TO Henry Donald Campbell, Ph. D., Sc. D., an inspiring teacher, a generous friend, a progressive educator and a faithful servant of Washington and Lee, this 1918 Calyx is affectionately dedicated.

DEDICATION

Henry Donald Campbell

HOR well toward three quarters of a century has the family of Campbell exercised important influence on the fortunes of Washington and Lee University.

In 1851, John Lyle Campbell, a graduate of the class of 1842, was elected professor of chemistry, mineralogy and geology, a position he held with distinction until his death in 1886. He was not only a successful teacher, but an investigator as well, and brought much reputation to the University through his geological work in the state at large.

Of his four sons, the eldest, John Lyle, Jr., became in 1977 clerk of the faculty and treasurer of the University; for nearly forty years he was the University official who came most closely into genial touch with all the students.

Of the next two sons, one is a leading minister of the Southern Presbyterian church, while the other died just as he was entering on the practice of medicine.

The youngest son, Henry Donald, or as he is more familiarly known among the students, "Harry Dean," the subject of this sketch, followed in his tastes more closely in his father's footsteps. As a student he assisted his father in his lecture experiments, and on taking his M.A. degree in 1882 was made instructor in chemistry and geology; two years later he was appointed assistant professor and awarded the Howard Houston fellowship. The following year he attained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. From 1886 to 1888, Dr. Campbell studied in Germany, chiefly devoting himself to geology, mineralogy and petrography.

In the meantime the chair of chemistry, mineralogy and geology, so long held by his father, was divided, and to the newly created professorship of geology and biology Dr. Campbell was called. This he accepted, having just previously declined a call to the chair of chemistry in Central University.

In 1906, Dr. Campbell was appointed dean of the University, and a few years later the increasing duties of this position forced him to relinquish active work in biology, though still remaining as head of the department. During the vacancy following the departure of President Denny to the University of Alabama, Dr. Campbell, as dean, and his brother, as treasurer, were acting co-presidents of the University.

As a teacher, Dean Campbell is interesting and inspiring, and his classes have always been favorite subjects of election. He began his teaching of geology and biology in a period when controversies over the "conflict of science and religion" were rife in the South, and when not a few of both teachers and students were swept from their moorings. Ever true to the truths of advancing science, he never drifted from the faith of his fathers, and many are the students who have been saved from religious shipwreck by thoughts brought out in his lectures and conversations.

As an investigator, he has continued and advanced the work begun by his father on the geology of Virginia, and is a recognized authority on the geology of Virginia's great Valley. This work has been of great value to the United States Geological Survey, for which he has contributed much labor, and has also been no small factor in the development of the mineral resources of the state.

As an administrator, Dean Campbell has had large influence in shaping the policies of the University for a score of years, and the policies advocated by him have ever been along the line of progress and high standards. Within, his influence upon the individual student, with whom he is brought by virtue of his office into close personal touch, has always been stimulating and helpful; without, in the counsels of college officials and educators, his words have always carried weight and pointed toward high ideals.

Dr. Campbell has taken great interest in the schools of Lexington, as did his father before him; he has for many years served on the school board, and the present excellence of these schools is due in no small measure to his oversight. In the Presbyterian church he is an efficient deacon.

Taken altogether, few men have been more useful to the University and the community.

The Winds of the Night

When the winds steal over the hills at night,
 With a message from the deep,
Then I sit and muse as the shadows fall,
 And the sunset fades in sleep.
A vision comes with the failing rays,
 Of the life that used to be;
In this mystic hour I'm back again
 At Washington and Lee.

Oh, there the sky is blue again,
 The hillsides green of yore,
The dull hard tone of the chapel bell,
 Is heard by me once more;
The columned halls, the vineclad walls,
 The quiet hum of the bee—
All these and more I find down there
 At Washington and Lee.

When the winds roam out of the clouds at night,
 And the dusk is deep and still,
I dream again of that grand old school
 On the darkening southern hill;
For the winds of night are calling wide,
 And their message comes to me,
Of the friends I miss in that home of bliss,
 Old Washington and Lee.

When the winds steal over the hills at night,
 As I long in vain for thee,
Oh, my soul has gone in this lonely hour,
 To Washington and Lee.

PROLOGUE

NO slight task has confronted the Editorial and the Business Staffs of the 1918 CALYX. Although the war had begun at the time the 1917 CALYX appeared on the campus, yet the greater part of the book had been prepared before the outbreak of hostilities, including the gathering of the ever necessary funds. This year the case was different. Not only has the student-body been reduced by over 25%, but the war-time conditions have proved naturally a detriment to the getting of a sufficient financial backing. Contracts had been signed in 1917 calling for a book on the same scale as that of previous years. It was, therefore, a matter of no mean size and difficulty to publish the book now in the hands of the Washington and Lee students. Due credit for this must be given to the capable and earnest Business Manager, Murray C. Shonn, former manager of OLD CENTER, Central University, Kentucky. He has spared no effort to procure the needed backing and to made the 1918 CALYX a success. The merchants who have so kindly given advertising space are to be thanked by the staff. They have proved themselves loyal to the college in these times of financial stress, and consequently deserve more than ever the hearty support of Washington and Lee men. To the students who have subscribed, to the societies who have paid for representation, and to all those who have in any way contributed to the financial side of the book, the staff extends the heartiest of thanks.

The artists, Messrs. Hartley, Waugh, and Welch have worked faithfully, and their drawings are far above the usual standard of college art. The various members of the staff have co-operated continually with the Editor, who takes this opportunity to thank them for their important services. For articles, the Editor desires to thank Dr. Henry L. Smith, Dr. W. LeConte Stevens, and Dr. J. L. Howe.

With these few words, the Editor and the staff turn over the 1918 CALYX to the Student-body. Above all other things has the attempt been made to have the book truly representative of Washington and Lee. It is sincerely hoped that this attempt has proved successful.

THE HONOR SYSTEM

IN every educational institution there must be some system of control in relation to examinations, recitations, and other tests applied to measure the student's success in work and to protect the integrity of the degrees conferred. No considerable number of young men can be brought together without the gradual development of a need for co-ordination and mutual obligation. Two methods are possible. The control may be autocratic, or it may be democratic.

The autocratic method is best exhibited in Prussia, where every man is taught to know his place, to obey orders, and to sustain the military organization of society. Spies are paid to report all who can be detected in the violation of orders, and the police are everywhere alert. The spy system is extended to other countries, especially in time of war; and here in America we are today continually in danger from these hated German spies.

The democratic method is that of representative government, in which popular sentiment is the basis for every law. We still need policemen; but the policeman's function is to enforce the will of a majority of the people rather than that of a military despot. The American college is an institution in which training is given, not only in academic and professional subjects, but in citizenship, in the maintenance of justice, in personal character.

The honor system is a system of student self-government in which each student pledges his word of honor to his fellow students that he will take no unfair advantage of them in the performance of any college work. It is a system that appeals to the manliness, the independence, the honesty, and the mutual loyalty of those who adopt it.

Whether a given body of students is capable of self-government has to be determined and demonstrated by the students themselves. No professor, or body of professors, can do so for them. No faculty is strong enough to incorporate the honor system into a working code. If the initiative does not come from the students themselves the system has no chance for existence. Its essential foundation is justice. It is unjust for a student by cheating to obtain for himself the reward which his classmate wins by hard work. The attempt thus to cheat betrays an individual deficiency which the majority refuse to tolerate; and the only possible resource is the elimination of the offender who had proved himself unfit to be considered a gentleman. The students merely insist that there shall be fair dealing in class-room, laboratory, and examination room, whether the professor is present or absent. Whoever resorts to trickery offends not so much the professor as the student body. In most cases the student is seeking a degree; and all are aware that the value of a degree depends on the thoroughness of the training which its holder has received. To attain it by fraud is to cheapen it; and the effect is thus to injure a large body of honest men in order to gratify the demands of a few who are dishonest. It is the right and the duty of the majority to protect themselves and to maintain the integrity of the degree which the college confers upon them as the reward of honest work.

If with a view to self-protection the student body, through its representative executive committee, makes a law that students shall not cheat, this law can not be enforced unless those who have made it are determined to punish the violators. In adopting the honor system each man pledges himself not to cheat or to tolerate cheating. It is useless to say that the mere adoption of an honor system ought to be enough, and that all students should then be trusted to act honorably. We are required to deal with human nature, not as it ought to be, but as it is actually found in a world full of temptations. The only way by which the majority can maintain their rights against a cheating minority is for each man to make it his duty to prevent any member of the minority from trampling upon the law. Each student must be a good citizen. If he reports to the executive committee one who has been guilty of cheating, he will perhaps be called a spy by the guilty man; but he must have enough force of character to brave this risk, to face the defendant, and to prove that the accusation is true. No citizen is ever criticized adversely for exposing a criminal.

The honor system at Washington and Lee has long been an organic part of the institution. Traditions here are well established. It is merely an application of the standards of Washington, of Lee, of William L. Wilson, in political life. It grew with the growth of the college. It maintained its strength in the day of adversity. It will not be allowed to grow weaker in the day of prosperity. It is the best system in existence today, and the present generation of students must be depended upon to guard it as jealously as a man of spirit would guard the honor of his home.

Senior Class History

TO compress into a dozen volumes the achievements of the Class of 1918 would be a stupendous task, the work of a Rhodes or a Bancroft. Obviously then, this will be but an epitome of our remarkable history.

We numbered eighty odd when we assembled for the first time in Tucker Hall, in September, 1916, to listen to words of admonition from "Daddy" Burks. We can imagine the sage profs shaking their heads in disgust when they considered the material with which they were to work, and yet, as time passed, the same professors began to realize that we were a class of exceptional legal talent. Our latent potentialities evinced themselves beyond refutation.

In the spring of 1917 came the declaration of war with all its attendant distracting influences. Immediately most of our best legal talent emulating the patriotic character of the founders of our college, volunteered and entered the service of the nation. Yet under these adverse conditions we survived the Junior year with a goodly number.

On our return in September, 1917, but a mere handful, a fragment of our noble class answered the roll call. Of a class of eighty, only eighteen applied for degrees. But undaunted by our depleted ranks, we resumed our work with an unflinching determination.

Just a brief resumé of our experiences during our two years. We witnessed with regret the passing of "Daddy" Burks, the grand old man of Tucker Hall, from the position of Dean of the Law School, to that of Judge on the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia; the appointment of "Uncle Joe" as Dean was hailed with delight, however. We regretted furthermore, the resignation of Clovis Moomaw from the faculty to become a first lieutenant in the army; we went through the ordeal of the case system experiment under Mr. Dodd; and lastly we fell victim to Judge Quarles' new system of lectures.

Such have been our trials and experiences. By patient endurance we have withstood the test, and now await our reward in June.

CRALLE FAUNTLEROY BLACK-WELL

ΣΦΕ, ΚΒΦ

Kenbridge, Virginia

"Blanche," as he is known by his fraternity brothers, is one of the youngest members of the Senior class, having first seen the light in 1897. Graduating from Kenbridge High School at the early age of fifteen, he decided he needed some practical experience before undertaking to solve intricate and knotty legal problems. Consequently, he spent three years on the road as a traveling salesman before appearing at Tucker Hall in 1916. Since entering here he has accumulated a list of grades of which any one would be proud. His greatest achievement, however, he says, is dancing. A quick thinker, a good student of strong mind, he will make his little niche in the legal profession.

ADAM BROYLES BOWMAN, JR.

ΠΚΑ

Johnson City, Tennessee

Adam suddenly sprang into the limelight during his senior year by jumping into North River one Sunday afternoon on a wager, while wearing his "Sunday best." Adam says that it didn't disturb him in the least. But aside from his ability as a diver he is an excellent example of a model college man. He took two years of academic work at Milligan College, and then deciding to dissociate himself from co-educational colleges forever, he took up work in the legal department of the Carolina, Clinchfield and Ohio Railway. In September, 1916, he entered the Law School of Washington & Lee, and as evidence of his legal ability he successfully passed the Virginia bar exam in June, 1917. He has always displayed those qualities which are indicative of undoubted success. Upon graduation he expects to enter the employment of the C. C. & O. again—not as stenographer, however, but in all probability as chief counsel.

MICHAEL COOPER
Norfolk, Virginia

By an early display of extreme loquaciousness Mike was unanimously chosen as president of the Sphynx Club, which office he has filled to perfection. Mike says he is an exception, and we agree with him most heartily in his statement, but what we want to know is an exception to what? We leave to Mike to elucidate. In his Junior year he demonstrated with remarkable certainty his exceptional ability to define (?) legal terms, as the class can verify by his attempt in criminal law. He was born in Tarboro, North Carolina, and received his early education at Maury High School, Norfolk, Virginia, before entering the Law School in 1916. He expects to practice in Norfolk, and we predict his consistent hard work will bring success.

JAMES KENT EARLY
KΣ, ΦΔΦ
Hillsville, Virginia

Kent, with his pleasant "Howdy!", his cheerful, easy, happy-go-lucky manner, won his way with graceful ease into the hearts of all the legal celebrities of Tucker Hall. Kent constitutes the one-half of what is known as the Hillsville twins—Joe Tipton being the other guilty party. They are as inseparable as House Mountain is from Rockbridge County. They patronize Bill Higgins's place of business together, study together, attend and miss lectures together, and expect to practice law together. Dublin Institute is responsible for Kent's preparatory education. From here he went to William & Mary College in order to develop further his mental powers before associating himself with the legal luminaries at Tucker Hall, which he entered in September, 1916. He expects to practice law in Virginia.

LOY DILLARD ESTES

KΣ, ΦΔΦ, ΠΑΝ

Commerce, Texas

This is Dip's second appearance with a Senior Law Class representation in the CALYX, for the book of 1917 will be found to contain an account of the statesman under discussion. It seems that Dip planned to get his L. L. B. last spring, and that one of the professors had made entirely different arrangements. The result was that Dip summered in Lexington, broussing around in Real Property for exercise. He discovered a four-leaved clover and succeeded in ridding himself of the only detriment to his degree. This June the faculty will present him with it, therefore.

