MUNICH (Germ. München), the cap. city of Bavaria, S. Germany, and of the prov. Upper Bavaria, on the Isar; here crossed by 3 bridges, 225 m. W. Vienna. Lat. of Frauenkirche (1690 feet above the sea),  $48^{\circ} 8' 45'' N.$ ; lon.  $11^{\circ} 34' 42'' E.$  P., including military, (1862) 148,201. Altitude 1676 feet. Mean temp. of year  $46^{\circ} 4$ , winter  $29^{\circ} 65$ , summer  $61^{\circ} 15$  Fahr. It is situated in a plain, and has suburbs of Au, Haidhausen, and Ober-Giesing around the walled city. In the old city numerous streets diverge from the Hauptplatz, a central square. In Karolinen-platz is an obelisk 100 ft. high, made out of cannon taken from the Russians in the campaign of 1812, erected to the memory of 80,000 Bavarians engaged in that campaign. On its W. and N. sides are the Pinakothek and Glyptothek, or museums of painting and ancient sculpture, rich in choice works of art, the former containing 300,000 engravings, and 9000 drawings; and the new Pinakothek, devoted to the work of recent artists. The new royal palace, the cathedral, having two towers 333 feet in height, the churches of the Theatiner, with the burial vaults of the Royal family, Jesuits, St Louis, All Saints (the court chapel with rich art-treasures), St Michael's, St Kajetan, Ludwig's Kirche, the Basilica, and St Mariahief, all ornamented with fresco painting and rich stained glass; Protestant and Greek churches, a Jews' synagogue, an opera house, and post-office. Adjacent to the palace is the Hoffgarten, a space surrounded by arcades, and near this a public park. The theatre, the largest in Germany, is seated for 2400 spectators. Among other public establishments are the Leuchtenberg gallery, formed by Prince Eugene Beauharnois; an academy of arts, with a triennial exhibition, salaried professors and pensioned students; a magnetical and meteorological observatory at the vill. of Bogenhausen, 2 m. N.E. The Ludwig-Maximilian university, removed from Landshut in 1826, comprises 5 faculties, and has 60 ordinary and 12 extraordinary professors, a medical school, & a library of 150,000 vols. There are also a polytechnic, and numerous other schools of art and science. The royal library has upwards of 100,000 printed vols., and 21,000 MSS. Here is also the Brazilian collection, made by Spix and Von Martius. All the superior courts, etc., of the Bavarian dom. are seated here. Except bronze and iron works, silk mills, and sugar refineries, Munich has few factories. It has manufs. of wax-cloth, paper-hangings, carriages, etc., and extensive breweries for the national beverage, Bavarian beer; its telescopes and mathematical instruments are famous, and it is greatly resorted to by the admirers and cultivators of the fine arts. Many newspapers and magazines are printed here. In a meadow to the W. is the colossal bronze statue of Bavaria, by Schwanthaler, 84 feet high, and near it is the "Hall of Fame." Munich is supposed to derive its name from having been founded, in 962, on a site belonging to a fraternity of monks (münchen); it was walled by Otho IV. in 1157, and taken by the Swedes under Gustavus Adolphus in 1632. Previous to 1820, Munich was a small unpretending town; it owes its celebrity as the great modern centre of science and the fine arts to the ex-king Ludwig I., who devoted to its embellishment his fortune and the best portion of his life.

Inverness, by the Inverness and Aberdeen Junction Railway. It has communication with the south by steamer. Area of pa. about 27 sq. m. P. (1861) 4488; do. of town, 3827. It is remarkably healthy, enjoying an almost complete immunity from epidemic diseases, and it is one of the stations established in connection with the Meteorological Department of the Board of Trade. Rainfall 26 inches. It has a co. hall, with court-house and gaol; an academy, museum, weekly newspaper, circulating library, three branch banks, a large and elegant marine hotel, salt and fresh water baths, a sandy beach admirably adapted for sea-bathing, and an excellent harbour, with breakwater and pier. Corp. rev. (1862-3) 849l. The bor. unites with Inverness, Forres, and Fortrose in sending one member to H. of C. Reg. electors (1863) 131.

NAIRNSHIRE, a small maritime co. of Scotland, having N. the Moray Firth, E. Elginshire, S. and W. Inverness-shires. Area, including detached dists. in Elgin, Inverness, and Ross, estimated at 215 sq. m., or 137,600 ac., upwards of 70,000 of which are cultivated. P. (1861) 10,065. Surface mostly rugged and mountainous, except along the coast. Principal rivers, Nairn and Findhorn. The agriculture of this co. closely resembles that of Morayshire. It has neither mines nor manufactures of importance, except whisky, of which about 50,000 gallons annually are made at Brackla distillery. The co. is divided into 5 pas., besides parts of pas. Chief town, Nairn. It is under one sheriff with Elgin & Banff, and unites with Elgin in sending 1 member to House of C. Reg. elect. (1863) 293.

NAIX, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Meuse, arr. Bar-le-Duc, on the site of the anc. Nasium, and where numerous fine statues, and other Roman antiquities, have been discovered.

NAKEL or NARLO, a town of Prussian Poland, gov. & 18 m. W. Bromberg, on the Netze. P. 3563.

NAKHITCHEVAN or NAKHSIVAN ("first place of descent"), a town of Asiatic Russia, Transcaucasia, cap. dist., near the Aras, 83 m. S.E. Erivan. It was mostly ruined during the last Russian and Persian war. It claims to be the oldest city in the world; its Armenian name and tradition implying that the tenants of the ark first resided here after the flood. Its vicinity is fertile in fruits, especially grapes; but it is noted for insalubrity. The dist. Nakhitchevan, separated S.ward from Persia by the Aras, has on other sides the provs. Erivan and Karabagh, and comprises also the towns Abbasabad, Mergeri, and Terra Kali. It was ceded to Russia in 1828.

NAKHITCHEVAN, a town of Russia, gov. Ekaterinoslav, on the Don, 18 m. S.W. Novo-Tcherkask. P. 13,200. It was founded by an Armenian colony in 1780, is the residence of the Armenian patriarch in Russia, and is built in the Oriental style. Principal edifices, Armenian churches, convents, and a bazaar. It has manufactures of silk and cotton stuffs, soap and leather, with numerous distilleries; and an extensive trade, being, with the contiguous town Rostov, a principal entrepôt of the Don, and of the commerce from Taganrog to the interior of Russia.

NAKHODEH, a large vill. of Persia, prov. Azerbijan, S.S.W. Urumiyah, cap. the fertile dist. Solduz, formerly the see of a Christian bishop.

NAKLO or NACKILLOO, a marit. town of Persia, prov. Laristan, on the Persian Gulf, 50 m. W.N.W. Charrack, with a fort and a pearl fishery.

NAKSKOV, a seaport town of Denmark, island Laaland, on a bay of its W. coast, 15 m. N.W. Marieboe. P. 3687. It has a trade in corn.

NAMAQUA COUNTRY, the W. and marit. portion of the Hottentot country, S. Africa, the Great Namaqua land being N., and the Little Namaqua territory S., of Orange river. The native tribes number 40,000 or 50,000; and wild animals, rhinoceros, giraffe, and lion, are yet found, though rapidly diminishing in numbers.

NAMESZTO, a market town of N. Hungary, co. Arva, 16 m. N.N.E. Kubin. P. 1726.

NAMESCHT, a town of Moravia, circ. and 27 m. N.N.E. Znaim, on the Oslava, here crossed by a bridge. P. 1850. It has manufs. of woollen cloths and linens.—II. a market town of Moravia, circ. and 8 m. W. Olmutz. P. 1530.

NAMOI, a river of New South Wales, rises on N. slope of Liverpool range, in the S. of Parry co., and flowing N.W. 270 m., separates cos. Inglis, Nandiwar, Jamison, on its N. bank, from Parry, Buckland, Pottinger, and White, and receives on the left the rivers Conadilly, Turra-beil, Brigalow creek, and Baradine. It falls into the Darling at Walgett.

NAMSLAU, a town of Prussian Silesia, gov. and 30 m. E. Breslau, cap. circ., on the Weida. P. 4000. It has manufactures of linens and woollens; breweries and important cattle fairs.

NAMUR, a strongly fortified city of Belgium, cap. prov. Namur, at the conf. of the Sambre and Meuse, 36 m. S.E. Brussels, with which it is connected by railway. P. (1862) 25,989. Its cathedral is one of the finest in Belgium; among its other churches are St Loup and Notre Dame; it has a town-hall, and a public library; its fortress is situated on a rock which commands the Meuse and the Sambre. It is celebrated for its cutlery, and has manufs. of iron, steel, and bronze articles, foundries, glass-works, and tanneries. Namur has sustained numerous sieges, was taken by the French in 1692, by the English and Dutch in 1695, and again by the French in 1701 and 1746.

Under the French empire it was cap. dep. Sambre and Meuse. The prov. of Namur is rich in mines of iron, lead, copper, and coal. Soil fertile in grain, hemp, and lint. Cattle are extensively reared. It is divided into 2 arrs. Chief towns Namur and Dinant. Area 1417 sq. m. P. (1862) 301,397.

NANAIMO, a town and port of Vancouver Island, British North America, in Gulf of Georgia.

NANAS, a market town, Central Hungary, circ. Szabolcs, 24 m. N.N.W. Debreczin. P. 10,390.

NANCAY, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Cher, arr. Bourges, cant. Vierzon. P. 1060.

NAN-CHANG, a city of China, cap. prov. Kiangse, on the Kan-kiang river, 285 m. S.W. Nanking, in lat. 28° 35' N., lon. 116° E.

NANCOWRY, one of the NICOBAR ISLANDS.

NANCY, a comm. and town of France, cap. dep. Meurthe, 29 m. S. Metz, on l. b. of the Meurthe, and 221 m. E. Paris, on railway to Strasbourg. P. (1861) 49,305. It has a town-hall, a bishop's palace, university, academy for the depts. Meurthe, Meuse, and Vosges, a tribunal of commerce, national college, school of medicine, normal school, and a library of 30,000 vols.; cabinet of natural history, and a botanic garden. In the Place Royale is a statue of the Duke of Lorraine, to whom it was indebted for many improvements. Its embroidery is celebrated, and it has manufactures of cloths, hats, oils of all kinds, hardwares, instruments, potash, soap, bricks and tiles, vermicelli, vinegar, etc. Nancy was taken by Charles the Bold in 1475, and he was killed while besieging it in 1477. Louis XIII. took it in 1634. Its citadel is still preserved, but its fortifications were destroyed by Louis XIV. Birth-place of General Druot.

NANFIO or ANAPHI, Membliaros, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, South Cyclades, gov. and 14 m. E. Thera (Santorin). Area 25 sq. m. P. 800. Soil mostly barren, but it produces corn, figs, and honey.—Pulo Nanji is a group of rocky islets a little S.E.ward.

NAN-GAN, a city of China, prov. Kiang-se, cap. dep., on the Kiang, 180 m. N.N.E. Canton.

NANGASAKI (properly Nagasaki), next to Kanagawa, the principal seaport and commercial city of Japan, on the S.W. side of the island Kiu-siu, in lat. 32° 44' 8" N., lon. 129° 51' 53" E. Estimated pop. from 70,000 to 100,000. It stands on a hill slope, and is regularly built. Chief edifices are the palaces of the governors and other grandees, the Dutch and Chinese factories, arsenal, theatres, and upwards of 60 temples, enclosed by gardens, which, with numerous tea-houses, form the favourite public resort of the population. The harbour is about 6 m. in length by 3 m. in breadth, and ships lie securely sheltered in 5 or 6 fathoms water. In 1862, 105 British vessels (tonnage 31,681), and 212 foreign vessels (tonnage 69,945), chiefly American, Dutch,

French, and Russian, entered the port. The imports consist chiefly of cotton, manufactured piece goods, cotton yarn, woollen manufactures, tin, and lead. Total value, 525,000*l.* Exports are, camphor, coals, crockery, cassia, gall nuts, planks, seaweed, rape-seed, silk, tea, tobacco, and wax. Total value about 750,000*l.* The total value of foreign trade at Nagasaki is about 1,275,000*l.* The Dutch and Chinese traders who resort to it were, previous to 1859, confined under strict supervision to the strongly fortified and artificial island Desima, off the shore, and only 600 feet in length by 240 feet in breadth. Shops numerous and well supplied; and here are many breweries for rice-beer. Nagasaki was opened to foreign commerce 1st July 1859, and in 1863 there were about 40 foreign residents.

NANGIS, a comm. and town of France, dep. Seine-et-Marne, 13 m. W. Provins. P. 2421.

NANIAMO, a dist. of British N. America, 60 m. N. of Victoria, lat. 49° 15' N., lon. 123° 45' W. Excellent coal was discovered here in 1850, and now (1864) it is largely worked.

NANKA ISLANDS, a group of islets of the Asiatic Archipelago, in the Strait of Banca.

NAN-KING or NANKIN ("Court of the South"), a city, and the ancient cap. of China, cap. prov. Kiang-su, 237 m. by the river to Woosung, situated on the rt. b. of the Yang-tze-kiang, at its mouth. Lat. 32° 40' N.; lon. 118° 48' E. P. formerly 4,000,000, now probably 11,000,000. Its ancient walls can be traced for 35 m., but Nankin has so declined since the transference of the seat of empire to Peking in the 13th century, that the modern walls are of much less extent, and the city scarcely occupies 1-8th part of the surface enclosed by them. The city is commanded by hills, especially on the E., and is otherwise ill calculated for defence. It is divided into a Chinese and a Tartar town, separated by walls and gates. Principal objects, now ruined, were the porcelain tower of 9 stories and 200 feet in height, completed in 1432, and the "tomb of kings," supposed to be of the Ming dynasty (A.D. 1328 to 1621), leading to which is a fine paved road, with an avenue of gigantic armed figures; the governor's palace, and an observatory. The tower was destroyed in 1858 by the Imperialists, to prevent the rebels making it a fort. Since then the city has been held by the Taipings, who have made it their headquarters. The continued strife which has been carried on by the contending parties, has desolated the surrounding country for miles, and the interior of the city is in ruins. There were manufs. of crape, satin, paper, artificial flowers, China or Indian ink, and nankeen, which hence derives its name, but is also made throughout the whole prov. It had an extensive trade, and by the great canal, which crosses the Yang-tze-kiang, about 40 m. Eward, it communicates directly with Peking. For years its industrial manufactures have ceased, and now (1864) its trade is limited to contraband traffic in arms, and food for the beleaguered inhabitants. It was also the place of a grand viceroy, with authority over the Kiang provs., of a great military dépôt, and the chief seat of literature in the empire, which are now usurped by a fanatical despot and his illiterate myrmidons. The British forces remained before it from the 10th to the 29th of August 1842, on which latter day the treaty of Nanking between China and England was signed and ratified.

NAN-LING, the loftiest mountain chain in China, lat 26° N., and between lon. 104° and 118° E., separates the basins of the Yang-tze-kiang N.ward from that of the Hong-kiang and its affluents S.ward, and the Quang provs. from those of Kwi-Choo, Hou-nan, and Kiang-se. Several of the summits rise above the snow line.

NANN or NONNI, a river of Manchuria, flows S. 660 m., and joins the Sungari in lat. 45° 30' N., and lon. 124° 45' E.; on its banks are the towns Merguen and Tsitsihar.

NANNERCK, a pa. of N. Wales, cos. Flint and Denbigh, 5 m. W.S.W. Flint. Ac. 1849. P. 275.

NANTERRE, a comm. and mkt. town of France, dep. Seine, 7 m. S. St Denis, on railway from Paris to St Germain. P. 3549. It has manufs. of glue and chemical products.

NANTES, Nannetes, a comm. and city of France, cap. dep. Loire-Inférieure, 208 m. S.W. Paris. P. (1861) 113,625. It has a port on several islands in the Loire, at the confluence of the Erdre and Sèvre-Nantaise, and at the head of a railway from Tours. The town, on rt. b. of the Loire, communicates by 12 bridges with the islands, and the suburb Madelaine on l. b. It is a bishop's see, and has a cathedral and an old castle built in 938, a tribunal of commerce, national college, normal school, public library of 45,000 vols., observatory, botanic garden, and a magazine of munitions for the marine. Chief edifices, prefecture, corn exchange, town-hall, and mint. It has ship-building, 15 cotton, 3 wool, and 3 hemp spinning factories, 13 copper, 17 iron, and 8 cast iron foundries, one palm-oil-soap factory, 2 steam saw-mills, 30 or 40 currieries and tanneries, 6 sugar refineries, gas and water works, and a large government tobacco factory. The railway to L'Orient was opened in 1862, and 3 bridges have been built over the Loire. The port admits vessels of only 200 tons; larger vessels unload at Paimboeuf. In proportion as the mercantile marine of St Nazaire has increased of late years, the shipping of Nantes has diminished. Entered (1862) 2781 vessels (tonnage 186,095); cleared 3174 vessels (tonnage 206,215). Exports consist chiefly of grain, flour, wine, and sugar; imports of coal, iron, timber, coffee, sugar, iron-ore, salt, wine, sulphur, pepper, etc. Nantes is the birth-place of Bouguer, the mathematician, and of Fouché. Condivincium was cap. of the Nametes before the conquest of the Gauls by the Romans. It sustained numerous sieges, and was united to France with the rest of Bretagne. The edict of Nantes was proclaimed here by Henri iv. in 1598. The Vendean army attacked it without success in 1793. The canal of Nantes connects the Loire and the Vilaine rivers.

NAPIER, a township of the U. S., North America, Pennsylvania, co. Bedford.

NAPLES (anc. Magna Græcia Campania), prior to 1860 a separate state, now incorporated with the kingdom of Italy. It formed a political and administrative division of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies, comprising the continental part of the state (cap. Naples). The Neapolitan states occupied the S. part of the Italian peninsula, between lat.  $37^{\circ} 56'$  and  $42^{\circ} 55' N.$ , lon.  $12^{\circ} 54'$  and  $18^{\circ} 33' E.$ , bounded E. by the Adriatic, S. by the Ionian Sea, W. by the Tyrrhenian Sea (Mediterranean) and the Strait of Messina, and N. by the Pontifical States and Terra di Lavoro. The coasts are high and bold, especially on the W., and greatly indented. Chief capes, Gaeta, Sorrento, Licosa, Baia, Vaticano, Nao, and Leuca. The principal gulfs are those of Gaeta, Naples, Salerno, Policastro, St Eufemia, Squillace and Tarentum (which surround the two peninsulas of Otranto and Calabria), and Manfredonia. Surface in general mountainous, but includes extensive valleys, especially the plain of Capitanata and that of Terra di Lavoro (the Campania felice of the Romans). The chain of the Apennines traverses the country nearly throughout its entire length. In the Abruzzi, where it attains its greatest height, it separates into three lateral ranges, which re-unite near Isernia; at Monte Caruso it again divides into two branches, the most elevated of which traverses Calabria. The culminating point of the whole is Monte Corno, 9521 feet above the sea. The chief isolated mountains are the volcano of Vesuvius, and Monte Gargano near the Adriatic. Soil volcanic and subject to earthquakes. In 1857, 40 towns and villages were destroyed in the central provs., and 10,000 lives lost in this way. Chief rivers, the Garigliano and Volturno, which flow W. to the Tyrrhenian Sea; the Pescara, Biferno, Candellaro, and Ofanto, flowing E. to the Adriatic; the Bradano, Basiento, and Crate, to the Gulf of Tarentum; the only large lake, that of Celano or Fucino, was drained in 1862. Climate divided into three regions; in the lower region the temperature is so mild that vegetation is never interrupted; in the middle region snow occasionally falls, but soon disappears; in the elevated regions of the Abruzzi, cold is sometimes severe and long continued—snow lies on the Monte Corno nine months in the year. Naples is unhealthy in the marshy districts, and during the prevalence of the sirocco from July to September, when the heat is excessive. The flora has, in addition to the plants common to Italy, several tropical products, including cotton, the sugar cane, pistachio, and dates. The wild boar, porcupine, and game of all kinds abound in the forests; and the coasts have always been celebrated for fish, on which the tunny, anchovy, mullet, and coral fisheries employ many of the inhabitants. Domestic animals comprise sheep, goats, and pigs; cattle are not numerous; horses are of a small breed, but active; buffaloes pasture in herds in the marshes; sheep are extensively reared in the plains of the Capitanata, and hogs and goats are numerous on the shores of the Adriatic. Agriculture, which is in a very backward state, occupies the greater part of the population. The chief crops are wheat, maize, cotton, melons, rice, oil, wine, hemp, lint, tobacco, and fruits. The olive is extensively cultivated in Otranto, Bari, and Calabria. The wines of the Neapolitan states are the best in Italy. The celebrated Lacrima Christi, a red wine, is grown in vineyards on the flanks of Vesuvius, which belong to the crown. Oranges and lemons are grown in the Capitanata, saffron in Basilicata, the Abruzzi and Calabria Ultra; lint and hemp are generally raised to a considerable extent. Manna is largely cultivated in Calabria, and is monopolized by the government. Silk is an important product, especially in the Terra di Lavoro, the Principati, and Calabria. Manufs. are unimportant; the chief are silks, linens, and woollens at Naples, Sorò, and Isola, and paper, glass, and cutlery to a small extent. Commerce is mostly concentrated in the cap. Chief exports, olive oil, silk, hemp, wool, wine, grain, macaroni, and coral. Imports, colonial & manuf. goods, iron & cutlery. Monasteries & nunneries were formerly very numerous, but many have been suppressed. It is calculated that there was one monk for every 250 of the population. Public instruction was entirely in the hands of the priests, & all classes were deplorably ignorant. A growing dissatisfaction with the oppressive measures of the former government led to frequent outbreaks between 1826 and 1846. A constitutional form of government was granted after the revolution in 1848; and, on procuring liberty of the press, several journals were published, but in the end of 1849 they were entirely suppressed. On 7th September 1860, the king, Francis II., fled to Gaeta; on the 8th, Garibaldi entered the city, and proclaimed the new kingdom of Italy; on 15th Sept. the Jesuits were expelled, and ecclesiastical domains ordered for sale; 7th Nov., Victor Emmanuel entered Naples as king of the Two Sicilies. The prov. of Naples has an area of 428 sq. m. P. (1862) 867,983. Since the commencement of the new dynasty in 1860, great improvements have been introduced, brigandage has been suppressed, order restored, and elementary education provided for. [ITALY.]

NAPLES (Ital. Napoli, anc. Neapolis), a city of S. Italy, formerly cap. kingdom of the Two Sicilies, and of the prov. and dist. of Napoli, now cap. prov. Naples, on the N. shore of the Bay of the same name, near the foot of Mount Vesuvius, connected by railway with Rome on the N. and Salerno on the S. Lat. of observatory 40° 51' 8" N.; lon. 14° 15' 5" E. P. (1861) 447,065, excluding a garrison of about 20,000. The climate of Naples is more bracing than that of Rome, and more temperate than either Rome or Florence, being modified by the sea and land breezes. Mean temp. of year 61°, summer 73°-1, winter 47°-6, Fahr. It is in the form of an amphitheatre, on the slopes of a range of hills, which is divided into two natural crescents by a ridge, that on the E. containing the largest and most ancient portion of the city, and that on the W. the modern city, called the Chiaia. The castles are: St Elmo, on a height; Castel del Carmine, now the Castel-Nuovo, between the royal palace and the sea; the Castel dell' Ovo, on a small island; and the Castel Capuano, of Norman origin, joined to the mainland by a causeway on arches 800 feet long. It is intersected from N. to S. by a long street called the Toledo, and is densely peopled; there are more than 1800 streets; the chief thoroughfares lighted with gas. Chief ecclesiastical edifices, a cathedral, built on 100 granite columns, which belonged to the temple of Apollo; 300 other churches, that of the Holy Apostles, built on the ruins of a temple of Mercury; San Paolo, Filippo Neri, Spirito Santo, the convent and church of San Martino; Sta. Chiara, with magnificent monuments and royal tombs; San Domenico Maggiore, recently restored and ornamented; and Monte Oliveto. There are 4 cemeteries around Naples. Other public buildings are, the royal palace; the old palace used as a record office; the Borbonico library, containing 200,000 printed books and 4000 MSS., and an immense collection of antiquities, sculptures, frescoes, mosaics, bronzes, etc., and the famous objects found at Herculaneum; the archiepiscopal palace, adjoining the cathedral. The Liquefaction of the blood of St Gennaro is the greatest religious festival of the capital. The spaces corresponding to our squares, which in other parts of Italy are called piazze, in Naples are called larghi. The largest of these is the Largo del Castello, with two fountains. Naples has 2 aqueducts, 4 springs, and 2 Artesian wells. There are also mineral springs of local celebrity. Naples was the usual residence of the sovereign, the seat of an archbishop, and of the central administration of the kingdom; it has a commercial tribunal, arsenal and dockyard adjoining the Castel Nuovo and the royal palace, a cannon-foundry, ship-building yards, and a royal marine hospital. Its university, occupying the old college of the Jesuits, has 54 professorships & a valuable library. It has an episcopal lyceum, medico-chirurgical school, veterinary school, deaf-mute institution, royal military school, schools of design and music, an observatory, a botanic garden, a mint, Chinese college, and a Royal Society. It is the centre of many learned institutions, and has four public libraries and many public schools; private palaces & museums, an exchange, theatres, among which the opera San Carlo is one of the largest in Italy. The Teatro di San Carlino is the headquarters of Pulcinella (Punch), and the characteristic theatre of Naples. The streets were infested with mendicants of all ages and both sexes, but this nuisance is being abated. The Marinella, a long open beach, beyond the Castel del Carmine, was formerly the abode of the lazzaroni, a class which has lost its distinctive features, and the term is now applied to the fishermen. The Molo is one of the favourite promenades of the lower classes, as the Toledo is of the higher. There are 60 charitable institutions, comprising hospitals for the sick (sometimes with 2000 patients), blind, poor, orphan, and for the British and Americans. Manufactures, gloves, soap, perfumery, silks, artificial flowers, corals, earthenwares, hats, and carriages. It has royal typefoundries, iron and glass works, and is the first maritime city of South Italy. Naples has three ports—the Porto Piccolo, now used for boats only; the Porto Grande, for passenger and mercantile steam-vessels, with a lighthouse; and a much more extensive port, the foundations of which were laid in May 1862 by King Victor Emmanuel. The Porto Militare is a new harbour, exclusively for ships of the navy. Since the commencement of the new dynasty in 1860, vast improvements have been projected and carried out in Naples, and education is being rapidly extended. An English church to cost 7000*l.* is now (1864) in progress. [ITALY.] Imports, manuf. goods and colonial produce. Naples was founded by the Greeks, who called it Parthenope. Virgil studied here; and in the height of Rome's greatness, her emperors, statesmen, and historians resided at Naples. The city, enlarged by Adrian & Constantine, was sacked by Belisarius in A.D. 536. It was governed for a time by dukes under the Eastern emperors; and after throwing off their yoke, retained its independence for nearly 400 years. It was peopled successively under the Normans, the emperors of Germany, and the kings of Spain. Under Charles III. it was greatly extended and improved. It has often suffered from earthquakes, and from eruptions of Vesuvius. The French took it in 1799, and again in 1806. Joseph Bonaparte was made king of Naples, but was replaced by Murat in 1808, and the latter was driven from it by the Austrians in 1814. Naples was the scene of an outrage in May 1848, when it was plundered by the Lazzaroni, and 1500 lives were lost. Among the numerous objects of interest in the vicinity of Naples, are Vesuvius, Pompeii, and Herculaneum, the isle of Capri, in its bay, the tomb of Virgil; and Sorrento. Naples retains nothing of its mediæval fortifications but its three castles and a few modernized gates, the chief of which are the Porta Capuana and the Porta del Carmine. There are but few remains of antiquity in the immediate vicinity of Naples, the principal being the Catacombs on the hill of Capodimonte, and the Julian aqueduct, now called Ponti Rossi.

According to Religion the pop. is thus divided for 1859—Protestants 1,942,387; Lutherans 64,539; Roman Catholics 1,234,486; Greek 32; Jews 63,809.

