Before the second draft took place, hundreds of men had become possessed of the Government circular giving fifty-one diseases, any one of which would secure exemption, and men desiring to escape military service appeared before the surgeon with these circulars marked opposite the names of the different diseases they thought would serve to secure it. One man from Pewaukee had thirty-one fatal diseases marked as "what ailed him," and another from Oconomowoc said he had the nineteen diseases which were marked in his circular. Strange to say, the surgeon refused to exempt either of them.

The conscription act gave drafted men the same bounties as volunteers.

The second draft for Waukesha County began in the United States court room at Milwaukee, the office of County Draft Commissioner having been abolished, at 2 o'clock Thursday, November 12, 1863, and was completed in three hours. Every town was included, and 17 persons drew prizes, divided as follows: Waukesha, 68; Eagle, 28; Ottawa, 18; Summit, 22; Pewaukee, 35; Vernon, 24; Genesee, 29; Delafield, 28; Oconomowoc, 45; Menomonee, 40; Brookfield, 40; Mukwonago, 26; Lisbon, 24; Muskego, 26; New Berlin, 32; Merton, 30.

The third draft for Waukesha County took place at Milwaukee, on Friday, September 23, 1864, and 766 able-bodied men drew prizes. One-half of these were for deficiency in former quotas. The towns of Merton, Lisbon, Mukwonago and Eagle filled their quotas by volunteers. The other towns stood the draft, as follows: Muskego, 52; Menomonee, 140; Vernon, 46; Oconomowoc, 146; New Berlin, 54; Brookfield, 80; Pewaukee, 62; Ottawa, 30; Summit, 62; Genesee, 28; Delafield, 40; Waukesha, 66. But all that were drafted were by no means secured. Some "skedaddled," and a large number escaped by other means, so that a supplemental draft was ordered for December 1, 1864. It resulted as follows: Summit, 32; Muskego, 36; Menomonee, 102; Pewaukee, 24; Oconomowoc, 42.

On December, 20, 1864, President Lincoln issued a call for 300,000 more men. The quotas were not assigned to Waukesha County until February, 1865, and were as follows: Eagle, 13; Ottawa, 6; Summit, 8; Oconomowoc, 7; Merton, 14; Delafield, 13; Genesee, 6; Mukwonago, 17; Lisbon, 22; Pewaukee, 10; Waukesha, 49; Vernon, 8; Menomonee, 25; Brookfield, 31; New Berlin, 24; Muskego, 14.

A few weeks later, Gen. Lee surrendered, Jefferson Davis was captured and the Rebellion—one of the most destructive civil conflicts recorded in history—was at an end.

Capture of Jefferson Davis.—There were so many Waukesha County soldiers in the detachment detailed to effect the capture of Jefferson Davis, the closing act of the Rebellion; there was so much interest attaching to the affair because Col. Edward Daniels, whose regiment the detachment was from, was an old resident of Waukesha County, and as Orson P. Clinton, another well-known Waukesha County man, furnished some of the most important testimony in the successful effort to secure to Wisconsin soldiers their share of the $100,000 offered for Mr. Davis' capture, the following article is deemed worthy of a place in this book, inasmuch as it places before the people of Waukesha County facts which no Wisconsin or other book ever contained:

The scenes of May, 1865, are here recalled. Lee had surrendered; the Southern army, what there was left of it, was poorly clad, poorly fed, poorly paid and poorly equipped. Even the most sanguine of the leaders in the Rebellion were without hope; their inevitable fate cast an overshadowing gloom upon the torn and desolate graveyard of the South. The North had triumphed in arms, and would soon triumph in law. The fate of treason was death; that was Constitutional law, and the Southern leaders knew it. Most of them expected to meet this fate, if captured, and were making extraordinary efforts to escape. Jefferson Davis was one of this class. He had left Richmond, and, with a comparatively small escort, was skulking through the South. This became known, and President Andrew Johnson, May 2, 1865, offered $100,000 for his capture. The First Wisconsin Cavalry, raised mostly by Col. Edward Daniels, ex-State Geologist, resident of Waukesha County, had been lying at Macon, Ga., from April 20, 1865. A detachment consisting of about one hundred and fifty men was sent, under command of Lieut. Col. Henry Harnden, now United States Revenue Collector at Madison, Wis., to capture Jeff Davis, who was thought to be in that State. At 5 o'clock Sunday morning, May 7, 1865, this detachment struck the trail of the Davis party near Dublin, in Laurens County, where the ex-President of the Confederacy and John C. Breckenridge had parted company. A few hours later, bits of paper and a copy of the Richmond (Va.) Enquirer, found on the trail by Walter O. Hargrave, of Fond du Lac County, made it certain past all doubt that the boys were on the right track. They then pushed on, regardless of hunger and weariness, with renewed vigor. At Poor Robbin Ferry, or Abbeville, on the 9th, this detachment met a much larger body of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, under command of Col. Benjamin D. Pritchard. Pritchard knew of the offer of $100,000 for the capture of President Davis (so some of his men said, though he afterward denied it) but Col. Harnden did not. The two talked together, the latter finally disclosing his orders and going so far as to state to the Michigan commander that he (Harnden) was on Davis' trail, showing the papers, etc., in proof. Pritchard said he had orders to take Poor Robbin Ferry and patrol the river; but he was careful not to unbosom himself as Col. Harnden had done, which would have let the latter know of the handsome reward offered by the Government. As, near Abbeville, fresh evidences of the close proximity of Davis were found, the darkies saying, "Jeff am ahead dar," Col. Harnden pushed wearily on, following the trail. Toward night of the 9th, a little girl was accented in front of a Southerners' residence, with, "Has Mr. Davis left your house?" Innocent of the consequences, she answered truthfully, "Yes; he hast just gone that way," pointing in the direction of the closely-followed trail. At 9 that night, Col. Harnden's horse being almost too weak to bear his burden farther, a halt was called. Sergt. Maj. Hargrave opposed the halt. He contended that Davis was as tired and as nearly worn out as themselves, and it was best to push on and make the capture that night. But Col. Harnden's order prevailed, and the boys went into camp within less than two miles of their game, with orders to push on at 3 o'clock next morning.

In the mean time, Pritchard, with fresher men and horses, took a more direct road to intercept Davis (having received information which he afterward admitted under oath came only from Col. Harnden), and made all possible haste to get in ahead of the Wisconsin boys and secure the prize. He came upon the Davis camp in the night of the 9th of May; picked his best men and stationed them across the trail on which he knew Col. Harnden and his men were advancing, with orders to "let no one approach from that direction."

Promptly at 3 o'clock Wednesday morning, May 10, Sergeant Hargrave roused Col. Harnden's camp, and at 3:45 the line advanced. Sergt. George B. Hussey, with six companions, was sent in advance. That Pritchard's men were near never entered the heads of Col. Harnden and his men; therefore, when Hussey received a volley from the former, they instinctively said "rebels," and rushed on to capture Jeff before he could break camp. But on receiving another volley Hussey retreated to the main body of the detachment, which, when it had advanced near enough, received volley after volley from the Winchester repeaters in the hands of the Michigan soldiers. Col. Harnden and his men supposed they were fighting rebels. Some of Pritchard's men, however, said, a few hours later, that they knew who they were firing at, but were obliged to obey the order to "to let no one approach from that direction." Two of the Fourth Michigan were killed, two or more wounded, and two taken prisoners. The prisoners explained and the battle closed; two Wisconsin boys being severely wounded, and several horses being killed or disabled. While this fight was in progress, Pritchard surrounded the rebel camp near by and captured Davis, who had been aroused by the firing and was making ready to flee. When the Wisconsin boys came up, just as Jeff was surrendering, they were so enraged over the manner taken to snatch the prize from their very grasp, that many of them were determined then and there to exterminate "Pritchard and his murderers," as the boys savagely denominated the Fourth Michigan detachment.

Some of the Michigan boys declared Pritchard was entitled to a court-martial, as he had used Col. Harnden's confidence to snatch Davis from those who had first discovered the rebel trail and cheftain, and that his order to stop Col. Harnden resulted in nothing less than murder. To this day the Wisconsin boys declare that Pritchard's escape at that time was one of the luckiest of his whole life.

Davis was captured at Irwinsville, Irwin Co., Ga., just in the gray of morning, Thursday, May 10, 1865. The locality is near the Alapaha, a branch of the Suwanee River, and in the pine barrens, the country of the "clay-eaters," or much despised "white trash." He had on a hood and his wife's water-proof, with a bucket in hand, impersonating an old woman carrying water. His boots "gave him away." At first he drew a bowie-knife and showed fight, but soon gave up. He hung his head like a whipped cur, expecting his fate would be the bullet or the gallows; but Mrs. Davis was indignant, independent and tyrannical, telling Col. Harnden that her husband was "President Davis, and if the Yanks continued to address him in such opprobrious terms as 'old Jeff,' some of them would get hurt." With the captured party were Postmaster General Reagan, now member of Congress from Texas; Davis' private Secretary, and quite a number of others. One of the party cast some papers in the fire, and another stepped aside and touched a match to a bundle of documents, supposed to have been of great importance; but what they were has never been disclosed, and never can be.

When the boys began to confiscate baggage, etc., Mrs. Davis commanded Sergt. Hargrave to save her husband's magnificent horse for his use. There is no evidence that her order was obeyed.

All that saved Pritchard from court-martial was Secretary of War Stanton's hatred of Col. O. H. La Grange, in command of the brigade, afterward Superintendent of the U. S. Mint, who indorsed Col. Harnden's official report of the affair, stating the facts as here recited, and throwing the whole blame for the wanton loss of life upon what appeared to be the willful doings of Pritchard. Secretary Stanton gave no heed to this report, because La Grange once presumed to talk pretty plainly to him in regard to the exchange of prisoners. La Grange had been captured and put "under fire" by the rebels—hence his plain talk about the duty of exchanging prisoners.

When, however, the matter came before the committee appointed by Congress, and the Fourth Michigan claimed the entire reward and all the credit of the capture, Col. Harnden went before the committee with such facts as secured to the Wisconsin boys their full share of the money; but the pages of history still bear wicked libels against the First Wisconsin Cavalry.

The proof that no heed was given to Col. La Grange's report of the battle at Davis' capture because of Stanton's hatred of that brave Wisconsin officer, was the fact that La Grange had repeatedly been strongly recommended for promotion, which Secretary Stanton as often refused.

Following is something more official. Gen. Robert G. H. Minty, in command of the division, said, in his official report to the War Department, May 18, 1865, that "Pritchard found a detachment under Lieut. Col. Harnden, of the First Wisconsin Cavalry, on Davis' trail ahead of him," and that, "by taking a circuitous route and marching until 2 o'clock in the morning," succeeded in passing ahead of Harnden and making the capture. This report was based on fresh facts, and no further evidence is needed to convince any reasonable person that a superhuman effort was made by Pritchard to cheat the weary Wisconsin boys out of the fruits of their almost superhuman labor.

Following is Gen. J. H. Wilson's official report of the capture of Jefferson Davis :

MACON, Ga., May 13.

Hon. E. M. Stanton :

Lieut. Col. Harnden, commanding the First Wisconsin Regiment, has just arrived from Irwinsville. He struck the trail of Davis at Dublin, Laurens Co., on the evening of the 7th, and followed him closely night and day through the pine wilderness at Alligator Creek, and Galen Swamp, via Cumberlandsville to Irwinsville. At Cumberlandsville, Col. Harnden met Col. Pritchard, with 150 picked men and horses of the Fourth Michigan. Harnden followed the trail directly south, while Pritchard, having fresher horses, pushed down the Ocmulgee toward Hopewell, and thence by House Creek to Irwinsville, arriving there at midnight on the 9th. Jeff Davis had not arrived. From a citizen, Pritchard learned that his party was encamped two miles out of the town. He made a disposition of his men and surrounded the camp before day.

Harnden had camped at 9 P. M. within two miles, as he afterward learned, from Davis. The trail being too indirect to follow, he pushed on at 3 A. M., and had gone but little more than one mile when his advance was fired upon by the men of the Fourth Michigan. A fight occurred, both parties exhibiting the greatest determination. Fifteen minutes elapsed before the mistake was discovered. The firing in the skirmish was the first warning Davis received.

The captors report that he hastily put on one of his wife's dresses and started for the woods, closely followed by our men, who at first thought him a woman, but seeing his boots while he was running, they suspected his sex at once. The race was a short one. The rebel President was soon brought to bay. He brandished a bowie-knife and showed signs of battle, but yielded promptly to the persuasion of Colt's revolvers, without compelling the men to fire. He expressed great indignation at the energy with which he was pursued, saying that he believed our Government too magnanimous to hunt down women and children. Mrs. Davis remarked to Col. Harnden, after the excitement was over, that the men had better not provoke the President, or he might hurt some of them.

Reagan behaves himself with dignity and resignation. The party evidently were making for the coast.

J. H. WILSON,

Brevet Major General.

It should be observed that, in pushing ahead of Col. Harnden, Pritchard violated orders. He was to patrol the river at Abbeville. Col. Harnden made his official report May 13, to Brig. Gen. Croxton, barely stating the facts of the capture. On this report Col. O. H. La Grange made the indorsement heretofore referred to, which is as follows :

HEADQUARTERS SECOND BRIGADE, FIRST CAVALRY DIVISION M. D. }
 MACON, Ga., May 14, 1865. }

Respectfully Forwarded:

From this report it appears that Lieut. Col. Harnden faithfully discharged his duty, and no blame can attach to him in relation to the unfortunate collision between his detachment and Col. Pritchard's, which he had every reason to believe remained at Abbeville. It is, however, a source of painful regret that the satisfaction experienced in this communication is clouded by the knowledge that an act having every appearance of unsoldierly selfishness in appropriating by deception the fruits of another's labor, and thus attaining unearned success, resulted in unnecessary bloodshed, and a sacrifice of lives for which no atonement can be made. What may have been intended merely as an act of bad faith toward a fellow-soldier resulted in a crime, and for this closing scene of the rebellion, inglorious in itself, but historic by circumstances, it is difficult to repress a wish that the accident had afforded the Government a representative above suspicion.

O. H. LA GRANGE,
Colonel Commanding.

Any one who knows Col. La Grange, his record in the army and his course at Milwaukee and in Fond du Lac County, during the famous "Booth War," in Antislavery times—knows he was a particularly brave and fearless man; that he was brave enough to censure even Secretary Stanton when he thought such censure was deserved, and was brave enough to make the above endorsement, when all the facts were in his possession, before any man's judgment had been warped by the hope of magnificent reward. After the Congressional Committee had begun the investigation of the Fourth Michigan's claim to the entire reward of $100,000 offered for the capture of Jefferson Davis, the following sworn testimony was elicited, and furnishes all the evidence necessary to place the honor for that famous capture where it belongs:

HON. JOSEPH HOLT, Judge Advocate General of the United States:

I have the honor to represent that, in obedience to orders from Col. O. H. La Grange, commanding Second Brigade, First Division of Cavalry, Military Division of the Mississippi, I reported with one battalion of the First Wisconsin Cavalry to Brig. Gen. Croxton, commanding First Division of Cavalry, Military Division of the Mississippi, at Macon, Ga., on the 6th day of May, 1865. My orders were verbal—to proceed in search of Jefferson Davis; to march to Dublin, on the Oconee River; to leave men at the cross-roads at Jeffersonville and also at Dublin; to proceed with the rest on toward the Savannah River, unless I could get some trace of Jefferson Davis—in that case to pursue and capture him, if possible.

I left Macon with my command at 6 o'clock, P. M., May 6, 1865, marching to Jeffersonville, Twiggs County, where I left Lieut. Hewitt with thirty men. I continued on toward the Oconee River, marching all night and the next day, arriving at Dublin, Laurens County, about 5 o'clock, P. M., May 7; distance from Dublin, fifty-five miles. The roads were very sandy, and the day immensely hot; men and horses much exhausted. Before reaching Dublin I sent Lieut. Clinton on a side road to Laurel Hill, distant some seventeen miles, with twenty men. I passed, during the day, many men from the rebel Gen. Johnston's army, on their way home. Some of them were mounted and armed. At a place called Thomas' Crossroads, I heard of several hundred of them who were all mounted. They had passed out about an hour before I arrived. They were a part of a brigade of cavalry from Gen. Johnston's army. At Dublin, I camped near the ferry. About 11 o'clock, P. M., Lieut. Clinton arrived with his men. I could get no information whatever from the whites. About 12 o'clock at night, a negro came to me and told me that Jefferson Davis, with his wife and family, had passed through the town that day, going south on the "river road." The negro stated that they had eight wagons with them, and that another party had gone down on the other side of the river; that he heard the lady addressed as Mrs. Davis and one of the gentlemen spoken of as President Davis; that Mr. Davis did not come across the river at the regular ferry with the balance of the party, but came over on a small flat-boat about three miles lower down the river, and that he was mounted on a fine bay horse; that he did not come through the town, but only up to the outskirts; that when the party left he joined, and all went on together. The story of the negro being so straight, all believed it to be true. I detailed Lieut. Lane, with forty-five men, to remain at Dublin, watch the ferry and picket the crossroads.

May 8, at early dawn, started in pursuit, on the Jacksonville road. At Turkey Creek, I got from a woman information that convinced me that Jeff Davis was certainly with the party that I was pursuing. Here we entered the pine regions. The country was poor and almost uninhabited. I think that, during the day, I saw only two or three men after leaving the vicinity of Dublin. It commenced raining in torrents, and after a few hours the track of the wagons could no longer be followed. While endeavoring to find the trail again, a citizen came along on horseback. At first, he professed to know nothing of any party; but, upon my threatening to impress his horse, he said he had heard of some wagons stopping over night about eleven miles away. This man guided us through the pine woods, in a westerly direction, about a dozen miles, to the place where the wagon party had stopped the previous night. Discharging the guide, we followed the trail a few miles, when we again lost it. Here I found a new guide, who, for a consideration, showed us through the swamps of the forks of Alligator Creek, over to where the tracks of the wagons could be plainly followed. Continuing on to the crossing of Gum Swamp, and it being after dark, we stopped for the night. We had made about forty miles that day, but, owing to the great rain, it was a hard day's march. The men had no rations, except a little corn meal.

May 9, started a little before light, and pressed on through the same wilderness country, to the Ocmulgee River; thence, down a few miles in a dense swamp, to Thomas' Ferry, where, after some difficulty, we crossed over. An accident to the boat delayed us about two and one-half hours. Here I learned that the wagon party had left at 1 o'clock that morning, passing on to the little town of Abbeville, which contained only three families. We stopped to feed the horses with corn. Here I ascertained that the wagons had gone in the direction of Irwinsville. Just as we were leaving Abbeville, four Union soldiers appeared. They informed me that they belonged to the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, Lieut. Col. Pritchard commanding, and that he, with his regiment, was advancing on the Hawkinsville road, not far distant. Believing it to be my duty, as an officer, to communicate to Lieut. Col. Pritchard the information in my possession in regard to Jeff Davis, I sent Lieut. Clinton, in charge of the command, forward on the Irwinsville road, going attended only by an orderly, to meet Lieut. Col. Pritchard. I gave to him all the information in my possession in regard to Jeff Davis. I informed him that Jeff Davis and family had passed that morning in the direction of Irwinsville, and that my command had gone in pursuit; also that a part of his train, with an escort, was still on the east side of the river. Lieut. Col. Pritchard informed me that he was out after Jeff Davis, but until then, had heard nothing from him; and that his orders were to CAMP AT ABBEVILLE, and guard the ferries on the river, offering me at the same time some of his men, if I needed them. I declined the offer as my force was ample; and it was very difficult to get subsistence for men and horses, and neither of our commands had any rations. Parting with Lieut. Col. Pritchard about 2 o'clock P. M., I hastened on and overtook my command about eight or ten miles from Abbeville. We came upon a place where the Davis party had stopped to feed and rest; they had left so recently that their fire was still burning. We passed on until after dark, probably about 9 o'clock, when, coming to water, I ordered a halt, giving orders to graze the horses a short time, as we had no corn, and be ready for an early start. At the time I knew that the Davis party was not very far away, and so informed my command; but I supposed we were near the Alapaha River, and that the Davis party had probably crossed over. I had been informed that the ford was difficult, and I did not want to come down to the river in the night for fear of alarming Mr. Davis, and enabling him to escape on horseback under cover of the darkness. We had made this day about forty-five miles. May 10, started at 3 o'clock A. M.: we had marched a mile or so when the advance, under Sergt. Hussey (who was an experienced soldier) was suddenly halted and ordered to dismount. Thinking, of course, he was upon the rebel picket, the sergeant answered, "Friends," at the same time giving the word to his six men to retreat, when a heavy volley was fired upon him and his party. This was quickly followed by the second volley. I called for ten men and dashed ahead to where the volley had been fired, when we were greeted by a third volley, from what I judged to be from twenty to thirty muskets. It was so dark that I could distinguish no one, and only saw at this time the fire from their guns. I then rapidly formed my line, dismounting about one-half of my force.

We then pressed on the enemy; after one charge, we forced them into a swamp. At this juncture, I saw a line of mounted men near, on my left. Ordering Sergt. Horr, with a small party, to pursue the enemy, who had disappeared in the swamp, I turned, with my whole remaining force, against their mounted men, who I saw greatly outnumbered my own. The firing was continued on both sides with spirit, until Sergt. Horr came running to me, saying that he had captured a prisoner, and that our opposers were Union troops. I instantly gave orders to stop firing, which was soon followed by a cessation on the part of our opponents. I then rode forward, and the first man I met was Lieut. Col. Pritchard. I asked him how he came to be fighting us. He said that after we had parted at Abbeville, he had selected a portion of his best mounted men and taken another way, and had got to Irwinsville first, and that the wagon train had just been captured, near at hand. I inquired of him if Davis was taken; he said he did not know. He and I then crossed over a narrow strip of swamp, about fifty yards wide, when we found the wagon train and Jeff Davis and party, guarded by a small force of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry. Ascertaining that the whole party were prisoners, and that my mission was ended, I prepared to return to Macon, where I arrived on the 13th of May, 1865. Of my men, there were wounded, Corp. G. W. Sykes, of Company D, arm badly shattered near the shoulder; Private C. W. Seeley, Company D, wounded in the leg severely; Nelson Apley, Company D, in the shoulder slightly. This affair took place about twenty-five miles from Abbeville, and within one mile of Irwinsville, Irwin Co., Ga. Of the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, two men were killed and one officer badly wounded. I will here say that I had no intimation of the presence of any Union troops nearer than Abbeville, and that I believed all the while that we were fighting with Jeff Davis' escort. Had we not been waylaid and fired upon by the Fourth Michigan Cavalry, we should, without a doubt, have captured Jeff Davis even sooner than it was effected. For further information, I will refer to my official report, made to Gen. Croxton upon my return to Macon. In view of all the facts, I do, for myself and the officers and men of my command who were with me at the time of the capture, claim a due share of the reward offered by the President for the capture of Jeff Davis.

Respectfully submitted:

HENRY HARNDEN,

Late Lieutenant Colonel First Wisconsin Cavalry.

This statement was sworn to before O. F. Weed, Justice of the Peace of Jefferson County, Wis., December 11, 1865.

Only the following two sworn statements by men of integrity and honor, who knew the facts and which add strength, if possible, to Col. Harnden's deposition, will be given:

STATE OF WISCONSIN, }
GREEN LAKE COUNTY, } ss.

James J. Aplin, being duly sworn on oath, says, that he was a private in Company K of the First Regiment of Wisconsin Cavalry; that he acted as Orderly for Lieut. Col. Henry Harnden, and was with him in the pursuit and capture of Jeff Davis; that he heard the conversation between Lieut. Col. Pritchard and Lieut. Col. Harnden, referred to in the statement of the latter; that he knew of his own knowledge that all the facts set forth in the whole of said statement are true.

JAMES J. APLIN.

THOMAS C. RYAN, Notary Public.

STATE OF WISCONSIN, }
 WAUKESHA COUNTY, } ss.

Orson P. Clinton, being duly sworn on oath, says, that he was Second Lieutenant of Company B, First Regiment of Wisconsin Cavalry, and with Lieut. Col. Harnden during the pursuit and capture of Jeff Davis: that he has heard read the foregoing statement made by Lieut. Col. Harnden, and knows the contents thereof; that the same is true of his knowledge (except the conversation referred to with Lieut. Col. Pritchard), which he verily believes to be true.

ORSON P. CLINTON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 12th day of December, 1865.

C. G. HEATH, Justice of the Peace, Waukesha County, Wis.

In his detailed testimony, Mr. Clinton made, among others, the following sworn statement: "There was a great deal said as to who was to be blamed for the collision in which the Fourth Michigan lost two men. I did not, neither did I hear any one else blame Col. Harnden; but all blamed Col. Pritchard. I talked with a number of the men who first fired into us, and they all said they had no instructions as to the probability of our coming up that road. Others said that Col. Harnden had hardly got out of sight on the day before when Col. Pritchard ordered a detail of fifty of his best mounted men and marched rapidly all night on another road until they came in ahead of us on the road we had followed all along, and immediately made arrangements for Davis' capture, colliding with us as above recited.

"I knew nothing of any reward being offered for Mr. Davis' capture, until we were with in a day's march of Macon, on our return."

Mr. Clinton's whole statement, which is lengthy and made under oath, does not differ from Col. Harnden's, Sergt. Maj. Hargrave's or the others. It is not necessary, therefore, to incorporate more of it. It is proper to add that Pritchard made a sworn deposition also, in which, however, he was careful not to commit himself to any very positive statement of important facts. Lieut. Purinton, who commanded the advance that fired upon Lieut. Hussey and his men, also swore to a document in which the main facts recited by Col. Harnden are corroborated, and in which he unwittingly, no doubt, opens wide the door which shows that Pritchard and his men knew for certain that they were not firing upon Jeff Davis and his party, or any portion of them. He swears that he found the Davis camp; reconnoitered until he found out that the camp had no outposts, and that as it was comprised of teams, tents and wagons, he "knew it was the Davis camp." If he knew it was the Davis camp, then he knew equally well that the men advancing upon Davis' trail were not the Davis party, therefore must be Union soldiers. In his lengthy sworn statement, Pritchard says he thought, perhaps, the advancing squad his men fired upon was not composed of Union soldiers, as he "did not know but what he (Harnden) might have taken some other route" instead of following the Davis trail, which he had been following so closely for days. The italics in this last sentence are Pritchard's. This bears strong marks of being everything but the truth. He knew that Col. Harnden knew of the whereabouts of Davis. In fact, Col. Harnden knew so well of Davis' whereabouts, that he directed Pritchard in such a certain manner that the latter had gone straight to the Davis camp without the arduous labor of following a trail. Pritchard also swears himself into an unenviable position in another statement. He says he himself, after coming upon the Davis party, took pains to satisfy himself that it was not the First Wisconsin camp. Then, knowing there were but two parties beside his own anywhere in that country, and having discovered and surrounded the one which he knew was not the Wisconsin detachment, he knew past all doubt, and so did Purinton, that the other, upon which he fired, was the Wisconsin detachment. No other conclusion is possible from Pritchard's and Purinton's sworn testimony.

If Pritchard and Purinton had never made any sworn statements, the world would probably have thought one party was as much to be blamed as the other; now, however, all doubt is cleared away—Col. La Grange's indorsement cannot but be considered a just one, and a true statement of actual facts.

The following extract from a private letter may properly be added:

MADISON, Wis., March 27, 1880.

FRANK A. FLOWER, Esq.—Dear Sir: Yours of the 25th inst., containing inclosure, is this morning received. Your article upon the subject of the capture of Jeff Davis is, in the main, correct, and I do not think I care to add anything to it. The whole subject, to me, is intensely disagreeable. Benjamin F. Pritchard is a lawyer at Kalamazoo, Mich., I think. He claims that he was not informed of the reward being offered when he started on his expedition.* Lieut. Hussey was one of the bravest men in our army. Respectfully,

HENRY HARNDEN.

The names of the Wisconsin men who started with Col. Harnden to capture Jefferson Davis are as follows :

Henry Harnden, Lieutenant Colonel ; Walter O. Hargrave, Sergeant Major ; O. P. Clinton, Second Lieutenant, Company B ; James J. Aplin, Company K, Orderly for Col. Harnden ; Austin M. Horr, David N. Col. Harnden, on account of his frankness and honesty, was dubbed the "Puritan Colonel." He was too frank, while confiding in Pritchard, at Poor Robbin Ferry. But he was, nevertheless, an obstinate fighter, and a brave man. Once, having been severely wounded, being unable to stand, he braced himself against a tree and continued to shoot every rebel that came within range, as long as any were in sight.

Career of Commander William B. Cushing.—The soldier dead are, as a matter of fact, all illustrious—all worthy of conspicuous places in history. But the historian is frustrated on every hand, in the attempt to do them justice, by a total lack of proper materials ; and only those, therefore, whose record has fortunately been preserved, and been furnished by living friends, can be enrolled.

No more glorious name ever added luster to the resplendent escutcheon of fame than that of Commander William B. Cushing, a native of Waukesha County. In the results of the use of the limited authority he had, he was greater than a Lawrence or a Perry. A volume like this might be filled with a recital of his deeds of patriotism and valor, and no apology will be given for the space devoted to them here. They will be read with increasing interest as time goes on and they continue to shine brighter and brighter in the halo of glory that forever will illumine the

* Several of those present at the capture of Jeff Davis have been personally questioned, who say that Pritchard learned of the reward of $100,000 while on the road in pursuit of Mr. Davis, and that the fact was known to him at his meeting with Col. Harnden at Abbeville. Pritchard's statement that he knew of no reward when he "started on his expedition" is thus questionably sustained. He knew it after he started.

graves and names of American soldiers. The following descriptive masterpiece was written by Harriet Prescott Spofford, and appeared in Harper's Monthly for June 1874:

"The world just now is full of heroes, for the wars of the late decade are resplendent with actions well fulfilling the poet's prophecy of the period when

'Many a darkness into the light shall leap,
And shine in the sudden making of splendid names.'

But among all the laureled number it has not been our fortune to hear of any whose exploits eclipse in brilliancy and elan those of one of our young naval officers, who entered the lists a stripling, and whom the close of the war found, at the age of twenty-two, with the rank of Lieutenant Commander, and with the engrossed thanks of Congress and of the Navy Department in his possession, together with countless testimonials, medals, and acknowledgments from Generals of division, Union Leagues, and corporate bodies in all parts of the country; tributes to deeds which bring back to us a remembrance of those of the old heroic days—deeds so great that men became great through the mere recital of them. And certainly he who so often and so gallantly risked life and fame for his country as Lieutenant Commander William B. Cushing did, deserves some other record than the disjointed and fragmentary one hidden away in the archives of the Bureau of State; and it is a task full of interest to gather one rumor and another, sift their truth, and put official statement by statement, till the story of those five glorious years of his service stands complete.

Midshipman Cushing sailed from Boston in the frigate Minnesota, and reached Hampton Roads in May, 1861—a lad then scarcely seventeen years old, but fully determined upon playing a great part in the great events to come. The Cumberland, the Quaker City, and the Monticello, men-of-war, all lay in the Roads, and the latter of them, which has the honor of having been the first ship under fire in the Rebellion, young Cushing subsequently commanded. The fleet had been at anchor a single day when five schooners, loaded with tobacco, were captured; and that night the young midshipman took into port the Delaware Farmer, the first prize of the war. During the next month he was on duty with the blockading squadron on the Carolina coast; but in August he was again in Hampton Roads, and was in the first launch with those sent to storm a battery and burn some small vessels; and in the same month he sailed in the Minnesota to the assault of the Hatteras forts, the squadron consisting of the flagship with six other men-of-war and some steam-transports, and being the largest that had ever sailed together under the American flag. The waters to which Hatteras Inlet gave entrance at that time swarmed with privateers and blockade-runners, and its possession was an object of importance, and was guarded by the two forts, Clark and Hatteras. As the squadron moved into line, and the first shot fired by the Wabash was answered by the rebel guns instantaneously, and every ship seemed suddenly sheeted in flame, the scene heightened by the contrast of perfect peace otherwise on sea and sky during all the bright summer day, we can easily imagine what an experience it was to the boy for the first time under the fire of one of those engagements to which his fancy had thrilled a thousand times, and his enjoyment of it may be known by the eagerness with which from that moment he plunged into everything affording any promise of the same excitement and danger.

"During the following winter Midshipman Cushing did blockading duty on the Cambridge, and saw some hot work with a party "cutting out" a schooner up a narrow stream, being attacked by and defeating a large body of infantry and artillery. He was often in this stormy season out in open boats for hours together, with the sea breaking over him, till it was necessary to hoist him on board, too stiff with ice and sleet to bend a joint. But it was at this time the great Merrimac fight came off, a part of which he was—a part of the Saturday's black despondency that saw the Cumberland go down and the white flag flutter from the peak of the Congress, of the Saturday's superb confidence, when the rebel giant, with the sun glistening on her iron shields, bore down on her grounded antagonist, and never seeming to see an idle mote in the distance till a 200-pounder came from it, crashing through her consort, which turned and fled, a wreck, while shot after shot beat and brayed her own sides till the skies rang with the echoes, and the fate of the old navies, with their snowy billows of canvas, was settled by the victory of the little black iron turret.

“Of course the young sailor had, as time went on, the usual number of the escapades that seem to be the peculiar properties of his class, one, not the least, of which happened after the fight of Malvern Hill, when, being ashore with his admiral, and fired, by the account of his valiant brother, with the desire of sharing in an affair that might be similar to the seven days' battle, he boldly made off in search of adventure, and rode to review the army on President Lincoln's staff, finding himself under arrest on his return, though presently, with the proverbial luck of the middy, released from duress. He was destined, however, soon to leave that fortunate and irresponsible condition, and in July, 1862, was promoted to a lieutenantcy, with intermediate grades being overlooked, and was ordered to the sounds of North Carolina; and, having turned to account the year's stern schooling, there the career that has rendered his name remarkable really began. And it may be mentioned here that it was not only in the art of the sea-fight that he had accomplished himself, but in the more difficult art of attaching men to him in such wise that they would hazard life and fortune to follow him, a thing absolutely indispensable to his undertakings. Of this attachment of his companions and subordinates an instance may be cited to the purpose, though so trifling. This occurred once when the Lieutenant went to Washington with dispatches, and when, chancing to look over the hotel register, he found the names just above his own were those of the officers who had ventured with him on that terrible night of the affair of the Albemarle, and whom he had supposed to be gone to their long home. He had worn on the coat which he had thrown off that night upon taking to the water a ribbon with a gold chain and locket of some value; and upon springing into the room where were the officers, in the sorry guise of their prison habiliments, after the first greetings were over he saw one take from under the collar of his blouse some of the buttons of that coat, one the locket, one the chain, and another the ribbon, the men having carried these articles, unsuspected and untouched, through all the want and privations of four months in rebel prisons.

“It having been decided, not long subsequently to Lieutenant Cushing's promotion, to make a combined movement of army and navy against the town of Franklin—afterward destroyed by the army—an agreement was entered into by the army to open the attack, and the navy to send three vessels up the Blackwater in order to intercept the retreat of the 7,000 rebels. For some reason or other, the plan was changed, but the messenger dispatched by the commanding officer with the account of the change did not reach his destination in season; and presuming that all was to be as arranged, three vessels moved up the Blackwater at the appointed hour, and were presently engaged, with a couple of hundred men and a few cannon, by all the strength of the enemy, in a stream exceedingly narrow, and so crooked that lines had constantly to be taken from the ships and wound about the trees on the shore, to obtain purchase and haul the bows round the bend. At last, on working past a sharp angle of the shore, they came upon an impassable barricade, an abatis formed of the great trees felled from both banks directly across the stream, at a point where the force of the angry current drifted them strongly in toward the left side; and at the moment every object on the bank became alive, and blazed with a deadly fire, and such a yell burst forth from every quarter that it seemed to belong to the universal air. Capt. Flusser instantly ordered all hands into shelter, since it would have been the merest bravado to attempt fighting his few men on an open deck; but Lieut. Cushing, chancing to glance over the side, saw a mass of infantry rushing down under cover of this fire to board the vessel that lay in such a cruel ambushade, and calling for volunteers, he dashed out, cast loose the howitzer, and by the aid of half a dozen men and an officer, wheeled it to the other side of the deck. Before the piece could be leveled, the seven men lay dead and dying around him, and, alone on the deck, he sent the death-dealing canister flying into the assailants with a will. It had the effect of magic, making such havoc that the enemy fled in terror—all save the leader, a man of noble appearance, who, unaware of the faltering of his troops, advanced, brandishing his sword, his long hair streaming behind him, a shining mark for death to lay low. Upon this, all hands were called to the scene, the guns were worked with grape and canister, and the marines, protected by the hammocks, watched the treetops for a puff of smoke, and picked off the sharpshooters, who fell every moment through the breaking branches with wild cries. After that nothing was left but retreat, and there followed half a day of furious assault and repulse, fighting for every point, in order to send the lines ashore there, and so to round the curves of the river; of struggling on the enemy's part to keep the ships in the toils, of barricades at every bend, of rifle-pits on every bluff. Of course the ship that had been in the rear of the advance now led the retreat, and received the concealed fire of a thousand infantry at every exposed spot, while the Commodore Perry, bringing up the rear at some distance behind, was in almost every instance unexpected by the rebels, and coming on their flank, threw into them such volleys of grape and shrapnel that those on board could distinctly see the bloody havoc that they wrought. At length, completely exhausted, the three brave vessels were in open water once more, decks wet with blood and heaped with dead and wounded, and sides fairly riddled with bullets. It was probably owing to the report of this affair, in which Lieut. Cushing was highly complimented, that he was ordered to his first command, the gun-boat Ellis, a craft of a hundred tons, mounting two guns, and drawing so little water that, in Western parlance, she could float on a heavy dew; and in her the young officer, aged nineteen, resolved upon noble achievements.

"After capturing the town of Swansboro, taking and being obliged to burn the Ade-laide, with a cargo worth $100,000, and destroying many important salt works, Lieut. Cushing made a dash for the county seat of Onslow Court House, about twenty miles from the mouth of New River, where the wide and deep waters afforded an excellent harbor for Nassau vessels. The following is his official report of the affair, to his senior officer, and his demand for an investigation, which was denied him, because, as Mr. Fox said, 'We don't care for the loss of a vessel which fought so gallantly as that:'

UNITED STATES STEAMER HETZEL, November 26, 1862.

SIR: I have the honor to report that I entered New River Inlet on the 23d of this month, with the United States steamer Ellis under my command, succeeded in passing the narrow and shallow place called the Rocks, and started up the river. My object was to sweep the river, capture any vessels there, capture the town of Jacksonville, or Onslow Court House, take the Wilmington mail, and destroy any salt works I might find on the banks. I expected to surprise the enemy in going up, and then to fight my way out. Five miles from the mouth, I came in sight of a vessel bound outward, with a load of cotton and turpentine. The enemy fired her to prevent her falling into our hands. I ran alongside, made sure that they could not extinguish the flames, and again steamed up the river. At 1 P. M., I reached the town of Jacksonville, landed, threw out my pickets, and placed guards over the public buildings. This place is the county seat of Onslow County, and quite an important town. It is situated on the right bank of the river going up, and is thirty-five or forty miles from the mouth. I captured twenty-five stand of public arms in the court house and post office, quite a large mail, and two schooners. I also confiscated the negroes of the Confederate Postmaster. I forgot to mention that the town is situated upon the main turnpike road from Wilmington. Several rebel officers escaped as I neared the town, and carried the news to that city.

At 2:30 P. M., I started down the river, and at 5 P. M. came in sight of a camp on the bank, which I thoroughly shelled. At the point where the schooner captured in the morning was still burning, the enemy opened fire on the Ellis with rifles, but were soon silenced by our guns. I had two pilots on board, both of whom informed me that it would be impossible to take the steamer from the river that night. High water and daylight were two things absolutely essential in order to take her out. I therefore came to anchor five miles from the outer bar, took my prizes alongside, and made every preparation to repel an attack. All night long, the signal-fires of the enemy could be seen upon the banks. At daylight I got under way, and had nearly reached the worst place in the channel, when the enemy opened on us with two pieces of artillery. I placed the vessel in position, at once hoisted the battle-flag at the fore, the crew gave it three cheers, and we went into action. In one hour, we had driven the enemy from his guns and from the bluff, and passed within a hundred yards of their position without receiving fire. Up to this time I had been in every way successful, but was here destined to meet with an accident that changed the fortunes of the day, and resulted in the destruction of my vessel. About five hundred yards from the bluffs, the pilots, mistaking the channel, ran the Ellis hard and fast aground. All hands went to work at once to lighten her, and anchors and steam were used to get her afloat, but without success. The headway of the steamer had forced her over a shoal, and into a position where, as a center of a circle, we had a circumference of shoal all around. When the tide fell, I sent a party ashore to take possession of the artillery abandoned in the morning, but when they reached the field it was discovered that it had been removed while we were at work upon the vessel. If I had secured this, I proposed to construct a shore battery to assist in the defense of my vessel by keeping the rebels from placing their battery in position. At dark I took one of my prize schooners alongside, and proceeded to take everything out of the Ellis excepting the pivot gun, some ammunition, two tons of coal, and a few small arms. Steam and anchor again failed to get my vessel afloat. I felt confident that the Confederates would come on me in overwhelming force, and it now became my duty to save my men. So all men were called to muster, and the crew told that they could go aboard the schooner. I called for six volunteers to remain with me on board and fight the remaining gun. Knowing that it was almost certain death,* the men came forward, and two master's mates, Valentine and Barton, were among the number. These gentlemen subsequently behaved with coolness and bravery. I ordered the schooner to drop down the channel out of range from the bluffs, and there to wait for the termination of the impending engagement, and if we were destroyed to proceed to sea. Early in the morning, the enemy opened upon us from four points with heavy rifled guns (one a Whitworth). It was a cross-fire and very destructive. I replied as best I could, but in a short time the engine was disabled, and she was much cut up in every part, and the only alternatives left were surrender or a pull of one and a half miles under their fire in my small boat. The first of these was not, of course, to be thought of; the second I resolved to attempt. I fired the Ellis in five places, and having seen that the battle-flag was still flying, trained the gun upon the enemy, so that the vessel might fight herself after we had left, and started down the river, reached the schooner, and made sail for sea. It was low water on the bar, and a heavy surf was rolling in, but the wind forced us through after striking several times. We were just in time, for about six hundred yards down the beach were several companies of cavalry trying to reach the mouth of the inlet in time to cut us off. We hoisted our flag, gave three cheers, and were off. In four hours I reached Beaufort. I brought away all my men, my rifled howitzer and ammunition, the ship's stores and clothing, the men's bags and hammocks, and a portion of the small arms. I retained on board the Ellis a few muskets, pikes and pistols to repel boarders. I neglected to state that when I took possession of the enemy's ground on the 24th, a salt work was destroyed, and ten boats rendered useless that were to have been used for boarding.

At 9 A. M., the United States steamer Ellis was blown in pieces by the explosion of the magazine. Officers and men behaved nobly, obeying orders strictly under the most trying circumstances.

I respectfully request that a court of inquiry may be ordered to investigate the facts of the case, and to see if the honor of the flag has suffered in my hands.

“This report was indorsed in commendatory terms by the senior officer to whom it was addressed, and was further indorsed by Admiral Lee with the expression of his ‘admiration for Lieut. Cushing’s coolness, courage and conduct.’

“Shortly after this affair, there being need of pilots for the harbor of Wilmington, upon which place an attack was meditated, Lieut. Cushing undertook to make prisoners of some; and in the course of his adventure, at night, a couple of miles up a narrow, shadowy stream, he was suddenly saluted by a volley of musketry. Without losing a moment, he turned his boats to shore, and crying to his men to follow him—there were but twenty in all—he had them, yelling and shouting, up a bluff and charging an earthwork, over ditch and parapet, and, through the might of sheer boldness, driving the garrison from the fort with so firm a conviction that they were surprised by a much superior body, that arms and valuables and even supper, were left at the mercy of the conquerors, who, enjoying the supper, and possessing themselves of everything portable, soon destroyed the earthwork and returned to the little prize schooner in which they had disguised their approach, and which was already rolling in the heavy swells of an approaching storm. Inside of the angle made with the coast by Cape Fear and Frying-pan Shoals, which jut out into the Atlantic for some thirty miles, and where every southwest gale heaps up the sea in a fearful manner, in a vessel of forty tons, with one anchor, a few fathoms of chain, and a lee shore alive with an angry and alert enemy—this is a situation certainly not to be coveted; and though the Hope ran under close-reefed canvas, it soon became apparent that, making as much leeway as headway, there was no possibility of her weathering the shoals at all. Meanwhile a tempest of rain abated in some degree the great height and power of the waves, but it was accompanied by a dense fog that enfolded the little schooner like a fleece, and shut her off from all the world of raging waters round them. At this juncture one of two things must at once be decided upon—either to go ashore and surrender vessel and crew as prisoners of war, or to put boldly out across the thirty miles of stormy space between the shore and the shoals, and, allowing for all the leeway made, endeavor to strike the mere vein of a channel that was known to streak them like a hair. Of course Lieut. Cushing chose the latter, although, in such a gale, he was aware that the breakers must be very high even in that narrow channel. It was, in fact, a magnificent game of chance, for should they veer to the right or the left the distance of a dozen rods, not one plank of the schooner would be left upon another. Accordingly he fixed his course, placed Mr. Valentine—the same master's mate who acted so gallantly at the loss of the Ellis—at the helm, and told him alone of the danger.

“‘All at once,’ says Lieut. Cushing, in relating the affair, ‘I saw the old Quartermaster at the lead turn deathly pale as he sang out, 'Breakers ahead! For God's sake, sir, go about!' In an instant the cry was, 'Breakers on the lee bow!' then, 'Breakers on the weather bow!' and we were into them. All seemed over now; but we stood at the helm, determined to control our boat to the last. A shock—she had struck. But it was only for a second, and she still fairly flew through the great white breakers. Again and again she struck, but never hard. She had found the channel, and in twenty minutes we were safe, and scudding for Beaufort.'

* The magazine, as Lieut. Cushing does not mention in his report, being entirely exposed.

"Lieut. Cushing now took command of a steamer mounting five 100-pounder smooth-bore guns, one 100-pounder Parrott rifle, and a 12-pound howitzer, with a crew of 150 men—preferring this command in Hampton Roads, with a good prospect of engagement, to that of the fast blockader Violet and a prospect of many rich prizes. And fighting being what he wanted, he had, one might suppose, a plenty of it, being engaged continuously for three weeks, and never once defeated; taking earth works and bringing off the guns; pulling in his gig from ship to ship under the muzzles of the enemy's guns in full blast; taking, with ninety sailors and a howitzer, the town of Chuckatuck four hours after it had been occupied by Longstreet's left wing; making important reconnaissances, constantly exposed to danger—bullets grazing his skin, and one shearing a lock of hair from his head close to the crown—but never meeting with any injury. At the close of this duty he received a letter of congratulation and thanks from the Secretary of the Navy, and being ordered into dock for repairs, he was sent for by the President, who complimented him with enthusiasm in an hour's interview.

"After being put in condition again, Lieut. Cushing's ship proceeded on an expedition up the York River, in which Brig. Gen. Lee, the son, of Gen. Robert E. Lee, was made prisoner; and before long he was ordered to the defense of the capital, which the advance of the rebels had endangered. It was while he was stationed at Washington that the battle of Gettysburg took place, where his brother fell fighting in command of a battery of the Fourth United States Artillery, and Lieut. Cushing at once proceeded to the field with the double purpose of procuring his brother's remains and of working his guns, if permitted to do so; but the army had already moved on, leaving its terrible debris of horses and cannon and caissons, of countless wounded men and unburied dead, beneath the burning sky. 'As I write this,' says Lieut. Cushing, some years later, 'as I write this, rocked on the long swell of the Pacific, under the warmth of the equatorial sun, my mind goes back in review of the many sad scenes in those bloody years of Rebellion, but fails to bring up any picture that is so grand, or solemn, or mournful as that great theater of death.'

"In the following August—that of 1863—the Lieutenant went on board the Shoboken, which was a ferry-boat with the hull built out, fitted for work in all manner of shallow creeks, but eminently unseaworthy. In her he destroyed the blockade-runner, Hebe, after a contest with a rebel battery; and being refused permission to do as much for another vessel in New Topsail Inlet, soon undertook the task without permission. Anchoring the Shoboken near the land late in the afternoon, he led the enemy to suppose that an expedition in boats was intended six miles up the river to the wharf where the prize lay; and accordingly one gun was detached from the rebel battery of six at the mouth of the inlet, carried up to the wharf, and pointed so as to command the deck of the prize, in case the remaining guns had not entirely annihilated the party attempting entrance; and a watch having been set, things seemed as safe as strength and vigilance could make them. But the rebels had a foe to deal with of whose strategic powers they made no calculation, and it did not enter their heads to observe that the Shoboken was anchored four miles up the beach, and to draw any inference from such anchorage. So, with the night, taking ashore two boats' crews in a single boat, the Lieutenant had them shoulder the dingy and carry it across the narrow neck of land, and launch it on the other side, four miles inside the inlet, and entirely out of range of the battery at the mouth. A night surprise is apt to be a successful thing, for it has to aid it all the doubt and magnitude and awe of the night, which increases the attacking force to infinity, and bewilders the judgment of the assailed with darkness; but even with knowledge of this the rebels might have been amazed if they had ever learned that they were surprised, charged, and routed in the night by six sailors, their artillery and ten prisoners captured, the vessel burned, and some valuable salt works destroyed, two sailors acting as pickets, two guarding the prisoners, and two, assisted by the ever-ready plantation hands, burning the vessel and buildings. Of course the ten prisoners would have been entirely too much for the six men if they had only known there were but six, but three of them being stowed in the dingy, while a great amount of ordering and answering passed between supposititious boats on the stream, the remainder were directed to go some furlongs up the bank and report to an officer there, and not to go too far out unless they wished to be shot by the pickets of their captors; and that being done, the Lieutenant and his party glided away in the darkness and regained the Shoboken in safety.

“But not to rest. It was only from one thing to another with this daring spirit. Finding the next day, on regaining the squadron, that it was engaged with a battery on the shore, he threw himself with twenty men into boats, assaulted the battery, and took two rifled guns, which he got aboard his ship; and immediately afterward, no other enemy being at hand, entered into a tussle with a northeast gale, which so nearly had the better of him that when he came in sight of the fleet again he learned that all had supposed him at the bottom of the sea; but he had, in truth, a curious way of always coming to the surface again and of frequently being taken for his own ghost, as was evident, indeed, on the night succeeding the destruction of the Albemarle. Immediately after this gale he was detached from the Shoboken and ordered to the Monticello, the command being given him, said Mr. Fox (for distinguished services rendered), and it is not a little amusing to find him, hot-headed as ever, while on shore awaiting his outfit, administering summary chastisement to some men who had dared to speak disrespectfully of his uniform.

“In the winter of 1862 he was again blockading off the Carolina coast. This service must have been on many accounts an interesting one—the ships by day lying at their anchorage out of the enemy’s range, by night drawing together in one long line across the bar in order that none of the leaden hulls of the runners, so skillfully mingling with the tints of mist and twilight, might elude them, and always on guard against shoal and reef and the coming out of the moon to show them close under a hundred rebel cannon, pointed at different altitudes, so that one might do what another failed to do. There were also cruisers stationed farther out, whose duty it was to determine what ought to be the whereabouts of richly laden escaping steamers, taking into account the probable time of escape, moon and tide and speed, a lookout being always aloft to give the cry, and start the chase that would presently overhaul a million dollars for prize. Such work, however, was not adventurous enough for Lieut. Cushing’s fancy, and he determined to celebrate Washington’s birthday in a more exciting manner, by taking and holding Smith’s Island, close to the enemy, one of the outlets of Cape Fear River, which would have been an event of great importance. Failing to obtain permission, through his senior officer’s fear of assuming responsibility, although the undertaking proceeded on the assumption of such complete security in the strength of their position on the part of the enemy that every precaution which could stand in the way of a surprise was most probably omitted, and indignant with what seemed to him a lack of dash and spirit where it could be of any service, the young man at once proceeded to act for himself, and we have never heard of any instance since the days of windy Troy to compare with that night’s adventure; for as he was not allowed the means to carry out his original proposition, Lieut. Cushing had gravely assured his senior that in order to prove to him how completely feasible it was, he would have the honor of bringing off the Confederate commanding officer to breakfast with him in the morning. All lovers of heroism will remember the passage of the Iliad where Ulysses and Diomed leave the circle of old kings sitting around the field-fire in the dead of the night, and, exploring the hostile camps, take the spy Dolon and destroy Rhesus in his tent, and bring off the

‘ Steeds
More white than snow, huge and well shaped, whose fiery pace exceeds
The winds in swiftness.’

It was quite as daring a thing which Lieut. Cushing now proposed to do.

“He had already, on a reconnaissance, found that the rebel confidence was so great that when grazing the very face of the forts he had received no challenge, and therefore on this night he took twenty men, entered the Cape Fear River, and pulled directly up to Smithville, the rebel headquarters, landing before the hotel, perhaps twenty-five yards from the fort, and hiding his men on the shore. Obtaining from a negro at a salt work on the bank the requisite information, with two of his officers he crept at midnight, when not a sound disturbed the air, up the principal street to the commanding General’s residence, a large house, with verandas, opposite the barracks, where, about fifteen yards off, lay twelve hundred men without a dream of danger. There had been a gay gathering, apparently, in the house that evening, and delaying till after the guests had gone and the occupants might be supposed to sleep, Lieut. Cushing noiselessly tried the unbolted door, entered the hall, glanced into a mess-room, and then ascended the stairs. But at the moment of softly opening the door of a sleeping-room he heard a crash and the whispered call of his officer, below, and quickly springing to answer it, he found that his other companion, whom he had left on the veranda, had, in a sublime confidence that the place was already taken, gone strutting up and down, awaking the Confederate Adjutant General, who, throwing up a window, found himself suddenly looking into the muzzle of a navy revolver, upon which the sash had been dropped with a clang, and the Adjutant, escaping through a back-door, had made for the brush. In an instant the Lieutenant was in the room, and struck a wax match, had floored the remaining occupant, the chief engineer of the forces there, and with his pistol at the head of the man, still half dazed with sleep, threatening to blow out his brains if he spoke, had made him put on some clothes, had learned from him that the commanding General had gone that day to Wilmington, had possessed himself of the Adjutant General’s papers and plans, and was in his boat again and in the middle of the stream before the outraged rebels had gained their senses, or had begun to swarm out and fill the air with cries and calls; and while the signal-lights were flashing to the forts below, and the long roll calling to arms, he was pulling quietly aboard his ship, and carrying the chief engineer of the enemy, snatched from the very teeth of that enemy, to breakfast with his commander—if not exactly what he had promised, at least the next best thing. There being occasion on the following day to send in a flag of truce, a note was dispatched by it, of which a copy is given below:

MY DEAR GENERAL,—I deeply regret that you were not at home when I called. I inclose my card.

Very respectfully,

W. B. CUSHING.

“Of course, after the first burst of indignation, the matter was taken very good-naturedly by the offended party, but this note was declared to be the very climax of impudence, and Lieut. Cushing was given very distinctly to understand that his experiment could not be repeated—a gage which he had no opportunity to take up until the following June.

“Having been undergoing repairs at Norfolk, in June Lieut. Cushing returned to Beaufort, his coaling station, and there learned that a rebel iron-clad, the Raleigh, had been defying the fleet after wanton fashion, and, conscious of her strength, had not only convoyed blockade-runners through the intimidated squadron, but had remained out of harbor for several hours, only returning at her leisure after daybreak. Of course the younger officers of the navy were hurning with resentment, and Lieut. Cushing, in the Monticello, accompanied by the Vicksburg, immediately started in pursuit, though unsuccessfully, as she had taken harbor; and it was not until a letter came from Admiral Lee himself that Lieut. Cushing was allowed the men and boats that he desired to go upon an expedition inside the bar, and to avenge the insult the navy had received by boarding and taking possession of the Raleigh where she lay. After dark, then, one night late in June, with fifteen men and two officers—Mr. Howorth and Mr. Martin—he slipped into the harbor, passing Forts Caswell and Holmes and the other batteries, and pulled up the river with muffled oars, just escaping being run down by a tug, and passing the town of Smithville—the scene of his capture of the chief engineer—in safety. His object was to determine the whereabouts of the Raleigh, and then to return and bring back a hundred men to board her. The Raleigh, however, was not to be seen anywhere, either inside the bar or at quarantine, and he accordingly pursued his course up stream, although a strong current made it best for him to in the tideway, knowing they would knock about safely there till morning, when they would be hazard pulling on the side where the moon lay. Just as the boat reached Fort Anderson, there came a sentry's hail, followed by the shouting of a dozen other voices and a quick volley of musketry. Immediately, the Lieutenant put the boat about and pointed her head down stream, and, giving the helm a turn so as to present the least possible surface to the moon's rays, he cut across into the shadow of the other bank, where he once more made his way to the river, leaving the enemy to pursue an imaginary foe in the opposite direction.

When within four miles of the city, it being nearly day light, the crew went ashore, and drawing the boat by means of their united strength into a patch of swamp; they masked her with branches of trees, and disposed of themselves in the growth along the bank. Here during the long summer's day they saw several steamers going unsuspectingly up and down the river, with the rebel Commodore's flag-ship and many smaller crafts, but there was no sign of the iron-clad to be seen. At twilight, however, fancying that an approaching party of fishermen in a couple of boats was a discovery and an attack, Lieut. Cushing stepped from his hiding-place, hailed them, and boldly ordered them to surrender, which the gentle creatures did upon the spot. From these prisoners he ascertained that there was very good reason for his not finding the Raleigh at her anchorage, nature having taken the matter out of the Lieutenant's hands; for, having run upon a sand bar some time previously, the iron-clad, with the falling of the tide, had broken in two by her own weight, and was now an utter wreck. Being satisfied that this was really the case, Lieut. Cushing resolved, before returning, to obtain all the information possible concerning the batteries and obstructions of the place, knowing that a movement upon it was already in contemplation. Having mastered all the facts of the forts and channels, he at last stationed himself with eight men at a junction of the main turnpike with two other roads, hardly two miles from the city and all its swarms of soldiery and lines of fortifications. The first thing done was to capture the army mail-carrier with his mail of between four and five hundred letters, among which were those containing plans of the rebel defenses, and other important documents; and the adventurers being by this time rather hungry, and having taken prisoner a wandering storekeeper, Mr. Howorth put on the coat and cap of the mail-carrier, mounted his horse, and started for the town to procure provisions, his pocket being well lined with the Confederate money taken from the mail; and he presently returned from his dangerous errand—one on which detection would have twisted a rope round his neck, with a very short shrift—bringing in good refreshments, and having mingled freely with the enemy, for whom he had been obliged to exert his inventive faculties after a manner that would have done justice to the best romancer living. In the mean time, the Lieutenant and his men had not been idle, and they were now guarding twenty-six prisoners under the most excellent discipline since a shout from any one of them would have brought an army about their ears; and he was now only waiting for the evening courier with the Richmond mail before rejoining the remainder of his party and putting off for sea. He decided, however, to send his prisoners to the boat, and it was just as they were crossing the road that the mail-carrier came in sight, accompanied by a Confederate officer, who, drawing a swift conclusion, turned about to flee. Being mounted on the horse of one of the prisoners, the Lieutenant instantly gave chase, but to no purpose, as his horse was neither one of the best nor the freshest; and thereupon, cutting the telegraph wires in two places, he hastened to his boat, which now lay moored in a little creek, put the prisoners into the canoes which had been picked up, and dropped down toward the river, which was reached exactly as the shadows of night darkened it pleasantly. It had been the Lieutenant's intention to leave the greater part of his prisoners on the lighthouse island in the river, having captured them merely to secure their silence; but just as he was putting in under the bank for that purpose the steamer Virginia came puffing close upon him. In a breath the order was given for every man to jump overboard and push the boats into the marsh grass, and the prisoners were promised instant death upon the first sign; and while every head was held under the gunwale for a moment, the steamer plowed by without suspicion. Having eluded this danger, Lieut. Cushing now removed the oars and sails from the canoes, and set twenty of his prisoners adrift.

seen and cared for from shore; and attaching to a buoy, where it could not fail to be seen and taken off, a note, in which he happily recalled to the memory of the authorities their declaration that he would not again enter their harbor, he made all haste for sea, intending to pass through the upper outlet, and having Forts Anderson and Fisher to pass, together with the island and outer batteries. It was a little below Fort Anderson that, encountering a boat-load of soldiers, he captured them without ado, and learned that a guard-boat containing seventy-five men awaited him on the bar. This was not unexpected; and the fresh prisoners having been menaced with assurance of their due deserts if they attempted aid or comfort to the enemy at the critical time, it was resolved by the Lieutenant and his officers to pull for the bar, the tide setting down strongly, lay themselves alongside the guard-boat in the bright moonlight, and while engaging the men there with cutlasses and revolvers, drift with them by the batteries, which, since they could not destroy them without firing on their own men, would be likely to let them pass. It was no great while before glimpses were caught of a boat rocking on the tide below them, and they eagerly made for it, quite confident of their ability to occupy many times their own number of land-lubbers until they should be out of range of the batteries, when it would be just as easy to leave their foe behind. But when still some yards distant from the boat, and just preparing to open a broadside upon it, suddenly four other boats darted out from behind a neighboring point, and five from the opposite island, and formed a line across the bar, completely entrapping the Lieutenant and his men, while at the same time, going short round, a large sail-boat was discovered to windward. Misfortune could hardly have seemed more imminent and absolute, and if anything could be done it must be done on the instant. The river, as it chanced, divided at that point round an island, making two channels, one that up which they had passed on the preceding night from Fort Caswell, now lying seven miles below, and which it would have been madness to try, since it would have brought them opposite Smithville and the forts by broad daylight, even if the southwest gale had not been blowing there, and making breakers in which the boat would have been crushed like a bubble. Of course, then, their only hope was to circumvent the enemy, so that the other and shorter channel might be gained, at whose entrance no such dangerous sea was to be encountered. Quickly giving the word to his men, the Lieutenant darted off with his boat as if for Smithville, passing the large sail-boat; then suddenly sheering, so as to escape the full moonlight (as in going by Fort Anderson the night before), he was for one moment invisible in the swell, and the whole ten boats were after him on the way to Smithville—boats manned by soldiers instead of sailors, who were, therefore, totally unaware of the impossibility of exit by that channel. Seizing the opportunity, the Lieutenant boldly turned about, and when he came in sight again was making for the sail-boat as if he intended to board her. Of course, the crew of the sail-boat, unused to such contests, hesitated, and started to tack, but missed stays, and drifted away on the tide, before they could recover themselves, while the crew of the Lieutenant's boat, bending all their strength to the oars, darted round in a broad curve astern the line of boats, and were in the desired channel, a hundred yards in advance of all the rest, before their object was fairly understood; and heading for the breakers on Carolina Shoals, lest on another course the batteries should blow them to atoms—breakers which the boats rowed by soldiers could not dare dream of attempting—they took the great waves safely, and were presently past all pursuit. The results of this expedition were so important, and the conduct of it so remarkable, that we are not surprised to find its leader again receiving the formal thanks of the Navy Department. Indeed, these official congratulations became apparently quite a matter of course; and in the following October he was earning them again, together not only with the engrossed thanks of the Congress of the United States, and addresses from chambers of commerce, boards of trade, municipalities, and clubs without number, but with the more substantial reward of a promotion to the grade of Lieutenant Commander, at the age of twenty-one, all in recognition of his destruction of the rebel ram Albemarle, an iron-clad of the same model as the Merrimac, which had done great damage, and met the fire of hundred-pounder Dahlgrens and Parrotts at ten yards range without injury.

“Directly upon his promotion the young hero took command of the flag-ship Malvern, bearing the broad pennant of the rear-admiral, and in December was part of the force operating against Fort Fisher. Here Commander Cushing performed what, with the exception of the Albatross affair, was in reality the most dangerous exploit in all his term of service, and one requiring a more steady courage, being nothing less than the buoying of a channel in an open skiff—a skiff rivaling the famous little boat of the battle of Lake Erie—in the midst of a shower of round shot, shell and shrapnel, the work continuing for six hours, the skiff frequently half filled with water by the plunging shot, and its companion being sunk.

“During the brief cessation of more active operations against the Wilmington forts, Commander Cushing offered battle to the Chickamauga, a rebel privateer carrying an extra crew; but the challenge being declined, he drove a large blockade-runner ashore under her nose, and returned to the fleet, which, on the 12th of January, resumed the attack upon the forts, the ships being sixty in number, comprising iron-clads, frigates, sloops of war and gunboats. An assault being ordered, after three days' bombardment, Commander Cushing, with other officers, accompanied the force of sailors and marines about to storm the sea-front of Fort Fisher. Marching to within a few hundred yards of the embrasures, the entire body threw themselves down under the slope of the beach, waiting for the signal of attack, the whole fire of the navy passing with a deafening noise just over their heads. Springing to their feet at the word of command, they moved forward steadily over the soft white sand, which the sunshine made dazzling, and the relief of which rendered every officer in his uniform of blue and gold-lace—and, indeed every man—a conspicuous target, the rebels meanwhile pouring forth an unceasing fire that cut down their foes in windrows. Finding himself alone at last, just after reaching the palisades, Commander Cushing turned to rally his men, and was obliged to cross a hundred yards of the bare sand with the bullets pattering about him in such wise that it seems as if he must have borne a charmed life. Most of the ranking officers were either dead or badly wounded by that time, or else remaining under shelter of the palisades till nightfall—more fortunate than their comrades, who, dropping on the beach, were swept out to sea by the rising and falling of the tide—he therefore assumed the command himself, and gathered some hundreds of men with great effort, he was again proceeding to the assault, when requested to relieve with them a regiment which went to the assistance of the army on the other side, which was operating to such effect under the gallant Gen. Ames that before midnight the works had surrendered.

“The first important action of Commander Cushing after the surrender was the seizure of the pilots who had so many times safely steered the blockade-runners into port; and when his preparations to hang them had thoroughly frightened them into obedience, he agreed to spare their lives on condition of their erecting customary signal lights on Oak Island, by which the blockade-running steamers came in and out. Accordingly, some four or five days after the capture of the forts, the large blockade-running steamer Charlotte, trusting to the lights, came over the bar and made her private signals to Fort Caswell, and being hailed and told that the signal corps had been withdrawn to Smithville, came confidently up to her anchorage. She was commanded by a British ex-naval officer, and she carried, among her other passengers, two officers of the British army, coming over to see the Confederate sport, and the owners of her costly cargo of arms and munitions—all of whom, in great glee at the successful termination of their hazardous enterprise, had just sat down to a sumptuous banquet, and were toasting their safe arrival in champagne. Suddenly the door opened, a light form stepped in, a hand was laid upon the captain's chair, and every one looked up in amazement, to meet the gaze of these dauntless eagle-eyes of Commander Cushing, which no one who has once seen him is likely to forget. “Gentlemen,” said he, “you are my prisoners. Allow me the pleasure of joining in your toast. Steward, another bottle of champagne!” Of course there was nothing but submission, for his men were already disposed about the deck, and the Charlotte was his prize. There was a moment or two of sullen silence, on the part of the discomfited passengers; then one of the British officers looked at his vis-a-vis, and exclaimed, in noble rage, “I say—beastly luck!” To which his comrade presently replied, in a voice proceeding from the depths of his disgust, "Unmitigated sell!" After which disembarassment a better feeling prevailed, and the banquet was proceeding as gayly as the circumstances allowed, when Commander Cushing was summoned on deck with the announcement that another steamer, the Stag, was coming up the river, upon which he bade adieu to the festive scene, and proceeded to make prize of the second steamer.

"It would be easy to go on enumerating the days of this young officer by his valiant deeds; to tell of the capture of small towns, of great storehouses of cotton, corn, and bacon; of his examining the obstructions before Fort Anderson, and going so close in that, one night, exasperated by the speech-making and carousal there, he sent a bullet whistling through the astonished merry-makers, and in consequence very nearly robbed the navy of one of its brightest ornaments by the storm of grape that instantly scattered the water about him; of his constructing a mock monitor out of an old flat-boat and some painted canvas, and sending her past the fort on the night tide, so that the commandant, knowing the army to be in his rear, and seeing the gunboats gaining the stream above, abandoned his fortifications without spiking the guns. But an account has not yet been given of the greatest of his achievements, and it is perhaps enough to close with the story of his destruction of the Albemarle—a more daring and spirited act than we can call to mind out of the records of any navy.

"The Albemarle, as it has been mentioned, was an iron-clad of tremendous strength, which had already defeated the whole Federal fleet, sunk the Southfield, exploded the boiler of the Sassacus, engaged nine foes at once without danger to herself, forced the surrender of a brigade, and the abandonment of the whole region of the Roanoke by the Federal forces. The Government having no iron-clads capable of crossing Hatteras bar and encountering her, all its operations in that section were rendered practically useless by the Albemarle's presence there, and the expense of the squadron necessary to keep watch upon her movements was something enormous. In this emergency Lieut. Cushing submitted two plans to Admiral Lee for the ram's destruction. The Admiral approved of one of them, and sent its projector to Washington to lay it before the Secretary of the Navy, and the latter, though at first a little doubtful of its merit, finally authorized him to procure the means to carry it into execution; and he immediately purchased in New York two open launches, each about thirty feet long, fitted with a small engine and propelled by screw, carrying a howitzer, and provided with a long boom that swung by a hinge, which could be raised or lowered at will, and which had a torpedo in the groove at its further extremity. These boats were taken down through the canals to the Chesapeake, one of them being lost on the way, and the other reaching the sounds at last through cuts and creeks and an infinitude of toils, hindrances and ruses. Joining the fleet which lay at the mouth of the river, the Lieutenant disclosed his object to his men, assuring them that they not only must not expect, but they must not hope to return, for death was almost inevitable, and then called for volunteers. They all stood by him, and six others presently joined them; Assistant Paymaster Frank Swan and Mr. Howorth, who had often accompanied him on his most reckless adventures, being of the number. The Albemarle lay moored at the Plymouth wharf, eight miles up the river, both banks of which were lined with batteries, and held by several thousand soldiers, while at some distance up, that portion of the wreck of the Southfield which still lay above water was occupied by a picket-guard, whose duty it was to throw up rockets on the first alarm, for, unknown to the attacking party, rumor of the intended endeavor had in some mysterious way already reached the Plymouth authorities, and every provision had been made for their reception. However, on the night of the 27th of October, the little launch entered the Roanoke River, her engine at low pressure, to make the least noise possible, left behind all obstructions, passed within thirty feet of the unsuspecting picket on the Southfield, and approached the wharf where the ram lay, a vast black mass in the darkness. Greatly emboldened by this success, the Lieutenant for a moment resolved to change his plan, and, knowing the town perfectly, to put in shore and trust to the effect of a night surprise, with which he was so well acquainted, overpower those on board, get her into the stream before the forts could be aroused, and fight the batteries with her on her way down. But just as he was about to carry his sudden plan into execution, a cry from the ram rang out sharply on the night, repeated on every side, followed by the instantaneous booming of the great guns from ship and shore; and returning no answer, the Lieutenant put on all steam and made for her. At the same moment an immense bonfire of pine knots and turpentine blazed up on the bank, most fortunately for him, since it revealed directly the untoward fact that a boom of logs extended around the ram in all directions to guard her from torpedoes, which for one second seemed an insurmountable obstacle. Only for one second, though. With the next the lieutenant had given orders to sheer off across the stream, so as to get room for acquiring headway and carrying his launch by the force of its own impetus straight across the boom, though it never could get out again, he knew. As they turned, a volley of buckshot tore away the whole back of his coat and the sole of his shoe, and the man by his side fell lifeless. Before the volley could be repeated, the launch had struck the boom, was over, and was forging up under the Albermarle's quarter, directly beneath the mouth of a rifle-gun, and so close that the merest whisper on board the ram, where they were endeavoring to bring the gun to bear, could be distinctly heard.

"That must have been a terrifically exciting moment to those on the little launch, with the vast mountain of iron towering above them, the fire-lit mass of foes upon the shore, and triumph and eternity in the next moment. Lieut. Cushing stood at the bows of the launch, with several lines before him; one of these lines was attached to the howitzer, one to the ankle of the engineer, one to the officer who was to lower the boom carrying the torpedo, one was that by means of which the torpedo was to be slid under the ram, another was the exploding-line, which should pull away a pin and let a grape-shot drop on the percussion-cap beneath. The howitzer had already been discharged. The line attached to the engineer was pulled: the engine stopped. The boom was lowered, the torpedo slid slowly off and under, the air-chamber at top bringing it up in position beneath the ram. The last line was pulled, the grape-shot fell, just as the rifle-gun went off—and the rebel ram and the launch blew up together, and columns of water shot up and fell again, heavy with dead and dying. But just as Lieut. Cushing pulled the exploding line he had cried out to his men to save themselves, and throwing off arms and heavy garments, had struck out into the water. The surface was being rippled up with shot, boats were already out picking up the wounded, and dying men were going down with gurgling groans around him; but he boldly made for the other bank, and was just reaching it, when he heard the voice of his own men in a sinking state, and turned to relieve, if possible, one who had shared such peril with him. Finding the man, he supported him with one arm and kept him afloat for several minutes, when all at once he went down, leaving the Lieutenant alone on the water, swimming with faint strokes, with what seemed interminable distances before him, but so firmly resolved to escape that, perhaps, after voluntary power was expended, the muscular motion still continued mechanically, and carried him at last to shore, where he fell, with his feet still in the water, and lay, not more than half conscious, till morning, when the bright, invigorating sunshine showed him that he had gained a piece of swamp not far from one of the forts, and from whence he could see the angry and excited town, with a curious sense of power in the midst of all his weakness. The sentinel, meanwhile, was walking his round on the parapet, and in order to make any shelter it was necessary to rise and run for it the moment his back was turned. Doing so, he was obliged, at the instant the sentinel turned about again, to drop where he was, between two paths of the tall grass, which partially sheltered him, since, being covered with mud from head to foot, he was hardly distinguishable from the soil, as he presently found when a party of men came down one of the paths and passed so near him as almost to tread on his arm without discovering him. Knowing it would be impossible to remain there safely for any length of time, he lay on his back, planted his elbow and his heel firmly in the ground, and thus hitched himself slowly along till he gained the cypress swamp, a mass of bog and brier, through which, barefooted, bare-headed and bare-handed, he had to force a path till the blood flowed from his innumerable wounds and bruises. Entering at last a clearing, a fresh danger appeared, in the shape of a group of soldiers, behind whom he had to pass at a distance of twenty yards, creeping through a corn furrow. He was now in the outskirts of a wood, and encountering an old negro, he gave him a piece of money which had chanced to remain about him, and sent him back to town to bring him news of what had happened there over night; for he wished to be sure that he had done the work there thoroughly before making any more effort to get back to his ship; and famished, exhausted, and with every nerve strung to its utmost tension, it seemed to him that if he had failed he did not care to get back at all. Vibrating, in his suspense, between a fear that the man might betray him and a confidence that he would not, he rested there till the messenger came back, bringing him news of the complete destruction of the rebel ram, and he plunged gayly into another swamp, so dense that he could only direct himself by the sun, emerging from its tall reeds and brambles, a couple of hours past noon, upon one of the deep and narrow creeks that wind in and out through all those regions, exactly opposite a fresh detachment of soldiers on the other bank, and who, as fate willed it, had a little skiff made of four or five rough boards, with the seams pitched with tar, 'toggled to the root of an old cypress tree that squirmed like a snake into the inky water,' as he described it. Lying in wait in the dense greenery and shade till the men went back to their rude meal, he gently slipped between the reeds and slid into the water, swimming softly till he reached the skiff, loosened it, pushed it before him round the first curve, when he clambered in and paddled away for dear life; paddled all day, into sunset, into twilight, into starlight—such starlight as sifted down through the great shadows of the swamp and the cypress-lined and moss-hung banks of the creek. At last he was in the Roanoke, at last in the open water of the sound, where a swell would have swamped the frail skiff, but where the night was singularly still and soft—though, as it was, he was obliged to paddle all upon one side to keep his boat on the course which he laid for himself by the stars. When he came, after a weary while, in sight of the picket vessel of the fleet, and, after what seemed a longer and still wearier while, within hail, he gave his "Ship ahoy!" and dropped, gasping, benumbed, and half dead, into the bottom of the boat. But immediately on his hail the vessel had slipped her cable, and had got out her boats to take measures against infernal machines, firmly convinced that the skiff was a piece of retaliation on the part of the rebels, and, in response to his assertion that he was Lieut. Cushing, loudly assuring him that Lieut. Cushing was no longer in existence; and it was still some time before he found himself on board refreshed, clothed and in his right mind, and on the way to the flag-ship, where, in honor of his return, rockets were thrown up and all hands called to cheer ship, even before the success of his expedition was announced. And for once valor had its due acknowledgment and reward."

William B. Cushing was born on Section 18, town of Delafield, Waukesha County, November 4, 1842. His father, Milton B. Cushing, was one of the earliest settlers of that town. Commander Cushing served one year in the naval academy three years before the breaking-out of the war, in which he was one of the first to enlist. At the close of the war, he married Kate Forbes, of Fredonia, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., who, with two sweet children, survived his death, which occurred at the Insane Hospital, in Washington, December 17, 1874. At his death the Waukesha Freeman said: "Many old citizens who remember the ragged little fellow of twenty years ago, playing on the banks of the Bark River in the village of Delafield, and who afterwards learned with pride that the same 'Billy Cushing' was performing some of the most glorious work of the war against secession, will be stricken with sorrow to learn of his untimely death."

The National Republican, of Washington, in its issue of Friday, December 18, 1874, said: "At half-past 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Commander William B. Cushing, one of the bravest officers who ever trod the deck of a vessel, breathed his last. This announcement will cast a shade of sorrow throughout the land, for where is the American who has not heard of the valiant deeds of him whose corpse is now lying at his late residence in the navy yard? There was no officer who ever entered the navy whose record was brighter—not even that of Decatur—than that of the deceased hero." Some years before his death, Commander Cushing received large sums from the Government in reward of his valuable services, and his family has a competence. The disease that caused Commander Cushing's death was contracted while on duty in the Gulf of Mexico. It caused him to become insane, in which condition he died. On his person, after death, was found an autograph letter, in which the strong pen of the late Gideon Welles returned the fullest thanks for the wonderful services which the brave Waukesha boy had performed for his country.

Had no other man entered the war of the Rebellion from this county, Waukesha would still be honored through all time as the birth-place of William B. Cushing.

Scraps of War History.—In April, 1861, two ladies of wealth, standing and with families, offered their services at the recruiting office as nurses as soon as the fighting began.

By May 1, 1861, Oconomowoc had subscribed over $2,000 to aid soldiers' families.

Delafield had raised $400 for the soldiers on May 10, 1861.

The "Home Guards," a company enrolled at Waukesha for home protection in case of emergency, was fully organized by May 1, and consisted of the older men of prominence and property. Malcolm Sellers was Captain.

The "Constitutional Guards," organized for home protection, was a company composed of men considered too old, or physically unable to fight except in case of emergency, on May 7, 1861, elected officers as follows: W. S. Hawkins, Captain; David Somer, First Lieutenant; Martin Shafer, Second Lieutenant; Leo Uhr, Sergeant; John W. Lowry, Corporal. Gov. Randall refused, however, to commission these officers, because, he said, the company was unfit for war.

June 1, a young son of Mr. Curtis, of the Oconomowoc Free Press, enlisted, and the patriotic father, in the next issue of his paper, said: "It is tough, but we cheerfully resign him at the call of the nation. And more—whenever necessity shall seem to require it, we shall as cheerfully go ourself, wherever duty may point."

Winchel D. Bacon, of Waukesha, was appointed by the Governor as one to purchase clothing for the Wisconsin soldiers. His first purchase was in June, 1861, and consisted of soldiers' equipage valued at $200,000.

In June, 1861, Fred Ring was chosen Captain of the "Waukesha Zouaves," and was immediately commissioned to enroll a company "without expense to the State."

In July, Edwin Hurlbut, of Oconomowoc, was commissioned State Agent for the Fourth Regiment.

The fourteen-year old son of W. A. David, of Waukesha, went to Michigan and enlisted in a rifle company.

In June, the sixteen-year old sons of Samuel Reed and Thomas Chandler, of Ottawa, enlisted for three years.

In October, 1861, Henry Shears, of Merton, was commissioned to raise a company of volunteers.

In November, the ladies of Ottawa formed a "Nightingale Society," to aid the soldiers. They were very successful in all their undertakings.

In December, 1861, Gov. A. W. Randall was offered the commission of Major General. He wrote in reply to President Lincoln: "Whenever you want a caucus managed, send for me; but the military business would be better left in other hands, for this country is in peril, and her affairs are not to be trifled with." That characteristic letter is still on file at Washington.

In December, seven months after making their enthusiastic pledges, a large number of the subscribers to the volunteer fund to aid the families of soldiers refused to pay their assessments. This brought a storm of letters from the soldiers, who complained bitterly that, while they were manfully "living up to their enlistment oaths in the field, those who pledged aid to their families at home were backing out like cowards."

In December, Capt. Shaw's Company went into camp at Janesville, as members of Col. W. A. Barstow's regiment of cavalry.

In January, 1862, Sergt. B. F. Cram returned to Waukesha with nearly $1,000 in gold for the families of those in his company.

While on the way to the front, during the last of March, 1862, eleven of Col. W. A. Barstow's cavalry were killed in a railway accident near Chicago, and twice that number seriously wounded.

Joseph Doty, an editorial writer for some time on the Waukesha Democrat, turned rebel and held a commission in the Confederate army. Three or four citizens of Waukesha County signed resolutions indorsing his course and requested their publication, but met a prompt refusal from both the Democratic and Republican editors.

R. L. Gove and H. F. Potter, of Col. Edward Daniels' regiment, edited a paper at Girardeau, Mo., called the Eagle, and made a good paper of it, too, during the spring of 1862.

In June, 1862, C. W. Bennett was commissioned Captain, to raise recruits. He opened an office at the court house in Waukesha about that time.

In August, 1862, John Hodgson offered $20 each to the first five men to enlist in Capt. Williams' company. He paid it, and, August 12, the company was full and ready to march.

F. B. Ward, the deaf printer of "Humbug City," near Waukesha, when asked by his third and last son if he should enlist, replied "Yes, yes, don't stay for me. I would go, too, if they would take me. I can care for myself; if not, it won't matter much." And his third son, less than eighteen years of age, signed the roll.

Mr. Curtis, of the Oconomowoc Free Press, who sent his son to the front early in the war, in August, 1862, enlisted himself, although age and physical disabilities nearly debarred him as a volunteer. He declared in his paper that when the country was in peril, every man should be able-bodied, and he, therefore, had shouldered a musket.

Dr. C. A. Leuthstrom announced that he would attend free to the families of all soldiers who should enlist after August, 1862. He kept his word.

On Thursday evening, August 14, 1862, C. C. White announced that he should raise a company of volunteers, and at midnight the following night the required number for a company had signed the enlistment roll. This was quick work.

Michael Thompson, in August, 1862, offered to furnish firewood to the families of any Waukesha village men who might enlist, and George Babcock offered to board free during the war the family of one volunteer.

The companies commanded by Capts. Enos, Townsend, Stevens, Williams and Meyer, belonging to the Twenty-eighth or "Waukesha Regiment," left for Camp Randall during the second week of September, 1862.

Three Waukesha County Assemblymen, in 1862, voted against allowing the soldiers to vote in the field.

The only vote in the Assembly against the measures to place Wisconsin on a war footing, at the breaking-out of the war, came from a Waukesha County member.

The town of Waukesha, in October, 1862, voted a bounty of $50 each, to the volunteers from that town in the Twenty-eighth Regiment.

Capt. H. A. Meyer and M. G. Townsend were presented handsome swords and belts before leaving for the front, in October, by their friends in the county.

The Twenty-eighth left Milwaukee for the front on Saturday, December 20, 1862.

Cushman K. Davis, afterward Governor of Minnesota, Elihu Enos, Sidney A. Bean, Mr. Curtis, Irving M. Bean, C. C. White, C. B. Slawson, Edward Daniels, B. F. Cram and several others corresponded regularly for the Waukesha County papers, and some of them wrote also for the Chicago, Madison and Milwaukee papers.

In January, 1863, a large meeting was held at Genesee, to raise funds for soldiers' families. The result was satisfactory. The ladies of that town also had "Mite Societies," for the same purpose, securing considerable sums of money and large amounts of food and clothing.

In February, 1863, Henry Shears was appointed Postmaster of Beaufort, S. C.

February 26, 1863, Winchel D. Bacon, of Waukesha, was appointed Paymaster in the army, with the rank of Major.

After the passage of the "Conscription Act" by the State Legislature, the following were appointed, in May, 1863, to make enlistment rolls in the various towns: Waukesha, James Davis; Menomonee, Cyrus S. Davis; Merton, David S. Foote; Lisbon, George Cairncross; Oconomowoc, D. R. Thompson; Summit, E. Baker; Delafield, Samuel Thompson; Pewaukee, J. M. Heath; Brookfield, Dr. J. H. Bevier; New Berlin, H. H. Hunkins; Genesee, Henry Bowman; Ottawa, — Meigs; Eagle, A. R. Hinckley; Mukwonago, F. M. Payne; Vernon, Ira Blood; Muskego, C. H. Babcock. These men were to discover and record the number of men fit for military duty in their respective towns.

At the battle of Port Hudson, Col. Sidney A. Bean threw aside his sword and coat, and, seizing a musket, loaded and fired incessantly, until mortally wounded.

In December, 1863, Lieut. Slawson, for Waukesha; L. Barker, for Brookfield; E. Oleson, for Oconomowoc, and C. Helwig, for Vernon, opened recruiting offices to fill up the Twenty-eighth Regiment.

In February, 1864, Brookfield, Merton and Menomonee voted to raise bounties for volunteers. Oconomowoc voted the bounty proposition down. Mukwonago, Waukesha, Genesee and Pewaukee made arrangements for bounties a few days later, and March 1, 1864, Mukwonago had her quota full for the call for 500,000 men, made February 1, 1864.

In April, 1864, Genesee paid a Milwaukee firm $4,000 for re-enlistments, and Milwaukee had the men credited to the Second Ward of that city. Genesee afterward got back $1,000 of this money.

Some of the bundles sent out by the Ladies' Aid Society were curiously and touchingly marked. On a bundle containing bandages was written: "This is a poor gift, but it is all I had; I have given my husband and my boy, and wish I had more to give, but I have not."

On some eye-shades was marked: "Made by one who is blind. Oh, how I long to see the dear old flag that you are all fighting under!"

For several weeks after April 1, 1864, Irving M. Bean acted as Provost Marshal of this district, Mr. Tillapaugh having been deposed for crookedness.

In May, 1864, meetings were held for the purpose of raising 100-day men. Excitement again ran high, as it was thought the war was nearly at an end.

August 1, 1864, Mukwonago raised $2,600 to free the town from a draft consequent upon Lincoln's call of July 18, for 500,000 men for one year.

During the latter half of the Rebellion, the pay of soldiers was as follows: Sergeant-majors, $26; quartermaster and commissary sergeants of cavalry, artillery and infantry, $20; sergeants of ordnance, sappers and miners, and pontoniers, $34; corporals of ordnance, sappers and miners, pontoniers, $20; privates of engineers and ordnance of the first class, $18; and of the second class, $16; corporals of cavalry, artillery and infantry, $18; chief buglers of cavalry, $23; buglers, $16; farriers and blacksmiths of cavalry and artillery, $18; privates of cavalry, artillery and infantry, $16; principal musicians of artillery and infantry, $22; leaders of brigade and regimental bands, $75; musicians, $16; hospital stewards of the first class, $33; hospital stewards of the second class, $25; hospital stewards of the third class, $23.

The contract for feeding the men drafted by Vernon Tichenor, in November, 1862, was let to Silas Barber, of Waukesha.

The first demonstration in Waukesha County of those who sympathized with the rebellion was at a public meeting held in Mukwonago, March 11, 1863, at which "secesh" speeches were made, and the name of every Union officer and soldier was reviled in the most shameful manner. Three days later, on March 14, a larger public meeting to denounce "the butcher Lincoln" was held in Robinson's Hall at Waukesha. William S. Hawkins was admitted and took opportunity to deliver such a speech for the Union as broke up the meeting. A few days later, a similar meeting was held in Merton, but it re-acted, resulting in the formation of a Union Club, which caused Confederate sympathizers to thereafter keep safely hidden.

The women did not join in these demonstrations against the Union. The wives of Confederate sympathizers were found at Union meetings, and were working as members of the "Soldiers' Aid Societies," while their husbands were condemning the war.

Late in April, 1863, the sympathizers with Jefferson Davis had another public meeting, and invited Alexander F. Pratt to be present and to make a speech. He did so, and delivered such a speech for the Union as those present had not heard for many a day. Although impromptu, it was a fine effort, and sent dismay into the ranks of those who had gathered to give aid and comfort to the cause espoused by Jefferson Davis.

The greatest demonstrations in favor of Jefferson Davis were made at Oconomowoc, where numerous citizens wore copper cents for buttons, and the raid on the house of one Union man was, for a time, really dangerous.

This was about the last of secession demonstrations, as the atmosphere became altogether too hot for it.

THE GLOVER RESCUE.

The greatest and closing chapter in the noted Glover rescue—the final act of rescue—is credited to the Anti-slaveryites of Waukesha County. Joshua Glover was a fugitive slave, at work in a mill at Racine. His owner, with a guide obtained at Racine, found the house where Glover was staying, and, after striking him with some heavy instrument, put him into a carriage, and, driving rapidly to Milwaukee, threw him into prison in that city. Sherman M. Booth, who had resided at Waukesha before that time (March 11, 1854), mounted a horse, and, riding rapidly through the streets, called out a very large crowd to rescue the fugitive slave from prison. Speeches were made by several Anti-slaveryites, and excitement was at the highest possible pitch. While the speeches were being delivered, a squad of excited men, led by Booth, secured a heavy beam, and with it upon their shoulders battered down the jail door, and soon had Glover in a carriage riding through the throngs that filled the streets. Further details as to the affair at Milwaukee are not necessary here, except to state that every city, hamlet and town in Wisconsin was in a fever of excitement, and that Henry H. Messenger, a strong Democrat, having his sympathy aroused, took Glover into his own carriage, because his horse was the fleetest in the country, and drove at all possible speed to Waukesha, as that was considered the surest avenue for the escape of all fugitives from slavery. When he arrived at Waukesha, his horse was pretty well used up, as the roads were heavy and he had been pursued for some distance by men and officers upon horses, on foot and in carriages; but, by dodging between two parallel roads, and by urging a fleet horse to its utmost speed, he escaped all pursuers, arriving at Waukesha late the same night. Knowing that Winchel D. Bacon was an Abolitionist, Mr. Messenger went direct to his house, which is now the upper portion of the Mansion House in the village of Waukesha, then owned by Mr. Bacon. It was not thought best to keep Glover, whose hair was still clotted with blood, and his clothing dirty and torn from maltreatment received at Racine, hidden in the village, so Vernon Tichenor, Dr. W. D. Holbrook, Charles Blackwell, and perhaps one or two others, were called in for consultation. Two things were necessary, a safe place and a reliable man. Finally, Vernon Tichenor went across the fields, in the mud and dark, to the house of Moses Tichenor, his father, about two miles south of the village, and aroused him from bed. Mr. Tichenor at once consented to take charge of Glover, and, on his return, Vernon Tichenor was chosen to act as guide in conducting Glover to his father's place. On arriving there, Mr. Tichenor saw several persons in the dim light at his father's house, and instinctively drew back, thinking Glover had been followed; but, on looking more closely, he saw Mr. Bacon and Dr. Holbrook, who had kept silently along, to see that the fugitive was not captured. Glover was hidden in Mr. Tichenor's barn until Chauncey C. Olin had made arrangements to convey him to Racine, where, in proper disguise, he took a boat and escaped to Canada, never to be recaptured. Racine was chosen as the place to embark for Canada because it was thought the excitement had all been transferred from there, where it originated, to Milwaukee. This was a correct supposition, and Glover escaped easily from that point. At Muskego, Mr. Olin went to Richard Ely and said he was fleeing with Glover and must have a fresh team. "You can have anything I have got," said Mr. Ely, "and no matter if it can't be returned." He got a fresh team. During several days after Glover was in Waukesha, the houses, bridges, and roads were watched by the slave-hunters, but they were out-generated, as they had always been in "that Abolition hole," as the village was for years called.

Years afterward, Salmon Portland Chase, Chief Justice of the United States, spent a summer at Waukesha, with Judge Andrew J. Miller, of the United States District Court (who, after the escape of Glover, was very severe in dealing with S. M. Booth, Edward Daniels and others, for aiding in the "rescue,") visited the room in the Mansion House in which the noted fugitive remained during his first night in Waukesha, and where his wounds were dressed and food given him.

The rescue of Joshua Glover resulted in the arrest of Sherman M. Booth, Edward Daniels and others, for violating the "fugitive-slave act," and the matter was in the courts, as well as some of the men in prison, for various periods during the next sixteen or seventeen years.

On the 15th of March, four days after Glover was brought to Waukesha, those who espoused the cause of slavery got together in Waukesha and hung Booth in effigy, and in other parts of the county all who had anything to do with the rescue were burned or hung in effigy.

SEVEN MURDERS.

The county of Waukesha had got a reputation abroad for having had but one murder, and a large number of her inhabitants thought the reputation a just one, as the only life-taking remembered, except the shooting of Henry Keene by David Bonham, was the stabbing of Peschke by Dr. Bigelow, which was not generally considered murder. But Waukesha County has had her full share of murders, as shown by the public records, and there have been two or three mysterious deaths within her limits which smell strongly of foul play, but no was ever arrested for any of these, nor could any clew as to the perpetrators be obtained.

The first murder in the county is remembered by all the old settlers; and its story, with all the variations which time and personal enmity or friendship inevitably add, has been repeated scores of times to the younger generations. Some of the others, however, have nearly passed from the public mind, except the severing of the head of Christiana Werner, and the escape of her assassin from punishment.

First Murder in the County.—The highest crime known to the law, that of life-taking, was wholly unthought of in Waukesha County up to 1845, when not only the people of this county, but of the whole State, were thrown into the wildest excitement by the report that David Bonham, a prominent politician here, and afterward in Missouri, had shot and killed Henry Keene, in Menomonee.

Very briefly stated, without touching upon the details or merits of the case, the facts are these: Thomas Phippin and one Nottingham had built a saw-mill in the southwest portion of the town of Menomonee, before the canal lands, on which it stood, had been sold. Soon after Mr. Phippin sold his interest in the property to Henry Keene, the firm thus becoming Nottingham & Keene. According to sworn testimony, Mr. Nottingham soon after went to the land office at Milwaukee, without Mr. Keene's knowledge, and took a deed of the entire mill property in his own name, instead of allowing the title to rest in the firm name of Nottingham & Keene. Mr. Keene, after going to the land office and finding that he had no redress there, went to his partner and asked for some sort of an equitable and amicable settlement of the affair. Mr. Nottingham replied that he had no settlement to make, and refused to listen to any further propositions. Mr. Keene then went to the mill, determined to get some value for his investment, if possible, and began to displace and carry to Phippin's house, which was near by, such machinery and tools as he could, without help. This was discovered by David Bonham, who was laboring by the month for Mr. Nottingham, and who ordered Mr. Keene to leave the mill. His orders were disobeyed, Mr. Keene having, as he said, purchased an interest in the property, and expressed the opinion that he had a right to perfect freedom upon his own premises. Finding that he could not prevent the dismantling of the mill by such means as he had at hand, Bonham sent his brother to fetch a loaded gun. The simple appearance of the gun failing to have the desired effect, Mr. Bonham took deliberate aim and shot, the result being the death of Henry Keene. The horrible tragedy was witnessed by several persons, whose testimony furnishes the facts for the story of the murder. Other testimony, however, was to the effect that Mr. Nottingham wrote from Milwaukee to Bonham, that Mr. Keene was on his way to take possession of the mill, and to "be ready for him." The letter, so far as testimony shows, did not counsel violence. Testimony at this date is as conflicting as it was when Mr. Bonham was on trial for the murder of his neighbor, and some of those who have furnished information to the historian concerning this initial tragedy, have evidently forgotten some of the statements they swore to as facts during the trial at Racine; so that little discrepancies in this account are unavoidable. Three things, however, are undisputed: This was the first murder in the county; James Keene was so dead that he was buried, and he was perfectly alive and well before David Bonham shot him, in May, 1845.

Mr. Bonham was arrested without resistance, by Barzilea Douglass, and had his preliminary examination before William P. Sloan, Justice of the Peace, at Waukesha. Alexander W. Randall, afterward Governor of Wisconsin, and Postmaster General of the United States, was Bonham's attorney, and no man ever worked more persistently for his client than he did to clear the man charged with the first murder in the county. Mr. Sloan, "in spite of hard swearing and eloquent pleas," held Bonham for the murder, and committed him to the jail at Milwaukee, Waukesha County not then having been set apart and organized.

A change of venue was secured to Racine County, because the excitement was so great and the feeling was so bitter against Bonham that his advisers thought a fair trial and impartial justice could not be had at Milwaukee. The details of the long and well-contested trial will be of no value here; suffice it to say he was convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to the gallows, as hanging for capital crime had not then been abolished in this State. On being sentenced, Mr. Bonham, who was physically a very strong man, and who had borne up bravely until the sentence was pronounced, lost courage; but not so his attorney and friends, who at once set about securing intercession from the Governor. Every effort that could be made by shrewd attorneys and tireless friends was made in Bonham's behalf, the Governor's office being in a continual state of siege. Finally, several long temperance petitions which had, at the cost of several months of labor, been secured by Rev. Mr. Powers, and which contained the names of a large number of the prominent citizens of Waukesha and vicinity, fell into the hands of Bonham's friends, who cut the temperance petitions from the lists of names, and pasted in their stead a petition praying the Governor to grant the condemned man full and free pardon. On the strength of this petition the pardon was granted at the very last. Before this pardon, which was obtained in a manner not indorsed by the community, Gov. Dodge reprieved Bonham for one month. A large concourse of people had gathered at Racine to see the hanging (in December, 1847), but were disappointed, as Bonham was reprieved in the morning of the day set for his execution. The reprieve was taken by A. F. Pratt, who, with "old Whitey," a horse famous in those days for tireless speed, reached Racine with several hours to spare. The crowd, largely from Waukesha County, was very angry on learning what had been done, and one man made a speech in which he declared they "never could have a better opportunity for a first-class hanging, or a more deserving subject." No violence was attempted, however.

After this reprieve, and before the final day set for the execution, the emasculated petition above mentioned was sent to the Governor; and not knowing its character, probably, he signed a full and free pardon. If possible, this caused greater excitement than the murder: but once done there was no remedy—Bonham was forever free. He had an opportunity, however, to attend two or three indignation meetings, held to denounce Gov. Dodge and the means used to induce that official to undo the work of the court, as well as those who had a hand in making fraudulent use of a temperance petition. Among those who composed the loads of people who went from Summit, Waukesha, Menomonee, Lisbon, and nearly every town in the county, to Racine, when Bonham was to be hung, were some who openly threatened to take the law from the hands of the Territorial officials, even after his return to this county, but fortunately these threats never were carried out.

Mr. Bonham, it should certainly be added, soon after went to Missouri, where he redeemed his past life, as far as possible, and held offices of trust and emolument with honor to his friends and credit to himself. As every man, woman and child in Waukesha County knows of him, and his name is always mentioned as though an interesting history clung about it, which is the case, the following sketch of his life, taken from the St. Joseph (Mo.) Union, of May 26, 1870, is here inserted for the benefit of those who only knew David Bonham as "the murderer of Henry Keene:"

"Col. David Bonham, one of the most remarkable men of the Northwest, died at his home on Empire Prairie, Andrew County, Mo., on Saturday last, at 7 P. M., after a long and painful illness, and his remains were interred at 1 P. M., on Monday, by his brother Odd Fellows. The old hero is at rest. Let us learn a lesson from his life.

"David Bonham was the son of Robert and Jane Bonham, and was born in the town of Road, Northamptonshire, England, in 1809. His parents were poor, and the only educational advantages—so called—which he ever received, was three months' attendance at Sabbath school. Never in his life did he attend common school for a single day; yet, such was the energy of the man, that in his later years he acquired a comparatively thorough education. He embraced every opportunity of obtaining information, and at length became, in the true sense of the term, self-educated.

"At the early age of thirteen he left his home, and for eight years thereafter worked upon a farm. When twenty-one years old, he bade farewell to England, and emigrated to America, landing in New York. One year after his arrival, he was married to Miss Rebecca Weaver, a most estimable lady, who has shared his misfortunes for nearly forty years, and now mourns his loss. For six years he was in the employ of Stebbins & McEntee, on the Erie Canal, during most of which he occupied responsible positions.

"In 1836, deceased moved to Wisconsin, then a Territory, and resided in Milwaukee County for twenty years. He was an officer in the Legislature during the winters of 1840, 1841, 1842 and 1845, and discharged his duties to the satisfaction of all. For three years he was Justice of the Peace, and held the office of Chairman of the Board of Supervisors, Town Clerk, etc., in the town of Lisbon, Milwaukee County. His fidelity in the discharge of his duties, together with his native talent, made him at all times a most efficient officer.

"In the spring of 1856, deceased came to Missouri, and purchased a large tract of land in Andrew County. In the fall of that year, he brought his family to his new location, and permanently settled upon the farm where he died. It is a beautiful place, in the heart of one of the richest prairies of the West; and here David Bonham spent most of his time for fourteen years. When the war broke out, and the country needed the aid of every man, David Bonham was among the first in the Northwest to come boldly forward to its defense. He sought no rank, but, shouldering his musket, enlisted as a private in the State militia. But talents such as his could be of more service in higher and more responsible positions, and he was shortly promoted. He remained at his post until failing health compelled him to resign.

"In 1865, he was chosen a member of the State Constitutional Convention, and our new constitution is stamped with the impress of his foresight and originality, several of the provisions having been drafted by him. In 1866, he was elected to the State Senate from Andrew County, and soon became one of the leading members, not so much by reason of his brilliant oratory, as by his strong practical common sense and heroic devotion to principle. The writer remembers conversing with a lobby member, during Col. Bonham's terms, who had some wild-cat railroad project to log-roll through the Legislature. 'I have got the House,' he said, 'and would be sure of the Senate, but for Bonham. The old Spartan, suspecting something, has set himself dead against me, and all h—l can't make him budge an inch.'

"In 1868, Col. Bonham was a candidate before the Republican State Convention for Lieutenant Governor, but failed to get the nomination. Shortly afterward he sailed for England to visit his brothers and sisters, whom he had left thirty-nine years before. Finding some of their children and grandchildren wearing their lives away in drudgery, he organized an emigration scheme, on an extensive scale, corresponded with leading British journals, returned to America, engaged passage for a colony, arranged for their reception in New York, secured transportation for them to Missouri, and had the satisfaction of seeing all comfortably located and prosperous before his death.

“Deceased had seven children—five of whom are now living—Robert, David, and William, and Mrs. Jane Brown, of Empire Prairie, and John Bonham, in St. Joseph. They are in every respect worthy of their sire.

“David Bonham is dead! Republicanism in Missouri has lost a pillar. Deceased had his faults—like the rest of us—but he was ever true to principle. His nature was akin to the rough granite, which admits of no polish. He was of such stuff as constitutes heroes, and, like a primeval boulder, has engraven his record upon the historic columns of the nineteenth century. No man had a better friend, or a more generous foe, than David Bonham.”

Other Murders.—The second murder in the county was committed in the town of Merton on the 25th of June, 1850, when William Flanagan shot Francis Horel with a “horse-pistol.” The shot did not result fatally at once, Horel lingering until July 5 following, or ten days, during which time he appeared before Vernon Tichenor and made a sworn ante-mortem statement, charging the murder upon Flanagan and reciting all the details of the shooting. The grand jury, at the November term of court, 1850, found a true bill of indictment against Flanagan for murder in the second degree, and Judge Hubbell, March 20, 1851, sentenced him to hard labor in the State Prison for five years. The case was thoroughly contested by the defense at Flanagan’s trial, and after the sentence, which was a light one, a great effort was made to secure his pardon. This was impossible, as the murder was generally believed to have been cold-blooded and unprovoked, and none but near friends would sign the petition. Horel had been ordered to leave the place, and was obeying; but because he did not move as rapidly as was possible for him to have done, Flanagan shot him while he was mounting the stile; according to the testimony, therefore, there was no cause whatever for the murder. The light sentence which Flanagan received was owing to the influence of his church and friends, who labored assiduously in his behalf.

The Waukesha County murder that was committed with the least provocation was the killing of John W. Craft, at Brookfield, by Francis H. Stevens, in 1857. The murder was committed in the true banditti style, for money, by the use of a heavy club, with which the victim’s head was beaten almost to a jelly. The murderer, Francis H. Stevens, was only twenty years of age. He was convicted and sentenced June 20, 1857, to the State Prison for life; but his attorney, Vernon Tichenor, never for a moment relaxed his labors in behalf of the convict, who, at the end of fifteen years, was pardoned by the Governor. The murder, for such it was in the fullest sense of the term, was committed January 19, 1857, for about $100 in gold, silver and bank bills. The instrument of death was a maple sapling four feet in length, taken from a pile of wood belonging to the school house near Brookfield Plank-road Junction. Craft, who was married, and twenty-eight years of age, had started, after dusk, to visit the residence of F. B. Ward, and was waylaid by his young friend, who was unmarried. At his capture $70, in such denominations as Craft was known to have shown, were found on Stevens’ person. It was fortunate for the young criminal that he was convicted and sent to prison, for had he been acquitted there is little doubt that he would have been hung by a posse of men who had watched the trial from the beginning, with that purpose in view, and declared that no matter what the verdict might be, justice would certainly be administered by some one. This feeling was shared by a large portion of the community, because the manner in which Craft’s life had been taken was so extremely brutal; and the sum of money for which the deed was planned and executed so insignificant, being less than $100. To show how determined this spirit of vengeance was during the trial of young Stevens, it is only necessary to mention that a rope had been secured and a tree selected for the lynching, in case the jury should acquit him.

The town of Vernon is charged with one murder, but the man who committed it never was punished, except by the lashes which his own conscience has administered. The trouble which resulted in this murder grew out of a dispute about a pair of bars, between Lazarus Whipple and James Nolan. After bandying words for some time, and abusing each other according to respective ability, Whipple, who was a sharp pettifogger and very quick-tempered man, seized a heavy club and killed his companion then and there. Mr. Whipple was arrested by Romanto

Peck, a Constable, who failed to hold his prisoner. The escape caused as great excitement as the murder, and Peck was then arrested for aiding Whipple to escape, and examined before Vernon Tichenor, Justice of the Peace, who held him for trial; he was sentenced to the county jail for four months by the circuit court. Lazarus Whipple, who was one of the very first settlers in the town of Vernon, escaped to Texas; but whether he is now living is not known. The crime was committed August 21, 1852, and Peck was tried in December of that year. Mr. Nolan lived a few hours, long enough to make a dying statement which charged that the murder was committed by Lazarus Whipple without provocation. Whipple never was followed to Texas, because in those early days Texas was a long distance from Wisconsin, and thought to be a worse place to live in than the State Prison. He wrote to friends several times, saying he would return for a visit if such a course was considered safe; but the answers of his friends were such that he never came, so far as is known. By some of his friends it is claimed Mr. Whipple killed Nolan in self-defense.

Another murder must be charged against the town of Menomonee, the pioneer in the awful crime of taking human life. On the 25th of April, 1853, Hugh Drum, a young man still "in his teens," shot and killed his mother, Margaret Sullivan. Hugh's father was dead and his mother had married a second husband, named Sullivan. The shooting grew out of family difficulties brought about by the second marriage. The examination of young Drum, which was before Vernon Tichenor, at Waukesha, occupied more than a week's time, and resulted in holding him for trial. The trial was a peculiar one, the interference with witnesses by outsiders who interested themselves in Drum's behalf, causing some trouble, and finally resulting in his acquittal. It might easily be considered strange that a person charged with murder should be acquitted when neither self-defense nor insanity was set up as a defense. It was the result of the labors of numerous friends in his behalf.

The bloodiest and most shocking murder ever committed in this county was the killing of Christiana Werner, in the town of Genesee, by Eli Moyer, January 30, 1858. He threw her to the floor, and with an ax completely severed the head from the body. The indictment, which was very elaborate otherwise, did not state particularly the residence of Christiana Werner, and on that ground Moyer's counsel was only prevented from quashing the indictment by a prompt continuance of the case. The county was put to a large amount of costs in the preliminary work of the attempt to bring the murderer to justice, but everything turned to naught, except the efforts of J. P. Walker, Moyer's attorney, who finally secured the discharge of his client without even a trial, District Attorney Edwin Hurlbut moving that a nolle prosequi be entered, having concluded a conviction was impossible, which was done. This raised a storm of indignation, especially among the Germans; but that was all there was of the matter. In Waukesha County, in January, 1858, Eli Moyer severed the head from the body of Christiana Werner, according to the testimony and indictment, and was discharged with only a partial trial!

The history of Muskego is also stained with human blood, and the stain is comparatively fresh. Dr. P. C. Bigelow, Joseph Peschke and others had, on the 25th of February, 1874, been drinking; and, before the fun was over, a quarrel was begun by the two persons just mentioned. This altercation became very spirited, and Peschke followed Dr. Bigelow with a club, threatening violence. The threats and demonstrations being repeated several times, the Doctor turned and stabbed Peschke with a pocket-knife, fatally. Dr. Bigelow was arrested, tried for murder, convicted of manslaughter in the second degree, and sentenced to the State Prison for a short period—four years. Before the end of his term, in consideration that Peschke was killed partly in self-defense, the Doctor was pardoned, to have his freedom so long as he refrained from drinking. This proviso was broken and he was sent back, where he served his full term. He has not since been a resident of the county. He was considered an excellent physician and was for some years quite prominent as a politician, being a man of considerable ability.

EARLY MANUFACTURING.

The county of Waukesha lays claim to the honor of having had built within her borders the first thrashing machines, first mowing machines, and first railway cars erected in Wisconsin.

In 1839, Hamilton Nelson, now a resident of Beloit, Wis., began the erection of thrashing machines. They were rightly named, for they did nothing more than to beat the grain out, then scattered grain, chaff and straw in a heap behind the machine, where one man stood with a fork to shake the loose kernels from the straw, which he then pitched farther to the rear, and another stood with a rake to push the grain and chaff into a pile at one side, to be afterward cleaned by a fanning-mill. Mr. Nelson's first machine was built in his little log house, for his brother, John Nelson. When any stick of timber was too long to be handled in the house, the door was thrown open and one end allowed to protrude. Having nothing with which to pierce a hole lengthwise through the cylinder for the iron axle, Mr. Nelson, after finding a sound oak log, sawed it to the proper length, split it into halves, and, with a gouge cut grooves in each half at the heart, so that, when the log was again put together it had a hole through the centre. The axle was then inserted and the rifted block of wood banded together with iron. For teeth, Mr. Nelson drove round bars of iron into the oaken cylinder. For such iron work as he could not manufacture himself, he sent East, where he had been a thrashing-machine manufacturer. Mr. Nelson made several of these primitive thrashers, horse-powers and all, and they ran for many years without repairs.

These, so far as known, were the first thrashing machines built in Wisconsin. A small portion of one of them is still to be seen under an old shed in the town of Pewaukee.

The first mowing machine built in the county, and doubtless in the State, was the work of Andrew McCormick, one of the very earliest settlers of the county. It would be considered a very ungainly piece of machinery to-day, if put by the side of a solid iron "Walter A. Wood mower," for instance. One old settler says it "resembled a large barn after the boards had all been blown from its frame." The first trial of the capabilities of this wonderful machine was made on Nathaniel Walton's land, near the present site of the State Industrial School for Boys. It actually cut some grass; pulled up a great deal, and beat the balance down most admirably. Although of but little practical value, this awkward piece of mechanism was the foundation on which Mr. McCormick afterward built a machine which operated successfully; but of his subsequent success little can be said here, as he left Waukesha County soon after building his first machine.

EARLY HORSE-RACING FEATS.

The first horse-racing done in Waukesha County was, of course, done by the Indians. A few of the very earliest white settlers were fortunate enough to be witnesses of these extraordinary equestrian exhibitions; but not unless they understood Pottawatomie, or chanced to pass the race grounds while the racing was in progress; for the Indians posted no bills—simply passed the announcement from one to another. The most important rendezvous for the dusky jockeys was Mukwonago, where, on lands afterward owned by Henry H. Camp, one of the earliest settlers, races were held at various periods. They were much more elaborate affairs than the racing of more modern times and people. They were exhibitions of speed, horsemanship, equestrian feats, battle attitudes, and of the physical prowess of the riders.

The races to test speed were generally short, but swift and spirited. The other exhibitions consisted of riding upon the side, rump, neck, or almost under the horse; in a standing or reaching posture; in jumping from one horse to another while the animals were speeding at a wild rate; in leaping to the ground and back to the horse while on the run, and in performing various maneuvers with guns or poles. The manner in which both horses and Indians thus performed was remarkable indeed, Solomon Juneau declaring that before the warriors were demoralized by whisky and the whites, the equestrian exhibitions which he witnessed the first year he was in Wisconsin [he passed the greater portion of the first fall, winter, and spring at Mukwonago] surpassed in horsemanship and physical training, anything he had ever seen or read of. Although greatly degenerated, the few races had by the Indians after the whites came to Waukesha County were said to be exciting and interesting in the extreme. The aborigines had no horse-trots; the racing was to test running qualities.

The Pottawatomies built no race-tracks; had no grand stand; engaged no bands of music; had no policemen, and charged no admission. The exhibition was free to all. Mr. Juneau said that, although little or no labor was expended in preparing a place for the curious performances, the grounds were very good, as level prairie ground was selected, which, by much using, became quite smooth, free from grass, and hard. The dress used by the riders was occasionally fantastic, but not elaborate, as clothing was a burden that interfered seriously with the gymnastic performances. The horses, which were ridden without saddles of course, were ponies, and smaller than the trained and race-horses of the present day. There will never be another Pottawatomie horse-race in Waukesha County.

A DISTINGUISHED COUNTY.

There are many reasons why Waukesha may properly be recorded as a distinguished county. True, of late she has settled down to quieter ways, taking comparatively little part in all those public affairs and deliberations in which, during her earlier years, she was almost always a leader. Waukesha County did not furnish leaders for one party merely, but for both and all of them. During the active periods of their lives, the most distinguished members of both the Democratic and Republican parties in Wisconsin made Waukesha County their home. From here they made the suggestions that moved public affairs in all parts of the State.

For years Prairieville was called "the hub," because it was the acknowledged headquarters of the powerful and successful agitators and political managers of the Territory and State. "The time was," said a distinguished official in a recent visit to Waukesha, "the time was when it was considered a crime to make up a State ticket of any kind without giving one or two of its most important positions to men from Waukesha County."

Prairieville was for many years the place for holding all the conventions, railroad meetings, and public gatherings for Milwaukee County, although Milwaukee was a larger place and had more hotels. But a lack of ample hotel accommodations was nothing to be considered in those days, for the latch-string to every house hung out, and all friends in a common cause were welcome to the best the house afforded.

It was the headquarters for the Democratic party in its earlier days; for the Abolitionist and Liberty parties; and, during the first few years of its existence, furnished some of the most active and influential men of the Republican party. But, "the cat will mew, and the dog will have its day;" so Waukesha County has seen her greatest political day pass into oblivion, and most of her persistent and stirring leaders borne to the grave, or established in office in other States. For a county with no large cities, and only sixteen towns, the list of those who have made her distinguished is a long one, as follows: William A. Barstow was Secretary of State in 1850-51; Governor in 1854-55, and Colonel in the army. Alexander W. Randall was Governor two terms, from January 4, 1858, to January 6, 1862, earning the title of the "War Governor of Wisconsin;" was First Assistant Postmaster General, and United States Minister to Rome under Lincoln, and Postmaster General under President Johnson, thus giving to Waukesha County the honor of furnishing the only Cabinet Minister Wisconsin ever had. Eleazer Root was the first State Superintendent of Schools, and the author of the School Law in the State Constitution. E. M. Randall is Chief Justice of the State of Florida, holding before his appointment to that position, various offices in this county, as did also his brother, Alexander W. Randall. Charles D. Parker, who, if he was not born in Waukesha County, came here when a mere child, was Lieutenant Governor from January 5, 1874, to January 7, 1878, being elected the second time, while William R. Taylor, with whom he ran, was defeated by Harrison Ludington, for the office of Governor. He is not now a resident of the county. Cushman K. Davis, who made his mud pies, received his education and did his courting in Waukesha County, was Governor of Minnesota in 1874-75. W. W. Randall, brother to A. W. Randall, was during several years United States Consul to Valparaiso, Chili. Robert G. Ingersoll, whose father was a Presbyterian minister at Waukesha, spent his college and more callow days here; and his brother, Dr. Ingersoll, is still a resident of the county. I. M. Bean, a Colonel in the army, is now Collector of Internal Revenue, for the first and largest Wisconsin District. Elihu Enos, Postmaster at Waukesha, is a member for Wisconsin, of the Republican National Committee, serving his second term. Rufus Parks, who died in the town of Summitt, in September, 1878, was the first Receiver of Public Moneys for the Milwaukee Land District. William B. Cushing, born in the town of Delafield, was one of the most noted men in the navy during the war of the Rebellion, his name being famous in the military circles of the whole world. Edward Daniels was State Geologist, a Colonel in the army, and prominent in the so-called "Booth war," and Enoch Totten, Timothy O. Howe's son-in-law, now has the largest law practice in the highest courts, of any man who appears before them. He resides in Washington. A list of distinguished names like this, ramifying to almost every department of military and civil life, is seldom found in a single county.

In 1847, the Albany, N. Y. Journal, said "the county of Waukesha seems to have especial charge of the politics of the Territory of Wisconsin," which was true. At the beginning of the war, however, Waukesha lost her office of "guardian of Wisconsin politics." But she has made a name that will always be bright and prominent in the history, not only of the State, but of the nation.

COUNTY POOR-HOUSE AND FARM.

The first paupers which Waukesha County was called upon to provide for, were cared for under contract, by the week, by Findlay McNaughton, at his log house in Vernon. During some years, the number of paupers was not great. They received excellent care and treatment under this plan, and the expense to the county was merely nominal, until the numbers began to grow considerably larger.

Finally, his old house becoming too small, Mr. McNaughton abandoned it and erected a commodious wooden building, suitable for both a residence and poor-house, on the northwest quarter of Section 2, town of Vernon—which structure is a portion of the present poor-farm buildings—where he continued to be poor-keeper.

On the 6th of December, 1866, Mr. McNaughton sold his farm, consisting of 165⁸⁵/₁₀₀ acres, with all its buildings, to the county for $9,000. In 1874, a new building of brick, three stories in height, was erected, in which were placed grated and barred cells for the insane.

The poor farm now has ample accommodations for its paupers, and cares for the insane fully as well as could be expected, it being well understood that the keeper has not the facilities always provided for caring for the inmates of regular insane hospitals; nor can these unfortunates have the skilled medical treatment which is so necessary in such cases. After the county system was adopted—that is, paying the expenses of supporting paupers by general taxation, the first person taken was an unknown child left at the "Exchange Hotel," in Waukesha, and recorded as "No. 1, December 1, 1857." From that time until December 31, 1858, the record of inmates shows that 72 different paupers were received in that time, and that 40 remained at the end of the year. During the next year, 81 different persons were cared for; and from that time to 1880 the record shows an average of about 70 different persons cared for per year. This would be equal to keeping 1,610 paupers one year. There are now 48 inmates at the poor farm, 20 of whom are insane or idiotic, and several of the former are "incurable," and never leave their cells. Their unfortunate condition entails a large amount of care and labor upon the keeper.

The farm is a good one and is in an excellent state of cultivation, producing almost everything required for the keeper, the inmates and their attendants. A little flour and the usual plain groceries are generally all the farm does not produce, except fresh meat during the warm weather, which the inmates have once or twice each week, to better insure good health. Cows, sheep and swine are raised on the farm, generally sufficient to supply all wants. Sometimes the young pigs are sold on foot and pork bought with the proceeds. There are eleven cows on the farm at this time, and from them the keeper's large family of paupers is supplied with milk and butter. The diet of the paupers consists of bread, butter, vegetables, salt meat generally, milk and tea, coffee and milk; of such food as this they have an abundance.

A large share of the work about the building is performed by the female inmates, and all the male paupers who are able to labor at all are required to work according to their strength, on the farm. This is better for them and better for the county.

Findlay McNaughton, the first Superintendent of the poor farm, held the position until the appointment of George C. Pratt, in 1872; Mr. Pratt was Superintendent about three years. Since the expiration of his term in January, 1875, J. T. Morris has held that position.

The county poor-house had its origin in a poor-house for the town of Waukesha, begun on the farm of Matthew Wright. George C. Pratt, then Chairman of the town, had this primitive institution nominally in charge.

For the year 1879, the cost of maintaining the poor farm and house, including the Superintendent's salary, was about $92 per week, or a little over $4,500 per annum. During the year 1857, the last one before adopting the county system, the county paid $6,500 for the support of her paupers.

POST OFFICES IN WAUKESHA COUNTY.

The first post office established within the boundaries of the present county was called Prairieville, and David Jackson was Postmaster.

In 1843, the county contained the following post offices: Delafield, Menomonee Falls, Muskego, Mequanigou (now Mukwonago), New Berlin, St. Marie's, Summit and Vernon. It will thus be seen that Oconomowoc, now the second place in Waukesha County in importance and population, was not large enough to have a post office, several other places that are still the merest villages, being then of greater size and importance.

On the 1st of January, 1851, the county contained the following post offices: Big Bend, Brookfield, Bullion (discontinued), Delafield, Denoon (discontinued), Eagleville (discontinued), Genesee, Golden Lake, Hartland, Howards (discontinued), Lisbon, Mapleton, Marcy, Menomonee Falls, Merton, Monches, Monterey, Mukwonago, Muskego Center, Oconomowoc, Okauchee (discontinued), Ottawa, Pewaukee, Prospect Hill, South Genesee, Summit, Sussex, Vernon, Waterville and Waukesha.

The post offices for 1880 are as follows: Waukesha, in the town of Waukesha; Oconomowoc, Monterey and Mapleton, in Oconomowoc; Waterville, Dousman, Golden Lake, Summit Center and Nashotah Mission, in Summit; Ottawa, in Ottawa; Eagle, in Eagle; Mukwonago, in Mukwonago; Genesee, North Prairie Station and Genesee Depot, in Genesee; Delafield, in Delafield; Hartland, Stone Bank, North Lake, Monches and Merton, in Merton; Sussex, in Lisbon; Pewaukee and Duplainville, in Pewaukee; Vernon, Big Bend and Dodge's Corners, in Vernon; Durham Hill, Tess Corners and Muskego Center in Muskego; Prospect Hill and New Berlin, in New Berlin; Brookfield, Elm Grove, Brookfield Junction, Butler (on the line between Milwaukee and Waukesha Counties) and Marcy, in Brookfield; Menomonee Falls and Fussville, in Menomonee.

There are now thirty-seven post offices in the county, and there was but one in 1837. David Jackson, the first Postmaster, carried or sent the mail to Milwaukee once each week, if there was any to send, and on his return brought back whatever mail there was directed to the only office in the county. Now the county sends and receives more than one hundred mail bags per day. If there is anything astonishing in the present century it is the perfectness of the facilities for handling mail, transmitting intelligence in all forms with wonderful speed and almost absolutely unerring accuracy. Not only is information sent, but money and numberless small articles—and never with loss to the sender—are transmitted to all portions of what, in the modern sense, is the civilized world. All the business connected with the transmission of mails is in the hands of the Government; not as a means of revenue—for its Post Office Department annually costs much more than it brings in—but that the public may be equally well served in all places, whether the community be rich or poor, large or small.

WAUKESHA COUNTY NEWSPAPERS.

Archimedes discovered a lever which would move the world, if he only had whereon to place his fulcrum. When the day of modern newspapers came, centuries after Archimedes had turned to dust, there appeared the lever, the fulcrum and the place whereon to stand to move the world. For good or for evil the influence of newspapers is felt everywhere; and it is generally for good, because, being always before and depending upon the public, anything wrong or antagonistic to the best interests of the people, in any publication, always results disastrously to itself.

Waukesha County has always been blessed with newspapers of more than ordinary honesty, ability, influence and respectability. The general intelligence and prosperity of a community may be fairly measured by the character of the newspapers published therein, and the liberality with which they are supported. An intelligent, thrifty and enterprising community demands newspapers of the same attributes, and sooner or later that demand is always supplied. Waukesha County has not been in advance of her newspapers, from the days of the first American Freeman, down to the present publications, and possibly has not been up to them in liberality and enterprise. The county had very good local newspapers before she had many schoolhouses, churches or many inhabitants to support them. They have kept fully up to an excellent standard ever since; always praising and pointing out to the world, without money or price, the advantages of soil, health, climate, location, growth, society, education, culture and enterprise of the place; inciting new improvements and enterprises, where they did not already exist, and wielding, in the case of one or two of them at least, a strong influence in shaping political and State, as well as local, affairs. They have, therefore, played a very important part in the development and growth of the locality and the State, and the best history would rightly be considered far from complete if it contained no accounts of the various newspaper publications of the county.

Waukesha County is particularly prosperous and famous as a summer resort. Her position in this respect would have been far less advanced had it not been for the aid received from her newspapers, which are always eager to say a good word for the community where they are published. It is hardly necessary to except the schools and the churches in pointing out that the most powerful and influential agents in the civilization, advancement, history, public welfare, growth, prominence and prosperity of any community, is its cordon of newspapers. Their labors are unceasing, their efforts tireless. They have always a paragraph for the climate, location, soil, inhabitants, schools, churches, manufactories and natural advantages, thus attracting continually new settlers and increased capital. If the public stood by the newspapers as the newspapers have ever stood by the public, editors and publishers would be as forehanded as any other business class, instead of dying early and poor, which is very frequently the case. But Waukesha has done tolerably well by her newspapers, for most of them are more than ordinarily prosperous. But they should be rich, as to their unceasing praise of the locality as a summer resort and desirable location for the sick, more than to all things else combined, does it owe its present wide notoriety and prosperity.

First Newspaper.—The first newspaper not only in the village of Waukesha, but in what is now the county, was the American Freeman. The material on which the Wisconsin Enquirer, the first paper published in Madison, was printed, was taken to Milwaukee and used by C. C. Sholes to publish the Milwaukee Democrat, which he began in 1843. He continued his paper for six months, and becoming dissatisfied with the position of the Democratic party on the slavery question, changed its name to the American Freeman, and espoused the cause and principles of the Liberty party, then just beginning to attract public attention. A few months—just twenty-eight weeks—sufficed to demonstrate to Mr. Sholes that Milwaukee would not support an anti-slavery publication, so a stock company, consisting of the friends of the Anti-slavery cause everywhere in the State, but mostly at Waukesha, was formed, and the paper moved to Waukesha, then Prarieville, in September, 1844, where the Anti-slavery doctrines more strongly prevailed. To be more particular, Mr. Sholes sold his entire newspaper outfit to the Territorial Liberty Association, and entered into a contract to publish the Freeman at Waukesha during the next three years, solely in the interest of the Abolition party. The Executive Committee of the Liberty Association leased the printing material to Mr. Sholes for the purpose mentioned. The property of the association was divided into equal shares, and each member subscribed and paid for as much as he could afford of this stock. In August, 1844, when the Freeman was purchased of Mr. Sholes, the Liberty Association publishing stock was held and owned by the following persons :

Milwaukee—Edward D. Holton, David McDougal, E. Cramer, J. R. DeReimer, John Ogden, J. J. Miter, Mr. Eggleston, Asahel Finch, Jr., R. N. Kimball, J. G. Kendall.

Prairieville—V. Tichenor, W. D. Bacon, Thomas Brown, George Hawley, T. H. Olin, N. Clinton, H. N. Davis, J. McNeil, S. Hinman, E. D. Clinton, Nelson Olin, S. R. Manning, B. Douglass, G. Wright, W. S. Barnard, Daniel Chandler, Edward Manning, W. Morley.

Pewaukee—David Miller, J. H. Waterman, H. C. Waterman, A. J. Palmer, A. Clark.

Beloit—Benjamin Brown, Rev. S. Peet, D. Cleary.

Southport—Charles Durkee, R. B. Waldo, Hohns & Branch, William Lay, S. Hall, R. H. Deming, Charles Clement, T. Newell, Rev. Mr. Seward, J. B. Tillson, John C. Hohns, A. P. Wightman.

Racine—Jacob Ly Brand, S. N. Smith.

Burlington—E. G. Dyer, R. C. Brown, O. Perkins, John Aitken, C. P. Barnes, P. M. Perkins, E. Perkins & Son, John Bacon.

Wauwatosa—E. D. Underwood, Richard Gilbert.

Aztalan—J. F. Ostrander.

Lisbon—S. Dougherty, A. Nottingham.

Salem—Lemuel Booth, D. C. Sanborn, W. Wagoner, H. C. Wain, W. Munson.

Brookfield—Moore Spears, J. L. Irwin.

Caledonia—Ansel Briggs.

Shares were $5, and certificates of stock were issued to all stockholders on payment of the same.

New shares were sold as fast as the men interested could get the necessary funds. In February, 1845, forty-three shares were sold, and so on at subsequent Liberty meetings.

Mr. Sholes continued as editor about one year, and in 1845 Rev. Ichabod Codding became editor. Although the paper eked out a precarious existence, occasionally levying upon its friends for the support that was absolutely necessary to keep its head above water, it never wavered from its strong Anti-slavery principles, urging their adoption with a vigor, faithfulness and ability that made its influence felt wherever it was perused. Finally, C. C. Olin, still a resident of Waukesha, became possessed of a majority of the stock, and ultimately the whole of it. On the 3d of November, 1846, T. D. Plumb became C. C. Olin's partner in the publication of the paper, that date beginning the first number of Volume III. Just one month later, Ichabod Codding bought out Plumb, the publishers being Olin & Codding. On the 18th of January, 1847, Mr. Codding withdrew from the firm and C. C. Olin became sole proprietor. In April appeared an article congratulating the readers of the Freeman that "henceforth Sherman M. Booth, of New Haven, Conn., a graduate of Yale College, and who, with I. Codding, had edited the Christian Freeman, will have charge of the editorial department of the paper. He (Booth) has been a Liberty man always, and an Abolitionist twelve or fifteen years."

On the 24th of May, the Freeman was issued from Milwaukee, and July 19, 1848, the firm of Olin & Booth was changed to Codding & Booth. The latter was noted afterward as the rescuer of Joshua Glover, an alleged escaped slave, and the former as the most eloquent and powerful speaker in the whole Northwest. The paper was published, while at Waukesha, in the third story of what is now Blair's stone machine-shop, then owned by its builder, W. D. Bacon. Mr. Olin and Mr. Codding went about the country together in the interest of their paper and the Anti-slavery cause, the latter rousing the people by his wonderful oratory, and the other singing Antislavery songs and taking subscriptions. It was the ablest paper in the great Northwest, and was constantly assailed in the most virulent manner by the pro-slaveryites, North and South. Mr. Codding is dead; Mr. Booth is in Washington; Mr. Olin is a real-estate and insurance agent in Waukesha; C. C. Sholes is feeble with age, and a large number of the Freeman's early shareholders are dead.

While at Waukesha, the Anti-slaveryite residents of the vicinity were obliged to board the type-setters and employes of the Freeman, its income not being sufficient to even pay their board-bills, which, in those days, were small as compared to the present. But that its employes were compelled to live upon the charity of the people was of little consequence; the paper must be published, as the cause it advocated with such eloquence, bravery and ability as is rare even in this advanced newspaper age, would be without means or channel through which to reach the people, if it should suspend.

Waukesha Advocate.—This paper, begun after the bill to divide Milwaukee County passed the Legislature, was the liveliest newspaper ever published in Waukesha County. It was printed on the material in the American Freeman office at Waukesha, and was published just as fast as possible—not daily, but oftener than once a week. It was continued until after Milwaukee had been cleft, and sixteen of her towns erected into the county of Waukesha. Old settlers still keep copies of this paper as specimens of early red-hot journalism.

Waukesha Democrat.—The first purely local paper Waukesha County ever had, started as a business venture, and with an idea of permanency, was the Democrat, founded by George Hyer July 20, 1848. Mr. Hyer was a man of ability and came with an experience in the publishing business extending over a period of fifteen years. His paper was Democratic in politics, and was able, eloquent and dignified rather than radical or rabid. Although Mr. Hyer made the paper pay as well as any one could, it was not a great financial success, though a large share of the people then living in the county, who were able to do so, patronized it. He sold the office in July, 1851, to Henry D. Barron, and gave up possession in August. Mr. Hyer was one of the ablest editors in Wisconsin, and, while he resided in Waukesha, did all he could for the county. Mr. Barron continued the Democrat until 1853, when he changed it to the Chronotype.

The first number of the Democrat under Mr. Hyer, supported Cass and Butler for President and Vice President, but he said: "When the principles of the Wilmot Proviso shall divide the North and South, as it will probably soon do, we shall take that stand which a free and liberal education has inculcated in the mind of every citizen of the Free States."

Waukesha Chronotype.—In August, 1851, the Democrat was sold to H. D. Barron, who changed its name to the Chronotype. The history of the paper is told in the following letter from Henry D. Barron, now a resident of St. Croix Falls, Wis.:

"There was to me, in boyhood, a charm and attraction about type and press that no other occupation, profession or business presented. There was a grand, great mystery there that created an awe, a curiosity that is yet fresh in memory. I remember well slipping into printing offices on my way to and from school, to see type gathered by nimble fingers from case to stick, and at times to see the old hand press strike off the Balston Spa Gazette, the Saratoga Sentinel, in Eastern New York, and after that the Cayuga Patriot and Cayuga Tocsin, in Western New York. It seemed to me that my dream of ambition would be full when I could become a printer and an editor. And had not Franklin, who was sage, philosopher and patriot of the New World, and the associate of kings and scholars in the Old World, been a printer's apprentice? I drifted to the type-case and press at the age of fourteen. When I came to Wisconsin, newspapers were few, and newspaper publishers had to struggle for an existence. I succeeded in the purchase of a press at Waukesha in this State, twenty-five years ago. I picked up my type and worked press, because I preferred it to all else, and from August, 1851, to June, 1857, at Waukesha, in this State, tried to be a respectable and well-behaved printer and editor.

"I came to Waukesha when I was nineteen years of age, with Edward H. Baxter, an Englishman, and a printer by trade. He was about twenty-five years old. I had worked at printing about three years, and read law at Auburn, N. Y., and at the law school at Balston Spa, in that State. We started together from Auburn for Wisconsin, and Wisconsin only, to purchase or establish a newspaper. We found a split in the Democratic party at Waukesha, and dissatisfaction with George Hyer, the editor and proprietor of the Waukesha Democrat, upon the part of our faction. After a week's negotiation, we bought him out in the month of August, 1851. We paid him $600 (as much as $1,200 now), for old type, old press and material worth, in all, about $200. The balance of the $600, I suppose, was for 'good will' and subscriptions due, but never collected, a failure which was not his fault. Silas Chapman, of Milwaukee, 'trusted' us for some new type. In three months, Mr. Baxter, a most changeable man, got weary, and I bought him out 'on time,' and afterward paid for his half out of the proceeds of the office. The $600 paid Hyer exhausted the amount we brought with us—all we had in the world—the proceeds of work at the type-case and press.

"The only paper preceding this Democrat was the Freeman, the old type of which came to us from Mr. Hyer. In 1853, I was appointed Postmaster at Waukesha by President Pierce, and changed the name of the Democrat to that of Chronotype—the name of a radical paper that I admired very much, though I was a Democrat, once published in Boston by Elizur Wright. In 1857, I think, 'falling out' with 'Barstow and the balance'—not agreeing with the dictatorial spirit of the friends of Barstow, I proposed a sale to them of the paper. They purchased it, paying me, I think, $1,200. In the mean time, a paper had been established in Waukesha, called the Waukesha Independent Press, by C. C. White and I. M. Bean, to the columns of which the boy, 'Cush Davis,' now 'ex-Gov. Davis,' of Minnesota, contributed. Dominick Casey followed the Press with a paper called the Waukesha Democrat. It was bitterly personal.

"When we purchased of Hyer, the Democrat was located in a wooden, cheap building, owned by J. M. Hurlbut, brother of E. Hurlbut, of Oconomowoc, over his paint-shop, next to the stone drug store of Zerrye Hatch, near Barker's Hotel. I afterward moved it into Cutler's building, over the post office, opposite Birchard, Newton & Totton's store. (My brother-in-law, Capt. Andrew G. Bennett, had charge of the post office for me, as clerk.)

"The foregoing contains much that will be, no doubt, of no value. I have written it down as occurring to me."

Waukesha County Herald.—This paper is not remembered with feelings of pleasure by its projectors and managers. The Whigs of the county thought they needed an organ, and they banded together for the purchase of material necessary in publishing a paper. Stock was taken at $10 per share, and a person named Ezekiel Stoddard was engaged to do the editing and printing. A few prominent men, among them Talbot C. Dousman, were the responsible officers of the concern. The paper had been published only a short time when all at once, editor, presses and type were missing. Where either of them were might have always remained a mystery if Andrew E. Elmore, while on the way to Madison with a reprieve for David Bonham, the murderer of Keene, had not, in poking about on a cold night in the fall of 1845, for some straw, found the type concealed in a barn in Waukesha Village. This material thus found, a few years later, went into A. F. Pratt's first printing office. The debts contracted by the Herald were sued and the Sheriff collected them, with costs, of Mr. Dousman and one or two others. They have never since entered into the publishing business on the joint-stock plan.

Independent Press.—This paper, which was short-lived and devoted wholly to the local interests at Waukesha, was started in 1853, by C. C. White and Sidney A. Bean. It was edited in the most elegant and finished literary style, as its editors and contributors were gentlemen of ability and polish. Its life was short, lasting hardly a single year. The last number was issued in March, 1854, after which the material was bought by Dominick Casey.

Waukesha Republican.—This was the first Republican newspaper printed in Waukesha County. It was started August 6, 1856, by W. D. Bacon, at Waukesha, as a county campaign paper. He, as Chairman of the Republican County Committee, continued its publication until the middle of November, of that year. The subscription list was, some time later, given to Curtis & Emmerson, who continued the paper under the same name. The Republican was an exceedingly good newspaper, but never paid its publishers any large dividends. Finally, early in 1859; the office outfit was sold under chattel mortgage to the Milwaukee type foundry. This mortgage took with it the last remains of at least three different papers which had preceded it.

Waukesha Plaindealer.—During many years, the Plaindealer was one of the excellent, as well as one of the leading, representatives of the fearless, wide-awake and withal able, Western weekly newspapers. It was the Democratic child of a Democratic father. It was begun by A. F. Pratt and lived but a short time after his head and hand had forever ceased to guide it. The first number, with the motto, "Hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may," was issued in July, 1854, on the old Herald material. It took at once a leading part in politics, and never failed to have something to say upon every subject before the people, and soon had a large circulation. In the spring of 1856, the Plaindealer office, with its entire contents—files, type and valuable papers—was destroyed by fire. The publication of the paper was not then revived, Mr. Pratt entering into other business, and, soon after the breaking-out of the Rebellion, entering the army. At the close of the war, he again began the publication of the Plaindealer, issuing the first number July 25, 1865. It was a seven-column folio, and as spicy a sheet as A. F. Pratt could make it. His opening announcement was this:

"The proper object of a newspaper is to disseminate information as to all matters of local and public interest, to the end that the people may more fully appreciate their relations to their neighbors, and to the government under which they live.

"Not forgetting this general duty, it shall be our chief purpose, in publishing the Plaindealer, to advance the local interests of Waukesha County, and, to the full extent of our influence as a journalist, contribute to the prosperity of all its citizens, regardless of partisan and religious distinctions. In this manner, we hope to make our paper an acceptable visitor at every family fireside, and to insure for it the generous patronage and active friendship of every good citizen.

"We profess no blind allegiance to any political party, but it would be impossible, as well as a positive disregard of duty, to wholly avoid a fair and candid discussion of the many political questions now prominent in the public mind. But in doing this, we shall eulogize no man unless we think him worthy of the confidence of the people, and we shall support no measure which we do not believe conducive to the public good. Slavery to party and the passions of party are the fruitful source of many of the gigantic evils which have afflicted the country during the past five years. In view of the experience of the past, men should now act honestly, candidly and wisely. If the bitter and destructive war through which we have passed has not taught us this lesson, we have learned nothing of which we can boast.

"Through the undaunted bravery and invincible courage of our citizen soldiery, the armed enemies of the Government have been crushed and the Union of our fathers is preserved. It remains to us now to defend that Government from the future dangers with which partisan factions may threaten it, to invigorate with new life the restored form of the old Union, and to cultivate that spirit of fraternity and concord among the American people which furnishes the only certain guarantee of a permanent and prosperous peace. We believe such to be the present object of the President of the United States [Andrew Johnson], and so long as that faith is sustained by his future actions, we shall feel it our duty to plead his cause, and we are confident that all patriotic men of every party will approve this determination.

"We have a habit of sometimes saying what we think bluntly. We believe the truth should be told on all occasions with bluntness of speech, and this is the custom of the honest advocates of truth the world over. We may not abandon this habit now, but if we should unfortunately offend any of our readers in this particular, while conducting the Plaindealer, we bespeak their patience, and trust they will attribute it to our sincerity in the advocacy of our own opinions, and not to any design on our part to offend those who may honestly differ with us as to the current questions of the day."

Mr Pratt did, as he anticipated, speak the truth bluntly, and his opposition to the Republican party was always vigorous. The new Plaindealer reached a greater circulation, and was a more profitable concern than the old one, which prestige was retained until Mr. Pratt's death in 1874. It was continued for a time by the administrator, and then sold to parties who disposed of the material and discontinued the paper, its good will, subscription list and appurtenances falling to the possession of the present Waukesha Democrat, in 1876.

Waukesha County Democrat.—This paper, as it exists to-day, is not, and never was, the successor, legitimately, of the first local paper in the county, started by George Hyer, under the same name. Its first material was that on which C. C. White and S. A. Bean printed the Independent Press, a Whig paper. Late in March, 1854, they sold to Dominick Casey and P. H. Carney, who at once began the publication of a thrifty, straight-out Democratic newspaper. Mr. Carney had but little to do with the paper until 1856, when he became sole editor and publisher, and during the next ten years it was the only permanent Democratic newspaper in the county. In 1865, Mr. Carney sold the Democrat to J. B. Hunt, since deceased, who very shortly afterward sold to Alexander F. Pratt. It then became the Plaindealer, and there was no Democrat published until January, 1872, when E. L. Spencer and J. A. Gaynor were induced by a large faction of the Democratic party which did not like the Plaindealer, to start a new paper under the old name of Waukesha County Democrat, which they did. It was a successful newspaper from the beginning, and has always maintained a leading position among the Democratic weeklies of the State. In 1874, Mr. Gaynor sold his interest in the establishment to Mr. Spencer, who continued to be editor and proprietor, purchasing, in 1876, all the material, subscription list and good will of the Plaindealer. The valuable portions of the two were used to make a better office and publish a better paper, while the balance was disposed of to the type foundries. Very early in 1877, the Democrat passed from Mr. Spencer to P. H. Carney, who had been its editor, in earlier days, during about a dozen years. He was thereafter editor and proprietor until April, 1879, when F. A. Eastman, ex-Postmaster of Chicago, and a writer of rare culture and ability, purchased the establishment and became, and continues to be, sole editor and proprietor. The paper is clean, dignified and scholarly; a means of instruction as well as a medium for the dissemination of news. It deals briefly but ably with national and State affairs, devoting its attention and space mainly to local matters. The theory of its editor is that a local newspaper should do all within its power to advance the interests of the locality in which it is published, believing that the two are mutually dependent upon each other for prosperity. The Democrat is a nine-column folio newspaper; published every Saturday at $2 per annum, with the usual deduction of 50 cents for advance payment. Its motto is: "Devoted to Democratic principles and to the local interests of all the people."

Waukesha Freeman.—The first number of the Waukesha Freeman was published on March 29, 1859, as a seven-column folio, by M. Cullaton, who had, during the preceding year, disposed of his interest in the Beaver Dam Citizen, with the intention of leaving the newspaper business entirely. His predilections toward journalism, however, induced him to return to the field and start a paper at Waukesha—occupying rooms for that purpose in Aitkins' Block, whence he removed to Barnes' Block, now owned by Charles Cork, August 7. He furnished a good newspaper during the six months of his management of the Freeman. On the 27th of September, he published his valedictory, having disposed of the journal to L. B. Wright. The last-named gentleman was not a fiery writer, but a cool, industrious business man, with a good knowledge of printing. He gave his patrons the news in readable shape, was careful and prudent, and usually found on the right side of all public questions coming before the people during his editorial administration. April 7, 1863, Mr. Wright removed his office from the Barnes Block to the Alexander Block (now a part of the Opera House Block), which had just been completed. He added to the printing facilities of the office from time to time, enlarged the paper to an eight-column folio and accumulated money, investing it in real estate, with the intention of retiring from business as soon as practicable. In pursuance of this purpose, he sold a half-interest in the paper to T. B. Reid, now United States Consul at Funchal, Madeira Islands, in November 1867, and in November, 1868, he disposed of his remaining interest to Nicholas Smith, the present editor of the Janesville Gazette. The paper was conducted by this firm until August 18, 1869, when Mr. Reid retired and left Mr. Smith as the sole proprietor and editor. In May, 1870, Mr. Smith disposed of a half-interest to T. W. Haight, who purchased the remaining half a few weeks later, and removed the establishment to Robinson's Block. During the same year, the paper was enlarged to a seven-column quarto, and a new Fairhaven press, the first power press brought to the county, was made to take the place of the old Washington hand-press that had done duty since the founding of the paper. New type and a new job press were also added. The editorial management of the Freeman at this time was more marked for the ability exhibited than at any previous date, while the business was very prosperous. While editor of the Freeman, Mr. Haight did a great deal to acquaint the citizens with the geology of the locality, and briefly with its history. On the 1st of February, 1872, H. M. Youmans, the present proprietor, purchased a half-interest in the Freeman, and, shortly after, the publication office was changed to the Ætna Block. January 1, 1874, the size of the paper was changed to a seven-column folio, accompanied by a reduction in price from $2 to $1.50 a year.

Messrs. Haight & Youmans published the Freeman for two years and eight months, the first-named member of the firm taking charge of the publication and editorial work, and the latter superintending the mechanical department. This arrangement was continued until September 24, 1874, when Mr. Haight sold his interest to his partner, although he has since been a frequent contributor to its editorial and local columns.

On January 1, 1875, the Freeman was enlarged to eight columns to the page, was supplied with a new dress of type, and made to pay largely during the year, so that early in 1876 the proprietor was enabled to add to the facilities of the office, a new Cottrell & Babcock cylinder press, a large-sized job press, together with steam power, all of which had been found necessary in order to keep pace with the largely increased demands upon the business, caused principally by a wonderful growth in the mineral-water trade of Waukesha. The intervening time up to 1879 witnessed an increase of patronage and prosperity beyond that usually enjoyed by country newspapers, being such at the opening of the above-mentioned year, that Mr. Youmans determined to erect a building for the accommodation of his business. Accordingly, a lot 20x66 feet in the business center of the village, on Grand avenue, was purchased for $800. Early in March ground was broken, and on June 1, 1879, the new building, a handsome brick structure, 20x60 feet, was occupied. Simultaneously with the occupation of the new office the form of the paper was changed to a quarto, six columns to the page, and an entire new outfit of type was supplied. Following the large expenditure was an increase of business, which is gradually extending, accompanied by a corresponding increase of influence among the best classes of citizens in Waukesha County. The Freeman has ever been prominent in the discussion of all subjects of local importance, and has constantly labored for the advancement of the best interests of society; especially has it been an important factor in the furtherance of the summer resort interests of the entire county, at all times devoting space to the publication of such matters as are likely to attract the attention of health and pleasure seekers.

The Freeman was established as a Republican journal, the principles of that party being at all times maintained, though censure has been unsparingly bestowed upon its representatives whenever facts warranted it, or justice demanded it. By this course it has secured that respect which is ever due to a determined adherence to principle and right. In this paper the name of the American Freeman, the first newspaper in the county, is perpetuated.

Oconomowoc Free Press, Badger, La Belle Mirror, and Times.—It may be always safely predicted of a town, that when its papers cease to flourish, the place ceases to grow to any material extent not only, but falls into a sort of rut in opinion and development, from which, too often, it never diverges. Fortunately for Oconomowoc, its founder and a majority of its first settlers were so irrepressible, that its future was insured from the first. Year after year, in the rapid march of their progress, brought successive improvements until at last a want arose that only the newspaper could satisfy. No sooner was this want apparent than there were willing hands, purses and brains ready to supply the necessity. Accordingly, during the first week of October, 1858, the first paper, the Oconomowoc Free Press, was established and published by D. W. Small and John S. Rockwell, as editors and proprietors. A Washington hand-press, a small job press and other furniture made throughout as complete a newspaper office as was then generally found, and costing about $1,400; the office was in a frame building that stood nearly opposite the mill, on the ground where Mr. Lalerberg subsequently built his first hardware store. They had two printers, Abram Small and William Messenger. The politics of the paper were then Democratic, but the chief object which the publishers had in view was the promotion of the general interest of the village without regard to parties or party differences; and that they did much in this direction may be readily believed, for in a very few years after this it began to be noised abroad that Oconomowoc was a splendid place for fine scenery and rare fishing and hunting, as well as the needed accessories of excellent water and good climate. After running the paper for a time, Messrs. Small & Rockwell leased the establishment to D. S. Curtis, who continued to publish the paper until the great Rebellion demanded men, then he laid aside his "pencil and stick" for a position among the boys in blue. From 1862 until 1866 the village had no paper. During that year, the office was purchased of Small & Rockwell by Thomas Reid, who had his office in the old oil-mill building. He bought the whole outfit for $500. The paper, its name having been changed to the Badger State, was conducted by Reid & Brother until about 1867, when it passed into the hands of Dr. E. J. Benjamin. It had been enlarged and the politics changed from Democratic to Republican. Benjamin sold the paper and good will of the business to Lawren Edwards & Co., after running it until 1869. Edwards & Co. changed the name of the publication to the La Belle Mirror. Very soon after they sold to Alexander McGregor and D. H. Sumner, the latter assuming editorial control for a short time. He was succeeded in the management of the paper by Mr. McGregor, continuing its publication until 1870.

In August, 1870, Ashley D. Harger purchased the Mirror and published his first number on the 6th inst. of the latter month. In his salutatory he said, among many other beautifully worded sentiments and expressed intentions: "In politics we bid for the Republican party, believe in the men and measures that crushed the Rebellion and saved the Government. As a consequence, we shall be guided and governed politically by the party we represent, and support their nominations to the best of our ability." How well he did this afterward appears. August 31, the paper appeared under a new name, having fairly run the gamut of different titles. It was now called the Oconomowoc Times, and continued to be published under that title until it subsided.

When Mr. Harger took charge of the paper, it was mortgaged for $800, which liability he assumed. He went to work with a will and by his industry, perseverance and eminently good qualifications as an editor, won hosts of friends from the start, and soon wielded an influence throughout the surrounding country of no small magnitude. He apparently was not satisfied to wait patiently for the reward of industry, for, after slashing his party opponents in a masterly manner, suddenly, about the opening of the Greeley campaign, to the surprise of a majority of his patrons, the Times turned and began working with might and main the other way. Notwithstanding this change, at such a time, Mr. Harger evidently prospered. Six or eight prominent Democrats from various parts of the county, subscribed the $800 which Mr. Harger owed on the institution, and paid off the debt gratis. From this on the Times was Democratic, and for a time increased in circulation very rapidly. He had at one time six men and a foreman working hard to do the business. Suddenly a loved child died; to drown his grief he took to drinking, then his foreman died, and from that time everything went at "sixes and sevens." His friends came to the rescue; a fund was voted by the town authorities to pay him for nominal printing, but to no purpose. Tide had turned and its flow could not be changed. After a brief but unfortunate career the Times was suspended, and Mr. Harger moved first to Watertown and then to Milwaukee. He was one of the most brilliant newspaper writers Waukesha County ever had.

Oconomowoc Local.—On the 4th of September, 1874, the first number of the Oconomowoc Local was issued, with F. W. Coon and A. C. Macrorie, publishers. Mr. Coon was fresh from college, the latter a practical printer; and, coupling the enterprise of these two young men, a newspaper was produced, that at once grew into public favor and secured a handsome patronage. In the following summer, Mr. Macrorie withdrew from the paper, and the present editor has conducted it in the capacity of both editor and proprietor since that time. The Local was first issued as an Independent paper, but in the fall of 1875 it espoused the cause of Republicanism, which it has since sturdily adhered to. It has a good advertising patronage, and is one of the prosperous newspapers in the county. The subscription price is $1.50 per year, in advance, and advertising rates reasonable. A good job office is now in connection with the paper, and the proprietor prides himself upon turning out artistic work. The newspaper is issued each Friday morning during the year. It is an eight-column folio, and the only Republican paper in the north and northwest portion of the county, and has an ample field in which to labor.

Wisconsin Free Press.—This is one of the influential, esteemed and well-patronized papers of the county; has led, for a paper of its age, a very checkered career as well; having been the victim of several tag and rag newspaper bobtails. The paper dates its initial number from May 15, 1875, and is indebted to C. C. Bowsfield, now a partner in the Milwaukee Evening Chronicle, as its founder. The first paper came before the public at a very inauspicious time, as the Oconomowoc Times, with Ashley D. Hager as editor, was in a flourishing condition, and the Oconomowoc Local had been established a little over ten months, and was also doing a fair business. The pertinent question was asked, what can Bowsfield do with his prodigious semi-weekly infant. Mr. B. made, as he termed it, an "ideal paper," and a nine-column, entirely home-manufactured, semi-weekly folio country newspaper was the result. The attempt was a bold one, and deserving of a better fate than befell it, for in the future, as the sequel proves, Mr. Bowsfield lost everything he had, and more.

In the salutatory, a brief summary of which is given, it is announced that the paper shall be devoted to the dissemination of local and general news and choice literature.

Its chief aim shall be the prosperity of the young city. That, although the editor expects to encounter incredulity and discouragements, nevertheless he launches out fearlessly, and shall publish, twice a week, nothing but valuable intelligence. He has an ideal which he intends now to illustrate, and he would rather make an ignominious failure than to publish a single number that the people would be ashamed of.

The dignity of the profession of journalism shall be maintained, in the columns that sparkle with independence, life, and spice.

In the discussion of all social and political questions, which come before the public, he shall take an independent and conscientious course, aloof from the behests, or dictates, of any man or party, and endeavor, at all times, to promote purity in legislation, the prosperity of all practical systems of education, and a higher standard of morality in our common life.

Mr. Bowsfield continued to issue the paper for two or more months, but at last the time came when, if he would avoid a collapse, he must get help. He sought help, which he obtained from Messrs. E. Hurlbut, C. M. Smith, and Chauncey L. Innis, who signed a note with him, secured by mortgage on his stock and printing fixtures, to obtain the money required, some $300. These gentlemen did this, not only from a feeling of personal interest, which the young man had aroused in his favor, but because they were public spirited, believing it would be a good thing for the city and community at large, to keep the paper running.

Mr. Bowsfield, with the money borrowed, managed to stem the tide for a time, but soon found himself in the same dilemma in which he had been before, and with less prospect of final success. Again he went to Mr. Hurlbut for funds. The money was advanced, but with some misgivings, for it certainly seemed to him that nothing less than a miracle could now save the institution from ruin. But he was determined that the young man should have another chance, whatever might be the result. After this, Mr. Bowsfield formed a partnership with R. B. Rice, a practical printer, who had been connected with the Commercial Times of Milwaukee. On the 14th day of August, 1875, one day less than three months from the time of starting, the first paper bearing the names of Bowsfield & Rice as associate editors and proprietors, was issued, reduced to an eight-column paper, but to be still published twice a week. In the salutatory it was announced, somewhat to the surprise of a portion of the readers, and to the gratification of the remainder, that "The Free Press will now take its place in the ranks of the Democratic Reform party of Wisconsin."

The partnership had not gone on long, before Mr. Bowsfield discovered that he had not made a desirable acquisition, and he determined to give up the ship, which he did, leaving Mr. Rice in command.

Wednesday, October 6, R. B. Rice announced that the management of the paper had been taken by him, and would be maintained on the same platform. Mr. Hurlbut consented, being in hopes that he might get out of his newspaper interest. Moreover, the Presidential canvass was then brewing, and the Democratic party wanted an organ that would maintain the claims of their candidates. Mr. Rice was to continue the paper through the canvass, as it had been, in size and politics. He went on with the paper from this time until the following spring; but not having any money, was obliged to get help several times to pay for stock. This money came from the same source as the other. The last paper which Mr. Rice issued was on April 15, 1876, when, without warning, he went to Waukesha, and began working on the Plaindealer. Mr. Hurlbut, who was away at the time, returned and consulted with Mr. C. M. Smith, who had a tangible interest in the concern, and they decided that Mr. Smith should assume management. He conducted the paper from April 22 until July 8, 1876, at a loss of $150. He declares if "some one had not come along just at this time, and relieved him, he believes he would have pitched the entire institution out of doors." Charles A. Feistcorn, who claimed to have money from the sale of a paper in Blue Island, Ill., expressed a willingness to buy the Free Press, and finally, through Mr. Bowsfield, did contract for it. He took charge in July, 1876, but was not allowed to publish the paper as his until he had paid something on it. Mr. F. changed his tactics, by collecting all of the old outstanding bills, and adding to the list of advance paying subscribers, as largely as possible, and on September 20, while Mr. Hurlbut was away, determined upon a withdrawal of his forces. Mr. Hurlbut has not seen him since, nor the money collected for the paper. On Wednesday, the day following Mr. F.'s departure, Mr. Hurlbut returned, to find several disconsolate workmen about his office, wondering what was going to happen next. Said he, "Boys, go to the office, I'm going to run the paper." Just then Thomas Spence, former editor of the Waukesha Democrat, came in, and on invitation went to the office, and looked over the fixtures and stock, with Mr. Hurlbut, which they found entirely at sixes and sevens. Mr. Spence explained what was necessary to be done, and Mr. Hurlbut started for Chicago that afternoon, without saying a word to his townsmen about the trouble, and returned with a large stock of necessary articles the next day. The next Saturday, the paper appeared as usual, with the following salutatory address to the citizens, under the title "Absconded."

"Charles A. Feistcorn, late of this city, and former manager of the Free Press, having taken French leave for parts to us unknown, it becomes necessary for some one to take charge of the paper, who has a more substantial interest in its success than the mere dollars and cents realized from its publication from week to week. Consequently, hereafter the paper will be managed and controlled by us. We shall endeavor to act in perfect good faith with all the patrons of the paper, and contract no debts but which we are able and willing to pay.

The Free Press, as heretofore, will be a consistent Democratic Reform paper, with "no friends to reward nor enemies to punish;" but truth and justice shall be its guide in all things. Everything that will tend to advance the welfare and prosperity of this city, county, State and nation will find a faithful advocate in us. Friends, take the paper, read it, and give it a fair trial; then if you are not satisfied with it—stop it.

ENWIN HURLBUT.

The "barn door," as the paper was at first called, was at last hung on a substantial hinge, and the people knew it; for when in the afternoon Mr. H. started out with subscription-book in hand there was no lack of subscribers. He worked until 9 o'clock that night, and was rewarded by an addition of 111 names to the before meager list, and from that time, September 27, 1876, until the present, the Free Press has gained friends and influence. Mr. Hurlbut also reduced the price of the paper at that time to $1.50 from $3, per year. The office was also transferred from the old place, in C. M. Smith's block, to its present place, and throughout, a new order of things was instituted. Some time ago, an improved Fairhaven press costing $1,000 was purchased, the old Washington hand-press being too small for the largely increased business. Also, as have been needed at different times, the best appliances for labor saving and job printing have been added, until the office is now thoroughly equipped.

Pewaukee Standard.—As Pewaukee and vicinity began to become famous as a summer resort, with hotels, cottages, fishing grounds, springs and boats to be noticed and patronized, they felt the need of a newspaper. Various inducements were held out to whoever would locate a publication office at that place, which resulted in the founding of the Standard, in 1877, by C. P. Smith. The paper, which was well received in the neighborhood of Pewaukee, was a six-column quarto, "patent on six pages, and Republican in politics. Mr. Smith soon received a good run of job work, and had a larger business than he anticipated. Finally, after the death of his father, he sold the good will and subscription list of the Standard to H. M. Youmans, of the Waukesha Freeman, in May, 1880, and the patrons of the former are served with the latter publication. Mr. Youmans maintains a Pewaukee department in the Freeman, and has an office in that village for the accommodation of advertisers and other patrons of the paper, so that the people of that village, although with a newspaper printed precisely on the ground, are still pretty well served. Mr. Smith now publishes a paper in Minnesota.

FRUIT-GROWING IN WAUKESHA COUNTY.

The first apples ever grown in Waukesha County, except the wild fruit, were probably taken from two trees planted by David Jackson, the first Postmaster in the county, in the village of Waukesha. These trees have long been dead. There were 112,982 apple-trees in orchards in 1879, of which 109,116 were of bearing size. The number of bushels produced was 54,822. Of pear-trees there were 1,684 of bearing size, which produced 1,321 bushels of mature fruit; of grapevines there were 4,418 of bearing size, and 10,642 growing, which produced 1,684 bushels of fruit; of cherry-trees there were 9,654 of bearing size—43,000 in all—which produced 1,112 bushels of fruit. The product of smaller fruits, such as strawberries, raspberries, gooseberries and currants, was about 1,400 bushels for 1879.

Most of the apples and pears were grown in the east tier of towns joining Milwaukee County, which are from eight to eighteen miles distant from Lake Michigan. In the second tier west, some apples and pears were fruited. The third and fourth tiers had but little large fruit; but their grapes and berries were good, and most all the smaller fruits were from those towns. More than one-third of the apple and pear trees are within the towns of Menomonee, Brookfield, New Berlin and Pewaukee. The towns having the least are Ottawa, Summit, Delafield and Genesee, there being less than 12,000 trees for those four towns. Those towns are farther from Lake Michigan, and also have a peculiar soil. It is of the glacial drift more or less, and is not suited everywhere for fruit trees, except where there is more or less clay and a northern slope to the land, which are not on every farm. Yet Waukesha County can and will raise as much fruit as any county in the State, and perhaps as many different varieties as are to be found anywhere in the State. Owing to the great number of varieties, the amount of fruit is less than it should be, because many sorts are not suited to this climate, and will only grow for a time. Whenever we have had a very dry and hot summer or severe, cold winter, or both, old Eastern favorites will get killed, or hurt so they will not fruit any more. Now, if those varieties that are tender would be discarded, and trees substituted that are hardy and will bear well, we could, in a bearing year, furnish nearly 500,000 bushels of apples, besides those required for home use; but that will never be, as there are so many worthless trees always imported to our country, and set out year after year, that nearly one-half the trees growing cannot be counted upon to bear enough to pay for the room they take up, and the time spent to grow them.

A list of apples that have paid, and are hardy and profitable, are Duchess of Oldenburg, Wealthy, Fameuse or Snow, Alexander, for fall and early winter. For summer use Fetofsky, Washington or William's Favorite. For winter, Tolman Sweet, Pewaukee, Golden Russet, Westfield, Seek-no-Further, Ben Davis. This list can be extended, but it is the best-paying list, on as many years' trial as varieties named.

The soils for horticultural purposes are as follows: The east half of Waukesha County, which is in part, red, marly clay soil and limestone loam. A strip of land two to two and one-half miles in width, extends from northeast to southwest, belonging to the kettle range (and is of glacial drift more or less), where all kinds of soil can be found, and where occasionally a very fine orchard could be grown with profit. Grapes and small fruits are at home on those lighter soils. The chief fruit grower of Waukesha County, is George P. Peffer, of Pewaukee, who furnished the two preceding paragraphs. A recent writer said of his fruit farm:

"He has one hundred and thirty-two varieties of apples, many of them on trial, but only twenty to twenty-five of them he recommends as sufficiently hardy for this climate. Among his forty-three varieties of pears, he considers but five of them adapted to this country. He has never lost a tree of the Flemish Beauty, and the Ananas d'Eta varieties, by frost. He is confident they can be raised in this country without any danger of frost. Of his forty different kinds of grapes, he recommends but five for this climate. He has some thirty-three varieties of plums, but warrants from four to five kinds only. He raises his peaches from the seed, and has had remarkable success, having lost but two years out of twenty. His nursery consists of eighteen acres, and contains, besides a well-grown orchard, 35,000 apple-trees, 3,000 pear-trees, 6,000 plum-trees, 10,000 grape-vines, in addition to an almost endless variety of gooseberries, raspberries, strawberries, and all of the hardiest varieties."

WAUKESHA COUNTY THIEF-DETECTIVE SOCIETY.

This association of the property-owners of the county has been a valuable one to all concerned. Before its organization, scarcely a week passed that the newspapers did not contain reports of horses or valuable property being stolen; but since it got into complete working order, thieving has been almost entirely unknown, especially in the neighborhoods where members of the association reside. Alexander F. Pratt, one of the best detectives who lived in this portion of the State, was the founder of the detective society. The first organization was formed in 1865, as the following call will show:

The Executive Committee of the Waukesha County Detective Society (which includes all the officers) will meet at the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court in Waukesha, on Saturday, the 14th inst., at 1 o'clock, P. M., for the purpose of adopting by-laws and rules for the government of the society. It is important that the officers shall all be present, as the success of the society will depend very much upon its by-laws, without which the society is no protection to its members.

WAUKESHA, October 2, 1865.

G. C. PRATT, Secretary.

This did not result in such a complete and permanent organization as was desirable. The following, which is the present constitution, was adopted March 5, 1870:

ARTICLE 1. This organization shall be known as "The Waukesha County Thief-Detective Society."

ART. 2. Its officers shall consist of a President, Treasurer, Secretary, and two additional officers, as an Executive Committee, who shall be elected annually, and hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified.

ART. 3. Any person may become a member of this Society by subscribing to the constitution and by-laws, and paying into the treasury $5.

ART. 4. The officers of the Society, including the Executive Committee, shall constitute an Executive Committee for the transaction of business of the Society, with power to audit accounts and direct generally in all expenditures.

ART. 5. Whenever any horse, mare or gelding of the value of $30 or more, is stolen from any member of the society, it shall be the duty of each member to aid and assist in recovering it and capturing the thief or thieves; but no person shall be allowed pay for such services unless he acted by the advice and authority of the Executive Committee.

ART. 6. The Executive Committee shall have power to assess an equal tax upon all the members of the Society, for the purpose of defraying its expenses, or to pay for stolen property that cannot be recovered, whenever the same will be necessary, but shall never pay more than two-thirds the value of the horse, mare or gelding, which shall have been stolen, nor more than $200 for any one loss. Provided, That to entitle any member to recover compensation for stolen property, every loss must be notified to the President hereof within twenty-four hours after the same shall occur.

ART. 7. The headquarters of this Society shall be kept at the county seat; but whenever twenty-five or more persons join the Society, from any town, except Waukesha, the Executive Committee may appoint a town committee of three, from those members, who shall have all the power within their town of the Executive Committee, except auditing accounts.

ART. 8. It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to keep the funds of the Society in some safe depository, and shall not use or pay out the same for any purpose except upon the order of the Clerk, with the names of a majority of the Executive Committee indorsed thereon, and shall receive such pay for his services as the Executive Committee may direct.

ART. 9. It shall be the duty of the Secretary to record all proceedings of the Society in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, which book shall also contain the constitution and by-laws of the Society and the names of its members, and the Executive Committee may allow him for his services such compensation as they may deem proper.

ART. 10. The annual meeting of the Society shall be held at the court house on the second Monday in December, of each year, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and each member shall be entitled to a vote.

ART. 11. Special meetings of this Society may be held at any time whenever ordered by a majority of the Executive Committee, by giving notice in a newspaper published in Waukesha.

ART. 12. This constitution and by-laws may be amended by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any regular meeting of the Society.

In 1870, A. F. Pratt, founder of the society, wrote as follows in his paper, the Plain-dealer: "Many of our farmers are not aware of the fact that we have a well organized and efficient county detective society, that insures two-thirds the value of all losses by thieves. Any person, by paying the paltry sum of $5 and signing the constitution, can become a member. Every farmer or business man should become a member. When it is understood that we have such an organization, with two or three hundred members to back it, no professional thief will ever come to this county to steal; if he does, he'll certainly be captured, for MONEY WILL CATCH ANY THIEF. Among its members may be found the most wealthy and substantial farmers in the county. We have not the list of members before us, but among them are Capt. George Lawrence, A. C. Nickell, John Porter, M. Barber, R. B. McCumber, William Blair, Orson Tichenor, Daniel Brown, C. A. Blodgett, E. S. Purple, R. M. Jameson, John Aitken, W. R. Blodgett, Hendrick Gregg, James McDonough, Benjamin Smart, Andrew Snyder, and others."

Professional horse-thieves give this county a wide berth; one horse was stolen soon after the society was organized, but it was recovered four miles from the place where it was taken. The treasury now contains $170 in cash, and the society is stronger than ever before. Its officers have been as follows: President—John Porter, 1870; A. F. Pratt, 1871-74; A. C. Nickell, 1875; John Porter, 1876-78; R. B. McCumber, 1879-80. Secretary—W. V. Tichenor, 1870-72; Frank H. Putney, 1873-75; R. M. Jameson, 1876-78; Orson P. Clinton, 1879-80. Treasurer—William Blair, from its permanent organization to date. The society has an Executive Committee composed of some the best men in the county, whose business it is to look after the general welfare of the organization.

OONOMOWOC AGRICULTURAL, MECHANICAL AND STOCK ASSOCIATION.

Feeling the necessity of good accommodations for agricultural and stock exhibitions nearer home, the citizens of the northwestern part of the county held a meeting April 2, 1867 for the purpose of organizing an association, the chief object of which should be to advance the agricultural, mechanical and stock-raising interests of Oconomowoc and surrounding towns. It was resolved by those present that shares of $100 each per member, should be subscribed, to be used in a common fund for joint-stock purposes, and that a tract of eighteen acres be purchased from Cooledge Eastman and Calvin C. Palmer, the same lying south of the highway, and south of David W. Small's hop-yard, to be used for fairs as the association might designate. The charter members and shares taken were as follows, viz.: D. W. Small, one share; G. Winton, one share; A. B. Hale, one share; William Wentworth, one share; C. H. Hartwell, one share; J. A. Henshall, two shares; D. McL. Miller, one share; D. H. Rockwell, one share; A. C. Rockwell, one share; J. Weltner, one share; Louis F. Rowell, one share; Cooledge Eastman, one share; Samuel Buck, one share; C. C. Palmer, three shares; A. M. Bruce, one share; J. C. Hitchcock, one share; D. McArthur, one share; Thomas Chandler, one share; E. W. Barnard, one share. On April 17, 1867, a meeting was held, and the following officers elected temporarily: President, D. W. Small; Secretary, J. C. Hitchcock; Treasurer, A. B. Hale; Directors, Louis F. Rowell, C. C. Palmer, and Cooledge Eastman. The Directors and President were authorized to make such assessments, from time to time, on the capital stock, as might be necessary; and on motion it was decided that shares should not, in the future, exceed $25. Fourteen shares represented, constituted a quorum for transacting business.

A short time after this, D. H. Rockwell, D. McL. Miller, and C. H. Hartwell, Ezra Wing and George A. Winton, were elected Vice Presidents, and it was decided that the President and Directors already elected should conduct the affairs of the association, until a meeting of the Legislature, when they would obtain a special charter.

During the summer, the fair grounds were fitted up, and inclosed with a fence from seven to eight feet high. The first annual fair of the association was held during the autumn of 1867. At the first regular election of officers, D. W. Small was elected President, and continued to be at each election; J. A. Henshall, Vice President; J. C. Hitchcock, Secretary; A. B. Hall, Treasurer; J. A. Henshall, L. F. Rowell and G. A. Winton, Directors; and J. A. Henshall, L. F. Rowell, and D. W. Small, were appointed a committee to draft constitution and by-laws. By report of the President, July 25, 1868, they were in debt $1,300, and a resolution was adopted to levy an assessment on the shareholders and sell shares to pay this indebtedness.

As early as 1870, it was thought best that the association grounds should be platted and sold to pay the debt on them, and the residue of the funds be employed to purchase cheaper and more lands, as the grounds then in use were not sufficiently large.

During the spring of this year a sum of money was borrowed to pay the indebtedness of the association. At a meeting of the stockholders, in December, 1871, a motion was made and carried, that the grounds should be surveyed and platted, and sold to the highest bidder. The lots were platted as directed, and sold to the highest bidder among the members of the association. The sale came off in July, 1875, and shares previously purchased applied on the purchase of lots. The fence and other property was sold by Mr. Hall as agent.

The last record of an election or other meeting being held was in April, 1876. After the division and sale of the property, the interest formerly sustained died out, and with it the society. During the existence of the society, agriculture, stock-raising, and kindred matters received an impetus which is illustrated by the fine farms and stock now to be found in this vicinity.

The benefits of such an organization cannot be too highly appreciated by any community. While the society was in operation, fine stock exhibitions and races were of frequent occurrence, splendid annual fairs were given, and handsome prizes distributed; now if the farmers, inventors, or stock fanciers would exhibit their productions, they must seek some other place where proper facilities for this purpose are furnished.

OLD SETTLERS' CLUBS.

There is hardly a county in the State where old settlers' clubs could be more easily organized and maintained, and in which the age of their members would more fully entitle them to the name. Unfortunately, however, the two societies, which had brief but pleasant and profitable existence in Waukesha County, are dead now, apparently past all resurrection. The papers presented by the members of each are made use of elsewhere; that is, those which have not been lost, or destroyed by fire.

Waukesha County Old Settlers' Club.—In December, 1870, several of the pioneers of the county had an informal talk about the desirability of an old settlers' club. This resulted in a call, which was circulated by various parties, until it assumed the following form and dimensions:

The old settlers of Waukesha County are requested to meet at the "Exchange," in the village of Waukesha, on Saturday, February 4, at 2 o'clock, for the purpose of making arrangements for an "Old Settlers'" meeting. It is expected that this preliminary meeting will decide upon the programme for a large gathering.

The above call resulted in a meeting, of which the following is the official report :

At the meeting held at the Waukesha Exchange, on Saturday, the 4th inst. (February, 1871), pursuant to call published in the last issue of the Plainedealer, Alexander Cook was called to the chair, and E. Enos chosen Secretary. The Chairman stated the object of the meeting to be the making of the necessary arrangements for the organization, of an association of the early settlers of Waukesha County, and fixing the time and place of the first meeting of the association.

On motion of William McWhorter, the following-named gentlemen were appointed by the Chair a committee to report a plan for such organization, and to fix the time and place of the meeting as above stated: A. F. Pratt, Waukesha; Elon Fuller, Pewaukee; John Gale, Merton; James McDonough, Muskego; R. C. Robertson, Vernon; J. S. Nickell, Summit.

The committee reported, recommending that the first meeting of the Early Settlers Association be held in the afternoon and evening of February 22, 1871, at Waukesha, and also recommended the appointment of the following Committee of Arrangements for such meeting: A. F. Pratt, Henry Totten, A. Cook, William White and F. M. Putney, to which the meeting added William A. Nickell, Manville Barber, William S. Barnard and E. Enos.

On motion, a committee consisting of A. Cook, Frank H. Putney and E. Enos were appointed to draft a constitution for the association, to be presented for the consideration of the meeting, and also prepare a historical sketch of early incidents of the settlement of Waukesha County.

A. Cook, Chairman.

E. Enos, Secretary.

According to the above recommendation, a very large and enjoyable meeting was held, in Robinson's Hall, in the village of Waukesha. It is well described by the Secretary's official report, which is as follows :

ROBINSON'S HALL, February 22, 1871.

Meeting called to order; Alexander Cook in the chair; E. Enos, Secretary. The proceedings of the preliminary meeting was read. The report of Committee on Constitution and By-Laws was read, and after some discussion was adopted. Enrollment of names was then begun by calling the towns. The Waukesha brass band then played several tunes. Permanent officers were then elected, as follows ;

President—L. Martin, Vernon. Vice Presidents—A. F. Pratt, Waukesha ; E. Hurlbut, Oconomowoc ; J. C. Molster, Merton ; James Weaver, Lisbon ; William R. Hesk, Menomonee ; John D. McDonald, Summit ; Stephen Warren, Delafield ; Elon Fuller, Pewaukee ; S. G. M. Putney, Brookfield ; T. C. Dousman, Ottawa ; Thomas Sugden, Genesee ; William L. Parsons, New Berlin ; A. R. Hinckley, Eagle ; S. Andrews, Mukwonago ; L. Ellerson, Muskego. Secretary—I. N. Stewart, Pewaukee. Treasurer—H. H. Hunkins, Waukesha. The President appointed the following Executive Committee—L. Martin, Chairman ; E. Enos, I. Lain, Sebina Barney, William Blair, W. A. Nickell.

The Committee on Constitution reported the following, which was adopted :

SECTION I. The name of this society shall be "The Old Settlers' Club of Waukesha County."

SEC. II. The objects of this club are to revive and foster sentiments of kindly feeling and good fellowship among the old settlers of this county, and to gather and preserve incidents connected with its early history.

SEC. III. Any male inhabitant of this county, who shall have resided in the Territory or State of Wisconsin for twenty years, may become a member of this club by subscribing to this constitution, giving the date of his settlement, and paying an initiation fee of 50 cents ; and each member shall have the privilege of recording the female members of his family as honorary members of the club.

SEC. IV. The first class shall be composed of all those whose settlement dates prior to the year 1840, and shall be known as "The Pioneers ;" the second class shall be composed of all those whose settlement dates between the years 1840 and 1845 inclusive ; the third class shall be composed of all other members of the club.

SEC. V. This club shall meet once in each year at the county seat at such time as the Executive Committee shall appoint.

SEC. VI. The officers of the club shall be a President, one Vice President for each of the towns in the county except the one from which the President shall be chosen, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and Executive Committee of such number as the by-laws of the club may prescribe.

SEC. VII. The officers of this club shall be chosen annually by the members at their regular meeting, and a majority of all the votes cast shall be necessary to a choice.

SEC. VIII. This constitution may be amended at any regular meeting of the club by a two-thirds vote of the members present.

The following by-laws were also reported and adopted :

SEC. I. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at the meetings of the club, and preserve order, and he shall be ex officio, the Chairman of the Executive Committee.

SEC. II. It shall be the duty of the Vice President to assist the President in the discharge of his duties, and in his absence the Vice President having the oldest settlement shall act as President pro tem.

SEC. III. It shall be the duty of the Secretary to keep a record of the proceedings of the club, to file and preserve all historical sketches and other papers presented to it, and keep a register of the members of the club and their age, nationality and date of settlement ; his records, books and papers shall always be open to the inspection of the members of the club.

SEC. IV. It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all moneys paid into the club, to keep a true account of the same, and to pay them out upon the order of the President.

SEC. V. The Executive Committee shall consist of five members, and it shall be their duty to make the necessary provisions for the annual meeting of the club, and to hear, audit and allow claims.

SEC. VI. No subject of political or sectarian character shall be discussed before the club.

SEC. VII. The annual dues of the members of the club shall be 25 cents.

SEC. VIII. Every member of the club shall subscribe his name to the constitution and by-laws of the club, and duly observe the same.

SEC. IX. Upon the death of any member of the class designated as "Pioneers," it shall be the duty of the Secretary to notify the members of the club of the death of such member, and of the time and place of burial.

Fred W. Monteith then read a sketch of the early settlement of Muskego. After some discussion by the "old 'uns" as to times, places, and men, he read a letter from Hon. J. D. McDonald, of Summit, giving this gentleman's early experience. The committees of Eagle and of Merton furnished summary histories of their respective towns. A. E. Gilbert and Judge Field followed with an account each of his own town, New Berlin and Mukwonago. Club then adjourned to supper, which was furnished at the Exchange and the American. In the evening, the hall was well filled with old settlers, and a fair sprinkle of young settlers. All enjoyed themselves in the dance or social chat as suited their fancy.

I. N. STEWART, Secretary.

This club held three meetings—all pleasant and more or less profitable—but nothing has been done toward reviving these annual gatherings during six or seven years, and it is feared never will be.

Bark River Valley Old Settlers' Club.—The old settlers of Hartland, Pewaukee, Merton, and vicinity, held a preliminary meeting at the Burr Oak House, at Hartland, February 3, 1870, having in view the permanent organization of an old settlers' club. There were seventy-three persons present, and all had a very enjoyable time.

The second meeting was held on Thursday afternoon and evening, January 12, 1871, at the same place, when 124 of the old settlers of Waukesha County put in an appearance, and became members of the club. The meeting was called to order by Stephen Warren, Esq., President, and the following resolutions adopted :

Resolved, That the male member of this club who is the oldest settler, shall be the President, until removed by inability or death ; and that the male member of the club, who is the next oldest settler, shall be Vice President, under the like conditions.

Resolved, That a Secretary be chosen for the current year.

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed, whose duty it shall be to determine when and where each annual meeting of the club shall be held ; make the necessary provisions for attending funerals of members, and procure circulars, and see to their distribution ; collect statistics, and arrange any and all matters, for the information and edification of the club ; such committee to act for the current year.

Resolved, That the members of the club be assessed for any amount necessary to defray the incidental expenses for the current year.

The following persons were chosen officers of the club : Ralph B. Allen, President ; Thomas Redford, Vice President for Lisbon ; Stephen Warren, Vice President for Delafield ; C. G. Williams, Vice President for Waukesha ; W. C. Gates, Vice President for Pewaukee, and F. S. Capron, Vice President for Oconomowoc ; Chauncy Simonds, Secretary, and Elisha Pearl, Treasurer. On motion, it was decided to hold the next annual meeting at Hartland, the second Thursday in January, 1872.

