HESSEN-CASSEL or ELECTORAL HESSEN (Germ. Kurhessen), a state of Germany, comprised between lat. 49° 56' and 52° 26' N., lon. 8° 25' and 10° 8' E. Cap. Cassel. It is composed of 6 isolated portions, the largest of which, comprising Hessen Proper, and including the cap., is bounded E. by Saxe-Weimar and Bavaria, S. by Frankfurt and Hesse-Darmstadt, W. by Nassau, Hesse, and Waldeck, N. by Prussia and Hanover. The two principal detached portions are Schmalkalden and Schaumburg, and the smaller Barchfeld, Dorheim, and Katzenberg. Area 3692 sq. m. P. (1861) 738,454. Surface elevated and mountainous; the Meissner, S.E. of Almerode, 2325 feet above the sea, is the highest point of Hessen Proper, and the Inselberg, one of the summits of the Thuringer-Wald, on the frontier of Schmalkalden, is the culminating point of the state. The territory is situated in the basin of the North Sea, and is drained by the Weser and the Rhine. The chief rivers are—(1st) the Weser, with its two upper branches, the Werra and the Fulda; (2d) the Main and the Lahn, affluents of the Rhine. Among the others are the Diemel, the Edder, with the Schwalm, and the Haune, affls. of the Fulda; the Ohm, affl. of the Lahn; the Nidda and the Kinzig, affluents of the Main. Climate generally cold, except in the valley of the Main. Mean temp. at Fulda, year 46°, winter 27°·5, summer 65°·6, Fahr. Soil infertile, except in the valleys of the principal rivers. Schmalkalden is almost entirely unproductive. Chief crops, rye, barley, oats, wheat, maize, potatoes, lint, hemp, and tobacco. Fruit of all kinds is abundant in the prov. Hanau, where cider is made. The vine is cultivated in the prov. Hanau; it ripens also in the valley of the Werran, near Witzgenhausen, the N. most point of its cultivation in Germany. Forests occupy one-third of the territory; the principal timber is oak, elm, and beech. Cattle-rearing is the most important branch of rural industry. Agriculture is in a backward state. Hessen-Cassel possesses many of the most useful minerals; the chief are iron, coal, salt; gold in small quantities is found in the sands of the Edder; silver mines, once worked, are long since abandoned, and only one copper mine is in operation. In Schmalkalden, there are seven high furnaces producing iron of excellent quality; in the rest of the state there are other five high furnaces. The chief coal mines are in the prov. of Lower Hessen. Turf is abundant, and used for fuel. It has numerous mineral springs, and the sulphur baths of Neundorf are among the best frequented in N. Germany. Manufs. have been greatly extended since the state joined the German customs union. The most important are linen fabrics, called Osnaburgs, lannels, carpets, cotton, silks, & velvets; manufs. of iron and steel goods of every description, paper, wooden wares, pianos, chemical products, tobacco, beet-root sugar, pottery, and jewellery. Chief exports, linens, carpets, jewellery, iron and steel goods. Imports colonial goods, cotton, silk, wine and brandy. The chief branch of commerce is in the transit of goods, which is facilitated by the navigable rivers Main, Weser, Werra, and Fulda, and by railways. In 1832 Hessen-Cassel and Hessen-Darmstadt united with Prussia to form the origin of the German customs union. The chief educational establishments are the university at Marburg, the military and polytechnic school at Cassel, and the theological seminary at Fulda. Numerous elementary schools have recently been established, and the state is not now behind the neighbouring countries in respect of education. The constitution of Hessen-Cassel dates from 1831. It is composed, in conformity with the electoral law of 6th May 1863, of the princes of the reigning house, and the executive power is in the hands of the sovereign and his responsible ministers, and the right of legislation is vested in a house of Parliament with a single chamber. Army 12,856 men, of whom 1508 are cavalry. Public revenue (for 1861-63), 16,852,300 thalers; expenditure for do., 15,629,590 do.; being an excess of 1,222,710 thalers.

It consists of two principal portions in N. and S., separated by portions of H.-Cassel, Nassau, and Frankfurt, bounded E. by H.-Cassel, Bavaria, and Baden, S. by Baden and Bavaria, W. by Prussia and Nassau, N. by H.-Cassel and part of Prussia; and nine small districts included in the neighbouring states. Area 3237 sq. m. P. (1861) 856,907. Surface elevated and mountainous in the N., which is traversed on W. by the Taunus, E. by the Vogelsberge, and in S. by the Odenwald. Highest point the Taufstein, 2283 feet. The greater part of the territory is situated in the basin of the Rhine, the rest in that of the Weser. Chief rivers, the Rhine (which traverses all the S. portion), and its affls. the Neckar, Main, Nidder, Nahe, and Lahn; the Schwalm and Fulda, affls. of the Weser. Climate cold, except in the valley of the Rhine. The country is essentially agricultural; more than half the territory is arable, the soil is about the most fertile and best cultivated in Germany. Chief crops, wheat in the lowlands, buck-wheat in the Odenwald, oats in Rhenish Hessen, millet in Starkenburg; potatoes generally best in the mountain districts. The other products are flax, hemp, hops, tobacco, and fruit. The vine is cultivated in Rhenish Hessen. Forests belong chiefly to Upper Hessen and Starkenburg. Cattle-rearing is an important branch of rural industry. Minerals comprise copper, iron, coal, and salt. Iron is mined chiefly in Upper Hessen and the Odenwald, salt at Wimpfen, and coal at Dorheim. Spinning and weaving linen and hempen goods are the principal manufs.; the others comprise silk, paper, chemical products, and metals to a small extent. Exports, agricultural produce; imports, colonial and manuf. goods. The principal entrepôt is Mayence. The duchy is traversed from N. to S. by the Frankfurt and Mannheim Railway. Public instruction has made rapid progress of late, especially in the province of Rhenish Hessen. The chief educational establishments are the university of Gies-sen, seven gymnasia, and numerous elementary schools. Hessen-Darmstadt is a constitutional monarchy since 1820; the title of the sovereign is Grand Duke of Hessen. The duchy is divided into the provs. of Upper Hessen in the N., Starkenburg and Rhenish Hessen in the S. Total force of all arms 11,510 men, and 2692 horses. Public rev. HIMÁLAYA MOUNTAINS ("the dwelling of snow," the Immavus of the ancients) extend in an irregular curve of more than  $22^{\circ}$  of lon., nearly 1500 m., breadth 100 to 160 m., along the N. boundary of Hindostan, and form the most elevated mountain-chain in the world. They are situated between lat.  $27^{\circ}$  and  $35^{\circ} N.$ , lon.  $73^{\circ} 23'$  and  $95^{\circ} 40' E.$ , and extend from the river Indus on the W., to the great bend of the river Sanpo on the E. The Himálaya is not a single mountain chain, but a range of rugged snowy peaks, depending from the high table-land of Tibet, and separated by deep gorges, the outlets of rapid streams, generated by the melted snow and ice of the interior. The mountains terminate on the S., towards the plain of the Ganges, in a wall-like range, from 4000 to 5000 feet high, broken up, at intervals, by deep precipitous chasms, through which the springs and rivers flow down with great impetuosity. Between these and the higher ranges lie the fertile and well-cultivated valleys of Nepaul and Bhotan. The mean elevation of the range has been estimated at from 16,000 to 18,000 feet, but 45 of its peaks exceed 23,000 feet. Several reach a height of 25,000 feet; Mount Everest or Gauriskaner is 29,002 feet, Dhaulagiri is 26,826 feet, Nanda Devi 25,749 feet, Kanchinjanga 28,156 feet, Sichtsur 27,799 feet, and Chumalari 28,946 feet above the sea. The high table-land of Tibet, forming the N. portion of the range, has a more gradual and extensive slope than the steep and abrupt mountain declivities of the S. The Himálaya maintains a considerable height and breadth along the N. of Assam, but beyond this point nothing certain is known of the range. The principal passes are the Mustang pass, in Balti, lat. 35° 53' N., lon. 76° 35' E., 28,265 feet above the sea, and the Ibi-Gamin pass, between Gnari-Khorsun and Gurhwal, 20,459 feet; none of these is used for traffic. The highest used for the transit of cattle, etc., are the Parang pass, in Spiti, 18,500 feet, the Mana-Ghat, 18,406 feet, and the Kiobrang pass, 18,313 feet. The difficulty of these ascents is extreme, especially that of the Niti pass, which leads to Mansa, the sacred Lake of Tibet. The base and summits, and probably the great mass of this range, consist of granite and crystalline-stratified rocks. A zone of silurian strata prevails at elevations of 15,000 to 18,000 feet, and tertiary strata, some of very modern date, with many organic remains, occur at various elevations along the ridge. The lower limit of the snow-line is on the S. side 16,200 feet, while on the N. it is 17,400 feet. Vegetation also extends much higher on the N. than on the S. side. This arises from the serenity and dryness of the air, and the radiated heat from the extensive sloping tableland towards the N.; while on its S. there are more frequent gales and moisture, and an abrupt precipitous termination of the mountains. Some of the peaks in the interior are free of snow, and the contrast of this with the other snow-covered summits, and the deep azure of the sky, renders the scenery most splendid. Magnificent glaciers are found in every part of the Himálaya and W. Tibet wherever there is perennial snow. Some of these are 10 to 11 m. long, and 1½ m. broad. The highest known are those of Deotal, in Gurhwal, 17,945 feet, and Namtso, in Lahaul, 15,570 feet above the sea. The base of the mountains to the S. is covered with a dense, impenetrable jungle, separating them from the plains of India. This belt diminishes to the W. and N. of the Jumna. Cultivation is carried to the foot of the mountains. At the base, vegetation is of a tropical character; at an elevation of 5000 feet, European plants succeed. Here rice and other grains are cultivated; as also a species of arum, the roots of which form the food of the Hill-people; and wheat grows at an elevation of 13,000 feet. The cultivation of the tea plant has been introduced successfully along the entire S. and W. face of the mountains up to 5000 feet. Herds of cattle are numerous, and especially sheep and goats. Mines of iron, lead, and copper exist, but have been little wrought or explored.

It receives the Balize, Montagna, and numerous other rivers, and contains the islands Ruatan, Turneffe, Guanja, etc.

HONDURAS (BRITISH), Centr. Amer. [BALIZE.]

HONDURAS, a republican state of Central America, lat. 13° 10' to 16° 2' N., lon. 83° to 89° 15' W., having N. the Caribbean Sea and G. of Honduras, W. Guatemala, S.W. San Salvador and Bay of Fonseca, and S.E. Nicaragua. Area 39,600 sq. m. P. (1862) 25,635. In the N. it has a coast line of nearly 400 m. The large island Ruatan and its dependencies belong to the state. [BAY ISLANDS.]

In general the country is mountainous. Principal rivers, the Chamelicon, Santiago, Choluteca, Roman or Agua, Patook, & the Segovia or Wanks, which separate this state from Mosquitia. At the head waters of the Ulua, Coacoran, and the Humuya, there occurs a complete gap in the Cordilleras chain, through which it is proposed to construct a railway from sea to sea. Lake Yojoa in the N.W., 25 m. long by 8 broad, and 2050 feet above the sea, is the only lake of note. The Bay of Fonseca, the finest, contains numerous isls., on one of which (Tigre) is situated Amapola, the only port of Honduras on the Pacific. Mean temp. of year 79°, max. 86°, min. 62° Fabr. Rainfall 47 inches. The principal ports on the N. coast are Puerto Cortez and Truxillo. The number of vessels arrived at the Atlantic ports of Omoa and Truxillo was (in 1860) 168 (tonnage 9597). The value of imports at these ports was (1861) 223,660 dollars by the Pacific 71,385 dolls. Exports chiefly of horned cattle, dry hides, gold, silver, bullion, mahogany, etc. Gold is found in sands of all the rivers and is in all the depts. Olancho has copper mines of great value. Tin, cinnabar, zinc, iron, and lead are not worked; coal is found in several localities. The principal exports are mahogany and rosewood.

An article in commerce of this state, but more especially of the prov. of Mosquitia, is the casahuate. It requires cutting.

gum arabic, chouchou, orange, rilla, N.E. yield, ex, el, r

oposum, squirrel, ant-eater, armadillo, jaguar, black tiger, ocelot, tiger-cat, and puma. Birds, reptiles, fishes, and molluscs are numerous. A canal has been proposed across the Honduras from Puerto Cortez, in the B. of Honduras, to the B. of Fonseca in the Pacific, length 200 miles.

Length E. to W. 8 m.; breadth varies from 2 to 6 m. Area 29 sq. m. P. (1861) 94,917, exclusive of the military, the greater portion being Chinese. The surface is mountainous, rocky, and bare. There are good roadsteads at Hong-Kong bay and Victoria harbour, which are free from typhoons, but violent winds are frequent. On the N. coast is the cap. town Victoria, laid out in streets and terraces on the steep declivity of Victoria peak; with numerous fine public buildings and hongs built of stone, and picturesque dwelling-houses surrounded with gardens. Here are excellent water-works; and the town is being lit with gas. On the S. coast is the town of Stanley, now connected by a good road with Victoria; besides which another road extends nearly round the island. The commerce at this port is inferior to that of the principal treaty ports in China; but as a British colony on Chinese soil, it is the most important in its political and defensive position, and is the headquarters of the military, navy, and mercantile establishments. There are 2 daily, 1 bi-weekly, and 1 fortnightly newspapers printed here in the English language, & 1 three times a week in Chinese. It is a free port. Exports to Britain (1862) tea, oils, camphor, sugar, cassia, lignea, cotton, etc., to the value of 154,721. Imports, cottons, woollens, lead, iron, coals, copper, beer and ale, hardwares, apparel, wine, glass, etc., to the value of 1,165,151. HOOGHLY or HOOGLY, a dist. of British India, presid. Bengal, between lat. 22° 13' and 23° 13' N., lon. 87° 34' and 88° 30' E. Area 2089 sq. m. P. 1,520,840, two-thirds Brahminists, the rest Mussulmans & Christians. This district is low & level in the E., but in the W. and N.W. hilly, where it stretches towards the high lands of Burdwan. In the S., the soil is impregnated with common salt, which was formerly extracted. In the low grounds, & along the banks of the rivers, it is fertile. Chief crops, rice, sugar-cane, mustard, ginger, potatoes, indigo, tobacco, cotton, hemp, oil-seeds, vegetables of various kinds, and the mulberry-tree. Manufactures ropes, sacking, and coarse canvas. Exports, silk, indigo, and sugar. Principal rivers, the Hooghly, Damoodah, which is fordable in many places during the dry season, but during the rains it inundates the country around, often carrying away the inhabitants, their houses, cattle, and crops; the Dalkissore, and several other lesser streams. During the dry hot season, from the beginning of March to the end of June, the thermometer ranges from 75° to 110° Fahr. The rainy season commences about the end of June and lasts till the beginning of October, during which time fevers and agues are very prevalent. Winter continues from the beginning of November till the end of January, and the nights are then so cold that ice is formed. Wild animals are, elephants, buffaloes, tigers, and wolves. The dist. was ceded to the British in 1765.

HOOGHLY, a town of British India, cap. dist. of same name, on rt. b. of the Hooghly river, 27 m. N. Calcutta, on the Calcutta and Burdwan Rail. P. 12,000. It has a civil establishment, consisting of judges, collectors, magistrates, and surgeons, a government college, in which English & Oriental languages are taught, and in connection with which are several branch schools. In 1587 the town was founded by the Portuguese. In 1632 it was stormed and taken by the troops of Shahjehan, after a siege of three months. In 1676 the Dutch and English established factories here. The latter fortified their factory in 1681, and it was wrested from them by Sooraj-oo-dowlah, from whom it was retaken by Clive in 1757, and since then it has been retained.

HOOGHLY, a river of India, presid. Bengal, which is formed by the Bhagurtee and the Jellinghee, two branches of the Ganges, their confluence being in lat. 23° 25' N., lon. 88° 22' E., 160 m. from the sea. The river is 15 m. wide at its mouth, much encumbered by shoals, through which it requires great care to steer large ships. At Calcutta it is about one mile wide, and the tides are often violent and rapid, running at the rate of seven miles per hour. During the S.W. monsoon, when a great current is driven into the river from the Bay of Bengal, it produces the phenomenon called "the Bore," when the tide rises on the sands near the banks in waves 12 or 15 feet high, rushes at the rate of 20 m. an hour, and carries the shipping in its course. Ships drawing 17 feet water go up as far as Calcutta, but the river is said to be gradually silting up. Brahminists consider the Hooghly sacred. On its banks are several towns and villages.

Hudson Bay (properly Sea), an inland sea of North America, between lat. 51° and 64° N., lon. 77° and 95° W., enclosed by the British territory on all sides, except the N.E., where it communicates with Davis Strait by Hudson Strait. Length N. to S. 850 miles, breadth 600 miles. Its S. part is named James' Bay, and receives the Albany, Moose, and other rivers.—Hudson Bay has bold shores, numerous islands, and on its coasts several settlements of the Hudson Bay Co.; but it is free from ice and navigable for only a few months annually. The Hudson Bay territory comprises that part of British N. America, extending from British Columbia on the W. to Canada and Labrador on the E., and from the N. boundary of the U. S. (lat. 49°) to the frozen regions. Of this immense area only about 1,400,000 sq. m. are actually occupied by the Company. Pop. in 1861, estimated at 180,000; of whom 40,000 are Indians, and the remainder whites and mixed people. The Hudson Bay Company was incorporated by Royal Charter, granted by King Charles II. in 1670. A vast but indefinite tract of territory was vested in it, together with the sole right of trade and commerce, and all mines royal, within its boundaries. From 1670 till 1783, the Hudson Bay Company enjoyed all the fur trade, and reaped a rich harvest of wealth and influence. In that year the North-West Company was formed, having its headquarters at Montreal, and soon rose to the position of a formidable rival to the Hudson Bay Company. Animosity, feuds, and bloodshed, and the almost total annihilation of the fur trade, resulted from this rivalry; but in 1821 the two companies were united (retaining the title of the older), with a joint stock of 400,000*l.*, which, in 1856, had increased to 1,265,067*l.* In that year the Company consisted of 268 proprietors. The affairs of the Company are managed by a governor, 16 chief factors, 29 chief traders, 5 surgeons, 87 clerks, 67 postmasters, 1200 permanent servants, and 500 voyageurs, besides temporary employes of different ranks. The total number of persons in the Company's employment is about 3000. In addition to its chartered territory, the Company possess several plots of land in British Columbia, various farms and building sites in Vancouver Island, ten sugar mills on Lake Huron, in Canada, together with parts of Newfoundland, Oregon, Russian America, the Sandwich Isles, and several other places. On the expiration of their charter in 1863, the monopoly of the Company was extinguished and its stock transferred to a new body of proprietors, named the International Financial Society. Most of these were shareholders in the Hudson Bay Company. The outlying estates are to be sold, and the southern district, including the valley of the Saskatchewan, is to be opened to European colonization. Postal and telegraphic communication are to be established between Canada and British Columbia across the Company's territory. Ministers of the Gospel of every denomination are protected and encouraged, and there is a Bishop of the Church of England in the diocese of Rupert Land.

Hudson Strait, British North America, between lat. 60° and 64° N., lon. 65° and 77° W., is about 450 m. in length, with an average breadth of 100 m., and connects Hudson Bay with the ocean and Davis Strait.

HuÉ or HuÉ-fo, the cap. city of the empire Anam, Cochinchina, on the Hué river, about 10 m. from its mouth, in the China Sea. Lat. 16° 24' N.; lon. 107° 32' E. P. 100,000 (?) It has no parallel in the East, having been early in the present century regularly fortified in the European style. Its walls, mounting numerous cannon, and upwards of 5 m. in circumference, enclose an inner citadel, with the palace, and spacious barracks, large public granaries, an arsenal, and magazines, which, with other public buildings, are supplied with water by numerous canals from the river, faced with masonry, and crossed by fine bridges. A garrison and fleet of galleys are usually stationed here. The Hué river, about  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. wide at its mouth, is fitted only for vessels of small draught; but on it are some building docks, and its mouth is defended by a small fort.

HULL or KINGSTON ON HULL, a parl. and munic. bor., river port, town, and co. of itself, England, within co. York, East Riding, on the N. side of the Humber, at the influx of the Hull, 22 m. W. the Spurn Head, and 34 m. S.S.E. York. Lat. of citadel  $53^{\circ} 44' 6'' N.$ ; lon.  $0^{\circ} 20' W.$  Ac. of town and old munic. bor. 960. Pop. of new munic. and parl. bor., comprising the town, the pas. Sculcoates, Sudcoates, part of Sutton, and some extra parochial places, (1851) 84,690; do. (1861) 98,994. Altitude 14 feet. Rainfall 23 inches. The old town of Hull, about 1 m. in length, N. to S., by half a mile in breadth, stands on the W. side of the river Hull at its entrance into the Humber, and is enclosed from N. to S. by three docks, crossed by movable bridges. Beyond these are Myton on the W., Sculcoates on the N., both containing populous quarters of the modern town; and beyond the Hull, on the E., are Sutton and Drypool. The fort, removed to the vill. of Paul, 6 miles lower down the Humber, was completed in 1864. It mounts 19 68 lb. guns. Hull has sev. good streets; & extensive warehouses, backed by narrow lanes, border the river Hull, along which the town and suburbs Trippet and Sculcoates extend for nearly 2 miles from the Humber. The docks, constructed successively since 1775, on the site previously occupied by fortifications, communicate with each other, and have an aggregate length of 1807 yds., breadth 250 to 400 feet; total area  $87\frac{1}{2}$  ac., including the West dock, 17 ac., now (1864) in progress, besides a basin between two of the piers on the Humber; they are surrounded by broad quays & large warehouses, have a depth varying at high tides from about 20 to 27 feet, and are crowded with shipping of all nations. Holy Trinity church, a beautiful and ornate cruciform gothic structure, has a pinnacled tower 140 feet in height. It is now (1864) in progress of external and internal restoration. St Mary's, Lowgate, was, in 1864, enlarged and completed from designs by Mr Scott. There are eleven other churches, dissenting chapels, a Jews' synagogue, and a mariners' church. Amongst the other public buildings are the royal institution, occupied by the Hull literary and philosophical society and subscription library, custom-house, new town-hall to cost 20,000*l.*, exchange, pilot, dock, excise, and stamp offices, infirmary, theatre, concert-hall, work-houses, gaol, baths and wash-houses, a museum, and the terminus of the Hull and Selby Railway. The Trinity guild, founded in 1369 for decayed seamen and their widows, has an elegant edifice in the Tuscan order. Hull has numerous hospitals & other charitable institutions, a charter-house founded in 1380; a medical school, a grammar school, a school which gives nautical education to 140 boys destined for the merchant service; school of art; a dispensary, penitentiary, & lying-in-charity; a subscription library, mechanics' institute, lyceum, a young men's christian & literary institute, a sailors' institute, and a savings' bank. In the people's park (about 14 acres in extent) is a seated marble statue of Queen Victoria; there is an equestrian statue of William III. in the market-place; a statue of Wilberforce on a fluted Doric column, near the Queen's dock bridge; and a bronze statue of the late Dr Alderson, in front of the infirmary. Hull is connected by railways with Scarborough, Whitby, York, and all the manufacturing towns of the West Riding, for the exports of manufs., of which it is the great outlet; and it has ready communication with London and the centre of England, by a continuation of the Eastern Counties Railway to New Holland, on the opposite bank of the Humber,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  m. distant. The Trent, Ouse, Don, etc., tributaries of the Humber, and navigable canals, connect it also with a large inland territory. Vessels entered (1863) 3026, tons 699,513; cleared 2189, tons 526,400. Principal exports are cotton and woollen manufactured goods and yarn, earthenwares, hardwares, metals, rape-seed, and corn, the latter chiefly imported previously; value (1862) 11,916,375*l.* Its coasting trade is highly important, and it imports large quantities of coal. Its merchants were the first in England to embark in the northern whale fishery, but this trade has nearly ceased. It is an important steam-packet station, and communicates many times weekly with London, Yarmouth, Leith, Berwick, Aberdeen, Hamburg, Rotterdam, Copenhagen, Havre, Dunkirk, Antwerp, also with the Baltic ports of Prussia, Russia, Sweden, Norway, and occasionally with Alexandria; and also constantly with Selby, Goole, Gainsborough, York, & Grimsby. Customs rev. (1863) 284,276*l.* Registered vessels (1863) 589, tonnage 67,843. It has large cotton and flax mills; ship-building & its auxiliary manufs., machinery, chain cables, ropes, and canvas; potteries, tanneries, soap and chemical works, and sugar refineries, corn and oil mills. The town has a branch of the Bank of England, many other banks, and several weekly newspapers. The borough is divided into wards, and governed by a mayor, 13 aldermen, and 42 councillors. It has quarter-sessions, and a court of requests. The mayor of Hull has the singular honour of having two maces and two swords, one given by Richard II., the other by Henry VIII. Hull returns two members to H. of C. Reg. elect. 1864, 6055. This town, under the name of Mytonwyk, appears to have been of importance in the time of Athelstan; but its consequence as a port dates from the time of Edward I., who conferred on it the royal designation, Kingston. In the civil war of Charles I., it was the first town to close its gates against the king, and it successfully sustained 2 sieges of the royal troops, in 1642 & 1643.

HUNGARY (Magyar Ország, German Ungarn, French Hongrie, anc. Pannonia, etc.), a country of Central Europe, situated between lat. 44° 43' and 49° 34' N., lon. 14° 25' and 26° E.; cap. Pesth. It is bounded N. by the Carpathian mountains, which separate it from Galicia, E. and S. by Moldavia and Wallachia, S. by Turkey, S.W. by Dalmatia and the Adriatic, and W. by Illyria, Styria, Lower Austria, Moravia, and Austrian Silesia. Within these limits are comprised—I. Hungary proper, including Croatia and Slavonia. Area 90,280 sq. m. P. (1857) 10,776,794.—II. Transylvania. Area 21,208 sq. m. P. (1857) 1,926,727.—III. the Military Frontier. Area 12,955 sq. m. P. (1857) 1,064,922. Hungary proper is divided into 45 comitats and 5 dists. Beyond (or on the west side of the Danube, 11 coms.: Wieselburg, Odenburg, Raab, Komorn, Wesprim, Weissenburg, Eisenburg, Szalad, Szumegh, Tolna, and Baranya. On this side (or north and east of) the Danube, to the Theiss, 13 coms.: Pesth, Bacs, Neograd, Sohl, Honth, Gran, Bars, Neutra, Presburg, Tréntschein, Thurocz, Arva, and Liptau. On this side (or north and west) the Theiss, 11 coms.: Zips and the town of Zips, Gomor, Heves, Borsod, Torna, Abujavar, Saros, Zemplin, Ungvár, and Beregh. Beyond (or east of) the Theiss, 12 coms.: Marmoros, Ugocs, Szathmar, Szabolcs, Bihar, Bekes, Csongrad, Csanad, Arad, Krasso, Temesvar, and Torontal (the 3 last form the dist. of Banat). Slavonia, 3 coms.: Symria, Verocoz, and Posega. Croatia, 3 coms.: Kreutz, Varasdin, and Agram. Separate Dist.: Jazygia (Great and Little), Cumania, 7 Heyduke towns and the Hungarian Littorale (or sea coast). After the revolution of 1848-49, Croatia, Slavonia, and the Woiwodshaft of Servia & the Banat, were separated from Hungary; and these, with Transylvania and the Küstendland or Littorale, form separate crown-lands. The crown-land of Hungary is now bounded N. by

Moravia, Silesia, and Galicia, lat. 49° 35' N.; S. by the Danube, lat. 45° 15' N.; W. by Moravia, Lower Austria, and Styria, lon. 16° E.; and E. by Transylvania and Moldavia, lon. 25° 51' E. Area 82,836 sq. m. P. 9,900,785.—Military Frontier. The Carpathians form a natural boundary on the N. of Hungary, and their ramifications render this part of the country a mountainous region. They have different names in the 33 counties which they traverse. The most important for their metals are the mountains of Barsch, Honth, Sohl, Liptau, Gömör, and Zips. In the E. the Carpathians of Transylvania traverse the counties of Szathmar, Bihar, Arad, Krasso, and Temes. In the W., beyond the Danube, the country is traversed by contreforts of the Alps of Styria, to which belong the Bakony-wald and the Vertes mountains. The countries of Croatia and the Littorale, in the S.W. are crossed by branches of the Dinaric Alps. These different mountains enclose two great plains, the smaller of which, about 4200 sq. m. in extent, is in the W., between the offsets of the Alps and Carpathians, and the other in the E., with an area of about 21,000 sq. m., traversed by the Danube and the Theiss, at an elevation of from 300 to 400 feet above the level of the sea. This region is so flat that the rivers have a very sluggish course, and a great part of the surface is covered with marshes and sand downs. The rivers of Hungary belong to the basins of the Danube and the Theiss, and have generally a S. course, only one, the Poprad, having a N. direction. Principal river the Danube, which enters Hungary on the W. at Presburg, flows generally E. 270 m. to Waitzen, then S. 180 m. to Vukovar, and again E. 190 m. to Orsova, where it enters Wallachia. Its principal affluents in Hungary are, on the right the Leythe, Raab, Csaba, Sarvitz, Drave, Save, and Temes; left, the March (on W. border), Waag, Neutra, Gran, and the Theiss, which has a S. course of nearly 400 m., and numerous large tributaries. The principal lakes are the Platten See, or Lake Balaton, Neusiedler See, and Lake Palitz, the most extensive marsh in the Hansag, between the counties Wieselburg and Oedenburg, which has an area of 126 sq. m.; the whole extent of marsh is reckoned at 1932 sq. m. The largest canals are the Franzens canal, between the Danube and the Theiss, and the Bega canal, in the Banat, which also joins the Danube. The climate varies exceedingly: in the mountainous districts it is cold and severe, while in the S. it is so genial that the vine, chestnut, fig, and other southern fruits are grown. Occasionally, as in 1863, it suffers greatly from drought. It is in general healthy, except in the marshy districts. The chief mineral products are gold, silver, copper, cobalt, salt, alum, and coal. Gold is most abundant in Transylvania, and silver in Hungary. The gold washings of several of the rivers are important. Copper is abundant, yearly average about 34,452 centners; and iron, widely distributed, yields an average of 269,997 centners. Lead, on an average of 5 years, yields only 4178 centners. Opals are found in the county Saros. Coal and turf both occur, the latter most widely distributed. Coal is but little worked. Mineral springs are numerous, and many of them celebrated for their medicinal qualities.—Hungary is generally fertile in grain, which is exported to a considerable extent. Chief crops, rye, barley, oats, maize, millet, buck-wheat, and rice. The level regions of the counties Bacs and Temesvar possess the richest soil. The mountains are covered with dense forests. The cultivation of the vine is carried to great perfection. Next to France, Hungary produces the greatest quantity of wine of any country in Europe, and the quality of several of its vintages, especially that of Tokay, is unrivalled. Tobacco is an important product, great part of which is exported. Domestic animals comprise horses, horned cattle, buffaloes, sheep, and swine. The rich pastures of Hungary produce some of the finest cattle in Europe. Great improvements have recently been made in the breed of sheep. Swine are reared in the forests in vast herds. Wild and domestic fowls are abundant, and bees are extensively reared. Fish are plentiful in the rivers and lakes, and the Theiss is reckoned the richest in fish of any river in Europe. The chief occupations of the pop. are agriculture, cattle-rearing, and mining. Manufs., which are unimportant, comprise woollens, linens, silks, paper (which is made by English machinery in the county Gömör), tobacco, and ironware. There are 300 breweries. Placed between rich pastoral countries on the E., and manufacturing districts on the W., Hungary is well situated for trade. Its only sea coast, indeed, is a slip of 123 m. on the Adriatic, at its S.W. extremity; but it has numerous large navigable rivers, including the Danube, with its affluents the Theiss, Drave, and Save. From 500 to 1000 vessels trade on the Danube from Hungary to Vienna, exchanging grain and other raw materials for merchandise. A new impulse was given to this trade by the introduction of steam-packets in 1830. The roads in many parts of the country are very bad, but there is extensive railway communication. [AUSTRIA.]

Hungary is peopled by numerous distinct races, speaking different languages; the chief are Hungarians or Magyars, Slavonians, Germans, and Wallachians. The Magyars are of Asiatic origin, and many of them are Protestants. Their language has recently been substituted for Latin in official correspondence. The different races include the Slowaks, Croats, Russniaks, Wendians, etc. The Wallachians have also their peculiar language. The Germans, who for 8 centuries have been spread over the country, have in many places lost their language and nationality. Besides these principal nations, there are many Greeks, Armenians, Jews, and Gipsies. The greatest number of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics, and next to these, communicants of the Greek Church, Calvinists, Lutherans, and Jews. The chief educational establishments are the university at Pesh, a lyceum at Erlau, schools of philosophy, gymnasia, Latin & numerous parish schools. Education is in a backward state, although the higher classes are well educated, and generally familiar with foreign languages. The first inhabitants of Hungary mentioned in history, were the Pannonians. The Magyars conquered it in the 9th century. Their followers embraced Christianity. Stephen, the last duke, assumed the title of king A.D. 1000, and added Transylvania to his dominions. Ferdinand I. of Austria was the first prince of Hapsburg who reigned in Hungary, being elected by the diet in 1526, and the succession fixed in the Imperial house in 1687. Since the termination of the civil wars in 1711, Austria has possessed the country; but as the union was voluntary on the part of Hungary, it was never in reality a dependency of Austria, the two countries being united by having a common sovereign, and the power of the king controlled by the Hungarian diet, but recent disputes have brought about a change of relations between the two countries. The insurrection of 1848 was suppressed, the predominant power of the Magyars destroyed, and the rival nations who helped to secure the victory to Austria rewarded. This led, in 1850, to a dismemberment of the ancient kingdom, and the organization of new territorial divisions, which now comprise five great circumscriptions or districts, named after the capital cities, Pesth, Presburg, Odenburg, Kaschau, and Groswarden. The country is placed under a civil and military governor, under whose direction is a general councillor for each of the five districts. These new functionaries entered on the administration of affairs on 1st August 1853. [CROATIA, SLAVONIA, TRANSYLVANIA, etc.]

ICELAND, an island belonging to Denmark, in the Atlantic Ocean, 700 m. W. Norway, and about 300 m. E. Greenland, between lat. 63° 24' and 66° 33' N., being immediately S. of the Polar circle, lon. 13° 30' to 24° 30' W. Area, with adjacent isles, 39,696 sq. m. P. (1855) (formerly 100,000, but reduced by epidemic disease) 64,603. Surface mountainous; soil volcanic; traversed from E. to W. by separate mountain masses, the ramifications of which form on the N.E. and W. coasts numerous fiords or bays, which extend far into the interior. The highest mountains are Öräfäjökul (lat. 64° N.), 6405 feet; Snäfel (lat. 64° 48'), 6862 feet; Hecla, 5110 feet. The central portion is uninhabited and little known. There are many large streams, which flow generally with great rapidity. Glaciers cover a surface of upwards of 4900 sq. m.; they exist in all the mountains above 4000 feet in elevation, and extend down to the sea. In the N., where the hills are generally low, there are few glaciers. The greatest mass of ice is in the S.E. of the island; and this region has for centuries been the scene of the most violent volcanic eruptions. There are 30 known volcanoes in Iceland, 8 of which have been active within a century. The most destructive volcanic eruptions on record were those of 1294, 1341, 1636, 1693, 1783, and the eruption of Hecla, 2d September 1845 to 6th April 1846, on which occasion the ashes reached the Orkney Islands. The island also contains numerous small mud volcanoes and intermittent thermal springs, in the chief of which, the Great Geyser, the water, at a depth of 72 feet, is 30° above the boiling point. The climate is very variable; storms of extreme violence are frequent; summer moist; in winter the sky is dark and gloomy, but lighted up by brilliant displays of the aurora borealis. Temp. more elevated than in any other country in the same latitude; mean of year at Reykiavik 40° Fahr. The lower limit of snow in lat. 65° is 3100 feet. The S.W. coasts, washed by a prolongation of the Gulf Stream, are much milder than the N., and generally free from ice. Forests formerly abounded, but the island is now destitute of trees, except a few stunted birches; the want of fuel is severely felt, although the Gulf Stream and the polar currents occasionally float drift-wood to its N. shores, and a fine white turf is used. No grain of any kind can be raised, but cabbages and potatoes are cultivated. The flora of Iceland is nearly allied to that of Scandinavia, comprising mosses and a few shrubs. The most important domestic animal is the sheep, which, with the horse, ox, pig, and dog, were introduced from Norway during last century. It is estimated that there are about 700,000 sheep, 25,000 head of cattle, and 32,000 horses on the island. Reindeer, introduced in 1770, now roam in large herds, but are not domesticated; the polar bear is sometimes cast on the shores from the northern ice fields. Fish very abundant on all the coasts; and birds are numerous. Commerce consists in the exchange of wool (much sought by English manufacturers), butter, skins, fish, and oil, for European manufactures. The exports to Denmark in 1861 were worth 48,579*l.*, the imports therefrom 69,331*l.* The only means of transport is by pack-horses, and in winter on sledges. Iceland is divided into 3 ams or counties, viz., Süderamt, Westermant, and Norder and Osteramt, and these are subdivided into 19 syssel. The island was discovered by the Northmen in the 9th century, and came into the possession of Denmark in 1380. The Icelanders belong to the Scandinavian race; they are attached to their country, and hospitable to strangers; their religion is Lutheran; there is only one school, the college at Reykiavik, with a president, 8 professors, and 80 to 100 students; but domestic education is general, and the people are intelligent, and are universally educated to the extent of reading and writing. Their affairs are regulated by a council called Althing, composed of 1 representative for Reykiavik, and 1 for each of the 19 syssel; their first meeting was held on 1st July 1845. The only town is Reykiavik. P. 1200. There are upwards of 20 trading vills, mostly on the coasts. From 30 to 40 vessels sail annually from Denmark to Iceland. Formerly the trade was a government monopoly, but it was thrown open by a decree of the Althing in 1853.