Meanwhile Dip, whose powers of speech was dwelt upon in this space last year, has been practicing law in his native state of Texas. From all that can be learned he has been doing very well, and bids fair to rise to a high position in his community, and eventually, his friends believe, to things even better.

RUSSEL BRYAN GOODWIN

KΣ, ΦΔΦ

Wheeling, West Virginia

Being a firm believer in the saying that a little learning is a dangerous thing, Russ thoroughly equipped himself in preparation for his appearance at Tucker Hall in September, 1916, by taking his B.A. degree at Washington & Jefferson College. We have in him an excellent student, a proficient athlete, and a man displaying an exceptional amount of legal talent. Although never showing any of his athletic prowess while with us, except as umpire or referee, he was an All-American quarterback on the W. & J. football team for four years. He is a firm believer in preparedness, as evidenced by his ready, pointed replies to the professional inquisitions. If he continues to display the same excellent qualities as a practicing lawyer that have characterized him as a student, we know that his native state will feel proud of him in the future.

CHARLES RUFAS McCoy
Leck, Virginia.

Mac first saw the light of day at Leck, Virginia, in 1895, and received his early education at Clintwood High School before entering Washington and Lee in 1916. As a matter of interest, Leck is in Southwest Virginia, where, as Mac says, "they produce men, not merely human beings." From the day's early dawn to the chiming of midnight bells, Mac can be found in Tucker Hall, hard at work. The faculty honored him with the position of librarian, of which office he has been found to be a competent incumbent. In December he was one of the few who convinced the bar examiners of Virginia that he was qualified to practice the legal profession. Of an exceptionable strong character, an untiring and faithful worker, and a systematic worker, Mac is certain to achieve success. His classmates wish him God-speed.

GEORGE MINOR McLAUGHLIN
AXP, ΔΘΦ
Huntington, West Virginia

To find a man who can smoke more cigars, eat more tobacco, be a better all-round good fellow, and be a better student than "Baldy" would be a life's job. His one besetting sin is in attempting too much rather than too little. Woe be unto the opposing counsel when Baldy once gets started, for he will prove himself a veritable Trojan in action. If it be true that half the battle of life is won when you have acquired the habit of work, then Baldy has his half cinched, for he is a ceaseless worker. Baldy made his appearance at Tucker Hall in the fall of 1915 after receiving his academic work at Marshall College. By his warm-hearted friendship and congenial nature, he soon won the respect, honor, and confidence of all with whom he came in contact. A thorough student, a hard worker, a scholarly gentleman, we feel safe in predicting a bright future for him.

EVERETT BRYAN PENNY-
BACKER

Belleville, West Virginia

Few men possess the rare capacity for an unlimited amount of work as Penny has displayed since his sojourn with us. Since making his appearance at Tucker Hall he has demonstrated beyond a reasonable doubt to the inmates of the said institution his ability as a student. Most of his grades approach the century mark. He came to us in January, 1917, and at once devoted himself to his work with a zeal and earnestness seldom witnessed. During the first term of his senior year he carried every ticket in the law school, and successfully passed every one of them with an average high in the nineties. His immediate plans after Commencement are to pass the bar exam and then practice law in his native state. He will not need to spend any time in looking for a companion—he already has one.

ADELSON HARPER POLING

AXP, ΔΦΦ, ΚΒΦ
Hendricks, West Virginia

Judge hails from the bare hills of West Virginia. He graduated from Greenbrier Presbyterian Military School in 1914, and after staying out of school for two years, entered Washington & Lee in the fall of 1916. The fact is, he arrived in Lexington in September, 1915, but found Lexington so little to his liking that he packed his grip and took the next train to Tucker County. Since casting his lot with the Law School he has enthusiastically applied himself to the study of law. Not only has he been successful along this line of work, but he has won political distinction by being elected Executive Committeeman by the Senior Law Class. The only thing that breaks in on Judge's attention to his studies is the necessity for frequent trips back to West Virginia. Necessity here is in the feminine gender.

Judge expects to practice law in his native state, and from the character of his work at Washington & Lee, his classmates predict a bright future for him, and prophesy that the nickname of Judge will in time become his real title.

THOMAS HERRING PRATT
 ΦΓΔ, ΚΒΦ, ΦΑΔ, W. F.
 Ridgefield, N. J.

"Stretch" has been a visitor at Tucker Hall since the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. "Stretch" is a student who believes in tripping merrily as one goes, and in letting the world take care of itself. His chief source of delight is in receiving a semi-annual, two-sheet publication of Kingsley Preparatory School which is responsible for his early education. He was scheduled to receive his degree in 1917, but deciding that he was needed in the aviation service, he quietly and peacefully and legally divorced himself from the said aggregation. Soon after college opened last fall, however, "Stretch" was with us again, ready to receive his degree in June. He expects to practice law in his native state. The best wishes of his class go with him.

BURTON SHARPE SANFORD
 ΚΒΦ, S. and C.
 Ripley, Tennessee

"Strut" says he has been here ever since Bill Rafferty and House Mountain have been. It was in 1916 that "Strut" took his B.A., at the same time sandwiching in with law. For some reason, which "Strut" refuses to state, but we think that it was because he desired more intellectual classmates, he decided that the law class of 1917 was not to his liking, and he consequently remained out of college 1917-17. The fall of 1917 found him one of the most earnest workers in getting inside information as to Boss's quizzes. "Strut" plans to take the bar exam after Commencement, and then to go to war if Uncle Sam will have him. He has been refused three times already he says. Just the enumeration of a few college honors, and we will give the reader a rest.

Bob is the sort of chap who believes in taking his time to accomplish a certain end. Rather conservative, slow to speak and act, there is nothing of the sensational about him, beyond the fact, note it please, that he has established the reputation of being a handsome ladies' man and what time he could neglect from the presence of the fair sex he has devoted to the study of law. In glancing over Bob's history, we conclude that he is fairly well equipped educationally to leave Tucker Hall in June. Upon his graduation from Randolph Macon Academy, he entered Richmond College, and upon completing the course there, matriculated at Washington and Lee for law in 1913. Owing to unavoidable circumstances, Bob was compelled to remain out of college for two years, thus accounting for his presence with the class of 1918.

He is the secretary-treasurer of his Senior Class.

HARRY EDGAR SNYDER

Keedysville, Maryland

"H. E." as he is familiarly known, comes from "God's country," as he constantly describes his native state. He drifted into Tucker Hall from Maryland State College in the fall of 1916, and since then, his congenial nature, his quiet unassuming manner, and gentlemanly ways, have won him a high place in the estimation of his classmates. Although not a star, he is one of the most consistent and conscientious workers of the class. He still retains his love for Nature study begun at Maryland State, as is evidenced by his frequent week-end trips, during his Senior year, to behold enchanted the "beauty" of Natural Bridge. With his constant hammering determination, Maryland in Harry Snyder will have without doubt an upbuilder of the state.

ROBERT BLAKE STOTLER

ΔΘΦ

Clarksburg, West Virginia

With just propriety, and without fear of calumny, we may fittingly call Bob "The Prodigal Son." Of course, reasons must be given for this appellation. Bob took his B.S. degree in engineering in 1910 and followed the profession of civil and mining until the fall of 1916, when the call of his Alma Mater caused him to return and drink once more of her inexhaustible fountain of learning. This time, however, Bob put in his appearance at Tucker Hall. Immediately upon his arrival here, he became one of the old standbys for his conservative thinking and logical conclusions. The class honored him with the office of President of the Senior Class. Bob says that he intends to lead the life of a secluded barrister until the world makes a beaten path to his door. Judging from his record, the path will soon be beaten.

Richmond, Virginia

Behold Otto, the boy wonder of the Law School. For some reason or other Otto wasn't taken very seriously until he successfully gave Real Property a knock-out blow. Then it began to dawn upon us that he possessed considerable legal talent, and also ability to cram over night. According to Judge Quarles, Otto is destined to become a great corporation lawyer. He says, moreover, that he expects to follow the Judge's advice, and make that branch of the profession his life's work. His preparatory education was received at John Marshall High School before associating himself with the legal atmosphere of Tucker Hall. He expects to practice his profession in his native town of Richmond. His classmates extend to him their most cordial wishes in that work.

Hillsville, Virginia

Who would think that this quiet, law abiding chap comes from such a place as Hillsville? It must be true, however, for Joe refuses to deny it. Coming to us from Hampden-Sydney with a B.A. degree, he has maintained the high standard of the sons of his Alma Mater. Since making his appearance at the law school in 1916, he has consistently divided his time between Bill Higgins's pool room and Tucker Hall. But with all of this Joe is an excellent student and possesses one of the keenest intellectual and analytical minds in the class. Joe, as a box artist, won his monogram in baseball in the short-lived season of 1917. Upon graduation he expects to take the bar exam and then enter the aviation service.

"Gentlemen, I have in mind a gentleman of sociability, adaptability, affability, and capability. I wish to present for vice-president the name of Slim Williams, the gentleman from Oklahoma." (Extract from "Stretch" Pratt's nomination speech in presenting the name of Slim for vice-president.) Well, we agree with "Stretch." This describes our tall, handsome Slim to a proverbial T. Slim followed the example of many others before him by spending two years in the academic department in order to acclimate himself to the campus "rich in historic interest." before becoming an inmate of Tucker Hall in September, 1916. Slim is a boxer of some ability, winning the heavy-weight championship of the college in 1917. With the same degree of ease and grace that he puts across the night-cap and the ring, he has given the solar-plexus blow to each and every of his law tickets. A bright future is before him.

Junior Law History

H. G. ROBERTSON, President

THE first year law class that assembled for work at Tucker Hall in the fall of 1917, proved to be the smallest in many years. Compared with the Junior Law Class of last session, the entering class of this year had suffered a decrease of about 60%. This great loss in numbers was not characteristic of Washington and Lee alone. Reports from all the law schools in the country showed a loss in law students even greater than that at Tucker Hall.

What the Junior Law Class of the present year was lacking in number, was offset by the earnestness and sincerity of purpose of most of the men. From the outset the new matriculates set themselves to hard and diligent labor. As in past years, Contracts and Real Property proved to be the chief stumbling blocks in the path of the seekers of justice. Several of the Juniors who had distinguished themselves during the term by long and brilliant arguments on the floor of the classroom, wherein they had endeavored to elucidate the fundamental principles of the subject better than the professors were able to, were found among those who must repeat the courses. True it is that the ready and flowing tongue does not always indicate the amount of real knowledge. On the whole, however, the members of the class have upheld the high standards of past Junior classes. Even in the realm of college politics the class took early in the year an active interest, even to the extent of considering running a candidate for the office of presidency of the student body.

The class was the third to enter the law school under the administration of Joseph R. Long, affectionately called "Uncle Joe" by the law students at large. Dean Long was found to be a capable and energetic professor, one who takes an active and continued interest in the men in his school. In the person of Judge Quarles the Juniors found a new professor. Judge Quarles after the first term, found it advisable to institute reading classes in his courses, whereby many of the class were enabled to better themselves in the fundamentals of one of the most important of the three "R's." "Boss" Moreland soon came into high esteem among the new men, who enjoyed his method of instruction and profited greatly from it.

For the future, the class hopes to maintain its roll as intact as possible in these war-time days. With continued seriousness of purpose, the endeavor will be made to master carefully and accurately the fundamental principles of the greatest of professions, that of the law. That done, there is no doubt but that the success of the class in after life will be assured. In years to come more than one eminent justice and prosperous barrister will be found, upon examination, to have been a member of the law class of Washington and Lee that entered college in September, 1917.

History of the Senior Class

WHEN the present Seniors, as a class of 180 freshmen, first entered W. & L. in 1914: the Sophomores designated us as their special charges and initiated us into the mysteries of campus life. After having successfully imbibed these lessons, we passed them on to our successors, the present Juniors.

But all of our time was by no means consumed in activities of this kind, for we were ably represented in football and intellectual line-ups, the publications, basketball, social functions and musical performances. But all these things have been narrated by our chroniclers of the past three years.

Although our numbers were small last year, they are still less this year because one-half of the class has answered the call of our nation and are now representing us in the various branches of service. But we have made up for our lack of quantity by the quality of our work, for one-fourth of the class are on the honor roll in scholastic work having made an average grade of "A." While the Class of 1918 has given up most of its athletes to help get Kaiser Bill, it still furnished the captain and center of the football team. We have also given editors for the three college publications, a manager for one of them and for basketball, a president for the student body, the Fancy Dress Ball and Finals.

In bidding farewell to this sacred spot where we have received so much inspiration for future life and service, the Seniors wish their Alma Mater long continuing success in training the youth of our land and hope to repay our great debt to her in every possible way.

LESTER DALLAS ARNOLD

ΩΔΚ, S. and C., ΣΥ

Lexington, Virginia

It was a cold and wintry day in January of 1894 that a signal honor was bestowed upon the little town of Winchester, Virginia, by the grace of divine Providence. For it was then and there that Lester Dallas Arnold came into this cruel world. Since then L. D. has been making himself useful in various ways. Prepared for college at the McDonogh School, Maryland, he entered Washington and Lee in 1914 as a candidate for the B.A. degree. He has specialized in Commerce. Lester is an expert typewriter and stenographer, and has earned many a check by this means. A good student, L. D. has likewise taken an active interest in music and literary work, both in the societies and in publications. He expects to study law, in fact, he has taken some law work in his Senior year. But the next few years will probably see him in the service.

President, (and other offices) in the Graham Lee Society; Editor-in-Chief of the Southern Collegian, 1917-'18; debater, annual celebration of Graham Lee, 1916; Orator, Finals, 1917; Birely Scholarship, 1917; Manager of Mandolin Club, 1915-'17; Director of Band, 1917-'18; Second Lieutenant, Co. C, W. L. B. T. B., 1917-'18; Master Mason; Square and Compass; Member Debating Council, 1917-'18.