One who was present, and who seems to have been well fed, furnishes the following description of the supper, which is always a prominent feature of all pioneer gatherings :

“ At 7 o'clock, P. M., business was dropped, and all hands turned into the dining hall of our friend, and prince of hotel-keepers, G. W. Nourse, whose genial disposition, gentlemanly conduct and qualities eminently fit him for the position of landlord. But while the outside arrangements were so admirably conducted, Mrs. Nourse presided with a queenly grace over that more difficult and delicate department that is always counted first at a hotel, the satisfying of the inner man. No one escapes her attention, and a welcoming recognition is sure to greet all of her guests.

“ The tables were loaded down with the substantial of life and all those delicacies and dainties which melt upon the tongue and ravish the palate with delight. But oysters stewed, and oysters fried, and oysters pickled, and oysters raw, were the favorite dishes. Until 10 o'clock the caterer held sway, and well did he do his duty. Then the crowd assembled in the hall and took up that order of business that all were so much interested in, the relation of historical incidents and reminiscences of pioneer life.

“ Messrs. Thomas Redford, James Weaver, Ralph B. Allen, Rev. E. H. Chapin, Rev. N. A. Spooner, M. L. Skinner and Chauncy Simonds addressed the club with such hearty good will, eloquence, and relation of witty anecdote, that the audience were loath to break up the meeting, even at the midnight hour. Several gentlemen presented written accounts of the early settlement of the towns in which they live, which were left with the Secretary for publication.

“ The meeting was a complete success. The more of such gatherings we have, the better.”

The second was also a successful meeting, as were one or two following ones ; but as the novelty wore off this interest seemed to die out, and the Bark River Valley Old Settlers' Club is now a thing of the past. Most unfortunate of all, however, was the destruction by fire of the records of the club, at the burning of the depot at Hartland.

The following communication to this club, from the first Circuit Judge for the circuit of which Waukesha County forms a part, will be interesting to pioneers everywhere :

MILWAUKEE, Wis., January 20, 1872.

D. H. ROCKWELL, Chairman :

DEAR SIR :—Your proposed gathering carries me back through nearly twenty-eight years, to my first acquaintance with Waukesha County forests, which then covered many a field that has long since yielded to the plow ; and faces were then youthful and forms erect that now bend under a snowy covering. All is changed. It would require a book to record all the instances of courage, enterprise, perseverance, and privation which have brought about these changes. One of the greatest difficulties, perhaps the greatest met with in those pioneer days, was the want of good roads. The roads to Milwaukee, your chief market, were not only unimproved, but some seasons, nearly impassable. Who does not remember being “stuck in the mud” in the Milwaukee woods ? It cost nearly all a load of wheat would sell for to drag it through from Oconomowoc to the lake. But during the year 1848, the plank-road

(thanks to its enterprising builders) was opened, to the great benefit of both city and county. Not only Waukesha, but Dodge, Jefferson and Dane Counties shared largely in this improvement, and the prices of lands and produce rose together.

In the grand march of improvement, railroads soon followed. Waukesha could have got along without them, but the rest of the State could not. We all well know what they have done to benefit the whole country. Give them their due; they are the offspring of civilization. But while they have monopolized the business of carrying passengers and freight they must be guarded and watched; though useful as servants they may be bad masters, and must be made to feel and know that there is but one sovereign, the people. Looking back at many changes and improvements which twenty-eight years have effected, I am filled with pride and admiration. So rapid has been the growth of the country far and wide, that we scarcely realize the advancement that has been going on under our own eyes. I remember, when I was a boy, in Saratoga Co., N. Y., one man, who was said to be worth five or six thousand dollars, was looked up to as the richest farmer in the town. Probably twenty-eight years ago there was not a farmer in Waukesha County who was worth as much over and above his debts. Now we count farmers by the score, and hundreds, in every town, who are worth from five to fifty thousand dollars. If property confers bliss, your people ought to be very happy. The old settlers of Waukesha County did not bring to their new homes a miser's spirit, but they did bring prudence, pluck, good sense and strong arms, and they made good use of them. They know and appreciate the uses of wealth; they have provided their farms with all the best agricultural implements furnished by modern invention, and they have surrounded their homes and filled their houses with comforts and luxuries; they have erected factories, schoolhouses and churches, and have connected their material prosperity with intellectual culture and a wholesome moral and religious sentiment. Such is the scene which will present itself to the old settlers when they come together to exchange greetings and renew their friendship on Tuesday next. Well may they look back with pride and satisfaction at the work of their own hands, while they thank God for His manifold blessings upon them and our common country.

May they live long to enjoy the fruits of their labor.

Please offer the following sentiment in my behalf: The old settlers of Oconomowoc, Summit, and vicinity—they have made their heritage what it is, let their successors better it if they can.

Very respectfully yours,

LEVI HUBBELL.

PREMIUM FARM.

During the year 1860, premiums were offered by the State Agricultural Society for the three best farms in the State, and a committee was appointed to travel through the country and visit the farms of the different applicants, to decide on their merits and report on the condition of the country generally. During that year, the year before the "late unpleasantness," it will be remembered by farmers that grain crops were never better throughout the State; so the report of the Commissioners was a glowing one. They placed the yield at twenty-five bushels per acre on the average. This created a great amount of criticism throughout the Eastern States, and finally Ohio sent a person to see if the report was not exaggerated. Contrary to their expectations, he said the crops were underestimated.

Among the applications was one from Mr. Edgerton, who then owned the tract now known as the Van Brunt farm, in Summit, and who entered it in 1837. When the Commissioners came on they found the buildings comparatively nothing to what they now are, there being only a rambling one-story house, such as farmers sometimes build by piecing on to the first old log house in every direction, until nothing is to be seen of the original structure but the chimney (and maybe not that) and the interior. Of outbuildings, there was a carriage-house, built in a substantial manner, of stone, the upper part being dedicated as a chapel, to gratify the wishes of Mrs. Edgerton. This was the only chapel in the neighborhood until the little Church of St. Maria was erected, a short distance east of the house, on land which belonged to the farm. Beside the carriage-house, there was a large pantry, with cellars for milk, a cheese-room, smoke-house, ashery, etc. There were three stone buildings, gothic in style, fronting toward the south, and connected by wooden structures. These buildings were the only ones on the farm worth mentioning. But the farm itself was, as it now is, almost perfect. To attempt to describe it as it then appeared would be impracticable, as it has since been largely improved in every particular, by the expenditure of about $25,000 by Mr. Van Brunt, who came into possession of the property in 1873. The farm is one mile long and half as wide, and is intersected by but one public road, which runs through it from east to west, leaving one-third on the south side, and the remaining two-thirds on the north side, on which are erected the splendid family mansion and capacious outbuildings. Directly back from these buildings, a lane runs north, dividing this part of the farm in the center, by which the fields, twenty acres in area each, are reached on either side, in a most convenient manner. This part of the farm is devoted principally to raising grain and grasses. About sixty acres of the southern third of the farm, on the west, are covered by a fine forest, besides seven acres in the northwest corner. The remainder of this portion is divided into fields and used principally for pasturage. The farm is splendidly watered by Bark River, which starts in on the eastern central side and runs southwesterly almost across it, having a gravel bottom. To get anything like a fair idea of the real beauty and complete natural, as well as artificial, arrangement of the place, one must go up into the cupola of the house. From this point a fine view is obtained of this superb farm and the magnificent country around, than which nothing better or more beautiful can be found anywhere. The surface soil is a rich loam and limestone marl, mixed with a very little sand and gravel, which has a heavy clay subsoil, and is therefore well adapted to various agricultural purposes.

The surface is not quite level, but just about right in wave and swell to drain nicely; and when covered with a luxurious growth of crops, dotted here and there by clumps of green trees, presents as rich and attractive a picture as can be desired. In 1874, Mr. Van Brunt began his improvement in building by erecting a horse barn, the front built of stone, being 40x48 feet, two stories high, the north rear attachment to the above being a frame building 36x120 feet, two stories, making this building 160 feet long. The interior front is divided into a carriage room and office, and two box stalls sixteen feet square. The rear has a long passage-way through to the center, and the sides are divided into box stalls from twelve to sixteen feet square, and all are ceiled and finished in the most approved manner. When this stable was built, Mr. Van Brunt expected to engage extensively in raising blooded horses, but finding that it does not pay, the stalls are to be converted into sheep pens. This barn is connected with the ashery and other buildings, before mentioned, by a long poultry house and apartments for brood mares and sheep, making the whole southern front from outside corner of chapel to outside corner of carriage and horse barn, 250 feet in length. Connected with the chapel, and running back south, is an ice house and wagon and machinery sheds, 16x110 feet; then directly south of this, and running east and west, is a building containing granary, corn-crib, room for boiling feed, and a hog pen. The granary is 20x30 feet, two stories high, the outside walls being lined with brick. The corn-crib is 18x48 feet; the room for boiling feed is 18x24 feet; the hog pen 18x48 feet, making a building 150 feet long. Besides these various buildings, there is also a cattle barn 46x48 feet, two stories high, with basement. It is estimated by the proprietor that there are ample accommodations for forty horses, fifty cattle, fifty hogs and five hundred sheep. It may be added that these various buildings are completely finished throughout and painted. The dwelling-house, which is approached from the south by graveled drive-ways, is built of Milwaukee brick, and gotten up throughout in a very elaborate manner. Mr. James Douglass, architect, planned, in this case, a model country residence, with a handsome exterior and convenient interior. About fifty or sixty yards southeast of the house, under a clump of fine trees, is a magnificent spring, the Ajalon, which supplies the house with water. This spring is ten or twelve feet in diameter, has a wonderful flow, and is extremely cold and very pure and healthful. A short distance farther south, on the bank of Bark River, are two more springs bursting out of the ground within a few feet of each other, one being clear and pure, the other an iron mineral spring—such are nature's freaks. The flow from these springs is also very liberal. The analysis of the Ajalon Spring, by G. Bode, of Milwaukee, is as follows:

Total quantity of solid substances.....	27.336 grains.	Bicarbonate of magnesia	9.1552 grains.
Chloride of sodium.....	0.2398	Bicarbonate of iron.....	0.0877
Sulphate of soda.....	0.4738	Alumina.....	0.1462
Bicarbonate of soda.....	1.1992	Silica.....	0.9360
Bicarbonate of lime.....	14.6484	Organic matter.....	0.4504

This farm, situated on the east half of Section 34, town of Summit, was awarded the premium by the Commissioners first mentioned.

POPULATION OF THE COUNTY AT DIFFERENT PERIODS.

In comparing the population of Waukesha with other counties, it should be borne in mind that she has no large cities or centers of population, and only two places that really are entitled to consideration in computing the population of towns. And also, that she has but sixteen towns and a very large area of water. With these facts taken into consideration, the growth of her population has been steady, and as rapid as a healthy growth can be. In 1834, the county contained three persons, Morris D. and Alonzo R. Cutler and Henry Luther. In 1835, it was about fifteen, though whether more or less, it is difficult to determine, as several persons came for the summer and returned to the East during the winter. The census of 1838 may be found elsewhere; that of 1840 shows the following numbers: Genesee, 238; Lisbon, 116; Menomonee, 59; Mukwonago, 172; Muskego, 130; New Berlin, 199; Pewaukee, 222; Prairieville, 450; Summit, 335; Vernon, 187; total, 2,108. This represents an influx of over 2,000 persons in less than five years, for there was not a single white person spent the winter of 1834-35 in Waukesha County, and the census of 1840 was taken early in the year. The amount of increase was therefore about 500 per year.

June 1, 1846, a census report was made as follows:

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Prairieville.....	874	790	1,664
Vernon.....	346	293	639
Muskego.....	463	404	867
New Berlin.....	485	443	928
Brookfield.....	500	480	980
Lisbon.....	459	380	839
Menomonee.....	466	436	902
Merton.....	399	345	744
Pewaukee.....	563	455	1,018
Delafield.....	376	314	690
Genesee.....	512	397	909
Mukwonago.....	464	377	841
Eagle.....	384	308	692
Ottawa.....	251	232	483
Summit.....	420	371	791
Oconomowoc.....	418	306	724
Total.....	7,380	6,331	13,733

The county contained 24 colored persons—14 in Prairieville, 7 in Brookfield and 3 in Lisbon. The greatest discrepancy between the male and female population was in Genesee, where there were 115 more males than females; and the least in Brookfield, where there were only 20 more men than women.

The United States census of 1850, showed that Waukesha County contained 19,258, of whom 75 adults could not read or write. Sixty-eight of those who were unable to read and write were foreigners; the balance were born in America. The report, more in detail, is as follows:

	Male.	Female.	Total.	Colored.	Total.
Brookfield.....	1,115	808	1,923	15	1,938
Delafield.....	606	528	1,134	1,134

Total.....	10,296	8,917	19,213	45	19,258

In 1855, the population of the county was 24,012; in 1860, 26,831, and in 1865, 27,029. The following table shows the population by towns, as returned at the last three enumerations:

	1870.	1875.	1880.	Gain in 5 years.	Loss in 5 years.
Brookfield	2,281	2,228	2,104	124
Delafield.....	1,364	1,509	1,455	54
Eagle.....	1,256	1,224	1,158	66
Genesee	1,462	1,376	1,366	10

Oconomowoc.....	1,523	1,474	1,335	139
Oconomowoc City.....	1,408	2,121	2,174	53
Pewaukee.....	1,818	2,080	2,193	113
Summit.....	1,358	1,159	1,138	21
Vernon.....	1,180	1,247	1,175	72
Waukesha	1,244	1,735	1,644	91
Waukesha Village.....	2,633	2,807	2,978	171
Totals.....	28,274	29,436	28,964	425	897

Thus, the total loss in the county during the last five years is the difference between 425, (the gains in towns of Lisbon, Merton, Pewaukee, village of Waukesha and city of Oconomowoc), and 897, the losses in the balance of the towns, which is 472. This loss is owing to the emigration of the younger portion of the population to the cities, and the unoccupied lands of the West. When, however, the West is more generally filled, the increase in population will go on again in Waukesha County.

SOME OF WAUKESHA COUNTY'S DISTINGUISHED DEAD.

Hardly a county in Wisconsin has a longer list of men distinguished in politics, war, the State and the nation, than Waukesha. The list is not here complete; but as many sketches as the friends of the dead would furnish are inserted. The chapter is somewhat lengthy, but it will be both valuable and interesting. Any history is necessarily a narration of the achievements of men; for without men this book could not have been made, and Waukesha County would still have been a wilderness.

JACOB LINSLEY BEAN.

Jacob L. Bean was born in Williston, Vt., March 17, 1809. His childhood and youth, up to his sixteenth year, were spent in his native place. He was descended from a Scottish family bearing the name of McBean, the prefix to the name having been dropped by the branch of the family that came to America. He had the misfortune, while yet a child, to lose his father, an estimable man, respected and beloved in the community in which he lived, and was left to his own guidance and thrown upon his own resources. After completing an elementary education in the public school, he entered a mercantile house as a clerk. A short experience in this capacity, however, was all that he required. He soon became an expert in business methods, and ambitious to establish for himself an independent career. His first venture as a business man was as a manufacturer of iron, in Clinton County, N. Y., being at the same time extensively interested in the lumber traffic. It was quite apparent from the first that he was destined to succeed, as he soon developed in his character and methods all of the elements of success. Untiring industry and an energy both of mind and body, seldom equaled, marked him as an exceptionally superior man of affairs. He brushed away obstacles that would have appalled other men, and, once having undertaken an enterprise, he knew no such word as fail. The great West offering, as it did, a boundless field for enterprise and pluck, lured him hitherward. After disposing of his business interests in the State of New York, he came with his family to Milwaukee, in the spring of 1840, and became at once engaged in business as a merchant, and in various enterprises in the direction of laying the foundation for that beautiful city. Among them was the building of a large hotel known as the "American House." This commodious structure will be well and pleasantly remembered by all early settlers. It was burned in 1860, and superseded by the present "Plankinton House." Mr. Bean was prominent among that small band of sagacious and enterprising citizens of the State who first undertook the construction of a railway leading from Milwaukee westward; and in connection with Byron Kilbourn, E. D. Holton and other pioneers, distinguished for their zeal and ability in developing the resources of this State, he was largely instrumental in setting on foot that great enterprise which resulted in the construction of a railway two hundred miles in length, from Milwaukee to Prairie du Chien on the Mississippi River. Subsequently, he was even more intimately connected with the project of building the Milwaukee & La Crosse Railway. He was the first President of the company, and in that capacity, with marked ability and business tact, directed its affairs until the road was completed to the station known as Iron Ridge. The great deposit of iron ore in that locality attracted his attention, and surrendering the control of the railroad scheme into other hands, he purchased a large interest in this mine, and for a second time in his business career became engaged in the manufacture of iron. Here again he was successful, and in a short time established a flourishing and prosperous business. It was while thus engaged that his life was brought to a sudden close. He had been absent from home, and returning on the 5th of May, 1855, he complained of a severe pain in his head. This soon developed into congestion of the brain, and on the 8th day of the same month, and in the forty-sixth year of his age, he died. His untimely death was not alone an irreparable loss to his family—it was a loss as well to the community and State in which he lived, for he had been in a most conspicuous way a public-spirited man—helpful, zealous and capable. He was the father of a large family, and in his own home was a light and a blessing. To the world, he was justly known as a man of high character, of kindly impulses and of good deeds.

PITTS ELLIS.

Among the noted officials of Waukesha County, was Pitts Ellis, a native of Genesee County, N. Y., born February 29, 1808. He was educated and spent his early life in Cayuga County, N. Y.; was married in Cattaraugus County, in that State, to Lucia M. Balcom, a native of Ontario County. In 1841, Mr. Ellis settled at North Prairie, in this county, where he began farming that year. In 1843, he built the first frame house in Genesee Village, and engaged in the shoemaking business, in which he continued for a number of years. Mr. Ellis was a stanch and steadfast Democrat; was the first Justice of the Peace in Genesee; was Register of Deeds two years during the war, and has held various town offices. He was a member of the Territorial Legislature in 1844; a member of the First Constitutional Convention and of the Legislature of 1850. While a resident of Genesee, he relinquished shoemaking and devoted his attention to farming and speculating in grain, associating with Tredway & Barker, well known merchants of that village. Mr. Ellis also operated as speculator in Milwaukee, for four or five years, in which business he lost every dollar of his property. The last few years of his eventful life were spent in Genesee, where he died February 1, 1875. The frame house built by Mr. Ellis is still standing, and is occupied by the Lee family. Mrs. Ellis, a well-preserved and intelligent lady of sixty-six gave the above facts, and is prouder of nothing done by her husband than that he cast his vote for Horace Greeley in 1872. Whatever his faults, Pitts Ellis had the name of being an honorable man, and was respected most by those who had known him best and longest.

DENNISON WORTHINGTON

Few men have a greater claim to a distinguished position among the illustrious dead of Waukesha County than Dennison Worthington, though he gave but a comparatively small portion of his life to the public, and never obtained, or sought to obtain, many of the higher positions of honor and trust which were within his reach. In the absence of better and more specific data as to his life and career, extracts from several newspapers, printed where he was well known, will here be presented and preserved in his honor. The following is from the Madison (Wis.) State Journal of April 24, 1880:

"The telegraph brings the sad and unlooked-for tidings of the death of Hon. Dennison Worthington. He died suddenly, at the home of his son, William C. Worthington, in Denver, Colo., Friday, April 23, 1880."

Mr. Worthington was born in Connecticut, but lived in Albany, N. Y., after he had grown to man's estate, for many years, and was a highly esteemed citizen of that place; he was the second President of the Albany Young Men's Association, and served as a member of the Common Council some years. In 1847, he removed to Wisconsin, and bought a farm near Summit, Waukesha County. He was a member of the Assembly in 1852 and 1854, and a Senator from 1855 until 1861, taking part in the investigation of the La Crosse Land Grant scandal, as Chairman of the Investigating Committee. In 1861, he was elected Secretary of the Madison Mutual Insurance Company, and filled that position until 1874, when he was compelled to resign on account of poor health. Since that time his home has been in Chicago, but latterly he has been making trips to the West in pursuit of health, and has been living in Denver for some time.

"The deceased was a brother-in-law of Hon. Andrew Proudfit, of Madison City. He was an active and consistent member of the Episcopal Church, and while in that city was an earnest communicant of Grace Church.

"Mr. Worthington was about seventy-four years of age at the time of his death. He was so well and so generally known, not only in Madison but throughout the State, that there is no need to recount his many virtues, or do more than state the fact of his decease. The bare mention will recall in many a heart the memory of his venerable appearance, of his gentle voice, of his winning, genial address. He was one of nature's noblemen, and all his natural gifts were heightened and sanctified by Christian principle and a holy life. The world is better, not only for the life-work, but, for the memory of such a man, and many a soul to-day is nearer Heaven because of his example and influence. His removal from Madison and from the parish of Grace Church, of which he had been for fourteen years the Senior Warden, left a blank that has never been filled and never can be; but the thought of what he would have said and would have counseled, had he been here, has been of greater influence than any of us can express. Of him we can one and all say, in the Spirit's words: 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them.'"

The following appeared in the Oconomowoc Free Press of May 1, 1880:

"Sorrowing relatives and sincere friends will alike mourn, with heartfelt grief, the death of the Hon. Dennison Worthington, who, it is learned from private advices, died at Denver, Colo., on Friday, April 23, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. Mr. Worthington was at one time a prominent character in legislative, political and commercial circles in Wisconsin, and was for many years a resident of Madison. He was one of the first settlers of Summit, this county, and owned the farm now owned by J. M. Putney, at Genesee Lake. In 1852, he was elected a member of the Legislature, and again in 1854. He was elected a member of the Senate in 1858-59 and 1860-61. In 1862, he removed to Madison, and took the position of Secretary of the Madison Mutual Insurance Company, and it was during his connection with this company that the brightest years of its existence are recorded. Some five or six years ago, he established his home in Chicago, and, surrounded by children, continued his residence there until in the summer of 1879 when, with his unmarried daughter, he removed to Denver. Since locating there, he enjoyed excellent health, and, despite his great age, his death had not been foreshadowed to his relatives and friends in Chicago and throughout the Northwest, and the announcement of his demise came with all the force of a surprise. Throughout his life, Mr. Worthington gained the esteem of men of every grade, and nowhere in the world had he any enemies. His personal popularity rested upon a respect that was richly deserved, and a good will that was justly his due. He was an upright man in the truest and strongest sense of the word.

"His remains were forwarded from Denver to Chicago; thence to this city, where they arrived at 2 o'clock, Friday morning, whence they were conveyed to Nashotah, where the funeral services were held at 12 o'clock, and were conducted by Bishop Welles, assisted by resident and visiting clergy. Interment in Summit Cemetery."

The following is an extract from an article which appeared in the Waukesha Freeman in May, 1880:

"Mr. Worthington was a legislator of more than usual ability, but his chief claim to distinction here is the fact that he was

—'Faithful found

Among the faithless—faithful only he,'— in the midst of that amazing corruption in the year 1856, when substantially the whole State government, including the Legislature as well as the departments, and also including the editors of many of the principal newspapers then published, were bribed with La Crosse Railroad bonds to authorize the issue of those swindling securities. Dennison Worthington was one of the few members of the Senate who escaped unsmirched in the investigation that followed a year or two after. That Waukesha County sent one of the few honest men in that memorable Legislature is pleasant for us to contemplate when we remember the affair at all, and this pleasure is wholly owing to Senator Worthington. Such virtue should not be allowed to sink into oblivion in a quarter of a century, but we doubt whether more than a very small percentage of our readers would recollect, without this or some similar reminder of the fact, the claim which the late Senator had upon our gratitude. In 1861, Mr. Worthington left his humble residence in the town of Summit to become Secretary of the Madison Insurance Company, and occupied that position until 1874, when he resigned, on account of the weight of years, and removed to Chicago. He was a studious, thoughtful man, of more than ordinary intellectual powers, and an intimate knowledge of English literature, the old writers being his favorites, and furnishing him a vast fund of anecdote and quotation."

MATTHIAS J. BOVEE.

Matthias J. Bovee was born in Amsterdam, Montgomery Co., N. Y., on the 24th day of July, 1793. His father dying when Matthias was but fourteen years of age, and being the eldest son, the care of a widowed mother and the younger children devolved upon him. He taught school during the winter seasons, and was employed on a farm during the summer months. At the age of twenty-two, he became a merchant, and, many years, and until a short time before his removal West, he was engaged in that occupation. In 1825, he was elected a member of the Assembly of New York, having previously represented his town for a number of times in the County Board of which he was several times Chairman. Mr. Bovee voted for the first railroad charter in the United States (1826) authorizing the construction of the Albany & Schenectady road. In 1834, Mr. Bovee was elected to Congress from the district composed of the counties of Montgomery, Fulton and Hamilton. He was elected as a Jackson Democrat, and represented his district two years in Congress. In 1843, Mr. Bovee, with his family, consisting of his wife, nine children, mother and other relatives, moved to Wisconsin, going around the lakes and landing in Milwaukee on the 8th day of June of that year. He resided in that city for two months, when he moved to the town of Eagle, where he resided until the time of his death, which occurred on the 12th day of September, 1872, being then in his eightieth year. In politics, Mr. Bovee was a Democrat; in religion, a Universalist. His funeral occurred on the 15th of September, 1872, the ceremonies being in charge of the Masons, to which society he had belonged for over fifty years, and of which he was a Royal Arch member.

REV. JOHN ADAMS SAVAGE.

John A. Savage, for many years President of Carroll College, was born on the 9th of October, 1800, in Salem, Washington Co., N. Y. He was the son of Abraham and Mary Savage, substantial farmers in that county. His early life was passed in the discipline of farm duties. His literary tastes were soon noticed and encouraged. He fitted for college in Salem Academy, in his native town, and graduated in the classical course from Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in 1820. While teaching before entering college, he also pursued theological studies; he completed his course under the tuition of the well-known Rev. Dr. Maxwell, of Delhi, N. Y. He was licensed to preach in May, 1825, and, after having supplied several destitute churches by appointment of the Presbytery, he was settled over his first charge, and was ordained at Fort Covington, Franklin Co., N. Y., in 1827, and served that people five years. He was even in early life a successful educator. Prior to 1824, he was several years acceptable Principal of Delaware Academy, at Delhi, N. Y. When at Covington five denominations worshiped in the church of which he was Pastor. He finished a room over his woodshed for a schoolroom, and gathered a little band of tuition pupils. One of them was a young man named Silver, in whose mind he aroused an ambition for the highest culture, and whose soul was awakened to a higher life. When Dr. Savage came to Waukesha, twenty-five years afterward, he found the said Silver as Pastor of the Baptist Church in this village. Verily he saw the fruit of his labors and was satisfied. He was married, April 21, 1828, to Miss Eliza Turner, of his native place. They had six children—Mary E., John A., Eliza T., Harriet F., dead; Edward, born in 1840, now a minister in Minnesota; William T., born in 1844, and now living in Waukesha. After leaving Covington, he served twenty years as Pastor of a large church at Ogdensburg, N. Y. In 1850, he resigned his pastorate to take the presidency of Carroll College, which then existed only on paper. A preparatory school had been previously established in the basement of the Presbyterian Church, and it was the nucleus of the proposed college. For some years, his duties were chiefly those of organizer and financial agent. Carroll College had been chartered by the Territorial Legislature in January, 1846, but until the advent of Dr. Savage, in 1850, nothing had been accomplished toward its organization, more than merely to secure the perpetuity of its charter privileges. By his tireless efforts, and the co-operation of Christian liberal men, a neat, commodious stone edifice, adapted to all the purposes of instruction, was completed in 1854; and in 1855 the college was equipped with a competent faculty and began its educational work under the presidency of Dr. Savage. On the 15th of July, 1857, was held the first commencement of Carroll College. The faith, skill and genius of Dr. Savage were rewarded by seeing a class of six able young men go forth to be and do what would have been impossible had they not borne the wise and loving impress of his inspiring soul. The college never received the financial support expected; yet the Doctor struggled on, teaching, preaching, and bearing the heavy burdens of the young enterprise. His health was impaired by oppressive labor and the lack of official support. Full collegiate work was not done after 1860. Dr. Savage died at his home in Waukesha, corner of East Division street and College avenue, December 13, 1864. He was an educator both from choice and special adaptation. Earnest, positive, tireless and magnetic, for him to live and move among men was to teach. Truths secular and sacred were enforced by the strong truth of his character. Wise and loved in the schoolroom, logical and persuasive in the pulpit, affable and reliable, his was a well-balanced character and a well-rounded life.

REV. ROBERT BOYD, D. D.

Outside of the particular denomination to which he belonged, and of which he was always conceded a leader. Robert Boyd was not as widely known, perhaps, as would have been any politician with one-half his ability and energy; but the fruits of his labors will never die nor disappear—the example of his tireless energy will be one of influence for years to come. He wrought himself into the grave for the good of others, which is the fulfillment of the highest destiny vouchsafed to man on earth. Although not one-half of his life was spent in Waukesha County, the fruits of his mind and genius ripened here, and he is claimed as a distinguished representative of the noble dead of this community.

Robert Boyd was born in Girvan, Ayrshire, Scotland, on August 24, 1816. His parents were highly esteemed members of the Presbyterian Church. Their anxious desire was that he might become a minister of the Gospel. The surroundings of his early home were highly favorable to the development of his imaginative faculties, and a just appreciation of the grand and the sublime. There, on the one hand, were the heath-clad hills towering rock-ribbed up to the clouds, and on the other, the sea stretching far away toward the setting sun. The arrangements of the home were no less favorable to the early development of his religious nature. It doubtless was such an one as the poet Burns so happily describes in his "Cotter's Saturday Night," where

"The priest-like father reads the sacred page."

When about twelve years of age, his parents moved with him to Glasgow, where he enjoyed its superior educational advantages. Between the years of fifteen and sixteen he was converted to Christ. Impressions that he ought to preach now ripened into strong convictions, and immediately he began lecturing and preaching extensively in the north of Scotland and in the north of Ireland; speaking to large assemblies in the open air on week days, and, as he had opportunity, in churches and Sunday schools on the Lord's Day; becoming widely known as the "boy preacher."

While visiting at the house of a Presbyterian Elder whose daughter had become a Baptist, he was requested to convince her of the error of her course. In the investigation for this purpose, he was himself converted to Baptist views, and subsequently she became his wife.

In 1843, Mr. Boyd's health failing him, he came to America, and settled first in Brockville, and subsequently in London, Canada, prosecuting in both places his labors in the pastorate with great zeal and efficiency.

Again, his health failing him, with a view to relief, he accepted the pastorate of the church in Hamilton. In about five months, he was obliged to resign and seek absolute rest. For this purpose he came in 1845 to Waterville, Wis.

In about a year, his health was so far restored, that he accepted the call of the church at Waukesha. In 1855, a movement was set on foot by some of the members of the First Baptist Church of Chicago, which resulted in the calling of Mr. Boyd to that city, and the organization of the Edina Place Baptist Church, now the Michigan Avenue Church. Of his labors here, let one who then enjoyed his pastoral care, and was intimately associated with him, speak: "As we look back upon it, this ministry of eight years, in the Edina Place and Wabash Avenue pulpit, seems to us to be a truly wonderful one. The theme was always Christ, yet varied by a remarkable richness of illustration, and so treated as to gather about it the whole doctrinal system of the Christian faith. It could not fail to be evident, even to a casual hearer, that preaching was his delight. It was a shining face, bright with the radiance of near communion with God, which he invariably brought to the pulpit. His doctrine was clear, the enforcement eloquent, his appeals touching and persuasive. As a Pastor, he was a sympathizing brother and friend, a wise leader, everywhere the soul of cheerfulness and inspiration."

In 1863, he returned to Waukesha. About this time Shurtleff College conferred upon him the degree of D. D. The church in Waukesha, without a Pastor and in a low spiritual condition, called him again to be their Pastor. Although paralyzed in his lower limbs so that he had to be carried to the pulpit in his chair and preach sitting, his grasp for truth was as profound, and his presentation of it as vigorous and interesting, as ever. For four years, with great blessing to the church and the entire community, he was enabled to carry on this precious work.

In 1867, from the effects of holding an out-door service in Pewaukee, he was confined to his house, which he never afterward left, until he went to be with Jesus. He resigned his pastorate, but it never was accepted by the church. Sometimes, when the state of his health would permit, he would preach through the open window to the people assembled in his front yard. A portion of the time he wrote for the columns of the Standard. Most of his time was spent in the preparation of works for the press, one of his daughters frequently acting as his amanuensis. The fruits of these years of patient toil, amid great suffering, he has given to the world in his books: "Glad Tidings," "None but Christ," "Grace and Truth," "Good Shepherd," "The World's Hope," "Wee Willie," "My Inquiry Meeting," "Lecture to Young Converts," "Words of Comfort to the Afflicted," and an autobiography in manuscript.

Little wonder that his pastoral relations with the several churches he served was of the most affectionate nature! His name is a household word with them, and his memory, which lingers in many hearts, is fragrant with the savor of the Redeemer he loved and served. Fidelity to the truth as it is in Jesus, and holy fervor in its presentation; clearness of thought, felicity of language, and richness of illustration combined, were his distinguishing characteristics as a minister. The uplifting the Cross, the honor and exaltation of Christ, were the key-note and grand charms of all his preaching.

Robert Boyd died peacefully at his home in the village of Waukesha, August 1, 1879, aged sixty-three. He had had nine daughters, five of whom are living. He lived long enough to see several of his works translated into different European and Asiatic languages—an honor accorded to but comparatively few American authors.*

SEBINA BARNEY.

Sebina Barnay, farmer, was born July 22, 1802, in Vermont; was the son of John and Sally Grove Barney, prominent farmers of the "Green Mountain State." When he was a small boy, his parents moved to Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y. In Adams Village he learned the trade of blacksmithing, and carried on the business fifteen years. On the 2d of February, 1824 he was married to Miss Polly Mandeville, who was born January 1, 1802. In 1827, he was accidentally shot in the shoulder by careless boys who were shooting at a mark; this affected his health through subsequent life. In 1836, he made a prospecting tour of seven months in Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, purchasing land in each State. In July, 1837, he came West with his family and located on what is known as the "White farm." This large farm was sold in 1854 and he bought a home in the northeast part of the town. In 1855, he became connected with the Waukesha County Bank at its organization and was one of its officers until his death, being for many years its Vice President. After 1861, he resided within the village limits. He was, before the war, Postmaster of Waukesha. He was for many terms a member of the Board of Education, and also Supervisor, and was well known as a "city father." He owned considerable real estate in the village and town of Waukesha. He was for many years a believer in Spiritualism, but during the last year of his life many noticed a gradual change in his sentiments. He died May 30, 1879. He had but one son, George M., born in 1825, who is married and lives on a farm in Waukesha. Mr. Barney was a Freemason. He was a successful farmer and prosperous business man in Waukesha Village and town for fully forty-two years. He was domestic in his tastes and enjoyed his evenings at home. He was liberal to the unfortunate and afflicted—was a humanitarian. He was a safe counselor in all business enterprises, and was the trusted friend of the poor and the rich. He was a veteran pioneer, benevolent, eminently practical and thoroughly reliable.

RUFUS PARKS.

Rufus Parks was born in Westfield, Mass., May 24, 1798, and died at his residence in the town of Summit September 17, 1878. The grandfather of Mr. Parks was one of the earliest settlers in the Connecticut Valley, and in the Revolution stood patriotically by the cause of the colonies. He had two sons, the eldest of whom, at the breaking-out of the Revolutionary war, was a Captain in the British army. The patriotic father urged him to resign and enter into the American service. His refusal so incensed the father that he disinherited him, and at his own expense armed and equipped a company of men, placing his youngest son (the father of the subject of the present sketch), in command. The company reached the patriot army at Bunker Hill, and remained in service during the war. Both sons were present in the battle of Long Island on their respective sides. Mr. Parks, on his mother's side, was the grandson of Nathaniel Gorham, one of the signers of the Constitution of the State of Massachusetts, and for two years President of the Continental Congress. He was also connected with many of the prominent families of Boston and vicinity. He received an academic education at Phillips' Academy, at Andover, Mass., and commenced business as a merchant in Boston. Failing in this he moved to Bangor, Me., where he studied law, and in 1836 was appointed by President Jackson (through the influence of his brother, who was then in Congress from that State), the first Receiver of Public Moneys at Milwaukee, Wis. This county was in his land district, and during his administration of this office all the lands in this county were sold to the original settlers. It was said of him that for many years he knew three-fourths of all the settlers in his district. Mr. Parks continued in this office until 1842, when he was removed to make way for a Whig, under a Whig administration. Afterward, in 1846, he moved on to his farm in Summit, where he remained until his death. He was prominently identified with the early history of this State and county; was in the first Constitutional Convention of the State, of which he was a prominent member. Was active, particularly, as a Democrat before the organization of the Republican party, but after that party appeared, he attached himself to it, being ardently opposed to the extension of slavery. His integrity was of the strictest kind. In character he was intolerant of what he knew to be wrong, and never believed in any method to gain right from which the light of day needed to be screened. His manners were of the old New England school, always courteous to all without reference to degree or station; and the record of his life has not a single stain or blot upon it. His remains lie in the cemetery at Summit, in which town he had lived for thirty years a much respected and revered citizen. Warham Parks, a prominent soldier, and at present Postmaster of the city of Oconomowoc, is Rufus Parks' son.

BISHOP JACKSON KEMPER, D. D.

One of the great and good men of Wisconsin and of the church was Jackson Kemper. The hardships meekly endured, the dangers bravely met, the pleasures cheerfully foregone and the privations heroically suffered in the work of doing good to others by him will never be known to mortal man. He* came of a stalwart race of high-principled, strong-bodied, strong-hearted and strong-brained men. His grandfather, Jacob Kemper, was born at Caub, on the Rhine, the son of an officer in the Prince Palatine's army. He emigrated to America in 1741. The Bishop's father, Daniel Kemper, was born at New Brunswick in 1749. Daniel Kemper was a Colonel in the Revolutionary army. He had sacrificed his means, which were not narrow, freely in the struggle for national independence, and after the war, through Gen. Washington's influence, held for some time an office in the custom house at New York.

Col. Kemper was one of the original members of the Order of the Cincinnati; among the Bishop's heirlooms is his father's cross and jewel of the order, made in France under the direction of La Fayette, just after the Revolution.

The Bishop was born at Pleasant Valley, in Dutchess County, where the family were temporarily residing, on Christmas Eve, December 24, 1879. On Col. Kemper's receiving the appointment mentioned above, he removed to New York City, which was shortly after the Bishop's birth, and it occurred in that way that the child was baptized by Bishop Moore.

His full baptismal name was David Jackson, being so named after his uncle, Dr. Jackson, of Philadelphia. In after years, the Bishop dropped the first name altogether, and his signature was simply Jackson Kemper.

When about twelve years of age, the future Bishop was sent to the Episcopal Academy at Cheshire, Conn., of which Rev. Dr. William Smith had just taken charge. Here he remained two years. He was then brought back to New York and put under the charge of the Rev. Dr. Barry, a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and at that time one of the most distinguished classical teachers, as he was one of the most finished scholars, in the country. Under his able care, young Kemper was prepared for college, having as schoolmates, among others, Bishop Onderdonk, of New York, and the Rev. Dr. Wyatt, of Baltimore. He entered the Columbia College in 1805, and graduated in 1809, as the valedictorian of his class.

*Much of this sketch is adapted from the Diocesan Memorial, published in 1870 by the Diocese of Wisconsin.

The Bishop's mind had been fixed all along upon the sacred ministry. He had a vocation to preach the Gospel. From boyhood his purpose was settled, and the sweetness of his temper, his natural and unaffected piety, his purity of mind and character, marked him for the altar and the pulpit.

Immediately upon his graduation, he began the study of theology under the care of Bishop Moore and the clergy of Trinity Parish. There were no theological seminaries in those days, and candidates for orders were under the private tuition of the best learned clergy.

Young Kemper was ready for ordination as soon as he reached the canonical age of twenty-one years.

On the second Sunday in Lent, in 1811, he was ordained Deacon by Bishop White, in St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, and that afternoon preached his first sermon in St. James'.

He was immediately called to the assistantship, under Bishop White, of the united parishes of Christ Church, St. Peter's and St. James', made vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Dr. Blackwell. In May, he removed to Philadelphia and entered on the duties of this position which he held till June, 1831—twenty years.

During this time, the young clergyman had two vacations. They used to have "vacations" in those days, and the Rev. Mr. Kemper had his. It is as well we should know exactly what those old-time ministerial vacations were, that we may compare them with modern ones.

In 1812 and 1814, he was granted leave of absence from the parish to perform missionary tours in the West. In Western Pennsylvania, Western Virginia and Eastern Ohio, he took his first lesson in the work to which God was soon to call him for life. In those, at that time, wild regions of the Far West, he traveled far and wide, and, in many places, was the first to hold divine service, and read the Common Prayer.

In 1819 and 1820, he also labored as traveling agent, in the matter of raising means to establish the General Theological Seminary.

These were his "vacations" the only ones he ever took in his life. He needed them because his general health, especially his voice, had failed seriously under the strain of devotion to his parish duties, and so, to rest himself, he turned border missionary, or undertook the thankless task of begging for a church institution.

Bishop Kemper had been twice married. In 1816, to Miss Jerusha Lyman, of Philadelphia, who lived but two years. In October, 1821, he was married to Miss Ann Relf, of Philadelphia, the mother of the daughter and the two sons who survive him.

In June, 1831, the Rev. Jackson Kemper accepted the rectorship of St. Paul's Church, Norwalk, Conn. His residence here was to be short, although marked all his days to him by the sorest sorrow of his life—the early loss of his tenderly beloved wife, who died at Norwalk in 1832, and who rests, all that is mortal of her, in the churchyard of St. Paul's.

At the General Convention of 1835, the Rev. Jackson Kemper; D. D., was elected the first Missionary Bishop of the American Church.

Sanctified by his sore bereavement he consecrated himself anew to his high calling. God had quenched the happy light of his home, and from his darkened hearth he was ready to go where the Master called.

In St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia, at the altar, where, twenty-four years before, he had knelt to take upon him the orders of a deacon, he knelt again to receive the plenary apostolic commission, a man who had purchased to himself as deacon and priest, if any man had, this highest and last degree. It was the last consecration at which Bishop White officiated, September 25, 1835.

The Missionary Bishop left his three motherless little ones under the loving care of their mother's mother, at her home in Philadelphia, and went forth into the wild West to his appointed work. For eleven years, he was literally a homeless man. The fire that had died out into cold ashes in 1832, in Norwalk, was never rekindled all those years, even in semblance. Bishop Kemper was a stranger and a pilgrim on the earth. During those eleven years his books were never unpacked. He had not even a study. He traveled on horseback and on foot, he went over rough roads and untrodden paths, he swam rivers in his many journeyings. He preached in way-side cabins, in taverns, schoolhouses, and upper rooms. His saddle-bags contained his worldly goods—his robes, and his Communion Service, his Bible and his Prayer-Book.

In his first journey to the West, he was accompanied by the Rev. Dr. Samuel Roosevelt Johnson, late Professor in the General Seminary, a man of like spirit with himself, who from that time forth has been his loving and most beloved friend, and who, among the many, far and wide, who grieve to-day for his loss, will miss him sorely till the day he joins his dear old friend and Bishop in the Paradise of God.

In 1835, early in the winter, the Bishop reached St. Louis, where he took up his residence, as far as he might be said to have a residence, until he removed to Wisconsin in the fall of 1844.

His jurisdiction comprised "the Northwest." Out of it have been formed the Dioceses of Missouri, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska. Over all those regions the Bishop was expected to travel, to watch their development, to seek out the scattered families of church people, to establish church institutions. He was set as the watchman on the border, and was to move on as the border receded, leaving organized dioceses behind him, for diocesan Bishops to occupy.

It came to him in 1837-38, at the request of Bishop Otey, who was suddenly disabled by sickness, to take care also of the Southwest. He visited the Southern States, from Louisiana to Florida, devoting several months to the work—confirming, ordaining, and consecrating many churches which had been used, sometimes for years, but had never before been visited by a Bishop.

It was at this time that he was recalled to the East, by being elected to the bishopric of Maryland. This he declined. He was a Missionary Bishop, and a Missionary Bishop he would remain.

In 1844, Missouri, as a diocese, elected a Bishop of its own, the late Bishop Hawks.

Shortly after, the Bishop removed to Wisconsin, and, in the summer of 1846, purchased land adjoining the newly founded institution of Nashotah, and, in the fall of that year, took up his residence thereupon in the humble cottage ("the Bishop's Palace" as it was pleasantly called), which old settlers so well remember, and which still stands beside the family residence, and there, with his children about him, for the first time since the breaking-up at Norwalk, he might be said to have a home.

There still remained all his vast charge except Missouri. Indiana had been an organized diocese since 1838, but had elected no Bishop. She was the next to relieve the burdened Missionary Bishop by the election of Bishop Upfold, who was consecrated in 1849.

Iowa was organized under Bishop Kemper in 1853, and he was relieved by the consecration of Bishop Lee in the year after.

Four years after he organized Minnesota, though it still continued in his care until 1857, when Bishop Whipple was consecrated.

In 1847, Wisconsin had been organized into a diocese, and the Primary Convention had elected Bishop Kemper, Diocesan. This he had declined. He could not see his way to settling down to the charge of a diocese, so strongly did he feel it his duty to be a Missionary Bishop to the end. It was not till seven years after, when he was again unanimously elected in 1854, that he accepted, and then only when it had so been arranged by the General Convention that his acceptance would allow him to remain Missionary Bishop still.

He traveled extensively thereafter in the then Indian Territory and Kansas, and during a part of the time in the latter Territory when the border troubles were at their worst. He had some severe experiences during the disturbed times, experiences which his happy temper always turned into amusing adventures afterward. It is only fair to say that personally he never met with anything but respect and kindness from men of any party at that time. All recognized the good man on his mission of love and peace, and the rudest "border ruffian" bade Bishop Kemper God-speed.

In 1859, he organized the Diocese of Kansas, and was relieved of that part of his missionary jurisdiction thereafter.

At the General Convention of that year, Bishop Kemper resigned his office as Missionary Bishop in the following touching words:

"I now, with deep emotion, tender to the church my resignation of the office of a Missionary Bishop, which, unsought-for and unexpected, was conferred upon me twenty-four years ago. Blessed with health and cheered by the conviction of duty, I have been enabled to travel at all seasons through Indiana, Missouri, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota, and partly through Kansas and Nebraska.

My days must soon be numbered, for in less than three months I will be seventy years old. As age advances, I trust I have an increasing love for our Divine Master and that church for which He shed His most precious blood."

Rev. Thompson, in his memorial sermon, said of Bishop Kemper:

"He was the father of seven dioceses, the founder of seven bishoprics in the Church of God. It was fitting that the crosier of an Archbishop should rest upon his coffin. He was an Archbishop by the appointment of Heaven. Six dioceses, as well as Wisconsin, mourn their father. If we miss him more here, or love his memory more, it is because we know him better and possessed him, to our blessing, longer. Twice this diocese honored itself by electing the great Missionary Bishop its Diocesan, by a unanimous vote; once at its Primary Convention, when he declined, and again in 1854, when, to the joy of all Wisconsin churchmen, he accepted."

At twenty minutes past 2, on Tuesday afternoon, May 24, 1870, in his study, to which his bed had been moved a few days before, his children only being present, the Bishop breathed his last. In the same room he lay, in the sleep of death, until the following Monday; and the few who entered it will never forget the contrast between its mournful silence then, and its usual aspect before his work was done.

His age was eighty years and five months, precisely. He lies buried at Nashotah, near the scene of his richest labors—a spot made as beautiful by nature as he had by godliness made his life pure and useful.

The funeral took place on May 31, and was very largely attended. Eight Bishops and one hundred clergymen of the Episcopal Church followed his remains to the tomb. The ceremonies attending the interment were beautiful and impressive. Although the body had been kept one week it was in a state of wonderful preservation, and the face of the venerable Bishop seemed to be reposing in peaceful slumber. The chapel at Nashotah, where the body lay, was very appropriately draped in white and purple. It is estimated that about two thousand persons were present at the funeral, nearly all of whom were from a distance, as the mission where the late Bishop resided contains but a small population, mostly made up of students in "Bishop White Hall," the college where young men are educated for the ministry. The ceremonies were concluded at about 6 o'clock. The memorial poem was by Bishop Henry W. Lee, as follows:

The good old man of God has gone,
Gone gently to his rest;
E'en as the low descending sun
Sinks calmly in the west.

The dear old man now sleeps in death,
He sleeps beneath the sod;
But O, he yet most truly lives,
He lives above with God.

We gave to earth his precious form,
And laid him softly down;
But he'll come forth, in God's own time,
To wear the saintly crown.

In Paradise he now doth rest,
He rests from labors rare:
From ev'ry sin and sorrow free,
And free from ev'ry care.

The Church doth mourn a Father dear,
 A Father dear in God;
 But she can still rejoice for him,
 While feeling yet the rod.

He did the mitre meekly wear,
 And ruled with gentle sway;
 Nor did he swerve from duty's path,
 But onward kept his way.

In journeys oft, like Paul of old,
 His pilgrim life was spent;
 He liv'd and labor'd in his work
 As one divinely sent.

O, he did run a godly race,
 And prove to duty true;
 And for his good example here,
 Our thanks are justly due.

The good old man indeed is gone,
 We laid him to his rest;
 We heard the sound of falling dust
 On his encoffin'd breast.

But we another sound shall hear,
 From God's eternal throne;
 And this dear saint shall then arise,
 As Jesus claims his own.

CALVERT C. WHITE.

The subject of this brief sketch was a son of Lemuel White and Emily Brainard, and born in Cazenovia, N. Y., August 29, 1830. He removed with his parents to Illinois in 1838, and to Waukesha, Wis., in 1840. In his childhood, he attended the Waukesha Academy, and afterward Carroll College—then in its incipiency—as a pupil of Prof. Sterling. At the age of fourteen, he entered the post office as clerk, under his father—who was then Postmaster—pursuing his studies in the mean while. At nineteen, he went to Milwaukee as an assistant in Mitchell's Bank, and afterward acted as Deputy Clerk of the Circuit Court of Milwaukee County. His father being elected Clerk of the Court for Waukesha County, in 1852, he returned to act as his Deputy. In 1853 he, with Col. Sidney A. Bean, edited a village paper, called the Independent Press. In 1854, he was married to Elizabeth A. Chester, and soon after removed to Bloomington, Ill. Finding his health impaired by close confinement in an office, he entered into more active out-door life, engaging in the lumber and grain business. With a taste, however, for the legal profession, he relinquished this business in 1857, returned to Wisconsin, and established himself in the practice of law at Waukesha. In 1861, he was elected District Attorney of the county. He held this office in 1862, at the time of the organization of the twenty-eighth Wisconsin Regiment of volunteer infantry, in the formation of which he took an active part. He entered the military service as Captain in this regiment, and served the entire period of enlistment, three years, rising to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. He returned home at the close of the war, in the fall of 1865, but with a constitution badly undermined by the exposure incident to the war service.

Much of the time while in the army, he was engaged in important detached duty! During the last year of his service, he held the position of Provost Marshal General of Arkansas, on the staff of Maj. Gen. J. J. Reynolds. He participated in Steele's campaign to Southern Arkansas, which was only saved from being disastrous, from the failure of Banks' Red River expedition, by the hard fighting of Gen. Steele's command.

In November, 1865, he returned to Little Rock and entered into a law partnership with Col. —now U. S. Senator—Augustus H. Garland. As he was about returning for his family in the summer of 1866, he was taken ill of typhoid fever, and was held in that climate until November. He then started North, with buoyant hopes that the pure air of his Wisconsin home would recruit his wasted health. Reaching Chicago in a feeble condition, he was conveyed to his brother's suburban home at Evanston, that of Gen. Julius White, where, after lingering a few days, he died November 15, 1866, aged thirty-six years and three months. His remains were taken to Waukesha, Wis., and interred in the village cemetery. He left a wife and two young sons, Calvert C. White, born at Waukesha April 11, 1863, and Edwin Chester White, born June 21, 1866, all residing at Waukesha. In private life Col. White's reputation was without blemish. His public service, whether civil or military, was distinguished by an intelligent appreciation and conscientious discharge of the duties devolving upon him. While reasonably ambitious, he never thrust himself forward, but, as in his entry into military life, always accepted positions of less importance than he might have obtained, thus evincing the true spirit of self-abnegation; or, at least, appeared to the world as one subordinating any desire for advancement to conscientious and patriotic sense of duty. His success, and great promise in his chosen profession of the law, were most thoroughly attested by his associates of the bar and the bench, both in Wisconsin and Arkansas.

His life, though brief, was useful, and his memory is dear to all who knew him. He lived as he died, an honored and upright citizen.

ADAM E. RAY.

Adam E. Ray was born in Delaware, N. Y., in 1808. He secured a good practical education, and began mercantile life in 1831, at Saugerties, Ulster Co., N. Y. In 1832, he was married to Miss Eliza Breasted, of New York State. They came West in 1838, and engaged in farming at Mukwonago, Waukesha County. He went South in 1859 to Alabama and built a saw-mill and a corn-mill, and had fitted them with first-class machinery, when the election of Lincoln in 1860 made the locality very unhealthy for a Unionist; he came North, and all his movable property was destroyed or confiscated by the Confederates. He also owned between one and two thousand acres of Southern land, which has not been reclaimed since the Rebellion. His Alabama losses were about $14,000. He died in 1864, leaving ten children. They have had thirteen children; the living are Charles, Edwin, Henry, the twins Mary and Eliza, Augusta, Jennie, Frederick, and the twins Ira L. and Ida V.; seven are married. Mr. Ray was a Democrat until the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill, but was thereafter an active Republican. He was a member of the Territorial Council from 1839 to 1841, and afterward held several town and county offices. From 1845 until his death, he owned a farm in Walworth County, and, while living there, was elected State Senator from that district; he was instrumental in securing the building of the old Milwaukee & Prairie du Chien Railroad, and sacrificed heavily in its behalf. He was interested in whatever affected the public welfare, and his counsel was sought both by private citizens and public officials; he was naturally a leader among men. He was devoted to the Republican party, and was well posted in political affairs; he was a Master Mason. The entire family has always been highly esteemed. Mrs. Ray and her younger daughter have a pleasant home on Wisconsin avenue, in Waukesha Village. The head of the household passed away in the full vigor of his meridian powers, aged fifty-six. For twenty-six years, in the early life of this county, he was a potent factor in all public affairs. His was a positive character, energetic, but not aggressive, spirited, but not eccentric; his fellow-citizens always reported him capable and popular.

RICHARD HARDELL.

Richard Hardell was born June 10, 1795, in Lincolnshire, England. His father was a gardener and did an extensive business. At the age of twelve, he entered, voluntarily, with his father's consent, upon a seven years' apprenticeship at the carpenter and joiner's trade, earning at the same time, by over work, what little pocket money he could, as he received only board and clothes for his regular service.

At the age of nineteen, he was married to Jane Wingate, who was five years his senior. Soon after the marriage, the young couple moved to Yorkshire and settled, Mr. Hardell going into the contracting and building business, which business he continued until 1828, when he had accumulated sufficient means to enable him to carry out a desire which he had for some time entertained, viz., that of trying his fortunes in America.

Accordingly, he settled his affairs, made such preparations as he deemed necessary, and with his family set sail in March of the above-named year, landing without accident in New York City a few weeks afterward. He almost immediately found work, after landing, upon the Bowery Theater, which was then being built, and proved himself to be so good a workman that he was the last one discharged.

Soon after leaving the theater work, he moved to Utica, N. Y., then a growing place, and resumed his old-time occupation as contractor. Here he did a very good business on a limited capital, and also acquired such a reputation for honesty and integrity that one of the leading bankers of the place (Joseph Stibbins), when Mr. Hardell's paper was presented, would indorse it with the addition of the word "good." In 1830, he removed to Clinton, N. Y., and continued his accustomed vocation. During the time he was here, he did a very large and profitable business, being employed as architect and builder of some of the finest edifices, both public and private, to be found in that locality at that time.

The Clinton Liberal Institute building, quite a famous organization in its day, was planned and erected by him, and as a memento of his connection with that enterprise, his name was carved in white marble over the front entrance. In the spring of 1836, the tide of emigration was setting in heavily toward Wisconsin, whither he determined to come, where he believed he could enlarge his own fortune not only, but better pave the way for the future prosperity of his family, which had now increased to seven. He embarked at Buffalo. They arrived at Milwaukee in July, 1836. Soon after landing, he found employment as draftsman and foreman with the firm of Prentice & Bird, contractors and builders, and remained with them until the spring of 1837. In the fall of 1836, he, in company with others, made a trip to the town of Lisbon, located a claim and made some improvements, and returned to the city the same season; afterward he disposed of his claim. Early in 1837, while Mr. Juneau was surveying the Territorial road from Milwaukee to Madison via Jefferson, he made several claims at different points along the route, one of them being for Mr. Hardell, on Section 34. A few weeks later, Mr. Hardell, in company with Mr. Dousman and Mr. Edgerton, came out on horseback to examine these claims. Mr. Hardell, after looking over his claim and the surroundings, at once purchased an additional one-half section adjoining, making in all one section of land. He went to work at once and built a shanty and broke six acres of land, and in June went into the city and brought out his family. From this time he devoted his energies almost wholly to agricultural pursuits. During the erection of the capitol building at Madison, he was appointed inspector of the work, and thereby saved the State an expense of several thousand dollars. He was also appointed inspector of the court house at Waukesha. At his death, which occurred June 10, 1878, at the advanced age of eighty-three years, the county and community lost one of its most worthy citizens—a man noted for his radical and just political opinions; of undoubted probity of character and rare intelligence. He left one of the finest estates in the town of Summit, consisting of 1,800 acres of land, improved and stocked. There are now but four of the family left, two sons and two daughters. They are W. J. and A. G. Hardell, and Mrs. Charles H. Flinton and Mrs. L. P. Merickle, all of whom reside in the town of Summit.

ALEXANDER FOSTER PRATT.

The subject of this sketch was born in Westmoreland, Cheshire Co., N. H., September 4, 1813. He was the youngest child of John and Nancy Pratt, natives of Massachusetts, who settled in New Hampshire in 1805. The father of A. F. Pratt was an extensive farmer and cattle-dealer, who died in 1822. Alexander continued with his mother at the old homestead up to the age of sixteen years with the ordinary advantages of a country common school, with the exception of the last two years, when he was sent to an academy in the adjoining town.

At the age of sixteen, he was employed in a dry-goods store in Woodstock, Vt., where he remained two years, when he went to Boston, Mass., and engaged as salesman in the wholesale dry-goods house of J. T. Hobart & Co., where he remained until the fall of 1836. He then came to Milwaukee with a stock of goods, and opened a store in a shanty, as there was no better building to be had. He built a shanty of boards on a leased lot large enough to hold his stock of goods, which was valued at $5,000, and commenced business under the firm name of Hobart & Pratt. Milwaukee was at that time, a big town on paper, but not much of a place for selling dry goods, as there were no roads in either direction by which to get into the country and but few people in the country when you got there. The trade was principally confined to dickering in city and town lots, which were bringing at that time from $1,000 to $5,000 each. The ground had been broken for the erection of a court house, out in the woods, as it was then called, and lots in that vicinity were a legal tender. In December, 1836, many speculators had left Milwaukee, and business became exceedingly dull. Mr. Pratt during that winter traded his stock of goods for a little money and the balance in town lots and settlers' claims. None of the land had been offered for sale by the Government and settlers' claims were good. In the spring of 1837, he purchased of M. D. Cutler, a claim on 480 acres of land on Fox River, in the town of Prairieville (now Waukesha), paying $1,000 for the claim in four village lots in the village of Ottawa, Ill., and commenced to build a house and make other improvements. He employed a man and his wife, and at once commenced farming. In January, 1839, he married Antonette M. Powers, daughter of Henry Powers, who had recently come from Plattsburg, N. Y., and settled in Troy, Walworth Co., Wis. Mr. Pratt had three children—two daughters and one son. Elizabeth S. was born in 1839, married Darwin Fuller of St. Louis, and died in December, 1871. Charles A. was born in 1843, married Emma Brown, of St. Louis, and is now one of the proprietors of the Garrison House, Sedalia, Mo. Francis H. was born in January, 1849, married Clarence A. Jones, and resides in St. Louis. Mr. Pratt resided on his farm until the Government land sale in October, 1839, after which, until the spring of 1844, he resided in Milwaukee; whilst in Milwaukee, he was Constable and Deputy Sheriff, and was considered the best detective in the Territory. In the summer of 1843, he built a house on Cass street, near Division, and cut a road through the brush from the court house before he could haul his building material to the site. In the spring of 1844, in company with his brother, George C., he returned to the farm in Prairieville, and purchased quite a large lot of lands adjoining the old farm, built another house, and commenced farming on quite a large scale for those times. The Pratt brothers, in 1845, had under the plow over 300 acres, and had a large stock of cattle, horses and sheep. Farming in those days, on a large scale, was anything but profitable. The best of winter wheat sold in Milwaukee for 38 cents per bushel, after hauling through the mud with ox teams. From 1844, that part of Milwaukee County now Waukesha, began to fill up rapidly with actual settlers, Mr. Pratt being what was then termed an old settler, was called upon to do considerable public business, such as laying out highways and building bridges. Out of settlers' claims, grew a great many little law suits, and Mr. Pratt became quite a celebrated pettifogger. This public life suited him better than tilling the soil. In the winter of 1847, Mr. Pratt and his brother sold a large part of their farm, which was the end of farming. Together with W. A. Barstow, A. E. Elmore and A. W. Randall, and perhaps a few others, during the session of the Territorial Legislature of 1846, he conceived the idea of seceding from Milwaukee, and organizing a new county.*

Politics, at that time, had not entered very much into our elections. Mr. Pratt was an uncompromising Democrat, and upon the admission of the State became one of the leading Democrats in the county and State. In 1848, he was elected Sheriff; he discharged the duties of the office to the general satisfaction of the people.

Mr. Pratt was usually at Madison during the sessions of the Legislature, either as member of the "Third House" or as correspondent of some Democratic paper.

He was the reporter for the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin when that was a Democratic paper, and was reporter for the Milwaukee News for several sessions. In about 1853 or 1854, he commenced the publication of the Plaindealer at Waukesha. It was a strong supporter of Franklin Pierce's administration, and Mr. Pratt was appointed Postmaster at Waukesha by him.

Mr. Pratt went to Kansas in the spring of 1862, with the Third Wisconsin Cavalry (Col. Barstow), in the sutler's department. Whilst in Kansas, he wrote for the Milwaukee News, and was for a short time editor of a newspaper at Leavenworth. His editorials in that paper were not pleasing to Gen. Blunt, who was in charge of the department, and he ordered the paper suppressed, and very soon Mr. Pratt (for something said in his correspondence to the Milwaukee News), was banished from the sutler's department and escorted over the line into Missouri, where he remained three or four months. At the end of that time, the command of the Department of Kansas had passed into other hands, and it became necessary to look for some of the parties whom Mr. Pratt had accused of stealing from and defrauding the Government. The officer in command being a Wisconsin man, and having some knowledge of Mr. Pratt's reputation as a detective, sent for him, and Mr. Pratt was appointed United States Detective to hunt some of the very men who had caused his paper to be suppressed, and himself to be banished beyond the Union lines.

*Elsewhere this subject is more elaborately treated.

He returned to Waukesha in July, 1865, and commenced the re-publication of the Plain-dealer, which he continued up to the time of his death, which occurred on the 30th day of November, 1874.

Mr. Pratt held various town, village and county offices; was twice elected to the office of Sheriff, three times elected President of the village of Waukesha, and discharged the duties of all these offices with honor to himself and satisfaction to his constituents. In public progress and improvement, he was always in the advance, and few men in Waukesha ever did more to make the village what it now is than Alexander F. Pratt.

He was liberal in his religious views; a member of no church, but contributed to the support of the Episcopal Church, of which his wife and family were members. His long residence and business connection with Waukesha County made him one of the best-known men in it.

Mr. Pratt was always ready to express his opinion, never waiting to find out the opinion of others; and when he engaged in any enterprise, never abandoned it till he got to the end. Sometimes he would fail to accomplish his object, but never for want of energy or perseverance. He was a very warm and true friend, as well as a very bitter enemy. He was a very kind neighbor, always ready to grant any relief in his power to persons in trouble, and at his death many exclaimed, "I have lost my best friend."

SIDNEY ALFRED BEAN.

Sidney Alfred Bean, the subject of this sketch, was born in Chesterfield Village, Essex Co., N. Y., Sept. 16, 1833. He came with his parents to Waukesha in the year 1846, the previous years of his life having been spent in about equal portions at the place of his nativity and in the city of Milwaukee.

Physically, he was of a somewhat slight organization, though but seldom prostrated by sickness, or in any way prevented from discharging thoroughly and successfully the many arduous duties that thronged his young life. In his early childhood he displayed an unusual fondness for learning, as well as an unusual facility for acquiring it. At the age of ten years, he was quite proficient in the science of algebra, and, while still a mere lad, became far advanced in many of the higher branches of knowledge.

In 1850, he entered the sophomore class of the University of Michigan, and graduated in 1852, going forth into the world with every promise of a brilliant future. One of the professors of the university wrote that "he was distinguished for the ease and rapidity with which he acquired knowledge. Indeed, he seems to have mastered the subjects almost intuitively, so that, while his scholarship was thorough and accurate, he was enabled to devote much time to independent literary and scientific studies outside of the regular college curriculum. His proficiency in mathematics already indicated for him an exalted position in this branch of science; besides, the talent and earnestness which he thus early exhibited as a speaker and writer, promised unusual eminence in more popular fields of usefulness."

His first business venture after leaving college was the establishment of a newspaper, entitled the "Independent Press," and in its columns he wrote with the ardor of youth, and yet with marked intellectual acumen, making appeals in behalf of the weak, the down-trodden and the poor. In all things he raised his voice for justice; and there could exist no meanness or vice that did not meet his scathing denunciation. At the time of the border trouble, known as the Kansas war, he was untiring in his efforts to rescue that fair Territory from the clutches of the slave power, and it is well remembered with what graphic eloquence he sought to rouse the people to a realization of their impending peril.

He afterward became connected with Carroll College as a Professor of Mathematics. This institution was, at that time, in a most flourishing condition, and gave promise of becoming a seat of learning second to none in the country. No one labored more assiduously, or gave more freely of his means that the institution might be established on a lasting foundation, than did the subject of this sketch. His specialty as a student had thus far been the science of mathematics; but he now sought other fields of learning and became engrossed in the study of language. "Not of the languages," as he wrote, "but of that science which treats of the forces that underlie all forms and idioms, and out of which all forms and idioms grow."

In the year 1859, at the request of Chancellor Barnard, he delivered a lecture before the University of Wisconsin on the "Study of Language;" and among his papers are found an elaborate outline of a philosophical treatise on this subject, which it is known he intended to publish.

He was a careful and accurate writer, and, aside from the purity of his style, he always wrote with the well-defined purpose of doing good, of correcting abuses, and of exalting the standard of human conduct.

In a lecture delivered in Waukesha when he was not yet twenty years of age, he said: "The holiest thing a man can do, is to make himself a perfect man by loving and living for his brother. Do good! 'Tis a simple phrase, but there is a melody in the thought of it that out-sings all the weariness of the heart. Oh, suffering, sad humanity! In thy name will we live to do good, in thy name do we cast in our lot with that little band of which Jesus is the King, who are laboring for their fellows, to beautify the world with blessings, and give it an undying garniture of noble, and disinterested deeds." Among his best-remembered lectures, are those on "Heroism" and "God in History;" they were both of them masterly discourses, compact in logic and style, and replete with passages of fervid eloquence. The moral of the latter one was that God takes cognizance of the actions of nations, and that he will most certainly punish them for every deviation from the principles of justice and mercy. He insisted that human slavery was such a deviation and in answer to the plea that it had Christianized the African race, he exclaimed: "Oh, the iniquitous solecism of evoking the Christian from the ashes of the man! If the Jews held slaves, not so much the better for slavery, but so much the worse for the Jews. Slavery is fairly responsible, not only for all the actual consequences of it, but for all the possible consequences. It is logically held for all the evils which exist in posse and not for those alone in esse. A law or an institution which confers a power to do wrong, is criminal to the full extent to which that power may be carried under any circumstances, because a power that ought never to be exercised ought never to exist." At the breaking-out of the late war, he was appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the Fourth Wisconsin Infantry, and dedicated his great abilities and his great heart to the cause of human freedom. No purer or more disinterested patriot ever drew his sword in defense of the right. Few men occupied positions so enviable as his; surrounded by everything that makes life pleasant, a happy home, warm friends and bright prospects of future honor and usefulness, he sacrificed all to his sense of duty, and followed his country's flag, until he met a soldier's death in the hour that its showy folds waved victoriously over the enemy's works. In his military career, as in every other undertaking to which he applied his comprehensive mind and unwearied energy, he was eminently successful. On the promotion of Col. Halbert E. Paine, he was made Colonel of his regiment, which position he held at the time of his death. It is not designed in this brief sketch of Col. Bean to give a narrative of his career as a soldier, for the materials at hand will not permit; but from the glance that has here been presented of his exalted character and noble life, it will readily be inferred that in the field of arms, as well as in the quiet walks of life, his star was still in the ascendant. Such was the fact, for the exceptional adaptability for mastering whatever task came to him, that had characterized him as a scholar, a writer and a public speaker, soon bore him to the front rank as a soldier. It is entirely within bounds to say that no young officer in the great army of volunteers understood the military art with more thoroughness and precision than he. The love and admiration of his men and of all who enjoyed his friendship, knew no bounds. He drew his sword distinctly to give freedom to the enslaved, that thereby his country might rise to her true glory. Through clouds and disappointment, he fought with an unswerving faith that the desired end would be gained, and, though he fell ere the great battle was won, his faith was justified. The end was gained, and who shall say that his precious blood was spilled in vain? He entered the service at the commencement of the war and served faithfully and most gallantly until the fatal morning of May 8, 1863. When in front of Port Hudson, Louisiana, directing a movement designed to silence one of the enemy's batteries, and in the front line of the national troops, he was shot through the right lung and instantly killed. So ended, in its twenty-ninth year, the life of Sidney A. Bean. He gave his life for the country and principles he had loved so well, and left to his friends and his State an enduring monument of fidelity and valor that in no age or clime has been excelled. In closing this brief tribute to the worth of a true hero, the words of the world's greatest poet inscribed upon his tomb seem most appropriate:

"Good night, sweet prince,
And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest."

CHAUNCEY H. PURPLE.

Among those who came to Waukesha County quite early, and were somewhat active characters in its history, was C. H. Purple. He was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., in 1820, and came to Waukesha in 1844. He at once engaged in mercantile business in Waukesha (then Prairieville); some years later, he removed to Brookfield, where he was engaged in the same business, together with that of lumbering. In 1854, Mr. Purple was elected a member of the Wisconsin Legislature, and in 1858, he was appointed bank clerk of the State Treasurer's office. He then removed to Madison, and in 1859 he was appointed Assistant State Treasurer, under S. D. Hastings, a position he held during Mr. Hastings' term of office, and also during that of William E. Smith, the present Governor, until April, 1868—in all over eight years. In 1869, he removed to Watertown, Wis., where he engaged in the lumber business until his death, which occurred in December, 1879. In addition to his correct business habits, Chauncey H. Purple was an active worker in the reforms of the day, particularly in the temperance cause. He was a charter member of the Rescue Temple of Honor, and its flourishing condition and acknowledged usefulness were largely due to his untiring efforts. In all of his active life, he established for himself a reputation which commanded the respect of all who knew him. Few men can do more. His brother, Ezra S. Purple, is still a resident of Waukesha.

WILLIAM AUGUSTUS BARSTOW.

William A. Barstow came of a highly respectable family, whose ancestral seat was Naburn Hall, York, England, and some of the name are still found there. Four brothers came on the "True Love," landed at Boston in 1635, and settled in Hanover and Hingham, Mass., from whom all the Barstows are distinctly traced. William Augustus Barstow was born in Plainfield, Windham Co., Conn., on the 13th of September, 1813. He remained at home attending school, and assisting in farm work, until the age of sixteen, when he left home and became a clerk in the store of his eldest brother, Samuel H., at Norwich, Conn., where he remained four years. S. H. Barstow then removed to Cleveland, Ohio, where William soon followed, in April, 1834. The next year another brother, Horatio N., came out, and W. A. entered into the forwarding and commission business at Cleveland, and milling at Dresden, Ohio, where he remained about five years. In May, 1839, Samuel H. came to Prairie Village (so called at that time) to look after the building of a mill, and in November, William A. came with the mill-irons and to make his home here, which now began to be called Prairieville. The establishing of a flouring-mill with a smut machine was a great event for the settlers, as the flour made before that time was of a slate color. William A. subsequently became one of the principal owners of the mill property, which embraced a good portion of the village.

In the small community of Prairieville, the miller and merchant combined was a personage of no small importance, and he had frequent opportunity for the exhibition of his kindly character, being ever ready to extend a helping hand to a suffering neighbor. He was known and respected for other traits than those of kindness and generosity, however. He was the true and loyal friend who never made "the promise to the ear but broke it to the hope," the acute, farsighted counselor, and the honorable and upright judge to whom all were willing to refer their causes of difference. He held at one time the office of Postmaster, and was appointed one of the three commissioners of the county of Milwaukee, which then embraced what is now Waukesha County within its limits. He was prominent and efficient in the creation of the new county, and had the assistance of his brother, Samuel H. Barstow, at that time a member of the Legislature. In 1844, William A. married Maria Quarles, of Southport (now Kenosha), and continued to reside in Waukesha. In the fall of 1849, Mr. Barstow was nominated by the Democratic State Convention for the office of Secretary of State, and was elected. On entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office, he found its affairs in the condition of chaos. His clear mind soon brought order out of confusion, and with patient labor he wrote out, in the most complete and finished manner, nearly the full record of the office, up to the time when it came under his control. He was an earnest advocate of the first railroad enterprise in this State, and was among the foremost of those who lent their influence toward securing the charter of the Milwaukee & Mississippi Railroad. As one of the original subscribers to the capital stock, and one of the first directors of the company, his efficient aid was of importance in its early struggles.

In 1853, he was nominated for Governor by the Democratic State Convention, and was elected to that honorable position. He then removed his family to Madison, where they made many friends. He was nominated for a second term, but the election was contested, resulting in the installation, by the courts, of his opponent, Coles Bashford, although Mr. Barstow resigned before the decision was rendered, and Arthur McArthur was Governor for a few days. Gov. Barstow then removed to Janesville and entered into banking business, which did not prove a successful venture. He then took to milling again with his younger brother, G. H. Barstow, for a short time, when the war commenced, and he obtained permission to raise a regiment of cavalry, which he proceeded to do. There were many ready to respond to his call. The regiment was twelve hundred strong, of which he was commissioned Colonel, Nov. 9, 1861. In March, the regiment started for St. Louis, but before reaching Chicago some cars were thrown from the track and ten or twelve killed. Col. Barstow was a great favorite with all, both officers and men, who still cherish his memory. His health failed so that he was not able to keep to the saddle, and he was appointed to the head of the court-martial at St. Louis, where he presided. At the close of the war, he was mustered out and honorably discharged, March 4, 1865. That wonderful power to secure the attachment of those around him was never on any other scene of action so completely and usefully manifested as it was among the officers and men of his regiment. His previous station in civil life and his evident strength of character and mind, secured him universal respect, among the officers of all ranks, in both the regular and volunteer army, with whom he came in contact. His dignity of manner and remarkably fine personal appearance attracted attention alike in camp, on the march, on parade and in the military court over which he presided. While in Leavenworth, he was prostrated with a disease which had become chronic, and his illness proved fatal. He died at Leavenworth on the 13th of December, 1865, at the age of fifty-two years. There were none of his relatives present except his two oldest sons, Frank Q. and Augustus Barstow, who were with him during his last sickness. His other relatives were not aware of his failing condition. In the excitement of the moment of her arrival, his wife directed his remains to be taken to Brighton, Ohio (near Cleveland), where his family were interred. His many friends feel that his place of rest should have been in Waukesha, the place he had done so much for, and where the people would have wished to raise a monument to his memory.

“Barstow and the balance” were charged by the newspapers with stealing vast sums from the State in the management of the school lands and in locating the State Hospital for the insane at Madison. As to the truth of these charges, Edward M. Hunter, Gov. Barstow’s private secretary, wrote as follows for the published reports of the State Historical Society: “It may not be amiss for me in this connection to state, that, intimate as I necessarily was with all that was done or considered in the executive office during the time Gov. Barstow retained his position, there was nothing done or proposed affecting the public interest, but what might have been printed in the largest type, and hung upon the outer wall of the capitol for the inspection of all. He, during that period, neither counseled, took into consideration, nor did, a public wrong, and his children need never fear to direct the closest scrutiny toward his acts as Governor of Wisconsin. When he first entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office, he was in comfortable circumstances; when he left it he was poor, and was harassed for the want of means, and all that he subsequently secured and lost did not repay him the amount he expended during his official term from his private purse.” And it might be added that David S. Vittum, who was Captain of Company F, in Mr. Barstow’s regiment, saw his old commander in Leavenworth a few days before his death and then gave him $25 for the purchase of luxuries to nourish the fast wasting body. These things go to prove that Mr. Barstow was honest in handling the public moneys of the State.

As to the military career of the noted Democratic chieftain whose life is the subject of this sketch, Elias A. Calkins, of Milwaukee, a Major in Mr. Barstow’s regiment, wrote liberally at the request of the State Historical Society, and the following extracts are from his article: “In August, 1861, at the request of a number of gentlemen who desired to enter the volunteer army in a cavalry organization, for which their tastes and some study had adapted them—I visited the headquarters of Gen. Fremont, at St. Louis, with letters from Gov. Randall, certifying that I represented responsible persons interested in raising a force of cavalry, which the State authorities were not authorized to recruit and equip. I met Gov. Barstow at St. Louis, where he had been called by a business undertaking, and stated to him my mission. I was unable to procure any satisfactory reply from Gen. Fremont, and Gov. Barstow, who had several friends in military and civil life there, proposed to interest himself in the object I had in view, to which I cordially assented, and placed all the matters connected with it in his hands. He then made a proposition to Gen. Fremont to recruit, equip, mount and arm in Wisconsin a cavalry regiment, independent of State authority, except as to the commission of officers, the expenses to be re-imbursed by the Government; and his proposition was accepted. Gen. Simon Cameron was then Secretary of War, and about that time visited St. Louis, to inspect the affairs of Gen. Fremont’s department, and Gov. Barstow’s authority to raise the cavalry regiment was approved by him. Several weeks had, of course, elapsed, and it was October before Gov. Barstow returned to the State, when he established the camp of rendezvous at Janesville, and issued notices of his readiness to receive recruits. Intelligence reached him almost immediately of the formation of several companies for his camp, when he was notified that his authority to raise the regiment had been revoked by the War Department. The recruits, of course, generally disbanded, and many went into other organizations. A few of the companies, however, retained their standing. Gov. Barstow proceeded at once to Washington, and, after a short delay, procured a renewal of his authority to raise the regiment, with which he returned to the State. It was still some weeks before he could procure camp equipage, and the baffling delays had discouraged recruiting. These difficulties were, however, surmounted, and in December the first companies entered camp. In January, 1862, the regiment was filled to the minimum, and in February the maximum was reached. Col. Barstow was probably in June, 1862, appointed Provost Marshal of Kansas. Martial law had been declared, and the extreme lawlessness of the country made the duties of his office more than usually manifold. In September following, Col. Barstow was relieved from duty as Provost Marshal; the lawlessness and violence from which the State suffered was not suppressed during his administration; in fact, they rather increased than otherwise. The guerrilla forces of Quantrell were very numerous and active, and outlaws who were the refuse and 'cow boys' of both armies, swarmed like pestilent vermin throughout the country. His successors produced smaller results, if possible, than he did. For a year afterward, during which Quantrell's sack of Lawrence occurred, a reign of terror prevailed along the entire border. Peace and quiet were not, in fact, restored till after the war closed. After being relieved from Provost Marshal duty, Col. Barstow was assigned with several companies of his regiment to the First Brigade of the Army of the Frontier.

"Camp duty and army fare told seriously upon Col. Barstow's health, and incapacitated him for the long rides and rough duties on which the men were ordered. He was, however, in such health, and possessed the confidence of the army commander to that extent, that he was placed in command of the camp of invalid reserves, including the teamsters and the guards of the baggage and supply trains at Rhea's Mills, when the army marched out to meet the enemy, until the close of the battle of Prairie Grove. He rejoined the regiment the next day, at its place of bivouac on the battle-field, and resumed command. Other operations of considerable extent and magnitude followed, in which the regiment was constantly engaged, including the magnificent raid on the rebel camps in the Arkansas Valley and on Van Buren, which occupied the last days of December, 1862, and the first days of January, 1863. During a portion of this time, he was with the regiment, and part of the time he was detained in camp by illness.

"In the midst of these stirring events, and probably in the month of November of that year, 1862, the regiment was encamped with the main body of the Army of the Frontier, at a point some forty or fifty miles southwest of Fayetteville. While there I received a letter from a trusted adviser and an intimate friend of Gov. Randall, and of his successor, Gov. Harvey, inclosing a proposition that influences should be brought to bear, with Col. Barstow's consent, to procure his appointment as Brigadier General. It was suggested in the letter that enlistments were tardy, that the enforcement of the draft was unpopular, and that it was the policy of the Administration to attract the Democrats to the support of war measures, by showing that the favors, or, in other words, that military official commissions, were distributed without regard to partisanship, among the leading men of both political organizations. The letter conveyed an intimation that, when promoted to brigadier rank, he would be recalled to the State to superintend and stimulate recruiting. It was suggested that, as a basis of the application for his appointment, I should procure the certificate of army officers as to his capacity and fitness for the duties of a higher military position. I showed him the letter, but he declined to take any of the steps that it mentioned as the means of procuring the proposed promotion. He expressed the opinion, that, if the appointment was desirable for the public reasons stated; it would be procured by the State authorities at home, without any steps being taken by him or his friends in the field. Nothing further was ever heard of the proposition.

"During January and February of 1863, Col. Barstow remained at Fayetteville, Ark., suffering constantly from ill health. The army then moved back into Missouri, to be nearer the base of supplies. Col. Barstow accompanied the regiment as far north as Cassville, Mo. From there, in February, probably, he proceeded to Kansas to inspect the detachments of his regiments in that section, hoping also to procure an order for them to join the main body in the field. This was his last service with the regiment. His health was considerably broken, and he was unable to perform field duty. He remained at Fort Leavenworth during the spring and following summer. He was then detailed on court-martial duty at department headquarters in St. Louis, and remained on detached duty of that character until the end of his term of service.

He never fully recovered his health, but was constantly feeble, and often prostrate, during the remainder of his term of service. He was finally mustered out, and honorably discharged, March 4, 1865. By the assistance of influential friends, he then procured a trade permit from the Treasury Department, authorizing him to trade at any post on White or Arkansas Rivers. I learn that the day he received this permit, he was offered $20,000 for the commercial privileges which it covered, and for the use of his name. He refused the offer, thinking it was as valuable to him as to anybody; having also arrangements on foot and capable backers for large stocks of goods to be put on sale at the various points named in the permit. He visited that country to select and establish trading-posts before sending the goods; and, on his return to St. Louis, was met by the information that all restrictions upon trade on the Mississippi River and its tributaries had been removed. His permit was, therefore, of no more value than so much blank paper. He soon afterward proceeded to Leavenworth, where he remained during the summer and autumn. He was, while there, again prostrated with the disease which had become chronic in his bowels, and this illness proved fatal. It being fully established that he died of disease contracted in the service, an officer's pension was granted to his widow.

"He never shunned a duty because it was a painful one. While Provost Marshal General of Kansas, he was directed by the department commander, Gen. Blunt, to suppress the publication of a radical Democrat newspaper at Leavenworth, and he discharged the command promptly and without question. The publication of the paper was afterward undertaken by an old Wisconsin friend of Col. Barstow's, to whom such indiscretions were imputed that the same discipline was directed to be applied against him, and the order was enforced literally, and without delay.

"A more eloquent and elaborate tribute than this is due from me to William A. Barstow. During many years of arduous and embittered political warfare I was by his side, and in my profession it was frequently my duty as it was my pleasure to defend his character from partisan and personal assaults. I believe that he cherished for me a reciprocal regard, and our friendship was cemented in hardship and danger, and amid scenes of blood, to which we were called by common sentiment of patriotic duty. He fills a soldier's grave, for he as truly died in the cause of his country as if he had received a fatal wound in battle. And I shall never cease to cherish his memory, for his many manly virtues; for his intrepid spirit, which was not disturbed either in the decisive emergencies of political conflict, or in more trying vicissitudes of peril and distress; for the integrity with which he adhered to one set of principles and to one set of friends throughout his public career; and as the foremost man, living or dead, in the Democracy of the State!"

JOHN HODGSON.

During the war, German and Irish companies were raised throughout the State. In speaking of this feature of recruiting, a local paper, in August, 1862, paid the following tribute to John Hodgson:

"All, all, have received a cordial recognition at the hands of the military bureau except our English citizens. Yet, although they have been overlooked, we by no means think it has been intentional. It is an error of the head and not of the heart. Waukesha and adjoining counties have a large population of English-born citizens, than whom none bear deeper or more loyal devotion to the institutions of our country. Among this number is John Hodgson. When a mere child, he left his home in Old England, determined, much against the wishes of his family, to seek his fortune in the New World. He arrived in Detroit penniless, and without a friend or acquaintance. Passing along the street, his eye accidentally caught the sign of the Surveyor General of Michigan. Now, surveying was a business with which young Hodgson, even at that time, possessed good knowledge of—for his father was a surveyor, and the earliest inclinations of the son were trained in a similar channel. Walking into the office of the surveyor, the youth asked some kind of employment, which he fortunately obtained, and was duly installed in the family of his employer. It was but a brief period before his employer discovered that he possessed rare talents as a surveyor. Thereupon, the library of the surveyor, and everything which could facilitate the acquisition of knowledge, were placed at the disposal of the young student. At sixteen years of age, young Hodgson was associated with the Surveyor General in business, having established a reputation for integrity, as well as mathematical correctness, which was of more value to him than mines of wealth. At twenty-one years of age, Mr. Hodgson had accumulated $5,000 as the fruits of his profession. He married the daughter of Capt. Blake, the gallant old veteran of the lakes, whose name, not many years ago, was as familiar along the lines of our great inland lakes as household words. Removing to Wisconsin, Mr. Hodgson, by a judicious investment of his means, added to the rise of real estate, soon became the possessor of a handsome property. His strict and honorable dealings and business qualifications attracted to him hosts of friends, and for years he was Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of Pewaukee. When Dennison Worthington resigned his seat in the State Senate, Mr. Hodgson was nominated and elected by acclamation to fill the unexpired term; and it was only because of the peremptory refusal of Mr. H. to serve, that he was not unanimously re-elected to the same position.

"Governor Salomon! the times are of startling moment in our history; times too, when every man's physical and moral power is needed to drive back the hordes of despotism who are undermining the foundations of Government. We have called your attention to the representative man of the English-born in our State—and who in the county of Waukesha combines more influence than all the politicians and lawyers together. Gov. Salomon, "cut red tape," send John Hodgson a colonel's commission, leave to him the officering of the regiment, and all other details, and in thirty days he will furnish a thousand hearts of oak to fight the battles of the Union. We know not as Mr. Hodgson ever thought of taking the field; certain it is, that he never accepts any position of honor unless pressed upon him. But this we know, our English citizens constitute a large portion of our best population, and Mr. Hodgson is their representative man, and a true patriot. He needs no offices nor emoluments, for of wealth he has a sufficiency, and it requires not honors to be thrust upon him to enhance his popularity. A colonel's commission, therefore, to Mr. Hodgson, would not only be a recognition of a large class of citizens heretofore almost entirely ignored, but it would be a compliment to them which he, as a true patriot and lover of his adopted country, could not consistently refuse."

The above extract shows more the esteem in which John Hodgson was held in Waukesha County, and the influence he carried, than the details of his life. His father was the steward of a famous estate near Scarborough, England. On the death of his father, the oldest son, older than the subject of this sketch, succeeded to the position of steward, in which he naturally "put on some airs." He issued orders to young John at one time which were not obeyed, and thereupon proposed to inflict a flogging upon the brother, who resented being made a menial. John then went to his mother and declared he should leave England. Whatever could be said to prevent so young a lad, for he was only sixteen, from going alone into a strange country, was urged, but to no purpose. His mother therefore prepared him for the journey. John had always been a pet of the surveyors, and had thus acquired a complete knowledge of the business, and also of mathematics, in which science he was a prodigy. This surveyor, when his young friend was about to sail, packed a trunk with such books as he thought would be most useful for him in the New World—among them the best works on surveying.

The young Englishman arrived in Detroit in 1827, and began at once to look over the country, his purse suffering the while, until nothing was left for his support but the chest of books. In this strait he began a search for work. Seeing a sign, "Gen. Lucius Lyon, Surveyor General of the Northwest Territory," he walked in and asked for Mr. Lyon. He had addressed that gentleman in person. This took away every particle of the penniless English lad's courage, and instead of talking about surveying, as he intended, he meekly inquired if a chore-boy was wanted. One was wanted—he must go up to Mrs. Lyon, who would engage him. He was engaged to milk, care for the horse, prepare the wood and do general work, although he knew nothing about such labors. His place was the kitchen. In that room no light was provided except such as the fireplace afforded. John, after his work was done, would start a blazing fire and lay down upon the hearth to peruse the books his old friend sent. Night after night for a month or two this programme was repeated, when, one evening, Gen. Lyon entered the kitchen and found him thus engaged. He walked up to John, reached for the book and took notice of its title. "What do you know about the contents of this book?" he asked. John replied that he knew all about them. "Can you work this problem?" queried the surveyor. John said he could. A slate was brought, and the chore-boy wrought out whatever proposition or problem was offered, and with such rapidity as showed a master mind. "Who are you?" demanded Mr. Lyon. "I am John Hodgson," said the lad. "But what does this mean? This is a rare work—the most elaborate ever published. Who are you? How came you to know all about this book? Where are you from?" Thus the astonished official plied his young chore-boy with questions, finally learning his history. John was asked if he would like to go into the office. He would. Mrs. Lyon objected at first, saying he was the best chore-boy they ever had; but her husband settled the matter by saying that John "knew more about surveying than he did himself." And John entered the office. After remaining two or three years with Gen. Lyon, Mr. Hodgson went to Cincinnati and entered the land office. There he worked by the piece. His companions would always quit when they had earned $3 per day, which required from three to six hours, but he never left his work until he had earned $10, which required from twelve to sixteen hours per day. This ambitious industry characterized all his after life.

In 1834, Mr. Hodgson came to Wisconsin and surveyed until 1838, when he returned to Michigan for a brief period. In 1842, when he located on his farm in Pewaukee, he had entered nearly 9,000 acres of land. He entered the land on which Eagle and North Prairie stood; a large portion of the site of Geneva, in Walworth County, where he built the first dam and saw-mill, and large tracts near Madison, in Dane County, as well as in various other localities. He thus became a very wealthy man by his own efforts and good management.

In 1861, Joseph Bond was nominated for State Senator. A few days later, John Hodgson was nominated as his opponent, by the Republicans. As soon as Mr. Bond learned of this, he refused to make the canvass, and wrote Mr. Hodgson that he would support him (Hodgson) for Senator. Mr. Hodgson received all the votes cast, except about 200, in the county.

While mass meetings were being held to recruit for the Twenty-eighth Regiment during the war, Mr. Hodgson made a stirring speech, which will always be remembered by all who heard it, and which he closed with these words: "To the government of the United States I am indebted for protection, both to person and property, and I gladly yield whatever I have that is required to maintain that government."

From 1862 until his death, Mr. Hodgson was a member of the Board of Managers of the State Industrial School for Boys. He died at "Derwent Farm," his home in Pewaukee, December 22, 1869, aged fifty-seven, and the procession that followed his remains to their last resting-place was the largest one ever seen in Waukesha County.

ALEXANDER W. RANDALL.

The subject of this sketch was born in the village of Ames, Montgomery Co., N. Y., in the year 1819. After passing through his school days, a comparatively brief but successful period of his life, he read law, and was admitted to the bar at the age of nineteen. Soon after he emigrated to Wisconsin, locating at Prairieville, now Waukesha, in 1840. He commenced the practice of his profession and had a large share of business, which he managed with success.

He returned to Canajoharie, N. Y., in the summer of 1842, where he married Miss Mary C. Van Vechten, daughter of Herbertis and Susan Van Vechten. He returned in a few weeks with his bride to Waukesha, where they continued to reside. The death of Mrs. Randall occurred in the fall of 1858. Mr. Randall continued to make Waukesha his home until 1865. Their only child died in 1852, in the ninth year of her age.

He devoted so much of his time to politics that it interfered considerably with his legal practice. Mr. Randall was originally a Democrat. He was always zealous in the cause he espoused, and a working member in the full sense of the term, of the party with which he acted. His first office was that of member of the First Constitutional Convention, in 1846. He took a prominent position in that body. In 1848, when the Free Soil movement was inaugurated, Mr. Randall was prominent in that movement. He did not, however, long harmonize with that party, but soon fell back into the ranks of the regular Democracy.

In the fall of 1854, Mr. Randall was elected as an Independent Democrat to the Assembly of the State, and gave the casting vote that elected Charles Durkee United States Senator. He became, afterward, a recognized Republican, and in 1855 ran on the State ticket of that party for Attorney General, but was defeated with the rest of the ticket. In the gubernatorial contest between Barstow and Bashford, he acted as one of the attorneys for the successful contestant, Bashford.

In 1856, Gov. Bashford appointed Mr. Randall Judge of the Second Judicial Circuit Court, composed of the counties of Milwaukee and Waukesha, which position he filled with great credit to himself, and to the public's satisfaction. In 1857, he was nominated as the Republican candidate for Governor, and was elected. He entered upon the duties of Governor on the 1st of January, 1858, and discharged them so satisfactorily to the people that he was re-elected in the fall of 1859.

His second term carried him through the year 1861—the first year of the war. He proved himself a very able war Governor. The ability, energy and boldness with which he labored for the service gave him a national reputation. He was known everywhere as the "war Governor of Wisconsin." In 1861, Mr. Randall was a candidate for United States Senator, but was not elected. At the close of his second term as Governor, Lincoln appointed him Minister to Rome. In 1865 he was appointed Assistant Postmaster General. Mr. Randall afterward, upon the resignation of William Dennison as Postmaster General, was placed at the head of the Postoffice Department, which position he held until the close of Johnson's administration. This was his last official position. He afterward opened a law office in the city of Washington and had a lucrative practice. He died at his residence in Elmira, N. Y., July 26, 1872.

The following proceedings, had by the Village Board of Waukesha and a mass meeting of citizens, are taken from a local paper, and are self-explanatory :

At a special meeting of the Village Board of Waukesha, called at 11 o'clock A. M., this 27th day of July, 1872 for the purpose of taking appropriate action on the death of Hon. A. W. Randall, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted :

WHEREAS, The sad tidings have reached us of the death of our former honored fellow-citizen, ex-Governor Alexander W. Randall, at Elmira, New York, on the 26th inst., and

WHEREAS, In these tidings we recognize that the hand of Providence has removed from earth a man useful to his generation, of true nobility of character, and whose name will ever be held in honor by the people of the great State of Wisconsin, to the advancement of whose interests he gave a great portion of his life and talents, and especially by his old neighbors at Waukesha, who knew and found cause to admire him ; therefore,

Resolved, That this hoard recommend that a public meeting of our citizens be held at Robinson's Hall this evening at 7:30 o'clock, to express a public appreciation of our great loss, and that it is further recommended that our merchants and business men close their places of business from 9 A. M. to 12 M. on Monday, July 29, 1872, and that the several clergymen of the village be requested to have the bells of their respective churches tolled between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock, A. M., Monday, July 29, 1872.

F. H. POTNEY, Village Clerk.

At a meeting of the citizens of this village, held at Robinson's hall on Saturday evening, July 27, 1872, to take action on the occasion of the death of our late fellow-townsmen, Alexander W. Randall, Elihu Enos was called to the chair, and R. L. Gove elected Secretary. The Chairman briefly stated the object of the meeting. Remarks suited to the occasion were made by A. Cook, Rev. Aitchison, John Gaspar, Richard Dunbar and others. On motion, a committee of nine was appointed by the meeting, as follows : A. Cook, Robert Dunlap, S. A. Randles, R. Dunbar, Vernon Tichenor, Samuel G. Curtis, R. L. Gove, E. Enos and W. D. Bacon, to draft resolutions expressive of the sense of the meeting. The following funeral exercises were decided upon : That service be held at the Baptist Church at 10:30 o'clock A. M., Monday, July 29 ; ringing of the church bell at 9:30 o'clock, tolling of the bell at 10 o'clock, to continue until 10:30 o'clock : procession of citizens to form at the Exchange corner during the tolling of the bell, and proceed to the church, where funeral exercises will take place in the following order : Singing, prayer, reading of the Scriptures, report of the Committee on Resolutions, remarks by resident clergymen and citizens, singing, benediction.

E. ENOS, Chairman.

R. L. GOVE, Secretary.

Adjourned meeting of the citizens at the Baptist Church, Monday, July 29, at 10:30 A. M. Meeting addressed by the Chairman and order of exercises announced ; singing by the choir ; reading of the minutes of Saturday evening ; prayer by Rev. Blackburn ; reading of the Scriptures by Rev. Camp ; report of the Committee on Resolutions, reported by their Chairman, A. Cook, Esq. :

Resolved, That we, citizens of Waukesha, from the time of his earliest manhood to a recent period the home of the late Hon. Alexander W. Randall, as long his acquaintance, associates and friends, here met to pay the tribute of respect to his memory, look upon his career, from the time of his taking up his residence at this place, just after attaining his majority, without pecuniary resources or the aid of influential family connections, attaining a commanding position at the bar, a seat in the State Legislature, the position of Judge of this circuit, the Executive chair of the State for two successive terms, the position of Minister at a foreign court, and finally gaining the confidence of the Executive head of the nation so fully as to be invited to the head of one of the Executive Departments of the National Government, being thereby made one of his confidential advisers on all questions of Executive responsibility and duty, evidences a degree of talent, culture, ability, tact and winning personal address very rarely found combined in equal degree in any one individual.

That if ambition seeks, as it justly may, expressions of confidence, appreciation of ability and honesty of purpose, he has enjoyed enough and more than enough to satisfy the most lofty, from his immediate neighbors, from the people of his State at large, and from the people of the nation, as expressed through their representatives in official position.

That, as Governor of this State, at the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, his executive ability in the discharge of duties devolving upon him, new to himself and to all others not trained to military life, of organizing, equipping and forwarding to the field of action the regiments sent from the State, challenged and received the admiration of the people, irrespective of party.

That the time and the circumstances of his entering the councils of the nation as Cabinet Minister—the Rebellion having been recently subdued, and having left eleven States in a state of chaos, to be reconstructed and brought to their original standing in the restored Union, and especially the reorganization of the functions of his own departments in those States, demanded the exercise of profound knowledge of human nature, far-seeing sagacity, the broadest philanthropy, and the fact that his discharge of those duties met the general approval of the country is of itself clear proof of the possession of all the qualities requisite to the highest order of statesmanship.

That we, without respect to party, and having the opportunity, from the close intimacy of an acquaintance and neighbor for many years with the deceased, with marked satisfaction point all men to the fact that while his trusts were many and responsible, in no instance has he ever failed to fulfill, with fidelity and ability, in every respect, every public trust committed to him.

That in sorrow and in grief at the occasion of our meeting, the pleasure of recording our high appreciation of his character as a citizen and a neighbor is still toned with the saddest mourning.

That we here, and while they are standing by his open grave in a distant State, tender to his bereaved widow and heart-stricken relatives our warmest sympathy in the loss which they have sustained in the death of a brother, a son and a husband, and the country at large by that of one of its most honored citizens.

The Milwaukee News, his political enemy, had this to say of Gov. Randall, on the day of his death:

“Our telegraphic columns contain the not unexpected announcement of the death of ex-Gov. Randall at his home in Elmira, N. Y., aged fifty-three years. Few men in their physical aspects have better promise of a long and vigorous life than Gov. Randall, but an acute disease which seized him a brief time since rapidly exhausted his vitality, and has prematurely, as it were, taken him from our midst.

“We have not the material at hand to write an accurate biography of Gov. Randall, and, if we had, the brief time allowed, and the narrow limits of one issue would fail to do the subject justice. Such a biography would be a tolerably full political history of the Territory and State of Wisconsin. A man of ability, gifted as a speaker, and with a taste for politics, general and personal, there have been few political campaigns of importance in Wisconsin in which Gov. Randall has not been a prominent and efficient actor.

“Gov. Randall’s career sufficiently proves him a man of marked ability, of devotion to his convictions and courage in maintaining them. In private life he was a man of pure morals and sound character—a genial member of society, a steadfast friend and by no means an implacable enemy.

“His death will be generally mourned as a public loss, while to many it will be felt keenly as almost a private and personal calamity.”

If there ever was a jovial, fun-loving person, Alexander W. Randall was that one. To recount his jokes and tricks would fill a volume. No one escaped from them. He made the most of every opportunity, and there was not a man in the State who had come in contact with Mr. Randall who could say he had not been the object or subject of the War Governor’s inveterate joking. Mr. Randall was no aristocrat. He was a friend to all.

ORIENTAL EVANIC ORDER OF THE 1,001.

The famous “Oriental Evanic Order of the 1,001,” was not the indescribable offspring of Waukesha County as has been claimed, but was started in Grant or Iowa County, Wis., and in 1848 Robert M. Briggs gave it to the public. It was not at first even approximately as elaborate, ridiculous, funny, indescribable and popular as in later years, but the plan of it was such that it grew with wonderful rapidity, especially after Mr. Briggs, then Grand Segnior, introduced the order into the Legislature at Madison, in 1849. At that time nearly all of the members were initiated and carried enthusiasm for the order to their various portions of the State.

In 1849, Andrew E. Elmore, William A. Barstow and Alexander W. Randall met in Waukesha and determined to form a branch for Waukesha County. An organization was accordingly formed by electing Mr. Elmore, Grand Segnior, and William A. Barstow, Pilot. Alexander F. Pratt, Elihu Enos and Harrison Ward aided the three just mentioned, in founding the order in Waukesha County.

No pen or brush can paint the astonishing things done in this order. The highest men, financially, socially and politically, in Wisconsin, were initiated, and the "sublime order of 1,001" made the word "initiated" the most comprehensive one in the English language. It conveyed every thing the wildest and most abnormal imagination could invent. The first initiation in Waukesha County took place in a building located where Carney's Opera House now stands, in 1849, and later they took place in the court house, in W. D. Bacon's stone building, and anywhere a secure room could be had. The ritual, than which no more astounding or side-splitting book ever was published, was written by Andrew E. Elmore. It so far surpassed every other one then extant, that the "Elmore Ritual" came into general use. Under it the greatest, most modest, most refined, most distinguished and most able men in the country did things they never have told of, and never will. The order existed in Waukesha County during a number of years, until all the men of prominence in any direction had been initiated. Some of them were so disgusted with themselves that they could hardly live.

Some men joined because they had been led to think that by so doing they could get higher prices for pork or whatever they had to sell. Others joined because the assessor was a member, and they thought he of course would favor members of the order; others to secure more custom, to get office, and for every conceivable reason—all due to the extravagant but earnest and solemn promises of the fun-loving members, who thus secured large numbers for initiation. The initiation was all there was of the order; and scores of men who were stripped, branded, bounced, yoked, doused, made a sled of, whirled, tossed into the air, made to drink nauseous decoctions, wear shoemaker's wax for weeks in the hollows of their feet to "draw out meanness," carry asafoetida in their pockets to "counteract immoral tendencies," have their hair greased to prevent foot-rot in sheep, and do numberless other outlandish and humiliating things, never went near the lodge-room after the first night, being completely saturated with unutterable disgust. But those who did return night after night to take part in the initiation of new candidates undoubtedly had "more fun," as they still maintain, than was ever had by any set of men in any other manner.

To recount all that was done would fill a volume like this; therefore this brief account, which will serve to remind those who were members, of the meaning of "A. M. A.;" and to perpetuate that symbolic term, which was the pass-word, will be all-sufficient for the purpose of this work.

POLITICAL PARTIES.

Waukesha County, during many years, was the acknowledged leader, for both parties, in all political contests. The genius of politics seemed to be enthroned here, and the men who were its embodiment for Wisconsin directed the hosts from their homes in Waukesha. They were not politicians merely, for this county has furnished her full share of men to fill high State and Federal positions. The two accounts here presented were prepared by members of the respective parties—that of the Democratic party by an old Democrat and the other by a lifelong Republican and Libertyite. The latter is lengthy and covers wide ground; but it is a history more or less of both parties, and will be found interesting and valuable.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

In the earliest days of the county there was no organized party, although the United States Government was in the hands of the Democrats; and all the officers in the Territory of Wisconsin, where politics were taken into consideration in making appointments, were Democrats. Therefore, had there been any politicians at all in the country, the members of the Democratic party might have formed a party organization which, in view of the fact that the offices were to be had from that side of the house, and that the number and importance of them were constantly increasing, would have been strong enough to have retained supremacy for an indefinite period. But such a state of affairs was foreseen by no one at that time. The people here were poor. They had left the land of wealth and political parties to establish homes, and, whenever any public action was taken in their new country, it was in regard to the formation of a town, the erection of bridges, or pertaining to some other purely local interest, into which it would have been wholly impossible to inject anything of a political nature, and for which all labored with a common zeal. About the first parties were "Sweet" and "Kilbourn," or canal and anti-canal. Finally, in 1843, the General Government gave the Territory power to choose her own justices, sheriffs, etc., in the different counties, and then began the first real interest in political parties. There had, previous to this time, been little or no formal organization of the Democratic, or any other party, and the claim that the first formal organization of the party in Wisconsin occurred at a gathering of prominent men in Prairieville, since Waukesha, is probably a just one. Certain towns, like the towns of Prairieville and Milwaukee, which had begun to assume some size and importance, had before this divided on party lines in choosing supervisors; but the divisions were loose ones and of limited extent. Finally, when Milwaukee County had been divided and Waukesha County erected and fully organized, it became evident to the people of the latter that they were a little kingdom all by themselves, where political parties might do battle, win victories and suffer defeat. Then politics, for the first time, received such attention as they had in older counties, and always have, since that time, received here. All the interests for which the people in the sixteen towns which now compose Waukesha County had labored had been settled in their favor, and the citizens now had time to squabble for the offices among themselves. And they did it right royally; there have been some as spirited and able election contests in Waukesha County as were ever known anywhere, for the leaders of the various parties were men accustomed to succeed; and, having worked side by side in previous years for common county interests, they knew each other's methods, and understood precisely what kind of fighting must be done to win, now that they were enemies. When Waukesha County was organized the leaders of the Democratic party were substantially as follows, the other parties being Whig and Abolition, or, as it was afterward called, Free Soil: William A. Barstow, Alexander F. Pratt and Alexander W. Randall—a big team, if there was any—of Waukesha; Andrew E. Elmore and Joseph Bond, of Mukwonago; John C. Snover and J. Bottomley, of Eagle; William E. McClure, Henry Weiner, and P. Liffendorf, of Ottawa; Orson Reed and John D. McDonald, of Summit; John S. Rockwell, of Oconomowoc; Francis McCormick, of Merton; James Weaver and W. H. Thomas, of Lisbon; William R. Hesk and William Costigan, of Menomonee; Andrew Proudft, Albert Alden and D. K. Warren, of Delafield; Robert Stewart, of Pewaukee; J. W. Brackett, of Brookfield, and others, who have since become more prominent in these and other towns than they then were.

At this time, the Democratic party was in the majority, or, more accurately speaking, in the plurality, and elected all the county officers at the first election. All the postmasters in the county were also Democratic, if they had any known politics, and the party thus had a prestige, which, had it been properly engineered, might have lasted until the present time; for settlers were coming in rapidly, and all new-comers, if they had any political ambition at all, naturally fell in with the strongest side. Thus, a great many men, some of them with ambition and good abilities, had joined the Democratic party, who did not properly belong in it. They joined that side because it then was in the majority and promised to reach the political persimmons, for which fruit they were hungering. When, therefore, a new issue came up, like the formal move against slavery, the old-time Democrats set themselves so rigidly against the ultra anti-slavery doctrines that they drove the above-mentioned semi-proselytes, who had joined the party because it was winning, and who would have remained in it had a less radical course been pursued, completely out of it. Therefore, at the breaking-up of the Whig party, and the formation of the Republican party, its successor, many of the ablest men of the Democratic party joined this new political organization, becoming its leaders, while a few of the disintegrating Whig party became Democrats.

John Evans
NEW BERLIN.

Notwithstanding all this, however, the Democratic has been the strongest party in the county since its organization. To illustrate: Since 1856 the county has comprised the Tenth Senatorial district, in which have been held twenty-four elections for State Senator. These have resulted in fourteen victories for the Democrats and ten for the Republicans.

The first local paper Waukesha County had was Democratic; the Democrat, started by George Hyer in 1848. During most of the time since, the party has had from two to three true-blue newspaper organs, which have been supported fully as well as the papers of the opposing party, and it now maintains two of the four newspapers published in the county.

In the earlier years of this party, John C. Snover, Jonathan Parsons and one other were the only Democrats in the town of Eagle to hold caucuses and select delegates. These sturdy politicians made this limited number answer all purposes admirably, however, for they had a man for chairman of their crowded meeting on some hermit dry-goods box; one for secretary, (called "scratchetary" by Andrew E. Elmore when he first began to manipulate Democratic caucuses) and one to shout out the motions.

The most distinguished Democrat Waukesha County produced was William A. Barstow, though Alexander F. Pratt, without often appearing in the role of office-holder, was for many years an influential party manager, and much of the secret history of the party was made by him, not only in Waukesha and Milwaukee Counties, but in the whole State.

The oldest Democrats—those who have never switched off the faith, are Joseph Bond, John C. Snover, James Weaver and Jacob H. Kimball. The latter was the first Chairman of the town of Prairieville, and was also the first member from that locality of the Territorial Council.

In the vicinity of Oconomowoc, where David W. Small has been for many years a leading Democrat, the members of the party displayed commendable wisdom by forming themselves into a formal organization, electing such officers as any deliberative or corporate body requires, and keeping a perfect record, in a book procured for the purpose, of the proceedings of all caucuses, conventions and meetings held in the interest of the Democratic party. This plan was adopted in September, 1850, at a meeting held at the La Belle House, Oconomowoc, for that purpose. This record was kept by Edwin Hurlbut, D. H. Rockwell, R. C. Hathaway, Hiram Carter, Emulous P. Cotton, Samuel Dodge and others. During and since the war, no record has been kept, and the formal Democratic organization at Oconomowoc has been suffered to break up, unfortunately for history.

The county affairs have generally been managed by the Democrats, on one occasion the County Board being composed of fourteen Democrats and two Republicans. The former, therefore, lay claim to a good share of the honor due to those who have kept the county out of debt and its finances in such good condition.

REPUBLICAN PARTY.

The Republican party has been in existence in Waukesha County since its earliest settlement, but only under its present name for twenty-six years. Its ancestor was the earnest old Liberty party, whose members fought like Spartans in their chosen cause. They began operations as soon after the settlement of the county as necessary local matters had been adjusted, being aroused by the action of Congress, which denied the right of petition, it being determined by the House, on motion of Mr. Patton, of Virginia, that for the future all petitions or other papers touching slavery should be laid on the table without being debated, printed, read, or referred. The murder of Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy, on the 7th of November, 1837, by a mob, for publishing very tame Anti-slavery articles, with similar other aggressive acts of pro-slavery men, made a deep impression on the country, and the friends of freedom saw in it a new revelation of the contest on which they had entered. It was then promptly determined by the few anti-slavery men in the North, to organize political abolition societies.

Prairieville (afterward Waukesha), was settled with a large number of Abolitionists, and early formed Anti-slavery societies, and for several years was the center of the Territory for Abolition conventions, and party lines were soon sharply drawn, and both Whigs and Democrats were driven together in political action, to beat the Abolitionists. In 1842, a Territorial Antislavery society was formed, in which Prairieville took a leading part.

The first Abolition Territorial Convention for the nomination of Delegates to Congress, was held at Madison September 13, 1843, which was called to order by E. D. Clinton, of Prairieville; Ezra Mendall, of Prairieville, was elected Chairman, and Vernon Tichenor, of Prairieville, was appointed to prepare an address to the people.

At the succeeding election for delegate to Congress, Henry Dodge, Democrat, received in the Territory 921 votes; George W. Hickox Whig, 354 votes; Col. J. Spooner, Abolition, 115 votes.

A Territorial Liberty Association was formed in February, 1844, for political purposes, and the dissemination of Abolition literature and intelligence. Charles Durkee, of Southport (now Kenosha), was President—an Executive Committee composed of Charles Durkee, Jacob Ly Brand, Vernon Tichenor, E. D. Holton, Stephen Peet, Asahel Finch, Jr., and J. G. Kendall, were chosen.

The American Freeman, organ of the Territorial Anti-slavery Society, which, in August, 1844, had been running about six months, was brought to Waukesha, and C. C. Sholes engaged to continue it in that place during three years, the expenses of its publication to be maintained by the Abolition party.*

A Liberty Party Convention to nominate candidates for county offices for the County of Milwaukee, met in Prairieville, on August 20, 1845. Winthrop Chandler, of Prairieville, was called to the chair, and C. C. Sholes, of Prairieville, was chosen Secretary.

Delegates from Prairieville—M. S. Barnett, V. Tichenor, C. S. Hawley, W. D. Bacon, J. W. Rossman, C. C. Olin, A. L. Barber, H. N. Davis, E. S. Purple, L. C. Slye, L. Goodnow, W. Weed, O. F. Curtis, C. C. Sholes, George Hawley, E. Bates, D. Chandler, M. Hawley, Ezra Mendall, Rev. Seward and W. McWhorter.

Milwaukee—W. L. Collins.

Pewaukee—A. Stewart, J. H. Waterman, Thomas Brown, L. Crocker, M. Clark, and John Hodgson.

New Berlin—George Hollister, Elon Murry, A. Gilbert, Hiram Hollister, A. C. Thayer, and W. Morris.

Menomonee—A. W. Norris.

Vernon—O. B. Haseltine, Ira Blood, and C. A. Walker.

*The convention nominated, for member of Council, Samuel Hinman, of Prairieville.

For the House of Representatives, N. S. Kendrick, Prairieville; George Hawley, Prairieville; E. D. Underwood, Milwaukee; Ira Blood, Vernon; and J. H. Waterman, of Pewaukee; for Register of Deeds, Vernon Tichenor, Prairieville; Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, David McDougal, Milwaukee; Treasurer, Samuel Brown, Milwaukee; Coroner, S. A. Stratton, Milwaukee; District Surveyor, Winchel D. Bacon, Prairieville.

The Committee on Resolutions reported twelve resolutions. The first was:

Resolved, That the anti-slavery enterprise is the most arduous as well as the most important ever yet undertaken by the American people, and involves the necessity of corresponding exertions and sacrifices on the part of those engaged in it.

5.—Resolved, That we will use all proper efforts to secure to the colored man the right of franchise, of which he is unjustly deprived in the Territory.

9.—Resolved, That we view the National Constitution as an anti-slavery document, and every act of the Federal Government for the extension of slavery, unauthorized by that instrument and contrary to its design.

12.—Resolved, That we indignantly repel the efforts of our opponents to fix upon us the character of enemies to the Constitution, the Government and the Union.

At the subsequent election the delegates to Congress received in Milwaukee County, Martin [Dem.], 5,526; Collins [Whig], 4,496; E. D. Holton [Libertyite], 815.

The annual meeting of the Territorial Liberty Association was held at Beloit, February 25, 1845.

* See chapter on "Waukesha County Newspapers" for an interesting account of the American Freeman.

For town officers at the election held April 7, 1846, in Prairieville and Pewaukee, both the Whigs and Democrats united to defeat the Liberty party candidates. Prairieville, however, elected two Liberty party candidates, Vernon Tichenor for Justice of the Peace, and B. Douglass for Collector and Constable.

On the question of a State government, the vote in the Territory was in favor, 12,334, against 2,487.

The question of the division of the county was voted upon at the same time as follows:

	For.	Against.
Prairieville.....	387	0
Pewaukee.....	151	7
Oconomowoc.....	2	111
Summit.....	2	184
Delafield.....	22	51
Warren.....	40	42
Lisbon.....	63	18
Menomonee.....	5	76
Brookfield.....	74	72
New Berlin.....	110	20
Muskego.....	39	48
Vernon.....	86	24
Mukwonago.....	121	14
Eagle.....	80	15
Ottawa.....	27	11
	1,283	696

The vote in the table in reference to Summit was the result of two days' balloting. No doubt they would have voted longer, but names became scarce. The last vote taken was said to be from a traveler who voted from the end of a split stick, and in the list was credited to Peter Stick.

On the 3d day of February, 1846, the village of Prairieville was incorporated, and on the 2d day of March, 1846, E. D. Clinton, Abolition, was elected its first President.

The first political convention in the new county of Waukesha was called to elect delegates to frame a State constitution.

The Liberty party called a convention to meet at Prairieville August 14, 1846. George Hollister was elected Chairman and C. C. Sholes Secretary.

Delegates in attendance from Prairieville—E. D. Clinton, V. Tichenor, C. C. Sholes, W. D. Bacon, H. N. Davis, A. Gaston, George Hawley, O. Z. Olin, E. S. Purple, S. Hinman, R. Moore, T. H. Olin, W. McWhorter, Z. Bidwell, Ezra Mendall, R. Johnson, W. C. Whitman, and E. Bates.

New Berlin—A. L. Barber, D. Gilbert, G. W. Hollister, A. E. Gilbert, R. Cheeny, H. P. Kendall, Hiram Hollister, George Hollister, and D. Cheeny.

Mukwonago—John Andrews and S. H. Depuy.

Vernon—Ira Blood, A. Pierce, O. B. Haseltine, J. Stoddard, B. Webster, and W. Guthrie.

Pewaukee—Asa Clark and Nelson Olin.

Lisbon—S. Dougherty, S. Bottsford, E. Matthews, and S. Potter.

Brookfield—J. L. Irwin.

Oconomowoc—J. Colby and J. P. Colby.

The platform was as follows :

Resolved, That we recognize no crisis or exigency in local or general politics as being of equal importance with the great foundation principles of the Liberty organization.

Resolved, That it is unwise and a departure from the integrity of Liberty principles for us by our votes to contribute to the strength and influence of the old parties.

Resolved, That color, place of nativity, religious belief or possession of property, as qualifications or disqualifications for the enjoyment of civil privileges involve a principle diametrically hostile to true republicanism, natural and equal freedom.

The convention nominated candidates as follows :

For Delegates to the Constitutional Convention—Vernon Tichenor, C. C. Sholes, Daniel

Gilbert, Timothy Palmer, James N. Heath, John Andrews, Ira Blood, J. Metcalf, Walter Cushing, N. S. Kendrick and Esquire White. For Councilman—Samuel Hinman, of Prairieville. House of Representatives—Orin Haseltine, of Vernon, and Nelson Olin, of Pewaukee. Sheriff—Barzilla Douglass, Prairieville. Coroner—Ezra Mendall, Prairieville. Register—Elisha Pearl, Lisbon. Judge of Probate—Vernon Tichenor, Prairieville. Clerk of Board of Supervisors—P. S. Brown, Pewaukee. Treasurer—T. H. Olin, Prairieville. Surveyor—John Hodgson, Pewaukee.

A Liberty Association was formed for the county of Waukesha with the constitution of the Milwaukee County Liberty Association. The officers elected were: President, S. Hinman; Vice Presidents—George Hawley, N. S. Kendrick, G. W. Hollister, Asa Clark and J. S. Baldwin; C. C. Sholes, Secretary; E. S. Purple, Treasurer; Executive Committee—V. Tichenor, N. Clinton, E. D. Clinton, T. H. Olin and W. D. Bacon. W. D. Bacon, C. C. Olin and Dr. G. Wright were appointed a committee to raise money for lecturing, pledged to Messrs. Codding and Clark. At the election, the average Liberty party vote in Waukesha County was 225; Whig, 675; Democratic, 860.

On December 2, 1846, the annual meeting of the Wisconsin Liberty Association met at Prairieville, Jacob LyBrand, Vice President in the Chair, W. D. Bacon, Secretary.

Waukesha County delegates were present as follows:

Rev. O. F. Curtis, Lucius Bottsford, Winthrop Chandler, H. Blanchard, Rev. A. Gaston, L. C. Slye, P. L. Brown, E. D. Clinton, Rev. D. M. Clark, John Nelson, William McWhorter, B. Stown, E. Matthews, S. Bottsford, W. D. Bacon, L. Blanchard, John White, Thomas Blount, E. S. Purple, H. Nelson, Rev. N. Miller, A. Stewart, Rev. A. L. Barber, R. Griffin, G. W. Hollister, H. A. Youmans, George Hawley, S. Dougherty, Samuel Hinman, W. T. Hollenbeck, Allen Clinton, Vernon Tichenor, J. P. Colby, Harvey P. Kendall, Moore Spears, Stephen Richmond, Thomas H. Olin, Zebulon Bidwell, Rev. Roswell Cheeny, John S. Baldwin Hiram Hollister, C. L. Robinson, A. E. Gilbert, Joseph French.

The business committee reported in favor of employing Ichabod Codding to lecture one year in Wisconsin against slavery. It also reported the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That if a constitution disfranchising any portion of men shall be sent to the people for adoption, we as friends of the rights of man shall feel ourselves bound more strenuously to oppose its acceptance.

The labors of the Liberty party secured articles favoring equal suffrage, which were submitted to the legal voters in connection with the constitution, which articles were defeated with it.

The vote on constitution was in Waukesha County: For constitution, 1,246; against 1,825. For equal suffrage, 1,107; against, 617.

On July 14, 1847, the semi-annual meeting of the Wisconsin Liberty Association met at Waukesha, and organized by electing E. D. Holton, President, and E. D. Underwood and W. D. Bacon, Secretaries.

V. Tichenor, Seward and Love were appointed a committee to nominate a candidate for Delegate to Congress. Said committee nominated Charles Durkee, whom the convention unanimously indorsed. E. D. Holton, Charles Durkee and I. Codding were appointed delegates to the Liberty Party Convention, to meet at Buffalo October 20, to nominate Liberty candidates for President and Vice President.

At the election following, to wit, in November, 1847, Charles Durkee, Liberty party, received for Delegate in Waukesha County, 198; in the Territory, 973. Moses M. Strong, Democrat, 583; in the Territory, 9,748; John H. Tweedy, Whig, 659; in the Territory, 10,670.

The Liberty party of Waukesha County called a convention to meet at Waukesha, November 13, 1847, to nominate the six candidates for delegates apportioned them for the convention to frame a State constitution.

The convention organized by electing Sam'l Dougherty Chairman and W. D. Bacon, Secretary.

On ballot the following named persons were nominated as candidates for delegates to said convention: Vernon Tichenor, John Hodgson, Richard Griffin, Ira Blood, Hiram Hollister, N. S. Kendrick.

October 20, 1847, the National Convention of the Liberty Party met at Buffalo, at which John P. Hale, of New Hampshire, was nominated for President, and Leicester King, of Ohio, for Vice President.

Important constitutional questions were considered at this convention by the most eminent men in the Liberty party, discussions lasting nearly two days.

Gerrit Smith came to the convention with his land league measures, which were finally rejected, although in less than a year adopted by the Liberty party. John P. Hale had at no time identified himself as an individual member of the Liberty party, and by several of the delegates was opposed for that reason. Gerrit Smith advocated that slavery could be abolished by direct Congressional legislation. S. P. Chase contended that slavery in the States was not strictly unconstitutional, but extra-constitutional; thought it could not be reached by direct enactment.

A resolution was, however, adopted, declaring in effect that slavery could and would be abolished by a constitutional administration of the Government. Mr. Chase was right in saying that slavery could not be reached by direct enactment. The resolution was more than right; it was prophetic, for under Mr. Lincoln it was literally abolished by "a constitutional administration" of the Government.

The year 1848 was prolific with nominations for the Presidency. First the Liberty party nominated John P. Hale; then the Land Leaguers nominated Gerrit Smith. On the 23d of May, the Democrats nominated Lewis Cass; on the 7th of June the Whigs nominated Gen. Taylor, and on August 9, the Wilmot Proviso men, Barn-Burners and Liberty party men nominated Martin Van Buren.

As the movement of the Wilmot Proviso men in calling the Buffalo Convention, to prevent slavery pervading the Territories, and the admitting of new States with slavery, seemed to present the most important duty at that day, a State convention was called to meet at Janesville on July 26, to send delegates to the convention.

Waukesha County called a convention to send delegates to the Janesville Convention. Three persons responded to that call, viz., W. D. Bacon, Alexander Cook and Dr. W. H. Farner. The convention organized by appointing W. D. Bacon, Chairman, W. H. Farner Secretary, and Alexander Cook Committee on Resolutions. Delegates were duly appointed, and it was Resolved, that the delegates elected to represent this county, in the Janesville convention, be instructed to use their influence in favor of nominating delegates in favor of nominating Martin Van Buren for the Presidency.

The Janesville Convention sent W. D. Bacon, Ichabod Codding and A. W. Randall for Waukesha County delegates to the Buffalo Convention, and adopted this resolution, framed by Andrew E. Elmore:

Resolved, That as a man has a right to life, and without access to the earth which is the gift of God to all his children he must perish, we are in favor of disposing of the lands of the United States to actual settlers only in limited quantities, at a cost of survey and transportation.

Soon after the Buffalo Convention, which nominated Van Buren, Hale having withdrawn, the Liberty party took the name of Free Soil party.

Pursuant to call of the citizens of Waukesha County, the friends of Free Soil assembled in mass convention at Waukesha, to ratify the nomination of Martin Van Buren for President, and Charles F. Adams for Vice President.

The convention was called to order by A. W. Randall, and permanently organized by the election of the following officers: Anson H. Taylor, President; B. R. Hinckley, Charles Burchard, W. D. Bacon, L. Martin and J. W. Brackett, Vice Presidents; J. M. Griswold, M. T. Draper, R. M. Cady, Secretaries. A. Cook, E. W. Edgerton and V. Tichenor, were appointed a Committee on Resolutions.

On September 26, 1848, pursuant to call, a convention met at Mukwonago from the First Congressional District to nominate a candidate for Congress. A. W. Randall was elected President, and W. D. Bacon Secretary. The delegates from Waukesha County were W. D. Bacon,

A. W. Randall, Charles Burchard, John M. Wells, and E. Pearl. The convention nominated Charles Durkee, and at the polls in November he was elected. Charles Durkee had been a strong, consistent Anti-slavery and Liberty party man for several years, and was the very first outspoken, uncompromising Liberty party man who had at that date been elected to Congress. This was a big victory. A second mass convention of the Free Soil party assembled at Waukesha, the 25th of October, 1848, B. R. Hinckly in the chair, and J. M. Griswold, Secretary.

A county committee was appointed as follows, with power to appoint town committees throughout the county: A. W. Randall, A. Cook, Charles Burchard, W. D. Bacon, J. W. Brackett, L. Martin, and E. W. Edgerton. A. W. Randall was elected to attend the State Convention, and A. Cook as the delegate at the Congressional Convention. The convention was then addressed by Messrs. Austin, Lovell, Saunders and Goss.

On motion a committee of three from each town were selected as a nominating committee as follows: Waukesha—A. W. Randall, John M. Wells, and W. D. Bacon; New Berlin—S. Beardsley, W. P. Hale, B. Hollister; Genesee—W. Smith, T. Evans, T. Fender; Ottawa—E. Duchene, and H. B. Bloomer; Mukwonago—A. E. Elmore and S. Collier; Vernon—N. B. Smith, John Sweet, A. Putnam; Muskego—Asa Parker and Luther Parker; Brookfield—M. Spears and J. W. Brackett; Pewaukee—Asa Clark, S. Love, J. W. Hildreth; Delafield—Stephen Warren and M. Teneyck; Summit—E. W. Edgerton, R. M. Carter and F. Wilkenie; Oconomowoc—G. E. Conant, J. P. Colby, G. W. Cottrell; Warren—M. Smith, Dr. Fenn and C. G. Williams; Lisbon—S. Bottsford, N. Miller and Harrison Phillips.

The committee presented to the convention the following names, which were unanimously adopted: For State Senator, Benjamin Hunkins, of New Berlin; Sheriff, Charles Hawley, of Waukesha; Judge of Probate, Alex. Cook, of Waukesha; Register of Deeds, Geo. W. Cottrell, of Oconomowoc; Clerk of Court, J. M. Griswold, of Waukesha; District Attorney, J. E. Gallagher, of Waukesha; Treasurer, Jacob Hengy, of Waukesha; Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, Vernon Tichenor, of Waukesha.

The convention appointed A. W. Randall, W. D. Bacon, Alex. Cook, E. W. Edgerton and L. Parker, central committee.

At the ensuing election the Free Soil, Van Buren ticket for electors in the county of Waukesha, received forty majority over the Cass ticket, and ninety-five over the Taylor electoral ticket. In the State, Van Buren received 10,528; Zachary Taylor received 13,746; Lewis Cass received 14,891. Mr. Van Buren received 291,037 votes in the fifteen free States.

Two State conventions were called for 1849, one by the Free Soil, or Free Democratic party, as it now began to be called, to nominate State officers, at Madison September 12, and one by the Cass Democracy.

The Cass men held their convention the 5th of September, at Madison, nominating Nelson Dewey for Governor.

On the 7th of September, the Union-Liberty-Democratic State Convention met at Madison, resolved that it was a Free Soil convention, and nominated Warren Chase for Governor, John Bannister, Lieutenant Governor; Benjamin Hunkins, Secretary of State; Charles M. Goodsell, Treasurer; Marshall M. Strong, Attorney General.

The vote for Governor and other Free Democratic candidates in Waukesha County was 371. In 1848 the Free Soil vote was 1,001, and in 1847 the Liberty party vote was 250, having gained by the Van Buren movement only about 100 votes in the county; but the country had been electrified by the spasmodic advocacy by the Van Buren wing of Democracy, of the most radical Abolition doctrine ever promulgated by Abolitionists; a door had been opened and a respectful hearing given to Free Soil principles, which made converts rapidly, and in twelve years buried the Democratic party, and the pro-slavery body of the Whig party, so that it has not yet been resurrected.

The Liberty party continued its political work under the name of the Free Democratic party, gaining in strength year by year. The union in 1848 of the Liberty party with the Wilmot Proviso wing of the Democratic party advanced the principles of freedom, and elected to Congress Charles Durkee, an old and true Abolitionist, from this, the First Congressional District. So a union in 1853 with the Whig party in this State resulted in forming a new party (Republican) in 1854; and in electing three State Senators, who would not have been elected but for their union, and who helped to make a majority on joint ballot of one—which majority in January, 1856, elected Charles Durkee to the Senate of the United States. The union was brought about in this wise:

On the 8th of June, 1853, the Free Democratic party nominated Edward D. Holton for Governor; Jonathan Dougherty, Lieutenant Governor; C. L. Sholes, Secretary of State; Vernon Tichenor, Attorney General; Samuel D. Hastings, Treasurer; O. T. Bartlett, Superintendent of Public Instruction; E. A. Howland, Bank Comptroller; Selah Booth, State Prison Commissioner.

The Whigs nominated a State ticket with Henry S. Baird for Governor.

The Democrats also nominated a State ticket, with William A. Barstow for Governor, Mr. Barstow being then the leader of the Democracy. Both Whigs and Free Democrats published everywhere that the ticket nominated by the Democratic party was such as they could not support. At the same time, a large majority of the Whig party in Wisconsin had advanced to the same faith as the principles promulgated by the Free Democracy, but were not willing to work with them under that name. Therefore a few men from the Whig and Free Democratic parties on consultation at the Wisconsin State fair, held at Watertown on the 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th of October, 1853, issued a call and posted the same for a mass meeting of the people opposed to the election of the Democratic ticket, to be held in a schoolhouse in Watertown City, at 10 A. M., on the 6th of October.

At the time appointed the schoolhouse was literally packed with Democrats to prevent the object of said call. The friends of a People's ticket, not being able to gain admission to the schoolhouse, withdrew to a public hall and organized by appointing David Atwood President, and put forth an address to the people of the State.

The ticket nominated was as following: Leonard J. Farwell, Governor; Edward D. Holton, Lieutenant Governor; J. A. Hadley, Secretary of State; Samuel D. Hastings, Treasurer; James H. Knowlton, Attorney General; John G. McMynn, Superintendent of Public Instruction; James S. Baker, Bank Comptroller; and Selah Booth, State Prison Commissioner.

An Executive Committee was appointed, consisting of Rufus King, of Milwaukee; W. D. Bacon, Waukesha; David Atwood, Madison; R. A. Deming, Kenosha; with full power to fill vacancies or to re-arrange the ticket for good cause.

This movement was not satisfactory to the Whig nominee for Governor, H. S. Baird, who refused to decline in favor of the People's ticket, but kept in the field and received 3,304 votes. Nor did the Free Democracy approve of the People's ticket. At the Janesville meeting of the People's Central Committee and of the press of the Free Democratic party, it was determined to support the Free Democratic instead of the People's ticket, W. D. Bacon and Vernon Tichenor, of Waukesha, only dissenting. It was urged that a fair division of candidates was not observed by the mass meeting at Watertown, the Whigs taking the head of the ticket and five out of eight of the candidates. Mr. Bacon assured the committee and press, he being one of the Executive Committee of the mass meeting at Watertown, that an early meeting of the Executive Committee would be called to fill vacancies, and it was expected Mr. Farwell, nominee for Governor, would decline, at which time he believed the ticket would be reconstructed, dividing fairly the candidates between Whigs and Free Democrats. The motion to support the Free Democratic ticket was reconsidered. The next day Mr. Farwell sent to the Executive Committee his declination to be a candidate on the People's ticket. The Executive Committee of the People's mass meeting met at Whitewater and reconstructed the ticket as follows: E. D. Holton, Governor; Bertine Pinkney, Lieutenant Governor; J. A. Hadley, Secretary of State; S. D. Hastings, Treasurer; Orsamus Cole, Attorney General; John G. McMynn, Superintendent of Public Instruction; Benjamin F. Pixley, Bank Comptroller; Selah Booth, State Prison Commissioner. The average Democratic vote in the State was 31,000; People's ticket 21,000; Whig vote 3,300. The union of the Whig and

Free Democratic parties having been effected under the name of the People's ticket, and having elected several members of the Senate and Legislature of the State, on June 9, 1854, the following circular was published throughout the State for a People's Mass State Convention to convene at Madison July 13, 1854 :

All men opposed to the repeal of the Missouri compromise, the extension of slavery and the rule of the slave power, are invited to meet at Madison Thursday, July 13, to take such measures as may be deemed necessary to prevent the future encroachment of the slave power, to repeal all compromises in favor of slavery, and establish the principles of freedom as the rule of the State and National Governments. The time has come for the union of all free men for the sake of freedom. There is but one alternative—we must unite and be free, or divide and be enslaved.

[Signed]

MANY CITIZENS.

On that day over fifteen hundred voters met at Madison and organized under the name Republican. At the next election, the new party secured a majority of the Legislature and cast an unexpected vote in Waukesha County.

The first call for the Republican Convention for Waukesha County was signed by Elihu Enos. Among the party leaders have been Mr. Enos, member of the National Republican Committee, Alex. W. Randall, I. M. Bean, C. K. Davis, Warham Parks, E. M. Randall, Rufus Parks, Sidney A. Bean, Vernon Tichenor, W. D. Bacon, W. M. Saunders, August Lins, F. G. Parks, John C. Schuet, H. A. Youmans, A. E. Perkins, the Dousmans and the Reeds, of Ottawa, Albert Alden, Isaac Lain, William Blair, E. Beaumont, Henry Shears, George Cairncross, Richard Cooling, Thomas Sugden, Henry Bowman, A. E. Gilbert, Dr. Ingersoll, W. W. Collins, John A. Seabold, J. R. Carpenter, John and M. S. Hodgson, A. F. North, Asa Wilkins and Jesse Smith.

The Republican party now is resting on its laurels—exists only to perpetuate the deeds and preserve the fruits of the glorious past. When the Union was assailed the Republican party of Waukesha County was as one man in its defense; when financial heresy threatened the stability of commerce and national credit, the Republican party here and everywhere was all-potent to avert disaster. Whatever mistakes it has made, the party has aimed to do right—the heart of its masses has always been with the best interests of the common country.

The foregoing will show conclusively that Waukesha County was prominent and persistent in the work which resulted in the birth of the Republican party.

SUN DIALS.

So far as known, the first sun-dial in Wisconsin was made and set up, at or near Waukesha, by William Cruikshank, and now the county of Waukesha has more permanent sun-dials, without any doubt, than any other in the Union. They were all constructed by Mr. Cruikshank, whose first one was set about forty years ago. They are to be seen at various central points in the county, and in all sunny days show at once to the stranger and resident the exact meridian time. The finest in the county is probably the one in the cemetery at Waukesha, which, if undisturbed by man, will point out the hour of the day unerringly for almost unlimited centuries. Very many people have no idea of the purpose of a sun-dial when they discover one, and a still greater number have no idea how one can be accurately constructed. The mystery of the fundamental principles cannot be furnished for the million, but the trigometrical formula and an absolute rule can be given, so that whosoever has the will may construct a dial according to the latter, and if he understand trigonometry, may prove his work according to the former. First may be given three fundamental principles, as follows :

1. The true position of a sun-dial is the centre of the earth; but placed on the surface, as it must be, there is no sensible error, the distance of the sun being so great that his horizontal parallax is only 8.6 seconds.
2. The stile of every dial is parallel with the axis of the earth.
3. Every dial, in whatsoever direction it may face, and however much it may lean backward or forward is a horizontal dial for some point on the surface of the earth. Thus, a vertical dial facing south in 43 degs. N. Lat. is a horizontal dial for a point 90 degs. farther South, that is, in 47 degs. S. Lat.

To construct a dial geometrically, the operator not being required to understand anything but the use of tools, Mr. Cruikshank has ordered the following absolute rule, reference being had to the accompanying cut for plainer illustration :

1. Draw the six o'clock line AB.
2. At any distance, draw FE parallel with AB, and produce it indefinitely.
3. Draw the meridian line CD perpendicular to AB.
4. Draw the stile CE, making the angle DCE equal to the latitude of the place.
5. From D draw DG perpendicular to CE.
6. Make DK equal to DG; and with DK as a radius, and K as centre, describe the quadrant DL, and divide it into six equal parts for the hours, twelve equal parts for the half hours, twenty-four equal parts for the quarter hours, etc.
7. From K draw the lines K1, K2, K3, etc., and produce them till they meet FE in a, b, c, etc.
8. Draw the hour lines Ca, Cb, Cc, etc. These are the morning-hour lines, and the afternoon-hour lines are found in the same manner.
9. Set up the stile. If the stile is of an appreciable thickness, there must be two meridian lines, just the thickness of the stile apart. In order to avoid crowding, the lines only for the morning hours are drawn, and the plan of the dial is left incomplete.

For this latitude these nine rules can be used and a correct dial produced.

For calculating the angle of the hour lines with the meridian for a horizontal dial, we have the following trigonometrical formula :

As Radius is to the sine of the latitude, so is the Tangent of the angle of the hour to the Tangent of the angle of the hour line with the meridian.

The dials in the vicinity of Waukesha are cut upon Illinois marble, usually with stone columns and Waukesha limestone pedestal, and will stand for ages. This much space is given them because Waukesha county probably had the first reliable dial in Wisconsin.

ANECDOTES AND HISTORY UNCLASSIFIED.

In 1844, while one of the most respected and best-known residents of Waukesha was on his way to Milwaukee on foot, he met a prepossessing young woman traveling by similar conveyance to Waukesha. She asked him some questions as to distance, and he replied properly. He then desired to know if she had a husband and family to follow, and received a negative. "How long before I can reach Mr. N——'s house?" "In two hours, if you keep steadily on; but how long before you could get married?" frankly inquired the citizen. "In two hours if I had the opportunity," she archly replied. "Good!" exclaimed the tall man with a fine form, "it's a bargain." And it was. They were married immediately and lived a happy and prosperous life.

P. Bannon was the only man who voted for Peter Cooper for President, in 1876, in the village of Waukesha.

James A. Rossman and Chauncey C. Olin voted an Anti-slavery ticket, the first, probably, in Waukesha County, in the spring of 1844.

In the very earliest days of the settlement of Waukesha, Morris D. Cutler's was the only ferry across the Fox River. He had a fee of 10 cents for carrying travelers across on his back.

A splendid piece of land in Pewaukee was the means of having no less than twenty families purchase farms and settle in Waukesha County. A shrewd land agent would take any land-seeker out to this rich tract of prairie and oak openings and make a good bargain for an eighty or forty, but make out the deeds for lands elsewhere and often very poor; at least never worth half as much as the land shown. The rough land near Sayles' mill, in Genesee, was sold to Mr. Sayles in this manner.

It was forty miles from Prairieville to Milwaukee by the trails of 1834-36, and sixty miles by the trails from Bark River to Milwaukee. Old settlers will understand this.

B. A. Jenkins got out of fire in Genesee over forty years ago, and was obliged, not having any matches, to take a potash kettle on a sled and go to North Prairie and haul a kettle of fire home before he could have a meal cooked.

Not far from where Carroll College now stands at Waukesha, the Indians had their corn-fields. M. D. Cutler's cattle, for want of fences, ran at will, and frequently destroyed large quantities of this corn. Mr. Cutler therefore, to keep everything lovely with the Indians, gave them an ox to butcher, which was entirely satisfactory.

David Jackson, the first Postmaster, was buried for a time in a pre-historic mound near the Silurian Spring at Waukesha, as the place had no cemetery.

In January, 1847, the County Board resolved "that the bounty on wolf-scalps of every description, should be and the same is hereby fixed at, three dollars each." This resolution brought many a dollar to the pockets of sharp hunters, as the county paid nearly as much for dog-scalps as for wolf-scalps. It requires a keen man to discover the difference between a wolf-scalp and the scalp of a pup.

In January, 1871, there was some excitement in the county, over a contest for the office of County Clerk, which case was also the means of deciding an important principle. John C. Schuet was a candidate for Clerk of the Board of Supervisors of Waukesha County, at the general election held November 5, 1870. He received a majority of about five hundred votes. At the time of his election he possessed all the qualifications of an elector, except that he was an alien, and had not declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States. On the 14th of November, 1870, that disability was removed by appropriate proceedings in the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County, and he then became a citizen. The defeated candidate, Murray, refused to deliver up to his successor the office, and the Board of Supervisors sustained him in his action, the old Clerk taking the oath of office on the 2d of January following the fall election. The alien also took the oath and demanded possession of the office. The Supreme Court held [28 Wis., p. 96] that an alien who has not declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States may be elected to an office, and, in case his disability is removed before the commencement of the term of office for which he is elected, he will be entitled to enter upon and hold such office. Mr. Schuet accordingly took the office.

In January, 1847, the County Board passed the following resolution :

Resolved, That the thanks of this Board be tendered to the Hon. George Reed for Territorial Script, amounting to $21.50, tendered by him to the county; and that the Treasurer be directed to preserve the same in the treasury, until it can be used for the benefit of the county.

In 1835-36, a store-keeper named Longstreet sold flour in Milwaukee at first for $15 per barrel. Before the ice went out in the spring of 1836, he sold it at from $30 to $35 per barrel, and the article was pretty sour and black at that. When the navigation opened, sour flour went down to $10 per barrel, and then the settlers assembled and gave thanks. Beans at the same time were $6 per bushel, 24 to 28 quarts being all that was allowed the purchasers for a bushel, and mess-pork was $33 per barrel.

Amable Vieau says he saw a score of little Pottawotomie Indians swimming and splashing in Bethesda Pool at Waukesha as early as 1827.

The Pottawatomies had a tradition that one hundred of their strongest warriors were once doomed to death on the plateau where Carroll College now stands at Waukesha, and that "two moons" were required to complete their torture and death.

At the election held November 6, 1849, the question of equal suffrage to colored persons, received 1,086 votes, of which 964 were in favor of equal suffrage, and 122 against it.

One exceedingly cold morning in early days, a very prominent attorney went down to his office at Waukesha, and found he was out of wood. As it was so early that he supposed no one in the neighborhood was out of bed, he essayed to "borrow" enough for the day from a neighboring pile already nicely sawed and split. He therefore tossed a liberal supply over the high, tight board fence between the wood and his office. Alexander W. Randall chanced to be in his office, and saw what was going on. He therefore carried the wood into his apartments as fast as the other attorney tossed it over the fence. When the prominent attorney passed around with countenance gleaming over his good luck in finding wood, to the other side of the fence, and found every stick of the big pile he had thrown over gone, he was riveted to the spot with astonishment, and was soon warm enough to perspire pretty freely without the aid of borrowed wood. The mysterious disappearance of that pile of wood made an entirely different man of the prominent lawyer. That was thirty-odd years ago, and he is a poor man now, having never stolen a thing from that day to this. He has always since contended, that God not only looks after the sparrows, but has a mighty sharp eye on lawyers as well. If this paragraph does not come under his eye, he will die expecting that pile of wood will be offered in evidence against him at the day of judgment; for he never learned the part "Aleck" Randall played in the affair.

In the earlier days of its history, the business of advertising and selling mineral water at Waukesha was one of extreme difficulty. Those who were loudest in pronouncing the water a humbug, and who left their legitimate business to run down the various mineral springs and injure the character of their owners, resided in Waukesha—not out of it. Finally an Eastern gentleman became interested in a spring, and, falling in with the croakers, soon made his business methods so obnoxious that they were the subject of a mass indignation meeting. One butterfly sort of a fellow, who assembled himself more to give vent to fun than indignation, prepared the following analysis which caused no small amount of merriment :

LABORATORY OF NEW YORK GLUE FACTORY.

Dear Sir—Your letter containing a sample of the water from the mineral spring you recently purchased in Waukesha, Wisconsin, is at hand. I have forgotten precisely what you said you desired my analysis to show; but, after carefully reading all the almanacs to be had, I have compiled the following, which I should think would fill the bill, as it embraces about everything the ignoramuses on a frontier town like Waukesha will be likely to know:

Double extract of pure-cussedness.....	2 wash-tubfuls
Bicarbonate of cancer juice.....	16.09 grains
Epsom salts (4 spoonfuls after each meal).....	8.01 grains
Chloride of sodium (Syracuse diary salt).....	1.00 wash-tubful
Paris Green.....	10.11 grains
Asafetida.....	406.03 grains
Sulphate of Best's bottled beer.....	2.00 cases
Simmons' Liver Regulator (six bottles, $5).....	18.00 grains
Chloride of pilgarlic.....	82.06 grains
Bicarbonate of Lorillard's Bloom of Health.....	11.18 grains
Tincture of abuse.....	862.99 grains
Bicarbonate of corrugated iron.....	.82 grains
Bromide of tar and feathers.....	22.00 quarts
Vermifuge (kills the largest or smallest worms).....	.18 grains
Bicarbonate of lily white and garlic.....	84.16 grains

Permit me to say that I took the water from your spring carefully apart by all the methods known in a first-class glue factory, and do not hesitate to pronounce it just what everybody wants, and the water of all other springs a humbug. You will observe that the principal ingredient is double-extract of pure-cussedness, though tincture of abuse is found in more liberal quantities than in any other mineral water I ever dissected. I also find strong traces of the solid salts of meanness, and strong indications of the quintessence of dishonesty. I have no doubt it will serve your purpose well, and when you remit $1,000 for this analysis, you may say I said so.

Yours,

H——— P———.

The Democratic and Free-Soil Congressional Conventions for 1848 were held at Mukwonago. The former nominated William Pitt Lynde, on October 4, and the latter nominated Charles Durkee, on September 25.

In 1849, the bar of Waukesha signed a petition, asking the County Board to raise the salary of the District Attorney to $300; but he was granted only $250 per annum.

The seven-year-old son of J. R. Wheeler, of Mukwonago, was missing in December, 1849, and, after a most thorough search, extending over several weeks, in which all the neighbors participated, the little fellow was given up. It was generally agreed that he had been stolen by the Indians, a few wandering Pottawatomies having been seen in the vicinity, but during the next spring, his skeleton was found in a neighboring swamp. He had got lost and died alone in the woods from exhaustion and starvation.

At the "Independence celebration," at Waukesha, on July 4, 1851, over five thousand people were present. The address was by Arthur McArthur, now of Washington.

At the Democratic State Convention, of September 12, 1855, Andrew E. Elmore was formally "read out" of the Democratic party, for bolting and for "obnoxiously advocating" the doctrine of "all the rights of all men."

In 1843, a petition praying for the removal of Gov. James D. Doty received 131 signatures in Summit and 130 in Muskego. But Gov. Doty was not removed.

The greatest constitutional meeting ever held in the county was in front of Vail's Hotel, at Waukesha, March 30, 1847. It was an imposing demonstration. The Mukwonago delegation led the procession with about 200 men, with flags. A. D. Smith spoke against "wild-cat" banks. While in the midst of his speech, a coon-skin was let down from the hotel and suspended in front of him. Without the least perturbation, the speaker pointed to the skin as a fitting emblem of the moneyed power, swinging in the breeze, hanging by its last thread, bodiless and spiritless, and, as the man said upon the gallows, with "but a single line between him and ruin."

E. P. Pearmain shot himself through the head at his home in Summit, January 25, 1842, on account of financial difficulties.

According to the local and other papers of 1843, the Postmaster did not send or deliver opposition newspapers until they were ten days or a fortnight of age.

Among the bankrupts from Waukesha County, advertised in the official State paper after the session of the Legislature of 1841-42, were Rufus Parks, William A. Barstow, Peter H. Turner, Winthrop Chandler, Samuel Hinman, Curtis Reed, Joseph Turner, Edward Manning, Orson Reed, M. B. Cushing, Gust. A. Foster and Ferdinand Durand.

Some of the Indian shanties found near Waukesha by the first settlers were quite substantial, being covered with bark. These were not removed when the Indians made their annual journeys to pass the cold weather in deeper woods. B. S. McMillan began to tear them down and haul the material to his hotel for sheds. He was warned to desist, but said the Indians never would return, and if they did, he would not care. A few of them did return in a few days, but did not leave at night, as usual. "Mac," as he was everywhere called, fearing for the safety of a fine horse he had, tied the beast to his door latch, thinking it could not be taken from there without his knowledge; but on going out at 4 o'clock next morning he found the pony gone, together with other things, and never afterward saw hide or hair of it. He never took any more Indian houses without leave.

Once the Barstow Brothers—William A. and Samuel H.—were surprised by some stylish company from abroad. They had no meat in the house; and, as none was to be had in the village, William, who was the better talker, entertained the company while Samuel, who was the better fisherman, waded up and down the Fox River spearing fish. That was about forty years ago. Since then, both of the Barstows have had meat enough for ordinary and extraordinary occasions.

The first settlers in Waukesha County were very much interested in the great number of "Indian ladders" found everywhere. They were made of long saplings, the limbs being cut off eight or ten inches from the trunk to answer for "rounds" on which to climb. These primitive but useful ladders were used for climbing bee trees, which were very numerous in an early day. The wild honey thus obtained the Indians mixed with their wild rice and corn, making a very palatable dish. The whites also used the wild honey, which was not only plentiful, but delicious.

Marvin H. Bovee, of Mukwonago, published a work—"Capital Punishment; Reasons for its Abolition"—which was instrumental to a considerable degree in securing the abolition of capital punishment in Wisconsin.

On the 16th of August, 1860, the United States Marshal arrested Edward W. Daniels, of Waukesha, and cast him into prison at Milwaukee, for aiding Sherman M. Booth to escape prison, into which he had been put for rescuing Joshua Glover, an escaped slave, in March, 1854.

Under the heading of a "Gold-mine in a Sand-pit," the Scientific American of 1860 contained the following: "On the 21st of last February, Messrs. Robinson & Eggleston, of Waukesha, Wis., obtained (through the Scientific American Patent Agency) a patent for an improved process of tanning hides, whereby tanning operations may be conducted altogether independently of oak and hemlock barks of our forests, in any locality where there is plenty of water, and a superior quality of leather (both upper and sole) is produced. In a letter dated August 11, expressing the patentees' gratitude for our services in preparing their specifications and prosecuting their case to a successful issue, they incidentally mention that they have just forwarded to Washington, for record in the archives of the Patent Office, a deed of transfer of an undivided interest in their patent, in consideration of the snug little sum of $150,000! This is a practical illustration of the aphorism of the Æsopian fable—'there is nothing like leather.'"

The Indians called Joseph Bond "Netch," or "Open Hand," because he gave them tobacco, and also "Wau-bus-kee," which means white.

There were several fatal cases of cholera in Waukesha County in 1849, the first of which resulted in the death of Alfred Brown. There were also several cases during the following year.

In 1838, a Pottawatomie Indian stole a ham from the back room of John Woodworth's house. Mrs. Woodworth saw the theft, and seizing an ax made chase, and soon compelled the brave savage to drop his ill-gotten meat. He was afraid of a woman.

Andrew E. Elmore was called the "sage of Mukwonago" by the whites, and "Nau-kee-shuk" by the Indians, which means "Four Eyes." This was because Mr. Elmore wore spectacles.

In the early '40's "Prof." Old was the genius of poetry in this portion of the country. He frequently gave whole lectures in rhyme. The opening verse of one delivered at Prairieville, April 21, 1847, will suffice for this work, or any other. It is as follows, literatim :

"You nasty flea, I can't tell why
 You made these lumps upon my thigh;
 If I could catch you here, my lad,
 I should feel so very, very glad.
 The other night it did the same
 Unto my wife and made her lame;
 To cure us both I now must try
 Or we will surely mortify:
 I've caught it now here in the bed,
 And now the nasty thing is dead."

FIRST THINGS.

The first white man that was positively known to have remained over night in what is now Waukesha County was Samuel A. Storrow, in 1817.

The first actual settlers were the Cutler Brothers, A. R. and Morris D., who came from La Porte, Ind., early in the spring of 1834, and made claims where Waukesha Village now is.

The first building erected by a white man was a claim shanty of logs, put up by the Cutler Brothers in May, 1834, where Blair's machine shop stands on the bank of the Fox River, in the village of Waukesha. Before this shanty had been completed, another was begun by the Cutlers where Morris D. Cutler now lives, in the same village.

The first hotel was a small log building erected by B. S. McMillan, in the summer of 1835, not far from the present location of the county jail. It was called "McMillan's Inn," but was not intended at first to be used as a hotel. It was built for a residence.

The first hotel, planned and projected as such, was the Prairieville House, built by Henry Bowron and first kept by James Buckner. It was opened in 1837, and for years had a large amount of custom. One wing of the building stands on the old site, in Waukesha; another is a part of the American House, and the balance is divided between several parties.

The first store was erected by Solomon Juneau, not far from the present location of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, in Waukesha. Juneau hired a clerk to run it, who dealt mostly in Indian goods and "wolf tobacco." This tobacco was also for the Indians, and was so named because it was said to be strong enough to kill a wolf. The store was opened in the winter of 1836-37. Mr. Juneau sold goods here before that, however.

The second store in Waukesha Village, and the first one intended to be entirely for the accommodation of the settlers, was erected by Charles R. Dakin and opened on Main street. Mr. Dakin carried a large stock for those days.

Robert Curran had a hotel opened in Brookfield, in 1836, which for many years was well patronized. It was the first in that town.

The first white woman in Waukesha County was Mrs. Stewart, sister of Almon Osborn, now a resident of Fond du Lac County. She came the 1st of May, 1835.

In 1837, Sewall Andrews opened a stock of goods at Mukwonago, which was undoubtedly the first, exclusive of Indian goods, in the county. Mr. Andrews is still living.

The second woman in the county was Mrs. McMillan, who arrived at Prairieville May 7, 1835. Mrs. Isaac Smart arrived May 16, and was the third woman in the county.

The first white child born in the county was James, son of Isaac Smart. John A., son of Joseph Smart, was born in Mukwonago, December, 1836. This was probably the second birth in the county and the first in Mukwonago; and Merian and Meriam Hill, twin daughters of Lyman Hill, were born in Mukwonago, January 20, 1837. These were the first twins in the county. The first white child born in Pewaukee was Uriel P. Olin, son of Nelson Olin. He was shot dead in the battle of Antietam.

The first blacksmith probably was Charles Raynous, who brought his tools to Mukwonago in 1836. Settlers "backed" their plow-points, land-sides and other iron utensils, from fifteen to forty miles to his shop for repairs. Mr. R. very soon after moved to North Prairie. About the same time Mr. R. settled at Mukwonago, Hugh McIntyre settled near where Wedge's mill was built, in Muskego.

B. A. Jenkins first found the water power at Genesee, which determined him to settle in the town of Genesee.

The first real bridge was erected in the fall of 1837, by the citizens generally, across the Fox River at Prairieville. It was of logs, and, though rough in appearance, was an exceedingly substantial affair.

The first school house was built of logs, every able-bodied man lending a hand, in the fall of 1837, "under the hill" on the west side of the Fox River, in Prairieville. The first school was begun in it by John Moon Wells, in November, 1837.

The first stone building in the county and probably in the State, was the Prairieville Academy, built by Lyman Goodnow and Wm. T. Bidwell, at Prairieville, in the spring of 1840.

The first breeder and dealer in Shanghai poultry, was Joseph Carpenter. He led a big rooster at the first county fair, in 1842.

The first colored people to settle in the county were Father Richard Moon and his family, in 1838. Mrs. Moon, now over ninety, is living at Waukesha.

A poor, friendless, homeless German was the first to take his own life in the county. He drowned himself in 1838, at Genesee. The second person who committed suicide was E. G. Webb, a miller, in Prairieville.

The first flouring-mill was built by Mr. Bigelow at Eagle. It began grinding, run by water, early in 1838. The stones were hardly as large as the bottom of a water pail, and could not turn out a grist much more quickly than a coffee-mill. A good flouring-mill exists now on the same site. Mr. Bigelow made the first stones for this mill with his own hands, and with but few tools.

The first frame building was built in nine days, by Lyman Goodnow, the Clintons and another, in Prairieville.

The first death, probably, was that of Edgar T. Owen, son of Ethan Owen, killed in Pewaukee, accidentally, while at work in the woods, in the winter of 1836. Charles Cox died in Mukwonago July 23, 1838.

The first reaper or mowing machine was invented and built by Andrew McCormick, at Prairieville. It was the first in Wisconsin, and consisted of a huge, square, ungainly frame of wood, with a cutter-bar something after the modern patterns. It was first tried on Nathaniel Walton's land, and did a tolerable job of cutting, pulling up and beating down.

The first French-horn player in the county was Gordon C. Cone, afterward a prominent county official.

John Manderville, residing near Prairieville, was appointed the first Justice of the Peace, and Nathaniel Walton the first Constable, in what is now Waukesha County.

The first boarding-house was opened in 1838, by Deacon Allen Clinton, in Cutler's claim shanty, near the river, in Waukesha. He boarded the hands who were at work on the race and foundation for the first flouring-mill in Prairieville.

The first agricultural fair held in Wisconsin was in Prairieville, October 28, 1842. The grounds did not even have a fence around them, and there was no horse-racing.

The first stone dwelling was erected on the street leading past the Court House in Waukesha, by Lyman Goodnow, in 1841, for W. P. Sloan, attorney at law. It was a two-story structure, and is still in use as a dwelling. Mr. Goodnow was paid 76 cents per perch for the materials, and lost money. He desired to advertise his stone-quarry.

The first Jurors summoned after Waukesha became a separate county, were Charles Butlerjunt, Robert Curran, Whitney Hudson, O. M. Hubbard, Geo. W. Porter, B. W. Knight, Joseph Marsh, C. H. Purple, William Brimmer, A. R. Hinckley, Elisha Pearl and E. B. Birchard.

February 13, 1847, Andrew G. Miller opened the first session of court for the county, in the old Prairieville Academy.

The first piano was brought to the county by George Diessner, from Germany. In the fall of 1849, Dr. Gilbert Wright brought the second one to the county.

The first fiddler in the county was Daniel Thompson, and he had all the fiddling he cared to do.

The first saw-mill was built by Mr. Wedge, in Muskego, early in 1836; the second was built by Israel W. Porter, a short distance above Prairieville; the third was built by Lord, Gale & Barber, at Prairieville, and the fourth was built by Clinton & Hine, a short distance below Prairieville. The second and third began sawing early in 1838; the fourth, a little later.

In 1836, A. C. Nickell brought the first stallion to the county. The horse, a handsome animal, was a great curiosity among the Indians.

The first Postmaster was David Jackson. The date of his commission is not on record. He carried the mail to Milwaukee once a week, if there was any, in his overalls pocket. The office was opened early in 1837, as Prairie Village.

The first stone-quarry was opened by Lyman Goodnow, in Prairieville, in 1840, on M. D. Cutler's land.

Dr. Gilbert Wright was the first regular physician to take up his residence in the county.

In the fall of 1839, water was brought in tamarack pump-logs, bored by hand, from the spring now owned by Samuel A. Randles to the old Prairieville House. The next, or possibly the same year, David Jackson's house was supplied from the Silurian spring.

The first church edifice in the county was erected by the Congregationalists in 1839. It was raised on Friday and Saturday, and the frame was covered with the boughs of trees for services the next Sunday. During fifteen years thereafter, services were held in it every Sunday, except one, after the inside had been painted.

The first railroad in the State reached Prairieville in January, 1851.

The first temperance society probably in the State was organized by E. W. and Lyman Goodnow and William T. Bidwell, at Prairieville, in 1839.

The first academy building erected in the State, was the old stone academy at Prairieville, erected in June, 1840, by Lyman Goodnow and William T. Bidwell. It has turned out many distinguished men.

The first lawyer in Waukesha County was Vernon Tichenor, who still practices his profession at Waukesha.

In a paper prepared for the Old Settlers' Club, Alex. F. Pratt wrote: "These first settlers, who came with their families in '35, were under everlasting obligations to Mr. Juneau, for provisions furnished them the first year, for there were none for sale except what he had, and he furnished supplies to several who had no means at the time to pay with."

To settle which was the first marriage in the county is a difficult matter. Alfred Orendorf was married to Livonia Rathbun, in October, 1837; Prucius Putnam and C. W. Haseltine were married at Col. Haseltine's, Vernon, January 1, 1838, to Miss Haseltine and Miss Thomas, respectively, and Hamilton Nelson was married to Mrs. Caroline Eggleston, at Robert Love's, August 12, 1838.

In 1835, Isaac B. Judson built the first fireplace and chimney in the county for the Fullers, who settled in Pewaukee.

Elon Fuller was the first guest at Curran's Hotel, in Brookfield.

The first railway cars built in Wisconsin were constructed in the stone shops of the old Milwaukee & Mississippi Railroad, at Waukesha.

John S. Rockwell first improved the water-power at what is now Oconomowoc.

The first thrashing machine erected in the county (probably in the State) was made by Hamilton Nelson, in Pewaukee, in 1839.

Nathaniel Walton brought the first thrashing machine to the county in 1837; but it was old and of little account, except for his own use. The next was brought soon after, by John Nelson. It was an eight-horse machine and was the pioneer in the business of thrashing for everybody.

The first lawsuit in the county was before John Manderville, at Nathaniel Walton's log house, near the present site of the State Industrial School.

W. W. Collins opened the first store at Oconomowoc.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS HENCE.

To go back, not one hundred, but even fifty years into the past history of Waukesha County, has been attended with difficulties which those for whose benefit this work was projected will never understand. To go one hundred years into the future, however, is to go on a pleasant journey where all is smooth sailing; is a task as bare of difficulties as dreaming, or "building castles in the air."

As to population, the county will not be required to keep up such a large ratio of gain as has characterized its growth during the last forty years, to contain, in 1980, 100,000 souls. This will be a trifle over 6,000 to each town, which is not a large population, being already exceeded in China, Japan, the Netherlands and other countries. Highways will then be macadamized, or constructed of paving blocks; trees will line all the streets; fruit will be within reach of passers by; horse cars—not drawn by horses, however, but propelled by some of the many stupendous natural forces which will then be utilized—will cross the various towns; the scores of beautiful lakes will be lined with magnificent villas and summer hotels, and their bosoms dotted with floating gardens and steam craft not now thought of; other railroads will traverse the county, equipped with better roadbeds, cars of splendor now unheard of, and drawn by locomotives which can rush across the endless garden—for a garden this county will be one hundred years hence—at a speed of at least one hundred miles an hour; the forests surrounding some of Waukesha's scores of lakes, will be private parks with regular keepers, and filled with deer and other animals—more like the zoological gardens of the present time; Government Hill will be the base of an observatory from whose summit six or seven counties, the City of Milwaukee, containing half a million souls, and Lake Michigan, can be distinctly seen; the old court house at Waukesha will have been razed and a structure reared in its place, surpassing in beauty of architecture, size and surroundings even the wildest imagination of the toilers of 1880; vehicles will be in use by which individuals can propel themselves at a speed equaling that of railway trains at the present day; daily papers, more complete in news, make-up and culture, than any in Wisconsin to-day, will be published in the county; dozens of hotels surpassing in size and elegance of appointment anything now in existence will then be built for the accommodation of those who gather from all parts of the world, to drink of Waukesha mineral waters; factories will have sprung up in every town for the manufacture of articles not now to be had, or even invented; colleges, seminaries and costly schoolhouses will be so near together, in 1980, that the children of each family can easily attend school each day from their homes; dwelling houses, offices and cities will be connected by a network of wires or tubes, affording such a cheap and simple means of communication that all can use them; dwelling houses will be made on new and improved plans, of new materials, and will be warmed in a manner and at a cost not now known; there will be some different and more-strict qualifications for voting; women will be allowed to vote upon many, if not all, questions; and finally, not a single person who reads this book in 1880 will be here in 1980 to know how truly this prophecy will be verified. However, it is by no means an unreasonable one, for, had any one predicted, fifty years ago, the existence in the future of what we now have about us, he would have been written down a lunatic; but nevertheless, his predictions, true though they would have proven, would have appeared far more miraculous for the time than those made in this brief article do for the great year of 1880.

VILLAGE OF WAUKESHA.

LOCATION.

The site for the present village of Waukesha was not chosen by chance. There were no white people in what is now Waukesha County at that time, and those who located the place had no opposition or rivals. They came to the wilderness—as beautiful then as it has ever been since—and, after looking over the surrounding country thoroughly, and weighing all the various natural advantages, chose the present site of the village as the best the vicinity afforded. The choice was mostly due to the father of Morris D. and Alonzo R. Cutler, who had come with his sons to add his judgment and experience to theirs in choosing the most desirable location. They desired to found a village, or city, and determined that the spot where Waukesha now stands, with the rapids in the Fox River, which was then a much larger stream than now, the rich soil, fine springs, surrounding timber and proximity to Lake Michigan, would ultimately be the site of a goodly city. They have all—though the father is now nearly one hundred years of age—lived to see their judgment proven correct.

The soil was rich and dry, but covered with hazel brush and a tangle of other small shrubs, with here and there an oak, and above, below and back of the present village was a large aggregation of Pottawatomie wigwams, which was called by the early settlers, Prairie Village. Nearly every village and city in the West is built upon the ruins of an Indian village, the aborigines being apparently more expert than their white brethren in the choice of the most eligible sites for a large collection of dwellings.

The first claim made in what is now the village was the "mill quarter," consisting of 160 acres of land, blazed out by the Cutlers, in 1834, which embraced all the lots on which are the business portion, the court house, and a considerable portion of the residence lots of the village, as it now is. This "mill quarter" was claimed by Alonzo R. Cutler, who very soon after exchanged it with his brother Morris D., for property in Illinois. In 1837, Lord, Gale, Barber, through William A. Barstow, purchased it for $6,013. They gave a heavy mortgage on the property, which finally, except the water power, reverted to Mr. Cutler, who had it platted into village lots, by George S. West.

In 1836, David Jackson employed Martin Field, now a resident of Mukwonago, to plat forty acres into village lots; but the plat was never recorded.

It will thus be seen that M. D. Cutler was the original permanent proprietor of Waukesha.

The first settlers here were also the first in the county—Morris D. and Alonzo R. Cutler and Henry Luther. The first house here was A. R. Cutler's claim-shanty, erected in May, 1834, near where Blair's machine shop now is. It was finished a few days before the one built by M. D. Cutler, where his limits, present residence is, in the park. The next buildings were erected outside of the present village limits, as every new-comer desired to secure a tract of the splendid and with which the vicinity abounded. The only village there was for two or three years, consequently, was the Indian village, which was densely populated during the summer seasons, but generally pretty well deserted every winter. Even in 1837, after the "Prairieville House" had been opened by James Buckner, the place did not look much like a village to newcomers, or give promise of ever becoming one. The underbrush had only been cleared away in patches, for gardens and a little grain; there was a log hotel; Juneau's log store (Indian trading post, more properly), a post office, without much mail, in David Jackson's log house, and that was all. Down at Bethesda spring, and out on the prairie where the Smarts now reside, were log houses, and also similar residences down the river and on the west bank. It was not a village, nor did it begin to assume such proportions as would entitle the place to that name until about 1840. The building of the grist-mill, by W. A. Barstow and others—the Saratoga Mills, now owned by B. Boorman, are the ones referred to—was a great event for Prairieville. It contained the only "smutter" in this portion of the Territory, and was the largest mill then within its limits. People came from far and near to this mill, being unable to get white flour made at any other point, and this not only brought a large amount of trade to the merchants, but attracted settlers to the locality. From the date of the flouring-mill, which began grinding in 1839, Prairieville began to be of some importance and to increase in population.

DIFFERENT NAMES.

The village of Waukesha, as well as the town, has existed under three different legal names. The first, Prairie Village, was taken from the Pottawatomie village which the whites found here, and which was so named because it was a large collection of wigwams on a prairie. This name was bestowed by the Legislature, March 8, 1839; but, being considered too long, and not entirely proper for the town nor for a city if the place should become one, it was changed by act of the Legislature approved December 21, 1839. Under this name the village thrived, growing rapidly in population and wealth until 1846, when, the name of the new county, of which Prairieville was the county seat, being called Waukesha, the name of the village (and of the town also) was legally changed to Waukesha, which, no doubt, will remain unchanged as long as there is anything here worthy of any name whatever.

But Waukesha has been known by other names. When W. A. Barstow proposed to erect a flouring-mill at Prairie Village, some of the inhabitants were so much pleased that they proposed to call the place Barstow, and for some time after that the people in the surrounding towns called it "Barstow's Mills."

Before this the place was called Lisbon for a short time.

A few proposed to name the place Jacksonville, after the first Postmaster, and the first Scotchman here desired to name it Glengarry. These attempts, it is well known, amounted to nothing; but Waukesha for many years was known to outsiders as "the hub," because it contained so many political leaders, and was the place for holding almost all conventions and public meetings. It was also known as "that stinking Abolition hole," because of the great number of Anti-slaveryites who had settled here.

All of these titles were doubtless considered well earned, as its present one certainly is—"Saratoga of the West." This popular term arose from the great number of mineral springs found here, and from the fame the place has gained as a summer resort.

WAUKESHA INCORPORATED.

Prairieville was platted as a village at an early day, but not incorporated; it was merely a part of the town, and governed by the Town Board of Supervisors. Finally, after several attempts on the part of several citizens, an act entitled "An Act to incorporate the Village of Waukesha, in the County of Waukesha," was passed January 10, 1852, and the boundary lines fixed as they had been agreed upon when a charter was prepared. Some of the chief points of the charter, as it now exists, may be gathered from the following:

SECTION 1. The inhabitants of the district of country included within the following limits and boundaries, in township number six north, of range number nineteen east, in the County of Waukesha, to wit: Beginning at the southwest corner of the east half of the southwest quarter of section number three (3); from thence due north on said line to town line, from thence east on said line to the northeast corner of the town plat of "Prairieville Village;" from thence south on the line of said village to the center of Main street, in said village; from thence westerly, following the center of said street until it intersects the highway (or what is now used and fenced as such), running from said street south through the lands of Henry Bowron; from thence, following the center of said highway until it strikes the line running north and south through the center of the northwest quarter of section number two (2); from thence on said line to the south line of section two (2); from thence west to the place of beginning, are hereby created a body corporate and politic by the name and style of the "President and Trustees of the Village of Waukesha," and by that name shall be capable of contracting and being contracted with, of suing and being sued, pleading and being impleaded, answering and being answered unto in all courts and places, and in all matters whatsoever, with power of purchasing, receiving, holding, occupying and conveying real and personal estate, and shall have a common seal, and may change the same at pleasure, and shall be competent to have and exercise all the rights and privileges, and be subject to all the duties and obligations pertaining to a municipal corporation.

SEC. 2. The government of said corporation and the exercise of its corporate powers and management of its fiscal, prudential and municipal concerns shall be vested in a President and six Trustees, and such other officers as are hereinafter provided for.

SEC. 3. Section 3 of Chapter 30 of the Private and Local Laws of 1859, entitled an act to amend an act to incorporate the village of Waukesha, is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "The elective officers of said corporation shall be one President, six Trustees, one Marshal, one Treasurer and one Street Commissioner, to be elected by the qualified voters at the annual election of said corporation to be held on the first Tuesday of May, in each year, and shall hold their respective offices for one year and until their successors are chosen and qualified.

SEC. 10. The President, each and every Trustee, Marshal, each and every Justice of the Peace and Constable of the town of Waukesha, shall be officers of the peace, and may command the peace and suppress in a summary manner all rioting and disorderly behavior, in a manner consistent with the ordinances of said village, within the limits thereof, and for such purposes may command the assistance of all by-standers, and, if need be, all citizens; and, if any person shall refuse to aid in maintaining the peace when so required, every such person shall forfeit and pay such fine as may be prescribed by ordinance of the village in such case provided.

SEC. 17. The President and Trustees shall have power to enact, establish, publish, enforce, alter, modify, amend or repeal all such ordinances, rules and by-laws for the government and good order of the village, for the suppression of vice, for the prevention of fires, and for the benefit of trade and commerce, and for the health thereof, as they may deem expedient, declaring and imposing penalties, and to enforce the same against any person who may violate any of the provisions of such ordinances, rules, or by-laws, and such ordinances rules and by-laws are hereby declared to be and to have the force of law: Provided, That they be not repugnant to the constitution and the laws of the United States, and of this State and for those purposes shall have authority, by ordinance, or by-laws, to organize fire companies, hook and ladder companies, to regulate their government and the time and the manner of their exercise, to provide all necessary apparatus for the extinguishment of fires, to require the owners of buildings to provide and keep suitable ladders and fire buckets, which are hereby declared to be appurtenances to the real estate, and exempt from seizure, distress or sale in any manner; and if the owner shall refuse to procure suitable ladders or fire buckets, after reasonable notice, the Trustees may procure and deliver the same to him, and, in default of payment thereof, may recover of the said owner the value of such ladder or fire buckets, or both, with cost of suit; to regulate the storage of gunpowder and other dangerous materials, to direct the safe construction of a place for the deposit of ashes, to appoint one or more fire wardens, to enter into, at reasonable times, and examine all dwelling houses, lots, yards, enclosures and buildings of every description, in order to discover whether any of them are in a dangerous condition, and to cause such as may be dangerous to be put in a safe condition, to regulate the manner of putting up stoves and stove pipes, to prevent fires and the use of fire works and fire arms within the limits of said village, or such part thereof as they may think proper, to compel the inhabitants of said village to aid in the extinguishment of fires, and to pull down and raze such buildings in the vicinity of the fire as shall be directed by the Trustees or any four of them who may be at the fire, for the purpose of preventing its communication to other buildings, and any building so destroyed shall be paid for by the corporation; to construct and preserve reservoirs, pumps, wells and other water works, and to regulate the use thereof, and generally to establish other measures of prudence for the prevention or extinguishment of fires as they may deem proper. Second, to prevent, abate and remove nuisances, and take such measures for the public health as they may deem proper, and compel the owner or occupant of any grocery, cellar, tallow-chandler's shop, soap factory, tannery, stable, barn, privy, sewer or other unwholesome or nauseous houses or places, to cleanse, remove or abate the same, from time to time, as often as it may be deemed necessary for the health, comfort and convenience of the inhabitants of the village. Third, to license and regulate the exhibitions of common showmen, or shows of any kind, or the exhibition of any natural or artificial curiosities, caravans, circuses, or theatrical performances, under the ordinances or common law. Fourth, to restrain and prohibit all descriptions of gambling, and fraudulent devices and practices, and all playing of cards, dice or other games of chance, for the purpose of gaming in said village. Fifth, to prevent any riots, noise, disturbances or disorderly assemblages, suppress and restrain disorderly houses, or groceries, or houses of ill-fame, shows and exhibitions. Sixth, to direct the location and management of all slaughter houses and markets. Seventh, to prevent the encumbering the streets, sidewalks, alleys or public grounds with carriages, carts, wagons, sleighs, boxes, lumber, firewood or other materials or substance whatever. Eighth, to prevent horse racing, immoderate driving or riding in the streets, and to regulate the places of bathing and swimming in waters within the limits of the village. Ninth, to restrain the running at large of cattle, swine, sheep, horses and other animals, and to authorize the distraining and sale of the same or to impose a fine not exceeding $5 for every such animal found so going at large in violation of the laws of the village. Tenth, to prevent the running at large of dogs, and to authorize the destruction of the same in a summary manner, when at large contrary to the ordinances, or to impose a tax on the same. Eleventh, to prevent any person from bringing, depositing or having within said village any putrid carcass, or any unwholesome substance, and to require the removal of the same by any person who may have upon his premises any such substance, or any putrid or unwholesome beef, pork, fish, hides or skins of any kind, and in default to authorize the removal thereof by some competent officer at the expense of such person or persons. Twelfth, to establish and regulate boards of health, provide hospitals and cemetery grounds, regulate the burial of the dead, and the returns of the bills of mortality, and to exempt burying grounds set apart for public use from taxation. Thirteenth, to provide for the security and protection of bridges. Fourteenth, to prevent all persons riding or driving any horse, ox, mule, cattle or other animal on the sidewalks in said village, or in any way doing any damage to such walks. Fifteenth, to restrain drunkards, immoderate drinking or obscenity in the streets or public places, and provide for arresting, removing or punishing any person or persons who may be guilty of the same. Sixteenth, to regulate the police of the village, to appoint watchmen and firemen, prescribe their duties and punish their delinquencies. Seventeenth, to protect trees and monuments in the village. Eighteenth, to provide for draining low, wet or marshy lands in said village; and shall have power to tax the property directly benefited by such drains in such proportion to the benefit derived therefrom as may be determined by the President and Trustees, and for such purposes may enter upon such lands and any adjacent lands for the purpose of digging or constructing such drain. Nineteenth, to establish the grade of all streets in said corporation, and to appoint a surveyor and prescribe his duties, and fix his compensation, not to exceed the pay allowed by law to others for like services. Twentieth, to appoint auctioneers, and compel to pay license.

SEC. 54—If any election provided for in this act shall for any cause not be held at the time prescribed, it shall not be considered a sufficient reason for arresting, suspending or absolving the said corporation, but such election may be held at any time thereafter by order of the trustees of said village, of which time ten days' public notice shall be given.

SEC. 55—The trustees shall have power to appoint, and at their pleasure remove, the following officers, to wit: one chief engineer of the fire department, two fire wardens, as many assistant wardens as they shall from time to time deem necessary; one surveyor, one sealer of weights and measures, sextons and keepers of burial grounds, and a street commissioner, and prescribe their duties and fix their compensation under the provisions of this act, and to impose and enforce in law such penalties as the said trustees may deem proper for any malfeasance or improper conduct of any of said officers, and to require bonds for the faithful performance of the duties of such of them as may be deemed expedient and necessary by the trustees: Provided, That the trustees shall have no power to pay themselves any compensation for their services.

In 1860, the charter was amended in such a manner as to prevent the Village Board from levying more than $500 per year for defraying municipal expenses, unless, at a special election, a two-thirds vote could be secured for levying a greater sum. In 1870, this section was amended in such a manner as to allow the trustees to levy $1,000 per annum for village expenses, and more if permission could be obtained by a two-thirds vote at a special election held for that purpose.

The following are some of the more important village ordinances:

SECTION 1—No person shall throw, place, or deposit any putrid meat or fish, decayed vegetables, or nuisances of any kind, in any street or alley, or upon any vacant lot in this village, under the penalty of five dollars for each and every offense.

SEC. 5—All ornamental or shade trees, or posts of any kind, hereafter placed or set out in any street in this village, shall be placed within one foot of the outer grade of the sidewalk of such street.

SEC. 14—No person shall ride, drive, or lead any animal upon any sidewalk in this village, unless in necessarily crossing the same, under the penalty of two dollars for each offense.

SEC. 1—No horses, mules, cattle, sheep, swine, geese, or other animal shall be suffered to be at large in the streets or upon the public grounds of the village of Waukesha.

SEC. 1—No person shall keep any hog, pig, cow, ox, jack, mule or other animal in this village, within forty feet of any dwelling house other than the dwelling house actually occupied by such person so keeping any such animal, unless by permission of the Board of Trustees.

SEC. 1—The President and Trustees of the village of Waukesha shall have power to appoint one suitable person who shall be known as "wood inspector," who shall keep an office at some central and convenient place in said village, whose duty shall be to measure all wood offered for sale in said village.

SEC. 1—No person shall keep within this village a billiard table, shuffle board, E. O. table, faro-table, ten-pin alley, or any other instrument of gaming with which money shall in any manner be played for, and every such person shall, for each and every such offense forfeit the penalty of ten dollars.

SEC. 1—No person shall be allowed to fish with hook and line from or under any bridge or from or within sixty feet of any bridge or street in the village of Waukesha.