INCHIRONAN or INNISCRONANE, a pa. of Ireland, Munster, co. Clare, 5¼ m. N.N.E. Ennis. Ac. 17,438. P. 2637.

INCHIGBELAGH, a pa. of Ireland, Munster, co. Cork, 9 m. W.S.W. Macroone. Ac. 45,415. P. 4020.

INCHINNAN, a pa. of Scotland, co. and 1½ m. N.W. Renfrew. Ac. 3527. P. 619.

INCHQUIN, a barony and island of Ireland, Munster, co. Clare; the island in Lough Corib; the barony comprising 88,387 ac. P. 12,607, with Lough Inchquin.

INCHKEITH, a rocky island of Scotland, in the Firth of Forth, pa. and 3 m. S. Kinghorn, co. Fife, opposite Leith, with lighthouse in its centre. 187 feet above the sea. Rainfall 17 inches. Light revolving. Lat. 56° 2' N.; lon. 3° 8' W. P. 12.

INCH-MARNOCH, an islet of Scotland, in the Firth of Clyde, co. and 2 m. W. Bute. P. 27.

INCHTURE, a pa. of Scotland, co. and 11 m. E.N.E. Perth. P. 659.

INCHULKURUNGEE or EENCHULKURUNJEE, a jaghire of India, territory of Bombay, the centre in lat. 16° 41' N., lon. 74° 2' E., consists mostly of level plains, and is very fertile, but a portion, stretching to the Ghauts, bordering on the Concan, is rugged and jungly.

INCHY-BEAUMONT, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Nord, 11 m. E.S.E. Cambrai. P. 1744.

INCISA, a town of North Italy, prov. and 14 m. S.W. Alessandria, cap. mand., on the Belbo. P. 2871, partly engaged in silk-throwing. It is celebrated for its wine.—II. a town, prov. and circ. Florence, on the Arno, cap. comm. P. 3460.

INCORONATA, an isl. of Dalmatia. [CORONATA.]

INDALS-ELF, a river of Sweden, lens Osternud and Hernosand, formed below Ragunda, flows S.E. and enters the Gulf of Bothnia, 10 m. N. Sundsvall, after a navigable course of 60 miles.

INDEPENDENCE, a co. of the U. S., North America, in N.E. of Arkansas. Area 1007 sq. m. P. 12,970 free, 1387 slaves.—II. a township, New Jersey, 14 m. N.E. Belvidere. P. 2621.—III. a township, New York, 20 m. S.E. Angelica. P. 1701.

INDEPENDENCE, a town of the U. S., N. America, taria are established as a refuge from the lowlands. Earthquakes are of frequent occurrence in the W., and by their means large tracts of country have been elevated and others sunk.

In the N. of the Indian Ocean, the S.W. monsoon blows from March to October. The N.E. monsoon succeeds, & continues from October to March. The S.W. monsoon brings rain and foul weather; and the wind blows with greater force during this than during the N.E. monsoon, when the sky is generally clear. The zone of the S.W. and N.E. monsoons extends from the equator to the N. of the tropic of Cancer, and from the coast of Africa to the E. of the Philippines.

The chief vegetable products of India are wheat and other cereals, cotton, sugar, indigo, opium, hemp, flax, tea, and timber. Wheat is grown in great abundance in the N.W. Provinces, and in the Upper Punjab, at Lahore and Mooltan; barley and millet in the Neilgherry hills and other places. Cotton is grown over a small portion of Bengal Proper, Aracan, and the upper provinces of Pegu; but the most important cotton-fields are in Nagpore, the Southern Maharratta country, Berar, and Gujerat. The sugar-cane is cultivated nearly all over India. Indigo—This important dye-plant is cultivated, on a large scale, only in the moist and mild climate of the region in the N. of Bengal Proper, between the Ganges and the Himalayas, where it is the staple product, and whence it is exported to the amount of 11½ millions of pounds-weight, value 2,000,000*l.* sterling, in a year. Opium—The plant which produces opium grows in greatest abundance in the district S. of the Ganges, in Bengal, and in Malwar, whence it is exported through Bombay. Madras produces none for export. In 1863 the whole export from India was 67,000 chests, value 6,477,000*l.* Tea has been grown for some years in Assam, on the hills 2000 to 3000 feet above the sea. Lately it has been cultivated over extensive tracts on the southern and western or Punjab slopes of the Himalayas, where it grows at an elevation of 5000 feet. The produce of these tea plantations in 1863 was, at the factory of Dehra Doon, 14,982 lbs., at Ghurhwal 10,247 lbs., and at Kumaon 7960 lbs. Total, 41,519 lbs. Tea is grown also in the Neilgherries, where coffee is extensively cultivated; and the cinchona plant has been successfully introduced there, and at Darjeeling, etc. The most valuable timber is the teak-wood, used for ship-building; it grows wild in the mountainous parts of Malabar and the Coromandel coast, in the Punjab, the valley of Nerbudda, the Tenasserim provinces, and Pegu. The saul-wood grows in a belt of forest five to ten miles wide, at the foot of the Himalayas, between the marshy Tarai and the sandstone chain—"the Doons." Iron and coal are extensively worked near Burdwan in Bengal, and Jubbulpore in Nerbudda; iron and copper are distributed nearly all over India; coal is found also in the Tenasserim provinces, Cuttack (Orissa), Behar, Lower Assam, Sylhet, Aracan, Central prov. Gujerat, and Upper Assam. Silver is found in small quantities in the jungles of Beerbhoom; gold and precious stones in the rivers of Tenasserim, the Punjab, and on the coast of Malabar; diamonds in the districts of Sumbulpore, Golconda, and Vizapur. Salt is extracted from sea-water on a large scale in the Sunderbuns, and from the mines of the salt-range mountains in the Punjab. The gross revenue of India for 1862-3, was 45,105,700*l.*, of which land rev. 19,430,000*l.* Salt, 5,337,500*l.* Opium, 7,850,000*l.* Rev. estimated for 1864,

45,306,000*l.* Expenditure at home and in India, 44,490,000*l.* Probable surplus 816,000*l.* Nearly half the entire revenue is now derived from the land-tax. In the different presidencies the government land tenures vary. In the lower provinces of Bengal the land is held chiefly upon the zemindarry tenure. In this case no separation of interests is recognised by the government, the whole estate being cultivated for the mutual benefit of the proprietors. One person is held responsible to the government for the payment; and if he fails, the estate is sold for its behoof, but under-tenants may protect their own interests. The landlord's rent in this part is held in perpetuity, so that no increase of rent can take place; and the rent paid to him by under-tenants has, since 1859, been regulated by an Act which has caused much difficulty between landlord and tenant. In the N.W. provinces the land is held under the putteedarree tenure, by which an estate is parcelled out into allotments, each farmer cultivating his own part, and paying to the overseer of the village his share of the dues; but the whole are jointly responsible for all government claims,—the transgressor, in the first place, being deprived of his possession. By this system government claims are calculated upon the basis of two-thirds of the net rent, and leases are granted for a period of thirty years. In Bombay thirty years' leases are now granted by the state, as in the North-West. In Madras, the ryotwar system is the basis of the revenue settlement, each proprietor being held responsible for his own payments; the proprietor has the option of resigning his lease, or any portion of it, at the end of any season. In the southern districts the seasons are precarious, and the cultivators poor and improvident. Government claims used to be levied in these parts by taking a large sum in prosperous, and making great reductions in bad, seasons; but this did not work well, as it made farming a gambling transaction. During the last ten years the assessment has been much lightened, to the benefit of both the peasant and the state landlord. In Madras, as well as over all the rest of India, the same permanent settlement of the land-tax, which has existed in Bengal since 1793, is to be introduced. Up to 1860 it was impossible to purchase the fee-simple of land, except in the three presidency cities and Chittagong in Bengal; but since the last year of Lord Canning's administration, waste land has been sold in fee-simple very largely, chiefly to English tea and coffee planters, and settlers who have indigo or silk factories on other land may also purchase the same tenure on fair terms. Restrictions which hindered commerce, and retarded the development of the resources of the country, have been gradually removed within the last twenty years, and India now enjoys free trade; the dues on British and foreign shipping are the same. The inland duties, and duties on goods carried coastwise, are abolished. Exports of British India (exclusive of Singapore and Ceylon), (1862), cotton, rice, seeds, indigo, hemp, hides, saltpeatre, wool, silk, coffee, sugar, gums, oils, tea, skins, teak, safflower, ivory, coir-rope, cutch, etc., to the value of 34,133,551*l.* Imports, cottons, iron, copper, machinery, beer and ale, woollens, apparel, hardwares, stationery, glass, zinc, salt, coals, wine, earthenware, linens, steel, drugs, cochineal, etc., to the value of 15,346,426*l.* The export of cotton to Great Britain in 1860 was 1,822,689 cwts., and in 1862 3,505,844 cwts. Vessels entered the ports of India (1860) 21,190, tonnage 2,374,969. Cleared 20,458, tonnage 2,523,983. In this extensive country a great diversity of language prevails. In Upper India the numerous and various dialects are derivatives from the Sanscrit,—the most important being Hindee and Bengalee; in Southern India from the Pali, polished by Sanscrit elements and words,—the most important being Tamil, Telugu, and Canarese. Hindustani is the language of most of the Mohammedans, and the lingua franca of the whole peninsula. Persian was formerly the language of the law courts, but was abolished in 1837, and the vernacular of each district substituted. Brahminism prevails over the whole peninsula, mixed with other forms of Paganism and with Mohammedanism. Buddhism is the religion of British Burmah, and, mixed with fetish-worship, of some of the Indo-Chinese tribes on the slopes of the Himalayas. Devil and fetish worship prevail among the aboriginal tribes in the hills. In the Punjab, which was subjected to British rule in 1849, the inhabitants, amounting to 10,000,000 or 11,000,000, are mostly Hindoos, who, known as Sikhs or disciples of Nanak, bear an implacable hatred to the Mohammedans, who also abound there. The greater portion of the people of Cashmere are Mohammedans. The aboriginal races of India have no literature, and almost no traditions. The Khonds in Orissa occupy 52,995 sq. m., and the pop. is estimated at 4,534,813. Human sacrifices used to prevail amongst them, but the British Government have stopped the revolting custom. On the Eastern Ghauts and in Mysore are the Chenezars, a race still more barbarous. Near Madras the Yenedys are so illiterate as to be unable to reckon higher than five. The Bhils, in the hill country bordering Mewar, are robbers and outcasts, and have scarce any faith or form of worship. The Wartils and Katodars occupy the entire mountain range of Western India. The former worship the "Lord of Tigers," to whom they sacrifice fowls and goats; they recognise no other god, and have no idea of a future state. The Katodars live on the outskirts of towns and villages, feeding on snakes, rats, and offal. Nearly allied to these are the Buddughars, and the robber tribe of the Phansingars,—this last term being the name by which Thugs are known in some parts of Southern India. All the aborigines live in a state of perpetual servitude, and are known by the general name of Coolies. The predecessors of the Brahmins came from the north-west of the Indus, B.C. 1100. The Hindoos brought with them into India a language closely connected with those of Europe, and reduced to serfage all whom they conquered, besides introducing an elaborate code of laws, which have survived nearly 3000 years, and prevail still. Nearly contemporaneous with Brahminism, & probably a protest against it, came the religion of Buddha, the rival, and for long the dominant faith, of which the cave temples in the Deccan indicate the supremacy and attest the decadence. It seems to have flourished up to the fifth, and to have declined during the eighth century. The Mohammedan invasion of India began in the eleventh, and was completed in the fifteenth, century; but most of the Mohammedans now in India spring from a Brahminical stock. The Arabs or Siddees of Central India and the Concan came in successive hordes from Arabia and Africa. The Parsis, or fire-worshippers, were refugees from the religious persecution of Persia. Though small in number, they have in Bombay earned a distinguished name for public munificence, skill, and success in commerce; and they have led the way in the cause of female education. The Government of India has for some years past been devoting laudable attention to education, which was put on a new footing with three universities and grants-in-aid of non-government and missionary schools in 1854. English is taught in all its schools, and is highly prized by the native youth of India as a means of employment in government and mercantile offices. In the sixteenth century Roman Catholic missions were introduced by the Portuguese. In the seventeenth century, the Reformed religion was introduced with little success by the Dutch, and at the beginning of the eighteenth century a most successful Lutheran mission was established by the Danish government at Tranquebar. In 1793, the Baptist Missionary Society sent out its first agents, and several other societies rapidly augmented the number of missionaries all over the country. Towards the close of 1850, 22 missionary societies had established 260 stations, employing 403 preachers and 551 native catechists. They had founded 309 native churches, having a communion roll of 7356; besides numerous male and female schools, tract societies and printing-presses, and had distributed 200,000 copies of the Scriptures, in thirteen different languages, in 1860. In the same year the total cost of the missionary operations amounted to 190,000*l.* In 1862 the missionary societies of India and Ceylon were 31, the stations 371; foreign missionaries 519, native missionaries 140, native catechists 1365, native churches 1190, the communicants 31,249, and the native Protestant Christian community 153,816, or, including the Burmese converts, 213,182. The sum expended was 294,300*l.* Several great public works have been undertaken, and many completed in India within the last few years. Among these are the Ganges, Jumna, and Doab canals, and the Godavery, Kistna, and Cauvery, weirs for irrigation: a magnificent system of railways, in making which the greatest engineering difficulties have been overcome, and works undertaken of unparalleled magnitude. Of these there were opened in 1864, the East India Bengal line (N.W. provs.) 972 m.; the Madras Indian Peninsula railway, 557 m.; the Madras and Beyrora line, 448 m.; Bombay and Baroda, 185 m.; the Sindh line, Kurachee to Hyderabad, 114 m.; the Punjab line, Lahore to Umritsar, 32 m.; the E. Bengal, 110 m.; the Calcutta and S.E. line, 16 m., to Canning Town on the Mutlah; the Branch Railway Cos. line, about 35 m. from Nulhattee to near Moorsheedabad; the Great Southern, terminating at Cauvery, 79 m.; total, upwards of 2600 miles. At the same time there were 11,030 miles of telegraph in operation. The zoology of India comprises the elephant, tiger, leopard, panther, wolf, hyæna, lion, which is rare, wild buffalo, bear, jackall, deer, and monkeys. Crocodiles, serpents, and other reptiles are numerous. Domestic animals are the horse, camel, buffalo, ox, sheep, goat, and swine. Fish, and birds of every variety of plumage, are abundant.

Alexander the Great invaded and partly subdued the country. About 126 B.C. it was again invaded by the Tartars (Scythians of the Greeks and Sakas of the Hindoos). From the tenth to the twelfth centuries of the Christian era, the Mohammedans overran and conquered considerable portions of India; and subsequently the Mogul empire was established. In 1498 India was first visited by Vasco de Gama, and subsequently the Portuguese, the Dutch, and the Danes, established settlements on the peninsula; but the former never acquired more than a paltry territory on the W. coast, and the two latter a few commercial factories. The French influence in India, at one time considerable, also yielded to the superior enterprise of the British, & finally the French relinquished the field. In 1861 the pop. of the French possessions in India was 220,478, of whom 1488 were Europeans and 1556 of mixed blood. In 1625 the first English settlement was made by a company of merchants, in a small spot of the Coromandel coast, of 5 sq. m., transferred in 1653 to Madras. A short time previously a settlement had also been obtained at Hoogly, which afterwards became the Calcutta station. In 1687 Bombay was erected into a presidency. In 1773, by an act of the British Legislature, the 3 provinces were placed under the administration of a governor-general, and Calcutta was made the seat of a supreme council, the presidencies of Madras and Bombay being made subordinate to that of Bengal. Hitherto the affairs of India had been managed by the company, but in 1784 a board of control was appointed by government, the president of which became secretary of state for India in 1858. From the year 1750, when the warlike acquisition of territory commenced under Lord Clive, a succession of conquests, almost forced upon the British contrary to their inclinations, have now placed nearly all India under their sway. The governor-general, assisted by an executive council of five, and a legislative council, in which the non-official and the native communities are represented, has the power of making laws for British India, subject to the approval of the home government; and he has the sole direction of the army, which is under the control of a commander-in-chief. In May 1857 the Bengal native troops mutinied, and massacred many Europeans. In November 1858 a proclamation was issued conferring the sovereignty of India in the British Crown. In June 1859, Oude was subjugated, and order restored. The Central Provinces and British Burmah were consolidated in 1861-2, each under a chief commissioner, directly subject to the governor-general. It is expected that the great trigonometrical survey of India, now in course of publication, will be completed in 1868.

INDIANA, one of the U. S., North America, near the centre of the union, between lat. 37° and 42° 45' N., lon. 84° 42' and 87° 49' W., having N. the Lake and State Michigan, W. Illinois, E. Ohio, & S. the Ohio river, separating it from Kentucky. Area 33,809 sq. m. Pop. (1860) 1,350,428, of whom 11,428 were free coloured. Surface level or undulating. Rivers nearly all tributaries of the Wabash, which forms its W. frontier. Soil on rivers very fertile; in other parts light, and sandy hills in N. Chief products, maize, wheat, oats, potatoes, wool, butter, cheese, and tobacco. There are extensive lines of railway in this state, within which is more than half of the Wabash and Erie Canal. Coal, iron, copper, marble, lime, freestone, & gypsum are found. Manufs. comprise cotton & woollen mills, iron works, tanneries and distilleries. In 1860 there were 13 colleges incorporated in this state, 1 or 2 of which receive pupils of both sexes; theological, law, and medical schools. In 1860 there were 337,390 students attending the public schools. Public rev. (1860) 3,851,456 dols. Indiana has numerous churches of all denominations, deaf-mutes, blind, and insane asylums. The state contains 91 cos., and sends 11 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Indianapolis, the cap., Madison, New Albany, and Terre Haute. Indiana became one of the States of the Union in 1816.—II. a co. in centre of Pennsylvania. Area 753 sq. m. Pop. (1860) 33,687; and with cap. of same name, 10 miles N.E. Pittsburg. P. 1000.

INDIAN ARCHIPELAGO. [MALAYSIA.]

INDIAN KEY, an island of the U. S., North America Florida, off its S. coast, 75 m. S.W. Cape Florida, and resorted to as a watering-place by visitors.—Indian Springs is a watering-place, Georgia, 52 m. W. Milledgeville.

INDIAN OCEAN, Indicum Mare, a vast oceanic basin, separated from the Pacific on the E. by the Asiatic Archipelago and Australia, bounded on S. by a line drawn from the Cape of Good Hope to Bass' Strait, divided from the Atlantic by Africa on W., and enclosed by the countries of Asia on the N. It communicates with the China Sea by the Strait of Malacca, Sunda Strait, and the Strait of Flores. Principal inlets, the Bay of Bengal, the Arabian Sea and Gulf of Oman, the Persian Gulf and the Red Sea. Chief straits the Channel of Mozambique, and Palk Strait. The most important islands are Madagascar, Mauritius, Bourbon, the Comoro islands, the Seychelles, and Socotra, belonging to Africa; the Laccadives, Maldives, Ceylon, the Andaman and Nicobar islands, to Asia. The principal rivers of the Indian Ocean are, in Asia, the Saluen, Irrawadi, Bramapootra, Ganges, Godavery, Kistna, Nerbudda, Indus, and the Shat-el-Arab, formed by the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates; in Africa, the Zambezi. The chief seaports are Calcutta and Bombay in India; Malacca in the Asiatic Archipelago; Aden, Mokha, and Muscat in Arabia; Zanzibar, etc., in Africa. Steam-packets are established between the principal ports. The monsoons or periodical winds prevail in the N. part of the ocean, blowing from the S.W. between April and Oct., and S.E. from Oct. to April. Tempests are general at the periods of change; and between lat. 5° and 40° S. violent hurricanes occur. [For limits, routes, etc., see Johnston's Physical Atlas.]

INDIANOPOLIS, a city of the U. S., North America, cap. state Indiana, on White River, 158 m. W.S.W. Columbus. It is the centre of several railways and has iron foundries and paper-mills. P. (1860) 18,611.

INDIAN TERRITORY, a country of U. S., North America, set apart by the government as a permanent abode for the Indian Tribes removed from the different States. It is about 450 m. long from N. to S., 35 to 240 m. wide from E. to W. Area 71,127 sq. m. Lat. 33° 30' to 37° N., lon. 94° 30' to 103° W., a portion of the country is comprised in the Great American Desert, elsewhere it is fertile, affords excellent pasture, and abounds in game. The entire pop. is estimated at 120,000 (?) Indians.

INDIES (EAST), a collective name given to the peninsula of Hither and Further India, and the Asiatic Archipelago. [INDIA.]

INDIES (WEST). [WEST INDIES.]

INDIGHIRKA, a river of E. Siberia, gov. Yakutsk; rises in the Stanovoi mountains, and after a N. course of 1000 m., enters the Arctic Ocean in lat. 71° N., lon. 150° E.

INDIO, a river of the Isthmus of Panama, New Granada, unites with the Pacora to form a large stream, which enters the Pacific, E. Panama.

INDJE-KARA SU, Haliacmon, a river of European Turkey, Macedonia, enters the Gulf of Salonica, 18 m. S.W. Salonica. Length 110 miles.

INDJIGHIZ, a town of European Turkey, Rumili, 33 m. W.N.W. Constantinople.

INDJH (CAPE), Lepsa, the most N. point of Asia Minor, 13 m. N.W. Sinope.

INDO-CHINA, S. Asia. [MALAY PENINSULA.]

INDORE TERRITORY, India, consists of several isolated tracts, some of them lying very remote from each other, and are as follow:—1st, the territory annexed to the town of Indore, between lat. 21° 18' and 23° 5' N., lon. 75° 2' and 76° 16' E.; 2d, the tract of territory annexed to the town of Rampoora, N. of Indore, between lat. 24° 3' and 24° 46' N., lon. 75° 6' and 76° 12' E.; 3d, also N. of Indore, includes the town of Mehedpore, lat. 23° 29' N., lon. 75° 42' E.; 4th, W. of Indore, contains the towns of Dhie and Pitland, between lat. 22° 10' and 23° 1' N., lon. 74° 39' and 74° 51' E.; and the last in lat. 22° 31' N., lon. 76° 26' E. Total area 8318 sq. m. Pop. estimated at 815,164. The Vindhya mountains traverse Southern Indore, nearly from E. to W.; the highest point is the Jam Ghat, 2328 feet above the sea. The Nerbudda river traverses it from E. to W. Soil fertile. Chief products, wheat, rice, pulse, sugarcane, cotton, opium, and tobacco. Climate sultry, the thermometer ranging from 60° to 90° in the shade. Chief towns, Indore, Mundlaisir, Rampoora, and Bhanpoora. This state is the possession of the Holcar family.

INDORE, a town of India, cap. state of same name, on l. b. of the Kutki, 377 m. N.E. Bombay. P. estim. at 15,000. Here is a British residency.

INDRAGHRI, a navigable river of Sumatra, on its E. coast, in lat. 0° 32' S., lon. 103° E.

INDRAMAYO, a cape, river, and town of Java, on its N. coast, 90 m. E. Batavia.

INDRAPURA or INDRAPORA, a point, river, town, state, and volcano of Sumatra, the town near the S.W. coast, 150 m. N.W. Bencoolen. Indrapura point is in lat. 2° 5' S., lon. 105° 27' E., and N. of it is a bay, in which are the Indrapore islands.

INDRE, a riv. of France, depts. Indre & Indre-et-Loire, joins the Loire, 18 m. W.S.W. Tours, after a N.W. course of 115 m. On it are the towns La Châtre, Châteauroux, Chatillon, and Loches, from which last it is navigable to the Loire, 45 m.

INDRE, a dep. of N.W. France, formed of part of the old prov. Berry, enclosed by the depts. Loire-et-Cher and Indre-et-Loire, Vienne, H. Vienne, Creuse, and Cher. Area 2624 sq. m. P. 270,054. Surface uniformly level. Principal rivers, the Indre and Creuse. More corn and wine are raised than required for home consumption, though much of the soil is barren and swampy. Climate generally mild and temperate. Sheep are numerous, and many oxen and poultry are fattened here. This dep. furnishes the best lithographic stones in France. Iron, iron goods, earthenwares, cutlery, woollen and cotton cloths, yarn, leather, tiles, and parchment, are among the chief products, and are exported to double the value of the imports. Indre is divided into the 4 arrs., Châteauroux, Issoudum, La Châtre, and Le Blanc.

INDRE-ET-LOIRE, a dep. in the N.W. of France, formed chiefly of the old prov. of Touraine, comprising a region on both sides of the Loire, enclosed by the depts. Sarthe, Maine-et-Loire, Vienne, Indre, and Loire-et-Cher. Area 2361 sq. m. P. (1861) 323,572. Climate mild. Surface level, and near the Loire very fertile; elsewhere poor, and often marshy. The Cher, Indre, and Vienne rivers water its S. portion. Agriculture has lately improved, and the produce in corn is now more than adequate to home consumption. Wine is exported to Paris and Belgium. The dep. furnishes lithographic stones, pipe and potters' clay, and contains an immense mound of petrified shells, which are used as manure. Hemp, liquorice, aniseed, truffles, fruits, etc., are raised, the produce of the dep. being chiefly agricultural. The culture of silk is increasing, as are the silk, woollen, and leather manufs. of Tours. Other principal manufs. are of files and rasps, iron wares, red lead, and pottery; and near Montbazou is a national gunpowder factory and nitre refinery. The dep. is divided into the 3 arrs. of Tours, the cap., Chinon, and Loches.

INDRET, a small island of France, dep. Loire-Inférieure, formed by the Loire, 5 m. W. Nantes. The French government lately founded an establishment here for building steamboats.

INDUNO, a comm. & vill. of N. Italy, prov. Como, circ. Varese, near the l. b. of the Olona. P. 2058.

INDUS, the principal river of the Punjab, India, under the name of Sinh-kha-bab, or Lion's Mouth, rises on the N. of the Kailas mountain in Tibet, 22,000 feet above the sea, in lat. 32° N., lon. 81° 30' E. It flows first N.W. 160 m., and joins the Eekung Choo, or "river of Gartope." About 50 m. below this junction, where its bed is about 15,000 feet above the sea, it leaves the table-land, and enters the gorges between the Karakorum and Himalaya mountains, still preserving a generally N.W., but somewhat tortuous course, and retaining the name of Sinh-kha-bab. From the mountains of Cashmere on the S., it receives on the left the rivers Zanskar and Dras, and at lon. 75° 57', the river Shy-yok on the right, which is its largest tributary above the Cabool. The river now receives the name of Indus or Aba Sind. About 25 m. below this confluence it passes Iskardo, where its bed is 6300 feet above the sea. Continuing its N.W. course for still 90 m., it attains its highest latitude 35° 50' N., lon. 74° 45' E., where it suddenly turns, taking a S. direction for a few miles, then S.W. through unexplored territory to Attock (1000 feet above the sea), in the Punjab, at which town it receives the Cabool from Afghanistan. It has now left the mountainous region of the Himalayas; but for 110 m. below Attock to Kalabagh it is an enormous torrent, after which it enters the plains, and flows S. to Mittunkote, distant 350 m. In this part of its course the river, when swollen, overflows the adjacent country to a great extent. At Mittunkote, in lat. 29°, is the confluence of the Punjnd, the river that conveys the united waters of the Punjab to the Indus. It flows now S.W., then S., and falls into the Arabian Sea, by many and often shifting mouths, at lat. 23° 30' to 24° 28' N., throwing off the Narra branch at lat. 28°. The Delta begins at lat. 25° 30', and has a coast line of 122 miles. The navigation of the Indus extends from Attock to the sea, 942 miles, where the fall is to Kalabagh 20 inches, thence to Mittunkote 8, and thence to the sea 6 inches per m. Above Attock the fall is, on the average, 20 feet per m. Total course of river 1800 m. The Indus Steam Flotilla Company have 4 passenger steamers plying between Kotree and Mooltan, and 21 barges for traffic. The guryial, or long-snouted alligator, is abundant in the river; and the bolun, a cetaceous animal, is common. Nowhere are fish more plentiful, especially the pulla, a species of carp which forms a large portion of the food of the adjacent population.

Surface mountainous, and generally rugged and covered with heath; but in some of the larger islands are fertile plains. In all the islands, somewhat less than half their surface estimated to be under cultivation. Products (1860) 69,553 lbs. olive oil, 80,250,897 lbs. currants, 148,539 barrels wine, and 67,580 bushels of wheat. Live stock—horses, horned cattle, sheep, and goats. Manufactures consist of woollen fabrics for home consumption, soap in Corfu and Zante, salt in Zante and Leucadia, silk fabrics in Zante, earthenware, goats' hair carpets, linens, and sacking. Shipbuilding is an important branch of industry, and many of the pop. are occupied in maritime trade and navigation. Exports to Britain (1862), currants, olive oil, maize, etc., to the value of 339,254*l.* Imports, cottons, sugar, coffee, woollens, apparel, coats, iron, hardware, spirits, etc., to the value of 337,119*l*. Rev. (1860) 401,855*l*. Expenditure 151,187*l*. The established religion is that of the Greek church. Principal towns, Corfu, Zante, Argostoli, and Vathi. These islands were subject to Venice from 1386 to 1797. In 1814 they were placed under British protection. Their constitution of government was drawn up in 1817. On 5th Oct. 1863 the Parliament at Corfu unanimously voted the annexation of the islands to the kingdom of Greece, and they were transferred accordingly in 1864.

IONIAN SEA is that part of the Mediterranean between Greece & European Turkey on the E., & Italy & Sicily on the W. Principal inlets, the Gulfs of Taranto, Squillace, Arta, and Patras. It communicates N. with the Adriatic by the Strait of Otranto, contains all the Ionian isls. except Cerigo.

IOWA (formerly Sioux Territory), a state of the U. S., North America. Lat. 40° 35' to 43° 30' N., lon. 90° 20' to 102° W., bounded E. by the Mississippi, W. by the Missouri river, and S. by the Missouri State. Area 50,914 sq. m. P. (1860) 674,913, of whom 1069 were free coloured. Cap. since 1855, Fort Des Moines. Surface undulating prairie. In the W. is an elevated tableland. Along the rivers, soil fertile and well wooded; elsewhere, bare of timber. Products, maize, wheat, barley, potatoes, fruits, wool, tobacco, and furs. Lead, copper, zinc, iron ore, and coal are abundant. Climate healthy. The Chipeway, Ottawa, and several other Indian tribes, occupy portions of the territory. There are churches of all denominations. Iowa was separated from Wisconsin in 1838, and admitted into the Union in 1846. It is divided into 49 cos., and sends 2 mems. to Congress. Principal towns, Iowa city, Burlington, and Dubuque. The state is being rapidly covered with railways.—II. Iowa city, Johnston co., is on the river Iowa, 80 m. from its junction with the Mississippi. P. 5214. It has a capital of Grecian-Doric architecture.—III. Iowa river, after an E. course of 300 m., joins the Mississippi below Fort Armstrong. It is navigable from its mouth, 80 m., to Iowa city; and its affluent, Red Cedar river, is also navigable to 100 m. above their junction.—IV. a co. in S. W. of Wisconsin. Area 752 sq. m. P. (1860) 18,967.

IOWA, a co. of the U. S., North America, in S. E. of Iowa state. Area 576 sq. m. P. 8029.

IPHOFEN, a town of Bavaria, circ. Middle Franconia, 32 m. N. N. W. Anspach. P. 2069.

IPING, a pa. of England, co. Sussex, 2½ m. W. N. W. Midhurst. Ac. 1925. P. 404.

IPLYO or EYPEL, a riv., Cent. Hungary, joins the Danube 10 m. below Gran, after a S. S. W. course of 90 m., the last 35 m. of which it is navigable.

IQU, two islands of Japan, S. E. Kiusiu, lat. 31° 30' N., lon. 132° E.

IQUIQUE, a seaport town of S. Peru, dep. Arequipa, prov. and 40 m. W. Tarapacca, on the Pacific, opposite the island of Iquique. P. 1000.

IRA, a township of the U. S., North America, New York, 169 m. W. Albany.

IRAK-AJEM (anc. the Greater Media), a large prov. of Persia, occupying all the central portion between lat. 31° 50' and 37° N., lon. 46° and 58° E., having N. the provs. Azerbaijan, Ghilan, and Mazanderan, E. Khorasan and Yezd, S. Fars and Khuzistan, and W. Turkish Kurdistan. Within these limits it comprises Persian Kurdistan, and in the rest of its extent it consists of the subordinate provs. Ardelan, Louristan, Ispahan, and Kasha. Surface an elevated tableland, traversed by several mntn. ranges. Principal rivers, the Kizil Ouzan, forming a part of its N. boundary, and the Karah, with its affls. on the S.; besides which there are several large streams, that lose themselves in the sandy deserts which occupy a large proportion of the prov. The watered valleys are fertile, and produce rice, wheat, sesamum, and other grains, excellent fruits, and some tobacco, opium, cotton, saffron, and silks. Camels and horses are the principal beasts of burden; wool and goats' hair are important sources of wealth. In the N. W. several valuable metallic ores are met with, but the mines are not wrought, owing to a deficiency of fuel. Timber is generally scarce. Silk and cotton fabrics, gold and silver thread stuffs of superior quality, leather, glass, and earthenwares are manufactured, and with rice, tobacco, opium, and cattle, form the principal exports. Ispahan is the great emporium of trade, and is the rendezvous of large caravans from Bagdad, Herat, and even Surat. Other principal cities are Teheran, Hamadan, Kasbin, Senna, Kermanshah, and Koom.

IRAK-ARABI, Babylonia, Asiatic Turkey, pash. Bagdad, mostly between the lower courses of the Euphrates & Tigris, & comprises the city of Bagdad, and ruins of Babylon, Seleucia, & Ctesiphon.

IRAN, the ancient name of Persia.
 IRASU, a volcano of Central America, state Costa Rica, near the city of Cartago.

IRBIT, a town of Siberia, gov. Perm, cap. dist., 100 m. E.N.E. Ekaterburg, on the Nitsa, and on a route from Tobolsk into Europe. It is enclosed by a palisade, and is chiefly noted for a large annual fair, which lasts for a month, in Feb. and March, and is attended by a large concourse of European and Asiatic merchants. A line of steam-packets was established in 1863, between Irbit and the towns on the Tobol, Irtsch, and Obi.

The population of 1850 was 6,811,827; of 1841, 8,175,124; and 1851, 8,663,290—showing a decrease in ten years of 1,513,294. In 1831, the total population was 5,764,543. Decrease since 1851, 478,942. Religious denominations, 1851: Roman Catholics, 4,440,593; Established Church, 678,951; Presbyterians, 628,992; Methodists, 44,532; Independents, 5,662; Baptists, 4,185; Quakers, 3,312; Jews, 322; all other persuasions, 8,414.

