Letter to a Friend

and I think, though I'm not sure, that the writing is more rat-tat-tat, more metallic when I type. Like nickels dropping into a slot. Or brittle, perhaps; yes, brittle, that's it. What's more boring than someone trying to be witty? But does not this beginning in medias res heighten the immediacy? Say yes, oh yes. Do these questions, rhetorical or not, make you feel more involved in this letter? I certainly hope so. That is what we strive for, involvement. Be my friend and go with my flow; maybe what I really want to tell you will seep out.

At least you are being spared the sight of my handwriting, the imitations and alterations which make up my lovely hand, being shot to hell. For since grammar school have I copied teachers' handwritings, the ones with interesting styles. Who had style? Virginia Copenhaver (and she was left-handed), Jane Lashmit, Lillian Foil (left-handed, too, who made her capital Is like printed ones, two lean slashes). Is it true that left-handed people are smarter? There were others. But enough. By seventh grade I could have signed hall passes and gotten away with it. The styles, the women are so stirred in my ink that even I can't separate them. They run into a scrawl, clumsy, without distinction, with no character at all.

Next to fresh strawberries and cream I can think of nothing more extravagant than India ink, a quill pen, and thick sheets of ivory one-hundred-percent rag. Think of the angular, slanting hand of Rebecca in DuMaurier's novel, of the tall, sloping R of her signature which dwarfs the other letters. If I had my pen I would sign her name for you now. But this black type is all right against the white, isn't it? The contrast is nice, don't you think? And by all means let us have contrast, let us have contrast. Individuality, eccentricity. Be a character rather than try to be one. When I'm eighty-five I hope I run, wear red sneakers, and yell when I want to.

At the sound of the tone the time will be one thirty-seven and one-half du matin. There is something about scattering French expressions through a letter which lends a certain je ne sais quoi to the language, n'est-ce pas? I knew you would agree. We could be celestial sisters I have no doubt, no doubt at all. I'm waiting for my body temperature to drop to its lowest point. It happens, you know, around four in the a.m. I read that somewhere, probably in Family Weekly. What you are doing at this very moment I have no idea. At home, sleeping in your own bed, your belly warm and full with your mother's good food? Or still awake, talking with Liliias, your best-friend-since-the-first-grade whom you hadn't seen since the semester began? Waiting for your own body temperature to drop? Were those flowers you were carrying to the bus station for her? The flowers that you waved to me as I yelled, threw up my hand, coasted by on my bike what a simple coincidence don't let me fool you. Whether or not I will send this to you is, of course, problematic. That word, problematic, is said by Victor Lazlo (Paul Henreid) to Captain Renault (Claude Rains) in Casablanca. Have you seen that masterwork of the American cinema? Come, come, you must have. At the free flicks? On channel 5? Much of my vocabulary I learn from films and plays. From Batman I learned what "dynamic duo" means. You laugh, no? Ah well...

Now I bet you're wondering how many lines of this opus I have stolen from plays, from movies, from the back of the Shredded Wheat box: Don't worry: I plagiarize myself as well. I am not discriminating. No doubt many of these lines have appeared or will appear in slightly different form in other letters. And why not? I get a good line, I stick with it. The common alternative to an original mind and even that is a quotation. String enough of them together with "and," "but," "indeed," and "moreover" and my wit would seem to shimmer all the time. Add gestures culled from countless sources and we would have a tour de force, a tour de force — while I, my dear, am forced to tour. (I thank you, Mrs. Patrick Campbell.) Do let us read together some evening. A play would be nice, or some piece we could take turns reading. Does "we" sound too much like a team? "When did we start being a team?" you could ask, but please don't. May I stay?

Round two: Thank you for calling me last night. Actually, I had tried to call you manymany times from about 9:15 to maybe after 10:001 (oh shit) to ask if you wanted to go out, get coffee, a beer, cream soda, anything. I wasn't thirsty at all. I wanted to see you, talk to you, listen to you talk and needed it so badly that even though you might say no I was willing to risk it. I have no friend like you and can you tell the ribbon is dying, just a minute, please...yes, and of course you don't mind this nylon cartridge, do you, since it is all I have left even though the film ribbon "prints with unmatched sharpness and clarity?" Good girl. Take one butterfly twirl. Yes you may. And to get back to the mainline, anger and anguish were seething in me and let's put in a word for hurt feelings and a broken heart. (Authentic anguish? I'm not sure; I had the feeling I could have turned it off at will but perhaps such control comes from years of being the daughter who doesn't cry at every sad commercial.) I can't stand it, I can't stand the histrionics the girl displays there's nothing quite as good as feeling sorry for yourself oh yes, she is onto herself and please no cracks that that is the problem, that I need someone else onto me, on top of me, for although you think of me as a loaded libido I am no beast even though I do many times follow my instincts, for I trust them, otherwise I would not be writing this now. (You may draw one breath, deeply, from the diaphragm.) The Power and the Passion, yes. But friendship — undiluted, deeply felt — will probably mean more to me in the long and short run. In fact I know it will. And so this is what I wanted to tell you last night but couldn't:

Two weeks ago, a Friday, I'm sitting in the Pit behind a cardtable, selling food for the imagination while beside me a group of cupcakes are selling cupcakes to finance some worthy midwinter beach trip, and I'm selling more copies of that damn arts journal than anyone has before me, you can check the record (for you see I am competitive, too; did you know it?).

A guy named Russell was supposed to relieve me at one o'clock but he's late and even though my racquetball court reservation began fifteen minutes ago and racquetball court reservations are impossible to get (Ever play by yourself, singing? Gregorian chants echo nicely.), I don't care because today she is on campus (A special committee meeting? faculty meeting? The why doesn't concern me, is unimportant.) and I might climb the seven flights to her studio to see her. But before I do and as I'm pulling one smooth bill from the palm of another sucker, here she comes across the brick, accompanied by your friend Miss Porter who has since left for regions unknown in some 13th-Street loft in NYC ideal for gallery, studio, or workshop and whom I never really knew and may never see again and too late now I'm realizing my loss. But the point is that here she is coming, whom I haven't seen or spoken to since that Wednesday last May of my final life-drawing critique, the morning when I was about to leave this place for summer sand in my shoes. Then, between swallows of apple juice, she had told me that my drawings were good, especially the gestures and contours, that she liked my enthusiasm, that I had earned her respect and affection. There is nothing I would rather earn. Her "good" means more to me than anyone else's "check-plus, check-plus, superb." All summer that shot of adrenalin sent me flying. Every time I picked up a pencil, stick of charcoal, even Crayola, I thought of her, wondered if she somehow knew, could somehow feel me working. I imagined her at supper, passing the cantaloupe, telling her husband about this particular student she had had spring semester.

And now, across the Pit she's coming toward me in those same little-boy boots that were falling apart last spring, closer, now closer, she points, waves, the boots are still falling apart, I say, "Hey, ya like pictures?" and can you hear the laugh, do you hear her laugh, deep, potent, unmistakable? She buys a book, likes the cover, is the inside good, Crazy Girl? I ask, "How's the leave, Queen Bee?" Just buzzin' along as Russell comes, relieves, get up, going our way? no? oh, going to be on campus Thursday a week, love to chat and with that buzzes off and I'm left with a hum in my ears.

Does this disgust you, embarrass you, make you embarrassed for me? "How old are you? Twenty, almost twenty-one, and still act this crazy/goofy inside?" Surely you must think this. What is it? Crush? Infatuation? Adolescent passion for a teacher in a grown-up? When will you grow up? But what's wrong with passion, with love for a teacher? Her energy, humor, intelligence overwhelm me. The intensity of body and mind in the same place. She lives with both: her heart as well as her head. The things she's given me, opened up for me, how she's helped me open myself, to feel, "Hey, I'm important. I make a difference. I have a chance." How should I respond to her passion but with my own? And so I live for the coming Thursday when I'll see her again on which day I sit on the sunny steps of Lenoir Hall, eating half a peanut-butter sandwich, sucking the sour pulp off the seeds of a pomegranate, staining my fingers with pomegranate juice, hoping she'll just happen to walk by. Or if she doesn't, I'll climb the seven flights to Valhalla to talk a few minutes, to take away with me some of her energy but before I do any of that I'm standing at the bottom of the sunny steps with arms raised, palms flat on head, talking with red-haired Maria who has just introduced me to two French girls she knows, Simone and Michele, whose names I remember for no good reason at all and here she comes, wearing "respectable" clogs and a corduroy jumper and really her legs are fairly short as she sashays, sashays, all the time smiling at students milling about and she sees me no-yes-no I wave, say, "Hello, Thing," poke her arm as she passes, "how ya doing?" "Hello, Ducky," she says and with no pause sashays by and away and past me and leaves me tasting empty air and I've never hated anyone so much in my life.

So that is why I was so angry/hurt.
Angry at her damn smug, self-satisfied smiling wonder-woman ways and being left without so much as an "I'm in a hurry" or "Gotta run" or "I cannot talk to you now." Angry at myself for getting so excited, looking forward to seeing her, opening myself to hurt, for thinking that she would ever pass the cantaloupe and be thinking of me, for being so damn sensitive about this whole sick sad stupid sicksick feeling. What does she fear — that my love would devour her? She'll never know what she's meant to me, how she's helped me, not just with my art, but with seeing and feeling as a human being so that, given one wish, I would wish to become one open pore.

What did I want? Teacher? Mother? Mentor? Friend? She affects everyone this way so why should I think I mean anything special to her? When she is fifty I will be twenty-three. When I am her age she will probably be dead. There is no way I can ever catch up with her. I hate her; I love her. But no matter how much I care for someone there are always degrees which separate us, limits which force me back into my own thin skin. Never again trust so much, love so much that I lick the palm once too often, for that palm will turn and fling that love back in my face.

Oh my friend, isn't correspondance a delight, a rare pleasure? (And that is no erratum; my letters do seem to dance, do they not?) All my life I've wanted to be a rare friend and a darlin' ~~man/woman~~ child. I think my body temperature has just reached its lowest point.

On a summer evening six months after my second birthday I lay on a cool sheet, my mother sitting on the bed beside me, her palm stroking my bare stomach, her hand rising and falling with my breathing. "I love you," I said. She kissed my belly, her lips cool as a mushroom cap, and said, "I love you, too." My beloved friend, I love you two and a half.

CHAIN LINK FENCE

Well there's rags-to-riches sorority bitches with their noses up in the air
dirty bars and jacked-up cars and more freaks than a county fair there's a funny boy tryin' to grab my toy, and my pocket just got picked this town is weird, prob'ly should be feared, and somethin' in my brain just clicked
I remember when Jesse Helms said they oughta' put a chain link fence around Chapel Hill.

Here come the jocks gettin' off their rocks beatin' kids up in the street
and the long-haired fellow sittin' next to me's got some pot that can't be beat in the air that smell that's familiar as hell I recall from my mountain time and the girl over there with the long dark hair says "I'll shake yours if you shake mine."

There's Freddy Frat the real cool cat, boppin' along in his uniform he's all decked out, without a doubt he's conforming to the norm.
Young Frankie Frosh, he says, "oh gosh," takes a tour of the campus grounds
he turns his head with every word that's said, catchin' every sight and sound.
Here they come again, those Alumni men, drivin' the Lincolns down the road
somebody's dad remembers times he had, recalls all the wild oats he sowed
but now times have changed, things rearranged they do things different than they did back then his daughter wants to come here, her old man has fear that she'll have as much fun as him
I remember when Jesse Helms said they oughta' put a chain link fence around Chapel Hill.

We got the Asheboro Zoo, and we got Chapel Hill, too.
Everybody in Chapel Hill says they oughta' put a chain link fence around Jesse Helms.

APPLE GIL FESTIVAL

Welcome to our town
where citizens feed on the dreams of clowns and presidents.
Stay as long as you wish.
Join in the dance! Sing your part of the contrapuntal melody, let the rhythms of your heart become the language of your soul.
You needn't feel uneasy here;
in Chapel Hill, we are all friends.

On March 16, thousands of colorful balloons were released from the steps of Wilson Library to open Chapel Hill's biennial Fine Arts Festival. The Festival sparked with diversity as local and international artists brought dance, drama, music, and literature to campus, and creative energies merged in springtime celebration.

Rosalind Newman and Dancers shared their talents with students and townspeople in "A Day for Dancing," after a Friday night performance in Memorial Hall. Feminist artist Nancy Spero lectured at Ackland Art Museum on Sunday afternoon. That night, festive souls joined the Society for Creative Anachronisms at the Blair House for a Renaissance Feast, where costumed guests danced and reveled into the wee hours.

The Carrboro Art School hosted photography, batik, and sculpture exhibitions, while back on campus Vietnam veteran Tim O'Brien read from his prize-winning novel, Going After Cacciato. Kevin O'Morrison's Ladyhouse Blues, featuring Martha Nell Hardy of UNC's Speech Department, opened in the coffeehouse atmosphere of the Great Hall and played throughout the week.

Jonas Mekas smiled at the balloon-filled audience as he introduced his series of experimental films, and a curious crowd led by Donna Henes stood eggs on end and chanted late into the night at the Vernal Equinox Celebration. Renowned composer Lukas Foss packed Hill Hall Thursday with his splendid presentation of "Elytres," and a small but intent group braved the rain to see Cedric Messina's videotape production of Shakespearean drama Friday night. Audiences drew to Memorial Hall on Saturday to see "Touch," a Carrboro mime troupe, and to Ackland to see Hans Haacke's social art presentation.

By Sunday night, many of the balloons seen bobbing across campus throughout the week had softened and drifted to the warming earth. In the new Paul Green Theatre, Ntozake Shange, black American poet, read selections from her award-winning book as the last of the scattered balloons floated aimlessly across the dark sky.

black arts festival

The Black Student Movement revived the annual Black Arts Festival this spring, with a weeklong celebration of black culture and the Afro-American heritage. Featured this year was actress Cicely Tyson, in an evening of poetry and conversation. Lectures and seminars were conducted by art historian Rosalind Jeffries, poet Lance Jeffers, Herman Jones of The Laverne Players (who presented Othello during their residency on campus), and UNC student Brooksie Harrington, director of the Choral Ensemble. Also on campus for evening performances were the New York Community Choir, the Bowie State Dancers, and the Ebony Dance Theatre from Durham.

Friday night brought a talent extravaganza, "From the Silence Comes the Sound, the Dance and the Song." The Silence was mime Billy Jaye Banner, founder of the N.Y. company Mime-O-graph. The Sound, the Dance, and the Song were provided by Carolina's Ebony Readers, Opeyo Dancers, and BSM Gospel Choir. To conclude the festival, students and members of the community held a Soul Food Taste Fair and "Do Your Own Thing," a talent show which gave participants an opportunity to display talents uncovered in the workshops throughout the week.

THE CAROLINA UNION ACTIVITIES BOARD

A student organization comprised of twelve committees, the Activities Board is responsible for programming Carolina Union activities. Under Union President Geoffrey Hoare, the Board was expanded this year to include the Residence Hall Liaison Committee and the Human Relations Committee. Hoare's work also included the introduction of a Concerts Advisory Group to work with the Board of Directors in scheduling major concerts.

CONCERTS ADVISORY GROUP

This new addition to the Union Activities Board keeps up with current trends and tastes in music. The group's discussions with and suggestions to the Board led to the scheduling of the following concerts during the year:

Little Feat
Chick Corea and Gary Burton
Leon Redbone
Livingston Taylor and Pablo Cruise
Chuck Mangione
David Bromberg Band
Dixie Dregs

SOCIAL COMMITTEE

Que Pasa was the title of the coffeehouse that opened the year for Bill Steigerwald's Social Committee. This was followed by dances, casino nights, and lunchtime programs in the Pit throughout the remainder of the year. One of the committee's most successful productions was a series of concerts which began in Chase Cafeteria under the title Southern Comfort.

RECREATION COMMITTEE

Massage, yoga, and wine appreciation are some of the topics taught in this committee's Special Interest classes. Two sessions of short courses were offered this year under Chairperson Brian Goray. The committee also sponsored a billiards demonstration by expert Paul Gerni, and sent the men's and women's bowling teams, the chess team, the bridge team, and the College Bowl team to regional competition.

SPECIAL PROJECTS COMMITTEE

Fifty teams — the greatest number ever at UNC — were brought together by Jack McManus and his committee for four weeks of College Bowl competition. Other "special projects" included a variety of events from backgammon to hypnosis.

Gil Eagles, hypnotist and ESP expert
Backgammon and Bridge Tournament
Scrub-Board Slim, the Side-Show Man
Ken Feit, Itinerant Fool
Carousel of Time, a multimedia concert
An Evening with Don Woodard

RESIDENCE HALL LIAISON COMMITTEE

"What to Do When You Are Closed Out of a Dormitory" was one presentation organized by this new committee under Chairperson Nik Ticic. The liaison committee was created to work with the Residence Hall Association, especially in South Campus programming. The committee also provided an outdoor band concert for the Spencer/Triad/Old Well area in the fall.