Lewisburg, West Virginia

"Some men are born great, some men achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them." Possibly of the first class, more probably of the second, and certainly not of the third, is the subject of this sketch. For unsought as an end in itself, but nevertheless as the result of three years of hard and useful work, has come to Ned Bell the reputation which he holds of being one of the biggest men in the University. Prepared for college at the first class military school of Greenbrier Presbyterial Military School, Lewisburg, W. Va., Ned entered Washington and Lee in 1914. As a Freshman he made an enviable record in many ways; for one thing he represented the college in an intercollegiate debate, and the W. & L. team won. The Y. M. C. A. has been the great thing in Ned's college life. Earnestly, sincerely, and faithfully, he has advanced the interests of that group and has set a model to others of a clean, whole-souled, red-blooded college man. He expects to go as a medical missionary to the East. A most brilliant future is in store for him.

President, and other offices, Graham Lee Society; Local and Inter-Collegiate Debater and Orator; Member of the Debating Council, 1916-'17; various offices in the Y. M. C. A. culminating the General Secretaryship, 1917-'18; Vice-President of the Senior Class; Captain of the W. L. B. T. B., 1917-'18; President of the Circle, 1918.

This youthful prodigy—for he will be but three months past nineteen when he is graduated—is a Rockbridge County product. In spite of this handicap, Eddie has managed to achieve great success during his four years of college life. With the single exception of Percy Shannon's English 2, Eddie has never failed to make A's and B's; and in this mishap, Eddie says the team C was due to a conference cut. Perhaps so..... Particularly in publications has Eddie taken a leading part, culminating in the Editorship of the Ring-tum Phi, his Senior year. As incumbent of this office, Eddie incurred the displeasure of a local character of whom a hound-dog lie had been told. Edmund expects to study law, particularly along economic lines. When the government calls, Eddie is willing to shoulder a gun, even though it may be bigger than he.

FRANCIS TALMAGE COLE

ΣΥ

Baltimore, Md.

About a score or more years ago Francis T. arrived "somewhere in the mountains" of West Virginia. Being brought up in this wild country, naturally he chose Baltimore as a fitting place to prepare for a college career. At McDonogh School where he had his preparatory education, he did well in everything. Since coming here in 1914 he has kept up his high standard of achievements. He has a cheerful disposition, and is an aggressive, diligent, energetic and conscientious worker in whatever he undertakes, having as his motto, "Although I may not win, I am never conquered." But he has forsaken this maximum in one instance for he admits that "Amor vincit omnia." He should be a good linguist for he has had all of "Cutey's" courses and all German as well. Francis has been just as active outside the classroom for he was Secretary-Treasurer Graham-Lee two terms; Debater at Annual Celebration, 1918; Historian Maryland Club, 1916-'17; Member Deutsche Verein; Managing Editor of Ring Tum Phi, 1917-'18; on Editorial Staff of Southern Collegian, 1916-'17; won French Scholarship, 1916-'17; Instructor in French, 1917-'18.

NELSON EARL BARKER
CRANFORD
ΦΓΔ

Jasper, Alabama

"Neb" caused great consternation in the Faculty by wanting to take Greek III and Latin III in his Freshman year, but after all the arts of persuasion had been used upon his classic nature, he reluctantly acceded to the wish of Prof. Hogue and Dr. Kern that they be allowed a year in which to review these courses. He had to enter the beginners' courses in both of these subjects, but, as he expressed it, it was a useless waste of time.

Nelson Earl Barker Cranford was born in Jasper, Alabama, December 9, 1898. For four short years he loafed at the Walker County High School, and then entered Washington and Lee in September, 1915. As a student, "Neb" has taken to the classics as a German to murder, with the result that he has accumulated a great store of ancient lore. During his Senior year he has carried nine courses, making an average of but little less than A. Like a true Greek, "Neb" took to athletic sport. He rowed on the Albert Sidney second crew his Freshman year, and all signs point to his making the first crew this year. He deserves four years at Washington and Lee and accordingly Barker plans to return next fall for an M.A.

JOHN LOUIS DRISCOLL
Louisville, Ky.

"Dris" never tires of expounding to the "Appleknockers" the wonders of Louisville, in which garden spot he began his promising career some twenty-one years ago. Having mastered the grammar schools and made short work of "Louisville Male High," he entered W. & L. in the fall of 1914, since which date he has made a consistently good record incidently demonstrating that honor rolls and Wayland's are not incompatible. "Liv's Math." in his favorite field of conquest but German 2, 3 and 4 succumbed with equal ease to his powers of linguistic assimilation. As though to prove still further the diversity of his abilities he captured an assistantship in English 1917-'18 and was first sergeant of Co. A. It is rumored that "Dris" has a decided or rather undecided inclination for the jewelry business. Whatever line of activity he takes up, however, his many friends and acquaintances at Washington and Lee feel sure he will make good in.

JOHN MORTON EGGLESTON

Allow us to present a man who has been with us for the greater part of the past two years. We regret this, for twenty years of have been spent elsewhere. Eggleston received his preparatory training at Charlotte High School and at Randolph College; being thus enabled to get his B.A. with us in June. Although he has been at W. & L. only half the usual time, Eggleston has made many friends here who are sorry not to have known him throughout the regular period of college work. Eggleston expects to enlist in some branch of the national service this summer and is undecided as to his life work. But his friends feel confident that upon his safe return from the war that he will make his mark in whatever line of business or professional work he may see fit to take up. Painstaking effort is always rewarded.

JOHN CALEB ERWIN

McKinney, Texas

This wild and wooly Westerner was born in McKinney on August 21, 1897. "Doc" attended high school in McKinney for three years. He then went to Austin College for two years. After trying the University of Texas for one year, he decided that he would have to get his B.A. degree from Washington and Lee if his education were to be complete. Accordingly he entered Washington and Lee in the fall of 1917. Erwin expects to study medicine and eventually practice his profession in Texas. More likely, however, as far as the immediate future is concerned, he is destined to go to France and practice on the Kaiser.

"Doc" is a good student and can be drawn away from his books only by a chance to tell his bow-boy and Indian stories. In the year that he has been at Washington and Lee he has made many friends, who all wish for him the greatest of success in later life.

WITT FOX
ΣΧ

Culleoka, Tennessee

The 17th of October is a legal holiday in Culleoka, Tennessee. The banks close, the picture show is locked up, the stores and factories do no business. All in honor of the gentleman whose face is reproduced above! And for a good reason—he is the only track man that the town has ever put out. He is a good one too, as illustrated by the fact that he was on the first cross country team that W. & L. ever had, and the team won, too. Entering college in 1913, Witt remained out in the session of 1916-17, to help keep the home fires burning. Not able longer to stand the quiet life, he returned this year for his degree. Elected captain of the 1917 Cross Country Team, he resigned to devote the time to his studies.

Besides track, Witt has several hobbies: "suicide" basketball, Physics I, and History II. At most any hour of the day you can see Witt hot-footing it across the campus in front of Miss Annie's library, paper in hand, with a prayer on his lips that his work may not be returned with the direful, "Too small" or "Too large."

Witt expects to be a farmer.

RALPH ARTHUR GOLDBERG
Madison, Florida

Ralph was born at High Springs, Florida, on June 1, 1897. While a mere child, he moved to Madison in the same state, where he attended the public schools, graduating from the Madison High School in 1913. Feeling that his intellectual appetite was still unsatisfied he entered the University of Florida, which he attended from 1913 to 1915. In the fall of the latter year he came to Lexington. What attracted him from the Everglades we do not know, not the president's line of talk, surely, for Ralph has one of his own. Since his arrival "at the heart of the South" he has entered prominently into the various activities. He has been a member of the band for three years, and of the Washington Literary Society. Other honors: First Lieutenant of Company B, W. L. P. T. B.; Business Manager of Southern Collegian, 1918.

Ralph expects to study law eventually, but at the present he plans to go into the army and get Bill.

CHARLES PHILLIPS HANGER, JR.

Staunton, Virginia

Charles P. Hanger, Jr., better known as "Phil," came to light on July 17, 1895, in the "Queen City of the Valley" almost within sight of President Wilson's birthplace. "Phil" graduated at Staunton High School and not content with anything less than a A.B. entered W. & L. in 1914. Since "C. P." has been with us he has been very studious as his work in German and English will testify. "Phil" has not spent all his time in studying but has taken part in many other collegiate activities. He was Secretary and Treasurer of Graham-Lee, manager of the Junior and Senior football and basketball teams, and historian of the Junior and Senior classes. "Phil" expects to make teaching his life work and we are sure that he will be successful.

ERNEST WIGHTMAN HARWOOD
Pamplin, Virginia

"Dick" gathered his early education at various places, ending with a diploma from Appomattox High School in 1914. The following fall, he entered W. & L., and since then he has steadily worked his way nearer and nearer the ranks of the "Sharks." His only aversion is for one of "Liv's" exams. History is his strong point; even "Doc" condescending to dub him his "Old Reliable." His favorite exam grades are 97 and 98. He won the history scholarship in '16-'17. "Dick" held a sergeantry in Co. C, but resigned on account of pressure of academic work. We suspect the real cause was the heavy correspondence course he is carrying. Certainly his favorite resort is the P. O., and the day is rare which does not bring him an enormous missive bearing a New York postmark. Perhaps this explains why he has selected Columbia for his post-graduate work.

FULTON WRIGHT HOGE

 Frankfort, Kentucky

Fulton Wright Hoge is a delegate from old Kentucky, and has been very able in advocating the spirit of that commonwealth. He was born in Frankfort, August 13, 1897, and took his preparatory work in Frankfort High School. After trying one year at the University of Arizona, he returned to the East and found a congenial place at Washington and Lee in the fall of 1914. Quiet and unassuming, Fulton endeavored to get all the good out of college, and at the same time to enjoy life and not let classes interfere unduly with the business of being a student. If a morning is well adapted to the courting of Morpheus, he woees to his heart's content, and goes to class the next day. English has appealed to Fulton in particular and he has done good work in that department, as well as in others, provided they appealed to him. In fact he is worthy of the designation shark in his pet courses.

GEORGE TREAT HOLBROOK
 ΦΔΘ, ΠΑΝ, Square and Compass
 Coldwater, Michigan

"Doc" is a Michigander, but no one has accused him of being a Yankee. His disposition made a perfect hit with the climate and ideals of the Sunny South. His air of deep learning and dignified reserve leads many verdant Freshmen to think that his title of "Doc" indicates a Ph.D. degree. Although such is not the case, his ability as a student makes it highly possible that the nick-name will become a reality in the future. In addition to aptitude for academic work, "Doc" has shown capacity for many other lines of endeavor during the five years he has sojourned at Washington and Lee. He is an all-around college man, an executive of no mean ability, having demonstrated the latter in the handling of important positions, and he has even written poetry. He is fully deserving of the honor that was conferred upon him by his class, in electing him President of the Class of 1918.

Lewisburg, West Virginia

Coming to us from the Greenbrier Presbyterian Military School, which has sent so many good representatives to Washington and Lee, "Rocky" began at once to look around for new fields to conquer, for he is an energetic worker from the word "go." In his Freshman year, "Rocky" let the professors know that he meant business, with such good results that he has been on the Honor Roll ever since, with a few exceptions only. Studies have only been a part of his life here, however, and "Rocky" has made himself one of the best known and liked men on the campus.

When the W. L. P. T. B. was formed, General Holt found that here was a real chance to become famous and to show the boys what kind of drilling the G. P. M. S. fellows get. He showed it to be so good, that he has since held responsible positions in the battalion, being the Adjutant this year. The Senior Academic Class honored him with election to the Executive Committee, 1917-'18.

He will be but twenty when he gets his degree this spring, won by three years of hard, but very profitable labor. After that, war, says Homer.

JAMES LEWIS HOWE, JR.

Lexington, Virginia

"J" enlivened the historical town of Lexington by his arrival on the 25th of August, 1897. After attending Lexington High School for four years, he went north and spent one year at Dummer Academy, Byfield, Massachusetts, searching for knowledge. Hearing the call of the Old Dominion State, he entered Washington and Lee in the fall of 1914.

Chemistry has been "J's" special line of study. He has not chosen his life work, but says it will be either medicine or chemistry. He is a member of the Chemical Society and has held several offices in that organization. He is also a member of the Graham-Lee Literary Society.

"J" is a golfer and, when not in the laboratory, spends most of his time on the links. He has tied every record made on the local course. In leaving college, "J" carries with him the wishes of his many friends that he may not only tie the highest records for success in his profession, but may exceed them.

ROY WINDOL LE GRAND HURST
ΣΥ, ΦBK

Chesterfield, South Carolina

A little more than twenty years ago the small town of Chesterfield, South Carolina, greeted Roy Windol Le Grand Hurst, and asked him to put here on the map. He promised, he set to work to do his task, he succeeded.

After mastering all the learning that the town afforded, Roy came to Lexington in the search of further material for the production of gray matter. Thus it was that since September 1914, the ambitious young Southern fire-eater has been on the campus around Main Building. To a casual observer, Roy seems perfectly normal. The fact is, however, that he has a mania! It's for scholarships. Each year he has won one. The first year it was in Latin, the next in Geology, and last session he was given the Young Scholarship. An all "A" record for 1916-'17, and an instructorship in French 1917-'18 show just how thorough he is.

Those who know him well can speak for his steady sterling worth. He will probably enter banking or business.

RAY HUGHES JARVIS

Hubbard, Texas

In the thriving metropolis of Hubbard, Texas, was born this wild and rampant ranger. After a rather uneventful childhood, Ray entered the University of Texas, only to desert it soon in favor of Washington and Lee. Entering here in the fall of 1915, he has worked so well since that he secures this spring his B.A. degree.

All those requiring definite information concerning the Lone Star State, or of the price of cotton and grain, need only to come to Ray, for he is an authority on these things. We have it confidentially that he expects to corner a market on the latter commodity in the near future. Ray may continue his study of Commerce in other fields, if, like the rest of us, he is not called to help settle the war and put Kaiser Bill where he can safely boil down.

As a debater, Ray has often shown his ability to the Washington Literary Society of which he has been a member.