Ireland is of a rhomboidal form, with a waved continuous outline on the E. coast, but indented by inlets on its other sides, with rock bound coasts N. and W. Surface mostly level. Most of its mountains, as the Wicklow, Mourne, Donegal, Mayo, Galway, and Kerry, are in isolated groups towards the coasts and extremities of the island surrounding a central plain, comprising a large extent of bog-land, and traversed by a few low hill ranges, as the Devil's Bit, Galtees, Mount Leinster, and Slievebloom. Carranatal, in M'Gillicuddy Reeks, Kerry, is the highest summit, and rises to 3414 feet above the sea. Granite, flanked by silurian strata, forms the Wicklow range of mountains on the E. coast. The same primary strata prevail in the Mourne mountains, and an extensive trap formation in Antrim of 800 sq. m. is succeeded by clay slate on the west. Granite again appears in the Galway mountains, and the old red sandstone extensively prevails in Munster. The great plain in the centre, 250 to 300 feet above the sea, is formed of carboniferous limestone, and contains 6 coal districts, the Leinster or Castlecomer, the Sleeve Arda in Tipperary, the Munster, Loch Allan, Monaghan, and Tyrone, besides a small coal-field in co. Antrim. The number of collieries in 1861 was 73, chiefly situated in Kilkenny, Tipperary, and Queen's County, but only 46 of these are working. The quantity of coal raised was 123,070 tons, of which only 50,500 tons were bituminous, the remainder being anthracite, which burns without flame. The coal raised S. of Dublin is anthracite, that in the N. is bituminous. Besides the coal, Ireland possesses two other species of fuel, viz, lignite, and turf, or peat. The former is found in dense strata, encompassing the S. half of L. Neagh; while the turf occupies 2,830,000 acres, or nearly one-seventh of the entire area. Copper and lead are found in the silurian and mntn. limestone strata. Black marble is in almost inexhaustible quantity in the district of Connemara. The lower chalk and green sand formations partially prevail, but no tertiary beds. Copper mines are six in number—viz., in Cork, Kerry, Waterford, and Wicklow. The quantity of copper ore raised in 1862 was 15,229 tons, yielding 1471 tons of pure copper, worth 127,369£. Lead is widely diffused, but is wrought chiefly in the granitic district of Wicklow. The quantity of lead ore raised in 1862 was 2644 tons, yielding 1763 tons of pure lead. Only two iron mines are now wrought, which in 1861 produced 165 tons of ore. The quantity of silver found in the various lead mines in 1862 was 12,741 ounces. Zinc is found in the silver mines of Tipperary to the extent of 890 tons annually. Other minerals useful in the arts and manufactures, are iron, pyrites, manganese, antimony, nickel, tin, alum, marble, roofing slates, building stones, clays of various kinds; and rock salt has latterly been worked near Carrickfergus, producing 20,000 tons annually. Ireland is well watered. Principal rivers, the Shannon, Barrow, Blackwater, Suir, Nore, Bann, Foyle, Boyne, Slaney, Liffey, Bandon, and Erne. Principal lakes, Loughs Neagh (93,255 ac.), and Erne in Ulster; Loughs Allen, Corib, Mask, and Deirgeash in Connaught; and the famed lakes of Killarney in Munster, near the S.W. extremity of the island. The aggregate surface of these lakes is estimated at 336 sq. m. Loughs Strangford, Belfast, Foyle, and Swilly, on the N. and N.E. coasts, are inlets of the sea. Other principal inlets are Dundrum, Carlingford, Dundalk, and Dublin bays on the E.; and Bantry, Dunmanus, Dingle, Tralee, Galway, Clew, Blacksod, Killala, Sligo, and Donegal bays, with the estuaries of the Shannon and Kenmare rivers, on the W. coast. Ireland is much indented by the sea, no locality being above 50 m. from its shores; and this, together with its exposure to the gulf stream of the Atlantic, conduces to the general mildness and moisture of its climate. Mean annual temperature ranging from 48° Fahr. in the N. to 52° in the S.; mean summer 60°-5; mean winter 30°-9. Average rainfall for ten years (1850-59) 33.99 inches, E. coast 29, W. coast 47 inches. Westerly winds prevail for nine months in the year. Plants that require artificial heat in England flourish here in the open air. The broad-leaved myrtle grows luxuriantly in some S. counties, & the arbutus Unedo, menziesia, and other plants of South Europe, flourish; while Alpine plants of the extreme north of Europe are also found on some of the mountains. Of the 20,808,271 ac. of land, 14,802,581 ac. are arable, 304,906 ac. in plantations, 45,590 ac. in towns, 631,210 ac. in water, and 5,023,984 in bog. Ireland is more fitted for cattle-rearing than for agriculture, and the live stock was estimated in 1861 at 33,434,385. Farms are generally very small, few extend to 40 acres, and mostly vary from 5 to 15 acres in the E. and N. A few estates are in larger farms, and these are the portions of the country in which there is the least amount of national pauperism. Oats, wheat, and barley are the principal crops, next to potatoes, which had long formed the staple crop and food of the Irish peasantry, till the failures of the potato crop in 1845-6-7, when a government grant of 10,350,000*l.* was found necessary to prevent starvation. About nine-tenths of the lands were confiscated by the governments of Cromwell and William III., and bestowed on English proprietors, by whose descendants the bulk of Irish property is still possessed. In 1862, 11,375 vessels, manned by 48,601 persons, were employed in the fisheries around the coasts, where herrings, pilchards, cod, ling, and hake are among the more plentiful kinds taken, and in the estuaries, where salmon and eels are abundant; but the salt fish consumed in the country is still imported chiefly from Scotland, and other places. The herring fishery is prosecuted chiefly on the E. coast by a fleet of between 200 and 300 vessels from Cornwall. Manufs. consist of paper, glass, tobacco, and especially linen goods, the chief seat of which latter is Ulster. The annual value of the linen products of Ireland is about 7,000,000*l.* The manuf. of linen has greatly revived since the application of machinery to the spinning of yarn, and the introduction of the power-loom in weaving. The malt trade and distilling of whisky are extensively carried on. In 1862, there were 27 distilleries, paying duty to the amount of 2,326,886*l.*, the number of gallons distilled being 4,301,539. In the north of Ireland, 300,000 persons are employed in working patterns on muslins with the needle. Belfast is the centre of this manuf. Gross value of the goods 1,400,000*l.* The wool produced in the country has been estimated to amount in annual value to 300,000*l.*, and coarse woollen stuffs are made in the centre of the country, besides mixed stuffs and silks in Dublin, Waterford, and other principal cities. In 1862 there were estimated to be in all 9 cotton, 42 woollen, and 100 flax, 5 jute, and 2 silk factories, making a total of 158, giving employment to 37,872 persons, and steam and water power equivalent to that of 15,314 horses. The conversion of grain into flour and meal has latterly become an extensive business. Principal exports are raw produce, wheat, oats, flour, butter, bacon, beef, eggs, wool, flax, ore, and spirits. Imports comprise coal and culm, fish, salt, woollen and cotton yarn and fabrics, with colonial produce. Total value of foreign exports from the six principal ports in Ireland (Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Galway, Londonderry, and Waterford) in 1861 was 212,279*l.* Number of vessels entered in 1862, 28,038 British, and 1072 foreign ships, with an aggregate burden of 4,217,701 tons; cleared 14,312 British, and foreign 893, carrying 2,839,283 tons. It has 52 coast lighthouses, and 3 floating lights. The number of Irish emigrants that left from 1st May 1851 to the 31st December 1862 was 1,297,827. Public revenue in 1862 6,777,667*l.*; expenditure 6,786,281*l.* The Grand and Royal Canals intersect the country from E. to W., and connect Dublin with Ballinasloe and Tarmonberry, on the Shannon. In 1862, 1598 m. of rail. were completed; number of passengers 10,429,216; total receipts for passengers and goods 1,446,092*l.* Railways connect Dublin with Belfast on the N., Cork and Waterford on the S., and Galway on the W. Chief branches, on the N., Belfast to Ballemena, Newton-Ards, and Armagh; Dundalk to Castleblaney, and Drogheda to Kells. Dublin to Kingstown and Bray, Tipperary to Limerick, and Mallow to Kilkenny. Lines of electric telegraph wires have been laid between the principal towns, and a submarine line connects England and Ireland. In 1849, Government appointed commissioners to conduct the sale of encumbered estates, & down to 1859, 25,190,839*l.* was the amount of sales, and 24,229,027*l.* was the sum paid to creditors and mortgagers. In 1858, the Landed Estates Court superseded the Encumbered Estates Court. From that year to 31st Jan. 1862, the amount of sales made by the court has been 5,940,990*l.*, and the approximate capital value of estates brought into the court, remaining unsold, was 3,664,996*l.* In 1853 an exhibition of national industry was held in Dublin. Ireland has, since 1800, been represented in the British House of Lords by 28 temporal peers elected for life, and 4 spiritual peers, who take office in rotation; and since the Reform Act, in the H. of C., by 105 members, 2 elected by each co., 2 by each of the cities, Dublin, Cork, Limerick, and Waterford, the towns Belfast and Galway, and Trinity College, Dublin; & 1 by each of 27 other bors. Total registered electors (1851), 163,546; being 135,245 in counties, and 28,301 in cities and bors. The electoral franchise rests with much the same classes as in England; in boroughs both the parliament and municipal right of voting is in 10*l.* householders, resident within 7 m. The local government is vested in the Lord-Lieutenant, assisted by the secretary for Ireland, and a privy council nominated by the crown. The judicial power is with the Lord Chancellor, the master of the rolls, and 12 circuit-judges. Each county has a lieutenant, aided by an indefinite number of deputy-lieutenants, and a police force appointed by the crown. The Protestants are most prevalent in Ulster, and parts of Leinster. The established religion is Episcopalian, with two archbishoprics (Armagh and Dublin) and 10 bishoprics, their total incomes amounting in 1862 to 79,197*l.* The Roman Catholic Church (unenowed by law) has 4 archbishoprics and 23 bishoprics. The national schools, aided by annual parliamentary grants, amounted in 1862 to 6010, attended by an average number of 533,494, or a total number of 812,007 pupils, of whom 479,371 were Roman Catholics, 36,712 Established Church, 61,442 Presbyterians, and 3953 other persuasions. There is a university in Dublin, and colleges have been endowed by government in Cork, Galway, and Belfast.

The number of insane persons in Ireland in 1862 was 16,246, supported at a total cost of 94,035*l*. Number of paupers on poor's roll in 1862, 297,853, of whom 30,046 were out-door—the total expenditure being 578,789*l*. The greater part of the Irish are descendants of the aboriginal Celts, with an admixture towards the north of Saxons, probably the Scoti of the 8th century, and in later times of English and Scottish emigrants. The Erse, a dialect of the Celtic, is the native language, and is now chiefly used in the west part of the country. Their dark complexion, and smaller and more slender form of body, as well as their more volatile temperament, distinguish the Irish from the Saxon. In the year 432, Christianity was introduced by St Patrick. From the 8th to the 12th century, the country was the scene of perpetual warfare between the petty kings and their chiefs. In 1174, Henry II. of England conquered the country, and partitioned it out among his Anglo-Norman followers. In the reign of King John the division into counties took place, and English laws and customs were partially introduced. But the powerful barons continued to resist the government of Henry VII., Elizabeth, and James I., with repeated outbreaks and rebellions. The most memorable of these were in 1641, 1689, and 1798. In 1800, the union of Ireland with England took place. In 1829 the Roman Catholic Emancipation Act was passed, in 1832 the Irish Reform Bill, in 1838 the Poor Law Bill. In 1844 the Irish repeal agitation was at its height; and in 1848 an insurrection of the populace took place, but was speedily put down. The wolf and elk or moose deer belonged to Ireland, and bones of the latter have been found. Venenous animals are unknown, the moist climate being destructive to them.

IRELAND (NEW), a long and narrow island in the Pacific Ocean, in lat. 2° 3' S., lon. 152° E., about 400 m. N.E. Papua. Length, N.W. to S.E., 200 m.; average breadth 20 m. ITALY (anc. Italia, German Italien), a country of Southern Europe, formed of a continental portion, a peninsula, and numerous islands. Considered geographically, it extends from the extremity of Sicily to the Rhetian Alps, between lat. 36° 35' and 46° 37' N., and from the W. point of the Cottian Alps to the E. extremity of Terra d'Otranto, between lon. 6° 35' and 18° 35' E. It is bounded E. by the Adriatic and the Ionian Sea, S. by the Mediterranean, W. by France and the Mediterranean, and N. by Switzerland and Austria. Its natural confines are the Alps and the sea. From 1815 to 1859 Italy comprised 13 separate divisions, including Italian Switzerland;—canton Tessin (Ticino), and part of the Grisons (Grigione), and Valais; Austrian Italy—The Italian Tirol, the kingdom of Lombardy and Venice, Istria, Triest, etc.; French Italy, island of Corsica; and British Italy (the Maltese islands). In 1859 King Victor Emmanuel obtained Lombardy, part of the Pontifical States, and the Duchies of Parma and Modena. The Grand Duchy of Tuscany was annexed to Italy 22d March, and the Marches, Umbria, and the two Sicilies, 17th Dec. 1860. The following table shows the new divisions, area, and pop. of the kingdom of Italy in 1862:—

Besides the above, the States of the Church are claimed by the people and government of Italy, but are still politically separated (Pontifical States). Venetia forms geographically a portion of Italy.

The continental portion of the country is separated from the rest of Europe by the chain of the Alps, and its waters belong entirely to the basin of the Mediterranean Sea. The coast has a development of about 3353 m., one-third of which is insular. The shores of the Adriatic are little indented, and on the N. are shallow and bordered by marshes; those of the Ionian Sea are flat at the foot of the Gulf of Tarentum only; the W. shores of Italy are generally more elevated than the eastern, except in the Maremma, at the mouths of the Arno, and in the Pontine marshes. The chief islands are Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, Elba, Malta, and the Lipari islands. The principal gulf and bays are, in the Adriatic, those of Venice and Manfredonia; in the Ionian Sea, Tarentum and Squillace; the Gulf of Genoa, and the bays of St Eufemia, Policastro, Salerno, Naples, and Gaeta; and the chief straits those of Messina and Bonifacio. The most prominent capes are Piombino, Argentaro, Circello, Campanella, Spartivento, and Leuca, on the two S. points. The country is generally well watered, but, except the Po, the rivers are small and generally mere torrents; the chief of these are, in the basin of the Adriatic, the Tagliamento, Piave, Brenta, Po, Aterno, Sangro, and Ofanto; in the basin of the Ionian Sea, the Bradano; and in that of the Mediterranean, the Arno, Ombrone, Tiber, Garigliano, and Volturno. Italy has some of the largest mountain lakes in Europe: the chief are Maggiore, Garda, and Lugano, portions of which only belong to the territory—Como and Iseo, which are entirely Italian. On the S. slope of the Apennines are the small lakes of Trasimene, Bolsena, Bracciano, Fucino, and Celano, mostly of classic interest. Italy is divided naturally into a N. portion beyond the peninsula, including the vast basin of the Po—a prolongation of the basin of the Adriatic—the surface of which rises gradually to Piedmont, in the N.W.; and the central and S. portion, or the true peninsula, which in general is mountainous or hilly, traversed throughout its length by the chain of the Apennines, from which considerable plains, nearly level, extend along its shores. From its position, form, and configuration, Italy enjoys a varied and excellent climate, which permits the productions of the temperate and some of those of the torrid zone, to mingle on its almost uniformly fertile surface. The exceptions to this are the pestilential marshes, especially the Maremma in Tuscany, the theatre of a prolonged struggle between human industry and the malignity of the climate, and now nearly deserted. Snow lies during the year on the Alps, at an elevation of 9500 feet, only; the valley of the Po has a temperate climate, resembling that of the centre of France; its lakes and portions of the lagoons of Venice are frozen in winter. In the region between lat. 38° 30' and 40° 30' N., snow falls on the slopes of the mountains only, and the olive, orange, and citron ripen in the open air; between lat. 39° and 41° 30' N., snow is very rare, and in the S. of Calabria, Sicily, and the neighbouring islands, the climate permits of the cultivation of tropical plants. Mean annual temperature—Milan (lat. 55° 28'), 55°·2; Venice (lat. 45° 25'), 55°·4; Florence (lat. 43° 46'), 59°·2; Rome (lat. 41° 54'), 60°·5; Naples (lat. 40° 50'), 59°·6; Palermo (lat. 38° 6'), 63°·1, Fahr. The prevailing winds of Italy are W. and S.W., during which the air is pure and healthy; but the S. portion of the country is frequently visited by the pestilential winds of Africa, the Sirocco and Libeccio, during which vegetation is arrested, and the human frame becomes languid and feeble. Fever is prevalent in the marshy districts. Italy is rich in mineral products, but has few metals, except iron and lead. The Apennines supply the beautiful marble of Carrara. Sulphur, borax, salt, nitre, alum, alabaster, lava, and other volcanic productions, are abundant. There is one active volcano (Vesuvius) in the peninsula, and four in the islands (Ætna, Stromboli, Vulcano, and Vulcanello); there are many mineral and gaseous springs. The vegetable productions of Italy are extremely varied; the Alps afford excellent pasture, and forests with a great variety of timber. The fauna resembles that of the rest of Europe in similar latitudes, except that it embraces the buffalo, and among vipers the asp, scorpion, and tarantula. Fish are abundant in the rivers. The horses of Piedmont are valuable, and in the S. their place is supplied by excellent mules. The coasts of Sicily furnish sponges and corals; the chief products of the soil are corn in Sicily and in the plain of the Po, which last also possesses the only extensive rice fields in Europe. The chestnut forms an important article of food in the Apennines. The vine, olive, and other fruit trees yield abundant crops; and in the S., cotton, the sugar-cane, orange, and fig are cultivated. The culture of the mulberry, and the rearing of the silk-worm, forms an important branch of industry. The cotton grown in S. Italy and Sicily in 1863 amounted to 80,000 bales. Cattle are reared to a considerable extent in the N., and goats and swine in the S. It is estimated that not more than two-thirds of the productive area of the kingdom are cultivated; the rest is waste. Manufs. comprise silk (chiefly in Lombardy and Piedmont), woollens, gauze, porcelain, artificial flowers, hats, paper, parchment, and musical instruments. In 1862 847 miles of railway were in operation in Italy. The mercantile marine of Italy, including Venetia and the Pontif. states, in 1861 comprised 22,656 ships; tonnage 983,562; employing 13,465 captains, masters, etc., 86,644 sailors, with boatmen and fishermen; in all, 137,360 men,—greater than any other country, except England. From the absence of custom-house returns, there is no official statement of the trade of the whole kingdom. In 1862 the exports from South Italy to Britain were—oils, brimstone, shumac, cream of tartar, madder, oranges and lemons, wine, liquorice, etc., to the value of 1,865,239*l.* Imports—cottons, woollens, iron, linens, copper, coals, hides, indigo, machinery, coffee, silk, etc., to the value of 1,831,074*l.* Public rev. (1862) 24,936,446*l.* Expenditure 38,978,896*l.*; deficit 14,037,450*l.* Army (peace establishment) 1863, 157 generals, 15,337 officers of all ranks, and 227,250 sub-officers and soldiers, or with 2742 employés, in all 245,526 men and 36,728 horses. Navy, 85 steamers of 18,543 horse power and 1576 guns, and 17 sailing vessels with 279 guns; in all, 102 men-of-war with 1185 guns (including two iron-clad frigates), with 10,927 sailors and two regiments of marines. The arts and sciences are still cultivated with considerable success. Throughout the whole of Italy, except Savoy and Corsica, Italian, in very different dialects, is the language of the country, but it is spoken in its purity in Tuscany only. The Catholic Apostolic and Roman religion is the sole religion of the state, but other existing forms are tolerated by law. The Roman hierarchy comprises 45 archbishops and 198 bishops. In 1850 a bill was passed annihilating the privileges of the clergy of Sardinia, which in 1861 was extended over the whole kingdom. In 1855 there were confiscated 2099 clerical estabs. (including 66 monasteries), with 7871 individuals, and an annual income of 145,640*l.* In 1861 the number of religious estabs. in Naples and Sicily was, for men, 1020, with 13,611 inmates; nunneries 272, with 8001 inmates, with an income of 24*l.* a-head. A great part of the property thus confiscated has, by the new government, been applied to the purposes of education, besides an annual credit of 600,000*l.* voted by Parliament. Since the beginning of 1860 there have been opened in the kingdom 33 government model schools. In the former kingdom of the Two Sicilies there were (in 1860) 3094 large parishes which had no schools whatever; but by the end of 1861 the new government had established in the ex-kingdom (exclusive of the central province of Naples) 1084 boys' schools, attended by 23,596 pupils, and 778 girls' schools, with 18,912 pupils, besides evening schools. In 1862 the schools had greatly increased, and the number of pupils was nearly doubled. Italy, including the Pontifical States, has 13 universities, viz., Bologna, Naples, Padua, Rome, Perugia, Pisa, Siena, Pavia, Turin, Parma, Florence, Catania, Cagliari, and Genoa. Under the Romans, Italy was divided into the provs. of Cisalpine-Gaul and Venetia in the N.; Italy proper in the centre; and Magna-Græcia in the S. The political arrangements of Modern Italy were changed for a time by the aggressions of Napoleon I. In 1801, Savoy and Piedmont were united to France, the duchy of Milan formed the Cisalpine republic, to which, in 1805, the duchy of Venice and its continental possessions were added, forming together the kingdom of Italy; and Genoa was incorporated with France; Naples was seized, the pope and the other sovereigns were deposed; and thus all Italy, except Sicily and Sardinia, was subjected to the Emperor of France. After the dismemberment of the French Empire in 1814, the states were restored to their former rulers, except the duchies of Milan and Venice, which were given to Austria, and formed the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom.

JAEN, a city of Spain, cap. prov. of same name, in a hilly district, 2500 feet above the sea, 87 m. N. Granada. P. 18,054. It is enclosed by turreted walls, and commanded by a fortress on a neighbouring hill; has two cathedrals, hospitals, public fountains; trade in the agricultural produce of the neighbourhood, & manufs. of coarse woollens & linens; but the extensive manufs. of silk fabrics, which flourished under the Moors, has wholly disappeared. It was an important city under the Romans; under the Moors it was cap. of the small kingdom of Jaen, and was taken by Ferdinand II., king of Castile, in 1246. Area of prov. 5179 sq. m. P. (1857) 345,879.

JAFFA or YAFFA, Joppa, a maritime town of Palestine, pash. and 45 m. N.N.E. Gaza, on a tongue of land projecting into the Mediterranean. Lat. 32° 3' N., lon. 34° 45' E. Pop. (1862) estimated at 25,000. Its harbour is choked with sand, and the landing-place is miserable. The present town has Greek, Latin, and Armenian convents, 3 or 4 mosques, extensive bazaars, and manufs. of soap. It is the entrepôt of goods (principally imports) for Jerusalem, Nablous, Gaza, and the interior. Being the highway to Jerusalem, about 10,000 pilgrims land and embark here annually, to and from the holy city. 135 British and foreign vessels entered the port in 1862, and 130 cleared. The chief exports are wheat, barley, Indian corn, sesame, olive oil, soap, raisins, oranges, and other fruits; total value (1862), 178,072l. The imports comprise Manchester and Glasgow cotton goods, long cloth, shirtings, hardwares, and colonial produce; woollens from France and Germany; glass, paper, wine, silks, etc. Around the town for a circuit of 3 miles are orange and fruit orchards, abounding with wells. A carriage-way is projected by an English company to Jerusalem, and the route surveyed. Joppa was the scene of many memorable events in Scripture history. Here the cedar of Mount Lebanon was landed by the servants of Hiram, king of Tyre, to be conveyed to Jerusalem for building the temple of Solomon. Hence Jonah took ship to "flee from the presence of his Maker;" and the house of Simon the tanner is still pointed out. Its fortifications were destroyed by Saladin, A.D. 1188. During the crusades, Richard of England was confined here by sickness. Under the Turks, it was sacked by the Arabs in 1722, by the Mamelukes in 1775, and by Napoleon I. in 1799, when the "Massacre of Jaffa" was perpetrated.

JAILUM, JHYLUM, JELUM or BEHUT, Hydaspes, one of the "five rivers" of the Punjab, a tributary to the Indus, rises in Cashmere, the whole of which valley it drains, and after a S.W. course, estimated at 500 m., joins the Chenab 80 m. N.N.E. Mooltan, from which junction it is navigable upwards nearly to its emergence from the mountains. It is also navigable for 70 m. in Cashmere. Chief affluents, the Kishengunga and Pir-Panjal. On it are the towns Islamabad, Shahabad, Serinaagar, Jhelum, Jelalpoor, and Pind Dadun Khan. The town Jhelum or Jhylum, on E. bank of this river, is in lat. 32° 56' N., lon. 78° 47' E. It is large and clean, though its streets are narrow and intricate. The river is here generally fordable, and, on that account, Sir A. Burnes considered Jhelum to have been the place of conflict between Alexander the Great and Porus. The sanguinary but indecisive battle of Chillianwallah, in the second Sikh war, was fought near this river.

JAIME (SAN) or SAN JAYNE, a town of S. America, Venezuela, dep. Apure, on the Portuguese, 22 m. N.N.W. San Fernando de Apure. P. 7000.

JAMAICA, one of the Great Antilles, and the principal of the British West India islands, in the Caribbean Sea, between lat. 17° 45' and 18° 30' N., lon. 76° 11' and 78° 19' W., about 100 m. S. Cuba. Length 150 m., average breadth 40 m. Area 6400 sq. m. P. (1861) 441,255. In the same year 2171 immigrants arrived in the island, including 1522 from Calcutta, and 649 liberated Africans from St Helena. The Blue Mountains traverse the whole length of the island from E. to W., varying in elevation from 5000 to 6000 feet; on their S. side the shores are abrupt, the surface broken, and the scenery bold; on the N. the country is undulating, and descends gradually to the sea, and this side of the island is reputed to be the more healthy. Mean annual temperature at Kingston, 78°-8, summer 81°, winter 76°-2, Fahr. Snow has never been observed. Rainy seasons, from May to August, and from October to November. Earthquakes are frequent; hurricanes less so than in the other West India islands. The isl. is well watered. Principal rivers, the Minho, Black River, and Cobre, all flowing to the S. coast, but none of them is navigable except the Blackwater. Minerals very numerous, embracing the ores of iron, copper, lead, zinc, cobalt, and manganese, together with limestone, sulphate of baryta, iron pyrites, marble, gypsum, and lignite. Valuable quarries of lithographic stone were discovered in 1855, and traces of coal were also found. The mountains are of calcareous formation, and large caverns are numerous. Most of the staple products of tropical climates are raised. Indigo, cotton, and cacao were formerly more important staples than at present.

Maize, Guinea corn, and rice are the chief grains raised. The plantain, banana, sweet potato, etc., compose the principal food of the blacks. Fine fruits are plentiful. Sunflower seeds are raised for the manufacture of oil. Other products are cinnamon, fine woods, and artificial grasses. Live stock in general are good, as well as numerous. About 7-8ths of the land belong to private individuals; estates seldom exceed 1200 acres, and have become more subdivided since the epoch of slave emancipation. In 1840 its export of sugar was 617,600 cwt., and in 1861 it was 654,848 cwt. In 1861 the exports consisted of sugar, rum, coffee, pimento, ginger, dye and hard wood, and copper; the total exports being estimated at 1,214,614, and imports in the same year at 1,089,482, in value. Principal ports, Kingston, Montego Bay, and Falmouth. Jamaica is divided into 3 cos., Middlesex, Surrey, and Cornwall, and subdivided into 21 parishes. Government vested in a governor, and a council of 12 members, nominated by the crown, and a legislative assembly of 45 members, 2 elected by every pa., and 1 by each of the chief towns. All male inhabitants having freeholds of 10l. a year may vote for representatives, which latter must have an estate of 300l. a year, or personal property worth 1000l. A supreme court in Spanish-Town, and courts of assize in each co., sit three times yearly. The island is the see of a bishop, whose diocese extends over the Bahamas and Honduras, and has Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, and Moravian churches. In 1861, there were 40,670 children at school, being nearly a tenth of the population. Public revenue (1861) 275,027l., arising chiefly from duties on imports, rum, stamps, and the post-office; expenditure, 274,564l.; imperial expenditure, 79,456l., exclusive of the charge for the navy; debt, 738,000l. Besides Spanish-Town, the cap., and Kingston, the chief port (between which a railway has been completed), the island contains the town Port Royal, on its S. side; and the maritime vills. Mount Luca, Montego, Falmouth, and St Ann's on its N. coast. Jamaica was discovered by Columbus in 1494, colonized by Spaniards in 1510, and taken by the English in 1655. The Maroons, originally runaway slaves, obtained a tract of land on the N. side of the island in 1738, on which they built two small towns, and, with the exception of a rebellion in 1795, have remained peaceable. In 1852, 40,000 of the pop. died of cholera; while, from 1840 to 1850, the immigrants amounted only to 14,000.

JAPAN, an empire of Eastern Asia, comprising the islands Nippon, Kiusiu, and Sikok, with the dependencies Yesso, the S. part of Tarakai or Saghalien, and many smaller islands, supposed to comprise 3850 islands, islets, or rocks, besides the dependencies of the Loo Choo Islands, 300 m. S. of Kiusiu; situated between lat. 30° 35' and 46° N., lon. 129° and 146° E., having W. the Strait of Corea and Sea of Japan, and on other sides the Pacific Ocean. Area 143,078 sq. m. Pop. estimated at from 35 to 40 millions. These islands, especially Nippon and Kiusiu, are extremely irregular in shape, their coasts greatly indented, and surface very uneven. The snow-clad mountains Fusi-yama and Siro-yama in Nippon, are active volcanoes, estimated respectively at 13,977 and 8000 feet above the sea. Rivers numerous, and generally wide at their mouths, but their courses are short, and not navigable for many miles inland. Of the lakes, the principal appears to be Biwanoumi, regarded by the Japanese with superstitious reverence. The interior of Japan remains quite unexplored by Europeans. In a country extending over 15° of lat., the climate is so varied, that almost every prov. has different products; it is in general mild and healthy, but hurricanes and earthquakes are of frequent occurrence. The soil is said to be in many parts sterile, but it is very carefully cultivated; agriculture being compulsory by sumptuary laws. Japan is a cotton producing country, and its soil is favourable to its growth. Other products are in great variety; the chief are rice, potatoes, gourds, numerous fruits common in Southern Europe, silk of excellent quality, hemp, ginger, tobacco, tea in large quantity; oak, maple, iron-wood, cypress, fir timber, varnish, camphor, soja delichos from which soy is made; gold, iron, lead, tin, copper, diamonds and other gems, coal, lime, sulphur, nitre, salt, and amber. Cattle rearing is unimportant; buffaloes and oxen are used only for draught, and sheep are scarce. Fish and coral abound on the coasts; pearls and ambergris are obtained. In some rural arts, the Japanese are unequalled; such as the dwarfing of forest trees, and raising radishes and other bulbous roots of an enormous size. In manufacturing industry, generally, they equal the Chinese, and their sword-blades and other metallic goods, telescopes, clocks, silk and cotton fabrics, porcelain, lacquered and japanned wares, and paper, are particularly excellent. Some trade is allowed with Chinese merchants, who bring broad-cloths & other woollen stuffs to Nagasaki, in return for sea-slug, copper, and lacquered wares; and the Dutch are permitted to send annually two ships to the same port with wax, camphor, spices, ivory, lead, iron-bars, quicksilver, glass wares, musk, sapan-wood, sugar, piece goods, and woollens, for which they take back copper, camphor, silk, lacquered goods, wax, pitch, wheat, and Japanese manufs. Exports (1862) silk, tea, tobacco, oil, maize, etc., to the value of 339,254*l.* Imports to the value of 254*l.* No commerce has hitherto been allowed with other foreign nations; but on 31st March 1854 a general convention of peace and amity was signed between Japan and the U. S. of N. America, by which the ports of Simoda and Nee-e-Gata were opened to the ships of the latter for trade and protection. By the treaty of Yedo, 1858, the ports of Hakodadi, Yokohama, and Nagasaki were opened to British commerce in 1859, and Yedo was to be opened 1st July 1862; but the privileges were thus conferred, as since found, in bad faith. Two centuries of peace has elevated the civilisation of the Japanese over all other extra-European nations of the old world. The law, which separates them from intercourse with other countries, has forced them to draw on their own resources, hence the empire is nearly independent of external aid,—it is a world in itself. The government is despotic, and, like some others in Asia, is shared by ecclesiastical and military sovereigns. The mikado, or lord of the dairi, or court of miako (Miako, 250 m. S.W. of Yedo), is the nominal head of the empire and ecclesiastical sovereign, has almost divine honours, and was anciently invested with all the authority; but in the 12th century, a siogun (temporal sovereign), or high military officer was appointed, one of whose successors, in 1583, assumed the rank of a second emperor: since which period the siogun has maintained the actual sway, the dairi sovereign being consulted by him only regarding relations with foreign powers. The siogun, who resides at Yedo, is assisted by a council of five hereditary princes, and by a senate which forms the legislative body, and decides in all civil and criminal cases. A kind of feudal system prevails; the princes, of whom there are about 200, governing different districts, are obliged to maintain troops in readiness to move at the order of the siogun. The executive duties are performed by seven boards,—those of taxation, commerce, public works, police, criminal justice, military affairs, and religion. Japan is divided into 8 provs., 68 depts., and 622 dists., the governors of which are termed dai-mio, “high named,” and hold their offices direct from the dairi sovereign; or sai-moi, “well-named,” and are appointed by the siogun. The laws are very rigorous; many popular rights and customs, however, appear to exist, and the Japanese are certainly less corruptly governed, and less shackled by ancient usages, than the Chinese. The ancient religion is the sin-siu, whose priests were said to be descended of the sun, but the majority of the pop. are adherents of Buddhism, introduced into Japan about the 6th century of the Christian era, though some profess the doctrines of Confucius. The Japanese are of the Mongolian race, and are stout and well made. They have a written literature, some science, and a taste for music. Their language is different from that of the Chinese.

JAVA, one of the Sunda islands, the principal of the Dutch East India Islands, between lat.  $5^{\circ} 52'$  and  $8^{\circ} 50'$  S., lon.  $105^{\circ} 15'$  to  $114^{\circ} 40'$  E., separated E. from Bali by the Strait of Bali, and W. from Sumatra by the Strait of Sunda, having N. the Sea of Java, and S. the Indian Ocean. Length, E. to W., 628 m., breadth varies from 40 to 130 m. Estimated area, including the contiguous island Madura, etc., 52,000 sq. m. P. 9,943,075, comprising Europeans; and assimilated natives, 17,285; Chinese, 125,047; Arabs, Bughis, & other Orientals, 9,790,973; Seros, 9410. The S. coast is high and steep, with few indentations. The scenery of Java is grand and picturesque: the island is traversed through all its length by two chains of mountains 1000 to 2500 feet high, which slope gently to the sea, and are crowned by volcanoes 8000 to 12,000 feet in elevation. Its N. coast is low and marshy, and lined with numerous small islands. Principal river the Solo, besides which many are navigable for several miles from the sea, or are used for floating down timber, and other raw produce from the interior. The rocks are chiefly basaltic and volcanic, and the soil is extremely fertile. Java is the granary of the Asiatic Archipelago, and is supposed to be capable of supporting many times its present amount of population, only about one-third of the surface being under culture; its temperature hot in the plains (ranging from  $85^{\circ}$  to  $94^{\circ}$ , and during night  $73^{\circ}$  to  $80^{\circ}$  Fahr.), is cooler in the elevated parts, and the highest peaks are often covered with ice. Climate healthy, except in the marshy regions of the N. Earthquakes and thunder storms are common, hurricanes rare. Rice is the principal grain, and is cultivated all along the coast, as' also in all the low grounds wherever irrigation can be effected. Coffee is the great staple of export; it is raised in most of the uplands, especially in the Preanger or Prianga regencies on the W. part of the island, and with sugar, its culture has greatly increased within the last few years. Indigo, tobacco, cotton, cinnamon, maize, and other dry grains, pulses and vegetable oils, cocoa, and sago, and a species of giant-fig, are other principal products. Java is the only island of the Eastern Archipelago of which the teak tree is a native; it grows in dense forests on the hills, and is superior to that of Pegu, though not equal to that of Malabar. Zoology comprises tigers, tiger cats, and leopards, the jackall, and rhinoceros. Buffaloes are numerous, and a small breed of horses. Black cattle and goats are common; sheep and hogs scarce. Domestic poultry are plentiful. Crocodiles and serpents abound, and fish are numerous in the adjacent seas. Minerals comprise iron, salt, sulphur, and nitre. It has manufs. of cotton fabrics, and other household necessaries. Imports comprise cottons, woollens, and other manufactured goods, wines, spirits, iron, hardware, machinery, opium, and articles of luxury. In 1862, 74 vessels (tonnage 29,000), chiefly Dutch, British, and Swedish, entered the port of Batavia. Trade with the Netherlands absorbs 5-7ths of the whole, and is chiefly carried on by the Dutch East India Company. Batavia, the cap., is the centre of at least half of the general trade. The exports of Java produce are comparatively trifling, caused by the restrictive duties charged on produce shipped to all countries excepting Holland; the chief are sugar, tea, coffee, indigo, rice, hides, tobacco, oil-cake, etc., etc., the total value in 1861, being 9,089,946l. The total imports in 1861, were worth 6,387,012l. Government administered by a governor-general, with authority over all the Dutch East India colonies, and assisted by a secretary-general, and a council of 4 members, of Dutch descent. Java is divided into 22 residences, in each of which are a European governor, and secretary, and various sub-residents. The provs. are subdivided into arrs. and communes, in each of which is a justice of the peace. Three superior tribunals and courts-martial are seated at Batavia, Samarang, and Surabaya, the whole subordinate to a supreme court at Batavia. There is complete religious toleration, and Europeans are not prevented from going to Java, though the permission of the governor-general is necessary to their settling there. Public improvements have been much extended. A good road traverses the island in its entire length; many forts have been constructed in the interior; and commercial stations planted in the S. part of the island; regular steam communication is kept up with Singapore. There are several native states in the interior, under Dutch protection, the principal caps. of which are Surakarta and Yogyacarta. Java was under Hindoo sovereignties until 1478, when it was conquered by the Arabs, and its possession has since been chiefly Mohammedan. It contains the ruins of several considerable cities and temples, the principal being Mojopahit and Borobudur, and various large structures of substantial architecture are scattered over its surface. The Javanese are of the Malay family, are short, thick-set, and robust. It is presumed that Hindoos, at an early period, settled in the island, as Hindoo monuments of antiquity are found. The religion is Mohammedan, mixed with Buddhism, three dialects, of the Malay language, are used; and they have an ancient sacred language, containing a number of Sanscrit words. They have a national literature, and translations from the Arabic and Sanscrit. The Javanese are superior in civilization to other natives of the Indian Archipelago. The Portuguese formed a settlement on it in 1511, and the Dutch in 1575. The British held the island from 1811 to 1816.

