Summary: TERANISHI divided Zaibatsu into two groups.

A. INDUSTRIAL CAPITALISTS

Advocated and actively supported war from the earliest stages. (1931).
Leader was GO, Seinosuke; later IKEDA, Seihin.
AIKAWA, Gisuke (Nissan Kagaku Kogyo K. K.) - obtained sole control of Manchuria from military (chemical field).
NOGUCHI, Susumo (Mitsubishi Kagaku Kogyo K. K.) (now dead) controlled Korea and South-East Asia (chemical field).
KANEBO, Tsuda (spinning industry) North China and South-East Asia.
ISHIHARA (Ishihara Industries, which include general trade, oil refining, and transport) . South-East Asia.
NAKAJIMA - aircraft
KAWANISHI - aircraft

B. FINANCIAL CAPITALISTS.

The four well-known Zaibatsu houses, Mitsui, Mitsubishi, Yasuda, and Sumitomo, represent this group.

This group did not support the war in the initial stages. Later, they did, and Mr. TERANISHI believes that their support was voluntary.

The leadership of the "A" group was really a liaison role. None of these people worked in the open, so that their part is not generally known. Direct liaison was by Chiefs of the Military Affairs Bureau of the Army Ministry (main characters were NITO, Akira, and SATO, Kenryo).

Details of Military-Industrialist cooperation probably best known by GUNJU KANRIKAN, a group of men - mostly Army quartermaster chiefs - who acted as Production Expeditors representing the Army in the civilian industrial plants,
