parents, Samuel and Rebekah, were Andover people. His marriage, said to have been the first in the town, was to Mary Sibley, a member of one of the oldest and most numerous of the Sutton families. He was a stone-mason by trade and helped to build the old State House in Boston. He died in 1769. From his oldest son, Samuel, was descended that Manton Marble who was the founder of the New York World. His youngest son, Malachi, was the grandfather of Royal Tyler Marble who was, till 1841, a farmer in his native town. In that year, he came to Worcester and was, for many years, a farmer on Vernon street. He died in 1861. His wife was Ann B. Clement, a native of Haverhill. She survived till 1885, dying at the home of her younger son, Francis R., in New Worcester. There are several old houses yet standing in Sutton in which the various branches of the Marble family have lived and the old home of Royal T. is among them, now owned by one Odlin, long known as the Major Harback place.

Edwin T. Marble was born in Sutton, August 18, 1827, and, in his boyhood, received such instruction as the common schools afforded. To this were added several terms at the Worcester County Manual Training School which, in its day, seems to have filled an important place in the educational interests of Worcester. When eighteen years old he went into the shop of Albert Curtis and, till he was twenty-one, he served his apprenticeship. Up to this service he had labored on the farm. There were but two children in his father's family, himself and the brother, Francis of New Worcester, long associated with him in his business.

After attaining his majority, he came into the city and worked in different shops in the several capacities of journeyman, foreman and superintendent. For some time, he was in the employ of Thayer & Houghton and was afterward superintendent of the Cleveland works. In 1863, he formed a partnership with Albert Curtis, the man of whom he learned his trade and from that time to the present he has been attentive to the interests of the business whose location is just across the stream at the left as one goes beyond Webster Square on the road to Hope Cemetery. In 1856, Mr. Curtis was advertised as the builder of shearing machines for broad and narrow cloth, carpets, cotton prints, etc., gigs, napping and brushing machines, cloth winders, flock cutters, shear grinders, etc. The shop was founded in 1830. In 1881, the advertisement was substantially the same and today after a lapse of thirty-five years the products are the same, save as they have kept pace with the progress of invention. These machines have gone into every state in the union save four and those, with Florida, are our most recent ones. They have been sent to Mexico, South America, Russia, England and Germany. The principal machine is that for shearing textile fabrics. This business is the largest of its kind in this country, possibly in the world.

In 1850, Mr. Marble was married to Miss Harriet H. Chase of Shelburne Falls, though the family was from Worcester and it was when she was a Worcester teacher that Mr. Marble met his future wife. For several years they lived on Trumbull street and there the two older children were born, but for more than twenty-nine years, their home was on Beaver street and here were born their other three children. The names of the children are: Edwin H., Harriet A., William C., Charles F., and Albert Curtis. These four sons are all in some way connected with their father in his business. Edwin H. married Emma C. Moulton and resides on Ely street. He is much interested in antiquarian and scientific questions. William C. married less than a year ago Miss Mary R. Haphold, a lady formerly from Philadelphia and a sister of Mrs. William J. Hogg. Charles F. married, in November last, Miss Annie M. Russell, a teacher in the High School of this city, having gone from the same school to Smith College, whence she was graduated in 1886. Their home is on Freeland street. The viands at Albert C.'s marriage are scarcely cold, for it was only last Thursday night that he was wedded to Miss Lilla B. Houghton, a High School graduate of 1885. All of Mr. Marble's children have been pupils in the High School, the younger three graduating in the order of their ages in 1881, 1882 and 1885. Charles F. went to Amherst where he took first honors and was an excellent ball player as well. Edwin H. entered the Polytechnic in one of its earliest classes.

The last of May, 1860, Mr. Marble moved into his elegant new house, erected on Main street, facing Freeland. An elaborate description of this building was given in LIGHT, July 5th, 1890. It is alike creditable to Mr. A. P. Cutting, the architect, and to Mr. Marble whose notions of comfort were thus worked out. Nothing that can contribute to ease and happiness seems to have been omitted. Here with that portion of his family whom Hymen has not taken from him he passes a well earned afternoon of life. Nor are the married children so very far away, for at only a stone's throw is Charles while William and Edwin are by no means distant.

It was only a few months after the organization of Piedmont Church that Mr. Marble became connected with it, and here his church relations have been to date. He is and long has been one of its officers.

Of an active, stirring nature, and coming of age just after Worcester became a city, it is not strange that Mr. Marble should have held many offices in city and state. In 1860, he went into the School Board for a single year; but in 1872 he was again elected and he held his place until 1880. In 1866, he was elected to the Common Council and was an influential member of that body for three years. In 1869, he was placed by his constituents in the Board of Aldermen and for four years he was one of those who helped to sustain the famous administration of Mayor Blake.

He was sent to the lower branch of the Legislature in 1870, but he positively declined a renomination. In 1887 and 1888 he was in the State Senate, in the latter year defeating the present Democratic holder of the place, John R. Thayer. Mr. Marble joined the Mechanics' Association in 1846, the first year of his apprenticeship and in the intervening years has been a trustee twelve years, in all, and in 1887 and '88 was president.

Today, he is a director in the Worcester Safe and Deposit company, and in the People's Savings Bank and also a member of the Committee on Investments in the latter institution. Again he is a director of the Old Men's Home and, lastly, is one of those who supervise the interests of our great Free Public Library. Here is, in brief, the outline of a very busy life, of a career whose success has been owing, very little, to any aid outside of native wit and energy coupled with unquestioned uprightness and integrity. By such lives our city has been built; on such reputations it rests.

ABOUT FOLKS.

The Bryant Chautauqua Circle will meet next Tuesday at 7.45 p.m. at Becker's Business College, 492 Main street. Mr. John Alton will give an informal talk on geology. The Circle extends a cordial invitation to all interested to attend, especially if they are Chautauquans not already connected with a local circle.

The display of Easter goods by the Davis Art Company is worthy of attention. The one who goes to 18 Pearl street will find much to admire. Local artists are meeting much favor. Mrs. Getchell's exquisite work is greatly admired. The firm under Mr. Crocker's management is prepared to ornament its own mouldings. Corners can never be perfectly matched by using mouldings in the strip. By this innovation customers can have perfect corners, and select any line of finish. All heavy ornamentations are made in "Carton Pierre," and finished only in gold. Samples of unfinished mouldings in numberless styles. A line of pastels in open-work silver frames has just been opened and is exciting a deal of admiration. There is little in the way of frames that cannot be had here. The place is so convenient that all can readily call.

Miss Bessie McFarland of New York, is at Mrs. George B. Buckingham's, 20 King street, on a short visit.

The Misses Parmelee of King street, gave a progressive whist party to their friends, Saturday evening, March 21. During the evening refreshments were served. The first prize, a silver paper knife, was won by Mr. Albert Lithgow, class of '92 Harvard. The party was composed of: Misses Minnie Parmelee, Mary L. McCloud, Anna B. McCloud, Ida Peacock, Flossie Peacock, Grace Little, Addie Tapley, Walter Brooks, Arthur Greenwood, Albert Lithgow, William Madison, Geo. Cleveland, Frank Bullard, Walter P. Hall, Walter Peacock.

Our Free Public Library.

Several months since, LIGHT gave to its readers a portrait and sketch of Mr. S. S. Green, for many years at the head of this excellent institution. This week much space is devoted to a consideration of our library's past and present.

Worcester had not been without books previous to the opening of the Public Library; but the large collections were for the use of restricted bodies, as the Worcester Lyceum and the Young Men's Library Association. In 1859, after the merging of several organizations there were held for circulation among members or for reference about 12,000 volumes, this number including several thousand devoted to the maintenance of the Green library and the remainder to the increasing of the fund until it shall have reached $100,000, at which time the income in fixed proportions may go for the improving of the whole library. In 1888, this fund had grown to be about $43,- volumes that Dr. John Green had intrusted for use and keeping. A library, however, for the public had become a necessity. In November, 1859, Dr. John Green expressed to certain gentlemen a wish to give a large number of books to the city as the foundation of a Free Public Library. This was the starting of the ball whose rolling has produced our present famous institution. Dec 23, of the same year, the city government accepted the gift of Dr. Green and also that of the Worcester Lyceum and Young Men's Library Association.

April 30, 1860, the library was opened in the rooms in Worcester Bank Block, Foster Street, which had been occupied by the old library organizations. Dr. Green had stipulated in his gift that a building should soon be erected by the city for this collection of books. The well known structure, on Elm street, was finished in 1861. Many public spirited citizens had recognized the need of a Public Library long ere the founding, notable among whom were T. W. Higginson and Stephen Salisbury. Dr. Green's gift included above

7,000 volumes to form a nucleus for a reference library, still used as such. On his death, in 1865, he still further remembered the library in bequeathing to it a fund of $30,000, stipulating that three fourths of the income shall be

BASEMENT.

ooo. No one can have entered our library without remarking the benign face of the Doctor, as he looks down from his picture or forth from the chair in which the artist long since seated his plaster figure. He is still among his books. Before him, daily, appear children, not those whom he used to accost and encourage but their children, and for years to come the line must move on. Those benefitted may not know what they owe to the man who in his post of honor looks not unlike Him who long since enjoined little children to come unto Him. "He being dead, yet speaketh."

FIRST FLOOR.

SECOND STORY.

From the modest beginning the number of volumes in our library has grown till now more than 80,000 books are under the care and keeping of the city. In 1865, owing largely to the efforts of the Hon. Geo. F. Hoar a fund of $11,000 was raised for the maintenance of a reading room of current literature. To this fund, Mr. Stephen Salisbury, Sr., with his well known liberality gave $4,000 and other public spirited citizens made up the remainder in sums ranging from one hundred dollars downward. At present, three hundred papers and periodicals are on the files of the library. In 1872, the library made a decided innovation being the first in New England to open its doors for reading and reference and the change seems to have succeeded, so much so, that many other public libraries have done the same.

THIRD STORY.

The first librarian was Zephaniah Baker from February 17, 1860 to January 14, 1871. To him succeeded Mr. S. S. Green a nephew of Dr. John Green. For a more extended notice of him and his very successful management of the library, the reader is referred to LIGHT, Dec. 20, 1890.

Notwithstanding the size and convenience of the edifice erected in 1861, it has long been apparent that it was not large enough. Every inch of available space was utilized years ago. The crowded condition of all successful libraries was reached, only it was found much earlier than in some places. A new building was needed and after the usual preliminary ceremony was undertaken. The house and lot of Dr. J. O. Marble next east was purchased, moved away and excavations begun in 1889. Mr. Stephen C. Earle was the architect and he has erected here a most imposing monument; one in which Worcester citizens as well as himself take pride. The following description was prepared by him for the Library Record and with the accompanying cuts will readily make clear the interior of our latest new public building. That the edifice has been constructed and will be put in shape for occupancy within the appropriation is creditable alike to the architect, to the Builders, Cutting and Bishop; and to the City's Superintendent of Building, Capt. Charles H. Peck. The whole interior is the result of Mr. Green's working out of plans suggested by his experience. There has been the utmost cordiality among all concerned, the building committee, the committee on the part of the Directors, Architect, Librarian and Builders. Naturally Mr. Green knew best what was wanted and he has been fortunate in finding co-workers who could seize upon his ideas and embody them.

"The work was started in the Fall of '89, and owing to the mildness of the winter, continued without interruption, so that the roof was completed early in the Spring of 1890, and the inside work begun. It is now substantially finished, ready for furniture and fixtures.

The building is somewhat irregular in plan, its form being determined by the exigencies of light, both for this and the old building, and in the interest of light the connection between the old and the new, while it fills the entire space between them in the basement, above that consists only of a corridor and connecting lavatories. The main floor of the new building is level with that of the old, and by reason of the grade of the street, the new basement is a story of twelve feet in which is a new main entrance. The consideration of the need of light and the nature of the street grade seemed to require that the new building should be treated by itself, rather than as an addition to the old building and to allow a different architectural style and the use of different materials. In place of the pressed brick and fine cut stone, Pompeian brick with rock faced granite and brown stone are used, enriched with some carving and a special feature in red terra cotta. The style is Romanesque. At the north east corner is a square massive tower with a pyramidal roof carried only a little above the main roof, the basement story of which makes the main entrance through a wide, semi-circular archway, into a broad and deep open porch with tiled floor. The entrance arch is flanked both sides by enriched pilasters supporting a heavy cap and terminated with a large brown stone carved owl over each pilaster. Above the entrance a curved oriel window is carried up through two stories, giving a pleasant outlook up and down the street, from the tower rooms. At the north west corner is a private entrance to the basement, reached by a flight of outside steps. The door opens directly into a room 14x22 feet, designed for the janitor's use for unpacking, etc. The facade between the entrances is pierced with windows as large as the construction will allow, four to each story, and over each a semicircular arched panel in red terra cotta, of Romanesque conventional ornament, encircling a medallion portrait of heroic size, in bold relief. These are intended to be representative characters of different ages, different nations and different departments of literature, of course very general in their way, as there are only four of them; thus ancient Greece and History are represented by Thucydides; later Rome, Oratory and Philosophy, by Cicero; the Elizabethan age, England and Literature, by Shakespeare; and our own time and country, natural and applied Science, by Franklin.

On entering the building by the main oaken door, we find ourselves in a spacious vestibule with floor of mosaic tiles and walls of red pressed brick. Directly opposite is the janitor's room 8 x 15½ feet, and to the right is the door to the Reading Room. This vestibule also has main stairs in handsome oak finish, leading to the several stories. The Reading room occupies the whole of the basement, except the part used for janitor's rooms, stairways, corridors and lavatories, and is divided into three parts by the columns supporting the walls and floors above, the dimensions of the several sections being 28 x 29 and 29 x 41 at the front and 35 x 50 in the rear. In the middle of the west side is a corridor connecting with the old building on the several stories, and having stairways running up through all the stories. There is also a first class hydraulic passenger elevator, connecting with each story, and on each story in connection with the corridor are convenient lavatories and closets. There is a fine cellar under the whole of the basement, which is as yet unappropriated except the part used for heating apparatus and fuel.

On the main floor next to the main entrance hall, is the Green Library Reading room, 29 x 41, and separated from this only by an arcade of three openings, is the Librarian and assistants' work room, 25 x 28. Both of these rooms are lighted from the front. Over the entrance is the Librarian's private room, 13 x 18. The remainder of this story which is sixteen feet high, is devoted to the stack room of the Green Library, together with a room directly over it which is exactly similar except that the height of the story is but fourteen feet. Each stack room will be filled with iron stacks for books and will have an intermediate perforated floor, and together are expected to accommodate the present library and its natural growth for twenty-five years. A small elevator connects the different floors of the stack rooms. This part of the building is of fire proof construction, and the remainder, while it has wooden floor joists, has wire lathing for ceilings, mineral wool between floors, and walls plastered on to the brick work or on to terra cotta furring.

The second story has a Lecture hall 29 x 41 directly over the Green Library Reading room; west of this is the Directors' room, 14 x 25, and in the north-west corner, the catalogue room, 13½ x 30. In the tower is a study room, 13 x 18 and another of the same size is over it in the third story.

The remaining portion of the third story is intended for the storage and use of the collection of art works in the shape of books and plates, in which the library is very rich. There are three of these rooms all finely lighted from the top, the south one which is 35 x 50, also having windows on three sides. The rooms in the front are 25 x 28 and 29 x 41.

The building is heated by steam, in part by direct radiation, part indirect, and other parts by direct-indirect, and for ventilation, in addition to open fireplaces in most of the rooms, there are also ample ducts for foul air exit, in which a current is secured by heat. The wood finish of the building of which there is but little, is of white pine finished without paint, and it is expected that plain light tints will be given to the walls and ceilings. The artificial lighting will be by both gas and the incandescent electric light."

On the afternoon of March 31st, this magnificent structure will be opened to the City Government and Library Directors. The public enters April 1st. That the building, with its store of books and pictures, will be thronged, is certain. What man has done will be seen, but what Mr. Green has in mind for future development, eye hath not seen, nor ear heard. Certainly, there will be no deviation from the distinct line of progress marked out by him years ago.

It is more than likely, that this new building with its elegant appointments will hasten the Art Gallery, long so conspicuous a need in our city. For the present, the books will not crowd the space, and there is abundant opportunity for the hanging of pictures. With all Worcester's wealth and culture, her public places, as yet, are practically barren of Art work. In this respect smaller places are better off than we. This will not always be thus. The Knowles Bequest and the new library building must advance us.

At present, the circulating department with the magazine reading room will be confined to the old building. The room used by the librarian and his assistants may become a reading room for ladies. In time, the present Green library may have a floor built across for the economy of space. The long time reading room will be a store space, always useful. The storing of books in the Green library is after the modern plan of little show, great utility. The space is well lighted and the two tiers of shelves are easily reached. To all intents, the library is fire proof. As need arises, the room above this on the second floor can be used and, finally, the uppermost; but that is looking into the future away beyond the present generation. That time may be in the days of the great grand children of those little ones whom Dr. Green, the founder, caressed.

The lecture room will be specially valuable in the consideration of some of the works on Art and Science in which the library is already rich. On the uppermost floor is a dark closet for the use of photographers who may wish to make copies of some of the pictures. This is especially valuable in preparing work for the study of Geography in our schools, certain Grammar masters having become quite skillful in the use of the camera. On this floor most excellent lighting is had from the roof. Among the future specialties of the library will be a collection of scores from the best music masters and then will the muses be better honored than now.

Twenty years of experience have given to Mr. Green a rare mastery of his vocation. With him are associated Jessie E. Tyler, Lucie A. Young, Ellen L. Otis, Sarah D. Tucker, Hattie J. Childs and Arolyn L. Johnson. The janitors are Messrs. Edward A. Pierce and Edward M. Southwick.

The control of the Free Public Library is in the hands of twelve directors, chosen by the City Council for a term of six years, two retiring annually. The present board consists of J. O. Marble, A. G. Bullock, E. B. Glasgow, E. T. Marble, P. L. Moen, B. W. Potter, E. I. Comins, Waldo Lincoln, Samuel Winslow, E. J. Bardwell, T. J. Conaty and G. M. Woodward. The last picture shows the old and the new library buildings in their side by side positions.

MILLBURY LETTER.

The Board of Selectmen has organized by electing Mr. W. A. Harris, chairman, and Mr. P. W. Wood, secretary. They appointed H. W. Carter, road commissioner. The School Board has also organized with Hon. I. B. Sayles as chairman and H. W. Aiken, Esq., secretary and treasurer.

The schools, with the exception of the High School, commenced Monday. There are two changes in teachers. Mr. Pitman succeeds Mr. Gregson as master of the Burbank Hill Grammar School and Miss Henrietta Ager succeeds Miss Walker at the Park Hill School.

The members of the volunteer chorus choir of the First Congregational Church and their friends were given a complimentary reception by the standing committee of the church last Tuesday evening in the church parlors. A bountiful supper was served, after which a social evening was enjoyed by those present.

Mr. Tom Pope, a Millbury boy, but for a number of years a resident of Iowa, is in town with a car load of horses which he is exchanging for dollars with Millbury citizens. There are some fine looking animals among the number.

Easter services will be held at the various churches tomorrow. An Easter Praise Service will be held in the evening at the First Congregational church.

The recount of votes cast at the Town Meeting resulted in no change in the list of officers as announced in last week's LIGHT.

The Marine Band.

The United States Marine Corps, consisting of about 2,000 members, was created in 1798 as an adjunct to the navy, with headquarters in Washington. The Band of the United States Marine Corps, which is the official title for that organization, dates back to one hundred years ago. Some of its earlier leaders were Prof. Carusi, Antonio Pons, who recently died at over eighty years of age, Prof. Trei, who died in the service, and Francisco Scala, now retired. The band received no official recognition till 1856, and the musicians were not classified till a few years later. Then there were three classes, now these have been reduced to two.

Gen. Grant was a warm friend of the band, and during his administration the membership was increased to fifty-six. This was cut down in 1878 to forty members by Secretary of the Navy Thompson. Some additions have since been made, and now the National band has nearly fifty members: and the bill favorably reported to the House of Representatives a few weeks since will increase this number to seventy-two members, besides making many other provisions for the best musical results.

The Marine band is regularly on duty from 8.30 to 12 o'clock every morning at the Marine barracks, where a public concert is given every Monday. During the summer months concerts are given on the White House lawn every Saturday, and when Congress is not in session Wednesday concerts are also given at the Capitol.

The present director, Mr. John Philip Sousa, who is the seventh in the career of the band, was appointed ten years ago, under the Hayes administration; and his great abilities as a conductor and composer have placed the Marine band in the very front rank of National bands of the world, and make it the pride of the Naval department.

There is also an assistant director, Sig. Salvatore Petrola, who has been a member for twenty-eight years. He is an ex-member of the orchestra of La Scala, and one of the best arrangers in America.

The members are enlisted as Marines and classified as musicians, and entitled to retirement for old age, or pensions for disabilities received in the service. All have to be subjected to the most rigid physical and musical examination, and must be over five feet six inches tall.

The instrumentation of the band consists of 14 B clarinets, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 4 saxophones, 2 alto clarinets, 4 French horns, 4 cornets, 2 trumpets, 2 flugel horns, 3 trombones, 2 euphoniums, 3 basses, and drums, triangles, tympani, etc.

Letter from Brigham Young.

The following letter was written, years since, to a lady in Ashland, who had written to Brigham Young supposing that he was born in what is now a part of the town of Ashland then Hopkinton.

"SALT LAKE, U. T., March 20, 1869.

Madam:

Your interesting letter has come to hand which I have perused with pleasure.

I am compelled to say however, since you ask the facts in the case, that I never resided in Ashland, though my parents did. I was not born till they had moved from that section. Whitingham, Windham County, Vermont, is my birth place. As to strangers visiting Utah, we have never sought to discountenance it; on the contrary, we hope, now that the facilities for traveling are so great that the honorable and high minded will visit us, and so remove the strong prejudices which have been created against us by the pens of lying scribblers.

If you should visit this city, as you intimate you may do, I would be pleased to have you call upon me.

Yours with respect,
BRIGHAM YOUNG."

Books and Bookmen.

The excellence of the English language, with all its capacity for expressing sentiment or emotion, only a few realize. Then, too, it is a mine of intellectual wealth worthy the patient delving of very one. Chaucer is called a "Well of English, undefiled," but he is not the only author whose works can be read with excellent returns. Not only our own people but those of other nations are growing to appreciate this. Recently, an American gentleman and his family were travelling in far off Norway. He came upon the home of a cultured gentleman. His surprise was great at finding the English language spoken faultlessly. He said, "Had I found you conversant with German or French, I had not been surprised; but your knowledge of English does astonish me." The daughter, who was well read in English authors replied, "Oh yes, but there is such a wealth in English Literature, I cannot forego the opportunity to study it." Taine, a Frenchman, has given us the best treatise, yet, on English writers, while German criticism of Shakespeare is yet unexcelled. Think of this ye men and women who waste your time over the translation of the latest French novel or perhaps you acquired French that you might read it in the original.

Dedham Historical Register, published by the Dedham Historical Society, Dedham, Mass. Quarterly $1 per year.

There are many people in New England who rejoice that such a publication as this exists. Exteriorly, it excites expectations of what may be within and when opened those expectations are more than realized. Such work as this magazine starts out to accomplish will do much to get our local history on a firm and authentic basis. Here are records from churches and burial ground inscriptions that are bonanzas to the genealogist and town historian. Besides, the anecdotes and descriptions of the forefathers make the book as interesting as fiction. The example of Dedham is one worthy of following by other cities and towns. In this race for pelf it is refreshing to find some who are willing to serve their day and the future too in playing the part of Old Mortality. In every way, the Register is highly creditable to the town editors, and publishers. It is now in its second year, the number for January being the fifth in the Series.

Sir Philip Sidney, The Defense of Poesy, otherwise known as an apology for Poetry, edited by Albert S. Cook, professor of the English Language and Literature in Yale University, Ginn & Company, Boston, 1890.

This is another of the valuable aids that this firm has given to scholarship. It is possible that the energetic student could seek out for himself all that Prof. Cook has gathered together to illumine this book; but the chances are that he wouldn't. The Art of Poesy is Classic English; but the English of Queen Elizabeth's day needs much explanation. Allusions both to books and places are quite obscure to the average reader of this later day. Quite properly, the spelling has been made to conform to that of our own times. Some sticklers for the old insist that we should retain all the forms and characters as they were written. Were they to be favored, to the letter, they would have rare difficulty in reading Bacon and Shakespeare, not to mention the New Testament as Coverdale and Tyndale translated it.

The Introduction with the Analysis covers forty-five pages, the Defense itself fifty-eight, while the Notes run through seventy-seven more. When differences of renderings have existed by former commentators, as Arber and Fleugel, these are given in special tables covering six pages. Finally, there is an index to all proper names used.

When our people are fully aroused to the wealth and beauty already existing in our own tongue there will be much less time given to the translating from other tongues, ancient or modern. In the revival of English Study, LIGHT confidently expects to see the Defense of Poesy in the hands of many people to whom the subject now would be veriest Greek.

"Hoodwinked" is the somewhat peculiar title of the new novel by T. W. Speight, from Rand, McNally & Co. Publishers. Two half brothers are very nearly alike in face and figure. The birth of the elder is not acknowledged, while the younger has the estates and title. The elder forges a note and Mr. Levandros gets possession of it and uses it to further his own ambitious ends. He wishes to have Stephen put the heir out of the way, and take his place, and when he is well established he must marry Theo Levandros. As a reward for this he will hand over the forged note. Levandros makes his plans and all agree to them, but in the end he himself steps out of the story completely baffled, and instead of hoodwinking others he is hoodwinked himself. It is No. 147 of the Globe Library.

"Ingall's Home and Art Magazine" is published in the interest of those who are trying to learn painting, drawing, or in fact any kind of art, for china painting, leather work, and all sorts of decoration is in its turn treated of. March is clearly an Easter number having first, "Among the Lilies" with an appropriate illustration. The different departments are "Brush Studies," "Domestic Helps for the Home," "Household Decoration," "Ladies Fancy Work, and Artistic Novelties," "Home Needlework and Crochet," the Editorial columns, and several pages given to correspondence, and questions and their answers. A recent addition is a page for the "King's Daughters." Each department is full of hints for the several workers and we recommend it especially to the amateur. Price $1.

Public Libraries.

One of the most popular beneficiaries of the public-spirited in Massachusetts, outside of the colleges, is the public library. Librarian C. B. Tillinghast of the state library, in a recent interview gave a list of bequests or gifts for public library buildings which is quite significant, as well as interesting. Here it is:

Acton library, $3,000, given by William A. Wilde; Barre, $20,000, Henry Woods of Boston; Belchertown, $40,000, John Francis Clapp; Bernardston, $2,000, Ex-Lieut.-Gov. Henry W. Cushman; Braintree, $32,500, Gen. Sylvanus Thayer, the town furnishing a small portion; Brookfield, W. A. Bannister; Cambridge, $80,000, Fred H. Rindge; Chelsea, $30,000 Eustice C. Fitz; Concord, $60,000 William Munroe; Cummington, $6,000, William Cullen Bryant; Duxbury, the Wright mansion, Mrs. Geo. W. Wright; Easthampton, $20,000, Mrs. Emily G. Williston; Easton, $80,000, Oliver Ames and his widow; Fitchburg, $85,000, Rodney Wallace; Gardner, $30,000, heirs of Levi Heywood; Gloucester, $45,000, Samuel E. Sawyer; Hingham, $20,000, Albert Fearing; Hinsdale, $20,000, Rev. Kinsley Twining and others; Holden, $50,000, S. C. Gale of Minneapolis; Hubbardston, $25,000, Jonas G. Clark of Worcester; Ipswich, $30,000, Capt. Augustus Heard; Lincoln, $25,000, George G. Tarbell; Ludlow, $27,000, heirs of Charles T. Hubbard; Malden, $125,000, E. S. Converse and Mrs. Converse; Manchester, $50,000, T. Jefferson Cooledge; Methuen, $60,000, widow and son of David Nevins; Middleton, $10,000 bequest of Charles L. Flint; Monson, $35,000, memorial to her father, Horatio Lyon, by Miss Dale; Natick, Morse Institute, $27,500, by Mary Ann Morse; South Natick, $15,000, bequest of Oliver Bacon; Florence, $13,000, Alfred T. Lilly; North Reading, $20,000, Mrs. Charles L. Flint; Norton, $17,000, Mrs. Eliza B. Wheaton; Peterham, $14,000, Francis H. Lee and others; Pittsfield, $50,000, Thomas Allan; Provincetown, $3,000, Nathan Freeman; Quincy, $50,000, by heirs of Thomas Crane; Randolph, $40,000, Col. Royal Turner; Rehoboth, $10,000, Derius Goff, Salem, heirs of John Bertram, the Bertram mansion; Spencer, $30,000, Richard Sugden; Stockbridge, $6,000, J. Z. Goodrich; Sterling, $6,000, Edward Conant; Sudbury, $4,000, John Goodnow; Ware, $10,000, William Hyde; Warren, $20,000, Nathan Richardson and others; West Brookfield, $20,000 Charles Merriam; Woburn, $85,000, Charles B. Winn; Yarmouth, $7,000, the late Nathan Matthews, father of Mayor Matthews.

Mr. Tillinghast further states that Massachusetts, today, has as many public libraries as all the states put together. Sixty memorial buildings have been given, and $55,000,000 has been given outright by individuals for them. Under the new law for the establishment of libraries by the state's assistance in the small towns, it is hoped to have this popular and useful factor of education in every town in the state.

To this list should be added the gift by Mr. E. A. Goodnow of about $40,000 to the town of Princeton for a library. It is very strange that so large a gift does not appear in Mr. Tillinghast's careful summary.

Protection or Free Trade by Henry George, New York.

We have here another of the productions of this man who has done so much to unsettle formerly considered established theories. Whether the reader believes or not, he is bound to admire the writer's diction and his cogent reasoning. The book is issued in cheap form for extensive circulation.

History of the High School, Ashland, Mass., from its beginning in 1856 to 1890 with a Biographical Record of its members by Frank J. Metcalf, Class of '82, from the Lake View Press, South Framingham, Mass.

Herein, Mr. Metcalf has done the pupils of his school a valuable service. There are not many young men who are willing to devote time and money to a compilation of such data as are found in the history. Usually such labor is reserved for those grown old in years, when youthful pleasures seem still more pleasant in the light of long ago. The book is divided into two parts. Part first gives a running record of the school from its beginning with now and then a letter from a former principal. Mr. H. F. Allen is now at the head of a boy's school in Cleveland, Ohio, Mr. J. O. Norris is principal of the High School in Charlestown, Mr. A. S. Roe was till recently in the Worcester High School; Mr. A. J. George is in the Newton High School; Mr. F. E. Whittemore, principal of the High School in So. Hadley Falls; Mr. E. H. Alger, till recently was in the Grafton High School and Mr. Walter Moores is principal of the Lancaster High School.

In the second or biographical portion, is the record for five hundred and thirty-seven names. These have been arranged with great care and afford an opportunity for any one interested in the school to find quickly the facts about his friends. Of course, the patronage of such a venture is not great. It is almost entirely local; but Mr. Metcalf has done his work well, indicating talent in the way of local history that he ought to cultivate. He was, himself, graduated in the days of Mr. George, who was six years principal, and he went from the school to Boston University, whence he graduated in 1886. The book may be obtained by addressing Mr. Metcalf at the office of LIGHT.

The Practical Mechanic for March, F. S. Blanchard & Co., Worcester, comes late but it comes full. The first article is worth much more than the cost of the monthly. It is a full description of the Sewage System at Quinsigamond. This is liberally illustrated, the cuts being excellent. Massachusetts compelled our city to experiment for the rest of the state, and, thanks to competent workmen, she has experimented successfully. The Rink Exhibition is also described in part from a technical standpoint. Worcester mechanics who wish to keep up with the times must read this publication.

The Easter Youth's Companion is an excellent number. When this paper undertakes to do anything better than its regular work, the result is something phenomenal.

VOLAPÜK.

(All Volapük words used have been given in former numbers of the LIGHT.)
Sugiv Zülid.

Len, at, of, towards, on.

Binof len tab, tiköl len om, in domil len melajol, len fin säsoda.

She is at the table thinking of him in cottage on the sea-shore, towards the end of the sea-son.

Löpü, over, above.

Glestän binom löpü gledom.

The flag is over the capitol.

Sus, over.

Gil flitum sus bel.

The eagle flies over the mountain.

Dö, about.

Opükob dö spels manas.

I will speak about the hopes of men.

Ove, Ovü, da, across.

Lemacem omik binom ove süt.

His store is across the street.

Dog gonom ovü süt.

The dog runs across the street.

Ogolob da stajöp.

I will go across (through) the station.

Po, pos, after.

Vabs paizugoms po stemacin.

Coaches are usually drawn after the engine.

Okömom pos lezug egolom.

He will come after the train has gone.

Fa, dub, me, a, nebü, by.

Pened päpenom fa Söl Smith.

The letter was written by Mr. Smith.

Lenadom dub studam.

He learns by studying.

Penob me stip.

I write by (with) pencil.

A yel. Year by year.

Osiedob nebü ol. I will sit by you.

De, demü, sis, se, segun, from.

De kiöp ekömol?

From what place have you come?

Eliedom ofen demü nedut omik.

He has often suffered from his laziness.

Esevol omi sis yel 1889.

I have known him from year 1889.

Ekömofof se zif. She has come from the city.

Osuadom omis segun noelüd.

He will convict them from the testimony.

äl, kol, towards.

Golom äl Boston. He goes toward Boston.

Lezun omik binom kol ol.

His anger is towards you.

nen, without.

Okanol lilädön atosi nen vödabuk.

You will be able to read this without dictionary.

The principal interjections as roots are:

A! Oh! Eko! There! Lü! Hey!

Mö! Begone! ö! Hey! indeed!

Yu! Help! Ag! ah, alas! Fi! Fie!

Maj! March! O! Oh! Yi! Begone!

Interjections pafomoms ai se stäms (roots) dub posilab ö. This may be considered the imperative with the d and pronoun ending dropped a. s.

Bafö! Bravo! Pudö! Peace!

Godö! For God's sake! Spidö! Quick!

Snsö! Up!

Vöds nelijapükik "some" e "any" no pageboms in volapük.

Labob bodi, means I have (some) bread.

Li labol juegi, means, Have you (any) sugar?

Na, or no, added to numerals or ordinals has the same effect as the English word times,

a. s. kilna, three times.

killidna, the third time.

kilidno, for the third time.

From these, adjectives can be formed, by adding lik. Kilnalik, taking place three times.

Denuam kilsidnolik, repetition for the thirtieth time.

Koni pekonöl tumidnalik, the hundred times told story.

Julels osedomös obe lovepoloti bagaf sukik.

Johann Martin Schleyer was born in Oberlauda in Badän and he is now fifty-seven years old. He has studied more than fifty languages. He published for the first time in 1879 his volapük, which now is known and used throughout the whole world.

Püb, publish, binom vöd soalik kel no pegivom in LIGHT.

The next meeting of the Worcester Art Society will be held at the new public library building, Tuesday, March 31. There will be a loan exhibition of portraits, mainly of past and present citizens of Worcester.

Life's Beauties.

Say no more in accents deary
Life is such a toilsome road,
That the soul is worn and weary
Fainting 'neath its heavy load.

Life is full of heavenly beauties,
Full of comforts, rich and fair,
Full of sweet and holy duties,
We should love, and gladly bear.

Let us then, the future viewing
With a heart and purpose strong,
All our labors swift pursuing,
Cheer the way that seem so long.

Hand in hand we'll climb together
Up what seems the rugged ways,
Hand in hand in stormy weather,
We will watch for brighter days.

Then no longer with sad faces
And with words so false and drear,
Linger round these sweet by-places
That to us so oft appear.

Nothing comes but with its blessing,
Even sorrow brings its share,
New and holy joys are pressing
On this life already fair.

—Mrs. A. H. Hinman.

Envy Not.

As grows the fruit from the seed that is sown,
As blossoms the buds, their fragrance is known;
Yet the dew and sunshine their part must perform
To quicken the soil and the little germs warm.
So should the heart be kept all aglow,
Yielding its richness, its love to bestow,
Basking afresh in the morning's pure light,
Ever anxious for others, in their joy to unite,
Sharing in trials fresh life to impart
Why envy the bosom that shelters this heart?

As rolls the wide ocean when the surf beats high,
And the lifeboat seems sinking 'neath the billows that fly
Thus the heart that beats strong in the distance may see
For you a bright haven, a promise for me.
Then cease not to trust, cast away all thy fear
And brave the tempest's dark threatenings that near,
The clouds that are lingering will soon pass away
From the darkest night, shall dawn the bright day.
Oh! then be joyous, perform well thy part
Why envy the bosom that shelters this heart?

It's only a little way to the other shore
And the hearts that beat strongest will tide it o'er
Why stand we here waiting when beyond all is light,
There we need not the sun, there is no night.
Press onward, brave heart, and keep all aglow
In rejoicings press onward, and would'st thou know
Though faltering and faint thou still mayest see
And walk in the light, in the light that is free;
Oh then, press onward, no never depart
Nor envy the bosom that shelters this heart.

—Geo. L. Grout.

Wanted: Men.

Not systems fit and wise,
Not faith with rigid eyes,
Not wealth in mountain piles,
Not power with gracious smiles,
Not even the potent pen;

Wanted: Men.

Wanted: Deeds.

Not words of winning note,
Not thoughts from life remote,
Not fond religious airs,
Not sweetly languid prayers,
Not love of scent and creeds;

Wanted: Deeds.

Men and Deeds.

Men that can dare and do,
Not longings for the new,
Not prating of the old;
Good life and action bold—
These the occasion needs;

Men and Deeds.

—The Christian Commonwealth.

Judge: "You say he maltreated you?"
Mrs. O'Harney: "Maultreated is it, he nearly mauled me to death."

The Lost Baby.

WRITTEN FOR LIGHT BY JACK SHEPHERD.

[This is a true story and refers to the loss of a nephew of the author]

It was late in September when Franklin Oswald moved from his home near the White Mountains to the Old Peter Hale place, a small farm, twenty miles distant, on a hill skirted with deep, lonely forests.

Himself and wife with four children, Bessie, Jack, Merton and Franklin the baby, had hitherto made up their family, but within a month a cousin of Mrs. Oswald's had asked for a home with them.

She was old and quite desolate; a small sum of money which would have purchased her admission into a home of the aged she wished to put into the farm, for Mr. Oswald was also poor and needed it.

But this he would not permit. "We do not care much to have her, and can ill afford it, but she can come if she wishes to," he said. So Bessie Barry became one of their family.

Mr. Oswald had moved part of his goods and stock on Thursday; Bessie Barry and little Bessie accompanied him and remained over at the farm to prepare what they could to welcome the rest on Friday.

Mr. Oswald's daughter, though only eleven years old was a very bright little girl. After helping Bessie Barry in a number of household tasks the next morning, she ran out to take a look at the new farm.

Though clad in simple, country fashion, calico dress and home-knit stockings, the little maid with her shining, golden braids and eyes as blue as violets, her sweet, rosy face dimpling in smiles with the pleasure of new surroundings, made quite a picture amid the quiet beauty of the old place.

All around the great sloping hill stretched the deep wood, with here and there a brilliant yellow maple or scarlet tinted branch of chestnut or elm. The grass was still green and many a late buttercup lit up the hillside. Almost on the top of the hill stood the little house with barn and out buildings.

She wandered to the long lane that led to the road, stopping now and then to listen to the birds. What beautiful ones flitted past her! Scarlet tangles, golden robins and now and then a late blue-bird with its plaintive farewell note.

Bessie knew them all; she saw with the quick eye of a country child, the quail step out of its low nest under the bushes and mount a rail of the fence to begin its song of "Bob-White."

Hearing her name called she looked up the lane and saw Bessie Barry limping toward her with her ear-trumpet in her hand. She was too deaf to hear without it, and indeed, it seemed a part of herself, for when unoccupied, that black ear-trumpet was often thrust among the children while at play, or turned to catch the words of two or more talkers; not that she was prying, but she loved companionship and was otherwise compelled to live too much within herself. She wore the Quaker dress, a quaint, calico gown, narrow and untrimmed, but neat and clean with a cape and white cap.

One ankle was lame, giving her a peculiar limp. She was very small and her girlish, little figure made her quite a puzzle to the children; even her thin, white hair and faded gentle, blue eyes looking over silver-rimmed spectacles did not make her seem old enough to be grandma or auntie, so they called her Bessie Barry to distinguish her from Bessie, the eldest child.

"It is so quiet here, it seems as if we were out of the world," she said. Taking a can from under her gingham apron she began to pick the scarce berries.

It was nearly noon when they heard the wagon turn into the lane. Mr. Oswald and the two boys jumped down to lighten the load. The mother and Frankie sat in a chair in the front of the wagon.

"Bessie, your first care must be of baby," said her mother as they reached the house; "don't let him go out of your sight."

"Come with sister and husk corn for dinner," she said as she lifted the rosy, chubby urchin from the team and led him into the kitchen.

"Me's moved," said the little fellow shaking his brown curls and laughing up into her face while Bessie put him on a little stool beside her and gave her an ear of corn to husk.

"Where ooman wi one toof?" he prattled. This was the name he gave to Bessie Barry, who had one tooth left in her under jaw; that had often excited Frankie's wonder as he ran his fingers over his own even pearls. "Here she is," said Bessie Barry, whose black ear-trumpet had been thrust between them just in time to catch the child's question.

"Bread and butter me do," said Frankie. Off she limped, as she caught his words, and soon a generous slice of bread and golden butter plentifully sprinkled with sugar was in the baby's hands.

"Come and feed the pigs," said Bessie Barry; and proud to be a helper he filled his little skirt with husks and followed her.

Bessie put the corn into the pot of boiling water, filled the tea-kettle and placed a meat pie and a pot of baked beans in the oven to heat for dinner.

Then she turned to follow her little brother, but seeing him still with Bessie Barry she mounted a stair-way at the end of the kitchen as she was anxious to explore this kitchen-room or attic, for her father had told her of a large pile of magazines and books left there by the family who formerly lived at the farm.

She found them on the floor between two windows looking out toward the barn where Bessie and baby stood. "Just for a minute," she said "and I can watch baby from this window." She seated herself on the low, broad sill and reached for a magazine.

Bessie was a book girl and when interested in a story it was almost impossible to make her hear by simply speaking to her. Many a time her mother to get her attention would give her shoulder a vigorous shake; then she would look up so innocently, with her dreamy, blue eyes, she seldom met with any reproof but the gentle words, "come, my child, there is a time for all things."

Bessie soon forgot the pressing duties of the moment, her little brother, and the weary workers down stairs.

Meanwhile the others were busy. Merton and Jack had brought in two chests full of clothes and bedding, and were making beds.

Mrs. Oswald was putting china and clothing in their places. Mr. Oswald was making beds for the cattle and feeding his tired horses.

When Bessie Barry took Franklin to the barn, she stood beside him as she gave the husks to the pigs. Then she went to gather a flower she saw in the grass.

Before she returned he ran off toward the house and into the kitchen. Thinking Bessie was there to look after him, she lingered quite a time among the grasses and wild flowers. Finally, she turned toward the house to assist in getting the dinner, which was much later today than usual.

Bessie was nowhere to be seen and thinking she had strolled off with Frankie, Jack was pressed into the service as table setter and errand boy.

It was almost dusk when the family gathered around the dinner table.

"Where are Bessie and the baby?" said the tired mother.

"I hear some one up stairs," said Merton.

"Bessie come to dinner," called Jack.

Bessie came slowly down and her cheeks burned as she saw her mother looking so weary and her father pale with fatigue. They had all been working hard, while for over an hour or more she had been reading those fascinating stories, forgetting her special charge, her baby brother.

"Is baby asleep up stairs Bessie?" asked her mother.

"No," said Bessie.

"Where is he then?" said her father, turning pale and dropping his knife and fork.

"I do not know; the last I saw of him he went with Bessie Barry to feed the pigs," replied Bessie, turning first white and then red.

Bessie Barry, with her trumpet turned first one way and then another, her mild, blue eyes questioning each face, at last understood.

"Oh, Frankie left me long ago and went into the kitchen to Bessie; I stopped to get these flowers," pointing to a glass of daisies and grasses on the table. "I did not see Bessie or him while I got the dinner."

"Oh Bessie!" said her mother; "how could you leave Bessie Barry to get the dinner alone. And your little brother,—where is my baby!" and she burst into tears.

"He may be lost in these forests," said her father.

"Where were you?" he continued sternly as he pushed back his chair and rose from the table.

"I went to see the rooms upstairs and, and"—

"And," her father continued, "you stopped to look at that pile of magazines and lost yourself. Daughter, you may regret for many days your selfish act."

"There is no time to lose; it will soon be dark," said Mrs. Oswald.

"And I would as leave be lost in a lion of dens as in these woods and swamps," said Merton, who usually got words and ideas a little awry.

But no one smiled today at his mistake. They all scattered to look for baby.

The father ran through the fields hallooing at the top of his voice, Bessie hastened down the lane to the main road. Judge Jones passed by on horseback and looking into her worried face asked, "What is the matter, little woman?"

"Our baby is lost," said Bessie.

"Whose baby?" said the Judge.

"Papa's little Frankie, Frankie Oswald," said Bessie sobbing.

"I want to know," said the Judge in pitying tones; "how old is he?"

"Nearly two years, and it is all my fault," cried Bessie in great distress and not thinking what she said.

The Judge was a kind friend in trouble; he lifted her on to his horse and turned into the lane.

"We will find him," he said, in such genial tones Bessie's aching heart was comforted.

He found Mrs. Oswald faint with grief and fatigue.

The father was running about calling and straining eye and ear in the now dim twilight.

"I will give the alarm, Mr. Oswald," he said cheerily. I am riding past the neighbors on my way to town and you shall soon have help."

Mr. Oswald thanked the Judge with heartfelt gratitude. "In this out of the way place and all of us, horses and all, tired out. I don't know what I should have done without your kindness," he said.

The Judge hurried off and soon forty men with torches and lanterns were scouring the woods in the vicinity of the house. Most of the night they looked for the lost baby, but all they found was a little shoe, soaked with heavy dew of night. This they picked up at the edge of the wood.

When Frankie left Bessie Barry he ran into the kitchen door and not seeing his sister ran out through the hall door which faced the woods. A butterfly flitted past him and he pursued it. On and on its yellow wings attracted him. Sometimes it would circle before his eyes almost within his grasp, then away it would dart and he gave chase until he was far across the first field.

By creeping under the fence he could pick the berries just within his reach on the bushes skirting the wood.

The butterfly was forgotten, pushing his way on, glad of his freedom, he scrambled through the thorny bushes leaving one little shoe under them and he was soon in the dark forest. He picked the red berries and leaves, scrambling on for quite a while. Soon a squirrel ran past him and up a tree. He stopped to watch it, with hands clutching tightly his crushed berries he sat down on a fallen trunk.

[To be continued next week.]

A Poet.

"Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

Who would have dreamed that a prominent business man was capable of the following stanza? You can't find any fault with it, either in form or sentiment. It is impossible to repress the wonder as to how much genius has been buried among office papers. LIGHT sends the bill and is still invoking fortune.

You're right my friend—please send the paper quick

The bill's too small to ask for any "tick."
Let it soon follow—leaving nought to chance,
Your plant is worthy of a prompt advance.
I trust the future looks both clear and bright
And fortune follows in the wake of LIGHT. J

A Country Walk.

Nobody thinks of going into the country in March. That is, nobody who hasn't some particular business there. But, unless one happens to be of those unfortunates who, "having eyes, see not," there is much to charm there, even in this generally unbenign month.

Tempted outwards by an unusually mild day last week, my thoughts turned to a country friend whose farm-house home, in summer time a place of delight, reached by a little-travelled by-road, lies in an out-of-the-way corner, best described as being "three miles from nowhere."

Thought grew into action, and ere the day was much older, the train had left me at the lonely little station nearest the proposed destination.

Then the hindrances to this pilgrim's progress began. Bright skies and balmy air had made one forgetful as to what would probably be the condition of things underfoot. Mud? Slosh? I should think so, indeed! But what are high backed rubbers made for but just such emergencies as these; so kilting above ankles my skirts, for, alas, there lay the secret of discomfort, the journey was bravely continued. And it was full of enjoyment too. It lay along an upland road, and the situation alone gave the feeling of exaltation which ever seems inseparable from "the high places of the earth." Could those fair, fleecy-flecked skies, which bent so lovingly over all, ever frown and threaten? Away, way off, the circular horizon seemed to creep upward to meet it. The earth lay clothed in its soberest hues; but what an infinitude of shades there was in the coloring. Was it not there that the old time Quaker maiden got her inspiration of dressing in the soft greys, with snowy kerchief folded over bosom, even as the snow itself lay here and there, as a last touch upon the garb of mother earth? Trees still and leafless, but with their bare boughs and twigs forming a delicate lace-like network outlined against the blue of the sky. In the foreground, a warm rosy glow hovering over growth of sumach and blackberry bushes, for they have heard the far-off footsteps of spring and are waking to life and welcome. By the roadside, clusters of pussy willows dotting the boughs, not yet the big rollicking ones suggestive of kittenish antics, but tiny pussikins, just opening their wee eyes. A squirrel darted across the way, hastening as if the welfare of the universe depended upon his being found upon the right side of the road, instead of upon the left, then, his mighty purpose being accomplished, he sat saucily up on a stone, and surveyed me at his leisure. A twig rustled, and with a whisk of his tail whimsically suggestive of a lady's settling her draperies on rising from her seat, and he was gone.

Birds sang. What kind? I know not; but from the energy with which they made their presence known, one could but judge them next of kin to the proverbial one whose habits of early rising are so unfortunate for that poor worm, whose drowsiness of mornings is his destruction. X.

Mr. Albert Lithgow, class of '92 Harvard, is in the city, the guest of Mr. Walter Perley Hall.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

The suit brought by Joseph Arthur against Harry Lacy ("the ladies' favorite, the Adonis of the drama," to cancel the contract between them for the use of the Still Alarm, was last week practically decided in Mr. Arthur's favor.

New York theatrical people are to give a benefit to Anna Dickinson.

Mary Anderson is selling off all her old stage clothes. The sale will no doubt realize a good round sum. Miss Anderson appears to have said farewell once and only once, and for all.

Agnes Huntington closes her American tour early in May. Worcester is lucky in getting one night of it. Sol Smith Russell will produce next season a dramatization of Mark Twain's novel, "A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur." Mr. Russell will play the Yank.

The recent performances of "Master and Man" in Worcester met with a pitifully meagre patronage—so small that on the last night, when the fire in the vicinity of the theater collected a crowd of perhaps two hundred men and boys, Manager McCaull looked pensively out of the stage door and exclaimed, "Great Scott! Are there that many people in Worcester?" A suggestion from the LIGHT reporter that he get a couple of policemen to drive some of them into the theater met with the contempt it deserved.

"I have but one hope left," said William A. McConnell, manager of the Fakir company, to a crowd of sympathizing friends in New York last week, "and that is to get back to Chicago with my wife. Oh, I have met more 'Spike Hennessey's,' 'Kid' McCoy's and 'Rube' Barrowses since I have been in the city this time than would stock ten Deadwoods in their palmiest days. But the last straw came at the Sturtevant House this morning. Tell you all about it. I've been stopping there for several weeks, and after the first week I noticed that my restaurant bills were something enormous. I said nothing about it thinking I was with friends. But I made up my mind to curtail my orders. So, the third week, I lived on cracker dust and water. Made no difference in my bill, though, in fact, it jumped twenty dollars that week, and I noticed Charley MacGeachy at the table opposite ordering everything on the bill of fare from "Menu" to the job printer's name, and telling me how much 'Jed Prouty' and the 'Comforts of Home' played to the night previous. Well, this morning I happened to be in the Long Distance telephone coop, billing Boston by telephone—we agents are always at work, either on an expense account or something just as hard—when I overheard this man MacGeachy telling the cashier of the hotel to charge his room-rent, in addition to his meals to McConnell—that that Western 'Rube' would never tumble. This form of man I had taken to my breast, a man whom I'd talked to by the hour. Well, I'm done. No more friends for me. Hereafter I associate with bunco steers and aldermen.

Miss Addie Tapley of Lynn, is stopping with Miss Grace Little, 15 King street.

Easter.

It is not a little noteworthy that this great day in the religious world, in its name, is simply the retention of the heathenish Ostara, a goddess of Light or Spring. Her festival was celebrated in April and, as in other cases, Christianity seized upon established customs with hardly, in some cases, a change of name. Moreover, the day corresponds to the Jewish Passover whose appellation is sometimes retained in Pask or P'acque. Of course, it commemorates the resurrection of Christ; but the attempt to keep its observance on or about the time of the vernal equinox has had much to do with changes in our calendar. Pope Gregory in the sixteenth century appointed a commission to reform the Julian Calendar, so that Easter, which was moving backward into March, might be set forward into its old place. This change was wrought by cutting out ten days, the amount of the error as then existing. Subsequent errors were anticipated by arranging that only those centennial years divided by 400 should be leap years. Thus 1900 will not be a leap year though divisible by 4, while 2000 will. The following compilation is valuable and interesting:—

"Easter day, on which the movable feasts and holy days depend, is always the first Sunday after the full moon which happens upon or next after the twenty-first day of March; and if the full moon happen upon a Sunday, Easter day is the Sunday after. Easter will this year come at the earliest date it has since 1883. With the exception of 1894 this will be the only coming March Easter in the present century, and in 1894 Easter comes on March 25, within three days of its earliest coming. The 22d of March, 1818, was Easter day, and that was the only time it has fallen on that, its earliest date, in this century. Its latest date, April 25, was reached only once in this century, in 1886, and will not occur again. There have been only two Easters in the century falling on March 29 so far—in 1807 and 1812. For the benefit of those who would like to know upon what date Easter falls for the remaining years of this century, we give the following: 1891, March 29; 1892, April 17; 1893, April 2; 1894, March 25; 1895, April 14; 1896, April 5; 1897, April 18; 1898, April 10; 1899, April 2; 1900, April 15."

Thoughts of Easter.

Nature wakes from winter's sleep,
And her promise sure does keep,
Sweeter, purer life is born,
When we greet our Easter morn.

Buds and blossoms, birds and flowers,
Spring to greet fair April's showers,
Peace and joy our hearts do sway
With the hope of Easter day.

Let the bells in triumph ring,
While the birds sweet anthems sing,
Tender thoughts of Christ abide,
In our hearts at Easter tide.

—Cornelia Wesson Boyden.

Green Street as it Was.

Every thing is so modern, so new and so fresh. Is it not restful now and then, to meet with places and people, that have lost somewhat of this first polish. A new coat has almost a lingering odor of the tailor's press board; the new boot, of the blacking and waxed ends; the new house, of the mortar, the lumber, the glazier's paints and oils. There is the odorous impress of the workman in them all. New things please for the time being; but it is the old shoes and the old form, that yield comfort. We have become fairly adjusted to them; they are easier than the glove, that will not let the fingers yield to their natural state; so is the worn stepping stone at the door more inviting than the hard cold polish of the modern burnished floor.

Is it a presentiment, that we are not altogether as young as we once were? that we cherish such a lingering love, for that which is not strictly new. The truth is, have we not reached the top of the hill, that the looking backward has a greater charm, the farther back we can extend our view. Ever since we were boys and girls, we have been trying to get at the tops of the high hills. Johnny, for want of a better, mounted the ash heap this morning, and it being newly cemented with ice, he had a glorious toboggan slide. This desire to get at the top of the hill seems natural. It is just this vantage ground, we now hold. Almost like Rip Van Winkle, we rub our eyes and wonder; have we been sleeping? for how came we here? Looking backward fifty years, how our little native town has changed. Now nearly 90,000 souls, where were then, only 10,000. I go to the house where I was born. Lifted up skyward so as to give place for larger, more modern arrangements below. I still see the room, where first I looked out upon life. I tell the people my name, but they look strange at me, as if my relationship to the old place was wholly an imaginary one. Of the old apple trees, not one remain; the high fence, that kept out the small boys, that too is gone. I look for the old pond; the strangers stare at me, and deny all knowledge of such a watery way. "Absurd"! they seem to say, and straightway they whisper, as if they could not understand. I make the drawing to mark where our garden extended to the water's edge; wonderful with its green gage plums and luscious pink peaches. I mark where that great elm tree stood; its roots, partly in and out of the water, that served us as a swing; the most daring of us, hanging at the ends of its long sweeping branches, swinging out and in over its clear surface. And there, on the farther side of the pond, I mark, by an imaginary outline, the clump of alder bushes, where John and Dan, used to cut and manufacture whistles. Just at this very tempting place, where John unfortunately went under the ice. Yes, I could show them just where they laid the ladder over the broken surface and dragged him out once and twice each time, rolling and blanketing the lad, till he was restored enough to certify that he did not care for the proffered glass of water, assuring them in broken words that he, "had already had enough." The Red Mill, I picture out on my imaginary water line and the flume, that had such a mysterious fascination for us children; awful too; for the monster, that somewhere, in that dreadful depth, seemed waiting to swallow up whatever appeared on the surface. Past the bridge, up the hill, I point out the fields, where Dan used to drive the cow to pasture. There at the end of the lane, (Sheep's Lane, they called it) was the school house; a diminutive, one roomed building, always too cold in winter, and as exceedingly warm in summer. 'Twas here that we carried our patchwork; for sewing was one of the rudimentary parts of our education quite as important, as the instruction we had in spelling and ciphering. Slowly we learned in those days, and with many a difficulty. But how could strangers understand these outlines. The lane, the cow path, old red mill, the pond, and the alder bushes; "Ah yes" they say "we do remember, so it was told to us when we were stiling up the old house." Yes, times have changed. Even the old pond was needed, for avenues, and choice building spots, for city residences. So as we pass down the street, we see at once two pictures, both the new and the old. The old places are not forgotten. Oh, no; only as an old fashioned gown, they are laid away, in memory's bureau drawer. 'Tis delightful to take them out; to shake out the old crease-worn gown. It is small and scant, beside the new, tailor made robe, but charmingly pretty for all that. M. W. W.

"For the First Time in the Country's History a Speaker Is Refused the Thanks of the Opposition."

That is one of the N. Y. World's headlines over its distorted account of the last hours of the late House. Yet some one in the N. Y. World office ought to have known, from our Washington special dispatches yesterday, that Mr. McKinley had prepared a record of twelve different instances in which partisan opposition was made to giving a vote of thanks to the Speaker, beginning with the Fifth Congress. Among the Speakers who were treated by their political foes in the House exactly as Mr. Reed was, were Henry Clay, James K. Polk, Robert C. Winthrop, Nathaniel P. Banks, James L. Orr, of South Carolina, and other Speakers equally prominent in their day and generation.

Will the N. Y. World acknowledge either its ignorance or its untruthfulness?—N. Y. Press.

Two Nights in One.

'Tis night so still, so calm, so bright,
Each fleecy cloud has a crown of light,
Reflected from the moon.
Ah! here the moments swiftly fly
A small, black cloud o'er the sky
Spreads, ever floating on.

My fancied lake has stolen away
And melted too, like the silvery spray,
Is my mystic mount of the heavens.
Blackness surrounds us on every side
Which gleams of lightning cannot hide
But show the sight more strange.

The rainclouds are full and dropping their lashes
They seem to sob as they catch the flashes
Each moment here and there.
When a zigzag flash just beyond the wood,
Seemed a golden sash and as trembling I stood
It burst with a deafening crash.

Night once again and the heavens are blue,
And I see that the stars are twinkling too,
To mock the ruin passed.
And here in the east is the moon fair sailing,
While in the west we hear the wailing
Of the storm coming on.

Two nights in one, a moonlight night,
Gladdens the east with a tranquil light,
But in the west a blackened night
Disturbed by rain and thunder's might;
'Tis all wonder from sea to sea,
God's universe all it seems to me. D.

Why are colts like rich men's sons? Because they won't work until they are broke.

Lovers of Good Tea and Coffee

Should buy their goods where they can depend on always getting a pure, fresh article, of the best quality. Our many patrons will testify that this is true of the

*New England Tea Co.,***

273 MAIN STREET.

Give us a trial and be convinced.

D. A. HOWE.

MRS. MORGAN'S

Private School and Kindergarten,

Y. M. C. A. Building, 10 Elm Street.

SPRING TERM OPENS APRIL 6, 1891.

W. H. TWICHELL,

Gold, Silver and Nickel Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechaute St., Worcester, Mass.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,

BOOK * BINDING

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES

at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,

W. L. BROWN, Manager.

L. J. ZAHONYI,

Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Fashion.

Bordered wash goods seem to have lost none of their prestige. The borders, however, as a rule are not very showy, being perhaps in a deeper tone of the same color.

Some of the new silks have apparent festoons of pale green or pink gauze, intermingling with black lace, woven in and around the flowers. Pale pink and blue are on a mother-of-pearl ground, heliotrope and pink, pink and and violet, and both on daintiest gray, are among the lovely things.

The narrow skirts gored so as to fall gracefully are taking the place of the full skirt only in the heavier materials, the thinner, lighter fabrics are all made in the voluminous fashion of five breadths, as little gored as possible, and with a wide hem as a finish. Ruffles, so much the fashion, are being worn on almost every sort of gown, but more particularly on those fabrics which are so gored as to make a measurably narrow skirt. The fashionable length has three inches on the ground for house gowns, and from one to two inches for street gowns. The back breadth is the only one which is allowed to touch the ground, and the curve must be very well accentuated to be graceful. On cotton gowns there is no fitness in having a train, and none should be allowed; the fashion plates to the contrary notwithstanding.

All sorts of soft and light laces are to be used the coming season on thin fabrics, and in large and generous quantity, piece upon piece being necessary to form the fashionable jabots, which make the garniture of new models. These begin high on the shoulder and reach often to the foot of the skirt. Insertions are often used for trimming wash fabrics and silks also, and a very pretty fashion is it, and one which is easy to launder. Valenciennes lace is the favorite.

For ladies' cloth or camel's-hair dresses the habit bodice is in good style. The front is lapped high on the left side, and is then sloped to a round point at the waist, and buttoned its entire length by small flat lasting buttons. The square habit back has no pleats, and the bottom of the waist is bound and stitched. Three small lasting buttons define the waist in the middle seams.

Draperies, frills, and flounces have disappeared from gowns only to reappear on furniture. Beds are canopied, especially the brass or white-and-gold iron ones. Dressers and toilet tables are the only objects wearing "overskirts" at present, while even the washstands are often draped with valances hanging to the floor. Cabinets have their curtains and festoons of silk, while "drapes" "flings" and "throws"—euphoniously so named—are showered on unoffending chairs until one seeks something undecorated as a relief to the eyes. Each of these ideas is good in some places, and used somewhat sparingly in a house, but it is the overdoing of ornament that spoils effects, and that should be guarded against. Take, for instance, a washstand which is draped as I have said; it should be, in the first place, with a figured material, one which will not show spots of water, for it is certain to be splashed more or less at every using. It should also be with something that will wash, for it will surely need it in constant use. One such washstand might be very pretty in a house where it would be specially suited to a room, but as a general thing draperies seem out of place about a washing apparatus.—Washington Star.

ALWAYS ON HAND!

VENISON,
TURKEYS,
GEESE,

WILD GAME,
CHICKENS,
DUCKS,

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass

EDWARD B. CLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

THE CRITERION

Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

Worcester Dress

Cutting School,
45 Pleasant St.,

For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circular.

Mrs. L. F. Walch.

E. W. COFFIN,

Store Fixtures

310 Main Street, Worcester.

Name this Paper.

LE * JOLLY * FRENCH * DYEING AND * CLEANSING * HOUSE.

First-Class Work at Short Notice.

Reference for Laces and Lace Curtains, Gross & Straus.

Cut out this coupon from LIGHT, and bring it with you and get 10 per cent discount from regular prices.

Coupon

Coupon

C. T. MELVIN, PROPRIETOR, WALNUT ST

The superiority of

*ROSE CREAM LOTION***

lies in the fact that it contains no Oils or Greasy Substances, no Chemical or Mineral Poisons, and will not injure the most delicate skin. Can be applied at any time; quickly absorbed. Ladies troubled with catchy fingers, working on silk and satin, will find it an excellent remedy. It will not leave the hands sticky.

For Gentlemen's use after shaving it is without an equal.

Try it. Get a

SAMPLE BOTTLE FREE.

Large bottles, 25c. Found in all first class Drug stores. Prepared by

PERKINS & COMPANY, Sole Proprietors,
Worcester, Mass. BUSH & CO., Wholesale Agents.

C. G. MARCY, BALL ORDERS, PROGRAMMES AND WEDDING INVITATIONS A SPECIALTY. 398 MAIN ST., cor. Pearl. ARTISTIC PRINTING.

STARKIE'S DYE HOUSE,

254 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Ladies and Gents' Garments

Dyed and Cleansed

in a Superior Manner.

Tailoring Establishment.

Custom-Made goods at almost Ready-made Rates.

254 MAIN STREET.

Underwood PHOTOGRAPHER
*****
Children's Portraits
A Specialty
*****
326 Main, op. Mechanics Hall

F. S. BLANCHARD & CO.,

* PRINTERS. ***

Book, Newspaper, Catalogue, Church, Society, Wedding and Commercial Printing of every kind executed in the best modern style.

No orders too large; none too small.

154 FRONT ST.

Horace Kendall,

DEALER IN

Furniture, Ranges, Carpets

AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Goods sold on instalments if desired. Prices as low as any house in New England.

No. 319 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Mechanics Hall Building.

Good to Eat.

Now, if you want a good bit of steak, have a clear hot fire, set your clean, empty pan on a spot, cover it up, then pound your steak, and when your pan is very hot lay in your steak and cover quickly. As soon as it has crisped enough to let go its hold on the pan, turn over and cover quickly. Turn again as at first, and continue to do so about every two minutes until you have turned it six or eight times. Have a hot, buttered dish ready for it and lay it in; add a sprinkling of pepper, salt and sugar and cover tightly. Now if you wish a gravy, put a bit of butter in your pan. When hot put in a pinch of flour, add a small teacupful of boiling water, let it boil a few minutes, then put in a gravy bowl, instead of putting it over your beef to draw out the juice. Now try this plan just once, and you will see you women know nothing about how to cook a good steak. —An Old Bachelor.

Fruit Cookies.

Two cups sugar, one-half cup lard, one egg, one cup thick sour milk, one teaspoon saleratus, one cup finely-chopped raisins, one heaping teaspoonful mixed spices; flour to roll.

Mixed Spices.

One teaspoonful each cloves and allspice, two teaspoonfuls each mace and nutmeg, sixteen teaspoonfuls cinnamon. (A box of the above handy saves time)

Chocolate Carame's.

One cup coffee A sugar, one heaping table-spoonful grated chocolate, five table-spoonfuls milk. Boil until it will harden in cold water, then stir in two-thirds teaspoonful of vanilla, and pour into buttered tins to cool.

R. F. WILLIAMS.

Stafford Springs, Conn.

Fried Oatmeal.

Put cooked meal in a bowl or tin, wet with cold water. In the morning cut in slices and fry on a griddle. Eat with butter and sugar, or syrup.

When Father Carves the Duck

We all look on with anxious eyes,
When father carves the duck,
And mother almost always sighs,
When father carves the duck:
Then all of us prepare to rise,
And hold our bibs before our eyes,
And be prepared for some surprise,
When father carves the duck.

He braces up and grabs a fork,
When'er he carves a duck,
And won't allow a soul to talk
Until he's carved the duck:
The fork is jabbed into the sides,
Across the breast the knife he slides,
While every careful person hides
From flying chips of duck.

The platter's always sure to slip
When father carves a duck,
And how it makes the dishes skip!
Potatoes fly amuck!
The squash and cabbage leap in space,
We get some gravy in our face,
And father mutters Hindoo grace
When'er he carves a duck.

We then have learned to walk around
The dining-room and pluck
From off the window-sills and walls
Our share of father's duck.
While father growls and blows and jaws,
And swears the knife was full of flaws,
And mother jeers at him because
He couldn't carve a duck.

Exchange.

ARRIVED

AND

NOW ON EXHIBITION,

THE

Worcester ***

* Souvenir,

THE BANCROFT

Medallion * and * Birthplace,

Artistically executed in bas-relief
on Sterling Silver

Tea and Orange Spoons.

An artistic Novelty, and both a LOCAL and NATIONAL SOUVENIR of the eminent historian, the late Hon. George Bancroft.

— AT —

Burbank Jewelry Store,

Cor. Main and Exchange Streets.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H. Howland, D. D. S.
11 Pleasant St.,

Dentists. Worcester, Mass

Residence, 61 West Street.

The Readers of Light
I most cordially invite
To call at my

Model Drug Store

When in want of anything
They would expect to find
In a metropolitan establishment of its kind.

Respectfully,

Geo. E. Fairbanks, Druggist,

10 FRONT STREET.

J. W. GREENE,
PLUMBER.

Dealer in Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces.
Steam and Gas Fitting. Jobbing in all its branches promptly attended to. Telephone
Connection. 51 Main Street, Cumming's block.

Worcester Coal Company,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

COAL. COAL.

General office, 18 Pearl St., Y. M. C. A.
Building; Yards, 23 Manchester St. and 319
Southbridge St.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

Horticultural Hall was crowded last week Friday evening when "The Confederate Spy" was produced, under the auspices of Industry Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, by members of classes 14 and 5 of the First Universalist Sunday School. The cast consisted of George E. Burr, Walter B. Cummings, Edward B. Fish, William J. Clarke, Alfred M. Van Dusen, Charles H. Rowe, Fred B. Conklin, J. Herbert Adams, Mellie W. Brigham, Fred W. Hoppin, Miss Emma G. Mills, Miss Myrtle R. Northup, Miss Lottie M. Hubbard. Union troops were personated by Co. A, Sons of Veterans, under the command of Capt. J. J. Torpey. Martel's orchestra furnished music between the acts. The whole was under the management of George Burr. An excellent performance was given. Dancing followed the entertainment.

Mr. Ben T. Hammond will give his forty-fifth and forty-sixth pupil recitals next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings at his studio, 452 Main Street. The pupils who will take part Tuesday evening are Miss Alice M. Sharpe of Putnam, Conn., and Miss Natalie Trainque of Westboro, sopranos; Miss Mary A. Dee of Westboro and Miss Bertha L. Fletcher of West Boylston, contraltos; Lucius T. Gould and C. D. Sharpe, both of Putnam, Conn., baritones. Those who will take part Thursday evening are Miss Eva Martin of this city, Miss Anna Louise Dunn of Grafton and Miss Aileen Kennedy of this city, sopranos; Miss Lillian W. Rusack of Webster, contralto; John W. Stuart, tenor; Harry C. Robinson, baritone. The program, both evenings, will consist of solos, duets and quartets. Other recitals will follow later in April.

"Yon Yonson," with Gus Heez or the bright particular star, drew a good house last evening at the new Worcester Theater and was well received. It has many laughable situation and ingenious devices to interest the audience. It will be presented this afternoon and evening for the last time.

"Jim the Penman," a drama which seems to have a good hold on popular favor, will be presented Tuesday evening, March 31st, at the Worcester theater by A. M. Palmer's Dramatic Company. The play is a good one and has been seen here several times.

"The Stowaway," direct from New York will hold the board at the new Worcester theater April 1st and 2nd. There will be a matinee Thursday afternoon. Edna Hall, a young actress of promise, Mark Lynch as the villain, and Harry Booker, the comedian, make the play interesting from an outside view. The realistic mechanical effect are sensational in a high degree.

"The Hustler," is booked for Friday and Saturday, April 3rd and 4th. A good company of comedians and singers and dancers, make this bright comedy one of the most laughable and enjoyable now before the public.

The Daughters of Veterans, Clara Barton Tent, No. 3, are preparing a play to be given in Horticultural Hall, April 23d. The play is "Anita's Trials" and it is interesting that practically all the parts are taken by ladies. This tent, mustered October 7th, has a membership of eighty-two. The charter number was seventy-three. The meetings are weekly in Sons of Veterans' Hall.

BOSTON * STORE

Saturday, March 28, 1891.

SPECIAL EASTER GLOVE SALE

encompassing the most extensive opening of new Spring and Easter Gloves ever attempted in this city, and prices clear under the market.

7-Hook Foster Kid Gloves which have never been retailed in Worcester by us, or by anybody, for less than $1.75. Price a few days, $1.39.

The celebrated 5-button Centemeri Colored Kid Gloves for which we are the sole agents will be $1.40, and blacks $1.80 for the next ten days.

The 10-button Mousquetaire Centemeri Gloves will be sold at $1.80, which is less than regular price by a considerable margin. Blacks $2.10.

Exquisite opal shade Biarritz gloves; opal is the newest shade; fine, neat, black silk stitching. Eight button length. Price 95c—for these few days only.

A dainty luxurious novelty in gloves that is new—to Worcester, at least, is the new Tyrol Gloves. They are made of selected soft and perfect pure white chamois skins. Paris has set a great pace for them. The rage will be surely continued here, and Paris's taste will be most loftily commended by all ladies of culture who see these Tyrols. Price to introduce them, 95c. In other cities we hear of $1.25 as the price, very commonly.

Ladies! Whoever saw a lady's glove without seams on the back of the glove anywhere, not even on the back of the fingers? We may safely jump at the conclusion that no lady in Worcester has ever worn such a glove. This week and next all may have them at $1.95 a pair; regular price will be later $2.50. In fine Suede kid.

Another French maker has made a glove without side seams. This triumph of skill also ensures a perfect fit. The glove fits very close about the wrist; no open space being visible. Although no other store in Worcester has these Triumph Gloves, we shall sell them for a short while at $1.45.

Our own special Paris-made Mousquetaire Gloves, which everybody so well knows. Price $1.75. Their popularity is due largely to their perfectly wonderful colorings. We know that no other glove made comes to you in such delicate, beautiful and uncommon shades. No glove imported surpasses these in fit, quality, colorings and durability.

No doubt you will be pleased to know that the dollar gloves we have sold during the Great Sale at 79c have been reinforced in quantity, and the price will still be 79c. In 5-hook Foster lacing and 4 and 5 button.

Adler's standard and best men's kid glove; Universal dry goods store price $1.50, and never sold less until now. We mark these gloves of the highest reputed excellence $1.29 for a brief while.

Glove counters extend 20 feet extra to accommodate the large influx of buyers which we have every reason to believe will at once respond to these unprecedented and matchless bargains in Easter and Spring handwear.

Centre aisle.

Our Spring Jackets, Reefers, Blazers, Wraps and Suits are all here in fullest array. At no time this spring shall we be more ready for your unlimited coming than we now are.

Altho' the Great Sale hindered us slightly last week in bringing forward the rare novelties for show, we have by several days of extraordinary effort put an entire new face on this great Dept. The appearance of things today will reflect to your unbounded pleasure every new and handsome novelty in a jacket, blazer, reefer, wrap, or suit, that the most Talented and Gifted Designers and Modistes have created for glorious spring and summer.

Second floor.

Our GRAND OPENING of Millinery has been pushed ahead a few days by this Rattling Big Sale Still On. But the new goods are all here and ready; the new shapes and patterns are displayed; and orders are being filled with despatch and satisfaction eminently characteristic of our cheery, sunny, rich treasured show-rooms.

Second floor.

DENHOLM &amp; McKAY.

RINK!!

The last week of the Exhibition is at hand.

During the coming week additional attractions will be offered.

McKINLEY

will not be able to speak, but the Exposition is a possibility through the labors of him and those like him.

Every evening, there is music of the highest character. The eye and the ear are thus gratified at once.

On Fast Day

Excursions trains will be run on the Big Four Roads viz B. & A., N. E., Fitchburg and P. & W.

This will afford a grand opportunity for people outside of Worcester to come in. Thousands will avail themselves of the chance.

Worcester people must remember that the Exhibition closes April 4 and not put off the visit too long. Go at once.

Says one competent observer, "I spent the whole forenoon, looking with all my eyes and then came away, feeling that I had not done the show justice."

Dont fail to see the tools made by H. H. Bigelow in his boyhood and the model of his famous heeling machine in motion.

Let no child fail to see this important study.

General Admission, 25c.

Six Tickets for $1.

Children, 15c.

Ten for $1.

Personal.

Howard E. Sumner, son of E. A., is a freshman in Brown University.

Geraldine and Bertha Longley returned from Wellesley, Monday, for a brief stay.

Mr. Alvah Metcalf, of Ashland, came up Monday to hear McKinley speak. He was the guest of his son-in-law, Alfred S. Roe.

Henry S. Pratt is enjoying a vacation in the west.

Hon. T. C. Bates, also, is off for El Dorado, i. e. California.

The wife of Congressman Charles A. Russell of Dayville, Conn., has been visiting friends in this city.

Alfred S. Roe will visit Fulton, N. Y., next week, to give his lecture on the "Passion Play."

John H. Sullivan, W. H. S. '87, now in Harvard Medical School is assistant of Dr. Galvin who has charge of accidents on the Old Colony railroad.

Fred Doon, another former High School boy, subsequently of the Polytechnic is in the Edison Electric Company's employ, Boston.

Dr. C. L. Nichols reports his patient, Mrs. W. A. Denholm as slowly improving.

Some beautiful etchings of Mrs. Dr. Getchell may be seen in the window of the Davis Art Co., Pearl street.

The Fitchburg Daily Sentinel, 20 and 21 inst, has the paper complete read by Principal Charles S. Chapin, before the Fitchburg Teachers Association. Subject, "Discipline," well handled.

Mrs. D. F. Estabrook leaves in LIGHT'S office two Colorado papers and one from the city of Mexico, all however in English. This same English will, some day, conquer the world. The Two Republics has little of the Mexican about it save the picture of a vaquero riding a bull.

Charles W. Burbank is printing a Swedish pamphlet, edited by the Rev. Victor Witting. The title is "Stilla Stunder." There is no doubt that it is valuable but LIGHT stops short of the translation. Mr. Burbank's son, Willie has the affair in charge.

Mr. Sumner Kinsley, of the Polytechnic, calls to leave the latest W. P. I. and the last to be under his management. It is every way creditable. The boys have pleased their readers and put a little money in their purses. To this number of the W. P. I., Mr. V. E. Edwards '83, with Mr. Charles H. Morgan, one of the trustees, contributes a valuable summary of courses in the Institute. By lines, the general drift of the classes is clearly shown.

Miss Luella G. Henderson of Boston has been visiting friends in this city.

Major F. G. Stiles read before the Reform Club Sunday night in a very impressive manner, a speech of Abraham Lincoln given in 1842 during the height of the Washingtonian movement.

Rev. I. J. Lansing reported on the sick list. Even the strongest have to yield at times.

The Rev. Mr. Garver of the First Unitarian Church is treating his people to talks on the "Passion Play."

A number of young men of this city have formed themselves into an organization called the Worcester Fire Reporters. Their object is to acquire skill in short-hand and reporting. The city is divided into districts, and each member reports the fires in the district assigned him. The captain attends all fires both night and day. The first assistant goes to all those in the north part of the city and the second assistant, those in the south. The reports are read at the regular meetings, the first Thursday of each month, and are copied on a permanent record by the clerk. Meetings are also held at which short-hand is studied under the guidance of a special teacher. The officers are H. W. Collins, captain; George W. Cole, first assistant; Edward S. Parker, second assistant; Phillip B. Dean, clerk. The members wish it stated that they try to trouble the fire department as little as possible in getting their reports.

Walter D. Berry, who is attending the School for Christian Workers at Springfield, where he is studying to become a gymnaisum instructor, is at home this week, enjoying a short vacation.

"Mary," said the stern parent, "what does young Smith do?"

Mary: "He is a Statesman."

Stern Parent: "Umph, what made him put his arm around you when you were sitting on the sofa?"

Mary (blushing): "He was illustrating the principle of Protection."

Z. F. Little & Co.

New Spring Garments.

Our full line of

Ladies', Misses' and Children's Garments

is now ready. We can Please you in Quality, Style and Price if you will give us a call.

KID * GLOVES.

A brand new stock for Easter.

OUR BAIRITZ REAL KID GLOVES AT $1
A PAIR.

You will like. We warrant them. Please try a pair.

Z. F. Little & Co.,

234 and 238 MAIN ST.

WHITNEY'S on TEMPLE PLACE,

March * Sale * of * Embroidery * Goods.

—
 Sorrento and Gobelin
 Art Squares.
 —

—
 Silk and Linen
 Embroidery
 Materials.
 —

SEWING SILKS AT

❧ WHITNEY'S ❧

ON TEMPLE PLACE, BOSTON.

The Week.

CITY.

Mar. 20—President Dwight of Yale addresses the pupils and friends of Worcester Academy.

The Electric Street Railway Motor at last appears in the streets. Will run regularly next week.

Walter F. Brooks becomes joint lessee of the Worcester Theater with James F. Rock. Swedish fair progressing favorably.

21—Measles said to be prevalent in the city.

22—Chaplain Beaudry's Front Street Mission organized into a True Catholic Church. The chaplain goes to Chicago.

23—The greatest political gathering in many years to hear Major McKinley at Mechanics Hall. Tariff issue.

George E. Frisbie drops dead at the Ames Plough works. 66 years.

28—Mrs. Charles Ballard dies suddenly. 68 years.

Meeting of Amherst Alumni at Bay State House. Judge Forbes presides. President Gates a guest.

25—Druggist Collins returns to Worcester to settle up his affairs.

Hearing before Mayor and Aldermen on license question.

26—Very enjoyable banquet and reunion of the Horticultural Society. The first in many years.

Annual reunion of the Mechanics' Association. As pleasurable as ever.

Mrs. E. W. Kinnicut dies. 74 years.

COUNTY.

19—Mr. and Mrs. Julius W. Biegelow of Webster celebrate silver wedding.
Spencer Sons of Veterans have annual dance.

20—Uxbridge High School pupils reunite.

James Slowey of Blackstone takes Paris Green and dies.

Milford looking out for an improved water supply.

21—Charles O. Parker of Westboro dies in Stamford, Conn. 49 years.

Station at Sterling Junction robbed.

22—Rev. Wm. A. Houghton dies in Berlin. 78 years. A graduate of Yale.

23—Capt. John G. Mudge of Petersham died in Boston Sunday night. A prominent veteran of the G. A. R.

Southboro votes No.

24—Attempt at Post Office robbery in Upton.

25—Sterling organizes a Village Improvement Society.

26—The No License contest is waging with energy in Spencer.

COMMONWEALTH.

20—Legislative bill reported in favor of granting municipal suffrage to women. What will the Legislature do with it?

Mayor Matthews seems to be stirring things up in Boston.

Rev. Frederick Upham the oldest Methodist minister in America dies in Fairhaven. 92 years.

21—Harvard indoor athletics.

22—Building Trades still rampant over instruction in Concord. Would they advise capital punishment?

23—The governor reports a chronic state of insubordination at the state prison.

Lawrence Barrett's remains arrive in Boston.

24—Major McKinley, the guest of Police Com. Osborne in Boston.

President Eliot lectures in Sever Hall on Harvard and the West.

At last certain Boston people are receiving their parts of French Spoilation claims. Many too old to enjoy good fortune long.

Lawrence Barrett buried at Cohasset.

25—Governor nominates John Hopkins of Millbury to be a judge of the Superior Court. We are proud.

Governor's Council does not sanction the removal of Police Commissioner Osborne.

Legislature refuses to make Election a legal holiday.

26—Evangelist Moody conducting services at Union Church, Boston.

NATION.

20—Lawrence Barrett, the distinguished actor, dies in New York, aged 53 years.

Joseph Perine of Chicago kidnapped. Either a big practical joke or Sicily has come to our shores.

21—Joseph E. Johnston dies in Washington. 84 years. The last of the great Confederates. Sherman and Johnston, once foes, now friends forever.

Americans trying to develop a foreign cattle market.

Police of New York have La Grippe.

22—U. S. Treasury Department decides that a Revenue Tax is not a license.

"Sockless Jerry Simpson is to "Sock" it to the East. Let him come.

23—It is believed in Washington that Senator Edmunds will resign.

Secretary Foster takes charge of the Treasury Department.

Colored men ask for recognition in World's Fair Commission. Quite right.

First arrival of molasses in New York from Havana in bulk, 500,000 gallons.

Ex-Governor Robinson dies in Elmira, N. Y. 81 years.

24—Maine's House votes to adopt the Australian Ballot System.

Secretary Blaine said to regret his New Orleans telegram.

Secretary Foster refuses to accept the silver brick of Merrick & Morse for free coinage.

General Joe Johnston buried from St. John's Church, Washington.

25—Farmers' Alliance working to control next Mississippi Legislature.

Helen P. Clark, an Indian lady, appointed a United States agent in Montana.

26—Tin plate industry in St. Louis progressing.

Dr. Howard Crosby in a very critical condition.

WORLD.

20—It really looks as though England might render liquor selling a little less respectable. The world moves.

21—Oxford beats Cambridge on the Thames. Irish politics in a stew.

English artists will exhibit in Berlin.

Italian Canadians say they will invade the United States, etc., if proper reparation is not made over New Orleans trouble. Indeed!

22—Memorial Church for Kaiser William begun in Berlin.

Disastrous strike in Queensland, Australia.

23—King Humbert will not allow Prince Victor to issue a manifesto from Italy.

Emperor William will publish a life of his grandfather.

24—Paris people claim that the Talleyrand Memoirs have been tampered with.

Mr. Parnell will have to contest Chiltern hundreds.

Portugese students sentenced for revolt. The rebellion wasn't big enough. Had it been larger, the rebels could have dictated their own terms.

25—Great Britain notifies Secretary Blaine that she will take part in the World's fair.

Archbishop Walsh notifies the Pope of the Scism in the Irish party.

26—London does not like the messenger boy system. No more does America, in the marble season.

Prince Bismark a possibility in German politics.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

Mrs. George M. Woodford assisted by Mrs. Charles A. Merrill, Mrs. J. A. Rice, Mrs. John H. Howell, Mrs. J. H. Mitchell, Mr. John H. Howell and Mr. T. A. Callahan will repeat in the Church of the Unity and for the benefit of the Ladies' Charitable Society of the church, the very interesting presentation of Shakespeare's Tempest given some weeks since in Colonial Hall. Mr. F. A. Leland very kindly loans a Chickering piano for the occasion and will have tickets for sale in his store. The pianists will be Mrs. Carrie King Hunt and Mr. Arthur Bassett. Next Tuesday evening.

The Old South Church is doing the public a great service in bringing hither Mr. A. L. Bachellor of Lowell to give his exhibition of historic English characters. It is, in no sense, a reproduction of Mrs. Jarley's wax figures; but the parties are alive and they move, clad in costumes of the represented period before the eyes of the beholder. Worcester is full of people weh love English History. Here is a chance to see how famous men and women looked. The lecturer gave about six months close study to his subject, were going before the public with it. The Lowell papers treated the presentation there in the most enthusiastic manner. The Old South ought to have a house full to see, hear and learn. See the advertisement as to time and terms.

The Dixie Minstrels will be here April 9 and 10. The performance promises to be even better than before. This year it is given for the benefit of the Baldwinville Hospital Cottages and the Worcester Light Infantry. The opening sale of tickets will be held April 3 at the Mechanics Hall box office. Advance checks may be obtained from the Board of Managers of the Cottages or from members of the Light Infantry. These must be exchanged for their value in tickets. As usual there will be a street parade at noon on each day. The boys promise that this year they will play some other tune than "Where did you get that hat?" Further announcements will be made in next week's paper.

FURNITURE AND CARPETS,

355 Main Street, Worcester.

SPECIAL.

30 pieces 5-Frame Body Brussels, Borders to match, $1.10 per yd, worth $1.35.

20 pieces Royal Wiltons, Borders to match, $1.35 per yd, worth $1.75.

20 pieces Tapestry Brussels, 69c. per yd, worth 90 cents.

25 pieces C. C. Extra Superfine Carpets, 55c. per yd, worth 65c.

Straw Mattings, 25c. per yd, extra values.

PINKHAM & WILLIS,

355 Main Street.

School and College.

High School.

The Senior Class held a meeting Monday noon and made their decision in regard to their bust presentation. They voted to present the bust of Charles Dickens and chose H. H. Chamberlin as orator at the presentation which will come off May 22. They chose as class photographer F. H. Rice and A. E. Davis who have done well by the school in the past.

A new announcement has been made to the school to the effect that all members wishing to enter an Interscholastic Tennis Tournament may hand their names to H. A. Billings, secretary of the Athletic Association. The tournament is under the auspices of the Harvard Lawn Tennis Association and is open to all members of college preparatory schools. The event takes place at the College Courts in Cambridge on May 2. A championship cup is to be awarded to the school winning the greatest number of matches, and a championship prize to the winner of the contest. There is also a Horace Partridge Racket for the runner, up in the finals. If there be any slumbering Slocums and Campbell's in the High School, it is time for them to rouse and take up the racket in its defence.

Events of interest will soon crowd closely upon the school. There is the senior presentation exercise on May 22, the Springfield day the following day, the boat race the day before Memorial day and the Interscholastic Athletic Association field day early in June.

Tuesday noon the Junior class held a meeting and appointed several committees for the appointment of a boat-crew, class-colors, cheers, etc.

Friday evening, the 22, Mr. Abbott addressed the Sumner Club on "Cæsar," and Mr. Hodges on some historic voyages.

At the Aletheia, Miss Bridgman gave a talk on "Switzerland" and during the remainder of the meeting the society discussed the question: Resolved that the free coinage of silver would be beneficial to the United States.

On the same date, the Enclæia debated the question, Resolved that the annexation of Canada to the United States would be beneficial to the former.

C. A. Gray, manager of the Base Ball Club will entertain all the members of the nine, and all the directors and officers of the A. A. at Rebboli's Saturday evening where plans for the two organizations will be discussed.

I cordially tender you the invitation to attend

THE PRIVATE EXHIBITION of a new and wonderful invention,
THE SELF-PLAYING ORGAN, which will be shown from 9 to 5 o'clock daily for a few days, at my warerooms in Clark's Building, 492 Main street, one flight up.

No charge for admission or to play upon the interesting instrument.

The entertainment will be both pleasing and instructive.

Respectfully,
C. E. STEERE.

Ivers & Pond, S. G. Chickering, Newby & Evans and Prescott Pianos. Also Crown Organs. Sheet Music 10c. Piano Tuning, Moving and Polishing. Rare Violins. All Instrument Strings. Steere's Orchestra.

THE CLARK
SAWYER CO.

478 to 482 Main St.

Decorated
Dinner sets

New Patterns and Shapes constantly arriving.

Six New Dinner sets, 112 pieces, several different colors, only $10.00

Arcadia Decorated Dinner sets, 130 pieces. This one a great bargain, 15.00

Persian Blue Tournay Dinner set, 130 pieces, only 17.50
Always sold at $25.00.

Rose and Daisy filled in Decorated Dinner set, 130 pieces, 19.00
A regular $25.00 set.

American China Dinner sets, 142 pieces, 33.50

Carlsbad China Dinner sets, from 30.00 to 40.00

French China Dinner sets, from 35.00 to 150.00

Several new designs and shapes.

THE CLARK-SAWYER CO.

478 TO 482 MAIN STREET.

ORDER NOW

and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than at

EVANS & COMPANY,

Manufacturers of

Fine Monumental Work,

131 Central Street,

near Summer.

W. A. ENGLAND,

DEALER IN

FINE WATCHES,
CLOCKS, JEWELRY
& OPTICAL GOODS.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.

394 Main Street.

Old South Church, March 31st, 1891.

GRAND

HISTORICAL REPRESENTATION

—OF THE—

Kings and Queens OF ENGLAND,

Tuesday Evening, March 31, 1891.

Personations by Members of the Society.

Lecturer, ALBERT L. BACHELLOR, A. M., Lowell.
Costumer, G. R. RAYMOND, Boston.
Organist, A. V. Hill.

Cards of Admission, 25 cts.

May be obtained at Leland's and Gorham's Music Stores and at the Stores of A. A. Mc Laughlin and G. R. Bliss.

About Folks.

In view of the coming of the Marine Band to this city on Fast Day, the following concerning Mlle. Marie Decca, who will sing at that time, may be interesting.

Mlle. Marie Decca, it is said, is the most brilliant of all the sopranos America has sent to Europe for years past. She is of Scotch descent, was three years under the instruction of the world-renowned Marchesi, in Paris, and has met with distinguished successes before Parisian and London audiences. Verdi exclaimed upon hearing her render "Gli Angui d'Inferno" (Il Flauto Magico): "C'est une voix ho's ligne!"

Mlle. Marie Decca rendered the final aria, "Ah, non Credea," and "Non giunge," from La Sonnambula, in exquisite style. The young artist is a soprano leggiero, with a range which may be termed phenomenal. Her voice has been perfectly trained, is flexible in the highest degree, and brilliant throughout. Her staccato and shake are admirable, and her execution of vocal tour de force most remarkable. Miss Decca sang for an encore, "Home, Sweet Home," a graceful concession to English sentiment, which was highly appreciated. She evinced the true musician's spirit, by adhering strictly to the beauty and simplicity of the original music, and did not, as is the common practice among the prime donne, recede what is incapable of improvement.—The Era, London.

Owing to the death of Charles F., the senior member of the famous piano firm of Chickering & Company, Mr. F. A. Leland, the Worcester representative of the house went to New York, Wednesday, to attend the funeral. Only one member of the celebrated family now remaining.

James Otis Longley.

He was born in Boylston, Sept. 11, 1830. His father, a farmer, was Otis Longley who had married Lydia Patch, Worcester born. Patch's mill was called thus from her brother. Charles Greenwood lives in what was the homestead and Calvin Hartshorn is her nephew. In Mr. Otis Longley's family were five sons and one daughter. The death of James Otis leaves only Granville A., so long representing the firm of Bigelow & Longley. There was a brother, Henry G., who was living in Worcester during the war and enlisted here in General Sprague's 51st Reg't. He was in C Company, the one raised by the subsequent Col. T. W. Higginson. He died in the service.

James Otis Longley came to our city in 1850 and first worked for his uncle, Wm. W. Patch, on the farm. Afterward, he learned the machinist's trade of Wood & Light; but for many years has been employed by the Washburn & Moen Company as a machinist.

He married Caroline E. Lawrence of West Brookfield and to them were born two daughters, Albertina M. and Emma E. The older married Franklin E. Adams an expert and confidential employe of the Waltham Watch Company. Emma E. was graduated at the High School in 1877 and afterwards married George T. Scott, druggist at Franklin Square.

For some years, Mr. Longley's home was on Main street, corner of King. Quite a while ago, he bought a lot at 22 Tirrell street; but only recently did he build. He moved into his new house last May, but before the year is ended, he is borne thence to a smaller house. He died Friday, the 20th, and his funeral was held in his late home, Tuesday, at 11 a. m., Dr. D. O. Mears officiated and the burial was in Hope cemetery. One face less in the whirl of living. The world heeds not; but in the smaller home circle the loss is irreparable.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

Heywood Foundry Comp'y,

GARDNER, MASS.

This Heater is unsurpassed for excellence of workmanship and is the best in the market. Now is the time to secure estimates. The following is one of a great number of testimonials from our leading citizens:

WORCESTER, MASS, April 12, 1890.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER:

Gentlemen—Having used one of your Heaters for two seasons with satisfaction, I can recommend it to anyone, as it will do all they claim. Respectfully,

JOHN E. ALLEN, 917 Main Street.

Branch Office, 39 Pearl Street, Worcester.

WHENEVER GOOD

Eatables

are desired they will always be found at

Eben W. Hoxie's,

305 and 816-818 Main Street.

ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING

Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,
Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.

Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold on commission.

MRS. S. M. KEYES.

J. PLAMONDON,

FINE BOOT AND SHOE REPAIRING

398 Main Street, Corner Pearl, up two flights.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE

permanently eradicated by the

ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,

92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

School and College.

There are all sorts of ways of getting through college and doing it honorably too. Here is the record of a boy who is now in his senior year. He says, "I expect to leave college without debt. It's true I have boarded at home; but I have had R. R. fare to pay; books and clothes to buy and the regular bills of societies and etc. to meet. I have had partial care of books in the library, and, during the summer vacation, I have canvassed for books, sometimes making as much as $150.00 in the time. Of course, I have had no money for mere pleasure but I have learned my lessons have had a good time and I know that if a boy wants to take a college course, the way is open for him. I have been well and I have tried to keep myself so and hope to do the same for years to come." This is only one of scores of cases that have come under the attention of LIGHT; yet there are scores of boys who are ready to sit down and bemoan their fate because some one does not come along to feed them with silver-spoons. Help yourselves, boys!

"A few years since, a New York City principal said that he was sending all his children to private schools, and that he would under no circumstances put them through a graded school. He expressed his opinion that it makes no difference how good our public schools may become, there will always be a place for private schools high or low. Many children demand more personal attention than is possible in a graded school, and parents, able to afford the expense, will be willing to pay the fees demanded by competent teachers in order to give their children superior advantages. The history of education shows that all improvements in practical education have first been made in independent schools, where teachers have been free to apply their own ways of working. The kindergartens are private schools, with few exceptions, for, so far, public schools, have found no way of engrafting its methods upon the courses of study." —N. Y. School Journal.

A New Summer School.

"A movement has been started to establish a summer school of art at Natural Bridge, Virginia. This site, according to the prospectus, has been selected on account of the attractions of the place, the healthfulness of the climate, and the fact that it is upon the line of three systems of railroads which make it accessible from all parts of the country. It lies in the Virginia mountain district which annually attracts many thousands of visitors, for whose accommodation hotels are always open.

Within a radius of fifty miles there are established the University of Virginia, the Washington and Lee College, the Virginia Military Institute, the Virginia Agricultural College and the Roanoke College. Also five well known seminaries for young ladies. These various institutions contain an aggregate of about 2000 pupils, and offer the principal educational advantages of the South.

An organization has already been formed, a charter secured, a board of directors appointed, and an area of 100 acres of land granted by Colonel H. C. Parsons, who has invested the gift with many local privileges.

The site Mars Hill, rises at the west end of Natural Bridge; it fronts the Cañon and overlooks the Valley of the James, beyond which tower the Blue Ridge Mountains at their greatest height and beauty, At the east of the cañon the Natural Bridge Park Association is erecting hotel and villas, and at the west of Mars Hill the Westmoreland Association has established a deer park and preserve. To both of these parks (which include 2000 acres with twenty miles of drives and bridle paths) and to the bridge and Cedar Creek Cañon, a perpetual right of entry is secured to the corporation and students."

If LIGHT were to go to a Summer School, Natural Bridge would have the very first choice. The location is a wonderland and an inspiration.

School of Methods.

Thursday, March 19 th, the State W. C. T. U. held a meeting in the first Baptist Church to teach proper ways of presenting the very important question of Alcoholic effects. This meeting in Worcester is one of a series beginning March 17 in Ayer Junction and continuing till March 27th inst. in Boston. While the schools of Worcester were not closed to allow the teachers to attend, those who could go did so. The devotional exercises in the morning were led by the Rev. A. B. Chamberlain of Christ Church. The Pres. Mrs. Fessenden of Malden opened the meeting and then Mrs. Mary H. Hunt in a very effective manner gave an address on the need of enforcing the law with reference to teaching the effects.

Then followed a supposed hearing by a Committee on the desirableness of better enforcement. The 2d W. C. T. U. served dinner with the following ladies in charge, Mrs. Helen De Camp, Mrs. A. Oakes, Mrs. Etta Chessman, Mrs. Susie Howe, Mrs. Henry Shaw, Mrs. J. Victoria Simmons, Mrs. Geo. Fellows, Mrs. Rockwood, Mrs. Ella M. Keith, Mrs. Kendall and Miss Hastings. The Rev. W. V. W. Davis of Union Church conducted the opening exercises in the afternoon and again the School Committee hearing was had, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. Mary E. Newton, Mrs. Ella B. Green and Mrs. A. E. Swallow, acting as the Committee. In the evening, there was excellent singing by Miss Alice B. Hammond, and speaking by Mrs. Hunt, the Rev. Dr. Mears and Mr. A. W. Edson of the State Board of Education, Dr. Geo. F. Balcom of the School Committee. All of these people spoke ringing words in behalf of the cause. The meeting closed with the singing of America by all. The only trouble with the meeting was the limited attendance of those who most ought to hear, viz, our teachers who are to present this subject to their children in an effective manner. These women are determined to keep this question prominent till their children are safer than they are now, from the Drink Demon. Men may scoff; but the women will win.

The young ladies of this city who have graduated from Wellesley College have arranged to give a musical recital in Colonial Hall April 10, for the benefit of the Norumbega fund, which is to pay the debt on one of the cottages at Wellesley. The artists who will take part are Franz Neisel, violinist, Master Eddie Baker, the boy soprano of the Church of the Heavenly Rest of New York, and Miss Tucker, the pianist of this city. It will be under the management of Mr. Ben. T. Hammond. The tickets will be sold by subscription.

There are between twenty and thirty ladies in our city who have been pupils at Wellesley. Naturally, the most of them are all enthusiasm over the coming concert. Those having it in charge are Miss Mary E. Whipple, Miss Harriet L. Constantine, Mrs. Frank W. Blair, Mrs. Edward P. Sumner and Miss Nettie Estabrook, while all are supposed to be interested in selling tickets. Colonial Hall will be a scene of beauty on the evening in question. This concert has been talked over all winter. In fact it would be difficult to estimate all the talk that has been had. It is said that one afternoon, a committee of the whole met at a member's house and talked for an hour and a half, all together, then adjourned to the sidewalk and talked ten minutes longer. After all they congratulate themselves that Mr. Ben Hammond is to direct. Says one maiden, "Oh, we should surely die if there were not a man at the head!"

Stanford University.

Senator Stanford expects to start on his Eastern trip the latter part of this week. He goes to Philadelphia, then to New York, Boston and Albany to meet the leading men in the educational world and "consult with them in reference to the formation of a faculty for his new University in California. Last Friday he was in Baltimore as the guest of President D. C. Gillman, of the Johns Hopkins University, and there, by appointment, he met many leading men of learning.

He has made appointments for an important meeting in New York next week. Senator Stanford had hoped to be able to open the University in the spring of this year, but finds it impossible, and the ceremonies may not take place before October. Senator Stanford expects to take four weeks on this tour, and afterward will go to Chicago and the Western cities en route to San Francisco. He will be home in time to meet President and Mrs. Harrison on their arrival in San Francisco, where he will entertain the Presidential party.

The following is the program for the Dorest medal prize "speaking to take" place in Horticultural Hall, Monday, April 6.

- Cornet and flute duet—"Zingarella" Millar
E. E. Pratt and J. B. Blair.
- "The Deacon's Sunday School Sermon." Nelson Champlin.
  - "The Cry of Today." Lottie E. Lamson.
  - "What Shall Christian Voters do for the Saloon?" Mrs. S. A. Merritt.
- Adalton Quartette - Selected.
Amy F. Coddling, Lois G. Thompson, Dora Coddling and Lilla Dockham.
- "The Enormity of the Liquor Traffic" Chas. Baker, Jr.
  - "Can the Liquor Business be Stopped?" Angie L. Parker.
  - "The Martyred Mother." Alta Thayer. Intermission.
  - "Not Dead nor Dying." Willie P. Hewitt.
  - "Our National Curse." Ida Blake.
  - "An Appeal to Americans." Edwin S. Bartlett.
- Duet—"The Crimson Glow of Sunset Fades." Mrs. C. E. Burnham and Miss Amy F. Coddling.
Piano Duet Accompaniment.
Awarding of the Prize by A. S. Roe.
Judges—A. S. Roe, Rev. Dr. W. H. Thomas, Mrs. M. M. Townsend.

✦ * SPRING * ✦ WOOLENS * ✦

✦ * Our ✦ Opening ✦ of * ✦

Choice Domestic and Foreign Woolens, Selected for
Our Custom Department.

Gentlemen who wish to examine the Latest Novelties in these Goods should Call and examine them.

✦ * * THE * * ✦

WARE-PRATT CO.'S

408 and 412 MAIN STREET, WORCESTER.

Now is the Time to Buy a

CARRIAGE !

at a Small Profit.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,

OPP. THE COMMON.

A. S. NEWCOMB,

Market and Oyster House,

Fish of all kinds. Planter and Shipper
Choice Grade of Oysters. Telephone connection 206-2.

223 MAIN ST., WORCESTER, MASS

Two more Evenings with the

Dixie * Minstrels.

BENEFIT OF

Baldwinville Hospital Cottages

AND

Worcester Light Infantry

— AT —

MECHANICS * HALL,

Thursday and Friday evenings, April 9-10.

Four Funny (?) End Men.
Dignified Middlemen.
Larger Chorus than ever.
POSITIVELY some new Jokes and Funny Stories.

A delightful second part.

All combining to make a pleasant evening with the Local Favorites—THE DIXIES.

Opening sale of tickets at Mechanics' Hall Box Office Friday morning April 3d.

Advance checks now being sold by the Lady Board of managers and members of the Worcester Light Infantry, and they must be exchanged for their value for tickets at the opening sale.

Don't forget day and date.

LOOK OUT FOR THE STREET PARADE.

NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.

Incorporated in the City of Worcester, Sept. 17, 1889. A great co-operative institution and fraternal order, paying sick and accident benefits and an endowment of $500 at the end of five years. Over 600 members in Worcester; three local assemblies, and two more in process of formation. $8760 already distributed in sick benefits. $14,331.63 reserve.

For full particulars, and documents carefully explaining the plan and scope of this rapidly growing fraternity, call on or address J. O. H. WOODMAN, Secy., 339 Main St., Worcester, Mass. Burnside Building.

Whittemore & Lamont,

Agents for the Best

BICYCLES * and * TRICYCLES.

Indorsed and used by the United States Government.

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *

NO. 156 MAIN STREET,
H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

LIGHT

VOL. III. No. 5. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

ELBRIDGE BOYDEN,

The Oldest Architect in Worcester.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

OUR SPRING OPENING OF FURNITURE

Covers the LARGEST and FINEST assortment ever shown by us or offered to the public in this city. We have everything desirable in COMMON, MEDIUM COST, and FINE GOODS. Many special designs of our own not found elsewhere, particularly in Parlor and Chamber Suits. Every department is complete. Space will not permit us to enumerate goods or quote prices, besides quotations are often misleading. We prefer and solicit an inspection and careful comparison of our goods and prices with any other. LOWEST PRICES TO ALL, for cash or approved credit. As we buy for cash and time is money, we can afford to make a SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO CASH BUYERS.

Call and examine for yourselves.

247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

CHARLES L. WRIGHT.

CHARLES H. WOODCOCK.

"WEST SIDE MACHINE CO.,"

Manufacturers of the improved "Wright Drill," embracing features not applied to other drills.

The "Wright Counter Shaft and Clutch," just patented. The cheapest, most positive in its action, with scarcely perceptible shock or jar, and decidedly the best device for the purpose ever in the market. Every one interested is cordially invited to come and see it. The "Woodcock Universal Door Opener." By simply pressing a button on either side of the door, it causes the door to swing open. Can be quickly and cheaply applied to any door. Must be seen to be appreciated. A Carpenter's Gauge for Hanging Doors accurately and very quickly. No carpenter can afford to be without it. "The Swivel Crotch Center." No more broken drills by work catching. Hundreds of dollars saved. "A Cuff Holder." The cheapest and best ever seen. We are prepared to make the most reasonable terms for all kinds of special machinery. Repairs promptly done and satisfaction guaranteed. Factory less than two minutes' walk from Pleasant-street cars.

No. 28 Bellevue Street, Worcester, Mass.

N. G. TUCKER.

W. F. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON, SANT-RY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.

56 Pleasant Street.

Worcester, Mass.

MECHANICS HALL.

Mrs. JENNIE ABBOTT MATTOON'S

Fifth Annual Reception,

MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 6TH.

MUSIC BY BRIGHAM'S ORCHESTRA.

Doors open at 7. Dancing by the pupils will commence precisely at 8 o'clock.

At the conclusion of the pupils' program there will be an opportunity for others to participate in the dancing, which will continue until 11 o'clock.

FLOOR TICKETS

Can be obtained of MRS. MATTOON at GRAND ARMY HALL, on the Afternoon of March 25 and April 1st; also at GORHAM'S MUSIC STORE.

PRICE - - - $1 FOR EACH PERSON

GALLERY SEATS

on Sale at

Gorham's, Monday, March 23, at 9 a. m.

First three rows in West Gallery and first row in North and South Galleries, 75 cents; all other Gallery Seats, 50 cents.

C. H. DRAPER,
Livery, Feed and Truck Stable.

Three Large Moving Wagons. Baggage Wagon always ready. Furniture and Piano Moving. Telephone 118-5.

161 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

THE BOSTON
HERALD

Is clean, reliable, independent, bright. The best newspaper for the family.

Subscription 50 cents a month, postage paid.

LARGEST CIRCULATION

MRS. A. MINOR,
Millinery * Parlors.

A well-selected Stock of Goods for Order Work.

14 MAPLE STREET, Worcester, Mass.

WHENEVER GOOD

Eatables

are desired they will always
be found at

John A. Hartigan's

47 and 51 Pleasant Street.

J. PLAMONDON,

↔ FINE BOOT AND SHOE REPAIRING, ↔

398 Main Street, Corner Pearl, up two flights.

WORCESTER

Illuminated Advertising Company,

General Office, 311 Main St., Room 13.

C. E. SQUIER.

F. H. BEALS.

Advertisements Artistically Displayed by a powerful Electric Light upon 600 Square feet of Canvas.

DISPLAY:

Worcester, opposite Mechanics Hall.

Springfield, opposite Opera House.

Providence, Turk's Head

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1891.

No. 5

LIGHT.

What does the blind man, blind from infancy,
Note in the vistas of his sleeping dream?
Living in darkness 'neath light's glowing stream,

What can dreams show him that would lovely be?

Loud would he sing, joy brimming, suddenly
To know the blessing of day's faintest gleam, Brighter than bright dream pictures then would beam

Life's radiant beauties in his vision free.
And would not we, reposing in the gloom,
Dreaming in shadow, reft by death of Light,
In awe-struck joy and wonder wake to see,
Like the day breaking in sudden bloom,
About us burst the rolling sea of light
That gilds the white shores of eternity?

—R. K. Munkittrick in Light Century.

Whatever the rest of the country may think of the business of farming, the Chamberlain
District farmers don't intend to be discouraged right away.

These energetic people have kept up their meetings most profitably to themselves and on the evening of April 9th they purpose to finish
the season with a supper at the home of Burton
W. Potter, Esq.

It is not probable that Mr. Potter would care to be put down as exclusively a farmer, at least not just now, but he does like a taste of the sod and is never happier than when in his suburban home.

The love of country life will not out in a single generation. What a pity that it should ever die! With this spirit properly cultured, we shall have much less of the deserted farms of New England. But farms are not being left desolate in Worcester. The city proper is reaching out for them.

What a glorious time it will be when our working men are all householders? Anarchy may rave and froth but it cannot prevail against those who own homes. Those too who are tax payers will be more discreet tax imposers. Hail the day when Worcester, with no more people, covers thrice the area!

"But what," says some disgruntled renter of lofty tenements, "will become of my investments in buildings whence I expected to gain a life long income." It is not for him who wishes a home only to answer. "See thou,
Mr. Tenement owner, to that" We wish no income drawn as many are. Not one man in ten, paying rent, might not as well be paying for his home.

Ah! The pleasures of proprietorship!
Every Englishman's house is his castle! As true of the American as of the Briton and truer and in the United States it is much easier to own and keep. Every facility is offered in this country to make the laborer independent and happy. Move to the suburbs.

LIGHT possesses a most entertaining article on Longevity prepared by Mr. Sheppard Homans of Englewood, N. J. For many years, the Actuary of a great Life Insurance Company he is an authority on the subject treated. It is a pamphlet of great value, detailing as it does the instances that he has found.

LIGHT also has a letter from a resident of Fitzwilliam, N. H., who is in his one hundredth year. Written in a firm hand with no trace of weakness, one cannot help wondering on what meat the writer has fed that he has lived so long. In spite of age, he travels at will, as far as Hartford, Conn., possibly further. Mr. Amos A. Parker is the oldest living graduate of any college in America. The readers of LIGHT may have a chance to see the picture of this remarkable man.

The coming celebration, in Washington,
April 8, 9, 10, of the Centennial of the American Patent System is an event, second, in interest, to none of recent years. Preparations adequate to the occasion are making and from the President to the last of the twenty speakers, all are alive to the importance of a hundred years of inventive labor. Edison, Westinghouse and Pullman will be notables on the occasion.

Queer doings at Union Station last Sunday.
Hackman Wolf goes for brother whip, Charron. After all, it is not so strange that a Wolf should seize a piece of Charron flesh.

Mr. Cheever is a man in earnest. He means to leave no stone unturned in his life long fight with the saloon, though this is supposed to be the first time that he has been accessory to the use of the pictorial art in forcing his enemy. His tiger is a fierce beast. He is a real man eater and when was the demon Drink less than that?

Prohibition holds the monster in check but the bonds are strained and License stands ready to cut the already taut rope. This is the stanza above the picture;

Shall the beast be let go?
O ye Fathe s say No!
The collar will hold
Till our dear boys grow old
And the tiger lies cold."

Was there ever a finer Easter? How happy the ladies were? And then the men were happy in seeing the happiness of the ladies.
The New York Press for Sunday had a cartoon representing a number of women kneeling about "a love of a bonnet." Of course there is no ground for insinuation, but somehow or other millinery business is excellent about this time.

April Fool.—The custom of sending people on bootless errands on the first day of April may have originated in the sending of Christ from Annas to Caiaphas and from Pilate to Herod, this matter having been made the subject of a Miracle Play which was acted at Easter, usually in April. Again, the day may have been some heathen observance. Once more, the old New Year was March 25th, so that the festivities of the opening year would just about end at the beginning of April. So it is possible that the day marked the exhaustion of Holiday fun.

"Yes," said Aunt Wisdom, "I cut out every good thing that I see in the papers; but what puzzles me is that the best articles end by mentioning some cure. Oae of the new literary fads, I suppose."—Society.

This reminds us of some of the dangers, modern enterprise is subjecting us to. There will have to be a new subject to be delivered from, added to the prayer book. "From the medical story advertisement, Good Lord deliver us."

Poor Richard, whoever he is, sends out a circular deprecating the effort now making to still further lessen the hours of work in Massachusetts. He claims and, apparently, with justice that till the country makes laws, restricting labor throughout the country, this state had better not be in a hurry to place herself at a disadvantage with labor in other parts of the land. We already suffer enough from foreign and, so, unequal competition.

Fast Day has nearly lost its early significance. When our Pilgrim ancestors bowed in supplication for Heaven's favors and their children continued the day and the exercise, the office meant something. People really fasted. In War Times, there seemed a real spirit of devotion; but latterly the day has done little more than mark the beginning of the Base Ball Season. Connecticut, several years since, merged Fast and Good Friday.
Sticklers as we are for the old, it is possible that nothing less than this will secure anything like a proper observance.

Our friends of the Horticultural Society have reason to congratulate themselves on their very successful anniversary observed March 26. The Hall was filled with happy people who dined sumptuously. Felicity, in all respects, reigned. From the opening words of President Parker, through those of Toast Master Draper and Secretary Lincoln to the last speaker there was nothing to detract from the happiness of the hour. This Society is one of the most useful in our city. It has done much to make homes more attractive.
The Hall is to be made over and many improvements introduced. Librarian and Custodian Hixon is always there to answer questions and to direct.

Worcester and Worcester County rejoice over the elevation of John Hopkins of Millbury to the Superior Court. Mr. Hopkins established his reputation, as long ago as 1875, when he was the counsel for Frost, the Peters-ham murderer, and from that day to this there has been no time when he has not been a prominent figure in legal circles. If all of Governor Russell's appointments are as pleasing to the public, irrespective of politics, he will leave behind him a good repute for fair dealing.

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 339 Main Street, Burnside Building,
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, APRIL 4, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Hereafter, it will be understood that all articles in LIGHT, not ascribed, save recipes,
squibs, fashion and household notes were
written for this paper.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

Without a doubt the most amusing entertainment given this season will be presented next Thursday and Friday evenings in Mechanics Hall by the Dixie Minstrels. The company, which includes many of the finest singers and keenest wits to be found among the young men of the city, has been actively engaged for some time past in rehearsal for the event under the direction of Mr. Edward L. Sumner, and the result cannot fail to be productive of much mirth. Everything possible has been done to make the entertainment a success. The receipts of the first evening will be given to the Baldwinville Hospital Cottages, a very worthy object of charity. The Light Infantry will receive the money taken Friday evening. The artists who will appear are as follows: Interlocutor, Chas. I. Rice; tambos, P. L. Rider and H. F. A. Schmidt; bones, Fred G. Davis and C. R. Macomber; musical director, Edward L. Sumner; accompanist, George E.
Brown; leader of orchestra, H. I. Osborne; stage manager, Frank R. Macullar; chorus,
F. L. Ward, N. C. Keyes, F. L. Allen, F. S.
Chickering, S. H. Rood, G. H. Learned, Chas.
S. Holden, George A. Smith, H. E. Morse, H.
F. Blood, H. W. Bates, W. E. Fairbanks, W.
H. Desper, A. F. Hyde, Homer Whitney, E.
S. Clarke, A. C. King, G. R. Davis, G. B.
Witherby, Tom Walters, Jr., W. E. Booth,
W. Stevenson, A. G. Titus, Ben Whitmore, Jr., L. P. Greenman, C. A. Gray, George E. Burr, G. W. Burhoe, W. B. Cummings, G. M. Daniels, C. A. Normand, G. E.
Brown, W. C. Powers, Geo. W. Burnett, A. P.
Shaffer, E. L. Knight, W. T. Sibley, V. G.
Goulding, Wm. Riedl, E. A. Walsh, F. H.
Norton, G. E. Miller, C. H. Aldrich, F. D. Sil-ley, H. H. Allen, A. E. Gray, R. C. Cleveland, W. F. Little, R. L. Kingston, G. W. Walters.

The ushers, who are to appear, with black faces in full dress suits, are F. M. Clark, Jr., Fred A. Keyes, Howard Frost, Henry J. Kettell, F. A. Clark, Arthur C. King, Edwin S.
Clark, N. A. Mansfield, W. S. Lincoln and H.
A. Adams. The program is one of the best ever arranged by the Dixies and is as follows:

PART I.

Introduction.
Opening chorus, "The Colored 400," Dixies
Solo, George H. Learned
Selection, Dixie Quartet
Messrs. Smith, Little, Holden and Allen.
Song, "When St. Peter Reads to You the Riot Act,"
Mr. Macomber.
Solo, Mr. Little
Song, "Climb Up, You Children Climb,"
Mr. Schmidt.
Selection, Dixie Quartet
Song, "Rolling Up the Hill to Zion," Mr. Rider
Finale, "Two Starlets," Dixies

PART II.

Selection, Arlington Quintet
"Fun in the Gym," Gym Gyan Brothers
L. C. Havener, Fred Daniels, J. Herbert Adams,
George K. Clark, Benj. Townsend.
"Bill Barnack on the Quarter Deck,"
Prof. Geo. W. Walters of Boston.
Carmencita skirt dance, Six Young Misses (?)

The pupils of Miss Stella M. Haynes, teacher of elocution, gave a recital at her rooms, 492 Main street, Tuesday evening.
The program was as follows: Piano solo,
Miss Elva M. Sawin; reading, "Flash, the Fireman's Story," Miss Ella H. Plaisted; reading, "The Voiceless Chimes," Miss Emma Hewitt; reading, "Jerry," Mrs. Hattie
E. Price, encore, "Elder Lamb's Donation;"
piano solo, Miss Sawin; reading, Biddy's Troubles," Mrs. Lottie R. Hastings; reading,
"Sockery Setting a Hen," Fred M. Parker, encore, "A Pinch of Snuff;" reading, "Aunt Doleful's Visit," Miss Edith M. Gould, encore,
"Widder Green's Last Words;" piano solo,
Miss Sawin.

The Arlingtons have reason to be gratified with the success of their fourth annual concert, given Monday evening in Association Hall. Their annual concert is now looked upon as a fixed event in the calendar of every year and is always awaited with interest. The attendance Monday evening was excellent and, though the expenses were very heavy, the club netted a good sum. They were assisted by the Boylston Banjo, Mandolin and Guitar Club of Boston, the Worcester Ideal
Banjo, Mandolin and Guitar Club, Miss Marie
Louise Chandler, reader, and the Cecilia Quartet. The first selection was "The Relief March" played with banjos and guitars by the three clubs combined. The Boylstons followed with "If the waters could speak as they flow," played with mandolins and guitars.
The Cecilia Quartet sang a ballad about a "Broken Pitcher." The Ideal Club played
"Longwood Waltzes" with banjos and guitars and responded to an encore. Miss Chandler read "Music on the Rappahannock," Miss E.
G. Whittemore assisting with the piano. The Arlingtons played the "Cosmopolitan
Patrol" and responded to a very hearty encore.
Part two was opened with "Campo de Rosas," by the Boylston Club. Two encores were responded to. The Cecilia Quartet sang two selections "The Miller's Song" and "By the Sea." The Arlingtons played the "Estudiantina Waltz" for mandolins and guitars, and received and an encore. Miss Chandler read

"Aunt Peggy and High Art." The Arlingtons played a medley and were encored. The concluding number was a song, "The Donkey Cart," by the Cecilia Quartet. The musical selections were all very fine. As for the readings, it must be admitted that Miss Chandler did not fulfill the expectations of the audience.
Yet, it is hardly fair to judge of her ability simply by what she read Monday evening, as her selections were not of such a character as to bring out the best work of any reader. The Arlingtons are: F. B. Fisher, A. B. Weixler,
W. F. Boswell, C. H. Morse, L. R. Bradford.
The Boylstons are: A. V. Wallberg, Mr.
Browning, Mr. Tholander, Mr. Higgins, Mr.
Kimball. The members of the Ideal club are:
J. Edwin Gibbs, Mr. Davis, Mr. Hanson, Mr.
Meggett, Mr. Hall, Mr. Munroe.

A large audience gathered at the Old South Church, Tuesday evening, to be entertained and instructed by the lecture "Kings and Queens of England," given by Albert L.
Bachelder, principal of the Green Grammar School of Lowell, assisted by a company of the church people who were dressed to represent the different characters introduced. Mr.
Bachelder read a sketch of the history of England and as each character was mentioned in the reading, the person representing the character was presented to the audience. The costumes were the best that have been seen in this city for a long time. The royal personages gave a reception in the ladies parlors after the lecture. A list of the characters and the persons who filled the parts is given below:—

Hengist, Fred A. Lathrop; Rowena, Miss
Maud Whitney; Alfred the Great, Geo. R.
Bliss; William the Conqueror, Dea. Geo. M.
Pierce; Richard the Lion Hearted, Tracy
Murdock; Edward the 1st, W. M. Spaulding;
Queen Eleanor, Mrs. Walter Gates; Prince
Edward V, Clifford B. Wright; Duke of York, Rufus Harthan; Henry the VIII, A.
C. Monroe; Catherine of Arragon, Mrs. Geo.
R. Bliss; Anne Boleyn, Miss May Munroe;
Jane Seymore, Miss Mary Eddy; Anne of Cleves, Mrs. William Little; Catherine
Howard, Miss Sarah Green; Catherine Parr,
Mrs. William Winn; Cardinal Wolsey, Geo.
P. Rogers; Margaret More, Mrs. H.
Watrous; Lady Jane Grey, Mrs. John Gibbon; Queen Mary, Miss Clara Witherby;
Queen Elizabeth, Mrs. Walter M. Spaulding;
Sir Walter Raleigh, A. A. McLaughlin; Mary
Queen of Scots, Mrs. James Kindred; Charles 1st, John Hewitt; Oliver Cromwell, J. W.
Mitchell; Charles II, Harry Davis; Queen
Anne, Mrs. I. J. Cook; Duchess of Marlborough, Mrs. M. L. Fay; Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dea. George Witherby; Penelope
Boothby, Little Bernice Kindred; Dr. Samuel
Johnson, E. H. Stark; Queen Victoria, Mrs.
E. H. Stark.

"The Hustler," a roaring farce-comedy, was the attraction at the Worcester Theater last evening and had a large audience.
It has had large and enthusiastic audiences wherever played and deserves good houses at the last performances, which occur this afternoon and evening. It has some of the finest comedians in the profession, such actors as John Kernell, Dan Mason, Lee
Harrison, Harry Leighton and the redoubtable

Mlle Staccione, the Spanish dancer. The Boston Male Quartette has just been secured for the remainder of the season and will render all the popular songs of the day. The great "Parisian duster dance," is a novelty which has proved a great drawing card.

Miss Agnes Huntington deserves a large audience at her only appearance in this city this season at the Worcester Theater, on Monday evening, April 6th. She is the most popular American comic opera actress, and "Paul Jones" is an excellent play in which to display her charming graces. The most fashionable audiences attended her performances in London, where "Paul Jones" was for a long time the most popular success. Fred Howard, a former Worcester baritone, is with this company. Tickets are now on sale at the box office.

"The Stowaway," with its two "eminent" bank burglars, "Spike" Hennessey and "Kid" McCoy, was a great card at the Worcester Theater, Fast Day afternoon and evening, a couple of hundred people being turned away unable to purchase tickets.

Mr. Ben. T. Hammond held his forty-fifth and forty-sixth recitals Tuesday evening at his studio, 452 Main street. The participants were as follows: Misses Natalie Trainque, Mary A. Dee, Bertha L. Fletcher, Eva M. Martin, Lillian W. Rusack, Anna Louise Dunn, Ailene Kennedy, Messrs. C. D. Sharpe, Lucuis T. Gould, Harry C. Robinson and John W. Stewart. To add that everything was up to Mr. Hammond's standard is to give the highest praise possible.

Last evening at Salem Street Church Mr. W. H. Bartlett gave his lecture, "Campaigning on the Mississippi." When the course was arranged Rev. Mr. Lansing was assigned this date but on account of illness he exchanged dates with Mr. Bartlett. Mr. Lansing will give his lecture "Around the Fire of a Hunter's Camp" next Friday.

The Worcester Grange held a very successful fair Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Mr. Harry C. Mullett, a rising young pianist, gave a pianoforte recital at the studio of Mr. Ben T. Hammond, Thursday evening. He was assisted by Miss Jessie L. Pond, soprano; Miss M. Annie Warren, mezzo-soprano; Miss Elsie L. Ellis, pianist, and Ben T. Hammond, accompanist.

Margaret Mather will appear at the Worcester Theatre Thursday and Friday, April 9 and 10. This brilliant young actress needs no introduction to Worcester theatre-goers, as the excellence of her artistic rendition of Shakespearian characters has always tested the extreme seating capacity of the theatre. She is always sure of a cordial welcome.

At the time of the performance of the "Messiah" at Central Church under the direction of Mr. E. N. Anderson, LIGHT expressed the hope that the success of the presentation would induce Mr. Anderson to undertake the performance of similar works in the future. It seems that the hope is to be fulfilled, for Mr. Anderson announces that he will present in Mechanics Hall, May 22, Josef Rheinberger's "Clarice of Eberstein," a composition for solo voices, chorus and orchestra. The chorus will consist of local talent as will also the soloists. Mr. Anderson will be the conductor and will be assisted by Victor Herbert. The orchestra will consist of first class musicians, most of them from Boston. The prices will be low, that everyone may be able to hear the concert.

The Marine Band concerts drew good houses Thursday, both afternoon and evening. The afternoon concert opened with Mendelssohn's overture "Son and Stranger," followed by a composition by Schubert entitled "The Unfinished." Mr. Henry Jaeger played a flute solo, "La Sonnambula." The band followed with excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust," Verdi's "Sicilian Vespers," selections from "Lohengrin," ballet music and "Aubade Printamere." The next selection was "The Stag Party," a descriptive fantasia by Mr. Sousa. Mlle. Decca sang Eckert's "Echo Song," and in response to an encore sang "Coming Through the Rye." The program was concluded with "Hail Columbia." The evening program presented a great variety of music. The opening selection was Wagner's overture "Rienzi," which was followed by a rhapsody, "The Land of the Mountain and the Flood." These two pieces gave a taste of the good things that were to follow. The third number, Weber's "Invitation a la Valse" was wonderfully performed. In response to an encore the band played "Listen to my tale of woe" and when encored for this, played "Marching through Georgia." The fourth number was Bizet's mosaic, "The Pearl Fishers." Mlle Decca then sang the aria "Perle du Brazil," with a flute obligato by Henry Jaeger. In the main her singing was admirable, but in a few places the voice and the flute failed to accord in time and on the higher notes the voice was sometimes a little flat. Nevertheless Mlle Decca is a very fine singer. In response to an encore she sang "Robin Adair." The band played Rossini's overture, "William Tell" in a manner which could be equalled by but few bands in the country. Being encored, a selection was given in which the members sang and whistled and when the audience wanted more did it over again. The next number was Rubinstein's "Bal Masque" which was followed by "Funeral March of a Marionette" a composition so weird and sad that there could be no question about its being rightly named. Sousa's symphonic poem, "The Chariot Race" was a wonderfully realistic production and drew forth a storm of applause. The band responded with another selection. The next number, Godfrey's "The Conquest" was very amusing. It represented a contest between the players of the different instruments. An encore followed. Mlle. Decca sang a polka staccato, a difficult work, and the encore which followed was fully deserved. She sang in response "Way Down on the Swanee River." The last number the "Star Spangled Banner" played by the band.

SCHOOL AND COLLEGE.

Holy Cross.

The base ball season was opened Fast Day with a game between the new Worcester Club and the Holy Cross nine. The Worcester won with a score of 18 to 2.

Rev. Robert W. Brady, S. J., died at Georgetown, D. C., March 26. He was at two different times president of the Holy Cross first assuming the duties in 1867 and again in 1883. During his first presidency extended through the school year of '86 and '87. He was one of the brightest men of the Jesuit order and held the highest offices in its ranks. It was Father Brady who preached the glowing eulogy over the lamented Judge McCafferty. He will be long remembered in Worcester for his tall manly bearing and by his students for his many good qualities.

The Faculty have offered a medal for a Latin poem to be written in Sapphics and Adonics.

The Dramatic Club appeared at Malden Fast Day.

The Brighton seminarians enjoyed an Eater recess in commemoration of Archbishop Williams celebration. John P. Leary, James J. Donnelly '87, Edward Fitzgerald '88 and Owen M. McGee '89 are the Worcester boys at Brighton.

High School.

The Eucleia met on Thursday, March 26, with the following question for discussion: Resolved that the New Orleans massacre was justifiable. The discussion was unusually lively and was decided in the affirmative. At the meeting Wednesday night the question was debated: Resolved that Great Britain has produced greater men in the nineteenth century than the United States has.

At the Summer Club's meeting, a week from Friday, the question was: Resolved that the action of the United States in declaring war against Mexico was unjustifiable.

E. W. Smith of the second year class has left the High School for Phillips Exeter Academy, where he will pursue an English course.

The rhetorical exercises of the week were held in the hall, Tuesday evening, and consisted of a reading by Miss Woodward of the second year class and a recitation by Miss Blanchards, junior.

The following members of the school have been appointed as ushers at the Spring field-day. From the Senior class: C. P. Haseldon, A. H. Warren, H. P. Linnell; from the Juniors: G. T. Woodward, C. F. Stetson, W. H. Cunningham; from the second year: F. A. Whittemore, W. A. Gile and E. A. Davis.

C. A. Gray and T. L. Nelson, Jr., are as yet the only tennis players entered for the Inter-Scholarstic Tournament, but it is hoped that others will enter as the event approaches.

Plans are now being laid for a concert in the High School Hall. The money thus raised will be for the benefit of the Base Ball Club, whose finances are at the present in an unhealthy condition. Further developments will be reported, that the friends of the High School may be interested and help the good work along.

Mr. Tyler Newton, janitor of the High School, closed his connection with it April 1st. The duties which are required of him have for a good while been weighing on him and after his illness of this winter he feels that his health will no longer admit of the strain. The task is a hard one at any time, but this winter especially, owing to the many snow storms both buildings to care for, and evening drawing classes. Mr. Newton intends to go to work with the Darling Brothers of this city. He (and his dog Jock) will be remembered by many graduates of the school, since he has served for seven years. He has always given good satisfaction, and been a favorite with the scholars, and especially the boys. All will be sorry to have him go and will feel it a difficult thing to find another man so obliging and steadfast in his work.

Wellesley.

The concert to be given in Colonial Hall, April 10 under the auspices of the Wellesley graduates must prove one of the most attractive entertainments of the season. All the artists are of wide repute. Eddie Baker, the boy soprano of New York is the lad who excited much interest in our city recently by his wonderful melody at All Saints and the Old South. While the tickets in the main are sold by subscriptions, a few may be had at Putnam, Davis & Co's.

Elbridge Boyden.

When the Nation's next Natal Day returns, Mr. Boyden will be eighty-one years old, for it was in 1810, away up among the Green Mountains of Vermont, on the Fourth day of July that he first saw the light. His father was an old Revolutionary soldier and it must have been peculiarly gratifying to him that one of his boys should claim July Fourth as his birthday. This birth was in the town of Somerset but the child was only six-months old when the father, Amos Boyden, moved to the town of Orange, Mass., the native town of his wife, Abigail Wood, who was one of a large family of children.

That Amos Boyden was Bay State born, seems certain, but in what town cannot now be said. He was about sixteen years old when he entered the Patriot army and he served therein four years or till the end of the strife. He saw very little actual fighting; but he was stationed at West Point at the time of Arnold's treason and he was one of the guard detailed to witness the execution of Andre. "Many a time," says Mr. Boyden, "have I sat up till midnight, in my boyhood to hear my father tell stories of the times that tried men's souls." The elder Boyden died in 1837 at the age of about seventy-one years. He had five children of whom Elbridge was the third and he is now the sole survivor. The oldest member was eighty-five at death. It is also interesting to note that Amos Boyden's father was a soldier of the Revolution. He went in at the beginning and died early in the struggle in a hospital, somewhere near or in Canada.

In his Orange home, he had the boyhood of the hard working people of those days. In connection with the farm was a saw mill and as early as eight years he found work in the latter. At fourteen, he could do as much work therein as any man. It was at this age that he did some work in repairing the mill of a neighbor, further down the stream, and for his services received twenty-six silver dollars, the full pay for a man's labor, for twenty-six days. As he says, this money gave him more encouragement than any received before or since.

On the evening of May 7, 1889, Mr. Boyden read a paper on his life before the Worcester Society of Antiquity. He had prepared this for the annual meeting of the Society of Architects and Builders some months before, and had read it there. From that paper liberal extracts are made in the preparation of this sketch. In his early life, he had very little of the scant school facilities afforded country-children. Only about three months in the year and for that he had to walk two miles, taking his chances with one hundred others in getting any instruction from the single teacher.

When sixteen years old he went to Athol to learn the trade of house carpenter. He was apprenticed for three years to Joel Stratton, a relative of the man of the same name who was John B. Gough's benefactor. He served his time faithfully and he did something more for he studied two books on Architecture, written by Asher Benjamin, and owned by Mr. Stratton. He was allowed the use of a set of drawing instruments owned by his master and in their employment he soon distanced his elder. In those days, services were rendered from sunrise to sunset with certain time for meals and from Autumnal to Vernal equinox they worked till nine o'clock in the evening. In spite of such labor, our veteran seems extremely well preserved.

Mr. Boyden finally bought out his employer and for twenty years he carried on the business in Athol and vicinity. In April, 1844, he came to Worcester to assist in the building of an addition to the Insane Hospital. In the June following, the mechanics of the town met and decided that twelve hours should constitute a day's work. Later, in the same season, they again met and reduced the time to ten hours, to conform to the custom in other towns in New England. Quite a cutting down from the old sixteen hours. In October 1847, he formed a partnership with Ex-Mayor Phineas Ball, a civil engineer, and they were together fourteen years. They had a very successful business, doing work for all the New England States with the possible exception of Maine, all the Middle save Delaware, and for Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, Oregon and Georgia, besides. He was among the first to introduce Terra Cotta or burnt clay in his designs.

Mr. Boyden was the designer of the Salem Street and Union Churches, the Lincoln House Block, Horticultural Hall, Goulding's Block, Harrington Corner, Walker Building, Foster Block, corner of Main and Pearl streets, in which he has long had his office. Also he was the architect for the Channing Memorial Church in Newport, R. I., and of the Methodist Church in Saratoga. One edifice, a church, in Littleton, N. H., designed by him has been copied eleven times. He also made the designs for Congress Hall at Saratoga and for many private residences in all parts of the country. His chief work, however, was the Mechanics' Hall of this city and of that extended mention is made in other columns. An extended list follows this article.

In his twenty-third year he married Miss Louisa Davis of Royalston and Mr. Boyden is not slow to ascribe much of his success in life to her presence and advice. A faithful helpmeet she stood by his side till removed by death in December 1888. A daughter, Helen Louisa, died in Athol when eight years old, while Mary Ellen is the wife of S. Hamilton Coe of this city. The late George E. Boyden was the elder son and, with Mason the younger, was associated with the father in his business. Mr. George E. was one of the most prominent of the younger men in Worcester. In the seventies he was president of the Common Council, and in Masonry was one of the best posted in the state, having attained the 33d degree. He was much sought as an instructor. His wife was Mrs. Helen (Holman) Harris. He died at his home on John street in 1886. The younger son, Mason, now in Alabama, married Miss Cornelia W. Muzzey and the family home is with the father, corner of Harvard and George streets, in a comfortable house built there by him in 1846, the second structure on this part of the street. Mason has only one son, Harry, now a member of the High School.

So then, we here have the picture of an architect, eleven years beyond the allotted age of man, daily going to his task; in health, better than many younger men. His long and vigorous life he ascribes very largely to the resolution made when only fifteen years old that he would never touch intoxicating liquor nor tobacco, a resolution that he has faithfully kept. This determination is all the more remarkable, when we reflect that it was made when drinking habits were the rule, the contrary, the exception. In 1836, he contracted to build a church in Clappville, town of Orange and he resolved to erect the frame without the presence of intoxicants an unheard of purpose in those days and he succeeded, much to the astonishment of those who believed in the efficiency of drink. So far as he knows this was the first building erected in that portion of the state without the aid of strong drink.

He has seen Worcester grow from a village of 8000 people to her present proportions. He has seen the style of architecture change from the uniform square and oblong structure of the early part of the century to the irregular and ornate, so popular today. If Mr. Boyden's work were to be characterised in a few words it would be covered in saying that it is solid, massive and durable, pleasant to the eye today, and it will not suffer by contrast in the years to come.

He can tell the story of every considerable building in Worcester. He is by many years the Nestor of all the architects in the city. He has personally known nearly or quite all those who have built and designed here and his mind is a treasure house of facts pertaining to the structural history of our city. He loves a beautiful building and only two years ago stopped off at Syracuse, on his way further west that he might see the finest college edifice in America, then being erected by the Messrs. Norcross of this city, the Crouse Memorial College. He is equally disturbed at the sight of an ugly structure and does not hesitate to express himself. When asked who planned a certain conspicuous pile of brick and mortar in Worcester, he replied, "The Lord only knows. I don't think any one did." Not a few friends hope he may continue to wend his accustomed way along Harvard, Walnut and Main street for many a year to come.

Some of the public and private buildings whose plans were drawn by Elbridge Boyden and whose construction was superintended by him.

PRIVATE BLOCKS AND RESIDENCES.

The Hobbs Block, corner of Main and George street; The Paine—Aldrich Block, High street; His own house on Harvard street, Worcester, 1846. Opened office with P. Ball in old Exchange, 1847; Wm. C. Clark Block, corner of Main and Mechanic street, now the Walker Building; Lincoln House Block, Main streets; C. Foster Block, corner of Main and Pearl streets and City National Bank; Post Office Block, Pearl street; Bank Block and Post Office, Keene, N. H.; Bank Block, Fitchburg, Mass.; Block and Hotel at Southbridge, Mass.; Lamb Block, Worcester; Wm. Goulding Block, Main street, corner of Sudbury; Harrington Corner Block, corner of Main and Front streets.

RESIDENCES.

Plans for house, for Joel Upham, corner of Austin and Crown Sts.; Ethan Allen, for remodeling the house, once owned by Levi A. Dowley, afterwards by Ethan Allen, Jonathan Grout, Dr. F. H. Kelley, and now owned and occupied by R. C. Taylor, Main street; house for R. P. Angier, Cedar street, now owned by Wm. C. Clark; C. Foster, Chestnut street; Ethan Allen, Main street; Samuel Colton, Queen street; George Crompton, Union Hill; J. A. Hovey, Balston Spa, N. Y.; L. N. Gilbert, Ware, Mass.; Thomas H. Dodge, Main street; Jesse Smith, Oread street; Samuel Davis, Belmont street, now the Washburn Memorial Hospital; Marshal Merrifield, now the home of Lovell Baker; C. C. Spring, now occupied by his widow; Loring Coes, New Worcester; Wm. W. Coes, New Worcester; Wm. T. Merrifield, Highland street; Draper residence, Orange street, now occupied as Old Ladie's Home; Judge H. B. Staples, State street; Rev. Henry T. Cheever, State Street; Edwin Conant, corner of Harvard and State streets; F. H. Dewey, Main street; A. D. Warren, Harvard street; Mrs. Anna Howe, Harvard street; Late Judge Hartley Williams, Harvard; Jerome Marble, Harvard street; Mrs. M. M. Daniels, Harvard street; Cyrus G. Wood, Harvard street; Mrs. E. M. Stockwell, Harvard street; George Russell, Harvard street; Wm. A. Smith, Harvard street; Jared Whitman, Harvard street; A. N. Currier, Harvard street; Jonas G. Clark, Elm St.; Thomas Clark, Chestnut street, now occupied for boarding house by Mrs. M. M. Clark; Rev. J. J. Power, High street; Ex-Gov. Dinsmore, Keene, N. H., since occupied by Ex-Gov. Haile of N. H.; S. W. Sweester, Indiana; Henry Tisdell, Lawrence, Kansas; Edward Thompson, Charlestown, N. H.; two residences, Lincoln, corner of Kendall street; F. H. Hathorn, Esq., Saratoga Springs, N. Y.; Chauncey Kilmer, New York City; John A. Dakes, New York City; Mr. Haywood, Gardner, Mass.; Mr. Pierce, Gardner, Mass.; Mr. Torrey, Fitchburg, Mass.; Mr. Dryden, on Lincoln street, corner of Kendall, now occupied by Dr. Davis, Mr. Putnam of Fitchburg.

CHURCHES.

Salem Street Cong. Church; Union Cong., Front street; Laurel street, M. E.; St. Paul's Catholic, Chatham street, corner of High; West Brookfield, Catholic; Baptist, Fitchburg, Mass.; Baptist, West Randolph, Vt.; Baptist, Brattleboro, Vt.; Unitarian, Brattleboro, Vt.; Baptist, Athol, Mass.; Methodist, Wilbraham, Mass.; Methodist, Oxford, Mass.; Methodist, Saratoga, N. Y.; Methodist, Ashburnham Mass.; Cong., Littleton, N. H.; Cong., Willmantic, Conn.; Gilbert Memorial, Gilbertville, Mass.; Unitarian, Ware, Mass.; Unitarian, Northfield, Mass.; Cong., Rutland, Mass.; Universalist, Rutland, Vt.; Catholic, Leicester; Mass.; remodeled the old Unitarian Church, Templeton, Mass.; First Cong., Keene, N. H.; Second Cong., Keene, N. H.; Cong., Spencer, Mass.; Channing Memorial Unitarian, Newport, R. I.; Nichols Academy, Observatory and Boarding House, Dudley, Mass.; Medical College, Union Hill, now the Worcester Academy; Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio; Remodeled the Holy Cross College; Cushing Academy, Ashburnham, Mass.; Washburn Work Shop at Polytechnic Institute; High School House, Fitchburg, Mass.; two graded School Houses, Gardner, Mass.; two graded School Houses, Athol, Mass.; Methodist and Congregational, Brookfield.

WORCESTER SCHOOL HOUSES.

Dix street, Mason street, Grafton street, Cambridge street, Quinsigamond, Messing Hill, Thomas street, Gold street, Adriatic.

TOWN HOUSES AND HALLS.

Gardner, Mass.; Orange, Mass.; Southboro, Mass.; Upton, Mass.; Sutton, Mass.; Mechanics Hall, Front Street Theater, and Horticultural Hall, Worcester.

HOTELS.

Congress Hall, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.; Fort William Henry Hotel, Lake George, N. Y.; Crocker House, New London, Conn.; Brooks House, Brattleboro, Vt.; Towns Hotel, Bellows Falls, Vt.

COURT HOUSES.

Fitchburg, Mass.; Warren County, N. Y., Lake George; Moved the old Court House back eighty feet and built on the new front at Worcester; Jail and House of Correction at Greenfield, Franklin County, Mass, since given up and new one built; Jail and House of Correction at Fitchburg for Worcester County; Jail and House of Correction, Worcester; Jail and House of Correction, New London, Conn.; State Lunatic Hospital, Taunton; State Lunatic Hospital, Tewksbury, Mass.; Cottage Hospital for Children, Baldwinville, Mass.; all the depots from Uxbridge to Worcester when the railroad was first built: Turn Table at Pittsfield for the Boston & Albany railroad.

ABOUT FOLKS.

There has been one change made in the program, published in last week's LIGHT, of the Demorest medal prize speaking, which occurs next Monday evening at Horticultural Hall. Miss Angie L. Parker will read "The Two Tires" instead of "Can the Liquor Business be Stopped?"

Lincoln Street Club.

The North Enders are to have a club. In fact, they have a club; but they lack a name. Hancock is thought of on account of the Continental Congress President; one owning land near. Why not "The Lincoln Club?" It would indicate locality and would honor a Worcester name. The quarters are in the W. H. Sawyer building, Lincoln Street. The President is H. W. Anderson; Vice Pres., S. A. Willis; Secretary and Treas., H. S. Parker; Com. on Membership, S. A. Willis, E. L. Parker, and Geo. W. Myrick. The members aside from the officers named are H. A. Howe, Herbert Smith, H. A. Knight, N. W. Parker, G. Day, W. J. Swain, R. Hoar, W. H. Vialle, D. B. Williams, W. H. Stoddard, J. C. McMurray, F. W. Johnson, Geo. H. Powers, C. B. Sartelle, F. L. Johnson, Victor Goulding, John L. Brand, Geo. E. Rix, A. M. Cobb, S. A. Woodside, J. M. Kendall, S. C. Earle, William Riedl, Edward Riedl, W. E. Holmes, F. A. Cutter, John C. Stewart, John F. Crowell, H. F. Harris, George W. Myrick, F. R. Jones, Rev. Francis G. Burgess, W. F. Emerson, C. W. Wurst, W. P. Allen, J. Rankin, M. F. Foster, H. S. Parker, J. A. Shaw, Ezra Mead, C. H. Davis, M. D., Charles E. Grant and O. W. Everett.

"My Peace I Give to Thee."

BY ANNIE CHURCHILL.

I sit alone this summer's night
In my room, so bare and warm
And wonder why my heart is light
When my life is full of storm.

An orphan girl, no friends, no wealth,
Joys few and far between.
"Naught to be thankful for but health,"
Things present but not seen.

Yet I am not light of heart always,
Though I work 'till shadows darken,
For rest, sweet rest, comes Sabbath days,
And to his voice I harken.

I find much to be thankful for—
The parks, the trees are mine,
The birds sing to me more and more
Of His loving care divine.

The flowers that grow so sweet and fair
Send their perfume out to me,
I may not pluck them for my hair
But they are sweet to see.

And though the city's din is great,
And my room is small and high,
I calmly sit, and sing, and wait,
And watch the dark'ning sky.

'Tis joy enough to live today
In this glorious land of ours,
And I shall happy be alway
As lovers, hid in bowers.

'Tis joy enough for me to know
My soul looks upward ever,
And is as spotless as the snow
If I this life should sever.

You who have riches, home and friends,
And countless other blessings,
May see what joy contentment lends
And take to heart its lessons.

Too Previous.

During the recent Bernhardt season, when a sale of seats was opened and the usual throng crowded the lobby, a ticket speculator who had purchased fifty seats stood at the head of the line, and was calmly making his selection with lofty indifference to the feelings of those behind him. At this moment a breezy, bluff man, one of the sort that is always in a hurry and wants everybody to know it, took his position at the end of the long line. He grasped the situation at a glance, and his blood began to boil. After a few snorts and puffs of indignation he could restrain himself no longer, and broke forth with language more forcible than elegant. "Get out, you swindler!" he shouted. "It is an imposition on the public." Finding this mild exhortation of no avail, epithet after epithet, interlarded with choice oaths, were hurled at the man, who deliberately continued selecting choicest seats for the play. Finally the blusterer remarked to the pretty young lady standing in front of him, who is in deadly terror lest people should think the man a friend of hers, "Well, I am mad clear through!" She answered icily, "I should say you were!" At last the speculator was satisfied, the line moved up quickly, and our hero's turn came. Now for revenge! Now to annihilate the man in the box office with a crushing blow! He planted himself before the window, and in a loud tone demanded, "One ticket for the poultry show." The roar that followed could be heard across the square, and before its echo died away the game rooster with the bedraggled feathers slipped out to hide himself and think.—N. Y. Sun.

Worcester County

Mechanics' Association and Hall.

