CHILE, a republican state of South America, bounded by the Pacific on the W., and on the E. partly by the Andes. The republic extends from lat. 24° 20' S. to Cape Horn, and is divided into Cisandine, or Western Chile, to Cape Froward, lat. 53° 55' S.; and Transandine, or Eastern Chile, comprising Patagonia, or the territory of Magellan (cap. Punto Arenas founded 1853), and the island Tierra del Fuego. The claim to the territory S. of the Rio Negro is disputed by the Argentine Confederation. The slopes of the Andes form the greater part of Chile. The volcanic peak of Aconcagua, on the E. boundary N.E. of Valparaiso, rises to an elev. of 23,910 ft., that of Maypu, S. of it, to 17,644 ft. There are several passes across the Chilean range: I. Aconcagua at an elevation of 14,000 feet; II. Portillo, 14,370; and III. Tunyan and Cumbre, 12,450 feet. North of the Rio Chuapa the whole country is formed by the declivity of the Andes, except a narrow belt of plain 60 to 80 feet in elevation, bordering the sea. The surface is very irregular, rocky, sandy, and almost barren and uncultivated, except a few spots on the banks of the rivers. South of Rio Chuapa the country is more diversified. Hilly and sterile tracts occupy the middle of this space, but on either side are valleys and plains of considerable fertility. From the Rio Maule to the Biobio the land becomes more level, and is in general more fertile. The climate of Central Chile is hot and dry. In summer the thermometer rises to 90° and 95° Fahr.; in the other seasons the air is more temperate, and the climate is, on the whole, healthy. In spring and winter ice is sometimes seen even on the coasts. In some of the valleys, as Copiapo in the N., years pass over without rain falling, but dews are frequent. Farther south showers are only occasional, sometimes at an interval of three years. In the vicinity of the river Biobio, dep. Concepcion, rain falls regularly in winter. South of this river the rains are irregular, but fall heavily. In spring the sky is cloudy, but for many months of the year it is clear and transparent. High gales, blowing in particular directions, are not unfrequent, and earthquakes occur very often, particularly near the coast. Snow falls on the summits of the Andes, and, by its gradual melting, affords a supply of water to the rivers. The lower limits of the snow-line are, N. extremity 17,000 feet, in middle 12,780 feet, in S. extremity 8300 feet. The rivers N. of the Maypu bring down to the coast little water. None are navigable. S. of lat. 34° the rains are sufficiently copious to form considerable rivers. The Maule is navigable for vessels drawing seven feet water. The Biobio, the largest river in the country, has a course of 200 m., is 2 m. wide at its mouth at New Concepcion; navigable for boats in its whole course, but too shallow for large vessels. The Callecalle river admits vessels of considerable size. The principal lakes are Llanquihue, Ranco, Huanhue, Naguelhuapi, and Riñihue, between 39° and 41° S., and Coluguape, and Capor in Patagonia. There are good harbours at Valdivia, Coquimbo, Valparaiso, New Concepcion, and Puerto Montt. The tracts through the valley and ravines are only passable by mules, and good roads and bridges are much needed.

The vegetation of the north of Chile is very limited. Tropical plants do not grow from the extreme dryness of the soil. Farther south Indian corn, wheat, barley, oats, beans, and hemp are cultivated; and melons, pumpkins, figs, grapes, pomegranates, oranges, peaches, apples, and olives are abundant. The S. forests also contain a variety of excellent timber trees; and this is the native country of the potato. Among the animals of prey the puma is the most conspicuous. The guanaco and llama abound in the plains of the S. provinces, and the pastures feed large herds of cattle, horses, asses, mules, and goats. The coast abounds with whale, cod, and pilchard. Jerked beef, tallow, hides, and live stock are exported. Gold is found in the sands of the rivers, and was formerly, though not now, collected. Silver mines exist in the S. Andes, but silver and copper mines are chiefly wrought in the more N. parts; lead and iron are found, but are not worked. On the river Biobio coal and lignite beds abound, and are partially wrought. The pop. consists of the descendants of the Spaniards and the aboriginal tribes. All the inhabitants of the Biobio are of European descent, with scarcely any mixture of Indian blood. The aborigines inhabit almost exclusively the country south of this river. [ARAUCANIA.] The religion is Roman Catholic. Manufs. earthenwares, linen cloths, cordage, soap, copperwares, leather, and brandy. Exports (1862), copper, silver, corn, hides, nitre, wool, cocoa, etc., to the value of 2,863,434*l.* Imports, cottons, woollens, irons, linens, gunpowder, hardwares, coals, bags, bricks, beer and ale, rice, tea, wine, pepper, silk, etc., to the value of 979,344*l.* Debt 1,597,915*l.* Army (1862) 3093 men, besides 29,698 national guards or militia. Navy, 4 steamers, with 27 guns; 1 screw sloop, with 5 guns; and 2 paddle steamers, with 2 guns. Chile was taken possession of by the Spaniards after the conquest of Peru, and a settlement formed at Santiago in 1541. The struggle for independence against the mother country commenced in 1810, and terminated in 1818 by the battle of Maypu and the formation of a republic. The government is vested in a supreme director, a senate of 20 members, and a house of representatives, to which a deputy is sent for every 20,000 persons. It is at present (1864) the best governed and most prosperous of the S. American republics. There are a university and lyceum at Santiago, and government schools and seminaries established throughout several districts. Santiago is the capital of the republic and the seat of government.

CHILI, a township, U. S., North America, New York, 10 m. S.W. Rochester. P. 2247.

CHI-LI or PE-CHE-LI, the most N. prov. of China, and mostly between lat. 35° and 41° 30' N.; lon. 114° and 120° E.; having N. Mongolia, E. the Gulf of Pe-chi-li, and on the other sides the provs. Shang-tung, Shan-se, and Ho-nan. P. 27,990,871. (?) It is well watered, but is the least productive prov. of China Proper; it owes its importance to containing the capital Peking, and the great depôts of rice and salt for the internal supply of the empire, and of the cattle sent into China from Mongolia. Coal of inferior quality is raised in considerable quantities. The prov. is divided into 11 depts. Chief cities Peking and Yung-ping.

CHI-LI or PE-CHI-LI (GULF OF), an inlet of the Yellow Sea, between lat. 37° 10' and 39° 20' N.; lon. 118° and 121° E., communicating N. with the Gulf of Leao-tong, and E. with the Yellow Sea; bounded on other sides by the Chinese provs. Chi-li and Shang-tung. Length and breadth about 160 m. each. It receives the Pei-ho river on W., and the Chan-tou on N.

CHILCOTHE or CHILLICOTHE, a town of the U. S., North America, Ohio, on the Scioto River, and Ohio Canal, 43 m. S. Columbus. P. (1860) 7626. It has several churches, court-house, and bank. It was cap. of the state from 1800 to 1810.

CHILKA, a lake of British India, between the presids. Madras and Bengal. It is 42 m. long from N.E. to S.W., and 15 m. in breadth. A branch of the Mahanuddy River enters it, and in lat. 9° 42' N., lon. 85° 40' E., it enters the sea by a narrow and deep outlet. The lake has several islands, and its waters are salt and shallow.

CHILKEEA, a town of British India, presid. of Bengal, upper provs., dist. and 70 m. W.N.W. Bareilly, and a principal mart of the trade between the British territory and Kumaon Tibet.

CHILLAHTARA, a town of British India, dist. and 22 m. N.W. Banda, on rt. b. of the Jumna, here crossed by a ferry. The cotton grown in the vicinity is shipped here, and sent down the river to the lower provinces.

CHILLAN, a town of Chile, prov. and 120 m. N.E. Concepcion, on the Nubee River.

CHILLENDEAN, a pa. of England, co. Kent, 3½ m. S.S.E. Wingham. Ac. 196. P. 127.

CHILLESFORD, a pa. of England, co. Suffolk, 3 m. N.W. Oxford. Ac. 1806. P. 214.

CHILLIANWALLA, a vill., Western India, Punjab, on l. b. of the Jehlum, 85 m. N.W. Lahore, celebrated for a victory of the British over the Sikhs, 13th January 1849. An obelisk has been erected in memory of the fallen.

CHILLINGHAM, a pa. of England, co. Northumberland, on the Till, 4½ m. S.E. Wooler. Ac. 4929. P. 328.

CHILLINGTON, a pa. of England, co. Somerset, 3½ m. W.N.W. Crewkerne. Ac. 881. P. 298.

CHILLSQUAQUE, a township of the U. S., North America, Pennsylvania, 65 m. N. Harrisburg.

CHILLON (CASTLE OF), a stronghold of Switzerland, Canton Vaud, 6 m. S.E. Vevey, at the E. of the Lake of Geneva, used as an arsenal.

CHILLON, a town of Spain, New Castile, prov. and 56 m. S.W. Ciudad-Real. P. 2415. It has quicksilver mines in vicinity.

CHILMARK, a pa. of England, co. Wilts, 4 m. E. Hindon. Ac. 3154. P. 642.

CHILMAREE, Chalamari, a town of British India, presid. of Bengal, dist. and 40 m. S.E. Rungpoor, on the Brahmapotra. P. 2000.

CHILOE, an island on the W. coast of South America, which, with several smaller islands, forms a prov. of the Chilean republic. It is separated from Patagonia by Gulf of Ancud, and extends from lat. 44° 40' to 43° 20' S.; lon. 74° W. It is 120 m. in length, and 40 m. in breadth. P. (1854) 61,586. It is hilly and densely wooded, except around the coast, where it is partially cleared and cultivated. Climate temperate, but moist; in winter almost incessant rains prevail, with frequent gales from W. to N.W.; the summer is warm, and, on the whole, it is healthy. Soil, a rich sandy loam. Chief products, wheat, barley, potatoes, apples, and strawberries; and cattle, sheep, and swine are reared. The shores produce abundance of oysters, mussels, and pico (a barnacle), which form a principal part of the food of the inhabitants. The population consists of natives, originally of Spanish descent, and aboriginal Indians, but the great bulk of the inhabitants are a mixed breed. A coarse woollen cloth, dyed blue, is the principal local manufacture. Exports comprise provisions, timber, hides, brooms, and woollens. Lignite coal is found. The island was discovered by the Spaniards in 1558. Castro, the ancient capital, was founded in 1566. San Carlos is now the chief town and port. This island was the last to throw off the authority of the Spaniards. The Chiloe archipelago consists of upwards of 60 small islands, about 30 of which are inhabited, and several are well cultivated.

CHILPANZINGO, a town of Mexico, dep. and 120½ m. W.S.W. Mexico, on the road from Acapulco, and 4800 feet above the sea.

CHILTEPEC, an arm of the River Tabasco, Mexico, leaves the main stream at San Juan Bautista, and after a N. course of 60 or 70 m. enters the Gulf of Mexico, 30 m. W.S.W. La Frontera.

CHILTERN HILLS, a range of chalk hills of England, co. Bucks, the S. part of which they traverse, between Goring in Oxfordshire and Tring in co. Herts. Breadth from 15 to 20 m. Height of principal summit near Wendover, 905 feet above the sea. The region is said to have been formerly covered with a forest, some traces of which are extant, and it was notoriously infested with depredators, to suppress whose ravages the office of "stewards of the Chiltern hundreds" was established under the crown. The duties of the office are now only nominal, but the recognition of them is retained to enable members of the House of Commons, by accepting them under the crown, to relinquish their seats in that assembly, which a member cannot otherwise do. There are three Chiltern hundreds, and the office is in the gift of the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

CHILTINGTON (WEST), a pa. of England, co. Sussex,  $7\frac{1}{2}$  m. N.W. Steyning. Ac. 3917. P. 668.

CHILTOHNE-DOMER, a pa. of England, co. Somerset, 2 m. S. Ilchester. Ac. 1392. P. 242.

CHILTON, several pas. of Engl.—I. co. Berks, 3 m. N. East Ilsley. Ac. 1415. P. 315.—II. co. Bucks,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  m. N.N.W. Thame. Ac. 2080. P. 364.—III. co. Suffolk,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. N.E. Sudbury. Ac. 979. P. 149.—IV. (Castillo), co. Somerset,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  m. E. Ilchester. Ac. 631. P. 112.—V. (Foliat), cos. Berks and Wilts, 2 m. W. Hungerford. Ac. 3740. P. 691.—VI. (Trinity), co. Somerset, N. Bridgewater. Ac. 1543. P. 53.

CHILVERS-COTON, a pa. of Engl., co. Warwick, 1 m. S.W. Nuneaton. Ac. 3730. P. 2764.

CHILWELL, a hamlet of England, co. and  $4\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.W. Nottingham, pa. Attenbury. P. 815.

CHILWORTH, a pa. of England, co. Hants,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.E. Romsey. Ac. 1400. P. 176.—II. a chapelry, co. Surrey,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.E. Guildford.

CHIMALTENANGO, a town of Central America, state and 28 m. W.N.W. Guatemala. P. 4000.

CHIMAMUA, a town of Central America, isthmus of Tehuantepec, a favourite resort of the inhabitants of Minatitlan, 10 m. distant. P. 1600.

CHIMANAS, a group of islets in the Caribbean Sea, in lat.  $10^{\circ} 19' N.$ ; lon.  $64^{\circ} 51' W.$

CHIMAY, a town of Belgium, prov. Hainault, cap. cant., on the Blanche, 32 m. S.E. Mons. P. 3041. It has a college, iron works, and breweries.

CHIMBORAZO, a mountain of South America, and the culminating point of the Andes of Quito. Lat.  $1^{\circ} 30' S.$ ; lon.  $79^{\circ} W.$  Altitude 21,424 feet. It is in the form of a cone, and perpetually snow-clad. This was long considered the culminating point of the Andes, and the highest mountain in the world. It was ascended by Humboldt, 23d June 1802, to an elevation of 19,286 feet, & again by Bousingault and Hall, 16th December 1831, to 19,695 feet.

CHIMERA or KHMARA, a town of European Turkey, Albania, on the Strait of Otranto, 22 m. N.W. Delvino, at the foot of the range of mountains of same name, anc. Acroceranus, which terminates at Cape Linguetta, on the Bay of Avlona.

CHINA, a large and important country, Eastern Asia, constituting the principal part of the Chinese empire.—China Proper extends between lat.  $20^{\circ}$  and  $42^{\circ} N.$ ; lon.  $98^{\circ}$  and  $122^{\circ} E.$  Greatest length about 1600 m.; breadth varies from 900 to 1300 m. Having N. Manchooria and Mongolia, W. Tibet and other dependencies, S. the Burmese, Laos, and Anamese dominions, from S.E. round to N.E. the China and Yellow Seas. It is shut out from its N. dependencies by the great wall, constructed in the 3d century before the Christian era, and which extends over hill and dale for 1250 miles, varies from 15 to 30 feet in height, and is strengthened at regular intervals by large square towers. This defensive barrier is now in decay. Estim. area of China Proper, 1,465,336 sq. m. P. in 1857 estimated by Sir John Bowring at 350,000,000 to 400,000,000. By census of 1842 it was 414,686,556. The Chinese empire is composed of five great divisions, Manchooria, Mongolia, Turkestan, or Little Bucharia, Tibet, and China Proper. Estim. area of whole empire, 3,010,400 sq. m. The first named divisions are of great extent, thinly peopled, and much less civilised than China Proper.

China consists of an elevated region in the N., an alluvial plain in the centre, through which the Yang-tze-kiang & Hoang-ho rivers flow; and in the S., a region alternately undulating and interspersed with valleys & mountains. It is estimated that 2-3ds of the country are mountainous. Next to the great rivers already named, which rank amongst the largest in Asia, the Yun-ling, flowing near Peking, and the Se-keang or Western river, flowing near Canton, are of the highest importance; the prov. Yun-nan is traversed by the main streams, or by considerable affluents of all the great rivers of Further India. Lakes are both numerous and extensive; that of Tung-ting, in the prov. Hoo-nan, is stated to be 220 m. in circuit. The coast line has been estimated at 2500 m. in length, and it is alternately bold and rocky, or low and swampy; it presents, however, many good harbours at the mouths of the rivers & elsewhere. In China the winters are colder, and the summers hotter, than in the same parallels of Western Europe. Peking, in the same lat. as Naples, has its average temperature  $9^{\circ}$  lower. In the southern provinces, near Canton and Macao, the winter months are dry and comparatively cold; March & April bring fogs and a milder temperature. Much rain falls in May, and from July to September there is intense heat, with cyclones, here called ty-foong, and thunder storms. There are no active volcanoes in China Proper; but in several localities there are hot springs and emissions of gas. The vegetable productions of the country belong chiefly to the temperate zone. Of tropical plants, the bamboo is most prized for building & domestic uses. The camphor-tree grows to the height of 50 feet, & is a good timber tree; many lacker shrubs, from which gum varnish is obtained; the croton sebiferum or tallow tree; an inferior sort of cinnamon-tree, rhubarb, smilax, and other herbs, are common, and the rare plant ginseng. Among the fruits are the China orange, the ly-chee, loquat, and wampee. The nelumbium, a large water lily, yields edible seeds; and the camellia, the olea fragrans, the tree peony, and the Indian chrysanthemum are among the most conspicuous flowers. The wild animals of China, if they ever abounded, have been long since almost extirpated by the cultivation of the land, and the dense population; but the tiger is still known in the forests of Yun-nan, and wild cats in the forests of the S. The domestic dog is chiefly of one variety, like the shepherd's dog, of a pale yellow colour. The deer family are now rare. Birds include pheasants, quails, ring-dove, and fishing cormorant. A few harmless reptiles still exist, and the locust frequently commits great devastations. Rice is the principal article of culture, and the main food of the population; cotton is extensively grown for clothing in the N. provinces; wheat, barley, millet, and other grains of temperate climates are raised, especially in the N. and W. provinces, where the climate is similar to that of latitudes much farther N. in Europe, the cold being often severe. The density of population, among other circumstances, has, in many parts, compelled the cultivation of every spot of ground at all capable of yielding produce for nutriment, & the mountain sides are often terraced and manured on principles of the strictest economy. The land is cultivated everywhere in small patches; a farm of 8 or 10 acres is considered large. Kitchen vegetables, oil plants of various kinds, and tobacco are almost universal articles of culture. Tea, the most valuable article of the foreign trade, and also extensively consumed in China, is a product almost peculiar to this region. It is raised chiefly between lat. 25° and 31° N., on a tract extending from the coast inland for 500 or 600 m., & having an area of 350 to 400 sq. m., in the provs. Fo-kien, Ngan-hoei, Kiang-si, and Che-kiang; also in the central provinces of Hoo-nan and Hoo-peh. The soil on which it grows is chiefly composed of disintegrated granite and ferruginous sandstone. During the season 1862-3 the export of tea to Great Britain was 121,273,580 lbs.; and of China silk the export was 83,264 bales. The black teas are mostly prepared in Fo-kien, and the green in Ngan-hoei, both derived from one species of plant. The prov. Chih produces large quantities of salt and of coal, which, though of inferior quality, is especially valuable, owing to the general absence of timber or wood for fuel; in the S.E. districts lignite is also found. In Kan-soo great quantities of tobacco are raised; in Che-kiang, silk is the chief article of produce, sugar in the S. Cotton, camphor, ginseng, rhubarb, & other drugs, numerous gums & varnishes, cassia, musk, the precious metals, gems, copper, tin, lead, mercury, arsenic, iron, and the finest porcelain clay, are among the chief products of the empire, the principal mines being in Kwi-choo and Yun-nan. Live stock numerous only in the W. provinces. Manufactures are of the most varied, & often of the most exquisite description. Chinese porcelain, silks, embroidery, & lacquered wares are unequalled for brilliancy, richness, and durability; & in carved goods in tortoise-shell, ivory, & horn, in engraving, the manufactures of paper, ink, cabinet-work, & bell-casting, the whole of which are carried on without the aid of machinery, the Chinese excel. The traffic, in the E. provinces especially, is conducted chiefly by water; and among the most remarkable of the national works for this purpose, is the Grand Canal, extending from Hang-chow-foo N. for 700 m. to the Yan-kiang river. The W. provinces import rice and other grains from the E., in return for metallic and some other products. From Tibet, China imports coarse woollens, gold, Indian piece goods, shells, rhinoceros' horns, feathers, in return for silks, porcelain, English broad cloths, pearls, coal, and tea. A considerable trade is carried on with Nepal, Bootan, and Kumaon, the exports to which comprise borax, salt, and woollen goods; the returns being in grain, mole-skins, tobacco, and Indian ruffs. Caravans go frequently from China to Yarkand, and other parts of Chinese Turkestan, with tea and various manufactures, and bring back cattle and raw silk. The overland trade with Burma is extensive; Bhamo, in the Burmese dominion, is its principal seat, where a large annual mart is held for many months during the year. The trade with Russia is wholly conducted at Kiachta (which see), on the Mongolian frontier, where Chinese raw and manufactured silks, porcelain, rhubarb, sugar-candy, musk, and tea, are exchanged for furs, sheep & lamb skins, & woollen goods. From Leao-tong, on the N. frontier of the prov. Chi-li, wheat, cotton, & drugs are received in return for coarse manufactured goods. The maritime trade is by far the most important. From 70 to 80 junks, and from 40 to 50 foreign vessels, averaging 500 tons each, owned by the king, leave Siam in the summer with rice, sugar, japan wood, betel-nut, zinc, ivory, gamboge, and take back flour, pease, cured mutton, and other provisions. Gold, ebony, tin, edible birds' nests, shark fins, sea-slug, pepper, and various condiments, are imported from the archipelago. The total maritime export and import trade of China with European nations (Russia excepted), and with the United States, in 1862, has been estimated at upwards of 48 millions sterling, of which Shanghai alone contributes 37,531,389*l.* Among the exports to Great Britain in 1863 from June to December, was 35,067,000 lbs. of raw cotton; the imports of silver specie from thence in that year 2,628,389*l.*, & of British produce and manufactures 3,886,389*l.* The finances of the empire are believed to be in an unsatisfactory condition, although the revenue is officially stated to amount to 191,804,189 taels, or about 63,934,173*l.* annually. The opium exported from India to China in 1861, amounted in value to 9,428,887*l.*; this is the principal import into China, the trade being now (1864) legalized. The emperor is of the Manchoo dynasty, who conquered the country in the 17th century; and the chief posts in the great offices of state are held by Manchoo Tartars. The present emperor is a minor, ruling through his uncle as Prince Regent. The government is despotic, and is conducted under the emperor by an "inner" or privy council, a general council; the six supreme boards of civil office, revenue, rites, war, punishment, and public works; a censorate, high courts of memorials and appeals, and the imperial college which regulates every thing relating to literature and science. The last is a most important engine of Chinese polity, literary acquirements being a chief step to advancement in the public service, and schools being universal. The code of laws is reckoned good, and the administration of those on the whole mild; but the slavish subjection in which the administrators are held, and a system of organized espionage on the functionaries, leads to deceit and bribery throughout all the offices of government. There are 18 provinces, each subdivided into what we may call departments, arrondissements, and districts, or foo, ting, choo, and heen, which titles are respectively affixed to the names of their capital cities and towns. The metropolitan province Chi-li, for instance, which is about as large as England and Wales, consists of 11 foo, 3 ting, 17 choo, and 174 heen districts, all under special governors; besides which officers, a tsung-tuh or governor-general has usually authority over two or more provinces. The standing military force consists of four national divisions—the Manchoo in 678 companies of 100 men each; the Mongols in 211 companies, and 106,000 Chinese, all cavalry; and 500,000 native infantry, besides 125,000 irregular troops or militia—in all 829,900 men. Besides these, many troops are stationed in the provinces of Mongolia, Turkestan, Tibet, where the government is military; and in all considerable cities of the N. provinces, there is a garrison of Tartar troops. Since the termination of the contest with the English and French, the allies have aided the government in forming regiments of disciplined troops after the European model with great success. At the Taku forts British sergeants drilled a select number of Tartar soldiers, who have formed the nucleus of a disciplined army at Peking. An Anglo-Chinese force, 5000 strong, aided in suppressing the Taipin rebellion round Shanghai, and a Franco-Chinese contingent, 3000 strong, protects the treaty port of Ningpo. In physical character

the Chinese rank under the Mongolian family of man; the harsher features of this family being considerably softened. The head and face are square-formed or angular—the nose flat, lips thick, and eyes small, with oblique eyelids, and cheek-bones prominent. Colour of skin lemon yellow, hair black, beard scanty. While young, both males and females are good-looking, but after 20 the features gradually assume a harsh appearance. The practice of retarding the growth of the foot in females (which does not extend to the labouring classes) renders them lame, and comparatively incapable of active exertion. The Chinese intellect is shrewd, and takes a common sense view of things; is not apt to be imaginative or speculative. The disposition is mild and peaceful, but deceitful; filial affection and parental reverence are cultivated, but deliberate infanticide, practised on motives of expediency, shows a low state of moral feeling. At a very remote period, the natives appear to have advanced to a considerable state of civilisation; and to the practice of the arts of domestic life, especially the arts of printing, the invention of the mariner's compass, and the manufacture of silk and porcelain; but here they have paused, and their government and institutions tend not to the further progress of improvement. The language is monosyllabic, and their letters express words and ideas, formed upon a hieroglyphic basis, the roots or original characters amounting to 214. The fine arts have made no great progress; and though education in reading and writing is common, yet they have no pretensions to learning or science. The superstition of Confucius is that adopted by the court and upper classes, & consists in a refined deism, with a great reverence for ancestors, and for the moral precepts of Confucius. Buddhism is the religion of the great mass of the people in China Proper, Manchouria, Mongolia, & Tibet, which last country is its headquarters, being the seat of its most sacred Llamas. The Taou belief is that next in importance, as respects the number of its votaries. Mohammedans are said to be numerous, especially in the prov. Shen-si; and in Chinese Turkestan they form the majority of the population. Roman Catholics and Jews form a comparatively insignificant proportion of the pop.; of the former there are estimated to be 320,000, and other Christian sects considerably less. The political influence of China extends considerably beyond the territorial limits of her empire; and it is customary for embassies to be sent at stated times, generally from two to five years, from many surrounding countries, with presents to the emperor; other presents of at least an equal value being given back in return. The Chinese court affects to consider the complimentary gifts from foreign states as so much tribute, and in this sense they enumerate Anam, Siam, Borneah, the Laos, Sooloo, the Netherlands, and even Great Britain, as tributary nations. The rule, however, of the present Tartar dynasty, even in the heart of its own dominions, is held by a very uncertain tenure; the Meaou-tsze tribes in the S.W. provs. of China, and supposed to be their original inhabitants, have repeatedly risen in rebellion; secret societies, the principal of which is called "the Triad," and which has for its object the restoration of a native dynasty, are rapidly extending. The native records of China extend as far back as B.C. 2204; and however fabulous their early portion may be considered, there is no doubt that China is the oldest existing dominion on the globe. Some scattered notices of this empire appear in the works of middle-age travellers; but Marco Polo was the first among the moderns to give a detailed account of the country. The commencement of direct European commerce with China dates only since the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope. The first attempt of the English to open a trade with China was made in 1637, when four merchant vessels arrived at Macao; but through the intrigues of the Portuguese there established, the enterprise failed. Afterwards the East India Company carried on some small traffic at the different maritime ports, and chiefly at Canton. In 1792 Lord Macartney's embassy attempted to put the trade on a more liberal basis, but with little success. In 1816 Lord Amherst's mission, for a similar purpose, also failed of success, though the English trade continued pretty quiet and steady for the next 20 years. In 1854 the exclusive trade of the East India Company with China terminated, and the country was thrown open to general traders. Still the trade with foreigners was refused to be recognised by the government of Peking; and numerous petty annoyances were continually occurring, till at last, in 1839, the Chinese government forcibly obliged the English merchants at Canton to deliver up 20,283 chests of opium, which having been destroyed, and compensation refused, war was declared by England, and the coasts of China were blockaded by a British naval force, amounting in 1842 to 37 ships, mounting 784 guns, and manned by 7069 men. After a series of successes, a peace was concluded at Nanking, August 29, 1842, by which European merchants and a British consul were allowed to reside at the ports of Canton, Amoy, Fou-chow, Ning-po, and Shang-hai; the island of Hong-Kong was ceded to the English in perpetuity, and 6,000,000 dols. were agreed to be paid by seven instalments, as indemnity for the opium destroyed; 3,000,000 dols. as the amount of debts due by insolvent Hong merchants; and 12,000,000 as indemnity for the expenses of the war. In 1847, and again in 1856, fresh outrages led to the capture of the Bogue forts, the bombardment of Canton, and the destruction of junks. On the 26th May 1858, a treaty was entered into at Tien-tsin, between Great Britain, France, & China, by which foreign ministers are now resident at the court of Peking, missionaries are to be protected, freedom granted to Christians to exercise their religion, travellers with passports are allowed to go into the interior, new ports are opened, and the free navigation of the Yang-tse-kiang is declared, with customs under foreign management at all the treaty ports. On 21st Aug. 1860, the Taku Forts, at the mouth of the Pei-hoe, were held by the allied British and French, and on 13th October Peking was taken. Since, the allies have been on friendly terms with the government, aiding them with land and sea forces in driving the Taiping rebels from the treaty ports of Shang-hai and Ningpo, so that foreign commerce has flourished, and the industrious inhabitants protected.

CLYDE (the Glotta of Tacitus), one of the largest and most important rivers in Scotland. It takes its rise from numerous streams flowing from a mountain range in S. part of Lanarkshire and borders of Dumfriesshire; the chief summits of which are the Lowthers, Leadhills, Queensberry Hill, and Rodger Law, with elevations approaching 3000 feet. The original source of the Clyde, popularly so called, has its rise about 2 m. S.E. Rodger Law, and 4 m. S.E. vill. of Elvanfoot, at an elevation of 1400 feet. After a course of a few miles this small stream is joined by the Daer, Powtrail, Elvan, and other mountain rivulets. It now flows in a N.E. direction, receiving tributaries from the Tinto Hills, then turning with many windings N.W. and W., is joined by the Douglas Water from the S.W., the Medwin, Mouse, etc., and, entering Lanark parish, forms the celebrated falls, descending by several rapids about 230 feet, amid high shelving sandstone rocks and picturesque scenery. The falls are Bonnington Linn, 30 feet, Corra Linn, 84 feet, and Stonebyres, 80 feet. Its course is now through rich and fertile valleys on to Glasgow, where it is navigable for vessels of 200 tons, its depth at high water being 19 feet, and the rise of the tide 6 to 8 feet. From this city it expands into a river navigable for ships of the largest class, and flows W.N.W., dividing the co. Renfrew on the S. from Dumbar-ton on the N., receiving the tributaries of the Kelvin, Cart, and Leven. At Bowling it receives the Forth and Clyde Canal. The salt water extends to 1 m. above Bowling, where the firth may be said to commence. After passing Dumbarton it gradually widens, till between Greenock and Helensburgh it is 4 m. in width, spreading N. into Gareloch and Loch Long, W. into Holy Loch, and S. into the Firth of Clyde proper, with the isles of Bute and the Cumbraes, situated at its mouth. The estuary extends to Rosneath Point 18 m. below Greenock, with a mean width of 32 m., after which it is enclosed by Ayrshire and the Isle of Arran, and becomes identified with the N. Channel. The length of the river from its source to Glasgow, including windings, is about 75 m.; from Glasgow to the S. point of Bute island about 45 m. In the Clyde, in 1812, was launched the first boat in Europe successfully propelled by steam. The customs revenue of the Clyde ports for 1863-4 amounted to 2,281,400*l.*, and the emigration from the river to America and Australia is rapidly increasing.—Clydesdale is the district forming the valley of the Clyde [LANARKSHIRE], and is celebrated for its orchards, coal and iron mines, and horses.

COLUMBIA (BRITISH), a colony of British North America, between lat. 49° and 55° N.; and lon. 115° and 133° W. Boundaries as settled by Act of Parliament, Aug. 1858, N. Simpson river and the Parly branch of the Peace river, separating it from the new British colony of Stickeen, W. the Pacific Ocean, S. the frontiers of the U. S. of America, on the parallel of 49° N., and E. the main chain of the Rocky Mountains, and including Queen Charlotte island, and all others adjacent, except Vancouver island. Area (estim.) 222,080 sq. m. P. (1863) 64,000. The Rocky Mountains extend from S.E. to N.W. 40 to 100 m. broad, rising in Mount Hooker and Mount Brown, lat. 52°, to 15,000 or 16,000 feet. The passes across these are high arid plains. The country between the mountains & the ocean, 400 m. broad, is traversed by lower parallel ranges. The Fraser riv., which has its source near Mount Brown, flows from N. to S., nearly through the centre of the region, and at Lytton it is joined by the Thompson river from the N.E., and farther N.

by the Stuart and Chilicotin from the N.W. The coast is broken up by numerous creeks, bays, and harbours, and in the interior are many large lakes. Soil igneous or volcanic, and in many places extremely fertile. Climate cold and variable; snow, sleet, rain, and fog visit the settler in rapid succession; winter lasts from September to May, the temperature varying from freezing-point to 20° or 30° below zero, and the snow lying to a great depth. Mean summer temp. at Fort Hope, in the interior, 62°; on the S.W. coast the temp. is greatly milder, and the fall of snow trifling. Prevalent winds S.W. There are vast forests of cypress, pine, fir, hemlock, yew, oak, birch, poplar, maple, etc., but few or no ashes, beeches, or elms. Many tropical fruits are indigenous on the W. shores. Animals comprise the bear, buffalo, moose and red deer, puma, wolf, with numerous species of birds, including the eagle, hawk, kite, grouse, snipe, wild pigeon, crane, thrush, lark, & especially geese and wild ducks; and the rivers and lakes abound in excellent salmon and other fish. Exports (1862): skins, timber, oil, wool, etc., to the value of 48,019£. Imports: woollens, apparel, beer and ale, leather, spirits, cottons, iron, hardwares, machinery, wine, currants, etc., to the value of 224,555£. Gold was discovered in 1856 on the Upper Columbia, and next year on the middle course of the Fraser river, and in the dist. of Thompson river and Lake Shoushwap. In 1861 the total yield of gold was estimated at 1,527,975*l.*, more than one-third of which was from Cariboo on Quesnel river, an affluent of the Fraser. Other minerals comprise silver, copper, iron, plumbago, and coal. British Columbia was established as a crown colony in 1858; cap. New Westminster on the rt. b. of Fraser river, 15 m. above its entrance into the Gulf of Georgia. Two useful roads were in progress in 1864; one from Lilloet and another from Yale, both terminating at Alexandria, whence there are few obstacles to the navigation of the Fraser upwards. [FRASER RIVER.]