VIDEOTAPE COMMITTEE

A six-week series of "canned tapes" was produced by this committee under Verna Gates and shown in the Union daily (and in dorms, fraternities, and sororities). Verna took over for first semester Chairperson Pat Peek, who directed the committee in developing and using the Union's videotape equipment to make promotional tapes.

PERFORMING ARTS COMMITTEE

This committee books touring shows and sponsors student productions to promote music, dance, and drama on campus. Under first semester's Chairperson Brenda Jernigan and second semester's Chairperson Gina Steed, ticket sales increased and student attendance at performances improved significantly. The committee hosted the following events on campus:

The Chapel Hill Concert Series:

Jorge Morel, guitarist
Music from Marlboro
Beaux Arts Trio
Bulgarian Dance Ensemble

North Carolina Symphony:

Eugene Istomin
Catherine Tait
Pops Concert
Dizzy Gillespie Quartet

Triangle Dance Guild:

North Carolina Dance Theatre
Paul Taylor Dance Company
Dan Wagener and Dancers
Minnesota Dance Theatre

Broadway on Tour:

California Suite
The Wiz
The Sound of Music
Your Arms Too Short to Box with God

Sound & Silence (Paul Winter Consort & Keith Berger, mime)

Harry Blackstone Jr. Magic Show
The Barber of Seville (Charlotte Opera Co.)

Romeo and Juliet (The Acting Co.)

Kevin O'Morrison's Ladyhouse Blues
Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (with Lab Theatre)

Leonard Feather, jazz expert
Southern Grassroots Folk Festival

CAROLINA FORUM COMMITTEE

With a diversity of personalities and topics — from Russian poetry to a black American actress' dramatic readings — Al Jowdy's Forum Committee presented a successful and popular schedule of speakers, Classroom visits, media interviews, dinners, and receptions were arranged by the committee to promote campus-wide exposure for each guest speaker.

Frederic Storaska on "How to Say No to A rapist"

Fred Harris
Andrei Voznesensky
Madalyn Murray O'Hair
Betty Williams
Cicely Tyson

FILM COMMITTEE

$1 "Super Fridays" and full week film festivals added to the variety in the committee's "Free Flick" schedule. Under Chairperson Andrew Fair, live piano accompaniment for silent films and post-film discussions were introduced into the committee's programming. The attendance of over 45,000 people indicates the success of festivals and films.

PUBLICITY COMMITTEE

Cube displays, banners, and radio, television, and newspaper announcements were put to use by Chairperson Rusty Schroeder and his committee in publicizing Union activities throughout the community.

HUMAN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

Dealing mainly with the issues of sexism, gay rights, and black/white relations, this committee was created this year to develop a better understanding of human relations through workshops and discussions. One of its most successful programs was "Race-to-Race, Face-to-Face," a three day forum dealing with the problems of interracial cooperation and communication. Under Chairperson George Friday, the committee began the year with an "Outreach mart" — a presentation for students in leadership positions (especially in residence halls, fraternities, and sororities) to learn about human relations programs on campus. Presentations on mental health, human sexuality, and drug abuse were also sponsored by this committee.

Senior Panic Week
Aspects of Human Sexuality
Emerging from Expectations,
Limits to Personal Growth
Race-to-Race, Face-to-Face
A Christmas Party — the Responsible Use of Alcohol
Tradition, Change, and Sexuality

CURRENT AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Soon after the Camp David Summit, Egyptian and Israeli representatives were brought together in a panel discussion at UNC by the committee, in co-operation with the international Student Center. Under Chairperson Chris O'Connell, the program opened a year of speakers and panels designed to increase student awareness and understanding of current world issues. Following this presentation, the committee, under the leadership of Martin Gonzales, concentrated its efforts on programs dealing with issues in the Third World.

Crisis in Nicaragua
Mrs. Orlando L'Atelier on the "Chilean Situation"
Maceo Dixon on the "Struggle for Liberation in South Africa"

GALLERY COMMITTEE

Art displays, films, lectures, and demonstrations were organized by this committee under Chairperson Jeanne Cooke during the first semester and Chairperson Mike Haire during the second semester. Co-operating with the committee, such groups as the Carolina Indian Circle, the Carolina Gay Association, the Muslim Student Association, Alpha Phi Omega, B'hai Faith, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, and the Fine Arts Festival also presented displays in the South Gallery of the Union.

BETTY WILLIAMS

"War destroys everything it touches — if it doesn't kill the body, it certainly kills the mind. We have gotten to the stage where it's peace in Ireland or Ireland in pieces."

"The hardest thing to get anyone to do anything about is peace and nonviolence. I can't be responsible for what happened yesterday, but I can work to build for what will happen in the future. We have got to change what's wrong in our society by nonviolent means."

Betty Williams was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1976 for her efforts in creating and leading the massive Peace People movement to end the violence and destruction in Northern Ireland.

"Today's practice of democracy falls far short of the ideal. Only half our people participate even to the small extent of voting. If people were more active, the government would better reflect their views. I believe a democracy ought to be a place where people elect their leaders, yes, but I also believe the government should reflect the will of the people."

Fred Harris, former Senator from Oklahoma, campaigned for President in 1971 on a "No More Bullshit" platform. A proponent of tax reform and the redistribution of wealth, Harris has earned a reputation as a populist in his war against special privileges for the rich.

"Don't misplace your values and get hung up on color. White supremacy is dangerous and black supremacy is dangerous. You are looking at a man who never stoops low enough to hate anybody."

"There was a time when blacks couldn't attend this university. But somebody lived, and somebody suffered, and somebody died so that you might be sitting here tonight."

"You've got to carry something up there (to school) with you. If you don't, you won't bring anything back. You can't just ride through. We think we must make an A to be good. But you can take an A out into the world and make a nothing. Whatever field you go into, be prepared to defend it. Be prepared to defend what you stand on."

"Lose if you must, but never lose the faith. Never let it get so dark that you can't promote a song."

"A black feminist movement would be rooted in the cultural needs of the black community. I'd like to see greater self-respect and activism and responsibility on the part of black women."

"What a lot of people mean when they say 'equality' is for black people to become white people. I don't think there is one general American culture. The fascinating thing about America is its cultural diversity. One of the great tasks of the next century is to learn to tolerate and benefit by differences."

"The imperative is clear: either we will make history or remain the victims of it."

"The churches own part or all of Borden Milk, Burlington Industries, Firestone, Hertz, and Westinghouse. They've cheated you out of so much tax money just because of their tax-exempt status."

"In New Orleans and Cincinnati, the churches own whorehouses. I can't figure out why that's religious."

"Churches get $9 billion a year in those little wicker baskets. With $9 billion a year we might eliminate VD. With $9 billion a year we could fight cancer. With $9 billion a year we could ease the slum conditions."

"In 1968, the American people elected a president who began a national nullification of the needs of the needy." Nixon and his administration were guilty of "pious platitudes and self-righteous swinishness." But "Nixon's evil genius could not turn back the movement of 200 years." In 1976, Carter "seemed singularly committed to closing the gap between the shadow and the substance of the American dream. Two years later, we discover a man who knew the words to our hymns but not the numbers on our paychecks."

"When I stopped seeing my mother with the eyes of a child, I saw the woman who helped me give birth to myself."

"We are the loving sex. People count on us for comfort, nurturing warmth. We hold the world together with the constant availability of our love when men would tear it apart with their needs for power. We feel incomplete alone, inadequate without a man, devalued outside marriage, defensive without children. We are being loved for being part of a relationship, for our function — not for ourselves."

For over thirty years the Department of Dramatic Art has envisioned an additional on-campus facility for theatrical productions. Those dreams were realized when the multi-million dollar Paul Green Theatre opened on September 29th, 1978. The theatre, named for Chapel Hill playwright Paul Green, was christened with a presentation of Richard Wright's Native Son. Green and Wright had collaborated on the stage version of the play in 1940. For the theatre opening, Ellen Wright, wife of the late author, flew from her Paris home to help revise the play for contemporary audiences.

Paul Green, winner of a Pulitzer prize, graduated from UNC in 1921 and is noted for his outdoor drama The Lost Colony. In his opening address, he expressed his hopes that the new theatre will stimulate and promote dramatic art at the University.

THE GREAT BALLOON ASCENSION

There on the top step of Lenoir Hall, Weezie Carmichael sits blowing soap bubbles over the unsuspecting heads of the noon Pit Crowd. She is red-haired and pretty. She has freckles in her irises and the smallest ears of any full-grown ears I have ever seen. Spring Break, when her mother saw her new haircut and said, "You aren't going to wear it pulled back like that, are you?" Weezie just smiled and tugged an earlobe. When she sings (which is often), her voice sounds alternately like a circular saw and a porpoise gurgling underwater. Let it buzz. I am in love with her. "What's doing?" I ask, shrugging off my pack. "Messages, messages!" she says and lets fly a lopsided bubble which floats lazily for a moment, then pops. "In fifteen minutes or less I've heard two pages worth. This place has better talk than Glam-O-Rama Laundromat. You won't believe the connections. Listen!" As I sit beside her, she flips open her notebook and, punctuating the lines with swipes of her bubble stick, reads:

I used to be paranoid.
Where are my arms?
You never know, Alice, it just might be a fluke.
Are you talking about Art or taxidermy?
It's an idea.
You have to massage.
Is that the practice coffin?

(Here she swirls a hook-shaped stream of bubbles for a question mark.)

I must explain. Weezie's ears are the size of bottlecaps, it's true; but they pick up words as a magnet attracts filings. Erection of the ears, I call it. Ever since she read and believed Gertrude Stein, who said that messages are being sent all the time, Weezie has been listening in. The G-bus, Roses, the third floor of Caldwell Hall, lines at the K & W, the Coffee Shop, and the post office, upstairs in the Union or the basement of Wilson stacks, Fowler's, the backroom of Kwikie Take-out, the weight room at Woollen Gym, and Carroll Hall before Free Flicks — nowhere is safe. Weezie went so far as to learn that what she was doing was "eaves" and not "easedropping," the way she'd always pronounced it.

One Thursday she skipped Physics lab and went straight to the school-supply aisle of Sutton's Drug Store to buy one wide-ruled writing tablet, 60 sheets, with Egyptian gods walking the way Egyptian gods do across the cover. For days now she's been threatening to side-strut Egyptian style across the South Building steps . . .

. . . so he got Ritz crackers and threw them out the window.

Who understands Paul?

Just give him something to eat: he'll leave. I could die of buttermilk.

So who's having hysterics?

"Rutabaga, rutabaga," she gurgles, delighted. "And I swear they're authentic. Free for anyone with the ears to hear them . . .

It's not the bizarre things.

There's the incest.

I'm taking that, too.

"Even if I tried, I couldn't make these up."
I zoom in, nose-to-nose. "Even with your deep wells?"
She blinks; the freckles seem to widen.
"Reading them is like waking up with a dream hangover." She scribbles. "Good, that's good."

"You can't quote yourself."

In mid-air her pencil hangs for a moment, then dives again. "And that," she says, "is even better."

As she tunes her antennae back in, I open the DTH, looking up occasionally to see who's passing. Used to be I'd pretend that every tenth thing that passed I'd have to marry: woman, man, dog. This exercise tended to keep my eyes open. Weezie and I glared at each other half a semester before we finally became friends.

"Anything in there?" she asks.

"The Druids are going to bring back the sun, Don Woodard remembers his senior prom, Snoopy is practicing French."

"I'm waiting for the day he learns Il y a beaucoup de personnes sur le balcon."

"There're a lot of people on the balcony'?"

"Literally, yes, but idiomatically it means, 'That girl's really stacked'." She mimicks Louis Jourdin lechery, slides a dollar bill into my hand, then coos, "Get me a Tallahassee Tuna Going South' and I'll do my Marlene Dietrich imitation for you. From the Pit Stop, not the Pine Room. There's been an outbreak of rabid raccoons down there."

I rise to go; with reedy strains of "Lili Marlene" and a stream of bubbles, she sends me gliding over crushed milk cartons and kamikaze bees into the Pit.

There's a lot going on.

The College Republicans are throwing frisbees instead of cream pie, an activity co-sponsored by the Crew Club; Ring the Rower and the Ship of State is Yours. Or at least a goddamn canoe. Marianne the Bellydancer vies with Sharon the Bean Queen to get Harold Schmucked, but Harold goes for Crayon the Dog who, in turn, prefers pumpkin pie from a fork. Well, as my grandmother used to say, "Everyone to his own notion."

When I come out of the Pit Stop, a guy from WXYC is introducing the musicians who are tuning up. I glide back to Weezie who has since transcribed a page and a half's worth of messages.

"Ever wonder why do the Heathen rage?" she asks as I hand her half a sandwich. "Because it's there? To get to the other side?"

I lick filling off the edges of my half, pretending I'm tasting the groove of Weezie's ear. "I've got an English professor who says it's to hold their pants up."

A loudspeaker squawks.

"We have ARRIVED!" the Clef Hangers chime in eight-part harmony. North Tower enters with a crescendo of "Rang, dang, ringy-DANG-DO-DA" and Crayon leaves his pie to howl a high B-flat.

"What's going on?" Weezie says, her Tallahassee Tuna going down.

"Reminds me of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir," I say, "or maybe the Gong Show."

"I was thinking of a revival," she says, and at that moment the BSM Gospel Choir enters, swaying in black robes to a drumbeat set up by the Carolina Indian Circle.

I brush crumbs off my jeans, swat a bee with the newspaper, wondering how Union Activities ever thought of this.

Weezie, whose antennae are quivering violently, stares transfixed. Maybe she's hoping the noise will make her ears grow.

That would be a miracle.

Now the Nee Niny Band enters, the flutist's notes dancing high above the din, skittering contrapuntally to the rhythm tapped out by the Bean Queen on her triangle. I wish I'd brought my kazoo.

"Music," Weezie says, "is the cosmic consciousness. Kind of like a spider and an angel."

I start to tell her that she's been eavesdropping too long, but before I can, the squawk of a megaphone interrupts me.

"THIS IS GOD COMING AT YA!" the voice barks, and around the corner steps Stephen the Prophet, arms raised, accompanied by brothers of Kappa Alpha Psi, whose heels and walking canes click in a 2/4 rhythm. Following them, several robed and hooded figures chant, "No nukes, no nukes." Have the Druids, I wonder, joined the Kudzu Alliance?

"Look," Weezie says, "Stephen's not as skinny as he used to be. How can you gain weight eating nothing but air?"

"Maybe somebody gave him a Tar Heel Burger. Plus the roaches — more protein than you pay for."

Another megaphone squalls, "Get out, Shah! Get out, Shah!" and as all the voices crescendo to fortissimo from the opposite side of the Cube struts Jed the Evangelist.

I say, "Is this the Pillsbury Bake-off?"

Louder and louder the music plays, the rhythm changing to a frenzied 6/8 time. Higher and higher, faster and faster, the triangle clanging, the Bellydancer whirling, Crayon howling, Stephen pointing, the flute skittering, the drums pounding, all the voices lifting, pulsing — Weezie yells, "I just want to be breathless, till I pass out or something."

Then BOOM. SILENCE.

Tap, tap; trickle, trickle.
Someone steps lightly into the Pit. No one says a word.

"Balloons," Weezie whispers, "he's bringing balloons."

The man spins once, slowly, eyeing the crowd, balloons — bunches of them — in both hands. I wonder why he doesn't float away.

"I AM THE FRUIT LOOPS PROPHET," he says, his voice booming even without a megaphone.

At this — or do I imagine it? — Weezie's ears grow bigger.

Slowly, very slowly, he hands out the balloons: one to Jed, one to Stephen, one to each person in the Pit, even Crayon. He intones: "Inspiro, inspirare, inspiravi, inspiratus," then shouts, "My body is in the Pit, but my soul is in the stars!"

A clap — then Prophet, balloons, and Pit People shoot into the sky, leaving only a faint buzz of voices.

Weezie, her face turned skyward, sweeps her bubble stick, sending up a long stream.

"This place is a zoo," she says.

I kiss her ear and ask, "What do you like best?"

"Everything." She smiles. "Everything."

CLICHE MEMORY

I found love in Chapel Hill
Passion in the spring
Don't you know it's just like me
(it's such a corny thing)
But I guess the Time was Right
You played the Sun and I played the Moon
Oh the Sky was Bright

Fireworks split open in the middle of the night.
Who needs the Fourth of July when Every Day's a Celebration
Lord it sure was fun
as long as it went on
At least that's what you tell yourself
Cliche Memory

If you're like me, prone to looking back and roses fall out withered from the pages of your scrapbook you're likely to forget the blues you had put out the pain and pick up the poem about the Good you Gained

Just when you think you have it figured out why everything must break and fall in tattered pieces
The pattern fails
and the mystery prevails.
There must be more here than
Cliche Memory

One for You and One for Me
All's fair in Love, or so they say but sayings have a way of wearing thin.
Let's keep love
pure as we can
free of the words
we've too often heard

Elaine and Rupert

... love your canastas. Life or death situation. Let's play it by ear. Poopsie

Elaine: If you want to see your antique handkerchief alive again, bring 200 joyas, in small bills, to the Old Well, Friday at six o'clock. Be there, aloha. Please.