JERSEY, Cæsarea, the largest and most S.E. of the islands belonging to Great Britain, in S. of the English Channel, 15 m. W. the coast of France, (Cotentin), and 88 m. S.S.E. Portland Bill. Lat. of St Helier 49° 11' 3" N., lon. 2° 7' W. Length E. to W. 11 m., breadth 5 m. Ac. 28,717. P. (1851) 57,020; (1861) 57,080. Coasts rocky; the only considerable inlet is St Aubin's Bay, on the S. side, skirted by a sandy shore. Surface undulating, the hill ranges, consisting of granite and schist, run mostly N. to S., enclosing several fertile valleys. Climate mild. Mean annual temperature 53°; mean summer 62°-2, mean winter 42°-6, Fahr. Rainfall 27 inches. Little corn is raised, the chief products being apples; the whole isl. has the appearance of a continuous orchard. About 2000 hhd. of cider are annually exported. Cows of a small and good breed are numerous, & butter is exported. Sheep are few. Off the S.E. coast are oyster beds, fished by the islanders. Manufs. are hosiery and shoes. It has an active trade with Britain. Exports to England, chiefly cattle, potatoes, spirits, oysters, and granite, in return for cotton and woollen fabrics, hardware and cutlery, glass, soap, and earthenwares, about 20,000 tons of coal annually, and general merchandise. Foreign imports, wine, brandy, skins, fruit, poultry, timber, tallow, hemp, linens, and corn. Reg. shipping of Channel Isls. (1862) 547 sailing, and 7 steam vessels (total ton. 62,197). Steamers communicate frequently with Southampton, Weymouth, St Malo, and Granville. It has its own legislature, the "states" or insular parliament, consisting of 36 members, chosen by the inhabitants, their acts being confirmed or annulled, in special cases, by the Viscount or English governor. From the decisions of its royal court, appeal lies only to the sovereign in council. The military governor has under him usually about 300 regular troops, besides which Jersey has a militia of 2500 men, with an artillery battalion. The island is divided into 12 par., in the diocese of Winchester. Its native inhabitants speak a French patois, and preserve many Norman feudal customs, the Channel Islands having formed a part of the Norman dominions, and remained attached to England since the conquest. Principal towns, St Helier, the cap., and St Aubin.

JERSEY CITY, a town of U. S., North America, New York, at the mouth of the Hudson river, opposite New York, and 58 m. N.E. Trenton. P. (1860) 29,226. It has a lyceum, schools, manufs. of pottery and glass wares, iron works and timber yards. It is the terminus of the Philadelphia and Erie railways, and of Morris canal, and the berth of the Cunard line of Atlantic steamers. It has a central ferry with New York.

JERUSALEM, a city of U. S., North America, Illinois. P. 12,000.

JERUSALEM, Jude Et Kuds ("the Holy"), anc. Hierosolyma, a famous city of Palestine, the scene of the most important events in Scripture history, is now contained in the Turkish pashalik of Sidon. It stands near the summit and on the edge of the great central table-land which traverses the valley from N. to S., lat. 31° 45' 35" N., lon. 34° 55' 30" E. It is S.E. of Jaffa, and 18 m. from the Jordan, 2600 feet above the Mediterranean, and 2777 feet above the Dead Sea. It is

5000 Mohammedans, 3400 Christians of the Greek and Roman churches, Armenians, Copts, Syrians, and Abyssinians, 206 Protestants of the Anglican & Lutheran churches, and 7100 Jews. But during Easter every year the number is augmented by 7000 or 8000 Christian, Mohammedan, and Jewish pilgrims. The city, occupying the summit of a high bare limestone ridge, is separated from the Mount of Olives on the E. by the valley of Jehoshaphat or the "Brook Kidron," which unites with the valley of Hinnom on the S.; on the N. it is overlooked by the hill of Scopus, a prolongation of the ridge of Olivet, and the ground rises in rocky acclivities towards the W. Modern Jerusalem is about 2½ m. in circumference, enclosed by walls of hewn stone, covering an area probably equal to that of the city in the time of Hadrian, but before its destruction by Titus it was much larger. The wall, erected or restored in 1534, is crowned by battlements, and makes many angles; height 36 to 42 feet, and 4 to 5½ feet thick. It has four principal gates, facing the cardinal points, Jaffa on the W., Damascus N., St Stephens E., and Zion S. The interior of the city has a sombre, melancholy aspect, a labyrinth of narrow, dirty, ill-paved streets or lanes, many with open sewers. The heavy grey, windowless walls of the houses, each with terraced stone roofs, are relieved by only a few cupolas and minarets. The gates are closed about sunset, and there are no lamps in the streets. The city is divided into four quarters: 1. The Moslem, in the N.E., in which is the Serai or palace, close to the haram, and affording the best view of it. 2. The Christian, in which are the Latin convent on an elevated point near the N.W. angle of the city, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, the Armenian convent, the citadel, and the English church. 3. The Armenian, in the S.W. 4. The Jewish, in the S.E., the most squalid and filthy of all. The only open space is the haram area, which forms a quarter of itself, and in which is the mosque of Omar (el-haram-esh-sherif), on the site of Solomon's temple, with its noble dome, minarets, and massive walls, the pride and ornament of the city. It is considered by the Mohammedans as second in sanctity only to Mecca and Medina, and is jealously guarded. In its centre is "the Dome of the Rock," a rough mass of stone covering the summit of Mount Moriah, and the supposed site of the altar of burnt offering. In the same area is the Mosk-el-Aksa, supposed to be the basilica built by the Emperor Justinian in the middle of the 6th century. A small court adjoining the ancient wall on the S. of the haram is called the "Jews' wailing place." Here the Jews have, for centuries, been permitted, on Fridays, to approach the precincts of the temple, and to weep and pray over its desolation. The Church of the Holy Sepulchre, consisted originally of a group of building erected by order of Constantine, A.D. 326, over the reputed, but most improbable, site of the tomb of our Lord. It was all but ruined and restored at different times, and the present church dates from 1808. It is divided among many Christian communities, each striving for supremacy, and so neglecting the building that its battered dome threatens to fall in. Near it are the ruins of the Hospital of St John. Besides the Latin convent, there are those of the Greeks, Copts, and Armenians within the walls, and the vast enclosure of the Russian convent outside the walls on the N.E., now (1864) nearly completed. The Jews have many synagogues, and near the Lower Pool of Gihon a large hospital has been erected for his poorer countrymen by Sir

M. Montefiore. Outside the walls on the N. are the grotto of Jeremiah, the tombs "of the kings and of the judges," and beyond the hill of Scopus; S., near the Zion gate, the huts of the lepers, of whom there are upwards of 60, the Christian cemetery, the tomb of David, the valley of Hin-nom, hill of Evil Council, & remains of Solomon's aqueducts; S.E. the Mount of Offence, the Pool and vill. of Siloam, and the fountain of the virgin; E. the valley of Jehoshaphat, or the dry bed of the "Brook Kidron," on the W. of which is the Mussulman, and on the E. the Jewish cemetery, with the so-called tombs of Jehoshaphat, Absalom, St James, and Zacharias, the garden of Gethsemane, a small walled enclosure, with very ancient olive trees, and the tomb and chapel of the Virgin Mary. Beyond, on the E., the Mount of Olives rises steeply to the height of 2724 feet, surmounted by the Church of the Ascension; on the W. the valley of Gihon, with the lower and upper Pools, and the Turkish cemetery. The climate of Jerusalem is humid in winter & arid in summer. Mean temp. of year 66°·5 Fahr.; highest 92° in Aug., lowest 28° in Jan. Frost is common; several years pass without snow; ice is found occasionally one-eighth of an inch thick. Rain-fall 56 inches. The city is badly supplied with water. The fountain of the virgin is the only useful spring. Rain is collected in numerous cisterns; and water is conveyed in skins from Solomon's Pools, whence it is proposed to bring it by reconstructing the aqueducts. The bazaars are extensive, and well supplied with fruits, fowls, and eggs. The Jews bake very fine bread, and the European shops furnish western luxuries. Commerce is on a small scale, but there are many cabinetmakers, blacksmiths, goldsmiths, tailors, shoemakers, jewellers, and watchmakers. The city, originally taken from the Jebusites by the Hebrews under Joshua about B.C. 1400, was taken and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, B.C. 598; rebuilt by command of Cyrus, B.C. 586; again taken by Ptolemy Soter, B.C. 324, and subjugated to Egypt; afterwards held by the Maccabees; taken by Pompey, B.C. 63; and held as a Roman city under Herod, who rebuilt the temple, until its almost total destruction by the troops of Titus, A.D. 70. At this period, in the words of Pliny, it was the most famous city, not only of Palestine, but of the whole east. In A.D. 135, the Jews were finally dispersed, and the city was again rebuilt by Adrian. On the conversion of Constantine, A.D. 326, it ceased to be a heathen city, and resumed its anc. name. The Empress Helena adorned it with noble churches. It was captured by the Persians in 614, by the Saracens under Omar in 637, in 1099 by the Crusaders, under Godfrey of Bouillon, and held by the Christians for 88 years, when it was again captured by the forces of Saladin in 1187, and it has remained under Turkish government ever since, except for a short interval during 1832, when it was taken by the Egyptians under Ibrahim Pasha. It has since been the seat of a Protestant bishop, appointed alternately by the governments of Great Britain and Prussia. Most of the property of the city belongs to the mosques and the churches. The Turks govern and plunder it; the Arab, when he acquires a competency, quits it for the desert; and the Jews flock to it in order to die.

JORAT, a chain of low mountains in Switzerland, forming the Watershed, between the lakes of Neuchatel and Geneva. [JURA.]

JORDAN, "The river of Palestine," rises from springs in the mountains of Hermon and the Anti-Lebanon; its farthest source is near Has-beiya, 1700 feet above the sea, on the N.W. side of Hermon; the most copious springs are at Bania and Dan: besides these it is fed by many streams in its upper course. It flows S. ward, parallel with the Mediterranean, 24 m. to the Bahrel-Huleh (Lake Merom), a triangular basin about 4½ m. in length by 3½ m. in breadth, and 120 feet above the sea. Hence it rushes to the Lake of Galilee 10½ m., with a fall of 300 feet, but it enters the lake a slow, turbid stream 70 feet wide. From its exit at the S. of this lake, it rushes due S. to the Dead Sea down an inclined plane, broken by 27 large and many smaller rapids, at the rate of 11·8 feet in a mile, and with a course so tortuous, that in a direct distance of 6¼ m. it traverses a space of 132 m. From its rapid fall it derives the name of the "Descender." In its upper course it is pure and limpid, but below it is turbid and muddy; it varies in width from 20 to 100 yards, and in depth from 3 to 7 ft. There are now no bridges between the 2 lakes, but remains of many; and its only tributaries in that space are the Yarmük (Hieromax) and the Zurka (Jabbok), the former of which enters with a slow current 40 yards wide. The fords of Jordan, annually visited by pilgrims at Easter, the supposed place of John's baptism, are near Jericho, a few m. above its mouth in the Dead Sea. Total length of the Jordan, including Lakes Merom and Tiberias, 200 m. nearly. The scenery of the river is neither bold nor picturesque, it has no fishery, and has never been navigable; its great distinction is its bounding the Holy Land. On the E. it is walled in by the mountains of Moab. The valley of the Jordan, one of the most remarkable fissures in the globe, extends in its widest sense, from the mountains near the Orontes on the N. to the Gulf of Akaba on the S., indicating that in former times the Jordan probably flowed to the Red Sea.

KAFFA, CAFFA or FEODOSIA. [THEODOSIA.]

KAFFA, a country of E. Africa, S. of Abyssinia, between two heads of the Gojeb river, and with a cap. named Bonga. Lat. 7° N., lon. 36° 30' E.

KAFFRARIA, CAFFRARIA, or KAFFIRLAND, an extensive region of S.E. Africa, represented in old maps as extending N. to Abyssinia, but now understood to comprise the space between lat. 30° and 34° S., lon. 27° 30' and 29° 30' E., bounded E. and S. by the Indian Ocean, S.W. and W. by the Keiskama river (which separates it from the dist. Victoria), the Chumie, and the Kliss Plaats rivers, and N., indefinitely, by a chain of mountains in a direction from E. to W. Area not known. The S.E. portion of the country (called by the natives Amakosa, and inhabited by the Kosas, or Kaffirs proper) is watered by numerous streams, the chief of which are the Great Kei, Somerset, Buffalo, and Keiskama, all of which rise in the mountainous country of the interior, and flow S.E. to the Indian Ocean. Beyond these mountains on the N. is the country of the Amatembu Kaffirs, or Tambookies, the rivers of which are chiefly affluents of the Great Kei. The mountains are composed of trap-rocks. Valuable minerals are rare. Soil in many places fertile. The climate differs widely from that of the Cape Colony. Here winter is the dry season. From May to August it seldom rains. In summer the rainy season sets in with terrific thunder-storms. In spring the temperature of the plains seldom exceeds 50° Fahr.; in summer it is between 70° and 90°, and before storms it frequently rises to upwards of 100° Fahr. The Kaffirs are described as hospitable, intelligent, acute, and brave, but dishonest and superstitious. The rite of circumcision is practised by them. They are generally believed to be of the Negro race, and are of a dark-brown colour. The men are tall and active, and more handsome than the women. They have no written characters, but their language is sonorous, resembling Italian. They are simple in their habits, and live on the produce of the chase, and the milk supplied by their numerous herds. Their chief vegetable products are maize, millet, and water melons. They are passionately fond of tobacco. The Kaffirs are divided into hordes, and governed by hereditary chiefs, who exercise absolute rule. They have made many incursions into the Cape Colony, and from 1835 to 1853 frequent skirmishes occurred between them and the colonists, which led to the extension of the colony from the Keiskama to the Great Kei River, a district now called British Kaffraria, proclaimed a separate colony 30th October 1860, cap. William's Town, on the Buffalo; and, more recently, to the annexation of the new divisions of Victoria and Albert, and to the assumption of the Orange River sovereignty, since abandoned.

KAFIRISTAN or KAUFIRISTAN ("Land of the Kaffirs"), a country of Central Asia, between lat. 35° and 36° N., lon. 69° 20' and 71° 20' E., enclosed by Afghanistan, Koondooz, Badakshan and Chitral. Estimated area 7000 sq. m. It comprises a part of the S. declivity of the Hindoo Kooosh, and is traversed by affluents of the Caboo river. Its narrow but fertile valleys produce an abundance of fruits, with some wheat and millet, and feed large herds of cattle, sheep, and goats. The inhabitants, called Siah Posh, or Kaffirs ("infidels"), by their neighbours, are a remarkable race, resembling Europeans in their persons and many of their habits; they live in a rude and primitive state, and exhibit perpetual enmity towards Mohammedans, by whom their country has been repeatedly invaded, but never conquered. They are very skilful as workers in metals and wood, and are distinguished from surrounding tribes by drinking wine, sitting on raised seats, exposing their dead without burial, using a language wholly unlike the dialects of the Afghan, Mogul, Hindoo, or adjacent Asiatic nations, with the Caucasian features and complexion, and claiming to be brothers of the Feringi (Europeans). The principal vill. is said to have 500 houses; but little is really known of this region.

KASHIRA, a town of Russia, gov. and 46 m. N.N.E. Tula, on the Oka. P. 2500.

KASHMIR or CASHMERE, an extensive tract of country of Northern India, constituting the dominions of Gholab Singh, situated between lat. 32° 17' and 37° N., lon. 73° and 79° 40' E. It is separated on the N. and E. from Tibet by the Karakorum mountains; on the S. by the Punjab and the British dists. of Spiti and Lahoul; and on the W. by the Punjab and the Huzareh country. Area 25,000 sq. m. Pop. formerly estimated at 750,000; but, owing to earthquakes, cholera, and famine, it has declined to 200,000. The valley of Cashmere has an average elevation of 5500 or 6000 ft. above the sea. Several mountains around it rise to 15,000 feet, and one in E. Cashmere reaches to 19,650 feet in height. The country is well watered by the Jhelum river and its tributaries. There are 10 or 12 passes through the mountains, four of which are practicable at all times of the year. The Pir Panjal Mountains are of basalt, and limestone and marble are common, but primary rocks rare, and few metals or important minerals. There are three lakes in the valley of Cashmere connected with the Jhelum river. Snow covers the country for five winter months, but the temperature then is seldom much below the freezing-point. Rain falls copiously in spring and early summer. The summer heat varies from 75° to 85° Fahr. Earthquakes are common; in 1828, 1200 persons perished by one. The soil on the basis of the mountains and valley is a rich loam, with sub-soil of clay. Rice is the principal crop; wheat, maize, millet, barley, melons, cucumbers, and other European fruits and vegetables, tobacco, cotton, oil-seeds, and Indian hemp are also raised. The water-lily and water-nut (trapa bispinosa) grow in abundance. Bees, kept in hives constructed in the houses, produce excellent honey. The natives are of a tall robust frame of body, with manly features; the women full-formed and handsome, with aquiline nose and features, resembling the Jewish. The language is a dialect of Sanscrit with a mixture of Persian. The country abounds in monuments. The staple wealth of Cashmere long consisted in its shawls, woven from the inner hair or down of tame and wild goats and sheep, fed on the table-land of Tibet, and which article is imported by way of Le, in Little Tibet. Some years ago the annual value of the shawls manufactured in Cashmere was estimated at 300,000l.; but the amount has since greatly declined, owing to the inferiority of the manufacture. Attempts were made by the Maharajah in 1864 to revive the trade. Other manufs. are lacquered wares in great variety, leather, saddlery, paper, attar of roses, cutlery, glass-wares, and articles in rock-crystal and chalcodony. Inhabitants mostly Mohammedans. Principal towns, Serinagar or Cashmere, Chapinian, Islamabad, and Pampur. It is considered a holy land by Hindoos; and it has numerous Buddhist antiquities. In 1586 the country was conquered by the Mogul Emperor Akbar. In 1752 it was subjugated by the Afghans, and remained under their sway till it fell into the power of the Sikhs in 1819, from which time till 1845 it was ruled by a governor of the Maharajah of the Punjab. Towards the end of 1845, the Sikh army invaded part of the British territory, which led to hostile operations, and resulted in the occupation of Lahore by the British, when a treaty was concluded, by which, as indemnification for the expenses of the war, the hill country between the Beas and the Indus, including the prov. of Kashmere, was ceded to the British, who transferred the larger portion to Gholab Singh, in independent possession for a pecuniary equivalent. By terms of the treaty, the supremacy of the British is acknowledged by Gholab Singh, who is bound to assist them with troops under certain contingencies, and in return, aid is to be given him in resisting his enemies. An excellent survey of this beautiful valley has been lately completed as part of the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India. [SERINAGUR.]

KILDARE, an inland co. of Ireland, Leinster, having N. Meath, E. the cos. Dublin and Wicklow, S. Carlow, and W. King's and Queen's cos. Ac. 418,436, of which 356,787 are arable. P. (1861) 90,946. Surface mostly flat. Chief rivers are the Boyne, Barrow, and Liffey. Climate moist, owing to the prevalence of bogs. Soil mostly a deep and fertile loam; and the Curragh of Kildare, a tract in its centre, is scarcely to be matched for the excellence of its turf and rich verdure. Chief crops, wheat, oats, and barley. The best English breeds of cattle have been introduced. Minerals and manufs. unimportant.

The principal trade is in corn and flour, the export of which is facilitated by the river Barrow, and Royal and Grand canals and their branches, which connect the co. with Dublin, Waterford, and the Shannon. Peat is exported from the county to Dublin. The Great S. W. Railway intersects the co., which contains 14 baronies and 116 pas. in the dioceses of Kildare and Dublin, and the Roman Catholic college of Maynooth. Principal towns, Athy, Kildare, and Naas. It sends two members to House of Commons.

KILKENNY, an inland co. of Ireland, Leinster, having N. Queen's co., E. the cos. Carlow and Wexford, S. and S.W. Waterford, and W. Tipperary. Ac. 509,732, of which 470,102 are arable. P. (1851) 138,775, (1861) 110,341, mostly Roman Catholics. Surface slightly undulating, with a slope towards the S., where several summits rise to 1000, and Mount Brandon is 1696 feet in elevation. Chief rivers, the Nore, Barrow, and Suir. Soil various, but for the most part light fertile loams resting on limestone, with little bog. Near Kilkenny a valuable black marble is quarried. Climate drier and crops earlier than in the average of Irish counties. Rainfall 33 inches. Chief crops wheat, barley, oats, and potatoes. In 1862, there were 182,751 ac. under crop. Dairy and sheep farms are numerous. The breeds of stock are mostly native. Anthracite coal abounds, and black marble is found. The manufs. of woollens and linens, which long flourished here, have now materially declined. The principal export is grain. Two crossing lines of railway intersect this co.; and navigable rivers & the Grand Canal furnish facilities for transport to all parts of Ireland. Kilkenny is divided into 10 baronies and 143 parishes in the dioceses of Ossory, Leighlin, and Cashel. It sends three members to the House of Commons, two for the co. and one for its chief town.

KILKENNY, a city, parl. and municipal bor. of Ireland, Leinster, cap. co. of same name, on the S.E. Railway, 62 m. S.W. Dublin. It also communicates by a branch with the Great S. and Western Railway. Ac. of city 921. P. of city (1851) 19,973; do. (1861) 14,174, mostly Roman Catholics. It is divided by the river into the Irish and English towns. Streets paved with black marble quarried in the vicinity. Chief buildings, the cathedral of St Canice or Kenny, and of the diocese of Ossory, the bishop's palace, chapter-house, deanery, a round tower, the churches of St John and St Mary, several Roman Catholic churches, one of which, a cathedral, has been recently built, co. court-house, co. and city prisons, infirmary, fever hospital, union workhouse, and barracks. Public institutions comprise a college or grammar school, several other public schools, a lunatic asylum, almshouses, a library, and news-room. It has marble works, an extensive provision trade, distilleries, tanneries, breweries, and flour mills. Kilkenny sends one member to the House of Commons.

KIRGHIZ COUNTRY, an extensive region of Central Asia, between Orenburg and the Sea of Aral, embracing all the N. parts of Turkestan between lat. 44° and 52° N., lon. 52° and 80° E., partly independent, and partly comprised in the Russian governments Orenburg & Akmolinsk, having E. Chinese Empire, W. the Caspian Sea, and S. the khanats, Khokan, Bokhara, and Khiva. Area of K. of Siberia, 309,230 sq. m. P. 277,451. Area of K. of Orenburg, 369,010 sq. m. P. 600,000. Surface, 205 to 901 feet above the sea, is traversed by many mountain chains, but it chiefly consists of barren plains, abounding in salt lakes, some nearly 100 m. in length, and into which the principal rivers pour themselves. Climate remarkable for variability, and destructive hurricanes are frequent. The pop. is almost wholly nomadic, and rude in the extreme, their principal occupation being the rearing of sheep, goats, horses, and camels. Some land on river-banks tilled for millet, rye, and barley, especially in the S. or Kara-kalpack country; and seals, sturgeons, etc., are taken in the lakes. Some domestic weaving, and manufs. of hair cordage, soap, leather, and iron wares are carried on; but this region may be considered as the headquarters of barbarism in Asia, nearly all the manufactured goods and necessaries being derived from the adjacent countries, in exchange for cattle, hides, horns, and wool. The Kirghiz are of the Mongol race, and separated into the so-named Great, Little, and Middle hordes, who are again subdivided into numerous tribes, each having its own khan or chief. Their religion is a compound of Islamism and idolatry. There are no towns in the territory, and the apparent remains of any such, or of temples, are certainly the vestiges of a previous race of inhabitants, much more advanced in civilisation than the present occupants.

KIRIA or KERREA, a town of Chinese Turkestan, 138 m. E. Khotan. Lat. 37° N.; lon. 82° 50' E. It has trade with Yarkand, to which it exports silk, gold-dust, and raisins; and caravans from the Russian frontier bring to it broad cloths, brocades, steel, and furs, in exchange for tea, rhubarb, and sal-ammoniac. Near it are gold mines wrought by the Chinese government.

KIRILOV, a town of Russia, gov. and 265 m. E.N.E. Novgorod. P. 2163. It is surrounded by lakes, and owes its name to a convent founded by St Kiril in 1398; it has a cathedral, churches, and a valuable library. A canal near it unites the basins of the Volga and N. Dwina, through the Shekna and Suchona rivers.—Kirilovsk is a town, cap. circ., gov. and W. Ekaterinoslav.

Ac. of pa. 1248. P. (1861) 6100; do. of parl. bor. 10,841. Erected a royal burgh by Charles I. in 1644. The town, which formerly consisted of one long street running parallel with and close to the sea-beach, has been of late years extending in breadth, and some handsome villas have been built on the N.: it is lighted by gas, and has a fair supply of water. Corp. revenue (1862) 716l. It has a town-hall and corn exchange, several branch and savings banks, Free, Episcopal, United Presbyterian, Baptist, Independent, and Berean churches, burgh and other schools. The corn market, one of the earliest stock markets in Scotland, is held on Saturday. It has extensive and various manufs., flax and jute spinning mills, power-loom factories, dye-works, and bleachfields, iron foundries, roperies, tanneries, flour-mills, brick and tile works, a naphtha work, a floor-cloth factory, etc. In its vicinity are considerable coal-fields, lime-works, and nursery grounds. The trade of the port is chiefly in importation of flax, timber, guano, and grain. The exports are of coal, manufactured goods, and yarns; value (1862) 55,330l. Reg. vessels (1862), sailing 66, 5949 tons; steam 2, 121 tons. Entered the port, 686, 52,749 tons; cleared 1517, 117,080 tons. The harbour is tidal, but has a wet dock. The jurisdiction of the port extends over 52 m. of coast, from Aberdour to St Andrews. Customs revenue (1862) 11,177l. Raith, Dunnikier, and Dysart grounds are in the vicinity of the town.

KIRKCUDBRIGHT, a royal parl. bor., seaport town, and pa. of Scotland, cap. co., on the estuary of the Dee, 6 m. above its junction with the Solway Firth, 23 m. S.W. Dumfries. Area of pa. about 22 $\frac{1}{2}$  sq. m. P. (1861) 3395; within parl. boundaries 2552; parl. and munic. constituency 125. It has a pa. Free, and United Presbyterian churches, and Roman Catholic chapel; a mechanics' institute with library and reading-room, and large hall above (one of the finest rooms in the S. of Scotland); two banks, with handsome offices; a county-hall, a gaol, and a custom-house. A railway connects it with the rest of Scotland by Castle-Douglas. The Dee is spanned by a magnificent viaduct at Tongland. A life-boat station. It has long been noted for its schools, education being very cheap. The scenery around is very beautiful. The Dee is noted for salmon. Although the harbour is the best in the S. of Scotland, the town has but little trade beyond the employment of a few cotton-loom, some ship-building, export of agricultural produce, and imports of coal, etc. A steamer communicates with Liverpool. Sheriff courts are held. The ruin of the old castle of Lords of Kirkcudbright stands in the middle of the town, which gives it a fine appearance. About a mile from Kirkcudbright is St Mary Isle, the beautiful seat of the Earl of Selkirk, where are some of the largest trees in the country; rendered famous by the landing of Paul Jones. The town is well and regularly built; wide, clean streets; well lighted with gas, and well supplied with water; and there are many beautiful villas around the town. It has a "free school," where a great number of children are educated, endowed by one of the inhabitants, called the "Johnston Free School." It unites with Dumfries, Annan, Lochmaben, and Sanguhar, in sending 1 member to House of Commons.

Three summits of the Ruldung mountains, between the Tidung and the Buspa, have the following elevations:—the Conical Peak, 21,000 feet; Cloudy Peak, 19,990 feet; and the Spiry Peak, 18,086 feet. South of these, and dividing Koonawur on the N. from Ghurwhal and Bussahir on the S., is the Indo-Gangetic range, the principal summits of which vary from 17,000 to 19,500 feet in height, and which is crossed by several passes. On the northern frontier, between the rivers Sutlej and Li, the summit reaches 22,488 feet above the sea. These mountains are unlike in their general appearance, the N.W. being rugged and well wooded, whilst the opposite side is scantily supplied with timber, but affords rich pasturage. In summer, the temperature is often oppressively hot in the valley of the Sutlej, in consequence of the radiation of heat from the enclosing rocks. The grape grows well here. Winter is very rigorous, and so much snow falls that the inhabitants are confined to the villages. Grain produced is insufficient for the supply of the population, who live on horse chestnuts in times of scarcity. Chief crops, rice, wheat, millet, barley, potatoes, peas, beans, turnips, and fruit. Great care is bestowed on rearing the bee for its honey. The manufactures are blankets, woollen caps, and coarse woollen shoes, with leather soles. There is considerable commercial intercourse between Koonawur, Hindostan, Chinese Tartary, and Ladakh, in silks, cottons, spices, dye-stuffs, drugs, broadcloth, and hardwares from Britain, sugar, treacle, and butter, the fine wool of goats and sheep, tea and borax, salt, gold and silver. Zoology comprises panthers, black and white bears, wild dogs, birds of various plumage, and snakes are numerous. The superstitious belief of the population is Brahminism in the S., Lamaic Buddhism in the N., and in the centre, a mixture of the two systems. In Koonawur five separate dialects are spoken.

LABRADOR, a vast peninsula of British North America, between lat. 49° and 63° N., lon. 55° and 79° W., bounded on 3 sides by the Gulf of St Lawrence, N. Atlantic, Hudson Strait and

Bay, and approximately on the S.W. by the Rupert, Mistassini, and Bersiamits rivers. Area about 42,000 sq. m., equal to the British Isles, France, and Prussia combined. It is very thinly peopled by nomadic bands of Montagnais, Nasquapee, and Mistassini Indians, and the northern coasts by wandering Esquimaux. This immense region is quite unfit for the abode of civilised man, and though once rich in fur-bearing animals & in cariboo or reindeer, it is now almost a desert. The peninsula is divided into three parts, supposed to be separated by watersheds: the area draining into the St Lawrence belongs to Canada; that drained by the Atlantic is called Labrador, and is under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland; and the remainder, draining into Hudson Bay, is called East Main. The Moisis, or Great River, rises in lakes and swamps in Eastern Canada, and enters the Gulf of St Lawrence in lon. 66° 10' W. It has always been the leading line of communication between the coast and the interior, and in its course presents gigantic cascades and rapids. The table-land in the interior is eminently sterile; cariboo moss covers the rocks, and stunted spruce, birch, and aspen grow in the ravines. It is strewn with immense numbers of boulders, which are perched on the summits of the hills. Climate severe, but less foggy than Newfoundland. Temperature of summer 85° Fahr.; winter 80° below zero. The whale, cod, salmon, and herring fisheries off Labrador employ, during the season, about 1000 decked vessels. Much of the produce is sent to Newfoundland before being exported to Europe. Total annual value of produce in fish, oil, etc., estimated at 600,000l. The European settlements, all on the E. coast, consist of Forteau and Bradore Bays, Anse, le Blanc, and the Moravian mission stations Nain, Okhak, Hopdale, and Hebron.

Here are many large and handsome mosques & Hindoo temples, and around it for many miles are extensive Mohammedan ruins, with the fine tomb of the Emperor Jehangire, and the garden of Shah Jehan. It has well supplied markets, and a citadel, containing the palace of the Sikh sovereigns. Under the Mogul emperors, the city was of much greater extent. In 1748, it fell into the hands of Ahmed Shah; in 1798, Runjeet Singh was invested governor and rajah. After the final defeat of the Sikhs, in 1849, the city was taken possession of by the British. In the fort are preserved the hair, sandals, and staff of Mohammed, brought by Timur to India, and long held by Runjeet Singh, who refused a lac of rupees for one of the sandals.

It has a government school with (1863) 500 pupils. The upper class is devoted to the sons of natives of rank. A railway from Lahore to Umritsir was opened in 1862, and another to Mooltan, 206 m., with an extension to the steamer wharf on the Chenab, 118 m., in 1864.

LANCASHIRE, a maritime and palatine co. of England, having N. Cumberland and Westmoreland, E. Yorkshire, S. Cheshire, and W. the Irish Sea, an arm of which, running up into co. Westmoreland, divides it into two unequal parts. Area 1806 sq. m., or 1,219,221 ac., of which about 850,000 are estimated to be grass and arable. P. (1851) 2,031,236, (1861) 2,429,440. Surface rugged and mountainous in the N., where Conistone Fell rises to 2577 feet above the sea, and on the E. border, where the long ridge, popularly called "The Backbone of England," separates the co. from York; elsewhere generally level. Often deficient in trees, and in a few parts containing extensive bogs or mosses. Principal rivers, the Duddon, Lune, Wyre, Ribble, Mersey, and Irwell. Besides Conistone Lake, Windermere is partly in this co. Climate mild, but very humid. Rain-fall at Liverpool Observatory, 30 inches. Carboniferous sandstone and new red sandstone, with limestone, form the principal strata of the co. Soil among the hills moorish or peaty, in the lower district mostly a fertile sandy loam. Oats and potatoes extensively grown in the N. Dairy and hay farms more numerous than arable. Horticulture is pursued on a large scale. The most important mineral is coal, to the abundance of which the co. mainly owes its manufacturing eminence. The Lancashire coal-field is estimated to extend over nearly 400 sq. m. Copper also occurs, and iron is abundant. For some notice of the immense cotton and other manufs. of this co., which are the most extensive and important on the globe, and for the vast commerce which, notwithstanding the inferior character of the harbours, these manufs. create, see the articles on its chief towns, MANCHESTER, PRESTON, BOLTON, OLDHAM, WIGAN, BURY, CLITHEROE, ASHTON, WARRINGTON, ROCHDALE, BLACKBURN, CHORLEY, LANCASTER, and LIVERPOOL. Railways connect these towns with the manufacturing districts of Yorkshire, and all other parts of England and Scotland, as do the Bridgewater, Leeds, and Liverpool, and numerous other canals. The co. is divided into 770 pas., and was formerly included in the diocese of Chester, but Manchester is now a bishop's see. It sends 27 members to the House of Commons, 5 for the co., and 22 for its cities and towns. LAWRENCE (GULF OF St), a large inlet of the Atlantic, North America, between lat. 46° and 52° N., lon. 58° and 65° W., surrounded by the British colonial territories of Lower Canada, New Brunswick, Cape Breton, and Newfoundland. The two last mostly shut it off on the E. from the ocean, with which it communicates by three passages, the most N. being the Strait of Belleisle, and the S. the Gut of Canso. Average length and breadth 280 miles each. On its W. side are the Bays of Chaleur and Miramichi, and the estuary of the St Lawrence river. It contains Anticosti, Prince Edward, the Magdalen, and many other islands. Its fisheries are highly important.

LAWRENCE (St), an important river of North America, forming part of the N. boundary of the U. S., and watering the finest portion of British America, has its remotest sources in the western tributaries of Lake Superior. One of these, the St Louis, in lat. 47° 45' N., lon. 93° W., flows E., and enters the S.W. extremity of that lake. Passing through the chain of great lakes, it leaves Lake Ontario at Kingston; here it takes the name of the Iroquois, and flowing N.E. forms the wide expanses called Lakes St Francis, St Louis, and St Peter. It is first called St Lawrence after passing Montreal. Below Quebec it forms a broad estuary, and it enters the Gulf of St Lawrence at Gaspé Point, by a mouth 100 m. wide. Length from Lake Ontario to the Gulf 750 m., entire length 2150 m. The basin of the St Lawrence is estimated to contain 297,000 sq. m., of which 94,000 are covered with the waters of the great lakes. The river proper receives many important tributaries, namely, the Ottawa, St Maurice, and Saguenay from the N., and the Richlieu, St Francis, and Chaudière from the S. The tide rises to the district of Three Rivers. Ships of the line ascend to Quebec, and vessels of 600 tons to Montreal. The navigation is continued hence by canals to Kingston on Lake Ontario, Lake Erie, and even to Lake Superior.

LEBANON ("the White Mountain," Libanus), a mountain range of Syria and N. Palestine. The W. range begins on the S. at the ravine of the Litany (anc. Leontes), runs N.E. to the Nahr-el-Kebir, which flows round its N. end. Mean height 6000 to 8000 feet (highest point 10,050 feet). The peak of Sunnin, on the parallel of Beyрут, is 8555 feet, el Jurd 5760 feet, Jeb-el-Kunciyiseh 6825 feet, and the vill. of Bhamdun 3330 feet above the sea. Snow lies on the summits all summer. The central ridge, of Jura lime-stone, has smooth sides and bare tops, and the scenery is of the wildest and grandest description. Every available spot is cultivated up to 6000 feet with fig trees, olives, mulberry trees, and patches of grain. Villages and convents cling on the sides of the cliffs, or are perched on the rocks in picturesque confusion. Many streams of classic fame rush down to the Mediterranean. The recesses are haunted by the jackal, hyena, wolf, and bear. The Cedars of Lebanon, the wreck of a noble forest, occupy a platform in the centre of a vast recess in the mountains. The E. slopes of the range are tame and infertile. On the S. the descent is abrupt to the plain of Coele-Syria (modern Bukà'a), 2500 feet above the sea. The N. half of the range is peopled by Maronite Christians, a hardy and industrious race, the S. by the warlike Druses. Lebanon was assigned to, but never occupied by, the Israelites. The chain of Anti-Libanus rises in the plateau of Bashan, runs N. to Hermon, the highest peak (9383 feet); the next, near the vill. of Blud'an, is 7000 feet. Mean height 5000 feet. The mountains are barren, with grey cliffs and rounded summits, relieved by patches of dwarf oak and juniper. The W. slopes descend steeply to the Bukà'a, the E. to the plain of Damascus, to which the Pharpar and Abana flow. The range is thinly peopled (pop. estimated, during French occupation 1860, at 487,000, comprising Maronites, Mussulmans, Greek schismatics, Metuali Druses, Greek Christians, and Israelites), and abounds in wild beasts, eagles, vultures, and herds of gazelles.