COLUMBIA or OREGON RIVER, N.W. America, British and U. S. doms. The main river rises in the Rocky Mountains, British territory, about lat. 50° N., flows successively N., S., and S.W., and, after a course estimated at 1200 m., enters the Pacific in lat. 46° 5' N., 150 m. S. Fuca Strait. The lower part of its course forms the boundary between the state of Oregon and Washington territory, and near its head waters, in British Columbia, gold was discovered in 1856. Its principal affluents are Snake and Lewis rivers, and it has fine rapids across the Cascade Mountains, up to which vessels of 300 tons can ascend. By the Oregon treaty its entire navigation is open to British vessels.

CONSTANTINE, a pa. of England, co. Cornwall, 6 m. S.W. Falmouth. Ac. 8179. P. 2014.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Stamboul, the cap. of the Turkish, as formerly of the Byzantine or Lower Roman empire, near the E. extremity of European Turkey, separated by the Bosphorus from Asia Minor. Lat. (Mosque of St Sophia) 41° 0' 16" N.; lon. 28° 59' 14" E. Estim. pop., including Pera, Galata, Scutari, etc., 800,000; of whom 200,000 Greeks, 40,000 Armenians, and 60,000 Jews. The city proper, occupying a triangular promontory of land between the Bosphorus and its inlet the "Golden Horn," is about 3½ m. in length N.W. to S.E., by from 1 to 4 m. in breadth, enclosed by a triple range of walls 12½ m. in cir., and entered at present by 28 gates. The city is built on an undulating declivity, highest on the land side. Externally it has an imposing appearance, with its picturesque mosques, cupolas, and minarets, interspersed with cypresses, and its port crowded with shipping; but internally it consists mostly of a labyrinth of crooked, ill-paved, and dirty lanes, and a crowd of low-built and small houses, formed of wood or roughly hewn stone. Its drainage is favoured by its uneven site and a great number of public fountains, which amply supply the city with water, brought by two aqueducts 10 m. in length. A great number of dogs range the streets, and act as scavengers. Each ward has its own particular dogs; and should an individual cur trespass upon a neighbouring territory, he is immediately driven off by the dogs which hold it in occupation. The climate is variable, and the temperature, especially in winter and spring, subject to great vicissitudes; snow and hard frost alternate with mild weather. The mean temp. of year is 56°-3, winter 40°-3, summer 71°-2,

Fahr. The annual quantity of rain is moderate. This capital, including its suburbs, contains 14 royal and 332 other mosques, 40 Mohammedan colleges, 183 hospitals, 36 Christian churches, several synagogues, 130 public baths, and 180 khans or inns, besides numerous bazaars, coffee-houses, and caravanserais. The extreme point of the city on the E. was occupied by the "Seraglio" formerly, the private domain of the Sultan, the boundaries of which are supposed to have been those of the anc. Byzantium. It comprised an area of about 3 m. in cir., separately enclosed by walls, and extending down to the Sea of Marmara. Its surface was "irregularly covered with detached suites of apartments, baths, mosques, kiosks, gardens, and groves of cypress." Its inner inclosure alone was devoted to the use of the Sultan's harem. In the second court was the treasury, imperial kitchens and stables, divan, hall of justice, the arsenal, formerly the church of St Irene, and the Corinthian column of Theodosius; and in the outer court (the anc. Forum Augusti), the mint, state offices, infirmaries, etc. This court was entered from the city by a large and heavy gate termed the "Sublime Porte," a name which has thence been applied to the Turkish Government. This immense pile of buildings was burned to the ground in 1863. The new palace built by Abdul Medjid is on the W. shore of the Bosphorus, 2 or 3 m. N. of the old Seraglio. To the W. of the old palace is the noble mosque of St Sophia, originally a Christian cathedral, built between 531 and 538, at a cost equivalent to 1,000,000. This edifice is in the form of a Greek cross, 269 feet in length by 143 in breadth (in its interior), and surmounted by a flattened dome 180 feet above the ground, besides several minor cupolas, and 4 minarets, added to it by the Turks. In its interior are numerous large columns, a floor of variegated marble, and bronze gates; but most of the ancient Byzantine paintings and decorations have been hidden by Turkish inscriptions, and the general effect of the building is destroyed by the presence of a multitude of lamps, globes, and other insignificant ornaments depending from the dome. A few years ago the interior was cleared and renovated, and it has now a magnificent appearance. Near St Sophia is the mosque of Achmet, a fine structure with a beautiful marble pavement and 6 minarets, a number unusual in any other mosque of the Mohammedan world. This mosque stands on the At-meidan or "Horse square," the ancient Hippodrome of historic celebrity, a space 300 yards in length by 150 in breadth, and on which are the granite Theban obelisk set up by Theodosius, the broken pyramid of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, shorn of its bronze plates, and the identical twisted brass column which originally supported the tripod in the temple of Delphi. The other mosques are those of Solyman the Magnificent, of Mohammed II., Bajazet II., Selim II., Mustapha III., and Othman and Eyub, with the Valide mosque, built by the mother of Mohammed IV., and containing pillars from the ruins of Troy. Most of these establishments have attached to them one or more colleges or charitable institutions; that of Mohammed II. is surrounded by eight endowed academies, a diet house for the poor, hospital, caravanserais, and baths, all surmounted by lead-covered cupolas. There is a university, erected in 1847, which in 1855 was used by the French as an army hospital; government naval, military, and medical colleges, as well as numerous inferior schools, public libraries, government printing establishments, and offices for journals printed in six different languages. The bazaars are extensive & well supplied, but have no architectural beauty; the numerous cemeteries, interspersed with tall cypresses, in and around the city, are among its greatest ornaments. Principal antiquities are the burnt column erected by Constantine the Great, a part of the column of Arcadius, the pillar of Marcan, vestiges of the Boucoleon palace, built by Theodosius II., the aqueduct of Valens, subterranean cisterns, the principal of which, called by the Turks the "thousand and one columns," is a vault 240 feet in length by 200 feet in width, supported by 424 pillars. At the S.W. angle of the city is the citadel of the "seven towers," now used as a military storehouse (Heptapyrgium). The city proper comprises separate quarters for the Jews, Armenians, and Greeks; that of the last, "the Fanar," extends along the shore of the "Golden Horn." This harbour, which has usurped the name of the promontory on which Byzantium was built, extends between the city and its suburbs Pera, Galata, etc., for about  $4\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.E. to N.W., breadth varying from 1 to 4 furlongs. It is deep enough to float ships of the largest size, can receive 1200 sail of the line, and is always full of mercantile and other vessels, with a vast number of caiques, graceful light boats, which here form the principal vehicles of transport. Two bridges of boats connect Stamboul with Galata, and a third, near the upper end of the harbour, with the suburb Hasskeui; besides which suburb, those of Pera, Kassim Pasha, Top-hana, and Ters-hana, with the imperial arsenals and dockyard, are on its N. shore. [SCUTARI.] Imports—corn, iron, timber, tallow, furs, cotton stuffs and yarn, woollens, silks, metallic goods, watches, jewellery, furniture, dyes, drugs, coffee, sugar, wax, copper, gums, and porcelain. Exports—silk, carpets, hides, wool, goats' hair, potash, gall, yellow berries, linseed, madder, valonea, bones. Manufs. marocco leather, saddlery, shoes, meerscham-pipe bowls, mouth-pieces, pipe-tubes; and expressly for the manufacture of the last, large numbers of cherry-trees are raised near the city. Constantinople is the see of Greek, Armenian, and Catholico-Armenian patriarchs. It was originally founded by Byzas, B.C. 656, and rebuilt by Constantine A.D. 328, since which time it has been repeatedly besieged, but only twice taken, viz., in 1204 by the Crusaders, who retained it till 1261, and by the Turks under Mohammed II., May 29, 1453,—an event which marked the final extinction of the Roman empire in the East.

Lat. 37° 52' 15" N.; lon. 4° 49' 36" W. P. (1857) 160,000. Its Moorish walls enclose a large area, much of which is now occupied by gardens or by ruins, except one large square, bordered by lofty and handsome edifices. It communicates with a suburb across the river by a bridge of 16 arches, commanded by a Saracenic castle. Its cathedral, formerly a Mohammedan mosque, and still one of the most remarkable edifices in Spain, presents in its interior a "labyrinth of columns" of all orders and materials. It has 13 parish churches, convents, bishop's palace, city hall, hospitals, founding, and other asylums, 3 colleges, and several schools. The Cordovan manufactures of leather (hence called Corduvain) have declined into insignificance; but the silversmiths and filigree workers maintain their repute; and manufactures of paper, barrels, hats, and silken fabrics are carried on. Cordova was taken by the Moors in 672, and for many centuries afterwards remained the cap. of the "Caliphate of the West," and was occupied and pillaged by the French in June 1803. It was for some time comprised in the country of the kings of Sevilla; was taken by Ferdinand III., king of Castile, in 1236, and became cap. of one of the four old provs. of Andalusia, with the title of kingdom. The prov. of Cordova is bounded N. by Badajoz and Ciudad Real, E. by Jaen, S. and S.E. by Granada and Malaga, and S.W. by Sevilla. It retains its old boundaries unaltered by the decree of 1834. Area 5186 sq. m. P. 531,356.

rom the Chinese prov. Leaotong by a wooden palisade, and having N. Manchooria, E. the Sea of Japan, and W. the Yellow Sea. Area, including islands, 80,000 sq. m. Coast line elevated and fertile; the interior is little known. Products, wheat, millet, rice, cotton, hemp, tobacco, ginseng, the fruits of Northern China, cattle, timber, furs, gold, silver, iron, rock-salt, and coal. Manufs. are similar to those of the Chinese, whose habits and religion mostly prevail among the population, though the Coreans use an alphabetic and not symbolic mode of writing. Commerce chiefly with Japan, whence are imported pepper, aromatic woods, alum, horns, Japanese and Dutch manufactured goods. The trade with China is stated to be wholly contraband; and no Corean trader is suffered to settle in China, or Chinese in Corea. Government despotic; and the election of the sovereign, and many of his important public acts, must be approved by the emperor of China. Corea is divided into 8 provinces; chief city, Han-ching. It became subject to China at the end of the 17th century, to which country it sends an embassy every four years, with tribute in ginseng root, skins, cotton, pepper, silk, horses, and silver ingots. The Archipelago of Corea comprises numerous islands and islets in the Yellow Sea, and on the coasts of the peninsula; the chief are the Quelpaert and Amherst islands. —Corea Strait is between the peninsula of Corea and the island of Kiusiu.

CORNWALL, a co. of England, forming its S.W. extremity, enclosed on all sides by the sea, except E., where it is mostly separated from Devonshire by the river Tamar. Length 78 m.; breadth 43 m. Ac. 873,600, of which 700,000 are estimated to be arable, pasture, and meadow lands. P. (1861) 369,390. Annual rainfall (at Truro) 40 in. Surface intersected from W. to E. by a ridge of rugged and bleak hills, and scantily timbered, but it has some fertile valleys. Between Mount Bay and the Scilly Islands there were formerly woods, meadows, arable lands, and 140 parish churches, which had been submerged by the ocean; and the submarine forests show, in this tract, a subsidence of at least 12 feet. On the N. coast, a considerable extent of surface has been overwhelmed with shifting sand, covering hills of several hundred feet in height. Shores greatly indented by inlets of the sea, the principal of which are St Ives and Padstow, harbours on the Irish Sea; and on the English Channel, St Blazey Bay, Falmouth Harbour, and Mount Bay, between the promontories of the Lizard and Land's End. Principal rivers, the Tamar, Lynher, Towey, Fal, and Camel or Alan. The climate is mild, especially in winter, but damp, with cloudy atmosphere and frequent rain, yet salubrious. Myrtles and some other plants of South Europe flourish in the open air, but fruits do not ripen well. Corn and potatoes are the chief crops, and agriculture has lately improved. The pilchard fishery is actively carried on. Cornwall is rich in metals. Tin was worked here by the Phœnicians long before the Christian era. Value of yearly produce of tin and copper upwards of 1,000,000. The great metallic district extends from Dartmoor in Devonshire on the E. to the Land's End on the W. Tin is found most abundantly in the St Just, St Ives, and St Austell dists. Copper in the dists. Gwennap, Redruth, Camborne, Breague, Marazion, and Gurnear. Silver, lead, zinc, iron, manganese, antimony, cobalt, and bismuth are also found in various localities. Soapstone and porcelain clay are extensively shipped from Cornwall for the potteries. The exports are nearly confined to mining produce and fish. Manufs. almost wholly domestic. Cornwall, including the Scilly islands, is subdivided into 9 hundreds and 203 pas., all in the diocese of Exeter, and S.W. circuit. Before the Reform Act it contained 20 bors., some mere vills., each sending 2 mems. to H. of C. It now, with its towns, returns 10 mems., including 2 for each div. of the co. Reg. elect. E. div. 5705; W. do. 4577. Princip. towns: Bodmin, Truro, Launceston, Falmouth, Penryn, & Penzance. This part of Britain was not subdued by the Saxons till the time of Athelstan, and its vernacular language (Cornish, a dialect of the Celtic) has become extinct only during the present century. The dist. contains many Druidical stones. The Cassiterides, or "Tin Islands" of the Phœnicians and Greeks, was the seat of the Farnabii, or Cornavii (or Cornubians, a name probably derived from "Kernou" a horn, having reference to its shape, or "Carn" a hill), a branch of the Damnonii in the Roman Britannia Prima. It was made a separate British kingdom in 446 under Vortigern, but was afterwards overrun by the Saxons (who called it Weallas, from the "Gall" or "Welsch," a stranger), first in 813 under Egbert, in 892 under Alfred, and again in 927-38 under Athelstan, who included it as part of Wessex. King Arthur was a native of Tintagel Castle. It was ravaged afterwards by the Danes in 806, and between 977 and 981, who partially settled here. It was created a duchy in the person of the Black Prince, and is now held by the Prince of Wales. [SCILLY ISLES.]

CRIMEA (Chersonesus Taurica), a peninsula of Europe, in the Black Sea, forming a pendant to Russia, with which it is connected on the N. by the narrow isthmus of Perekop. It is of a quadrangular form, having its greatest extension from W. to E., on which latter side it is prolonged by the sub-peninsula of Kertch, between lat. 44° 44' and 46° 5' N., corresponding with that portion of France included between Bordeaux and La Rochelle, lon. 32° 30' and 36° 35' E., corresponding with Russia, between St Petersburg and Moscow. Extreme length 190 m., breadth 110 m. The whole of the N.E. angle, from Perekop to the Strait of Yenikale, is devastated by the encroachments of the Putrid Sea, a collection of stagnant water, exhaling pestilential vapours. The central and W. portion is a vast steppe, devoid of mountains or forests, interspersed with salt lakes and marshes, exposed to the severity of a Russian winter, and the small rivers of which are dried up by the heat of summer. Large flocks of broad-tailed sheep and cattle are pastured on these plains, and the salt obtained from the lakes yields a large revenue. The south coast of the Crimea, defended from the N. winds by a range of wooded mountains, from the sides of which numerous semicircular valleys slope southwards to the Black Sea, presents the most striking contrast to the other parts of the peninsula. Here the climate resembles that of Asia Minor or Italy; winter is scarcely felt, trees seldom lose their verdure, and the primrose and spring saffron appear in February. The olive, fig, vine, and pomegranate, the cistus and other delicate flowers, grow luxuriantly in the open air. The most celebrated of these valleys is that of Baidar, which, on account of its beauty and fertility, is termed the "Crimean Tempé." Its W. end is 5 m. S.E. of Balaklava, and it extends 10 m. E., with a breadth of 3 to 5 miles. It is entirely surrounded by high mountains, and presents a succession of cultivated fields, woods, and meadows. The villages are clean, and the inhabitants prosperous. The mountainous country in which these sheltered valleys are situated, occupies less than a fourth part of the superficies of the peninsula. The mountains curve in the direction of the S. coast from the W. of Balaklava to the Bay of Kaffa. On the S. they present a series of calcareous cliffs, sloping gradually towards the steppes on the N.; the culminating point, Tchahir-dagh, is 5000 feet above the sea. The principal rivers are the Alma, the Salghir, and the Karasu. The climate of the Crimea is most unequal at all seasons, but especially so in winter, and varies much, according to position, in the mountains, steppes, and valleys. In some winters frost is hardly known, while in others severe frost, accompanied by N. winds, continues from October until April. In 1787 the Sea of Azof, the Putrid Sea, and part of the Bay of Kaffa, were frozen so as to bear the passage of men and horses. The N. wind, which alone brings frost, is often suddenly followed by S. and S.W. winds, which always bring rain; the E. and S.E. winds bring fine weather. In summer the temperature sometimes rises to 100° Fahr. in the shade, when the rivulets are dried up, and the soil of the steppes is parched and dusty. The difference of temperature in 24 hours often exceeds 28° Fahr. Spring, which usually extends from the beginning of March to the end of May, is the most genial and healthy season, having a mild temperature and a serene sky. Autumn, the most unhealthy season, is marked by the occurrence of intermittent and bilious fevers. The heavy rains cease generally about the middle of October. The mountains are snow-clad till about the middle of May. The forests furnish the pine, beech, oak, elm, ash, and poplar, and give shelter to the wolf, fox, roebuck, fallow-deer, and hare. Domestic animals comprise the horse, camel, dromedary, buffalo, oxen, and several species of sheep. Among birds are the vulture of the Alps, the kite, and a species of falcon, used by the Tartars in their favourite amusement of hawking. Trout of a large size and excellent quality abound in the rivers, & the sea supplies the sturgeon, mullet, mackerel, and pilchard. The rural population is entirely Tartar, except a few German and other colonists in the S. The Tartars have preserved many of the customs of their ancestors, and are hospitable to strangers. The Crimea forms the greater part of the Russian gov. Taurida; it is divided into the dists. of Simferopol, the cap. Eupatoria, Theodosia or Kaffa, & Perekop, its chief towns. It was known as the Chersonesus Taurica 1400 years B.C. Its history is a chronicle of invasions and changes, in the course of which it has been subjected to more than 60 dynasties, including the Scythians, Greeks, Romans, Tartars, Genoese, and Turks. Russia acquired it by treachery in 1783 under the Empress Catherine II. In 1778 its pop. was estimated at 500,000, but under the despotism of the Czar it decreased by emigration to 205,600 in 1793, and is still decreasing. Its ancient cities have been ruined, and its resources neglected. Russian improvement has been limited to the erection of the new town of Simferopol, the harbour and fortifications of Sevastopol, and the summer palaces of the empress and the nobles on its S.E. shores. The Anglo-French army landed in Kalamita Bay, on the W. coast, 14th Sept., defeated the Russians on the Alma 20th of same month, and commenced the siege of Sevastopol 17th Oct. 1854, which fell after a siege of eleven months.

Dalmatia and the Military Frontiers, and W. the Adriatic. In 1854 it was united to Slavonia, which was separated from Hungary. Area 7444 sq. m. Pop. of the united crown-land 876,009. The form and surface of Croatia is very irregular; between the Save and the Adriatic it is traversed by a range of limestone mountains, an extension of the Julian Alps, varying in height from 3500 to 5000 feet. Its minerals comprise copper, iron, lead, and coal. It has salt mines and mineral springs. Climate mild and salubrious in the S. districts; on the higher summits snow lies during a great part of the year, and it is visited by cold N.E. winds. The plains of the E. and N.E. are fertile, and furnish grain, fruits, and wine; there are forests of oak and beech. The inhabitants are of Slavonian descent, and mostly belong to the Roman Catholic and Greek churches. Cattle-rearing is extensively carried on.—SLAVONIA. [MILITARY FRONTIER.]

CUBA, the largest of the West India Isles, situated between lat. 19° 50' and 23° 9' N.; lon. 74° 8' and 84° 58' W.; 140 m. S.E. Florida, and 130 N.E. Yucatan. It is of an elongated narrow shape; greatest length 764 m., breadth varying from 25 to 130 m. Area, including its dependent islands, about 49,066 sq. m. P. (by census of 1861) 1,396,430, of whom 793,384 were whites; free coloured, comprising 17,000 Chinese, 225,843; free negroes 6650, slaves 370,553. The coasts are surrounded with reefs and shallows, & only one-third of them accessible to vessels; on this part, however, there are several harbours. There are numerous islets surrounding the coast, the principal of which are Los Pinos, Romano, Turignano, and Cruz. The S.E. part of the island is intersected by a mountain range, the Sierra del Cobre, the highest parts attaining an elevation of 6890 feet; this chain extends along the greater part of the length of the island. The northern part is more level, with rich valleys and plains. Extensive lagoons and salt marshes lie along the flat shores. There are no large rivers; the Cauto, which is the largest, being only 90 m. in length. Some are navigable for a few miles inward for boats; others are used for irrigating the fields. The climate is more temperate than that of the other West Indian Islands, but also more variable. Snow never appears, even in the highest parts; but hail-storms occur sometimes, ice is occasionally formed at an elevation of a few hundred feet, and earthquakes are frequent. W. winds prevail during the cold season, and rain falls every month of the year. Except in the low marshy grounds the climate is salubrious, and invalids from the United States resort to the isl. Mean annual temp. at Havana 77° Fahr.: winter 78°, and summer 81°·5. Among the whites ague and yellow fever are the chief diseases. The most fatal months for Europeans are May, June, July, and August; the healthiest, January, February, March, April, and November. The reverse is the case with the Creoles; for the yellow fever, which during the hot season cuts off the former, generally spares the latter. Primary rocks and limestone prevail in the mountain districts. The mineral treasures of Cuba have been only imperfectly explored, but the precious metals are known to exist, and copper is very extensively deposited in the Sierra del Cobre. In 1844 the quantity of this metal exported, represented a sixth part of that of the globe. Mines of alum, copperas, and excellent coal have been discovered; and there are many mineral springs in the island. Extensive districts in the mountain regions are covered with dense forests, among which the majestic ceiba and mahogany trees are conspicuous, with other valuable wood fit for ship-building; and palms, plantains, and beautiful ornamental trees abound. Only a small proportion of the land, about 2,000,000 acres, is yet under cultivation; but it produces abundant crops of maize, yams, bananas, potatoes, sugar, coffee, tobacco, cotton, cocoa, and indigo. The uncultivated portions contain extensive and fertile prairies, where cattle are extensively reared. Only one indigenous quadruped has been found, the huita, resembling a rat, and 18 inches in length. Amphibious reptiles, as the alligator, manati, tortoise, and serpents from 10 to 12 feet in length, abound. Birds of beautiful plumage are numerous, and fish of various kinds swarm along the coasts. Cuba is divided into two depts., the Western and the Eastern. Chief towns, Havana (cap. of the Western dep. and of all the island), Santiago de Cuba (cap. of the Eastern dep.), Matanzas, Puerto Príncipe, Trinidad, etc. The commercial prosperity of Cuba has been of late years on the increase. Provisions of all kinds, and manufactured goods, are the chief articles of importation. The exports to Spain in 1860 amounted to 2,239,307*l.*, and the imports from that country to 1,621,348*l.* The exports mainly consist of sugar, rum, molasses, coffee, bees'-wax, tobacco, cigars, and copper ore. The internal traffic is now facilitated by improved roads, and 351 miles of railway were open in 1860. The government of the island is vested in a captain-general, who is supreme military commandant and civil governor of one of the provinces. There is a governor of the other provinces, who has independent civil power, responsible only to the court of Spain. There is a military garrison of several battalions, and a marine force of 4 frigates, 15 steam-ships, and 32 small craft. Steamboats ply between Havana and other parts of the coast. No foreigner can land on the island without procuring the security of a native of responsibility for his good behaviour. Both religion and education are under the immediate control of the government. The latter has recently made great progress; and there is a royal university at Havana. The Roman Catholic religion is established, and no other is tolerated. Cuba was discovered by Columbus in his first voyage in 1493. In 1511 the first settlement was made by the Spaniards, and soon after the aboriginal inhabitants were wholly extirpated. In 1762 Havana was captured and taken possession of by the British, but restored to the Spaniards next year. In 1850, and again in 1851, a piratical attempt was made on Cuba by a band of United States adventurers, under the command of a Spaniard named Narasso Lopez: they were defeated, and their leader executed. CYPRUS, an island, Asiatic Turkey, in the Mediterranean, 60 m. off the S. coast of Asia Minor, in lat. 35° N., and between lon. 32° and 34° 40' E. Area 4200 sq. m. P. (1863) 200,000, of whom about two-thirds are Christians, and one-third Mussulmans. The mountain system of the island consists of three parts. A continuous chain (highest points, Mts. Buffavento and St Hilarion, 3340 feet high) extends for a distance of about 100 miles along the N. shore from Cape Andrea, its N.E. extremity, to Cape Kormakiti on the N.W., where the Bay of Morphon intervenes, and separates it from a second range, which occupies all the N.W. and W. portions of the island, and trending S. ward, terminates at Stavrovouni, between Capes Carrubiere and Kiti. A third and loftier series of mountains, the most conspicuous of which are Kikko, Troodos (Mount Olympus, 6590 feet high), Adelphi, and Makheira, diverges from the second range near its beginning, and traversing the island from N.N.W. to S.S.E. rejoins it at Stavrovouni. From the base of the Troodos range rich and fertile plains stretch E. ward, and occupy nearly the whole interior of the island. The rivers of Cyprus are mere mountain torrents, the largest (the Pedias) rising in Mount Troodos. The climate of Cyprus varies in different localities. In the central plains and about Larnica the heat in summer is excessive; the winters, however, are mild, and snow is of rare occurrence. Mean max. temp. at Larnica 80°, average minimum 54° Fahr. Rain is almost unknown in summer from May till October. The prevailing winds are W. and S.W. The N. side of the island is considered healthy, but the plains are unhealthy, the stagnant lagunes about Famagusta, Larnica, and Limassal giving rise to intermittent fevers. Cyprus was in olden times famous for its mineral products, its copper being superior to any other, but they are at present neglected. The salt obtained from the lagunes at Limassal and Larnica is an important source of revenue. Extensive pine forests exist in the higher mountains. About 300,000 acres, or one-eighth of the island, are under cultivation. The chief products are wheat, barley, sesame, vetches, cotton, silk, madder, carobs, wine, olives, raisins, carrots, tobacco, and colocynth. The average produce of wheat is about 80,000 qrs., of barley 120,000 qrs.; the average value of these exported is about 33,000L. The wines of Cyprus form one of its chief articles of export. They are of two kinds, the coarse black wine and a sweet malmsey wines. The manufs. are inconsiderable, the chief being silk stuffs and leather. Exports (1863) 188,187L. Imports 100,005L. Rev. of island 21,510,000 piastres. The means of internal transport are very deficient. Beasts of burden are the camel, mule, and ass; oxen are employed for agricultural purposes. The arrivals in 1862 were 727 ships of 100,040 tons. Principal towns, Lefkosia or Nicosia, Larnica, Famagusta, Limassol, and Baffa. The island, at an early period, was colonized by the Phœnicians, then successively possessed by the Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Byzantines, Venetians, and lastly by the Turks, who now possess it.

Copper appears to be plentiful, the natives making it into rings. The population is divided into two distinct nations, the Damaras of the hills and the Damaras of the plains. The former subsist on roots, and by hunting; the latter rear cattle. Lions, rhinoceroses, and zebras, are the wild animals of the country.

DAMASCUS, a pash. of Syria, including all the inhabited country lying E. of the Jordan, Cœle Syria, and the Orontes, from Amah in the N. to Petra in the S. Lat. 31° to 36° N.; lon. 35° to 41° E., having N. the pashes. Aleppo and Diarbekir, W. that of Sidon or Beyrout, E. and S. the Arabian desert. Surface mostly level, except in the W.; in parts it is extremely fertile. Principal rivers, the Orontes and Jordan; and it comprises the Dead Sea, a part of the Lake of Tiberias, and several smaller lakes. Corn, hemp, flax, madder, tobacco, cotton, silk, and cochineal are raised, and live stock of all kinds are numerous. Chief cities, Damascus, Homs, and Hamâh; here also are the remains of Palmyra, and other cities celebrated in ancient and sacred history. Pop. (1858) estimated at 547,800. The Pasha & the Commander-in-Chief of the forces reside at Damascus.

DAMASCUS, a city of Syria, situated in a vast plain of extreme fertility on the E. slope of the chain of Anti-Lebanon, and on the edge of the desert, 220 feet above the sea. Lat. (of Great Mosk) 33° 30' 30" N.; lon. 36° 18' 24" E. Pop. previous to the massacre of 1860, estimated at 150,000; 129,000 Moslems, 15,000 Christians, and 6000 Jews. It is watered by the Barada (anc. Abana), which rises high up on the W. flank of the Anti-Lebanon range, flows S.E., and bursts suddenly through a narrow gorge into the plain, near the city, supplying its public fountains, baths, and cisterns, and sending off numerous branches to irrigate the meadows and corn fields. The Barada, the source of the beauty and wealth of the city, converts the country, 30 m. in circuit, from a desert into an oasis of the richest verdure. The produce of the orchards are pomegranates, walnuts, figs, plums, apricots, citrons, pears, apples, olives, and many ornamental and flowering shrubs. In the midst of these rises Damascus, one of the most ancient cities in the world, and the virtual capital of Syria. Its numerous mosks, surmounted by golden crescents, and its many tall white minarets, show to great advantage against the deep green foliage. Inside the walls, which comprise massive remains of Roman and Saracenic masonry, the streets are narrow, crooked, and unpaved. The most conspicuous objects are the Great Mosk, a magnificent building of Christian origin, with a dome 120 feet in height: three minarets, one of which is 250 feet high, and many other mosks and minarets, the Great Khan, Greek cathedral and churches, and Armenian convent. The old castle at the N.W. angle of the city is now a ruin. W. of it are the Pasha's palace & barracks. The "street called straight," 1 m. in length, runs through the city from E. to W., & in it is the principal hotel; at its E. end is an anc. gateway, W and N. of which is the Christian quarter. The Jews quarter is in the S., and the Turkish round the old castle in the N.W. In the S.W. is the large suburb of Meidan, in which is "the Gate of God," whence the pilgrim caravan passes on its way to Mecca. Outside the walls, on the S.E., is the English cemetery, with the tomb of D. W. Arnold Broomfield, and the grave of Mr Buckle the historian. The different quarters are kept by great numbers of dogs, which act as scavengers, and notwithstanding their savage condition, hydrophobia is unknown. From the great abundance of pure running water, the streets are much more cleanly than those of other eastern towns. Climate healthy, and it is not subject to epidemic diseases. There is a leper hospital, with but few patients. Many of the principal mansions of the Moslems and Jews are rich and elaborate in their decorations, and profuse in their marble ornaments and fountains. The extensive bazaars form a city of themselves; they are celebrated as being truly oriental; they are well stocked with goods, and thronged with groups of people in every variety of costume. The former manuf. of silk is nearly abandoned, and Manchester goods have taken its place. Coarse woollen cloth for abbas or cloaks of the peasantry, is still made, as well as silver ornaments and arms to a small extent; but since the recent massacre, the weavers and workers in jewellery have quitted the city. Damascus has, from the remotest ages, been a great seat of trade between Egypt and the N. of Syria; it still has its immense caravans, and an extensive commerce with the Bedawins of the E. desert. Its trade with the west is much facilitated by the new road to Beyrout, opened in 1863, and on which a French company run diligences daily. According to Josephus, Damascus was founded by Uz, son of Aram, and grandson of Shem. It is first mentioned in Scripture as the residence of Eliezer, the steward of Abraham; and it has retained its perennial vigour, while generations of cities have fallen into decay. A Protestant mission was established in 1848, and is carried on with great zeal by the Presbyterian Church of Ireland, and that of the United States of North America. By means of schools, books, and lately the printing press, this mission has greatly advanced the cause of civilization. Damascus suffered severely during the massacre of the Christians by the Druses in 1860; the whole Christian quarter was burned to the ground, more than 4000 Christians were murdered, and at least 20,000 fled to Beyrout and elsewhere, and now (1864) the houses are only slowly rising from their ruins, amidst constant dread of another outbreak.

DANUBE (German Donau, anc. Danubius and Ister), an important river, and, next to the Volga, the largest in Europe, originates in the Brege, a mountain torrent which rises on the E. declivity of the Schwarzwald in Baden, at an elevation of 2850 feet above the sea. This stream, when joined by the Brigach, and by the waters of a spring from the castle garden of Donaueschingen, takes the name of the Danube. It flows first generally E.N.E. to Ulm and Regensburg, thence E.S.E. to Passau it traverses the plain of Bavaria. From Passau to Vienna, E.S.E., it intersects a hilly region, and the remainder of its course, E.S.E. to Waitzen, S. to Bacz, and E. to the Black Sea, is through a country, generally flat, except at the defile of the "iron gate," E. of Orsova. Length (direct) 1000 m., or including windings, 1725 m. It drains the waters from a surface of nearly 250,000 sq. m.; its average fall is 18 inches per mile, but below Pesth it is only 3 inches; at Ulm it is 1400 feet, at Regensburg 1000, at Passau 800, at Vienna 450, and at Pesth 300 feet above the level of the sea. Its breadth at Ulm is 108 feet, and in its lower course 6000 feet; depth at Ulm, 6 feet, at Passau 16 feet, and lower down average 20 feet. It passes Sigmaringen and Ulm in Württemberg, Dillingen, Donauwörth, Ingolstadt, Regensburg, and Passau in Bavaria; Linz, Krems, and Vienna, in Austria; Presburg, Komorn, Gran, Waitzen, Ofen-Pesth, and Peterwardein in Hungary; Belgrade and Smendria in Servia; Widin, Nicopoli, Rustchuk, Silistria, and Hirsova, in Bulgaria; Giurgevo, and Brahilov, in Wallachia. The chief affs. of the Danube are, on the right, the Iller, Lech, Isar, Inn, Eus, Raab, Drave, Save, Morava, Timok, Isker, Vid, and Jantra; and on the left, the Altmühl, Nab, Regen, March, Waag, Gran, Theiss, Temes, Chyl, Aluta, Jalomnizza, Sereth, and Pruth. Near its mouth in the Black Sea it separates into several branches, the S. most of which, called the St George mouth, forms, by the treaty of Adrianople, the boundary between the Ottoman empire and Russia, the others are the Sulina mouth, and the Kilja mouth. It communicates by canals with the Elbe by means of the Moldau, and with the Rhine by the Altmühl. It is navigable for vessels of 100 tons from Ulm to the Black Sea. Steam packets were established on the Danube in 1830. In 1860, the number of voyages made was 643, with 57,169 passengers, but since then the traffic in the river has greatly declined on account of the opening of new lines of railway near its banks. A railway from Kustendji on the Black Sea, to Tchernavoda on the Danube, 89 miles, avoids the tedious navigation of the lower and unhealthy parts of the river.