Hot Stuff, Sloppy, Baby, Blue Eyes, and Rubber Ducky: Wish we were still in the "Magic Kingdom" ...

Rupert pushed his way into the lobby of the "Y" one Friday afternoon. The building was dark and he found the silence strange. His only experience with the building was on Tuesday and Thursday mornings when it creaked with energy while he elbowed past students toward his honeybun and coffee, his eyes still moist with sleep. Now the snack bar was locked and empty. Rupert pressed his nose against the glass door, his face illuminated by the neon lights within.

With his nose against the glass, Rupert exhaled and took a step back to regard the shape of the condensation his breath had created.

"A masterpiece," he chuckled, "What symmetry — to produce such protentious parabolas from one proboscis is positively prodigious."

He looked at his watch. "Ten of six, hoo boy."

His heartbeat quickened and he took a deep breath, bent over from the waist and touched his chest lightly with his fingertips.

"There, there fella — calm down, this is gonna be fun."

He looked at his watch and smiled wanly. He took a step, realized that he had no destination in mind and checked the time again.

Rupert was tall and thin, graced with an expressive face and large brown eyes. He wore a brown felt hat tipped rakishly over one eye and a winestain on his flannel shirt.

His lips broadened into a wide smile and his arms rose dramatically above his head.

"If you prick us do we not bleed?" He wheeled, addressed his reflection in the glass door and boomed, "Hath not I organs, dimensions, senses . . . passions?"

He quickly recoiled from the sound of his voice and fancied that he heard an echo. He wondered if anyone was upstairs. Rupert approached the steps and looked furtively above as he strained his ear against the air. Then he began to climb. He'd never been upstairs before.

No exultation upon reaching the top. The stairs emptied into a large room ringed by a series of locked doors, with the names of several campus organizations printed on them. A DTH was spilled crazily on the floor, and trash was strewn everywhere. Rupert grimaced at the thought of students purchasing meagre lunches only to rush upstairs to nibble at processed pimento cheese sandwiches. He could see them lined against the walls hidden behind "Strike Three" or "How to Create an Anti-Social Comic Strip," then springing up to scurry off to class, their tails tucked securely behind them.

Saddened, he turned to go downstairs. He realized as he did that he could see the Old Well from a window at the landing. He grinned and chose to observe the terrain before he went out to meet her. He crouched by the window and lit a cigarette.

"I'll bet she doesn't come. Hell, I don't even know if she read the damn thing."

Rupert removed a plain white handkerchief from his back pocket and examined what was written there: "One certified, bonafied, genuine, one-of-a-kind, unique, honest-to-goodness, no doubt about it, antique hanky."

* Approved by the A.H.A.A. (Antique Handkerchief Association of America).

He folded it carefully and returned it to his pocket. He hoped she wouldn't be angered by his substitute. He had looked for the handkerchief she lost at the party, and that counted for something. Rupert glanced at his watch; it was nearly six. No one was at the Old Well. He stood up, fetched the newspaper and descended the stairs. Outside he paused and tossed his cigarette, after snatching a final drag. He crossed Cameron Avenue slowly and stepped up to the fountain of the Old Well.

He felt very old.

He stepped back and read the plaque on the fountain. "The Old Well, renovated by the class of '21 and the University in 1954." The feeling passed. Four years at Carolina and he had never read that plaque. He considered the number of people who had watered there as he turned to sit on the bench dedicated to the class of '57.

The weathervane on top of South Building pointed northwest.

Rupert strained his neck for any sign of Elaine. She was late. He opened up the newspaper in front of his face and decided that if she did come he was going to give her his best Bogart routine. He pulled his hat down and increased the angle of its rakish tip. He wanted to smoke a cigarette, but he remembered that she didn't like them. He looked around once more, then began to read.

Suddenly he heard a sound to his left. The paper snapped in his hands and his ears burned. Rupert turned his head slowly, let his jaw fall slack and squinted one eye.

"Hello, shweethaat . . . You're late," he lisped.

Elaine stood about ten feet away. She wore blue jeans and a sweatshirt. Lauren Bacall she wasn't, but Rupert liked women who dressed casually. Elaine didn't stutter, shuffle her feet or gesture distractedly with her hands, but her face belied her calm. Her cheeks flashed with radiant embarrassment. She took one step forward, smiled and spoke softly.

"Hello, . . . Um, sorry I'm late."

"Forget it, kiddo. D'ja bring the goods like I tole ja?"

"You mean the joyas? Well, you see I can't afford it. My father just got shook down by Alfredo's boys, and Mom is in the hospital . . . it's her ticker."

Rupert grinned, "Her ticker, huh? So you think you can come here empty handed and just get by on your good looks?"

Elaine sat down on the edge of the bench.

"Well, um, no. Do you have the handkerchief?"

Rupert looked at her. She wanted her handkerchief. He was ashamed that after all this build-up he didn't have the real thing.

He drew the surrogate hanky from his pocket and mumbled, "Sure thing, kiddo, but you'll have to make it up to me."

She took it reluctantly and expressed her surprise and disappointment with a muted exclamation. A moment later she turned it over and read what was written there.

She giggled and looked up at Rupert with a queer smile.

"You misspelled bona fide."

"I'm sorry, I mean I . . ."

"Don't be. I've misspelled bona fide before."

"Not about that. I mean you've probably been waiting to see your beloved antique hanky again, and all I could produce was a poor substitute. You're disappointed — I can tell."

"Not really. But I don't think Granny will fall for this."

"Hide her glasses," Rupert suggested.

"She has perfect eyesight."

"Well, don't hankies usually travel in pairs? I mean maybe you could get the other one from her house and That's true, but you see my grandmother only had one."

"Oh, yeah?"

"Uh huh, she's never needed two. Deviated septum from childbirth," she added in explanation.

They laughed.

"Well, tell me," Rupert paused and looked away, "what are you going to do to repay me?"

"I don't know, what do you have in mind?" Elaine asked a bit more cautiously than she intended.

Rupert stood, faced her and bowed slowly.

"I would sincerely appreciate your company for dinner, my dear." He extended his hand grandly.

Elaine suppressed a laugh and looked up at him coyly.

"Oh, Ruff, you sweet thing, I'd simply love to but . . ." She took his hand and leaned close to him.

"But — what?" he whispered in mock desperation.

"Well, before we're seen in public together, do you think you could take off that dumb hat? I hate guys in hats, besides it makes you look like Humphrey Bogart."

Rupert removed his hat graciously. Elaine took his arm and they walked off toward Sadlocks. After a few steps, Elaine stopped and faced Rupert. He looked down upon her soft features in the gloaming of the September twilight.

"There is one other thing I want to know," she whispered, "What's your name?"

STREET PEOPLE

On Sunday mornings the people on Franklin Street move in a dreamy state of mystery, as if on borrowed propulsion. They move slowly, toward church or breakfast, with no motivation to hurry. At noon the reverent and guilty file out of pews and walk through the columned smile of the church. I often watch them from the line that straggles around the corner of the Coffee Shop. Every service that Franklin Street offers requires some patience, some "line tolerance," except Jim Cannon and the Bag Lady.

One night I dreamed that Cannon proposed to her, sitting on that bench in front of the drug store. The Bag Lady said "yeah" without hesitation, avoiding the stalling blushes of the coquette. In my dream, Jim Cannon was the prince that she patiently awaited on her Franklin Street bench. They got married during Apple Chill, on the stage where the bands perform. Shopkeepers who had watched the Bag Lady's turmoil gathered around the stage, hoping she had finally abandoned her life of loneliness.

Before I heard the Bag Lady say "I do," I woke up, and the dream faded into half-memory, as dreams often do until something brings them back to life. The Sunday of Apple Chill, I walked downtown, but there was no wedding ceremony. The Bag Lady sat on her usual bench in front of Revco, while crowds of visitors invaded her living room. Usually she sits with her head to her chest, the wall of hair guarding her eyes, but that day her head was raised, her hair partially moved to a clump at the side of her face. She memorized every detail that passed by her and eyed me as I pushed through the crowd.

I first tasted Franklin Street on a full stomach and through salty good-bye tears. It was moving day of my freshman year, and my parents, grandparents, sister, and I had just eaten breakfast at the Waffle Shoppe. Inside, the place was packed, and we talked awkwardly, trying to avoid the obvious good-bye remarks of eating well, writing often, being careful on the streets at night. My mother had criticized the flatware; my father had laughed too loud; I hadn't said much. As we stepped into the sunlight, my sister stretched and said, "It looks like half of Chapel Hill sits on the Franklin Street wall to watch the other half pass by."

That first year in Chapel Hill, I don't know which was the major discovery, Carolina Coffee Shop or the townies. I guess I discovered them together. They were always there, the townies, watching us as we stood in lines, their shell-shocked eyes hanging loose from the corners. They weren't laughing at us, but they watched as if they knew or understood something, maybe . . . I'm not sure. I always see them in front of the Presbyterian church, being passive and semicircular and tuned into the ionosphere.

Once, one of them generously offered me a sip of his wine, but I figured it was only a sales pitch for the leather roach clips he was handcrafting. A friend once told me that they are all misunderstood artists. I guess I don't understand either. When they get too drunk, they sleep on the steps of the church. Though I've never seen it, I imagine the minister arriving early on Sunday mornings to rouse them off the steps so that his congregation will have a clear path.

When I walked past them, I turned my head and crossed the street in front of the Coffee Shop. Those were the days when I still looked both ways before stepping into the path of an automobile. I would go to Baskin Robbins and order a double dip of something dark, sweet. I remember that mostly I let it melt into a marshmallowy blob until the pecans floated on top. Then I would head back to Ruffin, remembering not to cross the street again until I reached the post office. I was afraid to confront the townies just as I had been afraid of priests when I was a child. All of them seemed to look over my left shoulder when I was least expecting it.

Last week, I passed NCNB on my way to Spanky's, and there was a line of about twenty people waiting to get money. The guy at the head of the line was pounding out his personalized security number and pounding the bricks. "OH NO," he yelled, "not after I waited all this time. NOT NOW. GIVE ME MONEY!" The machine apologized as politely as it was programmed, but the man walked off, cursing the products of a business major's mind. NCNB is a haven for Carolina business graduates, but then it's hard for anyone to leave Chapel Hill. Ask anyone who works on Franklin Street. From Julian's to the Record Bar, they know.

Spanky's has the best window on Franklin Street. It's not an alien surveillance position because you're a part of the sidewalk, but you still get air conditioning and pitchers of beer. My friend Marta and I used to sit there in the afternoons, and we would watch the sun turn the green in the treetops to yellow. As the sun sets, the yellow passes from the top to the bottom leaves, then slowly, slowly, like Sunday walkers, disappears at the trunk.

We watched people passing in heavy conversation with themselves or with companions. Chapel Hill is the only town where I've seen people converse openly with themselves. We watched and tried to read thoughts from their lips. We put names and past residences and employments on them.

"Look, there's Maureen Handlin, former Home Ec. teacher with the Alamance County school system, recently divorced from Howard and come to town to discover a new outlook on life. See the new sunglasses she bought?"

"Well, that's quite a purposeful walk, but she hasn't tanned over the band mark yet." I said, not really interested in Maureen or her domestic liberation. "You know what I want?" I said abruptly. "I want two attractive gentlemen to pass by this window and, glimpsing our innate beauty, turn around and come join us."

"Oh," she said, "kind of like window shopping? Hey," she said suddenly, "look who's actualizing your fantasy."

I looked up to see two 1970 turn-of-the-decade remnants hitching up turquoise-studded buckles on their Levis and entering through the door. "Don't leave me alone at this table," I said to Marta in my most threatening beer-saturated voice.

"Just pretend we're deaf, mute, and gay," she said. We laughed silently as the two dudes sat down at our table.

"Mind if we sit down?" one of them said.

We sipped our beers.

"How about two more glasses?"

We still sipped dumbly.

"My name is Jake and this here is Tommy." They paused, waiting for reciprocal introductions, but we stared instead. "We work over in Durham, at Duke."

A why-do-we-always-meet-maintenance-men look sprung up between us. We remained silent.

"Now that nobody here is a stranger, tell us about yourselves." The same guy did all the talking while the other looked on, his eyes strained and uncomfortable.

I decided it was time to make a move and tell them something about ourselves. I reached across the table and squeezed Marta's hand, and we looked blissful and euphoric. Finally, the strong silent one spoke.

"Come on, Jake," he said.

They left.

"It's always the man of few words who takes control," Marta said at last. "I read that in Cosmopolitan."

Since Marta revealed this priceless bit of information to me, I have searched both Spanky's and Harrison's for the strong silent type that takes control, but so far my search has been in vain.

The night I asked my friend Gordon to go out with me, I just wanted to drink a quiet pitcher of beer in a dark corner; but Gordon had a different evening planned.

"Come on," he said, "let's go dancing. It's beach night at Purdy's."

"Great, maybe they'll play some New Wave music."

"Okay," he said, "If you'd rather go sit in a corner at Troll's and romanticize about your Janis Ian complex, that's fine with me."

"No, really I'm hungry. Let's eat something first."

"How about moseyin' down to Roy's, paaadner, and rustlin' us up a holster of fries and a branded cheeseburger?"

"Git along little dogey," I said, and so we went.

The corral was crowded at Roy's, so I ordered for both of us. Meanwhile, back at the condiment bar, Gordon was checking out the fixin's.

"Watch out," I warned when I carried over our tray. "Somebody left a hoofprint in the cole slaw."

As I spread a dollop of mayonnaise on my bun, Gordon squeezed horseradish sauce all over his burger. He was sure to develop scar tissue in his throat before the night was over. We ate, and as we went out the door, he breathed, "Happy trails, indeed."

Walking back toward town, we passed a gang of high school guys in the old Belk parking lot, lounging on car hoods and smoking.

Gordon said, "When I was in high school, the place to hang out was the Granville lot. Looks like they've moved down the street."

I hissed, "Shhh! Look who's coming."

Hurrying toward us, head down, came the Bag Lady. Her mukluks squished as she walked, clutching her grocery bags snugly at her sides. We slowed, then split so she could pass between us. Never before had I been so close to her, but before I could nod or smile, she whisked by, pushing the dense gray mat of hair over her eyes. Her long shadow shortened beneath the streetlights.

"Umm," said Gordon. In silence we passed Shoney's, crossed the square, and walked on. The bars were beginning to close, letting out weaving couples who were wondering what to do next, eat or go to bed. A group of townies stood in the gray cast of a TV left running in the window of Foister's, watching the Midnight Special and relating to Wolfman Jack.

"I think I'm going to go to bed," I said, then paused. "Why don't you wait with me till the bus comes?"

"Okay," Gordon said, "but only if I don't have to hold your hand." He was kidding; I wasn't. I really did want to hold his hand. To touch, to press against someone like me. To feel his familiarity.

"But that's the part that's most fun." Playfully I punched his arm and held on.

"Sorry, lady," he said. "Here comes your bus." He shook me off as the bus turned the corner by the Blue Ram. I pulled out my faded bus pass; Gordon started back to his dorm, walking briskly. As I got on the bus, he looked over shoulder and said, "Here's the question of the evening: Where does the Bag Lady sleep when it rains?" He didn't wait for an answer, but turned and kept walking.

BRICKS OF CLAY: A WHITMAN'S SAMPLER

BY Don Woodard

A North Carolina song,
I sing the praises of UNC.
I see the red brick plains, O great busywork, marking our ancestors' paths across the once green leaves of grass.
I see too, like the wing'd eagle soaring,
rising in defiance of our crying voices,
The prices of the Student Stores.
O Scholarship! O Fellowship! O Bullship!

I look out upon the sea of faces heading to their great destinies and destinations,
To English,
To Radiotelevisionmotionpictures,
To Pre-Spring, Eternal Spring, football practice.
I hear the Great Horns,
O Great Horns,
Blowing and anger'd at the chrome and steel autos blocking the massive and solemn trucks come for the Dempsey-Dumpsters.
And Time and Red Tape,
Thou Drop-Add,
Thou "you'll-have-to-go-back-to-Hanes-Hall-for-the-proper-forms,"
Thou motionless, stagnant lines,
O vigil!

I sing of the endangered, the species N-2, N-3:
The once myriad spaces betwixt which our cars
have rest'd,
Now sacrific'd for the gods of Endow'd Libraries,
No Parking, No Parking, No Parking.
When I heard this year the learn'd Administrator,
When he spoke of substantial student fee increases,
When the diagrams and debates pull'd the wool
over my eyes,
And my input was considered not,
I looked up in perfect silence at the calendar,
Come May, come May.

I praise the quick hands of Dudley Bradley,
I curse the bald head of Lefty the Harmless.
And in perfect awe I sing a song of the Dean,
Thou four corners which leave the faint heart still'd,
Thou Kansas twang whose gentle tone could sell
Ford Pintos equip'd with Firestone 500s,
Thou team concept.