LEEDS, a parl. and munic. bor., and the principal woollen manufacturing town of England, co. York,

West Riding, situated on the N. side of the Aire, across which it communicates with its suburbs Holbeck and Hunslet by 5 bridges, 27 m. N. Sheffield. Area of bor. and par., which are co-extensive and more than 7 m. in length and breadth, 22,974 ac. Pop. of munic. and parl. bor. (1851) 172,270, (1861) 207,153. The town lies chiefly in a crescent-shaped valley & the township is about  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. broad, and extends nearly 3 m. in length from E. to W. Alt. 106 feet. It has several good and spacious thoroughfares. The district on the W. is new, and inhabited by the wealthier classes. The pop. on this side of the town is increasing very rapidly, and new streets and roads are being set out by most of the owners of property in this locality. Manufs. comprise woollens, iron works, worsted, silks, potteries, glass wares, dye works, flax-spinning, and leather. Principal edifices are: the town-hall, built from designs by Cuthbert Brodric, Esq., which was opened by Her Majesty, 7th Sept. 1858; it is a rectangular pile of 250 by 200 ft., standing on an elevated platform, and presenting 4 handsome façades enriched with Corinthian columns; the roof of the Victoria Hall in the centre is 95 ft. high, and the S. entrance is surmounted by a square tower and dome of 225 ft. high;—the commercial buildings, with news and concert rooms; the central market; the free and south markets; corn exchange; court-house; cavalry barracks, with a parade ground occupying 11 or 12 acres; rifle corps parade grounds and orderly rooms; the hall of the literary and philosophical society, comprising a spacious lecture, theatre, and museum rooms well stocked; 3 theatres; music hall; assembly rooms; public baths; and infirmary. A site for a new infirmary has just been purchased, and the first stone of a new building, from designs by George Gilbert Scott, Esq., R.A., was laid March 29th, 1864. The building alone is to cost 64,750*l.*; but with the expense of the site and palisades, streets and boundary walls, the total cost will amount to 106,000*l.* The Bank of England has also just completed a very handsome erection for its branch in Leeds. There is a borough gaol here, completed in 1847 at a cost of 40,000*l.*, in the castellated style, and second to none of its class in the kingdom. There are now 36 churches in the parish, and numerous dissenting places of worship; a Roman Catholic church, and also a magnificent cathedral, which is available for use, though for want of funds the details have not been all carried out. The grammar school, which is a branch of a munificent charity left by Mr Harrison, has a revenue of 1675*l.* a year; it is situated on the edge of Woodhouse Moor, an open piece of ground of above 60 acres in extent, belonging to the corporation; the scholars from this school have a preference in the election to 4 scholarships at Magdalen college, Cambridge, and to an exhibition in Queen's college, Oxford. There are several almshouses in the town, of which the Harrison almshouses, as well as St John's Church, which is a very rich foundation, were established and endowed by the liberality of Mr John Harrison. There are also many national, infant, and Sunday schools, public and subscription libraries, the school of arts, and mechanics' institute. The infirmary has an annual income of nearly 5000*l.* Other medical charities are the fever hospital, and the hospital for women and children (both possessing elegant and imposing buildings), the eye and ear infirmary, and public dispensary. In connection with these charities is a school of medicine of high repute. The Leeds workhouse is a magnificent and extensive building. The charitable endowments are estimated to produce in all nearly 7000*l.* a year. Four exhibitions of 50*l.* each per annum, tenable for four years, are given to those boys who, having attended the Leeds grammar school for four years, are proceeding to Cambridge, Oxford, or Durham. Among the buildings in the town may be mentioned the white and coloured cloth halls, in which the sales from the manufacturers to the merchants are effected; although extensive buildings, they do not present an imposing appearance externally. In connection with the Leeds water-works is the store reservoir at Eccup (about 6 m. N. of Leeds), covering 50 acres and containing 257 millions of gallons; there are also service reservoirs at Weetwood and Woodhouse Moor of 10 and 6 acres, and holding respectively 28 and 5 millions of gallons. The position of Leeds, on the edge of an extensive coal-field, and having communication with the sea by the river Aire, and with the Mersey at Liverpool, and the Humber at Goole, by means of canals, and to all parts of the country by railways, has led to its eminence in woollen manufacture. Its principal fabrics consist of the finest broadcloths, kerseymeres, swan-down, and beavers; in addition, carpets, blankets, camlets, and shalloons are woven, and large quantities of unfinished stuffs are brought from Bradford and Halifax to be finished. Linen yarn, canvas, sacking, and linen cloth are the chief flaxen goods produced. The factories for machinery, chemical works, glass houses, potteries, leather tanneries, tobacco mills, and soap works are extensive. But in the last few years the working of iron has taken such a stride, as almost to vie in importance with the woollen manufacture; and this circumstance, combined with the fact that so many and such varied works are in full and vigorous operation, has secured for Leeds a healthy and prosperous progress among the recent vicissitudes and depression of some of her trades. Leeds is divided into 12 wards, and governed by a mayor, recorder, 16 aldermen, and 48 burgesses. Corp. rev. 23,005*l.* Government have lately been induced to sanction the holding of assizes for the West Riding in the Leeds town-hall, and the summer assizes for 1864 were held there for the first time. Leeds has riding and borough quarter sessions, and petty sessions, a county court, a district court of bankruptcy; and since 1832 it returns 2 members to Parliament. Reg. elect. (1864) 7616.

Lat. of fort, 55° 58' 9" N.; lon. 3° 10' 5" W. Area of pas., South Leith 2265 ac. North Leith 517 ac. Pop. of Leith (1821) 26,000 (1841) 25,984, (1851) 30,670, (1861) 33,628. Leith communicates with, and its houses almost join to those of, Edinburgh, by means of Leith Walk, and by branch lines of the railways connected with Edinburgh. The town is situated on low-lying ground adjoining the Firth, and consists of one old narrow street in the centre, with numerous lanes on each side, and some newer and more spacious streets, forming the continuation of Leith Walk, on the E., to which adjoin the links or meadows. Chief edifices, the exchange buildings and assembly room, town-hall, custom-house, new corn exchange, high school; a public library with 10,000 vols., and a mechanics' do. with 7000 vols., 7 branch banks, gaol and Trinity house. The charitable institution are: John Watt's hospital, erected 1862, Leith hospital and humane society, ragged industrial school erected 1862, and female asylum for incurables. Leith anciently consisted of two parishes South Leith, originally Restalrig, and extending to, and comprehending part of the Calton of Edinburgh, with an ancient church, a high school, and endowed Bell's school; and North Leith, comprehending also a portion of the West Church parish of Edinburgh, and the vill. of Newhaven. It has a modern church, a mariners' church, two quoad sacra pas., Free, United Presbyterian, Independent, Wesleyan Methodist, Episcopalian, & Roman Catholic churches. Leith fort,  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. W. of the custom-house, is an artillery station. The harbour (outside of which is a martello tower) has, by successive erections of two piers, with a lighthouse on each, been extended upwards of a mile into the Firth, and has been deepened, so as to range from 15 to 20 feet at high water, but is dry at low water. There are two wet docks, each 250 yards in length, and 100 yards in breadth, with basin of 10 acres extent, capable of containing 150 vessels, and extensive bonded warehouses. The Victoria dock has a steam crane. New wet docks on a magnificent scale, to cover an area of 62 acres, at an expense of 223,000*l.*, are now (1864) in course of construction, and a large tract of land is to be reclaimed from the sea; six graving docks, one recently finished, 400 feet long, 80 wide, and 24 feet deep at spring tides. Across the Water of Leith are three drawbridges, one of which is for the N. B. Railway, and a stone bridge. Registered vessels (1862) sailing 131, tons 23,828; steam 54, tons 12,548. Entered 3020, tons 529,259; cleared 1741, tons 401,411. Customs rev. (1862)

466,494. Exports 1,298,099. Corp. rev. (1863) 617. Annual value of property 150,642. The chief commerce of Leith consists in its colonial and foreign trade, and imports of grain. It is the great emporium for grain in Scotland. In 1861 the imports were 749,549 qrs.; and in 1863, 930,204 qrs. The other chief imports are wine, oil, flax, and wool. It has steam communication with Hamburg, Dunkirk, Rotterdam, Copenhagen, St Petersburg, Oporto, London, Hull, Newcastle, Berwick, and the North of Scotland. Its manufactures consist chiefly of glass-making and glass-staining, rope and sail-making, artificial manures, candle and soap-making, printing ink and printing machinery, preserved provisions, iron ship-building, iron-founding, and machine-making. The Leith flour-mills are the most extensive and complete in the country. Fish-curing is an important branch of industry. Until 1832, when it was erected into a parliamentary burgh, Leith was dependent upon, and governed by, the city of Edinburgh, to which it formed the port. In early times its prosperity, then considerable, was often checked by warlike conflicts; in 1541 the town was burnt by an English fleet; in 1549 it was taken possession of by the French troops, who came to the assistance of Mary of Guise. Cromwell repaired its fortifications. It is the birthplace of the Rev. Geo. Wishart, and of Hugo Arnot, author of "History of Edinburgh." It is now governed by a provost, 4 bailies, and 10 councillors. Along with Portobello and Musselburgh, it sends one member to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1863) 1846. [GRANTON—NEUHAUSEN.]

LIBERIA, an independent Negro republic of Western Africa, established 1823, extends along the coast of Guinea, between lat. 4° 50' and 7° N., lon. 6° 50' and 12° 39' W. Its seaboard extends from the Shehar river in the N.W., to the San Pedro in the Gulf of Guinea, 500 m., including the colony of Cape Palmas, with an average breadth of 40 m. A chain of mountains rises above 3° from the shore, separating it from the basin of the Niger and the tribes of the interior. Area 20,000 sq. m. P. (1863) 500,000, belonging to all nationalities of Africa. The climate has improved greatly by a systematic drainage and clearance of woods. In general the immigrants from America are sent into the interior, where the soil is better and the climate more healthy than on the coast. Thus have been established Carysburg, White Plains, and other stations. Exports, palm oil, camphor, ivory, gold-dust, coffee, indigo, ginger, arrow-root, and hides. Cocoa and sugar thrive, and it is expected that cotton will soon become an extensive export. Mandingo horses and native cattle are used for draught, but much of the camwood exported is brought 200 m. from the interior on men's backs. It is estimated that 2,000,000 inhabitants of the interior now obtain supplies of European goods from the republic and Cape Palmas; and that the Liberians exercise Christian influence over 480,000 natives. The church of Liberia was reorganized in 1862. Liberia, formerly a dependency of the United States, was recognised as an independent republic in July 1848. Government vested in a president, vice-president, and a senate of 6 members, & house of representatives of 28 members, elected by all possessors of a real estate to the value of 30 dollars. English is the official language, and that of the negroes from the United States. All are Protestants—Popery being proscribed. The state is well supplied with churches and schools. The number of immigrants from the United States, from 1820 to 1856, was 9562, of whom 3676 were free-born. The seaport and cap. is Monrovia. The other chief settlements are Bexley, Edina, and Cresson, the latter situated on a fine bay, and affording abundant supplies of wood and water.

LIVERPOOL, a parl. and munic. bor. of England, co. Lancaster, hundred W. Derby, on the E. bank of the Mersey estuary, about 4 m. from the Irish Sea, 185 m. N.W. London. Lat. of observatory, 53° 24' 8" N., lon. 0° 12' 11" W. Area of bor., comprising with Liverpool parish the townships of Kirkdale, Everton, part of the township of West Derby, and of the extra-parochial place of Toxteth Park. Ac. 5002. P. (1831) 205,964; (1841), 286,487; (1851), 375,955; (1861), 443,874. Mean temp. 50°·8; winter 41°·3; summer 61°·1 Fahr. It extends 5 m. in length, by about 2½ m. in greatest breadth, over gently rising ground. The highest point within the bor. being about 227 feet above the quay wall of the river. Though irregularly laid out, it has many broad, straight, and handsome thoroughfares. Along the shore there is a line of docks and basins of nearly 5 m. in extent, having an aggregate water area of 245 ac. 1511 yards, and a quay space of nearly 18 m. in extent. Among the largest of the docks are, the Brunswick, Queen's, King's, Albert, Salthouse, Canning, George's, Prince's, Waterloo, Victoria, Trafalgar, Clarence, Nelson, Bramley, Moore, Wellington, Huskisson, Sandon, Canada, Salisbury, Collingwood, and Stanley. The three last are connected with the Leeds and Liverpool canal, and most of the others have half-tide locks and wet basins. There are 18 graving docks, with a total bottom length of 10,593 feet, and 7 griddons, measuring altogether 1123 ft. 6 inches in length. The number of ships that entered the port in 1851 was 21,071; aggregate tonnage 3,787,666; dock dues, 269,020l.; custom receipts, 3,510,033l., after a reduction of 88½ per cent. from the rates of 1836, 33 per cent. from those of 1844—on the tonnage dues on East India voyages, or 18 per cent. on the aggregate foreign dues,—and again a further reduction in 1848 equal to 40,000l. on the gross income. Total value of foreign exports in 1850 amounted to nearly 35,000,000l., and the foreign exports 37,404,400l. In 1861 the tonnage of vessels frequenting the port was 4,977,272, but owing to the American war it has suffered a reduction, the number of vessels in 1863 having been 20,696, the tonnage 4,809,778, the dock dues 399,750l. The rapid increase of the commerce of the port is seen by contrasting the extent of dock room, and the amount of shipping tonnage and revenue above stated, with the corresponding items in 1836, when they were as follow:—Ac. 111; shipping, 12,537; tonnage, 1,592,436; revenue, 183,455l. Warehouse room attached to the docks is wanting; the Albert and Stanley docks being as yet the only two that have warehouses attached, and most of the imported goods have to be placed in private warehouses; but this want is now being liberally supplied. The London and N.W. Railway has a terminus on the high ground of the town at Edge Hill, and from thence three branches through tunnels run, one to the centre of the town for general traffic, and one to the north and south docks respectively, for goods. And there is now in course of formation from the same line, another branch to the N. shore. The East Lancashire, the Lancashire and Yorkshire, and the Liverpool and Southport lines join, and have a goods' station near the docks, in Great Howard Street, and a general station in Thebarn Street, near the exchange; and in connection with them, a high level branch to the docks for coaling steam vessels. The Great Northern, the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincoln, and the Great Western will, in the course of a short time, all have access and station accommodation in Liverpool. Liverpool is supplied with water of excellent quality, to the extent of about 12,000,000 gallons per diem, partly pumped from wells in the red sandstone, but chiefly obtained from the hilly district of Rivington, 24 miles distant, whence it is conveyed to Liverpool in iron pipes, 44 inches in diameter. The reservoirs at Rivington form a series of lakes, covering nearly 600 acres of ground. The sewerage of the town was formerly extremely defective, and the mortality of the town was very high. Under a local act obtained in 1846, active measures have been taken to remedy those evils; 115 m. of sewers and 30 m. of passage drains have been made; houses have been drained, and the mortality has been greatly diminished. Among the public buildings is the town hall, erected at a cost of upwards of 110,000l. It contains a superb suite of entertainment rooms, the council hall, and various public offices connected with the management of the municipal business, and the corporate estate. The hall stands on one side of a square; the other three sides of which are formed by the exchange buildings, the lower storey of which is an arcaded walk. These buildings are now undergoing extensive alterations & additions. There is now (1864) in course of construction new public offices, in which all departments of the corporation business will have accommodation. The revenue buildings, comprising the excise, post, custom-house, dock & stamp offices, is a large heavy building of the Ionic order, covering an area of 6700 sq. yards. St George's Hall, of the Corinthian order externally and internally, contains assize courts, and a hall for public meetings, musical entertainments, etc., and also a concert room. There is also a concert hall, called the Philharmonic Hall, of colossal dimensions, and which, in excellence in the requisites of hearing and seeing, may vie with any building of a similar kind. The principal churches are those of Saints Peter, Catherine, James, Michael, Luke, Philip, and Paul, and St George's, the Scotch kirk, Free churches, United Presbyterian Church, Unitarian, Independent, Baptist, and Wesleyan chapels, and two Jews' synagogues, altogether 158 churches and chapels. There is a statue of Nelson in the exchange area, one of George III., one of Canning, and one of Huskis-son; and a column, surmounted by a statue, has recently been erected to Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington. Among the educational establishments are the Liverpool Royal Institution, which has a large library and a museum; the collegiate, a fine building in the Gothic style; the mechanics' institute, a school of medicine, and several schools belonging to the different religious bodies. There are many hospitals, an infirmary, dispensaries, and charitable institutions; three large covered, and two open public markets, for provisions; a fish market, corn exchange, and tobacco warehouse; and among the public institutions provided by the corporation, public baths on the pierhead, and three other public baths and wash-houses in the town: more of which are being provided, and botanic gardens and public parks. The Bank of England has a branch here; and next to it is the Commercial Bank, besides other thirteen banks. There are the Exchange, Athenæum, and Lyceum news-rooms; and the two latter have extensive libraries attached; and the free public library and museum, which has branch lending libraries in various parts of the town. Fourteen newspapers are published in Liverpool. The town has manufs. of watches and jewellery, sugar refineries, iron and brass foundries, iron and steel forges, breweries, rope, glass, soda, and alkali works; and shipbuilding is carried on in it to a great extent; but it owes its chief importance to its being a great seat of foreign export and import trade, and the main outlet for the manufactures of Lancashire, including Manchester, W. Yorkshire, Staffordshire, and the principal part of the trade of England with Australia and America. The entrance to the river Mersey is encumbered with shoals, but at high water it may be entered by the largest ships, upwards of 12,000,000*l.* having been expended on the river Mersey in securing safe anchorage and dockaccommodation. Nearly all the raw cotton imported into Great Britain is brought to Liverpool: the imports in 1851 amounted to 89,099,920 lbs., and the following is a statement of the amount in lbs., and places from whence shipped, from 1854 to 1863:—

In 1850 174,187 passengers emigrated from this port—in 568 ships of 1500 to 3000 tons—of these 154,739 were steerage passengers, 166,109 were emigrants to the United States of America. In 1863 the number of emigrants was 137,982 in 622 ships; of these 126,622 were steerage passengers, and the number who went to the United States was 109,296. Liverpool is connected by railway with all the great towns of England and Scotland; by canals with the principal towns of England; and by steam-packets with Glasgow, Dublin, Cork, Bristol, and the principal ports of France, the Mediterranean, America, and Australia. The bor. is divided into 16 wards, and governed by a mayor, 16 aldermen, and 48 councillors. The corporation rev. from town dues alone, amounted, in 1836, to 49,332*l.*; and in 1849 to 102,596*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* But in 1858, the corporation was deprived of its town dues and the conservancy of the Mersey, which is now under a special board, called the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board. Nevertheless, with the composition paid for the deprivation of town dues, and from other sources of income, the council are enabled to meet their ordinary and obligatory expenses. Great improvements have been and continue to be made in the town, without imposing taxes; and the lighting of the town is defrayed entirely out of the surplus municipal revenue. It has quarter and petty sessions, courts of record and requests, and is the seat of assizes for the hundred of West Derby. Its port jurisdiction comprises the whole estuary of the Mersey. Birthplace of Mrs Hemans the poetess, and Roscoe the historian. It sends 2 members to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1864) 16,750.

LOIANO, a town of North Italy, prov. and circ. Bologna. P. 3859.

LOING, Luna, a river of France, rises at St Colombe, dep. Yonne, flows past Châtillon, Montargis, Nemours, and Moret, where it joins the Seine on the left. Length 70 m. It feeds the canals of Briare and Loing, by means of which the Seine communicates with the Loire.

LOIR, Lidéricus, a river of France, rises in the lagoon of Cernay, dep. Eure-et-Loir, flows past Châteaudun, Vendôme, Châteaudu-Loir, and Durtal, and joins the Sarthe on the left, 5 m. N. Angers. Length 150 miles.

LOIR-ET-CHER, a dep. in the N.W. of France, formed of part of the old prov. of Orleansais, surrounded by the deps. Eure-et-Loir, Sarthe, Indre-et-Loire, Indre, Cher, and Loiret. Area 2452 sq. m. P. (1861) 269,029. Surface level, and having numerous étangs (lagoons). It is situated in the basin of the Loire, and watered by many of its affls. Soil generally fertile, except in the S.; climate mild. Chief products, grain, wine, hemp, and fruits. The wines are in general of good quality, the best are those of the Cher. Sheep are numerous and of good breeds; horses excellent. The rearing of bees and fowls is an important branch of rural industry; that of silk worms is inconsiderable. There are mineral springs at St Denis and Vieuvy-le-Rayé, and valuable fishings in the lagoons. Manufs., leather, glass, woollen cloths, cottons, beet-root sugar, paper, and gloves. The dep. is divided into the 3 arrs. of Blois, Romarantin, and Vendôme.

LOIRE, Liger, an important river of Europe, and the largest in France, rises in Mont Gerbier-de-Jones, dep. Ardèche, at an elevation of 4566 feet, flows N.N.W., and W., past Roanne, Nevers, La Charité, Cosne, Gien, Orleans, Beaugency, Blois, Amboise, Tours, Saumur, Ancenis, Nantes, and Paimbœuf, and enters the Bay of Biscay by a wide estuary below St Nazaire, dep. Loire-Inférieure. Length 530 m. Principal affls. on the right, the Lignon, Semène, Furend, Coise, Rahins, Sornin, Reconce, Arroux, Aron, Nièvre, Ceze, Authion, and Maine; on the left, the Borne, Ane, Lignon, Aix, Pèbre, Acolin, Allier, Loiret, and Cosson. It is navigable to Roanne, dep. Loire. The tide is perceptible as far as Nantes. Its course is generally rapid, and navigation is interrupted during 5 or 6 months in the year, from want of water, overflowing, or freezing. Dykes and barrages have been constructed along a great part of its course, many of which were destroyed by a flood in 1846. Vessels of upwards of 300 tons discharge at Paimbœuf. The Loire is connected by canals with the Saône, Seine, and Vilaine. There is steam communication between Moulins and Nantes, by means of the Allier and Loire.

LOIRE, a dep. of the S.E. of France, formed of the old prov. of Lyonnais, and situated between the deps. Rhône, Saône-et-Loire, Allier, Puy-de-Dôme, H. Loire, Ardèche and Isère; cap. Montbrison. Area 1838 sq. m. P. (1861) 517,603. Surface elevated and mountainous; traversed in the S.E. by the Cevennes, and partly enclosed between them and the mountains of Forez; highest point Mont Pila, in the Cevennes. The greater portion of the dep. is situated in the basin of the Loire, and watered by its affls., the Ondène, Furend, Lignon, and Sornin; the Rhone forms its limit in the S.E. Climate variable, but healthy. Soil generally infertile; potatoes and hemp are important crops, and the chestnuts of Lyons are celebrated. Wines are generally of good quality, the best are those of the valley of the Rhone. Silk worms are extensively reared, especially in the vicinity of Bourg-Argental, where is produced the finest silk in France for the manuf. of blondes. From the inexhaustible richness of its coal basin, this is one of the most important mining deps. in the country; the other mineral products are iron, marble, granite, porphyry, and flint. There are numerous mineral springs, the best frequented of which are St Alban, Sail-sous-Couzan, and St Galmier. The manufs. of this dep. are among the most celebrated and extensive in France; the chief are silk and ribbons, the principal seats of which are at St Chamond and St Etienne, and iron and steel goods, of which St Etienne is the centre; flint glass and bottles, laces, cottons, and muslins, common cloths, paper, and leather. Boat-building is carried on at Roanne and St Rambert. The dep. has lines of railway connecting the principal towns with Lyon, and it is divided into the arrs. Montbrison, Roanne, and St Etienne.

LOIRE, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Rhône, arr. and 14 m. S. Lyon. P. 1336.

LOIRE (HAUTE), a dep. of the S.E. of France, formed of part of the old prov. of Languedoc, and situated between the deps. Loire, Puy-de-Dôme, Cantal, Lozère, and Ardèche; cap. Le Puy. Area 1916 sq. m. P. (1861) 305,521. Surface elevated and mountainous, traversed on the E. by the Ce-vennes, and on the W. by the mtns. of Margerides, which unite the Cevennes with the mountains of Auvergne, and on the S. by the Forez mountains. Many of these are volcanic; culminating point, Mont Mezin, in the Cevennes, 5794 feet. The dep. is entirely situated in the basin of the Loire, by which, and by its affl. the Allier, and numerous smaller streams, it is watered. Climate rigorous in the mountain dists. Soil poor, sterile on the slopes of the mountains. Chief crops, corn and potatoes. Wine is raised in small quantity and of inferior quality. Cattle-rearing is an important branch of industry; bees and silk worms are extensively reared. Chief mineral products, coal, antimony, gypsum, building stone, and potters' clay. Manufs. lace, silk, ribbons, paper, and leather. From the want of employment, a great portion of the pop. leave the dep. during a considerable part of the year. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Brioude, Le Puy, and Yssengeaux.

LOIRE-INFÉRIEURE, a maritime dep. in the N.W. of France, formed of part of the old prov. Bretagne, situated on the Atlantic Ocean and the Bay of Biscay, between the deps. Morbihan, Ille-et-Vilaine, Mayenne, Maine-et-Loire, and Vendée; cap. Nantes. Area 2654 sq. m. P. (1861) 380,207. Surface level, traversed by low hills, and mostly situated in the basin of the Loire, and its estuary. Chief rivers, the Loire, Vilaine, Erdre, Brivé, Sèvre-Nantaise, Moine, Maine, Acheneau, and Ognon. The dep. contains numerous lagoons, among which the étang de-Grand-Lieu is the largest in France. Climate humid but healthy. Soil generally fertile. Chief products, grain and wines; the latter are nearly all pale, and of second class quality. Cattle and sheep are extensively reared, horses excellent; bees are numerous. Chief mineral products, marine salt, turf, coal, and iron. Nantes is the principal port. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Ancenis, Châteaubriand, Nantes, Paimbœuf, and Savenay.

LOIRET, Ligurala, a river of France, dep. Loiret, rises in 2 springs, 2 m. S.S.E. Orleans, and joins the Loire on the left near Orleans; length 10 m.

LOIRET, a dep. of the N.W. of France, forming part of the old prov. Orléanais, situated between the deps. Seine-et-Oise, Eure-et-Loire, Loir-et-Cher, Cher, Nièvre, Yonne, and Seine-et-Marne; cap. Orleans. Area 2614 sq. m. P. (1861) 352,575. Surface flat and little elevated. The N. portion is situated in the basin of the Seine, and watered by its affls., the Loing and Essonne, and in the S. it is traversed by the Loire, and watered by its affls., the Loiret, Cosson, and Beuvron. There are several lagoons in the basin of the Loing. Climate mild and healthy, except near the lagoons. Soil rich and fertile N. of the Loire, but poor on the S. of that river. Chief products, grain, wine, saffron, linc, and timber. Apples for cyder are extensively grown. Sheep and cattle numerous, and of good breeds; fowls and bees abundant. Mineral products comprise only building stones and potters' clay. There are mineral springs at Segray and Beaugency, the former of which has a bath establishment. Manufs., cloths and woollen caps, pottery, cotton thread, leather, beet-root sugar, and paper. The dep. is divided into the arrs. of Gien, Montargis, Orleans, and Pithiviers.

LOMBARDO-VENETIAN KINGDOM (Germ. Lombardisch Venetianisches Königreich, Ital. Regno Lombardo Veneto), from 1815 till 1859 a political and adminis. division of the Austrian empire in Italy, forming two governments.—I. Lombardy, divided into the provs. Milan, Brescia, Cremona, part of Mantua, Bergamo, Como, Pavia, Lodi, and Sondrio; cap. Milan.—II. Venice, with the provs. Venice, Verona, Udine, Padua, Vicenza, Treviso, Rovigo, and Belluno, and part of Mantua. It is composed of a vast plain inclined to the S.W., and situated entirely in the basin of the Adriatic, between lat. 44° 47' 10" and 46° 40' 25" N., lon. 8° 33' and 13° 43' E., bounded E. by the Adriatic and Illyria, S. by the provs. of Parma, Modena, Bologna, and Ferrard; S.W. and W. by Piedmont; N. by Switzerland and the Tirol. Area 9709 sq. m. P. (1857) 2,446,056. The territory is enclosed on the N. by the Lepontine, Rhaetian, and Carnic Alps, from which several extensive valleys depend. The mtns. Euganei & Berici, in the gov. Venice, form 2 masses of small extent, nearly isolated in the plain. The rest of the territory is composed of low plains, which terminate in lagoons, on the shores of the Adriatic. The principal rivers are the Po and its affluents, and the Adige, Brenta, Piave, and Tagliamento, all of which flow to the Adriatic Sea. Of these 29 are navigable, and many of them are connected by means of canals. The valley of the Po is irrigated and intersected by lakes, rivers, and water-courses, rendering the climate similar to that of the Netherlands, marshy, swampy, and unhealthy. The roads are skirted with mulberry trees, and vines festooned from tree to tree. All the fine lakes of Northern Italy belong wholly, or in part, to Lombardy and Venetia; the Lago Maggiore forms the W. boundary of the former, and the L. of Garda of the latter prov. Climate severe in the mountain regions, and many of the summits on the N. frontier rise to the snow line; otherwise it is temperate and healthy, except near the lagoons, and in the vicinity of the rice fields. Mean temp. of year at Milan 55° 2'; at Venice 55° 4'. It is often, however, severe in winter, and the lagoons of Venice are sometimes frozen over; rain falls often and copiously in summer and autumn; average fall 35 inches, but at Tolmezzo, on the Tagliamento, the average fall is 100 inches. The prevailing winds are N.N.W. and N.E. in Venetia, and E. W., and N.E., in the prov. Milan. The soil, in the plains, composed of rich alluvium, and abounding in marine deposits, is cultivated with great care, and the system of artificial irrigation is the most complete in Europe. The provs. of Lombardy and Venetia are the most fertile in Italy. Principal products, maize, wheat, oats, rye, and barley. In the dist. of Lodi the finest Parmesan, & in Milan the best Strachino, cheese is made. Wine is an important product, but its quality is generally inferior. Hemp and flax, of excellent quality, are extensively grown. Minerals comprise copper, iron, lead, arsenic, marble, alabaster, potters' clay, coal, and precious stones. The principal mineral springs are those of Bormio, Massino, and Trescorre, in the prov. Milan; and Albano, Rovere, Recoaro, and Piano, in Venetia. The principal manufactures are silks, cheese, cloths, printed cottons, paper, glass, and pottery ware. The principal seats of commerce are Venice, Milan, Brescia, Bergamo, Padua, and Verona. Commerce is facilitated by means of excellent roads, including those leading over the Splügen and Valteline; and by navigation on the lakes, rivers, and canals. The railways in operation are the great lines from Milan to Venice E., Milan to Monza, to Novara, to Pavia, to Cremona, and Como N.W., Verona to Mantua S.W., and Venice to Trieste. The population belong chiefly to the Italia-Tuscan family, with a mixture of Germans and Jews. The chief educational establishments are the universities of Pavia and Padua; the royal institute of Milan, colleges (Liceo), gymnasia, and numerous schools; and there are 24 public libraries in the state. The kingdom was divided into the archbishoprics of Milan and Venice, and 18 bishoprics. The Lombardo Venetian kingdom was formed in 1814, of part of the kingdom of Italy, created by Napoleon I. The congress of Vienna recognised it as a possession of the Austrian empire. War having been declared between Austria and Sardinia, an Austrian army crossed the Ticino 29th April 1859. The allies defeated the Austrians in the battles of Montebello, 20th May, and Magenta, 4th June. Napoleon III. and the King of Sardinia entered Milan 8th June, and the decisive battle of Solferino was fought 24th June. By the treaty of Villafranca, 11th July, Lombardy, as far as the Mincio, except the fortresses of Mantua and Peschiera, was ceded to France, and handed over to Sardinia; Venetia or Venice, the E. portion of the former kingdom, still (1864) forms politically a part of the Austrian Empire.

LOMOND (LOCH), a large lake of Scotland, between the cos. Stirling and Dumbarton, 16 m. N.W. Glasgow. Length N. to S. 21 m.; greatest breadth at S. end, 4½ m., at Luss upwards of 2 m., and at N. end nearly ½ mile. Greatest depth, between Tarbet and Inverglas, 630 feet; at N. end 120 feet; at S. end 66 feet. There are 15 islands in the lake, the largest, Inchmurrin, 1½ m. long; Inchmoin is flat and wooded; Inch Cruin is also flat; the rest are hilly. The lake is surrounded by mountains and valleys, displaying striking scenes of grandeur and beauty. It receives the Endrick, Luss, Fruin, and other streams, and discharges its surplus waters, at its S. extremity, into the Firth of Clyde, by the river Leven—a name which anciently belonged to the lake itself. Steamers ply in summer for the accommodation of tourists, and there are fine drives on its E. and W. shores. [BEN LOMOND.]

LONDON, Londinium and Augusta, the cap. city of England, metropolis and seat of government of the British empire: the city proper, with the major part of the metropolis, being in the co. Middlesex, on the N. bank of the Thames, here crossed by seven bridges; but several extensive quarters are on the S. side of the river, and the whole capital, with its suburbs, occupies parts of the 4 cos. of Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex. Lat. of St Paul's Cathedral  $51^{\circ} 30' 49.14''$  N., lon.  $0^{\circ} 5' 48.32''$  W. of Greenwich observatory, nearly in the centre of the terrestrial hemisphere. Mean temperature of year  $50^{\circ} 30'$ , winter  $37^{\circ} 3'$ , summer  $63^{\circ} 8'$ , Fahr. Annual rainfall, average of 10 years,  $21.67$  inches. New subdivisions and pop. as follow:—

	Acres.	Population (1861.)
West Districts . . .	10,754	463,388
North Districts . . .	13,533	618,210
Central Districts . . .	1,938	378,058
East Districts . . .	6,230	571,158
South Districts . . .	45,542	773,175
Total . . .	77,997	2,803,989

But beyond these limits are the extensive suburbs of Portland Town, Kentish Town, Holloway, Kingsland, and Hackney (with Victoria Park) on the N., Bow and Poplar on the E., and New Cross, Peckham, Camberwell, Brixton, and Battersea on the S., from nearly all which the lines of road extending into the country are bordered for many miles by terraces and villas.