Dartmoor is semi-mountainous, and the water-shed of all the rivers of the co. Though little known even to the people of the co., it is one of the most interesting districts in England. Extent.—From Cosdon Beacon (N.) to Butterton Hill (S.) 22 m.; from Meavy (W.) to Moreton Hampstead (E.) 20 m. Ac., including adjacent commons, 135,000. All Dartmoor is in pd. of Lydford. Inhabitants, scarcely any. Physical features.—Elevated land, of irregular form: highest hills about 2000 feet; many minor hills, nearly all capped by castellated piles of granite (these piles are called "tors"): barren, a wild mixture of heath, bog, blocks and debris of granite: rapid and broken streams, and rivers. Monumental relics.—At the epoch of Roman invasion, Devon was peopled on the coast by Belgian adventurers, in the interior (Dartmoor) by the aborigines. These of Oriental origin. Evidences still existing on the moor in monumental remains. These illustrate, too, the early religion. They are circular temples, or sacred circles, stone avenues, rock idols, logan stones, rock basins, cromlechs, kistvaens, barrows and cairns, rock pillars, remains of granite-built dwellings, pounds or circumvallations, trackways or roads, track-lines or boundary banks, bridges, forts and entrenchments. Mineral productions are copper, tin, lead, silver, manganese, cobalt, antimony, zinc, iron (red hematite). Gold is occasionally found, China clay, granite. At Prince Town are immense granite works. A tram-road (worked by horses) connects these with the various public works and port of Plymouth. Dartmoor supplies Plymouth and Devonport with water: it is the property of the Duke of Cornwall. The Convict Prison is 7 miles from Tavistock. Formerly a prison of war, which once held 10,000 men. Now a convict establishment. The convicts cultivate the adjacent moor.

DEAD SEA, properly SALT SEA or LAKE ASPHALTITES (Arab. Bahr Lut), Sea of Lot, is the lowest and largest of the three lakes which interrupt the course of the Jordan, lat. 31° 6' 20" to 31° 46' N.; lon. 35° 24' to 35° 37' E. Its N. extremity is where the Jordan enters it, 20 m. E. Jerusalem. Length N. to S. 46 m., breadth in middle 10½ m.; depression below the Mediterranean 1312 feet; greatest depth, at one-third of its length from N. end, 218 fathoms (1808 feet). Having no outlet, its level is determined by the amount of water it receives and the extent of evaporation. The great fissure in which it lies is walled in by a range of nearly parallel mountains, bare and stern, and estim. at 1200 to 1500 feet above the lake, and composed of red sandstone overlaid by limestone. Near its S.E. end, a peninsula projects to within 2 m. of its W. side, enclosing a shallow lagoon, which forms the S. part of the lake. Its water is clear and transparent, but salt and peculiarly bitter to the taste; its density is so great that a man cannot sink lower than the arms when standing in it. Sea water contains 4, while the Dead Sea contains 26½ per cent. of salt. Its specific gravity is thus 1-fifth greater than that of the ocean; but the water of Tuz Gul (lake), in Asia Minor, is still more dense. The mountain of rock salt, on its S.W. side, is called Jebel Usedom (Mt. Sodom). Only the lowest forms of animal life exist in its salt and acrid waters, but birds fly over its surface, and animals and plants inhabit its shores. Its scenery, far from being gloomy, is grand, bright, and pleasing.

DELTA, from the Greek letter  $\Delta$ , a name applied to alluvial tracts enclosed between the bifurcating branches of a river and their common recipient. Deltas are called fluvial, lacustrine, Mediterranean, or Oceanic, according as the streams which form them fall into a river, lake, or sea. They are simple deltas when the stream is divided into two branches only, and compound when intersected by other branches. The principal deltas are those of the Nile, Ganges, and Niger. Deltic branches of a river are those which enclose a delta; and deltic islands are those formed by the ana-deltic branches of a compound delta. The delta of the Nile at present is well marked by the elevation of the Libyan desert on the W., and that of El Tih on the E., which enclose the bed of the river near Cairo. In Strabo's time the delta extended as far S. as Ceresura, which was W. of and nearly opposite Heliopolis.

It is bounded N. and W. by the North Sea, E. by the Cattegat and the Baltic, and S. by the Elbe. The coasts are greatly indented, and the country is perfectly flat; in the N. some parts of it are below the sea-level, from the invasions of which it is defended by dykes. On the E. the surface rises into gentle elevations. The highest part of the peninsula is 500 feet, and of the islands 400 feet above the sea. Holstein and Lauenburg are the best watered districts. Among the islands, Seeland and Fühnen only have rivers, the others being watered by mere brooks. There are extensive marshes in all the valleys of the peninsula and the islands. Next to the Elbe, which forms the S. boundary of the kingdom for 80 m., the Eider is the largest and most important river. The largest lake is the Arve, in Seeland. The principal gulfs are the Liim-fjord, Ringskiöbing-fjord, Nissum-fjord, and the Bays of Kalloe and Flensburg on the continent; the Ise-fjord in Seeland, and Odense-fjord in Fühnen. Between the islands and the peninsula of Denmark and Sweden, there are several passages called sounds, the chief of which are Ore Sund (the Sound), and the Great and Little Belts. The climate of Denmark is humid and cloudy, but, notwithstanding its northern position, it is, from the lowness of its level and the influence of the surrounding seas, much milder than the countries of Germany situated farther S. Mean temp. of the year 46°·6 Fahr.; shortest day 6½ hours; longest day 17½ hours. Storms are rare, and of short duration; average annual days of storm 9, rain 137, snow 32. Prevailing winds, W. during spring and summer, and S.W. in autumn and winter.—Denmark is an agricultural country, and the cultivation of the soil, which is almost entirely alluvial, occupies the majority of the people. From the absence of coal and water-power there are but few manufactures. The soil is much subdivided. Corn is raised more than necessary for home consumption. The principal crops are barley, wheat, oats, buck-wheat, potatoes, hemp, lint, tobacco, and hops. Forests are not extensive, and mostly confined to the E. coasts of the peninsula and the islands Seeland and Fühnen. Cattle are extensively reared in N. Jutland and the duchies. Horses, sheep, and swine are extensively reared. The number of horses in the kingdom in 1861 was 481,604, of cattle 1,827,067, of sheep 2,323,438, and of swine 483,033. Goats are kept in small numbers, and game is abundant. Oysters, herrings, salmon, and seals are fished on the coasts and in the rivers. As Denmark has no mountains, except in Bornholm, where an inferior quality of coal is found, its mineral products are insignificant. Woollen cloths, linens, bonnets, and paper, are made for home consumption. Government formerly protected several branches of manufactures, but these are now confined to the porcelain works at Copenhagen and the cloth factory at Usseöd. Roads in general are bad; the best are in Seeland, Fühnen, and the duchies. Railways are in operation from Altona to Kiel and Rendsburg, with a branch to Gluckstadt; from Flensburg to Schleswig, Rendsburg, Husum, and Tonning; from Copenhagen to Korsör by Roeskilde and Ringsted; and from Aarhus to Randers. The geographical position of the country is favourable for water communication, and there are many extensive canals, the chief of which are the Schleswig-Holstein Canal, which with the Eider river forms a communication between the Baltic & the North Sea, navigable for vessels of 120 tons, and the Stecknitz Canal in Lauenburg, which joins the Elbe to the Baltic by means of the river Trave. The principal ports are Copenhagen, Altona, Kiel, Flensburg, and Aalborg. Exports, 1862 (including Iceland and the Faröe Islands), grain, cattle, horses, sheep, butter, wool, seeds, oilcake, tallow, bones, etc., to the value of 4,398,079*l*. Imports, coals, iron, cottons, woollens, linens, sugar, machinery, tea, fish, hardwares, coffee, soda, indigo, etc., to the value of 6,806,303*l*. Mercantile marine (1861), 5679 vessels. Aggregate burden, 246,100 tons. The constitution of the Danish monarchy was voted in October, and received the Royal sanction in November, 1863. The executive power is in the king and his ministers, and the right of making or altering laws in the Rigsdag or Diet, comprising the Landsting and the Folksting, the former the senate and the latter the House of Commons. The King must be a member of the evangelical Lutheran Church, which is the religion of the state, and has been prevalent since 1536; other sects are tolerated. The pop. is divided into three classes, nobles, citizens, and peasants. The poor are provided for by assessment. Elementary education is widely diffused in Denmark, attendance at schools is obligatory from the age of 7 to 14. The system of mutual instruction, introduced in 1820, was generally adopted in 1840. Besides the universities of Copenhagen and Kiel, there are colleges at Löröe and Altona, and grammar and normal schools in all the large towns. There are upwards of 4000 parochial schools kept up at the public expense. In 1862 the navy consisted of 31 steamers, 12 sailing vessels, and 50 gunboats, in all 93 vessels, carrying 929 guns. Army (1863) 50,000 men. Rev. 1862-3, 1,841,499*l*. Expenditure 1,814,864*l*. The continental part of Denmark, formerly called the Cimbrian Chersonesus, was the country of the Cimbri, who ravaged Europe 100 years B.C. Its first kings were descendants of Odin, and hence issued many of the pirates, who, under the name of Normans, long ravaged Western Europe, and under whom the Danes made irruptions into England in 835 and 1042. After conversion to Christianity, the Danes were long the leaders in the affairs of the north. The celebrated Margaret of Denmark, by the treaty of Calmar in 1397, united the three kingdoms of the north, and after the dissolution of the union the Danes kept possession of Norway till 1814, when it was ceded to Sweden. The duchies of Schleswig & Holstein revolted from Denmark in 1848, and appealed to the German States for assistance. Prussia sent an army to aid the duchies, some indecisive battles were fought, Austria interposed, the duchies submitted, and their future relation to Denmark was settled by the protocol of London 1852. The dispute was renewed in 1863; the allied armies of Prussia and Austria entered the duchies on 1st Jan., and the Danes retreated to Düppel, which was bombarded and taken by assault 18th April, 1864; when the differences were referred to a congress of the great powers. The colonial possessions of Denmark consist of the islands of Faröe and Iceland, and part of the coast of Greenland, and the tropical possessions comprise the Danish West India Islands, St Croix, St Thomas, and St John, with a number of smaller islands. The establishments on the coast of Guinea, viz., Forts Christiansborg, Fredensborg, etc., were ceded to Britain by purchase in 1850. The town of Tranquebar, with its districts, on the Coromandel coast, ceded to Denmark by the rajah of Tanjore in 1620, and the small dist. and town of Serampore (Danish Frederiksnagor) in Bengal, founded by the Danish East India Co. in 1755.

were transferred to Britain in 1846. The Nicobar Islands, in the Bay of Bengal, were taken possession of by the Danes in 1756; in 1840 the pop. of the Danish colony amounted to 6000, but they were abandoned in 1848, on account of their insalubrity.

So closely connected with Stonehouse and Plymouth as to form with these one great town. Devonport is a parl. and munic. bor. A port. A naval arsenal. Fortified. The parl. bor. includes the pa. Stoke-Damerall and the township of E. Stonehouse. P. of parl. bor. (1851) 50,159; (1861) 64,798. Stands on high ground. The specialties of the town are—Buildings. Town-hall, column, the public library (with Egyptian parade), mechanics' institute, new market (1852).—Government Establishments. New Raglan barracks (for 2 regts., will accommodate 2000 men & 80 officers), military hospital (S. front of grey marble), dock-yard, gun-wharf, Keyham steam-yard, powder dépôt at Kinterbury.—The Harbour. Called the Hamoaze. One of the most interesting sights in the world. Opposite are the heights of Mount Edgcombe. Around are about 60 vessels of war in ordinary, others in a partial state of equipment—some just arrived from a foreign station about to be paid off, others receiving their complements of men and stores. Across the harbour a steam floating-bridge.—The Royal Albert Bridge, 3 miles out on Cornwall Railway.—Mount Wise is a splendid military parade ground. View from it beautiful. Devonport is the seat of the military and naval government of "The Three Towns." On Mt. Wise is the residence of the lieutenant-governor of the garrison, also of the port-admiral. Devonport has a public park and theatre. Stoke is a bright & elegant suburb. From Devonport, steamers regularly ascend the Tamar; in summer with more frequency. No stranger should omit to see one of the loveliest rivers in England. Cotehele House and the Morwell Rocks are only the chief attractions. The railway communication of Devonport is W. to Cornwall, E. to all parts of England by S. Devon line, N. to Tavistock and Launceston. Davenport sends two members to House of Commons. Registered electors (1864) 2826.

DEVONSHIRE, a maritime co. of England; Brit. name, Dynnaint; of inhabitants, Dywnowyn. Then Daumonium. Part of Britannia prima under Romans; part kingdom of Wessex under Saxons. 71 m. N. to S., 72 E. to W.; circumference 287. Area 2585 sq. m., = 1,657,180 ac., 1,200,000 under cultivation; 33 hundreds, 465 pas., 36 market towns. Exeter the see and cap. P. (1861) 584,373.—The situation of the co. has had its effect on character and history of people. Its isolation and position of harbours have begotten a roughness and independence, and there have been always a race of hardy and daring seamen. Cornwall on W., the sea N. and S., Devonshire communicates by land with rest of England through Somerset and Dorset. Climate.—Prevailing wind W. The clouds break on Dartmoor, and so Devonshire is very wet. In summer cool, mild in winter. Mean winter temp. 44°·9, summer 60°·9 Fahr. In winter Torquay is almost like the S. of Europe, standing on bright limestone, facing the S., and effectually sheltered from N. & E. winds. Physical Features.—Great diversity. The wild sterile tracts are Exmoor and Dartmoor—the latter very interesting. [DARTMOOR.] The vales of Exeter and S. Devon are rich. In the W. there is much mining. The N. moderately fertile. Devonshire is the garden of England. The high, rich, flowery hedges are to be mentioned as a characteristic physical feature. These are the chief centres of attraction: Clovelly, Ilfracombe, Lynton, in the N.; in the S. Exeter, Dawlish, Teignmouth, Torquay, Dartmouth (ascend the Dart to Totness), Plymouth (ascend the Tamar to Devon Great Consols), and Tavistock. The principal rivers are Taw, Torridge, Tamar, Dart, Teign, and Exe. But many of the minor rivers which dance down from Dartmoor are of excellent beauty. Of bays and estuaries there are Bideford Bay, mouth of the Exe, of the Teign, Tor Bay, mouth of the Dart, Plymouth Sound, and the estuary of the Tamar (called Hamoaze). All accommodate ships of various burthens. Besides towns named above, these also are principal: Bideford, Barnstaple, Tiverton, Newton, and Devonport. Internal Communication.—A few minor canals and tramways for merchandise. The railways are the Bristol and Exeter (from B. to E.), North Devon (Exeter to Bideford), South-Western (London to Exeter, entering the co. near Chord), South Devon (Exeter to Plymouth), the Cornish (from Plymouth), Plymouth to Launceston via Tavistock, Newton to Morton, Exeter to Okehampton via Crediton, Exeter to Exmouth. Other minor branches to some of these. Productions, Mineral.—Copper, tin, manganese, lead; in small quantities, iron, silver, gold, bismuth, antimony, and cobalt; coal, limestone, gypsum, fluor spar, pipe-clay, china-clay, slate, freestone, and granite. Agricultural.—Corn of most kinds, abundance of fruit. Orchards numerous, for manufacture of cider. Grazing farms numerous; so with dairy farms, but little cheese produced, butter mainly, and the celebrated Devonshire cream. Devon breed of cattle is highly valued; so Dartmoor mutton and Exmoor ponies; wool. Manufactures of every kind are rapidly declining. The co. is mainly agricultural and mining. The lace manufacture is still of some importance, its chief seat Honiton. Fisheries.—Salmon in the Tamar, Tavy, and Exe; trout in all the rivers. On the coast the hake, herring, pilchard, mackerel, dory, and other fisheries are important. Cele- brated men.—King Arthur; Winfred of Crediton, who became St Boniface, the missionary to Germany; Henry VI., Lord Chancellor Fortescue, Sir F. Drake, Sir Richard Hawkins, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir Humphrey Gilbert;—among churchmen: Hooker, Jewell, Reynolds;—poets: Wm. Browne, Ford the dramatist, Robert Herrick, and Carrington;—painters: Sir Joshua Reynolds, Northcote, Haydon, and Sir Charles Eastlake. Devon is richer than many other coos. in old world legends and superstitions. The dialect, fast disappearing, should interest the archæologist. The antiquities are primitive memorials on Dartmoor (v. DARTMOOR), castles, many fortified private houses. Devon is rich in altar tombs and sepulchral bronzes. As was to be expected in the garden of England, monasteries abound. The Benedictines had 6 estabs. besides Tavistock; the Cistercians 5, Buckfast and Buckland the chief; the Augustinian canons founded the priory of Plympton; the Premonstrants the abbey of Tor; mendicants occupied Plymouth and Exeter. A few of the great Norman abbeys had cells or priories also in different parts of the co. Church architecture has its specialities in the co. Exeter cathedral exhibits all styles from early English to decorated. Ottery has a fine decorated college church. Crediton, Cullompton, Tiverton, and Broadclyst are the best examples of the final period of Gothic. Cullompton, Dartmouth, Harberton, and Atherington show beautiful and intricate woodwork. Many churches are unsurpassed in situation; while some on the border of the moor, nestling under the tors, by worn benches, dimmed window quarrels, queer admonitory tents, and rough granite pavement, remind us of an older time. Devonshire sends 22 members to House of Commons, viz., 2 for N. division, registered electors (1864) 8677; 2 for S. division, 9571 electors; and 18 for the boroughs.

The climate in the S.W. valley is mild but moist. Mean annual rainfall 36 inches. The co. is subdivided into Nithsdale, Annandale, and Eskdale, watered by the three principal rivers, the Nith, Annan, and Esk. There are nine lochs in the vicinity of Lochmaben; & Loch Skene, near head of Moffat Water, has an elevation of 1300 feet. Lochar moss, covering 10 m. of the valley between Nith and Annan, is principally a morass. A considerable part of the county is mountainous, especially towards the N. and N.E. Amongst the highest mountains are Black Larg 2890 feet, Lowther 2522 feet, Queensberry 2259 feet, and Hartfell 2638 feet. The high grounds afford good pasturage; and cattle, sheep, & pig rearing forms an important branch of rural industry. Soil fertile in the lowlands. Manufs. unimportant. The Glasgow, Dumfries, and Carlisle Railway intersects the county, which is subdivided into 43 pas. Principal towns, Dumfries, the cap., Annan, Saquhar, and Lochmaben. Royal boroughs, Thornhill, Moffat, Lockerbie, Langham, and Ecclefechan. The co. sends one member to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1862) 2071. Dumfries originally comprised the stewardry of Kirkcubright, and by the Romans was comprehended under the prov. Valentia.

ECUADOR (REPUBLIC OF), Equator; an independent state of South America, between lat. 1° 40' N. and 5° 50' S.; lon. 69° and 81° 20' W., having N. New Granada, E. Brazil, S. Peru, and W. the Pacific Ocean. Length about 830 m., breadth 510 m. The Republic is divided into three departments—(1) Guayaquil or Guayas, with an area of 25,450 sq. m.; (2) Quito; and (3) Assuay, the united area of the two latter being 259,906 sq. m. The total area of the Republic is thus 285,356 sq. m. P. (1858) 1,040,371, among whom are about 600,000 whites, descendants of Europeans. Cap. Quito. Its W. part comprises the great chain of the Andes, which here attains nearly its highest elevation, in the summits of Chimborazo, Cotopaxi, Antisana, and Cayambe. On the E. the country descends into the central plain of the continent, and is traversed by the upper course of the Amazon and its tributaries, the Putumayo, Nafo, Pastaza, Macas, Huallaga, and Ucayale.

In 1853, the navigation of the rivers of the republic was declared free of all dues for 20 years. W. of the Andes, the Guayaquil, Esmeralda, and Mira rivers flow into the ocean. The temp. of Quito and the more elevated table-lands varies between 52°·2 and 61°·3 Fahr. during the year. Mean annual temp. 61°. Along the coast, from the Gulf of Guayaquil to Cape San Lorenzo, rain rarely or never falls. The valleys of Dañli and Guayaquil have regular rainy and dry seasons, and in the valley of the Amazon it rains almost daily, with excessive heat. Principal products, wheat, cacao, cotton, coffee, sugar, maize, yams, tobacco, corn, and fruits. In the S. extremity of the Andes are extensive forests, and the cinchona bark tree is common; the plains yield wax, gums, resins, and sarsaparilla. Turtles abound in the Amazon, and fish, especially the manta, are plentiful on the shores of the Pacific. Gold is abundant in the sands of almost all the rivers, and the contributions of the Indians of the interior are mostly paid in gold dust. Lead and quicksilver are also plentiful; but few, if any, mines are wrought. Sulphur is abundant near Chimborazo. Woollen cloths and cotton goods are manufactured. Exports (1862) cocoa, cinchona, orchal, tobacco, etc., to the value of 95,023*l*. Imports (1861) cottons, linens, woollens, hardwares, iron, silks, etc., to the value of 156,916*l*. The Ecuador Land Company possess large blocks of land on the coasts and in the interior. Ecuador, which once formed part of the empire of the Incas, was discovered by Pizarro in 1526, and was held under the Spanish crown till 1812, when a revolution occurred which ended in the establishment of a free republic. In 1821, New Granada and Venezuela united, and formed one republic, under the name of Colombia; but this union was dissolved in 1831, when the countries again separated, and Ecuador disjoined itself from New Granada. The republic is governed by a president, chosen for 8 years, a vice-president, council of state, senate, and house of representatives, with 1 member for every 40,000 inhabitants. The pop. consists of the descendants of Spaniards, and of aboriginal Indians and Meztizos. There are very few negroes. In the W. mountainous region the natives are Peruvians, and are agriculturists and mechanics. The Indians of the plains are chiefly hunters and fishers.

The new town, on the N., forms an extensive parallelogram, with wide and straight streets intersecting each other at right angles, and relieved at certain places by squares, a circus, and a spacious octagon. Altitude of George Street, at statue of George IV., 224 feet; do. foot of Pitt Street 66 feet. The city extends almost without interruption to the shores of the Firth on the N., uniting it with Granton, a modern and excellent steamer port, and the ancient fishing vill. of Newhaven; and on the W. with the Dean and Corstorphine

Hill. To the S. of the old town extend the rural suburbs of Newington, the Grange, and Morning-side. The principal feature in the old town is the High Street, which, with the Canongate, extends along the elevated ridge from the Castle-hill (Assembly Hall 309 feet) on the W. to Holyrood Palace (120 feet) on the E., with Cockburn Street, a new line of access to the railway stations; and many narrow wynds or closes on each side connecting it on the S. with the parallel street called the Cowgate, and on the N. with a narrow street skirting the base of the Calton Hill. The houses in this part are lofty, and each storey is divided into distinct dwelling apartments or flats, of which there are from 5 to 10 in one building. In this line of streets are the Assembly Hall of the Church of Scotland, with an elegant spire 241 feet high; the High Church of St Giles, built in the cathedral style, with a tower in the form of an imperial crown; the Parliament House, containing the old parliament hall, with oaken roof, built 1632, and the various courts of justice, courts of exchequer, the advocates' and writers' libraries; Royal Exchange, and City Chambers or Town Hall; the Tron Church; the house in which John Knox lived; and the Canongate Tolbooth. At the E. extremity of Canongate, in the valley between Arthur Seat and Calton Hill, are situated the abbey and palace of Holyrood, founded in 1128 by David I. The ruins of the nave of the ancient abbey remain; and the tower of the N.W. corner of the palace, built 1528 by James v., and containing Queen Mary's apartments, has been preserved and incorporated with the more modern buildings erected after the restoration in 1671. An ornamental fountain, stands in the area in front of the palace. Along with Beverley in Hampshire, Holyrood has the privilege of sanctuary. The castle, built on a precipitous rock of basaltic greenstone (highest point 437 feet), contains some ancient apartments, in one of which Queen Mary gave birth to James VI. of Scotland, afterwards James I. of England; the crown and regalia of Scotland, an armoury, and barracks. The university, founded 1582, by charter of James VI., is a noble institution. The building, commenced in 1789, forms a large quadrangle, with a court in the centre, and contains a library with about 120,000 printed books and 500 vols. of MSS., a natural history museum. Several clubs, under the name of the "Associated Societies of the University," meet within its walls. There are upwards of 100 bursaries and scholarships connected with the university; yearly value 5*l.* to 100*l.* each. The professors, in number 33, deliver courses of lectures on literature and science, theology, law, medicine, agriculture, languages, and music. Annual average of students (since 1800) 1636. Communicating with the university on the W. is the industrial museum, a noble edifice in the mixed Italian style, designed by Captain Fowke, R.E., to accommodate the objects of Industrial art, now being arranged by Professor Archer, in connexion with a chair of technology, instituted by the Crown in 1855. The foundation stone was laid by the late Prince Consort 23d Oct. 1861, and the building is now (1864) nearly completed. There is also a Free Church college, and a theological hall of United Presbyterians; colleges of physicians and of surgeons, with an anatomical museum; the royal society of literature & science. Highland & agricultural society; meteorological society; society of arts; antiquarian society; royal academy of painting, with annual exhibitions of pictures; ~~music hall~~; assembly rooms; a royal botanic garden; philosophic institution; High school; Edinburgh academy; college for daughters of ministers & professors of the Church of Scotland & the Universities, at Whitehouse, opened 1863; 2 normal and 2 ragged schools; a school of arts or Watt institution, with a statue of James Watt; a mechanics' & several subscription libraries; school of design, and many private schools & institutions for the instruction of youth; united service and new clubs; an abbatior; 2 veterinary colleges; and a spacious corn exchange. The most remarkable public buildings of the new town are the royal institution, with a statue of Queen Victoria, and the royal academy buildings on the Mound; St George and St Andrew's churches; Melville monument, 139 feet high; the Scott monument, the work of a native self-taught architect, admired for its artistic beauty; astronomical observatory on the Calton Hill (349 feet above the sea), by an electric wire from which a time gun is fired from the castle at one o'clock P.M. every week-day. Near it are monuments to Nelson, Playfair, D. Stewart, Burns, the rudiments of a national monument, and the High School. The general post-office, in Waterloo Place, being found inadequate for the greatly increased business, Government, in 1862, resolved to erect a new building at the corner of North Bridge, on a site formerly occupied by the Theatre Royal and Shakespeare Square, acquired at a cost of 62,000*l.* The design, by R. Matheson, Esq., of H. M. Board of Works, is in an enriched Italian style, and it forms an important addition to the public buildings of the city. The foundation stone was laid by H.R.H. Prince Albert 23d October 1861, and it is now (1864) far advanced towards completion. Edinburgh is divided into 13 pas., and had in 1864 the following churches and chapels:—Established Church 26, Free do. 33, United Presbyterian 20, Reformed and other Presbyterian 2, Scottish Episcopal 12, English Episcopal 2, Baptist 7, Congregationalist 3, Evang. Union 2, Wesleyan 2, Roman Catholic 3, Unitarian 1, Jews' Synagogue 1. The charitable institutions are—for education and maintenance of children; the Orphan hospital, George Heriot's hospital, founded 1624, with many outdoor schools, in which poor children are educated gratis; George Watson's hospital, also with outdoor schools; John Watson's institution; the merchant maiden, trades maiden, Donaldson's hospital; Stewart's hospital; Gillespie's hospital for old men and women, with a free school; the Fettes College for boys, now (1864) being erected at Comely Bank; an asylum for the blind; deaf-mute institution; a royal infirmary, receiving from 3000 to 4000 patients annually; and several public dispensaries; Chalmers' hospital for the sick and hurt, opened 1864, and sick children's hospital, 1863; night asylum for the houseless poor, and house of refuge. There are three poor's houses and two ragged schools connected with the city and suburbs. There are seven banks, many of which are elegant structures, and a government savings' bank. Coach-building, flint glass making, ale-brewing, brassfounding, comb and brush making, besides an india-rubber and gutta-percha work, which employs several hundred hands, are its chief manufs. It holds a high place as a printing and publishing centre, in connection with which type-founding, press-making, and bookbinding are extensively carried on. Stereotyping, an Edinburgh invention, is now brought to great perfection. In 1863 there were in the city 34 publishing firms, and 133 booksellers and news agents. There are 90 letterpress establishments well known for the excellence of their typography. Wood, copper, and steel engraving, dye and stamp cutting, are well conducted; and Edinburgh has the largest private establishment in the kingdom, perhaps in Europe, for the production of atlases, maps, and all kinds of geographical works; 4 daily, and 5 weekly or semi-weekly newspapers, are published, besides numerous monthly, quarterly, and other periodicals. Edinburgh is a great railway centre, and a part of the new town is traversed by a tunnel of the N. B. line. The union canal is used for the conveyance of heavy goods between Edinburgh and Glasgow. The elevated situation of the city admits of free ventilation; and an abundant supply of water is brought from the Pentland Hills, 8 m. S.W. Mean temperature of the year 47°·2 Fahr.; mean of summer 57°·6, winter 37°·9. Annual rainfall 27 inches. The climate of Edinburgh is salubrious, and is comparatively dry and mild. Arthur Seat, in its immediate vicinity, in the middle of the Royal Park (680 acres in extent), 822 feet above the sea, is encircled by carriage drives, and ornamented by artificial lakes. The meadows on the south are open parks for archery and other recreations, and in the "links" the ancient game of golf is still played. In the vicinity there are 6 ornamental cemeteries.

The city is governed by a Lord Provost, elected for 3 years, who is also high sheriff of the royalty, lord lieutenant of co. of the city, admiral of Firth of Forth, is entitled to the style and title of "The Right Honourable," and has precedence of all official persons within his jurisdiction; 6 bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and council; in all, 41. There is a guildry, a merchant company, chamber of commerce, and 14 incorporated trades. The city sends two members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1862) 1569. Corp. revenue of city (1862-3) 43,464*l*. Annual value of real property (1863-4) 933,536*l*. The Court of Session, or supreme civil court for Scotland, is composed of 13 judges, 5 of whom sit as lords ordinary, to decide causes in the first instance, and 4 sit in each of the two divisions of the inner house. The Court of Justiciary is composed of the Lord Justice-General, the Lord Justice-Clerk, & 5 lords commissioners. The faculty of advocates (barristers) consists of advocates who have the privilege of pleading causes before the Court of Session. The advocates' library contains 150,000 printed volumes and 1700 MSS., & is entitled to a copy of every book issued in the United Kingdom. The society of writers to the signet, who have also a large library, practise as agents or attorneys before the Court of Session. The solicitors is another society who practise before the supreme courts, but with inferior privileges to the W.S. There is also a sheriff court, with a new county hall in course of erection, 1864, and justice of peace court. The Register House, an elegant building E. end of Princes Street, erected in 1774, with an equestrian statue of Wellington in front, contains the public records, & records of landed property, for Scotland, under the direction of the lord clerk register and clerks of Court of Session, with an extensive detached range of additional buildings, erected 1863, in a plain Italian style, by Mr Matheson. It contains a central dome, and is divided into 5 galleries for the records of the supreme courts of law, and those of births, marriages, and deaths in Scotland. The police establishment and society of high constables form an effective protection for the peace of the city. The prisons for the city and co. are situated on S. side of the Calton Hill.

Simeon of Durham, writing in the year 854, mentions the fortress or castle under the name of Edwinesburgh, or castle of Edwin, probably so called after Edwin, Prince of Northumberland. In 1128 the town received a charter from David I., still preserved in the archives of the city. In 1437 James II. was crowned here; and in 1633 Charles I., on the occasion of his coronation, created the burgh into a city, with all customary privileges. Edinburgh was the permanent seat of the Scottish parliament till the union with England; it was long a favourite abode of the Scottish sovereigns, and its ancient palace is still frequently honoured with the visits of royalty.