Brain and Brawn ought to secure success anywhere. In these two essentials, Worcester has never been wanting and when Nov. 27, 1841, Anthony Chase called to order a meeting of Worcester Mechanics in the Town Hall, his was the first voice raised in public with reference to the Organization now widely known as the Worcester Mechanics' Association. Ichabod Washburn was made Chairman and Albert Tolman, Secretary. Enthusiasm prevailed and eloquent speeches were made. On the motion of Wm. M. Bickford, a committee was chosen, consisting of Anthony Chase, Wm. Ledgate, Henry W. Miller, Wm. M. Bickford, Putnam W. Taft, Levi A. Dowley, Wm. A. Wheeler, Rufus D. Dunbar, John P. Kettell, James S. Woodworth, Albert Tolman, Hiram Gorham, Joseph Pratt, Henry Goulding and Edward B. Rice. This committee was to consider the subject of forming an association, having for its object, "the moral, intellectual and social improvement of its members, the perfection of the Mechanic arts, and the pecuniary assistance of the needy," and to report a constitution. Albert Tolman, Henry W. Miller and Joseph Pratt, very aged men, are yet with us. The organization was not effected without differences of opinion but that is not strange. Final action was had, February, 5, 1842, and Wm. A. Wheeler was made the first president, Ichabod Washburn, Vice. Pres., Albert Tolman, Secretary and Elbridge G. Partridge, Treasurer. A library was started at once and a course of lectures begun. Elihu Burritt gave the first lecture, he being at that time a Worcester mechanic. As might be expected, his address was on the importance of educating workingmen. Until a recent date, the Annual Course of Lectures was one of the city's institutions; but on account of the size of the association itself, it was found necessary to divide the course and to issue tickets to members only or with only a small number extra. The most eminent men in America and Europe have addressed Worcester people under the auspices of this association. After nearly fifty years of being, the library now numbers above 10,000 volumes, while a reading room with first class appointments has been maintained for many years.

The first fair was held in September, 1848. In 1849 and 1851, fairs were held but the idea of an exhibition every year was given up on account of the difficulty in finding a building large enough to hold it. A building of their own became a necessity and in 1850, an act of incorporation was secured, giving to the society the power to hold property to the amount of $75,000 real, and $25,000 personal estate. This act of corporation is made to Rufus D. Dunbar, Wm. T. Merrifield, Wm. A. Wheeler and others, their associates and successors.

Whatever reputation our city may have acquired in the intellectual world, it would be difficult to find any one who would underrate the obligations that all sustain to these early mechanics of Worcester. There were men in that band of organizers whose whole school life was found in a few months tuition in a back woods school house. They sent their sons to college and some of these sons have become famous in school, church and state but they owe all to those sturdy, honest men who, at the onset, stood sponsors for this Association.

The list of officers is a veritable roll of Worcester's nobility for fifty years. Perhaps the statement ought to be made that as early as 1819 the desirableness of a Mechanics' Association in the town was recognized and a Lyceum was established; but it was not until more than twenty years afterwards that the plans materialized. To name all the men who, first and last, have been connected with the association would be to reproduce the most reputable part of the Directory for that period.

Wm. A. Wheeler, who was the president from 1842 to 1844, left an excellent record of integrity and worth. He was a foundryman on Thomas Street and, in his day, was one of the most prominent business men in the city. His portrait hangs furthest east on the south side of the Main Hall. Ichabod Washburn the founder of the great Wire Works of Worcester was next first officer for two years. Then from '46 to '48, Freeman Upham was President. He was a carpenter and builder, father of Roger F. Upham.

The year 1848-9 had two Presidents,

Samuel Davis and Edward Lamb, the first having resigned. Rufus D. Dunbar followed in 1850-1. The next year was the term of office of that veteran Worcester machinist, Wm. T. Merrifield. He was succeeded by Albert Tolman, who had two years of presidency. Then came Henry S. Washburn for four years, or from 1853 to 1856-7. In those years, Mr. Washburn was associated with his brother, Charles T. Washburn in wire working at Quinsigamond.

From 1857 to 1858-9, George M. Rice was at the head. A life long Worcester business man, he is still among us. T. K. Earle held a single term, and then Richard Ball was in three terms bringing us down to 1862-3. Wm. B. Taber had a single term as did James A. Whipple, Edwin Morse and Joseph H. Walker. Mr. Whipple died in office and in those days Mr. Walker was J. Henry. Latterly he seems to have discarded the practice of parting his name in the middle. From 1867-8 to 1868-9, P. L. Moen was president, afterward Alzurus Brown and Phineas Ball had single terms. D. S. Goddard held the office two terms as did Charles H. Fitch, George S. Barton, Edwin T. Marble and Samuel D. Nye. Charles G. Reed was president in 1881-2, Benjamin J. Dodge from 1882-3 to 1883-4, Samuel E. Hildreth, next, to 1885-6, Samuel Winslow 1886-7, Robert H. Chamberlain three terms and then and lastly Ellery B. Crane who is just at the end of his first year. This list includes the names of four men who have been mayors of the city and nearly or quite all the others have been prominent in the affairs of city and state. Verily the Association has been an excellent school for them. As we have already seen, Albert Tolman was the first secretary, and he held the office two years. Then Henry W. Miller followed for a single year and this office was held in succession by Rufus E. Dunbar, Edwin I. Howe, Wm. Greenleaf, Samuel Smith, Southworth A. Howland, Phineas Ball who also first assumed the companion duties of treasurer in 1861-2. His immediate predecessor as treasurer was the late Alderman Marsh, father of Henry A. Marsh. From this date the two offices have been held by the same person and Mr. Ball was secretary, and secretary and treasurer for eight years. Maro Kendall died in office and was succeeded by Edwin A. Wood, who was in the position till 1870-71, when Wm. A. Smith was elected and he has regularly been elected for twenty years. As the organization has grown, the duties of the secretary have also increased but for several years, they demanded the full time of the officers.

The desire for a house of its own, led Deacon Ichabod Washburn to offer May 4, 1854 to give $10,000 for the building of a hall, provided a like sum should be contributed by others. The gift was accepted and the money subscribed. Locations were sought and debated, but finally the old Waldo Mansion, now moved back as a hotel on Waldo Street was bought and its site became the location of Worcester's most famous hall. It was dedicated March 19, 1857. Today, the society is nearly free from debt and has a property worth $300,000. Next week LIGHT will discuss the Hall, itself, within and without.

Frank J. Frayne, a well-known star in border drama of the Buffalo Bill type, is dead from rheumatism of the heart.

Geo. H. Ward, Post 10, G. A. R.

From week to week, LIGHT will print a complete Roster of the present and past members of the Post. A star before a name indicates a deceased member and a dagger, one who, for any reason, has ceased to belong. While the list will not include all the veterans of the late war who call Worcester home, it will allow the public to know who many of them are. When the soldier belonged to two organizations, the fact is expressed.

NAME.	COMPANY.	REGIMENT.
Abbey, C. E.	H.	4 N. Y. H. A.
Abbott, Edwin C.	K.	25 Mass. I
	K.	5 Mass. I
Adams, Charles	F.	1 Bat. H. A.
Adams, Charles B.	I.	36 Mass.
*Adams, Elias A.	K.	54 Mass.
†Adams, E. U.	K.	53 Mass.
†Adams, George S.	B.	25 Mass.
Adams, Henry B.	F.	42 Mass.
†Adams, Israel	C.	3 Mass. Cav.
†Adams, J. Q.	H.	18 Conn.
†Adams, Rueben W.	F.	15 Mass.
†Ager, J. F.	F.	42 Mass.
†Albie, Edwin C.	A.	34 Mass.
Alden, Benj. F. R.	D.	25 Mass.
Alden, Samuel E.	A.	31 Mass.
Aldrich, George S.	E.	4 Mass.
†Allen, Archibald		1 U. S. Art'y.
†Allen Charles	C.	25 Mass.
Allen, Charles N.	K.	2 N. H.
Allen, David B.	E.	42 Mass.
Allen, Edwin	3 Mich.	78 U. S. C. Inf.
†Allen, Henry A.	F.	1 Mass. H. A.
†Allen, Henry J.		11 Vt.
Allen, Henry W.	D.	51 Mass.
†Allen, Leander	K.	1 N. H. Cav.
†Allison, William	F.	51 Mass.
Ames, W. M.	3 Mass. Cav.	5 V. R. C.
†Anderson, Henry H.	I.	11 Mass.
Anderson, John	E.	57 Mass.
†Andrews, Wm. H.	D.	15 Mass.
Archambeau, Peter	G.	21 Mass.
†Arlen, John W.		7 Mass. Batt.
†Armington, Sam. W.	D.	15 Mass.
Armstrong, James	F.	51 Mass., A. 47 Mass.
Armstrong, James	I.	24 Mass.
†Arnold, C. Oscar	F.	1 Batt. H. A.
Ash, Robert	I.	1 Mass. H. A.
†Ashkettle, Wm. C.		15 Illinois
Atherton, Galen P.	D.	21 Mass.
Atkins, W. W.	D.	4 Mass. H. A.
*Atwood, C. G.	C.	25 Mass.
†Atwood, C. W.		10 N. H.
Austin, Edwin A.	G.	5 N. H.
†Avery, Eleazer	K.	4 Mass. Cav.
Avery, Frank I.	A.	51 Mass.
Avery, Frank J.	A.	51 Mass., I. 5 Mass.
Ayers, Charles R.	F.	60 Mass.

(To be continued.)

The Rediscovered Treatise of Aristotle.

In the British Museum were placed a few months ago, two long yellow strips covered with a style of Greek that would be a mystery to any one but a specialist. These two dingy strips of papyrus contain one of the famous works of antiquity, which, however, has been known to us only by tradition and short quotations for centuries, Aristotle's treatise on the Constitution of Athens.

But, first as to the manuscript itself. It was probably found in an Egyptian tomb, but as the native government claims all "finds," the Museum is dumb on this point. It originally consisted of four lengths of papyrus; the largest seven feet long, and containing eleven broad columns. Now we find that the papyrus was not intended originally for the treatise, for it is written on the back—or rough—side. On the recto, or face, is a system of Greek accounts, which are shown by their contents to have been kept by the steward of a farm about the year 78, A. D. Now probably the owner of the estate was a scholar, and when the accounts were useless, he used the reverse to copy this valuable piece of literature upon. The papyrus is remarkably well preserved and the ink, though brown, is, for the most part, legible. The sheets have few breaks in them, but are badly rubbed at the points of contact. The writing, which is in four hands, was probably done about 100 A. D.

Now as to the contents of the treatise. Aristotle was not only a scientist and philosopher, but a close student of constitutional history. This abstract, which is one of a hundred and fifty-eight such treatises made by Aristotle and his pupils, was probably written about 325 B. C. It consists of two parts. First, a historical account of the development of the constitution of Athens, from the legendary period down to 404 B. C. The second part, and I must say the less interesting portion is a detailed description of the various bodies and offices in Aristotle's own day.

To the student of history there is a mine of new information in the work, while even the reader will find much of interest in it. He will now learn that Cylon's conspiracy came before Draco; that Draco himself was something more than the author of the "death code," and that to him belong many reforms, which we have attributed to Solon.

The only edition yet issued is published by the British Museum and is known as Kenyon's edition. It is necessarily very faulty, and many of the emendations are improbable, but in the main it is useful, and will serve very well until longer study gives us a better text.

Those who desire to know more of this great work will do well to consult Mr. Kenyon's introduction to his text, for in it he gives a very scholarly resumé of the treatise. Also in the Review of Reviews for February-March there is an entertaining, but rather long-winded article, and, what is more interesting, a facsimile of the manuscript of this work which was written two thousand years ago.

W. M. T.

Two Errors Rectified.

Editor of Light:

In perusing the issue of your paper for Feb. 18 of the present year, among other statements which somewhat took us by surprise, the following fully aroused our devotion to the cause of truth and accuracy. "It has recently been said that Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria has advanced $200,000 from his private fortune to the Bulgarian Treasury to hasten the completion of her railways, thus one province of European Turkey has a railway friend—$200,000—just about the assessed valuation of a railway train composed of the latest Pullman design." Permit us to inform the gentleman from whose article the above is quoted, that he must have been seriously misled as regard two of his statements. In the first place, a closer acquaintance with foreign journals would have pointed out to him the fact that Bulgaria cannot in any sense be regarded as a "province of European Turkey." Any modern text-book on Geography would have supplied him with the intelligence that Bulgaria is an independent principality, governed by a hereditary prince and a national assembly. It is really amusing to notice the exceedingly vague idea that the majority of even cultured Americans seem to entertain concerning that all but mythical strip of territory. We would not for the life of us be at all surprised if some learned savant were to gravely inform the American public that the Bulgarians are under the sway of His Most Imperial Majesty, the Emperor of China, or His Beatitude, the Grand Llama of the Thibet.

In commenting on the condition of Railway travel in Bulgaria, Mr. H. K. M. quite innocently places his readers under the false impression that Bulgaria's railroad fund consists of the $200,000 which Prince Ferdinand advanced from his private fortune, etc.—"just about the assessed value of a railway train composed of the latest Pullman design!" We are sorry that the gentleman is in error, but the fact is that two years ago Bulgaria, a state of only three million inhabitants, obtained a loan of about one million and a quarter dollars for the construction of new lines and the completion of old ones. Taken proportionately, even Uncle Sam can hardly boast of having done much more to facilitate communication.

Phillips, Exeter.

S. I. T.

Reply.

1st. Our Academic critic cruelly sentences us to the foot of the geography class, "without benefit of the clergy." In his "devotion to the cause of truth and accuracy," he is "Aroused" (Worcester's definition of arouse, is to wake from sleep) because we were so unscholastic as to suppose that Bulgaria was a province of European Turkey, and we are sent to "foreign journals," to flounder around, in search for a sniff of historical accuracy. We must hold the word "province" responsible for the invasion of our critic's tranquility. If he will tarry awhile with Worcester's Dictionary, he will find the word "province," defined as "district" or "region"; our "aroused" champion of Bulgarian accuracy, could not with his heroic "devotion to truth," claim that Bulgaria is a "region" or "district;" of Asiatic Turkey; if it is not, then it must be a "region" or "district" of European Turkey. We are simply dealing with the accuracy of a locality, "region" or "district." The question of government is not in issue, and our critic simply states a very stale historical fact relating thereto. We made no allusion to the government, if we had, it would have been as severely immaterial to the subject, as his.

2nd. The private fund of $200,000 that Prince Ferdinand is said to have paid into the Bulgarian Treasury, was for a specific purpose, as clearly stated, "to hasten the completion of her railways." The word "completion" in this connection ought to be the last word in the English language to mislead even an unwary "Savant."

The only sane inference that our critic can extort, is that this fund, conspicuous in private munificence, was a supplementary one, and not an original one, that included the entire outlay of a railway system. Any other inference would be too fresh even for an academic freshman.

H. K. M.

Books and Bookmen.

Recently, in looking through the treasures of a shop in Bookseller's Row, London, and noting the exactness and minuteness of many of the descriptions given of shires and boroughs in Old England, the thought occurred to LIGHT that were all the civilized world to be thus closely written up the book shelves of all the libraries could not hold the results. It is one of the best phases of life that we do not all care for the same thing. In the town described, we shall find many copies of the book while of the equally well written description of the adjoining town, there will be only here and there a volume. Local history is not put forth by the thousand as are the livelier works of fiction; but how much longer they last? The History of Penobscot holds a proud place upon the shelf, while "Helen's Babies" is remorselessly rubbed over the floor. In this line of preserving the ancient landmarks, Massachusetts is pre-eminent. Of town and other local history, no state in the Union can boast so many as the Bay State. Now she is making an effort to more fully preserve the records of the several towns. To this end a commission has been appointed and the Third Report of the Commissioner Robert T. Swan is before us. In the Report, proper, to the Legislature, he sets forth the danger of delay in making adequate preparation for the care and safety of these priceless records, instancing several recent cases, as Wentworth, N. H. and Athol, Mass., where these traces of the past have been destroyed by fire. If this effort on the part of the state results in the more complete preservation of town records of all kinds, a great end will have been attained. Among the cities and towns that have printed their records, few make better appearance than our own Worcester; but we should hardly appear on the list at all were it not for the care, labor and persistency of F. P. Rice who, in the face of constant discouragement has persevered till he has put forth five volumes, with a sixth nearly ready. The Report concludes with some valuable suggestion as to the ink to be used in the making of records.

A Hint for Reading Clubs.

Let each member write on a bit of paper what book he or she would like to read during the next week or two weeks, that is, between the lapses of the club meetings. Then, when the votes are all collected—for these really are votes—let the book that has the greatest number be the one that is read at home, and at the next meeting every member will come with a little note-book in which is written what the opinion of the book is, any little anecdote about the characters or the places where the scene is laid, something that has been heard or read about the author, and a short personal opinion of the book as a specimen of good English, as to what its influence would be on the average reader, and whether it is a book that might be called permanent or evanescent. These written opinions should not occupy more than five minutes in reading, and you will be surprised to find what a fund of information is yours when the evening is over.—The Ladies' Home Journal.

"Jerry" the anonymous novel which has attracted so much approval as it appeared in Scribner's Magazine, will be published immediately in book form by Henry Holt & Co.

The Atlantic Monthly for April 1891. Contents. The Brazen Android. In two parts. Part one, William Douglas O'Connor; Easter Eve at Kerat-Moab, Clinton Scollard; From My Window, Olive Thorne Miller; The House of Martha, XXVI.—XXVIII, Frank R. Stockton; Arnold Winkelried at Sempach, W. D. McCrackan; Noto: An Unexplored Corner of Japan, XVII.—XXI, Percival Lowell; A Thought, Thomas S. Cullier; Prehistoric Man on the Pacific Coast, George Frederick Wright; Nenia Amoris, Thomas William Parsons; Capture of Louisbourg by the New England Militia, H. Francis Parkman; The Armenians and the Poite, S. G. W. Benjamin; The Muses in the Common School, Mary E. Burt; Cain, William H. Hayne; Go-the's Key to Faust, First Paper: The Prologues, William P. Andrews; Judaism and Christianity; James's Psychology; Perry's History of Greek Literature; General Cullum's West Point Register; Comment on New Books; The Contributors' Club.

St. Nicholas for April. Contents.

Frontispiece, portrait of a Child by Adriaen Hanne-man, engraved for St. Nicholas by T. Johnson; The Gates on Grandfather's Farm, Mary Hallock Foote; The Little Foot-Page, verse, Katherine S. Alcorn; The Fortunes of Toby Trafford, Chapters XXI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, J. T. Trowbridge; The Merry Tought, Verse, Margaret Johnson; The Boy Settlers, Chapters XII, XIII, Noah Brooks; A Battle, Verse, Richard E. Burton; The Astrologer's Niece Marries, Tudor Jenks; Jingle, "A Youth in the Days of Beau Nash" Lee Woodward; My Autograph Book, Second Paper, Edward Livingston Welles; In the Nasturtium Shop, Verse, Valentine Adams; Star Blossoms, Verse, Bessie Chandler; Elsie's Visit to Cloudland and the Moon, X, XI, XII, Frances V. Austen; April, Verse, Katharine Pyle; Busy Corners in the Orient, Frank Stiles Woodruff; A Great Fight, L. E. R.; Charlie's Shadows and their Shadow House, Mattie E. Pettus; An Easter Processional, Verse, Helen Gray Cone; Jack-in-the-Pulpit, The Letter-box, Headpiece drawn by A. Brenon; The Riddle-box, (Illustrated)

Every piece save two of verse, profusely illustrated.

St. Nicholas for young folks, conducted by Mary Mapes Dodge, Century Company, New York.

The portrait of a child is from an old painting, and a sweet face shaded by the long white feather appeals to every beauty lover. The "Gates on Grandfather's Farm" will be recognized by many a reader, so true to an eastern farm is it. And the child who never had the farm to play on has missed one great pleasure of a happy childhood. Toby Trafford has a joke played on him which after all is the best kind of a joke, as it is the means of starting him in a new business and leaves him much encouraged. The boy settlers build a house and call it the Whittier cabin, and the loved name is written with three cheers for the poet himself. In the next chapter Sandy gets lost. "The astrologer's niece" is bound to marry the prince and what she does to gain that end is the story of the next few pages. "My Autograph Book" is of interest to the older ones and as each autograph is from an eminent man or woman we advise all to get March and April numbers and read for themselves. The visit to cloudland is ended, but though Elsie has found many things she still has questions to ask, "Busy Corners in the Orient" "A Great Fight" and "A Bed Time Story," with several fine poems finish the main part of this number, but the letter box and the riddles will attract many to the last pages. The index up to the Volume is in this number.

"Babyland", D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, Price 50 cents. The first picture, an African family, paves the way for the mother's talk on natural history. The Paris pig tells his story. The poems "A Little Walk," "A Talk with Baby" and lastly a story, "At Dot's House" completes the magazine. Ever so interesting for the little folks and larger ones are pleased at seeing youthful wonder and pleasure.

The Contributors Club in the April Atlantic is of unusual interest. The story, all too short, of Parson Farley and the Lowell Offering is a fine picture of events fifty and more years ago. The recent article on Richard Grant White, stirs up a story about some Boston Loyalists like White's Tory Grandfather. To one who has searched through London to find the graves of Samuel Pepys and wife the brief reference here to Mrs. Pepys will be particularly pleasing. But the Club is by way of desert, but we always did like our pie first, we were then sure of it, so we will now turn back to the solid viands following O'Connor's Brazen Android. O'Connor was the man who so valiantly took up arms in behalf of Donnolly's Cryptogram. Arnold Winkelried at Sempach is an enjoyable article to the historical student. Prehistoric man on the Pacific Coast is in line with the deeper drift of studies in America today. Francis Parkman's valuable article, the Capture of Louisbourg is continued. The Muses in the Common School is in accord with the general awakening all over the country in educational matters. Boston and New York, Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

Tomorrow will be issued from Boston, 611 Washington street, a sporting paper called The Referee. It will be under the editorial management of Ed. A. Perry for ten years, dramatic critic, two years sporting editor, and three years London correspondent of the Boston Herald, who will have the assistance of a corps of competent writers and correspondents in all the principal American and foreign cities. The terms of The Referee are $2.50 per annum by mail, and five cents per single copy; it may be obtained of all the newsdealers or at the publication office. It would seem that this venture has a good start.

"Our Little Men and Women" an illustrated monthly for youngest readers. D. Lothrop Co., Publishers, Boston. Price $1.

"Luly's Saturday Baking," "Lady Gay" the continued story, "Kitty's Papa, How he went to the head," "Around Africa in a Wheelbarrow," the fourth chapter of "Fruits from a Sunny Land," "The story Mamma's Mother told her," Chapter II of "A day with a King," and "The Story of the Pied Piper," comprise the prose papers of this number. There is a copy of an old painting of Queen Elizabeth as a child, beside other pleasing pictures, and the poems of the number must not be overlooked, for those contain many thoughts for the little readers. The first on "Johnnie's Trials" is especially good.

"The Ladies' Home Journal", Curtis Publishing Co Philadelphia. Price $1.

This is clearly an Easter number, for there is a church spire, a branch of lilies, and a butterfly on the cover.

The best thing in the paper is the Easter story for the children and all should buy and read this pathetic story of "Lizbeth." The continued stories go on and the "Unknown

"Wives of Well known Men" has a picture and sketch of Mrs. Talmage. Flowers, Needlework and Fashion, all have their place and there is something for literary people, something for the artist, something for the girls and even the cook is provided for by a special column. No paper is published that will suit all classes as this one does. In this number they offer more prizes, this time to the musically inclined. Buy and read what will be given to the hard workers of the coming months.

Rambles Overland, A Trip Across the Continent by Almon Gunnison, Boston; Universalist Publishing House, 1891.

When we find the name of a Worcester writer upon the title page of a book, said book at once has a new attraction. Though the book itself is a new edition of one written by Dr. Gunnison before he called Worcester home, somehow or other, he has so filled with Worcester ways and thoughts that we claim not only his present; but also a considerable portion of his past.

Rambles Overland is an exceedingly breezy, lively account of a holiday trip to the Pacific Coast, making such stops as inclination warranted. Whenever he stops he finds something interesting to him and entertaining to him who reads. He goes over the Alleghany Mountains riding upon the locomotive; to Chicago he gives praise for her enterprise and go, and then he pauses at St. Paul and Minneapolis long enough to presage their future glory. Bismark is, at his writing, in her infancy and Mandan is no better. He makes the Tour of the Yellowstone Park, before the great improvements in accommodations wrought in later years; but the whole scene is a wonder to him and he makes his reader share his enthusiasm. He has to walk from the Lower Yellowstone Falls to the Mammoth Hot Springs, but he gets lots of pleasure from the trip. At Helena, Montana, in 1883, the Northern Pacific ends and stages have to be taken, those "Modern Dens on Wheels" as Artemas Ward calls them, but the way thus over the Rockies is not devoid of pleasure. He takes us rapidly down the Pacific Slope, till we reach the Columbia and thence along to Astoria and then upon the ocean to San Francisco. The chapter upon this city is a brilliant word picture of this remarkable city. Whether you were ever in it or not, you cannot help seeing the places named. To any one who has visited the Yosemite, the description brings back choice memories. To those who have not seen it, Dr. Gunnison's words will arouse a great desire to likewise see this crowning wonder of the world. Then follow the Orange Land of California, Across the Desert, A Mexican Detour with Colorado Days, all concluding with most charming Incidents of Travel. Everywhere there are Stay-at-home tourists. To such, this book is a veritable boon. It may be found for sale at the store of Putnam, Davis & Co.

The Century for April. Contents.

Mona Lisa, by Leonardo da Vinci, Engraved from the original, T. Cole, Frontispiece; Salons of the Revolution and the Empire, Amelia Gera Mason; Portraits of Madame de Stael, Mme. Necker; Light, R. K. Mun-Kittrick; Poems by Charles Henry Luders, The Four Winds—Under the Breaker—Rain on the Peaks—A Day in June; Charles Henry Luders (died Jan. 21st, 1891) Frank Dempster Sherman; "The Ninety and Nine"

Richard Harding Davis; Fetishism in Congo Land, by one of Stanley's Pioneer Officers, E. J. Glave; An Inflated Currency Act, David Dodge; Leonardo da Vinci, (Italian Old Masters) W. J. Stillman, with notes and engravings by T. Cole; Cold Cheer at Camp Morton John H. Wyeth; Early Intercourse of the Word-worths and De Quincey, with hitherto unpublished letters, H. A. Page; Two Expeditions to Mount St. Elias, Frederick Schwatka, Israel C. Russell; The Twenty-third of April, R. W. Gilder; Colonel Carter of Cartersville (Conclusion) F. Hopkinson Smith; Herr von Strienp-fell's Experiment, Allan McLane Hamilton; A Race Romance, Maurice Thompson; To California by Panama in '49, Julius H. Pratt; The Conquest of California, John Charles Fremont; The Official Policy for the Acquisition of California; Hardships of the Isthmus in '49, A. C. Ferris; Spanish Jealousy of Vancouver, John T. Doyle; The Faith Doctor, (Begun in February) Edward Eggleston; And After, Arlo Bates; Washington and Frederic the Great, Moncure D. Conway.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A "Cheap Money" Lesson, Country Roads, The Effect of Christian Science and Mind-Cure on "the Regular Practice."

OPEN LETTERS.

A Play and an Actor, L. Clarke Davis; The Discoveries of Pasteur, Koch and others, Mary Putnam Jacobs, M. D.; "The Builders of the First Monitor" Again, G. G. Benedict.

BRIC-A-BRAC.

"Literary Clog-Dancing" Margaret Janvier; The Riding School, J. B. F. Gill; One of the Palls, D. Robinson; "Castagne italiane," H. Stuart; Green Mountain Philology, A. F. Rice; Bookish Quatrains, J. K. Bangs; Fit Weeds, J. H. Morse; Dora's Eyes, I. S. Underhill; A Revised Fable, C. Evans; "W'en de Silk, etc." Edw. A. Oldham.

Ballou's magazine gives its accustomed cheerful greeting and LIGHT reads with pleasure and profit many of its interesting articles. The story of an escape from Andersonville is particularly diverting and will arouse memories in many a soldier's mind. Anecdotes of Bibles is a very instructive article. Recollections of Other Days or Trading in Africa is a little out of the usual run of such stories. It reads well. The magazine is published by G. W. Studley in Boston and is well worth the one dollar and a half a year charged for it.

Mrs. Elizabeth Waldo Kinnicutt.

It is not often that one person has, in a name, so many reminders of local history as had this estimable lady, whose death took place, Wednesday, March 25th., at the old home on Chestnut street, facing Pearl. She was born in Charlestown, May 9, 1817, the daughter of Leonard Moody Parker of Shirley. Her mother was Martha, a sister of the late Governor Lincoln and her grandmother was Martha, a daughter of the first Daniel Waldo. At the age of five years, she came to Worcester to live with her grandfather, the first Governor Lincoln. Later, her home was with her aunt, Mrs. Rejoice Newton and in 1837, she was married to the late Francis H. Kinnicutt.

They had six children, five of whom are living. These children were Mrs. Dr. George E. Francis of this city, the late Mrs. Dr. Wm. H. Draper of New York; Mr. John M. Barker of this city, Dr. Frank P. Kinnicutt of New York, Lincoln F. Kinnicutt of the firm of Kinnicutt & DeWitt of this city, and Prof. Leonard P. Kinnicutt of the Polytechnic Institute. One sister, Sarah Parker, wife of Joseph Mason of this city, also survives the deceased.

The funeral was held in her late home, Saturday, the 28th at 11 a.m. There was a large attendance of friends and relatives. The services were conducted by the Rev. A. S. Garver, of the First Unitarian Church. A former pastor, Rev. E. H. Hall of Cambridge was also present and offered prayer. The bearers were Dr. George E. Francis, John M. Barker, Lincoln N. Kinnicutt, Dr. Leonard P. Kinnicutt of New York. The interment was in the family lot at Rural cemetery.

A Ballad of Johnstown.

Raise a statue of the hero in the crowded city square Carved in pure Italian marble shall the figure tower
there;

And the white horse that he mounted when he rode the storied race,

Let him sit upon in glory in the teeming market place;

Bare of head upon the toilers from his steed he may look down

But they see him wearing ever martyrdom's symbolic crown.

Though no scroll upon the pedestal preserve his name unknown

Let the cross of Christ be graven on the bare unlettered stone.

For he heralded destruction and he bade the people flee
From the coming devastation of the mad imprisoned sea.

Roaring came the flood behind him with Niagara's thun-drous roar

And the doomed unconscious city lay scarce half a league before.

Rolling, tumbling, bursting, crashing swept the billow mountain heights

So the spray it whirled above it cast a rainbow on the sky.

On it came, all vast, terrific, world defiant in its force
As the Red Sea overwhelming Pharaohs myriads foot and horse!

Though the hills that offered safety reared their crests on either side

Without turning, down the valley raced the horseman with the tide—

Never greater stake was wagered on the sinews of a steed

For a thousand lives depended on that single chargers' speed

And his nostrils rang like trumpets when he drew his tortured breath

—Rang like bugle peals when squadrons charge to carnage, fame and death.

Faster, faster, flew they onward, like a leaf before the wind

And the water like a cyclone howled in soulless wrath behind,

While the rescued people huddled like a herd upon each height,

Saw it gain upon him slowly as the daybreak steals on night,

Saw him wave his hand in warning but the shouted words were lost

In the tumult like a foam-flake on the boiling Eagre tossed.

On they dashed—the spray had caught them, still they kept that awful pace—

Never since a horse wore iron rode a man so stern a race!

Then as some tremendous breaker half-shut like a miser's hand,

Reaches down to tear the gray rock from its deep bed in the sand,

—Rolled the flood o'er horse and rider, seized them in its rending claw,

Nought save struggling wreckage floated over buried Counemaugh!

Somewhere underneath the ruin—underneath oozy mud
Lay a body that had prisoned something mightier than the flood,

For he won! and though he perished, safely had he reached the goal;

Down the road of death to Glory straight had passed a Christ-like soul.

FRANCIS ZURI STONE.

Petersham, Mass.

Philip A. White who died in Brooklyn recently, was a Negro, a Millionaire, a cultured gentleman and one of the best chemists in that city or New York. Nearly half a century ago he established a wholesale and retail drug store in the "Swamp" in that city, and later built a large store and warehouse in Gold street. Here he grew rich and achieved a wide reputation in the trade. For many years he has been prominent in educational circles in Brooklyn. There are few better private libraries than that collected by the late Dr. White, as he was always called.

The Lost Baby.

[This is a true story and refers to the loss of a nephew of the author.]

[Continued from last week.]

The Katy-did's song and faint sounds of cow-bells broke the day's stillness around. At last Frankie's strained eyes grew weary, yawning, he started off once more, no doubt thinking mamma and Bessie or even the old "ooman wi one toof" better than these lonely, chilly woods, for he began to sob and cry "Bread and butter me do."

Now a glimmer of light flashed out of the darkness. He ran or scrambled toward it for the ground was full of undergrowth. His foot with one shoe troubled him and he sat down and pulled it off. The light was from a brook, wide enough here to let in the last brilliant tints of the sky which were reflected in the waters.

The ground, full of bare roots and hemlock branches slanted abruptly down to its brink. He was very thirsty and sat down between two small trees with a plaintain leaf he had gathered. He tried to form a cup as he had often seen Bessie do, but it was with many a yawn and sob. The little fingers worked more and more awkwardly for his eyelids were heavy with sleep. The pretty, curly head fell with a nod or two against one of the trees he sat between, then slipping gradually from that support the tired child rolled over on his side, only a few feet from a deep brook, fast asleep. A hemlock branch turned over with him, covering him from view, except the bare feet, now wet and brown with mud. It was a chilly night and all the clothing he had on was a woolen skirt and a little cotton dress. Poor baby! Lost in the woods. Yet, only a mile away, a loving mother longed to clasp him to her warm breast.

Saturday morning a large body of men were secured and they commenced the search in a systematic manner. They went abreast a few feet apart and carried a large swarth through the woods and swamps. Small parties also went in different directions and made independent search. Still no results appeared and at night-fall the mystery was as deep as ever.

Men stood in groups discussing possible theories. Some, thought he might have been carried off by an eagle. Some, by a bear or other wild beast. They thought they saw places where large animals had lain on the ground and prints of their feet, but there was no definite clue.

The mother would not believe that her baby was dead, but the father gave up all for lost. "Friday night was severe and cold," he said, and no baby could live out of doors."

It was decided they were all too tired to go in pursuit again until Sunday morning. It was late then on Saturday night. The children and Bessie Barry had gathered around the kitchen fire.

Merton, restless and pale, walked from window to window peering out in the darkness, for it was a very cloudy night.

"I'd give a dollar to know where Frankie is," said Jack, wiping the tears from his cheek with his brown little hand as he sat on the kitchen wood-box.

"A dollar! What's a dollar compared to Frankie?" said Bessie indignantly.

But Jack's dollar was like the Widow's Mite. It was all he had and all his own earnings; saved penny by penny as given to him by the summer boarders for bait for fishing, for fishing lines straightened out, errands done and mail carried. When these savings had reached a dollar, they were laid away in the form of a crisp bank note. A precious treasure and quite a fortune was that dollar Jack would give to know where Frankie was.

Their father now came in and bade them go to bed and both boys climbed to the kitchen chamber.

Bessie's heart was heavy with sorrow. With quivering lips she kneeled by her mother, who was lying on the lounge, "Mother," she said, "I will never neglect a duty again. If I could only suffer for our baby," here she broke down, sobbing, "I cannot go to bed while ——" but she was unable to finish the sentence. Her mother drew her gently to her and whispered, "daughter we will still hope and trust in Providence." But a sudden spasm shook her frame as the many horrors of this terrible sorrow flashed before her mind.

Bessie Barry led the grief stricken child to her room and put her to bed, where tired nature proved its power and she soon slept.

Many troubles had the old Quakeress shared in her life time but none so pitiful as this. She too blamed herself for leaving the child until he was safe under his sister's care, but no one else had such a thought. Cut off by half a century from kindred and friends long dead she longed for affection and sympathy. How many families have such in their midst; sharing food, light and warmth and yet going hungry! Starved for a loving word or caress, a generous courtesy that will prove their presence, not a burden.

Sunday morning many carriages crowded to the little farm. All were determined to make one last effort to find the body of the child; for no one believed a baby almost naked could live in the cold of those frosty nights. Large parties were organized to scour the woods in all directions, first having agreed upon a signal, to fire three guns in quick succession if any signs were discovered.

The mother was by this time too ill to recognize her children.

Mr. Oswald had little hope, but he felt strengthened by the tender sympathy and generous help of his neighbors.

The Sabbath dawned clear and still, various parties had set out for their final search. A slender little figure, with limping gait, an ear-trumpet in one hand, crossed the fields opposite to the woods and disappeared beyond the bushes. Bessie Barry could not rest content without hunting for the lost baby. She scanned the foot of every tree as she entered the grand old forest raising her trumpet to her ear to catch any sound that might indicate his whereabouts. There was no path yet she made her way quite easily over the many branches and the undergrowth; her short skirt and simple dress did not hinder her progress. She pushed slowly on stopping now and then to tie strips of white rag to a bush or tree for a land mark. At length she paused to rest and raised her trumpet to her ear turning her head slowly in all directions. Hark! A sound reached her. It was like the moan of a sick child. Again she heard it. A ray of sunlight brightened the foliage of two small trees near her. It was reflected from a brook just below them. She scanned every inch of ground intently and knelt down to peer more closely under the bushes. Soon she saw between the leaves of a hemlock branch near her the familiar figure of the calico dress Frankie wore and she almost touched his little bare feet. In a moment she pulled away the hemlock bough and stooped over the baby. He was alive but moaning and unconscious. It was a pitiful sight. Her joy at finding him was chilled by his fearful condition. His eyes were set in his head and a dark purple rim surrounded them and his mouth. She hung her white sunbonnet on a tall branch and gave a shrill call, such as she had often given in her younger days for a dinner call, on the farm. It was a faint sound that could scarcely be heard a stone's throw. But Judge Jones was near, he had seen her white sunbonnet. "Why Bessie Barry have you found him!" he cried, "and is he living? But wait!" And the report of his gun rang out to signal the good news to the rest. He set his gun against a tree and lifted the child tenderly in his arms. "There is no time to lose, I fear he will die," he said.

Men now came running in all directions towards them. Many wept as they saw the baby alive, but too ill from exposure and want of food to live. He was found scarcely a mile from the entrance to the wood.

Bessie Barry, with tears of joy streaming down her cheeks, had not strength to follow the party home. They had all gone she thought and she sat down on an old trunk of a pine tree to rest, but a stalwart young farmer looked back and seeing her, returned, and gathering her in his arms, trumpet and all, insisted she did not weigh more than a feather and carried her to the farm-house door.

Frankie had been placed on the bed beside his mother, who scarcely yet realized his presence. His father bent over him with delight, but it was mingled with a great dread for the baby's eyes were glazed and he could not speak.

No one seemed able to think or act and much was to be done yet to save the child.

Bessie Barry beckoned to Bessie, who stood trembling with joy, and fear at the foot of the bed.

"Come" she said "we must work hard to save Frankie."

"Oh, let me do something!" said Bessie, earnestly.

"Make a good fire and let us heat water and milk for him," said Bessie Barry.

Soon the old lady had the sick baby on her lap, his clothes were removed and the two Bessie's rubbed his swollen limbs. Hot flannels were wrapped around him and warm milk, given by spoonfuls, was at length swallowed. The little fellow showed some improvement after a long time. His respiration and temperature became natural the lids drooped over his glassy eyes and he slept.

Joy had revived Mrs. Oswald, but too ill to move, she could only look gratefully on, while Bessie Barry worked so wisely over her sick baby. At length Frankie was laid beside her. A look of sweet content and thankfulness shone on her face as she softly took her baby's hand and held it. With her other hand she drew old Bessie Barry's gentle face to her own and kissing her warmly said, "I can never repay you for what you have done for me today."

A physician sent by kind Judge Jones now arrived and examined Frankie, who still slept. "Every thing has been done, and well done," he said, "let the child sleep and give nourishment at intervals, he will soon be running around."

He gained slowly but surely, and the next Sunday morning, though he had not yet been dressed, was able to stand and walk a little.

"The ooman wi one toof" was his slave forever and he was a loving little tyrant. Bessie Barry felt that her remaining days on earth were indeed blessed, for she had a place in the hearts as well as in the home of the Oswald's.

New Churches.

"What about the wisdom of planting new churches in our city in localities somewhat distant from larger ones, which will need help for a number of years in their support? Do these new churches in reality weaken our strength as a denomination? Let the facts answer.

In 1878 when the Congregational City Missionary Society was organized, only seven of our fourteen Congregational Churches were in existence, containing 2,374 members. During the last twelve years when we have been somewhat active in planting churches where we thought they were needed, while the number of churches has been doubled, the membership has increased from 2,374 to more than 4300, an increase of more than 81 per cent, while the population of the city has increased only 47 per cent."

Noticing the above encouraging statement "The Headlight," a paper published in the interest of City Mission, induced the inquiry if this increase of churches and church membership in our city was exceptional, or applicable to other denomination. As I have only the official statistics of the Baptist churches, I append them, believing that the facts about the Methodist and other christian churches would compare favorably with those given.

In 1878, there were only four Baptist churches in Worcester, reporting 1140 members. In 1890 nine regular Baptist churches were reported, with 2052 members, showing an increase in the twelve years of five churches and 912 members, equal to 80 per cent. increase. Besides these, two other Baptist Churches have been added—the Church of Christ and the Free Baptist—whose membership I do not know. If we could ascertain the membership and growth of all the Christian churches in Worcester during the past twelve years, I think the percentage of growth would be nearly if not quite double the percentage of growth of the population of the city. H. J. H.

The most valuable gift of a man or woman to this world is not money nor books, but a noble life.—Anon.

He who is faithful over a few things is a lord of cities. It does not matter whether you perch in Westminster Abbey, or teach a ragged class, so you be faithful. The faithfulness is all.—George MacDonald.

Remarks of President

M. E. Gates at Amherst Alumni Reunion, Worcester, March 24.

What does a young man wish to secure by a course of study at college? If his object is merely to form social ties with the largest possible number of the college men of his decade, the choice becomes comparatively simple. "Go with the crowd," is the rule. Those institutions whose numbers are among the thousands, like a huge snow ball, will gather numbers still more rapidly by reason of their bulk. The agglomerative tendency is very strong in young persons; and a certain degree of culture, a certain clearness of vision, one must have to save him from giving undue importance to mere numbers. Yet few young men, who are thoughtful enough to ask reasons for the choice of a college, would consciously decide the question in favor of a particular institution merely because its numbers were greatest. If a young man is too thoughtful merely to "follow the crowd," what are the considerations which should lead him to choose one institution rather than the other? For a young man who seriously asks this question, two large classes of institutions must at one disappear from the list of possibilities. He cannot afford to spend four years at a small and weak college, which is not properly equipped with scholarly men to teach, or with libraries, apparatus and laboratories for teaching. On the other hand among institutions which have throngs of students in attendance, he will not allow himself to select a college where the standards of scholarship are notoriously low no matter how promising the equipment of the institution in buildings or in endowment. High standards of scholarship must be maintained, or the years at college will inevitably suffer from a large percentage of wasted time and effort than any young man should be willing to tolerate.

But among institutions that are thoroughly well equipped for their work—institutions with strong and scholarly faculties, with ample libraries, apparatus and laboratories—institutions which command the teaching services of strong specialists and great teachers—is the presumption steadily in favor of the institution where are massed the greatest number of students? We of Amherst answer "no." While we recognize clearly the prestige acquired in the eyes of many by the mere fact of numbers, while we freely and gladly admit the wealth, the power, and the noble history of some of those institutions of learning where young men are massed by the thousand,—we still believe that in the very nature of young manhood, and in the essential scope of college education there are strong reasons for preferring an institution such as Amherst to institutions where the masses of young manhood are so huge as to attract attention by mere force of numbers.

"The true test of civilization," says Emerson, "is not the census, nor the size of cities, nor the crops—but the kind of men the country turns out." By the same test, try the colleges of our land. For the boy who at eighteen decides upon his college, for the parents who decide for him and with him,—of more importance than any other consideration is the question of the power of a college by its subtle association; by its atmosphere and its life, to form sound character, while it stimulates scholarship and develops power in its students.

At an occasion such as this, perhaps it is allowable for me to speak with greater freedom than I should allow myself were you not a body of Amherst men holding certain convictions in common. In my boyhood, I looked forward to entering one of our largest Universities, preparing for college with this purpose in view. But the system of giving instruction almost exclusively through inexperienced tutors for the first year or two of the course at the large Universities did not attract me. The opportunity to pursue my favorite lines of study from the very beginning of the college course not with youthful tutors, entirely untrained in the art of teaching who were experimenting upon young men by their first year's work, but with two of the foremost scholars of the country, led me to decide that the first two years of my course should be spent at a smaller college. High as is my appreciation of the work of the best of our larger institutions, I have never regretted the choice I then made.

The truth is, life vindicates itself as after all the supreme power. All attempts to resolve life into mechanical forces or chemism or electric currents, fail. Life is the power. The "architectonic principle" which builds up each organization after its kind lies beyond the most searching analysis which can be applied by the physicist, the chemist or the biologist. Life has its own laws, and out of the inorganic world builds up the organic. The life of the mind and soul has its own laws, too. The deepest need of our time is that in connection with our clearer appreciation of the mighty forces of social and national life we retain a sincere respect for and a profound belief in the reality and the value of each man's own personality. The importance of a young man's life to himself—the profound truth that each man's personality calls for and deserves the most careful consideration, the most reverent treatment, should never be forgotten. The personality of every student should be respected, and to it should be given the noblest possible bent and the strongest possible stimulus for good.

We do not think that this work can be best done where it is necessary to deal with young men in the mass. There is one form of growth and development for the tree which stands in close rank with thousands of its kind in a dense forest, and a different and much fuller growth for the same tree if it stands where it has more of space and air and sunshine falling full upon it—where it stands by virtue of its own root and fibre and not because it is shoulder to shoulder with too dense a mass of similar growths. Perhaps we see in this one reason why so many men of power have come from other than our largest colleges. Crowded "institution life" of all kinds is unwholesome. It is possible to have a "youthfulness" that is overwhelming and unwholesome where youth are massed too densely. Valuable as is that influence in a course of liberal study which comes from the life of a young man's fellow students, the best results are attained where the proportion of strong and dominant personalities in the teaching force is not too small when compared to the number of the students. The mere agglomeration of students does not make scholars. At all the larger institutions the logic of events has compelled the breaking up of students into smaller groups, and giving each of such smaller groups to some one man for advice, direction, and as much as possible of personal contact. The institution, which is not so overcrowded with students as to sacrifice the great advantage which comes from a personal acquaintance between the under graduates and the strong members of the faculty, has an advantage which all candid men must recognize. And this possibility of regarding with friendly interest the development of each man's personality is no slight advantage in these days when all who study morals as well as physical hygiene are protesting earnestly against the evils of crowded institutional life, where too often the individual is sacrificed to the assumed welfare of the whole. To have free breathing room is a blessing. This holds in the intellectual and moral as well as in the physical life.

For this and for other reasons Amherst men believe in the work of Amherst. We honor her past; we believe in her future. We think that in point of size Amherst is very near the golden mean for college work. Her classes are sufficiently large to insure to a young man the most stimulating intercourse with classmates of ability who share his tastes—the impetus that comes from generous rivalries and noble friendships; yet her classes are not so large that the man's personality is merged in the mass of men about him. It is possible where classes do not exceed the size of ours to perpetuate those close relations between students and the ripe scholars who are their instructors—that personal friendship between professors and students, which is an inspiration and an impulse to young men, often changing the entire course of their lives. Many of you can bear witness from your own experience, as can I from mine to the truth of this assertion. From hand to hand the lamp of learning has been passed down the ages. In that awakening consciousness of new capacities which attends the young collegian, nothing does so much to arouse, to stimulate and to guide into right lines of effort the growing powers of a young man's brain and heart, as does this privilege of close friendship with a scholar of acknowledged reputation. Who that has ever read it can forget Hazlitt's fine tribute to the effect upon his whole life of one crisp morning's walk with Coleridge, when that great man honored him who as yet hardly dared to aspire to authorship, with such genial and kindly interest as lent new dignity in his own eyes to all his plans, aroused his consciousness of his own capacities and gave him hope and confidence. In such intimate relations with their instructors—hardly possible where the members of a class are counted by the hundred—the students of a college with smaller classes have often found an influence which more than counterbalances the impetus which comes of mere numbers.

Are we not taught by the study of organic life everywhere that there is, for the strongest action and the freest play of life, powers, a limit of tension, a norm of bulk, beyond which the most desirable results are lost or endangered? For purposes of liberal education, for college training as distinguished from professional or technical studies, does not a true wisdom teach a certain limitation in numbers?

At Amherst we believe in a college course truly liberalizing in its tendencies from beginning to end, yet such a course as gives liberal culture, not by withholding all direction in study, not by advising every boy to choose at sixteen the one branch of learning to which he will give attention while excluding all others, but by encouraging every young man to test his powers by electing freely certain fundamental lines of study in each of the four great departments of knowledge that he may acquire for himself a broad outlook in whatever field his later work may lie, and to the choice of a field, for his life work may bring an intelligent knowledge of his own capacities which no man can acquire until he has tested himself in more than one line of work.

Through one of your distinguished fellow-citizens who has for years held a leading place in the highest legislative body of our nation, this city has been most honorably connected in the thought of the American people with many measures in national legislation, of which Massachusetts is proud, and in which the entire nation rejoices. There is no centre of learning in our land where the thought of training men for loyal, intelligent and useful citizenship is more steadily borne in mind than in the life of Amherst college. Not merely in the lines of study which have been followed and the additional and broader lines which are now laid out in special training, the studies that are brought into play in public life, but in the spirit that pervades the institution, the ideals of true American citizenship are steadily dominant. If that has characterized Amherst in the past, I can speak with perfect freedom since it involves work which was undertaken and carried forward before I had any relations with the institution whose alumni I meet here tonight. It is a matter of the deepest gratification to me as I become familiar with the student life of Amherst to see how true a tone of manly thoughtfulness pervades the institution. I am disposed to give no slight credit for this most satisfactory state of affairs to that habit of free and manly exchange of thought regarding the life of the college which is stimulated by the college senate in what is known as the "Amherst System", of co-operation in government between students and faculty. Certainly no man who is in close acquaintance with student life at various centres of learning in our country, when he becomes familiar with life at Amherst can fail to see how strikingly the standards that prevail at Amherst are fitted to cultivate that moral thoughtfulness in matters of self-government which must be the distinctive characteristics of American citizens if our Republic is to prosper. We do not doubt that our Republic is to prosper, while we have such men in public life as represent Massachusetts in our national councils. While the standards of intelligence in matters touching self-government are continually rising through our country, no true man, however clearly one may see certain dangers that threaten our institutions, no true man can doubt the ultimate triumph of the truest and best American ideas of government. Upon you as Amherst men—upon all our higher institutions of learning, there rests an especial responsibility to see to it that college bred men are leaders in all that makes for the best and noblest citizenship. The education we have received, we hold in trust, that through such leadership as must attach to well-trained minds and strong personalities, the college bred man of our country may bless the entire land. And this can be done, I need not tell you, only through loyal public spirited interest in all the affairs of the whole people. To raise the standards of education, to lift the tone of morality for all the people in every community should be the purpose of all liberally educated men; for in our land the people are King, and those who love deeply and intelligently their fellow men are true to popular government only when by seeking to bless the whole people, they cry in deed and word, "God bless the King!"

FLASHES.

Knowledge is of two kinds. We know a subject ourselves, or we know where we can find information upon it.—Dr. Johnson.

"Look forward and not back."

The traveled track

Bears many a footstep thou wouldst fain retrace.

Press onward to the goal,

The homeland of the soul,

And leave the wayward past for God's hand to efface.

—Christian Statesman.

Give fools their gold, and knaves their power;

Let fortune's bubbles rise and fall;

Who sows a field, or trains a flower,

Or plants a tree, is more than all

For he who blesses most is blest;

And God and man shall own his worth

Who toils to leave as his bequest

An added beauty to the earth.

And, soon or late, to all that sow,

The time of harvest shall be given;

The flower shall bloom, the fruit shall grow,

If not on earth, at last in heaven!

—Whittier.

Alliteration.

The following is probably the most remarkable specimen of alliteration extant. Any one who has written an acrostic, and who has felt the embarrassment of being confined to particular initial letters, can appreciate the ingenuity demanded by the following, where the whole alphabet is fathomed, and each word in each line, exacts its proper initial:

"An Austrian army, awfully arrayed,
 Boldly, by battery, besieged Belgrade.
 Cossack commanders cannonading come,
 Dealing destruction's devastating doom.
 Every endeavor engineers essay,
 For fame, for fortune—fighting furious fray.
 Generals 'gainst generals grapple—great God!
 How honors Heaven heroic hardihood!
 Infuriate—indiscriminate in ill,
 Kinsmen kill kinsmen—kindred, kindred kill!
 Labor low levels loftiest, longest lines— [mines,]
 Men march 'mid mounds, 'mid moles, 'mid murderous
 Now noisy numbers notice nought
 Of outward obstacles, opposing ought;
 Poor patriots, partly purchased, partly pressed,
 Quite quaking, quickly quarter, quarter 'quest.
 Reason returns; religion's right redounds,
 Suwarrow steps such sanguinary sounds,
 Truce to the Turk—triumph to thy train!
 Unjust, unwise, unmerciful Ukraine!
 Vanish vain victory, vanish victory vain!
 Why wish we warfare? wherefore welcome were Xerxes, Ximenes, Xanthus, Xaviere?
 Yield, ye youths! ye yeoman, yield your yell!
 Zeno's Zarp-ter's Zoroaster's zeal,
 And all attracting—against arms appeal."

Lovers of Good Tea and Coffee

Should buy their goods where they can depend on always getting a pure, fresh article, of the best quality. Our many patrons will testify that this is true of the

*New England Tea Co.,*

273 MAIN STREET.

Give us a trial and be convinced.

D. A. HOWE.

MRS. MORGAN'S

Private School and Kindergarten,

Y. M. C. A. Building, 10 Elm Street.

SPRING TERM OPENS APRIL 6, 1891.

W. H. TWICHELL,

Gold, Silver and Nickel Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechanic St., Worcester, Mass.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,

BOOK * BINDING

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES

at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,

W. L. BROWN, Manager.

L. J. ZAHONYI,

Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Household.

Aunt Em suggests a memory help in the culinary department. When the tired and perhaps over-worked mother has prepared some nice tid-bit, which requires frequent attention in the process of baking, if she will tear off a strip of newspaper and shut it in the oven door, with a good sized piece hanging out, she will find it a very effective reminder of the contents within, which need her care. Another thought. A small ten cent brush, four and a half by two inches in size, is a decided labor-saving machine to use in the process of washing potatoes and all edible roots.

MRS. E. B. B.

Many persons are fond of onions in the uncooked state, and certainly they are both appetizing and healthful. But no one wishes to be made offensive in society by having the odor of onions on the breath. In order to counteract the odor, leaves of parsley, eaten with vinegar, will be found most useful.

If, when baked, a loaf has a strained, wrinkled crust, like an unhealthy skin, it is sure proof that the fault is in the flour. The crust should be smooth, even, a rich brown, and have an easy look upon the loaf.

When suffering from tired or strained eyes, bathe them in hot water several times a day.

Camphor and olive oil make a very efficient remedy for hay fever. Use a small lump of camphor and gently heat it with the olive oil for several hours. Apply to the inside of the nose.

Children's pictures taken on glass, mounted like any other transparency, and used as such, hanging in the window of the living-room, are a freak of fashion, but a beautiful and tender "freak." Considering their elegance they are not expensive; costing four dollars for ordinary size.

Icing for cake may be prevented from cracking when cut by adding one tablespoonful of sweet cream to each unbeaten egg. Stir all up together, then add sugar until as stiff as can be stirred.

Pickles of some kind should accompany fish, because of its alkaline nature.

By applying a little of the best carriage oil varnish carefully with a camel's hair brush to the edges of broken china, the parts being neatly joined together, the fracture will, when thoroughly dry, be hardly perceptible, and the china will stand fire and water.

For stiff neck, sore throat, pains in the chest, a good remedy is to rub some oil or vaseline into the skin, then cover with a piece of cotton wadding, the shiny side outward, and wear until the discomfort is gone.

For scrofulous troubles, make a tea of ripe or dried whortleberries and drink in the place of water.

A good liniment for chilblains is made of one ounce of camphor and four ounces of olive oil, dissolved together by gentle heat.

Neuralgia in the face will often be cured by applying grated horseradish to the temples. If the pain is in the shoulder or arm, apply the horseradish to the wrist. It is prepared the same as for the table.

If sponge cake is mixed with cold water it is yellow, but if the water be boiling hot the cake will be white.

ALWAYS ON HAND!

VENISON, TURKEYS,
GEESE,

WILD GAME,
CHICKENS,
DUCKS,

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass

EDWARD B. CLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

THE CRITERION

Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

Worcester Dress Cutting School,

45 Pleasant St.,

For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circular.

Mrs. L. F. Walch.

E. W. COFFIN,

Store Fixtures

310 Main Street, Worcester.

Name this Paper.

LE * JOLLY * FRENCH * DYEING AND * CLEANSING * HOUSE

First-Class Work at Short Notice.

Reference for Laces and Lace Curtains, Gross & Strauss

Cut out this coupon from LIGHT, and bring it with you and get 10 per cent discount from regular prices.

C. T. MELVIN, PROPRIETOR, WALNUT ST

The superiority of

*ROSE CREAM LOTION***

lies in the fact that it contains no Oils or Greasy Substances, no Chemical or Mineral Poisons, and will not injure the most delicate skin. Can be applied at any time; quickly absorbed. Ladies troubled with catchy fingers, working on silk and satin, will find it an excellent remedy. It will not leave the hands sticky.

For Gentlemen's use after shaving it is without an equal.

Try it. Get a

SAMPLE BOTTLE FREE.

Large bottles, 25c. Found in all first class Drug stores. Prepared by

PERKINS & COMPANY, Sole Proprietors,
Worcester, Mass. BUSH & CO., Wholesale Agents.

C. G. MARCY, BALL ORDERS, PROGRAMMS AND WEDDING INVITATIONS A SPECIALTY. 398 MAIN ST., cor. Pearl. ARTISTIC PRINTING.

STARKIE'S DYE HOUSE,

254 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Ladies and Gents' Garments

Dyed and Cleansed

in a Superior Manner.

Tailoring Establishment.

Custom-Made goods at almost Ready-made Rates.

254 MAIN STREET.

Underwood PHOTOGRAPHER
*****
Children's Portraits
A Specialty
*****
326 Main, op. Mechanics Hall

F. S. BLANCHARD & CO.,

* PRINTERS. ***

Book, Newspaper, Catalogue, Church, Society, Wedding and Commercial Printing of every kind executed in the best modern style.

No orders too large; none too small.

154 FRONT ST.

Horace Kendall,

DEALER IN

Furniture, Ranges, Carpets

AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Goods sold on instalments if desired. Prices low as any house in New England.

No. 319 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Mechanics Hall Building.

Good to Eat.

Oatmeal Blanc-mange.

Soak a cupful of coarse oatmeal over night in a pint and a half of water. In the morning, beat the oatmeal well with a spoon, and afterwards pass all the soluble portion through a fine strainer. Place the liquid in the inner cup of a double boiler, and cook for half an hour. Turn into cups, cool fifteen or twenty minutes, and serve warm with cream and sugar, or a dressing of fruit juice.

Almond Cream.

After having peeled and pounded two ounces of sweet almonds—to which three bitter ones should be added—dilute with a pint of boiling cream. Add one quarter of a pound of sugar, the yolks of two eggs, well beaten, and two teaspoonfuls of vanilla, and let it thicken in a double saucepan (used for soft custard). It is served surrounded with a border of sugared almonds.

Fricassed Eggs.

Eight eggs, boiled hard and sliced. Two tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, one-half cup of milk, one tablespoonful of chicken gravy, pepper and salt to taste. Put the butter into a small saucepan and melt it slowly, add the flour, and rub smooth. Next add the milk and gravy, and lastly, the sliced eggs, pepper and salt. Stir until hot all through, and turn into a hot-water dish.

Oatmeal Crisps.

One cup oatmeal, nearly one-half teaspoonful salt mixed together dry; cover with cold water, and let it stand half an hour. Drain off any water remaining; drop by spoonfuls on a tin, spreading as thick as possible. Bake until brown and crisp, but not scorched in the least.

Breakfast Cake.

Into one pint of flour mix two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar. In one cup of milk dissolve one teaspoonful of soda. Beat two eggs with two teaspoonfuls butter and three of sugar. Add the milk, and then stir in the flour. Beat well and bake in a quick oven.

Egg Toast.

Beat two eggs very light; add to them one pint of milk. Slice baker's bread or nice light homemade bread, and dip the pieces into the milk and egg, letting them lie long enough to be thoroughly moistened and yet not fall to pieces. Fry a delicate brown in hot, fresh suet. Serve with sugar.

Salt in one meal improves the toast and if fried in butter will suit the common taste better as it does not cool so quickly.

Breakfast.

There are no doubt cheaper articles of food than fine oranges, but there are few more wholesome and appetizing, and all housewives are not compelled to count their pennies when marketing. Alas! some such favored ones often make a thoughtless, short-sighted investment of them, and provide their families with a monotonous fare, that soon cloy the strongest appetite of even the strongest.

If there is one meal that more than another requires the housewife's especial attention it is the breakfast. And yet in many homes it is the most hastily served, unsatisfactory meal of the day. Many a faithful employee has been needlessly rebuked, and many a customer unfairly dealt with, because the wrong keynote was struck at home in the early morning.—Housekeeper's Weekly.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

Heywood Foundry Comp'y,

GARDNER, MASS.

This Heater is unsurpassed for excellence of workmanship and is the best in the market. Now is the time to secure estimates. The following is one of a great number of testimonials from our leading citizens:

WORCESTER, MASS, April 12, 1890.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER:

Gentlemen—Having used one of your Heaters for two seasons with satisfaction, I can recommend it to anyone, as it will do all they claim. Respectfully,

JOHN E. ALLEN, 917 Main Street.

Branch Office, 39 Pearl Street, Worcester.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H Howland, D. D. S.
11 Pleasant St.,

Dentists. Worcester, Mass

Residence, 61 West Street.

The Readers of Light
I most cordially invite
To call at my

Model Drug Store

When in want of anything
They would expect to find
In a metropolitan establishment of its kind.

Respectfully,

Geo. E. Fairbanks, Druggist,

10 FRONT STREET.

J. W. GREENE,
P L U M B E R.

Dealer in Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces. Steam and Gas Fitting. Jobbing in all its branches promptly attended to. Telephone Connection. 51 Main Street, Cumming's block.

Worcester Coal Company,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

COAL. COAL.

General office, 18 Pearl St., Y. M. C. A. Building; Yards, 23 Manchester St. and 319 Southbridge St.

Over on Our Street.

The rising generation hereabouts is full of life and activity. One small boy has for some time been allowed to think that he had tea with the rest of the family, when hot water, milk and sugar were properly mingled. A few nights ago this innocent beverage failed to give its wonted satisfaction. He had stirred it round and round; but a wry face followed his tasting. "What's the matter," says mamma, "isn't it good?" The lad had a philosophic answer, saying, "It seems like I'd stirred it the wrong way."

In a neighboring household, in the way of dessert, was a choice morsel, not large enough for division. Pater, after considering the demands of three children for the bit, gave it to the eldest, saying, "I have known Anna longer than I have the others, and I think she may have it for old acquaintance sake." The brother next in age, not pleased with this chronological decision sententiously remarks, "I wish I were older."

One of our legal lights has four sons and every son is a boy. One of them seems to have a failure in appreciating the value of truth, not it is hoped an inherited trait. Recently he had been interviewed on the subject in a very decided manner, when his feelings found expression in the words, "Well,—when I get to be a man, I'll lie all I like, for I am going to be a Democrat."

A certain neighbor had a little granddaughter visiting her. To the child, family-prayers were quite a novelty and she wanted to know why grandma prayed. "Why, I pray to God that He will take care of us and make us good." "Well," says the child, perhaps you have to in Worcester, but down where we live, we don't." By implication, her folks could take care of themselves.

The little girls had a very anxious time recently with their dolls. The latter seemed to be drooping badly and a consultation was had resulting in some very severe surgical operations for the purpose, as the girls said, of removing the consumption bugs. It is barely possible that microbes were what they meant but that was not what they said.

Those same girls can climb trees. They not only can but they do. Out of school, it is a very common thing to see them perched in convenient places about the old apple tree, whose bark they have worn smooth. She is the boss of the game who dares to get to the very highest point. There have been no falls; but the bark of the tree is not the only item worn out. Such havoc as is made with stockings and other garments! And what is the net gain? Red cheeks, well filled chests, good lungs and such appetites. By and by, it is to be feared, they will deny that they ever climbed trees; but now they delight in it. A Wellesley girl from our side used to be in the tallest tree in her father's garden, and in school and college she has touched the highest point also. Dame Grundy will get the girls in her relentless clutches soon enough.

The back yard, on our street, is not the largest in the city; but it has served to represent all the countries on the globe. The girls are well along in geography and small pools of ice water were for the nonce, all the oceans. A hum-mock of sod was for Continental Europe or Asia. Africa and America also appeared. I am sure their teachers would have been delighted at the facility with which the children passed from the isles of the ocean to the mountains of Ural. They gave loose rein to their imagination and in one holiday afternoon far outdid Bayard Taylor, Baron Von Humbolt and Ida Pfeiffer. It was an application of the school lessons showing that some things gained in school had made a lodgement. Who can measure the pleasures of fancy? They are as boundless as space, as limitless as eternity. Our street is full of air castle builders.

A Stranger's Impression of Worcester.

In coming from Boston, though it is a very important city, a stranger is unusually well impressed when he enters Worcester. I came in by the eleven o'clock train, but notwithstanding the dark I was pleased by the very color of this city and then the wide avenues from the depot, the cleanness of streets and houses and especially the great amount of vegetation one can see as he strolls around. Although this season allows not its full sway to nature, we are bound to suppose that in a place where so much appreciation is bestowed upon trees and gardens, health and consequent prosperity must be enjoyed by the people, when summer comes, with its green faces of leaves and reliefs of brilliant flower tints. How practically blessed are those who can appreciate the poetry as well as science there is in the love of nature! "but there they are in Worcester" shall I gladly say to any friend who may seek for such a surrounding. Such people as take their pleasure in this city and have built it on that plan with an architecture of the very best stamp of common sense and artistic combination and comfort, are a happy class. Why, I have visited the few streets nearest the business center, and was so very favorably impressed that I believed myself amongst the structures of the Champs-de-Mars in Paris which were of every description of style and material. The display of architecture here is more varied than ever. I cannot really explain why; but a new-comer though he is without friends or relations in this city feels interested as in his home; and, if I depart from here, there is no place, except Paris itself, that I will regret to leave so much. I am pleased here because I can read in the very bright eyes and rosy cheeks and general deportment of the ladies passing by, the goodness, the sensitiveness because of the health of the population. I like this since one is not liable to be depressed at the sight of so many drunkards and paupers coming out of saloons and at seeing so many down hearted women and pale-face children. Peace reigns supreme with its abundance of good things; how can the people be not generous. Arts flourish I can see by the number of studios and good works. Business is active; living cheap, and, above all, young and beautiful and qualified ladies enchant the path right through. How can a young man, philosophising as he may, stand this constant impression upon the bump of the beautiful without wishing to make a move in the good direction, if it were only to speak his admiration.

Indeed, I would gladly exchange my naturalness or knavishness, my only fortune left, to immortalize under pen, brush or chisel some of the beautiful features I have beheld.

But, little in the garb that the poets must wear,
Or the "wanting to know" looks young artists must bear,
Do the wealthy flowers passing know how fruits cost
dear,
When in adversity to prove them talents plough under fear.

ALBERT RETELL.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

A Leather Apron Campaign for Mayor.

"The contest for mayor in Oswego, in March, was notable because of an odd incident that arose early in the campaign. The Democrats nominated John Kehoe, a young blacksmith, and the Times, the Republican organ, at once dubbed him the "leather apron" candidate. But the effect was not what the Times looked for. The workingmen of the city arose in behalf of Mr. Kehoe. Mr. Kehoe's leather apron was stretched across the main street as a campaign banner, and at the polls the Democratic workers wore upon their left breast miniature leather aprons, neatly lettered in gold. The count of the ballots showed that the people justly resent such an uncalled-for slur upon an honest laboring man, for Mr. Kehoe was chosen by 675 majority, the largest ever given for the office of Oswego."—[Syracuse Standard.

In Worcester, the remark that a pair of overalls might yet be found in the Mayor's office, had much to do with the success of an excellent candidate not a great while ago.

Davis Art Company, at 18 Park street, has the very latest novelty in the memento line. It is the photo autograph placque. This is the latest craze, and bids fair to outrival its predecessor, the friendship ring. It is far more meritorious, deserving popular recognition. It is both "a thing of beauty and a joy forever." A handsome and artistic decorated French China placque containing the autograph signature of your friends surrounding a portrait of yourself is certainly an ornament which becomes priceless in value as a keepsake. They last for future generations; the photo and autographs are burnt in, thereby becoming absolutely permanent. Each friend is requested to write his signature on the diagram, paying ten cents for the honor. There are spaces for fifty names, which at ten cents each pay for the placque. We also make a smaller size for children at $2.50 each, or five cents for each autograph. Diagrams furnished free of charge at the store and at Davis' studio, corner Main and Park streets.

Gushing tourist: "Your life must be full of romance, living in such a beautiful country."

Stolid peasant: "Yaw, I row mans all day, sometimes wimmen though."

Tenors, Attention!

At Pilgrim Church there is a lack of tenor voices for the choir and the director, J. Vernon Butler, would like to confer with such singers as wish to have drill and to gain experience under his leadership, with reference to engagements.

Energy and persistence conquer all things.
—Franklin.

ORDER NOW

and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than at

EVANS & COMPANY,

Manufacturers of

Fine Monumental Work,

131 Central Street, near Summer.

W. A. ENGLAND,

DEALER IN

FINE WATCHES,
CLOCKS, JEWELRY
& OPTICAL GOODS.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.

394 Main Street.

ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING

Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,
Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.

Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold
on commission.

MRS. S. M. KEYES.

The Worcester Oxygen Company

Rooms 10 and 11 LINCOLN BLOCK, are fully equipped for OXYGEN COMPOUND TREATMENT, under care of an experienced Physician. Tickets at reduced rates until May 1. 363½ Main st., or No. 1 Elm st., up one flight.

Dr. J. W. GOULD. T. D. BRISTOL, M. D.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE

permanently eradicated by the

ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,

92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

Dr. Cheever.

Before the Mayor and Aldermen.

In his plea before the Aldermen in defense of the citizens' petition against license, Rev. Mr. Cheever said: The liquor traffic with which you have to deal is not unlike murderous Jack the Ripper, of White Chapel district, London, lacking in the dives and dens of darkness. What could the London police do to catch the unknown wretch if they proposed to go into a covenant together to license him for money? What can you do for the suppression of intemperance, the worthy end contemplated by the law of the state under which you act, if you make an agreement with the liquor traffic to legalize the local sale of liquors for the stipulated price of a license? Let noble Brutus answer for you with a slight accommodation, as in the play of Julius Cæsar.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous
To lock such rascal counters from those rogues,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

When early in the war, the author of the famous dream entitled "Enquire at Deacon Giles' Distillery," was addressing a great assembly in Mechanics Hall, presided over by Governor Bullock, and when in the course of his dramatic address he compared the complication of public affairs to a jam of ice and logs in a freshet on one of our Maine rivers, needing but the swift stroke of a hardy lumberman to fall upon one of the wedged-in logs that held the grinding quivering mass, suddenly all eyes at once beheld, through the vivid imagination of the orator, the tall gunt form and uplifted brawny arms of Abraham Lincoln wielding the war power with the woodman's axe of emancipation—"I take the responsibility," and with that longed-for blow of liberty relieving at once the mighty pressure. "She starts—she starts—Let her rip," shouted an unknown voice in a remote part of the house; and the furor of applause that nearly lifted the roof of our dear old hall, showed with what out-breaking enthusiasm the degree of emancipation once issued, would be received throughout the North. So now from the responsible Mayor and Aldermen at the heart of this Commonwealth, let there go forth the decree "No LICENSE FOR '91," and a jubilee of joy will at once begin that will ring throughout the state and roll over the nation. And although there may be gnashing of teeth by the wolfish horde disappointed of their prey, there will be devout thanksgiving to Almighty God by rejoicing thousands; and an advance post will be gained in the temperance reform never to be lost.

Gentlemen of the Board of Aldermen, redemption from the drink-curse in Worcester draweth nigh. If enlargement and deliverance as to the Jews in the time of Mordecia and Queen Esther come not now through you, by your dismal failure to see and to seize this golden opportunity, they will come by another's, and the chance to link your individual names with honor, and your aldermanic administration with everlasting remonstrance will have gone forever. A city of 85,000 people like this in the last of the 19th century, with its schools, its churches, its academies, its colleges, its universities, its libraries, its institutes and halls of applied science and art, its shops for skilled machinists might, but for the trail of the serpent over them all, be the very garden of God. Shall such a community be kept any longer in the foul clutches of the rum-power? 5200 solid men of prosperity, standing, intelligence and moral worth, the representatives mind and muscle of Worcester have already said an emphatic no, and from that no they will never swerve a hair. As many more loyal and loving citizens, our honored mothers, wives and sisters, though unfairly barred from municipal suffrage, agonizingly pray for the success of this petition. We keep time together with God; we live as Phillips Brooks says, in the positives not in the negatives. We have the courage of our convictions, you do like wise; that you vote as honest Aldermen just as it is our pride to know that a majority of you voted at the polls in December last, for no license.

Z. F. Little & Co.

New Spring Garments.

Ladies' Reefers and Blazers, Plain and with Gilt Trimmings, $3.50 to $15

Jersey Jackets, all grades and prices, from $3.50 upwards

Children's Reefers and Blazers, from $1.50 to $5.00

The prettiest ever worn.

Jersey Waists, all grades and prices.

Waterproofs of all descriptions.

Z. F. Little & Co.,

234 and 238 MAIN ST.

The Week.

CITY.

Mar. 27—The great Holman case decided. Lawyer King must pay back the money.

Chaplain Beaudry tells his Libby Prison experience, at Front Street Mission.

Rev. Robert Brady, S. J., once president of Holy Cross College, died last night at Georgetown, D. C. 65 years.

Rev. T. F. Clark of Brooklyn gives his "Knapsack Tour Through Europe" in the Salem Street course.

B. W. Potter, Esq., presided at the meeting of the Chamberlain District Farmers' Club last night.

28—A big fire in the old J. H. Walker boot shop on Water street.

The late Mrs. Kinnicutt buried from her recent home on Chestnut street.

Postmaster Estabrook gets a fine gold watch on Post Office employees. Mr. Hunt makes the speech. Mr. E. responds.

28—Very extended Easter observances in all the churches. The day could not be finer.

30—Chaplain Beaudry tendered a farewell reception at 43 Austin street.

Great Easter ball in Mechanics Hall, under auspices of Ladies Charitable Society of St. John's Church.

Magnificent observance of Easter by Lawrence Chapter, Rose Croix. Sermon by Rev. Jos. F. Lovering, banquet at Bay State House.

31—The Old South Historical Exhibition successfully given.

Father Matthew Pioneer Corps opens a Coffee Party at Father Matthew Hall.

New Public Library inspected and pronounced ready for opening.

April 1—Postmaster Estabrook goes out and his successor Greene goes in, and yet it is not a joke.

St. Anne's Total Abstinence Society has a successful Coffee Party at Mechanics Hall.

The Dickinson case decided for the defendants.

Chaplain Simmons, G. A. R., improving under treatment for his eyes at Carney Hospital, Dorchester.

More sweetness in circulation than on any previous day in Worcester's memory. Cheap sugar did it.

2—Union Fast Day services at Old South, Union, Grace and Dewey Street churches.

Many visit the loan exhibition and the new library building.

COUNTY.

Mar. 25—In Westboro, Frank H. Martin and Emma F. Murit are married.

Josiah P. Davis elected to the superintendency of schools in Blackstone, vice Dr. Adrian Scott, resigned.

27—Mrs. Lucina Lackey dies in Uxbridge, 74 years.

Dana wants music in her public schools, a proper want.

Ozro Hancock dies suddenly in Winchendon, 79 years.

Miss Jane Carter, for twenty years bedridden, dies in Leominster.

28—Edward C. Bowers, suffocated in Milford, died Saturday night, 37 years. Fell from wagon when drunk.

29—Ex-Mayor Johnson of Waltham addresses Spencer people on the No license question. Geo. W. Keyes nearly killed at Brooks Station by Frank Spring. Rum did it.

30—E. C. Jordan dies in Millbury, 75 years. Oldest member of G. A. R. in town.

Possibility that Fitchburg may get a Belgian jam concern. Let us hope this is not a street yarn.

April 1—Deacon Samuel Seaver dies in Northboro, 80 years. Father of superintendent of schools, Edwin P. Seaver, Boston.

2—Reception in Millbury to John Hopkins, recently appointed judge of Superior court.

COMMONWEALTH.

Mar. 27—Governor Russell decides that the long reputed bust of Samuel Adams in Doric Hall is that of George Washington.

28—Second series of in door athletics at Harvard.

Williams College has athletics also in gymnasium.

Efforts making to remove S. S. Galena from the rocks at Gay Head.

Officer Benjamin, who assaulted Reporter Kingdon, dismissed from the Boston Police force.

Elias Metwin dies in Boston, 71 years.

22—U. S. S. Galena floated.

30—Mayor of Boston removes City Architect Atwood and appoints Edmund M. Wheelwright.

U. S. District Attorney Charles H. Allen mentioned in connection with next Republican nomination for governor.

31—Legislature denies municipal suffrage to women. It will come, though, in time.

April 2—Lawrence Barrett's will filed in Norfolk County court. No public bequests.

Oldest house in Plymouth burned. More than 200 years old.

Legislature moving against the Brandy drop.

NATION.

Mar. 27—Norwegian craft, Dictator, wrecked off Cape Henry. Seven lives lost.

Great snow storm in the south.

Uncle Sam ready to pay his $50,000,000 indebtedness due Sept. 1.

28—Indiana not to get Direct Tax money at once, owing to unsettled War Claims.

Gov. Dairs of R. I., finds reasons for refusing Gov. Bulkeley's requisition. Wonder what Hill of New York has been saying to "Honest" John.

29—Dr. Howard Crosby dies of la grippe in New York, 65 years.

Disgraceful cemetery scene in Pittsburg, Chinese maltreated.

A daughter of Horace Greeley to marry an Episcopal Rector.

30—Daughter of Chief Justice Fuller marries Mr. Latham of Chicago.

New Haven R. R. directors indicted on account of Tunnel disaster in New York.

Englishmen admire the new war ship of this country.

Senator Palmer of Illinois, though sick, goes to Chicago, to enter the Mayoralty fight.

31—One hundred beer saloons closed in Lewiston, Me. Let the drought continue.

Edwin Booth to retire from the stage for a while.

April 1—Secretary Blaine and the Kansas Cowboys not particularly disturbed over the recall of Minister Fava. It is probable that Italy will soon Fava us again.

Connecticut Legislature adjourns until November.

Ex-President McCosh of Princeton, 80 years old.

2—The President makes a trip to the Pacific coast.

WORLD.

March 27—Capt. O'Shea sues the Bishop of Galway.

Court House in Cork burned.

28—The State Line of Glasgow sells out in part to the Allan Line. Thus a good and cheap European line disappears.

29—Italy cools down over the N. O. lynching and expressions of regret are made that all the Mafia were not treated likewise.

Usual quarrel among Irish factions. Broken skulls.

30—Heavy snow storms in N. E. France.

Prospect of Cabinet changes in Portugal.

31—Italy recalls Baron Fava, minister to the U. S. If she would only recall her Sicilian subjects we should like it better.

Massacres in India. English must look sharp.

Lord Granville dies in London, 76 years.

April 1—Prince Bismark, 76 years old.

Prof. Tyndal, the Scientist, seriously ill.

2—Thomas C. Baring, partner in firm of Baring Bros., and member of parliament dies, aged 60.

Rudini, the Italian premier, cables another message to Secretary Blaine on New Orleans troubles.

Miss Annie Athy.

The Boston Herald has this to say of a Worcester High School girl, class of '89, and daughter of ex-Alderman Athy. The play was "Ours." "Of the ladies, Misses Selina Fetter and Annie Athy took off the honors. The former gave a conscientious and pretty delineation of Blanch, while the latter as the ingenue, Mary Netley, developed considerable vim and vitality, without making any excursion into the contiguous region of "toughness" common to soubrets."

At the meeting of the Bryant Chautauqua Circle last Tuesday evening the study of Church History in the United States was begun. Short accounts of the Spanish, English and French colonizations were given by different members of the circle, followed by a general discussion of Education in the Colonies. Mr. John Alton conducted the class in Geology, speaking of the geological ages and earliest forms of life, illustrated by numerous specimens of fossils from his cabinet.

Richard M. Raymond, High School, '88 has been awarded the degree of M. D. by the Bellevue Hospital of New York. He has studied at Yale Medical College and Bellevue Hospital since his graduation from the High School. He intends to continue his studies.

Church Notes.

ADVENTISTS.

The State Conference opened its session Tuesday at 492 Main street, twenty-two ministers present, nineteen churches represented.

METHODIST.

Zion. Fourth Quarterly Conference, last Monday evening. Prosperous condition reported.

The Pilgrim Ladies' Aid Society have a Star Supper and entertainment Tuesday evening, April 7th.

Mrs. Loring Coes has given a piano to the society and also an easy chair for the church parlor. This is a gift the ladies appreciate very much.

The Christian League of Grace Church held an orange social on Fast Day evening. The program consisted of two readings by Miss Stella M. Haynes, a duet and a trio by the Day sisters—Hattie, Avis and Ellen. Condrums were asked by Mr. L. J. Pentecost and for answering the greatest number, Miss Nellie Layng received a vase, and Ernest Nelson, for most ridiculous answer, a cotton doll. A Japanese parasol drill was given by the Hiawatha Club of Pilgrim Church. Oranges were then sold and the number of seeds reported. Miss Lena Peck returned twenty-eight and received a landscape framed. Miss Haynes and Miss Brierly had nine each, and claimed the child's transparent slate for the least number.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The following was obtained too late to be printed with the list of church choirs: Plymouth Church choir for the coming year consists of quartet and chorus. Quartet: Mrs. J. M. Niles, soprano; Miss Alice Hammond, contralto; S. E. Pennell, tenor and director; D. E. Spencer, bass; George E. Brown, organist.

Y. M. C. A.

The men's meeting tomorrow will be a special Easter service. Twenty-five young men will take part in the exercises. The boy's meeting at three o'clock will be addressed by Mr. Tucker of Pilgrim Church and there will be singing by a ladies quartet. The morning meeting at 9 15 will be led by Mr. Lincoln.

The men's meeting April 12 will be addressed by Mr. A. H. Nazarian, of Boston University, a converted Armenian. Special invitations will be given to the Armenians of the city to be present. It is probable that it will be a union meeting for men and women. The arrangements for the business men's conference, Monday April 6, have been completed. Among the speakers who will address the meeting are H. M. Moore of Boston, O. C. Morse of Springfield, R. M. Armstrong of Boston. During the evening there will be a practical illustration of gymnasium work by classes of men and boys under the direction of Paul Plummer. Special invitations to be present at the conference will be sent to all the ministers in the city.

The directors of the Women's Auxiliary will meet next week, probably Thursday, to elect officers for the ensuing year.

This afternoon at three o'clock there will be

OXYGEN * IN DISEASE!

COMPOUND OXYGEN TREATMENT
The Rational Cure for Chronic Diseases.

U. S. COMPOUND OXYGEN CO.

The apparatus shown by the above cut is that of a "Home Treatment."

The Compound Oxygen Gas that has come to be so generally known in Worcester and vicinity as a valuable agent in disease, is that of the United States Compound Oxygen Co. This is the gas that has in so many instances demonstrated its power as a great natural therapeutic.

The Worcester Office is where it has been now for five years—the same old place where in 1886, in an unpretentious way, the use of Gas began. The business has grown from small quarters to large ones, and from an anxious condition of waiting for patients to that of patients, large numbers of them, anxiously waiting their opportunity to be treated.

Send for pamphlets or call at rooms and see more than 100 testimonials from well-known Worcester people. Trial treatment at office free.

Look into the matter for yourself.

Home Treatments

A SPECIALTY.

NO * HOME * TREATMENT * LIKE * OURS.

Worcester Office,

No. 37 Pearl St.,

Rooms 2 and 3, Chapin Block,

V. M. SIMONS,

Medical Actuary.

a meeting of the boys to complete the organization of the Junior department. At the meeting last Saturday afternoon, forty boys signified their intention of joining. Secretary Gale addressed the meeting, telling of the plans of the organization.

The religious meetings committee will meet next Monday evening.

The Association paper, Worcester's Young Men, will appear about April 10. There will be a column devoted to the Y. P. S. C. E. and one to the Y. W. C. A.

Paul Plummer has returned though he has not quite fully recovered from his attack of the grippe.

Secretary Gale will probably attend the International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations, which will be held in Kansas City May 1.

MILLBURY.

The advent of Spring is especially welcome to the people of Millbury because the beauties of the town are most evident when the lawns are green and the trees are clothed with their spring foliage. Millbury has many beautiful trees, thanks to the foresight of the men of the last generation. The elms on Elm and Main streets and the maples on Maple street are things of beauty and a joy forever. Therefore, the warm sun of the last few days and the songs of an unusually large number of birds are hailed with delight.

The resurrection Sabbath was celebrated with special song services and flower decorations, at the various churches. The interest in the day and the beautiful weather brought out larger congregations than usual. The First Congregational Church was beautifully decorated with potted plants and cut flowers. Pots of mammoth begonias, callas and asparagus vine furnished a background of green for the white Easter lily and calla blossoms. Music occupied a prominent place in the services at this church, both morning and evening.

Gov. Russell has honored Millbury by appointing one of her citizens to be a judge of the Superior Court. His Excellency, last week, appointed John Hopkins, Esq., to fill the place made vacant by the death of Judge Pitman. Judge Hopkins is, undoubtedly, well qualified to fill the position in which the Gov. has placed him and the people of Millbury congratulate him, the Gov. and themselves upon the appointment.

Hon. L. L. Whiting and wife have returned from their western trip. Their daughters, Misses Laura and Maud, are also at home for the Easter vacation.

M. A. Lap'ham, not content with paying the largest tax in town, will add another building to his already large plant. The building is designed for a sewing room, and every other feature will be made secondary to that of light. It will be circular in form and the walls will be, largely, glass. Materials have been ordered and the work of construction will soon be commenced.

The Social Club met Tuesday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Thayer. The entertainment at this meeting took the form of a lemon party. The refreshment table was prettily decorated in various shades of yellow and orange and, with its load of good things, presented a most attractive appearance. The guests passed a very pleasant evening and went away feeling they had been highly entertained.

School and College.

In LIGHT's catalogue of those who have, through many tribulations come off victors, the names of two distinguished gentlemen must not be omitted. One is a very noted clergyman of New England, the other a distinguished lawyer in New York, though he has been the governor of one of our Federal states. They were sons of a farmer in a small way in West Brookfield. In addition to doing their work faithfully in school, they went home at night, to help in the small boot shop, then an adjunct to the farm in many cases. Later, they came to Worcester and became pupils in our own High School and before and after the sessions they found employment in the shop of a gentleman yet living in our midst. One of them was, also, an assistant teacher in the school. Then they went to Yale College, where to this day, their record is frequently referred to as among the most brilliant on the records of that ancient institution. They had no money for needless expense, but they met all necessary outlay in a manly fashion. Worcester remembers their career with pride. By and by they will have passed off the stage completely. Are the boys of today getting ready to follow them? "What has been done, can be done."

E. F. Holden has presented to the Syracuse University library the Philobiblion of Richard de Bury, in three volumes, bound in real vellum. It was written about 1330, and as only 300 sets were printed it is very rare and valuable.

Prof. Moses Coit Tyler has been elected dean of the new School of History and Political Science at Cornell, the organization of which will be completed in June. The foundation of this school is made necessary by one of the conditions under which ex-President White gives to the university his extensive library.

The catalogue of the Worcester Polytechnic Institute for 1892 is the most bulky document yet issued by the Institution. The time is doubtless near at hand when the publication of graduates, and data concerning them will have to be given periodically and in separate volumes as in the case of the triennials of the older colleges. The total number of students recorded is 196, a number in excess of any former year. The growth of the Institute has been steady and natural. Not yet quite twenty-five years old, our Polytechnic easily takes rank with older and richer institutions, though in her special field of mechanical engineering, as yet she has few if any real rivals. The new course in physical and political science starts off with the number of students necessary to inaugurate it and as all of these are, with a single exception, graduates of our High School, it would seem that they would stick to the end. Though the minimum age for admission is sixteen years, few enter under the age of eighteen and experience shows that those under that age are, generally, too immature to do justice to the demands of the school. There seems to be no advance in requirements for admission, though hereafter the preliminary work i. e. common English branches may be offered a year before the finals. As hitherto, candidates are advised to have a knowledge of the ancient languages and history though they are not examined on them. In this connection it is not a little noteworthy that all the children of professors in the Institute, i. e., those who have been members of the High School have taken the College Preparatory course. These boys thus prepared have entered the Institute. This example should not be lost upon those who are thinking of a "Tech" course. We look in vain for any discussion of the proposed union of High School and "Tech" in the utilizing of the gift of Mr. H. H. Bigelow. Probably the matter is held in reserve till more definite action has been taken outside. In analyzing the names in the catalogue, we find thirty-three not of Massachusetts, representing sixteen different states, counties and provinces. That the reputation of the Institute is spreading, this widely extended patronage makes perfectly clear.

Boston Advertiser: It is safe to say that the cases in which a college education unfits a man for business are so few and far between as to deserve no consideration compared to the inestimable benefits which such an education really brings to all who are willing to profit by their early training. A college course will not transform a born fool into a sound business man, but it is equally absurd to intimate that it will transform a born business man into a fool.

Here is a bit from Catherine Cole's talks to working girls: "Create a new life for yourselves. It may not be your fate to marry, so make a good life for yourselves. Educate yourselves to do some one thing well. Read good books. Make yourself companionable beings. The woman who can talk only gossip is more detestable than any other, and as tiresome as the working-girl who can only talk shop. Become a good artist, or writer, or cook, or reader, or seamstress. Competent workers do not starve, and then if poverty overtakes you—if fortune sends you out from the sweet security of your home, you can swell the list of self-reliant, self supporting women, not the list of whining dependents, too lazy to learn how to work, too ignorant to command it, too cowardly to face any emergency, and only having that shallow pride which always draws back from honest labor and the touch of a work-stained palm."

Williams College.

At the last quarterly meeting of the Philoedman Debating society, P. P. Perkins was elected vice-president.

A new dramatic association has been organized in college. In the list of officers is business manager, E. N. K. Mears.

Since our last report Williams has received another gift, this time $10,000 from the will of Daniel A. Jones of Chicago.

But we also have our misfortune. Prof. E. P. Morris has received and accepted a call to Yale. He is a Yale graduate of '74, but has been here since '85. During this time he has made a name as a Latin scholar, equalled perhaps by only two men in America, and as a student of Plautus and Terence his equal can not be found. He was greatly loved by the students and they are very sorry to have him leave.

The two winter meets have not been very productive of new material for the Springfield contests. In fact the interest has been more in gymnastic than in purely athletic contests. No records have been broken which is quite unusual. The tug-of-war team showed up well against the R. P. I. of Troy, in the first pull, doubling them up on the cleats so that they were obliged to give up the contest.

Prof. David F. Jordan, president of the Indiana State University, has accepted the presidency of the Leland Stanford University of California.

This item is particularly interesting to Worcester people from the fact that Mrs. Jordan was a Worcester girl and a graduate of our High School, class of '83. As a student in Cornell, she met Mr. Jordan, a fellow student, and from the acquaintance thus made came the subsequent marriage. Professor Jordan is one of the most brilliant of all the graduates of Cornell. He will go with his family to the scene of his new duties in June next.

Those interested, and they ought to be many, should not forget that Mrs. Morgan's private school, in the Y. M. C. A. Building, opens for the Spring term next Monday. An excellent opportunity for those desiring the Kindergarten. See advertisement.

Avon from Appleton, Wisconsin, comes the Appleton Messenger, a very interesting pamphlet setting forth the merits of Lawrence University. It seems strange that the name of the Dauphin of France, that unfortunate son of his unfortunate father, Louis XVI, should be connected with this Western college; but so it is. Eleazer Williams, by some supposed to be that same Dauphin, escaped and brought up as an Oneida Indian, sold certain Wisconsin lands to Abbot Lawrence of Boston, and he gave them for the endowment of a college. The story is an entertaining one. The college, at whose head is Chas. W. Gallagher, D. D., a Massachusetts man, is in a prosperous condition.

Ya'e.

At an election of officers in the Dunham Boat Club, Thomas Bond Shaw of Worcester was elected captain. Shaw was a W. H. S. boy and his old friends congratulate him.

Amherst.

Wednesday, the 25th, was a gala day at Amherst, when all the strength of the college and the beauty of the town were gathered in Pratt Gymnasium for the "Heavy Gym. Exhibition." The events comprised gymnastic feats, athletic sports, sparring and wrestling. The contest was very close between the Junior and Sophomore classes, the former finally winning the banner by five points out of one hundred and twenty-four. Brooks of the Sophomore class, was, however, awarded the honor of college gymnast, thereby making the score between the two classes about even.

The Glee Club started on its Western trip last Monday morning, to be gone about two weeks. Twelve concerts will be given, including one at New York, Rochester, Syracuse,

Ann Arbor, and two at Chicago. Mr. W. H. Hildreth is the only Worcester representative at present in the club.

The generosity of a Worcester alumnus, Mr. G. Henry Whitcomb, is doing a great service to Amherst in fitting over the old South dormitory. The work is already under way and the building will be ready for the class of '95.

The new Pratt Field is nearly ready for use, and it has been decided to open it formally on the sixth of May, the date of the Amherst-Williams ball game.

The winter term closed officially last Tuesday noon for nine days vacation. The practical advantage of the "cut" system, however, began to be demonstrated the preceding Friday, and, after Saturday, an exhaustive search was necessary to find one of Worcester's scholarly representatives.

Wesleyan University.

The Easter recess, which took place here earlier than at most of the other colleges, closed at 12 o'clock on Thursday, and the students have settled down for the grinding of the last term of the year.

The Spring term is, however, much more pleasant than the other two, for the quaint city, with its wide streets, lined on either side by lofty trees, presents a pretty sight, and affords ample opportunity for lovers of nature to gratify their desires in long and pleasant walks.

Then, too, this is the season for out door sports, so that every afternoon the campus is the scene of games of base ball, tennis, and all sorts of general athletics.

All the men who expect to enter the athletic games at Springfield are now in constant training and give every assurance of doing good work. Wesleyan is confident that she will put a better team into the field this year than ever before, both in general athletics and base ball. Mr. F. H. Ralsten, '92, has been chosen president of the association and is doing excellent work in that position.

Ralsten '92 and Slayback '91, recently made quite a good showing at the Manhattan club games, and Ralsten and Newton, '94, did some fine work at New Haven.

A short time since, the president, Dr. B. P. Raymond, tendered a reception to the members of the Senior class. The house was handsomely decorated with plants and flowers, and the spacious parlors presented a pretty sight. Some of the young ladies of the city, together with the faculty and their wives, assisted in the entertainment of the evening, after which a bountiful collation was enjoyed by all.

Another in the series of Senior oratoricals took place last week, when some very fine productions were brought forward.

Many of these orations deserved especial praise and gave evidence of careful thought and deep research which, as the exercise is voluntary, speak well for the course of instruction in that department.

One of the most amusing ones was by Mr. G. H. Rogers, who spoke against Intercollegiate foot ball, illustrating the dangers of tackling and all such by examples upon the platform.

One of the most successful organizations connected with the college, is the Glee Club. The boys have given several concerts in the city and made two trips, where they gave great satisfactions. One of the most pleasing programmes was given in the city a week ago, to a crowded house, in Russell Library Hall, after which members of the club enjoyed a supper at one of the restaurants.

Professor Alwater has finished his duties in Washington for the present and is now conducting classes at the college.

The Church Choirs.

Last Wednesday was New Year's Day to the church singers. Nearly all the churches with the exception of the Roman Catholic and Episcopal, rearrange their choirs and make the contracts with the soloists, the first of April. Tomorrow the new choirs will sing for the first time.

There have been fewer changes this year than for some time. In many cases the old quartet has been re-engaged for the new year. Probably the most notable change is the withdrawal of Mr. Walter Scott Kennedy from the directorship of the choir of the Church of the Unity. He has received several flattering offers to sing in Boston churches but he says that he shall not sing in any church before next fall, at least.

At the last moment, Miss Florence King, who sang contralto at the Universalist Church last year and was expected to do so this year, accepted a better position in Boston and the committee had to look for some one to fill her place. They have engaged Mrs. Carrie Hancock.

A list of the new choirs is given below.

CHURCH OF THE UNITY.—Quartet. Mrs. J. A. Rice, soprano; Miss Alma Collins, contralto; T. B. Hamilton, tenor and director; B. A. Barber, bass; Mrs. Carrie King-Hunt, organist.

PILGRIM CHURCH.—Quartet and chorus. Quartet, soprano, Mrs. J. W. Pitts; contralto, Mrs. J. H. Howell; tenor, Geo. L. Butler; bass, J. H. Howell; J. Vernon Butler, organist and director; chorus, sopranos—Ida L. Gaskill, Emma M. Plimpton, May A. Parmeter, Mary Fellows, Grace Marden, Mary Ballard, Jennie Loud, Lizzie Pierce, Elizabeth Pease, Grace Smith, Sadie E. Dewhurst, Effie Fletcher, Bertha Demming, Edith Sherman, Sybil Adams, Mrs. A. Harrington, Mrs. E. May; contraltos—Mrs. W. N. Berry, Mrs. M. L. Trask, Anna G. Moore, Jenny Kelly, Edith Brown, Georgie Newton, Sybil Gray; tenors—Charles Bancroft, Dr. Frank Kendrick, Samuel Nash, Elmer Johnson, J. F. Wilson; basses—A. W. Darling, Dr. Carl Crisand, Hugh Southgate, M. W. Royce, E. May, E. Norton, F. R. Heath, C. T. Buckman.

PLEASANT STREET BAPTIST.—Mrs. Webster Thayer, soprano; Mrs. Fred Simester, contralto; Fred Simester, tenor; Elbert E. Straw, bass; H. W. Mossman, organist and director.

SALEM STREET CONGREGATIONAL.—Chorus choir, sixteen voices, Mrs. F. W. Ruegles, soloist; B. D. Allen, organist and director. The Church Choral Society numbering about fifty voices and a choir of children assist on festival occasions.

SACRED HEART ROMAN CATHOLIC.—Chorus choir, thirty-five voices, Frank J. Carr, organist and Thomas F. Hanlon, director.

TRINITY CHURCH.—Quartet, Miss Jessie Pond, soprano; Miss Anna L. Smith, alto; D. M. Cowie, tenor; Charles Hitchcock, bass; Geo. N. Morse, organist and director.

FIRST UNITARIAN.—Mrs. Harrison W. Johnson, soprano; Mrs. Geo. M. Bassett, contralto; Mortimer E. Howard, tenor; Ben T. Hammond, bass and director; Mrs. S. E. Lawton, harpist; Walter G. Ingalls, organist.

SOUTH UNITARIAN.—Congregational singing, Prof. C. P. Morrison, pianist and director.

DEWEY STREET BAPTIST.—Chorus choir led by Samuel W. Wiley.

ST. JOHN'S ROMAN CATHOLIC.—Chorus choir of twenty-four voices, Mrs. N. G. Reedy, organist and John F. Murray, director.

ST. PETER'S ROMAN CATHOLIC.—For morning service, chorus choir of sixteen voices; for vesper service, sanctuary choir of eighteen boys; Nellie V. Kirwan, organist.

CHURCH OF CHRIST.—Chorus choir, leader, Eugene J. Kibbe; organist, Miss Clara H. Burnham.

ALL SOULS' UNIVERSALIST.—Male quartet. Charles Bancroft, first tenor; M. M. Mowry, second tenor and director; J. Walter Pierce, first bass; A. Smith, second bass; Mrs. Sadie Hooker Blaney, soloist and Mrs. Walter Calden, organist.

UNION CHURCH.—Quartet. Mrs. Luella E. Wagner of Boston, soprano; Mrs. M. M. Peck, contralto; A. C. Buttrick of Charlestown, tenor; W. A. Anderson of Ware, bass; Fred H. Blake, organist and director.

PARK CHURCH.—Choir. Sopranos—Miss L. Gertrude Colburn, Mrs. Frank Luce, Mrs. Jennie Slaytoo; altos—Miss Elva Sawin, Miss Florence Parker, Miss Hattie Ball; tenors—H. B. Jenks, Mr. Simpson; basses George Pease, Lovell W. Putnam, Herbert Colburn; organist and director, Mrs. Edwin Sagendorph.

FIRST UNIVERSALIST.—Quartet. Mrs. Henry F. Harris, soprano; Mrs. Carrie Hancock, contralto; J. H. Cafferty, tenor; Charles P. Stoughton, bass; organist and director, Fred W. White.

ST. JOHN'S EPISCOPAL.—Choir. Miss Minnie M. Gard, Mrs. Harry W. Anderson, Miss Emily W. Bauer, Miss Laura A. Chew, Miss Caroline E. Davis, Miss Emma W. Pratt, Miss Clara E. Willis, Miss Elizabeth J. Allen, Mrs. David A. Taft, Mrs. W. Frederick Webb, Harry W. Anderson, George W. Mirick, William G. Allen, Edmund M. Barton, William M. Riddl, Rudolph J. Sundin, W. Frederick Webb. John L. Brand, director and organist; Miss Caroline E. Davis, assistant organist.

ALL SAINTS EPISCOPAL.—Precentor, Charles M. Bent; choir master, Charles I. Rice; organist, G. Arthur Smith; librarian, Norman B. Irton; curater of Sacristy, George C. Palmer. Choristers: Decani—bass, men, Chas. I. Rice, W. H. Hadley, Geo. R. Davis; tenors, Jas. A. Brennan, A. H. Wainwright; soprano, boys, Fred Card, Carl Page, Walter B. Eaton, Alween Troeltsch, Fred D. Valva, Wm. H. Beaumont, William Layng, Frank A. Gould, Lewis W. Worthington, Master Warren; alto, Master Mills, Arthur L. Washburn; Cantoris—bass, men, Luther M. Lovell, Robert E. Gates, Hiram Lovell; tenor, Geo. M. Daniels; soprano, boys, Geo. L. Stacy, Fred W. Pettit, Hermao R. Colesworthy, Frank H. Gray, Wm. H. Jordan, Robert T. Taylor, Albert E. Beaumont, Eddie N. Stark, Master Parker; alto, Warren H. Spurge, Addis Spurge.

PIEDMONT CHURCH.—Quartet and chorus. Quartet—Miss Evangeline Houghton, soprano; Miss Luella Flagg, contralto; Clarence B. Shirley, tenor; Geo. L. Hyde, bass. W. A. Gaylord, organist. Musical director, Seth Richards. Chorus of twenty-five voices.

FREE BAPTIST CHURCH.—Quartet. Miss Lizzie Ferry, soprano; Mrs. F. D. George, alto; George F. Goodwin, tenor; Louis Estabrook, bass; Clarence E. Steere, organist and director.

GRACE CHURCH.—Double quartet. Sopranos, Lillie A. Hanson, Miss Lange; altos, Maud Knowlton, Flora Minor; tenors, Mr. Davis, (second tenor to be selected later); basses, Jefferson Eaton, A. W. Farwell; Miss Gertrude March, organist; C. F. Hanson, director. The chorus is not yet fully organized but those who have already joined are as follows: Sopranos—Alice Buck, Lucy Wallace, Mary Foster, Cora Lowell, Mary Granger, Cora Robinson, Emma Bates, S. J. Tuttle; altos—Alice Bates, Mrs. A. C. Wright; tenors—C. F. Berry, A. C. Wright, William Healy, H. W. Flack, C. S. Forb; basses—D. R. Taber, W. B. Hoyt.

OLD SOUTH CHURCH.—Quartet and chorus. Quartet—Mrs. J. W. Mitchell, soprano; Miss Nellie E. Broadbent, alto; W. F. Little, tenor and director; C. J. Marshall, A. V. Hill, organist. Chorus—sopranos, Mrs. Geo. R. Bliss, Miss G. E. Whipple, Miss Worthington, Miss Shaffer, Miss Nichols; altos, Miss Anna Smith, Mrs. Foell, Mrs. Fay, Mrs. W. F. Little; tenors, Mr. Geo. R. Bliss, Mr. Sellars, Mr. Blood, Mr. Kerr, Mr. Harlow, Mr. Walter Bliss, Mr. Geo. Bliss, Jr.; basses, John W. Mitchell, W. H. Merriam, Arthur Merriam, Charles Hammond, Mr. Nichols. As the chorus is not yet fully organized more names will probably be added.

MAIN STREET BAPTIST.—Quartet. Miss Gertrude Inez Buss, soprano; Miss Elizabeth Pratt Parmelee, alto; Walter C. Powers, tenor; Wilton H. Desper, bass; C. P. Morrison, organist and director.

✦ * SPRING * ✦ WOOLENS * ✦

✦ * Our ✦ Opening ✦ of * ✦

Choice Domestic and Foreign Woolens, Selected for
Our Custom Department.

Gentlemen who wish to examine the Latest Novelties in these Goods should Call and examine them.

✦ * * THE * * ✦

WARE-PRATT CO.'S

408 and 412 MAIN STREET, WORCESTER.

Now is the Time to Buy a

CARRIAGE !

at a Small Profit.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,

OPP. THE COMMON.

A. S. NEWCOMB,

Market and Oyster House,

Fish of all kinds. Planter and Shipper
Choice Grade of Oysters. Telephone conn:
tion 206 2.

223 MAIN ST., WORCESTER, MASS

Two more Evenings with the

DIXIE MINSTRELS.

BENEFIT OF

Baldwinville Hospital Cottages

AND

Worcester Light Infantry

— AT —

MECHANICS * HALL,

Thursday and Friday evenings, April 9-10.

Four Funny (?) End Men.

Dignified Middlemen.

Larger Chorus than ever.

POSITIVELY some new Jokes and Funny Stories.

A delightful second part.

All combining to make a pleasant evening with the Local Favorites—THE DIXIES.

Reserved seats now on sale at Putnam
Davis & Co's.

Don't forget day and date.

LOOK OUT FOR THE STREET PARADE.

NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.

Incorporated in the City of Worcester, Sept. 17, 1889. A great co-operative institution and fraternal order, paying sick and accident benefits and an endowment of $500 at the end of five years. Over 600 members in Worcester; three local assemblies, and two more in process of formation. $8760 already distributed in sick benefits. $14,331.63 reserve.

For full particulars, and documents carefully explaining the plan and scope of this rapidly growing fraternity, call on or address J. O. H. WOODMAN, Secy., 339 Main St., Worcester, Mass. Burnside Building.

Lamont & Whittemore,

39 PEARL ST.

LEADING * SAFETY * BICYCLES.

Adopted by U. S. Government. Cycle repairing, also Fine Lock and Key Work. Open Evenings.

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *

NO. 156 MAIN STREET,

H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

LIGHT

VOL. III. No. 6. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

NEWS
SOCIETY
BUSINESS
PERSONALS
MUSIC
DRAMA
LITERATURE
ART
Worcester, Mass.

JOSEPH PRATT,

One of the Founders of Universalism in Worcester.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

NEW FURNITURE and UPHOLSTERY GOODS

New Parlor Suites and New Chamber Suites, New Dining Room, Library and Office Furniture. Every Department complete.

CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES all prices.

THE * LEONARD * REFRIGERATOR.

See it before you buy. Everything at lowest prices for cash or approved credit. WE BUY FOR CASH AND MAKE SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO CASH BUYERS.

Call and examine the largest stock in Worcester at 247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

Worcester County Mechanics Association.

Annual Meeting.

The Annual Meeting of this Association will be held in WASHBURN HALL, on

TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 14TH, 1891, at 7:30 o'clock, to act upon the following articles, to wit:—

- ART. 1. To hear and act upon the annual reports of the Board of Trustees, of the Treasurer, and of the several Standing Committees, and to make the necessary appropriations of money to carry out the recommendations therein contained.
- ART. 2. To choose a President, Vice-President, Clerk and Treasurer for the ensuing year.
- ART. 3. To choose one Director to serve for three years, for each of the five Standing Committees of the Board of Trustees, viz.: The Hall Committee, the Finance Committee, the Lecture Committee, the Library Committee and the Committee on Special Instruction, to fill the places of those whose term of office expires.
- ART. 4. To choose one Director to serve for two years for the Committee on Special Instruction, to fill a vacancy in that committee.
- ART. 5. To vote yea or nay on the names of such candidates for membership as may be recommended by the Board of Trustees.
- ART. 6. To consider what action, if any, shall be taken relative to celebrating the Semi-Centennial of the organization of the Association, which occurs on February 5, 1892, and to make such appropriation of money as may be required by the vote of the meeting.
- ART. 7. To transact any other business that may legally come before said meeting.

WM. A. SMITH, Clerk.

Worcester, April 8, 1891.

C. H. DRAPER,
Livery, Feed and Truck Stable.

Three Large Moving Wagons. Baggage Wagon always ready. Furniture and Piano Moving. Telephone 118-5.

161 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Rand, McNally & Co.'s New Atlas of the World.

304 pages 11½ x 14½ inches, 152 pages of Maps, 152 pages of Diagrams, History, Gazetteer, Statistics, and Illustrations, An Index containing names of 89,827 Cities, Towns, Villages and Post Offices, in the United States, with census returns for 1890. Bound in best embossed cloth, in a handsome manner for the very low price of $3.75. Anyone wishing for a copy will please address a postal card, giving residence, to CHARLES WILDER Agent for Worcester No. 80 Lincoln St.

Entertainment and Reception.

HIGH * SCHOOL * HALL

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 7, '91,

under the management of CHARLES A. GRAY.

The Famous Arlington Quintette.

This will be the last appearance of this popular Banjo, Guitar and Mandolin Club before their disbandment.

MR. ARTHUR J. BASSETT, Pianist.
MR. THOS. B. HAMILTON, Tenor.

JOHN G. WIGHT, Ph.D.

the new principal of the High School, will give an address on

The * Parallelisms * in * Literature.

Three hundred seats in the centre of the Hall have been reserved. The price of these will be 35 cents. All others are not reserved and will be sold for 25 cents.

Reserved seats must be procured in advance and will be on sale at the school office after the 7th, and by the directors of the Athletic Association.

Doors open at 7, Entertainment at 7.45.

Worcester Co-operative Bank!

New Series for Investors at $1 a Share.

DIVIDENDS 6 PER CENT.
$12,000 for Borrowers.

Shares can be obtained at the office,

WALKER BUILDING, ROOM 122,

And also at stated meeting, which will be held MONDAY EVENING, 20th inst., at Room 6, Mechanics Hall.

The issue is limited, and those intending to purchase should, by calling early, make sure of shares and avoid the crowd of meeting day. From $1 to $25 per month can be invested by or for any person, and the investment will begin earning dividends at once. The meeting this month is a good opportunity for borrowers, as the new series can be used as collateral. Loans may be repaid at any time, but nothing can be demanded by the bank except the monthly payments, which finally cancel the debts.

STEPHEN C. EARLE, President.
T. J. HASTINGS, Secretary.

N. G. TUCKER.

W. F. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON,
SANITARY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.

56 Pleasant Street,

Worcester, Mass.

WHENEVER GOOD

Eatables

are desired they will always
be found at

John A. Hartigan's

47 and 51 Pleasant Street.

WORCESTER

Illuminated Advertising Company,

General Office, 311 Main St., Room 13,
C. E. SQUIER F. H. BEALS.

Advertisements Artistically Displayed by a powerful Electric Light upon 600 Square feet of Canvas.

DISPLAY:

Worcester, opposite Mechanics Hall.
Springfield, opposite Opera House.
Providence, Turk's Head

The Worcester Oxygen Company

Have new and attractive rooms,
NOS. 10 AND 11 LINCOLN BLOCK,
for the popular

Compound Oxygen Treatment
under care of an experienced Physician.

Tickets, including 30 treatments, at reduced rates until May 1st. 368½ Main st., or No. 1 Elm st., up one flight.

Dr. J. W. GOULD. T. D. BRISTOL, M. D.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1891.

No. 5

Hope is light diet, but very stimulating.—Balzac.
“Hope deferred maketh the heart sick.”
“Hope springs eternal in the heart of man.”
Campbell has sung the pleasures of hope; but Balzac is right as to the quality of Hope as a diet.

This has been a season of closing out sales, so the Clerk of the Weather thought he would take a hand and, accordingly, in April's first week dropped down all the snow he had left. Worcester was the favored locality.

He hardly touched Springfield. Ashland was in the eastern border; but he unloaded the whole lot of remnants, with Worcester as the center. Such snow drifts in April! Are we to have “1816 and froze to death” again?

What a fuss over New Orleans and her way of dealing with cut throats! Suppose Canada should similarly dispose of some of New York's fugitive aldermen, would the United States run the risk of war on their account. It seems probable that a verdict of “served them right” would be returned by the American public.

Suppose, again, these fugitives were escaped murderers as well and that their atrocities were repeated in the land to which they had fled, and Law not punishing them, an outraged public elevated Judge Lynch to the bench and so shoved them off, how many New Englanders would fight to avenge them?

What a mockery is International Law if it will give a chance for a grievance under the New Orleans condition. Immigration, like Matrimony must be for better or worse. These Italians came to America to better their condition and should be subject to such perils and dangers as such change gave rise to. They were not travellers passing through our land; but residents who had foresworn Italy.

In fact many of them dare not go back. Even Italian law would have punished them with death. Fagh! Revolutions are necessary sometimes to overcome Law's delays. Were there not more law breakers than keepers in Worcester in the days of Fugitive Slave Law? How many aged men, today, account it worthy of remark that they set at nought that outrageous enactment!

It is a little strange, in all the comments upon the terrible deeds of that March day, that no one has noticed the parallel between that event and the Riots in Cincinnati in 1834. The circumstances are very similar. As in New Orleans, bribes and smart lawyers had defrauded the hangman till there were seven unhung murderers in the Hamilton County jail.

A meeting was called and the condition discussed. Then came the attempt upon the jail successfully resisted by the sheriff and his force. The military was called out to quell the disturbance. The commotion increased till fire, rapine and bloody assault left the city a sorry sight. The Enquirer, thus sums up the result.

“Our Court House is in ruins, the records of a hundred years have gone up in flames, property to the value of millions of dollars has been destroyed, scores of our citizens and citizen soldiers are cold in death; but we have every one of our murderers. Is the result worth the price?” Without attempting to answer the query, it may be said that Law is less dilatory in Cincinnati since those terrible days and nights.

In New Orleans, the case is reversed. The city is intact. The citizens are alive and united and nominal expounders of the Law are not quite so cocky as formerly, and lately imported Italian Mafia are whining over their nationality. If the episode would only result in the cessation of their coming to this country, the event would truly prove a disguised blessing.

Says the mate of a steamer on the Mississippi, “I can get along with white men and niggers. I'll stand my chances with them every time; but I don't want anything to do with them Sicilians. They stick knives into you and give no chance for a return stroke. Oh, they are a mean lot. Then they'll stand by the man that attacks them if the law interferes. Why it was not so long ago that one of them was stabbed and his assailant was pretty well known; but when the supposed to be dying man was shown the assailant, he denied ever seeing him. Nothing could be done and the fellow was discharged. Contrary to expectations, the wounded man got well. He hadn't been off his bed a week when that fellow, whom he denied ever seeing, was found, stabbed to the heart. They like to pay their own debts. The revenge is so much sweeter. I tell you they are the curse of this country.”

The Declamation Contest for the Demorest Medal was a good drill for the young people. They acquired confidence in facing an audience. The crowded house indicated the interest that people take in such matters. The sentiments also were of a most profitable character. It was quite easy to distinguish those who had received careful instruction, and instruction pays. Miss Lottie E. Lamson, who gained the medal did her work most excellently, a credit to her teacher. Miss Angie L. Parker, of whom honorable mention was made, is the soul of gracefulness. All will improve by their late experience.

Those readers of LIGHT who wish to own a home of their own, will turn to the advertisements of the Worcester Co-operative Bank. It costs no more to pay for your home than to pay rent. A city of homes, not one of tenements, is what we aspire to. A city, where every man is a householder, not a tenant, is what Worcester should be and what she will be if her hard working residents will only realize their opportunity. Buy your shares, then keep them up borrowing on them to build, or purchase, and in paying back you will pay no more than you would in paying rent.

A sixtieth anniversary of a wedding day is an unusual event. Long before that time, both Darby and Joan are generally laid away in their narrow houses; but our veteran, S. A. Porter, and his good wife last Sunday were privileged to look back over just that length of married life. Mr. Porter has been an important figure in city life and in his old age he is universally respected. A constant worshiper at Plymouth Church, he keeps close watch of the minister and could detect any deviation from orthodox lines at once, should such a wonder exist. Thousands of Worcester people wish Mr. Porter and his wife a continuance of life's blessings.

The death of Hon. J. B. Grinnell of Iowa, though far away, yet lays hold on Worcester heart for his daughter is the wife of Dr. D. O. Mears. Both of them went to attend the funeral of their revered relative. A Vermonter, he is said to have been the man to whom Horace Greeley directed his famous expression, “Go West, young man. Go West.” He went west and became a power in that section. As a member of Congress and the founder of a college he has left a name that is pleasant to his friends and a part of the history of his country.

ABOUT FOLKS.

Philip W. Southgate, W. P. I. '89, has been promoted to the position of third assistant examiner in the patent office at Washington.

The residence of Mr. James A. Colvin, 28 Elm street, was the scene last Saturday evening of a very enjoyable cotillion, given by Misses May Doe, Carrie Earle, Grace Whitman, Louise Wood and Anna Colvin. The German was led by Mr. Harry Doe and Miss Grace Whitman. The young ladies were assisted in receiving by Miss Grace Wheeler of New Haven and Miss Polly Holbrook of Holbrook.

James H. Churchill, a High school and Tech graduate, has opened an office in Boston, and will make chemical, metallurgical and electrical patents a specialty. Mr. Churchill is a son of James K. Churchill, with Pinkham & Willis, and who is also Senior Vice Commander of the State Department G. A. R. Young Churchill is bound to make a success of his new venture.

Paul B. Morgan of this city, of the class of '90, Polytechnic Institute, has returned home after a 10 months' sojourn in Sweden where he has been pursuing his studies in the School of Mines, Stockholm.

LIGHT wonders whether Paul brought back any Swedish negatives. It is to be hoped that he used his camera frequently.

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 339 Main Street, Burnside Building,
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, APRIL 11, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Hreafter, it will be understood that all articles in LIGHT, not ascribed, save recipes,
squibs, fashion and household notes were
written for this paper.

Friends sending in manuscripts will not complain if they are not printed at once. There are many waiting. Yet LIGHT is always glad to receive communications and, if meritorious,
to print them.

Comrade Geo. H. Mills passes in for examination several copies of The Volunteer, a most excellent G. A. R. paper published in New Castle, Penn.

The effort that the Natural History Society is making to add to its funds is worthy of Worcester consideration. Give Mr. Dennis a cordial hearing, when he comes.

LIGHT wants happy homes. Horticulture contributes to them. James Draper has just issued his handsome catalogue, contributing to this end. It is crammed full of information and may be had by addressing him at Bloomingdale. Nothing better has come under our observation. He manages a home industry worthy of your patronage.

About Folks.

Worcester County was represented at the banquet of the Republican Club, held in Boston, Wednesday evening, by Ledyard Bill of Paxton; Chas. A. Gleason, New Braintree; Geo.
A. Draper, Hopedale; Henry S. Nourse, Lancaster; J. Fred Mason, Frank E. Heywood,
Samuel E. Winslow, Burton W. Potter,
Samuel Winslow, S. Hamilton Coe, H. Spencer Haskell, Henry C. Wheaton, Franklin B.
White, Josiah Pickett E. B. Glasgow, Wm.
A. Gile, Justin A. Ware, Worcester.

A select dinner party was given on Tuesday evening, April 7, by Mrs. Josephine Morine of New York, at Hotel Plaza, in honor of her guests, Miss Fanning of New York and Miss Stockwell of Worcester.

Mr. J. Shields Stewart of the Telegram is the local manager of the Scotch Concert Company, which will appear at Association Hall,
April 25.

A pleasing recital was given Wednesday evening at the rooms of the School of English Speech by pupils of the school. The participants were Mrs. Idele Edmunds, Miss Clara
Holbrook, Miss Marie Louise Chandler, Miss
Susie Sargent, Miss Rosie Stone, Miss Mattie
Houghton, Miss Ethel Estey, Miss Alta
Thayer and Ralph Rebboli.

Mrs. Jennie Abbott-Mattoon's fifth annual reception took place in Mechanics Hall, Monday evening. That Mrs. Mattoon is the most popular dancing teacher in the city was proven by the large attendance of Worcester's best people and that she is the best, the exhibition by her pupils is sufficient evidence. This was the first time the reception has been held in this hall but the space seemed to be about as thoroughly taken as it has been in the past in the smaller Horticultural Hall. The first part of the evening, until nearly eleven o'clock, was occupied with an exhibition by the pupils.
At eight o'clock the line of pupils filed out of the west ante-room for the grand march. The leaders were Frank Whittemore and Ruth Smith. Behind them were a number of small children and the older pupils completed the long line. Mrs. Mattoon directed the movements. After the march a series of exhibition dances were given. The Highland fling was danced by Frank Whittemore, Miss Bessie
Stockwell, Miss Edith Stockwell, Miss Winnie
Nichols, Miss Alice Pierce, Miss Helen Kendrick, Miss Alice Hodgkins, Miss May Mellor,
Miss Maud Willard, Miss Effie Adams, Miss Lilla Belle Allen. The Mikado dance by "Three Little Maids from School" was danced by Misses Lilla Belle Allen, Grace Gabriel and Alice Pierce. The Cachuca, a Spanish dance, was given by Misses Ethel Curtis, Ethel Phelps, May Lytle, Mattie Hodgkins, Maud
Willard, Mary Mellor, Nellie Fairbanks and Marion Forehand. The scarf dance was given by Misses May Mellor, Alice Hodgkins, Alice Pierce, Bessie Stockwell, Helen Kendrick, Winnie Nichols, Maud Willard, Gertie
Strauss, Mattie Hodgkins, Lulu Morgan, Ida
Smith, Florence Shaffer, Anna Howe, Ethel
Phelps, Theresa Gray and Ethel Curtis, soloist. The sailor's hornpipe was danced by Misses Alice Hodgkins, Mollie Mirick, Lilla
B. Allen, Effie Adams, Frank Whittemore and George Bartlett. The rose dance was given by Misses Nellie Fairbanks, Marion Forehand, Ethel Phelps, Ethel Curtis, Flossie Sessions, Miss Wall, Dottie Prentice, Anna
Howe, Bertha Smith, Florence Shaffer,
Theresa Gray, Ida Smith, Maud Longley,
Lulu Morgan, May Lytle, Mattie Hodgkins,
Fanny Perkins, Grace Gabriel, Effie Adams,
Florence Wetherbee, Helen Kendrick, Edith
Stockwell, Bessie Stockwell, Ethel Sessions,
Maud Willard, Molly Mirick, Alice Hodgkins,
Maud Gabriel, Alice Pierce, Emma Prentice,
May Mellor Winnie Nichols. In the Tyrolean dance there appeared Misses Ethel Phelps, Ethel Curtis, May Lytle, Mollie Mirick, Mattie Hodgkins, Alice Hodgkins, Maud Willard May Mellor, Marion Forehand, Nellie Fairbanks. The tambourine dance was given by Misses Ethel Curtis, Ethel Phelps and Miss

Lilla B. Allen. The last fancy dance was the solitaire minuet danced by Miss Ethel Curtis.
Miss Curtis received a bouquet and a basket of flowers during the evening. Besides the fancy dances the pupils gave exhibitions in various square and round dances. After eleven o'clock the floor was open to all, the merriment lasting until early in the morning. Mrs. Mattoon was assisted in managing the floor by Will Fairbanks, Will Sibley, George Ryan, Capt.
Briggs, Lieut. Learned and Cadet Willoughby.

Geo. N. Morse's new studio,
Room 16, 368 1-2 Main street.

DIXIE MINSTRELS.

If that man is blessed who maketh his neighbor laugh, then are the Dixie Minstrels to be placed in the first rank of benefactors.
Hundreds of tired men and women laughed their cares away Thursday and Friday nights under the side-splitting jokes of the young men on the stage of Mechanics Hall. It is a grand thing, this taking of the Baldwinsville Home and laughing it into success. The poor little people suffering there are sad enough, but if kind-hearted friends can help them by their smiles, why then smile away. For several years this scheme of minstrelsy has been one of the longed-for entertainments, following Lent. If you meet a man with an unusually broad smile upon his face, make up your mind that a Dixie joke is still ringing in his ears. It is a fact that physicians have a week off immediately after the minstrels have held forth.

This year the company retains many of the old faces with some new ones added, though in their ebony condition their own mother's wouldn't recognize them. Their names are as follows:—

General M-nager—P. J. Rider, assisted by F. G.
Davis, F. R. Macullar, F. D. Freeman, H. W. Bates.
Tambos—P. L. Rider, H. F. A. Schmidt.
Interlocutor—C. I. Rice.
Bones—E. G. Davis, C. R. Macomber.
Musical Director—Edward L. Sumner; Accompanist,
George E. Brown.

Chorus—First tenors—George A. Smith, H. E.
Morse, G. B. Witherby, W. B. Cummings, R. C.
Cleveland, W. F. Little, S. H. Rood. T. Walters, Jr.,
W. C. Powers, G. M. Daniels. Second tenors—A. F.
Hyde, R. L. Kingston, B. Whitmore, Jr., A. P. Shaffer.
A. C. King, A. G. Titus, C. A. Gray, F. D. Sibley.
First basses—C. S. Hold-n, H. F. Blood, F. L. Ward,
W. E. Fairbanks, F. S. Chickering, L. P. Greenman, C.
A. Normand, William Riedl, H. H. Allen, A. E. Joy,
F. H. Norton. Second basses—F. L. Allen, N. C.
Keyes, G. H. Learned, W. Stevenson, W. E. Booth, G.
R. Davis, V. G. Goulding, E. L. Knight, E. A. Walsh,
G. E. Miller, C. H. Aldrich, W. H. Desper.

Dixie Orchestra—H. I. Osborne, Leader.
Arlington Banjo Qui tet—F. B. Fisher, C. H. Morse,
W. F. Boswell, A. B. Weixler, L. R. Bradford.

Gym Gyam Brothers—Fred Daniels, J. Herbert
Adams, L. C. Havener, George K. Clark, Benjamin Townsend.

Ushers—F. M. Clark, Jr., Fred A. Keyes, Howard
Frost, Henry J. Kettell, W. S. Lincoln, F. A. Clark, Arthur C. King, H. L. Adams, Edwin S. Clark, N. E.
Mansfield.

Like all items of home make, local wit and jokes are most enjoyed. Those of the Dixie's needed no explanation. They bubbled right over and laughter followed in great billows.
If Sancho Panza felt it in his heart to call down blessings on the man who invented sleep, let us include in our invocations him who originated fun. He ought to live forever.

Those who have been studying the lessons in Volapük which are being published in LIGHT and any others who are interested in that language, will be pleased to know that Prof. Alfred A. Post will give a lecture on Volapük at Trinity Church next Monday evening. Prof. Post is the official head for Massachusetts of the National Society for the propagation of Volapük and is well qualified to speak on this subject. The lecture is under the auspices of the Epworth League. The admission will be free but a collection will be taken to pay the expenses,

School and College.

The late Senator Simon Cameron of Pennsylvania was once heard to say, referring to his son Don, one of the Senators for the Keystone State today, "Well, Don gets along very well; but he lacks one advantage that I had." "Ah, indeed! Senator, and what is that?" inquires the interested listener. "Extreme poverty," is the reply. "But why an advantage," many a boy and girl struggling to begin life will ask? For this reason. The most of mankind develop the best there is in them under the spur of necessity. Poverty drove Simon Cameron to make himself the man he was. His son has lived in borrowed light. What poverty might have developed in him, the world will probably never know. The young people who are working hard in their educational gettings, who are practicing the most rigid economy and who are trying hard to earn an honest penny are training faculties that rich men's children do not develop and whose lacking may seriously cripple them some day.

ANTIGONE AT NEW HAVEN.

THE BEAUTIFUL PERFORMANCES OF FRIDAY AND SATURDAY, APRIL 3 AND 4.

The presentation of that great Greek tragedy, the "Antigone" of Sophocles, by women of New Haven Friday evening and yesterday afternoon and evening, was characterized by extraordinary and perhaps it may fairly be said unexpected success, since a tragedy in the Greek fashion is one of the most ambitious of tasks, and one in which professional actors would not be expected to shine. The witnessing such a performance as these New Haven women gave did, indeed, suggest that they had qualifications that a company of histrions would lack, unless such a company were made up by careful selection of artists from many troupes,—especially a clear intelligence of the classic point of view, an entire absence of preconceptions from the widely different motives of the modern theater, and a fresh receptivity to the peculiar rhetorical and plastic requirements, which are as unlike as the motives themselves. It requires a close obedience to the conditions, joined with great individuality of action and personation: and these were not wanting in the work of the New Haven actors.—Springfield Republican.

Educational Review—April 1891. Edited by Nicholas J. Murray, assisted by E. H. Cook, Wm. H. Maxwell and Addison B. Poland.

The leading articles are Art Education in Public Schools by Philadelphia's late Superintendent, James McAllister; The Pedagogic Value of Zoölogy, by S. A. Forbes; Recollections of Round Hill School, by George E. Ellis, reprinted in other columns; Adolf Deisterweg, by Henry Casel and James' Principles of Psychology, by J. Mark Baldwin. Under Discussions, to which Editor Poland contributes an article on State Councils of Education and Editor Maxwell one on The Department of Superintendance may be found some excellent matter. C. W. Bardeen of Syracuse, herein, gives a definition of a school as follows: "A School is a permanent establishment for instruction under a qualified teacher in the elements of a literary education, open equally to all the class for which it is maintained, and occupying the principal working hours of the week for a considerable part of the year." He says, himself, that he is not satisfied with it but asks its retention till a better can be found. The plan followed in the Review, of placing new educational works in the hand of competent teachers for their judgement is an excellent idea. In this way a writer is judged as he ought to be by his peers. The Common Law guarantees this; but among books some have been written up and others down at the behest of wholly incompetent critics. That famous writer on educational matters, J. G. Fitch, contributes an article on Contemporary Educational Thought in Great Britain. The publishers of the Review are Henry Holt & Co., New York.

High School.

The base-ball team soon begin their work under the management of C. A. Grey. They have an engagement with the Tech Freshmen, on the 18th of this month, and on the Saturday after, they play the class of '92.

Last evening was election night at the debating societies, but the reports come in too late for printing in this issue. The week preceding, the Sumner Club debated the question: "Resolved that mob law is sometimes justifiable." Petitions are now before the High School Committee from the Sumner Club and members of the old Assembly. The object of both societies is reinstatement in the school under the conditions which they enjoyed two years ago. The petitions have not as yet been acted upon, but it is believed by the members of both clubs that the result will be favorable.

Wednesday morning, rhetorical day, a reading was given by Miss Gaskell, "King John and the Abbott of Canterbury." Miss Day gave a reading entitled "Father Prob's Dilemma." Both are the second year class.

Monday afternoon A. C. Whitney '93 rendered a banjo solo before the Glee Club.

Friday evening, April 17, will be the occasion of an entertainment and reception at High School Hall. The first part of the entertainment will include music by the Arlington Quintette, who make their last appearance at this time. Mr. Arthur J. Bassett and Mr. T. B. Hamilton will also assist. The remainder of the program consists of an address by Principal Wight on "Parallelisms in Literature." After the address an informal reception is to be given to Mr. and Mrs. Wight. The object of the concert is to raise funds for the Base Ball Team and Athletic Association, under whose management the affair is. Tickets will be on sale at E. B. Clapp's and at the school office. The object is a worthy one, and the friends of the High School and the boys can show their regard by attending the entertainment.

The first ball game between the nine from the class of '94 W. P. I. and the nine from the High School will occur on "Bliss's Field," Saturday, April 11, at 3 p.m. Mr. R. H. Hammond will umpire the game.

Holy Cross

Thomas F. McLaughlin S. J. assistant prefect of discipline and professor of second mathematics, will be ordained to the priesthood at St. John's Roman Catholic Church next Tuesday. The orders of deacon and sub-deacon have already been conferred upon him by Bishop O'Reilly. He is a graduate of the W. H. S. in the class of 1876 and is an honorary member of the Eucleia debating society, holding many offices during his membership. He entered Holy Cross after leaving the High School, but before the completion of his first year, entered the present order. Thus after almost fifteen years of continuous service in studying and teaching, he is to be raised to the dignity of Holy Orders in the parish of his youth.

Private School.

Mrs. Morgan's Private School in the Y. M. C. A. building opened last Monday for the Spring term. The Kindergarten has a goodly number of little folks who are kept as busy as bees. By and by, they will progress all the better, in the public schools, for the good beginning made here.

Polytechnic.

President and Mrs. H. T. Fuller returned Thursday morning from their trip South. After a quiet sojourn at Lakewood, N. J., they visited Old Point Comfort, Hampton, and Richmond, then spent ten days at Ashville and Hot Springs, N. C., and broke the homeward journey by a slight tarrying at Washington. They report that on Saturday morning of last week there were two inches of snow at Ashville and even more on the mountains around, but two days later the atmosphere was soft and balmy as it rarely is in Worcester six week later. Dr. Fuller has been pursuing some interesting geological studies and investigation during his absence, and has collected valuable additions to the cabinet of the Institute. Among these are marls from the cretaceous formations of New Jersey, specimens illustrative of the Archæan and Silurian rocks of the North Carolina Mountains, and Zircon and beryl crystals from Henderson and Mitchell counties, N. C., localities where these minerals occur more abundantly than anywhere else in the United States.

State Board of Education Agent, A. W. Edson, gave the dedication address, last Tuesday at the opening of the Abington High School and next Monday evening will lecture to the Dartmouth College students, in the literary course, on "Teachers and Teaching." Mr. Edson is doing a valuable work in educational lines.

Bessie Frances Mellen.

Bessie Frances, only daughter of Henry and Addie M. Mellen, died at her home Friday forenoon, April 3, at the age of fifteen years. She was a member of the first year in the High School and a most lovable girl, an excellent pupil and a filial daughter. A wide circle will mourn her ever. Dr. McCullagh of Plymouth Church attended her funeral at her late home, 24 Merrick Street, Monday, at 3 p.m.

Among the books of a school-mate, the following impromptu stanzas have been found and we take pleasure in giving them as the heart felt tribute of a fellow-pupil.

Eulogy.

One whom we all knew has left us,
Gone to the great home on high,
But we know she is happy in Heaven
So, our sorrowful tears let us dry.

It pleased the great God to reclaim her,
To take her from this earthly sphere;
But we know she is happy in Heaven
For with God, she has nothing to fear.

Worcester, April 6, 1891.

OBITUARY.

The death of Mrs. Geo. Mann at Mannville in Leicester, Thursday, was a terrible blow to all who knew and loved her. Peculiarly sad are the circumstances of her illness and death. Mrs. Mann was a singularly lovely and attractive woman in character and appearance. She won a kind and faithful husband who provided her with all the comforts of a beautiful rural home. She was a perfect hostess and a woman of warm affection and great kindness. She was held in great esteem by a large circle of friends who now tender their sympathy to the husband, daughter, brothers and sisters. I. F. W.

Leicester, April 10.

Joseph Pratt.

Joseph Pratt was born in Foxboro, Mass., January 23, 1799. He is now in his 93d year. He received the usual common school education of that period, which was very little; worked on the farm till, at a very early age, he was apprenticed to Elijah Bird of Easton, to learn the blacksmith's trade. It may be mentioned, as illustrating the cruelty to which apprentices were exposed in those days, that in his indentures it was stipulated that he should not be obliged to eat fresh salmon more than three days in the week, so plentiful were these and other fish in Taunton river then. After his apprenticeship he worked at his trade in Taunton till 1825, when he came to Worcester and engaged to work for Mr. William A. Wheeler. About this time Mr. Wheeler was building the Wheeler foundry and Mr. Pratt became foreman of the blacksmith shop, in which position he remained till 1829. In this year he began the iron business near the store now occupied by his successors, with the original sign still over the door, in Washington Square. He was assisted in establishing the business by Mr. Harmon Chamberlin and Mr. Samuel Hathaway, the latter of whom became his partner, and the business was continued under the name of Joseph Pratt & Co., till the death of Mr. Hathaway, in 1832. Col. Isaac Davis then became interested in the business, which was continued under the same name till 1835, when Col. Davis was succeeded by Edward Earle and the firm became J. Pratt & Earle; this partnership continued till 1848 when Elbridge G. Pratt, brother of Joseph, succeeded Mr. Earle and the old style of Joseph Pratt & Co., was resumed. E. G. Pratt died in 1849 and the elder brother carried on the business alone till 1853, when Mr. F. H. Inman was associated with him under the firm name of Pratt & Inman, and this connection was unchanged till 1875 when Mr. Pratt retired from business with a moderate competency.

He is spending his remaining days in the society of his wife, (daughter of the late Harmon Chamberlin,) to whom he has been married sixty-four years, and of his daughter, the only survivor of six children, who is untiring in her devotion to her aged parents, now both invalids, requiring constant care.

In his religious faith Mr. Pratt has always been a staunch Universalist, and he was one of the founders of the First Universalist Society here, of which he has been a constant and prominent member. He was one of the four or five persons who united in building, at their own expense, the church at the corner of Foster street, now known as Continental Hall, and he is their sole survivor. He has always been a liberal contributor to the benevolent enterprises of the society, and has never failed to respond to their demands for pecuniary aid or sound counsel.

Naturally conservative in his political views, he acted with the Whig party till 1848, when sympathizing with the Free Soil sentiments he joined the ranks of that party, but did not make himself conspicuous in action. Indeed his course was so quiet and undemonstrative that he was about the last person in town who would be suspected of harboring fugitive slaves, or in any way abetting the wicked abolitionists in their defiance of law and order; and it was perhaps for this very reason that his premises early became one of the most hospitable and most frequented stations of the "underground railroad."

Fugitive chattels of both sexes and all ages found refuge there, sometimes for months, till the "conductors" could insure them a reasonably safe passage to Canada; and it may not be amiss to mention one or two incidents of their experience.

Ann, a bright intelligent slave, and her daughter, an equally bright girl of ten, were kept in the family a whole winter and spring, and would gladly have stayed longer had not the prying eyes of curious strangers warned them of danger; so, the train having been made ready, the unwilling travellers were notified, the signal was given by a rap on the window pane, and mother and daughter vanished in the midst of a black thunder storm.

A stout negro, rejoicing in the well-omened name of "Shadrach," found food and shelter in a secluded nook in the barn for several weeks, till the anxious inquiries of his sometime owner and his agent became too pressing, and a raid upon his refuge was planned. Happily Mr. Pratt got information of what was going on in season for him to give Shadrach warning in time; but only just in time, for the man had not been started on his journey towards the north star for quite an hour, when three officers rode up in hot haste, very much excited; finding Mr. Pratt in the yard, they eagerly inquired if there was a "nigger" somewhere about? "No," was the answer, "but there was one here a little while ago,"—"oh, yes, there was one round here, but he has gone." "When did he go?" "About an hour since." "Which road did he take?" "I could not tell you." Mr. Pratt, in the mean time was looking intently along the road the fugitive had not taken, as though he still saw him in the distance. The slave-hunters, thinking Mr. Pratt was unconsciously "giving the slave away" by his looks, after a moment's consultation galloped rapidly off in the wrong direction, while Mr. Pratt drew a long breath and proceeded to his business.

Mr. Pratt was twice elected to the Board of Aldermen where he did faithful work; he also served the city for one or two terms as Representative to the State Legislature, but he never sought office or solicited political favor; indeed nothing ever so much excited his disgust as the greedy scramble for office which has become so persistent.

As a business man Mr. Pratt has attained the highest reputation for strict integrity and unblemished honor; he has, moreover, always been ready to aid others who from temporary embarrassment have required assistance; and in his unselfish generosity has incurred losses which have reduced to "a moderate competency" what might otherwise have been a handsome fortune. To say all in a single sentence, he has lived the life of an honest man, the noblest work of God.

Herbert Jackson, High School, '89, and now a sophomore in Boston University, is winning prizes for his athletic powers. In the recent University games he won six silver cups. In his old High School days he used to be pretty near if not quite at the head.

Among the Portraits.

Passing by the aspect of the Loan Exhibition as a most eminent success, considered both as an enterprise and from its artistic point of view, the thoughtful visitor cannot but find there much food for reflection.

Portrait collections are always pre-eminently suggestive. When, as in the present instance, one is compared mainly to the counterfeit presentment of either very familiar faces or of the more or less remote ancestry of well known personages, it becomes doubly so.

Of these whom we find here who have "gone over to the silent majority" in our own time, our thought almost invariably is, "How young that picture makes him; as we remember him, he was rather an elderly man." It is difficult adjusting our minds to the fact that we were looking at him through the eyes of youth, to whom forty—or perhaps even thirty—was rather an advanced age.

As we look at it further, the face grows more natural. Memory reminds us of certain little tricks of voice or manner. Well remembered characteristics are recalled; and presently we have before us an image that it is all but impossible to realize is all of the past, and that "the places which knew him shall know him no more forever!"

To the contemplative, the interest always centers in the older portraits. Some of them seem so very much alive. What was the story of each, we silently ask.

Were the ambitions so plainly indicated upon one face there, ever really fulfilled?

Another seems so full of hope and confidence in the future. What did that future bring to its owner? Pain and disappointment instead, and sickness to rob those cheeks of their healthful bloom?

Here is a stately dame. Her face tells of strong vitality and a most resolute will. Her household must have feared her—a little—as well as loved her.

That one loved to make herself brave, after the fashion of her times. Will the fashion of our times come in their turn to look to future eyes so queer, and all but grotesque? We say no, even while we know it to be more possible that they may seem still more so.

Heredity, too, comes to the front, with much testimony as to that mysterious unwritten law, whereby we bear in our faces today the blended features of a long line of forgotten or even unknown ancestry. How very familiar is the modelling of the chin in that picture! To be sure, it was in a great grand son that we knew it. That nose and ear, too. They descended on the mother's side.

How well we remember the face of a young girl school-mate. It was a winsome one. The hair grew down in a peculiar little point at the middle of the forehead. The eyes were arch and mirthful. The mouth had a bewitching curve, sometimes tender, sometimes proud or mocking, but always charming. Here are the features again in an ancestor dead years and years before our girl friend was born.

Who can explain it, or the whence and whither and why of all these lives? They were, and ceased to be. Hopes and fears, pleasures and pains, loves and hates, in varied measure, were the portion of each. So much we know. The rest lies hidden only with the Infinite.

SIGMA.

Tyler Newton.

Old friends are a blessing. What a comfort to grasp the hand of such! Since June 1884 till Wednesday April 1st, our High School had as janitor a man to whom the word faithful applies better than any other in the language. He knew his duty and he did it ever.

Born in the state of Maine, he knew all the hardship of a boyhood amid the rocks and hills of that somewhat rugged section. He learned the whole round of self help and, before the War, had traveled far in pursuit of many forms of business. After the strictest sect, he was a devoted Maine Law man and it is music to hear him tell of his struggles in enforcing the measures of which Neal Dow was the Apostle.

During the Rebellion, he was a faithful soldier in the 1st Maine Battery and his adventures during the struggle would fill a fair sized book. He was a boyish companion of Gen'l O. O. Howard and when the latter was here in May last he met no one more heartily than his friend of long ago.

The following from the pen of George R. Kennedy is just the briefest possible summary of the days when Mr. Newton periled life for the Nation. All too brief, it shows, however, the mettle of the man.

"Or again, that other Worcester citizen, only a private during the war, refusing honorable positions in the regular army offered him by Lincoln, Stanton, and Surgeon General Hammond, who in the first battle of Fredericksburg, when the supporting regiment of infantry ran at sight of the Rebels charging up the slope, stood with his fellows, only two hundred and one against a thousand, repulsing the first and second impetuous charges. And then at the third, reaching the guns, the deadly hand to hand struggle between bayonets, swords, and "sponge staves" the devilish lunge of the rebel bayonet, the step backward, and the cold steel through the leg, the bullet through the brain of the rebel, the fall of the dead body on the prostrate, wounded artilleryman, and then to hear from the modest lips of this man that the pain of all this was nothing in comparison to the withdrawing of the bayonet after the enemy had been repulsed for the third time. And this man for thirteen years has gone in and out among us with hardly the fact of his service or wound being known, altho' bayonet wounds are of honorable distinction and rare occurrence in the armies of these later days. It is only within the past few months that the name of Tyler Newton has been enrolled with the Grand Army of the Republic, and the story of his deeds, and the secret of his halting step became known even to his most intimate friends."

In the army, as elsewhere, he was ever faithful when duty called. When the bloodshed was over and he came back to the walks of Peace he came to our city and was, at once, recognized as one of our most reliable and respected citizens. When Janitor Shellar died in 1884 and the writer was wondering who could take his place, a gentleman said, "I can find a man who will fill the bill." The man came and that he has "filled the bill," the hundreds of High school teachers and pupils since his coming will readily testify. A visitor from abroad once said, in going over the building, "You must have a good janitor for your rooms look as though they were just swept for inspection." This remark would apply to all his work, whether in the care of the boilers, the rooms or the walks. While he knew what was expected from him and jealously guarded his trust, he so discharged his duties as to hold the good opinion, nay affection of all those with whom he had to do.

It was an expression of this feeling that prompted Master K. to ask Mr. Newton to stand by the basement door with Jock by his side that his friends might have a semblance of these two beings, so often seen together. In the minds of the High school pupils the two are always blended, for where one was the other was sure to be seen. Jock was the best educated dog in Worcester, or he ought to be for he had the advantage of the H. S. course for more than four years. It is said that he was lonesome during vacations and even sought the empty building for his old society. How he will like Mr. Newton's leaving remains to be seen. There was no favor in the janitor's power to grant that he would not willingly grant and the boys and girls who were members of the societies will recall his kindness for years to come.

As they go back to visit the school for a brief hour they will miss the familiar face and form and they will look in vain for Jock with his master's hat or brush in his mouth. Jock always wanted to help and he was humored into thinking that carrying Mr. Newton's hat up stairs was of great assistance.

Into his new work, with Messrs. Darling

Brothers, he will carry the same qualities that have distinguished his years in the school. The pupils have lost a thorough, conscientious friend and the school a most efficient officer. The old edifice seems to lack something. What care he took of the flag and how ready he was to fling it out on all national days, and the flag in his hands meant a great deal. There was not a pupil during the last six years who will not be glad to look upon this picture. What will the boys do when they want to camp out next summer? Will their parents trust them in any other care? Our Janitor filled a large space, and he filled it well.

Davis Art Company, on Pearl Street opposite the Post Office, is showing a most delightful line of goods from the hands of local artists. If you don't buy, it will pay you to call and see what Worcester talent is capable of doing. Cabinet picture cases, illuminated calendars, pictured glasses. They are all of the most creditable character. The long drill that Worcester young people have been having is telling in their taste and capacity in an artistic direction. Many homes are prettier, today, for the talent of these artists. "Home made" is a telling recommendation the world over. We love our homes and we prize any agency that can make them more attractive.

Remember the place. Mr. Crocker, manager.

The Worcester Mechanics' Association will hold its annual meeting next Tuesday evening. The business in order will consist of election of officers, reports of past officers, discussion in relation to celebration of semi-centennial of the association which occurs next year and the admission of new members. Persons desiring to become members should apply at once at the treasurer's office for application blanks.

The Philadelphian Debating Society, once so prominent, is arranging for a supper of former members in the near future at Hotel Kenmore.

Church Notes.

METHODIST.

The Christian League of Grace church has elected officers for one year as follows: President, Frank J. Metcalf; 1st Vice President, Cora D. E. Robinson; 2nd Vice President, W. T. Rogers; Secretary, Mrs. A. S. Roe; Treasurer, W. C. Healy; Auditor, F. N. Tainter; Directors, Edna Rand, D. R. Taber, W. A. Pentecost.

Rev. John Galbraith says "Goodby" to many people after all the arrearages for the year are provided for, Sunday, the 5th.

Monday evening he was tendered a farewell reception at the church parlors. Rugs, draperies and bric-a-brac were liberally used in the artistic arrangements of the parlors, and a more social gathering has not been held in Grace Church circles in years. It was the annual meeting of the young men's Bible class and was the means of attracting Mr. Galbraith to the church. About one hundred young people of the church congregated to bid their pastor goodbye, and to him it was a pleasant surprise. The whole affair was managed by the young men themselves. The outfit was loaned by the Adams Home Furnishing Co.