Forming the W. extremity of the great plain of North Europe, the territory is perfectly flat, with the exception of a few low hills which traverse the provs. of Gelderland, Overyssel, and Utrecht; a considerable portion of it is formed of alluvium, or rescued by human industry from the sea, below the level of which much of it is situated. From the point of the Helder to the Hoekvan-Holland, at the mouth of the Maas, 78 miles, the coast is partly protected by natural downs, about 40 feet in height, composed of fine sand upheaved by the sea, and fixed by plantations of sea-grass (arundo-arenaria); on the other parts of the coast, especially in Zeeland, Friesland, and Gelderland, the sea is confined by enormous artificial dykes. The principal gulfs of the North Sea, on this coast, are the Zuyder Zee, the Lauwer Zee, and the Dollart. The principal rivers are the Rhine, Maas, and Scheldt. On entering the Netherlands, the Rhine separates into two branches, the S. most of which, called the Waal, flows W. 45 m., and joins the Maas near Gorcum; whilst the other, called the Rijn (Rhine), flows N.W. 6 m. to near Westervoort, where it again divides; the New Yssel on right, flowing N. 65 m. to the Zuyder Zee; and the Beneden Rijn on left, flowing W. 30 m. to Wyk-by-Duurstede. Here the Rhine again separates: the main stream, called the Leek or Lek, after a W. course of 35 m., joins the Maas 7 m. E. Rotterdam, while a branch on right, called the Kromme Rijn, flows N.W. to Utrecht: here the Rhine splits for the fourth time, the right branch called the Vecht, flowing N. to the Zuyder Zee, and the left, called the Old Rhine, W. past Woerden and Leyden, 35 m. to Katwyk on the North Sea. [MEUSE—SCHELDT.] Holland presents the appearance of an immense network of canals, which form the usual access not only to towns and villages, but even to private mansions. The most important are those of North Holland, between Amsterdam and the Helder (North Sea), 52 m. in length, 125 feet broad at the surface, and 21 feet in depth. By means of this important work, ships bound for Amsterdam avoid the danger and delay of navigating the Zuyder Zee: it is spacious enough to admit two frigates abreast. The Voorne canal, from Voorne to Hellevoetsluis, shortens the outlet from Rotterdam, the S., Williamsvaart, N. Brabant, etc. Since not only the surface but the bed of many of the canals is above the level of the land, the drainage of the polders or meadows through which they pass is an object of great solicitude; it is effected by means of pumps worked by windmills. The chief lake, now that the Haarlem Meer is drained, is that of the Y. Marshes are numerous, and some of them, as the Bourtange and Peel morasses in the E., are extensive. The islands form two principal groups; one situated in the estuary of the Scheldt and the Meuse, comprises N. and S. Beveland, Walcheren, Tholen, Schouwen, Over Flakke, Voorne, Beyerland, Ysselmonde, etc.; the others, at the entrance of the Zuyder Zee, include the Texel, Vlieland, Ter-Schelling, and Ameland. There are several islands in the Zuyder Zee. Climate less extreme than in N. Germany. Mean temp. of year (at Amsterdam) 49°·8, summer 64°·4, winter 35°·6, Fahr., but the temp. rises to 80° or 90° in autumn. Little snow falls. The canal from Amsterdam to the Helder is frequently frozen for three months in the year, and the Zuyder Zee is often frozen over in January. Atmosphere humid and unhealthy for strangers, especially in the W. provs. Winds generally strong, and tempests frequent in winter and spring. Prevailing winds N. and N.E.; when W. and N. winds are violent, they cause inundations, by accumulating the waters of the sea upon the coasts, or by repelling that of the rivers. The great amount of stagnant water would render the country uninhabitable but for the strong winds, which purify the atmosphere. The argillaceous soil has no minerals except a little bog iron, but immense deposits of turf and potters' clay. No stone of any size is to be found in the soil; and though, generally speaking, not a wooded country, large trees are by no means rare. The most fertile provs. are those of the S., and the least so those of the N.; a large tract of the formerly barren heath on the E. has been brought under culture by the pauper colony of Frederick's Oord: 3-4ths of the land are in pasture. Corn raised is insufficient for home consumption. The chief crops are rye, wheat, barley, buckwheat, oats, & potatoes; wheat is cultivated chiefly near Utrecht, in Friesland and Zeeland; vegetables, madder, millet, and horse radish in the last two provs.; flax is extensively cultivated in the S. provs., tobacco in Utrecht and Gelderland, and the vine in Luxemburg; potatoes, hemp, rape-seed, chicory, mustard, hops, and beetroot are cultivated generally. The flora resembles that of other European countries situated in the same latitude, but aquatic plants are more varied and extensive. Horticulture has long been a favourite employment of the Dutch, especially at Haarlem, which exports tulip, hyacinth, and other flower roots. Small fruit and vegetables are abundant; and bees are extensively reared in the provs. of Gelderland, Drenthe, and Utrecht. Rabbits and hares abound, as well as deer, pheasants, and partridges; water-fowl, and reptiles in the marshes. Storks are numerous, and almost superstitiously revered in some districts, and means are taken to prevent the destruction and to augment the number of these useful birds. The coasts abound in cod, turbot, sole, and other flat fish. Cattle and draught horses are of excellent breeds. In 1860, the country possessed 243,454 horses, 1,287,538 head of cattle, 865,728 sheep, 114,903 goats, and 276,586 pigs. Dairy work is the chief branch of rural industry; butter and cheese are in great repute, and form objects of extensive commerce. The fisheries formed the origin of prosperity in the Netherlands, and the herrings prepared by the Dutch still maintain their superiority. The whale fishery in the Sea of Spitzbergen has been carried on since the 16th century, but has now greatly declined. The manufacturing industry of the country is very active. During the 17th and 18th centuries, its typography enjoyed a well-merited reputation. The absence of coal, which is worked only in Limburg, and the prevalence of strong winds, have led to the adoption of the windmill as a motive power, and it is universally employed in all kinds of work, although the steam-engine is being largely introduced. The chief manufs. are linen, cotton, woollen, silks and velvets, paper, leather, carpets, cordage, hats, ribbons, glass, and fire-arms. It has iron and cannon foundries; powder-mills; saltpetre and tobacco factories. There are numerous distilleries of "Geneva" (rather jenever, from the juniper berry, with which the gin is flavoured), or "Hollands," extensive breweries, bleach-fields, and brick and tile works. The largest diamond-cutting business in the world is carried on at Amsterdam, where, and at Dordrecht and Rotterdam, there are large sugar-refineries. Paper is made chiefly in the provs. Holland and Gelderland; and typefounding at Haarlem and Amsterdam. In a country where human industry is engaged in a continual struggle with the sea, from the domains of which it has been wrested, the management of dykes, canals, and roads is a special object of attention on the part of the government. The roads which are formed on the dykes, and bordered by canals, are excellent. In 1863, 266 miles of railway were completed from Amsterdam W. to Haarlem, and S. to Leyden, the Hague, and Rotterdam, and S. and E. by Utrecht to Arnhem. The principal imports consist of colonial products, and manufactured goods, corn, wines, cotton, wool, dried fish, and hides. Exports to Britain (1862), butter, cattle, sheep, cheese, flax, tobacco, sugar, grains, onions, oil, yeast, hides, cottons, wine, wool, etc., to the value of 7,863,081*l*. Imports cotton, wool, iron, silk, coffee, indigo, oils, linens, machinery, hides, seeds, coals, etc., to the value of 10,641,104*l*. Total exports (1861) 34,095,358*l*.; imports, 39,873,752*l*. In 1862, 8361 ships, tonnage 1,695,212, entered; & 4872 ships, tonnage 1,108,359, cleared its ports. With few natural resources, the inhabitants were driven to commerce as a matter of necessity. At the end of the 16th century they obtained possession of the Molucca Islands, and secured a monopoly of the spice trade; at the end of the 17th century, nearly half of the shipping of Europe belonged to the Netherlands; but in consequence of the wars in which she was at that time engaged, and the increase of the mercantile navies of other countries, she soon lost her commercial pre-eminence. The country took an active share in the wars against Louis xiv. It was conquered by the French at the commencement of the revolution, and in 1795 formed the Batavian republic; in 1806 it was made the kingdom of Holland, which Napoleon I. reduced to a dep. of France in 1810. After her incorporation with the French empire, Holland was deprived of all her colonies in the eastern seas. At the establishment of peace in 1814, these colonial possessions were restored, and a period of commercial prosperity succeeded. Holland and Belgium were then united into a single kingdom; but this union of two countries, betwixt which no sympathy existed, was broken by the revolt of Belgium in 1830. By the treaty of London, 19th April 1839, Belgium ceded to the Netherlands a portion of Luxemburg and Limburg. The Dutch occupy the country of the ancient Batavi and Frisii; their language is a dialect of the German. Flemish is still spoken in the S. The greater number of the inhabitants are Protestants. The Reformed Church (by far the most numerous body, and of which the reigning family are members) is Calvinistic in point of doctrine, and its form of government is Presbyterian. The government pays the salaries of several British Presbyterian ministers settled in the Netherlands, and whose churches are incorporated with the Dutch Reformed Church. The greatest toleration has always existed in regard to religion. The Roman Catholics are under the bishop of Utrecht. Education is well conducted and very generally diffused. The teachers are placed under the guardianship of 70 inspectors, who act under an inspector-general, depending on the minister of the interior; they grant licences for the establishment of schools, and present to the government, three times a year, an account of the state of public instruction. There are universities at Leyden, Groningen, and Utrecht; 3 athenæums, and Latin schools in all the chief towns. For elementary instruction, there are district, communal, and private schools. The ecclesiastical schools comprise Roman Catholic and Protestant seminaries, and Jewish schools. There are military, naval, and veterinary schools, and numerous academies of the fine arts; institutions for deaf-mutes and blind. The proportion of attendance at school is 1 in 8 of the entire population. The benevolent institutions comprise numerous hospitals for the sick and infirm, and for orphans; societies of public good, and several pauper colonies. Mendicity is interdicted throughout the kingdom. The people are remarkable for the extreme cleanliness of their streets and dwellings. The government is a constitutional representative monarchy; the title of the sovereign is King of the Netherlands, Prince of Orange Nassau, Grand Duke of Luxemburg and Duke of Limburg. The crown prince has the title of Prince of Orange. The usual residence of the king is at the Hague. The Dutch afford a very remarkable example of industry and perseverance: to a country almost floating on the water, they have given a firm foundation; without stone, and growing comparatively little timber, they have built spacious cities; and though nearly destitute of arable land, their towns have often been granaries for surrounding states. With a territory not much larger than Wales, this people have maintained an army, a fleet, and a commerce, ranking high among the states of Europe. The standing army in 1863 amounted to 59,431 men of all arms, comprising volunteers, and 1 man in each 500 drawn by lot for 5 years' service. Navy, 3 steam frigates, 2 steam corvettes, 32 screw steamers, 13 paddle do., 2 ships of the line, 7 frigates, 36 corvettes and smaller vessels, 5 floating batteries, and 35 gunboats. There is only one privileged bank. Public revenue (1863) 8,976,000*l*. Expenditure 8,330,000*l*. National debt 65,000,000*l*. (For colonies, see table.) Slavery was abolished in the colonies on 1st July 1863, and compensation granted. The number of slaves was estimated at upwards of 40,000. In ancient times the Netherlands suffered greatly from floods: the greatest in recent times was that of 1855, which overwhelmed the town of Veenendaal and an extensive dist. in Gelderland. The Netherlands is a name which, for several centuries, was applied to the countries now forming the kingdoms of Belgium and the Netherlands, and part of the N. of France (deps. Nord and Pas-de-Calais). This country belonged almost entirely to Charles v. United to Franche-Comté, it formed the circle of Burgundy. From this, 7 of the N. provs. separated themselves in 1579, and formed the Republic of Holland, or the Seven United Provinces. Part of the low country was conquered by Louis xiv., and called the French Netherlands; and the rest, first under the dominion of Spain, passed in 1714 to that of Austria, and was called Spanish Netherlands, Austrian Netherlands or Belgium.

NEUCHÂTEL, NEUFCHÂTEL, or NEUBURG, a frontier canton of Switzerland, in the N.W., having S.E. the Lake of Neuchâtel, and on other sides France and the cantons Berne and Vaud. Area 508 sq. m. P. (1861) 87,369, mostly Protestants. The Jura mountains intersect it from S. to N., and the river Doubs bounds it on the N.W. Pastures occupy most part of the surface. Along the lake are numerous vineyards, and good wines are exported to the adjacent cantons. Except in wine, kitchen vegetables, and hay, the vegetable products are insufficient for home consumption, and corn is imported from the cantons Berne and Basle. Many cattle are reared, and cheese is an export of consequence. From 18,000 to 20,000 persons are more or less employed in watch-making, in both the urban and rural districts; cotton fabrics for export to the Netherlands, Prussia, Belgium, and Italy; hosiery, cutlery, and metallic wares generally, are other chief manufs. Until 1848, Neufchâtel acknowledged the sovereignty of Prussia; a revolution having afterwards occurred, it separated from Prussia in 1857, and is now a member of the Swiss Confederation. Principal towns are Neuchâtel, Chaux-de-Fonds, Valengin, and Le Locle.

NEW BRUNSWICK, a British colonial territory, North America, between lat. 45° and 48° 5' N., lon. 63° 47' and 67° 53' W., having W. Maine and Canada East, N. Chaleur Bay, E. the Gulf of St Lawrence and Northumberland inlet, and S. the Bay of Fundy; connected at its S.E. corner with Nova Scotia by an isthmus 14 m. across. Climate severe in winter, though exceedingly healthy, fever and ague are entirely unknown. On the shores of the Bay of Fundy fogs prevail in summer. At St John, altitude 132 feet, the temperature ranges from 86° above to 12° below the freezing point, but at Fredericton in the interior the range is from 95° to minus 24° Fahr. Estimated area 27,614 sq. m. P. (1861) 252,047. In 1840 the population was only 154,000. Surface undulating. A range of hills in the N. extends from the falls of the St John to the Bay of Chaleur, attaining a height of 2170 ft., and forming the highest elevation in the lower provinces of British N. America. Principal rivers, the St John, Ristigouche, and Miramichi; the first of which is 450 m. in length, and is navigable for ships of 100 tons up as far as Woodstock; the other two are also navigable for considerable distances. Soil fertile; only a small portion is cleared, the rest is mostly covered with dense forests, and the exportation of timber has been hitherto the principal source of wealth. Of the 17,677,000 acres of land in the province, upwards of 11,000,000 remained to be disposed of in 1862. Land is very cheap, and there is no obstacle in the way of a man becoming a freeholder. Land can be obtained either, by cash, purchase, or under the Labour Act, at 3s. per acre. Potatoes are the chief article of culture. Other crops are wheat, maize, oats, and barley. The rearing of live stock is increasing. Fisheries highly important, comprising pollock, hake, haddock, herring, and mackerel. The annual value of these is about 40,000l. This province has a wide surface underlain by carboniferous strata, but this area includes only between 800 and 900 sq. m. of productive coal measures. Manganese and iron are abundant, and valuable mines of bituminous and cannel coal have recently been opened in Albert county, from which 15,000 tons were taken in 1859. In the vicinity of the rivers, oil works have been erected for the manufacture of rock oil. Gypsum is found in several localities, and grind-stones are largely exported. In 1858 the exportation of timber amounted to 563,090l. Ship-building, carried on mostly at St John, forms the chief industry: in 1863, 137 vessels were built, tonnage 85,250; new vessels registered (1860) 100, tonnage 41,003; vessels belonging to the province 825, tonnage 147,083. In 1861 the exports amounted in value to 947,091L.; imports (1861) 1,238,133L. Number of emigrants arrived in 1862, 548. Government vested in a governor, a council, and house of assembly of 26 members, which meets at Fredericton, the cap. Besides the armed force maintained by the British government, a native militia of 20,000 is kept up. In education, this is in advance of most other British colonies, having King's college at Fredericton, a grammar school in each county except three. In 1853 there were 744 parochial schools, with 24,127 scholars, costing the government about 12,000L. annually. In 1858 there were 762 schools, with 24,138 scholars; provincial grant for educational purposes 25,000L. In 1853 there were 423 places of worship; 1 bishop, 1 archdeacon, and 58 clergymen belonging to the Episcopal church; 23 Roman Catholic priests; 25 Presbyterian ministers; 52 Baptists; and 83 Wesleyan Methodists. In 1858 a railway 65 m. in length, between St Andrews and Woodstock, was opened. Also the railway from St John's to Shediac, 108 m. long, was opened in 1862. A magnetic telegraph connects New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island with the U. S. The connection between Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island is by a submarine cable 9 m. from Cape Tormentine to C. Travers. Public revenue (1861) 145,593L.; expenditure 176,151L.; debt 1,026,000L. The colony is divided into 14 cos. Principal towns, St John, Fredericton, and St Andrews. It was ceded to Great Britain with Canada in 1763.

NEW BRUNSWICK, a city of the U. S., North America, New Jersey, on the river Raritan, and on the New York and Philadelphia Rail, 29 m. S.W. New York. P. (1860) 11,255. It is the seat of Rutgers's college, and of a theological seminary of the Dutch Reformed church. The Delaware and Raritan canal extends to the Delaware at Bordentown, 42 m. It is navigable by steamers of 150 tons.

NEWBURGH, several townships of the U. S., North America.—I. New York, on the Hudson River, 84 m. S.S.W. Albany. P. (1860) 15,196. Steamers ply hence to New York. N.N.W. Stafford, and about 4 m. N.E. the Whitmore station of the London and N.W. Railway. Ac. of pa. 554. P. (1851) 10,569; do. (1861) 12,638. Altitude 428 feet. It has two churches, a handsome Roman Catholic chapel, and chapels belonging to Baptists, Independents, Methodists, and Unitarians; a grammar school, founded in the reign of Elizabeth; almshouses, and numerous other charities; a guild-hall, mkt.-house, theatre, public library, literary institution, public promenade, and union workhouse. Manufs. are tanning, brewing, sugar refining, paper, and shoes. The manuf. of hats, once the staple trade, is now inconsiderable. In the vicinity are potteries, iron works, and large collieries. A branch canal connects it with the Grand Trunk navigation. It sends 2 members to H. of C. Reg. elect. (1864) 176. It is a polling-place for the co. Of the castle built here by the Earl of Chester, in 1180, and whence the town takes its name, but slight traces remain.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE, so called since A.D. 880 (Saxon name Monkchester, Roman Pons Ælii, being a station on the Roman wall), a earl, and municipal bor., town, and river-port of England; cap. co. Northumberland, also a co. of itself; situated on steep declivities on N. bank of Tyne; connected with Gateshead by two bridges. Railway to Carlisle 66½ m., Tynemouth, London 303½, (298½ to King's Cross). Circumference of bor. 16 m. Ac. 5925. P. (1851) 7,784, with Gateshead 113,352; (1861) 109,108, with Gateshead 142,695. The antiquities are, a castle, containing museum and library of the Newcastle Antiquarian Society; town walls; St Nicholas church, A.D. 1350, beautiful steeple and painted windows, altitude 100 feet; St Andrew's, the oldest; St John's, before A.D. 1287; the house of the Black Friars; the hospital of St Mary, at esmond; fragments of the Roman wall. No Saxon remains. Besides the above memorials of the Norman and Plantagenet period, there are several houses, etc., of Tudor and Stuart times. The "chares" (narrow peculiar lanes) are characteristic of Newcastle. The Guildhall (A.D. 658), with connected merchants' court and fish market; Trinity Chare, the hospitals, chapel A.D. 1491, and hall of Trinity House. Public buildings, etc.: The town was all but rebuilt by Richard Grainger on one uniform plan, deans lled up, and new ground made. Born poor, his works cost between 1,000,000L. and 2,000,000L. They comprise new streets, terraces, and squares. The coup d'œil of Grey Street is not surpassed; he market occupies two acres; theatre, after the Pantheon of Rome; music hall and lecture hall; exchange has three fronts, after temple of Vesta at Tivoli, and handsome area; arcade; Lambson's bank; branch bank of England; Grey monument at the head of Grey Street, 136 feet high, with statue by Bailey. Besides these works of Richard Grainger, there are county courts after the temple of Theseus at Athens, cost 52,000L.; high level bridge, by R. Stephenson, for rail. and road traffic; length of viaduct 11,337 feet, of waterway 512 feet; height to carriage-way 85 feet, to rail. 112 feet; total cost, 491,153L. Below, a little to E., another bridge of nine arches; the railway station is one of the noblest. This, with hotel, cost 130,000L. The town-hall buildings include corn market. In 1854 there was a great fire on the quay-side: the old buildings there are now supplied by new of great extent and beauty. Custom-house, town gaol, several fine public cemeteries, especially St John's; the new savings' bank, the Stephenson monument, assembly rooms, public baths, and military barracks. The following religious denominations are represented:—Church of England, 12 places of worship; Methodists, 3—New Connex., 1; Primitive Methodist, 1; United Free Methodist, 1; Presbyterian, 8; Independent, 3; Baptist, 2, with some smaller congregations; Roman Catholic, 3; Quaker, 1; Unitarian, 1; Swedenb., 1; Jews, 1. There is also the Bath Lane church, not in connection with any denomination. Total, Established Church, 12; non-established, 27. The benevolent institutions are—infirmary (annual income 5570L.), dispensary, fever hospital, lying-in hospital, eye infirmary, Royal Victoria Asylum for the industrious blind, the Northern Counties Institute for the deaf and dumb, penitentiary, home for penitents, children's hospital. The literary are—Literary and Philosophical Society, Society of Antiquaries, Natural History Society, Tyneside Naturalists' Field Club, Mechanics' Institute, Working Men's Club, N. of England Institute of Mining Engineers, Farmers' Club, medical school in connection with Durham University. It has three daily and five weekly newspapers. The yield of the northern coal field in 1861 was 22,000,000 tons. Manufactures of Newcastle and vicinity (only a small portion carried on in the town) are, from coal, asphalt, coke, 2,625,000 tons annually in the whole field; lampblack, 1200 tons do.; light oil, naphtha. Metalurgy:—Aluminium and aluminium bronze; antimony, 270 tons annually; copper, 700; iron, 700,000 in the whole northern coal field; lead (white, red, litharge, sheet, pipe, and shot), 19,559; silver, 600,000 oz.; steel, annual value 100,000L.; zinc. Chemicals:—Alum, 4000 tons annually; bicarb. of soda, 51,300; bleaching powder, 11,200; carbonate of magnesia, 250; caustic soda, 1600; cements, 12,000; Epsom salts, 1500; grease, 2800; hyposulphite of soda, 400; oil of vitriol, 6440; pearl hardening, 2000; prussiate of potash (yellow 105, red 40); resin size, 100; salt; soap, 6000; soda, 51,300; soda ash, 43,500; sulphate of copper, 100; sulphate of iron, 2000; superphosphate of lime, 15,000; Venetian red, 4000. The total annual value about 1,316,000L. The engineering manufactures are—general machine and millwork; stationary steam-engines; locomotive engines (Stephenson's "Rocket" dates 1829, and during the past 34 years 2400 have been made in Newcastle); engines for steamships; hydraulic engines; iron bridges; viaducts; lighthouses; iron ships, chains, and anchors. In fire-clay—bricks, 89,000,000 annually; retorts, 12,000; pipes, 175 miles; fire-clay ground, 50,000 tons. Glass—plate, crown, sheet, flint, bottles, stained. There are 25 earthenware potteries in the district. Paper, leather, hats, oils, tobacco, grindstones. (For trade and manufactures, see "History of Trade and Manufactures on Tyne, Wear, and Tees," read to British Association, 1853, and published by Lambert, Newcastle.) One of the greatest works of the age is that of the improvement of the river, in order to develop the capacities and powers of the town. The piers at the mouth of the Tyne are now (1864) being built to make a safe harbour, and to bring the water depth under control. They are two. Length of north pier, 3000 feet; of south, 5400; cost, 660,000L. The Northumberland and Jarrow docks are finished, and cost 1,100,000L. The low light docks will cost 600,000L. Dredging is employed to deepen the river 20 miles from the sea, to bring the largest ships to Newcastle, and screw-steamers of 1200 tons above the town. There are at work 6 dredging machines (2 the largest in the world), 7 tug-steamers, 40 hopper barges, 10 screw do., 10 craft repairing shops, etc. 3,000,000 cubic yards are raised annually. The cost of dredging to Ryton will be 950,000*l.* The old town bridge will be replaced by a new one, the two centre spans each 100 feet wide, to swing open to admit ships above the town. In addition, the river is to be straightened and widened. The works to Newcastle are expected to be finished 1867, to Ryton 1871. Total cost, 3,250,000*l.* The following is from a return of the collector of customs for the year ending March 1863, save the last item of export of coal. That is from a Ho. of Cos. return, and the export is that of 1862:—Port of Newcastle—Number of ships, 608; tonnage, 102,280; number of cargoes: out, 18,821; in, 4077; total 22,898; coals and coke, tons in 1862, home 2,134,999; foreign 2,105,295; total 4,240,294. The whole Tyne (i.e., Newcastle and North and South Shields)—Number of ships 2101; tonnage 464,054; number of cargoes: out, 20,905; in, 5322; total 26,227; coals and coke, tons in 1862: home 2,282,528; foreign 2,338,728; total 4,621,256. This last item will show how great must be the trade of Newcastle. As Newcastle is the centre of a network of railways, its trade inward is not at all out of proportion with its trade by sea. Vessels entered (1862) 4604, tons 754,574; cleared 8253, tons 1,518,223. Customs revenue (1862), 243,003*l.*; exports (1862), 1,968,118*l.* The following are more or less associated with Newcastle:—Duns Scotus, Bishop Ridley, Aken-side, Charles Hutton, John Brand, Lord Stowell (Admiralty judge), Lord Eldon, Lord Collingwood, Thomas Bewick, Dr Morrison (Chinese scholar), T. M. Richardson, sen., George Stephenson, Robert Stephenson, and Sir William Armstrong. The corporation includes 14 aldermen and 42 councillors. Police, 140 men. There are 1800 registered freemen. Sends 2 members to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1864), 7152. There are special markets for corn, hay, and cattle. The supply of cattle, sheep, lambs, and swine for 1862 was 375,590; in 1842, 135,344. An assay office gives the privilege (only enjoyed by six or seven other towns) of assaying & marking silver plate. The post-office has 16 clerks & 23 carriers.

NEW ENGLAND, a pastoral dist. of New South Wales, bordering on Queensland; W. from dists. Macleay and Clarence, and E. from Liverpool Plains. It is traversed by the great dividing range, forming a table-land of about 3000 feet above the sea, and enjoys a mild climate, and a soil well adapted for agriculture. Chief town, Armidale. Area 13,100 sq. m. P. (1861) 9676. Its live stock amounted in 1863 to 1,073,500 head.

NEW ENGLAND, a collective name applied to the former British possessions in N. America, now comprising the six Eastern states of the Union, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. The inhabitants are descendants of English Puritans and Scotch Presbyterians, and familiarly designated as Yankees.

NEWENT, a market town and pa. of England, co. and 9 m. N.W. Gloucester. Ac. of pa. 7803. P. 3182.

NEW FANE, a township of the U. S., North America, New York, co. Niagara, near Lake Ontario.—II. a township, Vermont, 90 m. S. Montpelier.

NEW FIELD, several townships of the U. S., North America.—I. New York, near Cayuga Lake.—II. Maine, 86 m. W.S.W. Augusta.

NEW FOREST, a royal forest and hundred of England, occupying most part of the S.W. portion of the co. Hants, W. Southampton-water. Circumference of forest about 50 m. Ac. 64,000. It is divided into bailiwicks, under foresters, woodwards, and rangers, the whole under a lord-warden, whose forest-courts are held at Lyndhurst. It abounds in game, red-deer, hogs, and semi-wild horses. It supplies excellent timber, especially valuable from its proximity to Portsmouth dockyard.

NEWFOUNDLAND, an island, and one of the British colonies, North America, off the coast of Labrador, mostly between lat. 46° 40' and 51° 37' N., lon. 52° 25' and 59° 15' W., separated from the mainland by the Strait of Belle Isle, 12 m. across. Estimated area 35,850 sq. m., and pop. (1857) 122,638. Shape very irregular, and shores greatly indented. The country in the E. is generally low, W. ward more rugged and mountainous, and especially so in a peninsula which extends from the N. towards Labrador. The Long Range in the W. attains an elevation of 1500 ft. Principal navigable rivers, the Humber and the River of Exploits, which latter rises in Red Indian lake, one of several considerable lakes in the interior. Climate in winter very severe, the thermometer frequently falling to 30° below the freezing point; in summer there is a brief hot season; the colony is generally healthy. Surface mostly marshy, or covered with a scrubby vegetation, and the soil is ill-suited to agriculture. Kitchen vegetables are accordingly the principal crops raised; pasturage is however plentiful, and the plains abound with vast herds of caribou deer, which, with the famous Newfoundland breed of dogs (peculiar to the island), wolves, bears, foxes, and some beavers, constitute the prevailing animals. Timber is scarce; the principal resources of the pop. are in the cod, seal, and salmon fisheries, the chief fishing grounds being off the S.E. coast. The great bank of Newfoundland on this side, is the most extensive submarine plateau yet discovered, being about 600 m. in length, and in some places 200 m. in breadth, with a depth varying from 25 to 95 fathoms, and a bottom of solid rock. The principal fishing ground is over this bank between lat. 42° and 46° N. In 1862 the exports from Newfoundland comprised 1,080,069 quintals of dried fish, upwards of 16,637 tons of oil, 268,624 seal skins. The seal fishing has become important within the present century, and in 1857 employed 802 vessels, the tonnage of which was 57,898, and 14,442 hands. In 1862, 1345 ships entered, and 1159 ditto left the ports of this colony; and the total exports amounted in value to 1,171,723*l.*, & the imports to 1,007,082*l.* Since 1832 the colony has had a representative assembly of 15 members, with an executive council of 12 members, appointed, like the governor, by the crown. The number of schools in 1857 was 280, with 14,136 scholars, while the sum voted for education in 1859 was 53,968 dollars. In the same year the religious census was as follows: Church of England, 44,285; Roman Catholics, 56,895; Wesleyan Methodists, 20,229; the Presbyterians are very few in number. In 1862 the revenue of the colony amounted to 116,929*l.*; the expenditure to 138,058*l.* Debt, 173,642*l.* Imperial expenditure, 21,307*l.* Newfoundland is a Protestant see. St Johns, the cap., is on the S.E. coast.

NEW GRANADA. [GRANADIAN CONFED.]

NEW GUINEA, island. [PAPUA.]

NEWHALL, a township of England, co. Chester, pa. Acton, 4 m. S.S.W. Nantwich. Ac. 4033. P. 826.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, one of the U. S., N. Amer., in the N. part of the Union, mostly between lat. 42° 40' and 45° 20' N., lon. 70° 30' and 72° 35' W., nearly enclosed by Maine, Vermont, and Massachusetts, having S.E. only 18 m. of marshy coast. Area 9280 sq. m. P. (1860) 326,073 free, of whom 494 are coloured. In the N. it comprises the loftiest ground in the Eastern States; Mount Washington is 6428 feet in height, and the region around it abounds in timber; elsewhere the surface consists in a great part of open plains, and is more adapted for a grazing than a corn-raising country. Principal rivers, the Merrimac and Connecticut, which latter forms all its W. boundary. Near its centre is Lake Winnipiseogee. Products comprise maize, wheat, and other grains, hops, potatoes, maple-sugar, timber, cattle, salted provisions, and wool; but this is becoming more a manufacturing than an agricultural state. Principal manufactures are of woollen and cotton fabrics, iron wares, and paper. Foreign trade inconsiderable and decreasing, its produce being mostly exported through Massachusetts and Connecticut. Chief towns are Concord (its cap.), and Manchester, Portsmouth, and Dover.