EDINBURGH (NEW), a vill. of Canada West, co. Carlton, township Gloucester, at the confl. of the Ottawa & Rideau rivers, 1 m. from Ottawa. P. 700. • EDINBURGHSHIRE or MID-LOTHIAN, the metropolitan co. of Scotland, bounded N. by the Firth of Forth, E. by Haddington and Berwick shires, S. by Peebles and Selkirk, and W. by Linlithgowshire. Extreme length W. to E. 35 m.; average breadth 16 m. Ac. 234,925. P. (1861) 273,997. The S.E. part of the co. is intersected by the Moorfoot hills, a branch of the Lammermoors, of lower silurian formation. From the S.W., the Pentland range runs towards the N.E., composed of felstone, while the greenstone hills of Corstorphine extend from the Firth of Forth S.ward, and are continued by the greenstone and basaltic elevations of the castle rock, Arthur Seat, and Calton, in the vicinity of the capital. Carnethy, the most elevated of the Pentland range, is 1890 feet above the sea. From the S. the co. gradually slopes towards the borders of the Firth and on the E. and W. extends into level and fertile plains. The coast line, 13 m. in extent, is in part sand downs. The principal rivers, none of which are large, are the Water of Leith, flowing along the N.W. declivity of the Pentlands, till it joins the Firth at Leith. The Esk, originating in two branches N. and S., in the southern part of the same mountain range, uniting to the E. of Dalkeith, and joining the sea at Musselburgh. The Almond, flowing through the N.W. valley of the co., rising in the Moorfoot hills, & flowing E. into Haddingtonshire. And the Gala, rising also in the Moorfoots, crosses the S.E. corner of the co., and forms the boundary between Selkirk and Roxburgh. The greater part of the co. belongs to the coal formation, and coal is extensively wrought. A bed about 15 m. in length and 8 m. in breadth, extends across the district from Carlons to Musselburgh, containing 33 seams, from 9 inches to 6 feet thick, partly horizontal and partly edge. Sandstone of a very superior quality abounds, and is extensively quarried at Craighleith, Granton, and Hailes. Limestone is found in many localities, especially at Gilmerton, Crichton, and Burdiehouse. Slight indications of lead and copper have been noticed, but no metal is wrought except iron, which exists as ironstone in the coal strata. The co. is chiefly agricultural, and farming is conducted on the best modern principles. The farms are large; chief crops, wheat, barley, oats, beans, peas, turnips, and potatoes. Valued rent (1863-4) 396,386*l*. In the vicinity of the metropolis are large nurseries, vegetable and fruit gardens, and dairy pastures. There are large paper mills on the Esk and Water of Leith, and several distilleries, breweries, potteries, but no other manufs. of importance. The Edinburgh and Glasgow, North British, and Caledonian railways, traverse the co. Edinburgh, the cap., is the only royal burgh. Dalkeith is a burgh of barony, and Musselburgh a burgh of regality. Principal vills., Portobello, Newhaven, Lasswade, Loanhead, Ratho, Penicuik, and Roslin. Leith is the principal seaport, and Granton is a low-water pier for steamboats. The co. (exclusive of Edinburgh and suburbs) contains 24 pas. and 5 quoad sacra do. It sends 1 member to House of Commons. Reg. elects. (1863) 1593. Polling-places, Edinburgh, Dalkeith, and Mid-C Calder. Mid-Lothian and the surrounding districts, at the period of the Roman conquest, was formed into the prov. of Valentia. The county was subsequently occupied by Saxon invaders from the N. of England, and by them chiefly retained till about the year 1020, when the Lothians were ceded to the Scottish monarch, Malcolm II. Principal antiquities: Roslin Chapel, Craigmillar, Borthwick, and Crichton castles.

EGYPT (Lat. Egyptus, the Mizraim of Scripture, and Masr of the Arabs), a country of N.E. Africa, situated between lat. 31° 37' and 24° 1' N., lon. 27° 18' and 34° 12' E.; bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by the Isthmus of Suez and the Red Sea, S. by Nubia, and W. by Barbary and the Sahara. Length, N. to S., 520 m. Area estimated at 177,970 sq. m., of which the extent of the space inundated or irrigated by the Nile is about 6000 sq. m. Pop. by a rough census (1859) 5,125,000. Another estimate, based on an official return of the number of houses, allowing 8 persons to each house in Cairo, and 4 for the rest of the country:—Egyptian Mussulmans, 2,600,000; do. Copts, 150,000; Osmanli Turks, 12,000; Bedwin Arabs, 70,000; Barbaras, 5000; Negroes, 20,000; Abyssinians, 5000; Circassian and Georgian slaves, 5000; Jews, 7000; Syrians, 5000; Armenians, 2000; Greeks, 5000; Europeans domiciled in Egypt, about 9500. Cap. Cairo. The territory of Egypt is composed of a long narrow valley, enclosed by a double range of hills, which extend from Assouan to Cairo, and traversed by the Nile. N. of Cairo, where the mountains terminate, the Nile separates into numerous branches, of which the two principal flow, the one N.E., and the other N.W., to the Mediterranean, enclosing a triangular space, having the sea for its base, and called the Delta from its resemblance to the Greek letter Δ. These mountain chains, which defend the valley of the Nile from the sands of the surrounding desert, rise to a height of about 2000 feet in the vicinity of Thebes; in many places they are merely low hills stretching into the desert. On the E. of the Nile, in Upper Egypt, the highest point is Jebel Gharib, 6000 feet above the sea. The range, which is seldom more than 300 feet high, terminates abruptly in Jebel Mokketam, near Cairo. The desert of Libya contains many oases, which owe their fertility to the lowness of their situation, enabling them to retain moisture. In the N. of the Libyan desert are two contiguous valleys, enclosed by branches of the W. mountains, in one of which, called the "valley of the Natron Lakes," are found small pools, which in winter exude a liquid of a violet-red colour, to the height of 6 or 8 feet. This, when evaporated by the sun's heat, leaves the substance called natron, a mixture of marine salt and sulphate of soda. The principal lakes are Birket-el-Keroun or Lake Moeris, in Middle Egypt, and Mareotis, Bourlos, and Menzaleh, in Lower Egypt, which last are shallow lagoons, separated from the Mediterranean by numerous peninsulas of sand. The geological formation of Egypt comprises granite in the district of the cataracts, from Philae to Syene, sandstone from Syene to Esneh, and limestone from Esneh to the Delta. The climate of Egypt is extremely dry, equable, and healthy. There are but two seasons—the temperate, which lasts from October to March, and the hot, from March to September. The heat, during the day, is excessive in summer, owing to the confined position of the country and the lowness of its surface; but the nights are cool. In winter the weather is mild. At Cairo, lat. 30° 3' N., the mean temp. of the year is 72°·2, winter 58°·4, summer 85°·1 Fahr.; and at Kenneh, lat. 26° 10' N., mean temp. of year 79°·9, winter 63°·6, summer 92° Fahr. Upper and Middle Egypt are more healthy than the Delta. On the subsiding of the inundation of the Nile, fevers, dysentery, & ophthalmia prevail. N. & N.W. winds blow during the progress of the sun towards the tropic of Cancer; but, on its return to the tropic of Capricorn, they vary between S.E. and W. During the spring equinox the country is visited by the pestilential wind called the Simoom or Khamsin, a hot S.S.W. wind of 50 days' duration, in which the diseases peculiar to the country assume their greatest virulence. The mirage occurs on the plains after the surface has been heated by the sun, on which occasion the country appears like a vast lake studded with islands. Rain is unknown in Upper Egypt; in the Delta it falls frequently from November to March. Showers are slight and unfrequent at Cairo; yet in 1824 rain fell continuously for 8 days, and caused the destruction of several houses. During the French scientific expedition, the number of rainy days was 15, and the latest observations give 10 or 12 in a year in Lower Egypt. Fogs are rare, but very dense when they do occur. Snow seldom falls except in the vicinity of the coast, and then in very small quantity. In 1833 snow fell at Alexandria, Rosetta, and Atfeh, to the amazement of the inhabitants, to whom the phenomenon was totally unknown; and in the winter of 1863–4, frost lasted for some hours at Cairo. With the exception of the oases, the fertility of Egypt is confined to the valley inundated by the Nile, in the Delta, and a space of from 5 to 25 m. on the banks of the river, in Middle and Upper Egypt. The soil is composed of successive deposits of earth brought down by the river, and enveloping the sands of the desert, and vegetation is sharply defined by the water mark. The Nile regularly inundates its valley for several months in the year. This periodic inundation commences in June, and attains its maximum height in September. After having remained stationary for several days, the waters subside, and disappear at the end of November. The distribution of the water is favoured by the slightly convex form of the central valley of the Nile, and is assisted by lateral canals. On the left or W. side of the river, the chief of these is the canal of Joseph, which feeds the ancient Lake Moeris, at the bottom of the fertile valley of Fayoum. As a potable water, that of the Nile is reckoned the best in the world. Egypt has no metals, and the only minerals are natron, saltpetre, salt, marble, and the celebrated red granite called "Syene marble," employed in the construction of the pyramids, and in many of the monuments of Italy; the principal quarries are situated in Upper Egypt. Emeralds are found in the mountains on the shores of the Red Sea, but the mines are abandoned. The cultivation of the soil is divided into that of the low grounds, or those watered naturally, and the high grounds, which depend for their productiveness on artificial inundations; the greater part of Upper Egypt is thus watered, and many means have been employed to facilitate the process. In ancient times Lake Moeris was formed for a reservoir; and a complete barrage of the Nile, lately effected, greatly augments the fertility of the soil. The plants peculiar to Egypt comprise the lotus, the papyrus (from which the first substance used for writing upon was made), the ziziphus, and many aromatic plants. The date palm flourishes from the Delta to the lat. of Thebes, and on its fruit many of the inhabitants of Upper Egypt depend for nourishment. Egypt has from the remotest ages been considered one of the most fertile countries in the world. The chief cultivated plants are cotton, lint, hemp, indigo, sugar, tobacco, opium; and the principal grains are millet, maize, wheat, and rice. The growth of cotton is greatly extended; the crop for 1864 was estimated to yield 15,000,000*l.* in value. Durrah (Sorghum Vulgare) forms a chief article of nourishment. The cereals of Egypt have always been celebrated; and onions, melons, cucumbers, are extensively used. The vine was widely cultivated in ancient times, & the Marcotic wine was famed by the Romans; its growth was extirpated by the Mussulmans, but again actively promoted by the late Mohammed Ali. The date palm is the most valuable fruit tree; the other fruits are the fig, pomegranate, banana, olives, and melons. Vegetables are very abundant, and comprise peas, beans, lentils, leeks, onions, garlic, and cucumbers. Maize, rice, sugar-cane, tobacco, and hemp, are cultivated. Numerous plantations of mulberries have recently been made. There are no forests, but groves of sycamores and palms, and a few orange and lemon trees. Wild animals of the antelope kind abound in the deserts, but the hippopotamus is not now found in Egypt, and rarely in Lower Nubia. Domestic animals comprise the ox, buffalo, sheep, goats, horse, ass, mule, camel, and dromedary. The birds are not of rich plumage: they comprise the ibis, celebrated in antiquity, the vulture, pelican, plover, bittern, and quails, which arrive in great flights from the interior of Africa. The rearing of fowls, pigeons, and bees, is an important branch of industry among the peasantry, who hatch eggs by means of artificial heat. Fish are abundant in the lakes of the Delta and in the Nile, and forms a considerable article of food. Reptiles, especially the crocodile, serpents, and snakes, are common; and sponges, coral, the polypus, and madrepores, are found on the shores of the Red Sea. The manufactures of Egypt are almost entirely monopolized by the Government. Carpets are made at Benisouef, red caps at Foulah, and firearms and military accoutrements at Cairo. The principal manufs. of the natives are of woollen cloths, pottery-ware, and carpets. The trade with Europe is carried on through Alexandria. Exports (1862), cotton, silk, grains, manuf. articles of goat's hair, wool, gums, pearls, ivory, rags, flax, musk, coffee, etc., to the value of 12,225,783*l.* Imports, cottons, apparel, silks, plate, copper, macnuary, iron, coals, hardwares, indigo, arms, linens, woollens, etc., to the value of 2,550,052*l.* It is anticipated that the new fresh-water canal from the Nile to Suez, opened in 1864, will extend the culture of the cotton plant over an immense area well suited for its growth. The traffic with the interior of Africa is carried on by means of caravans, which bring, in exchange for European and Egyptian products, ivory, gold-dust, skins, wool, gum, ostrich feathers, & metals. The slave-market of Cairo was abolished in 1846. The chief commercial relations with Arabia and India are carried on by Cossier and Suez. Since the establishment of regular steam packets in the Mediterranean and the Indian Ocean, and the railway from Alexandria to Suez, Egypt has become the route to India for all the correspondence of Europe, as well as for the greater portion of travellers. The Nile and the canals are employed for native traffic. Egypt was one of the earliest civilised countries in the world. And it is believed that a colony of Ethiopians first introduced a form of religion, and the art of cultivating the soil. The empire was greatly extended under Sesostris and Rameses. It was subjugated by Cambyses, King of Persia, 525 B.C. At that time it was occupied by an industrious population, had numerous cities and monuments of astonishing grandeur, of which the pyramids still exist; the obelisks, many of which were carried to Rome and Paris; and numerous temples and palaces. For 24 centuries it has been subjected to foreign domination, and has fallen successively into misery and ignorance. It was taken by Alexander the Great in 332. After his death it formed a separate kingdom under the Ptolemies, till the year 30 B.C. Augustus then reduced it to a Roman province. The Mohammedan Arabians seized it in the 7th century. The Caliphs possessed it for two centuries. In 1250 it came into the power of the Mamelukes, who were subjected to the Turks at the commencement of the 16th century. The French overran it in 1798; in 1802 they were driven from it by the British; and in 1811 Mohammed Ali rendered himself master of the country by the massacre of the Mamelukes. By judicious government & great reforms, Egypt, under Mohammed Ali, made rapid progress in civilisation; he added to his territory Nubia, Kordofan, and part of Abyssinia; and had also extended his dominion over Syria, Crete, and part of Arabia; but in 1840 he was deprived of all his Asiatic possessions. By the treaty of London, 1841, the government is hereditary among the descendants of Mohammed Ali. Egypt comprises the provinces of Said or Upper Egypt; Vostani or Middle Egypt; and Bahari or Lower Egypt. These are divided into 7 intendancies, which are subdivided into departments and arronds. Besides the governors of these divisions, the Fellahs have preserved their hereditary sheiks. The highest tribunals are those of the cadis; inferior causes are judged without appeal by the magistrates. The only city besides Cairo is Alexandria. The largest pyramids are near Gizeh, 7 m. S.W. Cairo, but others occur at intervals on and near the l. b. of the Nile, over a space of 70 m. The greatest temples & sculptures are found on the site of Thebes, and at Edfon, Denderah, etc. The chief establishment of public instruction is the University of El-Agha at Cairo. Mohammed Ali established schools of medicine, languages, and agriculture—military and naval schools. Most of the primary schools and the libraries are dependent on the mosques. The Egyptian army is raised by conscription. In 1858 it consisted of—infantry, 12,000; cavalry, 4500; artillery, 1500; engineers, 3000; and a regiment of negroes in Sudan. The fleet consists of 7 line-of-battle ships, 6 frigates, 4 corvettes, 7 brigs, 2 steam-packets, and 23 transports. The public revenue in 1855 amounted to 765,000 purses, of 5l. each; expenditure 760,000 purses; debt 6 to 7 talares = 30,000,000 to 35,000,000 francs. The revenue is chiefly derived from land, capitation taxes, and from the Pacha's monopoly on raw and manufactured goods.

ENGLAND (French Angleterre), with Wales, forms the southern portion of the island of Great Britain, between lat.  $50^{\circ}$  and  $55^{\circ} 45' N.$ ; lon.  $1^{\circ} 45' E.$  and  $5^{\circ} 44' W.$ ; bounded N. by Scotland, E. by the North Sea, S. the English Channel, and W. the Atlantic Ocean and the Irish Sea. Length from Berwick to the Land's End 425 m.; breadth 60 to 303 m. Area 58,320 sq. m., or 37,324,883 statute acres, of which 50,922 sq. m. belong to England, and 7398 to Wales. P. (1851) of England and Wales, 17,927,609; (1861) 20,066,224; increase in ten years, 2,134,116. Average number of persons to the sq. m. for England and Wales, 344. The surface is greatly diversified. In the S.W. peninsula the Cornish highlands extend in a N.E. direction, attaining in Brown Willy an elevation of 1364 feet, and are succeeded on the E. by the Dartmoor hills, 2050 feet, the Dorset hills, 900 feet, and the North and South Downs sloping E. to the Wealden heights, 313 feet in elevation, and terminating in the North Foreland. From Dartmoor, the Exmoor heights, the Mendip and Cotswold hills (1134 feet), extend N., separating the basins of the Thames and Severn, and enclosing Salisbury Plain. From the N. bank of the Thames, the Chiltern hills and the Eastern hills divide the eastern plain from the basin of the Ouse and the fen districts. In all this region, S. of the Wash and E. of the Severn, the hills are mostly isolated, and none of them, except the Dartmoor Hills, attain a height of 2000 feet. W. of the Severn, the country is occupied by the Cambrian mountains & their offsets [WALES]. Near the centre of England is the Peak of Derby (1803 feet), on the Pennine chain, which extends in a N.N.W. direction, separating the basins of the Trent and the Mersey, and terminating on the N. between the Tyne and the Eden. Its highest points are Pennegent, 2250 feet, Ingleborough, 2373 feet, Wharfedale, 2414 ft., Crossfell, 2927 feet, and Bowfell, 2911 feet, above the sea. Succeeding these, and forming the boundary between England and Scotland, are the Cheviot hills, the highest summit of which is Cheviot Peak, in Northumberland, 2688 feet. Connected with the Pennine chain on the N.W. are the Cumbrian mountains, comprising Skiddaw, 3022 feet, Helvellyn, 3055 feet, and Scawfell, 3229 feet, above the sea. Near the E. coast are the Wolds of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire (1485 feet). The declivity of the mountains is in general steep towards the W., but sloping gently towards the E. The Great central plain is bounded by the Thames on the S., the Severn on the W., and the Ouse on the E. On the N. it is separated by the Trent from the plain of York, which latter is connected with the low coast lands extending to Berwick. The coast line of England is extremely irregular, and deeply indented with bays, forming natural harbours, affording safe anchorage, and protected by a great number of prominent capes and headlands. Of its rivers, 50 are navigable, but in general only for a short distance from the sea. The four principal are—the Thames, Humber, Severn, and Mersey. On the S. coast, the Tamar, Exe, and Avon contribute their waters to the English Channel; on the E. coast, the Thames, Yare, Great Ouse, Witham, Humber and Trent, Tees, Tyne, and Tweed flow to the North Sea; on the W. coast, the Severn, Towey, and Farret flow into the Bristol Channel, and the Dee (in Wales), the Mersey, Ribble, and Eden, to the Irish Sea. Area (exclusive of Wales), pop., and subdivisions as follow:—

and part of winter, are S.W. and W. In spring and other portions of the year, dry and scorching E. and N.E. winds are common. Most rain falls in summer and autumn. The greatest annual amount of rain falls at Seathwaite in Cumberland, amounting to 127 inches, and the W. coast generally is considerably more humid than the E. The least annual amount on the E. coasts varies from 20 to 25 inches; Bishopwearmouth, in Durham, having an average of only 16·91 inches. Mean annual fall of rain in the ten years extending from 1850 to 1859, 30·52 inches. Mean temperature, year 49°·7, winter 39°·5, summer 60°·8 Fahr.

Estates and farms vary greatly in size; but throughout the greater part of the country landed property is very much divided. In 1862 the net amount of the income and property tax, which was then 9d. in the pound, was 9,313,782l. Agriculture has attained great superiority throughout England generally, though in many districts, particularly in the W., it is backward. Wheat is the principal crop, especially in the E. and S.E. cos.; barley is raised chiefly in the central cos., and oats in the N., though they are cultivated more or less in all parts of the country. Peas, beans, potatoes, and turnips are the crops next in importance. Rye and buckwheat are only partially cultivated; rape, flax, hemp, and mangel-wurzel are only cultivated in certain parts. Hops are nearly confined to Kent, Herefordshire, and the vicinity of Farnham in Surrey, and their average annual produce is estim. at 30,000,000 lbs. Adjacent to the large towns, the land is commonly laid out in kitchen gardens; and in Bedfordshire an extensive district is appropriated to raising vegetables for the London markets. In the S.W. cos. large quantities of apples are grown, and Devon and Hereford are famous for their cyder. Perry is made chiefly in Worcestershire, and mead in many of the counties contiguous to Wales. The grape does not flourish so as to produce wine, beer and ale being universally the popular beverages which supply its place. 29,086,000 acres of the whole of England are estimated to be cultivated or cultivable, and 3,256,400 acres uncultivable. A full half of the cultivable lands are estimated to be in meadows and pasture; and hay forms an important crop, for which Middlesex and the adjacent cos. are famous. The stock of horses in England and Wales has been estimated at 1,500,000, 2-3ds of which are employed in farm labour. Horned cattle are estimated at 4,000,000, 1-4th of which stock is annually slaughtered; of these the Lancashire, Holderness, Northumberland, Durham, Devon, Hereford, Sussex, and Suffolk are the chief breeds; in addition to which, many have of late been introduced from Guernsey, Alderney, etc. Butter is an important product in Essex, Cambridgeshire, and Dorset; cheese in Cheshire, Gloucester, Wilts, Leicestershire, and Devonshire. The number of sheep has been estimated at 26,000,000. The long-woolled comprise the Romney-marsh, Tees-water, Lincoln, and New Leicester breeds; and the short-woolled, the South Down, Dorset, Wilts, and Hereford. Total annual produce of wool in England has been estimated at 470,000 packs, of 240 lbs. each (upwards of 1,000,000 cwt.). Hogs are very generally kept, and are numerous in the forest lands of Hants, Berks, Gloucester, and Hereford, the former of which cos. is famous for bacon. Geese are reared in large numbers in Lincoln fens, partly for the sake of their quills. Many other kinds of poultry are also common. England is generally well wooded, and 62,620 ac.

The geological structure of England and Wales, commencing on the W., and covering the whole principality of Wales, except the S.E. angle, consists of the Silurian system of rocks, composed of limestone, flags, and slates. To this succeeds the Devonian or old red sandstone, which prevails through the cos. of Brecknock, Hereford, Monmouth, Devon, and Cornwall. The midland part of England, commencing at Berwick, has a basis of carboniferous limestone in N., which extends S. and W., with some interruptions, into Devonshire, and contains the principal lead mines. Above this lie the coal formations, commencing in Northumberland, and extending through Durham, York, Lancashire, and Staffordshire, into South Wales. Above the coal deposits lie the new red sandstone and magnesian limestone, extending in a long narrow belt from Shields to Warwick, and thence to Bristol, and in some localities abounding in salt and gypsum. East of the coal and sandstone districts, in a waving line from Whitby to the S. coast of Dorset, extend the Lias and Oolite. These are succeeded eastward by green sand and chalk, and the Wealden beds of Sussex. Diluvial clays and tertiary formations constitute the Norfolk and Suffolk districts, and basins of the Thames and South Hampshire. [BRITAIN, CORNWALL, WALES.]

of royal forest lands are enclosed for the growth of timber. The New Forest in Hampshire, the forest of Sherwood (Notts), Dean (Gloucestershire), are among the largest of the forest tracts; but the oak, so valuable a material for the construction of the royal navy, grows to the greatest perfection in the wealds of Sussex, Surrey, and Kent, a tract comprising all the country between the North and South Downs, and many parts of which have remained densely wooded ever since the Roman period. The fisheries, though they have never been chief sources of national wealth, are highly important in some localities. In the North Sea, the herring fishery is that principally pursued; and about 100 smacks of from 40 to 50 tons burden are annually employed from Yarmouth, which has an extensive trade in herrings. The towns of Sunderland, Whitby, Scarborough, and Harwich are also interested in the same trade. On the coasts of Devon and Cornwall, many of the pop. are employed during summer in the pilchard fisheries. Cod, mackerel, soles, flounders, salmon in some of the N. estuaries, and oysters, are the other fish of most importance taken in the British seas. At several of the ports ships are still fitted out for whale fisheries in S. ocean, but the N. whale fishing is now limited to Scottish ports. England is greatly indebted for the high rank she holds to her extraordinary mineral wealth. The abundant supply of coals obtained in Lancashire, West Yorkshire, Northumberland, Durham, Staffordshire, and Warwickshire have rendered these cos. the seats of the largest and most flourishing manufs. in the world. [For statement of coal and iron, see BRITAIN.] Tin is procured only in Cornwall and Devon, and copper is almost confined to that region; the produce of Cornwall is 10 times as much as Somerset, and Devonshire 6 times as much. Lead is raised in Somerset, Derbyshire, & Cumberland. The total quantity obtained annually in England and Wales is estimated at 50,900 tons, from which silver to the value of about 30,000*l.* is usually extracted. Plumbago is found in the greatest purity at Borrowdale in Cumberland, & in Devonshire manganese is found. Zinc, nickel, arsenic, alum, salt from beds and springs in Cheshire and Worcestershire, potters' clay in Staffordshire and Cornwall, lime, freestone and granite, are among the most valuable minerals. In 1863, 529 furnaces built; in blast 333; and make of pig-iron 2,451,211 tons. By far the most important manufs. are those of cotton goods, the great seat of which is South Lancashire. The number of cotton mills exceeds 2000 in all. The woollen manufs. are chiefly seated in West Yorkshire, especially at and around Leeds, Wakefield, Huddersfield, Halifax, Bradford, & Dewsbury; also in the cos. Lancashire, Cumberland, Gloucester, Wilts, Devon, and Somerset. In Leicestershire stocking-weaving is carried on; and Norwich has trade in worsteds, and is the principal seat of the crape manufacture. The manufacture of linens is carried on principally in Yorkshire, Lancashire, Durham, and Dorset; and that of silks in London (Spitalfields), and at Manchester, Macclesfield, and Coventry, in which last town ribbons are chiefly woven. The foregoing manufactures are now mostly wrought with the aid of steam.

Next in importance to the manufacture of woven fabrics is that of hardwares. The more ponderous iron machinery is wrought in Shropshire, Staffordshire, in the vicinity of Birmingham, and in the naval dockyards. Sheffield, London, and Birmingham are the principal seats of the manufacture of cutlery. Watch and clock works are made in Lancashire; leather gloves at Worcester, Yeovil, & Woodstock; boots and shoes in the cos. Northampton and Stafford; & the leather manuf. is estimated to employ in all nearly 234,000 hands. Earthenwares are manufactured in the potteries of N.W. Staffordshire; china-wares in Derbyshire and Worcestershire; and glass-wares chiefly in the northern counties. Paper, hats, bricks, tiles, soap, gunpowder, chemical wares, and straw-plait are among the other articles of manufacture. Extensive sugar refineries, distilleries, and breweries are established in all the larger commercial towns; and the London breweries are estimated to supply annually from 1,800,000 to 2,000,000 barrels of porter. Ship-building is a most extensive & important branch of industry: the largest ships of the line are built at the great dockyards of Portsmouth, Plymouth, and Chatham; and others at the yards of Sheerness and Deptford. Mercantile vessels of large burden are chiefly built in or near London, Liverpool, Sunderland, Newcastle, Hull, Yarmouth, Bristol, Southampton, and Cowes. Internal communication is effected by numerous navigable canals, and in every direction by good turnpike roads; but both these means of traffic have been in a great part superseded by a series of railways, which already extend like a network over the greater part of the kingdom. In 1862 there were 7805 miles of railway in operation in England and Wales; and on most of the lines of railway telegraphic wires were erected. The gross custom duties received at all the ports of England and Wales (1862) amounted to 18,829,423*l.*; and the shipping registered as owned at the ports of England in 1862, consisted of 20,055 sailing vessels (tonnage 3,562,022), and 1695 steam-vessels (tonnage 407,328), making a total of 21,752 vessels (tonnage 3,969,350); total crews, 176,152.

England, in the early middle ages, composed a heptarchy of seven kingdoms—viz., Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex, Northumbria, East Anglia, including the S.E. cos., and Mercia, embracing the Midland cos. These provinces, under the Saxon monarchy, have, with a few exceptions, long been obsolete; but ecclesiastically, the country is divided into the two provs. or archbishoprics of Canterbury and York. The former of these (with a pop. of 14,071,164 in 1861), comprising all the country S. of the Dee and Humber, is subdivided into the seventeen sees of Canterbury, London, Winchester, Lichfield, Lincoln, Ely, Salisbury, Exeter, Bath and Wells, Chichester, Norwich, Worcester, Hereford, Rochester, Oxford, Peterborough, and Gloucester, together with the four Welsh bishoprics of Bangor, St Asaph, St David's, and Llandaff; and the province of York (with a pop. of 6,138,507) comprises the see of that city, with those of Manchester, Durham, Carlisle, Chester, Ripon, and Sodor and Man. Of the 20,066,224 persons forming the entire pop. of England and Wales in 1861, there were 481,957 engaged in the various professions; 623,710 in commerce; 2,010,454 in agriculture; 4,828,399 in industrial pursuits; and 11,426,720 in domestic occupations (including the wives, mothers, children, relatives, and servants of households) and at school. Of the first class (profession) 88,586 were clergymen, 34,991 lawyers, 38,441 physicians and druggists, and 110,364 teachers. The total number of persons described in the census lists as "scholars" was 3,150,048, or nearly one-sixth of the entire population. Nearly all were under twenty years of age, while the males and females were almost equal. There are 11,730 parishes or parochial benefices, of which 126*l.* are new districts, the incumbents of which enjoy an aggregate revenue of about 3,250,000l. annually. In 1851, the total number of places of worship was 34,467, providing 10,212,563 sittings. Of these the Church of England supplied 5,317,915, & all the other denominations 4,894,648 sittings. And the number of children attending school was 1,754,812. The cos. are territorial divisions, some of which were established during the heptarchy. In each are a lord-lieutenant, and one or more sheriffs appointed by the Crown, a variable number of magistrates commissioned by royal authority to act as justices of the peace, and one or more coroners elected by the commonalty. Besides parishes, the cos. are generally subdivided into hundreds, and tythings, and pa. unions; in addition, Sussex is divided into rapes, Kent into lathes, Lincoln into parts, the extreme N. cos. into wards, and Yorkshire into wapentakes and ridings, all of which are more extensive divisions than those previously named. At the census of 1861 the number of cities, boroughs, and towns in England and Wales containing upwards of 2000 of a population was 607. Cities and boroughs are governed by their own corporations, which, since the Municipal Reform Act, have consisted of a mayor and a variable number of aldermen, and three times their number of councillors or burgesses, elected by the different borough wards. The cities of London, Bristol, Canterbury, Coventry, Exeter, Gloucester, Lichfield, Lincoln, Norwich, Worcester, and York, and the towns, Hull, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Nottingham, Poole, and Southampton, are cos. of themselves, and participate in the regulations applying to counties in the election of representatives to Parliament. The total number of electors for cities and boroughs in England and Wales in 1863-4 was 487,004, and for counties 535,788, making a total of 1,022,792, or nearly one-twentieth of the population. in the earthquake of 1638.—II. (della Fonte), a comm. of N. Italy, prov. and circ. Brescia. P. 2228. It has silk mills and timber.—III. prov. Reggio Calabria, circ. Palme. P. of comm. 5852.

EUFEMIA (SANTA), a vill. of Austria, Dalmatia, circ. Zara, on the island of Ugljan.

EUGANEAN HILLS, a low range of mountains in Lombardy, in W. of the prov. Padua, extending for about 10 m. from N.W. to S.E. The mountains are of volcanic origin, and covered with wood. Highest point, Monte Benda, 2000 ft. above the sea.

EULAU, a vill. of Austria, Bohemia, circ. Leitmeritz, dist. Tetschen. P. 1546.

EULE, a town of Austria, Bohemia, circ. and dist. Prague. P. 2115.

EUPATORIA (formerly Koslov), a seaport town of Russia, gov. Taurida, on the W. coast of the Crimea, in a bay, 38 m. W.N.W. Simferopol. P. 13,340, mostly Carite Jews. The Tartar pop. have a mosque. Part of the Anglo-French invading army landed here in Sept. 1854. On the 17th Feb. 1855, the Russians attacked the town, but were repulsed by the Turks, and the Anglo-French war-steamers at anchor in the roadstead.

EUPEN, a frontier town of Rhenish Prussia, gov. and 10 m. S.S.W. Aix-la-Chapelle, cap. circ. P. 12,600. It has manufs. of woollens.

EUPHRATES (native Phraat or Frat), a river of Asiatic Turkey, the E. most part of which it drains; rises by two heads in the table-land of Armenia, the source of the principal, the Morad, being between Lake Van and Mount Ararat, and that of the Frat, about 20 m. N.E. Erzeroum. Both branches have a W. course, and they unite in lat.  $39^{\circ} N.$ , lon.  $39^{\circ} E.$ , whence the Euphrates has successively a S. and a S.E. course, encompassing on three sides the whole basin of its chief tributary the Tigris, and separating Turkish Armenia and Mesopotamia from Syria and the Arabian Desert. In lat.  $31^{\circ} N.$ , lon.  $47^{\circ} E.$ , the Tigris unites with it to form the Shat-el-Arab, which, about 130 m. below, enters the head of the Persian Gulf, and including which, the total length of the Euphrates to the source of the Morad may be estimated at 1800 m. In its upper third, it traverses a mountainous country, and near Someisat breaks through the Taurus chain, forming a double cataract; but from this point it is navigable to the sea, and in its lower part flows through a rich and flat region, where it varies from 200 to 800 yards in width, having as high as Hillah a depth of 18 feet, and navigable for steamers drawing 4 feet water, from the sea to Bir, 100 m. E. the Gulf of Scanderoun, and the nearest point of its approach to the Mediterranean. Besides the Tigris, it receives the Karasu of Kaisariyeh, Khabur, and Kerah rivers; and on its banks are Bassorah (on the Shat-ul-Arab), and the towns Arja, Semava, Lemlum, Hillah (the modern representative of Babylon), Aubar, Hit, Hadith, Kaskisia, Rakha, etc.; and in Armenia, Melagherd, and Erzeroum.

EURE, Eburna, a river in the N.W. of France, rises in dep. Orne, flows N.E. through the depts. Eure-et-Loire and Eure, past Chartres, Nogent-le-Roi, Ivry, Louviers, and joins the Seine on left, near Pont-de-l'Arche. Chief affluent the Iton on left. Length 112 m., for 50-of which, it is navigable.