A short musical program was carried out. It consisted of a character duet, "When you and I Were Young," by A. Lester Farwell and Miss Nellie Layng; a vocal solo, "He Was a Prince," by Miss Flora Miner; a reading by W. H. Baird, and a vocal duet, "Pilot Brave," by O. W. Farwell and W. C. Healy. These numbers were warmly received, and were followed by remarks by the retiring president, W. C. Healy, President-elect, J. M. Hoey and P. F. White.

The pastor announced that he would say only a few words as a farewell to those assembled. He related the many pleasant relations he had experienced with the people of the church, particularly the young people, with whom he had spent many a pleasant hour, every moment of which was true enjoyment. He loved to associate and frolic with the young. There were many reasons why he regretted leaving Grace church, but none more important than his separation from the young people. His work arranged for the Bible class was about half completed, but in a condition to proceed with after his departure.

The closing number of the program was the singing of the hymn. "God be with you till we meet again."

A unanimous vote of thanks was extended by the class to the retiring president, W. C. Healy, for his three years of service. Officers were elected as follows: President, J. M. Hoey; vice president, H. W. Flack; secretary, D. R. Flack; treasurer, D. Young; entertainment committee, A. L. Farwell, P. S. Doane, W. B. Holt, C. E. Squier; outlook committee, E. A. Brewer, J. P. Taber, George Deik, W. C. Healy and C. S. Forbes. The class numbers above eighty young men and they owe much to Mr. Galbraith whose place it will be difficult to fill. Naturally they are wondering who the next teacher will be. Perhaps, of its kind, there is not a larger and better class in the city.

Thomas Street Swedish—The recent fair in Mechanics' Hall nets about $1,300 for the church. The debt is now below six thousand dollars.

Webste Square—Rev. Henry Dorr preached a farewell sermon Sunday.

ZION.

Bishop C. R. Harris of Philadelphia preaches Sunday.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

Sacred Heart.—A two weeks' mission opened Sunday, the 5th inst

Rev. Fr. Conaty has issued the April Calendar. A very valuable compilation, invaluable to the members of that parish.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Christian Endeavor Society of Plymouth Church has elected officers as follows: President, Willis E. Sibley; vice president, E. E. Kent; secretary, Miss Emily Whitemore; treasurer, Miss Ethel Tillinghast; chairman of lookout committee, J. Frank White; social committee, Miss Florence Dodge; Sunday School committee, Miss Minnie Taft; prayer meeting committee, Miss Anna Kelly; music committee, Miss Bessie Pelton; literature, Miss Emily Mellen.

The Boys' Bible Class of Salem Street Church held its regular monthly meeting Thursday evening. After a business meeting, the following question was debated: Resolved, that the massacre of the Italians at New Orleans was justifiable. The debates were: affirmative, C. J. Harris and W. E. Stearns, negative, Alvah Clements and Charles Shaw. The question was decided in the negative.

Tomorrow evening at Plymouth Church Dr. McCullagh will begin a series of sermons on the book of Esther.

UNIVERSALIST.

The annual meeting and banquet of the Chapin Club will be held at the First Universalist Church vestry next Tuesday evening. At the business meeting there will be the election of officers, reports of committees and the reading of the history of the year by the historian, Mr. C. M. Harrington. Following the business meeting a banquet will be served by Rebboli.

BAPTIST.

Monday evening at the Main Street Baptist Church, C. H. Hoadley gave an illustrated lecture on "Pilgrim's Progress."

Lincoln Square Church celebrated its tenth anniversary Thursday evening.

Y. P. S. C. E.

The local union of the Christian Endeavor societies held its monthly meeting at the First Baptist Church, Monday evening. Addresses were made by Kev. Geo. G. Craft and Rev. Lawrence Phelps, president of the State Union. There are now twenty-five Endeavor Societies in this city.

The county convention will be held in the Old South Church April 30 and May 1. Special pains are being taken to make it a successful meeting. All the best speakers who appeared in Portland and Boston will be present to address this convention, which will probably be the best ever held in this city.

Y. M. C. A.

At the boy's meeting tomorrow, A. H. Nazanan will speak on "The Boys of Turkey." He will also address the men's meeting. He is a converted Armenian and is studying at Boston University.

The board of directors of the Women's Auxiliary met yesterday afternoon and elected officers.

Worcester's Young Men, the new Association paper, made its appearance this week. It is a very neat looking paper.

Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Kent.

It is seldom that death claims in such quick succession both husband and wife as was the case with the late Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Kent, formerly of this city.

Less than a fortnight ago, the latter was about, and, save for a cold, apparently in usual health. Thursday she kept her bed, and the following Monday her friends were shocked and grieved to learn of her death. A faithful wife, a fond mother, a warm friend and an earnest worker in the church, her many friends cannot but mourn her seemingly untimely end.

About a year and a half ago Mr. Kent was obliged by failing health to give up business here and seek a less severe climate, and he removed to Plainfield, N. J., where he and Mrs. Kent continued to reside with a daughter, who had gone there some time before. His condition was such that his friends were prepared to hear of his death at any time, but notwithstanding his feebleness he outlived his wife. But the shock of her sudden death proved too much; and from that moment he began to sink rapidly and passed away on the 4th, just a few hours after the burial of his wife.

His face was for many years a familiar one on Main Street, and his quiet unassuming manner and sterling worth will cause him to be long and pleasantly remembered by the many with whom his daily duties brought him in contact.

Both he and his wife were connected with the Central Church and the funeral services of each took place from there, Mrs. Kent, Saturday, the 4th, Mr. Kent, the 7th; the remains having been brought here for burial at Hope Cemetery.

Their sole surviving child, Mrs. Louis Batson will have the warmest sympathy of many in her double bereavement.

Geo. N. Morse's new studio,
Room 16, 368 1-2 Main street.

MASTERY.

A heart for all seasons! a heart that withstands
The front of cold fortune; a heart that commands Desire discreetly, and keeps the life strong;
A heart that drinks in the earth's glorious song,
In seasons of trouble, and failure, and pain;
A heart that at all times greets all men as brothers,
Whose aim is to lighten the burden of others—
On, this is the conquering heart that shall gain
At last the great summit, at last the fair height,
In the spaces of splendor, the country of light!
Millbury, Mass. C. L. CLEAVELAND.

James T. Powers, the star of A Straight Tip, recently purchased a fine residence in Harlem for $19,000. He made the money this season.

Boston Letter.

[Held over from last week.]

BOSTON, March 31, 1891.

Easter was a beautiful day here, though there was a trifle suggestion of afar off snow banks in the air, but the sun shone brightly, the streets were filled with promenaders, and the churches were more packed than ever, if that be possible. All the churches were gaily decorated with flowers; many florists worked all night to fill their orders. Every year sees more of this decorating done, more elaborate and costly designs, to the florists delight, no doubt.

I noticed every other man had some kind of a flower in his buttonhole, while many ladies were walking rose bushes, nearly everyone wearing a bouquet in some shape. It was hardly the day for Spring styles to flourish very extravagantly with the gripe so near at hand, but new bonnets and hats were shown very prettily, for how many there are who wear at least one article of apparel, new, that day, to bring them luck the rest of the year. It is an old, old superstition, and you would be surprised to know how many prosaic matter of fact people follow that custom every year.

The best thing in the dramatic line this week is "The Senator," at the Hollis, with that popular comedian, William Crane, in the title role. There is a delightful natural breezy manner in his portrait of the western senator, an honest, rugged specimen of humanity one always likes to meet. The play in itself is very interesting, and there are several very good parts, that of the charming fascinating widow in particular, but Crane's personal magnetism and go, as much as anything make it the great success it is.

At the Tremont Theatre Miss Tempest is playing a round of light operas, and meeting with as good success as she did last Winter in such pieces as "Dorothy," "The Red Hussar" and "Carmen." She is a good singer and a pleasing vivacious little actress, and has many friends in this city. Mr. Lawn takes the place of John MacKaye, who recently died of pneumonia, as the comedian of the company. I understand three of this company have passed away from the effects of that disease this season.

That melo-dramatic play called "The Still Alarm" is at the Globe this week, it has been here before, and rewards virtue and punishes vice as usual. The real live fire engine attracts about as much attention and applause as any of the actors, deservedly so, no doubt.

H. M. Pitt formerly stage manager at the Museum, but lately manager of a school for acting, is producing Robertson's comedy "Ours" at the Grand Opera House, appearing as the hero, Hugh Chalcote, himself, supported by his own company.

There are two first class minstrel shows here. Thacher's company at the Boston Theater with a host of good talent including Charlie Reed, the comedian, who blacks up this week for the first time in some years.

At the Park, Cleveland's minstrels are doing a good business, and as usual giving a very laughable performance. They have been here many a time and oft before, and most always do well.

Jerome K. Jerome's new satire, "New Lamps for Old," a farcial comedy which had a run of three hundred nights in London, was produced at the Museum Monday, and made a decided hit. It deals with the efforts of two married couples to exchange spouses, and is very bright, comical, clean and wholesome in spite of such a delicate plot. It is admirably acted, better than anything the company has done for some time. All the favorites are "in it" and act with spirit, something they do not always do, I must say. They need some young energetic blood up there to brace them up, as a rule.

Speaking of this old theater reminds me that Mason, their leading man, the first of the season, has made a great success in London, unheralded, and unadvertised. He always has had the elements of a good actor, and has done splendidly at times, only he needed more energy, to stick to business better.

Geraldine Ulmer, a great favorite here, and all over the country, once with the Boston Ideal Opera Company and later in New York, was married in London, Monday, to Ivan Caryll, a young Belgian, leader of the orchestra at the Lyrie Theater, where she was prima donna. She used to be with the Ideals when Marie Stone, Miss Phillips Barusbeer, etc., were the bright stars, and made quite a hit later on in the "Mikado." It was rumored at one time she was engaged to Sir Arthur Sullivan of opera fame, but she probably wanted a good orchestra to rehearse by.

Word comes from New York that Edwin Booth retires from the stage temporarily, with Saturday's night performance in New York, broken down physically. With Barrett dead, and Booth retired, where are our future tragedians coming from?

WATSON.

Sunday School Lesson.

In studying the review of the last quarter's Sunday School lesson the question comes up, shall we in Christian living and Christian work follow the heroic example of Elijah or the more quiet humanitarian system of Elisha. Prof. Henry A. Tromp of Georgia University says, "Now if ever we need preceptors who will teach that right is right eternally, that wrong is wrong forever, and that with wrong there can be no compromise, no armistice, and that a man's laws must be brought into accord with God's laws." The quotation explains itself, 1st, Teach the people. 2d, Bring the laws into accord with God's laws. 3d, See to it that they are enforced after the pattern which He set us in the Garden of Eden. Isn't it worthy of a thought that the first law given to the human race was a prohibition law, and related to the appetite, and how clear it is, judging by statistics, that the appetite for strong drink today, is causing more suffering, crime and death than any other one force, God hasten the day when our preceptors shall teach, and our voters shall learn that the total extinction of the liquor traffic is the only way to control it.

Behold the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save, neither His ear heavy that it cannot hear. Isaiah 57, 1.

So let us do right, what ere ensue.
For God is God, and His word is true.

B.

Charles Coghlan's play, Lady Barter, which his sister Rose recently produced at the Worcester Theatre, was roundly hissed in London.

Geo. H. Ward, Post 10, G. A. R.

From week to week, LIGHT will print a complete Roster of the present and past members of the Post. A star before a name indicates a deceased member and a dagger, one who, for any reason, has ceased to belong. While the list will not include all the veterans of the late war who call Worcester home, it will allow the public to know who many of them are. When the soldier belonged to two organizations, the fact is expressed.

NAME.	COMPANY.	REGIMENT.
Babcock, Edmund B.	C	4 Mass. Cav.
Babbitt, Samuel F.	F	4 Mass. Cav.
Bachelder, J. W. R.	D	4 Mass. H. A.
†Beacon, Albert D.		1 Conn. H. A.
†Bacon, Charles W.	C	34 Mass.
Bacon, Henry	E	34 Mass.
Bacon, John W.	C	36 Mass.
†Bacon, Thomas	A	29 Mass.
†Bailey, Geo. C.		3 Vt.
Baird, J. Lorin	E	4 Mass. H. A.
Baker, Geo. H.	M	2 Mass. Cav.
Baker, Henry S.	H	15 Mass.
†Baker, Wm. R.		5 Unattached Co.
Baldwin, Chas. W.	E	42 Mass.
Baldwin, John S.	F	51 Mass.
*Ball, Diah	K	25 Mass.
Ball, Horace F.	D	34 Mass.
Ball, Oscar C.		1 Reg. Eng's.
†Bancroft, C. A.	F	14 N. H.
†Bancroft, F. C.	Band	8 N. H.
Bancroft, Wm. F.	C	1 and 12 Vt.
*Bane, Lewis	G	2 N. J.
†Bange, Edward, P.	C	36 Mass.
Barber, Chas. S.	A	36 Mass.
Barber, Henry D.		31 Mass.
†Barber, Josiah G.	F	4 Mass. H. A.
†Barber, Nelson	D	2 R. I.
†Barber, Theodore	K	25 Mass.
†Barbour, Isaac R.	B	35 U. S. C. T.
Barker, Chas. E.	K	42 Mass.
†Barker, Chas. R.	F	60 Mass.
Barker, Chas. W.		Monadnock U. S. N.
Barker, Geo. V.	E	42 Mass.
*Barnard, Chas. E.	G	57 Mass.
Barnard, F. G.	C	16 Vt.
†Barney, Wm. H.	C	1 R. I. Cav.
†Barras, Samuel A.		33 N. Y.
Barry, Fergus	I	1 Pa. Res.
†Barrett, Augustine E.		7 Conn.
Barrett, Samuel D.	C	51 Mass.
Bartlett, A. F.	H	25 Mass.
†Bartlett, Chas. A.	A	5 Mass.
†Bartlett, Eben A.	A	57 Mass.
†Bartlett, Frederick	A	25 Mass.
†Bartlett, Geo. A.	E	51 Mass.
†Bartlett, John M.	B	56 Mass.
Bartlett, Wm. H.	A	48 Mass.
†Barton, Chas. P.	F	42 Mass.
		{ 51 Mass.
*Barton, Geo. E.		{ 57 Mass.
Barton, Geo. W.	F	4 Mass. H. A.
†Bascom, Artemas, D.	B	3 Batt. Rifles.
†Batchellor, Hiram W.	F.	21 Batt. Rifles.
†Bates, Geo. D.		7 R. I.
†Battelle, George L.	C	51 Mass.
†Bean, Elmer I.	H	13 Me.
*Beard, J. H.	C	25 Mass.
Beaumont, John J.	K	10 Mass.
†Beebe, Calvin H.		3 Pa. Art.
Bemis, Chas. H.	D	15 Mass.
		{ D 15 Mass.
Bemis, Henry N.		{ C 51 Mass.

(To be continued.)

Books and Bookmen.

All merchants display their wares. They aim to make the display such as to tempt the eye of the beholder. The chronic shopper goes about just to see what the dry goods man has done in this regard. The restaurant keeper wishes to so arrange his viands that he may arouse appetite and the book-seller likes to place his treasures where the book lover may have the best opportunity to see them. Yes and to handle them too, for no bibliomaniac is satisfied with a far-away glance of what he loves. He must take it in his hands and he must open it to look at the print, the margins and the paper. Opening it and hearing the rustle of leaves will do him more good than hours of looking at its back. It is a delightful study to stand in the store of — in this city and watch those who enter and the different ways they have as they approach the book shelves. Here is one who very seldom buys a book; but he has a notion that it is a good thing to know something about literature and he would really like to have it understood that he is bookish in his tastes. His liking is not inborn. He is ever ready to talk about his liking and talks more than he reads. He doesn't have an account at the store. But just mark the way this man takes the very latest book. His appetite is ever keen. He can tell, in a moment, what books have been added since he was in last. He dips into the book, here and there. He likes or he dislikes and he knows why. He is a customer to be encouraged. Then here are those painstaking and self sacrificing people who buy for book clubs. They know that they will be criticised, whatever they purchase, and they generally end by taking a certain percentage of all the latest books, good or bad. The book store is a good place in which to study human nature. Perhaps next week's LIGHT will have a word picture of a regular hanger on.

Dedham Historical Register. Quarterly, Vol. 2, No. 2, April, 1891. Published by the Dedham Historical Society. $1 per year.

This publication with a purpose offers to its readers an excellent table of contents. The illustrations are portraits of the Hon. George H. Kuhn and of John Cox, Esq., with a relief plate of the Dedham School Farm. There are biographical sketches of Messrs. Kuhn and Cox with a continuation of Dedham's schools and teachers, of extracts from the Ames Diary, and of Dedham in the Rebellion. More epitaphs from Needham are found along with births in Franklin and Dover. A list of birds in Dedham is a move in a good direction, begun none too soon. The late Mr. John Cox was the writer of "A Pen Picture of Old Times." The annual report of the society is also found in this number. The magazine is a most excellent medium of setting forth the early history of this most interesting locality. Notes and Queries brings out some very diverting facts.

First Report of the Free Public Library Commission of Massachusetts, 1891. Boston, State Printers, 18 P. O. Square.

Massachusetts has long had an enviable status in our country on account of the quality of the reports sent out by her departments and commissions. It is an open secret that the set of her educational reports is considered more valuable than that of any other state in the Union. So, too, of her agricultural and charities and some others; but here, modestly numbered 44 of Public Documents for this year 1891, is, in LIGHT'S opinion, the very best compilation yet submitted to a thinking public. Two weeks since we gave a somewhat restricted summary of data, gathered from this report, with reference to those who had made donations to libraries. Here is the book itself and the record is a proud one. In the preface we learn that in 1839, there were from ten to fifteen town libraries in the state, having an aggregate of only about 4000 volumes. In the intervening fifty years the numbers have changed, so that in 1890 there were only 103 towns, out of 351, with no public facilities for obtaining books and the aggregate of volumes is 2,500,000. Here then is a reason for pride. Our state cannot lose her place as leader so long as she keeps up this interest. The commission is composed of five members, the chairman being that indefatigable gatherer of books, C. B. Tillinghast, assistant librarian at the State House, and the second member is our own efficient librarian, S. S. Green, while Worcester County is again interested in that the third member is Henry S. Nourse of Lancaster. Every town in the Commonwealth is treated alphabetically and if it have a library, its condition is fully described. Besides very many buildings have excellent half tone pictures. Those thus represented are the edifices in Acton, Andover, Barre, Belchertown, Bernardston, Braintree, Bridgewater, Brookfield, Brookline, Cambridge, Chelsea, Concord, Cummington, Dedham, Duxbury, East Hampton, Easton, Fitchburg, Florence, Foxboro, Framingham, Gardner, Gloucester, Harvard, Hingham, Hubbardston, Ipswich, Lancaster, Lincoln, Littleton, Ludlow, Malden, Manchester, Mashpee, Methuen, Middleton, Munson, Natick, New Bedford, Newton, Northampton, North Reading, Norton, Orleans, Palmer, Petersham, Pittsfield, Princeton, Provincetown, Quincey, Randolph, Rehoboth, Salem, Summerville, Spencer, Springfield, Sudbury, Sterling, Stockbridge, Templeton, Ware, Warren, Watertown, West Brookfield, Woburn, Worcester. We miss Boston's building, but for that we must wait till the new one is completed. Massachusetts can send this report over the entire world with no fear whatever of failing by comparison. The book concludes with a summary of laws having to do with libraries. Our only fear for the commission is that having told everything in this, there will be nothing left for a second report.

The Century for April is, as ever, full of interest and profit. The table of contents was given in last week's paper. The reader turns to whatever suits himself best. Doubtless many an old soldier will read "Cold Cheer at Camp Morton" first and wonder if it is a fact that Southern soldiers really suffered in Northern prisons. The writer gives occasion for doubt in intimating that rebels were, sometimes, compelled to give up their clothing on capture in exchange for Yankee garbs. This won't do. LIGHT doubts any Confederate ever wearing any garment that ever excited, for the briefest moment, the cupidity of the raggedest Yank. Through this step, it is to be feared that the whole Camp Morton yarn must be taken, cum grano salis. The character stories as "Colonel Carter of Cartersville" and "A Race Romance" are delightful. We have more of France in "Salons of the Revolution and the Empire." The illustrations make Madam de Stael look better and Madame Roland, worse than former pictures. "The Early Inter-course of Wordsworth and DeQuincey" is another of those reminiscent, letter compilations in which the writer, H. A. Page, excels. We have more of California, this time by way of Panama, with following articles. M. D. Conway's chapter on "Washington and Frederick the Great" is exhaustive as all his writings are. "Topics of the Time," "Open Letters" and "Bric-a-brac" introduce many well known names and treat many live topics. The pages are profusely illustrated and one can get no better notion of the advance in magazine making than by comparing this number of The Century with one of Harper's twenty-five years since. The Century Company, New York, $4 per year.

Our Police. A History of the Cincinnati Police Force, from the Earliest Period until the Present Day. Edited by G. M. Roe. Illustrated with portraits and etchings. Cincinnati, Ohio, 1890.

The foregoing title is that of a large octavo of 418 pages. It represents a deal of labor on the part of the editor, who in his Cincinnati journalistic life of nearly twenty years has had abundant opportunity to observe what he clearly and truthfully describes. From 1872 to date, Mr. Roe has been connected with some daily in that famous Ohio city. Gazette, Enquirer, and now the Times-Star have known him as reporter, city editor and editorial writer. The city and its protectors have long been a favorite study, so when the task of writing up the police force presented itself, he was found peculiarly well qualified for the undertaking. He finds a beginning for his book in 1788, an advertisement in a Kentucky paper with reference to the settlement of what we know as Cincinnati, and the history ends with a roster of the police of the city today. While the writer has aimed to give a clear succinct narrative of the force, he cannot suppress the fact that he has read and written much in other directions, thus giving an interest to his story that, otherwise, would be lacking. The early history of all enterprises, setting forth the days of creation, is full of zest and this is particularly true in the first chapters of our book. In 1817, Mr. Bennett, the English traveller, said, "The police of the city are respectable; they have, however, no lamps, or watchwords, nor do they need any. We boarded in the heart of the town, and our doors were mostly open day and night. Theft is very rare; the lowest classes seem above it." From the halycon period, through the Pro Slavery riots of 1836, the Father Bedini broil in 1853, the Know Nothing riots in 1855 to the terrible gutting and sacking of the Court House of 1884 the way was long and sometimes bloody. In addition to a chronological development of the force and its work there are several chapters of incidents and extended descriptions of some of the crimes that have, for the time, made the city famous, as the Baldwin mystery, the Schilling murder and others. A very clever description is given of the riot of 1884, when so many lives were lost and so much property destroyed, with the causes that led up to it. In addition to the letter press there are good half tone portraits of quite one hundred people in some way connected with the array devoted to protecting the city on the Ohio. Finally, in the conscientious discharge of his duty, Mr. Roe has left out nothing that would tend to the embellishing of the subject. Long years of newspaper work have given him a decisive and incisive style well suited to the matter portrayed. To secure the book, address the author, care of Times-Star, Cincinnati.

"The Danbury News man. What has become of him?" is a query frequently heard. The following from the Oswego Times is an answer.

"I went to Danbury, Conn. Here I had the pleasure of a short visit with the famous 'Danbury News Man.' I found him in the office of the Evening News, the leading journal of the city, of which he, Mr. J. M. Bailey, is the editor and proprietor. He led the way into the 'sanctum,' a neatly carpeted and tastefully furnished apartment where the editorial chair, table and waste basket were located. This room was guarded by two prepossessing pug dogs who politely rose and gave me a friendly greeting. Mr. Bailey is a man of medium height, very erect, with a handsome head well poised on two very square shoulders. His hair, which is abundant and worn rather long, is turning gray. His eyes are very bright brown ones and seem to be constantly looking at something funny, so humorous is the expression in them. He made some inquiries about northern New York; especially the city of Rome, which is his native place. He conducted me through the printing house and pointed out in a far corner of the job room a little, old-fashioned hand press, elevated, to borrow Mr. Bailey's expression—"like a Japanese god" on a high shelf by the window. This was the first printing press he bought, some twenty-four years ago. It has outlived its usefulness and now is preserved as a relic. Mr. Bailey gave me some interesting incidents in regard to himself as the 'Danbury News Man.' At the time he began writing in the peculiar style which rendered him so popular he was running a little weekly paper with some hundreds of subscribers. The articles he amused himself by writing each week were copied here and there but the attention they attracted was not remarked by him until all at once the subscriptions to the News began to pour in at a rate that swelled the list to 30,000 in six weeks. The old fashioned hand press on which it was printed would not turn out half that number in a day, so extra hands were hired and the press kept running day and night to complete the editions. Mr. Bailey smiled when I ventured a remark intended to elicit from him some information in regard to the reason why he did not write now as formerly. He said when it ceased to be an amusement, and got to be a 'grind,' when the venders of patent medicines and the makers of coffins wanted him to write humorous sketches and climax them with the remark that Blank, having used their particular make of medicine or coffin never used another, he considered it time to retire from the field. From all I heard in his praise I concluded Mr.

Bailey was one of the most popular men in the city. Many stories were related of his life by one and another of the people I met. His home is a charming one on a pleasant avenue. His wife is an invalid to whom he is especially devoted. One of the stories told me was of a letter Mr. Bailey wrote to the Danbury paper while in the army, he having enlisted when he was eighteen or nineteen. It was on the occasion of a sumptuous Christmas dinner enjoyed by the officers at a time when the rank and file were on short rations, and gave an exceedingly humorous account of the feast from the standpoint of a private who was not invited to partake. It was a disastrous letter for the writer, and cost him his promotion as the incensed commander on account of it gave the shoulder straps he was to have worn to another."

The Home Magazine, a national illustrated journal conducted by Mrs. John A. Logan, Washington, D. C. Price 50 cents. The first page has an illustrated poem of Charles Kingsley, "The Sands o' Dee." The continued story of "Janet" is to be finished in May number, as are the papers on "Home Education for Men." The short stories, especially "The Building of the Church at Kehoe" are fine. A page is given to the Shut In Society and the usual amount of needle work and recipes are found within its pages. This number has portraits of the Minister from Mexico and his wife and the paper on "Life at the Capitol" by Mrs. Logan has four pictures of distinguished people of the time of which she writes.

The Household Monthly published by the Household Monthly Company, Boston, Mass. 50 cents per year. This number has four stories, many poems, five patterns of lace, a department of woman's exchange, some good things in the editorial columns, and the "Short Talks," and "Woman's World" will interest all who read the magazine.

The Cosmopolitan for April presents a great variety of articles, with the usual fine illustrations. Senator Peffer, of Kansas, contributes an article on the "Farmer's Alliance" and Murat Halstead in his "Review of Current Events" discusses the works of General Sherman and of Bismarck. "The essay on Farm Life" by Jennie Hooker, which won the first prize offered by the Cosmopolitan for the best essay on farm life, presents some facts worthy of much consideration. Sylvester Baxter discusses the "Future Conditions of Invention." Under the title, "The Master of Genre," George E. Montgomery gives a sketch of the life of the late artist Meissonier. Frederic Villiers, the famous London war correspondent, continues the story of his experiences. Other articles are "The Eldest of the Arts" by Elizabeth Bisland; "Resurgam," a poem by Frederic Peterson; "The President's Office and Home" by George G. Bain; "The Nicaragua Canal" by Charles T. Harvey; "A Handkerchief," a poem by John Patterson; "The Japanese Theater" by Eliza R. Scidmore; "Easter-Tide," a poem by C. A. Lord; "The Mystery of a Studio, a story by Robert H. Fletcher; "The Choice of Occupation" by Edward Everett Hale; "On Certain Recent Novels by American Women" by Brander Matthews and a poem, "Compensation," by Julia C. R. Dorr. There are over one hundred illustrations in this number.

Hon. John D. Long, ex-governor of Massachusetts, has a remarkable article in the April number of Education on "How I was educated," every teacher, parent and scholar in the land should read it. Education ought to be in every city, college, village, Y. M. C. A. library or reading room. Every superintendent, teacher and friend of education should take it. Is it in your library? Do you know its merits? Send twenty cents for a sample copy; or thirty cents for the April number. Regular price $3. The articles by Dr. A. D. Mayo, January number, on "The Children's Opportunity in the New South," and by Gen. O. O. Howard, February number, on "How I was Educated," are worth a year's subscription. If you are not now taking Education we will send it to you, one year, for $2.50. Try it. Address: Publisher Education, 50 Bromfield street, Boston, Mass.

Lippincott's Magazine.

The distinctive feature of this magazine is the complete novel in each number. That in this number is "Maidens choosing" by the author of "The Story of Margaret Kent." The letters of Horace Greeley show us what a busy man he was, travelling now to the South and now to the West to lecture. The Elizabethan drama in its fulness is contrasted with the lengthy novel of the present time, while another pleads for brevity in fiction. There are also short articles on "Diamonds, the distribution of Africa among the Nations of Modern Europe," and several short pieces of verse. Philadelphia, Pa. The May number will have a fine array of interesting matter. Here are some of the contributors and their work: Julien Gordon (Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger), has written the complete novel for the May number. The story is entitled "Vampires," and is said to be written in an entirely different vein from any of Mrs. Cruger's former work. A portrait of Mrs. Cruger will appear as a frontispiece, and a sketch of this brilliant author has been prepared by Mrs. M. E. W. Sherwood. Miss M. G. McClelland, a remarkable story entitled "That Hound o' Joel Trout's," and Patience Stapleton a thrilling tale of Western life called "Polly." Mr. Frank A. Burr, an entertaining article upon H. R. H. the Prince of Wales. John Worrell Keeley, the inventor, has prepared an article upon "Latent Force." The same number will contain an article by Grace Dodge, entitled, "What Country Girls Can Do." Professor Skidmore, whose article upon "University Extension" in a previous number of Lippincott's Magazine excited wide-spread attention, has prepared for the May number another article dealing with the same subject, entitled "Aims of University Extension." Photographers, both professional and amateur, will be interested in a paper which will appear in the May Lippincott's, entitled "The Experiences of a Photographer," by A. Bogardus, the oldest living American photographer. After some prefatory remarks, Mr. Bogardus divides his paper into dissertations upon the following topics: "The Old-Time Daguerreotype," "The Paper Picture," "Incidents" (under this head many amusing anecdotes of sitters are related), "Amateur Photography," and "The Right Way to Get a Good Picture."

Good Housekeeping, Clark W. Byran and Company, publishers, Springfield, Mass. Of the many fine papers in this number we wish to advise every body to read Miss Parloa's "Ten Mornings in the Kitchen," and when the morning's work is done, then enjoy the story on "Paying for Wedding Presents," which is after all more truth than fiction. Parents as well as young folks ought to look at "Founding the Home," "Housekeeping in Foreign Lands" is discussed, then recipes for oysters, then table drinks, and A. G. Marchant tells how we may use hot fat with success. We would not advise a good housekeeper to touch the book until the work is done for no doubt she will be unable to lay it down till she has even solved the historical puzzle at the last.

Table Talk, published monthly by Table Talk Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Penn. Price $1. A fine portrait of Mrs. Rorer gives her many admirers a glimpse of the woman whom all have learned to love through her words of help concerning household matters. "New Menus for April," Mrs. S. T. Rorer; "Creole Recipes," Mrs. A. L. Saulsbury; "Housekeepers' Inquires, Mrs. S. T. Rorer. These questions of perplexed housekeepers with their able answers no one can afford to lose. Other articles in this number are: "The Bread of the Nations," E. H. B.; "Esthetic Sandwiches," S. T. Sherman; "Fashionable Luncheon and Tea Toilets, Tillie May Forney; "Dining Here and There," Howard Paul; "Getting Ready for Summer," Mrs. Grayson; "How One Woman Managed," L. E. Chittenden; "Fashionable Crazes," Kate Chatterwood; "Fashion Inquiries," Tillie May Forney; "The King's Roses," M. C. M.; "Louisiana Roses, Mrs. A. L. Saulsbury; "Smiles and Tears"—a poem, Mrs. A. S. R.; "Come Out," Mrs. A. W. D.; "Capricious Washington," K. B.; "A Little Talk," Eugenia C. Gillett; "Aprille"—a poem, William Struthers; "April Fool's Day at Elmwood Hill," Carrie May Ashton; "A Woman's Trip South-Atlanticward"—No. 2, St. Thomas, West Indies. Readers will find all instructive as well as entertaining.

Literary Items.

D. C. Heath & Co., will publish shortly Victor Hugo's Hernani, edited by Prof. John E. Matzke, of Indiana University, also Wilhelmina von Hirlern's Hoher als die Kirche with notes by S. Willard Clary, formerly instructor in German at the university of Michigan. This charming little story, once among the texts' required by the commission of New England Colleges, and prescribed by the Regents of the State of New York, adds another useful text for first or second year reading to the attractive Modern Language Series of this firm.

Professor Gore, of the Columbian University, experienced in reading technical German those difficulties which usually come to students who have studied only literary German. In the absence of any adequate aid for acquiring proficiency to the former style, he decided to prepare a handbook for technical German and during repeated residences in Germany he collected material. In the light of this experience he has prepared a "German Science Reader" which will be issued next month by D. C. Heath & Co.

New England Magazine for April, 1891. Contents.

United States Patent System,* James Shepard; Success, Zitella Cocke; Canadian Art and Artists* W. Blackburn Harte; The University of France, W. L. Montague; Morning and Evening, Sheila Parker; Personal Recollections of Schliemann, Hon. Charles K. Tuckerman; Later History of Electricity,* George Herbert Stockbridge; Winter Birds in New England, Granville B. Putnam; Hopedale and its Founder,* Lewis G. Wilson; A Stepmother Elect,* Mary L. Adams; The Fates and the Winds, Edward Payson Jackson; A Fair Exchange, II, Dorothy Prescott; A Song of Two Angels, Laura E. Richards; Reminiscences of an Egoist, The History of Historical Writing in America, J. F. Jameson, Ph. D.; Where are Vineland and Norumbega? Alice L. Clark; Editor's Table; Omnibus. *Illustrated.

We are more than pleased to recommend "A Bird's-Eye View of the World" published by Ticknor & Co, Boston, Mass. It is an unusually valuable book for any person or family. It gives in the concise manner possible just what one wants to know about this world of ours. The author Onésime Reclus, stands at the head of all the authorities on matters treated upon by this volume. More than six hundred teachers in the schools of Boston have purchased this book. In fact, we understand the book is having a very large sale wherever it has been shown. No family can afford to be without this valuable work. We predict a large sale in Worcester, particularly as the work is sold for cash or on easy terms of payment. Read what is said of this great educational work. Notice also the advertisement.

An enterprise of no slight importance is the bringing out of an American edition of that notable French work, "A Bird's Eye View of the World." This work gives, within its 920 pages, a concise view of the entire world. It is by no means a compilation, as we have been led to expect from average books of this nature and purpose. It is an original work, and, while thoroughly systematic in form and encyclopaedic value, it is written in a strikingly attractive style. The individuality of its learned author characterizes it throughout.—From the Boston Herald.

From John S. Hayes, Principal of the Foster Grammar School, Somerville, Mass.: "I have carefully examined 'A Bird's Eye View of the World' and can heartily recommend the book as the best work of the kind with which I am acquainted. I consider it worthy of a place in every well selected family or school library. In fact it could be profitably consulted daily by the teacher in preparing her geography exercises. It is written in a popular yet scientific style; and, being profusely illustrated, is as interesting and fascinating as a novel, and would be read with interest and profit by every pupil in the grammar and high-school grades. Knowing the reputation of this famous author, I expected much, but the more I read the more surprised I became at the genius displayed in the preparation of this work. It is the most satisfactory geographical aid that has yet been published, and should be made accessible to every parent, teacher and pupil."

"A Bird's Eye View" led us to fear we were to have so little of anything and so much of everything as to be of little value, but an examination of the book leads us to admire the author who can say everything essential about every country and division of country on the earth's surface in so small a space. While a child would never tire of the fascination of the facts illuminated by 371 illustrations, of which 99 are full page, the most thoroughly-read man will find on every page something, the importance of which he never realized so fully as when a geographical expert presents it with scientific effect in attractive phraseology. The man who prepared this work is a genius in such effort.—From the New England Journal of Education.

The publishers justly claim that there is no other book like it. It is a history, geography, and encyclopaedia, all in one, with its material so condensed and classified as to be easy of reference, and so selected as to cover every necessary point. The topography of each country, its climatic peculiarities, its mineral resources, its race peculiarities, its commercial position, and its general history, all come in for treatment, more or less extended.—Boston Transcript.

His Idea of a Proprietor.

They ushered him into the editor's sanctum. He was a tall negro, with an oily skin as black as your coat, flat nose, thick lips and the shiniest of shiny eyes and teeth. "Is dis de editor?" he inquired, as he twirled his hat in his hand. He was informed that it was.

"Well, boss I wants to get a job," he said. "What is your business?"

The old Negro drew himself up to his full height and answered; "I'se been de proprietor ob de New Orleans Picayune fo' twenty years".

"O, you have been proprietor of the New Orleans Picayune for twenty years, have you?" "Yes, sah".

"Well, I suppose you wrote the editorials, then?"

"O, no, sah; we had de editors fo' to do dat'".

"Yes? Perhaps, then, you gotthered the news?"

"No sah; de reporters did dat'".

"You read the proof, then, very likely?"

"O, no, no, sah; we had de proof-readers fo' to dat'".

The editor became amused at the old darkey and determined to see in what position his boasted proprietorship would land him, so he questioned him in regard to the various positions right down the list and still his function remained undiscovered.

"Well", he was finally asked, "What was your position?"

He hesitated a moment and then answered in the most impressive voice he could command:

"I'll tell you what boss, if you wants to get some one to oil de joints ob you' engine down sta'rs, I ken do it better than any man in town".—New York Tribune.

William Gillette, the most successful American play-wrighter, author of Held by the Enemy, All the Comforts of Home, the Professor, etc., is having a new play produced this week called Mr. Wilkinson's Widows.

Stubby's Bouquet.

JENNIE M. BINGHAM.

"Stubby's late! Mighty funny, haint it? 'Taint like Stubby when business is so rushin', and boot black No. 1 rattled the loose coins in the big pocket of his big coat with a shrug of his shoulders which indicated more satisfaction over the morning's income than words could fully express.

"Hold on! Yer to fast. That's him. Way up, long side o' the post", answered No. 2, a comical-faced lad clothed in much over-grown garments. He wore a crownless hat which was propped up with his ears.

"Comes's if he had the spring-halt", declared No. 1.

"S likely he didn't have no tin to buy no breakfast with", suggested No. 2. "Hi there? Stubby. Come 'long. Shine"?—this last shouted at the passers-by.

Stubby came along in a very deliberate amble, notwithstanding the call.

"Stubby's sick, that's the matter", declared No. 1, and then he dropped on his knees before a pair of muddy boots and forgot all about it. When the last polish had been given and he looked up, Stubby was discovered sitting disconsolately on the curb near by, apparently with no ambition to catch his share of the business.

"Say, Bob, Stubby wants to sell his kit", called No. 2.

"Naw" answered Bob incredulously.

"What's up? Got a raise"?

Stubby shook his head.

"Goin' west"?

Another shake more decided still. "It's none o' them things, Bob. It's somethin' else", answered Stubby in such a forlorn, solemn tone as betokened a crisis of some sort.

"He's a goin' up on Fifth avenue to live in one o' Vanderbilt's houses", said Ben.

"Boot-blackin' aint fashionable up there. Come, give it away, Stubby, and we'll have a racket on't. Will you let us ride onct in a while on the driver's seat"?

Stubby was entirely unmoved by this pleasantry, and as customers appeared, and Bob and Ben each found a job, leaving Stubby alone on the curb, they did not see that he made wry faces at the drinking fountain, while some tears traced a passage down the grimy cheeks. Left alone, he took a soiled bit of paper from his pocket and chewed a pencil-end and began writing slowly. He wasn't as used to a pencil as to a blacking brush, evidently, and toiled away over his work so absorbed as not to see Bob and Ben stealing up behind him. It must be owned that their etiquette was limited, and they had no polite scruples about finding out Stubby's secret. The crowd was passing with hurrying, busy feet, and Stubby was intent on his bit of paper and pencil. He did not mind at all that unblackened boots were passing, and did not know of the two pairs of keen eyes peering over his shoulder. This is what they read:

"DIDE.—Minne Riley up in Whitcomb street with a sore throat. Funeral tomorrow. Such is the kingdom of Heaven.

"STUBBY RILEY".

Bob and Ben looked at each other and stole quietly away with solemn faces.

"It's his sister", whispered Ben; "she was awful jolly".

"She sold papers for him when he was laid up with a sore foot".

"Wish't I hadn't said nothin' to him".

"Wish't I'd took his place last night. He said Min was sick and I told him she was al'ys sick; he'd better stick to that corner or he'd bust his trade".

"Did you see he didn't take no cigarette with the rest of us, an' we poked at him? When he thought we wasn't lookin', he bought a orange and put it in his pocket. 'Twas for her as sure as you're Bob an' I'm Ben".

Bob sat down on his box and grew thoughtful. Ben was perched on the railing that led down into a cellar-way.

"Say, Ben, what'd Stubby want to sell his kit for"?

"Dun no".

"I do. Bet you he wanted a bouquet for Min. He come straight from the flower-stand way, and he asked me how much a big bouquet'd come to, if it had white flowers in it sech as they had for coffins. I told him I warn't in the coffin business. Wish't I hadn't".

"They'll plant her in the potter's field", mused Ben solemnly, "an' the missionary'll read the Bible over her".

"They won't be no one too wait for Stubby nights, or tie the tippet around his throat. She did that night last winter when he was tryin' to sell his *News*es and folks was too cold to stop an' buy. He was that hoarse he couldn't call his papers. She called'em. 'Twas her tippet. They went snucks on everything just's if she warn't a girl".

"Say, Bob, I wish't it could be a good funeral, just as if her ma'am didn't drink. Atween you an' me, Bob, I bet Stubby'd like it to be a good funeral. Stubby al'ys did want to be like other folks, and to act jest's if his ma'am warn't fired out o' the saloons deader drunk'n a door-nail".

"Bobby, let's have a good funeral. The boys'll chip in fer Stubby. We'll go 'thout tobacco to-day".

There was a jingling of loose coins in big pockets, while each boy inquired into his financial condition.

"Bob".

"Hey"?

"Can yer get through that psalm-tune we used to sing—"Shall we gather"?"

"My, yes", answered Bob, "just you hear"—launching into a variated and spirited rendering of "Shall we gather at the river"? "I've knowed it ever since I was born".

"It's awful pretty, Bob an' Stubby liked it, an' if it is a good funeral, like other folks', they ought to have psalm tunes. They al'ys do to good funerals".

"I tell ye: If the mish. is agreeable to it, we'll sing 'Shall we gather'—all we boys. I know the whole three verses".

It was a very unpretentious gathering on Whitcomb street the next afternoon. It happened to be at a time of day when the sun shone in, for a little while, through the dingy windows, and warmed the narrow gloomy court. The neighbors had made an attempt towards cleanliness, and Ma'm Riley was actually sober, sitting next Stubby with a haggard face and bloodshot eyes. Some one had loaned her a clean gown and she felt strange in it, somehow, and almost afraid the missionary had come to arrest her. She told Stubby she was muddled in her head and wanted something to steady her from being shaky, but Stubby said, sternly: "No Ma'm not a drop till they carry her away. She's had that kind o' things al'ys, but when the last time comes, it's goin' to be a good, clean place for her. I promised Min 'twould be a good, clean place for folks to come and nobody brought in from lyin' in the street to curse and swear at her after she was dead".

And Ma'm cried a little and said it was hard 'nough to have dead children, 'thout havin' livin' children turnin' agin her. But Stubby showed no signs of yielding. So there she sat between the boy, with flushed cheeks and sad staring eyes, and the white face of her little daughter, sober and awe-struck and actually wishing in a dull groping that she had been a better mother to her children.

Tramp, tramp, tramp. Something was coming. Stubby wondered what it was. The tramping became uncertain, stumbling up the steps. The missionary was a little impatient to begin and get away, but Stubby said:

"No. Hold on a minute."

He thought he knew who it was who wore those big boots. In they came, two by two, boot-blacks and news-boys with solemn, respectful clean faces. Bob and Ben led the way, and bore aloft with no little show of pride a big bouquet of large white flowers, which they lain on the coffin, just above the thin, pinched hands of the little girl, who they remembered, had tied the tippet round her brother's neck on that fearful winter's night. They did it with an air that would seem to impart dignity to the occasion, as being some thing worthy their deepest consideration and respect. Somehow those delicate camelias and asters wrought a marvelous change in the very atmosphere of that stuffy little room.

The missionary's voice grew gentle and tender. Stubby's head sank heavily upon his chest while his pent-up heart relieved itself in healing tears. The bleary-eyed mother could only sob in heart-broken cries, "Forgive me; forgive me." And the little scattering of neighbors grew respectfully attentive, and wished they had been more kind to little Min and Stubby and their mother. The missionary read from the Bible about the beautiful city, and talked just a little while about Minnie and the better country to which she had gone. And then when he sat down Bob whispered in an audible voice that if 'twas agreeable to him, the boys'd like to sing "Shall we gather"? seeing they all knew her.

The missionary nodded a consent and Bobby pitched the tune, a little croaky at first, but soon loud and clear, and they sang through the "hull three verses". The song floated out the dingy windows, out into the narrow dirty court. Some passers-by, worried shop-girls, stopped a minute to listen to such unusual sounds from the old house, and staid till the song was finished. Two women quarreling in the court grew quiet before the lusty boys' voices singing, "Shall we gather at the river"?

"Hark"! they said, "they're singing for little Min."

When it was over they carried her away, and the boys went out on the street to cry their papers and boot-blackening as lustily as ever: little dreaming (they were only ragged street boys) that they had brought healing and comfort and a bit of gospel, along with Stubby's bouquet, into wicked, crooked, disheartened Whitcomb street that day.—Northern Christian Advocate.

George Bancroft

And Round Hill School.

BY GEORGE E. ELLIS.

[From April Educational Review.]

I can give only boyish recollections of Round Hill School, for I was not twelve years of age when I went there, as a pupil of Messrs. Cogswell and George Bancroft, and their assistants. Indeed, the original scheme of the institution planned for boys even younger than twelve at their entrance, though there were really but few as young as myself, and most of them were my elders. The scheme or plan was, I think, brought home by Mr. Bancroft from Germany and was modeled after preparatory educational institutions which he had known abroad. A sketch of it and of the aims and methods of the founders of the school is to be found in the privately printed memoir of Mr. Cogswell. The number of the scholars also far exceeded the limits originally intended, and there came to be a long list of applicants waiting for vacancies. The school soon attained popularity and a wide repute, but faded away after a brief period of seeming prosperity. This was before the rising of alienations of feeling between the sections of the country. Though there were many excellent schools, academies, and seminaries in Massachusetts at the time, those in New York were not of a high character, and farther south they were still more deficient. The aim of those in the South was to procure teachers from the North and East. It was not strange, therefore, that the noising abroad of the method, the corps of teachers, and the promise of success of the institution at Northampton, should have rapidly drawn together, as it did, pupils from prominent and prosperous families in all parts of the Union. The highest names in the country were borne by boys in the school. Mr. Cogswell, especially, was very proud of his constituency. His own charming manners, his geniality of spirit, and his kindly relations with the young made him a favorite with parents as with their children.

The staff of instructors, tutors, and helpers engaged in various departments was so large that I think the expense to the parents of a pupil must have exceeded that of a student in Harvard College at that time. I have not had opportunity to revert to the catalogue of the college in those years, and to compare the numbers on the list of the faculty, but I recall from memory the names of the teachers—all of them supposed to have been of marked ability—who were associated with the principals at Round Hill, viz.: Dr. Beck, a German, who taught Latin; Dr. Bode, a German, Greek; Mr. Gardara, a Frenchman, French; Mr. Gnerardi, an Italian;—who afterward married Mr. Bancroft's sister,—Italian, San Martin, a Spaniard, Spanish; Mr. T. Walker, afterward judge in Ohio, who, with another Mr. Bancroft, taught mathematics; Drs. Follen and Grater, Germans, German and drawing; Mr. Lucas and Mr. Robinson, singing and writing; Messrs. John and Eugene Watson, and Mr. George S. Hilliard, English branches; a dancing and gymnasium master, a Mr. Cantwell, an English gentleman, who acted as custos morum, attending the boys at play—and it may be, other subordinates that I have forgotten. There were two school-rooms—one of them was used mainly for classes at recitations.

There was a row of slightly and spacious buildings, two of them, I believe, detached, the others united, with columns and piazzas, that stretched across the brow of a high and extended hill, commanding a superb view of river, valley, and wooded mountains. The streets in the town were lined with stately elms. On the hill were many chestnuts. The back slopes of the hill, running far down into levels, were disposed for three different uses. The first of these gave spacious playgrounds, with a gymnasium, and a large space on a declivity, called "Crony Village," where the boys might make huts, shanties, and burrows, in which singly or in partnership, they could roast potatoes, apples, corn and chestnuts, frogs-legs, and various other good things for out door appetites. The second division was laid off for garden-lots, where each boy who wished might raise flowers or vegetables, with seeds and tools furnished to him. The third took in Mr. Cogswell's extensive farm-grounds for fruits, hay, and vegetables. There were spacious barns for cattle, horses, hay, and many wagons, one or more of huge size. The boys in turn might ride these horses; the wagons were used for journeys far and wide, often a mountain or other excursion by large or small companies. Dr. Beck, a splendidly formed and muscular man, would in the summer accompany groups of boys to Mill River to teach them swimming. In the winter he would go there with them for skating, but not on the Connecticut. The boys were forbidden to go down into the village without especial leave, even to visit parent or friends. The long hill up which ran the only road to the school, afforded a splendid and safe "coast" for the boys in winter.

No corporal punishment was practiced in the school. Deprivation of meals and retention in the school-room were the lighter penalties. A graver one was the being shut into a dark apartment in the cellar, called the "Dungeon," of which the Stalwart Newton, a general factotum, was the keeper. Great efforts, with kindness, amusements, and a degree of indulgence, were used to promote the happiness of the boys. Cleanliness and neatness were exacted. Several public rooms were provided, kept warm in bad weather, where they might gather to play, read, or enjoy themselves at their pleasure. Tools for carpentry, for making bows and arrows, squirrel-traps and kites were at hand. On Sunday morning the lines would be formed in procession, by two and two, instructors taking their places at the head of sections, as each was to attend either the Unitarian, the Orthodox, or the Episcopal Church. The return to the Hill was in the same order, no scattering or loitering being allowed.

The large school-room, square, and with comfortable desks and seats, was in the entrance story of one of the buildings, with four doors opening on the grass. In cases like that soon to be mentioned, when there was not a sharp pair of eyes on the platform, boys found these doors convenient for occasionally slipping out; and as Messrs. Cogswell and Bancroft took turns, in general, in occupying the platform, the former always intent on his duty, the latter apt to be engrossed in some book of his own, boys would creep out on all fours. The school work was opened daily with Scripture reading and prayer. The other school-room—or rather two of them in separate stories—were used, if I rightly remember, for separate classes in turn, for recitations to the different teachers in their special branches. Being used thus alternately for several hours, the large common school-room was left for quiet study or writing.

Practically, though the two associate principals were understood to have equal authority and responsibility, their relations with the scholars proved to be quite different in intimacy and sociability. Mr. Cogswell had no wife, but an unmarried sister, greatly loved by him and the boys. Much depended upon a housekeeper and her assistants,—some excellent matrons, above the grade of menials, who looked after the boys' clothing, and allowed a comfortable seat by their firesides for special favorites, for whom they would do some friendly mending, or furnish molasses to be made into candies, or dispense goodies from their private stores. For our common meals there was a large dining-room, with horseshoe table, Mr. Cogswell always sitting at the head of the outer curve. I never heard any complaint either of the quality or the amount of the food. The boys sat alphabetically, divided into messes of five—with equal portions of the various kinds of foods; instructors were dispersed among them, all faring alike, and allowed to call for "more." The breakfast scene daily brought a somewhat exciting pleasure. The aforesaid Newton went down to the town daily to carry and bring a very large mail, to obtain supplies, and to do miscellaneous errands. A box was provided in the dining-room into which the boys might put slips of paper, signed by their names, stating their wants and wishes. These covered a very extensive range of necessities, whims, and fancies. Large indulgence was shown to them in this respect, and anything which a parent would not think unreasonable when charged upon his son's bill was generally allowed. But there was an element of fun in connection with this usage. As the breakfast was closing, Mr. Cogswell would take the box and examine its contents. If he found anything ludicrous, or any fault of grammar or spelling, he would read it aloud with the signature. Thus, a boy had written, "I want a fir cap." Mr. Cogswell gravely announced, "Our trees do not bear caps."

Mr. Bancroft dwelt at a little distance from the school, and so could see but little of the boys except in school hours and at recitations. He was absent-minded, dreamy, and often in abstracted moods as well as very near-sighted. I have seen him come into the recitation room at an exercise held before breakfast, with a slipper or shoe on one foot and a boot on the other. More than once he sent me across the road to his library for spectacles. These were generally to be found shut into a book, which he had been reading before going to bed. The boys, who called him familiarly "the Crittur," were fond of playing tricks upon him, which they could do with impunity, owing to his shortness of vision. The wall back of the platform where he sat, pouring over a book, was thickly bespattered with "spit-balls," thrown at him. I recall a sultry autumn afternoon, when, in the large school-room, a boy deliberately tossed at him an over-ripe muskmelon, got from his own grounds. His features and garb were well sprinkled with it. As the offending boy crawled out of one of the doors, Mr. Bancroft rose sternly, shook himself, and said, "I want the boy who threw that melon at me to come right up here." There was no response. Then, ordering the doors closed, he came down among the desks, putting the question to each boy. Of course they could all answer "No." The pursuit was not followed up, as many were at various recitations and the culprit was covered by others. As to the rich fruit in his garden, much of it, even before fully ripe, strangely disappeared after dark and before daylight. I think Mr. Bancroft and his family could have had only the smaller portion of it. I recall that one afternoon, as his fine peaches were ripening, he sought to make a compact with the boys, that if they would be patient he would give them a treat. So, as the occasion came, naming three boys with whom he was a little more familiar—I thought simply because their Christian names were the same as his own,—he said, "I wish George Riggs, George Rivers and George Ellis, to come to my garden after school to gather peaches; the other boys will collect outside the fence to partake in the distribution." On presenting ourselves for duty, Mr. Bancroft directed us, with baskets, to pick up the windfalls and to pluck from some trees, not the most luscious—and then to pass the fruit to the waiting boys through the pickets of the fence. They were received with ominous looks of disappointment. After holding a brief consultation, a group of boys proceeded to return the gift to the donor by a vigorous "peppering" of Mr. Bancroft with his own peaches, till he found refuge from the missiles.

I suppose that Mr. Bancroft, though meaning in all things to be kind and faithful, was, by temperament and lack of sympathy with the feelings and ways of young boys, disqualified from winning their regard and from being helpful and stimulating to them. He seemed to be more earnestly bent on learning for himself than on helping them to learn. His single year as a tutor in Harvard College, before going to Round Hill, resulted in experiences wholly unsatisfactory to himself as well as to the beloved President Kirkland, his associates in the faculty, and the students. There was a continual restiveness and embroilment excited by what were viewed as his crotchets. It should be said, however, that these infelicities showed themselves only in Mr. Bancroft's relations with boyish pupils. For scholars of maturer years and high ambitions, he was a most warm-hearted, kindly, and helpful friend, doing them various and highly valued service. I have heard from many American young men pursuing their studies in Germany and in the universities while Mr. Bancroft was our minister to Prussia and Germany, that he was ever most ready to perform all manner of kindnesses for them, to advance their plans and win them privileges.

The boys at Round Hill, with all the rules and provisions for their health, bathing, play, and exercise, were generally of the robust sort, and full of animal spirits, which sought lively outbursts. These were manifested in their own way on the loaded stages when going to and returning from vacations. It required three, four, perhaps more, of the old-fashioned stage-coaches to transport them to and from Boston, Salem, and the neighborhood. The road was hilly, rough, and hard to travel. At first, the journey of a hundred miles was broken by a night passed at Worcester. But the inn-keeper, Mr. Thomas, a resolute man, soon refused to receive us as guests. He complained that the boys, after eating out everything he had in his house, and pretending to go to their beds, several in a room, would at midnight rush out into the halls and entries, with unearthly noises, for a pillow-fight. His other guests protested, and Mr. Thomas said that thenceforward he would only furnish us a mid-day dinner; and he did not much desire our company even for that. So after that we had to adapt ourselves to the usual mail stages, which left Boston daily soon after midnight, taking in bad traveling, near twenty-four hours for the route. A forerunner, with a lantern, would ring at our respective homes, announcing the coming stage, and one by one we would mount it for the dark enterprise. But not a boy took the inside, which was given up for trunks, boxes, and traps. The boys clustered over the top and the outside, most of them having fish horns and whips, which were used dilligently along the country roads. Simple travelers, women, and boys on these roads would often be frightened, till they understood who the alarmest were—by being told that a linch-pin was out, or that a wheel was coming off. No tutor or guardians accompanied the boys, and they had the course to themselves.

Round Hill School was opened for pupils and for work in the autumn of 1823. Its auspices were most propitious. A high enthusiasm was excited in its favor, and a long future of success and prosperity seemed to be insured for it. It came to disaster and grief about 1830. Being then in college, if I had, as I doubt, any full and intelligent information and knowledge of the causes of its misfortunes, they are not now distinctly in my memory. I have a vague idea that these causes were extravagant outlays,—which resulted in a burdensome debt and mortgage,—lack of internal discipline, and a loss of harmony, with discordant variances, between Principals Cogswell and Bancroft, as to the conduct of affairs. No doubt all these unfortunate conditions contributed to the catastrophe. Probably the last mentioned was the most effective for harm. It must have been very difficult for men of such widely different temperaments, and views as to methods of teaching and discipline, to have accorded in complicated arrangements involving much business. The rupture was a serious one, and the partners separated. There had been up to that time 290 scholars, 99 of whom were from Massachusetts, 46 from New York, 32 from Maryland, 28 from South Carolina, 18 from Georgia, with others from Virginia, North Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, Ohio, Michigan, the Canadas, the West Indies, Mexico, and Brazil. Only one had died at the school.

In 1831 a pamphlet was published in Boston, connected with an attempt, to revive and reinstate the institution; but the hope was a failure. The list of instructors, as published, is sadly shorn of the names of the scholars from Europe which had given the school so eminent a repute. Some of these, the most able, had found places in other institutions. Mr. Cogswell appears alone as principal. Nine other young men, of whom Benjamin Pierce attained distinction, were associated with him. Bankruptcy soon followed, and those fine buildings, once so bright with happy young life, were left to desolation and decay. Some fifteen years after I had been a pupil there, I visited the melancholy scene. A public establishment for summer boarders, connected with a water cure, occupied a small portion of the edifices. The remainder, with piles of bedsteads, broken furniture, and like rubbish, were sad relics of the then recent past.

Told by Veterans of Chicamauga.

Of all the reminiscences of Chicamauga's iron hailstorm, Jim Brothertons' experience was the hardest strain on credulity says the St. Louis Globe Democrat. Jim was fighting "the best he knew how." He was in the thickest of the assault on Snodgrass hill. As he charged across the road and over the field toward the Dyer farm Jim caught a glimpse of the house he was born in. But valor did not make Jim forget discretion. He took advantage of all the pine trees he could when going into and coming out of the fight. On his back was strapped his knapsack, and over the knapsack was rolled his blanket. The two made a hump which projected beyond the trees behind which Jim took temporary shelter. When Jim unloaded his knapsack and blanket the night after the battle he found that thirty seven bullets had penetrated it. "Yes sir," said Jim, looking the listener straight in the eyes; "thirty-seven bullets had gone into my blanket and knapsack—thirty-seven bullets and two buckshot. If I had that blanket and knapsack now I wouldn't take $1,000 for them. After the battle I gave them to mother and told her to keep them for me until I came back from the war. But you know how it is when folks is moving around. Things get lost. I don't know what become of the blanket or knapsack."

There was only one veteran who told a story which approached that of Jim Brotherton in picturesqueness. He was private Sinnatt, who came all the way from Virginia to attend the reunion. Private Sinnatt was particularly anxious to meet and renew acquaintance with some of the Twelfth Georgians. A big man of the Twelfth Georgia saved his life, Private Sinnatt said. He explained how. When he got into what seemed to him the hottest place he had ever found, Private Sinnatt lay down behind a tree which wasn't more than eight inches through and made himself as small as possible. While he lay there wondering how long it would be before he would be hit, a strapping fellow from the Twelfth Georgia grabbed him by the leg, lifted him from behind the tree, and laid down where he had been. Sinnatt said the Georgian was twice as big as he was. He couldn't lick him, so he made the best of a bad situation, crawled up behind the Georgian, and kept quiet. It wasn't but a few minutes until a bullet struck the Georgian and killed him. Sinnatt lay still behind the body, which stopped fifteen bullets before the wave of the battle passed on. That is why Private Sinnatt says he will always cherish a kindly feeling for the Twelfth Georgia.

Mechanics' Hall.

LIGHT, for April 4th, scarcely more than reached the Hall, which for nearly thirty-five years has been the crowning glory of Main street. Our veteran, Elbridge Boyden, may be pardoned a feeling of pride as he walks down Walnut street, facing his masterpiece. St. Paul's is no more to London, than this great building to our city. In Mr. Boyden's excellent account of his life, he mentions his efforts and those of Mr. H. W. Miller to secure the present site instead of the place where the Exchange street theatre is. It was a fortunate selection and one that has enhanced the prosperity of the Association no little. Mr. Boyden says his fee for the plans was six hundred dollars. Today for the same work the cost would be more than six thousand. The construction account exceeded one hundred thousand. In the committee supervising the building there were fifteen members, and it is not strange that all did not pull in the same direction. In this connection it is well to quote Mr. Boyden's application of some words from Dr. J. G. Holland.

"You shall see a man who never drew a line or struck an arc, direct an architect and spoil his work, because, forsooth! he likes a tasteful house!

"He likes a muffin, but he does not go into his kitchen to instruct his cook. Nay, that were insult.

"He admires fine clothes, but he trusts his tailor. Only in those arts which issue from creative potencies does his conceit engage him."

With so many energetic potencies, little of definiteness could be settled upon, so Deacon Ichabod Washburn and Mr. Boyden took a trip to New York to look over a famous structure there, "Millers Assembly Hall." The Deacon was much pleased at what he saw and the architect proclaimed himself able to build as well if given an opportunity without so much dictation. On their return, the good Deacon freed his mind to the committee concerning the multitude of advisers and counseled them to let the architect go ahead if they would have a good hall. They consented and the work went on smoothly save when the builder was determined to have the height of the hall, itself, much less than it is. A trip to Boston with H. W. Miller was necessary to convince him, but he was overcome and our Hall with its excellent acoustic properties is the result. Then, too, some wanted a fanciful name as Waverly for the structure but Mechanics' prevailed and Mechanics' it will be to the end.

A chapter on the conventions and gatherings that have been held in this great room would be an interesting one. Hardly a notable name can be given whose owner has not been heard from its platform. And what a platform it is. Over it have passed, in political conventions, the thousands of delegates who have here expressed their wishes as to who should be candidates. Andrew, Phillips, Bullock, Hoar, Wilson, Gough, Boutwell and Dawes with scores of others have spoken from this rostrum and from it have gone forth ideas that have shaped the course of empire in this country. Speakers from abroad beholding this hall for the first time and looking at the sea of upturned faces, marvel at its symmetry and beauty. You builded well, Mr. Architect.

Stand where you may in this auditorium and you must remark its exact and proper proportions. To reach its utmost limits, a man with a fair voice needn't strain it. Then, too, it is seated so as to secure safety and comfort. From no point is the speaker hidden. Large as it is, it is hardly adequate to the needs of the September Musical Festival, but it is a lacking in size only.

As we enter, we cannot help seeing the great organ whose pipes stand out at the East end. For many years, the organ in Music Hall, Boston, had the reputation of being the largest in the world. When that was taken down and put into the care of the Conservatory of Music, the instrument in Mechanics' Hall, Worcester, assumed the lead of the list of the large organs in New England halls; it being understood that the Boston instrument now awaits a place in which it may be put up.

It was away back in 1863, that the project of an organ, in keeping with the size and character of the hall, was first earnestly mooted, though as early as 1857, a small fund was devoted to this purpose. In 1863, however, the matter received a grand impetus through the gift at first of $1,000, by the Hon. Stephen Salisbury, a gift which he subsequently raised to $2,000. Ichabod Washburn, seldom far behind, when there was any giving to be done, followed with $1,200. Then came Alex H. Bullock and C. J. Anthony, each, with $500. There was a nameless giver of $375. While T. W. Wellington gave $200 and E. A. Goodnow $125. In minor subscriptions, enough was raised to warrant the giving of the contract, which, in 1863, April 31, was awarded to the Messrs. Hook of Boston. At a final cost of about $10,000, it was put in place, and on Wednesday, October 26, 1864, was dedicated with great success. A collation was furnished and Boston sent out Dr. Wilcox and Eugene Thayer a former resident of Worcester and member of the High School, to fully test its admirable qualities. It had 77 stops and 3,504 pipes. Large as it is, and excellent as it has been, it was not up to the musical needs of Worcester, so in 1889 the organ went through the throes of repairs. Its pitch was changed, and $5,000 laid out in alterations and additions, thus making it still more the ne plus ultra of instruments in this part of the country.

As an accompaniment to the Festival of Music, our organ has formed no small part in the success of the scheme, which has given to our city a wide reputation. Since its repairing the organ is run by a water motor.

There are thousands of people who yearly visit Mechanics' Hall and yet note very little the embellishments. They may not have noticed the gradual ascent thereto, so pleasing for those who are short of breath. At the first landing they are confronted by busts of Ichabod Washburn and W. A. Wheeler. They have been the property of the Association for many years—that of Washburn having been presented in 1864, and Wheeler's somewhat later. The sculptor in each case was Benj. H. Kinney, who died in December, 1888. He was an artist of excellent ability and deserved more renown than he achieved.

These busts guard the entrance to Washburn Hall, a room often utilized by those who do not need the larger hall above. It is also a desirable supper room when a grand ball is in progress.

Turning to the west we find at each side of the main stairway very convenient dressing rooms for ladies and gentlemen. Between the two flights of stairs is a doorway leading directly to the Office of the Secretary. Were we to turn to the right, we should enter the Reading Room, while the left way leads to the Library. Should the middle door be open why not step into Secretary Wm. A. Smith's office, and see some of the items treasured there. On the south wall is a life size medallion, in imitation bronze, of Col. Alex. DeWitt, who died in Oxford some years since. It, too, is from the hand of the artist Benj. H. Kinney, and was given to the Association by numerous subscribers. On the north wall is a very good copy of the Stuart's Washington in the Boston Athenaeum. It has an interesting history, running thus: At a fair held by the Association in 1849, a lady was advised to exhibit certain specimens of her work, and these, much to her surprise, received a deal of praise. Encouraged by this result, she persevered and finally attained considerable note. In gratitude for the kindness of the Mechanics in 1849, she on September 11, 1857, begged them to accept from her the picture which long hung in the hall above. It is said to be an excellent likeness. The lady, herself, Miss Emma M. Judkins, died suddenly in her room in Cambridge, March 17, 1887, aged 78.

Perched high upon a book-case, is the plaster effigy of a man whose genius made fortunes for others if not for himself. It is Mr. Kinney's bust of John Goulding, the inventor of frames used in spinning. A great Boston firm became wealthy through the invention; but very little of the money clung to the man who made the fortune possible.

Any question that you may wish to ask concerning the Hall, or its objects of interest, you will find Secretary Smith ready and apt to answer. Long seated in his place, he discharges all his duties with rare fidelity and success.

Retracing our steps to the first landing we may take either right or left to enter the main hall and again when half way up we may again take our choice in the same way, for this hall, like the World's stage, has many entrances and exits. Finally entering the west door and so getting a good impression of this room, some day to be famous like Faneuil Hall, or that of William Rufus, its glories are before us. The great organ confronts us, a magnificent instrument. At the right is an immense picture of Washington, copied from Gilbert Stuart's famous painting in Faneuil Hall. It was copied by Thomas Badger, at the expense of Ichabod Washburn and Stephen Salisbury, and was presented Sept. 26, 1866. The careful critic might find some fault with the General's legs, and the horse's flank might remind him of—well, an Alpine glacier; but, after all, it is a happy circumstance that we have such a work in our City. At the left is a full length picture of Abraham Lincoln. This is by E. T. Billings of Boston, from a photograph, and was paid for by the

FRUIT * AND * ORNAMENTAL * TREES, SHRUBS, ROSES, VINES, PLANTS, Etc., Cultivated and For Sale by
JAMES DRAPER, at the BLOOMINGDALE NURSERIES, Worcester, Mass.

APPLES,
 PEARS, PEACHES,
 PLUMS, QUINCES,
 GRAPES,
 CURRANTS,
 STRAWBERRIES,
 RASPBERRIES,
 BLACKBERRIES.

Trees for the LAWN, PARK,
 or ROADSIDE.
 FLOWERING SHRUBS,
 and VINES,
 ROSES, Etc.

THE ADVANTAGES OF A HOME NURSERY

are becoming more and more appreciated by the tree buying public, as our constantly increasing trade bears testimony. Although we cannot boast of as many acres under cultivation as some other nurseries, still, our ten acres of general nursery stock gives us a good supply of the most desirable varieties for this latitude, and our facilities for supplying other stock not embraced in our collection are equal to any. We do not employ travelling salesmen, but, by adopting the plan of dealing directly with our customers, the chances for any misunderstanding or dissatisfaction in the methods of conducting our business operations are reduced to a very narrow limit. MY NEW ILLUSTRATED AND DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, of 80 pages, has been prepared with much care and at great expense, and is now ready for distribution. It will be mailed free on application.

Office and Grounds located corner of Bloomingdale and Plantation Streets, one mile East of the Union Passenger Station ; connected with Telephone Exchange System. JAMES DRAPER.

Bay State Shoe and Leather Company and employees. It was presented October 4, 1866. Following down the north side of the wall, we shall next see the face of Ichabod Washburn painted by Mr. Wight, then of Boston, now of Paris. This, the Association, itself, paid for and put in place July 1870.

The latest accession to our hall of notables is the semblance of a man who, though very aged, still walks our streets and regularly appears at his old place of business. Mr. Henry W. Miller has long had an enviable reputation as a business man in Worcester. More than ninety years of age, he is an excellent example of the results of life-long sobriety and attention to duty. His picture is painted by Mr. Billings also, and is considered an excellent likeness. It was suspended Monday, the 17th of November. Mr. Miller has been an officer of the Association, and to him are owed the fine acoustic qualities of the hall. So certain was he that the plans of the Architect, Mr. Boyden, ought to be carried out, that he took the builder with him down to Boston to see the famous Music Hall of that city, and convinced him that our hall also should be high and spacious if it were to be a good room for music and speaking.

Next the benign countenance of William Lloyd Garrison beams down upon us. As a printer, by trade, he surely has a place among mechanics. Again, Mr. Billings is the artist, and the Bay State Shoe and Leather Company workmen the donors; this in 1867 or 8. The full length figure, standing out so prominently in the next frame, is that of the Natick cobbler, Henry Wilson, the only national executive officer furnished by Massachusetts since the days of John Quincy Adams. This magnificent work, given October 27, 1886, is owed to the brush of Edgar Parker, of Boston, and the generosity of E. A. Goodnow of our city. The final frame on the north side has the face and shoulders of the man who was longest mayor of Worcester, viz.: James B. Blake, whose praises cannot be too loudly sung. A mechanic and a far sighted man, he builded more wisely than many then suspected. In this case, fellow citizens donated the picture from the brush of Artist Willard of Sturbridge, in 1870 or 71. There was much dissatisfaction in the work, however, and it was not until 1875 or 6, that, having been worked over, it was put in place. Crossing to the south side, we first encounter the soldierly form of Colonel George H. Ward, slain at Gettysburg; but in his everyday life a Worcester mechanic. His old associates of the 15th Regt. were the donors, and once more we find Mr. Billings as artist. The presentation was October 25, 1873. The occupant of the next frame will need no introduction for some years yet, so easily recognized are the features of President Garfield. Again thanks are due Mr. E. A. Goodnow for his generosity, and admiration is owed to Mr. Parker for his skill and success. The picture was given March 28, 1882. John A. Andrew, in his familiar pose, follows, and I fancy occasionally smiles approvingly at his vis-a-vis and co-worker, Garrison. Once more the "Bay State" People were generous, and as hitherto, with them, Mr. Billings was the de-lineator. The next, that of Benjamin Walker, given by his daughter, Mrs. L. G. White. It was painted by Mr. E. T. Billings. It was put in place the 8th of April, 1890. During his life few men were better known to Worcester than Mr. Walker. For many years he was the motive power of the ice business, and he had the reputation of a man who was willing to make a living on small profits, believing that he would do as well in a long run as to try to get everything in one season.

Lastly, we find the intelligent face of a man of action, one who was a power in the Association, that of William A. Wheeler. This painting was made by P. S. Harris, of Brooklyn, N. Y., at the instance of the Association, and was suspended in 1875 or 6.

It is to be hoped that hereafter all Worcester boys and girls and grown people as well will be able to tell to all who don't already know, the names of these faces. They are worth remembering. They are those of men who did much for city, state and nation. It is not a very long lesson, the names of these worthy men. For the sake of the city and the Association, let them be learned. The Hall and its memories comes nearer England's Abbey than any other structure in our city. Its memories are constantly improving. As the master of the iron workers took the king's seat in the legend, it is proper that, in this city of Mechanics, their Hall or Assembly room should stand out, the most sightly edifice in our midst.

Ex-warden E. J. Russell and wife have returned from Boston and expect to resume their old residence on Benefit Street in about a month.

FURNITURE AND CARPETS,
355 Main Street, Worcester.

Baby Carriages!

The quicker you call the better it will be for you, because you will get your choice of the best to be had; better for us, because we will know sooner how many more to order. You will find them all well made, from good material, but of course there are many different grades.

WE SHOW YOU A GOOD BABY CARRIAGE
For $10,

and one for $21.50 that can't be beat for the money.

FURNITURE!

of all kinds for the Little Ones.

Children's High Chairs
IN GREAT VARIETY.
Children's Cabinet Chairs.
Children's Cradles.
Children's Cribs.

We are Sole Agents

FOR THE SALE OF

Eddy's * Refrigerators

For the City of Worcester.

Every Eddy Refrigerator is Warranted.

PINKHAM & WILLIS,

355 Main Street.

Only.

JOHN C. CRANE.

Only a tiny drop of dew,
Hiding the leaves among,
Yet it quenched the thirst of a wandering bird,
And he sung a sweeter song.

Only a seed ripened well,
That fell in the Autumn rain,
Yet the spring-time sun brought forth a stalk,
Whose fruit did deck the plain.

Only a kind word spoken low,
Yet it led to new life begun,
And who can tell, till the last great day,
How great was the victory won?

Only a whisper of the to be,
Against a fair one's name,
Yet its volume grew till the world believed
Nor questioned the truth of the same.

Only a word—yet its power is great
For good or future ill,
Be careful then of idle word,
And check them by thy will.

MILLBURY.

Last Sabbath was an anniversary day with the people of the 1st Congregational Parish and their pastor. Twenty years ago that day, Rev. Geo. A. Putnam entered upon the regular work of pastor of the church. He had occupied the pulpit for two months and a half previous to this time, preaching his first sermon here Jan. 22nd, 1871. Rev. Mr. Putnam served the church as acting pastor for one year or until April 1st, 1872. He was then given a regular call and installed, by Ecclesiastical Council, April 11, 1872. During these twenty years of earnest work, the church has received 203 members, but so great have been the losses by death and removal that it numbers today only 181 as against 151 twenty years ago. One peculiar fact in connection with this church's history is this, while the church membership has increased twenty per cent the congregation has decreased forty per cent. Another notable fact is that the benevolent contributions have increased eighty-three per cent in twenty years. The bonds of union established April 11, 1872 have grown stronger with each advancing year. No church in the first glow of affection and enthusiasm for a newly settled pastor, can show a more united membership than does this church after living in the bonds of gospel union with its pastor for twenty years. All love and honor him, and his conscientious life. All are proud of his ability. This feeling is not confined to his own church but is universal, throughout the town.

Judge Hopkins was given an informal reception by his fellow townsmen Thursday evening, April 2nd. W. H. Aiken, Esq., presided, and after making appropriate remarks himself, introduced the other speakers. A large number of prominent citizens were present and congratulations were frequent and hearty. Refreshments were served during the evening.

Mr. Augustus Mott, of the firm of Whitney & Mott, dye manufacturers, has broken ground for a new double house on the Anson Livermore lot which he purchased some time ago. The house, a large one, is to be built in the most substantial manner and is to contain all the modern improvements. Mr. Charles E. Surles is the builder.

Miss Ida Manson has been re-engaged as organist at the 1st Congregational Church. The chorus choir of last year will continue to sing.

Lovers of Good Tea and Coffee

Should buy their goods where they can depend on always getting a pure, fresh article, of the best quality. Our many patrons will testify that this is true of the

*New England Tea Co.,*

273 MAIN STREET.

Give us a trial and be convinced.

D. A. HOWE.

MRS. MORGAN'S

Private School and Kindergarten,

Y. M. C. A. Building, 10 Elm Street.

SPRING TERM OPENS APRIL 6, 1891.

W. H. TWICHELL,
Gold, Silver and Nickel
Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechanic St., Worcester, Mass.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,

* BOOK * BINDING *

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES

at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,

W. L. BROWN, Manager.

L. J. ZAHONYI,

Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

ORDER NOW

and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than at

EVANS & COMPANY,
Manufacturers of
Fine Monumental Work,
131 Central Street, near Summer.

W. A. ENGLAND,
DEALER IN
FINE WATCHES,
CLOCKS, JEWELRY
& OPTICAL GOODS.
REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.
394 Main Street.

ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING

Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,
Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.
Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold
on commission.
MRS. S. M. KEYES.

“Bird’s-Eye
VIEW OF THE WORLD.”

For particulars see “Books and Bookmen,” and address the Agent, Mr. H. E. Gould, care of Y. M. C. A.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE
permanently eradicated by the
ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,
92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

VOLAPÜK.

Vödapladam, pefovöl de ovigo.
qid. Timalölöt, topalölöt e kodalölöt kanoms papladön bifü velib, ven ninoms döli gledinik.

Nevelo ebinob in Paris.
In län oba mens binoms nenolik.
Kodü atos eneviloms segölön.
jid. Ven velib labom lölotis mödumik kim-ifal papladom bifü kimefal.

Givob buki ole.
If bal lölotas binom vemo lonedik papladom
egelo po nelonedikum.

Givob ole bukis oba tel jönik.
In set pekosiadöl nebaset no beginöl ko kon-yuns das, adas, u dat, kanom papladom bifü gleset.

Ven olabob moni, ogolob al Boston.
Nu ogivob oles bisilabs veütikün. If olen-adols omis oyufoms olis lilädön e penön püki, nulik.

Bei, past. Beigölön, to pass by. Beimalek, review (military.)

Beno, good, agreeable. Benosmel, perfume.
Bevü, between, inter. Bevünetik international

Bi, fore, pre. Bipük, preface. Bisilab, prefix.

Da, attainment of purpose. Dalog, perceive. Datuv, invention. Dakupön, to dip up.
De, From, out of, away. Desedön, to send off. Depotön, to mail away. Depäkön, to unpack.

Denu, re, again. Denusaun, convalescence.
Denulogön, to see again. Denulogü, until we see each other again. Denumü pam, revaccination.

Di, destructive action. Diblekön, to shatter. Didelilön, to break into small pieces.

Dis, under, beneath. Disbed, underbed, trundle bed. Disbovil, saucer. Dislän, low-land.

Du, through. Dukötön, to cut through.
Dulogön, to see through. Dutävön, to travel through.

Fe, away, off. Feflitön, to fly away. Fesli-pön, to sleep off. Fevobön, to work up, consume. Fesmilön, to smile at, deride.

Ge, back, re. Geplibön, to remain behind.
Gegetön, to recover. Gegivön, to restore.

Gle, great, principal. Gledin, principal, main thing. Gledom, palace, capitol. Gleflen, intimate, bosom friend.

Ke, con, with. Kebinön, to bring with.
Keblod, colleague. Kedlinön, to drink with.
Ki, interrogative. Kikod, why, for what reason. Kitim, at what time.

Le, intensive prefix. Lebadik, very wicked.
Leblägik, jet black. Ledib, precipice. Lenefikulik, extremely easy.

Len, at, on. Lenblinön, to bring on. Lenkip, to hold, support. Lenkonfidön, to confide in.

Li, interrogative, Lifagik? how far? (distance.) Lifüdenik? how far? (future) Ligletik? how large? Limödik? how much?

Lö, upper, over. Löpiin, uppermost point.
Löpatidel, head teacher, principal instructor.

D. Walter Rolston this week changes his residence from Worcester to Kansas City, where he will engage in the illuminated advertising business. Walter has an excellent reputation as a vocalist, and some years since was one of the crack amateur wheelmen. Kansas City is the gainer by his removal.

TO RENT.

First-class lower 8-room apartment in new block No. 3 Jacques Avenue, (first block from Wellington Street; attractive, tasteful interior; all modern conveniences. C. A. HOPPIN, Jr., 144 Beacon St., or 484 Main St.

The superiority of

*ROSE CREAM LOTION*

lies in the fact that it contains no Oils or Greasy Substances, no Chemical or Mineral Poisons, and will not injure the most delicate skin. Can be applied at any time; quickly absorbed. Ladies troubled with catchy fingers, working on silk and satin, will find it an excellent remedy. It will not leave the hands sticky.

For Gentlemen's use after shaving it is without an equal.

Try it. Get a

SAMPLE BOTTLE FREE.

Large bottles, 25c. Found in all first-class Drug stores. Prepared by

PERKINS & COMPANY, Sole Proprietors,
Worcester, Mass. BUSH & CO., Wholesale Agents.

STARKIE'S DYE HOUSE,

254 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Ladies and Gents' Garments

Dyed and Cleansed

in a Superior Manner.

Tailoring Establishment.

Custom-Made goods at almost Ready-made Rates.

254 MAIN STREET.

PHOTOGRAPHER
*****

Children's
Portraits
A Specialty

*****
326 Main, op. Mechanics Hall

F. S. BLANCHARD & CO.,

* PRINTERS. *

Book, Newspaper, Catalogue, Church, Society, Wedding and Commercial Printing of every kind executed in the best modern style.

No orders too large; none too small.

154 FRONT ST.

Horace Kendall,

DEALER IN

Furniture, Ranges, Carpets

AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Goods sold on instalments if desired. Prices as low as any house in New England.

No. 319 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Mechanics Hall Building.

The Week.

CITY.

- Apr. 3—No school and the city in a shroud of snow.
Associated Charities score a great success in Mechanics' Hall. Singers at their best. Overseers of the Poor still jangling. What a time they do have!
Mrs. Maria Smith dies in Grafton, 87 years.
- 4—Contract for building new High School edifice awarded to Thomas Barrett, $111,604.
Worcester school drawings entered in the Boston Exhibition, April 9, 10 and 11.
- 5—Daniel Dougherty lectures in Mechanics Hall, on the stage. Eloquent as ever.
Sixtieth anniversary of marriage of S. A. Porter and wife.
- 6—Post 10 takes notice of the 25th anniversary of the G. A. R.
Sudden death of Mrs. Catharine Frye at 215 Summer Street, 25 years.

7—Miss Bridget T. Carlon, principal of the Grafton Street School dies, 31 years.
Thomas F. McLaughlin S. J. a High School graduate '76 admitted to the first grade of the priesthood. It seems only a few weeks since friends gathered at Union Station in 1877, to say "Goodby" as he started for his novitiate in Woodstock, Md.

8—Fire at Washburn & Moen's Works, Quinsigamond.

9—Lee's surrender commemorated by supper of Union Veteran League.
Annual Supper of Chamberlain District Farmers' Club at home of Burton W. Potter, Esq. Extended description in next week's paper.

Dixie Minstrels tickle the public ear in Mechanics Hall.

COUNTY.

- 3—Charles H. Fisher takes his own life in Fitchburg.
Daniel F. Newton dies in Westboro; 79 years. Former boot manufacturer.
- 4—Clinton holds adjourned town meeting. Ere long, Clinton must be a city. Becoming too large for her town hall.
Joshua Bemis and wife of Spencer celebrate golden wedding.
- 6—Adjourned town meetings. License the important question. Sutton, Dudley, Spencer, Webster and Blackstone, Yes; Charlton, Sturbridge, Southbridge, West Brookfield, Brookfield, Oxford and Leominster, No.
- 7—Fitchburg High School pupils give a reception to former members now in the Worcester Polytechnic.
- 8—Spencer's new paper, The Leader, appears. Holden resolves to celebrate 150th anniversary of the town.

COMMONWEALTH.

- 3—The gale plays havoc in Boston Harbor.
Fire in the Converse House block in Palmer. Loss $10,000.
- 4—Senator Hoar and Dawes address the Massachusetts Club in Boston.
Republican League clubs to be organized throughout the state.

Natick voted Yes, but the selectmen say No. Why can't Worcester do likewise?

- 5—Masonic Temple and other buildings burned in Lowell. Biggest fire in many years.
Rev. A. S. Twombly resigns pastorate of Winthrop Church, Charlestown District.
- 6—The Com. from the Massachusetts Legislature to Chicago will recommend an appropriation of $175,000 for the World's Fair.
Adelbert Shaw, a Harvard student, drowned in Charles River.
- 7—Danvers suffering from fire bugs.
N. E. Conference, Methodist church, convenes in Lynn, 100th session.
- 8—Gen'l's Woodford and Tracy address the Republican Club in Music Hall, Boston, Senator Hoar sends a letter.
- 9—Mrs. General Custer received by the N. E. Woman's Press Association at the Parker House

NATION.

3—General Albert Pike dies in Washington. The foremost Free Mason in America. 81 years.
Indian Chief, Geromino a Sunday School teacher. Let us hope that he may be a good Indian and a live one.
Anna Dickinson enters a private Sanitarium at Goshen, N. Y.

4—The election of Governor in R. I., to be by the Legislature. Gov. Ladd will thus go in. Flour combination in Minneapolis. It is a war against another combination. Will the public profit?

Indications that Secretary Blaine leads as next Presidential candidate.

5—And now the whole country wants more restrictive immigration laws.
New Orleans gunboat to proceed to Sandwich Islands to look out for U. S. interests.

6—President Harrison to be boomed for reelection.

Lafayette Monument in place in Washington.

7—P. T. Barnum dies in Bridgeport, Conn. 81 years.

Republicans appear to be ahead in Rhode Island. Indications point the same way in Chicago.

Senator Geo. F. Edmunds of Vermont resigns.

8—P. T. Barnum's estate foots up more than $5,000,000.

9—Major McKinley doesn't like Secretary Blaine's foreign policy. At least, that is what they say.

WORLD.

3—London Spectator thinks our Constitution at fault. Too bad that we can't be forced into a fight at once.

Italian Count Rudini getting a little knowledge of American affairs.

4—German steamship lines object to the coal monopoly and will use American fuel.

Chances for international trouble over the New Foundland fisheries.

A Gloucester fisherman sails off with officials. Uncle Sam will have to take some of his children in hand.

A Chilian iron-clad joins in the insurgent fleet.

"The Commonwealth of Australia." That sounds very well.

5—Financial crisis impending in Italy. Less time to fuss about American murderers.

The terrible storm drives vessels ashore on Scottish coast.

6—Prince Albert Victor reported in poor health.

Parnell reported married, but not to Mrs. O'Shea. Oh Shame!

7—Nihilists again seek the life of the Czar.

It is now said that Parnell has married the eldest daughter of Mrs. O'Shea.

8—At a dinner given by Dissenters in Devonshire, a sensation is caused by the Rev. R. Davis declining to toast the Queen.

6—Prof. Tyndal improving.

Lord Bentwick dies. 70 years. His name dates back to the days of King William III.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

The concert given last week Friday evening at Mechanics' Hall, under the auspices of the Associated Charities was very successful. The idea of having a free concert was proposed by Mrs. S. E. Lawton. She also bore considerable of the expense. The artists who took part were Mrs. H. W. Johnson, Mme. Josephine L'Esperance, Mrs. Geo. M. Bassett, Mrs. S. E. Lawton, Mrs. F. W. Ruggles, Ben T. Hammond, E. A. O' Connor, Walter G. Ingalls, Arthur J. Bassett and Mr. Howard. All gave their services. The audience was very enthusiastic.

Gilmore's famous band will give a concert at Mechanics' Hall, April 22, under the management of Mrs. Lillie Wilkinson. Aside from the band, which alone would be a great attraction, there will be a large number of vocal soloists, including such singers as Miss Ida Klein, soprano; Mme. Natali, soprano; Miss Anna Mantell, contralto; Sig. Spigoroli, tenor; Sig. Sartori, basso; Campanini, Miss Maud Powell, violinist. The band soloists will be Frank Wadsworth, flute; Signor De Carlo, piccolo; Matur Ur petit clarinet; Herr Stockigt, clarinet; Mons. Lefebre, saxophone; Herr Bode, cornet; E. Bates, cornet; Signor Raffayolo, euphonium; Harry Whittier, baritone. LIGHT will make further announcements later.

Primrose and West's Minstrels appear at the Worcester theater this afternoon and evening. Their company has always been the finest on the road and this year is said to surpass all previous efforts. This will probably be the last appearance in this city this season of a first class minstrel troupe and lovers of this kind of entertainment will do well to make the most of the opportunity. Primrose and West have always been exponents of original and refined minstrelsy and deserve the success they have met.

Margaret Mather, supported by Otis Skinner and a good company, appeared at the theater Thursday and Friday evenings to large audiences, in "Romeo and Juliet" and "As You Like It." Miss Mather only repeated her former triumphs.

Miss Agnes Huntington, as "Paul Jones," the nautical hero, had one of the largest and most fashionable audiences of the season Monday evening. She has a beautiful voice and her singing received frequent applause. Frederic Howard, a Worcester boy, made his first appearance in comic opera, and was well received. He has an excellent future before him.

Rice's operatic extravaganza, the old but ever popular "Evangeline" will appear for one night only at the Worcester Theatre, Wednesday, April 15. Tickets will be on sale early next week.

J. C. Stewart's "Fat Men's Club," a rollicking musical comedy, will make merry at the Worcester Theatre, Monday and Tuesday evenings, April 13 and 14. A glimpse of the members of the club is sure to drive away dull care.

"Ship-Ahoy," which will be at the theater Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week, was first produced in Boston. It was at first put on the boards for a short engagement, but it became so popular that all other attractions were cancelled, and the play had a long run.

The Scotch Concert, which will be given in Association Hall, Saturday evening, April 25, promises to be a rare treat for lovers of Scotch music. The company is probably the best of any now rendering exclusively the beautiful and soul-stirring songs of the Highlanders. William Mac Lennan has a wide reputation as a solo dancer and pipe player. Edith Ross, the contralto, has been heard before in this city. The soprano, Miss Alice Steel, is the winner of the gold medal in the Royal Academy of Music, London. The tenor is Alexander Finlayson and the bass is James Fleming. Last, but by no means least, is the name of M. Jules Guitton, violinist. This gentleman is one of the most distinguished violinists of Europe. The program will contain some of the finest melodies in the whole budget of Scottish songs. Notable among the numbers are such songs as "Wae's Me for Prince Charlie," "Home, Sweet Home," "Auld Robin Gray," "The Flow'r o' Ellerslie," "Call'er Herrin'," "Annie Laurie," "Draw the Sword, Scotland," "We are na Fou," "The Flowers o' the Forest," "Blue Bonnets Over the Border," and the like. It is expected, also, that Miss Steel and Miss Ross will sing as a duet the lovely old melody, "Ye Banks and Braes o' Bonnie Doon."

BASE HITS.

Notwithstanding the chilliness of the air Fast Day, a very large crowd gathered to see Worcester's new club down the Holy Cross nine. The game played was not a very scientific one, due partly to the weather and partly to the non-practice of the teams. Yet from a financial standpoint it was a great success as over $700 was added to the treasury of the home club. This shows conclusively that Worcester stands ready to support a good club legitimately handled.

On account of the condition of the Grove street grounds, Worcester's players have been obliged to take their practice in the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium. The practice has included walking, running and exercise with the apparatus. With good weather the necessary base ball practice will come.

The league of which Worcester is a member is getting into fine shape, and from all indications will be successful. The circuit being a compact one will prove a great saving in the matter of travelling expenses, and it would seem that every team should complete the season and besides make some money for its management.

Manager Burnham, of the New Haven Club, seems determined to injure base ball prospects in Worcester all he can. While pretending at first to be very friendly toward this city his every action has been against the best interests of base ball here.

Umpire Gaffney, with his usual clear insight into matters pertaining to base ball, has discovered in the new rules for this year that any club could play ten men instead of nine in any game it sees fit. Gaffney wrote to Secretary Young, and what might have caused trouble has now been settled.

Jimmy McGarr is playing third base for Denver.

The Worcesters will play the Harvards at Cambridge, Saturday, and a return game will be played in this city a week from Saturday. This change is found necessary on account of the conditions of the Grove Street grounds.

It is rumored that Charlie Goodwin will be found the coming season at the Grove Street grounds and, of course, with him the parrot and the double-deck glass of lemonade.

CALEDONIA'S MUSIC!

LAST CONCERT IN AMERICA!

THE CELEBRATED

Royal Edinburgh Concert Company

Will make their last appearance before returning to Scotland, in Association Hall, Saturday Eve., April 25.

Scotch Music!

The Pathos and Humor of Scotland's Prose and the Grace and Poetry of her Dances, will be presented by the Best Artists that Scotland can furnish.

The Royal Edinburgh Concert Company is the best that has ever come from Scotland to America. The Artists are:

MISS ALICE STEEL,

Scottish Prima-Donna Soprano. (Pupil of of Madame Della Valle, assistant to the famous Lamperti, Milan) winner of the Bronze, Silver and Gold medals. ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, LONDON.

MISS EDITH ROSS,

Pupil of Randegger. Pre-eminent Scotch Contralto. (Her second American Tour).

MR. ALEXANDER FINLAYSON,

Tenor, Deputy in Scotland for Sims Reeves.

MR. JAMES FLEMING,

Basso, Principal of Glasgow Select Choir.

M. JULES GUITTON,

Solo Violinist. (Professor from the Principal Edinburgh College: formerly Conductor of the Royalty Theater, London, Eng., and Santley Opera Company).

MR. CHAS. F. FERGUSON, F. S. Sc., London,

Scottish Humorist and Vocalist, in his great and Original creation of "JEEMS KAYE."

MR. JAMES BLAIKIE,

The well-known and accomplished Organist and Accompanist, and

MR. WILLIAM MACLENNAN,

Solo Dancer and Pipe Player. Winner of the World's Championship in both events. Appeared before Her Majesty Queen Victoria the Royal Family and Suite on four occasions. Mr. MacLennan will give several of the Picturesque Highland Dances in full Highland Costume.

ALL Seats Reserved. Tickets, 75c and 50c. Box plan at the Post Office News Room.

The Natural History Society

A Revised Declaration of (In) Dependence by the Representative of the Natural History Society of Worcester, Mass.

When in the course of efforts to realize aims and noble purposes, and in elaboration of schemes for popular education, healthy enjoyments and an elevation of the moral and physical tone among the young, by philanthropic persons, who have, from time to time, unselfishly labored, in season and out of season, to enlarge the sphere of the society, it becomes necessary to again call upon the generous public for financial aid, and to invite co-operation, a plain statement in outline of the object to be attained and the plan of work is not only eminently proper, but is likewise urged by a decent respect for the opinions of the citizens at large.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that certain text books, among which are those relating to mathematics, language, history, geology, reading, writing, are of prime importance in laying the foundation of a suitable, practical business education.

That, to secure these advantages, common schools were instituted, and are generously supported by public funds.

That, whenever it is found that in the love of nature, a wider knowledge of birds, beasts, reptiles, trees, shrubs, flowers, is craved as food for mental hunger, and may be popularized, common prudence and philanthropy will dictate provision for more free and liberal distribution of accurate information on all these several subjects.

In furtherance of these and kindred purposes, the Natural History Society maintains a proud pre-eminence among the tried and true local associations.

Prudence, indeed, will dictate that such an institution, long established, shall not be narrowed or curtailed in any of its departments, but, rather, widened, enlarged, amplified to the end that Field, Forest, Stream shall yield the fruits of study, and that the rising generation of our city may become familiar with all these things, which belong to a more perfect development and embellishment of the understanding.

For these purposes there is provided a most attractive museum, quite remarkable for the extent and variety of its collection of specimens, and which it is most desirable to largely increase by the addition of other specimens that have not yet found lodgment in that sanctuary.

Classes in one and another branch of natural history are maintained, and it is most desirable that they may be increased in number to embrace other subjects, expanding in interest and usefulness.

The success of the bo s' summer camp ought not to be endangered by lack of means to maintain—even to raise its high standard of excellence.

In every stage of its existence when the society was petitioned for financial backing, its call has always met most liberal response.

The meritorious character of the W. N. H. S. is vouched for in the munificence of sundry citizens who have freely given of their abundance in encouragement of the undertaking.

A late large bequest which, however, is not yet available, seems to open the way for the full realization of a fond dream of the founders, and which has become a lively hope and inspiration of the society of today, viz.: The speedy establishment in a home of its own, and the accumulation of a permanent fund, which shall make possible a vast enlargement of the means of usefulness, and ultimately insure its being entirely self-supporting.

Therefore, the undersigned, as a representative of the Worcester Natural History Society, appealing to the good already wrought for the rectitude of the design, does in the name and by the authority of the president and directors publish and declare that he will seek by all proper means and upon all proper occasions will endeavor to contract with any or all who are willing or may be persuaded to join in a popular contribution for the benefit, and to carry on, to successful issue, the labor for good in our midst of the said society.

And, with a firm reliance upon the liberality of the citizens, invoking the assistance and co-operation of those who are cognizant of its beneficial influence, in behalf of the success of the scheme, which involves the raising the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, he pledges his most industrious effort.

Signed,

JAMES E. DENNIS.

ALWAYS ON HAND!

VENISON, WILD GAME,
TURKEYS, CHICKENS,
GEESE, DUCKS,

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass

EDWARD B. CLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

THE CRITERION
Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

Worcester Dress
Cutting School,
45 Pleasant St.,

For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circular.

Mrs. L. P. Walch.

E. W. COFFIN,

Store Fixtures

310 Main Street, Worcester.

Name this Paper.

MRS. A. MINOR,

Millinery * Parlors.

A well-selected Stock of Goods for Order Work.

14 MAPLE STREET, Worcester, Mass.

About Folks.

The elegant and spacious residence of Jas. A. Norcross, 18 Claremont street, was opened for the last regular meeting of the Stone Club of All Souls Universalist Church last week Thursday evening. The meeting was attended by a large proportion of the members, and after the business had been transacted, a conversation party was had, which served to pass the time pleasantly and profitably. During the evening a fine collation was served by the host and hostess. Arrangements were made for a novel entertainment to be given at Horticultural Hall on Monday evening, April 13, to be followed by a social party.

A River.

What an insignificant thing a river is, when it first starts. The sun, that seems to run this whole world about as he sees fit, draws the innocent water to himself, by simply making it warm and comfortable. The winds then come into the forming of the river, they gently blow the clouds, or the river, east or west just as they happen to feel at the time, until they have been wafted over some country where a heavy rain is not needed for six or eight months; when the sun disappears and down pours the rain. It falls on a high hill among the rocks and earth, and if the soil is shallow, is evaporated by the sun; but I think I shall do better to follow the rain which had the good luck to fall on mother earth. This sinks down deep into the ground, purifies itself among the stones and pebbles and at last bursts forth a charming spring, at least this one is, for why should it be otherwise, since a cool clear spring is one we all like to come across. The spring bubbles up and runs over with joy as well as water, the water rolls down to the lowest land it can find, until it is a babbling brook; while the joy remains to greet the first person who may chance to pass that way. Other brooks flow into this one and they rush on together, content to share their lots. The brook has now grown into a river, with here and there a narrow foot-bridge across it; by and by its course is obstructed by dams, and it is obliged to pause and grind the miller's grist, or cut the sawyer's lumber, and then it rushes on with renewed energy and redoubled force.

Now it rushes into a big flat basin and is used for pleasure, boating, sailing, trout-fishing, etc. As it emerges from the lake, for I must call it such, it is apparent that it has increased in size, and from this stage is employed for navigation: huge steamboats and little steamboats ply their course up and down its tranquil waters. My river has reached its last stage, as it has reached the ocean, and yet it is not the last stage, for who can tell where it begins and where it ends. A river is a great endless chain, a perpetual motion in nature, which motion man cannot imitate.

W. T. H.

Sarah Bernhardt's business in Boston has been simply tremendous. She played to almost $40,000 on the first week in that city. Mme. Bernhardt would have played one night in Worcester had the management complied with her demand and guaranteed her $2000 for her share of the night's receipts.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

Heywood Foundry Comp'y,

GARDNER, MASS.

This Heater is unsurpassed for excellence of workmanship and is the best in the market. Now is the time to secure estimates. The following is one of a great number of testimonials from our leading citizens:

WORCESTER, MASS, April 12, 1890.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER:

Gentlemen—Having used one of your Heaters for two seasons with satisfaction, I can recommend it to anyone, as it will do all they claim. Respectfully,

JOHN E. ALLEN, 917 Main Street.

Branch Office, 39 Pearl Street, Worcester.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H Howland, D. D. S.
11 Pleasant St.,

Dentists. Worcester, Mass

Residence, 61 West Street.

The Readers of Light
I most cordially invite
To call at my

Model Drug Store

When in want of anything
They would expect to find

In a metropolitan establishment of its kind.

Respectfully,

Geo. E. Fairbanks, Druggist,

10 FRONT STREET.

J. W. GREENE,

P L U M B E R.

Dealer in Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces. Steam and Gas Fitting. Jobbing in all its branches promptly attended to. Telephone Connection. 51 Main Street, Cumming's block.

Worcester Coal Company,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

COAL. COAL.

General office, 18 Pearl St., Y. M. C. A. Building; Yards, 23 Manchester St. and 319 Southbridge St.

Spring.

MARY WOODWARD WEATHERBEE.

Now comes the miracle of Spring,
As through the air, God's thought takes wing,
And clothes itself, a living thing.

The stone that sealed is rolled away,
By every vacant grave today,
An angel stands in bright array.

Out of the swaddling bonds and gloom
Of nature's cold, repulsive tomb,
There comes to light, a sweet new bloom.

Out of the love that we thought dead,
There breathes a newer life instead,
Out of Eternal fullness fed.

Now comes the miracle reveal,
On every sicken leaf, a seal;
To every heart, love's own appeal.

Child of my soul, it seems to say,
See by each flower that blooms today,
All ye are one, the self same clay.

Life of my life, I show you here,
By nature's symbols, sweet and clear.
Through change, ye rise from sphere to sphere.

So comes the miracle of spring,
As through the air, God's thought takes wing
And clothes itself, a living thing.

April, 1891.

Geo. N. Morse's new studio,
Room 16, 368 1-2 Main street.

ABOUT FOLKS.

Bryant Chantauqua Circle will meet next Tuesday evening at 7.45 at Becker's Business College, Clark Block.

The attendance at the Society of Antiquity Tuesday evening to hear Mrs. Dwight Sumner's excellent paper on Prehistoric Language, was so large an adjournment to Natural History Hall was necessary. Mr. Francis E. Blake of Boston also read a valuable paper on the famous Lucy Keyes case of Princeton.

Mr. E. I. Comins and wife have returned from their Southern trip much benefited by the change.

The class of '89, Worcester High School, held its second annual reunion in Colonial Hall Tuesday evening. It was arranged by the executive committee, of which Mr. Charles T. Tatman is president. The reunion was of an informal nature. Music for dancing was furnished by Bicknell's orchestra and Charles T. Tatman and Richard H. Hammond were the floor managers. Rebboli furnished refreshments. Miss Mary P. Jeffs and Mrs. Charles F. Marble were the patronesses. During the evening Miss Minnie Pierce of Arlington favored the company with a reading. Those present were Charles T. Tatman, Richard H. Hammond, Wm. H. Larkin, Jr., Fred A. Morse, Edward C. Whitney Ernest W. Marshall, Arthur C. Comins, Ernest H. Wood, W. A. Gilfillan, Richard C. Cleveland, A. B. Moulton, J. H. McCue, Harry L. Dadmun, George H. Corbett, Frank R. Batchelder, Herbert C. Lakin, E. A. Taylor, Wm. N. Stark, Wm. F. Burleigh, George W. Eddy, Misses Effie B. Draper, Addie M. Biscoe, Adelaide Wyman, Adele Poore, Catherine Swan, Helen M. Banfield, Evelyn Wyman, Mabel Streeter, Grace Larkin, Maude A.

Parker, Mabel R. Moore, Carrie S. Dean, Abbie J. Smith, Clara Gunderson, Lavinia Houghton, Nellie Fairbanks, Mary Davis, M. Elizabeth Norcross, Clara Brown, Jennie Brown, Florence Holbrook, Minnie Pierce. Grace M. Bigelow.

Readers are requested to read the advertisement of Rand, McNally & Co.'s New Atlas. It is an indispensable adjunct to every well provided home.

At the meeting of the Women's Club Wednesday afternoon, the speaker was Rev. Robert G. Brooks. He explained the plans for bettering the poor of London, which are presented by Gen. Booth in his "In Darkest England."

Church Choirs.

The following list has been received since the publication of last week's paper.

Plymouth Church.—Quartet and choir. Quartet—Mrs. J. M. Niles, soprano; Miss Alice Hammond, alto; A. E. Pennell, tenor and director; D. E. Spencer, bass; Geo. E. Brown, organist. Chorus—sopranos, Emma L. Dunbar, Mrs. J. A. Long, Mrs. Geo. A. Smith, Mrs. J. W. Townsend, Anna T. Kelley, Avis C. Day, Lillian E. Denny, Minnie Howard, Florence Henderson, Mary M. Harvey, Mary E. Blood, Mrs. E. A. Sadd, L. Gertrude Stowe, Mrs. Fred E. Adams; altos, Mrs. F. M. Lord, Lillian J. Nichols, Ellen M. Day, A. Louise Penniman, Mrs. E. C. Sibley, Mary L. Starr, Ella P. Blenus, Grace S. Allen, Harriet H. Maynard, Mrs. W. G. Davis, Miss Julia A. A. Spaulding; tenors, Geo. A. Smith, Lucius Harwood, L. D. Smith, J. B. Witherby, J. A. Tatman, J. E. Spaulding, Herbert S. Lesure; basses, Charles Holden, Charles W. Gilbert, Fred W. Barnes, Francis Leland.

SPRINGTIME.

Springtime, bright springtime, we hail thy return,
We greet thee with favor, with joy and with song,
We know that thy presence is cheering and sweet.
At thy softening skies, spring flowers at our feet,
Each dawning of day makes thy coming more bright,
Each breeze that is passing bringeth new delight.
Oh springtime, bright springtime, thy coming we greet,
Thy breath so refulgent let thy breezes repeat,
As the songbird and bee all their tributes shall bring,
Then why may not we of thy sweet praises sing.

Yes, hail beauteous springtime, all hail thy return,
We quaff at thy fountain and bid thee good cheer,
Come with thy music, and our voices shall join,
With the warbler's high note, and the skylarks shrill song.
Come in thy freshness, we'll make thee our guest,
And arise at thy dawning, to hail thee—the best.
Oh springtime, sweet springtime, with thee we commune,
Thy music repeating, oh haste not too soon!
Our praises, our worship and offerings we bring
And bend at thy altar, oh beautiful spring.

GEORGE L. GROUT.

Herman's, New York, is perhaps the only theatre in the world that gets along with but one stage hand. Yet there are four acts in All the Comforts of Home, the play now running there so successfully. The explanation of this lies in the fact that the scenery is the same in all four acts, and is built on, and nailed and screwed to the stage, and all that fisherman of a stage hand, has to do is to turn down the footlights and then rush aloft and roll up the curtain. After lowering the curtain he scampers down and turns up the lights. They say that Charles Frohman has an understudy for even this individual.

Z. F. Little & Co.

New Spring Garments.

Ladies' Reefers and Blazers, Plain and with Gilt Trimmings, $3.50 to $15

Jersey Jackets, all grades and prices, from $3.50 upwards

Children's Reefers and Blazers, from $1.50 to $5.00

The prettiest ever worn.

Jersey Waists, all grades and prices.

Waterproofs of all descriptions.

Z. F. Little & Co.,

234 and 238 MAIN ST.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

Velvet Carpets!

A Dollar a Yard!!

We like to show our carpets even though you are not quite ready to buy at this moment. They are so very handsome and good and the prices so low for quality, that it's no wonder so many are crowding our Carpet rooms these days.

You get one thing here in Carpets—you get the newest and best out from the looms.

You get a kind that won't give you the rickets if you should wake up in the night and look suddenly at the glaring, flaring colors so common now-a-days.

You won't find certain shades of red and certain shades of green, in that horrible combination that blinds you, almost, when the evening light strikes them.

We know what color combinations you'll like, and we have them here for you.

If somebody sells 100 yards of carpet a day at a profit of 10c a yard, he makes a profit of $10

If somebody else sells 1000 yards a day, he need make only 1c a yard in order to get the same $10 profit.

You can see that easily can't you?

How do we manage that?

Let us tell you.

We put every one of the extra cents into the yard of Carpet, so that for the 50c 75c or $1.00 you pay us, you get more Carpet goodness from us than you can get from many places you and we know.

The New Carpets are here. Come and see them.

VELVET CARPETS $1 00 a yard.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

✦ * SPRING * WOOLENS * ✦

✦ * Our ✦ Opening ✦ of * ✦

Choice Domestic and Foreign Woolens, Selected for
Our Custom Department.

Gentlemen who wish to examine the Latest Novelties in these Goods should Call and examine them.

✦ * * THE * * ✦

WARE-PRATT CO.'S

408 and 412 MAIN STREET, WORCESTER.

Now is the Time to Buy a

CARRIAGE !

at a Small Profit.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,

OPP. THE COMMON.

A. S. NEWCOMB,

Market and Oyster House,

Fish of all kinds. Planter and Shipper
Choice Grade of Oysters. Telephone conn:
tion 206 2.

223 MAIN ST., WORCESTER, MASS

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *

NO. 156 MAIN STREET,
H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

About Folks.

Mr. Frederic P. Vinton, the portrait painter, will lecture on "Impressionism" in the new Public Library Building, next Tuesday evening. The lecture is under the auspices of the Worcester Art Society.

Leicester and Worcester.

Mr. Fred H. Woodcock, 7 Hawthorn Street, gave a reception to his friends Tuesday evening, April 7, from seven to ten. The novel part of the affair was that each guest was requested to send in four lines of his composition, to be read before the company. Almost everyone replied to the request and they were read to the company by Miss Ida F. Warren. Among those present were: Miss Ida F. Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Midgley, Miss Bertha Denny, Miss Gould, Miss Conant, Mr. Walter C. Watson, Mr. George Lyon, Mr. Walter Denny, Mr. George Denny, Leicester; Miss Edith Smith, Miss Florence M. Williams, Cherry Valley; Mr. Arthur Y. Greene, Mr. Arthur P. Stone, Mr. Edward Wilcox, Mr. Chas. C. Brown, Miss M. Edith Sessions, Miss Laura J. Sessions, Worcester. During the evening the host, through Miss Smith, was presented with a gold headed ebony cane. Refreshments were served and the remainder of the evening was spent in a social manner.

J. W. Herbert, over whose Koko, in the Mikado, Worcester used to go wild, has given up comic opera, and next season will be member of the Lyceum stock.

NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.

Incorporated in the City of Worcester, Sept. 17, 1889. A great co-operative institution and fraternal order, paying sick and accident benefits and an endowment of $500 at the end of five years. Over 600 members in Worcester; three local assemblies, and two more in process of formation. $8760 already distributed in sick benefits. $14,331.63 reserve.

For full particulars, and documents carefully explaining the plan and scope of this rapidly growing fraternity, call on or address J. O. H. WOODMAN, Secy., 339 Main St., Worcester, Mass. Burnside Building.

Lamont & Whittemore,

39 PEARL ST.

LEADING * SAFETY * BICYCLES.

Adopted by U. S. Government. Cycle repairing, also Fine Lock and Key Work. Open Evenings.

LIGHT

VOL. III. No. 7. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, APRIL 18, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

STANLEY C. BRENNAN

FRED H. DANIELS,

HARRY A. ADAMS,

ALBERT L. BENNETT,

FRANK H. ELLIS,

Prominent Members of the Chatham Athletic Club.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

* * Furniture! * *

From the largest and best assortment in the city select the

FURNITURE FOR YOUR CHAMBER! FURNITURE FOR YOUR PARLOR! FURNITURE FOR YOUR DINING-ROOM! FURNITURE FOR YOUR LIBRARY! FURNITURE FOR YOUR HALL AND OFFICE!

We have the goods and can save you money by calling upon us. For Cash or Credit we sell at the LOWEST PRICES, and MAKE SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO CASH BUYERS. Special attention given to furnishing Public Buildings, Hotels and Boarding Houses. Call on us at 247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

C. H. DRAPER,
Livery, Feed and Truck Stable.

Three Large Moving Wagons. Baggage Wagon always ready. Furniture and Piano Moving. Telephone 118-5.
161 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

Worcester Co-Operative Bank!

New Series for Investors at $1 a Share.
DIVIDENDS 6 PER CENT.
$12,000 for Borrowers.

Shares can be obtained at the office, WALKER BUILDING, ROOM 122, And also at stated meeting, which will be held MONDAY EVENING, 2nd inst., at Room 6, Mechanics Hall.
The issue is limited, and those intending to purchase should, by calling early, make sure of shares and avoid the crowd of meeting day. From $1 to $25 per month can be invested by or for any person, and the investment will begin earning dividends at once. The meeting this month is a good opportunity for borrowers, as the new series can be used as collateral. Loans may be repaid at any time, but nothing can be demanded by the bank except the monthly payments, which finally cancel the debts.
STEPHEN C. EARLE, President.
T. J. HASTINGS, Secretary.

SALEM STREET CHURCH

Course * of * Entertainments.

APRIL 21. Illustrated Lecture,

An Evening with Beethoven,

By B. D. ALLEN,

Assisted by Mrs. F. W. RUGGLES, Vocalist, and Misses E. G. WHITTEMORE and M. L. STARR, Pianists.
Admission. 25 cents.

MECHANICS * * HALL.

Mrs. Lillie Wilkinson, Manager.
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22.

GILMORE

The greatest of all bandmasters, and the most popular and successful of all leaders. And his Famous * Band.

Everywhere conceded to be the finest concert and military band in the world. Assisted by his full corps of famous soloists, including the beautiful and charming violin virtuoso.

MISS MAUD POWELL,
Also Miss IDA KLEIN, Soprano.
Mme. NATALI, Soprano.
Mme. ANNA MANTELL, Contralto.
Sig. SPIGAROLI, Tenor.
Sig. SARTORI, Baritone. And the great tenor, Sig. CAMPANINI.

Price, 50c., 75c. and $1.00.
The sale of seats will commence at Gorham's Music Store, April 18. Concert at 8.

L. J. ZAHONYI,
Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

N. G. TUCKER. W. F. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON,
SANITARY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.
56 Pleasant Street, Worcester, Mass.

WHENEVER GOOD
Eatables

are desired they will always be found at

John A. Hartigan's

47 and 51 Pleasant Street.

Simple!
Durable!
Odorless!
Clean!

It saves Time, Labor and Fuel, (two-thirds cent per hr. for fuel.)

Manufacturers Guarantee every Iron.

TRY ONE.

For Sale at 311 Main Street, Room 13. Liberal Commissions allowed to agents. Agents wanted throughout the United States. SQUIER & BEALS, Manufacturing Agents, 311 Main Street, Room 13.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H. Howland, D. D. S.

Dentists. 11 Pleasant St., Worcester, Mass

Residence, 61 West Street.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, APRIL 18, 1891.

No. 6

The consciousness of darkness in one and around one brings the longing for light. And then the light dawns; through mist and fog, perhaps, but enough to pick one's way by.—Thomas Hughes.

We are grateful to "Tom. Brown" for that sentiment. LIGHT is ready to meet and to satisfy any amount of said longing.

Write Home high above every other word.

It is the one word on which we can all unite no matter what our creed or party.

Is it not possible, nay more, is it not desirable to have one paper which we can all read with no fear of having our feelings injured?

Read this paper, advertisements and all, and find, if possible, a word that does not tend to the advancement of the home idea. We would make that thought ever foremost.

Who is going to move first in the matter of a Sunday School parade? Some one must take a measure of responsibility. Is every one waiting for another? Worcester is not good soil for new enterprises, but once started, successfully, they take deep root.

To the extent of this city's population, this Sunday School display may be made as attractive as that of Brooklyn. Its influence in getting young people to act together, to draw them into church associations must be salutary. LIGHT's columns are open to any one who wishes to discuss the situation.

The past week has been one of noteworthy anniversaries, in state and nation. It was on the 14th of April 1865, that the lamented Lincoln went to Ford's Theater, in Washington, and it was early in the morning of the 15th, that his spirit took its flight. Annually these recurring days call to mind the events of those troublous times.

Today our streets show the presence of strangers in our midst. They have gathered to live over the events of the 19th of April, 1861, when they and their comrades braved death in a hostile Southern city. "When shall their glory fade?" There was not so much loss of life in Baltimore, but it was the beginning and that is ever memorable.

After thirty years, that so many survivors can assemble speaks well for their lives and for their youth when they went into the fray. The old Bay State has many precious memories, but none deeper nor stronger than those which cluster around the 19th of April.

Not only have we Baltimore in mind but Concord and Lexington arise with red coated British in combat with homespun dressed farmers. Like a panorama the scene passes in review and the way from Concord to Arlington is strewn with the victims of that march where the shearer went out to shear; but came back shorn.

And Baltimore has Worcester visitors again on the 19th of April. Though they bear arms, it is not with hostile intent. Mayflowers might rest with grace in the muzzles of those harmless guns. No fierce rable, hungry for blood, is to assault our friends, but a city and people will receive with open arms, after thirty years, men from the old Bay State.

Not the ones who marched with steady pace to the Capital's rescue but their sons. Very likely gray haired veterans will march among the honoraries and how happy will they be over the difference between then and now. It is a good thing that men can't stay mad always. The Light Infantry will have a good time.

In this week of historical reminiscence, it is not amiss to call the readers attention to the short item, entitled "Who was he?" It is particularly pleasing to have this mystery solved and Mr. Lovell is entitled to much credit for his patience and perseverance in searching.

In all the interest that Worcester is developing in club life, let no one forget that, after all, home is the best place. Man, wife, children and friends ought to afford all the diversion and pleasure that mortals need. Says a prominent member of a late organization, "Don't fail to impress upon the boys the fact that club life is not for them, not for any one all the time. It is all right to drop in and read a paper that you have not elsewhere; to meet a friend by appointment or for a short diversion at a game, but to live there, never."

Here it is boys, in black and white from a member. You must bear in mind that mothers, sisters and friends have some claim upon you and that we are not sufficiently, a people of leisure to make club life what it is in foreign lands. LIGHT grants all the fun and delight that comes from social intercourse with one's fellows; but let the evenings away from home be occasional, not regular.

The world does move, for there is now a movement looking to the watering of the streets by assessment of abutets; better still would be the watering of all streets by general tax. Long enough have certain people paid their subscriptions for the benefit of equally able but ungenerous neighbors. The streaks of unsprinkled streets along our ways have told strange stories of the alleged thriftiness of the abutter. He has carefully reckoned that he can get along if his little space is left, for it is only a head wind that will blow his own dust in his face.

This disposition to put sprinkling into the hands of the street departments is one that should have been cultivated long since. Not a word can be said in regard to the care of the streets in any other way that will not apply to their sprinkling. If undertaken by the city there will be no profits to be pocketed by the contractor but the city will do its own work or at least it ought.

We began with Home and we end with the same magic word. Everything that will tend to the improvement of the same, we should encourage. In LIGHT's opinion, there is no one agency more effectual than the Coöperative Bank, of our city. Read the advertisement in another column and see what advantages are offered toward securing homes of your own, not tenements owned by another. Pay for a home; don't pay rent. Look out for further words upon the subject.

VOLAPÜK.

Love, over. Lovepolön, to carry over, i. e., to translate. Loveblinön, to deliver. Love dukön, to convey. Loveflumön, to overflow.

Lu, lesser, worse. Ludom, hut. Lufidön, to devour, to prey upon. Luflaböset, false alarm of fire. Lugivön, to loan.

Mi, mis. Mikonfid, mistrust, distrust. Migebö, to misuse. Migälön, to disgust. Miplidön, to displease.

Mo, away, out. Moblinön, to remain away. Moblinön, to bring away. Mofalön, to fall off. Mosiadön, to set aside. Mokömön, to get out.

Mö, poly, much. Mömat, polygamy. Mögul, polygony. Möpükik, polyglottic.

Ne, negative prefix. Neplöpik, unsuccessful. Nelesumik, inaccessible. Nelab, want.

Neba, branch. Nebadom, out-building. Nebabled, supplemt (periodical). Nebaklub, subordinate, branch society.

Nin, into. Nindamön, to dam into, to imbank. Nindlanön, to penetrate. Ningolön, to go into, to enter. Ninkikön, to enclose.

Pos, after, subsequent. Pospenäd, postscript. Poslifels, descendants.

Sä, dis, out, from. Säfonön, to gush out. (liquid). Södekön, to disfigure, to deface. Säklötön, to undress. Särönön, to run away.

Se, from, out. Seglof, excrescence. Segivot, edition. Sedeilöa, to die out, become extinct. Sekratön, to scratch out, erase.

Sma, young, small. Smabel, hill, mound. Smabed, nest. Smakat, kitten. Smapük, whisper.

So, such, so. Sonemik, so named. Somödik, so much. Sosus, so soon as. Solonedo, so long as.

Ta, contra. Tabalvoto, mutually opposed. Tabüd, countermand. Tadun, resistance. Tapük, protest. Tatopön, to contrast.

Tu, too, excessively. Tudevön, to over prize. Tudunön, to exaggerate, to overdo.

Va, every, all. Vadelo, every day. Vaflano, on all sides, universally. Valöpo, everywhere.

Vifa, fast. Vifalezug, express train. Vifapenäd, short-hand writing, stenography.

Vo, other. Votöpo, elsewhere. Votüp, change of time.

Vü, between. Vüpolön, to intermeddle. Vüsiadam, parenthesis, placing between.

Ogivob ovigo oles posilabis, kels laboms siämis difik.

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 379 Main Street, Burnside Building,
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post Office at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, APRIL 18, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Hereafter, it will be understood that all articles in LIGHT, not ascribed, save recipes,
squibs, fashion and household notes were
written for this paper.

Friends sending in manuscripts will not complain if they are not printed at once. There are many waiting. Yet LIGHT is always glad to receive communications and, if meritorious
to print them.

The Referee, Boston's new paper, has our heartest congratulations and good wishes. It is clear and complete. A full page is given to College Athletics. It must become a necessity to every man who delights in athletic sports.

LIGHT is under obligations to the sender for a copy of the Twentieth Annual Report of the Trustees of the City Hospital. As with the most of Worcester's Public Institutions, commendable progress is indicated.

The wheelbarrow has been found. That very useful utensil merely went on a Lark in the Wesby Alley. Our boy will look after it more closely hereafter. If necessary he will sit on it to keep it down. If by any chance, the strap does get loose, as in the latest instance, may Mellish Spy or Elmer C. it.

Last week's paper had a good picture of Joseph Pratt, one of the very oldest citizens of Worcester and also one of Tyler Newton, so long its High School Janitor. Those who do not keep these papers in mind lose some thing of current interest.

LIGHT has many pictures today, Davis made the photograph of Adam's picture; F. H.
Rice those of Daniels and Ellis and Underwood that of the Rev. John Galbraith.

For the photo. of Lt. Gov. Jones LIGHT is under obligations to J. Stewart Brown, a sergeant in the Old Sixth.

About Folks.

At a special meeting of the Worcester Art Society, held in the lecture room of the new Public Library building, Mr. Frederic P. Vinton read an instructive essay on "Impressionism in Art."

In speaking of his friend Sargent, the portrait painter, he accidentally said that he considered his portrait of Mrs. Edward L. Davis and her son the finest, painted in modern times.

After the meeting many of the members visited the loan exhibition of portraits. Mrs.
Dr. Merriman's essay on "Portraits and Portraiture," having been printed, was distributed gratuitously among the members.

H. L. Dadmun will be a member of the Manhattan Athletic Club team which will make a trip to Europe this summer.

When Lawyer Chas. H. Wood's daughter,
Florence, stuck to her saddle, last Tuesday afternoon, notwithstanding the antics of her steed, a Shetland pony, she exhibited a deal of native mettle. Nine times out of ten it is better to hang on than to try to get off from a runaway. Miss Florence will, doubtless, be able to look out for herself.

Tuesday, Principal Jackson of the Woodland Street School went to Rhode Island to attend the funeral of an uncle.

Rev. H. J. White of the Pleasant Street
Baptist Church returned from New York yesterday much improved by his stay there. He is in time for the dedication, Tuesday next.

Mr. Eugene A. O'Connor, our popular vocalist, seems to have struck a responsive chord in Westboro, for Wednesday evening he was given a big reception there in the Town Hall.
Light joins in congratulations.

Alexander H. Bullock and Geo. H. Knowlton, two boys from Mr. Datzell's School have entered for the inter-scholastic tournament, to be held on the Harvard College courts, Saturday, May 2d.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

Miss Pauline Hall is a great favorite. She will be seen to great advantage at the Worcester Theatre Monday and Tuesday, April 20 and 21, in two operas, "Erminie" and "Amori-ta." She more than meets the popular expectation; she triumphs at once. She is handsome and graceful, sings well, dresses gorgeously, but in good taste, and is, in short, a fine artiste. Miss Hall has selected two roles that are admirably suited to her broad and dashing style, her remarkable personality being one of the principal charms of her performance. The supporting company is an excellent one and the chorus is far above the average, and in all departments the organization is well equipped.

The special engagement of Mr. E. H. Sothern at the Worcester Theater is announced for Friday and Saturday evenings and Saturday matinee, April 24 and 25. Mr. Sothern will produce "The Maister of Woodbarrow" a play full of pathos and humor, which is an interesting story of country life in England.
The appearance in this city of this distinguished and talented actor is always looked forward to as an important society as well as theatrical event. Mr. Sothern deserves well the success he has attained in his chosen profession, as he has proven himself a studious and painstaking artist, portraying his character to the life, showing joys and sorrows which "human flesh is heir to." A few more Sotherns and less Langtry's, Patten and Carters would be a joyful welcome to American theatergoers.

"Evangeline," with the mirth-provoking
"Lone Fisherman," attracted a crowded house
Wednesday evening.

"Ship Ahoy!" drew good houses at the theater Thursday and Friday evenings. This popular operatic force would still be on the boards of the Park Theater, Boston but for engagements which could no longer be held off. Its success both in Boston and in the large cities in New England has been great and could not be wondered at, for it is one continued laugh from the rise to the fall of the curtain. The music is pretty and the songs and dances were rendered in an excellent manner. The last performances will be given this afternoon and evening.

The last of the Salem Street Church course of entertainments will be given at the church next Tuesday evening. It will consist of a lecture by B. D. Allen on the works of Beethoven, with vocal and instrumental selections from the composer's productions, which will be performed by Mrs. F. W. Ruggles, Miss E. G. Whittemore and Miss M. L. Starr. To all students of music and lovers of Beethoven this lecture cannot fail to be very interesting and instructive. Mr. Allen's lectures on other composers have been very highly appreciated by the favored few who have been able to hear them. This one promises to be as good as the rest. The illustrations given will include a Pastoral Sonata, songs to poems of Goethe, Grand Sonata, dedicated to Count
Waldstein, Song of the Quail and Overture to Prometheus. Although such a subject with such a lecturer would probably draw a full house at a high price yet the admission fee has been placed very low that all may be able to attend.

Hope it's So.

Whether true or not, the report that Mr.
Wm. T. Carroll of 13 Sever Street is prospectively a sharer in an immense fortune, accrued from a sum left by Isaac Phillips, early in the century, gives his friends lots of pleasure.
LIGHT doesn't happen to think of any one more worthy of such luck than Mr. Carroll and his family. May there be "millions in it."

Church Notes.

BAPTIST.

The auditorium of the new Pleasant Street Baptist Church was opened to the public for the first time Tuesday evening when an organ concert was given to show the qualities of the new organ. Geo. H. Ryder, the builder of the instrument, was the organist and he was assisted by the Weber Male Quartet, consisting of W. F. Little, J. A. Brennan, J. A. Cafferty, Chas. I. Rice, and Miss Grace Gabriel, reader.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A Colonial tea will be given at Park Church next Tuesday evening between six and eight o'clock. At eight a concert will be given by "Ye Big Quire." The selections will include a "Lyte of Sacred, Likewise Wordly Songs."

Dr. McCullagh will preach the second of the series of sermons on the book of Esther, tomorrow evening at Plymouth Church.

The semi-annual meeting of the Women's Home Missionary Association will be held in Plymouth Church next Wednesday. The sessions are from 19 30 to 10 30 and from 2 to 4. At 1.30 there will be a half hour devotional meeting led by Mrs. C. L. Goodell. Two new features will be introduced at this meeting, viz., the hour from two to three is given to the children in the hope of quickening their missionary zeal and also of helping older people in directing children's circles and there will be a series of five minute speeches, setting forth the methods of work which obtain in as many different auxiliaries. Addresses will be given by Miss Lucy Wheelock, Mrs. James L. Hill, Miss Helen S. Norton, Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, Rev. Wm. G. Puddefoot, Rev. S. S. Mathews, W. A. Duncan, Ph. D. and L. H. Cobb, D. D.

METHODIST.

Laurel Street. The people of this church united in giving Pastor Sanderson and his wife a most rousing reception Thursday night. Tables were set in the vestry and its full capacity was reached. Dr. G. H. Gould asked the Divine Blessing and after thorough justice had been done the viands, C. O. Richardson welcomed the pastor back for the fifth year. Mr. S. feelingly responded. Ex-Mayor Winslow spoke in a pleasant vein as did Dr. Gould, Secretary Gale of the Y. M. C. A., Alfred S. Roe, George R. Kennedy and of the church itself, remarks were made by Messrs. Walker, Townsend, Ray, Hall, Burr and Whitman, also by Mrs. Townsend and Mrs. Moulton. Excellent music was furnished by the quartet of the church choir. This event signalizes the longest single pastorate of any Methodist clergyman in Worcester.

UNIVERSALIST.

The Stone Club of All Souls Church gave a "rag doll" party at Horticultural Hall Monday evening. The "rag dolls" were Misses Sadie Sparrell, Grace Dorman, Mabel Dorman, Grace Houghton, Minnie Upham, Emily Sparrell and Masters Bertie Miller, Freddie Miller, Warren Clark, Willie King, Harold Dyke and Roland Brittain. The party was arranged by Mrs. Henry H. Dyke. After the entertainment dancing was enjoyed until midnight, Bicknell's orchestra furnishing music.

The Chapin Club of the First Universalist Church held its annual meeting and banquet in the church vestry Tuesday evening. The reports of the retiring officers showed the past year to be the most successful in the history of the club. Besides paying its own expenses, it has contributed one hundred dollars to the Sunday School for refurnishing the chapel and has also given fifty dollars to the All Souls' Church to assist in building their new edifice. There are at present 322 members of the Chapin Club, making it probably the largest church club in the city. When the election of officers was announced in order, R.

B. Dodge, who has been president for the past four years, declined a re-election, and Charles F. Davis was elected in his place. The other officers were re-elected as follows: Vice-President, M. Louise Rice; Secretary, L. Lester Chamberlain; Corresponding Secretary, Carrie S. Ward; treasurer, Linus Sibley; historian, C. M. Harrington. After the business meeting the company sat down to an excellent banquet served by Rebboli. The board of trustees of the church and their wives and Rev. F. A. Gray and wife of All Souls' Church were present as invited guests. Following the banquet were the usual order of speeches, Irving E. Comins officiating as toastmaster. He first called upon Charles M. Harrington, who read a very witty history of the club's proceedings during the year. E. I. Comins, chairman of the board of trustees, responded for the board and W. A. Lytle, a member of the board, spoke of the relation of the Chapin Club to the church.

Rev. Mr. Gray responded to the toast "Our Neighbors." Remarks were made by ex-president Dodge, president Davis and Dr. E. D. Fitch, superintendent of the Sunday School and A. E. Newton talked about "The Ladies." Miss Rice read a letter from Rev. M. H. Harris, the late pastor of the church but now of Chicago. The meeting was arranged by a committee, of which Geo. E. Kirby was the chairman. During the business meeting Rev. and Mrs. M. H. Harris were made honorary members for life.

Y. M. C. A.

The 915 meeting tomorrow will be led by Secretary H. L. Gale. At the boys' meeting at three o'clock there will be a special address to boys, singing by the Cecilia Quartet and the new boys' orchestra will play for the first time. At the men's meeting at four there will be an address by one of the local pastors and singing by the Cecilia Quartet.

The monthly meeting of the Association was held Tuesday evening. The report of the religious meetings committee showed that during the past three months forty young men have become interested in religion and twelve have professed conversion. The average attendance at the men's meetings for the past four months has been 330. Interesting reports were also read by the membership and invitation committees. Twenty active members were admitted. After the business had been completed, Rev. A. Z. Conrad gave an entertaining address. Light refreshments were served.

Sometime in May a banquet will be given in the gymnasium to the gymnasium members. All members who think they can attend are requested to leave their names at the Association office.

The arrangements for the outdoor work will be completed as soon as possible.

The gymnasium committee have under consideration a prominent medical man of New York, for the position of physical director. The final decision will be made. On Secretary Gale's return from the International convention at Kansas City.

Part of the game tables have been removed to the junior department and the room formerly used as the game room will be used hereafter as a part of the reading room.

The Women's Auxiliary elected officers last Friday as follows: President, Mrs. Geo. C. Whitney; vice presidents, Mrs. C. F. Rugg, Mrs. Albert Bryant, Mrs. C. E. Stevens, Mrs. L. C. Stewardson, Mrs. M. M. Townsend; treasurer, Mrs. Mary F. Fuller. A constitution was adopted.

The Association base ball team has been made up as follows: Niland, pitcher; Sibley, short stop and captain; Stone, right field; McMurray, third base; Fuller, center field; Whipple, left field; Shay, first base; Zaeder, second base; Gallagher, substitute; Moulton, catcher; Partridge, third base; Anderson, catcher. It is doubtful if Bliss' field can be used and if it cannot the prospects for base ball are dubious.

The committee on the Association base ball league will meet Monday evening.

MILLBURY LETTER.

Dea. Cyrus White, probably the oldest citizen of Millbury, reached his ninetieth birthday April 10th. He has been a resident of this town seventy-four years, having been born in Uxbridge and having resided there until sixteen years of age. Deacon White is a prominent member and deacon of the Baptist Church and the oldest Mason in this vicinity, having joined Olive Branch Lodge F. and A. M., Feb. 16, 1825. On his ninetieth anniversary many members of the Baptist Church, Masonic Lodge and citizens of the town generally, called upon the deacon to offer their congratulations. He is still active and has occupied some of his time this spring sawing cord wood and trimming his apple trees. His fellow townsmen hope to assist in celebrating a good many more of his birthday anniversaries.

Rev. A. R. Buckingham has been returned to the Methodist Church in this town for another year, by the conference held in Lynn.

Rev. Geo. A. Putnam of the 1st Cong'l Church and Rev. A. M. Crane of the Baptist Church exchanged pulpits last Sunday morning.

The Association of Ministers connected with the Worcester South Conference of Cong'l Churches, met Tuesday with Rev. Geo. A. Putnam of this town. Eight of the ten pastors were present.

Dea. O. H. Waters entertained the past, present and future members of his Sunday school class at his residence Tuesday evening. The thirty people present pronounced it an exceedingly pleasant occasion. The first part of the evening was occupied with a flower and conundrum party, prizes being given in each. Then there was singing by the company, which one gentleman refused to join because he was afraid there were prizes connected with that, too, and he was afraid he should get the booby. Then Miss Nellie Broadbent sang a solo, which, as is always the case when this lady sings, was greatly enjoyed. The crowning triumph of the evening was a Jack Horner pie. While Miss Broadbent sang the ditty, "Little Jack Horner," Dea. Waters bore into the parlors a mammoth pie containing a plum for each guest and each plum accompanied by an original verse. After the plums had been distributed, the guests, in turn, read the verses they had received, many of which were very funny in their application. We will give only one. A young lady who received a paper cutter found this verse with it:

The leaves of "LIGHT" are cut, I know,
But there are other leaves
Whose contents you can ne'er peruse
Unless a paper knife you use.

Conversation and refreshments filled up an exceedingly successful evening of sociability.

An Intruder.

Quite a little excitement was aroused last Tuesday night, April 7, on King street by the appearance of an unknown man, who hung around the houses, peeping in at the windows and trying to frighten the ladies. He even went so far as to approach and speak to a certain young lady, who called for assistance and the intruder fled. The gentleman living next door procured the gun, is a student at Clark University and it is thought by the residents that the intruder was looking for him. (True.)

One cup of sugar, two eggs, one cup of flour, one cup of cold boiled oatmeal, one teaspoonful of soda, two of cream tartar, a little salt, one tablespoonful of butter; roll thin and bake in a quick oven.

The Chatham Athletic Club.

During the past three years this name has become very well known not only in Worcester but throughout the country as well. Organized for the purpose of promoting physical culture among its members, it has probably accomplished more in that direction than any similar club in this city.

In looking about among the athletic associations of the country, it is found that nearly all, which have any wide reputation, have a backing of wealthy men and possess fine buildings. Many of them offer special inducements for prominent athletes to join their ranks and secure their fame in this way. It is also noticed that many of the members are middle aged. But this is not so with the Chatham Club. All the members are young men, probably one half not yet having attained their majority. They have grown up with the club, making their reputation by their own work. Until within about six months the club has not even had rooms of its own, the meetings being held principally at the home of Mr. Geo. A. Davis at Hotel Adams. The excellent gymnasium of the Young Men's Christian Association has provided the members with a place for exercise in the winter and the ample fields and lakes about the city have furnished plenty of space for outdoor sports, of which the young men have not been slow to avail themselves.

A considerable part of the money which the club has had was earned at the two tournaments which have been given in the Rink. The amount thus realized has been sufficient to pay nearly all the expenses. Thus, this club, without any great expense, has won a reputation which might well be envied by older and richer organizations.

But the best result accomplished is the developing of new material. If the club were to continue to live it would become more noted than ever, for the members are now becoming old enough to compete successfully with the larger clubs. However, as most of the Chathams will become members of the Worcester Club, the latter will reap the benefit. The Chathams have made it possible for the Worcester to start in at a good pace.

The Chatham Club was originally the outgrowth of a base ball team which bore the same name. This ball team, as well as the one supported by the club later, had the reputation of being the best amateur club in this section. In fact, for several years, it was not beaten in a single game. Some of those who belonged to the old ball team were H. A. Adams, J. H. Adams, W. A. McAleer, Fred H. Daniels, Stanley C. Brennan, J. Melanefy, T. H. Callery, W. H. Fuller, E. L. Scarle, E. W. Kinsley, Eugene Whipple and L. T. Child.

The first meeting to form the Athletic Association was held in September, 1888 at Hotel Adams. The first officers were: President, G. Stewart Dickinson; vice president, W. A. McAleer; secretary and treasurer, George A. Davis. These officers held their position for a year. During the first year the club did not undertake any games of its own, save a cross country run. But tournaments were held by other athletic organizations, in which the Chatham boys competed and it was not long before the blue Maltese cross, the Chatham emblem, began to make a name. The cross country run, which took place in the fall of 1888, was very successful.

The club has held three athletic meetings, one outdoors and two indoors. The outdoor meeting took place Oct. 5, 1889 at Agricultural Park. The events were nearly all handicap and the entries were limited to members. As all the leading amateurs of the city were then wearers of the blue cross it is needless to say that the sport was exciting and the records good.

The first indoor meeting was held at the Rink November 19, 1889. The events were open to all. A large delegation of Boston athletes was present and exhibition work was given by Thomas P. Conneff, champion amateur distance runner of the world and Ed. D. Lange ex-champion amateur walker of America. In the current issue of the Manhattan Athletic Club paper, considerable space was given to an account of the tournament, especial mention being made of the excellent management.

The second tournament was held November 21 1890. Again Boston sent up a large number of crack athletes but the Chathams won a good share of the prizes. On this occasion A. B. George, champion mile runner of the world ran an exhibition race with E. A. Taylor and H. L. Dadmun.

These two tournaments have been the best conducted, the most largely attended and the most successful in every way of any ever held in the rink. The fact that they have been about the only ones held in the rink which were attended by ladies testifies to the high standard which the club maintained.

But considerable of the fame which the Chathams have won outside of Worcester is due to the individual work of the members. Although some who have belonged to other organizations have not always competed as Chathams, yet the club is justifiable in claiming a share of the honor. We have not the space to give more than a brief mention of the individual work. The one to whom we should naturally turn first as the most prominent is Harry L. Dadmun. He began his athletic experience in the sports held semi-annually by the High School Athletic Association. Since then he has been a continual winner in all kinds of running until last fall, when he won the distinction of being the champion amateur half-mile runner of America. He is a member of the Manhattans and nearly always wears the cherry diamond in his races.

The Chathams have been well supplied with runners. W. H. Allison is a distance runner of considerable repute, having won races in Boston and New York. Geo. Lackey is probably the fastest amateur sprinter in the city. C. A. Poland has won a number of mile races. E. A. Taylor has been a prominent runner for several years. He has excellent records in the half and quarter mile.

H. C. Quackenboss, also a member of the Manhattans, had few equals in the shorter dashes. E. J. Peck, Jr., has been quite prominent as a mile runner and also as a member of the Chatham bean-pot team. F. H. Ellis has captured first prizes in all the long distance races for some time.

The Chatham bean-pot team, which consisted of Ellis, Holman, Allison and Peck has made the best record ever made in the Rink, having run two miles in 8 minutes and 24½ seconds.

In base ball the Chathams have been very successful. As stated before, they supported the best amateur team in this section. They have won nearly all the games they have played, defeating such teams as the Holy Cross College nine.

Those who have been most active on the team are H. A. Adams, F. J. Zaeder, H. C. Quackenboss, T. H. Callery, E. L. Rice, T. H. Rice, C. E. Chamberlain, Ed. Hayes, J. Melanefy, W. H. Partridge, E. W. Kinsley, E. A. Denny, Wm. McAleer, J. H. Adams.

Other branches of sports have been engaged in by the members with varying degrees of success.

Rowing has attracted some and in one case, that of A. L. Bennett, the result has been that the Chathams possess another champion. We will say more of him further on.

On our first page this week we have the portraits of five representative Chatham men. They are not necessarily the best athletes of the club, for others equally or nearly as good could be picked out. They are simply men who have taken an especially active part in the work of the club and who are among the leaders in the different branches of athletics.

To Harry A. Adams, the president of the club, is due great credit for the efficient manner in which he has managed its affairs. Elected president in September, 1889, he has held the office ever since. He was identified with the Chathams from the beginning, being a member of the original ball team. In fact base ball is his favorite sport and he has an extensive reputation as a catcher and second base man. He has been either captain or manager of the Chatham team ever since the organization of the athletic club. That the team has had the success it has is due in a great measure to the excellent management by its captain, for, while no captain can make a team succeed without good players, yet neither can the best team succeed without an efficient manager at the head.

Aside from base ball Mr. Adams also takes considerable interest in rowing. He is a member of the Lakeside Boat Club and is the owner of three silver cups which he has won in the regattas held by that club. He has also several prizes won in walking matches. Since the club joined the Union he has taken quite a prominent part in the affairs of that body. He is a charter member and also captain of the Worcester Athletic Club. Mr. Adams is twenty-two years old, weighs in athletic costume 168 pounds and is five feet eleven inches in height.

Stanley C. Brennan is the champion pole vaulter of the city. While his best public record is 9 feet 10 inches, he has vaulted over ten feet. In the high jump he has a record of 5 feet 6 inches, outdoors and one inch less indoors.

He holds the record of the city for the hop, step and jump, his best distance being 41 feet 6 inches. In practice he has been over 42 feet. He began early to take an interest in athletics showing promise, while at the Winslow Street School, of future ability. He possesses ten medals, two cups and innumerable smaller prizes, such as badges, athletic suits, etc. Mr. Brennan is nineteen years old, is five feet seven inches high and weighs (actual weight) 140 pounds. He is a member of the new Worcester Club.

Albert L. Bennett is the champion junior amateur sculler of America. He obtained this title by winning the junior race at Lake Quinsigamond, August 14, 1890. Although he competed as a member of the Worcester Boat Club yet he is also a Chatham man. He is the youngest man who has ever won a sculling championship, being but nineteen years old at the time. Bennett is also a good all around athlete. He has taken part in hurdling, sprinting and bean-pot races. He is also an expert swimmer. He has won seven medals, a beautiful silk banner and many smaller prizes. During the past winter he won an exhibition race given on Kerns' rowing machines. Bennett will commence training immediately for the races which will take place at Lawrence, June 17. He also intends to do a little in bicycle racing this season. As said before, he is quite young, being now twenty years old. His height is 5 feet 7 inches and his weight, 138 pounds.

Fred H. Daniels is without a doubt the best all around gymnast in the city. Like Mr. Brennan he began his athletic career in the Winslow Street School. Later he was a frequent winner in the sports of the High School Athletic Association. When the Young Men's Christian Association gymnasium was opened he became a member and he has been one of the most prominent figures on the floor ever since. He has never competed in an event in which he has not won a prize. His ability as a tumbler has created a demand for his services for exhibition work, his most notable performances in this line being in connection with the Dixie Minstrels' concerts. For prizes he exhibits two cups, ten medals, besides running shoes, athletic suits, etc. He is a sprinter of considerable ability as well as a jumper. He is nineteen years old and weighs 137 pounds. His height is 5 feet 7 inches.

F. H. Ellis is the champion distance runner of Worcester. His favorite distance is two miles and his best time for that distance is 10 minutes 23 seconds. His style of running is particularly good. He has won a prize in every scratch race in which he has competed, and his trophies consisting of three watches, eight medals, a silver cup and smaller prizes. Ellis is twenty-one years old, is 5 feet 6 inches high and weighs 111. He intends to continue distance running and will commence out-door practice as soon as possible. At present he is a member of no club besides the Chathams.

The following list of those who have been members of the Chathams is as near complete as we could make it. It will be seen that it includes nearly all who have taken an active part in athletic sports during the time the club lived.

- |                    |                  |
|--------------------|------------------|
| Anson W. Adams     | Harry A. Adams   |
| J. H. Adams        | F. Ager          |
| G. E. Allison      | W. H. Allison    |
| Stanley C. Brennan | A. L. Bennett    |
| I. M. Burdett      | E. C. Belknap    |
| H. A. Billings     | C. Bonney        |
| Walter Burbank     | Herbert R. Black |
| Harry Banfield     | F. J. Bowman     |
| Walter D. Berry    | F. E. Bradford   |
| John D. Baldwin    | J. G. Colles     |
| F. G. Curtis       | A. S. Cook       |
| Louis C. Chase     | A. V. Coulson    |

- |                  |                     |
|------------------|---------------------|
| C. E. Chamberlin | L. T. Child         |
| Frederic Coulson | Wm. D. Clegg        |
| T. H. Callery    | G. Stuart Dickinson |
| Geo. A. Davis    | Fred H. Daniels     |
| E. H. Delano     | Harry L. Dadmun     |
| H. W. Doe        | Charles B. Earle    |
| F. H. Ellis      | W. H. Fuller        |
| F. A. Farrer     | R. L. Fuller        |
| George Foley     | Elmer H. Fish       |
| R. E. Howard     | W. A. Howe          |
| S. S. Howe       | Ralph H. Holman     |
| Ed. Hayes        | E. W. Kinsley       |
| A. D. Kimball    | F. M. Knowlton      |
| A. Knight        | F. A. C. Kelley     |
| Geo. A. Lackey   | A. S. Longley       |
| C. R. Landry     | R. B. Loynd         |
| H. C. Lakin      | W. A. McAleer       |
| J. C. Mellor     | Fred A. Morse       |
| F. McMurray      | J. Melanefy         |
| C. A. Norman     | C. E. Putnam        |
| E. L. Powers     | A. W. Pratt         |
| C. A. Poland     | W. H. Plummer       |
| E. J. Peck, Jr.  | F. S. Piece         |
| W. H. Partridge  | H. C. Quackenbush   |
| Louis W. Rawson  | P. J. Rice          |
| E. L. Rice       | T. H. Rice          |
| Ernest Russell   | J. H. Sullivan      |
| Arthur C. Scott  | Charles Stearns     |
| W. D. Smith      | C. Spiers           |
| H. H. Sibley     | E. L. Searle        |
| E. A. Taylor     | Charles Vaill       |
| F. L. Vaughn     | J. H. Wallace       |
| H. A. Warren     | F. W. Washburn      |
| G. H. Willson    | E. W. Woodhead      |
| Guy C. Whidden   | E. B. Whipple       |
| A. L. Warren     | Henry Wood          |
|                  | F. J. Zaeder.       |

The Sixth Regiment

In Baltimore, April 19, 1861.