NEW JERSEY, one of the U. S., North America, in the E. part of the Union, mostly between lat. 39° and 41° 24' N., lon. 74° and 75° 30' W., having E. the Atlantic Ocean, N. New York, and W. Pennsylvania and Delaware, from which it is separated by the Delaware riv. Length 163 m.; breadth 52 miles. Area 8320 sq. m. P. (1860) 672,035, of whom 25,318 were free coloured, and 18 were slaves. Surface level in the S., undulating in the centre, crossed by mountains in the N. The Hudson river forms its N.E. boundary. Principal crops, wheat, oats, maize, rye, potatoes, and other vegetables. In the hilly parts cattle are reared, and cheese, butter, and wool are produced. Iron, building-stone, and sand are the mineral products. Manufs. cotton and woollen goods, iron wares, paper, leather, and earthenware; and New York and Philadelphia are the principal outlets for the exports, and channels of its import trade. The railways in this state are extensive; and there are several canals, of which Morris Canal, 101 m. in length, connecting the Hudson and Delaware, is the principal. New Jersey sends 5 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Trenton, the cap., Newark, Burlington, and Jersey. Educational establishments are numerous. The state is divided into 18 cos. The original constitution was formed in 1776; the present, in 1844, provides for a government chosen for three years, a senate composed of one member from each co., and an assembly of 60 members. Bergen co., in this state, was first colonized by the Dutch in 1614.

California. Length 750 m. E. to W.; and breadth 208 m. N. to S. Area 124,450 sq. m. It is a high table-land, crossed by mountain ranges, and mostly barren. In its E. portion are the valleys of the Rio Grande and its tributaries along the base of the Rocky Mountains. In the Sierra Madre, Mount Taylor is estimated at 10,000 feet above the valley. So far as yet explored, it is found to have immense canons, deep ravines in the Sierra Blanco, where rivers flow in darkness hundreds of feet below the surface of the valleys, and there are lofty precipices, resembling castles or fortresses. Valuable mineral deposits, gold, silver, etc., exist in the territory. Cap. city Santa Fé.

NEW ORKNEY, an island group in the S. Atlantic, forming a part of New S. Shetland, S.E. Cape Horn. Chief islands, Pomona and Melville.

NEW ORLEANS, a city and river port of the U. S., North America, state Louisiana. The metropolis of the S. Western States, on the N. bank of the Mississippi, 94 m. from its mouth in the Gulf of Mexico; distance from New York 1663 m. Mean temp. of year 69°-8, winter 55°-8, summer 82°, Fahr. P. (1840) 102,193; (1860) 168,675. It stands in an alluvial flat, 4 feet below the level of high water mark; and the river is prevented from overflowing the city by an embankment 15 feet wide and 4 feet high, called the Levee, which forms a promenade. Adjacent swamps render it very unhealthy in summer, and it frequently suffers from yellow fever. The cemeteries here are peculiar: owing to the low-lying situation of the city, the tombs being built of brick, rising tier upon tier from one to three stories in height, each coffin space being arched, as burial in the ground is never attempted except in the case of paupers, who are often washed out of their graves when the Mississippi overflows. It consists of the city proper, and six faubourgs or suburbs, all regularly laid out, well supplied with water, and as well drained as circumstances admit. Except Canal Street, few of the public thoroughfares are more than 40 feet in width. The houses are mostly of brick, many stuccoed, and in several quarters furnished with balconies, and similar in architecture to the dwellings in France and Spain. Here are fewer churches comparatively than in any other city in the United States. Principal edifices, a Roman Catholic cathedral with 4 towers, the state-house, custom-house, 2 exchanges, United States Mint and land offices, several hospitals, 3 theatres, the Ursuline convent, college, and orphan asylum. Ships of the largest size can discharge their cargoes close to the bank. New Orleans is the main outlet for the produce of the countries watered by the Mississippi and its tributaries, and the great port for the shipment of cotton. It is connected by a railway with Lake Borgne, an inlet of the Gulf of Mexico, 10 m. distant; with Lake Pouchartrain, 5 m. distant by railway and canal, and with Carrollton by a railway; and railways unite the city with the other important cities of America. It communicates by steamers with most of the large trading cities in the West Indies. The city and suburbs form 3 municipalities. It was founded by the French in 1717, and purchased, with Louisiana, by the United States in 1803. In 1815 a British force, under General Pakenham, was compelled to retreat from before it by the troops under General Jackson. In the recent civil war, the Federal fleet appeared before it 25th, and it surrendered on the 28th, April 1862. The Confederates burned ships, steamers, and 11,000 bales of cotton, value 3,000,000 dollars. No statements of trade or shipping have been published during the war. In 1860 the value of exports was above 22,000,000.

in which they are comprised, between lat. 73° 12' and 76° 20' N., lon. 135° 20' and 150° 20' E., and consisting of Kotlinoi, Fadiievskoi, New Siberia, Liakhov, and some smaller islands. Immense quantities of the bones and teeth of the mammoth, rhinoceros, and buffalo, are found in the soil. New Siberia, the most E. of these islands, is 75 m. in length by 30 m. in breadth. It was discovered by Hedenstroem in 1809.

NEW SOUTH SHETLAND, an archipelago & portion of mainland, in the Pacific, lat. 61° to 64° 30' S., lon. 53° W., and 600 m. S. Tierra del Fuego, and the coast line of which has been explored beyond the Antarctic circle. Principal islands, Livingston, Cornwallis, King George, Clarence, and Elephant. This region was discovered by Gheritz in 1598, and afterwards further explored by Cook and Weddell, and its S. part by Bischoe in 1832, and by Captain Sir J. Ross in 1842.

NEW SOUTH WALES, a British colonial territory in E. Australia, bounded on the W. by the colony of S. Australia; on the S. by the river Murray and the colony of Victoria; on the N. by Queensland; and on the E. by the Pacific Ocean. Lat. 28° 8' (Point Danger) to 37° 35' S. (Cape Howe); lon. 141° to 158° 33' E. Area 323,437 sq. m. P. (1861) 365,635; in 1851 it was only 197,168. The colony has thus nearly doubled its pop. in 10 years, though during that period two immense territories, Victoria and Queensland, were detached from it. The colony was first settled in January 1788 by a body of convicts, who landed first at Botany Bay, but which the authorities in charge soon after removed to Port Jackson. In the south of the colony are the Australian Alps, where Mount Kosciusko attains an elevation of 6510 feet, and is nearly all the year covered with snow. The Murrumbidgee river divides this range from the coast range of the Blue Mountains, running nearly N. and S. about 40 miles inland, and attaining an elevation of above 3000 feet, Mount York being 3292 feet. Near the N. frontier, Mount Lindsey reaches a height of 5700 feet. Towards the north, and further inland, are extensive and elevated pastoral tracts, such as the Liverpool Plains, enjoying a cool climate, as compared with their low position of 30° to 32° S. lat. Sea View Mountain, in this district, is 6000 feet above the level of the sea. The main range, with its spurs and the creeks and streams that issue from each flank are auriferous, and are being worked in many places as gold fields, since the great discovery at Ophir, by Hargreaves, in 1851. The limits of the great coal field are as yet imperfectly known; but it certainly extends into Queensland, and reappears in Tasmania. The mines now in operation are situated at or near Newcastle, 60 m. N. of Sydney. Other minerals are iron, copper, tin, lead, and platina. Principal streams are the Shoalhaven, Hawkesbury, Hunter, Manning, McLeay, Clarence, Richmond, etc. The water-shed towards the interior is upon a larger scale. In the extreme S. the Murray rises in the Alps, being joined in its westward course by the Lachlan and Murrumbidgee, and finally by the Darling from the north, with its affils. the Bogan, Macquarie, Castlereagh, Namoi, Barwan, and Balooni or Condamine. The Barcoo or Victoria, discovered in 1846, rises near these latter, and runs W. by N., then S.W., into Cooper's Creek of Sturt, and is lost in the soil before reaching Lake Eyre. The chief inlets & harbours are Twofold Bay, in the S., Jervis Bay, Botany Bay, the fine harbour of Port Jackson, Broken Bay, Ports Hunter, Stephens, and Macquarie, and Trial Bay. The climate is salubrious and agreeable. The mean temperature of the year, at Sydney, in lat. 33° 34' S. is about 61°; the hottest month is January, when the temperature varies from 63° to 87°; July is the coldest month, the temperature varying from 48° to 64°. Rainfall 52 to 85 inches; rainy days, 138. The extent of land under culture was, in 1862, 260,798 acres, yielding 1,581,597 bushels of wheat, 1,484,467 of Indian corn, 39,801 of barley, 98,814 of oats, 28,127 tons of potatoes, 9704 cwt. of tobacco, 50,927 tons of hay, 99,791 gallons of wine, besides other produce. The value of the fruit (chiefly oranges) exported, was 61,466*l.* In the same year there were 6,119,163 sheep, 2,408,586 head of cattle, and 251,497 horses. The pastoral products of that year exported were, wool, 12,000,000 lbs., valued at 1,250,000*l.*; hides, to the value of 68,576*l.*; and tallow, 13,647 cwt*s.* The value of gold exported, was 1,876,049*l.* The quantity of gold exported in the ten years (1851-60), was 3,281,000 ounces, valued at 11,683,857*l.* As in Victoria, there is an export duty of 2*s.* 6*d.* per ounce. The mint cost about 50,000*l.*; its yearly expenses are 15,000*l.*, and revenue above 12,000*l.* The coin circulates, by consent of the free governments, in the adjacent colonies, and by imperial proclamation it is legal tender in Mauritius, Ceylon, and Hong Kong. Coal is plentiful, total produce, from 1851 to 1860, amounting to 1,780,000 tons, of which more than a half was exported to India, China, and the neighbouring Australian colonies. Imports for 1860 were 7,519,000*l.*, and exports, 5,072,090*l.* The shipping inwards, in 1860, was 1424 vessels of 427,835 tons, and outwards it was 1438 vessels. The public revenue for 1860 was 1,309,000*l.*, exclusive of loans; expenditure, 1,312,777*l.*; public debt, 3,820,000*l.* The staple products of the colony are wool, gold, and timber. At the International Exhibition of 1862, the timber of this colony was represented by upwards of 300 specimens. Some of the red cedars were 10 feet in diameter, yielding 30,000 feet of saleable wood. Some of the varieties are admirably adapted for ship-building. The first telegraphic post in the colony was planted in 1857, while, in 1861, the electric wires extended from Sydney to every important centre of population in the colony. From the same city, three lines of railway were in course of construction, which were open to traffic for 34 m. W., 51 m. S., and 36 m. N.; and an expenditure of 1,800,000*l.* was sanctioned for further extensions. The colony was at first laid out into what are called the 19 old counties; these were afterwards increased, until they now number 68. The chief towns are Sydney, Maitland E. & W., Parramatta, Bathurst, Goulburn, Braidwood, Newcastle, etc. New South Wales is self governed, with a governor of the Queen's appointment, who acts through a popular ministry, co-operating with an elected assembly, and a Second or Upper Chamber nominated by the crown. In 1860, there were 798 schools in the colony, with 34,767 scholars. There is a university at Sydney, and the public schools are maintained by the government and people, at a cost of 90,000*l.* annually.

NEW YEAR'S ISLAND, N. Australia, is off the coast of Arnhem's Land, 60 m. N.E. Port Essington.—(Islands), S. Atlantic, are in lat.  $51^{\circ} 41'$  S., lon.  $64^{\circ} 28'$  W., and were so named by Cook.—II. (Range), Central Australia, is a mountain tract, lat.  $30^{\circ} 21'$  S., lon.  $146^{\circ} 33'$  E.

NEW YORK, one of the middle U. S. of North America, and though not the largest, yet in every other respect, the leading state of the Union; between lat.  $40^{\circ} 30'$  and  $45^{\circ}$  N., lon.  $72^{\circ}$  and  $79^{\circ} 55'$  W., having N. W. Lakes Erie and Ontario, and the river St Lawrence, separating it from Canada West, on the E. side the states Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut; and on the S., Pennsylvania, and New Jersey, except at its S. extremity, where it touches the Atlantic Ocean, in which it includes Long Island; Staten Island and Manhattan are also included in this state. Area 46,000 sq. m. P. (1855) 3,466,212; (1860) 3,880,735, of whom 49,005 were coloured. Mean annual temperature  $51^{\circ} 6'$ , summer  $70^{\circ} 3'$ , winter  $30^{\circ} 1'$  Fahr. Rainfall 34 inches. It is mostly an elevated region, with extensive indentations, watered by the Hudson, Mohawk, Oswego, Genesee, and other rivers, including many affls. of the Susquehanna. The Alleghanies traverse its E. part in two parallel chains; the Round Top, one of the Catskill mountains, is 3804 feet in height, and the mountains W. of Lake Champlain are upwards of 5000 feet. It contains Seneca, Cayuga, Oneida, Canandaigua, George, and many other lakes; Lake Champlain forms a part of its N.E. frontier. Chief rivers, St Lawrence, Hudson, Mohawk, and Genesee. There are rich marble quarries near the cap.; the salt springs, near the centre of the state, yield 7,000,000 bushels of salt annually. The Saratoga and Bellaton mineral springs are famous. Petroleum is abundant in the W. Soil in the S. rather light but fitted for pasture; it improves on proceeding northward, and the W. part is a highly fertile country. All the crops common in Britain are raised, with the addition of maize. Horses and cattle are more numerous than in any other state. In the W. and the S.E. are extensive forests. Manufactures are in great variety, and the foreign commerce is greater than that of any other state of the Union. Exports more than 3-5ths of the total of the Union. Total length of the canals in operation 850 m.; the principal are the Erie, Champlain, Cayuga, and Chenango canals, connecting the Atlantic rivers with the Canadian lakes, and the first of which is 364 miles in length. The state is traversed by railways in all directions: it is divided into 59 cos., and sends 2 senators and 32 representatives to congress. Principal cities, Albany, the cap., New York, Brooklyn, Hudson, Buffalo, Oswego, and Ogdensburg, with Schenectady and numerous towns along the line of the Erie Canal. The first settlement was made by the Dutch on Manhattan Island in 1621. In 1664 the English obtained possession of the country; in 1673 it was retaken by the Dutch, but soon after restored to the English. The present constitution was framed in 1821. Governor and senators elected biennially.

NEW YORK, the largest and most populous city, principal seaport, and commercial cap. of the U. S., N. America, on an island near the S. extremity of New York State, between the mouth of the Hudson river and East river, which separates Long Island from the mainland; lat. of city-hall  $40^{\circ} 42' 43''$  N., lon.  $74^{\circ} 0' 7''$  W. Area of city, including co., and Manhattan or New York Island (separated from Westchester co., by Harlem river, crossed by 3 bridges), with some adjacent islets, 14,000 ac. P. (1850) 515,394; in (1860) 805,651. The island, on which the city is built, has an area of 22 sq. m. It is 13 miles long and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  broad, and occupies a triangular area, the apex of which is covered by old, narrow, and crooked streets; but by far the greater part of New York consists of regular and handsome thoroughfares, the principal of which, Broadway, intersecting the city throughout, is nearly 4 m. in length, and bordered by shops or stores. Pearl, Cedar, Pine, Front, Water, and South, streets between it and the E. river, are important marts of business; and Wall Street is the seat of the chief monetary transactions. Greenwich, E. Broadway, Henry, Madison, Bleeker, and Bond streets and the Bowery, between the Broadway and Hudson river, are elegant public streets. Washington Square, in front of the New York University, Union Square, with a fountain, are among the chief open spaces; in the Park, an area of about 11 acres, is the city-hall, a Grecian edifice of marble and freestone, 216 feet in length by 105 feet in breadth. Tomkin's Park, and the Central Park, the latter a new public domain of great size, bids fair to be in a few years one of the finest city parks in the world. It lies between the Fifth and Eighth Avenues, and between 59th and 110th streets, in the upper part of the city. It is an area of 843 acres, beautifully diversified in surface, extending  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles in length by  $1\frac{1}{2}$  miles in breadth. The battery, with a fine view; and several smaller parks. The Merchant Exchange in Wall Street, built of granite, and with a central dome. Amongst the most conspicuous buildings are the custom house, of white marble; the University; Columbia college. The state library, with 64,200 vols.; Mercantile library, 64,000 vols.; the Historical Society, with a library of 25,000 vols.;

Apprentices' library, 19,000 vols. The hall of justice, American institute, and house of detention; Trinity church, a Gothic structure; St Paul's church, with an Ionic portico, and a steeple 224 feet in height; St John's, St Thomas's, the Dutch, French Protestant, and Baptist churches; St Patrick's cathedral; the Society library; Gothic hall, Astor house, and several other vast hotels. New York has 300 churches, 309 banks, aggregate capital (1863) 109,258,147 dollars, academy of music, theatres, museums, academy of design, studios, and galleries, and many large storehouses. In the vicinity of New York is Greenwood Cemetery, covering an area of 242 acres, and laid out in the most varied manner. The city is well supplied with water from Croton water works, 38 m. distant. Other public institutions are, the New York hospital, infirmary, deaf-mute, and lunatic asylums, and "Long Island Farms," a fund for provision of destitute children. Manufs. are in great variety. The harbour is 25 m. in circumference; it has 3 entrances, defended by 12 forts, with 1500 guns; and ships of the largest size can come up to the city wharves. New York communicates by the Hudson and Erie Canal with the W. States, Canada, and the whole region of the North American lakes, of which countries it is the great entrepôt. Export of bread stuffs to Great Britain and Ireland, year ending 1st September 1863, 9,886,826 bushels, being a great increase on former years. Its average exports amount in value to nearly one-half of the whole imports into the United States. Regular lines of packets maintain communication between New York and all the principal ports of the United States, the West Indies, Mexico, and S. America; and Liverpool, Southampton, Antwerp, and Havre in Europe. It is connected by railways with all the chief cities of America. Shortest sea route to England 8016 m. Shortest steam passage 1½ days. The city is divided into 17 wards, and governed by a mayor and common council. It was the seat of the first American Congress in 1785. During a conscription riot in 1863 several negroes were murdered.

NEW ZEALAND, a British colonial territory in the S. Pacific, consisting of a chain of islands, having two large and one small, besides others adjacent of less note. The main chain extends from Cape North in S. lat. 34° 18', to Cape South in 47° 20', and from C. West in E. lon. 166° 30', to C. East in E. lon. 178° 30'. The general direction is S.E. for above 400 miles, and S.W. for 900 miles. The area of the three islands is computed at 99,969 sq. m., or nearly the same as Great Britain and Ireland. The divisions and population by the census were:—

* The vast increase of pop. in South Island, during the year ending 31st December 1862, is due chiefly to the discovery of gold in Otago, but partly to the European character of the climate.
† Besides soldiers and their families.

P. (1863) estimated at 196,500, of whom 56,000 are aborigines, and the remainder British settlers. Cook's Strait, separates the North Island from the South Island, and the latter is separated from Stewart Island by Foveaux Strait. When established as a colony in 1840, the N., Middle, and S. Islands were re-named,—New Ulster, New Munster, and New Leinster; but these titles are out of use, since the provincial divisions, with their local governments, have been instituted, and they are now known as North, South, and Stewart Islands. The mineral products are valuable and extensive. Coal and copper are met with in several localities. In 1857 gold was found in the Nelson province, which has since exported about 50,000l. annually, but is now on the decline. In 1861 productive diggings were discovered in Otago, 50 m. from Dunedin; the exports in 1863 being to the value of 1,584,000l. Steel sand has been found in the neighbourhood of Dunedin. The celebrated Kauri pine, and the Phormium Tenax, or New Zealand flax, are abundant. The two main islands probably contain 10,000,000 acres of forest land, affording every variety and size of timber required for house and shipbuilding. "This colony, indeed, is almost the only country S. of the equator which grows any free working wood of the pine character." In 1863, 640,000 acres were under cultivation. There were 3,600,000 sheep, 240,000 head of cattle, 38,000 horses, and 50,000 pigs. The value of wool exports for 1859 was 339,779l., weighing 5,096,751 lbs.; total imports for 1863, nearly 3,000,000l.; exports, 1,600,000l.; revenue and expenditure, about 1,000,000l. each; public debt, 2,000,000l.; imperial expenditure for military purposes, 111,339l., the total strength being 1279 men. The climate is equable, pleasant, and salubrious. The mean annual temperature being, for Auckland, in lat. 36° 50' S., 59°; for New Plymouth, in lat. 39° 3' S., 56°; for Wellington, in lat. 41° 16' S., 55°; for Nelson, lat. 41° 15' S., 55°; for Christchurch, in lat. 43° 35' S., 53°; and for Otago, in lat. 46° 46' S., 50° Fahr. Mean of the coldest month at Otago 40°, and of the warmest at Auckland 68° Fahr. High winds prevail. Average rainfall in the North Isl. varies in the respective provinces from 45½ inches to 59 inches; while in the South Island it is from 30 to 34½ inches. Snow seldom falls, excepting in the southern parts of South Island. There are several volcanic cones, the chief of which is Mount Egmont in Taranaki, 8270 feet high. The town of Wellington has suffered from earthquakes. A mountain chain, the Southern Alps, runs through the South Island, culminating in Mount Cook, 12,460 feet. [CANTERBURY.] Mount Kaikora, in Nelson province, is 9300 feet. There are many good harbours in all the islands, and numerous lakes and small rivers in the two larger ones. In 1863 New Zealand had 237 vessels, aggregate tonnage 10,825. Of these 206 belonged to Auckland, 30 to Dunedin, 28 to Lyttleton, and 2 to Wellington. The first railway in New Zealand, between Christchurch and Port Lyttleton, was opened 1st Dec. 1863. The aborigines who had for some time settled down into farming and trading colonists, and shared the political franchise of the self-governed colony, have again (1863-4), on the ground of disputed right with the government about land, been waging a formidable war against the colonists. The race is rapidly on the decline, and the present disturbances will no doubt still further reduce their numbers. The country was first formally taken possession of as a British colony in 1840. In 1837 the New Zealand Company was formed in England, and in 1851 made over its affairs to the Government for a money consideration of 268,370*l.* The territory was discovered in 1642 by Tasman, who examined the western coast; and by Cook on the east side in 1769. In 1853 a free constitution was proclaimed, and is now in force. During the year 1862, 11,440 emigrants left the United Kingdom for this colony. Shortest sea route to Liverpool 11,510 miles, shortest sailing voyage 95 days.

NEXÖR, a town of Denmark, stift Zealand, on E. coast of Bornholm island. P. 1400.

NEXON, a market town of France, dep. Haute-Vienne, cap. cant., 10 m. S. Limoges. P. 2445.

NEYOMBO, a town of the island of Ceylon, on the coast, 20 m. N. Ledombo. It was fortified by the Dutch. The cinnamon grown in its vicinity is the best in the world and the most abundant.

NEYRAC, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Aveyron, arr. Espalion, cant. Estaing. P. 1238.

NEYVA or NEVA, a town of South America, Granadian Confed., dep. Cundinamarca, cap. prov., 132 m. S.W. Bogotá. Trade in cacao.

NEYVA, a town of the island Hayti, cap. arr., 70 m. E. Port-Republican, on the Neyva.

NGAMI, a lake of S. Africa, 50 m. long, 20 m. broad, and 3285 feet above the sea, in lat. 20° 20' S., lon. 23° 30' E. It is fed by the river Tonk or Toeghe and the Zouga S.E. On its banks are large trees and a rich vegetation. It was discovered in 1850.

NGAN-HOBI, AN-HWUI, or GAN-HWAY, an inland prov. of China, between lat. 29° and 34° N., lon. 113° and 119° E., enclosed by Kiang-su, Che-Kiang, Kiang-se, Hoope, and Hoo-nan. Surface flat, and traversed by the rivers Yangtse-Kiang and Hoai-ho. Products comprise the precious metals; also copper, salt, and green tea from the South districts, etc. Chief city, Nganking (190 m. by river course), S.S.W. Nanking. Area 40,198 sq. m. P. 36,596,988; or about 850 on a sq. m., the greatest average on the habitable globe.

NHA-TRANG or YATRANG, a seaport town of Anam, cap. prov., with a good harbour at a river's mouth, in lat. 12° 19' N., lon. 109° 20' E.

NIAGARA, a river of North America, between Canada West, and the U. S. (New York state), unites Lakes Erie and Ontario, the river having a N. course of 35 m. from the former to the latter, and a total descent in that distance of 334 feet. It encloses numerous islands, the largest, Grand Island, having an area of 17,000 acres, and 15 m. from Lake Erie its forms the famous Falls of NIAGARA, where the river is precipitated over a vast ledge of silurian limestone, forming two cataracts, separated by Goat Island, 500 feet in width. The Horse-shoe fall, on the Canadian side, is 1800 feet across, and 154 feet in perpendicular depth; and the American Falls 600 feet in breadth, 163 feet in depth, and above the rapids near which a strong rude bridge crosses from the N. York side to Goat Island. The banks N. of the cataract rise to 180 feet in perpendicular elevation, and are sprinkled with hotels and villas; and on both sides of the Falls, for some distance below, the stream forms a rapid, enclosed within a bed only 160 yards across. It has been estimated that the Falls discharge 100,000,000 tons of water per hour. A wire suspension bridge 800 feet span, and at an elevation of 258 feet above the waters, has been erected across the river, at a point about 2 m. below the Falls in connection with the G. W. Railway, with a roadway beneath for carriages and foot passengers.—

Niagara is a township on the E. side of the river, New York State, containing Goat Island, and a portion of the Falls.—Niagara Falls is a contiguous vill., with churches, hotels, and manufs. of woollen cloth, steam engines, and paper, with corn and saw mills. The Buffalo and Lockport Railways meet here.

NIAGARA, a co. of the U. S., N. America, in W. of New York. Area 484 sq. m. P. (1860) 50,399.

NICARAGUA, a republican state of Central America, between lat. 9° 45' and 15° N., lon. 83° 20' & 87° 30' W., having N. Honduras, W. the Pacific, S. Costa Rica, E. Caribbean Sea, and elsewhere the Pacific Ocean. Area 58,167 sq. m., equal to above half of Great Britain. P. (1861) 1,648,894, about one half pure Indians, the others intermixed races, and a few Spaniards, nearly all Roman Catholics who speak Spanish. It is mostly a dead level, but has on the Pacific coast the volcanic mountains Coseguina, Viejo, & Masaya, etc. Climate, divided by a wet and a dry season, is tropical, but healthy. Mean temp. 78° to 88° Fahr. The river San Juan is partly in this state. Soil mostly of high fertility. Products, sugar, cotton, indigo, tobacco, cacao, and coffee. Chief exports hides (about 50,000 annually), and various woods, indigo, sarsaparilla, mahogany, and Brazil wood. Imports British and North American manufactures; silks, wines, & gloves from France; linens and glass from Germany; other imports from Peru, Chile, etc. Chief cities, Managua, the cap., Leon, Maslaya, Greytown or San Juan de Nicaragua, Bluefields, Nicaragua, Granada. Chief port, Realejo. The State has been subject to perpetual revolutions; it formed itself into a republic on the dissolution of the Republic of Central America in 1838, and is governed according to the constitution of 1858, by a president, elected for 4 years, and two legislative chambers. [Mosquito].

NICARAGUA, a town in the above state, on the

W. shore of Lake Nicaragua, 38 m. S.E. Granada. P. upwards of 8000; but the commerce of the lake is mostly absorbed by Granada.

NICARAGUA LAKE, Central America, lies mostly between lat. 11° and 12° 12' N., lon. 84° and 86° W., 11 m. from the Pacific Ocean, and 80 from the Caribbean Sea, into which it discharges its waters by the river San Juan, its only outlet. Length, N.W. to S.E., 110 m.; average breadth 35 m. On its S. shore, near its head, stood the ancient city of Granada, once the most commercial town of the republic. The lake is adapted for ships of large burden, being 15 fathoms deep, and it contains the islands Ometepe, Zapetero, Solentinane, and others. Its surface is 128 feet above the level of the Pacific. The riv. San Juan is navigable for small steamers, except for several rapids; length, with windings, 119 m. It has been proposed to establish through it a water communication from the little port of Brito on the Pacific, across the isthmus between the ocean and the lake, thence across Lake Nicaragua to its outlet, and down the River San Juan to its port in the Atlantic. The length of the canal would be 194 m., and its summit-level 47½ feet above the lake. The gain in distance from Liverpool to Sydney, if the canal were made, would be 2320; Liverpool to Valparaiso 1200; and from New York to Canton 3280 miles. At its W. end this lake is connected by a small river with the Lake of Leon or Managua, from which also the cutting of a canal, or railway, to the Pacific, has been contemplated.

They constitute, with the Andamans, the extension of the great volcanic band of Sumatra and Java. In the S. group, Great Nicobar has an area of 1258 sq. m., and Little Nicobar 86 sq. m. Aggregate pop. about 6000, mostly Malays. Piracy was formerly carried on here, the crews of several English vessels having been murdered, the ships pillaged and afterwards sunk. Camorta, Chowry, and the other islands of the north group, are smaller. They are all covered with trees and very fertile, yielding in abundance cocoa nuts, oranges, sugar, tobacco, and bamboos. Animals comprise scorpions, crocodiles, serpents, rats, pigs, dogs, and cats. Mean annual temp. 70° Fahr. The islands are exposed to frequent hurricanes; the rainy season lasts 9 months, and the unusual phenomenon of frequent rain in the dry season (December to February), renders them most unhealthy. Repeated attempts at colonization have failed, on account of the prevalence of yellow fever.

NIGDEH, Cadyna, a town of Asia Minor, pash.

Karamania, cap. sanj., on a height, 47 m. N.E. Ereğli. P. 5060. It is the residence of a pasha, and has 3 fortresses and a Turkish college. The plain of Nigdeh extends S.W. from it for about 50 miles.

NIGER, the classical name of the great artery of tropical Africa, N. of the equator, called also the Joliba, Kwara, or Quorra; one branch of it rises in the Kong Mountains, near lat. 8° N., lon. 7° W., 1600 feet above the level of the sea, but the true source of the Niger is not yet ascertained. It flows N.W. through Soudan to Kabara, the port of Timbuctoo, for 800 m., watering the kingdoms of Bambarra and Masina, expanding in the latter in L. Debu, and passes the towns of Sego, Jenne, and Yowaru, then flowing E. for 150 m., it suddenly turns S.S.E., traverses the kingdoms of Songhay and Gando, passing the towns Gogo, Say, Bussa, Egga, Iddah, and Abo, and enters the Gulf of Guinea by a delta of 240 m. of coast, between lat. 4° and 6° N., lon. 5° and 7° 30' E. Principal mouths, the New Calabar, Bonny, Nun, Forcados, and Benin rivers. Chief tributaries on the E. the Sokoto, Kaduna, and Birne (not Chadda), the W. branch is the Kwaraba. The scenery near the delta of the Niger is of the wildest forest character. The only channel yet explored by Europeans is that of the Nun. Nearly the entire course (3500 m.) has been traced by Park and Lander; and 100 m. from its supposed source it has been found navigable for large canoes. In its lower part, the river is in some places impeded by shoals, though varying from 1 to 5 m. in width, and often deep enough for moderate-sized vessels. The greatest obstacle to the navigation of the river is the extreme insalubrity of the climate. The expedition under Captain Allen, in 1841, consisted of three steamers, fitted out by the British Government at an expense of 65,000l. In 1852, Baikie proved the identification of the Niger with the Joliba.