Under the act of incorporation, H. N. Davis, Thomas H. Olin and John Wagner, Jr., Supervisors of the town of Waukesha, appointed Wednesday, June 30, 1852, as the day of the first village election, and Joseph Turner, E. M. Randall and Vernon Tichenor as the Judges of Election. There were 253 votes polled, of which, for President, E. B. West received 120; Nelson Burrows, 127; S. S. Case, 3, and John Bailey, 1. The first meeting of the village fathers was held July 1, 1852, in the office of the Town Clerk. The first resolution to assess taxes authorized the collection of $300 to pay the "expenses of the new government for the year."

The first sidewalk-tax, which created something of a hullabaloo among some of the taxpayers, was as follows, with the cost of publication to be added :

WAUKESHA, October 19, 1852.

FATHER OF THE SARATOGA OF THE WEST.

No one denies that before the discovery of the valuable medical properties of the Bethesda Spring, which led to the discovery of similar virtues in the numerous other springs in the vicinity, Waukesha was comparatively a dull and unimportant place. It was near to Milwaukee, whose markets were liberally patronized by the people, thus making the mercantile business less profitable, and it contained few manufactories. Everything was made the most of, doubtless; but there was comparatively little here for the making of a large and thrifty center of population.

Whether Richard Dunbar's discovery was providential or not, it certainly was fortunate for himself, the village and the world; for it bore him safely over a grave which seemed to be already in sight; added new life and prosperity to Waukesha, and opened the doors of health to thousands of his afflicted fellow-mortals.

A sketch of his life may, therefore, very properly appear at this point. He is entitled to the distinctive appellation which is given him in the title of this article, and his energy in advertising Waukesha to the world, while many of those who are now reaping the rich benefits of his labors were sneering at his faith and opposing him in all possible ways, it will be held in more grateful remembrance as time rolls on and reveals the real magnitude of his work.

Richard Dunbar, although well known in other connections, was chiefly famous as the discoverer of the Bethesda Mineral Spring, at Waukesha. He was born May 1, 1836, in County Mayo, Ireland, of Scotch-Irish parentage. His grandfather having been named Richard, and his father also Richard, he was playfully styled "Richard the Third." He came to the United States when quite a young man, and was afterward a successful railroad contractor. He was a partner several years of the Hon. Seeley Chamberlain, of Ohio. He married his first wife and lived some time in Ohio, where the wife died leaving no issue. He came to Wisconsin about thirty years ago, and engaged in railroad building in company with Alexander Graham, of Whitewater. He was married in 1857 to Catherine, third child of William Clarke, of Waukesha. Not long after marriage, he went to Cuba, and was soon given the contract by the Spanish Government to build what they called "The immense railroad of the West." This proved a very lucrative enterprise. They returned to New York in the spring of 1861, and Mr. Dunbar was soon called to engage in building the aqueduct which brings Potomac water into Washington. Then he returned to Brooklyn, and for some years held an honorable position in the Internal Revenue Department in the city of New York.

Dr. Willard Parker, Sr., of New York, his family physician, first discovered Mr. Dunbar's failing health, which was caused mainly by diabetes, and advised him to make an ocean voyage, and revisit his native clime. After visiting all the famous springs of Europe without finding relief, he returned to America discouraged. In August, 1868, he was called West from New York by the death of Mrs. Dunbar's mother. His family physician had prophesied death within two months, claiming that medical skill had been exhausted. He was quite feeble and enduring much suffering. About this date, while being driven out for air and exercise, he providentially drank from this spring, since so famous. In his eagerness, he drank six tumblerfuls. His thirst was fully satisfied, and a strange, refreshing sensation went coursing through his system. After resting half an hour under the old guardian oak near the spring, he again drank freely of the water. The result was wonderful profuse perspiration and restful relief followed the first all-night's sleep enjoyed for years. The benefits were continuous with use, but early the following year, while absent, he suffered a relapse. On hastening to the spring again and finding the same relief in effect, he soon after purchased the spring and its beautiful surroundings. He named the spring "Bethesda," in memory of the healing pool at Jerusalem, and because of the goodness and mercy of the Lord in leading him to its healing waters. He proclaimed the virtues of this spring. People came, drank and were healed. The angel of health had blessed the spring, and tens of thousands of the afflicted have since sung its praises in all quarters of the globe. Waukesha, till the discovery of Bethesda, was "little and unknown." The Colonel's cure gave him unflinching faith in the curative properties of the water; and this unwavering faith, combined with his business ability, indomitable will and tireless efforts, soon made "Bethesda" and "Waukesha" household words. The popular demand for Bethesda water, turned the tide of summer tourists to Waukesha. The spring was a source of health and wealth. New life and prosperity came to Waukesha. Though at first the best citizens smiled or sneered at the Colonel's enthusiasm and prophetic visions, yet now all concede that to Richard Dunbar's success does Waukesha owe its present prosperity and proud pre-eminence as the "Saratoga of the West." Col. Dunbar lived years after the discovery of Bethesda, and, having nobly earned success, he enjoyed the rewards of his persevering genius. Waukesha, Bethesda and Dunbar, names inseparably linked, became world renowned. After a brief illness, Col. Dunbar passed from earth on the 15th of December, 1878. Few men had a wider circle of friends or more sincere mourners. His remains now rest in the grand chapel at Notre Dame, Ind. The discourses of the clergy, the expressions of sorrow from his fellow-citizens, as well as the many letters of condolence received by Mrs. and Miss Dunbar from distinguished individuals, illustrate the position which he held before the world and among those who knew him best. Though he was human and therefore not without faults, and sometimes subject to criticism, especially from ambitious rivals, yet, take him all in all, we do not often look upon his like. Nature made him a commanding type of manhood; a practical education, extended travels, shrewd observation, great executive ability and irrepressible energy made him a marked man among men. Young and old testify, "Col. Dunbar was a gentleman." His affable manner and generous heart made thousands happy to call him friend. His refined tact gave satisfaction in business relations, although he was often sharply antagonized by persons impatient at opposition and persistent in purpose. His enthusiasm for Bethesda was unbounded, his charities liberal, and his hospitality princely. His fame is now in the keeping of an appreciative public. His successful life-work is the heritage of a bereaved wife and stricken daughter. His devotion to the latter, Miss Estelle, was a marked feature of his character.

The village and county of Waukesha are the beneficiaries of Richard Dunbar's success—the scene of his noblest toils and triumphs—and the former, largely beautified by his own hand, is to be the final resting-place of the DISCOVERER OF BETHEDA MINERAL SPRING.

POST OFFICE AND POSTMASTERS.

The first Postmaster, not only of Waukesha Village, but in what is now Waukesha County, was David Jackson. Whether he received his commission before January, 1837, or not, it is now difficult to determine; but he was Postmaster to all intents and purposes, and had a commission as such, signed by President Andrew Jackson. It is not to be presumed that "Old Hickory" Jackson appointed David Jackson Postmaster on account of similarity of names, for the man who first had charge of mail in this county had other qualifications. He was a good man, possessed of sufficient ability, and came permanently to Waukesha very early in 1836—probably in February or March—and had located a claim in 1835. The first mail matter that came to the office was a letter for Almon Osborn and a paper for John M. Wells. There were no envelopes or postage stamps in those days, and, if the person to whom letters were to be delivered had no money, they were returned to the post office. There was no post office at first; that is, not even the usual blue box furnished by the Government had been provided for Mr. Jackson, and when the packages became so numerous that he could not carry them in his pocket, or the crown of his hat, Mrs. Jackson, an excellent woman, put them in a brightly scoured tin pan and hoisted the pan safely to the top shelf. She also kept her husband's pockets in excellent repair, putting a button on the one in which Mr. Jackson brought the mail from Milwaukee. Sometimes he went on foot; sometimes on horseback, and sometimes he sent by the neighbors. The post office in those days was not a political machine, and was not much of a machine anyway.

Mr. Jackson held the office until his death, which was caused by consumption, December 19, 1841. He was succeeded by William A. Barstow, who received his commission in February, 1842. Mr. Barstow, who was connected with the mill, moved the postoffice from Mr. Jackson's house, which stood near the present site of the Episcopal Church, to near Charles R. Dakin's store. Mr. Barstow held the office for a year or two and was succeeded by Alex. W. Randall, who continued to hold the office until the spring of 1846, when Lemuel White was appointed. Mr. White held the office during the balance of James K. Polk's term, and was succeeded in April, 1849, by John H. Hays. Mr. Hays was a Whig groceryman from Virginia, and, after receiving his appointment from President Zachary Taylor, moved the office into his store. He was a peculiar man and held the office but a very short time, being succeeded in a few weeks by Martin H. Howard. Mr. Howard drew the Postmaster's salary about one year, but Elihu Enos had the office in charge; was the Postmaster de facto during Mr. Howard's time, and was appointed by the President to succeed him in July, 1850. Mr. Enos made a satisfactory Postmaster, and held the office during the Whig administration, being succeeded in the spring of 1853 by Henry D. Barron, who was appointed by President Franklin Pierce. At this time the post office had become a political machine; the Democratic party was divided into factions, and the squabbles for the office were numerous, vigorous and astonishingly successful. In 1854, Mr. Barron was greatly astonished to receive notice that his resignation, after due deliberation, had been regretfully accepted, and that J. B. Reymert had been appointed to succeed him. Rival Democratic politicians had written a resignation, signing Mr. Barron's name, which, upon being forwarded to Washington, was acted upon, the officials there raising no question as to its genuineness. This bold and novel scheme miscarried; but Mr. Barron was in hot water, and in October, 1855, was removed, and A. F. Pratt appointed to succeed him. The war of his political enemies began upon Mr. Pratt before he had fairly learned the boxes, resulting in his removal early in February, 1856, and the appointment of Sebina Barney. Mr. Barney was succeeded by A. W. Cole, appointed by James Buchanan. Mr. Cole held the office until April, 1861, when he was succeeded by Orson Z. Olin, who was appointed by Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Olin gave general satisfaction as Postmaster, and held the office longer than any man who had preceded him, or eleven years consecutively. He was succeeded in April, 1872, by Elihu Enos, who has held the office uninterruptedly from that date. During his first term, about six months after receiving his commission, Mr. Enos was greatly astonished to receive notification that his resignation had been accepted and George C. Pratt appointed to succeed him as Postmaster of Waukesha. The telegraph office was then in the postoffice, and in charge of Mr. Enos, who at once sent a telegram to the Post Office Department stating that any resignation purporting to have come from him was a fraud and a forgery, and that he not only had not resigned, but did not intend to do so. In a few hours he received a message saying he had been re-appointed, and telling him to hold the office and show the telegram to Mr. Pratt.

The post office has been where it now is since 1862, having been established there by O. Z. Olin; and there is probably no office in the State so conveniently and compactly arranged, or one kept in better order. David Jackson went to Milwaukee once each week with mail, if there was any; now the post office receives and sends ten pouches of mail each day.

The first money orders issued were on July 3, 1865; as follows: One for John George Eisman, for $10, payable to Peter Imig, at Madison, and one for Mrs. Pamela A. Canright, for $17.40 payable to G. H. Ledyard, Sparta, Wis. There were no other orders issued until July 10; then on July 18, and again August 8. Business was not lively in the money order department. The whole number issued up to January 1, 1866, was seventy-one. The whole number issued to July 3, 1880—precisely fifteen years from the date of issuing the first order, was 20,024, and the number issued during 1879 was 2,108. The net proceeds turned over to the Government by Mr. Enos for 1879 were $3,625; that is, the profits of the office after paying all salaries and expenses were the amount named. The money order office handles about $75,000 per year.

The post office at Waukesha is the only second-class office in the Union in a village of less than three thousand inhabitants.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The school history of Waukesha Village can be very briefly told. The old schoolhouse built of tamarack logs on the west side of the river, in 1837, was the first in the place, as well as in the county, and is described somewhat elaborately elsewhere. Slabs were its seats, and a tar-barrel its stove. It served a good purpose until the west portion of the village was set off into a separate district, and the stone schoolhouse erected in 1847, near the residence of William Blair, on the hill. This building has served thirty-three years for District No. 10, which includes the residents of that portion of the village which is on the west side of the river. Only one teacher is employed in this school, which aims only to be a first-class district school.

When the village was divided into two districts, the eastern portion had no schoolhouse, and, owing to various differences, did not build one until the present stone structure was erected in 1854. The district rented the basement of the Presbyterian church, and other convenient places, until a schoolhouse was built. In the mean time, private schools, in addition to the Carroll College were comparatively numerous. A seminary was opened in Juneau's old trading-post building, where the Catholic Church now stands, and several female seminaries and select schools also flourished for longer or shorter periods, so that the children of the village did not suffer for want of educational facilities.

The present schoolhouse is known as the Union School building. The site consists of three acres of level land situated on the west side of Grand avenue, on which a few oak trees, planted by nature, still afford shade to the boisterous youngsters, in addition to those since planted by the school officers. The site was deeded to District No. 1, January 10, 1854, by Morris D. Cutler, for $700. The front wing of the building, constructed of Waukesha limestone, was built during the summer of 1854, under the supervision of Mr. Creighton.

The original structure was equal to all demands upon it during a dozen years, at the end of which time the teachers began to complain of over-crowded rooms, and in 1867, W. D. Bacon, as a member of the school board, attempted to secure the erection of a new building, but failed. This attempt was annually renewed by him or others, but, owing to conflicting opinions, without result until 1870. After repeated special meetings, a contract was finally let, July 26, 1870, to Jentch & Creighton to do the mason work for $1,850, and another to J. Benson, for $1,650, to do the woodwork and painting on a brick wing, to be finished in the same style as the original building.

The cost of maintaining the school in District No. 1, has been as follows for the last five years: Ending June 1, 1876, $4,670.63; 1877, $4,517.92; 1878, $4,116.82; 1879, $4,513.06; 1880, $4,406.58. Total, $22,225.01. The Principal, Prof. A. A. Miller, has as salary of $1,200 per year. He has seven teachers under his direction. The school for some reason has never taken advantage of the high-school law, which allows the district to draw a goodly sum of school money from the State; but all the higher branches usually taught in a high-school are pursued here. The officers are M. S. Griswold, Clerk; A. T. Stebbins, Director; A. J. Frame, Treasurer. The district once had a debt of $2,000, but is now unincumbered. The school has a comparatively large number of foreign scholars.

CHURCHES.

First Congregational Church.—The First Congregational Church of Waukesha has the distinction of being the oldest Congregational church in the State of Wisconsin, and is believed to be the oldest church organization of any name within the limits of the county. It was organized January 20, 1838, in the log cabin of Mr. Robert Love, a very few rods south of the Bethesda Spring. "Prairie Village," as the locality was then called, had been an Indian settlement. The Indian title to the lands had just been extinguished when settlers began to locate here, pushing through the dense "Milwaukee Woods," and here coming upon the first view of prairie land.

There was as yet no village, only a cabin here and there, where the pioneers were beginning their farms.

Among the settlers occasional religious services had been held. Elder Wheeler, Methodist, and Elder Griffin, Baptist, are remembered to have held meetings at the house of Mr. Walton, who retains his home on the same tract east of the Industrial School. There had been funeral services, too, the first graves having been made near the southeast corner of the present college grounds.

Rev. Gilbert Crawford had come to Milwaukee in the previous summer, and was preaching for the First Presbyterian Church, then just organized in that settlement. He had become acquainted with some of the new-comers in Prairieville, and, being invited to visit them for the purpose of organizing a church, came out with his wife on that winter day, and was entertained at the house of Mr. Walton.

The members who constituted the church at its organization numbered eighteen—Ezra Mendall, Mrs. Alice Mendall, Robert Love, Mrs. Martha Love, Jared Rice, Mrs. Laura Barnett, E. H. Marshall, J. W. Rossman, Mrs. Irene Rossman, Mrs. Achsa DeWolf, Asa Clark, Mrs. Naomi Clark, Edmund D. Clinton, Mrs. Amanda Clinton, Allen Clinton, Mrs. Adaline Clinton, Mrs. Sally Cushman and Mrs. Caroline Eggleston. Three of these survived to the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the church—Deacon Edmund D. Clinton, Mrs. Laura Barnett and Mrs. Caroline Eggleston, now Mrs. Hamilton Nelson.

The church seems at first to have depended upon Rev. Mr. Crawford for occasional services. Asa Clark and Ezra Mendall were the first Deacons, and Robert Love, Clerk. Rev. Moses Ordway, afterward the Pastor of a Presbyterian Church in South Prairieville, is mentioned as presiding at several meetings of the church.

The first minister who regularly supplied the church was Rev. Cyrus Nichols, who labored one year from May 1, 1839, and was succeeded by Rev. Otis F. Curtis, whose ministry was very successful, and continued from May, 1840, to November, 1846.

Mr. Curtis and the church were active in securing the co-operation of other churches in the formation of an ecclesiastical union. This resulted in the "Presbyterian and Congregational Convention of Wisconsin," which was organized at Troy, Wis., in October, 1840. The union of the two denominations was not acceptable to some of the prominent members of the church, and one, Deacon Ezra Mendall, was permitted to place his protest upon the church records.

In a small log schoolhouse erected on the north side of the river, the Sunday services were held, and the increasing congregation was accommodated by the erection of an addition of slabs. When there was not room enough for the crowd, the brethren would leave, and go to the grove for a prayer meeting, while the Pastor preached in the house. Some time in the summer of 1840, Rev. Mr. Curtis announced, at a Sunday service, that they would meet next Sunday at the new Congregational Church. No such edifice had yet been reared, but during the week preparations were made. On Saturday the frame was raised, and on Sunday, said Mr. Curtis, "I stood in the frame behind a work-bench and preached, the people sitting on the sleepers, with their feet in the grass."

As the work of building the house of worship went on, the people met there Sunday after Sunday. The green boughs that had been laid upon the joists for shade were replaced by a roof; the sleepers were floored over, and temporary seats arranged. There was an interruption of service at the church only for one Sunday, to give time for the paints to dry.

This building, the first Congregational Church edifice in the Territory of Wisconsin, stood on the corner of Wisconsin and Maple avenues, and with subsequent additions served the uses of the congregation for a quarter of a century; it was then used for a while as a schoolroom, and finally removed from its site and transformed into a dwelling.

The ministry of Rev. Mr. Curtis in Prairieville had commenced with a revival season of very deep interest, and such scenes were repeated in this house in successive years. At the communion season in May, 1840, immediately after the coming of Mr. Curtis, fifty-four persons were received to membership; in February, 1841, thirty-one were added; and, in the course of the two following months, twenty-seven more. There was also a large accession in the year 1844.

The church records of those days show that a strict watch was kept over the members, and that the discipline and excommunication of the delinquent was a very common part of the church business. Profanity, Sabbath-breaking, drinking, dishonesty, and the neglect of church ordinances were dealt with as they deserved; nor did horse-racing, dancing and attending circuses find any tolerance. A resolution expressed the opinion of the church that "Going to the post office on Sunday is an ordinary business transaction, and as such should be considered a violation of God's command to keep the Sabbath holy." Another resolution declared that "All secret societies are inconsistent with the religion of Christ, and, therefore, we will not receive any person who is a member of such societies."

It was inevitable that a church so wide awake and so uncompromising should be very early moved to act on that subject which was ere long to convulse the nation. In March, 1845, a preamble and resolutions were adopted, after full discussion, and by a vote, in which the yeas and nays were put upon record, vigorously denouncing slavery, and declaring that "We will not admit to our pulpit or communion, or have any Christian fellowship with, any person who practices, upholds or justifies this gross system of iniquity."

The next Pastor after Mr. Curtis was Rev. I. Codding. Mr. Codding was a very forcible Anti-slavery lecturer, and had presented that subject in New England and the West; he had not been ordained as a minister until after the church called him to its pastorate. A council of churches and Pastors was called for the purpose, and the service took place July 13, 1847. After serving the church one year, he left, to pursue his former course as a lecturer.

After an interval of about a year, in which the pulpit was occupied by Rev. J. Ingersoll and Rev. C. Jones, the church called Rev. Job H. Martyn, who had been for some years preaching in Massachusetts and New York, and his pastorate commenced in October, 1850.

Mr. Martyn's preaching was that of an evangelist; he aimed at immediate results, and secured within a year the addition of sixty-one members.

After this very successful year, the church record is strangely silent concerning the next twelve months, and begins again in May, 1853, with the coming of the next Pastor, Rev. Mead Holmes, of Ohio. Mr. Holmes remained with the church for two years, closing his labors in April, 1855.

The church remained without any regular supply for its pulpit until March 1, 1857, when Rev. W. F. Clarke, of London, Canada, with whom they had been some time in correspondence, arrived, and commenced his services.

Mr. Clarke was soon felt in the village as a man of energy and strength; the church prospered and the congregation was increased until the house of worship was inadequate. At the end of his first year, he made his continuance in the pastorate contingent on the enlargement of the church edifice, and more perfect arrangements in regard to his support. The first of these conditions appears to have been neglected until the following December, when, upon another hint from the Pastor, the work of providing more ample accommodation was begun, and public religious services, in consequence, were suspended until the following February. About that time, Mr. Clarke was invited to take charge of a mission in British Columbia, and closed his labors here in March, 1859.

Rev. Hiram Foote, of Janesville, was invited to succeed Mr. Clarke, and commenced in April, 1859.

Mr. Foote's ministry was that of a faithful and earnest man, whose sincere interest in the welfare of the church was still manifested in the years of his residence here, after the close of his pastorate. He was a zealous advocate of temperance and opponent of slavery, and, with the church, fully sympathized in the effort of the government to maintain the integrity of the Union. The congregation was well represented in the army, the Pastor having to mourn a son who died at Andersonville.

Rev. Mr. Foote resigned his charge in January, 1864, to engage in an agency for the Rockford Female Seminary. He continued to reside at Waukesha, and was very helpful to his successors, and to the church, by his counsels and his service in many ways. Rev. Charles Caverno, then pursuing his studies in Chicago Theological Seminary, was engaged for one year from June 1, 1864. In the spring of 1865, a series of union meetings was held under the direction of the noted evangelist, Rev. J. D. Potter, which resulted in a goodly number of conversions. Twelve persons were received to membership in the month of May in that year.

Mr. Caverno was succeeded by Rev. A. P. Johnson, of Enfield, Conn., who served the church one year and closed his labors, June 1, 1866.

The house of worship and the lot on which it stood had been sold in February. After possession of it had been given the purchaser, the church was dependent on the courtesy of the Baptist Church and society for a place in which to meet. It was decided not to call a Pastor until the new house of worship was completed. Communion services were held from time to time, and a series of meetings conducted by Rev. J. T. Avery, of Ohio, during the month of January, 1867, in which Rev. Mr. Foote and Rev. Robert Boyd, the beloved Pastor of the Baptist Church, very cordially joined, resulted in many conversions, and the addition of twenty-five members to the Congregational Church.

The building of a new house of worship was commenced in May, 1867, and completed in the following December. It stands at the head of Wisconsin avenue, upon a lot of ground which had been purchased through the energy of the ladies of the congregation, at a time when it seemed very doubtful whether the society had the ability and the courage to undertake the work of building a new church edifice. This house of worship, forty-five feet by sixty-five, with an oratory in the rear, with bell, fences and furnishing, was completed at the cost—including the lot—of $11,254. The rear of the lot, with the dwelling house upon it, has since been sold. The pipe organ now in use was purchased four years later. At the time of the dedication, a very beautiful pulpit Bible was presented to the church by Mrs. Julia Whitmann, of Canadaigua, New York, a sister of two of the members of the church, A. S. Putney and Milo Putney, and an elegant communion service by Rev. and Mrs. H. Foote, a memorial of their son Horatio, who died in the stockade prison at Andersonville.

This new church edifice was dedicated to the worship of God, December 26, 1867. A very large assembly was in attendance, many persons coming from other congregational churches, to express their interest, and to offer their congratulations. Rev. Charles W. Camp, of Fond du Lac, who had been called to the pastorate, conducted the services of dedication, and commenced his labors with the beginning of the year 1868.

The public installation of the pastor was deferred, and did not take place until January 10, 1871, when the service was duly performed by a council of the neighboring churches and their Pastors. Rev. W. D. Love, of the Spring Street Church, Milwaukee, preached the sermon on that occasion.

On the 21st of May, 1872, was held a deeply interesting service at the ordination of John W. Baird, a member of this church, a graduate of Beloit College and Chicago Theological Seminary, who had been appointed a missionary to the Bulgarian people in European Turkey. Rev. William Walker, long a missionary in Western Africa; Rev. Josiah Tyler, a missionary for some years in South Africa; Rev. Dr. Treat, Secretary of the American Board of Missions, of Boston, and Rev. Dr. Humphrey, District Secretary, Chicago, were present and participated in the services. Rev. Mr. Baird is still faithfully prosecuting his work at Monastir, European Turkey. The interest awakened by his ordination resulted in the formation of a missionary society among the ladies of the church, which has continued its meetings and its contributions to the present time.

The fortieth anniversary of the organization of the church was observed with great interest, January 20 and 21, 1878.

On Sabbath, January 20, Rev. O. F. Curtis, Pastor of the church from 1840 to 1846, occupied the pulpit in the morning, and in the evening Rev. Mr. Camp delivered a memorial discourse to a very large assembly, the Presbyterian and Baptist congregations, with their pastors, being present.

On Monday, January 21, a full assembly met in the evening, and were addressed in reminiscences of the past by Rev. O. F. Curtis, Deacon E. D. Clinton, of Brodhead; Hamilton Nelson, of Beloit; Deacon Bell, of Pewaukee; Silas Chapman, of Milwaukee, and Messrs. Orson Tichenor, Ezra S. Purple and C. C. Olin, of Waukesha. Deacon Clinton and Mrs. Nelson were members of the church at its organization; Deacon Bell was present at that time, though he did not join; Mr. Chapman was a member of the church in 1841, and at that time taught the academy here, which was the first successful incorporated school in the Territory of Wisconsin.

The singing on this occasion was conducted by the survivors of the first organized choir, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Olin, Mr. and Mrs. O. Z. Olin, Mrs. E. S. Purple, Hamilton Nelson and O. Tichenor.

Letters were read from Rev. Cyrus Nichols, the first pastor of the church, aged seventy-eight years, and too infirm to attend; from Rev. H. Foote and wife, Rev. Mead Holmes, Rev. C. Caverno, former Pastor, and from Rev. J. W. Baird, of Turkey. A letter was subsequently received and published from Rev. W. F. Clarke.

A fellowship meeting, in which neighboring churches and Pastors united, was held on the next day, and a little printed "Memorial," containing an account of the celebration, with the Confession of Faith, the Covenant, Rules of the Church, Constitution of the Society, etc., etc., was widely circulated.

In September of the same year—1878—a very interesting meeting of the general convention of the State was held with this church. Pastors and delegates from all parts of the State were present, and from abroad, Rev. Dr. Alden, Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions; Rev. Dr. H. M. Storrs, Secretary of the American Home Missionary Society, and missionaries from Turkey and China. The representation of the churches was unusually large, as many came expecting to attend the meeting of the American Board of Foreign Missions, which was held that year in Milwaukee, immediately after the convention here.

The officers of the church and of the ecclesiastical society for the present year, 1880, are as follows:

Pastor—Rev. Charles W. Camp. Deacons—Newton S. Kendrick, Edwin Wood, Orson Z. Olin, Orson Tichenor. Clerk—O. Z. Olin. Trustees—Leonard Coleman, Orson P. Clinton, Prof. A. A. Miller. Clerk and Treasurer of the society—M. S. Griswold.

Miss Nora L. Olin is the organist, and M. S. Griswold, the Sunday-school Superintendent.

The church has now 138 members, of whom fifteen may be classed as absent. The whole number upon the roll from the first is 669. A few of these names occur twice, members having removed and subsequently returned. Many have been gathered home in the course of these years, but a multitude still living in wide dispersion over the country, cherish pleasant memories of their former connection here.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—The Methodist Episcopal Church of Waukesha was organized in 1839, under the pastoral charge of Rev. H. W. Frink. Rev. Hooper Crews was Presiding Elder. The first class organized, consisted of Mr. Owen, Leader; Mrs. Owen, Richard Smart, Truman Wheeler, Mrs. Truman Wheeler, Hiram Wheeler, Mrs. Hiram Wheeler, Theophilus Haylett and Horace Edsall. The first quarterly meeting held was in a tamarack schoolhouse on the Pewaukee side of the Fox River. In a very short time, a revival of religion added to the membership of the class, from which, with the tide of immigration setting in from 1840 to 1842, the class received the names of Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Bromwell, Alexander Henry, who soon became leader, Mr. and Mrs. Winter, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hafield, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Clark, Sarah Packham, Mr. Blodgett, John White and Rev. Jonas Clark.

Rev. Hooper Crews was the first Presiding Elder who visited Waukesha and in connection with the Pastor held a revival meeting, from which a deep religious interest prevailed all through the county.

Alexander Henry was a man mighty in prayer, and, in connection with some members of the Congregational Church, Deacon Mendall, Daniel Chandler, Allen Clinton and John M. Wells, went around to the neighboring schoolhouses and villages to hold prayer meetings. They were all regarded as men of deep piety, and their services were highly valued. The old settlers named them, by way of eminence, "The Prairieville Breaking Team." On one occasion, the team made a visit to Oconomowoc to aid in a revival meeting in the Congregational Church, of which Rev. Mr. Montague was Pastor. The praying team got started before the good Pastor came, and they were having a lively time on his arrival. It was a little more of a noise than seemed right to the Pastor, and he made the remark, "We must stop these Methodists or they will take the roof off the church." He was quietly reminded that these were Congregationalists, as the Methodist part of the team had not yet taken hold. One feature of Prairieville Methodism was a deep, earnest piety. There are people yet alive who, in the early days of the place, in religious meetings have been known to fall helpless to the floor. Such scenes are now quite rare. Rev. John G. Whitcomb was appointed pastor of Prairieville Circuit in 1841, and Rev. L. F. Moulthrop in 1843. In 1841 and 1842, a commodious church edifice had been erected, and the general interest was largely on the increase. In 1845, Revs. G. W. Cottrell and Miles L. Reed were appointed to the circuit. In 1846, Revs. Washington Wilcox and J. M. Walker were appointed to the charge. Large accessions were made to the membership during this year both in the village and the outposts of the circuit.

In 1846, the name of Prairieville was dropped out of the list of appointments, and that of Waukesha substituted, to correspond with the change of the name of the village, and Rev. Washington Wilcox was appointed to the church as pastor. Mr. Wilcox was a man of strong mind and fine preaching ability. He still lives in the memory of many of the older members of the church, who regarded him as an earnest and true man, and a most uncompromising Christian. He has long since gone to his reward. In 1848, Rev. W. G. Miller was appointed to Waukesha station, and also in 1849. This earnest and devoted man was very successful on the station, and won the respect of those outside of his own church as well as those within. He has since been a man of great success, and has filled all the more important places in the gift of his conference. Having conquered all the territory in this conference, he last year was transferred to the Nebraska Conference, where he has new fields for victory, in which he is making grand successes. His pastorate in Waukesha will always be respected.

In 1851, the Wisconsin Annual Conference was held at this church, Rev. Bishop Waugh, D. D., presiding. The session was one of great harmony, and left a good impression on the entire community. The visit of so many ministers is still regarded with pleasure by the older portion of the citizens. There is to be found no more matter of record of interest until 1860 and 1861, when Rev. J. M. Walker was again returned to the church. Mr. Walker was a man of rare preaching ability and a good administrator of church discipline. His sermons were logical, and rendered with clearness and much fervor. He studied law and was admitted to the bar before he became a minister.

In 1861, the church, which had stood for twenty years, was consumed by fire under very suspicious circumstances. Many believed it to have been the work of an incendiary.

The Congregational Church now offered their church to the Society for use until they could rebuild, which kind offer was accepted.

In 1861, Rev. G. C. Haddock was appointed to the charge, and served the church for two years. During his pastorate, the substantial stone building now standing was built. Mr. Haddock is a man of great energy, and was considered a brilliant preacher. He was succeeded in 1863 and 1864 by Rev. J. C. Robbins. Mr. Robbins is still held in loved remembrance by the church for his earnestness and devotion to his work.

The Wisconsin Annual Conference was again held in Waukesha in 1863, when one hundred and thirty ministers convened. Rev. Bishop Scott presided. The number of members for Waukesha for that year was one hundred and thirty, and the value of church property, $6,500. In 1865, Rev. Isaac Searles was appointed Pastor. Mr. Searles was a man of mild temperament and was modest in manner. He has gone to his rest. Rev. G. Fellows was appointed to the church in 1867, Rev. J. T. Woodhead in 1868, Rev. W. Lattin in 1869, and Rev. R. Blackburn in 1870 and 1871. Rev. Henry Colman was appointed to the charge in 1872 and 1873. During his ministry, the church was greatly improved in numbers and interest. Mr. Colman is a man of marked ability in his calling, dignified and earnest in his pulpit work, and is still very popular in Waukesha. Rev. S. Halsey was appointed Pastor in 1874, and served the church for three years. Mr. Halsey was a good pastor and was well received by the people generally. The membership was greatly increased during his pastorate. His name is still held in high esteem. Rev. Mr. Hewitt was appointed in 1877, and served as pastor two years with general acceptability. His preaching was scholarly and instructive, and he is still highly respected by many friends. The church members reported at the last conference for 1879 numbered 203. Value of church property, $12,000.

The present Pastor, Rev. Lugg, was appointed to the charge in 1879. He is a hard worker.

The church edifice is a very large one, built wholly of Waukesha limestone. The audience room is about eight feet above the streets, which pass on three sides, and below are the prayer and lecture rooms. This church always takes a leading part in temperance work. The Sunday school, which has been organized about forty years, is large, and maintained with interest.

First Baptist Church.—This was organized January 23, 1839, over forty-one years ago. A council, consisting of ministers and brethren from the Baptist Church in Milwaukee, met in a log house owned by N. Walton, upon invitation of the "members of the Baptist Churches residing in and about Prairieville." Rev. Richard Griffin was elected Moderator, and Rev. E. Mathews, Clerk.

Fifteen brethren and sisters presented letters from sister Baptist Churches; the usual exercises were had, and a Baptist Church duly and formally organized.

Rev. R. Griffin was called to the pastorate, and R. M. Hollister was elected Clerk. Two sisters came forward and united with the church by baptism. Soon after deacons were appointed, and a Sabbath-school with a large class was organized.

The church continued to grow and flourish, not only by other members coming in from the East, and uniting by letter, but from time to time sinners were converted and baptized. In 1842, Rev. A. Minor was called to the pastorate, and commenced his labor in June. He at once took a prominent place as a superior preacher and excellent pastor.

In 1844, the church society built a church edifice on the corner of West Division and Wisconsin streets, which was then the largest and best in the place, costing $2,500. In that early day, this was thought to be a large sum to invest for that purpose.

Without going into details from year to year, down to the present time, suffice it to say that the congregation continued to occupy the first church edifice until 1871, enjoying, in the mean time, the labors of a number of the most able ministers of the denomination. In 1871, the church and society, having outgrown their old house, determined to build a new church edifice which would serve them well into the future. The old house was removed from the lot where it was built twenty-seven years before, on to lots farther east, on Wisconsin street, and occupied by the church while the new edifice was being erected. Afterward it was sold to the Town of Waukesha, and is now being used as a town hall.

The new church edifice was built of the celebrated Waukesha limestone, the front being rock-faced. It is two stories high; the first story is divided into a vestibule, lecture and Sabbath-school room, parlors, cloak rooms and kitchen. The auditorium is in the second story, is finely frescoed, has splendid stained glass windows, and is richly carpeted throughout. The choir is supplied with a fine pipe organ of large dimensions.

There are few finer church edifices anywhere than the one now occupied by this denomination on the corner of Grand and Wisconsin avenues. It was finished and dedicated in the summer of 1872, at a cost of about $25,000, though it is doubtful if it could be built for that sum now. It is excellent in its proportions throughout. The spire is a marvel of beauty, simple as it is. The interior is what one of the speakers described it, at the recent installation services of its pastor—"more than comfortable, it is sumptuous."

The Baptists formed one of the earliest denominations of Protestants, and under different names they rapidly spread into Holland, Germany, and into the North and South of Europe. They differ from the other Protestant denominations in their understanding of the rite of baptism, adhering to the primitive mode of baptism by immersion. They have attracted vast numbers to this form of worship, and are in no danger, particularly in Waukesha, of being absorbed by other denominations. During the first ages of the Baptist Church, its members were made the special objects of persecution. Some of their number were burnt at Smithfield; and in Massachusetts, long after the persecuting feeling against them had died out in Europe, they were, equally with the Quakers, cruelly treated. In a popular history of the Baptists, a sufferer for his faith records his tortures while exposed to the lash in sublime language. Besides adhering to immersion, there appears to be still another difference between the Baptists and the other Protestants, and indeed all other denominations and churches.

As appears from their literature on this subject, they hold that it is only to those who have exercised faith in the Son of God, and have "been born again," that the rite of baptism is to be administered. Those only who are converted and repent of sin are proper subjects. These are their distinguishing doctrines.

The Baptists are the first as to numbers in full fellowship in this vicinity, and the Baptist Church in Waukesha has been wonderfully prospered. It has been aggressive from the first, and has constantly been a power for good, with the other churches in the community, since its organization. About 900 persons have been members, a goodly number of whom have been converted, and baptized into the fellowship of the church. A large number have also united by letter at different times. Numbers have died and gone to "the better land," while a good many have taken letters and have gone to various parts of the Great West, and are now active members of Baptist churches in the towns, villages and cities where they are located. The church now numbers about 250 members. The valuable property now owned by them is entirely free from any incumbrances, and the finances of the organization are in a healthy condition.

The present pastor is Rev. Robert Leslie. The Deacons are A. H. Griffin, Josiah Wheeler, W. H. Kendrick, Richard Street, Alvin Blackwell, Dr. A. Kendrick, J. A. Waite. The

First Presbyterian Church.—The First Presbyterian Church of Waukesha, Wis., was organized in the Methodist Church edifice, September 8, 1846, by Revs. Silas Pratt and Aaron L. Lindsley, Committee of the Presbytery of Milwaukee, known as the "Old School."

Rev. A. L. Lindsley acted as stated supply until 1852, preferring not to be installed as Pastor. The first session was composed of three Ruling Elders, namely, William L. Lindsley, Edward Potter, William P. Sloan.

After worshiping for several months with the Baptist brethren, who had no Pastor, the infant church repaired to the Academy building, on Wisconsin avenue, where they celebrated their first Communion Service, February 14, 1847; and organized a Sunday school with Prof. Eleazor Root as Superintendent; and where they continued to worship most of the time, till the basement of their church edifice was ready.

To raise funds for building, Rev. A. L. Lindsley went East in 1847, and again in 1849; Revs. L. I. Root and Thomas Frazer supplying the pulpit during his absence. By zealous effort he raised from various sources the sum of $2,530, and the work began.

The first Board of Trustees was chosen April 13, 1850, composed of Lemuel White, A. C. Nickell, A. G. Hanford, Samuel Hoffman, A. W. Randall and Lucius I. Root. Alexander W. Randall (afterward Governor of the State and Postmaster General of the United States) was the first Clerk of the Board. Upon the departure of Rev. A. L. Lindsley, in 1852, Rev. J. A. Savage, D. D., President of Carroll College, and Rev. Prof. L. I. Root supplied the pulpit until August, 1853, when Rev. John Huntington was called to the pastorate. Much was hoped for through his labors, but in the spring of 1854, while visiting Albany, New York, he was seized with cholera, and died. Dr. Savage again took charge till November, when Rev. Prof. Louman Hawes was associated with him. George McWhorter, Moses S. Hartwell, R. W. Wright, Henry Davis, Edward Chester and A. McLachlin, acted as Trustees during these years.

In 1855, the church building was at last dedicated, Dr. Savage and Prof. Hawes conducting the services with a crowded house. During this year, Malcolm Sellers and William R. Williams first began service as Trustees.

In 1856, Rev. Oscar Park, of Janesville, was called to the pastorate, and installed July 19, Revs. Daniel Smith, J. A. Savage and J. M. Buchanan officiating. Dr. Savage and Sidney A. Bean were chosen Trustees the same year. With 1857 appears Rev. Prof. John Monteith, often assisting in the pulpit, and chosen a Trustee; while George McWhorter and Henry Davis were elected elders. In 1859, the names of Louis A. Proctor and Henry Potter and R. B. Hammond appear as Trustees; in 1860, Joseph Williams; in 1861, Henry Kellogg; in 1863, A. J. Cole and John Forbes.

In 1863, Rev. Oscar Park resigned, after a faithful service of seven years.

During the seventeen years of its existence, the church had gradually grown in numbers and in financial strength. From the beginning, Dr. Savage seems to have been a true and zealous friend, and at one time, was chosen a ruling elder, with Henry Davis.

In 1862, Duncan Anderson and R. B. Hammond were added to the eldership; and in 1864, Moses S. Hartwell and W. H. Beach.

In October, 1863, Rev. Prof. William Alexander was engaged as stated supply. Although Prof. Alexander remained less than two years, the church was much blessed through a marked revival of religion, and the accession of a large number to the membership.

Upon his departure, Rev. P. D. Young acted as stated supply, from about January to September, 1866. In the mean time James Davis had been chosen a Trustee, and A. T. Wiestan, Elder.

With October, 1866, comes the advent of Rev. J. H. Barnard, who was duly installed as Pastor, and served the church faithfully and acceptably for four years. The church was increased in numbers and in strength every way; and the building was enlarged by the erection of the tower, and otherwise improved at a cost of over $2,000. Sheds were also built for teams.

During his pastorate, John Anderson, Clarke S. Hartwell, A. V. B. Dey and Walter L. Rankin began service as Trustees; and soon after, Henry Linn.

During the winter of 1870-71, the pulpit was supplied by Rev. William C. Turner.

During 1870 and 1871, several families removed from the place, by which the church was much weakened financially, and the membership reduced from 114 to 95.

In October, 1871, Rev. Thomas G. Watson, of New Brighton, Staten Island, having received a call from the church, began service as Pastor, though he was allowed to retain the call till the following spring before laying it before the Presbytery. He was installed, June 17, 1873, having waited to see whether his health, which had been impaired by overwork, would allow him to undertake full pastoral labors. At this date, July, 1880, he is still the Pastor.

During these eight and one-half years, the church has been blessed with many tokens of the divine favor. The membership has grown to about 140. It has passed through the financial crises of five years, without losing heart or getting in debt. The building has been improved for increased usefulness and comfort, a room fitted up, below, for the primary department of the Sunday school, and the main room repaired; the walls of the main audience room repapered and calclimined; the pews entirely remodeled, and cushioned.

During these years, Prof. W. L. Rankin, Jacob Beebe and W. M. Farr have been added to the eldership; and the rotary system of choosing elders adopted.

N. S. Stickles, William A. Nickell, William McWhorter and George Barber have been called to service as Trustees.

In 1879 Prof. W. L. Rankin, having been called to labor elsewhere, resigned the office of Superintendent of the Sunday school, where he had done noble work for thirteen years. The same year also, Mr. Clarke S. Hartwell laid by the duties of chorister, to which he had been called by the officers of the church more than twenty years before, and which he had performed faithfully and efficiently. Through the zeal of the Ladies' Society, and of the members, the church is growing in the knowledge of and interest in the great mission fields of the world.

The church edifice is a large and substantial structure of stone, situated on an eligible site, and is very pleasantly as well as tastefully arranged in its interior.

St. Matthew's Episcopal Church.—Sometime in the year 1840, there being several Episcopal Church families in the town of Prairieville, the Rev. J. L. Breck, one of the founders of Nashotah Theological Seminary, was occasionally called upon to hold church services with them up to April 8, 1844, when a parish was formed. Mr. Breck and his companions—for a portion of the time he was accompanied and aided by two classmates who came also from the East—had no church edifice or organization at Waukesha up to this time, and, after 1841, were obliged to come down from Nashotah whenever services were held in the village. At the time mentioned, April 8, 1844, the formal organization was accomplished by the appointment of the following officers: Caleb Nanscawen, Senior Warden; Wm. M. Chamberlain, Junior Warden; Chas. R. Dakin, Samuel H. Barstow, Robert Stewart, Peter Chesley, John Nanscawen, Vestrymen; Robert Murry, Clerk; Wm. M. Chamberlain, Treasurer, and the parish was given the name of St. Matthew's. Previous to 1844, a small church had been erected on a lot donated by Wm. A. Barstow. The Rev. Messrs. Breck and Adams continued holding services and kept the church open up to April, 1847, when the Rev. S. K. Miller was elected Rector, who remained in charge of the parish until July, 1848. In October, 1848, the Rev. James Abercrombie took charge of the parish, and continued as Rector until June 14, 1852. During the time Mr. Abercrombie was in charge of it, a great effort was made to build a new church, which was greatly needed. A plan for the new building was obtained, the estimated cost of which was $5,000. Subscriptions were raised in the parish to the amount of $1,000 and the Rector was sent East to raise the balance of the necessary fund, of which he succeeded in raising in New York City and Milwaukee about $4,000. Mr. Abercrombie made a visit to New York in 1850 and also in 1851. A lot was purchased and the present church building commenced in the spring of 1851, the corner stone of which was laid by Bishop Jackson Kemper, on the 15th day of June, 1851. The outside walls were completed during that season, when the farther progress of the work ceased for want of funds. An application was made to Trinity Church, in New York City, for a loan, which was refused. At this time, the officers of the church were as follows: Charles R. Dakin, Albert Marsh, Wardens; Geo. C. Pratt, Chas. Patterson, Robert Murry, Geo. Hatch, Samuel Eels, Wm. M. Chamberlain and Samuel H. Barstow, Vestrymen; Geo. C. Pratt, Samuel H. Barstow, Chas. R. Dakin and Wm. M. Chamberlain, building committee. In June, 1852, the Rev. Abercrombie resigned. The church was temporarily fitted up so that services were held in it occasionally during the summer; but it was by no means complete.

In October, 1853, the Rev. Chas. B. Stout was elected Rector, and continued as such until March, 1856. While in charge of the parish, the church building was finished at a cost of about $10,000, and was consecrated June 29, 1855. The building is of the best Waukesha limestone, situated on the corner of East Division and Main streets. It has an exceedingly substantial tower, the basement of which forms the vestibule for the church, is tastefully finished on the inside, and has a good pipe organ. Very near where the foundation of the tower was laid, was the head of the famous turtle mound, one of the largest and most interesting relics of the pre-historic nations found in the Fox River Valley. When the church edifice was begun, this mound, which before this had suffered more or less despoliation, was entirely destroyed. It is a pleasant theory with some that this "turtle" was built by a race now extinct, as an object of worship. If so, the present Episcopal Church, another structure for worship, is but a continuation in another form and farther into refinement and civilization, of the material evidences of religious tendencies, which have existed for unknown centuries. When Mr. Stout resigned, the parish was without a Rector until December of the same year, when he again took charge of it temporarily until July, 1857, at which time the Rev. John H. Egar was elected Rector, and continued as such until June, 1858. He resigned at the last-mentioned date, and the parish was again without a Rector until March, 1860, at which time the Rev. O. H. Staples was elected, and took charge of the parish until June, 1861, when the Rev. W. H. Story took it in charge, in connection with the parish at Delafield, and continued in that capacity until 1863, when he resigned. Rev. A. P. Crouch took supervision of the parish as rector in April, 1864, and remained about one year, when the Rev. W. C. Pope was elected to succeed him, and remained in charge of the present parish until Nov. 8, 1866. He then resigned, and the church was without a rector until June, 1867, when Rev. Wm. E. Walker was elected to that position, and continued to hold it until July 15, 1868. In October, 1869, the Rev. Jerome Davenport was elected Rector, and continued in charge of the parish for one year, when the Rev. Wm. E. Walker was again called to fill his former position. He remained for one year. In July, 1873, Rev. Allan S. Woodell was elected as Rector in diocesan order, and remained in charge until September, 1874. The Rev. Dr. Boyd was next elected Rector, and took charge of the parish June 24, 1875, remaining in charge until March, 1880, when Rev. E. P. Wright was elected to succeed him, and is in charge of the parish at the present time. The church and parish are free from debt, and are in a comfortable condition, therefore, financially and otherwise.

German Evangelical.—In the year 1851 and when the village of Waukesha was not as large as now, a few Germans assembled to consider the propriety of organizing an Evangelical Church. The number was small and the pioneers of the enterprise poor men. After considerable opposition, they succeeded in the organization, which was, however, of short duration, and the matter finally slept until 1853, when the present organization was formed. Messrs. F. Torhorst, Adam Keyner, and John Smith, were among the first Trustees; and Rev. C. A. Schnacke, who then lived in Jefferson, Wis., and afterward removed to Waukesha, and Rev. G. Flischer, formerly of Pennsylvania, were the first ministers. Rev. I. I. Escher was the Presiding Elder and held the office for two years, 1853 and 1854. There were about fifty members at the time of the organization of the church, and the number has been steadily increasing ever since, until at this time it has reached 245, with a Sunday school having an average attendance of 170 scholars. The small frame building owned by Patrick Bannon, adjoining the American

House, on Main street, and occupied by Owen McMahon as a grocery, was built by the Episcopal Church society many years ago, and occupied by them as a place of worship. The building then stood on the east side of what is now the public park. The Episcopalians used it for awhile and then sold it to the district for a schoolhouse, for which purpose it was used until about 1853, when it passed into the possession of the German Evangelical society. They held services in it until the completion of their own neat brick church in 1866 or 1867.

In reviewing the names of the ministers who have presided since the organization of the church, many will recall to mind the good which those who have passed over the great river, have left behind. In 1854, Rev. A. Rogartz and C. Lindner were the presiding ministers, but before the year closed Mr. Lindner died, and was taken to Menomonee, in this county, for interment. The next year, 1855, Rev. Noah McLahn was in charge, with Rev. G. A. Blank as Presiding Elder, who officiated until death called him home, on the 5th day of February, 1861. Rev. Mr. Blank was a great favorite with his people. He was a man of ability and much magnetic power. He was also a man generally beloved by all who knew him, being very popular with the people outside of his church. In 1856, Rev. I. G. Eslinger and Rev. Henry Hulister were ministers for two years, followed by Rev. I. Hammetter. At this time, 1858, the membership numbered 107 active members, with perfect harmony in their midst.

Rev. I. Eslinger presided in 1859, followed in 1860 by Rev. M. Hammetter. From 1861, Rev. I. G. Miller presided with Rev. I. I. Escher for two years. In 1862, Rev. I. G. Miller continued with Rev. L. Struebel, and then came, in 1863, Rev. I. G. Eslinger, with Rev. Henry Hulister as Presiding Elder, who for four years filled the office. For three years, Rev. William Hulister was the presiding minister of the church, which brings the records down to 1865, when the society purchased the lot on the east corner of South and Bridge streets, and erected their present brick house of worship.

At this time, the membership had increased from 107 to 124, and all took a deep interest in the welfare of the church. The building was dedicated October 6, 1866, with Rev. Henry Hulister as its minister, who officiated for two years, with Rev. A. Hulister as Presiding Elder. The Trustees were Messrs John F. Ike, M. Kempf and Louis Thielman.

Rev. L. Stroebel preached to the congregation during 1869 and 1870, with Rev. C. A. Schnacke as Presiding Elder, who held the position for three years. In 1871, Rev. F. Kurtz was installed over the flock, who preached to a large congregation for one year, and was followed during the next two years by Rev. C. A. Schnacke. Rev. F. W. Kaufman was Presiding Elder in 1872-73-74. After leaving here, he was drowned near Madison. In 1874, Rev. Charles Schneider was in charge, with Rev. G. Fritscha as Presiding Elder, who for four years was stationed here. Rev. P. Massveger was the minister for the next two years. Rev. I. G. F. Zimmerman for the past three years has ministered to the spiritual wants of the church, with much success. During the past year, Rev. L. Buhler has been the Presiding Elder. Rev. Dedrich is the minister now in charge. He is a fluent speaker and draws large congregations. He is very popular both inside and outside of his church. The present membership of the church is 245. It has no indebtedness and is in a flourishing condition.

St. Joseph's Catholic Church.—St. Joseph's Church is located on Lots 20 and 21, plat F, East Division street, Waukesha, and is one of the oldest churches in the county. In fact, the building now in use is the oldest church edifice, built as such, now in the village. Catholics settled at and around the village of Waukesha as early as the year 1840, and were visited from time to time by different Catholic clergymen. Rev. Martin Kundig, the late deceased Vicar General of the Archdiocese, of Milwaukee, was the first priest who held regular service at Waukesha. In the year 1842, this zealous priest celebrated Holy Mass in the house of John Gasper, on Main street, west of and next to Mr. Gasper's present cabinet store, where Mrs. M. Schork's brick building now stands. In 1843, Solomon Juneau, of Milwaukee, donated to the Catholics the present church lots, on which there stood at that time, near the place where the church now stands, a log house, probably built by Mr. Juneau himself, and used by him as a land-sale office. As soon as the Catholics had obtained possession of this property, they changed the log house into a church, where divine service was held for some time. Rev. Father Kundig now ceased to come to Waukesha, and Rev. Father Onin took his place. Father Onin held service here for but a very short time.

In 1844, Very Rev. U. Kundig returned to Waukesha, in the capacity of the first-appointed pastor of St. Joseph's congregation. He bought the house on East Division street, opposite St. Joseph's Church, where now J. Forbes lives. Here he lived with his two sisters, who conducted a parochial school in the same house. In the same year, the present stone church was commenced under the Pastor's supervision. The church was not entirely completed until about the year 1848. Very Rev. Kundig remained for about six or seven years.

After Father Kundig, Rev. F. Tierney took charge of St. Joseph's Parish, who remained only a short time. He was succeeded by Rev. James U. Doyle, who bought and lived in the so-called Prairieville House. Father Doyle remained about four years, and was succeeded by Rev. James Morris, who remained only a short time. John Tiernan, erected the present parsonage, which was subsequently lost to the Catholics by foreclosure of a mortgage that had been given on it. Rev. Tiernan was succeeded by Revs. O'Neil and David.

In May, 1862, Rev. P. F. Petit was appointed Pastor of St. Joseph's congregation. Rev. Petit resided on East Division street, almost opposite the church, in a house now owned by Mr. William Langer. Under the direction of Father Petit, the belfry was built on the church at the cost of about $1,500, and a number of evergreen trees were planted around it, which have since grown to a considerable height, and add greatly to the beauty of the church grounds. This good priest held the pastorate of the parish until March, 1865, at which time he was succeeded by Rev. John Vahey, who built the dwelling-house back of and attached to the church, which is now occupied by Sisters who teach the parochial school. The cost of this house was about $2,200. Rev. Father Vahey remained Pastor of St. Joseph's Church until September, 1866. At this time Rev. Daniel McGinnity, brother of the present Catholic priest at Monroe, Green County, was appointed pastor of this congregation. Father McGinnity's health was fast failing, and on that account he had to give up the parish in a few months.

Rev. Joseph Moder was now temporarily assigned as Pastor of St. Joseph's Church, who remained until about May 20, 1867. The next pastor of St. Joseph's Parish was Rev. Peter Deberge. Father Deberge found a debt on the church of $1,000, which this active and beloved priest soon succeeded in liquidating. Rev. Deberge also bought back the present parsonage at a cost of about $2,200, of which the Catholics had lost possession as above stated, through foreclosure of a mortgage. About $1,200 was paid at this time on new purchase, and for the balance a mortgage was given to Mrs. P. D. Murray. Father Deberge remained until about the middle of October, 1870. At this time, Rev. Edward O'Connor took charge of the parish, and held it until about the 27th of January, 1873, at which time this kind priest died, and was buried in the cemetery of the Holy Assumption Parish, at Franklin, Milwaukee County. His remains were accompanied by a large number of his Waukesha parishioners, who deeply mourned the loss of their Pastor. After the demise of Father O'Connor, Rev. Dominic F. Thill was assigned Pastor of St. Joseph's Church, and took charge of the parish on the 4th day of February, 1873. Father Thill soon became endeared to his new parishioners, and he has been most successful in his spiritual and temporal administration of the parish. He found an incumbrance of $1,000 on the parsonage, and an additional debt of $200 for sundry items, making a total of $1,200, which was liquidated within a very short time. Considering religious education absolutely necessary for the spiritual advancement of the parish, he soon began to explain to his people the necessity of having a parochial school, in which the little ones of his flock might be instructed in their faith. An appeal to that effect was made by him to his parishioners, who responded most cheerfully. The Sisters of St. Agnes, of Barton, Washington County, were at once invited to open a Catholic school in a dwelling-house back of the church, the schoolroom being in the first story, and the Sisters living up-stairs. The school was conducted by them for two years. The school could not possibly be continued in this house, the rooms being altogether too small. In 1876, the Pastor took a collection, by going from house to house, to procure necessary funds to build a new schoolhouse. The people contributed liberally, and the house was completed in December of the same year, and the school opened in it under direction of the Notre Dame School, Sisters of Milwaukee. The average number of pupils attending this school has always been about 100. The schoolhouse is a two-story frame building, 60x24 feet. The lower story is divided into two schoolrooms, and the upper story is used as a hall, and is now known by the name of St. Joseph's Hall. The cost of the building, with necessary furniture, was about $2,200.

During Father Thill's time the following church societies have been organized: St. Joseph's Benevolent Society, and St. Mary's Young Ladies' Society. The object of St. Joseph's Benevolent Society is to assist the members thereof in sickness and distress, and to advance the cause of religious education among the Catholics of the parish, and to induce, by word and example, the members of the congregation to comply with essential rules of the Catholic Church, and to guard by all reasonable means against the excessive use of intoxicating drinks. At present, this society has about forty-five members, with Mr. J. J. Clark as President, Mr. Snyder Secretary, and P. Bannon, Treasurer.

The Young Ladies' Sodality is in a most flourishing condition—has about sixty-five members and owns a library of about two hundred volumes. The object of this sodality is to excite each other to the practice of virtue and piety. The members of this sodality have always greatly helped the Pastor in raising money to meet current expenses of church and school. They have contributed up to this date not less than $600. There is an Altar Society of married ladies connected with the church. The object of this society is the ornamentation of the church and altar. It has about seventy members. From the time that Father Thill took charge of the parish up to the present time, improvements have been made in and about the church to the amount of about $5,000. During his pastorate, he has also had charge of St. Mary's Church, at Pewaukee, where he found a debt of about $300, which he succeeded in paying in a very short time. He also bought cemetery grounds there, and the lot, where the parsonage now stands, at a cost of $350. The parsonage was also built by him at a cost of $800. Father Thill resigned this congregation in October, 1879, leaving it free from debt. Improvements to the amount of $2,000 were made by him at Pewaukee.

Evangelical Reform.—The German Evangelical Reform Church was organized in the year 1866, by Prof. H. Kurtz, who was sent to Waukesha from the interior of Germany as a missionary. Prof. Kurtz presided over his flock for two years, after which he retired to seek other fields, and was followed by Rev. H. Hanhart, who also preached to this congregation for two years, and now resides in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he was called to another parish. In 1870, Rev. C. R. Hinske took charge of the church, and for six years preached and labored with his people with much success. The work of the church becoming too laborious, he resigned his charge for rest and to regain failing health. Prof. H. Kurtz is now located at Sheboygan, Wis., and is one of the Principals of the Theological Seminary located at that place. Rev. F. Kuenzler, who has presided over the church for the past four years, is a very popular preacher, and a great favorite among his church members. Since Rev. Mr. Kuenzler has had charge of the church, he has increased its membership to one hundred and ninety communicants. He has a large Sabbath school, with an average attendance of ninety, over which he presides each Sabbath.

The Trustees of the church are Louis Janke, Fer. Brueger and William Niedermeier. The church has no indebtedness and is constantly increasing in members. The society own the building, which is a handsome large stone building, built many years ago as the Prairieville Academy, and used afterward as a Female Seminary. The grounds are spacious and liberally supplied with shade and ornamental trees, and are kept in very choice order. Adjoining the church is the parsonage, a neat little dwelling, which is in keeping with the church.

In speaking of this church, it is but proper to say that the project of organizing a German Evangelical Reform Church in Waukesha was first suggested by Rev. Mr. Flieshene, a somewhat noted exhorter, as early as 1851; but the matter was abandoned for the time, and for reasons he left for parts unknown. Thus the matter slept until 1866, as stated above.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Prairie Lodge, No. 23, I. O. O. F.—The first lodge of Odd Fellows instituted in the county was chartered October 6, 1847, and named "Prairie Lodge, No. 23." The original records of the lodge were destroyed by fire, so that the first charter members cannot be ascertained. The lodge flourished for many years, and comprised a distinguished membership. At the breaking-out of the war of the Rebellion, however, a large portion of the members went to the army, and it was at length found expedient to remove it to the village of Delafield, where it struggled along feebly for a time, and finally gave up its charter, which, with all the accompanying papers, was burned in the fire that destroyed the office of the Grand Secretary of the State, at Racine. For some years, no efforts were made toward the resuscitation of the order.

In the winter of 1869, application was made for the renewal of the charter by the following petitioners: Samuel H. Barstow, Leander Hill, Pitts Ellis, James Pool, George M. Barney, William S. Hawkins, Frederick Slawson, Dr. Robert Dunlap, A. J. Thompson, John Gaspar and Charles Gauthie.

On the evening of January 27, 1870, Grand Master Samuel Ryan, of Appleton, Wis., installed the following officers: William S. Hawkins, N. G.; Samuel H. Barstow, V. G.; Leander Hill, R. S.; Frederick Slawson, P. S.; James Pool, Treasurer.

All of the above-named officers are still living and reside in Waukesha, except Leander Hill, whose demise occurred in the summer of 1870. From the time it was resuscitated, up to 1871, Prairie Lodge was the only lodge of Odd Fellows in Waukesha, and its membership increased with great rapidity; the German-speaking element especially becoming so numerous that it was found expedient to organize a new lodge. Accordingly, after much discussion on the subject and a thorough canvass among the members, a majority of the Germans withdrew in order to establish a new lodge. In 1871, they applied for a charter, which was granted them by the Grand Lodge of the State December 8 of the same year. They hold their meetings in the same spacious and elegantly furnished rooms with Prairie Lodge.

Prairie Lodge is steadily adding to its membership, and now has upward of fifty members.

The following gentlemen are its officers at this date: Almon Welch, N. G.; O. Culver, V. G.; George M. S. Jewett, R. S. and P. S.; John Gaspar, Treasurer.

The Lodge has three Trustees, one of whom is elected annually and holds his office for three years. The present Trustees are M. J. Sommers, Almon Welch and William S. Green.

The meetings of the lodge are held on Thursday evening of each week, in the third story of Jackson's stone building, on Main street.

The lodge has no indebtedness and has quite a fund on hand. It is composed of many of the most wealthy and prominent citizens of Waukesha.

Bismarck Lodge, No. 193, I. O. O. F.—On the 1st day of August, 1871, a dispensation was granted to George Sperl, Conrad Sehart, Phillip Hepp, Julius Reise and Charles Herwig, for an Odd Fellows' lodge, to be located at Waukesha, and to be known as "Bismarck Lodge, No. 193." Grand Master Lindsley, of Green Bay, at once proceeded to Waukesha and instituted the lodge and installed the following gentlemen as the first officers: Conrad Sehart, N. G.; George Sperl, V. G.; Julius Reise, Secretary; Charles Herwig, Treasurer.

The lodge has progressed under very flattering circumstances; soon had a large membership, composed of the best German element in and about Waukesha, and has gained the reputation of being one of the best working lodges in the State.

When the Grand Lodge met in annual session in December, they granted to Bismarck Lodge its charter with the same officers as were installed. Up to that time, the lodge had an active membership of nearly twenty-five, and was still increasing; notwithstanding they incurred an indebtedness of over $300 at the outset for furniture and regalias, they soon paid the debt, and, at this time, have upward of $800 in the treasury or in loans. The regalias of the officers and members are expensive and the best that can be procured.

When the lodge was first instituted, the following gentlemen were elected Trustees: George Sperl, Phillip Hepp and Charles Steine.

The following are its present officers: Arnold Stallman, N. G.; Henry Hassert, V. G.; George Sperl, Secretary; John Sperber, Treasurer. The Trustees are George Sperl, Franz Elger and Carl Muench.

The regular meetings are held each Wednesday evening in Jackson's stone building, on Main street. The working membership is now sixty-five.

Waukesha Encampment, No. 51, I. O. O. F.—This Odd Fellows' lodge was instituted July 10, 1871, by Lewis Silber, Grand Patriarch of Wisconsin. The charter members were Theron W. Haight, E. L. Spence, S. H. Barstow, W. S. Rowe, Henry Sehart, John E. Lau and Louis Janke. The first elective officers were: T. W. Haight, Chief Patriarch; E. L. Spence, High Priest; Samuel H. Barstow, Senior Warden; W. S. Rowe, Scribe; John E. Lau, Treasurer; Henry Sehart, Junior Warden. During the nine years since the Lodge was organized, there have been fifty-seven persons admitted to membership. The present officers are as follows: Henry M. Youmans, Chief Patriarch; F. Balzer, High Priest; D. H. Sumner, Senior Warden; T. W. Haight, Scribe; Ira Kimball, Treasurer; Conrad Sehart, Junior Warden.

Meetings are held on the second and fourth Mondays of each month. A list of all the Chief Patriarchs is comprised in the following: S. H. Barstow, John Bennett, B. F. Goss, Theron W. Haight, John E. Lau, F. M. Payne, E. L. Spence, H. M. Youmans, M. M. Kelliher, W. H. Hardy, C. Reichenbach, Morris Stummes, H. N. Glenney, H. Pruetzmans, Ira Kimball, Peter Lau, Conrad Sehart, W. S. Rowe.

The following comprises a list of the High Priests: Ira Kimball, Hugo Philler, H. M. Youmans, M. M. Kelliher, E. L. Spence, S. T. Bolles, John E. Lau, W. A. Howard, August Dieman.

Waukesha Chapter, No. 37, Royal Arch Masons.—This Chapter was granted a charter February 5, 1868. The following persons were the first officers: Elihu Enos, High Priest; A. Amsdem, King; E. Hurlbut, Scribe. The Chapter has about sixty members, and is a very strong organization. The present officers are as follows: Van H. Bugbee, High Priest; H. S. Hughes, King; Rev. E. P. Wright, Scribe; W. A. Nickell, C. of H.; M. S. Griswold, P. S.; R. C. Beggs, R. C.; J. P. Philips, M. 3d Vail; A. F. Estberg, M. 2d Vail; J. K. Randle, M. 1st V.; James Poole, Treasurer; W. S. Hawkins, Secretary. The regular communications of this Chapter occur on the first Monday of each month in Masonic Hall, Gove's Block.

Waukesha Lodge, No. 37, A., F. & A. M.—The dispensation for this lodge was granted January 20, 1851, to James Y. Watson, Lemuel White, Asahel Finch, D. W. Reed, Joseph Turner, Paul Wheeler, Sylvanus Warren, H. Van Vleck, George Hyer and S. S. Case, with power to hold lodge and admit members. The temporary officers were as follows: Lemuel White, W. M.; W. D. Barker, S. W.; H. Van Vleck, J. W. Under the dispensation, proceedings were had until Jan. 9, 1852, when a charter was granted. In February, 1852, the temporary officers resigned, and S. S. Case was appointed by the Grand Master, Worshipful Master; W. H. Farner, Senior Warden; Michael Newton, Junior Warden, who held office until the charter was granted. The first officers elected under the charter were as follows: S. S. Case, W. M.; W. S. Hawkins, S. W.; James Poole, J. W.; W. S. Hawkins, Secretary; H. W. Sherman, Treasurer. The present officers are as follows: H. S. Hughes, W. M.; M. S. Griswold, S. W.; C. A. Estberg, J. W.; James Poole, Treasurer; Joseph P. Philips, Secretary; J. T. Wardrobe, S. D.; A. F. Estberg, J. D. The lodge numbers ninety-four members in good standing. It has been composed altogether of 277 members. Many have died or moved away and joined other lodges by dimit. The dead number twenty-four—that is, twenty-four died while members of the lodge—and eighty-four left by dimit. The communications occur on the first and third Fridays of each month in their room in third story of Gove's Block. The treasury contains about $1,000 of reserve funds. The furniture, which is owned by this, or the Blue Lodge, is elegant.

Waukesha Lodge, No. 311, Knights of Honor.—This lodge was organized on the 24th day of June, 1876, by D. S. D. P. L. Teple, fifteen citizens of this village signing the constitution as charter members, to wit: F. H. Babcock, V. H. Bugbee, F. Elger, C. A. Estberg, J. J. Gibbs, C. A. Haertel, William H. Kendrick, William Langer, V. L. Moore, F. M. Ploss, George Sperl, A. Tyler, S. D. Tyler, E. C. Wood, and H. M. Youmans. Since that date the lodge has initiated fifteen members, which number has been by withdrawal, etc., reduced to the present membership of twenty-five Knights in good standing. The officers of the present term, ending June 30, 1880, are: P. D., William Langer; D., William H. Kendrick; V. D., F. M. Ploss; A. D., James Castle; Chaplain, C. A. Haertel; R. and Fin. R., Dr. Hugo Philler; Tr., George Sperl; Guide, Joseph Castle; Guardian, William Schrimar; Sentinel, Ira Kimball; Medical Examiner, Dr. Hugo Philler.

This lodge, however small in number, meets regularly on the first and third Mondays of each month, at Barstow's Hall, for business and mutual exchange of good feeling. Its finances are in a flourishing condition. It secures weekly sick benefits to its members, and to their heirs a death benefit of $2,000.

Forest City Council, No. 232, Royal Arcanum.—This lodge was instituted in this village by Alfred Terry, of Detroit, January 10, 1879, with thirty-two charter members, viz: George F. H. Barber, Miles L. Butterfield, George Combs, Orlando Culver, Frederick S. Doane, C. A. Estberg, John Harley, H. S. Hughes, Samuel M. Hughes, Charles James, J. H. James, J. H. Jones, William G. Kendrick, William H. Kendrick, Edward K. Kimball, William Langer, Thomas McGeen, L. T. Mallory, A. A. Miller, Hugo Philler, J. K. Randall, Thomas Ryall, F. E. Sanford, Frederick M. Slawson, William H. Sleep, Richard Street, William Street, Orville Tyler, O. E. Tyler, S. D. Tyler, J. H. Whitcher and Hugh Williams.

On the organization of the council, after obtaining the charter, the following gentlemen were elected its officers, and duly installed: Regent, Richard Street; Vice Regent, A. A. Miller; Orator, William Street; Post Regent, S. D. Tyler; Secretary, George F. H. Barber; Collector, Dr. Hugo Philler; Treasurer, Orlando Culver; Chaplain, William H. Kendrick; Guide, E. K. Kimball; Warden, Samuel M. Hughes; Sentry, Fred M. Slawson; Trustees, H. S. Hughes, one year, William H. Sleep, two years, F. E. Sanford, three years.

The regular meetings of the council are held on the second and fourth Monday evenings of each month, at Barstow's Hall, near the railroad depot. It has been steadily increasing in membership since its organization, and the roll now contains upward of sixty-three names, all in good standing. One member has died, Orville Tyler, since its organization. His family received $3,000 from the benefit fund, which they were entitled to, with promptness. The council is in a most flourishing condition and is composed of the leading business men and citizens of the village and surrounding country.

Independence Lodge, No 130, I. O. G. T.—This lodge was organized in Barstow's Hall, January 13, 1872, D. W. Kent acting as District Deputy Grand Marshal. The following persons were appointed its officers for the purpose of organizing: Samuel H. Barstow, Recording Secretary; Mrs. N. Barnard, V. T.; Dr. Hubbell Fox, Marshal; Amos Greengrove, W. C. T.; Mrs. Coles, Chaplain; Miss Gooding, Treasurer; Mrs. Mary A. Fox, Financial Secretary. The following persons were charter members: H. Libbie Whitcher, Asena B. Whitcher, J. H. Whitcher, Matie Blackwell, Hattie Putney, Elizabeth Sellers, H. T. Kent, F. McBeath, L. Whitcher, M. Z. Bidwell, Carrie Hunkins, Nathan Whitcher, Mrs. N. Whitcher, Susan Gooding, Lonie Nicholson, Millie Nicholson, Sarah Lees, Lucy Kent, A. D. Kent, L. Hunkins, C. Wardrobe, A. E. Evans, E. E. Orvis, J. Ernest Jewett, Lucy Clark, Rosa Clark, Emma Hawkins, M. Blackwell, C. A. Hine. At the election the same evening, the following-named persons were elected the first officers of the lodge: James H. Whitcher, W. C. T.; Hattie Putney, W. V.; F. McBeath, W. S.; M. Z. Bidwell, F. S.; H. Blackwell, W. T.; C. Wardrobe, W. M.; Matie Blackwell, I. G.; N. T. Kent, O. G.; N. Whitcher, W. C.; A. E. Evans, P. W. C. T.

The receipts of the first evening's meeting amounted to $13, out of which was paid $10 for the charter and $2.50 for books, etc., leaving a balance of 50 cents in the Treasurer's hands. The meetings were held Saturday evening of each week, and were generally well attended. New members were being admitted at every meeting, and all took a deep interest in the welfare of the lodge. A paper called the Independent, edited by some brother or sister, was read at every alternate meeting, followed by a debate on a proper subject, submitted by a member at a previous meeting. The lodge was continued in Barstow Block until about the 3d of May, 1873, when it was removed to the basement of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Here it struggled for an existence until about the middle or last of October, 1873, and then surrendered its charter, the last meeting being held the 25th of October. It being the regular quarterly election, the usual officers were elected by the small number present, but were never installed.

Phoenix Lodge, No. 17, I. O. G. T.—In the winter of 1873, December 27, Phoenix Lodge, No. 17, was organized by the following charter members: Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Barnard, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. Barstow, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Kent, Nellie Kent, Katie Warner, Rev. T. G. Watson, Henry B. Bidwell, James Clark, Mrs. and Miss Telyea. Lodge Deputy Hubbell Fox, of Independence Lodge (which long since surrendered its charter), assisted by G. W. S. Hazeltine, of Beaver Dam, installed the following officers soon after the completion of the organization:

D. W. Kent, W. C. T.; Mrs. Cole, W. V. T.; D. R. Prindle, W. S.; S. H. Barstow, F. S.; Mrs. S. H. Barstow, W. T.; Rev. T. G. Watson, W. C.; James Clark, W. M.; Miss Nellie Kent, W. I. G.; William S. Barnard, W. O. G.; S. H. Barstow, L. D. The occasion was one of much pleasure, and the new lodge gave new impetus and vigor to the cause of temperance. The members went to work with a will, and soon had a large and prosperous lodge, which still exists. The meetings are held in the Town Hall, in rooms tastefully fitted up for that purpose, on Tuesday evening of each week, and are well attended. During the past winter and spring, the lodge has given many interesting entertainments, socials and suppers, which have been liberally patronized. The following are the names of the present officers of Phoenix Lodge: D. R. Prindle, W. C. T.; Miss Crissie Fletcher, W. V. T.; Dennie Maynard, W. S.; W. H. Middleton, W. F. S.; Jennie Mill, W. T.; E. W. Chafin, P. W. C. T.; Miss Carrie Hawkins, W. C.; Andrew Ross, W. M.; Miss Mary Seabold, W. I. G.; Frank Barnes, W. O. G.; D. W. Kent, L. D. The present membership in good standing is 105.

Juvenile Temple.—This juvenile temperance organization is composed of little misses and masters, and has a membership of about forty. It has been in existence nearly five years, although not holding meetings each week. It was organized by Lillie Robinson. The present Superintendent is Mrs. W. H. Middleton, who takes great interest in the work. The meetings are held in the Good Templars' rooms, at the Town Hall, on Tuesday afternoons at 4 o'clock.

BANKS.

Waukesha County Bank.—The subject of organizing a bank in Waukesha, had for a long time been discussed among several of the prominent men of the place, but they never came to any definite understanding until about the 18th of February, 1855, when a meeting was held in the law office of Alexander W. Randall (since Governor of Wisconsin and Postmaster General of the United States), then and there organizing "The Waukesha County Bank," under the free banking law of Wisconsin, which then existed. The capital stock of the concern was fixed at $25,000, divided into two hundred and fifty shares of $100 each. The stock was all subscribed for and taken by the gentlemen present who composed the meeting, viz.: A. Miner, subscribed for ninety shares; Nelson Burroughs, twenty shares; William White, ten shares; C. C. Barnes, eighty-five shares; William Blair, five shares; S. S. Sawyer, ten shares; H. N. Davis, ten shares; Sebina Barney, twenty shares; comprising the two hundred and fifty shares and the $25,000. All the stockholders were made the bank's first board of directors. Mr. Miner was elected President of the banking company, and C. C. Barnes, Cashier. From the bank's first existence up to the present time, safely passing through the many vicissitudes of financial depression of the country, its business has increased, and it has always held the confidence of business men and the farming community at large, and to-day it is one of the soundest moneyed institutions in the great West. Mr. Oscar Burroughs, since deceased, was appointed Assistant Cashier May 7, 1855. On the 3d of December of the year the bank was organized, the capital stock was increased from $25,000 to $50,000. The same officers were elected in 1856 as were at first chosen. Other matters occupying the time of Mr. Barnes, he resigned the position of Cashier April 14, 1856, and Oscar Burroughs was appointed to fill the vacancy May 5, 1856. Sabina Barney was then elected Vice President, which position he filled up the time of his death in 1879.

October 13, 1856, the business constantly growing, the capital stock of the bank was again doubled, making it $100,000. The following gentlemen were elected officers of the bank January 7, 1857: A. Miner, President; Sebina Barney, Vice President; and Nelson Burroughs, William Blair, H. N. Davis, S. S. Sawyer and Thompson Richmond, Directors. At the next annual election of officers in 1858 there were no changes except that Martin Field and George Lawrence, Jr., were elected Directors in place of Mr. Richmond and William Blair, the latter of whom was elected Cashier at this meeting. At the annual meeting in January, 1859, there were no changes in President or Vice President of the bank. The Directors elected at this meeting were George Lawrence, Jr., Martin Field, J. H. Kimball, J. Y. Watson and William Blair. The same officers were re-elected in 1860, except that Mr. S. Andrews was elected Director in place of George Lawrence, Jr. In 1861, the only change was that Mr. Sawyer was elected in place of Mr. Andrews.

At a regular meeting of the bank officers April 22, 1861, it was deemed advisable to reduce the capital stock, and in June, 1861, it was reduced to $50,000. From 1861 to 1864, there was no change in its officers. In 1864, at the annual meeting, C. H. Miner was elected Cashier in place of Mr. Blair, and S. Barney, J. H. Kimball, J. Y. Watson, M. Field and William Blair were chosen Directors. The same officers were elected in 1865, with the addition of Andrew J. Frame as Assistant Cashier. The bank, at this time laboring under many disadvantages by doing business under the old State banking law, resolved, at a meeting held January 16, 1865, to re-organize under the new banking act. The stockholders met January 8, 1865, to take action in organizing the National Bank, at which date the meeting adopted their articles of association and elected Messrs. A. Miner, S. Barney, J. H. Kimball, M. Field and William Blair its first Board of Directors. A. Miner was elected President, S. Barney, Vice President, and Charles H. Miner, Cashier. On the 22d of May, 1865, Andrew J. Frame was appointed Assistant Cashier, which position he held until the resignation of Charles H. Miner, in February, 1866, when he was appointed to the responsible position of Cashier.

Mr. Miner sent in his resignation as the President, which was accepted March 6, 1866. Mr. Blair was elected to fill the place thus made vacant; and Mr. Sewall Andrews elected to fill the vacancy on the Board of Directors occasioned by the promotion of Mr. Blair to the presidency.

There were no particular changes in the officers of the bank from 1866 to 1869, when J. H. Kimball resigned as Director, and Andrew J. Frame was appointed to fill the vacancy, and finally was elected member of the board in 1870. Henry M. Frame was appointed book-keeper in the fall of 1869; which position he filled until January 8, 1878, when he was appointed Assistant Cashier. In July, 1879, he was appointed Director in place of Sebina Barney, deceased. At the same meeting, in July, 1879, Martin Field, of Mukwonago, was elected Vice President, in place of Mr. Barney.

The Board of Directors and officers next elected and now holding their respective positions, are Hon. William Blair, President and Director; Martin Field, Vice President and Director; Sewall Andrews, Andrew J. Frame and Henry M. Frame. The present building was purchased by the bank October 13, 1873, of Andrew Aitkin, at a cost of $4,000. The bank put the building in excellent condition by expending over one thousand dollars in repairs and other improvements. That the bank has the confidence of the people of Waukesha, is shown by its very large deposit account. The following is the present list of stockholders and amounts of stock held by each:

W. Blair, Waukesha.....	$ 8,500	Sewall Andrews, Mukwonago.....	$ 8,000
Sebina Barney (estate), Waukesha.....	7,000	Martin Field, Mukwonago.....	4,250
Mrs. H. A. Blair, Waukesha.....	2,000	Edward Sargeant, Omro, Wis.....	2,000
Andrew J. Frame, Waukesha.....	10,000	Atwood Sargeant, Chester, Vt.....	1,000
Henry M. Frame, Waukesha.....	3,250	Mrs. Persis Baldwin, Chester, Vt.....	1,000
W. D. Bacon, Waukesha.....	1,500	Marshall Wilder, Brattleboro. Vt.....	500
W. S. Hawkins, Waukesha.....	500	E. Kingsland, Keesville, N. Y.....	500
Total.....			$50,000

Farmers' National Bank.—In May, 1865, W. D. Bacon, of Waukesha; H. A. Youmans, of Mukwonago; James Parsons, of Whitewater; A. C. Bronson, of Eagle; Dr. A. Kendrick, Jehial Smith and John Wagner, of Waukesha, as stockholders, incorporated the Farmers' National Bank, with a capital of $50,000. The Directors were W. D. Bacon, President; A. C. Bronson, Vice President; O. M. Tyler, Cashier; H. A. Youmans and A. Kendrick. The corner room in the Robinson Block, where Foster's drug store now is, was occupied by the bank, which in a very short time after opening for business increased its capital to $100,000, A. E. Perkins and Jerry Youmans, of Mukwonago, becoming additional stockholders. The bank did a very large and profitable business until 1868, when the President, who held a majority of the stock, desired to withdraw his capital, and the concern was closed. It was against the wishes of the stockholders that the bank went out of existence, as it had been a profitable investment.

Forest City Bank.—This was a State bank, chartered under the statutes as a bank of issue, with $25,000 capital, by Sidney A. Bean, M. G. Townsend and others, about 1857. It continued in business about five years, and was closed by Mr. Bean, who came home from the army a short time for that purpose.

O. M. Tyler & Co's Bank.—Very soon after the closing of the Farmers' National Bank, O. M. Tyler, who had been cashier of that institution, opened a private bank under the name and style of O. M. Tyler & Co. According to the books kept by Mr. Tyler, he began business with $17,000 in cash on hand. The bank continued to do business until September 18, 1875, when, for want of funds to cash a small check, it was closed. Richard L. Gove was appointed assignee under the State law, and collected a sum of money. This he turned over to R. M. Jameson and P. H. Carney, the assignees appointed after bankruptcy proceedings, in January, 1876. They continue to be assignees, and have declared a dividend of 10 per cent of the indebtedness, which was about $32,000. On the Saturday before the bank closed, J. S. Waite and R. L. Gove, according to the books of the bank, deposited $150, but, when the concern was turned over to the assignee, only $83, in mutilated bills, could be found. As the bank had been during some time without a cat, it is supposed the mice destroyed the last deposits.

PUBLIC HALLS.

The old tamarack log schoolhouse, built in 1837, on the west side of the river, was not, strictly speaking, a public hall, but during many years it was used as such in the absence of anything more suitable. Before the log schoolhouse fell into disuse, the Congregational Church, erected in 1839, was used for a public hall, as it was larger and more centrally located. The first session of the County Board, long and stormy as it was, took place in this church. The Prairieville Academy building was also used for a similar purpose, and in it the first term of the United States District Court for Waukesha County was held, Judge Miller presiding. The court house, which was between two and three years in building, was used for various public gatherings after 1848, and Waukesha, therefore, never suffered seriously for want of places in which to hold public meetings.

Jacob Hengy had a small hall in the Exchange, but it was mostly used as a dancing room. In the third story of W. D. Bacon's large stone building was a room used for a hall, but it was more suitable for lodge meetings and the lofty tumbling of the 1,001 than for public gatherings. Somewhere along in the fifties Andrew Aitkin built the stone block now occupied by I. M. White and others, and had a portion made into a hall. It has long since been used for merchandise.

Robinson's Hall.—Mostly at the solicitation of A. F. Pratt, Charles Robinson began the erection, in 1856, probably, of a stone block of stores with a large public hall overhead. Although never a paying investment, Robinson's Hall became a noted one and the place of all public gatherings. During the war, its name became familiar everywhere, as it was the place where all war meetings were held. It is now owned by Poole & Ware, and is largely used for dances and social gatherings.

Carney's Opera House.—As Waukesha was becoming more and more noted as a summer resort, the need of an opera house more suitable for the concert and the drama became apparent. Therefore, early in 1874 Mrs. E. H. Carney began the erection, on Main street, of a two-story block of Waukesha limestone, especially for an opera house. The lower story was designed for stores. The house has a pit and gallery with 600 seats; private boxes, dressing rooms and a stage with good scenery and all the modern improvements. The cost of the block was about $25,000, and to fit the hall for all kinds of entertainments cost $2,000. The building is an ornament to Waukesha Village, but as a financial investment it does not pay 2 per centum on the cost. It was erected by C. S. Hartwell and M. Gleason.

HOTELS OF WAUKESHA.

Prairieville House.—The first hotel opened in what afterward became the village of Waukesha was the Prairieville House, first called the Prairie Village Hotel. It was erected by Henry Bowron, and opened by James Buckner, in 1837. The structure was of logs; and, as business increased, which it did very rapidly, additions of logs and of boards were built from time to time, until the hotel had the appearance of a village, which, in truth, it was. During many years, the Prairieville House was the liveliest place in Milwaukee County. In it conventions, mass meetings, law suits, town meetings, caucuses, elections, political conferences, slave-hunters' consultations, and weddings have been held; all of which were attended by the most distinguished men in the State. Among its proprietors have been James Buckner, Peter Jones and Samuel H. Barstow. When business began to be transferred to the present center of the village, which was before the completion of the railroad, the location of the Prairieville House was left to one side and was never afterward of any importance. One part stands on the old site, east of the court house; one part belongs to the American House, and the balance is scattered piecemeal over the village. In 1854, this hotel was remodeled by Father Doyle and used for a Catholic seminary.

Exchange Hotel.—Jacob Hengy arrived in Prairieville more than forty years ago, with his wife and family of children, with only fifty cents with which to begin business. He engaged Lyman Goodnow to haul enough green basswood boards for a little shanty; and in this he began tailoring. In a short time he had earned enough to pay for an addition to his shanty, and in 1845 or 1846 he had accumulated enough to warrant him in building the front part of the present Exchange building. This he opened to the public as Hengy's Exchange. To the original building, as necessity required, additions were made until the wooden portion assumed its present proportions. In 1864, the property was purchased by F. M. Putney, who built a fine three-story addition of stone in 1870, fronting on Grand avenue, which is the beginning of a stone structure of similar design and finish to cover the entire corner of Grand avenue and Broadway, now occupied by the wooden structure. After Mr. Hengy sold the hotel, it was managed by P. N. Cushman, F. M. Putney and E. Holbrook. Mr. Putney has continued to be proprietor since 1864, leasing the house to other persons. W. C. Holbrook is the present manager and has a large patronage.

American House.—This is the oldest hotel building in Waukesha Village, as well as the oldest in the county. It was erected, not precisely as it now stands, in 1844, probably by William A. Barstow, and was considered a good building at that time. It was called the Barstow House, and was managed by Samuel H. Barstow. Late in 1850, or early in 1851, the property was purchased by Silas Barber, and the name changed to Railroad House. While Mr. Barber owned the house, he had a contract to feed the drafted soldiers of the county. About the year 1864, he sold the hotel to J. B. Cable, who changed the name of it to the American House, which name has ever since been retained. Mr. Cable was manager as well as proprietor until his death, and the property remained in the possession of the Cable heirs until the spring of 1880, when it was purchased by Weston for $8,000. L. Coleman is the manager, and has been since 1877. A portion of the American House helped to comprise the old Prairieville House, the first hotel in Waukesha. Previous to Silas Barber's purchase of the American House, it was owned and managed by George Vail, and during several years from 1846 gained considerable notoriety as "Vail's Hotel."

Mansion House.—Originally the Mansion House was a small dwelling, in which, in the very early fifties, W. D. Bacon had his home. It was enlarged about 1856, by Jacob L. Bean and his sons, making one of the largest residences in the village. The property was finally purchased by Miss Elizabeth H. Clark, now Mrs. E. H. Carney, and an addition, 26x80 feet, and four stories in height, was erected in 1871 for a hall and additional sleeping rooms. Although a regular hotel, keeping open for patronage during the entire year, the Mansion House makes a specialty of providing for summer guests—those who come from various parts of the country to receive benefits from the use of Waukesha mineral water. It is made more popular by the brilliant parties and receptions which are given every season at brief intervals. The hotel has been under the popular management of L. N. Mowry, who has had more patronage than the house afforded room to accommodate.

Fountain House.—This is the largest hotel in the State of Wisconsin, and one of the most noted in the Northwest. The building of it in so small a village as Waukesha looked financially hazardous to the majority of people; but Matthew Laffin, of Chicago, had been cured of a painful and dangerous malady by the use of Waukesha mineral water, and he was therefore determined to furnish more ample accommodations at Waukesha, that a greater number of the afflicted might avail themselves of the virtues of her springs. The following is taken from the Hotel World of May 17, 1879:

“Last season, the influx of visitors from all parts of the country, and especially from the South, to our Northwestern summer resorts was something extraordinary. Among the most famous hotels none experienced greater demands upon its resources than did the Fountain Spring House, at Waukesha, Wis., from whose doors dozens were turned away every week because of lack of accommodations. It was the home of some of the most brilliant representatives of the beauty and chivalry of Southern cities, who lingered far beyond the ordinary limits of a watering-place season, dreading to return to their fever-stricken homes as long as the specter of their dread hovered over them. The hotel and grounds were the scenes of gayety and enjoyment until the night of September 1, when a fiend, twin brother of the yellow plague, burst in upon the innocent revelry that served to fill so many hearts with pleasure, and in a short space of time nearly all of the splendid Fountain Spring Hotel was a heap of smoldering ruins; all that remained to tell the story of what had been, except the north wing of the structure, which was saved only after the most superhuman efforts. It seemed like a death-blow to the ambitious citizens of Waukesha, and, in spite of their all-abiding faith in the natural attractions of the beautiful village and the efficacy of its celebrated mineral springs, they could not believe it possible for the place ever to recover its lost ground. They had forgotten that the proprietor was a Chicago man, whose experience with the fire fiend enabled him to regard the loss of a piece of property as splendid as the Fountain Spring House in the light of an almost every-day event. Mr. Matthew Laffin and his sons were blessed with too much of that native philosophy which enabled them to laugh at trifles, and with the energy that belongs to every Chicago man, like his coat, they only waited until the insurance loses had been adjusted, when they entered into negotiations not only for the rebuilding of the burned portions of the house, but also for an addition of 300 feet in length, which would make the new structure one of the largest hotels in the whole country. How astonishingly rapid has been the progress of the work, may now be seen, for there stands in the place of the former hotel a building whose magnificent proportions surpass the wildest expectations of the most sanguine believers in Waukesha's destiny ten years ago.

“The old building was 147 feet front on Grand avenue by 147 feet deep, which front has been restored, and the new part 300 feet front by 147 feet deep, with dining-room addition of 116 feet by 54 feet, together with the rising in height of some of the rear buildings, has been added, thereby making one of the most complete and by far the most substantially built of any summer resort in the country.

“The old part has been faced with rock-faced rubble stone laid in courses, with stone caps, sills and window dressings. The additions are faced with the well-known cream-colored Milwaukee brick, with cut-stone trimmings. The foundations are solidly built of stone resting upon a hard gravelly bed, while the natural slope of the ground insures good ventilation and good dry cellar room.

“The front on Grand avenue is three stories high above the surface of the ground, and the roof line is broken by the pavilions, tower and center gable. A number of rooms are finished off in the higher portions of the roof, but the intervening or connecting parts are not finished into rooms.

“The ground, which slopes rapidly to the west, will be handsomely terraced and ornamented with shrubbery and flowers. This natural slope of the ground leaves the entire basement story above the natural surface, so that all the various departments located therein are most perfectly lighted and aired by natural means. Great attention has been paid to the drainage and sewerage, several thousand feet of the largest-sized drain pipe having been laid for the purpose of providing the best system that modern skill and knowledge can devise.

“The entire building will be well supplied with water forced by powerful steam pumps to three large iron tanks in the highest points of the roof, from which tanks the water will be distributed to the several stories in the building; in connection with these pumps will be placed three stand-pipes with three large globe valves and fire hose on the floor.

“The entire building will be lighted with gas, made on the premises, but in a separate and isolated building.

“The building has been designed not only for the purpose of housing a large number of people, but special exertions have been made to provide the very best accommodations for all who come. Every comfort has been provided, the rooms are all large, well lighted, aired and ventilated, and many of them are provided with handsome mantels and fire-grates, so that those who come early and stay late can have a cheerful fire when needed. The halls are wide, high and spacious, are straight, and cross each other at right angles, and, being well lighted, there can be no danger in getting from one part of the house to another, or of being lost in the confusion incident to the intricate and dark passages of ordinary summer resorts.

“The guests' parlors and sleeping-rooms are all arranged en suite, so that families or parties of any size can be accommodated with connecting rooms whenever desired.

“The main entrance is through the tower at the northeast angle, through a large vestibule to the office, which is fifty feet square, and the clerk's desk commands a view of the principal halls, entrances and stairways.

“The main stairway is sixteen feet wide, and the others, four in number, are twelve and fourteen feet wide. All are what are known as square-landing staircases, and being lighted and aired by windows on each landing, and rising easy, it will not be tiresome to ascend them.

“The reading and waiting room is the first room from the office, and is twenty by thirty-two feet, with three large windows, a cozy mantel and fireplace. The reception parlors are 20x20 feet and 20x23 feet, respectively, and are connected by sliding doors. Next we come to the four grand parlors, which, when thrown together by sliding doors, are 136 feet in length by an average width of 24 feet. All these rooms are on one side of the main hall, on the opposite side of which is the ladies' ordinary, or a small dining-room 38x50 feet, connecting with the nurses and children's dining-room, 28x33 feet. Next is the grand dining-room, which for size and general proportions is equal to any in the States. It is 50 feet wide by 106 feet long, and 24 feet high in the clear, and free from any obstructions of columns or posts. It is lighted on all sides by large plate-glass windows opening out into the pure air. There are three large domes in the ceiling, the center one 24 feet in diameter, and one on each side of the center 14 feet in diameter. These domes are filled with ornamental glass, and suspended from each of them are large gas chandeliers and reflectors, which, with the side-bracket cluster lights, when lighted up will give a most brilliant appearance. In the rear of these dining-rooms are the kitchen and working departments, such as dish and carving rooms, meat-rooms, refrigerators, etc., all fitted up with the most approved modern appliances for cooking, steaming and boiling. The range is 24 feet in length, of the best French pattern, and there are two six-foot meat broilers, besides meat and vegetable broilers, tea, coffee, and chocolate boilers, steam, carving and vegetable tables, etc.

“South of the parlors and dining-rooms on the first floor of the building is divided up into guests' rooms. Many of the rooms have bath-rooms and dressing-rooms in connection, so that guests can have the luxury of a cold or warm bath without leaving their apartments.

“The second and third floors and the more prominent portions of the attics will be devoted entirely to guests' rooms and the necessary dressing-rooms and lavatories; the servants' rooms being located in the basement.

“Every room in the house has a large closet attached, so that the dreaded Saratogas and double-deckers can be stored away and still leave room enough for the wardrobes.

“The stories are all of them very high, being as follows: First story, fifteen feet; second story, twelve feet, and the third story, eleven feet in the clear.

“The basement is eleven feet high, and, being all out of ground, there is no deficiency of either light or air. In it are the public lavatory and dressing-rooms, porters', boot-blacks' and storage rooms, trunk and sample rooms, vegetable, fuel and ice rooms.

“Under the grand dining-room are located the bar and billiard rooms, 45x50 feet, barbers' parlor, 45x50 feet, with four bath-rooms, attached. South of the billiard-room is the bowling-alley and shooting gallery, 24x100 feet, containing three splendid alleys with unobstructed light and air. The laundry, with its large and spacious, drying and ironing rooms, together with the servants' ward and dining-room, are in the north wing of the basement, and are complete in every essential.

“Communication by electric bells and telephone is had in every room from the main office; and telegraphic communication direct with all the Southern and Western cities, as well as telephonic connection with Milwaukee and Chicago will be made so that rooms can be engaged and railroad connections made without delay or annoyance. There is a veranda, two stories in height, extending all round the building to the dining-room wing on the west side, which, with the connecting halls, makes a promenade of several miles without leaving the house. The furniture of the house, without being of extravagant or gaudy kind, is of the best designs and manufacture; and the carpets and upholstery are of the best. The traveler, on business or pleasure, and the invalid in search of health, pure air and recreation, with the health-giving virtues of the celebrated Waukesha Springs, can be assured of no better care and attention elsewhere.

“Among the notable features of the interior of the house—one that attracts the attention most forcibly—is the superb chandelier which depends from the center of the dome of the grand dining-room, and contains twenty-six gas jets, while on either side is another chandelier, containing twelve gas jets, making fifty jets of light depending from the ceiling of this magnificent room. When all are ablaze, the scene is indescribably beautiful, and one can picture how dazzlingly brilliant will be the dinner assemblage here at the height of the season.

“The whole was designed and planned by the eminent hotel architect of the United States, William M. Boyington, of Chicago, who is well known as the designer and builder of the best and largest hotels of the United States and Canadas. His last work, the “Fountain Spring,” is not inferior in any respect to any hotel on the Continent. By his professional skill every advantage has been gained and every improvement been considered and judiciously adopted; prompt and responsible contractors have been selected for the performance of the several branches of the work, and his assistant and former partner, J. W. Roberts, of Chicago, was placed in charge as resident superintendent, under the immediate supervision of the architect.

“The total cost of the building and furniture is in the neighborhood of $150,000, which is about half of what it would have cost in ordinary times.

“The numerous friends and patrons of the house will no doubt be glad to learn that Mr. Albert Cleveland, the former popular host, is to be manager of the house. This makes the third season of Mr. Cleveland's management, and it can be stated as something unusual that he has proved himself more and more popular since first assuming the position, not alone among those who have sojourned with him, but by all with whom he has had business relations. Courteous and gentlemanly in all places, yet retaining sufficient dignity to give the importance to his position that a successful management demands, thus he has served guest and proprietor equally well, and has given a reputation to the Fountain Spring House superior to that enjoyed by any other summer resort in the West.

“ In this connection it is proper to speak of the aid rendered by George H. Laflin in building up the business of the hotel in years past, and of the extensive arrangements now being made by him for the business of the coming season. He is corresponding with parties in all sections of the United States, with a view of bringing to the attention of tourists the extraordinary opportunities offered here for their pleasure and comfort. During many years of business life he has become acquainted with people from every section of the country, and is thus enabled to put in his work where it will do the most good.

“ And here we bid adieu to one of the most agreeable topics of the season, and confidently call attention to the superior attractions of Waukesha as a summer resort, whether it be for the traveler, the pleasure-seeker or the invalid; and in so doing we can imagine no better or more comfortable a shelter than is to be found under the roof of the Fountain Spring House. The original Fountain House, begun in 1873, cost $160,000. The new building, with furniture, is valued at over a quarter of a million.”

Park Hotel.—This beautifully located pleasure house was erected in 1874 by Lemuel White, for a residence. It is of stone, three stories high above basement, with a mansard roof. The property is owned by the White heirs, consisting of Mrs. Elizabeth J. Watson, Mrs. Ellen D. Monteith, Mrs. Hattie G. Gove and M. E. Cole. The structure is on Broadway, opposite the Silurian Spring and Park. The grounds surrounding the hotel comprise several acres, which are covered with orchards, gardens and shade trees. A recent writer says of the Park Hotel: “ In front and on either side is one of the oldest parks in Waukesha, which contains more than a dozen different varieties of trees; to the rear stretch acres of a fine old orchard, now in the richest bloom—and across the street is the Silurian Mineral Spring, park, pavilions and bath house—the buildings all new and elegant. This spring is one of the largest and best in Waukesha, and within two minutes’ walk of the Park Hotel. Its waters are always on draught, fresh every hour in the hotel, and on the table at every meal. The situation and surroundings, indescribably charming as they are, do not make the Park Hotel famous more than do its elegant rooms—all rendered cool and fragrant by the surrounding pines, spruce, aspens, maples, elm and fruit trees—and the unapproachable cleanliness, elegance and its variety of its tables. The grounds surrounding the hotel are ample for all lawn amusements, tents, hammocks, etc., and are everywhere shaded. Those desiring to tent on the grounds can have tents furnished, if desirable, while hammocks and lawn games will be always at the disposal of the guests. There is no crowding on the grounds of this hotel at the bottom of the Silurian Ocean, and guests have the choice of orchard, lawn or park.” The site was originally an Indian camping and burial place, and in the earlier days of the village was a large nursery. When the nursery was destroyed, Mr. White preserved the best specimens of all the different varieties growing, and thus made, with the exception of Morris D. Cutler’s, the finest park in Waukesha. Thus the fine park, high grounds and substantial buildings combine to make a place of unexcelled attractions. The manager is Mrs. F.E. Lewis.

Cambrian House.—Ed Evrard began the hotel business in Waukesha in an old building on the west side of the Fox River, which becoming too small, he tore down, and built, in 1879, the present structure on the same site. The old hotel was called the Cambrian House, and the new one took the same name. The contract for the new building was let to Jacob Wright, of Delafield. The structure, of the best brick, three stories in height, and costing about $7,000, was completed and opened for business in August, 1879. The hotel will accommodate upward of sixty guests; is elegantly furnished in every department, and is finished in the highest style of mechanical skill. Every room is thoroughly ventilated and well lighted. The house is well patronized.

Dunbar’s Bethesda Hotel.—The late Richard Dunbar contemplated erecting a large hotel in the Bethesda Park, but before his death only progressed far enough to lay the corner stone. This stone bears the following inscription: "This stone was laid by Hon. Salmon P. Chase, Chief Justice of the United States, August 24, 1871." As he applied the mortar which was to cement the stone to its foundation, Justice Chase, since deceased, spoke as follows: "At the request of Col. Dunbar, the proprietor, I now lay this corner stone in the hope and confident expectation that the house to be erected will prove a pleasant home to many resorting hither from this State, from other States and from other lands, to find refreshment and renovation in the healthful air of this locality, and the healing waters of your spring, which has been so fitly named Bethesda."

There was a very large concourse of people present on this occasion, which was an interesting one. A lengthy address was delivered by S. A. Randles. Now that Mr. Dunbar is dead, it is not known when the hotel will be erected.

National Hotel.—This substantial hotel building, three stories high, and of Waukesha limestone, was built on the south side of Main street, in 1871, by John Sperber, who has ever since been its proprietor.

Fox River House.—In 1869, Martin Shafer erected a large brick hotel structure on the west side of the river, which was managed as a public house by him and his heirs until destroyed by fire in 1878. It was a fine building and well appointed as a public house.

The other hotels are the Farmers' Home and Waukesha House. The boarding houses in Waukesha, which are open during the crowded season in the summer, can hardly be mentioned. There are, however, about fifty, and more than a hundred other families take a few boarders after all the hotels and more regular boarding houses are full.

CONFLAGRATIONS.

The first fire of note occurred January 11, 1844, and destroyed S. Ormsby's store, with $2,000 worth of goods. The weather was bitter cold, and the facilities for fighting fire consisted of a few stray buckets and pails.

The Fox River House, built by Martin Schafer, was burned on Thanksgiving night, in 1878. The fire, which was of unknown origin, consumed the hotel barn, two horses, a quantity of harnesses, and the hotel furniture. The loss was about $12,000, on which there was an insurance of $6,300 on building and furniture.

The Fountain House, built by Matthew Laffin, took fire in its kitchen at 11 o'clock P. M., of the last Thursday in August, 1878. The little fire appliances then belonging to Waukesha Village were of little use in fighting so large a fire, and the authorities sent to Milwaukee for aid. Engines arrived from that city at 5 o'clock in the morning, and succeeded in saving the walls of about one-quarter of the building, although the fire had been raging six hours. The hotel contained about 200 guests and seventy-five employes, all of whom escaped safely with clothing and baggage. The loss was covered by an insurance of $55,000 on the building and $20,000 on furniture. The hotel cost, $160,000; and the loss was estimated to have been from $100,000 to $125,000.

One of the disastrous fires to the village was that which burned the Smith or Hill block. The buildings burned were built by Dr. J. Smith, and stood where the Opera House and Commercial block now stand. They were consumed in 1868, probably, and remained in ruins until 1874, when Mrs. E. H. Carney built the present fine blocks in their place.

On the 22d of March, 1856, a fire was seen issuing from the windows of A. F. Pratt's printing office. A Mr. Wheeler ran into the building, which was on the south side of Mair street, and found one Doty, who was in Mr. Pratt's employ, in a drunken stupor on the bed, and the room was enveloped in flames. Doty was rescued, but the building, with its contents, was consumed, and all the other buildings from Burrough's Block to the corner where J. A. Waite's market now is. The heaviest losers were Joseph Turner, A. F. Pratt and John Angrave.

The old Milwaukee & Mississippi car shops burned in September, 1877, and made a large fire. They were owned by Russell N. Kimball, who had no insurance on the property.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The fire department of Waukesha Village depends entirely upon the volunteer services of the citizens of the place. The village pays a janitor (he will get no pay for his services for 1880, however, owing to a lack of funds, in which case he must spend his own time for the benefit and safety of the property-owners of the entire village); pays for the coal used to warm the building, and for all acids and soda used in the extinguishers. Some time after the close of the war, two pumps, worked by hand, were purchased by the village at a very moderate cost. But, owing to the scarcity of water in certain localities, and the extreme exertion required to work them, an effort was made to secure the purchase of a steam fire engine. For this purpose, the question of raising a tax of $2,500 was submitted to a vote of the people and defeated. A tax of $1,500 was agreed to by vote of the people August 11, 1874, and Richard Street and James Poole were appointed to report as to how the money should be expended. After journeys to Milwaukee and Chicago, and examining all the fire extinguishers that could be had for $1,500 they reported as follows:

Your committee on examination of chemical fire engines respectfully report that, in accordance with an invitation extended to them by the Babcock Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, to examine their machines, they visited that city and carefully examined the construction and working of the Babcock Fire Engine, and your committee are unanimous in expressing their satisfaction with the style, material and workmanship of their machines; the price with 200 feet of hose for an 80-gallon machine is $900; for two machines, $1,800. Your committee further report that they also visited Milwaukee and examined the Champion Fire Extinguisher, and were very much pleased with the strength and simplicity of said fire extinguisher. Chief Lippert, of Fire Department, Milwaukee, recommends the Champion as the simplest and most effective chemical fire extinguisher he has seen. The price of the Champion for two machines, of 100 gallons capacity each, with 100 feet of hose, is $1,400. The difference in price between the Babcock and Champion is $400 in favor of the Champion, with the addition of 40 gallons greater capacity. Under these circumstances, your committee recommend the purchase of two Champion Fire Engines. They are of greater capacity and cost $400 less.

RICHARD STREET,
JAMES POOLE.

Two Champion Extinguishers were, on the strength of this report, finally purchased, at a cost of $1,400.

The officers and members of the present Fire Department are as follows: Chief Engineer, Charles Cork; Assistant Engineer, W. P. Babcock; Foreman, C. A. Haertel; Assistant Foreman, M. Adams; Secretary, N. McBeath; Treasurer, John Patterson; Trustees, R. H. Hunkins, W. P. Babcock and H. Williams; Janitor, George Klock.

Engine Company No. 1.—Captain, R. H. Hunkins; Assistant Captain, W. P. Babcock; J. Herbrandt, G. Lindtner, G. Deakin, J. Patterson, W. H. Holbrook, A. Carver, H. Kebler, R. Schley N. Madden, F. Friedenstien, A. Wagner, F. Kramer and A. Schley.

Engine Company No. 2.—Captain, G. H. Abbott; Assistant, C. Barnes; J. Conners, G. T. Willets, C. Cork, E. Wells, N. McBeath, Peter Lau, E. B. Sweet, L. Abbott, H. Williams, J. Kebler, C. Weidenhaft, M. Adams and J. Cross.

Hook and Ladder Company.—Captain, George Klock; Assistant Captain, F. Ploss; E. Evans, H. J. Hepp, D. Johnson, C. A. Haertell, H. H. Sehart, R. Varley, E. K. Kimball, N. Sumner, S. Herbrandt, H. Theilman, J. Hurley, H. Schneider and G. Gleissner.

The village owns the old pumps, as well as the extinguishers, and at a fire all four of the machines are brought out for use.

MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.

Lord, Gale & Barber's Saw-Mill.—The dam having been built and a race excavated, early in 1838 Lord, Gale & Barber began the erection of a saw-mill where the old planing-mill stands, a short distance below the Saratoga Mills. This was the first saw-mill in Prairieville and the third in the county. A Mr. Lampman was the mill-wright, and did most of the work of building it. In this mill much of the lumber for the flouring-mill, the timbers for the first frame dwelling and much other lumber used in the vicinity of Waukesha, was sawed. The old mill is of little account now for any purpose, and has not been used as a saw-mill for many years.

Saratoga Mills.—There is probably no flouring-mill in Wisconsin which has seen more years of service than Bowman's Saratoga Mills, at Waukesha. The water power was on Alonzo R. Cutler's claim, who settled upon it in 1834, as an eligible manufacturing site. Soon after, a trade was made with M. D. Cutler, his brother, and in 1837 the claim, consisting of 160 acres and the water privileges, was sold to Lord, Gale & Barber, through William A. Barstow, for $6,013. The flouring-mill was begun in 1838. The frame was hewed by the late John Woodworth, out of logs, and was floated down the Fox River to the foundation. The timbers for the frame are unusually heavy and strong, and will last a century unless destroyed by fire. The mill was over a year in building, owing to the scarcity of labor, the great cost of material and the difficulty in getting milling machinery transported from the East. There was rejoicing in Prairieville when the old-fashioned "pitch-back" waterwheel finally set the buhrs in motion, for the mill contained the only "smutter" in the Territory, and the only flour bolt anywhere in the vicinity. It was the beginning of an important era in the village, as it brought a large amount of commerce to her merchants which before had gone to Milwaukee and elsewhere. Probably in 1850, the mill was sold by William A. Barstow & Co. to Thomas J. Williams, who rented it to various parties until 1855, when the entire property was bought by Russell N. Kimball. Mr. Kimball made some changes in the machinery of the mill, putting in new waterwheels, steam power and additional runs of stone. In 1876, Benjamin Bowman, the present proprietor, came into full possession of the mill property; removed the steam machinery; put in improved waterwheels and made other improvements. The new wheels are of such power and economy that enough water is always had to run the mill. It has five runs of stone with a flour capacity of two hundred barrels per day. Its capacity to do custom work is sixty bushels per hour. Mr. Bowman ships largely to Scotland, but sells mostly in domestic markets.

The mill, with necessary belongings, cost Lord, Gale & Barber, and William A. Barstow, $30,000, which was a large sum in 1839.

Blair's Iron Works.—The large stone building now used by William Blair as his machine and iron works was begun early in the spring of 1845, by W. D. Bacon, and completed in 1846. The corner stone of the building was laid with considerable ceremony, which was witnessed by a large number of spectators. The cavity of this corner stone contains coin of various denominations and other articles desired by some of those present to be preserved. The building is three stories in height, with a large and spacious attic. The walls are all of solid stone and built in a thorough and substantial manner. The structure was erected for a wagon and blacksmith shop, and was used by its proprietor for many years for that purpose, or until about 1853, when Mr. Bacon sold the property to Jacob L. Bean, who owned it for some time and finally sold it to William Blair.

At the time the building was erected, it was one of the largest and best in the State. Its central and commanding position as a wagon and blacksmith shop attracted customers from a great distance, who came hither for their work and repairs. The principal roads leading to Milwaukee through the State passed through Prairieville, as Waukesha was then called, in close proximity to Mr. Bacon's building. It was no infrequent sight to see scores of wagons and horses in and about the shop awaiting their turn for repairs. This building, besides being one of the oldest in the country, has many interesting historic incidents connected with it.

It was from this building the first Abolition paper printed in Wisconsin was issued. It was in the third story of this large structure that the "Ancient and Sublime Order of the 1,001" held some of its very first meetings, and continued to "raise Hail Columbia" in it for several years. This was long before such an organization had an existence in Milwaukee. It was to this building the most prominent and wealthy people came from all portions of the State to be initiated into the order. Many came from Milwaukee and elsewhere, among whom might be mentioned Don A. J. Upham, Jonathan E. Arnold, Levi Hubbell, John S. Rockwell, Andrew E. Elmore, and scores of others, who occupied the leading positions in the State. If this old building could talk, could tell all it knew in a voice loud enough to be heard one hundred miles in every direction, there would go up the greatest roar of laughter ever heard by mortal man.

The first lodge of Odd Fellows was instituted in this building, and was used by them for some time. It is now managed by Frank Blair, William Blair's son, as a general machine shop.

Milwaukee and Waukesha Railway Car Shops.—The original or first railroad company, the "Waukesha & Milwaukee," since the Milwaukee & Mississippi, and now the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company, in 1849 commenced the erection of a large stone building, 80x120 feet, with two very high stories, for the manufacture of cars. The building was completed in the spring of 1850, and in it car building immediately commenced, which continued until the company removed their works and shops to Milwaukee. The company then sold the building to Messrs. Case & Co., who manufactured freight cars in it until 1855; but, not finding the business profitable, suspended operations, and sold the property to Messrs. John Nazro, of Milwaukee, W. D. Bacon and William Blair, of Waukesha, for $12,000. From that time until about 1866, the building remained unoccupied, except for the storage of customary rubbish, and goods of but little value. About the year 1866, the building was purchased by R. N. Kimball, who used it as a planing-mill for a brief time, and for storing wool, lumber, thrashing machines and wagons, and finally, at considerable expense, he converted it into an elevator, putting in mammoth bins, expensive truck and platform scales and modern machinery for elevating grain. There being but a small amount of grain to elevate, the machinery was but seldom used, and stood idle for years. In the month of September, 1877, on a hot Sunday afternoon, the building was discovered to be on fire, supposed to have originated from the rays of the hot sun passing through the large glass windows on to the waste used in cleaning the engine and machinery about the building. The large stone structure, with its entire contents—engine, scales, machinery, together with a large amount of seasoned pine lumber—was totally destroyed, incurring a loss to its owner of over $10,000 without a dollar of insurance.

In this building, whose ranges of ruins are yet to be seen near the depot, were erected the first railway cars built in Wisconsin, or the Northwest, and for a time a large number of men were given employment within its walls. When the old Milwaukee & Waukesha Railroad Company secured the right of way through Waukesha, and was receiving other material aid, its officers promised that these car shops should always be maintained where they were built, in full operation. If that promise had been kept, Waukesha Village would have been much larger than it now is.

Waukesha County Manufacturing Company.—A charter was granted incorporating the Waukesha County Manufacturing Company, by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, and the act approved March 13, 1866.

A meeting of the Commissioners named in the act of incorporation was held at the office of A. Cook, in the village of Waukesha, on the 17th day of March, 1866. Present, Albert Kendrick, Sebina Barney, G. C. Pratt, Silas Barber and Edward Porter.

On motion, A. Kendrick was elected President, and G. C. Pratt, Secretary.

A committee was appointed to obtain subscriptions to the capital stock of the company, and in a comparatively short space of time a sufficient sum was subscribed to entitle the company to organize under its charter. This they proceeded to do on the 21st day of April, 1866, by electing the following-named gentlemen to serve as their first Board of Directors: William Blair, Albert Amsden, Isaac Lain, Silas Barber, T. D. Cook, G. C. Pratt and M. S. Hartwell. Subsequently, on the same day, the Directors met, and elected the following officers: President, William Blair; Vice President, Silas Barber; Secretary, G. C. Pratt; Treasurer, T. D. Cook. The board immediately proceeded to buy a lot and erect buildings thereon for a woolen-mill. A stone building was erected 36x100 feet, three stories in height, with a one-story addition for wheel and dye house.

They commenced running by water power, having built an overshot water wheel thirty-six feet in diameter. But they soon found the water power was not sufficient to drive the necessary machinery, and then added steam.

In December following, they commenced the manufacture of woolen goods. Additional buildings have been built from time to time, and new and better machinery has been added from year to year, until now they have one of the largest and best woolen-mills in the State, employing some seventy hands and working up about 200,000 pounds of wool annually. No better goods are made East or West than are turned out at this mill. For several years, nearly the whole product was woolen shawls, the sale of which they had contracted in advance to Field, Leiter & Co., of Chicago, for cash.

For several years last past, the product of this mill has been of a mixed character, fine cassimeres, shawls, flannels, blankets and yarns being the principal articles manufactured.

The Present officers are William Blair, President; Richard Street, Vice President; Isaac Lain, Secretary; T. D. Cook, Treasurer; Richard Street, Superintendent. This is the largest and most important manufacturing institution in Waukesha County, and serves a three-fold purpose, viz., furnishing employment to a large number of persons, making a good market for wool, and, by the excellence of its products, making Waukesha County famous for fine wool and fine goods.

Hartwell's Planing-Mill.—In 1859, the planing-mill and sash, door and blind factory, owned by M. S. & C. S. Hartwell, on the west side of the river, was burned. The firm immediately secured the site on Grand avenue and erected the stone factory as it now stands. Since 1875, it has been owned by Clark S. Hartwell and is run in connection with his building operations. In it he does re-sawing, planing, scroll-sawing, turning, matching and nearly all kinds of wood-work. The motive power is steam.

West Hill Brewery.—In the fifties, Mr. Meyer erected a brewery, of wood and stone, on the present site of Stephen Weber's buildings. Mr. Meyer failed, and the property, through Sheriff's sale, fell into the hands of Peter Peffer and Charles Nohl, who, in 1862, sold the entire property to Stephen Weber. He erected the present substantial stone structure over the old cellars, in 1873. In 1870, he erected a two-story ice-house of stone, which was made one story higher in 1879. Mr. Weber manufactures about 2,200 barrels of beer per annum, and on the opposite side of the street from his brewery has a building and machinery for bottling beer, which branch of his business has grown to considerable proportions. West Hill is the largest brewery in the county.

Olin & Clinton's Cheese Factory.—The cheese factory on Carroll street, in this village, was opened for business by its present owners, O. Z. Olin and Orson P. Clinton, in May, 1875. The proprietors make no butter; their specialty is pure cheese. They now have an average of 3,000 pounds of milk per day. During the first year, their cheese averaged 11½ cents per pound. This year it has averaged a little over 10 cents per pound. The market is mostly in New York and Chicago.

Barnard's Mill.—The upper dam on the west side of the Fox River, was constructed to furnish water power for a factory built by W. S. Barnard. Various small articles in wood and iron were manufactured by Mr. Barnard. He finally changed the machinery into that for a flouring-mill; but it never was a profitable investment. In this old building, which, cracked and weak, still stands opposite the Barstow residence, William Blair began his iron manufacturing business. He had no lathe in those days, and did all the necessary turning by hand.

Porter's Wool Storehouse.—In 1876, Edward Porter erected a large wool and grain storehouse, near the Fox River. He has purchased from the farmers, adjacent to the town of Waukesha, during the past ten years, upward of 1,225,000 pounds of wool, for which he has paid Eastern prices, less transportation. He makes his shipments principally to the cities of Philadelphia, Boston, Syracuse, and North Adams, Mass. Mr. Porter also handles immense quantities of barley, which furnishes a ready market near home for the large barley crops of Waukesha County.

Haynes' Elevator.—The old stone building erected by the Milwaukee & Mississippi Railroad Company, which was formerly a portion of the depot, was leased to Thomas Haynes, in 1868, for the purpose of storing, elevating and shipping grain, in which business he was engaged. The increase of business soon compelled him to put in machinery and other facilities for the more speedy handling of grain, and now it is one of the best elevators for its capacity on the line of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, outside of Milwaukee.

The receipts of wheat purchased by Mr. Haynes of the farmers adjacent to Waukesha, vary from one to five cars per day during the fall and winter. The grain is shipped mostly to Milwaukee. In addition to the elevator, Mr. Haynes, in 1878, erected a warehouse, 60x30 feet, near the railroad track, east of his elevator, for the storage of salt, cement, plaster, etc., in which he deals largely.

For the seventeen years Mr. Haynes has been in the business, he has paid Milwaukee prices, less the cost of transportation, and has disbursed, satisfactorily, a very large amount of money among the farmers, who receive more for their cereals at his elevator than they could realize by hauling them to Milwaukee.

MISCELLANEOUS SKETCHES.

Cutler's Park.—This handsome property is located near the center of Waukesha Village. There are about thirty kinds of trees and various kinds of wild flowers and plants growing upon it. The park, which contains eight acres of land, is owned and occupied by Morris D. Cutler; who built a residence in the center of it over forty-six years ago. Mr. Cutler will not sell the place, neither does he make modern improvements, but, on the contrary, he wishes to see things as nearly as possible in the state of nature.

The park has now three pre-historic elevations of earth, called Indian mounds, which he allows to remain untouched. Mr. C. located on this property forty-six years ago, and began to clear out the under-brush, and to set out trees at that early day, which he has continued without interruption ever since. The report is that when Mr. Cutler is done with the park, he will deed it to the village with the proviso that the mounds never be disturbed.

Town Cemetery.—This beautiful home of the dead is as much for the village of Waukesha and surrounding towns as for the town of Waukesha, although owned and controlled exclusively by the latter. As is the case with every newly settled place, Waukesha was for many years without any common burial-place. David Jackson was buried in an Indian mound in the east part of the village of Waukesha, in December, 1841; a few were buried on the knoll where the Park Hotel now stands, opposite the Silurian Spring, which was the seat of an Indian cemetery; and some, a few years later, were buried where the present cemetery was afterward located. The fact that the locality possessed no common burial-place was the subject of much talk in an early day, the newspapers as well as the citizens taking the matter in hand. Early in 1848, the Democrat referred to the subject in this manner: "A spot so sacred as the burial-place of our friends and relatives should not be exposed to the intrusion of cows and other animals, as the village cemetery is from the highway and adjoining fields. * * * Citizens of Prairieville, will you do something to wipe off this reproach from our good name?"

Again, in 1849, the subject was handled in a still more vigorous and pointed manner by the newspapers. This agitation seems to have had the desired effect, for in November, 1849, the Supervisors of the town of Waukesha resolved to purchase ground for a burial-place, and December 3, of that year, purchased three acres of Nathaniel Walton for $50 for that purpose. On April 13, 1864, a little over five acres additional were purchased of S. S. Sawyer for $500. The cemetery is situated in the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 10, town of Waukesha.

The first person buried in this cemetery was the mother of Rev. O. F. Curtis.

Shakespeare Club.—This literary society was originated in the winter of 1856 by S. A. Bean, Prof. Evans, C. C. White, W. L. Bean, I. M. Bean, F. W. Monteith and a few others. The society was not kept up during the war. In 1874, it was again started by Rev. Isaac Woodle. The officers at present are: M. S. Griswold, President; Mrs Annie Leedom, Secretary. Among the principal exercises are the readings and criticisms of Shakespeare. Mrs. C. C. White and F. W. Monteith are the only members left from the organization of 1856. The present members are as follows: Rev. T. G. Watson, M. S. Griswold, F. W. Monteith, T. W. Haight, S. H. Vedder, Prof. G. H. Reed, Mrs. S. B. Waller, Mrs. C. C. White, Mrs. T. W. Haight, Mrs. Marsh, Mrs. Eliza Darwin, Mrs. C. Jackson, Mrs. S. A. Randles, Miss Eva Filley, Miss Annie Leedom, Miss Emily B. Marsh, Miss Louise M. Park, Miss Wilbor, Miss Alice P. Perry and Miss Georgie Bennett.

Waterworks Company.—A corporation designing to supply the hotels, Industrial School and private houses with drinking water, and the village with water for fire purposes, has been chartered under the name and style of the Mineral Rock Spring and Water-Works Company, with a capital stock of $100,000. Of this amount, $20,000 has already been subscribed. The corporation consists of C. C. Olin, President; Barzillia Douglass, Secretary; M. D. Cutler, Treasurer; Richard Walker and F. W. Olin. The design is to erect a water tower and pumping works on the large vacant lot east of Grand avenue, and thus to furnish mineral water to all the houses, public and private, in the village, as well as for public and private fountains, factories, fire purposes and street sprinkling, and to have the work completed by July, 1881.

Waukesha Observatory.—This structure, about the first feature noticed by the visitor to the vicinity of the village of Waukesha, is an octagon tower ninety-five feet in height, built by Thomas Spence, in 1873, for the accommodation of those who desire a complete bird's-eye view of the surrounding scenery. It looks down from the highest hill in the vicinity of Waukesha. The highest gallery is 220 feet above the Fox River, which flows at the foot of the hill, a few rods distant, and 445 feet above Lake Michigan. The view to be had from this tower is an extended one and of rare beauty. Washington County points, thirty-five miles distant, can be seen in the north, and Walworth County points as far distant as Elkhorn, the county seat, on the southwest. A janitor is in attendance, who points out and names the localities of interest to be seen from the observatory, for a small fee. During the summer of 1879, 1,300 visitors ascended the tower and left their autographs on a register kept for the purpose. The structure is on Block C, plat of West Waukesha Village, immediately south of Lawndale Addition, and cost about $3,000. It will accommodate 200 persons, and, though in part of wood, was built to stay.

OLD SETTLERS DONE UP IN RHYME.

The following verses were written in 1853 or 1854 by a schoolboy who has been dead many years:

A pretty place is Waukesha,
Its many scenes I love,
Its rippling streams and summer greens,
Its towering hills above.

Our citizens are active, brisk,
 With names and manners droll,
 And so to make my meaning plain,
 I'll call the village roll.

We've SMITHS in town of various kinds ;
 Some work in iron, tin,
 While others use up mortal man
 With drugs and medicine.

To which some of the craft object—
 Are down on drugs and bills ;
 And while the hattle wages warm
 SLEW-ly gives their little pills.

Men of physic here we see,
 Who say they're always WRIGHT,
 While others from their CASTLE wage
 War's opposition might.

But then, our WRIGHT has passed away ;
 He loved the negro race—
 But stole a woman who was WHITE,
 Before he left the place.

We still have people who are white ;
 But oh ! it gives me pain,
 To think that some of these dear WHITES
 Will always WHITE remain.

Upon the hill there stands a mill,
 They named it Carroll College—
 A vast machine to fill the brain,
 And grind out useful knowledge.

A word to you, professors dear,
 You labor for your pains—
 Make SMALL men great, but 'tis a sin
 To CRAM their little brains.

We have a COOK in town who will not cook
 A fowl or fry a fish ;
 But if you want a hatch of law
 He'll cook you up a dish.

Our legal men of cities large
 On knowledge oft are bent,
 Which to obtain they do consult
 The commentator, KENT.

But in our town 'tis not the head,
 But stomach kept in view,
 At 2 A. M. they do consult Kent's "common taters," too.

Our clergymen have told us all
 That we to hell will drop,
 Unless we go the narrow path,
 Straight through the cooper shop.

In literary strength we boast—
 Enlightened claim to be ;
 Yet some advise with SAVAGES.
 And listen, as we see.

Our ladies' mouths are very small—
 So very small, I'm sure
 That they would scarcely hold a pint
 Of crystal water pure.

But I have seen what I ne'er saw before,
 In lands of north and south,
 Some of our small-mouthed ladies, dear,
 With HOLBROOKS in their mouth.

SELLERS are seen in other towns,
 Yet far beneath the ground ;
 But here, 'tis common to relate,
 Our SELLERS walk around.

We've MINERS, too, who dig for gold—
 I am not spinning yarns—
 For at one time our MINER kept
 His gold close by his barns.

But now his barn has been removed,
 And is no longer found—
 Our MINER only borrows it,
 But not beneath the ground.

A BAKER, too, I've seen at home,
 And often in the street ;
 But if you ask for bread or cake,
 You'll get some music sweet.

We have a LAIN, and it is long,
 In summer, when 'tis seen
 Even after showers—the food of flowers—
 It's very seldom green.

Around this LAIN some prim old maids
 Are ever hovering near—
 But why they hang around this LAIN
 To me doth not appear.

Three years ago, we packed no pork,
 But our BACON wished to cure,
 So to the east—to say the least—
 'Twas sent, I'm very sure.

And then it cured, and dried and cured,
 Until one pleasant day,
 A homely youth by the name of BOOTH
 Our BACON stole away.

We have no schooners, brigs or ships,
 Nor oceans blue and bright,
 But then 'tis known to one and all,
 Our SAYLES are oft in sight.

Our Postoffice, in by-gone days,
 Was called a BARRON place—
 But by a BARTOW it was bereft
 Of every BARRON face.

But that BARS-tow has been cut of,
 And it really gave him pain,
 To find the office called the "Post,"
 A BARRON place again.

Now I'm going to leave this town,
 And I'm a hungry sinner,
 Who will agree to tender me
 A good substantial dinner ?

What do I like? I do not like—
 I like not beef, pork nor greens ;
 But then I guess I'll take a mess
 Of pretty, little black-eyed BEANS.

In 1871, the above rhyme was received with considerable gusto at the meeting of the County Old Settlers' Club, at which time a pioneer could not resist the temptation to immortalize himself by adding the following :

In '71 the scenes have changed,
 We miss some faces, dimes and pence ;
 Some are scattered—some laid low,
 Like CUTLER's old rail fence.

And since that old rail fence has gone,
 The town has really put on airs—
 Now sports its pickets, trees and walks,
 From ELLIOTT'S up to BLAIR'S.

In by-gone days, to cross the street,
 You'd need a sounding pole;
 Now you can go from BEAN to BACON,
 And never wet your sole.

Now, I'll bid you all good-bye,
 It's time I end this ditty;
 This village I never more will see,
 For soon 't will be a city.

WAUKESHA IN 1842.

A writer in 1842 thus describes the village: This village, like most of those in our vicinity, is rapidly progressing in beauty as well as population. We are glad to see in this, as well as other of our inland towns, such a degree of good taste and good sense in the construction of dwelling houses. Few places near us have greater beauties of location than Prairieville, and we are glad to see, even in a new country, some sympathy between the locality and the inhabitants. Situated near a small prairie of about three miles in length, it has all the advantages of prairies, openings and a well-watered soil. But about five years have passed since the place was first claimed, yet the census just taken shows a population of 682. Probably one-half of this is in the village and its immediate vicinity. The water-power on the Fox (Pish-ta-kee) River, by far the best of that region, is the nucleus around which this town is gathered. This has been improved by the erection of the extensive flouring-mills of Barstow, Gale & Co., which by the inducements held out to the farmers in that vicinity for a ready market for their wheat, has caused nearly all the public lands to be taken up. Other mills, on smaller streams, have likewise caused a considerable accession to the population and improvements of the town. The Prairieville mills have sent to market during the past year 6,000 barrels of flour, the Globe, or Dakin's mills, 1,000 barrels. This is the principal article constituting the business of the place, though other articles are of course sent from thence. The village is not wanting in the different mechanical arts, having most of those which are usually found in places of its size. We understand that some ten or twelve dwelling houses are erecting, or under contract, in the village; and it bids fair soon to rival, in business and population, some of our towns on the lake shore, and to become a thrifty, substantial and populous town. It certainly holds out as great inducements to mechanics and tradesmen as any country town in the Territory.

WAUKESHA IN 1844.

Some peripatetic person, who signed himself "Unchangeable Frizzle," wrote as follows to the Green Bay Republican, dating his letter at Prairieville, September 25, 1844:

"Since last I wrote you, I have paid a flying visit to some of the interior towns in this (Milwaukee) county—Wauwatosa, Brookfield and Prairieville. None particularly attracted my attention. Of these villages, Prairieville is the most pleasantly located, as well as most important. They all possess, however, great natural advantages, being in the midst of an increasing population, having a salubrious climate, and a soil equal to any in the world. I find, however, as might be expected, that most, if not all, the land in this vicinity has long since passed out of the hands of the Government. Consequently, good land cannot be obtained near the city, unless at an exorbitant price. Immigrants, therefore, if they wish to obtain land at nominal prices, would do well to visit the counties of Fond du Lac, Marquette or Winnebago, which are certainly as inviting as Milwaukee County. Prairieville is a growing, prosperous village, and will soon be the most important manufacturing town in Wisconsin. Everything about the village evidences the briefness of its settlement and also its future importance. It contains the most enterprising, able and best educated men of any new place I ever saw. They look into the future before doing anything, and already they are the leaders of nearly all Territorial movements."

WAUKESHA IN 1853.

The village of Waukesha was incorporated in 1852, and now (said a writer for the State Historical Society in 1853) has a population of about 2,200. It contains one saw-mill, one flouring-mill, two foundries, one railroad-car factory, one machine shop, one thrashing machine manufactory, two breweries, nine blacksmith shops, nine boot and shoe shops, two paint shops, one cooper shop, one carriage and wagon manufactory, two tailor shops, two millinery establishments, two jewelry shops, three saddle and harness shops, two cabinet warerooms, two tin and sheet-iron manufacturing establishments, two stone-cutting establishments, two butcher shops, three drug stores, three stationery and book stores, three hardware stores, five dry-goods stores, seven groceries, three hotels, two livery stables, nine physicians, one daguerrean room, one portrait painter, one dentist, seven lawyers, twelve ministers of the Gospel, besides Rev. Dr. Savage, President of Carroll College; eight churches, the court house and jail, a college, a female seminary, the Waukesha County Bank, two printing presses, one literary paper and two newspapers.

WAUKESHA IN 1860.

In July, 1860, a poetical person, name unknown, visited Waukesha, and, after taking in the beauties of the place, in an exuberant moment, furnished the following for the newspapers:

“ Things beautiful in conformation, added to natural advantages, delight the eye and add refinement and taste to cultivated minds. The astronomer loves to turn the horscope of his vision, with intensified gaze, on the star-bespangled heavens, and, while the mind feasts and ranges through the fields of astronomic lore, the heart beats with a stronger filial love to that Great Father, who has spread such a coruscation of shining worlds and planetary orbs in their undimmed and continuous splendor over our heads, and whose silent yet speaking beauty is best described by that poet who spoke thus :

“ ‘ What though in solemn silence all
Move round this dark terrestrial ball ;
What though no real voice nor sound
Amid their radiant orbs be found ;
Yet still in reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice—
Forever singing as they shine,
The hand that made us is Divine ! ’

“ But when we turn our gaze from things which can only be reached in part by the conceptions of our imaginations, and look at our feet upon the botanical world, with its blooming verdure and scented pathways, exhibiting to our gaze not only ‘ the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley,’ but its twenty-eight thousand different varieties of herbs and flowers that bud, bloom and grow on this green carpet, yielding beauty, utility and fragrance to man, we may well find ample scope for the exercise of mind and imagination in depicting things beautiful and landscapes delightful, whether they be local or general. But before we wander any farther in the general kingdom of landscape beauty, we will endeavor to localize our thoughts and descriptions to the beautiful and pleasant village of Waukesha, the county seat of Waukesha County. This delightful village of 3,000 inhabitants is situated in the midst of one of the most fertile districts to be found in the State of Wisconsin; its location is twenty miles by railroad from Milwaukee on the Milwaukee & Mississippi road, and lying on a beautiful prairie, with the Fox River running through its center. Nature has been most lavish to the place in gifts, both of soil and landscape, and art hath superadded, in the erection of spacious churches, elegant hotels, model schoolhouses, beautiful mansions and nonpareil stone side-walks on almost every street.

“ But as I purpose being brief in my description, I will commence with the educational advantages of the place. And first, I may state that there is an excellent college, well filled with students, under the supervision and presidency of the Rev. J. A. Savage, D. D. Here are students in attendance from all parts of the State, and the faculty and institution, generally considered, are inferior to none in the West. The Young Ladies' Seminary, under the superintendency of

Rev. Mr. Staples, assisted by a lady preceptress, is earning deserved popularity, and promises great usefulness in the education of females. We have also a beautiful and spacious Union School on the east side of the river, located on a three-acre lot, enclosed with a neat picket fence, and surrounded with shade trees. The house is built of dressed or cut stone, and seems a fit place for ‘Pedagogues to rule—in human nature wise, and learned to boot—

To teach the young idea how to shoot.’

“There are also eight churches—six of which are large enough to seat from four to eight hundred persons each. They are as follows: One Episcopalian, one Presbyterian, one Roman Catholic, three Methodist (one of which is German Methodist), and one Congregational. One might reasonably suppose there were not many sinners from the amount of church accommodations, but of this I judge not.

“The private residences of the more wealthy and prominent citizens are palatial and comfortable. Among others, we note the following: The beautiful homestead of M. D. Cutler, Esq., situated in nearly the center of the village, and containing an area of about seven acres; in shape it forms a parallelogram, with one of its longest sides fronting 600 feet on Wisconsin street. Around it is thrown a neat picket fence, and inside it is filled (apart from the neat and spacious dwelling) with fruit trees of all kinds common to our soil, and shade trees of almost every imaginable class and description. If the reader were to walk around this delightful spot in a summer day, and inhale the fragrant and scented air which rises from plants and flowers, as well as feast his eyes upon the general beauty of the scene, he might well fancy himself in a suburb of the once-famed Alhambra.

“The architectural beauty and surrounding embellishments of the residences on College Hill of William White, Esq., Rev. Dr. Savage and William Soper, Esq., are ahead of most that can be found in a Western or even Eastern town. And a little farther north, on the same street, are those of C. R. Dakin and T. D. Cook, Esq., the latter of whom is the owner of the famous flag and cut-stone quarries which are being so extensively worked at this place, and of whom it is not saying too much, that by unwearied industry and assiduous attention to his business, he has cut his way, within the past ten years, through rocks and difficulties to wealth and position. Such men ought to succeed.

“On Carroll street is to be found the sash, door and blind factory (with planing-mill), of W. P. Babcock. Also, near the stone quarry of Messrs. Davis, Barnes & Blank (an energetic, wide-awake stone company, by the way), is to be found the machine shop and factory of Messrs. Hartwell & Palmer. It is a large stone building, erected this summer, with every necessary facility for doing a big business. The integrity and scientific knowledge of Mr. Hartwell as an architect and master builder are a sufficient guarantee for the success of the establishment.

“On the corners of Carroll and East Division streets are located the beautiful residences of R. Walker, Leander Hill and H. A. Kennedy. This last-named gentleman was, until recently, a resident of Cincinnati, but removed his family to Waukesha in consequence of its healthy locality and superior educational advantages. Having established a model provision and grocery store in our midst, he may be considered a permanent fixture.

“On Main street there are several beautiful cut-stone buildings for residences, among which is that of N. Burroughs, Esq. Mr. B. is one of the oldest business men in the place, and the blessings of all good housewives ought to rest on his head for the large assortment of premium and nonpareil cooking stoves he has always on hand to facilitate the culinary labors of the kitchen.

“On the west side of the Fox River the neat and tastefully arranged residences of R. N. Kimball and William Blair, Esq., attract the attention. They are two of the solid men of ‘Boston,’ and are always to be found in the right place. Mr. Blair employs a large number of hands the year round in his machine shop for the manufacture of thrashing machines, fanning mills of all kinds, plows, drags, and farming apparatus generally. And, in connection with this business, he has an extensive demand for castings from all parts of the State, which keeps his molding furnace in full blast the year round. Mr. Kimball, the owner of the flouring and saw mills in this place, is putting a large steam engine into operation in his flouring-mill, which will enable him to do all the custom grinding farmers may want, with promptness, and merchant grinding to suit. When his arrangements are perfected, the mill will turn off 100,000 bushels of wheat annually. Mr. Kimball's business tact, united to an indomitable energy which he has devoted to the growth of the place, makes him a valuable member of the community, and it is a pleasure to know that he is well appreciated.

"In the business part of the town are some cut-stone blocks that will compare favorably with those of larger cities. Among such is that of Dr. Smith (4 stories high), C. C. Barnes, D. C. Davis, C. L. Robinson, C. Jackson, N. Burroughs, Andrew Aitkin and Wm. Clark.

"During the last year, the State Reform School has been completed, and is now ready for occupancy. It is a splendid stone building about sixty feet high, with towers, etc., which gives it quite a picturesque appearance. A portion of the furniture for this structure was manufactured at the prison at Waupun, and has already been received. The officers for the management of the institution have already been appointed, but as yet there are no inmates. The building cost about $45,000.

"We must not forget, among other institutions of the place, that there are two regularly chartered banks; the Waukesha Co. Bank, generally conceded to be a bank in the fullest sense of the term, and one of the foremost in the State, in amount of capital and general good management. The name of its President, A. Miner, Esq., is sufficient guaranty for probity and honorable dealing. The acting Cashier, Mr. C. Miner, although young in years, is ripe in experience, and thoroughly posted in financial matters, and has all the qualities requisite for the place. The Forest City Bank has for its President S. A. Bean, Esq., a good financier, and a gentleman of large acquirements. The Cashier, Mr. M. G. Townsend, is a model business man, of genial address, and a great admirer of 'Abe Lincoln.' Success to the institution.

"Of doctors and lawyers we have a great number. 'Brutus was an honorable man,' and so are they all honorable men—ever ready to attend to you in body or estate, and in as satisfactory manner as any of their class.

"There are two extensive nurseries or horticultural gardens, owned by A. McCall and A. G. Hanford, Esqs. Mr. Hanford is widely known throughout the West as being skilled in the chemical appliances of agriculture properly carried out, also horticulture and botany. He has a large nursery, where everything in his line can be found in quantities to suit.

"In the way of prominent men, we have made our 'mark,' having furnished two Governors for the State, and, in the estimation of many, possess the requisite material for a first-class Senator, to fill the forthcoming vacancy.

"I may now state, for the benefit of those who read this brief outline, that it is not written for the purpose of 'setting off' anything connected with the village or surrounding country in an exaggerated or false light, but as a bona-fide exhibit of everything spoken of. Genuine beauty requires no paint to make it more lovely; so the concentration of art, industry and talent in local and socialized forms will still vindicate their worth and establish their just supremacy over indolence, thriftlessness, or a want of mechanical skill in any department of business. I might add that the growth of farms, in agricultural fertility, stock and general good husbandry, is the basis of support for all towns and villages in the West; that the country surrounding our village gives its yearly solution by the increasing yield of grain, stock and produce of all kinds, garnered by the husbandman, that our farmers are getting rich, as their barns and spacious residences give some faint token, if compared with those of six or seven years ago. Very few have got the restless spirit of 'moving' in their minds, so common in the West; they are generally satisfied that they have found the farmers' El Dorado, and mean to dig and plow, and drag and hoe, and find not the fool's 'mica,' but the substantial reward that agriculture invariably throws into the lap of industry. 'The first creditor is certainly the plow, and it is the basis of our wealth in this new country. If it is not carried on with vigor and success, the artizan's hammer will lie unemployed upon the bench—the merchant will find no business to transact in his counting-room—and the vessels that now traverse our lakes freighted with merchandise will lie with their keels rotting in the stagnant waters of our harbors.'"

WHAT WAUKESHA VILLAGE CONTAINED IN 1865.

In 1865, an enterprising individual prepared the following table of contents for the village of Waukesha :

Waukesha has seventeen dealers in groceries, viz. : H. W. Stone, J. A. Dunbar, Wm. H. Boyle, Chas. Cork, Buckner & Lawrence, A. Harrison, John G. Eisman, Tyler Brothers, Jameson & James, C. S. Hawley, C. Jackson, Charles Stein & Bro., I. M. White, Isaac Collier, Patrick Murphy, John W. Fallon, Thomas Bigwood.

Dry Goods stores, seven, viz. : Miss E. H. Clarke, Buckner & Lawrence, John G. Eisman, Jameson & James, Chas. Stein & Bro., Isaac Collier, D. Foster.

Hardware Dealers, three, viz. : N. Burroughs, J. Haertel, Julius Reise.

Druggists, three, viz. : I. M. White, C. S. Hawley and C. Jackson.

Dealers in Paints and Oils, three, viz. : N. Burroughs, I. M. White and C. Jackson.

WAUKESHA IN 1880.

In manufacturing importance, Waukesha has not grown to any appreciable extent since the erection of the woolen factory. She has been rapidly growing as a summer resort, however ; has more guests this year than ever before, and has more facilities for their accommodation. The population has also grown, as each succeeding census since the village was incorporated shows. For the decade ending June 30, 1880, the increase has been equal to that of former periods, notwithstanding the panic which laid an iron hand on all industries during a large portion of that time. The population is 2,980, an increase of 347 since the census of 1870. The number of dwellings is 635, which is but a small increase since 1870, though more than a million dollars have been expended in building. Since 1870, the Fountain House, the largest hotel in Wisconsin, has been twice built, the largest portion of the Mansion House erected, and various other buildings, aggregating a greater cost than number, have appeared in the village. On the whole, therefore, the growth of Waukesha Village has been more in wealth and value than in the number of its residents.

NOTES AND FIRST THINGS.

The first white settlers on lands now in Waukesha Village were Morris D. and A. R. Cutler and Henry Luther. The latter was here but one summer—that of 1834.

The first buildings were three frame shanties—one erected near Blair's foundry; one where M. D. Cutler now resides, and one near Bethesda Spring. The first-mentioned was built first.

The first marriage was that of Hamilton Nelson to Mrs. Caroline Eggleston, August 12, 1838, at Robert Love's house, near Bethesda Spring.

The first frame building was built in 1838, and is now occupied by J. Austin Waite, near Wisconsin avenue. It was also the first frame house in the county. Concerning the manner and time of its building, Lyman Goodnow writes as follows: "In 1838, my brother Edward W., and I, with teams and axes, started for the woods to cut and draw timber twenty feet long to the saw-mill, which had just started. Wm. T. Bidwell sawed and Allen Clinton framed this lumber, for the first frame house built in Prairieville. The house was post and beams. All the material was sawed in this mill, and used green. We got our lime of Deacon Mendall, and for a plastering trowel we had to use a common mason's trowel. This house was built by Edward W. Goodnow and Deacon Allen Clinton, and is now occupied by Austin Waite. It was taken from the stump, put up, finished and moved into, in less time than any house in this town, before or since."

The first carriage brought to Waukesha was owned by Charles R. Dakin. The second was brought by Geo. A. Hine, and the third by Joseph Turner.

The first white woman to settle in what is now Waukesha was probably Mrs. B. S. McMillan, as Mrs. Stewart and Mrs. Isaac Smart settled outside of the village limits.

The first hotel was the Prairieville House, built in 1837.

The first schoolhouse was of logs, built in 1837, on the west side of the river.

The first bridge was of logs, built near the flouring-mill, in 1837.

The first store, except Juneau's Indian store, was opened by Charles R. Dakin.

The first church was the Congregational, built in 1839.

The first newspaper, the American Freeman, started here in 1845.

The first Postmaster was David Jackson, who was appointed by Andrew Jackson early in 1837, and died in 1841.

The first lawyer was Vernon Tichenor, who opened an office in 1839.

The first school teacher was John Moon Wells, who taught in the log schoolhouse in 1837.

The first piano was brought into the village by Dr. Gilbert Wright.

In May, 1866, a Young Men's Association was formed for the purpose of establishing a public library. The first officers were as follows: President, O. M. Tyler; Vice President, W. Story; Secretary, A. Holbrook; Treasurer, A. J. Frame; Trustees, A. Tyler, M. L. Butterfield, Geo. Lawrence, 3d, A. F. Pratt, F. H. Putney, R. L. Gove, L. B. Wright. Committee in Library and Reading Room, Story, Pratt and Putney. On Finance, Gove, Wright and Lawrence. On Lectures, A. Tyler, Butterfield and Frame. Committee on Solicitation, Pratt, A. Tyler and Lawrence. The association died, and the village has no public library.

A certain Thursday in October, 1865, was a great day for Waukesha. A public dinner was spread for all the soldiers in Waukesha County and vicinity, at which 4,000 people were in attendance. Speeches were made by A. W. Randall, Isaac Lain, C. C. White and J. A. Williams.

The first stone dwelling was built by Lyman Goodnow for W. P. Sloan, attorney, on Main street.

The "Forty Thieves," dubbed for short, after a time, the "Forties," was an imaginary organization of the leading Democrats of Waukesha. How the name arose is not precisely known, but it was common as long as W. A. Barstow, A. F. Pratt and their friends were alive.

The first Fourth of July celebration of any note was held in the half-finished Prairieville academy building in 1840. It cost $30. Speeches were made by Rev. O. F. Curtis and W. T. Bidwell.

The Echo was a mysterious little newspaper, said to have been printed "under the bridge" in an early day. It gave the local politicians a thorough hetcheling.

Rev. Stephen Peet probably preached the first sermon in the village, or where the village now stands.

In early days, Prairieville was famous as the headquarters for fun of all kinds. The equal of those who gathered here will probably never be found. The leader in all "sells," fun, practical jokes and hilarity was "Aleck" Randall, as everybody called him, even after he became Governor and Postmaster General. His companions were Harrison Ward, Charles R. Dakin, Andrew E. Elmore., E. M. Randall, William A. and Samuel H. Barstow, A. F. Pratt and a few others. Where two or three of these gathered together, not the Lord but the "Old Nick" was in the midst of them; and for many years, whenever any trick was played upon anyone, or any monstrous practical joke was perpetrated, it was always charged to "Aleck" Randall and his friends. They have thought of things that never were dreamed of before, and there is not a judge, justice, prominent official or public man living in Waukesha County, who was in public life during their time, who has not been the victim of some extraordinary trick or joke. No occasion was too great and no business too important to be forgotten instantly if an opportunity for a "sell" presented itself. The days of Randall and Barstow will never be forgotten in Waukesha.

The first saloon was opened by Mrs. B. S. McMillan; or rather the first liquor was sold by her, in 1835. The Indians had liquor from Jancau's trading post before that date.

The village is lighted by kerosene oil lamps on all the main streets. The attempt to secure the erection of gasworks ended, as it began, in talk. The lamps were put up in 1877.

The principal materials used for sidewalks in Waukesha Village are limestone. They were the pride of the village in an early day, and those laid thirty-five years ago are as good as those laid as many days ago. On account of their roughness, walks are now being laid of planks instead of Waukesha limestone. The stone walks are considerably over thirty miles in length. The first sidewalk in Waukesha was built from Austin Waite's mearmarket to George C. Pratt's residence. The second was laid around Morris D. Cutler's park. Richard Walker did the work.

In 1839 and '40, David Jackson's house and the Prairieville House were supplied, through hand-bored pump-logs, with mineral water from the Silurian and S. A. Randles' springs.

The first railway depot was built in 1850. Cars came to Waukesha from Milwaukee in February 1851.

Lyman Goodnow was the first Collector, the tax being one imposed to pay the school teacher. One man refused to pay, and the Collector took corn enough for the tax, and paid the cash—about $4—out of his own pocket.

Nathan Walton was the first Constable, and J. Manderville the first Justice of the Peace.

Richard Dunbar discovered the virtues of Waukesha mineral water in 1868.

The stone quarry was opened by Lyman Goodnow in the spring of 1840.

The first authorized election was held at the Prairieville House, in 1839.

Morris D. Cutler's was the first ferry boat in the Fox River at Waukesha. He had 10 cents for his first fee.

The first public speech was probably made by John Moon Wells in reference to a bridge across the Fox River.

At the first charter election, held at the Court House in June, 1852, 252 votes were polled.

The first village platting was done for Morris D. Cutler, by George S. West, of Cleveland, in the fall of 1835. In the summer of 1836, Martin Field platted a tract for David Jackson, which was never recorded.

The regular village plat was laid out by Daniel Wells, Jr., in 1842, and recorded at Milwaukee January 10, 1842.

One of the remarkable characters of the present time is S. B. Needham, a shoemaker, who preaches "pure Bible doctrines" to assembled crowds on the streets and in public halls. He also circulates thousands of tracts, the matter for which he writes and has printed at his own expense. He has educated himself while working at the bench where he evolves all his sermons, lectures and tracts.

CITY OF OCONOMOWOC.

THE NAME.

Before entering upon a history or description of Oconomowoc and surroundings, it will doubtless be well to give those translations of the word which are usually accepted as being correct. That there should be a difference of opinion existing among the oldest settlers, regarding the meaning of the term, does not seem singular when considering that the aboriginals themselves have gone not only, but very much else that was intimately connected with the lives of the pioneers is also gone; buried in an oblivion from which there is no resurrection through the memory of man.

The untutored savages that once called these lovely scenes their own, when nature reigned supreme, have disappeared, and with them all absolute certainty as to the meaning of their names; yet the very mystery that invests them possesses for their successors an inexpressible charm. They cling to the lakes and streams they loved, like an invisible presence, and carry us back by fancy and association, to an unsubdued wilderness, savage beasts, and perhaps more savage men. These Indian names are all that are left to us of nature in her virgin state and man in a primitive condition. They reflect the image of the past; the conceptions of such minds as "see God in the clouds and hear Him in the wind."

Tourists and visitors are usually informed, by the regular residents here, that Oconomowoc, spelled as above, signifies "the place of the beaver," as when the whites first came here the evidence of beaver work abounded here, although not so extensively as in many other localities in the State; and it has also been asserted that this is a literal translation of the word as given by the Indians themselves. However, the story of Mr. Charles B. Sheldon, the first settler, who enjoyed the earliest and probably best opportunities for learning the exact truth regarding this name, is entirely at variance with the usually received interpretation.

He says that when he first came here he became very well acquainted with a man by the name of John Dority, either white or half-breed, who had married a squaw, with whom he lived as one of the band of Whirling Thunder, a Winnebago chief. This man Dority, who understood the Indian as well as the English language, told Mr. Sheldon that Oconomowoc, pronounced as here spelled, meant "the River of Lakes," and when one observes the manner in which the lakes in this vicinity are united by Oconomowoc River, that version seems quite reasonable. It is not the purpose of this work to do away with old and generally received opinions, or to set up new ones merely for the purpose of acquiring notoriety; but there is undoubtedly as good if not better grounds for this latter than for the former definition. Another story is to the effect that the name signifies "beautiful waters." Though this opinion is well founded in so far as the waters are concerned, yet the term smacks of other "beautiful waters," and seems to be more appropriately the creation of a certain poet's fancy than that of the "poor Indian's." A rather amusing story prevails (probably the invention of some frontier story-teller) to the effect that a white man once came across an Indian who was just on the point of shooting a coon; the shot was fired, and down came the corn poacher. The Indian thereupon threw up his hands and cried, "O, cooney, no mo' walk!" The great number of "literal translations" given by various parties of the term originally applied to this locality by the Indians shows that some of them, at least, must be inventions. What Oconomowoc means, the Indians themselves cannot tell; but Vieau, who has been in Milwaukee and Waukesha Counties about three-score years, says "Cou-no-mo-wauk" means "water-fall," or place where the river falls. The term seems to have been a Winnebago corruption, wauk meaning river or moving water, e. g., Manitou-wauk (now Manitowoc), Bad Spirit River.

The question will be left unsettled, the best authority apparently being Vieau, who, although not a full aborigine, is practically a Pottawatomie.

VILLAGE AND CITY GOVERNMENT.

The first village charter was granted and published in chapter 231 of the laws of Wisconsin for 1865—an act to incorporate the village of Oconomowoc, approved March 28, 1865.

This charter includes in its grant and provisions the east fractional half of Section 32, and the west fractional three-fourths of Section 33, of the Town of Oconomowoc; and the northwest fractional fourth of Section 4, of the Town of Summit; containing in all about 900 acres; but, owing to the position of La Belle and Fowler Lakes, which encroached upon a large portion of the village grant, there was only a little more than 700 acres of land that could be used for building and farming purposes. Of this amount, at that time, about 390 acres were used as farming lands, leaving of land occupied by buildings, or in building lots, only a little more than 300 acres.

Prior to securing this village charter, for several years, there had been a constantly increasing demand, among the inhabitants of the village, for a village government separate from the town, which was at last realized in this charter, to a somewhat limited extent. The chief reason urged by the people for the change was the necessity of better streets and sidewalks, which were then, and had been since the first settlement, in a sad condition, for a place possessing such fine natural advantages for good walks and roads. The town authorities had not sufficient power to compel lot-owners to grade and construct such sidewalks as were needed; besides, the law allowed an appropriation of but 25 per cent of the highway tax, which could not exceed 7 mills on the $1, assessed value, a sum entirely inadequate to maintain and improve the condition of the streets, in conformity with the public demands and growth of the village.

This tax was payable at the discretion of the tax-payer, either in labor or money, a condition maintained by the first, second, fourth or last charter.

This charter granted such distinct and special powers as are usually extended to village corporations, as the provision of special ordinances for various purposes, and elections of officers, in whom were vested the management of its fiscal, prudential and municipal concerns. These officials were one President and five Trustees, and a Police Justice, elected by the people. The Clerk, Treasurer, Street Commissioner, and one Constable, who was also ex officio Marshal, were appointed. The village was thoroughly empowered and independent of the town in the election of the Trustees, in the establishing of ordinances, and in the raising of funds by tax to improve their thoroughfares; yet they were connected with the town in town government, in the election of town, county and State officers, and in all the various general details pertaining to town affairs, the same as they were before getting a charter.

The town meetings, as well as village meetings, were convened in the village for the purpose of elections and other public objects, for two years subsequent to the granting of the charter, without any particular allusion having been made to any project for building a town hall; yet it appears that such a desideratum had been contemplated by the more ambitious of the villagers, and, as a result, in the spring of 1867, at the annual town meeting, without previous notice having been given to the voters, of the order of business, as by law provided, a motion was made in the afternoon, by one of the prominent politicians and leaders, to raise $3,000, for the purpose of building a town hall in Oconomowoc Village. There being but few of the tax-payers present, and those seemingly by pre-arrangement from the village, as a consequence the motion was carried.

A few of those who were present at the vote, thinking that the proceeding was not legal (as appears in Section 25 of the Revised Statutes of 1858), and supposing that no attempt would be made to collect the money, said but little, although opposed to the measure; so the whole transaction was almost entirely ignored. But this indifference vanished when the time came for paying taxes in the latter part of December following. Then, the tax being unusually large, an inquiry was made, and it was discovered that the Town Clerk had calculated the $3,000 Town Hall tax, which was being collected. The people at large were terribly incensed at this, and a meeting was immediately called, and attended by a majority of the tax-payers of the town, who nearly unanimously resolved to employ counsel and resist the collection of that part of the tax. This was done, but not until a considerable portion of the tax had been collected; yet the injunction had the effect to delay any further collection until the Legislature of the State had time, on a large petition of the tax-payers, to pass an act submitting the question to the voters whether the money which had been collected for the Town Hall should be refunded or not. This, of course, occasioned considerable trouble and expense; however, the extra tax collected was calculated, and all who had paid received their money back. As a result of the whole proceeding, a breach of such magnitude was created between the town and village that nothing less than a total separation would suffice. On the one hand, a portion of the villagers were persistent for the hall, while the town population were equally determined against it, as, the village being on the extreme edge of the town, it only would be benefited, it was thought, while the town people would have to pay the same and yet not have the hall centrally located. Consequently the villagers decided to become entirely separated from the town, and thereupon a new charter was drawn up for that purpose and submitted to the Legislature in 1869. Then another difficulty arose: The town of Summit opposed letting that part of the village which was in Summit be included in the new charter, and in order to get the bill through (Chapter 327 of Private and Local Laws, that territory had to be detached, to the great chagrin of the villagers residing in that town. Subsequently an independent village called "Summitville" was established and incorporated under Chapter 70, R. S., and General Laws of the State, with more territory added in Summit. Although this new phase of affairs was very well, so far as Oconomowoc was concerned, yet Summitville was not satisfied; having to go three miles to the Town Hall in Summit to vote was a great annoyance and seemed entirely uncalled for; besides, Summitville, under the new regime, was in such a shape that she could not keep pace with her big sister, Oconomowoc. Then to re-unite the two villages again became the question of the day, and every means was suggested and tried that could be thought of, to bring about this result, but without avail. While the subject of annexation was yet being discussed, pro and con, the constitution of the State was amended, placing that hoped-for consummation further out of the power of the people than before, as will be seen in Section 31, and 32, amending Article 4 of the Constitution, viz.: The Legislature, among other things, is prohibited from enacting any special or private laws for incorporating any town or village, or to amend the charter thereof, and for granting corporate powers and privileges except to cities. This put an entirely different aspect on the affair, but not more favorable. By this time, the people of Summit, having become thoroughly satisfied of the justice of the demands of Summitville, gave a reluctant consent to let that part of their town be separated from them, and united with the village of Oconomowoc as before. But, as the two sections could not be united by a village charter, the only alternative now left was to petition for a city charter. This was at once done; an almost unanimous appeal being sent to the Legislature. As a result, a new charter was granted, organizing a city government under Chapter 59, of the laws of Wisconsin for 1875. Previous to this time, it will be remembered, the highway tax was paid either in labor or money, at the option of the tax-payer. But by virtue of this charter the highway tax in the village, was to be paid in money only. The corporate limits were extended to include the whole of Section 32, and the west three-quarters of Section 33 of Oconomowoc and the west three-quarters of the north half of Section 4, and the north half of Section 5, of the town of Summit; being in all about 1752 acres, but only about 1472 acres of this grant was fit for use.

This territory was divided by said charter into three wards, of as nearly equal dimensions and population as convenient. The officers of the City were a Mayor, a Clerk, Treasurer, and one Assessor, who were elected at large in the city; one Justice of the Peace, one Constable and three Aldermen were to be elected from each ward; the Street Commissioner and Marshal were elected by the Common Council, who were composed of the Mayor and aldermen of the different wards. Previous to the grant of the city charter, School District Number 3, the largest part of which is composed of the south part of the city, the balance being parts of the towns of Oconomowoc and Summit, and part of District Number 10, which is composed of the north part of the city and a small portion of the town of Oconomowoc, were governed by the general laws of the State. But an attempt was made, by provision of said charter, to re-organize and unite these two districts, they to be governed by what was known and called the Oconomowoc City School Board. This board was composed of the Director and Treasurer of District Number, 3 and the Director of District Number 10, together with two representatives, to be appointed by the Council. A City Superintendent was to be appointed by the above board, in conjunction with the Mayor, he becoming a member of the Board, having exclusive authority over the city schools, in place of County Superintendent.

By virtue of special provision, this joint district was to be exempt from electing a County Superintendent, and was therefore not subject to the office (contrary to Chapter 179, of the general laws of 1861, creating the office of County Superintendent of Schools). One of the objects had in view, in making this school arrangement, was the erection of a large high school building, and provisions were made in the charter for raising funds for this purpose; but they were not acted upon.

The school system, as here inaugurated, proved to be entirely too complicated for efficient work, so much so, indeed, that a general dissatisfaction soon prevailed; one wanted one thing, and another, another, while the officials scarcely knew what they ought or ought not, or what they could or could not, legally do, in many cases, in the premises. After much discussion, in private as well as public circles, and through the press, in trying to untangle the skein, which seemed in consequence to become only the more knotted,—they were finally obliged, in order to stop the dissention and bickering, and secure peace, to appeal to the Legislature for a repeal of that part of the charter authorizing the system (Chapter 53 of law of 1877). The schools were conducted on this plan for two years—probably as unsatisfactory years as any in the history of the city schools. There were too many conflicting elements and interests at work; and as a rule attempts to interest outsiders in city improvements proves futile. Nearly all of the town people wanted to withdraw from the first, and they, in conjunction with some of the city people, kept up a constant fight until they accomplished their object. After the Legislature had abolished the school law in the charter, the city affairs went on for the next four years without any great dissension, but not satisfactorily. The draft of the charter being imperfect, considerable unnecessary trouble was caused in conducting the city government. The wording of the charter was ambiguous, and repetitions frequently occurred; besides, some of the provisions made were contrary to the laws and constitution of the State, and in fact, the general difficulties presented were such, especially in collecting the highway tax, that at last a committee was appointed by the City Council, to meet in the town Clerk's office, and give the city charter a thorough examination, and report upon the propriety of having it revised and amended. The committee—Horace Kellogg, D. G. Munger and C. B. Johnson—as directed, made the examination, and reported that the charter certainly ought to be altered. A meeting of the citizens was then called, and various propositions discussed and voted upon, relating to a remodeled and improved charter. They finally resolved that the charter should be revised and condensed, but remain the same in all general features, with the exception of two amendments, one providing that the Marshal, Constable and two Justices, should be elected by the people hereafter instead of being appointed by the Council, and the other, that the highway tax should again be paid in money or labor at the option of the tax-payers. R. C. Hathaway, the Town Clerk at that time, was authorized to draw up the new charter, which he did, employing the greatest brevity, without repetition, consistent with a clear expression of the various provisions and details. All matters provided for by the general laws were left out, leaving those laws for guidance. As a result of this plan, when the new charter was completed it was nearly one-half smaller than its predecessor, and, while it embraced all of the salient points; was much clearer, and more definite and methodical in manner. It was then submitted to the Council, by the committee; who immediately adopted a resolution, asking the Legislature to make it a law. The charter was sent to Madison at once, and Mr. Hathaway was employed to go out and see it through; it passed in due form and is known as Chapter 239, of the Laws of Wisconsin for the year 1879; according to this chapter, one Mayor, Clerk, Assessor, Treasurer, one Marshal, one Constable, and two Justices are elected at large in the city, and one Supervisor and three Aldermen from each ward. All of these hold office for one year, with the exception of the Justices and Aldermen. The former are elected for two years, the latter for three years, one being elected each consecutive year. The Common Council (of Aldermen and Mayor) on the first Tuesday of April, after the city election, appoint a President of their body.

The first charter election of the village of Oconomowoc was held in the store of C. Y. Read, Esq., on the 22d day of April, A. D., 1865, at which the following officers were duly elected: William Thompson, President; I. C. Stratton, A. B. Hall, C. M. Hartwell, Trustees, and J. R. Carpenter, Esq., Police Justice.

The first meeting of the Board of Trustees of the village was held on the 26th of April, 1865, at which time David Brokaw was appointed Village Clerk; Alfred Harden, Street Commissioner, and J. W. Place, Constable.

The second village election was held on April 9, 1866, at the village hall, the following officers being elected: Edwin Hurlbut, President; Cyrenus Munger, C. M. Hartwell, Charles Hubbard and Walter Dibble, Trustees; and Samuel March, Police Justice.

At the next charter election, held in April, 1867, D. H. Rockwell was elected President; C. M. Hartwell, Frederick Bender, William Wentworth, Lyman Kellogg and Delos Hale were elected Trustees, and C. M. Smith, Esq., Police Justice.

At the fourth annual village election, held on April 13, 1868, the following officers were elected: President, Dr. J. A. Henshall; Trustees, George W. Fay, Lyman Kellogg, Jacob Weltner, Samuel March and L. A. Rowell; Police Justice, C. M. Smith, Esq.

At the fifth annual election, held in April, 1869, the following officers were elected: President, J. A. Henshall; Trustees for one year, Orville Hathaway, Jacob Weltner; for two years, Cyrenus Munger and J. M. Brown; Justices of the Peace, C. M. Smith and R. C. Hathaway; Assessor, John McPherson; Treasurer, D. H. McArthur; Village Clerk, J. R. Carpenter; Marshal, Henry Ludington.

The following year of 1870, the village officers were elected as follows: President, William Thompson; Trustees, Copeland Townsend and H. F. Lyke; Village Clerk, Joel R. Carpenter; Assessor, R. C. Hathaway; Treasurer, H. G. Jones; Marshal, Henry Ludington.

In the year 1871, the officers of the village were as follows: President, Orville Hathaway; Trustees, J. A. Henshall, J. L. Hastings, B. M. Woodruff, H. K. Edgerton, Edwin Hurlbut and Lawrence Rinney; Clerk, R. C. Hathaway; Assessor, C. M. Smith; Treasurer, H. G. Jones; Marshal, Henry Ludington; Justices of the Peace, C. M. Smith and W. J. Brown.

At the charter election of 1872, the elected officers were as follows: President, William Thompson; Clerk, J. R. Carpenter; Treasurer, H. G. Jones; Assessor, D. R. Thompson; Marshal, E. Thayer; Trustees, J. C. Starkweather, C. B. Johnson and Gabriel Erricson.

In the year 1873, the officers of the village were as follows: President, Lyman Kellogg; Trustees, Ole Halverson, Job B. Mills, E. D. Parsons; Clerk, J. R. Carpenter; Treasurer, H. G. Jones; Assessor, D. R. Thompson; Marshal, Henry Ludington; Justices, D. R. Thompson and J. R. Carpenter.

In the spring of 1874, at the last election held under the village charter, the following officers were elected: President, Lyman Kellogg; Trustees, J. C. Starkweather, H. K. Edgerton, Lawrence Kinney; Treasurer, H. G. Jones; Assessor, D. H. McArthur; Clerk, J. B. Carpenter; Marshal, H. Ludington. It was at this election that the ordinance duly adopted by the President and Trustees of the village of Oconomowoc, entitled "An Ordinance providing for the annexation of the village of Summitville to the village of Oconomowoc, was submitted to the voters of the last-named village and adopted by a vote of 151 votes "For," and eighty-two votes "against union ordinance."

First city election April 6, 1875—W. W. Collins, Mayor; J. R. Carpenter, Clerk; H. G. Jones, Treasurer; C. M. Smith, Assessor.

1876—Martin T. Draper, Mayor; Lloyd C. Babcock, Clerk; H. G. Jones, Treasurer; C. M. Smith, Assessor.

1877—Martin T. Draper, Mayor; R. C. Hathaway, Clerk; H. G. Jones Treasurer; D. H. McArthur, Assessor.

1878—W. W. Collins, Mayor; R. C. Hathaway, Clerk; H. G. Jones, Treasurer; William Thompson, Assessor.

1879—A. J. Rockwell, Mayor ; R. C. Hathaway, Clerk ; E. E. Ely, Treasurer ; William Thompson, Assessor.

1880—Martin T. Draper, Mayor ; E. D. R. Thompson, Clerk ; H. G. Jones, Treasurer ; George L. Kern, Assessor.

PAST CONDITION AND GENERAL GROWTH.

Although very many incidents that were intimately connected with the early history of Oconomowoc Village and surroundings are irretrievably lost—forgotten, never to be recalled—that would have contributed largely to the interest of this work, yet enough facts are preserved in vivid recollections and reminiscences among the few early settlers who yet remain, to give a faithful reflex of its early condition and growth, and of the enterprise and achievements of the pioneers, as well as of later comers.

The first actual claimant to the first village property was H. W. Blanchard, who entered the west half of Section 33, Township 8, Range 17, in April, 1837, and on the 1st of May, sold to Philo Brewer, who, in September of this year, erected the first house or cabin ever built in Oconomowoc. It was made of logs, with shake roof, and stood on the lot now owned by the widow of J. S. Rockwell, a little west of the present residence.

At that time there were no streets or roads—only the Indian trails leading from point to point. Mr. Sheldon, the oldest as well as first inhabitant, says that these trails formed a junction at about where the old La Belle House stood, on the northeast corner of Main and Milwaukee streets, diverging from that point about as those streets now do. Very much of the land that is now occupied for business purposes and dwellings, was then a tamarack and ash swamp. From the point where Zion Church stands, across to a point a very little south of the Townsend House, a line might be drawn ; from this line south, where a beautiful sheet of water now lies, was all swamp, and from this swamp a slough extended south across Milwaukee street, back of the Summit Bank property, and the whole scene in this vicinity then gave but little promise of its present development. Soon after Mr. Brewer built, A. W. Hatch and J. S. Rockwell came here and bought a two-thirds interest in Mr. Brewer's property, and, in conjunction with him, set men at work building a mill-dam across the Oconomowoc River, where the wire bridge now is. The mill (a saw-mill) is said to have been located a little west of the dam on or near the banks of La Belle Lake. The work was continued through the winter of 1837-38, and in the spring it was completed, so that as soon as the mill was done, business could be commenced. But just at this juncture a most unfortunate disaster occurred. With the breaking-up of winter, and the melting of snow and ice, came a freshet, and the dam, which had not been very substantially built, gave way, putting matters hors du combat. The only thing to do then was to fill up the gap, which was immediately done, only to have it swept away again in July. However, the proprietors were not to be discouraged by this misfortune, but at once rebuilt in a more substantial manner. In the mean-time, while the dam was being so constructed, an addition was built to the saw-mill, to be used as a grist-mill. Mr. Jesse Edsall, and his father-in-law, Mr. Noble, came on in August of this year to fit up and run the grist-mill. While they were on the trail, going through the woods, they got lost, and finally, quite late in the evening, came upon the cabin of Mr. Sheldon, and asked for supper and lodging, stating that they were trying to find Oconomowoc Village, having been employed to go there to attend to the new grist-mill. They were kindly cared for, and the next morning saw them on the scene of their future operations. Curtis Brown was employed to go with a team and bring on the grinding apparatus, and within a short time thereafter, to the great satisfaction of the settlers, the mill was in operation. About this time a turning-lathe was also added.

In 1839 or 1840, John Heath was placed in charge, having a Mr. Palmer as assistant. In 1840, Mr. Brewer sold his interest in the mill property and village site to G. A. Foster. In the summer of 1841, the water undermined the dam, which was located on a yielding, marshy soil, and swept the whole institution away, dam, mills and all. So ended the first mill enterprise. Nothing was done toward reconstruction until the following spring, when a Mr.

Anderson was employed to build a dam where the present dam is, he guaranteeing the work for five years. During this season, 1842, a new saw-mill was built also, and by autumn was ready for work.

The second house in the village was the Worthington cabin, a small affair, built by Mr. Edsall in 1839. Here he and family afterward lived until Mr. Worthington purchased it. This was the first family that settled in Oconomowoc Village. This year brought quite an accession to the village population. William Quigley came and built a small plank house on the lot now occupied by the Summit Bank, and Day Dewy and John Ferry erected the first frame house on the lot recently owned by Clark Hartwell, and just south of the house now owned by Harold Peck.

George W. Pugh, George Brooks and Charles Wilson settled here this season, also. During the ensuing winter, George Brooks built a house, Charles C. Wilson doing the carpenter work, such as was to be done; and in the spring, or early part of the summer, of 1840, Mr. Brooks moved in and opened the first tavern. This stood on the lot now owned by Mrs. Bruce. In 1840, Wilson built another house, the red house that stood on a part of the present Seminary grounds, and which W. W. Collins occupied for several years.

During 1840, or 1841, J. Dougherty, Day Dewy and Mr. Barton, three bachelors, began a manufacturing enterprise, in the shape of a chair-factory and cabinet-shop, there being a demand among the new-comers for furniture. The work done here was certainly good, for many of the oldest settlers have chairs and other articles of furniture, which they are now using, that were made at this factory. The business was discontinued after a few years, as it did not pay.

In 1840 or 1841, A. Rowe built the house now owned and occupied by H. M. Peters. This is said to be the oldest building in the city. Mr. Rowe soon after started his blacksmith-shop on the lot where the Town Hall now stands. It was used for a blacksmith-shop until 1851.

In 1840, the first child was born in the village, Eliza J. Dewy, daughter of D. Dewy and wife. She was born in the first frame house built in the place, January 17, 1840. The following year, January 16, 1841, Charles H. Ferry, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Ferry, was born. He was the first male child born in the village.

In the month of March, 1841, the first death was announced to the little community, and many there were who sincerely lamented the sad occasion, for in this death the village lost an esteemed lady, Mrs. G. A. Foster. She was buried near where Zion Church now stands, but was afterward removed to Nashotah Cemetery. Mr. G. A. Foster died a few years later and was interred in the same cemetery.

In the Winter of 1842, J. S. Rockwell, in conjunction with E. P. Cotton, made arrangements to build a new grist-mill, which was begun in the spring, and finished in 1843. The lumber and site were furnished by J. S. Rockwell, and Cotton furnished the machinery and attended to the labor. This mill was known as the "old red mill," and stood on the banks of La Belle Lake, nearly opposite Draper Hall. A. B. Hall and I. C. Stratton were among the principal carpenters employed on the work.

The chief difficulty experienced in those days when building, was in getting enough hands to do the raising. But, although they entertained apprehensions on that score, they were set at rest on the day of the raising, for the people were only too glad to help to get a mill up, and came in from far and wide, until there was no lack of help. It may be remarked here that at that time "help one another," was the rule, for in no other way could they get along.

An account of a Fourth of July celebration that came off in 1843, will not come amiss here, as it aptly illustrates the spirit that actuated the people then, when a celebration was more a matter of patriotism than parade, and less a matter of business than recreation (features connected with our national anniversary fete that are not now the same). The story as related in the Free Press, is given with a few interpolations:

It occurred in July, 1843, quite a number of families having by that time settled in and around Oconomowoc. Emulous P. Cotton was President of the day; Elder Wheelock was Chaplain; Jonathan Dougherty was the Orator; George W. Pugh was Marshal; Chauncey C.

Ludden was to read the Declaration of Independence, but he got mad about something and at the last refused to do so. Upon that John Barton was appointed, and, according to some accounts, read it. There was also a fine band of martial music. John Ferry was fifer, Chauncey Osborn tenor drum, and Conrad Osborn base drum. The committee on toasts were John Metcalf and David Findley. There were no short-hand newspapers reporters present, or we might now have been in possession of detailed reports of the oration and toasts. The dinner was a picnic one, prepared by the ladies, and the tables were set on the bank of the lake near where Mr. Peck's new house now stands, and in the afternoon a large party of Indians, who were encamped at the foot of the lake, came up to see the pale-faces' "pow-wow." At that time the Indians infested the country here largely, and continued to do so for a few years. They were ordinarily peaceful when not squibbe (drunk), and were great beggars.

Some time in 1842 or 1843, the mill property interest of Hatch Foster is said to have been purchased by J. S. Rockwell, or his father-in-law, a Mr. Hard. During the summer of this year, J. S. Rockwell began building a hotel opposite to where the seminary building now stands. It was finished this year, and in 1844 opened by Charles Chaffe. From him it passed into the hands of a Mr. Willie, who kept it for a short time, when Mr. Charles C. Wilson became permanent manager. This hotel was for a long time the only one in the village worth mentioning, and in the person of Mr. Wilson was presided over by a jolly and popular landlord, who was remarkable for two qualities. He was a great story-teller, and yet had such a bad memory as to business matters that he could not remember any debts he owed. He used to say that "when he died he wanted to be buried near the bank of the lake, so that he could hear the loons screaming in the spring." His wish was gratified as to the place of his burial, but whether he heard the loons has not yet been ascertained. He died in 1858. He was a kind, good-natured man, and his death was much regretted. Many a story is told of the sports indulged in by the bachelors who made this place their chief rendezvous during his time. He was succeeded by A. R. Moore, who kept the hotel during the latter years of its existence. It was finally burned.

In 1844, George W. Fay and W. W. Collins opened a store, an event of considerable importance, as it supplied a want long felt, and relieved the inhabitants from the necessity of going to Summit, the rival town, for the many things they were constantly needing. Although this may be regarded as the first regular store, yet Mr. Rockwell had brought in a few articles some time before, that were kept at his house, which was very early used as a sort of boarding-house and hotel, Deacon Goodell being the landlord.

The store of Fay & Collins was kept in a frame building on the lot where Mr. F. Peck, of Chicago, is now building a summer residence. The stock of merchandise was general, including drugs and liquor for medicinal use, or otherwise. There being no "internal revenue" then, the best of brandy sold at $2.50, and whisky as low as 25 cents per gallon. That which preponderated in their stock, according to the best authorities, singular to relate, was crockery. "Big mug et little mug" being hung up conspicuously around the room. The firm continued in this place until 1849 or 1850.

Loan Saxe & Co. came in 1845 and rented a little building owned by Mr. Beaman, who had it fitted up for them as best he could. They brought in a pretty fair stock of goods, said to have been in part the residue of an old establishment in the East. Although Loan Saxe was the figure-head of the company, yet his partner Samuel March was the moneyed man. About a year and a half after this store was opened, J. Dougherty, who had put up a small building where the north end of Draper Hall now is, got a young man by the name of Packard to come in with a stock of goods, he thinking at the time that they might possibly run out Loan Saxe & Co. So at that early day, competition and strife had already begun.

Packard was an auctioneer from New York; and his uncle, a Mr. Ranney, of Racine, furnished him with goods. There was a large quantity, but mostly old, shop-worn stuff. C. Eastman hauled them from Racine. This firm lasted not more than a year or two, as, the young man not paying, his worthy uncle shut up the shop.

In 1846, Saxe & Co. put up a new building near the site of the old one. This they occupied for a few years, then moved it to where it now stands, on Main street, where they kept a store until Saxe's death, and after which Samuel March perpetuated the institution for a few years. This store is now known as the red front.

After Saxe & Co. had moved into their new building, in 1846 or 1847, Mr. Beaman stocked up the shop with dry goods and books. He was not here long before he traded with a man at Monterey for a mill privilege.

After Packard and Dougherty were closed out, Capt. Parsons started the first regular grocery at the same place.

Soon after coming to Oconomowoc, George W. Fay, a man of considerable enterprise and influence, proposed to the citizens of the place that they should go at it and improve Main street, as it was in a miserable condition, being so low in front of where the present mill stands, that the going was often very bad. A subscription was taken and $300 raised, for which sum Mr. Pugh graded the street from Draper Hall nearly to Johnson's harness-shop. After that, a Norwegian was employed to grade on from Draper Hall to the old mill, several parties pledging themselves to Mr. Fay to pay, but at the end not doing so, probably for want of money. Mr. Fay also at one time employed a large number of men to clear land, who came from far and near, glad to work for 50 cents per diem, store pay, to get food.

