THE COMSTOCK

THIS year the Comstock will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary.

What does this mean? It means a celebration, a thanksgiving that will pay tribute to the best blood and sinew of the land; to the heroes who toiled over weary miles of desert and plain in search of treasure; to heroes who are now grown feeble with the passing years; to the heroes who have passed to the Great Beyond. It means a celebration that will recall a vast series of events—the unearthing of millions of dollars of silver and gold, the restoration of the nation's credit in her darkest hour—the building of palaces, ocean cables, and telegraph lines that span a continent. It means tribute to feats in mining unsurpassed, to victories gained in the face of seeming defeat, to orators, statesmen, writers, scientists, actors. It means that for the last time the fast fading band of white haired pioneers will sip again from friendship's loving cup which was laid down so many years ago and which for the last time will be raised in reverence as silent as in other days it was joyous and gay.

No other mining camp in the wide world had a Mackay, a Fair, a Flood and an O'Brien. Here once was the home of Mark Twain, of Dan DeQuill, of Goodwin, of Dagget and numerous others who would have shed lustre only for the greater constellations. Here was nurtured the brilliant Michaelson family, one a winner of the Nobel prize for his discovery on the speed of light, and one for her success as an author. Here was developed the romantic but unfortunate career of Sandy Bowers and his wife.

The streets of the Comstock are paved with ore that gives good values. Truly they are paved with gold and silver. With the same shovels, in past years, fortunes were gathered together and thrown away. The old Comstockers took only the best and all else was thrown away to bleach and whiten on the dumps. For this reason alone the prosperity of the old lode is assured for long years to come even if another ton of ore be never taken from the mines.

But the history of silver mining throughout the world refutes any such supposition. For silver mines in Mexico, Spain, Belgium, Germany and many other places that have been working for centuries are still producing the precious metal. No single instance does history tell of a silver lead petering out.

So the Comstock Golden Jubilee, while paying tribute to past glory and past achievement, will be also the commencement of a new era of prosperity that may even surpass the glory of other days.

RENO

RENO, the chief commercial and educational city of Nevada, lies in Washoe county, at the base of the Sierra Nevada mountains, but a few miles from the Nevada-California line. It is the largest city in the state and is surrounded by rich agricultural lands, vast ranges, productive mineral territory and many thriving towns of smaller size which contribute to its prosperity. Immediately adjacent to its eastern limits is the city of Sparks, where are located the intermountain shops of the Southern Pacific railway, the greatest artery of commerce in Nevada.

At Reno is located the University of Nevada, supported by the state and encouraged by large private gifts, its principal benefactor being Clarence Mackay, son of John W. Mackay of Comstock fame. The city is splendidly equipped with public and private schools, a business college, and in addition to its predominance as a business center is the educational seat of the state.

During the past six or seven years it has almost quadrupled its population. City improvements have kept pace with its growth and all of its business streets have been paved, the city completely sewerred and scores of fine business buildings have displaced the structure of earlier days.

From the Truckee river, rising in the Sierra Nevadas, comes unlimited electrical energy for light and power. The same stream supplies the vast agricultural area of the Truckee Meadows, in which Reno is situated, with water for irrigation purposes, its surplus waters being diverted far below the city into the Carson sink where they are reclaiming an empire of land that is being allotted to settlers by the United States government.

West of Reno are located immense timber tracts from which Nevada and much of California derive their supply of lumber. In every direction there are great ranges for sheep and cattle, rich mining districts, salt deposits and agricultural lands.

Taking advantage of its splendid railroad facilities and its geographical location the merchants, manufacturers and financial interests have pursued the most progressive methods. Large department stores with complete stocks, machine shops, packing houses, stock yards, wholesale houses, lumber yards, modern hotels, interurban and street railways and all the other requisites of a wholesale center have been established.

The climate of Reno is mild, the summers not excessively hot and the winters short. Continual breezes blowing from the mountains temper the heat of summer.

Reno has thoroughly equipped schools, many churches, clubs, pleasure resorts, technical training schools, and unlimited opportunities for health, comfort and investment.