[From an unpublished address.]

"The stay, however, is brief and soon our soldiers are receiving the hearty greetings of New Jersey, through whose entire length the loyal people are alive to the strife that is impending. Evening finds them in Philadelphia, but the long roll at one o'clock the next morn rouses them from the first rest they had in two days. A proper caution demands that they pass through Baltimore early in the day. Preceded by a pilot engine, to make sure of a clear track they make their way to the monumental city. Though they arrive at 10 a. m. they are not early enough to escape the attack of a traitorous populace. What strange decree of fate was it that ordered the association of the name of Massachusetts for a third time with the Nineteenth of April? Just eighty-six years before, the ancestors of these very men were resisting British tyranny at Concord and Lexington, and eighty-six years before that, in 1689, still earlier ancestors were consigning that arch tyrant, Sir Edmund Andros, to a British man of War, having driven him from his place of authority in Boston. These were the men to follow Colonel Jones, at any cost, through the city whose brutal roughs had said that no Massachusetts soldier should go through alive. Four companies are detached and find it necessary to march. Timothy Crowley bears the colors. He walks as steadily, as proudly as though he were on parade. It is the same stand that Col. Jones had sworn should never be disgraced and there was not a man behind it who would not have died rather than that the commander should break his word. Capt. Follansbee has command of the Battalion. A howling mob, composed of the worst elements of humanity, closes in upon the column. Every epithet that native and acquired depravity could suggest are applied to the soldiers. Stones, bricks, everything that can be thrown, are hurled at the forms of the marching men. At last, forbearance is no longer a virtue. Massachusetts uses the guns provided for punishing her foes and proves to all the insulting throng that she can both pray and fight. A thousand rounds of ammunition are used in this desperate march and when the Washington station is reached there are less men in Baltimore to cheer for Jeff. Davis than when the morning dawned. After long halts and vexatious delays, the Capitol is reached and late at night, the Sixth Regiment, stacks arms in the Nation's Senate Chamber. Massachusetts is the first to interpose her presence between the Government and her assailants."

Of this regiment, that was first to feel the force of savage war, there are today 481 survivors. Distributed as follows: Field and Staff, 3; Non Commissioned Staff, 3; Band 9; Co. A, 36; B, 45; C, 37; D, 34; E, 36; F, 38; G, 76; H, 38; I, 36; K, 40; L, 48. These data are from the Regimental Secretary, D. C. Sisson and he also reports that there are sixty-nine comrades whose addresses cannot be found. Very likely some, thus borne along as living, have already answered the roll call on the other side. Whatever repute other regiments from Massachusetts gained during the struggle, the name of this militia organization is better known than that of any other in the Commonwealth. After the three months' service, the Sixth went out again for nine months and yet a third time for a hundred days. There were, in all, when mustered for the Baltimore fray seven hundred forty-seven men. Our Worcester Company was considerably the largest, having one hundred and two officers and men. With the exception of twelve, all were Worcester residents. Of these fifty-five went into other regiments and won honor and in some cases, immortality! It is not a little noteworthy that every commissioned officer, every sergeant and two corporals became officers of higher grade in the Volunteer service.

Survivors of the Worcester Light Infantry Co. G of the Sixth who made the march through Baltimore, April 19, 1861.

Lieut. George W. Prouty, West Sutton, Mass., Gentleman; Lieut. Thomas S. Washburn, Fitchburg, Mass., moulder; Lieut. J. Waldo Denny, Custom House, Boston, clerk; Sergt. John A. Lovell, Worcester, Mass., builder; Sergt. J. Stewart Brown, Worcester Mass., Treas. Five Cents Savings Bank; Sergt. Chas. H. Stratton, Lynn, Mass., shoe maker; Corp., Joel H. Prouty, Auburn, Mass., pattern maker; Corp. Wm. H. Hobbs, Worcester, Mass., assistant examiner of titles; Privates—J. W. Bacon, Worcester, Mass., letter carrier; A. S. Badger, New Orleans, La., appraiser in custom house; D. H. Ball, Old Boylston, Mass., unknown; Thomas E. Ballard, Boston, Mass., letter carrier; Henry Bemis, Lynn, Mass., shoemaker; R. M. Brainard, Belchertown, Mass., farmer; Joseph L. Brown, Worcester, Mass., house painter; John Calligan, Boston, Mass., employed in B. & A. freight yard; E. A. Campbell, Worcester, Mass., at E. T. Smith & Co's.; Geo. H. Conklin, Worcester, Mass., Worcester Corset Co.; Wm. Connor, Stevens Point, Wisconsin, unknown; Marcus Curtis, Worcester, Mass., boot treer; J. B. Dennis,

Yankton, Da., tin-smith; Joseph M. Dyson, Worcester, Mass., inspector of buildings; Luke T. Drury, Chicago, Ill., traveling salesman; R. A. Hacker, Boulder City, Col., builder; E. S. Hay, Lynn, Mass., shoe maker; Henry Hardy, Lancaster, Mass., unknown; H. R. Haven, Bridgton, N. J., cabinet maker; Geo. A. Houghton, New York City, unknown; John Henry, Worcester, Mass., machinist; Church Howe, Lincoln, Nebraska, unknown; S. O. La Forest, Boston, Mass., unknown; H. H. Lawrence, Westboro, Mass., farmer; John T. Methven, Boston, Mass., machinist; E. B. Perry, Mt. Vernon, N. Y., wire drawer; E. M. Rice, Worcester, Mass., painter; J. O. Rice, Charlestown, Mass., machinist; Calvin Riggs, Worcester, Mass., blacksmith; Jas. D. Shaw, Worcester, Mass., assistant engineer Wor-

F. D.; Thomas Talbott, Worcester, Mass., assessor; John Tould, Boston, Mass., Journal Office; Charles P. Trumbull, Beverly, Mass., Custom House; Wm. H. Valentine, Lowell, Mass., musician; C. E. Whipple, Toledo, Ohio, engineer; A. J. Whitcomb, Lowell, Mass., painter; Daniel Wilkins, Worcester, Mass., clerk; James Wilkins, Worcester, Mass., conductor B. & M. R. R.; C. H. Wilson, Sawyer's Mills, Boylston, painter; Ira Woodcock, Worcester, Mass., carpenter; J. Wallace Woodward, Worcester, Mass., machinist; Fred Weigan, Lexington, Ky., wood turner; Edward C. Capron, Daton, Ky., unknown; Edward Stalhuth, Baltimore, Md., unknown; S. E. Young, Mitenague, Mass., unknown; John Emerson, South Boston, Mass., blacksmith.

LT.-GOV. EDWARD F. JONES, OF BINGHAMTON, N. Y.,
Colonel of 6th M. V. M., April 19, 1861.

Lt. Governor Edward F. Jones.

Worcester is honored today in the presence of the survivors of the Old Sixth Regiment and in entertaining the Lt. Governor of the Empire State, but whose claim to future renown will be the fact that he was the Colonel of the Sixth Massachusetts Regiment when it marched through Baltimore.

In Hanson's History of the Regiment, we learn that Colonel Jones was from Pepperell, the town which gave Col. Prescott to Bunker Hill, and that he was an inventor of note before war sounded its alarms. In those days his name was associated with the ratchet wheel which raised or lower the wick in a kerosene lamp. He became the commander of the Sixth in 1857, so he was well acquainted with his men when the demand for their services came. He was then thirty-three years old, having a good military face and figure. In a group of the field and staff officers in 1861, appears the face of his very pretty daughter, then called the child of the regiment. Today, she must be the staid matron of middle age.

After the return of the Sixth, Colonel Jones enlisted in the 26th, one of the three years' regiments; but he served only to July, 1862. Since the war, his home has been Binghamton, New York, where he is noted for his advertising of weighing scales and for his advertising squib, "Jones, he pays the freight."

When Governor Cleveland was promoted and David B. Hill went for the vacant chair in Albany, his associate in the canvass was our noted Colonel of the Sixth. He was elected and when, a second time, Gov. Hill sought the executive office, he was again accompanied by our Colonel as lieutenant. If now Gov. Hill would get out of the way having been elected U. S. Senator, or if Colonel Jones had that Scriptural faith so that he could say unto this Hill "Be thou removed and cast into the sea" (would that he had) he might be Governor today. At any rate, if New York's next governor is a Democrat, it looks as though Massachusetts must have had something to do with his origin. Keep your hat on Governor! We doff ours to you.

Send Them Home Tenderly. *

In their martial robes arrayed,
With cap, and cloak, and shining blade,
In the still coffin softly laid,

Oh send them tenderly.
Our bleeding country's gallant corps
Of noble dead can sleep no more,
Where monuments at Baltimore,

Libel our Liberty.

Oh, touch them tenderly, I pray,
And softly wipe the blood away
From the red lips of wounds, that say,
"How sweet it is to die

For one's dear country, at a time
Coincidences crown, with subtime
Associations, deeds that chime
In human history!"

Deal gently with the pale, cold dead,
For Massachusetts bows her head,
But not with shame; her eyes are red
With weeping for the slain.

Like Rachel, she is sad indeed;
And long her broken heart will bleed,
For children true in word and deed,
She cannot meet again.

Whisper no word of treason when
Ye bear away our bravest men
From the foul traitor's den,
Red with our brother's blood;
A spot that must forever be,
Like Sodom sunk beneath the sea,
It sinks in coward treachery,
Unwept beneath the flood.

Lift up each gallant son of Mars,
And shroud him in the flag of stars,
Beneath whose folds he won the scars
Through which his spirit fled
From glory here, to glory where
The banner blue in fields of air
Is bright with stars forever there,
Without the stripes of red.

*Gov. Andrew's dispatch to the Mayor of Baltimore.

How's This?

On Dit that a certain tenement in Worcester has been vacant for three months and if you were to guess for a week you couldn't tell why. A certain scientific gentleman secured board and lodgings with one of the families resident there. Nature, apparently, frowned upon his birth for his face would indicate only a little progress from the primordal ape. The other family claimed that his presence soured their milk and stopped the clock and they moved out. Lots of folks have looked the tenement over and expressed a willingness to hire till they saw the boarder, then they left in a hurry and did not return. The outcome is watched with no little interest.

Judge John Hopkins will be tendered a banquet next Wednesday at the Bay State House by the County bar association.

Indian Territory Letter.

TAHLEQUAH, I. T., April, 3, 1891.

It is sometime since our ride from Muscogee to the Cherokee capital, which brought us within sight of this city, for it is visible from all directions, being surrounded by hills and built on them. Two buildings attract the attention, one the National Male Seminary, which we pass, the other, a very attractive, neat structure, the Female Seminary; both are now closed on account of an empty treasury, so we must forego the pleasure of visiting these institutions at present.

A school of more modest proportions which will well repay a visit is the Presbyterian Mission School. The homelike, orderly house and grounds, the refined and educated teachers whose influence is clearly seen upon the twenty or more neatly dressed, well-behaved Indian girls; these are an object lesson worthy of study to one who desires to see what can be done with Indians. There are also a Baptist Mission School and a public day school in Tahlequah, but we must hasten on.

As we turn into the Main street, we must pass a large wooden building, the new Masonic Hall. The hotels are two in number, not as attractive nor so large as that in Muscogee. There are two drug stores, a market, blacksmith shop, and several "variety" stores, the largest adding to its attractions one of much importance to us who are far from friends, the Post Office.

The population is well represented at mid-hour, while each store has at all hours the usual number of "gentlemen of leisure;" some Cherokees with long hair and hunting-shirts (bright colored jackets, woven and made by the Indian women) all with hands in their pockets, broad sombreros, high-heeled boots ornamented in many cases by jingling spurs. How a man can walk in these boots is a perpetual wonder, but they are a source of much pride to their possessors.

Suddenly we see a mounted company approaching, all armed save one, who proves to be a prisoner with his guard; quite a formidable array. In this country, a criminal is not imprisoned until his trial, even if arrested for murder; under a guard, varying in number to "fit the crime," is boarded at some farm at the Nation's cost. He is allowed to go whither he will, but always with his guard. A prisoner stationed near us some time since, brought his guard to church services quite regularly—whether they would or no. One gain from this system is the avoided danger of imprisoning, for months, an innocent man. The prison is not far from the main street, a square stone edifice.

Perhaps as you sit in your wagon a sudden shaking reminds you of an earth-quake, but do not be alarmed; it is only a member of the scavenger department, scratching its back on your wheel, a porker of dark and dingy hue, of more size than beauty, built somewhat on the plan of the pig drawn with your eyes shut, familiar to you all, with a remarkably long snout and straight tail. But its numerous progeny, trotting along behind with shrill squeals, or stopping to stare at the new-comer, are decidedly cute,—if they would only stay small!

Pigs, like cattle, are branded and left to follow their own sweet (?) will, and the town streets prove very inviting to them. The country regiment of scavengers is recruited by armies of buzzards, that scent their prey from a great distance. But birds of more beauty are making the air sweet with their songs on these bright, Spring days, and they are eagerly watched as they flit about with their gay coats of red, green, blue or gold. The prairies and woods are bright with flowers, anemones, buttercups, spring beauties, blood-root, dog-tooth violets, in great abundance.

But we have wandered from Tahlequah and its sights, tempted by the beauties of Spring. Let us return, and tie our team at the capitol fence, the general hitching place, and enter the enclosure where stands the square brick two-story building, costing $20,000, the capitol. Here the council holds its deliberations and hither come the United States commissioners at intervals to treat for the Cherokee strip. There is some talk of a called council this Spring to settle the matter. The most intelligent of the Indians seem to favor the sale to the Government.

"Is this a band-stand in the yard?" you inquire, pointing to a platform near by. Where did you come from not to know that here the Chief stands to deliver his annual message? Band-stand indeed! And here comes this magistrate himself, riding in a buggy. He is a portly man of middle age, showing his Indian blood, but hardly the Indian Chief we read and dreamed of in our youth. The imaginary Chief may be more romantic, but the present Chief Mayes would prove much more agreeable and safe to meet, I ween.

Tahlequah is a city of about one thousand inhabitants, possessing a mayor and marshal. There are four newspapers published here, three in English and one Cherokee and English. It can boast of telegraph and telephone. And soon, (in the words of a western paper) "the iron horse will disport through the valleys and the music of his brazen nostrils will wake the echoes, etc."

Yes, wait about a year and you can come by rail to the heart of this nation, travelling with more comfort, if less novelty, than in the mail-hack. F. H. L.

There are lots of W. H. S. pupils who will enjoy the following from the Telegram.—"The engagement is announced of Joseph Achilles Toupin, formerly of this city, now of Newark, N. J., and Miss Hattie B. Sanders of that city. The wedding will take place in the High street Presbyterian church, Newark, May 6."

A story about Senators Evarts and Hoar has just come out. They were both members of the Senate Committee on the Library. Mr. Hoar is industrious and Mr. Evarts is not so industrious as he might be. He would not do anything that did not appear to be absolutely necessary, and one thing Mr. Hoar came to think that he would never do was to call a meeting of the Library Committee. One day Mr. Hoar, in his querulous way, said to Mr. Evarts: "Look here, Evarts, when you get ready to call a meeting of the Committee on the Library I wish you would be kind enough to notify my executors." Mr. Evarts kept on reading his paper for a moment and then replied in his driest and most deliberate tone: "Nothing will afford me greater pleasure."

Awaiting the Benediction.

The snows have paled
Into opaque mist,
And sunshine falls
Where the shadows kissed.

There is a bird
'Mong the rare, old trees,
But Nature waits
On her bended knees.

Her bowed, gray head—
It has sorrowed much—
Is waiting Spring's
Benediction touch.

Thy fingers stretch
To the waiting earth,
Oh, Summer showers,
Give her flow'rlets birth.

Lift up your eyes,
Oh, you saunt'ring sun,
Yes, let them fall,—
Let the streamlets run.

Now, move your lips,
Oh, you frozen breeze,
Bless the dear earth,
Wake her forest keys.

Thy haste will pay,
Oh, linger not long,
Earth will answer
By a burst of song.

—Helen Worthington Rogers.

On Pearl Street.

We have waited long for the annual, vernal display at No. 58, but this year it comes late. Dr. Woodward has had the crocus bed reset and to that reason, with the deep bank of snow that persisted in remaining long past its day, we must ascribe the unusual dilatoriness of the beautiful flower. It was a specially filial act to have the bed thus worked over, seemingly a memorial of the hearty, open-handed man whose pride this plot was for many a year. We may paint pictures and cut marble slabs, but who shall say that a beautiful bed of flowers is not the most significant reminder of the departed. For more than thirty years have crocuses blossomed in this same spot and remote be the day when they shall cease to remind us of the coming and going of mortality and to suggest faces that have in former years gladdened at their sight.

Flowers of the field, how must ye seem Man's frailty to portray!
Blooming so fair in morning beam,
Passing at eve away;
Teach this, and oh! though brief your reign,
Sweet flowers, ye shall not live in vain.
—Blackwoods.

The Philadelphian Literary Society will hold their second anniversary at Hotel Kenmore, 625 Main St. April 23. There will be a supper followed by Music, Declamations and a Scrub Debate. One of the results of the last reunion was the finding of the Records and List of Members of the Society. The committee hope to hear from all who were ever members of the P. L. S.

Scene in City Hall.

City Clerk with back to the door, leans over the desk talking with a friend. Enter a city officer, who goes into all the rooms, not forgetting the great safe even, obviously looking for something. "Are you looking for me?" said the clerk in his blandest tones. Query, was it a case of Stone blindness when a whole Towne cannot be found?

Books and Bookmen.

It is said that his library is a good one: but he purchased very few of its books. His was a familiar form in a certain book store and he had an eye to all the nicely bound volumes on the shelves. In fact, it sometimes seemed that he cared more for the outside than for the contents of the books. He was ever telling how this or that distinguished man gave to him his life or some book of his writing. Judging from observation, one might suspect that he himself, occasionally, if not oftener, suggested the giving. He was ever telling the merchant of the valuable presents that he had received in a literary way and he was not slow to insinuate that a gift of such a volume would be esteemed a particular favor. "If any of my friends are in here looking for something for me, just point out that book." In a word, the man had a sort of a fondness for books, but he could not bear to lay out a penny in their purchase. He was not without some reminiscence of public men and women; but his patronage was never worth much to the store. Why not adopt a liberal, live and let live policy with the seller of books and thereby insure the perpetuity of a noble profession; for the man to know enough about books to make their sale attractive is worthy the rank of a professor. Years ago, men were bred to it as much as to the law or medicine. He should be honored thus today.

The New England Magazine for April, Boston, $3.00 per year.

It comes a little later than the other monthlies and so has less rivals in its reading. Though we are introduced to a wide discussion of Canadian art and artists and some other articles, foreign to America even are found, yet there is enough of New England matter given to fully warrant its name. In this line, perhaps, the most notable selection is "Hopedale and its Founders." This is very timely, coming, as it does, so soon after the death of Adin Ballou, whose long life was so identified with this almost ideal Massachusetts village. Were it to bear any other name, it should be Draperville. So much have the Draper's father and son done for this offshoot from Milford. New England Winter Birds by Granville B. Putnam is a very instructive compilation, while those not as enthusiastic as Prof. Hosford will welcome Alice L. Clark's, "Where are Vinland and Norumbega." She does not think the Professor's reasoning conclusive. "The United States Patent System" in this April number including the Centennial is very well stated.

Prof. Jameson in No. IV of his series brings to a conclusion his very valuable "History of Historical Writing in America."

The Editors Table is well spread and many will turn to it first. The allusions to the death of General Sherman and to the Delthaven memorial are particularly happy.

Progressive Springfield, April, Clark W. Bryan, & Co. $2.00 per year.

If this beautiful city on the Connecticut is not boomed with success and prominence, it will not be the fault of the above enterprising publisher. This is No. 5 in the first volume, and is a fit follower of excellent predecessors.

In the subject matter, we have more book publishing, a very full and entertaining description of the city's Post Office, with a fine picture of Col. H. M. Phillips, the post-master, The Springfield Hospital, The Bay State Corset Company, and a very elaborate and instructive discussion of the city's venture in Manuel Training. In this matter, Springfield is a long way ahead of Worcester. There is a call for the publication of the Early Records and some well chosen editorials. Progressive Springfield certainly progresses.

Scientific American, Architect and Builder's Edition, April, Munn & Co., 361 Broadway, Corner Franklin Street, New York. $2.50 per year.

If one could only realize all the dreams of the architect in this April number what beautiful homes we might have. It is true that some of them are not excessively expensive; but houses that cost even a few thousand are beyond the reach of many readers of LIGHT. Perhaps the most reasonable design is that of a house costing $2700.00. Of this there are three views besides plans for the two floors. Such a building is perfectly feasible to the man who is paying fifteen or twenty dollars a month rent. By the aid of our Coöperative Banks he could pay for the structure in a few years and thus have a beautiful home of his own. The illustrations and description range upward to the palatial home in the great city. There is a very interesting page of cuts illustrating of English village houses. The publishers will correspond with those desiring full information concerning plans and specifications.

Fenelon's Education of Girls. Translated by Kate Lupton, M. A. From Ginn & Co., Boston, 1891.

From preface to the end there is no word of this book that he who is interested in education can afford to overlook. To begin with, printer and publisher have united in producing a very neat and tasty volume, just such as we like to take in hand, treating as it does on this most practical and living topic. A very good, though brief sketch of Fenelon's Life is found at the beginning and then follows the discussion. Having read Telemache and knowing the somewhat prosaic manner in which the son of Ulysses is made to acquire knowledge we are a little pleased at the practical form the instruction of girls receives at his hands. Possibly the pious Abbé may inculcate a little more religion than teachers of today would deem desirable; but it must be remembered that primarily the writer was a priest and only secondly a teacher. The book is one that will give suggestions to many a pains-taking instructor. It is worthy of a place in all libraries of educational works. The translator has done her work well.

The Cottage Hearth published by the Cottage Hearth Company, Boston, Mass.

An article on the "Home Life of the Eskimo" opens this number, and is followed by a sketch of Mrs. Stanley with a portrait of her. The second chapter of "Dr. Weston's Driver" is full of interest to those who are following the girl who is trying to do for herself. A short story, a chapter on how to earn money at home, the letters, the puzzles, the music both instrumental and vocal, and the pages devoted to the household are all good. The last pages constitute a family cook book of tried and successful receipts. Price $1.50.

"The Pansy." D. Lothrop Company, Boston, Mass. Price $1.00.

Another chapter of "Twenty Minutes Late" takes Caroline to Philadelphia. "The Frisbie School" by Margaret Sidney has a short chapter. Stories on "Temptation," "Such Fun," and "The Exact Truth," with short articles on varied subjects and several poems, make up the principal part of the book. There is a picture of Shakespeare and his Birthplace and a number of full page illustrations. The P. S. Corner will doubtless receive a deal of attention from the many readers of this number.

"A Modern Rosalind," A Story by F. Xavier Calvert. Rand, McNally & Co., Publishers, Chicago and New York.

This is the story of a young girl partially educated abroad, and learning something of men and their ways is disappointed in them and she finally decides to don a man's garb and going into some college find out if all mankind are like those individual cases which she has met. She enters Harvard College and the story is of herself and the men she meets. She finds one true friend with whom she falls in love as he does with her. One of the professors suspects her sex and when he is certain of her secret, he tells her of his love at the same time assuring her that Randal Loring would not care for her a moment after knowing of her masquerade. This frightens her and she leaves the college in haste, and travels for two years when she meets Loring, confesses and tells him who she is, and that the Louis Parrish of college life is the Louise Parrish of today. The book is written in such a way that one thinks in reading it that it might have happened, and forgets that it is fiction till he closes its pages.

Students of French cannot fail to be interested in the "Introduction to Modern French Lyrics" edited by Professor B. L. Bowen of Ohio State University, Columbus, which is soon to be issued by D. C. Heath & Co. This book will comprise a judicious selection of modern lyric poems, supplemented by remarks on the character of the versification and by copious notes. Attention is called to the fact that the representative songs of the Revolution (Marseillaise Ca ira, etc.) are for the first time grouped together here with appropriate annotations explanatory of their origin and import. Twelve of these typical poems are given, with most or all of which the average college student has thus far had little opportunity of becoming familiar. It is believed that this feature of the book will commend itself to general favor. Among the individual authors represented in this collection are Béranger, Victor Hugo, de Musset and Gautier, prominence being given to the first two of these. The notes will cover historical and grammatical points, and will at the same time endeavor to lead the student to a gradual recognition of the principles underlying the development of the language. It is hoped that this book will furnish to teachers of French the means of devoting more attention to lyric poetry than is often at present accorded it.

The popular "Buck" Ewing, captain of the New York's, has written an article for the Boy's Department of the Ladies Home Journal for June, on the "Ins and Outs of Baseball," in which the famous catcher will tell how to play the game; how to form a nine; the hardest positions and how to fill them; how to throw a ball, etc. This is Ewing's first article, and it is said to be the best which has ever been written for boys on the great national game.

Sister Rose Gertrude has written another article for June, on "What it is to be a Leper," in which she gives a clear glimpse of leper-life in Molakai; how the disease is contracted; how it is treated and cured, and how the lepers live in their exile.

It is not every catalogue of Nursery products that is worthy of extended notice but the local enterprise of James Draper is so particularly entertaining and valuable that it must have more than passing mention. In this we have excellent pictures of the home, private and business affairs of Mr. Draper beside a very fine portrait of himself. Beside a very comprehensive list of all plants, fruits and flowers to be found usually, Mr. Draper gives the buyer a deal of historical matter. The pamphlet is a sort of vade mecum for the searcher after horticultural knowledge. The illustrations illustrate, a statement that cannot always be made, as to pictures. Well indexed, finely pointed, the catalogue becomes more than an ephemeral advertisement. Mr. Draper will be happy to send this to any one asking for it. Address, James Draper, Worcester.

There are many taking features in the April Wide Awake, with its frontispiece of White Lilies: "Chollemyisses' Afflicted Holiday," by the author of Cape Cod Folks; "Egg-rolling at the White House" on Easter Monday, by Prof. Mason of the Smithsonian; a quintette of admirable short stories, "The Mysterious Choir Boy," by Henry Kirke White, Jr.; "Hong Wing's Sea Voyage," by Elizabeth Cummings; "The Story of my Bank Book," by Louisa Trumbull Cogswell; "A Lost Story," by Anna Leach and "The Cock of Sebastopol," by M. M. Steele; two Natural History papers, "A Precious Bug," by Amanda B. Harris, and "Concerning Bats," by Grant Allen; an exquisite Mother-Song by Mrs. Mary E. Blake and a Tuscan "Stornelli," by Mrs. Cavazza with a beautiful picture by Irving R. Wiles; an outspoken Margaret-Patty Letter, by Mrs. William Clafin, and no end of articles, pictures and poems. The serials are captivating this month: "Five Little Peppers Grown Up," by Margaret Sidney; "Cab and Caboose," by Kirk Munroe, and "Marietta's Good Times," by Marietta Ambrosi.

Wide Awake is $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

Willie L. Smith who recently returned from his Colorado engagement left Worcester last Monday for Chicago to enter the employ of the Morrison Bridge Company, as draughtsman. This is the firm that built the famous Vancouver Bridge in Washington, the one at Cairo, and several others along the Mississippi. A classmate at the "Tech.," E. H. Rockwell is already there and the head-man is Emil Gerber, W. P. I. 1876. We are sorry to lose Will but Horace Greeley's advice is still in force,

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

Gus Williams Knocked Out.

A good story is told of Gus Williams, the comedian, in connection with a benefit tendered him in Boston in 1872. The performance was to occur on a Friday evening. Along about Wednesday, John Stetson, who was manager of the theatre where Williams was playing, approached the comedian on the quiet, and said: "Gus, my boy, your friends are to present you with a watch, next Friday evening. I didn't want you to be broken up when they came on the stage with it so I thought I would tell you confidentially what was in the wind. Now you can write up a neat little speech for the occasion, and prepare yourself for the ordeal."

Gus thanked Mr. Stetson heartily. He was pleased with the idea of getting a fine watch. He carried a cheap one, which, however, kept good time, and this he gave away to the property man at once, in order that the presentation committee might see he had no time piece. When he went to his room at the hotel that night he wrote out a very pretty impromptu speech, in which he said that when he gazed at the face of the beautiful watch he would see the faces of his Boston friends; when he saw the hands he would be reminded of the Boston hand of good-fellowship; the spring, when he looked at it, would suggest the well-spring of friendship; the chain would bind him to Boston, etc. It was a neat response, and he studied it carefully. He knew that when he sprung it the whole audience would think him a wonderful extemporaneous speaker, and he shook hands with himself.

The eventful Friday night came at last. The vast house was packed with his enthusiastic friends. At the proper time the presentation committee filed out upon the stage and faced Mr. Williams. The chairman stepped forward and presented him with—a cane. Curtain.

Barry Sullivan.

As this great master of histrionic art is battling with Death, it is not amiss to recall his last and possibly only visit to Worcester. It was fully fifteen years ago and the enterprising manager of our theater had billed the city very fully with the statement that Barry Sullivan would play in Shakespeare's masterpiece, "Richelieu." It was more than possible that the manager had never heard of Bulwer. The evening came and a good house and the Master was just as telling as he would have been had he been properly announced. Mrs. Lillie Wilkinson took the part of Francois and right well did she play it. There must still linger in her memory those words of the Cardinal when he bids the page depart and do his bidding. "But if I fail." "Fail" comes the answer in thrilling tones, "Fail, in the Lexicon of Youth which Fate reserves for a bright manhood, there's no such word as fail!" It was an event to remember.

I do not know
The subtle secrets of the snow,
That hides away the violets,
Till April teaches them to blow.

Enough for me
Their tender loveliness to see,
Assured that little things and large Fulfill God's purpose equally.

—Mary Bradley.

Lost, Yet Saved.

A True Story of an Irish Evangelist.

O the pain a mother suffers
When her dirlings go astray,
And the steps for heaven intended
Learn to wend the hellward way!

One I knew had such a lost one;
Reckless through the livelong day,
And at night he ran the gauntlet,
Slave to wild debauch's sway.

Mother's prayers should be availing,
Mother's tears a son should stay;
Hating them he fled the country,
Breaking heart was hers, that day

Storm and billows wre ked the vessel,
Some were saved, how few were they!
He among 'em—notwithstanding,
He remained "a castaway."

Homeless friendless, b'less, drunken,
In the street how oft he lay;
Kicked from rum shops without mercy,
When he could no longer pay!

Long he sat, one morn in sadness,
In the city's verdant square,
Sorrily on passers gazing,
"Could they dream of his despair?"

In the mall, well drest and smiling,
Children came to taste the air;
Innocent as they was he once,
And as tidy, sweet and fair.

How his mother used to tend him,
In their cosy Erin home!
Hark! the corner church bell's tolling,
And seems s'ying, "Lost soul come!"

"Come, come, come!" it oft repeateth,
And its chime rings through the heart;
"Nay," he gasped, "not me it calleth,
For in prayer I have no part.

"Let them go for whom Christ suffered, (Wiler than these rags I wear
Is the 'oafer life I'm leading.)
What can He for drunkards care?"

Something whispered to his hearing,
(Was it an angel, or a bird?)
"Whosoever" said He "cometh,
Unto me, (t is God's word).

Though like scarlet his transgressions
I will still his Savior be:"
"Bless the lord, the poor man shouted,
Then there's hope for even me!"

Soon he sought a city mission,
Where forlorn ones enter may,
Raged, shivering, conscience stricken,
And heard words that Christ songs say.

One—a song his mother often
Sang at home, now far away;
She was blithe then, never dreaming,
To what end he'd come some day.

Gospel teachings, in that mission,
Led him tremblingly to pray;
And the drunkard rose rejoicing,
Christ had shown the better way.

What a change then, thro' God's mercy,
Came to him—no more astray—
Clean as snow, and others teaching,
Christ to love and God obey.

—Alex. Lovell.

It pays to patronize General Agent Geo. Y. Lancaster, for Railroad and Steamship Tickets and Insurance. Office, 434 Main Street, Worcester.

Edgar L. Davenport will leave the Boston Museum at the close of the present season. He is negotiating for an engagement in New York City.

Van Bibber's Kleptomania.

He Secretes Spoons and Becomes a Terror of Teas.

Mr. Van Bibber and the other men of his particular set were grouped around the club window after luncheon, or breakfast as it happened to be, when Van Bibber said he thought seriously of entering upon a career of crime. Van Bibber was given to making disturbing statements of this sort, which required one to think, even if one did not reply to them, and the other men rather wished he would not.

"For instance," said young Van Bibber, "I went to a dance last night, and the room where you were to put your hat was filled with old silver, little bits of it—snuff boxes and spectacle-cases, and bonbon-boxes and buckles and giroules. The chap had made a collection of them, and had them all lying around loose. I had a good mind to fill my overcoat with half of 'em, and then I thought it would be much more fun to fill every other man's pockets, and wait and see the row. But some one came in and I couldn't do it. Now there are these teas and receptions and days and all that sort of thing that women go to. Why shouldn't I start out some afternoon and sweep the places bare, and melt the silver down and get rich? I might become a sort of Jack the Ripper' or 'Louis the Lifter.' I'll bet," exclaimed Van Bibber, becoming interested in his idea, "that I can go out this afternoon and bring back more than five hundred dollars' worth of silver and bric-à-brac. And I'll do it, too, if any of you have any sporting blood." There was no question as to the men having sporting blood. They jumped at the chance. Van Bibber found not the least difficulty in dividing up his wager among them all.

"But wait," said Travers: "how do we know that Van Bibber won't fix it with the people in the house? Even if his friends did see him handling the bric-à-brac, or even if he put a fork down his coat-sleeve, they'd think he was joking. Or he may let them into it beforehand."

"Well, I must say I appreciate your confidence," growled Van Bibber; "I'll play fair, of course, and I'll tell you what I'll do; to make sure, I'll only go to houses where they don't know me, and I'll bring back spoons marked with the people's initials."

This recklessness delighted his friends. "You're a sport, Van Bibber," they cried, with admiration, "and you'll be in jail before five o'clock."

The servant brought them a society paper that made a feature of printing the announcements of coming social events, and Van Bibber carefully selected the names of five estimable ladies who were giving receptions that afternoon, and who were making a desperate fight to get into society, as the proper people to rob. At four he ordered a hansom, put his list inside his hat, placed a fresh chrysanthemum in his coat, and started smilingly forth on his career of crime. His friends watched him from the window with keen delight and with much excitement.

"Now, then," said Travers, promptly and decidedly, "the thing for us to do is to send a detective after him and have him arrested."

"Exactly," said the rest. Mr. Van Bibber alighted first at a very handsome brown stone house, just a few doors off the avenue on Forty-Third Street. There was an awning over the door, and a line of carriages on either side of the street. The name of the lady who was paying for this he discovered, by referring to his slip, to be Nobles. The man saw him through the door and opened it for him, saying, "Third floor, front." Mr. Van Bibber pushed his way through the crowd of women and girls and old men and pots of chrysanthemums, and threw his overcoat in a corner. There was no one in the room, and Van Bibber, while adjusting his cravat, cast a wandering eye over the dressing-table. It was littered with bright silver toilet articles. He picked some of these up and bit them, in a most professional manner. "Plated," he remarked with some disgust; "lady probably gets her silver from a caterer. Hardly worth while to try down-stairs. Guess I'll move on to next place."

He picked up his overcoat and hat again and went out without having gazed upon Mrs. Nobles. The next place was on the avenue itself, and was very crowded. Van Bibber pushed his way slowly upstairs to the second floor, and, without a moment's hesitation, gathered up four silver photograph-frames, a complete manicure set of silver, a gold watch, which hung in a slipper at the side of a bed, and a pair of silver-backed hair-brushes. He placed these carefully in his overcoat, and went down-stairs in a stately and dignified manner. He avoided the first door, where he guessed the hostess was stationed, and made his way toward the rear. There was a terrible crush, and yet he saw no one he knew. In the rear room there was a long table overloaded with things to eat. He gathered up three or four spoons, one at a time, after examining them carefully, and stored them away back of a bit of china on a sideboard, then he went back after more spoons. Nobody paid any attention to him, and he paid no attention to any one else. He carried a plate with some salad on it in his hand, and picked at this daintily with the spoons as he transferred them from the table to the sideboard. When he had a dozen he covered them with his handkerchief and slipped them into his coat-tail pocket. Then he put on his great-coat, and went out as calmly as he had come in. He found the stolen articles somewhat heavy, so, as soon as he was in the hansom, he took them out and put them under the seat.

Mrs. Charles T. Van Dyke was the name of the hostess at the next place. Van Bibber shot quickly upstairs, and opened two or three bureau drawers, a writing-desk, and a secretary, but found nothing of value. There was an immense silver water-pitcher in one corner with two goblets, which he thought of taking, but he could think of no way of getting it out unobserved unless he lowered it down the elevator-shaft with a rope. In the dining-room, however, the spoons were undisturbed as yet, and lay in cosy little rows on the white cloth. Van Bibber placed a dozen of these in each of his trousers pockets and told the servants, as he turned from the tea urn, over which he had been bending, that he would take two lumps and lemon.

A large, heavily-mustached stranger, with a cup in his hand, nodded pleasantly to Van Bibber and asked him, with a glance at the tea, if he had got what he wanted.

"Yes, thank you," said Van Bibber, cheerfully, "I think I have."

At the next place he was somewhat surprised to see the same stranger drinking more tea, and apparently watching him. But Van Bibber put this down to the fact that he was unduly suspicious and that his imagination was excited. He was just going out without having made any-seizures, when a fat, pompous gentleman, who he was sure must be the host, took pity on his apparently neglected condition, and said: "I see you are looking over my bric-à-brac, sir; it is not much of a collection, and I have not had time lately to give it the attention it needs." Then he proceeded, at great length and with evident satisfaction to himself, to describe each separate piece of crockery on the wall. Van Bibber was greatly bored, but he was too polite to say so, and was rewarded when the gentleman said: "This piece of satsuma cost me five hundred dollars." Van Bibber kept his eye on the plate, and, when his host turned to greet a new arrival, slipped it into his coat-tail pocket and bowed himself out.

He placed it under the seat of the hansom very carefully and drove on to the next place, quite assured that he had won his bet, but anxious to settle it without a question or doubt. He did not see the stranger with the heavy mustache pass him in a close cab, and dart into the house to which he was going, just a minute before him. Van Bibber elbowed his way, with many apologies, to the third floor. There was a dressing table covered with silver trifles, and Van Bibber smiled complacently.

There was a bed in the room and he could see this as he looked in the mirror. But he could not see under the bed. His overcoat was on a chair and he made several trips to it and filled the pockets with silver-backed brushes and combs. But on the third of these trips his heart stood still, for out from under the bed came the big stranger with the heavy mustache. He came very leisurely and determinedly. "Don't make a row," he said; "you're under arrest."

At that moment two young men came into the room, pulling off their overcoats.

"Help!" screamed Van Bibber; "look!" he shouted, pointing at the detective. "There's a sneak-thief under the bed." Then he fell on the officer's head just as relentlessly as he would have dropped on a foot-ball, and banged his nose into the carpet and sat on his shoulders. The two young got out of their coats much more quickly than they had intended doing and fell with their knees on each of the detective's arms, and while they thus pinned him to the floor they punched him vigorously in the ribs and yelled.

"Look at this!" said Van Bibber, catching up his overcoat by the tail and spilling all the silver over the floor. "Look at what he had stored away! Hold him, will you, while I get a policeman?"

Everyone was running up the front-stairs so he could not get down that way, and so ran to the back and went down the kitchen-stairs and on into the dining-room, whence all the waiters had fled. He was quite unobserved in the confusion, and accordingly took time to fill his pockets with spoons and forks of heavy silver. Then he walked out through the excited women and stepped into his hansom and told the driver to go to the club.

"That detective of yours," he said, calmly as he produced his treasures from the bottom of the hansom, "will probably be around here when he gets his nose patched up. In the meanwhile I will ask you to value these articles, roughly and ring for some messenger-boys."

An authority said the lot was worth seven hundred dollars, and the separate exhibits were promptly returned to where they belonged by messenger-boys, who were instructed to leave them at the door and run. The detective was pacified by some of the club's best brandy and a twenty-five dollar bill. But whenever Van Bibber enters the club now the men feel nervously for their watches and the waiters count the forks.—New York Sun.

The Enterprising Gilmore.

The coming visit of the great Gilmore's Wonderful Band, of New York, will mark one of the largest and most interesting musical events ever undertaken in this city. The leader of this famous musical organization is so public-spirited and patriotic that he is a figure in our National history, and the band that he leads is the most widely known and popular of any in this country. It is generally regarded as the finest concert band in the world, and its fame is a matter of pride to all true Americans. In the great Boston Jubilees Mr. Gilmore demonstrated the wonderful activity of his mind, unusual executive ability, and an incredible amount of fortitude; for in spite of the most formidable obstacles and general discouragement, he accomplished those most gigantic musical festivals ever known, while the prominent men of Boston and New York had pronounced him a crazy enthusiast, and his schemes impractical. It has been said that no other man ever lived who could achieve such monstrous musical undertakings. Be that as it may, Gilmore's Boston Jubilees stand without parallel in extent and grandeur. They established his fame the world over, and secured him a wonderful popularity, which he still retains. Since then he has devoted his energies to developing and maintaining a military band of the highest attainable excellence. The members of Gilmore's have been carefully selected for their superior ability and skill, many of them from the different countries visited by Mr. Gilmore in search of the finest living artists: at least a dozen of these are considered to be without equals, and none of them have any superiors on the instruments they play. These members have been playing and drilling under Mr. Gilmore's direction for from twelve to twenty years, and the high degree of perfection they have attained is a natural result, but, nevertheless, wonderful to those who hear their music. At the concerts to be given Wednesday, April 22, at Mechanics Hall, under the management of Mrs. Wilkinson, this band will be heard under very favorable circumstances, with the many famed soloists, some of the most celebrated vocal artists, a grand chorus, etc.

If you were to take the conceit out of some people the remains would defy identification.

Chamberlain District Farmers

The anniversary of Lee's surrender on April 9th was very pleasantly celebrated at the elegant home of Burton W. Potter, on Salisbury Street. It was a mere coincidence, though, and the historic interest of the day was not once alluded to during the evening. A bounteous repast was served in which items quite foreign to farm products figured prominently, but all devoted themselves to their task with true farmer like determination. Representative agriculturists from other parts of the city were present, and it was a pleasure to see the face of Joseph H. Perry beaming over the table at his vis-a-vis. Everybody was happy. Farmers and those who had been or whose fathers had been tillers of the soil were present. Among them were Granville Longley, Ex-Mayor Winslow, H. L. Parker, Esq., Mayor Harrington, A. S. Lowell and others. Lawyer Potter showed himself the generous and obliging host and in rising to act as toastmaster, said,

"The long days and the April snow squalls admonish us that summer is coming, and that it is time for us to stop talking and go to work on our farms. From time to time, during the winter, we have had our regular meetings, and listened to the reading of essays, and to the discussions upon various subjects appertaining to farming and rural life. From these essays and discussions we have obtained much useful information and a good deal of enjoyment. We are now prepared to close our meetings for this season, and to proceed to put in practice the things we have learned in theory. But before we close this meeting we propose to have a few final words from some of our members and invited guests. As president of the club I desire to thank you, fellow members, for the zeal and heartiness you have shown in making our meetings the past winter so profitable and successful; and in behalf of the club I extend thanks to our outside friends who have encouraged and assisted us by their presence and words at so many of our meetings, some of whom are here tonight. I desire to say to them and to our invited guests that we should be glad to have you move into the district and to join this club. We feel confident that such a move would be the wisest thing you could do. The soil of the district is fertile, the scenery is fine and the atmosphere is healthy. The people are kind and neighborly, fairly intelligent and wholly satisfied with their occupations and surroundings. We have few chronic grumblers, no deserted farms, no starving poor and no idle and dissolute people. On the contrary we have a contented population, who are fairly prosperous on their pleasant homesteads, and with consciences so void of offence toward God and man that they can look the universe in the face without a blush."

In presenting the several speakers to respond to toasts, the Master gave felicitous introductions. The first toast was,

"The City of Worcester—The thriving seat of agriculture and horticulture, and the home of an industrious and intelligent people, who are accustomed to place farmers among their public officers. Response by His Honor Francis A. Harrington, mayor of the city." The mayor was as ever, solid and sensible. He could speak as a member of the Grange and as one having a more than amateur connection with the farm. Then came

"Electric Railways—The desideratum which has long been needed in the unification of city and country life. Response by ex-Mayor Samuel Winslow." Our late chief executive was in a fine flow of spirits and words and he conclusively showed his listeners that every thing comes directly or indirectly from the farms.

"The State Board of Agriculture—Response by the secretary, Hon. Wm. R. Sessions of Hampden." Our secretary is a veritable Anak in stature and certainly would make a powerful practical farmer. His presence, though unexpected, was quite a card for the meeting. He spoke eloquently.

"Horticulture—The beautiful and useful handmaid of agriculture. Response by President Henry L. Parker of the Worcester Horticultural Society." Our ex-senator was very happy in his sallies and drew forth shouts of laughter at his reference to the double life led by the host, alluding to Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. In a quiet way, Mr. Parker quite captivated his audience.

"The Place of the Farmers' Club and Grange in Country Life. Response by Alderman Warren C. Jewett, master of Worcester Grange." In his response Mr. Jewett showed conclusively that Ward One had made no mistake in putting him forward as its aldermanic representative in the city government.

"The Chamberlain District Farmers' Club—Its influence for good in this community. Response by S. A. Burgess, Esq., secretary of the club." Mr. B.'s well chosen words are given in full later.

"The Public Highways; Typical Indices of Civilization—Their importance to agriculture and rural life. Response by ex-Alderman J. Lewis Ellsworth, president of the Worcester Agricultural Society." Our ex-Alderman, too, was fully up to the standard and gave utterances showing that Ward One is not without material for all coming political emergencies.

"The Fraternal Farmers' Club, our next door neighbor and generally successful rival in the Worcester and New England fairs. Response by ex-President E. F. Chamberlain of the Tatnuck Farmers' Club." It is just a little amusing that the only Chamberlain present was imported from neighboring Tatnuck, but Mr. C. is equal to any occasion and he loves farming and farmers' clubs.

"The Ornamentation of our Home Grounds—One way of making rural life attractive. Response by James Draper, formerly master of the State Grange, and overseer of the National Grange." What Mr. Draper cannot tell on this subject is hardly worth knowing and all regretted the brevity of his remarks.

"The Place of Shrubs and Trees in Country Life—Response by O. B. Hadwen." When Mr. Hadwen begins to name the flowers of our vicinity, in their seasons, he is obviously talking on a congenial theme. His words, too, were all too brief.

"The Beauty and Utility of the Rural Suburbs as Adjuncts of great Cities—Response by A. S. Roe." The latter spoke concerning the advantages of homes where air and exercise may be abundant and where children may have flowers and trees to their hearts' content.

At times, Mrs. Chas. H. Prentiss furnished excellent piano selections and it was well along towards eleven o'clock when the meeting broke up.

The following is a brief history of the club by Silas A. Burgess, Esq.

"Chamberlain District Farmers' Club—Its influence for good in this community." This club was organized Dec. 16, 1873. J. L. Ellsworth was elected president and annually re-elected until Nov. 9, 1883, when Hugh J. Allen was elected and served as president until Nov. 1, 1885, when Charles Greenwood was then elected and served until Nov. 3, 1886, and was followed by John Pliny Moore, who had held the office of secretary and treasurer from the organization of the club. He held the office until Nov. 5, 1892, when our host, the present presiding officer was elected to this honorable office. Some of the other leading members of the club are Sylvanus Sears, F. P. Sears, Geo. T. Foster, N. F. Foster, F. P. Stowell, E. N. Wheeler.

The first meeting for discussion was held Dec. 31, 1873, when the important subject of the "Corn Crop" was considered.

More than two hundred men and women have joined this club. Some of whom have passed upward to their eternal reward. Some have gone West, South and North, while many remain to carry on the noble work of the club. It has been honored with first and second prizes for exhibits of peas, apples and vegetable collections at the annual agricultural fairs.

It has been encouraged by the presence of mayors, aldermen, common council men, and other high officials of city, county and commonwealth especially at our annual suppers. Leading farmers of the State Board of Agriculture, and others, have assisted by able essays and interesting discussions of important questions. Editors and reporters of leading daily newspapers and agricultural publications have contributed valuable information, not only upon farming, but statesmanship and legislative reform. The leading and most successful market gardeners, have been, and are, its members, and workers in extending its influence. Some of the most accomplished and entertaining artists in literature and music have participated in its onward march of improvement and influence. Little children of both sexes have furnished pleasing entertainment and gathered and imparted intellectual impulse at its meeting. First class merchants and amateur farmers have given essays and their co-operation in the influential advancement of the club. First rate lawyers and progressive statesmen, like our president, have contributed their time and talents in the advancement of the club's influence for good. In all its work the refining and elevating sentiment of woman has been a prominent factor. In its good work in domestic culture, the art of cooking and all that aids in home comfort and high social enjoyment, woman has been the leading spirit and the controlling force. Most useful and enjoyable essays by the women of the club have added grace and charm to its social progress. The discussions upon the noble art of farming have abounded in advanced theory, but especially in minute details of practical cultivation.

It would be difficult to find more successful practical market gardeners than some of the leading members of this club. No where in this commonwealth would one be likely to find better farmers and milk producers.

Upon the organization of the club a paper named, The Rural Offering, was established with ladies of the club for editors. Most amusing and valuable articles were contributed for this publication, which was issued and read at each meeting. The issue of The Rural Offering of March 25, 1874, being No. 7, was of such peculiar merit that two hundred copies were printed in pamphlet form for distribution. An historical poem in this issue of The Rural Offering entitled, "Grist from a Rickety Mill," gives much valuable information concerning the early makers of this club. One of the funny conundrums to be found in this issue: "Why is a hen immortal?" Ans. "Because her son never sets."

The first annual supper was at Hugh J. Allen's, April 15, 1874. This we now enjoy is the eighteenth.

About one hundred and forty-four meetings for discussion have been held by this club. More than one hundred and forty essays have been read at its meetings. A great variety of subjects has been discussed. Among which have been those relating to farming, vegetable and milk production, "Amateur Farming," "The Laws of Trespass," "Laws of the Road," "Dog Laws," "Taxation," "Rural Life," "Health," "Longevity," "State Help to Agriculture," "Flowers in Home and Home Grounds," "City Expenditures," etc. Most of these essays have been published in the daily papers.

In social improvements, in the arts of agriculture, in the principles of co operation, in the diplomatic methods of trade, in the healthful employment of amateur farming this club has exerted an influence for good in this community which has been and is extending throughout our whole country. This club is doing a very good work in stimulating farmers to increased exertion in the adoption of improved methods and in awakening the community to the necessity of the government, state and national, extending increased protection and encouragement to this important industry, in improved systems of taxation, and more liberal appropriations. Our national appropriation is about 31 cents to the square mile while that of Great Britain is $12.75 per acre, and that of France is $40 per acre, for agricultural purposes. This community is waking up to the magnitude of this great subject.

A Busy Man.

His parishioners can't allow Pastor Eklund to have even a short respite at Conference, but he has to come back and marry and look after the interest of his flock. On Saturday eve at 7 o'clock he married Alexander Hedin and Anna Maria Franzen at the home of the latter 12 Merrifield St. It was a quite affair, only a few friends of the contracting parties being present. Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Svenson attended as witnesses.

Then at 8.15 he was off to 25 Dix St. There he united in wedlock Carl W. Sandh and Ida C. Lundberg. A large party of friends were present. Misses Albertine Werme and Anna S. Sandh, the latter a niece of the groom, acted as bridesmaids, and Oscar Svenson and Magnus Brunsell were groomsmen.

The Banshee.

Ireland, 1798.

They moulded bullets in the night
Down by the sea where whiteboys hide,
They rolled the cartridge for the fight,
And scoured the rusted pike-head bright
To arm the country-side.

Loud rang the Banshee's lonely wail,
Above the sul'len boom of surf,
And well the boldest heart might quail,
And well the boldest cheek grow pale,
A-ound that fire of turf!

Spoke Red O'Brien, "A Fate flies by!
Some one of us is doomed to fall,
Whene'er is heard the Banshee's cry,
Then one of them that hears must die,
God's mercy on us all!"

Said Father Quinn—"It was the wind,
Cove the case nent there, Kath'leen,
Lest some accursed spy should find
Us plotting vengeance here, ye mind,
By burning rush-lights seen."

Then spake McCarthy, stern and low,
"There's 'ittle need to hide the light,
For we're betrayed and this I know,
From a sure hand, red blood will flow
Inside these walls t'night!"

"I hear his shout upon the rocks;
He sees no light or fears no way.
McCarthy soft the door unlocked
While Red O'Brien a pistol cocked
And hissed, "Death to O'Day!"

"McCarthy!" cried Kathleen, "Ye lie!
O'Day is tried and true as steel
O Father Quinn can ye stand by
And see him thus by treachery die?
O God! hear my appeal!"

So spake the priest: "Peace, silence all!
We plot to free our wretched land
From the proud Sassanach's cruel thrall
We swore that any man should fall
Who dared betray our band!

"Were he my brother he should die!
Be ready men, and spare him not.
The howling storm will drown his cry,
Ere morning breaks his corpse shall lie,
Well hid in some lone spot!"

She strove to pass—they barred the way,
She turned and with a pu'pose dire,
Seized ere their palsied arms could stay,
The keg of powder where it lay,
And cast it on the fire.

The flames shot up,—a towering flash,
That showed the storm caps far at sea,
But high above the awful crash,
Ran o'er the breakers thundering dash,
The Banshee's scream of glee!

Petersham, Mass. Francis Zuri Stone.

Fred E. Gage formerly in class '91 at our High School is about to be graduated from Miner's Commercial College at Frankfort, Ind. He expects to remain in the West. A wide range of old friends wish him success.

Frank Gird Warren.

The many schoolmates and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Everett H. Warren will sympathize with them in their recent bereavement. On the 9th inst., their little boy Frank G., two years and six days old, was called away from earth to a heavenly home. Only recently, Mrs. Warren mourned the loss of her loving mother, Mrs. Gird, and now another place is vacant. While love and sympathy cannot recall the departed, they will do much towards making life to the survivors endurable. The hearts of scores of fathers and mothers are touched at this presence of death. We are all kin and all sorrow together.

ORDER NOW

and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than at

EVANS & COMPANY,
Manufacturers of
Fine Monumental Work,
131 Central Street, near Summer.

W. A. ENGLAND,
DEALER IN
FINE WATCHES,
CLOCKS, JEWELRY
& OPTICAL GOODS.
REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.
394 Main Street.

ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING
Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,
Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.
Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold
on commission.
MRS. S. M. KEYES.

“Bird’s-Eye
VIEW OF THE WORLD.”

For particulars see “Books and Bookmen,” and address the Agent, Mr. H. E. Gould, care of Y. M. C. A.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE
permanently eradicated by the
ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,
92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

Geo. H. Ward, Post 10, G. A. R.

From week to week, LIGHT will print a complete Roster of the present and past members of the Post. A star before a name indicates a deceased member and a dagger, one who, for any reason, has ceased to belong. While the list will not include all the veterans of the late war who call Worcester home, it will allow the public to know who many of them are. When the soldier belonged to two organizations, the fact is expressed.

NAME.	COMPANY.	REGIMENT
Bemis, J. O.	D	4 Mass. H. A.
† Bemis, Wm. W.	G	34 Mass.
Benchley, Chas. H.	F	1 Batt. H. A.
† Bennett, Harrison A.	C	36 Mass.
† Benson, Chas. E.	A	25 Mass.
Benway, Nap.	F	1 Batt. H. A.
† Bergen, Wm. H.	D	15 Mass. U. S. N.
† Berrighlin, Peter H.		“General Service.”
† Berry, Elias B.		12 Me.
Bessey, M. B.		{ A 3 Batt. Rifles A 25 Mass.
Betterly, E. S.	A	15 Mass.
Bigelow, Jothan E.	K	42 Mass.
Bigelow, Levi S.	A	51 Mass.
*Bigelow, Luther H.	C	51 Mass.
† Bird, George		7 Reserve Corps
† Black, James E.	G	15 Mass.
Blackstone, James B.	K	7 Me.
Blackstone, S. C.	K	10 Me.
Blair, Israel	K	1 Vt. Cav.
Blair, James		U. S. N.
† Blake, Geo P.	C	36 Mass.
Blake, R. Elliot	C	36 Mass.
† Blasey, Ferdinand		7 N. Y.
*Blenkinhorn, John D.		51 Mass.
† Blenus, Chas. W.	Band	16 Mass.
† Bicknell, A. A.	C	16 Mass.
Bliss, Chas. H.	I	5 Mass.
Bliss, Geo. L.	A	51 Mass.
Bliss, Geo. S.	F	13 Vt.
Blodgett, Wm. H.	A	21 Mass.
Blunt, Geo. A.	B	2 N. Y. H. A.
† Bolio, Joseph	A	34 Mass.
Bolster, Frank E.	D	27 Mass.
† Bond, Frank A.	F	60 Mass.
*Bonn, Albert U.	A	25 Mass.
Bonzey, Alexander	A	2 Mass. H. A.
Booth, John	F	18 Conn.
Booth, John N.	A	53 Mass.
† Boovia, Joseph	G	22 Conn.
† Bosden, Joshua N.	H	42 Mass.
† Boswell, Fred W.	C	36 Mass.
† Bottomly, C. S.	C	36 Mass.
† Bottomly, Jerome		U. S. Eng’r Corps.
† Bouchard, Alphonse	A	5 N. H.
† Boucher, Alfred	D	10 Vt.
† Boutelle, Wm. E.		1 N. H. H. A.
† Bowles, Geo. F.	C	36 Mass.
† Bowman, H. H.	E	34 Mass.
Bowman, J. A.	A	2 Mass.
† Boyd, Luvill	E	4 Mass. H. A.
Boyden, David	E	36 Mass.
Boyden, Joshua N.	{ H F	42 Mass. 51 Mass.
Boyden, Mason A.	G	42 Mass.
† Boyden, Stephen A.	C	4 Mass. Cav.
Bradish, A. S.	I	2 Mass.
† Bradley, Patrick	B	3 R. 1 Cav.
† Brady, M. A.	A	29 Mass.
† Braybrook, W. F.	E	18 Mass.
† Brazille, Patrick	H	28 Mass.
Breard, Chas. A.		26 Regulars.

(To be continued.)

The superiority of

*ROSE CREAM LOTION***

lies in the fact that it contains no Oils or Greasy Substances, no Chemical or Mineral Poisons, and will not injure the most delicate skin. Can be applied at any time; quickly absorbed. Ladies troubled with catchy fingers, working on silk and satin, will find it an excellent remedy. It will not leave the hands sticky.

For Gentlemen’s use after shaving it is with out an equal.

Try it. Get a

SAMPLE BOTTLE FREE.

Large bottles, 25c. Found in all first-class Drug stores. Prepared by

PERKINS & COMPANY, Sole Proprietors,
Worcester, Mass. BUSH & CO., Wholesale Agents.

STARKIE’S DYE HOUSE,

254 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Ladies and Gents’ Garments

Dyed and Cleansed

in a Superior Manner.

Tailoring Establishment.

Custom-Made goods at almost Ready-made Rates.

254 MAIN STREET.

PHOTOGRAPHER
*****
Underwood Children’s Portraits
A Specialty
*****
326 Main, op. Mechanics Hall

F. S. BLANCHARD & CO.,

* PRINTERS. ***

Book, Newspaper, Catalogue, Church, Society, Wedding and Commercial Printing of every kind executed in the best modern style.

No orders too large; none too small.

154 FRONT ST.

Horace Kendall,

DEALER IN

Furniture, Ranges, Carpets

AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Goods sold on instalments if desired. Prices
s low as any house in New England.

No. 319 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Mechanics Hall Building.

JUST SIT DOWN AND THINK

you know of any better place in the city for bargains in

Furniture AND Carpets!

Than at the store of

PINKHAM & WILLIS,

VELVET CARPETS, $1.00 Per Yard.

5-FRAME BODY BRUSSELS CARPETS, $1.10
Per Yard.

GOOD TAPESTRY BRUSSELS CARPETS, 75c
Per Yard.

INGRAMS, from 25c. to 75c. Per Yard.

ART SQUARES, 2 1 2x3 Yards, $4.50.

Our CARPET DEPARTMENT now contains all the new and most desirable patterns in Spring Styles of Carpetings, of all kinds.

BANKRUPT STOCK purchased of the assets of the E. W. VAIL MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

100 Antique Oak Plush Rockers,

To be sold at the extraordinarily low price of $10. Rockers not as good are being sold everywhere at $15.

CRAWFORD RANGES.

The best in the world. We have them.

GOODS SOLD ON FOUR MONTHS' TIME AT CASH PRICES.

335 Main Street.

Household.

Tin cleaned with paper will shine better than when cleaned with flannel.

Tan and sunburn may be removed by the following method. Put the juice of a lemon and the white of an egg in a heavy earthen cup or bowl, let it heat in the stove for a half hour, stirring occasionally. Apply this to the face, neck and hands every night for about a week, making it fresh every day. This is very efficacious.

A Canton flannel bag, made up with the downy side out, is a great convenience on sweeping day. Slip it over the broom and dust walls and woodwork with it. The bag is convenient also for dusting hard wood floors. For this purpose, dampen it slightly, and the floor may be kept clean a long time without washing.

Bathing the face daily in hot water removes pin plebs by softening the oil in the tiny tubes, and is said to prevent wrinkles.

When soot falls upon a carpet or rug, if covered thoroughly with salt it can be swept up without leaving a trace.

In selecting fish, choose only those which are firm and stiff, with lively red gills, eyes full and clear and fins firm. The sooner fish are cooked after taken from the water the better.

The model housewife of to-day plans ahead, and before the season's goods are fairly shown on retail counters, is busy replenishing the constant wear of her household, or preparing the outfits of her family for the approaching season.

In choosing a turkey do not let the size deceive you. A fowl may be large and young, or small and old. The legs of a young turkey are smooth and black—those of an old turkey reddish and rough. The next point to be noted is the length of time it has been killed. If fresh killed the eyes are full and clear, and the feet moist.

Go about all your work quietly, and always have regard to your health. When it suffers, your value in life decreases, and your means for happiness diminish.

Perhaps some of our readers would like to know that paper, persisting in cracking and tearings, off walls, may be mended, and made to stick infallibly by putting it on these places, with a smooth, raw paste of wheat flour, and thick sour milk. It never fails.

E. E. H.

If we could learn to see things with a poet's eye, there is no end of beauties even in the poorest home, and amid the dullest surroundings. A boiler full of rainbowtinted soap bubbles on washing day will rival any artist's, handiwork, and who cannot at some time of each day learn a few notes of nature's many voiced music if only the ear is attuned to harmony?

There is a familiar almanac anecdote that, though a homely illustration, shows how being en rapport with the best in our surroundings calls out what of poetry there is in us. I refer to the old lady who said, "I never can enjoy poetry when I am cooking, but when I am out to feed the hogs and hist myself on the fence, and throw my soul into a few lines of 'Cap'n Jinks,' it does seem as if this airth was made to live in after all."

The Readers of Light
I most cordially invite
To call at my

Model Drug Store

When in want of anything
They would expect to find

In a metropolitan establishment of its kind.

Respectfully,

Geo. E. Fairbanks, Druggist,

10 FRONT STREET.

MRS. MORGAN'S

Private School and Kindergarten,

Y. M. C. A. Building, 10 Elm Street.

SPRING TERM OPENS APRIL 6, 1891.

W. H. TWICHELL,

Gold, Silver and Nickel
Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechanic St., Worcester, Mass.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,

BOOK * BINDING *

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES

at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,

W. L. BROWN, Manager.

BLOOMINGDALE * NURSERIES, City Delivery.

TREES, VINES and PLANTS

Taken from the Soil and Delivered at Your Own Door. Stock purchased by Our Patrons within the City Limits will be Delivered at their Residence Without Charge.

"HERE WE GO."

The remarkable success that has attended the transplanting of Nursery Stock taken from these grounds during the last twenty-five years is due, in a large measure, to the care exercised in protecting the root from the sun and wind, both in the digging in the nursery grounds and in transit to their places of destination. Not only is the greatest care taken in packing in bales or boxes for distant transportation, but in our city delivery every precaution is taken to so protect the roots that they will reach our customers in as fresh a condition as when taken from the nursery row.

My New Illustrated and Descriptive Catalogue

Of 80 pages, has been prepared with much care and at great expense, and is now ready for distribution. It will be mailed free on application.

As a Guide to Horticulture.

The information to be gathered by a careful perusal of this catalogue, and especially noting the hints upon soil preparation, planting, and care of trees, which will be found in their proper places, we feel confident will be found worthy of your careful consideration. They are the results of years of constant and devoted study, hard labor and costly experiment, and although much of this experience has been dearly bought, we now tender it freely to others who are interested in Horticulture, that our life-long devotion to this work may not prove wholly fruitless.

The Nursery Grounds.

Parties wishing to visit the Nursery Grounds can take the cars of the Worcester & Shrewsbury Railroad, that leave their station (east side of the Union Passenger Station) hourly, passing near the Grounds, and stopping at Draper's Station, by notifying the conductor.

Telephone, 17-6.

JAMES DRAPER, Proprietor.

School and College.

There is one Worcester manufacturer who can shake an Ex-Governor by the hand and recall the time when he gave the latter work. It was before the war. The boy had come in from an outlying town and asked for employment. There was none for him but he said, "I guess you don't know me. I am —'s brother. We have done lots of work for you." Work was found for him; and what a worker he was. At the end of six months, he gave up his job which had been worked before and after school. He had secured a place to teach in the high school. He had boarded with his brother in the suburbs, but he told the latter the work to get his board, i. e., the distance to be overcome, was worth more than the board and he must live nearer the school. When ready to enter college, he had saved $600. When the war came on, he enlisted as private, but friends secured a commission for him. He remained in the south till the Hayes administration came in. Was the best governor, a certain state has had in fifty years. Is now in New York; but he never visits Worcester without calling on his first employer. Some years since, the latter went to Springfield to hear the Ex-Governor speak. The crowd was great but the quick eye of the man whose great maxim had ever been "promptness" picked him out at once. Such memories are pleasant for all parties.

A Study in Spelling.

I was in one of Brunswick's schools yesterday, where I picked up the following thrilling composition, written by a 12-year-old girl, which is one of the best pieces of English as she is "spelt" that I have yet seen: A right suite little buoy, the sun of a great kernal, with a rough around his neck, flue up the road as quick as a dear. After a thyme he stopped at a gun house and wrung the belle. His tow hurt hymn, and he needed wrest. He was two tired to raze his fare, pail face. A feint mown of pane rose from his lips. The made who herd the belle was about to pair a pare, but she through it down and ran with all her mite, for fear her guessed wood not weight. But when she saw the little buoy tiers stood in her eyes at the site. Ewe poor deer! Why dew you lay hear! Are yew dyeing! 'Know,' he said, 'I am feint.' She boar him inn her arms, as she aught to a room where he mite be quiet, gave him bred and meet, held a cent-bottle under his knows, untide his cholor, rapped him up warmly, gave him a suite draft from a viol, till at last he went fourth as hail as a young hoarse."—Brunswick (Ga.) Times.

Virgil and the "Æneid."

A correspondent asks, Is the story that Virgil on his deathbed attempted to burn the "Æneid" a myth, or is it a fact?

The story has been regarded as truth. The "Æneid" was not his favorite poem, although it is the one which constitutes his claim to the remembrance of posterity. He liked the "Georgica" best. It is said that the "Æneid" cost him eleven years of labor, and that he intended to devote three years more to polishing it and bringing it nearer to his ideal of what an epic poem ought to be. Before he could give much time to the latter task, however, he died, and in his last moments he tried to secure the book and destroy it. It was kept out of his reach, though, and subsequently given to the world as it was originally written.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

There's many a droning school boy who would shed no tears if Virgil had been able to carry out his purpose.

The New York Assembly Committee on Education gave a hearing on Superintendent Draper's compulsory education bill. A large number of school superintendents from all parts of the state were present. Previous to the hearing they agreed to an amendment that cities be allowed to establish a truancy school for habitual truants; also that truants may with the consent of their parents be confined in an orphan asylum or religious institution. The Rev. W. G. Rote, of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, opposed the bill, because he thought it would interfere with parochial schools. Superintendent Draper urged the committee to report the bill, so that it might be given a trial.

A dispatch from Baltimore reports Bishop Hurst of the Methodist church as saying that the entire $100,000 needed for the grounds of the new university at Washington will be in hand before May 1.

Work on the Y. M. C. A. and gymnasium building for Syracuse University is under way. It is hoped that it will be ready in October. It will stand a short distance back of the library.

As Others See Us.

From Virginia.

"We look forward to the coming of LIGHT each week. We feel that we keep pretty well posted from it, for it has exactly the kind of news that Worcester people wish for when away."

From a Former Pupil.

"We do enjoy so much your little weekly 'candle' which shines out of your corner into mine every Saturday. It also reflects to us, other corners, dearest of which is that High School once where we used to meet you as instructor. I as pupil. We wish your paper great success."

From Mississippi.

"I enjoy the paper very much and it keeps my acquaintance with the progress of the city, otherwise I might feel as if I were in a strange city when I get back."

WHO WAS HE,

And Where Did He Come From?

To the Editor of Light:—

In Lincoln's History of Worcester, the account of the arrival of the news of the battle of Lexington, in Worcester, is given as follows:

"Before noon, on the 19th of April, an express came to the town, shouting as he passed through the street at full speed: 'To arms! To arms! the war is begun!' His white horse, bloody with spurring, and dripping with sweat, fell exhausted by the church. Another was instantly procured and the tidings went on. The bell rang out the alarm, cannon were fired, and messengers sent to every part of the town to collect the soldiery. As the news spread the implements of husbandry were thrown by in the field, and the citizens left their homes with no longer delay than to seize their arms. * * * * * The passage of the messenger of war, mounted on his white steed, and gathering the population to battle, made a vivid impression on memory. The tradition of his appearance is preserved in many of our villages. In the animated description of the aged, it seems like the representation of death on the pale horse, careering through the land with his terrific summons to the grave."

In Force's American Archives, Volume 11, 363, I find the following and the words "bearer," in the letter from Palmer, one of the Committee for safety, and "a true copy taken from the original," in the attestation of Nathan Baldwin, town clerk of Worcester, would seem to settle the question of identity.

WATERTOWN, Wednesday evening.

Near ten o'clock April 19, 1775.

To all friends of American Liberty let it be known:—That this morning before break of day, a brigade, consisting of about one thousand or twelve hundred men, landed at Phipps farm at Cambridge, and marched to Lexington, where they found a company of our Colony Militia in arms, upon whom they fired, without any provocation and killed six men and wounded four others. By an express from Boston, we find another brigade are upon their march from Boston, supposed to be about one thousand.

The BEARER, Israel Bessel, is charged to alarm the country quite to Connecticut, and all persons are desired to furnish him with fresh horses as they may be needed. I have spoken with several who have seen the dead and wounded. Pray let the delegates from the colony to Connecticut see this, they know Colonel Foster of Brookfield, one of our delegates.

J. PALMER,

One of the Committee for Safety.

A true copy taken from the original, per order of the Committee of Correspondence for Worcester, April 19, 1775.

Attest, NATHAN BALDWIN,

Town Clerk.

A. A. L.

The Massachusetts Library Club.

The third meeting will be held at the Free Public Library, Worcester, Thursday, April 30, 1891. Program—10 a.m.—Members of the club present will be shown over the library building. 10.30—Mr. Green will answer questions regarding the building. It is expected that the architect will also be present. 11 to 12—Discussion. How to keep libraries clean. 12 to 12.15—Recess. 12.15—Address by Col. T. W. Higginson, "My experience as a trustee of public libraries." After lunch a visit will be made to the building of the American Antiquarian Society. Gardner M. Jones, Secretary. (Address,) Salem Public Library. Any person connected with library work can join the Club by sending 50 cents to the treasurer, William I. Fletcher, Amherst College Library, Amherst, Mass.

Let us be backed with God, and with the seas,
Which he hath given for fence impregnable,
And with their helps alone defend ours' lives;
In them, in ourselves, our safety lies.

—Shakespeare.

J. W. GREENE, PLUMBER.

Dealer in Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces. Steam and Gas Fitting. Jobbing in all its branches promptly attended to. Telephone Connection. 51 Main Street, Cumming's block.

Worcester Coal Company,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
COAL. COAL.

General office, 18 Pearl St., Y. M. C. A. Building; Yards, 23 Manchester St. and 319 Southbridge St.

The Worcester Oxygen Company

Have new and attractive rooms,
NOS. 10 AND 11 LINCOLN BLOCK,
for the popular

Compound Oxygen Treatment

under care of an experienced Physician.
Tickets, including 30 treatments, at reduced rates until May 1st. 363 1/2 Main st., or No. 1 Elm st., up one flight.
Dr. J. W. GOULD. T. D. BRISTOL, M. D.

Rand, McNally & Co.'s New Atlas of the World.

304 pages 11 1/2 x 14 1/2 inches, 152 pages of Maps, 152 pages of Diagrams, History, Gazetteer, Statistics, and Illustrations. An Index containing names of 89,827 Cities, Towns, Villages and Post Offices, in the United States, with census returns for 1890. Bound in best embossed cloth, in a handsome manner for the very low price of $3.75. Anyone wishing for a copy will please address a postal card, giving residence, to CHARLES WILDER Agent for Worcester No. 80 Lincoln St.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

Whatever price is given you by any house of known reliability on any STANDARD CARPET QUALITY will be met here, and you will have the added security of "Our" selections, "Our" reputation and "Our" guarantee.

The Bigelow, Lowell and Hartford Brussels Carpets have the name woven on every repeat of the pattern.

Before your Carpets are laid examine them.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

Z. F. Little & Co.

New Spring Garments.

Ladies' Reefers and Blazers, Plain and with Gilt Trimmings, $3.50 to $15

Jersey Jackets, all grades and prices, from $3.50 upwards

Children's Reefers and Blazers, from $1.50 to $5.00

The prettiest ever worn.

Jersey Waists, all grades and prices.

Waterproofs of all descriptions.

Just received our new stock of Parasols for 1891.

Every parasol we show is new this season, not an old one carried over.

Prices from $1 upwards.

Z. F. Little & Co.,

234 and 238 MAIN ST.

ALWAYS ON HAND!

VENISON, WILD GAME,
TURKEYS, CHICKENS,
GEESE, DUCKS,

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass

EDWARD B. CLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

THE CRITERION

Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

Worcester Dress

Cutting School,
45 Pleasant St.,

For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circular.

Mrs. L. F. Walch.

E. W. COFFIN,

Store Fixtures

310 Main Street, Worcester.

Name this Paper.

MRS. A. MINOR,

Millinery * Parlors.

A well-selected Stock of Goods for Order Work.

14 MAPLE STREET, Worcester, Mass.

About Folks.

The Hancock Club.

Tuesday evening was the opening night for this new, North End institution. Though the club room is located on Lincoln Street, No. 66, the membership is not, by any means, confined to the immediate vicinity and though St. John's Church is near and many of its communicants are members, other denominations are represented.

The suite of three rooms in ex-Alderman Sawyer's building afford excellent accommodations. That the club starts out under fine auspices is evident when we see the full list of members complete to begin with and a goodly number of candidates waiting. Opening directly from the street, a single flight of stairs leads to the first room, thence one enters the banquet room and finally the third where is a carrom table. There is an abundance of closet room and it looks as though those who linger here will have opportunity for enjoyment. Last week, the membership was printed in LIGHT. Within the past week several names have been withdrawn, and the new members include Alderman Webster Thayer, O. B. Shattuck, A. J. Daniels, Dr. F. L. Banfield, J. A. Lowe, F. J. Harlow, E. H. Loring. At a recent meeting officers were elected and a name selected, that of Hancock being decided upon, it being in honor of Governor John Hancock, owing to the fact that he once owned the property north of the club's quarters.

Numerous visitors, including His Honor, Mayor Harrington, visited the rooms at the opening and all pronounced the display first-class in every way. At 9 o'clock a bounteous collation was served by Putnam & Thurston. The next public reception will be for the benefit of the ladies.

South End.

The "Tennis" season has opened in earnest at the South End. The first games on the Crescent Tennis Club grounds were played Monday afternoon. The courts at Clark University are in fine shape and are in use almost daily.

Mr. J. L. Amsden, the veteran South End grocer who retired from business about a year ago, has lately opened a news-stand and ticket office for the new Leicester, Spencer and Worcester Electric Railway, at the corner of Park and Salem streets.

Miss Gertrude Smith has returned from her recent southern trip.

The reports for the third term at the Worcester High School due Friday, April 17.

At the recent meeting of the Crescent Tennis Club held at the residence of Mr. E. C. Belknap Apr. 9, Mr. Frank S. Pierce was elected to membership. The club propose to place a fence around their grounds at the corner of Main and Freeland streets and also erect stop-nets.

Dr. Louis E. Lamson went to Spencer Wednesday to act as usher at a wedding.

Johnny: "My pop is richer'n your pop."
Freddy: "Mebbe he is, but he'll never get back the money he lent my pop."

Anidrosis * Sanitarium * Baths

The human body can exist in dry air at a very high temperature, without injury, for a short period. The temperature of the air of the Turkish Bath ranges from 95° Fahr. to 160° Fahr., but the highest point is attained at the conclusion of the process. This is done gradually, and until perspiration is freely induced. The peripheral vessels dilate, and, of course, admit into them a larger amount of blood, with the effect to diminish the amount of blood in the internal organs. The temperature of the blood rises with the increase of heat; the action of the heart corresponds, and the excess of heat is disposed of by the perspiration, the circulation being more rapid, and the peripheral vessels containing more blood. The vis a tergo or force from behind utilizes the principle function of the skin, to carry off worn out and poisonous animal substances and other impurities, and thus cleanse the wheels of Nature artificially.

"Through the small perspiratory tubes, that pierce in endless millions the close woven skin, The baser fluids in a constant stream Escape, and viewless melt into the winds, While this eternal, this most copious waste, Of blood, degenerated into vap'rid brine, Maintains its wotted measure, all the powers Of health befriend you, all the wheels of life With ease and pleasure move. But this restrained, Or more or less, so more or less you feel The functions labor. From this fatal source What woes descend, are never to be sung."

Indeed, these minute pores of our skin are the greatest outlet for the removal of all poisonous and effete matter from the system. No wonder then, that checked perspiration has always been regarded as one of the most prolific causes of acute and chronic disease; and no wonder that the judicious use of the bath, has always been regarded as one of the most efficient and powerful means of preventing and curing them. As a means of removing congestion, equalizing the circulation of the blood, and allaying that irritability of the nervous system, which is the bane and misery of countless millions of the human race. The bath, followed by vigorous friction, shampooing and massage, has no equal, and no bath is perfect without the last. The improved Turkish or hot air cabinet baths are unquestionably better (if given properly,) than the old Turkish three hot room bath, as the head is not enclosed in the same room with the body; and then it is much nicer and pleasanter to have an attendant and a suite of rooms all to oneself.

The surface bath is good. The bath ordained by Nature, hard work and a good sweat is better, combined with the first, and the Improved Turkish bath combining all three with a good shampoo and general massage is Best. It is the best luxury known.

I have given a great deal of time and study to the merits of the different baths. I have concluded that a medicated disinfected bath, under medical supervision, using the therapeutic measures I have herein endorsed, the most rigid and stringent means exacted as regards absolute purity, and who knows better than the physician when that is secured? Physicians can feel safe when sending patients to our Sanatorium that we will dispense all therapeutic measures according to their directions, medical ethics the Key Note. They can retain their patients or not as they see fit. We have expert operators and gives massage according to Graham, Murrell and Schreiber (selections from each) Will use any medication in the bath that the physician selects or our own as explained above.

Office hours: 8 to 10 and 1 to 3. W. V. Philbrick, M. D., 901 Main Street. cor. Gardner.

The Week.

CITY.

April 1—Colonel Strahan of Boston visits the 11th Regt. Guards.

Dixie Minstrels have a second and successful night in Mechanics Hall.

11—Peter Larson, Swede, 63 years old missing.

Water break over Clark & Sawyer's store.

12—Major F. G. Stiles makes the speech of the evening before the Reform Club.

Mrs. C. R. Barber, formerly of Worcester, dies in Washington.

Harry L. Dadmun of this city to make one in the Manhattan team which visits Europe next summer.

Rev. J. J. Lansing again occupies his pulpit.

13—Peter Larson, reported lost, last week has returned. He had spent a night in Hope Cemetery, anticipating perhaps a permanent stay, and then wandered into Charlton. A case of Larson that his friends hope he will not indulge in again.

14—Fire Department present resolutions, handsomely framed to ex-Chief Simon E. Coombs.

Rev. Thos. L. McLaughlin ordained priest at St. John's church.

Annual meeting of Mechanics Association. Old officers re-elected.

Telegram proposes to open the polls for votes on the measuring of school children business.

15—Fred A. Fuller arrested for alleged theft from the American Express Co.

Elliot Carpenter attempts suicide. Will probably die.

Jonas G. Clark returns to the city after a six month's absence.

Monument to the memory of Ferdinand Gagnon dedicated in Notre Dame Cemetery.

16—Measurement of school children begins. When will it end?

Electric motor now really at work.

COUNTY.

April 9—Mrs. A. S. Reed dies in Whitinsville, 70th year.

Frank S. Payne of Southbridge died yesterday, 34 years.

10—Clarence Crocker of Grafton secures damages from Boston and Albany railroad for rough usage at the hands of a brakeman.

11—Mrs. E. F. Strickland of Warren has returned from a trip to Alabama.

12—The dam in Baldwinville gives away. Serious damage done.

13—Milford newspaper men take a ride over the electric railway between that place and Hopedale.

Sarah Maria Scisco, the last of the Grafton Indians buried. 72 years.

15—Blackstone Congregationalists celebrate fiftieth anniversary.

James Campbell dies suddenly in Paxton, 70 years.

Alvin W. Putnam dies in Sutton.

COMMONWEALTH.

April 10—Methodist Conference at Lynn, votes by a majority to admit women but not the necessary three-fourths. Why didn't the movers of the scheme demand a unanimous vote?

11—At the Lynn M. E. Conference, Rev. E. J. Haynes admitted from the Baptist church. Rev. John Galbraith of Worcester selected to preach next conference sermon.

Strong opposition to the pardoning of E. H. Heywood developed.

12—Dr. Blood, accused by Isaac Sawtelle as the murderer of Hiram Sawtelle found under an assumed name in Springfield.

Worcester schools take high rank in the Boston exhibit.

Dr. Eben Tourgee, the famous musical organizer dies in Boston. 56 years.

13—Legislature votes that doctors need not register.

Board of Agriculture to collect data as to abandoned farms.

Strike of house painters in Boston. A chance to paint the city red.

14—Dr. Bartol's church sold and will be taken down. The cradle of Boston Unitarianism.

Bill to reduce hours of labor defeated in the Legislature.

Judge Carpenter refuses to listen to Gen. Butler in United States Court. Now General, speak up!

Representative Joseph H. Walker addresses the Mystic Valley Club in Boston on Finance.

15—Ex-Governor Boutwell has a flattering reception in the House.

Veteran Republicans hold a reunion in Boston.

J. A. Rumrill retires from the Vice-presidency of Boston & Albany railroad. Ill health the cause.

16—Lt. Gov. Haile says he will not be a candidate for Governor. "All Hail etc!"

NATION.

Apr. 10—Celebrators of the Centennial of the Patent system in the U. S. visit Mt. Vernon.

It is now claimed that Anna Dickinson is not insane, but has been cruelly treated by relatives.

General Albert Pike buried with Masonic rites in Washington.

N. Y. Tribune celebrates 50th anniversary at the Metropolitan Opera House.

11—Ex-Minister Phelps thinks the New Orleans homicides justifiable.

Vicksburg strenuously opposed to a colored man as Postmaster. It is not a color line but a Hill.

What a pity that Artemas Ward is not alive! He did relish a "Goak." Just to think of it! His would-be-widow would have us believe that the frisky red haired panoramist of the Sixties was really an old man then. Oh no! Mrs. What's your name. Give us something reasonable.

Laws against illiterate immigrants to be made more stringent.

12—Great fire in Chicago. Worst since the terrible one of October 1871.

Brooklyn in the throes of the Grip.

The Italians who escaped from the Utopia landed in New York. A forlorn lot.

13—Congressman Spinola dies in Washington, 70 years.

Enos H. Nebeker of Indiana appointed U. S. Treasurer.

Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., to apply for a divorce.

14—The President shaking hands all along through the border states.

Secretary Blaine said to be in very poor health.

15—Secretary Blaine replies to Rudini. Now bring on your bears.

The wife of Private Secretary Halford dies in Washington.

17—It would seem that Hemstead Washburn will be the next mayor of Chicago.

WORLD.

April 10—And now Italy is very mad indeed. King Humbert can't stand American fun. He is too serious by half.

A great reservoir of water only 120 feet below the surface discovered in the Great Sahara.

11—Indications that Bismark will soon resume political life.

No war with Italy as yet.

12—French ambassador to Germany complains of ill usage.

More fighting in prospect. Mexico wants back the trophies now displayed at West Point. Would she also like the earth? Perhaps she had better come and take them.

13—In rebellious Chili and in black India, atrocities are perpetuated that indicate a long time yet to the millenium.

Labor riot at Bradford, Eng.

Two members of the British Parliament arrested for immoral practices. Queer law makers.

11—Parnell summons his American brother to Ireland to stand for Parliament.

Henry M. Stanley appointed governor of the Congo State.

Welch tin plate makers seriously effected by American tariff.

Church in Brazil to be reorganized.

15—Portugal's entire cabinet resigns.

Russia is massing troops on her frontier. Going to fight somebody. Nice neighbor.

The Anchor Line to run rival steamers to the Allen between Glasgow, Liverpool and Montreal.

16—Empress of Russia seriously ill.

Steamer Glamorgan sunk in English Channel by Steamer P. Caland.

It has been expected that the annual exhibition of the Art Students' Club would open next Monday in the Club's rooms in the Walker building but the elevator has not been completed and it is impossible to say now when the exhibit will open, though it will probably be sometime next week. Among the exhibitors this year will be Walter Gilman Page, C. W. Sanderson, J. M. Stone, S. P. Rolt Triscott and Albert Maxfield, all of Boston, and all members of the Club.

The pulpits of Miss M. J. McNamara will give a recital in Horticultural Hall April 21. Miss Mary E. Convery, Miss Maria Brennan and Mr. D. J. Padula, vocalists will assist. Miss Nellie Kirwin and Mr. Walter Scott Kennedy will accompany. The pupils are Misses C. Cooney, M. McCann, Mattie Ducey, Anna Duggan, Mamie Gallagher, M. Hogan, Maria Ducey, Lizzie Brennan, K. Murray and Master Alfred O'Leary.

William H. Bliss and Miss Florence E. Weston were married Wednesday noon at the Bliss homestead on Court Hill, by Rev William Howe of Cambridge, uncle of the groom. Only the family were present.

School and College.

High School.

The rhetorical exercises Thursday morning consisted of a reading, "John Burns at Gettysburg," by Miss Brown of the second year class.

April 10, being the last Friday of the Spring Term, was the regular Election Night at the debating societies.

The election at the Sumner club was one of the sharpest ever held, a proof of the club's vitality. The result is as follows: President, W. J. Denholm; vice president, T. F. Cummings; secretary, D. G. Burrage; treasurer, W. H. Cunningham. New Members Committee: H. H. Hill, A. H. Merriam, G. R. Bliss, F. C. Condy, H. F. Cutter. Rhetorical Committee: Edward Mellus, C. W. Eastman, A. H. Warren, Ways and Means Committee: W. J. Denholm, A. J. O'Leary, S. E. Wentworth; Term Critic, E. C. Witherby.

The Eucleia have elected officers as follows: President, T. C. Carrigan; vice president, W. J. Foran; secretary, C. E. Dowd; treasurer, C. F. Leonard. The Rhetorical committee consists of J. P. Morrissey, G. W. Murray, and C. J. Hickey; the New Members Committee: P. J. McLaughlin, W. E. D. Stone, G. W. Matthews; the Ways and Means: T. C. Carrigan, M. Curran, F. J. Garvey; Term Critic, J. Gannon.

The Aletheia's officers for the Summer Term are: President, Miss Anna L. Curtis; vice president, Miss Alice Foster; secretary, Miss Ina Sprague; treasurer, Miss Helen Greenwood; New Members Committee: Misses Boyd, Keith, and Darling; Finance Committee: Misses Dickenson, Leland and Mathews; Decorative Committee: Misses Pettit, Howard, and Carter.

The petitions which have been presented to the High School Committee from the Sumner Club and members of the old Assembly have not been granted, and are not to be for the present, it is understood.

The class crews are now under training at the Lake. The Senior and Junior boats are filled, but F. J. Zaeder, captain of the second year crew, is trying his men for positions in the boat. By the arrangement which has been made each crew has one of Webb's boats two days in the week for practice, and, as the race does not come off until May 29, considerable proficiency in handling the oar may be looked for. H. A. Adams will referee the race, which will be a mile straight away.

As the time of graduation approaches the Seniors are beginning to make arrangements for the occasion. The class motto has been chosen which was presented by Miss May Winn. The translation is "As the labor, so the reward." All class poems must be handed in by May 4, when the best one will be chosen by the class and set to music. A. E. Davis is class photographer.

Wednesday morning, Mr. Frank R. Batchelder, lately returned from Washington, visited the school.

The design for the boating banner, offered by a friend of the school, is to be drawn by High School pupils. Miss Southwick gave the scholars many hints in regard to the drawing of it Tuesday morning and advised that it be somewhat similar to the athletic banner.

The designs are to be handed in before the vacation.

A flattering report comes home from the drawing exhibition in Boston where the Worcester High School exhibit was judged to be the best.

The annual concert of the Glee Club will take place June 12. The artists who will assist are Mrs. Frank Dean, Miss Alice Hammond, Mr. Benj. Barber Mr. T. B. Hamilton, and Miss Grace Gabriel, reader. The club has increased wonderfully in size the past year, and has done some careful drilling under the direction of Mr. Seth Richards, so that a successful concert is certain.

H. H. Cummings from the Oxford Street School, falls heir to Janitor Newton's empty shoes. That he may grow to fill them is the best wish anyone could make. Well, he's always Cumming(s).

Holy Cross.

Last Tuesday, in the presence of a large assemblage, Rev. Thomas McLaughlin, S. J., was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop O'Reilly. The ceremonies were impressive and very solemn. At different passages of the mass, the applicant for holy orders was invested with the sacred vestments of the church. There were present within the sanctuary, in addition to Bishop O'Reilly, the following priests: Rev. M. A. O'Kane, S. J., president of the Holy Cross, Rev. A. A. Maes, S. J., Rev. P. T. O'Reilly, S. J., Rev. H. D. Langlois, S. J., and Rev. J. B. Mullaly, S. J., of Holy Cross, Rt. Rev. Mgr. Griffin, W. T. Finneran, C. M. Foley, M. T. O'Brien, W. C. McCaughan, E. F. Brosinhan, Robert Walsh, T. J. Conaty, D. D. and Very Rev. John J. Power V. G. D. D., of Worcester, J. J. McCoy of Westboro and W. J. Dower of Holyoke a classmate of Fr. McLaughlin's. After mass the newly ordained priest gave his blessing to family and friends. The students attended the ordination in a body, enjoying a holiday. There will be given a reception in Fenwick Hall, Friday evening, to Fr. McLaughlin.

Polytechnic.

The first number of Vol. VII. of the W. P. I. appears today. Among other things, it contains articles upon the proposed new school and its aims: the chances of the several class nines in the coming base ball strife, and book reviews. A communication from an alumnus in regard to "Base Ball Crank" advocating more attention to foot ball, also one from an under graduate concerning a school flag. There is a brief history and description of the school-pin accompanied by a cut of the same, for the benefit of the alumni. An unusual amount of editorial matter and spicy technicalities fill up the remainder. The board of editors for the ensuing year is, M. J. Leyden, '92, editor-in-chief; C. T. Tatman, '93, local editor; J. H. Wallace, '92, business manager; F. E. Hammond, '92; A. C. Comins, '93 and F. E. Norcross, '94. Hereafter copies of the paper may be obtained by the public at Bragg's newsroom.

The bicycle men are talking strongly of forming an organization and indulging in one or two runs this spring. Quite a large per cent. of the students own machines, and much benefit and profit might be obtained from a live club. F. M. Ramsdell, '93, and F. O. Plummer, '94, are pushing the matter.

Every pleasant afternoon the base ball men are busy practising and interest in the inter-class games is waxing strong. Tuesdays the Middlers and Preps crossed bats "for fun." The much boasted prowess of the latter's team did not materialize, and despite the vigorous mouth exertions of the Prep. captain, only two runs were scored against the Middler's twelve.

The first of the championship games will occur on Bliss' Field one week from today, between '94 and '91, and also between '92 and '93. All friends interested, especially the ladies, are invited to attend.

Dr. Kimball is now at Mt. Holyoke where for a fortnight he gives a series of lectures in Physics, mostly on the subject of Light.

As H. L. Dadmun has resigned from the position, E. A. Taylor, '91, has been elected captain of the team to go to Springfield.

Wellesley.

The spring term began April 6, after a recess of ten days.

In place of the regular prayer meeting Thursday evening, Miss Cushman of North China spoke of her work there.

Saturday afternoon Mrs. Lincoln of Boston, who has done so much in the effort to raise the character of tenement houses, told us "How to Begin Work in a Tenement House."

Rev. Mr. Sheldon Jackson gave very interesting lectures Saturday and Sunday evenings upon "Alaska."

Monday evening a debate was given in the chapel by members of the Junior class on the subject "National Prohibition Furnishes a Desirable Solution of the Temperance Problem." A vote was taken upon the question which was in the affirmative.

Chautauqua.

At the meeting of the Bryant Chautauqua Circle last Tuesday evening the chief topic for consideration was Iron and its geology. Mr. John Alton spoke of its wide distribution over the surface of the earth and through the geological ages. He exhibited numerous specimens of iron in its natural state and explained the processes by which it is rendered available for manufacturing purposes.

The last half hour of the meeting was profitably spent in studying the History of the Church in the United States. Four members of the circle gave summaries of as many topics on this subject under the direction of Miss N. K. Richards.

In Black and White.

You may admire the colors from the brush of the finest genius; but after all, you always come back to studies in black and white as the most restful and lasting. The line engraving and the etching can never be dispossessed. To gratify a taste for this last class of art you must call at the Davis Art Company's at 18 Pearl Street and inspect the collection of high class work. They are remarkable proofs and very valuable landscape and figure pieces, on Japanese parchment. Mr. Crocker will take pleasure in showing these specimens of artistic work. Give him a call.

Methodist Pastors.

In the general shaking up which Methodist policy demands annually, our city gets her share, three ministers who have been here for three years each are sent away while new ones take their places.

At Webster Square, the interests of things spiritual have been looked after, for three years, the old allotted pastorate of a Methodist minister, by the

Rev. Henry Dorr.

With his smoothly shaven face his clerical garb of black, and his well rounded figure, he certainly will be missed in our ways and lives. He goes to East Saugus while the Rev. W. N. Richardson from Athol takes his place.

Our late pastor is a New Yorker, having spent his boyhood away up in the St. Lawrence region. Clayton was his early home, the place where railroad travellers take the boat for a trip down the river. A boyhood which has Northern New York memories is worth remembering and Mr. Dorr never wearies of recalling his earlier life. Like so many successful men, his earliest recollections go back to a farm and he is still a land holder in the First Agricultural County in the Union.

His schooling was had in the village of Clayton and in Belleville, whence he went to the Theological department of the Boston University, just moved down from Concord, N. H. As he tells the story himself, his first sermon was to the inmates of a state prison; but we must remember that the Master was sent to call not the righteous, but sinners to repentance. He joined the N. H. Conference and in 1870, had the hands of Bishop Matthew Simpson laid upon his head, receiving the ordination of a deacon.

His joining the conference seems to have been in 1868 and his first appointment was to South Acworth in the Granite State. There he remained two years. Thence he was sent to Hinsdale where he served three years. Salem claimed him next with a stay of two years. Then came Suncook with two years and next Newmarket. Here he did one of his best works, succeeding in paying off a great debt of $20,000. Not only was the debt raised, but he succeeded in placing the church on a most substantial footing. He was three years in Haverhill, Mass., and the same time in Claremont, N. H.

At this time, 1885, he was supernumerary for one year. That word is Methodist for taking a rest. He was then, in 1886 transferred to the New England Conference and was stationed in West Quincy. Thence he came to our city, succeeding the Rev. L. W. Staples.

REV. HENRY DORR.

REV. JOHN GALBRAITH.

In his Worcester residence, he has diligently labored for the welfare of his charge and it has prospered under his direction. In addition to his supervision of the Webster Square Church, he has looked after the interests of outlying posts. He goes away from his people followed by the most zealous good wishes. Aside from his pastorate duties, he has been a conspicuous figure in advancing the cause of temperance and in the Amendment Campaign, he was one of the hardest workers. A member of the Third Party, he has no fear of making known his sentiments.

The name of Dorr is one considerably noted in New England and especially in Rhode Island where a certain Governor, thus appellationed, inaugurated a war, unfortunate, as far as he was concerned, but which eventuated in the enfranchisement of a large element in that somewhat peculiarly governed commonwealth. To pronounce the word properly, you must sound distinctly the r r at the end of it. Should you fall into the slipshod, dudish way of disregarding this very essential letter, you will make the name that which Alger gave his famous story, with the prefix Marjorie, which is just no name at all. LIGHT and our departing pastor demand the complete restoration of the letter r to all its rights, titles and emoluments.

Mr. Dorr has been twice married. In 1868, he wedded Miss Louisa A. Flint in Auburn, N. H. In 1877, following the death of his first wife, he was married to Miss Emma Elmira Tolle; this in Newmarket, N. H. For ten years, Mrs. Dorr had been a teacher in the Boston schools and so was well equipped to become a Methodist minister's wife. They have one child, only, a girl of about eleven years.

Mr. Dorr like some other clergymen of his faith, knows a good horse when he sees it and is not averse to owning and driving such. His boyish training in a stock country will never lose its influence. This fondness for equine excellence has subjected him to dangers, not a few, and as a result there is a halt in his step today and doubtless will continue to be for many a tomorrow. At least once in Worcester, he has fallen a victim to the same accident that befell Phaeton, in other words he was thrown out, but he hung on, in fact to "stick" is a prominent characteristic of our friend.

Rev. John Galbraith.

Ireland has sent to America some of our best blood. It is said even indigenous plants are improved by transplanting to new localities. Certainly nothing could be better than the stock which gave us Andrew Jackson in early and Logan and McCosh in later days. It was this Scotch-Irish pedigree that produced the late pastor of Grace Church. Less than forty years ago, he was born in Enniskillen and what a stream of Irish history flows before us at mention of the name. His father was from Edinboro, the "Auld Rukie," of loving, loyal Scotch and, for years, he followed the business of a cattle drover in his Celtic home.

Such instruction as the national schools could give, he received, but it was not over much. He has still just the least curl to his tongue, giving the flavor to his speech that no one, not to the manner born, need hope to acquire. His figure in our streets is a marked one, for he is as tall and erect as a Queen's guardsman and his eyes, hair and whiskers are as dark as Erebus. There is nothing of indecision in his gait. His mind was made up before he started.

The advantages of the western world were early presented to his mind and he determined to cross the ocean and find what there might be in reserve for him. So when he was seventeen years old, like many another Irish youth, he took passage for America. An elder brother had preceded him, here; but from him he received very little help. Whatever he has done or what he has become, he has largely carved out with his own hands.

He became a mill boy in Lowell and though he may not, like N. P. Banks, go from bobbin to the governor's chair, nevertheless he just as faithfully did his work in that famous City of Spindles. He good naturedly met all the fun of his associates who saw in the new arrival a butt for lots of fun. After three years of this work, he was converted and then came the crowning change in his life. He was no longer satisfied with following, he must lead. So off to Wilbraham he goes, and there studied hard, till 1875, when he was ready to enter Wesleyan University. His college course was a successful one, ending in 1879, having received in this time the prize for the Junior oration. He was a member of the Psi Upsilon Society and an enthusiastic fellow in whatever he undertook. Three years later he received his degree of A. M. He studied, for a time, in the Boston University and from it received the degree of Ph. D., a title, however, that he does not use.

All these years, our pastor had earned his bread in the sweat of his face or by the spoken word. He knows what self help is, for he has learned the lesson o'er and o'er. There was no advantage that poverty could not yield that he did not have intensified. The year of his graduation marked his admission to the New England conference. It was 1879 that he was ordained deacon in Trinity Church, at the hands of Bishop Jesse T. Peck. Then in 1882, in our own Grace Church, he was advanced to elder's orders and Bishop Simpson's was the ordaining hand.

His first pastorate was at South Hadley Falls. Thence he went to Chester and then to East Hampton. It was a long move that he made next for he was sent down on the coast to Ipswich, but his three years there, 1885-6-7, were very happy ones. Then came the removal to Worcester and his care of Grace Church. For these years, 1888-9-'90-'91, it is not too much to say that no better years are recorded in the history of the organization. Situated as the edifice is in the very center of a great city, it has exceptional advantages, which, it was hoped, Mr. Galbraith would be allowed to improve upon for two years more; but to him a departure seemed desirable and so the parsonage must have a new occupant. He leaves behind him a most fragrant memory and many young people will never cease to recall with pleasure his pastorate.

When a school boy in Wilbraham, he met his future wife Miss Mary C. Weed of Torrington, Conn., the same old town that gave John Brown to the world and humanity.

They have two children, Mamie and Emma, rare favorites with the other little folks in the church.

Like his associate, Henry Dorr of the Webster Square Church, Mr. G. is a strenuous temperance worker, but unlike Mr. D. he is not a Third Party man. He believes in fighting the demon, intemperance, in ways to him seemingly best. He prepared the Report on Temperance in the late session of the Conference. In a word, Mr. Galbraith knows what he believes and he has the courage of his convictions. In his new home in Boston he will find warm hearts and loving friends but none truer, better than many of those left behind in Grace Church, Worcester.

Rev. William H. Thomas.

LIGHT regrets its inability to present a picture of this gentleman at this time, for certainly, in Methodist circles, no Worcester clergyman has achieved greater distinction in many a year than the pastor of Trinity Church. In going to Lowell, Dr. Thomas follows the example of his predecessor, Mr. Perrin, though the latter went to Worthen Street, Dr. Thomas to St. Paul, succeeding there a former Worcester County boy, the Rev. Charles E. Davis reared in Webster.

Dr. Thomas was originally a New Hampshire man and for several years was a member of the Conference bearing the name of that State. His first appointment was at New Salem in 1860-61. He was at Laconia in 1862. This was in war times and then our young minister went into the army as Chaplain of the Fourth Regiment of New Hampshire troops. This organization served chiefly in the extreme South though it ended its career in front of Petersburg. As Chaplain Thomas resigned in June, 1864, he did not see the regiment quite through its service. Afterwards he was, for a time, with the Christian Commission, and in that capacity acquired a wide knowledge of the doings of the Army of the Potomac.

Returning from the front, he was stationed in 1864-5-6 at St. Paul's Church, Manchester. He was then transferred to the New York East Conference and sent to Huntington, Conn., for two years. Next he was three years at the First Place Church in Brooklyn. In 1872-3 he was in Norwalk, Conn.; then from 1874 to '76 he was at Beekman Hill, N. Y.; two years at West Winsted, Conn., and in '79-80 at Mamaroneck, N. Y. Norwalk, Conn., '82-83-84 was his last appointment in this Conference as in 1885 he was transferred to the N. E. Conference and stationed over the Harvard Street Church in Cambridge. This, his first pastorate in the State, was a very successful one. Among the members here was H. O. Houghton of the famous Boston book firm.

In 1888, he came to our city and his record since needs not description in LIGHT. As a preacher, as a user of good English, there are few men any where his equal. In fact, it may be said of the three retiring clergymen that the men are not numerous who can preach equally well with them Sunday after Sunday. Dr. Thomas has been prominent in his interest for local matters, especially the Associated Charities of which enterprise he was one of the prime movers. While devoted to the church of his choice and filled with zeal for its future, knowing full its past, he is exceedingly broad in his sympathies for all bodies that claim to be working for the cause of Christian progress.

There are three children living in the Thomas family. The oldest son died only recently in Norwalk, Conn. Of the surviving children the two daughters are students in Boston University, the younger, Mabel having been graduated from our High School.

The now, only son, is a pupil in the High School, where he has been taking the course leading to the Technical School.

In going from us to his new pastorate, Dr. Thomas must carry some pleasant memories of the three years spent here. He certainly will leave an impression of finished pulpit work that will not fade for many a day. Trinity church has had many preachers; but in the whole number, no name can be mentioned before that of Dr. Wm. H. Thomas as a constant factor in church work and enterprise.

The New Preachers.

The Rev. J. D. Pickles who comes to Trinity is a graduate of Boston University whose first appointment was had in 1879. He comes to us, after a five years pastorate at Lynn Common, the oldest Methodist Church in New England. He is recognized as one of the foremost younger men in the Conference. He is an active and energetic worker in the Epworth League.

The Rev. William T. Worth is a Nantucket native. He was in the class of '60 at Wesleyan, but he left college in his senior year to join the, then, Providence now New England Southern Conference. The college gave him the degree of A. M. in 1870. He comes to Worcester from Hyde Park. The probabilities are that his coming will prove advantageous to the church.

The Rev. W. N. Richardson, joined the Maine Conference in 1859 and in 1871 was transferred to this. In the New England Conference, he has held such appointments as Holyoke, Northampton and he comes to Worcester from Athol where he was sent in 1887.

With the exception of the coming of the Rev. T. Leveque to the French Mission to succeed Chaplain Beaudry the foregoing covers the changes in Worcester Methodist pulpits, for this year.

Mrs. Sarah L. Hammond.

January 7, 1891, this lady died in Brooklyn, Conn. A daughter of the late William Greenleaf of this city, she had spent her girlhood and early womanhood in our midst. At first a pupil, she afterwards became a teacher in the High School. About thirty-five years since, she was married to Henry Kirk Hammond, a merchant of Norwich, Conn. Afterward, he was for a while, a dealer in coal in Worcester. He died three weeks ago and his remains were brought to Rural Cemetery for burial. Some months since, Mrs. H. came to Worcester and boarded for several weeks on Walnut Street. At this time, she gave the bulk of her library to the City Hospital; but sundry texts in different languages she gave to the High School. She seemed anxious to revive some of the memories of other days. Her former home was the white house, long standing at the angle on Bowdoin Street just west of the former residence of George Sumner and which went further west to make room for Mr. S.'s old house, when he built his new one.

The will of Mrs. Hammond was probated in Brooklyn, Conn. The amount involved was not large. It appears that a legacy left to her husband and after his death to be divided among certain societies in Hartford and elsewhere, lapsed by his earlier death and went to her legal heirs. The remainder was given to certain heirs and friends named in the instrument. Further particulars if desired can be obtained from the Register of Probate in Brooklyn, Conn.

The Ware-Pratt Company

Invite attention to an extensive display of

Fine Clothing for Men, Boys and Children.

The Latest Fashions, Exclusive Styles from our own workshops, Honest Goods and the Lowest Prices, Grade and Quality considered.

Our Custom Department is teeming with the Newest styles, Colorings and Materials, which go to make up the finest lines we have ever shown.

The Ware-Pratt Company,

MANUFACTURERS AND RETAILERS,

408 and 412 Main Street,

Worcester.

Now is the Time to Buy a

CARRIAGE !

at a Small Profit.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,

OPP. THE COMMON.

A. S. NEWCOMB,

Market and Oyster House,

Fish of all kinds. Planter and Shipper
Choice Grade of Oysters. Telephone conn:
on 206-2.

223 MAIN ST., WORCESTER, MASS

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *

NO. 156 MAIN STREET,
H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

Heywood Foundry Comp'y,

GARDNER, MASS.

This Heater is unsurpassed for excellence of workmanship and is the best in the market. Now is the time to secure estimates. The following is one of a great number of testimonials from our leading citizens:

WORCESTER, MASS., April 12, 1890.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER:

Gentlemen—Having used one of your Heaters for two seasons with satisfaction, I can recommend it to anyone, as it will do all they claim. Respectfully,

JOHN E. ALLEN, 917 Main Street.

Branch Office, 39 Pearl Street, Worcester.

NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.

Incorporated in the City of Worcester, Sept. 17, 1889. A great co-operative institution and fraternal order, paying sick and accident benefits and an endowment of $500 at the end of five years. Over 600 members in Worcester; three local assemblies, and two more in process of formation. $8760 already distributed in sick benefits. $14,331.63 reserve.

For full particulars, and documents carefully explaining the plan and scope of this rapidly growing fraternity, call on or address J. O. H. WOODMAN, Secy., 339 Main St., Worcester, Mass. Burnside Building.

Lamont & Whittemore,

39 PEARL ST.

LEADING * SAFETY * BICYCLES.

Adopted by U. S. Government. Cycle repairing, also Fine Lock and Key Work. Open Evenings.

LIGHT

VOL. III. NO. 8. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

The Pleasant Street Baptist Church.

Blair, I photographer.

Stephen C. Earle, Architect.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

Think it over, but see for yourselves the best line of

Chamber * Furniture

ever shown in this city. We are securing these goods by the carload, they are of superior finish, excellent material and every desirable wood. CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES beautiful and cheap. THE STANDARD FOLDING BED---It is the best. THE LE NARD HARD WOOD REFRIGERATOR---See it before you buy and you will not buy a pine one. We keep everything in the Furniture line and Upholstery Goods in great variety. We sell everything at the lowest prices and on liberal terms of credit, but make a SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO CASH BUYERS. Call and see at 247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

MEMORIAL DAY.

It will soon be here. Are you prepared for it? Have you anything that you require being done for that day, in the nature of

MONUMENTS or TABLETS

We most respectfully solicit an inspection of our large assortment of Monuments and Tablets, in Marble, Granite and Statuary. More than

$25,000 worth

of Original Designs, manufactured from the very best material, and by competent and skilled workmen. It would be to your interests to call early and make your selections, so as to have your work executed and set up in time for Memorial Day. Our prices will be found very reasonable, and our designs original.

BOSTON MARBLE

and GRANITE WORKS.

53 Central St., Worcester.

C. H. DRAPER,
Livery, Feed and Truck Stable.

Three Large Moving Wagons. Baggage Wagon always ready. Furniture and Piano Moving. Telephone 118-5.

161 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

COMPOUND * * OXYGEN * * * TREATMENT

Nature's best tonic in all debilitated conditions of the system.

Our OXYGEN is carefully prepared in accordance with the most scientific principles known to chemistry.

It is prepared by a practical chemist who has had four years' experience in a chemical laboratory.

Each patient will receive the personal and conscientious attention of a regular graduated physician, one who has been six years in medical practice.

We solicit investigation.

368 1-2 Main St., or 1 Elm St.

WORCESTER OXYGEN CO.

DR. J. W. GOULD. T. D. BRISTOL, M. D.

Rand, McNally & Co.'s New Atlas of the World.

304 pages 11½ x 14½ inches, 152 pages of Maps, 152 pages of Diagrams, History, Gazetteer, Statistics, and 1 Illustrations. An Index containing names of 89,827 Cities, Towns, Villages and Post Offices, in the United States, with census returns for 1890. Bound in best embossed cloth, in a handsome manner for the very low price of $3.75. Anyone wishing for a copy will please address a postal card, giving residence, to CHARLES WILDER Agent for Worcester No. 80 Lincoln St.

N. G. TUCKER.

W. F. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON,
SAN T-RY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.

56 Pleasant Street,

Worcester, Mass.

WHENEVER GOOD

Eatables

are desired they will always
be found at

John A. Hartigan's

47 and 51 Pleasant Street.

Simple!
Durable!
Odorless!
Clean!

It saves Time,
Labor and Fuel,
(two-thirds cost
per hr. for fuel.)

Manufacturers
Guarantee every Iron.

TRY ONE.

For Sale at 311 Main Street, Room 13. Liberal Commissions allowed to agents. Agents wanted throughout the United States. SQUIER & BEALS, Manufacturing Agents, 311 Main Street, Room 13.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H. Howland, D. D. S.

Dentists.

11 Pleasant St.,

Worcester, Mass

Residence, 61 West Street.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1891.

No. 8

Stronger than the dark, the light;
Stronger than the wrong, the right.

—Rev. Phillips Brooks.

Though our Boston Divine were to write Bishop before his name, he could give us no healthier, stronger promptings. Phillips Brooks has done much to push the world further into the sunshine.

Worcester representatives have had a right glorious time on their Southern trip.

It is a noble thing to wipe out all traces of the rancor and bitterness engendered by the War and for brethren to dwell together in unity.

The assemblage of Sixth Regiment Veterans in Worcester was a notable gathering. How our blood tingled at the sight of the men not so old as we might expect them to be.

They marched well to "Maryland my Maryland." The sun shone out hospitably and when they went up into Continental Hall to the tune of "Marching through Georgia" their step was almost as brisk as that of thirty years ago.

But all our wars are not with carnal weapons. There are every day fights that do not count. Valiant hearts have done their best to prevent the granting of certain licenses. That they did not succeed is not their fault.

Just two victories were won, or better just two requests were granted. There will be no licensed selling of intoxicants at the Lake nor on Thomas street. Concessions in one case to the Swedish church, in the other to the young people who ask that the Lake may be safe.

Further still, the beautiful Lake is all the more a desirable home for those who have gone there to purchase residences. Doubtless evilly disposed people will fail to respect the law; but that is not the fault of citizens.

It is claimed that the powers involved are disposed to look favorable on the proposition to water the streets at public expense. Such action would go far to sustain the reputation of good government that this city has long maintained.

Not only will homes be cleaner and neater under a rule which gives moisture to the just and unjust alike, but who know how many disease germs may be thus destroyed. "There's salvation in baptis'n' drops," the Negro sang and his sacrifice made men happier in yellow fever days. By all means, water the streets.

Those good women who manage the White Ribbon, the organ of the 2d W. C. T. U. do not intend that any sins of omission shall be laid at their door. Their April number is full of suggestive matter. They are asking to what extent the law is heeded which directs that alcoholic effects shall be clearly and fully taught in our schools.

Through our schools, the Demon of Drink is to be met and overthrown. Legislation alone will not do this. We must have an appreciative constituency and this can be engendered in no way so well as by leading aright, the childish minds. That teacher who does the correct thing in this direction will eventually have stars in the crown of his rejoicing.

When the Natural History Society secured the services of James E. Dennis to canvass for the desired fund, they did the very best thing possible. Mr. Dennis knows Worcester and he knows how to push any enterprise with which he may be connected. If any man can place the society on a secure financial footing, through persisted well directed effort, he will do it.

There is a significant lull in the matter of the plant for the Bigelow gift to the Institute. Let us hope that this will not fall through on account of lack of Worcester enthusiasm. It must be that the hundreds of men who have accumulated fortunes here will see to it that this well meant proffer of Mr. Bigelow is not long allowed to go begging for a chance to be utilized.

Well, Summer is almost here and what provision has been made for Young Worcester? Where can he swim? Where can he run and sport and not annoy the elderly people who see no need of such exercise? Wouldn't a swimming bath at Salisbury's pond be a good investment? Nor would we confine its benefits to boys alone. There is flowing water and a moderate outlay would make thousands happy. What an addition such baths would be to Institute Park. There are times, when nothing less than a plunge into the water itself will satisfy nature's demands.

That group of boys, with ball and bats, strolling off on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons must have diversion. It must be fun and play, not work. Blessed is that city that realizes this and provides the means of gratification. There will be precious little mischief where surplus vigor has been worked off in running and consequent perspiration. Johnny seeks his little bed ready for sleep, innocent restful sleep if he has had a good chance to stretch his legs. Now that the License incubus is off the minds of our Alderman, will not the City Government consider play ground for the children?

Advice to a Young Man.

So you were a little too pert, and spoke without thinking, did you, my son? And you got picked up quite suddenly on your statement, eh? Oh, well, that's all right; that happens to older men than you every day. I have noticed that you have a very positive way of filing a decision where other men state an opinion, and you frequently make a positive assertion where older men merely express a belief.

But never mind; you are young. You will know less as you grow older. "Dont I mean you will know more?" Heaven forbid, my boy. No, indeed; I mean that you will know less. You will never know more than you do; never. If you live to be 10,000 years old, you will never again know as much as you do now. No hoary-headed sage, whose long and studious years were spent in reading men and books, ever new as much as a boy of your age. A girl of fifteen knows about as much, but then she gets over it sooner and more easily. "Does it cause a pang, then, to get rid of early knowledge?" Ah, my boy, it does. Pulling eye teeth and molars will seem like pleasant recreation alongside of shedding off great solid slabs and layers of wisdom and knowledge that now press upon you like geological strata. "But how are you to get rid of all this superincumbent wisdom?" Oh, easily enough, my boy; just keep on airing it; that's the best way. It won't stand constant use, and it disintegrates rapidly on exposure to air.—Burdette, in the Brooklyn Eagle.

What Inspired "Ben Hur"

Talking with an intimate friend of General Lew Wallace the other day, I learned the true inspiration of his famous novel, "Ben Hur." "Wallace was on an Eastern-bound train," said my informant, and while going from the drawing room-car he passed the open door of a compartment in which sat Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. 'Come in,' said the latter. 'I'm lonely in here, and want some one to chat with.' Wallace entered and seated himself.

'All right, colonel,' he said, 'what shall we chat about?' 'Lots of things,' replied Ingersoll. 'Is there a future life?' Looking out of the window dreamily, as the express sped on, he answered his own query 'I don't know—do you?' 'Was Christ the son of God?' 'I don't know—do you?' He paused, looked keenly at Wallace. The general was a little embarrassed by the abruptness of the great infidel's interrogatories. He replied: 'Really, Ingersoll, I have never given much thought or study to the questions you propound. I had a Christian training, and I have always tacily accepted them.' 'Indeed!' said Col. Ingersoll. 'Why, man, you surprise me! They are vital issues. I have studied the subject thoroughly. Every man ought to. Now take my advice and look into the matter. You'll find you will agree with me.' 'I went away from this interview both embarrassed and mortified,' said the general, 'that I did not feel competent to discuss so important a matter with so learned a thinker. I made up my mind that I would never place myself again in so embarrassing a situation. I took down my books and read every authority I could lay my hands on. After a year's study, so far as agreeing with the great agnostic in his expressed opinions, I wrote 'Ben Hur.' That is my reply to him!'

Waste not, Want not.—Poor Richard.

LIGHT
WORCESTER, MASS.

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 339 Main Street, Burnside Building,
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Hereafter, it will be understood that all articles in LIGHT, not ascribed, save recipes,
squibs, fashion and household notes were
written for this paper.

Friends sending in manuscripts will not complain if they are not printed at once. There are many waiting. Yet LIGHT is always glad
to receive communications and, if meritorious,
to print them.

Away from Quincy, Ill., comes The Commonwealth, a very good example of amateur journalism. It reflects credit on Frederick
B. Noonan, editor and publisher.

LIGHT acknowledges obligations to Major
F. G. Stiles for copies of Baltimore and Washington papers, giving, in full the details of the Light Infantry trip.

LIGHT will print next week the paper on "Separate Homes," read before the Women's Club, last Wednesday. The theme is well worth every readers' attention. Let us have homes of our own.

At the late Grammar School examinations, there seemed to be a decided waking up on the question of alcohol and tobacco. LIGHT purposes to print some of the questions next week.

The Highland Cadet comes to us as bright, bracing and breezy as ever. It affords an excellent vent for stored up literary energies.
The school which it represents is making men of its boys.

About Folks.

The Bryant Chautauqua Circle will meet next Tuesday evening at 7.45 at Becker's Business College, Clark's Block. The subjects for study are French literature and geology.

The newspaper fraternity of Worcester is soon to lose one of its brightest lights, in the person of Mr. James Shields Stewart, who has resigned his position on the Daily Telegram, and will sail for Scotland, on the 2d of May, with his wife and family. Mr. Stewart blew in upon Worcester in an eddy of the great blizzard of March, 1888, and has spent most of the time since in this city, with one interruption. He came to America a fully-fledged newspaper man, having been a sub-editor on a paper in Glasgow, and like most British newspaper men, he wrote a speedy short-hand. Possessing a fecundity of wit and a sharpness of sight in seeing "good news"

which would do credit to the keenest Yankee,
Mr. Stewart was not long in making himself a most valuable member of the staff of the paper to which his services were given. He did some clever pieces of work, and won the reputation of being able to get any story for which he might be sent. Various consideration led Mr. Stewart to remove to Boston, after a considerable time spent in the Telegram service, and here he entered the employ of Cupples & Hurd, the publishers, as a reader and critic, work congenial to his taste and in which he displayed exceptional ability. The embarrassment and dissolution of the firm left
Mr. Stewart with its successor, Mr. Cupples.
Finally, however, he returned to Worcester, and in company with a former Telegram associate, bought the Daily Times, and started it upon a new phase of its much-varied career. The venture was not a financial success, and having swung around a pretty wide circle,
Mr. Stewart got back to the editorial room of the Telegram, where he has been a fixture ever since. He is a descriptive writer of great power, and also possesses the knack of getting the most out of a discourse or speech in the shortest space. "Shields" is one of the best-natured men alive, and delights in a good story or joke as he does in a good dinner. He is always looking on the bright side of things and has never been known to have the "blues."
He is a family man, now, for his sweetheart followed him across the ocean, and sometime since they became the parents of a likely boy.
Mr. Stewart goes back to the land of Burns with plans matured for entering upon newspaper work there. His experience in America has been full of incident and fruitful in many ways, and when he judiciously infuses the American newspaper idea into the journalism of Scotland, he may make his fellow-countrymen stare, but it will be with envy and admiration. Mr. Stewart leaves many friends in Worcester who wish him every possible bit of good luck, a safe voyage and a long life across the sea, which should be interrupted at some future day by a visit to his friends in America.

The Winslow Tennis Club this week elected
Mr. Arthur Bartelle president, in place of Mr.
George O. Bridges, resigned, and elected Mr.
Jason Nourse secretary. The club has prospects for a bright season ahead, and its courts will soon present a lively scene. It is hoped to have an opening next Saturday, if weather favors and the arrangements can be completed at that time. The new president can hardly be more energetic or efficient than his predecessor, but he proposes to put a lot of solid work into the club, and there is every reason to think the club will move forward with a boom.

The annual exhibition of the Art Students'

Club opened Monday evening with a reception to the members and friends. The attendance was the largest it has ever been at the opening night. During the remainder of the week, the exhibition has been open to the public. It will continue to the end of this month and longer if the attendance warrants. Necessarily, where the experience of the artists exhibiting varies from one year upwards the quality of the pictures must vary greatly. But most of them are very good. The pictures are principally oils and water colors, though pastels, crayons, wash drawings, pencil, pen and ink and charcoal drawings are shown. There are forty-two exhibitors, as follows: George E. Aldrich, Addison L. Bemis, Anna Ballard,
Mary E. Bothwell, J. B. Crocker, Mrs. Isabel
A. Coombs, Nellie W. Coombs, Mary Davis,
Mabel E. Dickinson, Clara M. Davis, Frank
J. Darrah, Grace Everett, Mrs. E. L. Getchell,
Anna C. Freeland, George E. Gladwin, J. H.
Greenwood, William T. Hunt, Ava G. Hovey,
Charles M. Harrington, Carrie A. Hildreth,
Eben Harrington, Janet L. Howard, Herbert
L. Jillson, Lucia N. Jennison, Mrs. E. A. Kent,
F. A. Knowlton, Charles H. Lincoln, Albert
Maxfield, Annie W. Munger, L. N. Nason,
Eugene A. O'Connor, May Phillips, Grace A.
Parker, Mrs. M. M. Page, Charles W. Sanderson, J. M. Stone, Jennie Lea Southwick, Edward Topanelian, S. P. Rolt Triscott, Jessie E. Upson, Henry Woodward, Miriam Washburn. The number of pictures shown is about one hundred and forty. It would take considerable space to speak separately of all the good pieces but among those whose work is especially good are Addison L. Bemis, oils, J. B. Crocker, crayons, Frank
J. Darrah, oils, J. H. Greenwood, oil,
William T. Hunt, water colors, Eben Harrington, oil, Charles H. Lincoln, water colors,
Albert Maxfield, oil and water colors, L. N.
Nason, oil, Eugene A. O'Connor, crayons,
Charles W. Sanderson, water colors, J. M.
Stone, oil, Miss Southwick, water colors and
S. P. Rolt Triscott, water colors. A sketch by Miss Mary Davis is unique in that it is the only one of the real impressionist order.
Both the drawing and the coloring are well done. Several others border on impressionism but none are as good examples of that school as Miss Davis' sketch. The work shown by George E. Aldrich and Charles M. Harrington, exhibitors for the first time this year, is worthy of mention. Mr. Aldrich exhibits two wash drawings, a water color and an oil, on none of which more than two or three hours were spent. Mr. Harrington shows a water color, an ink drawing and twelve pencil sketches of "Old Nantucket." Miss Grace A.
Parker's Byzantine Romanesque design for stained glass window attracts considerable attention and the praise it receives is well merited.
The catalogue of the exhibition reflects much credit on Mr. Eben Harrington, who had it in charge. It is printed in large type on fine paper and is illustrated with sketches drawn by members of the club.

It pays to patronize General
Agent Geo. Y. Lancaster, for
Railroad and Steamship Tickets,
Drafts, and Insurance. Office,
434 Main street, Worcester.

Church Notes.

CONGREGATIONAL.

At Salem Street Church Tuesday evening Mr. B. D. Allen gave his interesting illustrated lecture on Beethoven. Mr. Allen read a sketch of the life and works of the great tone musician, introducing vocal and mental illustrations at different times. The first illustration was the Pastoral Sonata, Op. 28, arranged for Liszt organ and pianoforte, played by Mr. Allen and Miss M. L. Starr. The second consisted of two songs to poems of Goethe, Know'st thou the Land and Dry not ye tears. They were sung by Mrs. F. W. Ruggles. The Grand Sonata, Op. 53, was played by Mr. Allen and Miss Starr upon the pianoforte. Mrs. Ruggles gave another song entitled The Quail. The Overture to Prometheus, Op. 43, arranged for Liszt organ and pianoforte, four hands, was the final number and it was played by Mr. Allen and Misses Starr and E. G. Whittemore.

An error was made last week in saying that this is the last in the church course. As originally announced it would be the last but Mr. Lansing has not yet given his lecture, he being ill at the time assigned. He will give it sometime within a few weeks.

At Plymouth Church tomorrow Rev. Dr. McCullagh will preach morning and evening. The evening sermon will be the third of the series on the book of Esther.

A Colonial tea and old folks' concert was very successfully given Tuesday afternoon at Park Church. Supper was served from six to eight and at eight a "lyste of sacred likewise worldly songs" was sung by the church choir, the singers being appropriately dressed in old fashioned costumes. The attendance was very large.

The semi-annual meeting of the Women's Home Missionary Association was held at Plymouth Church Wednesday. There were morning and afternoon sessions, with addresses and discussions on missionary work in this country. Among the speakers were Miss Alice Freeman Palmer, ex-president of Wellesley College, Dr. Boynton, Rev. W. G. Puddefoot, Mrs. James Hill, Miss Lucy Wheelock and Rev. S. S. Matthews of the West Education Commission.

METHODIST.

The girls Mission Band of Trinity Church will give an entertainment next Monday evening. It will serve as a farewell to the former pastor and a welcome to the new.

Grace. The Ladies Aid Society will give a reception to the new pastor, Rev. W. F. Worth, at the church, next Thursday evening.

UNIVERSALIST.

All Souls Universalist, Kilby Street, Rev. F. A. Gray, pastor, preaches at 10.30 a.m., and 7 p.m. Subjects, morning, "Balancing the Gain and Loss Account;" evening, "The Judgment Test is Love to Man." Music by the new male quartet. Sunday School at 12 m.

Y. M. C. A.

The boys' orchestra has been organized as follows: First violins, H. Stevens, Arthur H.

Eklund, Arthur Rodier; second violins, Fred W. Bailey, E. S. Whitney, R. B. Earle, Frank Dillingham; violoncello, V. E. Sorlin, flute, J. Rood, Geo. Moore; cornet, Frank E. Robbins; trombone. F. H. Behrens; piano, Walter W. Farmer.

The financial canvass is now being made. So far it has been very successful.

The second number of the Association paper will appear about May 1.

The prayer meeting tomorrow will be led by Edward E. Tubbs. At both the boy's meeting at three and the men's at four the speakers will be Evangelist R. M. Taft. There will be singing by W. M. Leland and B. F. Southwick.

At the meeting of the board of directors, Thursday evening, steps were taken toward having resolutions adopted on the death of P. L. Moen, who was chairman of the trustees. It was also voted to send Secretary Gale to the National convention which will be held at Kansas City April 30 to May 8.

Secretary Gale will speak at Waltham tomorrow morning, at the Cambridge Association building in the afternoon and in a church in Charlestown in the evening. Monday he will start from Boston for Kansas City.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

A Scotch concert was given Thursday evening in Continental Hall under the auspices of Clan Scott, No. 85, O. S. C. The vocalists were Mrs. J. W. Mitchell, Miss Luella Flagg, T. B. Hamilton and J. H. Cafferty, with Mrs. Carrie King-Hunt, pianist. During the evening an address on the benefit to be derived from membership in the order was given by Chairman T. P. Bryce. Dancing followed the concert.

Alfred S. Roe gave the people at Lake View "Just a Glimpse of Europe" in their church last Tuesday evening.

Clara Barton tent, Daughter's of Veterans gave its first public entertainment, Thursday evening in Horticultural Hall, there being a very large attendance. The entertainment consisted of a three act drama, "Anita's Trials, or Our Girls in Camp." Dancing was enjoyed until a late hour.

LEICESTER.

The W. C. T. U. meeting at the Methodist church parlor, Thursday afternoon was very interesting, and the ladies are alive on the Temperance question. Jeremy Collier says, Temperance keeps the senses clear and unembarrassed, and makes them seize the object with more keenness and satisfaction. It appears with life in the face, and decorum in the person; it gives you the command of your head, secures your health, and preserves you in a condition for business.

The women mean business in the temperance cause and if they are compared to the old proverb about having too many irons in the fire, it is abominable. It is right that they "have all in, shovel, tongs and poker."

April 24.

BETTINA.

Chaplain Louis N. Beandry, formerly of this city is now located in Chicago, 63 Court street Englewood. He is there as he was here working in the interest of the French Mission.

School and College.

Polytechnic.

Division B of the Junior class, instead of working in the shop last Tuesday morning, spent the forenoon with Supt. Higgins and Foreman Mitchell, examining several elevators about the city, which the Institute has put in. The one in the State Mutual Building on Main street was first visited, and its workings were fully explained to the class. Afterwards that in George F. Hewitt's Block on Foster street, which was undergoing repairs, and also two others which are being set up in the new envelope shop on Water street.

Dr. Jordan of Clark University is to lecture before the Sanitary Engineering Club, Friday May 22, upon Bacteriology and the contamination of water supply by Bacteria.

The Athletic Directors have voted to allow only past or present members of the Inter-Collegiate team, tennis champions in singles, and members of the institute nine and eleven, to wear a W on their jersey. Hereafter this initial displayed on the manly breast of some Tech, will stand for more than it has in the past.

The first of the cross country runs was a big success, and the second, at the time of writing, gives promise of still better results. The Seniors as every one expected came out ahead; '93 surprised itself and the school by the close second which it made; and the good work of Gallagher '94 marked him as a not unlikely successor to Dadmun. The Juniors were greatly pleased at the showing they made, and will strive hard to even outdo '91 and thus capture the banner.

As Dadmun expects to be out of town the day of the Institute sports, more entries for the sprints are expected than usual.

'91 and '94 play the first inter-class game this afternoon at 1 p. m. and at 3, the Juniors and Middlers try their skill. Lots of sport is expected especially at the latter game, and more than one "novelty" is on the bills.

Erastus W. Hopkins of this city, Williams '90 has entered the Chemistry division, class of '93.

Mrs. Morgan's Kindergarten.

Thursday afternoon, the little folks were given a real treat in seeing stereopticon views from the lantern of Mr. J. Chauncey Lyford of the Winslow Street School. Mr. L. has made the study of Geography one continuous pleasure for his pupils and this hour with the children of Mrs. Morgan's school was in the same line. They met at 4.30 in Curtis Hall and gave the very closest attention while views of places in the United States were thrown upon the screen. It was a diversion for them, a use of the eye in learning. The lecturer received hearty applause from the little folks when the hour was over. This is only one of many pleasant things done here to make school happy and profitable.

The sweetest songs are those
That few men ever hear,
And no men ever sing.

The clearest skies are those
That farthest off appear
To birds of strongest wing.

The dearest loves are those
That no man can come near
With his best following.

—Jean Ingelow.

Pleasant St. Baptist Church.

Time works great changes. Walk along Pleasant street and look at the new theater structure, going up and then fancy if you can that, there, once stood a substantial church building. Just about where actors of varying degree of excellence will disport themselves, for many years, preachers proclaimed the mercies of God. After all, the good Christians who have worshipped here can congratulate themselves that their old structure was taken down and that no profanation was offered the edifice itself. Some churches have sad fates. One may become a boarding house, another a ball room and in New York several have been converted into stables. Not so with the old Pleasant Street structure. Mr. Taylor took it down and put up a wholly new building in its place. The old building dated from the latter part of 1843, for it was Jan. 4, 1844 that the then new edifice was dedicated. The Rev. Mr. Bronson of Fall River offered the dedicatory prayer and the pastor, the Rev. John Jennings preached. The society was begun on the 25th of November, 1841, an offshoot from the First Baptist. Such a separation had been contemplated in 1836, but the burning of the old First Church delayed. The inception of the project was had Nov. 9th and the organizing followed speedily. The first meeting for worship was held Dec. 12 and the Second Baptist church was named Dec. 28, '41. There were 98 members 89 of whom had come from the Old church. Until the completion of the building, the Society worshipped in the Town Hall, the cradle of so many infant Worcester churches. In 1856, a tower was added to the building and again in the seventies it was extended toward the east. Though the society had outgrown the structure, still it was in a very convenient location and was the happy church home of many a pilgrim and saint.

The first pastor was the Rev. John Jennings, who came here from Grafton, a graduate of Newton Seminary in 1834. He was born in Danbury, Conn. He remained in his pastorate until Jan. 1st, 1850.

To him succeeded the Rev. Charles K. Colver who came hither from Watertown. He was graduated from Brown University in 1842 and afterward from the Theological Seminary in Newton. After a four years' service here he was offered a trip to Valparaiso and he accepted. Before going, he set about raising the debt of the church and succeeded.

The next pastor was the Rev. D. W. Faunce who was born in Plymouth in 1828. In 1850 he was graduated from Amherst, and in 1853 from Newton. During his six years' ministry about two hundred people were added to the church. From Worcester he went to Malden. He is now preaching in West Newton.

August 30, 1860, the Rev. James Judson Tucker was ordained as the fourth pastor of the church. He is a native of Halifax, N. S., Oct. 6, 1827, and was graduated at Williams College, 1851, and at the Theological Seminary of Rochester, N. Y., 1860. He remained here, however, only fifteen months.

From Aug. 1862 to Nov. 25, 1870, the Rev. David Weston, held the pastorate. For a year following his resignation, he was at the head of the Worcester Academy. Thence, he went to the professorship of Ecclesiastical History in Madison, now Colgate University in Hamilton, N. Y., and there he died in 1875. He was a graduate of Brown University, 1859.

In 1872, came the Rev. I. R. Wheelock; a graduate of Brown, 1869. He left March 28, 1875, and for ten years, was in Fitchburg. Afterward, he went to Meriden, Conn., where he is now.

The Rev. S. L. Holman, followed, coming here from Woonsocket, R. I., and he remained till March, 1882, going from Worcester to Pueblo, Colorado. In December of the same year came the Rev. Henry F. Lane. He, too, was from Brown, a class mate of H. C. Rice of this city and as he was of the class of 1850, he must have been in college one year with the Hon. E. B. Stoddard who was of 1847.

Mr. Lane was for a time a tutor in Columbian College, Washington. He is remembered, here, as a fearless, outspoken defender of what he believed to be right. After five years of effectual labor, he left Worcester and is now in Millis, a station on the New York and New England Road. This brings us to the pastorate of the Rev. H. J. White.

The New Church.

The worshipers in the old edifice, as they enter their new and elegant structure can congratulate themselves that they are still the Pleasant Street Baptists. It was a happy chance that led them to purchase of Horace M. Hedden his residence on the corner of Ashland Street and to erect here their religious home. Trade had so encroached upon them in their old location, a new one seemed a necessity, so they sold their old home for $48,000, and prepared to move. So quickly has the work been done, that just one year intervenes between their worshiping at the foot of Pleasant Street and their assembling next Sunday in their new place.

Dedication.

The new and beautiful structure was dedicated with appropriate services last Tuesday evening. On the pulpit was a dish of roses and on either side were potted plants that almost concealed the beautiful furniture behind them. The house was filled to overflowing, there being many who were obliged to stand. Many pastors from the other churches in the city were present and occupied the front seats.

The services began with an organ prelude, and this was followed by the Invocation by Rev. D. W. Hoyt, of the Adams Square Baptist Church. After the anthem by the chorus, Rev. C. H. Pendleton of the Main Street Baptist Church read from the Scriptures, 1 Cor. III. Prayer was then offered by Rev. C. G. Craft of the First Baptist Church, and the evening hymn was sung by a quartet. The members of the quartet were Mrs. Webster Thayer, soprano; Mrs. Simester, alto; Mr. Fred Simester, tenor; Mr. Elbert Straw, bass.

Dea. J. P. Cheney, treasurer of the Building Committee then gave the following financial statement.

Received of R. C. Taylor for old church	$48,000.
Sale of cottage on Ashland Street	4,434.50
From residents of Ashland Street.	3,000.
Subscriptions of members of the society	9,687.44
From outside friends	1,040.
Total amount received	65,786.94

Paid for present site	19,000.
Darling Bros., contractors,	29,122.60
Denholm & McKay, carpets,	240.84
Pinkham & Willis, carpets,	65.
Worcester Steam Heating Co.	1,795.
Total expenditures $65,626.81, leaving a balance of $160.13.

After making this statement, he presented the keys to the chairman of the trustees, Deacon R. F. Comstock. In his response Deacon Comstock spoke in the highest terms of the work of the ladies, who had made it possible to dedicate the church free from debt.

Rev. H. J. White, the pastor, then spoke his greetings to the members of the church and congregation. He spoke of the many hours that the Building Committee had spent in the performance of their duties, with no other pay than the consciousness that they were about their Father's business. He also referred to the pulpit set, and the pastor's study that had been so nicely fitted up for his use.

Fraternal greetings from sister churches were brought by Rev. J. J. Miller of the Lincoln Square Baptist Church. He spoke of the many and convenient rooms in the basement. He then went back to the time when there was but one church of Baptists in the city, and referred to the harmonious separation, and the pleasant relations that have existed between the churches since. He also spoke of the work that is before this church.

Rev. D. W. Faunce, one of the former pastors, dwelt on the early days. He mentioned some of his predecessors and told of the work that they had done. He looked back to his pastorate of six years at this church as the pleasantest of all his pastorates. He is a believer in short terms of service. For when a man is a long time in one place, the people become so attached to him that they remain in the church; but by a change of pastors, it is possible for some to go out and found other congregations in other parts of the city.

Hymn 616 was read by Rev. D. H. Stoddard of the Dewey Street Baptist Church, then followed the sermon by Rev. O. P. Gifford of Brookline.

He took his text from Acts III, 13. The story of the healing of the cripple at the gate Beautiful was his theme. Peter and John were on their way to the temple when they were stopped by the cripple, who asked of them an alms. Their reply was, "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee." And they gave him health. Poverty and pride always go together. But these two men were rich in God. The gift of money as a substitute for self is a curse to a person; but the gift of money with self is best. This was the first miracle of the Christian church, and was the sign of the power of God.

Then come the words of the text which the speaker paraphrased as the "God of the ages." The purpose of the God of the ages is to glorify His Son, and this He does by the redeeming of a crippled humanity. The restoration of the cripple was not through his faith, but through the faith of Peter and John. So the redeeming of a lost world comes not through its faith, but by the faith of a believing church. Here lies the work of this church.

The prayer of dedication was made by the Rev. W. H. Bowen of Providence, R. I. After the response by the quintet composed of the quartet and Miss Foskett, Rev. E. B. Haskell of the South Baptist Church read hymn 612. The congregation joined in the singing and the benediction was pronounced by the pastor.

After the services all the rooms of the church were thrown open, and many took this opportunity to visit the various parts, and see what a beautiful home the members of this church have.

The future for the church looks pleasant. There is a membership of two hundred and fifty people all harmonious and disposed to press forward. Worcester congratulates them on the outlook. The Deacons are R. F. Comstock, Jos. P. Cheney, Jr., Abram Everett and Woodbridge Burnham.

The Edifice.

The building is Romanesque in style, of red brick and brown stone with a granite base and is a two story structure.

At the south east corner is the main tower 19 feet square with a high pyramidal roof arranged in a manner which is unique in this locality, but one of which many examples are seen on the old Romanesque churches of the valley of the Rhine. It is 123 feet high to the top of the vane which is a relic of the old Pleasant Street Church. In this tower is one of the main entrances with vestibule and stairway the other being at the south west corner in a gabled porch above which rises a low tower. This has a very roomy vestibule, and a broad easy stairway. A third entrance with vestibule and stairway is at the north east corner of the building and still another at the north west gives access to the kitchen only. The first story, 13 feet high, devoted to Sunday School and social purposes has the main Sunday School room 39x55 but connecting with the three vestibules and having direct light from five windows on the east side. It is connected on the south with double parlors each 17½x19, on the west by two class rooms each 15½x20, on the north by two more class rooms each 13½x15 and a Sunday School library 7½x15½.

Sliding glazed sashes in the partitions separating the main room from the several parlors and class rooms allow of making them all practically one large room. A kitchen, 15x17 with its connecting closets occupies the north west corner of the building and connects with one of the class rooms. On the south end of the second story is a vestibule 10x37 feet at each end of which is one of the main stairways. Several large fly doors give access from the vestibule to the main auditorium which is a room 43x61 feet and 35 feet high with an arched ceiling and open timber work of hard pine and with wood sheathing. The large windows on east, west and south sides are filled with handsome stained glass and the walls are tastefully decorated in color. A gallery over the vestibule has sittings for 100 which with those on the main floor make a total seating capacity of about 550. An ample choir and organ gallery occupies the north end back of the pulpit platform and over the ante rooms and baptistery, and a room for the choir is over the pleasant, cosy, pastor's study at the north east corner. The finish of the vestibules, stairways and the main auditorium is of quartered oak, elsewhere it is of white-wood.

The walls and ceilings are tastefully decorated in color throughout and the windows are filled with cathedral glass. The building is warmed by a very complete steam apparatus and furnished with best plumbing appliances.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

A recital was given Tuesday evening by the pupils of Miss M. J. McNamara at Horticultural Hall. The pupils who gave readings were Misses C. Cooney, M. McCann, Mattie Ducey, Anna Duggan, Mamie Gallagher, Maria Brennan, M. Hogan, Lizzie Brennan, K. Murray and Master Alfred O'Leary. Miss Mary E. Convery, Miss Maria Brennan and D. J. Padula, vocalists, and Miss Nellie Kirwin and Walter Scott Kennedy accompanist, assisted with music. The program also included a series of aesthetic gymnastics.

"The Old Homestead."

The attraction at the new Worcester Theater for four performances commencing Monday evening next, will be the presentation of the famous drama, by Denman Thompson, entitled "The Old Homestead," which is now in its fourth year at the Academy of Music in New York city and is still drawing crowded houses. There is something human in it that interests all classes of people. Its hold on the public that is not usually found in theaters—the thoughtful church-going public—has not been equalled since the palmy days of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It is pure amusement, with a moral. The play itself is an old story told in a simple homely way. John Whitcomb's boy, accused of a crime he did not commit, leaves his country home for New York city, to start life afresh. His letters to the old folks become less frequent and finally cease altogether. Uncle Josh, worried by his doubts and fears, goes to the city and finds his boy Reuben forsaken by his companions. Discouraged and wearied he has almost reached the bottom of the ladder. He is reclaimed and taken back to the old homestead. On this simple thread linger the four acts of the play, which has much in it of real life; much of that tenderness and hospitality which brings the memory of the business man in the city to the old home on the farm.

The setting in the third act, Grace Church at night, is a picture worth looking at. A competent company appear, and the scenery and production in general will be a duplicate of the New York performance.

Mr. E. H. Sothern in "The Maister of Woodbarrow," had a large and appreciative audience at the Worcester Theater last evening. The last performances will be given this afternoon and evening.

The concert by Gilmore's band last Wednesday evening was well attended, there being very few empty seats. The audience was an enthusiastic one, and the program though an excellent one, was evidently not long enough, for six times was an encore demanded.

Overture, "Semiramide" Rossini
 Aria for basso cantante—From "Ebrei" Apolloni Sung by Signor Luigi Sartori.
 Morceau de salon—"Loin du Bal," Gillet
 Gilmore's band.
 Cavatina from la Favorita, for contralto—"O Mio

Fernando," Donizetti
 Sung by Mlle Annie Mantell.
 Grand scena de ballet—from "Gioconda," Ponchielli
 Gilmore's band.
 Trio,—Ida Klein, Sig. Sartori, Sig. Spigaroli.
 Violin Solo—"Fantaisi-Faust" Sarasate
 Miss Maud Powell.
 National Anthem with variations, "Columbia" P. S. Gilmore
 G and cavatina from Sonnambula, for soprano—Bellini
 "Una voce poco fa."
 Sung by Mme. Louise Natali. Schumann
 Traumerei—"The Dream,"
 Gilmore's Band.
 Grand scena—from "Lucia" Donizetti
 Mme. Natali, Miss Mantell, Signori Spigaroli and Sartori.
 Poem symphonique—"The Chariot Race," J. P. Sousa
 (A musical picture suggested by the story of the chariot race in "Ben-Hur.")
 Gilmore's band.

Sig. Sartori sang for an encore "The Heart Bowed Down" from The Bohemian Girl. The response to the third number showed the complete control Mr. Gilmore has over his band. Now fast, now slow, now tones from one side now from the other. A wave of his baton, or a nod of the head, and he got what he wanted. Sig. Campanini was unable to appear, but by this means we heard Ida Klein who otherwise would not have sung. Miss Powell knew well the powers of her violin and by her skill and quiet grace won the hearty applause of all present. Mme. Natali sang "Suppose" as an encore. At the end of the eleventh number when Mme. Natali went from the low to the high note with no apparent effort, one man in the audience could contain his enthusiasm no longer, but burst out in applause, before the singing stopped. They were obliged to repeat part of it.

During the last piece by the band we almost expected to see the horses emerge from behind the screen. We regretted that the synopsis of the race, which was given on the program of the Marine Band concert, was not reprinted on this, for we could not follow all the parts. The public thanks Mrs. Wilkinson for her enterprise in securing this concert and also congratulates her in its success in all respects.

The Woman's Club held its regular business meeting in Colonial Hall, Wednesday afternoon. The moral and physical effect of hotels and tenements was the subject of discussion, papers being read by Miss Susie L. Laurence, Mrs. J. B. Rich and Mrs. M. C. Harris.

The Davis Art Company of 18 Pearl Street, continues to be kept busy with the many demands made upon it for its varied possessions. While many etchings have been sold and many frames made, regilded and repaired, yet there's an abundance of material left. Art Students are ever cordially received and shown all that the store affords. Though some lines of goods get reduced by the many calls, you will still have something to charm the eye and to draw upon the purse. That beautiful lot of framed etchings at the competitors' prices have been transplanted from the store to other surroundings. A few choice ones only remain. Some dainty new goods among the display of small articles. The firm has ever in mind that "variety is the spice of life."

Ida Müller, an old Worcester opera favorite, has brought a suit for absolute divorce against her husband, Ben Tuthill, for desertion and non support. Among the other would-be divorcees are Annie Sutherland and Jennie Kimball, manageress of Corinne.

Rev. Horace Jerome White.

In presenting a picture of the pastor of the Pleasant Street Baptist Church, it is due to him to state that the photograph was made just before coming to Worcester and is considered an excellent likeness to him as he was when he wore whiskers. When both Christian names are written, as above, it is difficult to tell what the boy was called before he arrived at the dignity of initials and titles, but in this case Jerome was the word that the coming preacher responded to.

He was born in Deering, N. H., Sept. 13, 1811. His parents were Jason and Mary (Case) White, and now, in their old age, they find a home with him. He has only one brother, George A., a farmer in Vermont.

Till he was twelve years old, our clergyman lived on a farm, and like all such fortunate boys, had the benefit of country air and labor. Later, his father being also a carpenter, his days were passed in the city of Manchester.