About 1845, the first village plat was surveyed, and extended from north line of Section 33, to about where Johnson's harness-shop now is, Main street being laid out very crookedly, to accommodate the lay of the land on either side. A number of lots were bought and buildings erected by this plat, but Mr. Rockwell, being satisfied, that it would be to the future advantage of the entire community to have the road laid out straight, secured an act of the Legislature vacating this plat. A new plat was laid out by J. S. and L. R. Rockwell and D. M. Hard, and surveyed by J. A. Farnham in January, 1848. This plat straightened the street and changed the boundaries of several of the lots, and extended from north to south line of Section 33; it was recorded in the spring of 1849; there was some difficulty experienced in fixing the new boundaries, one man in particular, a shoemaker by the name of Daniels, making a good deal of trouble. Sometime during this season several of the prominent citizens met, and by common consent agreed that Main street should be widened eight feet, the plat allowing only fifty feet. This arrangement brought the boundary line of the road directly up to Daniels' dwelling house, and necessitated the moving of his fence; this he refused to do. Very soon after, upon getting up one morning, he discovered his fence had been moved to the back of the house, near La Belle Lake. Seeing that he would only have trouble, if he refused to comply with the wishes of his neighbors, he yielded.

The old barracks, so called from being a huge three-story shell, were built about 1845, and figured quite generally in the history of the settlement for years, as blacksmith-shop, carpenter shop, tenement house, schoolhouse, and, it may be added, hospital. Here the first fire occurred; there having been some sort of a meeting in the evening, it was discovered, after the folks left, to be on fire in the second story. Water was brought and the fire drowned out, as were the family that occupied the lower story. H. McCoy, the builder, fled the country many years ago, under the suspicion of having been a counterfeiter and general rogue. The barracks stood a little north of the present mill. It is now used as a cooper-shop by George Stephens.

In 1847, the people here began to be afflicted with that miserable disease, fever and ague. It continued for the next three or four years, and became so prevalent that at times there were scarcely any more well ones than were needed to care for the sick. The old barracks then came into play as hospital, for nearly all living in it were shaking and had to be nursed. There was but one physician living in the village then, unless mention be made of William Quigley, who could give a dose of physic or prescribe a sweat.

During the constitutional campaign of 1846 a mass meeting was held here, and A. D. Smith, since Judge of the Supreme Court, and Curtis Reed, were opposing speakers. The town was in a perfect furor, and half of the men in it were either tight or getting so as fast as they could. Smith stood in a wagon in such a breezy condition that he had to be held up while he denounced Reed to a crowd of men, who were cheering him, while the man who held Smith up kept saying, "'Ear 'im! 'ear 'im!" On the other hand, Reed was entertaining a crowd by pouring forth his eloquence against all dissenters to his doctrine, and especially emptying the vials of invective upon the head of the devoted Smith—this being the style of argument often employed at that time.

In 1849, the first brick building was erected, E. P. Cotton and Fay and Collins being the builders. It was divided into two stores, Fay and Collins moving into one-half, and E. P. Cotton and P. A. Woodruff taking the other, and putting in a new stock of goods. Fay & Collins continued for five or six years, then ceased to operate. Cotton & Woodruff continued for a short time and failed.

In 1850, R. C. Hathaway started a wagon-shop in the building vacated by Fay & Collins, continuing there for a short time. Subsequently this building was moved across the road, and was eventually purchased by Martin Draper, and converted into sleeping-rooms.

From 1849 to 1853, there was a large amount of building done in Oconomowoc. In 1850, Loan, Saxe & Co. put up the old LaBelle House, which was completed in August, and was formally opened to the public by Dyer Topliff, who, in his prime, was the prince of landlords. A grand party was given to commemorate the opening of the hotel. It was as gay a party as has ever assembled; they met together on the evening of the 11th of September, 1850. Everybody came. There were no old people in Oconomowoc then, and society had not become divided. It was the first public gathering of the kind in the place, for the reason that, previous to the building of the La Belle House, there was no building of sufficient capacity in the village to entertain a large party. That party was nearly thirty years ago. There were about 140 guests, with not a single gray-headed one among them. How would the surviving members of that party look to-day if they could assemble together again? The hotel stood on the large vacant lot on the corner of Main and Milwaukee streets, and was eventually burned.

In 1848 or 1849 the first frame schoolhouse in the village was built by subscription, on the north side of the Oconomowoc River, familiarly called, "Canada." It is still used as a schoolhouse. Isaac C. Stratton was the builder of this temple of learning.

In 1850 or 1851, the red brick building that stood where Mann's Block now is, was built by Mr. Humphrey for a hotel, and was opened as such by Mr. Janes, who was succeeded by Mr. Clock. This hotel was called the Globe. After being run for about two years it was converted into a store and dwelling-house, being occupied by the firm of P. A. Woodruff & Co. It was afterward used for various business purposes until it was torn down. At this time there was a saloon in full blast on the opposite side of Milwaukee street, one Hovey being the keeper. This was the first saloon started, and was begun about 1848 or 1849. Previous to this time the "needful" was purchased at the stores and hotels.

In 1849 or 1850, E. Murphy put up a black smith-shop, then close to the edge of Fowler Lake. This and the building next to it are two of the oldest in town, as may be readily seen by their exteriors. They are now used for barber shops and jewelry stores.

In 1850, the Watertown and Milwaukee plank-road reached Oconomowoc, and proved of great benefit to the village. One Nottingham was the originator of the scheme. When the time came for organizing the company and electing officers, the people about Oconomowoc, with J. S. Rockwell as leader, turned out en masse, ostensibly for the purpose of subscribing for stock, but really to elect the President. How well they succeeded, is well known. The fight for locating the plank road was a hard one. On the north, the people of Neosho, Stone Bank, Monterey, and other localities, were working with might and main. On the south, Summit and Delafield were exerting themselves in like manner, but without avail, for the man at the fore was one too many with his supporters, for all competitors. When the Watertown plank-road came through, the slough across Main street, east of the Summit Bank, was bridged to accommodate the road, and people began taking lots along Milwaukee street. Edwin Hurlbut subsequently circulated a subscription paper, and obtained money with which a dam was run across the slough next to Fowler Lake, to keep back the waters of the lake while the low ground was being filled in. In process of time this was done, the street becoming, in consequence, as it now appears.

No sooner had the Watertown plank-road reached the village, than the Mayville plank road project was set afoot. The Company was incorporated in 1850 or 1851, with J. S. Rockwell as President. Stock to the amount of $12,000 was sold along the route, and J. S. Rockwell invested $3,000, and some of the company at the other end of the line put in as much more ready cash. The road work was begun and completed, and did very much to open and improve the country; but it was a dead loss to the stock-holders, as it never paid a cent. John Metcalf superintended the work on this route.

About the time the plank-road was completed through to Watertown, the necessity for a railroad running through the village west, from Brookfield, on the Prairie du Chien Railroad, was being generally agitated, J. S. Rockwell being, as ever, the moving spirit in the enterprise. Very soon the discussion took material shape in the organization of the Milwaukee & Watertown Railroad Company, with Mr. Rockwell as President. This was a large undertaking, and it required a great deal of influence and sagacity to so manage the wire-pulling as to get the road through here, for this was by no means the most direct route. However, in spite of all opposition, Oconomowoc got the road, and from that time the certain growth and future prosperity of the place was insured. In the summer of 1854, a depot was constructed, it being built of red brick from Pugh's brickyard. In December following, the first engine and construction train put in an appearance, and this point became the western terminus of the road, and remained so for about a year after, the workshops being here during that time.

In May, 1879, a new depot was begun, the old one having been demolished, and by the 1st of July was completed and ready for use. The want of this depot had been long felt, especially during the summer season and fall, when the large throngs of visitors were coming and going.

There have been but few railroad accidents at this place, in all not more than five.

The building now owned and occupied by E. D. Parsons, was built in 1852, by C. M. Smith. It was originally built to provide the Masons and Sons of Temperance with a hall. J. S. Rockwell put in the first stock of goods, and called it the "Plank Road Store."

In 1853, the old oil mill of Cotton & Rockwell, was built. It was three stories high and well fitted with machinery for making linseed oil, but the sinews of war being wanting in the shape of flax-seed. The mill proved a failure and was sold, the building being converted into a dwelling-house and saloon. It finally furnished material for a fire. Cotton afterward went to Adams County.

The store of Rockwell & Randall was built about 1854. The post office was kept here for a long time after W. W. Collins relinquished it, Rockwell being Postmaster.

About 1855, the village was electrified by the report that C. Y. Reed, who not long before had come here from the East and started in business, had been robbed, his store having been entered by burglars and $1,000 or $1,500 having been taken from the safe. This being the first robbery of any consequence that had ever been perpetrated here, it created an intense excitement, and all sorts of methods of investigation were suggested. Among other things it was proposed to send for a young fellow said to be a remarkable clairvoyant. As there was not a trace left by which to track the thieves, something of this kind seemed to be the only means by which the treasure could be found. The young man was therefore sent for, and came and was mesmerized by a well-known citizen of the place. No sooner had he passed into an apparently abnormal condition, than he said a man had entered the house and taken the key to the store or safe and given it to another, who had gone into the store and taken the money, and with still another had gone some distance and concealed it in a hollow tree. The following day, the young fellow professed to identify certain highly respected citizens of the place, as the ones he had seen while mesmerized. This further development caused still greater excitement. When the young fellow was again mesmerized, he said the parties had become frightened and had moved the money, but in doing so had dropped a $2 bill. He went with others, according to his story, to this place, and lo! the money. He then said the stolen money had been sunk in a can to the bottom of the lake. The next thing was to drag the lake; but to no purpose. A detective was soon after brought from New York, who professed to find a gang of horse thieves and counterfeiters located here. Then the people became frightened, suspicious, and red-hot with anger at the imputations thrown out by the detective, who implicated some of the most prominent men in the county as being connected with the gang; however, nothing came of the whole proceeding, except hard feelings and political rancor, for the politics of the county were for awhile largely affected by these circumstances.

There was for many years a bridge over a waste weir almost directly in front of the present mill, but it was torn away a long time ago, having become a rickety old affair, and the hollow was filled in. An improved weir was introduced, and suitably covered so that no one would ever know, unless he were told, what a miserable spot on the street that place had been. During the next few years the village built up gradually, there being no very marked changes until 1859 or 1860, when the Dodge building was constructed. It was a fine three-story brick edifice, and stood on the ground occupied now by the Metcalf Block. D. W. Small furnished most of the means for putting up this building. It subsequently burned. During 1859, David W. Small erected the building now owned and used by the city for a city hall. It was built to be used for banking purposes, and during this year the Summit Bank was established. It was a stock bank and was incorporated September 1, 1859, under the State law. The stock-holders were H. K. Edgerton, J. S. Rockwell, D. W. Small, E. W. Edgerton, B. R. Hinkley and E. S. Stone. The original capital was $25,000. A robbery of the bank was attempted in 1868, but proved unsuccessful. May 1, 1869, the company relinquished its charter, as a stock bank. H. K. Edgerton then purchased the fixtures and good will of the old institution and perpetuated it as a private bank. The bank was moved from the old stand about 1870 into Fay's Block, on the southeast corner of Main and Milwaukee streets. This substantial building was erected by George W. Fay in 1869.

During 1859, Col. Birchard, probably the oldest merchant in the county, having been engaged in business here for thirty-five years, came to Oconomowoc from Waukesha and bought a bankrupt stock of goods owned by Marsh & Reed, successors to Loan, Saxe & Co., and in June of 1860 moved from the old red front into Dodge's Block. In 1869, he built his present fine store, and moved into it in 1870.

During the war, business flourished here as it never had before. Although it proved a great calamity to very many, yet the merchants often sigh for such another harvest, if it would only come without bringing with it so much misfortune. About this time, summer visitors began putting in an appearance, the first of whom, it is said, were Messrs. Coffin and Schufeldt. From that time on, the theme of greatest interest to Oconomowoc people, in all relations, has been "Oconomowoc as a summer resort;" and certainly they are justifiably proud of that distinction, for it is a beautiful place to live in, as well as being an unusually good point for nearly all kinds of business.

In 1864 or 1865, the first sidewalk was laid here. Soon after, one was laid in front of the stores on the east side of Main street. A deal of trouble was caused by this walk. Each one wanted it to fit the door step in front of his store; so at first it was up and down all along, but eventually they consented to have the grade established as it yet remains.

In 1869, Odd Fellows' Hall was built and perhaps two or three other buildings. During 1870 '71 the old Globe Hotel was torn down and Mann's splendid brick block was begun on the same ground and finished in 1872. The building comprises three stories, is built of the best Watertown brick, contains an elegant hall used for Masonic purposes, with a separate one used for theatrical performances, public assemblages and social gatherings; both located on the third floor. The second floor is divided into suits of rooms well arranged, to be used as offices or for other purposes, all of them light, airy and lofty. The first floor is used for business purposes and contains four stores, neatly arranged. One of them, a drug store, located on the corner, is a very attractive establishment. During the next few years, the business portion of this place continued to improve, and would probably have been much larger, if not more prosperous, had it not been for two or three very severe fires that destroyed a number of very valuable buildings, and a large amount of merchandise. They occurred as follows : one in 1871 ; one 1875 ; one 1879 ; all being within a period of eight years.

The vacancy caused by the fire in 1871 was soon occupied by the present block of C. M. Smith, next to the bank. After the destructive conflagration in 1875, which destroyed Dodge's Block and the La Belle House, John Metcalf soon rebuilt where the brick building stood, but not so large as before. The La Belle House lot unfortunately yet remains vacant, and presents a very bare appearance in so prominent a place in the city. It is just such a spot as one would expect to see occupied by a fine hotel, or block of business houses. The terrible, devastating fire of April 7, 1879, left, in a short time, a very large area covered with charred ruins, where, only a few hours before, life and thrift prevailed. It was the general impression on the morning following the fire, that this space in the center of the town would remain a long while unimproved. Like many similar prognostications, this one also failed of fulfillment. But a little more than a year has passed, and what a change. Substantial brick buildings now cover nearly all of the burnt district ; many of them elegant structures that would be a credit to any town in the State, and all occupied by active, energetic business men. Oconomowoc is a highly favored locality in every respect, being a place where business is good, society excellent, and, in fact, where all the chief requisites to happiness exist in prodigal abundance. That her past may be but an earnest of her future development is the acclamation of all.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND ACADEMY.

Joint District No. 3, in which was the first school in Oconomowoc, was in keeping with the condition of the place and times. There were very few scholars at first, scarcely enough to make it an object to maintain a school ; but the necessity of early education was as well understood by the pioneers as it is by those of to-day, and, although they were poor and had to struggle hard for subsistence, yet it must be noted that in this, and every community throughout the county, the schools and schoolhouses always received early attention. There is no doubt, considering their ability to do and pay, that they did as well in proportion as is done to-day in giving their children facilities for learning. Before the old "barracks" were built, the school here was kept in the log schoolhouse ; after that, the school authorities rented a room in that building, where school was taught for several years.

In 1850, there were but sixty-eight school-children in the place, thirty-six male and thirty-two female.

About this time, the necessity of putting up a respectable public school building began to be talked of ; but the matter dragged along until 1854, before anything decisive was done. During that year, the present lot was purchased, at a cost of $75, and the red-brick schoolhouse was put up. The grounds and building, when completed, were valued at $2,500. This house accommodated the school until 1866, when the number of children had so increased that more room was necessary, and the officers purchased the old Methodist Church property, paying $1,200. At about this time, it was proposed to unite the "Canada" District No. 10, with District No. 3 ; but nothing came of the project until 1875, when they were united, only to separate in 1877. At that time, the intention was to have a union high school, thereby giving the school a higher standing, and also securing the State fund appropriated for high schools, which, under the present system, cannot be obtained. The present school building was completed in January, 1877, at a cost of $7,094. The building was constructed by adding on to the old one. A great deal of difficulty was experienced by the School Board in getting it erected. A general clash of interests and opinions prevailed for a time, which not only hindered the work and made expense, but caused considerable ill-feeling to enter into the details. There was more than enough of both. The school is now conducted on the graded system, there being six departments and ten grades. This system was reached in 1879. The present course of study was adopted in the spring of 1876. There are four rooms in the new or main part, and two rooms in the old part. The teachers employed are a male principal and five female assistants. The present average attendance is a little over three hundred pupils, with excellent standing in all departments.

There have been here, as in all places of any importance, select schools, denominational and other schools. About 1868, Rev. E. J. Montague, Pastor at that time of the Congregational Church, induced the people of his church to raise and enlarge the church edifice, and put in a basement to be used for school purposes. In 1869, the work was completed, and what was called the Oconomowoc Academy was started, with D. B. Smith as Principal and Mrs. J. Z. Smith as Assistant; Rev. E. J. Montague, Teacher of Latin; F. Gebhardt, Teacher of German, and Mrs. D. Wilsey, Teacher of Music. The school opened with fifty pupils and increased to one hundred during the year. S. B. Smith, being elected Principal of the Public Schools, the academy was discontinued the next year. In 1873, the Rev. J. Allison opened the school again and kept it running for a short time, and thus ended the academy.

From school records it appears that the public school had a library before 1850, and that funds were voted, while it lasted, for the purchase of books. Until September, 1856, the library was under the control of the school clerk. At this time L. S. Warner was elected clerk. In 1858, D. Faurot was elected; and in 1859, John B. Reynold. He either resigned his charge or left before his time expired, and at the next election, in 1860, a vote was taken that the Board should take charge of the library. Whether they did or not does not appear upon the record, only reports of the clerks following show that the library regulations were not complied with, and at present there is no library to report upon.

FIRES AND FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Oconomowoc was singularly free from fires during the early period of its existence, and, in reality, even after its incorporation in 1865, no very serious fire occurred, until January 31, 1871, when a fire proceeding from the store of Lee & Watson swept away a large amount of property. The block owned by Franz Pumpf, was entirely consumed, and Lee & Watson lost everything. The post office building was partly destroyed, and the Summit Bank building, owned by G. W. Fay, was seriously damaged. R. C. Hathaway lost his library with instruments and valuable plats and field notes for surveying. Although the damage was very considerable, yet the people were not sufficiently aroused to take steps to secure protection from fires, being yet content to take further risks rather than pay out any money. But from this lethargy they were doomed soon to be rudely shaken. On April 28, 1875, a most disastrous conflagration devastated the place. At an early hour, the La Belle House, one of the oldest and most familiar land marks of the town, was discovered to be in flames. An immense crowd of people soon gathered, but were powerless to prevent the spread of the flames, and the fine three-story brick block owned by John Metcalf, standing next to the fated hotel, was soon enveloped in flames also, and the destruction of the entire business portion of Oconomowoc seemed inevitable. By a seeming dispensation of Providence, in changing the direction of the wind, and bringing a heavy rain-fall, was that terrible calamity averted. But, notwithstanding the rain, the hotel and Metcalf Block were destroyed, and an injury done the place from which it has not yet entirely recovered. On the following day, April 29, 1875, the first meeting was held and steps taken toward organizing a fire company, under the leadership of Henry Howarth. Thirty-two men enrolled themselves as charter members of the organization, and styled themselves the "Oconomowoc Hook and Ladder and Bucket Company No. 1." The names and officers elected were as follows: Henry Howarth, Captain; C. H. Osborne, First Lieutenant; D. W. Frenz, Second Lieutenant; Gardner Fulmer, President; A. C. Macrorie, Secretary, and E. D. R. Thompson, Treasurer. The regular members were James Reavely, James Jones, Frank Millard, C. W. Snere, Hans Johnson, Charles Nelson, A. W. Bright, F. W. Kinne, J. D. Reid, J. C. Stelzner, J. A. Wood, J. J. Sullivan, Joseph Scott, Stephen Hubbard, George Olson, C. C. Bowsfield, J. H. Williams, E. W. Tuttle, J. H. Lyman, R. G. Williams, Nick Henessy,

William Jones, James Fox, E. L. Palmer, George Cole, Matthew Queoehn. The company as organized with officers and men was recognized and its services accepted by the Common Council on October 2, 1875. According to provision of the charter the Council then instituted inquiries for the purchase of some sort of a fire extinguishing apparatus, and, finally, on December 18, 1875 adopted a resolution accepting a proposition made by the Babcock Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, who furnished a hook and ladder truck with appendages, and chemical engine, known as the Babcock Fire Extinguisher, for the use of the company, which upon arrival in the spring of 1876, was placed at its disposal.

The company struggled along, hardly maintaining an organization, until September 7, 1877, when, being thoroughly disgusted as well as convinced, of the inefficiency of the apparatus, it was compelled to work with, and after having in vain sent in petitions, signed by the most prominent citizens, for something better, the members called a meeting and voted to disband.

Still nothing was done until after the devastating fire of April 7, 1879, had visited the place. The fire originated in the brick store built by David Henry Rockwell, on the present site of Mr. Hugo Lorleberg's splendid hardware store, about 9 o'clock in the evening. The store was occupied by Case & Co., as a dry-goods store. The contents of the store must have been dry, for in less than fifteen minutes the roof had fallen in, and in two hours, eight business houses were in ashes. The poorly equipped fire company worked manfully, but was powerless with the "saleratus syringe" to stay the ravages of the flames, and had not an engine and company, in response to a telegram for help, come out from Milwaukee, in all probability a much larger amount of property would have been destroyed. The losses, besides the building in which the fire started, were as follows: E. C. Hartwell, frame two-story building, occupied by Daniel McArthur, as a drug-store; loss, $2,000; no insurance. Mrs. William Wagner, frame grocery store; loss, about $2,000; insured. Hugo Lorleberg, two story frame building, used as a hardware store; loss about $5,000; insured. David W. Small, two-story frame building, occupied by Mr. Johnson, as a harness and trimming shop; loss on building, $500; no insurance; stock mostly saved. Fred Wollin, restaurant and dwelling; loss, about $2,000; insured. Mr. Bloedel, frame store and dwelling; store occupied by Mr. Bloedel, as a dealer in country produce; loss, $1,500; insured. A frame building next south of Mr. Wollin, formerly owned by Thomas Honey, and occupied by James Leavitt, as a grocery store, the basement occupied by William Beeberman, as a shoe-shop. The building and Mr. Leavitt's stock were insured, but Mr. Beeberman lost nearly all he had except his family. This fire was all that was needed to induce the city fathers to purchase a steam fire engine; and on May 12, 1879, a unanimous vote was passed, accepting a proposal made by the agent of the Silsby Manufacturing Company, of Seneca Falls, N. Y., for a rotary steam fire engine, fully equipped, with 1,000 feet of hose, costing $4,500. This engine is a perfect beauty, and took the premium for engines of its class at the Centennial, and is undoubtedly one of the best, as well as handsomest in the State. On the 17th of May, 1879, the Hook and Ladder Company disbanded, and immediately re-organized under the name of "Silsby Volunteer Company No. 1," and elected officers.

Immediately after organizing, the company tendered its services to the city, which were recognized and accepted by the Council July 9, 1879.

The Silsby Volunteer Fire Company is a fine body of men, and has shown a ready willingness and proficiency at all times, either at practice or parade. They are suitably uniformed and when out in a body present a truly fine appearance. The present officers are: W. B. Fay, Foreman; George Olson, Assistant; E. D. R. Thompson, Secretary; Joseph Scott, Treasurer; Stephen Hubbard, Captain Hose Cart No. 1; B. S. Young, Assistant; Gardner Fulmer, Captain Hose Cart No. 2; R. C. Moore, Assistant. There are about forty-four members in the company.

BRASS BANDS.

The first steps toward organizing a brass band here were taken as early as 1852. A subscription list was passed around, thirty-two persons signing to the amount of $172.50, to purchase instruments. Harry P. Lester gave $25, D. H. Rockwell, $20, and W. W. Collins $15, the remainder being paid in sums of from $1 to $10, by the different contributors. The first meeting was held January 27, 1853, when a permanent organization was effected, and a constitution and by-laws were adopted. The original members were R. C. Hathaway, J. T. Woodruff, Orville Hathaway, D. H. Rockwell, James Luck, E. H. Parsons, H. P. Lester, W. W. Collins and J. M. Brown. R. C. Hathaway was elected Musical Director. From this time, the band was maintained with various changes of members until 1859, when, having become very much run down, they disbanded. In 1860, they re-organized, but continued together only for a short time. This organization was known as the "Oconomowoc Saxe Horn Band." After it ceased to operate, nothing further was done in this direction for several years, and, in the mean time, their instruments, which were purchased new at the time of organizing, were scattered and lost. Eventually, Dr. Linger proposed to some of the young men that another band should be started. The suggestion was acted upon, and a subscription taken with the understanding entered into with the subscribers, that an incorporated body should be instituted, for the purpose of mutual protection, and for purchasing and caring for the instruments. The instruments were purchased hap-hazard, and, although steps were taken to incorporate the organization, nothing binding was effected. This band continued for a time; then, like its predecessor, subsided.

There is at present a German band, started within a short time, now having quite a large membership. They have employed a good German teacher, and appear to take great interest in their practice. They are considered very good players for the length of time they have been playing together.

There has also been a movement on foot for some time to organize a new American band, and take the instruments of the old band, and in all probability this project will soon be carried into effect.

LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

A Library Association at one time existed here, which, it is to be regretted, long since became defunct. It was founded in the winter of 1870, a large number of the prominent public-spirited citizens taking a part in the movement, and in some instances subscribing liberally to the object. It was hoped and expected that such an institution as a public library, suitably located, where books and periodicals could be obtained merely for the asking, would attract and thereby benefit a great many who could not, or would not, otherwise obtain good reading; and would also furnish a place for young people to congregate where there would be no bad influences. The intention was good, and the library ought to have prospered, but, like very many good things, it was not properly understood or appreciated. After organizing, the association hired the large front room in Metcalf's Block, which is directly over the store now occupied by Kellogg & Wilsey, for the library room, this being about the first time it was used after building. The room was furnished with chairs, tables, desk, book-case and stove, and books were contributed by various parties. Drs. Henshal & Wight, and G. P. Gifford, presented the most and best works. The office of the Oconomowoc Times, which had been running then a short time, was on the same floor with the library, in a back room, and the editors kindly allowed the use of their exchange list. By this means, there were an abundance of papers and periodicals always on hand; but, when Ashley D. Harger took the paper he stopped the use of the exchange list, as he wanted the papers for himself. Twice during the life of the association, George Westover, and others, got up concerts and appropriated the funds to the use of the library to pay rent. The regular membership fee was a merely nominal sum, and consequently did not go far toward paying the expenses. When the interest began to die out, of course the supply of funds died out also, and at last, when there was nothing to pay for room rent, fire and lights, D. H. Sumner, who had been appointed librarian, resigned; and finally, in the spring of 1871, after a few spasmodic gasps for life, the Library Association subsided. The books were then taken to George Westover's office, he having been one of the leaders in the movement, where they remained until 1876; then the fire company boys, thinking they might as well have the use of what books there were, took them over to the engine-house where what is left of them can be seen piled up in the corner of the room. As they are principally Patent Office Reports, it is not probable that any one will bother with them further. So ends the public library, and it may be added, as a rule, that a library unsupported by a regular tax is usually a failure.

OCONOMOWOC YACHT CLUB.

The first boat built and launched on La Belle Lake, was built by Capt. Budd Parsons, and called the LA BELLE, A. D. 1849. The first boat club, called the La Belle, was organized in 1853, by Dr. James Lewis. The members were the following gentlemen: John Parsons, E. Parsons, W. W. Collins, E. Hurlbut, H. Birdsell, H. G. Jones and G. P. Fay. In the same year another club, called the Scow Club, built a flat-bottomed boat, called the Dimasiptle. The following gents comprised the members: H. P. Lester, D. H. Rockwell, Dr. Wilson and Sam Dodge. In the year 1854, Lester built a sail-boat called the Kalanthe, and in 1855, B. Parsons & Son built a sail-boat called the Flying Fish, and in 1856, Capt. Gassman built a sail-boat for D. H. Rockwell, called the Blue Bird.

Although the excellent opportunities afforded at Oconomowoc, and in its vicinity, for rowing and sailing, have always been fully appreciated by the inhabitants and summer visitors, and have been largely embraced during the past, yet no organization tending specially to promote these healthful exercises and delightful amusements was effected here, since the La Belle Club was disbanded, until quite recently. Although a yacht club had been spoken of or proposed at different times by interested parties, it remained for Mr. Sutton, and a few other leading boatists, to set the movement afoot, that finally culminated, two years ago, in the present yacht club.

The Oconomowoc Yacht Club was organized in September, 1878, and the following names were enrolled as charter members:

Yacht Club.—Charles T. Sutton, Oconomowoc; H. Germain, Oconomowoc; E. B. Birchard, Oconomowoc; C. Linger, Oconomowoc; F. E. Wadhams, Oconomowoc; Charles E. Case, Oconomowoc; D. Mc Miller, Oconomowoc; A. J. Rockwell, Oconomowoc; H. M. Ackley, Oconomowoc; Henry Schuttler, Oconomowoc; D. G. Munger, Oconomowoc; Loren Edwards, Oconomowoc; John S. Kenyon, Oconomowoc; E. M. Wisner, Oconomowoc; C. B. Draper, Oconomowoc; Ed. C. Shears, Oconomowoc; Hugo Lorleberg, Oconomowoc; J. C. Hitchcock, Oconomowoc; Fred Parsons, Oconomowoc; H. B. Anderson, Oconomowoc; William Jones, Oconomowoc; A. J. Padgman, Oconomowoc; John F. Bender, Oconomowoc; Walter L. Peck, Chicago; C. I. Peck, Chicago; Ferd W. Peck, Chicago; George W. Fuller, Chicago; J. J. Knickerbocker; J. H. Westover; W. A. Spaulding, Chicago; George A. Schufeldt, Chicago; H. H. Schufeldt, Chicago; Willie Schufeldt, Chicago; S. Cooper, Chicago; Charles A. Dupee, Chicago; H. S. Peck, Chicago; J. R. Robinson, Chicago.

There have been nineteen names added since the organization of the club. The officers elected for 1878, were as follows: Commodore, Walter L. Peck; Vice Commodore, Charles T. Sutton; Secretary, Charles B. Draper; Treasurer, D. G. Munger; Measurer, H. Germain.

There are twenty boats in the fleet, boats of the first class being more than 18 feet in length. There is one steamer, Frolic, owned by H. H. Schufeldt, 35 feet long and 7 feet wide. There are eleven yachts, as follows:

Nautilus—length, 22 feet; width, 9 feet 6 inches; formerly owned by Charles T. Sutton.

Mystic—length, 24 feet; width, 9 feet 6 inches; owned by Walter L. Peck.

Buda—length, 20 feet, 9 inches; width, 8 feet 7 inches; owned by Ferd W. Peck.

Magic—length, 20 feet, 6 inches; width, 7 feet 8 inches; owned by Walter L. Peck.

Sortie—length, 22 feet; width, 10 feet 5 inches; owned by G. A. Schufeldt.

Blackbird—length, 18 feet; width, 6 feet; owned by C. Linger.

Pearl—length, 15 feet 9 inches; width, 6 feet 3 inches; owned by Charles Sutton.

Sprite—length, 13 feet; width, 6 feet; owned by Charles Sutton.

Florida—length, 26 feet; owned by H. Schufeldt.

Annie—length, 24 feet; owned by George A. Laurance.

Dolly—length, 11 feet; owned by Charles T. Sutton.

There are four ice boats, viz. : Flash, Charles Sutton; Whiff, E. C. Shears; Icicle, Walter L. Peck; Edward H. Tucker, Fred Parsons.

There are four pleasure barges, viz. :

Adele—6 oars; length, 25 feet; Charles T. Sutton, owner.

Vesta—6 oars; length, 25 feet; Charles T. Sutton, owner.

Gipsey Queen—4 oars; length, 18 feet; Walter L. Peck, owner.

May Howey—4 oars; length, 16 feet; H. H. Schufeldt, owner.

The Club have a tidy floating club house, which lies anchored just northwest of the city, in La Belle Lake. It is comfortably furnished, and the walls are suitably decorated with marine views. On the top of the boathouse is the judges' stand.

Regattas, with sailing and rowing matches, occur each year at different seasons. The Nautilus has thus far taken the prize pennant.

The Executive and Regatta Committee is composed of Ferd W. Peck, D. G. Munger, and H. M. Ackley.

CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

The Cemetery Association was organized May 9, 1851, under the provisions of Chapter 48, of the Revised Statutes of Wisconsin. There were twelve charter members from among the best of the citizens. The first cemetery managed by them was located near Fowler Lake, and was called the Oconomowoc Cemetery. Lots were purchased and people were buried here until 1864. Then the association, becoming satisfied that the village would some time require a larger burying-ground, determined to have the old cemetery vacated and a new one established before it became too late. Accordingly, during the winter of 1864, J. R. Carpenter, then a member of the Legislature, presented a bill for this purpose. The bill passed, and the present site was immediately after selected, and named La Belle Cemetery. The Trustees were authorized to allow owners of lots in the old cemetery to select lots in the new one in exchange, and to pay them for moving their dead; otherwise, to locate the lot themselves, and attend to the moving of the dead. The change of the cemetery created a great division of feeling among the people, which it took years to efface; but it must now appear plain to every one, that the change was for the best, and entirely justifiable. The old grounds were sold in January, 1865, for $1,325, to Messrs. Thompson, Metcalf, Fowler & Hall, and were afterward platted, and are now known as Hall's Addition. Before the Oconomowoc Cemetery was laid out, the people had a burial-ground on what is known as the Henshal Place. The business of the Association is transacted by six Trustees, who appoint a President, Secretary, and Treasurer, from among their number.

HOTELS.

Accommodations for summer guests and travelers, in and about Oconomowoc, are exceptionally good in every respect, being equal to the demands of the most fastidious and exacting. No pains are spared here to make the stay of transient or permanent visitors pleasant as well beneficial. How well the efforts of the landlords and people have succeeded in this respect is attested by the constantly increasing popularity of the place.

Woodlands.—This is the home and resort of D. W. Small, and is a most lovely place, with extensive and finely wooded grounds, from which it takes its name, lying on the south bank of Lac La Belle. It is a delightfully picturesque retreat, and ranks as one of the most attractive places within the city limits, or in the county, and is presided over by a gentleman and lady by whom it is a pleasure to be entertained. The grounds were formerly owned by George Fugh, but were not utilized by him, unless the brickyard, which was in operation here for many years, be excepted. Mr. Small purchased and built first in 1860. In 1873, finding that his house was not nearly large enough to accommodate his constantly increasing patronage, he erected a large addition and remodeled the building, making a very commodious and stately residence. Again, a few years subsequently, he was obliged to build a cottage to keep pace with the demands of his custom. He has now ample room for about 100 guests.

Townsend House.—The first large first-class Hotel erected in the county for the exclusive use of summer guests, was the Townsend House, which was built in 1870. Over $35,000 were expended in building and furnishing, and 100 days were required in constructing and fitting up. On the 19th day of June, 1870, a grand benefit opening was given. A train of cars was run from Milwaukee especially for the occasion, and hundreds of guests from abroad and at home were present. There was a grand banquet provided, and speeches and toasts were offered by some of the most prominent men in the State. The townspeople presented the house with three beautiful flags and a streamer. In the evening, the affair wound up with the most brilliant party ever given in Oconomowoc. Severance & Williams' band discoursed sweet strains "till the wee sma' hours," and the moments were annihilated by flying feet and thoughts that took no heed of time.

The first season, the builder and proprietor, Copeland Townsend, took in $14,000, and for several seasons following had a similar run of custom. During the winter of 1875 and 1876, at the urgent solicitation of his many patrons, Mr. Townsend concluded to enlarge the house, and duplicated the first building throughout, at a very large expense. The house is now very large and commodious, there being ninety-one rooms elegantly finished and furnished. It is beautifully located on the east bank of Fowler Lake, and the grounds are large and very attractive. The accommodations throughout, provided at this establishment, are not surpassed by any in the country, and the surroundings are such as to invite and charm the most fastidious. It is a very popular and prosperous resort.

Draper Hall.—This hotel, owned and managed by Martin T. Draper, although famous, from Wisconsin to the sea, as a delightful summer idling place, is also a regular hotel, kept open all the year round for the traveling public. The original building, which contains office, hall, sleeping-rooms and winter dining-room, is the old store built by Fay, Collins & Cotton, in 1849; it was built of brick, and strengthened across the front by huge blocks of building stone brought from Waukesha. When the surrounding buildings were either torn down, or moved to the business part of the village, this, being too heavy to move and too valuable to destroy, was left, and, after its vacation as a store, was opened by Dyer Topliff as a hotel. Mr. Draper purchased the property in 1868, and named it, and began improving the surroundings, and advertising the place as a summer resort. He has been successful from the first, and has been obliged to enlarge the building at different times, besides taking all the rooms he can get in the neighborhood, from year to year, to accommodate his guests. The situation of Draper Hall is delightful; facing as it does to the west, and on La Belle Lake, a superb view is afforded. Main street passes directly in front and between Draper Hall and its grounds on La Belle Lake. There are several springs near this hotel, one of which, a treble one, is remarkable. The water from it is at 52° Fahrenheit all the year round, never freezing in winter, and no fish have ever been able to live in it over night. The main spring is rank with iron, being of an oily, rusty, red color, and is five feet in depth; another, twenty feet deep, near the same place, which has an outlet by tubing; its waters are very similar to those from the Waukesha mineral springs; and a third one, driven twenty-one feet into the earth, is soft and totally unlike the other two. A few feet distant is still another spring, from which the hotel is supplied with drinking water. The summer guests of Draper Hall are in part from Milwaukee and Chicago, but largely from St. Louis and the South, with whom the place is in great favor.

La Belle House.—This hotel was named after the old hotel, and stands facing La Belle Lake, a short distance south of its shores. It was built about ten years ago by D. Topliff. It is a large frame building, that unfortunately is so situated as not to be pleasant for boarders. When shade-trees have grown up about the La Belle House, it will be one of the attractive places of Oconomowoc.

Jones House.—This hotel stands a short distance from and directly between the railroad and school building. It is the resort par excellence of traveling men, and, with Mr. Jones, the genial and accommodating landlord at the head, it is an excellent place at which to stop. Within a few years, the place has become so rapidly popular that, notwithstanding the several additions he has built to the original structure from time to time, he has not enough room. The main building was built in 1872, and three additions were subsequently made. There is a north front of fifty feet and a rear extension of sixty feet with a veranda on the two sides, one hundred and seven feet in length. There are about twenty-six or twenty-seven comfortable, nicely finished, and furnished rooms in the house.

William Tell House.—The William Tell House was erected in the spring of 1858, and was intended at first for a private dwelling, but in the fall of the same year was opened as a hotel. In 1866 or 1867, an addition was built, increasing the size of the building to its present dimensions, which are 32x48 feet and two stories in height. About thirty guests can be accommodated, and there is also a commodious barn on the premises. The builder and first owner, Fred Gerber, is the present proprietor. There are two or three other hotels here, besides numerous boarding houses, that appear to be doing a land-office business, providing for the wants of visitors and travelers.

Gifford's.—One and one-half miles from Oconomowoc, on the north bank of Oconomowoc Lake, is one of the most beautifully located and perfect resorts, taken all in all, to be found anywhere. Every requisite necessity for a home, for social enjoyment, and for physical and mental rest, is here liberally provided either by nature, or the ingenious hand of man. There is boating, hunting, fishing, mineral water to drink, and plenty of the best to eat. George P. Gifford, Sr., at the time of purchasing this property, erected a private residence, intending to maintain the place simply as a home, but, observing the facilities attached to the place for comfort, and actuated by an innate hospitality, he invited his friends to visit him during the summer season; these friends were delighted, and each year visited and revisited the place, until it became necessary to enlarge the private residence, and enlarge again, until it has assumed its present proportions, and become one of the most popular resorts on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad. Its habitues find easy access to this city, and courtesies with guests of the Townsend House, Draper Hall, and summer residents, are freely interchanged. This resort is a favorite with the people from Southern cities, and many families have made it their summer home for several years in succession. The house contains seventy-five rooms; fifty guest chambers, the remaining twenty-five being divided into parlors, sitting-rooms, dining-rooms, etc. Gifford's station, on the Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, is about seventy rods from the hotel grounds, and all accommodation trains stop here. There is a large dancing pavilion, billiard-room and bar, livery stable, bathing house, boats, etc., in connection with the hotel. In fact everything is provided that any reasonable person can expect or demand. The hotel is under the management of George P. Gifford, Jr.

CHURCHES.

Zion Church.—The services of the Protestant Episcopal Church were celebrated for the first time in Oconomowoc in the year 1841, by the Rev. Lemuel B. Hull, Rector of St. Paul's Church, Milwaukee. He officiated at this place once in four weeks, holding services usually at the log schoolhouse north of the bridge, and once at the residence of Mr. Foster. During the spring and summer, Mr. Hull came on foot from Milwaukee, thirty miles distant, to hold these services.

In August of the same year, services were held by the Rev. J. H. Hobart, and in September by the Rev. William Adams, now the distinguished Professor of Divinity at Nashotah. These gentlemen, with the Rev. James Lloyd Breck, were then sojourning at Prairieville, now Waukesha, contemplating the establishing of a mission school of divinity, which soon after became realized in the founding of Nashotah House.

Only occasional and irregular services were held at Oconomowoc until 1844, when the Rev. Dr. Adams began regular services.

In August, 1846, Zion Parish was duly organized. Dr. Adams continued to officiate during 1847-49. In 1850, the Rev. Dr. Cole, of Nashotah, was chosen Rector, and continued in charge until Easter, 1853. In the summer of 1853, the Sunday school was organized.

During Dr. Cole's rectorship, the church building was erected, at a cost of about $5,000. It is a substantial brick edifice, 25x50 feet, pleasantly situated on a point of land that juts into Fowler Lake. The church was built largely by money advanced by Mr. John S. Rockwell, and, together with the point of land on which it stands, was conveyed by him in a deed of trust to Dr. Cole, who, some years afterward, viz., in the year 1869, relinquished it by quitclaim deed, to the Rector, Wardens and Vestry, of Zion Church, Oconomowoc.

On Christmas Eve, 1853, the first service was held in the new church by Bishop Kemper, and subsequently, until the following Easter, services were maintained by the Rev. Lewis A. Kemper, and the Rev. E. S. Peake, of Nashotah. On Easter Monday, 1854, the Rev. Dr. Cole resigned the rectorship, and the Rev. E. S. Peake was chosen Rector. Mr. Peake continued in charge until the autumn of 1855; September 1, 1855, the Rev. L. W. Davis was chosen Rector, and continued in charge until October, 1861. During the years 1862-65, the Rev. Lyman Phelps, a graduate of Nashotah, was Rector. He was succeeded in the Rectorship by the Rev. Ezra Jones, for the years 1866-69. In 1870, the Rev. A. A. Fiske was chosen Rector, and continued in charge during the five years following, or until the summer of 1855. For two years succeeding Mr. Fiske's resignation, the rectorship, of necessity, remained vacant. During this interval, the Rev. L. W. Davis, former Rector, now residing in the parish, was invited by the Wardens and Vestry, from time to time, to officiate as minister in charge. In 1878, Mr. Davis accepted a formal call to the rectorship of the church, and has continued in charge to the present time.

The Methodist Episcopal Church.—The Methodist Episcopal Church was first started by the Rev. Frink, who came here while preaching on what in an early-day was known as the Watertown Circuit. The first class was composed of Mr. George W. Williams, leader; and Mrs. George W. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Day Dewy and Jonathan Dorrity, in the fall of 1841. Their services were held over the cabinet-shop of Day Dewy and Jonathan Dorrity, as a rule, although in after years, they at times used the schoolhouse. Mr. Frink was succeeded by Rev. Father Wheelock. After him, in 1843, the class was connected with the Prairieville Circuit, and shared the ministry of the Revs. L. F. Moulthrop and S. Snover.

The ministers who did work on the circuit here in pioneer days, were supported principally by missionary funds, although the settlers contributed as liberally as their means would allow; yet, had it not been for said funds, it would have been many years later ere they could have enjoyed religious services. During Mr. Moulthrop's time, they had their first revival.

The first church enterprise was commenced during the pastorate of the Rev. S. W. Martin, 1849. The prime movers in the undertaking were George W. Williams and Father Washburn. A lot was donated by John S. Rockwell, and the lumber and timber, with the exception of a few sticks, was supplied by Mr. Williams, also a part of the glass. This lumber and timber Mr. Williams had prepared to build a barn, but, for the sake of having a church, gave up the barn until four years later. Mr. Washburn furnished the stone to lay the foundation, drawing the same from his farm a mile distant, besides doing various other things to aid in building the church.

The church was ready for dedication by the 3d of February, 1850, when, the Rev. W. G. Miller, D. D., who was preaching on the Watertown Circuit, came and performed that ceremony. From this time the church prospered, until a wolf in sheep's clothing got into the fold, in the person of the Rev. Mr. Maxon. He had been here but a short time, when his true character began to develope; he was heard by different members, using profane language, and he was also accused of other immoral practices. At first, some of the members remonstrated with him, but this only had the effect of incensing Maxon, who would not listen to any of the protests offered. Charges were then preferred against him by some of the members. At this, he went around and obtained signers to a remonstrance, both among members and outsiders. The Sunday following, he read out the names of some of his accusers, declaring that they were dropped from the church. The charges were ignored, although those who preferred them were prepared with proofs of his perfidy. The Sunday following this, twenty-one of the regular members withdrew, and within a month eighteen more left, making in all thirty-nine withdrawals. This so prostrated the church that Maxon had to call on two classes, one that had been established on Chatham street, and the other at Monterey, these being under his charge, to come and hold their services here. From this time until the departure of Maxon, and even for years after, the society was at "sixes and sevens," only gradually recovering strength with the addition of new members.

For several years the project of building a new church was discussed, and finally consummated in the erection of the present fine brick edifice. This building was commenced under the pastorate of Rev. George Fellows, 1867, and was finished in 1868, while the Rev. William R. Jones was in charge. Previous to the erection of the new church, the old edifice was sold to the village, to be used as a school building.

Within two or three years after the new church was built, many of the disaffected members came back. Matters at this time, and for many years subsequent, went on quite smoothly, only excepting musical matters. As is nearly always the case in churches, there are, and always were in this church, a few worthies who could never endure any sort of an invasion upon old-time practices. Consequently, when the choir was started, and also when the organ was purchased, there were objectors. However, in spite of opposition, as the years went by, the choir grew stronger and better, until at last it became noted as the best in the conference. Then, about four or five years ago, some of the members wanted the singers moved from the front to the back of the church, behind the pulpit, where they could be seen; of course, this move met with opposition, but was brought before the Board, and they voted that the choir should be moved. Let no one suppose that this ended the struggle, for it did not; that choir must go into the corner was the next cry, and into the corner it went. No sooner did this happen than the matter was referred to conference, and the choir were moved back again. By this time, the singers began to get thoroughly riled and angry, and, when Elder Hewitt came and took sides with the move element, then war was fully and finally declared. Mr. Hewitt's influence was such, that the choir, in spite of the vigorous support of friends, was moved back to the corner. In conclusion of that matter, suffice it to say, the singers nearly all left, and that was the last of the finest choir in the district, and was also a signal for the withdrawal of several vigorous workers from the church. Under the direction of the present minister, the church appears to be getting along without any particular trouble. Owing to the condition of the records, it is impossible to give the names of but few of the ministers who have officiated in this church. In 1863, N. J. Aplin; 1865, T. O. Hollister; 1866, George Fellows; 1867, William K. Jones; 1870, J. S. McChesney; 1871, H. Sewell; 1874, A. Hollister and Thomas Clithero; 1875, Samuel Lugg; 1876, J. L. Hewitt; 1877, George W. Burtch; 1878, C. E. Carpenter, the present Pastor.

Congregational Church.—This church, the third in the place, was organized by Rev. S. Peet, August 3, 1845, with twenty-three members. The members of the church here were, for two years previous, united with the church at Summit, under an organization that bore the name of both places. The present society was formed by a mutual division of said church. Rev. J. P. Foster was the first minister and served the church from November, 1843, to February, 1845. Rev. N. Goodhue succeeded, and served as stated supply from May, 1845, for nearly two years. After him Rev. W. C. Fiske was employed. He officiated from October, 1847, to October, 1848. From this time on, for four years, the society was to a great extent destitute of preaching, only as they attended Methodist meetings. In October, 1852, Rev. Sidney H. Barteau was engaged, and discharged the duties of Pastor until September, 1856. The house of worship was completed in 1854, at a cost of $2,300, and was dedicated to the service of the triune God January 1, 1855, during Rev. Barteau's time. After the departure of Rev. Barteau, the pulpit was supplied by different persons, and by the reading of sermons, until December 15, at which time the services of N. G. Goodhue were secured for a year; but, by his own request, he was released at the expiration of six months.

Again the services were conducted by different persons, either reading sermons or preaching. For a little part of the time there was no service. Sometimes this people met with the Methodists, until September 20, 1857, at which time J. B. Preston began his labors, which lasted for a year; after which, Rev. J. Williston was called, October 3, 1858, and remained nine months; then arrangements were made with the church at Summit, and Rev. E. J. Montague was engaged to supply, for a year, the churches of Summit and Oconomowoc. At the expiration of the year, his entire services were secured for this church and society, and he remained as Pastor for more than twelve years, from January 1, 1860, to March, 1872. During this time the church building was enlarged and raised, so as to give place for rooms in the basement, which were used for a school for a time; afterward, for prayer and other meetings of the church society.

After Mr. Montague resigned, Rev. A. M. Rice, of Chicago Theological Seminary, was secured as a supply for six months, from April 19, 1872.

After the expiration of this time, a call was extended to Rev. J. Allison for six months, from the third Sabbath of October, 1872. Mr. Allison remained with the church until June, 1874. This clergyman, although very talented as a preacher or lecturer, was as a man of principle, a failure. He was intemperate, and, by his obnoxious conduct and example, in that and other immoral practices, did the church and cause lasting injury. He afterward went into the field as a temperance lecturer, but whether he ever reformed is not certain. He is said to be preaching yet. After him candidating was the order of the day, until the church became well-nigh discouraged by repeated failures to secure a satisfactory pastor.

Rev. T. A. Wadsworth, late of Brandon, supplied from October 25, to December 6, inclusive. Then followed the labors of A. E. Tracy, who served the church faithfully from December 20, 1874, until the first Sabbath in October, 1878.

The pulpit was then filled by different persons until December 1, when Rev. D. R. Anderson began his labors with the church society, in answer to a unanimous and urgent call, and at present date is the regular supply.

The church at this time appears to be in a prosperous condition.

Oconomowoc Baptist Society.—It was organized November 7, 1867, with ten members. January 23, 1868, they were re-organized as a Regular Baptist Church, by a council of churches called for that purpose. There were then twenty-eight members, who were trying to build a church, and, according to their report, had $1,350 subscribed for that purpose, and a lot paid for.

They then held meetings in one of the old schoolhouses, now Regan's Hall, with Rev. Edmonds as minister.

In 1868, they borrowed money to build, giving Mr. E. Hurlbut security on the lot and building for pay. They went on and had the basement finished and a large frame erected, when a young minister by the name of Ellis took charge, and, it is said, persuaded the church to disorganize, and repudiate the debt, then re-organize. They disorganized, and Mr. Hurlbut was left to do the best he could with the church. The church authorities were about to take the building off his hands, when a tornado came along and relieved them of the necessity or inclination, by dashing the frame to the ground, where the remains of it can now be seen.

St. Jerome's Catholic Church.—The first service was held among the people of this congregation, by Father Hobbs, of Mapleton, about 1858, in a private house. Father Hobbs continued holding services in this section, in private dwellings, until 1860, by which time St. Jerome's Church was completed and ready for use. The church was erected under his supervision, at an expense of $1,500. Father Hobbs held services in the church from 1860 to 1865, attending the congregation as a missionary connected with Mapleton. From 1865, Father Vahey assumed charge, and continued the services, as a missionary from Mapleton. In 1870, Father Allen was appointed regular Pastor of the church, and served about a year. Then Father Scott was placed in charge, and remained two years and a half. After him came Father Keehan, who held the charge one year. Father Casey succeeded Father Keehan, and attended to the ministry for one year. Father McMahon followed, and officiated for six months, until 1876. The church was enlarged in 1866, or 1867, by Father Vahey, at a cost of $1,000. The parsonage was built by Father Allen, in 1870, at a cost of $1,700. The present value of the church property is probably about $4,500. The membership comprises about eighty families.

First German Lutheran Church.—The first services of this denomination were held in the spring of 1862, in the Congregational Church, the Rev. Mr. Fack, then Pastor of the Golden Lake Society, officiating. There were but few of the present congregation present. Services were held again July 1, 1865, in the same church, the Rev. L. Nietmann presiding. On this occasion, the society was organized, the following individuals becoming members: H. M. Peters, W. Wilkie, H. Zimmermann, Fred Meyer, Fred Krupnow, August Hartwig, Charles Rochout, John Selnow, Frederick Enke and August Mathias. The Rev. Nietmann served the society for some time after the organization. The lot where the church now stands, on the bank of Fowler Lake, and fronting on Lake street, was purchased July 10, 1869, by H. M. Peters from Judge Small, for $179. At that time there was a building on the lot, 14x16, to which they made an addition, of the same dimensions, and used the entire building for a church until the present edifice was erected; the first services were held here during that summer by students from Nashotah Mission. On October 10, of this year, 1869, the Rev. A. F. H. Gebhard was called, and remained until July, 1870. He was succeeded by A. Krueger, who served from July, 1870, to September, 1872. His successor was Rev. J. Emke, who remained until July, 1877. The present Pastor came in December, 1877. This church was incorporated as the "Evangelical Lutheran St. Paul Community."

Our Saviour's Evangelical Lutheran Church.—This society was organized at a called meeting held at the house of Ole Halverson, and the first services were also held here. There were about twelve families represented at the organization. Subsequently, services were held around at different private houses, and in the Lutheran Church, until 1873. In January, 1872, a meeting was held, and arrangements made for erecting a church. Ole Halverson donated the lot, and a building committee was appointed and the work started this year. The basement was completed ready for use January 1, 1873; the remainder is not yet done. The church is built of brick, and will cost, when finished, $3,000. The first minister was Rev. S. Gilmeyden; first regular Pastor, Rev. N. Brant; first members, Ole Halverson, Gilbren Jensen, Gunder Olson, Ole Sorbe, Gulick Peterson, Jacob Larsen, Hans Johnson, Mrs. N. Oleson, Mr. G. Johnson, John Elfsen, Nels Rasmussen and G. Ericksen.

The Scandinavian (Norwegian) Baptist Church.—This society was organized April 27, 1866, at the house of John Baratsen, on Walnut street, by the Rev. E. Gergensen, of Chicago. The first members were as follows, viz., John Baratsen and wife, Peter Jensen, Julius Jacobson, Jacob Johnson and wife, and Ingerberg Johnson. Afterward, services were held in different private houses in the city, until 1872, when they bought a house and moved it to the lot on Lake street. This was their church from that time until 1878, when they disposed of the old building and erected a small edifice at a cost of $600. This has been their place of worship since. The first regular minister was C. Westergaard, he was Pastor for three years. From this time until the fall of 1879, the church was supplied by various parties. In that year, K. Sunt, was chosen regular Pastor, and has been with them since. There are now about forty members, being an increase of thirty-three members from the first. The Trustees are John Evesen, James Nelson, and Nels Johnson.

Das Buch Abynegelen.—The first service in this circuit was held in Monterey, by a local preacher, Christian Schafer, in 1857. He came from Watertown every other Sunday to preach, and to visit the folks. In 1860, the society was organized by Rev. John Rinder, who lived in Monterey, and came from there to Oconomowoc to hold services. Friedrich and Gesslak Humbly were the first members. The first church was built in Monterey in 1860, at a cost of $1,000. The church in Oconomowoc was built in 1868, at a cost of $800. The list of the regular Pastors is as follows: John Rinder, October 20, 1839, to October 17, 1861; Florentine Feistkorn, October 26, 1861, to October 6, 1863; Henry Schultz, October 9, 1863, to October 12, 1864; Henry Overbeck, October 18, 1864, to October 17, 1867; Ernest Fitzner, October 18, 1867, to October 20, 1868; Charles Iwert, October 3, 1868, to October 6, 1869; C. F. Leipprandt, October 10, 1869, to October 18, 1870; Canradt Eberhardt, October 18, 1870, to October 6, 1872; John Brauer, October 8, 1872, to October 18, 1875; Peter Schafer, October 12, 1875, to October 12, 1877; Nikolaus Eifer, October 6, 1877, to October 18, 1879; F. F. R. K. Klenske, October 10, 1879. The present value of church property is: In Monterey, $1,500, and the church in Oconomowoc, $1,200. The number of members is thirty-six. The names of the first officers are Peter Hinners, Presiding Elder; John Rinder, Pastor; L. Schenk, William Bery, John Graper, Christ Groose, Charles Groose and G. Kysow. The present officers are, Frank Schimelpfennig, Phillipp Roth, John Zimmerman, Charles Woellke, G. Schinnemann, G. Kelling and Charles Hubner.

The Norwegian Methodist Episcopal Church was built in 1875, on the street running east from the Townsend House; cost, about $700. The first members were dissenters from the Lutheran Church, and a few others. The first minister was Ole Wersen; through his influence the church was built, he contributing largely toward it from his private means. The next minister was P. Smith—then a Mr. Thompson, who was succeeded by Rev. P. Jensen, the present minister.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

1876—George Vilas, H. P.; H. G. Jones, K.; H. F. Lyke, S.; G. A. Ludington, Sec.

1877—George Vilas, H. P.; H. G. Jones, K.; H. F. Lyke, S.; G. A. Ludington, Sec.

1878—D. Mc L. Miller, H. P.; H. G. Jones, K.; H. F. Lyke, S.; G. A. Ludington, Sec.

1879—D. Mc L. Miller, H. P.; H. G. Jones, K.; H. F. Lyke, S.; G. A. Ludington,

Sec.

This chapter reports a membership of fifty-nine.

Oconomowoc Lodge, No. 127, I. O. O. F.—The dispensation was granted to this lodge June 5, 1869, upon application of the following persons: John E. Moulton, August Borchert, F. W. Ernst, Peter Klos and P. K. Tucker. All of these gentlemen, excepting John E. Moulton, were, before this time, members of Franklin Lodge, No. 141, located at Delafield. The first meeting was held at Rockwell Hall, where they discussed the propriety of organizing a new lodge. As it would be much more convenient for them to meet here, and as it was only a question of time when they began, there being no doubt that there must be a lodge here some time, the sooner they began the better. After the granting of the charter, the lodge was regularly instituted June 26, 1869. The first officers were: N. G., John E. Moulton; V. G., F. W. Ernst; Recording and Permanent Secretary, P. K. Tucker; Treasurer, Peter Klos; Guardian, August Borchert. Past Grands now in good standing are P. K. Tucker, E. D. Parsons, O. P. Andrus, L. S. Carpenter, L. F. Stewart, E. L. Palmer, G. W. Cole, Thomas McNally, W. H. Bolson and D. G. Munger.

The present N. G., Ole Rosholt; V. G., J. C. Van Horn; R. Secretary, Johnnton; P. Secretary, P. K. Tucker; Treasurer, E. L. Palmer. There has but one death occurred among the lodge members. John Brainard died April 6, 1877, and was buried with honors. P. K. Tucker is the only one of the charter members left in the lodge; he has been an Odd Fellow for twenty-four years, and at one time belonged to Geauga Lodge, No. 171, one of the strongest lodges in the State of Ohio. In case of death or sickness in this lodge, the members pay expenses by voluntary contribution, there being no weekly dues paid for charitable purposes. Within a term after beginning the lodge had increased to sixteen members. There have been 115 members in all. The annual celebrations of the order in the county have been held here two or three times.

Badger State Lodge, No. 220, I. O. O. F.—This lodge was instituted July 23, 1873. At that time F. W. Ernst, Peter Klos, F. Wollin, William Bueberman, L. H. Albert and August Borchert met in the present Odd Fellows' Hall as projectors of a new lodge, they all being members of Lodge No. 167. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Ernst, and its object explained. After general discussion, they decided to apply for a charter in German, and agreed upon the name; $30 was voted to pay expenses of charter, and Deputy F. Paulfranz, was authorized to make application to the Grand Lodge for the same. The charter was granted, and they met July 9, 1873. The lodge was then duly instituted, and the following officers elected for the ensuing term of six months, viz.: N. G., Peter Klos; V. G., August Borchart; Rec. Sec., F. W. Ernst; Per. Sec., L. H. Albert. When the lodge began, they had $77.90, their share of the funds from the treasury of the old lodge. They have had three deaths thus far, two men and one woman (Rebecca). F. W. Ernst died February 18, 1874, and Charles Heise, July 12, 1879, Sister Augusta Newman died January 11, 1875. The widows and children of deceased, are paid a weekly allowance. The lodge holds its meetings in the old hall, in common with the English lodge. There are now twenty-three members, and the institution is in a healthy condition.

Temperance Societies.—A temperance meeting was held here as early as the winter of 1844. At that time a big sleigh ride on the ice of La Belle Lake, one afternoon and evening, was participated in by the majority of the people, and, when they were satisfied with riding, they all repaired to the old School House, and listened to a temperance speech by the Rev. Goodhugh, after which nearly every one signed a total abstinence pledge. George Pugh is said to have been the first one to forego his allegiance, and, upon being questioned about it, acknowledged the charge, but declared he forgot at the time all about it. Although there were lectures at different times, yet, it appears, as nearly as can be ascertained, that no regular temperance organization was formed here, until June 22, 1850. Then the Oconomowoc Division, No. 98, Sons of Temperance, was instituted by E. Hurlbut, Deputy Grand Worthy Patriarch. This lodge grew rapidly in size and influence after its inception. In October, 1853, the Grand Division of the order convened here and passed resolutions pertaining to a vote on the prohibitory liquor law, submitted by the Legislature to the people's decision, and made arrangements to canvass the State for the purpose of securing prohibition; E. Hurlbut, who was elected the head of the Grand Division of the State, and others, were deputized for that duty, and the State was thoroughly stumped; but notwithstanding, the movement failed. The Oconomowoc Division continued prosperous for several years, and at one time had as many as a hundred members, and could manipulate local elections etc., at will. At last women were taken in, and very soon after one of the members preferred a charge against another, in open lodge, of immoral conduct; and almost immediately thereafter the institution subsided, after running about twelve years.

In 1851, a section of the cadets of temperance was formed here with twenty-four young boys. This lodge flourished for awhile, gradually weakened and ceased.

Soon after the Sons died, a movement was set afoot to organize a Good Templars society, and in June, 1864, upon petition of twenty persons, J. Giles came on and instituted a lodge. This lodge like the others, had its age of growth, decay and death, and probably in its time did some good.

In after years another Templars' lodge is said to have come up, Phoenix-like, from the ashes of the old one, but did not exist a great length of time, going up at last where all good things are supposed to go. During the summer of 1866, the people were very much wrought up by a discussion which was published in the Oconomowoc Badger, and it is said the temperance men got so furious at last, that, when the next election came off, they carried the day. The authors of the articles were Wareham Parks, and Thomas Reed, editor of the paper.

For several years subsequent to the war period, the temperance movement did not seem to possess very much vitality, but was finally aroused from its lethargy by the Temple of Honor and Blue Ribbon furore. A Temple of Honor was started in March, 1876, with nineteen charter members. This order has undoubtedly been largely beneficial to a goodly number of men, of very good standing, who were losing their influence and business through habits of intemperance. During the winter of 1877 and 1878, a series of lectures was held at Mann's Hall, and some of the churches, under the auspices of the Temple, and a large Blue Ribbon society was formed. The good done by the Ribbon movement seems almost entirely lost; as that organization was never, in this or any other place, for some reason, of any great permanency.

In February, 1879, a council of select Tempalrs was formed. It is a similar institution to that of the I. O. O. F. Encampment, and embraces the higher degrees of the Temple of Honor. There were twenty-two charter members. These orders are now in a healthy condition. The Temple has about forty active members, including some of the best men in the city.

Oconomowoc Lodge, A. O. U. W.—This lodge of United Workmen was established May 20, 1879, with the following members: M. F. Paulfranz, P. M. W.; J. F. Hopkins, M. W.; J. Weltner, G. F.; F. Gerber, O.; W. H. Brunner, Recorder; P. W. Fay, Financier; Peter Klos, Receiver; J. Bundscher, J. W.; P. Venden, O. W.

MANUFACTURING ESTABLISHMENTS.

The present flouring-mill was begun in the spring of 1855, and was completed in 1857. It is three stories high and 40x50 feet. There are three runs of stones, operated by four Goodwin turbine wheels, one three, and the others four feet in diameter. The mill was calculated, at the first, to be capable of turning out 100 barrels of flour every twenty-four hours; but now, since new machinery has been introduced, and the new process of grinding adopted, that amount cannot be made per diem. There is an unlimited water supply, and the dam has an eight-foot head. Taken all in all, this is one of the best mill properties in the county, if not the best. The mill was built by J. S. and D. H. Rockwell and Mr. Luck. In 1864, O. Hathaway purchased the interest of J. S. Rockwell, and in October, 1875, Luck & Hathaway purchased the interest of D. H. Rockwell. In 1879, Messrs. Ackley, Stone & Parks purchased the property and are the present owners.

I. Rowell & Sons Plow and Cultivator Factory.—This factory was established in 1867, by I. Rowell, who was a plow maker in the State of New York, before coming to this State, in 1841. The first plow-factory known to have been erected in the county was started by Mr. Rowell, on his farm in the town of Lisbon, in 1852. Here he carried on the business, on a small scale until 1867. About this time, Mr. Rowell's sons, Kendrick and Louis, built the shop here, which is 32x145, the machinery being operated by a twenty-horse-power engine. About ten years ago, Mr. I. Rowell, became a partner in the firm, which has since been styled I. Rowell & Sons. In 1873, Mr. M. Bush bought out Mr. I. Rowell's share, which he still holds, a half-interest, although the firm still runs under the old name. The factory has a large capacity, and does a profitable business. There are twelve men employed, and 1,500 cultivators, and 12,000 plows can be made per annum. Sales run from $25,000 to $30,000 a year, in this and adjoining States.

Foundry.—The foundry and machine shops of Hartmann, Hubner & Co., were built in May, 1879, and commenced business the same year. The building stands a short distance back from Milwaukee street. The foundry is 24x50, and two stories high. The machine shop is 30x50, and two stories high. A large variety of work is done here, as sawing, ripping, turning, casting rollers, etc. The machinery, which is very complete, is driven by a fifteen-horse-power engine. The building and fixtures cost between $5,000 and $6,000.

Union Carriage and Wagon Factory.—The Union Carriage and Wagon Factory was established on Milwaukee street, by William H. Young, the present proprietor. In 1854, Mr. Young began, with a small shop and limited capital, but has largely increased his capital and enlarged his shop, and now does about $7,000 per annum of work, and gives employment to eight men.

City Brewery.—The City Brewery, Peter Binzel, proprietor, was established by him on Fowler street, where the present building stands, in June, 1868. The first brewery was a small frame building, with a capacity of three or four hundred barrels per annum. The ice house was built in 1873; it is 24x60 feet. The present brewing building was built in 1877; is 40x78, two stories in height, with a capacity of 1,200 barrels per year, the most of which is sold in this locality.

Planing Mill.—G. Vilas & Co. have a planing and sawing mill in connection with lumber-yard, established in 1870.

There is also a grain elevator here, under the management of Mr. William Thompson, that is worthy of mention, as it does a large shipping business.

ATTORNEYS.

Joel R. Carpenter commenced the practice of law in Oconomowoc November 13, 1848, Edwin Hurlbut in 1850, D. W. Small, November 12, 1851, all by certificate, they having practiced in other places. The following were admitted on examinations in Waukesha County: William Hassell, March, 27, 1858; R. C. Hathaway, March 26, 1862; Warham Park, March 20, 1867; Charles H. Van Alstine, July 19, 1877, and E. D. R. Thompson, Dec. 2, 1879. Loran Edwards and Hobart Mason practiced a short time and moved to other parts.

Jonathan Dougherty, said to have been considerable of a pettifogger, attended to the legal business of the place before any of the above. He was also one of the first Justices of the Peace.

POSTMASTERS.

Loan Saxe was appointed the first Postmaster, as early as 1845. He was succeeded by W. W. Collins, who was followed by D. H. Rockwell. After him the office was held by Thomas N. Stephens. In 1865, D. R. Thompson was installed and remained in charge until 1868; John C. Starkweather then took charge of the office, holding it until 1873, when Miss C. L. Edwards was appointed. After Miss Edwards, in 1875, Warham Parks was appointed and has since held the office.

PHYSICIANS.

Dr. Townsend came in as early as 1846 or 1847, but never succeeded. He united with the physicians of the county in establishing rates for service soon after coming, and, the people thinking it a swindle, made a call for another physician. Then Dr. Little came. Dr. Conant arrived soon after and set up as partner with Dr. Little. Dr. Warner followed within a few years and set up practice. Then Drs. Saltzman, Miller, Hopkins, Hays, Jones, Regan and Dale, all of them more or less popular and skillful physicians, came in turn to minister to the necessities of the sick.

NOTES.

Ten years ago, there were seven hotels, five dry goods stores, three drug stores, four hardware stores, three boot and shoe stores, two clothing stores, four tailor-shops, five groceries, nine saloons, three provision stores, two restaurants, two furniture stores, two harness-shops, three jewelry-shops, one bank, two livery stables, one carriage-shop, one foundry, one planing-mill, four cooper-shops, one bakery, two meat markets, a postoffice doing a business of $40,000, and paying $1,500 per annum; two district schools, five physicians, six lawyers, two Justices, seven ministers, one newspaper.

Picture-taking was first begun here in 1858 or 1859. The gallery was opened in what was known as Putnam's Block. C. M. Smith began learning when the gallery was first opened, and in a month had learned so as to take a picture; this shows how far the art had progressed at that time; yet, in justice to what was done, no matter if learned in a short time, it must be said that the work was fair, as shown by a picture now in Mr. Smith's possession. Mr. Smith bought the gallery and continued it for a short time, then sold. From that time on, the place has had a good gallery.

WAR INCIDENTS.

Oconomowoc, like cotemporary places of equal size and importance, had a war experience, peculiar to itself alone, the record of which lives, principally, in the memories of actors in the various episodes. That many of those occurrences were not creditable to all parties concerned, taken in the light of history, and as examples to succeeding generations, is to be regretted rather than denied; but that there were grand and full contributions made, of life and money, to the cause of the Union Government, is equally certain, and must be a source of unqualified gratification to the majority of the community, in view of their condition to-day. "The late unpleasantness," familiarly so-called, was carried on, upon the part of the North, in accordance with the fact, that the whole of the body politic is of infinitely more importance than a part; at least, that was the view taken by a majority of the people of the North, who recognized in every application of power or precedent, our national motto, "in union is strength." There were a large number of persons then living in Oconomowoc and vicinity, who utterly failed to take a comprehensive view of the situation in which the North was placed by the declaration of the hostilities upon the part of the South, and who did not seem to perceive the application, that could be made at any time in the future, of such a precedent as a separate and independent government fully secured by the South; and no species of argument could convince them of the folly of a peace policy, or sympathy with the designs of men whose every act was entirely at variance with every precept known to statesmen for the maintenance of a permanent government, and consequently the universal prosperity of the people.

To give a detailed account of all that occurred then, and which to a great degree interested every one, would be simply impossible, for every day was of itself a series of incidents, fraught with little of joy, but much of sadness, for the majority.

No sooner had the news reached the place that Fort Sumter had been fired upon than a fever of excitement prevailed. A meeting was immediately called at Dodge's Hall—just completed—and speeches and resolutions were made, and a movement was at once instituted to organize a cavalry company. Within a short time the cavalry company was enrolled and officered, as a home guard, called Oconomowoc Cavalry. As demonstrations of all kinds were then necessary, to express the public enthusiasm, a grand celebration was set on foot for the 4th of July, 1861, and all hands in the village and town met on Brown street, and had what would be called a glorious time. A sham battle was fought, and firing of cannon and small arms was indulged in, and roast pig, a la coctail, turkey, chickens and everything were annihilated without remorse, in honor of the occasion; and the whole thing wound up by a grand cavalry race, such as many a participant rehearsed in earnest in after days.

It must not be supposed that during this time unanimity of sentiment in this matter prevailed—not so. Meetings of Southern sympathizers were being held, and speeches made, and ridicule of all kinds launched against the efforts of Southern opposers. The headquarters of the Copperhead party, so-called, was the grocery store of J. K. Carpenter, on the corner where the brick block of Judge Small now stands. The cavalry company broke up this season, and the majority of the men went away and enlisted, and not until quite late in the year was an attempt made to enlist a company here. Then, Rev. Mr. Fox, a Methodist minister, and an enthusiastic war-man, got up a company, known as Capt. Fox's Company. While the enlistment was going on, some unusual demonstrations were indulged in by the anti-war party, which greatly offended the new company. As a result, one morning when Mr. Carpenter arose, he found his store barricaded. This being the first hostile demonstration made here, Mr. C. became thoroughly alarmed, and went to Mr. Hurlbut, who was early appointed United States Marshal, for relief. Mr. Hurlbut immediately issued an order to Capt. Fox, to have his company cease their demonstrations, and signed it officially as Colonel on the staff of Gov. Randall. Capt. Fox reported at once, surprised at receiving such an order, but was soon convinced, upon seeing the commission, that, as a soldier, he had the duties of a soldier to perform; within a short time everything was restored to order; although violent threats were uttered, and fears were entertained that a riot would ensue. In 1862, Capt. Stevens' company was enrolled, and in the fall went out with the Twenty-eighth Regiment. They were as brave and gallant fellows as ever left the place. From this time a greater unanimity of feeling prevailed among the people. A Ladies' Soldiers Aid Society was early formed, as a branch connected with the Milwaukee department, and efficient and hearty service was rendered to the destitute and suffering soldiers, in prison, the hospital, and the field. After Capt. Stevens' company went South, a man said to be a relative of his, who had been connected with that infamous secret society known as the "Knights of the Golden Circle," came North, as a detective, and among other places visited Oconomowoc. While here he professed to identify several prominent men as members of the order, and it was generally believed that there was quite a strong organization here. When the time came for raising money to pay soldiers, Oconomowoc was not behind, but contributed liberally. At the time of drafting the opposing element made considerable trouble, and a good many of the drafted parties ran away. But at the last the town furnished more than its quota, something which, under the circumstances, speaks volumes for the efforts of those who aided in putting down the Rebellion. More than 200 men went from Oconomowoc, and, taken all in all, the place stands high in the ranks of earnest supporters of the Government and Union.

INCIDENTS AND ANECDOTES.

First Catamaran.—One of the first boats ever used on Lake La Belle, was a catamaran, built by Lyman Dewey in 1844. It was made for a big Fourth of July celebration. The idea of building a deck on two boats, side by side, with a water space between, seems to have been entirely original to him. This class of boats are now justly great favorites, as swift sailers, and for their safety. Dewey's boat, it appears, was poorly constructed, and nearly sank within a short time after starting out with its living freight. Its occupants were barely able to reach the shore, and universal condemnation was meted out to the "new-fangled" institution. This voyage was the first and last, of what was called "Dewey's folly."

The First Fight.—During the celebration in 1844, the first battle of "Cooney" is said to have been fought. It was a fist fight between Elisha Morris and E. Williams. Would it had been the last!

George W. Fay as a Policeman.—In 1844, an old "codger," supposed to have been an Englishman, from the cut of his gib, put in an appearance in the village, and finally, after trudging about awhile, stepped into the shop of I. C. Stratton, who was then working near the old store of Mr. Fay. The fellow being a rather hard-looking character, Mr. Stratton regarded him with suspicion. In a short time, after peering around here and there, he withdrew. No sooner had he gone, than Stratton looked about to see if anything was taken, and missed his drawing-knife. He at once reported to his employer, and they together made the fellow come back. He denied having the drawing-knife, and said that they would find it among the tools; going where the tools were he slipped the knife out from his pantaloons leg, when he thought they were not watching him, and pointed to it a moment after. He then took a tri-square, concealed it, and started off. Mr. Stratton witnessed the performance, and reported to Mr. Fay. Mr. Fay then ordered the man to go into his store, and consider himself a prisoner. To make a long story short, after having been kept in custody in this way for some time, the chap thought he would make an effort for liberty. So, when Mr. Fay was not watching, he slid out, and started off on a run. Mr. Stratton called to Mr. Fay, telling him of the escape of his prisoner, whereupon Mr. Fay started in hot pursuit, and from one end of the town to the other they ran, pursuer and pursued; but the Englishman, owing to the interference of another party, got away.

The First Phrenologist.—Many stories are related of the jolly times indulged in by the bachelors who made their rendezvous at the old hotel kept by Charles C. Wilson, the joker and story-teller. One of these is to the effect that one day, about the time phrenology was first being discussed, a rather seedy individual came to the hotel, and said to one of the bystanders "Hever 'ad a lecture on phrenology 'ere?" The man replied, saying that they had not. The stranger then said that lecturing, and examining 'eads was his business, and he would like to give a lecture and examine some 'eads, if he could get some one to help him post some bills. This was readily agreed to by the other party, and accordingly arrangements were made for the lecture. When night came, the boys all turned out, expecting to have some fun. They soon discovered, after the fellow began, that he was a fraud, and, as this was not in the programme, and not to their taste, they concluded to give him a "send-off." So one of the audience jumped up, and seizing a dog by the hind legs, swung him around and knocked Mr. Phrenologist heels over head. As soon as he could come to time, another candidate for examination was perched on the stool. After Phreno. had given him a character fit for a king, the boys concluded that they would take another hand in, and give Phreno. a little further experience of their characters; so without ado, they grabbed him and jerked him into the bar-room. A whisky and soap slide was the great game those days, and of course he must take a "slide." The rules of the slide were, that a man must be laid on the counter or table, which was well smeared with soap and whisky, and be slid back and forth and finally shot off. If he went off straight, he need not be slid again. Poor Phreno. called for the landlord, but he could not be found just then; so they slid him, and slid him again, until he could hardly have told whether he was a still or a soap factory; and, finally, it is said, they opened a side door connected with a flight of stairs, and a hill-side alley, and slid him down stairs alley and all. Phreno, in a very dilapidated condition, got up and retired, saying, "I calls such treatment ha hinsult."

Chauncy Ludden's Courtship and Marriage.—Chauncy Ludden, who came here very early, is said to have come West partly to get away from the regions of an old sweet-heart, who had taken to a "handsomer man." After he had been here some time, he one day asked a fellow-workman what he had better do, get married or not. This was rather a ticklish question to answer, especially considering the fact that there were but a few girls here then. There were Edith Brainard, Libbie Barton, Miss Goodell, Louisa Washburn, the two Misses Campbell and Emily Sage. Emily and one other girl were famous runners, there being but one among the young fellows who could outstrip them, said to have been C. Eastman.

After comparing notes as to the merits of these various parties, Ludden decided to get married if he could, and to call on Libbie Barton right away. That night found him paying his devotions at Cupid's shrine, but Libbie was too much for him; she quoted poetry, and talked sentiment to him until he was fairly distracted, and declared afterward that "that kind of sass was too much for him." He next sought Emily Sage, but Emily was, as will be inferred from her abilities as a runner, a rather frisky miss, and, withal, had a suitor. Yet Ludden was not to be ignored; so on trial, she went to spelling-school with him. But, alas for Ludden's hopes, the other fellow was there, and, when he tried to make his candle stick to the desk and could not, his rival passed remarks. This disgusted Chauncy, who, without further ado, withdrew, and his girl went over to the ranks of the enemy. Soon after this, while busy at work one day, he started up, borrowed a rule from Mr. Stratton, his companion, and went out to the lumber yard. Nothing was seen of him until evening, when lo! what should he have done but drop the rule and go a-courting. This time he launched his shafts at the staid Louisa, and struck the mark, for soon after they were married.

Old Tom.—Old Tom, the property of Mr. Worthington, was for many years the only horse that could be hired in the village, and was consequently in great demand on all special occasions. When the time arrived for Chauncy Ludden and Miss Washburn to be married, George Pugh, who had been invited, determined to go in style; and, as they were to be married at Mr. Washburn's house, two or three miles from the village, he concluded to get Old Tom for the journey. Tom was accordingly brought and hitched to a post while Mr. Pugh was "fixing up;" but just at the time Pugh was ready to start, what should the horse do but break away and start off. Pugh gave chase, and away went Tom pell mell through town with Pugh at his heels, all dressed in his Sunday best, calling "Stop him, stop him!" Tom, seeming to know for what service he was intended, ran down the road toward Mr. Washburn's, and finally, to the intense disgust of Mr. Pugh, and to the great amusement of his friends, stopped at Mr. Washburn's gate, apparently well satisfied that he had done his duty and had no farther to go.

Big Doings at the Adoption of the Constitution.—At this time a grand celebration was held at "Cooney," and all sorts of jolly proceedings indulged in. Among other things and the most attractive part of the sports, was the firing off of big charges of powder from old wheel gudgeons, there being no cannons. The gudgeons did noble service this day, and the boys fired salutes for nearly everything and person they could think of. At last, when the category of worthy objects was about exhausted, a salute was proposed for "Old Church," who was an interpreter, and an inveterate toper. When this proposition was made, D. H. Rockwell, who was one of the crowd, all-seas-over like the rest, said he "would not cheer any such drunken cuss;" at the same time over he went into a mud puddle or something worse, and off went the gudgeon in honor of Church, while all hands gave a cheer for the fallen hero.

Charles Wilson and the Preacher.—Charles Wilson was early converted and became a Methodist, but did not stick to his faith long, owing, as he said, to the fact that he kept a hotel to make a living for himself, and not to furnish preachers with a home. After he left the hotel, he became very careless as to Sabbath usages, and worked on Sunday occasionally. One Sunday morning he was hard at work fixing his house, when a friend going to church with a minister came along. Shaking their heads regretfully, they bade him good morning. "Good morning, Elder;" said Wilson, "nice morning. You see the Seven Day Baptists are not all dead yet." The joke was too many for the preacher, and he passed on, very much amused at the sally, and compelled to acknowledge that a man's faith may furnish him with an excuse for doing almost anything.

Judge Small's Income.—Judge Small says there is no real reason why young people cannot get along if they are willing to work, and live within their means; but, of course, if one has nothing to do, and no means, he generally gets a very slim living. To illustrate: When Judge Small got married, his wife's father, or his own, presented the couple with enough to buy a house and lot, and left it to the young lawyer to make enough out of his profession to support them, which he did; their expenses for the first year not being $100, and his income not being more than $125; the second year his expenses were about $125, and income perhaps $50 more, and the third year his income had increased to $250, and his expenses to $175, the expenses, although increasing, always being less than the income.

Lieutenant Bull's Temperance Speech.—During the last of the war, A. J. Rockwell started a company here, and, either at the beginning of the enlistment, or a short time after, a Lieutenant Bull, from Madison, came to help him get his company together. While he was here, the temperance people were holding meetings, and having speeches. One day or evening, young Rockwell walked into one of the meetings, accompanied by Lieut. Bull, and said that the Lieutenant was a temperance man and speaker; thereupon, the Chairman invited him to step up and speechify. Nothing loath, the military man went to the front and began a big temperance talk. While he was laying himself out to make converts, and beguile the erring ones from their cups, who should step in but old Mr. Ludington, who at that time indulged very freely in the ardent. Looking at the speaker in astonishment, for a few moments, he finally spoke up, and asked: "Ain't you the chap I saw sucking whisky down below here a spell ago?" The Lieutenant, not to be driven out of the field without a parting shot, said: "Well, what if you did see me, haven't I been telling the truth?"

How Old Mrs. Besser Defended the Soldier.—During the war, when the public sentiment was at a boiling point, a discussion took place at the depot one day, and all hands were decrying the Southerners, when a little soldier stepped up, who had been listening, and without ado told the crowd they did not know what they were talking about; he had been South and knew, and the rebels were no worse than the Northern soldiers. The crowd was furious, and two men by the name of Lampman and Lockwood off with their coats and were going to thrash him. Seeing that discretion was the better part of valor, the soldier ran into Mrs. Besser's saloon to escape. They chased him to the door, where Mrs. B. met them, armed with a flat-iron, and declared, if either stepped in, she would crack their skulls. They stood outside and pounded the door, and cursed; but, nothing daunted, Mrs. B. held her own, and finally drove the belligerent parties away, to the great amusement of the lookers-on.

At the time the La Belle House was burned, it was being kept by a spruce young fellow who now keeps hotel in the South. It appears that the alarm of fire roused him from a sound sleep and utterly confused his brain, so that he did not know where he was, or what he was doing. He jumped up and rushed into the street in dishabille, and ran around in the crowd shouting for some one to go and "see to the soap and milk the cows." He had to be told, before he came to himself, to put his clothes on.

Many more amusing anecdotes could be given concerning the place and people, that occurred at different times, but enough has already been told to illustrate the phases of every day life here in the past.

The general healthfulness of this locality has long been acknowledged. This place, being near the highest point between Rock River and the Fox River, is blessed by a cool, dry and bracing atmosphere, while the numerous attractions beguile the invalid forth to ride or walk, and breathe, fresh from nature's fount, this invigorating fluid, or receive life from the sun's genial and magnetic rays.

Incomparably beautiful surroundings, a cool, salubrious climate, and as pure water as ever sprung from the bosom of mother earth—what more can be asked? Saratoga, Long Branch, Newport, the White Mountains, the retreats of Virginia, Arkansas, Colorado, California or the glorious Hudson, afford no more sweetly picturesque and charming scenes than can be found here. Tourists who have visited this place are enthusiastic in praise and admiration of all they find here, active and anxious in securing a similiar enjoyment among their friends and acquaintances, and seldom fail to put in a second appearance themselves.

Within a comparatively few years, since Messrs. Coffin, Schufeldt and others first came here for fishing and recreation, this country has acquired a fame, both near and far, as deserved as it is exceptional. What a marked contrast appears between the present and the past; the wilderness is subdued; the revolutionary hand of civilization has changed the face of nature; where once stood the lodge of the savage, or cabin of the early settler, now inviting farm dwellings are seen, and the neat and attractive houses and stately country residences of business men, or people of leisure, line the streets, or dot the well-kept lawns and umbrageous retreats that border the lakes.

Where once the Indian or pioneer followed the trail to some famous spring, or favorite hunting or fishing resort, now come and go the favored and fashion of the land. Here at the height of the summer season the gayest of the gay seek an outlet to their exuberance and hilarity; the prematurely worn speculator, rest and refreshment to strengthen him for new ventures; the invalid, invigoration and health from climate and scenery; the student, knowledge from history and association; while all combined, conspire to make up a little world by itself, instructive as well as beautiful. Here are to be seen "turnouts" in every imaginable variety; coaches with liveried attendants; carriages with servants behind; dashing equipages with four in hand; tandems of blooded stock; road wagon to track horse; sportsmen in dog carts; and pleasure parties on horseback, all going at a spinning rate, seeming devotees to the old maxim, "While we live, let us live." The future of Oconomowoc is established, as it is already determined by the annually increasing host of fashionable assemblages, one of the favorite watering-places of America, and one of the few places in the world suitable for a summer home.

BEAUTIES OF OCONOMOWOC.

To portray the many and great attractions of Oconomowoc City and surroundings, the most fertile fancy and elaborate word-painting seem inadequate, for, in view of so much natural magnificence and varied perfection, all laudation appears tame and commonplace. Go whichever way you may for miles, and scene upon scene of surpassing loveliness greets the charmed senses, and feelings of delight are experienced that can never be forgotten. Within a radius of eight or ten miles, are twenty-three or twenty-four lakes, resting like gems in emerald settings of hill and dale, vernal with rich fields and shady woodlands; while here and there bright streams and brooklets, like threads of crystal, go hastening joyously along to hide themselves in some one of nature's spacious reservoirs.

The roads here are the pride of the inhabitants and the delight of travelers. The soil being somewhat gravelly and slightly porous, good natural roadbeds are secured, and, by careful management and work, they have been rendered permanently hard and smooth, and, like everything else in this favored region, are as good as can be found anywhere. They are neither limited in number or circumscribed in distance, and lead, winding in every direction, through gorgeous parks of farming lands, sunny slopes and openings, and overhanging forests and the ever-recurring lakes, and sparkling rivulets, that intersect the landscape on every hand.

The mean height of the land about Oconomowoc is 300 feet above the level of Lake Michigan. Government Hill, a few miles distant, is about 600 feet above the lake. From this point on a clear day, twenty-eight lakes can be seen. The names of the prominent ones are Lac La Belle, Oconomowoc, Okanabee, Silver, Golden, Twin Lakes and Fowler's Lake, while there is one peculiar one known as "Aunt Polly's Wash-Tub," which alone gives soft water. These are all within easy driving distance, and here the disciples of Walton, in search of pleasures piscatorial, will find an abundance of fish, the waters being literally alive with bass, pickerel, perch, etc. Sportsmen also find promising hunting-grounds in this vicinity; as water-fowl, snipe, woodcock, quail, and almost every species of small game luxuriate here in unlimited numbers.

The mineral springs found here may as justly be proclaimed for their healing properties and life-giving qualities as any found within the State of Wisconsin. There is a strip of country beginning on the eastern boundary of Waukesha County running west more than forty miles, and much of it belonging to the valley of Rock River, that is particularly noted for its mineral wells and springs. These waters are similar in their nature; most of them containing iron in large proportion, others magnesia and various mineral properties, but all noted for their health-giving qualities. Of these there are a goodly number, and thousands already bear testimony to their efficacy. One of the largest, is located on Mr. Hitchcock's property. In the early settlement of the country, this is said to have been a favored spot among the Indians, and the various tribes brought their sick here to avail themselves of the benefit of "the healing waters."

HISTORY OF TOWNS.

TOWN OF BROOKFIELD.

Township 7, Range 20 east, called Brookfield, was set apart as now bounded, and organized into a town by act of the Legislature of 1839. It is an excellent farming section and one of the good fruit-growing towns of the county. Its close proximity to Milwaukee, excellent connections with that city by two railroads and the plank roads, gives the farmers opportunity to secure, at all times, the highest cash market prices for their products. Thus the location adds materially to the natural productive value of the farms in this town.

The first real settler was Robert Curran, who came to Prairieville August, 1836, with his family, consisting of a wife and three children. In September of this year, he moved to Brookfield and purchased a claim on Section 25, where H. Gregg now lives. There was a small cabin, partly completed, on the place. He moved in while there was yet a stump inside, no floor having been laid, and with scarcely a roof over their heads. He came in with two yokes of cattle and had to brush out a road, there being only Indian trails through the town at that time. He went to work at once and cut a large quantity of hay for his cattle and for the purpose of providing for travelers. During the winter, he made the first clearing, and in the spring of 1837, built an addition, and made it his chief business to care for travelers.

His house was the first tavern in the town, and Elon Fuller was his first guest.

In November, 1836, George Putney came in with a family and settled in the west part of the town, on the farm now owned by Chester Blodgett. He remained a few years and at last ran away with the Mormons.

S. G. Putney came here in the fall of 1836, and in 1840 brought his family and settled on a canal claim of 200 acres, one mile south of the Brookfield Junction Depot, where he still lives on the same old claim.

In the spring of 1837, Augustus Yale, a young married man, came in, hiring a team to haul his things out from Milwaukee into the deep woods where he had made his claim. Here he started life by sticking up two or three poles in the ground and covering them with a bed-quilt, this constituting his first dwelling. Where he stuck his first stake he now lives, having developed a fine farm and reared a large family.

During this spring, Mr. Curran broke three or four acres of land and planted corn and vegetables. This was the first land broke in the town, and these were the first crops raised.

Jacob Stam came in very early in the spring of 1837, with his family, the snow being quite deep when his house was built. He was the third settler in the town.

Maj. Farr and family, and E. A. Parker, his son-in-law, a brother of John G. Parker, the Canadian patriot, came in the summer of 1837 and made permanent claims and built houses.

Augustus Story came in and settled at the Plank Road Junction about this time.

Moore Spears came in 1837 and settled near Elm Grove; Ezra Maynard came in the summer of this year, and Mr. Van Vleck also.

In the winter of 1837 and 1838, the first school was taught in the town by Moore Spears, in a claim cabin on Maj. Farr's place. There were about twelve pupils, some of them being of age.

In the spring of 1838, the Hatch settlement, so-called, was formed in the northwest part of the town. There were two Hatch brothers, and two or three others in this settlement.

A saw-mill was built by Charles Hart on Section 15, about 1838. This was the first mill in town, and was run until within a few years.

J. P. Story bought out his brother Augustus about in 1840, and built a steam saw-mill soon after. This was run for several years, but did not pay, and was finally abandoned.

Charles Hart built a small grist-mill about 1860, near his saw-mill. This mill was never prosperous, and after standing a few years was demolished.

The first schoolhouse in District No. 1, Section 26, was built in 1839, of logs, and Juda Phelps taught the first school here.

In 1840, Rev. H. W. Frink held meetings here, and organized a class of Methodists. There were five members from Brookfield, Robert Curran, wife and son, and Gideon Wales and wife. The first preaching in town was at the house of Robert Curran, by Elder Wheelock, in 1838, and Mr. Curran's son Charles rode around the neighborhood to warn out the settlers.

The first death was that of Miss Susan Farr, daughter of Maj. Farr, who died in the spring of 1838.

Joseph Irwin and Fanny Farr were married in 1839, by Rev. Cyrus Bowles, of Milwaukee. This was the first marriage in the town.

The first birth was a child of Gideon Wales. His son Solomon was born about 1840.

Harmenus Van Vleck was the Territorial Justice about 1840.

The first election was held in a house built by Lot Blanchard on the old Dousman plat, afterward occupied by Jerome Topliff, who kept tavern here and the first post office.

The plank road junction was at one time called Storyville, after the Story family.

Charles Raymond was the first Justice of the Peace and Postmaster in Brookfield. He lived two miles east of the plank road junction.

The first blacksmith-shop in the town was started by Jacob Stam, in 1837, on Section 26. He was an excellent workman. John Bevier, M. D., came here in 1840, and was the first resident physician in Brookfield.

There are several churches in town—two Catholic, one Lutheran, one Methodist and at Bible Christian Church.

Most of the land in town came into market in 1839. Among the first settlers were Mr. Buell, about 1836 or 1837; Joseph Irwin, Mr. McLaughlin, Joshua Cheney and Paul McMahon, in 1836 or 1837; Gideon Wales, Isaac N. Smith, Mr. Van Vleck, J. Shirtleff, Nathan Raymond, Charles Raymond, J. W. Brackett, John McLean, Charles Hart and father, William Leith, Isaac Fellows, Charles Leland, G. H. Breed, James Hines, Deacon Degraff, Mr. Ellis, Jacob Keeler, Charles Shut, Harmenus Van Vleck and sons, Amos and Aaron, who came in 1838, 1839 or 1840.

Brookfield Junction.—The first depot was built here in 1853, at the junction of the Milwaukee & Prairie du Chien road (then called Milwaukee & Mississippi) and the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway (then called the Milwaukee, Watertown & Baraboo Valley). This depot is now used as a dwelling house. The present depot was built in 1867, after the purchase of the Milwaukee, Watertown & Baraboo Railway, by the Milwaukee & Prairie du Chien Company. Dyer Bill kept the first post office here. C. H. Purple, now dead, opened the first store in town, at or near Brookfield, in 1852. He also kept the post office here, which was established after the coming of the railway. Fare from Brookfield to Waukesha was once but 10 cents. John Ban started a little shop here in 1858. He was engaged in working for the railway company, when a bank caved in on him, disabling him, and compelling him to resort to this means of support. He soon sold out, an addition was built to his shop, and a hotel was opened here by Harry Cox.

A steam saw-mill was built here in 1849 or 1850, by Bean, Clinton, Powers and E. D. Holton. This mill they constructed and fitted up on quite an extensive scale, there being a fifty-horse-power engine and two boilers, but, the various working parts proving very defective, the mill did not work well. After it had been run about a year without paying, E. D. Holton and W. D. Bacon purchased the interests of Bean, Clinton & Powers, becoming joint-owners. They at once proceeded to change the working parts and connections in the mill, putting in new and improved machinery, and adding a twenty-two-inch circular saw in place of the mulay saw. From this time on the mill proved a complete success. In a short time after, Mr. Bacon purchased Mr. Holton's interest, becoming sole proprietor, and held possession and ran the mill as long as there was need of one in this vicinity.

The Milwaukee & Mississippi Railroad Company depended very largely upon this mill for lumber for building cars, bridges and roadbeds. That was before the invention of satisfactory "chairs" for holding the ends of the rails where they unite, and one of the first pieces of work done here was to cut ties 18 inches wide for this purpose. These double ties were laid the entire distance from Waukesha to Eagle. A quantity of timber, twenty-two inches wide, sixteen feet long and six inches thick, enough to lay two to each one of the cattle guards, from Eagle to Prairie du Chien, were sawed here, besides crossing-plank and bridge timbers. All of the first ties used in the several "y's" at Milton Junction were cut here, and the plank and ties used in constructing the first railroad bridge over Rock River, at Janesville. The entire bill of 100,000 feet of joists required to build John Nazro's large double store at Milwaukee, was sawed here. When the mill closed, Mr. Bacon sold the boilers and engine to R. N. Kimball, who set them in his grist mill at Waukesha.

Elm Grove.—The majority of the inhabitants of Elm Grove are Germans, and it is an exceedingly quiet little burg.

The depot was built here in 1864, and about that time the post office was established, with G. B. Breed as Postmaster. After him, Mr. Schlick, then Mr. Reusch, then Mrs. Reusch, the present Postmistress. The first store was kept by Mr. Wood, in the basement of the building now owned by Mrs. Reither. Mr. Reither is now the oldest store-keeper here.

St. Mary's Orphan Asylum and Convent of the Sisters of Notre Dame was founded by Lady Superior Caroline, of the Mother House, in Milwaukee, in 1855, at first as an asylum. For the last two or three years it has been used for a convent school, as well as asylum. It is at present self-supporting, and has a large farm connected with it. There are now about eighteen children, twenty candidates and twenty-four Sisters in the convent. There is a church and two parish schools in connection with the institution. Sister Mary Hippolita is now the sister in charge.

TOWN OF DELAFIELD.

Originally the present town of Delafield, Township 7, of Range 18 east, formed a part of the town of Warren, now Merton; by act of the Legislature, approved February 17, 1842, it was included as part of Warren, the election to be held at the schoolhouse in District No. 1; by an act approved March 21, 1843, the boundaries were established as they now are, and the town named Nehmabin, the first election to be held at the house of N. P. Hawks; and by an act of the Legislature, passed January 26, 1844, the name was changed from Nehmabin to Delafield.

The town of Delafield presents as many attractions, especially to the tourist, as any in the county. That it is one of the most beautiful, fertile and well watered, cannot be denied. Here are as fine drives, views and farming lands as heart can wish for or imagination suggest.

The population of the town is quite varied in nationality. It is an easy matter for one to study here, in the space of a few square miles, the manners and customs of several different nationalities. The Welsh still live in primitive simplicity among the hills of the south; in the northwest, the Scandinavian cultivates the hop-vine with enthusiasm, and in other parts Yankee and Scotchman, Englishman and German, each pursues his peculiar way of life without let or hindrance from the others.

The first claim was made by Deacon Schnyler, in the spring of 1837. He erected a cabin on the site of the present village of Delafield, and lived there for a year or more, then moved into the town of Summit. Albert Campbell came in 1837, and chose the fine farm where he now resides. Here he at once built himself a little house out of poplar logs, covered the top with poplar poles, with more of them split into "shakes" for shingles; made his furniture of the same facile material, and "enjoyed himself the best he ever did in his life." Mrs. Campbell says that she felt as if she was entering a palace when their household goods were removed to a more substantial log house (which is now rotting down in the woods). The following parties also came in this year, besides some whose names are not known, viz., Hiram Campbell, Henry C. Skinner, George W. Skinner, Edwin Skinner, E. Melvin Skinner, Gaylord Ellsworth, Homer S. Finley, D. W. Kellogg, George Paddock and Millard Hughson.

In 1838, Stephen Warren came in and many others, the exact date of their arrivals not being known. About this time or soon after, there came Ira Morris, A. J. Wilson, John A. Messenger, Elisha Daggett, Robert Lookwood, John Heath, Harvey Burchard, Rufus Scott, Edward Pearmain, Ben Brewer, Ben Moffit and Nathaniel Hughson; but many of these moved away soon after or sold their claims.

According to the old poll list for September, 1842, there were but nineteen voters; of those not already mentioned there were George Paddock, Martin Waite, Harvey Brewer, Isaac Harrison, N. P. Hawks, Francis Chase, Ben Brewer, E. Dolivar, M. B. and W. Cushing, E. L. Mathews, A. L. Castleman, and Samuel Smith. Soon after, Michael Ward, Thomas Cahill, Mike Clarey, Jack Wilson, John Heath, Russell Frisby, Daniel Plumley, Albert Alden and many others came.

The first deaths were those of E. Melvin Skinner and Gaylord Ellsworth, who were drowned in Snail Lake, now known as Pewaukee Lake. This was a most sad and aggravating circumstance, and is still fresh in the memory of many. It occurred October 8, 1837.

The first funeral and first sermon was on the occasion of the deaths, by drowning, of the above named. The ceremony was conducted by Elder Wheeler, about October 12, 1837.

Not many years after this, Edward Pearmain committed suicide by shooting himself, owing to trouble which he had with Daniel Plumly, his son-in-law, said to have been a worthless wretch, who subsequently traded his wife with another fellow, of equal merit, for his sister.

The first marriage was that of Henry Bowron to Miss Hellen Campbell, the ceremony of the occasion being performed by Elder Griffin, of Waukesha, in the spring of 1840.

The first person to commence his existence in this town was Frank H. Skinner, son of Henry C. and Susan Skinner, born January 4, 1838. He died in California.

A school was taught by Mrs. Stephen Warren, in a room of their dwelling-house, in the fall of 1840, there being about twelve pupils. This was the first school taught in town.

The first school in a schoolhouse was taught by Morgan L. Skinner, in 1841-42. Number of pupils, fifteen. The schoolhouse was made of poplar logs, and stood near Rowell's gate.

The first dam was built and a saw-mill commenced by the Warrens, in 1841, at Hartland. This property was purchased by Christ Hershey, in 1842, and was operated by him for several years.

The first well was made in 1841, by Stephen Warren, on the place occupied by the Widow Skinner.

The first store in the town was opened at Delafield in 1843, by Albert Alden, in the building afterward occupied as a hotel by Silas Barber.

In July, 1842, N. P. Hawks advertised for a blacksmith, and soon after a shop was started here by a Mr. Selick.

The first Justice's docket in the town was opened by Milton B. Cushing, on the 15th day of February, 1840, and a case was tried by him between Russell Frisby, defendant, and G. S. Hosmer, plaintiff. Mr. Cushing was succeeded by N. P. Hawks, in 1843.

The old Territorial road came to Delafield in 1838, and gave the town the benefit of a public thoroughfare.

The first hotel was started by N. P. Hawks as early as 1840. Hawks was known from that time forward for many years as the "prince of high living."

There were three hotels, located between Delafield and Pewaukee, on the stage route in this town, as early as 1844, and so great was the travel that they all did a thriving business until the advent of the plank road and railroad. Daniel McVean owned one on Section 25, and Messrs. Houston & Crombie owned the others on Section 26. They were all burned after 1850, heavily insured.

At the first town meeting held in Delafield, then Warren, at the schoolhouse of District No. 1, Tuesday, January 5, 1842, the following officers were elected, George Paddock being chosen Moderator, and George W. Skinner Clerk of the meeting: Milton B. Cushing, Chairman, Henry Cheney and William Odell, Side Supervisors; Town Clerk, Elias Palmer; Constable and Collector, Stephen Warren; Assessor, Hiram Warren; Road Commissioners, John Johnson, John Molster and A. L. Castleman; School Commissioners, Samuel B. Parsons, Albert Campbell and Philetus S. Cross. It was then resolved that all town officers should receive a compensation of \$1 per day for service if not otherwise provided for by law; that a tax should be levied on all property not to exceed $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent, for school purposes, on all taxable property, and that \$25 shall be raised to pay town officers. According to the first assessment roll, there were but twenty-four tax-payers in the town. The amount of personal property assessed was \$1,530; of real estate, \$9,815.32; total wealth of the town, \$11,345.32.

A saw-mill was built on Bark River, Section 19, by Albert Alden, in 1844. N. P. Hawks soon after built a flouring-mill here, and became half-owner in the whole property, with Mr. Alden. Shortly after this, Mr. Alden sold his interest to Mr. Hawks, then, directly after, everything burned, with no insurance. Mr. Hawks rebuilt, erecting a commodious frame structure. Eventually the property was purchased by Rossman & Wheelock, afterward Rossman & Kern, they selling to Mr. Notbohm, the present owner. The dam has a nine foot-head.

Dr. Castleman was the first practicing physician in town.

Delafield Village.—This place was first called Hayopolis, then Nehmabin, then, in 1843, Delafield, after a Mr. Delafield, who came here from New York to start a mulberry grove. In an early day, this place was the chief point on the road between Watertown and Prairieville.

The land here was bought from the Government by Messrs. Pearmain and Heath, and Mr. Pearmain built the second house here. The first frame house was built by Mr. Heath. In 1842, Mr. Heath began the work of building a dam and erecting a mill. He soon after sold an interest to Mr. Delafield, and a man by the name of P. Potter, Register of the Land Office, Milwaukee, in 1843, also became interested about this time. After Mr. Delafield died, Mrs. Delafield held the property. In 1846, Andrew Proudfit bought it, and Heath and Potter left. He refitted the mill, dug a new race, raised the dam, and added a steam engine, then run the mill night and day, doing an immense business. Proudfit, about this time, erected the building now occupied by John Kilmer for a store and post-office. He subsequently erected several buildings, but eventually failed and lost everything. He was one of the most enterprising citizens Delafield ever had. Mr. H. Buck now owns the mill.

In 1843, the post-office was established here, and N. P. Hawks was appointed Postmaster. At that time the people from Merton had to come here for their mail.

In 1847, N. P. Hawks built a commodious hotel. Mr. Hawks was the great joker and story teller of the country.

In 1843, Jacob Luther came in and opened a blacksmith shop, after Selick, and lived here the remainder of his life. He died in 1879, and the old shop is closed.

In the fall of 1844, Simon Dolivar was killed, just north of the village, by a sleigh overturning and letting a saw-log fall on him.

In 1850, N. P. Hawks put up a frame building for a town hall, about where stood the first hotel, or Pearmain House. This building Mr. Jacques afterward purchased, and rebuilt as it now is. It is at present used by Mr. Kuntz for a store. The hotel kept here now is the one kept by Silas Barber in the palmy staging days of yore. At that time there were three hotels here. While Barber was here, a man named Hull put in his appearance one day with a span of horses to sell, making oath that they were his; Barber was about to buy, when word came that Hull was a perjurer, that the horses belonged at Kenosha. Hull was at once arrested and brought before Justice Jacques, who has been a resident here since 1844. Hull had no money or counsel, so Mr. Jacques said to N. P. Hawks, who was present, "You will please act as counsel for this man, Mr. Hawks!" "Very well," said Hawks, "but if I act I shall clear him." "With that I have nothing to do," said Justice Jacques. Just at this time the owner came on, and of course Hull was thought to be a goner. The trial was to come off in the evening, but, while all parties were standing in front of the Justice's office, in the dusk, what should the worthy Hawks do but slyly raise an empty dry-goods box, when no one was looking, and slip Hull under it. The Deputy Sheriff, Houston, had been rather indifferent about watching Hull, and when called could not find him. "How is this, Mr. Houston?" said the Justice. Said Houston; "I don't find him." "No, nor you won't; for it is written, in the Second Book of Hawks, that when a person gets forty rods the start, from my pump, in the night, he is what you might call clear." He escaped.

When the project of getting a plank road built through here was being discussed, in 1848 and 1849, N. P. Hawks wanted it built at one place, and Dr. Castleman at another, each promising to give a handsome sum to have it as he wished. Between the two stools, the road fell to the ground. William M. Jacques, a public-spirited man, went so far as to build quite a stretch of grade in addition to his subscription, but it availed nothing. At about this time, Daniel Kellogg conceived the idea that it would be a good thing to build a steam mill in the eastern part of the town, and also a piece of gravel road to reach it. He undertook the latter first, and completed one of the finest pieces of road in the State, but bankrupted himself by doing it.

There are two churches in Delafield. The Episcopal Church was built at a very early day, by J. Ralston Cox, of Philadelphia, and donated to the parish of Saint John Chrysostom, Delafield. Dr. Adams, of Nashotah, is the present rector. It is a commodious structure and very handsomely finished in hard woods.

The Presbyterian Church was organized November 16, 1866, with the following members: D. D. Robertson, Catharine Robertson, Robert Miekkel, Marion Miekkel, Elizabeth Anderson, Mary Lowrie, Elizabeth Jaques, Anna M. Jaques, Mary Davis, James C. Robertson and Mrs. Ella Robertson. During the summer of 1868, the church was built. It was dedicated January 28, 1869. There are now fifty members. The pastors have been P. D. Young, J. H. Potter, and J. Martin, the present minister.

Delafield has an I. O. O. F. Lodge, which is one of the oldest in the county. N. C. Hawks, son of N. P. Hawks, published a small newspaper here at one time.

Hartland.—Stephen Warren was the first settler at this place and remains here yet. The first improvements of any value were constructing the dam and erecting the saw and grist mills, which were going as early as 1842, under the management of Christ Hershey. The grist-mill is now used for a cider mill; the saw-mill was torn down several years ago. It stood west of the grist-mill. The first store was opened by William Hobkirk in 1844. The next store was opened in 1846 by McVean and William P. Clark. McVean died or left in a short time after and Chauncy Simonds bought and ran the business.

The first mail route through Hartland was established in 1846. The first Postmaster was William P. Clark, who was soon succeeded by Chauncy Simonds, and the first quarterly returns were $5.46.

The Congregational Church was built in 1855-57, but the society was organized as early as 1842. A meeting was held, it is said, in a barn on the farm of Mr. Cheney, now owned by Mr. Wakeman, where the society was organized by the Rev. Baker, to be called the First Congregational Church of Warren. The members were, J. C. Molster, Sarah Molster, Nancy Hopkins, William Cheney, S. Warren, D. K. Warren, N. Nicholson, Sybrant Hale, J. Ferguson, Euphemia Ferguson and Lucy Wells. O. S. Smith is the present pastor. Since the first school taught here by Mrs. Warren, in a small room, the number of pupils has increased, until now a fine school building is used, with two departments. About eighteen years ago, the Rev. Bennett, a student of Nashotah, preached in the cider-mill, and succeeded in getting enough by subscription to buy a lot. After about six years, there was enough money raised, by church socials and sundry subscriptions, with $100 presented by Bishop Kemper, to begin a church. The church cost $1,100; the furniture was obtained from an old church in Chicago. Services are now held at irregular intervals.

The first Lutheran Church movement of Hartland was started in 1870, by Mr. J. C. Krause and Mr. Ole Hansen, each pledging together that they would donate $50 apiece toward a church. Accordingly, meetings were called at two different times, first at the house of Jacob Blich, second at the house of Ole Hansen, where, a large number being present, it was decided to build a church. As a result, they had a snug little church ready for dedication on the second Sunday of 1871, and P. M. Hatelstadt preached the sermon in English. The church is free, the minister being supported by subscription. Preaching is in English. There are now about 100 members.

The first depot of the La Crosse Division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad built at this point, is now used for a stable. The depot which succeeded it was built in 1867 and stood here until the morning of the 25th of May, 1879, when it was struck by lightning and burned to the ground.

A large amount of grain is shipped from this point annually, Mr. Johnson, who has a warehouse, having shipped as high as 100,000 bushels per annum.

The charter of Bark River Lodge, No. 122, A., F. & A. M., was granted to William Goodman, Master; George E. Bergwell, Senior Warden, and Henry Shears, Junior Warden, by the Grand Lodge, June 13, 1860. There are now thirty-seven members on the roll. The lodge room over the store of Mr. Staps, is carpeted and neatly furnished and decorated.

Hartland Temple of Honor, No. 93, was organized December 28, 1876, and was finally instituted on the 15th of January, 1877, with fifteen members. The officers were: W. C. T., William S. O'Brien; W. V. T., H. E. Salsich; P. W. C. T., J. T. Bickford; W. C., Charles A. Fassett; A. R., George Crozier; F. R., W. Wilson; W. T., William LeRoy; W. U., Charles Kerr; D. U., O. Finch. There have been 110 initiated. There are now 36 members in good standing, with a good hall.

There is a large flouring-mill here now; also several stores and mechanics' shops.

Nashotah Station, once called Pine Lake, is in this town. There have been a hotel and store near here for several years.

TOWN OF EAGLE.

Township 5, Range 17 East, was first organized into a precinct separate from and independent of adjoining towns, in accordance with act of the Council and House of Representatives of the Territory of Wisconsin, January 12, 1841. Up to 1839, Eagle was a part of Mukwonago; then a part of Genesee up to the passage of the above act. The first town meeting was held at the house of Andrew Scofield, in Eagleville. However, it is impossible to be strictly accurate in the earliest details, owing to the fact that the first town records are lost, so far as ascertainable.

The town received its name in a rather singular manner, as follows: In the year 1836, while Thomas Sugden, John Coats and a Mr. Garton were prospecting, they came to a beautiful prairie about one and a half by two and a half miles in area. Here, hovering and curving over a large mound, near the present residence of Ebenezer Thomas, was a monster bald-headed eagle. From this incident and time, the prairie and town were called Eagle.

The country, in its natural state, was diversified by springs, brooks, marshes, prairie and burr oak openings. The arable soil is slightly variable in composition, being, for the most part, a rich loam and gravel, and is quite productive. A chain of bluffs passes through the northwest part, but the greater part of the land is tillable. Here, as elsewhere in the county, the inhabitants suffered the deprivations incident to pioneer life, which have become the subjects for many an evening tale.

The first claim is said to have been made by A. R. Hinkley on Eagle Prairie, where he now lives, the 20th of September, 1836, and here he erected a shanty, the following winter, which yet remains, "a relic of by-gone days."

Here he brought his family in 1838, and in a space 12x16 feet, put up two beds, a pine table, a rotating-top stove, four chairs or stools, a large box for bedding, five barrels of flour and one of pork. This single experience but illustrates the trials and inconveniences to which all were subject.

In 1836, Eb Thomas and wife came and erected a house on their claim and occupied it. They were actually the first permanent settlers. The year following, Mr. Thomas started a blacksmith-shop, the first in the town.

Mrs. Bovee, mother of Matthias Bovee, one of the distinguished dead, is said to have been the first person who died in the town of Eagle, though John Hurst and Ebenezer Thomas lost infants at about the same time. Charles Sherman, who now resides at Whitewater, was the first child born in the town, and his people, who have long since moved away, were among the very first settlers.

In 1837, Jerry Parsons built a hotel at the point called Jericho, on the road to Madison and the "Far West." This was the first regular hotel. Jericho took its name from the first syllables of Parsons' given name and the Bible name, but it cannot be said to have been a more than usually saintly place. Jericho had also at one time two stores, one kept by H. Skidmore, and the other by a Mr. Spooner—with shops accordingly.

The fall and winter of 1836, found Daniel Bigelow, one of the pioneer millers of the State, building a little saw-mill in the wilderness, at the place called Eagleville. This was the first mill in the town. Here, for many years, the pioneers hauled their logs and got their lumber sawed. This mill has been gone these many years. The following year, Dr. Bigelow, who appears to have been a very enterprising person, went to work alone, to erect a grist-mill, which was soon completed and doing work, crushing grain for the early settlers. The doctor being unable to get buhrs, hunted around until he found a couple of granite stones suitable for his purpose, dressed and fitted them, and for years these were the only stones used in the mill. Thus does necessity pave the way to invention. This was the first grist-mill in the county, and stood where now stands its successor, the mill of A. Scofield, with its fine machinery and complete general appointments, and which was built about 1844. The first store in the town was started by Mr. Scofield, in 1844, at Eagleville. By this time, this place and the town had become of sufficient importance to require a post-office, which was established here, Mr. Scofield being Postmaster. Previous to this time, the people were compelled to go to Mukwonago to get their mail. Eagleville, at this time, had stores, shops, etc., and until the coming of the railroad in 1851, was the town metropolis.

The first frame dwelling house erected in town was built by T. W. Pitman, at Eagle Center, in 1845, the timbers being sawed at Bigelow's mill, and the lumber for finishing being hauled from Racine. The building is a substantial structure, and in a goodstate of preservation to-day.

The first religious service is said to have been held at Dr. Bigelow's, when an itinerant Presbyterian preached to a small audience.

The first school is said to have been taught by Miss Gertrude Goodrich, in a small building near Jericho, in 1840.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was the first church that held regular services and had a Sunday school. The nucleus of the present church first held services at the house of Mr. Cross, and Rev. Mr. Halsey is said to have been the preacher. Afterward, services were held at different times, here and there, in the settlers' houses, until the erection of the schoolhouse of District No. 1, in 1841, after which time the Methodists held their services in this schoolhouse and others, until the establishment of the church at Eagle Center. It is told of one of the early ministers, a Mr. Moulthrop, from Canada, a very able preacher, that he made application to Messrs. Long and Cross for a picket fence around his yard, and carpet for his floor. They were very indignant at the demand, and replied: "We have no carpets nor picket fences, and if you preach for us you can't have any either." He didn't have any—at least, not in Eagle.

John James and Miss Francis, George Robinson and Ann Archer, were the first couples married here, and Henry Hinkley, the first Justice appointed by the Territorial Governor, performed the ceremonies.

It is said of Miss Cross, who married Jonathan Parsons, in an early day, that after her marriage she used to sweep the floor of her log house, and dust her pine table, wooden chairs, and mud-chinked walls; with cap and gloves on, to the infinite amusement of her less fastidious neighbors.

Cheese manufacturing was begun in the town in 1875, in a building constructed for the purpose of making burial cases, but which was never put to its intended use, on account of the company that built it having come to an unseasonable end. The factory, as it now is, has a capacity for handling 10,000 pounds of milk per day. In connection with the factory, there is a fifteen-horse-power engine which runs a log-sawing apparatus, and a planing and feed mill.

The "in-fair," held at Andrew Scofield's, in Eagleville, in honor of the marriage of his adopted son, will be well remembered by the oldest inhabitants. On that occasion, in the autumn of 1841, nearly all of the inhabitants within a radius of six miles were invited and were present, and were entertained with all the jolly old-time hospitality. Rachael Scofield and Andrew, her husband (a Quaker), did nothing by halves; and, Rachael being a most excellent cook, it may be easily believed that there was fun and feasting without stint. Here the young couple sat in a corner bolt upright, with their backs against the logs, and maintained the dignity of the occasion, and received the compliments and respects of their many friends who came to see them off on the journey of life. Nowadays, the bride is not often found cooking and serving her own marriage refreshments.

William Harrison kept the first store in Eagle, in 1842, at the place called Palestine. Here a hotel was also kept a few years later, and perhaps a blacksmith-shop, etc. There is nothing left now to show for that condition.

A Mr. Long, said to have been the longest man in Eagle, in an early day came very near to starvation at one time, and was obliged, in order to avoid this result, to live on such roots and fruits as could be found in the forests.

There are a few slight errors, apparently, in the following report made in 1871 to the Old Settlers' Club, but they are by far too insignificant to impair its value:

The Town of Eagle was first settled during the fall of the year 1836. The persons settling were William Sherman, Jonathan Parsons, Henry A. Hinkley, Ahira R. Hinkley, Harrison Ward, Daniel Bigelow, Andrew Schofield, Richard B. Whitehouse and James Bigelow. In 1837, Ebenezer Thomas, James T. Walklin, John Long, Thomas Orchard, — Taylor, William Ellis, Baxter P. Melendy, Daniel F. Melendy, Herman Enos, David Benedict, Samoa Parsons, Ferrand Bigelow, Isaac Severance, Daniel Ewers, Emory Harris, Richard Sharpe, David Barnard, Seneca Harris, Jerome C. Sawyer and Samuel Orchard. In 1838, James Bias, John Hurst, John Carlin, Ebenezer F. Weld, Leveritt Sherman, Francis Draper and Jonathan Betts. In 1839, William De Wolf, William C. Garton and David Crerar. In 1840, James Cation, Widow — Barnard, Obed Barnard, Joshua Roberts, Henry Pett and Richard Sleep. In 1841, William K. Cash, Daniel Jennings, Jerome Hopkins, Sherman R. Hopkins and William Robinson. In 1842, John C. Snover, Rev. Newell Dustin, Clement Dustin, Henry Wall, Henry James, Hugh Murphy, Isaac Bottomly, Thomas Trow, — Miller, Cyrenus Baldwin, Charles Raynous, John Hinton, Joseph Hage, William J. Hage, Richard Hage, John Hancock, Oramel Hinkley, Matthew Bartlett, Gregory Abbott, Joseph M. Stillwell and George Atwood. In 1843, Col. F. A. Sprague, George Underhill, Matthias J. Bovee, Philip V. Bovee, Ransom Kestead, Robert Rose, Benedict A. Bovee, James Dillon, Ward Atwater and Alsados Newcomb. In 1844, W. W. Tredway, — Geer, — Luck, David Toop, Peter D. Gifford, David Lampman, Dr. Thomas Emerson, Robert Clark, Daniel B. Reels, Noah Young, Daciel D. Carpenter, George E. Logan, Daniel T. Sabin, Henry Snyder, Eber Ewers, Thomas Taylor, Thomas Sugden, Lester Gifford, Thomas W. Pitman, John Crowley, Robert Andise, — Arnold, Linas Morgan, Charles M. Cole and Henry Palmer.

The first white child born within the town was Charles Sherman, son of William Sherman. The second born was Jacob Thomas, son of Ebenezer Thomas. L. D. Hinkley, son of Ahira R. Hinkley, was the third person born within the town.

First marriage, Jonathan Parsons and Miss Jane Cross. First death, a child of John Hurst. First breaking of the soil was done by Kirkendall and Pendall, 1836; first manufacturing establishment was a saw-mill and grist-mill built in 1836, Daniel Bigelow proprietor; second, a fanning mill factory by Newell & Clement Dustin, 1842; first schoolhouse, a log structure built by William Sherman, on Sec. No. 24, 1841; first school was taught by Miss Emily Goodrich, 1842; first blacksmith, Charles Raynous, 1842; first shoemaker, Seneca Harris, 1844; first tailor, Robert Clark, 1844; first tavern, kept by Isaac Severance, 1844; first wagon-maker, Henry Jamea, 1843. * * * *

Respectfully submitted,

J. C. SNOVER,
A. R. HINKLEY,
J. T. WALKLIN.

Eagle Center.—The village of Eagle Center is located in the center of Section 22, a little southeast of the geographical center of the town, from which it derives its name.

The location, in point of general detail, is not the best. The soil is sand and gravel, and the surface of the ground in the northwest part is uneven.

The village dates its infancy from 1851, when the southern branch of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad was laid through the county. At that time, William J. Kline, who had but recently purchased eighty acres of land here, gave to the railroad company three acres for a depot and general use, and laid out a plat of town lots. At about the same time, Mr. Sprague, who owned eighty acres of land east of Mr. Kline's and adjoining the same, and T. W. Pitman, who came in 1844, and who owned the land south of and adjoining Messrs. Kline and Sprague's, also laid out plats of town lots. These lots are now, after a lapse of twenty-nine years, nearly all taken, and in use either as residences or business places.

In point of commercial importance Eagle is claimed to take rank as third in the county at the present time, although it is not so old by many years as Eagleville, once the metropolis of the town. The village has grown steadily, though slowly, from the first, to its present proportions. It has now two dry-goods houses (Coombs Bros. and J. A. Lins), two hardware stores (W. McWilliams and C. Lins & Schmidt), two clothing and tailor establishments (J. A. Lins, and Mr. E. Bossingham), Lins' butcher-shop, E. Bovee, grocer, one harness-shop, milliners and saloons.

There is a very good elevator and warehouse located here, which does a very large grain-buying and cleaning business. It is fitted up with the latest and best machinery, and has a cleaning and storage capacity of 15,000 bushels. It is an old, unused warehouse refitted, which, in all probability, would otherwise have added but little to the prosperity of the town. The proprietors are Harvey Clemons and J. O. Hall.

The postoffice was located here after the coming of the railroad.

The first store was opened by Charles Bronson, in the building now used for a postoffice, directly in front of which, in the road, is the center-stake of the section on which the village stands.

The present and only hotel ever built here, is a plain structure, which was erected in 1853, by Mr. Kline, near the site of the first house in the village.

The schoolhouse of District No. 9 is located in this village. The district was first organized December 9, 1846, on petition of M. J. Bovee, F. O. Sprague, R. Kestead, T. W. Pitman, H. C. Thayer, H. Skelton, E. Skelton, William R. Bovee, R. Sprague and F. A. Sprague, Jr. P. V. Bovee was chosen First Moderator, H. C. Thayer, Clerk, and F. A. Sprague, Thomas W. Pitman and H. Skelton, Trustees. The first schoolhouse here was 24x30 feet, twelve feet high, with a balloon frame, and was erected at an expense not exceeding $800. It was completed and ready for use in the winter of 1850 and 1851.

The present building, which was erected on a site purchased from Mr. Pitman in the year 1859, is a fine two-story frame building. It has a main schoolroom, library and recitation rooms on the ground floor, and large primary department, with recitation-room and closets on the second floor, together with entries and hall.

In the year 1860, John Hage, an old settler and thorough-going Methodist, purchased the old schoolhouse for a little over $80, and converted it into a church. This was the first Methodist Episcopal Church in town, and here himself and others preached nine or ten years, until there was some dissatisfaction expressed by the people, when Mr. Hage offered the building for sale at auction. It was purchased by the congregation, who then elected Trustees and decided to erect a new church.

The new Methodist Episcopal Church was built in 1870, and dedicated by Dr. Bellows. H. C. Tilton was the first pastor. Mr. Robinson is the present pastor, with a membership of forty. The Baptist Church in this village, and the only one in the town, was organized in 1870, and the old schoolhouse and Methodist Episcopal Church was purchased for its use. The church began with a membership of seven. The Baptists have never had a regularly located and salaried pastor, except one for six months, and students that have come at different intervals from Morgan Park Theological Seminary, Chicago. Although their services have been irregular and their membership small, never exceeding thirty-five, yet they have always maintained Sabbath schools.

The Trustees of the First Methodist Episcopal Church were John Hage, Jesse Tomlinson, Mr. Haswell, James Griffin, Daniel G. Griffin, J. Parsons and Thomas Onyon.

WAUKESHA

The clergymen called were Revs. Tilton, Cooley, Watkin, Eldridge, Carpenter, and the present pastor, Mr. Robinson.

There is but one secret society in the place, or the town—the Robert Morris Lodge of Free Masons, No. 115. This lodge was organized January 15, 1859, with a charter membership of seven, viz.: Thomas McWilliams, M. J. Bovee, M. H. Bovee, Isaac Newstadt, Charles W. Potter, F. G. Parks and H. R. Hill. The present number of members is thirty-three.

There is a union depot at this place sufficiently large to accommodate the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway and the branch of the Western Union, which has its northern terminus at this point.

The first celebration here was quite a notable event, as it came off on the 4th of July following the coming of the railway, and is remembered as an occasion of big doings, when every one from far and near that could come was there; and when S. S. Merrill, then a freight conductor on the road, was the ruling genius of the day, and the god of the fire-works.

TOWN OF GENESEE.

By an act of the Legislature approved March 8, 1839, the town of Genesee was made to comprise the present towns of Genesee, Eagle and Ottawa. By an act approved March 21, 1843, the present town boundaries were established.

In 1851, the town was surveyed into school districts by E. Manning.

The first town meeting on record was held at Andrew Scofield's, in Eagleville.

Stillman Smith is said to have been the first person to lay a claim in the present town, which he did in the spring of 1837. The summer following, himself and his brother Horace, who came on in June, built a house on Section 32, this being the first house and they the first actual settlers.

In September, Absalom Denny settled in north part of town with family, said to have been the first family to settle here; also this year B. A. Jenkins came in.

The first hotel was erected by Mr. Jenkins in what is now known as North Genesee, but which at that time, and later, was known as Jenkinville. The tavern stood on the corner where now stands a blacksmith-shop, opposite the store and hotel of Mr. Bowman, and was known to travelers as "Jenkins' Log Cabin."

A very good story is told of Jenkins and his pluck. He went into Milwaukee with a wheelbarrow to get provisions, and brought them out all right—nearly twenty-five miles.

In 1841, a German itinerant preacher discoursed to the people at the house of Stillman Smith. Old Mrs. Pitts Ellis says: "Quaw (his name) will never be forgotten, nor his text, as he kept repeating, 'Why stand ye here all day idle in the market place?' while his eyes stuck out and his hands kept sawing the air." This was the first preaching.

Charles Raynous, who at first lived in Mukwonago, came to North Prairie in the fall of 1837, and put up a house and moved in soon after.

The following season, Mr. Raynous put up a shop and began doing blacksmithing; the first in this section and the first in town. Here the farmers came for many years to have their "breaking-plows" made and all general work done. It was the custom then, for any one who wanted a plow made, to off with his jacket and officiate with the heavy sledge hammer until it was done.

Mr. Raynous kept a sort of tavern, and Mrs. Raynous, one of the first women in the town, had to divide her attentions among a lot of worthy bachelors, among whom may be mentioned Messrs. Horace and Stillman Smith.

The first school was kept overhead in Mr. Raynous' house in 1840, by a Mrs. Cash, who taught eight or ten pupils.

The woolen-mill of James Proctor, located on the road between North Genesee and the depot, is the oldest in the town and county. The original building was erected in 1844 by D. T. Hicox. After passing through several hands, it finally came into the possession of the present owner. The old mill walls and timbers are in excellent condition yet, and, although there has in later years been added a substantial addition, yet the main portion of the machinery still runs in the old part. The principal power is supplied by a small stream. An eleven and one-quarter inch Leffel turbine, with the aid of an eight-horse power upright engine, does the work. Mr. Proctor, after coming into possession twelve years ago, put in a large amount of new machinery, such as a new set of forty-inch cards, a 200-spindle jack and other things to match.

The old saw-mill, near North Genesee, was built by Benjamin A. Jenkins, in 1840. In 1850, an effort was made to get the State Prison located here, and Messrs. Remington and Hamilton offered twenty acres of their stone quarry, called the Genesee Quarry, as a location.

The first death in the present town is said to have been that of a German named Synder, who committed suicide in the year 1838 or 1839, by displacing a quantity of water with his person.

The first services of the Congregational Church were held in a log schoolhouse, two and a half miles southwest of Waukesha.

May 7, 1843, a meeting of professing Christians was held at the house of Mathew Dodson, North Prairie, to consider the expediency of organizing a church. Rev. Stephen Peet was appointed Moderator, and H. W. Sherman, Clerk. A second meeting was held at the house of Mr. Sherman. After a sermon by Mr. Peet, the following persons united in forming a church: William Tredway and wife, Selah Castle and wife, P. Castle and wife, William Hill and Rachel Hill, B. A. Jenkins and wife, Amasa West, Vroman and Phœbe Hinkley, A. T. Sherman, Mrs. A. Marsh, Miss M. Smith and Mrs. Van Schaick. W. W. Tredway and S. Castle were appointed Deacons, and B. A. Jenkins, Clerk. In August, 1843, Rev. C. Warner was called, who preached one year. In October of 1848, Rev. C. W. Camp, now at Waukesha, was called to preach for a year. In December following, the name of the church was changed from North Prairie to Genesee. The present church edifice was built in 1851, and dedicated in September of the same year. The present Pastor is Rev. John Fassitt.

The first services for the Welsh Calvinistic Church of Genesee, were held at the house of Richard Jones, 1843. Afterward, for a long time, Sunday schools and services were held in his barn, under the management of Griffith Robberts and H. Elias. R. Jones, John Hughes, Morgan Jones, Thomas Hughes and many others, with their entire families, were regular attendants at this time. A log meeting-house was built on Section 9, in 1845, and was used until the building of the present church, in 1850, which was enlarged and improved in 1870, making the entire cost of the edifice, furnished and with organ, $2,000. First Board of Trustees: Richard Jones, Thomas H. Evans and H. Elias. Present Board: William Evans, R. Mason, John Roderick, D. Charles, C. Jones and Richard Davis. The present preacher is Rev. R. H. Evans.

North Prairie.—In this town, North Prairie is the principal village, and is situated on a prairie of the same name. This prairie, so called from the earliest settlement, was named by Messrs. Coats, William C. Garton and Thomas Sugden, who came from Mukwonago, in 1836, to this point, on a prospecting tour, and, as they did not go any farther north, they concluded to call this North Prairie. The village never amounted to anything until the advent of the railroad. The first hotel, now called the "Equality," was built by Peter D. Gifford, a man of considerable political influence in the county twenty-five years ago.

Orlando Harrison is said to have been one of the first wheat-buyers. Dayton H. Prentice occupied, at one time, the warehouse opposite Sadd's building, where religious services and singing schools were sometimes held. Twenty-five years ago, Alfred Sargeant and Mr. Bogardus were well-to-do merchants here, but they ceased operations many years ago. Thomas Sugden, William Sugden, the Wilkinson brothers and many others yet remain of the early settlers. A Good Templars' lodge was organized here about 1857, and held its first meetings in the chamber of Mrs. D. H. Willman's house. The leading spirits in the enterprise were Mr. Boss and wife, Mr. Sargeant and wife, Mrs. Willman, D. H. Prentice, the Misses Green, Mr. Balcon and several others. Mr. Bovee, of Eagle, presided at the first meeting. The lodge was called Mendota. It long ago subsided. The erection of the Methodist Episcopal Church at North Prairie, the election of Trustees and the appointment of pastor in charge all took place in 1864-65. The first preacher was Rev. J. O. Hazeltine, who is now minister in charge at the Sailors' Home, at Milwaukee. The church edifice cost $1,500, the money being subscribed by the inhabitants of the village and the surrounding community.

By an act approved April 10, 1866, Horatio Harrison, Henry Grimshaw, William Nixon, George C. Pratt, Robert Wilkinson, P. D. Gifford, John Magee, James Wallisan and J. T. Walkin were empowered as the "North Prairie Petroleum Company," with a capital of $50,000, to dig or bore a hole in the ground in the town of Genesee, on what was known as "the oil territory," and take out oil, minerals, or anything that might be found in said hole. The enterprise was a failure.

North Genesee.—This village, called in an early day Jenkinsville, began its career soon after Mr. Jenkins built the log cabin. Mr. Holt kept the first store in a building near the present store of Mr. Bowman, in 1844. The first framehouse, was built by Pitts Ellis in 1843, where he lived for many years, and which still remains. In that year, a frame schoolhouse was erected, and Cyrus Remington taught the school at $10 per month. The following year, the Owenites settled here. One of the oldest physicians in the county, Dr. Steele, settled here at that time. Mr. Farnham and family, and Mr. Prentice and family, and many others, settled here at that time or soon after. The church of the Congregational society, in this town (built in 1851), is located here, besides a fine grist-mill, and the cheese factory already mentioned. One of the finest springs in the county was found near here. The flouring mill here was erected by B. F. Jenkins about 1848. It is a solid stone structure three stories in height. From Mr. Jenkins it passed into the hands of Mr. Hart, from whom it was purchased by James Bogley & Son, 1855, who has since run it, though in partnership with others. Tredway & Barker started a store here in 1844. Mr. Tredway was also Postmaster, and, as the story goes, Mr. Elmore succeeded in getting him removed because he defied him (Elmore). Henry Hardy was appointed in his place, and carried on a tailor-shop, postoffice, store, etc.

There is an Odd Fellows' lodge here, organized September 27, 1869. Charter members: B. S. Winchell, James Proctor, A. L. Williams, K. B. Rowlands and W. H. Hardy. First officers as follows: N. G., B. S. Winchell; V. G., W. H. Hardy; Sec'y, A. L. Williams; Treas., R. B. Rowlands. The lodge was first held at the house of H. D. Carr. It is now held at the Odd Fellows' Hall, purchased in 1877 of Mr. Prentice. There are at present thirty-six members. Thomas Steele has two cheese factories, one located on White Creek, in North Genesee, which was built in 1875. The other factory was built by Mr. Frank Shultis, the same year, on the farm of J. A. Jones; from him Mr. Steele purchased it in 1878, and moved it to Roderick's Corners, on Section 17, where it now stands. Old Rufus Watson and Mr. Farnham are perhaps the oldest settlers living in the village of Genesee, although there are several others who came in at nearly the same time, among whom may be mentioned John Paul, Dr. Steele and H. V. Prentice.

The first postoffice in the town was established here.

In 1845, a number of the ladies laid a scheme to surprise their good men, on the 4th of July, with a picnic, and succeeded to a charm in carrying out their aim and having a good time.

Genesee Depot and the surrounding stores and residences are of course, of much later growth than North or South Genesee (called Saylesville). The depot was the first building of any importance built. Mr. Jenkins owned the land at that time, upon part of which he built and kept store and warehouse and bought produce. The hotel was erected about 1861, by P. Lynch. There are at present two or three stores and various mechanics' shops, and a fine warehouse, this being a very good grain-buying and shipping point. The Catholic Church of the town is located here.

South Genesee.—The grist-mill at Saylesville, or South Genesee, was built by Whitman Sayles, David Orendorf and Mr. Le Suer, about 1842. The stone used to build the dam and race was brought in a boat manned by Capt. F. D. Cook, with Mr. Smith as mate. April 16, 1866, G. H. Vincent, the present owner, purchased the mill from Mr. Orendorf, which has been largely improved since it came into his possession. There are now two runs of stone, propelled by two thirty-inch and one twenty-four inch Tyler turbine water wheel.

Sayles & Orendorf opened the first store about 1842. The place has no store at present.

South Genesee has a Sunday-school Hall, which was erected by the Sunday-school Association for the purpose of holding religious services.

Here is also the Excelsior Cheese Factory and Creamery of F. Shultis. It is three stories high, including basement, which has stone walls and cement floor. It is turning out an average of 400 pounds of butter per week.

A fine business of selling milk in Milwaukee, began July, 1879, with a light patronage, which has so largely increased that they are now shipping from 700 to 800 pounds of milk and twenty gallons of cream per diem. This is done by Mr. Shultis and Mr. Vincent.

TOWN OF LISBON.

By an act of the Territorial Legislature approved January 2, 1838, the land included in the present towns of Lisbon, Pewaukee, Brookfield and Menomonee was erected into the town of Lisbon, the first election to be held at the house of Charles Skinner. A subsequent act, passed March 9, 1839, established the town lines as they now are.

This town possesses many very fine general features. All monotony is removed from the scenery by the endless variety of hills and valleys, woodland and prairie.

The soil is clay and limestone marl, the substratum abounding in extensive beds of excellent limestone. It is what would ordinarily be called a heavy soil, being not easy to till. Farmers usually call this kind of land "white-oak land," as white-oak timber grows particularly well upon it.

It is a steadfast, rich, and fruitful soil beyond that of the lighter soils. There are very many fine farms in various parts of the town, and a general air of thrift, intelligence and industry pervades everything in all sections.

There are several churches and a number of schools in the town, all well attended and supported. The dwelling-houses are brick, grout or frame, and usually in good repair. There seems to be in this section quite a general liking for grout houses, as grout, when carefully prepared, makes thoroughly substantial walls and at a very much less cost than any other material.

The inhabitants are principally English, American and Scotch, with a sprinkling of Irish and Germans.

To Thomas S. Redford, probably, belongs the distinction of having been the first one to drive his stake in this town. When he first came here, he accompanied the surveying party of Hudson, Vliet and Brink, who surveyed through the town early in 1836. In May of this year, he located the claim which he now occupies, on Section 25.

In June of this year, P. Ray, James Hanford and William Packard came out from Milwaukee and selected claims, and assisted T. S. Redford in erecting his first shanty, this being a sort of headquarters for all until each could get a cabin raised. Soon after, probably about the month of August, John Weaver, Lucius Botsford, Thomas Rolf and David Bonham came into the town. They at once made claims and proceeded with all dispatch to erect houses for their families, for they were all, but one, family men. Having got their houses up and ready during this fall and winter, they then went into the city of Milwaukee, where the women and children were staying, and brought them out before the snow was off the ground in the spring. A. A. Redford came in at this time also. These four women were the first in the town, as also were their children the first of the small folks.

In the spring and summer of 1837, James Weaver, who now lives at Sussex; George Elliott, Edward Smith, Nathan Peso and Samuel Dougherty came with their families and settled here, making for themselves permanent homes.

During the year 1841 and the year following, there was quite an influx of settlers, among whom may be mentioned, Robert James and Archibald Rodgers, John Small, Alexander Harris and a Mr. Moyes, all said to have come from Scotland; Thompson Richmond, George Cairncross, J. Reed, Thomas Bloor and family, John Muir, Henry Sears, Harrison and Henry Phillips, Ira D. Goodwin, Ira and Mark Rowell, Dr. John A. Willard, John Thompson, E. B. Quiner, and Elisha Pearl, and many other persons came during the following year. From this time forward the increase in population was steady, if not rapid.

According to the town records, the first election was held April 5, 1842, at the stone schoolhouse on Section 35, when Samuel Dougherty was chosen Moderator, and David Bonham, Clerk. David Bonham was regularly elected Chairman of the Board; and Samuel Dougherty and Lucius Botsford, Side Supervisors. David Bonham was also elected Clerk; James Weaver, Treasurer; R. Blount, Assessor; George Comstock, Collector; D. Bonham, Ed Smith and James Weaver, Commissioners of Highways; Sherman and Lucius Botsford and D. Bonham, School Commissioners; E. W. Fowler and Thomas Redford, Constables; John Weaver, Sealer of Weights and Measures; A. A. Redford, Samuel Dougherty, D. Bonham and William Weaver, Overseers of Highways; A. A. Redford, William B. Caldwell and William Weaver, Fence Viewers. The whole number of votes did not exceed twenty.

The earliest recorded assessment was made in the town of Lisbon, in 1843, when 4,920 acres were assessed: Value, $12,848.20; personal property, value, $1,997; county tax, $101.61; town tax, $105. Total tax, $206.61.

The first one removed from the little community by death, was Stephen Bonham, a little son of D. Bonham, who died in October, 1837, and was buried on his father's farm.

Lisbon had its first representative of a new generation in the person of Ruth Weaver, daughter of James Weaver, born November, 1837.

As early as 1838, Mrs. John Weaver began a school in her own home, a small log house. This served the purpose of kitchen, parlor, dining, sleeping and school room. Here, after she had attended to the duties of a mother, in waiting upon her family of little ones, she would storm the citadel of ignorance with A, B and C, sometimes teaching as many as twenty pupils, many of whom had to come long distances.

On the 3d day of June, 1839, the first nuptials were solemnized at the marriage of Lucius Botsford and Miss Lucinda Denny, Elder Griffin being the officiating clergyman.

Rev. Frink was the first preacher, and held the first service at the home of John Weaver, about 1838. Elder Griffin also began holding services in this section soon after.

The first schoolhouse was erected as early as 1841, and, some of the oldest settlers say, as early as 1839. It was built of stone, by Mr. George Elliott, and occupied the site of the present school building of District No. 1, on Section 35. In this building were held the first Sabbath meetings and Sunday-schools; also public meetings. The town then comprised one district. From the report of Commissioners of Schools in 1842, it appears that there were 110 scholars in the town, 69 males and 41 females, with one male teacher and two female teachers, and $148.40 was raised by tax and $26.60 by subscription to defray the expense. Phineas Bissell was the first male teacher.

District No. 2 was organized in 1842, and comprised the southwest corner of the town. Among the teachers were Henry Williams Rodeman, Henry Calkins, Miss Small (now Mrs. Robert Rodgers) and Miss Julia Griswold (now Mrs. Austin Wheeler, of Pewaukee). The present schoolhouse of District No. 2 was built about 1853. About 1839 or 1840, Rice Gale came in and put up a blacksmith-shop on Section 35, near the house of D. Bonham. Mr. Gale was followed by Mr. Nottingham, who built one near by.

About 1840, Levi Russell started a little store and shoe-shop in his log house on Section 35. This point at that time was the most important place in the town; but after the nucleus nothing was added, unless the church and grave-yard in the vicinity are mentioned.

The first field plowed in the town is said to have been on Section 36. In 1837, E. Smith, James Weaver, John Weaver and George Elliott sowed a patch of turnips a little east of Sussex, on the ground where now stands the feed-mill, and the next winter turnips were used for apples.

The first plow is said to have been brought in by D. Bonham. At that time, the settlers went to Milwaukee to get their plows sharpened and repaired, which had to be done very frequently, for on much of the land grew what was called red-root brush, and the ground, being literally filled with these tough roots, was very hard to break.

The first saw-mill was built a short distance north of the village of Sussex, by James Weaver, George Elliott, Edward Smith and Cooley Frarey, in the winter of 1842. It was designed to run by water, with an undershot wheel, but, owing to the nature of the bed of the stream, they could not confine the water. An engine was therefore purchased and moved out from the city, at an expense of about $1,200. It had not been set up a very long time before the boiler burst, while under the charge of Thomas Weaver. This difficulty was overcome, and the work went on for several years, but not in a profitable manner. The mill has been long abandoned, and nothing now remains.

The brewery, which stands about one-half mile north of the mill, on the road from Sussex, was first built by Stephen Stone. In 1862, Mr. Boots became sole owner. Twelve years after, in 1874, Mr. Boots had the misfortune to lose the old brewery by fire. In 1875, it was rebuilt as it now is.

James Weaver was the first Postmaster, and had the office at his home on the old farm on Section 35. Subsequently, he resigned in favor of his son, Thomas Weaver, from whom, in 1849, the office was transferred to Sussex, and Richard Cooling became Postmaster. Mr. Cooling held the office four years, and then resigned in favor of William Brown. Mr. Brown held it two years, when it passed into the hands of William Weaver, where it remained until 1861, when Mr. Cooling again came into possession of the office, and held it until 1878; he then resigned in favor of his son-in-law, Mr. Templeton, who has had charge of it since.

F. Otis, who came in 1837, built the first frame shell; but Sherman Botsford erected the first really substantial frame house built in the town. About 1850, the project of a plank road was started by many of the leading men of the town and county, the road to run from Milwaukee to Hartland, with a branch to run from the southern part of Lisbon to Merton. It was almost a total failure, so far as the interests of the majority of the farmers were concerned, for many of them lost all they put in, and very few, if any, escaped without a loss. The road, according to estimates, cost about $60,000.

The Episcopal Church Parish was organized in 1842, and was composed principally of English settlers. The congregation met and worshiped in the barn of James Weaver, and occasionally at the schoolhouse of District No. 1, until able to erect a church. The parish remained under the pastoral care of the clergy of Nashotah Mission, until the 7th of March, 1847, when Rev. William Armstrong took charge of it. At the organization of the parish, there were five families; but in June of this year, the congregation had increased to thirty-four families. The parsonage was erected in the spring of 1849. Rev. George A. Whitney is the present Rector. The church has been much improved lately in appearance by the addition of a fine tower and bell, and the introduction of new chancel furniture and stained windows.

In June, 1841, a number of the people, principally Congregationalists, united and formed a society called Congregational, Rev. O. F. Curtis, from Prairieville, assisting. This was the first regularly organized society in the town. Just at this time, the Rev. Spencer Baker came and conducted the first regular service. He was then engaged to preach during the year. Although barely able to live the minister fared as well as any, at a time when none fared sumptuously. Mr. Baker remained there three years. The school-house was used by the Congregationalists until the erection of the Union Church. The Methodists united with the Congregational society in furnishing the money and materials for building this church, with the understanding that they were to have the use of it on alternate Sundays. They finally united, forming what is now known as the Bible Christian Society.

The Lisbon United Presbyterian society's church is located near the center of the town, on Section 21. The society was organized August 30, 1847, by Rev. James R. Bonner, of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, and was called the Associate Reformed Congregation of Lisbon, until 1858, when it took the name by which it is now known.

The first members were Robert Rodgers, Archibald Rodgers, John Muir, John Brown, Thomas Chalmers, John Gilmore, James Welch, Ann C. Gilmore, Agnes Templeton, Margaret Rodgers, Elizabeth W. Booth, Margaret Muir and William Small. They only had preaching occasionally from this time until January 4, 1851, when the Rev. G. W. Gowdie became pastor and remained with them nearly three years. On April 1, 1878, the Rev. T. E. Turner, the present pastor, took charge. The congregation now numbers forty-eight, there being five of the original members among them.

The first lime was burned in a small kiln, built as early as 1848 or 1849, by Messrs. Smith & Elliott, on the farm now owned by Richard Craven. The old kiln of Thomas Weaver was built by B. Storms, who lived near it and ran it for several years. He sold to Mr. Weaver in 1853. Mr. Weaver rebuilt the following year and did a thriving business for twelve years or more.

The stone quarry of Mr. Davidson, Section 23, was opened about 1840, and the quarry of William Graves was opened about 1842. The stone taken from these is of excellent quality.

Lisbon Mutual Insurance Company.—A meeting of the citizens of Lisbon was first held at the town hall, the 18th of April, 1874, for the purpose of organizing a town insurance company.

On the 9th of May following, another meeting was held, when William Weaver, Sr., George Elliott, John Watson, John Edwards, John Andrews, William Small and John Keating were elected as Board of Directors.

On the 16th of May, 1874, the board met at the store of D. P. Topping, Sussex, and elected William Weaver President, and John Keating Secretary and Treasurer. The insurance rate was fixed at one mill per $1, and $2 for survey and policy. The board also authorized the President and Secretary to issue policies from that date. Every person who is insured becomes a member of the company, and is entitled to a vote, if his insurance amounts to $200. The first annual report shows forty-one applications on file, covering property to the amount of $58,407, and $89.46 on hand, after paying all accounts. The amount of insurance now maintained is $271,850, with $517.57 cash on hand. There are now 225 policy-holders.

There are three cemeteries in Lisbon.

Very many will remember the first turkey-shoot that came off in this town, and very likely the first in the county. In 1839, David Bonham got the turkeys, and men came from far and near and had a big time. Among other preparations made for the event, Bonham went with Thomas Redford to Milwaukee for a keg of beer. In coming home over the rough roads the beer got so shook up, that it burst out the bung, and it was not drunk by turkey-shooters.

Lisbon has had three suicides. One John Brown rented Mr. Thomas Redford's farm in 1848, for five years, intending to get married and go to housekeeping soon. After the arrangements were concluded, and Mr. Redford's furniture purchased, the young lady, Miss Melville, put the wedding off. This so affected Mr. Brown that he hanged himself without delay.

Jerry Stone, in 1866, swallowed a dose of strychnine in some beer, and thus ended his career.

James McDonald while temporarily insane, in 1869, cut his throat.

Sussex Village.—This lovely little burg, the only one in the town of Lisbon, is not very centrally located, but is connected with the surrounding country by several good roads; in fact, it appears that whoever laid out the roads, contemplated that Sussex would be the business center for this section of country. There are quite a number of dwellings here, besides three or four general stores, various mechanics' shops and offices. The place has a quiet, yet exceedingly attractive, appearance, the streets and cemetery being very handsomely shaded and well kept. George Elliott was the first settler in this vicinity. His old house is yet standing, a little out of the village, and is occupied by one of his sons. Richard Cooling was the first villager. He came in June, 1843. Shortly after came Messrs. Fray, Smith, Brown, Champeny, Sims, Stone, Weaver and others. The first birth in the place was John T. Cooling, born November 16, 1846.

The first buried here, Charles Payne, December 26, 1843.

Sylvester Rowe and Harriet S. Brainard were the first couple married here, January 5, 1844.

A blacksmith shop was opened by Mr. Cooling when he first came here.

The first store was opened by William Brown, about 1849, in the house where Mr. Topping now lives.

About 1854, a union store was started by the farmers. This, however, soon fell into the hands of Mr. Cooling, who continued the business for ten years, finally turning it over to his son-in-law, Mr. Templeton.

The first school was taught here during the winter of 1849-50, by Mr. Calkins, in the schoolhouse, built in 1849, on Section 26. There is now a very good school in Sussex, with two departments. The old schoolhouse was used as an Episcopal parish school at one time, but is now used for a town hall.

TOWN OF MERTON.

Merton is particularly noted for its picturesque scenery, and the large number of streams and lakes. The surface of the country is very broken and irregular, compared with many other localities in the county. The soil is rich and deep, there being scarcely a part of the town that is not first class. Nearly all the farms bear the appearance of thrift and enterprise, and tradesmen and mechanics seem to be doing well. The inhabitants represent several nationalities. There are English, American, Irish, Danes, Norwegians and a few Swedes and Scotch, the foreign element preponderating. Ralph B. Allen enjoys the distinction of having been the first white man who drove his claim stake here; however, William Clarke and a Mr. Hatch came about the same time. This was in the spring of 1837. Mr. Allen first made a claim on what is now known as "Fisher's Flats," but he soon after relinquished it. The first breaking was done near Hartland, during 1837, on one of the claims near where Mr. Allen subsequently settled.

The first house was Mr. Allen's cabin, which served for a time as headquarters for the bachelors. Soon after Allen, Clarke and Hatch came in. Messrs. Cole and Short made claims near Pine Lake, but did not stay longer than one season. In 1838, Martin Molster, Albert Wising, S. Fisher, and perhaps a few others, came in. In 1839-40, Cornelius Molster, John C. Molster, the Warren family, John Fisher, George W. Skinner, Sylvanus, Dewey K. and Hiram Warren, William and Abial Odell, Jonathan Finch and brothers, L. M. Moore, Josiah Moore, Henry Cheney and a few others—as George Garaty, Mr. Childs, M. Lynch and Mr. Pritchard came in. In 1841-42, a large number came in—as John Johnson, Earl Wright, J. Weikert, Christ Hershey, John Fisher, Philetus Cross, Abel Cross, John M. Hall, Peter Weeks, James M. Gavitt, J. N. Cadby, S. S. Case, Sybrant Hall, F. Shraudenback, Henry Kuntz, A. De Witt, John Whipp and his sons Richard, William, James, Edward and John, Jr., David Mason, Mike, Andrew, James and John Shiel, Jerry Fiinn, J. D. and Jonathan Hartly, David Smith, Charles G. Williams, Daniel S. Wells, Henry Shears, Jesse Newell, Moses Smith, Harrison Cheney, Jacob Snyder, William D. Curtiss, Zadock, Henry, E. and J. Palmer, William Leroy, L. H. Taylor, George McKerly, P. and R. Perry, James Miles, D. S. Cheney, John Cox, J. D. Hartly, the Fergusons (John, Jr., and John, Sr., and others. In 1843, Hosea, Nat and Isaac Prentice, T. R. Smith, J. O. Rudberg, J. Kelly, James and Thomas Ray, D. Allen, S. B. Mills, Joseph Smith, Mr. Burroughs, W. W. Caswell, Capt. Gassman, John Kelly, Sr., Patrick and William Kelly, William P. Clarke, D. C. Marsh, William and Gideon Russell and many others came. In after years, the influx of settlers was very rapid, until the land was all taken. In 1841, and subsequent years, a number of Swedes made a settlement on Pine Lake. The leader of the movement was an enthusiastic young minister, Rev. Gustave Unonius, a graduate of Upsala, who, after coming here in 1841, induced several others, especially from among the upper classes, including the nobility, who were anxious to better their fortunes in some way, to come here, to a land of beauty and golden prospects. About twelve families in all came over, including two noblemen of the realm, and one Baron. The only head of a family left now, and about the only practical person among them all, was J. D. Rudberg, who was educated in the agricultural college of his native land for a civil engineer. The story of the sufferings of these people, before used to every luxury, beggars description. Their money was soon exhausted, and then, not knowing how to work to advantage, they were soon reduced almost to absolute beggary. Baron Thott became a cook for Mr. Rudberg, in order to get bread; Lieut. St. Sure, a nobleman, tried to break up and work a stony piece of ground, but failed completely, and had to abandon everything or starve. But the ones about whom lingers the most romantic interest, were Capt. Frederick Von Schneideau, wife and child. Capt. Von Schneideau was a nobleman of the realm, and belonged to the staff of Prince Oscar, of Sweden; but, falling in love with a beautiful Jewess, was obliged, owing to the opposition of friends of both parties, to effect a clandestine marriage, and, in order to avoid the penalty of the laws against the marriage of Christian and Jew, and the displeasure of friends, they came to America, and the home of their friend Unonius, about 1842. He lived here several years, and lost his little all, not to speak of his sufferings, through an accident which nearly made a cripple of him. During this time, his tenderly nurtured wife proved herself one of "the bravest and best," caring for him and their only child, an infant girl, with a woman's truest devotion. Afterward, they went to Chicago, under the patronage of Mayor Ogden, where he made a comfortable livelihood as a photographer and music teacher. Eventually, he was enabled to visit his native land and the friends of his youth. His wife died in Chicago, and his daughter was then adopted by Mr. Ogden. She subsequently married a son of Leonard Jerome, of New York.

Among the many characters peculiar to this little colony was the hermit, Peter Bokman, a dissenting preacher and religious recluse. A little log-cabin, near Pine Lake, on the grounds of Dr. Leuthstrom, marks the spot of his cave.

The intention of Unonius and the others was to found a university here, and a quantity of cedar logs were got out to build a church on what is now called Interlachen Point, where Dr. Leuthstrom's house stands. They made a small house of worship on the east side of the lake, now boarded up and used for a private dwelling. Unonius graduated at Nashotah, and many years after returned to his native land. The others are scattered far and wide, and probably would wish to be remembered here no more forever.

In 1840, the first death occurred in the town, that of Martin Moulster, who died in January of that year. About this time, or not long after, two young men were drowned in Lake Keesus, while making maple sugar. The first birth was that of Emma Skinner, daughter of George W. and Lucinda Skinner, November 18, 1839. The first one who preached in the town is said to have been Elder Griffin. Elder Wheelock came here as early as 1842, and held meetings; also Rev. Baker, who held his first meeting in 1842 in the house of Henry Cheney. The first schoolhouse is said to have been erected in 1843 on Section 26, and either Mr. Taylor or Mrs. Stephen Warren (nee Nicholson) was the first teacher. A schoolhouse was built at Stone Bank in 1843, also, perhaps as soon as the other. George W. Skinner was Territorial Justice of the Peace in 1839 or 1840. The first marriage was that of Stephen Warren to Miss Mary Nicholson. The ceremony was performed by George W. Skinner, Justice of the Peace, May 7, 1840. The first store, if it could be called a store, was opened by Michael Sheil, at Monches, about 1844. This embraced shoe-shop, saloon and general merchandise. The Swedish settlers also had a little shop, kept by the wife of Capt. Von Schneideau, in a very early day. The first cemetery was surveyed in 1841. The first town meeting in Warren, now Merton, was held April 4, 1843, at the house of William Le Roy, on Section 26. The voters of the town went to Delafield in the morning, in sleighs, to vote. After the meeting had been called to order, it was moved by Sylvanus Warren, that they divide the town, and that those who belonged in Merton (then Warren) should repair to Mr. Le Roy's house at 1 P. M. of that day. The motion was carried, and in the afternoon thirty-nine voters assembled as agreed. Moses Smith was elected Chairman of the Board of Supervisors, and Charles G. Williams and Jacob Snyder, Side Supervisors; Town Clerk, L. H. Taylor; Road Commissioners, Hiram Warren, George McKerly and Earl Wright; School Commissioners, L. M. Moore, Sybrant Hall, Dewey K. Warren and Reuben Perry; Assessors, Henry Cheney and John M. Hall; Treasurer, Sylvanus Warren; Constable, Jesse Newell; Collector, Jesse Newell; Sealer Weights and Measures, Christian Hershey. Compensation for officers was $1 per day. A tax, not to exceed half of 1 per centum, was to be levied for support of schools. Sixty dollars was voted to be raised for current expenses. Philetus Cross, and one or two more were elected Justices at this election.

In 1844, there were 57 voters, election held at the house of John Fisher. L. H. Taylor was elected Chairman, and John M. Hall, Clerk. Three Justices were elected this year—L. H. Taylor, Jacob Snyder and Leonard Griffith.

In 1845, there were 72 voters. E. Capron was elected Chairman, and Moses Smith, Clerk.

In 1846, William Odell was elected Chairman, and Hosea Prentice, Clerk. In 1847, William P. Clark was elected Chairman, and John M. Hall, Clerk. In 1848, William P. Clark Chairman again, and John M. Hall, Clerk.

During the winter of 1848 and 1849, Dewey K. Warren introduced a bill to have the name of the town changed from Warren to Merton, to correspond with the name of the post-office established in the town during the previous year. The town has since been known as Merton.

The postoffice received its name in a rather singular manner. Henry Shears made application to have an office established here, called Warren. To this application the Postmaster General replied that there was already an office in the State by that name. Mrs. Shears then selected the old English name Merton, or Moreton, where Cromwell first invaded the English Parliament, which was sent on, and the office was soon after established.

Merton Village.—William Odell was the first settler here, in 1840, and built the first house. He entered the east half of the northeast quarter of Section 24, and his brother Austin claimed the west half of the same quarter soon after. The land claimed by Austin fell into the hands of John Metcalf, of Oconomowoc, in 1841. Dr. Hill came on and jumped the north half of Metcalf's land, and sold it to Huntington and Kent in 1844, who built a saw-mill, which stood a little northeast of the present mill. In 1846, Henry Shears and George Trowbridge bought the property, and in 1847 built the present grist-mill. The saw-mill was demolished about 1855. The grist-mill is now owned by Phillip Snyder. J. Finch came here and built about 1840, near where now stands the house of Phillip Snyder, and kept a hotel for some time. About 1843, Loyal M. Moore opened a blacksmith-shop.

Homer E. Fenn, who came here as a pettifogging lawyer, built the first frame building in 1847, near where now stands the store of F. Schraudenbach, and in partnership with Mr. Warren opened the first regular store; but there had been a few goods kept by Mr. Finch for sale for some time before this.

W. W. Caswell built the first frame hotel about 1847 or 1848.

The first school was taught here in a little slab house north of the Bark River in 1847 or 1848, D. S. Foote teacher.

About 1849, the District bought the building erected by Fenn. An attempt was made to make a schoolhouse out of adobe, or sun-dried brick, at this time, which failed, and Col. Shears put up a building out of them which stood for several years.

About 1868, a comfortable schoolhouse was built, where the present one stands, which was burned in 1878 and rebuilt the same as before. It has two departments. William Odell was the first Postmaster; then A. J. Dibble was appointed; after him E. Hackett held it for a time; then it passed into the hands of M. & R. Weil, who were succeeded by J. M. Gavitt, P. M., and Robert Kruger, assistant; they were followed by T. Mayhew in 1861, who was followed by Francis Vaughn in 1866; who was succeeded by the present Postmaster, Eli Eastman, in 1867.

In 1862, the Merton folk were frightened almost out of their boots by the "Indian scare," and nearly all left for parts unknown.

The Baptist Church of Merton was organized August 31, 1843, with a membership of nine. Rev. Richard Griffin acted as pastor until 1849. During that year meetings were held at Hartland. In 1867, Rev. Chapin began his labors as pastor. Up to January 8, 1880, the total number who have joined the church amounted to one hundred and seven. The Methodist Church in this town has thirty-five members, and belongs to the Pewaukee charge. Rev. George W. Burtch is the minister.

Stone Bank.—John Johnson entered the land on which Stone Bank village stands, on Section 19, in January, 1841. He had moved on to it in 1840. About the same time came J. Weikert (who afterward committed suicide by hanging himself), Christian Herschey and a Mr. Schneider. Mr. Johnson built the first house in April, 1842. David Mason and James Miles settled where they now are. In 1842, John Ferguson, Sr., came and purchased from Mr. Johnson a portion of the Stone Bank mill privilege. In the fall of 1842, Mr. Johnson built a saw-mill about sixty rods north of the present grist-mill. It was used nearly thirty-five years before being abandoned. This was the first saw-mill in the town. In 1844, J. Ferguson, Sr., built the first grist-mill in the town, where it now stands, putting in two run of stone. In 1845, he commenced a saw-mill near it, which was run about twenty years. In 1845, the first store was started here, in a small log house near the mill. Soon after, F. Schraudenbach started a good store. About 1858, the first post-office was established, Leonard Requa, Postmaster. He held it until 1860, when it was transferred to John Ferguson, Jr. Mr. Ferguson held it about four years. In 1864, unbeknown to him, the office was given to Samuel Darrah, his deputy. Mr. Ferguson remained in ignorance of this change until the ensuing year, when Mr. Darrah resigned in his favor. E. Drummond is the present incumbent, who has held the office for eight years.

Wohlen Bros. started a blacksmith's shop here as early as 1843. The Stone Bank public burying ground was established about thirty-five years ago, the land being donated by J. Ferguson, Sr. A small Presbyterian Church was built here about twenty-one years ago, the land where it stood being presented by J. Ferguson, Sr.; it was rebuilt in 1878. Elder Wheelock preached here in 1842; also, a Mormon, who made some converts. The Norwegian Lutheran Church was built about 1850. The Temple of Honor, at Stone Bank, was instituted January 16, 1878, by J. A. Watrous, with twenty-seven charter members. The following officers were elected: W. H. Bolson, W. C. T.; Frank Holt, W. V. T.; S. Darrah, W. R.; Ed Drummond, W. T. R.; John Mason, W. T.; S. Siverson, W. U.; H. Wild, W. G.; John Cassidy, W. S.

Monches.—Earl Wright was the first permanent settler in this vicinity. In 1842, H. K. Kuntz came, and, in 1843, built a saw-mill here, the second in the town. In 1847 or 1848, Mr. Kuntz built a grist-mill. The saw-mill is gone; Mr. Kuntz sold it to Mr. Berg, the present proprietor, several years ago. Mike Sheil had the first store. Subsequently, Henry McCaul opened a small store and ashery. Before the postoffice was established here, about 1847 or 1848, this point was called Kuntz's Mills, but the postoffice was called Monches, after an old Indian chief, who used to haunt this locality, and who was buried here. John Hartz was the first Postmaster; then, John Whipp, Sr. After him, P. O'Reily; then, John Whipp, Jr.; then, A. Mullen, and after him John Purtell, the present incumbent, was appointed; has been in charge about fifteen years. There is a Catholic Church here, the only one in this locality. A log house of worship was built about 1844, with Father Morrisy as first priest. A few years after, the present frame church was constructed.

North Lake.—The land here was first bought by Henry Shears, when it went into market in 1850, it being school land. During 1850 and 1851, he built a saw-mill, and in 1853 erected the present grist-mill. The grist-mill was refitted and enlarged in 1875, and four runs of stone were put in. It has a splendid water-power.

The North Lake Brewery, by Rasmus Frederickson, was started in 1867, but has been enlarged since ten different times. It has a capacity of 500 barrels per annum.

The postoffice was established about 1859, with Thomas Bignalls as Postmaster. Henry Shears succeeded him. Rasmus Frederickson, the present Postmaster, took the office eight years ago.

The work of raising money to build St. Peter's Episcopal Church at North Lake was begun by Mrs. Henry Shears in 1867, and received subscriptions to the amount of $1,150. Two other subscription lists were subsequently circulated, and a large amount obtained. The ground was donated by N. E. Peterson; the church begun in 1868, and was completed in 1869, at a cost of $2,500. The church was then in debt about $250, which was eventually paid in full by Byron Kilbourn, M. D.

Henry Shears appeared to have been the pioneer in trout-raising in the county, for he began on his present place in 1867. He has not yet relinquished the business.

Smith & Killmer's mill, Section 15, was built in 1847, and is still used.

Dr. Hilliard was the first physician. In 1851, Dr. Rice came. He has been an extensive traveler, and has a collection of rare and valuable curiosities.

TOWN OF MEMOMONEE.

Township 8, range 20, east, now called Menomonee, was a part of Lisbon until an act of the Legislature, approved December 20, 1839, which declared the town, as now bounded, should, after March 1, 1840, be a separate town, to enjoy all the rights and powers of any other town.

Menomonee is largely a German town, though there are some Irish, a few Scotch and a few Americans. It is composed of good farming lands, and its inhabitants are thrifty and fore-handed.

The first settler in the town was Patrick Raferty, a native of Ireland. Many other Irishmen soon after followed him, and the town at one time contained a large number of settlers of this nationality; but they have been displaced largely by the Germans, who now have a fast hold upon much of the very richest farming lands in Menomonee.

The first death was that of Mrs. James Brogan, probably, whose husband was an early settler in the town.

The first settler, Patrick Raferty, has the honor of being father to the first child born in Menomonee. His son Francis, was born in 1837.

The first school was taught in the town during the summer of 1843, by Ellen Corbett, who had comparatively a large number of scholars. In the fall of the same year, probably, a frame schoolhouse was built, which was the first in the town.

The first church edifice was erected at what is now Fussville, in 1846.

The first religious services in the town were held at James Brogan's private house by Father Kundig, of Milwaukee, afterward Vicar General. This was early in 1842.

William M. Saunders opened the first store, in 1843, near what is now Lannon Springs.

The first saw-mill, or mill of any kind, in the town, was built by Nottingham & Phippin, on the Fox River, Section 31.

The first murder in the county was on Section 31, in the town of Menomonee, in 1845. David Bonham shot James Keene at the old Nottingham saw-mill.

Who first kept "open house" in Menomonee is not easily stated; but a comparatively large hotel was built at Menomonee Falls in 1842, and the following appeared in the Milwaukee Courier:

THE subscriber has opened a public house bearing the above name, at Menomonee Falls, 14 miles from Milwaukee, on the Fond du Lac road, where he will be happy to accommodate all who may favor him with a call. He has convenient lodging rooms, stabling, and all the other appurtenances that should attend a public house, and hopes to give satisfaction to all who may favor him with a call.

W. R. HESK.

MEMOMONEE FALLS, January 19, 1843.

In 1872, a town surveyor and permanent stone land-marks were provided for by public taxation.

In 1879, a good town hall was erected on Section 16, near the center of the town. For many years, annual squabbles had taken place over holding town meetings, first at one place and then at another, which had become unpleasant and detrimental. The erection of the present commodious building for town purposes was due mostly to the efforts of Thomas McCarthy.

The first postoffice was probably at Menomonee Falls, in 1842, and William R. Hesk was the first Postmaster.

Snow lay on the ground during the winter of 1842, from November 3 to April the next spring. Wild turkeys were then plenty, but that winter starved them all, and none have been seen there since. Deer were almost as plentiful as sheep are now, droves of thirty and forty being a very common sight.

Wolves were still more numerous, and kept close company with whomsoever was hardy enough to venture on a visit to neighbors.

A large camp of Menomonee, with a few Chippewa, Indians was located on what is called the "Wild Marsh." During the winter of 1842, which was a memorable one in Menomonee, they furnished nearly all the meat the white settlers had. They exchanged venison for various articles.

The marsh that those Indians camped on was then, and is now, known by the name of the "Wild Marsh." It has more the appearance of a small lake than a marsh, and covers parts of Sections 21, 22, 27 and 28, containing about 500 acres. It has always grown wild cranberries, but only a few knew anything about it until within the last few years.

The Indians first showed the berries to a few of the whites, who were so afraid to have any one find out where they grew that they would not pick them themselves. The land is now owned by different persons, and they have to keep a good watch or the berries will all be picked for them.

The surface of this marsh is as level as a lake; of soft muck about ten feet deep, with a thin sod on top. It is not safe for stock, as there is nothing to hold them up but the sod.

Isaac Howard's stone quarry was opened in 1838; that is, stone was taken from it at that date. The quarry produces a good quantity of stone. The other quarries in the town, from which excellent stone of smooth, even layers, is taken, are Saunders,' Davis' and William Lannon's. Menomonee limestone is noted for its exceedingly good quality.

Dennis McCarty, who settled in Menomonee in 1842, died in March, 1848, and was buried in Brookfield. When, in October, 1862, his remains were removed to Lannon Springs, the soft wood coffin was found so nearly petrified that it could be handled like a new, strong box.

Arthur A. Redford, an early settler, was noted as being a wonderful story-teller and a quack doctor. Probably the most ridiculous thing he ever did was to hire out as a wet nurse. Of course he "got bounced" from his position in short order.

John Campbell gives Menomonee the honor of containing the largest family of boys of any town in the county or the State. His son, Hugh Campbell, is one of the most noted athletes in America, the strength and skill displayed by him in putting the heavy weight, wrestling and in other of the Scottish games, being truly astonishing. He is called the strongest man in Wisconsin. Mr. Campbell's six sons average 220 pounds each in weight, and are well proportioned.

The first recorded town meeting was held April 5, 1842, at the residence of W. R. Hesk. D. E. Bancroft was chosen Moderator. It was voted to allow such officers as might be chosen $1 per day for time actually spent in the service of the town. The first officers elected were William R. Hesk, Chairman; Hollingsworth S. Smith and Francis Bancroft, Side Supervisors; S. M. Garfield, Clerk; Ira Rowe, Assessor; D. E. Bancroft, Constable and Collector; William Ranney, Martin Nangle and William McCarty, Highway Commissioners; William R. Hesk, William McCarty and William Ranney, School Commissioners.

The present town officers* are as follows: Supervisors, Thomas McCarty, Chairman; John Welsh, Fred Wegner; Town Clerk, Peter Reith; Assessor, Bernard Minten; Treasurer, Franz Berchens; Justices of the Peace, John Walfit, Eugene Campbell; Constables, Michael Kiefer, Thomas Gill, Jr., Henry Schumacher.

In April, 1842, the town was laid out into six road districts, S. S. Smith being overseer of the First; F. Bancroft of the Second; Henry Redford, Third; Timothy Ryan, Fourth; Stephen Gray, Fifth, and William Ranney of the Sixth. The men who lived in the town at that time,

* Through the kindness and labors of Thomas McCarty, the historian was furnished a complete list of the town officers of Menomonee for thirty-eight years; but, as such a list could not be had from all other towns, it was deemed advisable to show no partiality toward Menomonee, although necessitating the destruction of two or three day's labor by Mr. McCarty.

and were liable for road tax, were as follows: S. S. Smith, W. R. Hesk, L. C. Snyder, John Wren, Mr. Waite, John Brown, F. Bancroft, Mr. Ward, O. T. Reed, Abner Rowe, Daniel Proudfit, Mr. Alban, Henry Redford, T. C. Horn, Patrick Rafferty, Timothy Ryan, Alexander Maloy, E. L. Gurtley, Joel Hammond, Mr. Alender, Martin Nangel, William Daugherty, Patrick Daugherty, Martin Stanton, Mr. Cone, Orson Hubbell, Levi Ryckman, William Ranney, William McCarty and Joseph Pickel.

At the same time, April 28, 1842, the School Commissioners divided the town into six districts. District No. 1 had six persons in it; No. 2 had five; No. 3, three; No. 4, ten; No. 5, five; No. 6, three; total, 32. The total tax given out for collection at this time, including county and Territorial tax, was $153.59.

On May 1, 1843, the first Justices of the Peace—William Ranney and Benjamin Harmon,—were elected.

The Waukesha and Menomonee Falls road was surveyed June 7, 1845. It was laid out in January, 1844, from the Falls to the Lisbon line (now Lannon Springs) a distance of four miles and sixty-three rods.

The first road in the town laid out by the Supervisors, was surveyed by them June 13, 1849. Previous to that time, the Road Commissioners had laid out all roads.

On April 1, 1851, the first money, $75, was appropriated for the long tamarack bridge in the centre of the town.

At the town meeting, held January 30, 1864, $4,200 was raised to defray expenses of securing volunteers for the Rebellion, and other war expenses.

The Menomonee, Granville and Germantown Mutual Insurance Company was organized March 20, 1875. The first Board of Directors chosen were: G. W. Everts, President; John Flanagan, Secretary; Thomas McCarty, Godfrey Inden, Bernard Minten, William N. Lannon and John C. Schneider. The first policies went into force on the 20th of May, 1875, when the property insured amounted to $50,000. The total amount insured up to date is $1,158,822; number of policies issued, 817. The company has since its organization sustained losses to the amount of $3,035, which required two assessments of one mill on the dollar each time. It has cost the members of this company four-tenths of one per centum for five years to keep insured, besides $1.50 for application and policy. The company insures farm buildings and contents, live stock, personal property of all kinds, but does not insure in any village or outside of the three towns. The present Directors are as follows: G. W. Everts, President, of Granville; John Flanagan, Secretary, of Menomonee; Peter Reith, Menomonee; John Kissenger, Germantown; Bernard Minten, Menomonee; A. Barndt, Granville; John C. Schneider, Granville.

Menomonee Falls—The little village of Menomonee Falls is a thriving business center, and handles a large amount of money and merchandise during the year. The historian is unable to state positively, owing to the numerous conflicting statements, but probably Hollingsworth S. Smith was the first settler in what is now Menomonee Falls, although William R. Hesk was one of the very earliest settlers in this locality.

The first postoffice was established in 1842. W. R. Hesk was the first Postmaster. J. E. Seabold is the present Postmaster, and has been in the office the last nine years.

Considerable business is done at this place, for its size and population. There are two grist-mills, the larger built about twenty-five years ago, by J. B. Nehs, and ever since run by him, with water and steam power. Mr. Nehs was the first man in the milling business in this part of the county. The other, a steam mill, is owned and run by G. P. Kehr; a steam saw-mill, owned and run by Nehs & Schlafer; one foundry and agricultural establishment, owned by I. B. Rowell & Co. This shop does an extensive business in plows and their celebrated corn cultivators. There are two general stores, one owned by J. E. Seabold & Co., and the other by Peter Keeler; three blacksmith's shops, two wagon-maker's shops, two millinery shops, two good hotels, two butchers, two undertakers and a number of smaller establishments, carrying different trades, such as shoemakers, tailors, cabinet shops, etc.

Lincoln Lodge, No. 183, A., F. & A. M., was organized under dispensation, August 31, 1871, with the following officers: M. L. Youngs, of Milwaukee, G. M.; S. S. Clark, S. W.; D. F. Bancroft, J. W.; W. T. Palmer, of Milwaukee, G. Sec.; J. Gray, S. D.; A. B. Ostrander, J. D.; G. W. Church, Tiler. A charter was granted July 1, 1872, and officers were elected as follows: S. S. Clark, W. M.; Rev. A. A. Hoskin, S. W.; F. D. Bancroft, J. W.; S. K. Wambold, Treas.; J. E. Seabold, Sec.; J. Gray, S. D.; A. B. Ostrander, J. D.; C. Shuck, Tiler. Following are the charter members: F. C. Baker, G. W. Church, M. S. Griswold, Byron Gray, Thomas Haynes, S. S. Muzzy, I. B. Rowell, G. D. Rowell, J. M. Ritter, George W. Smith, J. H. Waterlin.

The officers installed January 2, 1880, are these: J. E. Lounsbury, W. M.; W. T. Camp, S. W.; I. B. Rowell, J. W.; J. E. Davis, Treas.; J. B. Loomis, Sec.; A. Lillicrapp, S. D.; G. Smith, J. D.; G. W. Church, Steward; A. Ploss, Steward; G. Cook, Tiler. The lodge now numbers twenty-nine members in good standing.

The Methodist Episcopal society is very prosperous. In 1868, they built a handsome church, of the Cream City brick, at a cost of $7,500. The spire is 120 feet high, and adds much to the beauty of the church. When Dr. Reid, editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, conducted the dedicatory services, he pronounced it one of the finest country churches he had ever seen.

The German Methodists have a substantial and comfortable church built of stone. Both societies are reported to be in a prosperous condition.

The Methodist Episcopal Sabbath School is in a flourishing condition, containing about 150 members. Teachers, 16; Rev. A. M. Bullock, Pastor; J. E. Seabold, Superintendent; H. L. Haylett, Assistant Superintendent; George Hoyt, Secretary and Treasurer; M. Barndt, Librarian.

The first minister of the Evangelical Association, who preached in the neighborhood of Menomonee Falls, was John Lutz, in the year 1840. The Revs. Adam Stroh and Christian Lintner worked here in 1841. They were, in 1842, succeeded by the Revs. F. Wahl and G. A. Blank. Rev. M. Hauert followed them and preached here in 1843 and 1844. In 1844, Frederick Nehs and William Barns, with their families, came from the State of Pennsylvania and settled in the region of what is now called Menomonee Falls. Charles Nehs, a son of Frederick Nehs, with his family, followed the next year, 1845, from Pennsylvania. They all were members of the Evangelical Association. Rev. J. Harlacher, a veteran of the itineracy, at that time located in the adjoining town of Richfield, preached for them in private houses in Menomonee Falls. The following persons were formed by Rev. Andrew Nicolai, who succeeded Rev. M. Hauert, 1845, in the year 1846 into a class: Frederick Nehs, Rebecca Nehs, Sarah A. Nehs, Charles Nehs, Mary Ann Nehs, William Barns and Susan Barns, which number, in the following years, more or less increased. In 1859, meetings were held to consider the propriety of erecting a church. Frederick Nehs donated an acre of land for a site. On August 22, 1860, the corner-stone of an edifice was laid by Rev. J. G. Escher, which was dedicated February 24, 1861. The building is $33\frac{1}{2} \times 44\frac{1}{2}$ feet, and valued at \$5,000. The parsonage, built in 1855-56, is valued at \$1,200. The present Minister is Rev. G. Fritsche. The church has a membership of 125, with the following Trustees: Isaac Leister, Edward L. Nehs and Joshua Keeler. The Sunday school numbers 161 scholars. Names of the officers are: H. Forster, President; Jacob Schläferg, Vice-President; Wesley Nehs, Secretary; W. Forster, Treasurer; John Baker and Henry Nehs, Librarians.

Fussville.—The village and vicinity of Fussville were settled about the last of 1837, by Americans and Irish, who owned some of the finest farms in the town. In 1844, the Germans began to purchase these farms, and now not an American or Irishman remains to tell the story of the first settlement of the place.

The first church in the town was built here in 1846. It is a large and prosperous church society.

The farmers in the vicinity of Fussville are exceedingly thrifty, and have some of the finest farms in this portion of the county.

Lannon Springs.—This place was named in honor of William N. Lannon, on whose farm were some beautiful springs.

The first postoffice at the Springs was opened May 10, 1854, by William N. Lannon.

The first school was taught in 1843, and the first church services were held in 1842.

In the spring of 1843, William M. Saunders and William Brown opened the first store. Ashes were legal tender in those days, and any one trading with Saunders could get goods at half-price if he could tell a good story, and pay in ashes at that.

About 1875, Michael Keating built the Lannon Springs Hotel, which is a model country caravansary. He has allowed no games to be played in it since it was opened.

What is now Lannon Springs was settled in 1842 by W. N. Lannon, Dennis McCarty, Erastus S. Comstock, John Golden, Jeffrey Burke, James Brogan, T. Kinsley—all Irish but Mr. Comstock.