WILLIAM HORACE JETER
ΦΚΣ

Covington, Virginia

Near the border line between Virginia and West Virginia is a little town known as Covington—barely on the safe side of the line. To a person passing through on the C. and O. Limited, this place has a very unprepossessing appearance. In reality it is a town deserving of national, yes, of international renown. For it is the home of Horace Jeter. Deserting the town that he has since made famous, Horace entered Washington and Lee in the fall of 1915 and at once set to work, with the result that he will get his degree after only three years' study. Horace got the reputation as a genuine shark his first two years here, but somehow or other, something happened his Senior year and he actually made some grades below A. But that does not offset the fact that he is a splendid fellow, congenial, warm-hearted, and well-liked. He has specialized in Chemistry and Biology. We suspect that he will become a doctor.

Secretary of the Interfraternity Conference, 1917-'18; Winner of the Chemistry Scholarship, 1916.

ADOLPH SIM MARX

Lake Charles, Louisiana

Sim (Buster to his intimate friends), first began to dance on August 12, 1897, at Lake Charles, and has been dancing ever since. He entered Washington and Lee in the fall of 1914 and made his reputation as an end on the class football team. This last year he was elected captain of his class team. Sim was not cut out particularly for an athlete, however, but he certainly has distinguished himself in the Commerce School, where he has knocked down A's right and left. Sim is a great admirer of the Terpsichorean art, and he never fails to give the ladies a treat at the gym. He expects to enter business at Lake Charles and will no doubt become the Wanamaker of the South. Not only will his training in the School of Commerce be of help, but also the experience gained during his Senior year in rearing his room-mates Felsenthal and Silverstein.

JOHN HENRY FITZHUGH MAYO
ΣΑΕ, W.F.
West River, Maryland

This elongated product of West River left the Episcopal High School in the spring of 1914 and after storing enough energy during the following three months' sojourn with his pal, Morpheus, sallied forth from home and in the fall of the same year entered Washington and Lee. Since coming here his easy going, imperturbable manner has gone hand in hand with his slow but sure method of gaining success both in classes and on the campus. In addition to his success in these lines he has gained wide fame as a playwright and actor through the White Friar show last fall.

Fitz intends to enter some branch of the service in the near future. His later life is somewhat undecided, but his many friends are sure that whatever line of work he does undertake, he will make a name for himself.

JOHN LISLE McCHORD
ΦΓΔ
Lebanon, Kentucky

Kentucky is famous for several things— one of them is John McChord. Born and raised in that celebrated commonwealth, John came to Washington and Lee for the first time in 1914. The following year the President of the University called an assembly to consider a matter of grave importance: John McChord had not returned. It seems that a trip to the Orient and the Philippines had so delayed our adventurer, that it was the month of November before the Golden Gate was reached on the return trip. Of course Washington and Lee could not receive him so late, the damage had been done already. So John went to Center College, Kentucky, that session, where he was introduced into society by Colonel Shoun. Back again to W. & L. John came in 1916 and he has since remained. His last year was featured by his holiday stay at the White House, Washington. A likable and sociable chap, his many friends wish him the greatest of good luck.

Treasurer of Class, Center College; Executive Committeeman of Junior Class, W. & L.; Vice-President of Student Body, 1917-'18; Social Editor of Ring-tum Phi, 1916-'17, 1917-'18; Society Editor Calyx, 1917-'18; Celebration Debater, Graham-Lee, 1917; Final Orator, 1917; President U. B. Club.

GEORGE EDGAR McCLURE

Fairfield, Va.

George is another of the Rockbridge boys and did not have to become acclimated for he was born one mile north of Fairfield on October 21 and has been growing accustomed to the worst freaks of Jack Frost for the last 21 years. But "Mac's" enormous energies could not be consumed in the admiration of Winter's beauties for he found time to complete with distinction the prescribed course at Fairfield High School. On a fine morning in September 1914, George, still a mere lad wearing knee trousers, boarded the "Virginia Creeper" to begin his academic career among the Generals. Although short of stature, "Mac" is great in every other respect, having done well in all he has undertaken, but especially in his favorite studies, Chemistry and History, in the latter of which he won a scholarship. The call of the land is so insistent to George that he can scarcely resist it to get his B.A. in June. We hate to part with little "Mac" but he feels that he must forsake Chemistry, History and debating in Graham-Lee to take up Agriculture as his life work.

SAMUEL EVANS MORETON, JR.

ΣΧ, ΦΒΚ

Brookhaven, Mississippi

"Sammie" first saw the light of this world upon the 27th of May, 1898, at Cold Springs, Mississippi. At the time, his parents did not guess that their Sammie was to become a shark in the science world. They were awakened to the fact, however, when they found him one day cutting his teeth on the "Scientific World." With the avowed purpose of missing the system of Reid Hall, Sammie entered Washington and Lee in 1915.

Although quiet and unassuming, yet he demonstrated his ability by "copping" the Engineering Scholarship in 1915-'16, and literally "batted" Dr. Stevens' Physics for two years. All those who know Sammie see in him the faithful and persevering spirit that has ever been characteristic of his work and that is certain to carry him successfully through the problems of the future, or "over the top." He was appointed assistant in the Physics Department when Dr. Dickey left college, the winter of 1918. His last months of Washington and Lee life, therefore, divided between this work and the baffling study of history, have been busy ones.

Sammie expects to study electrical engineering at Boston Tech. next year, if he does not enter the army before that time

Lexington, Virginia

Dave entered Washington and Lee in 1913, coming from the Huntington High School, West Virginia. Somehow or other he considered law to be the great profession and accordingly specialized in history and English for two years as preparation for matriculation in the law school, 1915. But the call of history proved stronger than that of the law and in the spring of 1916 Dave returned to the academic school, after having passed all the law work taken. As assistant in the history department and student in other departments, he has been working since for his B.A. degree. Dave attended Michigan Summer School, 1916, and Wisconsin, 1917. Besides being interested in his studies, Dave has been prominent in publication work, having served as Editor-in-Chief of two publications, the Collegian 1917, and the Calyx 1918. During his Senior year he served on the staffs of all three publications. Dave plans to study at Harvard and end up as a history professor.

Other honors: Instructor in History, 1915-'16, 1916-'17, 1917-'18; in English, 1917-'18; French Scholarship, 1917; Santini Medal, 1917; Vice-President of Circle, 1918; President of Sigma Upsilon; Royal Arch Mason; Member of the American Historical Association.

A society leader without giving all his time to society, a "shark" without being called a bookworm, and business, literary, and athletic prowess besides, all have made for "Matt" Paxton a prominent place on the campus. His many honors will be culminated when he gets his diploma, and leads the Final Ball in June. And to think that he is a native of Lexington and will not be twenty years old until the day after he receives his sheepskin! "Matt" says he will probably take law at Yale next year if the army doesn't take him first.

State Golf Champion, 1915, 1916; Appalachian League Champion, 1917; Historian Sophomore Class; Assistant Manager Basketball, 1917; Manager Basketball, 1918; Final Week Committee, 1917; President Cotillion Club, 1917-'18; President Fancy Dress Ball, 1918; President Final Ball, 1918; "A" grade in class work.

WILLIAM WARREN SAGER
Washington, D. C.

Shades of Patrick Henry! Observe closely the physiognomy of this modern disciple of Demosthenes, and you will not marvel at his power of captivating the affections and swaying the passions of a Lexington audience.

Warren first began to demonstrate his vocal abilities at Woodstock, Virginia, on January 8, 1898, and has been talking ever since. After attending Winchester High School, he mounted the southbound Creeper, and entered Washington and Lee in September, 1914. That he has been not merely a successful student at college is attested by the following: Manager Southern Collegian, 1916-'17; Vice-President Junior Class, 1916-'17; Secretary and Treasurer Albert-Sidney Boat Club and Member of the Crew Committee; Vice-President Graham-Lee; Debater Annual Celebration, 1916-'17 and Winner of Debater's Medal, 1917-'18; Member of Debating Council, 1917-'18; Class Football Team, 1916-'17.

CHARLES SIDNEY SAVILLE
Murat, Virginia

Charles lives so near Lexington that he might be chronicaled as a Lexington were it not for the fact that Murat would bring suit and prove that he was born at the latter place on December 4, 1895. It would also be proved that he graduated at Palmer High School and has spent most of his happy life within the dominion of Murat. In the face of this strong evidence of priority of claim, Lexington contents herself with calling him a Rockbridge boy. Charlie began to honor Lexington with his presence in September, 1913. But Murat could not spare him for longer than one year. The call became so insistent that he had to silence it with a year of his valuable time. At the end of that time Murat condescended to let him come back to college where he will get his B.A. degree in June. Charlie says he expects to teach unless Uncle Sam claims him first. Therefore, he is undecided as to his life work.

Charlotte Court-House, Virginia

"Shep" became part of the inhabitants of Charlotte C. H. on the twentieth of March, 1897, and has honored that place with his presence most of the time since.

He finished Charlotte High School in the spring of 1914, and came to Washington and Lee that fall. English has been his special line of study and he expects to put it into use in journalism, which occupation he has chosen for his life work. Before he takes up his work, however, he intends to enlist in the U. S. Navy.

Some of "Shep's" activities while at W. & L. were: Mandolin and Glee Clubs, 1916-'17; Associate Editor of Southern Collegian, 1916-'17, 1917-'18, and of the Ring-tum Phi, 1917-'18; Graham-Lee Literary Society; Harry Lee Boat Club; Assistant Librarian, 1916-'17, 1917-'18; and Assistant in English, 1917-'18.

MURRAY CLYDE SHOUN

Jefferson City, Tennessee

Murray C. Shoun, better known as Colonel Shoun, for he is a Kentucky Colonel by virtue of an appointment to the staff of Governor Stanley of the said commonwealth, is a Tennessean by birth, a Kentuckian by adoption, and a Virginian by choice. The Colonel was born at Mountain City, Tennessee, August 2, 1896, and prepared for college at the Carson-Newman Preparatory School in Jefferson City. Later he attended Carson-Newman College, going from there to Centre College, Danville, Kentucky. After two gay social seasons in Danville, he went to the summer school at the University of Virginia, where it is said that he made two years' work in one summer. The traditions and legends of Washington and Lee fascinated this cultured adventurer, and he made his first speech in Lexington on September 12, 1917. The Colonel's life work, like everything else concerning him, is undecided, but he hopes to enter the navy after getting his degree in June.

He is the manager of the 1918 Calyx.

FRANCIS HOLMES STYLES

Falls Church, Virginia

Francis H. was born in Lansdowne, Pa., on December 15, 1895. After living in several different states he finally moved to the historic town he now calls home. He received his preparatory work at Western High School, Washington, D. C. He entered W. & L. in the fall of 1915. 1919 seemed too long for him to wait for his degree, so he resolved to get it in 1918. For this reason we find him among us. College studies have not absorbed all his time, for he was Treasurer of Freshman Class, 1915-'16; member of Finance Committee for Sophomore Class, 1916-'17; bass in the Glee Club, 1916-'17; and on the track squad each year. Francis is usually serious-minded, but not so with the fair sex. He does, however, seem to enjoy writing and receiving letters from one known as "Maw." This young man, we feel sure, will make his mark in whatever he undertakes. His present intentions are to make himself a future United States consul or diplomat.

Emporia, Virginia

One seventh day of October in the late nineties of the last century, there was a darkening of the skies, muffled detonations of heavy thunder, jagged streaks of lightning across the Virginia heavens, and a great terror among the folk of the country. Such were the accompaniments of nature to the birth of Flournoy Tillar at Emporia, Virginia, forecasting for the infant a future of great deeds. Prepared for action at Emporia High School, Flournoy entered Washington and Lee in 1914. Since then he has been a factor of great importance in the running of campus affairs. His activities have embraced those of the student and those of the campus leader, as his list of honors and fraternities clearly show. Killing Huns is the future immediately in store for him, then the more peaceful occupation of commercial life, for which he has been well prepared at the local Commerce School. Success for him is not a matter of conjecture, it is a surety.

VIRGIL JUAN TROTTER

KA

Monticello, Arkansas

Hendrix College, Arkansas, was the fortunate recipient of Juan's first attentions. The path of love never runs smooth, they say, and so in this case, for Hendrix College was cruelly jilted by Juan in 1916 when he entered Washington and Lee after a two years' courtship with Hendrix. The time that he has spent with his new love, is therefore rather short. Nevertheless it has been long enough for him to gain the sincere friendship and high regard of a large number of friends. To these friends his sterling worth has been made known. They see in him a true man, a conscientious worker, and a student with a firm determination to forge ahead.

For his success in the business world as a banker, his class and college friends extend heartiest wishes. If he continues to manifest the same spirit that has characterized him while here, we feel sure that this success will indeed be assured.

CARTER TYLER

Seven Mile Ford, Virginia

Carter was born at Seven Mile Ford, in Southwest Virginia, 1897. After completing his high school education, he entered Emory and Henry College, where he was an honor man in his class and won considerable renown in debating. In September, 1916, he entered the sacred halls of Washington and Lee, and has since specialized in the Commerce School. He is a fellow that is not afraid of hard study, and as a result he has made a creditable record in his work. Although Carter gives much of his time to his studies, he is interested in all college activities, especially in basketball and debating.

Carter is a man with a fine mind, a strong will, and a forceful personality, backed with common sense and tact. In whatever line of work he decides eventually to make his living, he are sure he will be a credit to his college and to himself.

ALEXANDER SPRUNT WATKINS
ΣΝ, ΞΑΝ

Henderson, North Carolina

"Wat" was born down in No'th Cah-lina sometime during 1894. Prepared for college at the Warrenton High School, North Carolina, he entered Washington and Lee in 1914 as a Freshman. The four years that "Wat" has spent upon the campus have proved him to be really worth while. His college work has been done in a careful, serious way, and his record in scholarship is good. He has taken an active interest in university life, as witnessed by his list of college honors. Eventually he expects to enter business life, but for the immediate future he plans to help sink U-boats, as he is an enlisted member of the Naval Reserves awaiting call. His friends, and they are many, extend to "Wat" sincere wishes for future success and fortune.