I sing of Academia,
The sweeping arms of professors present during their posted office hours,
Be you tenur'd,
Or burning midnight flourescence before the maw
of non-renewal,
Or falling behind the Syllabus with anecdotes of the Great War (sea stories) or my-life-and-times-as-a-kid.

I lift my voice to the lost,
Souls searching the bowels of Wilson Library,
Souls dazed with the fruitful jargon
of Student Affairs,
Souls (O youth and innocence!) tripl'd in the dorms of the South.

I sing of the forth-coming,
Of student body elections (O purpose!),
Of Springfest and the bodies laid prone in a binge,
Of the moment, ever-approaching, dressed in Carolina Blue, when we stand to be recognized in an instant.
O wondrous Bachelor of Arts!

I sing of the Wound-Dressers,
Thou aspirin, thou miracles,
Thou patience when in our blind rage, we unreasonably expect our blood and sweat to be attended within this academic year.

Knowing of my inconsistencies in the Social rites, Still I sing of times this town has and has not made good my evening ventures.
My struggles with women forever shampooing
their hair,
Forever having guests down for the weekend,
Forever having other plans.
O elusive dates!
O eternities wasted, spent shuffling my feet in goodnight-kiss doorways.
And the quest for the bright orb, whose neon flashes "Stroh's, Stroh's," Guides me past the Sam of Silence (O great joke of my freshman year!),
And finds me 'neath the taps of beer, sweet nectar.

Four years!
I consider an out-of-state freshman,
Out of the cradle endlessly rocking,
Fresh from the pageant of high school BMOC,
Staring with wonder at the 20,000,
But a dogwood in the forest immense.
I consider myself.
Where to go, where to go,
And what shall my major be?
Then, in the flash golden that flies through classes
I can no longer recall,
It is the year Senior.
O UNC, be you my placement center,
Be you my meaningless four-year playground,
Be you my holding pattern,
I sing to the Harken'd sound.
O Graduation! O Graduation! O Graduation!

Student Government

Jim Phillips, Student Body President

As Student Body President Jim Phillips finished his inaugural address, one long-time observer of Student Government commented that, "His speech was like asking for chocolate milk in the school cafeteria." Students, faculty members, and administrators alike shared this dismal perception of Student Government's effectiveness. In the eyes of many, Student Government was merely a playground for budding campus politicos.

It was a perception the Phillips Administration sought to change, and did. A year later, even Chancellor Taylor said that, "In the last three years, it seems to me that Student Government moved ahead in terms of students' perception of Student Government becoming stronger and more effective."

Victories on the parking deck issue, extension of the drop period, and the successful conclusion of Springfest, coupled with the renewed vigor of the Honor System and greater structuring of the budgetary process underscored what Student Government had become: a more effective instrument of projecting student opinion into the bureaucratic maze of the University's decision-making process.

Past Student Governments were traditionally involved in administrative decisions, but as the University grew, the administration became an impersonal bureaucracy largely separated from students. "When I came into office," Phillips said, "there was no regular system of student input and few students had ever faced or worked with a University bureaucracy."

This year, under Phillip's direction, Student Government established an understanding of administrative mechanisms. Backed by a strong staff under the direction of Executive Assistants Craig Brown, Stacy Stubbs, and J.B. Kelly, who was overwhelmingly elected to succeed Phillips, Student Government had a significant impact on numerous University decisions. The results were impressive.

Attorney General Suzie Mitchell

Under the leadership of Attorney General Suzie Mitchell, the once maligned Honor System made an impressive comeback. With the controversial "rat clause" deleted from The Instrument of Judicial Governance, a strong educational effort in operation for the first time, and the designation of suspension as the normative sanction for Honor Code violations, the number of Honor Court cases, especially those reported by students, increased dramatically during the 1978-79 academic year. It was strong evidence that a weakened Honor System was vigorously returning to health.

Throughout the year, the Executive Branch faced a series of diverse — and often divisive — issues at all levels in the University community. The first controversial issue confronted was the looming campus parking crunch, and the University Administration's proposal to build a new 800-space parking deck behind the present hospital deck. Convinced that the proposed parking deck did not address the long range transportation needs of the University community, Student Government, led by Local Affairs Director Heather Weir, lobbied hard with the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen to block a special use permit required for the deck's construction. Stung by successive 5-4 Board of Aldermen votes rejecting the University's application for such a permit, administrators were forced to make a real commitment to park-ride lots. Early the following spring, Student Government successfully lobbied the Vice-Chancellor's Committee on Parking and Transportation to retain student parking zones near the campus.

Dottie Bernholtz, Attorney, Student Legal Services

The Campus Governing Council budget hearings, traditionally the first stumbling block faced by Student Government, passed with unusual smoothness. Led by CGC Speaker Randall Williams and Finance Committee Chairperson Rhonda Black, the spring hearings were the first to be conducted under the auspices of a streamlined budget bill passed during the previous session. Despite the greater paperwork and time involved, many felt that the CGC had taken a crucial step in reducing the sometimes arbitrary nature of previous budgetary allocations. Nearly $330,000 in student fees were allocated to campus organizations by Student Body Treasurer Jim Shaffner and his successor, Bill Parmelee, during 1978-79.

Even more impressive was Student Government's expanded role with the Board of Trustees. Designated as a Trustee by his election as Student Body President, Phillips brought new issues and student concerns to the attention of the University's highest, though often invisible, governing body. At Phillips' suggestion, the Board held its first open meeting with the student body this past fall, where one informed Trustee asked (apologetically), "What is Drop-Add?" Though defeated in his efforts to secure Athletic Department funding for Sports Clubs, Phillips successfully forced the shift of $25,000 in Student Stores profits from athletic scholarships to a more general scholarship category.

Academic policy, however, was the key issue for the Phillips Administration. Extension of the four week drop period remained on the front burner of student opinion, as it had for nearly two years. But where past Student Governments had failed, the Phillips Administration did not. In February, the Educational Policy Committee (EPC) rejected, by a narrow 5-4 vote, a proposal to extend the drop period from four to six weeks. A month later, in a sharp turnaround brought about by strong Student Government lobbying, the Faculty Council rejected the EPC's recommendation and voted by an overwhelming margin to extend the drop period to six weeks.

"They (the faculty and administration) were impressed by our effort and commitment," Phillips said. "Executive Assistant Craig Brown headed the drive and was instrumental in its passage." Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Donald Boulton and Faculty Council Chairperson Daniel Pollitt also made strong contributions to the successful Student Government drop period effort.

Building upon the limited efforts of previous years, Student Government initiated its biggest project in years: Springfest. "Initially," Phillips said, "We wanted to show students an actual return for their fees and involve more students in Student Government." As the project began in the late fall, most University administrators were skeptical of the idea; even after a decade, Jubilee was fresh in their minds. "The administration," Phillips said, "felt we should be dealing with Morrison waterfights and enforcing visitation — and here we were taking on a $100,000 project." Organized by Jay Turvo, Springfest featured Jimmy Buffett, the Spinners, and Nantucket. The April concert ran smoothly, attracted over 18,000 spectators, and was a financial success.

Black-white relations were the most disappointing issue for Student Government this year. "Between HEW's suit and Dean Renwick's charges," Phillips said, "the atmosphere was not conducive to making strides in race relations. But the Black Student Movement's relationship with Student Government was not adversarial, and whenever we had the opportunity to work together, we worked together pretty well."

Overall, 1978-79 marked the most successful year Student Government has had in recent memory. As Phillips' successor J.B. Kelly noted, "The Phillips Administration made Student Government respectable in the eyes of the students, faculty, and the University Administration."

Working with this administration was the toughest and most frustrating thing Phillips had to do. "With a few exceptions, it seemed that administrators tried to stifle student input, rather than encourage it, which seems contrary to the entire concept of the University," Phillips said. "Most University administrators seemed more concerned with the business aspect than the people their decisions affected," he concluded.

Elected on the first ballot to succeed Phillips as Student Body President, J.B. Kelly summed up the changes that had occurred over the past year: "Students are now consulted. Everywhere that decisions are being made which affect students, students will be there. We're being relied upon to provide suggestions and information. We're at the point now where students can affect decisions. We can only build upon past efforts, and we intend to do so."

It might be said that hard work breeds success, while success breeds respectability. In sharp contrast to its immediate predecessors, the Phillips Administration — and Student Government — made significant and lasting accomplishments this year. What remains to be seen is whether Student Government can build upon the solid initiatives of its recent past, and continue to meet the challenge of responsibly reflecting the needs and interests of a diverse student population.

Attention turned to campus politics during student body elections this year, with four candidates for the office of Student Body President and a hotly contested dispute over the Daily Tar Heel editorship.

J.B. Kelly, a junior political science major from Jacksonville, Florida, was the first to declare his candidacy for the position of Student Body President. Chris Mackie and Richard Klimkiewicz followed suit, with Harold Schumuck joining in as the self-appointed representative of the Student Apathy Party. Schumuck, alias Dennis Maggard, claimed to be a drunkard major from Franklin and promised free sex and beer for all if he were elected. Gordon Adcox also announced his candidacy but failed to meet the deadline for submitting his petition, even after he was granted an extension by the Elections Board.

Four candidates also announced their intention to run for editor of the Daily Tar Heel. Allen Openshaw, who had no previous journalism experience, criticized the DTH for covering bits and pieces of entertainment like a comic strip. He was unable to make the Feb. 14 ballot. Reid Tuvim and David Stacks, both journalism majors, felt that the Tar Heel suffered from several correctible problems. Stacks hoped to increase distribution and create an ombudsman for every dorm, fraternity, and sorority. Tuvim, however, believed that the DTH needs more of a "go out and find the news" approach. Allen Jernigan planned to broaden the scope of the Tar Heel and to make it the only paper students need to read.

In the presidential campaign, Kelly claimed experience to be the major issue, emphasizing his own extensive involvement in Student Government. In its endorsement of Kelly, the DTH also stressed his experience to be of great significance. The editorial characterized Kelly as a candidate with a "broad range of experience, talent, enthusiasm and ideas to deal with a broad range of issues." For editor, the DTH supported Jernigan, who, the paper claimed, would stress fairness and professionalism.

Heavy voter turnout (5200) brought J.B. Kelly an easy victory over his opponents. Kelly expressed confidence that the vote represented a mandate not only for his candidacy, but for the Phillips Administration as well. In the editorial race, Jernigan captured 39.3% of the vote while Stacks placed second with 35.1% and Tuvim finished with 25.6%. In other contests, Matt Judson easily defeated Ricky May for Carolina Athletic Association President, and Janet Moss and Karen Tagalos won the race for senior class President and Vice-President.

While the winners relaxed, Stacks and Jernigan geared up for the Feb. 21 run-off. Due to a heavy snowfall on that date, the run-off was marked by an unusually low turnout of 3,536; Stacks took 53% of the vote while Jernigan won only 47%. As a result of irregularities at the polls, the Elections Board decided not to certify the run-off results even though neither candidate had filed a formal complaint. On March 12, however, the Board reversed its decision. Jernigan appealed. On March 20, the Student Supreme Court heard its first case in ten years, with Jernigan as plaintiff and Elections Board Chairperson Jil Linker and David Stacks as defendants. After more than a month of uncertainty over the editorship, the Supreme Court voted 4-1 to uphold the election of Stacks to that position.

RHA

Through leadership training, educational services and social programming, JNC's Residence Hall Association works to improve the quality of life for students living in residence halls. Enthusiasm characterizes the RHA's approach to its duties, as its membership was voted "Most Spirited" at the annual convention of the National Association of College and University Residence Halls. JNC's RHA also won the competition to host the national convention in 1980.

During 1978-79 the RHA confronted a number of controversial issues not easily resolved. In December, the RHA Board of Governors voted to withhold residence hall funds from the Orientation Commission. With an expanded eight day Orientation planned for Fall 1979, the RHA felt that the increased funds needed by the Commission constituted an unreasonable burden on residence hall social fees, a position which led to severe criticism from the Office of Student Affairs.

The RHA also worked to extend residence hall visitation hours. In a report compiled by the Association, the establishment of a roommate's bill of rights and two student judiciary courts was proposed. Although the report was completed in April, the University Administration delayed action on the RHA's proposals.

As the school year ended, the RHA was torn by internal controversy. Citing differences in interests, Everett, Lewis, and Aycock residence halls voted to leave the Morehead Confederation; Stacy and Graham also voted to leave the Confederation but did not achieve the two-thirds majority needed. As a result of the split in Lower Quad, Everett, Lewis, and Aycock plan to ask for recognition as an Olde Campus residence college. Under the leadership of President Don Fox and his successor William Porterfield, a revitalized RHA is working hard to meet the needs and voice the concerns of the 6,600 students living in University Housing.

BLACK STUDENT MOVEMENT

The Black Student Movement serves as an advocate of the needs and interests of the black community on campus. Programs are directed toward cultural development, academic counseling and social enrichment, and membership is open to all students (regardless of race). The goals of the BSM are not to create a separatist atmosphere, but to increase awareness among students and administrators of the problems which face black students in a historically white environment. "We are primarily a service organization designed to protect the academic, cultural, political, and social interests of the black students at UNC," explained former chairperson Allen Johnson. "It is our goal to provide a sense of black community."

Groups sponsored by the Black Student Movement include Black Ink, the Gospel Choir, Ebony Readers, and Opeyo Dancers. In conjunction with WXYC, BSM held a semi-annual Soul Train Disco; Miss BSM was crowned at the annual Coronation Ball; and the week-long Black Arts Festival was revived this year, featuring actress Cicely Tyson and the New York Community Choir.

On April 4, approximately 200 students marched on South Building to protest several policies of the University involving the presence of minorities on campus. Issues of debate included the denial of tenure to Sonja Stone (director of the Afro-American Studies Curriculum), the University's failure to establish an office of minority affairs, and the inadequate recruitment of qualified black students.

Protest marches have become a recognized vehicle for the Black Student Movement to demonstrate its demands concerning campus issues. When BSM was established ten years ago, it presented a list of 23 grievances to the administration. Since that time, members of BSM have staged demonstrations at University Day, at Campus Governing Council budget hearings, at speeches delivered in Memorial Hall, and most recently at a tour of the campus conducted by representatives of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Although some changes have been enacted, progress has been slow and minimal.

Prior to the march, members of the BSM requested a meeting with Samuel Williamson, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. Williamson claimed he could not arrange a meeting before April 24. Provost Charles Morrow refused to address the crowd, although he did meet with two BSM leaders in his office. Chancellor N. Ferebee Taylor responded by telling members of the BSM that "as students you have no recourse but to accept administrative decisions," yet he defended their right to protest peacefully. Former BSM chairperson Allen Johnson explained one of the difficulties he faced in dealing with the administration: "Never could we get two principal administrators in the same room at the same time during this controversy. Dean Renwick was always willing, but the Chancellor was not." "This administration has a deaf ear toward the needs of not only black students but students in general," said William Bynum, current BSM chairperson. "I think that it is a shame that we should have to demonstrate our concerns in this manner . . . Due to the insensitivity of the administration toward our concerns, we feel that we have to fight."

ECOS

ECOS acts as a forum for the expression of environmental concerns. Activities sponsored by ECOS include campus-wide newspaper recycling, films, guest speakers, and Out-Reach (a program of letter-writing and petitioning intended to influence governmental policy on specific issues).

This year, members of ECOS participated in the "No Nukes" campaign, attended state and national "No Nukes" rallies, and staged a "die-in" (simulated nuclear accident) in the Pit to protest construction of the Shearon Harris nuclear power plant. The organization also supported the "bottle bill," and sponsored films on nuclear energy, a forum and tour of solar homes, and a Wilderness Preservation program.

DI-PHI

The roots of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Societies are embedded in the very foundations of the University. Begun only months after the University opened its doors in 1795, the Societies provided an opportunity for students to polish their speaking abilities through debates and oratory contests. The Philanthropic Society provided discussion of contemporary literature since there was no English curriculum at the time.

These two societies became such an integral part of the University that at one point all students were required to belong to either one society or the other. Housed in New West and New East, the Societies met in plush damask and mahogany chambers upon whose walls hung the portraits of such notables as President James K. Polk and University founder William R. Davie. The Societies also maintained libraries which, when merged with the University Library, provided over 16,000 volumes to help form the modern UNC library system.

In the mid-1900s, however, the Societies lost their foothold as the center of campus life. The Yackety Yack and Student Government, once projects of Di-Phi, became independent organizations. Social entertainment, films, and spectator sports replaced the Saturday night meetings as the social events of the week.

In 1959, the Societies merged to become what is presently known as Di-Phi. Membership declined throughout the 60s and 70s. Experiencing near death in 1971 with only one member, the Societies have subsequently had a minor resurgence in membership.

The contemporary Di-Phi claims to be an organization which helps the student learn to think more clearly and communicate more effectively. Di-Phi annually awards the Willie P. Magnum Medal for excellence in oratory. Each semester the Societies stage public debates between UNC faculty members and sponsor educational programs where members and visitors are encouraged to express themselves on issues of interest.