In 1848, a Scotchman named George Clark was killed near Henry Redford's while driving a load of lumber. The next year, John McDonnell, while bringing a young lady to the Springs, was killed in the same place. For some years thereafter, the people of the vicinity regarded the place with fear and superstition.

Mrs. James Brogan was the first person to die, and James Brogan the first person to be married at the Springs.

Father Kundig, of Milwaukee, held the first Catholic services at the Springs in 1842, at James Brogan's house. In 1843, the Catholics of this place joined with those of Brookfield, and built a church. In 1847, Rev. James Colton, now of Fond du Lac, took charge of the parish, and in 1848, built the stone church at the Springs. In the fall the parsonage was built. James Brogan donated an acre of land for the church and parsonage, and L. Kinsley one acre for the cemetery, called St. James Cemetery. Mrs. Jeffrey Burke, who died in 1848, was the first person buried in it.

TOWN OF MUKWONAGO.

Historically and otherwise, the town of Mukwonago is an important section of Waukesha County; and, if it would not make the histories of other towns appear short in comparison, a very elaborate and interesting sketch might be written of this rich and beautiful town.

Mukwonago, by act of the Legislature, approved January 2, 1838, was made to comprise the present towns of Mukwonago, Eagle, Ottawa and Genesee; but by an act approved March 8, 1839, it was reduced to its present size. The name, as first sanctioned by the Legislature, was Mequanego, and the first election was authorized to be held at Daniel Bigelow's house.

The first settler in this town was Charles N. Cox, who, with his wife and children, lived in his covered wagon on a claim on Section 19. The exact day of their arrival is not known; but Thomas Sugden and Joseph Smart discovered their "camp" during the first week in June, 1836, and remained one night with them. On the 12th of June, Joseph Smart entered lands and settled on Section 19, adjoining Mr. Cox, and Mr. Sugden settled on Section 26, in this town. They were the next settlers. On the 15th of this month, Sewall Andrews, Henry H. Camp and Mr. Meacham arrived at what is now Mukwonago Village, and settled upon lands which they had blazed, or selected, in 1835. They were the third group of actual settlers, but the first prospectors.

Here will be introduced the report made by the Mukwonago Committee [Martin Fidd] to the Old Settler's Club in 1871, as follows:

"Your committee, appointed to prepare an historical account of the early settlement of the town of Mukwonago, respectfully report:

"Mukwonago, previous to its settlement in 1836, was a large and populous Indian village. It was the chief or capital village of the tribe of Indians known as the Pottawatomies, situated on Mukwonago Creek, not far from its junction with the Fox River, and near the border of an extensive forest. It was evidently a most desirable locality for the residence of a people possessing the habits and customs of the Northwestern Indians. The inhabitants were, generally peaceable and inoffensive, except, perhaps, when they supposed their rights were unjustly invaded. Then it was that the peculiar traits of the Indian character were exhibited. Their wigwams were permanently and substantially built, which clearly indicated a permanent and continuous occupation of the place. Their council-house, a large building built of poles and covered with the bark of large trees, in which the chiefs and principal men of the tribe held their annual councils, was, in 1836, standing on the north bank of Mukwonago Creek, at the south end of the village. The valley in which the village was located being very productive, they raised corn in great abundance. How long the tribe had made this locality their home cannot now be ascertained with any degree of certainty, but, from the best information we have been able to obtain, we conclude that it could not have been a great length of time. The only mention of this village and its inhabitants, prior to 1835, in any written history we have read, we find in Col. Childs' 'Recollections of Wisconsin Since 1820,' an account of his journey from Southern Illinois to Green Bay in 1827, with a drove of cattle. He says: 'We crossed the river at the rapids, and struck the Fox River, which empties into the Illinois at Ottawa, followed up the Fox River to Mukwonago, and there found a great many Pottawatomie Indians. They were rather ugly in appearance, and threatened to kill my cattle.'

"The first white settlers* in the town of Mukwonago were Sewall Andrews and Henry H. Camp. In the year of 1835, they, in company with Major Meacham, who afterward settled in Walworth County, traveled through the southeastern portion of the Territory of Wisconsin and Northern Illinois for the purpose of selecting a place for future settlement. After journeying for several weeks, they finally determined upon the Indian village of Mukwonago, as the most desirable locality for building up a town. In the following spring, and on about the 15th of June, 1836, Messrs. Andrews and Camp again came to Mukwonago for the purpose of remaining, and made preparations for erecting a house. Although the title of the Indians to this portion of the Territory had been previously extinguished, they had not been removed and still claimed the right of possession, and objected to the erection of any buildings within the limits of their village. They however immediately erected a house about a mile and a half northwest from the village, and near the present residence of John Andrews. This was the first house erected in the town, and a few weeks after its completion, the proprietors had the pleasure of furnishing lodging and entertainment to Gen. Dodge, who was then Governor of the Territory of Wisconsin. Delayed, but not driven from their purpose, they soon after negotiated with the Indians for permission to build a house within the village, and gave them two barrels of flour for the privilege; under this permission they erected a house, only 10x12 in dimensions, on the southwest corner of Block 8, in the village as it was afterward platted, and this house was the home and lodging place of nearly all the white residents of the village, until the commencement of the following winter. They were then all unmarried.

"A little earlier in the month of June, 1836, Charles N. Cox emigrated from Indiana with his family and settled on Section 19. His wife and adopted daughter were the first white female residents of the town; and still later in the same month, Thomas Sugden and Joseph Smart came, Smart moving his family with him. They settled on Section 19, and Sugden on Section 26; Sugden remained in the town until 1843. In the following August, George Bolsen came with his family and settled on Section 18. Whiting Hudson and family came and settled on the northwest quarter of Section 36, October 9, 1836. On or about the 15th of October, 1836, Martin Field and Ira Blood arrived from Chicago; they came from Vermont early the previous spring, with the intention of settling in Wisconsin; but on arriving in Chicago, finding employment in the County and City Surveyor's offices, they remained there during the summer. Soon after their arrival at Mukwonago, they were employed by the proprietors to survey and plat the village, a map of which was filed and recorded in the office of Register of Deeds of Milwaukee County, Nov. 1836. 24.

"In selecting a name for the village, the proprietors adopted that given it by the Indians, the signification of which is, 'a place where bears were killed.' Mukwo or Mequo, in their language being the name of that animal.

* Proprietors would have been more accurate.

“Mr. Field remained in and became a resident of the village, and Mr. Blood made a claim in the adjoining town of Vernon, and remained there until his death. In August, 1836, Charles B. Stockman, formerly a resident of St. Lawrence County N. Y., came here and laid a claim to the mill-site adjoining the village, and erected a house on the south bank of Mukwonago Creek, which was, for a short time in the spring of 1837, occupied by Charles Raynous and his family. Late in the fall of 1836, and after the survey of the village had been completed, Mr. Andrews erected a store on Block 7, and Mr. Camp a hotel on Block 8, both of which were constructed of logs, Mr. Meacham, one of the original proprietors of the village, having a one-third interest therein; but, as he never was a permanent resident of the town, his name has not been before mentioned. He sold his interest to Mr. Andrews soon after the survey was completed. Those who came in later in the autumn of 1836 were Simon Jones and family, Lyman Hill and family, Charles Raynous, Wilder C. Chafin, John Prescott and Edward Bassett, who, with those heretofore named, were all who became residents of the town during that year. John A. Smart, born December 31, 1836, son of Joseph Smart, was the first white child born in the town. Mariam and Marion Hill were the first white female children born in the town. They were twins and born January 20, 1837, at the house of C. B. Stockman, on the south bank of Mukwonago Creek. They were the children of Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Hill, who came from Vermont a few weeks previous.

“In the year 1837, we received a valuable acquisition to the population of our town. John M. Stockman, John S. Morse, Webber Andrews, Ezra Stone, John Burnell, Robert Wilkinson, William Cross, Sherman Cartwright, John Coats, and a man by the name of Newcomb, with their families, and David Orendorf, James Orendorf, Samuel Pendleton, Capt. Burk, Cyrus Hill, John A. Larkin and Ira Goodspeed, came and settled in different parts of the town; all of whom were farmers excepting John A. Larkin, who was a shoemaker. John M. Stockman frequently worked at the trade of carpenter and joiner. In the spring of 1837, Sewall Andrews obtained a stock of goods from New York, and opened his store about the first of June. James Orendorf about this time settled on Section 24, and established a ferry across Fox River, erected a large block-house, and kept hotel for a year or two. In 1838, he was appointed Postmaster. The office was called Springfield, that being the first postoffice within the limits of the town. In the winter of 1839 and 1840, the office was moved to the village of Mukwonago, and Andrew E. Elmore was made Postmaster, and from that time the office was called Mukwonago. There soon began to appear among our farmers, and especially among those who had settled in the northwestern portion of the town, marked indications of thrift and of future wealth. They were improving their farms rapidly, commencing to breed all kinds of farm stock, and produced most of the necessaries of life. Until a much later date, there were no physicians, or preachers of the Gospel within the limits of the town, and probably none nearer than Milwaukee, a distance of twenty-four miles. We will not attempt to give a list of the names of those who settled here in 1838, 1839 and 1840. The town was settling rapidly during those years, and any list we can now make would necessarily be imperfect. We will only name a few of those whom we know settled here during those years: Samuel Winch, Adam E. Ray, came in 1838; Joseph Bond, in June, Dr. Solomon Blood in September, and Andrew E. Elmore in October, 1839.

“It may interest many who have never known, or have forgotten the fact, that the town of Mukwonago, in its first organization, was twelve miles square, including the present towns of Genesee, Ottawa, Eagle and Mukwonago. The first election was held at the house of Daniel Bigelow, in the village of Eagleville, in the fall of 1838, and Henry Hinkley was elected Chairman.”

Charles N. Cox was the first settler in the town; Mrs. Cox, his wife, the first white woman, and his children, David and Hannah, the first little folks.

The first frame house is the present residence of Dr. H. A. Youmans.

The first hotel was built in 1837, by Charles B. Stockman.

The first store was opened by Sewall Andrews, and the second by Andrew E. Elmore. The former still has a store in the village.

The first noted place for horse-racing was in the northwest part of the town, which was, therefore, named "Horse-race Prairie." A three-quarter-mile track was laid out there thirty years ago, by George Yearly.

Sewall Andrews and David Orendorf were the first Justices of the Peace, appointed in 1837, or the first of 1838.

Mr. Powers brought the first mails to Mukwonago, once in two weeks. The next mail carrier was William Wilkinson, now a resident of Genesee.

The first birth was John A., son of Joseph Smart, born December 31, 1836.

The first death was that of Charles N. Cox, July 23, 1838. He was buried at Jericho.

The report to the Old Settlers' Club states that Andrews and Camp built the first house in Mukwonago; but the historian concludes that a house built on Section 19, by Joseph Smart and Charles N. Cox, was occupied first. Both, however, were erected at about the same time.

The first preachers were Elder Burgess, Baptist; Rev. Brooks, Episcopalian. In 1837, an itinerant Methodist preached at Joseph Smart's house, probably the first sermon in the town.

Miss Gertrude Goodrich taught the first school in the summer of 1842, at Jericho.*

In October, 1838, the marriage of Mrs. Charles N. Cox to John Long was the first in Mukwonago. Sewall Andrews, Justice of the Peace, performed the ceremony. He did it so awkwardly, not being accustomed to such business, that Mr. Hinkley, a Justice from Eagle, declared, after Mr. and Mrs. Long had lived together for some days, that they were not married; that the form was illegal, and Mr. Andrews without the proper authority. This was allowed to frighten the innocent couple for a time; then the joke was explained, and they again lived as man and wife.

Seneca Harris was the first shoemaker. It is said he never worked at the trade before opening a shop in Mukwonago.

In 1842, Thomas Sugden was elected Assessor, but had no blanks or legal forms for making assessment rolls or returns. He therefore improvised some which would serve well for the present day. The first roll contains the names of 70 resident and 18 non-resident tax-payers, whose real and personal property was valued at $53,384.

At a school exhibition in the village of Mukwonago, March 23, 1866, the floor gave way, very seriously injuring several people.

The first blacksmith was Charles Raynous.

In 1844, $2,000 in cash was raised in Milwaukee to improve the road to Mukwonago, which was then in a very bad condition.

In January, 1843, a petition praying for the removal of Gov. James Duane Doty, received 130 signatures.

Mukwonago has been honored with several Congressional Conventions.

Andrew E. Elmore, the "Sage of Mukwonago," read the New York Weekly; always talked "all the rights of all men;" trusted everybody who traded at his store, and wished to be trusted, and never blacked his boots.

William Wilkinson was married in 1838 to Anna Robinson. Everybody was invited; everybody went, and everybody had a big time. Before getting a wife, he built a house. The bed was made of poles, one end stuck into the crevices of the log house, and the other resting on crotches, on which brush and leaves were spread. The table was of rough boards; the chairs of blocks cut from oak logs, and other furniture would have been in keeping, if he had had any. A thoughtful neighbor sent to Milwaukee for a keg of beer, and after the ceremony, which was said by Henry Hinkley, the feast and fun began. Mr. Hinkley was dressed in overalls and jerkin, and performed the ceremony with a New York "form-book" in one hand and a box of Scotch snuff in the other.

If any one desires to see a Mukwonago farmer dance like a toad on a hot griddle, it is only necessary to coax him into some secluded spot and whisper "Milwaukee & Beloit Railroad."

* The people of Eagle claim Miss Goodrich as their first teacher. Her school was for children of both towns; but it is a matter of dispute as to which side of the town line the building stood.

Up to June, 1837, settlers in Mukwonago were S. Andrews, H. H. Camp, Charles N. Cox, Thomas and John Coats, Samos, Jonathan and Jerry Parsons, Robert Wilkinson, the Sugden family, Martin Field, Ira Blood, W. C. Chafin, J. M. and C. B. Stockman, John Burnell, Joseph Smart, (first of the English settlers,) David Orendorf, James Orendorf and William Moody. Jesse Meacham, who visited the place, did not become a permanent settler.

Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company.—At a formal meeting held at the Mukwonago House, January 31, 1874, the following directors were elected: C. B. Stockman, A. E. Perkins, J. A. Pratt, J. N. Crawford, W. Wilton and J. Wilkinson. A. E. Perkins was chosen President, J. A. Pratt, Secretary, and W. M. Frazier, Treasurer. The first policy issued was to A. E. Perkins. The company is for Mukwonago, Eagle and Genesee. The directors from Genesee were H. Bowman and J. W. Farnham; Eagle, J. Parsons. In March, 1877, the number of directors was increased to nine—three from each town. J. N. Crawford and A. J. Boss have been President and Secretary since 1876. The present Board of Directors are J. N. Crawford, A. J. Boss and William Frazier of Mukwonago; A. R. Hinkley, Samuel Hage and William Wilton of Eagle; Norman Shultis, W. H. Hardy and Thomas D. Jones, of Genesee. At the annual meeting in 1880, the company contained five hundred and twenty members, holding four hundred and sixty-two policies of insurance. The value of property insured is $520,000. The rates of insurance are $1.50 for each policy and one-fifth of one per centum on the amount issued. Twelve losses have been paid, mostly caused by lightning, aggregating $1,743.50. During 1879, the losses were $1,390. Cash now on hand $325.

Jericho* is a quiet little burg on the extreme west line of this town. It was so called from the name of Jerry Parsons, who built an old tavern stand there in an early day. Jericho Creek flows through a beautiful grove of old trees to the west of the village. The grounds of John Burden and Mr. Pitcher having been inclosed years ago with masonry walls of limestone, now gray and moss-grown, have given rise to the various sayings in regard to "the walls of Jericho." It is one of the oldest settlements in the county, and has a natural location of extreme beauty. Other Scriptural names in this locality are Palestine, Jerusalem, and on the farm of Mrs. Hill, in Mukwonago, is Mt. Nebo, which is "over against Jericho."

Mukwonago Village.—This is not an incorporated village, but has the commercial importance which warrants its claim to the title of village. Its first settlers were Indians. The last tribe which inhabited the region were Pottawatomies, who had a large village on the site of the present village, which was also named Mukwonago, meaning place of the bear, or bear town.

The first white settlers were Sewall Andrews, H. H. Camp and Mr. Meacham, who visited the locality in 1835, and took up their residence here June 15, 1836. The first house in the village was erected by them. Mr. Meacham soon left for other parts, and was not a permanent settler.

The village was platted in 1836, and the plat recorded at Milwaukee, November 24, 1836. That was undoubtedly the earliest recorded plat in Waukesha County.

The surrounding country is beautiful and rich; the place has a good water-power, and the inhabitants are well-informed and generally well-to-do.

A few years ago, Theron W. Haight wrote as follows of this pleasant village:

"Within three or four years from the first settlement, many of those whose names are still known and honored in the town, were invited hither by the charming appearance of the country. John Stockman built a house for the entertainment of travelers in 1837; the cheerful and genial face of Joseph Bond was seen above the heads of his friends; Andrew E. Elmore established himself in a log store in 1839; Otis Sargeant began work upon a productive farm, and Elder Burgess, a Baptist minister, initiated the regular preaching of the word of God. At that time, the well-to-do farmer who wished to be thought stylish, went to church in a vehicle drawn by oxen, while the less ambitious were contented to go on foot. A bridge of poles laid from one forked stake to another, gave a precarious passage across Fox River to the footman, and many a poor wight who lingered at the village, like Tam O'Shanter, was caught by the warlock drunkenness before reaching the 'key-stane o' the brig,' and forced to become a temporary cold-water man by tumbling into the river.

*Jericho is claimed by both Eagle and Mukwonago, but the most of the quiet little place is in the latter town.

"In 1843 or 1844, the first permanent bridge was laid across Fox River, but, the structure having been found to cost too much for repairs, it was replaced about four years ago by another, which has proved impregnable to all watery attacks.

"The flouring and saw mill now owned by J. & M. Howitt, were begun (and the saw-mill finished) in 1847, by a Mr. McVean, but they soon passed from his hands and became the property of Mr. Sewall Andrews.

"A small church and schoolhouse had been erected in the village almost at the commencement, but the friends of education decided, in 1858, on the erection of a building which should be an honor to the town, and the present fine public school edifice, of brick, was accordingly completed in 1859, since which time the utmost pains have been taken to secure the best attainable talent for school management, and the present course of study, including higher mathematics, German, and natural science, is believed to give as full advantages for culture and practical knowledge as can be obtained below a collegiate or technical course of instruction."

Baptist Church.—The first Baptist service held in this town was in 1837, at the house of Charles Cox, Jericho. J. M. Stockman, owning the only horse team in the village at this time, was offered $1 each by five of his neighbors, to carry them to this meeting, and he remembers accepting this offer. The society was organized in 1840, and a church built, under the leadership of J. M. Stockman, Webber and Sewall Andrews, H. Porter, Daniel Wood, Ebenezer Thomas and others. This church was used until it became untenable, and was finally destroyed by fire. For several years past, meetings were held in the schoolhouse. The society has completed an elegant new church, at a cost of upwards of $2,000.

Congregational Church.—The first subscriptions taken for the building of a church, were by A. E. Perkins and A. Ball, in 1860. On the removal of Mr. Ball, the subscription was dropped, though the society was organized at that time. The first Trustees were W. C. Chafin, A. E. Perkins and another, Rev. Mr. Snow, assisting in the organization, and Rev. Mr. Sedgwick being the first regular pastor. In 1866, the subscriptions were renewed at the instance of the Trustees, A. E. Perkins, E. T. Taylor and Dr. Jerry Youmans. Under the direction of these gentlemen as Building Committee, the foundations were laid, in 1866, the present substantial and handsome structure being finished in 1869, at a cost, with fixtures, furniture and organ, of $3,400. Prior to the building, and since the organization, of the church, weekly services were held in the schoolhouse. This church is open to all evangelical denominations.

United Unitarian and Universalist Society.—Sewall Andrews, F. M. Payne, Otis Sargeant, William M. Frazier, J. N. Crawford and John Platner were the leading spirits in founding this church, W. P. Collins and Martin Field being the pillars on the Unitarian side of the house. The organization was effected and a charter granted in 1877. The first officers were Andrews, Frazier and Crawford, Trustees; Martin Field, Secretary; Peter Greeley, Treasurer. They continue to hold these positions. The site for a church was purchased of the heirs of William Burgess, for $700. The church, a very neat building, was completed in August, 1879, and cost $3,000. It is used also by the Methodist Episcopal society. The dressing-room, dining-room and kitchen were built with funds raised by the ladies. The church is free from debt.

Eagle Lodge, No. 39, I. O. O. F.—This Lodge was instituted at Eagle, Waukesha County, October 1, 1849. Its charter members were Philip V. Born, Allen Carr, Frank Draper, Andrew E. Elmoe, Alexander Farron, Dexter Finch, Freeman Ackly, John James, John C. Snover, Adam E. Ray, Thomas W. Pitman, Hiram Lampman, B. Salsbury and Henry Snyder. In May, 1859, Eagle Lodge was moved to Mukwonago through the influence and labor of F. M. Payne, O. B. Dickinson and George Richardson, and, by the consent of the R. W. Grand Lodge, took the name of Mukwonago Lodge, No. 39. The presiding officer at that time was John C. Snover. At the first election thereafter the officers were: F. M. Payne, N. G.; George Richardson, V. G.; O. B. Dickinson, R. S.; H. H. Camp, T. The lodge kept up its meetings during the war, until January, 1862, when it suspended, and surrendered its charter. About the last of October, 1868, F. M. Payne, O. B. Dickinson, H. H. Camp, John Snyder, Perry Craig, Melvin Peacock, Melvin Gibson, E. D. Reynolds and B. S. Winchell, petitioned for a charter, and on the 29th day of November, 1868, the lodge was resuscitated by R. W. Grand Secretary L. B. Hills, of Madison. The lodge has made a good many Odd Fellows, and lost a good many, but has succeeded in holding its own and a little more, having now a membership of over forty in good standing, and about $500 in the treasury. The officers are: G. Lovejoy, N. G.; William Miller, V. G.; A. J. Stockman, R. S.; F. M. Payne, T. The night of meeting is Saturday, over Anderson & Wood's store.

TOWN OF MUSKEGO.

The town of Muskego formerly embraced a larger extent of territory than it now does, and was one of the earliest towns named and founded. The Territorial Legislature passed the following enactment:

SECTION 4. That the country included within the following limits, to wit: Beginning at the southeast corner of Township 5 north, of Range 20 east; thence west to the southwest corner of Township 5 north, of Range 19 east; thence north along said township to the northwest corner of Township 6 north, of Range 19 east; thence east to the northeast corner of Township 6 north, of Range 20 east; thence south to the place of beginning; be and is hereby set off into a separate town by the name of Muskego; and the polls of election shall be opened at the house of Nathaniel Walton, near Prairie Village, and at the house of Hugh Wedge, near Muskego Lake.

Approved Jan. 2, 1838.

The above-bounded territory included, with the present town, the towns of Vernon, Waukesha and New Berlin.

The town of Muskego, as it now is, namely, Township 5, of Range 20 east, was separated from the balance of the territory and erected into a town for self-government, by an act of the Legislature, approved March 9, 1839.

It was one of the principal camping-places, next to Mukwonago and Waukesha, of the Pottawatomie Indians, and a very large village of them was found about the shores of Muskego Lake by the first settlers. The abundance of wild rice, water fowl, fish and muskrats, which was probably not equaled by any other locality in Waukesha County, made the town of Muskego an exceedingly desirable place for the aborigines, who depended almost entirely upon wild game for food.

Muskego has within its borders the largest lake in Waukesha County, and a very large portion of the remainder of the town bears evidence of having been covered by water. A large portion of the soil is therefore lower than most of the other towns, but it is rich and strong. Nearly all of that which the early settlers deemed too wet for cultivation has since been turned into the most productive meadows and grain fields.

The first regular "town meeting," or election—at least, the first one recorded—was held April 5, 1842, at the house of Harriette V. French. Asa Parker was Chairman of the meeting, and H. B. Burritt, Clerk. After some discussion, it was agreed to elect town officers by ballot, and the Clerk recorded the following elections, which did not include all the officials the town was entitled to: George McWhorter, Hiram Hollister, Eben Harris, and Marion Mucky were elected Highway Commissioners, and Rufus Peck and Phillips Riley were chosen School Commissioners. It was then agreed that the next town meeting should be held at the house of Mr. A. H. Taylor. It occurred April 4, 1843, at which James Field was elected Chairman of the town, and Rufus C. Peck and H. B. Burritt, Supervisors; M. T. White, Assessor and Town Clerk; George Green, Treasurer; and Francis Ives, Collector.

The officers of the town for 1880 are as follows: Supervisors, John Schmidt, Chairman; Henry Welsh, Matthew Elliott; Town Clerk, George Rosenberg; Assessor, Charles Finly; Treasurer, William Elliott; Justices of the Peace, J. D. Buckett, Adam Muehl, Albert Clafin, Sr.; Constables, J. H. Jordan, P. Crosby, A. Shallanda.

The town of Muskego embraces historic territory among the Pottawatomie Indians, who had villages and burial-places on its lakes. There are found here, also, some of the most interesting of the numerous mounds covering the abiding-places of the pre-historic races, and one arched temple or niche wholly unlike anything else in the pre-historic line in the county. It was surveyed and a draft made by Increase A. Lapham, but has been, unfortunately, nearly destroyed in recent years.

The Committee, consisting of L. Ellarson, C. Finley and John Schmedt, appointed by the Old Settlers' Club to prepare a history of the town of Muskego, made the following report :

"An extended history of the town of Muskego would form a very interesting chapter in the early reminiscences of the State of Wisconsin. Its dense thickets and heavy timber, its lakes and marshes, have made it the special abode of the aborigines of this county for ages pre-historic. It is here that generations after generations were born and passed away, and left no calendar or record to tell us whence they came, or in what age they lived.

"Upon the north bank of Big Muskego Lake, on what is now known as 'Latander Point,' is a burying ground, of which the Indians of late generations have no distinct traditions; they simply hold it in sacred veneration as the last resting-place of a people long since passed to their happy hunting grounds far beyond the setting sun, and here, too, are the graves of those of whom tradition points to the time in which they lived and died, and here also is the resting-place of those who have lived and died within the memory of the white man, and Muskego was the last town in which the poor Indian found a home in the southern counties of Wisconsin, whence they were removed in the year of our Lord, 1852, by order of the General Government.

"The tenacity with which they clung to their hunting grounds in Muskego, shows the estimate they placed upon its lakes, and its marshes, and its forests, and the great source which furnished them game and fish for food, and fur and skins for clothing and traffic. For years after their removal, quite a large number of those poor Indians would return annually and spend a few weeks unmolested upon their favorite grounds in Mus-kee-Guac—the fishing place*—by the white settlers called Muskego. The year of our Lord 1836 gave them the first full surety that ere long their hunting grounds would be converted into fields of grain and grass; that civilization was fast on its move westward and that they must seek a new home beyond the Mississippi.

"It was about that time that Luther Parker emigrated from the State of New Hampshire, and made the first claim and built the first house in the town of Muskego. This claim was located on what is now a part of Section 9, at the south end of Little Muskego, at a point now known as Muskego Center.

"The old house that he then erected was torn down about two years ago, by the present proprietors, to make room for other buildings. At its demise, the old house was in a very good state of preservation, and seemed to challenge time and weather for many years to come. About six or seven years since, we were conversing with A. H. Taylor and Barnes Babcock in relation to this old house, and they counted, up to that time, no less than forty-three families that had lived in it. Could this old house talk and tell of the trials, the troubles, the dreams and the pleasures it had witnessed, it would fill a volume with facts and romance that would be painfully interesting to the reader.

"We have often heard Mr. Parker recount the hardships, trials and privations he necessarily passed through, the first year he was here. Often he had to go to Milwaukee (then a distance of twenty miles by the Indian trail) and bring home provisions on his back to support his little family, and often the rivers and streams were so swollen by rains and melting snow that it required about three days to make the trip. It was during this winter that the first white child was born in the town of Muskego; a little daughter was born to Mr. Parker, which soon after died, and now lies buried on the bank of its beautiful lake. This was the first grave, in which the remains of the first white person were deposited, in this town.

"If our memory is correct, the next settler was Leonard Martin, now of Vernon, who settled in the west part of the town, near his present residence. He was followed in a few weeks by Lavalette Ellarson, who settled upon the same farm where he now resides.

* Mus-kee-Guac means sunfish, with which Muskego Lake abounds.

"In the year 1837, a number of settlers located and settled in the town. Among the first of these were Patrick Conray, Mr. Houyck, Homer H. Hawkins, George Green, John Kendall, James Field, Mr. Sexton, and also one or two others whose names we cannot now remember.

"In the year 1838, Garrett Doyle and family, James Conray, Francis Ives, John Burns, Daniel Sweeney, Levi G. Guild, Mr. Cox and a number of others, settled in the town.

"The first school that we had was taught by Miss Hannah Field, daughter of James Field, and now the wife of George McLaish, Esq., of Waterford, Racine County. This young lady, as a professor of the science of teaching the young idea how to shoot, was considered very successful indeed, notwithstanding the fact that many of her pupils thought it a matter of greater moment and importance to shoot a bear or a deer than an idea.

"We have no record of who preached the first sermon, but Elder Adams, a Unitarian, was among the earliest divines who ministered to the spiritual wants of the people.

"Dr. Otis was the first physician who located here. His career was short, and he was succeeded by Dr. Squires, who fell a prey to the cholera in 1849.

"Since the year 1836, when you take into consideration its dense thickets, its heavy timber, its deepmarshes, Muskego has marched forward with a stride seldom equaled in any country. Its heavy timbered lands have been converted into smooth and pleasant fields, much of its marshes have been converted into beautiful and profitable meadows, its dense thickets have been cleared and now reward the patient, toiling husbandman with a generous compensation for his labor. Each succeeding year witnesses the clicking of the reaper and the mower over ground which a few years ago was considered almost inaccessible to man or beast. How changed! How wonderful is the progress of civilization as it advances from the rising toward the setting sun!

"But where are those who were the pioneers in bringing those great changes about? A few of them yet survive and look back with pride and gratitude on the part they have acted in the development of these events; but the most of them have been called to receive their reward, and have become our precursors and pioneers in that undiscovered country beyond the tomb. May they rest in peace."

The first birth was that of an infant daughter in Luther Parker's family, at Muskego Center. The child lived but a few days.

A few years ago, John D. McDonald, of Summit, wrote as follows: "The first plow used to turn a furrow in Summit (which was on Baxter's farm) was made at the nearest shop—Wedge's mills, which I believe is in Muskego. *I obtained the irons from the blacksmith, and carried them to Summit on my back, and, as a recompense, I had the pleasure to travel between the handles of that plow, to turn the first sod in our town." Thus the first plows made in Waukesha County, were made in Muskego.

The oldest person in the town is Patrick Crosby.

The first settler in the town of Muskego was Luther Parker. All claims to the contrary, there now seems to be no doubt of the correctness of this statement. Mr. Parker came from the northern portion of New Hampshire, and made a claim where Muskego Center now is in the early part of June, 1836. He drove a two-horse team from the old "Granite State," and brought his wife and family. The latter consisted of three daughters and one son Charles D. Parker, who was afterward Lieutenant Governor of Wisconsin. The youngest child, Amanda, died August 8, 1838, which was probably the first death in the town.

Before the close of June, 1836, Henry Houyck and his sister Rebecca, settled in section 5, and soon after T. G. French and Asa Parker made claims in the town, the former at what is now Tess Corners, and the latter at a point about a half-mile farther south. These were all who actually settled in Muskego during 1836, although Leonard Martin, made a claim of lands on Section 19, on November, 19, 1836, and Lavallette Ellarson located a claim on Section 6.

During 1837, Homer H. Hawkins, George Green, Hugh Wedge, George Guild, Rufus C. and Henry M. Peck, Patrick Conray and Leonard Martin were permanently added to the inhabitants of the town. Mr. Conray was the first Irishman to locate in Muskego; and Mr. Martin, surveyed all the roads in the town, except one extending across the northwest corner.

During the year 1838, Anson H. Taylor, of New York, settled in Muskego, and purchased 800 acres of land about Muskego Center. He built the first saw-mill in the town, as well as the first store and hotel. He was looked upon as a rich man in those days. Gordon C. Cone, Gerritt Doyle, Thomas Lannon, Hiram Clafin, George Law, R. Drought, D. Sweeney and William P. Hall were very early settlers in Muskego, and the demise of a daughter of the latter was undoubtedly the second death in the town.

The first schoolhouse, which no doubt is as plainly pictured in the minds of the early pioneers as the faces of their nearest friends, was built of logs. The expense of its building was not defrayed by general taxation, but by voluntary subscriptions. It stood about eighty rods south of what is now Tess Corners. The first person to teach school in this primitive temple of learning was Miss Hall, in the fall of 1838, and winter of 1838-39.

The old Wedge saw-mill, well known throughout the county, must be mentioned in the history of Muskego, although it was built a few feet over the north line of the town in New Berlin.* After it was demolished in 1855, the present saw-mill was erected a few yards south of the town line, in Muskego. H. E. Hale, the present owner of the property, purchased it in 1861, and erected the grist-mill, which is also south of the town line, in this town.

During 1870, Jacob Siegel, a native of Wurtemberg, built a large steam flouring-mill at Muskego, which was destroyed by fire in 1876.

During the latter part of 1839, a post office was established in Muskego. James Field was the first Postmaster, and kept the office—there was precious little else but the office to keep—at his house, on Section 12. He was succeeded by Luther Parker, who kept the office at his place during a number of years.

A post office was established at Muskego Center, with Anson H. Taylor as Postmaster, who was succeeded by J. D. Reymert, Thomas Taylor, David Henry, and John C. Schuet, the latter of whom now has the honor of signing a "P. M." to his name. In politics, Mr. Schuet is called the "King of Muskego."

The first post office at Tess Corners was established in 1867 by the appointment of H. Rosenberg as Postmaster, which position he has since continuously held. This place was named in honor of Jacob Tess, a native of Mecklenburg, who was a prominent farmer in this vicinity.

Nearly or quite forty years ago, an office called Muskego Mills was kept near Wedge's Mill by a man who was best known throughout that part of the county as "Piper" Reynolds.

Thirty years ago, J. D. Reymert kept the postoffice at Denoon, which is now discontinued.

During the war, Durham Hill postoffice was established in Muskego, by the appointment of S. A. Tenny, the noted stock-raiser, as Postmaster. The present Postmaster is A. Veennedaal.

What was called the "Norwegian Settlement" began in the south part of the town in 1839, and grew rapidly until some of the newly-arriving immigrants brought the cholera, in 1849. Terrible and indescribable scenes followed the breaking-out of this fearful scourge, as the poor and ignorant people did not know how to diet or abate its ravages in the least. A hospital was finally established on the shores of Big Muskego Lake, in a large barn, where scores of the poor people died. This plague broke out here again in 1851 and raged with frightful violence and fatality. A log house near the town line in "Norway" was then an improvised hospital, and graves were dug and kept open for expected corpses. The plague resulted in so many deaths, and carried such terror into the community, that all but a few of the surviving Norwegian families left the town.

The first German to settle in Muskego was George Zingsheim, and Peter Schmidt was the second.

TOWN OF NEW BERLIN.

Township 6, of Range 20 east, was included in the town of Muskego by the act of January 2, 1838. In 1839, it was called Mentor, the name being changed by the following enactment:

“SECTION 1. That the town now called Mentor, in Township 6, Range 20, in the county of Milwaukee, shall hereafter be called New Berlin.

“Approved January 13, 1840.”

It has been generally supposed that the name, New Berlin, was suggested on account of the large number of German settlers who now began coming into the town, and who desired to perpetuate in some common manner the names of prominent cities in their Fatherland. But this is not the fact. The town was named by Waterman Field and Sidney Evans, in honor of the latter's native place.

New Berlin has no lakes and no large streams of water, though Poplar Creek and branches of Root River take their rise in this town, affording at least one good water-power.

The settlers in this town are largely Germans, or of direct German descent; and it is one of the most forehanded communities in the county. The farms are thoroughly tilled, debts promptly paid, and taxes hardly ever delinquent in New Berlin.

While the Old Settlers' Club was in existence, some effort was made to preserve the history of this town, which was very fortunate, from the fact that nearly all of its present residents are comparatively new comers, and cannot, consequently, know the early history of the locality. This effort resulted in the following, which is the report of the committee appointed to prepare a sketch of New Berlin for the records of the Old Settlers' Club:

In May, 1836, Sidney Evans and P. G. Harrington and wife left White Pigeon, in the State of Michigan, for Milwaukee, Mr. Evans on horseback by the way of Chicago, and Mr. Harrington and wife crossing the lake, meeting in Milwaukee on the 28th day of the month, and on the 31st, pushed out into the wilderness in search of homes.

Mr. Harrington, having found a temporary home for his wife in the family of Dr. Chase—now of the town of Lake, Milwaukee County, Evans and Harrington followed an old Indian trail leading in a southwesterly direction from Milwaukee, reaching what was at first called Mentor, afterward changed to New Berlin, the same day, and made their claims; Mr. Evans on the east half of the southeast quarter of Section 12, and Mr. Harrington on the east half of the northeast quarter of Section 13.

Mrs. Harrington being anxious and determined to accompany her husband into the woods, and share with him the hardships and privations of pioneer life, Mr. Harrington, the next morning, the 1st day of June, started for Milwaukee to bring her. Mr. Evans, in the mean time, went to work with a will, and in a very short time had a rude claim shanty constructed of logs about six feet in length, huilt up on three sides, and open to the fire in front, the roof and floor made of elm bark. Mr. Harrington returned with his wife the same day, June 1, 1836, she being the first white woman that ever stepped upon the soil of New Berlin. The three—Mr. Evans and Mr. Harrington and wife, occupied said shanty two weeks, and until Mr. Evans had built a log cabin about twelve feet square, which was the first house built and occupied in the town of New Berlin.

Mr. Evans, after occupying his farm several years, sold out to his brother John (who still occupies it), to engage in the hotel business, which he followed for several years with varied success, and which he ultimately quitted to re-engage in farming, purchasing for that purpose a farm in the town of Greenfield, Milwaukee County, only a half-mile from his previous farm, where he now resides in easy circumstances, hale and hearty, and good, apparently, for at least another quarter of a century. Mr. Harrington, also, after a year's residence in New Berlin, sold his claim, and removed to Sugar Creek Prairie, Walworth County, where he now resides, a wealthy and influential citizen.

In the month of June of the same year, John H. White, a young man from the State of Michigan, came to New Berlin, and located on the north west quarter of Section 32, where he has ever since resided, and is the earliest settler now living in the town.

Soon after Mr. White made his claim, Almon Osborn, accompanied by one Smith, made a claim of the water power on the southeast quarter of Section 32, for Hugh Wedge and Isaac Dewitt. Wedge and Dewitt came on soon after, and commenced building a saw-mill, which was completed the following spring. It was a poor-paying concern in those days—little or no sale for lumber, and they disposed of it in 1840. Hiram E. Hale is the present owner.

Late in the season, Waterman Field, Iva Stewart, Curtis Davis and a Mr. Ellison settled in the town. The following year [1837] Ransom Bruce, William Wedge, William S. Parsons, the late George McWhorter, with his sons, Ray and Andrew L., Hiram Hollister, Peter J. Smith, A. W. Morris, John and H. J. G. Palmer, S. R. Hunkins and John Lloyd came into the town and settled. In 1838, Benjamin Hunkins, Edwin and Edward Rogers, and a few others settled in the town. The year 1839, owing to the approaching land sale in the autumn of that year, witnessed a large influx of immigrants into the town, prominent among whom were P. V. Monroe, Daniel Gilbert, William A. Cone, Whipple Newell, Robert H. Hunkins with his sons, James and Hazen H., George Gambol, and the late Rev. R. Cheney, the pioneer clergyman of the Free-Will Baptist denomination in Wisconsin, and the organizer of the first religious society in the town [in 1840], and who died in August, 1869, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years and some months.

Jacob Korn, Caleb Barber, Rufus Cheney, Mark Murray, Richard Hennesy, Peter Goff, Moses Cleveland and many others became residents of the town in 1840.

The first school taught in the town, was during the winter of 1840-41, by a Miss Elvira Hunkins, in the dwelling house of Hiram Hollister. The first schoolhouse was built of logs in 1841, in School District No. 1, on a site generously donated for the purpose, by the late P. V. Monroe, one-quarter of a mile east of his residence. The first marriage was that of Alfred Orendorf to Miss Livonia Rathbun, in October, 1837, by a Rev. Mr. Turk, at the house of Waterman Field. The first Justice of the Peace was Waterman Field, in 1837. The first postoffice was established in the same year, Waterman Field being appointed P. M. The first blacksmith-shop was that built by Curtis Davis, in 1837, who employed a Mr. Kline as blacksmith and who died soon after, his being the first death in the town. He was buried on a rise of ground a little east of Prospect Hill, on a farm now owned by Andrew Snyder. The first tavern kept in the town was that of Curtis Davis, in 1837, one-half mile east of Prospect Hill, on the premises now owned by John Superno. Mr. Davis remained in the town only a year or two, his "tavern" successively passing into the hands of a Mr. Childs from Milwaukee, William Hare, Colonel Andrews, F. M. Putney, the well known and popular proprietor of the Exchange of Waukesha, and W. W. Chaplin. Other "taverns" were soon after built. In 1839, Waterman Field, having sold his claim to P. V. Monroe, built a "tavern," for the accommodation of travelers, on the site of the saloon now kept by George Klaberger. Mr. Field's health failing him, he, at the end of a year, in pursuance of the advice of physicians, left his wife (now Mrs. E. F. Bennett) in charge of the tavern, went to New York, and sailed for the West India Islands for the benefit of his health. He died within a year in Illinois, of consumption, on his way home. After a year or two, the above mentioned "tavern" passed into the hands of Mr. William S. Parsons, who named it the "Farmer's Inn," and who for so many years, made it the most popular tavern ever kept between Milwaukee and Rock River—travelers frequently driving till late in the night for the purpose of "putting up" with "Bill Parsons." The first team driven through the town was a yoke of oxen attached to a wagon, by Major Alfred Orendorf, in 1836, from Milwaukee to Mukwonago. Wheat was first raised in the town by Hiram Hollister, Peter J. Smith, William S. Parsons and George McWhorter, in 1838. The first election held in the town was that for town officers, on the 5th of April, 1842.

The town now contains four churches. The first built was that of the German Lutherans, in 1847. The second, that of the Catholics, in 1856. The third, that of the Free Will-Baptists, in 1858. The fourth that of the Methodists in 1861. The number of schoolhouses in the town is nine.

The industries of the town are almost wholly agricultural. The population about two thousand.

NEW BERLIN, February 22, 1871.

This town has the honor of containing the first saw-mill in Waukesha County, as well as having the first regularly organized Free-Will Baptist Church in Wisconsin.

It will be noticed that in the history preceding this, the old Wedge (now called Hale's) Mill, is credited to Muskego. It was so recorded upon the written and oral testimony of many old settlers who were supposed to know the facts; that they were mistaken, however, is not in the least a matter of wonder. In an early day, the town boundaries were not so well known as now; and as the present mill, which took the place of Wedge's mill, is in Muskego, and as the first mill was only a few feet north of the line between New Berlin and Muskego, the mistake was easily made. The dam was built in 1836, by Hugh Wedge, and the mill begun the same season. It was ready to saw early in 1837, and was the first mill in the county. In 1868, Hiram E. Hale built a flouring-mill on or near the site. A saw-mill, built by A. W. Cole in 1855, preceded Hale's flouring mill.

In 1841, William P. Hale built a dam across Muskego Creek, first using the power to run a turning-lathe, building a saw-mill two years later, the whole being remodeled into a grist-mill in 1846, when Hiram E. Hale bought an interest in the property. An engine was put in, in 1848, and the mill operated until 1860 by steam. It fell into disuse in 1868, and now stands in a ruinous condition as one of the landmarks of the section.

New Berlin Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—This insurance company was organized June 20, 1874, with twenty-five members, who pledged from $1,000 to $2,000 each, in capital stock. The first officers were John Evans, President; J. R. Wheeler, Secretary, and Andrew Snyder, Jr., Treasurer. At the next election, Mr. Evans was again made President; A. Snyder, Jr., Secretary and Abraham Kern, Treasurer. These officers have been respectively re-elected since that time. The company numbers 250 members, with 300 policies in force. Nearly every farmer in the town is a member. The capital is now $275,000; loss paid to 1880, $1,200. The first Directors were J. R. Wheeler, J. Primrose, John Evans, Andrew Snyder, A. Kern. The three latter are still serving with George Small and George Calhoun.

The old Muskego Mills postoffice was established about 1840 or 1841, and was kept by Cynthia Reynolds in a log house on Section 32, near the line between New Berlin and Muskego. It took its name from Wedge's mill, and received mail from Racine and Milwaukee once a week. It was discontinued in 1849.

The little cluster of houses on the highest point of land in the town, took its name from the name of the postoffice, which was established in 1850. This name was suggested by Elihu Enos, then Postmaster of Waukesha, or by Dr. J. L. Ingersoll, on account of the "beautiful prospect to be seen from its summit." The first Postmaster was Daniel Church; the next P. L. McLean; the third, Daniel Church, and the fourth and present incumbent, T. S. Winton.

The first settlers at or near Prospect Hill were John H. White, Hugh Wedge, Daniel Gilbert and Rev. Rufus Cheney. The place contains one church, two stores, two blacksmith shops, schoolhouse, a public hall and a score of dwellings.

The Free Baptist Church was organized July 11, 1840, by Rev. Rufus Cheney (born at Antrim, N. H., in 1780), and in his house. The first members were Mr. Cheney, Aretas Whitcomb and wife, Daniel Gilbert and wife, and Mrs. Rufus Cheney. Mrs. Gilbert is the only one of these now living in New Berlin. The Elders who succeeded Mr. Cheney were P. W. Belknap, Enoch Jenkins, E. J. Keevill, E. Berry, H. N. Plumb, O. D. Augir, F. B. Moulton, Roswell Cheney and M. G. Pett, the present pastor. The church was built in 1858-59. Rufus Cheney died in New Berlin aged ninety.

St. Valerius Roman Catholic Church was organized and the edifice built in 1856-57. The first priest was Rev. Tahler. The other priests have been Revs. Mohle, Mellman, Geinsen, Bohnenkam, Seibold, Weining, Felker, Nutzger and Eidelman. The church, which cost $1,100, was built under the charge of A. Snyder and B. Casper. The parochial schoolhouse was built and school begun in 1864. The congregation now numbers sixty families. The first Catholic mass said in New Berlin was at the log house of Andrew Snyder, about 1844, by Father Kundig, of Milwaukee.

The Methodist organization at first comprised two congregations. One met in the Bennett Schoolhouse, and the other in the New Berlin Central Schoolhouse. In 1859, they united, and formed the organization now known as the Methodist Episcopal Church of New Berlin. W. A. Cone was the first local preacher.

The first services of the German Reformed Church were held in 1842, at the house of Christian Dann. The first preacher was Rev. Smith. The first, a frame church, was built in 1849, and used until the present brick edifice was erected in 1865, at a cost of $800, with the labor of members. The present pastor is August Becker. The first formal organization was in 1846, as a Lutheran Church; but the majority soon organized the Reform Church.

Prospect Lodge, No. 402, I. O. G. T., was organized April 27, 1866, with forty-eight charter members. The first officers were as follows: W. C. T., H. E. Hale; W. V. T., Mrs. H. H. Hunkins; W. I., J. W. Church; W. T., Mrs. Kate Speirs; W. F. S., J. L. Ingersoll; W. M., O. H. Perry; W. I. G., Rocalthe Peck; W. O. G., D. A. Church; W. Chap., Rev. E. Perry; P. W. C. T., H. H. Hunkins. This lodge was discontinued in November, 1867.

Happy Home Lodge, No. 456, I. O. G. T., was organized June 21, 1878. The first Worthy Chief Templar was Emma Killips. The lodge now has forty-three members in good standing. Meetings are held every Saturday night at Killips' Hall. The present officers are as follows: George W. Stone, W. C. T.; Emma Killips, W. V. T.; Mrs. G. W. Stone, W. S.; John Killips, P. W. C. T.; Arthur Long, W. F. S.; C. Emperor, W. T.; Mrs. C. Emperor, W. C.; George Fletcher, W. M.; Benton Woodcock, L. D.

The first election held in New Berlin was at the schoolhouse in District No. 1, April 5, 1842. The election resulted in choosing Benjamin Hunkins for Chairman; George Guile and Ransom Bruce, Supervisors; P. V. Monroe, Town Clerk; Daniel Gilbert, Lucien Clark, Sidney Evans, Assessors; S. R. Hunkins, Collector. Daniel Gilbert, Whipple Newell and George McWhorter were the defeated candidates for Supervisors.

Officers for 1880 are : Supervisors, A. E. Gilbert, Chairman ; George Calhoun, Abram Kern ; Town Clerk, Will S. Parsons ; Assessor, William Hanna ; Treasurer, William Graser ; Justices of the Peace, J. J. Punch, John Wright, J. L. Ingersoll, E. J. Loomis ; Constables, Dan D. Church, Chris. Emperor, Alex. Heaton, George Wolf.

The first team of horses was brought into New Berlin by Sidney Evans. The first hotel was built in 1837, by Alvah Hetherington, and was afterward managed by Waterman Field, who purchased it in 1839.

Among the settlers in New Berlin in 1836 were John H. White, Almon Osborn, Mr. Smith, John Potter, Mr. McIntosh, Hugh McIntyre, D. S. and L. Ellison, John Brown, Alvah Hetherington, James King, Sidney Evans, Alvah Plumb, Mr. Thompson, Hugh Wedge, Alanson Martin, Waterman Field, Mr. Nye, Ira Stewart, Thomas Copeley and William Wedge, a good list for that early day.

TOWN OF OCONOMOWOC.

The first settler, Charles B. Sheldon, who stuck his stake in the soil of this town, was induced to come here by a glowing description of the country which he read in the Milwaukee Advertiser, at that time printed and published by Daniel Richards. Mr. Sheldon was on the point of going to California with a party from Platteville, in this State, when he happened, fortunately for him in all probability, to come across that paper. He had no sooner read it than he determined to come here. Very soon after Mr. Sheldon started, coming by way of Janesville, through to Prairieville, where he met a party of surveyors, who informed him that he would find good land in the Oconomowoc Lake district. In April, 1837, he located a tract of land on the east bank of Fowler's Lake. La Belle Cemetery is now located on a portion of this farm. The balance of it Mr. Sheldon lives upon as a homestead. His cabin was the first white man's habitation in the town. John D. McDonald, of Summit, then a young man also, helped him build it. After locating his claim, Mr. Sheldon went to Milwaukee and entered it at the land office on the 21st of April, 1837. While Mr. Sheldon was in Milwaukee, he met two gentlemen who had a plat of the town in the northwest part of what is now known as Waukesha County. Mr. Sheldon looked over it and pointed out on the map the land he had that day entered. They seemed surprised, and one of the gentlemen, H. W. Blanchard, asked him when he was going back to his land. Mr. Sheldon said he intended to return the next day. Mr. Blanchard at once made arrangements to accompany Mr. Sheldon, and the next day started with him for Oconomowoc, and in a few days H. W. Blanchard had made a claim to the west half of Section 33. On the 1st of May, 1837, Mr. Blanchard sold his claim to Philo Brewer.

In the month of June, 1837, Mr. Thomas Salter came to the town, and laid claim to the northwest quarter of Section 34, and settled thereon. Mr. Salter was unmarried, but did not long remain so, for his "sweetheart," whom he had left in England, his native land, came out alone the following summer to cast her lot with his, and brave the dangers of his Western home. Mr. Salter met her in Milwaukee, where they were at once married, after which they came out to the farm, where they have since resided.

In June, 1837, Mathias Morris, since deceased, came here with his family, three sons and four daughters, and son-in-law, Jacob Widderman. Together they made claim to the south half of Sections 27 and 28, and built a cabin on section 28. In 1841, they sold half of this claim to William Campbell and George W. Williams, and afterward sold the balance to Cotton & Ferry.

Mr. Morris was the first married man to settle in the town, and his wife, and daughters Ann, Catharine, Sarah and Elizabeth, were the first white women. The family now resides in Summit.

George W. Pugh, C. Ludden, Charles C. Wilson and perhaps a few others, came here in 1837. In 1838, a few came to the town, of whom may be mentioned T. L. Smith, A. Rowe and Jesse Edsall and family. Mr. Edsall built the second cabin, which was long occupied by Mr. Worthington, who bought out Mr. Edsall. This house stood quite close to the street, in front of Mr. Vilas' present house.

In 1839, there came J. D. Dewey, John Heath, Andrew Wilson and family, John Ferry and family, William Quigley and G. A. Foster. Mr. Foster was quite a prominent citizen, and did considerable in his time to advance the interest of the agricultural part of the community by bringing in fine stock.

In 1840, George Brooks and Jasper Dibble, and families, and perhaps a few others, came.

In 1841, William Barton and his son John, William Campbell, George W. Williams and John Metcalf came into the town.

In 1842, a very large number came, as follows: Monroe Hatch and family, L. Osborne and family, C. Eastman and family, John Brainard and family, J. S. Hastings, William Chaffee, D. Hastings, Thomas Chandler, Horace and Hamilton Hastings, Samuel Blaine, Nathan Chaffee, A. Lowe, George Sugden, F. Chase and perhaps a few others.

In 1843, a still greater number arrived. The country by this time had become very much improved, and the first-comers were beginning to feel comfortable. During this year came A. B. Hall and family, L. Washburn and family, I. C. Stratton, H. J. Baker, George W. Hinkley and family, Willard Thompson, E. W. and John Daly, James Williams, R. W. Washburn, O. C. Olson (Merton), John Forra, Michael Mana, Alexander Coyle and brother, Carl Gasmann and Daniel P. Simonson and others.

In 1844, the increase was still greater, people coming in with a rush. They were as follows, as nearly as can be learned: George W. Fay, Hiram Proseus and family, William T. Thompson, Silas Coleman, Mrs. Christie and son, James R. Wood, Charles J. Mann, Alexander Madole, Moses Clemons, W. W. Collins, Ole Petersen, Ole Olson, Charles Throop, B. M. Woodruff and E. C. Hartwell.

The first birth in the town was that of a son of Thomas Salter, which occurred in the spring of 1839. The child died soon after birth, this being also the first death.

The marriage of Mr. Salter, although consummated in Milwaukee, places himself and lady at the head of the marriage list among the pioneers of Oconomowoc.

J. D. Dewey was appointed the first Justice, and Charles Morris was the first Constable. The second Justice was Jonathan Dougherty. He was elected at the first town meeting.

A schoolhouse was constructed in 1841, of logs, on the north side of the Oconomowoc River, not far east of C. M. Bordoe's residence. This was the first temple of learning erected in the town, and here Miss Dougherty and Isaac Woodruff taught the first schools.

The Rev. Lloyd Breck is said to have been the first minister to hold religious services in this town, although the Rev. Mr. Frink began coming here at about the same time. These first services were held in the schoolhouse very soon after it was built.

The first road was run through here from Milwaukee to Watertown and Madison, in the winter of 1838-39. Garrett Vliet was the surveyor, and John Richards, of Watertown, and A. Bird, of Madison, were the Commissioners. It was laid out and run through by Mr. Sheldon Schuttler's farm, just north of the city of Oconomowoc.

For the first few years the settlers were obliged to go to Summit Corners for mail and necessaries, such a place as Oconomowoc not being then thought of. But now everything is reversed; Summit Corners has passed away and Oconomowoc is a thriving city, and the center of a large trade.

The first postoffice was established here in 1845, E. A. Saxe being appointed Postmaster.

There was no blacksmith's shop in the town until 1843 or 1844, when A. Rowe came to the relief of the people and started a shop.

The first town meeting was held for the town of Oconomowoc in April, 1844, in the Village of Oconomowoc, at Rockwell & Cotton's Mill. Prior to this time the town had been attached to the town of Summit. Out of this town meeting a strong local feeling was engendered between the two towns, which lasted for a number of years. On the morning of the town meeting day, Curtis Reed, who then lived at what is now known as Okauchee, had a caucus on his own account. This caucus was held in the hollow under the hill, as you enter the Brown street valley on the north Okauchee road, and was long after known as Caucus

Hollow. Mr. Reed had assembled, with his brother Orson's help, all the recruits he could get, and the story is that he had them from Summit, Merton and Ashippun. A ticket was made out with himself as Chairman, and in a body they all went to the town meeting. They were too many for the balance of Oconomowoc, and Reed's ticket was elected. It was the first packed political caucus ever held in Oconomowoc.

Gasmann's Mill.—Hans Gasmann built a saw-mill on Section 2, and set it running in March, 1844. It stood on the north side of the Ashippun River. It was owned and run by Mr. Gasmann until 1855, when he disposed of the property to C. Hyer. Shortly after, Mr. Hyer became possessor, he tore the mill down and rebuilt it on the opposite side, a little farther down the stream. He continued it as a saw-mill until 1858, when Peter Gasmann, son of the first owner, purchased it, and in the summer of 1859, built a grist-mill by the side of the saw-mill, and put in two run of stone for custom work. Philip Zillis, the present proprietor, bought the property in 1870.

Okauchee Mill is located on the southwest side of Okauchee Lake, on Section 35. The first structure was a small saw-mill, built by Orson Reed, in 1839-40. It was known as Reed's Mill, and was operated by him until 1847. A large portion of the lumber used in the construction of the Milwaukee & Watertown Plank Road was furnished by this mill. In 1869, the mill passed into the possession of F. Schraudenbach. In 1877, twenty-five or thirty acres of land, including the dam, was contracted to H. B. Shears & Co., who built a new frame mill, putting in six runs of stone, and machinery for grinding flour by the new process. They conducted the mill until the spring of 1879, when the property reverted back to Mr. F. Schraudenbach. The mill has a capacity of about a hundred barrels of flour per day.

There are several very fine farms and residences in the town and city. The two finest residences are said to be Schuttler's and Schufeldt's. These places show how largely the county can be improved.

Monterey.—Monterey is situated four and one-half miles north of Oconomowoc, on the banks of Ashippun River, on Sections 8 and 9. It is surrounded by a good farming country, and does a good business, there being three stores with mixed stocks of goods, two blacksmith-shops, wagon-shop, shoe-shop, large flouring-mill, hotel, two churches, a cemetery and a good, common school. The name of the village is said to have been given by Mr. Hackly, about the close of the Mexican war, in commemoration of the events then transpiring at Monterey, Mexico. The land where the village stands was entered by C. L. Annis, in 1844. Among the early settlers in the village may be mentioned H. Carter, A. W. Hackly, Rev. Abram Nye, Justin Noble and John W. Dopp and family.

A school was taught here as early as 1844, by Mr. H. Carter, in a private house which stood a few rods west of where Dopp's barn now stands. The first schoolhouse was built of logs, and stood on Section 8, a few rods west of the site of the present school building, and was put up about 1849 or 1850. As the population increased, the demand for more room for the urchins resulted in the erection of the present brick house.

The first local preacher was Abram Nye, who held religious services as early as 1845.

The first frame house was built by Justin Noble, on the lot where Charles Vroman now lives.

Sanford Cotton built a saw-mill on the south bank of the Ashippun River, where the dam now stands, in 1844. Cotton ran the mill two years; then traded it to Justin Noble, who enlarged the usefulness of the mill by adding two runs of stone to do grinding for the neighbors. In 1850, Mr. Noble disposed of the mill to Mr. Beman, who operated the old mill until 1856. During that year he, in company with Mr. Moreland, erected the present mill. Twelve and one-half feet head of water is furnished by the dam. The present proprietors are Dainton & Roth.

D. McDonald came here in 1846, and built a tavern nearly opposite where the present hotel stands. About 1857, Mr. Place, a new-comer, built the present hotel. Its dimensions are 38x44 feet, two stories high, and divided into thirteen rooms. Ezra Vroman is proprietor.

A. W. Hackley was Monterey's first merchant and Postmaster.

Stephen Vroman and son, Ezra, had the first contract for carrying the mail over the old mail route between Summit and Fond du Lac.

John Upton began blacksmithing here as early as 1845. Hiram Marsh came two years after.

The churches here are the Methodist and what is known as the Union. The last-named church was built by a combination of Congregational, Presbyterian, Universalist and Methodist elements, in 1864. Ten years later, the Methodists withdrew, and built the present church. After that, the different denominations that yet remained, continued to hold services in it until 1878, since which time it has been used by the Congregationalists principally.

The Methodist Episcopal Church edifice was built in 1874, on Section 9, at a cost of about $1,200. Charles Vroman, Joseph Miller, John Coville and Wesley Davy were the first Trustees. It has twenty members. Services are held by the minister from Oconomowoc.

Mapleton.—In this vicinity the first settlements were made in the fall of 1843 and spring of 1844, by Smith Jones, H. J. Baker, James Sampson, Hans Gasmann and family of thirteen children, Daniel Simonsen, James O. Riley, H. H. Woledge, H. Baldwin, D. Henevey, Mr. Plumly, Mr. Lenhart, Martin Ryan, Alexander, James and Michael Coyle, Alvah Austin, Harry Lester, and Thomas Riley with a large family, and perhaps others. Smith Jones built the first house in what is now Mapleton, but sold to Samuel Breck in 1848, and returned to his home in Massachusetts. Mr. Breck was, really, the founder of Mapleton. Most of the buildings now here are on land formerly owned by him, but were sold cheap to encourage settlement. He built the first grist-mill at Mapleton, in the year 1849, and he also started a store the same year. The mill is now owned by Peter Theobald and Mr. Wehrmuth.

The first blacksmith shop was started by Messrs. Whitehall & Jerenson, who used Mr. Breck's storeroom for the purpose, but during the year a fire destroyed the building and contents. The next shop was started by Mr. Jewison.

Hans Larsen kept the first shoe-shop in Mapleton.

The only hotel is kept by Mr. Borneman.

The first schoolhouse was built in 1849, on a lot donated by Mr. Breck. It was frame, and was considered quite "nobby" at that time, as most of the schoolhouses in the country were built of logs. But, in the course of time, it became too small for the rising generation, and a new one was built which is a credit to the community. It is 28x56, brick, well finished inside and outside. It is furnished with ventilators, plenty of light, high ceilings, and is also supplied with good furniture.

In early days, the postoffice was at Delafield, and the neighbors would club together and get it by turns about once in two or three weeks. In 1851, Samuel Breck became the first Postmaster, and, in 1855, George Sterzbach succeeded him. In 1859, Anthony Houser succeeded Mr. Sterzbach, and has been Postmaster ever since.

A Catholic Church is a short distance from here, on land donated by Alexander Coyle. Adjoining it is also a cemetery belonging to the church. The resident priest is Rev. M. Monaghan. There is a congregation of about seventy families belonging to the parish.

LISBON

TOWN OF OTTAWA.

Township 6, Range 17 east, was set off and organized into a town separate from Genesee in 1843, in accordance with an act of the Council and House of Representatives of Wisconsin, approved March 21, 1843, and the first election in said town was held at the house of Newman Chub. Before 1839, Ottawa was a part of Mukwonago.

Ottawa was named by Hans Crocker, of Milwaukee, while making a visit at Mr. Dousman's in 1841. At the next session of the Legislature, the name was proposed, and indorsed by special act of that body.

Ottawa is splendidly watered, the country being thickly dotted by small lakes and springs, the latter, many of them, being the heads of several small streams which traverse the town in the north, central and southern parts, and which furnish excellent facilities for stock-raising, cheese manufacturing and milling.

The inhabitants are mostly of foreign extraction, consisting of Welch, Catholic Germans, Protestant Irish, Americans, English, and a few other nationalities.

The first settler in this town was Talbot C. Dousman, who came to this locality in 1836, in company with three young bachelors like himself, looking for land. Mr. Dousman at that time selected the land, where he now lives, on Section 2, and his companions, George Hosmer, Delos Taft and E. W. Edgerton, the latter now of Milwaukee, fixed upon sites near him, but in towns adjacent to Ottawa, as now laid out. At that time, the whole surrounding country was called Genesee, after the land of their nativity.

In 1837, Mr. Dousman erected a cabin, a part of which yet remains, and the first permanent resident then established himself. Being a bachelor yet, he was obliged to get a family to occupy his house, or keep house for him. The coming of this family heralds the advent of the first white woman in Ottawa.

In June, 1839, Mr. Dousman married Miss Paddock, one of the few young ladies to be found here in those days. This was probably the first marriage that took place in this town.

Mrs. Dousman's father, George Paddock, came from Ohio in 1838. He passed around the lake via Chicago, and, at last, at Poplar Creek, Milwaukee County, came to the end of the road; beyond was an unbroken wilderness, apparently, but not certainly. Human nature is the same the world over, for they were no sooner settled than certain stalwart young pioneers put in an appearance, and it may be recorded, that the most delightful labors of their new life then began—together with the knowledge that they were not alone.

The first Germans in this town were the brothers Boniface—Loring, Link and David—who came from Bavaria and settled here in the fall of 1842, building a log house, 14x16 feet, on the corners of Sections 4 and 8, thus holding a claim on each. In June, 1843, they were joined by the Werner brothers and N. Mundchan, and the six families lived for some time in the house of the Boniface brothers.

Wolves and bears were quite plentiful, and kept the pigs of the new-comers close to the house. Occasionally, a pig would holt into the house, helter-skelter, knocking pots, pans, and what-not, every way; but, of course, this had to be put up with, or piggy must become a victim to the ravenous appetites of the surrounding beasts.

Up to 1839, there was no road through Ottawa, but in the spring of this year Mr. Dousman, Mr. Paddock and Mr. Edgerton opened a road from Waterville to Prairieville, now Waukesha, where the settlers had to go to get Mr. Hine to do their blacksmithing, which certainly could not have been a little when we consider that breaking up the land was with them "the chief end of man." One old settler said: "Between hunting up their oxen and getting their plows mended, they had but little time for breaking." Prairieville was also at that time the one place where they could get mail or provisions, short of Milwaukee.

On St. Peter's Day of this year, all the people, men, women and children, turned out for a jollification, going to one of the lakes adjacent, riding side by side in a row, on buck-boards, the women taking provisions and the men carrying firearms. Afterward, for many years, the anniversary of this occasion was kept in a similar manner. It may be added that this was one of the first gatherings of the kind in the county.

In 1841, the people of Ottawa were horrified at the death of Patsy Finnegan, who was burned to death while attempting to stay the progress of a prairie-fire. This was the first death in the town, and occurred on Section 12.

Of the first town officers but little is known, except that Mr. Dousman officiated as Chairman for seven successive years, John Meiggs being Clerk.

Kate Hosmer, born in Waterville, in April, 1839, was the first "to the manor born" in this section of the county.

The first sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Hall, during 1841, at the house of T. C. Dousman.

In 1842, Miss Mary Thayer opened the first school, in a log schoolhouse, on Section 14, directly opposite to where now stands the town hall.

The first post office was kept by Peter D. Gifford, now living at North Prairie. Afterward J. Griffeth was Postmaster for several years, and had the office in the old Ottawa House, on Section 34. Then Josiah Elding was appointed and held the office for some time, in the old place. From the keeping of Mr. Elding it passed into the hands of George Davey, who now keeps his office in a rather retired place on Section 28.

Ottawa has at present but one grist-mill, and at one time there was a small saw-mill at what is now Dousman's fish-pond. The present mill was built by B. V. Knight, in 1859, on the Checoopenaw, on the land of T. C. Dousman. The mill has a single run of stone, with a feed-mill. The water head is small, not exceeding seven feet. The general machinery, water-wheel and all, are rather original in construction, being the work of a man not trained, apparently, as a millwright, but yet a very capable mechanic.

There are two cheese factories in the town. The Ottawa factory was built in 1877, on Section 17, and has one 5,000-pound vat and curing rooms to match. The proprietor of this factory, Henry Weiner, has also a store on Section 8, built in 1868. The Waterville factory, T. C. Dousman, proprietor, is a fine, well-fitted, three-vat factory, each vat having a capacity of 5,000 pounds of milk. Nothing but the best cream cheese is made here. Mr. Dousman also built a factory in 1871, at the pond before mentioned, but the building has long since ceased to be used for that purpose.

William Reid & Son have a fine nursery, one which is a credit to the town and which can be regarded as a success.

The town gives a fair support to several churches and schools, which is certainly an indication that the people are quite as prosperous as in many other more highly-favored localities.

Ottawa Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—The Farmer's Mutual Fire Insurance Company in this town, is a very prosperous organization. Early in the year 1873, a petition was circulated by the most enterprising of the citizens until the requisite number of signers were secured to obtain a charter. Then a meeting was held at the house of Jacob Gaul, and the following gentlemen were elected Directors: Helger Helgerson, Samuel Stewart, James Kernan, William Reid, Sr., T. J. Powell, Frederic Dryer and J. J. Lurvey. June 28, 1873, the first regular society meeting was held, when Kernan and Stewart resigned, and C. C. Harris and D. Maule were elected in their places. Thomas J. Powell was elected President, and J. J. Lurvey, Secretary. Lurvey was also appointed to canvass the town for insurance capital. At the canvass that soon followed, $29,000 was subscribed, and 29 policies were issued as shown at the first annual meeting, January 1, 1874. At the last annual meeting, January 1, 1880, there were 114 members, and a showing of 193 policies issued up to that date, amounting to $168,786 capital stock. One assessment only has been made thus far to cover a loss of $225, the tax being a little more than 1½ mills per $1,000.

Ottawa Presbyterian Church.—During the month of September, 1860, Rev. R. W. Monteith, preacher at Genesee, began holding meetings, by request of several of the people, in the schoolhouse of District No. 1. At that time, there was a Sabbath school which had been under operation for some time, with James M. Forbes as Superintendent. On the 19th of March following, a meeting was called at the house of Mr. Forbes, and after preliminary resolutions a church was organized, to be called the First Presbyterian Church of Ottawa, "Old-School" discipline. James Stewart, Daniel Don, Elvira Boon, D. D. Robertson, Catharine Robertson, Jane Don, Elvira Stewart, James M. Forbes, Lucinda Forbes, Samuel Stewart, Jannet McKinley, Nancy Stewart, David Stewart and Jane Reid became members at that time. They immediately went to work and as a result had the present house of worship ready for use by the 13th day of October, 1861, when it was dedicated. At the dedication, two sermons were preached—one by Rev. Monteith—Genesis, xxviii—22, "And this stone which I have set for a pillar shall be God's House," and one by Rev. O. Park. Text, Genesis xxviii—17—"And he was afraid, and said how dreadful is this place." The first pastor was Rev. J. W. J. Monteith; second, J. H. Potter; third, J. Martin; Elders, Samuel and John Stewart; present number of members, thirty.

Dousman's Fish-Pond.—One of the many beautiful places peculiar to Waukesha County, of which the people are justly proud, is the trout pond of Dousman. To see this spot is to see one of the superlatively fine sights of the county. Here, in primitive retirement, surrounded by gently undulating forest-covered hills and dales, twenty or more splendid springs burst forth and pour their crystal streams into a basin or dam, covering an area of several acres. This dam constitutes at once the head of a fine stream, called the Scuppernong, and the present trout pond, and here, or in immediate connection with the dam, are the flumes, races, hatching-house, feed-mill, storage-rooms, hotel and various appliances required to propagate the fish and to entertain visitors. On either side, bright springs are bubbling up, and speckled beauties speed by in swarms of thousands, darting hither in sportive abandon and thither with the reckless freedom that well-fed fish so well display.

The head of the pond, the monster spring, is the grandest sight of all.

A brief description of the system of propagation followed here may not be inappropriate, as this is the representative trout-pond of the country and the largest in the United States. There are several flumes with spawning races attached. These flumes are about a rod wide and vary in length from twelve to fifteen rods. The spawning races are about four feet wide, varying in length. These flumes are made by setting posts in the ground and fastening them across the top by timbers and planking them, as is usually done. They are graveled in the bottom and so arranged that a current of clear cold water is constantly passing through them; these are the homes of the fish, as prepared for them, although there are myriads of lusty fellows running at large in the waters of the pond, or in the stream below the pond, where there are large numbers, many having been allowed to escape years ago on account of there being too many in the pond.

The fish go to the spawning races in October, this being the season for spawning. Then the males and the females are separated. There is no difficulty in detecting the sexes at this season, the female having quite a rotund form that the male does not possess.

After the hatching apparatus and the filtering tanks and boxes have been put in order, and the gravel to be used has been sifted to a proper size, and washed, boiled, and re-washed to destroy insect life, then begins the work of capturing the fish. This is done with nets made of coarse bagging, with appropriate frames and grooves, which are in proximity to the spawning beds.

The party who superintends the work takes the fish by hand from their place of captivity, and by means of a gentle pressure with the thumb and middle finger, the eggs, which average about one-sixth of an inch in diameter, emerge from the fish. The male fish is similarly handled. The eggs from the female are immediately placed in dry pans, this being the Russian method, and considered preferable to any other. In the pans about half an inch of water is placed; the male fish is held over these, and the milt being gently pressed from him, and evenly distributed over the eggs, and thoroughly mixed therewith, the process of impregnation begins. All this preliminary work occupies less than a half-hour, and in this condition the material is transferred to the "nets" in the hatching troughs, which are simply little board brooks, ten or twelve feet long and one foot wide and which are divided into twelve compartments one foot square. These troughs are properly graveled and supplied with fresh cold water from a large spring but a few feet away. Each trough will hold about 30,000 eggs, about three-fourths of which hatch.

Within ninety days from the time the eggs are deposited in the troughs, the little fish about an inch in length, begin to appear. Up to this time all that is requisite is to keep the gravel where the eggs are deposited free from foreign substances and to remove any eggs that may from any cause lose life, as, if they are not removed within forty-eight hours, they will cause the death of many more. They are detected by the color, a dead egg being white, and a live one being of a pinkish shade. They must be supplied with pure water constantly, at an average temperature of 50°, and the light must be excluded while the hatching process is going on. Very soon after they hatch out, the troughs begin to become too contracted for the little finny tribes, and their food being chopped up fine for them two or three times a day, they develop rapidly, and at the end of a few weeks they are transferred to the rearing-boxes in finely woven nets or wire scoops, where they find more scope for disporting themselves.

From the rearing-boxes, the fish are transferred to the ponds, when great care must be exercised to keep the larger fish separate from the smaller ones, as they have naturally voracious tendencies, and destroy their younger brethren to an alarming extent when unchecked. To prevent this, the ponds are graded, so as to contain fish of pretty nearly the same size.

The food of the trout is pork, and beef liver, the beef liver being the best. The chopping or grinding apparatus is run by water-power. Here the liver is ground into an impalpable mass, then strained through cloth, the coarse part being fed to the large fish, the fine to the small ones. There are about 1,500,000 fish here now, according to estimate, varying in size from a third of the length of the little finger to two pounds or more in weight.

The Roman Catholic Church was the first in the town, and was originally a log structure, but has been rebuilt these many years. The Priest who presides here also attends to another church in Jefferson County. There are two Welsh churches on Section 30, one of which is called Bark River Church. A new church was recently erected and dedicated by the Bible Christian Society at Pond Island.

The first claims were made by T. C. Dousman, Mr. Orchard and George Hoskins. Orchard sold soon afterward to Justin Noble.

The present town officers are Henry Weiner, Chairman; F. G. Tytherleigh and W. D. Owens, Side Supervisors; E. M. Deck, Town Clerk; Thomas E. Jones, Assessor; Thomas J. Davies, Treasurer; D. R. Davies, John Martin and William Blett, Justices of the Peace; Walter Stewart and T. M. Edwards, Constables.

In 1845 or 1846, Messrs. Smith & Williams built a saw-mill here, the power being furnished by the springs. The mill was called the "Buttermilk Mill." As there was no pond in sight, it was said that the mill would be as apt to be run by that fluid as any other.

About sixty rods from the hotel is the only artificial cranberry marsh in this section. It was never flooded until the winter of 1879-80, and promises to become a success.

TOWN OF PEWAUKEE.

The town of Pewaukee, named after the lake within its borders, of the same name, called by the Indians Pewauk-ee-we-nink, is, historically speaking, the oldest town in the county, next to Waukesha. The Cutler brothers and Henry Luther passed the summer of 1834 in the town of Waukesha, but not the winter of 1834-35. In the spring of 1835, people began settling in Pewaukee within a few weeks of the time when the Cutlers and others returned permanently to Waukesha.

The town is in a rich and thrifty agricultural district, which is neither hills, swamps, nor prairie. It is composed largely of glacial drift, and therefore has a more thoroughly diversified soil than any other in Waukesha County. One farm may be excellent for fruit, the adjoining one for wheat, the next for grazing, and the next for meadows. This is a valuable characteristic in any town. Timber was originally found in goodly quantities, though Pewaukee never was as heavily timbered as some of the other towns. With good timber, a diversity of soil, excellent stone-quarries and plenty of water, Pewaukee is certainly a desirable town in which to own a farm and a home.

Pewaukee was set off and organized as a separate town by an act of the Territorial Legislature, approved January 13, 1840. As will be seen by the following act, the town has no legal right to the name under which it now exists, holds elections, and transacts business:

Be it enacted by the Council and House of Representatives of the Territory of Wisconsin:

SECTION 1. That all that part of the Town of Brookfield, in the County of Milwaukee, comprising Township seven, north, of Range nineteen, east, be, and the same is hereby set off into a separate town, by the name of Peraukee.

It will thus be seen that the town was named "Peraukee," and in subsequent acts of the Legislature—except those in regard to preserving fish in the lake, passed in 1866, and one relative to school moneys—the town is referred to as "Peraukee." This may be safely set down as an error, though the historian has no means of knowing how the error, if such it was, occurred.

The first recorded town meeting or election was held at the house of E. P. Maynard, April 5, 1842. Asa Clark was chosen Moderator, and D. W. Reed, Secretary. A committee of five was appointed to report on the various sums necessary to defray the town expenses. The committee decided that the Assessors, Highway Commissioners and Supervisors should receive each $1 per day for services; that the School Commissioners should receive 75 cents per day, and that the Town Clerk and Treasurer should receive such compensation as the Supervisors saw fit to allow. They also reported in favor of raising $200 for incidental expenses, and for levying a tax of one-half of one per cent on the taxable property of the town, for the support of schools. These resolutions were all adopted. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Morris S. Barnett, Chairman of Board of Supervisors; Asa Clark and Allen Clinton, Side Supervisors; David W. Reed, Town Clerk; Hamilton Nelson, Treasurer; Charles Bell and Seth Riford, Assessors; Israel W. Porter, Seth Riford and Waldo Rosebrook, Commissioners of Highways; David W. Reed, Thomas H. Olin and Timothy W. Lyman, Commissioners of Common Schools; John Nelson, Constable and Collector; Harvey Church, Sealer of Weights and Measures; Cromwell Hills, Overseer of Highways, District No. 1; James N. Heath, Overseer in District No. 2; Seth Riford in District No. 3; D. W. Reed in District No. 4; Leland Crocker in District No. 5; Samuel Bissell, Hiram Wheeler and Spencer Allen, Fence Viewers.

The first road surveys recorded, occurred in June, 1842, Rollin Blount being the surveyor. There were six roads surveyed this year, and opened by the Commissioners. In 1843, the road districts were increased from five to nine, and in 1844, increased to thirteen. The total expenses for services of town officers and surveyor's fees and incidentals during 1842, amounted to $82.03.

The first election of Justices of the Peace was recorded in 1844, when Charles Bell, M. S. Barnett and C. L. Rockwood were elected.

In 1843, there were 130 school children, with a school fund of $150. There are now 806 pupils. In 1880, there was $3,720.62 appropriated for school purposes in five whole districts and nine joint districts. There were in 1843 four whole and two joint districts.

In 1843, there were 100 resident taxpayers in the town, with property assessed at $1,461.50, as follows: Isaac B. Judson, F. Jewett, Elon Fuller, Hosea Fuller, Hosea Fuller, Jr., John Seeley, John L. Bidwell, Allen Clinton, James Begg, Seth Riford, Marvin Reed, Frederick Forrest, G. Moulton, Daniel Moulton, James Tipple, Stephen Moulton, John Williams, James O'Hara, Thomas Johnson, J. W. Friend, John Nelson, Hamilton Nelson, William Love, David Root, Henry Reed, Charles Bell, T. Lyman Clark, Joseph Gauthie, B. Love, Isaac Smith, Henry Smith, John Austin, Daniel Aret, Samuel Bissell, M. S. Barnett, Abel Brown, James Buckner, Asa Clark, Leland Crocker, D. G. Deissner, R. K. Dye, Ansel McCall, Thomas G. Eggleston, J. F. Eggleston, W. C. Gates, S. F. Smith, Michael Graff, Abram R. Gale, Cromwell Hill, D. J. Heath, James N. Heath, Philetus Hurlbut, E. P. Maynard, Caleb Nanscawen, John H. Nanscawen, Joshua Nanscawen, Warham Nobles, Thomas H. Olin, C. C. Olin, Adam S. Putney, Israel W. Porter, G. W. Sturtevant, David Miller, Waldo Rosebrook, D. W. Reed, Cephas L. Rockwood, Isaac Sears, Eleazer Scripture, Alexander Stewart, William Stewart, John M. Woodworth, Hiram Wheeler, Hiram H. Wheelock, Zebulon Bidwell, Nathan Graves, John Hodgson, Solomon Horn, H. Rupell, Robert Stewart, Elisha Lyman & Sons, Jesse Williams, Daniel McCall, Jackson Swift, Abraham Mead, ——— Dieman, J. H. & H. C. Waterman, J. Kaye, Edmund Miles, John Wigginton, Lyman Goodnow, ——— Clark E. Turner, Absalom Miner, Samuel S. Breese, Breese & Higginbotham, Milo Heath, Joseph Webb, ——— Bloor, Samuel H. Dougherty, Charles Bartlett. Among these, D. G. Deissner, owner of the saw-mill, was the heaviest tax-payer, being assessed $32.66, and Asa Clark, owner of the saw-mill at Pewaukee, with a tax of $21.49, was the next heaviest.

In 1844, a novel vote was taken, it being decided by ballot to appropriate $75 for the support of the poor, if any be found in the town during the year.

The first settlement was made in the southwest quarter of Section 34, which is opposite Waukesha Village, by Elon Fuller, a single man, and Isaac B. Judson and his family. They made their camp, in June, 1835, on a gravel knoll near a sulphur spring, on the farm now owned by Henry B. Bidwell, quarter and section above named. This camp was their home until a log house was erected near where John Russell now lives, a short distance from the original stopping-place. Elon Fuller's present residence is only a few rods from the knoll on which he first lighted his camp-fire in Waukesha County.

In 1836, Zebulon Bidwell and his family settled on the farm now owned by the son, Henry B. Bidwell, Section 34. The next settler was probably Israel W. Porter, who built a dam near where Deissner's Mill now is, in 1836, and a mill in 1837.

At about the same time, John M. Woodworth settled in the south part of the town. Mr. Woodworth was a small man, and Cephas L. Rockwood, a Prairieville lawyer, was a very large one. The latter settled on one of the former's claims, and was ordered off, without success. Mr. Woodworth went out one day, and finding Mr. Rockwood preparing to build a log house, again ordered him to leave. He was still unsuccessful, and then began a series of strange and astonishing manœuvres, jumping and squatting on all sides of Mr. Rockwood, standing on his head, making frightful grimaces and falling prone on his face with astonishing rapidity, the while keeping up an uninterrupted flow of gibberish which no one could understand. Mr. Rockwood thought Mr. Woodworth, who was always known as "Crazy Woodworth" on account of his strange actions, was possessed of a devil, and dropping his ax, took to the deeper woods, leaving the claim to the quasi juggler. Afterward, Mr. Rockwood had many a laugh over the novel manner in which he was frightened out of a claim.

In the vicinity of Pewaukee Village, T. Lyman Clark was the first settler, building or commencing a log house on the shore of the lake, a short distance above the present village. This was in June, 1837. A few weeks later Asa Clark, his father, A. M. Clark, his brother, and the balance of the family, arrived and occupied the house. The claim, including the water-power at the outlet of Pewaukee Lake, had been examined and secured by Asa Clark in 1836, who began the present dam, which is the road bed of the street, in 1837, and erected a saw-mill during the following year. This was the second saw-mill in the town; Israel W. Porter having begun one the year before, which was the second in the county.

The first death was Edgar T., a son of Ethan Owen, who was killed accidentally, in the winter of 1836, while at work in the woods. The accident was an exceedingly sad one, young Owen's head being split open by the blow of an ax in the hands of his brother.

The first Pewaukee couple who committed matrimony were probably Hamilton Nelson and Mrs. Caroline Eggleston, but they were obliged to go over into the town of Waukesha to find a person competent to tie the knot, which was done August 12, 1838.

The first house in Pewaukee was built for Isaac B. Judson, in 1835, Section 34.

The first chimney in Waukesha County was built by I. B. Judson in 1835, in Pewaukee.

The first thrashing machine in the county was built in this town, by Hamilton Nelson, now of Beloit, Wisconsin.

Mrs. I. B. Judson was the first woman in Pewaukee.

The first birth was Uriel P., son of Nelson Owen.

The first schoolhouse was probably built where Pewaukee Village is, in 1842. The first school-teacher was a young woman, who taught in Asa Clark's house. The first one to teach in the schoolhouse was probably Mr. Waterman, who was paid $12 per month.

Asa Clark erected the first flouring-mill at Pewaukee Village, which began grinding in 1845.

The first store in Pewaukee was kept by David Miller, at the village. He also distributed mail gratis, the residents clubbing together to pay for fetching it from Waukesha, or some of them volunteering to fetch it free.

In 1839, Henry Bowers stabbed James O'Hara with a pitchfork.

Gardner Brown, of Summit, was killed by the fall of a tree, at Porter's saw-mill.

The dam for Deissner's flouring-mill was built in 1836, by Israel W. Porter. The saw-mill was built in 1837, and began sawing early in 1838. The saw-mill ceased to pay in a few years, and the Deissners erected a flouring-mill on the site. The mill is still managed by a member of the family and has a good business. It is a water-mill, that is, has water for its motor power, and is well equipped with modern milling machinery.

The first steamer on Pewaukee Lake was a rude affair, built by L. Ferris. It made only a few trips in 1866.

In 1873, N. P. Iglehart and J. M. Heath launched a screw propeller, but the engine was worthless, and the boat was made into a sailing yacht.

In the summer of 1873, N. P. Iglehart went to Oconomowoc and purchased the "Surprise," and chartered a special train of cars, on which he transported the boat to Pewaukee. Her owner now is Capt. Davy, and her name "Lady of the Lake." She is a side-wheel steamer with fifteen-horse-power engine, registered to safely carry 150 passengers.

The "Oriole" is another side-wheel steamer, owned also by Capt. Davy. The steamer "Lady of the Lake" was the making of Pewaukee as a summer resort.

The first hotel was opened at what is now Pewaukee Village, in 1844, by Theodore Sheldon. The building was erected by A. M. Clark, still a resident of the place, and was called the Pewaukee House.

Asa Clark probably built the first frame dwelling house, at Pewaukee Village, in 1839.

Chauncey H. Heath was the first Postmaster, receiving his appointment from James K. Polk, in 1846 or 1847. The office was called Pewaukee, and was located at what is now Pewaukee Village.

Matthias Schock built the first brewery in Pewaukee in 1876, not far from the village of Waukesha. It is of stone, 55x25 feet, and is called "Fountain Brewery." It is fitted with patent coolers, a fine cellar, large ice-house and all modern improvements. In connection with the brewery is a summer garden and beer-bottling works.

The town officers for 1880 are as follows: Supervisors—John Ross, Chairman; August Jessie, J. W. Wilkins; Town Clerk, Alexander Caldwell; Assessor, J. A. Gauthie; Treasurer, Casper Linder; Justices of the Peace, John W. Gentz, J. A. Griswold; Constables, Alexander Parsons, F. W. Dick.

Pewaukee Village.—The first settler within the limits of the village was Asa Clark, a Vermonter known everywhere as Deacon Clark. The village is comprised of Section 9, and the east half of Section 8. It was originally claimed by the following: Asa Clark, southwest quarter of northwest quarter, and the south half of Section 9; S. T. Bolles, east half of Section 8, and east half of northwest quarter of Section 9; Lyman Griswold, northeast quarter of Section 9, and the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 9, by Lyman Morley.

The first house was one built by Asa Clark. The first frame house was built in 1839, by the same person for Abel Brown.

The first store after David Miller's pin and needle stand, was erected in 1844, by L. Swift. J. F. Morse remodeled the structure, and C. McVean opened a large stock of goods in it.

Asa Clark was the pioneer in the lime business, building a kiln near the present depot in 1840 or 1841. The stone quarry, whence stone for the kiln was hauled, was opened on D. G. Ormsby's present farm. The credit of making Pewaukee a lime and stone-producing point to a large degree, is due to W. J. Bolles, who began to push the business about twenty-eight years ago. It is still a very important branch of business.

The first brick dwelling was erected in 1862, by R. Walker, and is now the residence of D. G. Ormsby.

The first Postmaster was David Miller, who had no commission, but simply allowed the mail of the "Pioneer Club Postoffice," to be kept in his store. The mail was brought to him from Waukesha by some member of the club. The first commissioned Postmaster was Chauncey G. Heath, appointed in 1846 or 1847, by President Polk. When the Whigs came into power, in March, 1849, President Taylor appointed S. T. Bolles to succeed Mr. Heath as Postmaster. B. F. Goss is the present Postmaster.

Israel Wheeler began wagon-making in 1841. The first real wagon-shop was started by Steele & Son. George W. Steele has since built a shop and continues in the business.

Village Incorporated.—The village of Pewaukee was incorporated by an order from David W. Small, Judge of the First Circuit, April 3, 1876. The first charter election was held May 2, 1876. At that and subsequent elections, the following officers have been elected: Presidents, S. T. Bolles, 1876-77; B. F. Goss, 1878; A. M. Clark, 1879; Joseph Bull, 1880. Trustees, A. M. Clark, J. H. Rhodes, B. Boorman, M. R. Hewitt, A. G. Alton, Thomas Quinlan, 1876; B. Boorman, B. Garrets, A. M. Clark, Thomas Shields, William Jones, 1877; T. Shields, William Jones, A. Labair, G. W. Steele, Jens Larsen, D. F. Cogswell, 1878; B. Garrets, A. Labair, M. C. Wilson, Thomas Shields, Joseph Bull, William Jones, 1879; Thomas Quinlan, Thomas Shields, M. C. Wilson, Robert Lowerie, G. H. Parks, Jens Larsen, 1880. Village Clerk, F. A. Heath, 1876; George Barker, 1877; R. R. Griffing, 1878; George Barker, 1879; J. B. Weaver, 1880. Treasurer, J. M. Heath, 1876-77; John Ross, 1878; A. L. Palmer, 1879-80. Police Justice, George H. Parks, 1876-77; George Barker, 1878-79; Frank McBean, 1880-81. Street Commissioner, J. H. Rhodes, 1876; J. Wildish, 1877; Stephen Weaver, 1878; John M. Heath, 1879; John Ross, 1880. Marshal, John C. Pope, 1876; Louis Passolt, 1877-78; S. B. Griffing, 1879; Louis Passolt, 1880.

In 1842, the first schoolhouse was built, where the Baptist Church now stands. It did good service, and accommodated a large number of scholars, until the present stone schoolhouse was erected. An exceedingly good village school is maintained here. The chapter on "General Educational Interests" will furnish further statistics as to the number of students and kindred matters.

In 1876, B. F. Goss commenced on a cabinet of the eggs of North American birds. It now numbers about 260 varieties, and more than two thousand specimens. It is, doubtless, the largest collection of eggs in Wisconsin, and, in some respects, cannot be equaled anywhere. It is excelled by no private collection. Mr. Goss has also, while making a specialty of Wisconsin birds and eggs, made large collections from other States, for himself and various scientific societies.

Pewaukee Lake Mills.—This is one of the landmarks of Waukesha County. In 1837, the dam was built across the outlet of Pewaukee Lake, by Asa Clark, and the following year, on account of trouble made by persons making claims near the lake, he secured an enactment of the Legislature, allowing him to maintain this dam, with six feet of water above the natural level of the lake. Mr. Clark built a saw-mill during that year, 1837, and got it to running. It stood where the Oakton Springs House bowling alley now stands. In 1845, after the stone quarry had been opened, Mr. Clark erected a stone grist-mill, three stories in height. The original building, with two additions erected by B. Boorman, still does service. After Asa Clark, this mill was owned by Cogswell & Davidson; then again by Mr. Clark, who sold to Benjamin Boorman, in 1854. Mr. Boorman ran the mill until 1878, when he rented it to his sons, A. and F. Boorman. The water head is six feet, which runs a forty-inch Brooks wheel and three runs of stone. The mill has a steam engine, but it has not been required in five years. High and low water come in cycles of about seven years each. In 1857, the dam was swept away, resulting in a damaging flood to the country below. In 1879, Joseph Johnson, backed by several of his neighbors, began suit against the Boormans for damages to lands overflowed by the dam. Several similar suits have been begun, and always decided in favor of the mill owners.

Best Brewing Company's Ice House.—By far the largest building in Pewaukee is the ice house built by the Best Brewing Company, of Milwaukee, in 1878. It is 450x50 feet. From it, eight car-loads of ice per day are shipped, during the summer, to the breweries in Milwaukee. This, with the business of filling them, gives employment to a large number of men.

Pewaukee Lodge, No. 186, I. O. O. F.—This lodge was instituted December 12, 1869, with S. T. Bolles, James Ormsby, John M. Heath, D. F. Cogswell and John Dieman as charter members and first officers. The growth of the lodge was rapid, and its condition exceedingly prosperous. From this lodge have branched off the Bark River, No. 204, and Sussex, No. 205, lodges, which weakened it materially. In 1876, the lodge erected a fine two-story building, the upper portion being used as a lodge-room, and the ground floor for a public hall. The present officers are S. T. Bolles, N. G.; R. Kensley, Secretary; and the number of members about forty. There is a debt of $800 on the building, but the lodge has money to pay a portion of this. It is one of the finest lodge buildings in the county.

Congregational Church.—This church society was organized in 1840, by Asa Clark, Charles Bell, William C. Gates, Lyman Clark, and others from Lisbon. The church people of Pewaukee and Lisbon met together and formed a church in 1840, and continued to so meet during four or five years. The Pewaukee people then took the records and perpetuated this old church, the Lisbonites forming a church in that town. Mr. Bell is the only one who is now living in Pewaukee of the original organizers. The first pastor who was settled at Pewaukee was Mr. Bridgeman; but the first preacher was Mr. S. Baker, who resided in Lisbon. He preached for this people even before a church was formed. The church edifice was erected in 1856 and cost about $1,500. The same building, repainted and repaired, is still in use. It is of wood. There are thirty-one members and a good Sabbath school. The present pastor is Rev. J. H. Cameron, who has been in charge during the past four years. He was preceded by Rev. George W. Sargeant, who preached here two years, although residing in Milwaukee.

First Baptist Church.—Before the formal organization of the present church, there was a church society of some kind which went out of existence, as it had no church edifice. The present society was organized June, 1855, with the following members: Elder Timothy Palmer, pastor; Abel Brown, Henry Smith, Daniel German, Elizabeth Hartwell, Fanny Boorman, Eliza Davis and Maria J. Smith. Mrs. Boorman, now of Waukesha, is the only one of the original members now living. The second pastor was Elder R. Griffin, who came in January, 1861, and continued in charge until 1871. He was succeeded by Elder D. H. Drake, who, on going as missionary to foreign countries, was succeeded in 1872 by H. B. Davis. Mr. Davis was in charge but a brief period, and was followed by Rev. Henry Clark. A young man named Evans acted as supply after the pulpit was vacated by Rev. Clark. The next pastor was Rev. William Parker, who came in February, 1876, and who was succeeded by Rev. J. W. Fuhrman, in September, 1878. Mr. Fuhrman is the present pastor. The church at its most prosperous time had sixty-one members. The edifice, of wood, and a neat building, was built in 1859, and was opened for worship December 21 of that year. The parsonage, an unusually good building, was erected in 1876. Both are in excellent repair, and the church society is free from debt.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—At the first quarterly conference for the Pewaukee charge, held in April, 1870, there were reported twenty-four members and $1,850 in hand with which to erect a house of worship. J. C. Wheeler and Stephen Smith were chosen leaders; D. G. Ormsby, J. C. Wheeler, William Chester, John Pope and Stephen Smith, Stewards; James Ormsby, J. C. Wheeler, J. Parker, J. Wildish, J. H. Rhodes, W. H. Steel, Stephen Smith, William Chester and A. A. Akin, Trustees. The edifice was erected in 1870 at a cost of about $4,000. It is of brick, nicely finished and furnished. The parsonage was erected in 1875 at a cost of $1,200. All the church property is free from debt. The different pastors have been Revs. S. Halsey, W. W. Painter, Mechesney, E. T. Eaton, W. L. Walker, W. B. Robinson, R. J. Judd and George W. Burtch, who is now in charge. The present officers are as follows: Mrs. D. G. Ormsby, John Parker, John Hodgson, Sarah Bolles, Emily Hodgson, H. Anderson, D. Roberts and S. Smith, Stewards; S. Weaver, John Parker, D. G. Ormsby, W. C. Window, G. H. Parks, William Haskins, Joseph Cooper, Trustees. The church, which has about fifty-five members, maintains a flourishing Sunday school. Merton belongs to the Pewaukee charge.

Catholic Church.—See history of Catholic Church of Waukesha Village.

Heath's Hotel.—This hotel building was erected by Lucius Swift, and was first used by J. F. Morse as a store. John M. Heath, after whom the hotel was named, converted it into a public house, which he kept open until his death, in 1879. Since that time it has been managed by Mrs. John M. Heath. The building is a good one and conveniently located. The rooms are well furnished and large. Its principal business is during the summer, when the influx of pleasure-seekers is very great.

Oakton Springs House.—This large, fine and popular summer-resort hotel was built in 1873 by N. P. Iglehart, who also purchased the lands on which are located the Oakton Springs, adjoining the northern boundary of the village. He had an analysis made of their waters, which resulted in discovering them to be of such medicinal value, that he at once began to advertise them and the hotel. Col. Iglehart spent a large sum of money in making known abroad the advantages of Pewaukee as a summer resort, and was the principal person in establishing its present reputation. The present proprietor of the Oakton Springs House, B. Boorman, took the property in 1877. He rents it to J. P. Vedder, who has made a success of the business. The hotel has a bath, barber shop, bowling alley, 100 fine rooms and all other first-class hotel accompaniments. The guests are largely from the South.

Parsons' Hotel.—This is a regular hotel, kept by A. M. Parsons, and is open all the year through. The property is owned by Mr. King, who formerly managed the hotel. It has a good share of the traveling patronage.

TOWN OF SUMMIT.

The town of Summit, by an act of the Legislature, passed January 2, 1838, was set apart and named, and comprised the present towns of Summit, Delafield, Oconomowoc and Merton. Then by an act approved March 9, 1839, it was shorn of what is now Merton and Delafield, and January 23, 1844, Oconomowoc was cut off, leaving the town as it now is.

Summit received its name from the fact that Summit Prairie was supposed to be the highest elevation between the Fox and Rock Rivers. Here are found, combined in great completeness, the chief requisites to success in farming—a most excellent soil, high, dry and well watered.

The roads in this town are very good, and it is really a pleasure to ride over them. The people evidently take pride in keeping them in good condition. B. R. Hinkley has been for many years Roadmaster in this section.

The population consists principally of Americans and English, with a sprinkling of other elements. The first claimant and settler in the town was Andrew Baxter. He settled near Summit Center, coming here from Michigan, about the middle of March, 1837. Summit Prairie was then, and for several years subsequently, called Baxter's Prairie. His wife and family came with him, and were the first woman and children in this section of country, which then included Oconomowoc, Merton and Delafield. The next that came into Summit was John D. McDonald. He came into the county about the 20th of March, 1837, and, on the 7th of April following made the claim where he now lives, in the center of the town. He then boarded with Mr. Baxter, and helped him finish his cabin and dig a well, and did such other work as there was to be done. About the 1st of June, 1837, Delos Taft, E. W. Edgerton and Richard Hardell and family came, to be followed soon after by C. B. Brown and family. Orson and Curtis Reed came about the same time, their father and mother coming later in the season. They settled on the farm now owned by William Robinson. During the fall of this year, the families of Mr. Leavitt, Mr.

Hildreth, Gardner Brown and Mr. Fultz came in. Jacob Regular also came in 1838, bringing a large family with him, to endure privations and dangers, being at that time in very destitute circumstances. Mr. Fairservice came this fall, bringing with him some young ladies, a scarcity in a new country and very much in demand. He settled on the banks of the beautiful Nemabhin Lake. Some young men, according to the town chronicles, made claims here at this time, but could not stand the pressure of going without food, and left.

In 1838, the families of Messrs. Merrill, Denney and Schuyler (who was the first claimant at Delafield), and Sanborn, Metcalf, Paine and Newnham, came.

Henry Baxter, who was born in 1838, was the first child of white extraction born in the town.

The first death was a child of B. C. Hildreth, in the fall of 1837, and the second was Gardner Brown, father of Mrs. McDonald. He was killed on Fox River while at work drawing logs to Porter's saw-mill, on the 1st of February, 1838. He was buried on the farm now owned by E. W. Barnard.

Another heart-rending accident was the drowning of three boys of Russell Frisby, in 1839, while crossing Oconomowoc Lake to an island for the purpose of making maple sugar. Their remains were interred on the bank of the lake, on the farm now owned by Charles Hartwell.

Andrew Baxter, the first settler, died December 7, 1849, after a short but eventful career upon the frontier. Charles Keeler built the Congregational Church in 1844, and owned it until 1870. Its first pastor was a man by the name of Parker. It now belongs to the Nashotah Mission.

The Rev. H. W. Frink held the first Methodist Episcopal services in the first schoolhouse on Section 15, and which was built in 1839, by Messrs. Baxter, Reed, Leavitt, McDonald and Brown.

The first teacher was a Miss Smith, who taught in the summer of 1839.

The first marriage was the Rev. H. W. Frink, to Miss W. Paine.

The year following, the devoirs of Orson Reed were crowned with success, in the person of one of the Misses Fairservice. These were the early examples, and well have they been followed since.

Nashotah Mission is in this town on the Upper Twin Nashotah Lake.

The first store in Summit was opened at Summit Corners, in 1839, by William Plumley, and, as is always the case in a new country, it was an event of no small importance in the estimation of the early settlers.

The election polls were first opened in what is now called Delafield, at a house kept by a man named Piermain, who afterward became tired of living and blew his brains out with a pistol. At this election, J. D. McDonald was elected Pathmaster of Road District No. 1, which then comprised the four towns mentioned above.

Dr. Goodnow, who came in 1839, was the first physician, and established himself on the farm now known as Danforth's; but, alas for physicians in those days, as a gentleman remarked recently, "folks seemed not to get sick—health was the prevailing epidemic in Summit."

The first blacksmith-shop—an institution of unusual importance in a new country—was started by Jacob Johnson, in 1843, at Summit Corners. Previous to that, for some time, the settlers were compelled to tramp over the trails to Waukesha, to get their plows and chains mended.

The first Justice who sat in judgment upon the short goings or comings of his fellows in Summit was Mr. Payne.

According to town records, one of the first, if not the first, town meetings was held in Summit in 1842, when there were in all only seventy-four voters in the town. Curtis Reed, who figured quite conspicuously in local politics at that time, and who subsequently organized the town of Oconomowoc in rather a novel manner, was elected Chairman; the Side Supervisors were Jesse Hildreth and G. A. Foster; Clerk, Russell Frisby; Treasurer, E. Willie; Collector, S. M. Wells; Assessor, S. C. Leavitt; Commissioners of Common Schools, Jonathan Dougherty, William Wentworth and E. W. Edgerton; Commissioners of Highways, C. B. Sheldon, Richard Hardell, and Orson Reed; Fence Viewers, Chauncy Ludder, William Wentworth and Phil. Schuyler; Constables, Charles Morris, L. B. Sanborn and Samuel M. Wells; Sealer of Weights and Measures, Curtis B. Brown; Overseers of Highways, E. W. Edgerton and George Williams.

It is said that at this election Mr. Reed was elected by a majority of one only, and this one he gained by sending a friend post-haste down the Territorial road to meet a man who had agreed to be on hand to vote for him. The fellow jumped on to the horse and came on, getting to the polls just in time.

The town meetings were held in various schoolhouses and dwelling-houses until John D. McDonald erected a hall opposite to his residence, this being the center of the town. The hall is in the very best spot that it could be placed, away from any village and attendant bumsers.

A Good Templar's lodge was started in Summit as early as 1856, and the meetings were held in Mr. Westover's barn first, then in Cobb Schoolhouse, and then in Mr. Bailey's shop at Summit Corners. After this lodge went up another was started, but failed some time previous to the establishment of the present lodge. This organization is now in a thriving condition, although at first there was some difficulty experienced by the projectors in getting a large enough number of signers to secure a charter. After overcoming this difficulty, the lodge has been growing steadily stronger and more influential. Summit Center Lodge, No. 68, I. O. G. T., was granted a charter in 1876, from the Grand Lodge, in response to the petition of A. I. Story, Mrs. J. M. Putney, S. A. Kidder, J. D. McDonald, D. McDonald, J. D. McDonald, Jr., Misses Mellie and Maggie McDonald, Kittie Story, Minnie Hale, Susan Hale, E. Hale, Charles Van Brunt, J. M. Crummey, J. C. Otes, David Hill, Libby Debnam, Ettie Williams, Lena Ericksen, Harry Story, William Moore, Jacob Hill, L. A. Hill, Mary Story, George Newgent, E. W. Barnard and P. F. Hall. There are now sixty-nine members, in good standing. Weekly sessions are held at the town hall.

There are now in Summit two or three Episcopal chapels where the students of Nashotah hold services at different times, besides a general association, without any very pronounced denominational head, which holds Sunday school, and services occasionally, at the town hall.

Manufacturing and commercial enterprises are not largely represented in this town at the present time, although all of the old inhabitants remember when Summit Corners was the commercial and stage center of this district. But now agriculture and agricultural interests are the chief objects, and consequently the butter and cheese factories take the place of other enterprises.

Summit Cheese Factory, on Section 16, was built about 1870, by B. R. Hinkley, Curtis Mann, Capt. Stone and James Leavitt. It is 30x70, two stories high, and cost to erect about $3,000. There are two 600-gallon vats and eighteen presses. B. R. Hinkley rented the factory at first, and subsequently bought out the other stockholders. In 1873, during the panic, he had 1,275 cheeses on his hands, which he shipped to St. Louis, and, after holding for a few months, he sold all at a handsome profit, while many other manufacturers lost tremendously.

The butter factory company of Summit was organized in the spring of 1877. There are seven members. A. J. W. Pierce, of Milwaukee, A. J. Kidder, Jacob Hill, William Cumro, R. C. Hildreth, Daniel Williams and J. D. McDonald, A. J. W. Pierce being the largest stockholder. The factory is very thoroughly fitted up, having all the machinery that is necessary to care for the milk from four hundred cows.

Wheat was first raised by Mr. Fultz on the Baxter farm in 1838. From this time until 1850, the farmers had to cut their grain with the cradle, and nearly all of them for a long time after; but that season Phillip Haune brought in a reaper, and very many of the farmers availed themselves of the opportunity and hired their grain cut by it.

The traveler, in passing over Summit Prairie, either on the old Territorial road, east or west, or on the turnpike running north and south, will come to four corners on as beautiful a part of the prairie as can be found, and centrally located between Sections 10 and 15. There is nothing to attract particular observation here except the magnificent landscape, and here and there a farm-house laborer's cottage; consequently one might pass on unconscious of the fact that from 1840 to 1850 this spot was the commercial metropolis and stage center for the surrounding country—the Summit Corners of other days. Here in 1837, on the northwest corner, C. B. Brown built a tavern, and this was the nucleus of the "Ville."

In 1838, the first postoffice was established here, with Curtis Reed as Postmaster, there having been a mail carrier through from Milwaukee to Mineral Point as early as 1837. The store already mentioned was there, and within a short time the blacksmith-shop, and, according to B. R. Hinkley, who lives at the Corners now, and who lived there in its palmy days, there was, as early as 1845, three hotels, two frame and one of logs, three thriving stores, two blacksmith shops, a wagon shop, a tailor and shoe shop, with inhabitants to correspond. This point was then a sort of headquarters for news, political meetings, frontier horse-racing and circuses. Very many of the young men had fast horses, horse-racing being the standard amusement of the times. A number of the Lush family lived here, heirs of Lush, of Albany, said to have been the largest landholder in the State of New York in his day. These were said to be the chief money spenders of the town. One of the hotels was a fine edifice for those days, and in connection had a large stage barn. The other hotels were also well supplied with stable room, for there was an enormous amount of travel, as many as four hundred teams a day having passed over the Territorial road. The village held its own until about the time the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway passed through the county. At that time a terrible tornado swept through this section and struck Summit Center, destroying houses, barns, etc., and also causing the big hotel to catch on fire. From this disaster and the effect of the railroad, it was impossible for Summit to recover, and within a short time the place was no more. The little place called Utica had at one time a store, kept at first by R. St. Helen, and a tavern kept by Phil Holland.

Waterville, in 1845, was quite a little burg, and had its store, postoffice, public house, shops and concomitants; but a change has come over the scene, and what was, is no more.

Notwithstanding the cost of everything, hotel charges were very much more reasonable than they now are. This was owing in part, in all probability, to the general hotel competition, for almost every one wanted to turn a penny by keeping travelers. To illustrate: When the taverns at the Corners were charging five shillings per night for supper, lodging and breakfast, with horse feed thrown in, J. D. McDonald, who kept a competition inn near where he now lives, charged 50 cents for the same. How this could be done and the parties make anything, remains a mystery.

The cemetery in Summit, near the center on Section 15, is well located, and is kept in very good order, there being shade trees, shrubbery and flowers about or above nearly all of the graves. One of the first buried here, the grave with its age-browned stone standing in a conspicuous spot, was Miss R. B. Cross, in 1844. The cemetery is maintained by the town, and a hearse and horses and driver are employed.

For several years prior to 1866, the farmers had been greatly bothered by having sheep killed by what they supposed were wildcats and lynxes. Accordingly, at the town meeting of 1866, it was voted to pay $10 per head for each of these animals killed. But this did not abate the nuisance, for the losses of sheep kept growing continually greater, until, about 1868, it was discovered that wolves were the perpetrators of the mischief, and their "stamping" grounds and runways were on the school section and about Genesee and Silver Lakes. No sooner was this discovered, than a subscription was taken, and a bounty of $100 per wolf offered for every wolf killed in the town; and very soon after a permanent bounty of $50 was voted by the town, and an additional bounty of $25 was offered by the county.

No sooner had this bounty become a settled thing, than hunting wolves became a good business, and, forthwith, several men went at the work of extermination. One party was formed, consisting of Charles Smith, Lewis Rowell, Mr. Griswold, of Pewaukee, and another man. This party hunted together, as did Messrs. Hill and Bartlett, and, also, Mr. Andrews went into the business. Very soon after this, the wolves in Summit were non est; but the hunters were equal to the emergency. Therefore, wolves were hunted from adjoining localities, and chased into Summit to be killed. One in particular was worried and hunted, for several hours, back and forth between Summit and Ottawa, on Sections 5 and 32, until, finally, he was shot in Ottawa, and dragged over into Summit to die.

A document which was handed in at the town meeting in 1859, and which is known as "James Ashby's Fox Bounty Bill," created so much amusement at the time, and is so novel in character, that a summary of the contents is given, as presented at the meeting, and as placed on file by the Town Clerk: "Whoever kills one old fox, and brings his head to the Town Clerk, for him to inspect it, the same is to have $1 for each old one, and 50 cents each young one, if he can see; if not, be paid 25 cents each by the Town Clerk. The Town Clerk is to see that it is defraided, but just and right, the only way to get rid of these troublesome fellows. Any one letting them breed is to be fined $5."

The following is an extract, taken from a paper presented by J. D. McDonald, the oldest settler now in Summit, and published as written by him:

"I will relate some incidents which transpired the first year of our settlement. In the summer of 1837, there were several young men boarding at Curtis Brown's. One Sunday morning we went down to the lake, now known as Genesee Lake, about two miles from Summit Corners, and when we got ready to return there was one by the name of Lonsbury, who said he would stay and wash his shirt, and so we left him 'to do his washing.' When he had dried and ironed his shirt, he started for home, but, instead of going home, he got lost and wandered down into a tamarack swamp. Night set in, and he was obliged to 'lay out' all night. It was a dark, rainy night, and the wolves howled, and the owls screeched, and I think he has never recovered from his fright. It was about four miles from our boarding-house, and he arrived there about noon the next day. In the month of April, 1837, a man by the name of Milenda came out from Milwaukee and stopped at Hayopolis, and persuaded me to go with him to make a claim for some parties in Milwaukee. The claim he was to make was on the Upper Rapids of Rock River, on Section 10, Town 10, Range 16, now known as Hustisford. There were no settlers between Hayopolis and Fort Winnebago.

"We followed an Indian trail running between the Twin Lakes, thence between La Belle and Fowler Lakes, and then forded the Oconomowoc River below where the dam now is, and then followed section lines through the woods to that point. We dared not leave the section lines for fear of being lost, and we therefore were obliged to wade marshes and streams sometimes in water up to our waists, as the water was very high at that season of the year. We struck the rapids the second night, and met an old squaw, who told us by signs that the Indians would kill us when they came home that night 'squiby' (that is, drunk), and we found that they did return 'squiby.' They had been to Fort Winnebago to receive their payment. There were about 200 of them, and they held a 'war dance' that night.

"We lay on our side of the stream, now called the Wildcat, and they on the other. They had fires, so we dared not have any. We could see them, but they could not see us. They yelled and danced all night while we lay and watched them. They left the next day, and we made the claim and returned to Hayopolis in six days.

"In the winter of 1837, C. B. Sheldon, a man by the name of Green and myself, started from Summit, about the 20th of December, for Mineral Point. We stopped the first night at Aztalan, with a man by the name of Atwood. We started the next morning for Madison, the distance being forty miles. The snow was about six or eight inches deep, and there had been but one horse through. There were no settlers between Aztalan and Madison at that time. About sundown, Sheldon 'tired out,' and Green and myself supported him, one on each side. Whenever we stopped to rest, he would fall asleep, and whenever we would wake him up, he would beg of us to let him lie. It was a bitter cold night, and, having no means to make a fire, we knew that we must keep him on the move, and so dragged him along until we reached Madison, about 11 o'clock at night. There were but two shanties at Madison at that time. The next day we proceeded on our journey, and arrived at Mineral Point about the 25th of December. We procured work, chopping and splitting rails, until about the 20th of February, 1838, when we started to return. The third day after leaving Mineral Point, expecting to reach Madison, we got lost, and were obliged to lie under an oak tree. We had no means to build a fire, and soon fell asleep. We were awakened by the excessive cold. Before leaving Mineral Point, we had secured a flask of good brandy. Although our temperance people do not think brandy of any benefit, we thought it was a benefit to us on that occasion. The next morning, we found our way into Madison, started for Summit, and arrived there about the last of February. We depended on the money we earned to buy provisions with, but were paid off in Michigan wild-cat money, which, when we got home, was not worth one cent on the dollar.

“Go into our cemetery, and there you will see where the most of our old settlers are at rest, and our gray hairs admonish us that in a few years we will be deposited there with the rest.

“In writing this communication, I have confined myself to the first settlement of the town of Summit, and, not having time for consideration, it could not be expected but that I should make some errors. Wishing to be excused for imperfections, I submit this paper, not for its merit or perfection, but as something to keep alive recollections of other days.”

Summit Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—The citizens of Summit, in conformity with previous preparatory meetings, met at the town hall, Tuesday, March 24, 1874, and effected a permanent organization. The subscribed capital was $39,000, and the following gentlemen were elected Directors: Daniel Williams, J. D. McDonald, C. M. Neff, Abram Hardell, J. S. Nichols, B. C. Hildreth, P. K. Tucker, Jacob Hill and Azro Hamlin. J. D. McDonald was elected President, and Daniel Williams, Secretary and Treasurer. The company began business March 31, 1874. Up to the present time, two losses have been sustained, amounting to $69.02. Number of policies issued up to January 1, 1875, 42; amount of insurance at that time, $57,577. Number of policies January 1, 1876, 74; amount insured, $102,576. Number of policies January 1, 1877, 104; amount insured, $158,021. Number of policies January 1, 1878, 130; amount insured, $187,400. Number of policies January 1, 1879, 148; amount insured, $215,360. Number of policies January 1, 1880, 164; amount insured, $242,174. The officers remain the same, with a few slight changes in Directors.

There are a large number of splendid farms, estates and country residences in Summit. Among the finest of these, especially in residences and fittings, are Capt. Parker's, Mr. McDowell's, Mr. Hill's, Mr. Hardell's and Capt. Stone's.

The town officers for 1880 are as follows: Supervisors—Daniel Williams, Chairman; W. H. Kummrow, William Griffith; Town Clerk, D. McDonald; Assessor, B. R. Hinkley; Treasurer, A. I. Story; Justices of the Peace, Daniel Williams, A. G. Hardell, Thomas Breakfield, J. A. Oestrich; Constables, Charles Denny, James Griffith, E. W. Barnard.

TOWN OF VERNON.

Township 5 north, of Range 19 east, was set apart and organized into the town of Vernon by an act of the Legislature, passed March 8, 1839. Before that time, it had formed a part of Muskego.

Vernon is justly noted for its fine timber, fertile soil, large supply of water-courses, and many curious mounds and embankments.

The growth of maple timber, especially on or near the banks of the Fox River, is very heavy and valuable, both for firewood and for sugar making. The growth becomes lighter in the south, until it finally almost disappears as we approach Caldwell's Prairie.

The large number of streams afford good water-power for milling, and excellent facilities for stock-raising.

The soil here is lighter, warmer and more arable, being of rather a sandy loam quality, and highly productive where properly cultivated.

The population is about equally divided between the Americans, Scotch and Germans, with a few Irish, English and Norwegians.

The first actual settlers in the town were John Dodge, Prucius Putnam and the brothers Curtis B. and Orien Haseltine. These men came from Andover, Vt., in 1836, and went into the then undisturbed wilderness of Vernon, in November of that year, and made claims on Sections 27 and 34. They also built a cabin at this time, 15x16 feet, a few rods west of the present schoolhouse at Dodge's Corners. Besides these four, Ira Blood, Gaius Munger, Asa A. Flint, N. K. Smith, Leonard Martin and others came in this fall, and selected claims, and some of them built, but did not winter here.

In the spring of 1837, Jesse Smith, John Thomas, Aaron and Amos Putnam, Col. Orien Haseltine, father of the Haseltine family, Isaac Flint, Almon Welch, Lazarus Whipple, Capt. Pierce, Joel Day, J. H. Stickney, the Plumb family, and perhaps a few more came.

Ira Blood, Joel Day, N. K. Smith and Gaius Munger were the first who brought families here, although they were not long the first.

It is related of Gaius Munger (now deceased), that, after he had been here with his family a few months, they fell short of provisions, and, while he was gone to get more, they had to live on potatoes and salt.

N. K. Smith, who came in May, 1837, with wife and two children, brought the first family into Vernon, Mrs. Smith having been the first white woman here for six weeks.

The town received its name from the first four settlers, who were all Vermonters, as were very many of those who came in subsequently, the first syllable of their native State being incorporated in the new name.

The first political meeting was a caucus, held at the house of Orien B. Haseltine, in the spring of 1838.

The first election was at the house of Col. Haseltine, where Nelson K. Smith was elected Chairman and Town Clerk.

For the first few years, the town meetings were held at the old log schoolhouse erected at Vernon Center in 1841 or 1842, but after awhile the north part of the town, through the influence of A. Welch, gave up permitting the town meetings to be held at L. Martin's, in the southern portion, near Muskego; but, after they had been held there awhile, the north part of the town concluded that they would have the meetings at the "burg" again, and, in spite of the resistance of the southern element, succeeded in their wish.

Mr. Munson put up a tavern finally, on the old Mukwonago plank road, near the center of town, and the rival factions compromised their differences and held the town meeting there for several years. Subsequently, when L. Martin put up his new hotel, the voters agreed to meet there, where they could have a good time. The town meetings are now held there.

According to record, the following officers were elected in 1842; N. K. Smith, Chairman and Town Clerk, with Jesse Smith and Joseph M. Stilwell as Side Supervisors; Commissioners of Common Schools, J. A. Plumb, J. H. Stickney and Henry Moon; Commissioners Highways, Alva Plumb, Ira Blood and John S. Moon; Assessors, Anson Morgan, Roswell Hill and Asa Hollister; Collector, James B. Stilwell; Sealer of Weights and Measures, Adam Putnam; Treasurer, Isaac Burley. J. M. Stilwell removed from town this year, and Bailey Webster was elected in his place as Supervisor.

Jonathan Putnam, father of Prucius, Nathaniel, Amos and Amos Putnam, came in with his sons in 1837. He was taken sick on the road, with diarrhoea, and died in a few days after his arrival in the town. Almon Welch went into the town of Prairieville and got a clergyman by the name of Ordway, who lived where Capt. Lawrence now lives, to go and preach the funeral sermon. The services were held at the house of John Thomas, and he was buried in the cemetery on the old farm now owned by Samuel Smith. This was the first death in the town.

The first child born in the town was Allen, youngest son of the large family of Col. Haseltine, born in April, 1838.

The first wedding service was pronounced at the joint marriage of Prucius Putnam and Emeline K. Haseltine and Curtis W. Haseltine and Miss Thomas.

A school was taught in town by Ira S. Haseltine in the winter of 1839 or 1840, first in the house of J. Thomas, then in the house of his father, Col. Haseltine.

A schoolhouse was built on the old farm of A. H. Pierce, in 1840, which was provided with a fire-place, and a stone and mud chimney, and was, in all likelihood, the first schoolhouse built in town, although there was one other built at about the same time at Vernon Center.

The first frame schoolhouse was erected on the present farm of J. W. Parks, and is now used by Mrs. Parks for a kitchen.

A postoffice was established as early as 1839 or 1840, in Vernon Center. The first Postmaster was Asa A. Flint, who had the office in his log house, which was long ago demolished, and which stood on the spot where Mr. Sharp now lives. Joseph Stilwell succeeded Mr. Flint, and he was followed by Mr. R. C. Robinson. Then came E. H. Daniels, and, after him, the present incumbent, his brother, Henry Daniels.

A few years after the establishment of the Vernon postoffice, the increase of population required another office, which was located at Big Bend, Aaron Putnam being installed Postmaster. Afterward, Prucius Putnam was Postmaster for a time; then Mr. Clark, the present Postmaster and storekeeper, took charge of the office.

During Buchanan's administration, Mr. L. Martin kept the postoffice, at his hotel, then called "Orchard Grove." Subsequently it became expedient to start still another office, and Dodge's Corners was selected as the best place for it. Mr. Dodge held the office of Postmaster until 1855, when R. L. Bailey, the present Postmaster, was appointed.

Big Bend.—A saw-mill was built at Big Bend by Amos and Aaron Putnam, as early as April, 1841, which they operated until 1868, then sold the property to Mr. Hudson.

Mr. Robert Wier subsequently built a saw-mill at Big Bend, which ran by steam. At this mill, most of the plank used in constructing the Muk. & Mil. road was sawed. This mill soon passed from the hands of Mr. Wier into the possession of Findlay McNaughton. The mill was demolished after Mr. Mc N. sold it.

The old hotel, now used as a dwelling-house, at Big Bend, was first kept by A. Putnam.

The store started there in 1846, by Prucius Putnam, was the first in the town. Mr. Putnam is still living in the town.

A terrible epidemic swept through Vernon and adjoining towns about thirty years ago, and caused a great amount of suffering in some localities, the Norwegians being especial sufferers.

The Milwaukee and Janesville plank road was run through the town about 1849, L. Reynolds, the first settler in Rochester, being the contractor and builder. The road proved a great benefit to the settlers, as everything had to be hauled to Milwaukee to be sold, there being no other market available at that time.

Vernon Center, called the "Burg," received the name in commemoration of the German, Fritz, who kept the hotel there years ago. At present, there are several houses here, two small stores, and a blacksmith and wagon shop. The first settlers here were Asa A. Flint and Joseph Stilwell. R. C. Robinson opened the first store here, keeping groceries. Among the old settlers in this vicinity are Almon and Eli Welch, James and Asher Stilwell, Porter Daniels, Peter Van Buren, P. Freyer, William A. Vanderpool, Amos Goff, Aaron Clifton, Joel Day, Roswell Hill, Charles Crownhart, Henry Moon, Bailey Webster and Anson Morgan.

The first bridge over the Fox River was put up one-half mile above the present bridge, by the Stockman Bros. This bridge stood there until it rotted down, a few years ago. Two or three wooden bridges crossed the river where the iron bridge is, each having been torn down and rebuilt when it became worthless, until the present fine structure was put up. At one time, a small part of the bridge was in the town of Vernon, but it is believed that at the present time, owing to the filling, and slight changes that have been made in the river course, the bridge is entirely in Mukwonago. At this point the settlers had a ferry previous to the bridges. At first canoes were used to cross the stream to get to Mukwonago, and bad luck to the wight who came to the crossing when all the canoes were on the other side, for then he must needs strip, fasten his clothes on his back, and swim over, perhaps on his return to find the canoes on the other side.

Vernon has a good war record, and did excellent service at that time under the management of its patriotic and hard-working Chairman, Asa Wilkins.

The first thrashing machine used here was an old tub power, brought in by Jesse Stetson, and his sons, Allen and Clinton, who helped him run it.

The early builders here had recourse to what were commonly called shake shingles for roofs. They were rived from straight blocks of hard wood, and were gotten only with a good deal of hard labor. Owing to this generally experienced difficulty, Mr. Gaius Munger early started a shingle-cutting machine, with which he did a thriving business, cutting shingles from blocks of wood softened by boiling in a big kettle which he kept for that purpose.

The Vernon Mutual Insurance Company, which includes Muskego, was organized in 1873, by the leading farmers of both towns. Leonard Martin has been President from the first, with Royal L. Bailey as Secretary during the entire time. The first policy was issued to the United Brethren Church; the second to Leonard Martin. The company has assumed liabilities to the extent of $370,000. Losses up to April, 1880, amount to $157. The company is in excellent condition.

The Vernon Reformed Presbyterian Church Covenanters.—This is the only one in the State. The first meeting was held for social worship, June, 1847, at the house of James Wright. The Rev. James Love preached the first sermon in March, 1848, at the same house. The congregation was organized in October of this year by Rev. James Milligan, assisted by Rev. Thomas Cox. James Wright, William Turner, John McNeil, A. McKenney and wives, William Wright, Mrs. A. McLeod and daughter Mary, James Wright, Jr., James McConnell and daughter were the original members. Rev. Robert Johnson was the first regular pastor, being called in 1859. The present church was built in 1854. In May, 1854, the name of the society was changed from Waukesha to Vernon. Rev. Johnson was succeeded after eight years by Rev. R. B. Cannon. He was followed after serving six years by Isiah Toris, the present pastor, who came in the fall of 1878. The present Elders are James Mann and William L. Wright.

The Vernon United Presbyterian Church was first called the Associate Reformed Church. Meetings were held as early as 1840, at the house of Deacon Jean, afterward in the barn of Robert Wier, for several years prior to the building of the schoolhouse of District No. 4, which was then used until the building of the church in 1859. The first minister was James Barnett, the next the Rev. John Wallace, of Illinois. The society was regularly organized, about 1845, at the house of Thomas Howie. Among the founders were Robert Wier, F. Frazer, James Begg, Charles Stewart, Thomas and John Howie, with their wives, and Duncan McNaughton and daughter, with several others. John Howie, John Stewart and F. Frazer were elected Elders. Mary A., wife of John Howie, founded the Sunday school in 1844, with the assistance of Mrs. Thomas Howie and Mrs. Guthrie. The Rev. Mr. Goudy was the first settled pastor connected with this church. The first Trustees were John Stewart, Findlay Travier, Archibald Stewart, Charles Vanderpool and Findlay McNaughton, who superintended the building of the church. These gentlemen and McNaughton subscribed $100 each toward building the church.

The Vernon Mills were built about 1852 by E. H. Kellogg. Before building this mill, Mr. Kellogg built a saw-mill on the same stream. The present mill property was sold by Kellogg to Boorman & Howitt, who sold to William A. Vanderpool, he in turn selling to John Matheson. He was followed by Edward Wilarr, who proved a rascal and absconded. The mill then fell into the hands of Peter Van Buren, the present owner, who removed the old engine and much other cumbersome machinery, replacing it by improved machinery and milling fixtures. The mill has now two runs of stone, and is in every way well equipped for business.

About 1845, Almon Welch had a big raising for the purpose of putting up the timbers of a new barn. The work was going on very well, when, suddenly, one of the bents, which the hands were lifting, slipped, and fell on a young man by the name of Anson Austin, killing him instantly. Several others narrowly escaped. This accident so frightened many that Mr. Welch did not know but that he would fail in getting it raised. Another day was appointed; but few came, among whom were the Wright boys. These insisted, contrary to the protestations of Mr. Welch, in putting the timbers up, which they successfully did.

It is related of Curtis Hazeltine, that when he first began breaking he had a little child which had to be cared for. Therefore, to get along and lose no more time than necessary, Mr. Hazeltine prepared a sack, Indian fashion, and, putting the baby into it, strapped it to his back, and went on with the plowing undismayed and unhindered by the little squaller.

John Dodge, one of the first comers, related in conversation, that, one time, while entertaining some recent arrivals from Vermont, he had only a few dishes, not enough to go around, so to supply the deficiency he went out and cut and smoothed off some large chips, and took them in, to be used for plates. The novelty of this thing served as very good spice for the otherwise plain dinner.

Of the four original comers in the town and who built the first house, three are yet alive Orien and Curtis Hazeltine, residing in Mazo Mania, while Prucius Putnam lives on a farm in Vernon. John Dodge passed the dark river August 29, 1859. N. K. Smith is at Boulder, Colo.

The town officers for 1880 are as follows: Supervisors—L. Martin, Chairman; John Van Buren, Asa H. Craig; Town Clerk, A. L. Jackson; Assessor, John S. Hudson; Treasurer, James Mair; Justices of the Peace, D. Cameron, F. McNaughton; Constables, Lyman Morse, James Vase, James Hurley.

The "Vernon Protective Union Society" was organized July 15, 1854, at the house of Prucius Putnam, by electing Jesse Smith, President; Leonard Martin, Secretary, and Prucius Putnam, Treasurer. The by-laws were written by H. B. Burrett and Jesse Smith. The permanent organization was completed as follows: Jesse Smith, President; H. B. Burritt and George W. Shepherd, Vice Presidents; L. Martin, Secretary; P. Putnam, Treasurer; Lorenzo Ward, Collector; H. B. Burritt, F. McNaughton, G. W. Shepard, Robert Wier and L. Martin, Vigilance Committee. The territory covered by this organization is twelve miles in all directions from the bridge at Big Bend. No member has ever lost a horse or mule by theft since the society was formed. In 1855, the society numbered 11 members and had 17 horses registered, valued at $2,585. Now it has 213 members and 743 horses, valued at $90,761. The society has $522.08 in the treasury. Asa Wilkins is President, and S. Vandewalker, Secretary.

TOWN OF WAUKESHA.

Township 6, Range 19 east, now called Waukesha, was by act of the Legislature, approved January 2, 1838, included in the town of Muskego, and as a part of such town the first election was appointed by that act to be at Nathaniel Walton's house. By a subsequent act, approved March 8, 1839, the town, as at present bounded, was established as Prairie Village. To call a town a village did not sound well, so by act approved December 20, 1839, the name was changed to Prairieville. This was again legally changed in 1847, after the erection and organization of the county, to Waukesha. Its early history has already been told in the history of the village and county of Waukesha, as here the first settlement of each was made. The Wisconsin State Industrial School, Fountain House, village of Waukesha, and all other things of importance in the town have been treated of elsewhere.

Early in 1842, the town of Prairieville was organized for purposes of self-government and on the 5th of April the first recorded town meeting was held, Joseph Turner officiating as Chairman, and E. S. Purple as Clerk of the election. The following-named town officers were chosen for the ensuing year: Supervisors, James Y. Watson, J. H. Kimball, J. J. Wright; Clerk, Vernon Tichenor; Treasurer, James W. Rossman; Collector, George W. Thustan; Commissioners of Highways, John Manderville, E. S. Purple, Joseph McNeil; Overseers of Highways, Norman Clinton, Almon H. White, J. B. Winton, William A. Barstow, (Governor of the State); Constables, Plutarch Taylor, Eleazer Rowley, George W. Thustan; Commissioners of Schools, Dr. G. Wright, Charles S. Bristol, Truman Wheeler; Assessors, Henry Bowen, George A. Hine, Edward Manning; Fence Viewers, J. E. Bidwell, A. C. Nickell, Joel Marsh; Sealer, Allen Root.

The following is the poll-list of the election, and probably contains the name of nearly every adult citizen of the town at that time:

Jacob H. Kimball,	Francis Londre,	William A. Barstow,	Sebina Barney,
John J. Wright,	Calvin Otis,	Samuel R. Manning,	Albert White,
Benjamin Babcock,	Almon H. White,	Asa S. Watson,	William E. Sanford,
Joel Marsh,	William Morse,	Edward Manning,	Oliver H. Higley,
James Y. Watson,	F. R. Lyon,	Caleb Nanscawen,	Justin Fordham,
Jacob E. Young,	Charles R. Dakin,	A. W. Cole,	Henry Ellmaker,
Samuel H. Barstow,	Isaac C. Owen,	Albert Marsh,	Timothy Pierce,
Lyman Goodnow,	John Wilson,	Daniel Thompson,	Patrick Venus,
James W. Rossman,	Timothy Mahan,	Norman Clinton,	N. Winters,
George W. Thustan,	T. B. Phippin,	Plutarch Taylor,	N. Latimer,
J. W. Close,	William Wright,	A. W. Randall,	Edw. Mahan,
P. H. Prame,	C. L. Robinson,	Thaddeus Thompson,	E. D. Clinton,
C. B. Donaldson,	John Gaspar,	G. H. Bradley,	Daniel Chandler,
E. W. Smith,	Peter Kirkman,	E. W. Goodnow,	Orlando Brown,
George W. Babcock,	George A. Hine,	Joseph McNeil,	William Graham,
Henry Bowron,	James Holton,	Henry Davis,	Nathaniel Pierce,
William S. Barnard,	M. R. Tillson,	Michael Thompson,	A. C. Nickell,
James Clark,	Daniel Fitz Simmons,	Abram Stark,	Henry P. Clason,
James Lampman,	Vernon Tichenor,	Joel E. Bidwell,	Joseph Turner,
George Sanford,	E. S. Purple,	James Williams,	Joshua Nanscawen,
Benjamin F. Chamberlin,	E. D. Powell,	Daniel H. Rue,	O. M. Hubbard,
Barzillai Douglass,	C. B. Freeman,	James A. Rossman,	L. A. Donaldson,
Luther Ayer,	Moses Tichenor,	George G. Shaw,	Thomas H. Drury,
Charles C. Bristol,	Moses Barrett,	William T. Bidwell,	Silas Chapman,
Nathan Brown,	John M. Wells,	E. Rowley,	Thaddeus Wait,
Winthrop Chandler,	Orson Tichenor,	John B. Dousman,	Stephen F. Smith,
Henry Hitcher,	D. M. Hubbard,	Truman Wheeler,	Morris D. Cutler,
John Gale, Jr.,	H. N. Davis,	John Manderville,	Allen Root.

It will be seen that the above list comprises the names of two future Governors of the State (W. A. Barstow and A. W. Randall), of H. N. Davis, afterward State Senator and father of C. K. Davis, Governor of Minnesota, in 1875, and of several gentlemen who are still respected citizens of Waukesha.

The officers for 1880 are as follows: Supervisors—Alexander McWhorter, Chairman; William Langer, Isaac Gale; Town Clerk, John E. Jewett; Assessor, C. S. Hawley; Treasurer, C. A. Haertel; Justices of the Peace, C. S. Hawley, A. Cook; Constables, John Downs, David Johnson and George Lindtner.

The first settler in the town outside of the village of Waukesha was Isaac Smart, who still resides on his original claim.

Almon Osborn, now a resident of Ripon, came into the town March 20, 1835, but where he camped is not known. The Smart family did not settle here until the middle of May of that year.

Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company.—The Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company of the town of Waukesha, was organized under an act of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, approved March 23, 1872, and issued their first policy, April 2, 1874; the amount of property insured by the company at this date is $1,120,000. During the six years since the company was organized, losses have been paid amounting to $2,273.50. The expense of insuring for the first five years was a trifle over three-eighths of one per cent, aside from the cost of policy and survey.

The company does not insure city or village property, stores, schoolhouses, churches, mills or hotels. The charges for insuring are $2 for survey and policy, and one-tenth of one per cent on the amount insured. The company's territory comprises the towns of Waukesha, Pewaukee, Delafield and Brookfield. A. V. B. Dey is Secretary, and the following have always been Directors: George Lawrence and William Blair, Waukesha; A. V. B. Dey and O. P. Clinton, Pewaukee; J. C. Robertson and Duncan Anderson, Delafield; O. J. Patterson and W. R. Blodgett, Brookfield; Henry Swallow, Merton. The company issues policies, also, in Merton, Genesee and Lisbon.

WAUKESHA.

JAMES K. ANDERSON, firm of Anderson & Haslage, proprietors of Silurian Springs; was born in Canada, in 1850; is son of John and Mary Brown Anderson. The father was a merchant in Broekville; is now a resident of Waukesha. Subject of this sketch left home at the age of 13, and has relied on his own resources since that time; began business life and continued seven years as clerk in a dry-goods store; was afterward in wholesale house; was several years "on the road," first as a salesman, and afterward as a general agent; his success is evinced from the fact that he was gradually promoted from small remuneration to a salary of $5,000 per annum, prior to engaging in the Silurian enterprise, in which he has a half-interest. He was married in 1877, to Miss Rose W. Shipman, daughter of the well-known architect, Col. S. V. Shipman, of Chicago. They have two children—James K., born 1878, and Aliee M., born in 1879. He has a good public school education, and the discipline and culture which all strong characters acquire by extended and practical dealings with men; he was successful as a wholesale and general agent, and these abilities as a business man mark him as pre-eminently fitted for the management of the Silurian Springs, which, with their improvements, represent an investment of nearly $40,000.

MRS. SOPHRONIA ST. CLAIR AYER, daughter of Nathaniel St. Clair, of Vermont, was born March 17, 1805; was married to Mr. Ayer, on Feb. 7, 1836. He was born Feb. 18, 1801, in St. Johnsbury, Vt.; he was a stone-cutter; worked on State Capitol, at Montpelier; came West, June, 1839, and settled in township of Waukesha, where they lived twenty-nine years. Mr. Ayer died May 13, 1867, at home, on the farm. She soon after sold the farm, and moved into the village of Waukesha, which is now her home; her residence is on Maple avenue; she often tells of her first ride in this country, which was on a board across the crotch of a big tree, drawn by two yoke of oxen. Wolves were frequent visitors in the country, and "panthers" (catamounts) called occasionally. People then had enough to eat, but their dress did not conform to full fashion style; gingham sun-bonnets and checkered aprons were prominent "Sunday fixens." They had five children—Sarah Ann, Elizabeth, William W., Stephen St. Clair, Hannah Mellissa; these all died at ages ranging from 10 years to 22 years. Mr. Ayer was a temperance man. She is a member of the Baptist Church. "Auntie Ayer" is well known for her social qualities and quaint good-nature.

DR. JOSHUA EDGAR BACON was born in Waukesha Aug. 2, 1848; was educated at the seminary, Carroll College. He graduated from the Medical Department of Harvard College, Boston, June, 1873; engaged in hospital practice in Boston about one year, then attended lectures at Rush Medical College and Hahnemann Medical College, of Chicago, and commenced practicing in Waukesha in 1875. Dr. Bacon is physician to the Industrial School, and is also "Health" physician. He was married in Waukesha, June 3, 1875, to Miss Ida Savage. She was born in Rochester, N. Y.

WINCHEL D. BACON was born Aug. 21, 1816, at Stillwater, Saratoga Co., N. Y.; son of Samuel and Lydia Barber (Dailey) Bacon; he clerked two years in Troy, N. Y., and in 1837 went to the town of Butternuts, Otsego Co., N. Y., with his parents. He was married July 4, 1838, to Miss Delia Blackwell. She was born Feb. 25, 1817, in the town of Butternuts. Mr. Bacon continued on his farm for four years, teaching school winters. On the 2d of September, 1841, he gathered together his small accumulations, and, with his wife, started for the West; they came from Utica to Buffalo by canal, hence by steamer to Milwaukee, and by team from there to Prairieville (now Waukesha), where he has lived ever since, engaged in farming on Sec. 8; he was there one year, then removed to the village, still continuing farming. Mr. Bacon has been engaged in banking, and has been principal owner of mercantile houses; he taught school in Waukesha Co. the winters of 1841, 1842 and 1843, and one summer; in 1843, he carried on the business of wagon-making with his brother-in-law, Charles Blackwell. He continued to teach until the spring of 1844, when, at the request of Edmund Clinton, he formed a partnership with him to carry on blacksmithing, continuing wagon-making. In the fall of 1844, he dissolved partnership with Mr. Clinton, and purchased the lot where the Exchange Hotel now stands, and built a shop there, continuing wagon-making and blacksmithing with Mr. Blackwell. He was six years in this business, then he traded his shop for a steam saw-mill at Brookfield. In 1863, he was appointed Paymaster in the army by President Lincoln, stationed at St. Louis. In 1865, he organized the Farmers' National Bank, and conducted it about four years. Mr. Bacon was for several years general agent for the N. W. National Fire & Marine Insurance Co., of Milwaukee, and retired from that business in 1875; was Member of the Assembly in 1853. Through his influence, the Reform School was located at Waukesha; he was made Acting Commissioner to locate the school, and had charge of accounts and disbursed the money until its completion. He was for several years a Trustee of the State Insane Hospital; also Trustee of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum; he was President of the Waukesha Agricultural Society several years, and member of the Board of Trustees of the Chicago University for several years. Mr. Bacon has been connected with Carroll College as a Trustee many years; not at present, however. He is Clerk at the present time of his school district, and is prominently identified with the temperance organizations; also of A., F. & A. M. Mr. Bacon has three children—Joshua Edgar, now a physician of Waukesha; Lydia Delia, now Mrs. George F. H. Barber, of Waukesha; and Ida Julia, at home. Lost two children—Samuel Dailey, who died July 14, 1849; he was born Nov. 20, 1844, in Waukesha; Winchel D., was born May 11, 1854, and died Sept. 9, 1859. Mrs. Bacon died Feb. 12, 1880, in Waukesha. Throughout Mr. Bacon's varied experience, he has never discontinued farming.

SAMUEL W. BAKER, carpenter, at Wisconsin Industrial School; native of Pennsylvania; came to Wisconsin in 1858. Enlisted in 1862, and served until 1866; the last year was in the Regular Army; has been with the Industrial School since 1875; works in all departments as repairer, and is head carpenter in erection of new buildings; is in charge of a "family," as the home subdivisions of the school are styled; is reported as a good mechanic and a reliable man.

GEORGE F. H. BARBER was born in the town of Delafield, Waukesha County, Sept. 1, 1850; son of Silas and Amelia Barber; educated in Waukesha Union School, Carroll College, and graduated from Princeton College, N. J., Class of 1873. He returned to Waukesha, and has been associated with his father in business until the present time. He is also owner of a farm in Waukesha County. Mr. Barber was married in Waukesha, Oct. 21, 1875, to Lydia D. Bacon; she was born in this village; they have one child, Winchell F., born July 30, 1877. Member of Royal Arcanum, and of the Presbyterian Church.

SILAS BARBER was born in the town of Berkshire, Franklin Co., Vt., June 30, 1824; came from Vermont to Wisconsin in 1841; remained a week in town of New Berlin; went from there to Pewaukee, where he worked six years; lived three years in Delafield, then came to Waukesha, and engaged in the hotel and livery business, until 1864. He was proprietor of the American House, which he sold in 1864; since then he has engaged in the livery business and farming. Mr. Barber was married, April, 1847, to Amelia Hasbrook; she was born in New York State; they have two children—George Fay Hunt Barber, who is with his father in Exchange Block Stable; and Rhoda Maria, now Mrs. Josiah McLain. Mr. McLain has been Town Treasurer several terms; member of Assembly in 1867, and has held various village offices. They have lost one son, who died at the age of 14 months.

MRS. NANCY S. BARNARD, nee Hokins, widow of William S. Barnard. He was born in Deerfield, Mass., October 15, 1805. She was born in Bennington Co. Vt., Dec. 18, 1809; was married in Vermont in 1829, came to Waukesha in 1839, and settled where they now live, on Madison St., in a house which they erected forty years ago. Mr. Barnard was a blacksmith—made many edge tools and farming implements—was a natural mechanic; he ran a grist-mill for twenty years. They had seven children, six of whom died in infancy; the only surviving son, is William H., born in Salem, Washington Co., N. Y., in 1834; he married Sophia A. Carpenter on the 25th of September, 1861, and lives at the old homestead; he made two trips and spent six years in the mines of Colorado. Mr. Barnard was an active Anti-slavery man, and a temperance Republican; he delighted in the growth of Waukesha and triumph of Republicanism; near the old homestead he first erected a slab building—one-half for residence and half for blacksmith-shop; they never suffered for necessities of life. Family are Congregationalists. Mr. Barnard died Feb., 15, 1879.

SAMUEL HALL BARSTOW was born at Plainfield, Conn., Jan. 3, 1807; attended district school until 16 years of age; then entered Deacon Douglass' store as clerk—quite an event for a farmer boy in those days. At 20 years of age, Mr. Barstow began the mercantile business at Norwich, Conn., where he built one of the finest business blocks in that city. The building is still standing, and in use as a place of business. In 1833, he moved to Cleveland, and immediately began the mercantile business at Brighton, Ohio; in May, 1839, he came to Prairieville, to take charge of the first flouring-mill, then partly finished, and he has since resided in Waukesha. Mr. Barstow was a member of the Territorial Legislature, in 1846, and helped erect Waukesha County; was Register of Deeds, from 1848 to 1852, and again in 1861 and 1862; was elected Clerk of the Court, and was Coroner several terms. He was married April 27, 1830, to Susan R. Babcock, born in Norwich, Conn., daughter of Nathan Babcock; they have had eight children, and only three of whom are living—Helen A., now Mrs. W. F. Whitney; Susan B., now Mrs. George C. Waller, whose husband died in San Francisco; and Sarah R., now Mrs. George Harding. Their son, William A., enlisted in the 28th W. V. I., as musician; was the Captain's clerk for a time; Hospital Steward for some time; learned surgery, becoming an expert in that business, and died in California, aged 29 years, leaving a wife and one child. The other four children died in infancy. On the 23d of April, 1880, Mr. and Mrs. Barstow celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, by a golden wedding party, which was largely attended, and at which the presents were numerous. It is the lot of but few couples to enjoy such a rare occasion and such a gathering as characterized this golden-wedding party. Mr. and Mrs. B. are both in good physical and mental health, enjoying a beautifully located home on the hill overlooking Waukesha Village.

JACOB BEEBE, retired farmer; he was born in 1811, at Gelderland, Albany Co., N. Y.; learned trade of carpenter and joiner, and worked at the business several years; he was married in 1832, to Miss Anna Ham, of York State; came West in spring of 1854, and stopped two years in township of Yorkville, Racine Co.; in 1856, he bought a farm in township of Vernon, Waukesha Co., which he carried on until he sold it in 1874. They visited for a year after quitting the farm, mainly in the East, with a view of spending their last years in their old Eastern home, but the conditions were changed—the place and people seemed to be different from their remembrance—and, therefore, they returned, and chose a home in the village of Waukesha; they have a pleasant home on East avenue; they had but one child—a daughter, Almira, who married Dwight Rector, and lives in Brooklyn, N. Y.; they have had two children, one of whom, Anna M., lives with her grandparents. Mr. Beebe is the Treasurer and one of the elders of the Presbyterian Church; he never in his life had a law-suit, and “was never dunned for a dollar;” he was successful as a farmer—raised good crops during the period of high prices; he is still in comfortable health, but Mrs. Beebe has been in delicate health for many years. They do not want for this world's goods; are blessed with many friends, and are cheerfully passing on to the Sunset Land.

C. G. BERGELER was born in Prussia Dec. 29, 1832; came to America in 1857; settled at Milwaukee in the spring of that year. In October, he came to Waukesha, where he was engaged in the business of shoemaking fifteen years, when he became the proprietor of the Bethesda Livery Stables, which are first-class in every respect. He was married in Waukesha Sept. 8th, 1858, to Amelia Goattel; she was born in Prussia; they have six children—Louisa, Carl, Emma, Clara, Lillie and Laura. They have lost one son, who died in infancy.

WM. BLAIR came to Waukesha in December, 1845, where he has made his home ever since. He established a thrashing manufactory, and was in partnership with Archibald McLachlen for five years; they carried on the business in a building which they rented from Wm. S. Barnard, now known as Barnard's shop; Mr. McLachlen was a partner with Mr. Blair for ten years; Mr. McLachlen sold his interest to Amos Smith eighteen or twenty years ago. Mr. Blair purchased Mr. Smith's interest. Mr. Blair has been President of the Waukesha County Manufacturing Company since its organization; President of the Waukesha County National Bank since 1865, he has also been a stockholder and director of the State Bank and Waukesha County National Bank, since their organization. Mr. Blair discontinued the manufacture of thrashing machines about eight years ago; general repair and jobbing business is the principal work done now. Mr. Blair carries on a farm in the town of Waukesha, on Sections 4 and 5. Mr. Blair was Chairman of the Board of Supervisors for some years, and President of the Village Board many years; has also been State Senator for six years. Mr. Blair was a native of Ayrshire, Scotland, born July 31, 1820, and came to America, with a brother, in 1836, located in Wheatland, village of Mumford, Monroe Co., N. Y., and learned the machinist's trade, with his brother James, and remained here until 1845. He was married in LeRoy, Genesee Co., N. Y., in June, 1847, to Nancy M. Emmons; she died May 20, 1859, leaving three children, having lost two; Frank C. resides in Waukesha, George B. lives on a farm, and Willie G. is a druggist's clerk at Council Bluffs. Mr. Blair was married the second time in Waukesha, Wis., June 23, 1860, to Henrietta A. Emmons, a native of Otsego Co. N. Y.; they have lost one daughter, who died in 1863, and have two children living—Henry E. and Arthur J.

NOTE.—Since the above was placed in type, the following extract from a newspaper has been sent us: About three months ago our community was shocked to learn that Hon. William Blair was afflicted with a mortal disease. He had been sick for months before, but only those who knew him most intimately had been aware of the extent of his sufferings, and none had any knowledge of the nature of his malady. So fixed were his business habits, that he kept on his accustomed way, and so reticent was he in merely personal matters, that what concerning himself he must have suspected, he never divulged to others, not even his best friends. But the time came when he must succumb; and then it was that the community first learned from his physician that the strong man was rapidly sinking with a cancer in his stomach. * * * Mr. Blair died at his residence in this village, at 6 o'clock on Tuesday evening, July 13, aged 60 years. He was buried by the Masons, on Thursday afternoon, at 3 o'clock.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.—At a special meeting of the Village Board, held at the Council rooms, on Wednesday evening, July 14, 1880, the following resolutions, on the death of the Hon. William Blair, were adopted:

Resolved, That the Board has learned with regret of the death of Hon. William Blair, for many years a member and President thereof, a member of the Board of Public Charities, and a member of the State Senate.

Resolved, That the loss sustained by the community in the demise of so useful and public-spirited a citizen as Mr. Blair, is one to be lamented by every one, and that, in order to pay fitting respect to his memory, it is recommended that all usual business in the village be suspended during the funeral of the deceased, from 3 to 5 o'clock P. M. of Thursday, July 15.

Resolved, That the Village Clerk be instructed to procure the publication of these resolutions in the public newspapers of Waukesha, and deliver a copy to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Board attend the funeral of ex-President Blair in a body.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, this Board do now adjourn.

H. M. YOUNG, President.

F. M. SLAWSON, Clerk.

BENJAMIN BOORMAN was born in the county of Kent, town of Heacorn, England April 12, 1829. Came to America 20th of April, 1848. (Visited Wisconsin in May of the same year.) Came to Wisconsin in May, 1849, and settled at Waterloo and carried on the milling business with his brother, William Boorman, for four years. He then sold out to William and removed to Pewaukee, in January, 1854, and carried on milling at that point until May, 1878; since then, the mill there has been rented to Benjamin F. Boorman and Adam Boorman. Mr. Boorman purchased the Saratoga Mills in Waukesha, in February, 1876 (then the Forest City Mills); was a member of the Board of Village Trustees while at Pewaukee, and one of the first members of the Board there; he is a member of the Waukesha Village Board at present time. He was engaged about seven years, at Pewaukee, in the mercantile business, and conducted and owned the cracker bakery at that place for five years. Mr. Boorman was married at Darien, in Walworth Co., Wis., Dec. 6, 1852, to Fannie Boorman; she was born in Framfield, County Sussex, England, May 10, 1829. They have two children living—Benjamin Franklin and Edna Bailey. They have lost four children. One died at the age of 4 years, another at 15 months, the other two in infancy.

DR. J. R. BOYD was born in Portland, Me., Aug. 13, 1846; reared in Mississippi until he was 14 years of age. In 1860, he went to Europe; returned to Mississippi in September, 1861. The following month, he again left for Europe; he entered school at "The Gymnasium," at Aberdeen, Scotland; in September, 1864, he left for India as assistant manager of a coffee-plantation; from October, 1864, to May, of 1870, Mr. Boyd remained in India, being manager at the time he left there, bringing with him flattering testimonials from his employers. He came to Wisconsin in April, 1871, located in Watertown, where he remained but a month, and then went to Bloomington, Ill.; was there until November of the same year, when he returned to Watertown and studied dentistry with Dr. Albert Solliday; was with him until the last of February, 1875, then went to the N. Y. College of Dentistry, and continued there two full years, and graduated Feb. 27, 1877, receiving the faculty prize of $100, that being the only prize given for best examinations in all the departments. May 15, 1877, he formed a partnership with Horace Enos, of Milwaukee; was with him eighteen months, then went South for a short time, and July 1, 1879, commenced business here. Dr. Boyd is the son of Rev. Fred W. Boyd, D. D., and Mary E. (Bailey) Boyd—both living, and at present residents of Waukesha. There are four children in the family living—James R., Walter S., Lloyd T. and Charles Mayo.

MOSES BRYANT, the veteran pioneer; born in Cornish, N. H., May 21, 1786. He lived in New Hampshire till 1844, when he came to Wisconsin, and lived five years in Oak Grove, Dodge Co. In 1849, he settled in the village of Waukesha, where he continues to reside. Most of his life he has been a farmer, and wholly so since coming to Wisconsin. Was some years in mercantile business in New Hampshire; also used to speculate in cattle, horses and produce. He was married Jan. 31, 1816, to Miss Tirzah Kingston, of Plainfield, N. H.; she died in his present home on 13th of October, 1854, leaving five children, three of whom are now living: two sons in Chicago, and one in Boston. He has lived in his present house since 1849. In 1812, he was sutler at Burlington, Vt. He served eight years as Justice of the Peace, including the term in the East and in Wisconsin; contestants seldom appealed from his decision. He has always sought to do right, without fear or favor. He is a Republican, and hoped to vote for James G. Blaine, but James A. Garfield is acceptable to him, and, Providence permitting, will receive the vote of this man—the oldest in Waukesha County. He has unwonted vigor, both in word and act. He tills a large garden, and would assist his youthful neighbors, if they needed. He enjoys relating the memories of Old Lang Syne. He tells, with gusto, of the days when he did “a-courting go,” and he is an agreeable companion for young or aged. He has been a Christian for more than half a century; was a Congregationalist in New Hampshire, but is a Baptist in Wisconsin. His residence is on East avenue. For ninety-four years, he has borne life's burdens, and is now cheerfully waiting to enter into his rest.

JOHN P. BUCKNER, farmer; P. O., Waukesha; born in Bavaria, Germany, on 3d of January, 1833. Parents came to United States when he was 5 years of age, remained two years in Buffalo, N. Y., then in 1840 located on Government land, Sec. 18, in township of New Berlin, where his parents remained till their death. He remembers the “close times” when he was a youngster; lived one entire winter on meal and water—a crude johnny-cake. Remembers vividly, when 7 years of age, walking bare-foot from Milwaukee and bringing a live cat, those animals being then scarce in the settlement, and one neighbor, who was overrun with the animals to which cats are mortal enemies, gave $2.50 for a young cat. He went to California, and arrived in San Francisco in February, 1853, with only 20 shillings in his pocket; secured a loan of $20 from a fellow passenger, and immediately went to Sacramento, where he found acquaintances, one of whom was making his torture by raising pigs in his cabin where he was “baching.” The little ones were fed from a spoon, and when six weeks old were worth $50. The practical work of mining was successful on the Center Fork of the Sacramento, twenty-five miles north of the city, and he worked there till May, 1857, when he returned to Waukesha, having been absent five and a half years. He then bought his father's farm of 165 acres, in New Berlin, and he still owns the old homestead. He was married in November, 1857, to Miss Delia Snyder, a native of Wisconsin; she died in March, 1867, leaving three children—Alice A., born 1858; George A., born 1862, and Fred W., born 1867. He is a reliable Republican, but was several terms Supervisor in New Berlin, a Democratic town. On 20th of November, 1867, he was married to Miss Isabelle Hoagg, of Waukesha, by whom he has one child, May Isabella, born in 1876. In fall of 1877, he moved to village of Waukesha, where he has considerable real estate. In 1879, he built a large brick house on Broadway, adjoining village limits. This residence is on a commanding eminence and is one of the finest homes in the village. During the season for watering-place tourists, some insist on making his house their home.

DEXTER BULLARD, retired farmer; he was born in May, 1828, in Tolland Co., Conn. Was married June 18, 1854, to Miss Mary L. Bullard, daughter of Dr. C. Bullard, of Pulaski, Va.; she died April 9, 1855. His present wife is a native of Virginia, and most of his relatives also are residents of Virginia. Was married in May, 1858, to Miss Mary Stone, daughter of Capt. William A. Stone, of Lunenburg Co., Va.; came West in 1860, and settled in Genesee Township, on a large farm, which they still own. In 1873, they moved into the village of Waukesha, and purchased the fine residence known as “Maple Grove,” situated on the corner of Maple avenue and Hurlburt street. They have two children—both now at home—Earnest L., a junior in Wisconsin State University, and Eva May. Their home is one of the pleasantest, on one of the pleasantest streets in this pleasant village. It is annually the summer home of many tourists, most of whom are from the “Sunny South.”

GEORGE N. BURROUGHS, born in Fishkill, Dutchess Co., N. Y., Sept. 26, 1834; came to Wisconsin in May, 1847, and has lived to the present date. He was with his father in the hardware business from his youth, to 1878. He was married in the fall of 1855, to Miss Sarah E. Howell, from York State. They have had five children—one died while young. The names of living are Minnie, who is married, and living in La Crosse; Nelson H., living in Kansas City, Kan. (not Missouri); Anna and Willie are at home. Mrs. Burroughs is a Baptist; he is a Royal Arch Mason; he owns a large residence on the corner of Main and Bridge Sts. They annually accommodate tourists who spend the season at this favorite summer resort.

NELSON BURROUGHS (retired), born on the 4th of July, 1808, in Saratoga Co., N. Y., is the son of Dr. George Burroughs, who was a native of Dutchess Co., N. Y. Mr. B.'s early life was spent in the township of Fishkill, Dutchess Co. He is a tinner, and carried on that business in connection with a hardware store in that town for twenty years. In November, 1828, he was married to Miss Amanda Marsh, of Orange Co., who was born in 1810, and died on Jan. 3, 1861; she had five children, three of whom survived her—George, now married and living in Waukesha; Oscar, since deceased, was First Cashier, Waukesha County Bank; Mary, deceased; Theadmore, married, and since deceased; Walter, deceased, student. Mr. Burroughs came West and settled in Waukesha in June, 1847, when "Prairieville" was the name of the place; he established himself as a hardware-merchant, and continued in the same business thirty years, and most of the time in one building, which he still owns; in 1878, he sold out to Gaspar & LeClare. He was married to his present wife in 1865—her maiden was Bennett—her first husband was a prominent banker in New York City, named Filley. Mrs. B. and her daughters are Episcopalians. He owns 27 acres of land east of the Silurian Spring, and a large stone residence on Main St. He was one of the eight founders of the Waukesha County Bank, and was at one time Cashier of the same; he was the first President of the village of Waukesha, and has held various village and township offices, and in 1862 was elected from this district as Representative to the State Legislature. From boyhood he has "paddled his own canoe," but is now "resting on his oars."

CARL BUSJAEGER, retired; born in Karlsruhe, Baden, Germany, in October, 1827; was engaged as a manufacturer in the old country. Was married in 1851 to Miss Amelia Kollofrat; came to United States in 1855, and after stopping a year in Milwaukee, he bought a farm of 200 acres in Pewaukee, which he carried on for six years; since 1861, his home has been the village of Waukesha. Was a War Democrat. Enlisted in 1865 in Co. D, 48th W. V. I.; went on to Plains to fight Indians; was honorably discharged Feb. 19, 1866, with rank of Sergeant. In 1867, he built the "Waukesha House," on Madison St.; it is used for boarding-house and saloon. Has five children—Carl, Anna, Max, Matilda and August. Owns a large residence on Center St., and has real estate elsewhere in the State. Is a member of the I. O. O. F. Is an Independent Democrat.

REV. CHARLES W. CAMP, Pastor Congregational Church; born Oct. 7, 1821, in Litchfield Co., Conn. He graduated from Yale College in 1844, and then graduated at the Union Theological Seminary of New York City in 1847; came to Wisconsin in the fall of same year and located at Genesee, where he remained five years, preaching one year at Palmyra, where he organized a church; in 1853, he was called to the pastorate of the church at Sheboygan, where he remained eleven years; in 1864, he took charge of the church at Fond du Lac City, and he left that pastorate to assume his present relations at Waukesha, in January, 1868. He was married Oct. 28, 1847, to Miss Elizabeth Whittlesey, daughter of Deacon David Whittlesey, of New Britain, Conn.; is grand-daughter of Dr. John Smalley, a noted divine of the last century. They have had six children, two died in childhood; the names of the living are Lillie C., Charles E., Edgar W. and William H. The parsonage is on Carroll street. He is now the Senior Pastor in Waukesha. The Congregational Church is a neat edifice, and is very centrally located. The society is harmonious and prosperous.

PATRICK H. CARNEY came to Waukesha, in October, 1847, and engaged in farming until 1852; then attended Carroll College until the spring of 1856, and was publisher and editor of the Waukesha County Democrat until 1865; then he engaged in farming, and continued that business until the spring of 1868, when he was elected County Judge, which position he held four years; after leaving that office, he engaged in the practice of law, which he has continued ever since. From April, 1877, to April, 1879, he again conducted the Waukesha County Democrat, at the same time carrying on his law business; prior to his election as County Judge, he was Clerk of the Circuit Court in 1863 and 1864; he was elected Mayor in 1879. Mr. Carney was born in Lincoln Co., Me., March 17, 1836; he lived there until he came to Waukesha, with his parents, and located in the town of Mukwonago. O'Brien Carney, his father, died six years ago; Mary Ann Carney, his mother, is still living.

BENJAMIN CARPENTER, retired farmer; born Sept. 30, 1794, in Orange Co., N. Y. Married, May 10, 1815, to Miss Jane Keen, daughter of Capt. Keen, a prominent merchant of Orange Co. Although but 20 years of age at time of his marriage, he had previously served one year in the war with England; his regiment was stationed at Harlem Heights. They came West in 1845 and settled on farm in township of Brookfield, Waukesha Co. Mrs. Carpenter died in 1866; she was the mother of eleven children, only four of whom now survive; the four are married and live in four different States. He was married in March, 1868, to Mrs. Naomi Barnes, who died in October, 1873, without issue. He sold the main farm in 1868, and lived on a small place near the Junction till 1876, when he removed to village of Waukesha, where he now resides. In Brookfield, he served several terms as Justice of the Peace. For the last twelve years he has not taken an active part in business. He married his last wife in September, 1874; her maiden name was M. G. McCourdy; she died in 1875. He owns a comfortable corner residence on West Side, near the stone schoolhouse. He now lives with a family who rent his house. Although 86 years of age, he is still smart and cheerful.

EDWIN CHESTER, father of Mrs. Col. White, was born in 1797, in New London Co., Conn. Married in 1823 to Miss Henrietta Barber, daughter of Hon. Noyes Barber, many years member of Congress from Connecticut; came West in 1850 and settled in Waukesha; has been a merchant all his active life. Had four children—Mary Henrietta, Julius, Elizabeth and George Barber. His home is with his daughters, Mrs. Park and Mrs. White. He is a genial Christian gentleman.

EUGENE W. CHAFIN, was born in Mukwonago, this county, Nov. 1, 1852; graduated from the Wisconsin State University, at Madison, Wis., June 17, 1875. In the fall of 1875, he came to Waukesha, and engaged in the practice of law. He was first elected Justice of the Peace in the spring of 1877, and has been elected to serve a second term. He is the son of Samuel E. and Betsey A. Chafin, who settled in Wisconsin in 1837; his father died Oct. 14, 1865; his mother now resides on part of the old homestead, in the town of East Troy, Wis. Mr. Chafin is author of "The Voter's Hand-Book." He was admitted to the bar at the time he graduated from the State University. Mr. Chafin is District Chief Templar, I. O. G. T., for Waukesha Co.

WALTER S. CHANDLER was born at Batavia, Genesee Co., N. Y., Jan 18, 1836; came from there to Milwaukee, Aug. 29, 1848, where he resided until July 18, 1877, then moved to the village of Waukesha, and carried on the lumber trade until 1878, when he disposed of that business. Since June 25, 1878, he has been proprietor of the Eocene Mineral Spring, since then giving his whole attention to the development of the business arising therefrom. Mr. Chandler's father was Judge Daniel H. Chandler, for many years a prominent citizen of Milwaukee, and engaged in the practice of law there. His mother, Mary Stark Chandler, was a descendant of Gen. Stark, of Revolutionary fame. Walter S. Chandler was married May 16, 1859, to Sarah O. Kneeland; she was born in Le Roy, Genesee Co., N. Y., March 18, 1838; they have had four children, two living—Ralph, born July 16, 1861; and Burr Kneeland, born Oct. 22, 1872; two children died in infancy. Mr. Chandler is a member of the Episcopal Church. He served as School Commissioner of Milwaukee, Fourth Ward, in 1869-70.

LEONARD COLEMAN, proprietor American House; born 2d of January, 1824, in Ft. Ann, Washington Co., N. Y.; came to Milwaukee in fall of 1845 on a prospecting tour, and in 1846, he became a permanent resident of the State. Married, to Miss Marcena Barlow, on the 25th of June, 1848; he farmed twenty-five years in the township of Summit, which is so called from its elevation of three hundred and twenty-five feet above Lake Michigan; they have had four children—buried three sons; the daughter is married to H. G. Morgan, and lives in Waukesha. Mr. C. lived five years in Pensaukee, Wis., as proprietor of Garduer House; this place was seriously injured by a cyclone, in July, 1877—several killed, and many wounded; his hotel was destroyed and much of the village was prostrated. In the fall of same year he took charge of the American House, and is still the acceptable host; he enjoyed pioneer experiences, but never suffered any wonderful privations. The family are Congregationalists; he is a quiet, reliable Republican.

ALEXANDER COOK came to Wisconsin in August, 1845; located in the village of Waukesha, and has remained here ever since, where he has engaged in the practice of law to the present time. He was District Attorney eight terms and Justice of the Peace eight terms, holding one or the other of these offices nearly all the time since he came here; was also Town Clerk for two or three years. He was born at Sharon Springs, Schoharie Co., N. Y., March 1, 1820; lived there only one or two years, then his father and mother, John R. and Maria Coon Cook, moved to Canajoharie, Montgomery Co., N. Y.; they remained there until 1831, then they moved to the town of Clay, Onondaga Co., N. Y. Mr. Cook was educated at Clinton, N. Y., at Hamilton College and "The Liberal Institute" of that place; read law in the city of Syracuse; admitted to the bar in 1843; commenced practice at Waukesha. Was married at Cooperstown, Otsego Co., N. Y., Feb. 1, 1843, to Nancy Stevens; she was born in the town of Cherry Valley, Otsego Co., N. Y.; they had one son, who enlisted in Co. B, 28th W. V. I., in August, 1862; change of climate resulted in his death from typhoid fever, Jan. 23, 1863.

SAMUEL COOK, retired; born 1810 in England; married in 1832 to Miss Mary Smith, of England; came to United States in 1836, and for four years carried on shoemaking in York State; in 1840, he located on a farm of 126 acres, which he now owns, in Genesee Township, Waukesha County; also owns a small place of 13 acres in township of Waukesha, besides his home on Carroll St. He quit farming in 1873; has seven children—George, Sarah J., William S., Charles N., James O. and the twins, Charlotte A. and Elizabeth A. All are married except the youngest. He buried one child in York State; family are Methodists; he is a Republican. He brought a stock of leather and materials for shoemaking with him when he settled in Genesee Township; the stock was very valuable in this new country, and shoemakers were quite scarce; his trade for some years was very lucrative. He has been a continuous resident of Waukesha Co. for fully forty years; when he came into the county there were only about half a dozen dwellings where village of Waukesha now stands. In 1840, four men walked from Milwaukee with him, designing to stop at Prairieville; after wandering through the brush some time, on the site of present village of Waukesha, they happened to meet a boy, of whom they inquired, "Where is Prairieville?" The boy answered, "Here." "Well," said they, "where are the houses?" "Oh," said the boy, "the houses are to be built as soon as the folks come here." But one of the four has helped to "build the houses" where the prophetic lad located the village. Mr. Cook, in common with other early settlers, suffered some privations, but, as a whole, he enjoyed the friendly pioneer life. He is still hale and hearty.

CHARLES CORK was born in Headcorn, County of Kent, England, Oct. 25, 1832, came to America, May, 1848; located in Rochester, N. Y., one year, then moved to South Lima, N. Y., where he lived until 1856; then came to the town of Ontario, Knox Co., Ill.; remained there two seasons, and, in the spring of 1858, he went to Page Co., Iowa, for one year (now owns 300 acres of land in Page and Fremont Co.), started for Pike's Peak, in the spring of 1859, but returned, and came to Waukesha, in June, 1859, and engaged in the flour, feed, and grocery business, for two years; discontinued then the feed business, and added crockery to his line. Mr. Cork discontinued the flour business, in 1870, and has since carried on the business of dealer in groceries, crockery, cutlery, notions, etc. Mr. Cork has been a member of the Village Board several terms; Fire Warden, and Chief of Fire Department; he has been a member of the Fire Department twelve years; he contracted for furnishing most of the shade and ornamental trees in Waukesha, for the last eight or ten years. Mr. Cork is a member of A., F. & A. M. Lodge (Master Mason). He was married in the town of Merton, Waukesha Co., May 1, 1864, to M. Gertrude Farner, daughter of Dr. William H. Farner, one of the oldest settlers of Waukesha. Dr. Farner came in the spring of 1847, to Waukesha, and engaged in the practice of medicine for a number of years; afterward lived in Kenosha two years; he resided in Iowa ten years, at Des Moines and Keokuk; afterward went to Galveston, Tex., then to Illinois, and lived in Loraine, Adams Co., seven years; died Dec. 14, 1878. Mrs. Cork was born in Hinesburg, Chittenden Co., Vt., Sept. 4, 1844; they have two children—Gertrude Pearl, born Jan. 7, 1870, and Charles Alfred Hayes, born Sept. 9, 1875.

WILLIAM CRUICKSHANK, retired. Born March 2, 1810, in Aberdeenshire, Scotland; learned trade of stonemason, in his native country; came to United States in 1836, and spent seven years in York State, engaged either at his trade or as contractor on public works; came West in 1843, and settled in New Berlin, Waukesha Co.; was married, in 1844, to Miss Jane Mathewson, who died in 1852, leaving two children, John and Jeanette. Went to California, after death of his wife, and remained till 1858; then, till 1873, he carried on general farming; since that date his home has been Waukesha; owns a cozy home on Main St.; "never drinks any liquor and attends the Episcopal Church every Sunday morning." He was educated at his parish school, in Scotland, but soon, by private study, advanced beyond its curriculum; early developed special ability as a mathematician; he has been known for years as maker of "Sun Dials," one of which is in the Waukesha Cemetery. An intelligent person can spend an hour very profitably in the company of Mr. Cruickshank, for he has pursued an extended course of reading and study, and may, with propriety, be styled a self-educated man.

ORLANDO CULVER, harness-maker and carriage trimmer; born 1839 in New York; came West with his parents in 1853. He has been a resident of Waukesha Co. since 1854. Was married in 1860, to Miss Ann Wells, daughter of Rev. William Wells, a superannuated Methodist preacher, now living in Portage, Wis. On the 6th day of May, 1861, he enlisted in Co. F., 5th W. V. I. He served in three different regiments an aggregate of two years and four months. He entered as a private and was honorably discharged as 2d Lieutenant. He learned his trade before the war, and bought out the old proprietor during the war, and since the war he has carried on the business to present date. His is one of the leading establishments of the kind in Waukesha. He owns the shop on Main street, and also a house on River street, but resides on Grand Avenue. Has three children, Alice E., Ann Etta and Grace M., all now at home. He has served several times as one of the "City Fathers," was one term Township Treasurer, two terms Village Treasurer, three terms Village Marshal. Is a Republican. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum, is a Master Mason, and member I. O. O. F. The family are Methodists, and he is Superintendent of the Methodist Sunday School. He is a skilled mechanic, and a valuable citizen.

SAMUEL G. CURTIS was born in Jamestown, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., July 20, 1836; his father was born in the State of New York in 1802, and was one of the first settlers of the now thriving city of Jamestown, and died on the 22d of July, 1871. His mother was born in Vermont in 1804, and emigrated, with her parents, to Western New York, where she lived until the fall of 1877, and then went with her son, Dr. D. G. Curtis, to Chattanooga, Tenn., where she still resides. Mr. Curtis has two brothers and one sister living in Chattanooga, and one sister living in Jamestown, N. Y. He attended school, receiving a fair academic education, under the tuition of Prof. E. A. Dickinson. At the age of 14, he entered the Jamestown Journal office to learn the printing business under the instruction of Frank W. Palmer, now Postmaster at Chicago, who was editor of the Journal, where he continued for nearly two years, and then started for the then "Far West," making his first stop in Chicago, and finding employment at the ease, in the Journal office, where he remained until the breaking-out of the cholera in 1853; he then took a tour through the southern portion of Illinois, but soon returned to Chicago, and remained there for a brief period, going from there to Milwaukee; here he readily found employment on the Daily News, then edited by Col. Dan Shaw, where he remained until the change of proprietors, when he left the office to accept the position as foreman of the Evening Wisconsin; here he remained for several months, to the perfect satisfaction of his employer, Hon. Wm. E. Cramer; the duties and labors of a daily paper becoming too burdensome, he accompanied Mr. Dominic Casey, who had often been in the office for men to go to Waukesha to assist on a new paper being published there, called the Waukesha County Democrat; at Waukesha he remained most of the time closely connected with the office, taking an active part in all its departments, until the fall of 1856, when he went to Detroit, and took a position on the Detroit Free Press, then under the control of Wilbur F. Storey, now of the Chicago Times; he remained in Detroit until after the close of the Fremont and Buchanan campaign, and then went to Sandusky, Ohio, where he met his brother, and the two made a visit to their old home in York State, arriving there about the last of November, 1856; here he remained through the winter, when he went to Westfield, N. Y., took a position on the Transcript, a weekly paper then published by G. P. Buck & Co.; after being in the Transcript office a brief time, he was taken violently ill, and returned home; recovering from his illness, he started for the West in June, 1857, and came direct to Waukesha, and resumed his former position in the Democrat office, where he remained most of the time until 1859; during the five years' residence in Waukesha he was a great favorite among his associates, and was the means of organizing the first Good Templar Lodge in Waukesha County, of which he was a charter member; he also took quite an active part in all political campaigns, often traveling over the county for weeks, assisting his friends. In November, 1859, he was married by the Rev. Mr. Latan, to Miss Sarah Francis Slawson, oldest daughter of Frederick Slawson, an old resident of Waukesha, and formerly of Orange Co., N. Y. A day or two after his marriage, he returned to Jamestown, N. Y. In the spring of 1860, he entered into partnership with his father, in the grocery trade, which he continued for some time, and finally purchased and controlled the entire interest; in 1861 he purchased a building lot, in the center of Main street and built a handsome three-story brick store, to better meet the demands of his constantly increasing trade; no man in Jamestown kept a larger or finer stock of goods, or had a larger trade than he. At the breaking-out of the rebellion, when the Government called on the Empire State for its State Guards, of which he was a member, he was one of the first to respond, and cheerfully shouldered his musket, to do what lay in his power to defend the honor and rights of his country; returning home, he, with renewed vigor, continued the grocery trade until the summer of 1866, when he sold his stock to his youngest brother, Horace, and rented his store for a term of years; he next purchased a half-interest in the Chautauqua Press, a large nine-column, Democratic paper, published in Jamestown under the name of Saxton & Curtis; after a season he sold his interest in the office, and went into the oil business, which was anything but profitable; his next adventure was selling goods through Pennsylvania and the "Western Reserve" of Ohio, until 1871, when his father died; returning to Jamestown he sold his property, and, with his wife and family, again started for Wisconsin, and arrived in Waukesha June 5, 1872, and immediately took the position of editor of the Waukesha Plaindealer, making it one of the liveliest sheets published during the Greeley campaign; from the newspaper business he filled various positions which caused him to travel extensively through the Northern States and Canadas, and, for nearly three years, through Wisconsin, Illinois, Iowa and Missouri; during that time, eighteen months were spent on the plains of the Far West, among many of the wild and savage tribes of Indians. His correspondence to the Chicago Inter Ocean, Waukesha Democrat, Waukesha Freeman and Jamestown Journal, during his Western trip, was highly interesting and eagerly sought for, giving, as he did, a true picture of the country through which he traveled, the ways and customs of the Indians, their modes of living, worship, etc. Since his return from the Far West, he has been connected in various capacities with the Freeman and Democrat offices at Waukesha; he is now the regular correspondent for the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin and occasionally furnishes matter for the Milwaukee News. Mr. Curtis has a wife and two children—the eldest, a girl of 13, and a son 11 years of age, who were born in Jamestown N. Y.; he is an active member of several organizations, prominent among which are Mt. Moriah Lodge, 145, Jamestown, N. Y.; Western Sun Chapter 67, Jamestown N. Y.; Chautauqua Council No. 26, Jamestown N. Y., and St. John's Commandery No. 24, Olean, N. Y.; he is an ardent Democrat and a great admirer of Gov. Seymour, Gen. McClellan, and the present Democratic nominees for President, Gen. Hancock and Gov. English. He is not a member of any church, and has no particular religious belief, but is a free thinker, and believes in every man enjoying his own private political or religious opinions. He is a great reader, keeps generally posted, and is always ready to assist a person when in trouble, be it friend or foe.

LOUIS N. DESOTEL was born at Roxton Falls, Canada East, March 8, 1847; he moved to Massachusetts when he was 14 years of age, and engaged in the shoemaker's trade until 1872, when he located at Danbury, Conn.; he remained there two years, and removed to Scranton, Penn.; was there eight months; then came to Chicago, where he was in the employ of Doggett, Bassett & Hills, in the bottoming department of their boot and shoe manufactory, until he came to Waukesha, December 14, 1879; since that time he has been superintendent of the bottoming department of the boot and shoe manufactory of the Wisconsin Industrial School for Boys.

SAMUEL EALES, stonemason; born 1826, in the County of Northampton, England; came to the United States in 1844, and settled in Waukesha; learned the trade of mason in this country, and now works at the same. Was married, in 1856, to Eliza J. Megaw, of Ottawa, who died in 1858, leaving one child, Josephine. Their residence is "just over the line," in Pewaukee, on Vermont street; has 4 acres of land. He married his present wife in 1859; her maiden name was Elizabeth Bird; they have eight children, all living—Irving J., Ann E., William J., Mary, Samuel H., John B., Kate E. and Flora Belle. His two eldest children are employed in the insane asylum, at Madison. He was a teacher for many years in the public schools; he started in 1875, and is now developing the business of floriculture—having established the "Waukesha Greenhouse and Garden." This is the first of the kind in this vicinity. He is an active member of the Episcopal Church. The family are highly respected, and some have literary talent. His floral enterprise is appreciated by the citizens and general visitors.

COL. FRANCIS A. EASTMAN, journalist; was born at Littleton, N. H., April 3, 1834; his father, Stephen A., was a Congregational clergyman, who sent him to Haverhill and St. Johnsbury, in pursuit of an education; in 1850, he entered the office of the Caledonian, at St. Johnsbury, where an apprenticeship of two years was spent; at the expiration of this time, he conducted, at Littleton, a campaign paper in the interest of Franklin Pierce, called the Ammonoosuc Reporter. After the election in 1852, Mr. E. sold his printing office, and spent another year at the Newbury Seminary; then he filled an additional editorial position on the Patriot, printed at Concord, N. H.; thence he went to Montpelier, Vt., and became associated with a relative, Charles I. Eastman, the poet, in the publication of the Vermont Patriot, a famous paper in those days. In 1858, Mr. E. left Montpelier, and became associate editor of the Milwaukee Daily News, with Samuel L. Sharpstein, and the next year took the position of associate editor of the Chicago Times. In 1862, that paper, having been sold to W. F. Storey, its three editors, among them Col. E., left the concern, and started a new paper, called the Post, a war (Democratic) paper, which subsequently became the Republican, and is now the Inter-Ocean; he was active during the war in organizing the founders and supporters of the Government, in Chicago, making numerous speeches, and performing an almost unlimited amount of committee work. In 1863, Mr. E. was elected to the Legislature, serving two years, in which he was the appointed leader of the Republican minority; afterward he was elected State Senator, from the First District of Cook County, for four years, carrying a Democratic district, by a fair majority. While Senator, he was one of the Commissioners who built the Illinois Penitentiary, at Joliet. Upon Col. E.'s election to the Legislature, he severed his connection with the Post, and became a partner of S. L. Barrett & Co., wholesale grocers. Upon the nomination of Gen. Grant for the Presidency, he again took an active part in politics, canvassing a large portion of Illinois, and was, after the Cabinet was organized, made Postmaster of Chicago—the first appointee made by the new administration; he served four years as Postmaster, taking the concerns of the office through the "Great Fire" with such ability, energy and freedom from entanglements, as secured for him the formal compliments of the President and Post Office Department. At the end of Grant's first term, Mr. E. resigned, and, with his family, went to Europe, where he remained fourteen months. On returning, he spent considerable time in travel in this country, finally purchasing the Waukesha County Democrat, and settling at Waukesha in 1879. Col. Eastman was married, Sept. 3, 1861, to Miss Gertrude Barrett, of Chicago; they have one child—Barrett Eastman, born in January, 1869.