NIGG, two maritime pas. of Scotland.—I. co. Kincardine, opposite Aberdeen. Ac. 3376. P. 2074.—II. co. Ross and Cromarty, occupying a peninsula between the Firths of Moray and Cromarty, 2½ m. N. Cromarty. Area 14 sq. m. P. 1253. On the coast are traces of a fort of the 12th century, and some obelisks with hieroglyphics.

NIGUA, a marit. town of the island Hayti, on its S. coast, 10 m. S.W. San Domingo, and near the mouth of the River Nigua, in the Caribbean Sea.

NIGUARDA, a vill. of North Italy, prov. and circ. Milan. P. 2157.

NIJAR-Y-HUEBRO, a town of Spain, prov. and 13 m. E.N.E. Almeria. P. 5820.

NIJNII or NIJNEI (i.e., Lower),—for places with this prefixed name, not under mentioned, see NIJENII.

NIJNI-NOVGOROD (vulg. Nijegorod), a gov. of Central Russia, between lat. 54° 26' and 57° 6' N., lon. 41° 40' and 46° 38' E., having E. the gov. Kasan, S. Tambov, Simbirsk, and Penza, W. Vladimir, and N. Kostroma. Area 19,632 sq. m. P. (1858) 1,259,606. Surface mostly level, soil fertile. Principal rivers, the Volga, with its affls. the Oka, Betlougá, and Piana. Forests are extensive; the produce of corn exceeds the consumption, hemp and flax are cultivated in large quantities, and many cattle and horses are reared. It has manufs. of coarse linens and canvas, iron works, distilleries, tanneries, soap and glass works. Principal exports are corn and flour, cattle, horses, leather, tallow, linen, canvas, cordage, iron, timber, potash, and glass. The

gov. is subdivided into 11 circs. Principal towns, Nijni-Novgorod, Balachna, and Arsamias.

NIJNI NOVGOROD, NIJGOROD or NIJNI, a town of Russia, cap. gov. same name, near the angle formed by the confl. of the Oka with the Volga, 265 m. E.N.E. Moscow. Lat. 56° 19' 43" N.; lon. 44° 0' 58" E. P. (1858) 35,364, but at the time of its great fair 200,000 persons are here collected from all parts of Europe and Asia. It consists of an upper and a lower town; the former or citadel, on a height S. the Volga, has 2 cathedrals, churches, government offices, convents, schools, and an obelisk 76 feet in height. The lower town, along the Volga, is built of wood, and communicates by a bridge of boats across the Oka, where are vast iron & stone built bazaars, divided into sections for separate goods, and surrounded by the rivers and a canal. Here is held a large fair for eight weeks, from 1st of July, annually. Nijni-Novgorod has ecclesiastical and military academies, and manufs. of linens and leather. Steamers ply on the Volga to Astrakhan, & on the Kama to Perm. On 16th June 1864, the quarter prepared for the fair was destroyed by fire.

NIJNY TAGILSK, a town of Russia, in the Ural mountains, gov. and 135 m. E. Perm. P. 27,000. Chief Zavod of the Demidoff family. It has copper mines producing malachite, an observatory, schools, forges, and manufactures of machinery.

NIJVERDAL, a town of the Netherlands, prov. and 10 m. from Almelo, on the Regge. It has large steam bleaching mills, recently commenced, conducted by English workmen, and a weaving factory with 600 power-looms.

NIKISH or NIKSIKI, a vill. of Montenegro, cap. dist. of same name, 84 m. N.E. Cattaro, on the boundary line between Montenegro and Herzegovina. Pop. of dist. 6000.

NIKITA, a vill. of S. Russia, gov. Taurida, 26 m. S. Simferopol. It has a fine imperial garden, in which exotics are raised.—Nikitinskaia is a market town, gov. and 40 m. E.N.E. Orenburg.

NIKITOVKA, two market towns of European Russia.—I. gov. and 34 m. W.N.W. Kharkov. P. 1600.—II. gov. Voroniej, 30 m. E.N.E. Valyki.

NIKLAS (St), a town, Hungary. [MIKLOS (St).]

NIKOLAEVSK, a seaport town of Maritime Region, Asiatic Russia, on I. b. of the Amur, 25 m. from its mouth in the Pacific. Lat. 50° 20' N.; lon. 131° E. P. (1861) 4000. The river is frozen here from November to June. A telegraph line to Castries Bay was opened in 1864.

NIKOLAEV, a fortified town of Russia, gov. and 39 m. N.N.W. Kherson, at the confl. of the Ingul and the Bug, 20 m. above the mouth of the latter, in the estuary of the Dnieper. Lat. of observatory 46° 58' 21" N.; lon. 31° 69' 0" E. P. (1858) 33,504. It was founded in 1790, enclosed by walls, well built, and is the chief naval station of Russia in the Black Sea since the fall of Sevastopol.

NIKOLAÏKEN, a town of E. Prussia, gov. Gumbinnen, on the Lake Spirding, 12 m. E.S.E. Sensburg. P. 1980.

NIKOLSBURG or MIKULOW, a town of Austria, Moravia, circ. and 28 m. S. Brünn. P. (1857) 8056. It has a princely castle, with valuable library and collection of natural history, a college, a philosophical institute, and manufactures of woollen cloth and other stuffs.

NIKOLSK, a town of Russia, gov. and 194 m. E. Vologda, cap. circ., on the Jug. P. 1000.

NIKOPOLI, a town of Turkey. [NICOPOLIS.]

NIKSAI, Neo-Cæsarea, a town of Asia Minor, pash. Sivas, 30 m. N.E. Tokat. It is surrounded by orchards, and has 600 Turkish, 120 Armenian, and 60 Greek houses, and a citadel.

NILE, Nilus, "the river of Egypt," the Hape-mu ("abyss of waters") of the ancient Egyptians, is in some respects the most remarkable river of the world. It is the only African river that discharges its waters into the Mediterranean. The source of the Nile has been a mystery from the earliest times, and many expeditions have been sent to solve the problem, in vain. From the recent discoveries of Captain Speke we are now enabled to trace it from the south of the equator, where it has been found issuing, a broad clear stream, through Napoleon Channel from Victoria Nyanza, a vast lake about 230 m. in length, and as much in breadth, 3740 ft. above the sea. By the "Ripon Falls" the river tumbles out of the lake over a rocky barrier 12 ft. high and 500 ft. broad, and thence flows slowly N.N.W. through the countries of Uganda, Usoga, and Kidi, to lat. 3° 45' N., where it is joined by the Assua, which probably issues from the N.E. end of the Nyanza. One hundred miles further N., at Gondokoro, lat. 4° 56' N., lon. 31° 47' E., it is 1900 feet above the sea; thence it flows, with many windings, N.W. to lon. 28° 50', its extreme W. point. In lat. 9° N., lon. 30° E., it is joined by the Bahr-el-Ghazal, a sluggish stream from the W., when it turns abruptly E., and is augmented, by the Giraffe or Sobat from the S.E.; its course is now nearly N. to Khartum, lat. 15° 37' N., lon. 32° 32' E., 1188 feet above the sea, where it is joined by the Bahr-el-Azrek or Blue river, from Lake Dembea, on the E. It now turns S.E. to lat. 17° 35', where, at El Damer, it receives the Atbara, its last tributary, from the E., 1740 m. from its mouth, where it is 1088 feet above the sea. At Berber, lat. 18° S., the river passes the northern limit of tropical rains, and flows N.W. to lat. 19° 30'; then, by the "Great Bend," S.W. back to lat. 18°, where it sweeps round, and flows, with a generally N. course, in solitary grandeur, without an affluent, to the Delta. From the junction of its head streams to the Delta, its basin is formed by two parallel chains of mountains, which in some places close upon it and form rapids, and in others open up and leave fine plains between them and the river. Its banks are generally elevated in Nubia; they are less so in Middle Egypt, and absolutely flat in the Delta. The Delta of the Nile commences 90 m. from the sea, where its waters spread out into numerous streams in the form of a triangle, extending at its base on the Mediterranean over a space of 180 m.; the two principal mouths are the W. or Rosetta branch, and the E. or Damietta branch. The others are the Bourlos and Dibe mouths. The great phenomenon of the Nile is its annual inundation, dependent on the rainfall from clouds caused by the S.E. trade wind of the Indian Ocean, and the melting of snow in the mountains near the equator. Year after year, for at least 4000 years, it has continued to rise within a few inches of the same height, and a few hours of the same time, to water a country nearly 2000 m. in length. In April the rise begins in the upper basin, but the flood is not perceptible at Cairo till near the summer solstice. It continues to rise for 90 or 100 days, remaining in flood till the middle of October, when it again subsides. The alluvium with which the Nile is always charged, especially during the inundation, is chiefly due to the Blue river (Bahr-el-Azrek), which brings down the decayed vegetable matter from Abyssinia, that makes the Nile the great fertilizer of Egypt. The Nile is navigated by steamers in the Delta, and by barges as far as the second cataract; and the navigation is remarkably assisted by the wind, which blows from the N. during 9 months in the year. The water of the river is peculiarly soft and sweet; it abounds in fish, and its banks are covered with birds, among which are vultures, geese, quails, pelicans, cormorants, and the sacred ibis. The length of the Nile, in miles, measured along its windings from the Damietta mouth, is to Cairo 164, Siout 430, Kenh 581, Assouan 774, first cataract 779, Derr 933, second cataract 1029, third cataract 1250, fourth cataract 1484, fifth cataract 1679, Atbara river 1739, sixth cataract 1888, Khar-tum 1948, Kak 2428, Bahr-el-Ghazal 2658, Gondokoro 3258, cataract of Meru 3361, Karuma Falls 3576, Ripon Falls 3766 m.; or from the assumed source of the Kitangule, the principal feeder of the Nyanza on the W., 4100 m. It is thus 290 m. shorter than the Mississippi-Missouri, measured along its course, but in direct distance about 84° of lat., or 2350 m., it exceeds the great American river by 680 m. The general fall of the river through Egypt is about five inches to a mile, which gives about 350 feet from Assouan to Rosetta.

NILES, two townships of the U. S., North America, Michigan, on the St Joseph, 160 m. W.S.W. Detroit.—II. New York, 10 m. S.E. Auburn.

NIMBERA, a town of India, in Rajpootana, lat. 24° 36' N., lon. 74° 43' E. It is enclosed with walls and towers, has a mosque and temples, and is the chief place of a pergunnah, containing 275 villages, with an area of 172 sq. m., yielding an annual revenue of 14,000*l.* The dist. is farmed and governed by the British.

NIMBURG (Boh. Wiczemilow), a town of Bohemia, circ. Bunzlau, on an island formed by the Elbe, 16 m. S.S.E. Jung-Bunzlau. P. 2506.

NIMEGUEU or NYMEGEN, Noviomagus, a fortified town of the Netherlands, prov. Gelderland, cap. dist., on l. b. of the Waal, on rail, 9½ m. S. Arnhem. P. (1862) 21,765. It has Roman and Carolingian defensive works, a town-house, and churches; is the seat of a commercial tribunal and an agricultural institute, and has an extensive manuf. of pale ale, with others of Prussian blue and leather. It was formerly a free imperial town, and is celebrated for the treaty of 1678. It was taken by the French in 1794.

NIMES (formerly Nismes), Nemausus, a comm. and town of France, cap. dep. Gard, on the railway from Beaucaire to Cette, and at the head of a branch line to Alais, 30 m. N.E. Montpellier. P. (1861) 57,129. It has a Gothic cathedral, 15 other churches, and an old citadel. Its Roman remains comprise an amphitheatre, a Corinthian temple called the Maison-Carée, which is restored, and serves for a museum of antiquities, the ruins of a bath called the Temple of Diana; 10 m. N.E. are the remains of the aqueduct called the Pont-du-Gard. It has a chamber of commerce, a university academy for the depts. Gard, Ardèche, Lozere, and Vaucluse; a bishop's palace, theatre, palace of justice, hospitals, national college, seminary, normal school, and library of 50,000 vols. Manufs. of silk, cotton, and woollen goods, bonnets, gloves, and shawls, and a trade in grain and medicinal plants. Nimes was subjugated by the Romans 120 years B.C., and ravaged by the Franks, Vandals, and Normans. In the 14th century it was ruined by civil and religious wars. In the 16th century it again suffered on account of its inhabitants having embraced Protestantism. In 1815, on the restoration of the Bourbons, it was the scene of a disgraceful persecution of the Protestants. It is the birthplace of Nicot, who introduced the use of tobacco (tobacum Nicotiana) into France.

NIMFI, a town of Asia Minor, pash. Anatolia, about 23 m. E.N.E. Smyrna. Near it a monument has recently been discovered, consisting of a gigantic human figure, sculptured in bas-relief on the face of a rock.

NIMSHILLEN, a township of the U. S., North America, Ohio, on Nimshillen Creek, co. Stark.

NIMPTSCH, a town of Prussian Silesia, gov. and 29 m. S.W. Breslau, cap. circ., on the Lohe. P. 2114. It is enclosed by walls.

NINE MILE PRAIRIE, a township of the U. S., North America, Missouri, co. Callaway.

NINEVEH, a famous city of antiquity, cap. of the ancient kingdom of Assyria, the ruins of which occupy an extensive space around the vill. Nunia, on the E. bank of the Tigris, opposite Mosul, Asia Minor, 275 m. N.N.W. the ruins of Babylon. At Nimroud, numerous remains of antiquity have been discovered by Layard, Botta, and others. The city was overthrown, and its empire merged in that of Babylon, in 625 B.C.

NINFIELD, a pa. of England, co. Sussex, ¾ m. S.W. Battle. Ac. 2554. P. 587.

NINGHIA and NING-KOU, two cities of China, cap. depts.—I. prov. Kan-su, near the Great Wall, 210 m. N.N.E. Lan-Tchou.—II. prov. Nganhoei, on an affluent of the Yang-tze-kiang, 75 m. S. Nanking, with manufactures of paper.

NINGO, a decayed Danish settlement on the Guinea coast, 38 m. E.N.E. Acera, adjacent to which latter is the village Little Ningo.

NING-PO, a city of China, prov. Che-kiang, and one of the treaty ports recently opened to foreign trade, on the Takia or Ning-po river, the mouth of which is directly opposite Chusan, 95 m. E.S.E. Hang-chow-foo, on a tongue of land at the influx of an affl. into the river, here crossed by a bridge of boats. Lat. 29° 51' N.; lon. 121° 32' E. P. estimated at between 200,000 and 300,000. The city, surrounded by a fine plain covered with villages and water-courses, is 6 m. in circumference, enclosed by walls 25 feet in height, and entered by 6 gates. It has well supplied shops, a temple of large size, hexagonal tower, 150 ft. high; a missionary hospital, opened in 1843; an active trade in junk-building, and a manuf. of silks for export to Japan. It has been reported that about 670 junks come to it annually from Shan-tung and Leao-tong, with oil, provisions, fruits, cordage, horns, drugs, rice, and silk; 560 from Fokien and Hai-nan, with sugar, alum, pepper, black tea, indigo, salt, rice, and dye-woods; from Canton and the Straits some vessels; and from the interior about 4000 small craft yearly. Besides the native traffic there is a large foreign trade carried on in upwards of 1000 ships annually, in the aggregate 130,000 tons, exporting 13,000,000 lbs. of tea, 20,000 bales of silk, & other commodities valued at 3,500,000*l.*, and general imports at 2,000,000*l.*, exclusive of specie. It exports wood and charcoal to Shang-hai. On the opposite side of the river is a foreign settlement, where the British consul resides, and from 30 to 40 foreigners carry on trade. Here is a custom-house under foreign management, with an annual revenue of 230,000*l.* It was taken by the British, without resistance, in 1841, when a ponderous bell, now in the British Museum, was captured. In Dec. 1861 it was captured by the Taiping rebels, and held until May 1862, when it was re-captured by a British naval force, aided by a body of disciplined Chinese.

NINGUTA, a considerable town of Manchuria, on an affl. of the Sungari, 145 m. N.E. Kirin-ula, and stated to have been the original seat of the reigning dynasty of China.

NINIANS (ST), (vulg. St Ringans), a pa. of Scotland, co. & 2 m. S. Stirling. Ac. 38,541. P. (1861) 8946. It contains the vills. St Ninians and Bannockburn, at which tartans, woollen stuffs, leather, and nails are manufactured, and it has several productive coal mines. In this pa. three memorable battles were fought: 1st, on 13th Sept. 1297, between the troops of Wallace and the English, who were totally routed; 2d, the famous battle of Bannockburn; and 3d, a battle on June 11, 1488, in which James III. of Scotland was defeated and killed by his insurgent nobles.

NIVILLAC, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Morbihan, 27 m. S.E. Vannes. P. 2908.

NIXDORF (GROSS), a vill. of Austria, Bohemia, circ. and 33 m. N.N.E. Leitmeritz. P. 5090. Manufs. woollen and linen; mineral baths.

NIZA, a town of Portugal, prov. Alemtejo, comarca and 21 m. N.W. Portalegre, near the Tagus. P. 2250.

NIZA or NITZA, a vill. of European Turkey, Albania, on the Bay of Delvino, opposite Corfu.

NIZAMPATAM, a maritime town of Brit. India, presid. Madras, dist. and 31 m. S.S.E. Guntoor, with an active coasting trade. It is the chief place of a subdivision of the same name, with a pop. of 24,646.

NIZAM'S TERRITORY, a region of India, Hyderabad, between lat. 15° 10'–21° 42' N., lon. 74° 40'–81° 32' E. Is divided into 4 great provinces: 1. Ellichpore; 2. Hyderabad; 3. Aurungabad; and 4. Bidar. These are again subdivided into 36 districts. Area 93,337 sq. m. P. 10,666,080. The remains of Hindoo industry, in the caves of Ellore, show that a considerable population must have existed in these regions in very early times. In 1759, when the rupture between Nizam Ali and the French was irreconcilable, Salabat Jang concluded a treaty by which Masulipatam was ceded to the British. He also restored the office of Diwan to Nizam Ali. This led to an immediate war, in which the Nizam's forces were defeated near Dharur, and in consequence he was obliged to cede Ahmednuggur, the forts of Daulatabad, Sewnari, Asirgarh, Visayapoor, and the province of Aurungabad, with the exception of the city and two pergunnahs. In 1761, Salabat Jang was imprisoned by Nizam Ali, and he, being recognised as Nizam by the French treaty, became an object of jealousy to his brother, who caused him to be murdered in September of that year. In 1766, General Culliaud, the first British envoy that ever visited Hyderabad, negotiated a treaty by which Nizam Ali ceded to the British the N. Circars. In the same year he recovered Daulatabad. In 1790 he subsidized 2 battalions of sepoy, and 1 artillery corps of 6 guns, manned by Europeans, and then joined Lord Cornwallis in the war with Tippee. Sir John Kenneway, who was then appointed resident in 1788, was the first accredited English minister at this court. In 1798, the French forces were disbanded by the Bengal government, and in 1800 Nizam's forces were fixed at 8 battalions of sepoy and 2 regiments of cavalry, with the usual complement of guns; a revenue for the support of these was given back to the Company of 874,000*l*. Nizam Ali died in 1803, succeeded by his son, Mirza Sikandur Jah, who was not so well disposed to the English. He died in 1828, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Nazir'u'd-dualat, who died in 1857. Few provinces of India are so deficient in aboriginal races as the Nizam's territory. Burhanpoor, in Birar, is celebrated for its Natch girls, who form the greater part of the female population: their beauty is renowned throughout India, and many of them have been raised to sovereign dignity.

NORTH SEA (erroneously called German Ocean), Dutch Nord Zee, anc. Germanicum Mare, is that part of the Atlantic Ocean, bounded E. by Norway and Denmark, S. by Hanover, the Netherlands, Belgium, and France, and W. by the British islands. By the Danes it is called the "West Sea," in reference to their position. On the N.E. it forms a wide arm called the Skager-rack, 60 m. broad, which separates Norway from Denmark. This again communicates S. ward with the Catte-gat or Kattegat, a great arm of the North Sea between Sweden on the E., the Danish isls. on the S., and the peninsula of Jütland on the W. It is narrowest at its S. end, and widest at the N. It communicates with the Baltic by the three straits called the Sound or Ore Sund, and the Great and Little Belts, and by the Gotha Canal in Sweden, which avoids these straits. The principal rivers which flow into the North Sea are the Thames, Humber, Tay, Schelde, Rhine, Ems, Weser, Elbe, Eider, and Glömmen; chief ports London, Yarmouth, Hull, Leith, Dundee, Dunkirk, Ostend, Flushing, Bergen-op-Zoom, Rotterdam, Amsterdam, Harlingen, Altona, and Hamburg. The navigation of a portion of it is impeded by sandbanks. It affords a valuable supply of fish. [ATLANTIC—BAL TIC.]

NORTHUMBERLAND, the most N. co. of England, bounded N.W. by Scotland (cos. Roxburgh and Berwick), E. the North Sea, S. Durham, W. Cumberland. Area 1871 sq. m., or 1,249,299 ac.; 160,000 arable, 650,000 pasture, besides mountain sheep walks. P. (1861) 343,025. Is divided into 6 wards and 97 pas. in the diocese of Durham and N. circuit. Sends (without Berwick) 8 members to House of Commons (4 bor., 2 each for N. and S. div.). Reg. co. electors (1864) N. div. 3118, S. div. 5443. Northumberland is a rugged county. The highest hills, the Cheviots, are on the N.W. border. They extend from Wooler in a S.W. direction, 2600 feet high; in shape nearly conical; covered with fine green turf; excellent pasture. Parallel to the Cheviots is another range of hills, including the Divot Hills, Egingham Common, Rothbury Forest, Simonside Hills, and Harwood Moor. Spurs from these go out towards the sea. The coast is low. The bays and estuaries are Buddle Bay, Alnmouth, Seaton Road, estuary of the Blyth, do. of the Tyne. On the coast are Holy Island and Coquet Island. Chief rivers, Tyne, Blyth, Coquet, Aln, and Till. That part of the Great N. coal field which is included in Northumberland begins at Warkworth on the N., is bounded on E. by the sea, on the W. the boundary line passes in nearly a straight line through Acklington, Earsdon, Morpeth, Ponteland, & Heddon-on-the-Wall; on the S. the Northumbrian portion is bounded by the Tyne. The field, however, crosses the Tyne, and occupies a large part of Durham. The climate cold, but dry as compared with W. coast of England. The picturesque parts of the co. are the Cheviots, Rothbury and vale of the Coquet, the North Tyne, and Tyneside, especially above Newcastle. Chief towns, Newcastle, North Shields, Tynemouth, Morpeth, Alnwick, and Hexham. Railways.—Newcastle to Carlisle (with branch to Alston); to Edinburgh, via N. Tyne valley (the Waverley route); to Tynemouth; to S. Shields & Sunderland; to the S. by N.-Eastern; to Blyth and Morpeth, via Percy Main; to Edinburgh, via Berwick. Other minor lines and tramways for colliery purposes innumerable. Agriculture is well conducted. Wheat, oats, beans, barley, and turnips all yield finest crops. Cattle, mostly short-horned, are of good breed. At Chillingham Park there are wild cattle which have to be shot like deer; they are cream-coloured with black muzzles. The Cheviot sheep are celebrated. Excellent farm horses are bred in the co. Coal, lead, and iron are the chief mineral productions. The miners are a greatly improved class. Manufs. chiefly confined to Newcastle. The peculiar interest of its history depends on Northumberland being a border county. The Roman wall is the chief antiquarian attraction. It extends from Wallsend to Greenhead, and then on through Cumberland to Bowness. The co. has the castles of Norham, Wark, Heton, Dudhope, Ford, Bamborough, Dunstanborough, Alnwick (recently restored), Warkworth, Callaley, Bothall, Mitford, Belsay, Harnham, Langley, Bienkinsop, Bellester, Thirlwall, Featherstone, Haward, and Prudhoe, besides many others; Tynemouth priory, Hulne abbey, near Alnwick, Brinkburn priory, near Rothbury. There are ruined churches or chapels at Old Bewick, between Alnwick and Wooler; Memmer-kirk in Coquetdale ward, near the border of Scotland; Bothall, near Morpeth; and Jesmond, near Newcastle.

NORTHUMBERLAND, a marit. co. of New South Wales, having N. the Hunter river, which separates it from the cos. Durham and Gloucester, W. the co. Hunter, S. the Hawkesbury river, separating it from co. Cumberland, and E. the Pacific Ocean. Ac. 1,498,880. P. (1861) 31,271. Surface mountainous. Coal is a highly important product, and is exported from Newcastle, on the Hunter; besides which town, this co. contains Maitland, Singleton, Gosford, etc. It returns two mems. to the New South Wales legislative assembly, one for the co., and one for its boroughs.

NORTHUMBERLAND, several cos. of the U. S., North America.—I. in centre of Pennsylvania. Area 431 sq. m. P. (1860) 28,922.—II. in E. of Virginia. Area 143 sq. m. P. 4092 free, 3439 slaves.—III. a township, New York, 15 m. N.N.E. Ballston Spa. P. 1775.

NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES, a division of India, between lat. 23° 51' and 30° 56' N., lon. 75° 20' and 84° 40' E., which includes the non-regulation districts. These provinces are distributed into the following six divisions, which comprehend 31 districts:—Delhi, Meerut, Rohilcund, Agra, Allahabad, and Benares. Area 71,972 sq. m. P. (1852) 30,271,882. The non-regulation districts comprise Ganjan, Vizagapatam, and Karmel, covering an area of 13,726 sq. m. P. 2,454,392. The administration of these provinces is conducted by a lieutenant-governor, who is appointed by the Governor-General in Council. The land assessment is framed upon the basis of two-thirds of the net rent, for a term of thirty-two years.

NORTH-WEST PASSAGE, a water-communication by three or four channels between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, to the north of the continent of America, through the Polar Seas. This passage, which for more than three centuries was the great desideratum of maritime nations, was discovered by Captain M'Clure, of H.M.S. "Investigator," in search of Sir John Franklin. As these channels are all more or less encumbered with ice, this discovery has been of little or no commercial importance. The "Investigator" entered Behring Strait on the W., 5th August 1850, and reached the N. side of Bank's Land, within 60 m. of Melville Strait, on the E., 24th September 1851.

Norway is composed of a series of elevated and barren table-lands, called Fields or Fjelds, which extend along the W. shore from the North Cape on the N., to the Naaze on the S., with an average breadth of about 60 m., to the parallel of Trondhjem, and thence expanding on the S. to about 200 m. in breadth. The mountains of Norway do not form a continuous chain or ridge, as usually represented, but, especially in the S., a series of broad plateaux, separated occasionally by deep and narrow valleys. The most characteristic of these table-lands is the Dovre-field, which divides Norway into two great halves, called Nordenfields and Söudenfields, 3000 feet in elevation, on which rises the mountain of Sneehätten, 7620 feet above the sea. The culminating point of the southern or broadest portion is 8500 feet above the sea, in lat. 61° 30' N. In the N. or narrower portion, the Kiölen mountains assume more the form of a ridge; the highest point is Sulitelma, 6200 feet above the sea, in lat. 67° 30' N. The W. and N. parts of the peninsula descend abruptly towards the W.; while, on the other side, the mountains slope gently to the S.E. Skagastölsind, on the limits of the Sogne and Guldbrandsdal, is 8670 feet; Langefeld, in the Sogne-Field, 6573 feet; Gausta-Field and Hardanger-Field, in Tellemarken, 6162 feet; and Folgefonden glacier, on the border of the stift Bergen, 6200 feet. Scarcely one-half of the surface is under 2050 feet absolute height; and it is calculated that the proportion of arable land to the whole extent is not more than 1 to 10. The only plains are those formed by the table-lands between the stifts Aggershuus and Bergen, which extend from 60 to 80 m. in length, and have an elevation of 8600 to 4620 feet. The mountains contain rich minerals; but, from the difficulty of transport and the want of fuel, mining industry is but little developed. The only mines in operation are those of silver, copper, iron, cobalt, chrome, manganese, and lead. The chief product is iron, the mines of which are situated mostly on the Gulf of Christiania; the best is found in the dist. of Arendal, but the most productive at Kaaford, near Hammerfest. The silver mine of Konsberg is at present one of the richest in Europe, producing to the value of 600,000 franks a year, and, next to the copper mines of Roraas and the environs of Drontheim, is the most important in the kingdom. The principal valleys are confined to the E. side of the peninsula; the longest is the Osterdal, watered by the Glommen, which, with its continuation the Solö and Oudal, is 215 m. in length. The next in extent, and the most fertile, is the Guldbrandsdal, watered by the Laugen. Narrow belts between the coasts and the commencement of the plateaux, are the only low lands in Norway; the most extensive of these surrounds the Gulf of Trondhjem. The W. shores are penetrated by an immense number of gulfs or fjords, which occasionally extend deep into the table-lands. The chief of these are, from S. to N., the Bukkefiord, Hardanger, Trondhjem, Saltens, Ofoden, Porsang and Varang fjords. The most extensive gulf on the S. coast is that of Christiania. Numerous peninsulas separate the fjords, among the most remarkable of which are Cape Nord-Kyn on the N., and Cape Stadt on the W. coast. Some of the fjords form excellent harbours; but the immense number of mountainous islands and rocky islets which border the coast render access difficult. The largest of these archipelagoes are the Lofoden islands, separated from the continent by the Vest-fiord. The chief of them is Ost-Waagen, the central point, where every February and March assemble 5000 boats, and 20,000 men, for the great fishing expedition; and farther N., the islands of Mageröe, Soröe, Ringvadöe, Qvalöe, on which is Hammerfest, the northernmost village in Europe, and the only place in the world where there are truly 3 months of day and 3 of night. The Norwegian archipelago may be divided into 5 groups; those of Stavanger and Bergen in the N. Sea, Drontheim and Helgö in the Atlantic, and Lofoden in the Glacial Ocean. The principal of the first group is Carmöe. The islands forming part of Finmark in the north are called the Tromsen group, the largest of which is Senjen, and the most important for commerce, Tromsöe. Between these island groups and the continent there is a wide passage for coasting vessels. A great part of the E. side of Norway is covered with lakes, said to number 30,000 in all, which, however, are generally of small extent. Many of them are situated at great elevations in the table-land: among these, the Bygdinsee, 15 to 20 m. long, is 3490 feet above the sea; the Miösen, 52 m. long, 9 m. broad at its widest part; the Randsford, 30 m. long, 3 m. broad; and the Miös-Vand, which communicates with the Tinelsöe. The lakes abound in fish. The river systems of Norway are of the utmost importance in the economy of the country; the smaller streams are employed in driving the machinery of mines, corn and saw mills, and in floating timber to the larger rivers; these serve also as the chief means of communication in winter, when they are covered with strong ice. The rivers on the N. are inconsiderable, the mountains approaching so close to the shore; the chief of them is the Tana, which, after a course of 190 m., falls into the gulf of the same name; the Alten, Mals, and Salten, whose fiord has a very violent current. The largest rivers are on the E. slope of the plateau, flowing S. to the Skager-rack: these are the Wefsen; the Namsen, by which the N. coasts are supplied with timber—at its mouth, in the Namsen-fiord, is a jet of water 130 feet in height; the Glommen, 310 m. long; & the Drammenelf, and Lougen, which flow into the Skager-rack. Ships enter the mouths of some of these rivers for 5 or 10 m., but none of them are navigable on account of numerous fos (waterfalls).