EURE, a dep. in the N.W. of France, cap. Evreux, forms part of the old prov. of Normandy, situated on the estuary of the Seine, between lat.  $48^{\circ} 37'$  and  $49^{\circ} 28' N.$  Area 2300 sq. m. P. 398,661. Climate mild and humid; surface generally flat. Chief rivers, the Seine and its affluents, the Eure, Rille, Andelle, and the Iton, affluent of the Eure. There are several mineral springs. Its railways are the Paris and Havre, Cherbourg, and Honfleur lines. Minerals comprise iron, building and mill stones; corn is raised for exportation; apples and pears are important crops; pasture is extensive, and forests cover one-fifth part of the dep.; excellent horses, cattle, and sheep are reared. Mining and manuf. industry active; the latter includes woollens, cotton, paper, glass, iron, copper, and zinc wares. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Les Andelys, Bernay, Evreux, Louviers, and Pont-Audemer.

EURE-ET-LOIR, a dep. in the N.W. of France, cap. Chartres, forms part of the old provs. Orleannais and Ile-de-France, between lat. 47° 57' and 48° 55' N. Area 2268 sq. m. P. 290,445. Chief rivers, the Eure and Loir; there are many marshes in the W. Railways, from Paris to Brest by Chartres, and from Paris to Tours by Châteaudun. Climate mild and temperate. Soil fertile; a great amount of corn is raised. Cavalry horses are reared, and numerous cattle, sheep, and poultry. The dep. has few minerals, but several iron works, and manufs. of coarse cloths, cottons, and paper. It is divided into the arrs. Chartres, Châteaudun, Dreux, and Nogent-le-Rotrou.

EURIPUS CHANNEL, Greece. [EURCEA.]

EUROPE, Europa, the smallest of the great divisions of the globe, forms a peninsular prolongation of Asia, from which it is separated on the E. by the river Kara, the Ural mountains and river, and the Caspian Sea; and on the S. by the mountain chain of Caucasus. On all other sides it is bounded by seas, bays, gulfs, and straits; these are, on the N. the Arctic Ocean, W. the Atlantic, and S. the Strait of Gibraltar, the Mediterranean, the Sea of Marmara, and the Black Sea. The continental portion of Europe is comprised between lat. 36° and 71° 12' N., lon. 9° 30' W. and 60° 50' E. Area estimated at 3,768,000 sq. m., 3-4ths of which is occupied by plains, and 1-4th by mountains and high lands. The peninsulas comprise one-fourth, and the islands about one-twentieth of the whole extent.

sected by inland seas, bays, and gulfs, that it has a development of coast line far surpassing, in proportion to area, that of any other continent. The principal peninsulas are in the N.; Scandinavia, between the Baltic Sea and the Atlantic Ocean; Jütland, between the Baltic and the North Sea; the peninsula of Brittany, between the English Channel and the Bay of Biscay. In the S., the Iberian peninsula (Spain and Portugal), between the Mediterranean and the Atlantic Ocean; the Italian peninsula, between the Adriatic and the Tyrrhenian Sea; the Hellenic peninsula (Greece and Turkey), E. of Italy; and the Crimea in the N. of the Black Sea. The principal islands are the British Isles, the largest in Europe, between the Atlantic Ocean and the North Sea; in the Arctic Ocean, Novia Zemlia; in the Mediterranean Sea & its branches, Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, Malta, Elba, and the Balearic islands; the islands of Greece, with the Ionian islands, Crete or Candia, and the islands of Dalmatia. The Baltic includes numerous islands, the chief of which are Seeland, Fühnen, and Laaland, Rugen, Bornholm, Oeland, Gothland, and the archipelago of Stockholm. Most of the rivers of Europe belong to two great basins, that of the Atlantic and its branches on the W., and the Mediterranean on the S.; the line of separation, which follows the direction S.W. to N.E., is elevated on the W., where it is formed by the Sierra Nevada, part of the Pyrenées, the Cevennes and the Vosges mountains; it meets the Alps near the sources of the Rhine and Rhône. After cutting the Carpathians on the N. of Hungary, the watershed traverses Russia, where its elevation is very inconsiderable. On the E. and S.E., the Volga and its affluents contribute their waters to the Caspian Sea, and on the N.E. the Dwina flows to the Arctic Ocean. A great part of North Germany, Denmark, the Netherlands, and part of Belgium are plains, little elevated above the level of the sea; the great plains of Russia and Poland have a mean height of 360 feet. The other countries of Europe are traversed by chains of mountains, of the chief of which are the Scandinavian Alps in Sweden and Norway; the Carpathians, the Sudetic mountains in Germany; the Balkan mountains, the Dinaric Alps, and the chain of Pindus in Turkey; the Alps, between Italy, France, Switzerland, & Germany; the Apennines, in Italy; the Jura, between France and Switzerland; the Cevennes & the mountains of Auvergne, in France; the Pyrenées, between France and Spain; the Iberian and the Cantabrian mountains, the Serra-da-Estrella, the mountains of Toledo, the Sierra Morena, and the Sierra Nevada in Spain. The principal summits of the different chains are, in the Alps, Mont Blanc, the culminating point of Europe, 15,744 feet, Monte Rosa 15,174 feet; in the Pyrenées, Maladetta, 11,168 feet; in the Sierra Nevada, the peak of Mulhacen, 11,660 feet. The mountains of Great Britain cover the N. and W. parts of the island; their general direction corresponds with that of the Scandinavian mountains, and like them also the W. sides are abrupt, and broken up by numerous gulfs, while they slope gradually to the E. shores. The principal chains are the Grampians, the Cheviots, the Cumbrian and the Welsh mountains; and the culminating point is Ben Nevis, 4406 feet above the sea. The islands of Sardinia and Corsica are traversed by a small chain of mountains, interrupted by the Strait of Bonifacio, culminating point Monte Rotondo in Corsica, 8762 feet. Sicily is traversed by a chain of mountains, sepa-

Europe owes much of its pre-eminence, as the centre of modern civilisation and progress, to its peculiar physical conformation. It is so inter-rated from the Apennines by the Strait of Messina, culminating point Mount Ætna, 10,872 feet above the sea. Some of these mountain chains contain numerous extinct volcanoes; but the volcanoes of Ætna, Vesuvius, Hekla, and Stromboli are still in a state of activity. The mean height of Europe is 1342 feet above the sea.

Europe is everywhere well watered. The most important rivers are the Volga, Don, Dnieper, Danube, Po, Rhône, Ebro, Tagus, Garrone, Loire, Seine, Meuse, Rhine, Elbe, Oder, Vistula, and Dwina. Lakes abound in Sweden, the N.W. of Russia, Switzerland, Hungary, and Italy. The most remarkable are Wener, Wetter, Mæler, in Sweden; Ladoga, Onega, and Peipus, in Russia; Leman, Lucerne, and Zurich, in Switzerland; Constance, between Switzerland and Germany; Neusiedl and Balaton, in Hungary; Maggiore, Como, and Garda, in North Italy.

The climate of continental Europe presents the most striking contrasts, but it is in general temperate, and exempt from the extremes of heat and cold to which the other great divisions of the globe are exposed. This is partly owing to the seas by which it is surrounded, and partly to the gulf stream, the heated atmosphere from which is carried by the prevailing S.W. winds to the W. shores of Europe. The numerous inland seas, lakes, and rivers which intersect it, soften the atmosphere, and induce a humidity favourable to vegetation. South of the parallel of lat. 45° N., extreme cold is rare, and of short duration, while the heat is tempered by the mountains which cover this portion of Europe; but the southern coasts frequently suffer from the hot wind of Africa, the Sirocco, which is occasionally arrested only at the foot of the Alps. The great plain of the N.E. being exposed to N. winds from the Arctic Ocean, has a much more severe climate than the other countries of Europe. The lower limit of perpetual snow in Europe has, in the Alps and Pyrenées, an elevation of 8900 feet; and in the interior of Norway, 4000 to 5000 feet. The soil of the different countries of Europe is, on the whole, fertile, and produces all the vegetable substances of temperate climates. In the peninsulas of the S., where the vegetation resembles that of the tropics, the sugar cane, the cotton plant, the orange, citron, fig, pomegranate, vine, rice, and tobacco are cultivated, and the trees comprise the chestnut, oak, and pine. In the central regions, comprising France, Switzerland, and the valleys of the Rhine, Elbe, Danube, and Theiss, and on the shores of the Black and Caspian Seas, the vine is cultivated with success; the orchards supply the walnut, peach, apricot, apple, and pear; wheat, rye, and in some places tobacco and maize, are cultivated; the poplar is common, the chestnut rare, and the forests comprise the oak, beech, and fir. In the British islands, and the greater part of lower Europe, valuable grain is cultivated, and the forests produce the oak, beech, birch, and pine. In the North of Europe, barley and oats are cultivated as far as lat. 60° N. in Lapland, and the forests produce the pine and the birch; the North of Russia is incapable of producing any kind of grain.

The fauna of Europe is less varied than that of the other continents of the Old World, but is rich in useful animals, and exempt from the noxious species common to Asia and Africa. The horse, cow, ass, sheep, goat, pig, and dog are distributed nearly all over the continent; the buffalo feeds in the marshy plains of Italy, Wallachia, and Hungary; and the camel thrives near the Black Sea. In the north of Europe the rein-deer renders valuable service to man; many of its quadrupeds yield furs, and the elder duck furnishes the valuable down of commerce. The forests abound with hares, foxes, deer, and wild boars; the wolf and the bear are common in Scandinavia. In the higher Alps and the Pyrenées are found the chamois, the wild goat, the bear, and the eagle. The birds of prey comprise the vulture, kite, eagle, and falcon. The northern seas contain immense shoals of herring, cod, salmon, and mackerel, and the Mediterranean has many species of fish.

The mineral riches of Europe are highly important, less on account of the precious metals, than the abundance of the commonest minerals. The most productive gold mines in Europe are those of the Carpathians in the N. of Hungary, Transylvania, and Russia. The richest silver mines are in the Erzgebirge, the Carpathians, and the Harz in Germany, and the Alps in Scandinavia. Iron is widely distributed; it is most abundant in Britain, the Cevennes, the Vosges, the Jura, the Eastern Alps, the Riesengebirge, and other mountains of Germany, and in the Scandinavian Alps. Lead is abundant in the E. part of the Sierra Nevada, in Cornwall, and in the Eastern Alps. Copper in Cornwall, the E. Alps, & the Alps of Scandinavia. Tin is nowhere plentiful, except in Cornwall, and zinc is mostly found in the Riesengebirge. The principal mines of mercury are those of Almaden in the Sierra Morena, Spain, and of Idria in the Eastern Alps. Salt mines occur principally in the Carpathians and in the Eastern Alps; but sea salt is obtained abundantly on the greater part of the coasts, especially on those of the Black Sea. Coal is most abundant in Great Britain and in Belgium, in the Cevennes, and in the mountains between the Rhine and the Weser. The greatest amount of turf is obtained in the low plains of North Holland, at the mouths of the Meuse and Rhine in South Holland, and in Ireland. Europe was to a great extent plunged in barbarism, at a time when Asia and Africa had powerful nations, and rich and populous cities. The navigators of Phœnicia, Greece, and Tuscany diffused civilisation and the arts through the countries of the S., while those of the middle and N. of Europe, separated by impenetrable forests and vast marshes, were inhabited by nomadic races, unacquainted with agriculture and commerce. Among these, however, the Celts, Germans, and Sarmatians formed powerful nations, who held disputed sway, till the Romans subdued all the countries of the S. and W., and during five centuries gave them their language, arts, and laws. In the fifth century, the Roman Empire was dismembered by irruptions of barbarians, and Europe again partially reverted to a state of barbarism. Modern civilisation dawned amidst the struggles consequent on the founding of the empire of Charlemagne, towards the close of the eighth century. It was facilitated by the crusades in the twelfth, and far more by the invention of printing and maritime discovery in the fifteenth century, which distributed over the globe the commerce and the colonies of Europeans, who now people the greater part of America and Australasia, and have settled in India, Africa, and the islands of the Eastern Ocean.

The population belongs to the Indo-European family of the Caucasian race, except a few Mongolian tribes in the N. and E. of the continent. The varieties of this family consist of the Teutonic or German, distributed over the N. and W. of Europe; the Slavonian in the centre and E.; the Hellenic and Pelagian in the S.; and the Celtic in the W. Christianity in its different forms is professed by a great majority of the inhabitants.

FALKLAND ISLANDS (French Malouines, Spanish Malvinas), a group in the South Atlantic Ocean, belonging to Great Britain, and consisting of 2 large and 200 small islands, between lat. 51° and 52° 30' S., lon. 57° 40' and 61° 20' W., about 310 m. E. the Strait of Magellan, Patagonia. Area 18,000 sq. m. The East Falkland island is nearly 100 m. in length N.E. to S.W., by 60 m. in greatest breadth, and the West Falkland about 90 by 50 m.; they are separated by Falkland Sound, from 9 to 12 m. in breadth. Others of the group are named the Great Swan, Saundeny Keppel, Pebble, Eagle, and Jason islands. Shores, greatly indented, and mostly low, afford mars, good harbours. Surface more lofty in the W. than in the E. portion of the group, but in the latter are hills 1700 feet above the sea. Clay slates of the silurian system constitute the greater part of the level country, and quartz rock the mountain summits. Exports to Britain (1862) 20,131; imports, 10,742. Climate temperate and healthy, but moist westerly winds, often very violent, prevail. Mean temperature of year 47°·2, summer 53°·3, winter 39°·9, Fahr. Grass lands are extremely luxuriant, and these islands are well adapted for rearing live stock, already numerous in a wild state. The tussac grass grows to the height of 6 feet. Shrub trees are the only timber. Peat is abundant to the depth of 10 feet. Some vegetables are raised in the settled parts, but little or no corn. The only indigenous quadruped is a large fox; sea-fowl are in considerable numbers; snipe, quails, hawks, etc., and a species of vulture, are found in the islands. Copper and iron ores have been discovered; seals and whales are plentiful around the coasts, and fish, especially cod, are abundant in the bays. These islands form a convenient station for ships to procure provisions and fresh water. Stanley Harbour was founded in 1853, and had a pop. of 450. The inhabitants are mostly Buenos-Ayrean colonists, with some Indians, Europeans, and occasionally the crews of whaling vessels. The Falkland islands were discovered by Davis in 1592, colonized by the French in 1763, taken by the Spaniards in 1767, and ceded in 1771 to the British, who have held uninterrupted possession of them only since 1833.

FARO (CAPE), Pelorus, the N.E. extremity of the isl. of Sicily, bounding, with the opposite coast of Reggio-Calabria (rock of Scylla, etc.), the narrowest part of the Strait of Messina. Lat. of lighthouse 38° 15' 50" N.; lon. 15° 40' 40" E. On the hill above are two sea batteries and martello towers, covered by a fort. The Farochannel is a name given to the Strait of Messina, and the two great divisions of the Neapolitan dominions were accordingly called the Dominijal-di-là (on this side), and Al-di-quà (beyond) di Faro.

FÄRÖER or the FAROE ISLES, a group of islands in the North Sea belonging to Denmark, 180 m. N.W. of the Shetlands, between lat. 61° 20' and 62° 25' N.; lon. 6° 20' and 7° 40' W. They consist of 22 islands, area 510 sq. m., of which 17 are inhabited. P. (1855) 8651. Coasts steep and rugged; interior mountainous; highest peaks, in Osteroe, 2864, and in Strömöe, 2430 feet. The channels which separate the isls. afford several good bays. The islands enjoy all the advantages of an insular climate, and derive great benefit from the N. branch of the gulf stream, which, besides raising the temperature, carries to their shores considerable quantities of drift wood. The winters are extremely mild; so much so, that sheep and cattle require no housing. Summer moist and foggy. The longest day in summer is 20, and the shortest in winter 4 hours; but the length of the day is greatly extended by the morning and evening twilight, and by the aurora borealis. There is no timber on the islands, but turf is abundant. Barley is cultivated, but does not always ripen. Turnips and potatoes yield good crops. Most of the inhabitants are employed in the fisheries, of which that of a species of small whale is the most important; and in the preparation of wool. Sheep, of which there are about 80,000, form the chief riches of the islanders. The horses are small but powerful; waggons are not employed. Sea-fowl are numerous; and feathers form a considerable article of commerce. Among minerals, the chief are fine opals and coal, the last especially in Süderöe. The people, of Norwegian descent, are robust and healthy; their spoken language is a dialect of the N. German, but their written language is Danish. The islands are governed by an amtman, who is also military commandant, a judge, and a provost. The trade is a royal monopoly; and half of the soil belongs to the king. The islands are divided into 7 parishes under a bishop. Thorshavn, on the S. coast of Strömöe (pop. 2600), is the cap. and the only town. The chief islands are Strömöe, the central and largest of the group—area 146 sq. m.—pop. 2000; Bordöe, pop. 300; Wideröe, pop. 150; Osteroe, pop. 1780; Waagoe, pop. 600; Sandöe, 500; Sknöe, 60; Süderöe, pop. 1100.

FORMOSA (Chinese Tae-wan), an island of the Pacific, between lat. 22° and 25° 30' N.; lon. 121° E., about 90 m. from the Chinese coast, from which it is separated by the channel of Fo-kien or Formosa. Estimated area 15,000 sq. m. Pop. is estimated at 2,000,000 Chinese, but in the interior of the island, and on its eastern shores, a wild race exists who do not acknowledge the authority of China, and of whom little is known. A volcanic mountain chain, with summits said to be upwards of 10,000 feet in height, traverses the centre of the island, separating the Chinese colonists of the N. and W. from the wild Formosans on the E. side. Surface of the Chinese portion well watered and generally fertile, producing rice, sugar, camphor, tobacco, wheat, tea, maize, millet, various fruits and spices, coffee, cotton, hemp, silk, timber, and dye-woods. Heavy rains fall from Nov. to May, when the climate is cool. The Chinese colonists are of a very mixed description, Formosa having been a kind of "Botany Bay" to China; but among them there are many wealthy and active traders; and an extensive commerce is carried on with Amoy and other ports of the opposite coast, to which all the shipping employed in the trade belong. Principal exports, rice, sugar, and camphor. Imports, opium, tea, silks, woollens, and other manufactured goods. The native Formosans are a Malay race, little civilized, and living under petty chiefs. Formosa, with the Pescadores or Panghoo islands, forms a foo or dep. under the prov. Fo-kien, subdivided into 5 heens or dists. administered by a special governor under the direct orders of the emperor. The cap., Foo-Choo, is rendered unhealthy by marshes in its vicinity. The port, Taewan, is the chief seat of British commerce; towards the interior it is surrounded by a crenellated wall; its schools are in high repute in China. Formosa was the last conquest of the present Tartar dynasty. In 1632 the Dutch became masters of the island, but they were expelled by the pirate Coxinga, whose successors ruled here till 1683. The coasts are rocky and dangerous, but it has good ports in the S. At the N.E. part of the island the "Nerbudda" transport and the brig "Ann" were wrecked in 1841. The mountains yield gold, silver, cinnabar, and copper; and coal fields, several miles in extent, have recently been discovered.

are covered with rocks. S. of the mouth of the Gironde, is a vast country covered with marshy lakes (étangs) and shifting sands. France is watered by many important rivers, as the Seine, which flows N.W. to the English Channel, the Loire and the Garonne, to the Atlantic Ocean, and the Rhone, which flows S. to the Mediterranean. The Rhine, Moselle, Meuse, Sambre, Scheldt, and Lys, which contribute their waters to the basin of the North Sea, have only a part of their course in France. The Somme, Orne, Yonne, Marne, Oise, Aisne, and Eure in the basin of the English Channel; the Blavet, Vilaine, Sèvre-Niortaise, Charente, Adour, Allier, Cher, Indre, Vienne, Creuse, Mayenne, Sarthe, Loire, Ariège, Tarn, Gers, Lot, Dordogne, and l'Isle, in the basin of the Atlantic; the Aude, Hérault, Ain, Saône, Doubs, Isère, and Durance, in the basin of the Mediterranean. The principal rivers are connected by canals. France has few lakes, but on the S.E. and S.W. coasts, numerous marshes and lagoons, many of which communicate with the sea by narrow channels. The roads are divided into national, departmental, and communal; the first are paved and kept in excellent order, and the whole have been much improved within the last twenty years. Railways extend from Paris as a centre, to the extremities of the country in all directions. At the end of 1861 there were 6269 m. in operation. The number of letters conveyed by the Post Office has more than doubled since 1847. France is comprised between the isothermal lines of 50° and 60° Fahr.; its surface is little elevated, the mean height being about 816 feet above the sea, and its climate is in general temperate, mild, and healthy. In the N., the winters are sometimes rigorous, and last more than half the year (mean temp. 50° Fahr.); in the S., the summers are long and warm, the sky almost always serene, and the winters of short duration (mean temp. 60 Fahr.); in the centre, the temperature is mild and more steady than in the N. and S. (mean temp. 58° Fahr.); mean annual rainfall in S. 23., W. 24., N. 22., and in the valley of the Rhone 35, inches. Number of rainy days between lat. 43° and 46°, 134; in the lat. of Paris 105, on the coasts of the Mediterranean 66, on the Atlantic 152, and in the interior 147. Along the coasts of the Mediterranean the S. winds, heated by the desert of Sahara, often spread desolation. The mistral, a glacial wind from the N.N.W., occasionally arrests vegetation by its furious blasts in the basin of the Rhone, while the E. wind from the snowy Alps is equally dreaded in the E. depts. The basin of the Garonne is visited by cold S. winds from the Pyrenées, and by storms from the Bay of Biscay. The air is most moist, and rain most frequent, on the western coasts. France produces excellent timber for ship-building and carpentry, and the cork-tree abounds in the S. The principal forests are those of Ardennes, Orleans, Fontainebleau, and Compeigne. The wild animals are the bear, wolf, fox, wild cat, wild boar, stag, roe-buck, fallow deer, the chamois, hare, rabbit, and beaver. Among birds, are the eagle, falcon, buzzard, partridge, quail, and lark. Fish abound on the coasts; in the Atlantic and English Channel are, the herring, turbot, sole, whiting, pilchard; and salmon in the estuaries; lobsters, mussels, and oysters are plenty on these shores. In the Mediterranean, the tunny and anchovy. The honey bee is extensively reared. The kermes (Coccus ilicis), which is found near the shores of the Mediterranean, furnishes a crimson dye.

The country is essentially agricultural. Per centage distribution of the soil (exclusive of Nice and Savoy) grain crops, 28·30; other cereals, 5·00; meadows, 5·00; fallow, 10·80; natural fields, 9·50; vineyards, 4·10; orchards, chestnut forests, olive and mulberry groves, 0·20; pasture and waste lands, 13·50; forests, rivers and lakes, roads, houses and uncultivated, 23·60. Quantity of wheat raised in 1861, 253 million quarters only. (in 1857 it was 374 million quarters.) Total live stock (1861) horses, 3,000,000; donkeys, 400,000; mules, 330,000; horned cattle, 10,094,000; calves, 4,104,000; sheep and lambs, 35,000,000; goats & kids, 1,400,000; swine & wild boars, 5,400,000. Mean annual product of wine, 1,089,000,000 gallons, of which 67 per cent. is consumed in the country, and 33 per cent. exported. The most esteemed wines are Burgundy, Champagne, and Bordeaux. Other products are potatoes, truffles, beet-root, olive oil, the mulberry, lint, hemp, hops, medicinal plants, and dye woods. Among fruit trees, the apple, pear, cherry, walnut, chestnut, & almond, abound. The orange, citron, olive, fig, pomegranate, and the pistachio, are confined to the regions of the S., along the shores of the Mediterranean. The product of silk has decreased in 10 years from 53 million to 26½ million lbs. Coal and iron are widely distributed. Coal raised in 1861, 8,000,000 tons, price 10s. per ton, having risen 31 per cent. since 1847. Iron and steel produced, 1,595,000 tons. Other minerals are copper, lead, silver, antimony, sulphur, sulphate of iron, & mineral waters. The salt marshes are a considerable source of wealth; & building stones, marble, alabaster slate, and a few precious stones, are found. Steam power increased from 145,807 horse power in 1847, to 513,092, in 1859. Tonnage of steam vessels in same period increased from 21,184 to 33,690 tons. The cotton manuf. of France is next in extent to that of Great Britain. Number of spindles employed (1862) 5,993,165, workmen 500,000. The number of ships which entered the ports of France in 1862 was 28,822; tonnage 4,566,673. Cleared 19,205 ships; tonnage 3,005,969, of these 34 per cent. of ships, and 28 per cent. of tonnage, were British. The progress of the industrial arts has been no less rapid during the same period. The most important manufs. are those of arms, jewellery, watches, coach building, cabinet making, musical instruments, glass, crystal, pottery, chemical products, beet-root sugar, tobacco, oil, soap, sugar and salt refineries; dye-works, tanneries, paper making, and printing; silks, cottons, woollen cloths, carpets, shawls, and lace. The products of manuf. industry, with those of the soil, form the objects of an immense internal commerce. External commerce is much less important. Book printing and publishing are extensively carried on. In 1863, 12,000 new books and 20,000 pieces of music were published in Paris, and 6000 new works in the provinces. The number of political journals in Paris and the departments is 318, non-political 6700. The principal ports are Marseille, Havre, Bordeaux, Nantes, La Rochelle, Dunkerque, Boulogne, Dieppe, St Malo, L'Orient, Bayonne, and Cette. The chief commercial relations are carried on with the French colonies, Belgium, Switzerland, Sardinia, England, Germany, Spain, and North America. Exports to Great Britain (1862) silks, woollens, grains, spirits, leather; manufs. cotton, wine, butter, eggs, sugar, oils, artificial flowers, rosin, watches, flax, hides, potatoes, bronze, glass, seeds, etc., to the value of 21,675,516l. Imports from Great Britain, silks, woollens, cotton, iron, copper, coals, coffee, machinery, oils, hair, apparel, hardwares, tallow, indigo, etc., to the value of 21,766,149*l.* The trade between France and England since the treaty of commerce has increased more than 150 per cent. Public revenue (1863) estimated at 2,069,507,518 fr., or 82,620,301*l.*; expenditure 2,060,613,362 fr., or 82,424,534*l.*; debt 11,902,000,000 fr., or 476,080,000*l.* sterling.

In ancient times France formed the greater part of Transalpine Gaul. It was subjugated by Cæsar in the year 50 B.C., and formed 17 Roman provs. In the 5th century, the Franks established themselves in the N., the Burgundians in the E., and the Visigoths in the S. In the 6th century, the Franks extended their dominions over nearly the whole of Gaul, but Brittany, Gascony, and Languedoc preserved their independence. The power of the Franks continued to increase, and under Charlemagne, at the end of the 8th century, their empire extended in Germany N. to the Elbe, and S.E. to the Theiss. in Italy to Volturno, and in Spain to the Ebro. This empire was partitioned in the middle of the 9th century, when Germany detached itself from Gaul, which last was divided into two parts.—I. The kingdom of France, comprised between the Atlantic, the Pyrenées, the Mediterranean Sea, the Rhône, Saône, Meuse, and Scheldt.—II. Lotharingia, a long strip of territory between the Rhine and the Alps on one side, and the Scheldt, Meuse, Saône, and Rhône on the other; to this Italy was added. This state was soon again divided into the kingdoms of Italy, Lorraine, and the kingdom of Provence or Burgundy, called also kingdom of Arles. These three states were successively united, nominally, to the Germanic Empire. The kingdom of France was also parcelled out into feudal duchies, and numerous seigneuries, so that the king had only an empty title before the family of Hughes-Capet, who ascended the throne in 987, succeeded in uniting round their small territory the different states of France; this process of concentration progressed under succeeding reigns, and was completed at the revolution of 1793, which subjected to equal laws the 83 govts. or provs. of which the monarchy was then composed, and divided them into 83 departments. Avignon and Venassin, which had been in the possession of the Popes for five centuries, were soon after united to France. The wars of the revolution rapidly increased the territory of the French republic. Belgium, all the countries of Germany situated to the left of the Rhine, Savoy, and Nice, were conquered, and formed into 16 new departments. This state of matters, confirmed by the treaty of Lunéville in 1801, and by that of Amiens in 1802, gave to France its natural limits, those of ancient Transalpine Gaul; but the conquests of Napoleon I. overstepped these bounds—his empire extended in Italy to Garigliano; in Germany to the mouths of the Elbe; in Illyria to the Save and Cattaro, and included the Netherlands. The secondary states of Germany, Switzerland, the kingdoms of Naples and Spain, became his vassals rather than his allies. This gigantic extension raised the whole of Europe against France, which, by the treaties of 1814–15, was again confined to its former limits. The most remarkable events in the history of France since the abdication of Napoleon I., are, the restoration of the Bourbons in 1815, the abdication of Charles X. in 1830, the election of Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans, as king of the French in 1830, the revolution and his abdication in February 1848, the proclamation of a republic, and the election of Louis Napoleon as president in 1849, and his election as emperor in 1851. In 1860 the duchy of Savoy and the county of Nice were ceded by Sardinia and annexed to France. These now form the depts. of Alpes Maritimes, Savoie, and Haute Savoie. The language employed in the acts of administration is the French, which is spoken by the educated classes, and understood by nearly all the pop. The patois of many of the depts. being corrupt dialects of the French; but German is spoken in Alsace and part of Lorraine, Flemish in part of the dep. Nord, Basbreton in Brittany, Basque in Lower Pyrenées, and Italian in Corsica. In 1862 the population comprised the following religious denominations:—Roman Catholics, 35,734,667; Protestants, 1,561,250; 156,000 Jews, and 20,815 members of other forms of belief. At same date there were in Algérie 2,778,281 Mohammedans. France is now divided into 89 depts., including 3 for Savoie and Nice, 86 of which are on the continent, and the island of Corsica forms the 89th. These were formed from the 32 provs. which existed previous to 1798, and named from the rivers, mountains, and other physical features which occur in them. The depts. are subdivided into 373 arrondissements, 2938 cantons, and 37,510 communes; each dep. is governed by a prefect, each arrond. by a sub-prefect, and each comm. by a mayor. There are 84 Roman Catholic dioceses, each administered by an archbishop or a bishop, and each cap. of a canton has a curate, each diocese has a seminary under the direction of the bishop. The Lutherans have a general consistory established at Strasbourg, where they have also a seminary and a faculty of theology. The Calvinists have consistorial churches in 59 depts., who meet occasionally in synod, and have a faculty of theology at Montauban. The Jews have a central consistory at Paris, and 60 synagogues distributed over the country. For the administration of justice, France is divided into 27 ressorts de cours national; there is in each canton a juge de paix, and in each arr. a tribunal of premiere instance. In the commercial towns there is a tribunal of commerce. The faculty of theology has six schools, and the faculty of law nine. The faculty of medicine has three schools of medicine, and three of pharmacy. Secondary instruction is given in national and communal colleges. There is a national college in most of the cities, and a communal college in other towns. A normal school is established in Paris for training teachers. Primary instruction is imparted gratuitously in schools supported by the communes, and the teachers for these are trained in the normal schools, in 1863 there were 82,135 schools of primary instruction, and the number of pupils was 4,731,946. There were 338 public libraries (exclusive of Paris), containing 44,070 MSS., and 8,733,439 printed vols. France is divided into 6 "arrondissements militaires," each commanded by a field-marshal. For the marine it is divided into five maritime prefectures, which are subdivided into arrs. and inscriptions. The administration of forests is divided into 32 arrs., embracing the principal towns in the different departments. In 1863, the army consisted of 124 regiments of infantry with 252,652 men, 66 regiments of cavalry with 62,798 men and 48,143 horses, and 29 regiments of artillery with 39,882 men, 16,646 horses, and 1362 guns. France has 119 fortresses, 8 of which are of the first rank—Paris, Lyon, Strasburg, Metz, Lille, Toulon, Brest, and Cherbourg, 12 second, 23 third, and 76 fourth rank. The imperial navy comprised 36 liners, 6 plated frigates, 24 frigates, 10 corvettes, 43 avisos, besides floating batteries for the defence of the ports.

FRASER RIVER, British Columbia, N. Amer., rises N. of Mount Brown, in the Rocky Mountains, flows N.W. 190 m., then S.W. 100 m., when it turns S. in lat. 54°, and flows through the centre of the colony 370 m. to Hope, when it turns W. and flows 80 m. to its mouth in the Gulf of Georgia, which separates Vancouver Island from the mainland. New Westminster, Hope, and Lytton are the chief places on its banks. Total length of course 740 m. Its chief tributaries are, on the right, the Stuart river, Chilcotin river; left, the Thompson river. Gold was discovered on the middle course of the Fraser in June 1856, and soon afterwards on its tributary the Thompson river, and at Lake Shouswap. In 1858, about 17,000 whites were assembled at the diggings. Owing to numerous discouragements, these had in 1861 decreased to 5000, whose earnings amounted to 6,791,409 dol., giving an annual average to each digger of 272l. sterling. There has been a considerable arrival of Chinese, but the severity of the winter season has driven them nearly all away. The high price of provisions in the auriferous regions, arising from the cost of transport, and the fact that mining operations can only be carried on during four months of the year (from the middle of September to January), form mighty discouragements to the miners. Yet there have been some splendid prizes; at the celebrated Cariboo district a lump of pure gold, weighing 7 lbs., is said to have been obtained. Steamers ascend the Fraser river as far as Hope and Yale. The geological formation of the gold region is precisely similar to that of California, the metamorphic lower silurian or primary slate formation, being thrown up and pierced by masses and veins of quartz, granite, porphyry, and other igneous rocks. GALICIA, an old prov. of Spain, with the title of kingdom, and, since 1833, forming the provs. of Coruña, Lugo, Orense, and Pontevedra, at the N.W. extremity of the peninsula, between lat. 41° 50' and 43° 50' N., lon. 6° 50' and 9° 15' W. Surface generally mountainous; principal rivers, the Minho, Sil, and Ulla. Coast line very irregular, and presents the Capes Finistère, Ortegal, and Estaca, with the Bays of Ferrol, Betanzos, Coruña, Pontevedra, and Vigo. Climate temperate; rain more abundant than in any other part of Spain. Forests extensive, and feed large herds of hogs; there are also good pasture lands, and wide tracts of heath. Chestnuts, maize, rye, flax, potatoes, wheat, barley, and inferior wine are the principal products. Sheep and horses are extensively reared. Mineral products comprise copper, lead, tin, antimony, marble, and jasper. Some pilchard-fisheries are carried on, and a few unimportant manufactures of woollens, linens, sail-cloth, etc. The mass of the Galicians or Gallegos are very poor, ignorant, and uncivilised, but hardy and industrious; they make good agricultural labourers, soldiers, and domestic servants. Many emigrate yearly into other parts of Spain and Portugal; and the porters and water-carriers of Madrid, Lisbon, etc., are usually from this part of Spain. Cap. city, Santiago.