When seventeen years old, he enlisted in the Seventh N. H. and saw three years of warfare. The Adjutant General's Report for the Granite State has this summary for Horace J. White, Co. A, 7th Regt.; mustered Nov. 27, 1861, severely wounded, Feb. 20 1864; mustered out Dec. 22, 1864. The Regiment was for the most part in the extreme south, but, though it was in many places, it saw little actual service till it landed on Folly Island, June 17, 1863. From that date, however, the music was constant and in all the horrors of the terrible assaults on Fort Wagner, these New Hampshire boys did their part. Twenty-eight men of Co. A went into the attack but dence, R. I. Thence he went to the Theological School of Bates College, at Lewiston, Me. Thence he was graduated in 1877. He was ordained in Biddeford, Me., where he preached for a time and, next, was in Bath six years at the North church. Here he succeeded in raising a big debt from the church. Resigning, he united with the Regular Baptists and in January 1885 was settled in Augusta where he remained till he came to our city in August, 1888.

While in Haverhill, he was married to Miss Euphemia G. Mitchell, a native of Glasgow. To this union of American and Scottish people have been born six boys. The oldest and youngest have gone to the other world. The surviving children are Archie C., a student in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York; Andrew F. and David M., both in the Academy, and Clinton C. in the Grammar School.

In 1866, Colby University, at Waterville, Me., conferred upon him the honorary degree of A. M., a recognition of which he is in every way worthy.

Of Mr. White's labors in Worcester it is not too much to state that they have been arduous, constant and successful. In fact, his labors have been so severe that, only recently, he has been obliged to rest for a time, visiting New York for medical treatment. All his friends, and they are numerous, hail his return with pleasure and wish him many years of Christian work in his new edifice. As for the people to whom he ministers, they are to be congratulated that they retain the services of so valiant and faithful a soldier and preacher.

Boy Choir Causes a Scene.

We find the following entertaining little incident in the "Owls" letter of the Somerville Citizen of last week.

"One of my cousins who lives in the town of Witches paid me a 'flying visit' a day or two since. He said he had come over expressly to tell me a little incident that occurred there not long since. It seems that there is an Episcopal church in that city and the music is furnished by a boy choir. There is some difference of opinion in the church in regard to whether it should be high or low church, a large number of the church members inclining towards the high, while the rector thought it should be low. Not long since one of the church members presented the choir with a handsome cross, which was to be carried in the processional and retrocessional, as is the custom in high churches. This was done once or twice, to the great satisfaction of the choir boys and of the donors and their friends; but the rector at last said that it should not be used any more, as it savored too much of the high church service. The following Sunday the hymn in the processional was 'Onward, Christian Soldiers.' It was noticed that the boys seemed to be quite excited and nervous when it came time for service, but nothing was thought of it and the processional was begun, the cross however being left behind. It was soon evident what had caused the excitement among the boys, for these are the words which they sang:

"Onward Christian soldiers,
Marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus
Left behind the door."

only ten responded to roll call the next morning. Colonel Putnam was killed as were five other officers, while four more survived their wounds only a short time. In December, the regiment reported at St. Helena, and was under the command of the present senator from Conn, General Joseph A. Hawley. In February, it was sent to Florida and participated in the disastrous engagement at Olustee under General Truman H. Seymour. In this battle our pastor received a Rebel bullet in his leg, a bullet that he carries yet. Though thus wounded, he had to walk 18 miles in retreat, the ambulances not sufficing for the officers. Mr. White has reason enough to remember this ill managed affair for he was in the hospital till the following June. Meanwhile the regiment was sent up to Virginia and was in at Drury's Bluff and the other battles leading up to Petersburg. With the record of duty, well done, the veterans returned home with the dying year of 1864.

Our boy of seventeen, who was a good soldier, with carnal weapons has developed into a stalwart warrior in the church militant, but his influence over Young America, before him, should be no less when they recall the fact that the quiet man in the pulpit, faced death at Wagner, one of the hottest engagements of the rebellion, and that his body still conceals the lead fired from Rebel gun.

In these days, at Wagner and Olustee, the boy White, was not a Christian and we may imagine that with others he resented, in vigorous language, the enforced changing of guns, by General Seymour, which gave to his company eighteen useless weapons; guns that the inspector had condemned. But the War was over and back to his native state he came and in 1867, in Haverhill, he was converted and joined the Free Will Baptist Church. For a time, afterward, he was in business in Provi-

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 11, 1891.

There were many disappointed little hearts in Washington on Easter Monday. The annual egg-rolling in the White House grounds, which has grown to be one of the institutions of the city, was forbidden by the President on account of the wet condition of the ground, owing to the heavy rain of the previous week. All day long the children, with their gaily-colored baskets of eggs, besieged the gates only to be sent away by the watchmen. Loud were their lamentations and one shudders to think of the President's fate had he exposed himself to their vengeance.

To compensate them for their disappointment the President held a children's reception in the East Room during the afternoon. One little Massachusetts man, not quite four years old, with whom I am acquainted, attended the reception with his mamma. Before going to the White House she had promised him that after visiting the President they would go over to the menagerie at the National Museum. The wait in the East Room was a tedious one but the President came at last. Almost the first to shake hands with him was little Massachusetts.

"How do you do, my little friend?" said Mr. Harrison.

"Oh, I'm pretty well. Come on, mamma, less go see the bears," was the reply of the unabashed young man.

Mamma blushed, the President smiled, and the interview abruptly terminated.

The great event of the past week has been the centennial of the Patent Office, or rather the centennial of the granting of the first patent under this government. The inventors of the country have been the guests of the government and have been entertained in a fitting manner. Among the notable speeches made at the banquet at the Arlington Hotel on Friday night was one by District Commissioner Douglass. In reviewing the progress of the city from its origin to the present he said: "This year we have appropriated for school purposes $998,000; $220,000 of that will go into new buildings. When they are finished with those now being constructed under current expenditures, we will have over one hundred school buildings in the District." Another interesting statement was that there are now over 77,000 shade trees set out along our streets and more are to be planted as soon as a street is laid out. Washington at that rate will soon wrest the title of "Forest City" from New Haven.

It is to be hoped that this visit of the inventors will emphasize the demand of the Patent Office for more room. For years it has been calling for relief but Congress has been deaf to its appeals and yet there are lying in the Treasury $3,000,000, which the office has earned over its expenses.

The city Post Office trouble, which I mentioned in a former letter, has been settled. A responsible syndicate here agreed to erect a suitable building to be ready on November 1st, and for which the government agrees to pay a rent of $16,000 per year for three years, at the end of which time it is expected the new Post Office building on the Avenue will be ready for occupancy. Would that Worcester could settle its location as easily.

Spring is advancing upon us with alarming rapidity. Alarming, because she announced her arrival last Saturday with a genuine thunder storm lasting over an hour, but doing no damage except to the trees and plants.

The beautiful new statue of Lafayette is completed and has been erected on the southeast corner of the square bearing his name. The unveiling ceremonies will probably occur soon. This statue is a relief from the usual style of man-on-a-horse-and-waving-a-sword that prevails in our squares, and the figures of Lafayette, Rochambeau and others are said to be excellent portraits. It bears the stamp of a true artist and its location affords ample opportunity to display its beauties.

WINFIELD

In the Streets.

One needs not go to the play for diversion. There is hardly an hour of the day when our streets do not afford some mirth provoking scene. Last Saturday, down near Salem Square, three small boys were happy in the possession of a small cart, but alack-a-day, the street sprinkler had begun its rounds. As the working end of the cart swings around it comes very near one lad who holds the tongue of his wagon. With no premonition, the valve is raised and the boy is deluged. His mates, with that entire lack of sympathy, incident to childhood, fairly dance with glee; but the sprinkled urchin can see nothing funny. His fast falling tears not only add to the prevailing moisture; but they make the other boys all the merrier. He had a lesson in caution.

There was nothing merry in the Main Street crossing of Pearl on the same afternoon, where a horse, escaped from his carriage, dashed up Mechanic Street and overthrew one of a number of ladies who were walking there. It was all in a breath. The frightened beast had no choice. There was shouting to look out; but not in time. One form is prostrate, the horse is far away, while careful hands raise the fallen woman. How quickly is sympathy excited! Fortunately the collision is not fatal; but it might have been, easily. The shoulder of the beast must have struck the lady while a part of the loose harness cut her face.

But "Its ill wind that blows no one any good." The same shock that sent the lady home maimed and scarred, scattered half a dozen bananas. Perhaps they were purchased for some little folks who were waiting for mama. Little folks got them but not hers. While gentle hands are leading her away, swift hands collect the fallen fruit and hurry away. One small boy was able to donate tropical food to his brother who was not present when the first distribution took place. They didn't seem inclined to follow the victim to offer to return her purchase. "Findin's is havin's" apparently in their code. Well, Sunday Schools can't do every thing.

Old Sixth.

By one of those vexations yet unavoidable errors, possible everywhere, the name of Edward P. Thompson of this city was omitted last week from the list of Co. G. survivors. He is by trade a crimper. LIGHT hereby acknowledges its obligations to Corp. Wm. H. Hobbs, secretary of the Company Association for the list.

About Folks.

Mrs. Annie (Starkie) Mixer returned, last Saturday, from a seven months stay in Kansas City, Mo., where she visited her sister, Mrs. Henry Abercrombie.

The Hancock Club seems to have been located in a desirable place, for the pressure for membership may necessitate the raising of the limit number.

About four weeks ago the leading lady of Frost & Fanshaw's Dramatic Company was taken ill and Miss Effie Walch of 45 Pleasant Street was invited to temporarily take her place. She accepted and has filled the position since, the lady not having recovered. Reports from the places where she has appeared, indicate that she is having great success. Her sister, Edith Harrington, is also traveling with the same company.

John Kieley for thirty years a section man on the Boston and Albany railroad and residing at 5 Carpenter Street, dropped dead of heart disease Tuesday morning last. He was fifty-five years of age and leaves a wife, but no children. His funeral took place from St. John's Catholic Church Thursday morning.

Mrs. John B. Gough.

In the death of this most estimable lady, April 20, at her Hillside home, we lose a very significant reminder of that grand man who so electrified our people by his eloquence. They are not so very long separated. We can never know just the power and influence she exerted over her talented husband. We do know that he never failed to ascribe to her the honor for whatever distinction he had won. As Mary Whitcomb, she was a teacher in Shrewsbury. From that town, Mr. Gough bore her to be his companion and helper. Most grandly did she do her part. She did her work and bore her burdens uncomplainingly. We honor her. Her funeral took place, Wednesday.

The Journal.

One morning in the Kentucky house of representatives, the usual motion was made to "dispense with the reading of the journal." It had been observed that every morning when this motion was made, a certain member from one of the mountain counties, who was very fond of reading Dr. George Prentice's pungent paragraphs, and who bought a copy of the Journal every day, would lay down his paper unread. On this particular morning, the mountain member could contain himself no longer. "Mr. Speaker he said, "I've sat here for more'n a week and submitted to the tyranny of this house, but I can't stand it any longer without a solemn protest, sir. Somebody, sir, has moved every morning to dispense with the reading of the Journal, and I've lost every paper I've bought for a week by it. Nobody has ever moved to dispense with the reading of the Democrat or the Courier. It ain't fair, Mr. Speaker; it ain't just, and—" The remainder of the gentleman's protest for fair play to the Journal was lost in a general burst of laughter, such as rarely lightened the gravity of a border State legislator in those troublous days.—Argonaut.

Books and Bookmen.

But there are other book lovers who call at our store. This man has his regular work in an office. Day after day; year in and year out, he is at his post. Possibly, there is a brief vacation in midsummer. He belongs to no clubs. He is not a horseman. He is seldom seen in places of amusement; but he does find time to call at the store nearly every day. He passes a few words with Mr. . . . They discuss the recent literary arrivals, perhaps our reader gets a book that he has ordered and then he is off to his home. He dines at nightfall and then he has his evenings for his books. Just join together all that Albert Lang has written about diversions of a book-worm and pleasures of a book-lover and we shall have some notion of the evenings that our friend passes in his library. He does not read to reproduce. Not he. He has no ambition in that direction; but he reads for the love he has for his books and their contents. They are in good binding of the best grade. He has none that must be hidden in obscure corners lest their presence be detected. The coming of the evening of life has no terrors for him. He is provided for. Till the end his pleasure will be unailing.

It is announced that Mr. A. C. Cameron, for a number of years connected with The Inland Printer, has retired from its editorship, and for the present its editorial management will be under the direct supervision of H. O. Shepard, its president, a gentleman of wide experience in matters pertaining to the trades with which this journal deals, and well known in all parts of the world as the successful head of this, the leader of all trade papers. He will be assisted by a corps of competent writers, and it is confidently stated that nothing will be left undone to make The Inland Printer even better than it has been in the past, if such a thing be possible.

Mr. Bok, the editor of The Ladies' Home Journal, recently gave some interesting figures relative to the manuscripts received by his magazine during 1890. Owing to its departments and peculiar character, the Journal probably receives more manuscripts than any magazine published. Mr. Bok says that he received at his office a total number of 15,205 manuscripts. Of these, 2,280 were poems; 1,746 stories and 11,179 miscellaneous articles. Of the poems, 66 were accepted; of the stories, only 21, and of the articles 410, of which latter, however, over 300 were solicited articles. Thus, it will be seen that of the entire 15,000 manuscripts only 497 were accepted; a trifle over three per cent. Deducting from this the 300 accepted articles written at the editor's solicitation, the net percentage of unsolicited manuscripts accepted is brought down to 197, or a little more than one per cent. Statistics such as these show how much utter trash is being written, and the number of persons writing who ought to be employing their time at something else and better.

Prof. E. H. Russell of the Normal School speaks very highly of "A Birdseye View of the World" advertised in another column.

A story of unusual power and strange plot will begin in the May Cosmopolitan and run through three numbers: The story of a man, who three times in his life undertakes to paint Jesus. The author, Hjalmer Hjorth Boyesen, thinks he has given the best work of his life in this singular story. Two other pieces of fiction will attract attention in the May number of the Cosmopolitan; two real war stories by men who have been in the thick of the fight. One is by Archibald Forbes, the famous war correspondent, and the other by Albion W. Tourjee, author of "The Fool's Errand." The illustrations of all three are something unusual. Boyesen's story, illustrated by Wenzell, so well known through the pages of "Life;" Forbes' story, by Frederic Villiers, another famous war correspondent and artist, and Tourjee's story by Zogbaum. In addition to its strong fiction, this number contains a beautifully illustrated article on the Cleopatras of the Stage; another on New Philadelphia, for which the drawings were made by Harry Fenn. Some wonderful flashlight photographs illustrate the underground workings of a Leadville Silver Mine. Kennels and Kennel Clubs, and Dr. Koch and his Lymph, by one who went to Berlin to study the subject, are two articles with numerous illustrations. (Price 25 cents. Cosmopolitan Pub. Co., Madison Square, N. Y.)

Hortense, from the German of W. Heimburg. Rand, McNally & Co., Chicago and New York.

A young German girl starts to visit her future mother-in-law, and on the train finds an old playmate, Hortense Von Löwen. She finds that Hortense lives close by where she is to visit and when she reaches her destination she finds that her future relative does not consider Hortense a proper associate for her daughter, but in spite of remonstrance Lucie visits Hortense, and finds in her beautiful home such infinite charm that when Hortense invites her to travel with her as her companion and friend she gives up her lover and goes with her. The story is told of their travels and the coming of a lover to Hortense and gradual breaking of all ties that formerly bound them to each other, and then Lucie's return to her old lover, whom she had left for the world with Hortense. The years having shown her that love is better than any thing the world can offer. This is number 148 of the Globe Library.

The Journal of the Non Secret Endowment Order for April is No. 4, of Vol. II. From the press of Gilbert G. Davis, it sets forth the merits of the order represented. Certainly the organization has grown beyond all precedent in our midst and its Journal is a careful setting forth of its merits and advantages.

The Fraternal Monitor published in Rochester, N. Y., is not devoted to any one but to many of the Endowment Associations. The April number is 9 in Vol. I. There seems to be a decided difference in opinion between the old line companies and these modern systems. However, every man has the privilege of a choice.

In the April number of the Phrenological Journal and Science of Health, several features of special interest will invite the attention of that magazine's readers. For instance, an appreciative sketch of "General Sherman," with portrait; "Forces in Early Education," which teachers should read; "The Brethern or 'Dunkards,'" a sketch of this peculiar people from the most authentic sources, with fine illustrations; "Early Progress of Phrenology in Great Britain," with particular references to George Combe; "The Talent of Motherhood," a most admirable article in which important questions in heredity are strikingly illustrated; "Do You Stand Properly?" illustrated; a "Portrait and Sketch of Dr. U. E. Traer," a distinguished phrenologist; "Phrenology and the Physician," some new observations of a valuable sort that should be widely known; "A suggestion in re Koch," by the editor, has a practical application. The various departments are richly stored and will repay the most earnest scrutiny. Published at 15 cents; or $1.50 a year. Address, Fowler & Wells Co., Publishers, 777 Broadway, New York.

The Magazine of New England History for April will contain articles on the "Descendants of Robert Williams of Roxbury;" "Rev. James Hillhouse of New London, Conn.;" an attempt to prove Sergeant Paul, a member of Col. Barton's party in the capture of General Prescott; an interesting chapter of Notes; a goodly array of Queries; and a large amount of miscellaneous matter. $2 per year. R. H. Tilley, Newport, R. I.

A CONTRAST.

He Pulled Jackson's Nose.

R. H. Lavender, of Washington, says that he was standing on the wharf at Alexandria, Va., when Lieut. Randolph stepped forward and pulled President Jackson's nose. He heard the president exclaim, "Show me the villain and I will send him hence." Randolph got away in good time, or Jackson would have carried out his threat easy enough. The old general's hair stood up straighter than ever when the incident occurred, and his eyes fairly flamed with anger.—Chicago Herald.

When an antagonist beaten in argument, pulled Garrison's nose, the latter calmly submitted and then said, "I hope you feel better, sir! But if, thereby, you think to lessen the force of my argument, you are very much mistaken." Which character is the grander?

MUSIC.

Now joyous and glad thy tones are sung,
Now so t'nd sweet the words are sung;
They stir the spirit, they move the soul
Bells mellow the air at the sad death toll.
Like fairies in air the notes whisper, and linger
When the minstrel with merry and musical finger
Touches the magic string.

Like the rustling and whirring of the murmuring trees,
Of the forest glade, when moved by the breeze,
Then wailing and sobbing like a winter's storm
And mournful and sad the notes prolong
Till I see in the distance on the neighboring hill
'Neath the low, mellow lane, a tombstone still,
All from the music's strain.

In the quiet room where I sit alone,
I love to listen to thy gentle tone;
And it seems as I listen, the face on the wall
Has a heart 'neath the framework and an ear for it all.
Now the lips seem to tremble, my heart gives a bound,
There's a shout in the music when we're thrilled by the sound,
And rest, inspiration and power.
Jan. 26, 1891.

Boston Letter.

[Held over from last week]

Probably not half the copy that is sent any paper by its correspondent pleases the people it is most intended to reach. There are so many different classes of people to interest, so varied in their tastes and inclinations that what would be attractive to one coterie of choice spirits, might be relegated to the closet by another set, and there you are. Doubtless some of the dramatic items, or perhaps say the résumé of affairs in that line occasionally sent by your correspondent are scarcely noticed by many, who perhaps would be more interested in other topics pertaining to the Hub.

Right down along where I am every day, on State Street, is a location so prolific with historical interest, of early colonial and revolutionary days, that one hardly knows where to begin or end in speaking of this subject. How few of the nicely dressed men who walk down the street every morning ever give the slightest thought to this old street as it was a hundred and odd years ago. Here it was, just below the old State House, that the Boston massacre occurred, where the first blood in the revolution was spilled now marked by a brass tablet on the side of a building occupied by a prominent banking firm. And here the indignant citizens held an enthusiastic rally against the grievances of the stamp act, and later on went down the street in a body and threw the tea overboard. And from the east side of the old State House, still standing at the head of the street that is today the financial centre of Boston, and of course of New England, the orators and heroes of 1776 addressed and urged the people to action time and time again. All is changed now, except this famous old building standing as a relic and tradition of the past, but let us hope it will be many years before a too practical people will vote to tear it down, in the march of modern improvement.

After all is said and done sentiment does still exist, and is as potent a factor as ever in this hustling bustling nineteenth century. And the sentiment of the common people of our day is such a gigantic power that one shudders at times when he thinks of the power and influence they hold in their hands. As long as American manhood clings to its present high idea we need borrow no unnecessary trouble from emigration, even though Italy sends over her whole fleet and offers us macaroni and cheese as an entrée. She really does not mean anything, just a little national indigestion from a change of cooks and prime ministers that will pass over quickly and then we shall be without any sensation and have to drop back to the movements of the members of President Harrison's family for items of live interest.

Tall buildings are running so high up in the air that one wonders where they will stop. When you look at the Fiske building on State Street, and at the new "syndicate building," soon to be occupied by the Stock Exchange, near it, and at the Ames building corner of Washington and Court Streets, you sort of picture to yourself the astonishment pictured on the face of some good old Bostonian who dropped into town say after an absence of thirty years. With the electric light and electric cars and the sometimes too handy telephone, and the huge buildings, and the hurly burly rush of our high pressure life, he might really think he had an attack of delirium tremens, even though a temperate man.

Richard Mansfield is playing "Beau Brummell" at the Globe to enormous houses every evening, one of the best things he has ever done. He is the best character actor by long odds we have, of the younger crowd, and everything he does is highly artistic and finished from the beginning to the end. His creation of this part will rank with his Baron Cherial in "A Parisian Romance," the strongest character part seen for years. He is advertising himself, at least so it looks to most of us, by having his friend, William Winter of the New York Tribune, claiming the play as his (Mansfield's) work, and not that of the bright young author, Clyde Fitch. Without any argument it looks funny that originally and always the play has been advertised as written by Fitch, and so accepted by the public generally, and always so billed. Now that such great success has come, comes Mansfield as the author. No one for a minute doubts his wonderful ability in making the piece what it is, or that probably his suggestions and criticisms were of much value; but why was the name of Mr. Fitch ever mentioned if he did not write it? Surely nothing could have been gained by prestige of his name. "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet" If the play had not caught on so well—well no body would have rushed in and claimed the piece.

"Poor Jonathan," a comic opera at the Tremont, is given by one of Aronson's New York companies, a pretty fair piece, but not nearly as well done as by the original company at the Casino.

Your favorite, Mary Howe, sang last week at the Star Course to the delight of her many admirers in this city, as excellent as usual.

I see you are to have "Ship Ahoy," this week, and it is so seldom you get as good a light, airy, comical opera skit as this, that it ought to do good business. It made an eleven weeks visit at the Park Theater here, and did an immense business, might have staid until now if dates could have been cancelled. Something after "Pinafore," lively, catchy music, a good topical song, lots of snap and go, plenty of fun, two hours and more of light amusement, but don't expect the Boston Ideals or grand opera April 14. WATSON.

Fred Howard of this city, who has sung with great success in the Agnes Huntington troupe, has left the company and is now at home. He may study abroad.

The Music Trades for April 11 has an excellent portrait and a comprehensive sketch of Mr. Theodore P. Brown of this city, the well-known Treasurer and Manager of the Brown & Simpson Piano Company

When a boy does a good thing, LIGHT likes to notice it and when Edward H. Keith makes the best picture of Mechanics Hall yet shown, recognition is hereby made. Mr. Keith is now in the Polytechnic, having entered from the High School last winter. He is an enthusiast in photography and has done some excellent work.

An Ancient Rose.

BY C. L. CLEVELAND.

"The rose thou gavest, lady dear,
Upon my heart I wear;
A token of the loyal love
For thee alone I bear!"

The high-born maiden bowed her head
And held his lips at bay.
"My lord," she said, "high Heaven hath willed
For me another day."

With her brave Puritan she sailed
Across the bitter sea,
And on New England's forest shore
A faithful wife was she.

Within the sharp east wind she sank
Beneath a mother's ill;
And silently they carried her
To the rest of burial hill.

In his ancestral hall, a lord
Of England lay in state,
Beneath rich trappings that are placed
About the dead, once great.

And when for years its petals stirred
To love's celestial glows,
Within a case upon his heart
There lay a withered rose.

Millbury Mass.

South End News.

The "boarders" at Miss Kimball's Home School gave a musical and literary entertainment to about thirty of their friends, Monday evening, April 20, 1891.

PROGRAM.

Frolings—March	Herbert
Misses Linder, Prouty and Crosby.
The Silver Candlesticks of St. Francis	Brotherton
Miss Crosby.
Mr. and Mrs. Bowser	Anon
Miss Carpenter.
Tarentella	Lomas
Miss Thomas.
E'er the Sun went down	Miss Swett
The Romance of the Hammock	Miss Whittier
The Hindoo's Paradise	Miss Mellen
Husarenritt	Hubert
Misses Houghton, Parker and Porter.
The Whistling Regiment	Harvey
Miss Bates.
Caprice Hongrois	Kettrr
Miss Porter

Mr. C. Henry Hutchins has returned from his business trip in the South.

Rev. D. O. Mears, D. D., pastor of Piedmont church, has removed to the residence of ex-mayor Hildreth, at the corner of May and Woodland streets.

Mr. Wilton W. Dadmun, class of '93, W. H. S., has accepted a position with the Knowles Loom Works.

Miss May L. McCloud and Miss Anna Belle McCloud have gone to Pittsford, Vt., to remain until September, when they sail for Europe for a five years' trip.

Mr. Walter Peacock and his sister, Miss Florence Peacock leave next week for Old Point Comfort to remain a month.

Mr. W. H. Jourdan and Mr. W. S. Jourdan and family, have moved into the house lately occupied by Mr. C. J. McCloud, at the corner of Main and King streets.

The Crescent Tennis Club will, without doubt, have the finest tennis Court in the city. The latest improvement is the placing of a 7-foot wire guard upon three sides of the court. The house will receive a new coat of paint and all will be in readiness for the opening May 30.

Parasol handles are of variety quite surpassing, considering how little new there is under the sun.

Horatio Nelson.

BY JACK SHEPHERD.

On a bright June morning long ago, a little boy five years old, named Horatio Nelson Green was awakened by his Aunt's voice calling him as he was sleeping in his snug cot bed.

"Nellie," she called, "Nellie, is he going to the baker's for Aunt's this morning? Come, get up now and be quick for Uncle Robert wants his breakfast at six o'clock."

Now Horatio Nelson wanted very much to go to the baker's this morning; some mornings he did not care to go, but today he was to walk out for the first time in pants and jacket, bid good by to skirts and frocks and be at last a little man.

Two hard trials had this young soul already encountered. One was that he was so often taken for a girl. On afternoons freshly dressed in a white frock he was allowed to sit on the marble steps of his home. But Aunt Brannon did not let him play with other children; here, he must sit alone, keep hands and clothes clean and worse than all, hear people say, as they passed, "Oh, what a pretty little girl."

"I aint a dirl," he would sometimes shout after them in desperation, or hang his head to hide the tears that filled his blue eyes.

The other burden that oppressed Horatio Nelson was his nick-name of "Nellie."

Horatio Nelson he was very proud of, for had not his dear mamma (now far away with sick sister Susie), told him how two great generals had borne these names. One was a brave commander of ships of war, and the other his dear dead papa's own grand-father, a noble general of an army, during the war of the Revolution. Yet all called him by that girl's name but mamma; she always said Horatio or Nelson.

Yes, it all flashed before him, he was going to the baker's in his new clothes, and just then a great project came into his mind. He would show his Uncle and Aunt and big brother Ned, too, what he could do.

So with a will and a purpose worthy of both great generals, he put on his new clothes and went down stairs to Aunt, who buttoned and put the final touches to them.

He found his new pocket and jingled the six pennies he was to buy the bread with. What a new and delightful experience it was, no one could call him a girl now.

Horatio Nelson lived on Franklin Street in Philadelphia. The baker's was on Seventh Street. When he came to the corner he could look down and see the little shop and almost smell the fragrant freshly baked ginger-horsey, they always gave to this little customer.

But something new and great was to be done this morning and instead of turning the corner as usual he kept straight on down Franklin Street.

In the square beyond, a boy of eight years was spinning a top. This was the very thing Horatio Nelson wanted to learn to do. In a new box in his drawer at home—"a daisy top," as brother Ned called it—was waiting for a time when Ned could teach him to spin it, but this time never came; Ned was busy at the store and in the evenings had care of a reading room for boys. Horatio Nelson saw the spring epidemic come and it had almost gone. Here was a rare chance, he must watch this boy, it would take but a minute. So he ran toward him shading his eyes from the level rays of the sun with one hand while the other felt in the pocket to see if the six pennies were safe.

The boy, nothing loath for a companion, greeted him with "hello, trousers," as he came up.

What a splendid top whipper this was. The baker's was forgotten as Horatio Nelson stood charmed with the feats of this hero of the top.

"Want to try, trousers?" said the boy.

With beaming face Horatio Nelson was taking his first lesson when an organ-grinder and a monkey came in sight. No doubt hoping to make a penny or two for his breakfast, he stopped before the boys and struck up the popular tune of that day "Oh Philadelphia Girls;" this was rapidly followed by "Oh Susanna, don't you cry for me," "The White Cockade," and other favorite melodies.

Horatio Nelson felt to see if his pennies were safe in his pocket and held them tightly, for it seemed as if the little monkey knew he had them, as he stood, cap in hand, looking at him with that old knowing expression.

He was so fascinated he followed them as they began to walk along and forgot entirely his errand and where he was going till the organ-grinder stopped to play before a baker's shop. Here the fragrant odor of fresh bread and warm ginger cake brought all back to his mind.

He looked around, up and down the street, but it was all strange to him. He was near a corner and turned down, perhaps he would come out on the street where his own little baker's shop stood. But nothing looked familiar to him, he must have come quite a distance from home. On one side of the street was a beautiful square surrounded with high iron railings and iron gates; wooden seats were placed at intervals along the cool, broad, gravel walks shaded by luxuriant maples and great spreading chestnut trees.

The grass was lit up amid its first, fresh green by many golden buttercups and here and there a robin red-breast was hunting for a breakfast. As he stood looking through the iron railings he began to sob and cry, softly. Presently a boy of about his own age ran down the steps of a house opposite and entered the square by the gate which Horatio Nelson now saw was open.

He picked up some stones and threw them high in the air; after a while he saw Horatio Nelson and said, "Come in and play."

Now Horatio Nelson could skim and throw stones pretty well, for his summers had been spent by the sea where many an hour was passed in this sport. So he went up to the tall gate and pushing it a little, walked in. He picked up some stones from the path and threw them, one after another way up out of sight. His new acquaintance seemed too much surprised to speak at first but finally said, "You'd better take care, you might hit your father." "What for? My father?" Then in a low tone, "I couldn't, he's dead." "No, I mean your Heavenly," said the boy.

The door of the house opposite was now opened and a lady in a white wrapper called softly to him, "Come Benny, breakfast is ready."

"That's my mother," said Benny; "will you wait here till I come out?" Horatio Nelson nodded his head yes; he could not speak for the sobs were creeping up in his throat and tears would soon overflow his eyes. He turned quickly away and sat down on a bench while Benny ran home to breakfast.

Breakfast! How much was in the word now. It had made him homesick to see that sweet lady, Benny's mother. And he was so tired and hungry. Oh if he could only see his mother. So tired. And the little fellow stretched himself out on a bench and with his arms under his head looked up into the tall branches of a chestnut tree over him till his eyes winked and finally the lids drooped and he was asleep.

It was long after eight o'clock; at home they had looked for him in many directions. Uncle Robert at last decided to go down to the mayor's office and give notice of the lost boy and also engage a bell-man as was the custom then, to ring a bell in the streets and inquire of all he met for the lost one. Brother Ned hastily swallowed only a cup of coffee. After a long search he, too, started down the city for the store in which he was employed and which must be swept and dusted by nine o'clock every morning.

As he walked rapidly through Franklin Square, he passed a bench on which a small boy lay asleep. He had not seen Horatio Nelson in pants and at first went on, not recognizing him. But it came to his mind before he had gone far, and he returned to find to his great joy that it was his little brother.

In a moment he had him in his arms, and still sleeping, carried him home to his almost heart-broken Aunt.

He was soon rubbing his eyes wide awake, in the dear little kitchen on Franklin Street.

He heard his Aunt say, "Why Nellie, how did he come to get lost this morning when he has so often gone to the baker's for bread?"

Now Horatio Nelson had one fault that often grieved his friends. He was a sulky boy and he grew sulky now as he remembered how his great project had failed and he had been carried home like a girl.

He sat in sullen silence only opening his mouth to put it into it his breakfast of bread and milk for he was very hungry.

Not a word could his Aunt get from him and she set him on a chair and gave him a long lesson in spelling. This he pouted over but finally learned, still, he would not answer when asked how he lost his way in the morning.

That night as his Aunt put him to bed, she shook out the new pants from out of the pocket of which rolled the six pennies and a fly leaf of his spelling book on which was written these words:

"dear mama
i am in pans now, i tride to find a new way to the bakers and got los."

G. A. R. Roster.

Owing to the incompleteness of the Roster and imperfections, difficult to correct now, the publication is suspended for the present.

Indians

Of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

In character, the Indian at the present, is very quiet and inoffensive. One never hears of an Indian doing any deed of violence. He has many good traits; one is never known to steal, but if you trust one with merchandise, expecting him to pay, you may have to wait a long while. This is one of their "eccentricities."

The Indians still have their old wandering disposition, which they inherit from their ancestors. They keep moving around; in summer they may visit the best fishing ground, in winter they generally retreat to the forest, but generally have their encampments near a settlement so that they may sell their wares readily. Among the early pictures of my memory is the sight of Indians roving past, often carrying large loads of baskets, etc.

In those days the Indians lived entirely in wigwams. Wigwams are often made of birch bark, although I remember of seeing only one or two made of this material. They are generally made of spruce bark which is peeled in the spring. They first make a framework of poles, meeting together at the top, and the front walls of the wigwam are almost perpendicular, but the back part slopes gradually back. The bark is nailed to these frames, but a hole is left in the top as a chimney for the smoke. It is a wonder to me that the wigwams do not burn, as sheafs of spars can be seen at night, issuing from this opening. But one never hears of a wigwam catching fire.

When a death occurs in an encampment, they all break up camp and depart. It is an old custom and still in vogue. I know however, of one exception to this rule, and it is possible that the Indians will gradually abandon some of their old customs, in fact a gradual change for the better is going on among them. At the present day they may be found living in houses or small shanties instead of the old wigwams. This is noticeable in their villages.

An Indian village is an interesting sight, the houses are not placed regularly as the whites would build them, but appear to be "rained down" as if placed there by a cyclone. There is no regularity whatever. One house will be placed cornerwise to another, and a bird's eye view of the ground-plan of an Indian village would resemble a crazy patch work quilt.

Occupation. The Indian men make axe handles, coarse baskets, moccasins, snow shoes, and canoes, while the women, or squaws, do the finer work, such as fancy baskets, quill work, and bead work.

They are more diligent than the men as a general rule. I speak of them as I saw them in the old days. I shall describe the quill work. The article is first made of birch bark, it may be a box or a model canoe. It is then ornamented with designs peculiarly Indian, and the quills, which are dyed beforehand, are inserted by the aid of an awl. The squaw sits with her mouth full of quills, and works very rapidly. Their fine baskets are often very ornamental, and are sometimes made in the shape of vases, etc., with hanging ornaments around them.

Writing. I know that the Micmac Indians (Nova Scotia tribe) having a writing of their own. Whether it is very ancient or not I cannot tell, but I have seen it, and it somewhat resembles shorthand, that is not phrased; the characters are not joined.

The Indians used to come to my father to get letter writing done. He was a sort of local amanuensis of the tribe when he came that way. If an Indian knows that he can get a favor done at a certain place, he will communicate the fact to others, and they will come as a matter of course.

One day, an Indian woman, or rather a half-breed woman, came to have a letter written to her mother. She sat down and dictated the letter as though she had always been in the habit of having a stenographer. She really dictated the letter in good style. She charged her mother, in closing, not to write the answer in Micmac, as there was only one Indian of the encampment that was able to read it, and he was then away down the bay, about a hundred miles distant, fishing. When the answer arrived she asked my father to read it for her, but it was "no go," as it was in Micmac, and she had to wait more than a month before she could get it read. The date was the only thing readable in it, and that was the 25th of some month.

I once wrote a letter for an Indian when I was a small boy. The father and son came in together; the old man began as though he were to write the letter, but before I finished I discovered that the son was the dictator. The confusion of the dictators caused me to make many erasures, and the young fellow suggested that I write another as that one "looks kind rough."

S. T. Rand acted as missionary among the Indians for many years. This was about a quarter of a century ago. The Indians are without exception Roman Catholics, but Rand did not try to Protestantize them. He learned their language, and translated the four Gospels into both Micmac and Milicet, and used the phonetic alphabet invented by Isaac Pitman.

There is a joke in this connection. Mr. Rand was a Baptist, and he wished to translate the word, baptize, so as to be understood, immersion, so he asked the Indian who aided him in his translation, if there was a word denoting immersion. "Yes," the Indian said, "there is, but you keep him down there 'till breath all gone."

While Rand was with the Indians, he made a large collection of their legends, which are very interesting. Some of them appeared in the New Dominion Monthly, a magazine once published by John Dougall & Son, of Montreal, publishers of the Montreal Witness.

One of these, I remember reading, is an historical legend.

The story is, that in the days gone by, the Milicets came down one autumn to visit the Micmacs, and while they were enjoying themselves at their games, some of the children got into a quarrel about catching a grass hopper, and their parents joined in, and before they were through with it, they had quite a battle. When they were leaving, the Micmacs coolly said, "We will visit you next year." The Milicets understood what that meant. During the next year, the Milicets had sentinels posted on high hills along the St. John River to watch the approach of the Micmacs. While a party of Micmacs were going up the St. John River, three Milicet Indians, each with a canoe, saw them from a point of land in the river above them. They played a very ingenious ruse on the Micmacs. There were only three of them, so they sailed around the point in sight of the Micmac's land, in plain sight of the enemy, picked up their canoes, walked across the neck of land, sailed around again, and continued this all night. The Micmacs thought there were too many Milicets, and started for home next day.

Almost all the Indian tribes have a tradition of a great hero who formerly lived among them. The Hiawatha of the Micmacs was named, Glooscap, and many are the strange stories told of him.

I would here refer the reader to the series of legends which appeared in the New Dominion Monthly, for further information on this subject. I believe also that these legends, about six hundred in number, are now in charge of a historical society, and they may be published at some time.

Numbers of Indians in the different provinces: In New Brunswick there are 1,576 Indians, in Nova Scotia 2,136, Prince Edward Island 323, in Manitoba 8,754, Northwestern Territory, 17,463, British Columbia 38,539.

I saw the report of the Indian Commissioner for New Brunswick about a year ago. He speaks particularly of schools among the Indians, and the efforts to induce them to take up farming. The schools, he says, are well attended, but owing to the wandering habits of the Indians, the farms are often neglected, and the crops are often lost on account of the owner being away on some hunting expedition. The seed is given by the government.

Government. Each tribe has a chief, who is elected, but whether they have a regular Congress or not, I cannot say, but their government appears to give them very little trouble, as the chief is elected for life. I remember seeing the old chief of the Micmacs some years ago. He was very old, perhaps nearly ninety, but his hair was not gray. He must have been very old indeed, because he told my father that he had been moose-hunting with my father's grandfather.

The chief of the Milicets (since deceased) was as noble a specimen of an Indian as I have ever seen. He was a great favorite with his people. When he came to market on the regular market days in Fredericton, he would be seen surrounded by many of his people who talked and laughed gaily with him, but always treated him with great respect.

Signs of improvement. The Indians living near Fredericton, N. B. are becoming very thrifty. They go regularly every Saturday to market with loads of baskets and other material, and find a ready sale for their wares. Most of these live in houses, and many of them own small farms.

Some of the Indians are musicians, and it is always the violin they use, but they play very fast.

I remember once of visiting a wigwam at night. My brother and I were sent one winter night to request an Indian to cut some cord wood for us in the woods. As we approached the wigwam, we could see the sparks issuing from the top, and could hear the Indians laughing inside. They are a very jolly people, and always seem to be enjoying themselves. When I arrived at the camp, I did not know just how to proceed, and so I pulled the blanket to one side (the door was a blanket), and walked right in, without knocking. I almost stepped into the fire, and the smoke came up and almost blinded me. The men were all on one side of the wigwam, and the women on the other, according to the old custom still in practice. On the opposite side of the fire, where was the least smoke, is the place of honor, where the honored guest is invited. We were not invited there; in fact, Sam Newell looked rather indignant at our abrupt entrance. I delivered my message and went away.

Odd sayings of the Indians. This Sam Newell, to whom I have just referred, was the son in law of the chief.

One winter, several squaws quartered themselves on Sam. He was asked why he had so many squaws. He said that, "Some day, I'm going to say to them, 'You go 'way, but I'll keep't old woman,'" meaning his wife, of course.

Sam sawed some wood for us once. The saw became dull very often, and when he left to go to dinner, he would often say to me, "You tell your father give that saw leetle sharp."

One day he seemed to be in a hurry, and handed me the saw, saying, "You sharp, your father."

Sam was very conscientious, and would not do anything he thought was wrong.

While he was with us, a magic lantern show was to be in the school house. We asked Sam if he would go. He seemed very indignant, and said, "Do you tink I'm go show? Just go same go devil go show."

Another Indian, Louis Thomas, came to my father once in great grief. His mother, who had been a widow many years, was to be married. He wrote a letter urging her not to do so. He gave her many reasons; he used all the logic he was capable of, to dissuade her; he told her he would go to Canada if she got "mollied."

After dictating the letter, he came into the kitchen for a drink of water, as he was somewhat over heated, and my mother asked him when his mother was coming down. He said, "Oh, my mother, she come down I don't know never." "Is she coming down then, Louis?" "Ye-s."

An Indian of Oldtown, Maine, was converted. One evening in prayer meeting, in telling of his experience, he said: "Me very good, me pious like hell!" A tavern keeper, was once drawing off some liquor, and an Indian came along and asked him what it was, he said it was tar. Sometime after when the same Indian was present, a man came along somewhat intoxicated. The tavern keeper asked the Indian what was the matter with the man: "I tink he has too much tar in him," said the Indian.

I remember reading a very good story which happened in the old days, of a man of some authority, I think a governor of one of the provinces, who was quite friendly with one of the chiefs, who often came to his house. One day the governor showed the chief a beautiful military uniform, which the chief admired very much. Some days afterward, the chief came in and said: "I had a very strange dream. I dreamt that you gave me that nice coat, with the gilt lace." The governor took the hint, and gave him the coat, and the chief went away quite joyful. It seems that the governor wished to get a tract of land from the Indians, but had not been successful, so sometime afterwards, the governor said to the chief: "I had a strange dream last night, I dreamt that you gave me that large tract of land," designating it. The chief looked very much surprised, but said: "White man, make very big dream." The Governor got the land.

A New Brunswick school teacher, while going to his school, one morning, overtook an Indian doctor. The doctor asked him if he knew a certain Indian word; the teacher said he did not: "Why," said the doctor, "My boy, he know that word," "Oh," he says, my boy, he very sm't, he went clean through larnin." A young squaw in New Brunswick, on being told that she was looking old, said: "Oh, we can't be young every day."

The Indians seem to be afraid of anything they do not understand. I remember once of having a very severe headache, which lasted about three days; it was all very well to stay home from school the first day, but it became monotonous on the third day and I felt anxious to get rid of the headache. So my mother thought that bathing my feet might be very good. I agreed to it. While the preparations were going on two squaws came in. Before they had arrived, the tub had been got ready, and some cold water had been put into it; the hot water was on the stove. Squaws are quite inquisitive, and they asked about my sickness, and what she was going to do, which my mother explained. "I'm going to bathe his feet in hot water," she said. "My stars!" said the squaws. They seemed very much interested and had evidently never heard of this kind of treatment before. When the water was boiling, my mother poured it into the tub, and I very carefully tried it with my feet. It was not at all hot as there had been rather too much cold water in before, of course a great steam arose, and I was almost invisible, but I sat there with my feet in the water, feeling quite comfortable. The squaws did not know anything about the cold water being placed in the tub beforehand, and thought I rivalled the Indians in stoicism. My mother left the room just then, and the squaws looked at each other in utter amazement and getting up, they went out of doors as quickly as if they had been fired from a cannon.

In conclusion I may say that the Indians of the provinces have every reason to be as happy as could be expected of people of their nature. The forests are open to them at any time, and they may cut any tree they wish, no matter whether it is on government land or on that owned by private persons, so long as it is woodland. They are not subjected to the annoyances to which the U. S. Indians are subjected. In fact, they are not molested in any way, and have an opportunity to indulge in their old roving habits, to hunt and fish; or to improve as they are doing around the cities, as suggested in a previous part of this article. The Canadian government has always tried to treat the Indians well, and have had, in consequence, little or no trouble with them.

C. ASHMORE.

D. W. Stevens.

The Colorado Sun of April 17 has the following item:

D. W. Stevens was yesterday appointed water commissioner for water district No. 8, which extends into Jefferson, Douglas and Arapahoe counties. Mr. Stevens resides in Denver.

To Worcester readers, this squib means much, for this same Stevens was once a boy in our midst, and not so very long ago either. He went from our High School to Chicago and then went even further, till he fetches up at the foot of the Rockies. His duties have to do with the irrigating system that, alone, renders farming in Colorado possible. The water ways in this district, are two hundred miles long and he is to make trips about his domain on horseback. There are 40,000 acres of land under irrigation. The commissioners work is no sinecure. He has to see that justice is done every where. We score one more credit to our Worcester boys.

BARON MONOPOLY.

I'm Baron Monopoly
A monarch more properly,
And curse to the wage-working band;
My aim is monopoly
I want the more properly
The wealth, of this broad yielding land.

I'm Baron Monopoly
A ruler more properly,
And serf to the gold-brooding clan;
My thirst is monopoly
Or heart the more properly
Is not with the down-trodden man.

I'm Baron Monopoly
A king the more properly,
And despot as others have been;
But force of monopoly
Is guard to me properly
And check to all ignorant men.

But Baron Monopoly!
When people more properly,
Shall have seen the little they ken;—
Thy head will be properly
A barren monopoly
As many a tyrant's has been.

—Herr Cherrytree.

GREECE.

Farewell sweet land of Greece! farewell!
Thy wandering student he;
As now he greets thee through his tears
Forever turns to thee.

Alas! too far my feet have trod
'Neath frowning, stranger skies;
Night as she wraps her mantle round,
Conceal thee from mine eyes.

Thy glorious temples rich with Art
Lie wrapped in darkest gloom;
The lessons that thy sages taught
Are buried in the tomb.

Along thy vine-clad hills and vales
Which bright Illissus lave;
A stranger 'neath thy azure skies
Views many a nameless grave.

O beautiful land of Greece, farewell!
Home of the days gone by;
Scenes of Life's brightest, sunniest page,
To leave ye is to die.

—Fred L. Hildreth.

Worcester, Mass.

Geraldine Ulmer was finally married in London two weeks ago to Ivan Caryll.

ORDER NOW

and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than at

EVANS & COMPANY,
Manufacturers of
Fine Monumental Work,

131 Central Street, near Summer.

W. A. ENGLAND,
DEALER IN
FINE WATCHES,
CLOCKS, JEWELRY
& OPTICAL GOODS.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.

394 Main Street.

ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING

Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,
Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.

Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold on commission.

MRS. S. M. KEYES.

“Bird’s-Eye
VIEW OF THE WORLD.”

For particulars see “Books and Bookmen,” and address the Agent, Mr. H. E. Gould, care of Y. M. C. A.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE
permanently eradicated by the
ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,
92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

Fashion.

A fair gossip from the center of fashion informs me that high sleeves, Medici collars and buttonless bodices are doomed. The bright and laughing spring will see flit shoulders, low collars and buttons on every conceivable portion of the bodice, sleeves and skirt. I am sorry to hear this, for buttons are expensive and unsatisfactory, while full sleeves are a boon to the spare shouldered and a blessing to the thin-armed, and Medici collars are becoming to most American women.

To be quite fashionable now one must wear a string of pearls morning, noon, evening, and night.

Lace is the prevailing trimming of the day. It is seen upon toques, it forms the basis of tiny muffs, it adorns glove tops, and it is used for flounces upon the skirts and bodices of street dresses.

New colors are cornflower blue, larkspur, quite vivid shades, cowslip and daffodil yellows, fuchsia red, holly and hop green, very light and pretty. Peach blossoms is again favored. The vegetable colors, tomato red in two shades, which gardeners recognize as “Acme” and “Livingstone Perfection”, carrot red and yellow and red cabbage shades, are too hot looking for summer.

In millinery may be mentioned one or two high novelties. For instance, a small, close shape, composed principally of gold net, festooned about the edge with pearl passementerie crown entirely covered with lilies of the valley. Another small bonnet from a Parisian atelier has an opened crown surrounded with pink roses, over which is drawn a covering of black lace. Long ties of gold ribbon. A large black lace hat has its centre formed of one great yellow velvet bow and a garniture of violets.

The yellow primrose is the popular flower for spring decoration of almost any sort.

American soaps are used by patriotic and judicious persons instead of the imported article, and with a far better result in most cases.

Attar of rose is the latest fashion for perfuming stationary as well as lingerie.

Airiness is the chief characteristic of the Spring millinery. The bonnets have no crown at all, the rims being rick-rack affairs spiked with ribbon or velvet and embellished with a spray of roses or orchids. This is very little to the hats, which allow for pinching and are finished with an edge of open-work braid. All told they do not weigh three ounces, but the prices asked are simply fabulous.

Gold bonnets with black toiles, by all means. Bamboo furniture is growing in popularity. Wash silk is to be one of the favorite fabrics for Summer gowns.

The popularity of cheese cloth for household decorations induced manufacturers to improve upon it to such an extent that this season it is shown in the most pleasing designs. White grounds covered with sprigs and vines in the dainty colors of old tapestry and delicate china pinks and blues of equally pretty effects are to be had now. These make light, neat-looking comfortables for beds, and for use in draping rooms in country houses there is nothing half so effective as this same soft, pliable, humble cheese cloth.

The superiority of

*ROSE CREAM LOTION***

lies in the fact that it contains no Oils or Greasy Substances, no Chemical or Mineral Poisons, and will not injure the most delicate skin. Can be applied at any time; quickly absorbed. Ladies troubled with catchy fingers, working on silk and satin, will find it an excellent remedy. It will not leave the hands sticky.

For Gentlemen’s use after shaving it is with out an equal.

Try it. Get a

SAMPLE BOTTLE FREE.

Large bottles, 25c. Found in all first-class Drug stores. Prepared by

PERKINS & COMPANY, Sole Proprietors,
Worcester, Mass. BUSH & CO., Wholesale Agents.

STARKIE’S DYE HOUSE,

12 Layard Place, (Old Stand,) Worcester.

Ladies and Gents’ Garments

DYED * AND * CLEA \ SED
in a Superior Manner.

Harness and Saddlery,
RELIABLE GOODS
and LOWEST PRICES.
R. McALEER & CO.,
155 MAIN STREET.

PHOTOGRAPHER
*****

Children’s
Portraits
A Specialty

326 Main, op. Mechanics Hall

F. S. BLANCHARD & CO.,

* PRINTERS. ***

Book, Newspaper, Catalogue, Church, Society, Wedding and Commercial Printing of every kind executed in the best modern style.

No orders too large; none too small.

154 FRONT ST.

Horace Kendall,

DEALER IN

Furniture, Ranges, Carpets

AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Goods sold on instalments if desired. Prices as low as any house in New England.

No. 319 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Mechanics Hall Building.

PARLOR FURNITURE !

Plush Parlor Suits, $40.

Better Ones, $50, $60, $70.

Lounges and Couches, from $10
to $50.

Bed-Room Suites.

ASTONISHING—yet true, that you can get first-class Bed-room Suites in this city at such LOW PRICES.

We wish you to call and see for yourselves whether we have the best made goods, best quality goods, best looking goods, at the very lowest prices.

You can have a very good Bed-room Set for $18 50, and a better one for $22. Our $35 Set is well worth $40.

CARPETS

of all kinds, and WHEN QUALITY IS CONSIDERED, you will find ours equally as low as any to be found in the city. We sell GOOD GOODS at reasonable prices.

Velvet Carpets, $1.00 per yard. Best Tapestry, 69c. per yard. Best quality 5-frame Body Brussels, $1.20 per yard, with Borders to match.

Don't buy a COOKING RANGE until you have examined the CRAWFORD RANGE. We guarantee them.

PINKHAM & WILLIS,

355 MAIN ST.

Household.

An excellent and simple wash to keep the hands white and smooth after the occasional dish-washing which comes to almost all house-keepers is equal parts of vinegar and water.

It is a good plan to keep a bottle of it prepared and standing in the kitchen closet. Wash the hands thoroughly in warm water, wipe them dry, and rinse thoroughly in the mixture. The same preparation is good to remove stains from the hands.

Hot tallow is said to remove machine oil from white goods. Repeated applications will also remove ink stains, if exposed to the rays of the sun.

Every little while some one discovers a new way of keeping cut flowers fresh, and no doubt all of them really are good. But as there are too many ways of cooking an egg, yet only one best way, so among these multiple methods there is one way that will keep the flowers freshest. It is this. At night take the flowers out of their vase and carefully clip the ends just the least little bit in the world. That much of it isn't new, you see. Then take a large pan of cold water and plunge the blossoms into it up to their very necks, taking care that every inch of the stem is under water. Then wring a cloth out of water and lay that over the basin, and set the dish in a place where the flowers will be as cool as possible without freezing. In the morning replace them in the vase and repeat the performance at night.

A good remedy for damp, moist hands is four ounces of cologne water and one-half ounce of tincture of belladonna. Rub the hands with this several times a day.

Colored tennis flannels should be washed in water about the temperature of the room they are washed in, with good white soap of any kind, and rinsed thoroughly in water of the same temperature, and wrung out as dry as possible. They may be hung up for a short time in the house, but should be taken down while still damp and ironed dry. Some laundresses never hang them up, but wring them so dry that the iron completes the drying.

To melt chocolate, break it in a few pieces, then melt it in a small dish set in the top of the teakettle; it is not necessary to grate it. Do not put a chocolate mixture into a tin mold, as it will become discolored from contact with the tin.

White lilies, white lilacs, white violets, and other spotless blossoms are most effective in a white bowl or jar.

For the yellow crocus that will come with the spring use the low bowl of Indian yellow.

Over a bell shaped lamp shade of plain color, a lace flounce can be hung with good effect. Gather it on a "baby" ribbon, and let it fall from the lower edge. Fedora lace is airy and pretty.

Common dry salt is said to be one of the best agents for cleaning marble, such as wash basins, sink fixtures and the like. It requires no preparation, and may be rubbed directly upon the tarnished surface, removing any incrustations or deposits at once, leaving the marble shining and clean. This is well worthy of remembrance, as it is often found to be provokingly hard to clean the marble thoroughly without injuring the surface.

The Readers of Light
I most cordially invite
To call at my

Model Drug Store

When in want of anything
They would expect to find

In a metropolitan establishment of its kind.

Respectfully,

Geo. E. Fairbanks, Druggist,

10 FRONT STREET.

MRS. MORGAN'S

Private School and Kindergarten,

Y. M. C. A. Building, 10 Elm Street.

SPRING TERM OPENS APRIL 6, 1891.

W. H. TWICHELL,

Gold, Silver and Nickel Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechanic St., Worcester, Mass.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,

BOOK * BINDING

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES

at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,

W. L. BROWN, Manager.

BLOOMINGDALE * NURSERIES, City Delivery.

TREES, VINES and PLANTS

Taken from the Soil and Delivered at Your Own Door. Stock purchased by Our Patrons within the City Limits will be Delivered at their Residence Without Charge.

"HERE WE GO."

The remarkable success that has attended the transplanting of Nursery Stock taken from these grounds during the last twenty-five years is due, in a large measure, to the care exercised in protecting the root from the sun and wind, both in the digging in the nursery grounds and in transit to their places of destination. Not only is the greatest care taken in packing in bales or boxes for distant transportation, but in our city delivery every precaution is taken to so protect the roots that they will reach our customers in as fresh a condition as when taken from the nursery row.

My New Illustrated and Descriptive Catalogue

Of 80 pages, has been prepared with much care and at great expense, and is now ready for distribution. It will be mailed free on application.

As a Guide to Horticulture.

The information to be gathered by a careful perusal of this catalogue, and especially noting the hints upon soil preparation, planting, and care of trees, which will be found in their proper places, we feel confident will be found worthy of your careful consideration. They are the results of years of constant and devoted study, hard labor and costly experiment, and although much of this experience has been dearly bought, we now tender it freely to others who are interested in Horticulture, that our life-long devotion to this work may not prove wholly fruitless.

The Nursery Grounds.

Parties wishing to visit the Nursery Grounds can take the cars of the Worcester & Shrewsbury Railroad, that leave their station (east side of the Union Passenger Station) hourly, passing near the Grounds, and stopping at Draper's Station, by notifying the conductor.

Telephone, 17-6.

JAMES DRAPER, Proprietor.

School and College.

High School.

The entertainment and reception for the benefit of the High School Athletic and Base Ball Associations was successfully given at the High School last Friday evening. The entertainment was excellent and the audience was large, but the expenses had been so heavy that the receipts did not equal them. However a good time was enjoyed by everyone and many took advantage of the opportunity of becoming acquainted with Dr. Wight. The program began with a selection by the Arlington Quintet, followed by a recitative and aria by Mr. T. B. Hamilton. Then after the Arlingtons had played another selection, Dr. John G. Wright was introduced and read an interesting lecture on "The Parallelisms in Literature." More music by the Arlingtons and a piano solo by Mr. Arthur J. Bassett completed the entertainment in the hall. Dr. Wight and his wife received in the library, which had been very tastefully decorated for the occasion. Dancing was enjoyed until a late hour in the lower corridor by a large number of young people. The affair was under the management of C. Albert Gray assisted by Harry O. Billings, Frank W. Washburn, Fred Whittemore, Harry Hill, Harry Ames, Bert Kelley, Wm. Denholm and Harry Davis.

The Sumner Club is once more a High School society. At a recent meeting of the School Committee it was voted to allow the club re-admission, and accordingly the meetings will be held henceforth in the High School Building. The members of the club are congratulating one another over the events, and the reasons for the satisfaction are many. The strongest is that now there will be no rent to drain the club's treasury. Since the Sumner Club left the school that has been the chief obstacle to contend against. Although the members do not feel that they are in a worse condition, otherwise than financially, than when they left Mother High School, yet they cannot say that they have been progressing as rapidly as they did previous to the departure, and taking all things into consideration, the Sumnerites think they have made as good a move coming back once more under the fostering influence in which they formerly flourished, as they did when they left the school nearly two years ago for various reasons. As the old assembly boys feel too, the need of a floor to debate upon, they may come into the Sumner Club. It is talked of a great deal, and is not very improbable.

The Sumner Club and Eucleia held no meetings on the seventeenth, which was the night of the concert. The Aletheia met in the afternoon and debated the question: Resolved that girls be thrown on their own resources.

The signs of Spring are no where more evident than here. The arbutus blooms festively in many button-holes and the coming vacation must be well enjoyed. Saturday a party composed mostly of High School pupils repaired to Holden's hills for a general good time and found it. Journeying at their ease in a 'bus they saw one of the High School teachers plodding along by the roadside. For once they could look down on him.

C. A. Gray, manager of the Ball team, has resigned his position, and will go into training in the Senior class crew. He takes the place of J. W. Loynd, stroke and captain, who gives up his position to go into active training for athletics.

The Ball team met the Tech Freshmen on Bliss's field April 18 and defeated them by a score of 16-15. Monday afternoon they suffered a defeat at the hands of the Middler's. The score was 11-7.

Amherst.

The opening of the term found most of the students back and ready for work. The common and college grounds have begun to look fresh and green again, and the whole town has assumed its Spring aspect.

The announcement of the Kellogg Fifteens found Worcester represented by the only man eligible to election, Mr. Harry E. Whitcomb of the Freshman class. The speaking for the Kellogg Five will probably occur May 1st. Both the athletic and base ball teams are hard at work, the former for the Springfield meet on the twenty-seventh of next month, the latter for the opening game with Williams on May 6th. If any Worcester Alumni are thinking of visiting Amherst this spring, they will do well to come on the latter date. The day practically will be devoted to festivities. Early in the afternoon the Ladd Prize Drill takes place in the gymnasium, followed by the opening of Pratt Field and the Williams Amherst base-ball game. In the evening, ten men from the Junior class, one of whom is Mr. C. E. Hildreth, will speak in college hall for the Lester Prize in oratory.

Wellesley.

Phillips Brooks spoke in the chapel April 16. The Saturday afternoon lecture was by Mr. Edward Atkinson of Boston, upon the "Silver Bill."

Dr. George Gordon of Boston preached Sunday morning.

Miss Salmon, Professor of History at Vassar, lectured April 21 upon "Domestic Service." April 25, she will speak upon a different aspect of the same question.

Holy Cross.

The marks for the month of March were read in Fenwick Hall the 17th by Rev. C. C. Jones S. J. The following were the Worcester boys who received tickets of excellence in their different classes. Class of poetry, T. B. Cunningham, J. F. Spellman, W. I. McLaughlin. First Grammar, J. P. O'Brien. First Mathematics, J. A. Riordan. Third Mathematics, F. M. Phelan, J. P. O'Brien.

A grand reception was given by the students of the college on the evening of April 17, to Rev. T. F. McLaughlin S. J., in honor of his promotion to the priesthood. The exercises consisted of literary and musical numbers and concluded with a speech by Fr. McLaughlin, in whose honor also, a whole holiday was enjoyed.

The ball team went to Holyoke the 18th and defeated the home team crushingly, 13 to 1.

The Worcester members of the college are to hold a banquet in the Bay State House the latter part of June. The day scholars comprise the greater number of the Worcester boys and this is the first time that they have contemplated a matter that tends to become a grand precedent in the years to come.

John A. Fitzgerald W. H. S. '86, H. C. C. '86, has accepted a lucrative position in Portland, Ore. A surprise party was tendered him by his friends Thursday evening.

Wesleyan.

The annual junior exhibition took place last Thursday evening in the chapel. It was very hotly contested and the general opinion was that it was superior to those of former years. The first prize was won by Mr. Everett Hallerton Scott; the second by Mr. Wm. Henry Kidd.

The essays for the Olin prizes were handed in on Monday, but the decision has not yet been made.

The drawings for Freshman and Sophomore declamations have also been made, the contests to take place sometime in June.

Professor Winchester has been elected to the chair of English Literature at the new University of Chicago. He is a most valuable man and of great service to Wesleyan so that the friends of the College and the students in particular are awaiting his decision with no little anxiety.

Professor Armstrong has been unable to meet his classes for some weeks on account of illness.

The Yale Glee and Banjo Clubs are to give a concert at Russell Library Hall on Friday of this week, for the benefit of the Base Ball Association.

At the anniversary of the Middletown Y. M. C. A. last Sunday, Mr. A. E. Hancock,

President of the College Association made a very interesting address.

Rev. Mr. Hall, Secretary of the New York State Y. M. C. A., recently addressed the students upon the opportunities for college graduates in Y. M. C. A. work.

Mount Holyoke.

Active preparations are being made for a German play, to be given April 28. The scenes are taken from the familiar fairy-tale "Schneewittchen," whose heroine with "hair as black as ebony, skin white as snow and cheeks as red as roses" has been loved and pitied by all readers of Grimm. Other than that Miss Fanny Bigelow is to be the Prince, Miss Miriam Gray, Schneewittchen. The program is a dense mystery, although it is rumored that the "seven little dwarfs" will create a sensation.

The new college paper will issue its first number the last of April. It is owing to the enterprise of '92 that this has been so successfully started, and its first issue is looked forward to with great expectations.

Plans are being made for a tennis tournament, and the lawns, covered with tennis players, show no lack of interest in the sport.

I wish all the poor people who are shut up in the cities could be here now. I am not an artist, and a college girls expression "perfectly beautiful" does not convey much idea of the ideal loveliness of this part of the country. I can only wish every one might drink in the coming Spring as we are doing.

Harvard.

Worcester has a good representative in Harvard wit, for Harry W. Doe '93, has been elected an editor of the Lampoon. Mr. Doe and his associates have a hard task before them, for they propose to issue eight numbers in the remaining eight weeks.

Henry Washburn is playing right field on the Senior Nine in good shape. '91 is expected to make a fine showing for the class championship. Among the crews, however, '93 seems to be a favorite, and Worcester men hope the Sophomores will win for Osborn Earle is rowing No. 3 in the boat.

The time now is divided between Athletics and study, for the list of final examinations has been issued, reminding us that their beginning is yet five weeks distant. They begin, as usual, June 1, and close just before Class Day, June 19.

But as yet, Athletics get rather the best of it. The boys who are going to interscholastic sports, will be interested to know that the Athletic Association is about to make a two-hundred and twenty yard straight-away track.

The Varsity Crew is, of course, training hard for the New London race, which will take place, probably June 26. The Freshmen, by the way, are to row a three-cornered race with Yale and Columbia.

The Hasty Pudding Club is having unusual success with its theatricals this year. The performances at the Club House consist of "Two Old Grads," a college sketch, and a very bright main piece the "Obispah."

Charles B. Earle, '91 showed excellent staying qualities as a candidate for the Freshmen

Base Ball Nine. He held on till the number was reduced to sixteen. The return of sundry Varsity Nine candidates narrowed Earle's chances. He'll get on yet.

Very few people have an adequate idea of the size of Harvard. In all departments of the University there are 2300 students, but a more striking proof of the size and importance of Harvard is seen in the fact that there are one hundred and eleven instructors in the college alone, not including, the law school, the medical school and other professional departments. Let the skeptical, who cry out against the wickedness of Harvard, look at these figures and satisfy themselves that there must be more than one black sheep in such an immense flock.

At least two of Worcester's people will long be remembered at Harvard for their generosity. They are Stephen Salisbury, father of the present Mr. Salisbury, and George Bancroft. The former gave to the college a sum of money to be used in the purchasing of books for the library, and many of the books in the Greek and Latin department bear his name on the fly leaves. The latter gave a sum of money to found the John Thornton Kirkland Fellowship, for the benefit of young men who wish to pursue higher college studies.

It would take a volume to tell all about Harvard athletics, but perhaps those who are interested in out door sports would like to hear what Harvard's athletes are doing. At present there are in training the Varsity crew and four class crews, the Varsity base ball team and four class teams, the Varsity cricket team, the Varsity tennis league, composed of fourteen of the best players in college, and the Mott Haven team, for which about a hundred fellows are now trying. It can be seen by this that about two hundred and fifty are trying for the various college teams, besides the many who take their exercise simply for pleasure. It is a noteworthy fact that the college not only allows this but approves of it, even going so far as to hire a trainer for the Mott Haven team and making him one of the instructors in the University.

In its progress, one may often wonder whether school is, after all, of so much consequence, on the pupil's minds as vacation. In fact, teacher as well as child gets in a way of reckoning from one vacation to another. They become to them what moons were to the Indian. Happily, the child becomes the adult and ceases to look for these periodical waits. Not so the teacher. The habit grows upon him and he really lives only in his rests. The remainder of the time he exists merely. So trying, however, is the ordeal of contact with multitudinous humanity, he could not live were his vacations less. Only those who have taught can appreciate this. This week, the Normal School is resting. Last week the "Tech" assembled after a brief breaking spell and next week the public schools have a week off. May all get the needed rest and repair.

Denver University is fortunate in having the gift of $100,000 from ex-Gov. Evans, $10,000 from Bishop Warren and a $10,000 painting from Albert Bierstadt, the painter. How they do boom some of these western institutions.

ALWAYS ON HAND!

The freshest and best vegetables to be found anywhere, with all kinds of fowls and game in their seasons.

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass

EDWARD B. CLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

THE CRITERION

Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

Worcester Dress Cutting School,
45 Pleasant St.,

For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circular.

Mrs. L. F. Walch.

E. W. COFFIN,

Store Fixtures

310 Main Street, Worcester.

Name this Paper.

MRS. A. MINOR,

Millinery * Parlors.

A well-selected Stock of Goods for Order Work.

14 MAPLE STREET, Worcester, Mass.

Good to Eat.

Plain Omelette.

Break six eggs into a bowl, beat them very light and add six tablespoonfuls of hot water. Have an iron saucepan, about eight inches in diameter, hot, and melt in it one tablespoonful of butter. Pour in the eggs and shake the saucepan vigorously until the mixture thickens. Let it stand a minute or two to brown, run a knife around the sides of the saucepan, and double it over. Slip it into a hot dish and serve immediately. Just before folding it, sprinkle half a teaspoonful of salt over the top of the omelette.

Rice Cup Puddings.

Pick and wash a teacupful of rice and boil it in a quart of milk till it is very thick and dry; add to this whilst it is hot a pint of rich milk or cream and two ounces of butter. When it is sufficiently cool, add three eggs, well beaten, and sugar to taste. Butter your cups, pour in the mixture, and bake in a moderate oven. Grate nutmeg over the top and serve them with cream.

Potato Snow.

Peel Irish potatoes carefully, dropping them in cold water as you peel them. When peeled drop them into boiling water that is salted sufficiently. As soon as they are thoroughly done drain off the water, put in a large spoonful of butter and a half a teacup of cream, and mash and cream them quickly until perfectly smooth. Have ready a hot dish and pile the potato snow lightly on it, and serve at once.

Cocoanut Cake.

Cream together one pound of white sugar and a half pound of butter. When perfectly light add one pound of grated cocoanut, two eggs beaten separately very light and a half pound of flour. Mix well, and bake rather quickly. This cake should be iced, and is very nice.

Doughnuts for "John's Wife."

Three eggs, one and a half cups of butter, melted in a quart of warm milk; one and one half pounds of sugar, one cup of yeast. Flour to make as stiff as bread dough. Set it to rise over night, and when light make into balls with the hands, and fry in hot fat.

M. F. H.

Baked Indian Pudding.

Mix four tablespoonfuls of Indian meal with one half cupful of molasses and one-half teaspoonful of ginger and a speck of salt, and stir gradually into one pint scalding milk. Put in buttered pudding-dish with one pint cold milk, and bake slowly, adding more milk if needed. Sliced sweet apples may be used in this pudding, or dried blueberries or currants. Cinnamon may be substituted for ginger, and raisins and suet may be added to it. It should bake gently and long, and the addition of plentiful cold milk gives the jelly rim desired for this pudding. Bake in earthen ware or firebrick. If there is not time for the long baking, add eggs, two or four, to quantity given above. Eaten hot with hard sauce; cold, should be daintily sliced and served with sugar and cream.

Gatherings that should be suppressed—boils. [Drake's magazine.]

VOLAPÜK.

Posilabs suköl olenadolsös bi oyufoms oles lüädön volapüki, bi posilabs at pegeboms kösömiko ka stäms.

-ab. nems mona. Doab, dollar. Sentab, cent.

-äb. subsat pösodik. Fibäb, weakling. Jeläb, protegé.

-af. botanical. Nems flolas. Maräif, daisy. soläf, sunflower.

-al. superior personage. Goval, governor. Bisiedal, president (of a republic.)

-äl. mental characteristics. Kapäl, understanding, intelligence. Gpääl, uprightness.

-am. verb noun. Logam, seeing. Rönam, racing, running.

-an. pösod. Bäledan, old man. Melopan, American. Voban, workman.

-än. geographical. Län, country. Selän, foreign. Selänan, foreigner. Pebaltän, United States. Rilän, Ireland.

-ap. anatomical. Finap, toe. Goap, leg.

-av. sciences. Pükav, philology. Stelav, astronomy.

-ef. subsat pösodik (collective), Kongef, congress. Lasemef, congregation, audience.

-el. subsat pösodik (one who does, or makes, something). Julel, scholar. Bijutel, jeweller.

-em. collection of things. Neifem, cutlery. Nanumem, tools, implements.

-en. business, occupation. Buken, book publishing business. Gaden, gardening.

-iel. apparatus, thing which does something. Peniel, writing machine. Vatiel, scale.

-il. diminutive. Z fil, little city. Motil, dear little mother.

-im. ism. Katolim, catholicism. Protestanim, protestantism.

-in. chemicals. Vatin, hydrogen. Züdin, oxygen.

-ip. diseases. Vatip, dropsy. Ladip, heart disease.

-it. nems bödas. Kanerit, canary. Kuit, quail.

-jöf. abstract quality. Dunlöf, practicability. japälöf, acuteness.

-na. times. Tumna, an hundred times. Telna, two times.

-öm. furniture, utensils. Feilöm, agricultural implements. Domöm, house utensils, house furnishings.

-op. nems (of continents). Melop, America. Fikop, Africa.

-öp. nem (of locality). Futöp, foot place, sidewalk. Büköp, printing office.

-ot. concrete thing made or done. Bumot, a building. Länotot, report, announcement.

-öf. abstract condition. Nil öf, fastidiousness. Fül'öf, miserliness.

-sük. passion for. Dlinisük, inebriety. Itasük, egotism.

-tät. condition or quality. Komität, commission, errand.

-tet. abstract quality. Libaviltet, spontaneity. Komitet, commissariat.

-iid. compass points. Noelüd, north. Sulüd, south.

-üf. music. Kilüf, third. Spadiuf, space.

-ug. characteristic property. Fibug, debility. Neleigug, inequality.

-üg. ship, hood. Ciliüg, childhood. Cifüg, chiefship.

-üm. musical composition. Valsüm, waltz. polküüm, polka.

-un. product of manufacture. Spulun, warp.

-up. nems (of plants.) Kel no pageboms. Peup, ivy.

The Week.

CITY.

- April 17—Entertainment for benefit of school nine, in High School Hall.
Miss Katie F. Doyle, sister of the late Rev. James H. Doyle, buried from her mother's home on Blackstone Street.
Hadwen B. Jenks dies at 21 Sycamore Street. 73 years.
- 18—Enthusiastic reunion of the Old Sixth Regiment at Continental Hall.
Light Infantry with Veterans and friends starts for Baltimore and Washington.
- 19—Only one minister in Worcester, the Rev. Mr. Southgate, improves the coincidence of days to preach a patriotic sermon.
Stephen Salisbury announced as offering a lot of land, corner of Salisbury and Tuckerman Streets, and $10,000 for an Art Building. His letter dated, April 13.
Hugh Ward, a veteran engineer, dies at 29 Endicott Street. 67 years.
Wm. R. Casey of 16 South Irving Street falls from a bridge in Providence and is killed.
- 20—Congregational Club holds 99th regular meeting. Discusses Church Benevolence.
Annual exhibition of the Art Students, opened to members only.
P. L. Moen reported seriously ill.
Rev. F. D. Power, Garfield's old pastor, preaches at the Church of Christ.
- 21—The license granting ordeal is over. Some happy—more the other way. "What shall the harvest be?"
Salem Street people have an enjoyable evening with Beethoven as arranged by B. D. Allen.
Pleasant Street Baptist Church dedicated.
- 22—Gilmore as usual captivates his audience. The prince of leaders.
Mr. P. L. Moen reported somewhat better.
The Bar gives a dinner in honor of John Popkin's elevation to the Bench.
Woman's Home Missionary Society holds successful meeting at Plymouth Church.
- 23—Philip D. Moen dies at his residence on Lincoln Street. 66 years.

COUNTY.

- 17—Fire in Deland's stable, North Brookfield, Mass.
Wachusett Mountain offered for sale.
- 18—Mrs. Lottie A. (Moulton) Barton buried in Spencer.
Dr. Warren Tyler dies in North Brookfield. 72 years. Surgeon of the 36th Regiment.
- 19—Samuel A. Sibley gored to death by a bull in Clinton. 72 years.
- 20—Mrs. Mary E., widow of John B. Gough, dies at Hillside farm, Boylston. 71 years.
- 21—Mrs. Elijah Smith dies in Northbridge. 75 years.
- 22—Extensive forest fire near Oakdale. 400 acres burned over.

COMMONWEALTH.

- 17—Legislature unfavorable to the payment of poll taxes by political parties. Will not allow the governor to have a large staff when he goes to the Bennington celebration.

18—Fire corner of Court and Hanover streets, Boston.

Governor Russell goes to a ball game.

19—Though a big date in Bay State history, everything is very quiet, though Lexington rises to the occasion, and, in addition to local talent introduces ex-Representative Greenhölge and Dr. William Everett.

20—"Sons of the American Revolution," celebrate by a meet in Charlestown, finishing with a gathering under the old elm in Cambridge and a dinner at the Waverly House.

21—General Butler put out of court by the direction of Judge Carpenter. "On what meat doth this Caesar feed that he is grown so great?"

Bill to repeal the Public Bar Act defeated in the House.

22—Time for digging the Cape Cod canal extended.

Representative Jos. H. Warker speaks in Dorchester.

23—Increase of salary now occupying the attention of our Legislature.

City Council of Boston supports Typographical Union, voting not to give city printing to any firm which does not pay T. U. prices.

NATION.

17—Political ups and downs. Blaine may and he may not. Harrison has the advantage of being in.

Stairs fall in Vice President Morton's hotel in Washington.

John H. Smith, ex minister to Siberia, in Emancipation address advises his people to get rid of race characteristics. How can they?

18—Shore Line train for Boston derailed near Fair Haven.

Troops called for in the coke regions of Pennsylvania.

Strike at Clark's thread mill in Newark, N. J., declared off.

Frightful railroad collision on Lake Shore road, forty miles west of Cleveland, O. Eight killed.

The President in Texas.

19—Worcester visitors received most cordially in Baltimore.

A live electric wire touched by Charles Werner while playing on a fire in Chicago. He falls dead to the street.

20—Worcester men having the best of times in Baltimore. All are brothers now.

More Italian murders in New York.

21—Worcester Light Infantry received with great eclat in Washington. Enthusiastic meeting of the Republican League in Cincinnati.

22—The President enthusiastically received in California.

Light Infantry forgets dull care in Washington pleasures.

Justice Bradley of Supreme Court seriously ill.

23—Light Infantry visits Mount Vernon.

Local managers of World's Fair denounced as a gang of speculators.

American iron productions exceed those of Great Britain.

WORLD.

17—New South Wales to enfranchise women.

Strange if the southern world should have to teach us.

Portugal Cabinet troubles ended.

18—British ship, St. Catharis wrecked off the Caroline island. 90 lives lost.

19—Portugese fire on British. They are geese indeed if they keep up that business.

20—Baron Fava reaches Paris on his way home. Still much annoyed over the attitude of the U. S.

Reciprocity Treaty between Spain and our country. Terms favorable to America.

21—Queen's Grenadier Guards in a state of mutiny.

Baron Hirsch of Paris said to have purchased an asylum for Jews in Pennsylvania, but they won't stay there.

22—Germany asked to relax her passport regulations with respect to Alsace and Lorraine.

King of Gambia roughly treats a British envoy. This makes the Lion roar.

23—Powder magazine blows up in Rome. 265 tons of powder goes up in smoke. Fighting America now out of the question.

The Boy's Club.

There is one man in Worcester who deserves more than passing praise from his fellow citizens and that man is Mr. Burgess, the Superintendent of the Boys' Club. To direct and manage as he does must be seen to be appreciated. Thursday night he had arranged a programme for these youngsters and for more than an hour the lads listened to songs and recitations. Messrs. Stewart and Robinson sang and the little Misses Hewitt and Damon recited. They are very little folks but they said their words in a most appreciative manner. Mr. Alfred S. Roe gave the boys some War talk and Mr. C. L. Blair made a flash light picture of the crowded lads.

Worcester has boys and boys, all good or bad in their way. These boys under Mr. Burgess' care are lads who early learn what it is to do for themselves. They sell papers, light lamps, run on errands, are cash boys; in fact there is no possible way of earning a cent that they have not tried. By and by they will be active, pushing, business men of the land.

It couldn't be done again. When an immense derrick falls between the cart and the horses and into a convenient alley way instead of upon the waiting room of a hotel, or a convenient shoe shop or upon the heads of the everwaiting sidewalk committee, it does seem as though there was some good luck as well as bad luck for that caused the post holding a guy to break. All this in the work on the new Five Cents Savings Bank, corner of Main and Walnut Streets at about 10 a.m., Thursday.

To be sure a team of horses with their heavy dump cart started to run away down Main Street, having thrown out their driver, Shea, but they were nicely stopped in front of Davis's sporting goods store. They had complete right of way and kept to the middle of the street. Mr. A. E. Peck was industriously shouting to folks further along to get out of the route when a man ran out from the sidewalk grabbed the near horse by the bridle and yanked him into his senses. The best of it all was that the man was filling his pipe at the time and his dureen was in his mouth. He never let go of that, nor harmed it in the least and when the driver had limped up the catcher went on filling his pipe. He is a cool one. LIGHT wonders what would surprise him.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

The time for Spring dress goods has come surely.

There never was a time when so many pretty patterns were produced at so little cost as this season.

The manufacturers have tried to out-do each other in giving the most for the least money, and the merchants have a rich field for selection.

In all wool fabrics we have much for you to choose from, at 25c, 37c and 50c a yard; and we have a 36-inch Suiting, not all wool, but good for house dress, for 12 1-2c.

A small lot of 25c Mohairs will be sold for 12 1-2c.

American Chaillies, pretty as pictures, 5c, 12 1-2c and 17c a yard.

American Gingham, 5c, 6 1-4c, 9c, 10c, 15c a yard.

Parisian Crepe, 15c a yard, excellent, in large figures.

In Spring Novelties there is an unending choice at 50c a yard. Many of them rival many at double the price.

It is impossible for you not to find what will suit you in this great gathering of the best products of American looms.

50c Boucle Plaids are now 37 1-2c.
Bright, White, Creamy, Summery Seersuckers are ready for you. 5c a yard.

Lace Tidies, 7c each; good for hotels, summer cottages, and the seaside.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

Smith's

Millinery.

Whatever should be in the best Millinery Department in the city is here.

Edward L. Smith & CO.,
401 and 403 Main Street,
Walker Building, Cor. Mechanic.

Artist Fads.

Nearly every great artist gives herself airs and pets a fad of some sort. Ellen Terry never travels ten miles without her tea caddy. Mme. Patti goes over land and sea with a maid at her heels carrying a toilet cabinet filled with perfumed grease and distilled rain drops for her bath and toilet. Mme. Bernhardt has her snakes and Lily Langtry a small apparatus with spirit lamp-stool and saucepan attached for the vapor baths which she takes to keep her proportions in shape. Minnie Hauk is sweibach mad. She buys this toasted rusk by the dozen cases and carries them every where she goes. Year in and year out she makes her luncheon on a cup of claret and a couple of pieces of this crisp, dry, sweet toast.

A Roland for an Oliver.

The playing of practical jokes is apt to be disagreeable for the victims, but now and then the jokers themselves get the worse of it. A case in point. A few months since, a party of men about town of this city including several city and country officials, went "out the road" to have a little celebration. They were accompanied by a newspaperman, who was not their equal in capacity for imbibing, and soon became talkative. He repeatedly said that he considered Detroit nothing better than a country village, and finally one of the party slipped out of the road house where they were and, going to the office of a Justice of the Peace, explained the conditions of affairs, and the official, somewhat indiscreetly, fell in with the joke and issued a warrant for the reporter on the charge of attempting to provoke a breach of the peace. This was given to a constable, who arrested the offender, handcuffed him and took him before the Justice, followed by the whole party. He was sufficiently befuddled so that he did not at first regard the matter as much less than one of life and death, and after the evidence was in and the lawyer assigned to his defence had made an argument, he arose and said:

"I would like to ask the Court for permission to say a few words. I do not understand the customs of this city. I am from the West as one can see by the way I wear this slouch hat," at the same time putting it on.

"You can judge, also, by the peculiar manner in which I put on my overcoat," and he assumed it. "Most readily all you can judge by this," and he pulled his revolver, covering the Court, jury and spectators, and with the words. "Now if any of you jays tries to stop me I'll bore a hole in you." backed out of the room, sprang in one of the carriages and told driver to get back to the city as fast as he could.

"I'll wait for the rest of the party," said the driver. "No you won't you'll go now." And when the driver saw the revolver he went, and went fast. "They do say" that it required a half hour to collect the jokers from under the tables and other places of refuge.—From the Detroit Free Press.

Mr. J. L. Amsden has fruit and confectionery with city papers including LIGHT at his Salem Square Stand. The Electric Road item of last week was too previous, yet it may be a waiting room and ticket office for the road in the future. Mr. Amsden is one of the best judges of fruit in Worcester.

So much depends on the Quality of the goods you use, that in making your purchases, it is well to consider the question, "Where is the Best Place to Buy?"

Our goods are Reliable and in every instance entirely satisfactory. Our aim is to produce the Best Goods ever offered to the Citizens of Worcester, and the reputation that we enjoy fully attests the success of our efforts. We want your trade. We have everything in Men's, Youths', Boys and Children's Clothing that you may need, and our Prices are consistent with the quality or grades.

Bigelow & Longley

384 and 388 Main St., Cor. Elm St.

Z. F. Little & Co.

New Spring Garments.

Ladies' Reefers and Blazers, Plain and with Gilt Trimmings, $3.50 to $15

Jersey Jackets, all grades and prices, from $3.50 upwards

Children's Reefers and Blazers, from $1.50 to $5.00

The prettiest ever worn.

Jersey Waists, all grades and prices.

Waterproofs of all descriptions.

Just received our new stock of Parasols for 1891.

Every parasol we show is new this season, not an old one carried over.

Prices from $1 upwards.

Z. F. Little & Co.,

234 and 238 MAIN ST.

GRAND SPRING SALE OF COTTON UNDERWEAR.

100 Doz. Corset Covers, four styles, marked down from 50c., your choice only 29c. each.

THIS GARMENT 25c.

THIS ONE 75c.

THIS GARMENT 75c.

THIS GARMENT 50c.

This 75c. Skirt is made of Fine Cotton, 9 inch Cambric Ruffle, Cluster Tucks in Skirt and Ruffle, very fine Skirt for 75c. This 75c. Robe is made with Mother Hubbard Yoke and Sleeves, neat fine insertions and fine cotton and edges. Boys' and Girls' Twilled Waists only 12c. Children's Drawers, 8c., 10c., 15c., and upward. 25 Doz Skirts, with 12 inch Hamburg Flounce, that are actually worth $1 50, for $1 25. These goods are all nicely made of Good Material, Selected Embroideries. Manufactured by us for our Retail Trade.

WM. H. BURNS & CO., 498 MAIN STREET.

MILLBURY LETTER.

Road Commissioner Carter is hard at work upon the streets of the town. They are in very bad condition in certain localities and if Mr. Carter succeeds in putting them in good repair for the amount of money appropriated at the town meeting, he will merit the approbation of all persons using our streets.

The new road machine, an American Champion which arrived a short time ago, is of great assistance in the work of road construction and repair. It is quite an interesting piece of mechanism and a great improvement over the old machine.

The ideal condition of things, however, would be to have a stone crusher and macadamize the streets. It is necessary now to draw gravel two miles and not get a first class quality at that.

One of the customs of our fathers was revived Tuesday, when a barn raising was held at Abram Buckley's farm on the Sutton road. A large crowd of men and boys was present and the heavy timbers of the barn went into place with neatness and dispatch. Refreshments were served to the workers. A skeptic as to the truth of the theory of inspiration in numbers ought to have seen some of those men work.

A pleasant feature of church work in Millbury is, and always has been, the spirit of unity and brotherly love manifested by the various churches toward each other. This, among other ways, is shown by the quarterly Union Sunday School concerts held at the different churches. The Baptist church's turn comes in April of each year and last Sunday night the meeting was held in that church, under the direction of the superintendent, Mr. P. W. Wood. Reports of the condition of the various schools were given and there was singing by a male and a double mixed quartet. Alderman George Whitney of Worcester was the principal speaker, his subject being "Opportunities." He was followed by Mr. Benoit, a French missionary studying at Newton. Rev. Leverett Griggs of Connecticut also spoke. The church was decorated with flowers and potted plants. The audience filled nearly every seat.

Rev. Leverett Griggs, formerly of this town but now settled in New Bristol, Conn., occupied the pulpit of the Second Congregational Church last Sunday.

A meeting of the members of the school committees of the towns of Millbury, Oxford and Dudley was held last Saturday at the office of the superintendent of schools of Worcester. These three towns are to unite into a district for the employment of a superintendent of schools, but as the Dudley school committee has one vacancy, no organization was completed. Another meeting will be held soon.

Mr. H. C. Thompson, of this town, accompanied the Worcester Light Infantry on their trip to Baltimore.

Hon. L. L. Whitney, Mr. Amos Armsby, Mr. I. N. Goddard, Mr. Royal Thayer and Mr. D. T. March represented Millbury at the meeting of the Congregational Club in Worcester, Monday night.

Mrs. Thomas Bottomly has been engaged as organist and director of the chorus choir at the Methodist Church for the ensuing year.

Among other "Flowers that bloom in the Spring" tramps are very plentiful here just now. It might be a good idea to harvest a few of them.

Millbury readers will be glad to know that LIGHT, next week, will have a picture of their distinguished fellow citizen Judge John Hopkins.

Dr. Peabody of Harvard, who has just entered the ranks of the octogenarians, is a little absent minded at times, and the Boston Herald cites this incident in illustration: One summer day, having come into Boston from Cambridge, and having alighted from the car at Bowdoin Square, he turned a sharp corner and collided with an elderly gentleman who was standing with his hat off, wiping the perspiration from his forehead, but who held his hat in such a way as to give the appearance of begging. Dr. Peabody, seeing the hat, dropped a quarter into it with his customary kind remark. Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, who was holding the hat, put the money in his pocket, solemnly thanked his old friend, the giver, and passed on.

LEICESTER.

On Tuesday evening, Leicester Assembly, No. 17, N. S. E. O., gave an entertainment in the Town Hall. Worcester artists were there. Miss Alma Collins and T. B. Hamilton were encored. Miss Florence M. Sears drew her bow with all the taste and skill for which she is justly praised and she also read with success. Miss Eva M. Coughlan played the piano excellently and Mr. E. H. Franklin gave dialectic readings.

Base Ball.

Why would not a league formed of clubs from the following institutions prove very interesting, viz: High School, Worcester Academy, Tech, and Y. M. C. Association. A series of games could be arranged between the above that would be highly enjoyed by all friends of base ball. In such a series a person would see the great national game played for the love of playing and not for what money can be gotten out of it.

The International, or as it is now called Eastern League, seems to cling to the hope of still getting Worcester to go with it, and is trying every means to secure our city to complete their circuit. The time was when Worcester would gladly have gone and even tried to go with it, but now that our club has cast her lot in with the New England League let there be no change, and, in our opinion, the end of the season will find the home club much better off financially.

The weather, being a little backward thus far this season, has prevented the formation of the almost numberless ball clubs of small boys who play when and wherever they can, but we may expect very soon to see in our morning papers the formation of such nines. With what pride do these youngsters read their names in the newspapers. Truly it does no harm to thus encourage them even if it does take up some space.

It is a great pity that our city has no more places for the small boy to play his favorite game. Wouldn't it be a pleasanter sight to see young America playing base ball on the Common than to see the large array of "Sons of Rest" occupying the settees that line the walks, as is now the case. Let the former occupy the Common and give the latter a grand walk to some out of the way place.

The Worcesters have put up a very good game of ball thus far, and if we may look for the improvement which generally comes as the season advances, we see no reason why our city should not be well up in the race at the end of the season. Nearly all the men who have been playing have signed contracts and it is understood that those who have not are willing to do so.

The Techs have arranged a series of six inter-class games to decide the championship of the school.

The National League season opened Wednesday, the 22d, with games in New York, Cincinnati, Pittsburg and Philadelphia before 35,000 spectators. It would seem from this great attendance that base ball is by no means dead, and furthermore by comparison with the attendance of the Association games the National League was to have the call this season.

Con. Murphy of the Worcesters has received a good offer to play with the Buffalo's but prefers to remain in this city.

Before the Mast.

Worcester has one boy who knows just what that means. He is the son of Stephen C. Earle, the Architect and all his friends call him Ralph. Generations of Worcester County living have not sufficed to eradicate a love for the sea that somewhere in the ancestral line must have predominated. There certainly was a Viking old at some point, else there could be no accounting for Ralph's liking for a life on the ocean. Last January, parental consent was obtained, and he sailed, January 11 from Philadelphia in the three mastered schooner, Harold B. Cousens, for Trinidad, Cuba. The captain was Wm. Davies and they carried out coal and cooperage, or material for making barrels, hogsheads, etc. In all, there were eight people aboard and Ralph put on a sou' wester and a pair of rubber boots and made himself useful. He found Trinidad a rather of a run down place, three miles inland. On their return, they brought sugar to Boston and encountered some rough weather. Our boy reached Worcester, April 3d, and is now diligently making up lost time in the High School third year. He has among his souvenirs of travel the portentous document given to the vessel by the Spanish authorities to protect it from Spanish gun-boats, and a Trinidad Daily. In quality this resembles, very much, the papers printed by the Confederates during the War. It has a goodly number of advertisements of patent medicines, among them that of Dr. Ayer of Lowell, Mass. Ralph must have had a reminder of the Bay State when his eye fell on that. The trip was very far from curing him of his sea loving tendencies. In some way, he hopes to follow an ocean life. There's nothing like having a taste for a thing. The trip surely agreed with him for he returns well browned and with well filled cheeks. He must have had a good time.

John A. Fitzgerald.

So John has concluded to go west and grow up with the country. He goes so far, that he will have to wait for made land, should he care to extend his westward flight. Portland, Oregon, is a long way off, and his friends, young and old, appreciating this, gathered last Wednesday night to give him a happy goodbye. At his home, 72 Ward street, classmates of his 1886 High School class and of 1889, Holy Cross, with the President and Prof. Mars of the latter institution, gathered, and in many ways, indicated love and appreciation. A well filled purse will serve to brighten the trip to the occidental regions, said trip beginning last Thursday. LIGHT extends good wishes with many pleasant memories of school days when John was a master hand at excuses. May our boy in the language of Rip Van Winkle, "Like long and prosper."

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

Augustin Daly's New York Company is to play one week in Berlin, one in Paris, and eight in London, this summer.

Reports from London are to the effect that J. B. Mason is growing in popularity and has a great many offers for next season. He will probably remain in England for some years to come.

Kate Castleton is seriously ill, confined in a Philadelphia hospital to await the result of a delicate surgical operation.

Charles H. Hoyt will clear more than $110,000 (actual profits) this season on his various plays. Of this sum "A Texas Steer" alone will show a profit exceeding $50,000.

It is rumored that Minna Gale, Booth & Barrett's leading woman, will star next season, appearing in Julie, Rosalind, Viola and Parthenia.

A. M. Palmer's much vaunted English star, E. S. Willard, has been a failure in this country.

The report that a son has been born to Mary Anderson Navarro is denied. Rumor has it that she and her husband do not live happily together.

Marshall P. Wilder announces that he will take a concert company to Europe this summer.

Agnes Huntington has been ill with malaria, but has pluckily appeared at every performance of "Paul Jones."

Alice Carle has given up comic opera for farce-comedy, and has gone to California with the "Fakir."

Plon-Plon's death recalls his invitation of Rachel, the actress, to a supper at which one of her fellow-guests was Khalil-Bey. She was deeply affronted at the openly expressed distaste of the Oriental for her personal appearance. Rachel, as used to be said of Sarah Bernhardt in the early days of her career, possessed "much grace, but no grease;" and the angular elbows and bony chest of the queen of the Parisian stage were not all to the Bey's taste. "What do you think of her?" asked his host of him toward the end of the evening. "Dear prince, in my own country we drown such women as that!" was the reply. Rachel overheard him and naturally she never forgave him.

Edwin Forrest.

Our Mrs. Wilkinson, in her younger days, played the part of Julia in "The Gladiator." In the nervousness, incident to the rehearsal with so great an actor, the well schooled girl pronounced "again," sounding the a long. The Gladiator looked at her in his sternest manner, saying to her in those tones that only Forrest had, "These young people have so long to live they must sound all the letters in the alphabet, pronounce that 'agen.'"

Cheerfulness.

I think we are too ready with complaint
In this fair world of God's. Had we no hope
Indeed beyond the zenith and the scope
Of yon grey blank of sky, we might be fain
To muse upon eternity's constraint
Round our aspirant souls. But since the scope
Must widen early, is it well to droop
For a few days consumed in loss, and faint?
O, pusillanimous heart, be comforted!
And, like a cheerful traveler, take the road,
Singing beside the hedge. What if the bread
Be bitter in thine inn and thou unshod
To meet the flints? At least it may be said,
"Because the way is short, I thank thee, God!"
—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

J. W. GREENE,
P L U M B E R.

Dealer in Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces. Steam and Gas Fitting. Jobbing in all its branches promptly attended to. Telephone Connection. 51 Main Street, Cumming's block.

BICYCLES.

Agency for Standard Wheels.

195 FRONT ST.

L. J. ZAHONYI,

Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

The Ware-Pratt Company

Invite attention to an extensive display of

Fine Clothing for Men, Boys and Children.

The Latest Fashions, Exclusive Styles from our own workshops, Honest Goods and the Lowest Prices, Grade and Quality considered.

Our Custom Department is teeming with the Newest styles, Colorings and Materials, which go to make up the finest lines we have ever shown.

The Ware-Pratt Company,

MANUFACTURERS AND RETAILERS,

408 and 412 Main Street,

Worcester.

Now is the Time to Buy a

CARRIAGE!

at a Small Profit.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,

OPP. THE COMMON.

Worcester Coal Company,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in
COAL. COAL.

General office, 18 Pearl St., Y. M. C. A.
Building; Yards, 23 Manchester St. and 319
Southbridge St.

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *

NO. 156 MAIN STREET,
H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

Heywood Foundry Comp'y,

GARDNER, MASS.

This Heater is unsurpassed for excellence of workmanship and is the best in the market. Now is the time to secure estimates. The following is one of a great number of testimonials from our leading citizens:

WORCESTER, MASS., April 12, 1890.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER:

Gentlemen—Having used one of your Heaters for two seasons with satisfaction, I can recommend it to anyone, as it will do all they claim. Respectfully,

JOHN E. ALLEN, 917 Main Street.

Branch Office, 39 Pearl Street, Worcester.

NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.

Incorporated in the City of Worcester, Sept. 17, 1889. A great co-operative institution and fraternal order, paying sick and accident benefits and an endowment of $500 at the end of five years. Over 600 members in Worcester; three local assemblies, and two more in process of formation. $8760 already distributed in sick benefits. $14,331 63 reserve.

For full particulars, and documents carefully explaining the plan and scope of this rapidly growing fraternity, call on or address J. O. H. WOODMAN, Secy., 339 Main St., Worcester, Mass. Burnside Building.

Lamont & Whittemore,

39 PEARL ST.

LEADING * SAFETY * BICYCLES.

Adopted by U. S. Government. Cycle repairing, also Fine Lock and Key Work. Open Evenings.

LIGHT

VOL. III. No. 9. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

JOHN HOPKINS, Esq.,

A Justice of the Superior Court of Massachusetts.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

We have just received two carloads of

Chamber * Suites

of MEDIUM PRICE and SUPERIOR FINISH. The manufacturers wanted money, and we bought them at a great discount. Call and see them at unheard-of prices, for the maker's loss is your gain. We have everything that can be found in a first-class Furniture store. We are sole Agents for

THE STANDARD FOLDING BED, THE WAKEFIELD RATTAN COMPANY'S CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES, THE DERBY ROLL TOP DESK, THE LEONARD HARD WOOD REFRIGERATOR.

All these are the best in the market, and have an established reputation. Liberal terms of credit, and SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO CASH BUYERS. Polite attention, and satisfaction guaranteed.

247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

MEMORIAL DAY.

It will soon be here. Are you prepared for it? Have you anything that you require being done for that day, in the nature of

MONUMENTS or TABLETS

We most respectfully solicit an inspection of our large assortment of Monuments and Tablets, in Marble, Granite and Statuary. More than

$25,000 worth

of Original Designs, manufactured from the very best material, and by competent and skilled workmen. It would be to your interests to call early and make your selections, so as to have your work executed and set up in time for Memorial Day. Our prices will be found very reasonable, and our designs original.

BOSTON MARBLE

and GRANITE WORKS.

53 Central St., Worcester.

C. H. DRAPER,

Livery, Feed and Truck Stable.

Three Large Moving Wagons. Baggage Wagon always ready. Furniture and Piano Moving. Telephone 118-5.

161 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

COMPOUND * * OXYGEN * * * TREATMENT

Nature's best tonic in all debilitated conditions of the system.

Our OXYGEN is carefully prepared in accordance with the most scientific principles known to chemistry.

It is prepared by a practical chemist who has had four years' experience in a chemical laboratory.

Each patient will receive the personal and conscientious attention of a regular graduated physician, one who has been six years in medical practice.

We solicit investigation.

368 1-2 Main St., or 1 Elm St.

WORCESTER OXYGEN CO.

DR. J. W. GOULD. T. D. BRISTOL, M. D.

Rand, McNally & Co.'s New Atlas of the World.

304 pages 11 1/2 x 14 1/2 inches, 152 pages of Maps, 152 pages of Diagrams, History, Gazetteer, Statistics, and Illustrations. An Index containing names of 89,827 Cities, Towns, Villages and Post Offices, in the United States, with census returns for 1890. Bound in best embossed cloth, in a handsome manner for the very low price of $3.75. Anyone wishing for a copy will please address a postal card, giving residence, to CHARLES WILDER Agent for Worcester No. 80 Lincoln St.

N. G. TUCKER.

W. F. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON,
SANITARY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.

56 Pleasant Street.

Worcester, Mass.

WHENEVER GOOD

Eatables

are desired they will always
be found at

John A. Hartigan's

47 and 51 Pleasant Street.

Simple!
Durable!
Odorless!
Clean!

It saves Time,
Labor and Fuel,
(two-thirds cent
per hr. for fuel.)

Manufacturers
Guarantee every Iron.

TRY ONE.

For Sale at 311 Main Street, Room 13. Liberal Commissions allowed to agents. Agents wanted throughout the United States. SQUIER & BEALS, Manufacturing Agents, 311 Main Street, Room 13.

PENSIONS! * PENSIONS!

THE DISABILITY BILL IS A LAW.

Soldiers Disabled Since the War are Entitled. Dependent widows and parents now dependent whose sons die from the effects of army service are included. If you wish your claim speedily and successfully prosecuted, address JAMES TANNER, Late Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D. C.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1891.

No. 9

All hail the day that brings the "Light!"—
The One whose'er shall banish gloomy night—
Who e presence the darkest way makes bright.
—Louise Snow.

Our exchanges bring the statement that a Cochituate mother sued and obtained $500 damages from a rumseller for selling to her son, a minor.

If a little more of this good work could be done, possibly the indiscriminate brutalizing of young humanity might be made unpopular among our legalized saloon keeping class.

It is one thing to know that a thing is done; but it is quite another to prove this before a judge and jury. Evidence more convincing than that of all the senses is necessary. The Divinity that doth hedge royalty about is not more evident than the prepossession which seems to hold the saloon keeper in its protecting care.

In this matter of protection, how many readers look out for the mental and moral welfare of their children as they do for their physical condition. Do you always heed the questions of the little folks and do your level best to answer? How many times have you said, "Don't bother me?" Of course you can't answer all questions that are asked, no one can; but you can tell them why you can't.

Did you ever take a whole day from your business and go off just to show the boy or girl what a wealth of association and beauty our surroundings have? If you haven't, then you have missed one of the ends for living. Go down to Boston, some day with that lad you claim to think so much of and tell him all you can remember about Faneuil Hall, the Old State House and King's Chapel. Possibly, it will not take you long to reveal a great wanting in your own knowledge. Never mind, the boy will enjoy it all the same.

Many a parent would be all the happier and better himself if he would thus get into his boy's good graces. Besides, the father cannot afford to rear his boy without implanting most thoroughly the principles of patriotism. All his wealth that he so covets may be at the mercy of an Anarchistic rabble, some of the recent importations whose symbol of liberty is a red rag. He had better spend more time in telling his children what country is and what the flag means.

How many readers can recite a stanza of "Hail Columbia," of "America," of "The Red White and Blue," of "The Star Spangled Banner," of "Home, Sweet Home." Had you been reared in Germany the words and tunes of "Fatherland" had been a part of your growth and at no time, in subsequent life, could you forget them if you would. The flurry of patriotism that we are having over the presentations of flags to schools should be encouraged and, further, all our children should know the words and tunes of national songs.

And now Chicago wants Hawthorne's birth place. Should Salem sell this hallowed building, she deserves the contempt of the rest of the state. Having purchased and carried to this Western city, Libby Prison, and having no history of her own worth mentioning, she reaches out for some of our Massachusetts relics. It seems as if Chicago were in the plight of the daughter of old Money Bags, when her teacher said she lacked capacity and which the Cæsus offered at once to purchase.

Oh yes! Chicago is big and rich and all that, but interesting never. This carrying off what money can buy does not make the city entertaining. She should realize on what was done in her own planting and make the most of it. At the present rate, she may be expected to send East for the purchase of some one of our old cemeteries, headstones and all. History cannot be transplanted. Burn's cottage, remote from the Brigs o' Ayer and Alloway Kirk, elsewhere than on the "Banks o' Doon" would lose more than half their beauty.

Here is a boy in Harvard whose father is noted for his long connection with a certain home for invalids in Boston. Faith is one of the strong ingredients in that father's spiritual composition, but faith would not pay all the young man's college bills, i. e., the unnecessary ones and so he makes a raise of the needful in a way which lands him in the hands of the police. It is a good thing to be able to write one's own name legibly; but the writing of another's, under a promise to pay, is a serious affair. "Who hath sinned!" The young man, or the father who, the son says, has been to strict? Is it not a case where the father has failed to make his boy's acquaintance and impress upon him the principles that should guide and direct us all! Just a trifle less faith and a little more of immediate contact with his boy might have prevented the late sad outcome. Or better, have all the faith possible but work as well for, "Faith without works is dead."

"At last! After many days," etc. New York moves. Fearing lest the Republic should reach out and take from Gotham the body of the great general, she, finally, on Monday last, his 69th birthday, goes up to Riverside Park and makes a beginning of the foundation for a monument to Grant. New York is too large to have local pride. She long allowed the Statue of Liberty to remain without a pedestal and thus she would be today were it not for the enterprise of the New York World. Her rich men such as Gould and Vanderbilt sent to the Encampment of the G. A. R., in Denver, a request for the veterans to take in hand the building of this, when either of the millionaires named could have bought out the whole convention. The Washington Arch languishes and though she has begun the monument we must look forward to many delays ere it is completed.

A new building for the Art Society. Truly, Worcester is advancing and that rapidly. Only a few months since, and the mention of art in our city excited something like a smile. But it will not down hereafter. Art Society, Art Students' Club, St. Wulstan Society, Portrait Exhibition, Amateur Photographers, all have borne their part in the grand awakening. Then what a North end we are to have! Antiquarian Societies, schoolhouses, armory, churches and now this splendid temple of art! Glorious as the city has been in the past, what shall we say of the future? "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard," etc.

It is very comforting to know that Uncle Sam is going to chink up some of the spaces through which Immigration Laws have been violated. He will have to be extremely vigilant, for if denied a landing at the ports of our own country, it is very easy for them to stop in Halifax and the way in is open. The time has come for the enforcement of dead letter laws and for the thorough guarding of our entire frontier and coast if need be. It is fine reading, that these murderous Italians in New Orleans had all voted. It is supposed they were passed along on the impression that a recently arrived Italian was as good or better than a native negro. A lesson has been learned. May it be salutary. Uncle Sam has long been quite too lavish with his favors. Let him be just as well as generous.

The funeral exercises in memory of the late Philip L. Moen on Monday last were in some respects the most impressive ever witnessed in Worcester. Halls and churches have been thronged with vast concourses; but never before did such a procession of laboring men pass to take a final look at the face of an employer. Mr. Moen never ceased to be interested in the individual and the individual loved him. From his late home to his final repose, he was carried through lines of men whose strength had done so much for our city. A large part of the motive power of a vast industry had ceased and this was the tribute of brawn to brain, of matter to mind, of heart to memory. In this crowded array were representatives of all the grand divisions of the earth's surface. Blond North European, jostled the sombre son of Asia in the shape of Armenian laborer, while African and American cordially touched elbows. Mr. Moen was one of the Captains of Industry of whom James Parton delights to write, and while there is a Worcester his memory must be cherished. Ever kind and affable, this king among business men could leave his labors to show a party of school children through his wonderful works. Truly, we should be false to all principles of uprightness and gratitude did we not put his name high among those which we should revere. The world goes on just the same, but it will lack, for many a day, one cheerful face and one pleasant voice.

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 339 Main Street, Burnside Building,
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, MAY 2, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Hereafter, it will be understood that all articles in LIGHT, not ascribed, save recipes,
squibs, fashion and household notes were
written for this paper.

Friends sending in manuscripts will not complain if they are not printed at once. There are many waiting. Yet LIGHT is always glad
to receive communications and, if meritorious,
to print them.

Don't fail to read the Sketch by Mr. George McAleer. It is redolent of woods and waters.

Mr. Eben Harrington of Harvard Street, president of the Art Students' Club, has made an excellent photograph of the home of the late Edwin Conant, corner of Harvard and State Streets. LIGHT hereby acknowledges the receipt of a copy.

Rev. T. J. Conaty sends to LIGHT the May number of the Calendar for the Church of the Sacred Heart. It is exceedingly timely and tasty. It is filled with good advice to parishioners.

Acknowledgment is made for a copy of the Report of the Free Public Library, the same coming in advance of the City Document.
As usual, most excellent progress is recorded.

The Portraits.

When our new library edifice was building,
the query often expressed was, "What is to be done with the upper story?" That question has been answered and in a way to make a lasting impression. Worcester has had nearly a month of pleasure in looking at ancestors and later faces, a treat never before enjoyed in this city. The Art Gallery feature of the new structure is an eminent success.

Within the last few years, London has had two exhibitions, each remarkable and unique.
Not only pictures but other memorials have recalled the Tudors and the Stuarts. Next, Londoners are to have a gathering together of the Guelphs. To assemble them what a rattling there will be among the antiquities of the Kingdom. Well Worcester has her Tudors and her Stuarts and in this collection, we see more of these faces than were ever gathered under one roof before. Whoever conceived the idea is entitled to a deal of credit, for it was brilliant and brilliantly has it been carried out.

"Look first on this picture and then on this."
Hamlet's direction to his unhappy mother may form a headline, but we are in no such frame of mind as was the Danish Queen where she looked from the semblance of her murdered lord to that of him who had usurped his place. Our fathers are not here, but we look more the less closely at the line of worthies who go back to days "When we lived under the King" for here are faces of men and women who were dead and buried long ere Lexington patriots had been ordered to disperse as Rebels. As owners of portraits the names of Mrs. John W. Wetherell and Stephen Salisbury occur ten times each and the pictures exhibited by them make some of the most interesting items in the collection.
What a deal of family history there may be in a name merely! Very likely, there have been visitors here who for the first time learned why the Dean Building was thus called and what is the origin of the naming of Tucker-man Street. As we enter and turn to the left we cannot help seeing the noble face of the elder Stephen Salisbury and there just beyond it we see the semblance of him when he was a very young man. Age has given grandeur to the head as it did to those of Bryant and Longfellow; but we search in vain for the same features in both representations. In Windsor Castle, we are shown the picture of the infant who afterwards became George III, not loved by Americans. The transformation seems scarcely greater than that which time has wrought in some of these likenesses.
In the Salisbury group, we have genuine Gilbert Stuarts, time honored but still the very nonpariel of portraits, and we can see what stately people were they who came to Worcester in the last century and at the North End locating an almost baronial estate. It is no small matter that in this collection we find three pictures from John Singleton Copley, that loyal Bostonian who preferred leaving the city at the evacuation in 1775 rather than remain under Colonial control. Had the Committee visited the home of Ledyard Bill in Paxton perhaps they might have secured another Copley for this exhibition since he possesses an excellent one. Here we learn how the old families of Worcester are related.
These names are interwoven like threads in the woof. Waldo, Chandler, Paine, Greene, Salisbury, Lincoln, Davis, Bancroft and Bullock, as Herschel said of the Rings of Saturn,
"They are all individuals but all unite to make a System." To particularize in our space is impossible. We can simply recall and record the pleasure we have in looking at these faces, the most of them of men and women, no longer with us, but the lines in these faces are reproduced in the countenances of those whom we meet daily.

Some recall the recently departed, many an observer will pause at Dr. Rufus Woodward's picture and sigh for "The sound of a voice that is still." Away up in the clouds, almost, is the likeness of our Librarian; but it was made before he assumed these book king duties. In spite of our determination we are particularizing, so we must bring our cursory ramble to an end, taking a final glance, as we go out, at Sargent's wonderfully beautiful representation of Mrs. Edward L. Davis and her son. It was a happy thought to place the picture thus, for as a parting glance is taken it must have the impression gained from the sight of this picture the very last.

It will linger, whether we will or not. Thanks are due not only to the Librarian and to the Committee, but to the homes represented for the selecting out and loaning, for a time of these choice treasures. Our Tudors and our Stuarts will be long remembered.

Mr. Ben T. Hammond gave his forty-seventh recital at his studio Thursday evening.
The pupils who took part were Miss Edith K.
Smith, Miss Lizzie F. Farrell, Miss M. Annie
Warren, Mr. Mortimer Howard. Miss Emily
G. Whittemore and Miss Mary L. Starr, pianists, pupils of Mr. B. D. Allen, assisted with piano duets and Mrs. Geo. M. Bassett assisted
Mr. Hammond in the accompaniments. Mr.
Hammond's closing recitals will take place
Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon and evening, May 26 and 27 at Horticultural Hall.

The plans for the grand people's concert to be given in Mechanics Hall, May 22, under the direction of Mr. E. N. Anderson, are progressing splendidly. The program will include Rheinberger's dramatic cantata,
"Clarice of Eberstein," Von Webers Overture to Der Freischutz, Berlioz's Carnavale Romain, Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor and part songs and solo numbers. Advance checks will be on sale for a few days at the stores of Gorham & Co., Putnam Davis & Co. and Sanford & Co. Persons holding the checks will have an opportunity to select seats from the chart before the general sale of tickets.

SUMMER EXCURSIONISTS.

A Large Party of Tourists Going to England And Ireland.

The following Worcester county people have joined the excursion to England and Ireland organized by Geo. Y. Lancaster, the steamship ticket agent, and which will leave Worcester,
Saturday morning, May 2d, and sail from Boston the same afternoon at 3.30 on the Cunard steamer "Cephalonia": Mrs. Leah Barber, Miss Elizabeth Barber, Mrs. Elizabeth Taylor, William Taylor, Esther L. Taylor, Miss
Sarah Townsend, Mrs. Edward Townsend,
Elizabeth M. Townsend, G. M. Townsend,
Mrs. Mary A. Furness, Harold Furness, Willie
Furness, Robert Furness, Elizabeth O'Connor,
Mary Francis Roan, Mary Feeney, Mrs. Bridget Hannon, Daniel J. Egan, Wm. Burrows, Mrs. Mary Ellen Burrows, Mrs. Ellen Edwards, Patrick Egan, Mrs. Elizabeth Rogers of Worcester; James R. Ferrend, Geo. A.
Ferrend, Hannah Schofield and Lydia Miller of Whitinsville.

The following have booked for the Teutonic
White Star line to sail May 6: Ellen Carney, Kate Loughlin, and James Clery of Worcester; Mrs. Martha Walker, James R.
Walker, May Maria Walker of Leicester.
Albert H. Talboys will sail on the Teutonic
June 3. He is also organizing a party for June 3.

Church Notes.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Ladies Handicraft society of Central Church held a flower festival in the church vestry Tuesday evening.

At Plymouth Church tomorrow there will be the regular preaching service at 10.30 and communion will be celebrated at 3.30 P. M. There will be no evening service but the Christian Endeavor will meet at 6.15 as usual.

The old settees in the Plymouth Church vestry have been replaced with fine cane chairs made to order by Heywood Brothers of Gardner and the floor has been carpeted, thus making it one of the finest vestries in the city.

METHODIST.

Trinity.—The Girls Mission Band are to be congratulated on the success of their anniversary reception given last Tuesday evening. As first planned it was to be a reception to the church and congregation, but as the annual conference made a change in pastors, the plans were extended so as to include a greeting to the new minister and family and a farewell to Dr. Thomas and family. The vestry of the church had been transformed into a reception room. Carpets and mats covered the floor, on one side was a fire place, a mirror stood in front, and pictures, lace draperies, and easy chairs helped to give the room a homelike appearance. A large audience was present, and a pleasant social hour was spent. During the early part of the evening, souvenir bags, containing an envelope were distributed to each one, and worn as badges. Their meaning was explained later.

The audience was called to order by Mrs. L. F. Harrison, superintendent of the band, who introduced the president, Miss Marion L. Cole. In a brief address she told of the change of plans, and then announced the program. Piano solo, Mrs. Mann; reading, "The Call" Julia Williams; song, Mrs. Seaver and Edith Smith; Medley, harmonica and harp, George Pettit; recitation, "The Bashful Boy" Ernest Mitchell; song, "Dolly's Farewell", Ada Whipple; violin solo, Florence M. Sears; reading, Edith Smith; presentation to Dr. Thomas and wife, Edna Thayer; greeting to Rev. J. D. Pickles and wife by the president; explanation of the souvenir, Stella Aynes; recitation, "Free" Stella Pettit. Dr. Thomas received an oxidized silver pencil, and his wife a Bancroft souvenir spoon. Refreshments of cake and chocolate were served to the company. The response to the call for a freewill contribution was generous. Nearly all the envelopes were returned with contents. The amount realized was $30.01. The affair was well planned and well carried out, and reflects much credit on the young girls whose work it was.

Webster Square. Tuesday evening a most hearty reception was given to the new pastor, the Rev. W. N. Richardson. Miss Carrie Phetteplace sang, accompanied by Miss Belle Tuson. Mr. A. A. McLaughlin welcomed the pastor and Mr. A. A. Stearns spoke, as did J. L. Thomas and Frank Wray, while William Powers sang "Friends of Old." The pastor himself spoke and encouraging words were said by other Methodist clergymen present, Messrs. Sanderson, Pickles and Worth. It was a good beginning of what will prove a happy pastorate.

Grace.—A reception was given to the new pastor and wife, Rev. and Mrs. William T. Worth, last Thursday evening. It was in charge of the Ladies' Social Circle. After supper Mr. P. F. White introduced the speakers as follows: Rev. J. O. Knowles of Coral Street church, Rev. Alonzo Sanderson of Laurel Street church, Rev. C. W. Richardson of Webster Square. C. H. Carpenter spoke in behalf of the stewards, W. A. Smith for the class leaders, A. S. Roe for the Sunday School and Frank J. Metcalf for the Epworth League. During the evening Miss Ada White read two selections. A large company was present, and everything points to a prosperous year for the church.

UNIVERSALIST.

Rev. Elmer H. Capea, D. D., President of Tufts College, will preach at All Souls Universalist Church, Sunday morning, and at the First Universalist, Sunday evening.

Y. M. C. A.

As it has been impossible to secure Bliss' field, there will be no Association league this year. But an association team has been organized and will be pleased to receive challenges from other amateur teams.

Paul Plummer, the physical director, would like to arrange a series of members' cross-country runs. He desires to hear from others who may be interested or who would enter if they were arranged.

Tomorrow, the 6.15 meeting will be led by O. B. Sibley. The men's meeting at four will be addressed by Rev. E. D. George.

The second number of "Worcester's Young Men" appears today. Among the interesting articles are an address, "A Business Man's View," which was given at the State Convention by H. E. Moore; testimonials as to the value of the Association from A. T. Stewart and John Wanamaker; obituary notices of Mrs. Gough and Mr. Moen, both life members of the Association; and items concerning the Y. W. C. A., Y. P. S. C. E., the junior department and the Women's Auxiliary.

Rev. Mr. Lansing will give his lecture "Around the Fire of a Hunter's Camp," at Salem Street Church next Friday evening. This was to have been the fourth in the church course of entertainments but as Mr. Lansing was ill at the time appointed for his lecture, it had to be postponed. The lecture consists of personal reminiscences, told in Mr. Lansing's graphic way, of his vacations spent in the Adirondacks.

There never was a man as good as a really good woman.

It pays to patronize General Agent Geo. Y. Lancaster, for Railroad and Steamship Tickets, Drafts, and Insurance Office, 434 Main street, Worcester.

Why?

BY CORNELIA WESSON BOYDEN.

What a volume of meaning is crowded into this one short word: how the thoughts throng and push each other, as the brain tries to take in the significance of it: are not millions of voices echoing it through-out the whole universe? has it not been the cry of every human soul in its agony through all ages, "My God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

It rises up like a despairing spirit, from the ashes of buried hopes: hopes whose fulfilment would have been a crown of joy: hopes that were based upon pure thoughts, high aims, and a Heavenly goal, yet alone, unaided, crowded and pushed back by worldly passions, jealousy, envy, and all uncharitableness, they sink down in the abyss of despair and are lost; but ever from their grave is heard that desolate wail "Why hast thou forsaken me?"

How when human injustice wrings our hearts with pity, and indignation, when we see the wicked prosperous and happy, dwelling amidst the luxury wrung from the poor and struggling, when we see the brave efforts of the good and worthy scoffed and sneered at and hear the low jests and bold impudence of those who in our hearts we despise, yet for monied gain, for worldly prudence, we uphold and applaud, does not the question come home to us at times with such appalling force, that the soul shrinks back in shame and disgust, and we cry within ourselves, "Why do ye so?"

Question after question comes up before me, but one in particular, has lain so long on my heart, has so burned itself into my brain, that years of prosperity and happiness, and all the joys that this world could give, would never have the power to hush the bitter cry that fills my soul, and whose echo trailing through all the chambers of the past, resounds with dreary cadence.

There was one I knew and loved, loved beyond all earthly friends, whose life was one long sacrifice for others, whose heart was filled with holy impulses, and whose hands were never tired of serving.

Oh! her prayers, the tears she shed, the hard bitter struggle day after day with the evil spirit that dwelt in him to whom she had given her love, and all of no avail: she died, and years after, he for whom she had literally laid down her life became a Christian, a worthy citizen, a good man; but she was dead; oh! the bitterness of the thought.

Why could she not have lived to see the fulfilment of her hopes, the answer to her prayers?

God only knows, and though my soul rises up in rebellion, and grows hard and bitter at times, yet a still small voice sounds low in my ear saying "He doeth all things well."

This is but one instance of the many; for all over the world the good and the true are constantly being sacrificed on the altars of Mammon, and folly and worldliness rule the day; and as long as the world exists, the human soul is forever struggling with the hard problems of life, and ever murmuring in weary protest the unanswerable question "Why?"

Cleanliness is next to Godliness.—Wesley.

Judge John Hopkins.

Once, at least, Worcester and Millbury are in cordial agreement. All differences, for the moment, are lost in the common pleasure over the preferment of John Hopkins, Esq. The hollowness of much of our political bluster is evident when we find men of all parties rejoicing at Governor Russell's coming up to Worcester County to find a judge for a vacant place on the bench of the Superior Court. Perhaps Massachusetts is peculiar in this respect, but when all the campaign powder has been burned and all the hard names have been called, the executive officer goes ahead and makes his appointments. Whereupon all that can be said in opposition is, "He doesn't belong to our party." Looking at the Court today, one would have difficulty in discovering the difference between the appointees of Democratic General Butler and those of his Republican successors or predecessors. These men have acquitted themselves well as judicial officers and the latest accession to their numbers, we have reason to believe, will prove no exception to the rule.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men, which taken at its flood, leads on to fortune." In Judge Hopkins' life tide, the fortuitous moment was when Judge Charles Devens instructed him to undertake the defense of the Petersham murderer, Frost, in the Autumn of 1875.

When, good easy man
He thinks his greatness is a ripening
There comes a frost a killing frost.

The Frost in this case was certainly a killing one, but not of Esquire Hopkins' prospects. So masterful was his defense of his client, he won golden opinions from all sorts of people. From a lawyer, with a limited local clientage, he sprang at once into note and success. From that date, few men have enjoyed a wider or better repute among the Bar of Worcester County.

By birth, Judge Hopkins can exclaim with Lord Chatham, "I am an Englishman," for he was born at Leonard Stanley, Gloucestershire, March 19, 1810. However, he dwelt in Allion only as an infant for in 1813 his parents started for America, but his mother died en route, and was buried at sea. The father, with two sons and a daughter, located in Lowell where he lived for a year. The family was next in London, Canada West, till 1847; then as a fuller in a woolen mill the senior Hopkins was employed in Clayville, Auburn and Utica, New York, till 1852, when he settled in Burlington, Vt.

In 1856, the younger Hopkins left home and in the following year, entered Phillips Exeter Academy. Thence he went, in one year to the Scientific department of Dartmouth College. From this institution, he received the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1862.

He read law in the office of Joseph E. Cook of Blackstone and was admitted to the Bar in March 1864. In July 1865, he opened an office in Millbury and for the intervening period has been a noteworthy part of that bustling village. An item in his legal career has been indicated. Further, it may be stated that while, for several years, his patronage was largely in the southern part of the County, it has grown and extended till such northern towns as Gardner and Clinton have been considerably interested. His Worcester office was opened in 1878.

Since conducting the Frost case, where the murderer in spite of his able defense, was convicted and hanged, Mr. Hopkins has been retained in three capital cases. The first was that of the Commonwealth vs. Callahan, better known as the Lincoln House case where Thos. L. Callahan was indicted for the killing of Luke Daly, a fellow servant. This trial took place at the September term of 1879. The prisoner was allowed to plead guilty to murder in the second degree and was sentenced to imprisonment for life.

At the April term, 1880, Mr. Hopkins appeared as counsel for Louis Army who had been indicted for the murder of James D. Cotter. The case was tried, finally, as manslaughter and the jury disagreed. At last, the case was put on file and there rests today.

The last instance of this kind was that of the Commonwealth against Joseph St. John who stood charged with the death of Dolor J. Varney, one of the many instances where rum makes victims, this time in Sutton. This trial resulted in conviction, in the second degree and a life sentence.

Perhaps the most conspicuous of the civil cases conducted by our judge were those of Shillaber vs. Fairbanks and Belanger vs. Worcester Telegram. While neither may have had the pecuniary importance of less noteworthy instances, they served to keep the lawyer's name pretty well before the public. Whatever political differences may have existed between Judge Hopkins and his legal associates and it may be said that the judge is English enough to be ahead of his party on the subject of Free Trade, there is no voice that does not sound his praises as a lawyer and his fitness for the place to which the governor has appointed him.

An old Worcester practitioner thus sums up Mr. Hopkins' characteristics. "He is very cool and calm in judgment. He never loses his temper, no matter what the provocation. His cases are always prepared most thoroughly in all respects. His clients have the benefit of the best that he can do, to the very end. He never loses heart nor head, but keeps up the contest while there is a ray of hope. His integrity and honor are above reproach and he is strictly honorable in practice."

There,—how much more could have been said of Sir Matthew Hale. From the foregoing opinion, few, if any who knew him, will differ. As an indication of home appreciation, the reception accorded him by his fellow citizens, April 2d is a good one. His spacious mansion was filled with the very best people in the town. All former bickerings were forgotten in the general pleasure at Millbury's honor.

Among those present were Hon. L. B. Sayles, Hon. L. L. Whitney, Hon. H. H. Bancroft, Rev. John Gregson, Rev. A. M. Crane, Dr. J. A. Slocum, Dr. W. H. Lincoln, Dr. J. R. Lincoln, C. D. Morse, Fred A. Lapham, H. W. Aiken, T. A. Winter, Silas Dunton, P. W. Wood, Moses Wheeler, George J. Dudley, Leander F. Herrick, Amos Armsby, S. E. King, F. K. Hodgman, H. W. Carter, C. B. Perry, R. N. Holman, C. E. Lovell, C. F. Holman, T. A. Barrow, Royal Thayer, B. T. Rice, Carroll Thayer, E. J. Humphreys, C. N. Gale, W. L. Whitney, Charles Moore, H. W. Davidson, Patrick Donlon, John W. Sheehan, T. J. Sullivan, W. E. Horne, N. H. Greenwood, N. Rogers, T. L. Brown, E. E. Forbes, H. C. Thompson, L. S. Waters, John French, William Sibley, Rufus Carter, H. E. Newell, Henry Van Ostrand, A. H. Batchellor, C. H. Searles, John Odum, Henry Houghton, C. P. Gates, A. M. Stone, Warren Stone, C. F. Taft, David A. Power, George Burnett, Henry F. Rice, Calvin Barker, R. R. Crane, James H. Ferguson, W. G. Farnsworth, Horace Nickett, William L. Murphy, Daniel J. Dempsey, J. S. Waters, G. F. Chase, Thomas Brown, Perry Sanderson, O. L. Matherson, S. E. Hull, P. C. Paradis, A. W. Sweetzer, John Gegenheimer, Herbert Stockwell, E. J. Movie, S. C. Spooner and others.

The incidents of the evening were fitly ended by the presentation to the newly appointed judge of a handsome gold headed cane, thus inscribed "John Hopkins, April 1st, 1891." To the remarks of the presenter, Mr. H. W. Aikin, the recipient said: "It is the unexpected which always happens, and it has happened to me. I hope I shall not have to bear heavily on this, as it is a mark of advancing years, but I will always cherish the feelings of friendship with which it is associated tonight."

The culmination of local expression was reached on the evening of April 22 when the Bar of the County, with high judicial dignitaries, assembled at the Bay State House to do the Judge honor. Seldom has such a gathering been had in this city and to the Judge the memory must be specially sweet. At the head of the table sat the President of the Bar, Colonel W. S. B. Hopkins with Judge John Hopkins on his right and Chief Justice Albert Mason of Brookline on his left. On either side sat Judge Peleg Emory Aldrich of Worcester, Judge Hamilton Barclay Staples of Worcester, Judge James Madison Barker of Pittsfield, Judge Wm. T. Forbes of Westboro, of the court of probate and insolvency; Senator George F. Hoar, District Attorney Francis A. Gaskill, Sheriff Samuel D. Nye, Senator John R. Thayer, Webster Thayer, City Solicitor Frank P. Goulding, Thomas G. Kent.

At the two tables running lengthwise of the hall sat Special Justice George M. Woodward of the central district court, Judge Chas. A. Dewey of the third southern Worcester court of Milford, Judge Edward C. Bates of the first eastern Worcester court of Westboro, Ass'tant District Attorney Herbert Parker of Clinton, Col. Theodore S. Johnson, clerk of courts; Maj. Edward T. Raymond, clerk of the central district court; Frederick W. Southwick, register probate and insolvency; General John W. Corcoran, Clinton; Col. Horace B. Verry, Col. Edward B. Glasgow, Maj. Wm. T. Harlow, assistant clerk of courts; Elliott H. Peabody, second assistant clerk of courts; Postmaster J. Evarts Greene, Edward J. McMahon, John B. Rattigan, Alderman Francis Plunkett, Arthur M. Taft, Francis H. Dewey, Charles A. Merrill, Henry W. King, David Manning, Henry Bacon, Frederick A. Barnard, Charles E. Stevens, Henry Eveleth Hill, Louis W. Southgate, Charles W. Wood, William H. Gates, James Green, Frederick B. Harlow, Eben Francis Thompson, Fred W. Chamberlain, H. Spencer Haskill, Peter T. Carroll, Alexander Belisle, Earnest H. Vaughan, James H. Bancroft, Frank L. Dean, John A. Thayer, Thomas Hovey Gage, Jr., John A. Johnston, Arthur P. Rugg, Frederick M. Blackmer, John C. Dewey, Col. Rockwood Hoar, Mirick H. Cowden, Felix A. Belisle, Deputy Sheriff John F. Jandron.

Those from out of town: J. E. Beeman, Westboro; Thomas Brown, Millbury; Sidney P. Smith, Athol; Charles G. Bancroft, Clinton; E. D. Howe, Gardner; George G. Parker, Milford; A. J. Bartholomew, South-bridge.

Letters of regret at necessary absence were read from Judge Holmes and the Hon. W. W. Rice. The speaking by Col. Hopkins, Judge Hopkins, Chief Justice Mason, U. S. Senator, Geo. F. Hoar, Judge James M. Barker, State Senator John R. Thayer, and Eben F. Thompson, Esq., was unusually happy. With such a launching as this upon his judicial career, our Judge cannot help winning honor and success.

Going back in the life of Judge Hopkins to the threshold of his record in this country, we shall find him a Democrat in politics, though he did vote for General Grant in 1868. In town affairs politics have not mattered so much, for here he has been at times during twenty-five years, selectman, assessor, trustee of the town library, chairman of the school committee, trustee of the Savings Bank, and trustee of the Episcopal Mission.

He was the democratic candidate for congress in 1882, receiving 9404 to 11,846 for Hon. W. W. Rice. For two years he was the democratic candidate for state auditor. He has been his party's candidate for district attorney several times. He was a member of the house of representatives in '82 and '83. During both years he was chairman of the joint committee on woman's suffrage. In '83 he was chairman of the standing committee on probate and chancery. In 1884 he was a delegate to the national democratic convention at Chicago, and was one of the supporters of Grover Cleveland. In 1888 he met Hon. Joseph H. Walker in a joint debate on the tariff in Mechanics Hall, a discussion that drew as much interest as any event of that memorable contest.

Judge Hopkins has a most happy home in Millbury on Miles street. Here with ample grounds and surroundings, he can find in coming years as he has found in the past, rest and relief from the cares and besetments of the world. His wife, whom he married in 1865, was Miss Mary C. Salisbury of Blackstone. They have two sons and a daughter. The oldest son is a senior in Dartmouth, the second in Worcester Academy and the daughter is at home. Here then we leave the Judge in the home that he has made and when we review the many moves of his boyhood we do not wonder that he says, "I never had a permanent home till I made one." In his coming life as a member of our Superior court all of his fellow citizens have an abiding interest, looking to him as a type of that best and most respected of men, an upright judge.

Col. Rockwood Hoar and Col. Fred. W. Wellington attended the reception tendered by ex-Gov. Oliver Ames to his former staff, at Boston, Tuesday.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

Sherman Lodge, No. 144, Order of the Royal Ark, held its first entertainment in Grand Army Hall Monday evening. The program included a piano solo by Miss Clara Burnham; reading by Miss Lulu Isaacs; character and comic songs by E. P. Crierie; reading by Miss Arline Hall; character sketch and song by Harry Coley; whistling solo by Miss Isaacs and readings by Mrs. Lizzie Bowen.

The Columbia Cycle club gave an entertainment and dance in Sawyer Hall, West Boylston, last week Friday evening. The program of the entertainment included songs and dances by Queen and Howe; "Fun in a gymnasium" by L. C. Havener, Fred Daniels, Herbert Adams and Ben Townsend; Evans and Munro in silence and fun; selections by the Columbia banjo and guitar quintet, consisting of H. N. Davis, G. N. Hall, C. E. Munroe, C. N. Tucker, C. E. Livermore; club swinging by Prof. L. C. Havener; grotesque feats by Prof. C. A. Steele; soft shoe dance by Queen. The Columbia Cycle Club band furnished music for the dancing which followed. A large number were present from Worcester.

Sol Smith Russell.

Mr. Sol Smith Russell will make his second appearance this season in "A Poor Relation" at the New Worcester Theater Wednesday evening, May 6th. Mr. Russell is the especial favorite of all who regard and admire the gentle and refined in art. He is a conscientious actor, a comedian who has no superior, to say the least, in the presentation of the delightful union of humor and pathos which exists in some lives. In the midst of our smiles the tears come to our eyes as we see the patient and self sacrificing "Noah Vale" bearing up under persecution and injustice, ever willing to suffer when by so doing he will lessen the burden of some equally unfortunate fellow creature. Mr. Russell's conception and rendition of this quaint character will be thoroughly enjoyed by all who like clean comedy-drama. That fine banjoist and whistling soloist, Frank Lawton, is in the supporting company.

Hanlon's famous "New Fantasma," with its many beautiful effects and tableaux, will occupy the New Worcester Theatre Monday and Tuesday evenings, May 4 and 5. Mr. Hanlon is one of the hardest worked men on the stage, his labor not being confined to his acting before the footlights. He goes through enough there and of a very exhausting character, but the work that counts is behind the scenes, in getting everything ready.

In this respect "Fantasma" stands almost alone. There are more pieces of scenery, and heavier ones, than in any other of its class on the stage, and each piece must work exactly so or all will be spoiled. Though he has an army of stage hands and assistants and a very competent stage manager, Mr. Hanlon himself looks after this work in detail and never makes a slip. Hence the perfection of everything. The company is a very good one, and presents a number of old familiar faces.

The Brown University Glee, Banjo and

Mandolin club will give a concert in Association Hall, Thursday evening, May 14. Wherever the club has appeared this season it has been very enthusiastically received. The program for the concert here promises a treat for those who attend. It includes vocal selections, whistling solos, and music for banjos, guitars and mandolins. The members of the club are as follows: In the vocal department the first tenors are C. F. Harper, A. S. Llewellyn, B. S. Webb, M. R. Stout; second tenors, L. M. Lincoln, L. Sharpe, Jr., J. L. Casey, F. C. Williams; first basses, A. H. Colby, G. M. Chamberlin, C. E. Ide, R. W. Drawbridge; second basses, E. G. Dexter, J. Walther, W. S. Chase, C. S. Cooper; B. S. Webb, whistler; A. H. Colby, director; Prof. D. S. Babcock, instructor. In the banjo department the banjoists are T. S. Brown, J. C. Pegram, Jr., J. P. Gage, E. W. Corliss; bass banjo, W. H. Paine; guitars, A. H. Colby, W. B. Perry, Jr., G. N. Norton; director, T. S. Brown. In the mandolin department the first mandolins are W. H. Paine, G. N. Norton; second mandolins, A. H. Colby, F. L. C. Keating; guitars, W. B. Perry, Jr., T. S. Brown, E. W. Corliss; director, G. N. Norton. E. B. Brige is violinist. Reserved seat tickets will be on sale at S. R. Leland & Son's on and after May 7.

Removal.

Geo. F. Clark for the past ten years located at 182 Front street, has removed his business to 538 Main street. His stock of Ladies and Gents fine shoes is large, the styles are new and prices are extremely low, in order to increase business in his new location. He also carries a line of Gents Furnishings Goods, the latest styles in hats are all in and ready for inspection. Give us a call. Our motto is to please you.

South End News.

Mr. H. H. Houghton has begun the erection of his new four-storied brick block at the corner of Main and Hammond streets.

The academy base ball team has been organized as follows: Simons, 1b; Mitchell, p.; Sayles, s. s. and Captain; Allen, r. f.; Gordon, c.; Gregory, 3b.; Maynard, c. f.; Ager, 2b; Jones, l. f.

Messrs. Zelotes Coombs and William Cunningham will soon launch two new canoes of their own workmanship, at Curtis' pond.

Miss Grace Little, 15 King street, gave a dinner party to her friends Wednesday.

Bicycling among the young ladies seems to have taken a start. Among the many who ride are: Miss Flossie Putnam, Miss Carrie Perry and Miss Mary Smith. They are quite expert at the "art."

Miss Sadie Waite and Miss Mamie Banfield spent their vacation with friends in Boston.

Mr. H. W. Metcalf and family have removed to Rochester, New York, where Mr. Metcalf is engaged in business.

The Beaver Tennis Club has very neat grounds on Beaver street, situated in a grove of pine trees. The court is in excellent condition and many ladies enjoy the sport.

The South End Whist Club met with Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Gorham, Wednesday evening. The first prize an etching "The Madonna and Child," was won by Mr. F. L. Gorham.

School and College.

The recently announced gift, by Mr. Stephen Salisbury, of funds to defray the expense in part of an expedition to the Galapagos Islands is one of the most important educational features of a year, already fraught with interest. These Islands lie on the equator in longitude 90 west. They range over an area somewhat less than that of Massachusetts and Connecticut united. The largest of them is sixty miles long and fifteen broad, having an elevation of 4000 feet. They are thirteen in number and have been, hitherto, classed as volcanic in their origin. The object of the Clark University expedition under the direction of Dr. George Baur is to ascertain whether they may not be the result of a subsidence rather than an upheaval, a sort of Atlantis in the Pacific. These Islands can hardly be said to be inhabited, having been visited chiefly for the enormous turtles found there. They were sketched in Darwin's trip in the Beagle 1835, and the Agassiz-Hasler expedition of 1872 touched there. Dr. Baur will be accompanied by Mr. C. F. Adams of Champagne, Ill. They will fit out in Ecuador, a small vessel and expect to return to Worcester in October. Aside from the scientific interest developed by the scheme, Worcester people take some pride in the thought that Mr. Salisbury is interested in that he helps pay the bills. Education is fast incurring great obligations to our North End Maecenas.

Harvard.

Herbert C. Lakin, '94, won the Freshman half mile race at the class games Tuesday, on Holmes field. His time was 2m. 11 sec.

The faculty have decided that there must be more recitation hours in the week, therefore they have voted the following change: Afternoon recitations begin at 1.30 p.m., instead of 2 p.m., and last until 4.30 p.m. On Saturday afternoons even there will be an hour's work. Let those who imagine life at Harvard a bed of roses come here and study six full days in the week.

The Varsity nine has been doing better work lately. They played Dartmouth two games, defeating them by scores of 10-0 and 5-1. Saturday they beat Brown at Providence 6-1. Wednesday, the 29th, Williams plays here. In the first of the class games the Freshmen defeated the Sophmores 9 to 0. The dates of the Harvard Yale Freshmen games are May 9 at Cambridge, and May 30 at New Haven; on the latter date the Yale Varsity nine plays here.

The Junior nine plays the Tech at Worcester, Friday, says the Crimson. Lake is playing left field, let the Tech give him a rousing welcome, and if they have any more such men send them here.

Last Thursday Professor Hale of Cornell gave a lecture before the Classical Club on "Roman Marriage and Roman Women." Professor Hale, who was once a Harvard instructor, told a lot of interesting information about Roman family laws, and made a vigorous defence of Roman women.

This week Wednesday Professor Goodwin, the author of the Moods and Tenses, will lecture on "The Ruins at Mycenae and Tiryns."

To all of these lectures the public is admitted.

By the way, Worcester ought to begin to get some of these intellectual usufructs pretty soon. Surely the specialists at Clark University can find some topic that will come within our comprehension. Cambridge people say half the pleasure of living here is in the University exercises which are open to the public.

High School.

The High School Clubs held their regular meetings last Friday. The Sumner Club in its new quarters held the most interesting meeting that it has had for many a day. The event was celebrated by the attendance of many High School pupils who are not members of the club, and many young ladies. The program in full was as follows: Declamation, Battle of Nasby, W. E. Barton; Reading, Pyramus and Thisbe, O. C. White; paper, Music, D. G. Burrage; declamation, Chariot Race, Death of Orestes, T. F. Cummings. The question was: Resolved that men of thought have benefited the world more than the men of action, and was debated in the affirmative by C. P. Haselden, H. P. Linnell and E. H. Warren. The negative was sustained by H. H. Hill, E. C. Witherbee, and E. A. D. Moss, who won the debate. The whole program was exceptionally fine, at the debate spirited after the decision of the question; F. R. Batchelder and W. P. Goodwin, both honorary members addressed the club.

The Enclieia debated the question: Resolved that a technical education is better than a classical one. Decided in the negative.

The Aletheia held its meeting in the afternoon with the question for discussion: Resolved that fines for drunkenness should be abolished. The question was decided in the affirmative.

One of the features of the meeting was an extemporaneous address by Miss Smith on "The busts in the High School building." Miss Dickenson presided.

During the evening the young ladies of the Aletheia surprised Mr. Tyler Newton at his home on Laurel street and took the management of the evening's affairs into their own hands. Mr. and Mrs. Geo. R. Kennedy helped receive and in the course of the evening Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Roe arrived. The young ladies presented Mr. Newton during the evening with a steel engraving of the "Pilgrim Exiles," with the president of the Aletheias, Miss Curtis, to present it. They served a collation later on and did not separate until a late hour. Mr. Newton had been hurt at his work during the day but by the time of departure was quite himself again, so cheered was he by his High School friends.

Today the tournament comes off on the tennis courts at Cambridge. T. L. Nelson, Jr., is the only High School member who has entered, but he goes with the kind hopes of many.

A Glee Club, as yet without a name, has been formed by several High School boys. The members are A. H. Merriam, W. L. Sprague, G. R. Bliss and George Ellingwood. They performed at the last rehearsal of the High School Glee Club and have done well at their appearances in several places. There is no reason why they should not take the place of the old Chatham.

Smith College.

Spring in Northampton has not been exaggerated for its beauty and the girls are out of doors as much as possible. The campus is covered with tennis courts, occupied most of the time. The annual tournament takes place June 3.

Last week Wednesday a concert was given by Mrs. Allen and the Beethoven Club, assisted by the Adams Quartet and the College Choir.

A cross-country run of a newly organized "Hare and Hound" party took place Wednesday afternoon.

The programme of the Junior Promenade, given to the Seniors by the Juniors some time early in June, is already out.

Prof. Tyler is giving a course of lectures on the History of Art, one every Tuesday afternoon.

The College's need for a college House is shown by the fact that there are over four hundred applications for the houses next fall, while the vacancies will not exceed one hundred.

Holy Cross.

Joseph N. Jerome of the W. H. S., '87, has returned home from the University of Pennsylvania for the summer vacation.

The Base Ball fever is at full height in the college since the Base Ball team defeated Williams' College nine. The Holy Cross boys suffered, a defeat in name, but a victory in reality at the hands of the Worcesters last week. For years our college has had the reputation of putting as gentlemanly a set of Base Ball players on the diamond as any other college nine. And yet it has been reported that Captain O'Neil struck Catcher Hayes of the Worcesters in the face. This was utterly false as O'Neil in sliding head first for the home plate, ducked, and hit Hayes with his shoulder, who stood directly on the line. The team plays with Brown University in Providence, Tuesday.

Class Ode.

CLASS OF '91, W. P. I.

"Honor to him who caters to the King!"
The king,—the soul, the "inner man," the mind,
Tributes of honor, songs of praises bring,
To him who thinks and labors for his kind.

Honor to him who brings the mind to see,
Some higher aim, some nobler end for man,
Who helps the thought on eagle wings to fly
Above the clod—the fairer world to scan.

Honor to him who spurs ambition on,
Rightly directs the current in the flow,
Who sees with tender care the hopes expand
Trains and instructs the wishes as they grow.

To teachers, benefactors, classmates, friends,
In highest honor plant we here this tree,
To them a noble monument to stand,
And centre to our class' unity.

And when we part, this last perhaps for aye,
To farthest quarters of the globe may be,
We'll brake no bonds of brotherhood, but grow,
The separate branches of our class' tree.

W. H. BAIRD.

The switchman's interest in the railroads they represent seems to be flagging.

How a Worcester Boy

Settled in Canada, with Family Reminiscences.

[Written by the late Mrs. Judge Nesmith of New Hamp hire and kindly given to LIGHT by Mr. Walter F. Brooks, her grand nephew. Further data of the Brooks family are given in LIGHT, March 21st.]

"In compliance with the long expressed wish of my dear daughter I this morning, the 6th of April, 1880, seat myself to write out for her gratification some of the reminiscences of my early childhood, and subsequent life up to the time of my married life. I had my birth in the pleasant town of Haverhill, N. H., on the eastern bank of the Connecticut river, on the 8th of July 1799. I was the seventh child born to my honored father, Samuel Brooks, a native of Worcester, Mass, by his marriage to my beloved mother whose maiden name was Anna Bedell, the daughter of Timothy Bedell of Revolutionary memory. My mother was twice married; first to Dr. Thaddeus Butler, a practising physician at Haverhill, by whom she had two children, a son and daughter. Her daughter died at the age of four years, a precocious and very beautiful child, and as my dear mother often told me, the most beautiful of all her children. At the time of my mother's second marriage, my brother, John Clark Butler, was five years of age. This brother was always cherished as tenderly and loved as dearly as any of my father's family. He was possessed of a very sweet disposition and gained the love of all who knew him. I could fill a volume with little incidents connected with the happy days when we shared his brotherly companionship. My childhood days were very happy. I recall so many pleasant memories of these early days that I feel a thrill of delight often times bringing tears of rapture to my eyelids.

My dear mother gave birth to twelve children; ten by her Brooks marriage—seven sons and five daughters; only nine lived to adult age,—six sons and three daughters. Three only of this number now survive.

In speaking of my happy childhood I must say of my dear father, though of the old school, and living in an age when parents were more strict in their training of children than at this day, was exceedingly tender in his treatment of those under his charge. Often have I recalled the sweet tones of his voice as I would hang about his knee, and repeat my catechism and the many verses which children are wont to rehearse at that tender age, and what I deem so delightful; I cannot recall a single instance of a frown upon his face during all those years, blessed memory! thrice blessed father! I was also blessed with one of the best of mothers; indulgent she was, and yet she claimed and secured our perfect obedience at all times. We both loved and fully respected her and dared not disobey. She was early trained to industrious habits and to self respect and self reliance, a woman of great decision of character and a heart full of the milk of human kindness. A friend to the poor and destitute, highly sympathetic in her nature, ready to every good work—in short, a true and faithful disciple of the meek and lowly Saviour whose pattern she aimed to follow. My mother was a native of Haverhill, Mass.