Of these the more celebrated are the Sarpfenfosso, the Glommen, near Fredrikstad, & the Riikanfon in the dist. Tellemarken, which falls 513 feet; Vöringsfos, in the dist. Hardanger, has a perpendicular fall of 870 to 920 feet; and the Feigumfos, near the Sognefiord, in the diocese of Bergen.

Scandinavia, from its vicinity to the sea, has a remarkably mild climate, considering its northern position. The snow line is much higher than in corresponding latitudes in other countries: in lat. 61° it is 5300 feet; and in lat. 70°, 3480 feet above the sea. In Siberia the cultivation of grain ceases at lat. 60°; while in Norway it extends to lat. 70° N. The mean annual temperature at the level of the sea is, at North Cape, 32°; Trondhjem (lat. 63° 5' 40°); Ullensvang in Hardanger-Fiord (lat. 60°) 45°; Christiania (lat. 59° 54') 41°, Fahr. The sea never freezes, even at North Cape, but the shallow water of the Skagerrack is occasionally frozen in winter. About 1-38th part of the surface is covered with perennial snow: vast glaciers descend from the table-lands, and terrible avalanches occur by the melting of the snow. In the E. and the interior the cold is felt with the greatest intensity. Winter is the most favourable season for commerce and for pleasure parties. The year is nearly divided between winter and summer; spring is almost unknown, and the autumn is cold and rigorous; snow covers the ground from the beginning of November till the end of March. In January and February the temperature is usually from 14° to 18°, and often as low as 2° Fahr. Summer lasts from May to Sept., during which the temperature is often as high as 108° Fahr. In the month of March the surface is strewed with ashes, earth, or sand, by which means the snow is melted; and from this process, combined with the great heat and the length of the day, 8 to 12 weeks are sometimes sufficient for sowing, ripening, and reaping the crops in the interior. The climate of the W. coast, though milder than that of the S. or the interior, is deteriorated by excessive humidity, and the exhalations from the sea, which injure vegetation; the gulfs never freeze. The W. wind, blowing over the Atlantic, carries moisture, which is intercepted by the mountains, and precipitated in the form of rain, to the amount of 70 or 80 inches annually; while the E. wind brings extreme drought. The vegetation of Norway varies according to climate and position. Among trees, the pine tribe is the most numerous. The fir, which is found in lat. 60° 20' at an elevation of 4000 feet, and the pine (pinus sylvestris), form vast and valuable forests in Aggershuus, Christiansand, and Trondhjem. The forests of fir extend N. to the Polar circle, and those of pine beyond it. The oak forms large forests in the ams Jærlsberg and Laurvig, and especially in Christiansand. The birch attains the highest northern latitude, and from its sap the Norwegian makes a beverage resembling white wine. In lat. 70° it grows at an elevation of 1580 feet above the sea. The wild apple is common in the lower regions, and the cherry is widely distributed. In the island of Touterøe, 21<sup>3</sup>/<sub>5</sub> from the Polar circle, the mild influence of the sea is such that these fruits come to maturity even there. In the S. the peach, apricot, and melon are largely cultivated; but flax, hemp, and hops are grown with most care and success. Flowers are successfully cultivated in the gardens of the S. and W. The principal grain of Norway is barley; the other cerealia are cultivated only in favoured spots in the S. Barley attains the highest northern latitude, and the greatest elevation: in lat. 59° 25' it is grown at a height of 2838 feet; the extreme limit of its culture is lat. 70°, but there it ripens only at an elevation of 65 to 100 feet; its profitable culture is confined to a narrow belt of coast land, and to the agricultural colonies of Mølselv and Barodal, in Nordland. Of all the grains, oats are most successfully cultivated in this country, which has so many obstacles to encounter from climate and inundations of the rivers. The potato has of late been extensively cultivated. In the interior are small prairies, called siters, which are used for pasturage. The rearing of cattle is the chief occupation of the population of the mountainous districts, who, like the Swiss, leave the vills, and spend the summer, with their flocks and herds, in the higher regions. From the simple habits of the population, and the excellent climate, the value of life is understood to be high in Norway, except at Bergen, which is unhealthy, and where leprosy is prevalent. The industry of the Norwegians leads them to appropriate nearly everything to some useful purpose. The horses, a small but hardy breed, are extensively exported to Sweden, England, and Scotland. Sheep are of an inferior breed, and yield coarse wool. In the N. the reindeer is the only resource of the Laplander. Horned animals graze at liberty on the isls. along the coast. The most destructive wild animals are the brown bear, wolf, & lynx; these, with the fox & others, are hunted for their skins; but the increase of pop. has caused the diminution of wild animals. The elk is now very rarely met with. The eagle is destructive to sheep and lambs. Game of all kinds is abundant, and there are no game-laws. The chief objects of the chase are the deer, reindeer, and hare; the seal, which abounds on all the coasts; the fish-otter; and, among birds, the grouse and the caperkailzie. The coast literally swarms with sea-fowl: the wild goose and eider duck are numerous; the swan appears on the S. coast in winter, and ducks of various kinds abound on the shores, and in the lakes and rivers. In the small uninhabited isles off the N. coast, vast numbers of the eggs of sea-fowl are gathered. The procuring of the eider-down is perilous work, but very profitable, and there are very strict laws for the preservation of the eider duck. Fishing forms the most important branch of industry. In 1860 there were 5675 boats, with 24,266 men, employed in the fishery. Whales are occasionally taken on the coast of Finmark; salmon abound in the gulfs and rivers; there are extensive beds of oysters on all the shores, and the pearl oyster is found in many of the rivers. The peasants of Norway live in wooden huts covered with birch-bark and turf; they have no vills, but each proprietor lives on his own farm, however small. There are few manufs. in Norway. Brandy distilleries and saw-mills are the only extensive branches of industry; next to these are forges & metal foundries, the produce of which is exported in a raw state, except what is used in the manuf. of arms at Kongsberg, and in the manufs. of iron wire and nails. The manufs. of cloth, linen, and cotton, as well as the preparation of skins and leather, are almost entirely domestic. The other manufs. comprise glass, paper, oil, gunpowder, soap, tobacco, and sugar refining. Owing to the difficulty of transport, all the seats of industry, and the only towns, are on the coast, and chiefly on the Gulf of Christiania. Ship-building is actively carried on in the ports. In the middle ages, the commerce of Norway consisted exclusively in the exportation of fish, and this is still the most important article of trade. Next to this is the export of timber, which was commenced by the Dutch in the 16th century; and, lastly, the products of the mines and metal forges. The principal forests are in the interior; the timber is felled in autumn and winter, and is conveyed over the snow to the coast. Fish is exported from all the towns on the W. coast, but Bergen is the chief entrepôt. Exports (1862), timber, fish, ice, copper, grains, seal skins, etc., to the value of 1,105,973*l*. Imports, iron, woollens, coals, cotton, hardwares, apparel, leather, earthenware, coffee, etc., to the value of 606,773*l*. Commerce in the interior of the country is greatly impeded for want of means of communication; none of the rivers are navigable except near their mouths. There are good roads between the towns of the S. coast, and several railways; but the usual communication is by sea. Among the numerous islands on the W. coast, there are violent and irregular currents, which render the navigation dangerous. Among these is the celebrated Mælström or Moskenstrom, the danger from which has, however, been greatly exaggerated. Regular communications have successively been established between the principal towns of the coast, from Christiania to Hammerfest, and steam vessels ply in the Gulf of Christiania, and on the Lakes of Mïösen and Tyriford. Nearly the whole pop. of the kingdom are Northmans or Normanns, with about 13,000 Fins or Lapps, who are of the Mongolian race. The chief occupation is agriculture and cattle-rearing. Silver, copper, and iron mining are carried on in 23 mining establishments. The Fins and Lapps live on the products of their reindeer. The inhabitants of Finmark lead a very miserable life; they have very little grain; and when it fails, they make cakes of bark from the young pine trees; also moss-bread, which is a much more wholesome food than the former. The Norwegian, or Norsk, is one of the Teutonic or German languages, and is nearly allied to the Swedish and Danish. Norway comprises five governments or dioceses (stifts), namely, Christian-sand, Aggershuus or Christiania, Bergen, Drontheim, and Nordland. These are divided into 16 prefectures or amts, comprising 46 rural districts or fogderies. It is a free, independent, and indivisible state, united only under the same sovereign with Sweden. The freedom of the press is guaranteed. Lutheranism is the state religion, in which Lutherans are obliged to train their children. Other religionists are tolerated, except Jews, Jesuits, and monks, who are excluded. The government is constitutional, and one of the most democratic in Europe, the entire legislative and executive powers being vested in the Storting, or great court of the realm. Rev. (1863) 1,036,022*l*., nearly all from customs and excise. Expenditure under the revenue. Army (1863) 18,157 men. Navy 156 war vessels (frigates, corvettes, and gunboats), with 5060 guns and 4000 men. There are few countries in Europe where elementary instruction is more widely spread than in Norway; every peasant can read, and many can write and cast accounts. The law forbids the marriage of any one who cannot procure a certificate of confirmation, and this is given to those only who can read. Every individual of the age of 20 not confirmed is liable to be sent to a house of correction to receive the necessary instruction. In all the towns there are elementary schools, and many have Sabbath and private schools. The chief seat of learning is the University of Christiania; there are nine royal and five other colleges, a military school at Christiania, and a school of marine at Frederickshavn. Six normal schools are supported by the state. There are excellent public libraries, museums, and scientific collections, in the different towns. The principal literary productions are periodicals. Each commune is bound to support its own poor, and mendicity is punished as a crime. The state maintains magazines of reserve for grain, which is supplied to the inhabitants on payment of a fixed amount of interest. The Norwegian clergy, as a class, are virtuous and enlightened, interested, and often occupying themselves in everything that concerns public usefulness and the prosperity of the country. Labour and frugality are characteristic traits of the people. The fêtes of Midsummer and Christmas are the only occasions in which the Norwegian deviates from his simple habits. In 1380, Olaf iv., King of Denmark, and heir to the throne of Norway, united the crowns of the two kingdoms, and this union lasted till 1814, when Norway was ceded by the King of Denmark, and annexed to Sweden by the Allied Powers, at the treaty of Kiel, and the two crowns of Norway and Sweden were declared united on the 4th November 1814.

NORWEGIAN, a town of the U. S., N. America, Schuykill co., Pennsylvania. P. 10,002.

NORWICH, a city, parl. bor., and river-port of England, cap. co. Norfolk, and a co. of itself, on a branch railway, and on the Yare or Wensum, here crossed by 10 bridges, 18 m. W. Yarmouth. Ac. of city and co. 4325. P. (1851) 68,195; (1861) 74,891. The city, about 5 m. in circumference, is bordered on the N. and E. by the river; elsewhere it was enclosed by fragments of walls, flanked with towers, and entered by 12 gates, but these have been mostly removed. Altitude 40 feet. On the S. and W. several new quarters have sprung up, and most of the hamlets of its co. now form suburbs continuous with the city. The market-place is one of the largest in the kingdom. Near the centre of the city is the castle, a massive quadrangular Norman keep, now used for a prison. On the castlehill are the co. gaol and the co. hall. The cathedral, built between the 11th and 16th centuries, is 411 feet in length, 191 feet in breadth, and surmounted by a spire 315 feet in height. Around it are the cloisters, bishop's palace, deanery, and St Ethelred and Erpingham gates, connecting the cathedral with the city. St Peter Mancroft is spacious; St George, Colegate, St Lawrence, and St Saviour. There are, besides, the Unitarian, Independent, Baptist, Roman Catholic, Friends' meeting houses, a Jews' synagogue, and other dissenting places of worship. St Andrew's hall, used for corporation and other festivities, and public meetings, was originally a part of a Dominican convent. The Guildhall, containing a collection of portraits; the city gaol, the corn exchange, public library, theatre, cavalry barracks, and a workhouse, are among the chief edifices. The great hospital charity, rev. 18,323*l*. a year, supports many aged persons; and a grammar school; the boys' and girls' hospital, rev. 4000*l*.; Doughty's hospital, Norfolk and Norwich general hospital, blind asylum, Norfolk and Norwich literary institute with a library of 11,000 vols., and a mechanics' institute with a library of 18,000 vols., and a people's college. Norwich was long famous for its worsted manufacture, but this has declined in favour of the West Riding of Yorkshire; and most of the yarns now wrought up at Norwich arespun at Bradford, etc. Its principal manufactures are now bombazines, shawls, gauzes, crapes, gros-de-Naples, mousseline-de-laine, fringes, etc. It has, besides, silk, worsted, and woollen mills, and one cotton mill. Norwich has also iron and brass foundries; snuff, oil, mustard, and corn mills; breweries and dyeing works. It has a branch of the Bank of England, and several private banks. It communicates by a canal with the Lowestoff navigation; and with Ely, Cambridge, and London by the N. and E. Counties Railway. It returns two members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1864) 5506. It is the place of election for the East division of Norfolk. Throughout the civil war it was garrisoned for the Parliament. Archbishop Parker, Dr Kay, Drs Samuel Clarke and Beloe (the translator of Herodotus), were born at Norwich. The city is the seat of a triennial musical festival.

NORWICH, a city and township, U. S., North America, Connecticut, on the Thames, at the head of its navigation, 35 m. S.E. Hartford. Its streets rise above each other in tiers, up the declivity of a steep hill.—II. a township, New York, cap. co. Chenango, on the Chenango, W. bank, 94 m. W.S.W. Albany.—III. a township, Vermont, united to Hanover by a bridge across the Connecticut, 42 m. S.S.E. Montpelier.

NORWOOD, a parochial chapelry of England, co. Middlesex, 2 m. N. Hounslow. P. 4484.—II. (Upper and Lower), two large villas., co. Surrey, pas. Lambeth and Croydon, 6 m. S. London, with a station on the London and Croydon Railway. Ac. 9821. United pop. 30,240. They have two district churches, a school of industry for destitute children from London, a cemetery, and public gardens.

NOSSA-SENHORA-DO-DESTERRO. [DESTERRO.]

NOSSEN, a town of Saxony, circ. and 19 m. W. Dresden, on the Frieberg-Mulde, with a royal residence. P. 5472. It has manufactures of linens, and breweries.

NOSS-HEAD, a bold rocky point on the E. coast of Scotland, co. Caithness,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  m. N.E. Wick. Under it is a vast cavern. It has a lighthouse in lat.  $58^{\circ} 28' 38''$  N., lon.  $3^{\circ} 9' 5''$  W.; light revolving; elevation 175 feet.

NOSS-ISLAND, one of the Shetland islands, Scotland, E. Bressay, and separated from it by a narrow and dangerous sound. Circumference about 6 miles.

NOSSI BE, an island of the Indian Ocean, on the N.W. coast of Madagascar. It belongs to France. P. 6000.

NOTAAWASAGA, a river of Canada W., dist. Simcoe, after a N. course of more than 60 miles, enters Notaawasaga Bay by an inlet at the S. end of Georgian Bay, Lake Huron.

NOTARESCO, a market town of S. Italy, prov. and circ. Teramo, cap. circ. P. 3550.

NOTGROVE, a pa. of England, co. Glo'ster,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  m. N.N.W. Northleach. Ac. 1530. P. 162.

NOTLEY, 2 pas., Engl., co. Essex.—I. (Black),  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.E. Braintree. Ac. 1936. P. 489.—II. (White), 9 m. N.N.E. Chelmsford. Ac. 2228. P. 508.

NOTO, a city of Sicily, cap. prov. of same name, 16 m. S.W. Syracuse, on a hill 2 m. from the sea. P. (1861) 14,619. It has a cathedral, several churches and convents, a council-house, hospital, lyceum, and a trade in corn, wine, oil, and sulphur. Near the town is the famous abbey of the Cistercian friars, built in 1212. About 3 m. W. the town are the ruins of an amphitheatre and gymnasium, and remains of ancient Netum, destroyed by an earthquake in 1693.

NORO (VAL DI), an old division of Sicily, comprising its S.E. portion, and now forming the prov. of Noto, in the kingdom of Italy. Area 1436 sq. m. P. (1862) 259,613. A town of Japan, island Nippon, is named Noto.

NOTRE DAME, numerous comms. and vills. of France.—I. (de Bondeville), dep. Seine-Inférieure, arr. Rouen. P. 2751.—II. (de Mont), dep. Vendée, arr. Les Sables. P. 1345.—III. (de Lièsses), a town, dep. Aisne, arr. Liçon, near l. b. of the Souche. P. 1408.—IV. (de la Rouvière), dep. Gard, arr. Le Vigan, cant. Valleraugne. P. 1184.—V. (de Samillac), dep. Dordogne, arr. Périgueux, cant. St Pierre-de-Chignac. P. 1259.—VI. (de Touchet), dep. Manche, arr. and cant. Mortain. P. 1259.—VII. (du Thil), dep. Oise, arr. and cant. Beauvais. P. 1594.

NOTRE DAME BAY, Newfoundland, N.E. coast, is between lat.  $49^{\circ} 30'$  and  $50^{\circ}$  N., lon.  $55^{\circ}$  and  $56^{\circ}$  W., bounded N. by Cape St John.

NOTTINGHAM, a parl. and munic. bor., and manuf. town of England, cap. co. Nottingham, and a co. of itself, on the Leen, at its junction with the Trent, which is here crossed by a bridge of 19 arches, and on railway,  $15\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.E. Derby. Ac. of bor. and co. 1870. P. (1851) 57,407; do. (1861) 74,693. It stands at the foot and on the declivity of a rocky eminence. Altitude about 115 feet. The town has a very large market-place, an exchange, with assembly rooms; co. and town hall, co. and bor. gaols, a general hospital, 2 lunatic asylums, cavalry and infantry barracks, and theatre, 12 churches, dissenting chapels; schools, hospitals, and other charities are numerous. Nottingham is the great centre of the lace and bobbin-net manufacture in England; besides which, it has silk, cotton, and flax mills; manufs. of hosiery and machinery; large bleaching works, malt-houses, breweries, dye works, and wire, pin, iron, and brass factories. It communicates by a canal and railway with the Codnor iron and coal district. It sends 2 members to H. of C., and is a polling-place for the S. division of the co. Reg. elect. (1864) 6583. Several parliaments have been held here; and hence Richard III. marched with his forces to Bosworth field in 1485.

NOTTINGHAMSHIRE, a central co. of England, having N. the co. York, E. Lincolnshire, and W. Derbyshire. Ac. 526,076, of which about 470,000 are estimated to be in grass, or arable. P. (1861) 293,867. Surface, except in the vale of Trent, diversified with gentle hills, here and there exhibiting considerable remains of its ancient famous royal forest or Shire-wood. [SHERWOOD.] Principal river, the Trent, and its affls. the Soar and Idle. Climate remarkable for comparative dryness, supposed to be owing to the Derby hills intercepting the moist W. winds. Surface mostly a light sandy or a rich clayey loam. Agriculture well advanced. Limestone, and, in the W., coal is abundant. The co. is the principal seat of the cotton hosiery and lace manufs. in England. It is traversed by branches of the North Midland, Sheffield and Lincoln, and Great Northern Railways. Nottingham is divided into 6 hunds. and 246 pas., in the diocese of Lincoln and Midland circuit. Chief towns, Nottingham, Newark, E. Retford, and Mansfield. It sends 10 members to H. of C., viz. 2 for the N. and 2 for the S. division of co., and 6 for its bors. Reg. co. electors (1864), for N. div. 3983, for S. div. 3457. This co. formed a part of the Saxon kingdom of Mercia.

NOTTINGHAM, several townships of the U. S., N. America.—I. New Jersey, 17 m. N.E. Mount Holly.—II. New Hampshire, 23 m. E.S.E. Concord.—Others are in Pennsylvania and Maryland.

NOTTING-HILL, England, co. Middlesex, is a suburban hamlet of London, pa. Kensington, on the Western Road,  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. from St Paul's Cathedral. P. (1861) 15,662.

NOTTINGTON, a hamlet of England, co. Dorset, pa. Broadway, 2 m. N.W. Weymouth. P. 104. It has a sulphur spring, baths, and pump-room.

NOVA SCOTIA, a peninsula of North America, on its E. side, forming, with the island of Cape Breton (annexed in 1819), a British colonial territory, between lat. 43° 25' and 47° N., lon. 59° 46' and 69° 25' W., connected N.W. with New Brunswick by an isthmus 14 m. across, separated on the N. from Prince Edward Island by Northumberland Strait, and by the narrow Gut of Canso from Cape Breton on the N.E.; having on other sides the Atlantic and the Bay of Fundy. Its position, farther E. than any other portion of the North American continent except Labrador, marks it as the great natural highway for travel between Europe and America. Nova Scotia proper is 256 m. long, and has an extreme breadth of 100 m. Area 15,600 sq. m. The isl. of Cape Breton is 100 m. in length, and 72 m. in breadth. Area 3000 sq. m. P. (1861) 330,857, of whom 5927 are negroes, 1407 Indians, and 20,859 Acadians. Surface undulating, the highest hills (in the Cohequid Chain) being 1100 feet high. Soil arable and well watered. Lakes and rivers numerous; Lake Rossignol, the largest in Nova Scotia proper, is 20 m., and the next in size, Ship Harbour Lake, 15 m. long. The lakes of Cape Breton are larger and more numerous; the Great Bras d'Or is a large expanse of water, about 50 m. long, and abounding in fish. Shores irregular, abrupt, and present numerous harbours, with deep water close to land. The Bay of Fundy is famous for the height and rapidity of its tides, and the excellence of its shad fishery. The harbour of Halifax is one of the best in the world, and capacious enough to afford anchorage to all the navies of Europe. Climate healthy, but the Atlantic coast is often visited by dense fogs. Mean temp. of year 43°, extreme heat 95°, greatest cold minus 24° Fahr. Rainfall 41 inches. Principal crops are, wheat, barley, oats, rye, buckwheat, maize, potatoes, and turnips. The number of acres under cultivation in 1861 was 1,028,032. Fruits are, apples, pears, plums, strawberries, cherries, raspberries, cranberries, etc. The forests of Nova Scotia abound in good timber, ash, beech, birch, maple, oak, pine, and spruce, being the commonest. Live stock of Nova Scotia (1861): sheep 332,653, cattle 262,297, horses 41,927, swine 53,217. Among the native quadrupeds are the moose, cariboo, bear, fox, lynx, weasel, martin, otter, mink, hare, racoon, porcupine, beaver, etc. Fish forms one of the chief natural resources, and the seas abound with mackerel, herring, cod, haddock, halibut, pollock, gaspereau, salmon, and shad. Coal and iron are abundant; the area of the productive coal-field is about 750 sq. m. The number of vessels employed in the fishery in 1861 was 900, boats 8816, employing 14,322 men. Value of fish and oil exported (1861) 2,376,721 dols. In 1861, 6323 vessels (tonnage 696,763) entered the ports of Nova Scotia, & 6089 (tonnage 695,582) cleared. Exports are, coal, fish, gypsum, bark, hides, timber, sugar, etc. Imports provisions, cottons, woollens, apparel, tea, hardwares, machinery, etc. Total value of exports (1862) 1,129,392.; of imports 1,689,008. Revenue (1862) 234,133.; expenditure 255,710. The manufacturing industry of Nova Scotia is as yet small, but its position and natural resources warrant the expectation that in some years it will occupy a first place among its neighbours. In 1861, 216 ships (tonnage 23,634) were built, and there were 1401 saw mills, 130 shingle mills, 414 grist mills, 13,230 handlooms, 77 carding mills, besides soap, candle, paper, tobacco, brick, cloth, furniture, hardware, and other factories. By the census of 1861, it appears that 13,516 of the pop. are employed in manufacture. There are 93 m. of railway in operation, and 20 locomotives. The Shubenacadie Canal, begun in 1825, and still unfinished, is intended to connect Halifax harbour and the Bay of Fundy. St Peter's Canal, commenced 1854, is to unite the Bras d'Or Lake with the Atlantic. There are 22 religious denominations, and 831 places of worship, giving a church for every 400 of the pop., of whom 47,744 are Episcopalians, 69,456 Presbyterians, 86,281 Roman Catholics, 55,336 Baptists, 34,055 Wesleyans, etc. The government is vested in a lieutenant-governor, a council of 9 members, a legislative assembly of 21 members, elected by 40s. freeholders, 2 members being returned by each of the 10 counties, and the rest by the towns; and a house of representatives of 55 members, elected once in 4 years, to represent 18 cos. Universal suffrage is the law of Nova Scotia. The principal towns, Halifax, the cap. and chief seat of commerce, Annapolis, Liverpool, Pictou, and Windsor. The colony has a supreme court, held twice a year in every county, and a court of equity in Halifax; general sessions, justices, probate, marriage and divorce, vice-admiralty, and error courts. There are 6 colleges in the province, the best endowed being King's College at Windsor, and numerous schools. Nova Scotia was discovered by Cabot in 1497, settled by the French, who named it Acadie, and finally ceded to Britain in 1758. Gold was discovered at Tangier river, about 40 m. N.E. of Halifax, in 1861 (when 800 diggers were at work), and digging is now carried on at Tangier, Wine Cove, Laurence-town, Sherbrooke, Isaac Harbour, and Lunenburg.

Lat. 70° 30' to 76° 30' N.; lon. 52° to 76° E. Length estim. at 470 m., and average breadth at 56 m. It consists of two islands separated by the channel Matotshkin-shar. Surface on the W. side rises from a bold shore to 1000 or 2000 feet, and in other places to 3475 feet above the sea; but the E. shores are low and barren. Black clay-slate and limestone are constituent rocks, as in the Ural chain, of which Nova Zembla is an insular continuation. In summer its coasts are frequented by walrus hunters from Arkangel, but nowhere permanently inhabited. Subterranean stone labyrinths of great antiquity have been discovered here. It was first made known by the voyage of Stephen Burrough in 1556, but had been previously visited by the Russians.

NUBIA, a country of E. Africa, on the Red Sea, between lat. 11° and 24° N., lon. 28° and 39° E.; bounded E. by the Red Sea, S. by Abyssinia, W. by Darfur and the Great Desert, & N. by Egypt. Area, with Kordofan, estimated at 300,000 (?) sq. m., and pop. at 2,000,000, who are Mohammedans. It is divided into Lower Nubia, extending from the frontier of Egypt to Dongola (lat. 18° N.); and Upper Nubia from Dongola to Abyssinia. The plain is almost always more or less arid, devoid of running water, and uninhabited; but in the high ground there are streams which fertilize a small portion of the soil before it is engulfed by the sand. Nubia is traversed in all its extent by the Nile, which makes here an immense sweep, called the Great Bend. Its valley is so narrow as to leave no space for cultivation on its banks, and the productive districts occur in the gorges between the mountains and on the islands. A desert of sand and rocks, with some small fertile oases, extends E. from Lower Nubia to the Red Sea. In Upper Nubia the country is more varied, the Nile here receives its affl. the Atbara or Tacazze, 340 m. below the junction of the White and Blue rivers; between these rivers are situated the region Senaar, which contains vast fertile plains. The climate of Nubia is extremely hot and dry, but on the whole healthy; the temp. rises from Jan. to April to 120° Fahr. The nights are very cool. Even on the Nile it never rains below the junction of the Atbara; S. of that point the rains commence every year in July. The Khamsyn, a pernicious wind of Africa, begins to be felt in Nubia about the end of April, and continues till the summer solstice. It often bears such a quantity of sand as sometimes to change a blooming soil to an arid hill in the course of a few hours. It is accompanied by thunder and lightning; the plague is said never to have penetrated S. of the second cataract (lat. 22° N.). The animals common to Nubia are the wild boar, elephant, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, lion, tiger, panther, fox, monkeys, crocodiles, the giraffe, and several species of antelopes. Among birds are the ostrich, partridge, wild goose, etc. Agriculture employs most of the pop. on the banks of the Nile and its tributaries, & artificial irrigation is resorted to as in Egypt. Chief products dhourra, barley, maize, cotton, indigo, tobacco, senna, coffee, and dates. The vine and cotton plants are cultivated in some parts. Cattle, sheep, and goats are reared by the Arabs of the neighbouring deserts. Manufs. are limited to objects for domestic use. An extensive transit trade is carried on with the interior of Africa and Egypt, in slaves, gold-dust, senna, and ostrich feathers. Suakin, on the Red Sea, is the only port. The Nubians belong to Arabian and Ethiopian races; the pastoral tribes on the banks of the Tacazze and the Upper Nile, speak the Arabic language. Previous to the conquest of Nubia by Ibrahim Pasha in 1821, it was governed by a number of independent chiefs; since then it has been under the dominion of Egypt.