READERS' THEATRE

Often placed on a continuum between oral interpretation and dramatic art, Readers' Theatre lacks elaborate sets and costuming, although the limitations stop there. By adapting prose for the stage, Readers' Theatre provides a unique avenue of creative freedom for actor and audience alike.

Under the direction of faculty advisor Martha Hardy, the 1978-79 Readers' Theatre produced The Loves of Clarence and Rosannah, directed by Reggie Schloss, The Ransom of Red Chief, directed by P.W. Casey, One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, directed by Dace McPherson, and Consider the Rabbit: An Anthology, directed by Tim McManus.

PLAYMAKERS REPERTORY COMPANY

Macbeth

Cold Storage

Dracula

The Playmakers Repertory Company began the 1978-79 season with an adaptation of Bram Stoker's chiller Dracula. The Count, professional actor Michael Lipton, played to a full house for a three week run and a one week hold-over. Following the success of Dracula, Threads appeared at the new Paul Green Theatre in a world premier presentation. Playmaker producer Tom Haas and playwright Johnathan Bolte, a native North Carolinian, collaborated to portray the return of a successful young man to his Piedmont hometown.

Cold Storage, a portrayal of life in a hospital cancer ward, preceded Eugene O'Neill's Long Day's Journey Into Night. UNC drama student John Daggan portrayed the sensitive and insecure Edmund, alias Eugene O'Neill.

After the success of last year's Hamlet, Tom Haas chose to produce Macbeth in a version of the classic adapted for modern audiences. The Playmakers Repertory Company closed its season with the George Kaufman/Moss Hart classic You Can't Take It With You. Seven UNC graduate drama students appeared in the comedy alongside the Repertory Company's regular stand-outs. Following a successful and varied schedule this year, the Company plans to continue a similar agenda in the future by presenting a balance of traditional drama and modern plays. Although undergraduate drama majors have very little opportunity for on-stage experience in the program, PRC provides a strong season of dramatic performances for community enjoyment.

Long Day's Journey Into Night

You Can't Take It With You

Operating within the black walls of Graham Memorial, Lab Theatre provides an opportunity for graduate and undergraduate students in the Department of Dramatic Art to obtain first-hand experience in all aspects of theatrical production. Although some sets and costumes are used, the focus is on acting; many performances are also student-directed.

This year's performances included The Bald Soprano, Chauffeur (written by Mike Dixon), The Wisp in the Wind scenes, Curse of the Starving Class, Domino Courts, 365 Days, Cole Porter Review, Freud Left Town, Zanni, Six Characters in Search of an Author, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, and The Wager.

UNC YOUNG DEMOCRATS

While non-election years are usually uneventful for most political organizations, the UNC Young Democrats found themselves actively involved in John Ingram's campaign for the U.S. Senate. Roy Cooper, President of the Young Democrats, served as Ingram's campaign director for colleges and universities across the state. Prior to the November elections, the club organized a massive registration drive, and later offered rides to the polls on election day. As a fund-raising project, the Young Democrats sponsored Harry Chapin in concert on campus.

UNC COLLEGE REPUBLICANS

As the 1980 primaries and elections approach, the College Republicans are gearing up for a campus-wide membership drive. In this year's elections, the group supported Jesse Helms' successful re-election to the U.S. Senate while concentrating their efforts on behalf of two local Republican candidates for Clerk of Court and State Senate. The College Republicans also hosted membership parties and attended state and national conventions with College Republicans from other colleges and universities. In 1980, they hope to bring a major Republican presidential candidate to the campus.

GPSF

The Graduate and Professional Student Federation represents the graduate programs and departments on campus, primarily in financial transactions and negotiations with the Campus Governing Council. GPSF funds support social events, seminars and forums, guest speakers, and workshops for the 5600 graduate students at Carolina. Many CGC representatives have had reservations about the substantial appropriation allocated GPSF for social events, funding normally denied other student groups. During this year's budget hearings, controversy arose when GPSF failed to submit an itemized budget for each department, and CGC responded by slashing their funds from $18,000 to $780. Unless funding is restored, this move will shift the emphasis of the Federation from financial appropriation to the advocacy of graduate concerns in the state and University.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE MEDAL WINNERS: R. Armstrong, C. Knox Massey, Albert Coates, Dr. James Davis, Hugh Morton

The year 1978-79 was a memorable one for the University's General Alumni Association. It was the first year membership exceeded 25,000, Life Memberships reached 6,800, and programming was strengthened and expanded.

The primary contact among alumni continued through The Alumni Review magazine and University Report, a tabloid newspaper. Approximately 50 chapter meetings were held, as well as tours to Ireland, Australia, New Zealand, Fiji, Tahiti, Scandinavia, and a Trans-Panama Canal cruise. Homecoming featured a return to the Big Band era with the Glenn Miller Orchestra and a dance in Woolen Gym. Simultaneous class reunions on Commencement Weekend attracted more than 1,000 alumni back to the campus. A 30-minute slide presentation, "Hark the Sound," narrated by Andy Griffith '49, won a national award and was shown extensively to alumni and campus audiences. The second group of Distinguished Service Medals was presented, along with the eighth group of Distinguished Alumnus Awards.

At year's end, President Harold K. Bennett '35 of Asheville turned the Association's gavel over to Dr. J. Dewey Dorsett, Jr. '47 of Charlotte. The Association, organized in 1843, entered its 136th year with its two major purposes unchanged: to support the University, and to foster friendship among its former students.

NROTC

UNC's Navy ROTC ranks as one of the oldest programs in the United States, having graduated more officers than any other institution except the U.S. Naval Academy. The Navy has played an integral part in the history of the University; during the Second World War, Navy officers in training were virtually the only students on campus. The Scuttlebutt, Kessing Pool, the Student Health Building, and the astroturf playing field are all products of the Navy's labor on campus.

The NROTC program trains officers for commissions in either the Navy or Marine Corps, involving instruction and activities such as trips to Camp Le Jeune and Paris Island.

Semper Fidelis is a society within NROTC designed to prepare students for Marine Commissions and "To promote the interests and ideals of the Marine Corps among the students and faculty of the University." In conjunction with the Navy, Semper Fidelis sponsored a winter survival training exercise in Vermont. The group is also responsible for cleaning Kenan Stadium after football games and sets a goal of performing at least six public service projects each year. A highlight of the school year, Semper Fidelis commemorates the November 10, 1775, birth of the Navy with an annual formal "Mess Night" and ball.

Devoted to the training of future Air Force officers, UNC's Air Force ROTC program is a total way of life. The first two years of the program focus on Air Force history and aerial warfare concepts, and the junior and senior years deal with the development of managerial and leadership skills. Despite the military concentration required of AFROTC students, the outfit finds time for community service, educational trips, and social activities. In the past year, AFROTC visited Washington, D.C., with trips to Bolling and Langley Air Force Bases.

Arnold Air Society and its sister organization Angel Flight even assumed the unenviable task of cleaning Kenan Stadium after the Springfest Concert. While Arnold Air is a society within the AFROTC, Angel Flight is open to all interested students. This year, the organizations combined forces to sponsor a blood drive, sell balloons for the cancer society, and to organize parties and cookouts. Beach weekends, national conventions, and the semi-annual formal completed a successful year for AFROTC and Angel Flight.

TORONTO EXCHANGE

Toronto Exchange is a cooperative program between UNC and the University of Toronto. This year, the group of students selected to participate enjoyed sleigh rides, rugby matches, clogging lessons, a punk rock demonstration, and a No-Talent Show. Programs also included speakers and seminars focusing on the cultural differences and similarities between participants.

A group of thirty-four Canadians was hosted on campus during the week of Homecoming. Their trip was highlighted by receptions, parties, and a Mike Cross concert. UNC students ventured to the frozen North in January to return the visit. Guitars and dancing warmed their welcome in the Hart House, an old farm house submerged in 10-foot snow drifts.

A Japanese tea ceremony, a German waltz band, and a Thai belly dancer — each event brought the taste of a different nation to the International Festival sponsored by the Association of International Students. The fall festival attracted over 300 visitors to its various booths, films, and performances. The day-long event ended with an international pot-luck dinner and a performance by the Chapel Hill International Folk Dancers.

The Association of International Students seeks to promote interaction between American and international students, stressing that its activities are for both groups. Interested in international affairs, the Association sponsored a spring dinner discussion on Iran and the Islamic culture. The Association also co-sponsored a number of events with the Campus Y, such as the Forum on the Third World. The AIS publishes AGORA, a bi-annual magazine devoted to the many common interests of American and international students.

ASSOCIATION OF INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS

CAMPUS Y

The Campus Y is sometimes referred to as the "conscience of the campus" because the Y is more intensely aware of social problems than most campus organizations. Marked by its willingness to focus attention on these problems, the Y sponsors a myriad of community and campus activities.

In March, 60 undergraduates splashed twenty miles in a rainstorm for the Campus Y Walk for Humanity, raising money for charity and calling attention to the plight of Third World countries. Similarly, the traditional 24 hour "Fast for a World Harvest" focused upon world poverty. On a community basis, the Campus Y sponsors tutors and Big Buddy programs, and recruits volunteers for the Murdoch Center and John Umstead Hospital.

The Y's concern with social issues is not restricted to an international or community scope, however. Throughout the year, the Y schedules student-faculty dinner discussions and informal Coffee Klatches on such controversial campus topics as HEW, the educational focus of the University, and race relations. The Y's Committee on Undergraduate Education formulated a series of discussions, ranging from academic advising to the curriculum itself.

The Y begins each year with its popular Freshman Camp, a pre-orientation look at Carolina which brings freshmen into contact with professors and student leaders. Later in the year, people throughout the University community look forward to the annual International and Appalachian Handicrafts Bazaar, a welcome respite from the exams which helps ring in the Christmas season.

ORIENTATION COMMISSION

UNC'een nothing yet!

Orientation '79, under the direction of Chairperson Lisa Harper, developed several new programs and established an expanded schedule of events to acquaint new students with life at Carolina. The eight-day Orientation week was designed to emphasize academic, social, and community involvement. This was achieved through a series of "Lifestyles" programs, an all-campus carnival, extensive programming in individual residence areas, bus tours, and the traditional Convocation. David Bromberg, McGuinn, Clark & Hillman, and the Original Drifters were also scheduled to perform in concert on campus.

The Student Consumer Action Union provides information and services to students through numerous programs and publications. SCAU conducts bi-weekly comparisons of local food prices and maintains a consumer hotline for information and complaints. This year, members of SCAU also prepared the facts and figures used by Student Government concerning the Student Health Service.

"The Franklin Street Gourmet," one of SCAU's most widely distributed booklets, is published annually and provides candid descriptions of area restaurants and snack bars. The pamphlet "Southern Part of Heaven" has been recognized as the most complete housing guide in any North Carolina town. "Wheeling and Dealing" serves as a guide for the purchase and maintenance of bicycles, while "Sight and Sound" contains similar information for camera and audio equipment. The "Automotive Guide" and the "Consumer Health Handbook" provide tips on automotive repair services and health care in the area. SCAU also publishes "C*A*S*H," a guide to banks in the Chapel Hill-Carrboro community, as well as a pamphlet for out-of-state students seeking N.C. residency for tuition purposes.

Under the direction of Chairperson Ralph Aubrey, SCAU continued to defend student interests and meet the needs of student consumers in the University community throughout the year.

CGA

The Carolina Gay Association serves as an educational organization and support group for the gay community. Fostering interpersonal communication, CGA helps gays deal with the problems and frustrations of living in a predominantly heterosexual society. Both gays and straight students participate in CGA sponsored activities.

CGA began the year by sponsoring its annual Gay Awareness Week. The weeklong series of workshops, discussions, and social meetings was aimed towards all sexual relationships and preferences. In April, the Southeastern Conference of Lesbians and Gay Men met on the UNC campus. The conference, entitled "Unity Through Diversity," heightened awareness of different lifestyles within the gay community. The limited funds allocated to the Association by Student Government are used to finance a library, an outreach program, and the Gay Awareness Week. In the future, CGA hopes to extend its services to more people in the community at large.

AWS

The Association for Women Students sponsors a wide range of programs designed to meet the diverse needs of all women on campus.

In September, AWS and Women in Law co-sponsored a symposium on "Sex Discrimination and the Law." Focusing on the legal status of women and cases of employment discrimination, the program also included seminars on cohabitation and battered women. AWS also published a Women's Resource Book, which provides information on counseling services, rape prevention, women's studies programs, and women's sports. In the spring, a lecture by Nancy Friday, author of My Mother, My Self, and a Women's Health Symposium highlighted the Association's activities. Throughout the year, however, AWS focused its energies on the passage of the Equal Rights Amendment in North Carolina.

See Voral Blow UP UP UP

The eleven-inch icicle had been melting since nine o'clock that morning. It dripped lazily, splashing its coolness onto the pink brick walk surrounding the newly constructed English building. Greenlaw was a brainchild of the Big Architecture period; the building's eager designer drew her original blueprint to compare in height with the World Trade Center in New York, or at least Chicago's Sears building. Many modifications later, this miniature version of the original plan was built at Chapel Hill, North Carolina. She rose from the center of campus with the planned potential of great height, yet ended abruptly, stunted to the shape of a square — as if the builder was overwhelmed with his task and simply roofed over the building rather than continue stacking pink and white bricks. At eleven-fifteen Voral Chaff grinned into the January sunshine as he tiptoed out Greenlaw's front door. He darted to safety behind a grainy white pillar. "And not a single student noticed me!" he thought. Voral was delighted that he had eluded the other students. His monthly thesis conference with Dr. Downter was in Greenlaw, and today Voral had remembered to wear white to camouflage himself against the white of the Building so she wouldn't notice him either as he crept out her doors. "Someday," thought Voral, "I will do even bigger and greater things, like Daddy says I will. I have almost escaped from my pink and white enemy — that is, big for now. Later I will rise upup in the world. I will do, I must do," he corrected himself, "a very great thing." Voral wanted to laugh out loud at the milling students who did not realize that he was about to escape from Greenlaw without her even knowing he was there, but he stifled his impulse. Any noise might cause the couple under the archway to look up and see him pressed against the wall, his albino skin blending imperfectly with the light brick. "They might tell Greenlaw I'm here," he thought anxiously, "better escape now." His pink eyes narrowed and he began creeping from pillar to pillar, the thick cotton of his father's medical jacket picking against the rough brick. He hesitated at the corner to watch a squirrel hop from a melting snowman onto a dogwood and click rapidly up the damp trunk. He heard a rush, a whisper of movement above him. He jerked his head farther up; the icicle stabbed, Voral screamed.

At Student Health Services a tall psychologist talked to a silent Voral about the monumental pressures of attempting a major research paper as a college freshman; a male nurse at the infirmary put a Band-Aid on Voral's cut white cheek. A red-headed orderly elbowed the desk nurse and pointed at Voral's retreating figure knowingly.

"Doctor Chaff's oldest boy," he said.

"The Doctor Chaff, the Research Triangle Doctor Chaff?" she said, startled. The young nurse put on her glasses in public for the first time in two years. "Is it true that he's a genius like his father?" she said a moment later.

The orderly shrugged. "How could he help but be? Mrs. Falle at Admissions nearly peed in her pants when Chaff sent his son's application here. No SAT score, no high school grades with it — just a certificate from Upper Academy — but I have it on good authority that she mailed out his acceptance letter before she left for lunch."

"It's amazing to me that anyone could have an intellect like that," the nurse sighed. "What is his I.Q.?"

"His father's is 190. I don't know about the boy. Probably more. His mom's bright, too."

The nurse shook her head. "I wonder what somebody like that thinks about."

Voral sat hidden behind a large rhododendron bush so Greenlaw could not jeer at him over yesterday's episode and drank a strawberry milkshake, warmed from twenty minutes in the sun. And Voral was still drinking. He sucked on the straw, drawing the pink liquid just up to his mouth, then let go and watched it slide back down into the Dixie Cup.

"Up, up, up," he said softly to his shake.

"Just like me." That night he typed on his thesis.

The following Saturday Voral sat in the Women's Gymnasium and looked at the basketball nets with disdain.

"You ruin it," he accused one white net. One daring evening when Voral was eleven he had run away from his father's house and had come to a basketball game. He had watched with trembling excitement each time the ball leapt into the air, and then miserably hid his face behind the plaid-shirted armpit of a burly man beside him when the ball fell down again. Six minutes into the game the man had shaken bright-eyed Voral off his arm: "What is this? Knock it off, wouldja punk?" The next time a long-legged player had scored and Voral had hidden the man thrust his oily face at Voral's white one.

"Jeezus," he said, his oversized mouth only inches away. "When are you going to grow up?" Voral had beamed back at the man when he said the word "up." Now, alone in Women's Gym, he could pretend that the balls sailed up and up and up and never came down. Voral giggled. He typed again that night.