Chief Marshal, Graham-Lee Society Finals, 1917; Secretary-Treasurer, Senior Class, 1918; Assistant Manager of Baseball, 1917; Manager of Baseball, 1918; Member of Y. M. C. A. Cabinet, 1917-'18; Treasurer of Y. M. C. A., 1917-'18.

JAMES WILSON WHITELAW
Memphis, Tennessee

"Doc" Whitelaw is distinguished particularly for two things: he is the last Senior to appear in the class representation because his name starts with "Wh," thus letting the "Wa" of Watkins beat him out, and in the fact that he was the last person to announce himself a candidate for a degree. In truth, "Doc" is an apostate. In the early days of February he still claimed to be a Junior. As such he continued to hold the office given him last year of president. But once the Junior Prom was over, and he had led the figure, the editor of the CALYX was informed that "Doc" Whitelaw demanded Senior representation. Clever fellow!

"Doc" is big-hearted, kindly, and genial. He has won a large number of warm friends since he entered Washington and Lee in 1915. In the life of the campus, he has taken a great interest, being the Captain of the Freshman Football Team in 1915; Manager of the Sophomore Team in 1916, and President of the Junior Class, 1917-'18. Between chemistry physics, and Dr. Riley's history courses, Whitney has had his hands full.

Class History

SEVERAL distinguishing features mark the Senior Science Class of 1918. In the first place, it is purely a local institution, every member hailing from Rockbridge County. In the second place, every member of the class is either an assistant or an instructor in one or another department of the University. In the third place, the members of the class show an unusually equal division in their ambitions, an even third specializing in chemistry, a third in physics, and a third in civil engineering. And in the fourth place, it is the smallest class in the history of the School of Applied Science, consisting of but three members.

The latter fact, like most other things, can be credited up to the war, as four ex-members of the class have entered the army. Hallman and Swecker, just before the close of last session, dropped out, one to get his commission in the first series of training camps, the other to go with the Washington and Lee Ambulance Section. Of the five who remained at the opening of the present session, Christy left us during the first term to enlist in the Engineer Corps, and a few weeks later, Seebert entered the Aviation Corps. Good men, they were, and much missed.

Of we who remain, there is little to be said. For it is a matter of fact, universally admitted by generations of senior science classes, that we are the most over-worked men in the University, and we have little time for things of general interest. But we've been working away, and some day we hope to be heard from.

RAYMOND MELVILLE BEAR
Glasgow, Va.

He's rather quiet, is R. Melville Bear, and like most of the rest of the unfortunate contenders for the B.S. degree, he doesn't stray so far from the halls of science. But in his own domain, among those who know him best, he passes as a mighty good fellow, with a mighty good head, and a good deal more.

Bear was born at Natural Bridge, Virginia, on the twelfth of August, 1897, but later drifted down the James to Glasgow, where he received his preliminary education in the Glasgow High School. In the fall of nineteen fourteen he came to Washington and Lee and took up the gentle pastime of collecting scholarships, as follows: 1915, Chemistry Department Scholarship; 1916, Franklin Society Scholarship; 1917, Physics Department Scholarship. During the present session, he has held down the position of Assistant in Physics, and the rumors emanating from his laboratory indicate that he has held it down in an altogether creditable manner. What he will do after this year, he has not as yet decided.

WILLIAM JUNKIN COX
ΦΓΔ, ΦΒΚ, ΟΔΚ, ΔΣΡ, ΠΑΝ
Lexington, Virginia

Billy spoils the otherwise unblemished record of his class, as he had the misfortune to be born in Portland, Oregon, instead of Rockridge County. But he migrated to the latter place early in life, and so lays claim to being of indigenous growth. He got his early education in the Lexington School, and entered W. & L. in 1913. He took an A.B. degree last year, being valedictorian of his class, and this session returned for a B.S. in Civil Engineering.

In his academic school days, Billy mingled to a greater or less extent in the affairs of the campus, but this year he has confined himself pretty closely to Reid Hall, his only campus amusement being the W. & L. T. B., in which he has been lieutenant and adjutant, the first lieutenant of "B" Company. After the war, he tells us, he is going to be a civil engineer, and this summer he expects to enter the Engineer Corps of the army. During this session he has been Instructor in Engineering, and holder of the Mapleson Scholarship.

WILLIAM GLADSTONE SMITH
SAVILLE
Murat, Va.

William Gladstone Smith Saville is about as long as his name, which is doing pretty well, considering his tender years. For "Stoney" is the infant of the class, not having made his appearance on this terrestrial sphere until the thirteenth of April, 1898. Like the rest of the class, he is a local product, claiming Murat, Rockbridge County, Virginia, as his home and birthplace. He was educated at Palmer High School, near Lexington, and entered Washington and Lee in 1914. Since that time he has spent many hours in the chemical laboratories, and from what we hear, he has a wide knowledge of those mysterious processes which lend such an olfactory charm to the southwest wing of the Main Building.

Stoney is taking a general B.S., but with special emphasis on chemistry, which he expects to make his profession. He is an assistant in that department this year. Some day, his many friends expect to hear great things of him.

"Burt" entered Washington and Lee in 1914, after having honored Harrisonburg with his society for eighteen years. A B.A. degree proved a small matter to "Burt" for he was graduated in three years, acquiring a Phi Beta Kappa key in the process. This spring he receives a M.A., with majors in English and Philosophy, and attainments in French and German. Besides being a first-rate student and a likable fellow, "Burt" is one of the best wrestlers in college. In the future he expects to teach or to practice law. Vague rumors, however, suggest that he may not do this alone for any length of time. More than this we would hardly care to say.

He has won innumerable honors in literary society work, as an undergraduate, including the Orator's Medal, 1917 Finals. Other honors: Y. M. C. A. Cabinet, 1916-'17, 1917-'18; Instructor in English, 1917-'18; Howard Houston Fellowship, 1917; Southern Collegian Staff, '1917-'18.

JACKSON ROSSE COLLINS, B.A.

Centreville, Maryland

Jack hails from the Eastern Shore, Maryland. He entered Washington and Lee in 1914 and received his B.A. degree after three years' hard work at Commencement, 1917. So well did he like the college, that he returned this last fall for his Master's degree.

Jack has both persistency and consistency—two jewels instead of one, you see. He reasoned that time was money and that three years was time enough for the Bachelor's diploma. As a graduate student, Jack is devoting his time entirely to work in the School of Commerce, and he is in his element. But as to his life work, "Fate shall decide," says Jack.

He has taken interest in literary work as a member of the Washington Literary Society. This year he represented "Old Wash" as debater at the Annual Celebration in Washington.

Class History

When the Class of 1919 appeared at Lexington in the autumn of 1915 it was scarcely distinguishable from the many other classes which had come to the ancient halls of Washington and Lee in quest of knowledge. The members soon perceived that in union lay strength and to this effect they assembled in Reid Hall, almost two hundred strong, and elected officers, and a leader for the impending pushball fight. So ably did this leader select and marshal his men that the Sophomores were shattered by the phalanx of the Fresh. The wreath of victory was then found to contain an unexpected thorn. The edict of the Vigilance Committee went forth that such an affront could not remain unavenged. Their decrees were executed remorselessly, but the result was the binding of the class more closely together.

The spirit of '19 was exceeded only by the old Alma Mater spirit.

Upon the occasion of the Freshman hats being discarded precedent was given a rude jolt and quite an innovation introduced. From a pyre in front of McCrums, 175 hats ascended in black smoke with appropriate attendant ceremonies, culminating in a sumptuous "Beanery" banquet.

When the class returned in the fall of 1916 many old faces were missed. Some returning had assumed the proverbial "wise fool" characteristics of the Soph, but it acted as a leaven unto the whole rather than as a detriment. Having won their second push-ball fight, this time from the verdant Freshmen, and, by necessary coercion, started them on the strait and difficult path of learning and rectitude, the class turned its energy to more important fields of effort. In the interclass athletic meet the representatives of 1919 were successful in overcoming their rival classes. But it was not permitted that other activities should interfere with the fundamental aim of acquiring an education. The number of scholastic honor men expected by normal apportionment to exist in the class was considerably exceeded. "Sophomores prove to be intellectual stars," was the tacit announcement found upon one occasion in the Ring-tum Phi.

In April, when war was declared against autocracy and vandalism, the class began to be drained of its best blood. By commencement many had answered the call of patriotism, and during the summer many more enlisted under the standard of democracy.

Thirty-five of the old guard registered for the session of 1917-18, but they have ably and willingly borne the burden of those who have laid the pen and taken up the sword. The Class of 1919 is a unity in spirit and in loyalty to its Alma Mater, even though many have foregone the pursuit of the sheepskin until the world has been made safe for justice and democracy.

Class History

The history of the Sophomore year of the Class of 1920 rightly starts on the memorable night of April 7, 1917. There in front of McCrum's Drug Co., in the middle of Main Street, following a huge night-shirt parade and proceeding a most luxurious banquet, the "1920 Men Discard Caps With Signs of Gladness" according to the caption in the following number of the Ring-tum Phi. From that momentous night the honorable Sophomores have worn their own head-dress and well lived up to the motto implied by their name, "If ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise."

But it has not all been idle play this year. The men of '20 have been represented in every phase of campus life. They have borne their share of the responsibilities and taken their part in the big things accomplished this year. While many of them have stayed to work and toil for the University, an equal number have offered their services to the government, and are now fighting and giving their all for their country. Quite different are they this year from the light minded, irresponsible youngsters who assembled for the first time two years ago. Since then, they have been called upon to make sacrifices worthy of men, to stand for high principles, and to defend the honor of their Alma Mater and their Country. Those who are still at college are made thoughtful and grave by the fact that they too may soon be called on to make the supreme sacrifice. Yes, thoughtful and grave, but also proud and glad that they are accounted worthy to make that sacrifice.

It is with a mixture of pride and sadness that the events of the last two years are recalled. Pride, because of the things won, hard work completed, growth from youth into manhood, and because of the honor of serving our country. Sadness, because the nation has been plunged into an awful war, because so many of our friends have left and gone and sadness because of the terrible destruction which awaits our boys when their turn comes.

Freshman Class History

The Class of 1921 made its appearance last September with an enrollment of about one hundred and forty. Since then, through such agents as war and the automatic, our members have been reduced to a bare one hundred. However, we are by no means discouraged; for we feel that we have many causes for being proud of ourselves. Warned by the editor of THE CALYX carefully to avoid the "bull," we must refrain from going into detail with regard to our many achievements. It is sufficient to say that we have been well represented in all student activities—physical, mental, moral, musical, and otherwise. We do not claim to be the greatest class that has ever been known; but we all feel that, with no vain boasting, we can say: VENI, VIDI, VICI. As to our future, it is too early for us to say much. At present our chief hope is that each and every one of us may return next year to the college we have learned to love so much. Our greatest ambition is that we may be known not as mere Freshmen, but as true Washington and Lee men.

- CURTIS B. HARTLEY

Washington and Lee in War-Time

WASHINGTON and LEE was founded as the Augusta Academy in 1749, about twenty miles north of Lexington, and doubtless many of its earliest students and alumni defended their valley homes against marauding Indians. Some months before the great Declaration of July 4, '76, the old name disappeared in the blaze of awakening patriotism, and the institution rechristened Liberty Hall sent her sons to the aid of Washington. A few years later the Academy was moved to Lexington.

At the close of the struggle, Washington, after long consideration, endowed the Academy with $50,000 and formally authorized it to bear his great name. The sons of Washington College fought the British again in 1812, helped conquer Mexico in '48, and in 1861 left the campus in a body as the Liberty Hall volunteers to defend the South from invasion.

As George Washington, the noblest figure of our early history, chose Liberty Hall, that it might utilize his wealth and bear his name, so the immortal Lee, having no money, gave himself to the institution founded by his great kinsman. For five years he poured his energies into its rebuilding and expansion and set for all times its ideals of chivalry, courtesy, patriotism, and broad national spirit.

So when German duplicity and barbarity passed its menacing shadow over our fair land, no wonder that the campus of Washington and Lee blazed anew with the old fire of patriotism.

On the 21st of last March, before Congress had even assembled, President Smith wrote our alumnus, Secretary of War Baker, that we wished to establish Military Training at once. On April 2, the faculty and Board of Trustees voted unanimously to inaugurate Military Training at once, and on the 6th made formal application to the War Department for the establishment of a Reserve Officers' Training Corps with the detail of an officer and the furnishing of the necessary equipment.

Meanwhile Dr. Pollard had worked out careful and detailed plans for the establishment of a base hospital, utilizing for that purpose the Doremus Gymnasium, the Dining Hall, Lees Dormitory, the Field House, and Castle Hill Hotel, thus furnishing sufficient accommodation for 320 operative cases with nurses and attendants. The Board of Trustees sent this description on to the Surgeon-General and placed all the facilities of the University at the disposal of the Government.

The Virginia Military Institute, with a promptness equalled only by its kindness, placed at our disposal the services of Major M. F. Edwards as commandant with about sixty volunteer cadet officers as assistants. The student body in mass meeting on April 6, accepted this offer with enthusiasm, and within the week ninety-six per cent. of the whole student body were actively drilling every day under this remarkable body of experienced officers.

With characteristic energy, Dr. J. W. H. Pollard, head of the department of Physical Training, assisted by Associate Professor Forrest Fletcher, organized an ambulance corps, selecting thirty out of some eighty eager applicants, and beginning their daily training at once.

With the opening of the first Government training camp began the exodus from the campus which has continued to the present in an unabated stream. The Physical Training Department was left a mere name, Dr. Pollard, Mr. Fletcher, Coaches Elcock and Donahue, and a large number of athletes and instructors leaving the quiet of the campus for the intensified training of the camps. Associate Professors Dickey and Smithson, Y. M. C. A. Secretary Brown, and a procession of campus leaders soon left large gaps behind as they exchanged their textbooks for Uncle Sam's implements of warfare.