OHIO, one of the most important rivers of the U. S., North America, drains the N.E. portion of the Mississippi basin, a fertile and populous region. It is formed by the junction of the Alleghany and Monongahela in the western part of the state of Pennsylvania at Pittsburg, lat.  $40^{\circ} 32'$  N., lon.  $80^{\circ} 2'$  W. It flows S.W. with a gentle current, uninterrupted by rapids, except near Louisville, when it descends 26 feet in 3 m., and joins the Mississippi opposite Cairo, at lat.  $37^{\circ}$  N., lon.  $89^{\circ} 10'$  W., 1097 m. from its mouth, and 189 m. below the mouth of the Missouri. It separates the states of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois on its N. b., from those of Virginia and Kentucky on the S.; and receives the rivers Muskingum, Scioto, Miami, and Wabash from the N., and the Kanawha, Big Sandy, Licking, Kentucky, Green, Cumberland, and Tennessee from the S. The most important of these are the last two. The N. head of the Ohio, the Alleghany, rises in the N. of Pennsylvania, and flows S. to Pittsburg. The Monongahela takes its rise in Virginia. The length of the Ohio is 975 m., or, from the source of the Alleghany, 1265 m. The area of its basin is 214,000 sq. m., and its mean discharge of water per second is 158,000 cubic feet. On its banks are situated many important towns, among which are Steubenville, Wheeling, Marietta, Portsmouth, Cincinnati, Lawrenceburg, Evansville, and Louisville, all on the l. b. except the last. The elevation of the various points at low water are—source of Alleghany 1649 feet, Pittsburg 975, Portsmouth 620, Cincinnati 615, and at the mouth 275 feet, making the average fall 5 inches to a mile. During flood, its waters rise 45 feet above low-water mark at Wheeling, and 51 at the mouth, at which time the largest vessels can navigate down from Pittsburg; but at its lowest stages its navigation is much interrupted by sand-banks, and can be forded at several places above Cincinnati. The waters of this river and its tributaries present at least 5000 m. of navigation. In winter its upper courses are frozen for many weeks.

OHIO, one of the U. S. of North America, between lat.  $38^{\circ} 23'$  and  $41^{\circ} 50'$  N., lon.  $80^{\circ} 30'$  and  $84^{\circ} 47'$  W., having E. Pennsylvania and Virginia, S. Kentucky, W. Indiana, N. Michigan and Lake Erie; length 200 m., breadth 195 m. Area 39,964 sq. m. P. (1860) 2,339,502, of whom 86,673 are free coloured. Surface level, and in parts swampy; but nearly 3-4ths are fertile, and 9-10ths supposed to be fit for cultivation. Principal rivers, the Ohio, and its affs. the Scioto, Miami, and Muskingum, and the Maumee, Sandusky, and Cuyahoga. Between the Scioto and Miami are wide prairies; forests are extensive. Ohio is rapidly becoming a thickly settled country of moderate-sized freeholds. Wheat, maize, rye, oats, buckwheat, and barley are the chief crops. Other products are tobacco, hemp, flax, hay, potatoes, fruits, silk, and wine. Swine are reared in large numbers, and Cincinnati is the largest pork market in the Union. Large droves of fat cattle are sent every autumn to the markets of the E. and S. The whole E. part of the state is one vast coal bed; other minerals are salt, lime, marble, and iron ore. Ohio takes the lead among the W. states for manufacturing industry. Cotton and woollen stuffs and yarn, iron, glass, and cabinet wares, paper, oils, and articles of clothing, are made in all the principal towns. Ship and steamboat building is important. The Ohio canal extends from Cleveland on Lake Erie to Portsmouth, and is, including branches, 307 m. in length. The total canals in the state have an aggregate length of 930 m. In 1864 there were several thousand miles of railway in the state. Public revenue (1862) 6,368,499 dollars. Principal towns, Columbus, the cap., Cincinnati, the commercial metropolis, Cleveland, Chillicothe, Sandusky, Steubenville, and Zanesville. There are 3890 churches of all denominations. The state school fund amounted in 1862 to 3,155,220 dolls.; and the 15,152 schools were attended by 490,496 children, and the number of teachers was 21,390. In 1862 there were 11 colleges in the state, attended by 1952 students, with an aggregate of 69,450 volumes in their libraries, seven theological, one law, and four medical schools. The first settlement in this state was made in 1788. In 1802, the state formed its constitution, and was admitted into the Union. Governor and senate elected biennially. The state sends 21 representatives to Congress.—II. Ohio, a co. in the N.W. part of Virginia, on the Ohio, cap. Wheeling. Area 112 sq. m. P. 22,322 free, 100 slaves.—III. a co., Indiana. Caithness by the Pentland Firth, which is only 5½ m. broad at the narrowest part. Aggregate area 5377 sq. m., but the islands contain only 2448 sq. m., or about 207,200 acres, of which about 80,000 are under culture. P. 32,414 of whom 17,346 are in mainland, and 9553 in the N., and 5517 in the S. isles. There are 73 isls. and islets, counting every one that has flowering plants growing on it; but 17 of these become peninsulas at low water, and only 29 are inhabited. The principal are Pomona or Mainland, and in the order of their valuation, in the N. isles Sanday, Stronsay, Westray, Rousay, Shapinsay, Eday, N. Ronaldshay, Papa, Westray, and Egilshay; and in the S. isles, S. Ronaldshay, Walls, Burray, Hoy, Graemsay, Flottay, and Pharay. Shores bold & precipitous, particularly on the W., interior generally undulating. The hill of Hoy rises to 1555 feet above the sea, and terminates on the W. side in a precipice above 1000 ft. perpendicular. The rental of all the isls. in 1862 amounted to 49,865*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* Climate mild, and the temperature remarkably equable, cooled by the surrounding ocean in summer, and raised by the warm gulf stream in winter. Mean temperature of year, 100 feet above sea, for last 37 years 46°-11, summer 54°-18, winter 39°-25. Annual rainfall 36.95 inches. Agriculture has made more progress during the last 10 or 20 years than for a century before, particularly in drainage and rotation of crops, and the small farms are being converted into large ones. The principal roads are excellent, above 30,000*l.* having lately been expended in their formation, and there are no tolls. Oats, here, barley, potatoes, and turnips, are the chief crops. Most of the land is nominally freehold, but burdened with very heavy payments to the Crown or the Earl of Zealand. The exports which, in 1848, amounted to 49,000*l.*, had increased in 1861 to 181,000*l.*, from the great improvement in agriculture and the fisheries, though the manufactures of kelp and straw plaiting may be said to have ceased. The principal exports are, here and oats about 36,000*l.*, potatoes 12,000*l.*, cattle 62,000*l.*, bacon 13,000*l.*, eggs 12,000*l.*, kelp nearly 4000*l.*, fisheries nearly 31,000*l.* These islands were examined by Agricola in 84. In the middle ages they belonged to Norway, but in 1468 were annexed to the Scottish crown, and formed an earldom. Chief town Kirkwall, which was formerly the cap. of a bishopric, and Stromness, which is a burgh of barony.

OUDE, a former kingdom, now a prov. of British India, between lat. 25° 34' and 29° 6' N., lon. 79° 45' and 83° 11' E., having E. and N.E. Nepal, elsewhere enclosed by the Bengal territory. Area 27,890 sq. m. Pop. by the census of 1863, 8,671,075, who are tall and athletic. Surface slopes gently from N.W. to S.E., in which direction flow the Raptee, Surjoo or Ghogra, Gomtee, Sael, rivers, and the Ganges on its S. frontier. Besides these rivers, there are a few large marshes or pools, which become dry in the hot season; the exhalations from these are productive of great mortality in their vicinity, strangers rarely surviving twelve months. Soil light and sandy. Products comprise wheat, barley, grain, mustard, rice of superior quality, millet, sugar-cane, opium, tobacco, cotton, hemp, and fruit. In the N. and S.E. it has been little explored, being a dense marshy forest, exposed to a deadly malaria. Husbandry insufficiently conducted. Oxen are exclusively used for agricultural purposes, a pair averaging in price from 10 to 20 rupees. Domestic animals are cattle, sheep, and goats. Manufactures consist of cotton cloths, coarse woollen blankets, paper, glasswares, gunpowder, firearms and other warlike weapons; and extracting soda, saltpetre, and culinary salt, by washing the soils in which they are found, and evaporating the saturated liquids. Exports salt and saltpetre. Imports iron, soap, spices, dye-stuffs, drugs, gems, and European wares. Commercial transactions are conducted at fairs held at the principal marts. In the southern districts of Oude the climate is salubrious, and longevity is common. During the greater part of the year throughout Oude, the climate is dry, and subject to great extremes of heat and cold, the thermometer at times rising to 112°, and again sinking to 28°, Fahr. Winter, from November till February, is pleasant and healthy, but chilly; from March till June the hot season, with westerly winds, loaded with a light greyish sand, is sultry, hot, and dry; or at times an east wind brings noxious vapours from the swamps of Bengal or Assam. The mornings and evenings of this season are generally cool and pleasant. The rainfall is varied and uncertain in quantity, at one time commencing in the middle of June and continuing till October, at other times continuing only two months; some years 30 inches fall, and in other years 80 inches. The zoology comprises the tiger, wolf, hyæna, flying-fox, reptiles, birds, and insects of many kinds. The botany is rich and varied. Thug-ana prevailed here to an alarming extent, over a space of 1400 miles. Oude was annexed to the British Empire in Feb. 1856. Revenue of prov. (1862) 1,253,946*l*. The mutiny broke out at Lucknow, 30th May 1857, and its inhabitants took a very active part in the rebellion.

OXFORD, a city, parl. bor., and the seat of one of the principal universities of England, cap. co. Oxford, between the junction of the Isis and Cherwell, here crossed by numerous bridges, 55 m. W.N.W. London, on the Great Western Rail. & branch. Lat. of observatory 51° 45' 38" N., lon. 1° 15' 43" W. Alt. 220 ft. Ac. of parl. bor. 2930. P. (1861) 27,560. It stands on an undulating amphitheatre, 220 ft. above the sea. Rainfall 22 in. The High Street, proceeding from E. to W., & entered by a stone bridge over the Cherwell, is a very fine thoroughfare. In it are Magdalen, All Souls', Queen's, and University Colleges, and the university church. At right angles with this street is another upwards of a mile in length. In St Aldate's Street, which forms the southern portion of this line, are situated the principal front of Christchurch College, the Town-hall, Post Office, Corn Exchange, Savings' Bank, and Police Station. In St Giles' Street, which is the northern end of it, are the recently erected University Galleries, and the Taylor Institution for the advancement of the study of modern languages. This street is very wide, and planted with an avenue of trees, terminating which, to the south, is the beautiful cross designed by Scott to the memory of Cranmer, Latimer, and Ridley, who were burnt near the spot on which it stands. Parallel to High Street is Broad Street, in which are Balliol, Trinity, and Exeter Colleges, the Ashmolean Museum, the Clarendon Building, and the Sheldonian Theatre. Near these are the Academical Schools, with the Bodleian and Radcliffe Libraries. The Bodleian Library contains more than 250,000 volumes and 20,000 manuscripts, many of great rarity. It is entitled to a copy of every book published in the United Kingdom. A museum on an extensive scale, for the promotion of the study of natural science, has lately been built at great cost in the parks to the north of Broad Street, to which many valuable collections, illustrative of subjects studied in this building, have been brought from smaller museums which were scattered about the university. The valuable collection of scientific books which formerly were kept in the Radcliffe Library, have, for the convenience of students, been removed to this museum. The cathedral of Oxford, attached to Christ-Church College, was the church of a priory founded by St Frideswide in the 8th century; traces of the original building remain, but the greater portion of the edifice is of the 12th and 16th centuries. It has a heavy early English spire, 146 feet high. The see comprises the county of Oxford and the archdeaconries of Berks and Bucks. Revenue of the bishopric, 5000*l.* Besides the cathedral there are 18 churches: St Mary's, which is the university church, is a fine building of perpendicular Gothic, with an earlier spire 180 feet high; Carfax, or St Martin's, is the city church; St Peter's-in-the-East is the oldest parish church in Oxford, it has a very fine Norman crypt, and throughout the building there are interesting specimens of the same style. Many of the other churches are deserving of notice, particularly St John's, which is also the chapel of Merton College, and which has a beautiful chancel of the best period of decorated Gothic. Besides the colleges, several of which, as Christchurch, New College, All Souls', Magdalen, and Queen's, boast of imposing architecture; other principal buildings are the town and co. hall, music hall, city bridewell, sessions-house and co. gaol, the market-houses, Radcliffe infirmary and observatory, house of industry for 11 pas., many almshouses, and chapels for Roman Catholics, Methodists, Independents, and Baptists. Oxford has diocesan and national schools, numerous charitable endowments, and several banks. It is chiefly supported by its university, but it has some transit trade in coals and corn, facilitated by wharfs and quays on the Isis, and by railway communication by means of the Great Western, West Midland, and North-Western Railways. It is governed, exclusive of the university, by a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors, and is the seat of quarter and petty sessions, a mayor's court, a court of hustings, and of assizes and monthly courts for the co. Corp. rev. 3000*l.* It sends 2 mems. to H. of C. for the city, reg. electors (1864) 2985; and 2 mems. for the university. In this year, 1864, there are 3891 mems. of convocation in the university, with whom the election of its M.P.'s rests. It is the place of election for members for the co.—The UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD consists of 19 colleges and 5 halls, as follow:—University college, reputed to have been founded in 872, revived in 1249; Baliol, founded between 1263 and 1268, and of which Wickliffe was once master; Merton, founded at Malden in Surrey, in 1264, and removed to Oxford in 1274; Exeter, founded 1314; Oriel, dating from 1326; Queen's, founded in 1340, and the buildings of which are among the finest in the city; New college, 1386, with the most gorgeous and elegant chapel in the university; Lincoln, founded in 1427; All Souls', 1437, with a noble hall, and a library of 40,000 vols.; Magdalen, 1456, at the entrance of the city from London, with fine Gothic architecture, and a hall that has been the banqueting-room of many English sovereigns; Brasen-Nose, founded 1509; Corpus Christi, 1516; Christ-Church, originally founded by Cardinal Wolsey in 1525, and with by far the most extensive buildings and grounds belonging to any of the colleges, a W. front 382 feet in length, a tower, containing the "Great Tom," a bell weighing 17,000 lbs., a magnificent hall, picture gallery, library, etc.; Trinity, founded in 1554; St John's, 1557, with handsome buildings in the N. part of the city; Jesus, founded 1571; Wadham, 1613; Pembroke, 1620; Worcester college, 1714; and St Mary's, New Inn, St Alban, Magdalen, St Edmund's hall, and 1 private hall. Total members in 1864, 6754. The university is governed by its own statutes, administered by a chancellor, a resident vice-chancellor, who is magistrate for Oxford, and the cos. of Oxford and Berks, two proctors, and subordinate officers. The corporate business is conducted by the house of congregation, composed of certain official persons and all those members of convocation who have resided 20 weeks, during the year ending September 1st, within a mile and a half of Carfax, and by the House of Convocation, consisting of all masters of arts and all doctors of the three superior faculties who have their names upon the books of some college or hall. Public professorships are of royal or private endowment, and in all there are forty-one. The fellowships and scholarships of some colleges are by the wills of their founders given to students born in certain counties, or educated at certain schools, but in many they are quite open to competition. Most of the colleges have exhibitions, with stipends from public bodies elsewhere, and at Christ-Church there is a body of servitors similar to the sizaris of Cambridge. Total revenues of the university estimated at 457,490*l.* University college claims to have been founded by Alfred the Great. It is certain that Oxford was a seat of learning as early as the time of Edward the Confessor. It was a principal residence of numerous Saxon, Danish, and Norman monarchs. In the civil war, Oxford sustained a siege in favour of King Charles I. The university has sent 2 members to House of Commons since the time of James I. The first recorded member is "Thomas de Soly, in 23d year of Edward I."

PACIFIC OCEAN, a vast watery expanse extending from the Arctic to the Antarctic circle, through 126° of latitude, and between America on the E., and Asia, Malaysia, and Australia on the W. In its widest part, at the equator, it is 10,000 m. across; it narrows especially toward the N., where it communicates with the Arctic Ocean by Behring Strait; and is computed at upwards of 70,000,000 sq. m., or more than all the dry land on the globe. Its coast line on the American side, though generally bold, is very little broken by inlets; on the Asiatic side it is very irregular; and the Celebes, China, and Yellow Seas, with the Seas of Japan, Okhotsk, and Kamtschatka, are the principal inlets of the Pacific. It is studded with a great number of island groups, the principal of which, proceeding from W. to E., are the Ladrones, Carolines, Solomon New Hebrides, Gilbert, Marshall, Viti, Friendly Navigators, Society, Sandwich, Low, Marquesas and Galapagos islands, and New Zealand: besides a vast multitude of solitary islands, reefs and sandbanks. The great equatorial current of this ocean originates in the Antarctic drift current, which flows N. along the shores of South America, and then W. through the Pacific, where it occupies the entire space between the tropics. Strong land currents sweep round the shores of E. Australia and Japan. The N.E. trade wind prevails uninterruptedly between lat. 5° and 23° N.; the S.E. trade wind commonly blows from the equator to lat. 26° S.; between them is the region of calms, extending over 5°, and varying in position according to the season. Greatest equatorial temperature of Pacific 88°·5 Fahr. In lat. 56° 26', the temperature of the sea throughout its depth is 39°·5 Fahr. This ocean became first known to Europeans in 1513; it received its name from Magalhaens, who sailed across it in 1521. In the 18th century its different parts were explored by Behring, Anson, Byron, Bougainville, Cook, Vancouver, Broughton, and La Perouse; in the present century by D'Entrecasteaux, Krusenstern, Beechey, Fitzroy, D'Urville, Wilkes, Sir James Ross, and others.

PALERMO, Panormus, a fortified city, cap. prov., and of isl. Sicily, with a port on N. side, on a slope of its bay, in a rich valley. Lat. of lighthouse 38° 8' 2" N., lon. 13° 22' 2" E. P. (1862) 584,929. The climate of Palermo is one of the most delightful in Europe. Rail. opened to Bagaria in 1863, the only one in Sicily. Mean temp. of year 64° 4, winter 52° 5, summer 74° 4 Fahr. Rainfall 22 in.

It is built in the form of an amphitheatre, facing the sea, and enclosed by an old wall, with fifteen gates. Next the sea is the strong fort of Castell'-a-Mare. The city has a cathedral, royal palace, observatory, archbishop's, and many other palaces, large squares, 54 churches and convents, a town hall, royal palace of finance, lottery office, library of the commune, with 75,000 vols., a public garden, a picture gallery, and 6 theatres. The port is enclosed by a mole terminated by a lighthouse and a battery; a second interior port is reserved for the marine. Palermo is the residence of the military commandant of the island, and has an arsenal and ship-building yards. Its university, founded 1806, with a library of 40,000 vols., was, till 1860, under the Jesuits. Here are a promenade, extending along the shore, a botanic garden, and numerous learned societies. Chief benevolent institutions, a royal and a founding hospital. Manufs. cotton goods, straw hats, silk gloves, chemical products, and paper; and it has an extensive export and import trade. In a valley near it grow the finest lemons in Europe, and the essence of lemon is made here. Founded by the Phenicians, Palermo became the cap. of the Carthaginian possessions in Sicily. It was taken by the Romans 250 B.C.; it was afterwards cap. of the Saracen states in the island. The Normans took it in 1072. It 1282 it was the scene of the massacre called the "Sicilian Vespers." The court of Naples resided here from 1806 to 1815. On the 27th May 1860, Garibaldi, by a coup de main, attacked and took the city.

PALESTINE or the HOLY LAND (Philistia, Judea), a country of South-Western Asia, comprising the S. part of Syria, between lat. 30° 40' and 33° 32' N., lon. 34° 30' and 36° 25' E. This interesting country, the scene of the greatest events in the history of the world, is a narrow belt of land, bounded by the Mediterranean on the W. and the Jordan on the E. On the N. it is bounded by the mountain ranges of Lebanon and the glen of the Litany, and on the S. it merges with the desert of Sinai. Length 145, and mean breadth 45 miles. From the Lebanon, ranges of hills, rising on an elevated table-land, cover the centre of the country to the extreme S. Near the middle distance, the ridge of Carmel extends from the table-land N.W. to the Mediterranean, where it ends in a bold promontory. This central mountain mass is flanked on the W. by the plains of Philistia and Sharon, and on the E. by the deep depression of the Jordan valley. On the E. the descent is steep and rugged; on the W. it is more gentle. The mean height of the central table-land is 1600 feet. The salient points are from N. to S., Safed 2775, Mount Tabor 1900, Gerizim 2700, Bethel 2400, Jerusalem 2610, Mount of Olives 2724, Bethlehem 2704, Hebron 3029 feet. The drainage is nearly always E. and W. from the central water shed. The S. (Judea & Benjamin) is a dry parched land, with rounded hills and a scanty soil. Proceeding N. ward the country becomes better watered and the soil more rich and varied, till at Nablous the running streams and exuberant vegetation recall the scenery of the Tirol. These streams are supplied by springs, some of which, as at Banias, burst once as large rivers from rocky caverns. T maritime region comprises the plain of Philistia, 15 m. in mean width, and the plain of Sharon, about 10 m. In the S. the plain is open, with a rich loamy soil, without a stone; a vast corn field; in the N. it is undulating, soil still rich, but encroached on by the sea sand. Of the many splendid cities which occupied the sea-board in former times, Jaffa, the anc. Joppa, alone maintains a faded position. The other plains are those of Esdraclon or Jezreel, the battle-field of Palestine, and the plain of Jericho. The only river of Palestine, the Jordan, flows through a deep narrow cleft, running N. and S., parallel to the coast. The valley, which forms its bed, begins at the springs of Hasbeya, 1700 feet above the sea; and the river, passing through the Lake of Galilee, the depression of which is 653 feet, flows 132 m. S. to the Dead Sea, the surface of which is 1312, and the bottom 2620 ft. below the Mediterranean. The width of the valley varies from 5 to 12 m. The river is accompanied on the E. by the mountains of Moab, like a straight and massive wall. [GALILEE, JORDAN, DEAD SEA.] The surface of the country in the S. is mostly hard and rocky, the soil being only in the lowlands. The geology presents masses of limestone in the Moab mountains on the E.; as well as on the W. of the Jordan, often greatly contorted, but with no trace of basalt or primitive rock; and, according to Mr Tristram (1864), no evidence of volcanic agency is visible in the Jordan Valley, the Lake of Galilee, or the Dead Sea. Immense numbers of caverns exist in the limestone, many of them, like Adullam, of vast extent. Rock salt abunds near the Dead Sea. The botany of Palestine is rich and varied, resembling that of Asia Minor; the oak and many other European trees, wheat, barley, and other cereals and fruits occur, with the addition of the palm, olive, carob, fig, orange, lime, banana, almond, and prickly pear. The date now ripens its fruit only on the southern seaboard. Flax, hemp, cotton, and indigo are cultivated. The papyrus grows in marshes near the Lake of Galilee. The gay flowers which in spring enamel the surface and tinge the entire landscape, comprise the adonis, ranunculus, mallow, poppy, pink, anemone, and geranium. In the Jordan valley, 100 feet below the sea, the vegetation is that of Arabia and Western Asia; the nubb (spina Christi) is conspicuous; and in the district on the E. of the river, at the foot of the Moab mountains, the heat and vegetation are still more tropical. On the shores of the Dead Sea the vegetation is of a saline character. The most valuable products of the vegetable kingdom are derived from the vine, fig, olive, and mulberry trees. Among wild animals are the Syrian bear in Lebanon, the panther, jackal, fox, hyena, wolf, wild boar, gazelle, and fallow deer; the lion is now unknown. Domestic animals are the Arabian camel, ass, mule, horse, buffalo ox, broad-tailed sheep, and ox. Birds comprise the eagle, vulture, kite, owl, nightingale, jay, and kingfisher, raven, crow, cuckoo, partridge, stork, heron, and sparrow; bats and lizards abound. Fish swarm in the Sea of Galilee. Climate very various. January is the coldest and July the hottest month. The isotherm line of Jerusalem passes through California, Madeira, and the Bermudas. Mean annual temp. 65° Fahr. The great heat of the summer months is modified by a sea breeze from the N.W. The Sirocco is often oppressive in early summer. Snow falls in Jan. and Feb., and thin ice is occasionally found at Jerusalem, where the rainfall is 61 inches. From April to Nov. the weather is very fine, almost without a cloud. In summer heavy dews fall, and the nights are cold. Violent thunder storms occur in winter. The rainfall is diminished by denudation of trees, but the earlier and the latter rains still occur, and, if the terraces were restored, the produce might be such as to support as large a population as in former times. The anc. division of Palestine into tribes and provinces is very uncertain. In modern times it has changed its boundaries with every new race of conquerors. At present, under the Turks, the whole of Palestine proper is comprised in the Pashalic of Sidon. The Pasha resides at Beyrout, the chief commercial city, and under him is the Pasha of Jerusalem. The pop. comprises Syrians, Mohammedans, Druses, Maronites, Christians, Jews, and Turks. The holy cities of the Jews are Jerusalem, Hebron, Tiberias, and Safed. [JERUSALEM, SYRIA.]

PAPS OF MATANE are two mountains, Canada East, dist. Bimouski, on the S. side of the estuary of the St Lawrence. Lat. 48° 43' N.; lon. 67° 30' W.

PAPUA or NEW GUINEA, an extensive island of the E. Archipelago, beyond Ceram and Gilolo, and comprised in the great division Australasia, between the equator and lat. 11° S., lon. 131° and 151° E., separated S.ward by Torres Strait from the N. point of Australia, and having W. the Arafura Sea. Area estimated at from 200,000 to 275,000 sq. m. Length from E. to W. 1600 m.; breadth from 30 to 400 m.; but its interior is wholly unknown, even its coast having been only partially explored by Europeans. It has a remarkably irregular shape, its W. end especially being indented by large and deep bays, and some large rivers forming estuaries. The country inland has been observed to rise into mountain chains of considerable height, and apparently to the snow line, and most part of the surface yet seen appears to be covered with timber of large size. Many of the finest productions of the Archipelago, comprising birds of paradise, pearls, gold, fine woods, resins, bamboos, etc., are brought from this region by Bughis, and other traders to the Arru islands, Singapore, and the Dutch settlements in the east. Some new species of marsupial animals have been discovered, and it is rich in birds of various kinds. The inhabitants are partly Malays, and partly a negro race, which extends into Australia, and has been termed the "Papuan Negro." Several villas have been remarked along the coast, with large houses capable of containing several hundred people, and at Ootenata, on the S.W. side of the island, the Dutch established a fort, and a space of 118 m. in extent was taken possession of, in the name of the King of the Netherlands.

PARA ("Father of Waters"), the name originally applied to the river Amazon, South America, but now employed to designate its S. arm, which receives the Tocantins and Anapu rivers, and bounds the island of Marajo on the S. It is 40 m. across at its entrance, and has on its E. side the city Para. It is in this mouth of the Amazon that the bore is chiefly manifested, the tide rising to high water in a few minutes before the new and full moons, by a vast wave, 15 feet in height, followed sometimes by three others, which enter the estuary with irresistible violence.

PARA, a maritime prov. of Brazil, in the N., comprising large tracts of country on both sides of the lower course of the Amazon, and extending from lat. 10° S. to 4° 20' N., and from lon. 46° to 60° W. It is bounded on the N. by British, Dutch, and French Guiana; W. by the prov. Amazonas; S. by Matto Grosso; and E. by Goyaz and Maranhaz. Estimated area, including new prov. of Amazonas, 1,158,188 sq. m. P. (1856) 207,400. The Tapajos, Xingu, and Tocantins, three immense tributaries of the Amazon, traverse this prov. from the S. Most part of this region remains unexplored, and covered with dense primeval forests. Valuable products are in immense variety; at present the chief articles of commerce are rice, manioc, millet, cotton, sugar, caoutchouc, cocoa, sarsaparilla, cloves, balsams, gums, medicinal plants, and Brazil nuts. The principal manufs. are of shoes, and other articles made from Indian rubber. The trade is important, and increasing. In 1863 there were 433 vessels, of which 8 were steamers, employed on the rivers of the prov.—Para or Belem, the cap., and Obidos on the Amazon, are the only cities of importance in this region; in the interior are some scattered villas, mostly on tributaries of the Amazon.

PARA or BELEM, a seaport city of Brazil, cap. prov., 70 m. from the Atlantic, at the junction of the river Guama with the Para, and on rail to Rio de Janeiro, partly opened in 1864. Lat. of Fort St Pedro 1° 28' S., lon. 48° 30' 5" W. P. 20,000. It stands on elevated ground, on S. shore of the Bay of Guajara, on rt. b. of the Para or Tocantins. Chief edifices, the governor's palace, cathedral, convents, barracks, arsenal, episcopal palace and seminary, formerly a Jesuits' college, and a prison. Vessels of large draft can lie near the city; and cocoa, caoutchouc, isinglass, rice, and drugs exported from Brazil, are chiefly from Para. It has also a trade in cotton, vanilla, annatto, dye-woods, honey, wax, and a great variety of other vegetable and animal products. The trade is mostly with Liverpool, London, Barbadoes, Cayenne, & the N. American & other Brazilian ports.

PARABIAGO, a vill. of Northern Italy, prov. and 13 m. W.N.W. Milan. P. 4196.

PARACATU, a river and city of Brazil, prov. Minas Geraes. The river joins the San Francisco, near lat. 16° 20' S., after an E. course of 280 m. Near its head is the city of Paracatu, having a Latin school, and mines of gold and diamonds in its vicinity. It exports sugar and coffee.

PARACELS, a group of islets and reefs of the China Sea, mostly between lat. 16° & 17° N., lon. 112° and 118° 30' E., 150 m. E. of Cochinchina.

PARACLET, a hamlet of France, dep. Aube, arr. and 2½ m. E.S.E. Nogent-sur-Seine. Here are the ruins of a convent founded by Abelard in the 12th century, and of which Heloise was abbess.

PARACOMBE, a pa. of England, co. Devon, 10 m. N.N.E. Barnstaple. Ac. 4363. P. 410.

PARACORIO, a vill. of South Italy, prov. Reggio-Calabria, circ. Palme. P. 2114.

PARADAS, a comm. and town of Spain, prov. and 25 m. E.S.E. Sevilla. P. 4396.