WARNER P. ELLIOT, marble-dealer, born in Addison Co., Vt., in 1814, began working in marble at the age of 16, has worked in all departments of the business, and is probably the oldest marble-worker in the United States, having been fifty-one years in continuous service. Was married, in 1832, to Miss Maria D. Carr, of Dorset, Bennington Co., Vt.; they have two children—Robert C., married and living in Chicago, and Jane M., married and living in Chicago; they have buried six children. Came to Wisconsin in 1855, and settled where he now lives, in Waukesha. He was, for a year, Deputy Grand Lecturer for Illinois, of the I. O. G. T., and has also held the same position in Wisconsin; has been Master of Lodge, No. 37, of A., F. & A. M., in Waukesha—he is a Royal Arch Mason. The family affiliate with the Methodist Church. Residence and shop are on Dodge St., in the suburbs of Waukesha. They are very pleasantly located—are not in need of this world's goods—are respected pioneers.

JAMES EMSLIE, grocery and crockery store on Madison St. Proprietor was born in 1844, in township of Pewaukee, and has since continuously resided in Waukesha Co. Educated in the public schools of this county; lived on farm till 1870, when he started his present business, and has carried it on in the same block to present date. Was married, in 1875, to Miss Anna Blair, a native of Waukesha; they have two children—Mabel and Brice. Both parents and both children were born in Waukesha Co. He is of Scotch parentage; family are Presbyterians. He is a Republican. Residence also on Madison St. Has a large trade from country, also a good village patronage.

ELIHU ENOS is a native of Johnstown, then Montgomery Co., now Fulton Co., N. Y.; he was born Jan. 29, 1824; graduated from the State Normal School, at Albany, in 1847; he came West with the intention of locating in Milwaukee, and arrived there in October, 1847, intending to establish a school there, bringing letters to many of the leading citizens of that city. Through the personal efforts, however, of Jacob L. Bean, and E. Root he was induced to go to Waukesha, which he did in the early part of November, 1842, and became connected with Prof. Sterling (now of the State University) in a copartnership, under the style of the "Waukesha Classical and Normal School," Prof. Sterling having charge of the Department of Language, and Mr. Enos had charge of the school, which he conducted for one year, when Mr. Enos was appointed Postmaster, in 1849, and served four years. In the fall of 1853, he exchanged his village property for a farm, on Sec. 27, in the town of Pewaukee; continued farming until July, 1873. During his residence in the town of Pewaukee, he was elected, in 1854, Town Superintendent of Schools, and held the same position until 1857. He was elected, in 1856, to represent his district in the Assembly. When the County Superintendent school system was inaugurated, in 1861, he was elected to fill that position, in the fall of 1861. In August, 1862, an out-door county war mass meeting was held in Waukesha, to secure volunteers. It was on Sunday, all the ministers of every denomination being present, as no services were held that day in any of the churches of the county. The result was, Mr. Enos enlisted and raised a company. The outgrowth of that mass meeting was the organization of the 28th W. V. I., which was soon filled. Mr. Enos was immediately elected Captain of Co. G, as soon as the company was organized. Mr. Enos resigned the position of School Superintendent, the resignation to take effect as soon as the fall examinations should be completed. The regiment was ordered to the field in December, 1862. Jan. 10, 1863, Capt. Enos left Milwaukee with the sick and other men left behind, when the regiment left camp. He was on detached duty as Quartermaster of brigade, afterward as Division Quartermaster, until he left the service, on account of disability caused by sickness. He came home in January, 1864, and resigned in the spring of the same year. Mr. Enos has been Chairman of the Town Board of Supervisors; and was appointed Postmaster in April, 1872; he was re-appointed, and has held the position ever since. He was Chairman County Republican Committee before he entered the service, and several years afterward. Is a member of the National Republican Committee, and acted as temporary chairman for a short time. He was married in Waukesha, June 11, 1851, to Frances Helen Blake, daughter of Commodore Chesley Blake, whose family came to Waukesha in an early day, he having died in 1849. No children living. Is a member of the A., F. & A. M. Has been Master of the lodge and First High Priest of the lodge for six years; also member of the I. O. O. F. Lodge.

COL. HERBERT M. ENOS, retired from the regular army; born in 1833 in Johnstown, Fulton Co., N. Y.; graduated from West Point U. S. Military Academy in 1856; was assigned to duty in New Mexico, and served there from 1857 to 1867; was on staff duty in various cities of the "States," until 1876, when, his health for years having been impaired, he was placed on the retired list, with the rank of Major. In 1878, he erected his elegant residence on "Oak Hill," overlooking the village of Waukesha. The Colonel was never married. His niece, Miss Amelia Enos, is the presiding genius of his home, which is also shared by Mrs. Enos, widow of his brother; and also by his sister, Mrs. John Hudson, whose deceased husband was a prominent pioneer of Waukesha. The Colonel has several relatives, and many friends, in this vicinity; and is a representative of the old-school gentleman—courteous, dignified and with a high share of honor.

CLAES A. ESTBERG was born in Carlskrona, Sweden, Feb. 23, 1825. Came to America in 1850, landed in New York July 11, of that year, worked at watchmaking and jewelry business in New York until the spring of 1851, then went to Augusta, Ga.; was there one year, then went to Savannah, Ga., where he remained until 1854; in May of that year he left there and came to Milwaukee, and worked there for A. B. Van Cott until he came to Waukesha in 1858. He has been engaged in the jewelry business ever since his location in Waukesha. Mr. Estberg has held the position of Village Trustee three or four years—is Clerk of the School District now, and has been for the last ten years, and has been, also, Junior Warden of the Episcopal Church for five years. He was married in Grafton, Ozaukee Co., Wis., Dec. 25, 1855, to Sophia Schletz; she was born in Bavaria; they have four sons—Adolph F., Emil W., C. Albert and Edward R.

EDWARD EVRAD, owner and landlord of the Cambrian House; born in Paris, France, in 1832; learned trade of engraver in France; came to United States in 1852, and located farm in Pewaukee; was married, 1857, to Miss Eulalie Duvigneaud, of Pewaukee; his eyes did not allow him to work at his trade; his main business has been farming; in 1879, he erected a beautiful, brick hotel, 42x78, and three stories high, on Madison St., West Side, Waukesha; also has a barn accommodating one hundred horses; buildings all new and in first-class condition; has also a cattle-yard which will accommodate fully one hundred cattle. His hotel was built to accommodate the farming community and stockmen—has no reference to the "Spring" and summer tourists. It is conveniently located and liberally patronized. He has five children—Clementine, Desiree, Tirzah, Alexander and Clotilda; all are at home, and his mother, aged 79, lives with him. In 1854, he made an overland trip to California; afterward worked three years in the South; and, in 1870, went again to California; afterward worked a claim in Utah three years. He is a Republican, and an A., F. & A. M.

EDWARD FLANNERY, proprietor of the Hygiea Spring; was born in 1834, in Sheffield, Yorkshire, England. His father was a mechanic. In 1843, the family emigrated to the Province of Quebec, where they remained six years. In 1849, they came West, and located in Princeton, Bureau Co., Ill. In 1851, the subject of this sketch began work for the Chicago & Rock Island Railway Company, as engineer of a construction train; and he continued in their service for four years. In 1855, he entered service as engineer on the old Milwaukee & La Crosse Railway, which was then only partially built, and he ran on that road till 1866. He was married, in 1857, to Miss Julia E. Bauer, of Milwaukee. Since 1866, he has been engineer on the Prairie Du Chien Division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway. Has had thirteen children, ten of whom are living—Nellie J., Maria H., George J., Agatha A., Herbert F., Julia E.—the twins, Huldah E. and Ida E., Edna F. and Isabella V. Their residence is near the spring, at the foot of Wisconsin avenue. In 1872, he purchased the inclosure, and began developing the spring, now well-known by the name of "Hygiea," the Goddess of Health. This was developed next after Bethesda, and was the second improved in the village. In 1879, he built a spacious structure of beautiful masonry, inclosing the spring, and grading the approach thereto. The masonry surrounding this spring is the most massive and costly of any of the Waukesha Springs. It is said to have the most copious flow of any spring in the village. Its properties are similar to other well-known springs. Mr. Flannery is expending his means and energies to please an appreciative public.

A. J. FRAME was born in Waukesha Feb. 19, 1844. He was connected with the Waukesha County Bank in 1862, first as office-boy, afterward as book-keeper, then elected May 22, 1865, Assistant Cashier of the Waukesha County National Bank, Cashier in 1866, and President July 20, 1880. He was married in Waukesha, Aug. 25, 1869, to Emma, only daughter of Silas Richardson, who is now a resident of Waukesha. She was born in Chester, Windsor Co., Vt.; they have four children: Walter R., William S., Harvey J. and Esther Mabel. Mr. Frame is a member of the School Board, and has been for several years; also of the A., F. and A. M.

HENRY M. FRAME was born in the town of Brookfield, Waukesha Co., Wis., June 22, 1842, and was married in Waukesha, March 3, 1870, to Adelia Pettibone; she was born in Farmersville, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y.; she died Oct. 16, 1878, leaving two children—Irring P. and Charles H. Mr. Frame is a member of the A., F. & A. M.; he is Cashier of the Waukesha County National Bank.

JOSEPH S. GALLOWAY, M. D., physician in charge of the Silurian Bathing Establishment, was born in 1821, in Ohio. His youth and early manhood was passed in Paris, Ky. His preparatory education was mainly in the private schools of Kentucky. He taught several years in the public schools of Ohio. His health was delicate from boyhood to mature manhood; asthma, dyspepsia, inflammation of the eyes and other afflictions, caused him to study his own condition, and after the improvement of his own health, he devoted his life to curing the ills to which flesh is heir. He graduated at the Eclectic Medical College, in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1852; he was then four years Lecturer on Chemistry in the American Medical College, an institution which afterward consolidated with his alma mater. During the war he was engaged in agriculture, and attended to chronic cases at his home. He was married in 1867 to Miss Maria S. Coombs, daughter of a prominent citizen of Clermont Co., Ohio. They have two children—Edna, born in 1869, and Joseph, born in 1873. The Doctor has had fifteen years of medical practice; most of the time since the war he has been connected with hygienic institutions; he was for some time the Associate Physician in charge of Our Home, a water-cure or hygienic institution, at Danville, N. Y. The writer of this sketch has examined written testimonials presented Dr. Galloway by patients, representing thirteen States; these all testify to his skill as a physician, his ability as a lecturer, and his character as a Christian gentleman. He is now located at Waukesha, Wis., and is Superintendent of the Bathing Department of the Silurian Springs—an institution which bids fair to become the leading hygienic agency in this "Saratoga of the West."

JOHN GIBBS, retired farmer, born in Hampden Co., Mass., in February, 1815; greater part of his life was spent in York State; he was married, in 1838, to Miss Amanda Nye, daughter of Sylvanus Nye, a prominent farmer of Tompkins Co., N. Y.; immediately after his marriage, he took charge of the "Corning House," at Corning, N. Y., and continued in charge for seventeen years. This hotel had eighty-seven sleeping-rooms, and was the leading hotel of that section of country. He came to Wisconsin in July, 1855, and settled in the village of Waukesha; they have two sons—the oldest, S. Nye Gibbs, a lawyer, was Assistant Adjutant General of Wisconsin during the war; he died in 1867; the other son, J. J. Gibbs, lives with his parents; is now local manager of the Clysmic Spring. Mr. G. held local offices both in his Eastern and in his Western homes; the family are Episcopalian; he is a reliable Republican; owns a residence on Maple Ave., which is conceded to be the pleasantest residence street in Waukesha; for exactly one-fourth of a century has he been a continuous resident of Waukesha, and is a well-known and respected citizen.

MICHAEL GLEASON, contractor and builder; born in Ireland in 1846; son of Edward F. and Ellen Ryan Gleason, prominent farmers in Rensselaer Co., N. Y.; learned the trade of masonry in York State, and soon became a general builder and contractor. Was engaged largely in church building in the East. Was married in fall of 1857 to Miss Ann Tighe, of York State; came the same season, and has been resident of Waukesha since that time. Has five children—Edward F., Mary J., Eliza A., John J. and Myra E. His oldest son, Edward F., graduates this season (1880) from the Wisconsin State University, ranking second in a large class; the oldest daughter, Mary J., graduates this year from Carroll College; his other children are at home. He has erected several public buildings, court houses, colleges, etc., and also nearly all the stone buildings in Waukesha. He is contractor for the masonry in the improvements, now being made at Bethesda and Silurian Springs. He is a conservative Republican, but shuns official position, as his business demands all his time and energies. He has considerable improved real estate in the village, beside his fine brick residence on Main St. He is respected as an able mechanic and an honorable citizen.

JOSEPH A. GLEISSNER, Sr. and Jr., proprietors of Mansion House Livery. The father was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1823; came to United States in 1844; farmed awhile, then kept hotel for twenty-four years in Monroe, Green Co., Wis.; he was married in 1844, at Hamburg, Germany, on the eve of his departure for America; has had eight children, of whom five are living—Anna M., Joseph A., Henry P., James B. and Emma; the three sons are married: the two daughters are at home; family are all Catholics. He owns an improved farm of 152 acres in Vernon Township, Waukesha Co. The son in partnership, Joseph A., came West, of course, with his parents in 1853; and nearly all the time he has been associated with his father in business; he married in 1872, and lives on Park Ave. Himself and father have one of the leading livery establishments in the city; it is on Grand Ave., near the Mansion House; they keep eighteen horses; their establishment is popular.

EDWARD C. GOVE was born in Whitefield, Coos Co., N. H., May 1, 1847; son of Elijah and Mary Gove; Edward came West in 1863; located in Chicago, and, until 1870 engaged in wholesale boot and shoe establishment, first with Gore, Wilson & Co., and afterwards with C. P. Gore & Co. In 1871, he went to Green Bay, and carried on the boot and shoe business there one year; then came to Waukesha, and engaged in farming, which he carried on until March, 1880, when he sold out, and engaged in the grocery business. Mr. Gove was married in Pewaukee, Sept. 24, 1870, to Hattie L. White; she was born in Waukesha; they have two children—Mary Josephine, born Dec. 24, 1873, and Edward William, born August 8, 1877. Mr. Gove is a member of the Royal Arcanum.

ELIJAH GOVE, retired farmer; born July 6, 1801, near Augusta, Me.; his father died when he was 3 months old, and he was raised by his grandfather in New Hampshire till he was 16 years of age; after that time he was in school or on farm till his marriage. On the 27th of November, 1828, in Ludlow, Windsor Co., Vt., he was married to Miss Emiline E. Wright; they have five children—Frances E., wife of E. S. Turner, the leading attorney of Port Washington; Londus E., married Millie Noble, of Oconomowoc, and lives in Storm Lake, Iowa; Richard L., a prominent merchant of Waukesha; Ione, wife of Col. Daniels, Colonel 1st W. V. I., now resident of Washington, D. C.; Jefferson M., married Nettie S. Mead, of Rochelle, Ill., now resident of Waukesha. Mr. Gove came to Waukesha in July, 1843, and bought 80 acres for $1,000 in gold, and this farm he carried on for a quarter century to a day, and then sold it for $9,000 to Col. Dunbar, who exchanged it for Bethesda Springs.

Since 1868, he has lived on Broadway in village of Waukesha; has other real estate in Waukesha; has held local offices in the East and in the West; has been in business; enjoys commercial life; also as early as 1850 had contracts for mail routes from Waukesha to Madison, and from Waukesha to McHenry; he has thirteen grandchildren and four great-grandchildren; he is a well-known and successful pioneer. On the 27th of November, 1878, was held their "golden wedding," which was a choice gathering, with rich gifts and a rare good time. They have a large circle of influential friends.

RICHARD L. GOVE came to Waukesha in June, 1843; he is a son of Elijah Gove, a farmer, and Emeline E. Wright, and was born at Ludlow, Vt., June 18, 1833. At the age of 10, he became a clerk in a store, attending school part of the time, and attended Prairieville Academy (now Carroll College) a few terms. In 1852, he spent a short time as clerk in Peoria, Ill., going thence to Detroit, Mich.; graduated from Gregory's Commercial College; and at the close of that year, went to Port Washington, Wis., and started the Ozaukee County Advertiser, a paper which is still published. This he edited and published about eight years, and at the same time acted as Postmaster, having received his appointment from President Pierce, before he was 21 years old. He was holding that office in July, 1861, when, with a lieutenant's commission, he recruited men for the First Wisconsin Cavalry—joined the regiment at Ripon—and was made Adjutant of the same. On leaving the service in 1864, Mr. Gove returned to his Wisconsin home, and there made a permanent settlement. Opening a boot and shoe and general furnishing store, he has since continued to conduct it with good success. He has also dealt considerably in real estate—put up the Gove Block, and some twenty dwelling-houses—during the last few years. Mr. Gove was elected President of the village in 1865, 1867 and 1877; Mr. Gove belongs to the fraternity of Odd Fellows. He was married, May 1, 1859, to Miss Jennie A. Stone, a niece of the late H. O. Stone, of Chicago. They have five children—Ione, born Oct. 17, 1860; Richard L., Dec. 22, 1865; Jennie May, April 26, 1868; Fra Belle, March 13, 1870, and Jay, March 23, 1877.

HON. MILTON S. GRISWOLD was born in Fulton Co., near Johnstown, N. Y., March 23, 1839; came to the town of Pewaukee in the spring of 1844, with his parents, Amos W. and Elizabeth Griswold, who settled on Sec. 12, in Pewaukee; both now residents in that town. Graduated from Wisconsin State University in 1863; read law in the city of Madison, with Gregory & Pinney; admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court, June, 1864; practiced law in Madison, in 1865 and 1866, in partnership with R. J. Chase; he resided at Menomonee Falls, for three years, prior to coming to Waukesha in December, 1870, where he was for three years Deputy Register of Deeds, when he was elected County Judge, which office he held four years. Mr. Griswold was married in the town of Lisbon, Waukesha Co., May 25, 1866, to Harriet Weldish; she died June 15, 1879, leaving one son—Everett E., born May 27, 1869. Judge G. is a member of the Congregational Church; also a member of A., F. & A. M. Lodge and Chapter.

ABRAM H. HADFIELD, general stone and lime business; born in village of Waukesha, on the 23d of January, 1849; has never resided outside of the county. Was married, Oct. 14, 1868, to Miss Annie E. Cook, of Waukesha. In the spring of 1871, he bought the interest of his father-in-law in the old Waukesha quarries, and also secured an interest in the Pewaukee quarry, the stone of which is of a better quality. In 1872, his father and brother, George A., secured a working interest in all these quarries, and also in the limekilns, farther up the river, and said partnership continues to date. This season (1880), they will ship 3,000 to 3,500 car loads of stone and lime, this firm being the largest shippers in Waukesha Co. Mr. Hadfield has three children—Charles C., Amy B. and Esther L. He is a Royal Arch Mason; family are Methodists. They have a beautiful stone residence on East avenue. He is a prominent and prosperous business man, of more than local reputation.

JOSEPH HADFIELD, general stone and lime business; born in 1816, in England. Was married in 1842 to Miss Harriet Jackson, of Derbyshire, England, who died in September, 1844, leaving one son, Joseph J., now of Waukesha. Came to United States in 1842, and settled in Waukesha, which has been his home continually to date. He married his present wife in 1845; her maiden name was Sarah Harrison, who was born in the same house as his first wife, although the two are not blood relatives. They had ten children—John G., dead; George A., Abram H., Sarah J., Isaac R., Albert W., Oscar Wesley, Edwin H., Charles H., Laura B. Six of the children are married. They have eleven grandchildren. Himself and two sons are in partnership in the Waukesha quarries and lime-kilns, situated one and a half miles north of the village of Waukesha. It is claimed that this firm do the largest business in their line of any in the State. They ship more than 3,000 car loads in 1880. He owns a fine residence, on the corner of East avenue and South St. Has other real estate in the village. He has had no time or desire to hold office. He is a Trustee of the M. E. Church, and the family are Methodists. They are prosperous and respected pioneers.

HON. T. W. HAIGHT. Among the first settlers of Charlestown, Mass., is recorded the name of Simon Hoyte, who, with eleven other persons, "first settled this place, and brought it into the denomination of An English Towne in Anno 1628." Where Simon came from is not stated, but genealogists have followed his subsequent movements with a good deal of interest, for the reason that investigation has shown him to have been the ancestor of the American family bearing the name of Haight or Hayt (with many other variations in spelling), as well as of Hoyte, or Hoyt, with whatever orthographical changes may have been adopted by its different members. It was evidently a matter of pure indifference to Simon himself, as well as to his immediate descendants, how the name was spelled, although it was probably pronounced as if written Hite. He died at Stamford, Conn., Sept. 1, 1657, leaving ten children, whose surnames are found recorded in about as many different ways, orthographically, as are used by their posterity to-day. The eldest of these children, Walter Hoyt, or Hayt, was the ancestor of Rev. Dr. Benjamin I. Haight, of New York, and (through their mother) of Gen. W. T. Sherman, and his brother, the Secretary of the Treasury. The fourth son, Moses, removed to Westchester Co., N. Y., and Caleb, the son of Moses, bought land in Dutchess Co., N. Y., in 1739, and lived there afterward, as did his children for several generations. Morris Haight, a great-grandson of Caleb, married, in 1821, Miss Louis Myrick, and, directly afterward, removed with his wife to Jefferson Co., N. Y.—then a new country—and went to farming, upon his own land, consisting of about 100 acres. On this farm, on the 14th of September, 1840, was born the youngest child of the family—Thomas Wilson Haight, the subject of the present sketch. As a boy, Thomas was chiefly remarkable for a love of literature; learning to read almost in his babyhood, he quickly became omnivorous in regard to books, devouring the contents of all that came in his way; he was especially a close student of the Bible, and, before reaching his 10th year, was more familiar with that volume than is the case with most adults. At 13, his teachers in the "district schools" confessed that his knowledge of the routine studies was fully equal to their own, and he was sent to a neighboring village, for two winters, to take a course in higher mathematics. At this juncture, the Rev. William Pare (now a Doctor of Divinity, and Rector of Trinity Church, Washington, D. C.), established a classical school at the little village of Pierrepont Manor, and the boy was allowed, to his great delight, to spend a portion of his 16th and 17th years in the study of the Latin, Greek, and French languages, under this admirable instructor. At 17, he taught one term in a public school, at the end of which Mr. Paret engaged him as assistant in his own school; at 19, he was prepared for admission to the junior class in college, in everything except funds, and, in order to try to obtain that requisite, in the summer of 1860, came to Waukesha Co., where he had been partially promised a position as teacher. On arriving, he found that he had been forestalled in the school, but concluded to wait for another opening, as his brother, Mr. M. P. Haight, of Summit, and his sister, Mrs. Walter Kerr, of Delafield, were both permanent residents of the county. In the mean time, he went on with his classical studies, and also undertook the German language, of which he obtained a fair mastery before winter. In the autumn, he was offered a school in the southern part of Delafield, of which he took charge, giving good satisfaction to the end of his term, in the spring of 1861; he now thought of matriculating at the University of Michigan, but, before his arrangements were completed, the first gun of the rebellion was fired, and he hurried home to New York, to bid his parents good-bye before shouldering his musket for the sake of his country. On arriving at his native place, he found a company of his fellow-townsmen just organized for the war, and immediately joined it as a private. Within a week of the time of greeting his friends, he had started for the rendezvous of volunteer companies, at Elmira, N. Y., where his company was recorded, a few days afterward, as Co. K, 24th N. Y. V. I., enlisted for two years' service. On the 17th of May, the regiment was mustered in by a United States officer, but it was not until the following month that it was ordered on to Washington, where it was a part of the garrison of the capital, until the night of the first battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861. As the advance of our retreating forces came into Washington on that night, the 24th was sent out past them to Bailey's Cross Roads, and held the outpost in that vicinity against the rebel skirmishers for three or four weeks, by which time both sides had settled into camp again. For the next six months, the monotony of camp life was only varied by drills, reviews, and occasional picket skirmishes, but in the spring of 1862, after some terribly exhausting marches, the 24th, then in the 1st Brigade, of the 1st Division, of the 1st Army Corps, under the immediate command of Gen. McDowell, found itself at Fredericksburg, while the main body of the army was under McClellan, on the Peninsula. From this time on, the regiment had a lively time. Arriving at Cedar Mountain, just after Banks' battle, then, in August, it marched back with the army of Northern Virginia to the old battle-field of Bull Run, participating in the fight along the Upper Rappahannock, and in the three days' fight about Groveton, generally known as "the second Bull Run," being at that place almost annihilated, for the time being. The 29th and 30th of August were particularly fatal to Company "K," which could muster but five men at parade, on August 31. All the rest, of nearly fifty, who went into the fight, were killed, wounded and taken prisoners. Up to August 30, Mr. Haight had never been absent from his company on a march or in a fight; but the charge on the railroad embankment, where Stonewall Jackson was fortified, that afternoon, had brought him into a place from which he could not reasonably hope to get back alive, and so he reluctantly concluded to stay. It was a desperate, foolhardy charge of our line against that embankment. The air was full of bullets and fragments of shell, and not fifty men of the regiment were able to reach the rebel works at all; and in ten minutes after reaching them not a dozen soldiers remained there unwounded. The second Union line of battle was delivering a galling fire upon the embankment, from the edge of the woods in the rear, which took effect, chiefly upon their own comrades of the first line, who were unable to find shelter anywhere. At this point, and at the earnest entreaty of his disabled comrades on the embankment, Mr. Haight ran over the work, and jumped down among the rebels, seeking permission to bring his comrades out of range of the Union bullets. Failing, for the moment, he finally obtained leave to take care of eleven men of his company, who were disabled by wounds, and stayed with them until the last man who survived was forwarded to Washington by ambulance a week later. He had himself been paroled a day or two after his capture, but declined to go away until he had provided for his companions. When he arrived within the Union lines, at the rear of a long train of ambulances, he had neither shirt nor hat, both those articles of clothing having been given to his wounded friends, and he was half famished from an almost total abstinence from food for seven days. He was not exchanged until three months later, and when he returned to the regiment, in December, he was immediately promoted from Corporal to Orderly Sergeant, and a recommendation forwarded, by his commanding officer, for a commission for him. A few weeks later, he was commissioned as Second Lieutenant of his company, and received another commission, as First Lieutenant, just before the muster-out of the regiment at the end of their two years' term of service; in May following, Lieut. Haight was with his company in the fighting at the ford below Fredericksburg and at the battle of Chancellorsville, but none of the regiment suffered much at either of these engagements. One of his superior officers in the regiment paid the young soldier the compliment of saying that he was the only man that he ever saw in a battle who seemed really to enjoy it; on returning home friend Haight was offered a captaincy in a cavalry regiment, then being raised, and was tempted to go back; but he had already lost both his brothers in the army—one in the 94th N. Y. V. I., and the other in the 28th Wis. V. I.—and his parents were in feeble health, and protested against his venturing again; he therefore reluctantly gave up the idea of military life, and settled down to his studies for the remainder of the season, teaching a village school near home during the winter of 1863-64, and returning to Waukesha Co. the following spring. For a year and a half immediately following, he was Principal of the Mukwonago public school, and, in 1865, entered the office of Gen. James H. Paine & Son, in Milwaukee, as a law student. With this firm he prosecuted his studies, until the junior member, Hon. Byron Paine, was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, the father soon after retiring from business, on account of the infirmities of age. While in the law office, Mr. Haight amused himself occasionally with newspaper work, both prose and poetry, which attracted considerable attention from critical readers, but brought him in very little money. To replenish his purse, he taught commercial law and arithmetic in the Spencerian Business College, at Milwaukee, for some months, and afterward, in the winter of 1867, he taught the Delafield village school; at the close of this school term he received word from Chicago, that the Post of that city wanted the services of an extra man for a few weeks, and that he might try his hand at the work, if he wished; before the close of his temporary engagement with the Post, he was offered the position of city editor of the Milwaukee Sentinel, and served in that capacity for several months, but he differed with the proprietors, all along, as to the manner of conducting that department of the paper, and finally retired from it in the fall of 1868, when he was again offered, and accepted, the management of the Mukwonago public school, and continued there as Principal until the spring of 1870, when he bought a half-interest in the Waukesha Freeman and a little later was united in marriage to Miss Annie, daughter of Dr. H. A. Youmans, of Mukwonago, a young lady who had been his pupil during all the time spent by him as Principal of the public school at that place. An opportunity soon occurring to purchase the remaining half-interest in the Freeman, Mr. Haight prevailed upon his brother-in-law, the present proprietor of the paper—then a young man of less than 20—to enter the office as a partner. The Freeman was immediately made the advocate of the business interests of Waukesha, and especially of the merits of the Bethesda Spring, which the new editor was quick to recognize as the fulcrum, by means of which the village was to be lifted out of the torpid state in which it was then buried; as correspondent of several journals abroad at the same time, and especially of the Chicago Times, he labored, in and out of season, to bring Waukesha to the notice of seekers after health and pleasure, and its rapid rise in public estimation, as a summer resort, was probably owing as much to his efforts, as to those of any other one man, except Col. Richard Dunbar; in the fall of

Wm M. Frazer

MUKWANAGO.

1874, Mr. Haight sold his half-interest in the Freeman to his brother-in-law, Mr. H. M. Youmans, although he has all along continued his connection with the paper, as a writer of leading articles. In the winter of 1875-76 he was the Madison correspondent of the Milwaukee Sentinel, and for two years from April, 1876, was Secretary of the State Board of Charities and Reforms, in which capacity he visits all the penal and eleemosynary institutions in the State, many of them several times, and prepared the elaborate volumes of reports for the Board for 1876 and 1877. In 1878, he returned to Waukesha, to the practice of the law in which he has since been engaged. His copartnership with Mr. F. W. Monteith began in June of 1879, the law firm of Monteith & Haight is now considered one of the ablest and most reliable in this part of the State. In the Order of Odd Fellows, Mr. Haight is an earnest and effective worker, and he now holds the position of Grand Patriarch of the Right Worthy Grand Encampment of Wisconsin—the highest position in the State, of the highest branch of Odd Fellowship. His residence is a charming place, on the gently sloping hillside across the river from the Bethesda, and overlooking the stream and the beautiful grounds belonging to the spring. Here his three children are growing up and rejoicing the hearts of their parents by their intelligence and health, and here, surrounded by trees and flowers, by music and the books that he is still not ashamed to love, he finds the happiness and content which are often sought for in vain by far wealthier men. He is now serving the second year as Chairman of the County Republican Committee, and during this time the county has changed from Democratic to Republican, as the votes will show.

GEORGE HARDING came to Waukesha in May, 1859; lived here two years, and was journeyman tinner for Mr. Burroughs for that time; then went to Chippewa Falls, Wis., and engaged in the hardware and milling business for himself; in 1868, he purchased the farm where he now resides; he carried on his business at Chippewa Falls, however, until 1877, spending his time six months of the year in Waukesha, and the balance at Chippewa Falls, his family most of the time being on the farm; since 1877, Mr. Harding and family have resided in Waukesha permanently; he is still owner of pine lands in Northern Wisconsin, principally in the Chippewa Valley region. Mr. Harding was born in Aurora, Erie Co., N. Y., March 20, 1840; his parents removed to Painesville, Ohio, when he was about 11 years of age, and came from there to Waukesha. He was married in Waukesha, July 14, 1863; to Sarah Hall Barstow, daughter of Samuel H. and Susan R. (Babcock) Barstow; she was born in Waukesha, Wis., February 18, 1841; they have four children—Samuel Barstow, Frank Waller, Josephine Baldwin and George Winans, all of whom were born in Waukesha. While at Chippewa Falls Mr. Harding was, for eight years, Chairman of the County Board of Commissioners.

CLARK S. HARTWELL, contractor and builder; born July, 1829, in Ticonderoga, Essex Co., N. Y. His early life was spent in Washington Co.; he learned his trade of his father, Moses S., in York State. They came West together, in 1851, and were in partnership nearly twenty-five years in Waukesha. They are considered to be the leading contractors and builders in Waukesha Co. The father retired from active labors in 1875; and the subject of this sketch is now sole manager of the business. He was married, in 1852, to Miss Isabel K. Dobbin, who died in 1855, without issue. He has built several churches and hotels, and many of the finest residences in the village of Waukesha. He owns a steam-mill, for doing all kinds of woodwork—resawing, scroll-sawing, turning, etc. He was two years Deputy Sheriff of this county. He married his present wife in May, 1860—her maiden name was Mary J. Calhoun—widow of O. F. Baker, merchant, of Milwaukee. They have had two children—one died in childhood—his only son, Willard S., was born in 1869. His residence and spacious grounds are on the corner of High street and College avenue. He is a temperance man and a reliable Republican. The family are Presbyterians. For twenty-five years he was leader, and the family were the mainstay, of the Presbyterian Church Choir. A visitor, and a former member of that church, upon his return, finding this faithful family still pursuing their unrequited labors of love, despite storm, weariness and discouragement, thus descourses in the local newspaper: "We always expected them. We knew they would be there. The length of the way was nothing. Dampness, clouds, rain, snow, hail, thunder, lightning and pitch-darkness were nothing. There they were—the father, a man whose merit was only equaled by his modesty, and if ever this trite remark was true, it was so in his case—a man who has the habit of hiding his talents under a bushel; but who is known, by his associates, to excel equally as a mechanic, a musician and most of all as a warm true-hearted friend. The mother, a whole host in herself, with a stock of goaheadactiveness to supply a half-dozen ordinary women. The families of both generations were singers. Their memory is enshrined in many hearts. Nor soon will be forgotten the singers or their songs." The article closed with a defense of the too-often-much-abused choirs in our churches, and an exhortation to appreciative gratitude for these "ministers in the song-service."

MOSES S. HARTWELL, retired, born Aug. 24, 1806, in Hillsboro, N. H.; by the time he was of age, he had learned the trade of carpenter and joiner; in 1827, he removed to Essex Co., N. Y.; he was married in September, 1828, to Miss Mary Orcut, who died in March, 1836, leaving five children — Clark S., Adelbert, Henry M., Electa B. and George; in 1830, he removed to Washington Co., N. Y., which was his home for twenty-one years; in both counties he carried on the business of carpenter and joiner; married his present wife in February, 1838; her maiden name was Harriet Stout, born in Washington Co. Nov. 28, 1812; in 1851, he came West, and, on the night of April 10, 1851, he stopped on the land where he now lives, which is in a thickly settled portion of the village of Waukesha; he has a comfortable home on an acre of charmingly ornamented and beautifully situated land; he owns other real estate in the village; for thirty-five years himself and wife have been members of the Presbyterian Church, and for the last quarter of a century himself and son have been the leading contractors and builders in Waukesha Co.; in cheerful competency, himself and his worthy wife are now nearing the land "whence no traveler returneth."

WILLIAM HASLAGE, firm of Anderson & Haslage, proprietors of the Silurian Springs, was born in Germany in 1827; when but a lad, he sought the broader, brighter business fields of the Western World; 1845 found him at the age of 18 in Pittsburgh, Penn., engaged as a groceryman's clerk, with the princely (?) income of $3 per month and board. Several seasons of faithful labor followed, quite profitable to his employer, but yielding little improvement to his own condition. About 1850, he saw a desirable opening to start a grocery store, but his entire capital of aggregated savings amounted to just $29. His industry, courtesy and integrity had secured him friends and credit. Business prospered, and his energy and frugality enabled him soon to seek a wider field, and he established himself at No. 15 Diamond, where he carried on business eleven years. Careful forethought and rare business qualifications have enabled him to pursue an uninterrupted course of prosperity, notwithstanding panics, fires and the varying tides of commercial life. Since April, 1871, he has occupied his own palatial store, No. 18 Diamond Square, Pittsburgh, Penn. It is the largest grocery store in the city, and does an immense retail trade, besides an increasing wholesale business. For elegance and convenience, the "Palace Store" is described as unsurpassed in the West. As a specimen of the sales, their tea trade alone exceeds fifty thousand pounds, mainly at retail. The pay-roll of employes of this store exceeds $1,000 per month. The trade of the firm of William Haslage & Co. includes every department of the grocery business. His home is on Spring Hill, Allegheny, where he has a graperly of 12,000 vines. His business qualifications have made him a valued director in several corporations; his protracted devotion to business affected his health as early as 1870. Serious disease, mainly diabetes, totally unfitted him for business, and for nearly three years his sufferings were so intense that death would have been welcome relief; eminent physicians declared the uselessness of ordinary medicines, and advised the use of mineral waters. His attention was called to a widely advertised spring in Waukesha, and as a forlorn hope he was induced to test its efficacy. Not expecting to return alive, he made his will before leaving Pittsburgh; on arriving at Waukesha, June, 1879, he drank the water of the spring referred to for two weeks without receiving any marked benefit. Then, on advice of a resident physician, he began drinking the water of the Silurian Spring, and was immediately blessed with a change for the better. The quenchless thirst of the previous years speedily vanished, and in two months there was a complete restoration to a healthy condition. The relief being so immediate, and the cure so perfect and permanent, he determined to own the curative spring. Having secured it by a large investment, and having expended many thousands of dollars in establishing a hygienic institution, and in rendering the spacious grounds more attractive, he nevertheless invites all humanity to come and partake of the water of Silurian, without limitation, and "without money and without price," at the spring. With the co-operation of his partner, Mr. Anderson, he intends to make its merits known throughout the land. His family are at Waukesha. The sales of Silurian water are rapidly increasing, and already extend throughout both hemispheres.

W. S. HAWKINS was born in the town of Fairfax, Franklin Co. (now Lamoille Co.), Vt., Jan. 5, 1808; lived in Vermont, and a little while in Plattsburg, N. Y. (perhaps two or three years in the latter place before he was 8 years of age); balance of the time in Vermont, until he came to Wisconsin, July 15, 1846. Mr. Hawkins came to Waukesha on that day with his family; he commenced the practice of law immediately, and has continued practice ever since; he has been Clerk of the Board of Supervisors three years, County Treasurer afterward for two years, and Justice of the Peace several terms. Mr. Hawkins was married in the town of Richmond, Chittenden Co., Vt., Jan. 5, 1830, to Mary M. Jackson. She was born in the town of Richmond Dec. 20, 1797. They have had two children—Mary Elizabeth, married B. L. Lyman, and died in Montana; Juliette Amelia, died in Richmond, Vt., before Mr. H. came West—her age was 5 years. Mr. Hawkins is a member of the A. F. & A. M.; had the honor of starting the lodge and chapter; Secretary of Blue Lodge a great many years; he is now Chapter Secretary, and has been since its organization.

HON. CHARLES S. HAWLEY was born in Amherst, Mass., Dec. 25, 1813. Moved to the town of Floyd, Oneida Co., N. Y.; lived there until 1835, then moved to the town of Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y. Remained there and engaged in the mercantile business until the spring of 1845, when he came to Waukesha and engaged in farming and building for about three years then engaged in mercantile business, which he continued most of the time until July, 1865, when he finally sold out. After closing up his mercantile affairs two or three years, he was elected Justice of the Peace, and has been re-elected and served every year since; has been Assessor of the village and town since the spring of 1872; Town Clerk one term, as early as 1848-49. At the time of the organization of the village, he was one of the Trustees and was afterward President; he was also Street Commissioner. In 1856-57-58, he was a member of the General Assembly of the State. In 1848, he was candidate for Sheriff, but was defeated. In 1851, he was again candidate and defeated, but ran both times far ahead of his ticket. Mr. Hawley was married in the town of Rome, N. Y., in February, 1832, to Chloe Hibbard. She was born in Rome; died in Waukesha Oct. 6, 1875, leaving two children—Susan E., now Mrs. J. B. Taft, of Racine, Wis.; Arba B., now a resident of the town of Bloomer, Chippewa Co., Wis. They lost one son, who died in Waukesha in April, 1864. Mr. Hawley was married the second time in Waukesha, Oct. 29, 1877, to Mrs. Kate M. Parcell, who was born near Newark, N. J. Mr. Hawley is a member of the Congregational Church, and one of the charter members of the Sons of Temperance.

THOMAS HAYNES was born in Stourbridge, Worcestershire, England, Nov. 9, 1817; came to Milwaukee from England, May 18, 1863; remained there one year, and removed to Waukesha, dealing in general farm produce, feed etc., since coming here. He was married in England, May 3, 1848, to Hannah Kendrick Lester. Three children by this marriage—Thomas Lester, born March 29, 1849; William Henry, born Dec. 2, 1851, Hannah Lester, born Jan. 17, 1855; all born in England. Mr. Haynes present wife was Henrietta Gordon Harper—married at Dudley, Staffordshire, England, June 18, 1862. They have six children, all of whom were born in America, and as follows—Frederick Robert, Sept. 21, 1864; Alexander Gordon, March 29, 1866; Henrietta, Sept. 16, 1867; Charles Lester, Sept. 14, 1868; Jennie Meredith, Sept. 4, 1870, and George Albert, Nov. 21, 1877. Mr. Haynes has been a member of the Waukesha Village Board of Trustees.

DR. A. HAWLEY HEATH, of New York City, Medical Director of the Asahel Mineral Spring of Waukesha (see description of the spring in the general history of Waukesha). Dr. Heath is a native of Herkimer Co., N. Y., and is a descendant of eminent Revolutionary patriots. His grandmother was first cousin of the brave old Gen. Herkimer, who lost his life at the battle of Oriskany. His mother is own cousin of ex-United States Treasurer Spinner. His first cousin, the late Maj. Gen. Herman H. Heath, was Buchanan Postmaster at Dubuque, Iowa, when the South seceded, and he immediately raised a company of cavalry, and entered the Union army. He was wounded in a number of battles, and steadily promoted to be Major General of volunteers. One of his sons was killed by his side in battle. His brother, Dr. Allen S. Heath, joined Col. Coreoran's regiment as Surgeon, and was subsequently made Gen. King's Brigade Surgeon. Dr. A. Hawley Heath has made chronic diseases his specialty in New York City since 1849, and is the only physician in that city who has thoroughly established the Waukesha Spring water in their practice as a special branch. He purchased and introduced the Asahel Mineral Spring, as such, in April, 1875, and has a large number of letters of most wonderful cures.

A. D. HENDRICKSON was born near Rome, N. Y., Nov. 24, 1817. When not more than 2 years of age, his parents removed to Oswego Co., town of Richland, near Pulaski; lived there until his mother's death, December, 1826; soon after she died, he went to live with a farmer in Jefferson Co., N. Y.; remained there two years; then returned to the town of Richland and worked for a brother-in-law until he was 21 years of age; he then entered Rensselaer Academy, at Mexicoville, Oswego Co., N. Y.; he was there nearly four years, and then went to Fulton, Oswego Co., as teacher, in what is now known as Falley Seminary; was two years there, and then became Principal of Red Creek Union Academy, at Red Creek, Cayuga Co., N. Y.; he was there three years in that position, and was for six years Principal of the public schools in Weedsport, N. Y.; he then spent two years in a chemical laboratory in New York City; one and a half years at Harlem, N. Y., as teacher in No. 1 of the public schools of that place. After another year, spent as Principal of the Weedsport school, he came West to Whitewater, Walworth Co., Wis., arriving in April, 1855; he engaged in farming there for four years, superintended his farm, and taught in the Whitewater public schools, as Principal, three years of this time. Mr. Hendrickson then moved to Eagle, this county, and taught the Eagle Summit school two and a half years; he was then appointed County Superintendent of Schools; he filled the unexpired term of Capt. Enos, and was re-elected, and served in all over three years; he resigned that position in October, 1865, to accept the position of Superintendent of the Reform School, at Waukesha; he continued in that capacity for eleven years and three months, his wife was matron of the institution for the same period, and his two daughters taught in the school connected with the institution. Mr. Hendrickson resided in Janesville, Wis., from April, 1877, to October, 1879; and at that time he took charge of the Industrial School at Waukesha, until the recovery of Mr. Steep, a few months later; since which time he has been Assistant Superintendent of the institution. Mr. Hendrickson's father and mother were William and Keziah Drake Hendrickson. He was married in Mexicoville, Oswego, N. Y., Nov. 30, 1841, to Olive Densmore; she was born in Burlington, Otsego Co., N. Y.; she died Aug. 8, 1878, leaving three children—Clesson A., a resident of Harvard, Clay Co., Neb.; M. Louisa, now Mrs. Herbert Lawrence, of Janesville, and Jennie K. Clesson. A. Hendrickson served three years in Co. C, 24th W. V. I., and participated in all the battles his regiment was engaged in. Mr. Hendrickson, Sr., has been a member of the M. E. Church since he was 14 years of age. During the three years that he was teaching, and conducting his farm at Whitewater, he filled the pulpit of the M. E. Church of that place; and while there received deacon's orders, which he still holds. He also conducted the religious services of the Sabbath, in the reform school, for several years. Before entering Falley Seminary, at Fulton, N. Y., he, and his wife, started a select school, and afterward, in about six months, he consolidated his school with the young ladies' seminary, which resulted in the formation and organization of Falley Seminary, in about one year, Mr. Hendrickson, being practically the founder of that institution. Mr. H. represented Wisconsin as delegate to the Prison and Reform Congress, which met at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1870; he also represented Wisconsin in the International Penitentiary Congress, held in the city of London, England, July 3, 1872.

HEPP & BREHM, general store on Broadway. The senior partner, William Hepp, was born Jan. 29, 1848, in New Berlin, Waukesha Co., Wis.; early life was on farm; learned mercantile business in Milwaukee; was married, Dec. 15, 1875, to Miss Myrta Moore, daughter of Josiah Moore, a prominent farmer in the township of Waukesha; has one child, William Charles, born in September, 1876; residence is on East St.; he belongs to no society. Mr. Brehm—the junior partner, is of German parentage—is unmarried; was several years book-keeper for a large firm in Milwaukee; he is a Catholic. The firm established their present business in February, 1880, and are popular and prosperous.

MRS. KATE B. HILL, proprietor of Clysmyc Spring; native of Natchez, Miss., is of Italian parentage, both parents having been born in Genoa, Italy; her brother Paul A. Botto, recently deceased, was for fifteen years editor and proprietor of the Natchez Democrat and Courier; although born in classic Italy, he was a representative son of the Southland, genial, chivalric, high-toned, talented, unselfish and of heroic bravery. The only other member of the family is a brother, Lewis Botto, who is a merchant in Natchez. The father, also, at his death, was a leading merchant of that city. She was married in September, 1871, to John Hill, a native of Alsace, Germany; he fell a victim to yellow fever during the next month, October, 1871. Through the influence of a friend, who was coming to Waukesha, from Natchez, to spend the summer of 1877, she was induced to visit this village; she remained two seasons, her health was improved and she purchased the Clysmyc Spring in January, 1879. The waters of the spring are popular throughout the South; she spends the winter in the South, and the summer at the Spring.

WILLIAM C. HOLBROOK was born in Surry, Cheshire Co., N. H., Aug 13, 1851; son of Elijah and Elizabeth Holbrook. His mother died when William was about six years old; he came with his father to Prairie du Chien in the fall of 1865; his father was proprietor of the Railroad House, now called the Williams House. They went from there to Milwaukee, and his father was proprietor of the "Juneau House" there for one year; then went to Waukesha in 1868, and took charge of the Exchange Hotel, most of the time conducted by his father, for eight years. William C. became proprietor in May, 1879. He was Deputy Sheriff for several months, and Village Marshal one year. Mr. Holbrook was married at Pewaukee, April 24, 1879, to Ella E. Hall, daughter of William Hall, now a resident of Pewaukee.

WILLIAM D. HOLBROOK, retired; born July, 1812, in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y.; came to Green Bay, Wis., in 1837; was in Milwaukee July 4, 1839, at a celebration, and the breaking of ground for Rock River Canal; the spade broke and prostrated the hero of the day; the canal project proved a failure. He farmed five years, and manufactured grain cradles some years, and in 1851 settled in Waukesha, where, for twenty-five years, he practiced dentistry; he studied with his brother in York State. The Doctor was married in 1840 to Miss Lydia Bangs, of Illinois; they have no issue. He was the second dentist in the county, and this village increased tenfold during his practice. He retired in 1879, because of impaired eyesight, although he was enjoying liberal patronage. He patented, in 1879, a new method of retaining artificial lower dentures. This is new to the profession, and is being rapidly introduced, finding approval even in Europe. He owns some real estate in the village, besides his residence on South St., opposite the M. E. Church. Has declined all office; is a Conservative Independent, with Republican proclivities. Ever since Spiritualism became prominent in the West, he has been a firm believer and pronounced advocate of its doctrines.

CHARLES HORNING, contractor and builder; born in 1824, in Pennsylvania; learned his trade before he was of age, and has carried on the business ever since, except the five years that he was in the lumber business at Whitewater; came to Wisconsin in 1847. He was married, in 1849, to Miss Elizabeth Wambold, of Milwaukee Co. Was in business in Milwaukee about sixteen years; removed to Waukesha in 1875, and erected his beautiful residence on High St., just east of the Silurian Spring. Has two children—Adeline C. and David W.; both are unmarried. David is a practicing physician at Brothertown, Calumet Co., near Fond du Lac. The family are Congregationalists. He is a good mechanic, and a quiet, respected citizen.

CAPT. DANIEL HOWELL, retired; born in October, 1808, in Delaware Co., N. Y.; until 1835, was on farm. Married, in 1838, to Miss Elizabeth Jones, formerly of New York State; they have had no issue. In 1832, he founded a town and established a post office in Chautauqua Co., N. Y.; the post office was known as the "Salem X Roads." His commission was from William T. Barry. In 1835, he moved to White Pigeon, Mich., and kept hotel till 1839, then moved to Illinois, and kept hotel till 1849 in Belvidere and Rockford; then was proprietor for five years of the Jefferson House at the county seat of Jefferson Co., Wis.; afterward five years in business at Milwaukee, and, in 1859, removed to Grand Rapids, Wis., and was engaged in the mercantile business when the rebellion broke out in 1861. The Governor sent him a commission to raise a company, which he secured in that vicinity, and left Grand Rapids with his company on the 29th of October, 1861. He left Camp Randall for service on the 11th of January, 1862, in command of Co. G, known as the "Evergreens, in 12th W. V. I. He served till April, 1863, when, on account of sickness, he resigned. Since 1866, he has resided at Waukesha; was in the Exchange Hotel awhile with his brother-in-law, F. M. Putney, the owner of the hotel; since then he has done some work as a commission man, and as a dealer in agricultural implements. In Michigan, he was Chairman of the Board of Supervisors; was County Treasurer one term, and afterward—1854 and 1855—in the State Senate. He has made and lost several fortunes; he has been a Democrat all his life; he was one of ex-Gov. Barstow's supporters, who were styled, "The Forty Thieves." For several years, he has not taken an active part in politics. He is a genial and respected gentleman. Residence is on East avenue.

JOHN HOWITT, County Superintendent of Schools, was born in the town of Avon, N. Y., April 30, 1841; lived there until he came to Wisconsin in 1859; he located on Section 28, in the town of Lisbon; engaged in farming and teaching since that time; was elected School Superintendent in 1875; re-elected in 1877 and 1879. Mr. Howitt has been identified with the school interests ever since he came here.

H. S. HUGHES, ticket and freight agent, C., M. & St. P. R. R.; born in Oneida Co., N. Y., in March, 1842; he has been agent about ten years; is capable and popular; the family are highly respected; he is Master of a Masonic Lodge.

HAZEN H. HUNKINS, deceased, was born in Danville, Vt., May 19, 1820; came West 1839, and settled in New Berlin, Waukesha Co. He was married Nov. 26, 1847, to Miss Aurelia S. Seagel, formerly of Waterbury, Vt. His early life was passed on a farm; he was a few years proprietor of a marble establishment; in 1867, he moved into the village of Waukesha, and built a large and attractive home, on corner of Grand avenue and Carroll St. He held various local offices; in 1864, he was elected County Treasurer; he was Chief Engineer Fire Department, and was an appreciated officer; at the time of his death, he was Under Sheriff of the county. He died on the 29th of March, 1879, leaving three children—M. Emma, who married William S. Parsons, and lives in New Berlin; Carrie A., at home; Wilbur F., married A. D. Jackman, and lives in Waukesha. He was a Master Mason, and exemplified the virtues of the order in his daily life; he was buried with Masonic honors. Since 1857, he had been a consistent member of the M. E. Church. He was quiet, unassuming and highly respected; he was a wise counselor, reliable citizen, and ably acted his part in all the varied relations of life. Mrs. Hunkins still lives in the beautiful homestead, and is well known as a genial and competent lady; her home is the favorite resort of many summer "spring visitors." It is a "tourists' home," and is acknowledged as the leading establishment of the kind in Waukesha.

ROBERT H. HUNKINS, cooper; was born in Danville, Vt., in 1830; came to Wisconsin in 1840, and settled at New Berlin, where he carried on farming till 1866, when he moved into the village of Waukesha and engaged in building railroad bridges. Was married in 1852 to Miss Frances Scagel, of Vermont; they have one daughter—Eva, now at home. For the last six years, he has employed six or eight men in the shop, manufacturing mainly the packages used by the Bethesda Spring. His shop is on Park St., and his residence on East Ave. He is a member of the fire department. Is a Republican.

JOHN F. ICKE, dealer in leather and findings; born in Germany, January, 1838; came to United States in 1852, and settled first in Milwaukee; and then, in 1856, came to the county of Waukesha, and since 1865, has lived in the village of Waukesha. Has been clerk, shoemaker and merchant; owns his store on Main St.; it is the only establishment of the kind in the county. He was married in 1863 to Miss Fredericka Prior, of Muskego; has five children, three sons and two daughters, all at home. Residence is on Main St. Is member of Board of Trustees of the M. E. Church in Waukesha. Takes but little interest in politics; is a reliable citizen.

SAMUEL D. JAMES was born near Cardigan, in South Wales, Nov. 22, 1823; came to New York State in 1847; located in Utica, remained there three years, and then moved to Sandusky, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y.; was selling goods there until he came to Waukesha, Wis., Sept. 30, 1864; he engaged in mercantile business here in 1865—firm of Jameson & James; they continued together until 1871, when Mr. Jameson retired from business. Mr. James has carried on the business alone since that time—first general dry goods and groceries, now dry goods and clothing exclusively—and has engaged in no other business except merchandising during his residence in Waukesha. Mr. James was married in Sandusky, N. Y., to Elizabeth Williams; she was born in Pembrokehire, Wales; they have three children—David C., Arthur W. and Annie.

REUBEN M. JAMESON was born in Hamburg, Erie Co., N. Y., Sept. 3, 1816; he lived there until he was 18 years of age, then went to Buffalo as clerk in a wholesale grocery house; he remained six years with one firm, and then engaged in general merchandising, with a man by the name of Swift, at Arcade, N. Y. In two years, Mr. Jameson moved to Sandusky, N. Y., where he engaged in business alone, seven and a half years; then for five years he was not in active business, then for two and a half years he engaged in mercantile business, in partnership with S. D. James, at Sandusky. In May, 1865, he came to Waukesha, and in September commenced business again with S. D. James, under the firm name of "Jameson & James." They continued together until March, 1872. Mr. Jameson has not been in active business since that time, being engaged in looking after his investments principally. Mr. Jameson has been Village President one term, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors two years, Village Trustee two years. Mr. Jameson is also agent of the Etna Fire Insurance Co., and is one of the Executive Committee of the Waukesha Board of Underwriters. He was married in Caneadea, Allegany Co., N. Y., Aug. 17, 1857, to Emily Wilson; she was born at Caneadea, Allegany Co., N. Y., Jan. 22, 1834; they have two daughters—Grace Estelle, now Mrs. Charles A. Williams of Milwaukee, and Eva May. Mr. Jameson's father and mother were Thomas and Rebecca Taggart Jameson. His father was born in Antrim, N. H., May 13, 1778; died at Boston, Erie Co., N. Y., March 29, 1859; mother was born in Vermont, Jan. 21, 1774; she died at Hamburg, Erie Co., N. Y., Jan. 3, 1848.

J. ERNEST JEWETT, was born in the town of Menomonee, Waukesha Co., Aug. 17, 1854; he came to Waukesha in 1858; he is the son of John E. and Mary C. Jewett; they came to Wisconsin and located in Waukesha (probably in 1848). He was educated in the Union School and Carroll College. Mr. Jewett engaged in the photograph business three years; one year afterward, he was connected with the nursery business, and is now employed in the freight and shipping department of the Wisconsin Industrial School for Boys.

M. M. KELLIHER was born in County of Cork, Ireland, Sept. 6, 1837; came to America in 1854; he lived in Canada about six months, then located in New Hampshire and resided there until he removed to Rhode Island about two years after the close of the war; he was six months in Providence, R. I.; he then went to Baraboo, Sauk Co., remained there two years, then went to Newark, Ohio, for one year, when he removed to Peru, Ind.; there he remained but a year. He commenced working in the woolen mills at Newport, N. H., when he was 17 years of age, and continued in that business until 1875; then he started the business of a dealer in clothing, hats, caps, gents' furnishing goods, etc. Mr. Kelliher served in the army over three years during the late rebellion; enlisted in Co. B, 2d N. H. V. I. May 18, 1861; he was wounded at first Bull Run and discharged on that account. Soon afterward, he raised Co. C, 7th N. H. V. I.; the winter following he was commissioned First Lieutenant and served until he resigned. He has been School District Clerk two years since he came to Waukesha in March, 1871; was married at Concord, N. H., May 2, 1863, to Catharine Cronin; she was born in County Cork, Ireland. They have four children living—Annie E., Kate, Mary and Mortimer M., having lost one son, Robert E., who died in June, 1879, aged 15 years. Mr. Kelliher and family are members of St. Joseph's Catholic Church.

DR. A. KENDRICKS, located in the town of Waukesha in the spring of 1853, settled on what is now known as the Barney farm or Wm. White place, was there about five or six years, when he moved to the village; he has engaged in the practice of medicine ever since his residence in Waukesha; he was born in Poultney, Rutland Co., Vt., Aug. 1, 1813, received a classical education at the Classical School and Academy at Hamilton, Madison Co., N. Y.; in June, 1832, he graduated from Woodstock Medical School, which was connected with Middlebury College, commenced practice in Salisbury, Vt., there one year, then engaged in practice four years at Ticonderoga, N. Y., afterward in West Granville, N. Y. fifteen years, until he came to Wisconsin. Dr. K. was married at Ticonderoga to Orpha A. Smith Dec. 31, 1834; she died Feb. 14, 1840, leaving two children, Rev. Adin A., now President of Shurtleff College, and Lucy O., now Mrs. J. J. Watson, of Burlingame, Kan.; married his second wife at Ticonderoga; her name was Martha P. Smith, who died Oct. 3, 1865, leaving two children, Albert S., now a resident of St. Louis, Justin S., also a resident of St. Louis, and cashier and book-keeper of Equitable Insurance Company. Dr. Kendrick's present wife was Mary A. Tyler, a native of the town of New Berlin N. Y.; she has a daughter Maud, by a former marriage. The Doctor's son, Albert S. served in the 28th W. V. I; served until the regiment was finally mustered out, and was Adjutant of his regiment for some time after he entered the service, was appointed Q. M. S. before leaving camp at Milwaukee.

D. W. KENT, real-estate and insurance agency; born in 1818, in Oswego Co., N. Y.; went to Illinois, with his parents, in 1836, who settled on a farm near Palatine; he was married in 1839, to Miss Persis Bailey, daughter of Amos Bailey, a prominent farmer of that town; Mrs. Kent died in the spring of 1868, leaving seven children, of whom six are now living—Albert, married, and living in Waukesha; Mary B., married, and living in Michigan; Liberty M. W., married, and living in Milwaukee; Hiram T., married, and living in Pewaukee; Persis A. at home, and Nellie A. at home. Most of the time in Illinois; was a farmer; gave up farming in 1870; lived in Waukesha since 1857, save two years in Rock Co.; married his second wife in the fall of 1858; she was Miss Treadway, sister of W. W. Treadway, of Madison; she died in 1862, leaving one son, Henry W., now at home; he married his present wife in 1863; her maiden name was Elizabeth Hillyer; he was two terms Justice of the Peace—never asked for an office or a vote; he is well known as a temperance worker; is a leading "Good Templar;" the family are Congregationalists; all the children also being members of that church, and none of them use tobacco or intoxicating liquors; owns a residence on Carroll street; accommodates a few summer boarders.

IRA KIMBALL, Deputy United States Internal Revenue Collector, was born at Bath, N. H., July 28, 1829; received a common-school education, and learned the trade of wool-carding and cloth manufacturing, in his native town; came from New Hampshire to Wisconsin, and settled in Waukesha in August, 1854; engaged in milling, buying grain, keeping books for his brother, R. N. Kimball, for about ten years. He was two years in mercantile business—taught school two years—then was engaged in the wool-carding business for two years; then sold out that business to the Waukesha County Manufacturing Company; and was connected with that company for four years—part of the time superintendent and purchaser of wool. After leaving that company, he was engaged in the purchase of wool, and doing insurance business, until September, 1878, when he was appointed Deputy United States Internal Revenue Collector, for the third division of the first district, embracing the counties of Waukesha and Walworth. Mr. K. has been marshal of the village two years, Village Treasurer two years; and for the last two years Clerk of the Village Board; he has also served as Village Trustee. Mr. Kimball was married at Bath, N. H., July 3, 1855, to Miss Ruth Ann Southard. She was born in Bath. They have one son—Frank S., born May 2, 1856. Mr. K. and son are members of the I. O. O. F. Lodge, of this city.

JACOB H. KIMBALL was born in Bridgton, Cumberland Co., Me., on the 3d of April 1800; learned the trade of carpenter and joiner, and lived in his native State until after his marriage. On the 14th of January, 1834, he was married to Miss Harriet Gage, of his native town. On the 17th of June, 1837, he landed with his family in Milwaukee, and for forty-three years he has resided in Wisconsin. Sabina Barney's family and some other pioneer veterans came on the same boat. After a two-years sojourn in Sheboygan, he reached Prairieville (Waukesha) at midnight, the 24th of December, 1839, half dead with cold, and wearing the frozen clothing which was wet in the Menomonee River. He immediately bought 200 acres of land adjoining the present village of Waukesha, and including the land where he now lives. Mrs. Kimball died in 1868; they had two children who died in infancy. When he came in 1837 there was, at Prairieville, a grist-mill and a saw-mill, Buckner's log tavern, and two frame houses owned by John Gale and Henry Bowron. He built the third frame house in the township. He was actively instrumental in dividing old Milwaukee Co., and so establishing the boundaries of this county that the county seat might and should be at Waukesha; this he did mainly under the leadership of William H. Barstow. He was a member of the Territorial Council in 1845-46; was several terms Supervisor; and afterward engaged in the lumber business; several years Register of the Land Office at Milwaukee. He sold most of his land in 1847; his health for many years was not good; he claims to be the second old settler who was cured of the kidney disease by use of the Bethesda Spring water. Although past fourscore, he assures the writer that his general health was never better than for the past fifteen years; his eyesight forbids reading, but his memory is unimpaired, and he is a straight, vigorous man. His home is with Erastus Scott, nearly a mile from the post office, on land which he bought in 1839. He was never intemperate; has not drunk any intoxicating liquor for the last ten years, and he never tasted tobacco but once. He has been a Freemason, but not a church-member. Financially, he expects to "come out about even with this world;" religiously, he trusts it will be "all right in the next world."

NANCY H. KIMBALL, nee Keene, widow of R. N. Kimball; she was born in Pompey, Onondaga Co., N. Y., May 28, 1822; he was born Oct. 1, 1817, in Bath, Grafton Co., N. H.; they were married May 31, 1865, in Lafayette, N. Y. He had previously married Miss Fanny Hibbard, who died Aug. 24, 1864, leaving three children—Edward K., who is married and living in Waukesha; George I., who is married and living in Kansas City, Mo., and Hobert I., living in Colorado. Mr. Kimball came West in 1842; he was several years a farmer; he bought 90 acres of land northwest part of Waukesha, charmingly located on a bluff overlooking the city. He was for twenty-five years proprietor of the "Forest City Flouring Mills," at Waukesha; he was always too busy to accept official position; was an active, reliable Republican; was member of I. O. O. F.; the family are Episcopalians. He died the 13th of September, 1879, leaving one son by last marriage, Albert K., born July 13, 1866. The farm is well known as "Oak Hill," and lies partly in Waukesha and in Pewaukee, but the residence is only a quarter-mile from the court house. The farm has substantial improvements and a rare location. The home is shared by Mrs. Kimball and her sister, Miss Mary A. Keene.

RUSSELL N. KIMBALL, born in Bath, N. H., Oct. 1, 1817; his parents were of that class of hard working people, who gained a livelihood by farming, rearing a large family; he received only a limited education, in the common schools of the county, which at that time were not of as high order as at the present day; but being of an active mind, and endowed with energy, he excelled largely his associates; as he advanced in years, his genius partook of a mechanical turn, and he turned his attention to the business of mill building, and operating the same; after following this business for a few years, and hearing of the glowing prospects offered by the then "Far West," in the year 1841, he started for Wisconsin, traveling by rail to Buffalo, and from there by stage and boat, reaching Milwaukee in the spring of the same year, being four weeks in making the journey; having little or no capital to engage in business, he hired himself to Hon. E. D. Holtou, for whom he worked faithfully, until 1843 and then commenced for himself, in the grocery business, on West Water street, near Spring street, which business he prosecuted with success, until 1847, when he purchased a farm at the west extremity of Spring street, on the outskirts of the city, on which there was a water power, which he improved by erecting a saw-mill, and operating the same until the year 1854; he then sold the saw-mill, and purchased the grist and saw-mill at Waukesha, and engaged in the business of flouring, and sawing lumber, until 1876, when he died. Mr. Kimball was an indefatigable worker, and handled an immense amount of money, during his lifetime. In 1874, he listed property to the value of $67,802.87, above all liabilities. It consisted of the mill property and water-power, a farm of 87 acres, the old railroad shops, warehouse, and various personal property. He was an enterprising citizen, and an obliging neighbor.

ROBERT KINZIE, superintendent of the tailoring department, Industrial School, was born in Canton, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Nov. 10, 1823, lived in that county until he came to Wisconsin; he came to Waukesha in August, 1846, engaged in tailoring business, which he continued on his own account, until he took charge of the tailoring department of the Industrial school, October, 1859; he has continued in charge all of the time except for a period of about one year, when he was absent on account of illness, and on a visit to the East.

ISAAC LAIN. The father of Isaac Lain was living in Minisink, Orange Co., N. Y., when the son was born, Dec. 18, 1820. The maiden name of his mother was Deborah Alger. Isaac, the youngest of a family of nine children, aided his father on a farm, until 1833, when the father died; he continued to work at farming until 17 years old, usually attending a district school during the winter months; at that age he went to Chemung Co., and worked five years, with two older brothers, at the carpenter's trade; in June, 1842, he settled in Waukesha, and there continued to operate as a house-builder and contractor for about ten years; in 1852, he engaged in the real-estate and insurance business, adding manufacturing a few years later; in 1877 he became a stockholder in the Waukesha Manufacturing Company, and is Secretary of the same. Mr. Lain was a member of the General Assembly in 1861, at the opening of the rebellion; during the rebellion he was very active in encouraging enlistments, and in various ways helping on the cause. He has held various local offices; has been President of the village several times, and for a time was one of the managers of the Industrial School at Waukesha. He was Chairman of the County Board of Supervisors from 1866 to 1870. He is a Royal Arch Mason, and is a member and Clerk of the Baptist Church of Waukesha; is a warm friend of temperance. His first wife, Miss Sarah C. Van Vechten, a native of Princetown, N. Y., died in 1852, after being married a year and a half. In August, 1858, he was married to her sister, Rebecca J. Van Vechten, also a native of Princetown; they have three children, two daughters and a son, Mary C., Wm. H. and Keziah Belle. Mrs. Lain's father, Hubertus Van Vechten (now deceased), settled in Waukesha November, 1844.

PETER LAU, blacksmith; born in 1834 in Germany; came to the United States in 1854; learned his trade in the old country; worked two years in Cedarburg and vicinity, and then settled at Brookfield, this county. Was married in 1857 to Miss Brachen Wagen, formerly of Germany. She died in 1867, leaving two children—Bernhardt and Alfred. In 1863, he moved to the village of Waukesha, where he has since resided. He carried on blacksmithing in his own shop, on Madison street, and lives in his own house on Anno street. He was married in the fall of 1867 to Miss Heidel, of Theinville. They have four children—Clara, Maggie, Arthur and Amanda. He is an industrious and successful mechanic, a reading man, and a Republican.

REV. ROBERT LESLIE, Pastor of the Baptist Church, Waukesha, was born January 7, 1838, in Edinburgh, Scotland. He came to this country in 1851; graduated after a four years' college course, from the University of Chicago, in Illinois, in 1869, and from the Baptist Union Theological Seminary, in Chicago, in 1870. Soon after, he settled in Anamosa, Iowa, where he was ordained to the ministry. He married in Clinton, Iowa, in 1870. He was Pastor of the Baptist Church in Joliet, Ill., three years, and in Waverly, Iowa, five years. He settled in his present pastorate, Aug. 1, 1879.

JOHN F. C. LEGLER was born in Naples, Italy, Dec. 23, 1854; came to America in October, 1869, located in Augusta, Ga.; he was one year there, and from 1870 to 1877, in Memphis, Tenn.; he then came to Bangor, La Crosse Co., Wis., where his father, Henry Legler, located in 1874. While in Memphis, he was employed as book-keeper for a hide and leather firm. In March, 1878, he went from Bangor, Wis., to New Orleans, La., and remained until November, 1879, as book-keeper in a milling establishment; March, 1880, he was appointed book-keeper of the Industrial School. Mr. Legler lived in Naples and vicinity, until he was 7 years of age, when he was sent to college at Lake Zurich, in Switzerland; remained there until he was 14 years of age, and then came to America.

REV. SAMUEL LUGG, the present Pastor of the First M. E. Church of Waukesha, was born in the parish of St. Martin, in the county of Cornwall, England, on the 11th day of February, 1837; he attended school while young, under the patronage of the Church of England, was baptized in that church, and was confirmed by Bishop Philpots, Lord Bishop of the Diocese of Exeter; attended select school under the patronage of Sir Richard R. Vyvyan, Bart.; served an apprenticeship to the carpenter and joiner's trade for five years, and left England when 21 years of age for the United States; came to Wisconsin in 1858; declared his intention to become a citizen in 1860, and voted for Abraham Lincoln; attended school at the Garrett Biblical Institute in 1861 and 1863; went south in 1864, in the service of the U. S. Christian Commission for four months without pay, and was stationed at the post of Vicksburg, Miss., during that time; was enrolled in the 1st regiment of militia for the State of Mississippi, under command of Col. Holbrook for the defense of Vicksburg, without pay; lost his health in this service, and came home and worked at his trade for two years in the city of Racine, Wis.; joined the Wisconsin Conference in the year 1866, and was stationed at Uppers Corners and Richmond, in Walnut Co.; in 1867, at Arfordville, in Rock Co.; in 1869, at Clinton, Junction, Rock Co.; 1870, at Edgerton in Rock Co., and Albion in Dane Co.; 1872, at Elkhorn, Walworth Co.; 1873, First M. E. Church in the city of Janesville; 1875, at the city of Oconomowoc; in 1876, at Bay View, Milwaukee; in 1879, appointed to Waukesha. In the year 1874 he took out papers of full citizenship, when Daniel Mowe, Esq., and Hon. Henry Palmer, M. D., now Surgeon General of the State of Wisconsin, swore that they had known him to be a man of good moral character for upward of five years. He is a man of strong convictions, and hence has warm friends and lively enemies; he is candid and fearless in utterance; his congregations complain of his loud speaking when he gets excited on his subject; he is earnest in his delivery, and never asks any one how they liked his sermons; this spirit of independence makes him unpopular in Waukesha; perhaps he is lied about some, but is, without doubt, the most unpopular minister in the village of Waukesha, and he expects to move away in October next. He cares less for himself than his Master, the Lord Jesus Christ, and believes he will go to heaven when he dies.

THOMAS McGEEN, painter; born Aug. 12, 1842, in Syracuse, N. Y. His parents came to Waukesha, in 1846, and this village has been his home to the present date. Enlisted on the 10th of May, 1861, in Co. F, 5th W. V. I. (the 1st regiment from the county), and he served until after the surrender of Lee, in 1865; was a prisoner six weeks in Richmond, Va.; was fifteen months on detached duty, as headquarters' guard; came home without a scratch; was married in 1873, to Miss Katie Haley, who died in 1878, leaving one child, Thomas, Jr.; owns the house on River street, the shop is on Clinton street; has been painter ever since the war; has carried on the business for five years. He is a member of the Royal Arcanum.

Y., Oct. 16, 1827; learned the trade of machinist and saw-maker in New York City; came to Waukesha County in 1847, and settled on land in Pewaukee, where he remained thirty years. He was married March 1, 1852, to Miss Calista Porter, who was born in Ohio, Sept. 25, 1834, and came to Waukesha County with her parents, in 1836; her father, Israel W. Porter, was the first settler in that part of the township of Pewaukee, and on his land was started the second saw-mill in the county. Mr Nelson has held various local offices in his township, including Justice of the Peace and Supervisor. They had seven children; the oldest, Cordelia P., is dead; Flora E. is married and living in this county; Aurilla J., married and living in Milwaukee; John H., a druggist in Black River Falls; Mary O. and Calista M., at home attending school, and George W., at home. He has been a Republican "from the very start." For ten years he was dealer in agricultural implements, with headquarters in Waukesha; he was an extensive apple grower and fruit raiser; he still owns a farm of 75 acres in Brookfield Township, but in 1877, he removed to Waukesha village. He is now (1880) preparing a home on Main street, opposite the Court House. Though retired from the farm, he still carries on business as dealer in agricultural implements.

ADDISON C. NICKELL was born in town of Waukesha, Jan. 11, 1851; son of Addison O. Nickell, who came to Waukesha in fall of 1836; he died Feb. 15, 1877; engaged in farming during his lifetime; Supervisor several terms. The subject of this sketch has been engaged in the jewelry and watchmaking business for thirteen years; six years in business for himself, and three years of this time with his old employer, William Langer; for the last three years, he has been alone in the business. His mother, Eliza Cornwall Nickell, now resides in the village of Waukesha; she came to Waukesha in 1837, and came most of the way from the East on horseback. Mr. Nickell is a member of the A. F. & A. M. Lodge and Chapter.

He is teacher of German and French in Carroll College, and has been most of the time since; his residence in Waukesha; he is United States Examining Surgeon, and has held the appointment since 1872. Dr. Miller was married in Waukesha, June 3, 1868, to Miss Helen Lorleberg; she was born in Saxony. They have two children—Francis, born July 4, 1859, and Otto Fritz, born Feb. 27, 1871. The doctor is connected with the Royal Arcanum and Knights of Honor; medical examiner for both; also reporter and collector for both societies. His wife died Feb. 20, 1877, in Waukesha.

EDWARD PORTER came to Waukesha in December, 1850; he helped build the railroad to this place; his family was in Milwaukee until the spring of 1851; he has been connected with the railroad eighteen years; employed by the company, and was contractor during that time; he was, during this time nine years on the La Crosse road. Mr. Porter has been engaged in farming (and railroading some) since; he has also dealt in grain, more or less, ever since he came here, and has been quite extensively engaged in wool-buying for the last twelve years; he has lived in present location, Sec. 2, for last twenty-eight years. Mr. Porter was born in Cowden, County of York, England, Sept. 9, 1818; came to America in 1845, lived in Canada until he came to Wisconsin; while in Canada, he practised veterinary surgery. Mr. Porter was married at Toronto, Canada, Dec. 24, 1846, to Elizabeth Hetherington; she was born in Cumberlandshire, England; they have two children—Mary Ellen, now Mrs. E. Foster, and Elizabeth A. Mr. Porter has held various town offices; has been Chairman of the Town Board of Supervisors, and President of the Agricultural Society for many years.

JOHN PORTER was born near Hull, in Yorkshire, England, July 23, 1832; came to America in 1852; located in town of Waukesha, on what is called the old Burchard Farm, Section 2; remained there one year, and in 1853 went to California; he remained there mining until 1861, when he returned to Waukesha and engaged in farming; purchased the farm which he rented when he first came to Wisconsin, on Sec. 2; he soon after sold out, and moved to Sec. 36, in town of Pewaukee, which has been his home ever since. He was Under Sheriff for two years, and in 1878 he was elected Sheriff. Mr. Porter was married in Waukesha, November 8, 1861, to Mary Jane Skelton; she was born in Northumberlandshire, England. They have seven children—Edward S., Frank W., Harry B., Mary E., Florence J., Robert S. and John A. Mr. Porter has held all the offices connected with the Agricultural Society (except Secretary and Treasurer), President, Vice President, Marshal, Superintendent, member of Executive Committee, etc.

CAPT. WILLIAM PORTER, retired lake captain; born in 1817, in the north of Ireland. His parents went to New Brunswick in 1821, and remained till 1835, when they removed to Oneida Co., N. Y. He came to Milwaukee in 1837, and from that date to 1876 he was a seafaring man, or, rather, was connected with lake navigation, during the last ten years of which he was in the tug business. He was married, in 1856, to Miss Susie Steele, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; they have four children—Lillie F., Kate L., William H. and Edith George; all at home. In 1876, he bought his spacious residence on East avenue, village of Waukesha, and he has not since engaged in any active business, but he retains his vessel stock; he is well known as a veteran pioneer of Milwaukee, and as holding financial interests in that city. His early life was passed on or near the water, and his tastes are strongly to maritime pursuits; his earliest investments were in lake vessels, and for many years he was captain of a vessel, of which he was owner, in whole or in part. The family affiliate with the Congregationalists. He is not disturbed by political excitement, but in State and national elections he votes Republican. He has "paddled his canoe" through many a storm and calm, but is now "resting on his oars" in the sunshine of family, friends and competency.

GEORGE C. PRATT, ex-State Senator, born in November, 1811, in Cheshire Co., N. H. His father, John, was a prominent farmer and cattle-dealer in New Hampshire; the father died when George was 10 years of age, and since that time he has "cut his own feed." He learned the trade of saddler and harness maker in Vermont, before attaining his majority; was journeyman two years in Boston, and then carried on the business in Woodstock, Vt., till 1840; the summer of 1838 he spent in this county, and bought land; he was present at the first election ever held in the present limits of this county, which was in August, 1838; several towns were in that precinct, and a full vote was cast, numbering a total of twenty-seven. He returned and prepared to come West; was married New Year's Day, 1839, to Miss Mary A. Smith, only daughter of H. A. Smith, of New Haven, Vt.; she was born June 24, 1818. The season of his marriage, he was appointed Deputy Sheriff, and was thus detained three years in Vermont; in 1843, he came to this county with his family; he bought a large tract of land in the south part of the township, and farming was his business for twenty-six years; has lived twenty-five years in his present residence on Main street; has held various village, township and county offices, and in the fall of 1861, was elected to the State Senate. He was one of the incorporators and Secretary of the Waukesha Manufacturing Co.; was three years in charge of the county farm; has been, the last two years, purchasing agent of railroad contractors in Iowa and Dakota; has been an active worker in the County Agricultural Society; has been prominently identified with the Episcopal Church from its organization in this city; has been Vestryman since 1847, and Clerk since 1858; has four children—Mary S., born in 1839, M. Louisa, born in 1845; Susannah S., born in 1848, and George R., born, in 1852; all have been married; three live in Illinois, and one is at home. It is forty-two years since Mr. Pratt first invested in Waukesha real estate; he was one of the pioneers in the business of sheep-culture in Wisconsin. Though nearly three-score and ten, he is straight-bodied and clear-headed, and still engaged in the daily duties of active business life.

MRS. NANCY N. PRICE, nee Scripture, widow of Humphrey R. Price. She is a native of New Hampshire. Came to Wisconsin at the age of 17; was married in 1843 to Presley N. Ray, who died in 1853. He was a resident of this county from 1837 until his death. She has lived in the village of Waukesha since 1864. She was married October 20, 1864, to H. R. Price, of Waukesha. He was a machinist, and worked twenty-eight years for Mr. Blair. He died March 31, 1875, leaving five children, all by his first wife. He was a reliable Republican. He was buried with Masonic honors. Mrs. Price owns a pleasant residence on Madison street, in West Waukesha.

COL. FRANK HOWELL PUTNEY, only son of Capt. Foskett M. and Clarissa Putney, of Waukesha, was born at the Rockford House, Rockford, Ill., Oct. 13, 1841; his father was one of the pioneers of Wisconsin; a man of decided character and honorable influence, active and prominent in affairs, and at all times possessing the confidence of his townsmen; emigrated from Rushville, N. Y., to White Pigeon, Mich., in 1834, where he was commissioned a captain, by Gov. Stephen T. Mason, in 1836, and took part in the border troubles of that year; then moved to Milwaukee, Wis., in 1839, engaging in a mercantile business there, and at Rockford, Ill., which he carried on until 1845, when he retired to his farm at Prospect Hill, Waukesha Co., where, in the mean time, having been appointed Postmaster in 1846, he remained until 1850, at which time he removed to Waukesha, where he now resides in the full enjoyment of a hale and prosperous old age. His mother was an accomplished woman of most estimable character, whose teachings and example early imbued her son with that love of right for right's sake, which has characterized his whole life. He was educated at the High School, Milwaukee, and Carroll College, Waukesha, afterward reading law and being admitted to practice at the bar of the courts of the State. In the war for the Union he enlisted as a private in the 12th regiment of W. V. I., Sept. 2, 1861; was 2d Sergeant from Nov. 5, 1861, to July 1, 1862, then 1st Sergeant to Sept. 8, 1864; re-enlisted as a veteran, January 5, 1864; was commissioned Lieutenant, Aug. 17, 1864; was Regimental Adjutant from Oct. 23, 1864, to April 12, 1865; was Assistant Adjutant General, 1st Brigade, 3d Division 17th Army Corps, to May 22, 1865; was Inspector General of same brigade to July 18, 1865, and then Inspector General 3d Division, 17th Army Corps, to muster out Aug. 10, 1865. During service he took an active part in the following battles of his command: Lamar, Herando. Cold Water, Siege of Vicksburg, Jackson, Bolton Station, Canton, Kenesaw Mountain, Niekajaek Creek, Chattahoochie River, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Lovejoy's Station, Savannah, Pocatigo and Orangeburg, and he had the honor of serving in all the memorable campaigns of the Army of the Tennessee, including the Meridian expedition, the march to the sea, and the march through the Carolinas and Virginia to Washington. He has held various village, town and county offices; was Private Secretary to Gov. Ludington, in 1876 and 1877; also Military Secretary and Aide-de-Camp to the Governor, with rank of Colonel, during the same years; was Assistant Secretary of State in 1878 and 1879, and was re-appointed Assistant Secretary in January, 1880, for two years, which office he now holds. His ancestors, on both sides, were lineal descendants of the first colonists of Massachusetts, as is shown by the following extracts from town, church and family records: John Putney, of Salem, Mass., married Nov. 18, 1662, to Judith, daughter of Henry Cooke, of same place. Joseph, of Salem, third son of preceding, born Aug. 25, 1673; married May 18, 1697, to Sarah McIntyre. Elisha, of Salem, eldest son of preceding, born at Reading, Mass., Nov. 21, 1713; married

June 2, 1737, to Margaret Hamblen. Elisha, Jr., of Fenner, N. Y., eldest son of preceding, born at Salem (or Reading), May 23, 1738; married at Charlton, Mass., May 13, 1762, to Martha Foskett, of Charlton; moved from Salem to Charlton in 1752, from Charlton to Goshen, Mass., in 1767, and from Goshen to Fenner, N. Y., about 1800. Aaron, of Middlesex, N. Y., third son of preceding, born at Goshen, May 24, 1771, and died at Middlesex, Sept. 28, 1845; married at Goshen, May 27, 1795, to Deborah, daughter of Joseph Maynard, of Framingham, Mass.; born at Framingham, Dec. 19, 1777, and died at Middlesex, July 7, 1819; moved from Goshen to Fenner about 1800, and from Fenner to Middlesex about 1813. Capt. Foskett Maynard, of Waukesha, Wis., second son of preceding, born at Fenner, May 11, 1805; married at Belvidere, Ill., Nov. 3, 1839, to Clarissa, daughter of Simeon Howell, of Southampton, L. I.; born at Franklin, N. Y., April 5, 1814, and died at Waukesha, March 12, 1855. Simeon Howell was descended, in direct line, from Edward Howell of Southampton, who was made a free-man at Boston, March 14, 1639.

CAPT. FOSKETT MAYNARD PUTNEY was born in the part of the town of Smithfield now called Fenner, Madison Co., N. Y., May 11, 1805. When he was 9 years of age his parents, Aaron and Deborah (Maynard) Putney, moved to Middlesex, Ontario Co., N. Y., where he lived until 1834, when he came to White Pigeon, Mich. There he entered actively into mercantile and land business, and also took honorable part in the "Patriot War," and the border contests, under a captain's commission, conferred by his Excellency Gov. Mason. In May, 1839, Capt. Putney visited Prairieville on a tour of observation, and later, the same year, settled in Milwaukee, remaining there until the fall of 1845, when he retired to his farm at Prospect Hill, New Berlin; was engaged in the shoe and leather business at Milwaukee, and at Rockford, Ill., from 1839 to 1845, and in farming and stage hotel-keeping at Prospect Hill from the latter year to 1848. In 1850, he removed to Waukesha, having bought property here prior to that time, and commenced business as proprietor of the Railroad Hotel, now American House. In the spring of 1852, having previously sold his hotel interest to Silas Barber, he bought a farm situated on Sec. 31, in the town of Brookfield, and there lived until 1855. He then became manager of the Exchange Hotel, and continued so until 1863, when its owner, Peter N. Cushman, died. The following year he purchased this hotel property, and conducted it until 1868, when he rented it to Elijah Holbrook for a term of years, temporarily resuming its management in 1873, and again from 1877 to May, 1879, when, having decided to retire from all active business, he leased the hotel to William C. Holbrook. Capt. Putney was married at Belvidere, Ill., Nov. 3, 1839, to Clarissa Howell, who was born at Franklin, N. Y., April 5, 1814, and died at Waukesha, March 12, 1855. He has only one child, Col. Frank Howell.

PROF. GEORGE H. REED, in charge of Carroll College; born in Mineville, Essex Co., N. Y., in 1853. His preparatory education was at Sherman Academy, New York, and his collegiate at Amherst, Mass. After leaving college in 1876, he engaged in teaching in New York, was principal of high schools; came West in January, 1880, to take charge of Carroll College, which is now operated as an academy. The attendance averages fifty per term, and is mainly local; the last graduating class in full collegiate course, was in 1860. Prof. Reed has two assistants, and the institution affords facilities for college preparatory course and for three regular academic courses. The college is charmingly located, and merits surrounding and sustaining patronage.

JOHN D. ROBERTS was born in town of Remsen, Oneida Co., N. Y., January 10, 1834. Came to Wisconsin May 15, 1844 with his parents, David W. and Miriam Roberts; remained in Milwaukee two weeks, then came to what is now the town of Delafield, Waukesha Co., and located on Sec. 27. In 1853, John D. Roberts began the business of farming on his own account, and has continued in the same business ever since. He was Justice of the Peace in the town of Delafield in 1857 and 1858; Supervisor in 1858; in 1866, he was again elected Justice of the Peace for two years; in April, 1867, he was elected Town Clerk, and continued in that office until April, 1879; he was elected County Clerk in November, 1878. Mr. Roberts owns a farm on Sec. 22, and is a member of the Delafield Presbyterian Church.

THOMAS RYALL, merchant—groceries and crockery; was born in the township of Waukesha, November, 1851; son of John and Emily Crichell Ryall. He began clerking in a grocery store at the age of 14. He was married in 1877, to Miss Elizabeth Randle, daughter of Thomas A. Randle, a farmer of Genesee Township. Mr. Ryall has carried on his present business seven years in this village. His store is on the corner of Main and Clinton streets, and his residence on East avenue; is an official member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Waukesha; is not active in politics; enjoys a continuous first-class patronage.

CONRAD SEHRT, boot and shoe maker; born Feb. 6, 1839, in the village of Hattroth, Hesse-Darmstadt; in 1853, his parents, Henry and Margaret Sehrt, came with their children to America, locating in Milwaukee; Conrad learned his trade, and three years later the family settled in Waukesha, where the old couple still reside; Conrad Sehrt worked as a "jour" about eight years, then, in company with his brother Henry, opened a shop on Clinton street (at present Syal's grocery); four years later, they removed to the present location, Conrad selling out to Henry at the end of a year, losing two years on account of ill-health, and nearly losing his life as well; having regained his health, he has worked for nearly three years past in his brother's shop. He married Louisa Esslinger, of Waukesha, on the 11th of February, 1861; they have five children—Nellie, Lillie, Cora, William and Minnie; Mr. Sehrt is liberal in politics; he is a member of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and a leading member of Bismarck Lodge, No. 193, I. O. O. F., having held and filled with credit all its offices; he has also been Village Trustee and Marshal.

AUGUST SCHLEY, general merchandise store on Madison street; was born 1849 in Prussia; came to the United States in 1856; lived in Milwaukee till 1864. He enlisted in Co. H, 45th W. V. I., in 1864, and was honorably discharged in July, 1865; settled in Waukesha in 1869—clerked for ten years, and then opened his present store. Was married in December, 1877, to Miss Lucetta Korn, daughter of Jacob Korn, a prominent farmer and early settler of New Berlin Township, of this county; they have one child—Katie, born in January, 1879. Their residence also is on Madison street; has a good patronage, both German and English.

JAMES WATSON SHERMAN was born in Waukesha, Jan. 26, 1849, and is the son of Henry W. and Martha A. Sherman; he was employed most of his time as a clerk until 1876; he then commenced business for himself, and has since has been dealing in boots and shoes, hats, caps and furnishing goods. Mr. Sherman is a member of the First Baptist Church. His grandfather, James Y. Watson (his mother's father), came to Prairieville, now Waukesha, in July, 1837, and made his claim three miles west of the village; after making his claim, he returned to Salem, Washington Co., N. Y., and in November of the same year he brought his family, consisting of a wife, four daughters and two sons, to South Prairieville, which was their home for about thirty years; then came to the village of Waukesha. Mr. Watson was born at Brookfield, Mass., July 9, 1782, and died at Waukesha, June 24, 1871. His wife was Eunice Stone; she was born in Salem, Mass., Feb. 14, 1793; she died at Waukesha December 29, 1862. Mr. Watson was well known throughout Waukesha County, having held various offices which brought him in communication with the people in general. He was one of the oldest members of the Masonic order in Wisconsin, having been a Mason for sixty-eight years. His children were as follows: Asa S., born July 29, 1812, died in Waukesha February 1, 1865; Thankful B., born May 23, 1815, married Benjamin A. Jenkins of La Crosse (a former resident of Waukesha County, and recently deceased), she died at La Crosse March 3, 1876, and her remains were brought to Waukesha for interment; Martha A., now Mrs. Sherman of Waukesha, was born Nov. 9, 1823; Mary E., now Mrs. George W. Babcock, of Pattersonville, Iowa, was born Oct. 28, 1828; James Q., a resident of Waukesha, was born April 8, 1826, and Sarah M., now Mrs. A. T. Clinton, of La Crosse, was born Oct. 22, 1833. Martha A., the second daughter above mentioned, was married to Henry W. Sherman by Rev. Calvin Warner at South Prairieville, Oct. 24, 1843; her children are: Charles H., born April 20, 1847, now married and a resident of Indianapolis, Ind.; James Watson, born Jan. 26, 1849, merchant, now of Waukesha; Hattie E., born March 20, 1856, now Mrs. George W. Carleton of Waukesha, and Edmund Kingsland, born August 1860, now residing in Kansas City.

CONRAD P. SILVERNALE, retired farmer; born in the township of Livingston, Columbia Co., N. Y., April 8, 1810; his father, Peter C., was a prosperous farmer in that county; he was married Feb. 27, 1831, to Miss Elizabeth Avery; he is of German parentage. He spent several years farming in New York State, raised large crops, sold for good prices, and made money, but in an evil hour he took a partner and went into the milling business, and the result was the loss of all his property; then he came west, and landed in Milwaukee on the 15th of May, 1846; he bought 80 acres of land in Mukwonago; brought his family there; carried on farming three years; sold, bought again, and sold once more at an advance. He now owns 40 acres of land in Pewaukee Tp., and also a pleasant village home in Waukesha. Has four children—Lucinda, who married T. D. Cook, of Milwaukee; Catherine, who married Richard Smith, of Minnesota; Mary, who married Solon Dedrick, of Waukesha; Harvey married Miss Rankin, and lives on a farm in Pewaukee. He has been a Methodist nearly half a century. On the 27th of February, 1881, will be held the "golden wedding" of this honored couple.

WILLIAM H. SLEEP, Superintendent of Wisconsin Industrial School. Born near Lan-ceston, Cornwall County, England, July 18, 1848; came to America with his parents in 1857; son of John and Ann Sleep, who settled in Waukesha in the summer of 1857. When he was a little over twenty-one years of age, he became connected with the Industrial School; January 17, 1870, he accepted the position of outside overseer; he continued in that position for a year or two, then took charge of the store; was appointed Assistant Superintendent in January 1878; was made Superintendent December 15, 1879. Mr. Sleep was married in Waukesha May 7, 1873, to Harriet A. Bennett; she was born in Rutland, Rutland Co., Vt., November 10, 1852; they have one daughter, Alice Mabel; she was born May 2, 1876. Mr. Sleep is a member of the A. F. & A. M. Lodge and Chapter; also of the Royal Arcanum.

ISAAC SMART, veteran pioneer and farmer, Sec. 10, Township of Waukesha; was born September 15, 1809, in Newburgh, Yorkshire, England. Was married in England, in 1832, to Miss Elizabeth Clegg, of his native place. He came to America in 1834, and to Waukesha in May, 1835, with the "old man Cutler." In 1836, they took up Government land, including the farm of 160 acres where they now live. His brother, Richard, came a few months later, and took up a farm adjoining his, upon which now stands the Fountain House. Mr. Smart claims to be the earliest settler now living in the township of Waukesha, and his daughter Jennie, born September 21, 1836, was the first girl born in Waukesha Township. He thinks Morris Cutler came in the fall after his arrival in May; although Mr. Cutler is generally regarded as the earliest living resident of the county. Their old home, built in 1840, was the first frame house on the prairie. They have buried two children, four are living—Jennic, born in 1836; Benjamin, born in 1838; Mary, in 1840, and Maria A., in 1856. Two children are married and live in this county, and the youngest daughter, Maria, is at home. Mr. Smart owns 396 acres of land in the township of Waukesha. He has emphatically "grown up with the country" from nothing to a competency. He is a good citizen and an honored pioneer.

DR. JEHIEL SMITH was born in town of Bath, N. H., Aug. 25, 1803; he went to Concord, N. H., spent one year there, then he went to Boston; when he was 19 years of age, commenced the study of medicine in Concord, N. H., and completed it in Boston. Dr. Smith was educated in the Eclectic Medical School; he studied with a physician at Cambridge, and graduated from Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, and has practiced for about fifty years. Dr. Smith is one of the pioneers of the new practice of eclectic medicine. He has one daughter, Mary, now a resident of Murray, Iowa. The present wife of Dr. Smith was Julia Louisa Willard, married June 15, 1868; she came to Waukesha as a first assistant of Carroll College, remained there two years. Mrs. Smith was born at Williamsport, Lycoming Co., Penn., May 27, 1827; she has been connected with educational institutions as an instructor, for many years, from 1841 to 1863, and for the last three years more or less, lately conducting a select school; came to Waukesha in September, 1861. Dr. Smith came to Waukesha in October, 1847, and has engaged in the practice of medicine ever since. He is proprietor of one of the leading mineral springs of this place, an account of which will be found elsewhere in this work.

HON. JOHN C. SNOVER was born in Chester, Orange Co., N. Y., April 1, 1813; remained there three years, then his father, Charles F. Snover, removed to Bucks County, Penn.; lived there until John C. was 17 years of age, then the family removed to Blairstown, Warren Co., N. J., where they remained until the spring of 1834; then they went to Michigan for three years and came to Milwaukee, Wis., September 12, 1837. That city was his home for three years with the exception of some time that he was engaged on a contract with the construction of Illinois canal. He returned to Milwaukee in January, 1840. In the same winter he purchased a farm in the town of Vernon, on Sec. 12 (the farm now owned by Finlay McNaughten). He remained here one year, then removed to the town of Eagle, and purchased a farm of 200 acres from John Evarts, on Sec. 27. He remained there until 1859, then sold out and went to the village of Eagle and engaged in the hotel business which he continued for three years. In 1850, he was elected to the Assembly. In 1844-45, he was chairman of the Board of Supervisors for Milwaukee County, and was a member of county board a great many years, representing Milwaukee two years, and for a long time member of the board since the organization of Waukesha County. After leaving the hotel business at Eagle, he worked at carpenter and joiner's trade in the northern portion of the State part of the time, and in Iowa, Michigan, and in different parts of Wisconsin, jobbing work principally. In 1870, he was managing agent of Pritchard's Brewery, at Fort Atkinson, Wis. He was one year there and engaged again in building until the spring of 1877, when he was elected County Judge of Waukesha County. Mr. Snover was married in the town of Washington, Macomo Co., Mich., Sept. 12, 1836, to Lucinda Phelps, a native of the town of Delaware, Canada West.

Very truly yours
S. W. Haigh

JOHN P. STORY, deceased, son of William and Eliza Patton Story, was born in Marblehead, Mass., on the 28th of May, 1806. Both his grandfather and his father were many years in fisheries and foreign commerce, and owned large maritime interests. His father was a merchant, and sea captain in the East India merchant service. Judge Joseph Story, Associate Justice of Supreme Court of the United States, was an uncle of this sketch. He, at the age of 15, ventured his fortunes on the deep, and was rapidly promoted, and at the age of 21, he was made Captain of an East India merchantman. He followed the sea for 17 years, and three times sailed around the world. Salem, Mass., to which his parents removed, was his nominal home. His kindly, unselfish nature won him the love of his subordinates and the esteem of all; in 1838, he removed West and spent a winter in Milwaukee; in the spring of 1839, he settled in Waukesha County, which was his residence until his death. He was married November 19, 1840, to Miss Elizabeth Quarles, daughter of a prominent citizen of Kenosha. Her sister married ex-Gov. Barstow. Her brother, Augustus Quarles, commanded a company in the Mexican war, from Kenosha, Wis., and was killed in battle at Cherubusco. They settled in the township of Brookfield in 1840, where he had bought 640 acres, and on which he lived till 1849, when he removed to the village of Waukesha, and did not thereafter engage in active business. He died March 30, 1875, leaving five children and his worthy companion. Their oldest son, Lieut. John P., graduated from West Point, and is now in the United States signal service; William is Ex-U. S. District Judge, and now lawyer in Colorado; Frank Q. now in commercial business in San Francisco; Lizzie is the wife of Lieut. H. A. Reed, a graduate of West Point, and now stationed there as assistant professor of drawing; Anna remains with her mother in their pleasant home on Main street. Capt. Story was a gentleman of the old school, courteous, generous and unswerving in his integrity. Being of a reserved nature and not in business, he preferred the society of his family and a few chosen friends, to whom he was greatly endeared by his qualities of head and heart. He acted well his part in all the varied relation, of life, and left to family and the world the heritage of a spotless name and an unsullied life.

RICHARD STREET (Supt. Waukesha County Mfg. Co.) was born at Bannockburn, Scotland, Sept. 5, 1825; came to Wisconsin in 1855, and located in Grant Co., near Lancaster, engaged in farming for five years; learned the business of cloth manufacture at Wilson & Bros'. celebrated mills, Bannockburn, commencing at the age of 11 years; continued in the same business all the time, except the five years he was farming; in 1861, he returned to Utica, N. Y., where he remained until spring of 1868, when he came to Racine and introduced the manufacture of the "Badger State Shawl," in the factory of Blake & Co., that being the first shawl manufactured at that place; continued with Blake & Co., until 1871, when he came to Waukesha, and has been connected with the Waukesha County Manufacturing Company ever since. Mr. Street was also overseer at the Globe Mills, at Utica, N. Y. He was married near Bannockburn, Scotland, May 26, 1847, to Elizabeth Robertson; she was born about 6 miles from Bannockburn; they have nine children—William, Robert R., Helen D., were born in Sterling, Scotland; John A., Lucy A., Belle J., Richard W. were born in Grant County, Wis.; George W., Charles A. were born in Utica, N. Y. Mr. Street is a member of the Village Board, and is also a member of the Good Templar Lodge, the A. F. & A. M., I. O. O. F. Lodges, the Royal Arcanum and of the Baptist Church.

DANIEL H. SUMNER came to Wisconsin in August, 1868, located in Waukesha County at Oconomowoc; remained there two years; since then he has been at Waukesha; he was born at Malone, Franklin Co., N. Y., Sept. 15, 1837, and lived there six years; then came with his parents, John and Philena Sumner, who located in Richland, Kalamazoo Co., Mich., and was educated at Prairie Seminary in Richland, of which J. H. Burrows was then Principal. He was admitted to the bar June, 1868, at Hart, Oceana Co., Mich., and commenced practice at Waukesha in January, 1870. Being in feeble health, he was unable to practice when he first came to Wisconsin; most of the time he was at Oconomowoc, he was one of the proprietors of the La Belle Mirror, in that place. Mr. Sherman was married at Beloit, Wis., July 2, 1877, to Mrs. Terrie M. Nelson, a native of Genesee, Waukesha Co., Wis. Mr. Sherman, was District Attorney from 1875 to 1877, and member of the County Board three years; and is also a member of the Baptist Church and I. O. O. F. Lodge.

REV. FATHER DOMINIC F. THILL, Pastor of St. Joseph's Church, was born in Luxemburg, Europe, in 1844, the same year that the Catholic Church was built in Waukesha. He came to the United States in 1847, and located at Belgium, Ozaukee Co., Wis. Commenced his studies in 1858, at St. Frances of Sales, near Milwaukee, and studied under the Right Rev. M. Heiss, now Coadjutor Bishop of the Archdiocese of Milwaukee. Was ordained Priest by Archbishop John M. Henni, on the 29th of January, 1868. He was, awhile, assistant Pastor at Madison, and was then, in May, 1868, appointed Pastor of St. Mathews, at Neosha, Dodge Co. He was their first resident Pastor, and remained three years and three months, and during the time he built a parochial school, and made an addition to the parsonage, and other improvements, at a total cost of $1,500. He also had charge of two missions, St. Mary's, at Woodland, and St. John's, in township of Herman. Finding these two churches were very close together, St. John's was abandoned, and a church built at Rubicon, costing $4,000, which was dedicated on the Feast of St. John, 27th of December, 1870. At Woodland, he laid the corner stone, and partly erected a new church, which was completed in 1871, by his successor. In August, 1871, he was assigned to St. Brun's, in Ottawa, Dodge Co., with which, also, he had a mission at Golden Lake. He collected $3,000 for erecting a new church, and laid the foundation thereof, at Golden Lake. In February, 1873, he was assigned to the pastorate of St. Joseph's Church, at Waukesha, where he has remained till present date, 1880. His people are five-sixths English-speaking, and the remainder are German. All preaching is in English, except one sermon per month, which is in German. The church is thoroughly furnished, and finely adorned; the grounds are spacious and beautifully ornamented with shrubbery. The bell, costing $300, was donated by Mrs. Christina Schwartz. The parochial school has an average attendance of one hundred. There is a library society, and, also, a benevolent society, both of which are doing good work. The relations of Pastor and people are harmonious, and the congregation is large and prosperous.

VERNON TICHENOR, attorney; came to Prairieville last of August, 1839, being the first lawyer to locate here; remained here and engaged in practice ever since, except for a year or two when he first came, when, in consequence of ill health, he endeavored to recuperate his strength; he was the first lawyer in the county, and first Town Clerk when this town was organized; held that position for a number of years, Justice of the Peace many years, is now, and has been for nearly twenty-five years Court Commissioner for Waukesha County; Member of Assembly one term; Draft Commissioner in 1862, under appointment of War Department of United States Government, and held various other positions several years; and is now President of the Board of Trustees of Carroll College, and three times President of Waukesha village, and has held the offices of Clerk, Treasurer, Trustee, member of the School Board and Clerk. Mr. Tichenor was born in Amsterdam, Montgomery Co. (now Fulton Co.), N. Y., Aug. 23, 1815; he graduated from Union College at Schenectady, N. Y., in 1835; after leaving college he studied law at Amsterdam, admitted to the bar at Albany, October, 1838; commenced practice in Wisconsin. He was married at New Scotland, Albany Co., N. Y., Aug. 19., 1838, to Charlotte Sears; she was born at Balston Spa Saratoga Co., N. Y. They have two children, Willis V. a resident of Mason City, Iowa, and Mary C. Willis V. enlisted in Company G, 28th W. V. I., Aug. 21, 1862, and was mustered in as 2d Lient. in September, 1862, promoted to captaincy of same company, March 30, 1864, and was mustered out; Aug. 23, 1865; formally disbanded Sept. 23, 1865; battles and principal expeditions he participated in were Helena, Yazoo Pass Expedition, White River, Mount Elba, Arkansas, siege of Mobile and its capture.

TYLER & BUGBEE, photographic artists; have been in partnership ten years in this village; the senior partner began photography in 1865 in Waukesha; Tyler was born in Chenango Co., N. Y.; Bugbee was born in Washington Co., Vt.: Tyler came to Waukesha in 1863; Bugbee came to Wisconsin in 1865, and Waukesha in 1867. Tyler was married in 1873 to Miss Mary A. Bancroft, daughter of D. L. Bancroft of Waupun and have one child named Bernice; Bugbee married Jennie Spence in 1873, who is daughter of Thomas Spence, of Waukesha; they have two children—Tyler resides on Main St., and Bugbee on Maple avenue; their studio is on Main St.; this is the earliest, largest and leading establishment of the kind in Waukesha, and among the first started in the county; they have a liberal local and extended patronage.

W. ULRICH, physician and surgeon; office in his block, on corner of Madison and River streets; born in Stralsund, Prussia, in 1820; studied in Greifswald and graduated in 1845; came to the United States in 1850 and settled in Ozaukee Co. in 1851, and remained till 1870 in practice of his profession; came then to Waukesha, where he has practiced medicine, and most of the time has had a drug store. Married in 1846 to Miss Charlotte Engel, who died in 1857; then he married his present wife, in 1858; her name was Frederika Schlenovogt, formerly of Germany; they have had five children—Louis, Hannah, married and living in Ozaukee Co.; Emma, Ida and Louisa; the three youngest live with their parents. The family are Lutherans. Owns a business block and a residence in Waukesha, also a farm in New Berlin; it is his design to establish on the farm a hospital for treatment of chronic diseases; his farm is favorably located for such a purpose; is on high ground with beautiful surroundings; has two springs, one of which is a choice chalybeate; this establishment, when fully fitted up, is expected to supply a felt want in this section of the country.

RICHARD WALKER, retired contractor and stone mason; born 1809 in England; married in England in 1829, to Miss Mary Morgan, of his native town. He learned his trade in the old country; came to America in August, 1844, and Waukesha has been his home continuously for thirty-six years. They buried one child in England; have no living off spring. He was of the firm of Cook & Walker, the owners of both the Waukesha and Pewaukee quarries. He rebuilt the court house, which was the second stone building in Waukesha; he also, about two years afterward, 1850, built the present stone depot, and in 1852, built Carroll College. He sold his interest in the quarries, and retired from active business in 1869. He has a pleasant residence on William street, and owns other real estate in the village and State. Is a Republican, but has always declined office. Mrs. Walker is a Congregationalist. When he arrived in Waukesha, he had suitable clothing, some household furniture, and three English shillings in cash. He immediately began laying stone during the day time, and worked by candle-light nights at brick-laying, for extra wages; would sleep about four hours out of twenty-four. He soon "got a start," and made some judicious investments. From his quarries came the many miles of stone side walks which are not the delight of the many pilgrims and strangers who wend their weary way over the rough broken surfaces. Until date of his retirement, he was always a hard working man, but now his worthy helpmate and himself are quietly enjoying the fruits of their labors. Though they are not blessed with the affectionate companionship of their own children, yet they have many kind friends and valued relatives both in this county and elsewhere.

NATHANIEL WALTON, farmer, northwest quarter of Sec. 10; a veteran pioneer; was born in Brookfield, Madison Co., N. Y., Dec. 15, 1805; when a child, his parents removed to Genesee Co., where they resided till their death. He was married at Knowlesville, Orleans Co., N. Y., Aug. 25, 1830, to Miss Laura W. Jones, and then settled in Genesee Co., where they lived till spring of 1836; Mrs. Walton was born Jan. 12, 1811, in Florida, Montgomery Co., N. Y. Came West in 1836 with teams from York State, and settled that fall on land which he now owns. The Wisconsin Industrial School is on his old farm, and the village cemetery is on the other corner. Their children, grandchildren and great grandchildren are as follows: Children—Louisa Walton Todd, Laura Etta Walton Sherman, Mary Walton Adams, James Walton, Maria M. Walton, Martha C. Walton, Nate E. Walton; grandchildren—Mary Todd Hackley, Hattie B. Todd, Charlie Todd, Walton S. Sherman, Wm. H. Sherman, James A. Sherman, Martha Adams Marshall, Libbie Adams De Witt, Zaida Maud Adams, Walton Payne, Laura Payne, Jessie Walton, Nettie Walton and Laura Walton; great-grandchildren—Georgie Todd Hackley, Belle Todd Hackley, Horace Adams Marshall, Clyde Adams De Witt, Baby Sherman. The present residence, built in 1844, there have been in it five births, six marriages and no deaths. He is Deacon of the Baptist Church and all his children were baptized and received into the church at Waukesha before leaving the parental homestead. Some of the pioneer reminiscences of this venerable couple are recorded elsewhere in this volume. On the 25th of August, 1830, will occur the golden wedding of these veteran pilgrims; they are in good health, and are cheerfully bearing life's burdens; they do not want for this world's goods, and possess the love of hosts of friends, some of whom were their first pioneer acquaintances.

ELIAS WAMBOLD, dealer in agricultural implements; born in Montgomery Co., Penn., May 21, 1821; his father was a tanner, and Elias worked four years in the tannery, then was clerk in store several years. Was married in 1847 to Miss Matilda Fertig, who died in 1857, leaving two sons and one daughter—David, Emily L., Theodore; all are now living in Wisconsin. He came west in April, 1847, and located in West Granville, Milwaukee Co., where he remained twenty-six years engaged in general merchandising. Married in 1861 to Miss Sarah A. Smith, daughter of Andrew S. Smith, one of the earliest settlers of that place; has one daughter, Nettie. He came to Waukesha in the spring of 1875, and has continued in business as dealer in agricultural implements. He was Postmaster in Pennsylvania and for twenty-five years was Postmaster at West Granville. His office and warehouse are on Main street. Speaks both German and English; has a good patronage. Has been a loyal Methodist "since long ago." Owns a brick residence on West avenue, near Bethesda Spring. Boards a few summer tourists each season.

DR. JAY T. WARDROBE was born in Sheffield, Yorkshire, England, May 10, 1848; came to America with his parents, Charles and Anne Ellis Wardrobe, May, 1849; settled in Waukesha the same year, both living in Waukesha; their son, Jay T., received his early education in the Union

School of this place. He graduated from the Philadelphia Dental College with the class of 1875-76; took hospital practice in medicine, connected with the Pennsylvania Medical University. Dr. Wardrobe practiced dentistry here for a few years; then entered the Hahnemann Medical College, of Chicago, and graduated from that institution in the class of 1877-78; afterward engaged in the practice of dentistry, but not of medicine to any extent. He is also a partner with his brother in the drug business in Waukesha, having one of the finest drug establishments in the county.

REV. THOMAS G. WATSON, Pastor of the Presbyterian Church, born in Geneva, Ontario Co., N. Y., August 11, 1836; was educated in his native town at "Hobart College," and graduated in 1857, and in 1861 graduated at New Brunswick, N. J., from the "Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church in America." Settled at Cato, Cayuga Co., N. Y., in 1861, as a home missionary; spent eight years in that work, having charge also of a church at Fair Haven two years, and of the church at Victory three years. He was married Dec. 18, 1861, to Miss Fannie C. Seelye, of Lansingburg, N. Y.; she died in August, 1869, leaving one daughter, Fannie S. In May, 1869, he took charge of the Reformed Church at New Brighton, Staten Island. His health failing, he came West in the fall of 1871, and intended to rest a season, but after a few months he accepted a call from the First Presbyterian Church at Waukesha, which he still serves. He was several years Secretary of the Board of Trustees of Carroll College, and was some time Professor of Elocution in addition to the duties of an active pastorate. He married his present wife June 19, 1873; her maiden name was Elizabeth White, daughter of William White, of Waukesha, and was the widow of Walter L. Bean; she had one son, Walter L. Bean, Jr., who is living in the Township of Waukesha. Mrs. Watson is a lady of artistic talent and general culture; they have one son, Thomas S. Watson. For the last five years, Rev. Watson has been the "Stated Clerk and Treasurer of the Presbytery, of Milwaukee." His duties are clerical, corresponding, statistical and general, as the permanent officer of the Presbytery. His residence is a beautiful brick on McCall St. The church is a neat stone edifice on corner of South and Center Sts. The church membership has grown from ninety-five to one hundred and forty during his pastorate. He has a vital interest in all which affects the well-being of society. He is highly esteemed in all the relations of life, and is particularly beloved by his people.

STEPHEN WEBER, brewer; born May 11, 1822, in Bavaria; he learned brewing in Bavaria, and in 1848, came to America with John Beck, a brother-in-law; he bought the present brewery of William Kellogg; Mr. Weber sold out to Mr. Beck in 1862, and bought his present brewery of Peter Peffer and Christopher Noh; he has torn away the small stone and wooden building of that day, and, after making a larger cellar, he, in 1873, built the present 52x56 stone building, which, with the large three-story ice house, makes the largest brewery in Waukesha Co.; Mr. Weber manufactures about 2,200 barrels of beer per annum, paying revenue on 1,700 barrels, and bottling for the local trade about 500 barrels during the summer. He married Rosina Stroebel, a native of Germany, who died in 189, leaving four children—John (died in 1877), William A., Barbara A. and Louis; the youngest was born in Waukesha, and the others in Milwaukee; Mr. Weber is a good citizen, and a live business man, liberal in politics, and an unstinted giver to the local churches.

NICHOLAS WEITEN, manufacturer and dealer in willow ware; born in 1841 in Germany, worked at his business ever since he was 10 years of age, his father in the old country being a leading manufacturer of willow ware. He came to the United States in December, 1865; spent a year in Chicago, also a year in Milwaukee, and then was five years superintendent of a department in Wisconsin Industrial School, devoted to manufacture of willow ware. Last seven years has carried on business in his own shop near foot of Main street. Married June 1 1869, to Miss Margaret Diener, of New Berlin. The family are Catholics. Has one assistant, Fred A. Scheeley, who took his first lessons in the business at the Industrial School. The largest patronage comes from visitors who live in the South.

JOHN WHITING, Proprietor of Aldine Place; born in Guifford, Mass., in 1815; his parents settled in Western New York about 1830. He was married in 1838 to Miss Caroline M. Wing, of Vermont; they have one daughter, Frances A., who is married and lives in Chicago. They came West in 1840, and settled in Walworth Co. where they remained six years, and then lived twenty-five years in Sheboygan Co. whence he came to Waukesha in 1878, and purchased an attractive site on Maple avenue, and erected the summer resort known as Aldine Place. This is located on the east side of Maple avenue, which is the finest residence street in this beautiful village; it is conveniently accessible from all the springs, is new, contains fourteen rooms elegantly furnished, and combines many of the advantages of the city, with all the attractions of the country, and is deservedly popular. Mr. Whiting has been a Republican since formation of the party. His worthy wife and himself are Congregationalists.

EDWIN WOOD, retired farmer; born in 1822 in Genesee County, N. Y.; came west in 1839, and settled in township of Waterford, Racine Co., Wis. He lived on Caldwell's Prairie, on the old homestead, until 1874, when he sold the farm and moved to the village of Waukesha. He was married in 1844 to Miss Lorraine S. Winchell, daughter of Harvey H. Winchell, of Rutland, Vt. He spent the year 1860 in California, engaged in conducting a nursery ranche at San Jose; his experience was satisfactory, but the profits were not immense. He was contented to carry on a large farm, pay war taxes and get war prices. Had two children; one died in infancy, and one died at age of 19. He is a temperance Republican, but never held office; votes as he is a mind to, and lets others do the same. He was Superintendent of Sunday school at Caldwell's Prairie for twenty years; is now Deacon of the Congregational Church at Waukesha. He is a genial gentleman, and enjoys a social game of croquet. He owns a pleasant home on Maple avenue. His house is one of the favorite resorts of summer tourists, who visit the "Springs" from all sections of the United States.

H. M. YOUMANS was born in Mukwonago, Waukesha Co., Wis., Jan. 6, 1851; son of Dr. Henry A. and Lucy S. Youmans; both are now living on Sec. 26, Mukwonago; settled in Mukwonago in 1843; Henry M. engaged in clerking when he was 14 years of age, continued in that business until 1870 (except a few months spent at Commercial College in Milwaukee). In 1870, he came to Waukesha and commenced learning the printer's trade in the office of the Freeman, worked at the case for three years, then purchased an interest doing more or less of the mechanical work; for the last five years sole proprietor. Town Clerk in 1876. He was married in the village of Mukwonago Sept. 14, 1870, to Frankie G. Kellogg, daughter of Erastus H. Kellogg, an early settler of Vernon, a prominent miller of Mukwonago now; Mrs. Youmans died Dec. 7, 1876, at Mukwonago, leaving two children—Augustus H., born Sept. 8, 1871, and Solomon K., born Feb. 8, 1873. Mr. Youmans is a member of I. O. O. F., K. of H., Royal Arcanum. He is the present President of the village of Waukesha, elected May 4, 1880, over P. H. Carney by 209 to 352. This was the largest Republican majority (143) ever given for a President of Waukesha

TOWN OF WAUKESHA.

HENRY AUSTERMANN, farmer; Sec. 32; P. O. Waukesha; was born in Lippe-Detmold, Germany, Jan. 31, 1823. His father, Conrad A., was a soldier of Lippe-Detmold; the son was educated in the seminary there, and began teaching in his 20th year, teaching six years. Married, 1875, Amelia Meyer; she was born in Westphalia Feb. 22, 1822. They came to America, in 1848, locating on their present farm. This he bought of his father-in-law, Adolph Meyer; about twenty acres were cleared, on which was a small house and barn. It was new work for this German teacher to swing the ax; but that he did it and did it well is proven by his present surroundings, he owning 300 acres, with good buildings. In 1851, he removed to Waukesha, and during the next two years kept the Exchange Hotel. Mr. and Mrs. A. have six children—Alvin, Lanra, Hulda, Frank, Amanda and Max; the two eldest were born in Lippe-Detmold, and the others in Waukesha Co.; a daughter, Matilda, is deceased. Mr. Austermann is a Democrat, and is devoting his large farm to grain and stock-growing.

GEORGE M. BARNEY, farmer, Sec. 17; P. O. Waukesha; born in the town of Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., June 22, 1825; son of Sebina and Polly (Manderville) Barney. In 1836, his father, a Vermonter by birth, made an extended trip through the West, buying land in Ohio and at Mineral Point, Wis. During the spring of 1837, the family came by way of the lakes to Milwaukee, having a rough and tempestuous trip, the ice breaking the paddles from the wheels of the steamer. Landing at Milwaukee in June, they reached Prairieville on the 4th of July. The first summer was spent with Mr. Pettibone, on what was afterward called the Cushman place. Here, George took his first lessons at driving, breaking team, earning $12 per month. Sebina Barney bought a claim on Sec. 14, at this time, and through his labor and care it was made one of the best farms in the county, and many a dollar was earned by him at the forge, as he was the pioneer blacksmith of the locality. After about twenty years, he sold here and located on the farm now owned by George Harding. At the organization of the Waukesha County Bank, Mr. B. was made Vice President, which office he held at his death, on May 29, 1880—a public-spirited, honorable and truly good man; our feeble pen cannot do his memory justice. His home, for a number of years, was in the village, where a street now bears his name. His son, our subject, sold the second location spoken of to Mr. Harding, and has resided on his present farm of 186½ acres since 1868. Built his large and tasteful farmhouse of Cream City brick in 1878, and has done good work as a farmer during his forty-three years' residence in Waukesha. He married, March 13, 1854, Miss Julia Washburn, of Industry, Me.; they have nine children; Sabina D., De Newton, George H., Carrie B., Milton W., Harlow F., Nellie M., Charles A. and Lottie E.; May, born May 1, 1867, died a few weeks after. The children are all natives of this county, and all residents of it, except George H., who is in Dakota. The Barney family are Democrats, and refusers of all office.

A. BLACKWELL, farmer, Sec. 8; P. O. Waukesha; born in the town of Stillwater, Saratoga Co., N. Y., Nov. 18, 1807; his parents, Joshua and Delia (Bowles) Blackwell, were Massachusetts people, and removed, when our subject was a mere lad, to Otsego Co., N. Y. He married Miss Anna, daughter of John and Anna (Farnsworth) Wagner; she was born in Preston, Chenango Co., N. Y., in May, 1845, when they settled on their present homestead in Waukesha; Mr. B. had bought part of it the preceding fall, and had a small house built; the farm was crossed by an Indian trail and was a favorite resort for the redskins in trapping muskrats; he was also on the route of the teamsters between the lead mines and Milwaukee, and the rifle-like crack of their long whips often warned him of the approach of a score of these unwashed, unkempt, but good-hearted fellows; "to fill out our quota of neighbors," says Mr. Blackwell, "we had the Hoosier hogs, built like a sunfish or pumpkin seed, capable of jumping a six-rail fence, or jumping through the cracks between the barn siding; hail stones would split on their backs, and nothing but a stroke of lightning would kill them;" yet they were good old times, and when we look at Mr. B.'s 160-acre farm with its substantial buildings, we can see that he prospered. Mr. and Mrs. Blackwell belong to the Baptist Church, of which he was for many years a Deacon; in politics, he is a Republican, he having served a number of years as Supervisor and Assessor; Mr. and Mrs. B. have three children living,—Jennie A., George E. and Charles A.; the eldest was born in Otsego Co., N. Y., and the sons on the Waukesha homestead.

ASA A. DAVIS, Sec. 30; P. O. Waukesha; was born April 16, 1819, in Westminster, Windham Co., Vt.; his father was Josiah Davis, and his mother an Averill; both well-known old New England families. In 1839, Mr. Davis, then 20, settled in Waukesha Co., a carpenter and joiner by trade; he worked in early times in repairing the Waukesha, and building the old Deisner Mills. In 1840, he bought a part of his present farm of 420 acres, on which he settled ten years later, building part of his present house. This excellent stock-farm was formerly prairie and light openings, with a tract of valuable marsh. On this farm, Mr. Davis has 300 fine-wool sheep, and sixty head of cattle; his sheep are from the flocks of Perkins and Paul. He married Miss Martha Williams (sister of J. W.), who was born in Chester, Vt.; they have a daughter, Martha, now Mrs. Frank Shultis. Mr. Davis is a Republican, and a live and prosperous farmer.

WILLARD M. FARR, farmer, Sec. 9; P. O. Waukesha; was born in the town of Scroon Lake, Essex Co., N. Y., Sept. 10, 1843; he is a son of George W. and Esther (Day) Farr, who removed to Cleveland, Ohio, in 1856; Willard M. was educated at Shaw Academy, and made Cleveland his home until July, 1861, when he enlisted as a private in Co. G, 42d O. V. I.; his Colonel was James A. Garfield—the present Republican nominee for President, whose election will verify Capt. Farr's prediction, made while in the service; his regiment was engaged at Mill Creek, Pond Gap, Cumberland Gap, etc., and took part in Sherman's first abortive attack on Vicksburg, helped capture Arkansas Post, engaged in the battles preceding the investment of Vicksburg, its siege, and on its surrender, our subject was commissioned Lieutenant; after Herron's Red River raid, Lieut. Farr was transferred to the Virginia army, and, in the fall of 1863, was commissioned Captain of Co. I, U. S. Artillery; he also served as Brigade Quartermaster and as Ordnance Officer; after a most honorable military career of over four years, having engaged in fourteen battles, he was honorably discharged in July, 1865; soon after, he located on and for three years owned the farm of Mr. N. Shultis, Genesee. He married, in October, 1866, Miss Susie E., daughter of A. C. Nickell. From 1868 to 1878, the Captain was in the lumber business in Michigan; his farm of 115 acres is part of the old Nickell estate, and on this he has built a new and tasteful residence; the Captain and wife have a daughter, Alice N., born in 1868, in Waukesha Village; he is an ardent Republican, and was once Postmaster of Onekama, Michigan.

SAMUEL FOX, farmer, Sec. 27; P. O. Waukesha; born in Wroxton, Oxfordshire, England, April 7, 1814; he is a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Hays) Fox; his mother died when he was a child; he was a farmer in England; he was married in Wroxton to Miss Jane, daughter of William and Mary (Gardner) Carpenter; they had four children, all born in Wroxton—Mary A., S. Albert, Sarah and Cymbreanne. The family came to America, and to the Waukesha homestead in 1854; the 95 acres were then almost in a state of nature; living in a log house, Mr. Fox did good work, and is rewarded with a good home. Mrs. Fox died in December, 1878; Mary A. (Mrs. William Stillwell) died in July, 1868, leaving five children; Sarah (Mrs. John Sleep) died March 31, 1880, leaving eight children; S. Albert married Miss Eliza, daughter of Richard Smart, and is a substantial farmer in Pewaukee; Cymbreanne (Mrs. William Pratt) is a resident of Detroit. Mr. Fox is carrying on the homestead, assisted by his grandchildren; he is an attendant of the M. E. Church; a Republican, and has held minor offices.

ISAAC GALE, farmer and stock-breeder, Sec. 18; P. O. Waukesha; born in the town of Bennington, Bennington Co., Vt., June 2, 1832; son of Isaac and Lydia (Gardner) Gale, born near the historic old battle-ground at Bennington; he was educated at Bennington, and married there, March 1, 1854, to Miss Julia, daughter of Elihu and Sarah (Ploss) Dutcher; she was also of Bennington. In the fall of 1855, Mr. G. and wife, with Mr. Dutcher, came to Waukesha, Mr. Dutcher buying the Gale homestead of Jabez Burchard, to own it but a few hours, however, as he fell a victim of cholera on the third day of his residence in Wisconsin. Mr. Gale bought the 146-acre farm of the heirs, has brought all but 25 acres under cultivation, and erected a tasteful farm house for his home; originally a timbered farm, his care and management have brought it to a state of improvement excelled by but few farms in the county. A Republican, he is now serving his third term on the Town Board of Waukesha; is also President of the Waukesha County Agricultural Society. Is a member of the Baptist Church, and has for ten years superintended the Union Sabbath School, at South Genesee. Mr. and Mrs. Gale have two living children—Alfred J., and Mary F., who is now attending school at Waukesha. The eldest, Martha D., was educated at the Whitewater Normal School, married J. K. Randle, and died in July 1876, aged 19. In regard to Mr. Gale's record as a stock-breeder, we are authorized to state that about fifteen years ago he bought of J. C. Clark, New York, ten pure-bred Spanish Merino sheep, and has since dealt with other noted New York and Vermont breeders; his ram, Allright, a pure Atwood, sheared just thirty pounds in 1880; he was bred by De Long, of Vermont, and is registered as De Long's 100; Mr. G. regards him as the best animal in the State for wool and stock, and keeps him at the head of his flock of 190 as good sheep as need be seen; his dealings with Western sheep men extend through Texas, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Minnesota, and all parts of Wisconsin; he selling in 1879, thirty-five rams from his flock. His first Jersey cattle, bought in 1876, of J. M. Cobb, have likewise proven a successful adventure, he now owning three thoroughbred and four grades; his last sale, that of a yearling bull, was to E. Enos, the popular Postmaster of Waukesha. Mr. Gale is also a most successful breeder of Poland China hogs, his first purchase, eight or ten years ago, being made of O. P. Clinton, Pewaukee.

GEORGE A. HINE, farmer, Sec. 4; P. O. Waukesha; born July 22, 1811, in Canfield, Trumbull Co., Ohio; his father, born in Connecticut, was a carpenter and joiner, and married Freelove Bunnell, also of Connecticut. G. A. Hine spent his early life in Portage Co., Ohio, and at 21 bought a small furnace and plow factory at Shalerville, Ohio. Dissatisfied with this, he left for Wisconsin, and reached Prairieville in June, 1837, in company with E. D. Clinton; together they claimed over 400 acres on Secs. 4, 5, 6 and 7; both worked at blacksmithing and plow-making, and are well-remembered pioneers. In 1839 or 1840, they built a grist and saw-mill on Sec. 7, selling the mill and about 300 acres of land two years later. Mr. Hine then settled on his present farm, which, containing 161 acres, is now among the best in the town; it was, forty years ago, openings and low prairie; Mr. Hine with his own hands breaking and fencing it, building two good houses, and several substantial barns upon it; a spring of running water supplies the stock in the yard, and none of the settlers of 1837 have a better home. Mrs. Hine, formerly Maria Clinton, was born in Vermont, and died October 18, 1874, leaving two sons—Morton O., who married Miss H. S. Taylor, and lived in Waukesha, and Clifton A., who married Miss Addie Smith, and now manages the homestead. He devotes much attention to the culture of berries for the local market; fifty bushels of the different kinds raised in 1880. Father and sons are Republicans, the father having been Assessor, etc.

JOHN HILLE, farmer, Sec. 31; P. O. Waukesha; born Feb. 20, 1811, in Bremka, near Gottingen, Hanover; his parents both died when he was a lad; he was educated in his native town, and learned cabinet-making in Gottingen; followed this until 1837, when he emigrated to America, locating in New York City, where he did business on his own account until he came to Wisconsin in 1848. He married, 1842, in New York, Miss Magdalena Jaquiltard; she was born in the department of Strasbourg France, and reached New York in June, 1837; this was the only family of that name in France during the Huguenot persecutions. Mr. Hille bought 146 acres of his present farm of 215; began in a log house, and did good work among the timber, as is attested to-day by the cultivated farm, farm buildings and the spacious stone farmhouse, built two stories high, and built to stay. Mr. and Mrs. Hille have eight children—Charles, Elizabeth, Edwin, Anna, Huldah, William, Lillie and Oscar; all except the eldest were born on the homestead; Michael Hille died in childhood, and John when he was about 30. Mr. Hille is Independent in politics.

EDWARD W. KING, Sec. 19; P. O. Waukesha; born in Devonshire, England, Aug. 18, 1811; he learned the trade of a carpenter and joiner in England, and in 1838, emigrated to the United States, coming at once to Waukesha Co.; he spent a few months with Mr. A. F. Pratt, and then bought a claim—which is a good farm and home to-day—then a part of the timbered openings covering the country around it; for three years his home was with his brother, James King, and, during the summer of 1843, he built part of his present house; on Christmas Day, 1843, he married Elizabeth Hurst, who died three years later, leaving him one son—Richard. In July, 1847, Mr. King married Miss Esther Horel; she was born May 12, 1822, in Somersetshire, England; her parents, with seven children, came to America in 1837; her 15th birthday being spent in mid-ocean; after seven years spent near Auburn, N. Y., the family settled in Erin, Washington Co., Wis. Mr. and Mrs. King have five children—John H., Edward, George W., William G. and Martha A., all born on the homestead. Richard King served in the 39th W. V. I., in war times, and now lives in California; their son, Samuel, accidentally shot himself, when about 19 years of age, and they also lost an infant. Mr. King is in unison with the Church of England, and his wife with the M. E. Church; he is a progressive farmer, and has erected most of his buildings himself; has 144 acres at home, and 81 in Genesee. Politics, Republican.

JAMES KING, farmer, Sec. 27; P. O. Waukesha; born Sept. 1, 1816 or 1817, in Devonshire, England; he is a son of James and Mary A. (Lowery) King, who died in England; bent upon improving his lot, Mr. King, in 1844, came to the New World; he reached Milwaukee via the Erie Canal and the lakes; he settled in Genesee, and worked a few months at his trade (wagon making); gave it up, and for a number of years worked on farms, earning enough to buy his present farm of 120 acres; it was timbered, and a log house was all the shelter the bachelor-settler had; the first manful blows struck there with his ax have been pluckily followed up, and a good farm and home secured. He married, Jan. 2, 1858, Miss Catherine, daughter of Paul and Vianna (King) Wheeler; Mrs. King was born in Salem, Washington Co., N. Y., and her people came to Waukesha in the fall of 1844. Mr. Wheeler bought a farm, and spent the winter with Mr. William McWhorter; to use her words, "they lived in the trackless woods, in a log house; Mr. and Mrs. King lived a year with Mrs. Wheeler, then a widow; she died in 1860. Mr. King's record here is one of which no man who begins as a farm laborer need be ashamed. He is a Democrat.

CAPT. GEORGE LAWRENCE, one of the historic men of the county, was born Oct. 31, 1812, on Martha's Vineyard, or Dukes Co., Mass; his father, George Lawrence, a native of Norway emigrated to the United States, when he was 19, and, with Martha's Vineyard for his home, followed the sea over fifty years, as master of a ship for thirty years. His son, our subject, began as a lad by sailing on the small coasters; at 16 he shipped with his father on a whaling voyage, harponning two whales before he was 17; on this voyage he visited Japan, the Sandwich Isles, etc., and was promoted to boat steerer; his second voyage was made as third mate, under Capt. Marchant; after a most successful cruise of forty-five months, during which time, young Lawrence killed half the whales taken, he returned as second mate. Again sailing as mate, his ship was cast away off Cape St. Lucas; reshipping at Mazatlan, Mexico, he went to Valparaiso, where he was made master of a merchantman (the Crawford), and sailed her to Swansea, Wales, thence to New York, where he took his discharge. His early dream was to marry a farmer's daughter and to die a farmer, and just prior to his third voyage, August 16, 1835, he married Miss Mary Clarke, who was born on a farm in Washington Co., R. I. Capt. L. has made in all six voyages, and passed thirty years on the sea, sailed round the globe in command of the Champion, of Edgartown, has seen all the islands of the Pacific, cruised in the Japanese and Chinese seas, and visited both those strange countries, bringing with him as relics a houseful of quaint cabinets, fans, workboxes, shells, &c., besides the weapons of the Islanders. In the fall of 1846, he made his settlement in Milwaukee; in 1847, he built the schooner Lawrence, at a cost of $12,000; the following year, he exchanged one-third of her for his present homestead, and sold the other share to Daniel Newhall. Capt. Lawrence settled here in September, 1848, began to work as farmer, became disgusted with the raising and selling of the splendid wheat of those days at 30 cents per bushel, and resolved to try his fortunes again at sea. In May, 1851, he started on a four years' voyage, which was his last and most successful, netting him a small fortune, which, as he says, "came easy and went easy, as is the way with all sailors." Capt. and Mrs. Lawrence have had six children, of whom George, Jr., is the only one living. He was born Nov. 16, 1839, in Washington

Co., R. I., married March 5, 1857, Miss Virginia Hall, a native of East Wareham, Mass. They have two sons—George Jr. and Harry H., both born on the homestead. A picture, priceless in the possession of the Captain, gives an excellent likeness of the four Georges in a group. It was taken before the death of the great-grandfather, in his 88th year. The early dream of the Captain is in a fair way of realization, as he, with his son, owns this splendid homestead farm of 330 acres, upon which each has a pleasant and even elegant home. To sustain the reputation of Rose Glen Factory, a herd of seventy cows is kept. These gentlemen for many years were among the most noted of Wisconsin sheep-breeders, but, since the founding of the butter and cheese factory in 1877, have given their entire attention to it. They were awarded a pair of nickel-plated scales as a special premium, at the Industrial Dairy Fair, held in New York City, 1878; these scales, worth $100, were awarded for the best tub of butter. The factory was the first established in the county, and is a most gratifying success.

GEORGE A. LOVE, farmer, Sec. 6; P. O. Waukesha; born Sept. 20, 1828, in Oneida Co., N. Y.; his grandfather, Robt. Love, was the father of eleven children, of whom Levi Love was the eldest son; he and a younger brother, Robert, made their first visit to Prairieville in 1836, Robert claiming and settling upon the present Bethesda farm, which he sold to the Tichenors. Levi returned to New York State, and removed his family to Long Point, Can., where he engaged in farming until 1843; that year he settled on Sec. 19, Pewaukee, with a wife (formerly Emma Waldo) and eight children; a residence of twelve years here gave him an improved farm, though he began pioneer fashion, in a log house among the timber; he next settled on Sec. 1, in Genesee, and, after seven or eight years, removed to Sec. 6, in Waukesha, where he died, in November, 1876, at the advanced age of 85. His son, our subject, settled in 1858, on a farm on Sec. 36, in Delafield, and, in 1874, on his present farm of 283 acres; the first owner was Norman Clinton; Col. Marshall and James Davis were also previous owners, the latter calling this beautiful and fruitful farm Pleasant Valley. In 1852, Mr. Love married Miss Mary, daughter of Samuel and Eleanor Breese; she was Welsh by birth, her parents settling on Sec. 1, in Genesee, in 1847; his younger brother, Julius C., who was born Jan 26, 1835, in Hartland, Niagara Co., N. Y., married a sister, Hannah Breese, and resides on an adjoining farm of 373 acres, the two considered by good judges to be the best stock farms in Waukesha County. This fact, however, is but little consolation to the heart-sore brothers, as their faithful and loving helpmeets are hidden from their sight forever, both falling victims to that dread disease, typhoid fever, in the fall of 1879, as did S. Lorenzo and Harriet E., children of G. A. Love, all dying within a few weeks of each other at his house, he being the only one of his family to escape the sickness. He has now eight living children—Mary E. (Mrs. H. Putney), Hannah J., Chas. D., J. R., Fannie M., Sophia L., A. G. and Addison N. The family belong to the Waukesha Congregational Church. Mr. Love is a Republican; served as Justice of the Peace and Supervisor in Delafield, and Supervisor in Waukesha.

WILLIAM LOWRY, farmer and carpenter, Sec. 33; P. O. Waukesha; born in County Antrim, Ireland, May 1, 1813; is of Scotch descent; learned his trade in boyhood; his father, grandfather and sons, with him, represent four generations of carpenters. He married, in 1838, Miss Molly Smith, of his native county; their five children were all born in Ireland; of these, John, Mathew H. and Eliza (now Mrs. James Knowles) are dead; William is with his father, and Anna (now Mrs. Mathew Young,) resides in Iowa. The family came to America in 1854 or 1855, and resided four years in West Chester, Penn., and four in Sandusky, Ohio; they then settled in Chicago, where Mr. L. earned $3.50 per day at his trade; for a long time, his sons William and John earned $3, at the same trade; Mathew being employed in a storé. In the fall of 1867, when Mr. Lowry settled on his present farm of 160 acres, only a part was cleared, on which was a log house, which still stands beside the substantial frame one built in its stead. The main barn, 34x46x16, with the horse-barn, stables, etc., were all erected by Mr. L., who has done good work in clearing the land of timber, stumps and stones. Mr. and Mrs. L. are members of the R. P. Church. Mr. L. is a Trustee.

FREDERICK R. LYONS, farmer, Sec. 28; P. O. Waukesha; was born May 19, 1798, in Colerain, Franklin Co., Mass.; his father, Jesse Lyons, was born in Dedham, Mass., was a cabinet maker, and married Miss Nabby Ransom, who was a native of Colerain. F. R. Lyons lived on his father's farm until he was 22 or 23, then engaged in farming in Greenfield, Mass. He was married, March 15, 1821, to Miss Martha B. Stebbins, of Greenfield. In 1840, Mr. L. and family settled on 40 acres of the present homestead; he had $300 and the land in a state of nature. None of Waukesha's honored pioneers have done better or more successful work than this sturdy son of New England. His first crops of winter wheat were sown on a neighbor's farm, he, mean while, chopping out a farm of his own; many a moonlight evening has he spent felling the giant trees, which were cut up the next day. Such men should and did succeed, as may be seen by the splendid 220-acre farm, with its roomy frame house, replacing the log house of pioneer times, and the substantial barns. Mrs. Lyons died November 12, 1873, leaving seven children. Frederick R. (of Riceville, Ga.); Martha A. (Mrs. Eli Welch); Asenath B., Lucius, Seth, Sophronia J. (now Mrs. John Gaspar); and Eli W. The homestead is now divided between Lucius and Eli W., the latter having the home proper, where his aged father is passing the last days of a well-spent life. The Lyons family are Democrats; Mr. Lyons, Sr., was in old times one of the town board; he is in unison with the Baptist faith.

JOHN McNAUGHTON, Sec. 36; P. O. Prospect Hill; born in the town of Alabama, Genesee Co., N. Y., December 29, 1829. His parents, Duncan and Margaret (Dewar) McNaughton, moved soon after to Pendleton, Niagara Co., and eight years later to the town of York, where the father died. His mother, himself and grandmother left Caledonia, Livingston Co., for Wisconsin, in the fall of 1842; spent the winter with Duncan Cameron, in Vernon, and the next spring bought, with their little means, 80 acres of the present farm; three acres were then broken, and on this they raised enough to supply their frugal wants. They lived in a log house surrounded with a dense forest, but as John grew up a sturdy, healthy boy, he began to chop and clear; kept at it, and to-day his 200-acre farm, of which 150 are cleared, tell of good work well done. Mr. McNaughton also owns 20 acres on Sec. 7, Vernon; has built a large farmhouse, with good barns, etc. His pioneer mother, now 74, is still with him. On the 24th of February, 1859, he married Miss Margaret Miller, a native of Stewarton, Ayrshire, Scotland; they have six children—Christie E., Alexander, Janet, Susan, Margaret and Ellen; they lost three children—Margaret, John and Mary May; all the children were born on the homestead, which was a wilderness thirty-eight years ago. Mr. McN. and family belong to the U. P. Church of Vernon. Politics, Republican; he is not only a farmer but a thrasher, having owned an interest in a machine for a number of years.

GEORGE McVICAR, farmer, Sec. 31; P. O. Waukesha; born near Inverary, Argyshire, Scotland, in 1794; he married Miss Christina McVicar; she was six months his junior, and was born in Inverary; they came to America in 1822, and lived until 1843 near St. John, N. B., engaged in farming, lumbering, etc.; in 1843 they removed to Waukesha, Mr. McVicar buying the claim of John Wilson, who had built a shanty; several of the family were stricken with ague, which compelled them to pass a winter of discomfort in the shanty; then a log house was built, and, with Indians for their neighbors, the work of reclaiming the land was begun, and that it was well done we may now see by the well-improved 243-acre farm, of which 55 are woodland, and by the substantial farmhouse built in 1858, the roomy barns, etc.; there were six children born in New Brunswick, viz.: Angus, Catherine, Janet, Peter, John and Margaret; Angus is a leading farmer of Dane Co., Wis.; Catherine, now Mrs. A. Sutherland, lives in Eau Claire, Wis.; Janet died as the wife of Thomas McGill, and left four children—Peter, a Congregational minister, is now President of Washburn College, Topeka, Kan.; Margaret is Mrs. Andrew Watson, now a missionary in Egypt; John McVicar married Miss Jane Horn, of Genesee; they have four children—Mary, Catherine, Agnes and Margaret. The homestead of 243 acres is well improved, with the exception of 55 acres of woodland; the log house of early times was replaced about 1858 with a roomy frame one, which makes a good home for the old couple in their declining years, and for the youngest son and his family; all needed barns, etc., are here, to shelter the flock of fine-wool sheep and other stock. The entire family are members of the Congregational Church; politics Republican.

JAMES MANN, farmer, Sec. 33; P. O. Waukesha; born in Craig, County of Antrim, Ireland, Feb. 4, 1813, son of Mathew and Elizabeth (Anderson) Mann; Mr. Mann spent his early life on a farm in Ireland; married Margeret Lynn, who died in 1853, leaving five children—Eliza J., Mary, Mathew, Joseph and James. In 1854, he married Jane Lockhart, by whom he has three children—Margaret, Samuel L. and William J., all born in Ireland; Thomas, born in America, is dead. The family came to America in 1863, spent a year in Ohio, and in 1864 settled on the farm of 126 acres, which has been very much improved by them since this time; over 40 acres have been cleared, a barn built, house enlarged, etc.; there are 80 acres under plow, 46 of wood and pasture and 10 of marsh, the latter in Vernon. Mr. M. and wife are members of the R. P. Church, Mr. M. having been Elder of the Vernon Church for several years; his five elder children are in Kansas, where he also has several grandchildren; the three younger are on the farm; S. L. and W. J. are twins. The mother of Mr. Mann died here, aged 86.

DANIEL NEWHALL, one of Wisconsin's best-known business men, is a native of the manufacturing village of Conway, Franklin Co., Mass.; this was his home from his birth, May 24, 1821, until he was 17; at this time, he settled near Lockport, N. Y., where he worked two seasons on a farm, and taught school for awhile; 1838 found him in business for himself, in Lockport, where he remained until 1844, when he settled in the bustling and "smart" frontier town of Milwaukee, then containing perhaps 7,000 people; beginning with a capital of $30, he opened a grocery and provision business on East Water street, and, with the energy and business ability always necessary factors, built up the largest business of the kind in the place; his trade with the German emigrants was very large, it being no unusual thing for him to take in a peck of Prussian thalers and French coins per day, or to agree to furnish more goods during a day's business than were in the store in the morning. During 1844, he made his first visit to Prairieville (Waukesha); teams then forded the river, and people crossed on large stones arranged for the purpose. In 1850, Mr. Newhall retired from the provision business, bought the Phillips warehouse, and began dealing in wheat; the rapid growth of his business necessitated the building of the well-known Badger warehouse in 1854; it was then the largest in the Northwest; the same year, he built the D. O. Dickinson, Milwaukee Belle, G. D. Norris, L. J. Farwell and the M. S. Scott; these, with the Lawrence, Speed and Robert Burns, gave him the largest line of sailing vessels on the lakes, known as the Badger line; his ambition at this time was to start a vessel-load of wheat for Buffalo every day; 1855-56 witnessed the building by him of the Newhall House, costing, with its site, $252,000; it was then the largest hotel between Albany and the Pacific, and was for years the architectural pride of the city, where its only rival to-day is the Plankinton. Up to 1867, Mr. Newhall was the leading grain-shipper of the entire Northwest, his operations in wheat in Milwaukee and Chicago, and in gold and stocks in New York, involving the use of millions of dollars. "Show me a man who has made no mistakes, and I'll show you one who has never done anything." Mr. Newhall's mistakes cost him his fortune, but not his honor. He married, in 1843, in her native town (Orwell, Vt.), Miss Melissa M. Tenny, who died in 1855, leaving six children—Minerva M., Daniel E., Harriet E., Ella M., Flora R. and Arthur T.; the eldest, born in Orwell, Vt., is now Mrs. Dr. A. M. Helmer; the Doctor served as a volunteer in the 218th N. Y. V. I. (his native State); the five younger children are natives of Milwaukee; D. E. is in Buffalo, N. Y.; Harriet E. (now Mrs. Charles L. Pierce) is in Milwaukee, as is Arthur T.; Ella (now Mrs. J. M. Whaling) resides in Chicago, and Flora (now Mrs. W. B. Douglas) in Lockport, N. Y. Since 1874, Mr. Newhall has resided upon the old Hanford place; this and Woodside make a most pleasant resting-place for him, he having wholly retired from active business; his sales of milk from the most popular Woodside Dairy are 1,200 quarts per day during the fashionable season in Waukesha. Such is an imperfect sketch of the life of this man, who has held a central place in the world's great life battle for over forty years. His present wife was Miss Roxena B. Tenny, a sister of the deceased wife.

WM. A. NICKELL, farmer, Sec. 9; P. O. Waukesha; eldest son of A. C. and Eliza (Cornwall) Nickell, both of whom were born and educated in Monroe Co., W. Va. In June, 1835, A. C. Nickell and Dr. Madison W. Cornwall made their first visit to Prairie Village, the two claiming the entire Sec. 9, and 200 acres adjoining. They spent the first summer in their wagon; then built a small log shanty near the present Industrial School, Mr. Nickell building a shanty nearly opposite the Sanborn residence soon after. His final settlement was made in a log house built near the present residence of Capt. W. M. Farr. Returning in the fall of 1837, he married, the young couple making their wedding trip to Wisconsin in an old boat-like Pennsylvania wagon; it being, on the whole, with visiting done on the way, a most pleasant trip, occupying seven or eight weeks, at the end of which they began life as genuine pioneers in the log house. Here six of the children were born—Mary J., (Mrs. W. L. Rankin), Chas. C. (deceased), Wm. A., Susan E. (Mrs. W. M. Farr), Carrie M. and James M.; the youngest, A. C., was born in the stone house built by his honored father in or about 1850. At the death of A. C. Nickell, Feb. 16, 1877, it was felt on all sides that one of the first settlers of the county was gone, not only among the first to locate here, but first in all energetic, progressive and kindly deeds. His widow, a fresh, vigorous, matronly looking pioneer woman, now enjoys the comforts of an elegant home in the village. Wm. A. Nickell attended one of the very first private schools, taught by Mrs. Goodwell, afterward taking a course under Dr. Savage, at Carroll College. He has been a life-long farmer, now owning the homestead of 240 acres, living in the stone house built thirty-five years ago, and still a most pleasant home; he married, in December, 1876, Miss Susie E., daughter of L. F. and Mary (Willey) Baker; she was born in Delaware Co., Ohio, and spent her younger life in South Bend, Ind.; their little daughter, Marie B., was born on the home farm. Mr. N., like his pioneer sire, is a Republican and a member, with his family, of the Waukesha Presbyterian Church; he has been officially identified with the County Agricultural Society since its organization, and was its President in 1875 and 1876; he has also been a member of the Board of Supervisors.

M. L. SANBORN, farmer, Sec. 16; P. O. Waukesha; born in New Chester (now Bristol), Grafton Co., N. H., on New Year's Day, 1803; his mother, formerly Sally Worthen, had two children by Mr. Sanborn—Martin L. and Laura W.; Mr. S. died when M. L. was 4 years old, the widow marrying Moses Merrill, by whom she had five children—Sherburn S. (now Supt. of the C., M. & St. P. R. R.), Marian (deceased), Narcissa, Chastina, and Moses. Dec. 17, 1829, Mr. S. married Miss Emeline, daughter of John and Ruth (Wicks) Smith; she was born Oct. 23, 1811, in Bath, N. H.; after the wedding, they settled on a farm two miles north of Bath, where they lived nineteen years; their five sons were born here—Geo. W., Sept. 25, 1832; Sherburn, Sept. 15, 1834; James S.; Nov. 14, 1837; Frank L. Aug. 27, 1848, and Fred A., April 12, 1852. The eldest, now Assisant Superintendent of Iowa and Dakota Division of C., M. & St. P. R. R., resides at Mason City, Iowa; Sherburn, Superintendent of the W. & St. Peter R. R., resides at Winona, Minn.; James S. is in the ice business in Milwaukee, also owning a large brick-yard in Portage, Wis., of which Frank L. has charge; the five brothers own an equal interest in an extensive herd of cattle in Kansas, overseen by the youngest brother, who is at Madison Lodge, Kan. In 1868, the old couple settled on their present farm of 180 acres, living for the first seven years in a small house, minus cellar or closet; their present home, built of Cream City Brick, in 1875, is doubtless the finest farmhouse in Waukesha County; in this, the golden wedding was celebrated, Dec. 17, 1879; the sons met here together; a special train brought S. S. Merrill and twenty-eight guests from Milwaukee, and it was made an occasion never to be forgotten by those enjoying it. A poem, elegantly written by a niece, Miss H. M. Blanchard, was read, and contained a feeling and most fitting allusion to the kindly care of the old couple over several foster-daughters. Mr. Sanborn is a Democrat and a lifelong member of the M. E. Church; his wife, respecting her mother's wishes, has remained with the Congregationalists.

ORSON TICHENOR, farmer, Sec. 11; P. O. Waukesha; born May 8, 1820, in Galway, Saratoga Co., N. Y., son of Moses and Abby (Paul) Tichenor; his father, a scythe maker, resided thirty-six years in Amsterdam, N. Y. Moses T. spent most of 1838 looking for a location in Ohio and Illinois; resolved upon joining relatives of his wife in the latter State, he boxed up his worldly goods for Chicago; a letter from a Wisconsin friend gave so good an account of Badgerdom as to leave Mr. T. in an undecided frame of mind, which resulted finally in his landing July 7, 1839, in Milwaukee; leaving his family here, he made his second trip to Illinois; on his return, he bought of Robert Love the farm on which is the now famous Bethesda Spring, then overgrown with willows; a spring a few yards distant (now filled) was environed by noble trees, under which the young people of old times used to gather for many a social frolic and song; kind and friendly interest in each other then took the place of the modern broadcloth, kid gloves and spring hats; selling the Bethesda farm after eighteen months, Mr. T. made a third trip to Illinois, and on his return sent Orson to "spy out the land" of his mother's relatives; neither were able to buy to suit them, and the settlement of the family on the present homestead, in 1841, is the result; it was a timbered farm, and Mr. Tichenor has spent forty long years of honorable toil in making of it a most pleasant home; part of his tasteful residence was built by H. N. Davis, the former owner, and is over 40 years old; curious Indian relics have been found in reclaiming the 240 acres comprising the farm. Mrs. Tichenor was Miss Cynthia Owen, of Sullivan, Madison Co., N. Y.; they have three children—Maria E., Lottie B. and Martha K., all born on the homestead. The family belong to the Waukesha Congregational Church, Mr. T. with two others, now being the only members who united in 1840. He is a staunch old-time Abolitionist Republican, advocating temperance and opposing secret societies. His father proposed "Bethesda" as the fit name for the world-famous spring which he once owned, saying the pool and surroundings suggested the name to him; he died April 12, 1872, aged 84 years, his wife following him to the grave Oct. 12, 1872. Both were full of years and honors, kindly remembered by all who knew them.

WILLIAM S. TURNER, Secs. 25 and 26; P. O. Waukesha; born in Orange Co., N. Y., Sept 30, 1845, son of William and Margaret (Porter) Turner. The parents and seven children settled on 80 acres of the homestead, in 1848; it was bought of one Manderville, and was timbered; about 20 acres were cleared on which were no buildings of value; William Turner did good work here, clearing and adding to the farm and erecting a house and barn; he was born in Belfast, Ireland, and died May 16, 1862, one of the honored old residents of his town; was a prominent member of the R. P. Church of Vernon, and one of its original Trustees. His son has proven himself worthy of his heritage, having added 25 acres, which gives him an improved farm of 140 acres; he has also built a 30x40 foot barn on the modern plan, and erected other needful buildings. Married Miss Margaret Loughridge, a native and resident of New Berlin, by whom he has a son, Ira Wallace Turner, born Aug. 31, 1876, and a daughter, Sarah May Turner, born May 20, 1880. Mr. and Mrs. T. are members of the R. P. Church. A brother, Samuel R. Turner, now a resident of Minnesota, enlisted in Co. G, 28th W. V. I., serving with the Western army for three years.

JOHN WAGNER, farmer, Secs. 9, 16 and 17; P. O. Waukesha; born in New Berlin, Chango Co., N. Y., 1817; his father, John Wagner, was born in Worcester, Mass., and married Anna

Farnsworth, a native of Halifax, Vt. The parents, John, Jr., and two sisters came to Wisconsin in 1844, the father buying the homestead, then in its natural state, of A. C. Nickell; a 16x20 balloon-framed house, with a log addition, was the family home for about nine years; to-day, the splendid 300-acre farm, with the capacious barns and roomy and substantial farmhouse offer a striking contrast to the surroundings of thirty-six years ago, and is mainly the result of the management of the present owners; his father died in February, 1858, his mother in March, 1864; his wife was formerly Miranda Johnson, born in Preston, Chenango Co., N. Y.; her parents removed to Steele Co., Minn., where her father died in 1857, her mother ending her life at her daughter's home in April, 1867; a sister of Mr. Wagner, Relief, married Delos Vail, of Jefferson Co., Wis., and their daughter, Leoline, is as a daughter to Mr. and Mrs. Wagner. Mr. W. votes for men and principles, instead of political parties, though voting with the Republicans up to the nomination of Tilden; is an energetic and successful breeder of fine-wool sheep and fine horses; in 1844 he bought a Kentucky mare, which he kept until she was 30; he has bred constantly from her stock since, and made only one purchase, that of "Briggie Lee," a noble Kentucky mare, bred by Gen. Gano, of Bourbon Co.

J. MARCELLUS WHITE, Sec. 8; P. O. Waukesha; born in the town of New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 8, 1836; his father, Ira A., was born in Rhode Island; married Miranda, daughter of John and Anna (Farnsworth) Wagner; she was born in Chenango Co., and they have two sons, Ira M. and J. M.; the family settled in a log house, on the Waukesha homestead, in May, 1845; a few acres were cleared and a peach orchard set out by former owners; the 137 acres has been reclaimed and made valuable, a good home built, also a 35x45-foot basement barn. The old couple have resided in Waukesha Village since 1864, the son owning the farm. He married Miss Mary, daughter of Erastus and Almira (Oxford) Churchhill; her parents settled in Wauwatosa, Milwaukee Co., six weeks prior to her birth, in 1843. Mr. and Mrs. White have one daughter, Ida M.; the family belong to the Waukesha Baptist Church. Mr. White is alive to the stock interests, owning 100 fine-wool sheep, with other stock; politics Republican.

J. W. WILLIAMS, Secs. 30 and 19; P. O. Waukesha; born April 12, 1822, in Chester, Rutland Co., Vt.; son of James and Martha (Taylor) Williams; his father was born in Cranston, R. I., and his mother in Hillsboro, N. H.; the family settled on the Waukesha homestead in 1840, buying the claim of one Thompson, and the land, on its coming into market; it was then part timber (openings), marsh and prairie; more land of a similar character has been added, and the whole well improved, the 290 acres, with the capacious barns, making it a valuable stock farm; a substantial frame house supplants the log one in which the family spent the first few years; the father of Mr. W. died here in 1872, and his mother in 1874. He married Betsy M. Warner Nov. 8, 1852; she was a native of Hillsboro, N. H., and at her death, in 1874, left three children—William C., Fannie M. and Harry T., all born on the homestead; the eldest is now a resident of Wauwatosa. Mr. Williams is now an Elder in the Waukesha Presbyterian Church, of which his wife was also a member; politics, like most "Green Mountain Boys," Republican. Mr. Williams in former years devoted much attention to the breeding of superior fine-wool sheep; he now has 200 of these and a herd of thirty milch cows, with other stock and the usual crops.

JOHN WRIGHT, farmer, Sec. 33; P. O. Waukesha; born Aug. 26, 1820, in County Antrim, Ireland; son of James and Jane (Logan) Wright; he came with them to Geneseo, N. Y., in 1839, and to Waukesha in 1845; in 1854, Mr. Wright bought a farm in Vernon; he sold this, and, in 1858, bought his farm of 226 acres, then covered with timber and grubs; he has cleared the farm, fenced it, and erected all the buildings except the house; few farmers have more or better barns, one being 78x34x16, one 26x80x16, besides barns, granary, etc., about 140 acres are cultivated. Mr. Wright has four children—Lemmel A., Isabella Alice, Sarah Jane and Herman W.; the two eldest were born in Vernon, and the two youngest on the homestead. Mr. Wright is a member of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. He has sixteen head of Ayrshire cattle, twenty-two milch cows, and a herd of nearly fifty in all; he formerly kept sheep instead.

WILLIAM L. WRIGHT, farmer, Sec. 26; P. O. Waukesha; born Aug. 27, 1817, in County Antrim, Ireland; his parents, James and Jane (Logan) Wright, were of Scotch descent; the family came to America in 1839, and resided in Geneseo, N. Y., until 1845, when they came to the town of Waukesha; the father bought 160 acres (afterward the town and county poor-farm), and built the 26x36-foot house where the first Covenanters' meeting was held, and where he died July 22, 1850; he left a wife and seven children—James, Edward, William L., John, Matthew, Sarah J. and Alexander; the mother died in 1855. William L., in 1849, bought his present farm of 240 acres; on this he has built a large and pleasant two-story house, 23x37, wing 20x40, a main barn 34x55, and other farm buildings; on a small creek crossing his farm, he, in 1852, built a dam and saw-mill, which is still in active operation; has since built a feed-mill. In 1875, Mr. Wright married Miss Martha B., daughter of William and Margaret (Porter) Turner; Mr. Turner was a native of Belfast, Ireland; his wife and all but one (Mary E.) of the children were born in Orange Co., N. Y.; these were Robert C., Samuel R., Martha B., Drusella, Anna L., William S. and Margaret; the family settled on the homestead in Waukesha in 1848; here Mrs. T. and William S. reside, Mr. Turner dying May 16, 1862. Mr. and Mrs. Wright are members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, of which he was one of the first Trustees, and is now an Elder. Believing that the Constitution of the United States indorsed slavery up to 1866, and that it contains no recognition of God or Christianity, Mr. Wright has never sworn to support it, and is in consequence an alien. Mr. and Mrs. Wright have two children—Margaret J. L. and William James.

TOWN OF OCONOMOWOC.

HENRY M. ACKLEY was born in Ellisburgh Jefferson Co., N. Y., in 1828; his father, Gen. Gad Ackley, was a commander of a New York State militia brigade; he was also a captain in the war of 1812; he died in March, 1865; his mother, Mary Pond, was a daughter of Maj. Pond, of Clinton, N. Y.; she died in the spring of 1856. Mr. Ackley came to Wisconsin in January, 1857, and located on a farm at Oconomowoc; in 1860, he removed to Nashotah Mission, where he was connected with the management of the "Mission" for five years; coming thence, in 1865, to Oconomowoc, he engaged in the drug business, and in 1874 he engaged also in the lumber trade, which he has since continued in connection with his drug trade. He was married Dec. 29, 1856, in Ellisburg, N. Y., to Miss Permelia Reynolds; she died in 1864, leaving two daughters—Annie and Evangeline. His second marriage was in 1865, to Miss Josephine, daughter of Samuel and Jane (Edwards) Breck; their children are—Samuel B., Gabriella J. D., Mary E. and Charles B. Mr. Ackley and family are members of the Episcopal Church.

REV. DONALD R. ANDERSON, Pastor of the Congregational Church, was born at Potsdam, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., in September, 1839; his parents, Austin and Rachel Reed Anderson, were natives of Vermont; they removed from St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., to Allegan Co., Mich., in 1848, and located on a farm, which his father afterward improved, and made his home till his death, which occurred in March, 1877, his mother having died there in December previous. The Rev. Mr. Anderson received an academic education at Otsego, Mich.; in 1860, he went to Illinois City, where he engaged in teaching for one term, then returned to the Academy at Otsego, and completed his studies there in 1861. He enlisted in Co. B, 19th M. V. I., Aug. 9, 1862, and was with the Army of the Cumberland till the spring of 1863, when he was taken prisoner at Thompson's Station, near Franklin, Tenn., and was taken via Columbia and Tullahoma to Richmond, and was held as a prisoner for a month; then paroled in April, 1863, when he returned to his home, and was exchanged about the 1st of June; returning then with his regiment to Nashville; they went thence to Murphysboro, where he had a fever, and after lying there in Post Hospital, No. 2, till February, 1864, he came to Kalamazoo, Mich., where he stopped six weeks; April 1, 1864, he reported to Gen. Smith, and was placed in St. Mary's Hospital at Detroit, where he remained till discharged, when he returned to his home broken down in health. He engaged in teaching, during the winters, till his marriage in November, 1867, to Miss Mary L., daughter of Robert and Roxey Averill, a native of Genesee, Ill. In 1868, he engaged at photography at Dowagiac, Mich., and later at Paw Paw, Mich.; thence he came to East Troy, Walworth Co., Wis., in the spring of 1872, where he began the study of theology, and in the autumn of that year began preaching at Rochester and Waterford, Racine Co. In September, 1873, he entered the Chicago Theological Seminary, and graduated from that institution in May, 1876. During his studies in 1874-75, he preached at Oak Creek, Milwaukee Co., Wis., and after his graduation he was called to that charge, where he remained till December, 1878, when he came to Oconomowoc. Their children are Leora and Burdis; they lost a son Robert, in August, 1874, aged 6 months, and a little daughter Ethel, Dec. 15, 1879, aged 2½ years. They are buried at East Troy, Walworth Co.

MILTON ANDREWS, of the firm of Young & Andrews, manufacturers of wagons and buggies, was born in Wyoming Co., N. Y. in 1835; when he was about 4 years old, his parents, Lyman H. and Mary J. Andrews, removed with him to Plymouth, Ind., where he began his trade in 1850, and afterward continued it in Indiana, Illinois and Michigan till 1859, when he went to Colorado and engaged in mining for a year, returning to Plymouth in the autumn of 1860, where, in the following year, he enlisted in Co. D, 9th Ind. V. I., for ninety days; he came to Oconomowoc in the fall of 1861, and re-enlisted in Co. I, 29th W. V. I., in which he was color bearer, and was with his regiment in all its principal movements till the close of the war; was mustered out at Shreveport, La., in 1865; he returned then to Oconomowoc, and worked at his trade for George A. Ludington for ten years; he then engaged in various kinds of business till the spring of 1880, when he formed a copartnership with Mr. Young. He was married in September, 1868, to Miss Elizabeth Jenkins, a native of Waukesha Co., Wis; their children are Mary J. and Frank.

CHAUNCY L. ANNIS, farmer, Sec. 8; P. O. Oconomowoc; was born in Tompkins Co., N. Y., 1819; when 11 years old, he removed with his parents to Cattaraugus Co. Here he remained on the farm until 24 years of age. In September, 1843, he came to Wisconsin, stopped a short time, and then went to Rockford, Ill., where he spent the winter; in the spring of 1844, he returned to Waukesha Co., and entered 123 acres on Secs. 5 and 8, in town of Oconomowoc; a year later, he disposed of this land, and entered 170 acres on Sec. 6, and lived there till the spring of 1847. He then traded his farm for hotel property, at Summit Corners. Here he was engaged in hotel-keeping for eight years. In 1855, he returned to town of Oconomowoc and purchased a farm of 115 acres on Sec. 8; he now owns a farm of 195 acres on Secs. 8 and 9. He was a member of the Town Board for two terms, and has held the office of Justice of the Peace for twelve years. In 1840, he married Lydia, daughter of Cheney and Sally A. Allen, a native of Erie Co., N. Y.; their children are Elizabeth, now the wife of M. Comstock, at Alzona, Iowa; George M., now a farmer at Alzona, Iowa; William W., now a farmer in Kossuth Co., Iowa; Myron A., at home. Mr. and Mrs. Annis are members of the Congregational Church.

HENRY J. BAKER, farmer; was born in Somersetshire, England, March 2, 1822, and is the son of John and Elizabeth Baker. He emigrated to America in 1842, and located in Oneida Co., N. Y., where he engaged in farming and attending school till the spring of 1843; he then came to Wisconsin and located on Sec. 1, town of Oconomowoc, where he made his home as one of the pioneers till 1875; he then removed to the city of Oconomowoc, where he has since lived, though he still retains his farm of 244 acres on Secs. 1 and 2 of the town. He was a voter at the first town elections of Oconomowoc, and was a member of the Town Board in 1863-64. He was married Feb. 14, 1846, to Miss Ann, daughter of James and Ellen Lawson, a native of the Isle of Man, born Aug. 9, 1823, and came to Wisconsin in the spring of 1845; their children are George J., born Dec. 21, 1847, now a farmer in Kossuth Co., Iowa; Ella J., born May 3, 1849, now wife of William Goodyear, lives at Kerwin, Kan.; William H., born April 8, 1851, now on the farm in this town; Eunice A., born Nov. 17, 1852, also on the farm in Oconomowoc; Elizabeth C., born Sept. 25, 1854, now the wife of John D. Carlott, and lives at Chicago, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Baker and family are connected with the M. E. Church.

ALEXANDER BARTLETT, house and sign painter; was born in the town of Mendon, Monroe Co., N. Y., in 1837; his father, John Bartlett, was a native of Vermont, and came to Italy, Yates Co., N. Y., when 16 years old, and later to Monroe Co.; his mother, Mary Price, was a native of New York. In 1848, they came to Wisconsin and located at Milwaukee; three months later, they removed to Waukesha, Wis., hence, in the spring of 1849, to the town of Concord, Jefferson Co.; in 1862, they came to Oconomowoc, and, in 1864, removed to the town of St. Frances, Waukesha Co., Wis., where his father died in 1871; his mother still lives in that county. Alexander began the painter's trade with his father when 14 years old, and has followed it since that time at Oconomowoc, Wis., St. Paul, Minn., and Chicago. He was married Aug. 26, 1863, to Mary, a daughter of John and Ellen Truesdell, a native of Vermont, and came with her parents to Wisconsin, in 1841 or 1842; their children are John Wesley; James, deceased; Alexander, Frank, deceased; Ella; Mabel, deceased; George, William, Mary and Lester.

E. B. BIRCHARD, dry goods merchant; was born at Utica, N. Y., in 1814; his parents, Andrew and Elizabeth (Frasier) Birchard, were natives of Connecticut, and both died when he was young. At the age of 16 years, he began clerking in a store at Saugerties, Ulster Co., but afterward removed to Catskill, Green Co., N. Y., where he continued the same line of business till 1845; emigrating then to Waukesha, Waukesha Co., Wis., he engaged in the dry goods trade, which he carried on there till 1860, when he removed to Oconomowoc, opened a store, and has since continued that line of merchandising. He was married at Troy, N. Y., in 1842, to Miss Sophia, daughter of James and Sophia Beem, a native of Catskill, N. Y.; she died at Waukesha, Wis., in 1848, leaving one daughter—Caroline F., now the wife of E. K. Holton, and lives at St. Louis, Mo.

Samuel G. P. Smith

NEW BERLIN.

HENRY BIRDSSELL, carpenter and joiner; was born in Orange Co., N. Y., Dec. 15, 1822; his father, Morris Birdsell, was a native of Orange Co. N. Y., but his mother, Jane Blanvelt, of New Jersey. When 16 years old, he removed with his parents, to Jefferson Co., N. Y., where in the following year he became apprenticed to the carpenter and joiner's trade, which he has followed most of the time since. He was married in Jefferson Co., N. Y., Aug. 19, 1845, to Miss Sarah A., daughter of Phineas and Phebe Langworthy, a native of that county, born June 20, 1827. October 24, 1849, they arrived as emigrants at Oconomowoc, Wis., where he at once took up his trade. He enlisted at Neosha, Dodge Co., Wis., in October 1863, in the 7th W. B. L. A., under Capt. Lee, of Milwaukee, and was with his battery in the Army of the Cumberland, till mustered out at Milwaukee, Wis., in the spring of 1865; he was wounded at Memphis, Tenn., Aug. 22, 1864, receiving two balls, one through his left lung and passing through his body, the other in the right side and coming out under the collar-bone. Mr. and Mrs. Birdsell have four children—Henry, born in New York, June 14, 1848, now lives in Janesville, Wis; Mary, born March 20, 1852, now the wife of Alonzo H. Wells, and lives at Neosha, Dodge Co., Wis; George M., born in the town of Ashippun, Dodge Co., Jan. 21, 1860; Nettie, born Jan. 19, 1862. Mr. Birdsell has been a member of the I. O. O. F. for twenty-eight years. He was one of the charter members of Lodge No. 48, Oconomowoc.

FREDERICK BLAKE, farmer, Sec. 17; P. O. Oconomowoc; was born in the town of Camden, Oneida Co., N. Y., 1811; when quite young, he began the tanner and shoemaker's trade, with his father, Jesse Blake; after following that trade for some time, he took the carpenter and joiner's trade, which he then followed until 1847, emigrating then to Wisconsin he located in the town of Lagrange, Walworth Co.; in February, 1848, he removed to the town of Oconomowoc and bought eighty acres of land, where he has since resided. He was married in Oneida Co., N. Y., in March, 1837, to Emily, daughter of Ephraim and Temperance (Dunbar) Sanford, a native of that county, born April 19, 1813; they have three children—Mary M., the late wife of Jonas Stabe, of Watertown, Wis., left one son Frederick (also dead); Aurelia T., the late wife of Dr. S. FRED. W. COON, the founder, present editor and publisher of the Oconomowoc Local, was born in the town of Christiana, Dane Co., Wis., June 14, 1850; his parents removed from Madison Co., N. Y., while this State was yet a Territory, in 1846, and settled upon the best section of farming lands that could at that early date be found. At that time the wildness of the county was unbroken save but by the well-worn Indian trails which led from the four lakes at Madison to Lake Koshkonong, which, a few years previous, had been the camping-ground of the famous Indian chief Black Hawk. His earlier days were employed in attending the district school and work upon the farm, until he had attained the age of 13, when he entered Albion Academy for a three years' course. In the winter after attaining his 16th year, he taught a district school, and two years later the winter term of the same school. In the summer of 1871, he attended the State University, at Madison, and in the following fall was duly admitted to the Junior class of that institution; he graduated with his class in 1873, receiving the degree of B. S. While a student at the University, he was an active member of the Hesperian Society, representing it at two of its public exhibitions, both as poet and orator. The year following his graduation was spent in teaching and upon the farm. In September, 1874, he removed to Oconomowoc and established the L'ocal, being both editor and publisher. May 3, 1875, he was married to Miss Clara McDougal, a daughter of Geo. W. McDougal, of Madison, Wis.

ALEXANDER COYLE, farmer, Secs. 10 and 11, was born in the city of Glasgow, Scotland, June 3, 1819; his father, William Coyle, was a native of Ireland, his mother, of Scotland. At the age of 20 years, he, with his parents, came to America, and located in County Bathurst, Canada West, where he made his home till 1843, when he and his brother James came to Waukesha Co., Wis., and, cutting their way through the woods from Okauchee to Mapleton, made a claim to his present farm of 320 acres, and also to the 200 acres in Sec. 2. They had considerable trouble with one Richardson about jumping their claim and getting others to claim that in Sec. 2, but in the spring of 1844 Mr. Coyle returned to his father's, in Canada, and got money, with which to enter the land, which after much annoyance, settled the case in court. Mr. Coyle has since lived on his farm in Secs. 10 and 11, and now has 210 acres. He was married Sept. 6, 1847, to Catharine, daughter of James and Mary Butler, a native of Canada, but her parents of County Wexford, Ireland; their children are Helen, born July 2, 1848, now the wife of John Quissee, and lives in Concord, Jefferson Co., Wis.; Mary, born Feb. 7, 1850, now lives in Minneapolis, Minn.; William, born May 6, 1852, now in Oconomowoc; Anna, born May 24, 1854, now the wife of John Fay, and lives in Vernon Co., Wis.; Alexander, born April 10, 1856, now in Leadville; Charlotte, born May 7, 1858, still at home; Peter, born Aug. 2, 1860; Mrs. Coyle died Dec. 10, 1865. His second marriage was Dec. 26, 1866, to Miss Jane, daughter of Bernard and Jane Dugan, a native of County Antrim, Ireland, born Feb. 1, 1838; she came to Philadelphia in 1859, and to Milwaukee, Wis., in 1861; their children are Josephine, born Dec. 6, 1869; Elizabeth, born July 6, 1871, died March 13, 1872; Joseph, born Dec. 22, 1872; Catharine, born Dec. 11, 1874, died April 6, 1878; Elizabeth, born July 20, 1878; Catharine, born Dec. 7, 1879. Mr. Coyle's family are members of the Catholic Church.

WILLIAM COYLE, of the firm of Nash & Coyle, manufacturers and dealers in boots and shoes, was born in Mapleton, Waukesha Co., Wis., in 1854, and in 1875 he began the shoemaker's trade, with his partner, Mr. Nash, and in August, 1879, formed a copartnership with him in the business. He was married, August, 1876, to Miss Ella Fogarty, of Oconomowoc; they have two children, Clara and Alexander. They are members of St. Jerome's Catholic Church.

R. S. DALE, M. D., homeopathic physician; was born in Seneca Co., N. Y., in 1844; his parents removed with him to Sonora, Steuben Co., when he was only 5 years old, where he afterward received an academic education; he came to Wisconsin in 1861, and located at Oshkosh, where he began the study of medicine with his brother, then a practicing physician of that city; returning to New York after a fourteen months' stay at Oshkosh; he came again to Wisconsin and settled in the practice of his profession at Omro, Winnebago Co.; he joined the State Medical Society, passed his examination and received his diploma from society in 1868; he removed to Eau Claire, Wis., in 1869, and practiced medicine there till 1874, when he came to Oconomowoc, and has since continued the practice of his profession. He was married at Eau Claire, in 1873, to Miss Ella, daughter of William P. Butterfield, a native of Allegany Co., N. Y.; they have one daughter, Edna B. Mr. and Mrs. Dale are members of the Congregational Church. The Doctor is a member of the I. O. O. F.

MARTIN Z. DIBBLE, carpenter and joiner; was born in Jefferson Co., N. Y., in 1830, and came with his parents, Jasper and Harriet Dibble, to Mackinaw Island, whence, in December, 1840, they came to Oconomowoc, Wis., and located in the village opposite the Draper Hall. His father became employed by J. S. Rockwell & Co., and remained in their employ, more or less of the time, till his death, which occurred in 1857; his mother now lives at Columbus, Wis. Mr. Z. began the butcher's trade in 1845, and followed that till 1854 or '55, after which he was engaged in various kinds of business till 1864, when he enlisted in Co. C. 43d W. V. I., under Col. Cobb, was with the Army of the Tennessee and Mississippi, and was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., and discharged at Milwaukee in 1865. He then returned to Oconomowoc and has since followed the carpenter and joiner's trade. He was married in 1859, to Eliza Knox, a native of Pennsylvania, and came to Wisconsin in 1854; their children are: Adelaide, Minnie, George, Harry, Fred and Blanche. They are members of the M. E. Church.

MARTIN T. DRAPER was born in Uxbridge, Worcester Co., Mass., Aug. 22d, 1814, and lived in Massachusetts until he came to Milwaukee in November 1843; lived there eight years, and in Portage nine years, he came to Oconomowoc fourteen years ago. Mr. Draper has been proprietor of Draper Hall, Oconomowoc, for the last ten years, County Commissioner for four years, Mayor three terms, and is now serving as Mayor. He was married in 1835 to Caroline Watson, in Massachusetts, who was born in Leicester, Mass.; she died in 1841, leaving two children—Edward F., now a merchant of Delaware City, Cornelia M., now of Worcester, Mass. His present wife was Caroline Calkins, of Milwaukee; they were married in July, 1844; they have one son and a daughter, Mary, and Charles B., son of Frost and Mary Thayer Draper. Before entering into the hotel business, he was agent for capitalists in entering lands and selling the same, and looking after investments for other parties; while in Milwaukee, this was his principal business. At Portage he sold goods, acted as trustee and assignee for various estates. He is one of the most enterprising and public spirited citizens of Oconomowoc. His grandfather, David Draper, was one of the first patriots to enlist in defense of the rights of the colonies, and fought at Bunker Hill and in subsequent battles. In running for office, Mr. Draper has always polled a large vote; living in a Republican city, he has been elected by a large majority to serve as Mayor for three terms, showing the appreciation of his ability and integrity as a representative of the people in the important position to which he has so often been elected. In politics, he has always been Democratic. Mr. Draper is as popular as a landlord, as he is a citizen. Oconomowoc has become popular as a summer resort, and Draper Hall, open during the whole year, is usually crowded during the summer months. The natural attractions of Oconomowoc are unsurpassed, and Mr. Draper has done more than any other man to make it a favorite resort during the summer months; his house is situated between Fowler and La Belle lakes, his grounds extending to both. Before coming west, Mr. Draper was engaged in trading, sometimes in West India goods, dry goods, and at other times in lumber and coal in different parts of Massachusetts. He received only a common school education, but he had a taste for mercantile pursuits, and consequently engaged quite extensively in the trading mentioned, before coming West.

H. R. ELDERKIN, M. D., was born at New Albany, Ind., in 1833, and is the son of Lathrup (a lawyer) and Martha E. Elderkin. The doctor began the study of medicine with Dr. William Cooper, of New Albany, in 1853, and after pursuing his studies there for three years he entered, in 1856, the medical department of the University of Louisville, Ky., from which he graduated in 1858; he came, shortly after completing his studies, to Oconomowoc, Wis. Having been a student at Nashotah Mission when a boy, he was favorably impressed with this country. He formed a co-partnership with Dr. H. H. Warner, in the practice of medicine, and in the drug business—Dr. Warner having opened the first drug store in the village some years before that time. After practicing in this vicinity for a few years, the doctor removed to Waterville, where he continued practice till the winter of 1866-67, except a part of the years of 1864-65, when he offered his services to the United States Government, and was placed in charge of Hospital No. 11, at New Albany, Ind. He spent the winter of 1866-67 as a student at Bellevue Hospital, of New York, and in June, 1868, he settled in the practice of his profession at Fort Howard, Brown Co., Wis. Ten years later, he removed to Milwaukee, whence, in February, 1880, he returned to Oconomowoc, where he has been engaged in the general practice of his profession. He was married Oct. 21, 1862, to Miss Ann E., daughter of Samuel and Martha J. Breck, of Oconomowoc; their children are Laura P., born Jan. 8, 1865; Anna R., born Sept. 17, 1868; Philazamia H., born Jan. 25, 1876. The doctor and his family are members of the Episcopal Church.