GALICIA and LODOMIRA, with CRACOW or AUSTRIAN POLAND (German Galizien and Krakau), a crown-land or prov. of the Austrian empire, cap. Lemberg, lies in the form of a terrace on the N. slope of the Carpathian mountains. It is bounded W. by Silesia, S. by Hungary and Transylvania, E. by Moldavia and Russia, and N. by Russia, Poland, & Prussia. Area 30,241 sq. m. P. (1858) 4,612,116. The chief rivers are the Vistula with its affluents, the Biala, Wyslocka, and San; the Bug, Dniester, and Pruth; there are numerous small lakes in the Carpathians. The surface in the N. comprises wide and fertile plains, while in the S. it is covered with sandstone hills, which spread out from the Carpathians far into the interior. Climate the most rigorous in the empire, on account of the continuous chain of mountains which interrupt the mild southerly breezes. Summer is of short duration, and winter, which is very cold, lasts six months. Mean annual temp. in the plain 45° Fahr. The principal crops are oats, wheat, barley, and maize. Flax, hemp, and tobacco are also cultivated. Cattle are extensively reared, and horses are numerous, and of a hardy breed. Sheep and horses are the chief stock in the Bukowina (the S.E. part of the kingdom). Bees are extensively kept, and honey and wax are exported. Minerals comprise marble, alabaster, sulphur, iron, coal, copper, zinc; but the most remarkable mineral production is fossil salt, the bed of which extends for 285 m. along the Carpathians from E. to W., and which, in the salt works of Wieliczka and Bochnia, has been worked since the year 1300; and there are numerous mineral springs. The only manufactures of importance are spinning and weaving flaxen and hempen fabrics. Brandy distilleries are numerous. The inhabitants are of Slavonic origin, and speak the Polish language; there are many Jews, mostly merchants and distillers; the others are divided among the Roman Catholic and Greek churches, and a few Protestants. Education is in a backward state, but there is a university at Lemberg; there are numerous hospitals and charitable institutions; the chief criminal court is at Lemberg. The kingdom is divided into 19 circles, comprising 96 towns, 193 market towns, and 6060 villages. Galicia, formerly comprised in Red Russia, derives its name from Galitz or Halicz, a town on the Dniester, which was cap. of an indep. principality in the middle ages; and Lodomeria takes its name from Vladimir in Volhynia, which was also cap. of a duchy. This country, which was long possessed by the Poles, was made over to Austria at the partition of the country in 1772 and 1795.

GALILEE, one of the three provs. into which Palestine was divided in the time of our Lord, comprising the country W. of the Jordan, between Samaria and Judea. It was divided into Upper and Lower Galilee; the latter included the great plain of Esdraelon, and was one of the richest and most beautiful portions of the country. Galilee was the scene of most of our Lord's private life and ministry. It now forms the central part of the pash. of Sidon, Asiatic Turkey. The Lake of Galilee, or Sea of Genesaret, on the E. of the prov., is oval in shape, 14 m. long,  $7\frac{1}{2}$  m. in extreme width, and 653 feet below the level of the sea. The Jordan enters it on the N. and leaves it on the S. [JORDAN.] The lake occupies the bottom of a great basin: it is bounded on the E. by the mountains of Bashan, 2000 feet high, barren, and furrowed by ravines. On the S.W. the shores rise abruptly, and the N.W. is occupied by the plain of Genesaret. From its great depression the climate is hot, and the vegetation tropical. The water of the lake is sweet and clear, and it abounds in fish. On its shores were 9 cities and many villages, among them Capernaum, Magdala, and Tiberias, of which the latter only remains.

In the dist. of Gurhwal, the Bhagerettee issues from under a low arch at the base of a snow bed 300 feet thick, which lies between St Patrick, St George, and the Pyramid mountains, respectively 22,798, 22,654, and 21,379 feet in elevation. Above the outlet of the river large icicles are formed by the freezing of the melted snow water. From this place, 13,800 feet above the sea, the river flows N.W. to Bhairogati, in lat. 31° 2' N., lon. 78° 54' E., where it receives the Jahnui. The united river then flows W., and S.W. to Sookhee, where it breaks through the Himalaya Proper, and flowing S. it receives the Julkar and the Bhilling, and is joined by the Aluknunda at Deoprag, lat. 30° 8' N., lon. 78° 39' E., when the united rivers take the name of the Ganges. From this it flows sinuously S.W. 43 m. to Hurdwar, receiving in its course the Sooswa river. From Hurdwar it flows S.S.E. for 448 m. over shoals and rapids, fordable at several places, to Allahabad, where it joins the Jumna, its principal tributary, receiving in its course the Ramgunga, Kallee-Nuddee, & Eesun-Nuddee. The river is navigable to small steamers for 393 m. above Allahabad. From Allahabad to Chupra it flows easterly for 270 m., and receives the Goomtee and Tons (North Western) from the N., and the Tons (South Western) and Kurumnassa from the S. In the dry season the average breadth in this part is from 1200 to 1500 feet, and at Benares 1400 feet, depth 35 feet, discharge 19,000 cubic feet per second. At the same place during the rains it is 3000 feet broad, and 58 feet deep. The mean discharge of water at Benares throughout the year is 250,000 cubic feet per second. The depth of the channel is subject to great inequality, some parts exceeding 50 feet during the rains. Near Kutchwa, 35 m. above Benares, a shoal extends across the river, having only 30 inches water in the dry season. In the neighbourhood of Chupra, about lon.  $84^{\circ} 45' E.$ , it receives the Gogra from the N.W., and the Sone from the S.W., two large rivers, which addition makes its channel a mile wide when clear of islands, but in the dry season the greater part is dry sand. It continues its E. course for 246 m., as far as Rajmahal, receiving the Gunduck and Coosy, and many smaller streams from the south; but the evaporation is so great, that a few miles above Rajmahal, where the river is about one mile in breadth, there is scarcely five feet water where deepest, with a current of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. per hour, and the river between Calcutta and Allahabad is so shallow in many places, that it cannot be safely navigated by vessels of more than 18 inches draught. From Rajmahal the river takes a S.E. course, which it holds till it enters the sea. The Bhagirathi, a large stream, leaves the main river on the right, and 70 m. lower down, another large river, the Jellinghee, branches off on the same side, these two branches then flow S. for 120 m., are reunited and take the name of the Hoogly, becoming navigable for vessels of large burden at Chandernagore, 150 m. from the sea, into which it falls in lat.  $21^{\circ} 40' N.$ , lon.  $88^{\circ} E.$ , its estuary being considered by the Brahminists the termination of the "Sacred Stream." It receives several streams on the left, and on the right it throws off the Matabhanga Gorae and the Chundna. In lat.  $23^{\circ} 52' N.$ , lon.  $89^{\circ} 45' E.$ , it is joined by the Konaie or Jabuna, the principal channel of the Brahmaputra, and here much larger than the Ganges. The united stream throws off the Kirlynassa, 48 m. further down, and 65 m. below that divergence it joins the Meghna, and then flowing S., it enters the Bay of Bengal in lat.  $22^{\circ} 45' N.$ , lon.  $90^{\circ} 43' E.$ , its total length from its issue beneath the snow being 1514 m. The fall of the river is as follows: from Allahabad to Benares 6 inches per m., distance 139 m.; from Benares to Colgong 5 inches per m., distance 326 m.; from Colgong to the Jellinghee 4 inches per m., distance 167 m.; thence to Calcutta (on the Hooghly) 4 inches per m., distance 170 m.; and from Calcutta to the sea 1 or 2 inches per m., according as the water may be at its highest or lowest state, distance 100 m. Access to that part of the Ganges above the delta from the sea, for ships of heavy burden, can only be attained through the channel of the Meghna, Podda (Ganges), or the Chundna. In the dry season, the communication by water between the Hoogly below Calcutta and the Ganges above the delta, is kept up by the circuitous course called the Sunderbund Passage, opening into the Chundna. Besides the principal rivers, numerous small streams enter the Bay of Bengal by the Sunderbunds, a cluster of sea islands separated by many channels, flowing in all directions, but principally from N. to S. The tides are felt for 160 m. from the sea. The water of the Ganges begins to rise about the end of May, and is at its height in Sept. About the end of July all the low parts of Bengal, contiguous to the Ganges and Brahmaputra, are overflowed for upwards of 100 m. in breadth, nothing appearing but villages and trees. Several tracts are guarded from inundation by means of dams, which have a collective length of upwards of 1000 m. The annual discharge of earthy matter by the Ganges is estimated at 6,368,077,440 cubic feet. The inland navigation connected with the Ganges is very considerable, and has been much increased by means of the Ganges Canal, opened 8th April 1854, the total length of which, with its branches, is about 810 m.

GANGES (BORE OF.) [HOOGLY.]

- GENEVA (Fr. Genève, Germ. Genf, Ital. Genevra), a walled town of Switzerland, cap. cant. same name, 83 m. S.W. Bern, on the Rhone, at its outlet from the W. extremity of the Lake of Geneva. Lat. of old observatory, 46° 12' N.; lon. 6° 9' 5" E. Altitude 1335 feet. Mean temp. 48°-2, summer 62°-95, winter 32°-9, Fahr. P. (1860) 41,415, of whom 14,188 strangers. Geneva, the most populous and industrious town in Switzerland, is the seat of the central administration of the canton, and has a Gothic cathedral, a university academy, founded by Calvin in 1568, a college with 16 professors and teachers, school of arts and manufs., public library, and a large collection of curious MSS., botanic garden, observatory, museum of natural history, Calvinist, Lutheran, and Roman Catholic churches, and a synagogue. The Rhone divides the town into 2 parts; the smaller portion on r. b. is called the Quartier St Gervais, the principal seat of trade; between them is "the island," a favourite promenade, connected with the town by several bridges. A hydraulic machine raises the water of the Rhone for the supply of the public fountains. The principal manufs. of Geneva are watches, musical boxes, chronometers, mathematical instruments, jewellery, cutlery, firearms, and musical instruments. Watches exported (1853) 80,000, in 1861 only 30,000. It has a quay along the river, an active transit trade on the lake, and steam conveyances with Villeneuve, Coppet, Nyon, Rolles, Ouchy, and Vevey. Few towns of its extent have produced, or adopted, so many learned men as Geneva. Among these are Calvin, Beza, Cranmer, Lesage, Saussure, de Luc, Lefort, Necker, and Rousseau. John Knox, the Scottish Reformer, was long a resident here. It was one of the chief towns of the Allebroges in the time of Cæsar; was subject to the Romans till the beginning of the 5th century; cap. of the 2d kingdom of Bourgogne till 1034; and was under the sovereignty of the Emperor of Germany till the beginning of the 16th century. Calvin introduced the reformation here in 1535, and from that time Geneva, a free city, was considered the chief seat of Calvinism. It was taken by the French in 1798, and formed, till 1813, cap. of the dep.

Leman in the French empire, under Napoleon I. In 1814, along with a small territory, it joined the Helvetic Confederation.

GENEVA, a cant. of Switzerland, is composed of the former republic of Geneva, and part of the county of Gex in Savoy, bounded N. by the cant. Vaud, S. by the French dep. GENOA (Ital. Genova, Fr. Genes, anc. Genua), a fortified seaport city of the kingdom of Italy, cap. prov. at the head of the Gulf of Genoa, Mediterranean, 79 m. S.E. Turin. Lat. of lighthouse  $44^{\circ} 24' 18''$  N.; lon.  $8^{\circ} 54' 24''$  E. P. (1862) 127,986. Mean temp. of year,  $75^{\circ} 1'$ , winter  $47^{\circ} 3'$ , summer  $75^{\circ} 1'$ , Fahr. Climate subject to great vicissitudes, the N.W. wind (tramontane) cold and biting, and the S.W. warm and humid. The port, protected seaward by moles, the old and new, on the latter of which is a lighthouse 300 feet high, is surrounded landward by the city, which rises like an amphitheatre out of the water, being situated on the ridges of hills, and enclosed by two series of walls; the whole embraced by a line of detached forts and outworks, crowning the hills for a circuit of about 7 m. In the older part of the city the streets are steep and very narrow. Among its principal edifices are the Doria-Pamfilj, the Royal Ducal, Brignole, Durazzo, Serra, Spinola, Balbi, Pallavicini, and numerous other palaces, all rich in choice works of art; the cathedral, a Saraceno-Gothic structure, numerous other handsome churches, the university, with a library and botanic garden, the Albergo de Poveri, an asylum for 1600 poor persons, two other hospitals, 15 conservatorie or female asylums, numerous convents, the exchange, bank of St George, arsenal, quays, and a bridge over a part of the city. It is an archbishop's see, and the seat of an admiralty council, and a tribunal and chamber of commerce; has a royal college, a naval school, and important manufs. of velvets, silks, damasks, thrown silk, paper, soap, etc., with marble, alabaster, and coral works. It is a free port, and the great entrepôt of a large extent of country. Exports by sea comprise rice, cottons, woollens, hemp, flax, silks (raw and manufd.), hides, coffee, iron and other metals, wheat, grains, etc., etc. Value (1862) 3,342,940l. Imports are chiefly raw and manufd. cotton, silk and wool, sugar, essences, coke and coal, wines and spirits, coffee, wrought iron, wheat, etc., etc. Value (1862) 9,711,944l. The exports by land to Switzerland, France, and Austria amounted in 1862 to 1,467,964l. Imports by land to 1,319,412l. The combined arrivals and departures of vessels to and from the port were, in 1862, 18,735 (tonnage 2,280,644). From the 11th century to the 18th century, it was, with some interruptions, the cap. of a commercial republic, which planted numerous colonies in the Levant, and on the shores of the Black Sea. It was taken by the French in 1797, and ceded to the King of Sardinia in 1815. It communicates by railway N. to Alessandria, and W. to Voltri.

Teflis, Russia, in the Caucasus country, Western Asia, composing the central and W. portion of Transcaucasia, between lat. 38° and 42° 30' N., lon. 43° and 47° E. Area 21,500 sq. m. P. estim. at 873,000, mostly Christian Greeks. Surface mountainous; but its centre, traversed by the Kur and its affls., is an undulating and fertile plain. Corn of numerous kinds, pomegranates and other fruits, madder, flax, hemp, cotton, and wine, are among the principal products. Forests extensive, and consist of most of the trees common in Europe, but they are turned to little profit. Coal, iron, naphtha, and other minerals are supposed to be abundant, but few mines are wrought. Some woollen, cotton, and silk fabrics, leather, shagreen, etc., are made, and the arms produced at Teflis have some reputation, but, except these, the wares manufactured are very inferior. The Georgians are a peculiarly handsome race of people, and the females were formerly sold in large numbers to supply the harems of the Turks and Persians, but the events of 1854 have greatly suppressed this traffic. Principal towns, Teflis the cap., Elisabetpol, Gori, and Telav. Georgia was annexed to Russia in 1802.

South Carolina, from which it is separated by the Savannah river, S. Florida, W. Alabama, and N. Tennessee and N. Carolina. Length N. to S. 300 m., breadth E. to W. 256 m. Area 58,000 sq. m., or 37,120,000 ac. P. (1800) 162,686; (1820) 340,987; (1860) 1,057,286, of whom 3500 were free coloured, and 462,198 slaves. Surface varied. Sea extends about 80 m. From the coast for 100 m. inland, is a plain gradually rising to 500 feet, near the head of the navigation of the Savannah, Ogeechee, Oconee, and Ocmulgee rivers. Another plain succeeds, of 60 or 70 m. in breadth, on the N.W. of which are the Blue Ridge mountains, 1200 to 4000 feet; and the Chingmau Peak, 6940 feet. In the S.E. are the Okefonokee Swamps, 182 m. in circuit, filled with pools, on the islands in which grow the vine, bay-tree, and underwood. The state has many navigable rivers, and good motive power, 34 cotton mills being driven by water. Principal rivers, the Alatamaha, the Savannah, and the Chattahoochee. The sea coast is bordered by a chain of small islands, on which the famous sea-island cotton is grown. Climate various: in the N. hot, in the S. rather cold. Winter mild, snow seldom falls. Rain falls 85 days in the year. A large proportion of the soil is fertile, but in the low country are extensive swamps. Products, cotton, wool, flax, sugar, honey, wheat, corn, rice, tobacco, potatoes, and cattle. Minerals comprise gold, silver, copper, iron, coal, marble, limestone, and granite. The state has 18 banking establishments. It has manuf. of cotton, iron-works, and tanneries. In 1862 it had 1419 miles of railway in operation. Length of canals, 50 m. It has a state lunatic asylum, deaf-mute asylum, and a state penitentiary. There are churches of all denominations. It has five colleges, with large libraries; theological and medical schools; a female college, and many public schools. The state is divided into 97 cos. Present constitution, formed in 1798 and amended in 1833, consists of a governor elected for two years, senate of 47 members, and house of representatives of 130 members. The state has 8 members in the national house of representatives, and 10 electoral votes for president of the United States. Total valuation of property (1860) including slaves was 645,895,237 doll., or omitting slaves only 400,000,000 doll. The state derived its name from a charter by Geo. II. in 1732.

GERMANIC CONFEDERATION. [GERMANY.]

GERMANY (German Deutschland, French Allemagne, ancient Germania), a region of Central Europe, between lat. 44° 46' and 55° 53' N., lon. 6° and 20° E.; within these limits it comprises all the countries belonging to the Germanic Confederation, consisting of 36 sovereignties (including four free cities); bounded N. by the North Sea, Denmark, and the Baltic; E. by Prussian Posen, Poland, Galicia, Hungary, and Croatia; S. by Istria, the Adriatic, Italy, and Switzerland; W. by France, Belgium, and the Netherlands. Area 244,634 sq. m., of which 600 m. is washed by the North Sea and the Baltic, and 25 m. by the Adriatic. Germany is divided naturally into three regions—the upper or S. region, the middle or the region of plateaux, and the lower or N. region. The chain of the Alps, which covers the whole of the S. part, comprises five principal groups.—I. the Rhetian Alps, the chief ramifications of which follow the course of the Inn on the N., and branch out to the Bavarian Alps and the mountains of Vorarlberg, and extend W. to the Lake of Constance and the Schwarzwald, near the source of the Danube. Culminating points, Ortler Spitz, and Doedberg.—II. the Noric Alps, over an extent of 130 m., the contreforts of which form the Styrian and Austrian Alps, extending to the Danube. Culminating point, Gross Glockner, 12,957 feet.—III. Carvic Alps, between the sources of the Drave and the Col de Saisnitz. Culminating point, Marmolata, 9802 feet.—IV. Julian Alps, from the Col de Saisnitz to Mount Kleck in Carniola, 143 m. Culminating point, Terglou, 9380 feet.—V. Dinaric Alps, which are prolonged to Dalmatia and Herzegovina. The chain of the Carpathians commences at the mouth of the March in the Danube, and extends to the source of the Vistula, forming the S.E. confines of Germany. Culminating point, Mount Butschetje, 9526 feet. On the W. of Germany, and at the extremity of the Alpine range, which passes between the Danube and the Lake of Constance, a chain of heights extends N. to the plain of Westphalia, separating the basin of the Rhine from that of the other affluents of the North Sea. Its principal masses are the Schwarzwald (Black Forest), between the valley of the Rhine and Neckar; the Odenwald, the Rhöngebirge and the Vogelsgebirge, the Taunus and Westerwald. Culminating point, the Feldberg. On the S. of the Rhine the chief mountains are the Hardt and Hohewald. The Fichtelgebirge, in the N. of Bavaria, separates the basins of the affluents of the North and the Black Sea, and forms the nucleus of the Erzgebirge, the Böhmerwald, the German Jura, and the Thüringenwald. The whole of the country comprised between the mountains on the S., and the North Sea and Baltic on the N., forms part of the great plain of N. Europe, and is traversed by large rivers, which extend W. to the Netherlands, and E. to Poland and Russia. The N. coasts are low, and require the protection of dykes, were not defended by sandhills; the N.W. part, below the mouths of the Ems and Eider, is bathed by the North Sea. The principal gulfs are the Dollart and the Jahde. The N.E. part, between the canal of the Eider and the outlet of Lake Tsarnowitz, is bathed by the Baltic. Its principal gulf is the Haff formed by the estuary of the Oder. On this coast, and separated from it by a narrow arm of the sea, are the three great islands of Germany, Rügen, Usedom, and Wollin. The S. coasts, bathed by the Adriatic, are flat in the W., high and rocky in the E.

The waters of Germany flow N. to the North Sea and the Baltic, S. to the Adriatic, and E. to the Black Sea. Its principal rivers, in the basin of the North Sea, are the Rhine, with its affluents the Neckar, Main, Rednitz, Lahn, Sieg, Ruhr, and Lippe on right, and the Nahe, Moselle, Saar, and Sure on the left; the Ems, Weser, Werra, Fulda, Elbe, with its affluents the Moldau, Eger, Mulde, Saale, on left, and Iser, Alster, Havel, on right; in the basin of the Baltic, the Oder, with its affluents the Oppa, Neissa, Katszbach, on left, and Bartsch, Wartha, and Ihna on right; in the basin of the Black Sea, the Danube, with its affluents the Iller, Lech, Isar, Inn, Traun, Ens, Leytha, Raab, Drave, and Save, on right, and Wernitz, Altmuhl, Naab, Regen, March, and Theiss on left. The chief canals are: the Plauen, connecting the Elbe and Oder by means of the Havel river; the Finow Canal, between the Havel and Oder; the Frederick William Canal, between the Oder and Spree; the Eider Canal, connecting the Baltic and the North Sea; the Vienna Canal, connecting the Danube with the Adriatic; and Ludwigs Canal, between the Rhine and Danube.

The lakes of Germany belong to the Alpine regions, in the basins of the Rhine and Danube on the S., and to the plain of the Baltic on the N. There are few in the centre. The principal are in the Alps,—the Lake of Constance, the Chiem See, Wurm See, Ammer See, Lake of Gmunden, Aller See, Mond and Traun See, and the Werther and Zirknitz See. These are mostly deep basins, surrounded by mtns., as in Switzerland. The lakes of Northern Germany are of quite an opposite character, being mostly shallow marshes in the nearly level plains. The chief of these are the Eutiner and Plöner See, in Holstein; the Malchiner, Plauen, and Mauritz See, in Mecklenburg; the Ruppiner and Ucker See, in the Mark; and the Madue, Vilin, and Streizig See, in Pomerania.

The climate of Germany is in general temperate and healthy; it varies greatly in different divisions. Southern Germany, notwithstanding the heat of its valleys, is, on account of its elevation, proportionally colder than the more N. basins of the Rhine, Main, Neckar, Moselle, and Danube. Farther N. the mountains of Central Germany separate the climates of the S. and N. In S. Germany the winters are short, and so mild that snow lies only a few days; summer sets in early, and the heat in the valleys is often excessive; and here maize, the chestnut, and the vine, flourish. In the N.W. the cold of the long winters is so severe, that the rivers and lakes are for months together covered with ice strong enough to bear loaded waggons, and the ground is for three or four months covered with deep snow.

Germany is partitioned into numerous small states, which, according to the federal acts of 1815, form the Germanic Confederation, and of which the following table show the area and population in 1861, with dates of accession:—

* The Duchy of Anhalt-Bernburg became extinct on the death of Duke Alexander, 1863; and the Confederation, originally consisting of 39 sovereign states, increased to 42 by the adhesion of Austria, Luxemburg, Limburg, and Liechtenstein, is now (1864) reduced to 36, the five other lapsed members being the Saxon principedom of Gotha, Anhalt-Cöthen, and the 3 Hohenzollern Principalities.

The minerals of the country are extensive and varied. Gold and silver are found in Saxony, Bohemia, and in the Harz. Iron, copper, tin, lead, mercury, bismuth, zinc, arsenic, cobalt, antimony; all kinds of building marble, and many of the precious stones; porcelain clay, coal, turf, and salt, in numerous springs, & rich minerals, besides mineral springs. The vegetable products comprise all kinds of cereals, the chief of which, in the N., are wheat, rye, barley, oats, and especially buckwheat; in the S., spelt and maize, garden produce of all kinds, and potatoes (which are best in the N.). The principal plants used in manufs. are—flax, in Silesia, Saxony, Thuringia, Hanover, Westphalia; hemp chiefly in S. Germany. Tobacco, hops, rape seed, poppy, madder, saffron, aniseed, coriander, liquorice; the cultivation of beet root, for the manuf. of sugar, has been lately much extended. Fruit trees comprise the apple, pear, chestnut, almond, walnut, and apricot. The vine, first introduced by the Romans, is cultivated to lat. 51° N., but chiefly in the valley of the Middle Rhine and on the Danube, in Lower Austria, and in the valleys of the Mosel, Neckar, and Main. Timber is very extensively distributed, especially in the N.E., not only on the mountains (from the wooded character of which the word "Wald" (wood) is often used for mountain), but also in the plains. The pine prevails in the E., the oak and beech in the W.

Germany is abundantly provided with all the useful domestic animals; horned cattle are excellent in Friesland and Franconia; horses in Holstein, Mecklenburg, and Hanover; sheep in Saxony, Silesia, Bohemia, and Thuringia; pigs in Westphalia, Mecklenburg, and Salzburg; asses and mules are not numerous. Among wild animals are the bear, the chamois, and the marmot in the Alps; the wolf is most abundant in the valley of the Rhine; the hamster in the Harz; the lynx, fox, martin, and weasel generally. The eagle and vulture are found chiefly in the Alps; geese in Pomerania; pheasants in Bohemia. Fish are less abundant in the German rivers than formerly; the most common are carp, pike, perch, eels, and trout. Bees are very generally kept, especially in the northern meadows. The silk worm is not extensively reared.

The inhabitants of Germany are chiefly of the Teutonic race, the natives of Austria and Prussia only being Slavonians. In the Austrian provinces of the confederation they number 8,860,000, and in the Prussian co. of Posen, formerly a part of the kingdom of Poland, 825,000. The Magyars are a distinct race, probably of Finnish or Hunnish descent. Among these are mixed French, since the revocation of the edict of Nantes, and many Jews and Italians in the S. part of the Tirol and Illyria. The rich and powerful German language is everywhere predominant; it is divided into high and low German, the first of which is the chief written language. The population comprises about 26,000,000 Roman Catholics, the remainder are Protestants, and Jews about 476,000. General education in Germany is of a higher order than in any other country of Europe; in many of the states the common schools are excellent, especially in Saxony and Thuringia. There are 19 universities and many gymnasia, lyceums, academies, learned societies, and richly furnished public libraries in the different states. The advantages derived from these institutions are apparent in the great activity exhibited in every branch of literature & science, & in the importance of the German book trade. Annual average of new books published in Germany is 8000 to 10,000 works, & 2171 periodicals appeared in 1860. Architecture, printing, and preparation of astronomical & optical instruments have attained great excellence. Chief branches of industry are agriculture, cattle rearing, and mining. The countries of Germany are not generally manufacturing, in so far as steam power is concerned, but many parts, especially Silesia, Bohemia, Lausatia, Hanover, Westphalia, and Hessen, are distinguished for the manuf. of linens. The other manufs. comprise woollens in Austria, Saxony, Rhenish Prussia; iron, steel, and other metals in Styria, Carinthia, Silesia, Saxony, Thuringia, the Harz, Rhenish Prussia, and Nassau; gold and silver work in Augsburg; wooden wares, clocks, and toys in the Schwarzwald; glass in Bohemia; porcelain in Saxony, Prussia, and Austria. Leather is an important manuf. all over Germany. Breweries and brandy distilleries are numerous, especially in the N. The manuf. of cotton is important in Rhenish Prussia, Saxony, and Lower Austria, and silk in Vienna, S. Tirol, Berlin, and Cologne. Tobacco manufs. are numerous, and the manufs. of paper and straw goods are important. The trade of Germany, formerly greatly trammelled by the different rates of duties and customs levied by the separate states, has recently received a fresh impulse from the institution of the German commercial customs' union (Zollverein), by which the several states agree to a uniform rate of charges in transport duties and postages, and a fixed rate of exchange. Commerce is greatly facilitated by the numerous navigable rivers, all of which are traversed by steam-packets, and by an excellent system of railways.

Army (1861): infantry of the line, 398,197; chasseurs, 28,438; cavalry, 69,218; artillery, 50,254; pioneers, 6921: total, 553,028 men. The Diet has under its sole command the five fortresses of Mayence, Luxemburg, Landau, Rastadt, & Ulm.

For nine centuries previous to 1792, Germany formed an empire governed by a sovereign elected by the different states. For the purposes of administration, the empire was divided into 10 circles, and comprised, besides the kingdom of Bohemia, the margravate of Moravia, and the duchy of Silesia; its cap. was Vienna. The diet or general assembly of the empire, which was composed of three colleges, was convoked by the emperor; he was assisted in the administration of affairs by the Aulic council, which exercised the functions of the supreme court of the empire. The conquests of the French, and the annexation of Belgium and the other countries on the l. b. of the Rhine to France, led to the dissolution of the empire in 1806. This was replaced temporarily by the Confederation of the Rhine, which had for its object mutual assistance and the maintenance of peace among the confederate parties, who consisted of the kings of Bavaria and Wurtemberg, and several petty sovereigns. The confederation was established at Paris, 12th July 1806, under the protection of Napoleon I. Its territory was from time to time considerably augmented, till its dissolution in 1813. In 1815, the congress of Vienna established the Germanic Confederation, composed of all the states of Germany, who formed an alliance to secure the integrity of their laws and their respective territories, and to maintain the peace and order of the whole. The different states contribute to the military force in proportion to the population. The confederation is represented by an assembly, called the Diet, composed of deputies from the different states, the seat of which is at Frankfurt-on-the-Main. This state of matters was interrupted in 1848, when, in consequence of revolutionary movements, the governments of many of the German states were changed. On 31st March, 500 deputies held a preliminary assembly at Frankfurt, for the formation of a Germanic parliament, which held its first sitting on 18th May, and on the following day the Archduke John of Austria was elected regent or vicar of the empire; he was installed on the 12th July, on which day the diet held its seventy-first sitting. On 16th August 1863, the sovereign princes of Germany, and the burgo-masters of the free cities, assembled at Frankfurt, to deliberate on a project of federal reform.

GHADAMES, a town of Africa. [GADAMES.]

GHARA, a river, India, the name of the united streams of the Sutlej and Beas, from their confl. at the Endreesa to their confl. with the Chenab, in lat. 29° 18' N.; lon. 71° 6' E. Length 300 m. At its commencement it is from 200 to 270, and at its termination 500 yards across.

GHAT, a caravan station of N. Africa, in the country of the Tauricks, on the route S. from Mourzouk, lat. 25° 3' N.; lon. 10° 30' E.

GHATUMPOOR, a town of British India, dist. Cawnpore, 28 m. E. Calpee.

GHAUTS (WESTERN), a mountain range of Southern India, extending from the valley of the Taptee, lat. 21° 21' N.; lon. 73° 45' E., for 800 miles along the Western side of the peninsula, at a distance of 10 to 60 miles from the coast. The range increases in elevation as it extends southwards, and at Mahabuleswar, lat. 18°, is 4700 feet above the sea. South of this it decreases till in lat. 15° it is only 1000 feet, still farther S. it again rises and reaches its culminating point, estimated at 7000 feet, in Benasson-hill, near Coorg. In lat. 11° 15' S. the Ghauts merge into the Neigherry hills and terminate abruptly in the precipices forming the N. side of the Palghat valley. The mountains extending 200 miles S. from this valley to Cape Comorin, and which may be considered an extension of the W. Ghauts, have a table-land 4740 feet high, and several peaks from 6000 to 7000 feet above the sea. The geological structure of the W. Ghauts is generally of primary formation, with alternating strata of more recent origin, which has been broken up by outbursts of volcanic rocks. In the N. portion, from lat. 21° to lat. 18°, it is overlaid with trap. South of this it is succeeded by laterite, which forms the overlying rock nearly to Cape Comorin. The W. side of the range is abrupt and steep, while on the E. it is undulating, and slopes gradually to the plains. From the boldness and precipitous character of the trap rocks many parts of the range are nearly inaccessible, and their natural fastnesses having been improved by art, the hill forts of the Ghauts have always been regarded as the bulwarks of the Deccan. The amount of moisture condensed in these mountains is so great, that at Mahabuleswar the annual fall of rain is 239 inches, while at Bednore, on the W. border of the table-land of Mysore, lat. 13° 49' N., lon. 75° 6' E., there are 9 months of rain in the year. The numerous torrents which traverse the low lands between the Ghauts and the sea stagnate as they approach the coast, and form a series of shallow lakes called backwaters.

GHAUTS (EASTERN), a mountain chain of S. India, rising in about lat. 21° N., near Balasore, on the E. side of the peninsula opposite the W. Ghauts. The range has a N.W. direction W. of Ganjam to Naggerly Nose, 50 m. N.W. Madras, where, turning S.W. by Chittoor and Salem, it joins the W. Ghauts N. of the Gap of Paulgautcherry. Average elevation 1500 feet. The geological formation of the range is granite, overlaid with gneiss and mica-slate. The term Ghaut (meaning a pass) is now applied to the two mountain chains, originated in those chasms in the ridges which give access to the highlands.