My father's occupation at my earliest remembrance, was a country trader, as a merchant in those days was called. He also owned an oil mill, situated on the Oliverian brook, about half a mile south of Haverhill Corner as it was then called. But failing in business at Haverhill he then visited Quebec and there contracted with the then acting governor of the Provinces (I think Craigie was the name) for a tract of land situated in the town of Chester, then a perfect wilderness. Consequently the same year he fitted out my two brothers, John C. Butler and George W. Brooks and sent them on to commence operations, and at the close of that or the next year Brother John removed with his wife and family of two children to this lonely spot, where there was no inhabitant, and then the year following, my father, after a good and comfortable block house had been put up for our accommodation, took his family, consisting of wife and six children to this new home in the wilderness, leaving my eldest sister, H. D., in a friend's family as governess and seamstress, also my brother Samuel, as clerk in a commission house in the city of Burlington. We left Haverhill in the Spring of 1812, in the month of March, the travelling very poor during a portion of the journey, as the sleighing was breaking up and portions of the road were bare of snow. Four children with father and mother were occupants of a single sleigh. I think we did not reach our destination until the fifth day. I well recollect the warm, friendly greeting with which we were met at all the public and private houses on our journey. My father had passed over the route so often that he was made entirely welcome in every household, and I am very sure that all the people felt a deep sympathy for us, knowing to what a desolate place we were bound. Though young at the time I recall with gratitude the lively interest taken by many and the surprise that my father should take so interesting a family of cultivated children into a perfect wilderness. But my dear father had faith in the promises held out to him by the governor that brighter days were in store for that portion of the Province. But it so happened that Craigie, the then acting governor, was recalled, and Gov. General Dalhousie was his successor, who never carried out the plans of his predecessor, and the road laid out was never completed, thus shutting out all prospects of an immediate settlement in that region much to the disgust and disappointment of my dear father.

During the second year of our residence there my sister Hannah was united in marriage to Capt Wm. Trotter of Bradford, Vt., and about the same time my Grandfather Brooks of Worcester died, leaving a handsome property to us, his only grandchildren, also money with which to purchase a farm at Stanstead for the support of my parents. Consequently my brothers soon left the town of Chester with leave from my father to provide themselves an education and fitting themselves for a life of future happiness.

While we were at Chester my father raised various grains upon his land. The soil and climate were well adapted to the growth of most grains such as wheat, barley, oats, millet, etc. The seasons were too short for the ripening of maize or Indian corn. However, a patch was devoted to corn, and I am now reminded of the circumstance that the field was visited at our time by a bear, and my brothers constructed a trap made of wood and set it for Bruin and in the following morning they were greatly elated on their visit to the ground to find the animal caught securely by his leg. The poor fellow was soon dispatched and his body dragged to the house for the investigation of the members of the family to whom such a sight was a novelty. As our sources of amusement were very circumscribed we were allowed on the Sabbath to amuse ourselves by a walk one mile and a half to the river, not over a smooth road, but over roots and stumps as best we could. We had the pleasure of listening to the sweet notes of birds so captivating at all times to children; and in the Autumn as the beech trees abound, we greatly enjoyed gathering the nice oily nut so pleasant to the taste. And then in the Spring as the sugar maple was abundant, my brothers busied themselves in gathering and boiling the sap and making the sugar, of which we made large quantities, 1000 pounds one year. This was very exhausting labor as the snow was often two feet in depth and the boys were obliged to carry heavy wooden buckets many rods to the place of boiling. It afforded us children pleasant pastime to watch the progress of sugar making, and a grand merry time we had at the season of sugaring off as we termed it, and then my brothers always took a mug full of the delicious rich syrup to my dear mother, who we never allowed to go to the place of work as it was too fatiguing for her.

(To be Continued Next Week.)

Boys' Club.

At the club, Monday night, Mrs. Albee from New Worcester was present with Sunday School boys who spoke, and also little Miss Fannie E. Damon recited "Since Casy Runs the Flat" and "The Bootblack." A good time was enjoyed.

Millbury.

The absence of the letter from this town is explained when it is stated that our esteemed correspondent, D. E. March, has gone to Denver, Col., where he has already a brother. A field of usefulness has opened to him there that he could not afford to ignore. He will be missed from our columns.

Rev. D. O. Mears, D. D., preached at Williams College, Williamstown, last Sunday.

Professor Eaton in another column advertises his house and lot on Boynton Street for sale. Here is an excellent chance for a home lover to secure an admirable location. Every one regrets the departure of our Professor from our city and we hope that as excellent a successor will follow him. The house is in a quiet, cultured portion of Worcester with every convenience of the more crowded parts of the city.

Miss Elizabeth H. Metcalf of 31 John Street, a well known music teacher, is preparing to make a trip abroad. She will visit Great Britain and the Continent for purposes of travel and study. May she realize all that she wishes and hopes.

Books and Bookmen.

Men, at times, have committed crimes that they might possess coveted literary treasures; but, a desire for books is, generally, an indication of an honest mind. Of course, this does not refer to the knave who converts his neighbors' books that he may pawn or sell thereby to enrich himself. He steals books because they are convenient objects. It is possible, of course, that real book lovers have in their possession nuggets that they purloined; but LIGHT does not happen to know one. The bibliophile may wander far for bargains, he may stretch the truth a little in his depreciation of a desired volume, saying, "It is naught, it is naught," and then put on the valuation when he obtains it; but steal, never. LIGHT does not claim that books are not stolen; but it does affirm that the real lover of printers' trophies has too much respect for what he loves to filch it. One half his pleasure, in possessing, comes from the power to show his treasures to those who belong to his guild, and how could he exhibit with pride what he came dishonestly by?

The Inland Printer for April, Chicago, is as usual a thing of beauty. Here are nearly one hundred pages of matter of surpassing interest to him who likes fine work. It is a model of what it seeks to advance viz., excellent printing. The illustrations are superb. These include an excellent cut of General Sherman. In a word, there is no form or feature of printing that is not enlarged upon in this publication. $2 per year.

LIGHT takes pleasure in calling the attention of readers to the fact that Mr. C. A. Fairbanks of 41 Piedmont Street is the Worcester Agent for Gately's World's Progress. This book is a magnificent compendium of what has been done in Science and Art. A card to Mr. F. would secure a showing of the book which is invaluable to households where children abound. It is a storehouse of information.

Concerning "A Bird's Eye View of the World" advertised in another column, a little girl of whom we wot says, "Why papa! I think this book is perfect." She loves Geography and if she didn't the turning of such pages as these would soon develop a love for it.

Ingalls Home and Art Magazine. Published by J. F. Ingalls, Lynn, Mass.

The first illustration is, "A Study of Brook Trout," but besides this there are several designs of china painting, sketches in charcoal, a design in scorch work, several screens and some new things in needle work. One of the beauties of this magazine is the explicit detail with which everything is described and illustrated. The beginner, or the adept in art, will find something to learn from its pages. Price $1.

Magazine of New England History. Quarterly, Newport, R. I. R. H. Tilley, $3. April.

This, No. 2 of Vol. 1 is a thoroughly enjoyable work to him who delights in the past. The opening article is an extended genealogical account of Robert Williams of Roxbury and his descendants. The author has improved upon Savage's Dictionary and the History of the Family published in 1847. In a similar, though not so extended a vein, an account of the Rev. James Hillhouse of New London follows. The part borne by Sergeant John White Paul in the capture of General Prescott in 1777 is a very valuable addition to the history of that period. Our New Magazine had already, vindicated its right to a prosperous career in No. 1. This second number goes far toward putting it abreast of the older and well established magazines that seek to unearth and preserve historical lore.

The Atlantic Monthly for April, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York, $4 per year.

In reading our Atlantic, we find the 2d part of O'Connor's "The Brazen Android." The selection from Richard H. Dana's Journal, wherein he takes us with him on a voyage upon the Grand Canal of China, is a choice bit of reminiscence and makes us wish for more. Sarah Orne Jewett's, "A Native of Winby" is a most exquisite touch of New England life by this mistress of the short story writing. Mr. Parkman contributes another chapter of his Capture of Louisburg by the New England Militia and H. C. Merwin gives us "The Ethics of Housekeeping." In verse we have "The Last Bowstrings" by Edward Lucius White. "Jeremy Belknap" by George Edward Ellis is a discriminating sketch of the Historian of New Hampshire. Mr. Stockton's continued story, "The House of Martha" reaches its XXXII chapter. Prof. Safford, the famous mathematician at Williams College writes of "Modern Teaching of Arithmetic" and "The Ideal" a poetic sketch by Florence Earle Coates follows. William P. Andrews contributes another paper on "Goethe's Key to Faust." The extended book reviews are of "Miss Kemble's Letters," Burgess' "System of Political Science and Constitutional Law" and Gildersleeve's "Essays and Studies." The Contributor's Club is as entertaining as ever, the best items, perhaps, being an "Unknown Scholar" and "Dogberry in Paris." "Two Doyens of French Art" introduces the great artist, Meissonier, in a characteristic anecdote.

Selections in English Prose from Elizabeth to Victoria (1580-1880) chosen and arranged by James M. Garnett, M. A., LL. D., Professor of the English Language and Literature of the University of Virginia. Ginn & Company, 1891.

Just three hundred years of English prose! The compiler is exceedingly happy in his selection of dates. Beginning with one of the most notable periods in British history, one associated with the name of a woman, he ends it in one even greater and it, too, under the direction of a woman. The prose before Lyly's day is more curious than profitable and these thirty three writers whom he has selected will serve as excellent types of all that is great and good in our prose literature. John Lyly and his Euphens are a long ways back. Up to even a more recent date, letters were not considered so manly a calling as adventure and arms. Much genius was frittered away in the middle ages in the breaking of each other's heads; but from the days of Elizabeth, onward, men were disposed to use the pen as a symbol of power. Many a teacher has wished to have, at hand, a book which might illustrate some of the statements in Shaw or some other manual, and while we have had poetic selections and Knights Half Hour Series, we have not had in one volume or collection of representative prose. This we now have in the work of Prof. Garnett. Sir Philip Sidney is here with "An Apologie for Poetrie", Richard Hooker has Book 1 of the "Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity." Francis Bacon, Essays; Of Religion, of Unity, of Religion and History of Henry VII. The other authors in their order are Ben Jonson, Thomas Fuller, John Milton, Jeremy Taylor, Sir Thomas Browne, Abraham Cowley, Earl of Clarendon, Sir William Temple, John Dryden, Jonathan Swift, Joseph Addison, Sir Richard Steele, Daniel Defoe, Viscount Bolingbroke, David Hume, Oliver Goldsmith, Samuel Johnson, Edmund Burke, Edward Gibbon, Sir Walter Scott, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, William Hazlitt, Charles Lamb, Robert Southey, Walter Savage Landor, Leigh Hunt, Thomas De Quincey, Thomas B. Macaulay and Thomas Carlyle.

These authors if read by pupils must inspire a thirst for more. Prof. Garnett has made such explanatory notes as seemed desirable. They are not profuse, much being left for the curiosity and industry of the student. Addison and Steele, together, give nearly the whole of the Coverley Papers, at any rate, the best of them. One might ask for a little more of Sam. Johnson than his Preface to Shakespeare; but we cannot compress everything into one volume of 700 pages. The book should be found in every school library and no outfit of a teacher is complete without it. Here are fifty examples of classic English, in convenient shape. Nothing better in this line has ever been done.

Lippincotts for May. Contents.

Vampires, Julien Gordon; The Experiences of a Photographer, A. Bogardus; Lost Treasures of Literature, William Shepard; Poems, Charles Henry Luders; That Hound o' Joel Trout's, M. G. McCllland; Absence, Owen Wister; Some Familiar Letters by Horace Greeley.—III. Edited by Joel Benton; "A Successful Woman", M. E. W. Sherwood; A Blossom from the Hague, William E. S. Fales; Polly, Patience Stapleton; Aims of Univerity Extension. Sydney T. Skidmore; By the Sea, Clifton Scollard; What Country Girls Can Do, Grace H. Dodge; Latent Force, John Worrell Keely; The Personality of the Prince of Wales, Frank A. Burr; The Moujik, Julien Gordon; Some Letters to Julien Gordon; John Dickinson, Annie H. Wharton; Literary Dynamics, Francis Howard Williams; "Maiden's Choosing," Frederic M. Bird; With the Wits. (Illustrated by leading artists.)

Vampires by Julien Gordon is the story of a poor man, and his struggles to maintain an idle and luxurious wife. The characters are true to life and much of the comedy and tragedy of life is introduced. A sketch of the author Mrs. Cruger, under the head of "A Successful Woman" is given by Mrs. M. E. W. Sherwood. The oldest photographer in America, A. Bogardus, contributes a paper on Photography. He speaks of his experience with the old daguerreotype, and the paper picture, and introduces some queer incidents with his customers. He also gives some good advice to the amateur. The lost treasures of literature are enumerated by W. Shepard. Some were destroyed by their authors, some by the burning of libraries, and many by accident. The aims of University Extension are set forth by Professor Skidmore. Some of the letters of Horace Greeley relate to the exciting period of his presidential campaign. Miss Dodge shows how the country girl can add to the pleasures of herself and those about her by work among the poor and needy, by the organization of societies for mutual improvement, and by creating an interest in the beauties of nature.

For the scientist there is an article on latent force. Mr. Burr greatly admires the democratic traits in the Prince of Wales' character, and paints a pen picture of the prince which differs essentially from the generally accepted pen-portraits. There are five poems and several book reviews. J. B. Lippincott Co. $3 a year.

Scientific American.

The four numbers of this paper in April are a rich treat to one interested in science. Two numbers are almost entirely given up to the Centennial of the granting of the first patent in this country. There are twenty-five portraits of men connected with the Patent Office or present at the celebration. A full report of the proceedings is also given. The new "Ghost" express train running between Boston and New York must be an interesting object as it rushes past one in the darkness of night or even in the day time it must attract attention from its unique appearance. The ship railway at the head of the Bay of Fundy is nearing completion and will prove or disprove the practicability of such a mode of transit. Apropos of the correspondence with Italy, our position in a defensive war is discussed. A description of two war ships in process of construction for the United States government, is given. Several illusions that would puzzle the uninitiated are clearly explained. One of these is the horse race on the stage, where the horses really gallop, and the fence and scenery in the background move as if in reality you were, with the riders, rushing past them. $3 a year, Munn & Co., New York.

The May number of the Educational Review will have a peculiar interest to many because of its containing probably the last public expression of the late lamented Doctor Howard Crosby—a brief article on "Religion in the Common Schools;" and also an article on "My Pedagogic Autobiography," left unfinished by the late R. H. Quick, the widely-read author of "Educational Reformers." The other striking features of the number are articles on "The Limitations of State Universities," by ex-President Horace Davis of the University of California, and on "The Teaching of History in the Elementary Schools," by Professor Salmon of Vassar; the last of Professor De Garmo's papers on Herbart; a letter from Friedrich Kirchner on educational matters in Prussia; the Bishop of Durham's recent address before the University Extension Society, on "Ideals;" and reviews by Professors Tracy Peck of Yale; A. B. Hart of Harvard; John Dewey of the University of Michigan; Wm. North Rice of Wesleyan; Dr. J. H. Hyslop of Columbia, and Hon. D. H. Chamberlain. The first volume closes with the May number. The beginning of the new volume is a good time to subscribe. Henry Holt & Co., publishers, 29 W. 23d Street, New York. $3 a year (10 Nos.) 35 cts. a copy.

Ballou's monthly for May is just the book to take with you when you start off for a day's ride upon the cars or to have by you, if anything keeps you at home for the working hours. It does not attempt to be very instructive, but it does aim to be entertaining and it succeeds. "Why 'Dear George' Escaped" leads off the good things. "Redpath" is not a biography but a story. "Seeking Black Diamonds" is a sketch of coal mining. The other stories, long and short, are diverting and the brief sketches and selections amusing. He would be very hard to please who could not get several hours of pleasure out of this magazine now in the 73d volume. $1.50 per year. G. W. Studley, Boston.

The eleventh volume of the Cosmopolitan commences with the May number. During the comparatively short period of its existence it has won a very high position among the monthly magazines. One of its most noticeable features is its fine illustrations, probably not being surpassed even if equalled in this respect by any other monthly publication. This month's number is a good example of the fine things to which the publishers of the Cosmopolitan treat its readers. Under the subject, "The New Philadelphia," Henry C. Walsh tells of the progress that is making in that city, especially in the erection of fine buildings and the organization of social, literary and athletic clubs. The article is finely illustrated by Harry Fenn. W. J. Henderson, in "New York as a Musical Center," presents the claims of that city to be ranked as one of the leading musical centers of the world. With the article there are presented the portraits of some of the leading musicians of New York. "Cleopatras of the Stage" is a timely article by Charles E. L. Wingate. The illustrations include portraits of Fanny Davenport, Sarah Bernhardt, Mrs. Potter, Mrs. Langtry and others who have been Cleopatras during the past one hundred years. In connection with Herbert Pierson's "Our Boarding House in Salamanca," there is a sad story. Mr. Pierson went to Spain to gather material for a series of stories for the Cosmopolitan. A short time after his arrival his friends received news of his death. Consequently this article will be his last. It is illustrated by sketches of his own. There are two military stories this month, "The Coup de Grâce" by Archibald Forbes and "Corporal Billee" by A. W. Tourgee. Other articles are "The Silver Camp of Colorado," by Theodore F. Van Wagenen; "The Comte de Paris" by General James Grant Wilson; "Spring Song," a poem, by Frank D. Sherman; "Kennels and Kennel Clubs" by H. M. Bangs; "The Elixir of Pain," a continued story, by Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen; "The Flight of Joy," a poem, by John Vance Cheney; Dr. Koch and his Lymph" by Julius Weiss; "Review of Current Events" by Murat Halstead; "Organization of Emigration" by Edward Everett Hale; "On Certain Recent Books About the Theater" by Brander Matthews. The price of the Cosmopolitan is $2.40 per year.

Odyssey of Homer.

Translated by George Herbert Palmer, Alford Professor of Philosophy in Harvard University. Boston and New York. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1891.

Here, in a handsome 12 mo. of 387 pages, we have the outcome of the notices that we were wont to see in the Boston papers, from time to time, to the effect that Prof. Palmer at a designated time would read from the Odyssey to such as might care to listen. Some months since the first XII Books, Greek Text with Translations, were published by the same firm; but in this volume we have the translation complete, though without the Text. That the Homeric tale is capable of interesting those not classically instructed is certain. Some years since, to afford a little more work for certain pupils, not over busy, the principal of a High School secured a large number of translations of Homer and, out of school hours, went through both the Iliad and the Odyssey with these young people, to whom the Greek was a sealed book. The interest was unflagging from the beginning.

For many years, the construction of English verse from the Greek has been a favorite exercise of the college boy. If he did not undertake it himself, sometimes his teacher imposed it as a task and in riper years he looked upon his early efforts with something akin to amusement. Americans, however, have not excelled as Hellenists. We must look to England for the Popes, Cowpers and Chapmans who have linked their names indissolubly with the blind old Grecian.

Prof. Palmer introduces his translation with a very modest preface, thus, saying that he has arrived. "To give to the thought of Homer a more direct and single expression than has hitherto been judged admissible; to be at once minutely faithful to the Greek original and to keep out of sight the fact that either an original or a translator exists." There are more words in the preface; but the above will suffice to keep the professor's purpose. When good old George Chapman put forth his translations, nearly three hundred years ago, he rambled through many pages of preface and dedicatory letters. Our latest Grecian makes no such exhibit of attainments but begins at once.

"Speak to me, Muse, of the adventurous man who wandered long after he sacked the sacred citadel of Troy."

And thus Chapman said the same.

"The man, O Muse, inform that many a way
Wound with his wisdom to his wished stay;
That wandered wondrous far, when he the town
Of sacred Troy had sacked and shivered done."

while Alexander Pope renders the opening lines in this resounding manner.

"The man for wisdom's various arts renowned Long exercised in woes, O Muse! resound;
Who, when his arms had wrought the distant fall
Of sacred Troy and razed her Heaven-built wall,
Wandering from clime to clime, observant stray'd
Their manners noted, and their states surveyed."

From these translators, there is not a school boy who would not select Palmer. He will admire, at once, the naturalness of the style. The others, he will reject as stilted or affected. Of course this is school boy judgment for he might prefer a Bohn or an Intertinear. There yet remains Bryant's famous version and with it our Palmer's will doubtless be compared rather than with the older English. The work is, by no means so ambitious as that of our pioneer Bard and its ends aimed at are entirely different. There are very few of whatever temperament who cannot from this translation draw a deal of pleasure. It is a tribute to the scholarship of the day and the institution in which the translator teaches. The language is delightfully rhythmic and from the first to the last book, the interest is sustained. For sale by Putnam, Davis & Co. Price $1.00.

Separate Homes.

BY SARAH JEANNE RICH.

Give me truths, for I am weary of the surfaces.
—Emerson.

Do not separate homes produce a better class in the community, morally and physically, than tenement houses, hotels and co-operative establishments?

A stranger while making quite an extended visit in Worcester admired its situation and possibilities as a place of culture, but said as he walked to church one Sunday morning, "It is a mystery to me where all these people come from? The size of the city does not seem to warrant such a population."

The reply was "There are comparatively few separate homes and sometimes there are sixty people living in one block or tenement house." Worcester is not a city of homes and though possessing many attractions for a residence, pure air, good water, a beautiful environment and fine educational and business facilities, yet it lacks the very keystone for the true and vital growth of a community.

The few homes the city does possess are the best in the country and out of them have come some of the noblest men of the nation.

Does not Worcester feel a just pride in Bancroft, Green, Lincoln, Merrick, Bigelow, Thomas, Davis, Batton, Miller, Salisbury, Walker, Hoar, with many an added name to the long list of wise and good she has sent forth into the world? Did such a man as Tweed come from a home like this which these men possessed? History traces him to a tenement house, in which he was born and bred, in the Fourth Ward of New York city. In "How the Other Half Lives," by Jacob Reis, a book now widely read and meeting this question of today most honestly, we are told, "In New York the boundary line of the other half lies through the tenements. That eighty per cent., at least, of crimes against property and against the person are perpetrated by individuals who have either lost all connection with home life, or never had any, or whose homes had ceased to be sufficiently separate, decent and desirable to afford what is regarded as the ordinary, wholesome influence of home and family. Today three-fourths of the people in New York live in tenement houses. The fifteen thousand tenements that were the despair of the sanitarian in the past generation have swelled into thirty-seven thousand and more than twelve hundred thousand persons call them home and this 'system' that was the evil offspring of public neglect and private greed has come to stay, a storm centre forever of our civilization. In the tenements all the influences make for evil; because they are the hotbeds of the epidemics that carry death to rich and poor alike; the nurseries of pauperism and crime that fill our jails and police courts; because above all, they touch the family life with deadly moral contagion." We are told also, "Fifteen, thirty and often forty per cent. is a fair average interest on tenement property. If this be true, what then of the outlook from the Christian standpoint? 'How shall the love of God be understood by those who have been nurtured in sight only of the greed of man?'" With such a warning as this record gives of New York, can we sit quietly in our homes and neglect this urgent question? Walk out on Washington Street to the hollow below the hill, or on Southbridge Street and its rear and in the neglected children and gossiping women squalor and dirt of the tenements you see an embryo New York fast growing.

What is a home? A place for freedom, comfort, health, love, happiness and culture.

Home is a place for freedom. A place in which if one wishes he can have solitude or society; where, within four walls (no matter what space they enclose) he can be monarch, and find that rest and quiet for weary nerves and wasted vitality that nothing on earth can give but home.

Are these to be found in the tenement or co-operative establishment? We who have had experience in these will say "No."

There is always the man or woman with no resources in themselves who drop in for a few minutes robbing you of hours of precious time. The pianist, who plays above you, or on your right, or left, sometimes till past midnight.

The child, whose mother has gone out for a few minutes and who must be entertained or allowed to run at large among your household gods! The borrower, the gossip, the new tenant! Who does not know them all, yet who in a tenement house is free to close the door upon such constant intruders?

Home is a place for comfort. How many are the wants, the needs of a civilized, human being; warmth, food, light, cleanliness, privacy. One scarcely realizes this till some disaster like fire or storm proves the possibility of lacking ordinary comforts.

Have you not seen in such an establishment as Wanamaker's in Philadelphia, or White's in Boston, a great crowd of weary humanity, panting, hungry, thirsty, tired, all seeking some comfort in the resting-room, or restaurant, a grateful but merely temporary respite. How evident it is to us as we look upon such people in the mass that to thrive physically each individual needs the comforts of a home. The ever recurring necessity for nourishment and rest can only be happily met in a home. Who in a hotel will fill the place of mother to that lonely boy with shoes and stockings soaked with rain and slush? Who will throw open their warm and comfortable rooms in a tenement house to that chilled and shabby old woman, who to reach her room in the crowded building must climb to the attic and then perhaps down again to buy a bucket of coal before she can have a fire.

Comfort! How inseparable the word should be from the atmosphere of home and mother. In what place in our crowded tenement, where many live as on ship-board, is the opportunity to make one room a comfort room? A place where mother can not only be found to bind up cut fingers and bruised heads of little men and women, but where, at leisure, from herself, she is ready to give sympathy and courage to the world weary husband or the heart bowed down with its weight of sorrow; where on easy couches and restful chairs, not too fine for use, the tired school-boy can curl up—dusty shoes and all—and read his book undisturbed, with mother sitting near to smile upon him or perhaps laugh with him over some funny paragraphs; where the school-girl always is sure of mother's sympathy and recounts her day's experience without reserve to this safest, truest counsellor.

Do we not chase phantoms when we spend money, time and space on the room called the parlor, filling it with endless bric-à-brac, a costly room, with nothing in it for comfort, through which our men and boys wander, like Mr. Merdle in "Little Dorrit," and feel that they are the last persons on earth who have any business there. Why do we persist in giving to outsiders such extravagant shows and leave only husks for the dear inner circle of loved ones?

In Mrs. Croly's interesting magazine, The Homemaker, a humorous story is told of a man who built for himself a house, vainly attempting to make it perfect in all appointments. Soon after he had taken possession he informed all who asked "How he liked his new home?" that it was a failure as there was no place to locate the coffee mill, "But, said they, "Can you not invent a place?" "No," he gloomily replied, "I shall try again, locate my coffee mill and build around it. In like manner, I would in building separate homes locate my comfort room and build around it. I know of one sensible mother in Worcester who having no other room for her boys has taken her parlor and fitted it up for their comfort and pleasure. Such a mother deserves the best of sons and she has them.

Home is a place for health. There is perhaps nothing more indispensable to human happiness and yet more frequently disregarded in human strivings than the attainment of vigorous physical health. We should seek for good drainage, ventilation, pure water, the best plumbing, plenty of sunlight. Do we generally obtain these in tenement houses and co-operative establishments?

Does not contagion increase disease in them? How much anxiety a mother suffers when a case of scarlet fever or diphtheria appears in such houses. From a physical standpoint what miserable, unhealthy lives are generated in the seldom renewed and dead air of tenements. Take any flat in a tenement house of those who are well-to-do or in that of the working man or woman. Is not the living room, the room where all meet during waking hours, open to the sleeping rooms? How often is the dead air renewed by an open window? Of an evening you will find at least seven or eight people in one of these small rooms, who with a lamp and stove soon exhaust the oxygen. Are these rooms ventilated before retiring for the night? We doubt if one out of a hundred persons, has the wisdom and energy to renew the air; drowsy and demoralized by the impure atmosphere, they go to bed and breathe this poison, waking to find themselves unrefreshed. Much more helpful than Koch's lymph would be the pure fresh air of heaven in our sleeping rooms, a sure preventive of consumption, which no doubt is so prevalent in New England as the result of crowding human beings in poorly ventilated rooms.

How much better chance of a life worth living has the occupant of a home, no matter how plain its appointments; the simple, but fresh room above the first floor unused till bedtime, sweetened and purified all day by the sun and air?

Home is a place for love and happiness.

Love lies not only at the root of all social happiness but is the main source of the true growth of principle. There must be love in the home. Here rights are not measured out by rule but warmly and freely conceded to all. Respect and esteem will not of themselves hold families in unison. Love alone can interpret the needs of humanity in its closest ties.

How tedious and insipid is a continuous series of social interview where the parties are held together only by the bonds of etiquette. Love is the vital life of the family and thrives best in the privacy of a separate home. In its sacred quiet, love, patience and hope can be faithfully tried to help the erring or wayward one. Noble as is the spirit of philanthropy, it cannot solve the problems of life that come to the mother and father. The family is the most precious and sacred of all human associations not only in the private happiness and opportunities it affords to its members, but also in its purifying and elevating influence upon the whole community. A family will think more of one another and grow in affectionate care for each other if their interests are united. This is scarcely possible in the tenement house. There are constantly things presented that detract from home interests. We are all aware how summer boarders seldom move but in a crowd; solitude or privacy is next to an impossibility. They form cliques, and cliques separate families. Cards, gossip, and idleness are the result. This may do for a summer life or a change but not for life, all the year round. It is impossible for that which is highest and best in the individual to grow in such an environment.

Home is a place for culture. Dr. Stanley Hall says: "There is one thing in nature and one alone, fit to inspire all true men and women with more awe and reverence than 'Kent's starry heavens' and that is the soul and body of the healthy, young child. On its right development depends the entire future of civilization two or three decades hence." Our young girls and boys are in that stage of life when like wax they take the impressions of their surroundings. Can the attention given to dress, to outward beauty, to the small talk and also the incredible waste of time in these places form a noble type of character? What does a girl learn of domestic life in the co-operative or hotel? If you look for dignity of character and help in the cases of suffering that arise sooner or later in all families, there is nothing to found it upon here. A beautiful hand in this era is greatly admired, but do our girls brought up in hotels learn what a truly beautiful hand is and what it can do? Do they seek to make a beautiful hand by aiding the weak, the old, the helpless? By soothing pain or providing nourishment for a weary, over-worked father or mother? Are they taught here, to watch by the sick couch of dear ones using the truly beautiful hand in tender attentions, ready to clasp fearlessly and lovingly the hand of the dying till it vanishes forever in the valley of the shadow of death? Are they learning that unselfish thought for the loved ones of their family circle that is in itself a priceless education? Do boys in tenement houses love to read and study at home and gather with the family around the evening lamp? This is a beautiful and sacred hour in their lives but I fear you will seldom find them here. The room is wanted for callers: "Boys are so noisy and always such a bother," some thoughtless one says and feeling themselves in the way they seek a cold, unused corner of the tenement, with other boys who have also been routed from their parlors, and play cards or stand on the street corners losing their best opportunities for a refined and moral training.

Can a club or the Young Mens Christian Association take the place of home culture? With the highest appreciation of their grand work we know they do not.

What a happy time for culture in the home is that spent at the table; here where all meet with father and mother for leaders and sympathizers, what delightful conversations and free interchange of thought. Does one so enjoy the table of the co-operative? It has the glare of publicity, and truth and real thought do not thrive in such a glittering atmosphere.

Can we not give this question our earnest attention? Do you not feel a solemn responsibility for the future of this beautiful city? The prosperous immigrants are building up blocks and filling them with families who have many children in our public schools; out of these tenements will come our future teachers, and business men. Will their environment produce the best class?

The enormous profits that blocks bring to their owners will prove an obstacle to the solving of this problem, but there are people in the community who hold its ultimate moral growth above their purses. Such a man is Josiah Quincy of Boston. In the year 1871, he passed a week in Philadelphia inspecting this city of homes. He spent whole days riding through narrow but neat streets where the working man has his home entirely to himself. Row after row of two and three story brick houses with pretty little yards and white marble steps, renting for, from $12 to $25 a month, he entered and looked over, to thoroughly understand the problem of homes of this class. As a result, Boston has by its efficient railroads made many a comfortable abiding place in its suburbs for separate family life.

Is there not such a spirit of philanthropy among the wise and good here? Can we not prevent the building of tenement houses by making separate homes attractive and possible?

It is a beautiful thing to make lovely and comfortable one's own home, but it is a magnificent thing to help make it possible for the less fortunate to attain for themselves separate homes.

It is singular how we allow evils to grow, through indifference to the first duty of the hour. Earnest searching into this question will awaken not only your interest but your pity and alarm. In our Public Library are two valuable little books said to be the best authority for solving this problem. They were written by the late Edmund Wrigley of Philadelphia. One is "The Working Man's Way to Wealth," the other is on "Building Associations." Telling clearly how the middle class can build and own their own homes with the money they pay out year after year for rent. There is plenty of land on the outskirts of Worcester to be reached by the working man from mill or shop in less than twenty minutes walk or ten minutes ride. In Philadelphia the laborer rides an hour sometimes to reach his home, but when there, he is monarch and can close his own door on the noisy world and rest.

Lines

On the Death of J. Lyman Barnes.

Once more from the dear old homestead,
Comes a sound of wailing and woe,
And my heart goes out to those who weep
As it did in the long ago.

The husband and father is gone,
Oh! merciless, merciless death
To touch his brow with your icy calm,
And still his loved voice with your breath.

His life was so quiet and true
It seemed like a strong steady light,
And now it has gone out forever
And our souls are unshrouded in night.

Gone out! No! the earth life has faded
But the true life begins for him now,
His soul has commenced its unfolding
With the white seal of God on his brow.

Oh! friend in that beautiful city
With the mists rolled forever away,
You know now that life is eternal
And that death means eternity's day.

You know now the knowledge we long for,
The wisdom our spirits here crave;
Tho' denied our souls here in the earth life
As won through the gates of the grave.

With your children's hands clasped in your own
The question is answered forever,
"Do we meet our beloved again
On the shores of the beautiful river?"

Oh! whisper to hearts that are breaking,
And tell them they'll meet you on high,
Where love holds its treasures forever
And naught that is truest can die. A. M.

At the banquet of the American Protective Tariff League in New York, Thursday evening, Hon. J. H. Walker responded to the toast, "Agriculture and the Tariff. The Protective System a Farmer's Policy." Other speakers were Hon. William McKinley, Jr., of Ohio, Senator N. W. Aldrich of Rhode Island, Senator Hiscock of New York, Senator Dolph of Oregon, Hon. Robert E. Porter, superintendent of the census, Hon. W. E. Curtis.

The dwellers at 25 Harvard Street were made happy, April 18, by the advent of a baby, Esther Davis, to her parents Arthur D. Putnam and wife. The mother before marriage, was Lulu F. Sawtelle. In this house are now four generations, viz, the baby, her parents, her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Otis E. Putnam, and her great-grandmother, Mrs. Davis, the aged mother of Mrs. Otis Putnam. Arthur has extra emphasis in his step as he goes to and from the store, the world seems very bright to him.

In order to get a solid, practical training in shorthand and typewriting, attend Creelman's Shorthand, located at 24 Trumbull Street. Creelman's pupils are well known as holding good positions. The graduates of this school readily find good places, inquire and see if this is not true. Mr. E. N. Miner, editor Phonographic World, New York, says: "Mr. Creelman has proven himself one of the most successful teachers of shorthand in the East."

Old and New Worcester were very pleasantly mingled in the recent singing in the English Worcester of Miss E. Cassandranason from the American city. It was on the 14th of April and her work was in the oratorio, Judith. Taking the leading rôle, she achieved a decided triumph. It is very pleasant to note this drawing together the old and the new.

J. A. Long

THE 'Oulton' Sofa Bed.

AN ELEGANT SOFA!

A LUXURIOUS BED!

SIMPLE IN CONSTRUCTION!

EASILY OPERATED!

We Furnish them, Made to Order,

$35 to $90.

OUR INDUCEMENT

FOR THE WEEK.

TWELVE

Solid Oak Chamber Sets,

in Old English, XIV Century, and Antique—large Bureaus and Bevel Mirrors, fine Polish Finish. They are good, honest $50 Sets. Our Price this week, $37.75.

OLD * ENGLISH * SETS,

Long Cheval Mirrors, special price this week,

$29.50.

J. A. LONG,

Franklin Square

FURNITURE ROOMS,

555 * MAIN * STREET.

Fashion.

If you are a business woman, choose a black serge for your "gown de resistance" and if that is too heavy for summer, you will find a plain black challie light, serviceable, and unobtrusive, three desirable qualifications for a business woman's gowns. If you delight in bright colors and luxurious materials, this advice will appear to deprive you of a pleasure, but in your homes, after the day's work is done you can don the teagown of softest, brightest silk in which your soul delights, and forget the cares and responsibilities associated with the more somber garments. For traveling, a cheviot or serge will be found serviceable, especially for long journeys. While rough eff cts, mixed and bourette camel's hair and cheviots are favorites, fine light cloth is liked and almost invariably a small amount of white cloth embroidered in gold is very effectively combined with it.

Black india silk is so popular this spring that dresses of it are made for little girls to be worn with full blouses of fine white lawn or embroidery. This style is likely to be as popular for girls as the velvet suits and Vandyke collars are for boys.

The watch is surely making itself quite at home in all sorts of convenient places. We now find the leather card-cases with watches in one corner. Surely this is a sensible fad, for it may aid one in timing calls to their proper limit.

Low heeled common sense shoes are the most fashionable. A novelty in misses' boots is made with morocco lowers and glove-kid uppers, the tops being very high. Black shoes only are permissible this season for street wear. Fancy pins for the hair are worn more than ever. Very elegant ones are made of tortoise-shell and gold; some have twisted gold prongs and are topped with a carved piece of shell. Gold prongs with tops of cut amber are fascinating ornaments for blonde hair. M. R. R.

One of the most novel of the coming street costumes for early spring has row after row of exceedingly narrow feather bands over very fine camel's hair, these bands being laid flat and covering the waist, sleeves, and sides, extending down so as to form on the fabric the shape of the Louis Quinze coat, a shape whose popularity is steadily on the increase.

The peculiar style of some of the military coats consists in the perfectly trim fit of the chest and shoulders, consequently they are slightly padded. Princesse coats of extra length are being made by fashionable modistes for demi-toilet wear, and for dinner uses. They are completed with a vest and ruffle of rich lace in Louis Quatorze fashion.

The simple village maidens style will be the prevailing one, and any bright cheeked fresh faced girl can make it a very becoming one.

The puffed sleeve is certainly one of the prettiest and also the most appropriate for all sorts of thin fabrics.

The neck of gowns made in thin fabrics has either the gentle pointed effect of last season or the round neck, the latter being most becoming to youthful faces.

Heaven never defaults. The wicked are sure of their wages sooner or later.—Chapin.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H. Howland, D. D. S.

Dentists.

11 Pleasant St.,

Worcester, Mass

Residence, 61 West Street.

PREMIER SAFETY BICYCLES.

Not because they are English but because they are Best.

JOHN A. LOWE, Agent, 630 Main Street.

The Readers of Light
I most cordially invite
To call at my

Model Drug Store

When in want of anything
They would expect to find

In a metropolitan establishment of its kind.

Respectfully,

Geo. E. Fairbanks, Druggist,

10 FRONT STREET.

W. H. TWICHELL,

Gold, Silver and Nicke.
Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechanic St., Worcester, Mass.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,

BOOK * BINDING * BOOKS

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES

at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,

W. L. BROWN, Manager.

ORDER NOW

and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than at

EVANS & COMPANY,

Manufacturers of

Fine Monumental Work,

131 Central Street,

near Summer.

W. A. ENGLAND,

DEALER IN

FINE WATCHES,
CLOCKS, JEWELRY
& OPTICAL GOODS.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.

394 Main Street.

ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING

Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,

Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.

Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold
on commission.

MRS. S. M. KEYES.

“Bird’s-Eye
VIEW OF THE WORLD.”

For particulars see “Books and Bookmen,” and address the Agent, Mr. H. E. Gould, care of V. M. C. A.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE

permanently eradicated by the

ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,

92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

Good to Eat.

Spring appetites need coaxing, especially at breakfast. Little anchovies, soaked over night in olive oil, drained in the morning and put on tiny slices of buttered toast into a hot oven long enough to thoroughly heat through, are refreshing, especially when served with chilled watercress and tiny radishes buried in cracked ice.

For a luncheon dish cut six large tomatoes and two small green peppers into thick slices. Put butter the size of an egg into a hot gratin dish and when melted add the tomatoes and peppers. Simmer for an hour, or until thoroughly cooked; then drop enough eggs to cover the tomatoes and peppers; dust with a little salt and pepper and put the dish into the oven long enough to set the eggs nicely. Quick Buckwheat Cakes.

Sift two cupfuls of buckwheat flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt and tablespoonful of sugar. When ready to bake add cold water enough to make a rather thin batter.

In answer to a correspondent' crystalized oranges are prepared thus: Peel and quarter the oranges. Make a syrup of one pound sugar and one pint of water. Let this boil, without stirring, until it forms like candy round the edges of the tin. Then dip the bits of orange in this and let them drain. Keep them where it is warm and the candied syrup will become crystalized.

The nutritive quality of beans remains undisputed, but even the time-honored baked beans must be carefully prepared, or they will play sad havoc with the strongest digestion. The beans should be soaked over night. In the morning stand them upon the stove, and let them boil slowly until nearly soft. Add a tablespoonful of molasses, a teaspoonful of salt, and a pinch of soda; then stand the pot, which should be of earthenware, in a moderate oven. Five hours latter they will be ready for the table, and we are quite sure that all who partake of them will pronounce them far more appetizing without the great piece of fat pork that forms the center-piece in the New England bean-pot. Delicious Peanut Candy.

Shell your peanuts and chop them fine: measure them in a cup and take just the same quantity of granulated sugar as you have peanuts. Put the sugar in a skillet or spider on the fire, and keep moving the skillet around until the sugar is dissolved; then put in the peanuts and pour into buttered tins. This is delicious, and so quickly made.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Fruit Cake.

The secret of success in making a fruit cake, according to my experience, is not in the proportion of the ingredients, but in the manner of mixing. Any cake recipe known to be good can be used, if a cup of strong coffee be substituted for sweet milk. The flour being sifted, the fruit and spices prepared mix well together all the fruit, spices, and flour needed for the cake. Then proceed to follow the directions of your recipe, using the mixture of fruit, spices, and flour when “flour” is mentioned. S. E. M.

J. W. GREENE,
PLUMBER.

Dealer in Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces. Steam and Gas Fitting. Jobbing in all its branches promptly attended to. Telephone Connection. 51 Main Street, Cumming's block.

BICYCLES.

Agency for
Standard Wheels.

195 FRONT ST.

L. J. ZAHONYI,

Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

STARKIE'S DYE HOUSE,

12 Layard Place, (Old Stand,) Worcester.

Ladies and Gents' Garments

DYED * AND * CLEA * SED

in a Superior Manner.

Harness and Saddlery,

RELIABLE GOODS
and LOWEST PRICES.

R. McALEER & CO.,

155 MAIN STREET.

PHOTOGRAPHER
*****

Children's
Portraits
A Specialty

326 Main, op. Mechanics Hall

F. S. BLANCHARD & CO.,

* PRINTERS. ***

Book, Newspaper, Catalogue, Church, Society, Wedding and Commercial Printing of every kind executed in the best modern style.

No orders too large; none too small.

154 FRONT ST.

Horace Kendall,

DEALER IN

Furniture, Ranges, Carpets

AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Goods sold on instalments if desired. Prices
as low as any house in New England.

No. 319 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Mechanics Hall Building.

FURNITURE AND CARPETS,

355 Main Street, Worcester.

Baby Carriages

Our styles the best, and you will not find any like them in any other store in the city. Carriages, $10 $12, $16, and upwards.

Eddy Refrigerators.

The best in the world. 1847—Established 44 years—1891.

These Refrigerators have every possible improvement, and are the MOST ECONOMICAL USERS OF ICE. They have DOUBLE COVERS. Don't buy a single cover Refrigerator, unless you want large ice bills. PRICES REASONABLE.

One hundred Ladies' Folding Work Tables, marked down from $2 to 1.25. These are a first class Table, hard wood and polish-ed top, and sold to close at 75c discount from regular price.

Goods sold on four months' time at cash prices

PINKHAM & WILLIS,

355 MAIN ST.

From "Jacking Deer."

BY GEORGE MC ALEER.

"Jack soon finds his old dugout and we paddled across the neck of the lake to a little higher land. Pushing back fifty yards from the shore we come to a boulder upon which we are glad to drop our weary bodies, and oh! was eider down ever so restful?"

No fire must be made—not a word uttered. There in the solitude of the night, buried in the depth of the forest, miles away from human habitation, a cold drizzly rain beating down, without other shelter than the tree-tops, devoid indeed must he be of all sentiment who does not think thoughts and experience feelings such as can come to man nowhere else, and who does not realize more forcibly than ever before what the companionship of man means and the whisperings that come to him from the God of solitude!

Time soon wears away and Jack whispers that we had better start out. I tell him to go down to the canoe and rig up the jack and I will be down in a few minutes. I am so overcome with fatigue that I drop off to sleep, and the next I know Jack is shaking me and saying everything is ready. If I ever wanted to do a thing that I didn't do, it was to sit right there and let the deer disport themselves unmolested. I was about to tell Jack to go out and do what he could alone, and I would stay where I was, but, arousing myself with the thought that I had come hundreds of miles for just such an opportunity, and that I had this day undergone such toil and inconvenience, and now at the eleventh hour I would not give it up!

And so with an effort I gathered myself up and soon I was behind the jack in the bow of the canoe. Sensation, unprecedented and nowhere else to be found! The canoe gliding over the water like a sentient thing, not a tremor felt from its propulsion, not a swish or ripple from the paddle, and but for seeing against the horizon tree-top and mountain passing, no realization of motion or advance; on all sides the stillness of the death chamber or tomb, when, lo! two living, burning diamonds there in the darkness! Are they twenty, fifty or two hundred yards away? The jack is put dead on and the canoe makes noiseless advance. Lightning and thunder belch forth from out the darkness, and is echoed and re-echoed with startling reverberation from mountain top to mountain top.

"That is our meat! Well done, sir, well done! A capital shot."

"And how do you know it is our meat, Jack?"

"Because you would hear him crashing through the brush if you missed or only wounded him, sir."

Landing is made, and not fifty yards away, on the grassy bog, lies my first buck breathing his last. He weighed two hundred and forty pounds, and carried a beautiful set of antlers with five prongs. With considerable toil we landed him at the place of our departure, all fatigue and sleepiness having departed.

"Now, Jack, for a fire and a snack."

"All right if you say so, sir, but I think in the course of an hour we could get another one, and I would like to beat that Spider River party!"

"I am agreeable, Jack," said I, admiring his gaminess, as down we sat in the darkness.

In about three-quarters of an hour he whispered that he could not stand it much longer, and as we were wet with perspiration and the night was getting decidedly cold, I was very glad of the opportunity to say that I did not care if we did not go out again. But Jack's pride was up and he wanted, if possible, to beat his rival guide. So out we sallied, and not more than one hundred yards beyond the scene of our first adventure I dropped the second buck in his tracks. He weighed a little over two hundred pounds.

"There, Jack, that is beyond my expectations, and fifty dollars would not tempt me to kill another buck tonight."

White birch was soon cut, a dash of kerosene oil thrown over it, and soon a roaring camp fire was throwing out its warmth and lending an added charm to the scene. Hard-tack, cheese and hot coffee regaled and refreshed the inner man. A hastily constructed lean-to and bough bed soon materialized, upon which two fatigued, contented hunters soundly slept."—Amateur Sportsman, April, '91.

The fifth convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of Worcester County was held yesterday at Blackstone, under the auspices of the St. John's Total Abstinence Society of Blackstone and the St. Augustine's Society of Millville. Papers were read by John J. Boland of Blackstone, M. J. Kelley of Clinton, Bennet E. Cusick of Blackstone, P. J. Dooley of Clinton, Richard O'Flynn of Worcester, Michael O'Rourke of Worcester, Rupert H. Murray of Cordaville and John F. H. Mellen of Worcester. The officers of the Union are John E. Hanley of this city, president; James B. O'Brien, Fitchburg, vice-president; M. J. Kelley, Clinton, second vice-president; P. F. Drohan, Worcester, secretary; Lawrence Fury, Clinton, treasurer. Richard H. Mooney of this city is Union lecturer.

Rev. F. A. Gray, pastor of All Souls Universalist Church will preach at Tufts College, tomorrow.

Rev. Thos. J. Conaty was one of the principal speakers in a great temperance meeting in Syracuse last Saturday night.

County Treasurer Edward A. Brown, after a spell of retirement on account of a severe cold, has again resumed his duties.

Lieut. M. D. Cronin, of the Regular Army, is visiting his old home for the first time in four years. With his High School and Holy Cross associations his two months absence from duty will be well taken up.

H. Dike Sleeper of this city, a son of the Rev. W. T. Sleeper, having completed his studies in the Hartford Theological School has been appointed to the directorship of music in Beloit College, Wisconsin. As a boy in the High School and Academy and as a student in Harvard he is well known in Worcester. He has long had a musical reputation having studied with B. D. Allen. In Harvard he was a member of the Glee Club, and was the compiler of "Songs of Harvard."

BLOOMINGDALE * NURSERIES, City Delivery.

TREES, VINES and PLANTS

Taken from the Soil and Delivered at Your Own Door. Stock purchased by Our Patrons within the City Limits will be Delivered at their Residence Without Charge.

"HERE WE GO."

The remarkable success that has attended the transplanting of Nursery Stock taken from these grounds during the last twenty-five years is due, in a large measure, to the care exercised in protecting the root from the sun and wind, both in the digging in the nursery grounds and in transit to their places of destination. Not only is the greatest care taken in packing in bales or boxes for distant transportation, but in our city delivery every precaution is taken to so protect the roots that they will reach our customers in as fresh a condition as when taken from the nursery row.

My New Illustrated and Descriptive Catalogue

Of 80 pages, has been prepared with much care and at great expense, and is now ready for distribution. It will be mailed free on application.

As a Guide to Horticulture.

The information to be gathered by a careful perusal of this catalogue, and especially noting the hints upon soil preparation, planting, and care of trees, which will be found in their proper places, we feel confident will be found worthy of your careful consideration. They are the results of years of constant and devoted study, hard labor and costly experiment, and although much of this experience has been dearly bought, we now tender it freely to others who are interested in Horticulture, that our life-long devotion to this work may not prove wholly fruitless.

The Nursery Grounds.

Parties wishing to visit the Nursery Grounds can take the cars of the Worcester & Shrewsbury Railroad, that leave their station (east side of the Union Passenger Station) hourly, passing near the Grounds, and stopping at Draper's Station, by notifying the conductor.

Telephone, 17-6.

JAMES DRAPER, Proprietor.

Base Ball.

Already we hear from some Base Ball cranks, complaints that the club which represents Worcester is not a first-class one. To such we would say, the men who compose the Worcesters are not paid as first-class men. On the contrary they are paid very small salaries as compared with the teams which represent the National League and Association cities, and why should they be expected to put up as fine a game as their high salaried brothers. The Worcesters, in their class, are a fine lot of players, and if encouragement, instead of nagging is given them, they will play ball equal to any of the New England League teams and will land Worcester well in the front at the end of the season.

Any lover of the national game who delights to see a game played for all it is worth, let him attend a game played between two college teams. There may be errors, there may be few fine plays, but what is lacking from a scientific point of view, is fully made up in enthusiasm—and any lover of the game cannot but enter into the sport even if he be a stranger to the teams. Such enthusiasm we, here in Worcester, have a chance to see and hear whenever Holy Cross comes off victorious. That is all right boys. Win games, make a noise, and let people know that you are alive. We were boys once ourselves and took delight in doing just what you are doing.

Conversation overheard on one of our streets the other day.

"Say Johnnie, where can we go for a game of ball?" "I dunno, the cops will be after us, if we play here in the street." "Well, by George! it is pretty hard luck, when fellers with a good ball and bat can't get a place to play."

We agree with you my boy; it is hard times that you have no place to play. Why don't all the boys in the city club together and go to the mayor in a body, and demand some place where they can play unmolested, without fear of a momentary raid by the police. Such an uprising on the part of young America many years ago, was successful in Boston in securing for themselves a place to slide. Why not try for a place to play ball here. The experiment is worth trying.

Candidates for the Tech Ball team are practicing daily and it is expected that from the large number striving for the honor of a place on the nine, a team can be selected that will make all competitors hustle. The coming game with the Cambridge boys is arousing no little enthusiasm and a good game may be expected. Success to you boys on the hill.

The Boston League team is putting up as fine a game of ball as was ever seen in this country. Their playing is like clock work. The petty jealousies that have existed heretofore seem to have disappeared and the result is they are winning game after game. A team to play successful ball must play as a unit and not as nine individuals. Capt. Nash seems to have complete control as well as the good will of his men.

The $10,000 Kelly is having extremely hard luck with his aggregation of ball tossers in Cincinnati. With him as a leader, there is no wonder that his men go wrong—for he is all wrong himself.

Thursday, the season of '91 of the New England League opened with a game between the home nine and the Portlands on the Grove Street grounds. About 1200 people were there to see the send off. Among them were Mayor Harrington, Aldermen Ely, Thayer and others of the city government. The Portlands showed up in very poor form and their pitchers were batted all over the lot. The Worcesters started in with a rush, getting six runs the first innings and continued getting them until nineteen had been rolled up. The Portlands were able to score but eight times.

Art Students' Club.

The exhibition at the rooms of the Art Students' Club closed last night and the sketching classes will be renewed this afternoon and Monday evening.

Several of the pictures in the exhibition have been sold.

The regular monthly meeting will be held Monday evening at 7.30.

J. M. Stone's "Summer Dream" which was exhibited here during the first week in March now occupies a post of honor at the exhibition which is being held in the National Academy of Design in New York. It is attracting much attention and has received high praise from some of the best artists.

During the week commencing May 18, Mr. J. H. Greenwood will give an exhibition of his paintings in the Art Students' Rooms. Mr. Greenwood is a local artist of high standing, his pictures being received in exhibitions in other cities.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s New Books.

James Freeman Clarke.

Autobiography, Diary and Correspondence, with a chapter on his Anti-Slavery work by Rev. SAMUEL MAY. Edited and Supplemented by EDWARD FAIRBANKS HALL, D. D. With a steel Portrait. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

A very interesting book on one of the wisest and most public spirited of Americans.

Life of Longfellow.

With Extracts from his Journals and Correspondence. By SAMUEL LONGFELLOW. With seven Portraits, and other illustrations. New Edition, rearranged in chronological order. 3 vols. crown 8vo, gilt top, $6.00.

The Odyssey of Homer.

Translated into English Rhythmic Prose. By GEORGE H. PALMER, Professor in Harvard University. 1 vol. crown 8vo, $2.00.

This volume contains the entire Odyssey, translated with singular fidelity to the original and rare beauty of form.

A Handbook of Christian Symbols and Stories of the Saints as Illustrated in Art.

By CLARA ERSKINE CLEMENT. Edited by KATHERINE E. CONWAY. With many full-page Illustrations. New Edition. Crown 8vo, $2.00.

Japanese Girls and Women.

By Alice M. Bacon. $1.25.

Miss Bacon has enjoyed exceptional advantages for learning of Japanese domestic life.

Ballou's Alaska.

Tourists' Edition, describing the places tourists would naturally visit, and giving a great deal of desirable information. 4 maps, $1.00.

King's Chapel Sermons.

By A. P. PEABODY, D. D. Crown 8vo, $1.50.

A volume of discourses singularly elevated in spirit, vigorous and rich in thought, and rising above sectarian limitations.

Two Coronets.

An excellent Novel of New England and Italy. By MARY AGNES TINSCKER, author of "Signor Monaldini's Niece." Paper, 50 cents.

Library Additions.

A part of the books added to the Free Public Library during the month of March.

[The remainder of the list will be published next week.]

- ABDY, J. T. Feudalism; its rise, progress and consequences - - - - 33778
- ANDREWS, W. Curiosities of the Church - - - - - 33779
- ASHTON, J. Social England under the Regency, 2 vols. - - - - 33780 1
- BACH, A. B. The art ballad; Loewe and Schubert - - - - - 33782
- BENNETT, C. The modern malady; or sufferers from "nerves" - - - 33783
- BLANFORD, H. F. Elementary geography of India, Burmah and Ceylon - - - - - 33775
- BRIGHTWELL, E. Wild nature won by kindness, 2nd edition - - - - 33784
- CARTWRIGHT, F. L. Olga Zanelli; tale of an imperial city, 3 vols. - 33785-7
- CHAMBERLAIN, B. H. Things Japanese - - - - - 33778
- COLERIDGE, C. R. Jack O'Lantern, 2 vols. - - - - - 33789-90
- COCHRANE, T. 10th Earl of Dundonald. Autobiography of a seaman - 33791
- FOX, J. A. Key to the Irish question - 33792
- GERARD, D. Recha - - - - - 33793
- GOULD, S. B. Jacquetta, and other stories - - - - - 33794
- Arminell; a social romance, 3 vols. - - - - - 33795-7
- HARRIS, E. M. Lady Dobbs, 2 vols. - 33798-9
- HOPKINS, T. The Nugents of Carriconna, an Irish story - - - - - 33776
- HUNGERFORD, F. R. British difficulties under solution - - - - - 33800
- JACOBS, J. English fairy tales - - - 33801
- JAMES, SIR H. Work of the Irish Leagues; speech in Parnell commission inquiry - - - - - 33802
- JONES, E. E. C. Elements of logic, as a science of propositions - - - 33803
- LAFFAN, MRS. R. S. DE C. (ps. Mrs. Leith-Adams) Louis Draycott, 2 vols. - - - - - 33804-5
- MABIE, H. W. My Study Fire - - - 33777
- MACDONNELL, A. A. Camping voyages on German rivers - - - - 33806
- M'CARNEY, J. and PRAED, MRS. C. The Rival Princess - - - - - 33807
- MACKAY, A. J. G. Sketch of the history of Fife and Kinross - - - - 33808
- MAJENDIE, LADY M. Past forgiveness, 2 vols. - - - - - 33809-10
- MALLESON, COL. G. B. Rulers of India: Dupleix - - - - - 33811
- MOLL, A. Hypnotism. (Contemp. sci. ser.) - - - - - 33812
- MORELL, J. D. Introduction to mental philosophy on the inductive method - - - - - 33813
- MURRAY, D. C. and HERMAN, H. The Bishop's Bible, a novel, 3 vols. - 33814-6
- MURRAY, D. C. John Vale's Guardian, 3 vols. - - - - - 33817-9
- OLIPHANT, M. O. W. The Duke's Daughter and the Fugitives, 3 vols. - 33820 2
- ROGERS, W. T. Manual of Bibliography - - - - - 33823
- ROMANOFF, H. C. Sketches of the

- rites and customs of the Greco-Russian Church - - - - - 33824
- RYLAND, F. Chronological outlines of English literature - - - - - 32825
- SCHUMAN, R. Life of S. told in his letters; tr. by M. Herbert, 2 vols. - 33826-7
- SCOTT, C. Blossom Land and Fallen Leaves 2nd edition - - - - - 33828
- STEVENSON, E. Early Reviews of great writers, 1786-1832 - - - - 33829
- STUART, G. H. Life, written by himself; ed. by R. E. Thompson - - - 33830
- SYMES, J. E. Prelude to modern history - - - - - 33831
- WALKER, B. My musical experiences - 33832
- WATKINS, H. W. Modern criticism in its relation to the Fourth Gospel - 33833

Books and Bookmen.

It is said that after much wandering among publishers, Miss Sewell, the writer of Black Beauty, succeeded in getting just $50 for it. The sale has been 200,000 copies in England alone and now the English publisher is complaining because of American piracy in the printing of the book here. In as much as the author died several years since and never received more than the stated sum, it is difficult to see where sympathy is due.

I wonder if the sap is stirring yet,
If wintry birds are dreaming of a mate,
If frozen snowdrops feel as yet the sun
And crocus fires are kindling, one by one.

How empty learning and how vain is Art
But as it mends the life and guides the heart.
—Young.

And what if all our lives were filled
With brave, unselfish, loving deeds?
Would not love's incense thus distilled
Bear holier fruit than rites and creeds?

We may not stem the ocean wave,
We may not reach our wished-for goal,
But little deeds of love may save,
To hope and life, perhaps, a soul.

—M. A. Burdick.

SALEM STREET CHURCH

Course * of * Entertainments.

FRIDAY, MAY 8—Lecture by

REV. I. J. LANSING.

Subject:

"Around the Fire of a Hunter's Camp."

The Lecture consists of reminiscences of Mr. Lansing's vacations spent in the Adirondacks.

ADMISSION, 25 CENTS.

Rah-rah! Rah-rah! Rah-rah!

* CONCERT *

BY BROWN UNIVERSITY GLEE, BANJO and MANDOLIN CLUB.

25 MEN. 25

Association Hall, Elm Street, Thursday Evening, May 14, '91, at 8 o'clock.

Tickets with the best Reserved Seat, 50c., at S. R. Leland & Son's on and after May 7, '91.

* For sale by all Booksellers. Sent, post paid, on receipt of price by the publishers.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

Smith's

Dress Goods.

That unusual offering in Dress Goods has created a decided sensation, and why not? It isn't every day that you can get $2 and $2.50 Scotch Novelty Plaids and Stripes for 95c. That is what the crowd around the dress goods counters has been after the past two or three days. 18 styles; 95c. a yard.

EDW. L. SMITH & CO.,
401 and 403 Main Street,
Walker Building, Cor. Mechanic.

NEW YORK

Dry Goods Store,

234 and 238 Main St.

GREAT

Clearing-Out Sale

—OF—

DRESS GOODS, LADIES', MISSES' and CHILDREN'S GARMENTS and LADIES' COTTON UNDERWEAR.

Z. F. Little & Co.,

234 and 238 MAIN ST.

About Folks.

The next meeting of the Worcester Art Society will be held in the Art Students' Rooms, Walker building, next Tuesday evening. Miss Means of Andover will lecture on "Celtic Crosses."

Lieut. C. F. Bigelow is to move into the house on Cedar Street formerly occupied by E. E. Longley. George F. Hewitt, Mr. Bigelow's father-in-law, now owns the house.

Altheia's Gift.

That was the merriest party possible that gathered at the home of ex-High School Janitor Newton, on the evening of April 24. The girls had come to show their regard for Mr. Newton by their presence and by the gift of a very beautiful engraving of the Exile Pilgrims which they had brought with them from the Davis Art Company. Miss Anna Curtis in appropriate words made the presentation and Mr. Newton, who had been so surprised that he had nearly lost the power of speech, finally got his wits together and feelingly responded. The girls who made up the party were as follows: Misses Aggie Aldrich, Annie Barnard, Elizabeth Boyd, Ada Carter, Clara Chapin, Anna Curtis, Margarette Dickinson, Alice Foster, Alice Gates, Helen Greenwood, Carrie Hale, Clara Harrington, Ethel Howard, Florence Keith, Ada Leland, Etta Mathews, Grace Morse, Edith Perry, Ruth Pettit, Florence Syvret, Iva Smith, Lulu Smith and Ina Sprague.

Just after the presentation, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred S. Roe were announced, who with the families of Mr. and Mrs. Newton's children with grandchildren, Arthur and Gardner R. Kennedy, made up the evening's party. Like all enjoyable occasions, there was very little ceremony but everyone had a delightful time. Mr. and Mrs. George R. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. George H. and Charles R. Clemence and Mr. and Mrs. Harry W. Marsh, by their thoughtful attention, added no little to the evening's pleasures. After the serving of refreshments the girls gave evidence of their schooling by recitations, singing and piano playing. Those thus favoring others were Misses Dickinson, Mathews, Keith, Morse, Hall, Boyd, Syvret and Pettit. Miss Aileen Kennedy also sang most beautifully an excellent selection.

Everything had a decided High School flavor for nearly all the married folks had been connected with the school in some way. During the day, Mr. Newton had been the victim of an accident in his work and, otherwise, would have thought himself a pretty thoroughly used up man but he declared the visit a better repairer of damages than any liniment possible. Not the least enjoyable exercise was his own recitation of a letter learned long ago.

Jock was there and was early ornamented with certain High School ribbons, and he was happiness itself. He always did have a taste for cake and on this evening he must have filled himself to satiety. The evening was a glorious one with which to begin the week's vacation.

The Worcester Typotheta will hold their first annual banquet at the Lincoln House Tuesday evening, May 12.

Bigelow & Longley

COR. MAIN and ELM STS.

SPRINGTIME HAS COME.

Spring OVERCOATS are Wanted.
Spring Overcoats are HERE.

FORTY DIFFERENT STYLES.

For Men, Youths, Boys and the children. No one is forgotten. No one will fail to be suited. No one can find anything in any other store equal in variety what will be shown HERE at the OLD RELIABLE HOUSE of Bigelow & Longley.

FORTY DIFFERENT COLORS.

Styles and colors to suit and fit every Man, Boy or Child. We challenge comparison, and invite you to come and examine the SPLENDID line.

Men's Overcoats, $5 to $25.

Youths' Overcoats, $5 to $20.

Boys' Overcoats, $3 to $10.

The men of Worcester County never in their lives saw such a magnificent stock of goods for them at the beginning of spring.

SUITS FOR EVERYBODY.

Big or little, stout or slim, we are sure to fit you. Single or Double-Breasted SUITS, 1 2, or 3-Button Cutaway, Prince Alberts or any style wanted, in light or dark colors, $6 up to $30.

FANCY VESTS of all silk, silk and wool or cashmere.

Boys' suits in flannels, yacht cloths, either single or double-breasted, $8 to $15.

BOYS' SUITS in sizes to fit ages from 13 to 18 years. All shades to suit the boys; they come in single or double breasted, in Black Cheviots and Blue Serges, $4.50 to $15.

KNEE PANT SUITS—the finest ever shown. We have a grand line in all the novelties.

The old reliable house of Bigelow & Longley can give you more for your money than a y house hat has not had 40 years' experience in the study of your wants that we have had.

Your always welcome.

Bigelow & Longley

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

Gorgeous!

The new Cotton Printed Pongees are just beautiful.

They are the newest and cutest of the summer dress goods to reach us thus far this season.

They cost so little that every lady could own half a dozen of them and not feel the expense. 12 1-2c a yard the cost.

Undine Cloth is a new charmer to win your favor. It is all wool and seems to be a combination of Crepe Cloth and Nuns' Veiling, with something like a Mohair touch and sheen.

It is 40 inches wide; is in blue, pale ecru, tans and cream.

It is very elegant for so little cost as 50c a yard.

Very attractive goods known as "Paris Novelties," always held at 75c a yard are now marked 65c.

They are 40 inches wide, and are particularly nice.

They come in the season's solid shades with dashes of red, blue, etc., to brighten them.

French India Twills are no higher this year than last.

That is to say, we charge you no more for them even though they cost us a little more to land.

We have them in the specially desirable shades of Pearl Gray, Ecru and Tans, as well as all the other regular shades, 50c a yard.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

The Week.

CITY.

April 24—Stephen Salisbury to maintain an expedition to the Galapagos Islands. Clark University to direct in the interests of science.

Various bodies pass resolutions respect to the memory of Philip L. Moen.

Hon. Jos. H. Walker speaks at Pawtucket, R. I. Also, at the same meeting, two Virginians, Messrs. Wise and Langston. One white, the other black. Truly the world advances.

The case of the Denholm estate settled. The heirs receive $271,070.14.

15—Light Infantry reaches home happy and glad. A perfect trip. Old Probabilities was on their side.

26—Pastor Conrad announces that $3,000 has been subscribed to square up shortages. Receipts now ahead of outgoes.

27—Philip L. Moen buried in Rural Cemetery. One of the most impressive obsequies ever held in the city.

Henry Flurrey falls from top of new building on Oread Street. Seriously if not fatally injured.

Charles F. Batchelder, a Worcester business man, dies in Florida. A member of Post 10, G. A. R.

Ground for the Spencer, Leicester & Worcester R. R. broken on Canterbury Street.

20—J. A. Courtmanche learns of the drowning of his son, Osa, in L'Assumption River, Quebec, yesterday.

29—Licensed liquor sellers in a ferment over certain informalities in their applications. Will try again.

A. C. Munroe elected president of local Board of Underwriters.

John M. Cunningham, 9 Winthrop Street, dies of lockjaw from injuries received at Grove Street mill. 48 years.

30—Natural History Society elects officers and indulges in a small ruction of its own.

Old South Church entertains County Convention of Christian Endeavor Societies.

Massachusetts Library Club entertained by Librarian S. S. Green.

COUNTY.

23—Petersham graduates first class from High School.

25—Deacon George W. Hastings and wife of Millbury celebrate golden wedding.

Sterling votes to buy land adjacent to Town Hall, all in the way of aiding the Village Improvement Society.

26—A. D. Chase dies in Wilkinsonville. 74 years.

George H. Harlow of Shrewsbury not expected to live.

27—Friends make a surprise party for Mr. D. E. March who is about starting for Colorado.

28—Forest fires continue to rage in Oakdale.

Rev. Moses P. Webster dies in Leominster. 81 years. An aged Methodist minister.

29—Oliver Bramman dies in Northbridge. 80 years.

30—Mrs. Adelaide W., wife of D. W. Hubbard, United States Consul at Annaberg, Germany, buried from their former residence in Grafton.

COMMONWEALTH.

24—Tremont Temple Baptists call Dr. George Lorimer from Chicago. He left Boston for Chicago, some years since.

Dr. A. A. Miner, thrown from his horse in Boston. Not seriously hurt.

Legislative Solons still considering their own salaries.

25—General Butler declares he certainly will get even with Judge Carpenter. "When Greek meets Greek then comes the tug of war." Go in General. The public is watching.

The Middlesex Club, in Boston, receives General Sewart L. Woodford and ex-Representative John S. Wise of Virginia.

26—Boston listens to the Theosophists. What an age of isms!

St. Luke's Reformed Episcopal Church dedicated in Cambridge.

Rev. Francis Bellamy leaves Bethany Baptist Church. He will take charge of a department on the Youths' Companion.

27—The Legislature acts upon the Tax Dodgers Bill i. e. reconsiders former action and orders it to third reading.

28—Great forest fire near Palmer, started by school children for fun.

23—Legislature vexes itself all day over Endowment Orders. Votes against them.

The 106th Annual Convention of the Episcopal Church convenes in Boston. It will elect a Bishop of the Diocese.

30—Rev. Phillips Brooks elected Bishop of Massachusetts Diocese.

NATION.

24—Striking Street Car men in Detroit win their fight.

Ex-Chief Justice Royce of Vermont dies. 71 years.

The President eating oranges in California.

25—The widow of J. B. Barnaby receives a bottle of whiskey from an unknown party and drinks it. Dies soon after. All this in Denver, Col.

In the Michigan Car Works, at Detroit, 2000 men go on a strike. Riotous.

In Walla Walla, U. S., soldiers lynch a murderer. Now if he should happen to be an Italian!

26—Mrs. Bettie Eaton, sister of President Harrison, seriously injured by a carriage accident at North Bend.

Anna Dickinson does not sustain her claim to sanity in her Broadway Theater speech.

Talmage's Tabernacle dedicated in Brooklyn.

27—It seems that all the Italian murderers, lynched at New Orleans, had voted. Fine citizens for sunny Italy to get frantic over.

On this, General Grant's birthday, ground for his monument is broken in New York.

28—Ex-Senator Blair of New Hampshire not acceptable as minister to China. President Harrison will have to try again.

Strike of 600 miners in Washington, Ind.

29—It is possible that ex-Senator Blair may be sent to Japan, instead of China.

Francis R. Fava, Jr., son of the former Italian minister, is seriously ill in Washington.

30—Heirs of ex-President Fillmore meet in Buffalo to divide their inheritance. They get tipsy, some of them.

Secretary Noble said to be dissatisfied with Commissioner of Pensions Green C. Raum.

WORLD.

24—Baron Von Moltke dies. 90 years.

Chilian Civil War continuing. An earthquake, down there, might shake a little sense into those fighters.

25—France does not like the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Spain.

Queen Victoria's grand-daughter becomes a member of the Greek church. In royalty, religion, like marriage, is purely a State affair.

Rome will not guarantee safety to American tourists. All the Italian murderers, it seems, have not migrated to our country.

26—France tries to keep the dead Lion Von Moltke. For shame!

At last the City of Paris is repaired and will soon leave Glasgow. Now for more ocean racing!

27—News received in New York that on the 22d inst. two Federal torpedo boats destroyed the insurgent Steamers, Blanco and Huascar. It is hoped that this will end the terrible war.

28—Von Moltke buried from Berlin with great honors.

Baron Hersch may direct the stream of penniless migrant Jews to Australia and Brazil.

29—London suffering from the grip.

A fire near Swinton, Wiltshire, renders 500 people homeless.

And again fortune changes and the Chilian Insurgents seem to be ahead.

30—The late Thos. C. Baring left the bulk of his fortune to his cousin, Baron Revelstoke, that he might fully maintain the dignity of the peerage.

Last Thursday evening about seven o'clock there was considerable excitement in George G. Fox's bakery on Pleasant Street. Mr. A. Smedley, the manager, was sitting at his desk writing when some one informed him that his thirteen bakers had struck and were assembled in the back room prepared to lay their grievances before him. Mr. Smedley was somewhat taken aback as he knew of no occasion for any trouble, but he quietly stepped out to the back room. No sooner had he appeared when Mr. James McPherson, the head baker, who had been chosen spokesman for the bakers, advanced and in a neat speech presented Mr. Smedley with a beautiful, open-face gold watch. Mr. Smedley was too surprised to respond at any length but he expressed his thanks and his appreciation of the good will which had been shown by their generous gift. Thursday was Mr. Smedley's forty-eighth birthday.

Too much praise could hardly be given the concert by the Royal Edinburgh Concert company, which took place in Association Hall last Saturday evening. The program consisted almost entirely of Scotch music. The artists were Miss Alice Steel, soprano; Miss Edith Ross, alto; Alexander Finlayson, tenor; James Fleming, bass; Charles F. Ferguson, humorist; William MacLennan, dancer and bagpipe player; M. Jules Guitton, violinist.

Westboro Letter.

Invitations are out for a "May Party" to be held in the town hall, Wednesday evening, May 6th. Brighams' Orchestra will furnish the music.

"Sancho" the fashionable bred and valuable spaniel, the property of the Misses Spurr of Parkman street passed over to the dog heaven last week.

The new fire alarm system was not in perfect operation when the box was pulled for the fire at Newton place Monday; it made a noise if it did not sound the number of the box.

Albert P. Wilson has an office with L. E. Denfeld.

Mr. Paul Bernard and his charming wife now occupy the handsome Porter estate on Church street; the house has been thoroughly renovated and refurnished and the grounds under the skillful hand of a landscape gardener of ability are fast receiving the artistic touches that gave them prominence in former years.

The M. V. Livingstone Cycle Mfg. Co. is out of the toils of litigation, and the machinery is running at full speed. Orders are being filled as fast as the machines can be turned out. The "Broncho" bucked and came very near throwing its riders. They were in a "Peck" of trouble, but Barr-ing further legal difficulties the world of wheelman "Will Reed" of the "living stone" that rolled through the embarrassing situation and gathered the moss that gladdened the hearts of the Westborough stockholders.

The new brick block now in process of erection by Reuben Boynton bids fair to be a handsome structure. It is to be three stories high the front wall running almost another story; in this will be inserted a tablet suitably inscribed. An artistic metal cornice and belts of white granite will add much to its appearance. Barker & Nourse are the architects.

Our market gardeners are in slang parlance "hustling." Hero Bros. at Wessonville, are, with a large force of men busy as bees. The Tyler Bros. at Darkest Westboro have a large force of men at work on their orchards and hot beds and will soon ship early fruits and vegetables to Worcester markets.

Mr. J. S. Nason has a new acquisition to his stable in the shape of a handsome Kentucky road horse by Sherman Hambletonian dam by a thoroughbred. He is fast and the price was long.

Gen. Sect. W. P. Porter of the Y. M. C. A. is taking a much needed vacation.

The Pearl Street store of the Davis Art Company is as entertaining as ever. At present interest centers in very choice reproductions. These are on satin or plain. There are also, colored ones and all are extremely beautiful. No one can see these without gratitude that Beauty, in the shape of Art, is thus brought within the sphere of every one, for the prices are exceedingly low. Call and talk it over with Mr. Crocker.

J. A. Long, the Franklin Square furniture dealer, has one of the finest show windows on Main street, in which can be seen all the latest designs in parlor suits and chamber sets. A perusal of Mr. Long's advertisement in another column will repay our readers.

CHARLES L. WRIGHT.

CHARLES H. WOODCOCK.

"WEST SIDE MACHINE CO.,"
Manufacturers of the improved "Wright Drill," embracing features not applied to other drills.

The "Wright Counter Shaft and Clutch," just patented. The cheapest, most positive in its action, with scarcely perceptible shock or jar, and decidedly the best device for the purpose ever in the market. Every one interested is cordially invited to come and see it. The "Woodcock Universal Door Opener." By simply pressing a button on either side of the door, it causes the door to swing open. Can be quickly and cheaply applied to any door. Must be seen to be appreciated. A Carpenter's Gauge for Hanging Doors accurately and very quickly. No carpenter can afford to be without it. "The Swivel Crotch Center." No more broken drills by work catching. Hundreds of dollars saved. "A Cuff Holder." The cheapest and best ever seen. We are prepared to make the most reasonable terms for all kinds of special machinery. Repairs promptly done and satisfaction guaranteed. Factory less than two minutes' walk from Pleasant-street cars.

No. 28 Bellevue Street, Worcester, Mass.

VOLAPÜK.

Nems patik pemekoms plo tops e fomats taledik tala. Ogivob anikis oles.

Asürän,	Assyria.
Babarän,	Barbary.
Badän,	Baden.
Basil,	Basil.
Bavän,	Bavaria.
Beljän,	Belgium.
Büsän,	Abyssinia.
Cilän,	Chili.
Cinään,	China.
Dän,	Denmark.
Deütän,	Germany.
Fikop,	Africa.
Finän,	Finland.
Flanän,	Flanders.
Flentän,	France.
Geogän,	Georgia.
Glikän,	Greece.
Grönän,	Greenland.
Güpän,	Egypt.
Jotlän,	Scotland.
Jveizän,	Switzerland.
Kadän,	Acadia.
Lagerän,	Algeria.
Lagir,	Algiers.
Lantisean,	Atlantic Ocean.
Lapän,	Lapland.
Lefiidän,	The Orient.
Lombadän,	Lombardy.
Löstän,	Austria.
Lotän,	Lorraine.
Lübän,	Lybia.
Lürän,	Illyria.
Män,	Maine.
Märän,	Moravia.
Mejikän,	Mexico.
Melop,	America.
Moblan,	Mont Blanc.
Nedän,	Holland, Netherlands.
Nelij,	England.
Nidän,	India.
Nolüdän,	The North.
Nolümelop,	North America.

The late Secretary Windom kept away from the capital when he was not in public life. Said he, just before he took his place in President Harrison's cabinet: "I have never been back to the Senate chamber since my term expired. I used to see so many ex-senators hanging around the chamber interested in some job that I resolved never to be found in their company. A man of honor can never afford to run suspicious risks." There was no man at the capital more careful of his reputation than Secretary Windom, and there are few who have had such an extended public career without being charged, justly or unjustly, with favoritism and fraud in some direction.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.
WORCESTER, SS.
PROBATE COURT.

To the Next of Kin, Creditors, and all other Persons interested in the Estate of RUTH S. RUGG, late of Sterling, in said county, deceased, intestate: Greeting. Upon the Petition of George W. Rugg of said Sterling, you are cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Worcester, in said County, on the third Tuesday of May next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased should not be granted to said petitioner, without the giving of surety or sureties on his official bond pursuant to the statute.

And the said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, three weeks successively in LIGHT, a newspaper printed at Worcester the last publication to be two days, at least, before said court, and to send, or cause to be sent, a written or printed copy of this notice, properly mailed postage prepaid, to each of the heirs, devisees, or legatees of said estate, or their legal representatives, known to the petitioner, seven days, at least, before said Court.

Witness, William T. Forbes, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-eighth day of April in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

F. W. SOUTHWICK, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.
WORCESTER, SS.
PROBATE COURT.

To the Next of Kin, Creditors, and all other Persons interested in the Estate of JOHN RILEY, late of Worcester, in said County, deceased, intestate: Greeting.

Upon the Petition of Mary Riley of said Worcester you are cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Worcester, in said County, on the third Tuesday of May next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased should not be granted to said petitioner, without the giving of surety or sureties on her official bond pursuant to the statute.

And the said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, three weeks successively, in LIGHT, a newspaper printed at Worcester, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said Court, and to send, or cause to be sent, a written or printed copy of this notice, properly mailed, postage prepaid, to each of the heirs, devisees, or legatees of said estate, or their legal representatives, known to the petitioner, seven days, at least, before said Court.

Witness, William T. Forbes, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirtieth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

F. W. SOUTHWICK, Register.

A Bird's Mistake.

Near an open window in an artist's studio, a painted panel of hollyhocks rested on an easel. Suddenly a humming bird darted into the room, and thrust his long beak—keen with anticipated delights—into the heart of a crimson flower. Neither honey nor dewy fragrance nestled there; and repulsed by the canvas the frightened bird flew wildly about the room. When quite exhausted he fluttered into a corner and rested awhile, then spread his tiny wings again and disappeared through the window. Though baffled and disappointed, he had fulfilled his mission; for the artist knew that the bird's unconscious tribute was the highest praise her work could receive. She was inspired by fresh courage to greater effort; and, in the bird's fruitless quest, found comfort for weary souls who are turned away empty from the vain pursuit of cherished desires. The richness and sweetness of possession may not be for them, but the blessedness of giving is always theirs. S. B.

GRAND SPRING SALE OF COTTON UNDERWEAR.

100 Doz. Corset Covers, four styles, marked down from 50c., your choice only 29c. each.

THIS GARMENT 25c.

THIS ONE 75c.

THIS GARMENT 75c.

THIS GARMENT 50c.

This 75c. Skirt is made of Fine Cotton, 9-inch Cambric Ruffle, Cluster Tucks in Skirt and Ruffle, very fine Skirt for 75c. This 75c. Robe is made with Mother Hubbard Yoke and Sleeves, neat fine insertions and fine cotton and edges. Boys' and Girls' Twilled Waists, only 12c. Children's Drawers, 8c., 10c., 15c., and upward. 25 Doz Skirts, with 12 inch Hamburg Flounce, that are actually worth $1.50, for $1.25. These goods are all nicely made of Good Material, Selected Embroideries. Manufactured by us for our Retail Trade.

WM. H. BURNS & CO., 498 MAIN STREET.

His Father's Old Friend.

An Introduction That Brought a Thoughtless Youth to His Senses.

"The old gentleman played a queer trick on me the other night," he said, as he lit his cigar after dinner. "It was rather awkward for me at first, but I guess it was a good thing after all."

"You know I used to feel that I had done myself an injustice if I did not go to the theater about five or six times a week. Maybe it wasn't always the theater, but if it wasn't that it was a stag party or a poker game. I needn't explain; you've been with me frequently."

"Well, you also know how I'm fixed in the line of business. I work for my father, and I have to be at the office at 8.30 in the morning, just as the rest of the family are sitting down to breakfast. In consequence I get my breakfast and leave the house before they are up. But I can't complain of that. I'm doing exactly what the man who had my place before me did, and between you and me I think I'm drawing more salary than he did."

"But that's neither here nor there. It's the evenings. I used to finish work about six, get dinner down-town and go to the theater or somewhere else. Been doing it for about six months, and I swear when I figure back about the only times that I have seen my mother and sister have been at Sunday dinners. Nothing unusual in that, of course; the same thing is true of hundreds of young men in Chicago."

"But they haven't fathers like mine. He came to me one afternoon last week and asked me if I had an engagement for that night."

"Yes," I said; "I've promised to go to the theater with Will Brown."

"How about tomorrow night," he asked.

"Haven't figured ahead that far," I replied.

"Well, I'd like to have you go somewhere with me."

"All right," I said; "where'll I meet you?"

"You see, he leaves the office about an hour before I get through."

He suggested the Tremont House at 7.30, and I was there, prepared for the theater and a quiet lecture on late hours. He had combined the two on several occasions. But when he appeared he said he wanted me to call on a lady with him.

"One I knew quite well when I was a young man," he explained.

We went out and started straight for home.

"She is stopping at the house," he said, when I spoke of it.

"I thought it strange that he should have made an appointment for the Tremont House under those circumstances, but I said nothing."

Well, we went in and I was introduced with all due formality to my mother and my sister.

The situation struck me as ludicrous and I started to laugh, but the laugh died away. None of the three even smiled. My mother and my sister shook hands with me and my mother said she remembered me as a boy, but hadn't seen me much lately. Then she invited me to be seated.

My, it wasn't a bit funny then, although I can laugh over it now. I sat down and she told one or two anecdotes of my boyhood, at which we all laughed a little. Then we four played whist for a while. When I finally retired I was courteously invited to call again. I went up stairs feeling pretty small and doing a good deal of thinking.

"And then" said his companion.

"Then I made up my mind that my mother was the most entertaining lady and my sister a good brilliant girl."

"Add now?"

"Now I'm going to call again, as I have been doing quite regularly for the last week. I enjoy their company and propose to cultivate their acquaintance."

And the young man—he was only twenty-two—put on his coat and started for his car.—Chicago Tribune.

General Palmer tells this story of Lincoln: "I was called to Washington to see Mr. Lincoln in 1865. I was shown into an anteroom and finally I was called. Mr. Lincoln was being shaved. He said I was home folks and he could shave before me. I said to him:

Mr. Lincoln, if I had supposed at the Chicago convention that nominated you that we would have this terrible war I would never have thought of going down to a one-horse town and getting a one-horse lawyer for President. I did not know how he would take it, but rather expected an answer that I could laugh at. But he brushed the barber to one side and with a solemn face turned to me and said: 'Neither would I, Palmer. I don't believe any great man with a policy could have saved the country. If I have contributed to the saving of the country it was because I attended to the duties of each day with the hope that when to-morrow came I would be equal to the duties of that day', and he turned to the barber."

ALWAYS ON HAND!

The freshest and best vegetables to be found anywhere, with all kinds of fowls and game in their seasons.

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass

EDWARD B. CLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

THE CRITERION

Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

Worcester Coal Company,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

COAL. COAL.

General office, 18 Pearl St., Y. M. C. A. Building; Yards, 23 Manchester St. and 319 Southbridge St.

Worcester Dress Cutting School,
45 Pleasant St.,

For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circular.

Mrs. L. F. Walch.

E. W. COFFIN,

Store Fixtures

370 Main Street, Worcester.

Name this Paper.

About Folks.

The afternoon dancing school of Miss Frances Lightbourn closed with an evening soiree Friday, the 24th. The march was led by Miss Sylvia Draper and Master Robert Douglas followed by nineteen couples of handsomely dressed masters and misses. At the first sound of music they entered and marched up the center of the hall to where Miss Lightbourn was standing, each couple bowing low as they passed her. This was followed by the circle, polka, waltz, Saratoga and College lancers caprice bon ton gavotte, and the zulma. The only solo was Miss Sybil Draper's dancing of the "Lullaby." Much credit is due Miss Lightbourn for the proficiency of her scholars, some of whom are quite young, this being their first season and her first reception. It was quite noticeable that all the pupils were on the floor during some part of all the round dances, proving that all scholars had received equal attention. After ten the pupils of her evening and Thursday classes and the guests were allowed the privileges of the floor and danced till midnight.

LEICESTER.

Arbor Day was not celebrated by tree planting as much as it should be. Too few public spirited citizens indorse the practical idea and suggestions of the day, by setting out at least, a tree or two. Let more trees be planted along the highway as benevolent landmarks of those men who prove themselves unselfish. It is true many of us will not live to sit beneath the shelter of the shade trees that are now planted, but we can take comfort while we remain here, those of us who plant trees. As Shenstone has remarked, "The works of a person that builds begin immediately to decay, while those of him who plants begin directly to improve." In this, planting promises a more lasting pleasure than building; which, were it to remain in equal perfection, would at least begin to moulder and want repairs in imagination. Now trees have a circumstance that suits our taste, and that is annual variety.

"Trees have about them something beautiful and attractive even to the fancy, since they cannot change their places, are witnesses of all the changes that take place around them; and as some reach a great age, they become, as it were, historical monuments, and like ourselves they have a life, growing and passing away."

Hon. C. A. Denny and wife are home again after an absence of two months at the South.

Another cold summer is predicted by the residents of Leicester, as ice is to be sold for twenty-five cents per hundred weight, for family use, when the dealers in neighboring towns can afford to supply their customers with ice for twenty cents per hundred weight for family use.

BETTINA.

May 1, 1891.

With Sodom apples fill thy harvest-bin;
Barter heart-wealth for gold in Fashion's mart;
Traverse rough seas some distant port to win,
Without a chart.

Fray the fine cord of Love until it break;
Launch thy biroque before the storm abate;
Tease the prone, sleeping Peril till it wake;
Then rail at Fate.

—Danske Dandridge.

Anidrosis

Sanitarium.

My article in LIGHT of week before last on Baths has been criticized several times and I have been somewhat severely censured because I did not particularly specify that we had every convenience for women. WELL! WE HAVE WELL DRILLED WOMEN OPERATORS, and if one trial does not convince you, your money shall be refunded in every instance. We make Rheumatism, Neuralgia, all blood diseases, Women's diseases, Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles, Nervous prostration (so called) also so called decline or general debilities, poor circulation of blood and its attendant phenomena, our specialties. We give the Improved Turkish, the Dr. Conant Compound Vapor Bath, also other Medicinal Baths, Electricity of all kinds, Galvanic and Faradic or induced current (the continuous and interrupted currents) General Massage by Expert operators, both men and women. The last given with every bath, the Electricity when indicated, all included in the bath.

We give treatment, also board and good accommodations at the Sanitarium if desired. For a sanitary bath, there is nothing better, we use an artificial protector against ATMOSPHERIC INFLUENCE, no colds after our baths.

W. V. Philbrick, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. 901 Main Street, cor. Gardner, Worcester.

THE BOSTON HERALD

Is clean, reliable, independent, bright. The best newspaper for the family.

Subscription 50 cents a month, postage paid.

LARGEST CIRCULATION

MUNN & CO
SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN
AGENCY for

PATENTS

A pamphlet of information and abstract of the laws, showing how to Obtain Patents, Caveats, Trade Marks, Copyrights, sent free. Address MUNN & CO. 361 Broadway, New York.

The Ware-Pratt Company

Invite attention to an extensive display of

Fine Clothing for Men, Boys and Children.

The Latest Fashions, Exclusive Styles from our own workshops, Honest Goods and the Lowest Prices, Grade and Quality considered.

Our Custom Department is teeming with the Newest styles, Colorings and Materials, which go to make up the finest lines we have ever shown.

The Ware-Pratt Company,

MANUFACTURERS AND RETAILERS,

408 and 412 Main Street,

Worcester.

NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.--A Great Fraternity.

Do you believe in a system of co-operation in which the whole profit is divided among the members? Then join the Non Secret Endowment Order. It pays a sick benefit of $20 a week; a death benefit of $400; an endowment benefit of $500; at COS F.

Incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts. State of the order March 18, 1891: Membership, 4915. Amount loaned for Relief, $15,200; Reserve Fund, $22,912.40; Balance of Relief Fund, $6,759.08; Total, $44,975.48. Men and women admitted upon the same terms. Four local assemblies in the city with a membership of over 600.

Are you protected in case of sickness? Are you making provisions for the future by laying aside small sums of money from time to time?

Organization wanted. Address NON SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER, 339 Main St., Worcester, Mass. Rooms 10 and 11

Lamont & Whittemore,

39 PEARL ST.

LEADING * SAFETY * BICYCLES.

Adopted by U. S. Government. Cycle repairing, also Fine Lock and Key Work. Open Evenings.

The longer on this earth we live
And weigh the various qualities of men
Seeing how most are fugitive,
Or fitful gifts, at best, of now and then,
Wind waives I corpse-lights, daughters of the fen,
The more we feel the high, stern featured beauty
Of plain devotedness to duty,
Steadfast and still, nor paid with mortal praise,
But finding amplest recompense
For life's ungarlanded expense
In work done squarely and unwaisted days —Lowell.

Put if thou wold thy best,
Without remission, without rest,
And invite the sunbeam,
And abhor to feign or seem
Even to those who thee should love
And thy behavior approve;
If thou go in thine own likeness
Be it health or be it sickness
If thou wear no mask or lie,
Dealing purely and nakedly
—Emerson.

Those who sail from land afar
Leap from mountain-top to star.
Higher still, from star to God,
Have the spirit-pilots trod,
Setting lights for mind and soul
That the ships may reach the goal.
—Boyle O'Reilly.

Now is the Time to Buy a

CARRIAGE !

at a Small Profit.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,

OPP. THE COMMON.

House For Sale.

Call and examine, or address THOMAS E. N. EATON, No. 26 Boynton Street, Worcester.

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *

NO. 156 MAIN STREET,
H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

Heywood Foundry Comp'y,

GARDNER, MASS.

This Heater is unsurpassed for excellence of workmanship and is the best in the market. Now is the time to secure estimates. The following is one of a great number of testimonials from our leading citizens:

WORCESTER, MASS., April 12, 1890.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER:
Gentlemen—Having used one of your Heaters for two seasons with satisfaction, I can recommend it to anyone, as it will do all they claim. Respectfully,

JOHN E. ALLEN, 917 Main Street.

Branch Office, 39 Pearl Street, Worcester.

LIGHT

VOL. III. NO. 10. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1891. FIVE CENTS

SIMON E. COMBS,

Nineteen Years Chief Engineer of Worcester's Fire Department.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

✻ * Furniture * ✻

Look in at our Windows and on the street floor for the best Chamber Sets ever sold in Worcester for 30 DOLLARS and 35 DOLLARS. We are sole agents for the Famous Leonard Cleanable DRY AIR REFRIGERATORS, Warranted Charcoal filled, five walls to preserve the ice, air tight lock, solid iron shelves hard wood, superior finish, THE BEST IN THE WORLD. We sell the Wakefield Rattan Company's CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES. They are perfect in every way, and we can sell them at low prices. Our great Warerooms are full of desirable goods. We make liberal terms and low prices, with a special discount to Cash buyers at 247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

MEMORIAL DAY.

It will soon be here. Are you prepared for it? Have you anything that you require being done for that day, in the nature of

MONUMENTS or TABLETS

We most respectfully solicit an inspection of our large assortment of Monuments and Tablets, in Marble, Granite and Statuary. More than

$25,000 worth

of Original Designs, manufactured from the very best material, and by competent and skilled workmen. It would be to your interests to call early and make your selections, so as to have your work executed and set up in time for Memorial Day. Our prices will be found very reasonable, and our designs original.

BOSTON MARBLE and GRANITE WORKS.

53 Central St., Worcester.

C. H. DRAPER,
Livery, Feed and Truck Stable.
Three Large Moving Wagons. Baggage Wagon always ready. Furniture and Piano Moving. Telephone 118-5.
161 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

COMPOUND * * OXYGEN * * * TREATMENT

Nature's best tonic in all debilitated conditions of the system.

Our OXYGEN is carefully prepared in accordance with the most scientific principles known to chemistry.

It is prepared by a practical chemist who has had four years' experience in a chemical laboratory.

Each patient will receive the personal and conscientious attention of a regular graduated physician, one who has been six years in medical practice.

We solicit investigation.

368 1-2 Main St., or 1 Elm St.
WORCESTER OXYGEN CO.

DR. J. W. GOULD. T. D. BRISTOL, M. D.

"Bird's-Eye VIEW OF THE WORLD."

For particulars see "Books and Bookmen," and address the Agent, Mr. H. E. Gould, care of Y. M. C. A.

N. G. TUCKER.

W. F. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON, SANTRY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.

56 Pleasant Street,

Worcester, Mass.

WHENEVER GOOD

Eatables

are desired they will always
be found at

John A. Hartigan's

47 and 51 Pleasant Street.

Simple!
Durable!
Odorless!
Clean!

It saves Time,
Labor and Fuel,
(two-thirds cost
per hr. for fuel.)

Manufacturers
Guarantee every Iron.

TRY ONE.

With this Iron, no fire is needed in the stove. Don't suffer from heat. It can be used anywhere. Agents wanted. Also on sale at retail by SQUIER & BEALS, Mfg. Ag'ts, 311 Main St., Room 13, Worcester.

PENSIONS! * PENSIONS!

THE DISABILITY BILL IS A LAW.
Soldiers Disabled Since the War are Entitled.
Dependent widows and parents now dependent whose sons die from the effects of army service are included. If you wish your claim speedily and successfully prosecuted, address JAMES TANNER,
Late Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D. C.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1891.

No. 10

The day has a motto written so bright
On the sunbeam's golden bars.
The night has a motto spelled in light
With letters of the stars.

—Margaret Seaton.

This is simply another way of saying that night has its compensation and this we find in light; the little of sweet to offset so much of the bitter. However we take it, the thought is uncommonly well expressed.

And henceforth it is to be Bishop Brooks! Does the combination sound so much better than just Phillips Brooks.

Some how or other, Massachusetts people, irrespective of denomination, had grown to consider those two words as representing about the ideal clergyman.

Goodness of heart, grandeur of thought, nobility of purpose, precision of diction! Where is there any one man who in a greater degree unites all these qualities?

Who can follow him at Trinity? Successor, he must have, but the lot will not be for years a desirable one. It matters not who he may be, the comparison between him and Phillips Brooks will not be in his favor.

But what Trinity loses, the public gains. Bishop Brooks will not lack for auditors as he makes his Episcopal progress through his Diocese. His own nerve and spirit must thrill and energize his field to its remotest extremity.

In this result of the Annual Convention, Worcester bore no insignificant part. True to her well known fealty to Dr. Huntington of New York, but so long the rector of All Saints in this city, she would have been glad to advance his interests. When he however disclaimed any wish for the office, Worcester Churchmen were a unit in favor of our later Chrysostom, and Dr. Vinton eloquently presented his name.

So Worcester is to be canvassed for the amount to properly house and utilize the Bigelow gift! Col. Russell certainly has the good wishes of all those who favor progress in educational matters, nor is the sum necessary, a very large one when the wealth of the city is considered. There are monied men who can easily assume much more than the $100,000, called for if the propriety of the scheme can be made apparent to them. One of the first mechanical cities in the land ought not to hesitate long about setting the waiting machinery in motion. Colonel Russell should be accorded a patient hearing when he presents his case.

Worcester is bound to look out for her young people intellectually, for both Col. Russell and Mr. Dennis are working for educational institutions; but how about diversion? What are our good city fathers preparing for the boys; those lads whose legs are fairly kinky with pent up energy? The leaves are out and it begins to look as though the boys would be left out. Many of them are saying: "Wait till we are men and then we'll give the boys a chance;" but that is just what the present officers said when they were young. We forget too soon. We must put ourselves in other places to appreciate their needs and wishes. Every ward in this city should have at least one vacant place where boys may sport at will. Human nature is all right if properly directed. If we don't manage some one else will.

Is this possible? LIGHT thinks it is and is willing to undertake the naming of the precise localities where such grounds can be taken. They should be set apart, graded and equipped for the unrestricted pleasure of the boys. To make them right for ball playing and running would not require a very great outlay and then the baths at Salisbury's, Coe's and the Lake. That member of our City Government will be sure of any office that he may aspire to, at the hands of coming voters, if he will introduce and carry through a proposition to give the boys a chance.

"Only a drunk." The woman who had been secured to do the scrubbing couldn't be found. At last, after continued searching, she was found ensconced in a boarder's bed, drunk. She had brought her bottle of licensed whiskey with her and when too boozy to work longer went to bed. It required the united strength of her husband, and the family to get her into the hack that had been ordered to take her home, and what a home that must be into which the wife and mother is unceremoniously bundled.

"Only a drunk." That was the repeated answer to the question as to what had caused the crowd at the corner of Main and Pearl Streets, last week. A hundred people had gathered to see a poor specimen of humanity dragged down from the upper stories of the block, whither he had crawled in his drunken blindness, and he was lumbered into the Patrol wagon. Prone upon the floor of the wagon he gave little token of the innocent child he must have been once. That scene is frequently repeated.

"Only a drunk," and from the blow on Myrtle Street whence follows death, to the frenzied scene at the station house where the partially sobered roisterer bewails the effect on "mother" the transition is almost instantaneous. A night long debauch, a blow leveled at a man of whom he knew nothing, and a cripple at that, a brief attempt to run away and then the sobering effect of cold walls and a grated door. Call the offence what we may and the law has many grades in names and penalties, at the best, it is bad enough; and bad the whole business must continue to be till those who know better will use every effort possible to instruct and to prevent. We needn't go to Africa and Asia to be missionaries.

For two weeks there has been a blaze of glory on Chestnut Street. On the East side, opposite the home of the Misses Burnside, the tulips have been blossoming in all their accustomed splendor. Those who walk or ride along this street and take a peek at these lovely flowers must feel a little gratitude to these ladies for their care in maintaining such a patch of beauty. For its extent, it rivals Boston's Public Garden. Carnation and white, with now and then a yellow and a variegated one; we begin to realize why those Hollanders, in the seventeenth century, went almost crazy in their admiration for this flower and in their efforts to eclipse each other in its possession. Its proper development requires some care, but what returns it makes.

Every morning and noon a strange sight may be seen at the main entrance to the Grove Street Wire mill. Usually more than fifty men are waiting the coming of the superintendent of employment. "Why stand ye here all the day idle" rises at once to our lips. "Because no man hath hired us." All are Armenians, readily seen in cast of head and face, save a few Finns and Scandinavians whose light hair and complexion are in significant contrast to the dark characteristics of their Asiatic co-applicants.

How they throng up to the railroad track as Mr. ——— appears. An employè is constantly there to repel too urgent appeals for employment. If one or more is wanted, the selection is made and the rest turn sorrowing away. Frequently, there is no want and all must go. Thus it is day after day. Isn't the supply greater than the demand? Ought not a McKinley or some other bill to be introduced to help the laborer already here? In other words is the laborer as well protected as the employer?

Worcester is rapidly becoming cosmopolitan. We are not so very numerous; but what a variety! We are a veritable Babel. We have churches in which the services are conducted in French, Swedish, Hebrew and Armenian, and now plans are afoot for one in Norwegian. Still it would not be pleasant to think that these people are to continue to use their native tongues. The sooner they acquire the English language and become assimilated with our great people, the better.

Unification should be the watch word in this land, not diversity. Europe and its brawls should be left behind effectually, and every comer should aspire to be, first, last and alway, an American citizen. It would be well for him to gain our language and our ways at the earliest possible moment. In the second generation, there should be no necessity of separate churches. Let the memories and the language if possible, be retained but the migrant ought soon to lose a trace of transplanting. Let him be an American.

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 309 Main Street, Burnside Building,
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Hereafter, it will be understood that all articles in LIGHT, not ascribed, save recipes,
squibs, fashion and household notes were
written for this paper.

Friends sending in manuscripts will not complain if they are not printed at once. There are many waiting. Yet LIGHT is always glad
to receive communications and, if meritorious,
to print them.

Mr. Gilbert G. Davis, printer, has gotten out a very beautiful calendar blotter with a rainbow front. LIGHT returns thanks for several.

Next week, LIGHT will give the first part of a story written by a gentleman now nearing his centennial birthday. Be sure to get the paper. He was ninety-eight when he wrote the sketch.

Mr. William F. Miller hands to LIGHT a veritable curiosity in the newspaper line. It is no less than The Argosy, printed in far off British Guiana. It has eight pages, printed on pink paper and is thoroughly English, only the English is modified by the environment. It is a good paper and LIGHT thanks Comrade
Miller for his kindness.

About Folks.

Last week Friday evening the Lime Kiln
Club of Holden held a social in Memorial Hall. About forty couples were present and dancing was enjoyed until a late hour. There were present from Worcester Arther E. Richardson, Charles M. Davis, Fred E. Wheeler,
Miss Addie E. Hubbard, Miss Eva L.
Truscott and Miss Florence L. Johnson.

Mr. John C. Crane of West Millbury calls on LIGHT and reports a great antiquarian find in the shape of papers pertaining to Col. Gilbert, a Revolutionary loyalist and an ancestor of Mr. Crane. It is expected that they will open up many, hitherto, closed ways.

Amateur Sports.

Stephen Salisbury has offered to the Outing Club of the Young Women's Christian Association the use of a lot of land at the corner of West and Highland streets, for a tennis ground.

The tournament of the Bay State Bicycle
Club, which is to take place Memorial day at Agricultural Park is at present the principal topic of conversation among the bicyclists.
The fact that three state championship races will be included in the program adds to the interest. A large attendance of out of town wheelmen is expected. The complete list of sports is as follows: mile novice, Safety, for gold and silver medals; two-mile Worcester County Championship for Telegram gold medal; one mile Tandem Safety, state championship, prizes, gold and silver medals;
one-mile open, scratch, prizes, silver tea set and gold initial seal ring set with diamonds;
one-half mile open safety, scratch, prizes,
French marble clock, field glasses, gold pen;
one-mile state championship, ordinary, prizes,
gold and silver medals; one mile Worcester
County Safety championship, prizes, John P.
Lovell Arms Company medal, silver water pitcher and sweater; one-mile handicap, prizes, silver water pitcher and cup, traveling bag and silver butter dish; one-mile Safety state championship, prizes, gold and silver medals;
two mile lap race Safety, prizes silver coffee
urn, parlor lamp and carving set; one-mile Safety handicap, prizes, gold watch, silver watch and shaving set. The Telegram medal was won last year by Clarence Fenner of the Millbury Club. It has to be won three times before ownership is given. Three parade prizes are also offered. A silver water pitcher will be awarded to the club having the largest number of men in the parade and a steel engraving to the club having the next largest number. A steel engraving will be awarded to the club presenting the best appearance. The judges of the parade competition are Edward Tolman, Sterling Elliot of Newton and John Spiers. The officers are:
Referee, Abbot Bassett of Boston, secretary
the L. A. W.; judges, A. D. Peck of the Boston Athletic Association, Henry Goodman of Hartford, and James L. Spiers of Providence; clerk of course, J. W. Murphy; assistant clerk of course, H. B. Ingraham; scorer, J. W.
Bean of Cambridge with L. C. Havener, assistant; umpires, E. M. Stanton, A. P. Snow,
L. M. Alexander and R. Johnson; starter,
Will Windle. As a side attraction the services of Professor Carl Meyers of New York with his sky bicycle or flying machine, have been secured. Altogether it will be the biggest bicycle tournament ever held in this city, with the possible exception of the one held five or six years ago.

As Superintendent Marble thinks it a good idea "to boom athletics in the High School," more interest is being taken in them by the High School boys this year than ever before.
There will not only be an athletic meeting but there will be a boat race and a team will be sent to compete in the games of the Interscholastic Association which take place at Cambridge, June 6. The field day of the Athletic Association will be held at Agricultural Park, May 23. The struggle for the banner this year will be between '91 and '93. At present '93's prospects seem the brightest.

It was at first intended to hold the boat race the Friday before the athletic sports but as there are only two four-oared working boats available it will be necessary to have two races. Two crews will row Thursday afternoon May 28 and the winner will race with the other crew the following afternoon.
It will be decided by lot which two crews will row first. The three crews have been in active training at the lake for some time, the Seniors rowing Monday and Wednesday, the Juniors Tuesday and Friday and the Sophomores Thursday and Saturday. The prize to be awarded the winners is a banner designed by Thurston '93 and presented by G. Stewart Dickinson.

The Worcester Academy games take place on the school campus May 23. C. A. Fenner has offered a silver cup to be given to the person winning the greatest number of points and a banner will be awarded the class making the largest score.

The members of Dalzell's school are training at Agricultural Park under the direction of L. C. Havener. A tournament will be held next Saturday, May 16, to decide who shall be sent to compete in the Interscholastic games, June 6. Among the most promising of those training are Ralph Richardson in bicycling, Henry Fuller in jumping, G. W. Knowlton in sprinting and Whittall in distance races.

The championship meeting of the New England Amateur Athletic Union will be held
June 13 at the new grounds of the Worcester Athletic Club at Lake View. It is not likely that the local club will make many entries.

The Lakeside Boat Club will have an opening the latter part of May which will surpass all previous attempts of the kind. We hope it won't rain, boys.

Worcester will be represented in the annual regatta of the New England Amateur Rowing Association by John Cummings in the senior singles, Albert Bennett in the intermediate singles, Harry Adams in the junior singles and probably by fours and eights from Worcester and Wachusett Boat Club. It will be decided next Monday evening at the meeting of the officers of the Association where the regatta will be held.

Will W. Windle, the Millbury champion, has purchased a new pneumatic ordinary racer. He will not enter any races this season but will try to make some new records.

W. D. Berry of this city, who is attending the School for Christian Workers at Springfield, plays third base on the school Base Ball team. Stagg, the famous Yale pitcher, is pitcher and captain of the club, which commonly goes by the name "Stagg's team." This season the club has played with the Yales, Harvards, Amhersts, Wesleyans and other clubs of high standing.

W. V. Philbrick, M. D., of this city contributes an article, "A Half Forgotten Helper," to the April number of The Healthy Home.

It pays to patronize General
Agent Geo. Y. Lancaster, for
Railroad and Steamship Tickets,
Drafts, and Insurance Office,
434 Main street, Worcester.

Church Notes.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Spring meeting of the Worcester Central Conference of churches will be held with the church in Boylston next Tuesday at 10 a. m.

The little children of Salem Street Church to the number of three hundred gathered in the Sunday School rooms, last week Friday afternoon to enjoy a pleasant "May Festival" arranged by Mrs. J. H. Bigelow. The children played games for an hour and a half, then were provided with an entertainment arranged by the Junior Society of Christian Endeavor. After the entertainment the children were provided with a bountiful collation.

The ladies of Pilgrim Church celebrated "Babies-Day" Tuesday, when the mothers of the congregation gathered in Pilgrim Hall to enjoy the afternoon. A large number were present. In the evening, the older members enjoyed a social and entertainment, at which ice cream and cake were on sale.

METHODIST.

The Methodist Episcopal Social Union holds its next gathering at Grace Church, Monday evening. Rev. J. D. Pickles of Trinity Church will deliver an address on "The relation of the Epworth League and the Church." Mr. Pickles's official connection with the League well qualifies him to explain the subject in hand. The address will be preceded by a banquet at 7.15 o'clock.

Coral Street.—The round of receptions to new and returning pastors was finished Thursday night as follows. The Ladies of the Sewing Society welcoming Rev. Dr. J. O. Knowles and wife. Supper was served from 6 to 8 o'clock. After the hymn, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," had been sung by the audience, W. E. Higgins made the reception address. Little Sadie Goodman then presented Rev. Mrs. J. O. Knowles with a basket of flowers. The pastor responded in a few happy and feeling remarks. The following entertainment was then given: Duet, "Gypsy Countess," Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Goodwin; banjo solo, "Fun on Roller Skates," Master Allie Cate; recitation, "Watched," Hattie Paine; banjo quintet, Charles French, George Hastings, Allie Mayo, Harry Holland, and Fred Tabor, "Mill Dam Raquet;" reading, "Miss Polly's Fourth," Lottie Cate; piano solo, "Fresh Life" Edith Fuller; song, "Drifting Apart," Mr. A. S. Goodwin. There were about 60 present at supper and 150 at the entertainment. The affair was in charge of Mrs. L. W. Bowen, Mrs. John Cudworth, and Miss Mabel Lawton.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The first anniversary of the settlement of Rev. Thomas Atkinson over the First Presbyterian Church was observed in Horticultural Hall Wednesday evening. The reports show that Mr. Atkinson has been very successful in his labors. The church was in very poor condition when he came but the membership now numbers 159, fifty-six of whom were received the past year. The congregation is still growing.

Y. M. C. A.

The morning prayer meeting tomorrow at quarter past nine will be led by H. S. Lesure. At the boys' meeting at three, the speaker will be Capt. J. B. Knox and at the men's meeting at four, Rev. W. T. Worth, the new pastor of Grace Church, will give a talk.

General Secretary Gale will reach home from Kansas City, Thursday.

Y. P. S. C. E.

The second annual convention of the Worcester County Christian Endeavor Societies which took place at the Old South Church Thursday and Friday of last week, was the largest County Convention ever held in Massachusetts. The total number of delegates who registered was 951. The meetings were very enthusiastic as all Christian Endeavor Conventions are.

Thursday afternoon from two to three o'clock the delegates registered and at three, organization was effected. A brief devotional service of twenty-five minutes followed, conducted by Rev. Robert F. Tolman of South Gardner. At 3.45 Rev. A. Z. Conrad gave an address of welcome for the churches, and D. B. Tucker, president of the Worcester Local Union welcomed the delegates in behalf of the local societies. Rev. H. F. Brown of Athol responded for the visitors. The morning session closed with a reception tendered to the State Board and delegates by the Local Union. The evening program included a praise service, scripture reading and prayer by Rev. Leon D. Bliss, an address by Rev. E. P. Farnham of Salem on "What to be Avoided—What to be attained in Christian Endeavor?" and an address by Rev. Dr. H. C. Farrer, president of the New York State Union, on "The Nineteenth Century Factor."

The program for Friday was as follows:

MORNING

Sunrise Consecration Meeting,
Rev. Webster Woodbury, Milford, Mass.
Devotional Service.
Worcester Folly, Rev. Roland D. Grant, Boston.
Singing.
Christian Endeavorers in Evangelistic Work.
10.25-10.35 1. In the City, Miss Etta Fogg, Worcester.
10.35-10.55 2. In the Country, Rev. G. S. Dodge, Rutland.
10.55-11.15 3. Around the World,
Rev. E. K. Alden, D. D., Boston.

Christian Endeavor and the Sunday School,
Rev. Erastus Blakeslee, Spencer.
Enthusiasm in Christian Endeavor Work,
Rev. C. M. Southgate, Worcester.

AFTERNOON.

Devotional Service.
Senior Christian Endeavor Work,
Rev. Lawrence Phelps, Chelsea, Pres. State Union.
Junior Christian Endeavor Work.

Rev. H. W. Pope, Palmer.
Satisfactory Service, Miss Lillian A. Wilcox, Boston.
Question Drawer, Mr. E. C. Hazen, Springfield.
Conferences:

1. Lookout: Committee,
Miss Emma D. Gates, Worcester.
2. Prayer Meeting, Mr. Edward G. Watkins, Gardner.
3. Missionary, Mr. Geo. W. Coleman, Boston.

EVENING.

Praise and Devotional Service,
Rev. A. B. Chamberlain, Worcester.
SINGING.

The Field, Mr. J. W. Baer, Sec'y United Society.
Address, Rev. I. J. Lansing, Worcester.
Singing and Benediction.

UNIVERSALIST.

The new Universalist Branch Sunday School in the Adams Square School House was opened last Sunday with appropriate exercises.

Souvenir Spoons.

After inspecting the various beautiful souvenir spoons now in the market we are bound to confess that the spoon just offered to the people of Worcester by that enterprising jeweller, Mr. F. A. Knowlton, 350-354 Main Street, surpasses anything we have seen. This is saying a good deal, but we say it honestly and sincerely. As an example of what artistic skill can do in these days in the silversmith's art it is unparalleled and in no branch of art industry in recent times has the progress been so rapid as in that of the manufacture of silverware.

This spoon strikes us as exceptionally graceful in outline and highly artistic in treatment. It puts one in mind of the exquisite beauty of the old Greek coins. It commemorates the memory of the famous statesman, patriot and historian, George Bancroft. We hardly think a more appropriate and desirable subject could easily be chosen for a memento. So illustrious and familiar is the name throughout the world that no word is needed to extol it here. The spoon is a fitting tribute to a world-wide greatness, and we congratulate Mr. Knowlton on this happy facility he has displayed in adding fame to fame.

To Worcester people, with their well known local pride, this memento must be exceedingly grateful. We cannot go back to Shakespeare and Chaucer, with figures from Stratford and Canterbury, but we do have a certain literary reputation, great for the new world and the time is coming when our city will be sought for its recollections of Bancroft as we, today, seek out those of Gibbon and Macaulay, beyond the seas.

Here then is a token to be carried away or to be used in our own homes, a daily reminder of the man who wrote the history of our land. Travellers bring back with them as choice souvenirs, spoons from the places visited, what reason is there that visitors to our industrious city should not do likewise. The artisan has taken for his subject the face of the Historian as painted in Berlin in 1872. The artist was Richter, the painting being now in the possession of the family. An elegant copy by Billings was presented in February, 1889, to the High School by the Hon. Edward L. Davis and is the one shown at the late exhibit of portraits in the new library building. Moreover it is the one that Appleton & Co. have had engraved for their Dictionary of American Biography.

At the rounded end of the handle, the embossed head stands out so grandly that we are reminded of the figure of Caxton who introduced printing into England. Below the face is the fac simile of Bancroft's signature, itself exceedingly interesting. Next is the raised figure of the American eagle with wings extended and he is very appropriately placed, for who, more than Bancroft, represents the American idea? Then comes the date of his death 1891. On the shank is the word Worcester and in the bowl is the figure of the birthplace, that old house on Salisbury Street, some day, if it is not already, to be a shrine for reverent pilgrims. Finally we have the date 1800. There, in brief, is a life history in pictures of silver.

The spoons are in different styles. They are in plain silver, in full gilt, or with gold bowls only. In devising this bit of memento, Mr. Knowlton has displayed a deal of taste and ingenuity and the result is a thing of beauty if not a joy forever. Worcester people may not believe in free coinage of silver but they are in favor of extensive use of the metal in this way and they expect it to be widely circulated.

Simon Estabrook Combs.

More than forty-three years a fireman in the city of Worcester and, for nineteen and a half, chief of the department. During that time, not a man was killed nor permanently disabled. It is probable that ex-chief Combs can challenge comparison with any contemporary record with little fear of the result.

Mr. Combs was born in Holden, May 11, 1826, the son of Reuben C. and Mary (Ballou) Combs. His father was a native of Uxbridge and a farmer. Mary Ballou was his second wife and he her second husband. He died when Simon was ten years old but his widow survived many years, dying finally at Simon's home in this city. Our ex-chief's first and middle names came through his father's friendship for the family of Worcester's late postmaster, Col. James E. Estabrook, which was, it will be remembered, connected with Holden. While Mr. Combs earliest years were spent upon the farm he early began learning the blacksmith's trade with his half-brother, Wm. J. Callum. The latter afterwards moved to New York city and kept a hotel on Canal street. Later, at work again at his trade, this brother was killed.

Simon was married in 1846 to Miss Mary Ann Davis of Holden, a cousin of J. Edgar Davis of this city, and soon after went to the city of New York. The Fire Department proclivity showed itself even then, for the second night, he was there, an alarm drew him over to the Bowery where he lost his way and spent the night in wandering. In the morning, he followed an omnibus with a familiar label and found his own. In those days "Running with the machine" was in its glory in Gotham and the young man improved his opportunities. The next year he went to Attleboro, Mass, but was there one year only, coming thence, in 1848, to Worcester and Worcester has been his home since.

For twenty-four years, or till 1872, he was employed at what is now The Ames Plow Company, he having seen the business pass under the heads of Ruggles, Nourse & Mason, and Nourse & Mason till the purchase of the plant in 1860, by Oliver Ames & Son. The very year of his coming to Worcester, December 4th, he joined the Fire Department and in May, 1854, became foreman of City Hose, No. 1. In this capacity he served at the disastrous Merrifield fire in the same year. In 1861, he was made an assistant engineer. In 1871, he was sent from his ward to the Common Council and during his time the electric fire alarm system was introduced.

R. M. Gould, who was accidentally killed several years since, had been chief of the Department from 1869 and to him, in 1872, Mr. Combs succeeded. In 1848, a fireman received $10 a year for his services, less such fines as might be imposed. He must have had an abundance of enthusiasm to buoy him through such depressing wages. For several years, Mr. Combs received $1500 per annum and latterly $1700. The permanent members have from $60 to $70 a month. Mr. Combs predecessors as Chief Engineers have been as follows: Col. Isaac Davis 1835-6. Gen. Nathan Heard, 1837, 8, 9. Henry W. Miller, 1840, 1, 2, 3, 4. Joel Wilder, 1845, 6, 7, 8, 9. E. N. Holmes, 1850, 1, 2, 3, 4. Leonard W. Sturtevant, 1855, 6, 7, 8. Samuel A. Porter, 1859, Leonard R. Hudson, 1860. Alzirus Brown, 1861, 2, 3, 4, 5. A. B. Lovell, 1866, 7, 8. R. M. Gould, 1869, '70 '71. It will thus be seen that there have been eleven men holding this office before our late chief and that his term far exceeded in time those of any two or even three of the others. The Worcester Fire Society that formerly took conflagrations in charge was organized in 1793, and so is very near its centennial. It exists still for the sake of reminiscence and an annual dinner, but for duty it would be of scarcely more service than the tombstones standing now over the graves of the earlier members.

Our ex-chief says that he had discovered no trouble in his work, no impairment in his energies till the fire in Taylor's block, corner of Main and Austin streets in January, 1890. He then got thoroughly soaked and chilled, followed by La Grippe, then in its first season. Though he rallied from the attack it was only to suffer again after every fire, his duties necessarily exposing him. Finally, deafness of so pronounced a character developing, he found it desirable to resign his position and his late 1st Assistant, Mr. Edward L. Vaughn was elected to succeed him.

Mr. Combs first wife died in 1883, Feb 24, and in the following year he was wedded to Miss Sarah L. Spaulding of Worcester. Their home is at 17 School street, whence for many a year, Mr. C. has gone to supervise the efforts to save Worcester property from the devouring flames. It is not a little remarkable that his two own brothers should both have served in the Fire Department of this city. The older, Ezra, is now in Buffalo, the younger, Royal, is a carpenter in Newton Center. His only sister, Nancy, was the first wife of David Keyes of Harvard street.

To be sure, our city had progressed from the days when buckets, in the hands of a brigade, constituted the only defence against fire, but in 1848, the facilities for extinguishing a fire were very meagre. Compare the crack machine of that period, having its man killing brakes, with the polished steam rotary valved engine of today. No greater advance can be found in any line. With all these improvements Mr. Combs kept step, in fact, in many cases, he was himself a leader, and his suggestions have served to facilitate the fireman's work in various ways. He does not say it; but his friends say it for him that the exceedingly flourishing and effective condition of our department, today, is owed more to him than to any other one individual.

His friends and associates have realized this and he has several tokens of their esteem and affection. He has a large gold medal given him in 1872, April 12, just after he became chief, bearing the inscription "Presented to Simon Estabrook Combs by his Friends." In the hall of his house hangs a fine gold mounted whip and an elegant belt, gifts from admiring friends. They are beautiful, but our modest friend says they are too nice for use, so he preserves them as trophies.

The following resolutions, handsomely engrossed express the sentiments of the City Council as to the many years of service rendered by our friend.

"Resolutions adopted on accepting the resignation of Simon E. Combs Chief Engineer of the Worcester Fire Department Feb 2, 1891.

Resolutions. The members of the City

Council have learned with deep regret that physical disability has caused Mr. Simon E. Combs to resign his position as Chief Engineer of the Fire Department. For nearly forty-three years a member of the Fire Department, the last nineteen years of which serving as its Chief Engineer he has performed his duties with ability, faithfulness and honor. It is a matter of congratulation and gratification that it was his opportunity to live such a long life of usefulness and distinction; a life so full of responsibility and devotion to public duty as his has been is worthy of recognition and praise not only by us but our fellow citizens at large. We therefore extend to Mr. Combs our best wishes for his future welfare, that rest and quiet will soon restore him to sound health, and that all his efforts may be crowned with success and happiness. In Board of Aldermen, Feb. 2, 1891, the within resolutions were unanimously adopted. Sent down for concurrence.

E. H. TOWNE, Clerk.

In Common Council, Feb. 2, 1891, concurred.

S. HAMILTON COE, Clerk.

Approved Feb. 3, 1891,

FRANCIS A. HARRINGTON, Mayor.

A copy attest.

E. H. TOWNE, City Clerk."

Again these words from his fellow workers in the Department are quite to the point. Handsomely framed they were hung in his home the last week in April. They come right from the heart and indicate what the "boys" think of him.

"At a meeting of the officers of the various companies comprising the Worcester Fire and Protective Department held Feb. 25th, 1891, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Whereas, We learn with regret of the resignation of our honored chief, Simon E. Combs, who has stood at the head of the Worcester Fire Department for the past twenty years and been a member of the Department for forty-two years, we deem it both fitting and pleasurable to convey to him in this testimonial an expression of our esteem; therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED, that in the resignation of Chief Combs the members of the Worcester Fire Department will miss a sincere friend, the Force an able leader and the City a public officer ever devoted to its protection,

RESOLVED, That we the undersigned members of the Worcester Fire Department extend to Chief Combs an assurance of our appreciation of his kindness, and while regretting that our daily personal relations must be severed, it is our heartfelt wish that his future may be one of prosperity and happiness.

BOARD OF ENGINEERS.

- Chief, E. L. Vaughn
  - 1st Assistant, G. S. Coleman
  - 2nd " C. O. Lamb
  - 3rd " J. D. Shaw
  - 4th " H. E. Robbins
  - Supt. of Fire Alarm W. H. McClure.
- ENGINE NO. 1.
Foreman S. W. Buffum

- Assistant foreman E. N. Sweet
- Driver of Hose A. Harper
- Driver of Engine W. H. Chadwick
- Engineer W. R. Shaw
- Assistant engineer J. H. Leland
- W. Jones, J. Lavigne, P. W. Sweet, T. J. Wood, P. Sinclair.

ENGINE NO. 2.

- Foreman J. Bruso, Jr.
- Assistant Foreman G. T. Irving
- Driver of Hose C. C. Hemenway
- Driver of Engine A. F. Roach
- Engineer A. C. Haradon
- Assistant engineer J. N. Hodgins
- S. E. Bacon, G. H. Hodgins, F. W. Chickering, P. P. Bixby, A. G. Bruso.

ENGINE NO. 3.

- Foreman W. Burnie
- Assistant foreman W. D. Luchay
- Driver of Hose C. N. Hassam

- Driver of Engine F. G. Mills
- Engineer C. E. Noyes
- Assistant engineer F. D. Roberts
- G. D. Ensor, E. C. Noyes, H. Prouty, J. W. Conlin, W. T. Perry.

ENGINE NO. 4.

- Foreman E. D. Burbank
- Assistant foreman C. F. Finn
- Driver of Hose C. S. Combs
- Driver of Engine A. M. Mills
- Engineer F. P. Edwards
- Assistant engineer J. W. Morey
- R. L. Jewell, G. M. Rice, E. D. Healy, H. L. Jewell, T. D. Costello.

HOSE NO. 1.

- Foreman G. L. Robbins
- Assistant foreman A. C. Newcomb
- Driver J. A. Gammell
- C. M. Thayer, H. A. Snider, W. J. Newbert, H. P. Gibbs, F. Wayne, C. Chew.

HOSE NO. 2.

- Foreman C. A. Ilumes

- Assistant foreman F. Boles
- Driver L. Jones
- W. Cavanaugh, A. Murphy, J. McCarthy, E. Newton, W. J. Karen.

HOSE NO. 3.

- Foreman J. F. Adams
- Assistant foreman J. J. Burke
- Driver F. A. Carr
- R. J. O'Rourke, W. Overand, R. Baker, G. H. Jardine, C. K. Watson.

HOSE NO. 4.

- Foreman W. C. Wood
- Assistant foreman D. E. Lovejoy
- Driver S. E. Phipps
- S. T. Newton, E. F. Weeks, E. F. Decatur, S. H. Elliott, A. J. Dresser.

HOSE NO. 5.

- Foreman S. W. Hodgdon
- Assistant foreman W. W. Quinn
- Driver A. A. Jones
- A. R. Mee, C. Holland, F. T. Mills, B. F. Quinn, R. L. Barton.

HOSE NO. 7.

- Foreman F. W. Buxton
- Assistant foreman W. Maher
- Driver T. J. Sullivan
- W. J. Tyler, D. F. Fitzgerald, J. Goodny, M. E. Glynn J. O'Keefe.

HOSE NO. 8.

- Foreman F. L. Jones
- Assistant foreman D. Carpenter
- Driver W. S. Stevens
- J. Bruso, G. E. Marble, P. J. McGrath, C. Riley, L. J. Walters.

HOSE NO. 9.

- Foreman W. S. Morine
- Assistant foreman P. L. Wood
- Driver A. C. Margerum
- L. W. Peble, W. H. French, C. W. Walls, E. W. Hamm, J. F. Sullivan.

TRUCK NO. 1.

- Foreman J. E. Kennington
- Assistant foreman J. J. Lavene
- Driver J. Barry, Jr.

Tillerman E. S. Atwood
H. W. Haynes, W. L. McLaughlin, A. F. Mealy, W. B. Spooner, C. R. McCaulieff, G. H. Hill, J. C. McDonald, H. Laplant, L. A. Wetherby, G. Morey.

TRUCK NO. 2.

Foreman E. L. Janes
Assistant foreman J. P. Fay
Driver A. H. Jones
Tillerman J. N. Scott
P. J. Burke, E. McCaulieff, P. Bowers, C. J. Buckley, L. M. Crocker, W. N. Avery, G. P. Robinson.

CHEMICAL NO. 1.

Foreman, W. Flynn
R. M. Moore, F. E. Keyes, J. W. Moore.
Spare Driver G. W. Smith.
INSURANCE FIRE PATROL.
Captain H. R. Williamson
Assistant captain A. Converse,
Driver H. R. Shippe
E. W. Kerwin, L. M. Alexander, A. W. Towne, W. H. Guertin, W. H. Lewis.

It is a proud thing to bear with him into his retirement such words as these. However, the future may shape itself, he has the pleasant memory of a successful past. Not only the City Council and the Fire Department take pride in the career of our ex chief, but the whole city with one voice sound his praises as a good and honest man and a faithful official.

ABOUT FOLKS.

Police Matron Mary B. Lane is obviously overworked. Her office never contemplated such a deluge of misery as last week's orgies afforded. During her illness Mrs. Mary Ayer will discharge her duties.

The children of St. John's Parochial school gave a very successful presentation of the cantata "Spring Holiday" last Thursday evening in Mechanics Hall. It was given for the benefit of the building fund and much was added thereto. Many tickets were sold that were not represented in the audience. Rev. M. T. O'Brien was general superintendent; John F. Murray, musical director; Miss Nora G. Reidy, pianist. In the third act there were special choruses, little girls representing zephyrs, flowers and dewdrops. These were in special costume. Miss Anne Carberry read between the second and third acts and a tableau closed the entertainment.

The Father Matthew Cadets opened their spring festival in Father Matthew Hall Thursday evening. A large company was present and liberally patronized the supper and other tables. The prizes in the ticket selling contest were a gold watch to Miss Maggie V. Hayes and a $20 gold ring to Miss Mary Cronin. Dancing was begun at eight o'clock and continued till midnight. The Lyceum orchestra, Williams prompter, furnished the music. The festival closed last evening.

Don't fail to read A. F. Burbank's advertisement of Souvenir Spoons. Our jewellers are determined to keep Bancroft before the public. He should be remembered.

The many friends of Mr. Fred A. Ricker of 76 Chandler Street who has been seriously ill will be glad to learn that he is convalescent.

Pilgrim Babies.

"Baby Day" with the Pilgrims. The Ladies' Aid Society receive at their Parlor Babies with their mothers, also all that enjoy Babies on Tuesday, May 5, from three o'clock—so the invitation said. The Babies accepted gladly one would judge if they saw the room at that time. There were 75 little ones under ten years, 50 of them being under five. Some wore long dresses the youngest being only four months, and many just learning to walk. All were good natured, and in for a good time, which appeared for some to consist in taking a survey of the rooms by constantly walking about it. One Mama remarked that she wished she knew how many miles she had walked in the rooms from half past three till five following her little son of eighteen months. She looked tired but the little fellow wore a happy smile and sat kicking his heels as if weariness was a thing unknown to him. A party of little ones whose ages varied from twenty months to three years, found under the piano a fine place to play. They were talking so fast, and having such keen enjoyment, the writer took a seat under the piano with them, and soon found that such little people's conversation when together was full of good round ideas, and that they could appreciate a joke as well as older ones, especially when she was the subject. A long column might be told of their doings and odd remarks, but will let these suffice. Of all the 75 not a tenth of them had black eyes or brown, blue eyes predominated in all its shades, and slender babies outnumbered the fleshy ones—only a few curly heads, but nearly all with light sunny hair.

However, one trait might have been noticed in them, one and all, from the quiet little girl who sat with Mama and had perfected happiness in watching the frolics of the more venturesome, to those that found enjoyment in an active part in all the fun that could be set going, and the trait, I think, might be traced back through the long vista of years that have intervened between this day and the day the independence of America was declared. At half past four many took tea which was served in Pilgrim Hall. It was a unique sight, so many mothers eating at table in one room with babies in their arms, trying to take a lunch. All the little ones behaved finely. There were 150 adults present during the afternoon. This "Baby Day" is the second one this society has had; the first one was a year ago, which was so successful that the idea was carried out more fully this year. The attendance this time has been so large and so thoroughly enjoyed that we feel that "Baby Day" has come to be an annual day. In the evening the aid society had a social and entertainment in the hall that was very pleasing and was largely attended. The following program was carried out: Piano solo, Flossie Stone; Violin solo, Mr. Harry B. Stevens; Song, Master Theodore Butler; Recitations—Miss Mary L. Howard, Gertrude Muzie, Eva Stone, Maud Verry; Bones played by C. Thompson and B. Shepard.

Miss Kate Laughlin, about to leave Worcester for a three months' visit to Ireland was given a gold ring, last Friday night, by her friends.

Philip Louis Moen.

Why all this breathless rush for one man dead?
Wherefore for him this unison of praise
From loyal hearts, among all ranks of men?
See, gathered 'round his bier, a multitude,
As if before a shrine,—a mot ey throng—
And each has lost a friend.

The wise, the gre t,

The rich, the poor—humanity en masse.
The master-minds of great industrial schemes,
Trade, transit, and finance, uncovered stand
With scholars, statesmen, teachers, artisans,
Grim toilers, old and young—all gathered here
To pay their willing debt of honest grief
In tears of friendship, gratitude and love.
A royal tribute royalty might crave;
An unbought homage princes rarely win,
So reverently, sincerely, freely given.
To one brave man who walked with fellow-men.

For one man dead, these tributes and the e tears!
What charm is here, what secret magic hides
To draw and hold these human hearts of ours
In bonds as true as magnet and the steel?
Hi-proudest title, "Christian gentleman,"
Yet not the mere dogmatic, thread-bare phrase
Too oft usurped by whoso needs a prop—
But truly earned and worn with humble mien;
A soldier and a comrade in the ranks
Of that grand army Nazareth pr claimed.
Who seeks this talisman, must daily wear
The Christian graces Christian virtues n ed,
Enwrapping righteousness in robes, like his,
Of gentlest charity.

This was the man:—

Of knightly presence, schooled to self control,
And yet, by nature, trustful as a child;
Serenely masterful, unflinching, firm.
He wore this world-side as a robe of state
Befitting leadership,—y-t graceful y,—
In all the sterner duties life impose d.
Released from these as sportive as a boy,
The light and cheer of homelife, where undimmed
The radiant soul-side of the man outpoured
A wealth of warmth, as freely as the sun
Y elds benedictions fraught with quickening power,
And gladdens by its all-embracing charm.
A later Sidney set to modern tasks;
A civic Bayard born to serve and lead,
A burden-bearer, in that larger sense
Which hallows duty as a privilege,
Who gave the helpful hand with words of cheer;
Wise counsels, seasoned well with sympathy;
And, slow to blame a weaker brother's need,
Interpreted the universal pain
An echo of his own, so bravely borne,
So patiently endured, through whitening years,
Till God, befriending him, bereft us all.

The Hampden County Musical Association has been holding its annual festival this week.

Owing to the illness of Chas. L. Davis, Chas. Willard presented for the last time Alvin Joslin to a Worcester audience Thursday evening. Mr. Davis will produce a new play next season and give "Uncle Alvin" a well earned rest.

Mr. W. J. Banks, the popular treasurer of the Worcester Theater, will be tendered a benefit May 29. Frank Mayo as "Davy Crockett" will be the attraction.

Frank Daniels, who is probably the brightest exponent of farce-comedy ever seen here, will appear at the new Worcester Theater for his first and only engagement this season, commencing Tuesday evening when he will present "Little Puck," which is now in its fourth year, and ending Wednesday evening with "A Black Bag." Mr. Daniels needs no commendation, as he is pleasantly remembered as the original "Old Sport," which character he dropped for "Little Puck," and his originality and peculiar vein of humor are well suited to the style of character he portrays.

How a Worcester Boy

Settled in Canada, with Family Reminiscences.

[Written by the late Mrs. Judge Nesmith of New Hampshire and kindly given to LIGHT by Mr. Walter F. Brooks, her grand nephew. Further data of the Brooks family are given in LIGHT, March 21st.]

One of the saddest events of those five years that were spent at our solitary home was the sickness of my dear mother. It was in the winter and we were twenty-five miles from a physician, consequently a long time must elapse before a doctor could be had. One of my brothers was sent directly to procure appropriate medicine for her, but as she grew worse my father opened a vein in her arm which operated favorably, and she so far recovered before my brother returned that she did not take the prescription sent. I shall never forget the distress of my sister and myself at the thought that possibly my dear mother would not recover, but a kind Providence sent us comfort. Almost the only instance of a lady traveller passing that road, alighted at our door in company with her husband and child on their way to Quebec. They passed the night and kindly did a good deal to encourage us two young sisters in caring for mother. This lady had with her a little bag of corn-meal which she offered to us to make mother a bowl of gruel which she so much needed, and our hearts were made light at the idea of so much kindness and mother would speak of this as an instance of the unvarying care of her Heavenly Father over her,—who numbers the very hairs of our head. Once my mother left home to visit at Shipton, and I was installed mistress of the household. Great indeed, was my delight to be able to work for and take general charge of the family. A little incident I will name, showing my regard for my mother's management and at the same time the light in which my dear father always looked upon her housewifely tact in working as in all she did, for he was passionately fond of her. I had proposed for supper what my father was particularly fond of—a short cake and was baking it by the fire, for it was before the day of cook-stoves. The cakes slipped a little on the plates which were pewter, and I laid a bit of clean stick in the front as I had seen mother do. Father says, "oh, take that away and you will have no trouble with the cakes." I replied "mother uses them." "Oh! mother does!" and smiling turned away as much as to say, "well, do as mother does and all will be right." It was indeed a happy thought of mine, as I could never bear the least reproof from any one and cannot to this day—it kills me—unfortunate indeed, as it is human to err. In the year that my sister was married I was invited to pass a year with her at Beadford. As there was no travelled road to Shipton my brother George was to take us there upon the sled of his own manufacture. I forgot the name by which it was called, but it was about six feet long and two wide, and on this my small trunk was placed, and quilts, and the harness which belonged to our horse and sleigh which was then at Shipton, eleven miles from us. My father had gone on a day or two previous and was to meet my brother Samuel, who would take me to my sister's at Bradford. The snow at this time was two feet in depth, but a rain had fallen a day or two before and a hard crust had formed so that travelling was made quite easy on the crust. In company with two hunters, honest men, and my dear brother, I started gay as a lark. My brother was to draw me on the sled on level ground and I was to walk up the hills, and down if I chose, but I afforded them great amusement at the way I travelled on on foot outstripping them in my eagerness to get at the four mile house where we were to pass the first night. The house was untenanted and a large quantity of hay had been stored in it. Here the teamsters built a large fire in the large open fire-place occupying one broad side of the building which was of logs. After partaking of our supper my dear mother had provided for us we each wrapped ourselves in a quilt mother had provided and laid our tired bodies upon the hay for the repose of sleep. My berth was at one corner nearest the fire that no cold air should reach me, and the hunters kept the fire replenished during the entire night. At the breakfast hour I was offered by these friendly men a piece of bear meat, and as it looked as clean and white as chicken I gratified them by tasting it, but so young, I could not relish wild meat of any kind. And just here I am reminded of the fact that in the St. Hicollet river of which I have before spoken, there were, at this time, salmon, quite plentiful, and at certain seasons of the year my father and brothers set a seine for catching them and they were a great luxury. I manufactured the seine for my father with which accomplishment he was highly gratified. At our time, I think the first winter after we went to Canada, my father had been often inportuned to bring his daughters to Shipton to visit, and as it was impossible to travel during the summer except on foot or on horse back, we were promised if we would ride upon an ox-sled we should go in the winter. Consequently we very readily consented and almost counted the days as they passed that they would bring the longed for time when we should mingle once more with the out-side world, and look into the faces of girls of our own age and similar tastes. I think we were away for a week visiting—were much petted and urged to prolong our stay. But I must give you some account of our trip on the ox-team. When we reached the half-way place as it was called, we halted. My dear father had charge of the team. The day was pleasant and while the oxen were resting and taking their repast we took ours, and I so well remember my sister begging father to let her take water to the oxen to drink. How heartily he enjoyed seeing us so happy all the time—he feared we might regret setting out on such a slow method of travel, but he saw no symptoms of the kind during all the day's journey. And now let us tell you what the fare was at the house of dear old Mrs. Clark, a particular friend of our family. She had for supper a pot of the nicest boiled corn-meal pudding that I ever tasted, with abundance of maple syrup and butter of the sweetest make, and you may be sure, with the keen appetite of travellers we did not partake sparingly of this delicious repast.

As I have said there is no travelled road for teams. About the only passing upon the road at that time was by a class of people called drovers, who took at the fall of the year more particularly, large numbers of cattle to market, to Quebec, and often we children would hear the sound of their voices for a long time before they would appear in sight, and unbounded would be our delight as we rushed into the house to tell mother that a drover was coming, when we would at once put things in order to receive them, as we knew we must entertain them for the night. Those were pleasant times for us children; we had no society and seldom saw a human being only of our own private circle. We had only been at Chester a year I think when a Mr. Smith and family took a few acres of land of father and came from Shipton to reside a few rods south of us; and this and my brother's family were the only associates we had. This Mr. Smith was by profession a Christian of the Methodist faith, and at one time a colored man, and a good man he seemed, came to our place and word was sent us from Mr. Smith that Brother Barber was at his house and would preach to us in the evening of that day. Of course we at once accepted the privilege of hearing the gospel of truth proclaimed even though it were by an Itinerant and he not of our own color. He took for his text the passage in one of Paul's Epistles—"To be carnally minded is death but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." This was the only time in those five years of my father's residence in this township that we ever listened to anything like a gospel sermon. We had a small library of miscellaneous books and those were read and re-read until they were worn not a little.

(To be Continued Next Week.)

The late General Spinner was one of the most remarkable men of his active days. During the war, when excitement ran highest, he had his meals served him at the treasury building, and slept near the vault doors. At this time it was necessary to almost daily transport large sums of money from Washington to the sub-treasury in New York. Often $1,000,000 in greenbacks were in one shipment, and the express companies were charging "war rates" for conveyance of the money. At this the general remonstrated, but it was useless; the express company would not let up one iota and General Spinner becoming angry, exclaimed—"The treasury shall not be thus robbed. I'll have a line of my own." In his department was a trusty intelligent Irishman in whom the general was satisfied he could confide. That night, after all was still about the building, one of the general's valises was filled to its full capacity, a hack drove to the treasury and the trusted friend of the general was soon on his way to New York with not less than one million dollars in greenbacks. This was continued for several months and not a dollar was lost and the express company and the outside world were kept in total ignorance. Later an officer of the express company called on the general, who without divulging his methods, dictated his own terms, and the man, who at his own risk of his life had been the principal actor, assumed his old position at the department.

Ex-Alderman W. H. Sawyer is away in Michigan looking after his lumber interests in that locality.

Books and Bookmen.

Our city has some of the very choicest spirits among book lovers. Witness this gentleman. He has white hair; but a ruddy complexion and bright eyes. It would be a pleasure to know just how many books they have looked through, transferring contents to their owners mind. When LIGHT called upon him Mr _____ was feasting his vision upon a copy of a glorious edition of Dickens, one of those beautiful sets that Estes & Lauriat are sending out to readers. Close by was another elegant book, the Life of the late Lord Holland. There is nothing of a transient character in the books that he buys. They have the stamp of time upon them. He has stored his house with books, till the floor sags. Here he loves to sit and read and, I think, smoke when the hurry and bustle of the day has gone by. He says he hasn't been to an evening entertainment for more than twenty years. It is safe to say that there is no good wife to institute weekly dustings and other inquisitorial actions. Books from all quarters, but specially from England are visible everywhere. Sometimes a treasure gets mislaid and then our friend finds it easier to buy a duplicate than to look up the original book. When he comes into the store, it is to march directly to the desk and to announce his wants, and such wants. It makes the book lover's mouth water to think of the choice specimens that come from beyond seas to please the eye and fancy of "Ye olde bookworm." International copyright will not disturb him in the least. He does not write books; but how he does devour them!

New England Magazine for May, 89 Federal Street, Boston, Mass. Contents.

Walt Whitman at Daer,* Horace L. Traubel; The Old Red Schoolhouse,* Helen Lee; Farmer Morrison's Wife, Kate Putnam Os good; The Loyalists,* James Hannay; The Notes of Some New Eng and Birds, Simon Pease Cheney; The Mountain and Brahma, Abbie M. Gannett; Poor Little Miss Severance,* Fanny Louise Weaver, Early Dorchester,* Mrs. Bernard Whitman; A Fair Exchange, Dorothy Prescott; The Alaskan Fur Trade, Charles Hallock; Bird on the Greening Bough, Clinton Scollard; The Dakota Metropolis; Lovejoy—Hero and Martyr,* Thomas Dimmock; The Oldest House in Washington,* Milton T. Adkins; Some Old Newspapers, O. S. Adams; April and May Sketches, Catharine Thayer; My Lady Wentworth, Adeline A. Knight; The Ways of Life, W. F. Dole; The Sweet Singer of the Hospitals, Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer; Editor's Table; Omnibus.

*Illustrated.

The Modern Priscilla, Lynn, Mass. Price 50 cents per year. A paper certain to please all who see it, especially the feminine part of the household, for it deals in nothing but fancy work and decoration. All sorts of questions are answered in its pages and the price brings it within the means of every one.

St Nicholas. For young folks. Conducted by Mary Mapes Dodge. The Century Co., Union Square, New York. One of Emily Dickinson's gems is on the first page after the Frontispiece. "The Siege of Calais," fully illustrated. The second paper "The Land of Pluck," is one of the best in the number. All who like history will look it over a second time. The continued stories have their space well filled. "The Boy Settlers" have an exciting time with the buffalo, and Toby Trafford goes a little farther with his scheme of boat keeping. A new story is begun, "Chan Ok; A Romance of the Eastern Seas." "A Lesson in Happiness," "A Turning Point," "A Diet of Candy," and a short story for the very little ones make up this number, in story line. Then the paper on "My Microscope," is one of the instructive as well as entertaining ones. The illustrations are so fine that one turns to look at them a second time, and then again. The letter box, and the puzzle page have their usual number of bits for those who always turn to them first. The poems are always good, and taken as a whole it is a fine magazine.

Good Housekeeping published by Clark W. Bryan & Co., Springfield, Mass. Price $2.40 per year. Miss Parloa's fifth morning in the kitchen treats entertainingly and usefully of the important subject of Meats and Vegetables. Mattie M. Boteler tells somewhat graphically of Nancy Kalometer's "Business Venture in the Boarding-house Line." A Lewis Wood gives the history of the original and only "Mother Goose." "Tea Drinking Customs Abroad," is the subject of No. V of the valuable "Household Table Drinks" series. No. IV of "The Science and Art of Modern Etiquette" treats of "Calls and Cards." A page of "Successful Family Gardening," by Annie Wade Westbrook, will be found both timely and useful. "A Baby Basket" forms the illustrated feature of No. IX of "Fashion and Fancies." "Home Treatment for Common Ailments," No. II, gives many useful directions for every-day occurrences in connection with the ills "that flesh is heir to." "The Weekly Wash," is well done by Edith Minter. "Miss Prudence Smith's Cook Book" dates back to a time when cook books were not so plenty and so poor as now. Besides these mentioned are papers on almost everything that can interest the housekeeper. China painting, needlework, medicine, fashion, wives, husbands, stories, questions, and verses, all to suit the taste of its many readers. Whoever cannot find something to please must be hard to suit. Good Housekeeping is a large magazine and filled from cover to cover.

Mr. Elwyn Fowler of Brewer, Me., an alumnus of the Perkins Institute of Boston has recently visited friends in Worcester. While here he presented the merits of "The Mentor" a magazine, now in its first volume, managed by educators interested in the Institute, and is an excellent epitome of information as to the progress of education among the blind. It was begun in January and the first number has an introduction by Julia Ward Howe. It is under the care of the Alumni Association, and is published at $1 per year. Inquiries may be addressed to J. W. Smith, secretary of Publishing committee, No. 37 Avon Street, Boston, Mass.

The Cottage Hearth published by the Cottage Hearth Co., Boston, Mass. Price $1.50 per year. Another letter from Africa is an interesting feature of this number. Two pages of instructions for beginners in knitting. Talks to the girls, short stories, two pages of music, and many little bits of information. There are the usual number of poems and the letter box and recipes at the end are full of interest as usual.

The Ladies' Home Journal is at hand and has a picture of maid and blossoms on the first page. A new story is begun this month and promises well thus far. The story of a Literary Woman is one of the best articles in the paper, she says, "It is just as easy to be on time as ten minutes late, and if you want to succeed you have got to work hard." A sketch of Mrs. Depew and her portrait come in order. Then a page on woman's work, a chapter of the story "A Golden Gossip," a page of hair-dressing with illustrations, everybody is told how to move, but it never can be made pleasant with even such explicit directions as are here given. The editorial page, the "King's Daughters," "The Talk With Girls," and the "Mother's Corner" are all they ought to be and more. Lace and painting, fashions and flowers, and the columns for questions are full of entertainment and instruction for all readers. The Journal deals with all classes that can possibly ask any thing of its pages. There is a supplement this month. Philadelphia, $1 per year.