Our Ambulance Corps, when called to Allentown, Pa., soon won favorable comment and wide reputation. Many vain offers were made to induce its members to accept officers' positions in other units. The whole corps is now "over there" ready for the spring drive, and all know that there is no finer bunch of American college men on European soil.

When the present session opened, the President took as the subject of his opening address, "Our War-time Duties as an Institution." To a solemn and attentive student body he urged that gravity, simplicity, economy, and loyalty constitute the four-fold keynote of university life in these momentous days.

Since then regular military training has been carried on under Major Edwards as commandant, the W. and L. battalion pursuing the basic course of the R. O. T. C. Finally on February 14 came the news from the War Department that Washington and Lee had been recognized as an established Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and that First Lieutenant Guy E. Manning, '90, U. S. A. retired, had been assigned to duty here as professor of Military Science and Tactics. Thus military training in preparation of future officers in the United States army has proceeded with new life and assurance of recognition by the Government.

The steady enlistment of the older men begun last spring has continued throughout the present session, until now from an attendance of 531 last year and 381 last September, the enrollment at Washington and Lee has diminished to about 330. At home and abroad, on land and sea, in every training camp and aviation center, are to be found the representatives of the present student body and alumni of Washington and Lee University.

Of the 3,500 living alumni of Washington and Lee it seems probable from the list already compiled that six or eight hundred are already in the national service. The procession was led by Kiffen Rockwell, the first of the world's renowned aviators on the French front, who volunteered and rose to fame long before the United States entered the war. As far as we know, he was the first alumnus to seal his patriotic devotion with his blood. Others have already followed him in the supreme sacrifice, and full well the University knows that the thick strewn stars on her service flag will soon be sprinkled with gold. Yet with mingled pride and sorrow she knows also that her sons in life or in death will prove worthy of the traditions and history of their Alma Mater.

The Washington and Lee Ambulance Unit

One month after the United States entered the war against Germany came the call to Washington and Lee to furnish an ambulance unit for service abroad. Eighty enthusiastic volunteers at once telegraphed assurance to the Government that the Generals would do their full share, and on June 5 the members of U. S. Ambulance Unit Section 534 left for Allentown, Pa., to undergo intensive training before being sent to France.

Thirty-six men were comprised in the Washington and Lee unit. There were twenty-seven students, four alumni, and Forrest Fletcher, associate professor of Physical Education, besides two mechanics from Lexington and two cooks. For seven months, stationed at Allentown, these Generals were getting ready to do their bit, and at last on January 9, word came that they had sailed. On the 26th of January a brief cablegram to President Smith announced the safe arrival of the unit in England, and as the CALYX goes to press it is not known how soon the Washington and Lee Ambulance Unit will enter active service in France. Certain it is, however, that when the time comes, Washington and Lee may be proud of her closest representatives in the fight against entrenched autocracy.

As originally organized, the following was the composition of Ambulance Unit Section 534:

Forrest Fletcher	First Sergeant
C. C. Moore, '13	Second Sergeant

An Appreciation

WILLIAM CAULFIELD RAFTERY

A Superb Athlete; A Skillfull Coach; A Real Man

The purpose of this article is to characterize Coach Raftery as we have known him, as an athlete, and coach, and as far as lies in our power, to express our appreciation of his faithfulness, his untiring loyalty and his ceaseless devotion to the University and her interests.

Bill entered College in the fall of 1911, in the last year of the Denny reign in company with Buck Miles, Charley Lile and other famous Blue and White athletes. He immediately announced his intention of trying for football, and appeared on Wilson field as a contender for the position of quarterback notwithstanding the presence of the two varsity quarters of the preceeding year, and an "All Southern Holder" of this position who had just entered college. But before the end of the season Raftery had secured the coveted place. And at this position he called the signal that sent Kelly Francis across the V. P. I. line with the touchdown that broke the hoodoo the Techs had held on us for eleven long weary years. He also played forward during the winter and when spring came he appeared for baseball and after a keen battle captured third base, and not only held this down but hung up a battling average that is still a record. The following season he was again quarter and managed to score twelve points against our ancient rivals, the Techs.

The following January, Raftery began his career as a coach in the role of assistant to Dr. Pollard in basketball and in the Spring when Coach Orth left the team to take up his duties as a major league umpire, Raftery succeeded him. And after then on he acted as assistant coach of football and baseball and coach of basketball. Thus serving his apprenticeship under Larry Dowd and Jogger Elcock. We were unable to have him with us during the 1916-17 for he was acting as head coach and supervisor of athletics at Chick Springs Academy in South Carolina. At the close of the 1916 season an air of gloom and despondency pervaded the company for Elcock announced he had coached his last team, but the bright side appeared when the Athletic Council secured Rafferty as head coach of Washington and Lee athletics. This was an arduous task and worthy of the metal of a genius and Rafferty has accomplished it in a manner that leaves nothing to be desired. In September he began his career as head coach of football. Here he faced the most difficult task that ever confronted a southern coach; to begin with the schedule was planned for the team of the previous year, and was made up, in part, of four of the strongest teams that the White and Blue had ever faced. To carry this out but three members of the 1916 machine appeared. The great problem was to find men to fill the other eight positions. The squad from which these men were to be drawn was the smallest, youngest and most inexperienced that ever appeared on Wilson Field. He thus had but five men who had previously been under fire in college athletics, and with these men as a nucleus he built up a team that will long be remembered and will go down in the history of Washington and Lee athletics as the most deserving holders of the title of "FIGHTING GENERALS." They played the mighty Georgia Tech, were defeated, but not beaten and continued the fighting from whistle to whistle. They then returned to Lexington and on the following Saturday, by a remarkable display of fight and spirit defeated their ancient rivals, N. C. A. & E. They then held the mighty Gilroy and his Georgetown associates to an eight point margin and during the greater part of the game outplayed them. And as a fitting close for a fighting season they held W. & J. scoreless until the last five minutes of play. And as is well known to every W. & L. man the credit for this remarkable performance goes to Coach Rafferty. He not only taught them football, but he also imbued them with his wonderful fighting spirit and imparted to them a courage that looks defeat in the face unafraid and refuses to quit.

Therefore, we of Washington and Lee feel that we have an athlete without reproach, a coach par excellence, and a man in every measure of the word, and it is to him, William Caulfield Rafferty, courageous coach of the fighting Generals, we address as a token of our great appreciation.

Resume of Season

On Thanksgiving Day in Richmond closed the record of the "Fighting Generals" football aggregation for 1917. Out of the most grueling season with the lightest possible material was developed a team which fought the best of them all and ended still fighting. Theirs was the honor of being dubbed by the whole athletic world, "The Fighting Generals," and well did they deserve that name.

To Coaches Rafferty and Bryan is given credit for developing out of the poorest material a team which gave the big teams the scare of their lives and humbled those which were in its own class. To two alumni, John L. Campbell and J. T. McCrum is given the highest appreciation for the hard and in most cases unknown work which they performed. For, though few on the campus were aware of the fact, it was entirely due to them that the football season was able to be carried out, and the student body is in hearty accord with the Calyx in extending its heartfelt thanks.

The first game of the year came when, after the first two games had been cancelled by opponents, Randolph-Macon visited Wilson Field. This game was more of a track meet than anything else, and little was done in the way of polishing off the rough points before the next game. On October 20, the Generals, light in body but strong in spirit, journeyed to Atlanta to play their new rivals, Georgia Tech. They came away still stout in spirit, though the score would show a one sided game. Suffice it to quote from Coach Heisman who said, "Although Tech won by a big score, the hard fighting of the Virginians caused as many injuries as a close encounter."

Next came the ancient rivals, North Carolina, A. & M. Filled with confidence and feeling assured that the scores of previous years would be wiped out, the Aggies came to Wilson Field. They met the fighting Generals and never had a chance. The Blue and White machine rolled up four scores and retired in favor of the scrubs. In the rain near the end of the game the Aggies got away with a pass for a touchdown, but the score ended 28-7.

On November 3rd, Richmond College was played and handled easily, taking the long end of a 43-0 score. The week following brought Roanoke College, to whom was administered a defeat by the largest score a team ever made in Lexington. In spite of the fact that Roanoke scored first by a drop kick, the Generals piled up 118 points.

November 17th brought on the anticipated Georgetown conflict. Backed by the large number of Wand L men who had accompanied the team to Roanoke, the Generals put up a splendid fight. In the first period, bewildering the Georgetown team with a beautiful aerial attack, the Generals scored two touchdowns, in ten minutes. Georgetown's heavy weight toll, and together with the injury of two Blue and White players, caused the final loss of the game. The opponents were able to score three touchdowns with a total of twenty points, leaving the total twenty to twelve in Georgetown's favor.

Those who saw the Washington and Jefferson game will not soon forget the wonderful fight the Generals put up. In Boulevard Park, on Thanksgiving Day the President met the Fighting Generals, and a fight it was in truth. For fifty-five minutes neither side scored. Repeatedly the Generals held near their own goal line and the line of the President was just as impregnable. It looked like a no-score game until with only six minutes to play, McCreight hurdled his weight into the air on the fourth trial and went over for a touchdown. W. and J. scored again on a blocked kick just before the whistle blew, making a score which would indicate a one-sided game—but those who saw, know what a fight it was. Thus closed the record of one of the greatest teams ever representing the Blue and White and one which will ever live in the minds of Washington and Lee supporters.

BAILEY

C. H. PATTERSON

BETHEL

CAPTAIN "A." PIEROTTI. Center. Age 21. Ht. 5 ft. 11 in., Wt. 190.

Pivot man of the Fighting Generals. Al is the greatest center that ever fought for the Blue and White, and rated one of the best in the United States. A wonderful player both on the offense and defense, he was all that a captain could be and never knew what it was to give up. Al was a member of all four major sports; he has heard the call and has gone into the service adding one more name to the illustrious list of W. & L.'s football fighting for the service of Uncle Sam.

BAILEY. Guard. Age 21. Ht. 6 ft. 1 in. Wt. 186.

"Edwin." The meanest man on Wilson Field, "nuff said." It was certainly a treat to see Ed in action; powerful, fast, tackling hard and sure, he proved to be a terror to opposing guards. Ed was a member of the squad last year, but found himself this year. Off the field you'd never know he was in town, but as soon as he put on his "uni" and went to Wilson Field, every one knew that Bailey was in action.

PATTERSON, "CRAIG." Guard, Age 20. Ht. 5 ft. 11 in. Wt. 160.

This was Craig's first year as a member of the Varsity Squad, though a Junior in college. "156 pounds of more fight" characterized this man. Though light, he had a powerful charge, was a vicious tackler, and a bulwark to the center of the line. Above everything, Craig was a gentleman on and off the field.

BETHEL, "TURNER." Left Tackle. Age 21. 6 ft. 3 in. Wt. 180.

Aggressiveness was Turner's middle name. Whether it was as at End, Guard, or Tackle, he always had the same old fight. He was a tower of strength offensively and defensively, and his ability was recognized by the team when they chose him to lead them for 1918.

LARKIN, "PAUL." End. Age 20. Ht. 5 ft. 9 in. Wt. 155.

Paul is that last of the three "Vets" of the 1916 team. He demonstrated in his freshman year that as an end he was of the best. He was the best end Wilson Field ever saw on boxing tackles, smashing interference and receiving passes. His ability was shown this year when he did the putting and drop-kicking and was used in the backfield for carrying the ball. Paul never had to be "balled out," he always did his best.

FOX, "LES." End. Age 19. Ht. 6 ft. Wt. 160.

This big boy came in a freshman and at once demonstrated that he was out for someone's position. Tried in the backfield, he finally found himself at end and "stayed" there. Les certainly took great care of the right wing and was adept at receiving passes, many long gains being due to this boy's ability.

FAIN, "JIMMY." Quarterback. Age 20. Ht. 5 ft. 7 in. Wt. 145.

Jimmy has been a member of the squad for two years as a halfback. His natural ability made the Coach put him in as quarter, and Jimmy in a strange position lived up to the reputation of the long string of quarterbacks that have graced Wilson Field. Jimmy ran the team and his ability pulled the Generals out of many a tight hole.

ATKINS, "J. B." Tackle. Age 20. Ht. 5 ft. 10 in. Wt. 161.

"156 pound tackle." What J. B. lacked in weight and height he made up in fight. He never said much and was always to be found on the "bottom" when the teams piled up. A sure tackler, quick to size up a play, "J. B." was a bunch of energy.

MOSS

SILVERSTEIN

RAINES

BLAIN

MOSS, "CHARLIE." Halfback. Age 21. Ht. 5 ft. 10 in. Wt. 162.

Charlie was the speed merchant of the Generals. He said he was an end, but his speed said otherwise and when he started on a sweeping end run it usually meant the officials marking up first down. Not only that but Charlie threw the passes from the backfield and his accuracy was shown together with Jim Fain's when in the Georgetown game they threw twenty-five passes, twenty of which were successful.

SILVERSTEIN, "BULLET JOE." Fullback. Age 22. Ht. 5 ft. 8 in. Wt. 167.

This human battering ram was a wrecking crew in himself and few lines held Joe from making his distance. And when it came to backing up the line, we knew everything was safe. Joe didn't know what it meant to be downed; it was always "up and at 'em again."

RAINES, "SAM." Halfback. Age 18. Ht. 5 ft. 9 in. Wt. 146.

Sam owns a town, Raines, Tenn. We merely call attention to it. As a halfback we want none better. He hit the line like Buck Sweetland and ran the ends like Moss and Young. Sammy never failed to gain his distance, and once he got loose he couldn't be headed; and he knew the science of the stiff arm and side step.

BLAIN, "DAN." Halfback and Fullback. Age 18. Ht. 5 ft. 9 in. Wt. 136.

The lightweight of the Generals. 136 pounds of nerve. Hitting the line running the ends or tackling, Dan was an inspiration to anyone. "An 'e didn't seem to know the use of fear." Need more be said? Hardly—he showed what was in him.

WATTS

GILLIAM

WATERS

WATTS, "DICK." End. Age 22. Ht. 5 ft. 10 in. Wt. 154.