GHAZEPORE, a dist. of British India, N.W. provs., enclosed by Azimghur, Sarun, Shahabad, Benares, and Jaunpore, between lat. 25° 17' and 26° N., lon. 83° 8' and 84° 40' E. Area 2187 sq. m. P. 1,059,287. Soil fertile, yielding two crops in the year. Towards the end of June, when the rainy season begins, the kureef crop, consisting of maize, indigo, rice, pulse, and oilseed, is sown, and gathered in the beginning of winter. In the cold season the rubbee crop, which comprises barley, wheat, corn, grain, safflower, oil-seeds, sugar, opium, tobacco, and cotton, is sown, and gathered in summer. Principal river, the Ganges. Irrigation, which is universally adopted on account of the rubbee crop, is procured by means of wells, tanks, and rivers. Climate healthy. In the cold months the thermometer ranges from 58° to 71°; and in summer from 86° to 98°, Fahr. The dist. was annexed to British India in 1775.

GHAZEPORE, a town of British India, cap. of dist. of same name, on l. b. of the Ganges, 46 m. N.E. Benares. P. 38,573. Mean temp. 64°-75, December 97°, Fahr. Rainfall 47 inches. It has many mosques and bazaars. Principal buildings, the fine but dilapidated Saracenic palace of Cossim Ali Khan, now used for a custom-house, a fort, military cantonments, the church, school, hospital, and gaol. Government has a breeding stud here for cavalry horses; and on the parade-ground, the mausoleum of the Marquis Cornwallis, who died here in 1805. Principal towns are Azimpoor and Dooryghaut.

GHEBSE or GAYBAISSA, Lybissa, a town of Asia Minor, Anatolia, on the Gulf of Ismid (Nicomedia), 26 m. S.E. Constantinople. It has a marble mosque and some good baths.

GHUZNEE or GHIZNI, a famous fortified city of Afghanistan, on the W. extremity of a hill range, altitude 7726 feet, 80 m. S.S.W. Cabool. Lat. 33° 34' N.; lon. 68° 18' E. P. (excluding garrison) estimated from 3000 to 10,000. It stands on a scarp'd rock, 280 feet above the adjacent plain on its W. side; and its walls, about 35 feet in height, and flanked with numerous towers, form an irregular square about 1½ m. in circumference; the whole being enclosed by a fausse-braye and a wet ditch. In the N.E. part of the town is the citadel, with a palace, magazine, and granary; the whole city is, however, commanded by adjacent heights. From its elevated position the winter cold is intense; from 10° to 20° below zero. It has several bazaars, and is an entrepôt for the trade between Afghanistan and the Punjab. Old Ghuznee, destroyed in the 12th century, is about 3 m. N.E.; its ruins cover an extensive space; and here are two fine minarets, and the tomb of Mahmoud of Ghuznee, whence the famous "gates of Somnauth" were removed in 1842. Under the dynasty of Mahmoud of Ghore, and his father Subuctaghin, about the beginning of the 11th century, Ghuznee was the cap. of an empire, reaching from the Ganges to the Tigris, and from the Jaxartes to the Indian Ocean. It was stormed and taken by the British under Lord Keane, July 23, 1839; in 1842 the garrison surrendered it to the Afghans, but it was retaken in the same year by the troops under General Nott.

GHUZNEE RIVER rises about 12 m. N. Ghuznee, and enters Lake Ab-istada, after a S. course estimated at 60 m. Near Ghuznee, which it passes on the E., it was embanked in the 11th century by Mahmoud of Ghuznee, whose bund, though much damaged by the Ghore sovereigns, is still fit for the purpose of irrigation.

GIBRALTAR, a strongly fortified seaport town and garrison belonging to Great Britain, near the S. extremity of Spain, on a mountainous promontory E. of its bay, and on the N. side of the Strait of Gibraltar, at the entrance to the Mediterranean, 60 m. S.E. Cadiz. Lat. of the Mole 36° 7' 3" N.; lon. 5° 21' 2" W. P. (1856) 17,750. Mean temp. of year 67°·4, winter 57°·9, summer 77°·8, Fahr. East winds prevail for 184 days, and west winds for 177 days. Number of rainy days 68; quantity of rain very variable, often deficient. Snow and ice are rare, but in winter the cold is extreme. The celebrated rock (ancient Mons Calpe, one of the "pillars of Hercules") forms a promontory connected with the continent by an isthmus of sand, and consists of a mass of brownish grey limestone or marble, containing numerous caves, and is 3 m. in length N. to S., by  $\frac{1}{2}$  to  $\frac{3}{4}$  m. in breadth. Area  $1\frac{1}{2}$  sq. m. It rises abruptly to 1467 feet above the sea on all sides except the W., and is everywhere fortified by works of great strength and extent; besides which, there are two galleries excavated in the rock, 2 m. in length, and of sufficient width to admit carriages. At its S. extremity, Europa Point, are a signal-house and a lighthouse. Surface parched in dry weather, but after rain covered with vegetation. The zoology of the rock comprises monkeys without tails, and of a dark fawn colour, and the only species of that animal to be found native in any part of Europe; snakes, rabbits, and woodcocks. The town is built on its W. side, which shelves down to the bay; and here the fortifications have latterly been greatly improved & strengthened. P. (1860) 15,426 (excluding garrison, which in 1860 numbered 5975 men). The principal street is 1 m. in length; but the houses generally are unsuited to the climate, not being furnished with open courts and galleries. Principal edifices, the governor's house, the admiralty, naval hospital, victualling office, barracks, cathedral, and exchange, with libraries, club and news-rooms. Here are a Roman Catholic church, Wesleyan chapel, Scotch church, synagogue, and subscription schools. Outside of the "south port" are the esplanade, the English cemetery, and a suburban residence of the governor. The harbour is good, and protected by two moles, one 1100 and the other 700 feet in length. Gibraltar was made a free port in 1704, and its trade is still considerable, though it has latterly suffered from the rivalry of Malta and Genoa. Exports (1862) wool, lead, copper, etc., to the value of 97,559*l.* Imports cottons, linens, woollens, hardwares, coals, iron, silk, tea, etc., to the value of 1,144,699*l.* Public rev. (1860) 33,500*l.*; expenditure 29,000*l.* Imperial expenditure for military purposes, including troops, transports, fortifications, and barracks, 420,695*l.* The Moors, on their first incursion into Spain in 711, took possession of the town and of Mount Calpe, to which they gave the name of Gibel-al-Tarik. It was ceded to Spain by the Moors in 1462, and taken by the English, under Sir G. Rooke, in 1704. Under Lord Heathfield it withstood successfully a memorable siege by the French and Spaniards in 1782.

GIBRALTAR (BAY OF), an inlet of the Mediterranean, near the S. extremity of Spain, Andalusia, between the rock of Gibraltar on the E., and Cape Carnero on the W. GLASGOW, a city and parl. bor. of Scotland, lower ward of Lanarkshire, on the Clyde, 47½ m. by railway W.S.W. of Edinburgh, and 400 m. W.N.W. London. Lat. of observatory 55° 52' 2" N.; lon. 40° 15' 54" W. Ac. of city of Glasgow 988. P. (1801) 83,769; (1861) 394,864, within the parl. boundary; Glasgow and suburbs (1861) 446,639. The city is divided by the Clyde, the larger portion being on the N. side; 3 stone and 2 suspension bridges. Mean alt. 66 feet. Mean temp. of year 47°-1, summer 57°-6, winter 38°-6, Fahr. Rainfall 45.4 inches. Leading streets, Gallowgate, Trongate, and Argyle Street, run in a continuous line of 2 m. parallel with the river; Duke Street, George Street, and W. George Street form a second; and Parliamentary Road and Sauchiehall Street a third parallel: numerous streets cross them at right angles, forming a regularly built city: in the W. and N.W. are many squares and crescents, with splendid mansions, and parks extending to the Kelvin, the residences of the more opulent citizens. Length of city 4½ m.; breadth 2 m. The most ancient part of the town is on elevated ground to the N.E., where stands the cathedral of St Mungo, a fine old Gothic structure, supposed to have been founded in 1136, and bearing marks in its architecture of various dates of erection; length 319 feet, height of tower and spire 225 feet. The choir of the cathedral is still used as a place of worship; while its new crypt, fitted with stained glass windows, is one of the most remarkable in Europe. All the windows of the nave, choir, and chapels are from the Royal manuf. at Munich. S.W. of the cathedral, in the High Street, is the university, founded in 1450. It is well endowed, annual income about 20,000l.; and consists of a chancellor, rector, dean, principal, 3 college professors, 14 regius professors, an average number of 950 students; a library with 59,000 vols., and a museum founded by Dr W. Hunter. Connected with the university is an astronomical observatory, and there is also a botanic garden in N.W. suburbs. The Andersonian university, founded in 1795, is for the popular diffusion of science and literature among all classes of the community. Besides these, there are a faculty of physicians and surgeons, a mechanics' institute, high school, 2 normal schools, an atheneum, and numerous private seminaries of education. Charitable institutions: a royal infirmary, lunatic asylum, blind asylum, deaf-mutes' institution, Hutchison's hospital for education of boys, 3 poor-houses, and houses of refuge or reformatories. It has court-houses, prison, and two police-offices. There are two banks, and five branches of the four Edinburgh banks; a chamber of commerce and an elegant royal exchange; two equestrian statues of Field-Marshal the late Duke of Wellington, and one of Queen Victoria, with those of Sir John Moore, Watt, Peel, Lumsden, Oswald, etc.; two theatres, city-hall, co. building, merchant house, trades' house, custom house, western club-house, barracks, and a sailors' home (1857), with time-ball; and a time-gun is fired daily at 1 P.M. The royalty, originally embracing one parish, is now divided into 10; and, with the barony, other 13, including quoad sacra pas. There are 178 churches of all denominations.—Glasgow is supplied with water from Loch Katrine by magnificent aqueducts opened by the Queen in September 1859. There are two large gas works. The green, with a monument to Admiral Lord Nelson, on the N. bank of the river, forms an extensive airing ground of 100 ac.; and E. of the cathedral is a picturesque necropolis, with three other cemeteries in the vicinity. Numerous railways communicate with the surrounding districts, and the Clyde affords great facilities for steam-boat conveyance. The harbour extends W. from Glasgow bridge on both sides of the river, which has been deepened, so as to admit ships of 2000 tons. The wharves and docks afford extensive accommodation for vessels of every description. Reg. vessels (1862): sailing 524, tons 181,915; steam 177, tons 53,524. Entered 3420, tons 778,552; cleared 5280, tons 965,053. Glasgow is celebrated as the Scottish emporium of trade and manufactures, and is the largest town in the country. It was here that Watt first began his improvements on the steam-engine, and in the Clyde the "Comet," the first boat in Europe successfully propelled by steam, was launched in 1812. In 1828, the aggregate tonnage of sailing vessels amounted to 214,315, do. of steam-vessels 481,946 tons. In 1862, the aggregate tonnage of sailing vessels was 473,189, do. of steam-vessels 1,052,453. Customs revenue (1850) 640,568*l.*, (1863-4) 990,337*l.* Exports (1862) 5,766,003*l.* The trade of Glasgow rose into importance about the middle of last century, and consisted chiefly of American and West Indian commerce, embracing nearly a half of the whole British tobacco trade. Since then the manuf. of cotton goods has risen to a great extent, as have also woollens and silks, glass and stone ware, chemical manufs., iron foundries, and machinery of all kinds, especially steam-engines. Ship-building is extensively carried on, now chiefly in iron. In 1862 there were 120 iron furnaces in the vicinity, producing 1,080,000 tons of iron, of which 565,000 tons were exported, and 407,000 tons used in making malleable iron in foundries in and around the city. Glasgow was early distinguished for superior letter-press printing, its Foulis' edition of the classics and other books. It publishes (1862) 19 newspapers, 3 of which are daily, others at various intervals. At Port Dundas is the terminus of the Forth and Clyde Canal, where there are extensive harbours. The Romans had a station on the river Clyde, in the locality of Glasgow, which they retained till the year 426. Antoninus' wall commenced a few miles W. of the city. In 560 the see of Glasgow is said to have been founded by Kentigern or St Mungo; about the year 1115 the see was refounded by David, Prince of Cumberland. It was first erected into a burgh of regality by William the Lion in 1180. Towards the end of the 15th century it was converted into an archbishopric, and in 1611 into a royal burgh. The city is divided into 16 dists., each sending 3 members to its council, governed by a Lord Provost, 8 bailies, 39 councillors, a dean of guild, deacon, convener, and treasurer. Corporation revenue (1862-3) 14,446*l.* It is the seat of sheriff, burgh, and co. courts. Birthplace of Gen. Sir John Moore, Lord Clyde, Sir Thomas Munro, and Thomas Campbell the poet. It sends 2 members to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1862-3) 16,568.

Ac. 805,120, of which about 750,000 are grass and arable. P. (1861) 485,770. It has three natural divisions; the E. being the Cotswold Hills, varying in height from 200 to upwards of 1000 feet, and now mostly enclosed and arable; the middle forming the fertile valley of the Severn and its affluents; and the division W. of the Severn, consisting mostly of the Forest of Dean. Chief rivers, the Severn, Upper and Lower Avon, Wye, and Isis. In the hills, sheep farming is the chief branch of industry. The vale of the Severn, with a mild, genial climate, once famous for vineyards, is now equally so for its cornlands, orchards, gardens, and especially its rich pastures, in which is produced the celebrated Gloucester cheese. The forest of Dean, of which 20,000 ac. belongs to the crown, produces fine oak timber, excellent perry, and the Styre apple cider. Chief minerals, coal and iron ore, extensively worked in the forest district. Manufactures, besides those of Bristol, consist chiefly of the light, and also of the finest kinds of woollen cloth, and it has cotton factories. [STROUD.] Gloucestershire is divided into 29 hundreds, comprising about 350 pas. in the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol. Chief cities and towns, Gloucester, Bristol, Cheltenham, Stroud, and Cirencester. Railways connect the co. town with Birmingham, via Cheltenham and Worcester; with Bristol, Dean-Forest, and London, by junction at Swindon with the G. W. Railway. A canal, via Stroud, connects the rivers Thames and Severn; another connects the cities of Gloucester and Hereford; and a third, 18 m. in length, by enabling large vessels to avoid the dangerous navigation of the Severn, brings them up to the city of Gloucester. The co. sends 6 members to House of Commons, 2 are for its E. division, 2 for its W., and 2 for its bors. Reg. electors (1864), E. division 7448, W. division 9268.

GRAMPIANS, a mountain chain in Scotland, forming the natural rampart which separates the Highlands from the Lowlands. Its limits, owing to numerous parallel ridges and scarcely connected branches, are difficult to define, but the mountains may be said to stretch from the W. coast of Argyleshire and Dumbartonshire N.E. across the island, terminating on the E. and N.E. coasts of the cos. Aberdeen and Banff, in two branches running on each side of the river Dee. This mountain chain is composed of granite, porphyries, primary schists, quartz, and marble. General aspect wild and rugged, especially on the N. side; on the S. hills the slopes are more gentle, the pasture finer, and the numerous defiles which indent the range often present scenes of the most romantic beauty. The streams flowing from the N. side are mostly affls. of the Findhorn, Spey, Don, and Dee; those on the S. join the Forth, Tay, and South Esk. The loftiest summits are Ben Nevis, Ben Macduih, Cairngorm, Cairntoul, Schiehallion, Ben Aven, Ben Lawers, Ben More, and Ben Lomond; the altitudes of which are given under their respective heads.

GRAMPIANS, a mountain range of Australia, Victoria, stretching crescent-wise N. and S., be-

GRANADA, an old prov., and formerly a kingdom, of Spain, Andalucía, bounded E. by Murcia, S. the Mediterranean, and on other sides the provs. of Sevilla, Cordova, and Jaen, now divided into the provs. Granada, Almería, and Malaga. Area 4935 sq. m. P. (1857) 441,917. Surface mostly mountainous; the Sierra Nevada traverses its centre, and rises in Mulahacen to 11,660 feet in height. Principal rivers, the Genil, Guad-aljora, Nacimiento, and Almanzora. The hillsides are covered with forests of oak, cork, chestnut, and pine, and in the valleys tropical as well as European products are cultivated. The Moorish system of irrigation is still retained, but the corn grown is insufficient for home consumption, and it is imported from Africa. The hemp of Granada is among the finest known. Mineral products comprise excellent marble, alabaster, serpentine, jasper, iron, and lead. It has manufs. of woollen, cotton, and linen stuffs, paper, and leather; anchovy and tunny fisheries are prosecuted on the coasts. Principal cities, Granada, Malaga, Almería, Ronda, Antequera, and Velaz-el-Blanco. The kingdom of Granada, the last possession of the Moors in Spain, was conquered by Ferdinand and Isabella in 1492.

GRANADA, Iliberis, a city of Spain, cap. of a prov. and formerly of a kingdom, and the ancient metropolis of the Moors in Spain, on the Genil, at the influx of the Darro, 120 m. E.S.E. Sevilla. Lat. 37° 13' N.; lon. 3° 41' W. P. (1857) 100,678 (in the time of the Moors it is said to have had 500,000 inhabitants). It stands partly on the edge of a plain, and partly on mountain spurs, progressively rising to the Alhambra. It resembles a Mohammedan city. Chief public edifices, the cathedral, 23 pa. churches, adorned with rich marbles and other works of art, and several convents. The Alhambra (al-hamara, "the red"), or ancient palace of the Moorish kings, is an irregular mass of houses and towers on a commanding height, surrounded by groves, and of which the bastioned walls, arches, halls of the Abencerrages and Ambassadors, court of lions, mezquita, and the unfinished palace of Charles V., are the portions most worthy of notice. It has a university, six colleges, academies of mathematics and design, several hospitals, manufs. of silks and hats, paper mills, royal nitre and gunpowder factories, and some trade in oil. Its prosperity suffered on its being wrested from the Moors in 1492, and next by the separation from Spain of her Indian possessions. Its principal law-courts also were removed to Albacete in 1835.

GRANADA, a city of Central America, state and 30 m. N.N.W. Nicaragua, on the N.W. shore of the lake. P. (including suburb of Jalateva) 15,000. It was founded by Hernandez de Cordova in 1522, and was next in importance to Leon, till nearly destroyed in the revolutionary war of 1857. Trade in cacao, indigo, Nicaragua wood and hides, which are exported in flat-bottomed boats by the lake and river San Juan, to the harbour of San Juan del Norte, Caribbean Sea.

GRANADA (NEW), or the GRANADIAN CONFEDERATION, a republic of South America, mostly between the equator and lat. 12° N., lon. 69° and 83° W., having E. Venezuela, S. Ecuador and Brazil, W. the Pacific, N. the Caribbean Sea, and N.W. the Central American state Costa-Rica. It now comprises eight separate states. Area 521,948 sq. m. P. 2,223,887. The Andes, near the frontier of Ecuador, diverge into three cordilleras, which traverse the W. and settled half of New Granada from S. to N., enclosing the basins of its principal rivers the Atrato, Magdalena, and Cauca; on N.E. the Meta and Guaviare, tributaries of the Orinoco, flow mostly through this state. There are many lakes W. the mountains. The declivities of the Central Andes appear to be much less productive than other parts of this region; on the summits of the ranges are paramos or extensive table-lands, nearly without vegetation; the lands along the Caribbean Sea are fertile, but unhealthy; almost all the W. parts are covered with dense forests, and yield all kinds of tropical productions. In the S.E. are wide llanos or plains, pasturing innumerable herds of cattle and horses. Climate varies greatly with elevation; in some parts of the W. rains and excessive heat prevail. The uplands produce wheat and other European grains; maize, tobacco, plantains, cotton, cacao, and some sugar, are raised in the river basins and along the coasts. Bazillette cedar, mahogany, cinchona bark, and fustic woods, ipecacuanha and balsam of Tolu, are other vegetable products. The plains yield large supplies of jerked beef and hides. Gold is found in the Andes and in the sands of the Cauca; platinum along the Pacific; silver, copper, iron, tin, lead, emeralds, and rock-salt at Zipaquira and Chita; coal near Bogotà. Manufs. are limited to coarse woollen and cotton stuffs for home consumption. Exports (1862) indigo, tobacco, cotton, copper, wool, cinchona, cochineal, cocoa, caoutchouc, dividivi, orchal, etc., to the value of 811,304*l*. Imports cottons, linens, woollens, apparel, silks, indigo, opium, etc., to the value of 826,083*l*. Principal commercial ports are Cartagena, Santa Martha, Panama, and Chagres. After the cap. Bogotà, the principal towns are Medellin, Mompoz, Quibdo, and the ports before mentioned. It was discovered by the Spaniards in 1499, and the first settlement was made at the Gulf of Darien in 1510. The republic was established in 1811. By the constitution of 1856 the Republic of New Granada ceased to exist under that name in 1858, and is now known as the Granadian Confed., formed of the states of Antioquia, Bolivar, Tolima, Boyaca, Cundinamarca, Magdalena, Panama or Ystmo, and Santander.

Of the whole pop. of Greece, 552,414 are in the Peloponnesus, 318,535 on the mainland, and 225,861 in the islands.

The territory of Greece is nearly all mountainous; the culminating point of the whole is Mount Guiona in Doris, lat. 38° 38' N., lon. 22° 15' E., 8239 feet above the sea. The principal chain, that of Pindus, enters the country on the N., and Mount Othrys, one of its branches, forms the greater part of the N. boundary of Greece. S. of this, the principal chain turns S.E., and forms two branches, (Eta on the N., and Parnassus on the S. Another chain extends from Cape Marathon in the Channel of Egripos, W. to the Morea, which it enters by the Isthmus of Corinth. The centre of the Morea forms an elevated table-land, enclosed by three mountain chains, the most extensive of which crosses the peninsula on the N. The coasts are elevated, irregular, and deeply indented; the principal gulfs are those of Arta, Volo, Lepanto or Corinth, Ægina or the Saronic Gulf, Argolis, Laconia, Koron, and Arcadia. Chief capes, Marathon and Colonna or Sunium in Attica, Malea, Matapan, Gallo, and Klarenza in the Morea. The large island of Negropont lies along the E. side of the continent, from which it is separated by a narrow channel; the other islands are partly scattered over the Ægean Sea, and partly collected into the groups of the Sporades and Cyclades. Greece has numerous streams, but they are mostly rapid and unfit for navigation. The principal are, in the north, the Aspropotamos, an affluent of the Ionian Sea, only the lower course of which belongs to Greece; the Phidaris, which flows S. to the Gulf of Patras; the Hellada, an affluent of the channel of Talanti, and the Cephissus, which flow S. to the Gulf of Ægina. The chief rivers in the Morea are the Peneus and Alpheus on the W., and the Pamisus and Eurotas on the S. The only extensive lake is Topolias, ancient Copais, between Thebes and Bœotia. Climate temperate and generally healthy, except on some parts of the coasts; and in the vicinity of the lakes violent storms occur in spring and autumn. Earthquakes are rare. Winter is marked by rain in the plains and snow in the mountains. Caverns, mineral and gaseous springs are numerous. Minerals are rich and varied, but little worked; marble and other building materials are abundant.

Vegetable products vary according to elevation of the soil. The olive, fig, currant-grape of Corinth, vine, melons, rice, cotton, the orange, date, citron, and pomegranate thrive on the coasts, and in dists. situated at an elevation of 1600 feet, where also the myrtle, the mastic, and the plane-tree flourish. But agriculture is neglected, only one-seventh of the area being under cultivation. Above 6000 feet in elevation, great part of the mountains is covered with pine forests. The principal domestic animals are sheep and goats; bees are still reared; wild animals are numerous, and game abundant. Greece has no manufs., properly so called; but silks, cottons, woollens, coarse pottery, leather, and beet-root sugar are produced for domestic use. Salt, extracted chiefly from the lagoons of Mesolonghi, is the most important mineral product. The principal resource of the inhabitants has always been in maritime commerce. The principal ports are Athens (the Piræus), Patras, Nauplia, Syra, Kalamata, and Navarino. Vessels entered the ports of Greece (1860) 77,958, tons 2,298,158. In 1860 the Greek mercantile marine comprised 4070 vessels, tons 263,075, men 23,842. Exports (1862), currants, valonia, cotton, oil, tobacco, figs, sponge, emery, etc., to the value of 797,568*l*. Imports, cottons, hides, woollens, iron, coffee, coals, gunpowder, copper, sugar, etc., to the value of 314,197*l*. Public revenue (1862) 892,741*l*.; expenditure 885,269*l*.; debt 6,892,361*l*. The people belong to the ancient Greek race in the W. of the continental portion and E. of Parnassus; in the Morea the same race prevails, but here it is more mixed. The pop. of the islands is a mixture of Albanians and Greeks. Greece was erected into a kingdom under Otho, second son of the King of Bavaria, in 1835. He abdicated, in consequence of a revolution, 24th October 1862, and Prince William of Denmark was proclaimed King of the Hellenes, 30th October 1863. The constitution of the kingdom was introduced after the revolution of 3d September 1843, modified by a decree of the Provisional Government 4th December 1862. The executive is divided into six departments,—namely, the ministries of the interior, of finance, of justice, public worship, war, and of foreign affairs. There is universal toleration for all creeds; but the Greek Church is the established religion, to which nine-tenths of the people belong, and which acknowledges the king as its temporal head. The chief educational establishments are, the university at Athens; five gymnasia, at Athens, Syra, Nauplia, Patras, and Hydra; normal, polytechnic, military, and naval schools. Newspapers and periodical journals are published. In 1862 the army consisted of 7668 men and 364 officers, of whom 381 were cavalry. The navy consisted of a frigate of 50 guns, 2 corvettes of 26 and 22 guns, 1 paddle steamer of 120 horse power and 6 guns, 6 screw steamers, with 10 guns in all, and 22 smaller vessels and gunboats.

GREEN LAKE, a co., U. S., North America, Wisconsin. P. (1860) 12,663.

GREENLAND, an extensive region of N.E. America, belonging chiefly to Denmark, stretching from Cape Farewell, its S. extremity, in lat.  $59^{\circ} 49' N.$ , to the most northerly observed point, Edam land, lat.  $78^{\circ} N.$ , and extending between lon.  $20^{\circ}$  &  $75^{\circ} W.$ , having W. Baffin Bay and Davis Strait, S. and S.E. the Atlantic, and on other sides the Arctic Ocean. Area estimated at 3950 sq. m. Pop. of Danish Greenland (1860) 9892 Esquimaux, except about 300 Danes. Surface generally high, rocky, and barren; the elevated parts covered with perennial snow and glaciers, extending in many parts to the sea-shores; but small quantities of corn, potatoes, and kitchen herbs are raised in the S., and some edible berries, with scattered birch, alder, and willow trees, grasses and lichens, grow wild, although July is the only month in which there is no snow. Extreme summer temperature  $59^{\circ}$ , winter minus  $40^{\circ}$ ; mean annual temperature of N. and S. Greenland  $27^{\circ} 5$  Fahr. The natives, or Esquimaux, are a peculiar race, allied to the Mongolian family, of short squat stature and dark skin, employed chiefly in fishing and seal-hunting. The region was first discovered by a Norwegian in 981, and soon after colonized from Iceland. Davis re-discovered Greenland in 1587, and in the 17th century the Danes re-established a communication with the lost colony. It comprises 13 Danish settlements, 6 in the S. and 7 in the N., and two missionary stations. The commerce of Greenland with Denmark is carried on with about 12 vessels. Average annual exports 3600 tons seal-oil, 4800 whale do., 37,000 seal, 18,000 reindeer, and 29,000 fox skins, and 19,000 lbs. of eider down. Imports chiefly wheat, brandy, tobacco, coffee, sugar, and firewood. The country is divided into N. and S. inspectorates, separated by the Longford, in lat.  $67^{\circ} N.$  Principal vills., Frederick's harbour, Julian's harbour, and Good Hope. Greenland is supposed to be one vast field of ice in the interior. Copper ore was recently discovered, and the new mineral kryolethe, which abounds in sodium. A concession has been granted to a company for trading on the E. coast.

GREENLAW, a vill. and pa. of Scotland, cap. co. Berwick, on the Blackadder, 22 m. W.S.W. Berwick-on-Tweed. Ac. of pa. 12,200. P. 1370. The vill. has a county-hall and prison. P. of vill. 800.

GREEN MOUNTAINS, U. S., N. America, commence near the Hudson river, New York, and extend N.ward through the states Massachusetts and Vermont. Their loftiest summits have an elevation of upwards of 4000 feet above the sea.

GREENOCK, a pa., parl. and munic. bor. and seaport town of Scotland, co. Renfrew, on the S. side of the Firth of Clyde,  $22\frac{1}{2}$  m. W.N.W. Glasgow, with which it is connected by railway. Ac. 4613. P. (1851) 36,689; do. (1861) 42,098; of pa., 43,894. Vessels belonging to the port 189, tons 74,087. Lat.  $55^{\circ} N.$ ; lon.  $4^{\circ} 6' W.$  Altitude 64 feet; mean temp. of year  $47^{\circ} 9$ ; summer,  $59^{\circ} 2$ ; winter,  $39^{\circ} 0$  Fahr. Rainfall, 63.4 inches. Principal structures, a custom-house; extensive quays bordering the Clyde; a fine town-hall, seated for 2200 persons, with a large organ; many churches and chapels; the Watt Institute, erected by a son of James Watt, a native of the town. It has a public library with upwards of 12,000 volumes, and a statue of Watt, by Chantrey. There is also a good academy, ragged schools, and many other schools. Three newspapers are published in the town. The cemetery ( $39\frac{1}{2}$  acres) is finely situated on the side of a hill, and cost, with monuments, 50,000*l.* Burns' 'Highland Mary' is buried in the Old West Kirkyard. The cotton mill is driven by a water wheel 70 feet in diameter, one of the largest ever constructed, exerting a power of 130 horses. The old harbours, including the Victoria, have 10,000 lineal feet of quay berths, and enclose 22 acres of water. The new Albert Harbour, now (1864) in progress, will contain 3700 lineal feet of quay berths, and 9 imperial acres of water. Depth of Victoria and Albert harbours at low water of springs, 14 feet, at high water average tides 24 feet. Rails in connection with the Caledonian line are laid along the harbour, and there are steam cranes for loading and unloading ships; also large cranes for raising machinery, one of which lifts 65, one 35, and two 20 tons each. There is an asylum for old seamen, endowed by Sir Gabriel Wood. A large trade in ship-building and engine-making is carried on. Ocean steamers of the greatest size and power are built for every port in the world. Sailing and steam ships were launched in 1863 to the amount of 33,506 tons, and there are in progress (1864) 30,619 tons. There are fifteen sugar-refining works, and the raw sugar imported in 1863 amounted to 120,000 tons. There are rope, sail-cloth, & paper factories. An extensive foreign trade, and a large steam traffic coastwise. Gross tonnage in harbours (1863), foreign, inwards, 208,847, outwards 177,119 tons; total, 385,966 tons. Coasting, including steamers plying outside Cumbrae Heads, inwards 537,731, outward 562,089 tons; total, 1,099,820 tons. River tonnage, including steamers plying within Cumbrae Heads, inwards, 600,428, outwards 644,702 tons; total, 1,245,130 tons; gross total, 2,730,916 tons; gross tonnage traffic to and from Caledonian Railway along quay (1861), 98,966 tons; (1863), 137,953 tons. Customs rev. (1853), 426,457*l.*; in 1863 it was 1,233,985*l.* Corp. gross rev. (1848) 35,114*l.*; do. 1862-3, 48,627*l.* Exports (1862) 320,225*l.* It is the seat of a presbytery, sheriff-court, and a borough of barony, erected 1635. It has wholly risen into importance since the beginning of the 18th century. It sends one member to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1864), 1664.

Also several townships of North America.—I. New York, 23 m. S.W. Albany. P. 2242.—II. Ohio, 80 m. W. Columbus. P. 3416. P. of vill. 1044.—III. a vill., S. Carolina, 271 m. by rail from Charleston; a favourite summer resort.

GREENWICH, a parl. bor., town, and pa. of England, co. Kent, on rt. b. of the Thames, 8½ m. E.S.E. London Bridge. Ac. of pa. 2013. P. 40,002. Pop. of parl. bor., which comprises the pas. of Deptford and Woolwich (1851), 105,784; do. (1861) 139,286. Altitude, 159 feet. Mean temp. of Ju. 64°·8, Jan. 38°·3. It has a pa. church (St. Alphege), in which are the remains of General Wolfe and the celebrated "Polly Peacham," Duchess of Bolton; and the naval hospital, the noblest establishment of the kind in Europe, and the finest palatial structure in England. It occupies the site of the royal palace of Placentia; was commenced in the reign of Charles II., and in the reign of William III. was granted as an asylum for disabled seamen of the navy. It consists of 4 noble quadrangles between the Thames and Greenwich Park. On the river side is a terrace 865 feet in length, forming one side of the grand square; the buildings on the other sides of which are surmounted by two conspicuous domes of beautiful proportions. This hospital, which is open to the public free every day after 12 noon, contains dormitories and dining-halls for about 2700 old or disabled seamen (besides whom a much greater number of out-pensioners are supported out of the building); a chapel, with rich marble carved work, and a painting by West of the shipwreck of St. Paul; a spacious hall, 106 feet in height by 56 in breadth, decorated with representations of sea-fights, statues, portraits and relics of naval heroes. The building covers 20 acres. Detached from the edifice are the buildings of an upper and lower school for 800 sons of naval officers and seamen, which are now (1864) being much enlarged. Greenwich Hospital was, in 1732, enriched with the forfeited estates of Lord Derwentwater. The management of its revenue is vested in commissioners under the Admiralty.—Greenwich Park, between the hospital and Blackheath, first enclosed by Duke Humphrey of Gloucester, protector in the reign of Henry VI., contains about 200 acres of undulating and wooded land, and has numerous herds of deer. On one of its eminences, 160 feet above the river, is the Royal Observatory, founded by Charles II. in 1674, the residence of the astronomer-royal, and from which the longitudes on all British maps and charts are reckoned. Lat. 51° 28' N.; lon. 0° 0' 0". Trinity Hospital, founded by the Earl of Northampton 1613, for 20 pensioners, revenue 2525*l.*; a union workhouse, market-house, and theatre. Greenwich was a royal residence from the year 1300 to the reign of William and Mary. Henry VIII. was born and baptized here, and here he married Ann of Cleves. It was also the birth-place of Queens Mary and Elizabeth, and here Edward VI. died. The Easter and Whitsuntide holidays attract immense crowds from London. It has a station on S.-E. and Charing Cross Railway, and sends 2 members to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1864) 9371.