The Century for May. Contents.

Portrait of Emperor Nicholas I., engraved by G. Kreull, Frontispiece; Game-Fishes of the Florida Reef, pictures by Victor Perard, C. F. Holder; Illusions, Robert Underwood Johnson; Salons of the Empire and Restoration, with nine portraits, decorations by A. Brennan, Amelia Gere Mason; The Squirrel Inn, I, pictures by A. B. Frost, Frank R. Stockton; Poetry, O. C. Auringer; Visible Sound, I, Voice Figures, pictures from photographs taken by the author, Margaret Watts Hughes; II, Comment, four diagrams, Sophie B. Herriek; Of One We Love or Hate, Maurice Francis Egan; The Faith Doctor, (Begun in February), Edward Eggleston; Ballad of an Old Pine, John H. Bozer; Louisa May Alcott, with three portraits, Josephine Lazarus; A Bulgarian Opera Bouffe, pictures by the author, portraits from photographs by Karastoyanov, Sofia, F. Hopkinson Smith; In Disguise, Frances Louise Bushnell; At the Court of the Czar, in two Parts, Part I, decorations by George Wharton Edwards, George Mifflin Dallas; A Heavy Maid, Louise Morgan Sill; Exhibition of Artists' Scraps and Sketches, with thirty pictures by the exhibitors, William Lewis Fraser; Old Gus Lawson, picture by E. W. Kemble, Richard Malcolm Johnston; The Confederate Diplomats and their Shirt of Nessus, a chapter of secret history, John Bigelow; Pioneer Mining in California, picture by Harry Fenn, E. W. Kemble, A. C. Redwood, W. L. Dodge, A. Castaigne, with suggestions from paintings by Nahl, and from Punch, E. G. Waite; In Beaver Cove, Matt Crim.

TOPICS OF THE TIME.

International Copyright Accomplished, Lobby Evils and Remedies, The National Conference of Charities and Corrections, An American Cheap Money Experiment.

OPEN LETTERS.

Certain Criticisms of Certain Tales, James Lane Allen; The Negro in Nashville, C. F. Smith; Homeopathy and "Expectant Treatment," C. H. Oakes; "Does Vivisection Help?" Thomas W. Kay, Mary Putnam Jacobi, M. D.

BRIC-A-BRAC.

Observations; Friend and Lover, M. A. De Vere; To a Thermometer, W. D. Ellwanger; Ashes, J. C. Miller; The Latest Indian Outrage, drawn by E. W. Kemble; When Youth Mounts, E. Singleton; Love's Young Dream, G. D. Litchfield; Fame, C. H. Crandall; The Survival of the Fittest, V. F. Boyle.

The May Century begins a new volume, and in it are begun several new features of what The Century calls its "summer campaign." "The Squirrel Inn," by Frank R. Stockton, is one of the principal and most popular of these new features. The "Inn" itself is carefully depicted in a picture which is the joint product of the artistic skill and ingenuity of both the author and Mr. Frost, the illustrator. Mr. Frost brings out also several of the principal characters of the story—which promises to be one of the most curious and characteristic of Mr. Stockton's inventions. The long promised papers (two in number) on the Court of the Czar Nicholas I. are now begun, the frontispiece of the magazine being a portrait of the Emperor Nicholas. These papers are by the late George Mifflin Dallas, in his day one of the most distinguished statesmen of the country. A brief sketch of his life appropriately accompanies this paper. Mr. Dallas describes minutely the social movement and the luxury of the court. He tells of "A Dramatic Visit from the Emperor," who came to see him incog., on the minister's arrival, "A Court Presentation," the "Burning of the Winter Palace," "The Russian New Year's," etc. These papers furnish a remarkable contrast to those by Mr. Kennan. More of California Life follows, as ever replete with interest. Mrs. Mason's "Salons of the Empire and Restoration" will arouse much pleasure in those who love to read of France. Many a reader will feel his circulation quicken over "The Game Fishes of the Florida Coast." Rebellion students will turn with profit to John Bigelow's article on the "Confederate Diplomats and their Shirt of Nessus." "Visible Sound" is a valuable article worth reading.

Table Talk for May is at hand, with a list of suggestions of good things aggravating in the extreme, until one sees how plain this bright little magazine makes their preparation. Its culinary and household departments are teeming with good things, demonstrating as usual its position as the American authority upon these subjects. We call attention to a few of the many good things contained in the May number. "Berries—How to Prepare, Keep and Use Them," "A Chapter on Co-operative Housekeeping," "A Bridesmaid's Luncheon," "A Yellow Luncheon," "New Menus for May," "Informal Afternoons," "How the May Queen Sups," "Housekeeper's Inquiries," "Fashionable Luncheon and Tea Toilets," "Dining Here and There," and many other things to interest the housewife. Published by Table Talk Publishing Co., 1617 Chester Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Everyone fond of hunting, fishing and canoeing, and those interested in natural history, fish culture, rifle and trap shooting, and owners of dogs, who like to read interesting, instructive and practical articles on these subjects, should read the Amateur Sportsman, a magazine published monthly at one dollar per year. Each number of the Amateur Sportsman contains numerous practical articles—many of them illustrated—that should be read by every lover of the gun, rod and dog. Send to the Amateur Sportsman Co., 6 College Place, New York, for a free specimen copy.

An advertisement in The Argosy, Georgetown, British Guiana, Feb. 14, 1891:

Notice.—It is a fact indubitable, that in Heaven there is but one church of the redeemed, and that no drunkard is permitted to enter therein; and the worst of it is, that the rejected will find no rum-shops in hell. So look sharp you drunkards, and avoid such a state; for the rich man could not get even cold water to quench his thirst.

ALEXR. CUMMINGS, N. D.

10th February, 1891." Worcester might take notice and profit thereby.

Electric Plants.

Some time ago at a grand evening opening in a large dry goods store in a neighboring city, there happened a very funny thing and we give it to you as told us. During the evening when the crowd began to lessen and things were getting a little dull, one of the bright boys employed by the firm took it into his head to have a little fun, so telling his companions to watch the sport, he walked towards the door and in doing so encountered an elderly man who was looking at the sights. Walking up to him he remarked, "Pleasant evening, sir, have you seen all the wonderful things we have displayed here tonight." Receiving a negative answer, he politely asked the man to step down to the rear of the store and examine a wonderful plant that the firm, at great expense, had just received from Africa. The plant by the way was a large Palm and in no way different from many seen in our city. The man followed the clerk to the plant and was then told to carefully take hold with one hand, one of the long leaves and then with the other hand another leaf, and gently press them, not too hard or he would receive a very severe shock. The man did as ordered and jumping back, looked with open-mouthed wonderment at a plant that was thus able to give him such a sensation, and remarked, "By George, that is wonderful. I never saw the likes of that before," and then he went his way, only to return shortly with others to see the great electric plant. Such is the power of imagination. All the electricity there was in the whole affair was in the way our smart salesman did the thing.

Old Clocks.

Mr. A. H. Howard of 16 West Street, has just imported two very fine old time keepers from England. During a recent visit to the fast anchored isle, he was much pleased with the ancient looks of some of those horologes and so left an order for two when good ones could be found. These are beauties, one in polished oak, is about seven feet in height. It has a silvered face with the days of the months indicated in the semi circle over the dial. The case was made most carefully long ago, being exquisitely inlaid with mahogany.

The second is, probably, the largest house time-keeper in the city. It stands eight feet in height, of most skillfully wrought mahogany. The case is fully two feet wide and the dial is just one foot in diameter. A revolving disk gives the days of the week, with landscapes and buildings. In the four corners of the face are pictures, representing Europe, Asia, Africa and America. Within the dial, there is a very realistic view of the death of Abel at the hands of Cain, certainly a tragic scene; but hardly the one to inspire a love for time. Both are eight day clocks, the one in oak made by Benj. Smith of Leeds, and the other has on the dial the words, "Batterfield, Godmoreh." The one drop of alloy in Mr. Howard's pleasure at possessing these pieces is the fact that they have no pedigree. He would like to know just when and where and how, etc.

Principal Thompson of the Ledge Street School, spent last week in Brockton, his former home.

Apple Blossoms.

BY N. A. M. ROE.

Oh, tell to me, withering blossoms,
What has your mission been?
Have you kept one heart from sorrow?
Have you saved one soul from sin?
What was the trembling message
You left at the kitchen door
For the baby who laughed at the snowflakes
That fell on the sanded floor?

Did you give of your purest honey
To plenish the cup of the bee?
Did you cover the treetops with beauty,
That blossoms none might see?
I found in the churchyard yonder,
Some petals of pink and white,
As I knelt in the long waving grasses
That covered my baby from sight.

Did you know that my sunshine was darkened?
That sorrow my heart would wring?
Did you come from the Heaven above me
A message of love to bring?
Oh, withering apple blossom,
I bow to the King above,
Who thus through the darkening petals
Has taught me a lesson of love.

—Cottage Hearth.

Bishop Brooks.

Our new Bishop has long been noted for the quickness of his repartee. As to a recent foreign trip, he proclaimed himself as about to go abroad with a large party. The significance of the reply is evident when we learn that his single companion, Dr. McVicar, of Philadelphia, is considerably taller than himself.

Only a few years ago, he was in England with Dr. McVicar and a third clergyman nearly as large as Mr. Brooks. So great was their stature they excited general remark as they walked together in the streets. One day they found themselves in an interior city and also found the city billed to the effect that a local clergyman who had been in America would give his impressions of the Americans. Our friends determined to go; but lest they might excite too much attention by their considerable size, they concluded to go in separately, thus occupying seats in different parts of the house. The talk was well enough save where the lecturer remarked that he had found the people considerably below the ordinary stature. He said, "I can't give any reason for this; but I simply record a fact. Possibly there may be some one present who can bear me out in my statement." There was a pause. When giant No. 1 arose, saying, "I am an American. I am six feet tall, but I never noticed that I was conspicuous in stature. Perhaps there is another American here who can sustain my impression." He was followed by an appreciative titter as he sat down. Then Dr. Brooks arose to say, "I, too, am an American. I am six feet, two inches in height, yet I never thought myself so much above the common level. It is barely possible that an American even taller than myself is here." There was pronounced laughter as he subsided. Then Dr. McVicar unfolded his six feet and four inches of height and began, "I also am an American," but he could go no further, for his voice was drowned in shouts of laughter which completely discomfited the local clergymen.

Col. A. G. Bullock has been nominated as an overseer of Harvard University

"An Instance."

July 15. How little we know one day what may happen the next.

For instance, yesterday Hugh had been to the postoffice in the morning and came in to dinner with an open letter in his hand, which he gave to me, as he took his seat at the table.

After I poured Hugh's coffee, and waited on the two boys, I read it. It was from Ellen Woods, Hugh's cousin, who lives in Chicago.

She wrote to say she was not feeling well; that the doctor had advised her to get into the country, and as she was told the part of our State where we lived was very healthy, she was going to make us a visit; she would be with us on the 14th, that was yesterday.

"Why, Hugh!" I exclaimed, "that is to-day! She will be here this afternoon."

"I suppose so," said he; "cheek of her anyway, to come up here now—when we are so busy—and lug along those young ones."

"How many has she, Hugh?" I queried anxiously.

"I'm sure I don't know: four or five, anyway," he replied, with a grimace, as he helped himself to a second plate of beef.

I had meant to rest in the afternoon, and read a new book after my dishes were done. I was going to let Ted and Bob go into the hayfield with their father, and I anticipated a good time with my book. I had just had my new hammock put up in the shade of the big maple just north of the house, and all the morning I had thought of the comfort in store in the afternoon—but, here all was changed.

To be sure, Ellen was no favorite of mine; in fact I did not know her very well anyway. When we first married and lived in Illinois, we were neighbors of her folks, and I used to see her when she came home to visit, that was all. But I could not help that she was coming here, and coming that very day, and I must prepare for them. I did wonder how many they were.

I had bread enough for ourselves—but not enough for company—part of a cake and pie.

I hurried my dishes, built up a big fire in the stove in the summer kitchen, made two big loaves of baking powder graham bread, made a lot of rhubarb pies, and a layer cake; then I thought, as I had a good fire, I would make some cookies; I baked a four gallon jar full, and when they were done I was about as well cooked as they were; my head ached and my feet were burning like fire.

I cast regretful glances at my hammock every time I went into the pantry, for from there I could see it, hanging empty in the cool shadows.

I arranged the dining room, and then, with a pail of soft water and an armful of towels went up stairs to prepare the rooms. All done, I went to my own room, with just ten minutes to rest before dressing.

I sat down in the darkened room, where the cool breeze stole through the shutters dropped my head back and slept till the sound of Hugh calling "whoa," to the horses, brought me up with a start. I dashed cold water over my face and neck, brushed my hair, slipped quickly into a calico wrapper, and got down stairs just as they all came trooping into the hall. Ellen, tired and warm, with a ten-months old baby, cross, and fretting; following her came Marguerite, a tall girl of fourteen, sallow-faced and thin, with big grey eyes in dark hollows. Then there burst into the house four boys, ranging from twelve to five, armed with hoops, bats, bows and arrows, and the largest with a parlor rifle. My heart sank within me, but I tried to look glad, and greeted them as warmly as I could.

I took Ellen and the girl to their room. The boys would not go up, but dumped their burden in the hall, and rushed out doors.

I went to prepare tea, which I soon had ready for them.

When all were seated, there was Ellen and six children of hers, Hugh and I, our two boys and two hired men, making thirteen altogether. As I surveyed that row of hungry mouths and thought of all the standing over hot fires it meant for me, I felt like going off and hiding.

After supper Hugh went after the baggage, three big trunks, and while he and one of the men lugged them up stairs, I sat down and tried to talk to Ellen.

I remarked upon the heat.

"Oh! it was so hot and dusty on the cars; I am just tired to death," she replied, in a thin, fretful voice, as she rocked the baby, trying to get it to sleep.

I asked her if she would not sit out on the porch, as it was cooler there.

"No I couldn't endure the night air," she answered.

Conversation flagged; I was too tired to talk, and I think she was. I made faint efforts to keep up a conversation and to be agreeable, as I sat sweltering in the hot room, when out on the veranda I could see the moonlight and hear Hugh and the men talking.

"You burn kerosene, don't you," remarked Ellen. "I do hate the smell of it so. Why do you use it?"

"What should we use?" I asked, "we have no gas in the country."

"Candles, of course," she replied, with a slight curve of the lip.

"Candles?" I asked in amazement. "Why, no one uses candles nowadays."

"Oh, there, that is just what it is to live in the country; one never knows what people are doing at all. Why everyone of any pretensions burns candles now; not the old fashioned candles, but wax candles with the loveliest little shades; they are so nice."

I asked about her mother, to change the subject, and we talked about her and the old neighbors until she went up stairs to put the baby to bed. She said she thought she would not come down again, if I would excuse her, as she was so very tired. I soon went to my own room and to sleep, from which I was awakened by a great clatter and rumpus on the stairs, made by the young Woods as they went down.

Soon our ears were saluted by the faint crack of that rifle, followed by the squealing of a pig, and the loud shouts of the boys.

Hugh hastened down, half dressed, and found one of a choice lot of Berkshires with a broken leg, and Herky—Herkimer his name is—dancing a regular war dance around the wounded animal, and as pleased as pleased could be, to think he had succeeded in using his gun with such effect as to bring down his game.

Of course the pig had to be killed. As good luck would have it, the hired man had a big fire and lots of hot water, so he and Hugh set to work at once to dress it.

Hugh took the gun and locked it up. Herky was very indignant, but Hugh was firm.

Just as breakfast was ready, there was a sound of crying and screaming outside the kitchen door, and John and Ollie, the two youngest of the Woods, came in wet to the skin their clothes dripping puddles of water all over my clean floor. They had sailed chips on the water in the horse trough, quarrelled and tumbled in. Ellen sent Marguerite up to change their clothes, and the rest of us sat down, the baby keeping up a fretful whine all through the meal.

After breakfast I said to Ellen she would have to entertain herself as best she could, for I had all the work to do, as we could get no girl.

She took the baby into the parlor, and I heard some of the youngsters drawing tortured tones from my organ. I had forgotten to lock it, but I resolved I would do so at the first opportunity, and I did.

Being in the pantry after a time, mixing bread, I heard a great racket, and glancing out I saw the four Woods boys standing in my new hammock, while Ted and Bob were trying to capture them. Two of the Woods boys held open knives in their hand, making feints at striking those on the ground. It made my blood run cold, to see them swinging and swaying about on their uncertain foothold with those open knives.

I took my hand out of the bread, and calling my two boys, went with them out to the barn and begged Hugh to take them with him into the field, which he did.

I baked pies and cake, and prepared the vegetables for dinner, making hurried visits to the parlor between times.

When my bread was in the oven, and a big kettle of beans bubbling on the stove, I went up stairs. It was half-past ten, and the thermometer marked ninety degrees on the north porch. I hurried my work in my own and the boys' room, and then stepped along and took a peep into Ellen's room. I was in the hopes they had cleaned up their rooms, but, what a sight! they had not done one bit of work. In the middle of the floor, on my new carpet, lay those wet clothes, just as they had been shoved down over the feet of those boys. I picked them up, and on the fawn-colored ground of my carpet, was a big blue stain where each suit had lain. Clothes littered the chairs and bed, the trunks stood open, a towel stood over the edge of the wash bowl, leading a tiny, trickling stream of water to the floor. The bed had not even been thrown open. I put the room in order, and as I stepped into the hall to go into the other guest room, my first breath gave me a smell of burning bread. I flew down stairs and was just in time to save the whole baking from incineration.

I had barely time to hurry on the dinner, and when it was ready I was too warm and tired to eat.

I sat at the table, and when the rest were all gone, I drank a cup of tea, and ate a little.

I dreaded the dishes, but that great pile of crockery must be cleaned, and right away, too—so at it I went.

When the kitchen and dining room were once more in order, I went up and made the bed of the Woods boys.

Done at last, I went to my own room, bathed, changed my dress, and went down. Hearing Ellen's voice on the porch, I went out then and found her trying to quite the baby, who is teething and the hot weather makes him very cross.

"Why Cousin Annie where have you been all day, and what have you been doing to get so warm and red?" asked Helen, as I sat down.

I told her I had been baking.

"Baking? what makes you do it? Why don't you buy bread? I never let cook bake when it is hot."

I said that in the country we could not buy.

"Oh dear! I would't live in the country for anything!" said she.

I thought I would like to try my hammock, so I asked Ellen to move her chair around to that side of the house.

As we came in sight of the hammock, behold Maguerite in it, with my lovely copy of Longfellow, which Hugh gave me last Christmas, turned backward and folded together as she read it. That was too much for my equanimity, and I asked her to hold it in a different manner if she wished to read it.

Remarking, angrily, that she did not care to read it anyway, she closed the book and threw it on the ground. I went and picked up my poor abused treasure, finding one corner broken, the back loose, and a big grease spot on the fine Russia cover. I felt like crying.

To-night, Hugh said he would go and see if he could not get a Jones girl to come over and help me. But neither of them could come as their mother and the baby were both sick.

I ought not to have spent all this time writing, but all the house was so warm, and I was exhausted from the heat, so I opened every door and window to the utmost, and sat down to write. I feel rested some now, and the night air has cooled the house. I will shut the doors and go to bed.

August 1. Such a time as I had with those boys, and those Wood folks in general, was a caution!

I had to keep going from early morning until late at night to keep the work done, and something cooked to eat. Hugh did his best to get a girl, but could not, as it was just in the midst of haying-time, and everyone was busy. And for the same reason, Hugh could not help me much himself, or spare either of the men. They brought all the wood, and water, and churned, and took the big pans of milk up from the cellar; in fact, did what they could.

Such a reign of terror as those boys of Ellen's inaugurated; The first day was a sample of those which followed—from one day's end to the other they were into some kind of scrape. They let the hens out to destroy my garden; they played ball in the front-yard, and broke a three dollar pane of glass; they fell into the pond, by turns, narrowly escaping drowning: they rode the calves; Herky tried to ride the colt and got kicked; they let out the pigs: they broke all the eggs, until I had to buy some of Simmons.

Ellen languished in the parlor, or on the veranda, all day long never saying much, except to grumble at the country and its disadvantages.

Hugh declared every night that it must end, but I did not want to seem inhospitable, even though I must work hard to care for them. I did not want to offend her; I thought every day, she would get tired of it all and go home. But she didn't seem to feel worried over the escapades of the boys. The baby was very cross, and required all her time.

They staid ten days and such days!

I baked, and cooked, and every blessed day I went up and put their rooms in order; never once did they lift a hand to help. I picked up books, and hats, and handkerchiefs, fans from every chair and table in the house. The floor was strewn with wreckage. One of the boys stole in the cellar, and while drinking from a pan of milk let his hat fall into it, while another poked about in my jar of cream to see what it was, using a dirty stick, and his equally dirty fingers. I had to buy butter, but I kept the cellar locked after that.

Ah, me! how long those days did seem.

At last, one morning when they had been here ten days, I woke up with a sick headache of the most pronounced type. I felt so sick I did not care for anything, and when Hugh came up, after they had breakfast, and said he was going to take Ellen to the train, I didn't think or care much about it; only I felt a vague sense of relief, even amidst the green colored mists of sick headache. I was sick all that day, and the next day was Sunday, so Hugh staid about the house and tended to things, while I rested; I was fairly worn out.

Monday morning I went about looking things over. Everything from one end of the house to the other was dirt; dirty finger marks on every door and window, my best chamber carpet with those big blue stains in the center of it, my Longfellow ruined, and my hammock! I had never used it once, and it was all torn to pieces. The boys had put the big dog into it, tied him in and left him there. He had gnawed his way out, leaving very little of that hammock but a big hole.

Hugh said he sent Ellen off in such a way that she will not be apt to come again.

Well, on the whole I am not sorry. I like to be hospitable, but I do not like to be forced to entertain a horde of strangers.—Women's Work.

Worcester boys, A. H. Bullock, G. W. Knowlton and T. L. Nelson, Jr., participated in last Saturdays Interscholastic Games in Cambridge.

In "Field and Forest" for April 30, Dr. George McAleer of this city has a most interesting sketch of trout fishing in Maine. Next to doing a good thing is the ability to tell it well. Dr. McAleer excels in both respects.

There is always something new at the Davis Art Company's Store on Pearl Street, opposite the Post Office. This time, the special attraction is a fine line of new moldings. There are some most exquisite designs in pink and silver and in ivory and gold. They are, in form and tint, specimens never seen in Worcester before. Then to fit these new designs, you may select from a wide range of engravings and etchings.

On the Decease

Of three Eminent New York Divines.

DRS. HOWARD CROSBY, E. D. G. PRIME AND S. F. SPEAR.

Nob'e trio, gone to God,
Saved by Jesu's precious blo'd,
Ye walked well the road ye trod.

Now, from earthly trials free,
Ye enjoy the harmony
Of the blood-washed company.

Our brave Crosby, Prime and Spear,
Would ye linger longer I ere,
And forego that godly cheer.

April's early beauty sends
Its skies tears on tearful friends,
But o'er all, its rainbow bends.

Let that bow of promise light,
Christian pilgrim, now your sight;
Heaven has no death, nor n'ght.

—A. Lovett.

VOLAPÜK.

A terminal omitted from list in LIGHT, April 25.

-üp, periods of time. Cilup, infancy. Tid-üp, course of instruction.

Vocabulary (continued.)

Normän,	Normandy.
Novasän,	Nova Zembla.
Novegän,	Norway.
Nubän,	Nubia.
Nugän,	Hungary.
Nujotlän,	Nova Scotia.
Nurugän,	Uruguay.
Nusuelsän,	New Southland.
Nutuvän,	Newfoundland.
Paragän,	Paraguay.
Pärsän,	Persia.
Patagän,	Patagonia.
Pebaltats, Pebalän,	United States.
Pensilvän,	Pennsylvania.
Peruän,	Peru.
Polän,	Poland.
Räbän,	Arabia.
Ragentin,	Argentine Republic.
Rakadän,	Arcadia.
Rilän,	Ireland.
Romakinän,	Roman Empire.
Rumän,	Roumania.
Rusän,	Russia.
Särbän,	Servia.
Sardän,	Sardinia.
Sax,	Saxony (kingdom.)
Saxän,	Saxony (province.)
Sibirän,	Siberia.
Sikilän,	Sicily.
Silän,	Iceland.
Silop,	Asia.
Skandinän,	Scandinavia.
Spän,	Spain.
Stilasean,	Pacific Ocean.
Sulümelop,	South America.
Surän,	Syria.

George S. Bennett of this city will compete in the next Hyde Oratorical contest at Amherst.

Mr. J. Q. Maynard of Brooklyn, but formerly of Worcester, has prepared a very valuable sketch of the Hanson Place Methodist Church and Sunday School of that city. It is fully illustrated. He has sent a copy to his old Park street confrere of Worcester, Mr. Charles H. Carpenter.

J. A. Long

WANTED.

The Space now occupied by our line of

Baby Carriages

We wish to CLOSE THEM
OUT

THIS * WEEK.

They will be offered at Prices that

WILL SELL THEM.

J. * A. * LONG,

Franklin Square

FURNITURE ROOMS,

555 * MAIN * STREET.

Household.

In the desire to train children in the way of neatness many people make the little ones at bedtime carefully fold each garment taken off. It is a mistake to do this, as the clothes need to be thoroughly aired during the night. The child may be taught to hang them up on low hooks and thus acquire orderly habits.

Dining by candle light and the call for waxen candles in the parlor and boudoir has increased the demand for quaint and antique sconces and candelabra. The single sticks are not scorned. They vary from ten inches to four feet in height and are shown in plated silver, brass, bronze, hard wood and Dresden china. The three branch candelabrum is ever popular. In plated ware they may be had for $12. Two branches are $10 and five branches $17. The banquet candelabra are twenty-five inches high with seven branches and cost $40.

In sterling silver these beautiful candlesticks sell by weight. You can get a chamber candle for the modest sum of $40 but it will be beautiful and valuable in 1991, when the flesh that now is will be grass. Choice candelabra are $230 and a pair for the dinner table will cost the buyer $3000. Candlesticks sell in pairs, the very simplest at $32 and the most elaborate at $400 neither twenty inches tall.

A good egg beater may be spoiled by ill treatment. If washed in hot soap and water which takes the oil out, it will not work well. To keep it in good order, wash it by beating a dish of cold water or hold it under a cold water faucet; this will remove egg, cream or dough better than hot dishwater.

Steaming the face at night over a bowl of very hot water, and then bathing it with very cold water, is a simple method of given it a Russian bath, and will tend to make the skin whiter and smoother and the flesh firmer.

To keep glassware bright, wipe directly from the hot suds. Tumblers used for milk should be thoroughly rinsed in cold water before being immersed in hot suds, as hot water seems to drive the milk into the glass and give them a dingy appearance.

The best thing to clean tinware is common soda; rub on briskly with a damp cloth, after which wipe dry.

Use a clam shell to scrape pots and frying-pans with.

To restore strong ham to its original freshness, slice and soak over night in milk, either sweet or sour.

In purchasing canned goods it is a safe rule to observe whether the head of the can is concave, a bulging appearance being indicative of decomposition.

A man's way of patching a hole in a table cloth would probably be to sew on a piece; a woman's way is to patch the piece on with starch and then smooth it with a hot iron.

If the throat is very sore, wring a cloth out of cold salt water, and bind it on the throat tightly, when going to bed; cover it with a dry towel. This is excellent.

Lard is sometimes adulterated with alum, starch and lime water. When pure, it is completely soluble in benzine, has no burnt taste or odor, and melts without sputtering to a clear fluid.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H. Howland, D. D. S.

Dentists. 11 Pleasant St.,
Worcester, Mass.

Residence, 61 West Street.

PREMIER
SAFETY
BICYCLES.

Not because they are English
but because they are Best.

JOHN A. LOWE, Agent, 630 Main Street.

The Readers of Light
I most cordially invite
To call at my

Model Drug Store

When in want of anything
They would expect to find

In a metropolitan establishment of its kind.

Respectfully,

Geo. E. Fairbanks, Druggist,

10 FRONT STREET.

W. H. TWICHELL,
Gold, Silver and Nickel
Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechanic St., Worcester, Mass.

ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING

Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,
Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.

Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold on commission.

MRS. S. M. KEYES.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,
BOOK * BINDING *
OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.
387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES
at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,
W. L. BROWN, Manager.

Beginnings.

In the West, SIOUX CITY.

We did not have any log cabin experiences such as are usually associated with stories of western life. This little city in which we began life together, named after the tribe of famous Sioux Indians, can boast of a population nearly one half that of Worcester. It is likewise built on crests and hollows that were once part of rolling, treeless prairie land. These little heights and depths reminded us more than anything else of our esteemed home. But the muddy Missouri river flowing every year nearer and nearer to the heart of the city was an entire stranger to us.

After some very ignorant hunting we find ourselves cosily settled for a few days in a large dilapidated looking building whose exterior presented a rusty, tumble-down appearance but was, indeed, neat and clean within owing to the thrift of our kind hearted landlord and his active little wife.

He was a good natured, portly gentleman, apparently carrying about with him that famous umbrella of T. B. Aldrich, "a wide spreading, hopeful disposition."

He took a fatherly interest in us, actuated partly by the kindly feeling of kinship held by two persons coming from New England and meeting in the West, as they had both come from New Hampshire.

A man actually asked me, "Do you know Mr. Brown who lives out here in the country a little ways? He came from Boston." I felt very sorry to tell him no, and disappoint his bright hopes of uniting friends.

One evening, the report spread throughout the city that the river was again changing its course and was undermining First Street. We caught up our hats and hurried to the scene of excitement overtaking many others, and finding thousands already there on the banks. Having no property to be destroyed, I fear we selfishly enjoyed watching those angry waters as they broke off large slices of coast directly under our feet and swallowed them up. Indeed, I thought it was sport to stand, till a big crack under my feet warned of danger and with a backward spring, I would watch the crack grow wider and wider and slide off to build land somewhere else. A large force of men was soon called into action. Great carloads of small trees were unloaded and bound, together with rock, by wires and thrown into the water to turn its course if possible. Already some of the St. Paul railroad had been swallowed up, and a part of First Street gone. After a few days of earnest work the river consented to go elsewhere and I could imagine how hungrily it rolled on its way looking back to say, "I've had some good bites; next year I'll come again," as indeed it seems to take from Iowa and give to Nebraska and then change about the next year.

One day, we hired a queer little two-wheeled vehicle determined to take a ride. But O, those roads! Those that had not been paved were full of deep gulleys, and after a severe rain, some of them were creased with deep fissures such as an earthquake shock makes. But the principal thorough-fares of the city had a hard even paving which we discovered was made in a very different way from our paving. We saw a street set off with a "no passing" sign and we watched the process one day. We noticed the piles of round blocks upon each side of the street, and we saw how the men had dug a long stretch of level below the curbing. Then they laid long boards till the street was covered; upon those were placed the wooden blocks close together and the chinks filled in with sand. This made, when completed, a very fine bicycle road.

Our good landlord bought for our use a snug little cottage not far from the center of the city. It is strange that many people considered blinds a luxury rather than a necessity as there were many blindless houses. We insisted upon that one comfort at least, but when it came to the luxury of water, we were obliged to go over or under a neighbor's fence with a pail, somewhat after the fashion of Jack and Jill. That process proved to be so humbling, we sawed a hole in the fence, and felt quite satisfied with our labor. But in the morning—where was our convenient little gap? Our neighbor on the opposite side rather resented the invention of something in which he was not consulted, and had strongly nailed us out with bars. Indeed, we could not climb over now as that would show a greater degree of meekness than we possessed and so we had a well driven for us, as they drive them there. It seemed to be a long pipe with one perforated end which was driven into the ground by a heavy weight till water is found. The water in this part of Iowa is very limey, but clear and cold. The lime water after repeated usings in the tea kettle will line it with a white coating of matter till it looks like porcelain within.

During the month of October, a festival was prepared for King Corn. Such a beautiful palace as was constructed of corn, different colored husks, cobs, ears, silk, kernels cut in every variety of shape and arranged in pretty designs and words or symbols. Then the streets were very attractive. Many windows of the business stores had fanciful objects, such as would advertise their business arranged in them, from corn pigs in the market windows, to corn bags of money at the banks, etc. As this year, 1888, was the first of the Corn Palace exhibition, the citizens earnestly hoped that the president, Cleveland, would be present at its opening, but he did not attend till many of the beautiful things were torn down, although the palace was still standing. A tribe of Sioux Indians were in the parade but were not allowed to have a war dance by order of the War Department at Washington, it was said. They were rather frightful to look upon with their war paint and feathers—one would scarcely care for a nearer acquaintance.

This city has very large stock yards from which cattle and horses are sent East. Sundays were days usually selected for driving these animals as there would be less travelling upon the streets. One Sunday, we watched a herd of horses that came trotting and running past our house. They certainly must have driven those cow-boys to desperation while they, on their part went every way but the direct one and returned over the road surely five times. The last that we saw of them, they were taking different roads towards their old homes apparently. I don't know what became of the drivers; I shouldn't want to hear what they said.

There are beautiful homes in that city and that year there was a real "boom" as they call it. Real estate owners were making thousands of dollars. We found that all dry goods were a little higher there and groceries too, but meat was cheaper. We often bought the tenderest steak at ten cents a pound and large turkeys for half a dollar. But although we could have a Thanksgiving turkey so often, yet we longed for the old fashioned Thanksgiving in New England where the loaded table had grandpa at its head, surrounded by children, grand-children and great grand-children and all were very merry after the feast. Such Thanksgiving gatherings as these will always linger in the warmest corner of our hearts. 'CLASS of Sr.

MAPLE SUGAR.

FLACTEM.

Some days since I was stopped on the street by a man who claimed to have maple sugar—the pure article. I did not doubt his statement, for it was then time that new sugar was in the market, but I did not sample his wares.

Some years since I was in the midst of the sugar making district of Vermont, and was initiated into the pleasures of the sugar party. Did you never go? You know not what you have missed. How eagerly the trees are watched when the first warm days of spring come, and fortunate is the man whose sugar orchard faces the south for he gets the benefit of the early market.

Passing over the sugar making, the crowning event of the season is the sugar party. When the warm spell comes early and there is plenty of snow on the ground, the conditions are good for a first rate time. For what is better than sugar on snow?

The invitations had been issued and the day was at hand. The team was waiting to gather in the guests. For up there, hospitality knows no bounds. They almost compel you to come in. All day long preparations had been making; sugar there was in abundance, and big pans of doughnuts were ready. Now the fun begins. Four or five persons surrounding a pan of snow, make a merry company and as they feast on doughnuts and sugar, conversation does not lag. Many are the bright things said and he must be a queer person who goes away with a long face. Even the dog and cat come in for their share. Did you notice that dog the next day? Like some children he had grown up with the idea that it is improper to refuse anything sweet, so he gets a piece of sugar from each one present, till he has gorged himself, and for the next few days pays the penalty for his one night's enjoyment.

But after all is it the sugar that makes this a delightful meeting? I trow not. It is rather the throwing off of all reserve and formality, and the interchange of friendly conversation where "friend holds fellowship with friend". That year among the hospitable Vermonters will long live in my memory.

Mr. E. A. Kirkpatrick, a student at Clark University, contributed an article "Children as Teachers," to a recent number of The Open Court, a Chicago publication.

FURNITURE AND CARPETS,
355 Main Street, Worcester.

50 PIECES

Five-Frame

Body Brussels

With Borders to Match,

$1.10 Per Yard.

Baby * Carriages.

Our styles the best, and you will not find any like them in any other store in the city. Carriages, $10, $12, $16, and upwards.

Eddy Refrigerators.

The best in the world. 1847—Established 44 years—1891. These Refrigerators have every possible improvement, and are the MOST ECONOMICAL USERS OF ICE. They have DOUBLE COVERS. Don't buy a single cover Refrigerator, unless you want large ice bills. PRICES REASONABLE.

One hundred Ladies' Folding Work Tables, marked down from $2 to $1.25. These are a first class Table, hard wood and polished top, and sold to close at 75c. discount from regular price.

PINKHAM & WILLIS,
355 MAIN ST.

Goods sold on four months' time at cash prices.

Camp Life.

[A High School composition written in the second year.]

As all vegetable and animal life need food in order to live and be thrifty, so does the mind. After having used this power forty weeks, it must have a time to rest and gain strength if it wishes to continue its work, and as the health of the mind depends a great deal on the physical development of the body, some place must be found where for a time books may be laid aside, the brain given a chance to rest, and the healthy development of the body attended to.

Such a place, I think, will be found in a camp situated among hills and near some lake or river, several miles from any city, so that the air will be pure and such amusements as swimming and athletics may be freely indulged in. Gymnastics and a little military drill may also be added as they serve to keep the body erect, thus giving the refuse matter which has passed into the lungs an unobstructed passage out and away from the body. Thus we will not be, as many of our forefathers have been or are, as old age creeps upon them, bowed over and suffering from many diseases whose cause may be traced to the neglect of bodily health in their youth.

In a camp with a little military discipline the tents are inspected at least once every day which necessitates their being kept clean and also the ground for several rods around. As an uncarpeted floor, rustic beds, mattresses filled with new straw, plenty of good wholesome food and good air tend to maintain health, a camp answering these conditions must be a good place in which to pass the summer months that are so disagreeable to persons who must remain in the city where the air is generally bad, the heat intense and the chances for such physical exercise fully out of the question.

There are frequent lectures on interesting and at the same time instructive topics, visits from learned and experienced ladies and gentlemen, practical out-door lessons as fishing, hunting, trapping, rowing and swimming. The last amusement, making it possible to save at some future moment not only the life of the possessor but perhaps the lives of other fellow beings, cannot but strengthen the body and at the same time elevate the mind.

In going to a camp of this sort, each person should be provided with blankets, customary summer underwear, plenty of stockings, an overcoat, a rubber coat, bathing tights, soft felt hat for bad weather, hair brush and comb, clothes brush, tooth brush, shoe brush and blacking, handkerchiefs, pins, needles, buttons, thread, scissors, string and many other such articles although care should be taken to carry only what is thought to be absolutely necessary for comfort.

Some may say that when so many young people get together they will contract bad habits, but I think the good effects of camp life will greatly overshadow the bad.

Camp fire stories on such subjects as the Indians, the War, wild animals, birds, reptiles, fishes and the like will help the hearer greatly in after life in talking intelligently about nature. Here the earth and heavens may be studied to great advantage.

Camping for the past four years has helped me in many ways, one of which is the production of this composition which if camps had not existed certainly could never have been written.

H. F. F.

J. W. GREENE,
PLUMBER.

Dealer in Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces. Steam and Gas Fitting. Jobbing in all its branches promptly attended to. Telephone Connection. 51 Main Street, Cumming's block.

BICYCLES.

Agency for Standard Wheels.

195 FRONT ST.

L. J. ZAHONYI,

Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

STARKIE'S DYE HOUSE,

12 Layard Place, (Old Stand,) Worcester.

Ladies and Gents' Garments

DYED * AND * CLEANSED

in a Superior Manner.

Harness and Saddlery,

RELIABLE GOODS
and LOWEST PRICES.

R. McALEER & CO.,

155 MAIN STREET.

PHOTOGRAPHER
*****

Children's
Portraits
A Specialty

326 Main, op. Mechanics Hall

F. S. BLANCHARD & CO.,

* PRINTERS. *

Book, Newspaper, Catalogue, Church, Society, Wedding and Commercial Printing of every kind executed in the best modern style.

No orders too large; none too small.

154 FRONT ST.

Horace Kendall,

DEALER IN

Furniture, Ranges, Carpets

AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Goods sold on instalments if desired. Prices as low as any house in New England.

No. 319 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Mechanics Hall Building.

School and College.

Harvard.

The annual drawing for rooms has taken place, and, as usual, most of them have fallen to the entering class.

The programme of the Harvard Summer Schools has appeared. During July and August twenty-one courses will be given, mainly in Chemistry, Physics, Geology, Civil Engineering and Modern Languages. By the way, the importance of Pedagogy is realized here for a course in normal training is to be established.

At the University Athletic meeting the two mile bicycle record was lowered to 5 m. 46 1-5 seconds, and the mile run to 4 m. 34 1-5 seconds. Track athletes are certainly in vigorous condition this year, and the Molt Haven Cup ought to stay here.

The nine has been doing poor work lately. Saturday it defeated Amherst 6-2, though out balled. Monday Stag bought his nine here, but played practically the whole game himself. Harvard won, 11-5. The schedule for May is announced; there will be eight games in Cambridge, and five away. Right on top of this comes a letter from Yale, refusing to play the Harvard games; the reason seems to be that Harvard will not play Princeton. It is too early to express any opinion in the matter, but it seems likely nevertheless that the games will be played. Harvard has hard luck in her effort to reform amateur athletics, but lower the standard she will not.

One of the things at Harvard which outsiders, or even alumni, know little of, is the Harvard Rowing club. Rowing is no longer confined to the crews, but open to everybody who cares for it. This club has a magnificent boat-house on the Charles river. The house is two stories high, with broad veranda's, marble shower baths, large dressing rooms, etc. The boats are either shells or wherries. There are thirty-two of them, single sculls, doubles, pair and four oars—and can float about eighty men at once. Since the formation of the club, rowing has become very popular, and the men undoubtedly derive great benefit from it.

Mount Holyoke.

Professor Playfair McMurrich of Clark University gave a lecture in the college chapel on "The Life History of a Jelly-fish." It was delivered in an exceedingly interesting and clear manner to an enthusiastic audience.

Professor Kimball of the Worcester Polytechnic Institution has finished his course of lectures on electricity and light. They were delivered before the Juniors, but many an outsider crept in to hear the popular professor.

The Seniors are busy with plans for commencement which begins the 14th of June. '91 graduates a class of fifty-four, which is an increase over last year but smaller than '89.

Wellesley.

The last two weeks have been very exciting ones, for a new plan is being tried in the allotment of rooms for next year. Beginning with the Junior class, lots were drawn for the right of choice. Naturally the one having the first choice was afraid she would not make the best of her opportunity, while the one having a high number feared she would not be able to get into the same house with her friends. The excitement is over at last, and the senior class begins to feel as if it were almost graduated.

April 25, Mr. Stepniak spoke about the condition of Russia. At the close of his lecture his wife told us a little about the life of an educated Russian girl.

May 2 the Symphony Orchestra gave a very fine concert.

Holy Cross.

The monthly elocution exercises took place last Saturday morning. Among the speakers were T. A. McGovern, J. F. Ryan, J. F. H. Mellen and W. J. McLaughlin of Worcester. The afternoon was enjoyed as a holiday.

Thursday the 7th, was Ascension Thursday and a holiday of obligation.

The ball game arranged with Boston College for last Tuesday was cancelled at the last moment. They play at Milford, Saturday, the 9th.

Polytechnic.

The all-absorbing subject the past few days, has been the escapade of one week ago last night. It has been a long time since so many Tech boys have been concerned in a lark, and every body is asking every body else how much the fiddler must be paid. War, on the part of the Faculty, and rumors of war, have filled the air. Every remark and motion made by a Professor has been discussed, and cussed too, sometimes, from one end of the school to the other; held to all lights, that whatever vague prophecy it contained regarding Faculty action, might be exposed. One professor told his division that if anything came up about Friday's fire and parade, he should not befriend the boys, and the unusual good-nature displayed by another has been taken as a forecast of evil. However despite the threats direct or indirect made by individual members, the general opinion prevailing is that the Faculty will entirely ignore the matter. The boys worked off their surplus vitality, enjoyed themselves hugely, kept outside the Institute grounds, disturbed no one, damaged no property. Every precaution was taken. The fire department was notified; guards were placed at the alarm boxes, and proper permission obtained from the City Marshall for the parade.

However, what the out-come may be, all the participants have the recollection of a glorious good time. The only drawback was that after all the care taken to keep the affair quiet, two of the local dailies came out the next day with a statement that it was done with the full consent of the Faculty. This spoils the joke. The exercises about the fire were well gotten up, and caused much sport for the spectators. Among other things two choruses were sung, written and learned for the occasion. Besides the undergraduates, about ten '90 men were present, including Lake from Harvard.

The students were a good deal disappointed at the poor showing made by the Institute nine last week Friday. To be sure it was the first time the members had ever played together, but even then, 30 to 6 was too hard a clubbing altogether. Financially the game was a success, nearly fifty dollars being made for the Athletic treasury.

The Juniors are very much elated at having won the Cross Country Banner. Until they saw their standing at the end of the first run, such a victory was almost unthought of. Finding that '94 had withdrawn from the contest and although 28 points behind the Seniors, they made a great effort last Wednesday and came out victors with but six points to spare. These runs have been unusually successful, many having entered and much interest displayed by the school at large. They have bought out several new runners, and have been a good thing in every way.

Wednesday afternoon a party of about twenty girls from the Home School Woodland Street, visited the Institute causing quite a flutter alike of excitement and hearts.

Business at the shop is rushing to such an extent, that a second type-writer has been engaged for the office. The use on the part of the students of the telephone has increased again in proportion, that instrument being stationed in the office.

The school nine plays the Groton Academy boys at Groton this afternoon. It is hoped the players will not be as badly frightened as they were at the Harvard game, and a victory is anticipated. A few changes in the make-up of the team have been made. Southgate will play 3rd base in place of Lincoln and Gardner '94, will take his place. It is expected a game may be arranged with the Worcester Academy sometime next week, and one with Brown in the near future is talked of.

Next week Saturday the Institute field sports take place on the Fair Grounds. The contest for first place lies wholly between '91 and '93, and is generally conceded to '91. '93 however, is quite encouraged at its victory in the Cross Country runs, and will make a strong effort to again come out winners.

Owing to bad weather and a general combination of circumstances, but one of the class ball games has been held. '92 will probably be the champions, as their chief opponents, the Juniors, thanks to a "masterly inactivity" on the part of the captain of the nine, have had hardly any practice; have played no games together, and bid fair to suffer defeat.

The annual meeting of the Y. M. C. A. was held Thursday noon. The reports of the various committees showed that there is at present a membership of 99, of which number, 38 are active members. The following officers for the ensuing year were elected: President, Heard, '93; vice-president, Bishop, '94; corresponding secretary, C. E. Goodrich '93; recording secretary, Brayton '92; treasurer, L. C. Smith '92. A meeting is to be held Sunday afternoon at three o'clock which will be addressed by delegates from Brown and other colleges, and possibly the State Secretary.

Prof. C. A. Brackett of the Harvard Dental School lectured Monday evening, May 4, before the Worcester Dental Society, on "Micro-organisms," at the monthly meeting of the society at the Lincoln House parlors. There was a large attendance. Dr. Brackett is well known as one of the best dental surgeons in New England, and his highly instructive lecture was listened to with great interest. A supper followed the meeting. Dr. Brackett was the guest of Dr. A. C. Hull.

RICHARD HEALY

WOULD BE GLAD TO ANNOUNCE THAT HE HAS

JUST RECEIVED A VERY EXTENSIVE ASSORTMENT OF

Middle Age and Old Ladies' Wraps

At Unusually LOW PRICES.

512 * Main * Street.

Sergeant Jasper.

LORT MOULTRIE, 1776.

Sergeant Jasper over the curtain
Leaped to the ditch through the battle cloud.
Little he recked if death was certain,
He'd the fallen flag for a winding-shroud.

The brazen throats of the squadron thundered,
But the patriot cannon held their breath,
Till Jasper bearing the staff, shot sundered,
Rose out of the smoking pit of death.

And then the guns roared in acclamation,
Over the garrison's wild hurrah,
And all day marking the birth of a nation,
Flashed above Moultrie that single star.

It is not the triumph of Alexander,
Or Napoleon's lauded logostic feat
Or strategy of some dead commander
Who turned a flank by a feigned retreat

That inspired men to deeds of glory,
To look on death with a scornful laugh,
But a living song or a household story
Like Jasper's leap for the fallen staff.

—Francis Zuri Stone.

PETERSHAM, MASS.

Miss Janet L. Howard whose studio is at 379 Main Street, is the teacher of drawing in the public schools of Weston, Mass. This takes her from the city Mondays and Tuesdays till July 1st.

June 5th will be the 88th anniversary of the Worcester Light Infantry. It will be celebrated with a street parade, a dress parade on the Common and a banquet in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence White and daughter of Leicester leave for their new home May 22d. They go to Tacoma, Washington, where Mr. White will engage in business.

Frederick H. Howard, Worcester's well known baritone, sails for England, Saturday, May 23d, on the Scythia. He will be abroad at least a year, and may cross over to Leipzig and Vienna, to pursue his studies. He will take up concert and oratorio work, and later give his attention to operatic singing in which he has been so successful during the last season with the Agnes Huntington Comic Opera company. Mr. Howard will be accompanied by his mother, who will remain with him during his stay. Miss Sophia E. Harrington of Millbury also goes with them. She goes for pleasure and will remain abroad several months. Mr. Howard's many friends in this city wish him a pleasant voyage and the greatest success in his musical study.

Mr. Wm E. Starr of this city attended, last week, the semi-annual meeting of the Actuarial Society of which he is the only Worcester member. The membership of about fifty gentlemen extends throughout the United States and Canada. The sessions extended over April 29 and 30. The retiring President was Mr. Sheppard Homans, whose paper on "Longevity" has been noted in LIGHT. He was succeeded by Mr. D. P. Fackler of New York.

Three Worcester boys are members of the Brown University Glee Club which is to appear in Association Hall next Thursday evening—R. W. Drawbridge, E. G. Dexter and J. Walther. Mr. Dexter is president of the club. All are former members of Worcester Academy.

Prof. T. E. N. Eaton.

The proposed retirement of Prof. Eaton from his place at the Polytechnic is an event of no little significance. Since the going West of Principal Thompson, this is the first break in the ranks of the original corps of instructors. That the position has been an exceedingly wearing one, all those will testify who have had the pleasure of Prof. Eaton's acquaintance. Three years since, he was obliged to ask and obtain a year's leave of absence and this was spent in his California home; but the respite was not long enough and now he feels the need of an effectual ending of class-room work. He has made many friends in his Institute life and hundreds will follow him in fancy to his Redwood home. Few men ever inspired more respect in the minds of young men than our Professor, and all of us wish him and his that rest and happiness that they deserve as they take their journey toward the setting sun. His son, George, will continue his course at the Institute.

Lawyer Henry L. Harris and wife have returned from their Virginia trip.

The second of the series of Demorest prize medal contests took place in Horticultural Hall Monday evening. Miss Elsie McCallum won the prize. The contestants were Blanche Peck, Eva Dansereau, Winnie Smith, Frank Hall, Elsie McCallum, Eva Greene, Ada York, Millie Kingston, Hattie Merrill. The program was varied with musical selections by John O'Connell, Daniel F. Gay and Mrs. F. W. Ruggles. The judges were Rev. D. H. Stoddard, Charles M. Smith and Mrs. W. E. Bowen. The next contest will take place June 8.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

W. S. Cleveland's famous Colored Minstrels are booked for one performance at the New Worcester Theater Monday evening, May 11. Cleveland has three minstrel companies on the road at present, and is the most successful manager in this line of amusement in America. He has spared no expense in forming these large organizations and presents to the public an excellent entertainment. The Colored Minstrels are composed of the leading colored comedians, singers, dancers and musicians, who are all well-known here. This will probably be the last minstrel company here this season. The grand street parade will be headed by an excellent brass band.

"McCarthy's Mishaps," attracted a large audience at the New Worcester Theater last evening and will be presented for the last time this afternoon and evening. There is a wide difference between this laughter-provoking play and Sol Smith Russell's "Poor Relation." Ferguson and Mack, the comedians who head the company, which is above the average, are naturally funny and deserve the success they have met. Miss Lizzie Daly's specialties are very amusing and little Vinie Daly's songs and dances came in for a large share of the applause.

Sol Smith Russell had a large and enthusiastic audience Wednesday evening. "A Poor Relation" pleases Worcester audiences immensely.

Those who attend the concert to be given by the Brown University Glee, Banjo and Mandolin Club next Thursday evening in Association Hall will enjoy some good music as well as some merry rollicking college songs. The program consists of fourteen numbers as follows:

Pride of the Regiment,	Huntley
Banjo Club.
Come, Lets Dance and Sing,	Wentworth
Glee Club.
{ a Spanish Galopade,	Pirani, Arr by Romero
{ b Serenade Barcarolle,	Monti, Arr. by Romero
Mandolin Club.
Serenade, (whistle, Mr. Webb)	Gow, '84
Glee Club (Solo, Mr. Llewellyn.)
{ a In the Garden,	Sprague
{ a Call John,	W. B. Bradley
Messrs. Webb, Lincoln, Ide and Walther.
A Credo,	{ Words, Wm. N. Thackeray
	Music Thayer
Glee Club.
Ranime Waltz,	Corliss
Messrs. Brown, Corliss, Paine and Norton.
Brown Boating Song,	{ Ferris, '91
	{ Colby, '91
Glee Club (Solo, Mr. Ide.)
{ a If You Love Me,	Sprague
{ b Silently we Steal Away,	Arranged
Messrs. Webb, Lincoln, Ide and Walther
Pride of the South,	Lansing.
Banjo Club.
Don't Any More,	{ Words, Blake, '88
	{ Music, Colby '91
Glee Club, (Solo, Mr. Lincoln.)
{ a Sueno De Amor,	Granado Arr. by Romero
{ b Bolero,	Trot re, Ar. by Romero
Mandolin Club.
Massa's in de Col' Col' Ground,	Arr. by Foster
Glee Club.
Good Night,	Abt
Glee Club.

Smith's

Gloves.

To glove the hand is only the first step; the glove should be a perfect fit. Few toilet rules are more essential than this. We make a feature of fitting at our glove counter. Add to this the benefit of the lowest prices for fine gloves in this city, and you have the reason why our glove business is so large.

EDW. L. SMITH & CO.,
401 and 403 Main Street,
Walker Building, Cor. Mechanic.

Bigelow & Longley
COR. MAIN and ELM STS

We want an earnest word with the men of Worcester today.

We want to tell you something that we believe will be of the greatest advantage to you.

We want to tell you something that will give you positive pleasure, but will be a positive saving to you in the long run.

We want to do this for the purpose of winning your confidence by showing you in what way we determine to deserve it.

We are not satisfied with the ordinary methods in general use in the clothing trade.

Neither are you.

CORRECT CLOTHES all men want, and think they get, no matter whether the price be great or small.

CORRECT CLOTHES means that the cloth, trimmings and sewing are of the best for the money.

CORRECT CLOTHES mean that they are made upon true and well defined lines that give you a certainty of perfect fit.

CORRECT CLOTHES will give you honest service honest value for your money, and will give us honest pride in selling them to you.

CORRECT CLOTHES cost a little more money than the shams so often forced upon you, but it won't take long for you to see that the shams are the dearest all the time.

CORRECT CLOTHES are the beginning and the end of our business faith; nothing else can be found in our store.

We invite you to see them and test all we say. If you do not find our CLOTHES exactly as we say, return them and get your money.

CORRECT CLOTHES at FAIR PRICES will win your favor in the long run.

CORRECT CLOTHES are always ready for you here, at the least possible price for quality.

Bigelow & Longley

About Folks.

South End News.

Mr. Walter Perley Hall spent last Sunday in Boston with friends.

Mrs. F. B. Knowles, Misses Fanny and Mabel Knowles and Master Lucius Knowles leave May 16, for a protracted European trip. Their many friends wish them a pleasant trip.

The band of Kings Daughters connected with Piedmont church, met with Mrs. H. L. Miller on Benefit street Thursday afternoon.

The many friends of Miss M. Edith Sessions will be pleased to learn that she has recovered from her recent illness.

The Academy Base Ball nine play the nine from St. Marks Academy on the Grove Street grounds, Saturday May 16, at 3.30 p.m.

Miss Alice B. Buckingham and Miss Florence B. Buckingham leave May 13th, to enjoy a months' visit in Philadelphia.

Dr. Franz Boaz, of Clark University, finished his measurement of the children of Woodland street, Monday afternoon. Over 570 pupils were measured.

Mr. Charles Powell, of Oread Place, a nine year old son of Mr. A. M. Powell, of the Powell Plainer Co. broke his leg in three places, Monday, through the carelessness of a bicyclist.

Mr. Arthur J. Bassett was in Boston Monday and Thursday of this week, on business in the musical line.

The Sewing School connected with Piedmont Church gave an entertainment in the chapel Wednesday afternoon, consisting of songs and recitations by the classes, and an exhibition of the work done during the season.

The Young Men of Piedmont church are to give a supper and entertainment in the church vestry next Tuesday evening. As this is to be the last sociable of the year, the young men hope that their friends will turn out in large numbers.

A Problem.

In one of the South End grocery stores there has been a Talking Doll on exhibition. The "Talking" is done by one of Edison's small phonographs. By simply turning a crank, the doll was made to repeat the verse "Old Mother Hubbard" etc. The doll was to be given to the person who should guess nearest to the correct age of the doll, as given by Mr. Edison. The seal on the box was broken last week by a law student and the age found to be, as given by Mr. Edison. 4 years, 10 months, 21 days, 13 hours and 43 minutes.

Of the many hundred that guessed, two came so near, that the firm is undecided as to the ownership of the doll. One of these, we will call her "A," guessed 4 years 8 months, 12 days, 7 hours and 10 minutes. The other, "B" guessed exactly 5 years. The question is as to who is the nearest.

The problem was given to the young ladies of Miss Kimball's Home School, but they were unable to agree. It is given to readers of LIGHT in the hope that it may be of benefit and amusement to them.

Stanley Brennan is having a week's outing in Northampton.

GREAT

Clearing-Out Sale

— AT THE —

NEW YORK

Dry Goods Store,

234 and 238 Main St.

Our entire Stock of Dress Goods, Linens, Garments, Lace Curtains, Hosiery, Underwear, Notions, Etc., must be turned into Cash immediately. There has not been a time for 30 years when a dollar would purchase so many Dry Goods as at the present time.

$15,000 worth of Dry Goods

AT WHOLESALE PRICES.

Z. F. Little & Co.,

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

Flannelettes!

Why, we always said they were the handsomest Cotton dress goods ever made to sell for 12 1-2c.

Our opinion is approved by hundreds and hundreds of ladies all over New England who come, or send for them every day in the week, and every week in the month.

The wisdom of the maker is shown in the high character of the patterns, the harmony of colors, the true taste shown in design, and the constant raising the standard of excellence in every direction.

If the word "grand" can ever be applied to a cotton dress goods, then surely it belongs to these very Flannelettes, for they are up, way up, above all others of their class; 12 1-2 cents a yard, all they cost.

Printed Pongees are lovely; they are not grand, they "are just lovely."

Delicate gowns of light shade, with dainty little flower or figure gracefully wrought. 30 inches wide; they are so pretty, 12 1-2c.

Some of them have rich dark grounds, with bright effective figures, 12 1-2c also.

Parisian Crepe is another Cotton goodness. If you like the wavy effect, why then this will suit you better than the others; light grounds and suitable designs, all are at their best, and all please the eye; spots and figures in striking effects characterize these Crepes.

The Parkhill Zephyrs look every much like Scotch. They are worth your buying, 15c a yard.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

The Week.

CITY.

May 1—The First of May and the first of may sell liquor under license. A busy day for the sellers and for the police. John Manning killed by James Quigley on Myrtle Street in a drunken brawl. The business opens characteristically.

County Convention of Christian Endeavor Societies concludes.

2—Worcester's carnival of folly continues. License sits enthroned. Truth, as usual, on the scaffold. Will these things ever be righted?

3—Rev. W. V. W. Davis preaches an appreciative discourse on the late Philip L. Moen. Several ministers as the Rev.'s Southgate, Powers and Worth preach on the revelry of drink now in progress.

Dr. Emerson Warner and wife reach home from an around the world trip.

4—In the closing minutes of the day, a fire breaks out in Star Clothing Company's store, 389 Main Street.

5—Henry W. Miller rounds out fifty-nine years of residence at corner of Pearl and Chestnut Streets.

Very cold day and night; but no frost.

Mount Holyoke Alumnae meet in the parlors of Central Church.

6—Aaron S. Taft elected commander of the Continentals.

Pictures of proposed new Post Office received. Everybody disgusted.

David Alley, a resident of Lynn, dies suddenly on Channing Street. Had come to visit his daughter, Mrs. Arthur G. Fiske. 69 years.

First Presbyterian Society celebrate the first anniversary of Pastor Akinson's stay with them.

7—St. John's Church choir gives cantata "Spring Holiday" successfully in Mechanics Hall.

COUNTY.

May 1—Millbury like Worcester indulges in a frothy beer opening.

Mrs. Lucinda H. Sawyer of Millbury dies. 80 years.

2—Spencer, as Worcester, having a rum deluge. When will it subside?

Mr. Luther C. Wheeler dies in Uxbridge. 62 years.

3—Mrs. Oliver Hale of Hubbardston dies. 83 years.

4—Dr. A. P. Stone of Springfield gives annual address before Millbury's Natural History Society.

5—George L. Gibbs a prominent citizen of Whitinsville dies. 54 years.

Mrs. F. A. Kehew, wife of editor of Clinton Enterprise dies of La Grippe.

S. W. Wheelock and wife of Uxbridge celebrate golden wedding.

6—Miss Martha Makepeace of West Brookfield dies after a long illness, a member of one of the oldest and most respected families in town.

COMMONWEALTH.

May 1—The Legislature, under the lead of Ledyard Bill, who by the way is a good one, defeats the Salary grab bill.

Discussion as to successor of Bishop Brooks at Trinity Church now in order.

A great dinner at Young's Hotel, Boston, in honor of General B. F. Butler.

2—Would be saloon keepers in Pittsfield in a stew because Mayor Hibbard will not sign their licenses. They have not complied with all the formalities. That is right hedge them up.

3—Parnell emissaries address a small audience in Music Hall, Boston.

4—Legislature still anxious for more pay. Votes to reconsider late action.

Rev. Dr. A. A. Miner resigns pastorate of Columbus Avenue Universalist Church, Boston. Been there forty-three years.

5—Foreign corporation bill amended and engrossed.

Woburn's mayor refuses to sign liquor sellers licenses.

6—"Old Hutch" the Chicago wheat dealer entertains the crowd in bar room of Young's Hotel.

General Butler gets court recognition from Judge Nelson. Scores a point.

7—Ex-Postmaster Corse of Boston receives a complimentary dinner at Young's Hotel from Massachusetts Reform Club.

NATION.

May 1—French and Americans quarrelling over school question in Lewiston, Me.

Secretary Foster trying to force subsidiary silver coin into circulation.

2—President Harrison having a good time in California.

New York city has an entertainment in Madison Square Garden in behalf of the Grant monument.

3—Dr. Bothwell, the clergyman who has had a cork in his lungs two weeks, dies in Brooklyn.

Father Ignatius, the nondescript English priest, is trying to stir up a breeze against the Rev. Heber Newton of New York.

4—Charles Pratt, the Brooklyn millionaire, dies. Heart failure. 61 years. $15,000,000.

5—Nebraska's Supreme Court decides in favor of Governor Thayer.

6—Indiana elections indicate Democratic gains.

And now a certain party wants Jay Gould's life or $60,000. Low price for the millionaire.

Twenty-ninth annual convention of Y. M. C. A. meets in Kansas City, Mo.

7—Chilian insurgent steamer, Itata, sails away from San Diego, Cal., with United States Marshall Spencer aboard. More work for Mr. Blaine. How he has to hustle!

WORLD.

May 1—Bismark elected to the German Legislature.

In spite of forebodings, the day passed without any serious labor uprisings in Europe.

2—Another of Queen Victoria's grand-daughters joins the Greek church. Sister of the Emperor of Germany and wife of one of the Royal family of Greece.

Chilian Insurgents form a provisional government.

In London 10,000 carpenters meet in Hyde Park. They talk and "Resoloot."

3—London laborers have a grand demonstration in Hyde Park. If this would only give them work!

Barry Sullivan dies in London. 62 years. All Europe Seething. Trouble ahead!

4—Deputy Roche, a fire eater, forcibly removed from the French Chamber of Deputies.

Clyde shipbuilders will reduce wages.

5—Dr. Wm. C. Magee, Archbishop of York, dies.

United States Minister Porter reported about to leave Rome for home.

6—Capt. Verney sentenced to a year's imprisonment for immoral practices.

William Jacques, an American, mobbed in the streets of Florence. Now, Mr. Blaine put in your protest.

7—Chili will fight it out. Those South American Republics are mere travesties on the word.

French torpedo boat sunk off Cherbourg.

SCHOOL AND COLLEGE.

Never was there greater interest in the educational world than now. Among those contributing to this commotion, no one name is so conspicuous as that of Harvard's president. While he has failed in his plan to cut the college course down, he has, by no means, failed in stirring up the public to the need of advance in this direction. Columbia College of New York is to let the last year of the college course count on the subsequent law course. In our hurrying age, there is a constant demand for more time. The only way we can get this is by closer application, earlier, or by the eliding of some, hitherto, deemed essentials in School and College work. There is no question that much time is lost in the earlier Grammar School days, through the necessity of keeping a large number of children abreast. This can hardly be helped, unless parents and teachers are vigilant and observing. The very best indication is the fact that people are talking and discussing and trying to devise ways of obviating. We are to have no crystalized Chinese systems that are the same yesterday, today and forever. Let the good work go on.

Rev. James McMahon, pastor of St. Andrew's Roman Catholic Church, in Duane Street, at City Hall Place, New York, made over, recently, to the Roman Catholic University at Washington real estate in that city and Long Branch valued at $408,000 over all incumbrances. Fr. McMahon has given this property to establish a school of theology. He is in his 75th year, and is about to retire from active work. For years he has been known as the wealthiest Catholic priest in the country. It is believed that he has a large property left, some say nearly equal to that he has just given to the university.

Senator Saxton of Clyde, N. Y., the framer of the famous ballot reform bill has been elected chancellor of Union University at Schenectady, N. Y. This office is purely honorary though it carries with it the degree of LL. D. This is a high honor for a man who had not the advantage of a college course.

A Bancroft Souvenir Spoon Has

After much careful labor been produced and offered to the citizens of Worcester that rivals all competition and puts to shame all imitators.

It was designed by Haverly B. Swart of the Burbank Jewelry firm, has been manufactured by W. B. Durgin, the well known silversmith, and is an exhibit of that degree of art and taste requisite to due credit to the object of the design.

It has been upon the market for the past five weeks, during which time it has had an unprecedented sale, and the factory has been taxed to its utmost in keeping up with our orders.

This is the only concern in Central Massachusetts that has a right to the Bancroft Spoon, the article and the design having been duly patented by us.

Let the public not be deceived, not be deluded by sounding brass or the tinkling symbols of others into the purchase of an inferior article, which at best can be but a poor imitation of our design.

The above cuts display the handle of the

Bancroft Worcester Souvenir Spoon.

The Medallion on the Front and the Birthplace on the Reverse side.

BURBANK, Jeweler,
Cor. Main and Exchange Streets.

School and College.

Amherst.

Amherst was a happy town when the day's events came to a close on last Wednesday. The purple and white was again victorious, and the championship banner appears likely to float from the Amherst grand-stand for another year. The day's events began with the competitive drill in dumb bell and marching movements by the Junior, Sophomore and Freshman classes. The Junior class, under command of C. E. Burbank, captain, carried off the prize of $100. The gymnasium was crowded with all the beauty of Smith, and the chivalry of Amherst and was a very pretty sight.

Owing to the death of Charles Pratt of Brooklyn, the new field was not opened, but the game was played upon Blake Field as of old. The men from Williamstown, in spite of vigorous and continual cheering, were not in the game at all after the second inning. The game was loosely played on both sides as is shown by the final score of 14-9. The Base Ball management ought to feel pleased with the result of the day if the size of the crowd is an indication of the profits. Mr. Rufus Woodward, '81, was an interested spectator of the game.

The Lester speaking in the evening drew a large audience to college hall to listen to the efforts of the Junior class. Two prizes were awarded; one of $50, and one of $25. The first prize was given to John Hiram Grant of Goldsborough, N. C., and the second to Charles E. Hildreth of Worcester. The speaking was of an unusually high order and the winners are to be sincerely congratulated.

The faces of several Worcester people have been seen in town today, among them those of the Rev. Mr. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Hildreth, Miss Hildreth, Mrs. Burbank, Mrs. Barber, R. S. Woodward and A. E. Eldred.

The Psi Upsilon Fraternity held its annual convention in Amherst, Thursday and Friday of this week, an event which has contributed also to the general hilarity.

George E. Bennett has just added himself to the honor roll of Worcester men here by being appointed one of the Hyde Fifteen for excellence of a written oration.

An event of considerable interest to the college was the election last Monday of the business manager of the Student. As the result of the election, anyone desiring to subscribe for the Student for the ensuing year, please address Charles E. Hildreth.

"Miss Emily H. Clapp, formerly a well known resident of Worcester, has become extremely popular in the Newton society. She is considered one of the handsomest girls in society now, and is largely entertained everywhere. She is a great favorite among all classes of society here, and many charming entertainments have been given at her beautiful home."—Newton Journal.

Hon. Edward L. Davis and family after their winter's stay in Boston, have returned to their Elm Street residence.

Shortly after the death of the late Francis T. Blackmer, his family went to Colorado to reside. Recently his eldest son, Harry N. was admitted to the Bar in Colorado Springs, the residence of Mrs. Blackmer.

HERE AND THERE.

Here the turmoil and the strife,
Woven in the earthly life,
Dark the way ofttimes appears
As speed on the fleeting years.

There the burdens all laid down,
And we'll wear the victor's crown,
Priceless gift no hand can wrest
From us there, forever blest.

Here we fight the hosts of sin
Pressing on the day to win.
See their banners waving high!
Courage, Christian, One is nigh.

There the cross triumphant stands,
Ever in Immanuel's lands,
There begins unending day,
Where life's fountains ever play.

—John C. Crane.

TO TAX PAYERS.

ASSESSORS' OFFICE, 17 City Hall.

Worcester, Mass., May 6, 1891.

To the inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay taxes in the city of Worcester:

The Assessors of the City of Worcester hereby give notice that their office will be open from the 6TH TO THE 16TH DAY OF MAY, inclusive, from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m., and from 2 to 4 p. m., and all persons liable to be taxed in said City, either in their own right, or as Guardian, Administrator, Executor, Trustee, or otherwise are required to bring in to the Assessors, within the time above specified, true lists of all their polls and personal estates not exempt from taxation.

Any person or firm taxable in Worcester for personal property, or who desire to make a return of mortgaged real estate, or Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, who are required to make returns, in accordance with Chap. 217 of the Acts of 1882 can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying to this office; but failing to avail themselves of the privilege of making their own returns according to law, within the specified time, must expect to be held strictly to the conditions of law relative to abatements.

HARRISON G. OTIS,
THOMAS TALBOT,
AMOS M. PARKER,

Assessors City of Worcester.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

WORCESTER, SS.

PROBATE COURT.

To the Next of Kin, Creditors, and all other Persons interested in the Estate of RUTH S. RUGG, late of Sterling, in said county, deceased, intestate: Greeting.

Upon the Petition of George W. Rugg of said Sterling, you are cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Worcester, in said County, on the third Tuesday of May next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased should not be granted to said petitioner, without the giving of surety or sureties on his official bond pursuant to the statute.

And the said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, three weeks successively, in LIGHT, a newspaper printed at Worcester the last publication to be two days, at least, before said court, and to send, or cause to be sent, a written or printed copy of this notice, properly mailed postage prepaid, to each of the heirs, devisees, or legatees of said estate, or their legal representatives, known to the petitioner, seven days, at least, before said Court.

Witness, William T. Forbes, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-eighth day of April in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

F. W. SOUTHWICK, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

WORCESTER, SS.

PROBATE COURT.

To the Next of Kin, Creditors, and all other Persons interested in the estate of JOHN RILEY, late of Worcester, in said County, deceased, intestate: Greeting.

Upon the Petition of Mary Riley of said Worcester you are cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Worcester, in said County, on the third Tuesday of May next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased should not be granted to said petitioner, without the giving of surety or sureties on her official bond pursuant to the statute.

And the said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, three weeks successively, in LIGHT, a newspaper printed at Worcester, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said Court, and to send, or cause to be sent, a written or printed copy of this notice, properly mailed, postage prepaid, to each of the heirs, devisees, or legatees of said estate, or their legal representatives, known to the petitioner, seven days, at least, before said Court.

Witness, William T. Forbes, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirtieth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

F. W. SOUTHWICK, Register.

The City's Jubilee.

Ring out the jubilation,
Ye slaves of appetite,
The joyful acclamation
That you can now be tight.
Saloons again are open,
And duty is ignored,
What need of better token
That freedom is restored?

While friends of truth were sleeping,
Devoid of proper care,
The stealthy foe was creeping
To sow the deadly tare;
Inmates now are spurning
Restraints of every kind,
To their old haunts returning
And leaving homes behind.

We often see them reeling
Along the public streets,
The sad results revealing
That free indulgence meets:
Nor is this all the glory
Of jubilee so grand,
It has a blood red story
That all can understand.

Have we the right of filling
The city treasury,
By tempting, maddening, killing,
And spreading misery?
The blood of slaughtered Manning
Is crying from the ground,
Is it not time for scanning
Where guiltiness is found?

Those who would not have trouble
From jubilees so great,
Their efforts should redouble
To bring a better state.
Did e'er an army sleeping
The victory obtain?
While fighting, not retreating,
We shall the triumph gain.

Around the World.

What won immortality for Magellan and Sir Francis Drake may now be done in a few months and, so far from being a source of discomfort, the trip is made purely for health and pleasure. For several years past, Dr. Emerson Warner and wife have spent the winter months in travelling. In this way, they have repeatedly been to the Azores; they have wintered in the Mediterranean and their last excursion was one around the world. To accomplish this they left New York, Jan. 7, in a White Star Steamer for Liverpool. Ten days were occupied in getting to the English port which they did not leave on the main journey quite so soon as expected. Meantime, they ran down to London and over to Paris; but it was not the ideal time for doing that part of the world; too cold.

It was Feb. 8, that the Empress of India, English built, sailed away from the Mersey with her one hundred and fifty tourists. The Bay of Biscay was tranquility itself. At Gibraltar, they halted for one day. Then they steamed up the Gulf of Lyons, encountering something of a storm, to Marseilles, where they again waited a day. At Naples they put in a day also. Thence down through the Strait of Messina and over the sea to Port Said, getting there on February 22d. To Africa, they devoted three whole days, going by rail to Cairo, where they made the acquaintance of Arabs and donkeys, by whose aid and in whose company they saw the Pyramids. Towards the southern end of the Red Sea, they encountered their first very hot weather. On the 8th of March, they touched at Columbo, Island of Ceylon, visiting from this city, Kandy and other places of interest. At Penang, an island in the Strait of Malacca, they landed for a day. This is the great center of the coconut trade. At Singapore  $1\frac{1}{2}$  degrees from the Equator, they also stopped. All along this tropical way, the heat was intense, but a judicious employment of carriage, enabled them to endure it. Next they went on to Hong Kong and here they remained seventeen days, a full week longer than was expected on account of waiting for the mails. But the time was not lost, for a run was made up to Canton, a place, the Doctor says, more crowded than anything he had ever seen or even supposed possible. He also found that the natives do not look at Americans with favor. Our peculiar laws are known there. The next stop was at Shanghai, the headquarters of the tea trade; a very beautiful country and the abode of many Europeans who are living here most luxuriously. Then come the Japan Islands. At Nagasaki, they halt for one day. This is a coaling station, but the coal is not of good quality. Thence they visit Kobe and Osaka, the latter thoroughly Japanese i. e. foreigners have changed it very little. Yokohama is visited and here they see one of the most extensive and beautiful gardens in the world. They are a day at Tokio and then, April 17, they steam out into the Pacific for Vancouver, getting there on the 28th. In the latter part of this period, they encounter some rough weather; but as a rule the sea was smooth. Tuesday night, on a special train, they start for Montreal, getting there Saturday night, the quickest trip on record. Thence down through the Dominion, Vermont and New Hampshire to Nashua and so home at 5.45 p.m., Sunday, just eighteen weeks after their leaving.

Another Worcester party, Mr. Louis Goulding, went on the trip and very likely Lieut. Bryan, U. S. A., counts himself as a Worcesterite. There were many Americans in the list, so many in fact that some of the English company indicated a degree of jealousy not very creditable to them. There were Majors, Colonels and Generals with titles ad lib, but after all they did not seem to improve the characters of the wearers. With a well browned face and a good appetite, the Doctor is a very good advertisement of the advantages of an around-the-world trip.

The April Phonographic Magazine of Cincinnati has a portrait and sketch of Mrs. Edna I. Tyler of this city along with specimens of her short hand work. A little more than a page is employed in telling the story of her childhood, which was largely spent in Louisville, Ky., and of her education in that city and in Cincinnati, where she acquired the art which she now so successfully teaches and practices in Worcester. Her father, the Rev. H. Winslow Smith was killed by the Indians in the Black Hills in 1876. He was a Methodist Missionary and as such was the first to preach in that section and the first to marry a couple with civilized rights. Mrs. Tyler reports for the courts and has an excellent reputation for correctness and speed. Her former instructor, Mr. Jerome B. Howard, the editor of the Magazine, writes very appreciatively of her work itself, judged by what she is doing, not from any partiality that an old teacher might have in his pupil's success. Her typewriter, up in the Walker Building, has clicked off many a copy and is ready to do the same for many more.

William Rogers.

Mr. William Rogers died last Sunday at his late home 19 Home Street after an illness of only a week. He was a Scotchman, born at St. Andrews in 1833. He came to this country when 16 years of age landing at New York. Massachusetts, however, has been his home for the most of his life and his business that of a gardener and florist. He first worked in Beverly and then was employed for six years by the late Mrs. A. D. Foster of this city. Then as a sugar refiner he worked in Brookline, and later for four years he was in the hardware business in Nova Scotia. Returning to this state he found a wife in Roxbury where he was married May 6, 1864. He has been chief gardener on private places in Stoneham, Swampscott, Middleton, Waltham, and again coming to Worcester he had charge of the private grounds of Mrs. A. D. Foster, till her death. Then instead of finding his chosen work elsewhere he preferred to remain in Worcester where his children were at school. So for the past three years he has been in the employ of Bush & Co. on Front street. He has ever been a hard worker, and conscientious in all his service. He leaves a widow, two sons William T. and John, and a daughter, May C. The funeral was Wednesday afternoon.

Bark.

Little Jack went to call one morning not long since, with his mother, and he heard several small dogs calling from a room to be admitted. He listened quietly for a few moments, then addressing his mother's friend, said: "Seems to me there's a good deal of bark out there!" "Yes! Would Jack like to have a little dog come in to see him?" "Yes he would!" So the lady brought in a very diminutive King Charles, perhaps three or four months old and which delighted Jack as he could hold it so well. "Say, does this little dog roam over the hills and through the valleys in search of game? do he?"

In School.

For English as she is "spoke" or "wrote" we need not go to Miss Le Row's book. Our children can give us examples, daily. During the recent examinations, one eleven years old says, "If a crater of ice cream cost so much," etc. She was rehearsing the questions of the morning. "A crater of ice cream," says a parent, "What's that?" "I don't know," replies the child; "but that is what the teacher said." Parent wonders what liberties have been taken with the English language, but does not solve the riddle till he sees the question which reads, "If a caterer's ice cream costs him" etc. Much that children effect to know, they have only the least glimmering of.

Mrs. F. B. Knowles will sail from New York May 16th, on the Etruria for an extended tour in the Old World. She will be accompanied by her two daughters and her son. They will visit England, Scotland and Ireland and then cross over to the continent.

ALWAYS ON HAND!

The freshest and best vegetables to be found anywhere, with all kinds of fowls and game in their seasons.

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass

EDWARD B. CLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

W. A. ENGLAND,

DEALER IN

FINE WATCHES,
CLOCKS, JEWELRY
& OPTICAL GOODS.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.

394 Main Street.

Worcester Dress
Cutting School,
45 Pleasant St.,

For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circular.

Mrs. L. F. Walch.

E. W. COFFIN,

Store Fixtures

10 Main Street, Worcester.
Name this Paper.

Julia.

I hear the fame of Julia's name
Wherever I may go
And all repeat the same refrain
"But Julia isn't so!"

Whatever faults others may have,
All folks have faults, you know,
It somehow, seems, if all say true,
"That Julia isn't so!"

She speaks a kindly word of all,
That's beautiful below,
Some beauties love only themselves
"Our Julia isn't so."

She is not very, very learned
You'll hear that where you go
Her greatest claim to lasting fame
Is "Julia isn't so."

— Sylvia A. Moss.

Emerson-Kniffen.

On April 7th in St. Thomas' Church, New York city, by the rector, the Rev. John Brown, Mr. William Byron Emerson of this city was married to Miss Alice Field Kniffen formerly of Worcester. Mr. Emerson is a member of the firm, Emerson, Low & Barber, envelope manufacturers on Foster Street, while his wife will be remembered as a High School girl, class of '88. At present their home is with Mr. Emerson's parents, No. 98 Chandler Street.

He Didn't Need Them.

Some years since, a gentleman of Worcester thinking that he needed spectacles called upon an optician and sampled a large assortment of glasses. Finally, he says, "How much for those," pointing to a pair at hand. "I can't sell them," is the reply. "Why not," says the buyer, "they are the only ones that help me in the least." "For this reason," says the salesman, thrusting his fingers through the bows, for there were no lenses in them. No sale made that time.

Then there is that irrepressible Mr. Dennis. He has interviewed over 5000 people and has only just begun. No one can help greeting him cordially and his request is so reasonable that no one refuses. "Little drops of water, little grains of sand, make the mighty ocean and the beautiful land." Mr. Dennis is after land and ocean too; at least LIGHT has a notion that way. He is getting a fine list of names. It will be interesting from the auto-graph stand point i. e. if James doesn't write some of the names himself. LIGHT feels confident that Mr. Dennis will return bearing what he went out after.

The purchase and removal to Worcester of a Philadelphia carpet making plant is a very significant event. Any thing that renders it possible for an additional laborer to earn money in an honest way is a boon. Of course we can be happy without additional factories; but every advance in this direction means just so much more wage earning, just so much more consumption. This coming is a small compensation for the blight of the saloon, under which we are to suffer for a year or longer.

J. N. Truda, the well known violinist, is to conduct an orchestra on one of the boats of the New York and Providence steamship line, this summer.

On Worcester Hills.

On Worcester hills the winds are clear,
Throughout the seasons of the year;
And, though at times a trifle cold,
They come with blessings manifold;
They lightly sway the white birch here,
And shake the chestnut by the ear,
And over mossy ledges steer
With vigor never growing old,
On Worcester Hills.

The pine tree holds their voices dear
Within its branches never sere;
And emerald-spring and autumn-gold
No measure of their wealth withhold
From these brave winds of peace and cheer,
On Worcester hills.

Millbury. — C. L. Cleveland

ORDER NOW

and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than a

EVANS & COMPANY,

Manufacturers of

Fine Monumental Work,

131 Central Street, near Summer.

THE CRITERION
Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE

permanently eradicated by the

ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,

92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

The Ware-Pratt Company

Invite attention to an extensive display of

Fine Clothing for Men, Boys and Children.

The Latest Fashions, Exclusive Styles from our own workshops, Honest Goods and the Lowest Prices, Grade and Quality considered.

Our Custom Department is teeming with the Newest styles, Colorings and Materials, which go to make up the finest lines we have ever shown.

The Ware-Pratt Company,

MANUFACTURERS AND RETAILERS,

408 and 412 Main Street,

Worcester.

NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.--A Great Fraternity.

Do you believe in a system of co-operation in which the whole profit is divided among the members? Then join the Non-Secret Endowment Order. It pays a sick benefit of $20 a week; a death benefit of $400; an endowment benefit of $500; at COST.

Incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts. State of the order March 18, 1891: Membership, 4915. Amount loaned for Relief, $15,290; Reserve Fund, $22,922.40; Balance of Relief Fund, $6,759.08; Total, $44,975.48. Men and women admitted upon the same terms. Four local assemblies in the city with a membership of over 600. Are you protected in case of sickness? Are you making provisions for the future by laying aside small sums of money from time to time?

Organizations wanted. Address NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER, 339 Main St., Worcester, Mass. Rooms 10 and 11

LATHROP * BROTHERS,

LADIES', MEN'S AND CHILDREN'S

FINE AND MEDIUM SHOES

Of the most approved process of manufacture, meeting every requirement of Quality, Comfort and Style.

564 MAIN STREET, Franklin Square.

Rah-rah! Rah-rah! Rah-rah!

* CONCERT *

BY BROWN UNIVERSITY GLEE, BANJO and MANDOLIN CLUB.

25 MEN. 25

Association Hall, Elm Street, Thursday Evening, May 14, '91, at 8 o'clock.

Tickets with the best Reserved Seat, 50c., at S. R. Leland & Son's on and after May 7, '91.

Worcester Coal Company,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

COAL. COAL.

General office, 18 Pearl St., Y. M. C. A. Building; Yards, 23 Manchester St. and 319 Southbridge St.

Now is the Time to Buy a

CARRIAGE !

at a Small Profit.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,

OPP. THE COMMON.

Larkin's, 395 Main St., Worcester.

Trunks, Bags, Shawl-straps, Bag-straps, Extension Cases, Etc. Agents Troy Laundry.

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *

NO. 156 MAIN STREET,
H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

Heywood Foundry Comp'y,

GARDNER, MASS.

This Heater is unsurpassed for excellence of workmanship and is the best in the market. Now is the time to secure estimates. The following is one of a great number of testimonials from our leading citizens:

WORCESTER, MASS., April 12, 1890.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER:
Gentlemen—Having used one of your Heaters for two seasons with satisfaction, I can recommend it to anyone, as it will do all they claim. Respectfully,

JOHN E. ALLEN, 917 Main Street.

Branch Office, 39 Pearl Street, Worcester.

LIGHT

VOL. III. NO. 11. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

VERY REV. JOHN J. POWER, D. D., V. G.,

Pastor of St. Paul's Church and Worcester's Senior Catholic Priest.

[ENGRAVED EXPRESSLY FOR LIGHT.]

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

DINING-ROOM FURNITURE

We have the choicest line of goods for the least money. SIDEBOARDS.—In Solid Oak, fine polish finish $20, $22 and $25. Rare bargains. Better ones for $25, $30 and $32. The last named are beauties. We have good EXTENSION TABLES for six, eight, ten, and twelve dollars. A Solid Oak Table, large size, handsomely carved, for fifteen dollars. It cannot be beaten. DINING CHAIRS.—Good chairs for one dollar and fifty cents and two dollars.—HEAVY BOX SEAT CHAIRS, fine cane, neat design, for two dollars and fifty cents. More elaborate ones for two dollars seventy-five cents, three dollars, three dollars and fifty cents and four dollars, and so up to twenty dollars. We show all grades of Dining Room Furniture. See our goods before purchasing elsewhere.

247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

MEMORIAL DAY.

It will soon be here. Are you prepared for it? Have you anything that you require being done for that day, in the nature of

MONUMENTS or TABLETS

We most respectfully solicit an inspection of our large assortment of Monuments and Tablets, in Marble, Granite and Statuary. More than

$25,000 worth

of Original Designs, manufactured from the very best material, and by competent and skilled workmen. It would be to your interests to call early and make your selections, so as to have your work executed and set up in time for Memorial Day. Our prices will be found very reasonable, and our designs original.

BOSTON MARBLE and GRANITE WORKS.

53 Central St., Worcester.

C. H. DRAPER,
Livery, Feed and Truck Stable.

Three Large Moving Wagons. Baggage Wagon always ready. Furniture and Piano Moving. Telephone 118-5.

161 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

COXYGEN MPO OXYGEN D

Nature's best tonic in all debilitated conditions of the system.

Our OXYGEN is carefully prepared in accordance with the most scientific principles known to chemistry.

It is prepared by a practical chemist who has had four years' experience in a chemical laboratory.

Each patient will receive the personal and conscientious attention of a regular graduated physician, one who has been six years in medical practice.

We solicit investigation.

368 1-2 Main St., or 1 Elm St.

WORCESTER OXYGEN CO.

DR. J. W. GOULD. T. D. BRISTOL, M. D.

“Bird's-Eye
VIEW OF THE WORLD.”

For particulars see “Books and Bookmen,” and address the Agent, Mr. H. E. Gould, care of Y. M. C. A.

N. G. TUCKER.

W. F. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON,
SANITARY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.

56 Pleasant Street,

Worcester, Mass.

GRAND *CONCERTS*

MECHANICS HALL, Worcester,
Friday Afternoon and Evening, May 22, '91.

Under direction of Mr. E. N. Anderson.

Boston Festival Orchestra, 38 Performers,
Mr. EMIL MOLLENHAUER, Concert Master; Mr. VICTOR HER-BERT, Conductor.

Select Chorus of 100 Voices

And Eminent Soloists.

Symphony Concert at 3 p. m.

Schubert's Unfinished Symphony; Andante and Menuet from the Symphony in E Flat, Mozart, and selections from Massenet and Delibes, with vocal solos.

Miscellaneous Concert at 8 p. m.

Rheinberger's Dramatic Cantata, “CLA-RICE OF EBERSTEIN;” (First time in Worcester.) Von Weber's Overture to Der Freischuetz; Berlioz's Carnavale
Romain; Mendelssohn's Concerto in D
Minor; Part Songs and Solo Numbers.

Admission with Reserved Seat to any part of the Hall for either Concert, 50 Cents.

Tickets on Sale at Gorham's, Tuesday,
May 19, at 9 o'clock.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1891.

• No. 11

"Impossible that Truth should hide her face in a country where there is such a flood of Light."—[Jonathan and His Continent, page 248.]

Monsieur Max O'Rell, we take off our hat and make our lowest bow. You do us very proud. Johnny Crapeau shall receive extra consideration at our hands for that statement. Of course, you never heard of us, but the coat couldn't fit any better if it had been made for us.

Isn't this Post Office business funny?

Worcester for years has been anxious for a Government building, and when one is thrown this way, what a hullabaloo about its location!

Opinions never differed more widely over anything than over the proper place to put this pile of stone and mortar. A dozen places were suggested and public meetings were held, but the South end got it.

That is, just south of the Flat Iron block at Franklin square is a hole in the ground awaiting a covering. It is boarded up so that all night rounders may not fall in. Still, it is not ornamental.

Up from Washington come the plans for an edifice. Is any one happy? Apparently not. A general acclaim of disapprobation is heard and the P. M. goes off to the capital to secure a change.

Worcester will get the reputation of being hard to suit. Possibly she deserves it. The building will look funny behind that wedge-shaped edifice, a frog between Main and Southbridge. The public spirited citizens who secured the site for the office ought to buy the Flat Iron building also.

When the Common was talked of and a public meeting was held in Washburn Hall, Col. E. B. Glasgow said that many people were deceiving themselves in the thought that the edifice was to be one as large as the Boston building; that it would not be anything like that. The Colonel was right, and the most strenuous advocate of the Common site who looks at the plans must thank his stars that his side didn't win.

Tradesmen are saying, "What's the matter with trade?" Their goods are displayed just as prominently as ever, but they say "Folks don't buy." It's too late to lay it to the McKinley bill. There has been no recent failure of crops. The dime savings banks, just now a prominent fad, will not account for the dullness. What then?

Does not the recent action of the Legislature, with reference to Endowment societies, offer some explanation? If every red cent that a family can earn is locked up in a society's safe how can they buy dress or other necessities? Has not this endowment business become a mania, and is it not time to call a halt?

Is there not something akin to gambling in thus putting in a few dollars and drawing out many times the amount. How does it differ from the stakes in a game of cards. If one carries off the pool he gets back not only his own stake, but all that the others have put in and have lost. To win in endowments, many must lose. This may be true in part of all Life Insurance, but not in so pronounced a degree.

The recent outcome of allegations with reference to certain attendants at the Front street theater renders it all the more necessary for parents and friends to be vigilant. Is a cheapened entertainment what we want? Was it of such that Charles Lamb wrote so glowingly in describing his first play? Don't send the children to any play or place that it will not be worth your while to see also.

You cannot be too careful about this. It will not take much time nor expense to find out just what it is that the youngsters are so enthusiastic over, and if you will look into it yourself, the chances are that you will have none of it. The lessened expense renders it possible for them to disobey at a small outlay. They had better be provided with skating parks or base ball grounds.

Painting the town red is a favorite exercise with some people, especially in license years. With this thought in view, LIGHT sat down with a city map at hand to paint in red the licensed places for the sale of intoxicants. A radius of half a mile from City Hall as a center takes in very nearly the whole lot. Though a small dotter was used there was hardly room enough to take all the points on Mechanic and along Front Streets, Washington Square was crowded too.

What a dry, thirsty place the center of Worcester must be! Awfully dusty and given to cobwebs! If any one wishes to see a map painted red just come in and look at LIGHT'S. It is hung up for all to see and inspect. If drinking places are so desirable and necessary why are they not scattered around the city like other blessings? Surely there are many people South of City Hall yet there is not a saloon on Main Street save one South of that point, but North of it they abound. Wards Two and Three divide the honors in point of numbers.

The merry splash, splash of the watering cart is not heard as generally as we could wish. When are we to have the benefits of the new act of the Legislature? Some streets are very dusty. Will the abutters act meet the need? How are costs to be assessed? How about people who must live, for a while yet anyway, and yet cannot find the money to pay for sprinkling? Is the water to be distributed by the tank or rod. It would seem that the problem will demand the most careful action on the part of the city government. Well watered streets will lower the death rate.

Great preparations are making for diversion on next Memorial Day. Old soldiers, those to whom the day means much, look with dislike on the way many would use the day. We would not indulge in hilarity on a funeral occasion. This is not the Fourth of July with the rattle and roar of drum and artillery. The boys and girls of today have no knowledge of what the day means through memory. Their books and friends have told them some things but the great lesson they do not appreciate.

Is not the day becoming with us much as the South regards Christmas? There, the eve of the great day is a time for general jollification, but there Memorial day is one of mourning. So would ours be if we had lost. It is well that our schools are prompted to keep alive the sentiment. In the midst of prevalent demagogic legislation, the act to make such observation in our schools on the day before the 30th is the one bright ray amidst prevailing gloom.

But is it a good time for boat races, ball games and 'cycle tournaments? Answering for one, LIGHT affirms that every veteran ought, in some way, to make the fact of his service fixed in the minds of his children, so that they will be willing to give up a small portion of time to the consideration of the sacrifices that have been made. This and similar work are the means we must take to assure ourselves against foreign inundations. The lessons of Chicago and New Orleans are before us. What shall we do with them?

Tyler Newton.

Last Tuesday night, the late janitor at the High School had another expression of the esteem in which he is held by the pupils and teachers at the school. Very quietly, for some time, things have been working, till finally a deputation stepped down to Pinkham & Willis' and bought the best easy chair there was in the shop and had it sent over to Mr. Newton's home with the following nice little letter:

Dear Mr. Newton: The teachers and boys of the High School, have wished to show their regard for you, and their appreciation of your work with us and for us here, and as you have had so frequent occasion to remember us in connection with your hour of toil, we would associate ourselves with you in your hours of ease. May this chair, "which now finds a home by your hearthstone," whisper kindly of the past and may the hours of rest and peace spent in its embrace, soothe and compensate for the vexations of the day, and more than outnumber the weary ones with us, is the earnest wish of every teacher and of every boy of the Worcester High School.

No throned monarch will rest half so well as will "Our Janitor" when he comes home from his work, throws out the foot rest and takes his ease with dignity in that chair. With Jock at his feet and The Battles and Leaders of the Civil War at his elbow, if he doesn't take comfort, then who can?

Mr. Edwin T. Smith has gone to the Rangeley Lakes, Maine, on a fishing tour.

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 339 Main Street, Burnside Building,
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Hereafter, it will be understood that all articles in LIGHT, not ascribed, save recipes,
squibs, fashion and household notes were
written for this paper.

Friends sending in manuscripts will not complain if they are not printed at once. There are many waiting. Yet LIGHT is always glad
to receive communications and, if meritorious,
to print them.

About Folks.

Mr. J. H. Greenwood will give an exhibition of his paintings at the rooms of the Art Students' Club in the Walker building, next week, commencing Monday evening. Mr.
Greenwood is a local artist of considerable repute and those who have seen but a few specimens of his work will be pleased to learn of this exhibition. The pictures are all oil paintings. A complete list of those which will be exhibited is as follows: "Worcester County Hills," "A Ravine at Shrewsbury,"
"October Afternoon," "Old Trees at Jamesville," "Afternoon at Nonquit," "Across the Marsh at Nonquit," Sketch, "October Day,"
"Study of Rocks, Lake View," "A Spring Morning," "Autumn Woods," "The Edge of the Orchard," "Twilight in Peat Meadow,"
"Evening Sketch," "A Gray Evening," "Autumn Hillside," "Peat Meadow," "Afternoon Sketch," "On June Street," Sketch,
"Indian Summer."

Comrade Charles E. Simmons is receiving many congratulations over the fact that whereas he once was blind, he now sees. The world is again all new to him, even more glorious than of old for now it comes all at once, then he grew to it. LIGHT extends the heartiest of hand shakes and wishes many years of glad and happy life with light.

Millbury.

The excellent address of Dr. A. P. Stone before the Natural History Society is in type; but is crowded out this week. It will appear in the next number.

Church Notes.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The people of Central church are rejoicing because they are now, or will be, as soon as the subscriptions pledged have been paid, absolutely free from debt. To celebrate the event a jollification was held at the church Tuesday evening. The evening's pleasures commenced with a social reception at six o'clock. At about 7:30 the company which numbered over 500, sat down to a banquet served in the Sunday School Hall by Rebboli.

Thomas G. Kent, toastmaster and chairman of the evening opened the after-dinner exercises with somewhat extended remarks, giving a general history of what had been accomplished. He first called upon Dr. Thomas H.
Gage to give the statistics of the canvas by the committee, which in brief are as follows:
When the church and parsonage were completed nearly eight years ago, there remained a debt of $27,000, the payment of which was secured by a mortgage upon the property.
Almost nothing has been paid on the debt
since, until a few months ago the committee in charge of the debt issued an appeal for a subscription of $12,000. This met with so ready a response that the committee decided to attempt the raising of the whole amount.
The canvas is now completed and the most sanguine hopes of the committee have been realized. There were 308 subscriptions from 215 different persons, making a total of $25,-
926. The Sunday School and Handicraft Society contributed enough more to make the amount $27,215. All of the subscriptions are to be paid before January 1, 1894.

Rev. A. H. Coolidge of Leicester was introduced and made a brief congratulatory address. He was followed by Judge Hamilton
P. Staples, who spoke particularly of the reputation which the church had acquired throughout the commonwealth. Rev. Francis A. Burgess, rector of St. John's Episcopal church was introduced as the leader of a neighboring church with which the Central church has very close friendship. Burton W.
Potter spoke of the work of the pastor. Mr.
Kent then read congratulatory letters from
Rev. J. J. Miller, of Lincoln Square Baptist church, Rev. C. M. Southgate of Pilgrim church, Rev. Dr. Mears of Piedmont church.

A telegram of congratulation was also read from S. H. and S. E. Larned of Phillipsburg, N. J.

The toastmaster then introduced the pastor,
Rev. Daniel Merriman, D. D., who very feelingly responded. At the close of his remarks, he presented Ephraim Whitman and James Logan, who have done the soliciting of the subscriptions, with two large old Dutch souvenir spoons, inscribed as follows: "The Central church and Parish of Worcester, Massachusetts to ———— 'Every work that he began in the service of the house of God,
he did it with all his heart and prospered.'"

Both of the gentlemen spoke briefly in response. Mr. Kent introduced as a final speaker Stephen Salisbury making mention of the generous gifts made by him to the church.
The exercises closed at a late hour with the singing of the doxology. The evening's program was enlivened with frequent selections
by the church choir under the direction of Mr.
E. N. Anderson.

The quarterly conference of the Worcester
Congregational Churches was held Tuesday in the Congregational Church at Boylston Center.

UNIVERSALIST.

The First Universalist Church will commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of its organization Wednesday June 3. The main features of the occasion will be an historical address by Rev. Thomas Elliot St. John, A.
M., a former pastor, now of Haverhill, Mass.;
a poem, with devotional exercises in the afternoon, at half past two o'clock. At six o'clock a banquet will be served, followed by post prandial speeches by the former pastors, venerable and distinguished clergymen of the Universalist denomination and other invited guests. LIGHT purposes to make the publication of the Saturday following a Universalist memorial number. Among the many things which will be of interest to Universalists, there will be portraits of all those who have been pastor of the church, a sketch of each one and a history of the church.

BAPTIST.

There will be a mass meeting of the Baptists in the interests of city mission work at the First Baptist Church tomorrow evening.

METHODIST.

The second anniversary of the Epworth League will be held next Sunday evening. At Trinity the pastor will make addresses and there will be a service of song. At Grace, there will be several papers read relating to the League and good program of music will be rendered. At Coral Street, Dr. Knowles will preach in the morning on "The New Epworth Movement, an Outgrowth of the Old." At seven o'clock the League will give emphasis to the religious work by a rousing Social Service.
The church will be fully decorated with flowers.

The last meeting for the year of the Methodist Social Union was held last Monday evening at Grace Church. At eight o'clock the company was called to order by the President,
A. S. Roe, and eighty-two sat down to the tables that had been spread by the caterer, S.
C. Yeaw. After the supper some changes were made in the constitution and then an hour was spent in discussing the relation of the Epworth League to the church. The tables had been arranged in the form of a cross, the League emblem, and on the wall in front
was a beautiful banner prepared by Mr. C. H.
Carpenter. It was of white on which were the three mottoes, the cross and the ensign of the League. The literary exercises of the evening were begun by Rev. J. D. Pickles. He was followed by Rev. A. Sanderson, Rev. J.
O. Knowles, Rev. W. N. Richardson and Rev.
W. T. Worth and the presidents of the Leagues at Trinity and Grace, John Legg and Frank J. Metcalf. Some of the points brought out were, "The League is not separate from the church; its spiritual work is most important; it must make the church home attractive; united action is necessary."
It was an interesting and profitable meeting.

Miss Agnes Montgomery sails from New York, per City of Rome, on 23d of May, for a protracted tour through Scotland. Booked through the agency of W. H. Church & Co.

About Folks.

The recent election of new officers by the Worcester Continentals attracts renewed interest by the public in that organization. Several times during the past few years the company has been almost on the point of disbanding but it is now in excellent condition and its members are enthusiastic. The newly elected Lieutenant Colonel Aaron S. Taft enters upon the duties of his new office with the determination to make his command a success. He intends to have more attention paid to military features than there has been heretofore. The other officers elected at the annual meeting last week are: Captains, Co. A, Nathan Taylor; Co. B, Herbert H. Fairbanks; Co. C, Charles A. Waite; Co. D, Moses Gross; Lieutenants: Co. A, James Pursey; Co. B, Stillman L. Shaffer; Co. C, Nathaniel E. Mansfield; Co. D, William H. Rice; First Lieutenant and Clerk, Geo. H. Harlow; First Lieutenant and Treasurer, S. A. Willis. At the regular meeting of the command last evening the following orders were read:

Headquarters

Worcester Continentals,

MAY 15, 1891.

General Order, No. 1.

1. The commanding officer announces his staff for the ensuing year as follows: James E. Dennis, 1st Lieut. and Adjutant; Edward B. Dolliver, 1st Lieut. and Quartermaster; Edward P. Pevey, 1st Lieut. and Commissary; Chas. A. Peabody, Surgeon, Rank of Major; E. H. Trowbridge, Ass't Surgeon, Rank of 1st Lieut; Henry W. King, Judge Advocate, Rank of Captain; Rev. Almon Gunnison, D. D., Chaplain, Rank of Captain.

Honorary Staff.—Past Commanders, Lt. Col. W. S. B. Hopkins, Lt. Col. Henry E. Smith; Past Quartermaster, Lieut., Geo. H. Clark.

These officers will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

In view of the services rendered the Command by Edwin A. Wood, late Adjutant and Company Commander, the Commanding officer appoints him as an additional officer on the Honorary Staff. This mark of esteem to be taken as personal and as affording no precedent in other cases.

AARON S. TAFT,
Lieut. Colonel.
MAY 15, 1891.

General Order No. 2.

The following appointments for the ensuing year are hereby announced. E. E. Francis to be Sergeant Major. D. W. Darling to be Quartermaster Sergeant. E. J. Putnam to be Commissary Sergeant. Geo. E. Fairbanks to be Hospital Steward.

These officers will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

By Order,

LT. COL. AARON S. TAFT.
JAMES E. DENNIS, 1st Lt. and Adj't.

The item on another page of LIGHT concerning the sailing of Miss Lizzie H. Metcalf, must be contradicted.* The serious illness of the lady who was to accompany her preventing. They expect to go later.

The Gospel of Home Trade.

[Comrade J. B. Knox found the following "Out West" but it is good doctrine for Worcester.]

1. Thou shalt not go away from home to do thy trading; thou nor thy wife, nor thy sons, nor thy daughters, that they may deal with strangers who pay no taxes for thee.

2. Thou shalt patronize thine own merchants and manufacturers, that they may also patronize thee, and bring prosperity to both.

3. Thou shalt employ thine own mechanics, that they be not driven from their homes to find bread for their little ones.

4. Thou shalt consider him that is thy neighbor above him that dwelleth in a strange city, when thou art in want of anything.

5. Thou shalt do whatsoever lieth in thee to encourage and promote the welfare of thine own city and thine own people.

6. Thou shalt not regard a penny when it standeth between thee and thy duty to him that is thy neighbor.

7. Thou shalt not suffer the voice of pride to overcome thee, and if drummers entice thee consent thou not.

8. Thou shalt spend thy earnings at home, that they may be returned whence they came and give nourishment to such as come after thee.

9. Thou shalt not bear false witness against the city wherein thou dwellest, whether it be great or whether it be little, but speak well of it unto all men.

10. Thou shalt keep all these commandments and teach them unto thy children to the third and fourth generation, that they be made to flourish and grow up in plenty when thou art laid asleep with thy fathers.

Amateur Sports.

The Lakeside Boat Club will hold its opening May 28. A dance will be given in the evening for members and friends.

The Wachusett Boat Club will hold its opening May 21.

The picnic season opened at Quinsigamond Park last Saturday, when the employees of the Allen Boiler Works had an outing and enjoyed a series of athletic games.

Wednesday evening the first illumination was held at Lincoln Park. Next Wednesday there will be another which will include fireworks.

The athletic games of the Polytechnic Institute place this afternoon at Agricultural Park

A week from today the High School Athletic Association will hold its annual field-day at Agricultural Park. As no games have been held for two years, nearly all the competitors are novices and it would be difficult to pick out the probable winners. The large number of competitors and the uncertainty of what each is capable of doing assure an exciting afternoon's sport. The struggle for the championship will probably lie between the Seniors and the Sophomores. The Seniors have the largest number of entries but the second years depend on Zaeder's winning enough prizes to secure the banner for them.

Burton W. Potter, Esq., contributes a valuable article to the April Practical Mechanic on "Electricity as a Motive Power for Suburban Railways." He shows very conclusively that this agent makes it possible for the citizen to do business in the midst of the city and yet dwell in the suburbs. Thanks to improved locomotion homes are made better thereby.

Worcester became a city in 1848.

Entertainments.

Local music interest centers just at present in the "Peoples Concert" which Mr. E. N. Anderson is arranging to give in Mechanics' Hall, next Friday evening. Mr. Anderson has brought together the best vocalists of the city, and has succeeded in organizing a chorus which will probably be more or less of a surprise when it is heard in the important numbers which have been placed upon the program. Miss Mary F. Tucker, so favorably known as an accomplished pianist, is to play; and Felix Winternitz, the young violinist, who has attracted so much attention of late, will also be heard. With the Boston Festival Chorus, which will sustain the instrumental duties of the evening, come Victor Herbert, now an "old friend" to Worcester musical audiences, and Emil Mollenhauer, not less favorably known by reputation, at least. Rheinberger's dramatic cantata, "Clarice of Eberstein," is to be the principal choral work, though there will be other selections which are sure to be of interest. The orchestra will render the beautiful overture to Weber's "Der Freischutz," and Miss Tucker will play the Mendelssohn D minor concerto. Mr. Anderson is so well satisfied with the outlook for the concert that he has further arranged to give a symphony concert in the afternoon of the same day, the hour being three o'clock. Having at his command the orchestra, it would have seemed a pity to lose such an opportunity, and the public is sure to applaud his judgment. The program will include a movement from Schubert's unfinished symphony, a selection by Delibes, another by Massenet, and the andante and menuet from the symphony in E flat, by Mozart. Vocal selections will be judiciously interspersed, and the whole will give about as enjoyable an afternoon of music as could be wished. There are signs of a large attendance at the evening concert, already, and the announcement of the afternoon program ought to create an equally favorable response for the symphony concert. The extremely low price at which the seats are offered makes it possible for all to enjoy an afternoon or evening of most delightful music, the tickets costing but fifty cents. Checks which may be exchanged for tickets are on sale at Gorham's, at Putnam & Davis's and at Sanford & Co's.

Monday evening, May 18, Ben T. Hammond's 48th recital and first of his closing series for the season. Pupils assisting: Misses Lizzie H. Norton, Mabel G. Richards, Kate J. Mathews, Susa E. Simons, Julie W. Jones. Messrs. Henry C. Grimwade, Lorenzo J. Fassett, C. Bert Vaughan, Edward J. Huard, James B. Nugent. All make their first appearance; also appearing Mr. Frank N. Prescott and Mr. Harry Robinson. Followed by recitals upon the evenings of Tuesday and Wednesday at Horticultural Hall, the latter being the 50th recital.

It pays to patronize General Agent Geo. Y. Lancaster, for Railroad and Steamship Tickets, Drafts, and Insurance. Office, 434 Main street, Worcester.

Rev. John Joseph Power.

To be the spiritual director and counsel to 360 people is no trifling task, but that is just the burden that this gentleman bears. Besides he has the care of an orphanage and many other duties that the usages of his church lay upon him. All these obligations he maintains with so pleasant a face and so genial a voice that to many of his parishioners he is known rather as "Father John" than by the clerical expression with which this article begins. Possibly, it is not quite so dignified, but certainly there is a world of affectionate respect in those two words which the worshippers at St. Paul delight to apply to their pastor.

The pastor of St. Paul's was born in Charlestown, Mass., in 1818, obviously of a clerical family as his brother William, is a priest in Blackstone. In his boyhood, he had the advantages and delights of the public schools of that city. It is a great pleasure to hear him give reminiscences of the old Brimmer School in the days when Joshua Bates was master and George Swan his associate. The latter, very aged, is still living in Roxbury, but Mr. Bates died June 25, 1888. This celebrated teacher set his seal upon all those boys who came under his instruction but it may be doubted whether any one retains more vivid or affectionate recollections of him and his ways than our Worcester divine. The reverend gentleman's face never lights up more brightly than when he goes back nearly half a century to those boyhood days in Boston. He was a school mate then of Starr King, afterwards the eloquent preacher, and of Lewis B. Monroe, subsequently the distinguished elocutionist. His recollections of the talented King are especially happy. "There were no indications of the ability which afterwards won him so much fame. He was a tall, hazel eyed, yellow haired, pouting lipped, girlish faced boy. While not conspicuous for scholarship, he was always, in a pronounced degree, bright. Monroe gave no clue, then, to the reputation he afterward won as a reader and teacher, yet I think all of us owed much to the care and attention which Master Bates gave to the important subject of reading and elocution. Many a time he would say, 'Now boys close your other books. No more lessons for the present. We will give our whole attention to reading' and then he would call a boy up to follow him in the reading of a passage. Afterwards, the whole room could criticise the reader. In this way great progress was made in this most important of acquirements. We learned to appreciate and love it. Today we are not doing enough in this very desirable direction. We are hardly up to the attainments of fifty years ago. It is impossible to over estimate the importance and value of being a good reader not only for the pleasure given to others by the practice but as a health giving exercise to the individual himself. Nothing so develops the throat and lung muscles and renders the subject safe from affections of those organs as reading. Why, Monroe, years after his school life, took up the subject as a specific for threatened consumption and conquered the enemy." An interesting and instructive chapter could be made of these reminiscences, but now we must pass to the next stage in the life of the Charlestown boy.

At the age of fifteen years, he began private lessons with the Rev. George Goodwin of Charlestown and from him, he acquired the Greek and Latin necessary for admission to Holy Cross college. So, four years of his school life were spent in our city and from the college he was graduated in 1851. Then came one year of study in the Montreal seminary, to whose rigors he succumbed and he was sent home to die. Under the influence of home and native air, however, he rallied, and was sent to France to complete his studies. For three years, he was in the land of the olive and vine, studying in Aix, a city five leagues from Marseilles and he recalls with great relish the astonishment of his French confreres over his being white. Up to his advent, their experience with Americans was confined to the Blacks of the West Indies, and a white native was a novelty indeed. This location, in the midst of ancient memories and an equable climate, saw the broken down American student improve steadily in health, and in France he was ordained to the priesthood.

Returning to America, he had been home but three weeks when he was sent to Worcester, this in 1856, to become the first pastor of St. Anne's church. He saw the old wooden church in the meadows completed and was in charge of this parish until 1871. In addition to his duties here, he was also the priest of St. Bridget's church in Millbury, St. Phillips' in Gratton and for all the villages and hamlets in those towns. The French, which, for three years, had been his exclusive tongue, now served him an excellent end for he found many Canadians under his care to whom he ministered in their native language. This missionary work, he prepared, for eleven years. When we reflect on the amount of labor that the parish priest has to perform, with the vigils and fastings accompanying, we shall not wonder that, at times, our clergymen has been troubled with dyspepsia.

The Parish of St. Anne's was the second Catholic one formed in Worcester, St. John's alone preceding it. So then the pastor of St. Paul's has seen, in his thirty-five years of service here the growth of his denomination from one church and parish to seven, not to mention the two French churches, and, today, in length of service, he is the senior priest in the city. His own recollections go back to Bishop Fenwick, by whom he was confirmed, and who was the founder of Holy Cross College. Bishop Fenwick was the 2d Bishop of the Boston diocese, his only predecessor being that Bishop Cheverus who afterwards became a Cardinal in France.

In 1869, Father Power was directed to take in hand the building of a new church, the one over which he now presides. The site, selected was, for many years, the pear orchards of those staunch old Worcester citizens, Geo. T. Rice, and John Milton Earle. In 1869, July 4th, the corner stone was laid, and just five years from that date the edifice was finished, all save the tower which was not completed until 1889. Originally, the design contemplated a lofty spire, but the plan was altered to the present shape which seems to be more in keeping with the character of the building itself. In the constructing of the church, the pastor displayed a deal of ingenuity as well as economy in utilizing the basement as soon as it was high enough to be roofed over. He decided to lay upon strong supports a roof, which, at the same time, should be the scabbling floor for the material to lay the walls of the church. Of course, he was told that it could not be done, but the success of his project was answer enough. So all the time while the people were worshipping in the basement, the edifice was going up from the inside, a most decided case of endogenous growth.

For many years, the parsonage was the old mansion, just east of the church, reached by stairs from Chatham street; but latterly, it has been the large building adjacent to the Orphanage on High Street. Here our clergyman is at home to a wide range of visitors. The questions that are submitted to his arbitration would puzzle adepts in almost all walks of life. He is eminently a scholar and for thirteen years was a member of the School Committee. He was on the Board when the afterward, Colonel, Homer B. Sprague was so unceremoniously dropped from the principalship of the High School, but it was not with his knowledge or consent. As he says, "I was not present at the meeting, had had no intimation of what was in progress and never ceased to think that a scholarly gentleman had been unfairly treated." He was one of the building committee of the High School edifice and in that capacity visited other cities extensively in pursuit of points to be utilized here. As a school visitor, he was singularly effective and many a Worcester man of business, today, says, "There was just one man in my day whom we used to stand in fear of and that was Father John Power. He was sure to ask some question that we didn't expect and couldn't answer." Also he has served on the Board of Library Directors. He was a member when the board was organized as at present and he was subsequently elected to serve the single term to which parties are, now, eligible.

The men and women who are subject to the ministrations of the Rev. J. J. Power, with one accord, sound his praises. Young and old, they all unite to extol his devotion, his zeal and his eloquence. As Vicar General of the Diocese, he is the one who stands next to the bishop. There is no honor possible for him that the members of his parish would not most heartily applaud. Says one enthusiastic member, "As a man, a student, a priest he stands without a rival."

Finally, the Senior Catholic priest of this city, in his sixty-third year is a well known man in circles other than those to which his life is devoted. He is a member of the St. Wulstan Society and he is interested in all that pertains to Worcester's growth and good. Of a rather spare build, somewhat above the average height, with clear intellectual features, he commands attention and respect. His parishioners long since learned the points that he considers indispensable in the manly upright life. Without punctuality and truthfulness, no one could expect to remain long in "Father John's" good graces. Early and late he has impressed upon them the absolutely essential character of these qualities. His preaching has made itself felt in the daily walks and conversation of many a man and woman. On the subject of Temperance he is recognized as thoroughly outspoken and his words from the pulpit on May 3d will long ring in the ears of those who heard them. With the thousands that make up his flock, LIGHT wishes for the reverend gentleman many more years of successful ministrations at St..Paul's.

WORCESTER IN 1870.

[During this year, the Rev. M. B. Buckley was in America in behalf of the Cork Cathedral. He kept a journal and in 1889, after his death, the same was prepared for publication by his sister. It is entitled "Tour in America". The following is a verbatim extract.]

November 25th.—This morning I went by rail to Worcester, a city (I believe there is no such thing as a "town" in all America), of about 45,000 inhabitants, of whom about 18,000 are Catholics. Worcester is, I think, forty-five miles from Boston. The morning was very fine; it had frozen over night, but it was by no means cold, although at this time last year, I am informed, there were several feet of snow upon the ground.

The American railway carriages are very comfortable. Such a thing as a rug would be a superfluity, and an overcoat may be dispensed with. The carriages are all heated, and as a large number of people are always travelling, the atmosphere is never cool.

I reached Worcester at 10:30 a.m., and found it very like all American small "cities" I have yet seen. The characteristics of American cities appear to me to be these: A number of streets, almost always straight and regular, the houses composed either of red brick or wood. Several streets are insignificant, and the roadways bad; but there are always a few main streets which are very fine, composed of large solid houses, fine shops, with plenty of carriages in waiting outside, and a good many foot passengers, and a fair amount of bustle. In these main streets there is a track, and horse-cars run. The names over the doors are frequently composed of gilt letters, and sometimes a shopkeeper who believes in advertising has a handsome flag suspended at a great height, by a rope reaching quite across the street, with his name and number inscribed on it. This looks picturesque. The bustle of these cities is greatly increased with the constant, I might say the incessant, noise of railway trains running by—running often through the centre of an important street, with a bell ringing at a tremendous rate. A large wooden archway over the track warns you against danger by the words painted on it—"Look out for the engine while the bell rings." How a few dozen people are not killed every day in each of those cities is a marvel to me, for the bell is always ringing, and the engine, or as they pronounce it, the "engine," is always coming.

Churches there are plenty, and now and then a green place with a monument to Daniel Webster, to Washington or Abraham Lincoln or perhaps some nobody. You sometimes pass a splendid looking building with a magnificent Grecian portico, and steps leading up; but with your walking cane you find the steps are made of wood, and your suspicion being once awakened, you tap the columns, and a hollow sound announces that they too are only a spurious imitation.

Such are, I fancy, the leading features of those "cities." See one, and you see all. Worcester is contemptuously called a "one horse city." Why? Because it is not large or wealthy enough to support street cars with two horses, like most other cities, but must be content with one-horse cars. Indeed I have been told that the one-horse cars here scarcely pay, and that they had been actually discontinued for some time.

I came to Worcester to make arrangements for a lecture which I am to deliver here on December 6th. I visited the college, situated about two miles from the town on a great eminence—a fine house on a fine site. It was a long walk. I went to see a young man I knew there, and who was a good guide to me in Worcester. I called on the Bishop (O'Reilly) and the clergy, and several of the laity. I had great success, and anticipate an overflowing house. I visited, among others, a Father John Power. He was at dinner, and invited me to partake of his hospitality. I was nothing loth. His curate and my young friend Walsh, made up a partie caïrè. The chief dish, it being Friday, was fish "chowder," a kind of hotch-potch—viz., fish, biscuit, potatoes, vegetables, sauce, etc.

We spoke of the variety of dishes prevailing in various countries. I said I found it hard to like some American dainties, which the natives seemed to prize very much. I could scarcely put up with tomato, I hated sweet "potatoes" but "squash" was to me an abomination! I described my having tasted "squash" once (it is a huge yellow pumpkin), and thought it tasted like soap, but that the saponaceous article seemed to me to have rather the advantage of it in flavor. It is usually served up mashed, like turnips. Father Power was amused at my strong denunciation of a precious vegetable, but foretold that I would yet eat it with pleasure. I sturdily answered "never."

The "chowder was removed, and a pie took its place. I was helped, and found it very nice pie, so much so that I finished my share.

"You seemed to like that pie," said Father Power.

"Yes, sir," said I, "it is exquisite!"

"Well," said he, "my prophesy is fulfilled much sooner than I anticipated. You have just eaten the one-fourth part of a squash pie. The laugh was against me, and I admitted the justice of it.

I lectured in Worcester with considerable success. The Bishop (O'Reilly) of Springfield, lately consecrated, was very favorable to me, and the clergy lent some cordial assistance, I had an audience of about 1,000 in the Mechanic's Hall, and realized $163.

ABOUT FOLKS.

Thomas Hamilton, of the Boston Store, and wife sail today for a visit to the old home, Scotland. Mrs. H. is a sister of the late W. A. Denholm. His friends hope that Mr. Hamilton will find Glasgow all that fancy has painted it for years past.

Old Boylston.

Thanks to the persistent efforts of the Rev.

and Mrs. Dodge of this town, there was a very interesting and valuable declamation contest on the evening of Friday, May 8th in the town hall. The contestants for the Demorest medal were Misses Sibyl Flagg, Lydia Warner, Louise Dodge, Mabel Newton, Edith Bigelow, Daisy Flagg, Maude Webber, Lulu Bray and Mr. Edgar Warner. Owing to illness, Miss Lena Walker, whose name was on the program, did not declaim. It was a remarkably even and excellent contest and was most cordially listened to by the large audience of parents and friends. The medal was awarded to Miss Louise Dodge who, by the way, is a pupil in the Worcester High School. Owing, however, to the thoughtfulness of Mr. John D. Warner no reciter was unrewarded for, in an envelope, he gave to each one a substantial reward for efforts made. The judges were Alfred S. Roe, Wm. H. Bartlett and Charles T. Haynes of Worcester.

The evil of intemperance was brought vividly before the people of this section of the city last week, when the son of a member of one of the churches was seen drinking over a public bar.

The Norcross Bros. residing on Claremont Street, were this week awarded the contract for the $1,000,000 Calvert Building, corner of Calvert and Fayette Street, Baltimore.

A May party composed of Misses Alice M. Day, Helen Banfield, Mamie Banfield and Sadie Waite went out Monday afternoon but found that it was rather late in the season for the flower.

Mr. Z. Frank Little is to occupy the house lately vacated by Mr. C. J. Little at 15 King Street.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

"Hands Across the Sea," which has been presented here before this season and has proved a good attraction, has been entertaining fair audiences at the Worcester Theater the last two evenings. It will be seen for the last time this afternoon and evening. The scenery used is of a picturesque type and pleasing to the eye. An excellent company, headed by Mr. George Frederick Nash as the hero, and Mr. Henry Pierson as the villain, is seen to good advantage.

"The Still Alarm," with Harry Lacy, the well known romantic actor in the leading role, will be produced at the New Worcester Theater the first four evenings of next week and Wednesday matinee. The play has had phenomenal success wherever presented, and is said to be entirely different from the ordinary blood and thunder drama, the low moral tone of which seems to be the principal drawing card. In addition to the excellent scenic effects there will be two thoroughly trained horses harnessed to a real fire engine, emitting steam and smoke, which will give a realistic appearance to a great fire scene. The steam engine which is used cost $7,000.

Treasurer Will N. Banks benefit takes place on May 29. "Davy Crockett," with Frank Mayo and his fine company will be the attraction. Mr. Banks deserves well at the hands of the theater-goers, as he is painstaking and pleasant to all with whom he comes in contact in his position.

School and College.

Holy Cross.

The ball team has been doing grand work the past week. Last week they defeated the Milford's in a one-sided game by a score of 17-3. The class of '92 accompanied the team in a barge and every town on the way to Milford was surprised by the college cheering. Trinity College was taken into camp Tuesday by a score of 9-0 in six innings. The next game scheduled is that with Brown University for Saturday the 16th. Should the game take place a close and exciting struggle may be looked for as each team has many victories and few defeats.

Next Monday is Pentecost Monday and is a holiday at the college.

The reviews for the final examinations commenced the 11th.

Very neat invitations to the B. J. F. Debate to take place May 20, have appeared.

Polytechnic.

The Spring Field Sports of the W. P. & A. take place this afternoon on the agricultural grounds. They promise to be unusually interesting and exciting, for there is a large number of entries, and no handicaps. Dadmun intends to start only in the two mile run, hence there will be a good contest for first place in the sprints. Many new men from the two lower classes have entered, among them it is said, several dark horses, and all around there is a good deal of enthusiasm throughout the Institute. From the winners in this afternoon's games, will be chosen the Intercollegiate team which will compete at Springfield the 25th. Sports begin at 2 o'clock. Ladies free.

The ball game Wednesday night between the "Hillsides" and '93, and won by the latter 13 to 11, was one of the best. Bliss' Field has seen for some time. The first three innings both sides failed to score. The work of Dyer behind the bat was a surprise to every one, and he showed himself to be one of the best catchers in school.

The Faculty has finally decided to let the matter of the fire, etc. drop. A printed slip, however, has been handed each student, which contains extracts from the rules concerning discipline and athletics, and interprets the former to prohibit ungentlemanly or noisy parades and demonstrations on the grounds of the Institute or on the streets of the city.

The Athletic Directors have voted that Dadmun's record of 1 m. 59 15 sec. for a half mile, which he made last Fall, shall stand as the school record.

Wesleyan.

The Spring field day has been decided and the sports will take place Friday of this week. A silver cup has been given the athletic association, to be held by that class securing the greatest number of points, firsts to count 5, second 3, and thirds 1.

Rev. Dr. Mendenthal has been secured to lecture before the college two evenings this week upon the "Higher Criticism of the Bible." The lectures which have been held this year in the college chapel have been highly interesting and instructive, and the students show their appreciation by a good attendance at each lecture. It is to be hoped that this system will be kept up.

The Y. M. C. A. of the college had its annual meeting Monday. The reports of the various committees showed that they had done efficient work and much good has been done. It has been by far the best year for the association, and a wonderful work has been accomplished among the students.

The speakers for the Freshman declamation contest and also for the Junior debate have been chosen and the contests, which occur upon the same evening, will be held June 3d.

The last of the Senior oratoricals took place last week and was a most excellent exhibition of the work that has been done.

Associate Prof. Mead is to spend the summer in Ireland, engaged in research, so the examinations in his department will be held the last of May.

Senior examinations commence this year upon June 3d, and Commencement occurs June 24th.

Col. Homer B. Sprague.

This gentleman, once principal of the Worcester High School and lastly president of North Dakota University is about entering upon a new work in California. Yielding to the requests of numerous friends, the allurements of the climate and the fact that he has children in San Francisco, he has consented to undertake the management of a young ladies school in Berkeley, very near the Seat of the State University. The School will have, at the onset, the patronage of the very best in the State. The first term opens Aug. 4th. Peralla Hall is the name of the institution and it is situated on an estate, laid out by the late Mr. Ralston, then President of the Bank of California. Such is the versatility of Colonel Sprague, he seems specially fitted for any place that he takes, but this return to the Pacific Slope to direct the education of young ladies does seem to be particularly appropriate and felicitous. His friends in Worcester, New Haven, Brooklyn and Boston will take great interest in the success of his undertaking.

The Rev. William Rice Newhall, A. M., pastor of the State Street Methodist Episcopal church, Springfield, Mass., has been elected to the new chair of Mental and Moral Science and English Bible in Denver University. Mr. Newhall is a graduate of Wesleyan and a son of the late Prof. Fales H. Newhall of that college.

The New York Senate has passed Mr. Saxton's bill, which appropriates $10,000 for carrying out a plan of university extension under the direction of the Board of Regents. The University of the State of New York is a peculiar institution, having no abiding city, yet seems to have the slate in its hands.

Last week the little folks in Mrs. Morgan's Kindergarten had a genuine pleasure in a visit from Miss Kilham, their former teacher. Her health is much improved and she expects to return in the Fall.

Mr. Abiel E. Wilson and wife have returned from their extended trip in the south and now occupy their former home at 14 King Street.

About Folks.

Gen. A. A. Goodell Camp 2, Massachusetts Division, Sons of Veterans, observed its eighth anniversary at Sons of Veterans' Hall, Monday evening. There was a very large attendance including representatives of Geo. H. Ward, Post 10, G. A. R.; Encampment 83, Union Veteran Legion; Luther Hill Camp 64 of Spencer; Camp 123, East Douglas; Camp 18, Uxbridge; Camp 70, Upton; Camp 74, Millbury. Capt. H. M. Leach of Camp 2, delivered an address of welcome and invited all to partake of the collation which was to follow. After the collation C. S. Knight, Jr., the toastmaster of the evening, took the chair. The toasts and those who responded are as follows: "The Grand Army of the Republic," Senior Vice Commander of the Department of Massachusetts James K. Churchill; "The Sons of Veterans," Col. W. A. Stevens of Malden; "The Union Veteran Legion," Col. H. M. Greene; "The Women's Relief Corps," Past Chaplain Charles Simmons of Post 10; "Post 10," Past Commander James E. Dennis; "Daughters of the Veterans," J. B. Lamb; "The Survivors of Rebel Prisons," Chaplain Charles M. Smith of Post 10; "Our Country's Flag," Wm. H. Bartlett. Letters of regret were read from Mayor Harrington, Gen. A. B. R. Sprague, Commander Charles H. Pinkham of Post 10, Alfred S. Roe, Lieut. C. K. Darling of Fitchburg and Maj. Delano of Sharon. The program was varied with a reading by George E. Burr, songs by Past Captain James A. Gettings of Camp 2 and character selections by Second Lieut. Robert W. Simmons of Camp 2.

Mr. Frank S. C. Wicks, late instructor in English language, literature and political science at Vienland Academy, Peekskill-on-the-Hudson, has severed his connection with the latter institution and has become book-keeper for his father.

The pupils of Freeland Street School, under the direction of Principal Harriet G. Waite, are contributing money toward the purchase of a flag, which they hope to fling to the breeze Memorial Day.

Mr. J. L. Amsden has on exhibition, at his new Park Street store, a fine collection of silver and copper coins. Mr. Amsden has been collecting these coins for a number of years, but now wishes to dispose of his entire collection.

Over on Our Street.

Grandpa has lately died. In fact it is only two days since the sad event, and papa and mamma are at the old home. Little body is taking a Sunday foot bath and thus remarks: "Grandpa is dead and I guess he has gone to the bad place." "Why, why," says a grandma, "Why do you say that?" "Cause he smoked," is the sad rejoinder. Our street has scruples on the use of the weed. Then a still smaller member of the family takes up the subject saying, "Yes Grandpa—is dead and I dess he's found Grandpa H. (who died two years ago) and they have got chairs and I know, this Sunday morning are talking about us." She believes in Heavenly recognition, sure.

"The Monarch of the Pool."

BY GEORGE MCALEER.

"The rain having ceased, our friend of former camps, H. S. Seeley, jumps up from the table and sings out:

"Here's a go for a paddle to the upper end of the lake." No sooner said than he and the writer with Frank Jones as factotum are off.

The clouds rolled low and Katahdin's night cap was still upon his head. Spiteful white-caps broke against and over the bows of our canoe, but being well laden we rode along quite smoothly. Not expecting to do much if any fishing we left all our tackle behind save a cheap rod that had been left on the beach under the overturned canoe, and a few casts of flies which we carried in our hats.

A beautiful sand bar and shoal have been formed by the action of the water where a brook enters the lake, passing which we find deep water extending back from the mouth about one fourth of a mile, now broken only by gentle ripples. The width varies from twenty to fifty yards with a forest growth on either side and an occasional boulder as large as a small house jutting out from either shore or nearly submerged in the water.

Who could resist the temptation to cast? The rod was soon jointed and a cast made by Harry, a second a third, and a rise and a strike. Ah! and a game boy is he. I grasp my watch to take the time as he flashes his beautiful sides out of water. Down he goes out again! down and off as the pliant rod yields and the reel sings a tune to which Paganini never played an adequate accompaniment.

It is give and take, and take and give for twenty minutes, when our disciple of Uncle Izaak begins to think it more labor than fun puts severe strain upon the rod and forces the fight. By dint of great effort and considerable skill he leads the victim around to the stern, where I sit, and as I reach out my hand to grasp the line to lift him in, the fish makes a plunge for liberty, breaking the rod at the second tying from the tip, but I grasp the line on the instant and he is in the canoe and the struggle is ended; and we have an addition of two and a half pounds of beautiful freight to our cargo.

"Well yes! he made a splendid fight and I am tired. You take the rod, Doctor, and give them a try."

Examining the rod we find it like all cheap goods only "a delusion and a snare." The strips had never been cemented, but glued, and the glue yielding to the moisture, had allowed the strips to separate and bend over nearly to a right angle. Had we another rod along this one doubtless would have gone where it deserved—to the bottom. But we straightened it out, split a quill tooth pick and bound it firmly about the rod with a bit of line and started down stream toward the lake.

We had gone some distance without a rise and I began to distrust my store of flies. A huge sunken tree, which had fallen athwart the stream at an angle and right in line with an immense boulder, which extended into the water, turned the current and made a whirlpool that looked to be a most promising spot, and we did our best for "distance, delicacy and accuracy." And, lo! a rise! a swirl of the water and all is quite. I note that he is a large one, and distrusting my flies tell the paddlers to send the craft right along to the shoal. Here I mount a cast of flies tied by Geo. H. Burtis, of this city, composed of Parmachenee belles for hand and tail fly with a Jenny Lind for dropper, and back we turn to try conclusions with his lordship. We near the spot and redouble our efforts. A rise, a strike, and right about face went our canoe down stream for the lake as if drawn by a span of ponies. And here we are anchored to a giant with a disabled rod and no gaff or landing net. Let him go, says I, keeping the canoe in midstream and if he reaches the clear water of the lake I will make a landing at the sand bar and reel him out on the beach. We fight minute by minute and contest inch by inch. We near the mouth and I prepare to step out, but no, says he, as he makes a grand break and darts up stream as if he divined my purpose. He sulks, and we think it safe to reel in—a dart to the surface, a break, a dive, a break and dive again. Break, dive, dart, sulk succeed break, dive, dart and sulk! Minutes have sped along into an hour and yet he is not subdued. As we start from the rapids on the fourth trip I avow that it will be trout or no trout this time when we reach the sand bar, as the fatigue that has supervened has long since eliminated the element of sport and excitement from the unequal contest. I gave him the butt of the rod and succeed in getting his nose out of the water. He throws all his weight on the rod and the pliant thing permits him to dive well below the surface.

Again I get his head out of water and again he dives, but with less strength and determination; and he sooner yields to the pressure on the rod. His strength fails and yet he is game and a very unwilling captive. We reach the bar and I step out, followed by the crew. The canoe is beached and I reel in. The boatmen armed with a paddle, surround his kingship and follow him in until I land upon the sand this foeman worthy of our steel. He tipped the scales at 4½ lbs., and while many a larger one has fallen victim to the tempting lure and human skill, I cannot conceive of and never expect to have, a greater battle than I had, with this monarch of the pool.—Forest and Stream, April 30th.

Miss Lizzie H. Metcalf of 31 John Street sails from Boston, today, in the Cunarder, Pannonia. She will be abroad for several months and will improve the opportunity to make a close study of her favorite Art, Music. She will witness the Handel festival in June in London's Crystal Palace and, in July, will be at Baireuth, to see and hear the Wagner music. Of these and other musical exhibitions, she will give to LIGHT, from time to time, accounts. Our music lovers will look forward to them with pleasure.

The wedding of Miss Georgia McClure to Mr. Harry W. Smith is announced to take place at Central Church early in June. It will be probably the most notable society wedding of the season. Miss McClure has just returned from a European trip. After the wedding Mr. Smith and his bride will take up their residence at 30 Elm Street.

Whispering Pines.

BY CORNELIA WESSON BOYDEN.

The pine trees whispering soft and low,
While swayed by the breeze to and fro,

Seem telling a tale to my listening ears,
An old, old story of by gone years.

"Come listen, they say, oh! mortal child,
Dost know in this spot so lone and wild,

So far away from the city's din,
Where all is fashion, and folly, and sin,

Beneath the grass where the wild flowers peep,
The Indian lies, in his last long sleep.

That long ago e're the white man's hand,
Had driven them forth from home and land,

This spot was covered with wigwams gay,
Where dwelt the squaw by night and day,

Beside whose door she watched and wept,
While in her arms her papoose slept;

And far away her warrior brave,
Perchance had found a lonely grave.

'Twas here an Indian maiden sweet,
With dusky eyes and footsteps fleet,

Had 'ai! her heart, her honor low;
The white man's spell, and love's warm glow,

Had conquered all her wildwood pride,
And chained her to the captive's side.

But he with brain alert and keen,
Her pure affection made a screen,

And through her love suspicion lay;
Till lo! one fair bright summer's day,

E're doubt had come her heart to warn,
Her pale faced love, alas! was gone.

The maiden's heart was fond and true,
As though her skin was fairer hue,

And nights of grief and yearning pain,
The threads of life soon snapped in twain,

And 'neath the pine tree's fragrant shade,
The Indian maiden's form was laid.

The years have sped, the Red man's band,
Has long been swept from out the land,

But high upon the hillside lone,
Where wild birds sing, and pine trees moan,

That Indian maid still quiet sleeps,
Though none o'er her lone grave ever weeps.

The pine trees whispering soft and low,
While swayed by the breezes to and fro,

This tale have poured in my listening ears,
An old, old story of bygone years.

As Others See Us.

"I enjoy your weekly visits very much, and hope the rays which brighten homes already cheered by your presence may beam upon others less favored, until your influence will be felt far and near for good. May success attend your every effort for diffusing light."
Worcester.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Doe attended the golden wedding of Mrs. Doe's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Augustus J. Archer, at Salem, Tuesday.

Invitations are out for the marriage of George N. Morse to Miss Edith L. Smith at Trinity Church, May 20, at 10 o'clock. A reception follows at Hotel Kenmore.

Mr. Charles S. Chapin, the active and energetic principal of the Fitchburg High School, visited LIGHT Office last Saturday morning. He was on his way to visit his mother, who is very ill in Brookfield.

Books and Bookmen.

The Foundations of a Library.

As there is no royal road to learning, so there is no royal road to that outward and visible sign of it which consists in shelves well filled with books. The man who wants a library can not get it ready made. He may, it is true, buy a collection of books fairly well fitted to the average mind, but it will be about as satisfactory as the ready made coat fitted to the average body. It will fail to meet his individual eccentricities.

Nor can the ideal library be gathered in a hurry. Nothing is more helpful to the tone and quality of a library than such a moderate degree of poverty as will limit purchases at first to the absolutely essential. In the buying of books, as in the buying of pictures, real discrimination comes only through actual experience, and it is very unfortunate to have too many bought at a low grade of development; but, on the other hand, no man should wait to begin his library until his taste is fully formed, or it will lack many books which he would gladly have there, but which would not run the gauntlet of his mature judgment.

A very common error in buying books is to start with cheap editions under the erroneous impression that later on they may be replaced by good ones. Unfortunately the mind of the book-lover will not assent to this plan, however strong his will. The book he takes up to read is invariably the old and shabby one, and the other becomes only a splendid bit of decoration to please the eye of the visitor. Your pet literature always tastes best from the page on which you originally read it; so, when you buy a book of which you are likely to become fond, it should be in a good enough form to keep. At least paper and print should be so respectable that a new binding will be all the change necessary. With the habitual student the sense of location is very highly developed. In his own library he finds things by their position on the page, and can turn at once to any given passage in a familiar author. But put him in a room full of strange editions, and this laboriously acquired sixth sense becomes utterly useless.

The taste for fine bindings is a liking apart from the love of books for what they contain, but it is by no means an ignoble tendency, and adds vastly to the aesthetic effect of a well-chosen library. The housing and care of books, too, is a subject not beneath the notice of even the profoundest student. To shut them behind glass doors, as was the old fashion, was good for the books, but it gave the room in which they were kept the forbidding air of an anatomical museum. Open shelves, when not too high and deep for the volumes they are to contain, will not permit much dust to gather, especially if stuffy carpets and curtains are kept out, and rugs always removed for shaking.

What the library should contain is perhaps the most important point to consider. As has been already suggested, it should be strongly marked by the individuality of the owner, but this does not mean that it should be purposely eccentric. As every coat follows a certain outline, whatever its size or proportions, so the difference of private libraries should all be founded upon a primary resemblance. There are a certain number of books which must be there, not because they afford their owner particular satisfaction, but because they have so entwined themselves with other literature that they have become indispensable in understanding it. Then there are the books of reference—the time-savers—which more than double the working value of all the other volumes. The sciences, metaphysics, and history may be adjusted to meet the owner's taste. These are among the things which it is permissible, within certain bounds, not to know; but in the departments of poetry, essays, and fiction there are many books essential to a claim to liberal culture. Indeed, of fiction of the good sort, there can hardly be too much in the modern library. Long rows of the leading novelists, from Balzac to Howells, introduce the human element. The other books—I do not say the more serious ones, for nothing is more serious than good fiction—will furnish thought, but the great novels give us society.

Somewhere, too, behind a concealing curtain, there should be a ragged shelf-full of the lightest of paper-covered literature—those novels not great in any sense, but with the useful ability in their shabby pages for producing promptly that restful cerebral vacuum which the "best hundred" or thousand books is sometimes powerless to afford. The familiar book in its familiar place is like the friend always in the same mood. It waits to serve your special need as no uncut volume fresh from the publisher, no brown-papered property of the public library, ever can do.—Caroline Gray Lingle, in Kate Field's Washington.

The Practical Mechanic, April, 1891, F. S. Blanchard & Co., Worcester. $1 per year.

Again we have a fund of information in mechanical matters. There are illustrations of many machines including B. G. Luther's Power Feed Matching machine. Mr. Schmelz continues his interesting resumé of the Electrical Exhibition. The editorials are pat and pertinent. A full page is given to manufacturing news. In fine, the publication is one that any man desiring information can read with profit.

Scientific American, Architects and Builders edition, May. Munn & Co., New York. $2.50 per year.

Many a reader will turn these pages, picking out the house that is to be built when the "ship comes in." There are designs for the long and also for the short purse. They represent the Colonial and the modern styles. All are beautiful. These are given in colored lithographs and in the half tone process. No home lover can fail to find pleasure in reading and examining these pages.

New England Magazine, May, 1891. Boston, 86 Federal Street. $3 per year.

Though late it is welcome. Walt Whitman takes up a number of pages; but the matter, like the poet, is interesting. However the reader may regard the work of the Old Man, "The Good Gray Poet," he must grant that he is an intense personality. "The Old Red School House" is a delightful bit of reminiscence. "The Loyalists" well illustrated, takes us to St. Johns, New Brunswick, and gives us a very good account of those good people who in the troublous times, left their country for their country's good. "The Notes of Some New England Birds" is a notated description of our feathered songsters. "Poor Little Miss Severance" is a Nantucket Idyl. "Early Dorchester," in its pictures and descriptive matter fully answers the end for which the magazine was named. The Alaskan Fur Trade is exhaustively treated. "The Dakota Metropolis" is a long way from New England, but it is, none the less, very interesting, setting forth, as it does the marvellous growth of Sioux Falls. "Lovejoy—Hero and Martyr" is a sketch of Elijah P. Lovejoy who was killed by a Pro-Slavery mob in Alton, Ill., before the war. "The Oldest House in Washington," the Van Ness mansion is now, we are told, a saloon. "To what base uses etc." "Some Old Newspapers" introduces us to a number of Journals of the long ago. There is not a dull word in the magazine.

James Freeman Clarke, Autobiography, Diary and Correspondence. Edited by Edward Everett Hale. Boston and New York, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1891.

This book tells the life story of that classmate of Oliver Wendell Holmes whom the latter immortalized as the preacher in his never to be forgotten, "The Boys"

"There's the 'Reverend' What's his name?—don't make me laugh."

However "reverend" the subject was, no one ever accused the merry Doctor with over much reverence in the poem; but as the "Preacher" of the class of 1829 at Harvard, he is known by school children from Maine to California. An excellent portrait serves as frontispiece and to introduce us to the good man who, in part, tells his own history.

There is no preface, so we enter at once upon the recital which begins July 21, 1883, at Magnolia, where he spent much of his time in Summer. He says, "It is just fifty years today since I preached my first sermon in Bernard Whitman's church in Waltham." To a man who can look back over fifty years of active clerical life, the vista ought to reveal much of interest and when that period covered one of the most eventful eras in American history and the observer was, himself, an active factor in events, it would be strange indeed if the pen pictures drawn by him were not full of attractive features.

James Freeman Clarke was born in Hanover, N. H., April 4, 1810, though his lineage was purely Bostonian. His father's family spent some years, early in the century, in the Granite State, hence this birth, almost out of place, but the early years of the future clergyman's life were spent in Newton. He had the benefits of the Boston Latin School, whence he went to Harvard, to form one of that class of '29 whose fifty-nine men have been sung more and better than any other equal number of people from that or any other college and all because Oliver Wendell Holmes was in the class, though they proved to be an assemblage worthy of the very highest praise. After college came the Divinity School and at twenty-three the young clergyman was ready for his life work. It was a queer reason that influenced him to go to Kentucky rather than to settle near his home. He wished to judge of the efficiency of his preaching by the effect upon a community not already Unitarian in sentiment. Accordingly, he journeyed to the West. Mr. Clarke left Louisville in 1840 and soon afterward returned to Boston, where he founded the Church of the Disciples in 1841. Of this church he was pastor for forty-five years. He was intimately connected with Harvard as Overseer, Professor and Lecturer. He was very active in a literary way and put forth many valuable and enduring books. His long life of usefulness was ended June 8, 1888.

The book itself, as indicated, is largely written by himself with such additions and comments as the editor, Mr. Hale, has chosen to make. A glance at the index will reveal nearly all the names of men and women who have been conspicuous in New England history during the past seventy years and about them, we find entertaining words. The experience of the young, freedom loving New Englander among the Fire Eating Southerners was interesting and varied, but no man with the wide range of associations that Mr. Clarke had, could be other than entertaining when he devoted himself to reminiscences.

There is not a dull page in the book, whether the subject be the whooping cough of his granddaughter, the war, or the election of Grover Cleveland. There was little of the fierce fire in his life, the fire that burned out the lives of Sumner, Wilson, Phillips, long ere they reached his almost four score. As befits the preacher of peace and goodwill, he was quiet, genial and methodic.

"One day, after lying quiet a long time, he said 'Please repeat to me the hymn, Abide With Me.' He had evidently been thinking of it, but there were a few words he could not recall. He expressed his undoubting trust in a reunion hereafter with those who had gone before and those who were yet to follow him. From day to day his bodily strength failed, but his mind was perfectly clear to the last and faith and hope and love endured."

For sale by Putnam, Davis & Co. $1.50.

The City of Cincinnati and Its Resources, published by the Times-Star Co. 1897.

From title page to finis, we have, in this book, a most magnificent production. It is oblong, 14x18, printed on nearly 200 pages of highly calendered paper and is from the press of Earhart & Richardson. Every page is surrounded by a green lined border, setting off well the space between the type and the edge. Of course, the intent of the book is to set forth the glories of the great city of Cincinnati, and this it accomplishes most fully not only in letter press, but in most superior half tone pictures. These begin with the Probasco fountain, still the most expensive and beautiful in America. The story of the city is briefly told; but of course the main object is to describe the men and places that make up the Queen City of today. There are one hundred and seventy-six special cuts in the book from the full page 8x10 to the representation of a face only. These do not include the many illustrations that accompany the advertisements which are numerous enough to tell the world what is going on in this great city on the Ohio. An index, by topics, with numerous sub-divisions enables the reader to turn readily to the subjects treated and a Cincinnati, with such a book under his arm, might be proud to roam the world over, saying, "This represents my home, can you improve upon it?" Above one hundred and seventy-five branches of industry are set forth in these pages. Cincinnati has long had a reputation for enterprise and thrift and this book proves it incontestably. From first to last the volume is a delight to the eye and it is invaluable to him who wishes to know, minutely, the history and the present of the city that once was known the world over as Porkopolis. Again, she has held the reputation of the Athens of the West and in the extent and variety of her educational institutes perhaps she merits it. In looking over and through the faces of the men who are "running things" in Cincinnati today, one can't help wondering where the homely ones are. Either the photographer and engraver have improved on their subjects or, by common consent only the handsome men were selected to represent their city, for certainly, in no other case were so many bright, alert, keen faces crowded into one volume. The Times-Star may flatter itself over a work well done. There ought to be "millions in it."

D. C. Heath & Co., Boston, are just issuing Comparative View of the Executive and Legislative departments of the governments of the United States, France, England and Germany, by John Wenzel, Assistant Librarian of College of Liberal Arts, Boston University.