E. E. ELY, retired; son of Joseph and Annie Nicholson Ely, was born in Bucks Co., Penn., in 1837. He came to Oconomowoc in 1856, and began clerking for J. S. Rockwell in a general store, and continued with him as clerk till his death, after which he remained with the stock of goods then on hand for a time; he began the hardware trade in 1863, and continued that business till the spring of 1879. Mr. Ely was City Treasurer of Oconomowoc in 1879. He was married in 1869, to Miss Eleanor, daughter of B. B. Frances Babcock, a native of Pennsylvania, who died Sept. 22, 1879, leaving one son, Edward E., born Jan. 4, 1871; they had a daughter, Mabel—she was born and died in 1873. Mrs. Ely was a member of the Episcopal Church.

HENRY ERREDGE, proprietor of blacksmith shop; was born in the city of London, July 10, 1828; son of George and Sophia (Reed) Erredge. He sailed for America in 1845, and landed in New York City, May 22, that year; in June following, reached Waukesha, Wis.; thence, after a short stay, he went to Lake Five, where he stopped with an uncle on the farm till fall; returning then to Waukesha, he was employed a few weeks, by Bacon & Block, wagon manufacturers, after which he worked at the baker's trade, with George Head, of that place, for about a year; going again to Lake Five, for a short time, he then went to Milwaukee, where, in the spring of 1847, he joined the 15th U. S. R. A., under Col. Morgan. They were soon ordered to Newport, Ky.; thence, via New Orleans and Vera Cruz, to the City of Mexico; was discharged at Covington, Ky., Aug. 4, 1848. Returning then via Milwaukee and Lake Five to Waukesha, in the fall of 1848, he became apprenticed to the blacksmith's trade, with Clinton & Poole, and remained with them till the spring of 1850, when he came to Oconomowoc, and, with Henry Merwin, rented a shop and carried on the blacksmith trade here, till November, 1850; he then went again to Waukesha, but failed to find employment at his trade, so went to grading on the M. & M. R. R., and in February, 1851, got a position in the railroad shops at Waukesha, where he remained till the shops were removed to Milwaukee; going to Chicago in 1853, he found work for three or four months, with Gates & McKnight, after which he returned to Waukesha, and worked for Case & Pulling, at building and ironing cars for the M. & M. R. R. Co.; in the winter of 1853-54, he went to Lake Five, and started a shop for himself, which he continued till the spring of 1859; he then started for Pike's Peak, and got as far as Plattsmouth, when he became discouraged, and returned to Genesee, Wis., where he bought a blacksmith and wagon shop, and carried on the business, under the firm of Erredge & West, till 1862, when he joined the Quartermaster's Department, Army of the Potomac, and remained in the South till the battle of the Wilderness; were then ordered back to Alexandria, Va.; then, two weeks later, to White House Landing; was discharged at City Point, Va., in 1864. He then returned to Genesee, Wis., but soon re-engaged with the government, and was sent to Nashville, Tenn., in 1865, but on account of sickness, was soon forced home again. He engaged in merchandising, till the spring of 1866, when, May 15, he started for Montana Territory; he joined Capt. Fisk at St. Paul, went thence with a team of six cows and one yoke of oxen, via Fort Benton to Helena City, Montana, where they arrived in October, making the trip in 100 days. He, with two others, bought a claim at "Dry Gulch," and engaged in mining, but met with no success till the winter of 1867, when, with Mr. Foroute, he bought a claim at "Tucker Gulch," where they realized $100 per day, for a time. Refusing $10,000 for their claim, they worked it about a year, and left it without a penny. He then worked at his trade at Helena City, till 1869, when he came again to Waukesha, Wis. In October, 1869, he went to Omaha, Neb., bought a third interest in a railroad hotel, which burned in May, 1870, leaving him again penniless. After a visit to Waukesha, he then went to Sun River, Montana, where he worked at his trade till July, 1873, when he received an injury from a kick of a horse, and returned to Ft. Benton; there he, with six others, bought a small steamer, and sailed down the Missouri River to Bismark, Neb., then the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad; there he took the train for St. Paul; thence down the river to St. Louis, Mo.; thence to Oconomowoc, and engaged with I. Rowell & Sons in the foundry, till June, 1876, when he became proprietor of his present shop. He was married, Nov. 3, 1875, to Hannah M., daughter of H. G. Jones, of this city; they have one daughter, Eliza; he has one son, George H., by a former marriage. Mr. Erredge has been a member of the masonic fraternity for 20 years; he is now Master of the Ellsworth Lodge, No. 133.

JOHN EVENSON, molder for I. Rowell & Sons, was born in Norway, July 27, 1833; he began the trade of a molder when 18 years old, and continued it there till 1862, when he came to America and located at Oconomowoc, and has worked at his trade here since; he began work for I. Rowell & Sons in 1868. He was married in Norway in 1862, to Miss Anna Sunderson, who died at Oconomowoc, Wis., May 7, 1876, leaving four children—Inger, Sophia, Eliza and Eddie. HORACE H. FAY, baggage master; son of Waterman B. and Ruth M. Fay; was born in the town of Conway, Berkshire Co., Mass., Dec. 6, 1835; when a mere babe, his parents removed with him to Dexter, Livingston Co., Mich., whence, in 1849, they came to Oconomowoc, locating in the village; he began clerking for his uncle, G. W. Fay, in dry goods store, and remained with him three or four years, after which he was employed as toll-gate keeper at Hartland till 1854. At the grading of the railroad from Milwaukee to Oconomowoc, he was employed by Fay & Collins on the work for one summer; then worked at farming for his uncle some time. In 1859, he began farming in the town of Ixonia, Jefferson Co., which he continued till 1868, when he removed to the village of Oconomowoc, where, in 1872, he became employed as baggage master for the C. M. & St. P. R. R. Co. He was married Nov. 6, 1859, to Mrs. Eunice A., widow of V. B. Campbell and daughter of Moses and Eleanor Kittle, a native of Wyoming Co., N. Y. Born in 1838 and came to Wisconsin with parents in 1849. Their children are George O., born Aug. 28, 1860, now married and lives in city of Oconomowoc; Charles, born Dec. 9, 1862; Lizzie A., born Aug. 4, 1868, Katie, born April 21, 1871; Harry, born Feb. 8, 1878. Mr. Fay is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

WATERMAN B. FAY (deceased) was the son of Putnam and Elizabeth Fay, and was born at Brighton, Mass., Sept. 4, 1809, and died June 4, 1879, making his age 69 years and 9 months; his early years were spent in the quiet but laborious duties of farm life; his early training was such as developed those manly traits of character for which he was so dearly beloved by those who deeply mourn his loss, and which won for him the high regard of all who knew him; he was one of the earliest settlers of this western clime, having left his eastern home in 1835 to seek his fortune, with his faithful companion, in this then wilderness world; he first located in Michigan, at Dexter, Livingston Co.; there he remained until the fall of 1849, when he moved to this place; he resided in the village until the following June, when he moved on to the farm now occupied by Mr. Gibbs, southwest of this city; there he remained for a term of years, and then moved into and took charge of the toll house connected with the plank road; after residing there a number of years, he went to the Campbell farm at the foot of the lake; next he removed into the village, where he was mail messenger for thirteen years and never missed but one trip to the train till disease confined him to his bed. He was married Aug. 28, 1833, to Ruth M., daughter of Levi and Phylinda (Warren) Parsons, of Brighton, Mass.; by whom he had four children—Horace H., now in Oconomowoc, George now in Nevada; Martha W., born May 4, 1840, died May 16, 1840, Mary E., born January 4, 1844, died January 8, 1844. His family consisted of a devoted wife, who was faithful in the highest degree to the very last, and two sons, one of whom fills the position of freight agent at our depot, while the other has sought his fortune in Nevada. Mr. Fay united with the Congregational Church of this city May 1, 1864; in the last month of his life, he was led to feel and acknowledge his shortcomings and remissness in duty, and to rejoice that he was brought "back to his Father's house," there to receive anew the righteous garb, to receive the ring of the Father's approval, and to partake of the rich repast prepared for every returning prodigal; he was a great, yet ever-patient sufferer, and all who saw him in his last days will witness to the fact that he exemplified the spirit of the religion he possessed in a wonderful manner. Not a murmur escaped his lips, but his common expression was, "All is well." The last expression his Pastor heard him make was, "Bless the Lord." We laid his emaciated form on yonder hillside, but long hours before the angels had borne his weary spirit to the beautiful land beyond. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

GEORGE W. FAY was born in Brighton, Middlesex Co., Mass., July 9, 1811; came from Boston to Milwaukee, where he was employed in the mercantile business from 1842 to 1844; then went to Oconomowoc in July, 1844, and engaged in general merchandising and farming; he was with W. W. Having lost his sight in 1852, he has amused himself much of the time by making puzzles and carving various kinds of implements out of wood that are truly curiosities. He was married in 1839 to Miss Sarah B., daughter of Medad and Ruth Squires, a native of Franklin Co., Mass.; born 1816. Mr. and Mrs. Hastings are members of the Congregational Church.

J. SMITH HASTINGS. The name Hastings is of an illustrious family in history. The race to which it applies is of Danish origin. In the early days of the British Kingdom the Danes made frequent incursions upon that part of England and Scotland bordering upon the North Sea. It was in one of these incursions that Hastings, a Danish chief, made himself formidable to Alfred the Great, by leading a large body of men upon the coast. He took possession of a portion of Sussex, and the castle and seaport were held by his family when William the Conqueror "landed in England, and they held the crown for many generations." The grandfather of our subject was born in England May 20, 1746, and came to America prior to, and was married in, 1769, to Hannah Billings, of Amherst, Mass. He was a soldier in the Revolution, and afterward located at Amherst. This is the origin of the Hastings family in America. His parents, Lucius and Olive Smith Hastings, located in the town of Amherst, Hampshire Co., Mass., and raised a family of six children—four sons and two daughters. The daughters now live in Massachusetts—Sarah S., in South Deerfield, and Sybil W., in Hadley, Mass. Our subject was born in Amherst, Hampshire Co., Mass., Sept. 18, 1818, and came with his brother David to Wisconsin in November, 1842. His brothers Horace and Hamilton came in the following June. He located on a farm on Sec. 30, town of Oconomowoc, Waukesha County, where he made his home for two years; then removed to the town of Ixonia, Jefferson County, and engaged in cutting heavy timber for awhile. He was Assessor of the towns of Concord and Ixonia before their separation, and was one of the Board at the time of their divisions. He, with his brother Hamilton, who lived on an adjoining farm, built the Maple Grove House on the plank road from Milwaukee to Watertown in 1850, and two years later he bought his brother's interest and ran the house alone for awhile. Trading the hotel at Maple Grove for property in Watertown to Mr. John Gibbs, he returned to Massachusetts for the winter, but came again to Wisconsin in the following spring. He began merchandising at Rock River, Rock County, and Pipersville, Jefferson County, which he continued for six years. He then engaged in the manufacture of saleratus till 1863, when he sold out and engaged in agriculture in Rock County till 1867, when he returned to Oconomowoc, and has since lived a more retired life. He was married at Ashfield, Franklin County, Mass., June 26, 1839, to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Lewis and Susannah (Hooper) Chamberlin, a native of Stockbridge, Mass., born Aug. 11, 1820. Their children are Ellen M., born at Ashfield, Mass., Dec. 1, 1841; married to Calvin W. Burns, of Watertown, Wis., Sept. 26, 1860; lives now at Lime Springs, Howard Co., Iowa; Oliver A., born at Oconomowoc, Wis., June 26, 1844; married at Watertown, Wis., Jan. 1, 1861, to William E. Duerdin, and now lives at Ripon, Wis.; Lewis J., born in Ixonia, Jefferson Co., Wis., May 29, 1846; married Miss Josie, daughter of David Smith, of Rock County, Wis., in August 1866, and now resides in York County, Neb.

ANTHONY HOUSER, merchant and Postmaster at Mapleton; was born in Baden in 1839. He emigrated to America in 1854, and located in Milwaukee and engaged in clerking until February 1855; from Milwaukee, he came to Mapleton, and continued clerking until 1857, after which he spent a year in the same business in Oconomowoc. In 1858, he returned to Mapleton, and has been since engaged in merchandising. He was married in 1861, to Miss Kate Riggs, a native of Canada, who died in 1869, leaving five children, as follows: John F., now a clerk in Milwaukee; Anna S., now a student in Milwaukee; Mary A., deceased; Ambrose E., a student at Watertown; Joseph, deceased. EDWIN HURLBUT, journalist and attorney; was born at Newtown, Conn., Oct. 10, 1817, at the age of 7, he moved with his parents to Bradford Co., Penn., from where, after attending school about seven years, he struck out for himself, going on foot to Newark, N. J.; after residing there one year, he emigrated to Michigan, but soon after returned East and began the study of law; at the age of 24 he had saved $1,400 and paid $1,200 for a home, and the balance for books, only to be bitterly disappointed by finding a mortgage on the house. He was now living at Lodi, N. Y., having married Catherine Chandler on Oct. 10, 1840—his 23d birthday. After losing his home by the unknown mortgage, Mr. H. moved to Towanda, Penn., and commenced the study and practice of law, and after finishing his sixth year, in 1847, he was admitted to the bar; in the same year he returned to Michigan, was admitted to practice at the bar, and received the appointment of Postmaster; was also appointed District Attorney; also received from Gov. Ransom the appointment of Judge Advocate in the State militia, with the rank of Colonel; in 1850, he came to Wisconsin and settled in Oconomowoc, where he has since resided, and was admitted in the Circuit Court, also in the Supreme Court and United States Court. In the first year of his residence in this State, he was appointed the attorney of the Milwaukee, Waterloo & Madison Plank Road; and, at another time, Chairman of the Democratic County Committee; in 1854, he was Chairman of the Senatorial and Assembly Committee, from which time he has figured conspicuously in the political affairs of the State. In Madison, at the People's Convention, where the Republican party of this State, was organized, he opposed the further extension of slavery; in 1856 he was elected District Attorney, and in 1858, he was appointed attorney for the M., B. D. & B. R. R., now C., M. & St. P. R., R., holding the position several years; in 1860 and 1864, he supported Lincoln for the Presidency; in 1861, he was appointed Colonel on Gov. Randall's staff; took an active part in getting recruits for the army, contributing largely in bounties to the families of those who enlisted and pledged his services gratuitously for procuring their pensions and bounties—a pledge which he has faithfully kept. He was sent to Washington with the 4th Wisconsin Regiment, receiving an appointment in the State Commissary Department; was appointed to the duty of inspecting troops and studying the qualifications of officers for promotion; in the same year, he was appointed aide to the Commander-in-Chief, with the rank of Colonel, by Gov. Randall; in 1862, he was appointed Deputy United States Marshal, with Provost-Marshal power, to issue passes and superintend military affairs in his district; was also tendered a position, by the Governor, of Colonel of one of the regiments, but declined, because the army was being officered by politicians, rather than soldiers; in 1868, he gained an election to the Legislature by the Republicans; while there he introduced a bill for the repeal of the law which deprived deserters of the right of franchise; in 1869, was appointed one of the managers of the State Industrial School at Waukesha; in 1870, was appointed by Gov. Fairchild, to represent him at the International Congress, on penitentiary and reformatory discipline; was elected one of the Vice Presidents; in 1872, was appointed a delegate to the International Penitentiary Congress in London, England; in the same year, he indorsed the nomination of Horace Greeley for the Presidency, and has been identified with the reform movement since then; in 1873, was elected District Attorney for Waukesha Co., on the Reform ticket. In May, 1874, he was a member of the National Prison Congress, held at St. Louis, and elected one of its Trustees, and appointed on the Committee on Criminal Law Reform; in 1875, was appointed a member of the Board of Managers of the State Industrial School for three years; the same year, he was elected a Trustee of the National Prison Association at New York, and also one of the Committee on Discharged Convicts; he has held the positions of Trustee and President of the village of Oconomowoc, and has zealously devoted himself to its prosperity. In religious belief he is a Baptist; is strictly temperate in his habits; is a member of Waukesha Chapter No. 37, A., F. & A. M. He has children—daughters now living. The death of his first wife occurred April 6, 1864; was married, December following, to Mrs. M. H. Farner, of Waukesha, Wis. Schimmelpfennig, in the spring of 1855, and located in the town of Ixonia, Jefferson Co., Wis., where his mother died in the following fall; he made his home with his father, in Ixonia, till the spring of 1863, when he went to Rockford, Ill.; worked at farming till 1864, and then enlisted in Co. M, 8th Ill. C., and served eleven months with his regiment in the Army of the Potomac; he was mustered out at Washington, D. C., in 1865, when he returned to Rockford, and continued work a few months; then went to Ogle and Mason Counties, where he continued till the spring of 1867, when he returned to Jefferson Co., Wis., where he spent the summer. He was married in the fall of 1867 to Johannah Huebner, a native of Prussia; They have now five children—Annie, Edward (deceased), William, Huldah, Lydia and Ida. He located on Sec. 17, town of Oconomowoc, Waukesha Co., soon after marriage, and made that his home till 1875, when he removed to a farm on Secs. 19 and 20, where they now live.

JOSEPH SCOTT, foreman for Vilas & Co., in lumber-yard, was born in the town of Janesville, Rock Co., Wis., in 1849; his parents, Samuel and Maria Scott, emigrated from Scotland and located on a farm in his native town, where they died when he was only 3 years old; he made that his home till 1863, when he removed to Janesville and began the carpenter and joiner's trade, and followed that line of business there till the spring of 1871; coming to Oconomowoc, he continued his trade for two years; he was employed by G. Vilas & Co. in the spring of 1873, and has since been retained in his present position. Mr. Scott has been engineer of the fire company since its organization; he was elected a member of the City Council from the Third Ward in the spring of 1880. He was married in November, 1871, to Miss Phebe L., daughter of Alexander and Laura Murrey, a native of Green Co., Wis., born in September, 1847; her parents were natives of Scotland, and emigrated to that county in 1845; their children are—George A. and Walter J. Mr. and Mrs. S. are members of the Congregational Church; he is a member of the Temple of Honor.

CHARLES B. SHELDON, farmer, Sec. 33; P. O. Oconomowoc; the first pioneer of Oconomowoc; was born in the town of Gouverneur, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., in 1812; his father, a pioneer of that country, was born at Providence, R. I.; he died about 1876; his mother, Nancy Bowen, was also a native of Providence, and died about 1860. Mr. Sheldon spent his life at farming in his native town till 1834, when he emigrated to Iowa, and there spent the winter of 1834-35; coming to Mineral Point, Wis., in the spring of 1835, he engaged in mining for two years, and, while there, learned something of the lands about Milwaukee and this region, which induced him to seek a location in these parts, coming via Janesville, Prairieville (now Waukesha), thence up the Indian trail to Oconomowoc, where he arrived as the first settler April 27, 1837; he made his claim to 160 acres on the east half of Sec. 33, and built his rude pioneer shanty on the creek bank, which sufficed for a dwelling for about ten years; he then built his present house on the north end of his farm, and has made that his home since. He was married in 1845 to Miss Lucinda, daughter of Augustus and Clarinda (Hedges) Cotton, a native of Attica, N. Y., who came with her parents to Oconomowoc in 1844; she died in 1857, leaving three children—Nancy C. (now at home), Albert (married, and now lives on the farm) and Anna M. (who died in 1879). His second marriage was in 1861, to Sarah Brown, nee Rix, a native of Canada, who came to Washington Co., Wis., with her parents, when a child; she had two children—Allie and Samuel Brown—by her former marriage; they have two children—Lizzie and Charles B.

AMUND SIMONS, of the firm of Olson & Simons, house and sign painters, was born in Norway in 1833. At the age of 20 years, he began the life of a seaman, and in 1857 sailed for America, after which he sailed round Cape Horn to San Francisco and continued on the Atlantic, Pacific and the Great Lakes till 1866; he then located at Oconomowoc, Wis., where he followed various kinds of business till 1873, when he began the painter's trade with J. L. Hastings; a year later, he began work for Olson & Hasting, and in 1877 he formed a copartnership with Mr. Olson, in the present firm of which he is a member. He was married in 1866 to Mrs. Mary Olson, a native of Norway, but then a resident of Oconomowoc; they are members of the Lutheran Church.

HON. DAVID W. SMALL, was born at Frankfort, Philadelphia County, Penn., December 18, 1827; his father was a farmer, and both parents were members of the Society of Friends; he was reared on his father's farm; prior to his 16th year, he had received only a common-school education; he then spent two years at the Moravian College, at Nazareth, and at the age of 18, he began to teach and read law; in April, 1850, he was admitted to the bar at Doylestown, in his native State, and immediately started for Wisconsin, arriving at Oconomowoc in May of the same year; part of the following two years he spent in surveying, as legal business was quite limited at that time. Mr. Small held some offices of minor importance soon after coming to Oconomowoc, and, after the first two years of his residence here, his law practice became sufficiently large to require his entire attention. In 1862, he was elected District Attorney for Waukesha County, and subsequently re-elected. He was chosen Judge of the Second Judicial Circuit in 1869, re-elected in 1875, and still holds the office. His wife was Miss Susannah Ely; they have three children, one son and two daughters.

CHESTER M. SMITH, was born in the town of Champlain, Jefferson Co., N. Y., in 1819. He began the carpenter and joiner's trade with his father, when 14 or 15 years old, and continued there till 1845. Emigrating then to Wisconsin, he landed in Milwaukee on the 1st day of June, going thence to Eagle Prairie, Waukesha (then Milwaukee) County, where he built a house for Mr. W. W. Tredway, and in the following year he built a mill at what is now known as the Trout Pond, and located there. Removing to the village of Oconomowoc in 1850 with his effects, which consisted of a kit of carpenter tools, and $3, he continued his trade here till 1852. He was then appointed Deputy Sheriff by Patrick Casey, and, after serving two years under him, was re-appointed by Charles Ellis to hold that position during another term. Having lost all he had in a steam-mill in 1854, in 1860 he gathered together the little he had accumulated during that time, a wagon, three horses and $100, and went to Colorado, where he engaged in the butcher trade; was interested in a salt spring and various other kinds of business till July 1863; disposing then of his interest there, he returned to Oconomowoc and engaged in the grain, stock and produce trade till 1869. Mr. Smith, like many other enterprising men, has fully realized the "ups and downs" of a business life, but has now retired with a reasonable reward for his energy. He has held the office of Justice of the Peace for fourteen years, School Clerk for six years, School Director for two terms, and Assessor for three terms. He was married in 1851 to Margaret J. White, a native of Ohio, who died at Oconomowoc Nov. 21, 1861, leaving one daughter, Jennie, now the wife of Wm. Collins, of Milwaukee; she has one daughter, Maggie. He was married in January, 1873, to Mary Whipple, of Concord, Jefferson Co., Wis., a native of New York. Their children are Charles M., Minnie and Kittie. Mrs. Whipple now lives with Mr. Smith, and is in her 80th year.

D. B. SMITH, teacher; was born in the town of Walcott, Wayne Co., N. Y., March 3, 1836; he removed with his parents, in 1845, to Rochester, N. Y., whence, in the following year, they came to Milwaukee, Wis.; locating in the city for a year, they then removed to Wauwatosa, Milwaukee Co., where he attended common school, and made that his home most of the time till 1860; he began teaching at Granville, Milwaukee Co., in 1855, and continued there five years; removing to the town of Porter, Rock Co., in 1860, he followed farming during the summers and teaching during the winters, at Brookfield Junction, Waukesha Co., till 1863, when he returned to Wauwatosa, and taught there till the summer of 1864; he enlisted in August, 1864, in Co. A, 43d, W. V. I., under Col. Cobb, was elected Sergeant, was with the Army of the Cumberland, and was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., June 24, 1865; returning then to his father's home, in the town of Porter, Rock Co., Wis., he spent the autumn of 1865 at the Milton Academy, and the following winter in teaching at Dunkirk, Dane Co., and re-entered the Academy in the spring of 1866 for that term; he spent eight months of the summer and autumn of 1866 teaching in the Town of Wauwatosa, Milwaukee Co., and the following winter teaching in the village of Wauwatosa; he removed to Oconomowoc in the spring of 1867, and spent the summer at farming, and in the fall of that year was elected first assistant in the Oconomowoc Public Schools; in 1868, he conducted the Oconomowoc Academy; in 1869, was elected Principal of the Public School of the city, and held that position till 1875 (except three months spent at Pewaukee); he next taught three terms at Merton, Waukesha Co., and was Superintendent of the city schools of Oconomowoc during that time. He taught during the winter of 1878-79 at Menomonee Falls, and in the spring of 1880, was elected to a position in the 12th District School, of Milwaukee, which position he now holds. He was married, in 1868, to Miss Eliza, daughter of W. B. and Emily Bradley, a native of the town of Menomonee, Waukesha Co., Wis., born in 1846; they have one daughter, Lizzie. Mr. Smith is a Royal Arch Mason. His father died March 24, 1873; his mother now lives with him. His family is connected with the Congregational Church.

GEORGE SNYDER, farmer, Sec. 27; P. O. Oconomowoc; was born in Saxony, in July, 1827. His parents, Casper and Margaret Snyder, emigrated with their family to America, in 1840, and settled in the town of Genesee, Waukesha Co., Wis., his father dying there in about two months after their arrival, and left their mother with a family of eight children, of whom our subject was third. George, with an older brother, Anson, ran an extensive breaking team in the town of Merton, from 1845 to 1847, by which they earned money enough to build a barn on the homestead for their mother. In 1844 or 1845, they delivered the first saw-log at Monches. Mr. Snyder bought a claim to 120 acres of land in the Town of Hartford, Washington Co., Wis., and made some improvements, but, in 1850, he, with a company of others, crossed the plains to California, and, after a perilous trip of four months and eleven days, they arrived at the mining district. He engaged in mining successfully for nearly two years, and then returned via the Nicaragua River and New York City, to his home in Wisconsin, after an absence of twenty-six months. He was married, Jan. 6, 1853, to Miss Mary, daughter of Edward and Rose Coyle, a native of the town of Cranston, Providence Co., R. I., born 1830, and she came with her parents to the town of Genesee, Waukesha Co., Wis., in 1847. Her father afterward died in the town of Pewaukee; her mother in Waukesha. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder settled on his farm in Washington Co., Wis., and made that their home for twenty-one years; Feb. 28, 1874, moved to their present farm of 240 acres, on Sec. 27, town of Oconomowoc, for which he paid $15,000 cash in January previous. They have had ten children—Frances E. (deceased), Alexander, Mary A., George A., Adelia J. (deceased), Edward (deceased), Carlos A., Lewis J., John A. and Ernest C. The family is connected with St. Jerome's Catholic Church.

WARREN SPAULDING (deceased); was a native of Putnam Co., N. Y.; born in 1811. His mother dying when he was quite young at the age of 7, he was bound out to learn the tanner and courier's trade, which he afterwards continued at Patterson, N. Y., for a number of years. He was married, Jan. 4, 1835, to Mary V., daughter of Stephen and Phebe Field, a native of Putnam Co., N. Y., born Dec. 2, 1813. In 1836, the young couple settled at Bethel, Conn., and, in 1838, removed to Danbury, Conn., where he continued his trade a number of years, after which he engaged in various kinds of business till 1857; he then emigrated to Waukesha Co., Wis., and located on a farm of 149 acres, on Sec. 29, where he followed farming till his death, which occurred Dec. 16, 1870, leaving five children—Edward T., Frances O. (now the wife of George Spence, and lives in Missouri), Willis H. (now in this town), Ferris A., who was married, in 1873, to Julia, daughter of Theophilus and Amelia Baldwin, a native of Ohio; they have three children—Dollie, Arthur and Lillie, Mary E., now the wife of Charles Spence, and lives in town of Concord, Jefferson Co., Wis. N. Y., in 1841, leaving four sons and two daughters, all of whom came to Wisconsin. Mr. Thompson, our present subject, made his home with his father on the farm till 18 years old; then in 1844 emigrated to Wisconsin and located at Oconomowoc, where he engaged at saw-milling, farming, coopering, etc. for a year, and from 1845 to 1860 he followed carpentering and building, being connected with the erection of many of the older buildings of this city; he began dealing in grain in 1860, and has since followed that business, except two years spent at farming in Winnebago County. Mr. Thompson was the first Chairman of the village Board of Oconomowoc, and was afterward a member of the Board; he was Chairman of the Town and Village Board and by virtue of his office a member of the County Board; he was a member of the Wisconsin Assembly from his district of Waukesha County in 1868. He was married in 1848, to Miss Martha, daughter of Caleb and Ann Scovil, a native of Connecticut, and came with her parents to Oconomowoc in 1845; her father died in Winnebago Co., Wis., in Nov. 1871; her mother now lives with them. Their children are: Franklin, now in York, York Co. Neb.; Ada, now the wife of Charles Wadsworth, and lives in Washington Co. Neb.; Hellen, at home; Lina, at home; Edward, at home. Mrs. Thompson is a member of the M. E. Church.

CHARLES THOMPSON, farmer, Sec. 30 and 31; P. O. Oconomowoc; was born in the town of Attica, Wyoming Co., N. Y., May 18, 1824; was the son of Willard and Eunice Thompson, with whom he lived, and worked at farming till 1844; in May of that year came to Oconomowoc, Wis., and made a claim, and some improvements on it, in the town of Ixonia, Jefferson Co., but settled in the village of Oconomowoc, where he was the first butcher, and followed the business from the spring of 1846 till 1855, when he went into the produce and general traffic business; in December, 1856, he removed to his present farm of 130 acres, he also has 44 acres in the town of Ixonia, Jefferson Co. He was married in October, 1856, to Elizabeth E., daughter of Budd and Mary Parsons, a native of Maine, who came to Oconomowoc in 1849 with her parents; she died Oct. 3, 1877, leaving two children, Charles H., and Mary E. Thompson.

COPELAND TOWNSEND, deceased, Oconomowoc. The subject of this sketch was born at Attica, N. Y., Aug. 10, 1825; he was one of a large family of ten children, receiving as liberal an education as the time of his early days offered; his father, Isaac Townsend, a lineal descendant of the three brothers by that name, who came over in the Mayflower, was a native of Norridgewock, Me., and was a man of great energy, enterprise and business ability; he later removed to Attica, N. Y., where he made extensive purchases at the "Holland land sale," and afterward made that his home, till his death, at the age of 53 years; his mother, Clarissa Copeland, was also a native of Norridgewock, but died in Wyoming Co., N. Y. In 1849 Mr. Townsend was joined in marriage to Miss S. Eliza Alvord, and the young couple immediately removed to Wisconsin in search of a home and fortune in the then Far West ; he came to Beloit and engaged in the mercantile business for one year ; they then went to Neenah, at that time a small settlement ; he built and commanded as captain the first steamboat that ever parted the placid waters of Lake Winnebago, called the " Van Ness Barlow ;" this enterprise proved too far in advance of the necessities of the day, and he lost all his investment, the earnings of a number of years' hard labor ; sharing in the excitement of the gold discoveries of California, he then went across the plains to the Golden State, and engaged in the lumber trade, which proved largely remunerative, but afterward invested in numerous unfortunate speculations and lost all ; next he established in Denver, Colo., in the mercantile business, and later again in San Francisco, and in a great measure regained his lost fortune ; during these and the two or three succeeding years he traveled largely through the British Possessions, Southern and Central America, returning to make his home with his family in Oconomowoc, afterward removing to Fond du Lac. In 1861 he applied to President Lincoln, with strong recommendations, and received the appointment as U. S. Marshal for Colorado Territory ; while there he built the first prison erected in the Territory ; the issues of the war brought on difficulty to the Federal offices, and Mr. Townsend shared with others in having charges preferred against him at the department in Washington ; he went at once to Washington and demanded an investigation, and the final outcome was that President Lincoln, who became so strongly attached to him that he tendered him the choice of commission for a number of vacancies in the civil service, among them, paymaster of the Navy, position of Auditor in the Treasury Department, or as Indian Agent of Idaho Territory ; the latter appointment he accepted in 1863, serving two years ; after resigning this Federal position he engaged in business in San Francisco for the third time, in which venture he was very successful ; in 1868 he again took up his residence in Oconomowoc, but soon after engaged as a traveling salesman for a New York firm, at a liberal salary. Mr. Townsend's extensive travels and varied experience, led him to believe that Oconomowoc, with her great picturesque beauty and natural advantages, was destined to become a resort for tourists ; so thoroughly was he impressed with this idea, that he resolved to invest his accumulated means in a hotel for this purpose solely ; the venture was a risky one, but with his characteristic enterprise he staked his all upon his well-grounded opinion that success would crown his efforts ; in February, 1870, he began building the Townsend House, the first hotel in the State exclusively for tourists ; by the following June the hotel was complete, furnished and opened to the reception of guests. Mr. Townsend is surely the originator of the summer resort business of the West ; to him more than to any other individual is due the credit of making Oconomowoc her reputation as a resort ; four successful seasons followed, and the Townsend House was found too limited in accommodation ; in 1874 the hotel was doubled in size, and the two disastrous seasons which followed ; found the proprietor almost hopelessly involved in debt. As a writer Mr. Townsend was clear and concise, and his descriptions of some of his travels through the West are almost " word paintings ;" his articles appeared in the Badger, to which he was quite a regular contributor, over the signature of " Tragic ;" his close observation, extensive travels and great descriptive ability gave him much power as a lecturer, and in his travels as a business man he was often called upon to give public lectures on his travels and adventures among the Mormons in the great Salt Lake Valley, which were " very spicy, entertaining and instructive." Copeland Townsend was a man of strong mind and had decided opinions upon all social and political questions ; he possessed indomitable will power, and had the courage to carry it out ; his travels and profession as a hotel keeper made him a large acquaintance, and his eccentricities doubtless made him some enemies—rare indeed are the men who have none. He was an enterprising and public-spirited citizen ; he was a leader rather than a follower of opinion ; as a conversationalist few men could be more entertaining or agreeable as a companion ; in his death Oconomowoc loses a good citizen, and his family a beloved and respected father. Mr. Townsend leaves a widow and three children—two sons, Eldridge G. and Copeland, and a daughter, Clara, now Mrs. Dr. Dorion, of St. Paul ; they had lost a daughter, Love, who died Sept. 6, 1874, at the age of 8 years. Mr. Townsend was a Swendenborgien in his religious opinions, and was of strictly religious inclinations.

GEORGE VILAS, lumber merchant ; was born at Oswego, Oswego Co., N. Y., in 1830, and when 2 or 3 years old, his parents removed with him to Cayuga Co. ; his mother, Betsey Dickerson, a native of Vermont, died when he was quite young ; his father, Nathaniel Vilas, was a native of New Hampshire, and removed to York State in an early day ; he was a tanner by trade and followed that line of business in Oswego and Cayuga Counties till 1850 ; emigrating then to Wisconsin, they located in the town of Caladonia, Racine Co. Our present subject worked at the tanner's trade with his father, in Cayuga Co., N. Y., and emigrated with him to Wisconsin in 1850 ; he engaged in saw-milling and lumbering for five years, in the town of Caladonia, Racine Co. ; removing to Fulton, Rock Co., in 1855, he engaged in the grocery trade for two years, then removed to Delavan, Walworth Co., and engaged in a general mercantile trade till 1863; he then removed to Pardeeville, Columbia Co., and engaged in milling and grain dealing till 1869, when he came to Oconomowoc, and has since been dealing in lumber. He was married at Pardeeville, in 1860 to Miss Jane L., daughter of John and Ennice Pardee, a sister of John S. Pardee, the founder of the village; she was born in Ohio, but came with her parents as early settlers at Pardeeville. Mr. and Mrs. Vilas have two daughters—Mary V. and Helen M., now students at the Normal school of White Water. The family are members of the Episcopal Church.

A. GIFFORD GURNEY, farmer, Sec. 14; P. O. Delafield; was born in Duchess Co., N. Y., in 1809; his father, David Gurney, was also a native of that county, and followed farming for a livelihood. Our subject, A. G., spent his time at the same vocation till 1836, when he began business for himself, and followed teaching and farming till 1846; he then emigrated to Wisconsin and located on his present farm, where he now owns 80 acres. He was married in January, 1846, to Susan, a daughter of Judge Henry Livingston, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; they have had two children—Edwin L., deceased, and Jennie L., at home

ABRAM G. HARDELL, farmer and stock-raiser; Secs 33 and 34; P. O. Golden Lake; was born in Yorkshire, Eng., in 1826; his parents, Richard and Jane Hardell, were natives of Lincolnshire, Eng., and when their son, Abram G., was about 2 years old, they sailed for America; in the following year they removed to Utica, N. Y., and later still to Clinton of the same State; in 1836 they arrived at Milwaukee, and in 1837 settled in the town of Summit. Our subject made his home with his parents till his marriage, which occurred July 3, 1854, to Mary, a daughter of Robert and Mary Wilkinson, of the town of Mukwonago, Waukesha Co.; he has ever since continued to reside on the homestead, and he now owns a farm of about 500 acres in the same town. Mr. H. devotes much of his time to breeding short-horn cattle and Spanish Merino sheep. He has been member and Chairman of the Town Board, and has held other and minor offices in his town

W. J. HARDELL, farmer, Secs. 26 and 27; P. O. Summit; was born in Lincolnshire, Eng., and emigrated to America with his parents, Richard and Jane Hardell, when he was but 4 or 5 years old; landing in New York, they stopped there nearly a year, where his father followed the business of a contractor and builder; later they removed to Clinton, N. Y., whence, in 1836, they came to Wisconsin and landed in Milwaukee; here they remained till May, 1837, when the subject of this sketch, with a team, came by the way of Waukesha, then Prairieville, to the town of Summit, being the first wagon that came from Waukesha to Summit; his father having preceded him and made a claim to a section of land in sections numbered 28, 33 and 34, he joined him at the above-mentioned place, where they at once began to make preparation for the family, which arrived some weeks after; during the first year they realized many of the hardships and privations of pioneer life, but, with that perseverance which characterizes the first settlers of this country, they managed to provide themselves with food enough till the soil could supply them with a crop. After making his home in this town for 11 years, Mr. H. removed, in 1848, to LaSalle Co., Ill., where he continued farming most of the time till 1863, excepting that in each of the years 1849 and 1853 he made a trip to California; in the first of these he remained five months, and the second, three years; in 1863 he returned to the town of Summit and settled on his present farm of 160 acres. He was married in 1848 to Permelia Tyler, a native of Madison County, and an emigrant to Wisconsin in 1847; they have four children—George B., who is now in O'Brien County, Iowa; Frank, in Nebraska; Richard H., at home; Addie, now the wife of F. Alger, lives in Oconomowoc.

JOHN CHRISTIAN FREDERICK HARTMANN, farmer, Sec. 6; P. O. Oconomowoc; was born in Prussia in 1836, and came with his parents to Wisconsin in 1844; they settled on a farm of 160 acres, in the town of Ixonia, Jefferson Co., which his father entered from the Government, and afterward bought more, till he had quite an extensive farm at the time of his death, which occurred in 1874. John C. F. made his home in Ixonia a year after the death of his father; then removed to the city of Oconomowoc, where he engaged in selling farm machinery for two years; he removed to his present farm of 103 acres in 1878; in May, 1879, he formed a copartnership in the Oconomowoc foundry and machine shop, under the firm of Hartmann, Hubner & Co., of which firm he is now a member. He was married, Sept. 8, 1864, to Miss Louisa, daughter of William and Sophia Waltmann, a native of the town of Lebanon, Dodge Co., Wis., who died Aug. 7, 1874, leaving six children, as follows: William F. L., Louis A., Alexander E., Agnes A., Louisa A., A. Edward. His second marriage was, Dec. 13, 1874, to Miss Mary Waltmann, a sister to his first wife, by whom he has had three children—Fredereck B., Celia M., John F., deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Hartmann are members of the Lutheran Church.

B. C. HILDRETH, farmer, Secs. 17 and 20; P. O. Summit; was born in New Hampshire in 1811, and at the age of 6 or 7 years, he removed with his parents, Jesse and Betsey (Cobb) Hildreth, to Oneida Co., N. Y., where he followed farming until 1837. He was married there, in 1835, to Priscilla Preston, with whom and his father's family, in the fall of 1837, he emigrated to Wisconsin and settled in the town of Summit, Waukesha Co., his father and brother having preceded them some months and made claims on Secs. 17 and 20 of this town; the house for the family was not yet completed when they arrived, but they found shelter in a shanty on Mr. Baxter's farm till December, when they removed to their new home; he and his father found work at chopping logs near Waukesha during the winter months, by which they provided their families with bread, and in the spring of 1838, he sowed the first wheat in this town: his father died on the homestead in 1852, his mother died in Adams Co., Wis., in 1842. B. C., soon after their permanent settlement, put up a log house on the homestead, which sufficed for a home till 1857, when his present edifice was erected; his wife died June 12, 1841, leaving three children, having had four—Jane, the late wife of Edward Henry, now deceased, Hamilton, who died Nov. 9, 1837 (the first death in the town), Helen, now the wife of William Potter, and lives in Bates Co., Mo.; his second marriage was June 9, 1842, to Priscilla Labar, a native of Tompkins Co., N. Y.; they have two sons—Charles O., now in Saline Co., Neb.; Henry H., who married Jeannette Kimball and has five children—Edna M., Ida M., Nellie, Bertram C. and Maria M. Mr. Hildreth has been a member of the Town Board three or four terms, Assessor four years, Town Treasurer two years.

B. R. HINKLEY, retired, Summit Corners; P. O. Oconomowoc; was born in the town of Weston, Oneida Co., N. Y., Jan. 13, 1809. His father, Amasa Hinkley, was born in Connecticut, and went to Oneida Co., N. Y., in 1795. The subject of this sketch spent his early life at farming, working by the month at that occupation for three years; in 1831, he began peddling Yankee notions through Northern New York and Canada, at which he continued three years; he then returned to Oneida Co., purchased a team and began trading between Utica and Canada, buying dried-apples at one place and disposing of them at the other, returning with his wagon loaded with grass seed, etc., from the sale of which he realized handsome profits; after spending a winter in this way, he was employed by a Quaker to buy cattle in Oneida and other counties; after continuing in this employment for a year, he was then made a partner in the business, and at the death of the old man, formed a co-partnership with his son, and in the panic of 1837, lost all he had; he never, however, failed to keep his credit good, and his friends again supplied him with capital to continue his business, which he did with meager success; in December, 1843, with Dr. Edwards, a buggy and two horses, he left Rome to try his fortune in the West, and arrived in March, 1844, in the town of Summit, Waukesha Co., Wis.; here he rented of A. Sweet, of Milwaukee, a farm of 800 acres on Secs. 34 and 35, of this town, at $400 a year, the rent to be paid in improvements on the farm; he then returned to New York and borrowed $500 to carry on the business of farming, which he did successfully for three years, when he bought a farm of 160 acres on Sec. 14, of Summit, and after farming there for a number of years, he sold that and bought a half of Sec. 10, of the same town; here he followed farming, trading and dealing in real estate for several years; afterward he disposed of his farm, and has since been engaged in loaning money; in 1860, he, with others, chartered the Bank of Oconomowoc, of which he was elected Vice-President and afterward President, holding the latter position until the bank changed hands; Mr. Hinkley has been Overseer of Public Highways thirty-four out of his thirty-six years' residence in the town of Summit, and has done much in shaping and improving the drives of the same; he was appointed by Gov. Fairchild a member of the Board of Regents of the State University, and was a member of that body for a number of years; he was a member of the Committee on Location of the State Experimental Farm; he was instrumental in the re-organization of the State University; was re-appointed to the Board of Regents by Gov. Washburne; he was President of the State Agricultural Society for nine successive years, and declined further nomination; he was one of the first Directors of the Madison Mutual Insurance Co., and remained a member of that Board for ten or fifteen years. He was married in March, 1838, to Harriet Hovey, of Oneida Co., N. Y., who died in the town of Summit, in November, 1852, leaving three children—Mary, now the wife of Richard Humphrey, and lives at Nashotah; Helen, now Mrs. Lloyd Breck, of Barrytown, N. Y.; and Henry R., who died in Chicago in 1876. His second marriage was in 1853, to Jeannette Townsend, a native of Attica, N. Y., who died in February, 1871; his third marriage was to Mrs. Bessie Norcott Blinn, of Indianapolis, Aug. 2, 1871.

REV. LEWIS A. KEMPER, D. D., Professor of Exegesis, Biblical Literature and Hebrew; was born in Philadelphia, Penn., in 1829; he graduated from Columbia College, New York City, in 1849, and came to Wisconsin the same summer as a theological student of the Nashotah House, where he has since remained as student, tutor and professor; he has been Rector of St. Paul's Church, Ashippun, Wis., since 1853.

A. J. KIDDER, farmer, Sec. 21; P. O. Summit; was born in Windsor Co., Vt., Jan. 1, 1826; he emigrated to Wisconsin in 1845, landing in Kenosha, then Southport, with only 35 cents; he at once began work for farmers at $10 per month, which he continued in that vicinity till 1847, when he went to Dodge County and made his home with his father's family, spending the winter, however, in the pineries; in December, 1849, he with his brother started by water, crossing the isthmus, and sailing up the Pacific to California, where he engaged in mining till the spring of 1853; returning then to the town of Lomira, Dodge Co., Wis., he traded for a farm of 200 acres in that town, by giving in exchange 160 acres in Brown County. In February, 1854, he returned to California and spent thirteen years there in mining and teaming, and in the spring of 1863 he went to Idaho, followed mining and gardening till 1867, when he came again to Dodge County, and there he followed farming till 1874; he then purchased his present farm of 60 acres, in the town of Summit, Waukesha Co. He was married in June, 1870, to Sarah A. Vangilder, a native of New York; their children are Burr, Albert, Alice, Joseph and Warren.

SAMUEL C. LEAVITT (deceased), was born in Oneida Co., N. Y., in 1800; his parents, Roger and Lydia Leavitt, were natives of Connecticut, and removed as early settlers to Oneida Co., N. Y.; our present subject spent most of his early life at farming in his native county. He was married there in 1834 to Frances, a daughter of Marshall H. and Mariba (Fiske) Fairservice, a native of the town of Weston, Oneida Co., N. Y., and was born in 1810. In November, 1837, they arrived at Milwaukee, as emigrants to Wisconsin, and about two weeks later they reached the town of Summit, Waukesha Co., spent the winter on the Edgerton farm, and in the spring of 1838 settled on Sec. 22, where he made his claim to 200 acres; he at once built his log house, which sufficed for a home for several years, and which gave place to the present comfortable residence. Mr. Leavitt devoted his time wholly to agricultural pursuits, never seeking an office, but, nevertheless, was called upon, and complied in filling some of the minor ones of his town. He died in January, 1872, leaving six children, having had seven, as follows: Charles H. and Marshall H., children by his first wife, Mary A. Kilbourn, of Oneida Co., N. Y., whom he married in 1826, and who died in 1831; Charles is now in California, and Marshall H. died at Washington, April 6, 1865, from the effects of a wound received at the battle of Petersburg in March previous; from the second marriage the children are as follows: James M., now at Sioux Falls, Dak.; Adelia, at home; Samuel F., at Sioux Falls; Theodore F., Ella F., now the wife of J. F. Redfield, also at Sioux Falls.

JOHN D. McDONALD, farmer, Sec. 21; P. O. Summit Center. This pioneer of Summit was born in Fulton Co., N. Y., in 1816; his father, Daniel McDonald, was a native of Edinburgh, Scotland and died when his son was 12 years old; his mother, Mary Elizabeth Port, was born in Ireland, and died, when he was about 5 years of age; upon the death of his father, being left the oldest of three orphan children, and with scarcely any means of support, save that earned by his own hands, he spent his time at farm work till he arrived at the age of 16, when he was apprenticed to the glove and mitten trade, at Gloversville, N. Y., where he remained till of age; in November, 1836, he emigrated to the Territory of Wisconsin, spent the winter in Milwaukee, and in March, 1837, westward still he bent his course, till he arrived at the town of Summit, Waukesha (then Milwaukee) County, where he selected his site, and on the 7th day of April following, he entered his claim to 40 acres in Sec. 21; he at once began to improve his farm, as rapidly as limited means would permit, and built his pioneer shanty, which has since been exchanged for his present commodious farm-residence; his farm of 40 acres has grown into one of several hundred acres, which yields its annual rich harvests. Mr. McDonald has held the office of Chairman of the Town Board for eight or nine years, Chairman of the County Board for three or four years, was elected a member of the Wisconsin Legislature from his Assembly District of Waukesha County, in 1869, and served with such satisfaction to his constituency, that he was re-elected as a member of that body in 1870; he has also served in minor offices, and taken an active part in the affairs of the town. He was married in 1840 to Miss Sophia, daughter of Gardner and Ruey (Plumley) Brown, a native of St. Lawrence Co., N. Y.; she came with her parents to Summit in 1837, where they afterward died. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald have reared a family of six children—Mary, now the wife of C. M. Story, and lives at Red Cloud, Neb.; Emma E., now Mrs. E. W. Barnard, and now lives in Summit; Daniel, John, Maggie, and Nellie at home.

HENRY C. McDOWELL, proprietor of the Summit Stock Farm, Secs. 10 and 11; P. O. Oconomowoc; was born in Ontario Co., N. Y., in 1826; he removed with his parents, David and Harriet McDowell, to Cuyahoga Co., Ohio, when quite young; there his father entered and improved a farm, and carried on farming, merchandizing, distilling, milling, etc., for many years. Our present subject made his home with his father until 1849, when he began the lake transportation business, which he followed for twenty-five years, conducting also a farm during the time; in 1873, he purchased what was then known as the J. J. Tallmadge farm, where he now owns 310 acres and where he has since followed farming and stock-raising. He was married, in 1854, to Jennie E., daughter of Isaac and Jane Sherman, of Bridgeport, Conn., who died in 1870, leaving two children—Wenonah S., now the wife of Charles Hecker, and lives in Cleveland, Ohio, and William S., who lives with his father; his second marriage was to Viola S., daughter of Dr. Turner, of Cleveland, Ohio, in 1873.

CURTIS MANN, farmer, Sec. 3; P. O. Oconomowoc; was born in Washington Co., N. Y., in 1815; he engaged in canal transportation in his native county for a number of years, and in 1846, removed to Buffalo, where he engaged in grain trade and lake transportation till 1858; he then came to Wisconsin, to the town of Summit, Waukesha Co., having removed his family here in 1856, he himself remaining at Buffalo two years, to close up his business. He was a member of the Board of Trade in Milwaukee from 1858 till 1875, since which time he has been engaged chiefly in lumbering in Marathon Co.; he was elected a member of the State Senate of Wisconsin, from Waukesha Co., in 1868. He was married in Washington Co., N. Y., in 1852, to Nancy Comstock, a native of that county; their children are Fanny, Frank, William E. and Orville K.

LEVI P. MERICKLE, farmer, Secs. 27 and 28; P. O. Summit Center; was born in the town of Lobo, Canada West, in 1815; he spent much of his early life on a farm in Canada till 1836, when he came to the State of Michigan, and spent the winter; in June, 1836, he came to the town of Summit, Waukesha Co., Wis., and worked for Mr. Doussman one and a half years, then made a squatter's claim to the farm on which he now lives; his mother dying Oct. 8, 1835, his father and other members of the family joined him in Summit, in 1839, and made that their home till 1846, whence they removed to Dodge Co., where he died in 1870. Mr. L. P. Merickle was married in Summit, May 10, 1840, to Miss Phebe J., daughter of Richard and Jane Hardell, a native of Lincolnshire, Eng., born in 1819; they made their home on the farm in Summit till 1861, then removed to Dodge Co., whence, in 1863, they went to Blue Earth Co., Minn., where he continued farming till 1880; in January of that year, he returned to the old farm in Summit; their children are Elen A., now the wife of B. T. Ellis, and lives in McHenry Co., Ill.; Josephine E., now Mrs. George Webster, and lives in Lac-qui-Parle Co., Minn.; William W., who married Sarah Youngs, and lives in Blue Earth Co., Minn.; Abbie J., now the wife of William Youngs, of Blue Earth Co., Minn.; Anna J. and Emma W., at home. Mr. and Mrs. M. are members of the Seventh Day Advent Church.

ELISHA MORRIS, farmer, Sec. 7; P. O. Oconomowoc; was born in Madison Co., N. Y., June 6, 1817; his father, Mathias Morris, was a native of New York, and his mother, Sarah Lathrop, was a native of Connecticut; in June, 1837, the family emigrated to Wisconsin, and were the first, as a family, to locate in the town of Oconomowoc, his mother and sisters being the first women in that town. His father making his home here for about fifteen years, removed to Winnebago Co., where he afterward died. Elisha, our subject, removed four years later to Sec. 4, town of Summit, where he lived nearly two years, and then removed to his present home, on Sec. 7, where he now owns 50 acres; he enlisted, in 1861, in Co. H, 1st W. V. C., under Col. Daniels, and was with his regiment in the Army of the Tennessee and South until February, 1865, when he was mustered out of service at Nashville, Tenn.; he then returned to his home in Summit, and has since followed farming. He was married in 1842, to Martha, daughter of Eleazer and Susan Scripture, a native of New York, who died about 1847, leaving two children—Eugene, now in Harper Co., Kan.; Imogene, now the wife of James Chapin, of Chicago; his second marriage was to Mary Harmon, widow of Benjamin Harmon, and daughter of Hiram and Sarah Howard, a native of Vermont; they have two children—Byron, now in Chicago, and Alice, at home.

ANNIS NELSON, farmer, Sec. 30; P. O. Golden Lake; was born in Norway in 1835, and came with his parents, Nels and Tullena Nelson, to Waukesha Co., Wis.; they were the second settlers in that part of the town of Summit; arriving in July, 1843, they slept out doors till a pen of ironwood poles was substituted for a house, in December; their first house was logs, and built on the Norwegian plan, which was their home for a year or two, when their present home was erected; his father died here in 1871; his mother in April, 1879, leaving four sons—Annis, our subject, who now owns 100 acres in this town and in Jefferson Co.; Marshall and Louis, in Oconomowoc, and Morten in California.

CAPT. THOMAS L. PARKER was born in the county of Kent, England, 1814; at the age of 13 years, he began spending his vacations at sea, and by the time he reached his 16th year, he had visited the Azores and other Western Islands; when 16, he sailed up the Mediterranean on a two-year's voyage, visiting Greece, Turkey and other European countries; leaving his native country in the autumn of 1832, he sailed for America, and in the spring of 1834 went to Oswego, N. Y., where he was master of a vessel till 1841; removing then to Chicago, where he actively engaged in grain, warehouse and lake marine for many years; coming to this city in August, 1874, on a visit, and finding the property which he now owns, about three miles east from the city, on Oconomowoc Lake, for sale, he purchased it about three months later, and now has one of the finest estates, if not the first, in Wisconsin.

JACOB REGULA, farmer, Sec. 14; P. O. Summit; was born in the Rhine Province, in Bavaria, in 1806; he began the wagon-maker's trade at the age of 15, and continued at this till 1832. He was married in 1831, to Philippine Voos, with whom, July, 1832, he sailed for America, landing at New York in August following, and soon after settled at Rome, Oneida Co.; here he continued his trade till 1838, when, September 1, of that year, he arrived in Milwaukee; leaving his wife at the last-mentioned place he proceeded to Summit, Waukesha Co., to find some friends who had gone before; while here he purchased a claim, being the southwest quarter of Sec. 14, and made improvements for his future home; here he plied his trade for several years in connection with that of farming; he made the cradle that cut the first wheat in the town of Summit; he made the first well-buckets that were made in the town, and the coffin for the second burial that took place in Summit. Of later years he has devoted his time to farming. They have had children as follows, namely, Nicholas, Lovina and Lena deceased; Elizabeth, now the wife of Charles Churchill; Harriet, the late wife of Martin Coon, of Monroe Co., now deceased; Lovina, wife of Theodore Hines, and lives in Nebraska; Eliza, wife of Frank Standard, and lives in Nebraska; Jennie, now Mrs. Joseph Severling, and lives in Iowa; Jacob, now married and at home; Charles at home.

He was married in New York City, in 1842, to Mary Berns, a native of England, who died in 1870; his second marriage was to Miss Catharine Meyer, a native of Germany, she having one son, Henry Meyer, now in Nebraska.

CAPT. E. S. STONE, Secs. 9 and 16; P. O. Oconomowoc; is a native of Wayne Co., N. Y., born in 1825; his parents, Hinman and Mary (Stevens) Stone, were natives of Connecticut, and removed soon after their marriage as early settlers to Wayne Co., N. Y. Our subject spent the first fourteen years of his life with his father on the farm, and then began sailing on Lake Ontario, which he continued during two summers; in Sept., 1842, he landed in Milwaukee, then a lad of 17 years, to seek his fortune in the wilds of Wisconsin; with his wardrobe carefully done up in a bandanna handkerchief, he came on foot to the town of Brookfield, Waukesha Co., where he found employment with Jacob Suttin at rail-making; during his stay at this place he made a claim, but by reason of his minority he was unable to hold it. In the spring of 1843 he returned to Milwaukee and began sailing with Capt. Calvin Ripley, whose vessel was engaged in the lumber trade between Milwaukee and Manistee, Mich., which he followed for two seasons; with the first fifty dollars he earned he bought 40 acres of land in the town of Brookfield and built a house on it; he afterward sold the above and bought the farm of Capt. Ripley in the town of Greenfield, Milwaukee Co., though at this period he spent most of his time on the lakes; in 1853 he removed to Milwaukee, where, still being interested in sailing, he was one of the first members of the Board of Trade, and has ever since been connected with that body; in 1857 he bought his present farm, "Cedar Beach," of 160 acres, on Secs. 9 and 16 on the east bank of Silver Lake, town of Summit, which has been the home of his family. Capt. Stone has been a member of the Town Board for three terms; a member of the Wisconsin Assembly in 1873 from his district in Waukesha Co. He was married in 1852 to Nancy, daughter of Deacon George McWhorter, a native of Salem, N. Y., who emigrated to Wisconsin with her parents in 1836; their children are Percy F., a commission merchant in Milwaukee; Ella, now the wife of Theodore F. Leavitt, lives at Sioux Falls, D. T.; Jennie L., at home; F. Paul, in railroad business in Milwaukee; Louis J. and Alice, now at home.

G. W. VANBRUNT, farmer, Sec. 34; stock-raiser and proprietor of the Springdale Summer Resort; P. O. Waterville; was born in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., in July, 1830, and with his parents immigrated to Wisconsin in May, 1846. They located on a farm in the town of Burnett, Dodge Co., where our subject followed farming till 1861; he then removed to Horicon, where he was engaged in the manufacture of the Van Brunt Seeder, of which he was the inventor and patentee; in 1870, he sold out his interest in the Seeder works, and in 1873 bought his present farm of 320 acres. He was married in Jefferson Co., N. Y., in 1853, to Miss Jane Head; they have two children, Elvie, now Mrs. E. V. Beals, of Milwaukee, and Charles B., who is now married and lives on the farm with his father.

GEO. H. WATKINS, farmer, Secs. 8 and 9; P. O. Oconomowoc; is a native of Philadelphia; was born in 1840; he came with his father, William Watkins, to Milwaukee in 1855, and was there engaged in the manufacture of brick from 1869 till August 1878, when he purchased the Highland farm of 80 acres, on Secs. 8 and 9, town of Summit, Waukesha Co., and has since engaged in farming. Oconomowoc; was born in Caledonia Co., Vt., in 1805; his father, Lemuel Weeks, was a native of Massachusetts, and removed to Hardwick, Caledonia Co., Vt., in 1802, and followed farming till his death; his mother, Fannie Wheeler, was also a native of Massachusetts, and was connected with a family that was prominent in the Revolutionary war; the Dr. received an academic education, after which he took up the study of medicine and graduated from the Medical Academy of Castleton, Rutland Co., Vt., in 1828; he immediately entered upon the practice of his profession at Ticonderoga, N. Y.; a year later he removed to Keysville, N. Y., and continued the practice of medicine till 1836; in June of that year he arrived in Milwaukee, then a small hamlet, and where he afterward made his home till 1875. In 1838 or 1839, he was appointed deputy U. S. Marshal at that place, in which position he was retained for several years; he was one of the Rock River Canal Commissioners in 1838-39; was a member of the City Council of Milwaukee for many years, serving several terms as President of the same body. In July, 1836, he, in company with a party, came on foot through this part of the country, going to Hustisford, Dodge Co., looking for a fall in Rock River. Thence they went to Madison, and while there he entered 1,000 acres of land in Dane Co.; he returned then to Milwaukee, and afterward became one of the most extensive dealers in real estate in that city; in 1875, he bought his present farm of 50 acres in Sec. 10, town of Summit, Waukesha Co., where he has since engaged in breeding the Jersey stock. He was married in Montpelier, Vt., in 1829, to Mary, daughter of Ephraim and Mary (Bradbury) Sands, a native of Maine; their children are Horace S., now merchant in New York City, and Mary, now the wife of George Jones, of Pine Lake, Waukesha Co.

DANIEL WILLIAMS, farmer, Sec. 27; P. O. Summit; born in the town of Exeter, Otsego Co., N. Y., June 22, 1829. His father, Sherman Williams, was a native of that town and county, and followed farming there till his death, which occurred in November, 1857. Our present subject spent his summers at farming and winters at teaching, till he was 28 years old; in 1857, he came to Wisconsin, purchased a farm of 161½ acres on Sec. 27, in the town of Summit, Waukesha Co., to which he, with his father, expected to remove at once, but the death of the latter prevented his return to Wisconsin for two years. He was married in 1857, to Lucy C. Beach, with whom he came to Wisconsin in 1859; in August, 1869, his wife died, leaving three children, Esther, Amanda and Mary. Mr. Williams was town Superintendent of schools in 1862; he has been a member of the Town Board for three years; Chairman of the same for two years; Town Clerk eleven years; Assessor one year; Census enumerator for three terms, 1865, 1875 and 1880; Justice of the Peace in his town for twelve years, and Secretary and Treasurer of the town Insurance Company since its organization in 1874. His second marriage was June 11, 1879, to Lovina, daughter of O. W. Thornton, town of Medina, Dane Co., Wis.

JOHN WILLIAMS, farmer, Sec. 23, 148 acres; P. O. Waterville; was born in Caernarvonshire, North Wales, October 1816; he emigrated to America in 1846, and located in the town of Genesee, Waukesha Co., Wis., where he followed farming till 1873; he then bought his present farm of 220 acres in the town of Summit. He was married in Caernarvonshire, Wales, in 1840, to Sidney Jones; their children are Sydney, now the wife of Robert Edwards, of the town of Delafield, Waukesha Co.; Catharine and Jane at home; the above three were born in Wales; John, Ann and Owen born in Wisconsin and now at home.

TOWN OF EAGLE.

C. B. BANNISTER, homœopathic physician, Eagle; born in Pownal, Bennington Co., Vt., April 6, 1817; after graduating at Union Academy, Bennington, he managed his mother's farm a few years, and in 1839, went to Madison Co., N. Y.; began the study of medicine with Dr. Samuel Fuller, but, owing to impaired health, gave it up and bought grain for a short time in Fayetteville, N. Y.; returning to his native State, he farmed it there two or three years, and, in April, 1845, settled in Mukwonago on a farm; resumed his medical studies with Dr. L. Nash and practiced while owning the farm, which he sold in 1866 and, at the request of several residents, settled in Eagle, where he has since resided in active and successful practice. Married, 1841, Miss Maria W. Lawrence, of Saratoga Co., N. Y., who died June 20, 1878, leaving two children—Charles, who enlisted in February 1865, in the 46th W. V. I., serving until the close of hostilities; he married Miss Esther Morrow, of West Troy, Wis., and has three sons—Harvey, Byron C. and Charles, Jr.; is now a railroad man in Troy Center, Wis.; his only sister, Venora, died Aug. 23, 1878. The Doctor married Miss Mary P. Rowland, of Chester County, Penn., July 9, 1879. In politics Democratic, he was Superintendent of Schools and Town Commissioner under the old system, besides serving on school boards, juries, etc. Dr. Bannister well represents the energetic type of the pioneers from New England.

JONATHAN BETTS, farmer, Sec. 33; P. O. Eagle; born in Elson, Norfolk, England, September 1813; came to America in 1830, and, after four years spent in Rome, N. Y., removed to La Salle Co., Ill.; engaged in stage-driving in Illinois and Indiana about three years; settled in Eagle July 12, 1838, in company with F. Draper, they buying and farming 240 acres together till 1841, when Mr. Betts, took eighty acres on the east side of the road; he has since bought eighty acres of Government land. These were about the first men to locate in these parts, and, as they had six yoke of cattle, soon became known throughout the town, Mr. B. driving breaking team about five years and turning over thousands of acres of Wisconsin virgin soil; his first furrow turned on Sec. 28, and his first twenty acres of wheat sown among the burr oaks which sparsely covered their claim. Feb. 17, 1844, he married Miss Lucina Ewer, a native of Marcellus, Wayne Co., N. Y., he having previously lived with the Draper family in their log house. When Mr. Betts built his barn, he bought the lumber from the first large consignment, ever sent over the M. & P. du C. R. R. Mr. and Mrs. B. have seven living children—Mary J., Susan A., Alice M., Melissa A., Charles M., Fremont A. and Daisy L.; the elder son, a carpenter by trade, married; Dec. 30, 1879, Miss Jennie Coulter, a native of the State of New York and a resident of Troy Center; the younger son is also on the old homestead, and all are Republicans in politics.

E. L. BOVEE, merchant, Eagle; born in Amsterdam, Montgomery Co., N. Y., in 1833; son of M. J. and Elizabeth M. Bovee, who settled in Mukwonago, June 8, 1843, locating on a farm now owned by Joseph Sprague, in 1844; there were nine children—Sarah J., Emily M., Benedict A., William R., Marvin H., Elizabeth, Halsey W., Edward L. and Hattie M. Mathias J. Bovee was one of the historic pioneers of Waukesha Co.; a staunch Democrat he had held many positions prior to his election to the U. S. House of Representatives, during Jackson's administration; selling his farm he finally settled in the village of Eagle, where he died Sept. 12, 1872, aged 79; his wife still lives to furnish this sketch, in good health, at 87. E. L. Bovee resided on the farm until Nov. 4, 1876, when he began business in Eagle, dealing exclusively in groceries, and doing a good business at the manufacture of sausage during the winters. Married in Eagle, Nov. 4, 1859, Miss Elizabeth B. Hellier, a native of Bradford, England; they have five children—Dewit C., Herbert and Halsey twins, Marvin and Emily L. Mr. Bovee is a Democrat.

M. F. BRADY, farmer, Secs. 9 and 10; P. O. Eagle; born in Leahary, County Cavan, Ireland Nov. 1, 1818; came to America in 1842, locating in Kirkland, Oneida Co., N. Y.; during his first harvest here he worked for $8 per month, taking "store pay;" from this time until 1855, he worked for three different men, but on the same section, a slow and hard but sure way to get his start in life; reaching Eagle in the fall of 1855, Mr. Brady bought 160 acres, which is still his; on this was a 12x12 log house, where he and wife lived several years, doing the honors of a new country to the many "Down East" friends who called upon them in looking out homes for themselves, often keeping ten or a dozen over night in this narrow house with its leaky roof of warped oak shakes; as a result of this lowly beginning, Mr. B. has his farm well improved, several good barns, one costing $600, and a large and well-built farm house; not a bad showing for the young man who reached America penniless. Married in Kirkland, in 1852, Miss Catherine McCabe, of his native town; they have six children—Thomas J., John J., Peter, Mary A., Katie and Maggie J. The family are Roman Catholics, Mr. Brady having served as Supervisor twelve or fifteen years, also serving on Grand and Petit Juries, and as Justice of the Peace; in politics votes independently.

HENRY BURNELL, farmer, Sec. 1; P. O. North Prairie; born in 1832, in Yorkshire, England; son of John and Ann (Walgate) Burnell, who came to America in 1834, and to Waukesha Co. in 1837, his father having bought Government land in Mukwonago, in 1836, where the subject of this sketch resided until 1859, when he began with 70 acres of his present farm of 305; besides enlarging his farm, Mr. Burnell has built the largest basement barn in Eagle, 30x96, besides a spacious and elegant residence; has brought this land to a high state of cultivation, set out shade and ornamental trees and made a most successful record as one of Waukesha County's progressive farmers; is an attendant of the M. E. Church, and a Democrat in politics.

JOHN BURDEN, farmer; Sec. 24; P. O. Eagle; born in Cornwall, England, Aug. 25, 1816; son of John and Sorda (Roe) Burden; spent his early life in England, and married Miss Mary Ann, daughter of Thomas Mathers, in 1841; they came to America in 1857, with a family of seven children—John, Samuel, Mary A., Grace, Edward, William and Susanna (a twin born with William deceased); Celia, the youngest, was born in Palmyra, where the family lived for the first two years. Removing to the town of Waukesha, he paid $50 down for 80 acres of land, this leaving him 25 cents; at the end of nine well-spent years, he exchanged farms with Hy Kipp, and by giving him a $7,000 mortgage, obtained his valuable farm of 232 acres; Mr. Burden paid 100 cents on every dollar of this debt, and has just bought 128 acres more of W. B. Sprague; Mr. B. had to borrow $12.50 in order to remove his family from Milwaukee to Palmyra, 23 years ago; his flock of over 200 merino sheep is second to none in the town, their average clip per head in 1879 being seven pounds. Mr. B. is a Democrat, his family attending the M. E. Church, Eagle.

WILLIAM CRANK, butcher and saloon, Eagle; born in Eagle, Waukesha Co., Wis., Dec. 22, 1852; is a son of Anton and Agatha Crank, who settled here in 1845 or 1846; having lost both parents at 14, Mr. Crank learned the trade of butcher, and followed it one year in Eagle; he then spent a year in Chippewa Falls, Wis., and, on his return, was in the employ of W. A. Vanderpool one year, and, in 1874, opened a saloon of his own, where he is now located, though he occupied part of the Eagle Hotel about four years; in March, 1879, he built his large two-story saloon; he also owns a house and lot near it. He married, Oct. 22, 1872, Miss Alsina Marcle, of Eagle, whose parents were also early settlers here.

LAMBERT COLYER, farmer; P. O. Eagle; born in Sullivan, Madison Co., N. Y., 1819. When of school-boy age, Mr. Colyer was at work in the pineries of his native State, living and working there in Onondaga and Oswego Counties till 1840, when he made his first visit to Wisconsin, buying 120 acres of Government land in Secs. 10 and 15, Mukwonago; returning to New York State that fall, he stayed there until 1843, when he came with his wife to Milwaukee; his first business in the West was in teaming through Wisconsin and Northern Illinois, with a horse team; it often required ten hours to drive fourteen miles in the Milwaukee woods, he carrying many a load of supplies to the Indians in the region of Winnebago Lake, and many a family into the wilds to begin pioneer life; a favorite feeding-place with him used to be the open prairie, now the site of Juneau, carrying his own provisions and horse-feed, and using an open wagon; this was the way in which he earned enough to make a beginning on his land, which he did in the fall of 1845; the hardships endured by a man who left home and began life's battle at 19, nerved him for his work here, and, as a result of this, he has the old Mukwonago farm, every acre of which has been cultivated, with a large house and two good barns, 10 acres of timber in Vernon, and the old Sherman estate, 144 acres; the family residence here is a large two-story hip-roofed house, with wings, fitted up in modern style, besides all needed barns, carriage-house, etc.; his Pierce County farm was recently sold for $6,000. Few have done better than this man who reached Wisconsin thirty-seven years ago, with just $15. He married, in 1840, Miss Martha Cunningham, who died in 1879, leaving eight children—Francis A., William Lee, Mary J., Charles H., Elgathe. Martha, De Witt C. and Delia E.; on the 15th of March, 1880, Mr. Colyer married Mrs. Sarah Holmes, a resident of East Troy, and a native of Oswego Co., N. Y.

FREDERICK GOSE, farmer, Secs. 21 and 17; P. O. Eagle; born in Westphalia, Prussia, 1820; spent three years in the army, and on the 25th of March, 1848, left the Fatherland for America, reaching Milwaukee July 3, 1848; a tailor by trade, he worked four and a-half years there; then settled on 80 acres of his present farm of 220 acres; it was then wild land, destitute of buildings; he, having erected a tasteful house, good barn, etc., married, 1845, Miss Elizabeth Whiffen, of his native province; they have nine children—Millie, Frederick, John, Carrie, Theresa, Martin, Libbie, Ettie, and Katie, having lost four children. The family are Roman Catholics. Politics, Democratic; Mr. Gose has been Supervisor and Treasurer of Eagle several years; has about sixty good sheep, besides horses and other stock.

MARTIN HELGSEN, farmer, Sec. 1; P. O. North Prairie; born in the town of Ottawa, Waukesha Co., Wis., Oct. 15, 1844; son of Helge Helgesen, who settled in Ottawa in an early day and bought his farm of the Government, being one of the sturdy pioneers who were not afraid to eat bread frozen so hard as to require breaking with a hammer. His son was educated in his native town, and, in 1874, went into business at North Prairie Station, after a year settling on his present farm of 126 acres, 40 of which are in Ottawa; this live young farmer has added to the house, remodeled and enlarged his barn, put up a wind-mill and generally improved his farm. He married, Oct. 21, 1873, Miss Sarah, only daughter of Seymour Frayer, Esq., of Ottawa; they have three children—Alicie M., Henrietta and Mary E. Mr. Helgesen supports men and principles, not political parties, and has the usual stock and crops.

CHARLES HILL, farmer, Sec. 1; P. O. Eagle; born in Upwell, Cambridgeshire, Eng., Dec. 31, 1836; at 18 he left for America, and was for eighteen months in Fairfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y.; located in Eagle, 1855, and, gradually working his way up, bought a farm of the Government, in Dunn Co., Wis.; exchanged this in 1865 for 73 acres of his present farm; has added 200 acres on Secs. 1, 2, and 12; remodeled, enlarged and painted his house; re-sided and placed on a basement wall his 28x60-foot barn, and made a most pleasant home. The record of this man is one of steady and honorable progress; married, Dec. 18, 1861, Miss Henrietta Trow, of Eagle, by whom he has two children—Ellsworth and Lutie. Mrs. Hill is a member of the M. E. Church. As a farmer, Mr. Hill has 150 fine-wool sheep, with other stock, and returns his wheat crop of 1879 at 700 bushels.

EDWARD P. HINKLEY, farmer, Sec. 10; P. O. Eagle; born, Dec. 29, 1839, in China, St. Clair Co., Mich.; his parents, Oramel and Phebe (Earle) Hinkley, were Vermonters; in June, 1840, they came to Eagle; lived that summer with A. R. Hinkley, building that fall a log house on land which Mr. H. had not entered at the Land Office; a certain man on learning this, started for Milwaukee on horseback, but was distanced by Mr. H. on foot; this sturdy old pioneer reached the town, entered his land, and footed it home, stopping only for a meal in town. At his death, Aug. 18, 1855, he left seven children—Edward P., Emily E., Uraua E., Albert A., Urzelia, William H., and Charles O. Mr. Hinkley lived on the homestead until Aug. 21, 1862, when he enlisted in Co. G, 28th W. V. I.; was with his regiment in the Yazoo Pass and White River expeditions, in the fight at Helena and the capture of Little Rock; was then, for thirteen months, at Pine Pluff, Ark., participating in the Saline River Expedition and the battle at Mt. Elba; the regiment was then sent to Mobile via New Orleans, investing Spanish forts, and being thirteen days under fire; after the capture of Mobile and the forts, the regiment made a 200-mile raid north in Alabama, and took the rebel navy yard at Ray's Landing; the next move was to Texas; Mr. Hinkley, being sick at Brazos, was honorably discharged in August, 1865; he says that his regiment did more steamboat riding than any in the service. On his return, he bought 80 acres of his present farm, where he settled in 1872; has added 40 acres; also owning his share of the old homestead. Married, July 4, 1872, Miss Salena, daughter of William and Ann Ardiss, of Lincolnshire, Eng.; they have three children—Hubert A., Percival E., and Myrtle G. The mother of Mr. H. died Feb. 27, 1879. He is a Republican, and, with his wife, a member of the M. E. Church. Is devoting much attention to growing and manufacturing sorghum, his mill turning out from 1,000 to 2,000 gallons per annum.

A. R. HINKLEY, farmer, Secs. 11, 12 and 14; P. O. Eagle; born in Lebanon, Grafton Co., N. H., Oct. 23, 1810; was educated in his native town, and lived on his father's farm till he was 21, when he spent a year in Massachusetts. In August, 1836, he landed at Milwaukee. Wisconsin comprised nearly all of Iowa, then; and Milwaukee consisted of the two-story house of Juneau, near the present Mitchell block, a small jail built on "stilts," and a new houses on Wisconsin street; the heart of the city was a marsh, where the Indian boys used to shoot blackbirds with bow and arrow. About the 18th of August, Mr. H., his brother, Hy. A., Mr. Charles Rayness, and Andrew Schofield, left the village with ox teams, and spent the second night in a log shanty on the present site of Waukesha, and the next night at the cabin of David Orrendorf, who had built near Judge Field's race course, Mukwonago; a terrible rainstorm arose that night, and the travelers passed a miserable night, on bedding laid on poles placed across the corners of the roofless shanty; next morning, Mr. H., with his brother and Mr. S., started on an Indian trail for Eagle Prairie; their first view of it was from a hill, now in sight from the residence of Mr. Hinkley; reaching a large spring on his farm, they were so struck with the beauty of the locality that each started for a tree, knife in hand; Mr. Hinkley cut his name first, at which Mr. S., a Quaker, exclaimed, "Abira, thee is quick with thy knife!" on condition that Mr. H. lend him $100 he agreed to look further; thus was made the first claim by an actual settler; Mr. Hinkley that fall built a log house, which still stands, near the spring, and which was the first built in Eagle. In 1838, Mr. Hinkley returned to Plainfield, N. H., and married Miss Mary Daniels, who left a mansion for her husband's 12x12 log cabin, which had to shelter all their furniture, bedding, etc. Mr. H. now has 400 acres, having sold 240; the old log house is supplanted by a handsome stone farmhouse, built in 1848, which for years was the only roomy and complete one in town; is frame barn, built in 1842, was the second one built here. Mr. and Mrs. Hinkley have seven living children—Leonard D., Anna E., Frank D., Mary L., Emmeline J., Laura W., and Grace L. Death has never yet visited the house of this hardy pioneer. Mr. and Mrs. H. are almost life-long Methodists; he being a staunch Whig Republican, who has held various town offices.

FRANKLIN HUNT, farmer, Sec. 34; P. O. Eagle; born May 2, 1808, in Brandon, Rutland Co., Vt.; his early life was spent in his native State, where he had poor facilities for education; at 27 he went to Milton, a few miles south of Boston, remaining there two years; he then went to Warren, Penn., going, in 1838, down the Ohio and Mississippi, via the Gulf, to Texas; not a building stood then on the site of Galveston; engaging in speculation, he, after two years, came north to Fredonia, N. Y., where he farmed it eight years. Resided in Erie, Penn., from 1848 to 1854, when he spent a few months in the towns of Lake and Eagle, then owning the Ray farm, in East Troy, for a year; the next eight years were spent on a farm in Mukwanago; settled on his present farm, of 70 acres, in 1865; it is well improved, and has excellent buildings. Mr. Hunt married Miss Cordelia M. Biggars, a native of Waterford, Erie Co., Penn., she living in that historic town until the marriage, in 1852. Their adopted son, Peter W. Sykes, was born in Manlius, Onondaga Co., N. Y., Feb. 14, 1838; came to Wisconsin when 8 years of age, and has been with Mr. Hunt since he was 21. Married, Oct. 24, 1877, Miss Amelia J. Williams, of Rome, Jefferson Co., Wis., by whom he has a daughter, Katie L. Messrs. Hunt and Sykes are liberal in their political and religious views.

WILLIAM LE FEVRE, farmer; P. O. Eagle; born in Sherbrooke, Canada; son of C. F. and Mary Le Fevre, who located in New York City when he was an infant, he being educated here and in Clinton, N. Y.; the family reached Milwaukee in 1843, his father buying a farm two miles from the then village; this he still owns, it now being within the limits of a city of 100,000 inhabitants. In 1858, William Le Fevre came to Eagle and bought 160 acres of Joseph Sprague; has since bought and sold various tracts, buying his present homestead of William Kline, who had built the handsome residence overlooking the village, and other buildings which Mr. Le Fevre has enlarged and improved; he began breeding pure-blooded Spanish Merino sheep at the time of his settlement in the county, and has constantly improved the stock, dealing with the best-known Vermont breeders, also with the Loomis Bros., N. Prairie, and T. Tratt, of Whitewater; he now owns seventy, but has had flocks of over 200; about 1875, he bought his thoroughbred Jersey stock, of H. Durand, Racine, Wis., and has since bred grades, having eighteen head. In politics, Mr. Le Fevre is a Republican, and has ever been an outspoken temperance man; a few years ago, Mr. Theodore Underhill, the Democratic Chairman of the Town Board, resigned, when Mr. Le Fevre was appointed to fill the vacancy, and to enforce the license laws; a certain class of the Democratic element questioned the legality of his appointment, which question was settled by the Supreme Court of the State, which decided that Mr. Le Fevre was the de-facto Chairman.

J. A. LINS, merchant, Eagle; born in Prussia, Oct. 3, 1840. Spent his early life and was educated in his native land, and came to America in 1857, locating in Milwaukee, where he remained until April, 1861, when he enlisted in the 5th W. V. I.; was with the grand old Army of the Potomac, participating in the battles of Williamsburg, the siege of Yorktown, the Peninsular campaign, Antietam, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court House, North Anna River, and the deadly assault on Cold Harbor, where Mr. Lins was shot through the right side and badly wounded; was confined in hospital in Alexandria, Va., from June 1 until Aug. 15, when he returned to Wisconsin, his time having expired July 13 previously. In company with his brother he began the butcher's business in Eagle, fall of 1864. After three years entered into mercantile business, where the postoffice is now kept, with S. E. Neustatter. In 1869, Mr. L. built his present large store, where he carries a very complete stock of general merchandise; also having another store for clothing and gents' furnishing goods; is also the builder and owner of the large store occupied by Lins & Schmitz. Married Miss Mary Witte, of Eagle, 1873.

EDMUND LINS, proprietor of meat market and saloon, Eagle; was born in Prussia, Aug. 10, 1827; was educated in the Fatherland, and did three years good service in her army; coming to America in 1856, he was in business in Milwaukee until 1861, when he spent one year on a farm near Eagleville; in 1862, he and J. Boie, began the present business in Eagle; a farm having been bought by them, Mr. B. retired to it in 1871; Mr. Lins has the only meat market in the village; he built his handsome brick residence in 1876; owns a 60-acre farm in Sec. 16, and is prospering. He was married in 1863, to Miss Henrietta Macholdt, by whom he has five children—Edward, Lena, Lizzie, Christopher and Mary. Mr. Lins is a Roman Catholic, and a Democrat.

WOLFGANG LOIBL, farmer, Sec. 20; P. O. Eagle; he was born Oct. 31, 1823, in Bavaria, where he was educated and where he lived until August, 1847, when he came to America; spent over two years in Utica, N. Y.; and nearly a year in Milwaukee; settled on Eagle Prairie in 1851, and began life here as day laborer; worked his way up, and now has 136½ acres of land, which he has cleared, broken and improved himself. His wife was Miss Catherine Waas; born in Bavaria, Aug. 31, 1825; they have eight children—John, Catharine, Mary, Anton, Theresa, Anna, Henry and Magdalen. The family are Roman Catholics; in politics he is a Democrat. Mr. Loibl has been Supervisor, Constable and Town Treasurer.

ANDREW McCABE, farmer, Sec. 11; P. O. Eagle; born in the County of Monahan, Ireland, in 1826; came to America at 19, and lived as a laborer for seven years in Oneida Co., N. Y.; in 1852, he settled on 80 acres of his present farm in Eagle, on which was a log house; to get his start here he worked two months for $10, $8 of which bought his first plow; he gave mortgage of $400 on the land, and begun with nothing but health and pluck. He was married in 1854, to Miss Amorett Cole, a resident of Eagle, and a native of Oneida Co., N. Y.; they began life in the log house, which still stands as a monument of their past life of laborious privations; for ten years Mr. McCabe, having no well, used to draw all the water used in the family from a spring brook, a mile distant; his next step was to buy 49 acres, going $800 in debt; this gentleman was at one time paying 12 per cent on a debt of $1,500; he now owns 249 acres, has built a roomy frame farm-house, with stables, etc., and a wind-mill now raising well-water at his door; Mr. and Mrs. McCabe have four children—George E., Alice, Eva and Willie; he is a Roman Catholic, and a Democrat.

FRANCIS G. PARKS, Postmaster, Eagle; born in Addison Co., Vt., June 1, 1824; after receiving a common-school and a partial academic course of instruction at Brandon, Vt., he taught several terms of school, and in 1846, removed to St. Johnsbury, Vt., where he was in charge of a branch of the famous Fairbank Scale Works for eight years; Mr. Parks represented the town in the Legislature of his native State in 1854 and in 1855; he settled in Mukwonago, removing to Eagle in 1863; is in the real estate and insurance business, acting for the Phoenix, Hartford of Conn. Home, New York, the Ætna Fire and Life, and the Northwestern of Milwaukee. A staunch Republican in politics; he was first elected Justice of the Peace in 1863 or 1864, and has served ten or more years; has been Chairman, etc., of Eagle, and was a member of the Legislature of Wisconsin in 1873; Mr. Parks has devoted much time to the study of law, and is nearly always retained on one side or the other in local lawsuits, but says he is credited with possessing more legal knowledge than belongs to him; he succeeded J. L. Perry as Postmaster of Eagle in July, 1874. He was married in Mukwonago in 1855, to Miss Susan E. Webb; they have three children—Frederick W., Mattie E. and Luella M. The son is in a Palmyra, Wis., drug store; the daughters acting as their father's deputies.

JONATHAN PARSONS, deceased; born, April 26, 1811, in Coos Co., N. H.; his parents, Jonathan and Lovisa P., had nine children, Jonathan and several of his brothers migrating West, to Cattaraugus Co., N. Y. In 1836, Lamas, Jonathan and Jerry Parsons, accompanied by their sire, settled in Waukesha Co.; the father settled on the Barber farm; Lamas on the present farm of Joseph Sprague; Jerry on that of J. H. Pitcher, and Jonathan entered a half-section on 25, in Eagle; William Sherman, a brother-in-law, settled about the same time on the Burden farm; Jonathan Parsons built, 1840, the first frame house in the town of Eagle, and one of the first in the county; married, 1841, Miss Jane Cross, then of Southport, Wis.; they had six children born in this historic old house—Henry, Edwin, George (deceased), Horace, Gertrude and Mary. None of the pioneers of this town made a better record than Jonathan Parsons; in 1842, he was in the Territorial Legislature, and any and every year might be found working for the best interests of his fellow-men; in 1859, he built a handsome brick residence, where he quietly spent the remainder of a useful and honorable life, dying in June, 1876; he had for years been a consistent Methodist, and the use of $500 of his property was willed to the M. E. Sabbath School, Eagle. Henry Parsons was born Jan. 6, 1842 and, after a course in the old Jericho schoolhouse, was sent to Lawrence University for a year; after trying farming and canvassing, he enlisted, January, 1864, in the 9th Ill. V. C.; this regiment was badly cut to pieces, in the sadly remembered Sturgis raid, and was in the Tupelo raid, also in fights at Oxford, Holly Springs, etc; engaged with Hood's pickets at Florence Ala., and fought at Lawrenceberg, Columbus and Franklin; after two days' terrific fighting at Nashville, the boys drove Hood to the river, and, after a raid into Alabama, were mustered out. During the next thirteen years Mr. P. was in business in Chicago, eight years in the employ of Hart, Asten & Co.; married in Chicago, Novembr 25, 1867, Miss Chloe, daughter of James and Adeline Coe, of Warren Co., Ill.; their only son, Jonathan, was born October 1, 1878, or 110th year to a day from the day of his grandsire's birth. Since leaving Chicago, Mr. Parsons has resided on the homestead; politics Republican.

T. W. PITTMAN, farmer, Secs. 21 and 22; P. O. Eagle; born in New York City, Dec. 2, 1798; was educated in his native city, and early became a speculator; resided about eight years in Newbern, N. C.; came to Waukesha Co. May, 1844, and at once settled where he is now. But little of the land was then entered, and the old Janesville and Milwaukee was about the only road; Waukesha was Sol. Junease's trading post, with a few houses; Mr. P. soon built a part of his present house, which was the first frame structure in the vicinity, and is the oldest in the village—sowed wheat that fall, and his yield from 65 acres was 1,600 bushels. Dr. Bigelow had a mill at Eagleville, but on a small scale; beginning with 480 acres; Mr. P. has bought and sold over 2,000 acres of school and other lands. Eagle was platted by him about 1852, and at the time it was proposed to call it Pittman, but he insisted upon the present name; was Station Agent here ten years, and also Postmaster, besides Town Treasurer, Assessor and Supervisor; politics, a stalwart Democrat; owns 600 acres and a beautifully situated home on the outskirts of the village; married in Amsterdam, N. Y., 1836, Miss Sarah J., daughter of M. J. Bovee, she being a native of Amsterdam; they have had four children—Matthias B., now a druggist at Boscobel, Wis.; Emma (deceased), Noria (Mrs. Harvey Clemons), and Sarah (Mrs. William McWilliams). In transferring land and village lots, this old couple have probably signed more deeds than any in Waukesha County.

JAMES V. SHARP, farmer, Sec. 24; P. O. Eagle; born in Halcott, Greene Co., N. Y., Feb. 25, 1840; his parents, John and Betsey (Vanderburg) Sharp, were farmers; he received his schooling and lived in his native town until he was 22, when he settled in LaSalle Co. Ill; was for six years a farmer, and two years in a meat market ; is also a carpenter, and worked at his trade both in Illinois and Wisconsin. Married in his native town of Vermillion, LaSalle Co. Ill., Sept. 2, 1868, Miss Hannah J., daughter of Henry and Almira (Hall) Angell. The first few months of their wedded life was spent in Muskegon Co., Mich. ; they settling in Eagle, 1869, where Mr. S., owned a house and 5 acres ; selling this, he settled on his present farm of 80 acres in 1876 ; on this he has built a barn, set out trees and made other improvements. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp have four children—Durell B., Mabel, Leroy E. and John H., all born in Eagle ; Mr. S., is a Democrat.

JERRY ANGELL, farmer, Sec. 24 ; P. O. Eagle ; born in Vermillion, LaSalle Co. Ill., April 5, 1855 ; son of Henry and Almira Angell. Henry A., was a native of Rhode Island, and his wife of Massachusetts ; they settled in LaSalle Co., as early 1832, and were the parents of nine children—Isaac, Benjamin W., Albert, Hannah J., Everett, Ann, Welcome, James and Jerry ; the subject of this sketch was educated in his native town, where he lived until January, 1878, when he settled on this farm, having an interest here, besides an interest in the Illinois homestead ; is a Republican in politics.

ENOCH SHERMAN, farmer, Sec. 33 ; P. O. Eagle ; born in Rupert, Bennington Co., Vt., Feb. 24, 1826, son of Sterling and Jane (Nobles) Sherman. Attaining his majority in Vermont, he in 1847 located on a farm four miles south of Waukesha ; he and S. M. Murdock were then in partnership on a 240-acre farm till 1856, though Mr. S. and wife spent 1851 on the Andrews farm in Mukwonago ; at the time of his settlement on his present farm (1856) only 60 acres were under cultivation ; 100 acres are now well improved, the remaining 60 being pasture and timber. Mr. Sherman is now completely remodeling his home. He married Miss Lauraette, daughter of Nathaniel and Laura (Jones) Walton, of Batavia, N. Y. ; the family settled in Waukesha in 1836, where she married Mr. S., Dec. 12, 1849 ; they have three sons—Walton S., Wm. H. and Jas. A. ; the eldest is a farmer in Eagle, the second is traveling for a Milwaukee firm, and the youngest is on the homestead. Mr. Sherman is a Republican, and a progressive farmer who has devoted his land to grain and stock.

JOSEPH SPRAGUE, farmer, Sec. 26 ; P. O. Eagle ; born in Summit Co., Ohio, in 1825 ; is a son of Dr. F. A. and Bridget Sprague, who settled on Sec. 25, in Eagle, in 1842 ; buying 200 acres of John Parsons ; Dr. S. built a frame house, plastered outside and in, which was, doubtless, the first in the township ; this is well remembered by the pioneers of that day. Joseph S. married, March 15, 1848, Miss Ann E., daughter of Hon. M. J. Bovee, one of the first settlers here, buying a farm of Edward Skelton the next year ; he resided upon it six years, then bought his present farm of 200 acres ; it was then broken, and on it were two barns and a log house ; Mr. Sprague has rebuilt and enlarged the barns, and replaced the log house in 1860 with a spacious and elegant farmhouse. Mrs. Sprague died Oct. 10, 1875, leaving two children, Theodore J. and Ambrose F. ; on the 8th of May, 1878, he married Miss Mary, daughter of Patrick Sheridan, of Mukwonago. As a breeder of thoroughbred Spanish merino sheep Mr. S. has made his mark during the past thirty years, keeping from one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty ; he has never competed for premiums, but, by dealing with the foremost breeders, has raised his flock to a high standard. Mr. S. is a staunch Republican.

EBENEZER THOMAS, farmer, Sec. 13 ; P. O. Eagle ; born May 11, 1806, in Wales, where his younger life was spent ; came to America in 1829, being among the early settlers in Cass Co., Michigan. Married in 1833 Miss Elizabeth D. Wolf, a native of Canada, whose parents settled in Cass Co. when she was a babe. In the fall of 1836 Mr. and Mrs. Thomas left for Wisconsin with teams and wagons, accompanied by a young man who drove their stock ; they reached Eagle Prairie in October, 1836, building on their claim the present homestead, the first house built by whites, and were the first family to settle here ; this was a shake-roofed log house, with a puncheon floor and a stick and mud chimney built on the outside ; this was a true pioneer family, as their flour, costing from $15 to $35 per barrel, was drawn from Milwaukee over roads cut through the woods by Mr. Thomas himself ; the roads of that day were Indian trails, Mr. T. having the only horse teams in town for some time. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have nine children—Daniel, Ransom, Fanny, Jacob, Mary, Ebenezer, Orilla, Isabella and Benj. F. Mr. T. has prospered in the good things of this world, has sold half his land, and now owns 160 acres well improved with excellent buildings ; in this pleasant home of to-day the old couple delight in recalling the memories of pioneer life. For many years past both have been active and consistent members of the M. E. Church ; father and sons being Republicans.

THOMAS TROW, farmer, Sec. 11 ; P. O. Eagle ; born in Wales, son of Thomas and Elizabeth Trow ; in 1832 or 1833 he came to America, working in the woolen mills of New York State until 1843, when, with his wife, he settled on Coon Island, so named by D. H. Melendy ; Mr. Trow bought a small farm here, living in a "partnership" shanty with Mr. E. Miller; his first crop of wheat was a failure and the second grown in the field before it was threshed, this being done with flails; his first cart-wheels were made by sawing off the end of a huge oak log, and in this cart the wheat was hauled with oxen to Milwaukee, Mr. Trow sleeping in the open air when night overtook him; having been eaten out of house and home by land seekers, he and his devoted wife were obliged to subsist on crust coffee and bread made of middlings for some time; wintering in the old log house of Mr. Baldwin, the next spring Mr. T. built for himself; while haying on the marsh he was so impressed with the luster of the sand on the shores of an adjoining lake as to name it Silver Lake, the name it bears to-day; a tavern built and kept near it by E. Moody was also called the Silver Lake House; in 1845 he made an exchange with Mr. Moody, and thus obtained 40 acres of his present farm of 180; moving a small frame from Silver Lake, he split the shingles for its roof from oak logs, this shanty offering a striking contrast to the present roomy and tasteful residence of the old couple. This large farm is also provided with all needed fencing, buildings, etc., placed there by a man who had to borrow money to house his goods in a Milwaukee warehouse thirty-seven years ago. Mrs. Trow was Miss Lucinda Vars, of Otsego Co., N. Y. They have two daughters—Henrietta (Mrs. Chas. Hill) and Valeria (Mrs. W. S. Sherman). Mr. Trow is a Freemason, and, with his wife, a true believer in redemption through Christ Jesus.

HARVEY WAMBOLD, proprietor of the Eagleville Mills; born in 1826, in Montgomery Co., Penn.; coming to Wisconsin in 1848, he at once began building mills, building and owning the steam mill at Granville; after helping to build the mill of Bertehey & Carr, Milwaukee, he was employed about six years in keeping two large mills in repair; settling in Eagleville, December, 1871, he bought a five years' lease in the mill and water-power; this is the oldest improved mill site in Waukesha Co., built in 1839, by Dr. Bigelow, the present large mill replacing his about twenty-five years ago; it is provided with three run of stone, and the Kurth patent cockle separator for cleaning seed wheat, costing $300; Mr. W. has cleaned over 1,000 bushels most satisfactorily this spring for the surrounding farmers; all foul seeds and shrunken wheat are completely separated; the machine was made to order, and is specially adapted to the wheat grown in this section; near the mill are the Eagleville mineral springs, four in number, the medicinal properties of each being different and all highly spoken of by those using the water, which is carried to all parts of the State. Mr. Wambold married Miss Mary Barndt, by whom he has had five children—Henry, Josephine (Mrs. S. Gale), Milton, Leander and Charles (died April, 1879). Mr. W. and wife are Methodists, he supporting men and principles instead of political parties.

TOWN OF MUSKEGO.

CHARLES BAASS, farmer, Secs. 15, 11 and 14; P. O. Tess Corners; born in Pomerania, Prussia, March 28, 1823; son of Ernest C. and Sophia (Rahs) Baass; the father dealt in fish, and the sons followed the sea; the family emigrated in 1845, located in Milwaukee, where the father dealt in fish, first on Spring street bridge, and later in the First Ward market; he died in 1877. Charles Baass and wife (nee Wilhelmina Schwhn) came to America and to Milwaukee a year or two later; Mr. B. sailed on the lakes a number of years; his father bought the land in Muskego in 1855, and in 1856, Charles, August and Henry Baass spent a year here, became disgusted with their life in the wilderness, and returned; rather than see the land sold, however, Charles Baass returned for permanent settlement in 1858; ten acres cleared and a log-house were all the improvements where he now has a valuable 100-acre farm, with a tasteful brick house, with barns, etc.; his location on the lake is one of the very best for a pleasure resort, but is only open to intimate friends. Mr. and Mrs. Baass have eleven children—Ottilia, Sarah, Rachel and Samuel, born in Milwaukee; Leah, Hannah, Ernest, Martha, Martin, Lydia and Lena, all born in Muskego. Mr. B. is a Democrat; was Supervisor eight years, and Chairman in 1871 and 1872.

C. H. BABCOCK, farmer, Sec. 18; P. O. Muskego Center; born Jan. 16, 1824, in Fort Ann, Washington Co., N. Y.; began life at 11, as a canal driver; in 1843, he met his parents, Barnis and Asenath Babcock, who persuaded him to go with them to Wisconsin; his father made the claim on Sec. 19, where he died in March, 1869, after making a noble life-record as a pioneer; he is a member of the first constitutional convention, and filled many other offices with honor. C. H. returned East in 1844, and, as a puddler, began working at iron in Litchfield, Conn.; five years later, he settled and continued the same business in Napanock, Ulster Co., N. Y., where he resided until 1858, when he came again to Muskego and settled on his farm of 140 acres; this is a valuable farm, and he has made it more so by erecting a large square two-story farm house, with barns, etc.; he has also dug a well which is a curiosity, as it is constantly full, a stream of water constantly flowing from it sufficient for thousands of cattle. He married, in Napanock, N. Y., Miss Hephse Tomlinson, a native of Manchester, Eng.; they have an only son, Frank R., born in Muskego Feb. 15, 1864; Mr. B. is a Mason and a Republican; was Chairman in 1861, and enrolling officer during the war, and did his duty, though threats against his life were made by certain irate citizens.

FERDINAND BISCHOFF, proprietor of the park and hall, Muskego Lake; born in Prussia in 1837; the family came to America in 1851; spent two years at White Fish Bay, then came to Waukesha Co.; Ferdinand worked three years in Muskego; in 1867, he with his brothers, Frederick and William, bought a part of the present grounds, then overrun with brush, etc., and provided with only a log house; the brothers placed a few boats on the lake, built a good frame house, as a summer hotel, in 1874, and in 1877, built a hall, 36x40, arranged for dancing, picnic parties, etc.; it is situated in a beautiful grove on the banks of the Big Muskego Lake; the brothers, Ferdinand and William, now own the property, and propose building a larger hotel near the hall; they own 90 acres, and have on the lake fifteen large row boats, two sailing boats, and thirty or forty hunting boats.

FREDERICK BISCHOFF, farmer, Sec. 13; P. O. Tess Corners; born in 1849 in Saxony; his parents, Christopher and Christiana B., emigrated in 1851; spent two years in Milwaukee Co., then came to Waukesha Co. Frederick Bischoff settled on his present farm of 34 acres in 1873; is a cooper by trade, manufacturing pork barrels for the Milwaukee houses. Married Miss Johanna Bravier, of Franklin, Milwaukee Co.; they have three children—Frederick, Edward and William—all born on the home farm. Mr. B. is a Democrat, and a Lutheran, with his family.

FREDERICK BLUHM, farmer, Sec. 24; P. O. Durham Hill; born near Robell, Mecklenburg, Schwerin, Dec. 13, 1837; the family emigrated in 1851; spent three months in Milwaukee; then settled in Wauwatosa, where he worked twelve years as teamster for Chase & Holson, stone quarry. Married Christina Buddenhagen, who was born in 1837, near Tesein, Mecklenburg, Schwerin; they settled on the present farm Oct. 5, 1863; began with 76 acres and a log house; Mr. B. cleared the land of grubs and stone, added 27 acres, cleared 10 of timber, and made the whole smooth enough for machinery; in 1871, he built a 32x45 barn, and in 1876, a house, the upright of which is two stories, 18x28; kitchen wing 18x26, and woodhouse 18x26; his barn is now 32x76, with basement. Mr. and Mrs. Bluhm have five children—Meena (Mrs. P. Pellman), Lizzie, Frederick, Ernest and Bertha; Mary died June 8, 1879, aged 14. The family belong to the Lutheran Church; Mr. B. is a Democrat.

JOHN BURNS, deceased; born in County Meath, Ireland; came to America in 1842, and located on the present Burns homestead, in Muskego; built a log house in the woods that covered it and kept "bachelor's hall" for a number of years, striking the first blows that secured so good a home. May 20, 1852, he married Margaret Lannon; she was born in 1832, in County Louth, Ireland, and came to America in 1847; Mr. Burns died June 26, 1866, leaving seven children—John, born in 1853; James, born in 1854; William, born in 1856; Anne M., now Mrs. M. L. Goff, born in 1858; Maggie M., born in 1860; Elizabeth C., born in 1863, and Sarah J., born in 1865. Mr. Burns was a stirring and thrifty pioneer settler, as may be seen by the well-improved homestead of 106 acres, on which he built a large and pleasant frame house and substantial barns, which have since been enlarged; the estate also owns 20 acres near Muskego Lake; the family are Roman Catholics, and the sons are all on the farm; are Democrats, and no office holders.

JOHN CARRIGAN, farmer, Sec. 21; P. O. Muskego Center; born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1838; his parents, Edward and Anne (Reynolds) Carrigan, emigrated in 1839; spent a year in Canada East; located in Waterloo, Seneca Co., N. Y., where the father worked three years in a factory; in October, 1843, they settled on the present farm of John Carrigan; were unable to pay for only 40 acres, on which Mr. C. built a log house the same fall, having lived from October until Dec. 24 in the house of J. Reynolds, a brother-in-law; the Carrigan's have made a record of success, John, now owning all the 80 his father tried to buy thirty-seven years ago, and 30 besides; the log house, improved, of course, was the family home sixteen years; in 1859, Edward Carrigan settled on his present farm of 109 acres. John Carrigan married, in 1866, Miss Caroline, daughter of Richard and Ellen (Kelly) Hennessey; she was born in New Berlin; they have three children—Edward R., Ellen A. and Maurice F., all born in Muskego; the youngest, J. Arthur, died at 2 years and 2 months old. Mr. C. lived until 1877 in a small frame house, standing near the large and elegant one built in its stead; F. Kolck and J. Maney were its former owners. The mother of Mr. C. died Feb. 1, 1871; he is a Democrat; was Town Supervisor two years, School District Clerk three years and Treasurer eight years. The family are Roman Catholics.

HIRAM CLAFLIN, farmer, Secs. 8 and 9; P. O. Muskego Center; born Dec. 9, 1817, in West Bloomfield, Ontario Co., N. Y.; his parents, John and Sally Claffin, removed to Ohio in his infancy; his mother died there; in 1843, he came with his wife to Muskego, and bought 80 acres on Sec. 8; built a log house, drove pins into the logs for shelves to rest upon, and made some rude furniture; his last dollar went for the window lights and door fixtures; by trading some cloth, he obtained a yoke of steers; did hard work among the grubs; in 1858, he added 80 acres more, and continued the work, which has resulted in an improved farm of 212 acres, a large and tasteful home, etc. He married Miss Sallie, daughter of Romanta and Polly Peck; she was born in Starksboro, Vt., and died April 28, 1879, a good and kindly remembered pioneer woman; their adopted son, Albert Claffin, was born in Orleans Co., Vt., June 9, 1849, his parents locating in Vernon, Waukesha Co., soon after, and at the death of his mother, two months later, his father, William Wood, consigned him to the care of the Claffin's. He married, Oct. 20, 1879, Miss Eliza Kingston, daughter of William Kingston, and a native of New York; they have two children—Hawley W. and Nora, both born in Muskego. Messrs. Claffin are both Republicans, the younger now serving as Justice of the Peace, by appointment, and are stirring, successful farmers.

THOMAS CONROY, farmer, Secs. 10 and 15; P. O. Muskego Center; born in 1810, in County Louth, Ireland, where his early life was spent as a farmer and shoemaker. He married Margaret McCabe in 1836, and came to America ten years later, joining his brothers, Patrick and James, in Muskego; began very poor, and lived six or seven years near his brothers; then bought 12 acres of his present farm; it was a wilderness of timber; he lived in a log house many years, chopping and clearing, the result of which is a good farm of 61 acres, on which he has built a neat brick house, a good barn, and a most convenient carriage house, corn house and hog house combined; as he began without a dollar, few have done better. Mr. and Mrs. Conroy have three living children—Mary, now Mrs. McEneny; William and Anne; they have lost four, one on the sea in crossing, and Catherine, who married John Ward, and died in 1879. Mr. Conroy and family are Catholics and Democrats.

CHARLES DOUGHERTY, farmer, Sec. 3; P. O. Tess Corners; born in Orange Co., N. Y., Dec. 13, 1831 or 1832. His parents, Edward and Mary Dougherty, came to Milwaukee in 1840, where his father worked out, settling, four years later, on the Muskego homestead of 63½ acres, then heavily timbered; it was cleared by him and his sons Charles, Peter and Edward; Charles D. went, by way of New York and the isthmus, to California, in 1863; farmed four years in Oakland Valley, and six months in the mines of Idaho, returned to the valley, and, a year later, to Wisconsin; he has since lived on the homestead, where his father died in 1875; the daughters, Mary and Sarah, are in California; Peter is farming in Racine Co., and Edward is a carpenter in Milwaukee. Charles Dougherty is a Democrat, and was Town Treasurer in 1876; Roman Catholic in religion.

EDWARD DOYLE, farmer, Sec. 10; P. O. Muskego Center; born in County Carlow, Ireland in 1823; his parents, Gerrett and Annie Doyle, came to America in 1825, located in Troy, N. Y., and lived there until June, 1837, when they came to Milwaukee, spent a few months, and went to Chicago, where they remained until 1839, when they came to Muskego, and bought the Doyle homestead. Mrs. Doyle was a daughter of James and Margaret Collins; her father was employed by the English at Palermo, Italy, where Ellen was born in 1815; seven years later, they came to America, located in Canada, where she married John Vallier, a French Canadian, who died in 1846, leaving five children—Alexander, James, Talbot D., John and Ellen (Mrs. Charles Finley). Mr. Vallier settled in Ottawa, Waukesha Co., in 1836; his wife joined him in 1837, being one of the first white women in the town, and who made the first butter in that section, while in the employ of T. C. Dousman, the first settler of Ottawa. In 1848, Mr. Doyle and Mrs. Vallier were married, and, in 1852, they, with Alexander, James and Ellen Vallier, and their two children, went overland to California; they lacked only ten days of a six months' trip, and saw many hardships; after two years, they returned by water to New York City, and have since lived on the Doyle homestead of 80 acres. Anna Doyle is now Mrs. Thomas Welch, of Muskego; Edward, born in a tent at Diamond Springs, Cal., married Anne Newnan, of Manitowoc, Wis.; Alexander Vallier now lives in California, where James died; T. D. resides in Iowa, while John is in the Rocky Mountains.

JAMES ELLIOTT, farmer, Sec. 16; P. O. Muskego Center; born June 1, 1802, in province of Maghera, County Londonderry, Ireland; came to America in 1832, located in Rutland County, Vt., where his wife and two children joined him in 1833; removed from Vermont to Wisconsin in 1846; settled on a rented farm in Franklin, Milwaukee Co., for three years; then settled on his present farm of 83½ acres; over 50 of this has been cleared of very heavy timber, which was rolled up and burned in log heaps. He married in Ireland, Miss Jane Maitland; they have four living children—

Matthew, Rosanna, William and Martha Jane. Four sons of Mr. Elliott enlisted to defend the old flag, and two laid down their lives in the cause; Matthew and Thomas enlisted early in 1862, in Co. E., 19th W. V. I.; Matthew was promoted to Corporal, served three years and three months, fighting at Chapin's Farm, Blackwater, Suffolk, and with Grant in many bloody battles in the Virginia campaign; his was the first regiment to hoist a flag over Richmond, and he has, like his brother William, an honorable discharge; he now resides with the old folks and owns 40 acres adjoining them; he was Chairman in 1858, and held his present office of Supervisor a number of years; Thomas was struck by a Cohorn shell in front of Petersburg, Va., June 30, 1864, died at McDougal Hospital, New York, a month and ten days after, and is buried in Greenwood Cemetery; Samuel Elliott was shot dead at Chickamauga, and was buried, if at all, by the rebels on the battlefield; he enlisted August, 1861, in Co. D, 1st W. V. I.; William Elliott enlisted January, 1862, Co. C, 15th W. V. I., and was with Sherman on the famous "March to the Sea," and through the Carolinas. He is married and carries on his father's farm; has been Supervisor and is now serving a second term as Town Treasurer.

HENRY M. PECK, farmer; Sec. 16; P. O. Muskego Center; born near Whitehall, New York, May 5, 1827; his parents, Romanta and Polly (Durgin) Peck, both Vermonters, settled in 1835 in Mendon, Monroe Co., N. Y., where Henry M. lived until 1837; his brother, Rufus C., made claims for himself and a brother, W. D., in Muskego during 1836; and in May 1837, R. C., and Henry M. Peck settled on Sec. 8; here the pioneer brothers worked together nine years; the first summer was spent in a 12x13 claim-shanty; in this, were R. C. Peck, wife and two children, besides Henry M. Peck; they lived under a bark roof on a puncheon floor; cooked in a small tin "baker," and in kettles hung on poles over a fire-place, backed up with mud and stones; only blankets hung in the door and window-openings to separate them from the wolves howling outside; in 1846, Mr. Peck bought eighty acres of the very heavy timber on Sec. 16; one tree cut by him here was eighteen feet in circumference; he now owns 150 acres, of which 90 have been literally chopped out; the timber at first burned in "log heaps," was at a later day sold as cordwood and lumber; the log-house of early days was replaced in 1873 by a tasteful brick farmhouse, and a good barn, etc., built. He married Miss Harriet, daughter of John and Lucy Post; Mrs. Peck was born in England, her parents coming to America when she was three years old, and were early settlers in Muskego, where they began with just five cents and made a good record. Mr. and Mrs. Peck have nine children—Josephine, Oscar, Henry F., Eva, Michael, Nellie G., Hazen, Dora and Ada, all born in Muskego; Mr. Peck is an attendant of the local churches; a Republican and was town Treasurer once, and Supervisor twice.

HAZEN PECK, farmer, Sec. 19; P. O. Big Bend; born April 21, 1817, in Starksboro, Vt., in 1823, his parents, Romanta and Sarah Peck, settled in Washington Co., N. Y., where he resided until he was seventeen, thence to Genesee Co., N. Y., where he remained until October, 1848, when he came to Muskego; a month later he bought his present farm of seventy-six acres; forty were broken; the barn built, a good log house, and part of the house he has since enlarged and made so good a home; he has also cleared twenty acres of the original heavy timber; improved the land, re-sided the barn, etc. Married Eliza Allen, who was born March 26, 1820, in Mendon, Monroe Co., N. Y. Their oldest son, Allen, born in Mendon, came West with them, enlisted in Co. G. 28th W. V. I., served a year and died at Duvall's Bluff, Ark. The four living sons are all Badger born; Harvey, born June 27, 1850, Hiram, May 9, 1854, Edgar, June, 12, 1856, George, April 9, 1861. Mr. Peck, like all true Green Mountain Boys, is an old Whig Republican; was a supervisor one year and lacked only one vote of a re-election at the advent of the Democratic power in Muskego, and has since refused all nominations.

C. L. PELLMANN, farmer, Secs. 2 and 11; P. O. Tess Corners; born Sept. 30, 1813, in Prussia; came to America in June, 1846, and settled in the woods of Milwaukee Co., having made a visit to Illinois, during the heated season, and become homesick; he lived seven years in Milwaukee Co. with Indians for neighbors; a little daughter (since dead) was stolen by the Indians. Mrs. Pellmann, warned by a white man, gave chase, overtook the Indians and rescued the child; as young Pellmann says, "The Indians had red babies enough, and wanted a white one." In early times Mr. Pellmann used to travel by the aid of blazed trees; he began in Muskego on 40 acres, in a small log house (still standing) then shut in by the woods, through which were only tracks, no roads laid out near him; his 40 acres, with some stock and tools, cost him $700; the farm contains now 106 acres, well improved, a good brick house, and a 30x86x24 basement barn has been built and great changes made since 1846. He married Miss Jane Ludwig in 1838; they have six children—Fredericka, Frederick, Minnie, born in Germany, Richard, Paul and Louis, born in this country. Richard and Paul are on the homestead, Paul having married Minnie Bluhm; Louis is with the old folks at Tess Corners, where they have lived since 1877. and own 22 acres. The Pellmanns are liberal in politics.

HENRY ROSENBERG, merchant and Postmaster, Tess Corners; born in 1830 in Bavaria; his parents, Christian and Margaret, emigrated in 1835, and lived twenty years in New York City; here Mr. R. learned his trade of brass finisher; lived three years in Albany and two in Troy, N. Y.; came to Tess Corners in 1861, bought his store, and did business until Sept. 13, 1864, when, as one of the 6th W. V. I., he went South; was with his regiment at Hatcher's Run, Five Forks, Gravel Run, etc., in the fights on the Weldon Railroad, and with Sheridan when he overhauled Lee and held him at bay at Appomattox; since the close of the war, Mr. R. has done a mercantile and saloon business at Tess Corners, having rebuilt and improved the old store; has been Postmaster since January, 1867. Married April 6, 1856, Miss Caroline Seasongood; she was born in Saxony, and came to America in 1854; they have three children—George S., Henry and Augusta; the eldest son has been Town Clerk two years, and took the United States census in Muskego in 1880; he was born in 1858, in New York City; the other children were born in Muskego; Henry is now a bricklayer in Milwaukee. The family are Lutherans and Democrats.

JOHN SCHMIDT, farmer, Secs. 1, 4 and 33; P. O. Tess Corners; born April 23, 1833, in Wirschweiler, Prussia; his parents, Peter and Katrina Schmidt, settled in Muskego in June, 1846, the second German family in the town; Mrs. S. died April 16, 1869, and her husband Oct. 6, 1874. John Schmidt attended the schools of both Prussia and Muskego; has been a lifelong farmer; owns 260 acres and a good home; is a staunch Democrat; was Town Treasurer in 1857 and 1858; Assessor from 1865 to 1878; has been Chairman since for three years, and was a member of the State Legislature in 1864 and 1880; his official record is most satisfactory to the people of Muskego, and one of which he may be proud. He was married Sept. 25, 1857, to Mary Wollman; she was born in German Bohemia, and accompanied her parents, Franz and Barbara Wollman, to America, in 1852. Mr. and Mrs. S. have eleven children—Emilie, Mary, John, Henry, Christian, Leda, William, Jacob, Ella, Peter and Frank, all born in Muskego. The family are Lutherans. For the past twenty-eight years, Mr. S. has been a breeder of excellent horses; Netherby Jock, purchased by him in 1872, in Canada, was the best Clydesdale ever imported; he died in Waukesha, in 1874; Mr. S. has owned many others of wide repute as stock getters, but has been very unfortunate, having lost five by death; he now owns Young Princeton, a Norman weighing 1,600 pounds, and Netherby Jock, Jr., sired by the old horse, and weighing 1,300 pounds; he also owns the pure bred Durham bull Nonesuch, bought of and bred by Gov. Ludington, and a herd of grade cattle; is also agent for J. I. Case and other leading manufacturers of first-class machinery.

JOHN C. SCHUET, merchant and Postmaster, Muskego; born Jan. 5, 1840, in Mecklenburg, Germany; he attended school in youth as do all Germans, and was two years a student of the Dargun high school; his parents, Christian and Mary Schuet, emigrated in 1857, locating at Tess Corners, where his father followed his trade of stonemason. John C. clerked two years in Milwaukee; was a year in charge of the store at Tess Corners, then went to St. Louis and remained eighteen months in business; he returned to Muskego in 1860, and the next spring opened the store, hotel and saloon, which he has since enlarged to keep pace with his growing business; he has the only hotel in the town, and carries a very complete general stock of goods ; has been Postmaster since 1861. Enlisted in 1864 in the 6th W. V. I., and served through with Grant, fighting at Hatcher's Run, Five Forks, Gravel Run, on the Weldon Railroad, and was with Sheridan when he grappled Lee at Appomattox. Mr. S. is a Republican ; was elected County Clerk in 1871 and 1872 ; Register of Deeds in 1873 and 1874, and Chairman of Muskego in 1877. He married Carrie Horn, a native of Franklin, Milwaukee Co. ; they have three sons—Otto, George and Frank—all born in Muskego.

ARNOLD STALLMAN, farmer, Sec. 7 ; P. O. Muskego Center ; born in Bassom, Hanover, 1828 ; his father, Ernest S., was in public office in the hardware business, and an extensive farmer ; his wife dying in 1847, he married again, and in 1849 brought his family to America, bought a farm in Greenfield, Milwaukee Co., Wis., where Arnold lived four years ; he is a tinsmith by trade, and made a trip through Illinois, Missouri, Louisiana and Indiana ; returning, he worked at his trade two years for the Nazro Bros., Milwaukee ; farmed it seven years in Waterloo, Jefferson Co., then settled on his present farm of 80 acres ; the former owners were Guthrie, Garvin and Christie, and only 40 acres were poorly cleared ; the buildings were a wreck ; land full of stones, etc. Mr. S. has worked here fifteen years, has 66 acres cleared of all obstructions, over which he can run a reaper ; has rebuilt the house, built a 30x46 basement barn and made a good record. He was married Feb. 4, 1856, to Johanna Roemer, a Prussian by birth, who came to Milwaukee Co. in 1847 ; of their eleven children, Arnold was born in Milwaukee ; Eliza, Frances, Charles and Pauline were born in Waterloo ; Anna, Louis, Adolph, Emma, Julia and Laura were born in Muskego. The Stallmans are an historic old German family, as may be seen by a record now in Mr. Stallman's house ; probably an older record cannot be found in Waukesha Co. Mr. S. is a Republican and a member of Bismarck Lodge, No. 193, I. O. O. F.

SOLOMON VANDEWALKER, farmer, Sec. 18 ; P. O. Big Bend ; born in Minden, Montgomery Co., N. Y., Sept. 2, 1830 ; his parents soon after moved to Brownville, Jefferson Co., N. Y., where he grew to manhood, attending the common and select schools ; also taught six terms of school ; in 1854, he came to Milwaukee, engaging in the mercantile and livery business until the fall of 1856 ; then, with a few buggies, harness, etc., from his livery, and only $100 in cash, he came to Muskego and bought 40 acres, but would have lost it had not his uncle, Daniel Vandewalker, generously mortgaged his farm to raise means to make the payment ; success has since attended him ; he now owns 157 acres as a homestead, which is well improved with excellent buildings ; Mr. Vandewalker also owns 155 acres on Sec. 8, and 10 acres of marsh on Sec. 20 ; he has taught in the districts around him eighteen terms of school, and as he began in debt and in a log house twenty-four years ago, his record is certainly good. He married, June 3, 1856, Miss Maria, daughter of D. Vandewalker ; she was born in Manlius, Onondaga Co., N. Y. ; they have three children,—Charley C., D. Edgar, and Orley S., all born on this farm. Mr. V. is a Republican, and was Town Superintendent of Schools under the old system ; is also serving his fourth term as Secretary of the Vernon Union Protective Society.

HENRY R. WELCH, farmer, Sec. 21 ; P. O. Muskego Center ; born in Dexter, Mich., July 19, 1839 ; that fall his father, John Welch, made his first visit to Wisconsin, with an ox team, by way of Chicago, and spent the winter in Milwaukee ; his wife (formerly Anne Richmond), joined him the next summer, and during the summer of 1840, John Welch, following a line of blazed trees, came into Muskego and bought at Government price the present Welch homestead ; returned to Milwaukee and spent the year in helping grade the first streets with Mat. Galligan, who, with a family, accompanied the Welch family to Muskego for permanent settlement in 1841 ; they began in a log house, and did good work among the giant timber ; hay was cut, cured, and hauled to Milwaukee, and traded for goods the same day, and to reward the pioneer work, the farm of 50 acres is now under cultivation, a good two-story frame house has replaced the log house. John Welch died Oct. 6, 1872, leaving his widow and eight children—William and Stephen (twins), Charles, Samantha, Henry R. and Mary (twins), Thomas and James. Henry R. Welch attended the early schools and lived in Muskego until the fall of 1864, when he enlisted in Co. F, 44th W. V. I. ; was engaged in the terrible and decisive battle of Nashville, and served until his honorable discharge, July, 1865 ; his brothers, Thomas, James and William, were in the employ of the Government, and Stephen was a volunteer in the 12th W. V. I. H. R. Welch married, in St. Paul's Church, Milwaukee, Feb. 24, 1873, Miss Mary Eagan ; she was born in Muskego, and is a daughter of M. and C. (Doyle) Eagan ; they have four children—Edward, William, John and Mary ; the eldest was born at Bay View, Wis., where Mr. W. worked from 1873 to 1876 in the rolling-mills. Mr. W. is a Republican and was one term a Supervisor ; a Roman Catholic in religion.

ADOLPH WOLLMER, farmer, Sec. 11 ; P. O. Tess Corners ; born Aug. 22, 1837, near Otterndorf, Hanover ; his parents, Peter N. and Sophia W., emigrated in 1847, locating on a farm in Greenfield, Milwaukee Co., where Adolph remained until 1866; he then located on his farm of 94 acres; has cleared it of the stumps of the original timber, and built, in 1873, a large and pleasant farmhouse; has also enlarged the original barn, it now being 30x80, and built one 26x30. Married Miss Meena, daughter of C. L. Pellman; she was born in Saxony; they have five children—Tillie, Rudolph, Amanda, Edward and Ella, all born on the home farm. Mr. W. is a live farmer; formerly bred horses, but at present is raising grain; politics, Democrat.

CHARLES WOLLMAN, farmer, Sec. 1; P. O. Tess Corners; born in Hannig, German Bohemia, April 26, 1839; his parents, Franz and Barbara Wollman, came to America in 1852, and located in Muskego. Charles Wollman settled on 86 acres of his farm in 1864; it was covered with stumps and stone-piles, and almost without buildings; during these sixteen years, Mr. W. has built a 35x60 and a 30x36 barn, and a large and tasteful brick farmhouse, the main part of which is 28x30 and two stories high; the wing is 25x28, one and a half stories; also built a stone and brick granary and hog-house; these, with the smaller buildings, make almost a village; his farmyard is inclosed by a solid stone wall five and a half feet high; his land, in three locations, comprises 126 acres, and is well improved. He married, June 10, 1864, Miss Charlotte Schmidt, daughter of Peter Schmidt; they have seven children—Charles, Louisa, Emma, Frank, Eda, Tilda and Sarah, all born on the homestead made so valuable by the labor and good management of the parents. No one in Waukesha County has done better work in improvements, in the same time, than has Charley Wollman; politics, Republican.

FRANCIS WOLLMAN, farmer, Sec. 2; P. O. Tess Corners; born in Reignberg, German Bohemia, in 1811; his father, Anton, was a doctor and a large farmer. Francis attained a good education, knows four languages, and learned the farrier's profession in Germany; he fought on the patriot side through the rebellion of 1848, and can show scars of sword, bayonet and bullet wounds then received; he assessed three Bohemian towns in 1850, and collected the taxes in them; and served three and a half years as Supervisor, resigning a week before coming to America in 1852, with his wife, formerly Barbara Ehrlich, born 1813, in Reignberg, locating the same year on his homestead of 110 acres; it was then a wilderness of heavy timber, except 15 acres of stumps; they began in a leaky log house; were stricken with ague, and we can hardly blame Mrs. W., who had left an elegant home, for being heartsick and homesick; they kept on, and the large and pleasant home, with a number of large and well-filled barns, is the reward. Mr. W. has prospered well, and has given each of his children $1,000 in land or money; he has owned over 400 acres; has also followed the practice of veterinary surgery with the best of success, over a wide range in all adjoining towns, and even in Milwaukee. Mr. and Mrs. Wollman have six children—Frank, Mary, Charles, Annie, Julia and William, all born in Bohemia; Anthony and Emilie (born in Muskego), are dead; Frank is in a store in Appleton, Wis.; William, only, remains with the old folks; he married Sarah Baass.

TOWN OF NEW BERLIN.

E. F. BENNETT, farmer, Sec. 12; P. O. Greenfield, Milwaukee Co., Wis.; born in the town of Onondaga, Onondaga Co., N. Y., Oct. 11, 1816; his father, Ezra Bennett, born in Rhode Island, followed the sea for years prior to settling in New York in 1815; he was finally lost at sea; his mother, marrying again, settled and died in Canada. Mr. B. was reared by one J. C. Stanton, came to Wisconsin in 1839, and bought a farm in Greenfield, and spent two years chopping and clearing; then settled on his present location; thirty-nine years ago, this was a wilderness of heavy timber, the ax wielded by him clearing over 100 of the 160 acres; the large and tasteful residence of to-day stands in sight of the humble home where he began in New Berlin. He married, in July, 1843, the widow of Waterman Field; she was formerly Amanda M. Rathbone, born in Chenango Co., N. Y., and at her death, Nov. 7, 1874, left four children—Frank A., Blanche, Ida E. and Alice, all born on the homestead, as was the daughter Florence, who died July 19, 1866. Alice Bennett died Dec. 16, 1876; Frank A. is in Troy, Walworth Co.; Blanche (Mrs. J. A. Stapleton), lives in Milwaukee, and Ida E. (Mrs. Frank Korn), is on the homestead, which her husband bought of her father in 1875; Mr. Korn has built a large barn and otherwise improved the place; his eldest, Alice, was born in Waukesha, and his son Harry was born on the home farm, which Mr. B. still makes his home. Mr. Bennett is a Republican, and no office seeker.

BERNARD CASPER, farmer, Sec. 20; P. O. New Berlin; born June 29, 1824, in Alsace, France; engaged in farming in early life, and in 1845 came to America; learned coopering in Rochester, N. Y., and in 1848 went to Canada; married, in Preston, Canada, Aug. 14, 1848, Miss Catherine Lehman, and the next day they left for Milwaukee, where Mr. Casper worked at his trade three years; settled on 10 acres in New Berlin, March 25, 1851; began coopering; has since bought more land, now owning 125 acres; he finished his large brick house in 1858, and in it, on the 4th of July, 1858, opened the saloon which he has since kept; he also continues his farming and coopering. Is a Democrat; was Town Supervisor twelve years, and School Clerk three years; was also one of the leading men in building St. Valerius Church, which, with the school house, were built on his land. Mr. and Mrs. Casper have seven children—Bernard, Aloise, Katie, Lizzie, Andrew, Valentine and John.

BENNETT CHEANEY, farmer, Sec. 1; P. O. Elm Grove; born, Nov. 18, 1819, in the town of Big Sodus, Wayne Co., N. Y.; his early life was spent on a farm; coming to Wisconsin in 1839, he hired out at $20 per month, and was set at chopping cordwood; tiring of this, he "struck," and was employed by the same man at the same work at $1.25 per day; in the fall, he joined a party of surveyors, and spent the winter among the swamps on the Wisconsin River; returning in the spring of 1840, he bought his present farm, and, two years later, built the old log house now standing as one of the old-time relics; during these thirty-eight years, Mr. C. has cleared his farm of timber, broken and cropped it, built substantial barns, and, in 1871, a handsome brick house—a good home earned by the same spirit which prompted him to cut cordwood in "dog days" forty years ago. He married, in 1844, Miss Sally Harmon, born in Cazenovia, N. Y.; they have four children—John, Joseph, Andrew J., and Amanda; Nancy A. died when 12 years of age, and all were born on the homestead; all are residents of New Berlin except Joseph, who married Miss Helen Noble, and lives in Wauwatosa, Wis.; Andrew J. served a year in the Union army, and was discharged at the close of the war; his wife, formerly Cynthia Ottawa, died in March, 1879, leaving two children—David and Jennie (since deceased); Amanda is Mrs. L. Hines. Mr. Cheaney is an old pioneer, settler, surveyor and hunter. Politics, Republican.

HARRY B. CHENEY, farmer, Sec. 33; P. O. Prospect Hill; born in the town of Alexander, Genesee Co., N. Y., Feb. 12, 1815; son of the Rev. Rufus and Pruday (Piper) Cheney (see sketch of John Cheney). Harry B. Cheney married, in Attica, Wyoming Co., N. Y., June 20, 1835, Miss Saloma F. Hamlin, who was born May 14, 1815, in the town of Otisfield, Maine; during the next few years they resided in New York and Pennsylvania; Mr. C. made his first visit to Wisconsin in 1840, his father then giving him 80 acres of his New Berlin farm; returning to New York, he came up the lakes in a sailing vessel in June, 1842, himself and family landing at Milwaukee, June 16; his means were very limited, so that after his settlement on Sec. 32, New Berlin, he was obliged to pay half on a $14 cow by turning in a pair of boots; his home for a number of years was in a board-roofed shanty, minus chamber floors; the ax swung by Harry B. Cheney in early times cleared many an acre of the dense timber around him, though his family saw much of pioneering while living beside the Big Spring on the farm which he cleared; sixteen years later he sold out and settled in Rochester, Racine Co., where he made a good record and held town offices; in 1869 he sold again, and went to Ottawa Co., Mich., residing there four years; then spent three years in the village of Rochester, settling on his present farm of 57 acres in 1877; on this he has built a most pleasant home, where he overlooks the scene of his pioneer labors; Mr. C. also owns a 19-acre fruit farm in Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Cheney have an only daughter, Pruday P., who married Allen Marten, a native of England and now a resident of Rochester; Mr. and Mrs. C. lost two children—Susan A., who died aged 36, and Henry B., died in infancy, from an accidental fall. The old couple are Free Baptists, and enjoy the fruits earned during well-spent lives. Mr. Cheney is a sturdy and outspoken Republican.

JOHN CHENEY, farmer, Sec. 32; P. O. Prospect Hill; born April 9, 1807, in the town of St. Johnsbury, Caledonia Co., Vt.; his father, the Rev. Rufus Cheney, was born May 4, 1780, in Antrim, N. H., where he grew to manhood, and married Pruday Piper, also of New Hampshire; he was ordained as a Baptist minister in 1810, and made his residence in various Eastern States prior to his coming to Franklin, Milwaukee Co., Wis., in 1838; his first visit here was in the spring of 1836, and he was the first Free Baptist preacher to locate in Wisconsin; settling on Sec. 32, New Berlin, in the fall of 1839, the first Free Will Baptist church was organized in his log house on the 11th of July, 1840, then called the New Berlin Free Will Baptist Church, now the Prospect Hill Church; this pioneer preacher, earning the love and reverence of all by his blameless life, died Aug. 30, 1869; his son, our subject, removed from Genesee Co., N. Y., to New Berlin in June, 1842; his first trip was in 1841, and this farm, bought then (partly of his father), has been his home for thirty-eight years; he has cleared it, fenced and cultivated it, and made a good home. He married, in Genesee Co., N. Y., Ann Eliza Gray, of Attica, Wyoming Co., N. Y., who died in 1842, leaving four children—Francis M., Teresa C. (Mrs. Dr.

Ingersoll), William H., and Cynthia M. Francis M. is in Alameda, Cal., and the two youngest in Rice Co., Minn.; all were born in Attica, N. Y. Mr. Cheney married again—Mary A. Parmenter, of Attica. He is a sturdy old settler, and Republican (old-time Abolitionist), and has been for forty-two years a member of the Free Will Baptist Church; was also one of the first Assessors of New Berlin.

JOHN EVANS, farmer, Sec. 12; P. O. Greenfield, Milwaukee Co., Wis.; born in the town of New Lisbon, Otsego Co., N. Y., July 6, 1819; the first nineteen years of his life were spent here, he attending the common schools, and learning the trade of shoemaker, which he followed about six years in Alabama, Genesee Co., N. Y. Married in Alabama, Miss Lucy L. Peckham, a native of Norwich, Conn., born in 1822, and removed with her parents to Genesee Co., in 1824. In 1844, Mr. E. made his first visit to Wisconsin, stopping for a time with his brother Sidney, the first settler in New Berlin, visited Racine and Walworth Counties, returned, and in May, 1846, came again and bought out his brother Sidney, who claimed and settled on it late in May, 1836; built the first log-house, by a "pale-face," within the boundaries of what was then the town of Mentor, now New Berlin; it was twelve feet square, and stood about twenty-five feet east of Mr. Evans' brick residence; his claim shanty, previously rolled up, was on the site of George Long's house. Sidney Evans, was born in Pownell, Vt., and came to Waukesha Co., from White Pigeon, Mich.; his first framed house was burned, and the one replacing it, and sold to John Evans, was sided with lumber brought from Chatauqua Co., N. Y. The 80-acre farm of John Evans, once a forest, was for many years, in early times, assessed higher than any other farm in the town, as more clearing and better buildings were to be found upon it. Mr. E., a true Democrat, was first elected Assessor in 1847, served six or eight years, and a number of years as Supervisor; he was elected Chairman in 185—(see County Records in General History), served through the war, doing much to secure New Berlin's splendid war record, and has been a member of the County Board longer than any other resident of the county; he was Chairman of the County Board in 1878-79, and his official record is above reproach. Mr. and Mrs. Evans have four living children—Philena A., born in Alabama, N. Y.; Mrs. Alonzo L., Alva E. and Elbert J., all born on the New Berlin homestead. During the past twenty years Mr. E. has been a member of the M. E. Church, his wife, formerly a Baptist, joining him in 1868. Mr. E. takes a lively interest in all relating to early times, and was the leading spirit, with A. E. Gilbert, in collecting the data, for the township history, in 1871.

LYMAN EVANS, farmer, Sec. 12; P. O. Greenfield, Milwaukee Co., Wis.; born Jan. 24, 1824, in the town of New Lisbon, Otsego Co., N. Y., where he lived up to 1837; that year his parents, John and Mary (Martin) Evans settled in Genesee Co., N. Y.; he left there in 1844, coming on the second boat from Buffalo to Milwaukee, and reaching New Berlin in May; the first year was spent as a laboring man, and the next year he bought his present farm of 80 acres, a few acres were cleared, and the remainder was a wilderness; the labor of Mr. E. has cleared off the farm, with the exception of 15 acres, and also built a most pleasant farmhouse for a home, besides a substantial basement, barn, etc. He married in 1846, Miss Maria, daughter of Capt. John Bell; Capt. B. was a native of Otsego Co., N. Y., and married Sally Harrington (a sister of Perry G.); Mrs. Evans was born in New Lisbon, Otsego Co., N. Y., and accompanied her parents to Greenfield, Milwaukee Co., 1842; her well-known pioneer father, now in his 89th year, still resides where he then settled, and where his wife died, Aug. 25, 1877; Mr. and Mrs. Evans have three children—Mary, Orville and Hattie; the second son, Albert, died Jan. 9, 1877, aged 21; the children were all born on the farm the father bought thirty-six years ago, and now enjoy the home he has earned for them. Mr. E. is a Democrat, and has been a Supervisor of New Berlin.

A. E. GILBERT, farmer, Sec. 27; P. O. Prospect Hill; is a son of Daniel Gilbert, who was born in April, 1791, in New Hampshire; removed from there to Vermont and settled in New York in 1817 or 1818. Married Catharine Showerman, by whom he had ten children; of these, A. E. was born Aug. 17, 1824, in Alexander, Genesee Co., N. Y.; the family came up the lakes in August, 1839, spent a few weeks in Milwaukee, and drove their team into New Berlin late in September, 1839, joining Hiram Hollister, whose family soon arrived from the East; the twenty-two persons in both families occupied this single-roomed log house until Mr. Gilbert finished one on his claim, which he bought for $50; two or three acres only were cleared, and the remainder a forest; Mr. Gilbert, at one time, owned 480 acres, and 200 were cleared by himself and his sons, A. E., Sylvanus, Myron and Seymour; he died, full of years and honors, in December, 1877, his widow still residing with Sylvanus, on his 195 acres of the homestead. A. E. Gilbert first located, for two years, on Sec. 33; sold out in 1852, and went to Will Co., Ill.; he was in charge of a gang in the construction of the St. L., A. & C. R. R., also others, and was engaged in the quarries at Joliet for a time; returning in 1861, he bought his present farm of 190 acres; on this the improvements were made by Mr. Hollister, who claimed it in 1837. Hiram Hollister was born in Massachusetts, April 4, 1798, and died Jan. 1, 1874; his widow, formerly Sophronia Barrow, was born Aug. 18, 1795, in Connecticut; their daughter, Harriet E., born in Oneida Co., N. Y., married A. E. Gilbert in Oct. 1849, and they have four children—Minnie M., Willis L., Florence M. and Herbert M., all born on the homestead; they lost two sons, Ernest and Willie, in Illinois. Mr. Gilbert is a Republican; served several terms as Town Clerk and Treasurer, represented his District in the State Assembly in 1878-79, and is now Chairman of the Town, although it is strongly Democratic; as a Religionist, Mr. Gilbert believes in doing right in this world, and leaves the rest to Him who doeth all things well.

PETER GOFF, farmer, Sec. 35; P. O. Tess Corners; born in or about 1808, in the province of Leinster, Co. of Louth, Ireland; he came to America when 17 or 18 years of age, worked a short time in a factory at Paterson, N. J., then engaged in farming on the Holland Purchase (Wyoming Co., N. Y.); sold out his claim there in 1836 and went to Cook Co., Ill., where he owned 380 acres; in 1840, Philip Riley, Patrick Kerwin and himself came to Waukesha County, Mr. Goff settling where he is now, and Messrs. Kerwin and Riley near him; Mr. Goff began here in a claim shanty built among timber so dense as to shut out the noonday sun; felling trees to right and left, he planted a few Irish potatoes among the stumps for his first crop; these grew as large as quart cups, while white turroips were immensely large; the seed potatoes were brought in by him, on his shoulders, from the Fox River Valley; from wheat bought of N. K. Smith, he raised the first crop in this vicinity. Peter Goff is a genuine old settler, whose salt pork was, in early times, brought from Milwaukee; his 240-acre farm, with the excellent buildings, prove that his labor and management were rewarded. He married Mary Loughney, of Telara, County of Mayo, Ireland; they have four children—Matthew L., Eliza, Mary and Teresa, all born on the New Berlin Homestead; the family are Catholics and Democrats. Mr. Goff, in early times, assessed the town, but would not qualify as Justice of the Peace; he is also a radical temperance man, who has not allowed a drop of liquid damnation to be used upon his farm. M. L. Goff, born in 1845, was educated in the district schools and Carroll College, spent 1877 and 1878 in Nebraska, visiting Missouri, Kansas and Iowa. He married, in Feb. 1880, Miss Annie M., daughter of John Burns, deceased, one of the pioneers of Muskego.

WILLIAM GRASER, farmer, Sec. 21; P. O. New Berlin; born June 10, 1848, on the homestead in New Berlin; his parents, Jacob and Wilhelmina (Wischan) Graser were born and married in Bavaria; their settlement in New Berlin was in 1847, on forty acres of the present farm; of the dense wilderness not a stick had been cut; the first blows were towards a log house, which did for a time without doors or windows; roads, bridges, schoolhouses, etc., were as rare as big oak and maple trees were plenty; timber was rolled up, burned in "log-heaps," and the ashes exchanged for necessaries. Our subject first saw the light among these primitive scenes, and has grown up to manhood on soil now valued at from $60 to $80 per acre. The father died in 1874, and the mother in 1879; William received his schooling, in early times, in District No. 1. Married Miss Johanna Schaetgel, of Germantown, Wis., by whom he has four children—Elizabeth, Catharine, William and an infant son; a daughter, Wilhelmina, died when 17 months old. Mr. Graser is a live young farmer, owns 73½ acres in the homestead and 60 in Muskego; he has been a thrasher since he was 18; belongs to the German Reformed Church. Is a Democrat; has been Constable twice, and is now Town Treasurer.

HIRAM E. HALE, farmer and miller, P. O. Prospect Hill; born April 30, 1825, in Manchester, Hartford Co., Conn.; his parents, William and Myra (Flint) Hale, were both of Connecticut, and had six children, four sons, each of whom took their father's trade of millwright; William P., the eldest, came to Waukesha Co. in July, 1839, locating in New Berlin, in the spring of 1840; he bought the water power, on Sec. 32, in 1841; built a dam and started a turning lathe; built a saw-mill in 1843; and was joined by his brother, Hiram E., who bought a third interest; they then put in flouring machinery, and, in 1848, an engine, which ran the mill about twelve years; W. P. Hale sold, in 1855, to O. G. Nevins, who was bought out, three years later, by H. E. Halé; the old mill is dismantled, and has been silent since 1868; Mr. Hale bought the water power on the town line, in 1861, and built the flouring mill in 1868. He has eighty-five acres of land, beside his grist and saw mill, the only one in New Berlin or Muskego. He married, in 1849, Miss Juliette Clark, of Litchfield, Conn., who died in 1873; in November, 1873, he married Miss Malinda A., daughter of Daniel Gilbert, who settled with a family in New Berlin, in 1839. Mr. and Mrs. Hale have two children—Winnifred E. and Floy C. Mr. Hale was educated in his native State, united with the F. B. Church in 1847, and has been deacon of the Prospect Hill Church for many years, Politics, Republican.

DENNIS HANNA, deceased; was born on Palm Sunday, 1812; in 1842, he married Elizabeth Dugdale, in her native town of Douglas, Isle of Man; they emigrated two years later, and came, via Albany, the Erie Canal and lakes, to Milwaukee; they stopped for a short time with William Killips, Mr. H. then going to Illinois, where his wife afterward joined him, they residing near Aurora, until 1845, when they returned, Mr. Hanna working two years for Mr. Killips, then settled on 40 acres of the present farm, built a log house and started for himself; adding 40 acres in 1859, and died April 6, 1872, leaving seven children—Margaret, Julia, Dennis, Christopher, William, Frank and James; the eldest was born on the Isle of Man, and the others in New Berlin. The family belong to the Catholic Church, and are Democrats. Dennis Hanna was an honest, hardworking man, who served with credit as Chairman and Treasurer of his town; his third son, William, is now serving his second term as Assessor; the mother and three children are residing in a good brick house, built on the old place, in lieu of the log cabin of yore.

JOHN L. INGERSOLL, Prospect Hill; born Oct. 20, 1823, in Pittsford, Rutland Co., Vt. His father, the Rev. John Ingersoll, was born in Bennington Co., Vt., July 5, 1792; educated at Middlebury College, studied theology under Rev. Dr. Hopkins, and was ordained as a Congregationalist minister; he married Mary, daughter of Judge Robert Livingston, a pioneer of St. Lawrence Co., N. Y. Elder Ingersoll was the father of five children; Ruth A., born in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y.; John L. and Mary J., born in Pittsford, Vt.; Ebon C., born Dec 12, 1831, in Marshall, Oneida Co., N. Y., and Robert G., born Aug. 12, 1833, in West Dresden, Yates Co., N. Y. E. C. Ingersoll studied law, came to the bar in 1854, settled in Illinois, and, at the death of Owen Lovejoy, succeeded that anti-slavery hero, representing his district, the 5th, for seven years in Congress, dying in Washington, D. C., May 31, 1879. Robert G. Ingersoll studied law with his brother, and, as is known around the world, has risen to the foremost ranks of America's orators, writers and thinkers; his original, always fresh and eloquent, speeches have commanded the attention of all civilization, and need no eulogy here; the mother of these three sons died in 1835, they accompanying the father to Waukesha, in 1848; the two younger sons are attending Carroll College, under tuition of Prof. Wenaucus; John L. was for three years a student of Oberlin College, studied medicine in Lee Co., Ill., and attended the lectures in Rush Medical College from 1846 to 1848; began practice upon his settlement at Prospect Hill, in 1849; married in 1851 Miss Teresa C., daughter of John and Anneliza (Grey) Cheney; she is a granddaughter of the Rev. Rufus Cheney, and was born in Attica, Wyoming Co., N. Y. Dr. Ingersoll named Prospect Hill at the establishment of the post office here, on account of its commanding one of the finest views in the State. He, like his distinguished brother, is a Republican. In early times he was Town Superintendent of schools; is a notary-public, and has been for years. Dr. and Mrs. Ingersoll have four children—Mary A., born 1853, in New Berlin; Burton C., born 1856, in Niles, Mich.; John F., born 1859, in New Berlin; and Ruth A., born 1861, in New Berlin; the youngest son is now agent of the mail route from Portage to Stevens Point. The Doctor is large, well-built and seemingly in the full vigor of manhood, a staunch advocate of temperance; his clear and forcible ideas are always in demand at meetings of this kind.

ABRAHAM KERN, farmer, Sec. 16; P. O. Waukesha; born in Sprenndelingen, Province of Rhine Hessen, Hesse Darmstadt, Jan. 2, 1819; he was educated in Germany, and, in 1843, his parents, Lorenz and Katrina Kern, came to America, reaching Milwaukee, July 18, and New Berlin, Aug. 3, 1843; Lorenz Kern bought and improved a farm on Sec. 17, where he died, July 5, 1869, and where his widow now lives, in her 91st year (the oldest person in New Berlin). Abraham Kern lived eight years with his parents, then settled on his present farm of 40 acres; it was then a forest, and has been cleared by Mr. Kern, who has built a pleasant home, with barn, etc., his land and that around it being worth fivefold its value thirty-seven years ago. In 1849, he married Matilde Wilde, who was born in Barwalde, Province of Brandenburg, Prussia, in 1823, and came to America and Wisconsin, in 1848. They are members of the Evangelical Reformed Church. Mr. Kern is a Democrat, was Collector in 1854-55, and is now serving his fourth term as Supervisor.

JACOB KERN, farmer, Secs. 16 and 18; P. O. Waukesha; born, Aug. 28, 1821, in Sprenndelingen, Hesse Darmstadt; his parents, Lorenz and Katrina Kern, came to America in 1847, settling on Sec. 17; there were five children. Jacob, two years later, bought 40 acres of his present farm, built a log house, 18x24, among the trees and began the chopping, clearing and burning, which has resulted in his owning a good farm of 135 acres, on which is a large frame farmhouse, good barns, stables toolhouse, etc.; he paid $2.50 per acre for land now worth $75. He married Miss Catherine Damm; she was born, 1822, in Kreigsfeldt, Bavaria, and came to the United States in 1844; they have seven children—Abraham, born Dec. 20, 1846; William, born Nov. 9, 1848; Catherine, born Feb. 22, 1855; Simon, born May 1, 1853; Henry, born Jan. 11, 1858; Peter, born Nov. 11, 1860, and Mary, born March 25, 1863; Jacob Kern died, when 23, in New York State; all were born on the homestead, and are members of the German Reformed Church. Mr. Kern was Town Treasurer, in 1873, and held school office for thirty years. Democrat.

WILLIAM KILLIPS, farmer, Secs. 20, 21, 28 and 29; P. O., Prospect Hill; born Nov. 13, 1818, in County Down, Ireland; came to America in 1837, and began as a day laborer, in Onondaga Co., N. Y.; during three years and three months he saved $5, voted for Harrison, at Manlius, N. Y., and at once left for Wisconsin, via the lakes; Milwaukee was a village, with only a few stores; for two weeks ensuing, he made daily visits, on foot, in company with a Scotchman, to Waukesha Co., each night finding them at Vale's tavern, in Milwaukee; unable to get a $50 piece changed, they went supperless several evenings, and finally applied to Col. Andrews, one of the early hotel-keepers of New Berlin, who supplied them and said, "all right, pay when you can;" and, says Mr. Killips, "I did pay, and did not forget the kindness of the Colonel, whose tavern was near the site of my store." Mr. Killips had his money changed by Alexander Mitchell, in his small bank, perhaps twelve feet square, and, that fall, bought his first 120 acres of Government land, in New Berlin, adding 40 acres; that winter, which he spent with that kindly pioneer preacher, Rufus Cheney, he built a house, and was joined by his wife in the spring; this wild land was cleared and reclaimed, and the good work continued; Mr. Killips settled in his present home in 1868, he owns 400 acres in New Berlin, and has earned a competence; several years ago he built two large stores in Kewaskum, Wis., where his sons engaged in business; in 1877, he built a store and hall in Franksville, Racine Co., where his son, Joshua, is in business; the next year, he built on Sec. 28, New Berlin, the large store and hall where his son Daniel now does business; the hall is in "L" shape, 22x44 and 18x26; it is the only one in town furnished with an organ, and has been used by Happy Home Lodge, I. O. G. T., since the organization; it is also used for lectures, parties, etc. He married Miss Elizabeth Morgan, born, 1821, in Haddam, Middleton Co., Conn., by whom he has six living children—Joshua, Daniel, William, Lydia A., Esther and Emma, all born in New Berlin; Robert, the eldest, enlisted in Co. B, 28th W. V. I., served a year, and died at Helena, Ark.; Joshua enlisted and served out his term, 100 days. Mr. Killips is a member of the F. B. Church, a stanch Republican, and a most earnest advocate of temperance; to illustrate: While building a new house, his carpenters refused to work without free whisky; one of them, George Hollister, stood by Mr. Killips, and urged him to hold out, going to the trouble of procuring new workmen, who finished the house, without the aid of fire-water; Mr. Killips has ever and always acted on this principle.

W. J. KILPATRICK, farmer, Sec. 13; P. O. Prospect Hill; born in the County of Antrim, Ireland, in 1825; his parents, Francis and Agnes (Anderson) Kilpatrick, were of Scotch ancestry. He married, in 1848, Jane Ann Fellows; came to America, in 1852, locating in Guernsey Co., Ohio, where he lived thirteen years, and owned two different farms; his wife died in 1860, leaving three children—Jeanette, now Mrs. C. R. Damon; Margaret J., now Mrs. John Killips, and Mary E., now Mrs. Albert Killips; the next year Mr. Kilpatrick returned to Ireland, and on Aug. 25, 1861, married Sarah Owens; she was born in the County of Antrim in 1832, and is of Welsh descent; they returned to the Ohio farm in December, and came to Wisconsin in 1864, settling on the farm now owned by Mr. Becker, in New Berlin; the next purchase was the Vanderpool farm in Vernon; they then spent eighteen months in Waukesha Township; in November, 1872, Mr. Kilpatrick bought the old estate of J. H. White; 84 acres of this, with 73 on the same section, formerly the Martin place, constitute his homestead; Mr. Kilpatrick also owns 160 acres on Sec. 2 in Genesee, 60 acres near Muskego Lake, and 800 acres of maple timber in Michigan; as he spent the first five years in Ohio as a renter, and has earned every dollar and every acre himself, his record and example are well worthy of preservation. Mr. and Mrs. Kilpatrick have four sons—James A. and Francis O., twins, born in 1862, in Ohio; Henry J., born 1864, in New Berlin, and William R., born 1866, in New Berlin. In politics Mr. Kilpatrick is a Republican.

HENRY KORN, farmer, Secs. 16, 19, 20 and 21; P. O. New Berlin; born near Kerckheimbolanden, Rhenish Bavaria, May 11, 1822; his father, Peter Korn, died when the son was six months old, and his mother, formerly Margaret Wagner, was married to Christopher Damm (see sketch of Jacob Korn); Henry Korn reached New Berlin in company with his relatives, and remained until the fall of 1843; he wintered in Columbia Co., N. Y., with old friends of his brother Jacob; in the spring of 1844, he went to Europe and spent a year, returning to America and New Berlin. He was married in 1846, to Miss Philippine Schwartz, of his native village; she came to America in 1844 or 1845; they began on 120 acres of his present farm, on which a few acres were cleared, and only the ashes of a log house; Mr. Korn did the best of pioneer work here among the timber, and now owns 310 acres well improved, a tasteful frame farm-house, in place of the log house of early times, with all needed barns, etc.; he also has, 120 acres on Sec. 19, with fair buildings; Mr. and Mrs. Korn have six children—Philippine, Jacob, Peter, Mary, William and Katie; the eldest is Mrs. William Steele, of Pewaukee, and Peter is foreman of the Reform School Farm. The family belong to the German Reformed Church, and are independent in politics.

JACOB KORN, farmer, Sec. 20; P. O. Prospect Hill; born Feb. 19, 1812, near Kireheimbolden, Rhenish Bavaria; his father, Peter Korn, died in 1823; the son came in 1834 to America, locating in Columbia Co., N. Y.; in 1837, he went to Florida, working on the railroads and as a carpenter; as he was in a dire predicament, seeing much sickness and hardship in both Florida and Georgia, he returned to New York. He married Miss Katherine Eiler, of Bavaria, and in August, 1840, reached Waukesha Co., with his mother and step-father, Christopher Damm, his wife and brother Henry made up the party of five, and were the first Germans to locate in New Berlin; Mr. Korn is not only one of the first, but one of the most prosperous of New Berlin's pioneers, having a splendid 200-acre farm, with the best of buildings, and a competence besides. Mrs. Korn died in March, 1877, leaving six children—Jacob (the first German born in New Berlin), Adam, Frank, Katie, Lizzie and David; they had lost three—Theodore, Celesta and a babe; the present Mrs. Korn was Mrs. Louisa Weinheimer (formerly Beyer); Mr. W. left seven children—Adam, Jacob, Maggie, Caroline, Phillip, Louisa and John; Jacob and John are on the farm, and the others are in Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Korn are members of the German Reformed Church. In politics he is a Republican.

HENRY A. LUKE, farmer, Sec. 19; P. O. Waukesha; born Aug. 12, 1843, in New Berlin; is a son of Henry A. and Barbara (Damm) Luke, and was the third German child born in New Berlin; the family settled in September, 1841, on Sec. 20 of this town. Christian Damm, the father of Mrs. Luke, settled here in August, 1840, and in 1846, gave Mr. Luke 80 acres of land; beginning on this timbered farm in a log house, he worked most faithfully, replacing the log house in 1860, with the large and handsome residence now so good a home for his family. Mr. Luke died in June, 1862, leaving two children—H. A. and Katrina C. Mrs. Luke married B. Prior, and shares the home with her son who married Amelia Dexheimer Oct. 4, 1865; she was born in December, 1849, in Bavaria, her parents coming to America soon after; Mr. and Mrs. Luke have four children—Emily A., Tina C., Henrietta F. and Alvina M., losing the eldest, a son, Louis H. The family belong to the German Reformed Church. In politics, he is a liberal and independent. The homestead contains 160 acres, and Mrs. Prior has 66; the home buildings and farm have been much improved by Mr. Luke since his honored father's death.

JAMES MURPHY, farmer, Sec. 32; P. O. Prospect Hill; born June 27, 1842, in County of West Meath, Ireland; his parents, Daniel and Elizabeth Murphy; came to America in 1851, located in West Chester Co., N. Y.; came to Wisconsin 1856, residing in Beloit and Richland Cos. James Murphy enlisted, November 1, 1861, in Co. F. 3d W. V. I.; the regiment was first in Missouri and Kansas; at Montevello, the first fight, the officers became excited, gave contrary orders, the men got scared and "skedaddled"; Mr. M., as gunner for a howitzer, was ordered to Ft. Gibson, I. T.; participating in the battle of Prairie Grove, after which he was one of a party of twenty sent to stampede a rebel force at Cane Hill, Ark., and by a night attack, did stampede; the boys next took Van Buren, Ark., repulsed an assault by Hindman, and left the town, re-occupying it a year later, and using it as a base for raiding; a raid on Dallas, Texas, gave them 100 prisoners; pursuing Gen. Price from Jefferson City, Mo., the wily rebel turned and thrashed them, driving them to Independence, where they were reinforced, which enabled them to whip him in turn, and drive him over the Arkansas; at the end of three years and four months Mr. M. received his honorable discharge, and rejoined the old folks in Richland Co., where he lived until September, 1870, when he settled on his present farm of 40 acres; seven years later he built of Cream city brick, a large and elegant house, and made other improvements; his wife was Harriet J., daughter of William Vanderpool; he was born in Albany Co., N. Y., and married Elbridge Dodge, a native of Ludlow, Vt., who died, leaving her three children—Dike H., Eben V. and Gertrude L. Mr. and Mrs. Murphy, have two children—Guy J. and Dan M. Mr. Murphy is a Republican; Mr. Dodge enlisted August, 1862, in the 25th W. V. I., which regiment was sent to Minnesota, at the time of the Sioux outbreak; he returned to Cairo, Ill., where Mr. Dodge died, and is buried.

E. G. NEEDHAM, farmer, Sec. 1; P. O. Elm Grove; born in the town of Union, Tolland Co., Conn., Feb. 1, 1817; his father, Elisha, married Chloe Strong, and died in 1822. E. G. Needham farmed in Connecticut until June, 1840, when he came to Wisconsin, bought, and three years later sold, a farm in Brookfield; purchased his present farm in 1842, paid $400, $100 down; during the next six years he boarded with a family in Brookfield, and chopped, logged and burned on his own land, completed a log house in 1849, which still stands as a monument in memory of times thirty years ago. He married, Jan., 10, 1850, Miss Caroline Koch, a native of New Teirmgin, Prussia; her parents died in her infancy, she coming with an uncle to America in 1847. Mr. and Mrs. N., lived 19 years in the log house, he then building the substantial stone house now so good a home for them and their six children; Chloe, Mary, Louisa, Esther, Julia and Anna; a son Martin, died at 12, and they lost three others. Mr. N. is a Congregationalist, and a Republican. In 1840 there was no house on the line of the present Town Line Road for two or three miles east or west of where he now lives; $1.75 and $2 per cord was what his cord-wood sold for in Milwaukee; his 120 acres is now partly covered with timber, which is worth about as much as the cleared land.

WILLIAM S. PARSONS, deceased; was a pioneer of New Berlin, as well as one of its most favorably known residents; was born Jan. 25, 1810, in Boston, Mass.; orphaned at nine years; his schooling was attained in his native city, where he learned blacksmithing in a carriage factory. Hannah St. John was born Nov. 5, 1814, in Norwalk, Conn., where she married Mr. Parsons, Jan. 2, 1831; soon after, they started West to Coldwater Prairie, Mich., residing there until June 1837, when they came to New Berlin. The present Parsons homestead was claimed by a person named Turk, who sold it to Mr. Conover, who abandoned it; Mr Parsons and family settled in a log house here in June, and on Conover's return bought the claim for $10; it was heavily timbered and slow progress was made, scarcely enough being raised to supply the needs of the family during the first two years, so that when the claim came into market, in 1839, Mr. Parsons was compelled to induce a Mr. Scott to buy the claim and hold it for him; Willam S. Parsons was not one to give up the ship, however, kept his ax swinging and finally saw the dawn of better times, paid for his land in 1843, opened in a rented log house, the well-known "farmer's inn;" it was a few rods southwest of the present family home, which was built on the site of the second "farmer's inn," built in 1845, and burned after twelve years of prosperity. An incident is related by Mrs. P. of a certain Whitewater man who was more than suspected of stealing the oats from his fellow teamsters: A certain shoemaker returning from Milwaukee, placed a bag of shoepegs where the Whitewater man could help himself, and all went well until, at breakfast the next morning, some one rushed in to tell Mr. E. that his horses were sick, didn't eat their oats, etc.; the crowd proceeded to the barn, where about six quarts of shoepegs before each horse, revealed the true inwardness of affairs, and caused endless fun among the patrons of the old "tavern." Eighty acres of the present farm is part of the old claim of 1836, and the remaining 23 were bought by Mr. Parsons in 1840, he living to clear and cultivate a good farm and build up a most pleasant home. Mr. Parsons died Dec. 20, 1875, leaving two sons—William S., born Aug. 11, 1851, and Charles O., born June 14, 1854; W. S. Parsons attended Jennings Seminary and the American Commercial College, at Aurora, Ill., and with his pioneer mother now occupies the homestead; he married Nov. 25, 1872, Miss Emma M., daughter of Hazen H. and Aurelia Hurkins, and has three children—W. Hazen, born in Waukesha, May C. and Nellie A., born on the homestead where their father was. Mr. P. is a staunch Republican, as was his honored father, and is now Town Clerk, also Deputy Sheriff of Waukesha Co. Charles O. Parsons learned the carpenter and joiner's trade in New Berlin, which was his home until 1877, when he located in Albert Lea, Minn., where he now owns a half-interest in a machine shop with Aleck McNeil; his mother has resided in New Berlin longer than any resident of it, unless it be A. L. McWhorter.

JAMES J. PUNCH, farmer, Sec. 18; P. O. Waukesha; born July 3, 1817, in Cork, Ireland; attended school in his native city, and came to America in 1837; settled at Highgate, Vt.; afterward entered the service of Judge Aldis, of St. Albans; removed to Boston and worked two years for O. Dalrymple, then nine years on the farm of Chas. Stetson, near Lynn, Mass.; Daniel Webster was a frequent visitor on this farm, and was often seen by Mr. Punch. With his wife he came to New Berlin in 1851, settling on 90 acres of his farm, for which he paid $18 per acre; did good work clearing, breaking and sowing; his second crop of fall wheat burned with his new barn, one of the largest in that section; that fall he bought 65 acres more, and of the 155 acres once covered with huge trees nearly all are cleared, not even the stumps three and even four feet across being left to tell the story; Mr. P. has built a large farmhouse and good barns, etc.; his wife, formerly Hannah Fitzgerald, was born in the County of Cork, and came to America when about 18; they have ten children—Phillip, John, Mary A., Edward, Ellen, James, Jane, Hannah, Thomas Jefferson and George McClellan; the eldest served through the war with Grant in the 17th W. V. I., is now a prosperous blacksmith in Chicago, is also a Captain in the Ind. S. M.; John, now in poor health, was for years a yard-master in Milwaukee; Mary is Mrs. Capt. O'Connor, of Milwaukee, her husband being a commander of the Light Guard, also an engineer, and is now constructing water works at St. Joseph, Mo.; Edward is an engineer at Effingham, Ill.; Ellen is a most efficient teacher; James is the unfortunate one who lost a leg by the bite of a savage dog; he was educated in Carroll College, and is with the three youngest on the homestead; Jane is one of the trusted employes of Field &

Eph Beaumont

MERTON.

Leiter, merchant princes of Chicago. Mr. P. is a Democrat, and, as Chairman for the town, did much to secure for New Berlin the splendid war record of which she is so justly proud; one trip at his own expense rectified a blunder by which the officials in Milwaukee had required a quota of thirty-three men from New Berlin when twenty-eight was all she owed. Mr. P. has also been Supervisor and Town Clerk, and has held his present office of Justice for twenty-two consecutive years. He is a Roman Catholic.

ANDREW SNYDER, Sr., farmer, Sec. 22; P. O. New Berlin; born Jan. 1, 1813, in Alsace, France; his parents, Andrew and Eve Snyder, came to America about 1825, located in Essex Co., N. Y., where Andrew grew up to man's estate. In 1843 he came to New Berlin, bought his present farm, and a yoke of cattle with it, for $800; left the oxen in Milwaukee, returned to New York for his family, made the trip up the lakes, and drove his ox team to the farm, which he reached July 12, 1844; there were two log houses, 8 acres cleared, and the rest a wilderness; Mr. Snyder has cleared over a hundred acres, has 60 of timber; about 1860 built a large and substantial brick house; his sons have stood by him well in this good work, and two of them own farms given them by him. He married, 1842, in Buffalo, N. Y., Miss Catherine Casper, by whom he has six children—Andrew and George, born in New York State; Anthony, Joseph, Catherine and Mary, all born in New Berlin. Mr. S. was the leader in building St. Valerius' church, owning the best team and drawing nearly every load of lumber used in it. The persecutions of the Republican party in France, upon his forefathers, cause him to be a Democrat here.

ANDREW SNYDER, Jr., farmer, Sec. 29; was born in Essex Co., N. Y., Dec. 12, 1841; son of Andrew and Catherine Snyder, who settled in New Berlin in 1845, with two children, Andrew and George; they located on a heavily timbered farm on Sec. 22; two log houses and a log barn were all the buildings; the 173 acres were cleared and a handsome brick house built; the son did his full share at this; his farm was bought by his father in 1858, and it was almost in a state of nature at Andrew's settlement upon it in 1867; this sturdy young New Yorker has cleared 50 acres himself, and improved the remaining 25 acres by removing the stumps and stones; his large, well-painted and finished barn, and a tasteful and roomy brick farm-house, are among the rewards of his labor. His wife was Miss Susan, daughter of Mathew Stephens, of New Berlin; they have four children—Andrew, Jr., Katie, Susanna, and Mary, all natives of New Berlin. Mr. S. is an Independent Democrat; was Assessor one year, and Town Clerk twelve years; is also Secretary of the New Berlin Town Insurance Company, and, with his wife, belongs to the Roman Catholic Church.

NICHOLAS STEPHENS, farmer, Secs. 23 and 26; P. O. New Berlin; born May 14, 1844, in the town of New Berlin; his parents, Mathias and Barbara Stephens, Prussians, emigrated in 1843, coming direct to New Berlin, and settling on the present farm of Aug. Wilde; the family lived under a tree while building a log cabin, with Indians, deer, wolves, etc., for neighbors. Mr. S. was born here, and five or six years later, his people settled on his present farm of 109 acres; of the first 80, Mr. Stephens cleared all but 30, building a good frame house. He died April 15, 1876, and his wife followed, Dec. 15, 1878. Nicholas Stephens married, in 1870, Miss Mary Mann, a native of Prussia, whose family emigrated 30 years ago; they have five children—Barbara, born March 14, 1871; Elizabeth, born Nov. 29, 1872; Katie, born March 16, 1875; Joseph, born Aug. 15, 1877, and Andrew, born Oct. 21, 1879. Mr. S. has added to his farm, and in 1879 built one of the largest and best barns in his town, 40x70x18 feet, with 8-foot basement, and well finished, ventilated, etc. He is a Democrat, and was Supervisor in 1878-79; is a Roman Catholic, and a live, stirring young farmer of his native town and county, growing both grain and stock.

PETER M. SWARTZ, farmer and stock-breeder, Sec 19; P. O. Waukesha; born Feb. 12, 1842, in Columbia Co., N. Y.; his parents, William and Anna Swartz, emigrated from Germany, married in New York, and came West in the spring of 1844, settling on 80 acres of the Swartz homestead; all their means were expended in a log house and a cow, the use of Jacob Korn's team being earned by the labor of Mr. S.; his first team was a pair of steers, earned two years later; his first vehicle was furnished with wheels sawed from oak logs, and he did good work, clearing slowly and well. He died March 29, 1874, and the labor of himself and his only son was rewarded, as may be seen, by the splendid farm of 160 acres, with its small village of buildings; the large two-story farm-house and two large barns, one 36x60 and one 32x105 feet, with other substantial buildings, were erected by these men, who chopped out the farm. Peter Swartz attended the early schools, walking two miles to the log house in the McWhorter district, also attending in the Smith district, Waukesha Township, and later his own district, No. 8. He married, Nov. 22, 1866, Catherine M. Phillips, who was born in New Berlin, July 18, 1850, her parents settling here in 1847 or 1848; Mr. and Mrs. S have four living children—William, born Oct.

17, 1867; David, born June 15, 1870; Lydia, born Jan. 14, 1872, and Catharine, born Sept. 6, 1874. Mr. Swartz is a Republican. As a breeder of stock, he has 200 fine-wool sheep, having bred for 15 years past, from flocks of R. Richards, Racine, George Lawrence, and J. H. Paul; he also has grade Ayrshire and Alderney cattle, with other stock.

T. S. WINTON, merchant and Postmaster, Prospect Hill; born Oct. 17, 1831, in Butternuts, Otsego Co., N. Y., son of J. B. and Sarah (Tillson) Winton, both natives of Otsego County, N. Y.; in May, 1840, the parents and four children settled in Waukesha Township, the father building the third log house in that part of the town, Mr. Cluff building the first and M. R. Tillson the second; W. E. Sanford lived with Mr. T. in a bark-roofed shanty, floored and "doored" with puncheons; the Wintons also spent several months here, settling then on the farm where J. B. Winton lived, until 1875, at which time he located near Waukesha; his wife died September, 1875, he now resides with a daughter in Iowa. T. S. Winton attained the rudiments of his education, on a slab-seated bench, in the old log schoolhouse, on his father's farm; engaged in farming in Ashippun, Dodge Co., and in 1866, bought the stock and store of Daniel Church, and was appointed Postmaster the same year; Mr. Winton does a good business and owns two farms. He married, in 1855, Miss Emily A. Tillson, of his native town; they have three children—Louis S., Theodora E. and John S.; Arthur M. died when 15 years of age; all the children were born in Ashippun, except the youngest. T. S. Winton is a man who recalls with unusual interest, the scenes and incidents of frontier life; he is a Republican, and has been Town Clerk of New Berlin, and Justice of the Peace in Ashippun.

TOWN OF GENESEE.

EDWIN ALLEN, farmer, Sec. 30; P. O. North Prairie; born in Trimpton Broadwindsor, Dorsetshire, England, Feb. 18, 1818; in March, 1845, in company with his wife, he left South Perrot, England, for America; landing at New York, they came, via the Erie Canal and the lakes, to Wisconsin; reaching Genesee on Saturday night, he bought 80 acres of his present farm the next Monday; about 13 acres were broken; the young couple spent their first year in a "claim shanty," 10x12, which still stands as a landmark; it had a shanty roof, and would hardly accommodate their scant furniture; Mr. Allen and the Pauls had three oxen each, and, by combining them, made out a breaking-team; Mr. Allen did real work here, added 64 acres the second year, built a good frame house and barn, etc.; has steadily added to his land, now owning 194 acres, with two good barns and other substantial improvements. His wife was born in Beaminster, Yorkshire, Oct. 8, 1815; married Nov. 3, 1842; they have four children—Susan J., William B., Mary H. and James A.; the family are Episcopalians in belief. Mr. Allen is in politics a Democrat, and has been many years Assessor and Supervisor; he has 105 merino sheep, cattle, hogs, etc., and has been an extensive dealer and breeder in fine horses; his eldest son is married and settled as a Dakota farmer.

HENRY BOWMAN, merchant and Postmaster, Genesee; born in Staffordshire, England, Jan. 13, 1829; spent his early life as a farmer in his native land; left Liverpool, England, on the good ship Waterloo, June the 28th, 1850, for the United States; the famous Italian patriots, Mazzini and Garibaldi, were his fellow-voyagers; the Waterloo reaching New York City after a thirty days' run, Mr. Bowman came direct to Genesee, via Milwaukee; began life here as a laborer, threshing grain on a barn floor during the first winter, at $7 per month; the next summer he worked at his trade of carpenter, at $9 per month; chopped cordwood the second winter, at 30 cents per cord, and thus worked his way up; for fourteen years this man worked at any and every thing which would earn an honest penny, splitting rails like a second Lincoln, sheep-shearing, farm work, etc.; the means thus earned enabled him, in 1864, to open business in Genesee, buying the stock of P. Barker, and, in 1865, the store of James Hamilton; did business here until 1873, when he bought the old Treadway Hotel, and with it the adjoining storeroom, built by W. D. Medbury; Mr. Bowman began with a capital of $500, and the same dauntless spirit which enabled him to earn it, has constantly increased his business, he carrying the only stock in the village, embracing dry goods, groceries, drugs and medicines, boots and shoes, hardware, glassware, crockery, notions, etc.; is also agent for the Continental Insurance Company, and is doing a good and satisfactory business. His wife was Miss Harriet J. Paul, of Somersetshire, England, she coming to America with her parents, John and Mary Paul, in 1841, they remaining in New York State until 1843, when they located in Genesee, Mr. Bowman and Miss Paul uniting their destinies in the fall of 1854; they have two children—Mary (Mrs. Eugene Proctor) and Henry; have also lost a son. Mr. B. is a supporter of the local churches, and a steadfast Republican; has been Chairman of Genesee, and Postmaster here sixteen years; has also held minor offices, and is regarded as one of Genesee's staunchest temperance men.

JOHN BRATLAY, farmer, Secs. 29 and 28; P. O. North Prairie; born in Dunnington-on-Bain, Lincolnshire, England, April 16, 1821; early life spent as a farm laborer; came to America in 1851, and at once to Mukwonago, where he worked in Galbraith's flax mill one year; he then engaged in farming for fourteen years in Concord, Jefferson Co., Wis. Married, in 1851, in Jericho, Miss Sarah Upton Howard, who died in Concord, 1856, leaving two children—John and Sarah E.; John married Miss Ellen Brown, of North Prairie, and is now in charge of the homestead; the daughter is now Mrs. Henry Paul, of Genesee; Mr. Bratlay married again, Mrs. Mary Paul, widow of John Paul, who, at his death, left seven children—Mary (Mrs. McKinzie); John, now in Dunn Co., Wis.; Sarah J. (Mrs. McWalters); George, also in Dunn Co.; Anne, now Mrs. Studley; Mathew P. and Martha, who are also dead. John Bratlay reached Wisconsin almost penniless; began as a laborer and a renter, went into debt $1,600 on his first farm, was unable to hold it, but, by selling, saved himself; has owned several farms in Concord; the year 1865 was a notable one with him, as he owned and successfully worked his Concord farm and his present homestead; his only help was his 12-year-old son, they working by day, and driving from one farm to the other by night, the profits of the farms and a splendid hop-yard that summer being $4,000; has since sold the Concord farm, and now has a homestead of 178 acres, mostly cultivated, and with excellent buildings; all that need be said is, that he has always paid 100 cents on the dollar. The family are Methodists, he being Trustee and Steward. Mr. Bratlay is, politically, independent.

JOSEPH DODGE, farmer, Sec. 26; P. O. Genesee; born in the town of Andover, Windsor Co., Vt., Feb. 19, 1806; fifteen years of his life were spent as a shoemaker, in Mt. Holly, Vt., where he married Miss Lucy White, who died, leaving him three children—Emily, Joseph E. and Elbridge. In 1833, he married again, Miss Rowena Bryant; the family came to Genesee and settled on the present homestead, in the fall of 1839, he buying 240 acres of the United States, a week after his arrival; for several weeks, his family shared the one-story log cabin of Edward Cavanagh, three families living in the one small room; Mr. Dodge built a 12x16-foot shanty, with rails laid for a chamber floor; the bedding being laid on several sides of sole leather, which he afterward worked up; an occasional roll out of bed by one of the urchins above would reveal an arm or leg between the rails; his table was a board fastened against the side of the room, and bedstead made of poles, and chairs ditto; and yet, under this shake roof, he used to find bed and board for many a traveler; his family moved in here one December day and spent the winter there, with Stephen Sayles and sons, John Rankin, James Williams, Edward Manning and the father of Mr. Dodge for the only neighbors; of these, several lived on puncheon floors, with bedsteads made by driving a post at the right distance from the inside corners of their cabins, then inserting poles from it either way to the log walls; Mr. Cavanagh's roof was so leaky as to compel the inmates to "sleep under tin pans," as Mr. Dodge puts it; ox teams were driven half way to Waukesha (Prairieville) to church, and the milling for these rugged settlers done at "Jerusalem" (Eagleville), and the old Dakin mill (demolished); the farm of 223 acres, well improved, with good buildings at this date, is the result of these experiences. In the spring of 1840, owing to the ill-health of his wife, Mr. Dodge returned and lived in New York State until 1842, since which time he has lived in Genesee. Joseph E. Dodge served in the Union army until the close of the war, much of the time sick in the hospitals; his brother Elbridge, in the same noble cause, died at Columbus, Ky. Mr. and Mrs. Dodge have lost four children, their only living son, Cushman, born, 1836, in Vermont, now owning the farm, or part of it; he married Miss Avis Parsons, of Columbia Co., N. Y., by whom he has four children—Hattie L., Clara E., Eben A. and Perry J.; the family are leading members of the Genesee Congregational Church, of which Mr. Dodge has been, for ten years, treasurer, and of which the son is clerk and deacon; politics Republican. Mr. Joseph Dodge united with the Baptists over fifty years ago, in his native State.

D. L. EDWARDS, merchant, Genesee Depot; born in Aberystwith, Cardiganshire, S. Wales, 1822; when 14 years of age, he was apprenticed for three years at the mercantile business; was for five years a clerk in London, and, in 1847, came to America; engaged in clerking in New York City until 1856, when he located in Milwaukee, as one of the head clerks in the large establishment of the Mack Bros.; in December, 1862, he bought out Mr. Steller, at Genesee Depot, for $500, added $1,500 worth of goods, and has since done a large and most satisfactory business here, increasing his stock to about $7,000; his line of dry goods, groceries, drugs, hats and caps, boots and shoes, clothing, hardware, tinware, glassware, crockery, notions, etc., is most complete, and he proposes to sell any and everything needed by a farming community; married Miss Margaret James, who, at her death, left him an only daughter, Alice J.; married again, Miss Mary, daughter of John Jones (deceased), by whom he has four sons—John A., Thomas D., Richard C. and Arthur J.; Mr. and Mrs. Edwards are members of the Welsh Presbyterian Church, of Genesee; politics Democratic. Probably no man in Waukesha Co., to-day, has had the forty-three years' experience in mercantile pursuits that Mr. Edwards has, which experience enables him to buy judiciously.

WILLIAM H. HARDY, farmer, Genesee; born Oct. 16, 1832, in Ovid, Seneca Co., N. Y.; his father, George Hardy, born in Bath, England, learned the tailor's trade when but 8 or 9 years old; when quite young he emigrated to America, made a trip through the South and East, and located as a tailor in New York City, where he married Miss Mary McIntosh, of Scotch ancestry; with his wife and eight children he located in Genesee in 1846, and engaged in tailoring for many years. William H., at 18 began as a clerk in Waukesha; his education then being most meager, he resolved to improve it; the first step was to learn dactylography, which he did in three and a half days, of R. Radway; some unknown friend of Mr. Hardy had spoken a good word for him to J. J. Jones, of Lynd, Wis., who had a picture car to dispose of, and who now trusted Mr. H. for every dollar of its value; for the ensuing three years he followed the picture business in Waukesha, Jefferson and Walworth Counties, earning a snug sum of money, every dollar of which was spent by him in attaining his education in Carroll College and Lawrence University, Appleton, meanwhile teaching five terms of school, thus earning enough to buy a stock of goods, of which his father, then Postmaster here, had charge; the first term taught in the stone school-house, Genesee, was by Mr. H.; feeling more able to buffet with the world, he continued mercantile business in Genesee until 1863 or 1864; while assisting to take the State census in 1865, he began buying wool, which led to his engaging in the produce and lumber business in Genesee depot, where he built the elevator in 1867, at the time Chicago was made an ash heap; he had $100,000 worth of lumber on hand, which rapidly advanced; after a most prosperous business career at this point, he sold out in 1873 to the Stewart Brothers; that summer, he and partners bought 100,000 pound of wool, and he has bought ever since, also doing much legal business as Notary Public, which office he has filled many years; in 1877, he bought his homestead place of 55 acres, and in 1878 the old Stewart farm in Mukwonago, of 200 acres, his farming operations being carried on with the same energy and success which has characterized all his life work; his 160-acre farm in Trempeleau Co., Wis., was bought with his earnings as a teacher; Mr. Hardy has recently bought a flock of fine-wool sheep, of J. H. Paul, and will try the stock business; although no man has led a husier life, Mr. H., as a stanch and loyal Democrat, was called to represent his district in the Legislature, 1874 and 1876; was also Chairman of Genesee in 1873, Justice of the Peace, Town Clerk, etc.; one of the most pleasurable of the recollections of this gentleman, is his Southern trip in 1876, at which time he was one of a large party invited to make the trip as representative men of the Northwest, he also being one of the visitors at the exposition of that year. Married in Palmyra, Wis., Nov. 14, 1860, Miss Asenath Hill, of Franklin Co., N. Y., by whom he has had five children—William H., Clarence F., Manning J., Freddie (died 1876) and Floyd M. None of the self-made men of this county have worked harder, and to more purpose than William H. Hardy; during his student life he often rose and began study at 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning, and many an odd hour was spent over his books in the picture car; his father died at 64, his mother at 76, now living in the State of New York.

