

Dhampirs and The History of The Bilostotsky Family

The Bilostotsky Family is one of the founding families in Europe. It brings up the scariest thoughts based on true events and may give you chills.

The only founder of the Bilostotsky family that we know of is “Jacob Bilostotsky,” a British man who experienced a traumatising event. In 1409, Jacob travelled Europe, ending up in Munich, Germany. There he met a woman named “Anna Marie,” and they instantly fell in love. Jacob noticed it was love at first sight, and he knew this was his true love.

Though, there was something about Jacob that Anna Marie always seemed to notice that was different in any other man. He had long sharp teeth, like vampire teeth, but they were placed third, and not second from the middle.

They constantly fought, and then would fall in love again. It was like there was an unbreakable bond between them. And when they finally had their first, late, but true kiss, Jacob began to feel sick to his stomach. It was like there was a curse in this family. Well, that was true.

Jacob became a Dhampir: Half vampire, half human. Jacob had a lifespan of a human and could live without blood for a month. Dhampirs also can't run as fast as Vampires can. But they can hear better than human beings. To activate a Dhampirs curse, they must kiss a true love. But to turn someone into a Dhampir, they must do the prayer ritual.

Jacob and Anna Marie Bilostotsky had a child, Rosie. And when Rosie had her first kiss, she realised that she needed blood to survive every month, and that is when she got her first period. She decided to drink her own blood by dissolve what was sucked into the pad with water. But since men couldn't do that, they fed on their loved ones.

(Jacob and Anna Marie Bilostotsky's child Rosie.)