Dick has been a member of the squad for three years, but each year has been unfortunate in getting injured. He came across this year and proved a slashing end. In the A. & M. game Dick intercepted a forward pass and was speeding on his way for a touchdown when Ted Merideth caught him—at least Dick swears it must have been Merideth.

SCOVELL, "SWEDE." "HAMP." Tackle. Age 20. Ht. 5 ft. 11 in. Wt. 160.

Hamp was another of the men who helped earn the name "Fighting Generals" for the Blue and White team. Always smiling, Hamp was a fighter from the ground up, and was all that could be asked of a tackle.

GILLIAM, "TOMMY." Guard. Age 20. Ht. 5 ft. 10 in. Wt. 177.

Tom fought his way to the Varsity and earned everything that was coming to him. Tom never said too much, but then "actions speak louder than words" at times. He was always ready when called upon and that was more than once.

WATERS, "LUKE." Manager.

This man took over the reins at the hardest time of the career of W. & L.'s football. Luke had problems to contend with that would ordinarily discourage any manager, but not Luke. He took hold of things with a vim and only the highest words of praise can be given to him. Every day saw Luke Waters on Wilson Field looking after the interests of the team. He may well rank with the best of W. & L.'s football managers.

Basketball

BASKETBALL

Resume of Season

Five victories and six defeats tells part of the story of the Generals' basketball season for 1918. The other part of the story is a series of the hardest reverses a team ever had, met by the old fighting spirit which has always characterized Washington and Lee teams.

Returning only one monogram man, the season opened with a large squad, a few of whom were on the squad last year. With Captain Bethel in center, Cottingham and McCain at forward, and Atkins and Fain at guard, the Blue and White supporters felt they had a winning team and looked forward with hope to the opening game. Hampden-Sidney was overcome in this encounter with ease. Before the next game, however, McCain had sustained a bruise of the foot, Fox had a broken nose, and Bethel was in the hospital with a bad arm which kept him out almost the rest of the season. Davidson went away victorious, but it was a crippled team that they had beaten. Virginia Christian College and Elon were then played and defeated, the latter by a margin of one point. The team then journeyed to Lynchburg to meet the University of Georgia. This team was one of the best in the south and came with a great reputation. The Generals put up a splendid exhibition leading at the last, but having their five point lead wiped out by three field goals in as many minutes, lost by one point. Atkins, called home, played his last game for the Generals. Crippled as they were, the Blue and White warriors played out the remainder of the season of five games, losing by narrow margins to all except the Tennessee aggregation who were in much the shape the Generals were. It was a hard fought season, in which reverses calculated to break up any team, caused the losses of games but did not dampen the fighting spirit.

Resume of Season

Track work at Washington and Lee this year was represented only by the Cross-Country team. In the fall, as has been the custom for the past four years, Washington and Lee entered the South Atlantic Cross-Country meet, in which are represented the colleges and universities in the South Atlantic Intercollegiate Athletic Association. The Blue and White was fortunate in returning three monogram men and three members of last year's squad who did good service this year, and together with one new man put out a championship team despite the war. Thus in one department at least were the Generals up to usual standard. The meet was held at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, and resulted in a complete walk away for the wearers of the trident. Washington and Lee was able to bring in four out of the first five places, and beat their nearest competitors by twenty and fifty points. This completed the fourth annual Cross-Country meet out of which the Generals had won three championships and one second place.

An Appreciation

Five years ago there entered Washington and Lee a youth by the name of Harry K. Young, better known as "Cy." For four seasons he was considered the best athlete at the university, and his prowess on the fields of football, baseball, basketball and track will be for years to come a familiar topic on the campus. One year after the advent of this well known athlete and popular leader there came, with the class of 1918, to the campus of Washington and Lee, one came, although not a student, Washington and Lee claims—one known not merely as the sister of Cy Young, but as Miss Eutha Young.

For four years Miss Young has lived in Lexington. For as many years she has been a loyal and never failing supporter of all the interests of Washington and Lee, the life of its musical organizations to which she has given unlimited time, and a popular and prominent figure at its dances and social functions. No student has proved more loyal to Washington and Lee; no student has ever formed in his four years upon the campus a larger, warmer, and more loyal host of friends than has Miss Eutha Young. She has proved invaluable in charitable, religious, and social enterprises at Washington and Lee, and in the town of Lexington in which her services were often needed and never found wanting. As a lovely character, an attractive personality and a true, valuable and loyal friend of the university this appreciation is tendered her, and when she leaves its campus, the sincere respect and never failing interest of her many friends of four years now spread broadcast over land and sea will always follow her.

History of the Junior Class

(As handed in by the class historian, whose picture in the act of delivery is herein reproduced.)

The Junior Law Class of 1918 entered Washington and Lee on September 14, 1917. It was one of those days when the sluggish breezes were sighing plaintive requiems over the dying summer; and as the shade of evening fell like a feather, wafted downward from an eagle in its flight, the waning moon cast weird shadows over the sleeping world, while glimmering stars awakened a longing for the invisible as it did in the souls of ancient shepherds while wandering over the Judean Hills. Some of us were strangers at Washington and Lee, while others were familiar with the University Place, having been known as "Preps."

It was a noble band of young legalities that assembled in one of the rooms of Tucker Hall on September 15, 1917, to ordain the newly elected Dean. Men were there from Maine's dark pines and crags of snow to where magnolia breezes blow, and written indelibly upon the fair visage of each was an unfailing purpose. The scene changed and we found ourselves letting our minds float on the breast of a restless sea. The new Dean would have us believe that it was the false ideal that builds "The Paradise of Fools." That is was eagerness to achieve success in realms we cannot reach which breeds more than half the ills that curse the world. That if all the fish-eggs were to hatch and every little fish became a big fish, the oceans would be pushed from their beds and the rippling rivers would be eternally "dammed"—with fish, but that the whales and the sharks and sturgeons and dog-fish and eels and snakes and turtles make three meals every day in the year on fish and fish-eggs. That if all the legal spawn should hatch out lawyers the earth and the fullness thereof would be mortgaged for fees and mankind would starve to death in the effort to pay off "the aforesaid and the same." We received the charge of the enemy with poised lance and visor down. We deluged the tall cliff under a flood of "mountain eloquence" which poured from our patriotic lips like molasses from the bung-hole of the Universe. We mounted the old war-horse of Real Property and held Contracts at bay while we captured Introductory Law. In the study of Domestic Relations, we found that no mind equal to the author's could soar in Beauty's skies with freer flight. Who but thee could drop with grace from whirling planets to grimacing monks? Who but thee could hold us spellbound with discourse on such a superficial study as Domestic Relations? Only Shakespeare in all the pages of literature; and in this particular art thou didst outdo him, for in the endless scale of thy matchless voice were all the mimic sounds of forest and field and flowing waters, and thou couldst glorify or distort thy noble face to impersonate whatsoever thou wouldst. In thee speechless Nature found a voice and thou didst become the tongue of Dumb Beauty. Thy like shall not appear; the centuries shall sigh in vain for thy duplicate.

On the morning of October 16 a dignified senior inquired: "What means that perspiring host of noisy men over yonder in Tucker Hall?" The Junior Lawyers were holding a mass convention to name class officers. The delegates believed that it was their convention, but a motion made by a sovereign not in the ring was instantly caught upon the jagged prong of a pre-arranged point of order and pitched over the parliamentary fence into the muck pile of oblivion.

The fair-haired Chairman painted the air with reeking rhetoric and perfumed it with patriotic platitudes, and the sweltering delegated wrestled desperately with rules of order and there was a fierce and furious eruption of inflamed grammar and rasping oratory and pandemonium reigned supreme in the convention. Motions came thick and fast, only to be stabbed and laid upon the table. The deadly point of order, that ruthless instrument of parliamentary torture, gleamed like the shining sword of Damocles and clever arguments asunder. Resolutions were born to be murdered and multiplied deceased amendments choked and dammed the surrent of the convention like rotten driftwood in a stagnant stream.

SCENE: History room, W. & L.

TIME: Any morning nearly, 9:04 o'clock.

The members of the class in American history have dropped themselves over the radiator. The weak members are looking expectantly at their watches. Taylor is endeavoring to find the name of Mrs. Jackson's mother-in-law's aunt's maiden name, having prepared the rest of the lesson. At 9:04½ two Freshmen advocate cutting, but older members do not agree with their optimism. A step is heard, and Dr. Riley enters, black bag and all. The class files sorrowfully in. Riley opens the window, spits, picks up his roll book, marks absences, opens the text, clear his throat, throws his lower jaw down, and begins:

Dr. Riley: "Well, we have a luscious subject to-day, with plenty of good beef-steak for solid nourishment. A man is a freak that does not enjoy this course in history—so if you don't like it you had better not mention it around college. When I was at the Hopkins, history was always interesting. Now, let's have a good meal with this choice morsel from Bassett... Now, Mr. Whitelaw, I wish you would discuss the lesson in full."

Whitelaw: "Why, ah-h-h, you see—that is, er-r-r, Jefferson, he—ahh."

Dr. Riley: "Now, Mr. Whitelaw, get rid of those mannerisms of yours. You make more noise than all the rest of the class put together. Quit your hemming and hawing and get down to business. When I was at the Hopkins I had no trouble in making my recitations fluent."

Whitelaw: "Well, Jefferson, he..."

Dr. Riley: "Don't say, 'Jefferson, he.'"

Whitelaw: "Well, Jefferson did not care for, er-r-r, ahhh-hhh, how do you pronounce that word in the book, Doctor?"

Dr. Riley: "Be 'shamed of yourself, sir! Don't you study German, Mr. Whitelaw? Simple. Class?... ei is always pronounced i...."

Whitelaw: "Well, ah-hh...."

Dr. Riley: "All right, so far... come on, I can't pull teeth all day... Mr. James?... Now Mr. James you have a lot of mannerisms, too. Cut out the 'and all'... Mr. Witt? Don't know! Not prepared? Well, tell us, Mr. Taylor."

Taylor: "Well, the tenth line on page 519 has at the ninth period, just beyond the semi-colon, a statement that throws significant light upon this obtruse point. At tenth and a third, on the dark and stormy morning of the nineteenth of March, etc...."

Dr. Riley: "Very good, sir.... Now,—what's that? The bell? Mr. Whitelaw took up the hour hemming and hawing. For next time your literary report is due—brouse around until then."

THE SOCIAL LION

Captured, ladies and gentlemen, running wild in the intricate windings and turnings of the dance floor at Sweet Briar. Contrary to the custom of most of his kind, he is fond of being places which humans are wont to frequent, and is easily attracted by music and the shuffling of feet. He walks with a peculiar gliding motion, which is quickened when strains of syncopated joy are heard.

Come closer—he is about to devour food that is much to his liking and with which he must continually be fed if he is to, remain in a satisfied condition. But hold, little girl! not so close to the cage! It is just your kind for which he has a magnetic attraction, and once you are within his grasp—frankly—good-night, for he is a bad one. What is that upon his upper lip, you ask? Hush.... You should not ask such questions. Despite his nature, he is rather sensitive concerning that particular thing, and maintains a deep hatred toward "Keeper" Pratt because of the latter's ability to grow a long silky one....

TO HIGHER CHEMISTRY

A fool there was and chemistry took,
 (Even as you and I)
 All the joys and pleasures of life forsook,
 In the fumes of the lab sought a quiet nook,
 And buried his head in a funny book,
 (Even as you and I)

A fool there was and he got a flunk,
 (Even as you and I)
 When he studied hard, his grades they sunk,
 Until the profs knew his work was punk,
 When he worked at reactions and other junk,
 (Even as you and I)

The fool was kicked from his customer
 place,
 (Even as you and I)
 He fizzled out in the final race,
 Because he couldn't quite hold the pace—
 In fact he was just a hopeless case,—
 (Even as you and I).

" THAT GRAND AND GLORIOUS FEELING! "

CHARLES (ARAMIS) TAYLOR

From the wilds of the land of the mosquito, o'er the beaten trail to Lexington, came this stalwart Indian buck. Active in the sports of his race, Red-Skin Taylor was much chagrined to find the large mosquito of his beloved Jersey an unknown animal in these parts, and was thus forced to turn to other fields. In hunting for game on our happy campus grounds, he suddenly espied two local braves, Chief-Rain-in-the-Face McMurray and Shark-Man Cox of our Fi Bat Acapa Tribe, and was directed by them to a huntable specie, a bird little known to most of us, and by the initiated, called A+'s.

Our young aborigine found these so much to his liking that he has since given them his undivided attention. The poor little things haven't a chance. He has affiliated with the local Indians, and may oft be seen around Main Wigwam with such excellent hunting munition as Howe's Inorganic Chemistry and other sure hits when well directed at aforesaid birds. His proficiency has given him the title of "Chief," and a peculiar custom of his Jersey tribe, that of wearing a wavy beard upon the lower part of the chip was bestowed upon him the full title of "Chief Bearded Lady."

THE BULL

The bull is an animal which can be neither seen nor felt, but that is always heard. It inhabits all classes, at Washington and Lee, affecting both professors and students, but thrives best in courses generally regarded as "liberal arts." As a rule the atmosphere of science classes its in death, although there are a few remarkable exceptions. It is of no particular use, but always associates with the men having the lowest marks. As a rule it is harmless, but sometimes becomes irritating; on the other hand it frequently adds to the gayety of the nations. It is violently opposed to diplomas and thrives on Kappa Beta Phi keys.

THE AFTERMATH

She was here for the Final festivities, Bob,
 You remember her, blue eyes and shy,
 Little maid with the dimples and pouting
 lips,
 That seemed to say, "Why don't you try."

I see you remember, don't laugh at me, Bob,
 'Tis a sorrowful, heartrending tale,
 I've never been much for the calico, but—
 When I saw her, my heart 'gan to fail.

'Twas Thursday, remember the moon that night, Bob,
 A lover's moon, silvery, bright,
 'Twould have made a stone idol waltz round
 and make love,
 I'll never forget that last night!

The lake rippled diamonds, and whispered
 I asked her if she liked to row;
 I'd love to, if you'll teach me," demurely she said.
 Will a bee hunt for honey? Quite so!