The stack of used typing paper beside Voral's radiator grew steadily. He watched it grow with satisfaction — there were many sheets now, four hundred at least. He remembered his advisor's words this morning:

"I received that note from your father and I respect your desire to keep your thesis topic private until you submit it. It's unprecedented, but under the circumstances I respected it. I've never advised a freshman who was writing a thesis before, so I will admit to you right off that I felt intimidated by the prospect. But I didn't feel so intimidated that I didn't do a little research on you. According to the records at Admissions your Scholastic Aptitude Test score was 1590."

The advisor had peered then at Voral, looking at him more closely than anyone since a burly man at a basketball game had looked and called him punk. "But you didn't make a 1590, did you," Voral's advisor had continued gently. "You made a 590 and added the 1 when you mailed your own copy to the University in August, didn't you?" Voral had been pleased with this recognition. "I keep up," he had chortled.

The ideas that had been wandering in Voral's limited brain for seventeen years melded and took form Sunday as he sat in a birch tree across from Greenlaw building, his spindly legs wrapped tightly around a stout limb.

"I'm going to blow it up," he whispered into the thickness of the moonless night. "Up, up, up, you do not go up," he explained to the square pink and white building. "Not like me," he said, and giggled at his cleverness. "When I tell Daddy I have blown up Greenlaw, he will be proud. Up is a wonderful thing. This is a great thing."

Voral positioned his stack of typing paper on top of an air vent on Greenlaw roof, then raced back downstairs as the sun met the flat horizon Monday morning. At seven-thirty, as the same sun began its journey upward into the sky, Voral pressed his mouth against a basement heating pipe and blew up Greenlaw. XY

A Plea for Affirmative Action

1978-79 marked another year of limited racial progress for the University, with black enrollment constituting 6.8% of the student body and black professors comprising but 2.5% of the faculty. Not surprisingly, Affirmative Action was one of the major issues confronting University administrators, and the response was slow and frustrating for all concerned.

The actions of the Administration throughout its recent history have often been compared to the behavior of a turtle. When danger (controversy) arises, it simply pulls in its head and waits until the fury dissipates. In the time honored tradition of University officials, silence and the preservation of the status quo have won out over words and action, and the Administration has remained snug in its shell. Despite student protests and a public commitment to racial integration, administrators seemingly lent a wooden ear to the problems of black students on campus, concerns which ranged from admissions policies to tenure decisions and, ultimately, to the very quality of life for blacks at the University of North Carolina. The issue of racial integration poses some unique problems for the University, because it requires all divisions, departments, and offices to work in a unified manner toward a coordinated goal. Although this is a difficult task for any complex administration, it is one that must be actively addressed if we are to avoid greater racial problems in the years ahead.

WILLIAM M. GEER, Director of Student Aid

Throughout the year, campus racial controversy focused around the charges of Assistant Dean H. Bentley Renwick, who alleged that qualified blacks were not being admitted to the University. Looming behind the omnipresent HEW desegregation suit which threatened to cut off Federal funds to the 16-campus University system, Renwick's allegations remained substantially unanswered for more than nine months. The University Administration's prolonged silence on the question of black admissions was at best self-defeating, at worst self-incriminating. Poisoning already tenuous race relations on campus, which can be better characterized by voluntary separatism than by racial integration, Renwick's charges and the Administration's silence concerning them brought any semblance of racial progress on campus to a grinding halt.

The University's first response to Renwick's charges, albeit an incomplete one, awaited the June, 1979 report of the Faculty Advisory Committee, under the direction of Chairperson Dr. Charles Long. The question facing the University was captured by the Long Committee in its report:

The University has publicly committed itself to the increased enrollment of blacks. The question is whether, consistent with its role as the premier public institution in the state, the University is energetically carrying through on that commitment. To put it more bluntly, the issue is whether the University's admissions policy and recruitment procedures presently tend to produce a "white" university, which a comparatively few black students may attend; or whether the policies and procedures truly reflect a real commitment to seek out, admit, and nurture students who, though coming from other and different American cultural orientations than most students in the history of the University, possess the qualities of intellect and other talents demanded by a distinguished university.

To answer this question, a historical perspective of the University's initiatives and commitments to the admission of black students is essential.

JAMES O. CANSLER
Assoc. Vice Chancellor
of Student Affairs

In the spring of 1951, the University Administration announced that the first black would be admitted to the University, as a medical student, in the fall semester. Four black law students also entered the University during the fall of 1951, and over the next twenty years the number of black students at UNC crept upwards. In 1968, blacks constituted a mere 1.5% of the student body, leading a Faculty Council committee to conclude that, "The present basically honest but passive open door admission policy of the University and the institutional and ad hoc recruiting activities . . . will not produce the significant increase (in black enrollment) which is desirable." That same year, the Faculty Council approved eight recommendations designed to increase black enrollment and improve the quality of black life at the University. Ten years later, many needs of the black community still remained unmet.

By far the most controversial component of the University's incomplete response to the 1968 Faculty Council resolution is the special admissions program, which reserves 200 spaces in each freshman class for students whose "admission is desirable, but whose academic or objective qualifications would be inconsistent with actions on normal candidates." According to the Long Committee report:

About half of the in-state black applicants fall in the category of special admissions. About 60% of these are eligible in terms of regular requirements (1.6 PGA and 800 SAT, academic track in high school, minimal high school deficiencies, and in the upper 50% of high school class), but are not competitive in the pool of in-state applicants . . . The other 40% of in-state minority students (about 100 per year) admitted under this special admissions policy have either a PGA of 1.6 or SAT of 800 but not both.

H. BENTLEY RENWICK

Associate Dean of Counseling

PROVOST J. CHARLES MORROW, Academic Affairs; Chancellor Taylor;
DONALD A. BOULTON, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs

WILLIAM W. COBEY, JR., Director of Athletics

Where Renwick charged that qualified black applicants were denied admission in 1976 and 1977, the Long Committee reported, "the Office of Undergraduate Admissions concedes that in some cases mistakes were made." Furthermore, the committee would learn that while the Admissions Office claimed that it had used currently enrolled black students in its minority recruitment efforts, no students had in fact been used. Despite statements to the contrary by Director of Admissions Richard Cashwell, the charge, largely substantiated, severely undermined the credibility of the University's recruiting program.

Some elements of the University, particularly the Offices of Student Aid and Student Affairs, have taken concrete steps to alleviate the problems black students face after admission to the University. A black pre-orientation program introduces black students to various support structures offered by the University, especially counseling, study skills, and reading programs. In 1975, the Minority Student Advisory Program was established to provide contacts between new students and black faculty and upperclassmen. The Upward Bound and Project Uplift programs have been effective minority recruitment tools. The Office of Student Aid ensures that all students are guaranteed enough money to finance their education, and has designed some scholarship programs expressly for minority students. As a result of these efforts, the 30% attrition rate of black freshmen has been significantly reduced, but additional money and resources will be needed to meet the needs of a growing black student community.

Renwick also argued that if the University is committed to the increase of black enrollment, then the profile of the least qualified student admitted under the category of special talent (especially athletes) should be used as the basis of admission for any black student with the same or better credentials. While the Long Committee rejected Renwick's interpretation of minimal admissions qualifications, it noted that:

RICHARD G. CASHWELL
Director of Undergraduate Admissions

JAMES D. CONDIE

Director of University Housing

Though we reject the formal criterion of athletic admissions as a norm for any other types of admissions, we may raise the issue of structural similarities. For whatever reason, the University has committed itself to excellence in its competitive athletic programs. Once this commitment was made, the University was able to find the right rubrics, criteria, monies, etc., to carry out this goal in a manner which, if not consistent with, is at least satisfying to its image and prestige as a distinguished University. Nothing so singularly effective has emerged from the language of commitment regarding the increase of black students in this University.

Describing the University's commitment to increasing black enrollment as "pragmatic," the Long Committee repeated the 1968 recommendations of the Faculty Council, as well as calling for a re-examination of admissions requirements, the recruitment of more black faculty, and a greater commitment towards improving the quality of life for blacks at this University.

For more than 150 years the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill excluded, by law, more than 20% of her state's population. Today, the University is making small steps in the right direction. With more than 50 black faculty members and 425 entering black freshmen, prospects for 1979-80 do offer some hope for progress. What remains to be seen is whether the University and its administration, true to their progressive heritage, will renew and expand their energies to extend full educational opportunities for all the citizens of North Carolina, or whether the administration will continue to hide smugly in its shell, oblivious to increasingly sharp calls for action.

CLAIBORNE S. JONES, Executive Asst. to the Chancellor

UNC-CH
BOARD OF

Publish or Perish?

The educational focus of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is an issue which has been discussed, debated, evaded, and sometimes ignored in the recent past. The Campus Y's Committee on Undergraduate Education addressed the matter this year in two forums: "What Makes an Excellent Undergraduate Education?" and "Research and Teaching at UNC — What is the Ideal Balance?" Concern first arose when the Board of Governors of the 16-campus Consolidated University designated UNC-CH and N.C. State as "research institutions." This designation appears at first a natural one, for both campuses have been national leaders in research throughout the history of state-supported education. In fact, the very term "university" implies a combination of classroom instruction and ongoing research. The cause for concern in the eyes of students and many faculty members is the effect such a label could have on the long-term goals of this University.

The University is faced with many external pressures to "produce," in an era where the merits of educational institutions are too often measured in terms of bulk contribution rather than quality. The retention of national credibility depends upon the number of volumes catalogued in our libraries, the number of blacks or women or minorities employed, the number of research papers published annually. What we risk in this rush to establish and maintain national ranking is an atmosphere of creative thought, of intellectual integrity, of liberal curiosity.

The Federal government has found convenient facilities for research programs on University campuses, and channels $56,000,000 annually into research projects at this University alone. Institutions of higher learning, by their very nature, create an intellectual atmosphere conducive to progressive scientific investigation. The danger is that the University will ignore its commitment to the undergraduate and channel its resources into graduate research programs.

Inevitably, the label "research institution" will have an impact on the quality of undergraduate education at UNC-CH over the course of time. Faculty members under review for tenure are evaluated in three areas: teaching effectiveness, research and publication, and service to the University. Of the three, the amount and quality of a professor's research is far more easily measured than other characteristics which might prove him to be a fine educator. Therefore, emphasizing the role of research will, in the long run, cull out those professors whose strengths are more evident in the classroom than in the laboratory. It cannot be denied that research is vital to the advancement of international knowledge, that colleges and universities throughout the nation rely heavily on developments at research institutions, and that outstanding accomplishments have been made by Chapel Hill researchers. All professors must engage in continuing education and exploration in order to maintain credibility and effectiveness as educators; however, we must guard against the danger of forcing professors to publish papers, rhetorical or not, in order to protect their tenure status.

An attempt has been made on the part of the University to emphasize the benefits of research rather than its disadvantages to the undergraduate. In his address to the initiates of Phi Beta Kappa, Samuel Williamson, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, explained, "A great university seeks to do more than just educate and teach. It seeks to contribute knowledge, to advance truth, to discover and push back the horizons of information and understanding. An institution can either be parasitic or creative — parasitic in simply drawing upon what others have done, creative and generative in adding to knowledge. For much of its modern life, this campus has chosen to contribute, to add, to be at the cutting edge of intellectual activity — and it is for this reason that coming to Chapel Hill has meant something special." Yet studying at the "frontiers of knowledge" often proves more frustrating than educational for the undergraduate student. In truth, undergraduates find themselves in classes taught by graduate students or by professors who are so involved in their own research that time severely limits their contact with individual students. Consequently, the University becomes

of the Graduate School

creative by being parasitic; that is, by drawing upon the funds of taxpayers and undergraduates, it continually enhances its graduate programs.

At a CUE forum, even Dean Williamson explained to students that "Choices have to be made. Moreover, you are present at this institution: you are aware that it is a large, prestigious state university, it is not a small undergraduate campus. Its faculty members are famous, are busy, and are interested in both teaching and research; it is their presence here that makes this place different from any number of other undergraduate institutions in the state and region. What this means is a certain tension between research and teaching and scholarship, but I would argue that it is a healthy and necessary tension. And it is just this tension, coupled with the wide variety of programs, that characterizes a true University, that makes the prospects of an undergraduate education so potentially rewarding at Chapel Hill." Unfortunately, it is also this tension which makes the undergraduate experience so frustrating in actuality.

What administrators are creating, consciously or not, is a knowledge factory; students on the undergraduate assembly line are taught to produce, not to question. Emphasis is shifting from inquisitive criticism to memorization, from undergraduate to graduate education, from the process to the product. Too often, the focus of Administrators and faculty members has left them blinded to the needs of the undergraduate, and students have been continually detached from those decisions which affect their lives and education here. This attitude was elucidated by one departmental chairman who commented, after queries concerning the procedures for hiring faculty members and reviewing them for tenure, "I don't understand why students are concerning themselves with these (administrative) matters. It's like patients determining their own diagnosis and cure."

The University of North Carolina has made a commitment to serve this state and its people, yet it is fulfilling that commitment with miscellaneous additions to the pool of knowledge rather than the inspiration of talented minds. If this campus is to continue as a distinguished and truly excellent educational institution, its goals and objectives must be reevaluated. In the words of William Strickland, Associate Vice Chancellor for Student Development, "Our mission vis a vis our undergraduates ought to be to help them create the intellectual and the personal skills which will enable them to embark on a lifelong experience of learning equipped with a sound knowledge base, sharp critical tools, a cosmopolitan appreciation of cultures and values, and deep appreciation of the limitlessness of their ability to learn and create." In the near future, UNC-CH will be challenged to find the fulcrum — to attain that delicate balance of emphasis that keeps this campus at the forefront of progressive research without endangering the quality of a liberal education here or sacrificing the undergraduate experience to the gods of specialization, research, and mass production.

It was to have been a glorious year.

Gone was Bill Dooley. Gone with him, according to local critics, was the powerful, plodding offense so characteristic of Dooley's champion squads.

The fans wanted more than championships . . . they craved excitement . . . they screamed for wide-open football.

Carolina got a new coach — Dick Crum. Formerly the head coach at Miami of Ohio, "the Cradle of Coaches," Crum won 34 games in four seasons at Miami O. and had time on the side to teach math courses.

Crum would not teach math at Carolina. Instead, he would teach the players something called the veer, precisely the wide-open offense the fans had wanted.

Hopes were high across campus and throughout North Carolina. The veer was expected to utilize the sleek agility of Famous Amos Lawrence, the dazzling running back who had blazed to a 1,000-yard season his freshman year. Matt Kupec, who quarterbacked Carolina to a Liberty Bowl appearance was enthusiastic about the offense, especially with Bob Loomis and Billy Johnson at fullback.

The bumper stickers around town announced the fever.

Stay clear . . . here comes the veer.

Oops . . . here came a 5-6 season. Things were shaky from the start. A close, confusing victory over East Carolina, followed by three straight losses, left the Tar Heels dazed and demoralized.

The loss to Maryland by one point didn't hurt as much as it could have; the Terps were on their way to another piece of an ACC crown. And Pittsburgh . . . well, weren't they nationally ranked?

But Miami of Ohio, that hurt. Crum's old team beat his new team, and used a flea-flicker play to do it.

Crum would later recall the 1-3 start as the poor foundation of a crumbling season. Most fans were still optimistic at that point, but it was evident that many of the Carolina players had become discouraged and were losing confidence.

The vaunted veer was in shambles and Crum reverted to the multiple-I offense Dooley had used so well. He had to pull it off without Kupec and Johnson, both injured early in the season.

It was nail-biting time.

Loomis showed poise with the fullback chores, as did Doug Pascual at a variety of positions. Chuck Sharpe quarterbacked Carolina with the new/old strategy to an impressive win over Wake Forest. Not until later did the coaches realize that Sharpe had to squint to discern players downfield. Fans soon learned he had eyesight a bat wouldn't want.

Contact lenses must have been disorienting for Sharpe, because a week later he couldn't get the offense untracked and N.C. State slaughtered Carolina, 34-7. The defeat marked the nadir of the season for most fans.

But even then, some optimism remained. The Tar Heels could recoup a 7-4 record from the wreckage if they won the remaining five games, and a 7-4 record in 1974 had been good enough for a trip to the Sun Bowl.

Spirits were boosted a week later by a victory over old rival South Carolina, but a bumbling and fumbling loss to unranked Richmond eradicated hopes for a bowl bid.

The Tar Heels found themselves with their backs to the wall and fans wondered if Crum had found the cure for Carolina Fever. The Heels were 3-5.

Crum decided it was time to start Kupec again, who had healed by the Clemson game. Kupec and the rest of the Tar Heels played one of their best games of the season but were downed 13-9 by the Tigers.

The game ensured a bowl bid for Clemson, the team that stunned Ohio State in the Gator Bowl and brought about Woody Hayes' early retirement from coaching. It also ensured a losing season for the Tar Heels.

Nothing but pride was left to Carolina with only two games remaining. The frustrated Tar Heels blasted Virginia 38-20, and Carolina's record inched to 4-6.