Pop. of London in 1801, 958,863; in 1811, 1,138,815; in 1821, 1,378,947; in 1831, 1,654,994; in 1841, 1,943,369; in 1851, 2,362,236; in 1861, 2,803,989. Increase in 60 years 1,845,126. The pop. is doubled in about 46 years. The area of London (in 1861), 122 sq. m., gives about 23,000 persons to a sq. m. of surface, or 36 persons to an acre. Extending on the N. from Hampstead, Stoke Newington, and Stamford Hill, to Norwich, Dulwich, Sydenham, and Streatham, on the S.; on the W. from Hammersmith, Paddington, Wandsworth, and Putney, to Bow, Poplar, Woolwich, and Lewisham, on the E.,—the entire length of London is about 14, breadth 10, and circumference about 48 m. The number of inhabited houses in 1861 was 359,421; uninhabited, 15,774; building, 4027; average 772 persons to each 100 houses. The rate of mortality has decreased, in 20 years, from 1 in 25 to 1 in 24 per 1000. The area above indicated is bounded, for the most part, on the E. and N., round to N.W., by the Regent's Canal, S.W. by the Kensington Canal, S. partially by the Grand Surrey Canal, and traversed S. of its centre from W. to E. by the Thames, which has a tortuous course through it from Chelsea Reach to the Isle of Dogs; considerably more than 3-4ths of the entire pop. residing on its N. side. The more important thoroughfares in London (N. of the Thames) run mostly E. and W. Starting from Cheapside and the Poultry, in the heart of the city, as a point to which many important routes converge, four lines pass off E. ward at the open space bounded by the Mansion House, the Bank of England, and the Royal Exchange,—viz., King William Street, Threadneedle Street, Lombard and Fenchurch Streets, and Cornhill, with its continuation Leadenhall Street, which two latter routes converge at Aldgate, and the united line is continued through Whitechapel and the Mile-end roads to Bow and Stratford. A new street (Cannon Street) has been completed from near London Bridge to St Paul's cathedral, and others are now (1864) in progress, from Blackfriars' Bridge to the Mansion House. At the W. end of Cheapside, two great parallel lines lead off,—viz., that consisting of Newgate and Skinner Streets, Holborn, and Oxford Street, with the road extending thence on the N. side of Hyde Park to Bayswater; and the line formed of St Paul's Churchyard, Ludgate Street and Hill, Fleet Street, the Strand, Charing Cross, and Pall Mall, terminating at St James's Palace, and the Green Park. Intermediate to these two, is a line passing from Lincoln's Inn Fields, nearly in the centre of London, through Great Queen Street, Long Acre, Cranbourne Street, Leicester Square, Piccadilly, Knightsbridge, and along the S. side of Hyde Park to Kensington. S. of the Thames, the principal thoroughfares diverge from the Elephant and Castle, or the Obelisk: those going N. mostly unite with others N. the river to cross the foregoing lines; and the chief of these crossing lines, S. to N., may be thus enumerated:—I. Watworth Road, Blackman and High Streets (Borough), London Bridge, King William and Bishopsgate Streets, Shoreditch and the Kingsland Road to Stoke Newington.—II. Blackfriars' Road and Bridge, Bridge and Farringdon Streets, thence prolonged by a street lately laid out to Clerkenwell Sessions-house, and which is to be prolonged direct to Islington.—III. Waterloo Road and Bridge, Wellington, Bow Endell, Bloomsbury, Gower, and George Streets, and the Hampstead Road, leading to Camden Town and Hampstead.—IV. Westminster Road and Bridge, Parliament Street, Whitehall Place, Regent Street, and Portland Place to the Regent's Park.—V. A waving line over Vauxhall Bridge and Road, through Grosvenor Place, Park Lane, and the Edgeware Road, to Kilburn. Other important lines N. of the Thames are St-Martin-le-Grand, with Goswell Street and Road; St John's Street and Road; Gray's Inn Street and Road, Tottenham Court Road, Bond Street, Audley and Baker Streets, Park Street, and Gloucester Place, several of which at the W., or fashionable end of London, form perfectly straight and elegant vistas, full  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. in length. From the city to Kensington Gardens, a semicircular line, consisting of the City, New, and Grand Junction Roads, embraces most part of the metropolis on the N. and N.W., much in the same way as the boulevards enclose the principal portion of Paris. The S., and especially the E. parts of the metropolis, are meanly or indifferently built, and, setting aside its immensity, a stranger entering London in those directions is not apt to perceive much difference between its appearance and that of one of the less opulent provincial towns. But W. of Gray's Inn Lane and Temple Bar, the magnitude of the residences, and continuous lines of handsome streets, cannot fail to attract observation; and although nearly the whole of London is built of brick, the stucco facings, and classic style of many of the buildings in its newer parts, give the whole a highly imposing character. On every outskirts, particularly around the termini of the various railways, new quarters are springing up; this is eminently the case in the N. and W. In the reign of George IV., Pimlico became a suburb, boasting of a good deal of architectural display; but although much building has been still progressing in that direction, opulence seems latterly to have preferred the N. side of Hyde Park, and between the Regent's Park and Bayswater a very magnificent quarter is now rapidly extending. These districts contain ornamental lakes, are well planted, and surrounded with fine terraces, and form favourite promenades. The immediate banks of the Thames have little embellishment, being crowded mostly with wharfs and factories; the new Houses of Parliament, which cost 3,000,000*l.*, Somerset House, the Temple, Custom House, Fishmongers' Hall, the Coal Exchange, and the Tower, are almost the only buildings of interest facing the river. Across the Thames, here 1000 to 1200 feet wide, E. to W., are London, Southwark, Blackfriars', Waterloo, Charing Cross, Westminster, and Vauxhall bridges; and nearly 2 m. below the first is the tunnel under its bed. London Bridge, a structure of stone, with 5 arches, and 928 feet in length, was completed in 1831, at a cost of 2,000,000*l.* Waterloo Bridge is a beautiful edifice of 9 arches, 1242 feet in length, built at a cost of 1,150,000*l.* Westminster Bridge is of iron, and lately rebuilt. It is at present the widest of the bridges, and is extremely handsome. Blackfriars Bridge is in course of demolition, and will be replaced by a superb structure of iron and polished granite, and enriched with statuary. Southwark is of iron, Vauxhall of iron and stone; Charing Cross is a railway and foot bridge, and a new suspension bridge is now erected at Chelsea. Besides these are Pimlico, Battersea, Putney, and Hammersmith Bridges, and several railway bridges now (1864) in course of erection. London is distinguished by the great number and beauty of its squares, in all 42; of which the best known are Belgrave, Eaton, Grosvenor, Berkeley, St James', Trafalgar, Hanover, Cavendish, and Portman squares in the W., and Russell, Bedford, Bloomsbury, Tavistock, Euston, and Brunswick squares, with Lincoln's Inn Fields, towards the centre and N. All of these are ornamented with gardens in the centre, except Trafalgar Square, which is an open area containing two fountains, the Nelson column and statue, 162 feet in height, the equestrian statues of Charles I. and George IV., and the statues of Napier and Havelock. The other principal outdoor statues (about 60 in all) are those of Achilles (Hyde Park), a bronze statue of Charles I. (Whitehall, on the spot where he was beheaded), Canning, Pitt, Fox, the great Duke of Bedford, the Duke of York (on the column in St James' Park), Duke of Kent, equestrian figures of Geo. I. and III., and of other kings, Queen Victoria (Royal Exchange), and those of the Duke of Wellington (opposite the Exchange, and on Green Park arch). The Albert Memorial in Hyde Park, of which the foundation stone was laid in 1864, is to be 64 ft. high. The royal metropolitan palaces are: St James's, Buckingham, and Kensington; and the most conspicuous public buildings, St Paul's Cathedral, a noble structure of Grecian architecture, 514 feet in length, 286 feet in breadth, with a dome 370 feet in height, and completed by Sir C. Wren between 1675 and 1710, at a cost of 747,974*l.* The stone of which the cathedral is built is an oolite (a limestone called forest marble), taken from the quarries of Oxfordshire. The see of London comprises the co. Middlesex, with most part of the cos. Essex and Herts. Income 11,700*l.* The Mansion House, Bank, Royal Exchange, General Post Office, India, Custom, and South Sea houses, Mint, Christ's and Bartholomew's hospitals, the Goldsmiths' hall, Guildhall, Compter and Newgate prisons, the Temple, the Monument, and the Tower, are in the city; in which are also an extraordinary number of churches, with spires and towers of very various architecture. Immediately W. ward is Westminster, separated from the city by Temple Bar, and comprising Hyde, St James', and the Green parks; Westminster Abbey, the Houses of Parliament, Courts of Law, Westminster hospital, Westminster hall, a noble old room 290 ft. long by 110 high, and the Sessions-house, all clustered together near Westminster Bridge; the public offices in Downing Street and Whitehall; the Horse-guards and Admiralty; Northumberland House, St Martin's church, & the National Gallery, surrounding Trafalgar Square; Italian opera-houses, and the other principal theatres; Somerset House and King's College, the Geological Museum, St James' and Buckingham Palaces, the principal club-houses, and most of the residences of the nobility. A new national gallery on a grand scale, on the site of Burlington House, was commenced in 1864. Westminster Abbey was originally a Benedictine monastery, founded by Sebert, king of the East Saxons, and rebuilt, nearly as now existing, in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. The kings and queens of England have been crowned here from the time of Edward the Confessor to Queen Victoria, and many of them are here buried. It is 530 feet long, 208 wide, and the west towers 225 feet high. Marylebone, forming the N.W. section of the metropolis, has an opulent population, and regular streets, several churches, the colosseum, Middlesex hospital, and terminus of the Great Western Railway. Finsbury comprises the quarters N. of the City, and of a part of Westminster, and contains the British Museum, Lincoln's Inn and the New Law Courts, Foundling and St Luke's hospitals, University college and hospital, the terminus of the N. W. Railway, the reservoir of the New River Company, Clerkenwell and Pentonville prisons, Gray's Inn, the London Institution, St Bartholomew's Hospital, Scotch Hospital, Charter-house, St John's Gate, and Smithfield market, now removed to the new market in Copenhagen Fields, near the Caledonian Road. The new market covers a large area, is fitted up with every convenience for up-putting of stock, and large shambles have been erected on the most scientific principles. The Tower-hamlets, in the E. and N.E., comprise the Tower, St Katherine's and London docks, the London Hospital, numerous charitable institutions, & the terminus of the Eastern Co. Railway. Southwark contains St Saviour's church, the third in importance of the London churches, with an interesting "ladye chapel," and some fine monuments; Guy's Hospital, the Queen's Bench prison, and the united termini of the S. & S.E. Railways; and in Lambeth are the palace of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bethlehem Hospital for lunatics, a Roman Catholic cathedral, the Surrey, Victoria, and Astley's theatres, and the terminus of the S.W. Railway. It is impossible here to enumerate even the principal of the charitable endowments and schools in the metropolis, and which, in toto, are not less than 600 in number. London has, since 1837, been the seat of a university, with which numerous colleges throughout the country are in connection. Among its principal scientific associations are the Royal Society, the Royal Antiquarian, the Linnean, Horticultural, Medical & Chirurgical, Geological, Geographical, Astronomical, Asiatic, Zoological, & Ethnological Societies, with the Statistical Society, and Royal and London Institutions. At the present time 12 newspapers are published in London daily; and at a late period it was estimated that 180 newspapers were issued at weekly periods, and upwards of 500 other periodicals at various intervals. The printers, publishers, and vendors of literary works, comprise about 2200 firms. All kinds of manufactures are pursued in London; the principal are those of silk, beer, spirits, soap, vinegar, refined sugar, chemical articles, cutlery, machinery, watches, and jewellery, coaches, furniture, type founding, engineering, and shipbuilding. The silk manufacture is confined to Spitalfields, where the weavers are all English, but the masters generally of French origin. Watchmaking is chiefly conducted in Clerkenwell; coachmaking in Long Acre and Great Queen Street; tanning in Bermondsey; sugar-refining in Whitechapel; hat-making in Bermondsey and Southwark; and shipbuilding chiefly E. of London Bridge, along Wapping and Rotherhithe to Deptford and Blackwall. The cutlery made in the metropolis is of the finest quality, and many of the breweries are of enormous extent.

London, the largest and richest city in the world, is thickly planted with houses, mostly three, four, and five storeys high. It contains about 900 places of worship, one-half of which belong to the Church of England, 130 to the Methodists, 110 to the Independents, 100 to the Baptists, 80 to the Roman Catholics, and about 120 to Presbyterians and other denominations. There are nearly 200 hospitals, dispensaries, infirmaries, and alms-houses (including 23 lunatic asylums); about 400 religious and benevolent institutions (which receive collectively about 2,000,000 $\text{\textsterling}$  annually); 550 public offices; 14 prisons; 22 theatres; 24 markets; 4500 public-houses for the sale of wine, spirits, and malt liquors; 70 private hotels; 1800 beer-shops for malt liquors only; 1400 coffee-houses; and 100,000 commercial establishments. A few items of its annual commissariat will show its vast requirements: among these are 250,000 oxen, 1,500,000 tons of fish (in 1862 the sales in Billingsgate were 500,000 cod-fish, 25,000 mackerel, 1,000,000 sole, 85,000,000 plaice, and 600,000,000 oysters), 1,500,000 sheep and lambs, 30,000 calves, and 30,000 pigs; 2,000,000 fowls, besides quails imported at one time to the extent of 17,000; and 600,000 rabbits from Ostend alone. For the supply of milk there are 20,000 cows in the metropolitan and suburban dairies, and the railways bring it from a distance of 80 m. The E. Co. line alone brings 3,000,000 quarts. In the valley of the Thames 35,000 persons are engaged in raising fruits and vegetables, and, besides, large supplies are sent from France and other countries. The annual supply of vegetables is estimated at 360,000 tons, 3,000,000 pines are annually imported. 413,000,000 half quatern loaves, besides buns and tarts, are consumed. It appears that in London there is 1 baker for each 1200 of the population, 1 butcher to 1553, 1 fishmonger to 6300, 1 cheesemonger to 3291, 1 dairyman to 2175, 1 greengrocer to 1541, 1 grocer to 1030, and 1 public-house to each 87 inhabited houses. The Docks of London have a river frontage of 4 miles, from the Tower to Blackwall, and cover an area of 90 acres; 14 tobacco warehouses, 14 acres; and the wine and spirit vaults are capable of containing 60,000 pipes. The two West India Docks cover 295 acres, and one East India Dock 32 acres; St Katherine's Docks cover 24 acres. The Commercial Docks, on the Surrey side, are 5 in number, and comprise 60 acres of water and 40 acres of land. Adjoining is the East Country Dock, 5 acres; and northward is the Surrey Dock, an entrance to the Surrey Canal, which can accommodate 300 vessels. The Thames is tidal up to Woolwich for ships of any burden; to Blackwall for those of 1400 tons. The tide ascends about 15 miles above London Bridge, where 800,000,000 gallons of fresh water (equal to 16 sq. m., 90 feet deep) enter the river by Teddington Lock. Mean range of the tides at London Bridge about 17 feet; highest spring tides 22 ft.

There are generally about 5000 vessels and 3000 boats on the river, employing 8000 watermen and 4000 labourers.

The metropolis is well supplied with water; the total supply per head per day is 95 litres, being second to Glasgow and tenth to Rome: of this quantity the New River Company supplies nearly half. In 1862 there were 13 metropolitan gas companies, with an aggregate income of 1,840,963 $\text{\textsterling}$ . In 1861 the imports of coal amounted to about 4,000,000 tons, employing 10,000 ships. The port of London extends to Gravesend, 30 m. down the river, and from Limehouse to London Bridge there is a continuous crowd of mercantile shipping. Its foreign exports in 1860 amounted to 30,837,688 $\text{\textsterling}$  (the declared real value of all the merchandise exported), and in 1862 to 31,523,812 $\text{\textsterling}$ . Vessels entered (1862) 11,655 (tonnage 3,347,080); cleared 8176 (tonnage 2,508,525). Reg. vessels belonging to the port—sailing, 2450 (tonnage 717,110); steam, 609 (tonnage 228,320). Gross customs duties (1862) 12,156,115 $\text{\textsterling}$ . About 29,943 ships entered the port in 1860, of which 8949 vessels were from foreign ports, 2628 from the colonies, and 18,365 coasters. Around London several new parks have been laid out for the recreation of the inhabitants, in one of which, the Alexandra Park, in the N. suburbs, the National Exhibition building of 1862 is now (1864) being remodelled and erected. An act of Parliament prohibits burial within the metropolis, and many new cemeteries have been formed in the suburbs. These are at Kensal Green, Highgate, Finchley, Stoke Newington, Mile-end, Bethnal Green, Norwood, etc. It is also proposed to remove several of the present churches, and to build others where the population is extending. The city of London is divided into 26 wards, and governed by a Mayor, to whom is granted the lordship of Finsbury, whence he obtains the title of "Lord Mayor," which is not a civic lordship (Henry Fitz Alwine, the first Mayor, held office from A.D. 1190 to 1214)—income 8000 $\text{\textsterling}$  a year,—and by the courts of aldermen and of common council (200 members), elected by the freemen. The annual corp. rev. is estimated at nearly 150,000 $\text{\textsterling}$ . There are 7 courts of equity, 3 courts of common law, 5 sheriffs' courts, and 10 county courts, besides others. Of the 16 members sent to the House of Commons by the metropolis, 4 are returned by the city. Reg. elect. for the city (1864) 17,593. Some idea of the immense traffic may be formed, when it is stated that there are about 1500 omnibuses and 5000 cabs in London, and it is computed that, on an average day of 24 hours, 170,000 persons and 20,000 vehicles cross London Bridge, and that 1000 vehicles an hour pass through Chapside. In addition to this there are several lines of underground railways already in full operation, and others in progress, in connection with the new metropolitan railway termini.—Trinobantum, or the town of the Trinobantes, was probably the name of London at the time of the Roman invasion. It was afterwards walled in, and became a Roman colony and place of great trade. It was the cap. of the East Saxons, and made a bishop's see in 610. In 804 it became the cap. of England under Alfred the Great, and obtained its first charter from William the Conqueror. In 1664, the great plague cut off 68,000 of the inhabitants in 5 months, and the great fire, in 1666, consumed 5-6ths of the city. [FINSBURY, LAMBETH, MARYLEBONE, SOUTHWARK, TOWER HAMLETS, and WESTMINSTER.]

LONDON, a town of Canada West, co. Middlesex, on the Thames, and on G. W. Railway, 76 m. W. Toronto. It is a prosperous place, with a pop. of 12,000. In 1820 its site was a wilderness.

LONDON (NEW), a co., U. S., N. America, in S.E. of Connecticut. Area 550 sq. m.—II. a city and seaport, cap. of above co., on the Thames, 3 m. from its entrance into Long Island Sound, lat. 41° 22' N., and lon. 72° 10' W. Its harbour, one of the best in the States, is defended by 2 forts, and at its entrance has a lighthouse. It has a steam-engine factory, and manufs. of hardware, cutlery, leather, ropes, and a considerable export trade, besides whale and other fisheries. It was first settled in 1646, and was burned by the British in 1781.

LONDONDERRY or DERRY, a maritime co. of N. Ireland, Ulster, having N. the Atlantic Ocean and Loch Foyle, E. Antrim, from which it is separated by Loughs Neagh and Beg, S. Tyrone, and W. Donegal. Area 810 sq. m., or 513,387 ac.; of which 318,282 are arable, 180,709 uncultivated, 7718 in plantations, 1559 in towns, and 10,327 under water. P. (1861) 184,209. Surface in the S. and centre mountainous; elsewhere mostly lowland. Primary granite rocks form the basis of the district, with secondary sandstones and overlying trap rocks. Coast line low. Chief rivers, the Foyle, Bann, and Roe. Climate mild, mean annual temp. of the cap. 49°, Fahr. Rainfall 34 inches. Soil various, but on the lowlands mostly fertile. Oats, potatoes, flax, and wheat, are the principal crops. Breeds of live stock inferior. Poultry numerous, and eggs are extensively exported. Estates large, and mostly owned by the 12 London companies, to which the county was granted by James I., after forfeiture, by the rebellion of its native chiefs. Hence the prefix of London to the anc. name of the co. Manufs. of linen extensive. The co. is divided into 6 baronies and liberties, and 81 pas., in the dioceses of Armagh and Derry. Principal towns, Londonderry and Coleraine. It sends four members to House of Commons, two being for the county.

LONDONDERRY, a city, parl. and municipal bor., and river-port, cap. co. of same name, on the Foyle, at the termination of the Derry & Enniskillen & the Coleraine Rails, at its entrance into Loch Foyle, 144 m. N.N.W. Dublin. Lat. of bridge, 54° 59' 6" N., lon. 7° 19' W. P. 20,519. Alt. 20 feet. It stands on a ridge projecting into the river, and is enclosed by walls and bastions, built in 1609, and beyond which large suburbs now extend. It was built in its present form by the "Irish Society," or London companies, who colonised and gave name to the co.; and it is famous in history for the siege it so heroically sustained in 1689, against the forces of James II. A few cannon used in this defence, are still on the city walls. Principal buildings, the cathedral, having a tower and spire 178 feet in height; the bishop's palace, the deanery, places of worship, and schools for various religious denominations, a diocesan free grammar school or college, founded in 1617, and which, together with Gwynn's school, is munificently endowed; a valuable diocesan and public libraries; a town-hall, containing assembly and news rooms; a court-house, county gaol, district lunatic asylum, infirmary and fever hospitals, union workhouse, barracks, a monument in honour of the Rev. G. Walker, the defender of the city during its memorable siege; a custom-house and town-hall. The town has also a literary and mechanics' institute, and numerous industrial, charitable, & other schools, 3 or 4 newspapers, several branch banks, flour mills, a copper foundry, distillery, manufactures of table linen, and exports of oats, flour, eggs, salted provisions, butter, live stock, flax, and linens. Imports of British manufactures, coal, timber, wine, sugar, and tea; trade chiefly with Liverpool and Glasgow, greatly facilitated by steamers, and has railway communication with most parts of Ireland. Numerous emigrants sail hence for the United States and Canada. Customs' revenue (1862) 125,553*l.* Registered shipping, 7210 tons. Vessels of 600 tons ascend the Foyle to the city quays. Exp. (1862) 4593*l.* Vessels belonging to the port 22, tons 7218. Londonderry sends 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. elect. 858.

Both harbours are within the vortex of tyfoons, and suffer greatly from their Principal edifices, the collegiate church of St Joseph, 11 other churches, a convent, hospital barracks, and the senate house, besides some Chinese temples; and at the end of the town is mansion and picturesque garden, where Camões composed a great part of his Lusiad. Six for defend the harbour N. and W. of the town, which is fit only for small vessels. Large ships anchor in a roadstead E. of the island. The trade of Macao was formerly restricted to Portuguese and Spanish shipping, but now it is chiefly English and American, and that limited to 12 or 15 ships annually of 4000 to 5000 tons, laden with tea and silk brought from the interior. The settler has no export product itself, and its customs revenue rarely exceeds 20,000*l.* per annum, half of which is raised from duty on opium; while the expenditure exceeds 32,000*l.* so that it is a burden on the parent state. Educational seminaries are the college of St Joseph, a royal grammar school, and female orphan asylum. The Portuguese authorities and others form a senate, a governor and council, but the government of the native inhabitants is substantially vested in a Chinese mandarin. Macao was granted to the Portuguese, subject to an annual rent, by the Chinese Emperor in 1856, in return for assistance against pirates. In 1863 the payment of this tribute was rescinded, and the land conceded by treaty to Portugal; but jurisdiction over the Chinese inhabitants retained.

MAD, a town of Northern Hungary, co. Zemplin, in the Hegyalla mountains, 10 m. N.W. Tokay. P. 5644. It has celebrated vineyards.

MADAGASCAR, an island of the Indian Ocean, separated from the S.E. coast of Africa by the channel of Mozambique, situated between lat. 11° 57' (C. Amber) and 25° 38' (C. St Mary) S., lon. 43° 20' (C. St Vincent) and 50° 31' (C. East) E. Length 1030 m.; greatest breadth, 360 m. P. variously estimated at from 1,600,000 to 4,000,000. Surface flat on the coast, with well sheltered bays on the N.W.; in the interior elevated mountains, rising to 10,000 or 12,000 feet, divide the island into numerous well watered valleys. Climate hot on the coasts, temperate in the interior, but everywhere unfavourable to Europeans. Soil generally very fertile, with rich pasturage and magnificent forests. Rivers numerous, and well fitted for commerce; the Betsibuka is 400 m. long. The most important natural products are woods of great variety, gums, and medicinal plants. Domestic animals comprise bisons, sheep, swine, dogs, and cats. Silk worms are reared. Honey and wax are procured in great abundance in the woods, which swarm with bees. The mountains are rich in iron, and probably in other metals. Coal is used in smelting, and there is a coal mine near the cap., and another near Diego-Suarez. The inhabitants manuf. iron utensils, and work in gold and silver articles, as chains, necklaces, and ear-rings. Carpets are made at Tananarivo; and cotton goods are extensively manufactured. Sugar mills have been lately introduced. Trade is conducted chiefly with the Portuguese settlers on the E. coast of Africa. British imports (1861), coals, etc., to the value of 216l. Exports horned cattle and rice. The inhabitants consist of Malagashes, Ovas, and other tribes of Papuan, Malay, Arabian, and Kaffir origin. The higher Malagase functionaries adopt a quasi-European mode of life; and the discipline, costume, and arms of the troops are European. The island is divided into 28 provs., each having a chief, subject to one of the Ovas, with the title of king, whose cap., Antananarivo, is near the centre of the island. Since 1862 European consuls have been estab. there. Tamatave is the chief commercial town. Feticism is the prevailing superstition. This island was known to the Arabs in the 13th century, under the name of Zaledj; it was first called Madagascar by Marco Polo. In 1642 the French settled on it, and called it "Ile Dauphine;" they have since made several attempts to colonize it, but without success. English missionaries in 1816 were protected by King Radama; but he was succeeded by Queen Ranavala Manjaca, who murdered the native Christians, closed the schools, and banished Europeans. In 1861 the queen died, and was succeeded by her son Radama II., who was strangled in 1863, and the Government, now constitutional, devolved on his queen. The distinguished missionary, Mr Ellis, has a Christian congregation of 1000 in the cap., besides six others of nearly equal size.

MADEHURST, a pa. of England, co. Sussex, 2½ m. W.N.W. Arundel. Ac. 1908. P. 208.

MADEIRA ISLES, a group in the Atlantic Ocean, forming a prov. of Portugal, from the S.W. coast of which they are distant 660 m. S.W. They consist of the islands Madeira and Porto Santo, and the islets called the Desertas, situated between lat. 32° 23' 15" and 33° 7' 50" N., lon. 16° 13' 30" and 16° 38' W. Pop. of the group (1863) 104,420, of whom 300 were English. The largest island, Madeira, is 31 m. long, and 12 m. broad. Cap. Funchal. It consists of a mass of volcanic rocks, which in Pico Ruivo rise to 6056 feet above the sea, and resembles the island of Arran in the Clyde on a grander scale. From the central mass steep ridges extend to the coast, where they form precipices of 1000 to 2000 feet in height. The only plains are a small portion of the W. coast, and the table land of Paul de Serra in the interior. The valley called the "Curral," is 2000 feet deep from edge to bottom. The roads are very steep, and unfit for carriages. Oxen are the only beasts of draught, and ponies are used in travelling. Climate constant, extreme of temp. only 10°. Mean temp. at Funchal, summer 74°, winter 64°; but it is exposed to the hot dry wind called leste by the Portuguese, which raises it to 90° Fahr. Rain days 73; mean annual fall 21 inches. Madiera has long been resorted to by invalids afflicted by pulmonary diseases, but it appears that consumption is by no means rare among the natives. There is an English church; and a Presbyterian church in connection with the Free Church of Scotland. The soil, which on the S. side extends 2½ m. inland, is well watered, and extremely productive. The vine is the chief article of cultivation, it grows to an elevation of 2000 feet; but the best wine is produced at an elevation of less than 1000 feet. The vine disease has for years greatly reduced the quantity of wine exported. Exports (1862), wine, sugar, oranges, and lemons, embroidery, etc., to the value of 80,503l. Imports, cottons, apparel, coals, woollens, rice, hardwares, tea, flax, soap, sugar, etc., to the value of 168,168l. British and foreign vessels arrived and sailed (1862) 231, tonnage 73,978. Coffee is grown of superior quality, and the arrow root is excellent. The orange, banana, and guava, are abundant. Wheat, maize, beans, and barley, are cultivated to a small extent, but quite insufficient for home consumpt. The failure of the potato, formerly the chief support of the pop. of the vills. and remote districts, has caused great distress, and the condition of the lower orders is that of squalid poverty. Madiera was settled by the Portuguese in 1431. [FUNCHAL.]

MADONIAN MOUNTAINS, a group in the island of Sicily, prov. Palermo, extending for about 16 m. N.W. and S.E. between the rivers Grande and Pollina. They are mostly of limestone formation.

MADRAS (PRESIDENCY OF), one of the three divisions of British India, named after the city which is the seat of its government. It is bounded N. by the Bombay presid., the Nizam and Berar territories, and the petty native states on the frontiers of Bengal; E. and S.E. by the Bay of Bengal; S. by the Indian Ocean; and S.W. and W. by the Arabian Sea. It lies between lat. 8° 10' and 20° 30' N., lon. 74° 50' and 86° 40' E. Greatest length, from N. to S., 970 m.; extreme breadth, from the city of Madras to Kundapoor, 382 m. The sea-coast extends to 1727 m., but it is almost destitute of safe anchorage or harbours for large ships. The following table gives the districts, area, and population:—

Grand total,	355,846	43,593,265

Of the foregoing, the first 24 are regulation districts, being under the ordinary system of rules and management, and the other 3 non-regulation districts. Travancore and Cochin native states, and the hill zemindaries adjoining the British district of Vizagapatam, are under the political and military management of the presidency. Mysore, though under the political management of the government of India, for military purposes, is subject to the jurisdiction of the Madras presidency, being nearly surrounded by its territories. Area of the foregoing states 87,596 sq. m. Territory of British districts, 183,892 sq. m.; ditto of French, 185 sq. m.; making the total area of this country 184,077 sq. m. The sea-coast is in some parts bold and rocky, especially from Golamelly to Mangalore, a length of 150 m. From Mangalore to Mount Dilly (a headland rising out of the sea), distance 65 m., the shore is low and well wooded. From Mount Dilly to Cape Comorin, 345 m. in length, except a few spots, the shore is low and sandy, or muddy, abounding with shallow inlets, called backwaters, which stretch inland for a considerable distance. N.E. of Cape Comorin for 166 m., the coast is little frequented, in consequence of the obstruction to navigation by Adam's Bridge. The Coromandel coast has a N.E. direction of 297 m., with a slight elevation and sandy formation, and shallow water along the shore. From Gondegam to Vizagapatam, length 269 m., it is called the Golconda coast. In the S.W. part are the estuaries of the branches of the Kistnah and Godavery, and during prolonged gales from the N.E., accompanied with land-floods, the coast is extensively inundated, and great damage ensues. In lat. 17° 15' N., the Golconda coast terminates, and the Orissa commences. From this point the shore becomes bold and rocky, with low rugged hills at intervals, and retains this aspect for 243 m., the whole extent of the coast. Vizagapatam, the S. most part of Orissa frequented by shipping, is marked by a bluff headland called the Dolphin's Nose. On the Golconda coast the hills are connected in some places with the range of the Eastern Ghauts; and as the range reaches the S.W., its distance from the shore gradually increases, the space between being the tract called the Circars and Carnatic. About 56 m. N.W. Madras city, the Eastern Ghauts join the range which crosses the peninsula in a S.W. direction, and unite in the vicinity of the Neilgherries with the Western Ghauts, which reach Cape Comorin on one side, and to the N. frontier of the presidency on the other, and comprise the level part of the territories of Travancore and Cochin, and almost all the British districts of Malabar and North and South Canara. Principal rivers, the Godavery, Kistnah, and the Cauvery, which, with their numerous tributaries, flow E. or S.E. direct across S. India, to the Bay of Bengal. From the table-land other torrents descend, and in the rainy season drain the level country and fall into the Bay of Bengal, the chief of which are the Northern Penna, Southern Penna, and the Palar, all of which have their sources in Mysore territory. On the W. side of the presidency, the rivers flowing into the Arabian Sea receive streams from the Western Ghauts. Near the mountains, these streams have channels of great declivity, but towards the sea they expand into shallow lakes (backwaters) communicating with the sea. The manuf. are muslins, fancy goods, and iron, the latter being important. Minerals of the presidency comprise iron, copper, silver, lead, and coal. Climate is varied more by the different elevations of the surface, and other local circumstances, than by latitude. On the summits of the Neilgherry Mountains, elevation above the sea 6000 to 7000 feet, the climate is mild. On the Canara and Malabar coasts the heat is tempered by the sea breezes, and by the proximity of the W. Ghauts. In the beginning of summer the heat is excessive on the E. coast. In some parts of the W. Ghauts rain falls during 9 months of the year, the quantity being enormous. Amongst the public works for the improvement of this presidency are the Anakatt on the Godavery, Kistnah, and Cauvery rivers, for the purpose of irrigation, and an extensive system of railways. It has two large barracks—one at Trimalgaldi, which cost 120,000*l.*, and one at Jakatalla, which cost 140,000*l.* Military force of all arms (inclusive of a considerable number of her Majesty's troops), 59,180 men. Exports to Britain (1862), cotton, indigo, coffee, sugar, oils, skins, rice, seeds, cori rope, cardamoms, pepper, hides, saltpetre, sandalwood, etc., to the value of 3,525,846*l.* Imports cottons, iron, machinery, beer and ale, apparel, copper, hardwares, wine, etc., to the value of 950,869*l.* Total public revenue in 1851, 5,087,328*l.*, of which the land rent yielded 3,515,969*l.* The majority of the population are Brahmins, but in some parts Mussulmans. Zoology comprises the elephant, tiger, panther, leopard, bear, hyæna, wolf, nyलग, buffalo, gyal, and monkeys. Birds are numerous. Venomous reptiles abound; the boa constrictor here attains to great size, and the rivers and marshes swarm with alligators.

MADRAS, a maritime city of British India, cap. above presid., on the Coromandel coast; lat. of observatory 13° 4' 1" N., lon. 80° 14' E. Area of its dist. 30 sq. m.; pop. of the city till lately estimated at 720,000; but a recent enumeration reduces the pop. to about 450,000, of whom about 16,000 Europeans, and most of the others Hindoos. It is badly situated for a commercial cap., on a surf-beaten shore, where "masoolah" boats are used to land passengers and all kinds of merchandise, and rafts (catamarans) for fishing, since even in calm weather the surf breaks 300 feet from shore with a wave 3 feet high; but a pier has lately been built under great engineering difficulties. It stands on level ground, has no striking appearance from the sea, but is generally well-built and handsome. Fort St George, the citadel, is on the beach, surrounded by an esplanade, on the N. side of which is the "Black town," and containing many good native houses, with European warehouses, the custom-ho., and board of trade; and on the W. and S. sides of the fort, separated from the town by a river, is Choultry Plain, on which are extensive suburbs, consisting mostly of detached houses, occupied by Europeans; and here are also the residences of the governor and the Carnatic nabob, St George's cathedral, and a handsome stone mosque. The lighthouse to the N. of the fort is 128 feet high. Other chief buildings are 11 English and 8 Scotch churches of different denominations, 1 Armenian, 3 American, and 12 Roman Catholic places of worship. Madras is an episcopal see, having a bishop of the Church of England; and there is also a Roman Catholic bishop. It has a university with 3 European professors and many teachers, European and native; St George's cathedral, with monuments to Bishop Heber and others, by Chantry and Flaxman; an equestrian statue of Sir T. Munro, by Chantry; a medical college, grammar school, 1 Christian vernacular school, and 5 private schools, all of the best class, and several literary associations. There are nine newspapers published in Madras, some of these being published thrice a week, others twice, and some once, besides several periodicals. At the suburb, St Thomé, on the shore, about 3 m. S. from the fort, are a Roman Catholic cathedral and some chapels, this being the place where most of the inhabitants of Portuguese descent reside. Madras is the seat of all the chief government offices for the presid., of the supreme court, boards of revenue, admiralty, education, etc.; and though having less foreign trade than the caps. of the other presid., its commerce is considerable and rapidly improving, as it is the chief emporium of the Coromandel coast, and trades direct with great Britain and the other European countries, the United States, Ceylon, and S.E. Asia. Madras bank, chartered, and in a measure under the control of the government, besides branch banks, a savings' bank, and 6 other banks; and for life, fire, and shipping, there are 7 insurance companies. The site of the city formed the first territorial acquisition by the British in India, permission to erect a fort here having been obtained in 1639. Shortest sea route to London 10,830 sea m.; average sailing 125 days. A railway west by Arcot to Beypoor, 405½ m. long, with branches from Erode to Negapatam, Poonamalee to Cuddapah, and Tripatoor to Bangalore, with an electric telegraph from Trichinopoly to Negapatam, opened in 1860. There are sanitary stations in the Neilgherries: 1. Ootacamund, 7300 feet above the sea; 2. Cotogherry, Wellington, and Comoor, each about 6000 feet; and 3. Ramandroog, 3100 feet, in the Bellary dist.

MADRE-DE-DIOS ARCHIPELAGO, W. Patagonia, is between lat. 50° and 51° S., and lon. 75° W. separated from the mainland, and from Hanover and Chatham islands by Concepcion Straits, and consists of several mountains and rocky islands.

MADRESFIELD, a pa. of Engl., co. Worcester, 6 m. N.N.W. Upton-on-Severn. Ac. 1192. P. 271.

MADRID, a city of Southern Europe, cap. of the kingdom of Spain, and of the prov. Madrid, near the centre of the peninsula, on l. b. of the Manzanares, and in the middle of the table-land of Castile, 2000 feet above the sea. Lat. 40° 24' 57" N.; lon. 3° 41' 51" W. Mean temperature of year 58° 2; winter 43°-1, summer 76°-4, Fahr. P. (1857) 475,785. The city is surrounded by a low wall with 16 gates, the finest of which are those of Alcala, San Vicente, and Toledo. It is situated in an arid plain, and its provisions have to be brought from a distance; it is subject to extreme changes of temperature. Chief public edifices, the royal palace, built of granite, and the royal armoury, one of the finest in the world; and the picture gallery contains specimens of Murillo and many famous painters, with extensive gardens on l. b. of the Manzanares, and the summer palace, Casa real del Campo, on the opposite side of the river; palace of Buen-retiro, founded by Philip iv.; palace of the Duke of Alba, and post office, a bronze statue of Philip iv. (a fine equestrian work), and one of the Queen of Spain in the Plaza de Orient, E. of the royal palace. It has no cathedral nor university, but a college with a faculty of theology; schools of medicine and veterinary surgery; a house of education for orphans of the military, normal school, school of engineers, military college, conservatories of arts and trades, and of music; a national library of 200,000 vols. and numerous MSS., 25 newspapers, an astronomical observatory, botanic garden, the academy of Spain, and several other academies, museums, and cabinets; numerous hospitals and benevolent institutions. Madrid has 8 theatres; but the chief place of resort is the bull ring, an amphitheatre near the Alcala gate, capable of containing 12,000 spectators. The chief industrial establishments are royal manufs. of porcelain and carpets; and manufs. of paper, jewellery, silks, and hats, none of which are important. It is the birthplace of many kings of Spain, and many eminent men, among whom are Alonzo de Ercilla, Lopez de Vega, Calderon de la Barca, Nuñez, and the brothers Velasquez. Madrid occupies the site of the anc. Mantua Carpetanorum, called Majoritium in the middle ages. Its importance only commenced when made cap. of Spain by Philip II. It was held by the French from 1808 to 1812, when the Duke of Wellington restored it to the Spaniards; and here Napoleon I. placed his brother Joseph on the throne of Spain. Area of prov. 2993 sq. m. P. (1857) 475,785.