JOHN HOOD, farmer, Sec. 31; P. O. North Prairie; born March 30, 1818, in Abernethy Perthshire, Scotland; has made farming his life-long occupation; in 1846, he removed to Durham, England, and resided there as a farmer fifteen years; here he married Miss Catherine Reid, a native of Auchtergaven, Perthshire; the family came to America in 1861, Mr. Hood buying his 160-acre farm of Mr. Murray; the buildings were a poor frame house and poorer sheds; eighteen years of well-directed toil and calculation on the part of this sturdy Scotch couple have wrought many changes; the elegant two-story farmhouse, with hip roof and modern fixtures, and substantial barns, tell the story better than we can; no more homelike place can be found in the county. There are four living children, all born in the County of Durham, England—Francis, Peter S., Catherine, Jennie A. and Marjory W. (Mrs. William Perry), died Dec. 27, 1877; Peter S., married Miss Sally Drew, of Milwaukee, and is a practical engineer in that city; Catherine is the wife of John Burnell, Jr., of Mukwonago; the eldest and youngest of the children are on the homestead; the family belong to the Genesee Congregational Church; father and sons being steadfast Republicans; the second reaper (an Esterly) used on North Prairie was by Messrs. Hood & Shultis, 1862.

WILLIAM HORNE, blacksmith, Genesee; born Aug. 29, 1817, in Leslie, Fifeshire, Scotland; at seventeen he began at his trade, working in Scotland until 1842, when he came to America and to Milwaukee, being the third or fourth blacksmith to locate there, doing much work for Byron Kilburn, a personal friend. Married in Milwaukee Jan. 1844, Miss Mary, daughter of David Johnston (see biography of William Johnston); her mother died in Scotland, leaving her in charge of several younger brothers and sisters; her father, one of Wisconsin's best-known pioneers, died in Madison, Wis., about 1857. Mr. and Mrs. Horne settled in Genesee, 1852, building the first large frame house in the village, then known as "the house with the green blinds," and which, with its recent improvements, is a most pleasant home; Messrs. Horne and William Johnston built the large stone shop at this time, where the sturdy old Scotch blacksmith has, by honest labor with his hammers, earned the means so usefully spent in educating his children—M. Jennie, the oldest, is now Mrs. John McVickar; M. Elizabeth is now in Iowa, William H., one of Nebraska's live farmers, while John F., a graduate of Beloit College, has since spent a year at Yale, and one at Andover, Mass., from which theological school he will soon graduate; he is the first native of Genesee, to enter the Christian ministry; Annie L. will also graduate from the State University of Wis.; Alice, the youngest, is with her parents; the family are members of the Congregational Church of Genesee; Mr. Horne always refusing office, is a Republican.

ALFRED JACOBS, farmer, Sec. 32; P. O. North Prairie; born in Hornblotton, Somersetshire, Eng., April 14, 1824, immigrated to the United States in 1845, and at once came to Ottawa, buying 40 acres, which he sold; in 1849, he went via the Isthmus to California, remaining two and a half years in the Golden State; returned to Wisconsin the same route, and in 1852, visited his native land; in May 1853, he again settled in Wisconsin, remaining there until fall, then visited Chautauqua, Co., N. Y., where he married, Feb. 14, 1854, Miss Mary Hayes, who was born April 21, 1831, in West Pennard, Somersetshire; her parents and eleven children settled in C. County, 1850; here her father died, and her mother still lives at the age of 73. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs settled on the old "Silver Lake House" farm in Ottawa, and nine years after, bought the old "Half Way House" in the town of Eagle, where they kept store three years; at the end of this time, Mr. Jacobs bought his present 140-acre farm of Thomas Sugdeo, it being well-improved, with good buildings; Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs have nine living children—George E., Clyde, Hattie, Fred, Herbert H., Altamont A., Sydney R., Ralph D., and Minnie A.; the firstborn, Fannie H., died when ten years old; in 1879, Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs made a visit to his father in England, who is hale and hearty at the age of 84; in 1878, Mrs. Jacobs attended a reunion of her family at her mother's home; fourteen of her relatives meeting from Oregon, Kansas, Illinois, Wisconsin and New York; her brother Henry, a New York Volunteer, died in the service at Fortress Monroe, Va.; Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs are members of the Episcopal Church; he is a Republican, and, while he has served on the town Boards of both Ottawa and Genesee, has refused many town offices.

WILLIAM JOHNSTON, proprietor of the Genesee Quarry, is a native of Glamis, Forfarshire, Scotland; from 1818, began life at 18 in serving a four-year's apprenticeship as a stone-cutter; emigrated to the United States in March, 1842, reaching Milwaukee in November; while on the road west of the town one morning in January following, he met Silas Remington, with a cart and four oxen, drawing a load of limestone; conversation ensued, by which he learned that the stones were from Mr. R.'s farm in Genesee; this was the first load of building-stone drawn into that town; Elisha Starr, having established a newspaper there, made inquiries about a suitable imposing stone, and was referred by Messrs. William Sevier and Johnson, to the Genesee stone; in search of such a stone, Mr J.'s first visit was made to the quarry in company with Mr. S. that month; they found a bluff or ledge of limestone, at the top of which Mr. Remington had taken out a few loads of stone; the gray, moss-grown edges of which peered through the side of the bluff here, about 18 feet high; a stone was selected and made a part of Mr. R.'s second load to Milwaukee; Mr. Johnston and his father cut and polished the imposing-stone, and cut the remainder of the load into grave-stones; it is thought that the stone spoken of was the first one used in the Sentinel office; during the next two years Mr. J. bought stone of Mr. Remington, part of which were used in the construction of the first stone buildings in the town. In 1844, Messrs. Johnston and Thomas Cook, an Englishman, bought the quarry, doing business a number of years; Mr. Cook selling his interest, removed to Waukesha, and finally to Milwaukee, where, as senior member of the firm of Cook & Hyde, he is doing the best stone business in the city; Mr. Johnston has sold this famous stone in all parts of Southeast Wisconsin, and thousands of bushels of lime, it being for years the only one open in that part of the Northwest, and no man is better or more favorably known here than he; a Republican, he has ever refused office or honors; married Miss Margaret Kidd, of his native parish; by whom he has seven children; William K. Agnes L., Anne, Mary J., David, John F. and Nellie E. The quarry is now in charge of the eldest son, his brothers working the 140-acre farm owned in connection with it.

DAVID JONES (Park), farmer, Sec. 12; P. O. box 428 Waukesha; born July 27, 1805, in Llodwyn, Cardiganshire, S. Wales; was born and bred a farmer, receiving an excellent education; married Miss Mary Evans, of the parish of Nanteuville, they coming to the United States, and to Genesee, in 1846, Mr. J. buying his 160-acre farm of David Hyde, about 15 acres were broken and fenced; the frame house being then a rare acquisition, as there were but few in the town; as a result of these 34 years of useful and honorable life, Mr. Jones has an improved farm, several substantial barns, and was enabled to celebrate the centennial by building a spacious and elegant residence; Mr. Jones is a member of the Welsh Calvinistic M. E. Church, and a stalwart Republican; was in an early day Assessor of Genesee; his wife died Nov. 1, 1863, leaving nine children; Elizabeth, Jane, David, John, Evan, Margaret (deceased), Rees, Mary and Anne, the three latter are natives of Genesee; Mr. and Mrs. Jones had previously lost four children.

MORGAN JONES, farmer, Secs. 11 and 12; P. O. box 415 Waukesha; is a son of R. W. and Mary (Williams) Jones, and was born June 17, 1847 in Brecon, Breconshire, S. Wales; the family came to America and to Genesee in 1854, Mr. Jones buying the homestead of 140 acres of John Hughes, it being then in a semi-cultivated state; R. W. Jones did good work here with good results, as may be seen by the substantial buildings he erected, and the well cultivated and fenced farm; his wife died in 1869, leaving him ten children; of these Morgan, the eighth, was educated in the common schools and in Carroll College, teaching one term each, in districts No. 1 and 4, in Genesee; his wife was Miss Hattie Hopperton, a native of Genesee; they have three children, Sarah B., Mary E. and an infant as yet unnamed; he is a Republican; his father sold the farm to him in 1874, spent two years in Wales and has since been a resident of Waukesha.

RICHARD JONES, retired farmer, Genesee Depot; was born March 5, 1805, in Aberystwith, Cardiganshire, South Wales; is a son of John and Ann (Williams) Jones; was fifteen years in the mercantile business, and came to the United States in 1842, with his wife and seven children, buying, at $1,800, 240 acres on Sec. 3, in Genesee; himself and William Evans now being the fourth of the Welsh settlers; the first was John Hughes, 1840; next, Thomas Jones and Richard Jarmon, in 1841; none except Messrs. Jones and Evans are now living; Mr. J. began in a log house and cleared up his farm, erected a good stone house and several substantial barns; renting his farm in 1863, he bought 9 acres of the village plat, which, with the depot building, he still owns; was Station Agent here nine years, from 1863, which position he turned over to his son, Charles R.; about ten years ago he sold his farm, built a pleasant home, and has given up active business. Married Miss Charlotte Jones, in Wales, who died in 1857, leaving eight children—Avarina, deceased; Thomas R., deceased; John R., Anne, deceased; William R., Mary, Richard, Jr., deceased, and Charles R.; the sons all take the initial of their honored sire's given name. In 1858 Mr. J. married Mrs. Catherine Jones, by whom he has a son, Daniel. Mr. Jones and family are members of the Welsh Presbyterian Church; he is a Republican, whose active business life has never allowed him to hold office; he, with his wife and youngest son, spent 1871 and 1872 in Wales, but so completely Americanized had he become that he was glad to return. Mr. J. is most kindly remembered by his early Welsh neighbors, as no man could, or did, assist them more in making locations in former days; one of these, a Mr. Joseph Williams, in speaking of this to a party of Welsh, years ago, exclaimed: "He is your King," and the title, so worthily bestowed, has since clung to him, and he is best known as King Jones.

THOMAS D. JONES, farmer, Secs. 9, 5 and 6; P. O. Genesee Depot; born Nov. 6, 1834, in Llandysil, Cardiganshire, South Wales; son of David R. and Sarah Jones, and is the youngest of twelve children; the mother died in Wales, the father and five children coming to the United States in 1842; after two years spent in Licking Co., Ohio, the family settled, in May, 1844, on the 40-acre homestead in Genesee; the trip was made with a team through the marshes and rivers of Michigan, Indiana and Illinois; the land was bought of "Uncle Sam," and a log house built, where Mr. J. and his two youngest children lived, during the first summer, on bread and milk for supper, dinner and breakfast, it being eaten on a dry-goods box, brought from Ohio; their coffee was distilled from a berry growing wild in the woods, where deer and wolves were plenty, yet Mr. Jones now avers that some of the happiest days of his life were spent there; the oak shakes for the roof of the house were split with a curious instrument called a fro, still kept by him as a relic; he attended the district schools under the tuition of such pioneer teachers as W. R. Williams, I. H. Castles and the Rev. Mr. Morris, completing his education in Carroll College, Waukesha; after this he operated a threshing machine and a breaking team for a number of years, but did not carry out his intention to resume school; he has owned the homestead of 80 acres since the death of his father, Aug. 19, 1863; a capacious barn was built here in 1859, and a handsome residence in 1862; in 1879, Mr. Jones bought the old Davenport estate of 470 acres, this giving him the position of the largest land-owner in his town; it is worthy of remark that the Davenport estate is now unencumbered for the first time in forty-two years; few men can show as good a record as Mr. Jones, as he began in '62 with hardly a dollar. Married, Jan. 17, 1862, Miss Margaret, daughter of Griffith Roberts, and a native of Carnarvon, North Wales, by whom he has four children—David, Anne, Griffith and Sarah, all born in Genesee. The family are members of the Welsh Calvinistic M. E. Church, of which Mr. J. was Secretary sixteen consecutive years; a steadfast Democrat, he was first elected Town Superintendent of Schools, was Justice of the Peace for many years, Town Clerk, and in 1870, Chairman of the Board; in 1871 and 1872 he was Assessor, and again Chairman in '74 and '75, and has held the office constantly since 1877. Mr. Jones is a stirring and able business man, worthily representing his town, in which few men have done more legal business in settling estates and in probate cases.

DAVID MORRIS, farmer, Sec. 14; P. O. Genesee Depot; born in Merionethshire, North Wales, December, 1826; spent his early life as a farmer in his native land, emigrating to the United States in 1847; learned the trade of carpenter and joiner in Oneida Co., N. Y., working there until 1857, when he came to Waterville and worked for a year for E. W. Edgerton; in 1858, he bought his farm of 87 acres of David Jones, a small house and a 30x30-foot barn comprising the improvements; twenty-three years of active and honorable labor here has met with a substantial reward in the well-improved farm, the 30x46-foot barn and the tasteful 22x28 two-story farm-house; Mr. Morris also owns 20 acres of timber in Delafield. His wife, from the same shire, married him in the fall of 1846; the eldest son, Edward S., was born May 27, 1847, while the parents were on the Atlantic; David J. was born Nov. 19, 1849, in Oneida Co., N. Y., and Chauncey, Nov. 13, 1858. Mr. Morris and sons are Republicans, David J. serving his county as Deputy Sheriff in 1877 and '78; the eldest son is married, and settled as a railroad man in Milwaukee, the two younger being on the homestead, which is devoted to breeding; among other stock, to grade Durham cattle, Cotswold sheep, Clyde horses and Poland China hogs, pure bred, from Hylett's herd, Menomonee.

JAMES NELSON, farmer, Secs. 23 and 26; P. O. Genesee; born, 1800, in the County of Norfolk, Eng.; came to America, in May, 1849, and, after a short stay in Connecticut, came to Genesee and bought 80 acres of his present farm; here he was joined, on the 2d of August, 1850, by his brother, Samuel Nelson, with his wife and three sons; the brothers did the hardest of work here for sixteen years, buying the 210-acre farm of S. Nelson, and adding 40 to the original 80 acres. Mr. Samuel Nelson married Miss Hannah Herrod, who died in Genesee, in 1851, leaving three sons—Samuel, Jr., James C. and Thomas H.; Samuel Nelson, Jr., learned the trade of miller, working ten or twelve years in the Saylesville and Genesee mills; he was born, in 1837, in Norfolk, Eng. Married, Oct. 26, 1862, Miss Betsey Johnson, a native of Ferrisburg, N. Y., by whom he has two daughters—Susie and Ida. The farm of 120 acres is now owned by him, his bachelor uncle living with him; the parents of Mrs. N., Edward and Polly Johnson, settled in Menominee, in an early day, and saw much of pioneer life and its hardships; Mr. J. died, in 1875, his widow still living there; the Nelsons are Republicans, the uncle being a member of the M. E. Church.

JOHN OLIVER, merchant and Postmaster; Genesee depot; born Nov. 24, 1843, in Oneida Co., N. Y.; his parents immigrated from Wales, in 1841 or 1842, and settled in Genesee, early in 1844; the son was educated here, and resided with his parents until 1862, when he went to Chicago, and engaged in the carpenter and pattern maker's trade until 1868, when, in company with John Davis, he began business in his present store, Mr. Oliver conducting the business alone since 1874, and has increased his business from $5,000 to over $12,000, carrying a complete general stock of everything needed to meet a country trade, including farm implements, also deals in butter, eggs, poultry, etc. He married, in Chicago, Miss Jaue A., daughter of Moses W. and Sarah (Hughes) Williams; her father came to America thirty-seven years ago, and her mother fifty-two years, both from Wales; they located at an early day in Chicago, where Mrs. Oliver was born; Mr. and Mrs. Oliver have four children—Sarah J., Elizabeth M., Margaret R. and John W.; the eldest is a native of Chicago and the others of Genesee; they have lost two children—Robert M. and Ida May. Mr. Oliver is a Republican, and has been Town Clerk twice, and Treasurer once; is, with his wife, a member of the Welsh Calvinistic M. E. Church.

JOHN H. PAUL, farmer and stock-breeder; Genesee; born in Somersetshire, Eng., in August, 1819; he learned the trade of stone cutter, and in 1840 came to the United States, locating in New York State, and in Canada where he was engaged in cutting stone at the enlargement of the Welland Canal. Married in Skaneateles, N. Y., Miss Harriet Foster, of his native shire. Having bought 40 acres of his present homestead a few years previously, he in 1846 settled upon it, a year or so after buying 160 acres, where he lives, at Sheriff's sale, it being part of the Jenkins estate, which fell into the hands of Thomas De Jean, an unfortunate pioneer who built a saw-mill upon it and lost everything; Mr. Paul operated the mill a number of years after this; he also worked at his trade in Milwaukee, at first walking twenty-eight miles on Monday morning to the town, and back to his wife in Genesee on Saturday night, afterward residing in Milwaukee, working at his trade and improving his farm for twelve years. The land where his spacious house and large orchard stand was, when he bought, a grove of white and burr oaks. Mr. and Mrs. Paul have two children—Samuel F., now a leading wholesale silk merchant of Chicago, and Ida H., now Mrs. Thomas Steel, of Genesee; Mr. Paul is admitted on all sides to be the leading fine-wool sheep-breeder of the Northwest, and his sheep have often taken premiums over those of Vermont and New York breeders; about thirty years ago he bred native sheep, and then the Southdowns, but not feeling satisfied, bought of Victor Wright and Oliver Severns, Middlebury, Vt., and A. E. Douglas, Shoreham, Vt., thirty or forty pure-bred animals from the famous old Hammond and Rich flocks; this was in 1862, and the increase of this flock, with the admirable selections made by him since, makes it difficult for Eastern men to carry off Western prizes; his purchases since this have been made of such breeders as Lyman Clark, Addison, Vt.; A. Parker and Dr. Wright, of Whiting, Vt.; Meriner & Brunson and—Shepard, Canandaigua, N. Y.; P. & G. Martin, Genesee Co., N. Y.; S. S. Lusk, Victor, N. Y.; S. B. Lusk, Batavia, N. Y.; and Townsend, of Pavillion, N. Y.; Mr. Paul has for six years past kept from 100 to 300 of these sheep, and has never failed to win at least one-half the premiums at all State and county fairs, where he has had personal charge of the sheep; at the head of his flock is the noble ram "Wrinkley," an animal considered second to none on the continent as a stock getter, and which has never failed but once to take the first premiums where exhibited, he never yet failing to carry off the sweepstakes prize for scoured fleece and ten of his get; Mr. P. is also the owner of Modoc, bred by Martin, of Genesee Co., N. Y., and of Golden Gate, Jr., bred by L. Clark, of Addison, Vt.; the committee appointed by the Wisconsin Sheep and Wool Growers' Association to attend the Centennial Exhibition were: J. H. Paul, Chairman, J. N. Crawford and P. Humbert; Mr. Paul was awarded a bronze medal on a pen of yearling ewes and one on a flock of two and three-year-olds, George Lawrence, Jr., taking the only medal beside these awarded Wisconsin breeders; Mr. P. is also Chairman of the committee on registered sheep, and has nearly two hundred registered in his yards; he has spent more money and time to improve his flock than any man in the State; his sales are extensive in the Southwest, no breeder in the State having an equal reputation; in Texas, where he has many personal friends, he has for fifteen years past bred shorthorn cattle, now owning thirty or forty pure-bred animals, among them the bull "Genesee Prince," whose pedigree is second to none in America; beside this he has ten Hambletonian horses, six of which are eligible to register; his young stallion Swigert, Jr., sired by R. Richard's old Swigert, is now in the hands of Maynard, the noted Waukesha trainer, and at 4 years old can trot inside of 2:50; he is considered the most promising horse in the county, and his time has never yet been equaled by any horse of his age here. Mr. Paul's splendid stock-farm of 300 acres has been cleared and well improved by him, and he doubtless has more barn-room than any man in Genesee. He is an independent Republican, who has ever and always refused political offices, and an attendant with his wife of the Congregational Church.

HERMAN V. PRENTICE, retired merchant; Genesee; is a native of Bethlehem, Litchfield Co., Conn.; born March 17, 1799; is the youngest of eleven children of John and Martha (Clemons) Prentice; he taught district school in Litchfield at 16, and took a three-years' medical course. Married Feb. 10, 1819, in her native town of New Marlborough, Ulster Co., N. Y., Miss Jane, daughter of Cornbury and Mary (Quimby) Dayton, she being twenty-four days his junior; he then taught in New Marlborough, and during the next two years in Essex Co., N. J.; in November, 1822, he engaged in mercantile business in Woodbury, Conn., going from there in August, 1826, to Clockville, Madison Co., N. Y., where he built a large combined store and residence, and carried on an immense mercantile and grain business, owning several canalboats; removed to Albion, N. Y.; he erected two brick blocks which still do credit to the town, and a palatial residence still known as the Prentice Mansion; his mercantile, real estate and shipping interests here were very great, he owning thousands of acres of land there, and large tracts in Michigan; a canalboat, loaded with all his household and other costly goods, started for Milwaukee, but sunk in the Erie Canal, thus entailing a loss of thousands of dollars, and crippling his operations in the West; however, he and his devoted wife reached Milwaukee in September, 1848, but left in fear of cholera, settling in Genesee in April in 1849, on the S. S. Case farm; since this time he has dealt heavily and lost heavily in the grain and produce business, at one time owning the elevators at Genesee and North Prairie. Mr. and Mrs. P. have had six children—Mary J., widow of Gen. J. B. Lee, is a resident of Albion, N. Y.; Martha C. (Mrs. H. J. Van Dusen) died Nov. 2, 1877; Herman V., died March 17, 1831; D. Homer, died Aug. 14, 1874; F. Eliza (Mrs. Horace Smith) resides in Genesee; Ruth, died March 12, 1844. Mr. and Mrs. P. united with the Congregational Church in 1818; Mr. P. is a Democrat, has been

Justice of the Peace, and Town Superintendent of Free Schools in Genesee, and is a Mason, joining the order fifty years ago in Madison Co., N. Y. In their pleasant village home the old couple, in their 82d year, look back over a long, active and exemplary life, and, though Herman V. Prentice has met with many misfortunes during his wearing business life, during the past sixty-four years, no man in Wisconsin is better known, or more universally respected.

JAMES PROCTOR, proprietor of the Genesee Woolen Mills; was born December, 1823, in the West Ridings of Yorkshire, England; emigrating to America, with his brother, when 12 years old, he worked six or seven years in a woolen-mill in Clarkstown, N. Y., and about as long in the Middletown Mills; he next worked a few years with his brother Mathew, in Bushkill, Pike Co., Penn.; in 1854, he located in Janesville, Wis., and, in 1855, in Madison; during the next few years, he engaged in farming, and in the factory at Monticello, Green Co., Wis., also setting in operation the Freeport Mills; in 1868, he bought the Genesee Mill of William Holloway; this was built over thirty years ago, by Daniel Hickox, who operated it, in 1847 and 1848, as a carding mill; in 1849, he and Lyman Holt put in machinery and operated it; Mr. Holt retired, and, on the death of Mr. Hickox, about 1860, his widow sold to Mr. Steller, Mr. Holloway being the next owner; Mr. Proctor has added twenty feet to the length of the mill, and put in new machinery; it is a "one set" mill, with six looms, run by water power; eight hands are employed; fine flannels are the specialty here, made for the Chicago market, Mr. P. buying from 25,000 to 30,000 pounds of wool per annum. He married Miss Sarah Tittle, of Monroe Co., Penn., by whom he has ten children—Eugene, Frank J., Milton, Ellen, Hannab, Emma, James, Hettie, Lillie and William. Mr. Proctor is a Republican.

THOMAS REES, farmer, Sec. 16; P. O. Genesee depot; born in Llandysil, Cardiganshire, South Wales, Feb. 7, 1818; began at 16, and served a seven years' apprenticeship to a shoemaker; in 1841, he came to America, and located at the beautiful village of Granville, Licking Co., Ohio; settled, in May, 1846, in a 12x16 slab shanty in Genesee; this was built near the residence of T. W. Jones, the slabs costing him a shilling each, and it required a day, as the roads were then, to draw a load from the Genesee saw-mill, with oxen; a load of 400 feet of lumber, drawn from Heath's mill in Sullivan, did not arrive until midnight; when completed, the shanty cost $45; for four years after, he worked here at his trade, saving $1,200 in that time; his first work was to mend a poor old harness for T. H. Evans, who was so well pleased as to encourage others to patronize Mr. Rees; his coarse boots were sold at $3; ladies' shoes at $1.75, and fine work at $5; in September, 1850, Mr. R. bought and settled upon the first 120 acres on the School Section, beginning in a log house, working well and honestly as ever, and now is rewarded by owning 200 acres of land, a substantial brick house, all needed barns and stock, and owes no man a dollar; he was the first Welshman to rally his party to the Democratic standard in Genesee, and a good representative pioneer. His is the only Welsh Episcopalian family in the town. He married, in Wales, Miss Mary Davis, of the same parish, by whom he has had six children—Margaret, born in Wales; David and Anne (deceased), born in Ohio; John T., Jane and Mary, born in Genesee; Margaret is Mrs. Owen Olive, of Genesee; David married Miss Anne Felix, and is in a Watertown sash-factory; John T., the second son, was born August 25, 1849; was educated in Stewart's Academy, Waukesha, and has taught seven terms of school in Genesee and Ottawa. Is a Democrat, and is now Justice of the Peace. He married Jane Jones, of Genesee; their only daughter, Jennie L., died July 17, 1879, at the age of 2½ years.

JOHN REMINGTON, retired farmer; born in Rupert, Vt., in 1805; he left his native State when 13 years of age, and located in Western New York; when the Erie Canal was building, he helped dig stumps and do grading, in what is now the heart of the city of Rochester, being one of a few living men engaged in this work. He married Miss Lucinda Marble, of Casenovia, Oneida Co., N. Y., they coming to Genesee and settling on a wild farm in 1842; began a poor man and disposed of a small stock of cloth and leather as best he might, to settlers as poor as himself; Mr. and Mrs. Remington kept open house for travelers in early days, and many a night their floor would be covered with the prostrate forms of sleeping frontiersmen. In his house the first Methodist Episcopal sermon was preached, by the Rev. Mr. Moulthrop, in the fall of 1842, the first prayer meeting having been held there that summer; Mr. Remington was also a pioneer merchant, and relates that he met with "business reverses," his store having been broken into and robbed one night, about thirty years ago, by a band of (supposed) Mormons. In 1859 he built, and placed his son in charge of a warehouse and store in North Prairie; sold out his business here, and in 1870, sold his farm; built, and for three years lived in, a new house in Genesee village; removed again to a farm, which he exchanged with Thomas Sugden, thus obtaining the building where he now lives. Mr. and Mrs. Remington have had nine children—Emily, Daniel, Harriet (deceased), Mariette, Stephen (deceased), Alva, John, Lucinda and Mary; Emily is Mrs. D. D. Gross, of Friendville, Neb., Daniel has a hotel in Northern Wisconsin, Mariette is the wife of the Rev. T. M. Ross, Alva is in business in Milwaukee, John is a civil engineer, and the two youngest daughters are in North Prairie, Mary being the wife of W. E. Swan, Jr., who is one of the prosperous and live young business men of his native county; for the past six years he has carried a large and complete stock of general merchandise, including dry goods, groceries, drugs, boots and shoes, hardware, farm implements, notions, etc.; is doing and means to do a good and satisfactory business. Mr. Remington is an old-school Whig-Republican, and was, for six years, Town Treasurer; is, with his wife, a Methodist.

HORACE SMITH, farmer, Sec. 32; P. O. North Prairie; born in Ackworth, Cheshire Co., N. H., May 3, 1816; lived in his native State until June, 1836, then removed to Cass Co., Mich.; Mr. Smith reached Eagle Prairie in June, 1837, with two yoke of oxen and a wagon; remained several weeks with Ebenezer Thomas, then settled on Sec. 32, Genesee; this claim had been made in March, 1837, by his brother, Stillman Smith; the Smith brothers were the only actual residents of Genesee until September, 1837, when Abram Balsler settled on the present Holsapple farm; in October, Almond and Joseph Osborn made a claim (the Bratlay farm), but spent the winter in La Porte, Ind., locating on the claim in the spring of 1838; in October, Dr. Weeks, of Milwaukee, and Joseph Marsh, of St Albans, Vt., made a claim on Sec. 24, building a house, where Mr. Marsh "bached it" that winter. The first family to settle in this town was that of Absalom Denny, late in the fall of 1837. Mr. Smith lived a bachelor's life here until March, 1856, when he married Miss Frances E. Prentice, a native of Albion, Orleans Co., N. Y., by whom he has eight children—Jennie M. (Mrs. T. S. Reynolds), Alta A. (Mrs. Frederick Orth), Martha E., Ada R., Minda A., Charles H. S., Allie L. and Perlle L. Mrs. Smith is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Mr. Smith is a steadfast Democrat, who has been Highway Commissioner, Justice of the Peace and Assessor many years. He has a homestead of 90 acres, and also a house and lot in the village.

THOMAS SUGDEN, retired farmer; North Prairie; is one of the first settlers in Waukesha County; he was a native of Millington, in the East Ridings of Yorkshire, England; born June 12, 1810, and is a son of John and Jane (Rickal) Sugden; was educated in the common-schools of England, where his younger life was spent; first coming to America in the spring of 1834, he remained at Detroit, Mich., until fall, when he returned to his native land. He married, April 1, 1835, Miss Hannah, daughter of John and Elizabeth Slightam, of his native village; that same spring, the widowed mother of Mr. Sugden, with four of her children, himself, wife, and her relatives, emigrated to and have since been residents of the United States. Mr. Sugden, in May, 1836, came up the lakes on the old New York, the first boat to run from Detroit to Milwaukee that spring; landing at Milwaukee, he made his first visit and his first claim in Waukesha County, in June, 1836, claiming the northeast quarter of Sec. 19, in the present town of Mukwonago, the farm now owned by George Henderson; this was his residence most of the time until the fall of 1843, when he settled on Sec. 14, in Eagle, remaining here until the fall of 1849, when he located on the southeast quarter of Sec. 29, Genesee, and has since been a resident of this town. In politics, an old-time Whig; Mr. Sugden, since the organization of the Republican party, has been one of its most steadfast and loyal members; he was appointed Notary Public by Gov. Nelson Dewey, in 1849, and has held the office under every succeeding Governor; also represented his district in the Second Wisconsin Legislature in 1849, in 1853, and again in 1857; has been Chairman of his town six or seven consecutive years, and held many minor offices in Eagle and Genesee. Mr. and Mrs. Sugden have three living children—Elizabeth (now Mrs. Hugh Jones, of Juneau Co., Wis.), and two sons, James and Thomas (both residents of Saline Co., Neb.).

THOMAS STEEL, M. D.; Genesee; born in Inverkeithing, Fifeshire, Scotland, Nov. 9, 1809. Dr. Steel was educated in the public schools of Glasgow, Edinburg and London; began the study of medicine in London, about 1828, graduating as physician and surgeon from Glasgow University, 1833; the Doctor made his first voyage to America the following year, visited Canada, and went from there to New Orleans, from which city he returned home; the next two years were spent by him as Surgeon on board an East Indiaman; he also resided six months in China; returning to London, Dr. Steel, in 1843, came to America for the second time, and has since been a resident of Genesee, first locating on land now owned by Mr. Hasler, a mile west of the village; he began as one of the pioneer physicians of Wisconsin, was provided with all needed instruments, though his drugs, etc., came from Milwaukee; Dr. Wright, of Waukesha, and himself, were then the only physicians in Waukesha County. The Doctor married, in Milwaukee, Wis., in 1844, Miss Catherine Freeman, a native of London, England, by whom he has had eight children—James, who died of yellow fever in the United States naval service; Thomas, a resident of Genesee; Annie and Lillias, teachers in Milwaukee; Catherine, with her parents; John, a graduate of Beloit College and a teacher; Alfred, now in Beloit College; and Andrew (a student in Milwaukee). Dr. Steel is a Spiritualist in religious belief, and liberal in politics; served one year, and has since refused all office; suffice it to say that he has, during his thirty-seven years' residence here, had all the practice he has desired, and, though not seeking it, still continues to minister to the afflictions of his fellow-men.

DAVID STEWART, farmer, Secs. 11 and 14; P. O. Genesee depot; born in 1817, in the parish Desert Martin, County Derry, Ireland; has been a lifelong farmer. Married in Ireland, Miss Martha Sloan, born in 1819, daughter of a farmer in his parish; when he was 27 they emigrated to America, landing at New York, and reaching Ottawa in June, 1843; here he bought 120 acres of the Government, living in a log house and making slow progress; selling out in 1845, he bought his farm of 160 acres of A. J. Cook, it being sold by William Smith; Mr. Stewart built a log house in November, where his family passed a long, cold winter; as it was unplastered, the frost penetrated often; this was a timbered farm, Mr. S. doing good pioneer work with his ax, and selling hundreds of cords of wood to the railway company, thus clearing and breaking 115 acres, and now cultivating it; the log house is now replaced by a very large and well-built residence, and several substantial barns have been built, all helping to show the results of a busy and useful life; Mr. S. has been unfortunate in one respect, having had his ribs broken at different times, and a year ago his leg broken in three places, by the kick of a horse. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart have eight children—Sarah (Mrs. Richard Cole), Eliza J. (Mrs. Walter Stewart), Mary M. (Mrs. Thomas Fender), Thomas S., David J., Eva A. (Mrs. M. D. Salter), John and Mattie; the youngest, Benjamin R., died at six months. Mr. Stewart is a Republican and has been school district Treasurer and Overseer of Highways a number of years; is in accord with the Presbyterian Church. Mr. S. has a fine flock of 120 sheep, with other stock.

STEWART BROS., dealers in grain, lumber and stock; Genesee depot; sons of James and Susan A. Stewart, and were born in New Brunswick, the family removing to a farm in Mukwonago, Waukesha Co., in 1846; there were eight children, of which A. G. Stewart, the fourth, was born in 1841; educated in the district schools of Mukwonago, and in Beloit College, after which he took a commercial course in Buffalo, N. Y.; he was also a Union soldier, volunteering in the 24th N. Y. cavalry, served three years; his regiment doing the usual scouting and guard service of cavalry in Virginia and North Carolina, participating, however, in the desperate battles before Petersburg. He married, April 27, 1871, Miss Sarah J. Rankin, of Genesee, by whom he has one son; Areli R., is a Democrat, and is now Town Clerk, having prior to this, been Supervisor; E. J. Stewart, born 1846, was next younger than his brother, and partner; was educated at Beloit College, which school he attended four years; is a Republican to the backbone. About thirteen years ago the brothers joined hands in business, were in the grocery and provision business for some time in Oshkosh, and one summer keeping a hotel (as a summer resort) in Frontenac, Minn.; in the spring of 1873 they bought the Genesee Elevator of W. H. Hardy, who had succeeded H. V. Prattice; they are dealing extensively here in grain, grass seeds, lumber and fat-stock, also feed of all kinds; their stock of lumber is large, varied and complete; their farm adjoining the village was bought of J. Davis; here they have built one of the most substantial and elegant residences to be found in the county; besides this, they are doing a good business at North Prairie, owning there the best elevator on this line of railway, and also a lumber-yard; from $200,000 to $240,000 per annum is their regular business.

JOSEPH STUBBS, farmer, Sec. 29; P. O. North Prairie; born in Seagrave, Lancastershire, England, May 25, 1826; during his boyhood he served as apprentice to a druggist and grocer; came to America when 19 years of age, and spent three years in Milwaukee. Here, in St. Paul's Church, by the Rev. Benjamin Akerly, Dec. 17, 1846, he married Miss Mary Lilly, who was born March 26, 1826, in Smarden, Kent Co., England; in April, 1848, they came to Genesee and settled on 80 acres of the present farm; beginning here in a log house, they had to work and plan well to support, clothe and educate their large family, for they have been blessed with fourteen children—William G., born July 5, 1847, died Feb. 18, 1848; Stanley D., born Dec. 4, 1848; Andrew T., born May 20, 1850; Orlando, born Feb. 7, 1852; Sidney, born Nov. 6, 1853; Orwin, born Aug. 8, 1855; Orson, born Sept. 5, 1857; Vincent, born March 13, 1859; Amelia, born Nov. 21, 1860; Matilda, born Nov. 3, 1862; Etta, born June 24, 1864; George, born Feb. 16, 1866; Ida, born Aug. 16, 1867; Mary, Dec. 2, 1869, died Dec. 26, 1869. Honest industry and attention to business always wins, and as his reward Mr. Stubbs has about 400 acres of excellent land, of which 60 are in Ottawa and 8 in Mukwonago; about 300 acres, or the main farm, is under cultivation; about fourteen years ago Mr. S. bought the farm of Mr. Gary, and on this he has built a substantial farm-house, barns, etc.; not a bad showing for a man who began with $25 in Wisconsin, and who loaned and lost even that. Mr. S. is a Democrat, and, with his wife, an Episcopalian.

TOWN OF PEWAUKEE.

CHARLES BARTLETT, farmer, Sec. 3; P. O. Pewaukee; was born in Portland, Me., Dec. 28, 1805; when he was 5 years of age his parents moved to Chester, N. H., thence to Greene Co., N. Y., when he was about 15; in early life he learned the carpenter and joiner's trade and followed it for several years; he married in the city of New York, in 1831, to Abbie Smith, a native of Prospect, N. Y., Oct. 8, 1837; during the war of the rebellion, he enlisted in Co. E, 24th W. V. I., and was killed at Mission Ridge on the 23d of January, 1864; the second son, Fayette, died while a child; Clayton L., the youngest, resides with his parents. Mr. Putney owns 200 acres of land; he has filled various offices of trust. Is a Republican in politics.

TOWN OF MUKWONAGO.

WILLIAM ADDENBROOKE, farmer, Sec. 9; P. O. North Prairie; born 1832, in Staffordshire, Eng.; is a son of Hy. and Harriett (Johnson) Addenbrook, who are now residents of Liverpool, Eng.; Mr. A. studied in the schools of his native land, taking a medical course at the Birmingham Hospital; he practiced medicine on the ocean packet-ships, and in the American and English seaports, until 1852, when he came to Wisconsin and bought his present farm of 120 acres; was for nine years in the grain and mercantile business at North Prairie, selling his store and elevator, in 1875; has since devoted himself to his farm and apiary; his first swarm was captured in the woods about twenty years ago; was for a time in partnership with George Grimm, whose father, Adam G., of Jefferson, Wis., was the most successful apiarian on the continent, and first introduced the Italian bees; the partnership was dissolved in 1879, Mr. Addenbrooke now owning one hundred and fifty swarms of pure and hybrid Italians; he was the originator of the method of wintering the hives packed in chaff, which is found to be most satisfactory; he is now building a very large two-story residence, fitting up the cellar with a view to the wintering of bees; when he went into partnership, he had fifty-seven swarms, of which Mr. Grimm took half; at the end of two years, they divided three hundred swarms between them, having more than paid expenses. Mr. A. introduced the first ferrets, and also the first African geese, into Wisconsin. Is a Democrat; was Chairman, in 1876 and 1878, and was re-elected in 1880; has also been Supervisor, etc., in his Republican town. Married, in 1853, Miss Celia, daughter of Isaiah and Emily L. (Harrison) Skidmore, of Staffordshire, who settled in Mukwonago, in July, 1844; Mr. and Mrs. A. have six children—Ellen H. (Mrs. John Sugden), Henry H., William J., M. Louisa, Joseph J. and Harriet R.

F. S. ANDREWS, farmer, Secs. 15, 16 and 22; P. O. Mukwonago; is a son of John and Betsey (Smith) Andrews, and was born in Andover, Vt., March 24, 1826; the family settled on Sec. 22, Mukwonago, in 1844; here F. S. Andrews lived till 1850, when he located on his present farm of 195 acres; has cleared the land of a heavy growth of oak, broken and fenced it, built a large basement barn, in 1861, has added other substantial buildings, and, in 1879, built a large and tasteful farmhouse. Married, Sept. 28, 1848, Miss Emmeline Hollister, of Bafford, S. C., by whom he has eight children—Betsey A., Anginette, Wallace F., Addie J., Alida K., Luella, Ross E., and May A. The mother of Mr. A. died in 1846, his father still residing in Mukwonago, aged 82 Mr. A. is a Republican, and has been twice chairman, and several years Supervisor, of the town. Is breeding full-blooded Spanish merino sheep, from the flock of Jasper J. Brainerd, Attica, N. Y., owning fifty full-bloods and sixty high grades; he also has one full-blood and six grade shorthorns.

GEORGE W. ANDREWS, farmer, Secs. 22 and 23; P. O. Mukwonago; born in Andover Vt.; is a son of John and Betsey (Smith) Andrews, who came to Mukwonago in 1844, John A. buying three eighths of Government land and 320 acres of the settlers, living here until 1873, when he located in the village, his wife having died, in 1846, leaving him nine children—John, Lucy, Frederic S., George W., Andrew, Mary A., Ira B., Wesley, and Laurel G., all of whom are now in Wisconsin, except Ira D. and Wesley; Geo. W. married Miss Roxina Hollister, a native of Canada, by whom he has a son, J. Elmer, born Oct. 30, 1870. Owns 166 acres of the old homestead, well improved, with good buildings; is a well-known stock-grower and dealer, buying pure-bred sheep for Western breeders; has an excellent flock of Spanish merinos, from the flocks of Perry Craig, Vernon and A. C. Whitmore, East Troy, and has recently paid $100 for a registered ram, from the famous Hammond flock, Shoreham, Vt.

LAUREL G. ANDREWS, merchant and postmaster at Mukwonago; born 1841, in Andover, Vt. His father, John Andrews, settled in Mukwonago, in 1844; Laurel G. was educated in the village school and in Carroll College. Married Miss Martha, daughter of Jesse Whitney; she was a native of Rochester, N. Y., and a resident of Mukwonago. Mr. A. is a Republican. His business life began in 1869, his partner and uncle, Sewall Andrews, retiring the next year in favor of his son Clement. L. G. & C. Andrews did business until 1873, when F. A. Wood bought out Clement A., thus constituting the present firm; they have, since November, 1879, occupied a large and well appointed store, built and owned by S. Andrews, carrying a very large and most complete stock of dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, and anything wanted in a farming community. Mr. A. was appointed Postmaster in April, 1875.

SEWALL ANDREWS, the pioneer settler of Mukwonago Village, was born Feb. 5, 1807, in Andover, Vt., son of John and Rebecca (Webber) Andrews; after he was thirteen he attended school but little, being engaged on the farm of his widowed mother; at 19 he began peddling tinware in Massachusetts, and after eight years began business in Simonsville, Vt.; his first visit to Wisconsin was in the fall of 1835; Major Jesse Meacham and A. Spoor accompanied him from Chicago to Milwaukee Village, where Milo Jones joined them; proceeding with a team to the southwest, they tented out on the open prairie, now the site of the city of Janesville; returning, via Chicago, to his native State, he remained until the spring of 1836; came to Milwaukee, met Henry H. Camp, and with him reached the Indian village of Mequonago, in May, 1836; Major Jessie Meacham was one week ahead of them; a present of two barrels of flour induced the Indians to allow them to build a bark-roofed shanty, 10x12 feet, in their village; prior to this they built, but did not occupy, a similar hut on Sec. 22; these were the very first buildings ever erected by a "pale-face" in Mukwonago; the "Los" were removed in 1837 but many returned and staid for years; the village plot was surveyed by Martin Field and Ira Blood, in the fall of 1836; in the spring of 1837 Mr. A. built a store and brought in the first goods from New York City; this was the trade center for twenty miles around, and the hardy frontier merchant reaped a rich reward; after relinquishing mercantile business, Mr. A. owned the grist mill five years, but of late has given his attention to cultivating his farm on the outskirts of the pretty village in which he is now the oldest settler; his substantial brick residence was built in 1842, and was one of the first of that material erected in Waukesha County. He married, Nov. 21, 1838, Miss Sarah Resigue, of Hubbardton, Vt. She died in April, 1861, leaving two sons,—Lorin, born Sept. 3, 1839; and Clement, born April 15, 1847. The present Mrs. Andrews was formerly Sarah J. Mason, and was born in Pompey, Onondaga Co., N. Y.; she married Edgar Meacham, who at his death, in March, 1856, left two children, Clarence and Lillian. Leona, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrews, died Feb. 27, 1871. Mr. and Mrs. A. are leading members of the Universalist Society of Mukwonago. Mr. A., at this writing, is a ruddy-cheeked, sturdy-looking man, who can follow a team or break in a fractious colt as well as he did forty-four years ago; he was a prominent figure in the first recorded events of his town and county. Politics, Old Line Whig Republican.

JOSEPH BOND, farmer; was born Oct. 10, 1800, in Warrensburg, Warren Co., N. Y., at that time Thurman's Patent, Washington Co., N. Y.; all his schooling was before his 12th birthday, but he grew up a reading, thinking and observing farmer; his farm in East Hamburg, Erie Co., N. Y., was sold at a profit prior to his coming to Mukwonago, in June, 1839; he at once bought his present farm of 280 acres, on Secs. 22 and 27; Mr. B. did the best of work among the oak openings here, splitting rails like a second Lincoln; made his farm valuable and erected good and commodious buildings upon it. Joseph Bond is one of Waukesha County's best-known pioneers, and formerly took a lively interest in public and political matters; he voted for Andrew Jackson in 1828, and has always supported his Democratic principles; was a member of the Territorial House of Representatives in 1840, 1841 and 1846; and as a member of the first Legislature, in 1848, helped frame the State Government; this honorable and hard-working body of pioneer law-makers organized the Judicial and Legislative departments, made the "forty-acre" exemption law, and many others, still in force; Mr. Bond was also a legislator in 1855, served on the County Board before and after the division of the counties, was Chairman of the County Board at the building of the court house, and from the evident respect felt for him at this day filled all these positions with credit.

THOMAS BRIMMER, farmer, Secs. 16 and 21; P. O. North Prairie; born in Petersburg, N. Y., Oct. 9, 1806; Mr. Brimmer lived near this point until he was 20, then settled in Erie Co., N. Y.; in 1844, he came to Wisconsin and bought his present farm; built a rude house of planks, roofed with oak shingles, split out by him in Fox River woods; this was his home eight or ten years, and was replaced by his now pleasant home; his barns are 30x52 and 22x30; his 191 acres are cleared, fenced and productive; his son is also established near him on a good farm of 80 acres. Mr. Brimmer is a genuine old settler, and a successful one; his wife, formerly Clarissa Wright, died Aug. 7, 1851, leaving four children: Sarah, Orlin, Maria and Emily; his present wife, formerly Philura Wright, married Noah Brimmer, who died, leaving five children: Homer, deceased; O. Perry, Mary, deceased; Caroline, deceased; and William. Mr. B. is a Republican, and was Assessor in early times.

ISAAC BRADLEY, farmer, Secs. 18, 19 and 20; P. O. Eagle; born in the West Ridings of Yorkshire, England, May 2, 1822; losing his father when 12 years of age, he made his home with William Hill, a brother-in-law, of whom he learned the trade of stone-cutter; came with him to America, 1842, and worked on Mr. Hill's farm one year to complete the time of his apprenticeship, and the second year to repay his passage money loaned him by Mr. H.; the next two years were spent at work on the farms by the day and month; Isaac Skidmore then paid him $9 per month for a year and a half, he thus saving his first $100; he then made a trip through South Wisconsin, doing his first stone cutting in America, at Beloit; returning; he worked three years in the Genesee stone quarry, during this time he had bought a warrant, and located land near Neenah, Wis.; the next two winters were spent in the pineries of Michigan, working at his trade in summer in Milwaukee; he also worked one summer in Chicago, and one in building a college at Batavia, Ill.; after this he bought, but soon sold, an interest in the Genesee Stone quarry, also, exchanged his land at Neenah for 80 acres of his present farm; at this time, 1853, an Indian trail led across it from Mukwonago to the northwest; about 20 acres were broken, on which was an unfinished house, used as a weaving-room by former occupants; as a result of twenty-seven years of intelligent labor and care, Mr. Bradley has 300 acres, of which 200 are under cultivation; his barn is 30x46 feet; shed addition for sheep, 21x30 feet; stable, 18x47 feet, etc.; his house, improved and painted, is 28x36 feet, and a pleasant home; as Mr. B. came here on money lent by a relative, this showing speaks for itself as to the character and energy of the man; during his life here he has worked at his trade to some extent, being foreman of a bridging gang on the Prairie du Chien Division for three summers; his last stone work was on the Milwaukee Water Works, 1873-75. He married Miss Jane, daughter of Robert Wilkinson, and a native of the East Ridings of Yorkshire, by whom he had five children—Henry W., Ella M., Irvin (deceased), Annie J. and Frank D. Mr. Bradley is liberal in religion and politics.

JOHN BURNELL, farmer, Secs. 6 and 7; P. O. North Prairie; born May 7, 1801, in Yorkshire, England; at one time he managed a 700-acre farm in his native land; came to America in 1834, and settled for three years in White Pigeon, Mich.; made a claim (his present farm) in 1836, on which he settled with his family, June 11, 1837; built the largest log-house in the vicinity, ransacking two towns for men enough to raise it; he had sent in from Michigan twenty-one barrels of flour, which were quickly snapped up by the settlers; returning, he brought in six barrels of flour, the first head of cattle, and the first twenty hogs brought into Mukwonago; also, brought in the first fall wheat, raising 200 bushels for his first crop; flour in Milwaukee was worth $13 per barrel, and pork, $36; many of the settlers were half-starved, during the fall of 1837, when Judge Mix, of Constantine, Mich., sent in a large amount of flour made of wheat raised that year. Mr. B. first reached Waukesha with his breaking team of four horses, and, like the rest of the pioneers, went to his claim via Mukwonago; he opened the first road to Waukesha, past Spring Lake; his half-section, once a burr-oak-flat, is now one of the best farms in the county, the old log-house being replaced years ago by a substantial two-story brick residence; his main barn, with basement, is 24x137 feet in size. Married, 1828, Miss Ann Walgate, who died 1840, leaving four children—William (deceased), Henry, Elizabeth, and Sarah (deceased). Married again Miss Jane Cobb, of Yorkshire, who died in September, 1879, leaving six children—Mary J., Ann, Hannah, Emma, John and Kate J.; Helen, the third daughter, died in July, 1867. Mr. Burnell is a Democrat, and a genuine representative of the sturdy pioneers who opened up and developed this grand old county. He was for years noted for his first-class sheep, horses, etc., and as a dealer in horses.

J. W. CAIRCROSS, M. D., Mukwonago; was born Sept. 19, 1852, in Lisbon, Waukesha Co., Wis., of which town his parents, George and Amy Cairncross, were farmers; after a course of study in the district schools and the Pewaukee high school, he began the study of medicine with M. R. Hewitt, a graduate and warm friend of Bellevue Medical College, New York City, and at whose instance young Cairncross entered this well and widely known medical school, graduating therefrom as physician and surgeon in February, 1875; locating at once in Mukwonago, he has established a most satisfactory practice. He married Miss Helen, daughter of Isaac Smith, of Pewaukee; they have an infant son, as yet, unnamed. The Doctor is a Republican and a member of Pewaukee Lodge, I. O. O. F. This family originated and derive the name from the cairns and crosses of Scotland, and is one of the pioneer families in the county, settling here in 1842.

THOMAS CARROLL, farmer, Sec. 1; P. O. Genesee; born in 1816, in the County of Wickford, Ireland; was a farmer and mason there; sold his farm in 1850, and came with his family to America, locating in Mukwonago; he worked the first year for W. C. Chapin, at $13 per month, and was obliged to do this as he had exhausted his means in crossing the ocean; the next ten years were spent working at his trade; he then worked the farm of a Mr. Wilson; having saved $200, he now bought 40 acres, but sold it in three years for $1,200, a gain of $200 on first cost; he next bought 120 acres at $2,300, paying $1,000 down; his wife died here, leaving him seven children, Margaret, William, Michael, Thomas, Mary A., John and Lizzie; his son David was mate on a Mississippi steamer, died at New Orleans. Mr. Carroll's present farm of 90 acres is well improved, and has good buildings. He married in July, 1871, Mrs. Margaret, widow of John Colloton, who was a native of County Monahan, Ireland; born in 1821; he came to America in 1839, lived two years in the State of New York, and came to Wisconsin in 1841, and bought in 1844, his farm of 90 acres, which he improved, and on which he died in 1864. His wife was Margaret Brenne, of County Clare, Ireland, who came to America in 1846; he left her five children, Mary A., Lizzie, Sarah, Margaret and Adelaide. The combined estate of 180 acres, is now controlled by Mr. Carroll and his youngest son. The family are Roman Catholics; politics, Democratic.

WILDER C. CHAFIN, deceased; was born in Weston, Vt., Dec. 1, 1813; after engaging at cabinet making in Woodstock, Vt., for some years, he came to Mukwonago late in 1836, making a claim on Sec. 36, which he bought at the land sale three years later, and which is now so good a family home; he built a log house and lived as a pioneer, returning in an early day for a visit to his native State; he was married in 1845, to Miss Amelia T., daughter of Gaylord Graves; she was born in the town of Fowler, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., and accompanied her parents in a covered wagon to Wisconsin, during the winter of 1837, a trip few would undertake now, though they heeded the hardships but little then. Mr. Chafin lived to do good work, clearing, building and adding to his farm; at his death Oct. 8, 1870, he left seven children—Laura E., Parthena A., Mary J., Nettie, Page W., Gaylord G. and Nellie M.; Page W. died in November, 1871. Mr. Chafin was a Congregationalist and a Republican. While trying to hold a young, spirited, and at the time frightened team, he was thrown to the ground, and injured so badly as to live but two days; a most honorable, charitable and manly man, his death was the occasion of the most sincere expressions of grief and respect by all who knew him. His wife and family enjoy a most pleasant home on the 200-acre farm south of the village; Mrs. Chafin is a Baptist in religion.

CHARLES L. CLARK, farmer, Sec. 21; P. O. Mukwonago; born in Whiteside Co., Ill., 1838; his father, Charles Clark, removed with his family from New York to Ohio about 1834, going from there to Illinois, and settling in Mukwonago in 1845; his elder son, Charles L. was educated here, and settled on his farm of 120 acres in 1866; has made the improvements himself. Married, in the spring of 1862, Miss Hannah, daughter of William Hill, deceased, who was one of the early settlers of this town; they have five children—Margaret E., William O., Alice E., Stanton R. and Ethel A. Mr. and Mrs. Clark are Congregationalists, he being an Independent Republican and a member of Mukwonago Division S. and D. of T.; his father died in 1845; his mother is now living in North Wisconsin; his only brother, William O. Clark, enlisted among Berdan's famous sharpshooters, served through the Peninsular campaign, and was mortally wounded at the battle of Charles City Cross Roads, Va. Charles L. Clark is thus the only living member of this branch of the family. Mr. Clark is breeding full-blooded Spanish merino sheep from J. J. Brainerd's flock, of Attica, N. Y., now having 114.

THOMAS COATS, deceased; born Nov. 5, 1809, in Yorkshire, England; came to America about 1830, his family being one of the first to settle on White Pigeon Prairie, Mich; in 1835, the brothers, Thomas and John, came to Wisconsin, reaching what is now Sec. 7, Mukwonago, via Southport (Kenosha), making a claim to several hundred acres here; they then returned to Michigan for provisions and stock; Mr. Coats made many a trip after this to the same State for supplies, the bachelor settlers meeting him, in a half-starved condition, at the Indian village of Mukwonago; the old wagon used for these trips is still kept as a relic on the farm. Among the first settlers here, were the Sugdens, widow and six children; part of the family located on Sec. 17, now the Hill farm; entirely destitute of means, this heroic pioneer family saw, perhaps, more of the actual suffering and privations incident to that early day, than any other in this county; a scant supply of potatoes, eaten without even salt, was their only sustenance for some time. On the 23d of March, 1840, Jane, the second daughter married Mr. Coats, they beginning housekeeping in the log house of John Coats, who lived with them; in May, 1842, having built a part of the present house, they removed, living for years in what is now the front parlor, doing the cooking in a shanty under a noble burr oak, which still spreads its branches over the family roof. Mr. Coats died in 1865, leaving eight children—Mary (Mrs. Amos Patterson), Richard and George, farming in Mukwonago, Andrew J., Ellen, Charles H. and Emma, all on the homestead; Ada J. is now Mrs. T. E. Swan, of Heart Prairie; John, the eldest son, died in 1861; the 280 acres of improved land, on Secs. 7 and 8, with its large and substantial house and barns, are the result of the energy and pluck of Thomas Coats, who is missed by a host of warm friends, as a man ever open handed to the needy and always ready to encourage any enterprise that gave promise of good; he was a staunch Republican, as are his sons. A. J. and C. H. Coats are breeding the best of stock; P. O. address, North Prairie.

J. N. CRAWFORD, farmer, Sec. 24; P. O. Mukwonago; born Sept. 19, 1837, in Huron Co., Ohio; his parents, formerly from Delaware Co., N. Y., left Ohio in 1852, and settled in Baraboo, Wis.; in 1860, J. N. Crawford went to Colorado; he is a carpenter by trade, and began work among the mines; the firm of Woodbury, Norton & Crawford, of Black Hawk, Colo., erected most of the mining machinery used in that State for several years; their contracts were with United States Senator Hill, the Black Hawk Mining Company, Smith & Parmlee, the Briggs Mining Company, etc. Mr. Crawford began empty-handed, earned a competence, and, in 1868, returned to Wisconsin, buying his present farm of 161 acres. On the 24th of March, 1868, he married Miss Louie, daughter of Hon. Jesse Smith, of Vernon; they have five children—Martha, Louie B., Willie N., Jessie L. and Nora. Mr. Crawford is a member of the Universalist Society of Mukwonago, is a Republican, has been Chairman of the Town, was one of the original Trustees of the Town Insurance Company, and has been its President since 1876. Mr. Crawford is one of the most successful of the breeders of fine-wool sheep in Wisconsin; he began with registered sheep from the flock of S. B. Lusk, Western New York, and has since bought of Stickney, of Vermont, and J. H. Paul, of Genesee, now having fifty registered animals, which are hard to beat; his Poland China hogs are from the herds of Magee, Shepherd & Alexander, Ellsworth & Street and other noted breeders; of late, he has interested himself in Jersey cattle, having made valuable purchases from C. T. Bradley, Milwaukee.

WILLIAM M. FRAZIER, farmer, Sec. 24 and 25; P. O. Mukwonago; is a son of John and Mary (Walker) Frazier, and was born Sept. 14, 1816, in Homer, Cortland Co., N. Y. Mr. F. is of Scotch ancestry, and resided in his native State as a farmer until June, 1845, when he settled on a part of his present farm of over 500 acres; his first visit West was in 1840; Southport (Kenosha), Milwaukee and Racine were then villages; Whitewater consisted of two or three log houses, one used as a hotel; Perkins' mill in Burlington was the only available one for settlers in the eastern part of Racine County; five years later he saw the Janesville and Milwaukee road thronged with teams loaded with wheat grown on land that was untouched in 1840, and four-horse stages carried a daily mail each way; To show that he entered heartily into the progressive spirit of the times, we may look over his handsome cultivated fields, and at his small village of farm buildings, to which he is still adding; the log house, built forty-four years ago by James Orrendorff, as a hotel, was for years the best in the vicinity, but was abandoned owing to its unhealthy location, Mr. F. building a log house on the site of his present frame farm house, which replaced it in 1858; his first barn, built with a basement, was 30x40, and since, he has built two sheep barns, one 20x120 and one 18x36, a horse barn 24x48, corn house 18x24, tool-house 16x40, granary, colt stable, etc. He married Miss Martha M. Thompson, a native of Lodi Plains, N. Y.; they have two daughters—Lillian M. and M. Wilmina. Mr. and Mrs. Frazier are leading members of the Universalist Society of Mukwonago, he having been Supervisor of the town several terms, Town Clerk and Chairman. Politics, Republican. He has bred fine-wool sheep for twenty-five years, past, and now has a flock of 350, besides other stock.

JOHN H. GUDGER, farmer, Sec. 19; P. O. Eagle; born in Delafield, Waukesha Co., Wis., in 1851; son of John and Lydia Gudger, who came from Yorkshire, England, to Waukesha Co. about forty years ago, buying canal land of the Government; of the ten children, the four eldest were born in England; David, the eldest son, one of the 2d W. V. I., was killed in the battle of Gettysburg; William, the second son, is now a Kansas farmer; John H. has lived in his native county, with the exception of five winters spent in North Wisconsin pinneries, in 1875, his father bought the Skidmore estate of the widow of Isaiiah Skidmore; sold it to his son in two years, who has sold 140 acres of it, now owning 160 acres, well improved; the large two-story brick house was built by Mr. S. at a cost of $4,000; he also erecting the barns and setting out the beautiful evergreens, and otherwise improving it. Mr. Gudger married, in 1877, Miss Mary Gillard, of East Troy, Wis. As a stock-breeder, he has a herd of thoroughbred Durham cattle, besides Spanish merino sheep, Norman horses, hogs, etc. Is a Republican. His father is a retired farmer of Pewaukee, his honored mother having gone to her final long rest. None of the early settlers did better than Mr. G., who earned a competence, besides giving generous aid to each of his ten children, EDWARD HARDAKER, farmer, Sec. 10; P. O. Mukwonago; born in Yorkshire, England, Oct. 17, 1834; his parents, John and Mary (Dunwell) Hardaker, came to America in 1845. Leaving his family in Massachusetts, John H. came at once to Mukwonago and bought 40 acres; his family joined him at the end of two years. His son, our subject, was educated in England, and has been a life-long farmer; bought his farm of 120 acres in 1865; during fifteen years of active and successful farming here, he has built a large and tasteful residence, a 36x42 foot barn, and other substantial buildings. Miss Mary Briley, of Oldham, Lancastershire, England, joined her sister in Milwaukee, Wis., in October, 1860, and married Mr. Hardaker there March 16, 1862; they have seven children—Lydia, Charles H., Cecelia, Mary A., Sarah E., John E. and James E. Mr. H. is a Republican, and independent of church or societies; has usually from fifty to seventy-five excellent grade sheep, with good cattle and other stock.

JAMES HARDY, farmer, Sec. 2; P. O. Genesee; born in Barnsley, Yorkshire, England, Jan. 26, 1819, son of Henry and Sarah (Reeves) Hardy, who emigrated to America, in 1842, spent a few weeks in Albany, N. Y., then came to Mukwonago, and settled on the Hardy homestead; they were accompanied by James Hardy, and his wife, whom he married Dec. 25, 1840, she being Miss Dinah Gelder, a native of Westborough, Yorkshire; the Hardys had been linen manufacturers in England, and found it awkward work to swing the ax; at sight of the log shanty the elder Mrs. Hardy cried: "We never can live here," but live there they did until the next year, when they built a good log-house; the farm was burr oak openings, there being only four or five houses between them and the river, and none on "The Point;" the next progressive step was to build a good frame house; Mrs. Hardy, Sr, died May 20, 1850, and Henry Hardy, March 4, 1874; Mr. and Mrs. James Hardy have nine living children: Dinah, Cynthia, Mary, Sarah, Robert, John, Jane, Anna, and Elizabeth; Henry, the eldest son, enlisted in Col. Paine's 4th W. V. I. and died at Baltimore, March 14, 1862; the next son, William, of the 24th U. S. Regulars, died at Vicksburg, Miss., Nov. 13, 1866; the family are now living in their fourth house, a substantial two-story brick structure; the improved farm is provided with all needed barns, stock, implements, etc.; one feature of Mr. Hardy's history is most marvelous; while engaged in reaping clover for seed in the fall of 1875, he fell from the seat, directly in front of the terrible knives; the team drew these, playing like lightning, over and through him, cutting off several toes, gashing his arms in a horrible manner, and a ten-inch gash in his chest, by which the action of the lungs, heart, etc., were exposed to full view; the six physicians in attendance at different times agreed in pronouncing the case hopeless; Mr. Hardy attributes his almost miraculous recovery to the faithful nursing of Dr. Robert Sabin, and that of his own devoted family, during the fourteen long, weary months of his confinement to the house; the cost of that day's reaping was over a thousand dollars; Mr. and Mrs. Hardy are members of the Genesee Congregational Church. Politics, independent.

GEORGE HENDERSON, farmer, Sec. 18, P. O. Eagle; born in the parish of Orwell, Perthshire, Scotland, July 1, 1805. At 21, he left home and traveled through England and Western Europe for the ensuing three years; the next eight years were spent on a steamer plying between Liverpool and Glasgow; he then kept hotel nine years in the latter city; in 1850, with his wife and four children, he came to America and Waukesha Co., buying his present farm of William Ellis. Mr. Henderson has done good work during his thirty years' residence here, building barns, stable, shop, etc., and adding a brick wing to the house; his farm of 240 acres is well improved, as is that of his son, who owns 100 acres near it. Mr. H. married Miss Agnes Duncan, a native of Maskinch, Fifeshire, on the 13th of Nov., 1829; they have four living children—Isabel, Agnes, George and Thomas; the eldest daughter is wife of Gardner Campbell, proprietor of the Centennial Foundry, Milwaukee; Agnes is Mrs. James Colman, of Puget Sound, W. T.; George married Miss Elizabeth Hill, and is a thriving farmer; Thomas married Miss Clara Cole, of Mukwonago, and is on the homestead. The old couple are Presbyterians. Politics, liberal.

WILLIAM HILL, deceased; born 1805, in Cheshire, England; married Miss Rachel Bradley, who was born Oct. 9, 1810, in Yorkshire; they came to America with four children, in 1840; reaching Waukesha, they were unable to find other shelter than a stable, where Mrs. Hill lay sick, while her husband searched out a home, her children suffering for the bread she was unable to get them; Mr. Hill bought 80 acres on Sec. 17, living in a log house; Mr. Hill did good work with his ax and breaking plow, building up a good home, and a good and honorable name. He died Feb. 6, 1870, leaving six children—Jacob, David, Jane, Anne, Mary and Elizabeth; James Hill died before his father; Mary and her husband William Shultis are with the widow. Mr. and Mrs. H. were among the founders of the Genesee Congregational Church.

GEORGE G. HOWARD, farmer, Sec. 4; P. O. North Prairie; born in Suffolk, England, April 13, 1814; spent his younger life in his native land as a butcher; came to America in 1832 and located in Detroit, Mich., where he engaged in his business, and married, March 22, 1837, Miss Eliza Moody, of Yorkshire, England; in 1842 they came to Mukwonago and bought their farm of the Government; lived like pioneers, as they were, in a log house still standing as a memento beside the commodious frame structure, which is the reward of honest labor and care; a further reward is the 173 acres of well-fenced and improved farm land. Mr. and Mrs. Howard have seven children—Charles, Mary A., Caroline, Benjamin, Alfred, Frances and Eliza; the second son married Miss Mary J. Owens, and owns a small farm adjoining that of his father's, which he manages, devoting it to grain and stock. Mr. and Mrs. Howard are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politics independent.

MATTHEW HOWITT, miller; Mukwonago; born in Livingston Co., N. Y., Jan. 2, 1838; son of Andrew and Agnes (McKaro) Howitt, who emigrated from Scotland; Matthew attended the schools of his native county, residing there until 1856, when the family settled in the town of Lisbon; three years later he entered the flouring mill at Pewaukee, learned the business, and with B. Boorman, bought the Kellogg mill in Vernon, owned it two years, and sold it in 1864; spent a year in Sauk Co., Wis., and has since been in the milling business in Waukesha Co.; in 1878, the brothers Matthew and John Howitt, bought and now own the water-power, grist and saw-mill in Mukwonago; they also own and lease the cheese factory. The parents died in Lisbon, leaving ten children. Mr. Howitt married Mary Vass of Vernon, who died in 1872, leaving a son John W.; his present wife was Miss Mary J. Small, of Lisbon; they have two children, Belle and George Roy. Mr. Howitt is a Republican, and was Chairman of the town in 1889.

WALTER IRVING, farmer, Sec. 20; P. O. North Prairie; born in Alabama, Genesee Co., N. Y., Jan. 6, 1835; his parents, Walter and Jane (Christie) Irving, were Scotch; the father came to Wisconsin in 1846, and bought a tract of land near Madison, the family came up the lakes and joined him but did not go to Dane Co., owing to sickness, locating that fall on the present Irving homestead; a log house stood on the improved 40 acres, the other 40 acres was openings; Walter Irving, Jr., has owned the farm since 1860, added 80 acres, built a good house, basement barns, and improved generally. He married Miss Carrie E., daughter of P. F. Boss, one of the whole-souled pioneers of the county; they have three children—John P., Walter W. and Lettie S., all born on the homestead, where their grandfather died Sept. 26, 1877, aged 81; the widow lives, hale and hearty in her 82d year. The old couple were Presbyterians; father and sons Republicans in politics.

E. S. KELLOGG, miller, Mukwonago; born in 1846 in Vernon, Waukesha Co., Wis. His father, E. H. Kellogg, settled in Vernon in 1845, built a dam and saw-mill, built a grist-mill in 1856, sold to Boorman & Howitt in 1862; came to Mukwonago, and in August, 1864, bought the Mukwonago Mills; he was naturally inventive, and gave his whole time to the study of milling and milling machinery; his patent-flour bolt and his grain cleaner proving most satisfactory in their workings; he died April 17, 1876. His son, our subject, was educated in the common schools and in Milton College, learned milling with his father, and operated the Mukwonago mill for two years, renting it one year after the death of his honored father. He married Miss Caroline, daughter of John Platner, Esq.; she died May 2, 1870, leaving one daughter (Clara Louise); his present wife was Miss Luella, daughter of F. M. Payne, Esq., whom he married Dec. 24, 1878. Mr. K. is the son and grandson of practical millers; in politics he is an independent Republican.

MILES C. LOBDELL, farmer, Sec. 16; P. O. North Prairie; born in Hamburg, Erie Co., N. Y., on March 30, 1824, son of Noble and Sarah (Clark) Lobdell. After the death of his mother, his father married again, and in 1846 came to Eagle, Wis., where he died in 1862. Miles C. was educated in his native county, residing there as a farmer until May, 1848, when he came with his wife to Wisconsin; she was born in Hamburg, Erie Co., a daughter of Wray S. and Nancy Green Littlefield, both of whom died in New York State. Mr. L bought 80 acres of his present farm then in the beautiful burr oak openings of the "School Section;" beginning with little, they spent the winter of 1849-50 in a 16x22-foot house, which was merely sided up, neither lathed nor plastered, and so open that the frost could be scraped by handfuls from the inside wall on cold mornings; Mrs. L. says she often feared her children would freeze to death, but so equal was the temperature indoors and out that they did not even take cold; overhead on some loose boards were about forty bushels of onions grown as the first crop; an ox team was used for breaking the virgin soil, for marketing the produce thereof, and for all visiting, church-going, etc. Miles Lobdell well represents the sturdy "York State" settlers of that day, who came West with the fixed purpose of making a home; his improved farm of 120 acres, his roomy and tasteful farm residence, basement barn and other substantial buildings are the result and reward. Of his five sons, Marion C., Dwight B. and Hamilton M. are Iowa farmers, Eugene L. and Wray O. being on the homestead; both the daughters—Celia N. (wife of Rev. W. H. Thompson) and Sarah Belle—are dead. Mr. and Mrs. Lobdell are members of the North Prairie M. E. Church; Mr. L. is an old-time Whig-Republican; has grade stock and the usual crops; his farm was the scene of the accidental shooting of the son of Joseph Smart, in August, 1849.

WILLIAM McARTHUR, retired farmer; Mukwonago; born in Aucram, Columbia Co., N. Y., Dec. 25, 1827; his parents, Duncan and Ann (Hoag) McArthur, were also New Yorkers; Mrs. McA. died in 1834, leaving six children; the second wife, formerly Catherine VanDusen, reared four children; the family came West and settled on Sec. 26, in Mukwonago, in 1849; the father died two years later, 410 acres being divided among the heirs; William McArthur buying the interests of two brothers, and living on 197 acres of the homestead until 1862, when he settled, and has since lived, in the village. He married April 17, 1851, Miss Catherine H., daughter of George W. and Elizabeth (Hoffman) Barton; they have lost two children: Mary Alida, died Oct. 9, 1854, and George B., died Sept. 10, 1863. Mr. McArthur is a democrat; was Chairman of Mukwonago several terms, and Chairman of the County Board in 1870.

ALEXANDER MATHEWSON, deceased; born near Montrose, Scotland, in 1812; the family removed to Lanarkshire when he was 8 years old; learning the weaver's trade, he worked in Scotland until 1832, when he came to America; with a brother, he began the manufacture of cotton goods in Philadelphia, they owning a factory with ninety power-looms. He married, in the Quaker City, in 1842, Miss Mary Wilson, a native of Lanarkshire; came to Wisconsin in 1856, with three children—Mary, William and Alexander, having lost three in Philadelphia; settled on the present homestead of 172 acres, when the only buildings were a log house and stable; though a novice at farming, Mr. Mathewson made a good record, as may be seen by the improved farm, the capacious barn and tasteful home; he died in February, 1879, honored and respected, as good men always are, his old neighbors realizing that they had lost a noble-hearted friend. The daughter married William Burt, and died Feb. 26, 1878, in Buffalo Co., Wis.; the sons, born in Philadelphia, were educated here. Mrs. Mathewson enjoys good health in her 62d year; she is a member of the Genesee Presbyterian Church; the sons have a flock of 80 fine and coarse woolled sheep, with other stock.

CHRISTOPHER NIVER, farmer, Sec. 11; P. O. Mukwonago; born in the town of Livingston, Columbia Co., N. Y., in 1824; resided in his native State until June, 1848, when he came with his family to Mukwonago, buying 40 acres on Sec. 10, at $450, paying $250 down, and 12 per cent on the balance; 12 acres were broken, on which was a log house; the family of five lived the first summer in one room of this; as Mr. Niver says, they "borrowed their cooking;" that is, not owning a stove of their own. Mrs. Niver cooked in the open air on the stove of the family, who occupied the remainder of the cabin; few had less to do with or more to contend with than Mr. Niver, as he was never a strong, robust man; intelligent labor and management conquered, however, and, in 1857, he was enabled to buy 80 acres more, going in debt for every dollar of its value, and paying 100 cents on every dollar of the debt; this is now his homestead, the 26x84-foot barn, the granary, sheep-sheds, corn and hog-house, shop, etc., being ample evidence of the good work he has done here; he has also built an 18x30 addition to his house, re-sided and repainted the original, making a roomy and elegant home. He married, in 1841, Miss Sarah D., daughter of Jacob Platner, of Claverack, Columbia Co., N. Y.; they have six children—Jane E. (Mrs. Samuel Funk), Helen (Mrs. B. F. Funk), Jacob M. (married Miss Cynthia Hardy), Kate (Mrs. Daniel Silvernale), Charles S. and Louisa (the two youngest, who are on the old farm). Mr. and Mrs. Niver are Methodists; Republican in politics; having sold part, Mr. Niver now has the 80 acres bought in 1857, and 20 acres of timber in Vernon.

F. M. PAYNE, harness-maker, Mukwonago; born Jan. 10, 1820, in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., where he attained his schooling and learned his trade; coming, in 1844, to Mukwonago, he began clerking for Sewall Andrews, and, after a time, began business for himself; in 1850, he went overland to California, engaged in traveling and mining two years, returned, engaged in mercantile business two years, and has since been in the harness business, having recently added a stock of groceries. He married, in 1848, Miss Harriet Eggleston, of Guilford, Conn.; they have lost two sons and two daughters, and have two living—Alice (Mrs. G. H. Abott) and Luella (Mrs. E. S. Kellogg). Mr. Payne and wife are leading members of the Universalist Society, Mr. Payne being one of its most liberal supporters; a staunch and fearless Republican, he was Town Clerk of Mukwonago for seventeen years, and has been, for many years, and is now, Justice of the Peace; few men have been more keen observers of the changes in and progress of the Western country than he.

A. E. PERKINS, farmer, Sec. 36; P. O. Mukwonago; born in the town of Lyme, New London Co., Conn., Dec. 16, 1816; was a native of the same town, and a schoolmate of Morrison R. Waite, now Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court; leaving his native State at 18, Mr. Perkins located on Cape Cod, Mass., his mother's birthplace; spent six years here, part of the time as master of an ocean schooner, and part as a teacher; removed in 1840 to Monroe Co., N. Y., and engaged in farming with his father; in 1846, he came to Mukwonago and bought 146 acres of his present estate, at $10 per acre, settled here with his family in the spring of 1847; to sum up his work during these 33 years, we may state that his estate now comprises over 1,200 acres of as good land as Wisconsin affords, lying in a body, though it is in three counties, and four towns; on this he has expended about $10,000 for buildings, his spacious and elegant residence alone costing nearly $6,000; Mr. Perkins carries on about 560 acres, the remainder being managed by his son and son-in-law; married in Churchville, Monroe Co., N. Y., 1845, Miss Hannah E. Hadley, a native and resident of that town; her parents being New Hampshire people; Mr and Mrs. Perkins have three children, N. Louisa, Charles A. and Grace; the elder daughter married Joseph Pratt, of Perry, N. Y., who occupies part of the farm; the son married Miss Julia, daughter of O. B. Dickinson, of Mukwonago; Grace is now pursuing her musical studies in the Conservatory of Music, Boston; Mr. and Mrs. P. have, for 33 years past, been members of the Congregational Church, and were leading spirits in building and supporting the Mukwonago Church; he is a Republican, and was Chairman of the town three successive years; the family dates back about 150 years in America, a grandfather of Mr. Perkins being one of Connecticut's patriots in the Revolution; about 1850 Mr. P. bought a flock of merino ewes of Elam Beardsley, of Racine Co., one of Wisconsin's pioneer stock-men, and during the next ten years, improved his stock of sheep by purchasing and judicious breeding, paying as high as $130 for a single animal; in 1861 he went into partnership with E. S. Lake, of Saxton's River, Vt., they shipping from that State the same year a flock of 20 selected rams; the next year they invested about $4,000 in 60 rams and 15 ewes, which were placed on Mr. P's farm and rented out during the next eight years; this was the operation which gave an impetus to the now immense wool-growing interest of this section; the next importation was from the splendid flock of George Campbell, of Westminster, West Vt.; these 16 sheep were used by Mr. Perkins until 1878, when he bought a prize ram bred from Stickney's ram Centennial, which animal was awarded the $400 prize offered by Pennsylvania at the Exposition of 1876; Mr. P. usually has about 500 pure-bred sheep on his farm, and says that to his success in this business he owes most of his prosperity; illustrative of the growth of the fine-wool sheep industry, he says farmers in his vicinity, prior to his introduction of improved stock, considered four pounds a good fleece, while they are now barely satisfied with seven.

A. PLATNER, proprietor of the Mukwonago House; born in the town of Cherry Valley, Otsego Co., N. Y., April 7, 1828; lived thirty-eight years as a farmer in his native town, and was two years in a mill in Cherry Valley Village; came to Mukwonago in 1868, bought the hotel, kept it until April, 1874, leased it two years for $1,800, and has kept it since. Married Miss Sally A. Shaul, of the same town, by whom he has an only son, Aaron H., born Feb. 12, 1853, now his business partner. The Platners' are Democrats, and take much interest in breeding and owning good horses; two large barns will accommodate seventy-five horses, and the hotel is well kept and patronized; Mr. P. owns the fleet and hardy stallion, Robert Bonner, and the seven-eighth Clyde stallion, Young British Champion; his dam was by Old Farmer's Delight, he by Marquis of Clydesdale, imported from Scotland; Old Farmer's Delight took six first prizes, and Young British Champion took three in 1879; this horse weighs 1,550 pounds, stands sixteen hands and one inch high, and as a draft stallion has few equals and no superiors in the State.

JOHN PLATNER, farmer, Sec. 24; P. O. Mukwonago; born in Caverick, Columbia Co., N. Y., Nov. 2, 1811; his first farm was in Cherry Valley, N. Y.; this was exchanged for property in Hollowville, N. Y., where he owned a flaring mill; selling out, he speculated for a time, and in November, 1860, settled on his present farm of 120 acres; this farm, previously rented and well worn out, was bought by him in 1858; it was fenceless and barnless; Mr. P. has built a substantial two-story brick house, 20x30, raised and remodeled the old house, and made it a wing of the new, built substantial barns, cleared his land and made it productive, characteristic work, and well done. He married, in 1836, Miss Joanna Miller, of his native town, who died in October, 1873, leaving six children: Eva, Elizabeth, Olive, Estella, Robert and Helen L.; the third daughter, Caroline, died as the wife of E. S. Kellogg. Mr. Planter married again in October, 1876, Miss Mary, daughter of John and Mary Frazier. Mr. P. is a Republican, and was Chairman of the town; he is, with his wife, a member of the Universalist Society; he has superior half-blood Jersey cattle and a flock of seventy grade sheep.

THOMAS D. POWERS, M. D., Mukwonago; born April 8, 1824, in Adolphstown, U. C.; his father, T. H. Powers, a Vermonter, was educated in Fairfield, N. Y.; preached over fifty years as a Baptist minister; he married Ruby File, and Dr. Powers is their sixth child; he was educated in the common schools and Rochester Academy; began reading medicine with Drs. Williams and Cator, of Syracuse, N. Y., and graduated from the Homœopathic Medical Academy, of Dundee, Yates Co., N. Y., in 1851; began his practice in Broome Co., N. Y., and in 1854, came to Columbia Co., Wis.; settled in Mukwonago in 1859; enlisted in Co. D., 10th W. V. I., in September, 1861; refusing a Lieutenant's commission tendered in reward for service done in organizing the company; this regiment was under Don Carlos Buell, who was ever careful that the rebels came to no harm from his command; the Doctor met with an accident at Bowling Green, Ky., which, with an injury previously received at Rolling Forks, has resulted in partial paralysis and a most serious disorder of the circulatory and nervous system; while in the service he was special correspondent for the Evening Wisconsin and several other State papers. Dr. Powers is a Republican, and a member of Unity Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Holland City, Mich., where he resided for some time after the war. The Doctor has led an eventful life, and of late has patented some most useful inventions, still continuing to study mechanics in connection with his medical practice.

DAVID SMART, farmer, Sec. 20; P. O. North Prairie; born in Newbold, Yorkshire, Eng., Aug. 11, 1812; lived in England as a laborer until 1845, when he came with wife and two children to America; they stopped a short time with Richard Smart, in one of the first houses built in Waukesha Co., and that fall located on the Coats farm, part of which he worked two years; while here a little daughter, Sarah J., was struck by lightning and instantly killed during a midnight thunder storm; lying dead in the same bed with an elder sister, who was merely marked by the deadly fluid. In 1847, Mr. Smart settled on 85 acres of his present farm, when the only building was a log shanty, now used for a stable, it having been supplanted by a good frame house; Mr. S. has also erected barns, wind-mill, etc., he and his sons owning a half-section, including the old Perkins farm, besides a half-section in Minnesota—not a bad record for a man who reached the county with 10 sovereigns. Mr. Smart married, Dec. 24, 1834, Miss Martha Harpes, a native of South Cave, Yorkshire; they have five living children—Ann E., James, Richard, Charlotte and Franklin J.; the eldest and youngest are on the homestead, Richard is in Minnesota, James will occupy the Perkins farm, and Charlotte is married, and settled in Dallas, Barron Co., Wis.; Louisa, the third daughter, married John Francis, and died April 30, 1873, leaving four children—Arthur P., Lillian May, Franklin D. and Ainsworth; the mother and an infant brother are buried in the family burying-ground on the Joseph Smart farm. Mr. Smart and sons are Republicans.

ROMEO SPRAGUE, farmer, Secs. 30, 31 and 32; P. O. Eagle; born in Summit Co., Ohio, March 7, 1824; is a son of Dr. F. A. and Bridget Sprague, who were among the early settlers of Eagle, the Doctor building one of the first frame houses in the town, plastered both inside and out. His second son, Romeo, lived with him till he was 26, when he went overland to California; after two years, in 1852, he returned, via Panama and New York; bought a farm in East Troy, which he sold after five years, then owning and keeping the Eagle Hotel three years, also owning the present Colyer farm; again decided to try mining, and went as far West as Nebraska, before giving up his objective point, Pike's Peak; on his return he sold the hotel and farm, and bought 250 acres of his present farm; its first owner was a Mr. Stone, next H. Hammond, who improved it, followed by a Mr. Webb, next owner J. Hubbard, next David Snover, who sold to Mr. Sprague, who now has 350 acres with excellent buildings, the horse barn, hog and corn house, wind-mill, etc., having been placed here by him. He married, in 1849, Miss R. Jane Henry, a native of New York State, by whom he has six children—Mionie, Juliette, Josephine, Harriet, Gertrude, and Romeo Franklin. Mr. S. is a Democrat, has an excellent flock of Spanish merino sheep, twenty-four head of cattle, and good horses and hogs, with the usual crops.

CHARLES B. STOCKMAN, farmer; P. O. Mukwonago; born April 18, 1804, in Vergennes, Vt.; losing his father at 10, he lived with an uncle in Madrid, N. Y., for six years, "worked out" four years, then began as an employe on a St. Lawrence boat, was master of the sloop Swan for ten years, and in 1835 went to Ohio, reached Chicago in the spring of 1836, sailed on the Van Buren until July, landing and spending the "Fourth" in the bustling village of Milwaukee, a company of U. S. cavalry added to the really brilliant festivities of the occasion; Mr. S. and a Mr. Raynes owned a grocery and also a ferry, during the summer, at Milwaukee; his present farm was claimed by him in August, and he settled here and built a log house that fall. In 1840, he married Miss Lucinda Jones, a native of Madrid, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., by whom he has three children living—Mary E., William H., and Adell B.; an infant son, James, was drowned by falling into the mill-pond near them. Mr. S. supplanted the log house of 1836 with a very large and tasteful frame residence in 1850, which makes a most pleasant resting-place for one who has led so busy and eventful a life. Mr. Stockman is a Jacksonian Democrat, and was the first Assessor of Mukwonago, improvising his own blanks; he served nine years as Assessor, and was also Supervisor and Justice of the Peace.

J. M. STOCKMAN, farmer, Sec. 35; P. O. Mukwonago; born April 14, 1807, in Vergennes, Vt.; his father dying six years later, his mother removed to St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., where J. M. lived until 1832, when he settled in Ohio, remaining there until 1837, when he came to Mukwonago, claimed his farm, and two years later bought it; it lies on the bank of what was formerly called Sea-Serpent Lake, but, since 1837, Stockman Lake; on this 222-acre farm he built the third frame house in Mukwonago, sided with black walnut and roofed with oak shingles, laid by himself and Joseph Bond. In 1852, himself, wife and two children went overland to California; six months were spent in crossing the plains and mountains, an adopted daughter dying on the way; four years were spent in hotel and mercantile business, he building a large hotel in White Oak, Cal.; returning in 1856, he has since lived on his farm in Mukwonago, although he has owned property in and made many visits to Northern Wisconsin, and Minnesota. Married, Sept. 17, 1829, Miss Louisa Moss; she was born in Middlebury, Conn.; removed to and was married in St. Lawrence Co., N. Y.; their son Charles is a miller in Winnebago City, Minn., and Ralph owns a farm in Elmore, Minn. Mr. Stockman is a Republican, and, with his wife, a Baptist; he was one of the founders of, and is now Deacon and Trustee of the Mukwonago Baptist Church.

WM. E. SWAN, farmer, Sec. 7; P. O. North Prairie; was born in Suffolk, Eng., Sept. 9, 1820; was apprenticed in early life to a shoemaker; came to America and to Wisconsin in 1840; his father came to Wisconsin by way of Ohio in 1837, and bought a claim on Sec. 18, Mukwonago; father and son "bached it" here in a 10x14 shanty, doing without chairs or tables for several years; Mr. S. keeps his first chair as a memento; after improving and building upon the first location, they sold it to Geo. Henderson, then settled on his present farm of 115 acres; this he had bought of the Coates estate in 1848, has made all improvements upon it, and built up a pleasant home; has recently added 150 acres to it—the old Cox farm. Married Jan. 2, 1852, Miss Mary Duncan, of Fifeshire, Scotland; they have eleven living children—Wm. E., Thomas E., John E., Mary E., James E., Aggie E., Tina E., George E., Frank E., Walter E. and Emily E. In 1874 Mr. Swan put in a stock of goods at North Prairie, giving his eldest son charge of them, though he used to walk from his farm to the village and back, a distance of five miles, nearly every day for five years, at the end of which time his son had cleared the stock and became its owner. Mr. Swan is a Democrat and an Episcopalian.

E. T. TAYLOR, farmer, Secs. 20, 21, 28 and 29; P. O. Mukwonago. Mr. Taylor is descended from a genuine pioneer family; his grandfather, one of Connecticut's Revolutionary heroes, settled, soon after the close of the war, in Vermont; at the last stages of the journey, his brave wife, on snowshoes, carried her son, Gideon M., into that then new State, where they sometimes actually suffered hunger; G. M. Taylor grew to manhood, married Phœbe Walbridge, and, in 1829, settled on an Indian reservation in Genesee Co.; his cabin was built in a forest, so dense that the supplies were, at first, brought in to his family on his back; he was three miles from any settlement, but cut a road, cleared his farm, and, to-day this is one of the most valuable farms in the county. E. T. Taylor was born in Wolcott, Lamoille Co., Vt., Oct. 31, 1821, grew up in Genesee Co., and married in the town of Alabama, Jan. 14, 1846, Miss Isabel, daughter of Walter and Jane (Christie) Irving; they came to Waukesha Co. in the spring of 1846, with a capital of health and resolution; Mr. Taylor worked out, in 1846, rented a farm in 1847, and bought 160 acres of his present farm in 1848, borrowing $200 to make the first payment. Beginning in a log shanty, he has, from that time, made a constant march of improvement, now owning 358 acres, with a large and tasteful farmhouse for a home, which is backed up by a number of substantial barns, for the use of the herds of Durham and Jersey cattle and the splendid Spanish merinos. Mr. Taylor is a Whig-Republican, and has been since 1840, and is a Congregationalist. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have five children—Arthur I., M. Elizabeth, Warren E., Hattie I. and Homer E. Warren E. represents the fourth generation of this family of frontiersmen; he studied medicine in the State University of Wisconsin, graduated from the Chicago Medical College, and located in Downs, Osborn Co., Kan.; in July, 1879, he built the first business block in that live, new town, and is now in mercantile and banking business there.

WILLIAM WEST, farmer, Sec. 18; P. O. North Prairie; born in Yorkshire, Eng., May 6, 1810; learned the carpenter and joiner's trade, and came with his wife to America in 1834; lived in Detroit, Mich., until the summer of 1837, when he came with an ox team via Chicago to Mukwonago, buying a claim, his present homestead, on Horse Race Prairie; to pay for this claim, he borrowed $200 of A. R. Hinkley, agreeing to pay double the amount at the end of two years, at 12 per cent interest, but at the end of a year was able to settle the debt by paying $300; his first flour and pork were from Detroit, the flour costing $15 and the pork $30 per barrel; they spent the first winter in a low 10x14 feet shanty, he building, the next season, a log house, where he lived twenty years; the seed for his second crop of wheat cost him $3 per bushel, and the crop was sold in Waukesha at 35 cents per bushel. Mr. West is one of the representative pioneers of this town, now owning 290 acres in Mukwonago and Eagle, on which he has several substantial barns, the pioneer's log house having been exchanged for a roomy and substantial farmhouse; he began here with $300 or $400, a yoke of oxen and a cow. Mr. West is a Democrat, and is closely identified with the history of his town and county, having served seven or eight years as Assessor, also as Supervisor, besides serving at County Surveyor fifteen or sixteen years. Married, in 1834, Miss Elizabeth Youhill, of his native county, by whom he has five living children—Mary (Mrs. John Roberts), Anne (Mrs. Albert Hinkley), Jane, James, and Thomas W.; Hannah R. (Mrs. Richardson), and Elizabeth (Mrs. Roff), are not living. Mr. and Mrs. West are members of the Episcopal Church.

GEORGE WHITMORE, farmer, Secs. 16 and 9; P. O. North Prairie or Mukwonago; born in Lebanon, Grafton Co., N. H., June 29, 1808; is a son of John and Alice (English) Whitmore, he settled, when a young man, in Erie Co., N. Y., Buffalo being then so small a town that he knew every business man in it; in this county, Mr. Whitmore worked out, and also rented farms. Here he married; in 1840, Miss Esther, daughter of Asa and Abby Fuller, of Hamburg, in that county; in May, 1844, they settled on 240 acres of wild land on Sec. 9, Mukwonago; on this was the log house of a squatter; a Mr. Moody had hired money of Mr. Whitmore to pay for this claim, but, failing to meet the payment to Mr. Whitmore, gave up the claim to him in exchange for 40 acres and a log house; after two years in the log house, Mr. Whitmore built a frame house, where they spent two winters without its being lathed or plastered; Mrs. Whitmore relates that she had only one lady caller during her first six months' homestead residence; the Indians, following the trail to the east of Spring Lake, were neighbors whom she did not care to have call; the family settled early, and, as an evidence of its prosperity, we may state that the father and sons own 440 acres of excellent land, and that the cheerless shell of former days is exchanged for a spacious two-story house, complete and comfortable, where the old couple can recall days when wheat was hauled with ox teams to Milwaukee, and sold for 50 cents per bushel, Mr. Whitmore walking home beside his cattle to avoid freezing, and also the two years spent here when there was not a dollar in the house. They have four children living—Clara (Mrs. George Hoag, of Brooklyn, N. Y.), George, Jr., and Martin G. (both on the old homestead), and Emma A. (now with an aunt, Mrs. Groves, in Angelica, N. Y.). Mr. Whitmore is a Jacksonian Democrat, free and outspoken.

ROBERT WILKINSON, deceased; born, in 1804, in Yorkshire, Eng.; came to America in company with a brother, in 1834; remained in Canada until the spring of 1838, when he came to Mukwonago, and bought a claim; building a shanty, he and Mr. Cobb lived a bachelor's life for months; potatoes alone were their food, they splitting thousands of rails when they had hardly potatoes enough to sustain life; the first crop was burned by a prairie fire; none of the heroic men who dared the dangers and privations of frontier life suffered more than Robert Wilkinson; his wife (formerly Miss Mary Briggs), with their four children, joined him after a time; this only made a bad matter worse; the first barrel of pork cost $45, and the first barrel of flour cost $40; the children, destitute of shoes, used to husk corn on the frozen ground with old rags tied about their feet; to pay for his farm, Mr. W. hired money at 40 per cent., and paid $2 for $1 at the end of three years; his board bill, while away from home, was paid with butter, made by his devoted wife, from the milk of their only cow; Mr. Wilkinson died, in 1877, leaving eight children—Robert, Jane, Richard, Mary, Frances, William, John and Charles; the mother, at an advanced age, lives in the county. The homestead of 240 acres is now owned by William Wilkison, who was born in the log house first built here; this family was rewarded, as may be seen by the substantial brick house, capacious barns and improved farm. Mr. Wilkinson married, in January, 1866, Miss Ann Grimshaw, of Genesee, by whom he has two daughters—Myra and Cora. Is a Democrat; as a stock-breeder, has Spanish merino sheep, from flock of Perry Craig, Vernon, thirteen subject to register, and two hundred others; he also owns the thoroughbred stallion, Young Almont, 2 years old, 15½ hands high, weighing 1050 lbs.; bred by E. Blackburn, Georgetown, Scott Co., Ky.; got by Almont, dam by Brown Chief; second dam by Hooten "Tup;" the sire of Lula's dam; Lula's time, 2:14½; third dam by thoroughbred horse, Bertram; fourth dam by Imported Buzzard; dam Briggie Lee; got by Hurst's Mambrino, he by Old Mambrino Chief; dam by Alexander's Abdallah, the sire of Goldsmith Maid.

FRANK A. WOOD, merchant, Mukwonago; born, 1851, in Vernon, Waukesha Co., Wis., his parents, John and Mary Wood, removing to Mukwonago when he was an infant; after a course of study in the village school, he entered the store of Clark & Andrews, in 1868, and clerked for this and other firms, up to the time of his purchase of an interest with Mr. Andrews, in 1873. He married Miss Lillian, daughter of Edgar and Sarah Meacham, of Mukwonago; Mr. Wood is a Republican.

H. A. YOUNANS, M. D., Mukwonago; born in the town of Coeyman, Albany Co., N. Y., May 22, 1816; son of John and Almira (Hamilton) Youmans, who removed two years later to Genesee Co., N. Y.; our subject received a common-school education in the town of Java, and took an academic course in Wyoming Academy; began the study of medicine under the noted Dr. B. H. Colgrove, of Sardinia, N. Y., and attended lectures in the Geneva (N. Y.) Medical College, graduating as physician and surgeon in January, 1843; in June, 1844, the Doctor came West, visited various parts of Wisconsin, settled in Mukwonago, and has been in active practice here since; he relates that in an early day he was called to see a young man who had been crushed in a thrashing-machine, on Melendy's Prairie; Dr. Youman's improvised surgical instruments, comprised in a dirk-knife and a common buck-saw, were not needed, as the young fellow sank and died in spite of the fact that the Doctor stopped the flow of blood most effectually by a home-made tourniquet, i. e., a stout cord and stick; this is a sample of the desperate cases, showing how little the pioneers had to do with, and how much to contend with. The Doctor married, Feb. 18, 1846, Miss Lucy S., daughter of John and Betsey (Smith) Andrews; she was a native of Andover, Vt., and they have four living children—Henry M. (editor of the Freeman), Annie (Mrs. T. W. Haight), Laurel E. and L. Mabel; Augustus, the eldest, enlisted at 16 in the Union army, served out his term of enlistment, came home sick, and died a week later. Dr. Youmans is a genuine type of the old settler, and has had a longer term of practice than almost any other physician in the State; he is an old-line Whig-Republican; was formerly Chairman, etc., of his town, and was a member of the hard-working, historic and fearlessly patriotic Legislature of 1861; the Doctor is also an old and tried Odd-Fellow.

Nehs, in 1846. He married, in Menomonee, Elizabeth Kronse; she was born in Armstedt, Germany, in 1839; they have four children—Ida, Mary, Owen and Albert. Mr. Nehs owns a pleasantly located and finely improved farm, adjacent to the village of Menomonee Falls. He is public spirited, and takes an active part in promoting the religious, educational and other interests of the village and town; he has been engaged in carrying on saw-mill in Menomonee Falls several years, and has a large run of work.

J. B. NEHS, proprietor of the Menomonee Flouring Mills, Menomonee Falls; was born in Bucks Co., Penn., Jan. 2, 1808. June 21, 1837, he married, in Lehigh Co., Penn., Sarah Jacoby, a native of that county; in 1849, they came to Wisconsin, purchased land where the village of Menomonee Falls now is, and have made that village their home since. In 1851-52, Mr. Nehs erected his large stone flouring-mills, in the village of Menomonee Falls, they being the first flouring-mills in the town of Menomonee; the mill is a massive stone structure, four stories high, and containing every facility for the making of the best grades of flour; the custom work alone, without taking into account the vast quantity of flour shipped, amounts to over 37,000 bushels of wheat yearly. Mr. Nehs is one of the oldest citizens of Menomonee Falls now residing there; he has always been identified with the business as well as the educational and religious interests of the village, and their present prosperity is, in a great measure, due to his liberality and enterprise.

THOMAS J. PALMER, farmer, Sec. 5; P. O. Menomonee Falls; is a native of Norfolk, England; was born May 15, 1830; when he was 7 years of age, his parents emigrated to this country, and settled in Genesee Co., N. Y., where his father, James Palmer, died, and his mother married W. B. Bradley; they came to Wisconsin in 1843, the subject of this notice, Thomas J. Palmer, coming with them; he lived in Racine Co. one year, then came to the town of Menomonee, where he married Mary Gray, daughter of Anson Gray, who was an early settler of Germantown, Wis.; she was born in Dorset, Vt.; they have four children—Anson G., William B., Alice F. and Mark. Mr. Palmer owns a desirably located and well improved farm.

R. S. ROWE, of the firm of Rowe & Webb, proprietors of the Menomonee Falls Pump Factory; was born in Chautauqua Co., N. Y., in 1821; in 1837, he came to Wisconsin with his parents, Abner and Mary Rowe; they lived in Milwaukee until 1839, then moved to Menomonee, where they both died; during his life, he was eminently identified with the public interests, and was elected to various offices. During the war of the rebellion, the subject of this notice, R. S. Rowe, served in Co. A, 28th W. V. I., and was honorably discharged at the close of the war. He has filled the office of Chairman of the Menomonee Town Board two terms; was Justice of the Peace several years; he is Secretary and District Deputy of Menomonee Lodge, No. 227, I. O. O. F., being an active member of that Lodge since its organization, in 1873; he is Worthy Chief of the I. O. G. T., and has been permanently identified with the organization and growth of that order since 1859, which year it was organized, in Menomonee Falls. Mr. Rowe has been three times married; his present wife was Mary Barnes, daughter of William Barnes, a pioneer settler of this county; Mr. Rowe's children are Abner S., now in Custer City, Dakota; Mary A., wife of H. Fox, Waukesha; William H. and Ellen. Messrs. Rowe & Webb manufacture a superior pump, and are meeting with flattering success in their business.

IRA B. ROWELL, of the firm of I. B. Rowell, G. W. Rowell and C. K. Schlafer, proprietors of the Menomonee Falls Agricultural Works; was born in Naples, Ontario Co., N. Y., Jan. 19, 1833; came to Wisconsin with his parents, Ira and Maria Rowell, in 1843; they settled in the town of Lisbon, where they still reside, old and honored residents. Ira B., the subject of this notice, has been twice married; his first wife was Elizabeth Osborn; his present wife was Louisa Chipman; they have two children, Mabel and Harry. Mr. Rowell has been engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements over twenty years, and therefore has a wide experience in that line, which enables him to successfully compete with any manufactory in the Northwest; he has recently associated with him G. W. Rowell and C. K. Schlafer, gentlemen of rare business qualifications, and thoroughly conversant with the manufacturing business in all of its details; they manufacture the "Peekskill Plow," Nos. 19½-20-21; Lord's Improved Plow, No. 13; the Badger, No. 4, and the improved E plow, with steel moldboard; these plows have been thoroughly tested, and found to have superior advantages; they also make the Rowell Horse Hoe and Cultivator, with stationary or slip tooth; this is a superior implement for the cultivation of fallow ground; Ira B. Rowell & Co. have made quite a number of improvements in the making of agricultural implements; they use none but the best material, which, combined with their special facilities and large experience, enables them to produce a quality of goods that less experience and old-time methods cannot attain to.

JACOB L. SCHLAFER, of the firm of E. L. Nehs, Schlafer & Co., proprietors of steam saw-mill, Menomonee Falls; is also engaged in farming; he was born in Germantown, Washington Co., Wis., in 1845; his parents were Jacob and Katie Schlafer, natives of Germany, who emigrated to this country and were among the first to settle in Washington Co., Wis., March 28, 1872. TOWN OF VERNON.

HIRAM AUSTIN, farmer, Sec. 17 ; P. O. Mukwonago ; born in Columbia Co., N. Y., in 1827 ; son of Alson and Annie Austin, also New Yorkers ; the family of six came to Wisconsin, and in the spring of 1846, settled on the Austin homestead ; at this time, the grave of an Indian squaw was indicated in the timbers on this farm by a gayly painted post, it being among the roots of four trees around it ; the family began clearing the timber on the first 75 acres, and cut the trees spoken of ; the results of the thirty-four years occupying by the Austins of this farm may be seen in the 141-acre farm, well fenced and mostly cultivated, a small but good house and a substantial basement barn built 1879 ; Alson A., died in September, 1876 ; his wife having died in 1849. Hiram Austin enlisted August, 1864, in the 3d W. V. C. ; the regiment was at Little Rock, Ark., doing scouting duty until March, 1865, when a squad of forty were sent to surprise and capture a party of " Johnnies " thirty-five miles from Pine Bluff ; they arrived early in the morning, but found the enemy ready, and waiting to fire the first volley which killed the Union Captain ; the rebels then made a dash for our boys and captured Mr. A. and seven others ; he was kept two months at Camden, Ark., and Shreveport, La. ; was paroled, exchanged and rejoined the regiment ; he reached home after eleven months of stirring military life. In the spring of 1850, Mr. Austin married Miss Maria A. David, a native of New York State, by whom he has had six children—Alson H., John H., Asa A., William C., George M. and Louis D. Mr. Austin is a Democrat. In conclusion, we may say that the Indian grave was forgotten after the protecting stumps of the old trees decayed, and was found by William C. Austin while plowing the field in the spring of 1880, his plow struck the skull, and the entire skeleton was discovered, the skull and several of the bones now being kept by Mr. A. as curiosities.

REV. JOHN S. BALDWIN, farmer, Secs. 7, 8 and 18 ; P. O. Vernon ; was born Dec. 5, 1814, in Susquehanna Co., Penn. ; learned harness-making in early life, and, having united with the Baptist Church of his forefathers, began study at 20, in the Hamilton (N. Y.) Theological Seminary ; was ordained at 22, and during the next eight years worked to the best of his ability for God, and the cause of human freedom, by both sermons and public lectures. In 1844, he located in Vernon, and the next year went to East Troy ; 1846 found him in Mukwonago ; here he rented a farm, preaching alternately in the old Baptist Church in Mukwonago, and the old square-log schoolhouse in Vernon ; and prior to the war delivered many a stirring lecture to alleviate the wrongs of the slave ; since the war, he has preached the war, but has done good work in the temperance cause, and preached the funeral sermon of many of the old settlers and early friends around him, who usually request it among their last wishes ; besides his able lectures on temperance, the Elder does all he can to forward the cause at the polls, thus securing the election of a Prohibition ticket in Vernon, 1877, and brought to punishment several violators of the law that year. The Elder is an old-time Abolitionist-Whig-Republican, serving for many years as both Town Superintendent of Schools and one of the Supervisors, and is active enough to take the census of 1880, as the Deputy United States Marshal in Vernon ; he has 256 acres of land and a good home. The Elder married in his and her native county, Miss Polly West ; they had seven children—Henrietta, Eveline, Alfred, Leander, Susie and R. H. ; the eldest son, Leonidas, enlisted in Col. Daniel's 1st W. V. C., and died a few months after at Kenosha, Wis.

ROYAL L. BAYLEY, mechanic and Postmaster, Dodge's Corners ; born July 22, 1814, in Derby, Orleans Co., Vt. ; learned the cooper's trade in Windsor, Vt. On the 14th of September, 1841, he married Miss Eliza Hammond, of Windsor, they leaving for Wisconsin on the same day ; they spent the winter with relatives here, he buying 50 acres of John Dodge, on which he built in the spring of 1841 a ribbon house, or a house of oak strips nailed one upon the other; Mr. B. also built a shop and worked many years at his trade, also, as carpenter and joiner; he was first appointed Deputy Postmaster, by John Dedge, and served thus until 1855, when he received the appointment and has since served. His wife died in 1869, leaving five children—Haller H., James L., Thomas F., Mary E. and John D.; the eldest is in Atchison, Kan.; J. L. is in Washington Territory; Thomas F. is a farmer in Vernon; the daughter resides in Racine County; and the youngest son is on the homestead of 128 acres. Mr. Bayley married again, Miss Susan Story, of Windsor, Vt. He is a staunch Republican, served as Town Clerk many years in succession, also Supervisor, etc.; he has a large and pleasant farmhouse for his home, which was completely remodeled in 1866; he is the inventor of a new and somewhat novel way of laying stone walls for buildings, etc, by which the wall is "pointed up" at the time the wall is laid.

JAMES BEGG, farmer, Sec. 12; P. O. Vernon; born in Ayrshire, Scotland, July 15, 1810; when he was 8 years old, his parents emigrated and settled in New York State; here Mr. Begg spent his younger life, and was educated, and married Miss Janet Espie; her parents left Glasgow, her native city, and in 1818 or 1820 settled in New York City, where her father carried on business, and she was educated; they removed to Caledonia in 1829; in 1841, Mr. B., wife and eldest son, settled in Pewaukee, and spent the winter; the next spring Mr. B. bought two eighties or his present farm, one of a Mr. Farr and one of J. C. Snover, now County Judge; an acre cleared and a log house was all he bought with the farm, which is now one of the best in Vernon, with a handsome two-story farmhouse and substantial barns built on it; Ms. B. was the first Scotchman to vote in this town, and had some exciting adventures with wildcats, etc., in early times; none of the early settlers here saw more of sorrow or heartache; they have had six children, viz.: James, who served as a brave Union soldier, and died after the war; John, the second son, born March 18, 1843, is the only one living, and is now on the homestead; Margaret, the third, and the two youngest Willie and Mary (twins) all died within a few days of each other, in May, 1857, and were buried in one grave; Thomas, the fourth of the children, grew up to manhood, and died Dec. 13, 1866, aged 19; Mr. and Mrs. Begg have been members of the United Presbyterian Church since the organization of the society, he serving three or four years as Elder; his farming is most successful, the farm now containing 170 acres. Mr. B. says he raised the first turkeys in Vernon in 1842.

IRA BLOOD (deceased). Among the well-remembered pioneers of the southwest part of the county was this gentleman, who was born in Hollis, N. H., Dec. 30, 1811; his parents, Isaac and Elizabeth Blood, settled in Andover, Vt., soon after; at 15 he went to sea with an uncle, but in consequence of an accidental fall, was so injured as to abandon sea-faring life; he then began clerking at Weston, Vt., which business he followed at various points in New England; entering Chester Academy, he attended several terms, and in May, 1836, in company with Martin Fields, left for Chicago. During the summer he and Fields were engaged in surveying here, and the following October made their first visit to the Indian village of Mequonago, reaching it by way of Milwaukee and Waukesha; soon after they were employed by the three proprietors to survey out the village plat; after this, Mr. Blood made a claim on Sec. 31, in Vernon, and built a sham log house to hold it; in December following, he and Mr. Fields returned on foot to Chicago, going from there to Hennepin, Ill., where Mr. B. taught a winter term of school, returning to his claim in the spring of 1837, on which he lived until the fall of 1839, when he returned to Vermont and married, in Chester Miss Esther P., daughter of Josiah and Esther Jordan; her father was a native of Brookline, Mass., and her mother of Chester, Vt., where Mrs. Blood was born and educated, though her early life was spent in Jefferson and St. Lawrence Counties, N. Y.; the bridal tour was made to Mr. Blood's Vernon claim, where his parents awaited them. Mr. B. now devoted all his energies to his profession, and was often absent from home for weeks together on this business; he also surveyed Kneeland's Addition to Milwaukee, and much of the west part of Racine Co.; in 1858, he was elected County Surveyor and member of the Legislature over L. Martin; two years before this were spent in Mukwonago, in mercantile business, lumber business, and as a teacher; he also taught in an early day in the old log house of Mr. Hough, and served several terms as town Superintendent of Schools. A staunch advocate of Temperance, he delivered many a stirring lecture to further that cause; but all his labors were ended on the 22d of February, 1868, his death causing a feeling of sincere grief throughout the county where he was known by all to be an upright and energetic man, ever ready to lend a helping hand to aid any enterprise calculated to benefit mankind. His widow, now a resident of Mukwonago, furnished most of the above facts, and others regarding the school taught by her during the winter of 1839-40, when G. W. Lucy, Wix and Cornelia Munge, E. B., Elizabeth, Sarah, Frances and Augusta Thomas, Addison Resique, Theo., Samuel and Monroe Payne, and Evalina Masters were her pupils among others. Mr. Blood left four children—Isaac, Edward J., Elizabeth C. and Rosanna F.; the eldest now owns the homestead of 410 acres, 160 of which was claimed by his honored father in 1836; E. J. was in the U. S. Naval Service during the war and now lives in Chicago; E. C. is now Mrs. W. A. Gault and R. F. is the wife of A. D. Hager. Mr. Blood was a steadfast Republican of Abolition antecedents, and was County Surveyor at his death.

DUNCAN CAMERON, farmer, Secs. 8 and 17; P. O. Vernon; was born in Caledonia, Livingston Co., N. Y., March 26, 1817; is a son of Duncan A. and Sarah (McCall) Cameron; his father emigrated from Scotland about eighty years ago and his mother a few years later; they were married in Caledonia in 1812 and had ten children—Hugh, Duncan, Mary, Kate, Daniel, Angus, Dugal, Charles, Alexander and Margaret; Dugal and Daniel were both successful physicians in Wisconsin, while Hugh, Angus and Alexander, all lawyers, located at La Crosse, where Angus and Hugh still reside; Alexander and Dugal were both in the U. S. service during the war, Alexander dying at the old Caledonia home while Dugal was drowned in the Mississippi at LaCrosse; Angus has now nearly completed his term as U. S. Senator from Wisconsin. Duncan, the only farmer in the family, was the first of these noted brothers to locate in Wisconsin, and was an early settler in Vernon, which he reached in October 1841; he was educated in Lima Seminary, "a good old Methodist school," as he says; his first night in Vernon was spent in Asa A. Flint's old log tavern, and ten days later he bought his homestead; building a log house he "bached it" until June 19, 1845, when he married Miss Mary, daughter of Porter Daniels, of Manchester, Conn.; she was a most worthy wife, and at her death, Aug. 4, 1879, left him three children—Charles, Jane and George; the eldest is a resident of Yankton, D. T., and ere this is printed will have married Miss Sarah Jakinson, now of Yankton, formerly of Coony; Jane is Mrs. L. Baldwin, a resident of Glendale, Monroe Co, Wis; George is now on the old homestead of 180 acres, which is mainly under cultivation. Mr. Cameron is a Republican of Greenback proclivities, and has assessed the town fifteen times; perhaps no one in the county can equal this; he has also served as Justice of the Peace a number of terms; was one of the founders and a leading member of the Vernon U. P. Church.

PERRY CRAIG, farmer, Sec. 32; P. O. Caldwell's Prairie, Racine Co., Wis.; Mr. Craig is a native of Hamburg, Erie Co., N. Y.; born Jan. 12, 1819; his early life was spent and his education attained in his native State; being left fatherless when but 8 years of age, as may be seen, Mr. C.'s success in life is owing solely to his own efforts; January, 1841, found him in Milwaukee, Wis., with 2 cents in his pocket, he having made the winter trip on horseback; leaving Milwaukee, dinnerless, he rode to Mukwonago, and made this town his residence for five years; a carpenter by trade, his work in early times was in building the old hotel of J. H. Camp, the house of Judge Feilds, the saw and flouring mills at Saylesville, etc. Married Miss Maria L., daughter of Asa Hollister (a pioneer of '38"), and in the spring of 1846, began on 80 acres of his present farm, of this, perhaps 20 were somewhat improved, the 16x20 oak-boarded house comprising the buildings; rewarded by thirty-four years of intelligent labor here, Mr. Craig now owns 240 acres, with 20 of marsh in Racine Co., a substantial stone farmhouse replacing the shanty of 1846, which is now a stable; his farm was the scene of a well remembered fire years ago, his barn and sheds burning to the ground in spite of the efforts of the people, who left the church in the village to aid him, the fire occurring on Sunday; the new barn, built in 1871, is 32x42, with basement and roomy sheds attached. Mr. and Mrs. Craig have five children—Pascal L., Asa H., Francis D., Sylvius S. and Bertie W., the eldest born in Mukwonago, and the others on the homestead; Alice, the only girl, died when 10 years old; the eldest is a graduate of Rush Medical College, and one of the first settlers and most successful practitioners in Alamosa, Colo., he also having a drug store and mining interest there; Asa H., born Dec. 19, 1847, was educated at Albion Academy, Dane Co.; is author and publisher of "The Common School Question Book," "Parliamentary Practice," etc.; served as County Superintendent of Instruction in 1875, and is now one of the Supervisors of Vernon, and Secretary of the W. G. and S. B. Association; is intending to locate in Greeley, Colo., and to become one of the representative sheep-growers of that State; Francis D. is now editor of the East Troy Gazette, a six-column weekly, with a subscription list of 550. Perry Craig is better known than almost any other member of the Southeastern Wisconsin Sheep Breeders' and Wool Growers' Association, of which he was one of the fathers, and its most faithful Secretary for many years; he has also been Assessor, Collector, Supervisor and Chairman, lacking only one vote of representing his district in the Legislature of 1866; is a Democrat, and favors the greenback. In 1853, Mr. Craig bought a flock of the famous Atwood sheep, of Allen Shepard; has constantly devoted himself to the work of improving his flock since that time; "Capt. Jack," bred by Millen, heads his flock of 175 noble animals, fleeces of which averaged fourteen pounds in 1879.

LEONARD DANIELS, farmer, Sec. 8; P. O. Vernon; is a son of Porter and Cleantha Daniels, and was born in Coventry, Herkimer Co., N. Y., April 21, 1840; Porter Daniels was born March 17, 1803, in East Windsor, Hartford Co., Conn.; his early life was spent in the "Nutmeg State," working in the paper mills, and as a manufacturer of the time-honored Connecticut clocks, at Bristol. He married, in 1825, Miss Cleantha Carpenter, and in 1843, came with his family to Wisconsin, reaching Vernon in June; here he bought 80 acres of Uncle Sam, which he sold to Amos Goff after five years, and bought the present homestead on Sec. 8; Mr. D. has built two log and two frame houses in Wisconsin, and did the best of work as one of the early settlers, so that his present retirement is merited. His faithful wife died in November, 1879, at the age of 74, leaving six children—Mary, late wife of Duncan Cameron; Edwin H., Watson, Henry, Jane (Mrs. Isaac Sharp) and Leonard; E. H. is a leading merchant of St. Croix Co., Wis.; Henry has been, for thirteen years, in business in Vernon; Watson and Leonard are on the homestead; Leonard Daniels has spent his life and been educated in Vernon, where he also engaged in business for a number of years. He married, in September, 1867, Miss Caroline Kells, a resident of Mukwonago, and a native of New York; they have two children—Cymbria and Porter H. The farm of 120 acres is now owned by the brothers, Leonard and family living in the pleasant farmhouse built by his father, and is now raising and remodeling the barn. In politics, Mr. D. is a Greenbacker.

JOHN DARLING, farmer, Sec. 12; P. O. Big Bend; is the eldest son of John and Elizabeth (Wight) Darling, and was born May 11, 1824; his mother died in September, 1843, in Scotland, leaving three sons—John, James and Thomas all born in Berwickshire; the father married again to Miss Susan Bertram, by whom he had five children—Peter, David, Elizabeth, Catherine and Andrew; in 1849, the family emigrated, and settled in Vernon, buying the homestead of 148 acres and 20 of marsh; John Darling, Sr., died June 7, 1872, leaving a record which is an example to all; he was a native of Berwickshire, and lived and died a member of the United Presbyterian Church; he was a Republican, as are all his sons; his eldest son has proven a worthy successor to the homestead with its substantial house and barns; the old farm was, in early times, a forest, 120 acres now being under cultivation; his stepmother is still with him. Mr. Darling has served twice as Supervisor of Vernon and is one of her substantial farmers.

THOMAS DARLING, farmer and carpenter, Sec. 14; P. O. Big Bend; born June 13, 1830, in Berwickshire, Scotland; he is the son of John and Elizabeth (Wight) Darling; the family came to America and settled on Sec. 12, in Vernon, in 1849; Thomas Darling learned both the carpenter and mason's trade without help of any kind; he has done most of the mason work on the County Poor Farm, built the houses of William Sharp, W. R. Harris and others, having worked at his trade every summer for twenty years; Mr. Darling spent the winter of 1849 in Ohio and Kentucky, and the next summer in New York; he owns 51 acres in Vernon and a pleasant home. He married Miss Elizabeth Purvis, of Berwickshire, by whom he has six children—Elizabeth, Susan, Crissie, Mary, John and William. Mr. Darling is a Republican and served many years as Supervisor, and in 1872 and 1873 as Town Treasurer; he is a member with his wife of the United Presbyterian Church. (For further history of the family, see biography of John Darling.)

JAMES DARLING, farmer, Sec. 11; P. O. Vernon; born in Berwickshire, Scotland, in 1827; his early life was spent at farming; his father, John Darling, emigrated to the United States with his family in 1849; there being three sons by the first wife, viz.: John, James and Thomas; the family settled on Sec. 12, in Vernon, James Darling going two years later to Michigan, working three years in the pineries. He married in Michigan, January, 1853, Miss Elizabeth Harris, a sister of W. R.; she was born in Anglesea, Wales, in 1854; he returned and bought his farm of 75½ acres; of this, 20 acres were poorly broken and improved, the remainder being mostly timber and brush; the old log house of this day is replaced by a substantial frame one, and the entire farm reclaimed; Mr. and Mrs. Darling have four living children—John, Rowland, Jennie and Thomas; the first born, a daughter Elizabeth, married William Killips, and died in 1872. Mr. Darling and wife are members of the United Presbyterian Church, he having united at 18 years of age, and serving many years as a Trustee; he is Independent in politics and was twice elected Town Treasurer on the peoples' ticket.

AMOS GOFF, farmer, Sec. 10 and 3; P. O. Vernon; born in Burlington, Otsego Co., N. Y., May 16, 1806; his early life was spent in Oswego Co., N. Y., where he obtained his schooling; he began teaching at 19 years of age and taught ten or twelve terms. He married, in Onondaga Co., N. Y., Miss Mary Sayles, and in 1844, removed to Wisconsin, he buying 80 acres of the openings of Vernon; they began life here in a primitive fashion, Mrs. Goff cooking in a cauldron kettle hung out of doors, and washing half a mile from home, beside a brook in Mr. Clifton's woods; money due Mr. Goff was finally sent him, so that he bought a cook stove and an ox team; the worst of fortune attended his early efforts, as he lost two good oxen by death; during the first winter here, Mr. Goff chopped 9 acres, though he found it hard work, and the next season planted it to corn which his young sons kept clean with hoes, finding that still harder ; by exchanging days' work, Mr. Goff gradually added to his clearing, living meanwhile in a most comfortable log house ; he now has 135 acres, a tasteful and pleasant home, and he has had a family of eleven children—Emily (Mrs. Henry Colyer), Elisha, Dorr Wallace, Ann (Mrs. James Stuart), Mary (Mrs. Mark Ehle), Amos Jr., Clentha, Aurelia C. (Mrs. Charles Perry), Samuel D., and Chauncy ; the three oldest sons were Union soldiers, Elisha serving most of the time in the Far West, Wallace earning a Lieutenants commission, and Dorr dying in a Nashville hospital ; Mr. Goff is a Universalist and a radical advocate of the greenback ; he was formerly a Republican and a man whose heart, purse and sons were for the Union.

WILLIAM R. HARRIS, farmer, Sec. 11 ; P. O. Vernon ; is a native of Anglesea, Wales ; born in 1815 ; was from boyhood a farmer ; emigrated to America in 1852 ; spent three years in Michigan, then came to Wisconsin, locating near Janesville ; after a few months, bought his present farm of 100 acres ; since this, he has returned several times to Michigan, engaging in the pineries, but has done the best of work on his farm during these twenty-five years, building a roomy farmhouse in place of the shanty of early times ; his barn was built by A. Webster, the former owner of the farm. Mr. Harris married Miss Jane Lewis, of Anglesea ; their children, Rowland and Jane, were born in Wales ; are both in Menomonee, Mich., Jane being the wife of Samuel Stevenson, one of the leading lumber manufacturers there, he owning two saw-mills and turning out from forty to fifty million feet of lumber per annum. Mr. Harris is a man who has led a quiet and honorable life, and generally succeeded. He is an Independent Democrat.

JAMES HAY, deceased ; born in Perthshire, Scotland ; about 1840, he came to America, and in 1851 married Mrs. Barbara Smith ; they soon removed from New York to Wisconsin, Mr. Hay having owned the homestead in Vernon for several years ; Mr. Hay built here a small log house, and made a good beginning for his family. He died four years later, leaving four children, all of whom were attacked with that dread disease, diphtheria, and gave up their young lives within a few days ; it was a crushing blow to follow the death of her husband, but she bravely resumed her Cross, and, ably seconded by her only son, James Smith, made her farm and home what it is. This lady was born in Inverness-shire, Scotland, and married her first husband, Robert Smith, in Glasgow ; he died in 1849, after a residence of three years in Livingston County, N. Y. ; his only son, James, was born in Kilsythe, Scotland ; married Miss Jane, daughter of William Evans, and is now in charge of the homestead ; has two children—Barbara J., and an infant. A tasteful and pleasantly located farmhouse has replaced the old-time log house, and substantial barns built. His honored mother looks back with a feeling of mingled sorrow and pride over her varied experiences in Wisconsin. She is a member, with Mrs. Smith, of the U. P. Church.

HOLLIS HOLLISTER, farmer, Sec. 28, 29 and 20 ; P. O. Dodge's Corners ; is a son of Asa and Almira Hollister, and was born in the town of Barford, Canada, in 1832 ; the family came to Vernon in the fall of 1839 ; Asa H. being the first blacksmith in the town ; he bought 80 acres of Government land in 1840, and also ten cows, which ran at large in the openings around them. Asa Hollister was a pioneer, and a successful one, as he left at his death, in 1858, a section of land on which he had built a substantial house and good barns ; there were seven children—Maria, Mariette, Jane, Emmeline, Roxina, Hollis and Adelaide ; the only son is a worthy follower of his father's honored footsteps ; he also having erected buildings and improved the farm. Married Miss Esther, daughter of Thomas and Mary Clark, of Vermont, by whom he has four children—Alfred, Orra, Mary and Rose. Mr. Hollister is a Greenbacker, Justice of the Peace for the second time, and has held minor offices. Has 500 acres and owns 500 fine-wool sheep, 21 of which are registered ; he being a leading member of the Wool-Growers and Sheep-Breeders' Association, has bought and bred from the flocks of breeders like Perry Craig, A. E. Perkins, J. H. Paul, etc., also of Farnham and Burchard, of Vermont.

HENRY HUNKINS, farmer, Secs. 4 and 5 ; P. O. Vernon ; was born May 8, 1830, at Danville, Vt. ; his infancy was passed at Lancaster, N. H., to which point his parents removed when he was an infant ; in 1837, the family, intending to go to Illinois, were prevented by adverse winds on Lake Michigan, and obliged to land at Milwaukee ; nearly all they had was paid in passage money, and, after a few weeks spent in Milwaukee, they located in the town of Waukesha, and spent the summer, Mr. Hunkins making a claim in New Berlin, and building a one-story bark-roofed home, 14x18, using only an augur and ax in its construction ; windows were apertures cut in the logs and hung with blankets ; a huge stone fire-place with a stick and mud chimney completed a home, and, says Mr. Hunkins, the son of the builder, "we enjoyed ourselves here through the long winter evenings, reading by the firelight." Too poor to buy a team, Mr. H. cut away the small trees, and girdled the large ones, then sowed an acre of wheat, and actually covered the grain with a hoe. The son remembers tramping over an Indian trail to M. D. Cutler's place to help his poor but plucky sire to dig potatoes prior to 1840 ; $20 of Mr. H.'s hard earnings proved counterfeit money when presented by him in Milwaukee. Such a beginning is sure of a reward, and in 1839, he sold out the claim for $200, and then bought the farm on the Mukwonago road, where he died, an honored veteran pioneer, Jan. 1, 1866; his wife followed him in October, 1878. The son received most of his education among the trees around his early home, hard work and poverty being his teachers; attaining his majority, his father gave him 40 acres, which he cleared of heavy timber; selling it about 1864 and buying the old Webster farm in Vernon. He married, at 24, Miss Polly St. John, a native of New York State, who died on the Webster farm, leaving two children—James H. and Rebecca P. In 1866, he married Miss Margaret, daughter of William Beggs, a pioneer of Waukesha Township, where she was born; they have seven children—Charles, Sarah F., Ernest, George, William, Nettie and Herbert. Mr. H. is an Independent in politics, and a progressive farmer; he has owned his present farm of 230 acres since 1869, and made lasting improvements upon it.

THOMAS HOWIE, deceased; was born in 1811, in Ayrshire, Scotland. In 1836, he married Miss Mary Morton, who was born in 1813, in the parish of Galston, Ayrshire; Mr. Howie engaged for three years in the mercantile business in Kilmarnock, and in 1839 emigrated to America; three years of toil near Inverness, N. Y., enabled him to earn money enough to make a start in Vernon, where he bought a farm of 80 acres, adding 40 and doing good work; Mr. Howie making a never-to-be-forgotten record here, as he was a founder and leading member of the U. P. Church, the society being organized at his house; he also donated the site of the church, and was so loved as to make his memory dear to all. As a Christian gentleman of generosity and honor, his death, in 1858, was much deplored. He left five children—Janet, John, Thomas, Matthew and David. Mary (Mrs. James Mais) died a few days before her father; John, one of the 28th W. V. I., died in a St. Louis hospital; Janet is Mrs. John Purvis, of Vernon; Thomas is a farmer and stock dealer at Big Bend; Matthew is a butcher at Sioux Falls; David remaining on the homestead, he having married Miss Ellen McKenzie, of Vernon. The farm of 252½ acres was well managed by Mrs. Howie after her husband's death, having but little help during the first few lonesome years; as an evidence of her ability we notice the handsome residence and substantial barn built by her.

JOHN A. MCKENZIE, farmer, Sec. 1; P. O. Vernon; born in Caledonia, Livingston Co., N. Y., Feb. 18, 1823; his younger life was spent in his native State; on the 20th of May, 1843, he landed at Milwaukee, and the next day left for Vernon, passing the site of Waukesha on the way, and well remembers seeing cattle grazing on the same turf now trod by the pleasure-seekers of the noted watering place; after a month spent in traveling over the county, he became homesick and would gladly have returned East, but did not have the means; so rolling up his sleeves he went to work in Mukwonago at $10 per month, and worked in the neighboring country part of the time as a thrasher for the next ten years; he then decided to go to California via the Nicaragua route, but on reaching that land of fever and death, learned of the wreck of the Golden Gate, and resolved to give up his dreams of wealth in the mines, and to return to Wisconsin and dig it out of its fertile soil. He not long after bought the farm and married the daughter of his former employer, Robert Weir; Mr. McKenzie had worked for seven or eight years for Mr. Weir, who was a well-known but unfortunate pioneer, whose daughter Margaret E., born in Caledonia, is now Mrs. McKenzie and the mother of seven children—Elizabeth, Mary J., Ellen S., John E., Janet, Flora A. and Margaret A; the youngest daughter, Mabel, died Feb. 10, 1880, aged 4. Mr. McKenzie has 156 acres, well improved, which was in a semi-cultivated state when he bought it, a log house comprising the buildings; he afterward built a frame house which is now overshadowed by an elegant residence, built in 1871, of the famous Cream City brick. Mr. McKenzie is a Republican; and has been one of the Town Board a number of years. His wife and daughters are members of the U. P. Church.

PETER MCKENZIE, farmer, Sec. 15; P. O. Vernon; born in Caledonia, Livingston Co., N. Y., Oct. 1, 1829; he spent his early life in "York State," and when a boy of 18, came to Waukesha Co., having spent a year as a clerk in Washington Co. In March, 1850, Mr. McKenzie joined a party of fifteen others and made the memorable six months' trip to California, crossing the plains with oxen; after five years in the mines of the Golden Gate, he returned via Panama and New York City to Wisconsin; in 1856, he bought 120 acres of his present farm, of which 15 or 20 were improved, and on which was a log house, the remainder being heavy timbers, among which he did the best of work, chopping and logging, breaking and fencing; he has added 70, acres and has to reward these twenty-five years of honest toil an improved farm, with the best of buildings; the main barn is 34x52, 18-foot posts with basement; in 1874, he supplanted the log house with a handsome two-story brick, with all modern improvements. His is not a bad record for a man who, thirty-three years ago, reached Barton, Washington Co., penniless and supperless. He married Miss Mary J., daughter of Robert Weir, by whom he has nine children—Frank A., James A., Ellen M., Robert, Clarence, William, Sarah J., Margaret C. and an infant. Mr. McKenzie is a Republican, and has usually refused all office, though he has been both Supervisor and Assessor, and a school district officer over twenty years in succession.

FINDLEY McNAUGHTON, farmer, Sec. 12 ; P. O. Vernon ; born in Johnstown, Montgomery Co., N. Y., Dec. 30, 1810 ; his early life was spent in Genesee County ; at 15, he settled in Canandaigua, residing there until 1847, when he came to Wisconsin, reaching Vernon that fall with wife and family ; had previously bought what is now the county farm, of John Post, its original owner ; in 1856, Mr. McNaughton, having been Chairman of his town for three years, was appointed Overseer of the Poor Farm, then located in the town of Waukesha ; a few years later, the county rented Mr. McNaughton's farm, he having charge of it, and erecting most of the buildings upon it, until 1872, when he resigned and sold the farm to the county ; he did more than any man in the county to secure the care of the poor by the county while on the County Board for three years ; prior to this, he was engaged for three years in Weir's saw-mill at Big Bend, as head-sawyer, book-keeper and engineer ; in 1851, was elected to the Legislature over no less popular an opponent than Jesse Smith, who was often his opponent for office. Mr. McNaughton has had thirteen children by two marriages—Margaret, Malcolm (deceased), John (deceased), Christie A., Samuel M., Findley J., William A., Mary (deceased), James and Archibald A. By the present wife, who was Miss Mary Espie, he has three—Sarah, Clarissa A. and Adeline C. Mr. McNaughton was one of the first Board of Trustees and a leading spirit in the building of the Vernon United Presbyterian Church ; has always been a member and Trustee ; now owns 240 acres of land and a good and pleasant home, in striking contrast to the log shanty in which his family spent the first winter in Wisconsin.

LEONARD MARTIN, farmer, merchant and proprietor hotel ; P. O. Big Bend ; born in Ferrisburg, Vt., April 16, 1814 ; his younger life was spent at school in old Vermont, where he learned surveying ; in the spring of 1836, he reached Milwaukee, and remained there until fall, when he made first claim at the noted Oak Orchard of pioneer times ; during the winter he surveyed the plat of Kewaunee, Wis., not seeing other men than those with him for two months ; returning in the spring of 1837, he built on his claim, just across the line in Muskego, the inevitable log house, and began life a lone bachelor, "poor as Job's turkey," his musty flour, etc., earned by hard day's work. March 11, 1840, he married Miss Betsey F. Munson, of Bristol, Vt. ; to pay for his land when it came into market, he hired money at 50 per cent. ; in 1852, Mr. Martin built a hotel and store on a large scale, main building 41x51, with kitchen 32x48, which, with its additions, is known over South Wisconsin as "Martin's Tavern ;" the generous old hostelry, with its three floors, being often crowded in the palmy days of Janesville and Milwaukee plank road. His stock of goods is very large ; "too much stock," says Mr. Martin ; "everything from a needle to a plow." He is a genuine "old settler," and dug the first well in Muskego ; his farm of 450 acres, with a small village of tenement houses, gives his place a business-like look. Mr. Martin was the first County Surveyor, Chairman of Muskego four years prior to this, member of the last Territorial Legislature in 1847, was County Commissioner in old times, and is now serving his fourth term as Chairman of the largely Republican town of Vernon, though he is a radical old Jacksonian Democrat ; he says his fearless advocacy of these principles has beaten him for more offices than any other man in the county. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have three children—Ann E., widow of Everett Chamberlain ; Sarah E., Mrs. C. A. Pride, and a son, S. Munson, who married Miss Emma Keyser, of New York, and is with his father.

J. T. MORRIS, County Overseer of the Poor ; P. O. Waukesha ; born in Orange County, N. Y., in 1818 ; losing his father when but an infant, he was compelled to begin life's battle at an early age, and has seen much of the hard, cheerless side of this world, working for three or four years in an ax factory in Napanock, Ulster Co., N. Y. He married Miss Maria Evans, of Sullivan County, N. Y. ; they came to Wisconsin with but little means in 1852 ; he began by renting a farm in Muskego, dealing for seventeen successive years with its owner without a line of writing having been drawn or a harsh word spoken ; probably no parallel case can be furnished in the county ; his management having made this farm a valuable one, he resolved to own one of his own, and bought near Big Bend ; lived there six years, or until 1875, when he was appointed to his present position, which he has so satisfactorily filled. "I keep this place in a condition fit to be visited by any one at any time," says Mr. Morris, and a walk among and through the buildings proved it. He is, politically, Independent, voting for men and ideas instead of party, has served as Supervisor, Justice of the Peace, etc., in Muskego. Mr. and Mrs. Morris have an adopted son Albert (formerly Avery) Morris.

JOHN W. PARK, (deceased), was born June 15, 1830, in Weston, Windsor Co., Vt.; the years of his boyhood and youth were spent at school, and in assisting his father on the farm; about the time he attained his majority, he joined a company from his native place and went to Winona, Minn.; dissatisfied with the outlook there, he returned as far as Vernon, joining relatives here; remained two or three years in Wisconsin, teaching a year in Dane County; he and S. B. Smith, with a party from Vernon, again left for the West; finally locating where the city of Owatonna now stands, Park and Smith surveying and naming that town, and opened the first store in Steele County; Mr. Park being the first Postmaster of Owatonna; the people successively honored him with the offices of County Surveyor, Commissioner, and Register of Deeds. In 1856, he revisited Wisconsin and married Miss Sarah L., daughter of John Thomas, one of Vernon's earliest and most honored pioneers. Upon the death of Mr. Thomas a year and a half later, Mr. P. and wife returned and located on the old homestead, where he made a permanent home and devoted himself to the interests of his large farm, which devotion was duly rewarded by his becoming one of the leading stock-growers and farmers in his vicinity. Mr. Park was thoroughly in love with his profession, and took a deep interest in everything that had for its object the advancement of farming interests; for many years his face was a familiar one at county and State fairs, where he was often an exhibitor, and often filled positions of trust and honor; he had a large circle of acquaintances, and "every acquaintance was a friend." There was something in his genial face and hearty greeting that won all hearts to him and made them at once his friends; to his friends his daily walk in life was an example such as challenged their admiration, and won their highest respect and love. For a few years prior to his death, he was in failing health, but was able to superintend his 430-acre farm, until July, 1879, when he was taken suddenly worse, and sank rapidly until the 8th of August, when he quietly breathed his last. Mr. Park was in accord with the Universalist faith, though not a church member; he left a devoted wife and six children. Living, he was an affectionate husband and father, and a kind and honorable neighbor and friend. Looking back over his life-work, we may justly say that he left an example that his children and all who knew him may well emulate:

A. H. PIERCE, farmer, Secs. 27 and 22; P. O. Dodge's Corners; born in Andover, Windsor Co., Vt., May 23, 1822; is a son of Abial and Nancy Pierce. Abial P. was a native of New Hampshire, and his first wife dying Jan. 13, 1828, he married again Miss H. R. Manning; the family were residents of Vermont until 1838, when they removed to Wisconsin, reaching Vernon early in August; there were four children—Doreas L., Dorathy D., Abial H. and Lucinda W.; the eldest married O. B. Haseltine, and died at Black Earth, Dane Co., Wis., in March, 1874; the second is the widow of John Dodge, who, like Mr. Haseltine, was one of the four first settlers of Vernon; Mr. Dodge died Aug. 29, 1859; Lucinda W., is the widow of Curtis Carleton, who died in August, 1855; both Mrs. Dodge and Mrs. Carleton are now living on the original homestead of John Dodge; Abial Pierce bought the Pierce homestead of the Government, improved it and died upon it Nov. 30, 1871, his widow surviving until Jan. 1, 1878. The only son, our subject, attended the first school kept in the town, by Ira S. Haseltine, and has spent his life upon the old acres. Married, Dec. 23, 1848, in Waterford, Racine Co., Wis., Miss Cordelia B., daughter of John and Eliza Finton, she being a native of Monroe, Ashtabula Co., Ohio; born Oct. 24 1827; they have four children—Frank A., J. Byron, William A. and Clement H.; the eldest is farming in Rochester, Wis., and the others are on the homestead, now well improved and containing 236 acres, devoted to fine-wool sheep and other stock. Mr. Pierce, like all true sons of Vermont, is a Republican, and has filled many minor town offices.

ALLEN PORTER, farmer, Secs. 32 and 29; P. O. Dodge's Corners; born in Athens, Windham Co., Vt., July 15, 1814. His younger life was spent in his native State, where he married Miss Syrena Lewis, of Chester, Vt.; a month later the young couple left for Wisconsin, spending six days on the canal from Troy to Buffalo; reaching Milwaukee early in June, they soon joined the family of Ira Blood, in Vernon, Mr. Porter buying 120 acres of Uncle Sam at $2.50 per acre; his first work was to dig a well 25 feet deep, still in existence, but in disuse, then to build a house 16 feet square, which was completed in four days, so the family moved in, though blankets hung across the windows, and it was two years before it was plastered; Mr. Porter bought a yoke of cattle and by "changing works" with his neighbor, was enabled to sow an acre and a half of wheat that fall; as a rail-splitter, Mr. P. was second only to Lincoln, though he followed the good old custom then prevailing and purloined most of his fencing from the Government land around him. He relates that one summer, not being then able to own a wagon, and being desirous of attending meeting with his family, he attached his oxen to his sled and went, though the novel "rig" was left in the grove, out of sight of the schoolhouse; many a time has he carried a borrowed plow on his back from Caldwell's Prairie and returned it in the same way—a hard way to begin, but it met with a reward in the shape of the 280-acre farm of which 100 have been cleared and broken by him, and the tasteful and substantial farm buildings, and the house built during the nation's centennial. There are two children, Susan M. and Rolland L.; the daughter resides in Waukesha, and the son is one of the firm of Davis Bros. & Porter, oil dealers in Milwaukee. Mr. Porter is a Republican, and was for years a noted breeder and dealer in fine horses—he selling one team for $800, often wintering 15 horses and colts; of late he has devoted himself to sheep, owning now 400, with two registered rams; he also has a few Jersey cattle, two thoroughbreds.

GEORGE W. PORTER, farmer, Secs. 32 and 29; P. O. Dodge's Corners; is a native of Athens, Windham Co., Vt., born Dec. 26, 1816; has been a life-long farmer; in 1842, he left Vermont for Wisconsin, reaching Milwaukee on the 19th of June, and then joined his brother Allen, who had settled in Vernon two years before; Mr. Porter soon bought 40 acres of Government land, and 80 of one Roberts, the whole being as nature left it; Mr. P. turning every furrow and building every rod of fence himself. He boarded with his brother until May 13, 1845, when he married Miss Lois Yearly, a native of Dublin, N. H., who had spent most of her life at Londonderry, Vt., and who had settled at Mukwonago a year or so prior to the wedding. Mr. Porter now owns 240 acres of well-improved land, a spacious and tasteful farm-house, well-planted grounds and substantial barns, the main one 62x34 with lean-to additions, sheep barn 24x60, hog house 24x30, etc., etc.; all placed there by the labor and good sense of the man who cut the farm from the oak openings of this town. Mr. and Mrs. Porter have four children—George Y., Abbie S., John T., and Ida L. George married Miss Rose Clark, and is one of the successful farmers of Caldwell's Prairie; the other three are on the homestead, the youngest an invalid. Mr. P., like most Vermonters, is a Republican, and is not an office seeker but a successful farmer and stock-breeder. It is worthy of note that these facts were furnished and recorded on the 35th anniversary of the wedding day.

AMOS PUTNAM, sawyer, Big Bend; born April 15, 1808, in Andover, Vt., where he lived until the day Van Buren was inaugurated President, when he left for the new, wild West; reaching Vernon during the same spring (1837), he made a claim, which he sold in 1840, and, during 1840, he and his brother, Aaron, dug the ditches which, by draining springs, formed the pond or reservoir, perhaps forty rods north of the banks of Fox River; the water was conducted in a race to the bank of the said river, and, on reaching the huge wheel of the old saw-mill built there by them at this time, was found to have a direct fall of eighteen feet; the mill was set in motion in April, 1841, and here Mr. P. was in business until 1868, when he sold out. He married, in 1843, Miss Frances Otis, a native of Washington Co., N. Y., who died in 1858; married again Mrs. Margaret Hutchings, a daughter of Samuel Jones, of Peekskill, N. Y.; her former husband, P. G. Hutchings, died in 1853, leaving her three children—William, Samuel and Mary (Mrs. Thomas Howie). Mr. Putnam has a pleasant home in the village, and owns 87 acres on Sec. 25, in Vernon; is a radical Greenbacker, of Republican antecedents; the old mill was torn down in 1855, and replaced by one which burned in 1875, the present mill being built that year. Mr. P. says that 1837 was so cold that sap ran from the giant maples around him until the 10th of May, and that boats did not leave Buffalo until the 4th of June.

PRUCIUS PUTNAM, farmer, Sec. 34; P. O. Dodge's Corners; was born Sept. 24, 1813, in Andover, Vt.; his early life was spent as a farmer in the Green Mountain State; in the fall of 1836, in company with nine others from Andover, he left for the wilds of Wisconsin; John Dodge, the Haseltine brothers and himself left Chicago with a team, reaching Vernon Nov. 1, 1836; these were the four first actual settlers of the town, and each made a claim on Secs. 27 and 34; they also built the first white man's house that fall, which stood, 15x16 feet in size, a few rods south of the present schoolhouse at Dodge's Corners; their provisions that fall were brought from Chicago, pork at $28 per barrel, and flour at $10; they did some frontier work here, and on the 9th of January, 1838, Dodge and Putnam left for Chicago, and, on their return in the spring, each settled upon his own claim; they were soon joined by others whose names figure in the history of Vernon. On the 1st of January, 1838, Mr. Putnam married Miss Emmeline R., daughter of Col. Orien Haseltine, it being the first wedding in Town of Vernon, though Curtis W. Haseltine married Merial, daughter of John Thomas, in the evening of the same day. Mr. P. raised buckwheat and turnips for his first crop, corn, wheat and oats failing on account of the unprecedented cold season of 1838; he now has 365 acres, with buildings in striking contrast to those existing when Indians were his neighbors, and Indian trails his roads. A staunch Republican, he has been in various town offices; he also had the honor to open the first store in his town, in 1846. There are four living children by this historic marriage—P. W., B. B., W. T. and L. L. Mr. Putnam relates that when the four were en route for Vernon, in October, 1836, they did not see a house from fifteen miles north of Chicago, to Burlington, Wis., where a settler, named Smith, had a shaker-roofed shanty built; in January, while he and Dodge were returning to Chicago, they lunched at Levi Godfrey's, who was then the only man at what is now Rochester, Wis.; cold biscuit, washed down with colder water, then a fifteen-mile tramp to Ives' Grove, through a blinding snow-storm, Mr. P. suffering untold misery from an attack of rheumatism, and being barely able to follow the trail; reaching the double log house of — Call, they found a sick family, with only a girl able to get supper for them, and to wait on the sick; the supper consisted of a kettle of hot mush, with milk; this was quickly hidden by the hungry men, and more called for, when the girl set out a huge plate of cold mush, which was also disposed of; Mr. P. declares that Dodge ate more than half, and that he fully expected a funeral, but both reached Chicago safely.

DAVID REA, farmer, Sec. 2; P. O. Waukesha; born and educated in County Tyrone, Ireland; born Aug. 26, 1815; emigrated to America in 1832, and spent four years in Toronto, Canada; in the fall of 1836, he visited Milwaukee and Prairieville, and a few days later went to Illinois; one winter was spent near Natchez, Miss.; in 1839, he bought 104 acres of his present farm; after this, he spent some time in Central Illinois, voting, in Joliet, for Harrison, after the log-cabin and hard-cider campaign of 1840; fever and ague finally drove him to Wisconsin as a permanent settler, he reaching Vernon on the 1st of January, 1841; building a log house, he "bached it" here for a number of years; returning one night, he unlocked his cabin and found an Indian fast asleep beside a roaring fire; seizing the Indian's gun, he covered him with it and awoke him; the "Injun" was scared and at once left, after getting his blanket out of the "oxen's wigwam;" this dusky savage must have climbed down the wide chimney, as every window and door was fastened securely, and found as it was left. Mr. Rea now has over 300 acres, with good house and capacious barns. He married Mrs. Sarah Begg, widow of William Begg, by whom he had four children—John, David, Sarah (deceased) and Martha (deceased). He is a Democrat, and a man who has earned every dollar of his property himself; he relates that in an early day he was offered 16 acres of land and the Bethesda Spring for a farm wagon.

H. F. SARGEANT, farmer, Secs. 28 and 29; P. O. Dodge's Corners; was born Sept. 5, 1840, on the homestead in Vernon; son of Otis T. and Nancy P. Sargeant, both natives and residents of Chester, Vt., who settled in Vernon early in 1840; O. T. Sargeant bought 80 acres of Government land, and built that summer the first frame house in the town, the oaken timbers 6x8 inches, with the shaker roof, enabling it to stand four-square to-day; here H. F. spent his boyhood, often waking to find six inches of snow over him, which had drifted through the warped oaken sides of the house; ox teams took them "to mill and to meeting," and once when his father crossed Fox River with a load of logs chained to his ox-sled, the ice gave way, and the load sank like lead; twice did this hardy old frontiersman dive to the bottom of the icy water ere he could unloose the chain and free the logs; his clothing, of course, froze stiff at once, but he reached home and a warm fire in safety. His son attended the pioneer school, taught by Mrs. Ira Blood and others, one term, in a barn where horses and cattle occupied the basement. He married Miss Irene C., daughter of Warren Greeley, of Caldwell's Prairie, in 1867, by whom he has two children—Lester N. and Roy; is a live young farmer of his native town, as may be seen by his management of the 225-acre homestead, setting out shade and ornamental trees, rebuilding the barns, etc.; he is a Republican. The old couple are now residents of Mukwonago, while the old house is kept as a memento of old times, with its huge mud-and-stone chimney, odd fire-place, etc.

JESSE SMITH, farmer, Sec. 33; P. O. Dodge's Corners; born in Andover, Windsor Co., Vt., July 31, 1804; he grew to manhood there and married, Jan. 18, 1828, Miss Sylvia Barton, who was born July 22, 1805, in Andover; in the spring of 1837, Mr. Smith, with the brothers Aaron and Amos Putnam, Col. Orien Haseltine and John Thomas, came to Vernon, Mr. S. buying his present farm of Calvin Gault; this claim lay in the beautiful oak openings in the south part of the town; Indians were encamped in sight of his log house, finished by Mr. Gault, and occupied by him on the arrival of Mr. Smith's wife and family that fall; the next year, Mr. Smith built the first frame barn in the town, and in 1842, a frame house where he used to lodge many a weary traveler over the then new road; this burned down five years later, and was replaced by a very large two-and-a-half-story stone house, well remembered by the teamsters and farmers of "plank-road days;" the generous old dining-room, fifty feet in length, was often crowded, and it was not unusual for him to lodge 100 persons over night; and for a month or more, each fall, to average twenty-five or thirty teams per night was not strange when we consider that from 300 to 400 teams per day passed here, many from the lead mines of Southwest Wisconsin; it was a common thing for men to order breakfast at 4 in the morning, and to find men waiting to occupy their stalls with tired teams; the noted spring, situated on the hill back of the house was furnished with wooden piping in 1842, and has since supplied his house and barns with water for all purposes, and refreshed many a "way-faring man" and team. No better representative of the good old Vermont stock can be found in the West than is found in "Uncle Jesse Smith," known as the genial old landlord, all over Southern Wisconsin. He now has a 350-acre homestead, on which are over 400 grade merinos, with other stock. Mr. Smith is a steadfast Republican; was one of the first Town Board of Vernon, Chairman of the town twelve or more years, and represented his district in the Legislature of 1854, 1866 and 1867. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have five living children—Samuel B., Carlos P., Horace W., Loneann (Mrs. J. N. Crawford) and Josephine (Mrs. M. L. Davis); they have lost three daughters; S. B. owns a large farm in Vernon, and an interest in the Waterford flouring-mill; C. P. is also one of Vernon's substantial farmers, while H. W. succeeds as well on Caldwell's Prairie.

J. H. STICKNEY, farmer, Secs. 23, 14 and 22; P. O. Big Bend; born in Andover, Vt., 1811, resided there until he was 22, when he went to Troy, N. Y., and after a year, to Boston, where he spent three; returning to Andover, he remained a short time, and reached Vernon on the 18th of August, 1838; a carpenter by trade, he worked at building log houses and barns for the settlers. Married in 1840, Miss E. A., daughter of Col. Orien Haseltine, and settled on 240 acres of his present farm; on this the Indians had formerly a cornfield, the stalks and cobs being still visible. None of the pioneers of Vernon have done better than he, as he is now the largest land owner in it, having 620 acres, and on it more and better timber than any man in the county; his maple grove is simply grand; the yield of 1,000 pounds of sugar per annum, adding to its attractions; in these woods in an early day, Mr. S had many an exciting, and sometimes dangerous adventure with the half-wild hogs, and wilder wolves and lynxes. He is a Republican, and was the third Treasurer of Vernon. In 1847, he removed to Dodge Co., Wis., and remained until 1852. Mr. and Mrs. S. have nine living children—Warren, Annie, Alice, Rollin, Volney, Emily, Ferris, Elva and Ida; also an adopted son, George. To these children, Mr. S. has given over much of the care involved in managing the estate.

EDWIN B. THOMAS, farmer, Secs. 34, 35 and 25; P. O. Dodge's Corners; is a son of John and Merial Thomas; his father was born at Hopkinton, N. H., April 6, 1806, and was both a farmer and carpenter; in company with Col. Orien Haseltine, he visited Vernon, in February, 1837, and made a claim among the openings of Vernon on Sec. 26; with his wife and six children he settled here in October, 1837, the family spending the winter with O. B. Haseltine; in the spring of 1838, Mr. Thomas built a peculiar log house, hewing the logs and inserting them in sills palisade fashion; the old landmark still stands, and was the family home until the death of Mr. Thomas, in August, 1857. He was a man of spotless integrity, and whose place as one of nature's noblemen was hard to fill; many missed the inspiring example of this gentleman, as he was a man of wealth, brains and character; his estate of 1800 acres, was shared by his sons-in-law, S. B. Smith and J. W. Park, and his only son, Edwin B., the subject of this imperfect sketch; he was born Aug. 22, 1826, in Andover, Vt.; was educated in the pioneer schools of Vernon, and in the old Waukesha Academy, under tuition of Prof. Eleazer Root, one of the founders of Wisconsin's present school system; after leaving school he taught a number of terms in his own and adjoining towns. He took his 560 acres almost as it was left by nature's hand, and has made of it one of the most beautiful homes in the Northwest; in this he has been ably seconded by his wife, who was Miss Cornelia, daughter of Gains Munger, a pioneer of 1837; she was born in New Durham, La Porte Co., Ind., and married Mr. T., May 3, 1854. A description of the place is difficult to write, but we may say that Mr. T. began by setting apple-trees and Delaware grapevines years ago, and that his grounds, now comprising 15 acres, are laid out in the most tasteful manner, and planted with the best known fruit and ornamental trees, while his vineyard produces from four to five tons of grapes per annum, he making a specialty of the Delaware, Rodgers No. 4 and 15, the Salem No. 53; is now testing others including 1,000 Dutchess. Mr. Thomas is also one of the owners of the Waterford Mills, and was an active party in the famous mill-dam lawsuit years ago. Is independent in politics, favoring the Greenback; was well known as Town Superintendent of schools under the old system, and is a man warmly in favor of the cause of education, giving his children the best of advantages. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas have seven children—John W., M. Isadore, Arthur E., Clarence G., Wesley M., Colby N. and Albert A.

JOHN VAN BUREN, farmer, Secs. 9, 16 and 6; P. O. Vernon; born Jan. 14, 1836, in Otsego Co., N. Y.; his parents, Peter and Isabella (Sharp) Van Buren, settled in Vernon in 1844; here he attended school, living with his parents until the spring of 1866, when he settled on his present farm of 152½ acres; he farmed this two years in partnership with Abram Sharp; the farm was then covered with stumps of the forest trees, which were its first crop, and with countless boulders and stones; the buildings were small and poor; to-day a 36x60 and an 18x38 barn, with a large, well appointed farm-house, and the smooth, handsome fields tell the story of fourteen well-spent years, which have made John Van Buren one of Vernon's most respected farmers. He married Miss Sarah A. Carmichael, who died in 1873, leaving two sons—Edgar and John ; by the present wife, formerly Anna Platz, he has a son, Peter W. Mr. Van Buren is a Democrat and is now serving his second term as Supervisor ; he has seventy crossed merino and Cotswold sheep.

PETER VAN BUREN, proprietor of the Vernon Mills, was born Oct. 29, 1808, in Schenectady Co., N. Y. ; he is the son of Henry and Dorathy (Hollenbeck) Van Buren ; the family is of the old Holland stock ; Mr. Van Buren lost his father when a child and his mother at 17 years of age ; thrown thus upon the world, he for years, when it was most needed, did not know the blessings of a home. He married in Albany Co., N. Y., Miss Isabella, daughter of John and Catherine Sharp ; she was born in Guilderland, Albany Co., and resided there until married in March, 1835 ; in 1844, they came to Wisconsin, Mr. Van Buren buying the farm on Sec. 9, where his youngest son now lives ; the giant trees with which it was then covered, were cut by Mr. Van Buren, rolled up and burned in log heaps, he then doing the work which told upon his tough and hardy constitution ; he has steadily prospered, however, and made a competence ; after leaving his farm he spent a short time in Vernon Valley, then removed to a farm now occupied by Hy Groute, where he lived nine years ; the mill fell into his hands through the failure of its former owner ; this mill has been completely overhauled and repaired by him, and is now for sale at the most liberal terms, as Mr. Van Buren does not want the care it entails upon him. He is a Democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Van Buren are a hale and hearty old couple and a type of the energetic and successful New Yorkers, who have made Wisconsin what it is ; they have three children all settled near them ; John and Catherine were born in "York State," while Henry is a Badger by birth, John married Miss Sarah Carmichael who died leaving him two sons ; his present wife, formerly Anna Platts, has a son ; Catherine is a soldier's widow, her husband, John Howile, having laid down his life on the altar of his country, leaving an honorable and brave record to his two children ; Henry married Miss Isabella Carmichael, by whom he has two children, having lost his eldest.

A. C. VANDERPOOL, farmer, Sec. 17 ; P. O. Mukwonago ; born Nov. 10, 1836, in Albany Co., N. Y. ; son of Charles and Lavina, who were also natives of York State ; the family is of the old Knickerbocker stock, and were early settlers in the Van Rensselaer claim, or part of the famous Holland Purchase ; the grandsire of Mr. Vanderpool, born there, is now in his 98th year ; A. C. was educated in the old Dutch town of Schenectady, where all his younger life was spent ; in February, 1853, his father bought the homestead in Vernon, and when spring opened the son came out ; he stopped two months with his uncle, William A. Vanderpool, and put in the first crop of wheat ; all the buildings then were a log cabin and an 18x24 barn ; the result of twenty-seven years of intelligent labor and management are now manifest in the handsome and roomy farmhouse and the barns, the old one having been enlarged and one built in 1870, 36x60 with basement, and still not satisfied, he is building a 24x84-foot sheep barn, the farm now consisting of 206 acres of the best land, 30 of timber and 10 of marsh. Mr. Vanderpool married March 21, 1861, Miss Annie Shaw, a native of Groton, Tompkins Co., N. Y. ; they have three children—Ada, Charles E., and Vinnie. Mr. Vanderpool is a stanch Democrat and Greenbacker. The old couple are still with him on the farm. His flock of nearly 200 fine-wool sheep, were bred from that of A. E. Perkins, Mukwonago.

GEORGE J. VAN DERPOOL, farmer, Sec. 19 ; P. O. Mukwonago ; born in Albany Co., N. Y., 1831, son of William and Lanna (Van Benschoten) Van Derpool ; as may be seen by the prefix of the name, the family are of Dutch descent, the grandsire of Mr. V. on his father's side, coming from Holland. His father, a shoemaker, was compelled to give up business on account of loss of eyesight ; in 1847, the family settled in the woods, on Sec. 18, Vernon, living in a rude plank house, with the care of a blind father on their hands ; there were six children, and, says Mr. Van Derpool, the first winter the Lord was on our side, they were fortunate enough to sell thirty cords of wood in the tree at a dollar a cord the buyer cutting it. George J. and a brother spent this winter at the new, hard work of chopping, he cutting many a cord at 25 cents ; to-day, after several removals, Mr. V. has 88 acres of as fine land as the sun shines on, he clearing most of it himself, and replacing the old frame house bought with the land, by an elegant modern residence, built 1879 ; he, prior to this, had built a 30x40 barn, and during the Centennial, celebrated by adding twenty-five feet to its length, and putting the whole on a basement wall. He married in 1855, Miss Catherine, daughter of Garrett and Debora (Cornick) Van Buren, who were related to ex-President Martin Van Buren ; she was born in Guilderland Albany Co., N. Y. ; they have five children—Byron V., Leslie, Linden, Lillie M. and George ; in 1870, they lost a ten-year-old son. Mr. Van Derpool enlisted Aug. 15, 1862, in the 28th W. V. I. ; the regiment fought and worsted the guerilla Price at Helena, and remained in Arkansas until February, 1865, when they were sent to Mobile, and did heroic service in the reduction of the forts there, being for thirteen days and nights under a heavy fire ; Mobile urrendered and rebeldom collapsed, the brave boys being then transferred to Texas, where they were mustered out in August, 1865. Mr. V. is a Republican, and has been Supervisor, etc.

HARMON WARFIELD, farmer, Sec. 17; P. O. Vernon; born in Vernon, Waukesha Co., Wis., 1846; son of Nathan Warfield, who was from New York. He married Lucy Young, who was born in Connecticut, and, in 1843, settled in Vernon; was a cooper by trade, and settled on 40 acres, now part of A. C. Vanderpool's farm; Harmon was born here; in 1864, the family located on the present farm of 112½ acres, it being then in a rough, half-cultivated condition; the house was built by W. A. Vanderpool, but the barns, one 26x31 and another 21x63, were built by the Warfields. He married Miss Mary, daughter of John Sprague, one of the old residents of Mukwonago. The father of Mr. W. died May 11, 1872; his mother is now living in Monroe, Wis. Father and son were Republicans. Mr. Warfield is a most successful breeder of fine-wool sheep, his flock of over 100 being bred from those of A. E. Perkins, J. N. Crawford, J. H. Paul, Capt. Lawrence and A. C. Whitmore; the average weight of wool grown by each of these 100 sheep during the eleven months ending May 20, is a trifle over eight pounds; Mr. W. also owns the 6-year-old stallion "Farmer's Glory," bred by Martin Pollard; the dam of said horse was a Farmer's Glory, and the sire a Percheron; he is 16½ hands high, weighs 1,450, and is, in all respects, a first-class horse.

ALMON WELCH, farmer, Secs. 8, 9 and 5; P. O. Waukesha; born in Stafford, Conn., March 15, 1817; his mother, formerly Abi Cushman, died when he was an infant, his father soon after removing to Homer, N. Y.; his younger life was spent here and in Tompkins Co., N. Y.; in company with Asa A. Flint and his relatives, he left Cortland village with a team, and reached Oak Creek, Wis., July 9, 1837; Mr. F. remained here while Mr. W. took an Indian trail leading to Oak Orchard, where Isaac Flint, a brother of Asa, had settled; on the east side of Muskego Lake, Mr. W. came upon a large camp of Indians, and says he was nervous, but put on a bold face and stalked through the camp without looking to the right or left; in due time, he found Flint, N. K. Smith, C. W. Haseltine and other settlers at Oak Orchard, who soon brought out Asa A.; a bitter feud existed in this naturally lovely locality at this time, on account of disputed claims, C. W. Haseltine carrying a pocketful of red pepper to dust the eyes of Isaac Flint, while the latter carried a pistol, and swore he would shoot Haseltine on sight; a similar "unlovely" feeling prevailed between N. K. Smith and L. Whipple; the first Sunday dinner eaten by Mr. Welch was when visiting Henry Vail, a bachelor, who carried a pan of flour half a mile to a creek, wet and mixed it, returned and baked it, fried some bacon, and "got dinner;" Mr. W. says the happiest days of his life were those when he could take his ax, and a week's provisions, go into the woods and split rails all day, and be lulled to sleep at night beside a log, with the wolves howling everywhere around him; Mr. W. has owned several farms, and made steady progress since his settlement here; he made his start at rail-splitting and bee-hunting, both N. K. Smith and Z. Ellis, his old-time friends, being famous bee-hunters, Messrs. W. and Smith taking forty swarms one fall, the honey selling for $60 in Milwaukee. He spent the winter of 1839 in Cortland, and, on the 12th of July, 1840, married Miss Emmeline A. White, in Vernon; after various changes, Mr. Welch settled on his present farm of 132 acres, about twenty-five years ago; here he has several substantial barns built, and a handsome residence, which replaced one burned down in 1870. Since February, 1878, Mr. W. has resided in Waukesha, though he still superintends his farm, and avers that he takes the most solid comfort here. He is independent in politics, and a member of Prairie Lodge, I. O. O. F. Has five living children—Sarah E., Theresa J., Bertine D., Ammon V. and Ella, all residents of Nebraska; his elder son, Herbert P., served in the Union army three years, and, after this, was for many years in government employ in Washington; removing to Nebraska, he died in 1878.

ASA WILKINS, farmer, Sec. 34; P. O. Dodge's Corners; is a native of Franklin Co., Vt., born May 8, 1815; with the exception of one year, his early life was spent in Vermont. Married Sept. 22, 1839, Miss Rachel Tabor, of his own town of Fairfax; in May, 1845, Mr. W. and family came to Vernon, he buying the farm of C. W. Haseltine, on which he built a log house, and worked among the early settlers of Vernon until 1850, when he made one of a party of sixteen in driving ox teams overland to California; after two years in the Golden State, he returned, via Panama and New York, to his farm and family. Mr. Wilkins was a founder and leading spirit of the Southeastern Wisconsin Sheep Breeders and Wool Growers' Association, and of the Vernon Union Protection Society, having been President of both for a number of years past; Mr. W. also owns the old Col. Haseltine farm in Vernon, or 426 acres in both farms, and a tract of Iowa land. Mr. and Mrs. W. have four living children—Oscar Myron, Lucina (Mrs. E. D. Jackson) and George A.; the two oldest are in Colorado; Mr. Jackson manages the homestead, and the youngest son is on the other Vernon farm; one of the sons, Albert, enlisted in the 1st W. V. C., and died at Stephenson, Ala., in consequence of injuries received in the service. Mr. Wilkins was Chairman of Vernon during the civil war, and did much to secure the splendid war record of which she is so justly proud; was formerly Assessor, Supervisor, etc.; in politics, a steadfast Union Republican; Mr. W. has from 500 to 600 fine-wool sheep, buying and breeding from the flocks of such men as McMillen and Burrett, of New York, J. H. Paul, of Genesee, and noted Vermont breeders; he undoubtedly owned the first fine-wool ram in Vernon, if not in the county.

TOWN OF OTTAWA.

TALBOT C. DOUSMAN, farmer; Secs. 2, 3, and 10; P. O. Waterville; Mr. D. is of Scotch and Dutch lineage, and was born in Mackinaw, Mich., 1816; resided in his native town until 1835, receiving a thorough education at Mt. Pleasant Classical Institute, Amherst, Mass; in June, 1835, Mr. D. located at Milwaukee, building a warehouse which still stands on E. Water street, boarding during the first summer with Solomon Juneau; was engaged in the forwarding and lumber business here a number of years; he voted at the first election held here, called by Gov. Mason, of Michigan, to elect members of a council to meet at Green Bay; thirty-eight votes were cast, of which Mr. D. thinks not more than three or four were legal, as a year's residence was required by the laws of Michigan, he was then but 19, and voted on the express condition that the negro cook of Mr. Juneau should also vote. Capt. Gilbert Knapp, of Racine, and B. H. Edgerton, of Milwaukee, represented that county in the council; among other reminiscences, Mr. D. relates that Mrs. Kinzie, wife of the first settler of Chicago, and an ardent Episcopalian, caused a clergyman of that faith to visit Milwaukee and referred him to her friend, Mr. Dousman; now, Mr. D. had never looked inside an Episcopal prayer-book, and was in a dilemma; giving a boy $5, he induced him to visit the English settlement at Oak Creek, and at his request one of these footed it to Milwaukee in time to be the only actual communicant at the first Episcopal service which was held in the old Towles law office; the Englishman and clergyman consulting Mr. D., and treating him as the Deacon of the church, though he had hard work to fill the part successfully. In 1841, the first election for Ottawa and Genesee, was held at the house of Benjamin Jenkins, I. H. Tweedy (Whig), and Joseph Turner (Democrat) were candidates for the Territorial Council; Mr. D. worked hard that day, three Democrats agreed to vote for Tweedy, if he, Dousman, would secrete the tickets behind an old log barn. Next came nine English Democrats, to the leaders of whom Mr. D., addressed himself, telling him that he believed Tweedy to be a rascal, but that it was far better to vote for him knowingly, than to vote for Turner in good faith, and then be disappointed in him, as the Democrats had previously been in the absconding Dr. Cornwall; this novel argument worked like a charm, and nine more Whig votes were cast by Democrats; as Mr. Tweedy had seven majority in the county, the reader can draw his own inference. Mr. D. made the first claim in Ottawa in 1837, — Orchard and George Hosmer, being the next; on this, in 1838, he built the first frame barn within the present limits of Waukesha County; his log house was built in 1837, and in this the first sermon (Episcopalian) was preached by the Rev. Mr. Hull; in 1839, George Paddock, an Englishman, removed from Cleveland, Ohio, to Delafield, Waukesha Co., with his wife and two daughters—Jane A. S., and Helen F.; the elder of these, born in Litchfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y., was educated in Black River Seminary, Watertown, N. Y., and married Mr. Dousman 1839; he having business interests in Mackinaw, two summers were spent there, the young couple settling on the Ottawa claim in the log house in 1840; this has since been their home, though the log house was replaced long ago with a spacious mansion built in a rambling fashion, and in both a New England and Southern style of architecture; it is heated with the second furnace ever sold in Milwaukee; a more beautiful old place than Ingle-side " can not be found in the county, as the noble burr oaks around it are interspersed with all the evergreens, flowering shrubs, etc., needed to make it so; the old barn, those built since the cheese factory, etc., making up a small village; Mr. and Mrs. D. have two children, Hercules F. and Laura C.; the son was educated in Racine College, and the daughter in the Oconomowoc Ladies' Seminary; T. C. Dousman now owns over 400 acres here, and is a splendid type of Wisconsin pioneer settlers; he was for two years a resident of Green Bay, engaged in business with A. E. Elmore during the late war; Mr. D. is an outspoken Republican, and was the first Chairman of his town, which office he held many years; his son was Chairman in 1873 and 1874, and represented the district in the legislature of 1877; the family are Episcopalians.

SEYMOUR FRAYER, farmer, Sec. 36, P. O. North Prairie; born in the town of Copake, Columbia Co., N. Y., Dec. 17, 1819; resided in his native state as a farmer until 1846; married Miss Betsey Plank, in Nov. 1842; their only son, Wesley D. was born in Feb., 1845. In 1846 the family setbled on 160 acres on Sec. 35, Ottawa, the only building upon it being a log house, where they lived nine years. Here the only daughter, Sarah, Mrs. Martin Helgesen, was born; Mr. F. did good work with his breaking team for five years among the early settlers, when Wisconsin was a Territory, and when he could travel for miles without seeing a fence; wheat was drawn with oxen to the then village of Milwaukee, over rough roads and corduroy bridges; after making a good home on his first location, Mr. F. sold 100 acres of it in 1868, bought where he now lives, and owns a first-class farm of 200 acres, well improved, with excellent buildings; W. D. Frayer has spent his life in the county, attending in his boyhood the school organized by his father and others as District No. 9; Mr. F. has also taught several terms. Married Miss Abbie Shultis, of Columbia Co., N. Y., Sept. 30, 1869, by whom he has a daughter, Florence. Father and son are Republicans; W. D. Frayer has been Assessor two years.

THOMAS E. JONES, farmer, Secs. 23, 24, 26, and 20; P. O. North Prairie; is a native of Ottawa, born July 18, 1846; is a son of John Jones, who emigrated from England in 1843, he having married Miss Anne Jones in 1837, by whom he had four children—Thomas (died an infant); John (deceased); Thomas E. and Walter (deceased); his first wife died in 1863, he marrying again Miss Sarah Cobb, who died in 1874, Mr. Jones now passing his later days in a well-earned home. His son, the subject of this sketch, is, like his father, a Democrat, and is a Presbyterian in religious belief. Was Assessor of his town in 1879, married in 1870 Miss Annie, daughter of John Burnell, one of the hardy pioneers of Mukwonago; they have five children: Chelsea E., born Aug. 18, 1871; Ellen A., born March 2, 1873; Walter D., born June 14, 1875; Emma, born Nov. 20, 1876; Calvin J., born Oct. 2, 1878. Mr. Jones is one of the enterprising young farmers of his native town, his management of the 234-acre farm having been in all respects successful.

DUNCAN MAULE, farmer, Sec. 15; P. O. Ottawa; born May 1809, in Perthshire, Scotland. His early life was spent on his father's farm and at shoemaking, emigrating to the United States in Feb., 1843. They came via the Erie Canal and the lakes to Waukesha Co. the next May. Unable to pay for a claim made in Ottawa, he pulled up stakes and located in Sullivan, Jefferson Co. Beginning here with but little, a yoke of cattle and a cow, he did good work among the timber of that town. Living in a log house they made steady progress, but, finally, to escape the infection of fever and ague, returned to Ottawa, where Mr. Maule engaged for the next eight years at his trade, and, during this time he bought 125 acres of his present farm, an old barn and a log house comprising the buildings. The reward of thirty-seven years of well directed toil may now be seen in the village of tasteful farm buildings erected by him, the first being a 14x54 foot sheep-barn, wagon and hog house 22x50, and main barn 30x64. His family for over twenty years lived in ordinary frame house, now supplanted by a spacious and elegant farmhouse, built of the famous Cream City brick, this completing a set of farm buildings second to none in his town. Mrs. Maule was Miss Ann B. Reed, a native of Kinross, Perthshire, and married at Saline, Fifeshire. They are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. M. is a Trustee. Mr. M. is an Independent Republican in political faith.

WILLIAM REID, of William Reid & Son, nurserymen and farmers, Secs. 25, 26 and 21; P. O. North Prairie; born Sept. 3, 1820, in Dundee, Scotland; served a five-years' apprenticeship as a mechanic, and worked in his native land until the fall of 1852, when he came with his family to America; spent a year in Montreal, and October, 1853, located in Milwaukee. In 1855, Mr. Reid bought 85 acres of his homestead, upon which his family located the following May; during the ensuing twelve years, Mr. Reid followed his trade in the car-shops at Milwaukee, passing each Sunday with his family, his wife and boys running the farm; his first experience as a nurseryman was in the successful growing of the Isabella and Connecticut grapes; this encouraged him to begin a nursery on a small scale about 1860, and he has constantly and successfully increased it; he has the Concord, Hartford, Prolific, Janesville, Northern Muscatine, Isabella, Diana, Connecticut, Michigan, Clinton, Delaware, Iowa, Elvira, Martha, Lady, Allen's Hybrid, Croton, Champion, Worden, Crevling's and Rodger's Hybrids, numbers 1, 3, 4, 9, 15, 19 and 53; has recently introduced the Black Eagle, Concord, Chatless, Goodadel and Brighton; his average crop is two tons of grapes; his stock of thrifty and hardy three and four year old apple trees is very extensive, and includes all standard summer, winter and fall varieties; the most popular pear, plum, cherry and crab trees are also grown here; also evergreens, the Norway spruce, balsam, fir, Scotch pine, hemlock, Austrian pine, red cedar, arbor vitae, etc., etc.; these are from four to six feet high; his first evergreen, a noble Scotch pine, grown from seed planted seventeen years ago, still stands before his house; the stock of shade and ornamental trees is also complete, as is that of the flowers and shrubs of every description; annuals, perennials, everlasting flowers, gladiolas, tulips, peonies, etc.; this is a nursery of which the county may well be proud, as it is the only one, except that at Pewaukee. Mr. Reid's successful work here for the past twenty years is a strong guarantee of his ability to select and cultivate wisely and well; he warrants all stock true to name, and assures all patrons that everything ordered of him will be delivered promptly and in good condition; that his prices will be as low as those of any reliable dealer in the country; all orders promptly attended to, and all letters of inquiry promptly and cheerfully answered, if addressed to William Reid & Son, North Prairie. Mr. Reid was a steadfast Abolitionist and is a stalwart Republican. The family attend and support the Presbyterian Church, of which he has been Trustee. His spacious and elegant residence was built in 1872. Mrs. Reid was Miss Mary Porter, born in Arbroath, Forfarshire. They have eleven living children—William, Alexander, David, George, Thomas, Isabella, John, Jessie, Joseph, Samuel and Charles.

HENRY WEINER, farmer and merchant; P. O. Dousman; born near Mentz, Germany, May 16, 1827; was educated in the Fatherland, and came with his parents, Nicholas and Phedas M. Weiner, to America in 1843; they arrived at Ottawa in June and found the three Link brothers in a log house, built on the line of Secs. 4 and 8; these with the two Weiner families and that of Mr. Mundchau, all lived for several weeks in the 14x16 cabin. The father of Mr. Weiner bought and built in Ottawa that summer; he died Dec. 16, 1847, his wife surviving till Aug. 10, 1856; this left Henry alone, as his only sister died in 1846; on the 9th of June, 1851, Mr. Weiner married Miss Anna Derr, a native of Germany, and a resident of Columbia Co., Wis. In 1868, he built the only store and saloon in Ottawa, near his residence. He now carries a good stock of dry goods, groceries, hats and caps, boots and shoes, patent medicines, notions, etc.; his 270-acre farm is well improved; is a member, with his family, of the Roman Catholic Church of Ottawa, holding and resigning the offices of Treasurer and Trustee. Mr. Weiner is a steadfast Democrat, and has filled many different positions with credit, serving as Constable, Justice of the Peace, Supervisor, and making an unfading record as Chairman of Ottawa during the war; filling the quotas promptly and well, and, in spite of the petty malice of certain parties, held the office a number of years; after the war was then Assessor for seven years, refusing re-election; was Chairman in 1870, '71, '76, '79, and now honors the same position. In 1870, Mr. Weiner lacked only 62 votes for the County Treasurership. A life work like this is best told without attempt at eulogy. Mr. and Mrs. Weiner have ten children—John, Margaret and Mary, now married; Magdalena, Henry, Joseph, Augustus, Anna, Philip and Michael.

DAVID P. WILLIAMS, farmer; Sec. 16; P. O. Dousman; born in Breconshire, South Wales, March 2, 1825; received a common-school education, and was for twelve years employed in the Garth flouring mills, as agent, his account averaging £7,000 per annum; came to the United States in June, 1869, with his family; had married the widow of John Powell; she was a daughter of Rees Williams, and was born May 17, 1829, in Breconshire, Wales. Mr. W. has owned two different farms since his residence in Ottawa, and has recently bought, and will build upon, 80 acres owned by Wm. D. Owens. Mr. and Mrs. W. are members of the Congregational Church, of which he has been a member for the past forty years, and is now deacon. In 1874 and 1875, Mr. Williams served his town as Treasurer; he is a Democrat. There are ten children, the two youngest born in Ottawa; David, James, Ellen, Mary, Maggie, Jane, John, Bessie, Hannah and Rees; Sarah died July 21, 1877.

W. J. D. WILLIAMS, farmer; Secs. 9 and 16; P. O. Dousman; born in Merionethshire, North Wales, 1820; came to America in 1842, his parents having died in Wales; spent the first year in New York State, and early in June, 1843, reached Ottawa, buying 200 acres of his present farm of the Government, built a log house, and, like the poor but plucky man, he began working by the day and month for Edgerton, Dousman and other early settlers; a beginning like this is sure of a reward, and his progress was steady, enabling him to devote himself to his own farm; here his motto was always, "Come boys," instead of "Go boys," and the result is a splendid 371-acre farm and homestead in Ottawa, 360 acres in Delafield—one of his farms containing 80 and the other 280 acres—besides 90 acres in Jeff Co. His large and tasteful brick residence is a good contrast to the log shanty of early times; while his 35x45 basement barn, with one now building (34x70, with 18-foot posts and two drive-floors), furnishes ample room for his stock and produce; the other farms are also well equipped with buildings, he having built a large brick house, in 1879, on the Delafield farm. He married Miss Elizabeth Davis, a native of Wales, who settled in Delafield nearly forty years ago; they have four living children, Mary, John, Lizzie and Moses; the family are members of the W. C. M. E. Church; politics Republican.

ERRATA.

Vernon Tichenor furnishes the following correction of the sketch entitled "Post office and Postmasters" of the village of Waukesha: "You say that Mr. Barstow moved the post-office from Mr. Jackson's house, which stood near the present site of the Episcopal Church, to the vicinity of Charles R. Dakin's store. Allow me to correct you. In 1839, Mr. Jackson held the post office in his log dwelling-house, on what is now Mill street, very near where Barney street now joins Mill street. The exact location I cannot give, as all trace of it has been removed. Mr. Jackson, within a year or two after that, erected a frame dwelling-house on the present site of the Congregational Church, at the corner of East Division and Mill streets, to which place he removed the post office, and there held it until he died. The identical building has been since moved to the rear of the Congregational Church, and is now owned by Milo Putney."

MARTIN FIELD, attorney at law, Mukwonago; born in Chester, Windsor Co., Vt., Dec. 9, 1814; received an academic education; remaining with his parents, Stephen and Mary Field, on their farm in Chester until May, 1836; that month he reached Chicago, in company with Ira Blood and W. C. Chapin, both Vermonters; Judge F. had learned surveying of his father in boyhood, and during the summer of 1836 Mr. Blood and himself were employed in surveying out-lots in the then village of Chicago; going to Milwaukee, Mr. Blood and himself remained but a comparatively brief time, reaching the Indian village of Mukwonago early in October, 1836, and were soon after employed by the proprietors, Sewell Andrews, H. H. Camp and Edward Meacham, to survey out the village plat; Mr. Field's first claim, made on Sec. 23, was under the protection of the Anti-Speculators, Claim Association; here he built a log house, where he kept "bachelor's hall" for three years; began the study of law soon after his settlement in Badgerdom; was admitted to practice at the Circuit Court of Milwaukee Co., and soon after to the bar of the Supreme Court of the Territory. Judge Field is a sturdy and outspoken Republican, of Whig antecedents; has served thirteen years as Town Clerk, seventeen as Justice of the Peace, and other minor positions; was elected County Judge of Waukesha Co. at its organization, and served fourteen years, having civil jurisdiction four years; during the war he was Assistant Government Assessor. Judge Field married Miss Sarah P. Meacham, a descendant, on her mother's side, of the famous Hyde family, and born in Springfield, Mass. The Judge is fresh, alert and healthful for a settler of forty-four years ago, and has for many years past given all his time to the management of his large fortune, accumulated almost wholly in Wisconsin.