GUATEMALA or GUATIMALA, the first of the Republican states of Central America in pop. and wealth, having N. the Mexican states Chiapa and Yucatan, E. Honduras and San Salvador, S.W. the Pacific. Area 40,781 sq. m. P. (1855) 850,000, about two-thirds of whom are Indians, the others Ladinos or whites, and a few negroes. A large portion of the Atlantic coast is British territory. [BELIZE.] Surface irregular, consisting of mountains, table-lands from 2000 to 5000 feet high, broad, fertile plains and picturesque valleys. The mountains are of volcanic origin, and contain the volcanoes of Fuego 13,930, and Agua, 14,507 feet above the sea. Chief lakes, Atitlan and Izabal, or Gulf of Dulce. Earthquakes are frequent. Climate of the coast-valleys hot and unhealthy, of the elevated country more temperate. Rainy season commences in June, dry season from October till May. N. winds prevail in December and January. Wheat is largely grown on the table-lands, and extensive flocks of sheep are maintained for their wool. Exports silver, cochineal, indigo, cigars, sarsaparilla, mahogany, cocoa, hides, and dye-woods. Imports (1857) 1,136,517 dols.; exports (1857) 1,615,388 dols. Principal cities, New and Old Guatemala. Chief ports, Guatemala, Izabal in the Gulf of Dulce, and Santo-Tomas, near mouth of the Montagua. Military force 125 officers and 1550 men. There is a Belgian colony at Santo-Tomas, which is succeeding well.—New Guatemala, the cap., is situated in a rich and spacious plain, 4372 feet above the sea, 106 m. W.N.W. San Salvador. Lat. 14° 35' N., lon. 90° 45' W. P., with suburbs, estimated at 40,000. It is supplied with water by aqueducts. Mean temp. of year 65°, max. 88°, min. 38° Fahr. Rainfall 54 inches. From the prevalence of earthquakes, the houses are of only one storey. In the great square are the government offices, mint, cathedral, archbishop's palace, college des infantes, barracks, and the principal shops; in its centre is a public fountain. There are 24 churches, a fort, a cemetery, hospital for 200 patients, bull-ring, university of San Carlos, and schools. The inhabitants are apt in arts and manufactures; they produce muslins, fine cotton yarn, silver articles, artificial flowers, and embroidery, of high excellence. New Guatemala has a flourishing trade with Vera Cruz, Mexico, etc., in sugar, coffee, cotton, dye-woods, and other native products. It was founded in 1776, after the destruction of Old Guatemala by an earthquake in 1773.—Guatemala la Antigua or Old Guatemala, lies 30 m. W.S.W. the capital, between the volcanoes of Agua and Fuego, by an eruption of which latter it was overwhelmed in 1541. It was again devastated by an earthquake in 1773, but has been since rebuilt. Its ancient pop. was 60,000, now (1863) about 20,000. Many of its old public buildings remain entire, comprising a cathedral and a palace. It has lately made great progress by the introduction of cochineal cultivation.

GUERNICA, a town of Spain, prov. Biscay, 17 m. E.N.E. Bilbao. P. 827.

GUERNSEY, the second in size of the Channel or Anglo-Norman Islands, in the Bay of St Michael, 30 m. W. the coast of Normandy, 51 m. S. of Portland, English coast, 17 m. W.N.W. Jersey, and 92 m. from Plymouth, length 9 m. greatest breadth 5 m. Lat. 49° 27' N., lon. 2° 33' W. Ac. 15,560. P. 29,804. Altitude 200 feet. Mean temp. of year 55°·7; max. 84°·5; min. 25°·4 Fahr. Rainfall 34 inches. Its form is triangular, and its coast line, of about 30 m. is indented with bays, and surrounded by sunken rocks. Surface gently varied, but generally sloping from the S.—where the cliffs are lofty—to the N. coast, which is low. It is well watered. Soil rests on a structure almost every where granitic, and is, with the aid of sea-weed manure, rendered very fertile. Climate moist, but healthy, and so mild, that oranges, melons, figs, myrtles, and the Guernsey lily, flourish luxuriantly.

Wood is not plentiful, fences are commonly of stone or turf; and in the N. are many tracts of heath. Farms average from 5 to 12 ac., the land being greatly subdivided under the law which gives to each son an equal share in his father's landed property. Rents vary from 10s. to 10l. an ac. Chief crops are vegetables, wheat, barley, and apples for cider. The orchards likewise furnish pasture for the famous breed of cows, which are larger and more valued than even those of Alderney, and yield, on an average, 1 lb. of the finest butter per day, throughout the year. Swine are numerous. Manufactures are of no importance. Chief exports, granite from Sampson harbour, which employs most of the shipping. Imports British manufactures. Chief manufs. soap, candles, cordage, vinegar, and cider. There are several brick-fields and ornamental pottery works. There are 3 or 4 breweries in the island and manufs. of imitation W. India Cordials. It is an entrepôt for strong wines for the London houses. Custom duties are moderate, and provisions extremely cheap. Steamers ply between Guernsey and London, Southampton, Plymouth, and Weymouth. The island is divided into 10 pas., forming a deanery of the church of England, in diocese of Winchester. St Peters, on the S.E. coast, is the only town in the island. The natives of the lower orders speak the old Norman French; they have long been remarkable for their adherence to Protestantism. The island is under a lieutenant-governor, who represents the sovereign in the assembly of the states, a parliamentary body composed of a bailif and 12 jurats, with 8 rectors and 2 constables of each parish, and 130 douzaniers from the whole island. These have the power, with the sanction of the Crown, of making laws and imposing taxes. The latter are very moderate, producing an annual rev. of about 10,000l. The royal court has jurisdiction over all the Channel Islands except Jersey. Guernsey formed a part of the duchy granted by Charles the Simple to the Norman Rollo, to whose descendants it has now belonged for nearly 1000 years. It is defended by strong fortifications, and has a well-organised militia. In 1858 a telegraphic communication was established with London.

GUIA (LA), a town of the Canary Islands, on the N.W. coast of Great Canary. P. 4332.—II. a vill. on the S. coast of Tenerife. P. 2230.

GUIANA, GUYANA or GUAYANA, a wide region of South America, comprising all of that continent between the Amazon and Orinoco rivers, extending from lat. 3° 30' S. to 8° 40' N., lon. 50° to 68° W., and subdivided into Brazilian (formerly Portuguese), British, Dutch, French, and Venezuelan (formerly Spanish) Guiana; it was discovered by Vaxi Nuñez in 1504. The Dutch formed the first settlement in 1558, on the Pomeeroon; the British in 1590, near Berbice and Surinam. In 1667, the British settlements were given up to the Dutch, but again re-occupied by the English; and in 1814, the settlements between the Corentyn and Marony rivers were restored to the Dutch.

GUIANA (BRAZILIAN), comprises the N. part of the Brazilian dom., between lat. 3° 30' S., and 4° 20' N., lon. 50° and 68° W., bounded N. by the Sierras Juraguaca, Pacaraima, and Acaraí, which separate it from the other divisions of Guiana, W. and S. by the Rio Negro and Amazon rivers, and having E. the Atlantic. Area roughly estimated at 433,000 sq. m. It is traversed by the Rio Branco, and numerous other rivers; is mostly covered by a dense vegetation; peopled chiefly by roving Indian tribes, and divided between the provs. Para and Rio Negro, which last territory, however, can scarcely be considered as actually under Brazilian rule.

GUIANA (BRITISH), a colonial territory on the N.W. coast of South America, belonging to Great Britain, and generally considered to extend from the mouth of the Orinoco, lat. 8° 45' N., as far southward as lat. 0° 40' N., lon. 57° and 61° W., having E. Dutch, S. Brazilian, and W. Venezuelan Guiana, and comprising an area, estimated at 76,000 sq. m.; but the possession of much of this has been disputed by Brazil and Venezuela. The African negroes are more numerous than the Europeans. P. (1861) 148,026 including about 30,000 Indians. During 1853, 49,000 emigrants arrived here from Great Britain, and many labourers have been brought from the E. Indies, Madeira, etc. Surface, near the ocean, a rich alluvial flat, and extending in mud banks into the sea. This plain extends inland from 10 to 40 m.; it then ascends by successive terraces to the Sierras Pacaraima and Acaraí, on the S.W. and S. frontiers; near the W. boundary Mount Roraima rises to an elevation of 7500 feet. Principal rivers, the Essequibo, Demerara, Berbice, and Corentyn, the last forming its E. border. On the low grounds the climate is unhealthy. At the vill. of Mahaica is a leper asylum with an average of 80 patients. There are two rainy seasons on the coast; the greater, from December to February, followed by a lesser till April, when the great rains prevail again from May till the end of July. In the interior there is only one rainy season, from April till the middle of August. Temperature ranges from 75° to 90°; mean temperature of the year 81° Fahr. Prevailing wind, N.E., changes in rainy season to W. The charitable institutions of the colony are a general, and a seaman's hospital, and a lunatic asylum. The vegetation is most luxuriant. Rice, maize, wheat, cacao, vanilla, tobacco, and cinnamon are raised. Exports to Britain (1862) sugar, spirits, timber, cotton, etc., to the value of 1,561,543l. Imports cottons, apparel, casks, machinery, beer and ale, butter, iron, rice, etc., to the value of 524,021*l*. Government vested in a governor, council, and the orders of the sovereign in council; the laws of the Netherlands are those mostly in force. Public revenue (1861) 301,761*l*. Expenditure 325,032*l*. Debt 576,498*l*. In 1861 there were 108 schools in the colony, average attendance 4940 pupils; 51 churches of England, 28 of Scotland, 25 Wesleyan Methodists, 5 Roman Catholic, and 1 Independent. Of late years the planting interest has suffered from low prices and want of drainage. The colony is divided into the cos. Demerara, Berbice, and Essequibo; chief towns, George Town, the cap., and New Amsterdam.

GUIANA (DUTCH) or SURINAM, a colonial territory, N.W. coast of South America, belonging to the Netherlands, between lat. 1° 30' and 6° N., lon. 53° 30' and 57° 30' W., having E. French, W. English, and S. Brazilian Guiana. Area 10,631 sq. m. P. (1859) 110,118. Slavery has recently been abolished here by the Dutch government; but in lieu of compensation to their proprietors, the slaves remain apprenticed for twelve years, and work without wages. Natural features are like those of British Guiana. Principal rivers, the Surinam, in its centre, Marony, on the E., and Corentyn, on its W. frontier. Exports to Britain (1862), sugar, spirits, cocoa, cotton, etc., to the value of 127,572*l*. Imports thereto, machinery, rice, cottons, iron, etc., to the value of 41,345*l*. Cotton, cocoa, rice, cassava, and yams are raised; and other products are fine woods, gums, drugs, and timber. Imports come chiefly from the Netherlands, though there is some traffic with the West India islands. Government vested in a governor-general and a high council. Chief town, Paramaribo; principal port, Amsterdam.

GUIANA (FRENCH) or GUYANE, forms the E. most colonial subdivision of Guiana, between lat. 2° and 6° N., lon. 51° 30' and 54° 30' W., having E. and S. Brazil, W. Dutch Guiana, and N.E. the Atlantic. Area 69,501 sq. m. P. (1861) 23,107, one-fourth of whom whites. Surface rises progressively on proceeding inland, and the middle region of the colony is from 1600 to 2000 feet above the sea. Rivers numerous, and the coast lands appear to be less unhealthy than in British Guiana. Cultivated lands are estimated to occupy 1-80th part of the whole. Products comprise sugar, cotton, cocoa, coffee, cloves, annatto, vanilla, pepper, cinnamon, nutmegs, dyewoods, manioc, rice, maize, and bananas. Government vested in a governor, privy council, and colonial council. French Guiana is divided into the districts Cayenne and Sinnamary. Chief town, Cayenne, the cap.; the rest are insignificant. Imports (1859) 709*l*. By a decree of March 1852, the colony was made a place of banishment for French political offenders, of whom there were in 1857, 3358 at 9 stations.

GUIANA (VENEZUELAN) or COLOMBIAN GUIANA, the N.W. subdivision of Guiana, comprising most of the country between lat. 2° and 8° 40' N., lon. 60° and 68° W., or more than half of the Venezuelan dominions, having S. the Sierras Pacaraima and Iraguaca, separating it from Brazil, W. and N. the Orinoco, N.E. the Atlantic, and E. British Guiana, the mutual boundary being disputed. The bar of the Orinoco has 14 feet water, with a soft clay bottom, and the river has an annual rise and fall of about 50 or 60 feet. Area 239,773 sq. m. P. (1854) 56,471. Imports (1862) 95,082*l*. Exports, hides, coffee, cocoa, indigo, cattle and horses, etc.; value (1862) 91,459*l*. The province is well adapted for cotton and tobacco growing, and specially for cattle-rearing. Its mineral wealth is yet to be wrought, but gold, copper, lead, and silver have been found. It forms most part of the dep. Orinoco; principal towns, the cap. Angostura, Piedra, and San Fernando de Apure.

GUIANESE ISLANDS, a group off the W. coast of Patagonia, immediately N. Wellington island, the principal being Wager and Byron islands.

GUIBARRA, a small river of Ireland, Ulster, co. Donegal, flowing into an inlet of the Atlantic of the same name, between the bays of Rosmore and Trawenagh, after a S.S.W. course of 13 miles.—Guibarrabay is 5 m. S. Dunsloe.

GUICHE, two comms. and vill. of France.—I. dep. B. Pyrenées, on the Bidouze, cap. cant., 14 m. E. Bayonne. P. 1514.—II. (Lo), Saône-et-Loire, cap. cant., 10 m. N.E. Charolles. P. 930.

GUINEA, a geographical division of Western Africa, comprising the coast of the Atlantic Ocean, from Cape Negro, lat. 15° 41' S., to Cape Verga, at 10° 20' N. It is divided into Upper or N. Guinea, and Lower or S. Guinea; N. Guinea extending from lat. 10° 20' N. to lat. 1° S., and between lon. 14° 30' W. and 10° E., is bounded by Senegambia and Soudan on the N. and N.E., the Atlantic on the W. and S.W., and South Guinea on the S.E. The coasts are in general low and unhealthy, but very fertile. The Kong mountains are believed to extend from E. to W. along the N. boundary. Principal rivers, the Niger or Quorra, the delta of which is on the Calabar coast, the Volta and Assinie. The S. and W. coasts are watered by numerous small streams. The chief products of the country consist in gold dust, indigo, pepper, cotton, and the sugar cane. The forests contain the elephant, lion, rhinoceros, and serpents. The coasts from N. to S. are called Liberia, Grain coast, Ivory coast, Gold coast, Slave coast, and the Calabar coast. The interior is divided into numerous native states, the chief of which are the kingdoms of Ashantee, Dahomey, and Benin. Fetichism is the prevailing superstition. The principal European settlements are Accra, Cape Coast Castle, Dixcove, Elmina, and Sierra Leone. On the S.W. coast is the Republic of Liberia. South Guinea extends from lat. 1° to 15° 41' S., lon. 8° 50' to 18° (?) E. It is bounded on the E. by elevated mountains, covered with forests. The chief rivers are the Zaire or Congo, and Coanza, the sources of which are unknown. The W. plains are watered by numerous small rivers. The mountains are said to contain iron and copper. Vegetation is rich. The principal states of South Guinea are Loango, Congo, Angola, and Benguela. This country was discovered by the Portuguese in 1487, and they have retained nominal possession of the S. districts.

GUZERAT or GUJERAT, a prov., India, comprehending within its limits several petty states, the Guicowar doms., and its tributaries, as well as sundry collectorates of the Bombay Presidency. Bounded N. by the Gulf of Cutch and Rajpootana, S. by the Indian Ocean, the Gulf of Cambay, and the British collectorates of Broach, Surat, Tannah, and Candeish, E. by Candeish and Malwa, and W. by Cutch, the collectorates of Surat, Broach, and the ocean. It extends between lat. 20° and 24° 45' N., lon. 69° and 74° 20' E. Area 41,536 sq. m. P. estimated at 3,000,000, consisting principally of Rajpoots, Brahmins, Mussulmans, Parsees, etc. Total coast line 531 m. Diu and Beyt harbours afford shelter for large ships, and the numerous havens, creeks, and roadsteads admit coasting vessels besides. It is mountainous in the interior, and but slightly elevated on the coast. Chief rivers, the Saburmuttee, Bunass, Myhee or Muhi, Nerbudda, and Taptee. Principal mountains, the Western Ghauts, running from S. to N., average elevation 1200, highest point 2000 feet. North of the Nerbudda the W. extremity of the Vindhya mountains expand into the Barreca hills, and further N. into those of Loonawara, and in the same direction are those of Dongurpore, which unite with Mount Aboo, in the Aravulli range. These mountains are generally of volcanic formation. Iron ore is the only metal. Climate insalubrious in the interior. From the 20th March to 20th May the thermometer often ranges from 103° to 115° Fahr. in the shade. Soil exceedingly fertile, and it is called the "Garden of India;" but agriculture is in a rude state. Yields rice, wheat, barley, sugar, tobacco, castor-oil, maize, opium, cotton, in large quantities, fruits, and a varied flora. The cubbeer-bur or great banian-tree grows on an island in the Nerbudda; it covers an area of from 3 to 4 acres, is of great height, and its branches are so large and close that the natives dwell in them during the season of inundation. The zoology includes the lion, tiger, leopard, hyæna, wolf, nylgau, wild ass, and deer. Principal towns, Baroda, the cap., Pahlunpore, Cambay, Radhunpore, Chourar, Peint, Baunds, Dhurrumpore, Hursool, Thurraud, Deesa, Wusravee, Sucheen, Rajkote, Poorbunder, Loonawara, Dwarka, Barreah, Daunta, Banswarra, Dongurpore, Oodepore, Jabbooa, Saunte, Rajpeela, and Beyt. There are few made roads in the territory, but a railway is in progress to Bombay and Baroda.

GWOSDEVI, a group of islands in Behring Strait, between Asia and N. America. Lat. 65° 40' N., lon. 173° 50' E. The largest, Imaglin, is 25 m. in length. Surface of islands low, and bare of wood.

GWADDEL (CAPE) or RAS NOO, a peninsula of Beloochistan, about the middle of the S. coast, in the Indian Ocean, 95 m. S. Kedje. Lat. 25° 6' N., lon. 62° 18' E. It is about 6 m. in breadth, and has a harbour on either side, the W. of which affords good anchorage.

GWAENYSGOR, a pa. of North Wales, co. Flint, 8 m. N.W. Holywell. Ac. 794. P. 322.

GWALIOR TERRITORIES or DOMINIONS of SCINDIA, a state of Central Hindostan, enclosed by the river Chumbul on the W., Bundelcund, Saugor, on the E., & by Bhopaul, Dhar, Rajgurh, Jhalawur, and Kotah on the S. and S.W. Area 33,119 sq. m. P. 3,228,512, of the various casts of Hindoos and Mohammedans. Surface in the N.E. level, with deep precipitous ravines; on the S. it is traversed by the Vindhya mountains, and on the W. by the hilly country of Rajpootana. Chief rivers, the Taptee, Nerbudda, Chumbul, with its tributaries; and the Scinde. Soil generally fertile, but badly cultivated in consequence of the oppression of the ruling powers, and the system of subletting the farms. Chief crops, rice, wheat, maize, linseed, oilseeds, sugar, cotton, opium, tobacco, and indigo. Manufs. unimportant, being chiefly silks, cotton, smelting iron-ore, and a cannon foundry for casting brass guns. Imports woollens, cottons, silks, cutlery, Cashmere shawls, precious stones, jewellery, muskets, gold, silver, mercury, copper, lead, and zinc. Exports opium, cotton, tobacco, dye-stuffs, and iron. Climate various; in the hot season the thermometer rises to 100° Fahr. during the day, but the nights are cool and pleasant. In January and the beginning of February, the thermometer sometimes falls 3° or 4° below the freezing-point. From the middle of June to the end of September is the rainy season, when about 50 inches of rain falls, and the thermometer ranges from 72° to 78° Fahr. Two months before the rainy season fever prevails, and the cholera sets in annually with great virulence, often causing death in less than one hour. Zoology comprises the tiger, leopard, wolf, bear, hyæna, and monkey, various birds, snakes, and the blunt-snouted crocodile. There are no public, but several private schools. The general course of study comprises reading, writing, arithmetic, astrology, and astronomy according to the Ptolemaic system. Annual revenue 950,000l. After the defeat of the Mahrattas in 1843, this district was placed under the military superintendence of the British, with a yearly payment for the military contingent of 186,000l.

GWALIOR, a city and strong fortress of India, and cap. of the above state, on an affluent of the Jumna, 66 m. S. Agra. It was taken from the rebels in 1858. The citadel, on a high precipitous rock in its centre, is about 3 m. in circumference. The town itself is unenclosed, but its streets may be shut by numerous gates, some of which have much architectural beauty. Principal edifices, the chief mosque, a palace, and some buildings in the most ancient Hindoo style within the citadel, and E. of the city a fine Mohammedan tomb. In the sides of the rock, forming its site, are numerous caves, with Hindoo sculptures.

Imports, cotton, herrings, machinery, iron, woollens, oils, linens, coats, caoutchouc, etc., to the value of 1,928,365*l*. It is connected by railways with Cologne, Bremen, Brunswick, etc. During the French empire under Napoleon I., Hanover was cap. of the dep. Aller.

HANOVER (Germ. Hannover) (KINGDOM OF), a country of Germany, in the N., situated between lat. 51° 17' 27" and 58° 50' 58" N., lon. 6° 40' and 11° 32' E. It is of a very irregular form, and composed of two principal portions, separated by Brunswick. The N. portion is bounded N. by the North Sea; E. by Denmark, Hamburg, and Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Prussia, and part of Brunswick; S. by Brunswick, Waldeck, Lippe-Detmold, Hessen Cassel, and Prussian Westphalia; W. by the Netherlands. The S. portion is bounded N. by Brunswick, S. and E. by Prussia and Brunswick, and S. and W. by Hessen Cassel. Enclosed within the territory is the grand duchy of Oldenburg, the free town of Bremen, and part of Brunswick. It is divided into seven landrosteien. Area & pop. as follow:—

Landrosteien.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. 1861.	Chief Towns.
Hanover, . .	2,263	368,973	Hanover.
Hildesheim, . .	1,759	366,766	Hildesheim.
Luneburg, . .	4,488	367,669	Luneburg.
Stade, . . . .	2,628	286,626	Stade.
Osnabruck, . .	2,418	202,316	Osnabruck.
Aurich, . . . .	1,138	192,329	Aurich.
Mining District,	240	33,301	Clausthal.
Total, . . . .	14,845	1,888,070

Surface flat in the N., forming part of the great plain of Germany; and mountainous in the S., where it is covered by offsets of the Harz; highest point the Königsberg, 3260 feet in elevation above the sea. The coasts are under the level of the sea, from the encroachments of which they are protected by dykes. The country is watered by three of the chief rivers of Germany—I. the Elbe, with its affluents the Oste, Ilmenau, and Jetze; 2. the Weser, affluents the Wümme, Leine, Aller, Ocker, Innerste, and Hunte; 3. Ems, affls. the Haase and the Vechte, which flows to the Zuyder Zee. On the N. are extensive marshes and numerous lakes; the mountainous portion is rich in metals. Climate humid, mild in the N., and cold in the S. Mean temp. 48°-6, extremes 64°-6 to 32°, Fahr. Soil generally poor, is most fertile in Bremen and East Friesland, near the coast. Chief products, barley and oats, potatoes, rye, and vegetables, tobacco, hops, chicory, lint, and hemp. There are extensive forests of fir in the Harz, and of oak and beech at Solling. Cattle form one of the chief sources of wealth of the country, and they are an important article of export. The horses of East Friesland, which are celebrated, are bred for exportation, and there is a government stud at Celle. The sheep are of improved breeds, and geese are extensively reared in the polders. Bees yield valuable produce in Meppen, Lüneburg, and Verden. The lakes and rivers abound in fish. Mining is the most important branch of industry; the chief products are the metals of the Harz, including iron, copper, lead, litharge, salt, turf, coal, alum, marble, and granite. In 1861 the number of mines was 157, hands employed 6697, total value of produce 1,781,999 dollars. Total smelting houses 71, hands 2724, value of produce 2,881,351 dollars. Total salt works 16, hands 389, value 396,057 dollars. There are several mineral springs, some of which have establishments of baths. The principal manufs. are linen, hemp, woollen, and cotton fabrics, paper, soap, leather, and hats. The chief seats of the linen trade are in the provs. of Osnabrück, Hildesheim, Lauenburg, and Hanover. Value of linen produce (1861) 98,310 dollars. Brewing and the manufacture of metals are important branches of industry. Although advantageously situated on the North Sea, and traversed by navigable rivers, the commerce of Hanover is not extensive. It is conducted mostly by the towns of Bremen and Hamburg. Emden is the chief port. Principal exports, linens, yarns, and agricultural produce. Imports comprise manufactured goods, colonial produce, wine, and spirits. Besides the navigable rivers, Hanover is traversed by excellent roads, and railways connect the cap. with Hamburg in the N., Brunswick in the E., and Hildesheim in the S. The pop. in the S. belong to the Saxon race, and in the N.W. to the Frisons. The majority of the inhabitants are members of the Lutheran Church. In 1861 these proportions were—Lutherans 1,555,448, Calvinists 97,018, Roman Catholics 221,576, other Christians 1943, Jews 12,085. Public instruction is placed under the direction of a superior council; there were, in 1861, 4781 primary schools, and numerous industrial, secondary, and elementary schools. The national seat of learning is the university of Göttingen. There is a school of mines and forestry at Klausthal, military and veterinary schools, schools of mid-wifery, and five normal schools. At the dissolution of the French empire, Hanover having reverted to its former sovereigns, the French system of administration was abolished, and the old régime re-established. In 1818, the prov. states voted a constitution, modelled on those of England and France, and in 1833 a new constitution was promulgated. In 1837, Ernest, Duke of Cumberland, having been called to the throne, on the death of King William IV. of England, in virtue of the salique law, abrogated the new constitution, re-established that of 1819, and convoked a new parliament. In consequence of the revolutionary movements of 1848-9, several important modifications in the gov. have taken place, the latest in 1857. The Crown is hereditary in the house of Brunswick, and the legislative and executive power is vested in the king. Public rev. (1861-2) 2,944,125*l*. Expenditure 2,978,753*l*. Debt 6,951,724*l*. Armed force (1862), cavalry 2724, infantry 17,904, engineers 257, artillery 2671, staff 40; total, 23,614 men, with 3144 troops of reserve.

HAY'S CASTLE, a pa. of South Wales, co. Pembroke, 6 m. E. St David's. Ac. 4462. P. 297.

HAYTI, HAITI, ST DOMINGO, or HISPANIOLA, an independent island, and the largest in the West Indies, except Cuba, from which it is separated W. by the windward passage, and E. from Porto Rico by the Mona passage, and having N. the Atlantic Ocean, and S. the Caribbean Sea. It is nearly 400 m. long, and from 60 to 150 m. broad. Area 10,204 sq. m. P. 572,000, of whom 493,000 are blacks, 42,000 mulattoes, and 28,000 whites. The centre is occupied by a mountainous region. Mount Chaco is 6000 feet above the sea, and parallel mountain chains traverse the island. Los Llanos, plains in the S.E., are 80 m. in length, and the plain of Artibonite, in the W., watered by the Artibonite, the chief river. The other considerable rivers are the Monte Christi, Guna, and Neive. There are several lakes in the S., and the soil generally is well watered. Shores swampy in the E., elsewhere mostly bold, and surrounded by reefs; though there are several excellent harbours in the W., where two long projecting peninsulas enclose the large bay of Gonaives. Climate tropical, and on the plains very unhealthy to Europeans. There are but two seasons, the rainy season, May to June, and the dry season; the spring, April to June, is the finest season. Hurricanes are common, especially in August and September. The soil is highly fertile, and a great part of the island is covered by dense forests of mahogany, iron-wood, log-wood, cedar, and other valuable timber trees. Products comprise the plantain, vanilla, and manioc. Exports (1862) mahogany, log-wood, cotton, lignum-vitæ, coffee, etc., to the value of 151,719l.; imports cottons, linens, woollens, earthenware, rice, etc., to the value of 479,842l. Gold, silver, copper, tin, iron, and rock salt are found in the island, but the mines are now unproductive. The government, nominally republican, is in reality a military despotism, the power of the elective president greatly outweighing those of the senate and house of representatives.

The high court of justice sits in Port-au-Prince, the cap., where also, and at Cayes, St Domingo, Gonaives, Jeremie, Jacmel, and St Jago, the other principal towns, are provincial, civil, and criminal courts. The Roman Catholic is the established religion, but all others are tolerated. The army consists of about 50,000 men. Public revenue averages about 5,000,000 francs. Expenditure, 5,500,000 francs. The debt to France was in 1838 fixed at 60,000,000 francs. Hayti was discovered by Columbus, Dec. 5, 1493; and on its N. coast was planted the first colony estab. by Europeans in the W. hemisphere. Spain held possession of the island until 1665, when the French obtained a share, and from this period till 1790 it was the most flourishing of all Indian colonies. After this a revolution of the black people took place, the independence of Hayti was proclaimed in 1800, and the French were finally expelled in 1803. Since that period a series of revolutions have occurred, and a sort of elective military government has prevailed under various leaders. Education and civilisation were at a low ebb, but many schools have been recently established. In 1846 the Spanish part of the island declared the government of "Dominica" to be not military, but civil, republican, and representative, with a president, legislative assembly, and council. Hayti, formerly the French portion of the island, was proclaimed an empire under its former president, Faustin I., in 1849, and a republic in 1858. On 18th March 1861, San Domingo declared its re-union to Spain.

HEBRIDES or WESTERN ISLANDS, Ebude, a series of islands off the W. coast of Scotland, between lat. 55° 25' and 58° 30' N., lon. 5° and 8° W., and consisting of two principal groups; the Outer Hebrides,—Lewis, Harris, N. and S. Uist, Benbecula, Barra, and numerous smaller islands in the cos. Ross and Inverness; and the Inner Hebrides,—Skye, Rum, Eig, Canna, Coll, Tiree, Mull, Iona, Colonsay, Jura, Arran, Bute, etc., partly separated from the former by the channel termed the Little Minch, and lying more immediately off the shores of Inverness and Argyle, in which cos. and in Buteshire they are included. Total number, not including the smaller islets, 160, 70 of which are permanently inhabited. Of 1,592,000 acres of surface, mountains, morasses, lakes, and unproductive soil have been computed to occupy 600,000 ac., pastures 700,000 do., and arable land only 180,000. Geologically, the Hebrides are divided into several groups.—The Gneiss Islands comprehend the whole of the Outer Hebrides, Lewis, Harris, N. and S. Uist, Tirce, Coll, Iona, etc.—The Trap Islands are Skye, Rum, Eigg, Canna, Mull, Ulva, Staffa, and St Kilda.—The Slate Islands are Islay, Jura, Gigha, Colonsay, etc.—The Clyde Islands, consisting of trap, sandstone, and limestone, are Bute, Arran, Cumbrays, and Ailsa. Climate moist in Outer Hebrides, much rain in winter, but little snow. Soil of the Gneiss Islands poor, and often peat moss; the trap and sandstone islands are more fertile. Pop. for the most part Celtic, and generally in the greatest poverty, 4-5ths subsisting almost wholly on potatoes and fish. The introduction of steam navigation has contributed very much to the improvement of the Inner Hebrides. The herring fishery, formerly an important resource of the people, has greatly declined, as has also the manuf. of kelp, of which, at the beginning of the present century, nearly 6000 tons were produced, fetching sometimes 20l. per ton. Other manufs. are insignificant and wholly domestic, except some production of cotton stuffs at Rothesay, distilling in Islay, and boat-building at Tobermory and Stornoway. The rearing of cattle and sheep is the most profitable branch of industry, and the stock of each is estimated at 120,000. Live stock, ponies, kelp, wool, cod, ling, herrings, limestone, and slate, are the chief exports; imports are iron, groceries, salt, oatmeal, and in some of the islands peat-fuel. A few years ago, the Hebrides had 6 branch banks, but no printing press or newspaper, and "the greater number of the islands are destitute of surgeons, or even of inns." They are divided into 26 quoad civilia pas. In the Outer Hebrides especially, most of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics. Principal vills., Stornoway in Lewis, Portree in Skye, Tobermory in Mull, and Rothesay in Bute. These isls. were ruled mostly by sovereigns of Norwegian descent from the 9th century till 1264, when they were annexed to the crown of Scotland. The princip. isls. are noticed under their respective names.

HEBRIDES (NEW), an island group, Pacific Ocean, between lat. 15° & 21° S., lon. 166° & 171° E., N. of New Zealand and N.E. of New Caledonia. HEBRON, a town of Palestine, pash. Damascus, 16 m. S.S.W. Jerusalem. Lat. 31° 31' N.; lon. 35° 8' E. Altitude 3629 feet. P. estim. at 10,000, including 500 Jews. It stands partly on the slopes of two hills, and in the deep narrow valley of Mamre; around it are extensive vineyards, olive and other fruit trees. It has several gates, some reservoirs of high antiquity, a large mosque, reputed to cover the tomb of Abraham (the cave of Macpelah), a citadel, well supplied bazaars, manufs. of glass trinkets, leather, and other goods, which it exports to Egypt. Hebron is one of the most ancient of existing cities, and was called Kirjath-Arba, the city of the Anakim. It was the early residence of Abraham and the patriarchs, as also of David. Near it is the so-called Abraham's oak.