MADURA, an island of the Malay Archipelago, immediately N.E. of Java, with which it is included under the Netherland government. Lat. 7° S., lon. 118° E. Area estimated at 1330 sq. m. P. (1858) 509,829. It is inferior in fertility to Java, and barely supports its population. Principal seaports, Bankalan, Sumanap, and Pamakasan.

MADURA, a dist. of British India, in Madras presid., between lat. 9° 5' and 10° 54' N., lon. 77° 15' and 79° 15' E. Area 13,545 sq. m. P. 1,756,791, a large majority of whom are Hindoos. Surface mountainous in the N. and W., and their sides covered with timber, elsewhere level and very productive. Principal river, the Vyghah. In the hills the thermometer ranges from 50° to 75° Fahr. in summer. January is the coldest month, when the inhabitants suffer from intermitting fevers. February, March, and April are the dry season, which is followed by a succession of rains during the S.W. monsoon. In the plains, heat and dryness is the characteristic feature, the thermometer sometimes reaching 115° Fahr., and at times causing famine and pestilence. Irrigation is supplied by means of tanks, which collect the rains. Chief products, sugar, cotton, tobacco, vegetables, and fruit. Exports cotton, chay-root, tobacco, salt, salt-fish, hides, coarse cloth, and chank-shell, for the manufacture of rings and other ornaments, immense numbers of which are collected on the shore. Imports spices, betel-nut, sugar, oil, timber, and iron. It has manufactures of silks, woollens, and iron. The military stations are Madura, the cap., Dindigul, and Ramnad. This district is intersected throughout the level country with good roads, except Ramnad.—Madura, cap. of the dist., is 33 m. S.S.E. Dindigul.

hills, here 4700 feet above the sea. [GHATS.] Ferruginous clay-stone, overlying trap, is the geological formation of these hills. The rainfall is here excessive; the mean annual fall being 248 inches, of which 227 fall in the four monsoon months, commencing about the middle of June and ending in the early part of October; but from the close nature of the soil, and the undulating form of the surface, the water speedily runs off, and leaves not the slightest trace of marsh or swamp. During July and August dense fogs and drizzling rain occur. In November, December, January, and February, the sky is clear, with a bracing and elastic atmosphere, slight frosts occurring. This station is free from malaria. Here is a sanatorium, with eight sets of quarters, several detached bungalows, and separate houses built of stone. It is resorted to by invalids, and has a European establishment, consisting of a chaplain and a medical officer. It has also a bazaar, a church, a library, and a hotel. MALABAR, a maritime dist. of British India, presid. Madras. It is bounded on the N. by Canara and Coorg, E. by Mysore and Coimbatore, S. by Cochin, and W. by the Arabian Sea, between lat. 10° 15' and 12° 18' N., lon. 75° 15' and 76° 55' E. Area 6050 sq. m. P. 1,514,909. Sea-coast line is 125 m. long, abounding in shallow havens. The shores are generally low, barren, and sandy. Principal rivers are the Ponany, Calicut, Cheracul, Mahe, and Billipatam. On the S.E. frontier is the Chowgaut, a lake 20 m. long and 8 m. broad, having several islands, coves, and inlets. The district is traversed by the range of the W. Ghauts. Iron ore is found in the hills, and gold dust in many of the streams descending from the Ghauts. The mountains are covered with teak trees of superior quality for ship-building, and so great has been the demand, that the woods were being exhausted, and extensive tracts of waste land have been planted by order of the government. Chief products, pepper, cardamoms, cocoa-nuts, rice, ginger, coffee, sugar, tobacco, cotton, castor-oil plant, and fruits. Climate on the sea-coast warm and equable; mean temp. 78° Fahr. Rainfall 120 inches. Prevalent diseases are intermittent fevers, dropsy, rheumatism, diarrhoea, leprosy, and cutaneous complaints, chiefly caused by unwholesome food and filthiness; from the same causes cholera has often been severe. The zoology comprises elephants, tigers, leopards, bears, apes, gayals, and wolves; several kinds of birds, reptiles, and snakes; and the sea and inlets swarm with fish of excellent quality. Principal places, Cochin, Cannanore, Pennani, and Tellichery. The Malayalam, which is a different dialect of the Malabar language, prevails over the district. The population consists of Hindoos, Mussulmans, Christians of different denominations, and Jews. The Hindoos are divided into several castes, the highest in dignity of whom are Brahmins, called Namburis, the reputed aboriginal proprietors of the soil; the Puttar caste, more numerous than the Namburis. Both of these castes burn their dead. The Nairs, who rank next to Brahmins, are a numerous and influential caste, and long held the chief power. This tribe is distinguished by strange customs. The Nairs are of the military class, and always carry with them an unsheathed sword. If a Nair is touched by a Tiar (the next caste), or a slave, he is defiled, and must immediately wash his body; but before the British rule, they at once slew the unfortunate individual who came in contact with them. This tribe is composed of thirty distinct classes, many of whom now devote themselves to the arts of peace. The Tiars are next in rank, and cultivate the ground. Before the establishment of British supremacy, slaves were a numerous and degraded class; but slavery is now abolished, and measures are adopted for securing the contemplated advantages of the act, by providing employment for the emancipated, and education for their children. The native Mussulmans are both traders and farmers; the former of whom are peaceable, but the latter, especially in the interior, are fierce and bigoted ruffians, and fanatical outbreaks are common. Malabar was annexed to the British dominions at the downfall of Tippoo Saib.

MALABAR POINT, India, the S.W. extremity of the island of Bombay, in lat. 18° 56' N., lon. 72° 51' E. It has a residency for the use of the governor.

MALACCA (or MALAKA), one of the "Straits settlements" belonging to Britain, on the W. coast of the Malay peninsula, between lat. 2° and 2° 30' N., lon. 102° and 102° 45' E., having landward the territories of Salangore, Rumbow, Jobole, and Johore. P. of prov. (1860) 80,792. Surface undulating; hills wooded; valleys swampy, but climate salubrious, thermometer ranging from 72° to 85° Fahr. Soil near the coast fertile; the interior is not so; and Nanning is chiefly valuable for its tin mines. It exports gold dust, tin, hides, poultry, pepper, rattans, laca, aloe-wood, ebony, ivory, and Chinese hard-ware; value (1861) 429,625*l*. Imports earthen-ware, opium, iron, rice, British and Indian manufactured goods, salt, and colonial produce; value 415,646*l*. [STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.]

MALACCA, a town of India, cap. Brit. prov. of same name, situated on both sides of the Malacca river, near its mouth, 100 m. N.W. Singapore. Principal edifices, the barracks, court-house, town-house, gaol, civil and military hospitals, and convict prison, with 514 convicts in 1862. The ruins of a famous church, erected by Albuquerque, and the remains of Portuguese and Dutch forts, occupy several summits around the town. It is said to have been founded in 1252; was taken by the Portuguese in 1511, by the Dutch in 1641, and by the English in 1795. It was again held by the Dutch from 1818 to 1825, when, with its territory, they exchanged it with the British for Bencoolen, in Sumatra. The settlement, previously a dependency of the Bengal presidency, was separated therefrom in 1851.

MALACCA (STRAIT OF), a channel between the Malay peninsula and the island Sumatra, connecting the China Sea with the Indian Ocean. Length 700 m., breadth from 60 m. opposite Singapore to 250 m. at its N. entrance. MALAY PENINSULA, the most S. portion of Continental Asia, and of its great S.E. peninsula of Further India, mostly between lat. 1° and 13° N., lon. 98° and 104° E., connected N. ward to Upper Siam by the Isthmus of Kraw, and having E. the Gulf of Siam and China Sea, S. and W. the Strait of Malacca. Malaya proper or Malacca extends from lat. 1° 20' to 5° N. Estimated area 45,000 sq. m., and pop. about 200,000. The country, as far as lat. 6°, comprising the states Ligor and Quedah, is claimed by Siam; S. of which it is subdivided among many small native states—the principal being Perak, Johore, Pahang, and Salangore, besides the British territory Malacca. Its centre is traversed throughout by a mountain chain, rising from 2000 to 4000 ft. in height, but decreasing on proceeding to the S., where, however, the detached Mount Ledang or Ophir is estimated to rise to 4320 feet in elevation. Surface well watered, and fine timber, with bamboos, areca sago, caoutchouc, and an abundance of valuable resins, gums, drugs, with nutmegs, cloves, cinnamon, tobacco, coffee, sugar, cotton, indigo, are produced, with ivory, horns, and in 1848, 2400 tons of tin, and, as estimated, 20,000 ounces of gold annually. Rice and other grains are not raised in sufficient quantity for the home demand, and are imported from Bengal and Sumatra. Trade is principally with the British and Dutch settlements in the E., and with Siam, China, and the Malay Archipelago. The pop. consists principally of Siamese and Malays. [SIAM.]

MALAYSIA, a name given by modern geographers to a fifth division of the globe, extending from the N. point of Formosa, lat. 25° N. to 12°

S., and from lon. 93° E. to 105° W., bounded N. by the Indian Ocean, Strait of Malacca, Chinese Sea, and Pacific Ocean, along the parallel of 35° N. The S. boundary is the parallel of 55° S. Comprising the Sunda Islands, Borneo, Celebes, Moluccas, Philippines, etc.; chiefly inhabited by the Malay race. This vast island-world extends in a general direction from N.W. to S.E.; the largest islands being nearest the continent of Asia. It belongs to the greatest volcanic region of the world, which stretches in the form of a quadrant from the island of Cheduba, through the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, Sumatra, Java, the Sunda Isles, and Banda. From the W. side of Formosa, one volcanic belt passes through the Philippines, on the meridian of 120°, and the S.W. point of Celebes, to Floris; and another more easterly, through Mindanao, to the N.W. of New Guinea. On the S. this belt extends to New Zealand, and on the N. to Kamchatka. The volcanic mountains are mostly of trachite; true basalt and granite occur in Java, and obsidian in Bali; the chalk and tertiary formations are widely extended. The volcanic peaks of the archipelago rise at once from the level of the sea, so that their relative and absolute heights are the same.

MALTA, Melita, an island of the Mediterranean, a dependency of Great Britain, 54 m. S.S.W. the S. point of Sicily. Length 17 m., greatest breadth 8½ m. Area 95 sq. m. P. (1861) Maltese 131,647; British 1274; Foreigners 1184. Total 134,055. Cap. Valetta, on N.E. side, in lat. 35° 53' 8" N.; lon. 14° 31' 2" E. Mean temp. of year 67°; sum-mer 78°; winter 57° Fahr. Shape nearly oval; coast indented with numerous bays. Surface naturally a bare calcareous rock, containing nu-merous grottos, and abounding in fossil remains. Highest hills 550 feet above the sea. Its stone is extensively exported for building, chiefly to the Levant. Soil artificial, and only 8 to 10 inches deep. It is cultivated with great care, and yields abundant crops. In 1860 there were 35,000 ac. under crop for cotton, wheat, barley, beans, and grass. The fruits of Malta, of which the orange, olive, and fig are the principal, may be compared to those of tropical climates for excellence, and the gar'den flowers are most odoriferous. The honey of Malta is highly valued, and fish abound on the coasts. Horses small, but active; mules and goats excellent; and the birds have gorgeous plumage. The climate of Malta resembles that of Africa more than Europe. Min. temp., winter 53°-3; max., summer 82°-5 Fahr. Variations are sudden, and storms from the N.E., the gregale, violent and destructive; during a N. wind the air is cold and clear; but during the prevalence of the sirocco (S.E. wind) in spring and autumn the temperature rises to 95° Fahr., and its effects are most debilitating. Frost and snow are unknown; ice is imported from Sicily. Manufs. stone carving, cabinet work, and jewellery. Revenue (1862) 153,806*l.*; expenditure 148,672*l.* Exports (including the island of Gozo) (1862) olive oil, ivory, wool, cotton, silk, grains, etc., to the value of 2,990,557*l.* Imports, cottons, coals, woollens, coffee, apparel, sugar, linens, iron, beer and ale, indigo, butter, earthenware, etc., to the value of 3,697,574*l.* Government vested in the commandant of the garrison, and council of 16 members, 8 officials, and 8 freely elected. Established religion Roman Catholic; but there is toleration for Protestants. From its position on the route to Egypt and India, the immense strength of its fortifications, and its noble harbour, one of the grandest in the world, Malta is one of the most valuable possessions of the British Government. The Maltese group comprises, besides Malta, the island of Gozo, and the islets of Comino and Cominotoo, and a few others. Malta was held by the Romans B.C. 242. St Paul's Bay, on the N.E. shore, is the traditional spot where the apostle was wrecked. In the fifth century, A.D., it fell into the hands of the Goths and Vandals. In A.D. 870, it was taken from the Greeks by the Arabs. In 1530 it was taken by Charles V., and granted to the Knights of St John of Jerusalem on their expulsion from Rhodes. In 1568 it was ineffectually besieged by Solymn the Magnificent, and the flower of the Turkish army; the Knights held it till 1708, when, through treachery, it was surrendered to the French, from whom it was taken by the British in 1800, and its cession confirmed by the Congress of Vienna in 1815. Shortest sea distance to Plymouth 2020 m., shortest steam voyage 10 days; to Alexandria 820 m., steam 3 days; to Marseille 650 m., steam 2½ days. [VALETTA.]

MAN (ISLE OF), Mona or Menavia, an island in the Irish Sea, 33 m. W. England, 30 m. E. Ireland, 16 m. S. Scotland, and 56 m. N. Wales. Lat. of Calf of Man, on which there is a lighthouse, 54° 3' N.; lon. 4° 49' W. Length, N.E. to S.W., 33 m., greatest breadth 12 m. Ac. 180,000. P. (1861) 52,469. Mean temp. June 60°·5; Jan. 38°·2. Rainfall 40 inches. A mountain range crosses the isl. from S.W. to N.E., in which Snaefell is 2024 feet above the sea. Coast bold and picturesque. Numerous streams water the valleys. Clay slate is the prevalent formation, with granite in two localities where minerals are worked. Copper, zinc, and lead ores are found, the latter to the extent of 300 tons annually, some of it yielding 100 oz. of silver per ton. Marble, limestone, and greenstone are quarried, but no coal. Soil fertile. Climate mild, and winter open, though rain and gales of wind are frequent. It yields a surplus of wheat and barley. Flax, oats, potatoes, and clover are the crops next in importance. An excellent small breed of horses is reared; cattle and small sheep are tolerably numerous. Farms range from 10 to 200 ac., and rents vary from 5s. to 3l. an ac. The herring and other fisheries employ 600 boats, and 4000 men and boys; annual produce about 60,000*l*. There are some bleaching works, but few manufacturing establishments. Exports, corn, potatoes, eggs, limestone, ore, fish, linens, & sailcloth; imports, spirits, wine, colonial produce, and manufactured goods. Vessels (above 50 tons) belonging to the isl. (1862) 48, tons 3536. Rev. derived by the British Government averages 35,000*l*. per annum, mostly from custom duties. The island has constant steam communication from Douglas, with Liverpool and other parts; and a telegram between Manghold Head and St Bees, near Whitehaven. This island, originally peopled by the Manx (Menavia), a tribe of the Celtic race, was alternately possessed by the Scotch (under the Lord of the Isles) and the English. It was latterly held as a feudal sovereignty by the Stanleys, and afterwards by the dukes of Athol, from whom it was purchased for the British crown in 1806; and finally in 1829, certain remaining privileges were ceded by the duke on receiving an award of 487,000*l*. Government vested in the British sovereign, or the lieutenant of the crown, a council of the bishops and principal functionaries, and the House of Keys, a body of 24 proprietors of estates, who possess the legislative power. The island has its own laws, and two supreme judges, called deemsters. Common law courts are held in the 6 sheadings into which the island is divided, and appeals lie from their decisions successively to the House of Keys, the governor, and the sovereign in council. The isl. is divided into 6 sheadings, 17 parishes, treens, and quarterlands. Established religion that of the Church of England, under the bishop of Sodor and Man, who has a seat (without a vote) in the British House of Peers. There are 40 places of worship. Each pa. has its endowed school, in which English is taught as well as the native Manx, a dialect of the Celtic. The island was a great station of the Druids, and contains numerous vestiges of their circles. Principal towns, Castletown, the cap., Douglas, Peel, and Ramsay.

591,421. Principal rivers, the Vire, Tante, Douve, Merderet, and Selune, all navigable. On its coasts are Cape la Hogue, Point Barfleur or Raz de Gatteville, and Cape la Hague. Climate, temperate but humid, too cold for the cultivation of the vine. Soil fertile in grain, lint, hemp, and apples for cider, of which 44,000,000 gallons are made annually. The horses are the best in France; cattle excellent; sheep yield inferior wool. Chief industry, manufs. of iron, copper, and zinc; cloth; linens, cottons, and lace. It is divided into the arrs. Avranches, Cherbourg, Coutances, St L6, Mortain, and Valonges. Cap. St L6.

MANCHESTER, a parl. and munic. bor., city, and pa. of England, in the hundred of Salford, Southern division of the co. Lancaster, 182 $\frac{1}{2}$  (by rail.) m. N.N.W. London. Ac. of pa. 34,193. P. (1861) 529,245. Alt. 100 ft. By the Reform Act of 1832 it was made a parl. bor., returning 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1864) 21,873. According to the census of 1861, it contained within its parliamentary limits a population of 357,979 persons. In 1851 the pop. was 316,213; increase in 10 years 41,766. A charter of incorporation was granted to it in 1838; since that time several acts have been passed for its improvement, and in 1852 it was made a city. It stands on the river Irwell, and, though not an elegant city, has of late rapidly improved in appearance, many of its old buildings having been pulled down and fine spacious warehouses built on their sites. The streets are well paved, seweraged, and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants have a plentiful supply of water from reservoirs at Woodhead, Beswick, and Gorton, conducted through iron pipes a distance of nearly 20 m. In 1846 three large and beautiful parks were opened for the free use of the population of Manchester and the neighbouring borough of Salford. The principal public buildings of the city are the town-hall, erected on the model of the temple of Erectheus at Athens; the exchange, in the Grecian style of architecture, and covering an area of 1668 sq. yards; the royal institution, an edifice of the Ionic order; the theatre royal, which has a frontage of the Corinthian order; and the free-trade hall, built in the Lombardo-Venetian style, to commemorate the success of the free-trade movement, and affording space for nearly 5000 persons. The hall is used for concerts and public meetings. Manchester is rich in charitable endowments for educational and other purposes. There is a very commodious infirmary and numerous hospitals supported by public subscription, a museum of natural history, a concert hall, several club houses, county assize courts in decorated Gothic, built at a cost of 100,000*l.*, court of record, borough gaol, and a new county gaol. Many societies have been established in Manchester, of which may be mentioned the statistical society, the first of the kind established in the kingdom; the literary and philosophical society, of which the celebrated Dr Dalton was many years the president; a field naturalists' society, and a geological society. The city possesses four free public libraries, containing 62,155 volumes, & issuing an aggregate daily number of 1675 vols. In the town-hall is the corporation library, an exceedingly valuable collection of books, parliamentary papers, etc. The mechanics' institution, and the atheneum, are large and handsome buildings, devoted to the purposes of education, and in each of them is an excellent library. There is a free grammar school, founded 1519 by Hugh Oldham, D.D., Bishop of Chester, and the Cheetham's college, incorporated by Charles II., which has a foundation for 100 boys to be fed, clothed, and educated. In part of the college is a library, to which the public, under certain regulations, have free admission. There is also a school for the study of anatomy, and the Owens college, founded in 1846 by John Owens, who left 100,000*l.* to endow an institution for secular instruction, attended by 92 day and 287 evening students, of whom 17 took degrees in the university of London in 1863. A secular school was established in 1854, for 350 boys whose parents are unable to pay fees; it is supported by voluntary subscription. The Jubilee School for orphan girls, and schools for deaf-mutes and blind, are also supported by voluntary subscription. Several ragged schools are in successful operation. There are four public baths & washhouses. The bishopric of Manchester was created in 1847, and the diocese placed in the province of York: the collegiate church became the cathedral—this is a large and elaborately ornamented Gothic structure, founded in the reign of Henry v., and recently restored in its original style. The city comprises a large number of churches and chapels for the accommodation of the inhabitants. The staple trade of Manchester is the cotton manufacture, to which may be ascribed the rapid increase of the city, the wealth of its inhabitants, and the fact that it is one of the most prosperous cities in the world. As far back as 1352, the place was noted for its manufacture of a fabric from the unprepared fleece. Early in the 17th century the cotton trade began its rise, and has gradually progressed until it has arrived at its present magnitude. Many other branches of manufacture are carried on in Manchester, especially silk and mixed goods, small-wares, machinery, and tools. In 1860 there were 95 cotton, 13 silk, and 16 small-ware mills; 37 dye-works, 48 iron foundries, & 63 machinists' workshops. The average number of persons employed in the cotton mills (previous to the late scarcity of the raw material) was 60,000, earning about 30,000*l.* per week, and the skilled mechanics amount to about 7000, besides about 1500 labourers. The city has a well arranged telegraphic and railway communication with neighbouring towns, by the London and N.-W., Lancashire and Yorkshire, Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, and the Manchester, Altrincham, and Southern Junction Railway Cos. The celebrated Bridgewater canal connects it with Liverpool, and the Irwell and Mersey are navigable for heavy barges. The market days are Tuesdays and Fridays. The principal market is Smithfield; and a vegetable market, covering an area of nearly four acres, with a glass roof, is one of the handsomest and most convenient markets in the kingdom.—Connected with it, as to form virtually a portion of the city, is Salford, a parl. and munic. bor., giving its name to the hundred, on the N.W. side of the river from Manchester. It is in the Southern division of the county of Lancaster, and contained, in 1861, within the parliamentary boundary, 102,449, or, including the districts of Broughton, Pendleton, and Pendlebury, a pop. of 105,335 persons. In 1851 the pop. was 85,108; increase in ten years 17,341. The Queen is lady of the manor. The streets are well paved and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants plentifully supplied with water. Since 1832 it has returned one member to parliament. Reg. electors (1864) 5101. A municipal charter was granted to it in 1844. It is connected with Manchester by several bridges over the Irwell, and has communication by railway, river, & canal, with all the great towns of England. In 1844 a subscription was set on foot for the purpose of purchasing public parks for the inhabitants of Manchester and Salford, and in 1846 three were opened. One of these (Peel Park) is situated in Salford. In the park is a free lending library, with upwards of 30,000 volumes, a reading room, and an extensive well arranged museum, which is visited annually by more than half-a-million of persons from the manufacturing districts. The public buildings in Salford are not many nor large, except the St John's Roman Catholic cathedral, which is a very handsome erection, presided over by the titular Bishop of Salford. The town-hall was built about 1826, and has recently been considerably enlarged. The new bailey or house of correction for the hundred of Salford, was erected in 1790, from plans designed in accordance with the recommendation of John Howard, the philanthropist. Quarter sessions are held here. Salford possesses a court of record and a county court. In 1857 a fine cemetery was opened, and the first interment was that of Joseph Brotherton, Esq., M.P., for nearly 25 years the esteemed representative of the borough. A very useful institution, the Salford and Pendleton royal hospital and dispensary, was established in 1827, and there are several endowed charities for the poor. Bonding warehouses are in the town. The manufactures are very varied. A working man's college was built, and opened in 1858, and has been pre-eminently successful. In the year 1800 Manchester, with Salford, contained only 24,867 inhabitants, so that its united pop. in the present century has increased nearly 17 times.

MANCHESTER, several townships of the U. S., North America.—I. New Hampshire, 21 m. S. S. E. Concord. P. (1860) 20,109.—II. New York, 8 m. N. Canandaigua.—III. New Jersey, on the Passaic river, here crossed by two bridges, 18 m. N. W. New York.—IV. Pennsylvania, 18 m. S. Harrisburg.—V. Vermont, 81 m. S. S. W. Montpelier. It has white marble quarries.—VI. MANCHURIA, an extensive region of East Asia, forming an integral part of China Proper, between lat. 39° and 53° 30' N., lon. 116° 30' and 134° 30' E., having S. Corea & the Yellow Sea, W. Mongolia, and the Russian gov. Transbaikal, N. and N. E. the gov. Amour, and E. the maritime region. P. 1,665,542. On the N. it is bounded by the Amur river and its affl. the Argour, and W. ward partly shut off from Mongolia by a palisade connected with the Great Wall of China; the Sun-gari, a tributary of the Amur river, traverses its centre. It is crossed in the N. by the Khingan mountains, and the Shangpeh Shan mountains separate it from the Corea. Climate very dry, extremely hot in summer and cold in winter. The wealth of the country consists in crops of pulse, but trade is restricted by the cost of transport. The fauna comprises the reindeer and dog, which are the principal beasts of burden; the camel in the S., bears, wolves, foxes, linxes, antelopes, wild boars, deer, hares, etc. It consists of three provs.: Tsitsihar or Helung Kiang in the N., Kirin in the centre, and Shingking or Leao-tong in the S., which is more closely connected with the Chinese government than the other two, whose pop. are nomadic; and the gov. is strictly military, except in Leao-tong, where it is organized as in China. Princip. towns, Mukden (Leao-tong), Kirin-Oola (the cap.), Saghalin-Ula, Sangsan, and Merguen. Chief port, Neuchwang. Manchuria is the cradle of the Manchus (erroneously called Tartars), the dominant and still an independent race. Buddhism is the professed religion. [LEAO-TONG.]

Mineral products, iron, copper, and antimony. Domestic manufs., woollen and cotton fabrics. Leather is made in large quantities in most of the towns; red caps, silk fabrics, good saddlery, carpets, chip-baskets, and earthenwares are among the chief articles manufactured. A trade with the Levant is carried on by the Mecca and other caravans, and by steam packets from Tangiers; there is also a communication, by caravans, with Timbuctoo and other places in Cent. Africa, where the Morocco traders exchange salt, dates, tobacco, cloth, caps, girdles, and daggers, for gold dust, ivory, rhinoceros' horns, assafetida, ostrich feathers, and slaves. Exports (1862) beans, pease, maize, wool, almonds, olive-oil, gums, ostrich feathers, etc., to the value of 434,071*l.* Imports, cottons, sugar, woollens, tea, arms, iron, copper, etc., to the value of 212,143*l.* Government is more despotic than in most Mohammedan states. The empire consists of the kingdoms of Morocco and Fez, and the territories Sus, Draha, and Tafilet; and is subdivided into 30 govts. Principal cities and towns, Morocco, Fez, Mequinez, Rabat, Sallee, Tarudant, Titnan, Tesa, Mogadore, and Tangier, which, with other caps. of provs., are governed by military prefects. The towns are chiefly inhabited by Moors and Jews, which latter conduct the larger mercantile transactions; the Berbers and Shellus form the bulk of the agricultural pop.; and the Arabs generally lead a wandering life on the plains, living in tents, and subsisting on the produce of their herds and flocks. Arts and science are at a low ebb; though in most of the cities and towns are Mohammedan schools, the principal of which is at Fez, but teaching is limited to reading, writing, and reciting the Koran. The standing army amounts in time of peace to 15,000 or 20,000 men, in war to 80,000 or 100,000, mostly negro slaves. Navy, once formidable, is now insignificant. The empire dates from the 15th century. The present dynasty, that of the Sherifs of Tafilet, dates from 1650. The slavery of Christians was abolished in 1814. Morocco joined with Abd-el-Kader in the wars against the French in 1844, when Tangier was bombarded. From 1851 to 1856 the "Riff" pirates led to difficulties with Algeria and Spain. Morocco was invaded, Tetuan was taken, and peace restored in 1860. [FEZ.]

MAROCCO (Arab. Marak'sh), the cap. city of the empire Morocco, is situated in a fertile plain, near the river Tensift, 125 m. E. of Mogadore. P. estim. at 60,000. It is enclosed by a wall 6 m. in circumference, entered by 11 gates, in the interior of which are many large fields and open spaces strewn with ruins. The city is ill built and filthy; most of its houses are constructed of only earth and lime, and those of a more substantial kind are in decay. Principal edifices, the emperor's palace, 20 mosques, one of which has a tower 221 feet in height; a bazaar, and an hospital for 1500 patients. Outside of the city are extensive cemeteries, and a quarter appropriated to lepers. Principal manufs. are of leather and embroidery, and the chief export trade is in those articles and in salt. Morocco was founded in 1073.

MARSALA, Lilybæum, a fortified seaport city of the island Sicily, on its W. coast, prov. and 16 m. S.S.W. Trapani, cap. circ. P. (1862) 31,350. It is enclosed by bastioned walls, and has a cathedral, several convents and abbeys, a gymnasium, cavalry barracks, and a curious vibrating bell-tower, a famous grotto and well. Near the city are salt-mines and caves of white marble. Its ancient port was filled up in 1580 by Don John of Austria, to prevent its becoming useful to corsairs; and the new port, about 1 m. S., bounded by a mole, is adapted only for small vessels. The principal importance of Marsala is due to its wine trade, which has grown up within the present century. The district is estimated to yield annually about 30,000 pipes of wine, of which 2-3ds are exported. Marsala also exports corn, cattle, oil, salt, and soda, in small quantities.—Lilybæum was long the cap. of the Carthaginian doms. in Sicily, but few of its vestiges remain.

MARSEILLE, Massilia, a comm. and city of the S. of France, cap. dep. Bouches-du-Rhône, and of 3 electoral arrs., 534½ m. by rail. S.S.E. Paris, around a basin adjoining the Mediterranean, and on the E. coast of the Gulf of Lions. Lat. of observatory (95 feet in elevation) 43° 17' 8" N.; lon. 5° 22' 2" E. P. (1861) 260,910. Mean temp. of year 57°, winter 45°, summer 72°, Fahr. It is composed of an old and a new town, the former on heights, with numerous crooked streets; the latter, which comprises two-thirds of its extent, has wide and straight streets. Marseille has few public buildings of architectural importance, except the Hôtel de Ville; its lazaretto is very large. The harbour is the most commercial in France, and capable of containing 1700 vessels; its entrance admits only one vessel at a time. It is a military place of the 4th class, is defended by a citadel, by fort St Jean and fort St Nicolas, and the road is defended by the fortified islands, Château d'I, formerly a state prison, Pomègue, and Ratanneau. It has a tribunal of commerce, a national academy of sciences, letters, and arts, an academy of medicine, and many other learned societies; a national college, with a library of 61,000 vols.; a school of hydrography, an astronomical observatory, a botanic garden, many benevolent institutions, several museums, and a mint. There are numerous fountains in the old and new town, but the supply of water has long been very deficient; to remedy this, a canal has recently been cut from the Durance. Its commerce in the wines and fruits of the south, cork, and anchovies extends to all parts of the world. It communi-cates by railways with Arles, Avignon, Nîmes, and Lyon, and is the chief steam-packet station for Spain, Italy, and the Levant. In 1861, 9759 vessels (tonnage 1,795,699) entered the port; 313 vessels (tonnage 1406) are employed in the fishing trade; and 105 steamships belong to the port. The chief imports in 1861 were—wheat (chiefly from the Black Sea and the Sea of Azov), 2,063,520 qrs; raw sugar (from Havana); coffee, 18,000 tons; oil seeds, about 92,647 tons; silk, 17,855 bales; wool, 111,098 bales; olive oil, 8000 tons; linseed oil, 1350 tons; lead ore, 12,000 tons; pig lead, 18,000 tons; iron, 20,000 tons; coal and fuel, 32,000 tons; spirits, 1,175,000 gallons; wines, 3000; besides enormous quantities of ores and metals, timber, hides, etc. Exports, refined sugar, 33,000 tons; oil (to the interior), 15,000 tons; soap, 5000 tons; wine, 18,000 tons; coal, fuel, etc. The chief industry of Marseille is the manufacture of soap; in 1861 there were 52 soap works in full activity, producing about 2,000,000l. worth of fine and 400,000l. worth of inferior soap. In the same year 27 mills crushed 108,000 tons of oil seeds, which yielded about 40,000 tons of oil. Several large establishments refined about 50,000 tons of sugar. 60 flour mills (with 400 pairs of mill stones) grind annually about 687,000 qrs. of wheat, worth about 2,000,000l. Other extensive manufactures are salt, soda, chloride of lime, cement, machinery, etc. 320,000 tons of French coal were brought to Marseille in 1861, chiefly from the dep. Gard. In its neighbourhood are large lignite mines and stone quarries. Customs revenue (1861) 990,673l. The rapid increase in the trade of Marseille led, a few years back, to the construction of a large new port, called "La Joliette," and a third, "Basin Napoleon," was completed in 1864. These two ports are enclosed within an immense break-water, 2200 metres in length. The old natural harbour is now exclusively reserved for sailing vessels, the Joliette being assigned to steamers. It is the birthplace of the astronomer Pytheas, the preacher Mascaron, and the sculptor Puget. Marseille, founded by the Phœceans B.C. 600, served as a refuge for them from the vengeance of Cyrus. It soon became the entrepôt for all the surrounding countries, founded many colonies, was long celebrated for the cultivation of letters and arts, preserved its liberty under the Romans, and often acted as an independent republic. Louis XI. united it to the crown of France in 1481. It suffered severe ravages from the plague in 1720.

It is partly walled, and has a fort, the chief stronghold of the Hedjaz. Mohammed, driven from Mecca, fled to Medina in 622, and from this epoch, called the Hegira, the Mussulmans reckon dates. Medina was the seat of the Arabian empire under Mohammed, who died there in 632. The great mosque (Al Haram), on the reputed spot where Mohammed died, is smaller than that of Mecca, and there are several minor mosques, but no other public buildings.

MEDITERRANEAN, Mare Internum, an inland sea, enclosed by Asia on the E., Africa on the S., and Europe on the N., and communicating with the Atlantic by the Strait of Gibraltar on the W.; situated between lat. 30° 20' and 43° N., lon. 6° W. and 37° 30' E. Length 2300 m.; greatest breadth 1080 m. Area 1,149,287 sq. m. Within this space is included the Tyrrhennian, Ionian, Adriatic, and Ægean Sea. The Sea of Marmora, the Black Sea, and the Sea of Azov which communicate with it by the strait of the Dardanelles, are considered as separate seas. It communicates with the Atlantic in the Strait of Gibraltar, where it is 5500 feet deep; elsewhere its depth varies from 3000 to 6000 feet. The principal rivers which flow to the Mediterranean are the Ebro, Rhone, Po, Arno, and the Tiber, in Europe; and the Nile in Africa. The principal islands are Sicily (which divides the Mediterranean into an E. & W. portion), Cyprus, Crete, Malta, and the Ionian Islands in the E., and Sardinia, Corsica, and the Balearic islands in the W. The most important gulfs are Taranto in Italy, Lepanto in Greece, Syrtis and Cabes in Barbary, in the E. portion; and Valencia in Spain, Lions in France, Genoa in Italy, and Tunis in Africa, in the W. The prevailing winds are the W., N., and N.E. for 9 months of the year. In spring S.E. and S.W. winds prevail. The solano or levanter is a strong wind peculiar to the basin of the Mediterranean; the tides are little felt and very irregular, but it has been erroneously termed a "tideless sea." In the Gulf of Venice the tide rises three feet. Fish are abundant in the Mediterranean, especially tunny, anchovies, pilchards, and mackerel; and the finest coral, sponge, and ambergris are procured. The Mediterranean is "the Great Sea of the Hebrews." The Phœnicians are the first people known to have extended their commerce along its coasts; the Greeks afterwards disputed it with them. After the destruction of Carthage, the Romans were sole masters of its shores; in the middle ages, the Venetians monopolized its commerce, and at present, Great Britain, by the possession of Gibraltar and Malta, has the greatest influence on its destinies. [ADRIATIC and IONIAN SEAS.]

Mean temp. of year 57°, summer 66°, winter 49° Fahr. Rainfall 32 inches. It was officially founded and named in 1837, but the site had been selected and occupied two years previously. P. (1851) 23,143; (1861) 108,224; or including contiguous suburbs, 125,000. The river has a bar at its mouth, and a second about half way to the town. On this account the larger shipping must anchor at Hobson's Bay, near the mouth of the harbour. Formerly their cargoes were all discharged by river lighters; but there is now a railway direct from Melbourne, projecting into deep water off Sandridge, on the E., and a second from the Williams-town side, on the W. of the harbour. The commerce of Melbourne has increased to a very great extent since the date of the gold discoveries in 1851, and now represents about nine-tenths of the entire trade of the colony. In 1860 the exports were 11,993,244*l.*, and imports 14,144,461*l.* Of the former, 8,287,304*l.* represented gold. The town is chiefly laid out on the north or right bank of the Yarra, which is crossed by a stone bridge. It has been a municipality since 1843, with a 10*l.* franchise; the mayor and aldermen being elected by the council. S. Melbourne and several other wards have branched off into separate municipalities. The town was lighted with gas in 1856. It is supplied with water from the head of the Plenty River, conveyed a distance of 18 miles in iron pipes. It has a public library, mechanics' institute, hospital, benevolent & orphan asylums, an endowed university, and a Parliament House, finished in 1864 at a cost of 400,000*l.*; custom ho., several banks, and barracks. There are three daily, besides many weekly, papers. There are several theatres, Cremorne Gardens, & a botanic garden. There is now a great extent of wharf accommodation; and at William's Town a patent slip. It has steam, railway, and telegraph communication with the chief towns. A submarine cable was laid between Australia and Tasmania in 1859. Shortest sea voyage to Liverpool (via Cape Horn), 12,820 m.; average sailing voyage 85 days; shortest steam 78 days: to Calcutta 5230 m.; sailing voyage 45 days.