PARADE (LA), a comm. and market town of France, dep. Lot-et-Garonne, arr. and 19 m. S.E. Marmande. P. 989.

PARADISE, a township, U. S., North America, Pennsylvania, co. York.

PARADOMIN, a market town of Russia, gov. and 10 m. S. Vilna. P. 1500.

PARAGUANA, a peninsula of S. America, Venezuela, dep. Zulia, prov. and 22 m. N.W. Coro, extending into the Caribbean Sea, in lat. 12° N., lon. 70° W. Length and breadth about 40 m. each. Surface mountainous in the centre, whence it slopes gradually to the coasts. It has no town of importance.—The Paraguayan river, dep. Orinoco, tributary to the Caroni, has a N. course of 340 m.

PARAGUASU, a river of Brazil, prov. Bahia, after a tortuous E. course of 320 m. enters the Bay of Todos-os-Santos, 35 m. W.N.W. San Salvador. Chief affluent, the Jacuhyte.

PARAGUAY, a large river of South America, and one of the principal uniting to form the Plata, rises by numerous heads in the Brazilian prov. Matto-Grosso, near the sources of the Guapore, Tapajos, and Xingu, tributaries of the Amazon, and in lat. 13° 30' S., lon. between 55° and 58° W. It thence flows mostly S., between Bolivia on the W., and Brazil and Paraguay E.-ward; and near Corrientes, lat. 27° 20' S., it unites with the Parana. Total course 1420 m., throughout nearly all which, from the sea upwards to the influx of the Jauru, it is navigable. It receives from the E. the rivers Louvenco, Taquari, and Mondago; from the W. the Sipotuba, Jauru, Pilcomayo, and Vermejo. In 1858 its navigation was opened to ships of every flag.

PARAGUAY, an indep. state of South America, between lat. 20° 27' and 27° 30' S., lon. 53° 30' and 58° W.; bounded N. and E. by Brazil, S. and S.E. by the Argentine Confederation, and W. by Bolivia. It is separated from these states by the river Parana on the E. and S., and by the Paraguay on the W. Its N. and E. boundaries, however, are yet unsettled. Area about 75,000 sq. m. P. of the 25 depts. (1857) 1,337,431. Cap. Asuncion. The central dep., in which the cap. (ASUNCION) is situated, had in 1857 a pop. of 398,628. Surface mountainous in N.E., where the Cordillera Mara-cayou runs S. and N.; flat in centre, and marshy in S.W. Soil fertile, watered by tributaries of its limiting rivers. Chief vegetable products, the Yerba maté or Paraguay tea, medicinal herbs, balsams, gums, wax, dye-stuffs, hemp, rice, cotton, sugar; and vast forests of useful and ornamental timber. Exports (1858) tobacco, etc., to the value of 14,077*l.*; for the following years there are no returns. Imports (1862) machinery, furniture, etc., to the value of 1764*l.* The Spaniards established themselves in Paraguay in 1515. The Jesuits commenced their missions in 1608, and were expelled in 1768. The people rebelled against the Spanish yoke in 1811. Francia was elected dictator in 1817, and until 1844 the country was closed against foreigners. The independence of the state was recognised by Britain in 1853. A treaty of commerce and navigation was concluded with Prussia and the German Confederation in August 1860. The Government of the Republic is making vast strides in the improvement of agriculture by the introduction of the best implements from Europe and the United States. Cotton is now (1864) being planted on a large scale. A magnificent arsenal, maritime and military works, were begun in 1855, and there is a foundry at Ibicuy. Tanning has become an important branch of industry, from the abundance of bark and the numerous streams. Lime is largely made on the l. b. of the Paraguay, where limestone and fuel are abundant. Bricks, tiles, and pottery are new branches of industry. Salt is largely extracted from salines near Fort Olympo. Private industry is now (1864) progressing favourably.

PARAGUAY DO SUL, a town of Brazil, prov. and head of m. Rio de Janeiro. P. 2000. It was made head of an electoral college in 1840.

PARAHIBA, two rivers of Brazil.—I. (do Norte), prov. Parahiba, to which it gives name, separates the provs. Piahy and Maranhão, and enters the Atlantic by an estuary, in lat. 7° 8' S., after an E.ward course of upwards of 200 m. In summer its bed is dry beyond 20 leagues from its mouth, near which, on its S. b., is the city Parahiba.—II. (do Sul or the Southern Parahiba), provs. São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro, enters the Atlantic at São Joao da Barra, lat. 21° 40' S., after an E. course of 500 m. Chief affls., the Pomba, Muriahe, and Paraibuno.

PARAHIBA, a small maritime prov. of North Brazil, mostly between lat. 6° 30' and 7° 30' S., lon. 85° and 38° 40' W., having E. the Atlantic Ocean, and inland the provs. Rio Grande do Norte, Ceara, and Pernambuco. Area 24,193 sq. m. P. (1856) 209,300. Surface mostly elevated. Principal rivers, the Parahiba and Piranhas. Chief products, cotton and sugar, with Brazil-wood, drugs, and timber. Cattle of European breeds are numerous. Cap. Parahiba.

PARANA, a large river of South America, and one of the principal which contribute to form the Plata, rises in the Brazilian prov. São Paulo, among the mountains of Paranapicaba, lat. 24° S., lon. 48° W., less than 50 m. from the Atlantic Ocean. It flows N.W. and W., and joins the Paranhiba, a much larger stream, then flowing S.W. and W., enclosing the republic of Paraguay, and separating it from the prov. of Parana and Argentine Confed., joins the Paraguay near Corrientes, and confers its own name on the united stream. Thenceforward its course is generally S. to within 50 m. N. of Buenos Ayres, where it unites with the Uruguay river to form the estuary of the Plata. Total course is at least 1800 m. In its upper part it receives numerous large affls., as the Paranhya and Iguassu or Curutiba; but owing to falls, it is navigable only to the island Agipe, 120 m. above its junction with the Paraguay. Below this point it is navigable for vessels of 300 tons, and receives the considerable rivers Salado and Cuarto from the W. Few towns border it in its upper part. In the territory of the Plata Confederation, Candelaria, Itu, Itaty, Corrientes, Santa Lucia, and Santa Fé, are on its banks. It is also a name of the Rio Negro (Brazil, which see). [For Parana town, see BAJADA DE SANTA FÉ.]

(of observatory, 193 feet above the sea) 48° 50' 13" N.; lon. 2° 20' 9" E. P. (1851) 1,053,262; (1861) 1,696,141. Mean temperature of the year 51°·3, winter 37°·8, summer 64°·5, Fahr. Mean annual rainfall, 25 inches; average number of rainy days, 105; days on which snow falls, 12. One of the greatest, most beautiful, richest, and most industrious cities of the world. The work of its embellishment has been in progress for 20 years, especially since 1856. The narrow, small, unhealthy lanes give place to long and broad streets and boulevards, sided by magnificent buildings. The commune of Paris, surrounded by the fortifications, extends on both sides of the Seine over an area of 19,278 ac. The interior circumference of the fortification, comprising two breadths of the Seine, is 21 m. in length. It is divided into 20 arrs., each of which is subdivided into quarters. This space comprises two distinct portions: 1st, that comprised within the old city wall, erected for the collection of the octroi or customs; and 2d, the communes of the banlieue, comprised between the old wall and the line of the new fortifications. The 1st part, which forms the 12 municipal arrs. of the commune of Paris, is in many parts covered with splendid monuments, magnificent hotels, and gardens. The houses are generally lofty, and built in a uniform style. The new streets are wide, straight, well paved, and lighted with gas; but many of the old streets are narrow and crooked. The Rue de Rivoli, prolonged on the W. by the Avenue des Champs-Élysées, and on the E. by the Rue du Faubourg St Antoine, intersects the northern division of Paris from E. to W. within a short distance of the river. The Boulevard de Sébastopol, at right angles to the Rue de Rivoli, intersects the city from N. to S. The old and chief line of the boulevards forms a semicircle, the chord of which is the Rue de Rivoli from the Place de la Bastille to the Rue Royale. The new Boulevard Malesherbes, extending N.W. from the Madeleine, and the Boulevard Prince Eugène on the E., between the Place du Trône and the Boulevard St Martin, promise to be very fine streets; the Boulevard de Magenta, now (1864) in course of construction, is a continuation of the latter to the N. W. Beyond this is the irregular line of the outer boulevards; while a third ring is formed by the fortifications. The Seine, which traverses Paris from E. to W. for a length of 7 miles, is lined with spacious quays, and planted with trees. On it are moored washing-boats, in which from 200 to 300 women are daily engaged, and floating baths. Within the limits of the city, it is crossed by 27 bridges of various kinds, 8 of which have been constructed since 1852: on two of these payment is exacted from passengers. It receives the small stream of Bièvre or the Gobelins, at the Quai de l'Hôpital, and the Canal of St Martin, which joins those of the Ourcq and St Denis. It here forms two islands, the Ile St Louis and the Ile du Cité; on which last is situated the cathedral church of Notre Dame, a Gothic building, in the form of a Latin cross, with a magnificent façade, terminating by two square towers 295 ft. in height, the restoration of which was completed in June 1864: the Hôtel Dieu, the Palais de Justice, and the Pont-Neuf, which latter connects the island of the city with both sides of the river. This is the largest and one of the oldest bridges in Paris, having been reconstructed in 1852; in its centre is a bronze statue of Henri IV. The portion of Paris situated on the rt. b. of the river is the most extensive, and contains the greatest number of public offices. It is also the richest and most commercial, its centre being occupied by the Bourse (Exchange of France). Among the many splendid edifices of this quarter, are the palace of the Tuileries, long the residence of the kings of France, and the scene of many of its most remarkable events, opposite whose central pavilion is the triumphal arch (Arc de Triomphe du Carrousel), an imitation of the Arch of Septimius Severus at Rome, erected by Napoleon in 1806, to the glory of the French armies; the palace of the Louvre, appropriated to rich collections of paintings, sculpture, bronzes, antiquities, and prints; the New Louvre, uniting the palaces of the Tuileries and Louvre; the Grand Hôtel du Louvre; the Oratoire, the largest Protestant church in Paris; the Palais-Royal, the galleries of which are occupied by elegant shops and cafés; the palace of the Elysées Napoléon, where Napoleon I. signed his last abdication; the Halles Centrales (central markets); the old Tour de la Boucherie, at the intersection of the Rue de Rivoli and the Boulevard de Sébastopol; the Hôtel de Ville, the municipal palace of Paris; and the Church of the Madeleine. Its principal streets and squares are the Place de la Concorde, an immense square, decorated with fountains and statues; Place des Victoires, in which is the Bank of France, and an equestrian statue of Louis XIV.; the Place Vendôme, in the centre of which is a triumphal bronze column erected by Napoleon I.; the Place Bastille, with the Colonne de Juillet, a bronze monument, 154 feet high, erected on the site of the Bastille, in honour of those who fell in the revolution of 1830; the Place du Trône, where a triumphal arch is being erected to commemorate the prowess of the French armies between 1852-62; Rue de Rivoli, one of the finest streets of the city, nearly 2 m. long; Rue de la Paix, and Rue Castiglione. Most of these are in the centre or west of Paris. The finest and most fashionable promenades are the Boulevards and Champs Elysées, at the W. end of which is the triumphal arch of L'Etoile and Bois de Boulogne; Place du Carrousel, Garden of the Tuileries, and in the E. the cemetery of Père-la-Chaise.

The left bank of the river contains the Boulevard St Germain, the principal residence of the oldest noblesse; the boulevards are here also planted, but the promenades are not frequented. On this side is the Pays Latin, the seat of the principal educational establishments, and the Sorbonne, College of France, Colleges of St Louis, Louis-le-Grand, Henri IV., Polytechnic School, and the Normal School, inaugurated 1846; the School of Medicine, and Schools of Law. The principal public buildings on this side are the Palace of the Luxembourg, in part appropriated to the exhibition of the works of living artists; the Fontaine St Michel, a marble structure 82 feet high; Palace of the Fine Arts; the Odeon and the Lycée St Louis; Assemblée Nationale; the Palace of the Institute, containing the Mazarene library; the Observatoire, at the end of the Boulevard de Sébastopol, with a library of 45,000 vols.; the mint, with a collection of coins, dies, and medals, from the time of Charles VIII.; the Pantheon, a colossal edifice, occupying the highest part of Paris, originally designed for a church, but afterwards appropriated to the remains of eminent Frenchmen; the Hôtel-des-Invalides, an immense military hospital for 5000 men, with an elegant dome, in the centre of which is a church containing the tombs of Napoleon I., Turenne, and Vauban. It has a library of 30,000 vols., and a collection of models of fortifications. The military school, situated in a vast open space, 3080 ft. long by 2290 broad, called the Champ-de-Mars, where the grand military displays are usually held; the botanic garden (Jardin des Plantes), and the celebrated tapestry and carpet manufactory of the Gobelins. This quarter also contains the greater number of hospitals, the largest of which, the Salpêtrière, has upwards of 4500 inmates. Here are also the ruins of the Palais des Thermes, and the Hôtel de Cluny, founded by Dusommerard, and purchased by the state, containing a museum of arts, arms, and antiquities; the abattoirs (slaughter-houses) of Grenelle and Villejuif; and the artesian well. [GRENELLE.] There are 8 prisons in Paris, including the Conciergerie in the Palais de Justice, the principal being La Force, on the Boulevard Mazas, near the Lyon Railway terminus. A great portion of this quarter was built from quarries, extending under the river, which formed the celebrated catacombs used as a deposit for the bones found in the cemeteries at the time of their suppression. The space contained between the city wall and the fortified circle is composed of the communes of the banlieue, in which the population has greatly increased within a few years, but the greater part of it is still occupied by fields or gardens. These comms. comprise on the right bank Bercy, Charonne, Belleville, La Vilette, La Chapelle, Montmartre, Les Batignolles, Passy, and Auteuil; and on the left bank Grenelle, Vaugirard, Montrouge, and Gentilly. The approach to the new walls is defended by 13 detached forts, viz., Romainville, Noisy, Rosny, Nogent, Charenton, and the castle of Vincennes, on the E.; Bicêtre, Montrouge, Vanvres, and Issy, on the S.; Mont Valerien, on the W.; Aubervilliers, and St Denis with the Couronne de la Briche, and double Couronne, on the N.

Considered in reference to its scientific, literary, and educational establishments, Paris surpasses all the cities of the world. The headquarters of the University of Paris are at the Sorbonne, founded 1253, near the Hôtel de Cluny, where degrees are granted in the faculties of sciences, letters, and theology, and where gratuitous public lectures are given by 11 professors, attended by about 2000 pupils; the college occupies an area of nearly 3 acres, and its library contains 80,000 vols. The Ecole de Droit (school of law) is in the Place du Pantheon; it has 25 professors and about 1500 students. The Ecole de Médecine, in the street of the same name, has 50 professors and 5000 students. The Collège Impérial de France, founded 1530 by Francis I., is in the Rue St Jacques; it has 29 professors, all the lectures being gratuitous. There are 5 lyceums, or preparatory schools, supported by government, comprising 178 professors, 1800 boarders, and 2960 day scholars; also 3 municipal colleges for the annexed communes. Among the special schools are the Ecoles Polytechnique, Nationale, Normale, des Beaux-Arts, des Mines, and the Conservatoires des Arts et de Musique. The cost of primary instruction in the city now amounts to 120,000*l.* The observatory, containing a valuable collection of astronomical and mathematical instruments; the Jardin des Plantes, a large botanic garden, with museums of natural history, and a collection of living animals; conservatory of arts and trades, containing models and descriptions of machinery. A garden, of 45½ ac., with 25 hothouses, was opened in 1860 by the Acclimatization Society, in the W. part of the Bois de Boulogne, in which legions of plants of every description are reared, & afterwards transplanted to ornament the public gardens of Paris. Paris is the seat of numerous learned and other societies, among which are the society for the encouragement of national industry, societies of agriculture, geography, geology, statistics, and antiquities. There are 32 libraries in Paris, 6 of which are public; of these the great national library (Bibl. Imperial) is a magnificent institution. It is divided into 5 sections, containing—I. Printed works and pamphlets, 1,800,000, including duplicates.—II. Manuscripts, 200,000 vols.—III. Medals and antiquities 170,000, and 10,000 gems.—IV. Engravings, 1,300,000.—V. Maps and charts, 300,000. The charity of Paris is administered by the department of "Assistance Publique," whose staff numbers about 2200. There are 8 general and 7 special hospitals. There was (1861) a pauper pop. of 90,300 in Paris. The benevolent institutions comprise a deaf-mute institution, with 12 professors, a school for the blind, a government pawn bank, and numerous civil, maternity, founding, and orphan hospitals. The principal theatres are the Opera or Academy of Music, Theatre Français, Opera Comique, Odeon, Italian Theatre, and many minor theatres; an olympic circus, panorama, diorama, and géorama. The industrial establishments of Paris embrace all kinds of manufactures and commerce, but it is especially distinguished for objects of taste and fashion,—furniture, jewellery, trinkets, bronzes, porcelain, mirrors, clocks and watches, painted paper, perfumery, bonnets, gloves, and carriages. There are about 30,000 master tailors, shoemakers, hatters, furriers, dressmakers and milliners, employing 120,000 men and women, doing business to the amount of 12,000,000*l.* a year. The manuf. of trinkets (articles de Paris) employs about 120,000 operatives. The confectioners produce annually about 240,000*l.* worth of goods. The carpets and tapestries of the Gobelins are held in high estimation, and Paris is celebrated for its mathematical and optical instruments. It is one of the chief centres in Europe for the production of works connected with literature and the fine arts. It has 13 principal newspapers, besides periodical sheets of journals, reviews, bulletins, and annals of politics, literature, science, arts, and fashions. The commerce of Paris is facilitated by navigation on the Seine, by its connection with many canals, and by railways to the chief towns of France. [FRANCE.] It has a chamber of commerce with a commercial library, an exchange which publishes daily returns, and it is the seat of all the principal financial, industrial, and commercial societies in the country. Among the eminent persons that Paris has produced may be mentioned the great Condé, Prince Eugène of Savoy, Rousseau the poet, Thou the historian, Moliere, Boileau, Voltaire, Rollin, d'Alembert, the painters Lebrun and David, the geographer d'Anville, Lavoisier, Madame Roland, and Madame de Staël. Paris was a place of importance in the time of Cæsar; it was then confined to the island in the Seine, now called the Ile du Cité, and was cap. of that part of Gaul occupied by the Parisii. Under the Roman emperors it was greatly extended. Clovis fixed his empire here in 508. The establishment of the university, in the year 1200, gave it great importance; it was surrounded by walls under Philip Augustus; the inner or city wall (d'Octroi) was built nearly as it now stands, in 1786. The new line of fortifications was commenced in 1840, and finished in 1848. Paris was delivered up to the English in 1420, and held by them for six years. The allied army entered it in 1814–15. The first revolution began 14th July 1789; the second, 27th July 1830; and the third on 23d February 1848; and in 1851 Louis Napoleon, at that time President of the Republic, appealed to the people, and was elected Emperor by a vast majority of votes.

PASCAGOULA, a river of the U. S., N. America, Mississippi, formed by the confl. of the Chickasaw and Leaf Rivers, flows S. and falls into Pascagoula Sound, and thence into the Gulf of Mexico. It is navigable for its last 50 miles for vessels drawing 6 feet water.

PASCHENDAELE, a market town of Belgium, prov. W. Flanders,  $6\frac{1}{2}$  m. N.E. Ypres. P. 3000.

PASCO or CERRO DE PASCO, the chief mining town of N. Peru, dep. Junin, 130 m. N.E. Lima, at the head of two ravines, and 13,720 feet above the sea, the most elevated city in the world. P. varies at different periods from 4000 to perhaps 12,000. The ground broken up for mining occupies a space  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. in length by  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. in breadth, quite honeycombed with shafts, most of which are now filled with water. All its ores are feruginous. Though coal exists in the vicinity, turf, dung, and timber are mostly employed for smelting.—The Cerro, or mountain knot of Pasco and Huanuco, unites two branches of the Andes. Summit 16,000 feet above the sea.

PASCUARO or PAZQUARO, a town, Mexico, dep. Michoacan, 28 m. S.W. Morelia, on E. bank of Lake Pascuaro. P. 8000. It has copper mines.

PAS-DE-CALAIS, a dep. of France, in the N.E., formed of parts of the old provs. Artois, Picardie, and Flanders, on the English Channel, or Pas-de-Calais, between the deps. Nord and Somme. Area 2551 sq. m. P. (1861) 724,938. Surface traversed S.E. to N.W. by a chain of hills which separates the basin of the North Sea from that of the Channel, and gives rise to numerous rivers; the chief of which are the Scarpe and Lys, affls. of the Scheldt, the Aa, which flows to the North Sea, and the Canche, flowing to the English Channel; these are all navigable, and connected by canals. The dep. has excellent harbours, the chief of which are Calais and Boulogne. Commerce is also facilitated by the Great Northern Railway and its branches. Soil rich in coal and turf, marble, and slate; is remarkable for the facility with which water is found by means of artesian wells. It has a superior breed of sheep and horses, but indifferent cattle. Agriculture participates in the perfection of that of the dep. Nord. It is marshy in some parts, but generally fertile in wheat, hemp, lint, tobacco, and oleaginous plants. Manufacturing industry comprises beet-root sugar, linen and linen thread, cotton, lace, common woollens, paper, potteryware, and leather. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Arras, Béthune, Boulogne, St Pol, Montreuil, and St Omer.

PEKING or PEKIN (Chinese Pih-king, "the Northern Capital"), the cap. city of China, and modern metropolis of the Chinese empire, cap. prov. Chi-li, in a sandy plain, between the Pei-ho and its affl. the Hoen-ho, 100 m. N.W. the mouth of the former river, in the Yellow Sea, and 50 m. S. the great wall of China. Lat. 39° 42' N.; lon. 116° 20' E. Mean annual temp. 54° 8'; winter 26°-7, summer 81°-1, Fahr. Climate very healthy. P. (1863) estimated at 2,000,000. It consists of two contiguous cities, each separately encircled by walls, 25 m. in circuit & 30 feet high, & together entered by 16 gates, and occupying an area of from 25 to 28 sq. m., though much of this space is occupied by gardens and enclosures, the houses seldom being more than one storey in height. The S., or Chinese city, the seat of commerce, and residence of the majority of the pop., is intersected throughout by four wide and regular thoroughfares, which abound with shops of all descriptions, and are continually filled with a motley crowd. At the points where these streets meet each other, are large arches. Chief objects of interest, astronomical observatory, temple to the god of architecture, Jesuits' burying ground, temple of the Great Bell, and the Lama monastery to accommodate 3000 persons. The houses are of brick, with red-tiled roofs, and the city is unpaved and undrained. The Northern, Tartar, or imperial city, consists of three separate enclosures. The outer of these, formerly appropriated to the Tartar garrison, is now mostly occupied by Chinese traders; but it contains five of the supreme tribunals of the empire. The second enclosure (Hwang-Ching, "the august city") is 6 m. in circuit, & entered by four large, and several smaller, gates. In it are extensive public granaries, a military arsenal, and seminary; the college and buildings of the Russian embassy, the national college, and residences of the great dignitaries of the empire. The inner enclosure, or "forbidden city," with walls 2 m. in circumf., faced with yellow tiles, and surrounded by a moat faced with masonry, is appropriated to the public and private palaces of the emperor and empress, and has a magnificent temple of the imperial ancestors, pavilions, gardens, a lake, and an artificial mountain. Outside of both cities are open suburbs; & Peking has, besides its numerous temples and pagodas, a fine mosque, a Greek church and convent, & a Roman Catholic chapel. About 10 m. W.N.W. is an imperial park, covering at least 12 sq. m., and containing 30 palaces of the emperor and great officers of state. Peking has a large printing and bookselling trade, and manufs. of coloured glass, idols, and other articles. On 30th October 1860, it was taken by the allied British and French, since which date, ministers of these two nations have been resident there, and in 1862 an American legation was established. At the British legation there is a college for student interpreters. PERSÉPOLIS (Istakhar and Takhti Jemshîd), the anc. cap. of Persia, the traces of which exist in a fine plain, prov. Fars, on an affl. of the Bundemir river, from 25 to 30 m. N.E. Shiraz. Its ruins cover a wide surface; and on a terraced platform, 1430 ft. in length & from 800 to 900 ft. in width, are large gateways, numerous columns, and bas-reliefs, the whole supposed to be the remains of the palace of Darius, destroyed by Alexander the Great. The walls are covered with inscriptions in arrow-headed characters, and numerous tombs are in row in the adjacent mountains.

PERSERN, a town, Europ. Turkey. [PRISREND.]
PERSHORE, a market town of England, co. and 8½ m. S.E. Worcester, on the navigable Avon. Ac. of two pas. 12,910. P. 5061; of town 2905, partly engaged in manuf. of hosiery. It is the polling-place for E. division of co., and the head of a poor-law union.

PERSIA or IRAN, a country of W. Asia, comprising, in its widest acceptation, the region between the Caspian Sea and the Indian Ocean, from the Oxus and Indus to Kurdistan & the Persian Gulf. Its boundaries have undergone many changes, but it is now politically divided into Western Persia, or doms. of the Persian Shah, whose cap. is Teheran, and Eastern Persia or Cabool. Persia Proper lies betw. lat. 26° and 40° N., lon. 44° and 61° E., having W. Asiatic Turkey, N. the Russian gov. Transcaucasia, the Caspian Sea, and the desert of Kharesm (Khiva), E. Afghanistan and Beloochistan, and S. the Arabian Sea and Persian Gulf. Length, N. to S., 570 m.; average breadth 160 m. Area estimated at 562,380 square miles. Population not more than 10,000,000.

The following are the great divisions of the country:—

Modern Names.	Ancient Names.	Chief Towns.
Azerbaijan.	Media Atropatene.	Tabreez.
Irak-Ajemi.	Media Magna.	Teheran.
Ardelan.	Elymais.	Sennah.
Luristan.	Syro-Media.
Khuzistan.	Susiana.	Shuster.
Farsistan.	Persis.	Shiraz.
Laristan.	Mesambria.	Lar.
Kerman.	Caramania.	Kerman.
Ghilan.	Co. of Gela.	Reshd.
Maazanderan.	Co. of Japyri.	Balfrush.
Astrabad.	Hyrcania.	Astrabad.
Khorasan.	Parthia.	Nishapoor.
Yezd.	Artacene.	Yezd.

Chief cities, Teheran the cap., Ispahan the former cap. and still the largest city, Tabriz, Urumiah, Hamadan, Shuster, Kashan, Reshd, Balfrush, Astrabad, Meshed, Nishapoor, Yezd, Bushire, Shiraz, Lar, and Kerman. The principal ports are Balfrush on the Caspian, and Bushire on the Persian Gulf. Its central part (Irak-Ajemi, and the greater portion of Fars) is a table-land. A average height from 2500 to 3500 feet above the sea, but traversed by mountain ranges rising to upwards of 7000 or 8000 feet, and bounded N. by the Elburz chain, in which Demavend is, 18,550 feet; these are prolonged from Azerbaijan E. to the Paropamisan mountains in Afghanistan, and S. by another chain stretching from Kurdistan E. to the mountains of W. Beloochistan. This table-land contains in its W. part many irrigated and fertile tracts, but nearly all the E. part of Persia is a wide and irremediable salt desert, forming a portion of that rainless and sterile zone which extends from the Atlantic throughout the Sahara of Africa, Arabia, Central Asia, and Mongolia, to the mountains on the N. frontier of the Chinese empire. S. of the table-land, the country is mostly parched up and barren, and the heats of summer are almost insupportable. The absence of sufficient water is a great disadvantage to Persia. Except the Aras, forming the N.W. frontier, the Seid-rood and Gurgun, which enter the Caspian Sea, the Kerah, Karun, Jerahi, etc., affls. of the Tigris and Shat-ul-Arab in Khuzistan, and the Bundemir in Fars, the rivers are quite insignificant, and by far the greater portion of the country is unproductive. There are many salt lakes in the table-land, of which the chief is that of Urumiyah. Azerbaijan and the Caspian provs. must, however, be excluded from this general description. N. of the Elburz mountains the country is covered with dense forests of oak, elm, beech, and box, interspersed with fine pastures, and numerous orchards and vineyards. The climate of these provs. is similar to that of Europe, the grains common in which continent, with rice, are plentifully raised. The region between the table-land in the S. and the Persian Gulf, called Dushistan, or the level country, about 100 m. in mean breadth, is a sandy waste, interspersed with patches of cultivation and date trees. Besides grain, the principal products of Persia are cotton, tobacco, silk, gall-nuts, madder, yellow berries, opium, gum-ammoniac, assafetida, and other drugs; wool, wine, rose water, saffron and other fruits. The wine of Shiraz is celebrated by the Eastern poets, and the vine still flourishes there. Near it the liquorice plant is found in great abundance. The mulberry flourishes in the rich districts on the Caspian; dates are extensively used for food, and the melons are the finest in the world. Very little is known of the geology of Persia. Copper mines have been wrought in some of the N. provs. There are lead mines in Fars and Kerman. Iron is abundant, but little worked. 40 m. W. of Nishapoor are famous mines of turquoise, a gem peculiar to Persia. Rock salt is abundant in most parts of the country, and salt is also procured from the waters of lakes Urumiyah and Bakhtegan. Coal is found in the Elburz mountains, as well as fine varieties of marble; sulphur, naphtha, and garnets are other chief mineral products. Wild animals, including the lion, tiger, jackal, hyena, wolf, wild boar, wild ass, antelope, and deer, are very abundant. Domestic animals include most of the species common in Europe, with the camel and argali sheep. The native horses are very strong, but camels are preferred as beasts of burden in the deserts, and mules in the mountainous regions. Sheep are everywhere abundant, and, with cattle, they compose the principal wealth of the wandering tribes of Moguls, Turks, Uzbeks, and Kurds, who dwell in all the outlying provs. of the kingdom. Birds are rare, from the absence of trees. Pheasants are found on the coasts of the Caspian, and pelicans and bustards on those of the Gulf. The song-birds include the bulbul or nightingale, the blackbird, and thrush. There are few fish in the rivers, but valuable fisheries on the shores. Principal manufs. are silk fabrics, of all kinds; in the chief cities, shawls of goats' hair, especially in Kerman, carpets, felts, cotton cloths, cutlery and arms, glass, pottery, leather, and saddlery. The foreign commerce of Persia is small, and chiefly with Russia on the Caspian, and with Europe and India by the Persian Gulf. The internal trade is carried on by means of caravans from countries E. of Persia, conveying leather, lamb skins, china, glass, indigo, and spices. Exports consist of the native products already enumerated, with copper wares, carpets, goats' hair shawls, saffron, specie, skins, swords, daggers, and cutlery. Imports from India are indigo, chintzes, muslins, calicoes, gold and silver brocades, gum, chinaware, sugar, shawls, and metals; from Turkey, European goods, & specie; from Russia, iron, broadcloth, calicoes, gold lace, & manufactured goods, tea, quicksilver, & furs; from England, woollen & cotton fabrics, shawls, jewellery, arms, cutlery, watches, and metallic wares. A large proportion of the British cottons imported at Trebizond on the Black Sea is intended for the Persian markets. Government despotic. The shah is assisted by a grand vizier, who exercises control over the military and foreign departments, and by a lord high treasurer, who superintends the revenue and home arrangements. Each prov., or important dist. of a prov., is governed by a beg-lerbeg, usually a prince of the blood or a nobleman of high rank, who exercises almost absolute power, and appoints hakims over the subordinate dists. Each town and village has its magistrate, who is generally chosen by the people. The revenue of the shah is derived from a land tax, and taxes on vineyards, horses and other animals, etc. The pop. comprises the settled inhabitants and the wandering tribes called Illyats or clans, including Turks, Kurds, Laks, and Arabs. The pop. of the towns and settled dists. are Mohammedans of the Sheah sect, rejecting the authority of the three first caliphs, on which, and other accounts, there is between them and the Turks, Arabs, Bokharese, and most other Mussulmans, a perpetual feud. Education, to the extent of reading and writing, is general in the towns, where there are schools for gratuitous instruction. Astronomy, astrology, logic, and metaphysics, are the favourite studies of the learned. The Scriptures were translated into the Persian language, and sent into the country for circulation by agents of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland. The Persians are a handsome, active, and generally warlike people. The nomadic tribes consist of Arabs in the S.; Turkmans, Moguls, Uzbeks, in the E. and N.E.; and Kurds in the W. They dwell in tents, subsisting on the produce of their herds and on plunder; and they furnish most part of the armed force, which is very large, but variable in amount. In 1856, Persia having seized on Herat, war was proclaimed by the British, who took possession of Karak, Bushire, and Mohammerah, but a peace was concluded in March 1857.