The stage was set for Duke.

Most fans were pessimistic about the season's finale; it seemed the whole year had been a steady stream of close games and bitter ironies. Yet fans returned in traditional numbers on a wet Thanksgiving weekend to bid a fond farewell to the team that should have been so great.

Forgotten was the old saying, "Carolina can lose every game but Duke and still have a winning season."

At first it appeared Carolina players had forgotten as well. The Tar Heels fell behind 15-3 and stayed there until late in the fourth quarter.

But another miracle was delivered unto the Tar Heels, the sort of miracle that keeps the fire burning between Carolina and Duke.

With less than four minutes to play, Kupec fired a pass to Loomis. TOUCHDOWN. The defense held Duke on the next series and returned the ball to Carolina. With less than 20 seconds left in the season, Kupec gave the ball to Lawrence who ran for another touchdown.

Duke fell to Carolina, 16-15.

Loomis' touchdown reception was his seventh, tying a record set in the 40's by Art Weiner, and Lawrence's 56-yard performance on the last drive gave him a second straight 1,000-yard season.

In 20 seconds, faith in Carolina football had been restored. The defense was awesome; the offense was sparkling, and suddenly the team that should have been so great was just that.

Chicago, November 29, 1978. Fourteen basketball players, two managers, a trainer, an assistant coach, two cameramen, a publicity man, two sports writers — the whole lot shivering in the clutch of Lake Michigan's breezes — step onto a bus outside the plush Water Tower Hyatt House. Evanston, the Northwestern Wildcats and the official unveiling of the 1978-79 basketball season lie 30 minutes up the lake's shore.

Quiet. Little is said. Much is thought. Nobody thinks we're worth a crap. Screw 'em. Phil Ford this. Phil Ford that. So what? We're okay. To hell with Duke. To hell with State. Screw 'em. What's in a ranking, anyhow. Sports writers are buffoons.

The bus pulls into the heavy late afternoon traffic and makes a left where The Machine — Richard Daley or no Richard Daley — says it shouldn't. One of Chicago's finest, conveniently, is nearby. The driver and cop exchange words. The assistant coach, seated behind the driver, leans forward. "Hey, we've got a ballgame to make," Bill Guthridge says.

The ballgame, eventually, is made.

And that's the story from snowy Evanston. The Tar Heels in a cakewalk. The final: Carolina 97, Northwestern 67. Back in sixty seconds.

The skeptics, confused yet pleased that all hell had not broken loose with Tar Heel basketball — as they had figured — were back to their front-running selves by mid-December. I told you Colescott would do okay. Al Wood — UNbelievable. Now if OK could get some help underneath . . .

Magie Johnson, front court to Gregory Kelsner. Ten seconds. Over to Vincent, right side. Ten-footer is up, bounds high, no good. Colescott grabs the rebound. TAR HEELS WIN!!!

Noise in Carmichael Auditorium. Optimism in The Pit. The beer, the talk flows on Franklin Street. Duke lost, State lost. And lost. And lost. So much for two-fifths of the preseason Top Five. Bradley steals, Yonakor passes, O'Koren rebounds, Wood swishes, Dean Smith directs, instructs, argues, thinks, substitutes. By mid-January, the scorecard reads: 12-2 overall, 3-1 in the conference, Top Ten in the nation.

Bradley's shot from the corner . . . way off, State rebounds. Austin front court, across the time line. Bradley slips behind him . . . he steals it!!! — UNBELIEVABLE — downcourt . . . Dudley Bradley for the SLAM DUNK . . . BOOM . . . Heels 70, Wolfpack #9! Secretary of Defense . . . Pickpocket of the ACC . . . "It was almost like seeing God . . ."

Tar Heels win a lot, lose a few. Devils win a lot, lose a few. Heels top ACC standings by one game going into the last two hours of the regular season. Rainy night in Durham. Go To Hell, Carolina, Go To Hell Carolina . . . Dean Smith sucks, Dean Smith sucks . . .

Colescott simply holding the ball now. Bounces it once. Over to O'Koren way out. Duke still sitting back in its zone.

Going into the last hour of the season, Duke leads 7-0. "We had hoped to score a touchdown and then go for two right before the half ended," Smith kidded later.

Mike Gminski has been ejected: he's been thrown out! Al Wood is still on his back, looks like he's out cold. Colescott has a few words for Gminski. Smith has a few more. Holy Toledo!

Heels win the bye on a draw, relax in Chapel Hill while Duke, State, Virginia, Maryland, Clemson, and Wake Forest fight it out in Greensboro. A laughter the next night over Maryland. Then Duke, Again. We'll kick ass this time.

Colescott in the middle, chased by Vince Taylor. Heels by five. Bradley breaks . . . Colescott, bounce pass by Gminski to Bradley . . . BOOM!

Las Vegas says the Heels should take it all. Tony Price and the Penn Quakers don't. Black Sunday. Penn 72, Heels 71.

Unbelievable.

rodentites

rodentites are small, rod-shaped structures that are found in the cytoplasm of certain cells. They are composed of a protein core and a lipid shell. Rodentites are thought to be involved in the transport of lipids and other molecules within the cell.

They are also found in the membranes of certain organelles, such as the endoplasmic reticulum and Golgi apparatus. Rodentites are thought to play a role in the regulation of membrane fluidity and the organization of the cytoskeleton.

Introduction

Chapter 1

The first chapter discusses the importance of understanding the context of the data. It covers the various factors that can influence the results of a study, such as the sample size, the method of data collection, and the potential biases. The author emphasizes the need for transparency and honesty in reporting the findings, and provides a detailed overview of the research methodology used in the study.

The second chapter focuses on the analysis of the data, including the statistical methods used to interpret the results. The author provides a clear and concise explanation of the various statistical tests and their applications, and discusses the limitations of each method. The chapter also includes a detailed discussion of the results of the study, and the author's interpretation of these findings.

The final chapter discusses the implications of the study and the potential applications of the findings. The author highlights the importance of the research in the field and provides a detailed overview of the various ways in which the findings can be used to inform practice and policy. The chapter concludes with a summary of the key findings and a call to action for further research in the area.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 19

Freshmen arrive in residence halls starting at 10 a.m. Beware of stampedes by little men in blue shirts as you try to make your way up the stairs to your new home. Roommates are urged to calculate the wattage of all appliances before moving in. Coordinated bedspreads are also encouraged.

8 a.m.-2 p.m. NROTC Open House. Naval Armory. Drop by and crawl inside a real torpedo tube. Learn to say "submarine" while holding your tongue. Followed by watermelon seed spitting contest.

9 a.m.-4 p.m. General College Open House. South Building. Play "Find your Advisor." Winner actually gets to make an appointment.

10 a.m.-5 p.m. Orientation Information Centers open. Located in the Carolina Union and Chase Cafeteria. Distribution of color-coded maps. Meet Selma, the University Cashier, and pay your library dues. Memorize your Social Security number.

2:30-5 p.m. Alumni Association Reception. Alumni House. Come meet the names behind the bucks. Begging for money, jewelry, Cadillacs, or basketball tickets strictly prohibited.

4 p.m. Commuting freshmen meet, exchange names, form carpools, and choose Secret Santas. Carolina Union, Room 217.

5 p.m. Dinner with Counselors. B.Y.O.F. Followed by after-dinner stroll to downtown Carrboro. Learn why it's called the "Paris of the Piedmont."

6:30 p.m. Freshman Convocation. Carmichael Auditorium. Required. Meet the other members of your class and sing along with James Taylor. Laughing at Chancellor Taylor's joke is mandatory.

8:30 p.m. Residence Hall Meetings. Formal introduction to your dormitory. Learn how to conserve water, blow fuses, and clog the sinks with string beans.

A Freshman's Guide to Orientation Week

SUNDAY, AUGUST 20

- 6 a.m. Early morning doughnuts in the residence halls. See your entire dorm in pajamas.
- 11 a.m. Religious services and activities. Experiment with your beliefs. Wear a smock, shave your head, and sell flowers downtown.
- noon-3 p.m. Transfer students arrive, are informed that none of their credits will transfer.
- 1-5 p.m. Freshmen meet with General College Advisors. Students are advised to have all registration forms required for graduation signed by their advisors at this time as it may be the last chance to do so.
- 3-7 p.m. Christian Fellowship Picnic for all new students. Eat cheese sandwiches and talk about Pat Boone and the Mormons. Supervised by local reverends. Front of Undergraduate Library. Free.

MONDAY, AUGUST 21

- 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Freshman Registration. Woollen Gym. A new experience. Feel the computer give you the shaft. Do NOT pass GO. Do NOT collect $200.
- 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Swimming test. Woollen Gym. Students must stay afloat in pool for five minutes. Clinging to the sides and gasping for air strictly prohibited. Students caught doing so will be pushed under with a pole.
- 4 p.m. Required Financial Aid Meeting for all freshmen receiving Financial Aid. Distribution of food stamps and dollar-off textbook coupons. Great Hall, Carolina Union.
- 4:30-6 p.m. Ice Cream Party, sponsored by Christian Fellowship Organization. Presentation: "The World is Like Neapolitan Ice Cream." Parker Basement.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 22

ALL DAY. MERCHANTS' DAY. Local merchants hand out everything they can't sell. Collect free apples, pencils, balloons, Alka Seltzer, and jiggers of Coca-Cola. 7-11 a.m.

Freshman Registration continues.

The computer is laughing.

Woollen Gym. WARNING:

Breaking in line is a violation of the Honor Code punishable by banishment to N.C. State.

11 a.m.-5 p.m.

Re-Registration for Transfer Students. Also re-admitted students and sophomores not pre-registered are reluctantly matriculated and hung by their toes at sundown.

11 a.m.-2 p.m.

Zoology advanced placement examination (write a script for Mutual of Omaha's Wild Kingdom where Marlin is attacked by imprinted baby chicks). Also Biology advanced placement examination (compare the human anatomy to a nematode).

2-5 p.m.

Chemistry advanced placement examination (make a clone).

9 p.m.-1 a.m.

North Campus Street Dance. Raleigh Street between Upper and Lower Quads. Acclimation to the smell of reefer. Students learn to shag in 4 square inches while dodging broken glass.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 23

ALL DAY. "Fraternity and Sorority Introduction Day." An opportunity for association with students from upper middle-class white families. Not a Rush function.

7 a.m.-5 p.m. Registration for Returning and Re-Admitted Students. For pre-registered students: First day of Drop-Add. Hell temporarily relocates to Woollen Gym.

8-10 a.m. Mathematics 11 Exemption Examination (recite the multiplication table of 8 up to "8 x 36,897").

9 & 10:30 a.m. French and Spanish Achievement Tests. (Impersonate Charles D. Gaulle or Ponce D. Leon and explain, in the respective language, what the "D." is for).

1-2 p.m. Free hour to write home to Mom.

2-4 p.m. Physics 26 Placement Examination (demonstrate the melt-down of a nuclear power plant). 007 Phillips Hall.

2-4 p.m. German MLA Examination (the Wurst is yet to come). 404 Dey Hall.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 24

The fun's over. Classes begin.

Drop-Add continues. (So what? The Inquisition lasted for years).

South Campus Sabotage

It was at night that I first saw the Emerald City. We were driving up this winding asphalt slash when they just appeared stoutly on the horizon: there were four halls pulsing greenly through the night fog, each with its own brick road. They were hecatombs to some quota God, but we didn't know that yet. Like dusty moths in an all-night diner, we were just attracted to the lights

I had always heard about South Campus (UNC at Pittsboro, they called it) but had never considered going there, even for fun, until I was unceremoniously closed out of my freshman home, Spinster Dorm. My only connection with that part of the state was to the Pine Room's mutant brother, Chase Cafeteria — and that had been secondhand. A bunch of militant meal-plan freshmen had decided to meet at the U bus stop one night to ride down to Chase for some comparative injestion a la Ralph Nader. Next lunch meeting, they reported back to us that unlimited dosages of Pine Room leftovers weren't worth the ride. My own trip down the redbrick road began when the housing folks took me away from my home by the arboretum and offered me a room with a panoramic view on the fifth floor of Hinton James.

Actually the view is pretty good, especially on lucently veiled mornings of snow. Summer was still expiring its hot breath on my neck when I moved into James, so I wasn't fully appreciative at the time. On all floors people were discovering neighbors through doors and windows left open. Freshmen hovered by the elevators in name-tagged clumps and waited to be led around campus. My roommate was one of them, but I didn't realize it until I read the note she had left on our door. I walked to the side of the room that she had staked out and looked at her books: two cookbooks, Victoria Holt gothic novels, a "Carolina Course Review," a dictionary, and a Tolkien paperback trilogy. On her bed were three sensitive Impressionist posters, two mysterious Andrew Wyeth prints, and one Sylvester Stallone, still hot from the sun in the Pit, as were two warped records lying beside their receipt. She had left a matching bedspread on the dusty striped mattress that was to be my bed. After this, I felt fully introduced and hoped that she wouldn't return to smudge my mental graphics. Already dust was breeding a malicious rabble in the corner of the room. I had forgotten how methodically the dust would gild our belongings, ourselves. The room rotated with mustiness of dust recently made active. I went to the balcony for fresh air and watched stiff-armed cuckoopeople march back and forth with boxes. They were scanning the floors in both directions for friends or attractive legs. Although I didn't know anybody else who lived in James, I searched the crowd for people I might have passed in the library or on my way to class. For lack of a familiar face I went back to the room to tape trivia on the walls and arrange my things.

"Make sure all that tape is off the walls, sweep the floor — that dust is awful," my RA said, then left the room, crossed the hall and repeated, "Get all that tape off the wall and make sure to sweep the floor — this dust is awful." I could imagine the little purple words on the script that Carr Building had sent to all the RAs. In the corners the dust was still unabashedly procreating.

One afternoon during Orientation I was taking a friend up to my room when suddenly we heard the sounds "OOOH-OOH" returned by a higher pitched "OOOOH-OOHH-OOH" and another "OOOOOH-OOOH-OOH" and another and another.

"So what they say about James is true," he gloated. "It is a jungle."

"No, no," I was quick to explain, "Those are the Omega Psi Phi talking I mean not talking but . . ." It was hopeless and he just nodded as if he knew an awful secret about my health.

I got to know that type of look well during the first weeks in James. I got the same kind of look for different reasons from the people in my suite. Finally, a girl from across the hall came to my door and said, "You been smokin' that herb again. I can smell it clear across the hall." Then she turned and walked straight back into her room. Later I asked my roommate, "Is it bothering the other people that I smoke?" She hedged and giggled, hedged and giggled, like the girls in fifth grade who wouldn't sing "Rocka my soul in the (bosom) of Abraham."

"Well . . ."

"Come on, tell me." I sounded impatient, as if the suspense were subtly unnerving.

"They think it stinks up the hall, but nobody minds except Maribelle."

"Maribelle?" I was surprised that a girl who slept every night in her boyfriend's room would be so narrow about other things.

One Sunday evening not too many weeks later as I was wandering around my room, listening to WXYC, not quite ready to study, the door opened. I spun quickly to conceal the fact that I had been gazing at myself in the mirror.

"Got any herb?" It was the girl from across the hall.

"What is this — a frame or something?" I said. "Nope, sorry, I can't help you."

"It's not me against it. It's them." She indicated mysterious phantoms in the hall. "In Bunn (apparently a North Carolina town) we smoke herb all the time."

I sized her up in a professional way: Had she ever bitched at me for staying too long in the shower? Had I ever bothered her studying with loud talk? Had I ever borrowed clothes from her? I found no cause for offense on her part so I decided to risk it. "OKOK," I said, "but it has to stay in this room."

I pulled a joint out of my drawer and lit it. Although marijuana etiquette calls for the guest to light the joint, I figured they probably didn't know what marijuana etiquette was in Bunn.

My roommate walked in and said, "Why don't you go out on the balcony?" as if we were two cats that had crapped on the dining room carpet, so we left.

It was good to be outside, though. We sat with our feet hanging over the balcony and watched the people on other floors going back and forth. The wing that faced us looked like stacked and musty Chinese carry-out cartons. We smoked in silence until there was nothing to hold but a resinous rag of paper. She flicked it over the railing with her thumb and we watched it die in mid-air. A light the color of a Halloween pumpkin's eye came to us from the hall, surrounded our doorways, spilled behind us in our rooms. When I came back in, my roommate watched me, looking closely for the altered slant of eye, the slack mouth, the grin. I totally frustrated her with a wide-eyed frown and turned up WXYC so that the gargling voices made a nice wall between us.

One night, a group of us were walking back from a concert on Ehringhaus Field, down the redbrick road that leads to James. We piled into the elevator and immediately I smelled the ghost of PTA man past. I could smell the corner he had stood in; the pizza essence delineated his body.

"Who's hungry?" I asked.

"I am."

"Me."

"Me, too."

It was a consensus, so I called a meeting in my room. As we headed back to the elevators, I said, "Remember, nobody gets hurt. All we want are pizzas without anchovies."