Mexico consists chiefly of an elevated plateau. The great mountain chain that enters it from Central America, diverges, on passing N.ward, into two arms, enclosing the plateau of Anahuac, 6000 to 8000 feet high, out of which rise the volcanoes Popocatepetl, Orizaba, etc. There are numerous lakes on this table-land, the chief being that of Chapala. Principal rivers, the Nueces, Tigre, Tampico, and Alvarado, flowing E.ward; and the Bolsas, Rio Grande de Santiago, Culiacan, and Yaque, entering the Pacific; but all are much inferior in size to the Rio Bravo del Norte, which forms all the N.E. frontier. As regards climate, Mexico is divided into 3 distinct zones, depending not on latitude but altitude.—1. The Tierra caliente, or hot zone, a narrow belt extending from the shores of the two oceans to the foot of the mountains, with a part of the basins of the Rio Gila and del Norte; mean temp. 77° Fahr., and unhealthy. 2. Tierra templada, or temperate region, occupying the slopes of the Cordilleras; mean temp. 75°, healthy. 3. Tierra fria, comprising the great table-land, more than 7000 feet above the sea. This region, tempered by cold, has a mean temp. similar to that of Lombardy, 67° Fahr., but heat and cold less excessive, and very healthy. This arrangement of surface, with a fertile soil, favours the productions of every zone. The hot zone has two seasons only, the summer, with yellow fever, and the winter, with Nortes (N. winds) and hurricanes. Products, banana, pine apple, orange, and vanilla. The temperate zone has a perpetual summer, is healthy, and produces maize, oranges, lemons, olives, and grapes. The cool zone is bracing and healthy, and produces barley, the agave, etc. Tobacco, coffee, pepper, medicinal plants, mahogany, and India-rubber are among the other products. The fauna comprises the grizzly bear, bison, tapir, jaguar, cougar or puma, ocelot, wolf, lynx, skunk, wild cat, besides monkeys, alligators, rattlesnakes, birds of brilliant plumage, and on the coasts seals and whales. All the domestic animals of the old world thrive on the rich pasture-grounds; buffaloes in the plains. Mexico is rich in minerals, having mines of gold, silver, quicksilver, copper, lead, tin, zinc, and antimony. The gold mines are mostly on W. side of the Sierra Madre, and, until the discovery of gold in Australia in 1854, they were the most productive in the world. The silver mines occur on the W. declivities of the Andes, but the mines have never been properly worked; the total annual produce never having much exceeded 6,000,000*l.* sterling. The state has cotton, woolen, and silk factories, delft-ware and glass works, paper mills, sugar refineries, & distilleries. Principal ports, Vera Cruz, Tampico, Matamoras, and Monterey, on the Gulf of Mexico; and San Blas, Acapulco, Mazatlan, and Guaymas, on the Pacific and Gulf of California. A railway has been constructed from Vera Cruz to San Juan, and a line of telegraph between Vera Cruz and Mexico. The dominant church is Roman Catholic, to the exclusion of any other, and Mexico has 1 archbishop and 11 bishops. There are 146 monasteries, 59 nunneries, and 8 colleges of the Propaganda. Education is neglected, but lately several primary and private schools have been opened. Besides these, there are several seminaries sustained & directed by the clergy; national colleges, and a school of mining, a school of medicine, and a military school. Mexican public libraries are rich in books, MSS., and instruments for the study of the sciences. The geographical position of Mexico, between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and the variety of natural productions, specially adapt it for commercial enterprise; but owing to its unsettled state, and the insecurity of property, her resources have never been fairly developed. The total annual value of her trade is not more than 6,500,000*l.* Exports to Britain (1862), cotton, mahogany, cochineal, Brazil wood, indigo, logwood, Nicaragua wood, copper, hides, jalap, vanilla, etc., to the value of 619,508*l.* Imports cottons, linens, woollens, hardwares, silks, leather, apparel, arms, spirits, iron, beer, and ale, etc., to the value of 816,870*l.* Public revenue and expenditure estimated at 3,546,458*l.* National debt in 1863 estimated at 23,200,000*l.* In 1820 Mexico dissolved its connection with Spain, proclaimed itself an independent constitutional monarchy, and offered the crown to a prince of Spain, which proposal was rejected. The Mexicans then resolved to carry out their scheme of independence, and in 1822 elected their general and president, Don Augustine Iturbide, Emperor of Mexico, under the title of Augustine I. The new emperor being averse to a constitutional government, the principal officers rose in rebellion, demanded the re-opening of the Cortes, and forced the emperor to abdicate and leave the country in 1823. A constitutional monarchy having failed, the next attempt was that of a federal republic, which, after much opposition, was carried out in 1824, General Guadalupe Victoria being elected president. The republic abolished the distinctions of caste and slavery. For the next ten years the country was in a most unsettled state, being under military rule, until 1835, when Santa Anna, a successful general, changed the federal into a central republic. The state of Texas now declared itself independent of Mexico, and enforced that independence by the defeat of the Mexican army. Ten years afterwards Texas was joined to the United States. Then followed the war between the United States and Mexico, which resulted with the latter (in 1848) yielding up to the former, New Mexico, Upper California, and portions of Tamaulipas, Chihuahua, and Coahuila; in all above 580,000 sq. m., which lie E. of the Rio-Grande-del-Norte. From 1841 until 1844, the country was under a dictator, but in the latter year the government again reverted to a central republic, which continued until 1846, when it again became a federal republic. In 1846, Yucatan declared itself independent, but again rejoined the Mexican Confed. In 1853, in consequence of the president assuming unlawful prerogatives, causing internal dissension, and calling for the interference of the United States, order was restored, and a treaty entered into between the two republics, by which the United States secured a portion of the valley of Massilla, & in return Mexico received 15,000,000 dollars. In 1857 the constitution was modified, in consequence of French interference. In 1861 the British minister left Mexico, & the Spaniards landed at Vera Cruz. In 1862 the Emperor of the French declared war against the then president (Juarez); the French army took Puebla and other places on 10th July 1863. The Assembly of Notables, summoned by the French commander-in-chief, elected the Archduke Maximilian Emperor of Mexico, and he left Germany to enter on his empire in the spring of 1864.

MEXICO, a state of the empire of Mexico, having S. Guerrero, and on other sides the states Michoacan, Queretaro, Vera Cruz, and La Puebla. Area 16,074 sq. m. P. (1857) 1,029,629. Surface in the N. belongs to the Auahuac plateau. Principal rivers, the Bolsas, Lerma, and Montezuma. Mining industry is important, and there are rich silver mines at Tasco and Tehuillotepec; and quarries of marble, alabaster, obsidian, etc. Manufs. of cotton fabrics. Chief cities, Toluca, the cap., Tenancingo, Lerma, and Zimapan. The city of Mexico is in the separate dist.

MEXICO, Tenochtitlan, the cap. city of Mexico, in a noble plain 1700 sq. m. in extent, enclosed by mountains, containing many fine lakes, and 7471 feet, above the sea. Lat. 19° 25' 7" N.; lon. 99° 5' W. Area 106 sq. m. Estimated pop. (1863) 200,000. When taken by Cortez in 1521, it occupied several islands in the Lake Texcoco, and although still having the same site, it is now, owing to various causes, 2½ m. distant from the lake. It is encircled by walls, and entered by gates, to which several thoroughfares lead. In the city proper the houses are mostly of stone, built around court-yards, seldom more than one storey in height, flat-roofed, and decorated by painting and mosaic work on the outside; streets regular & well paved, in straight lines, directed to the four cardinal points, but neither lighted nor watched, whence robberies and assassinations are frequent; public edifices numerous, substantial, and in good style. The chief place in Mexico is the great square (Plaza Mayor), two sides of which are formed by the cathedral, national palace, museum, and a new market place; the other sides are bordered by arcades in front of the Parian, a bazaar, the town-hall, exchange, etc. The cathedral, 500 feet in length by 420 feet in breadth, is of mixed Gothic and Italian architecture, and gorgeously ornamented, having also a high altar with a statue of the Virgin, the dress of which is said to contain, besides other gems, diamonds to the value of 3,000,000 dollars. The national palace comprises government offices, mint, prison; and it has a botanic garden, and 3 barracks. The university is a fine old monastic building. There are 60 churches, and 40 Franciscan & Dominican convents, a college of engineers, theatre, bull-ring, and several aqueducts; an academy of arts, public library, and geological museum; manufs. of gold and silver lace, silversmiths' work, coaches, woollen and beaver goods, & a government cigar factory.

MEXICO (GULF), an inland sea, forming the northern half of the great Mediterranean of the New World, the S. part of which is called the Caribbean Sea. It is oval in form, and nearly surrounded by a continuous coast line (3000 m.) of the U. S. and Mexico. It communicates E. ward by the Florida Channel with the Atlantic, and by Yucatan Channel with the Caribbean Sea. Area 800,000 sq. m. Except off Yucatan and Florida, it is free from islands or shoals, and along the coast of Mexico it has a depth of 100 fathoms, 80 m. from the shore. In the winter N. winds prevail, but the Gulf is less subject to hurricanes than the Caribbean Sea. The "gulf stream" of warm water sets into it at its S.E., and out of it at its N.E. side.

- MILAN (Ital. Milano, Germ. Mailand, anc. Mediolanum), a city of North Italy, cap. prov., in a wide fertile plain, between the Olona and Saveso rivers. Lat. of observatory 45° 28' 1" N.; lon. 9° 11' 20" E. Altitude 483 feet. Mean temp. of year 55°-2, winter 37°, summer 73° Fahr. P. (1862) 196,109 (besides military). Milan is nearly of a circular shape, enclosed on three sides by a wall, surrounded by broad ramparts, and a strong castle. The centre of the city is enclosed by a canal nearly 8 m. in circumference, and entered by 10 gates. Among its public institutions are 200 churches, and 85 hospitals and charitable institutions. But the chief object of interest is the Duomo or cathedral; the present building is the third re-edification of the original structure, and it is still unfinished, but now (1864) rapidly approaching completion. It is a Gothic structure of white marble, founded by Count Gian Galeazzo, and commenced in 1387, by a German architect; the delicacy of its carved work is unrivalled in the world; length 486 ft., breadth 252 ft., height of dome 355 ft. It has niches for about 5000 statues, and has employed many of the first artists of the country; a species of tunnel connects the Duomo with the archiepiscopal palace. The church of Sant Eustorgio, one of the few remains of ancient Milan; the church of St Ambrogio, the most ancient mediæval structure in Milan, in which the Emperors of Germany were crowned; the refectory of the old Dominican convent, attached to the church of Santa Maria della Grazia, in which is the famous "last supper" of da Vinci, now nearly obliterated; the royal palace, the city hall, Palazzo Litta, the mint, and several fine squares. Among the benevolent institutions are an hospital for 2000 patients, open to the sick poor of all nations; a vast lazaretto, lunatic, orphan, and foundling asylums, deaf-mute schools, workhouses, a general loan bank, and a mint. The finest gate is the Arco della Pace, a modern sculptured marble arch, at the end of the Simplon road; it was begun in 1807, by order of Napoleon I., but was not completed till 1838; near it is the Piazza d'Armi, an open space for the exercise of troops, extensive barracks, an amphitheatre, and a modern arena for horse-racing, seated for 40,000 spectators, which can be filled with water for aquatic exhibitions; the upper platform forms a promenade, edged with acacia trees. There are nine theatres, including the opera-house La Scala, which is seated for 3600 spectators. The chief scientific and educational establishments are, the royal academy of arts and sciences, formerly the Palace of the Brera, with a library of 100,000 vols., valuable MSS., and a gallery of paintings and sculptures, a rich collection of medals and coins, an astronomical and magnetic observatory, and botanic garden; the Ambrosian library, founded by Cardinal Barromeo, in 1609, with 140,000 vols. and 8000 MSS., it was the earliest public library in Europe, and is celebrated for its collection of Palimpsests, discovered by Cardinal Mai; the Trivulzio palace and library, the hall of the school of Athens, four gymnasia, a normal school, school of medicine and surgery, several learned societies, and a military geographical institute, which publishes excellent maps. The Giardino Pubblico, a public promenade, with a large palace for the museum of natural history. In the neighbourhood of Milan is Linterno, the solitude to which Petrarch retired after the death of Laura. Milan is the largest book mart in Italy. From its position on the great routes across the Alps, & its connection by canals with the principal rivers in Italy, it is favourably situated for trade. It is connected by rail. with Venice on the E., and with all parts of Italy. Its manufs. comprise silks, velvets, ribbons, lace, cotton, carpets, jewellery, glass, paper, and porcelain; it has a royal tobacco manufactory. The city was founded B.C. 400, by the Jusbrian Gauls, and was inhabited and embellished by many of the Roman emperors, and became the second city of Italy. It was surrendered in 1162 to Frederick I., who razed it to the ground, but by order of the diet of the Lombard League it was rebuilt in 1167, and attained great prosperity, until in 1535 it fell under the power of the Emperor Charles v. The poet Virgil studied here, and it is the birthplace of many popes and eminent men. It was cap. of a republic in 1056; at the end of the 14th century it was made cap. of the duchy of Milan; it passed successively under the dominion of Spain and Austria; was taken by the French in 1796 and 1800; in 1805 they made it cap. of the kingdom of Italy. It was restored to Austria in 1815, and made over to Sardinia in 1859.

Misocco (Germ. Maisox-thal, Ital. Val Mel-solina), a valley of Switzerland, cant. Grisons, S. of the Alps, and traversed by the Moesa, on which is the vill. Misocco, with 1200 inhabitants.

MISSAGLIA, a market town of North Italy, prov. and 14 m. E.S.E. Como, 19 m. N.N.E. Milan, cap. comm. P. 1221.

MISSENDEN, two pas. of England, co. Bucks.—I. (Great), 4½ m. N.W. Amersham. Ac. 5731. P. 2250.—II. (Little), 2½ m. W.N.W. Amersham. Ac. 3173. P. 1089.

MISSERGHIN, a town of Algeria, arr. and 8 m. S.W. Oran, on Sebka Lake, cap. comm. P. 2247, of whom 1567 are Europeans.

MISSINIPPI or ENGLISH RIVER, British North America, rises in the Beaver Lake, near lat. 55° N., lon. 111° 30' W., flows very tortuously E. and N.E.ward through numerous minor lakes, and under the name of the Churchill River enters Hudson Bay at Cape Churchill, after a total course estimated at 1080 miles. Its navigation is impeded by numerous rapids. It is separated by a portage of only 370 yards from an affluent of the Saskatchewan River, and sends a branch (the Deer River) to the N. to join Deer Lake. Forts Nelson, Rapid River, etc., are on its banks.

MISSIONES (COUNTRY OF), a region of S. America, in which the Jesuit missionaries, previous to the suppression of their order in 1767, founded numerous establishments of converted Indians. The region now forms the greater portion of Paraguay, and parts of Brazil and La Plata.

MISSISSIPPI (Missi Sipi, i.e., the "Great Water"), the most important river of North America, and, with the Missouri, its principal affl., the longest in the world, rises in the state of Minnesota, in a region covered with swamps and lakes, on the Hauteurs de Terre, the dividing ridge between the Red River of the north and the streams that flow southward. Lat. 47° 14' N.; lon. 95° W.; 1680 feet above the level of the sea, and 2616 m. from Gulf of Mexico. It issues a small rivulet scarcely a span in breadth from a pool, and, after a course of a few miles, subsides in L. Itasca, 1575 feet above the sea, whence, emerging in greater volume, it flows N. and N.E., forming Lakes Cass and Winnepic; then, assuming a southern course, it winds tortuously through the territory of the U. S. to the Gulf of Mexico, which it enters by a delta of several mouths at lat. 29°. Having thus rolled its vast volume through more than eighteen degrees of latitude, and separated the states of Wisconsin, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Mississippi on its left or E. bank, from the states of Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana on the W., it is discharged into the gulf, chiefly through an alluvial tongue which stretches for upwards of 60 m. into sea. The Mississippi receives many important tributaries, the chief of which are—on the E., the Wisconsin, the Illinois, the Ohio, 1097 m. from its mouth, and the Yazoo; from the W., the Minnesota, the Des Moines, the Missouri, 1330 m. from its source, or 1286 from the mouth, the Francis, the White, the Arkansas, and the Red. The river is naturally viewed under two heads. The Upper Mississippi, above the influx of the Missouri; and the Main Mississippi, below that junction. The former is not so large as the Missouri, but having been first explored, it received and retains the name of the Mississippi. Its waters are remarkably clear, but after commingling with those of the Missouri, they become exceedingly turbid, and contain about three-tenths of sediment. The area of its basin is 169,000 sq. m., consisting mostly of prairie land, and is becoming rapidly cultivated. The entire length of the river from the source of the Missouri is 4382 m. [MISSOURI.] The chief cities on its banks are, on the upper river, St Paul, La Crosse, Prairie du Chien, Dubuque, Muscatine, Burlington, Quincy, and Hannibal; and on the main river stand St Louis, Cairo, Memphis, Vicksburg, Natchez, Baton-Rouge, and New Orleans. The descent of the Mississippi from its source to its mouth averages over 6 in. per mile; the upper river falling 24 in., and the main stream 3 in. per mile. In the upper part of its course it forms several cataracts, the principal of which are the Peckagama, 209 m. from the source, where it falls 20 ft. in 300 yds.; the Little Falls, 10 ft.; the Big Falls, 16 ft., consisting of a series of breaks and shutes extending over 800 yds.; the Prairie Rapids, six in number, which have a descent of about 20 ft. in 5 m.; and lastly, the Falls of St Anthony, 650 m. from the source, descend 80 ft. in less than three-fourths of a m., consisting of one leap of 16 ft., and rapids above and below. The elevations of the various points on the river are, Itasca Lake, 1575 ft.; Falls of St Anthony, 856 ft.; Prairie du Chien, 600 ft.; mouth of the Missouri, 416 ft. at high water; mouth of Ohio, 322 ft.; Memphis, 221 ft.; Natchez, 66 ft.; Baton-Rouge, 33 ft.; and New Orleans, 10½ ft. The width varies from 15 ft. at Itasca Lake, 1200 ft. at St Paul, at mouth of Missouri 5000 ft., and decreasing gradually to 2470 below New Orleans; and its average depth below the Ohio ranges from 90 to 120 ft. The mean discharge of water from this enormous river is 675,000 cubic ft. per second, by which 3,627,200,000 tons of sedimentary matter are yearly transported to the gulf in a state of suspension, constituting 1 sq. m. of deposit 241 ft. in depth. Besides this amount, it pushes into the sea large quantities of earthy matter, probably amounting to 750,000,000 cubic ft. annually. Its drainage area is 1,244,000 square miles, nearly one-seventh of all North America, and equal to more than one-third of Europe. This vast region, from its almost unexampled fertility, has obtained the title of the Garden of the World. The Mississippi is extremely winding in its course, sometimes a bend of 30 m. will occur where the distance across the neck does not exceed a mile. This tends to check the current, and facilitates navigation.

Vessels are usually eight or ten days in ascending the river to New Orleans, and often nine or ten weeks in reaching the Illinois River. Steamers, however, make the passage from Cincinnati to New Orleans and back in less than twenty days. Large ships seldom ascend above Natchez. The number of steamboats now plying on its waters is supposed to be above 1500. The delta of the Mississippi has an area of about 15,000 sq. m., and the depth of the alluvion is estimated at 1000 ft. It is a remarkable feature of the Mississippi, that flowing from N. to S., it has such a variety of climate, and consequently of productions, in the different parts of its basin, from the furs and cereal grains of the N. to the almost tropical growths of the S. As spring advances from the S., it releases in succession the snows of the lower and of the upper valley, and finally the remote sources. The annual swell of the waters is in consequence gradual and long continued, commencing usually about the end of February, and continuing to rise till the 1st of June, when they again subside. In some seasons the waters do not rise above the embankments, and in others the entire lower valley is submerged, and often great destruction of property occasioned. For many miles above and below New Orleans, embankments have been raised, called levees, from 5 to 10 ft. high, on both sides of the river.

MISSISSIPPI, one of the U. S. of North America, in the S.W. part of the Union, mostly between lat. 30° 12' and 35° N., lon. 88° 12' and 91° 45' W.; separated W. by the Mississippi river from Arkansas and Louisiana, having on other sides the states Tennessee, Alabama, and Louisiana, and S.E. ward touching an inlet of the Gulf of Mexico. Area 47,156 sq. m. P. (1860) 791,805, of whom 778 were free coloured, and 436,631 slaves. Surface in the S. and W. flat and marshy, whence it rises into a tolerably elevated region in the E. and N. The climate is unhealthy. There are churches of all denominations, 3 colleges, with an aggregate attendance of 204 students, 762 public schools, and 189 academies. Principal rivers, the Yazoo, Pearl, and Pascagoula; & it has many lines of railway. Principal products, cotton and sugar in the S., maize, indigo, melons, grapes, and other fruits, tobacco, & timber. Principal towns, Jackson, the cap., Columbus, Natchez, the chief seat of trade, and Vicksburg. The state is divided into 59 cos. Present constitution formed in 1832. It was admitted into the Union in 1817; in 1861 it seceded, and joined the Southern Confederacy; and in 1863 the city of Vicksburg, after a long siege, surrendered to the Federals.

MISSISSIPPI, two cos. of the U. S., North America.—I. in the E.N.E. of Arkansas. Area 1000 sq. m. P. 2434 free, 1461 slaves.—II. in the S.E. part of Missouri. Area 400 sq. m. P. 3849 free, 1010 slaves.

MISSIRI, Mesambria, a seaport town of European Turkey, Rumili, on a peninsula in the Black Sea, 17 m. N.E. Bourgas, with a harbour, formerly a principal station of the Byzantine fleets.

MISSOLOGHI, a town, Greece. [MESOLOGHI.] MISSON, a pa. of England, co. Notts, 3 m. E.N.E. Bawtry. Ac. 6129. P. 803.

MISSOORIE, India, a sanitarium, 7000 ft. above the sea.

MISSOURI (i. e., "Mud River"), the longest trib. of the Mississippi river, North America, rises among the Rocky Mountains in the territory of Idaho, lat. 45° N. and lon. 111° 53' W., not more than a mile from the head waters of the Columbia river, which flows W. to the Pacific. Its course is first N. for 460 m., when it enters the territory of Dakota, which it traverses E. for 800 m., then S.E., separating, in its further descent, the territory Nebraska and state Kansas on the l. b. from Iowa and Missouri on the right, which last it traverses S.E. by E. ward, and joins the Mississippi near St. Louis, at an elevation of 416 feet above the sea, and 1286 m. from the Gulf of Mexico. It receives no very important affluent on its l. b. the principal are Marias, Milk, and James rivers, or Rivière à Jaques. On the r. b. are the Madison and Gallatins forks from Idaho, above which the river receives the name of Jefferson Fork, these three being the reputed head waters of the Missouri; Yellow Stone, Little Missouri, Shyenne, and White, from Dakota; the Niobrara and Nebraska or Platte river from Nebraska, and Kansas from the state of the same name, and lastly Osage in Missouri. Above the Marias river, and 411 m. from the source of the Missouri, the river is compressed to a width of 150 yards for a distance of 6 m. by precipices which rise from the water's edge to a height of 1200 feet. This wild gorge is called the "Gate of the Rocky Mountains." About 110 m. below this occur the Great Falls, where the river is precipitated over five ledges, one of which is 75 feet in height, and the others respectively 12, 42, 6, and 25 feet. These falls are considered among the grandest in North America. On the banks of the Missouri stand the cities of Jefferson, Lexington, Kansas, and Sioux. The breadth varies from 1500 feet below the Great Falls to 2500 at Sioux city and 3000 feet at the mouth. Its course throughout is rapid and its waters turbid, but no serious obstacle is presented to navigation from its mouth to the Falls, a distance of 2670 m., except perhaps shallows during the season of drought. The heights of various points on the river are—the junction of the Three Forks 4819 feet, foot of Falls 2964 feet, Sioux city 1065 feet, and at mouth 416 feet. Below the junction of the Niobrara river the Missouri flows through a fertile and populous region, but above that confluence its basin is an uncultivated waste, where comparatively little rain falls, in consequence of which the volume of the river is disproportionately small, when the drainage area is considered. Its mean discharge of water per second is 120,000 cubic feet, which is only about three-quarters of that of the Ohio, although its basin is nearly two and a half times as large, namely, 518,000 sq. m. The length of the river is stated at 3096 m., which, added to the lower Mississippi, gives a total of 4382 m. [MISSISSIPPI.]

MISSOURI, one of the U. S., North America, mostly between lat. 36° 30' and 40° 36' N., lon. 89° 13' and 95° 35' W., having E. the Mississippi river, separating it from Illinois, Kentucky, and Tennessee; S. Arkansas, N. Iowa, and W. Nebraska, Kansas, and Indian Terr. Chief towns, Jefferson city (the cap.), St. Louis, Hannibal, Booneville, Lexington, and Platte city. Area 67,880 sq. m. P. (1860) 1,182,012, of whom 3572 were free coloured, and 114,931 were slaves. Surface mostly undulating, and having many extensive prairies. S. of the river Missouri it rises in the Ozark chain to about 2000 feet. Along the banks of the Osage, and N. the Missouri river, which intersects the state from W. to E., there is a good deal of rich land. Vegetable products comprise tobacco, cotton, maize, wheat, rye, oats, barley; and the soil and climate adapt the country to yield all the products of the S. states, except sugar. Large herds of cattle, hogs, and horses are reared; and beef, pork, tallow, hides, and live stock, with lead, furs, timber, and maize, constitute the chief exports. The state is very rich in iron ore, lead, copper, coal, and other mineral products. It possesses also a great variety of marbles. It has woollen and cotton factories, iron works, breweries, distilleries, and tanneries. There are churches of all denominations; and the state has six colleges, with an aggregate attendance of 400 students, and 18,400 volumes in their libraries; two medical schools, with 164 students; a state penitentiary, deaf-mute, blind, and lunatic asylums. It is divided into 100 cos. It was admitted into the Union as a slave state in 1821, joined the Southern Confederacy in 1861, and was the theatre of many conflicts in the war of secession.—II. a township, Missouri, cc. Boone.

MLAVA, a river of Servia, joins the Danube, 13 m. E.N.E. Semendria, after a N. course of 50 m.

MLAVA or MLAWA, a town of Poland, prov. and 46 m. N.N.E. Plotzk. P. 3930.

MOA, an island of the E. Archipelago, lat. 8° 15' S., lon. 128° 5' E. Length 20 miles.

MOAMA, a post-town of New S. Wales, co. Cadell, 42 m. from Deniliquin. P. 144.

MOATE, a town, Ireland, co. Westmeath, on the Grand Canal, 9 m. E.S.E. Athlone. P. 1960.

MOBBERTY, a pa. of England, co. Chester, 2 m. E.N.E. Nether-Knutsford. Ac. 5138. P. 1245.

MOBILE, a co. of the U. S., North America, in S.W. of Alabama. Area 1316 sq. m. P. (1860) 29,755 free, 11,376 slaves.

MOBILE, a city and seaport of the U. S., North America, Alabama, cap. co., at the mouth of Mobile river, in Mobile Bay, an inlet of the Gulf of Mexico, 120 m. N.E. New Orleans, next to which city it is now the chief port in the Union for the export of cotton. P. (1860) 29,258. The adjacent marshes are partly drained; the town has been well rebuilt, having been destroyed by fire in 1839. Here are Barton academy, a United States naval hospital, and 6 m. distant is Springhill Roman Catholic college. The bay is defended by Fort Morgan, and has a lighthouse at its entrance, lat. 30° 10' 30" N., lon. 88° 15' W. Mobile River is formed by the junction of the Alabama and Tombigbee rivers, length 40 m. A regular steamboat communication is kept up with New Orleans, via Lake Borgue, and it is connected by railway with Ohio.

MOCALANGA or MOCARANGUA. [MONOMOTAPA.]

MOCAS, a pa. of England, co. and 10 m. W.N.W. Hereford. Ac. 1163. P. 196.

MOCHA, an island of Chile, off the coast of Araucania, lat. of S. summit 38° 24' S., lon. 74° W. Length 8 m. At its N. end is a peak 1230 feet in height. It is resorted to by whalers.

MOCHA, a town of Chile. [CONCEPCION.]

MOCHA or МОКНА, a fortified seaport town of Arabia, Yemen, on the Red Sea, 55 m. N.N.W. the Strait of Bab-el-Mandeb. Lat. 13° 20' N.; lon. 43° 12' 2" E. P. 7000. It stands on the margin of a sandy plain, between two points of land which enclose a small bay adapted for vessels of 10 or 12 feet water. It exports annually about 10,000 tons of the finest coffee to Jiddah, Suez, and Bombay, with dates, gums, senna, horns, hides, balm, ivory, and gold-dust; and imports rice, piece goods, iron, hardwares, slaves, and ghee from Abyssinia, whence many of its exported goods are brought to Mocha in the way of transit.—Mocha is a country S.W. of Abyssinia.

MONTREAL (formerly the Indian vill. Hoche- laga), the second city and river port, and the chief seat of commerce of Canada East, on the S.S.E.

side of the island of same name in the river St

Lawrence, at the foot of the Royal Mountain, whence its name, 140 m. S.W. Quebec. Lat. 45°

30' N.; lon. 73° 35' W. P. (1851) 77,381; (1864)

120,000, of French Canadian; Scotch, English, and Irish descent. Mean temp. of year 45°·8, winter 17°·8, summer 71°·4, Fahr. It is divided into an upper and a lower town; the latter, along the river, being the trading quarter, and the former the residence of the principal merchants.

The Roman Catholic cathedral is a fine building,

255 feet in length by 134 in breadth, faced with stone, having two towers, each 225 feet high, and capable of containing 8000 to 9000 persons; several other Roman Catholic churches and monastic establishments, the latter comprising the hôtel Dieu, and asylums of the grey and black nuns. The church of England has recently erected a new cathedral at an expense of 20,000l.;

St Andrew Scotch Church, a Gothic structure,

cost 10,000l.; there are also American Protestant churches, a general hospital, gov. house, banks, ordnance office, merchants' exchange, 4 market houses, and the statue of Nelson on a Doric pillar. During the riots of 1849, the Parliament

House and valuable library were burned. Mont- real has a college, besides the university of M'Gill college, endowed by a citizen in 1814, and chartered in 1821; it has a staff of 20 professors, and (in 1862) 296 students; a royal grammar school, and many other schools, public libraries, and institutions. Several newspapers are printed here. Its solid limestone quays, uniting with the locks & wharves of the Lachine canal, present several m. of continuous masonry, and a broad terrace divides the city from the river through its entire extent. It is supplied with water brought by a magnificent aqueduct of 5 miles from the St Lawrence, above Lachine rapids, at a cost of 120,000l. The Mount Royal cemetery is finely situated on the north slope of the mountain, 2 m. from the city. Montreal is connected by railway with New York, Boston, and Portland. Victoria bridge, which conveys the line of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada across the St Lawrence at Montreal, was commenced in 1854, and opened with great pomp by the Prince of Wales in 1860. It is tubular, like the Britannia bridge of North Wales, but 10,284 feet, or nearly 2 m. long, and rests on 24 piers and 2 abutments of solid masonry; the central span being 350 feet. This magnificent bridge completes the entire chain of railway communication between the Atlantic and the Western States of America. The trade in furs has declined, but it has increasing trade in cast-iron founding, distilling, brewing, and ship-building; with factories for soap, candles, tobacco, hardware, and floor-cloth. In 1856 the exports and imports amounted to 20,000,000 dollars, but in 1862 they had increased to 39,000,000 dollars. A destructive fire occurred here on the 8th and 9th July 1852, when 1108 houses were destroyed, of the estimated value of 340,814l. But such is the vast progress of improvement, that, in 1863, the number of new buildings erected amounted to 736. Montreal was founded in 1640, and taken from the French in 1760.—Montreal Island, in the middle of the St Lawrence, is 32 m. in length and 10 m. in breadth. It forms a co., divided into 2 ridings, E. on Hochelega, and W. on Jacques Cartier, each of which sends a member to the Provincial Parliament.

Moscow (Russ. Moskwa), a city of Europe, former cap. of Russia, near its centre, and now cap. of the gov. Moscow, on the Moskwa, and on railway to St Petersburg and Nijni-Novgorod, 390 m. S.E. St Petersburg, in lat. (Ivan Veliki) 55° 45' 21" N., lon. 37° 37' 54" E. P. (1858) 336,370; (1864) estim. at 400,000, of whom nine-tenths belong to the national Greek Church. Altitude 480 feet. Mean temperature of year 40°, winter 15°, summer 64°, Fahr. It covers a large circular area, and consists of the Kreml (or Kremlin), a walled town or citadel, surrounded by other quarters, enclosed by walls, beyond which are several suburbs. Since 1812 the city has been rebuilt, but is still mostly of wood. The principal edifices within the Kreml are the ancient palace where the Czars were crowned and buried, an arsenal, and a senate-house, a magnificent structure. Within the same area is the new palace, completed in 1850, ornamented with the finest statuary and sculpture; the cathedral of St Vassili; the orphan hospital, bazaar, and exchanges; the church of the Annunciation, in which the sovereigns of Russia are re-crowned; and the church of Ivan Veliki, with an elegant dome, 269 feet high. The great bell of Moscow, the largest ever founded, 21 feet high, 20 feet in diameter, and weighing 198 tons 2 cwt. 1 lb., long buried under the soil, was raised and placed on a pedestal in 1836. Moscow is supplied with water by means of an aqueduct 9 miles in length; is the residence of the wealthiest and most ancient noble families, the seat of a section of the senate, of a military governor-general, and of a regency or council of administration. Its arsenal, surrounded by about 1200 pieces of artillery, taken from the French, and containing arms for 1000 infantry and 1000 cavalry, and an immense hall for exercising the troops in wet weather. The university, founded in 1755, has an average attendance of 1800 students, and a library of 90,000 vols.; an observatory, museums of natural history, botanic garden, and numerous scientific and literary institutions. Its manufs. comprise cottons, woollens, and silks, in which steam machinery is employed. It has also manufs. of carpets, jewelry, and trinkets. It had (in 1861) 1344 industrial establishments, employing in all 106,000 workmen. From its central situation, and its communication by water with all the principal cities and ports of the empire, its trade is immense; besides the great lines of railway to St Petersburg and Nijni-Novgorod, already in operation, another is now (1864) in progress to Sevastopol. Moscow, founded in the middle of the 12th century, was sacked by the Moguls in 1233 and 1293. From the middle of the 14th century, it was considered the cap. of Russia. It was taken by the Poles in 1611. In 1703 Peter the Great transferred his residence to St Petersburg; but Moscow was still regarded by the Russians as the cap. of their empire. It was occupied by the French in 1812; but, after the battle of Borodino, the Russian general set it on fire, and thus compelled the French to commence their disastrous retreat.

MOSQUITA, or the MOSQUITO COAST, a maritime tract of Central America, prior to 1859 a protectorate of Great Britain, now forming the E. portion of the state of Nicaragua, having N. and E. the Caribbean Sea, and S. the river San Juan, which partly separates it from Costa Rica. Lat. 10° 45' to 16° N.; lon. 83° 15' to 86° W. But its limits are quite undefined, and the interior is almost wholly unknown. It is inhabited by the Mosquito Indians and numerous other aboriginal tribes. Chief town, Blewfields. By the convention of London, 1856, the river Segovia, which enters the Caribbean Sea near Cape Gracias a Dios, was fixed as the boundary with Honduras. Products, cacao, cotton, sugar, indigo, vanilla, and logwood. Mahogany, which grows luxuriantly in the warm damp climate of the shore, forms the principal export. During 1846, a considerable immigration of Germans took place at the Blewfields river. Early in 1848, the Nicaraguans attacked the Mosquito subjects at San Juan, but were defeated by a British force, and retired from the territory. In 1850, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty bound Britain and the United States not to occupy or colonize any portion of the territory; and by treaty of Jan. 1860, it was made over to the state of Nicaragua.

Its authority extends along the E. coast line opposite Madagascar, between lat.  $10^{\circ}$  and  $26^{\circ}$  S., or from Cape Delgado to Delagoa Bay, and stretching to an uncertain distance inland, and over the doms. Inhamban, Sabia, Sofala, and Querimba. Area of the territory actually under the Portuguese estimated at 200,000 sq. m., and pop. at 300,000. Surface level near the coast, where the rich soil is well cultivated, and yields excellent crops; but it is mountainous inland. The elephant and lion inhabit the gorges, and crocodiles abound in the rivers. Climate fine in the uplands, but unhealthy in the low districts. Principal river, the Zambezi. Products comprise wheat, maize, rice, manioc, sugar, coffee, indigo, numerous drugs, and fine timber, ivory, rhinoceros' horns, hippopotamus' teeth, skins, oil, ambergris, gold dust, coal, and nitre.

Gold and copper are found, turtle are plenty on the reefs, and pearl-fishing is profitably pursued. The slave trade is still rife in this region in spite of measures adopted by the Portuguese authorities. Mozambique is the residence of a general, and is divided into six districts. Other chief settlements are Quilimane, Sena, and Tete.

MOZAMBIQUE, a fortified maritime city, and the cap. of the Portuguese possessions in E.
