He takes no suite along on the in Col. Blies, his son, in law, Col. Laten and a single servant, form his whole context.

The contrast (says the Baltimore American) is striking, no doubt. The two men are aiming at ends so widely different, that they could not well resetuble one another in a thing. The one, our brave and honest Present, is anxious to serve the country and to return his duries lawfully according to the Constitution and the laws of the land; the other is seeking to advance himself, to subvect the Constitution, to destroy the free institutions to which he ower that elevation and to easily the law of the relief. destroy the free institutions to which he owen has elevation, and to establish upon the rains of the Republic, the throne of an imperial mo-morchy. On our saile of the water, republican-ism means something, it is a substantial re-nity, it is blended with law with reason, with the recognition of rights and the obligation of duties. What republicanism in France may be we cannot venture now to guess. It has made rather a poor show thus far—but the fource may have something to disclose worth waiting for.
