A Salvashun feller cum along yers and talked to me 'bout my soul, and de fust t'ing I knowed I had tears in me peepers, genooine tears, cully. He put it to me in sich a way dat if I hadn't bin rushed wid biz I'd hev packed me grip and j'incd de Army fur red hot work. Am I flyin too high in my lauguidge, ole mau?"

'No: I understand." "Dat's consolin. It does me good to meet a feller w'at ketches on to me olassics offhand and don't how to consult a pocket dickshunary when I slings me tongue about. Sez I to de feller w'at brings de cologne to me optics wid his bowtiful talk:

"'I can't leave me biz, stranger, to be one o' ye at de barracks, but I'll do work on de outside. I knows a heap o mighty wicker duffers, I does, and I'll use me inflocence to drive em round to de meetin's.'' 'That was kind of you,' I said.

"Yes, but it didn't turn out dat wny," he replied. "I turned dat matter over and over in me mind, and it cam to me dat I would begin on de ole duke "Your father?" "Yes, de Duke o' Mott Street, Say, cully, he's my fadder, but he's tuff. If a cable car should run over him 20 times, de wheels couldn't find a soft spot. If it wasn't fur me political inlocence and finanshul standin, de ole boy would hev bin dooin time long ago. I jest went home one night and sez to

"Prewail nuthin, cully!" he replied in tones of disgust. "De duke broke me head and driv me out, and it cost me a pint o' brandy to square de deal. Dat didn't discourage me, however. Did ye ever hear of de Baxter street parson?" 'No I never did " "He's a young feller, and dey calls him de parson bekase he's wicked from his eyebrows to his toe nails. Say, ole man, I've heard him use 300 cuss words in 55 seconds by de watch, and he wasn't tryin to beat the record at dat. He gits drunk, picks pockets, tips de green goods chappies and bilks all de saloons. Dere ain't no tuffness about him. It's all wickedness, and de nails are clinched on de fur side. Well. I knows where de pars I hangs out, and I hunts him up and sez:

" 'Cully, cum wid me.' " 'Fur a drink?'

"'No. To hev yer bloomin soul disinfected and hung up to dry and then painted two coats o' white!' "I hevn't got any soul."

"'Then we'll git a bladder and make ye one, and inside of two weeks ye'll feel respectable 'nuff to be knocked down by a Broadway car!'

"'Is it de Salvashun Army-ye mean? " 'Dat's de snap, cully.' " 'Den don't waste no more time, fur

I'm already too good! Dat's what ails me-I can't git along for bein too innercent and childlike!'' "Then you failed with him?" I queried.

"Dat's what ye might call it," slowly replied 'de kid.' "It makes me hot under de collar to hear him work his chin after dat style, and I took off me coat and sailed in and left him a bloomin wreck on de floor. A copper run me in, and I paid 15 big dollars to keep de judge good natured. I wasn't droppin me promise to de Salvashun Army, however. I jest went around and tac-kled all de tuffs I had de honor o' knowin, and I gin 'em de choice o' bein made over or o' puttin up deir dukes wid me. I licked about nine o' 'em, and me hans haven't got over deir soreness yit, while de bones I parted wid at de Tombs figger up over 50. that she would blow as long as there was steam, while the hungry waters were gradually rising and swallowing her up. The water had crept up to the boiler, and as it rushed in there was an expiring gush of steam into the signal pipe, which caused a most peculiar, lugabrious and nerve shattering sound.

Just at that moment Pompey, who was responding to the signal, reached the water's edge with his pail. When he heard that sound, he exclaimed:

What the Old Man Thought-Those young ruscals are up to some deviltry. What the Young Ones Said—Hully gee, what a cinch!—Truth.

Absentminded.

The professor was lying on the sidewalk, his face wearing its usual thoughtful expression and his feet slowly moving in circles. His bicycle lay about five yards away. The friend who espied him ran to his assistance. "Are you burt?" asked the friend as he assisted the old gentleman to his feet.

The professor looked about him for a moment. "Dear me!" he exclaimed. "I most have run into the curb and fallen off, "-Indianapolis Journal

There's another new invention Whigh these scientific crimps Discovered, just to help along Old satan nol his imps. It is worse than all the others They have brought out in our day, And the name of this new demon Is the cathode ray.

With this newfangled lightning.
They can look a man right through.
And can see what he is thinking.
Tell you what he wants to do,
Count the money in his pecket,
Then with laughter they will bray.
When they only find a nickel.
With their entheid ray. Just suppose you have a dellar

And you start out town reed,
But you meet that bill collector
Who is wonk with you to plond;
You have stood him off no often
That you think 'twill be but play,
But the fellow finds that dollar
With his cathode ray. From the streets the gossips watch you