We rode down in silence, contemplating our roles and feeling smug that we would finally have a college caper to drag from dusty memory and tell our kids. We stationed ourselves in strategic corners of the lobby. When friends came through we mumbled hello and then looked back at the floor. We couldn't be detained in a conversation about the band at Ehringhaus. The concert was a fortunate coincidence for us, since most of the Jamesites were over there listening to the music bouncing off the building. At 9:17 he came in, the little PTA man in red, carrying his precious silver cargo. We pushed our way into the elevator behind him and tapped the "Door Closed" button. He was a little wimpy thing with greasy hair and glasses, the burned-out hippie type turned organic that PTA usually attracts. Steve bumped the man against the wall and wrestled the oven out of his little fingers. He had dirty feline nails which managed to puncture Steve in the wrist. Steve jumped out at third floor with the oven in hand to climb the stairs to my room on the fifth. While the PTA man whined, "Gimme back those damn pizzas," I pulled the rope out of my purse. Before we got the sweat sock between his teeth he shouted, "I'll be charged for everything in there!"

We were too hungry to be sympathetic, but our hunger motivated us to an efficient wrap-up of our man, Symbionese Liberation Army style. On the tenth floor we got out, leaving the PTA man bound and gagged and the elevator on "Emergency Stop." Down to fifth we ran and slid into my room, giggling. Already Steve had taken out the three pizzas to send down the empty oven. We did enclose a dollar tip and a note explaining what had happened, pleading the little man's case with his superiors. I heard later that an RA had found him lying in the elevator and that there had been a search of the halls for the culprits. But we had turned out our lights, save one orange ember, and eaten in the dark.

I'm still searching for the Emerald City. James only glitters at night, and then from far away. W

Don Woodard: SHADES OF PINK AND KHAKI

I have this recurring nightmare. In my dream, a benign old woman — somebody's mother — looks down at me. She smiles for a moment, but just before she speaks, her lips spread a scowl across her face. It is then that I recognize her as the blend of every fraternity's housemother.

She says, "If you're going to be Greek, don't do it half-assed!"

"I'm sorry," I whimper, "but I'm a late bloomer."

"That makes no difference," she warbles, and for atonement she makes me hold a lighted match, allowing me to blow it out only when I have recited the Greek alphabet. Backwards.

I wake up ashamed and know that it's true: I am a borderline fraternity man. My colors are not pure pigment; they blend, bleed, mix, and fade. Khaki with red, pink with black, green with orange, blue with gray — I lie on the color wheel where pastels smear into primaries.

But it was not always this way. My arrival in Chapel Hill was monochromatic: paint it light blue, the color of my Munsingwear penguin shirts and Converse canvas sneakers. Being tossed into a world of baggy bermuda shorts and tri-colored belts was as unnatural as red apples look when seen through a green gel.

But tossed I was.

Mark and I found the invitations on the floor; it would not be the last time the space beneath our door lent itself as a campus-mail slot. We had, like so many other freshmen on one of those first nights at Carolina, spent the evening at a street dance sponsored by Upper Quad (or was it Lower Quad? after four years I still get the two confused), where never had so many stood for so long with their hands in their pockets. (Ah, the tribal rites of the socially self-conscious.) There, in our stupor, in the doorway of our dorm room decorated with two complimentary Pabst Blue Ribbon poster-calendars, we intently read our summons. The honors of our presence had been cordially requested to attend the Betas' first fraternity rush function.

A daiquiri party. I'd had daiquiris before. Once. They were made with rum, I recalled. But before I could ponder the significance of attending a party where honest-to-God mixed drinks were being served, I noticed "Dates Welcome" engraved in the bottom left-hand corner of the invitation. Dates? Good Lord, I was an out-of-state freshman who had yet to learn his RA's name and here someone was expecting me to bring a girl to this thing. Mark and I reasoned it would be best to go stag, that we'd have a better opportunity to meet the brothers. You know, get a first-hand look at what the Greek system was all about. Besides, we had no other choice.

It was the first time I had worn a coat and tie among my peer group since Sunday School days. Nonetheless, I felt rather warm and witty in my three-piece Sears mix-n-match suit, the polyester brushing against my shoulders with every firm handshake I dealt out. But there we stood, suffering the occasional headaches from drinking those "lime slushes" too quickly; feeling immensely neurotic since we were two of the few who had not brought dates; repeating for the umpteenth time our majors, career goals, and places of birth. (The presence of a rushee from anywhere beyond the bounds of the Tar Heel state seemed to bring many of the bro's into an excited state. I was the crowbar that pried open a new can of conversation: "So,

Don, tell me: How did you happen to come to Carolina?')

There was even a corner of the room which reminded me of Animal House, where rushees like Abdul and a Stanley or two stood reading old composites as had been suggested to them.

So, I thought, this is fraternity life.

But that was hundreds of pumps of the keg and many years ago, and a lot more add-a-beads have been strung on the gold chain of life. Past perceptions being what they are — or aren't — I feel the need to lean on more current observations. I need some definition.

Definition. Good old Merriam Webster, pretender to the throne of the dictionary kingdom, offers substance: "frater-ni-ty, n., 1. A group of people associated or formally organized for a common purpose, interest, or pleasure as a men's student organization formed chiefly for social purposes, having secret rites and a name consisting of Greek letters."

Okay, breaking it down we start off with "common purpose." There was the Homecoming parade. A lot of people wearing Greek letters climbed aboard a dozen beer trucks, tossed beer at the crowd, poured beer over themselves, distributed frisbees with beer logos, and consumed large quantities of beer, all toward a common purpose: BEER. Deem it purpose, interest, or pleasure, the guys on Cameron Avenue gathered to flash diving cards as Granville East residents passed merrily on their way to BA 71 or English 82. "Seven-five. Seven-five. Eight. Eight-five. And a four from the Phi Gam judge."

Somewhere along the line the word "common" acquired negative overtones. That's unfortunate. If God hadn't wanted to single out men who wore shoes without socks, he never would've created fraternities. Besides, to the trained eye, there are literally hundreds of different patterns for madras blouses. To all but the undiscerning, there is a positive approach to conventionality. Tretorn, after all, offers sneakers with a stripe in more than one pastel color.

As long as we're holding the Webster's ruler up to the UNC Greek system, let's include the rites, secret or otherwise. Hazing was an occasional unkept secret across campus. Sometimes you couldn't help stumbling over a pledge counting the number of bricks in a path across the street from his house. On a given evening you might drive alongside a car at a stoplight and witness three of the four occupants donned in black hoods. Monty Python is right: nobody expects the Spanish Inquisition.

But as any faithful viewer of National Geographic specials will remind you, all rites need not be secret. Toga parties kicked off the year, and strictest devotees pinned alligators to their sheets. (I have often wondered where they found the unattached cloth reptiles; God knows they didn't take razor blades to their own shirts.) If you were a local band without a black lead singer and didn't have Otis Day and the Knights' "Shout" in your repertoire, you might as well have hung up your sequin suit — even if you could play "Tighten Up" and "With This Ring" like no one else in town.

Not that there weren't a lot of mixers every week. There were beach mixers, morning mixers (those participants still standing by 8:00 a.m. could saunter into Econ 31 with a book in one hand and a Bloody Mary in the other), stranger mixers, get small mixers, punk rock mixers, gangster mixers, come-as-your-favorite-vegetable mixers. You name it, they mixed it.

Women, too, mixed new colors for their palettes. Seas of pink and green moved from house to house during fall formal rush. Even non-Greeks noticed the change in campus color as they moved from the Pit toward Carroll Hall. Some of us observed the process of infiltration as the staunchest dormrats were seen sporting buttondowns and creaseless khakis. The wheel turned; the colors blurred. Alas, everything used to be so black and white.

Color me gray. My idea of the "layered look" is a Coors beer T-shirt beneath an Oxford shirt. My corduroys flare. I can shag, but only to the likes of Boston and The Beatles.

But despite my self-proclaimed need to be placed on a separate shelf, I can't read my trends into the lifestyles that go on without me. Will the guys in Winston dorm soon be taking road trips? Or will the DKEs hold a make-your-own-sundae study break? Or will hell freeze over in our lifetime?

But as yet nobody's drowned in a gator pit, whether it be filled with water, beer, or dance-floor air. Me, I'd rather keep my feet dry. I'm fairly content just to sit back, drink my scotch and water out of a 7-Eleven Slurpee baseball trading cup, and watch the parade pass by.

Chapel Hill: Beer Drinking Capital of the World

Milwaukee may be the nation's beer capital, but Chapel Hill's consumption rate rivals world records. Chapel Hill students and townspeople consume an average of 27,500 cases of beer each week. It takes 32 trucks to transport the 660,000 cans (i.e. 7,920,000 ounces, or 61,875 gallons) of elixir to our fair city every week.

Translated to annual figures, Chapel Hillians consume 34,320,000 cans of beer each year, which means that Chapel Hill claims .096% of the beer produced in the United States.

West Germans, with the highest rate of beer consumption in the world, annually drink 38.8 gallons per capita, according to 1975 figures. The United States lags modestly behind with a per capita consumption of 16 gallons per year. In an effort to uphold American honor, Chapel Hillians (34,210 of them) chug 87.89 gallons (939 cans) of the brew each year, according to statistics.

Excerpts from "Beer: Town Has Staggering Consumption Rate," by Anne-Marie Downey, The Daily Tar Heel, October 27, 1978.

The Order of St. Andrew, founded in 1972, is an honorary for service to Henderson Residence College and its component residence halls, Alexander, Connor and Winston. Its members are chosen on the basis of courage, service, leadership, and high ideals. The Order is based upon Scottish themes and ideas, St. Andrew being the patron saint of that country and an important leader in the first century church. The emblem of the Order is the thistle, the great symbol of Scotland.

The Willie Person Mangum Medal in Oratory, the oldest and one of the most prestigious awards given at the University, was first awarded in 1878 by the daughters of Willie P. Mangum, Class of 1815. Mangum was a U.S. Senator from North Carolina for over thirty years. The medal is presented annually by the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies to the member of the graduating class giving the best oration, in the opinion of a selected group of judges, on a serious, relevant topic. Past winners of the medal include Governor Charles B. Aycock, UNC Presidents Frank Porter Graham and Edwin Alderman, Congressman L.H. Fountain, and newsman Charles Kuralt.

CANADIAN CLUB SYMPOSIUM

I would to heaven that I were so much clay,
As I am blood, bone, marrow, passion, feeling —
Because at least the past were pass'd away —
And for the future — (but I write this reeling,
Having got drunk exceedingly to-day,
So that I seem to stand upon the ceiling)
I say — the future is a serious matter —
And so — for God's sake — hock and soda water!

POSTSCRIPT

Kleenex wilts in the rose tinted box on her vanity, forgotten. He has left her red lipsticks littered around it. And still he wants To recreate her smile and her face with paint now dried on the brush.
Artist of the Ashes lies frustrated alone in the dark,
Insists she sit still for the pose
and a promise to remember.

Kim Snooks

Blue blossomed vanity
that opens to the gathering light,
At dusk a purple bruised flower,
pining for the attendance of day.
Chocolate kisses in the sun,
I never thought they'd melt
Or the loose grasp tanned to a leather grip — mail ordered Pamphlets of avant-garde ideas say theology is the crepuscule of dying faith in our ideals.

Kim Snooks

The image is a vertical composition. The left half shows a sunset over a body of water, with the sun low on the horizon and its light reflecting in a shimmering path down the water's surface. The sky is a mix of orange, yellow, and dark gray. The right half shows a dark, textured surface, possibly a table or floor, covered with a long, winding path of numerous coins. The coins are of various denominations and are scattered across the surface, some overlapping. The lighting is dramatic, with the sunset providing a warm glow on the left and the coins catching some light on the right.

Dogs chase a cumulus bitch across still night-gray sky
They combine and condense and we taste hot liquid from their union. Clouds sweat, not cry, the tears we command.
Cool glitter for the gutter,
we ignore its adornment
to slither through the mud in socks,
no more tied in shoes.

Kim Snickels

Few people know the effort, the energy, the sleeplessness, the agony, and the hours of hard work that went into this book. I am indebted to many people, but a few in particular deserve special thanks . . . to Tom, Mary, and Elizabeth who were the real creative force behind the book; to Mark Holton, Mary Ann, and Keith for their patience; to Sheila for her speed and hard work; to Heather for never getting tired of a tiresome job; to Aaron for coming through when we needed it most; to Craig for doing more than I asked; to Joy for her efficiency; to Mary Beth for her unselfishness; to the Carolina Coffee Shop for indelible memories; to Donald Boulton, William Strickland, and William Geer for their faith, support, and wise words; to John for his labor of love; to my family for helping me maintain my sanity and for always understanding; to George Bacso for his encouragement, support, and friendship; to Allen Ollove, Stephanie Kuhlman, Peter Galea, Curtis Kimball, and Richard Lymburner from Stevens Studios for everything they helped us accomplish; to J.B. Edwards, Bill Hunter, Roger Merritt, Frank Hendrix, Gerald Hunter, John Sprinkle, and Jay Casstevens from Hunter Publishing Company for their assistance . . . I am forever grateful.

The basic paper stock for the 1979 Yackety Yack is 80 lb. Lithofect Gloss Enamel, with the exception of the endsheets and Honoraria, which are printed on 80 lb. French Gray Hopper Chambray. Cover materials are GSB Black Book Cloth and Silver Gray Curtis Linen paper. The dust jacket was printed by Hunter Publishing Company, and the front photograph was shot with a 200 line screen. Standard typefaces include Avant Garde, Helvetica, Eurostile, Times Roman, Caledonia, Korinna, American Typewriter Medium, and Microgramma Medium Extended. Designer typefaces available upon request. The logos debossed on the cover and die cut from the endsheet were designed by Chrisann Ohler. The translucent page is UN Ultra Two by Kimberly Clark. All color photographs were hand separated from transparencies by Magna 4 of Little Rock, Arkansas; the following photographs were printed with a 200 line screen (lettered clockwise from top left): 10a, 11a, 20a, 21a, 36a, 36b, 36c, 37a, 168a, 169a, 261c, 264a, 264b, 264c, 265a, 265c, 272a, 272b, 273a, 273c, 273d, 276a, 276b, 277a, 277c, 281b, 284a, 285a, 285b, 290a, 291c, 582a, 583a, 583b, 583c, 585a, 591b, 593b, 594b, 595a, 597b, 597c.

This book is a study in color. It is an attempt to portray the variety of hues which tint our lives in a Carolina blue town. What we hope to create is a visual experience, a reflection of light rays from the sphere we call Chapel Hill, so that your memories of warm friendships, perennial frustrations, shared celebrations, and unique experiences will not fade quite so quickly with time.

We have attempted, more importantly, to show you the black and white which is so easily overpowered by chromatic vision. It is our hope that we have reproduced tonal variations delicately enough to reveal the subtleties of the characters we have found here.

Too often our judgement is tinted by refracted light, our attitudes are affected by surfaces, skin tones, latent images. We hope that our prism will help clarify your vision, however slightly, and that what you find here delights you, inspires you, challenges you.

We were not satisfied with anything less than the limits of our capabilities. It took more than 27,980 man hours and 6000 sheets of photographic paper to produce this book. Our staff has learned that sleep is an expendable commodity, that perfection is a frustrating and time-consuming goal, and that caffeine is man's best friend. Most of us have come to know the Carolina Union all too familiarly. But now that the 1979 Yackety Yack is finally an actuality, we hope to share the magic of the year with you.
Our book is your book. Enjoy.

This book was conceived with great expectations and undertaken with greater disappointments. The individual photographers pursued goals toward their own expression of the year. I hope their visions are somewhat similar to your own.

Tom Barnes, photography editor

I'd like to express my gratitude to Mark Frautschi for his expertise, Trey Monroe for his loyal support, Greg Dinkins for his agreeable disposition, Bill Russ for his enthusiasm, Mary Rench for her constancy, and Bob Donnan for so gratefully climbing the ladder to become next year's photo editor. But sincerely, I'd like to express my gratitude to Mark Holton for his diligent dialing, Monica Stevenson for her friendship and support, Keith Worrell for his superb group shots, and Kimberly who understood.

Those who were not on the staff but deserve great thanks are: Mr. & Mrs. Harrison, Mr. Allen Ollowe, Richard Baker, Ralph Carney, Aaron Stevenson, Chip Hoover, Rick Brewer, Steele Alphin, Lieutenant Mauer, Bill Eperson, Rick Clarkson, George Tediman, John Dominis, Roland Guduz, Jeaneane Stahl, Ed Chiles, Betsy Burke, Gary Middleton, J.B. Edwards, Jay Castevens, John Sprinkle, Linda Herbin, Terry Colpitts, Bob Klatt, Jim Grimsley, George Bacso, Kevin Ryan.

LEAVING

The soul screams.
Its echo vibrates the heart
your emotions speak.
For an instant
in the rush of saying good-bye you realize
you will miss this place,
its faces:
their voices
now become a part of you
as that echo hammers them into memory.