This consists of outlines of the four great constitutional governments, arranged in parallel columns in such a way that similar topics are grouped together. By this arrangement comparisons can readily be made. The latest standard books in both French and English have been consulted in compiling these outlines. Prof. Woodrow Wilson of Princeton, the author of "The State," has examined the manuscript, and made suggestions and corrections. This Comparative View is unlike in its arrangement anything hitherto published. It will be useful in fixing in mind the leading facts of these governments, which are brought out much more fully in "The State," and other works on civil government.

The Worcester Theater Association elected officers last Monday as follows: President, A. George Bullock; clerk, Henry M. Witter; treasurer, F. H. Dewey; directors, Stephen Salisbury, E. B. Stoddard, A. G. Bullock, F. H. Dewey, Wm. H. Morse and George Sumner. The directors elected Eben Harrington secretary.

Philip W. Moen has been elected a director of the Central National Bank to fill the vacancy caused by the death of his father Philip L. Moen.

Mrs. J. M. Leiper of Tablequa, Ind. Ter., is a guest of her father, Mr. H. M. Smith and will remain in Worcester during the summer. LIGHT readers, not light readers, will remember her as our correspondent from "Way out West."

Solitude.

To know that God's face
Is smiling across the way;
To know that there 'tis sunshine
When you see only the gray.

To feel there's a song
A murmur among the pines;
To feel there's a harmony
When you hear but broken lines.

—Helen Worthington Rogers.

Resurgam.

How little we know as we stand on the shore,
And gaze on the fast rising tide,
Of the hopes, and the liv's that were wrecked on its breast,

And are buried far down—side by side—
By the beds of bright coral—in deep ocean caves,
Where the sea nymphs in wild sportive glee
Ne'er think of the hearts bowed in sorrow and grief,
For their loved—"gathered up by the sea."

A kind loving hand turns the pages of life,
And I see 'neath the blue ocean's crest,
The land and the home of a nation long past,
Buried deep—fathom's deep in the west.
I asked the bright stars in their far away homes,
As in weird mazy dance on they sped,
Must bright Atlantis forever be held,
Leagues down in his ocean-rocked bed.

Only a prayer from the lips of one heart,
Who would drink from the fountain of Truth,
Only a soul thro' for those past and gone,
For a land swept away by its youth,
'Ere the ripeness of autumn had crowned its fair breast,
Or winter so hoary and gray,
Had wrapped her dark mantle about her bright form,
She had vanished—she melted away.

And was gone—o'er her hills and mountains and vales,
There is nought but the blue ocean wave.
The loves of her children—the homes of her sires,
Are entwined in one common grave.
A strange weird picture from the great Limner's hand
Comes wafted along to me,
And up from the caverns and gold-sanded floors,
Springs the beautiful—isle of the sea.

Fair, fair as the dream of the dim-shrouded past,
Told by Plato to sages of yore,
Rise mountain and dell and sweet silvery streams,
Whi'e along by the daisy-decked shore,
Of her bays and her rivers brighter far than the past.
Are the homes crowned with sweet love divine,
The laughter of children, the songs of bright birds,
While fair flowers most lovingly twine,

'Round the porch and the homes of a people long lost,
Submerged 'neath the blue waters wide,
Let us thank the Most High, for the weird alchemy,
That will lift them once more o'er the tide.
O wondrous Power, we turn our bark's prow,
Storm-tossed on life's troubled sea,
For we know Thy love like a bright beacon light,
Shall guide us in time on to Thee.

—Fred L. Hildreth.

Worcester, Mass.

Washington letter to the Chicago Herald says: "Mrs. Kate Chase, daughter of Salmon P. Chase, and twenty years ago the most famous woman in America, won a distinct and personal victory in the closing days of the recent Congress. She lives in the outskirts of the capital, and not more than half a mile from the new Catholic University and but a little father from the Soldiers' Home. Near her now historic house, known as Edgewood, are two or three low wayside groggeries, and on these she decided to make war. A bill was introduced in Congress prohibiting the issuance of a liquor license within one mile of the Soldiers' Home. The saloon men paid little attention to it, but some mysterious force pushed the bill through committee after committee, one house after the other, and finally it became a law. That mysterious force was Mrs. Kate Chase. Then the district commissioners decided that the prohibited district was all that territory lying within one mile of the border of the Soldiers' Home grounds. This included a part of the city and all of two new suburbs lying near Edgewood. Forty or fifty saloons in all were wiped out of existence, including the objectionable groggeries near Mrs. Chase's home, as well as ten or fifteen more which would soon have been started in the new suburbs. Of course there is consternation among the liquor men, but they will have to get up early in the dawn if they want to get ahead of Mrs. Kate Chase."

The College Ghost.

[Should Mr. Amos A. Parker, the "Senex" of the following story live till the 8th of October next, he will be one hundred years old. His picture will appear in the next LIGHT.]

The narrative given, by "Senex" below, will be read with additional interest when it is known that the writer has nearly completed a century of years. "I am now ninety-eight years of age," he writes: "I have for years been investigating Spiritualism and am fully satisfied that there is much solid truth in it, but also a vast deal of humbug, especially when publicly exhibited for money. I have had a long life, well preserved, witnessed many interesting scenes and have heard related many interesting incidents. Why this ghost story has not been published before is that the professor did not wish it done in his day at any rate, as it would attract too much attention to the college."

Nearly a century ago, one of our New England colleges was troubled with a ghost. It was supposed at first to be a mere human being, but at length it so effectually eluded the nicest scrutiny of the students, and faculty of the college, and performed so many superhuman acts, that it was deemed to be a veritable ghost.

But in order to understand the following narrative, it is needful to have an idea of the room in which the ghost appeared. It was a basement room at the south end of the college building, with thick brick walls, reaching entirely across the end—about forty feet—and with a brick partition wall twenty feet back, so that the room was in size forty by twenty feet. It had a brick floor, but was not plastered on the walls or overhead. It had small windows at the end and sides, but no place of entrance except at the door at the south end,—so that a person in the college must go outside in order to enter the room. This basement room was used as a mere storage place for things not needed for immediate use, and was specially used by the directors for the depositing of bones from the dissecting room. They were deposited in a chest four feet long and two feet wide and deep.

Immediately over this chest, two students occupied a room together. In this condition of things, at about eight o'clock on a pleasant summer's evening, these students heard a rustling of the bones in the chest in the room below. They were much frightened, but after a time, with the aid of another student and lantern they had courage enough to go down to the basement room to investigate. They found the outer door closed, but the lid of the chest open, and the bones much disturbed. They found no one in the room, but as there was no lock on the door, a mischievous boy or student might have shaken up the bones and left the room before they had entered. The conclusion was that there was no ghost in the case and that the disturbance was caused by human hands. But in order to settle the question a strong lock was procured and put on the outside door. It was a lock such as was used on store doors a century ago, part wood and part iron with a keyhole through it and a large key so that it would lock inside and out. The door was then locked and the key taken by one of the students of the room above. It was, however, argued that if it was in reality a ghost it would return again at the same hour the next night. So a number of students agreed to be in the room above, with lanterns at eight o'clock and wait events.

Assembled according to appointment at about that hour, they heard a noise as if the lid of the chest was violently thrown open against the inner wall; stifled groans of distress were heard, and the bones appeared to be flying about in all directions, and seemingly falling to the floor beneath the student's feet. A large number of students, with lanterns, hastened down to the basement room. They found the door locked as they had left it the night before. It was hastily unlocked; the students rushed in and found many bones out of the chest, and promiscuously scattered about on the brick floor. Then they thoroughly examined the entire room, so that they were sure no human being could be concealed in it, and also examined the windows, finding iron rods outside and so near together that a rat could not squeeze in between them. All were satisfied that no human being could enter the room except through the door-way.

But all this did not entirely settle the question, whether these demonstrations were made by a ghost or a man, for some one might have a false key, letting himself in, making the demonstrations, return and lock the door behind him. And yet they did not see how he could do such things, and be so quick about it as not to be caught, for the moment the demonstrations began the students started for the basement door, and seemingly quicker than the intruder could get outside himself. However, in order to render assurance doubly sure, they agreed to set a watch outside at the usual hour of the night with a number of lanterns; so that no one could go out or in the basement door without being seen and caught.

This was done. At the usual hour a large crowd, consisting not only of the officers and students of the college, but also, many of the inhabitants of the village—for these demonstrations had greatly alarmed the whole neighborhood. Many had lanterns so that the south end of the college was as light as day, rendering it impossible for any mortal being to go in or out, without being seen.

The crowd began to grow impatient, when the demonstrations began. The lid of the chest flew open, groans were uttered, the bones leaped out in all directions with great violence and stifled shrieks of murder were distinctly heard. Quick as possible the door was unlocked, opened and the crowd rushed in; but no human mortal could be found after a most thorough search. The apartment was then entirely overhauled, the chest was removed a short distance nearer the end of the room, which would bring it nearly opposite the door, and about twenty feet distance from it. After a long consultation of the officers, students and citizens, it was concluded to try once more to detect the cause of the frightful demonstrations.

The janitor of the college was directed to bring in a box of ashes and a sieve, and the next day, some half dozen of the students, superintended by one of the professors, picked up all the bones, piled them up at the end of the chest, and then sifted ashes in all directions, ten feet from the chest, going backward so as to leave no foot prints of their own. The chest lid had been closed, and then, no mortal man could open the chest and get at the bones without making foot prints in the ashes. After the matter was all well looked over, the door was locked and the professor took the key himself. It was also agreed to set the usual watch outside. The result of all this was believed to solve the problem whether all these demonstrations were the work of a ghost or a man.

At the appointed time a large crowd was out doors watching; the professor with key in hand stood at the door waiting. At the first demonstration inside, he tried to put in his key, but the noise so far exceeded all former exhibitions that he was delayed in unlocking and when he had pushed the door slightly open the sounds were so startling, the bones flying so swiftly in all directions, that he paused until all was quiet. Then he pushed the door entirely back, and checked the crowd, so they could examine what had happened. They discovered that the lid of the chest had been torn from its hinges. A large lot of bones were strewn about in all directions, and many were on the sifted ashes, but not a foot-print of man, ghost or devil could be found. It is needless to say that all were profoundly astonished. They again made a thorough search throughout the room and were absolutely certain that no human being could be secreted in it, and as certain that no one could have entered it, except by the door, and that no one could have entered at the door without being seen.

The inmates of the college and inhabitants of the village, were all excited, puzzled, confounded—all the exercises of the college were suspended, except prayers in the chapel night and morning. Students could neither study, recite lessons nor quietly sleep nights. The next morning the chapel was filled to its utmost capacity by the officers and students of the college and the leading citizens of the village; for it was understood that these all-absorbing manifestations would there be fully discussed. The president himself officiated at the desk, and after prayers, sat down, and requested the audience to be seated. Then a full discussion took place. All were requested to throw some light on the subject if they could, but no one attempted an explanation. It was then suggested whether the college had not better be closed for a month, and these demonstrations might cease; so the import and meaning of them might be discovered. As the case stood these demonstrations seemed to be senseless and to effect no purpose. At all events, the college exercises could not exist under this great excitement.

At length, one of the students suggested that in a neighboring town, some five or six miles away, there was a fortune-teller or magician, who had a great reputation in solving mysteries, finding goods lost or stolen, and telling fortunes. It could do no harm to bring him here even if he effected nothing, and he was so anxious that this strange mystery should be solved that he would take a carriage and bring him here at his own expense. This proposition was accepted. He said he would start soon after breakfast, and that all might attend who desired to do so and not be kept needlessly waiting. He gave notice that he would return at two o'clock p. m. In the meantime he would suggest the floor be swept clean and all things made as presentable as it could be while he was gone. All this was done at once.

At the hour named he drove up to the college with the fortune teller, or magician, and found a great crowd of people there to greet his arrival. The fortune teller at once left the carriage, saying he wished for no introduction passed through the crowd without noticing any one. He was a man of large stature, brilliant eye, intelligent face, and it was apparent that he felt at ease and master of the situation. He passed into the room, came to the chest of bones, stooped down and carefully examined those in and out of the chest, perhaps a bushel basket full in all, then he stood erect and said in a solemn tone: "I can solve the mystery but to do this, I must have profound silence in the room. Those who cannot keep silence must at once leave it. I must not be interrupted. When I have finished and any explanation is needed I will give it; but I say again I must not be interrupted!" This last explanation was so solemnly pronounced and in such a strong voice, that the audience seemed to stand in awe, and kept entire silence during his performance.

He began by saying: "A portion of these bones are those of a murdered man! His ghost now appears and demands for them a christian burial in consecrated ground, that they may no longer be subject to rude handling by thoughtless men. A few years ago, at midnight, the body that contained this skeleton was brought to this college building in a box by two men. The janitor was aroused and they all three took it into the dissecting room. One of them stated that it contained the body of a man about forty years old, who came to his sudden death in full life, by accident; that in assisting to raise a building he fell and timbers falling on him he was most shockingly bruised; that he was taken up dead, and as he had no near relatives in the place, and no one objected, they had brought the body to be used in the interest of science, as it was not an easy matter to obtain a subject for dissection who suddenly died in the full vigor of life; and that now with a suitable sum for their trouble, they would retire. This was agreed upon and paid. On being requested to give their names and place of residence they declined, saying it was of no importance as there would be no search for the body.

"In taking off the clothes from the body the next morning, it was found to be terribly bruised which might have been done in the manner stated, or it might have been done by a bludgeon, such as is used in playing ball. The back and three ribs were broken, and the skull was smashed in. The arms and legs were more or less shattered and mutilated. The dress was found to be superior to that of a laboring man, but such as a trader or professional man would wear for every day dress. The body had on a complete suit of clothes except hat and shoes. But there was nothing found in them to indicate who the man was or where he resided. There was not even a jack knife found in the vest pocket.

"At length it was thought best to postpone the dissection for a time, and institute an investigation. Accordingly, men were sent into all the neighboring towns round about to make inquiry; but no case could be found of an accident in the raising of a building, or of a man missed or one supposed to be murdered. It was then believed that the body must have been brought from a long distance, and further inquiry useless. They then proceeded to dissect the body; but took the precaution to preserve all things possible for identification if inquiry should be made. Accordingly, they measured his exact height, weighed the body on the scales and cut off a large lock of hair. These minutes, together with a lock of hair were put into the coat pocket, and the whole suit hung up in a closet in the dissecting room—and are there now! But my object now is to lay this ghost and procure a christian burial of the bones in consecrated ground as demanded. And now I call for a box to put them in."

On its being produced, he carefully selected all the bones which he said belonged to the skeleton of the murdered man, put the lid on and strongly nailed it on. He then said, it must be put into the hands of the sexton for burial, and he being present, took charge of it, and immediately proceeded to the village graveyard near by, and afterwards reported that he had done his duty.

He then said he felt impelled to address a few words of caution and admonition to the students of the college. The ghost had been satisfied and departed forever from the college, and would annoy the students no more. They could retire to their beds, sleep soundly, and awake in the morning refreshed for the duties of the day.

"And now," he said, "my young friends, you are sent here by parents and guardians at great expense to obtain an education which you are in duty bound to do. It will be a serious neglect of duty to spend your time in idleness, or to go about the streets or college buildings to find some mischief to do. This spirit is departed and will trouble you no more; but, remember, there are many other spirits of different capacities and disposition—'good, bad and indifferent,' and if you commit offences you may be suddenly seized by an unseen power, and severely handled—your clothing torn to pieces and you left half dead. Heed my admonitions or suffer the consequences. And now on the payment of five dollars for my services, I am ready to depart and return to my home." This was readily done, and one of the students took him into the carriage and departed.

It was then concluded to adjourn to the chapel where there was room for all to be seen and heard. The president occupied the desk and acted as chairman. The first inquiry was whether the narrative of the magician about the transactions in the dissecting room was true, and if so, how he obtained his knowledge. The surgeon, who had had charge of the room for more than a dozen years, stated that it was literally true from beginning to end, and he had just come from the dissecting room and saw the clothes of the murdered man hanging up in the closet. But was the magician ever in the dissecting room? O, no! and if he had come and begged for admittance it would not have been granted. The proceedings in the dissecting room are kept secret and no outsider could be admitted on any conditions, and, said the surgeon, "I presume he never visited the college building before today, or even the village itself." "Then," said the president, "we must take it for granted that the magician obtained his knowledge from his own divination and not from any prompting outside." The president then announced, that the usual exercise of the college would be resumed on the next day, and the students must govern themselves accordingly. The conclusion arrived at was that the college had been visited by a real ghost, yet some of the learned men, in and out of the college doubted it notwithstanding, but they could see no way to avoid the conclusion. The next day, the usual exercises began with renewed vigor. The students got their lessons better than ever, and recited to the satisfaction of the teachers. Peace and harmony reigned supreme, so that, in time, it was said, that if there could be a millennium on earth, the college was a most brilliant example.

To be continued.

GARRET FRUIT.

No. 1.

Some weeks since, LIGHT asked for odd scraps of information that might lie unprinted in Worcester cubby holes. The following is one of the first fruits.

"To keep in memory the Bargain & Contract between Moses Larnard, Junr of Framingham & Mr. Benjamin Kendal of Sherbourn, the above s. d Larnard shall let his Son Solomon for the term of time of one year after the date here of to work for the s. d Kendal, the above s. d Kendal for Solomon's work & Service Shall Pay the full and just sum of four pounds, thirteen shillings & four pence to the above s. d Moses Larned Junr or his order. Also during the whole time of service the above s. d Kendal Shall give to the s. d Solomon Good food as much as is needful. Comfortable Lodging, washing and mending his cloaths, and liberty to write a few lines every week & liberty to read some in the Bible every day—, also During the whole time of service the above s. d Kendal Shall with the best of his understanding and wisdom, command & govern & encourage in good ways & if need be correct the above s. d Solomon. for Solomon's Rates, the Insuing year after date, the above S. d Kendal Shall pay them out of the above mentioned Sum for Solomon Service. the time of payment to be at the end of the year's Service to all which above mentioned articles in witness whereof we hereunto Set our hands this third Day of February, One thousand Seven hundred & Sixty Six. Benjamin Kendel Junr Lydia Kendal Benjamin Kendal Moses Larnard, Junr."

[The above s. d Solomon was the oldest son of Moses Junior, born Aug. 17, 1749. Parry's History of Framingham, says he went to sea.]

"The within mentioned Solomon Larnard Began his years Service with Mr. Benjamin Kendal of Sherbourn the tenth Day of February one thousand Seven Hundred & Sixty Six."

No. of Bagonit 239.

What can this last expression mean?

J. A. Long

WE WILL MAKE A
PRESENT

— OF —

1 Nice Soft Mattress,
1 Pair Geese Pillows,
1 Woven Wire Spring,
WITH OUR
$39.00

Chamber * Sets.

WITH OUR
$60.00

Plush Parlor Suit

We will give a

PRESENT

— OF —

1 Bronze Frame Mirror, 40x18
Bevel Plate ;
1 Polished Top Parlor Table,
28x28.

J. * A. * LONG,

Franklin Square Furniture Rooms,

555 * MAIN * STREET.

Fashion.

Importations of ribbons this Spring reveal the wonders of the loom and its possibilities to a remarkable extent. Gauze foundations are most prominent, on which are woven broché figures of satiny sheen in plain colored silk combination shades, or with metallic thread designs.

A hat all violets is well designed, with Parma and Neapolitan blossoms mixed in the double wreath that rests flat on the curls. Narrow green velvet ribbons tie the garland, and the long bows partly fill the open space vacant of crown.

The bandeau trimming dawns upon one as a fad that will become universal. It consists of a band set under the brim of the hat to fit close to the head, which is covered with a roll of velvet or ribbon, ruche of lace or wreath of small flowers. Velvet flowers are fast becoming common and cheap.

The Swiss lilac is the fashionable perfume.

Pretty effects are seen in the new Bolton sheeting, which comes in rich colors, with designs of a deeper shade than the ground. For instance, a shrimp-pink ground shows some graceful scroll-work in deep maroon, or a pattern in brown appears upon a golden ground and a russet design of foliage upon a pale-olive ground.

A mass of roses, tulle, ribbons and gems, and behold! a bonnet. It seems as if the milliners wanted to make a chapeau look as if it had been tossed together and quite by chance had lighted on the head of a woman who wore it.

The newest fans in the fancy stores are reproductions of those carried by the fair maidens of Spain. These fans are mounted on gilded sticks of fragrant wood, and printed with gay landscapes of castles, orange trees and dancing figures. There are also fans painted with toredors and bulls in the arena surrounded by brilliantly dressed cavaliers and ladies. Some of the prettiest of new fans are perforated to render them lighter and give a peculiarly dainty effect of light and shade in use.

June brides are busy with their trousseaux, and it may be said never had a bride a better chance of making her wardrobe beautiful and attractive. They are many lovely stuffs for street gowns, and there never was a greater variety in wrapping and such an embarrassment of exquisite headgear. The difficulty will be in selecting from among all the delightful things set out before the bride elect. In the matter of lingerie there is little that is new but there is much that is entirely beautiful. Surah and India silks are both used for underwear, and are often in colors as well as white, although nothing can be ever as elegant as pure white underwear. No black underwear will be favored by persons of taste, even though it is said to be quite the thing in Paris. A very sensible fabric for underwear is the unbleached Tussock silk, which launders very well and wears indefinitely. This may be trimmed with lace or with embroidery. Robes de nuit are in delicate tints of pink or blue without offence, but nothing more full of color can be permitted to the bride in her outfit.

Dr. A. A. Howland. Frank H. Howland, D. D. S.

Dentists. 11 Pleasant St.,
Worcester, Mass

Residence, 61 West Street.

PREMIER
SAFETY
BICYCLES.

Not because they are English
but because they are Best.

JOHN A. LOWE, Agent, 630 Main Street.

The Readers of Light
I most cordially invite
To call at my

Model Drug Store

When in want of anything
They would expect to find

In a metropolitan establishment of its kind.

Respectfully,

Geo. E. Fairbanks, Druggist,
10 FRONT STREET.

W. H. TWICHELL,
Gold, Silver and Nickel
Plater,

Bronzing, Lacquering and Oxidizing. Also job polishing.

13 Mechanic St., Worcester, Mass.

ART NEEDLEWORK AND STAMPING

Room 1, Burnside Building, 339 Main St.,
Mexican Work, Embroidery, Fine Needlework,
Done to Order.

Instruction given and material furnished. Goods sold on commission.

MRS. S. M. KEYES.

J. S. WESBY & SONS,

BOOK * BINDING

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

387 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

FOR

RELIABLE SHOES

at Fair Prices

Go to 16 FRONT STREET,

J. K. BROWN,

W. L. BROWN, Manager.

RICHARD HEALY

Will offer this week his ENTIRE STOCK of Handsome Imported Tea Gowns

at 50c. on the Dollar

in order to make a THOROUGH CLEARANCE of these goods.

512 * Main * Street.

Not a Spring Poem.

And now the voice of spring cleaning is heard in the land, and in each and every well ordered household is a temporary altar whereon is daily being burnt incense in honor of its tutelary saint.

The enterprising spider who some time ago secured a choice corner lot and built thereon a finely constructed cobweb, hoping, as a result, to enjoy the delicacies of the season in the shape of early flies, finds his work ruthlessly destroyed and goes on his sorrowful way reflecting upon the vanity of earthly hopes and wishes,—fortunate indeed, if he escapes with his life, and is allowed to scamper away as fast as his numerous legs can carry him.

Tom, who never was much in doubt about it before, ponders seriously if after all it is not possible that marriage is a failure. He has enjoyed his family and his home with all its cosy comforts and dainty prettinesses. What a pleasant contrast it has all been to his old-time bachelor life!

But now all seems changed. The whole home corps seems entirely demoralized. Everything is at sixes and sevens. Mamie is undeniably up and down cross; and worst of all to a hungry man, dinner-time is temporarily suspended.

He finds himself, too, turned into a brevet furniture-mover. That old-fashioned desk of his grandfather's of which he is so proud is dreadfully uncomfortable to handle when out of its own particular place. Oh, it is the broken castor that is the trouble! He remembers now that Mamie wanted him to see about getting it mended the very day it got broken, but he told her he hadn't time just then. Conscience reminds him, with a twinge, that he was'n't so very busy after all, for when his old-time chum, Dick, called for him that very afternoon to take a spin behind the new horse, there was no question of his being able to accept the invitation.

Brooms and feather dusters flourish apace. Nothing is where it should be and everything is where it shouldn't be.

Night at last descends upon the unhappy household, but troubles do not come to an end even then. Papa's son and heir awakes at about twelve-forty-five a. m. and will not be comforted. Where are the matches? The last Mamie remembers of them, the box was upset when the broom handle fell against the pitcher and knocked into the mirror and general confusion followed. Somebody picked them up and put them away; but where?

Meanwhile Tom, Jr., refuses to listen to reason, and nothing will do but that the head of the family shall take him in his arms and promenade the bedroom limits for perhaps an hour or so. Mamie silently gives thanks that she was so careful as to herself see that no stray tacks were left around after that carpet was laid.

Alas! She made no allowance for the total depravity of inanimate things! A scarcely smothered imprecation soon assures her that the inevitable tack was there, and with impish intent lying in wait and patiently biding its time to harass and vex the soul of her already much exasperated lord and master.

But why further prolong the tale of woe? Like all things earthly, the season of trial and inconvenience shall eventually have its end, and out of its very chaos and discomfort shall spring the order and home cosiness so dear to the inmost heart of man as well as of woman. "Some days must be dark and dreary"; but after the storm, sunshine. After war, peace.

"Cleanliness is next to godliness." It was not without intention that the two virtues were placed in such close juxtaposition, for, is not the one in its perfection, as hard to attain as the other? SIGMA.

Dr. Wesley Davis and wife of Hotel Adams are off for a journey in the South, as far as Alexandria and Richmond.

Colonel Rockwood Hoar will start, June 1, for a European trip. Lucky man! Many others would like to do the same.

Stanley Brennan having had a week's outing upon his 'cycle is home again. Worcester is better than Northampton.

Recompense.

I care not where I may chance to rest,
 Whether it be in the earth's cold breast
 With the pregnant sod on my bosom prest,
 Or whether my whitened bones must lie
 Without a pall 'neath the starlit sky
 In a desert land where all things die;
 Or whether I lay me down to sleep
 Where coral grows and the sea-crabs creep
 In ocean's sepulchre fathoms deep:
 I ask no tears when my life is through
 Nor flowers my lonely grave to strew
 'Tis enough to have lived beloved by you.
 —FRANCIS ZURI STONE.

Petersham.

1839 Established 1891

TWENTY-FIVE

Pianos

Taken in Exchange for the Celebrated CHICKERING and other makes controlled by us.

These Pianos are in first-class order and include such as the

CHICKERING,

KNABE, Grand,

HALLET, DAVIS & CO.,

HALLET & CUMSTON,

GILBERT,

Vose,

NEW ENGLAND,

KRANICH & BACH.

A Splendid chance to buy low for the Family, Lodge Room or Chapel.

The above will be sold at extremely low Prices, AS WE NEED THE ROOM.

S. R. Leland & Son,

446 MAIN STREET.

CHICKERING * AGENTS.

FURNITURE AND CARPETS,

355 Main Street, Worcester.

EDDY

REFRIGERATORS

ARE THE

Most * Economical * Consumers

Of Ice.

We are SOLE AGENTS
for them for the city.

Prices * Reasonable.

PINKHAM & WILLIS,

355 MAIN ST.

Good to Eat.

Bread Omelet.

Line a buttered scallop-dish with thin slices of cold lamb or veal. Soak one cup of soft bread-crumbs in one cup of hot milk. Add one tablespoon of butter, one teaspoon of chopped parsley, and one teaspoon of fine chopped onion, a little salt and pepper and two eggs well beaten. Pour this over the meat and bake about fifteen minutes or until brown. Serve at once in the dish in which it is baked Potato Yeast.

Boil some potatoes, mash them, and to six potatoes add one gill of flour. Stir in as much water as will make the whole into a thick batter; add some yeast and a wineglass full of salt. When it is light, put in your jar and cover it.

Thick slices of cod, halibut and salmon are nice broiled. Sprinkle with salt and cook twenty minutes, spreading with butter when done. Shad and mackerel can be broiled whole. Lay the skin side down at first, and turn several times, seeing that it does not scorch; place on a hot platter and butter well. Bluefish are very fine if broiled until half done then laid in a buttered dripping pan, with shavings of butter put thickly over them, and set into a hot oven until finished.

American Cream.

For this very nice cream, dissolve, on the back of the stove, half a box of gelatine in a quart of milk. Beat the yolks of four eggs with six tablespoonfuls of sugar and two teaspoonfuls of vanilla. Stir these into the milk and gelatine, when the latter are nearly boiling. Beat the whites of the eggs with five tablespoonfuls of sugar, and as soon as the milk has quite come to a boil, stir them into it; then pour into a mould to cool. E. M. J. Jellied Oranges.

Eight oranges, one large lemon, one half box of gelatine, two-thirds of a cupful of cold water, one cupful of boiling water, one and one-fourth cupfuls of sugar. Squeeze the juice from five of the oranges and the lemon. Pare and cut the remaining oranges in small pieces and sprinkle one-fourth cupful of sugar over them. Soak the gelatine and dissolve with the boiling water. Add sugar, and when cold, the juice of the oranges and lemon, then strain upon the cut oranges and set away until firm. Cut in cubes and serve with whipped cream, sweetened and flavored to taste.

Orange puddings are apt to be bitter, but if the directions given in the following recipe are carefully followed, one may be certain of a satisfactory result.

Apple Sauce.

Pare core and slice your apples, put them in a kettle with water enough to keep them from burning, cover them, and as soon as they are soft mash them very fine. When they are nearly cold, sweeten them to the taste. Baked Pudding for Invalids.

One pint of milk, three eggs, sugar to the taste, two tablespoonfuls of flour. Beat the eggs, add the sugar, then the flour, and stir in the milk gradually. Butter a pan, pour in the pudding, and bake it.

The fund for that "Washington arch" in New York City has now reached $89,023.

J. W. GREENE,
P L U M B E R.

Dealer in Stoves, Ranges and Furnaces. Steam and Gas Fitting. Jobbing in all its branches promptly attended to. Telephone Connection. 51 Main Street, Cumming's block.

BICYCLES.

Agency for Standard Wheels.

195 FRONT ST.

L. J. ZAHONYI,

Confectioner and Caterer,

348 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

STARKIE'S DYE HOUSE,

12 Layard Place, (Old Stand,) Worcester.

Ladies and Gents' Garments

DYED * AND * CLEANSED

in a Superior Manner.

Harness and Saddlery,

RELIABLE GOODS
and LOWEST PRICES.

R. McALEER & CO.,

155 MAIN STREET.

PHOTOGRAPHER
*****

Children's
Portraits
A Specialty

326 Main, op. Mechanics Hall

F. S. BLANCHARD & CO.,

* PRINTERS. *

Book, Newspaper, Catalogue, Church, Society, Wedding and Commercial Printing of every kind executed in the best modern style.

No orders too large; none too small.

154 FRONT ST.

Horace Kendall,

DEALER IN

Furniture, Ranges, Carpets

AND HOUSEKEEPING GOODS.

Goods sold on instalments if desired. Prices as low as any house in New England.

No. 319 Main St., Worcester, Mass.

Mechanics Hall Building.

School and College.

High School.

The Sumner Club held its second meeting in the High School building May 8th. The question was: "Resolved that a majority in Congress should carry a bill over the president's veto. A paper, "Amateur Journalism," was read by H. H. Hill. The committees from the Sumner and Assembly have held one meeting but have taken no action in regard to the union of the two societies. The Eucleia held an unusually lively meeting. The question was that labor unions are for the best interests of the working man. It was debated by many members, and won for the affirmative.

The question at the Aletheia's meeting was: Resolved that life in the city is preferable to life in the country. The city girls made decision in favor of their country cousins. An original poem entitled "The Junior Year," was read by Miss Florence E. Keith, a Junior.

Arbor Day, which by official order was observed in all city public schools, passed without recognition at the High School, though the school assembled in the Hall for rhetorical exercises as usual.

Thursday next is the date of the Juniors' presentation exercises. As before stated, the bust will be that of Charles Dickens who was chosen in preference to several of our own countrymen.

The banner which is to be contested for by the class-crews, is to be made from the design submitted by Thurston, of the Junior class. His design was chosen unanimously by the Athletic Association Directors, and the banner will make a fit mate to the Athletic banner.

The crews for the race have been made up as follows: Senior Crew, G. A. Davis (stroke), H. A. Billings, C. A. Gray and E. M. Shattuck; Junior Crew, H. N. Hathorne, (stroke), W. H. Cunningham, H. E. Field and J. A. McGourty, 2nd Year Crew, F. J. Zaeder, (stroke), F. W. Wallace, A. H. Doe and W. F. Carroll. The crews have been doing some steady training and an exciting race may be looked for.

Wednesday noon, the Senior class assembled to choose their class poem. Mrs. Ware, Miss Townsend and Miss White, teachers in the school, had chosen from the nine poems submitted to them, three from which the class was to pick the best. When the poems had been read, one was selected, of which T. F. Cummings proved to be the author. The poem will be given in full in LIGHT's next issue.

In accordance with the decree of the School Committee, the graduation exercises will be held this year in Mechanics Hall, as they were some years ago. This does away with the discomfort of the crowding and oppressive heat which is felt at the graduations as a rule. But on the other hand, much difficulty is had in hearing the reading of some of the essays and orations. Probably the graduating pupils are divided in opinion in regard to it, but there are many who feel that half the pleasure is taken away by taking their leave of the school in a place having no connection with the past four years' work.

The entries for the sports of next Saturday are now closed, and the showing of fellows entered is magnificent. The Senior class have by far the greatest number of men entered, the Juniors coming next, and second year last. Although the number of entries would ordinarily be less, since the first year fellows are unable to join in the sports, yet, so great is the interest, that more members from the three upper classes are entered than usually come from all four.

The list of sports is essentially the same as in former years, although throwing the base ball will this year be one of the events.

Mount Holyoke.

An entertainment was given in the gymnasium Tuesday evening by the Seniors, which was one of the prettiest and most successful of the year. The programs announced "A German Evening," and the curtain opening showed a tableau, "Germania," the patron Goddess of Germany, and from behind the scenes rang out "Die Watch am Rhine." This tableau was followed by the scene from Faust, in which Gretchen sits at the spinning wheel and sings "Meine Ruh ist hin." A recitation from "Die Yungfrau von Orleans," and a beautiful tableau of the Lorelei followed. These formed an introduction to the dainty little play of Schneewittchen. As the scenes progressed the story was told, and during the tableau Bendel's Schneewittchen was played. The first scene showed the wicked step-mother, (Kate Freeman), and her magic mirror. The next, Schneewittchen, (Miriam Gray), in the home of the seven little dwarfs. This brought down the house and the young ladies and gentlemen in the audience, after a second encore, even, clamored for more. The step-mother's revenge, by means of the poison apple, was exceedingly well presented. When the curtain went up upon the scene in the forest, with Schneewittchen lying dead and the little dwarfs and birds of the woods mourning over her, the applause knew no bounds. F. A. Bigelow, as prince, appeared as the dirge, "Es ist bestimmt in Gottesrath," was being sung. Every one knew the old story of how the princess came to life again and married the prince. The picture of a German bridal followed, with the bridesmaids braiding the wedding wreath and singing "Die Yungfrauen Kranz," as they crowned the bride. The last scene, the wedding procession, led by the prince and Schneewittchen, dressed in the daintiest of white costumes with its long white costumes with its long white veil and followed by the seven little dwarfs was by far the prettiest ever seen upon the college stage. Every one enjoyed it all and complimented the young ladies on their great success, but to no one was it so much of a gala occasion, as to the seven small boys, who took the parts of the dwarfs.

Harvard.

There is little of really general interest at about this time of year, except athletics; the numerous lectures given by the various clubs, departments and the University have come to an end, and social Harvard sleeps until Class day.

The base ball nine is still steadily at work. It is not distinguishing itself, but manages to win most of its games, although defeated by Brown last week. The Freshmen were defeated in their first game with Yale Saturday.

Despite newspaper reports, it was a wretchedly played game, and neither college is likely to feel proud of it. This will give them the foot-ball and base-ball championship to crow over at the class diuner.

The dinner will take place the night before Commencement, and will probably draw nearly the whole class.

If social Harvard is asleep, literary Harvard is not. Lloyd McK. Garrison has published a book called "Ballads of Harvard and Other Verses." It is really good, which is quite a deal to say for college poetry. Then, too, Harvard's famous character, John the orange-man, has appeared in print. His life is given to the public in a neat little volume by a Senior. To be sure, like a good portrait, it flatters John, but cannot fail to interest everybody who has known him, for it is attractive in form and substance, and presents only that which we care to remember.

Liberia.

Recently efforts have been made to secure inspectors for an Industrial school to be located in Monrovia, Republic of Liberia. Three young men, students in Syracuse University, or graduates thereof, have been secured. They are Orator Fuller Cook, Jr., George Griffin Brownell and Guy N. Collins. All are young, ranging in years from 19 to 24. They go out with high hopes and expectations. They deserve praise and encouragement in what is as much missionary as school work.

Some days since the papers contained the statement that Mr. Small had resigned the presidency of the Utah University, now building in Ogden. He took exception to some adverse criticism from the Board of Trustees and forthwith sent in his resignation. What the outcome will be is not known as yet. If this Southern gentleman was the best man when he was elected, there ought to be some clear and cogent reasons for allowing a change now.

Union College.

Under the direction of President Webster this old institution has taken long steps forward. It now has the title of university and is considerably different from the college that Eliphathet Nott knew. Union now offers in its academic department one A. B. course, one B. S. course, three Ph. B. courses, two B. E. courses, one graduate C. E. course and several eclectic courses. Within the limits of each course in its later stages is a moderate number of elective stages, but in place of a large list of miscellaneous elective studies Union prefers to offer carefully arranged elective courses. She thus stands midway between the conservatives and the radicals in a position which seems likely to be regarded with growing favor.

Our Fitchburg neighbors are at present much exercised over accommodations for future High School pupils. It is talked about in the press and in the schools. The Committee seems to be disposed to divide the school into two divisions, which shall recite respectively forenoon and afternoon. Naturally, a tempest ensues. Should this scheme prevail, there should be two sets of teachers, but the Com. does not consider them at all. The young people in the schools are interested and indignant. Let us hope that common sense will prevail and that the school house will be enlarged.

Washington Letter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May, 9, 1891.

The Fifty-first Congress passed a bill establishing the Rock Creek National Park and appropriating $1,200,000 for the purchase of the land from the present owners. That amount was fixed upon according to a report made by a special commission to appraise the property and it was deemed sufficient. The District Commissioners have now made offers to the owners based upon that valuation and in every instance the offers have been refused. It now appears from statements made by the property-holders that they consider the aggregate value of their land to be $6,000,000. Only a difference of four or five millions! The matter will have to go into the courts, after condemnation proceedings have taken place, and a long and tedious litigation will follow before we get our new park.

The members of the Light Infantry may be interested to know how their conduct here was appreciated. A retired officer of the army, who was stopping at the Ebbitt when they were there, said, "The captain of that company should be proud of his men. They have been here two days, after spending two days in Baltimore, and I have not seen a single man under the influence of liquor or conducting himself in other than a gentlemanly manner. Such conduct in a military company, composed of young men, away from home on an excursion, is very remarkable."

The doctors have over-run the city this week. Some twelve hundred of them have been in convention here at the Arlington and have received many official and social courtesies. One unflinching attention to visitors at this season of the year is a trip down the river to Marshall Hall and a planked shad dinner. One never knows what a shad really tastes like until he has eaten one hot from the plank and fresh from its native river. Such a morsel is the poetry of gustatory enjoyment.

Along felt want in this city is to be filled this summer we are to have a bathing-beach. It is one of the peculiar traits of Congress in its treatment of the District that, after being appealed to for an appropriation for years, in vain, it suddenly responds with an unhesitating liberality. It is so in this instance. The place selected for a bathing beach is the tidal basin to the west of the Monument. The clayey bottom is to be dug away and coarse sand to a depth of two feet spread over it instead. The shore will be graded to an easy descent; two wharves and bathing houses at separate ends of the beach constructed—one for white and one for colored people; a spring board for the expert swimmers; shrubbery planted and everything done to make a perfect establishment of its kind. We will try and keep clean this summer.

The deadly folding-bed has been at it again. A lady living on Nineteenth Street, between P and Q had a narrow escape from suffocation last Tuesday night. When rescued she was unconscious from being shut up in a vertical position with the heels where the head ought to be and the consequent rush of blood to the head. The Star in commenting upon the occurrence, said it was fortunate the lady retired at the unfashionable hour of 8.30 p.m.

Had she gone to bed at the usual time for that locality—12 or 13 o'clock—she would now be dead as nobody would have heard her struggles to escape.

Remembering last summer's prices for ice in Worcester I was astonished the other day when I learned the price at which the Interior Department is to be furnished ice this summer—seventeen and one-half cents per one hundred pounds. That sounds cheap, doesn't it? And fifty cents per hundred for washing towels! Ben Perley Poore once said in reply to a friend who had asked him where he could find the famous lobby; "the lobby, my dear sir, is a gigantic myth," and in view of such prices I think the corruption in government contracts we hear so much of now and then may be a gigantic myth also.

The government clerks who have made injudicious inroads upon their thirty days annual leave are contemplating the long, hot summer with dreary resignation, while the more provident are revelling in an anticipated escape of a month to the cooler regions of the North or the seashore, country or mountains near by.

WINFIELD.

VOLAPÜK.

Rilän,	Ireland.
Komakinän,	Roman Empire.
Rumän,	Roumania.
Rusan,	Russia.
Särbän,	Servia.
Sardän,	Sardinia.
Sax,	Saxony (kingdom.)
Saxän,	Saxony (province.)
Sibirän,	Siberia.
Sikilän,	Sicily.
Silän,	Iceland.
Silop,	Asia.
Skandinän,	Scandinavia.
Spän,	Spain.
Stilasean,	Pacific Ocean.
Sulümelop,	South America.
Sürän,	Syria.
Yapän,	Japan.
Yülin,	Jutland.
Yulop,	Europe.
Zenomel,	Mediterranean Sea.
Zenomelop,	Central America.
Zonisuls,	Azores Islands.
Zülän,	Ceylon.

The long expected volapük reader compiled by Frederic W. Mitchell, published by Mr. Post, together with vocabulary of 5,000 English words with Volapük equivalents has arrived. Copies can be found at Sanford's & Co's. F. L. HUTCHINS.

John Brown.

The widow of Martin J. Hubbard, for thirteen years a member of Worcester's police force, has given to LIGHT a relic in the shape of a dagger that once was in the possession of John Brown or his men.

Mr. Hubbard, who died in January, 1889, was a member of Co. F., 45 Massachusetts during the War and as such served in North Carolina where he obtained the weapon from a Southern man. It has a long blade with large guards, looking not unlike the articles that the Rebels called "Yankee killers." Mr. Hubbard had it polished and a new wooden handle added. It is, every way, a valuable remembrance of Harper's Ferry.

Boston Store.

Sole Centemerl Gloves, Burt's Shoes.
Agencies Butterick's Patterns, Foster Gloves.

WORCESTER CONTINENTALS' SOUVENIR SPOONS.

In answer to the fashion for such unique mementoes we have originated two designs and had them skilfully executed by one of the leading silversmith concerns in the country—Messrs. R. Wallace & Co.

We have imitated no one, and so take pleasure in announcing today a Souvenir Spoon created in token of a highly esteemed local organization, whose existence has been and is an honor and a credit to Worcester and a source of pride and pleasure to city people—

THE WORCESTER CONTINENTALS.

The "WORCESTER CONTINENTALS" Souvenir Spoon, has a Continental in uniform, engraved on the handle, and the word "Continental" marked in the bowl of gold. After dinner coffee size, price $1.48. Solid sterling silver.

The orange spoon has gold bowl with "Continental" written across it. Price $2.25.

Our $1.25 Continental Spoon is after-dinner size.

The "Worcester" Souvenir Tea Spoon, engraved handle, gold bowl, engraved, price $1.50; after dinner size, $1.25.

Birthday Souvenir Spoons for children, plain gold bowls, handles engraved with Kate Greenaway figures. Very clever.

Left aisle.

DEAHOLM & MCKAY COMPANY.

Norcross House, Monument Beach, MASSACHUSETTS.

Open from June 1st to October 1st, 1891. For terms and descriptive catalogue address 10 East Worcester Street, Worcester, Mass., or Norcross House during the season. This is a first-class temperance, family house.
J. A. Norcross, Prop. E. A. Holbrook, Mgr.
W. L. Davis, Clerk.

How a Worcester Boy

Settled in Canada, with Family Reminiscences.

[Written by the late Mrs. Judge Nesmith of New Hamp-hire and kindly given to LIGHT by Mr. Walter F. Brooks, her grand nephew. Further data of the Brooks family are given in LIGHT, March 21st.]

In the year '16, I think it was, we had a severe snow storm on the 6th day of June. The snow fell continuously all day long, eighteen inches in depth on a level. My father had sheared a small flock of sheep only the day before, and we took quilts from the house to protect them from the cold. Of course all the hay was gone and the poor cattle went lowing past the house. My brothers went into the woods and cut down browse as they called it for food for them. Our wheat was up several inches and was protected by the body of snow, and was not injured. It was not until the Tuesday following that the snow had so far disappeared that the sheep could nibble about the stumps and satisfy their hunger; this year was followed by great suffering in many a poor household. I well recall the season as my dear mother was driven to do what was a trying expedient. As our flour had nearly given out at one time, she would bake a cake and place at each plate upon the table a small portion that no one should be dealt with partially. I well remember hearing of one good woman living some ten miles south of us, who for three weeks lived upon nothing but potato tops boiled as greens, with a little salt. Her husband had left her to go to Quebec for help, and was taken sick so that he could not return as he intended to do. There was great destitution in many parts of the Province.

I have not spoken of the many ways in which our dear father supplied us with the hundred and one little articles of convenience so absolutely needful in all well regulated homes. He was exceedingly ingenious and could construct almost any article which it would have been impossible for us to procure at such a distance from any mechanic. All the sap-buckets were made by him, which were not a few. He made a very nice cupboard and "sett of dressers" so called where my mother kept our common table crockery and both he and my dear mother were bred to habits of untiring industry. Of course we did our knitting and serving for the family. I remember at one time my dear mother accomplished what we girls thought a wonderful piece of work. She ripped and turned a straight bodied coat of my father's and made it look "a maist as weel as new." We were all very proud of the loving mother God had so kindly given us, and to this day my heart goes out in grateful thanksgiving for so rich a blessing. I only grieve when I think that I would ever do aught to grieve so devoted and worthy a mother. I often recall the kindly admonition she gave me as I was taking leave of her at the time I went to spend a year with my dear sister, Mrs. Trotter,—as she gave me the farewell kiss, she said, "Mary, remember that you are mortal!" Oh, how often did those words ring in my ears, for months and even years after until I hopefully submitted myself to my Saviour, body and soul, to be His for time and eternity.

Truly, "Words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

As I said, my parents removed to Stanstead subsequently and resided on the plain for a number of years, where they spent the remainder of their days and where their remains now repose. My father died some years prior to the death of my mother, who, after my father's death resided with my brother John A. Brooks, and died in the year 1831, of inflammation of the stomach,—only an hours sickness—at the age of sixty-six years. She was in the full possession of her reason and her last words were, "Lord Jesus receive my spirit," and passed to the bosom of her God whom she had faithfully served from her earliest youth.

Early in the spring of 1818, Sister Lucinda and self left our home with our Sister Trotter at Bradford, Vt., and entered a young ladies' boarding school at Concord, kept by Miss Mary White, remaining six months, boarding with Mr. and Mrs. John West. Again we were at school in '20, at Byefield, Mass., under the tuition of Rev. Joseph Emerson, my sister six months and myself nine. The last three months I boarded in the family of my teacher and roomed with Miss Grant, who subsequently became the wife of Mr. Bannister of Newburyport.

During the summer of 1818 my brother-in-law came and took me to Boston and Worcester, that was my first visit to Worcester, my father's native town. We were absent only a week, spent the 4th of July at Boston, or rather Nahant. As the day promised all we could wish, our gentleman friend, where we were guests, Mr. Rogerson with his lovely wife and little son accompanied us to this, then and since, a very common resort for pleasuring. I was delighted with the ride over the smooth beach and more with the sail we took in a large sail boat manned by an accomplished captain whose name I forget, but not the compliments received from him when I drew in a fine Rock cod, drawing the cord until my hands were verily blistered I think, and then he, from sheer compassion, relieved me of the labor, the fish weighing some eight pounds. I was proud of taking two Rock cod and one Hake. After taking our repast at the hotel Mr. R. was desirous of trying his skill at guiding a small canoe. Captain Trotter objected, but I, novice like and always fond of the water said I would go with him which his wife was not inclined to do as she was very timid. He took his little son and myself and we sailed while the Captain and Mrs. Rogerson sat on the shore and watched us. At length the Captain saw we were approaching a dangerous turn in the harbor and was confident that his friend did not anticipate the danger; he called out to him to retrace his position or he would go down with his precious freight, and I think my friend was convinced that to proceed would be hazardous, so he heeded, and with no little difficulty turned and reached the shore safely, with a bold reproof from my brother and Mrs. R. for the rashness of her husband. They were both tremblingly alive to our danger.

In my visit to my dear father's birthplace I met for the first and the last time my very aged grandma. She was in her second childhood, very small in stature and very quick in her motions, and must have been beautiful in early days. She did not realize who I was. She was fond of talking but her sentences had little or no connection. My grandfather had died some years prior to this visit. She still had her home in the family of my brother, who retained the old homestead where she had resided all her married life. She would date back no farther than the time her husband died.

[The End.]

Miss Althea Bigelow, W. H. S., '90, and more recently from Becker's Business College, has accepted a position as stenographer in the Boston Store.

We have the Finest Line of

SINGLE and DOUBLE

CARRIAGES!

to be found in the city. Our Prices are Low considering the quality of our Stock. If you want a Stylish and Durable Carriage it will pay you to give us a call.

J. W. SARGENT & SON,

34, 36 and 38 Waldo St.

Simple!
Durable!
Odorless!
Clean!

It saves Time,
Labor and Fuel,
(two-thirds cent
per hr. for fuel.)

Manufacturers
Guarantee every Iron.

TRY ONE.

With this Iron, no fire is needed in the stove. Don't suffer from heat. It can be used anywhere. Agents wanted. Also on sale at retail by SQUIER & BEALS, Mfg. Ag'ts, 311 Main St., Room 13, Worcester.

HARD WOOD MANTELS,
Birch, Cherry, Oak, Etc.

* SMITH & ADAMS, *

NO. 156 MAIN STREET,
H. W. Miller's Old Stand.

The Week.

CITY.

- 8—Stephen Salisbury heads the list towards utilizing the Bigelow gift, by a subscription of $10,000. Just like him.
Norcross Brothers secure the $1,000,000 contract for the Equitable Building in Baltimore.
- 9—A big blaze in Mawhinney's last factory, Church Street. Our efficient fire department soon extinguishes.
City Government considers the watering of the streets.
Mrs. Mary Wiley, of 112 Lamartine Street, dies of burns received yesterday.
- 10—Clergymen preach, but rum is sold and the city is noisy. Do churches reach the masses?
James L. Pooley dies. He was the man supposed to have caught the glanders from an infected horse.
- 11—Aldermen finish up the license business. Now the twenty three closed places may buzz.
Postmaster Green and Architect Fuller go to Washington to look after new postoffice.
James Kneeland, veteran of Post 10, G. A. R., dies.
A. A. Goodell Camp, Sons of Veterans celebrates 8th anniversary.
- 12—Central Church celebrates the payment of debt.
City Solicitor decides that Dummy railroad cannot extend.
City hospital not large enough.
Worcester Typothetae give first annual dinner at the Lincoln House.
Orrin W. Cutter dies at 43 Oread Street, 48 years.
Mr. J. P. McCafferty elected President of the Washington Social Club.
- 13—Indications that the City's water supply is inadequate.
Mr. Bigelow may get his railroad track on Mechanic Street after all. Hope so.
Dr. Rebecca Barnard dangerously ill.
- 14—Plans for the new postoffice to be revised.
St. John's Dramatic Club plays to a full house in Father Matthew's Hall. "Our Boys."
Mr. and Mrs. Chas. G. Washburn reach home from Europe.
Church of the Sacred Heart holding a very successful fair.

COUNTY.

- 6—Mrs. Harriet Flint dies in Leicester, 92 years.
- 7—George H. Harlow of Shrewsbury dies, 71 years.
- 8—Mr. Geo. L. Gibbs buried from First Congregational church, Whitinsville.
Roswell M. Capron dies in Uxbridge. High School boy, in 18th year.
- 9—Three men seriously injured on grade R. R. crossing in North Ashburnham.
Forest fires raging extensively. The country needs rain.
- 12—Body of John Diel of Clinton missing since Friday, found in the Nashua River.
Small fire in Millbury. Sylvester Stockwell's barn.

- 13—Daniel J. Bolster tries to shoot himself at Uxbridge; a Gazette reporter.
Worcester and Middlesex Temperance Union meets at Medford. The largest meeting in its history.

COMMONWEALTH.

- 8—Legislature discusses Endowment Societies, and tax dodging.
- 9—Governor Russell witnesses the parade of school regiment in Lynn.
- 10—Dr. Geo. C. Lorimer preaches his first sermon in Tremont Temple. Has been away twelve years.
- 11—The Legislature deals a blow at some of the rainbow Endowment Orders.
Hon. Robert C. Winthrop 82 years old today.
- 12—Legislative House passed to be engrossed the bill raising compulsory school age to fifteen years, also permits the boys to continue to make noise on the ever glorious Fourth.
Rev. Horatio Wood of Lowell dies, 83 years.
- 13—Grade Crossing bill defeated in the Legislature.
Force in Boston Custom House to be reduced.
- 14—Boston has memorial exercises for the late Admiral Porter.
Legislature troubled over new congressional districts.

NATION.

- 8—President Harrison in Idaho.
Two Banking Institutions fail in Philadelphia.
Governor Bulkeley of Connecticut declares himself governor by law.
Phillips Exeter students disorderly and paint Principal Fisk's fence red.
Prof. Julius Hilgard, late superintendent of United States Coast Survey, dies in Washington, 66 years.
- 9—President Harrison received with great enthusiasm in Salt Lake.
During the past week 18,000 immigrants arrive in New York. How many New Orleans affairs are in the number?
- 10—Insurance Commissioner Linehan rules Endowment Orders out in New Hampshire. Great consternation.
A large part of the country suffering from forest fires.
American cruisers to look after the Chilean Itata.
Leggett's wholesale grocery in New York burned. Loss nearly $500,000.
- 11—Hartford Old Time Abolitionists are greeting Jason Brown, a son of "Old John Brown" of Harper's Ferry.
It looks as though the Charleston, from San Francisco might over haul the Itata, in which case it will be "Ta Ta" to the Chilean cruiser.
Exeter boys still in ferment over school trouble. Lots of trouble about class flags.
- 12—Ex-President Cleveland holds a reception in Buffalo, his old home.
Ruinous fires in forests of Michigan and Pennsylvania.
President Harrison received with great enthusiasm in Denver.
- 13—Secretary Blaine continues ill at his daughter's home in New York.

West Virginia banditti have a shooting affray of their own. Halls and Steels at Hager, McDowell Co., kill each other. It is regretted that some escape.

- 14—President Harrison in Indiana. At home and happy.

Pensions are slowing up owing to the condition of the Treasury.

WORLD.

- 8—The Rothschilds refuse to loan money to Russia on account of persecutions of Jews.
La Grippe rages in London.
Italy to submit the conduct of the United States on the New Orleans affair to European powers. Like a school boy. She is young to tell all the "fellers" she knows. Well, what of it?
Madam Blavatsky dies in London.
- 9—Russia still fighting the Nihilists.
Relations between Spain and the United States to be more friendly.
Havana tobacco to be let in lower, i. e., if the McKinley bill can be modified.
- 10—Fifty-five Dominion Colonists go down in Steamer Lucy Lowe, in Straits of Juan de Fuca.
- 11—M. R. Cunningham, a Radical member of Parliament is expelled from France.
The Pope asks for damages on account of recent explosion of gunpowder in Rome, injuring the Vatican.
- 12—Attempt to assassinate the Czarowitz; what a nice country Russia must be to live in!
Capt. Verney expelled from the House of Commons.
- 13—Chinese at Woo Hoo killing Europeans. British gunboat to protect.
Parnell speaks in London and excites a row.
Prince of Wales as La Grippe.
- 14—Duncan, an American, is supposed to have killed his wife in Wales.
More deserters from Parnell.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

A benefit performance in New York in aid of the mother of the late John A. Mackay realized $1,000.

And now Richard Mansfield is trying to get the credit of the authorship of Beau Brummel away from Clyde Fitch, claiming that the latter acted only as his "amanuensis." The fact that Mansfield has been paying snug royalties on the piece all this time seems to be a pretty thorough refutation of this claim. There are a good many star actors who have assumed the authorship of plays after they were successful. It is an odd thing that these gentlemen are never heard of in connection with the building of plays that do not make hits.

Buffalo Bill has carried his Wild West show to Germany and is giving out to the credulous Teutons that the Indians he exhibits were all captured by his own hand in battle. Dear, dear!

All of Emma Abbott's opera dresses have been purchased by Corinne. It will be pretty hard work making them fit.

Another new theatre is building in New York for Henry E. Abbey.

ABOUT FOLKS.

Mr. George Holmes.

After forty years service in the dry goods stores of Worcester, Mr. Holmes is to move next week to Springfield. In that city, he will be with his son-in-law, Mr. F. J. Jenson, in the management of an ice cream and confectionery establishment to be opened June 1st, near Forest Park, the new and popular resort in that progressive place.

This uprooting after so many years in Worcester is no trifling matter. He has spent a lifetime in the Heart of the Commonwealth. He came here, when the place was a village and, by experience, he knows much of the trade in all this time. He was first employed at the Bee Hive, Geo. P. Bryant's store at the corner of Walnut Street, in the block just torn down. Next he was with Clarke & Pinkham where J. J. Beaumont is at 308 Main Street. Then he went with Mr. J. S. Pinkham, who was the father of Charles H. Pinkham of Pinkham & Willis, to the corner of Mechanic Street, where E. L. Smith is at present. Afterwards, he was with Horace Sheldon in the Mechanics Hall store, seven years. Next he was in the Boston Store for more than ten years when he went to his last position, in the New York store.

Of his employers, Messrs. Bryant, Pinkham, Sheldon, McKay and Denholm have all passed over. Had Mr. H. taken notes during these years what a history he could write! His new home will seem strange to him, but the presence of children and grand-children will soon reconcile him and his good wife to the change in location. Both of them have our good wishes in going from us.

The Brown University Glee Club gave a concert in Association Hall Thursday evening which musically was one of the best of the season. The audience only about half filled the hall but it was very enthusiastic.

The first violin recital of the pupils of Miss Florence M. Sears took place Thursday evening at the rooms of the Art Students Club, Walker building. There were fourteen numbers on the program, including solos duets, and a trio and a sextet at the beginning and at the close. The pieces were well adapted to the progress of the pupils and were all well rendered. They reflect much credit to their teacher. Miss Sears gave two solos on the violin being accompanied by her mother on the piano. They were quite difficult of execution, but were so well done that the company would have liked more. The rooms were filled with the friends of the pupils and all were well pleased with the entertainment.

Mr. C. H. Stearns and wife return today from their trip to California, where they have been sojourning since March 5.

Hiram N. Cudworth, of Prentice Bros. Tool works, was married Tuesday of last week at Hartford, Conn., to Miss Kate Maria Babbitt of that city. They will be "At Home" Mondays after June 1st at Hotel Kenmore.

Myra Goodwin, last year undertook a starring tour through the South that proved disastrous, and the company finally stranded in New Orleans. One of the girls in her support being left penniless, applied to Miss Goodwin for assistance, but was met with a flat refusal and the advice, "Get out and hustle." The young lady in question found soon after, that in the hurry of departure she had packed up with her own belongings a silver mounted banjo, the property of Miss Goodwin, and in a few days received a pathetic letter from the actress asking for the return of the instrument as with it the owner might pick up a living in the variety halls. To which the following reply was sent: "Dear Myra—Very sorry. Banjo pawned. Get out and hustle."

PENSIONS! * PENSIONS!

THE DISABILITY BILL IS A LAW.
Soldiers Disabled Since the War are Entitled.
 Dependent widows and parents now dependent whose sons died from the effects of army service are included. If you wish your claim speedily and successfully prosecuted,
JAMES TANNER,
 address
 Late Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D. C.

GO TO THE

Tech Field Sports

AT AGRICULTURAL PARK,
SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1891,
 AT 2 P. M.

Admission, 25 Cents. Ladies Free.

NEW YORK

Dry Goods Store,

234 and 238 Main St.

We are Offering

Some Excellent Values in Summer Wash

Dress * Goods.

Z. F. Little & Co.,

TO TAX PAYERS.

ASSESSORS' OFFICE, 17 City Hall.

Worcester, Mass., May 6, 1891.

To the inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay taxes in the city of Worcester:

The Assessors of the City of Worcester hereby give notice that their office will be open from the 6TH TO THE 16TH DAY OF MAY, inclusive, from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m., and from 2 to 5 p. m., and all persons liable to be taxed in said City, either in their own right, or as Guardian, Administrator, Executor, Trustee, or otherwise are required to bring in to the Assessors, within the time above specified, the lists of all their polls and personal estates not exempt from taxation.

Any person or firm taxable in Worcester for personal property, or who desire to make a return of mortgaged real estate, or Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, who are required to make returns, in accordance with Chap. 217 of the Acts of 1882 can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying to this office; but failing to avail themselves of the privilege of making their own returns according to law, within the specified time, must expect to be held strictly to the conditions of law relative to abatements.

HARRISON G. OTIS,
 THOMAS TALBOT,
 AMOS M. PARKER,
 Assessors City of Worcester.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

WORCESTER, SS.

PROBATE COURT.

To the Next of Kin, Creditors, and all other Persons interested in the Estate of RUTH S. RUGG, late of Sterling, in said county, deceased, intestate: Greeting.

Upon the Petition of George W. Rugg of said Sterling, you are cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Worcester, in said County, on the third Tuesday of May next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased should not be granted to said petitioner, without the giving of surety or sureties on his official bond pursuant to the statute.

And the said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, three weeks successively, in LIGHT, a newspaper printed at Worcester the last publication to be two days, at least, before said court, and to send, or cause to be sent, a written or printed copy of this notice, properly mailed postage prepaid, to each of the heirs, devisees, or legatees of said estate, or their legal representatives, known to the petitioner, seven days, at least, before said Court.

Witness, William T. Forbes, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-eighth day of April in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

F. W. SOUTHWICK, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

WORCESTER, SS.

PROBATE COURT.

To the Next of Kin, Creditors, and all other Persons interested in the estate of JOHN RILEY, late of Worcester, in said County, deceased, intestate: Greeting.

Upon the Petition of Mary Riley of said Worcester you are cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Worcester, in said County, on the third Tuesday of May next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased should not be granted to said petitioner, without the giving of surety or sureties on her official bond pursuant to the statute.

And the said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, three weeks successively, in LIGHT, a newspaper printed at Worcester, the last publication to be two days, at least, before said Court, and to send, or cause to be sent, a written or printed copy of this notice, properly mailed, postage prepaid, to each of the heirs, devisees, or legatees of said estate, or their legal representatives, known to the petitioner, seven days, at least, before said Court.

Witness, William T. Forbes, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirtieth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

F. W. SOUTHWICK, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

WORCESTER, SS.

PROBATE COURT.

To all persons interested in the estate of SARAH M. COLBURN, late of Sterling, in said County, deceased, testate:

You are cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Worcester, in said County, on the first Tuesday of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause why the first and final account rendered by Angie A. Kilburn, the Executrix of her administration of said estate, and now on file at this office, should not be allowed.

And the said accountant is ordered to serve this citation, by publishing the same once a week, three weeks successively, in LIGHT, a newspaper printed at Worcester, the last publication to be two days, at least before said Court, and to send, or cause to be sent, a written or printed copy of this notice, properly mailed, postage prepaid, to each of the heirs, devisees, or legatees of said estate, or to their legal representatives known to the petitioner seven days, at least, before said Court.

Witness, William T. Forbes, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twelfth day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.

F. W. SOUTHWICK, Register.

Good things tell us that nowhere in the city is there a better gathering or larger assortment of good patterns of Gingham than here. Not a scrimp place in the whole stock. The right stuffs are here for you and just now they are dotted with sensational prices.

42, 37 1/2, 33 and 25c Scotch Ginghams, in plaids and Stripes, full width and O. K., for 21c a yard. A lot of pretty styles in 10c Ginghams, all this season's goods, for 8c a yard.

All the genuine French Satines that we have on our counters will be sold at 8c a yard. These satines must be bought in the lengths in which they come, viz.: 4 to 15 yards.

Moths can be effectually barred out by using White Tar Camphor Globules, 42 balls in a package, and the package costs but 5c.

EDW. L. SMITH & CO.,
401 and 403 Main Street,
Walker Building, Cor. Mechanic.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

It must be done.

The long winter has left its mark upon Irish Point Brussels, or Nottingham, and they must be replaced with new.

We know ever so many who are looking and waiting for the very Curtains that we want to tell you about now.

It's not strange that you prefer Irish Point to all others.

There is a richness to the large design that catches the popular fancy and wins for them even your favor.

There came to us this week: 50 Pairs Irish Point Curtains; on the delicate mesh are figured designs to match, and these little beauties can be had for the very very low price—

Three dollars and fifty cents a pair.

Make no mistake about these; we call them Irish Point Curtains, and they are exactly as we call them. $3.50 a pair is the price.

50 pairs Irish Point in heavier mesh and patterns for $4.39, and for $4.75 a little better still.

$5.63 gets you into the inner circles of Irish Point goodness, and for $7.00 we'll give you what can't be matched anywhere for less than $10.

This lot of Curtains we secured from parties who had ever so many more than they could handle.

They are excellent and what our friends want.

They are right here while they last, $3.50, $4.79, $5.63, $7.00.

The best Irish Point Curtains ever offered by us at such prices.

BARNARD, SUMNER & Co.

LEICESTER.

Whist has become the national game. One of the most unique and charming parties of the season was given May 8, by the Gentlemen's Whist Club, at Leicester Hotel. Society buds and blossoms were becomingly attired in full dress. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Watson, Mr. and Mrs. J. Bradford Sargent, Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Sargent, Mr. and Mrs. David A. Reeves, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bisco, Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Marsh, Mr. and Mrs. Henry O. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Warren Smith, Rev. and Mrs. George Buckley, Mr. F. Willard Trask, Mr. Arthur F. Estabrook, Mr. Albert E. Booth, Mr. David Wise, Mr. J. Sidney Whittemore, Mr. Myron W. Sprague, Miss Elizabeth G. May, Mrs. Fanny E. Trask, Miss N. Olive Knight, Miss Mary E. Joslyn, Miss Ruth E. Hatch, Miss Kate W. Cowles. Each lady received a handsome oxydised silver souvenir spoon. First prize was won by Mr. Sprague, a gold wish-bone scarf pin. Mr. Trask took the booby prize, "A study in leather," the subject being the "missing link." The company sat down to a sumptuous repast in the dining hall and the gathering did not retire from the pleasures of the evening until midnight.

Mr. H. Arthur White has set out handsome trees south of the "Central Factory" and west of the First Congregational Church. They add greatly to the village improvement. Mr. White deserves credit for doing that which so many people neglect, often through carelessness and more especially through selfishness.

Mr. A. B. Davidson has left standing a small grove of pine trees, situated on the west side of Pleasant Street, nearly opposite of his residence, that is delightfully suggestive of a cool retreat for picnic parties. There is a cool spring of water near the grove which certainly adds to the resort.

"In the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love." The chime of wedding bells will fall gently upon our ears and we shall soon long,

"For a seat in some poetic nook,
Just hid with trees and sparkling with a brook!"

Coleridge listens and remarks:

"A noise like of a hidden brook
In the leafy month of June,
That to the sleeping woods all night
Singeth a quiet tune."

BETTINA.

May 15, 1891.

Shrewsbury.

The death of George Henry Harlow removes from this town one of its oldest and most honored citizens. For years, no figure was more prominent than his in the conduct of town affairs. A native of Shrewsbury, his seventy-one years have been spent, for the most part, in his native town. He was educated in the public schools of S. at the Worcester Co. Manual Training School and at the Normal School, then located at Barre. In 1873 he represented his town in the General Court and for twenty-four years he was president of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Club of S. His wife who died several years ago was Jane Flint of the same town. George H. Harlow of Worcester is his son and Wm. T. Harlow, assistant clerk of the Courts is his cousin.

Lakeside.

The Lakeside Boat Club held its first meeting this year in the club house at the Lake on Tuesday evening.

The house has been thoroughly renovated for the coming year, new portieres, pictures and furniture being added to it until now it is one of the handsomest houses of its kind.

The following committee was chosen to make arrangements for the opening, May 28. Chairman, H. B. Fairbanks, W. E. Fairbanks, H. F. Blood, L. W. White, H. A. Adams, and A. F. Hyde. There will be the usual reception, dance and supper.

The designs for a club pin submitted by T. D. Gard, F. B. Fay and W. E. Fairbanks shown and that of W. E. Fairbanks was adopted.

It consists of a pair of miniature gold spoon oars, crossed and held in place by a small diamond-shaped plate of blue enamel, upon which are the golden figures "87." Hanging from the oars is the club pennant in red and blue enamel, with "L. B. C." in the centre of an enclosed square.

After the meeting, which was the largest ever held, lunch was served by the club.

Davis Art Co., 18 Pearl Street, opposite the Post Office, have opened this week some startling novelties in mouldings, cream and gold, pink and silver, rosewood and gold, bird's eye maple. The great sale of etchings during the rate cutting, brought the stock to low water mark. The incoming tide brings fresh subjects and greater varieties. A few of the very late publications in etchings have been sent to them. They will take pleasure in combining them with their mouldings.

Bigelow & Longley

COR. MAIN and ELM STS

We want an earnest word with the men of Worcester today.

We want to tell you something that we believe will be of the greatest advantage to you.

We want to tell you something that will give you positive pleasure but will be a positive saving to you in the long run.

We want to do this for the purpose of winning your confidence by showing you in what way we determine to deserve it.

We are not satisfied with the ordinary methods in general use in the clothing trade.

Neither are you.

CORRECT CLOTHES all men want, and think, they get, no matter whether the price be great or small

CORRECT CLOTHES means that the cloth, trimmings and sewing are of the best for the money.

CORRECT CLOTHES mean that they are made upon true and well defined lines that give you a certainty of perfect fit.

CORRECT CLOTHES will give you honest service honest value for your money, and will give us honest pride in selling them to you.

CORRECT CLOTHES cost a little more money than the shams so often forced upon you, but it won't take long for you to see that the shams are the dearest all the time.

CORRECT CLOTHES are the beginning and the end of our business faith; nothing else can be found in our store.

We invite you to see them and test all we say. If you do not find our CLOTHES exactly what we say, return them and get your money.

CORRECT CLOTHES at FAIR PRICES will win your favor in the long run.

CORRECT CLOTHES are always ready for you here, at the least possible price for quality.

Bigelow & Longley

ALWAYS ON HAND!

The freshest and best vegetables to be found anywhere, with all kinds of fowls and game in their seasons.

GEORGE C. BLANCHARD,

DEALER IN

Beef, Pork, Veal, Lamb

Poultry, Sausages, Lard, Butter, Vegetables, Etc., Etc.,

No. 218 Main Street, Worcester, Mass

EDWARD B. CLAPP,

Fashionable Hat,

Fine Furnishing,

Athletic House,

365 Main St., Worcester.

C. REBOLI,

Confectioner * and * Caterer,

6 and 8 Pleasant Street, Worcester.

W. A. ENGLAND,

DEALER IN

FINE WATCHES,

CLOCKS, JEWELRY

& OPTICAL GOODS.

REPAIRING PROMPTLY DONE.

394 Main Street.

Worcester Dress Cutting School,
45 Pleasant St.,

For Designing, Cutting and Finishing Ladies' Gowns. Pupils are allowed to bring material and make a costume throughout. Linings Cut Free; also Dress making, Cutting and Basting. Open evenings. Agents taught free. Call for cards and circular.

Mrs. L. F. Walch.

E. W. COFFIN,

Store Fixtures

10 Main Street, Worcester.

Name this Paper,

The Truth.

Father P.—of Worcester is a strenuous advocate of the truth at all times. The truth he admires and sometimes when the offender speaks up and attempts no evasion nor concealment he forgives and omits the penalty. Next door to his residence is the orphanage, and some years ago, in spite of protest and commands the little folks would take the grapes of the priest, getting them before they were ripe, thus endangering their health and at the same time disobeying. The teacher told them finally that if they persisted she would send them to the priest himself for correction. This availed for a time, but the temptation was too great and the little folks fell, and a deputation was sent over. In they came, one at a time. "What's the matter, what are you here for?" says Father—Then they began to tell all sorts of stories, but it was a case of Adam and Eve over again. No one was an original sinner. Each one had followed some other or had eaten the fruit, when it was offered him, but they all got their punishment till the last small, keen looking little fellow entered. "And what did you come for," says the clergyman. Without an extenuating word, but with his right hand out, his face averted from the expected blow and screwed out of shape on account of the pain he knew would come, he just said, "A licking." "I tell you that boy was honest, the only one of the whole lot and I sent him away without a blow. He's a good, straight-forward man now. The truth, the truth I must have."

Worcester Typothæ.

Though young in years, this organization celebrated most successfully, last Tuesday evening, at the Lincoln House. Landlord Tower provided an excellent repast and all appeared happy. As guests there were H. T. Rockwell, F. H. Mudge, C. H. Cushing, Horatio Carter, all of Boston; Capt. C. C. Gray, Thos. S. Hammond of Providence and Chas. A. Lee of Pawtucket; H. G. Bishop of New York; Worcester men present were Lucius P. Goddard, F. S. Blanchard, Charles R. Stobbs, James L. Estey, Joshua O'Leary, James J. Doyle, R. M. Le Poer, Caleb A. Wall, Alfred S. Roe, Herbert Wesby, Benjamin J. Dodge, Charles Hamilton, G. G. Davis, C. W. Burbank, W. F. Burbank, C. G. Marcy, A. B. Adams, J. Mountain, W. E. W. Felt, W. H. Maynard, B. F. Robinson, O. F. Allen, J. H. Williams, A. I. Felton, Edward T. Carrico, I. M. Burdett, Charles D. Lloyd, James C. Manning, John F. Kyes with Albert Tyler of Oxford.

After dinner and music by Kibbe's Orchestra, speaking followed by Messrs. Rockwell, Mudge, Cushing, Bishop, Roe, Gray, Lee, O'Leary, Dodge and La Poer. Lucius P. Goddard filled the office of toast master most excellently. Too much credit cannot be given to him, F. S. Blanchard, the president, and the other members of the committee who made the affair so thoroughly a success.

Dr. Rolf Pihlgren of the Burnside Building has some most remarkable coins and medals, illustrating ancient and modern history. Also, he possesses some rare volumes, picked up in various European cities which elaborately describe the subject of Numismatics. There is nothing like them in this city.

ORDER NOW

and thereby be sure of getting your Monumental work in place before Memorial Day. No better and fairer place to be found than at

EVANS & COMPANY,

Manufacturers of

Fine Monumental Work,

131 Central Street,

near Summer.

THE CRITERION

Bakery and Restaurant.

Nothing but first-class material used. Table board at reasonable prices.

231 MAIN ST. AND 36 SHREWSBURY ST.

J. & T. CALDER, Proprietors.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR CAN BE

permanently eradicated by the

ELECTRIC NEEDLE

Process. No scarring or other injury. There is now no excuse for any lady to allow a growth of hair to remain upon her face to mar her personal beauty and to make her friends unhappy. Moles are also permanently removed. Hours: 9 to 11 a. m., 2 to 4 p. m.

Miss H. M. PROCTOR,

92 SUMMER STREET, WORCESTER, MASS.

WHENEVER GOOD

Eatables

are desired they will always be found at

John A. Hartigan's

47 and 51 Pleasant Street.

The Ware-Pratt Company

Invite attention to an extensive display of

Fine Clothing for Men, Boys and Children.

The Latest Fashions, Exclusive Styles from our own workshops, Honest Goods and the Lowest Prices, Grade and Quality considered.

Our Custom Department is teeming with the Newest styles, Colorings and Materials, which go to make up the finest lines we have ever shown.

The Ware-Pratt Company,

MANUFACTURERS AND RETAILERS,

408 and 412 Main Street,

Worcester.

NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER.--A Great Fraternity.

Do you believe in a system of co-operation in which the whole profit is divided among the members? Then join the Non-Secret Endowment Order. It pays a sick benefit of $20 a week; a death benefit of $400; an endowment benefit of $500; at COST.

Incorporated under the laws of Massachusetts. State of the order March 18, 1891: Membership, 4915- Amount loaned for Relief, $15,290; Reserve Fund, $22,912.40; Balance of Relief Fund, $6,759.08; Total, $44,975.48. Men and women admitted upon the same terms. Four local assemblies in the city with a membership of over 600. Are you protected in case of sickness? Are you making provisions for the future by laying aside small sums of money from time to time?

Organizers wanted. Address NON-SECRET ENDOWMENT ORDER, 339 Main St., Worcester Mass. Rooms 10 and 11

LATHROP * BROTHERS,

LADIES', MEN'S AND CHILDREN'S

FINE AND MEDIUM SHOES

Of the most approved process of manufacture, meeting every requirement of Quality, Comfort and Style.

564 MAIN STREET, Franklin Square.

Emporium * of * Fashion.

LADIES' STRAW BONNETS.

An unusually Large Assortment of

BONNETS!

In MILAN, HAIR and FANCY BRAID,

Ranging in Price from 25c. to $2.00.

A. S. Lowell Co., 304-306 Main St.

Worcester Coal Company,

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in

COAL. COAL.

General office, 18 Pearl St., Y. M. C. A. Building; Yards, 23 Manchester St. and 319 Southbridge St.

Now is the Time to Buy a

CARRIAGE!

at a Small Profit.

Geo. C. Dewhurst, 17 Park St.,

OPP. THE COMMON.

Larkin's, 395 Main St.,
Worcester.

Trunks, Bags, Shawl-straps, Bag-straps, Extension Cases, Etc. Agents Troy Laundry.

ROYAL STEAM HEATER.

Manufactured from the Finest Steel Plate and possessing all the latest Modern Conveniences.

This Heater is unsurpassed for excellence of workmanship and is the best in the market. Now is the time to secure estimates. The following is one of a great number of testimonials from our leading citizens:

WORCESTER, MASS., APRIL 1, 1890.

THE ROYAL STEAM HEATER CO.,

Gentlemen:—Having purchased two of your Heaters, one now in use three years, the other 2 years, I can safely say we could hardly keep house without one. I would rather take care of our Heater with 13 radiators attached than one parlor stove where I had to bring coal and carry away the ashes. Anyone intending to heat by steam should examine the Royal and note the working of the Grate, which I think is far ahead of any I have ever seen. I will gladly give information to intending purchasers. Respectfully yours F. E. BARNARD. Barnard Bros., Trunk Manufacturers, 494 Main St.

Branch Office, 39 Pearl Street, Worcester.

LIGHT

THE HEART OF THE COMMONWEALTH

NEWS
SOCIETY
BUSINESS
PERSONALS
MUSIC
DRAMA
LITERATURE
ART
ENGLAND

VOL. III. No. 12. WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1891. FIVE CENTS.

MR. A. SWAN BROWN,
President of the Denholm & McKay Company, (Boston Store.)

PUTNAM & SPRAGUE CO.

FURNITURE and UPHOLSTERY GOODS.

Sole agent for the LEONARD CLEANABLE REFRIGERATORS! See them and we will show you why they are the best. We offer 75 BABY CARRIAGES at unheard of prices. Our $5 carriage is pretty. We have better ones for $7 50, $9 and $12. A beauty for $15. All our carriages have a good brake attached. Remember that we are sole agents for the WAKEFIELD RATIAN COMPANY'S CARRIAGES, THE BEST IN THE WORLD.

247 and 249 Main Street, Corner Central.

MEMORIAL DAY.

It will soon be here. Are you prepared for it? Have you anything that you require being done for that day, in the nature of

MONUMENTS or TABLETS

We most respectfully solicit an inspection of our large assortment of Monuments and Tablets, in Marble, Granite and Statuary. More than

$25,000 worth

of Original Designs, manufactured from the very best material, and by competent and skilled workmen. It would be to your interests to call early and make your selections, so as to have your work executed and set up in time for Memorial Day. Our prices will be found very reasonable, and our designs original.

BOSTON MARBLE and GRANITE WORKS.

53 Central St., Worcester.

C. H. DRAPER,
Livery, Feed and Truck Stable.

Three Large Moving Wagons. Baggage Wagon always ready. Furniture and Piano Moving. Telephone 308-5.

161 Main Street, Worcester, Mass.

COMPOUND OXYGEN

Nature's best tonic in all debilitated conditions of the system.

Our OXYGEN is carefully prepared in accordance with the most scientific principles known to chemistry.

It is prepared by a practical chemist who has had four years' experience in a chemical laboratory.

Each patient will receive the personal and conscientious attention of a regular graduated physician, one who has been six years in medical practice.

We solicit investigation.

368 1-2 Main St., or 1 Elm St.

WORCESTER OXYGEN CO.

DR. J. W. GOULD. T. D. BRISTOL, M. D.

Quinsigamond Lake ICE

Delivered in any quantity throughout the city. Especial attention given to the family trade.

Garfield & Harrington,

92, 94 and 96 School St. Telephone 143-4.

N. G. TUCKER.

W. F. TUCKER.

N. G. TUCKER & SON, SANITARY PLUMBING AND VENTILATION.

Dealers in Plumbing Materials.

56 Pleasant Street, Worcester, Mass.

Artificial Stone Vases,
FOR THE LAWN,
FOR THE GARDEN,
FOR THE VERANDA,
For Parks and Large Estates.

We have manufactured during the past year, and now place upon the market for the first time, a line of Artificial Stone Vases, which for elegance of design, durability in construction and adaptability to successful plant growth, are unexcelled by any Vases ever introduced into this city. We have a large variety of designs and sizes, and ranging from $3 to $25. Illustrated circulars and price lists now ready for distribution.

Address, JAMES DRAPER, Bloomingdale Cement Pipe Works, Worcester, Mass.

For Sale by ROSS BROS., 162 Front St.

LIGHT

VOL. III.

WORCESTER, MASS., SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1891.

No. 12

Oh, what a face was hers to brighten light,
And give back sunshine with an added glow,
To wile each moment with a fresh delight,
And part of memory's best contentment grow!
Oh, how her voice, as with an inmate's rill,
Into the strangest heart would welcome go,
And make it sweet and ready to become
Of white and gracious thoughts the chosen home.
—J. R. Lowell.

Thanks, Mr. Lowell, for that sentiment.
No better could be found any where. Your first and last verses end in words, particularly dear to us.

Are we living in the Nineteenth Century?

When we hear of religious persecutions in Russia, it seems as though Time had turned backward.

When men must forswear their faith by wholesale or abandon their homes, we do not wonder that Czars are assassinated and that Nihilists flourish.

The only wonder is that God does not take the matter into his own hands and annihilate laws and such law makers. Jews made members of the Greek Church by imperial decree!
What sincere converts they must be!

How like the course of the meek and lowly Jesus, whom all christians are supposed to emulate! 'Tis of such religion that Shelley wrote:
"Religion! but for thee, prolific fiend,
That peoplest earth with demons, hell with men."

It matters not how much Russia befriended us in our hour of need, her course, towards her unoffending Jewish population today transcends belief. She is back again in the days of Ivan the Terrible and of Catharine the Profligate.

Only God can create. But to get something from nothing is the chief end and aim of many, far too many. Not one whit more chimerical or illusory is the Louisiana lottery, now justly under the ban of the law, than are the multitudinous clap-trap organizations, that from Maine to the South are offering fabulous returns for small investments.

The anxiety of the agent to get you in is equealed only by his efforts to get you out, after a few payments, for on no other possible basis can the sums named be paid, than that the few survivors, able to stick it through shall have the residue. Many a member has had to drop out at once after entering, unable to pay the first assessment.

The worst of it all is that those thus plucked are the ones least able to stand the strain.
They are crippling themselves in a vain chase after the kettle of gold whence the rainbow springs. Their ideas of life, melancholy enough before, are now doubly so and they rant at capital and form antagonistic unions.
When will they learn?

Mrs. Howe of Boston, who promised wonderful percentage at her famous bank and for whose shortcomings and robbery she spent some years in prison, was no worse than the parties who under the specious cloak of a glittering name gull, beguile and rob a confiding public. Why shouldn't our preachers turn teachers for a while and instruct their flocks on this subject.

The New York Christian Union of last week has a very full and comprehensive description of the four preferred designs for the proposed cathedral to stand, in the "sweet by and by"
in Morning Side Park, upper New York.
Prof. A. D. F. Hamlin, once a High School teacher in Worcester, now connected with Columbia College, is the critic and he does his work well. With the accompanying plates the good and bad in the designs are made very plain.

After all does America need cathedrals after the old world notion? Is there willingness here to lock up millions in piles of unremuner-ative masonry? It is not, by any means, the "Bob" Ingersoll spirit only, that opposes; but a certain disposition, everywhere, prominent to make more of morals than of buildings. A most heathenish populace may live in the immediate neighborhood of a church. In fact, some of the finest edifices in Europe were built at such odd spells as the respective builders were not knocking each other's heads off.

At the same time, we are well aware of the claim that nothing can be made too good for the worship of God, that the religious idea in art and architecture has given us our finest products; but we also recognize an attendant fact that, too often, where most is done in the way of edifice and equipment, that deed is made to take the place of individual effort for God and humanity. If elaborate structures can be reared and poor fallen man be looked after as before and worshippers be as energetic in saving their fellows, well and good. There may be effectual worship in insignificant edifices.

The Catholic American, speaking of the accounts of quarrels, suicides, and murders, says: "Turning half of a daily paper into a police report, and making the public its receiving bureau, is not the legitimate mission of the press;" and adds another sentence worthy of quotation: "The crime wave so complacently described for us will not abate while every cheap, selfish wretch is turned into a twelve hour hero, to be supplanted tomorrow
by another a little worse."

The foregoing is a very good presentation of an evil that is rapidly increasing. Recently, in this city, the court excluded from the room,
minors, deeming the evidence unfit, for youthful ears, yet the papers gave the details in full, and childhood as well as adulthood read ad nauseam. The same is true everywhere, but is it necessary? Must the public have what it clamors for? What part of the public is it that demands a full recital of all criminal details? Is it the best? Would not the body politic be just as well off if criminal proceedings were confined to the court records?

Ex-Alderman Joseph S. Perry makes the following offer of premiums to the farmers of the city of Worcester:

"I wish to encourage the raising of corn, an industry which I think has been greatly neglected, especially by the milk-producing famers. I offer ten premiums. The first $10, down to $1 for the tenth premium. To any man, woman or child that will grow one acre or more, and show this fall the best string of thirty ears or more, I offer as above. The entries must be made by numbers, so that the judges will not know who the exhibitors are.
A time and place will be arranged for the exhibition. I hope this offer will at least stimulate the young farmers to do their best.

It is a long time since a better announcement has been made in Worcester. The notice will reach a large number of lads who ought to be prompted to try for the reward.
Here is a legitimate industry, the making of food material. Among the Aborigines who once roamed through this section, Indian corn was the only cereal. They raised it abundantly. It will be a happy circumstance if Mr. Perry's generous offer should restore the king of grain to its old time prominence.

Sweden.

That was a pleasant and a sad meeting in the Thomas Street M. E. Church, Monday night. Pleasant to the home going people and sad to those who could not go. A visit to the old home, probably the last one they will ever make. How the hours of that summer stay in Sweden will slip by and then they will come back to America for the rest of their lives.
We shall be glad to meet them for they are most excellent citizens. Only Detlof Hells-trom and wife are to remain in Sweden.

The church was filled by the friends of the departing members. Rev. Richard Cederberg, pastor of the Swedish M. E. Church at Campello, delivered a lecture on "Music," after which Rev. H. W. Eklund, pastor of Thomas Street Church, gave reminiscences of his journey to Sweden, after sixteen years' residence in America.

Those going from the Thomas Street Church include Mr. and Mrs. D. Hellstrom, Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Nyberg, G. A. Geselius, Miss Anna
Peterson, Miss Hjelm Peterson and Miss
Hannah Lundgren. They sail by the steamer
Majestic of the White Star line.

Not in the world, as in a school,
We see how Fate may change and shift;
The rizee be sometimes with a fool,
The race not always to the swift.
The strong may yield, the good may fall,
The rich may be a vulgar clown,
The knave be lifted over all,
The poor cast pitilessly down.
—Thackeray

A JOURNAL OF SOCIAL WORCESTER AND
HER NEIGHBORS.

Published every Saturday. Price $2.00 per
annum, 5 cents a copy.

Advertising rates upon application.

ALFRED S. ROE, Editor and Proprietor.

Offices, 339 Main Street, Burnside Building,
Telephone No. 141-5.

Entered at the Post-Office, at Worcester, Mass., as
second-class mail matter.

WORCESTER, SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1891.

Every failure to receive LIGHT promptly
should be, at once, reported at this office.

All scraps of informations concerning persons and events, thankfully received.

Hereafter, it will be understood that all articles in LIGHT, not ascribed, save recipes,
squibs, fashion and household notes were
written for this paper.

Friends sending in manuscripts will not complain if they are not printed at once. There are many waiting. Yet LIGHT is always glad
to receive communications and, if meritorious,
to print them.

The Referee, Boston's new journal of sporting matters, gives indications of progress in a change of form, owing to increased advertisements. It is a very clean, high toned paper and deserves success.

The Journalist is the latest Boston venture to come to LIGHT's table. It is a weekly devoted to the interests of "Newspaper and Advertising Men." It is interesting and instructive throughout and has our best wishes.

Through inadvertence the name of Davis, photographer, corner of Park and Main Streets, was omitted from the first page of last week's LIGHT. The excellent picture of the Rev. J. J. Power was from his studio and copies of the photograph may be had there.

Worcester readers will note the advertisement of the Norcross House, Monument Beach; the best place in the world to pass the hot summer months.

A most desirable room for office purposes for rent, in Burnside Building. Inquire at LIGHT office.

LIGHT

For Memorial Day will be one of the largest and best papers ever issued in this city.

Don't fail to buy and read it. The boys will want it for it will contain an offer expressly for them. It means a big prize for some one.

School and College.

High School.

The class poem of the graduating class is the work of T. F. Cummings. Here it is.

As an exile on the ocean,
Turning from his faded home,
Sets his eyes with deep emotion,
On the land where he must roam.

So we, too, now look with sorrow
On the home we leave today;
Turning, then, new hope we borrow,
And the future storm survey.

In loving hearts we ere shall treasure
Mem'ries dear, of classmates kind,
And ever look with deepest pleasure
On the days we've left behind.

Bravely let us do our duty;
Then upon the page of fame,
Traced by virtue's lasting beauty,
Each may write an honored name.

Friday, May 15, the societies met as usual.
At the Sumner Club the question was: Resolved that postmasters should be elected rather than appointed. Decided in the negative. A paper, "Public money," was read by G. T. Woodward.

The Euclia had the question: Resolved that the trades school in the Concord Reformatory should be abolished, which was decided in the negative.

At the Aletheia the question was debated:
Resolved that there are more influences for evil than for good in the world. Decided in the affirmative. A paper "The life of Charles Dudley Warner," was given by Miss Foster, and a quartet composed of Smith, Pettit, Dickinson and Carter, sang a number of selections.

The Assembly, which, it seems, adjourned
sine die last June, and did not dissolve, held a meeting Friday night. Members, past and present, attended, and talked over plans for the club. They decided to hold meetings again and so the plan of joining that society to the Sumner Club is dropped.

Friday and Saturday of this week an exhibition of drawings is held in the High School building. The drawings come from the High School evening drawing classes, and other schools of the city. The public are invited to inspect them.

J. H. Dennis, '91, has taken the place of J.
C. A. Gray in the Senior crew. Gray has given satisfaction in every way, but owing to an injury which he received some years ago, he is unable to stand so much training as the position requires.

Thursday of this week the long looked for presentation took place. The entertainment was under charge of a committee with W. B.
Tower, at its head, and the program offered was fully up to those of former years. The first number was a piano solo, Impromptu, by Miss Fanny Hair, the school pianist, and was rendered in her usual fine style. This was followed by the well known selection, Speech of Sergeant Buzfuz at the trial of Pickwick vs. Bardell, from the Pickwick Papers, A. S.
Warren gave the declamation in a very natural manner, and was well appreciated, causing not a little merriment. Next followed a whistling duet, "Come With Me," by Misses Dickinson and Carter of the Aletheia. Number four of the order of exercises was an essay, "The Purpose of Dicken's Works," by M. T. Hubbard. The essay was written in a very finished style and showed that the writer had an extensive acquaintance with Dickens' novels. There followed next a piano duet, Ventre á terre, by Messrs. Muzzy and Belle Isle who were heartily applauded, the scholars evidently wanting more. Number six was a reading,

"The Footsteps Die Out Forever," Tale of Two Cities, by Miss M. K. Lawrence. Next came a bass solo, "Out on the Deep," by W.
B. Tower, which was finely given. The principal part of the program was the presentation of the picture by H. H. Chamberlin. In his oration he gave a sketch of the life of Charles Dickens and pointed out the purposes and results of his works. He also spoke especially of his connection with America and the good he had done by his criticisms of our customs and institutions. The oration was finely written and finely delivered. The principal in his remarks after the presentation spoke of his own regret at his inability to appreciate the works of Dickens, and gave one or two instances of the appreciation which others had of them. The picture is a crayon portrait framed in a like manner with most of the other pictures on the walls where it is to take its place. The platform was prettily decorated for the exercises with palms and flowers, and the picture upon an easel, was draped with a flag. The four classes assembled for the first time and many of the past members of the school were present, filling the hall to its limit.

Mount Holyoke.

But few outside the college understand the great addition that has been made this year by the introduction of a literary course. The classical and scientific courses have given every opportunity for study in these lines, and since the founding of the college more than fifty years ago, great advances have been made. To meet the objection always made to a literary course, that too few mathematics are required, this course provides a fair number, and as electives, any of the mathematics of the other courses can be taken. From the number who have enrolled themselves as future "B. L.'s," this course seems to be in every way the fulfillment of a long felt want.

Tuesday evening, '92 gave the college and its friends an exceedingly joyous time. The class itself is so elated over its own success that no demonstration seems to be able to satisfy them. The entertainment illustrated the forthcoming college paper. The programs were miniatures of it, even to the Scotch thistle, '92's class flower, painted on the cover.
The first curtain showed the cover of the paper. The entertainment opened by the reading of an editorial, which created much laughter. Then followed tableaux illustrating the different departments of the paper, scientific, classical, literary, under which we would mention especially a group of "Shakespeare's women." The humorous column was given in pantomime. The "locals," especially a familiar scene of the college ball nine, were well appreciated, also the advertisements. The Juniors appreciate, besides the glory, the more solid results from the sale of tickets.

The Fourteenth Annual Session of the Martha's Vineyard Summer Institute is advertised to open July 13 for a term of two weeks. Among the instructors, Worcester is represented by James Jenkins of the Dix Street school, who will teach mathematics, and A. W. Edson, agent of the State Board of Education, who will discuss school management. Any one disposed to attend a summer school should send for information to Wm. A. Mowry 50 Bromfield Street, Boston, or to A. W. Edson, Worcester.

Wellesley.

The secret societies have elected their officers for next year. Two of the officers of Phi Sigma are Worcester girls. Geraldine Longley '92 is Recording Secretary and Lillian Crawford '92 is Treasurer.

May 11, the College Glee and Banjo Clubs gave a concert in the chapel. There was such a demand for tickets, and so many were disappointed in not securing seats, that it is to be repeated in the Town Hall, May 25.

The Shakespeare Society gave "Love's Labor Lost" in the gymnasium, May 23. The play was finely given, and it is hoped that the Society may be persuaded to repeat it in the grove, during Commencement week.

Examinations are already posted, the first being May 8.

It is universally acknowledged that the Scientific course is much more difficult than the classical, and efforts are being made to make them more equal. As a step toward this end, the members of the class of '92, who are taking the Scientific course, will be allowed to elect a year of science in place of one of the years of modern language, which have formerly been required.

Many new courses are offered for next year, especially in the department of Philosophy, where sixteen courses are now offered.

We are very sorry to lose our Professor of Literature, Louise Manning Hogkins, who has resigned. Her successor has not been announced as yet.

Boston University.

The Monday Club have their monthly meeting and dinner at their parlors at the American House Friday evening, May 22nd. Prof. Louis C. Elson, the guest of the evening, will deliver to the club his lecture on "Ballad Poetry." The Monday Club is composed of about eighteen students who meet fortnightly for literary study. At every other meeting a guest is entertained who addresses them on some literary subject. Among those whom the club have entertained this winter are Richard I. Moulton, Dr. William J. Rolfe, Rev. Wm. R. Alger, and Prof. Barrett Wendell. Students desiring admission to the club must pass a satisfactory examination and present a thesis on some prescribed literary subject.

The College of Liberal Arts boys are not afraid of work. Many of them are paying all their college expenses by working both during term time and vacations. This summer many of the boys expect to canvass for the Chautauqua Combination Drawing Board and Writing Desk.

The Seniors were received by the Sophomores at The Brunswick Friday evening the 15th. They are to be received by the Faculty on Friday evening the 22nd. These are gentle reminders that their days are numbered.

The Senior examinations begin May 20th. This year commencement is June 3d.

Mr. W. H. Jackson of Worcester is doing excellent work on the University base ball team.

Invitations are out for the Senior Reception to be held Monday evening June 1st.

Holy Cross.

George P. Burt, professor of music and leader of the college since 1858, passed away at his home in this city on the 15th.

Rev. Patrick W. Burke, of the class of '83, curate at St. Joseph's Church, Leicester, died after a long illness on the 19th.

Twice within a week is Holy Cross called upon to mourn the deaths of teacher and alumnus. Both well known in our city where many pleasant days were passed; one with his life's work nearly accomplished, the other, stricken in the very vigor of early manhood. The teacher had reached man's estate and was quietly approaching the fields of rest; the other had hardly commenced life's journey ere he was summoned hence. To their friends we could add no words of praise, for both were marked for their affection and regard towards Alma Mater. As their friends grieve, so Holy Cross mourns in the loss of her fostering children.

The monthly marks were read in Fenwick Hall, Tuesday, and the following were the Worcester boys who averaged ninety-eight per cent. or over: T. B. Cunningham, J. F. Spellman, J. P. O'Brien, F. M. Phelan, J. F. Boyle, J. B. McLane and J. J. Salmon.

The ball team lost their first college game this season, to the Amhersts, Tuesday, by a score of 6-2.

Polytechnic.

Next week Wednesday is to be a holiday for the Institute, on account of the Inter-collegiate field-day at Springfield. The team which Worcester is to send to compete, is made up of Messrs. Dadmun, Bradford, Taylor and Dunbar '91; Fish and E. L. Smith, '92; Bullard and Clapp, '93, and Gallegher '94. What show this contingent will have, no one ventures to predict, for the Tech athletes are a doubtful quantity. Dadmun of course is the most prominent in the list, and what he can do is well-known, but whether he will do it, many express their doubts, for twice before he has disappointed Worcester.

One thing is certain, as Dadmun graduates in June the Tech's chances this Spring are probably the best they will be for two or three years. It is expected that a large number of Worcester students will accompany the team.

Wednesday evening, the Intercollegiate Press Association is to have a banquet at the Massasoit House, Springfield and the W P I has voted to send two delegates.

Dr. Jordan of Clark University lectured before the Sanitary Engineers yesterday afternoon in the Salisbury Laboratories.

Semi-annual examinations begin one week from Monday, and systematic "cramming" has already begun to show itself.

The Juniors are to have their pictures taken in a group, sometime before exams.

Dr. Eaton intends to leave for his California home about the 2nd of June.

The captain of the Middler's four-oared crew, posted a challenge a few days ago to any and all comers for a race on Quinsigamond. This was more than the Juniors could stand, and Thursday noon they unanimously voted to form a similar crew, and elected C. O. Rogers captain. Whether anything will come from this remains to be seen. It seems to nettle '95 to have the Middler's challenge remain unaccepted, and if no race is rowed this Spring, next Fall will probably see a contest.

Much dissatisfaction is expressed by baseball men, because the class series are not played. Despite the fact that suits were purchased at considerable expense, and two classes at least, have voted in favor of having the contest played out, there seems little sign of anything more being done about it.

Y. M. C. A.

The summer out-door work of the Association is now all arranged. The boat house at the Lake which has been rented by the Association for the past two seasons has been again secured for this season and will be stocked with about twenty boats and canoes, also the adjoining tennis court will be put in condition for use by the members. To members of the Association the price for membership in the athletic club is two dollars. This privilege include the use of the boats, tennis court and half rates of the "dummy." The outfit will be better this year than ever before. Harry Wentworth will have charge of the boat house.

The banquet for the gymnasium members will be held in the gymnasium next Tuesday evening at seven o'clock. Plates will be reserved only for those who announce beforehand their intention of being present.

June 2nd there will be a social for members and ladies. A special committee is now preparing a program of entertainments.

The marriage of Geo. N. Morse to Miss Edith L. Smith took place Wednesday morning, May 20, at Trinity Church. The front of the church was beautifully decorated with green and white and over either aisle was an arch of green on one of which were the letters S. M., on the other M. The bridal party entered to the playing of Tanhauser's Wedding March. The ceremony was performed by Dr. W. H. Thomas assisted by Rev. J. D. Pickles, the present pastor. After the ceremony a reception was held at the Hotel Kenmore. Many beautiful and valuable presents were given by pupils and friends. Mr. and Mrs. Morse left in the afternoon for New York City. They will live in Boston on their return. It is seldom that a marriage excites more interest. The bride is the daughter of Dwight Smith and is well known as an elocutionist of rare ability. The groom is a musician of wide and varied attainments. At present, he is the organist at Trinity.

It pays to patronize General Agent Geo. Y. Lancaster, for Railroad and Steamship Tickets, Drafts, and Insurance. Office, 434 Main street, Worcester.

Amos Andrew Parker.

This aged gentleman whose face LIGHT is able to present to its readers this week is still resident in Fitzwilliam. May 13 the Appleton Academy at New Ipswich, N. H., had a jubilee and among other good things, the following was said concerning Mr. Parker.

"Col. Amos A. Parker, the centenarian, was represented by his brother lawyer, Amos J. Blake of Fitzwilliam, N. H., who told in brief the story of the venerable graduate's life. Col. Parker was born Oct. 8, 1791, in Fitzwilliam, and worked on his father's farm until fifteen years old, and then and fitted for college under Prof. Oliver Swain Taylor, and graduated from the University of Vermont in 1813, carrying off the second honor. He taught in the South a while, then studied law under Levi Chamberlain, and in 1821 was admitted to the bar at Epping, N. H. Two years later he took the editorship of the New Hampshire Statesman at Concord. In 1825 he was one of the aids of Gov. Morrill of New Hampshire, and was delegated to come to Boston and escort Gen. Lafayette to Concord as a guest of the Granite state.

Entered Appleton Academy

"Since that time he has served the state and various townships in nearly all of the offices that can come to a citizen. He has been justice of the peace since 1822. He is tall and vigorous, and, until his accident, had been about town as usual. He is recovering, and there is little doubt that he will pass his hundredth birthday. He contributed a poem, 'The Parting Hour,' which was read by Mr. Blake."

In addition to this it might be stated that his father was the Hon. Nahum Parker, who was lawyer, United States senator and judge. His college life was coeval with much of the War of 1812 and his memories thereof are clear and vivid.

When our Civil War came he was, even then, too old for a soldier's life; but he hired a substitute and fought by proxy.

His long life has had many official recognitions, having served on the governor's staff, been thirteen years in the Legislature, besides having been a trustee of the Insane Hospital, a selectman of his town and a member of many legal and historical societies. That he excels as a writer all who read this paper will testify. He has been three times married, first to the daughter of Daniel C. Sanders, first president of the University of Vermont, second to the daughter of United States Marshall McClanay and third to Miss Julia E. Smith of Glastonberry, Conn., one of the famous sisters who had so much trouble years ago about their taxes and thereby had their cows sold.

At the last Commencement at Burlington, he was quite the lion of the occasion and this extract from a paper of the city will show how he was received,

"President Buckham then said: 'We have a man with us who graduated in 1813, seventy-seven years ago, and who is ninety-nine years old. Our venerable father, A. A. Parker, was for thirteen successive years in the New Hampshire Legislature and his father and himself and son have held the office of clerk of the town for forty-seven years consecutively. He said Williams College had challenged our claim to the oldest living graduate of an American college, but no one would deny that Mr. Parker was the youngest old graduate living.

Hon. A. A. Parker's Remarks.

"As this venerable man rose to his feet he received an ovation, and he exhibited remarkable powers for a man of his years. He spoke with vigor, and referred to his father's instructions in a manner that impressed all present. He told of his experiences when but a lad of seven years, and of his life at the Academy and at the University. He entered the latter in 1811, a year and a half ahead in his course, and David French of Williston was his roommate throughout his course. Judge Collamer graduated from the University before him.

He gave interesting reminiscences of life in this city, speaking of his experience in a dancing school for ladies. He opened a ball given in the largest hall in the place, facing the college green, and had the honor of dancing with the president's daughter. He spoke of war scenes of 1812 in a vivid manner and said that he was well acquainted with Gen. Lafayette. He related an interview with Lafayette; imitating the voice and gesture of the gallant man with relish and evident delight. He did not appear wearied in the least, and spoke with all the enthusiasm of youth."

Mr. Theodore Parker of this city, a relative, contributes the following interesting matter concerning his kinman's life.

Mr. Parker's health is perfect. He is in possession of all the faculties, even to eyesight and hearing. In good weather he walks a half mile daily in Fitzwilliam. Even at his great age he has little difficulty in recalling names, dates and places. A most remarkable memory is one of his strong characteristics. Many conversations in which he participated eighty years since recur to him verbatim. He fluently discusses the anecdotes and varied experiences of his younger days, and remembers from the age of two years. It is well to ask right here, "How is all this explained?" This marvellous preservation is a matter which deserves most attentive consideration from us all. The habits and mental development which he practised in his youth have surely done this. He himself attributes his mental and physical longevity to his bringing up. He places the future of young people more at this door than any other. He loves to recall his youth and delights in entertaining young men with advice.

Charles Converse Putnam.

The going out of one human life, in the grand aggregate of humanity, is perhaps a little thing, but every candle lights a space, large or small, and when it is extinguished there is a circle less radiant on this account. Our friend, and we had known him long, was singularly retiring in his nature. He never cared to obtrude himself nor his attainments. He had to be questioned and sounded, that the true depths of his nature and abilities should be known.

His father, the Rev. J. J. Putnam was the pastor of the Unitarian Church in Bridgewater, when Charles was born there Aug. 16th, 1861. It was in 1865, that the family came to Worcester where his education was had. He was early a pupil in Mr. Foster's private school; but he afterward was in the Walnut Street Grammar School and eventually entered the High School, whence he was graduated in 1880. But he remained one year longer, continuing his classical studies of which he was remarkably fond and in which his attainments were advanced. Thence he was entered at Amherst College, passing a very creditable examination, but he never began his residence there. He did, however, go over the work of the Freshman year with the late Mr. A. Cary Field, his long time instructor in the High School. Later still, he went down to Cambridge and had a personal interview with that distinguished scholar and theologian, Professor Ezra Abbot, who satisfied himself of the extent and character of the young man's attainments, and signified his willingness that Mr. Putnam should be admitted a member of the Harvard Divinity School and he was thus admitted; but he did not go further in this direction.

Again, he devoted himself to a round of home study and development. By nature, he was much of a recluse. He was like him whom Gray had in mind when he wrote his Elegy, though there was not a trace of melancholy in his word or bearing. He was never of the boys, boyish. He was with them but not of them. Their rough and roguish play had no attraction for him. His thoughts seemed to be beyond them. He made no intimacies among them; but every one was treated with the most considerate politeness. Perhaps no graduate of the High School ever kept the same more closely in memory, since nearly every week, particularly on Monday, when there was singing he would be a visitor. The sound of youthful melody never lost its charm.

During all these years, however, there was a change, a development proceeding in his mind and spirit, not unlike that which led John Henry Newman to Littlemore and, eventually, to Rome. Though reared a Unitarian, he early avowed Trinitarian sentiments, at an age indeed when most children are supposed to give very little heed to religious matters. Some time after his graduation he was confirmed as a member of the Episcopal Church. At this time, Dr. Huntington is reported to have said, "I discover Roman Catholic proclivities in your ideas. Had you not better hesitate before making this step?" Church history and religious contemplation absorbed very much

During a recent visit in Worcester, the venerable ninety-niner remarked "My father's advice was often hard to follow, and the self denial necessary pained me sometimes, but I early decided that it was best to abide by his will at any cost, and I always tried to obey him. And I was never sorry that I followed his directions closely. While yet a child, my father made me train my memory. He often sent me into town on errands, and placing me upon the saddle behind the saddle bags, had me once more repeat the many duties until I distinctly remembered them all. I enjoyed memorizing and became so proficient as to repeat in correct order a long column of names from reading them once. I watched my memory, and took care to let all things make a firm impression upon the mind. In this spirit I read the dictionary through carefully.

"To start with I was never a robust boy. Although my health was very good, I was not strong nor athletic, but of a nervous temperament. I was more tall than fleshy. I worked upon my father's farm until sixteen, and then, as I was not robust, my father thought it better to give me a thorough education than to remain upon the farm. But I was very quick in movement and always active. Few could handle their hands and feet more swiftly than myself. While at college, the ball games gave me great delight and recreation from my studies. I used sometimes, when I wanted to pay off an old score on the batter to catch the ball before the batter could hit it. This required quick work and a sudden dash.

But my associates in youth have all passed away. I belong to antiquity. None of those are now living whose faces of my own age I used to see. And I see men of sixty and seventy years in ruined health, with their usefulness departed. Why is this? Why is it that the weaker boy lives to a ripe old age, and the muscular robust youth ends his good health at fifty or sixty? Good man, I think our ambition should be for five score years rather than for three score years and ten. The fact is the weak boy becomes careful, watches himself, nurses his strength, and grows up that way, while the reverse was generally true of the strong men of my time. Again, people live better now. We now have more general knowledge about the preservation of health, and more of the comforts and conveniences of life.

"My motto is Regular and Temperate Habits. If you want good health neither eat, work, nor play to excess. Mentally, keep a quiet mind, and let the mind have full power over the body. Let the mind be commander-in-chief."

This is the testimony of one who has almost reached the distinction of a centenarian, and one who has made such matters a part of his constant study. Mr. Parker was never addicted to use of liquor or tobacco in any form.

Mr. Blair has succeeded in making a most excellent photograph of Mr. Ben Hammond in his studio, 452 Main Street. This will be a very pleasant souvenir to his many pupils and friends.

A force of agents representing the manufacturers of Brussels soap are now in this city, taking orders from housekeepers to be filled by the local grocers.

of his time, indications of his research appearing in papers read before a literary club or society in All Saint's Church. From discriminating critics these writings received the highest praise. He was specially intimate with the Rev. E. S. Middleton, the assistant rector whose recent conversion to Romanism may not have been without its influence upon Mr. Putnam, though it is more in accord with his own independent way of thinking to believe that he wrought out his own conclusions himself.

Long since Prof. Hedge of Harvard said. "It is either Rome or reason." Mr. Putnam, Senior, stood at one extreme of individual, independent thought, the very ultimate of Protestantism, his son desired institutional religion, an embodied, visible form and the outcome is indicated in the words of Father Power in his language at the burial.

"Thirty days ago, a young man came to me and asked to be baptised. I had never seen him before and had never heard of him. I told him I could not receive him into our faith until I was sure that his mind had been made up through spiritual influences.

He urged me to baptise him, saying he was anxious to be of our faith and had studied the teachings of the Catholic Church. I questioned him and he answered correctly. I pushed my questions further, and still the answers came slowly, correctly. He understood thoroughly our catechism and when I asked for a list of the Catholic books he had read he gave me such a list as I should have recommended myself. I then brought to bear all the Protestant arguments I knew of but he opposed them skilfully and learnedly. At last I told him to think it over a little longer and then come to me again. He did this and then I arranged a day and then baptised him.

It was wonderful that that young man should have studied such a question and accomplished such a change entirely alone as he did."

Always far from robust, his delicate health finally resulted in consumption, though there was no alarming symptom till La Grippe, several weeks since, left him quite enfeebled. Still he was able to be about and the Sunday before his death, he went to church. With the utmost calmness he resigned himself to death, making several requests as to the disposition of his remains. His departure from life was exceedingly happy drawing from Father Power these words, "I have seen hundreds and thousands die, but I never saw a death more sweet and beautiful. It made me a better man and a better priest."

Death came at five minutes past midnight, May 14th. Saturday, friends and relatives accompanied the body to St. Paul's Church where the pastor, Father Power, assisted by Fathers Techan and Hanrahan officiated. Flowers, in abundance, lay upon the casket and the hands of schoolmates, George E. Gardner, and Charles J. O'Hara with friends, Isaac C. Bates Dana and J. W. Young, bore all that was mortal to the altar and to the hearse and finally lowered the body to rest in Rural Cemetery. Rest for which many a weary pilgrim has sought long and vainly was found. Repeatedly in his dying moments, he said "I am so happy, so happy." The boy, for so he must ever appear to his teacher, would have been happy in such seclusion and study as filled the last forty years of Cardinal Newman's life, but it was not to be. He reposes "In the bosom of his Father and his God."

Abel Swan Brown.

Mr. Abel Swan Brown has recently been elected President of the Denholm & McKay Company, Worcester, more commonly known as the Boston Store, of which Mr. James J. Hughes is Vice President, Mr. R. J. McKay, Secretary, and Mr. Thomas Hamilton, Treasurer. Mr. Brown is a native of this county, having been born in Hubbardston. He was a son of a Baptist minister, Rev. Abel Brown and Catherine Swan, pioneer co-workers in the Anti-Slavery and Temperance movements. His father died just prior to his birth, and the boyhood of Mr. Brown was spent in Hubbardston at the home of his grand parents, his grandfather, Samuel Swan, Esq., being the county squire and the most important man of the town for over a generation. At the age of sixteen, young Brown came to Worcester and entered the employ of J. H. Clarke, the present popular Dry Goods merchant of Worcester, who had started but a short time before his successful business career. Young Brown started at the bottom of the ladder as boy of all work and gradually arose until he became one of the leading salesmen of the house. At the end of four years he decided to go to New York, where he took a position as salesman in the wholesale dry goods trade, remaining there fourteen years. During the last eleven years of this time he was connected with the well known firm of H. B. Claflin & Co. who also started in Worcester.

When in Worcester, Mr. Brown was a regular attendant of the Main Street Baptist church and a member of the Bible Class of J. H. Walker, Esq. On his removal to New York he joined the First Baptist Church of Brooklyn where he now is a trustee. He was the chief organizer and first President of the Young People's Baptist Union, the most active organization of the denomination in that city.

In 1869 Mr. Brown married Miss Charlotte Connah, a New York lady, then a resident of Brooklyn and a member of the First Baptist Church. Their family consists of two sons, aged respectively 18 and 20 years.

In 1878 Mr. Brown conceived the idea of organizing a purchasing syndicate of the largest provincial dry goods houses. Messrs. Denholm & McKay (both now deceased), the proprietors of the Boston Store at that time, were among the first to join the Syndicate Trading Company which is now composed of the largest dry goods houses in Providence, Springfield, Hartford, Salem, Rochester, Buffalo, Reading, Harrisburg, Indianapolis, Kansas City and Minneapolis. The combined purchasing power of the syndicate is over fifteen million dollars per annum and it has a head office in New York with branch offices or agents in all the largest cities in Europe. Its latest move was to open up a direct connection with Japan and its own representative is now visiting the manufacturers of that country and selecting choice and useful Japanese goods for the Boston Store, Worcester, and for the other firms represented by the company.

Mr. A. Swan Brown, has been president of the Syndicate Trading Co. since it started, and he is also President of the Pettis Dry Goods Co., Indianapolis, and Vice-President of the Callender, McAuslan & Troup Co., Providence.

James J. Hughes and R. J. McKay, the present active managers of the Boston Store, who were the legal successors to the business, invited Mr. Brown to join them and to assume the position of president of the company, feeling that his large experience would greatly assist them in the further development of the Boston Store.

The Syndicate organization is one of the few combinations which is a direct and positive benefit to the people, as it saves the large middle profits that have heretofore existed and gives the benefit of the great saving to its customers.

The extensive improvements in the Boston Store now in progress show that the new firm comprehend the wants of the people of Worcester.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

Ben T. Hammond's forty-eighth recital was very successfully given at his studio Monday evening. On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of next week the closing recitals will be given in Horticultural Hall. Those who will take part Tuesday evening are Miss Evelyn Brooks, Miss Natalie Trainque, Miss Aileen Kennedy, Miss Anna Louise Dunn, Miss Alice M. Sharpe, Miss Hallie E. Battey, Miss Cora L. Fisher, Miss Mary E. McLaughlin, Miss Kate J. Matthews, Miss Bertha L. Fletcher, Miss Delia M. Quessy, Miss Edith K. Smith, Miss Julie M. Jones and Messrs. John Stewart, C. Dwight Sharpe, Edward J. Huard, Frank N. Prescott, and Harry Robinson. Wednesday evening the soloists will be Mrs. Albert Curtis Marble, Miss Jessie L. Pond, Miss Eva Martin, Miss Agnes Gallagher, Miss Annie Warren, Miss Genevieve Burke, Miss Agnes Mannix, Miss Lizzie Farrell and Messrs. Mortimer Howard, Lucius White, Eugene A. O'Connor and Addison McGaffey. They will be assisted by Mrs. S. E. Lawton, harpist; Charles H. Grout, pianist; Walter G. Ingalls organist and a grand chorus of sixty voices.

Memorial Sunday.

Following is the order of service at the Memorial service at Universalist Church tomorrow forenoon:

- I. Organ, Ward's March, Reldl
- II. Anthem by choir.
- III. The minister shall say, "The Lord is in His Holy Temple, let all the earth keep silence before Him."
- The audience will rise and sing the Doxology.
- Choir, Gloria Patir.
- IV. Scripture Lesson.
- V. Choir.
- VI. Prayer.
- VII. Choir.
- VIII. Choir, Hymn 863.
- IX. Sermon.
- X. Choir.
- XI. Notices.
- XII. National Hymn.
- XIV. Benediction.

The plans for holding a boy's camp are well along towards completion. It is proposed to unite with the Clinton, Westboro, Natick and Southbridge Associations and form a camp at Lake Chaubunagungamaug. Two parties each of fifty boys, will camp, each one two weeks. The camp will be in charge of Secretaries Gale and Meade and other men.

Base Ball.

Rumor has it that there is discontent among the directors of the Worcester team, and that they are dissatisfied with Manager Greenleaf. We hope that this is not so. Manager Greenleaf is getting good work out of the boys and we can see no need of a change. The great trouble with some teams is too much management. In the case of our city's team, the manager seems to know just how to play the different positions to win and that is all any one can ask. The Worcester Club stands well up at the head of the column of the New England League with a splendid percentage of games won, and why should any Base Ball crank desire a change either in manager or players? Any player is apt to have an off day, but that is no reason why he should be given his release. In the very next game the same player may make all the star plays. The players who constitute the Worcester team are good men, better than the most of those who represent the other cities in the League, and in our opinion should be kept. It is an old saying "It is not safe to change horses while crossing a stream," and the same is very applicable to the management of a ball team. Let well enough alone. Let the men who constitute the Worcester team, remain, even if they do happen to play yellow ball some days, and by playing together and by learning each others plays they will only grow stronger and be able to put up a great deal better game as the season advances. Another thing, let the men know that they are to remain and they will play better ball and win more games than by constantly changing the players and thereby causing a feeling of "don't care."

In the opening game between the Bostons and Cincinnati of the Association, a horse and carriage was presented to "King Kell." We cannot say why he should be thus remembered. He may have been a good player in the past, but his too much "looking upon the wine when it is red," ought to shelve him. There are players today who are putting up just as good ball as he ever put up who are not receiving even mention at the hands of the so called Base Ball reporters.

A good story is told of Connie Murphy when he first blossomed out as a ball player. It seems his reputation as a ball tosser had gone out beyond the confines of this city, and Haverhill wanted him there to play with the local team. He was offered a position in a dry goods store in that city so that while not playing ball he could have steady employment. He accepted the place and the first customer he waited upon was a lady who wanted a ball of yarn. Connie immediately brought his Base Ball knowledge in play by asking the lady—"High or low ball, madame?" Dry goods did not agree with Connie and he left his place to follow ball entirely and with good success.

Why wouldn't it be a good thing for the city to rent Agricultural Park for Wednesday and Saturday afternoons. Have a policeman there to preserve order and then let the boys play ball to their hearts content. There is room for all the boys in the city to play, and we can picture in our mind the sight of hundreds of youngsters running and having great sport with no fear of being driven away. LIGHT would like to see such a sight.

Total Abstinence.

At a meeting of the Worcester County Catholic Total Abstinence Society in Blackstone, May 1st, Principal Richard H. Mooney of the Quinsigamond School, spoke as follows:

"The question of temperance is old but that of total abstinence is new. This question is intimately connected with all the social questions and its solution is the corner-stone of the so-called labor question. It is full in the foreground and must be met and solved. Too many of the vital interests of society are at stake to ignore this question.

Intemperance is the most prolific cause of lawlessness, pauperism and crime. It poisons the springs of government; taints the fountain of political power; bribes legislatures, endangers the mental and moral training of the youth of the land; desecrates the homes, divides the family and leaves all to misery and shame.

It invites epidemics and pestilence; engenders riots and rebellions against law and constituted authority. It fills our jails, work-houses, insane asylums and covers the land with idleness and crime. And more than all and more far-reaching in its dire results is the transmission from generation to generation of the drunkard, of disease, mental weakness, imbecility, insanity, idiocy and poverty. There should not be even moderation in the use of unnecessary, injurious and dangerous drinks.

And I appeal especially to the young because of habits of self-indulgence. They frustrate the noblest gifts of nature and render useless the best opportunities for advancement acquiring strength from indulgence so as to be almost irresistible.

Such habits are similar to the chains with which the Lilliputians in Swift's celebrated romance bound Gulliver down to the earth. He could easily have broken each fetter separately but their united force manacled him in every limb. Bad habits must be subdued by early and constant resistance which strengthens the mind and gives firmness of character, the brightest ornament and best support in life. There is no safe ground for young men, but on the high and dry platform of total abstinence.

Sophrionius, a wise teacher, would not let his sons and daughters associate with those whose conducts were not pure and upright. "Dear father," said one of his daughters one day when prohibited from visiting, "you must think us very childish if you imagine that we would be exposed to danger by it." The father took in silence a dead coal from the hearth and handed it to his daughter. It will not burn you, my child; take it." She did so and beheld her delicate white hand soiled and blackened. We cannot be too careful in handling coals.

"It is a magic, but a fatal circle,
Upon whose crystal rim a thousand devils
In hidden form sit tempting innocence,
And beckoning early virtue from its center."

I would appeal to the young men in their strength and power, and the young women in their beauty and innocence to be ever on their guard in forming habits.

"Habits are soon assumed; but when we strive,
To strip them 'tis being flayed alive.

Man is a bundle of habits. They are good and bad. In all ages, says Lord Brougham, the law-giver as well as the schoolmaster has mainly placed his reliance on habit. Make sobriety a habit and intemperance will have no dangers for you. Habit strengthens with age. It is often harder to unlearn than to learn. To uproot an old habit is more difficult than to form a new one. The small events of life make the habit. Flake by flake the avalanche is formed. And let me say right here, that the Irish people do not consume all the liquor in the world. Sometimes our good orators would like us to believe they do. But really, they consume more than they ought.

The grand old Celtic race is increasing rapidly in wealth and influence. Many people look askance at this. They should know that the Irishman came not here as a conqueror. He is the American of Americans. Length of residence in this country does not make an American. The man who believes in the equality of all men, the right of the people to rule, free institutions and the aristocracy only of muscle and brain, is an American if he lives in Africa. He has the American idea. There need be no fear of the snuplanting process. The Irish, the Swede, the German, the French and all other dignified races come here with no treason.

This amalgamated people shall receive the glorious institutions of this great and free land, and their preservation, protection, advancement and perpetuation shall be to them a care and solicitude, and they shall transmit intact to succeeding generations."

Owen E. Kane.

For a time, the familiar form of the spectacle man will be missed from Harrington Corner, but soon the crowd will rush along making no more note of him than does the river of the snow flake, for a moment seen upon its surface. His funeral took place from his residence, 32 Lodi Street, Friday, the 15th at 9 o'clock. Services were held at St. John's Catholic Church, at 10 o'clock, Rev. C. M. Foley offering a high mass of requiem. The bearers were Timothy McGee, Owen F. Burns, William D. Luchay, William H. Smith, Owen M. Kane, Patrick Kelly. The burial was at St. John's cemetery. There were several handsome floral tributes. Another veteran of the late War mustered out.

Paxton.

The discharge, by the Court, of Miss Eva J. Harrington brought before the same for alleged excessive punishment of one Cody, an intractable boy, is quite in keeping with the feelings of all people who would have laws enforced and the rule of teachers upheld. To give over to the demands of parents who are only too glad of an excuse to keep children out of school would be suicidal. The town must approve the course of Messrs. Morton and Clark in sustaining the teacher.

FLASHES.

Life is a leaf of paper white
Whereon each one of us may write
His word or two, and then comes night:
Though thou have time
But for a line, be that sublime;
Not failure, but low aim, is crime.
—J. R. Lowell.

A noble aim
Faithfully kept, is as a noble deed.
—Wordsworth.

Gethsemane.

In the garden of Gethsemane Jesus alone with the Father knelt beneath the trees;
They shade the lonely garden in silence save the breeze,
Which, sobbing 'mid their foliage, cast pitying looks on him.
Yonder stately palm seemed weird in the light so dim,
And low beside him creeping was a streamlet, small and clear,
All nature loved the Savior, so suffering, patient here,
The burdens of all people were cast on him this night,
But sudden o'er the garden was shed a holy light,
And an angel onward coming, stooped low to comfort
there
And mingled notes so soothing, with words of earnest prayer.
No longer there he lingered but onward, heavenward, still,
'Till in his pathway shining, the leaves had seemed to thrill
As the moonlight from the heavens bathed the brow, so calm and fair,
The cruel blood drops gathered, trickled down and hardened there,
But now in gathering shadows he slowly turned away,
'Then clanging through the garden onward to betray,
Came Judas and his followers and they met him there alone
And the leaflets bending, sighing, caught the moonlight as it shone,
And the shadows, deeper, faster in the garden there so sad,
Lingered and fell so lonely and never, never more were glad!
D,

LEICESTER.

The order of exercises at the 72nd anniversary of the first Congregational Sunday school May 17th, at 3.30 P. M. was very interesting. There was a large attendance of members present, also many friends from out of town. The reports given by the different officers were satisfactory, and showed the school was in a good condition. The absence of the Superintendent, Mr. H. Arthur White was regretted, he being confined at home by illness.

Mrs. White declared her husband's sentiments in a very pleasing manner. Hon. Charles G. Reed and Geo. H. Mellen Esq., of Worcester addressed the audience acceptably. The singing by 30 children was highly appreciated, the song "We give our hearts to Jesus," being particularly effective. Mrs. Catherine E. Grout, Superintendent of the Primary department has done and is doing a noble work among children.

The floral display on the platform and gallery was artistically arranged by Mr. William Bisco. Mr. Bisco is entitled to a gold lined silver medal, stamped with the devise of gratitude from the hearts of the people for the 25 years of untiring service in this particular branch of art in which he excels. He has interwoven forget-me-nots with evergreen in memory of old and young; his reward will come in the better world.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hacker of Philadelphia will not occupy their summer residence on Main street this year; they will sail for Europe in June, to remain some time.

Mrs. Samuel Midgley and daughter leave town about June 1st., to reside with Mr. Midgley at Montreal.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Midgley have rented Mr. William Whitemore's house, now occupied by Mrs. Samuel Midgley, and will move into the same as soon as vacated.

Miss Annie E. Henshaw is expected to return from Havana, Cuba, in June.

Miss Anna I. Estes is teaching school at Smithfield, R. I.

BETTINA.

May 22nd, 1891.

Books and Bookmen.

The Library of Fernando Columbus.

In an old copy of Valerius Flaccus, which has recently come into our possession, and which was once the property of Fernando Columbus, son of Christopher Columbus, we find the following interesting note written on a fly-leaf:

"The chief and favorite occupation of Fernando Columbus seems to have consisted in collecting a very large library, which he desired to place within the reach of every one in Spain. To that effect he travelled all over Europe, purchasing books everywhere, never failing to write, on the last leaf, where each book was bought, the date, and price paid. When the collection had attained nearly 20,000 volumes he wrote a letter to Philippe II, placing the library under his protection, and proposing that a real Index raisonné of the collection should be deposited in every city, and giving to all the privilege to have searches and extracts made at the expense of the library.

The Index was then made by Fernando himself and is still to be seen, though very much damaged, in Seville. It is a folio volume of about 300 leaves, written in two columns, so fine that some columns have as many as 85 lines describing minutely 4,231 articles, all ending with a number which corresponds to that which is inscribed within a diminutive frame on the last leaf of every book.

The title is: Registrium librorum don Ferdinandi Colon primi Admirantis Indiarum filii in quorum auctorum quam librorum, eorumque magnitudinem, divisionem et impressionem reperiri datur, necnon ipsa loca et precium quibus ab eo prefata volumina fuerunt comparata.

From this catalogue I learn that Fernando bought a great many books at Rome in 1515, and in Germany, Holland and Belgium in 1520 and 1522.

By his will Fernando bequeathed his library to Luis Colon, his nephew, with a condition that 100,000 marvedis (about $1,200 of our money, but worth then a great deal more) should be expended annually in buying and binding books brought from Rome, Venice, Antwerp, Nuremberg, Paris and Lyons. In case Luis Colon refused to accept the legacy the library was to go to the Chapter of the Cathedral of Seville, and if the Chapter refused it then to the convent of St. Paul.

When Fernando died, July 8, 1539, Luis, the heir, was in America, where he held his father Diego's title and office, and never claimed the library. The monks of St. Paul then seized and removed it to their convent. A suit at law was immediately brought by the Chapter; but it was not until 1551 that the books were restored to the latter and finally placed on the second floor of the Moorish wing of the Cathedral of Seville, where it still is, and open every day to the public. It is called "Bibliotheca Colombina."—Washington Book Chronicle.

Babyland, D. Lothrop & Co., Boston. Price 50 cents per year. Again we have this little magazine for the youngest of the household with its bright pictures and stories. I am sure the story of "The Egg That Hatched Brownies" will please them all, one "In Grimalkin Hall" with its ridiculous cat picture ought to tickle the fancy of all the older ones in the family. We have laughed over it with the children.

Our Little Men and Women, D. Lothrop & Co., Boston. Price $1 per year. The first picture is from a painting by Sir Joshua Reynolds of Master Crewe as Henry VIII. Besides this there are five full page illustrations and many smaller ones. The stories are "Lady Gay," "The Wicked Rufus," "Kitty's Papa," and "Two Namesakes" a story of a boy and his big dog. There is a page in "The Birds of Paradise." An article on "The Fruits of a Sunny Land," and several nice poems in all making entertainment for the children to fill some rainy afternoon.

The Home Magazine, from the Brodix Publishing Co., Washington, D. C. An illustrated poem covers the first page. Mrs. Logan's paper on the "Winter Before the War" is the first, one will read, for all she writes has a charm that cannot be described. "The Korean Legation" is fully illustrated. The stories are all good, both the long and short, though the continued one of "Janet" is cut short. The fashions are fully set forth for amateurs. There are short papers on the care of the feet, and the strength of our girls. The page for needlework and a page for recipes make the magazine one of the best. Price 50 cents.

Ingall's Home and Art Magazine, published by J. F. Ingall's, Lynn, Mass. Price $1. This number has a beautiful colored study of Wild Roses. Besides this there are three full page illustrations for art students to copy. Designs for almost everything may be found in this magazine, stenciling, wood carving, fancy work, and painting on china. There are four of the colored studies during the year and they are treasures for the painter.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly Magazine, published by James Vick, Rochester, New York. All lovers of flowers should have this little monthly. It tells so many things about the care and planting of seeds, and not only about flowers but vegetables as well. The short stories are pleasant and the colored frontispiece is perfect.

The Peerless Cook book is at hand and we think it may well be called the peerless, for its recipes are plain or elaborate as one may wish, but with all there is the same careful attention to detail that will ensure success with any of them. In this book over four hundred of Mrs. D. A. Lincoln's valuable recipes have been gathered, and it is bound in such a handy size that all will welcome it. Roberts Brothers, Boston, Mass. For sale by Putnam, Davis & Co. 15 cents.

Idle Time Tales by Francois Coppee, Honore De Balzac, Alphonse Daudet and Alfred De Musset. Rand, McNally & Co., Chicago and New York. 50 cents.

Very well named, these little sketches by the above writers are solace for the, otherwise, unoccupied hour. Each author has a, not too long, biographical sketch. Coppee known to the world as the writer of some wonderfully thrilling verses is represented in a charming bit of French life in "The Captain's Vices." De Balzac, a French literary lion has "The House of the Tennis Playing Cat," and how Frenchy the story is. Daudet gives us an excellent temperance story, whether he intended to or not in "The Reverend Father Gauchier's Elixir." De Musset's "Croiselles" is the most characteristically French story in the book, but it of course keeps the interest unflagging to the end.

Told After Supper by J. K. Jerome in Leisure Hour Series. Henry Holt & Co., New York. 30 cents.

The illustrations by Kenneth M. Skeaping are profuse and excellent. They add much to the stories. To the average ghost story this little collection of absurdities is much like what Bret Hart's "Liffith Lank or Lunacy" was to Reade's "Griffith Gaunt or Jealousy." In other words it is a most admirable satire on ghost stories generally, told in a manner so original and attractive that when the book is opened, it will not be closed till, pictures and all, every page is turned and studied. Thackeray never made more suggestive capitals for the beginning of chapters. Then, too, some phases of English life, intentionally or otherwise, are finely travestied. The Curate who is beaten at Three Card Monte and who is too drunk to tell his story, let us hope, is a rare object even in a land of a state church. In some of Mr. Jerome's vagaries he is as fanciful as Munchausen and as airy as Alice in Wonderland.

Balram and His Master by Joel Chandler Harris. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York.

The readers of the Century and other current magazines will recognize in this book some of their old friends. Particularly the selection which gives the book its name will be recalled as an absorbingly interesting sketch in The Century during the year. The War of the Rebellion opened a fine field for genius and ability that otherwise, the world had lost. Mr. Harris, the Uncle Remus of many a story, paints life as we of the North have never seen it. We take his pictures and are charmed by them. We have had our own surroundings sketched by local artists, and we have read English stories from childhood, but here is something entirely new. The negro and his influence, for that he surely has had, have served to arouse an otherwise almost satiated appetite in story readers and we never have too much of Harris. The stories may be tinged with sadness, so is the negro's life; but they are none the less interesting and occasionally as in "The Old Bascom Place" native fun is introduced as lavishly as in Uncle Remus' best days. "A Conscript's Christmas," is a sketch taking us among people who, today, are distillers of Moonshine whiskey or the characters in such stories as Charles Egbert Craddock writes. We like them all the better because they are thus new. "Ananias" is another picture of life just after the war, and illustrates, well, the statement that we should not despise a man because he wears a ragged coat. Obviously, Mr. Harris believes that the negro has gratitude and that he is willing to die for his old master. In fact, every story contains just such a character unless it be "Where's Duncan," which is the shortest of the sketches and at the same time it most vividly sets forth the horrors of the institution which finally imbroiled this nation in a bloody war. "Mon bi" tells the story of one of those peculiar house servants, not unusual in former days, who was almost mistress at the same time. She was nurse and loved her young master quite as much as did the mother herself. Pollard, the Southern historian, would class her among his "Black Diamonds." For sale by Putnam, Davis & Co. $1 25.

Personal Memoirs of General W. T. Sherman, one volume. Charles L. Webster & Co., New York. $2.

General Sherman was the first of our great Triumvirate to put forth his personal reminiscences and what a furor they created among readers, but this was a long time ago. Since then, nearly every great leader, North and South, has tried his hand and memory at the task and by far the most of the noted ones have passed into the unknown. Singularly enough, the house of Charles L. Webster & Co. holds the most important of these works. Now that our distinguished General has ceased from life, it is an excellent thought to put both volumes into one and so offer them to a public that would possess but which the expense has hitherto prevented from buying. The one volume is no larger than either one of the first edition, but it is just as readable. To many readers the closing seven pages from the pen of James G. Blaine will add no little interest to the volume. After all he must be a pretty good artist who would undertake to paint the lily and that is just about the task that he must assume who would try to add to General Sherman's Memoirs. After all, Mr. Blaine's words are scarcely more than a brief estimate of the General's career and they might have been judiciously extended. The book must become a part of classical American literature and its value will steadily increase as the years go by.

May Pansy is on our table; full of good stories, poems and pictures. It is especially intended for Sunday as well as week-day reading. $1 a year; 10 cents a number. Why don't some of our boy and girl readers try to secure one of the handsome Safety bicycles offered by the publishers for new subscribers? D. Lothrop Co., Boston, Mass., publishers.

One of the encouraging signs of the times is the awakening interest in the past history of our country; and therefore an article by Edwin D. Mead, the well known Boston lecturer, on "The Message of Puritanism for this Time," comes with peculiar forcibleness, pointing out as it does the dangers of anti-quarianism and hobby riding, which may make, and it is regrettable often do make, a farce, or worse, of our reverence for the past and its shades. The only good to be got out of the study of the lives of the old Puritans is that of learning to do as they did, always the work nearest at hand, and live vitally in the present as all living citizens should in justice to the commonwealth.

And now it is "Colonel" Wm. H. Bartlett. Commander Veazey, up in Vermont, heard of our redoubtable Worcester school master and so reached down here and made him a part of his staff. If said staff is made up wholly of as good material as the Worcester part, it will do for him to lean on it hard. But Colonels are getting very thick in this city, nearly as common as in the South,

School and College.

There seems to have been a waking up in the Grammar Schools of our city on the subject of tobacco and temperance. Some of the questions asked are given in the following. If the youngsters answered intelligently and believed what they answered the time is coming when it will make little difference whether the vote be yes or no, for the public will not use alcohol any more than they will strychnine or arsenic.

GRADE IV.

7. In what way does tobacco hurt the stomach?
8. How will wise children treat tobacco?
9. What terrible foe to health, goodness and happiness is hidden in intoxicating liquors?
10. How do you know that alcohol is a poison?
14. From what you have learned about alcohol what do you think is the only safe rule to obey concerning all alcoholic liquors?

GRADE V.

7. What two brain poisons have you learned about?
8. What harm does alcohol do to the gray part of the brain?
9. What harm does alcohol do to the blood vessels of the brain?
10. If you wish to have a strong, healthy brain, what should you do about alcoholic liquors?
12. Can you tell how tobacco came to be used by civilized people?
13. Why are cigarettes considered even more injurious than cigars?
14. What often makes tobacco-chewers and smokers disagreeable to clean people?

GRADE VI.

8. What is the meaning of the word intoxicate?
9. What then is really expressed when we say of a man that he is intoxicated?
10. Is it a true belief that alcohol gives vigor and strength to the muscles?
11. Is there any part of the body that is not injuriously affected by the habitual use of alcoholic drinks?
12. Do the giddiness and headache and other distressing feelings that follow the use of tobacco for the first time show that such use is natural or unnatural?
14. Have you ever heard of a peculiar disease resulting from excessive smoking, known as smokers cancer? Has your teacher shown you the appearance of the throat, when affected by this disease, as shown in a figure on the physiological chart?

GRADE VII.

8. Why is a man who is suffering from much alcohol utterly prostrate and helpless?
9. If two men of equal age, skill and build were to contend in a feat of strength, and one of them indulged in alcohol and the other did not, on whose side would be chances of success, other things being equal?
10. What lesson is taught by the following fact?

The inhabitants of India do not use alcoholic drinks except as they learn the custom to some extent from Europeans, yet they are remarkable for their strength, agility, and steadiness of nerve. A band of men from the Himalayas who were in Calcutta proved to be of great strength, each one being nearly equal to three Europeans. They could grasp a man and hold him in the air as if he were a child.

13. What is tobacco? What proofs that tobacco is a poison do most people feel, when they begin to use it?

14. Is it not a serious matter for a boy to take up a burden like the habit of using tobacco, that shall cling to him all his life, and grow heavier and cling closer all the time?

GRADE VIII.

13. (a) When it is a question of success at base ball or gymnastics, or rowing, are the contestants usually allowed to use tobacco, beer and other bad indulgences while in training? (b) While in training for the struggle of life it is not equally a hindrance to be weighed down with the tobacco or drink habit?

14. A violin player when offered a glass of wine, refused it saying "If I take it, I shall lose my touch; my notes will be blurred and I shall be the last to find it out, though others will see it readily.

15. Did you ever hear of a case in which the use of alcoholic liquors or tobacco helped one to become a more dutiful son, a kinder friend, a more useful citizen or a better man?

GRADE IX.

6. You have learned that milk is a true standard food, since it gives us water for the purposes it fulfills in the body, caseine to supply new structures, muscles and other active organs, salts for building up the skeleton and other uses, fat (butter) and sugar to produce animal warmth and power. State in what respects alcohol differs from such a standard.

9. Explain why the vital organs, the lungs, liver, kidneys and brain of intemperate drinkers are, like their skin, readily congested.

11. Does alcohol partake more of the nature of a stimulant or a narcotic.

12. To what danger is the heart structure especially liable from the use of beer?

13. (a) What vital organ of the body fails first in power after indulgence in strong drink? (b) Why?

15. Having studied the action of alcohol on the human body and having found it to be the prolific cause of many distressing and fatal diseases and baneful in its influence on the minds of men and women who indulge in its use, what is your personal duty as one who desires happiness and success in life, with regard to indulgence in or abstinence from that great curse of mankind—strong drink?

Born in Brunswick, N. J. May 8 to Prof. and Mrs. Edgar S. Shumway, a son. The boy receives the staunch old Worcester name of Waldo. Mrs. Shumway will be remembered as Florence Snow, daughter of the late Dr. W. N. Snow, and, for some years, a teacher in the High School. She was married in June last to Prof. Shumway of Rutgers College, one of the most eminent classical instructors in the country.

A literary and musical entertainment was given in Commonwealth Hall, Monday evening, under the auspices of Eureka League No. 46, American Protective League.

The Study of Natural History,

As a factor in education and as a preparation for the enjoyments and pursuits of life.

[An address by A. P. Stone, LL. D., of Springfield, before the Natural History Society of Millbury at its annual meeting, May 5, 1891. A long time ago for eight years, Mr. Stone was principal of the Millbury High School.]

Mr. Stone commenced by quoting from Shakespeare:

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players;

He remarked that Shakespeare might have said, with equal truth:

All the world's a school,
And all the men and women merely learners;

for all people who amount to anything are constant learners. Life is progress. Mankind are endowed with a fondness for knowledge; and it is said that children, who question everything, are born with an interrogation mark before their eyes. Curiosity and inquisitiveness are hopeful signs in children; though such children are sometimes annoying to parents and teachers who are deficient in patience. Man stands at the head of the animal creation; yet he is not superior in every respect. Many animals have a keener eye, are more fleet of foot, and possess strength with which they can crush him, or rend him in twain. But in his fondness for knowledge, and in his capacity for improvement, we find his superiority; and we find, also, the basis of education; for man is the only animal capable of education, in the proper sense of that term.

Now what is the task of educating a child? It is not to cram the mind with facts. Some people have much knowledge which they cannot use at all; and they are poorly educated. Neither is it to treat the mind like wax, clay, or marble, which can be shaped at will. The mind is not matter, and is not subject to the laws of matter. Education is not stamped upon the mind from the outside. The mind is made up of certain self activities, which, when aroused, develop and strengthen the mental powers and stimulate the faculties. That process is from within outward. An educated person is one whose mind has acquired strength and grasp from discipline. It possesses some knowledge, and if it needs more, it knows where to go for it, how to obtain it and use it. It can, also, grapple with and master difficulties.

We often use the term education when we mean schooling. Many things can be learned better out of school. There is unconscious tuition. Even teachers, by their manners, by the language of the eye and the tones of the voice, are teaching when they know it not. Then there is accidental education. A lad falls into the water, and is rescued by an enemy, and then he learns a lesson in regard to the uncertainty of life, and knows what unselfishness means.

The new education is coming to mean a new view of education; a winnowing of the chaff from the wheat, using something new and proved, and much that is old.

The demands for an education vary with the age and circumstances. A century or two ago, a distinguished Englishman named three most important things for a boy to learn: To ride a horse, to fire a gun, and to tell the truth. He lived too early to include Base Ball!

Present education is improving, yet, in all frankness, we must regard it as unsatisfactory, defective, and one-sided.

We are educated by three books; the literal book, the book of practical life, and the book of nature. The last named is a much neglected book, and is the one upon which Natural History is founded.

We must use Natural History to supply some of the defects of the present education, and in undertaking this must keep in mind certain cardinal principles of education.

The child's mind deals with the concrete first, with objects, and as the faculties apprehend nature first, nature should be the first teacher.

The acquisition of knowledge is a good exercise for developing the faculties, and the child must have a variety of objects to keep up its interest; for it is profitably employed only so long as it is interested in what it is doing. Now take botany, without a text book, one of the simplest and most fascinating studies in the whole realm of nature. It furnishes a large number of objects, with infinite variety in form and growth, in color, budding, flowering and fruitage, and even in decay in autumnal glory. These are nature's own objects, her best teachers; and with all their wealth of variety and beauty they appeal directly to the opening faculties of the child, and secure its deepest interest. Children delight in out-of-door studies, and such studies cultivate in them careful habits of observation. Not only can the attention of children be called to these objects, in their rambles and recreations, but the ingenious and painstaking teacher can bring them into the school room, during a considerable portion of the year.

There is a natural sympathy between the human mind and living objects; and children love to observe and study the form and habits of living animals. Common and familiar animals should be used for study and illustration; and the hippopotami, rarely seen, and the extinct ichthyosaurus, should not be made more prominent than the squirrel on the garden wall, the robin redbreast on the lawn, or the cricket on the hearth.

With the aid of the microscope, the study of insects becomes intensely interesting; for an examination of their form, structure, and color, is like a glimpse into a new world. But some people lack an interest in insects, sleepless people, for instance, with a humming about their heads at night, and lovers in the arbor by moonlight, disconcerted by the buzzing of a bug in the ear.

There is teaching also, as well as sermons, in stones, and children delight to examine the chrySTALLIZATION of the precious stones and the features of rocks which show their formation and changes. Young people ought to be taught to distinguish all our common rocks and soils as readily as they do the maple tree and the lilac, the buttercup and the clover. Geology has important relations to agriculture which are not fully utilized nor appreciated.

The use of all these objects is feasible by the common school teachers, if they will prepare themselves for the work as many have done. Children must be educated in various directions. The primer, the spelling book and the number book have their legitimate uses; but they cannot take the place of these objects of nature, and should not be allowed to crowd them out the course of instruction.

It may be asked if these topics will not require extra time. Not at all. Reading and numbers can be properly taught in less time than is now given to them, and thus time can be saved for this work. It may be also objected that children will be overworked. Pupils are not overtasked by legitimate school work. They may do useless work and may work in an uncomfortable state of mind, which is always wearing to the little ones. Let the work of different kinds be appointed properly. What is needed is less of the too much, and more of the not enough. Children are often weary in the school room from a want of occupation; and teachers sometimes labor very hard in keeping their children doing nothing.

Children whose training has been begun by the aid of Natural History have made a good start in life. They have come in contact with a class of objects and influences that will stimulate them through life; and they have formed habits of observation and investigation that will enable them to carry on their education after leaving school.

Natural History is equally or more valuable in higher education, for its scope can be enlarged, its illustrating made more ample, and minds of more maturity and discipline can be brought to its pursuit and attainment.

One of the objects of education is to fit one for happiness and usefulness. Now the study of Natural History gives one a preparation for rational engagements. When man applies his mind to the study of natural objects, there is a response to his inquiries, and he is brought into full sympathy with nature. His habits of observation reveal to him many things unseen by others. It is a caricature on education to see a person profoundly educated in one direction, but so profoundly ignorant in other respects, as to be, except when among his books, as much out of place as the traditional bull in the china shop. Thoreau, of Concord, would pick up Indian arrow heads in the fields and forests, where others never met with them. He saw them and they did not. Prof. Dunn of Yale College, when a member of the United States Exploring Expedition, made a hasty examination of the California coast, several years before gold was discovered there, and he wrote in his note book that the region abounded in evidences of gold bearing rock. It was another case of the trained eye.