Did I teach her? Well, rather! And other things too,
 The boat seats are narrow, you know;
 Got the dearest of curls, waist just so round,—
 Well, what are you laughing at so?

The oars hurt her hands, so we just let them trail,
 And we drifted—and drifted—I told her
 How I'd love to drift on for ever with her,
 Her head rested here on my shoulder.

A smothered half sigh, a soft little squeeze,
 As her head just smuggled down deeper,
 "And I, too, would so love it," she said,
 "But—who would pay the boat-keeper?"

You know that old highwayman boat-keeper,
 Bob,
 And I, too, the saddest of men—
 I guess I'm not cut for the calico streak,
 Say, Bob, just lend me a ten.

JOHN WITT

Yes, girls, Beatrice Fairfax is no more! She is literally, certainly metamorphically, put on the shelf through the entrance of this building genius to the field of matrimonial advisers, et affaires de coeur, whatever that means. His vast experience along the line of this subject has well qualified him to dedicate his book to poor suffering commuters who want to gain the love of their fair one, but know not how.

Dr. Witt, in his treatment of the subject, has, in his usual searching, industrious and plodding fashion, has brilliantly proved his worth as an author and has forever freed man-kind from the worry and trouble of embarrassing moments and maddening conjectures. We cannot, therefore, but give this worthy author his due. We have noticed many other favorable reviews in various papers, as "In his recent work, How to Make Love, Prof. John Augustus Witt has rendered a distinct service to the human race.... The study will be a permanent reference work...."—New York Times.

"No more dashing hit of psychological philosophical study of the sexual emotions and the working of the human heart has been penned. Calmly and clearly, Dr. Witt has produced an invaluable addition to the lore of human heart study."—The Nation

"YOURS FRATERALLY"

A student old of Wash and Lee,

Once fell into a burning passion.

'Twas with a fritney brother; he Wrote him a letter in this fashion:

"You are a crook, a cheat, and crude,

Pay your debts, or all eternally.

I'll see you damned infernally."

Then in an absent minded mood,

He signed it, "Yours Fraternally."

Inspect the above likeness of Professor James William Kern as taken at the polite request of the CALYX staff. See the Ciceronian expression of the mouth. Gaze upon the Homeric profile, the Virgilian nose, the Platonian smile. No finer expression of classic countenance was ever chiseled by a Phidias or a Praxiteles. The representative of the White Studio was delighted at the opportunity presented by Professor Kern. "The reputation of the White Studio is established. Permission has been granted by the professor to use this picture for trade purposes. We expect to obtain at least a dozen college contracts by displaying this portrait...for we dare you to point out a single defect."

Turn back to page 37 and see the picture again. How it adds to the representative character of the page! Makes the annual so complete, you see. Indeed the professor in so kindly consenting to having his picture made, rendered the studio, the CALYX, and the university a distinct service.

THE SHARK

The shark is a peculiar specie in the animal kingdom. It is characterized by its ravenous craving for such sea-food as Virgil, Bassett, Abry-Audic-Crouzet, Howe, and like nourishment. In its appetite it is not discriminating—all food looking alike to it. It may generally be found floating upon the electric currents in the Physics lab, or in the air waves above the heads of the specie human. The creature has a strange affinity for gold keys shaped as a rectangle. Somehow or other the metal, the glitter, or the smell appeals to the shark. It has been known to sacrifice all other interests in order to satisfy this odd craving. Some of these eccentric animals border on the human—some to such an extent that some scientists have actually thought that the two species might be related. Such radical ideas and theories, however, have never been seriously considered by conservative scholars.

To Whom It May Concern

Some things I know and some I do not. I wish to make a statement and thereby be able to get information sufficient to inform me of the originator of a Lie, a dirty, infamous Lie and the originator of it a Liar of the deepest die, one who is too dirty to be noticed by the most common cur dog, that ever lived in this or any other community. One of the Faculty of the W. & L. University has made a statement that I have frequently, for some years past, sold whisky to the students and cadets and that one who knew me well, could any time get whisky from me. I wish to brand that man the dirtiest, low down, infamous Liar that ever drew the breath of life, and if he has the courage of a hound pup he will make that statement to me and prove his statement.

TURNER BETHEL

Gaze—if you dare—into the depths of these dark and unfathomable eyes. Did you ever before behold such liquid pools of tenderness, love and affection? Nay, nor has anyone else. To break it gently—this is our Turner—without whom we could never get the fair sex to Lexington and from whom we must protect them upon their arrival.

Notice the calm and imperturbed manner in which he pursues his favorite occupation. One glance in those eyes, one squeeze from those strong manly hands, and the ladies are forever his slaves. With unfurrowed brow he seizes their helpless hearts, and wrings them dry of the life-blood, then cruelly breaks them in twain.

Many of his satellites have sought to emulate him, but have been unable to secure his methods, as he always operates in dark places, in plant-ridden sun parlors, or under the dark shadows of the lilacs. Only the moans of the tortured slaves to his charms can be heard, as our Turner twists and crushes their palpitating hearts.

THE GOAT

It was not our purpose at first to discover this unfortunate animal, but we must needs be impartial and do justice. This animal is by nature bold and ever forward, and must be treated in a like manner. He may be found in dwellings wherein are found men of fraternal tendencies and for whom they manifest the greatest affection. The goat is always hungry and thrives upon wood when shaped in a convenient manner. He has likewise a taste for belt and razor straps. His habits vary greatly with the seasons, the month of January being characterized by a meekness and docility rarely found in other animals. Usually, however, the goat is of exuberant spirits and delights in frolicking with the bull. Most of these curious creatures become transformed in time to rational beings. In some localities, however, the tendency is for the animal to continue as such indefinitely.

WEAR OUR BROGANS AND
YOU WILL BE CRAZY TO GO
BARE-FOOTED

Could you but count the homes this vampire has wrecked, the families she has broken up, you could not but sigh for the war to end in order that the government might be enabled to spare some troops to send here to take charge of this menace to young manhood.

BROKE, BROKE, BROKE

Broke, broke, broke,—
I'm as broke as the waves of the sea;
I would I could fling in their clutches,
The bills that have come to me.

Oh well for the millionaire sport,
That he rides in his automobile!
Oh well for the lucky rich,
That he eats his Waldorf meal.

And the creditors still come on,
And camp at my chamber door,
But oh for the sight of my vanished jack,
And the credit that is no more.

Broke, broke, broke,—
And I would they were all in the sea;
But the day when my credit is good,
Will never come back to me.

THE VAMPIRE

Friends, why go to the Lyric when you can gaze free of charge upon yon sinuous form? Theda Bara or even the ancient Cleopatra are innocent and shy, besides the vamping power of this creature's eyes. Why that movement of the hips, you ask? Oh, the Siren calls to her feet her many swains that she may cast a spell over them with the lure of those eyes. Nor are the accomplishments just named the only ones this creature possesses. She is a musician besides, a musician of the first order, for every night does she serenade a group of lovelorn youths.

HEADQUARTERS
W. & L. R. O. T. C.,

The following rules shall be strictly observed until notice to the contrary;

1. The sun shall rise at 6 A. M. and set promptly at 7 P. M., except on Sunday when it shall rise at 8 A. M. and set at 8 P. M.
2. The moon shall not shine before 11 P. M. on week days. On Sunday it shall shine at 9 P. M.
3. Rain may not fall on drill days without special permission from the undersigned.
4. In all matters of doubt the Lord shall report to the undersigned for instructions.

Ralph A. G. Gilling
First Lieutenant and Adjutant.

Give me an arm-chair spacious,
 A volume rich and rare,
 A glowing hearth, my tried, true friend,
 And on magic wings flies care,
 What matters wealth and honors?
 What matters the puff of fame?
 While I hold thus securely
 My chum and an honored name,
 I confine to her in the twilight,
 When the night creeps slowly on;
 The wounds of day have vanished
 Or are lost in contented song.

Give me a nook, away, apart,
 No formal social code;
 With my actions unrestricted
 By the decalogues of mode,
 There I'll make my day-dreams round her,
 As the blue smoke rifts the air,
 Inspired with sweetest fancies,
 No feast of the Gods I would share,
 Ne'er changing from praise to blame
 She believes me ever right—
 My one love, bless her! e'er the same—
 My good, old jimmy pipe.

"LUKE" WATERS

Gentlemen, we present the local Hoover, Chief Justice White, Walter Camp, the General Pershing. Verily our friend Luke is a man of affairs, and as versatile an individual as there is around this neck of the woods. Some three years ago he drifted in from a little village up in the State of Maryland, Frederick we think, and since then has set about the task of making himself famous. He has succeeded. After a year's tussel with the problems of History 5, J. B. tackled the law school,—with better luck. He hasn't received an appointment to the Supreme Court as yet—but of course that could hardly be expected—the President naturally is willing to let him finish his course first. Besides he is doing the government so much good here without being on the bench. As High Priest of the Beanery and Chief Bean-Slinger, Luke is, cooperating with the food administration in a splendid fashion. Look at Slim Williams and Stretch Pratt, two of his boarders, and you will agree. As a side issue, Boulden managed the football team last fall. Between writing beanery checks, handing down decisions for Joe Long, taking in gate receipts at the football games, making all the girls happy at the dances, and taking the R. O. T. C. work, Luke has found time to join about every club in college. We hand it to him—he's a good man!

Sweeten up Joe, cough up a seed,
Don't be so awful modest,
Get in the game, or else get out,
Don't gum this lovely cardfest.

And you too, Runt, don't be so tight.
(Pass us a cig, please, Dick.)
It's opened is it? Well, here's my tax,
I see enough to stick.

How many d'I want? Good Lord, Mike,
Do you think I'm out for fun?
Just flip me that nearest pasteboard,
Slip me the usual one.

Bet 'em do you? Well, up she goes,
It'll cost you a couple more,
All the pikers better stay out,
Or somebody's goner get sore.

Hiked again, eh? Well, that suits me,
But I hate to take yours, Bill.
You'll be all in when you see this hand,
Unless you happened to fill.

Call me? Huh? Well, what you got?
Four lovely chambermaids!
Tough luck, son, just glance at these,
From the deuce to the six all spades.

AS IN YE DAYS OF OLDE

Behold in durrance vile, in the town stocks at Buena Vista, three members of the Executive Committee of Washington and Lee. Little did their classmates think while electing the above to represent them upon that august body that they would ever bring such disgrace both upon themselves and upon the grand old university they represent.

It seems, so runs the woeful story, that these young statesmen had journeyed forth one fair Sunday afternoon in the late autumn to traverse the surrounding country and incidentally to see all that was to be seen in the neighborhood metropolis. The surrounding country was traversed, all right, and a lot of the things to be seen in Beuna were seen. In the quest of the rest of the obtainable views, our young friends explored the paths in the vicinity of the seminary, where rumor says that many are the sights.

A bevy of fair young things was gathered in a window not so far away from the vehicle transporting the little Lee and Washington boys, but that the charms and graces of these young men might be seen and proportionately admired. Ditto the other way. Now it seemed to Messrs. Kern, Stipes, and McChord that the opportunity was good for communicating their admiration by such means as a moving kerchief or by even a gentle whistle or cautious greeting.... But alas! Squire Perkins, the local police force, was on the job. Visions of a fat fine—new sidewalk for Broadway (the Beuna Broadway)—as well as his realization of duty urged him to the performance of the task the sad result of which we can reproduce by the above snap taken the following morning.

LINES WRITTEN ON THE BACK OF A TERM REPORT

Represented naught on this terrane shore,
But the flunks of a flunker who's flunked before,
The Professor's decree to try once more;
Tenderly lay it aside.

It tells of the problems he never tried,
Of the honest sweat that stayed in his hide,
And of the knowledge that's still inside,
And modestly undisclosed.

Keep it in trust for his progeny's sake,
The tale of the tickets he didn't make,
That they, in despair, may courage take
From their sire's serenity.

That the pains which burdened the troubled breast
Of one who flunked, may be set at rest
By the thought of him not once the best,
Who trod the path below.

AFTER THE
PUSH-BALL FIGHT

To Bill Raftery

We are sorry you have gone,
 Raftery,
 We remember the games you've won,
 Raftery,
 But we rising now to say,
 As you're moving on your way,
 That we wish that you could stay,
 Raftery.

Tho you've made the big boys wince,
 Raftery,
 You have never proved a quince,
 Raftery,
 You've been full of vim and fight,
 And we're sure we have you right,
 When we say you'll hold them tight,
 Raftery.

So we'll send you on your way,
 Raftery,
 With a word of cheer to-day,
 Raftery,
 For we know that you'll win game,
 Where you're going just the same,
 Win the cross and get the fame,
 Raftery.

THE STUDE

A Stude there was that sat all night
 (Ever as you and I)
 At a table stacked with little chips bright,
 (And we called him a fool, near started a fight,)
 But the Stude thought he knew the game all right,
 (Ever as you and I).

Oh the I. O. U.'s they took, and the check they took,
 By the work of a dextrous hand,
 Belong to the Stude who did not know,
 (And now we know that he never did know)
 And never can understand.

The simple Stude opened and won the first pot,
 (Ever as you and I)
 Red ones, and blue ones,—his zeal waxed hot;
 (They knew then they had him sewed up in a knot)
 This Stude won another, then took a long shot,
 (Ever as you and I).

Held an Ace high flush—drew—and—he filled,
 And the excellent trips he planned;
 Went to the man who stood quite pat,
 (He held four K.'s, that's why he stood pat)
 And the stude didn't understand.

Oh, the burnt moth feeling, the close sheared
 feeling,
 That strings like a red hot brand,
 It's to write to Dad—more money for books;
 (And Dad scans the items with dubious looks)
 Good Lord! Will he understand?

In the present National crisis a continuous supply of adequately trained medical officers is absolutely essential for the maintenance of armed forces in the field. It is, therefore, the patriotic duty of all college students intending to study medicine to remain under instruction until the country can avail itself of their trained services. All medical students should, therefore, in the interest of National safety continue their work until graduation.