PERSIA, a township of the U. S., North America, Missouri, co. Boone.

PERSIAN GULF, an arm of the Indian Ocean, between Arabia and Persia. Lat. 24° to 30° N.; lon. 48° to 56° 30' E. Length 550 m.; breadth varies to 220 m. At its N.W. extremity it receives the Shat-ul-Arab, formed by the union of the Euphrates and Tigris rivers, and the Karun. It communicates on the E. with the Arabian Sea by a strait 50 m. across. It contains numerous islands, the principal being Kishm, Ormuz, Bushsheh, and Karak, off its N. or Persian coast, and the Bahrein islands on its Arabian side, around which last named an extensive pearl fishery is carried on. Shores almost everywhere arid and sterile. On them are the cities of Basorah and Bushire, and the towns Congoon, Nac-kiloo, Gombroom, Zabarah, El Khatif, and Grane.

PERS-JUSSY, comm. & vill., France, dep. Haute-Savoie, arr. St Julien, cant. Reigntier. P. 1793.

PERSON, a co. of the U. S., North America, in N. of North Carolina. Area 400 sq. m. P. (1860) 6026 free, 5195 slaves.

PERTABPORE, a town of British India, presid. Bengal, dist. and 28 m. E. Midnapoor.

PERTENHALL, a pa. of England, co. and 11 m. N.N.E. Bedford. Ac. 1805. P. 404.

PERTH, a city, royal, parl., and munic. bor., seat of a presbytery and synod, and formerly the metropolis of Scotland, cap. co., in a plain on rt. b. of the Tay, here crossed by a bridge 880 ft. in length, and on railway 33 m. N.N.W. Edinburgh, lat. 56° 23' 50" N., lon. 3° 26' 20" W. Ac. 3810. Pop. of city, including royal burgh, (1861) 26,094. It is partially enclosed by hills. Altitude 25 feet; rainfall 36 inches. On its N. and S. sides are two spacious parks called Inches. Principal edifices, the church of St John, supposed to have been originally erected in the 5th century, with a square tower 155 ft. in height, and divided into three distinct places of worship; numerous other churches and chapels, the public reservoir, co. buildings, general prison for Scotland, formerly a depot for prisoners of war, co. infirmary, lunatic asylum, large barracks, the Marshall monument appropriated to the public, with a large library, the museum of the Perth literary and antiquarian society, town-hall, and King James VI. hospital. Perth has an educational seminary, a grammar school, an academy, and several other endowed schools, three weekly newspapers, one local and six branch banks, and a custom-house. The Tay is navigable to the city for vessels of considerable burden. It is the general terminus of the Edinburgh and Perth, Central, Scottish Midland, Dundee and Perth, Aberdeen, and Perth and Inverness railways. The railway to Dundee crosses the Tay by a stone bridge. Manufactures coloured cotton stuffs, gingham, wineceys, and shawls; it has also flax-spinning mills, bleach-fields, a distillery, breweries, corn mills, and iron foundries, rope-walks, tanneries, and dye-works. The glove trade has declined. Ship building is carried on, and the salmon fisheries in the Tay are very valuable and increasing. There are ponds for artificial propagation of fish at Stormontfield, on the Tay, 5 m. above Perth. Exports manuf. goods, corn, potatoes, salmon, cattle and sheep. Registered shipping (1864) 5206 tons. Entered 284, tons 20,380; cleared 126, tons 8365. Races take place on the North Inch, on which a statue of the late Prince Consort was erected in 1864. Customs rev. (1862) 16,858*l.* Corporation rev. (1863) 7519*l.*, besides harbour revenue. The bor. sends 1 mem. to House of Commons. About 2 m. N. of the city is Scone, long a royal residence. Perth was an important station under the Romans, at the meeting of three great highways, and it has some remains which have been attributed to Agricola, with various ruins of ecclesiastical buildings. It was also frequently resorted to by the Scottish kings, and was the scene of many historical events. Its vicinity is very fertile.

PERTSHIRE, a large and important co. of Scotland, occupying its centre, having N. the cos. Aberdeen and Inverness, W. Argyre, S. Dumbarton, Stirling, Clackmannan, and Kinross, E. Fife, Forfar, and the Firth of Tay. Excluding a detached district on the Firth of Forth, it is of a compact circular form; length and breadth about 60 miles each. Ac. 1,814,063, of which upwards of 1,000,000 are arable or pasture. P. 133,500. Surface extremely diversified, comprising both a highland and a lowland region. The Grampians extend through it in a N.E. direction, and are composed of granite and primary slate. Principal mountains, Benlawers, 3984 feet, Ben-

More, & many of the other principal summits in Scotland in the districts Athol, Breadalbane, Strathearn, Strathmore, and Stornont. The S. and lower part of the co. is intersected by the Ochil and Sidlaw Hills, which are of greenstone. The principal lakes are Lochs Tay, Earn, Rannoch, and Erich. Perthshire is wholly drained by the Tay, and its affils, the Earn, etc., except its S. part, which is watered by the Teith, Allan, & Devon. The Carse of Gowrie, on the Tay, consists of a deep alluvial clay, and is very productive; the soil in the mountain dists. is mostly light, and chiefly adapted for pasturage, sheep and cattle breeding being extensively followed. Agriculture has greatly improved, and wheat, barley, oats, beans, potatoes, turnips, and fruits are raised for exportation. Farms vary in size from 50 to 500 ac. A large part of the co. has within the last century been planted with woods. Some coal is raised in the S.E.; limestone, sandstone, marble, and slate are generally abundant, and lead is found in some places. Manufs., except at Perth, are not flourishing; the principal are of linen, cotton, and woollen stuffs, leather, and paper. Railways traverse the E. part of the co., and communicate with Edinburgh, Stirling, Perth, and Dundee, N. to Aberdeen and Inverness. Perthshire is subdivided into 79 pas. Principal towns, Perth, Crieff, and Dunblane. It sends 1 member to H. of C. Reg. electors (1862) 3754.

PERTH, a dist. of West Australia, intersected by lat. 32° S., lon. 116° E., having W. the Indian Ocean, and on the other sides the dists. Twiss, York, and Murray. It is watered by the Swan river, which has, 10 miles from its mouth, the town of Perth, cap. of the colony.

PERTH, a township of Canada West, dist. and 10 m. W. Johnstown, on an aff. of the Rideau.

PERTHES, a comm. and market town of France, dep. H.-Marne, 16 m. N.W. Vassy. P. 870.—Perthois was an old dist. of France, cap. Vitrye-Français. It now forms parts of the depts. Marne and Haute-Marne.

PERTUS BRÉTON and PERTUS D'ANTIOCHE are traits which separate the island Ré from the W. mainland of France, dep. Charente-Inférieure, and from the island Oleron.

PERTWOOD (UPPER), a pa. of England, co. Wilts, 2 m. N.W. Hindon. Ac. 450. P. 30.

PERU, a republican state of South America, between lat. 3° 25' and 21° 30' S., lon. 65° and 81° 20' W., having N. the republic of Ecuador, E. and S. the territories of Chile, Bolivia, and Brazil, & W. the Pacific Ocean. Length 1320 m.; breadth 760 m. It is divided into 12 depts. and 4 littoral provs., including 32 cities, 74 towns, and 1558 vills. The divisions are, in the N., the depts. of Caxamarca, Amazonas, Libertad, and Ancachs, and the littoral provs. of Piura and Loreto, the last on the borders of Brazil; in the centre, the depts. of Lima, Junin, and Huancavelica, and the littoral provs. of Callao and Ica; on the S., the depts. of Ayacucho, Cuzco, Arequipa, Moquegua, and Puno. The boundaries of the country are disputed on all sides except the W., and very little is known of the area and pop. of the separate divisions. The total area is estimated at 509,034 sq. m., and pop. (1859) 2,500,000. The double Cordillera of the Andes traverses Peru from S.E. to N.W., separating it into three great natural regions.—I. "La Costa," on the coast between the base of the Andes and the shores of the Pacific, mostly an arid desert, intersected at intervals by fertilizing mountain streams, extending 1500 m. in length, and rarely more than 60 m. in breadth.—II. "La Sierra," or Andine div., embracing all the valleys on the Pacific side of the W. Andes, above the level of 7000 feet, including the hills and valleys between the double Cordillera chains. From a little below the crest of the eastern mountains is "La Ceja," or brow of the Montaña, and here begins the fertile region called "La Montana," from the Spanish word "monte," meaning a wood or thicket. A few miles beyond the eastern crest of the Cordillera is the warm and steaming woodland, which stretches into the Brazilian territory, and contains the head-streams of the Peruvian river navigation, flowing into the bed of the Amazon. Principal rivers, the Marafon, Hualaga, Ucayale, Apurimac, and Purus, all having a N.ward course, and tributaries to the Amazon, which waters most part of the north frontier. About half of the Lake Titicaca is comprised in S. Peru. The whole coast region is arid and destitute of timber; and only the Piura river in this division is at all navigable. Rain rarely falls in the coast valleys of Peru W. of the Andes, but fogs, called the "garua," are frequent. The amount of rain diminishes gradually from the southern tropic to the N. borders of Peru. Climate on the coast sultry and unhealthy, but higher up mild and salubrious. Temp. at Lima in summer 80° to 84°; minimum in winter 60° to 64° Fahr. On the E. slopes of the Peruvian Andes rain falls copiously. Soil in the valleys of the upland region highly fertile, and here the grains of Europe are successfully raised. Domestic animals generally bred are the same as in Britain. Here are extensive pastures, where sheep introduced by Europeans have been acclimated, and multiply with amazing rapidity. The vast plains E. of the mountains, as already noted, are in great part covered with dense forests. In the hotter portions of the country, sugar, wheat, maize, cotton, indigo, tobacco, yams, sweet potatoes, cocoa, and fine fruits, with cinchona bark, sarsaparilla, copaiba, vanilla, and other drugs, and valuable timber, are principal products. One cause which prevents the Peruvians from fully availing themselves of the productiveness of these rich valleys is the prevalence in them of intermittent fevers. Cholera morbus is a very common disease, for which the standing remedy is ice; but the most novel feature in the medical history of Peru is the introduction of yellow fever, which appeared on the shores as an epidemic for the first time in 1851. Goitre is the chief endemic disease of the dry mountain climate, but cretinism is unknown. The country is extremely rich in natural resources, especially in minerals, & those are being gradually developed. The mines of Peru are the principal source of its wealth; but this branch of industry continues in great decadence, owing to the absence of capitalists and roads. The silver mines of Cerro de Pasco are the richest in the republic. The Cordillera of the Andes contains veins of gold, copper, lead, bismuth, tin, and nitrate of soda. The only coal mine partially worked is that of Muro, in Caylloma; at Huancavelica is a celebrated mine of quicksilver. The llama, alpaca, guanaco, and vicuña are natives of the country, and the first especially is used as a beast of burden; mules are, however, mostly employed for travelling. Coarse cotton, woollen cloths and leather goods are generally made, with fine cloaks and blanket-ing, at Tarma; iron wares at Caxamarca; gold and silver articles, and jewellery, at Lima, Arequipa, and Cuzco; but in general manufactured goods are imported from Europe and North America, in return for raw produce. The want of roads interposes great obstacles to internal traffic; but a railway is now (1864) projected from the port of Islay to Arequipa, which, in connection with steamers to be launched on Lake Titicaca, will greatly facilitate the trade of the interior. No statistical tables are kept in Peru, and there are no means of ascertaining its specialties of trade. Exports (1862) guano, wool, nitre, copper, Peruvian bark, tin, archal hides, cotton, silver, etc., to the value of 2,394,092*l*. Imports, cottons, woollens, iron, linens, hardware, apparel, coals, machinery, leather, wine, opium, etc., to the value of 836,365*l*. The maritime trade is chiefly with the ports on the W. side of America, but that with Europe is considerable. Scarcely any Peruvian coinage exists, that in circulation being from the mint of Bolivia. The constitution was framed in 1828, on the basis of that of the United States. The legislative body consists of a senate and a chamber of deputies, one of the latter chosen for every 20,000 inhabitants by electoral colleges composed of one elector for every village of 200 inhabitants. The executive government is vested in a president, popularly chosen for six years, and assisted by a ministry chosen by himself, and a council of state chosen by the legislature. Each dep. is commanded by a prefect, who resides in the capital; the provs: by a sub-prefect; the dists. by governors of an inferior rank; and the minor villages by lieutenant-governors. In each cap. of the depts. there is a superior court, composed of a chief judge, 4 assistant judges, and a fiscal. There are also three or more judges of civil law, and an 'agente fiscal' (deputy attorney-general). In each prov. there is a judge of civil law, and in each district one or two justices of the peace. Every vill. entitled to name an elector of deputies, has a municipal body. With a few exceptions, every Peruvian enjoys the rights of citizenship. The Roman Catholic is the state religion, and no other is tolerated. In each of the departments is a diocese or bishopric. Public instruction has made little progress, and in the interior not more than 2 per cent. of the youth receive education. It is better in the chief towns, and there are three universities; at Cuzco, Arequipa, and Puno, 12 boys' and 6 girls' schools, and 45 schools of primary instruction, mostly supported by the state. Standing army (1862) 16,000 men; navy, 1 frigate and 6 other steamers, and 10 sailing vessels—in all, 17 ships with 84 guns. Rev. (1862) 466,323 reals, being a considerable increase on former years. Peru was conquered from the dynasty of the Incas by the troops of Pizarro in 1532; from which time it remained one of the most important foreign possessions of Spain, until its independence in 1821.

PERUGIA, Perusia, or Perusium (Fr. Perouse), a city of Central Italy, 10 m. E. of the Lake of Perugia, on the S. declivity of the Apennines. P. (1862) 44,130. It is enclosed by walls. Public buildings comprise a cathedral, with several paintings and a library of rare MSS.; upwards of 100 other churches, and 50 monastic establishments; a city hall, an academy of fine arts, several private palaces, a well endowed university, with museums of antiquities and minerals, and a botanic garden; public library, hospital, and lunatic asylum; 2 theatres, a ball-court, and bull-ring; a splendidly sculptured fountain, 2 celebrated gates of Etruscan architecture, and the house of Perugino. Perugia has little commercial industry beyond a few soap-works, distilleries of brandy and liqueurs, and trade in wine, oil, corn, fruits, and other provisions; but its fairs in August and November, for cattle and merchandise, are frequented by a concourse of people from all parts of Central Italy, and numerous visitors are attracted to the city by its agreeable society and abundant works of art.—The Lake of Perugia (Ital. Trasimena), 10 m. W. Perugia, is situated in a basin enclosed on every side by the Apennines. It is about 30 miles in circumference, surrounded by gentle eminences covered with oak, pine, and olive plantations, and it contains three islands. The prov. of Perugia, formerly Umbria, has an area of 3685 sq. m. P. (1862) 513,019.

PÉSTH, a royal free city of Hungary, and its chief commercial depôt, on l. b. of the Danube, immediately opposite Buda, with which it is connected by a noble suspension bridge, and the cities thus united are called Buda-Pesth, 136 m. E.S.E. Vienna. P. (1857) 131,705, of whom about two-thirds are Roman Catholics, one-sixth Jews, the others Protestants and adherents of the Greek church. It is situated on level ground, is about 7 m. in circumference, and is regularly laid out. Principal edifices, national casino, co. hall, Neugebaude, a vast structure, used as an artillery depôt, grenadier barracks: Jesuit and several other convents, Roman Catholic, Greek, Lutheran, Calvinist, and other churches, and a handsome Jews' synagogue, finished 1863. The ancient structures of the Hungarian cap. are all in Buda, and Pesth is the "new city." The university, the only one in Hungary, has 49 professors and a library of 70,000 vols., attended by an average of 1000 students; it is one of the most richly endowed in the world. The observatory is situated on a hill called the Blocksberg, in Buda. It has also a botanic garden, veterinary hospital, a national museum, with a library rich in Hungarian MSS. and valuable collections of coins, medals, minerals, fossils, and antiquities; a Hungarian academy of sciences, devoted chiefly to the scientific cultivation of the Hungarian language; a national theatre, one of the best in Europe; Roman Catholic, Lutheran, and normal schools, and a Piarist gymnasium; civil and military hospitals, asylums for the insane, blind, and deaf-mutes, & charitable institutions.—Pesth has silk, woollen, leather, oil, and tobacco factories, dye-works, and manufs. of meerschaum pipe bowls. It has extensive railway and river traffic, four large annual fairs, and a great printing and book-selling trade. Immediately around the city is the Rakosfeld, a wide plain, on which the Hungarian diets were held for many centuries. Pesth occupies the site of the Roman Transacincum. The old town was enclosed by walls in the 13th century. It was held by the Turks for 160 years. Buda and Pesth suffered severely from an inundation of the river in March 1838. Pesth is a station for steam-packets on the Danube, and is connected by rail. with Vienna, & with the principal places in Hungary. [BUDA.]

Viborg and Olonez, E. the gov. Novgorod, S. Pskov, and W. Lake Peipus and the river Narova, separating it from the gov. Livonia and Esthonia. Area 24,805 sq. m. P. with the military gov. of Cronstadt, 1,083,091, mostly Russians, but comprises many foreigners, most of whom are Lutherans. Surface mostly level, soil thin, climate damp and cold, and 2-3ds of the gov. are covered with woods and marshes. Principal rivers, the Pliusa and Luga, flowing to the Gulf of Finland; the Volkhov, Siasi, and Svir, entering the Lake Ladoga; and the Neva, uniting the lake and gulf, and on which is the cap. city. Rye, barley, oats, and some wheat, hemp, and flax, are cultivated; but the climate is unfavourable for corn, and the quantity produced is far below the consumption. Around the cap. are many market gardens, kept by German colonists. Timber deals and masts form chief articles of export. Some building stone and lime are obtained, and in the cap. all kinds of manufs. are carried on. The gov. is divided into 9 circs. or dists. After St Petersburg, the chief towns are Schlusselferg, Luga, Jamburg, Cronstadt, and Zarskoe-Selo.

PETERSBURG (St), the modern cap. city of the Russian empire, cap. gov.; founded by Peter the Great in 1703, on both sides of the Neva, at its influx into the Gulf of Finland, 18 m. E. Cronstadt. Lat. of observatory  $59^{\circ} 56' 5''$  N., lon.  $30^{\circ} 19' 0''$  E. P. (1840) 470,202; do. (1858) 520,131. Mean temperature of year  $59^{\circ} 6'$ , summer  $61^{\circ} 7'$ , winter  $18^{\circ} 6'$ , Fahr. It stands chiefly on the S. bank of the Neva, and partly on islands formed by the divergence of the river, which is crossed by 10 bridges, many of them richly decorated, as Isaac's bridge, and over its branches and canals there are upwards of 70 bridges; 9 of its 12 quarters are on the mainland, which is called the "Great Side," the island and settlements on the N. bank of the Neva being termed the Petersburg Side. Being situated on a flat and marshy soil, it is difficult of drainage, and subject to destructive inundations, during one of which, in 1824, 15,000 lives were lost. Its public buildings, surmounted by gorgeous gold-plated domes, are massive and elegant, entitling it to rank among the finest cities of Europe, but the Italian style of architecture, generally adopted, is unsuited to the climate. Its principal thoroughfares and large squares are wide and spacious. The street called the Neuskoi Prospekt is 4 miles long, 130 feet wide, and is one of the finest in Europe. The principal channel of the Neva is bordered by granite quays, of an extent surpassing those of any other city, except perhaps Paris. On the side of the mainland are the cathedral of St Isaac, of chaste and noble proportions, the admiralty, the hermitage, a palace, long the residence of Catharine II., and which comprises the court theatre, a picture gallery occupying 41 apartments, a valuable library of 120,000 vols., and a rich museum. In the same quarter are the marble palace, city hall, senate and ministerial offices, bank, post-office, grand bazaar, hotel de l'état major, and the cathedral of our Lady of Kasan, built on the model of St Peter's at Rome. The winter palace is the largest and most magnificent in the world. Close to the quay is the bronze equestrian statue of Peter the Great, on a block of granite, which has been split by the frost. Opposite this is a long bridge leading to an island on which is the exchange and custom house. The citadel is on a small island in the Neva, which contains the mint, the hôtel des mines, the academies of arts and sciences, with museum, astronomical observatory, and barracks, and the cathedral of St Peter and St Paul, in which are the tombs of all the Russian sovereigns since Peter the Great. On an adjacent island is the house in which Peter the Great lived while constructing the original town; and in the Grand Square the column erected to the emperor Alexander, a magnificent granite monolith, 84 ft. in height. The S. part of the city is intersected by the Fontanka and other canals, lined by quays. The bridges across the Neva, and its principal branches, are erected on boats, and annually removed before the river is frozen, for it is open for navigation only 219 days in the year (May to November). Besides the university, founded in 1819, there are 5 other colleges, and many public schools, a medical chirological academy of high reputation, an imperial library with 450,000 vols. and 25,000 MSS., many of which are Oriental, an academy of sciences having valuable museums, an astronomical and a meteorological observatory, and a library of 110,000 vols., the imperial academy, a Kalmuck institution, an imperial geographical society, a government botanic garden, a naval hospital, a school of mines, with a geological and mineralogical cabinet, said to be the most extensive in the world. The Rumiahtzoff museum has an extensive collection of Oriental objects. Manufs. of all kinds are carried on, and it has imperial gunpowder, tapestry, and porcelain factories, extensive cannon foundries, and near the city the glass-works of Osiersk. The great bazaar of St Petersburg is said to have 10,000 merchants. It receives merchandise from all parts of the Russian empire and Central Asia by means of navigable rivers and canals, and one of its most characteristic features is the winter market, in which are seen enormous pyramids composed of the carcasses of cattle, sheep, and swine, fish, fowls, eggs, and butter, frozen into solid masses. Chief exports, tallow, flax, hemp, iron, copper, corn, timber, potash, canvas and coarse linens, oils, furs, hides, and tar; imports colonial produce, cotton and woollen goods, dye stuffs, wines, silks, woollens, hardwares, salt, tin, lead, coal, linens, etc. It has regular steam-packet communication with all the principal ports of Europe, and is connected by railways with Moscow, Nijni-Novgorod, and Warsaw. The channel at the mouth of the river is impeded by sand, narrow and difficult of access. The low islands of the Neva are strongly fortified.

The beautiful cemetery of Laurel Hill is 3½ m. N. the city, on E. bank of the Schuylkill. Philadelphia has an opera house, theatres, public gardens, and excellent and extensive markets. Manufs. in great variety. The city is supplied with water by the Fairmont water-works, 2 m. N.W. on E. bank of the Schuylkill, covering 30 ac., and containing reservoirs for 22,000,000 gallons. The Delaware, here 1 m. across, is navigable to the city for the largest ships. The coasting and river trade is highly important. Large quantities of provisions are brought hither from the interior, and the city is the great depôt for coal in the Union. The city, independent of its suburbs, is governed by a mayor, 12 select councillors, & a common council of 20 members. It was founded in 1682 by W. Penn, whose residence, Pennsburg manor, was near the city. It was held by British troops from Sept. 1777 till June 1778.—II. a township, New York, 16 m. N.E. Watertown.

PHILIPPINE, a fortified vill. of the Netherlands, prov. Zealand, 6½ m. W. Axel. P. 433.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS (Span. islas Filipinas), a large and important group of Malaysia, forming its N. division, & next to Cuba the most valuable colonial possession of Spain, chiefly between lat. 5° 32' and 19° 38' N., lon. 117° and 126° E., having N. and E. the Pacific Ocean, W. the China and Sulu Seas, and S. the Sea of Celebes. There are about 1200 isls. in all, of which 408 are inhabited. Principal isls., Luzon, Mindanao, & Palawan, with Mindoro, Panay, Negros, Zebu, Bohol, Leyte, Samar, Masbate, and many of less size. Total area estimated at about 110,000 sq. m., and a pop. of 4,500,000, but the Spanish dominion extends over only 53,303 square miles, with a pop., in 1857, of 2,679,500, consisting of Papuan Negroes and independent tribes, Malay Indians, half-castes, and Chinese, Europeans, and native whites. The isls. are of volcanic formation, traversed by a chain of mountains from N. to S., rising in some of them to 6000 ft., & some of these are still active volcanoes. The coasts of most of them are deeply indented by the sea, and the larger islands are well watered by large streams, with estuaries, affording excellent harbours. Earthquakes are of frequent occurrence. [MANILA.] The group is within the range of the monsoons, and violent hurricanes are common. From May to September the W. coasts are deluged with rain, while the Oct. monsoon brings rain to the E. coast, which is at other seasons dry. The high temperature and abundance of moisture produce a luxuriant vegetation, so that they are capable of yielding all kinds of colonial, and probably European produce. Rice, millet, maize, sugar, indigo, hemp, tobacco, coffee, and cotton are raised; and sago, cocoa nuts, bananas, cinnamon, betel, numerous fine fruits, timber for shipbuilding, and dye woods, are among the products. Buffaloes, and most of the domestic animals common in Europe, are reared; the horse, introduced by the Spaniards, runs wild among the mountains. The wild animals comprise the antelope, fox, wild cat, and monkey; the cayman is found in the rivers and lakes, the tortoise abounds on the shores; fish are very abundant, and serpents numerous. Among the birds of the islands are the parrot, a species of pheasant, pigeon, and water fowls: Pearls, pearl-oyster shell, the sea slug, edible birds' nests, and sapan wood are important articles of export hence to China. The mineral products are gold, copper, iron, lead, mercury, sulphur, and coal. Domestic weaving is pretty generally carried on by the females, and straw hats, cigar cases, and earthenwares are made; but the chief manufacture is that of "government Manila" cigars, which occupies 2000 persons at a royal factory in Manila. The eo lonial policy of Old Spain excluded all foreign ships and Chinese settlers from these islands, and the trade with the Spanish dominions in America was also confined to that conducted annually by a single ship! But such restrictions have vanished, and the colony is now progressing in many ways. Exports (1862), including the Ladrone Islands, sugar, hemp, indigo, tobacco, coffee, mother-of-pearl, gums, etc., to the value of 708,866*l.* Imports, cottons, machinery, linens, coats, iron, umbrellas, earthenware, hardwares, woollens, apparel, etc., to the value of 468,890*l.* Manila is the principal seat of trade, the seat of the government, and residence of the governor-general, who is appointed by the crown of Spain. In each of the larger islands is a lieutenant-governor; and each of the 30 provs., governed by an alcalde, is divided into pueblos, or communes. The Roman Catholic religion has been extensively diffused among the Malays, who form the greater part of the pop. The Negritos, or Oriental negroes, are found mostly in the mountain regions of the four larger islands. Many Chinese have recently settled in the group. Public revenue is derived chiefly from duties on exports and imports, the tobacco monopoly, and a capitation tax. These islands were discovered by Magalhaens in 1521, and settled by the Spaniards in the reign of Philip II., after whom they were named.

PITCAIRN ISLAND, a solitary island in the Pacific Ocean, lat. 25° 3' 6" S., lon. 130° 8' 00" W., about 7 m. in circumference, elevated in the centre, with a peak at each extremity, greatest height 2500 feet; of volcanic origin. Soil fertile but porous, and rather defective in water; well wooded, and climate very healthy; thermometer ranging from 59° to 89° Fahr. Prevailing winds S.W. and E.S.E. It is surrounded by rocky shores, and has only one landing place at Bounty Bay. The cocoa nut, plantain, and banana trees, hibiscus or cloth tree, banyan tree, and orange flourish. The potato, sweet potato, yams, water melons, pumpkin, taro, sugar cane, ginger, turmeric, tobacco, tea-plant, and maize are cultivated. The island contained no indigenous quadrupeds, but goats, swine, and poultry have been imported. In 1790, Pitcairn was resorted to by the mutineers of the "Bounty," consisting of 9 British sailors, 6 native Tahitian men, and 12 women. In consequence of discords and massacres, at the end of 10 years there remained only one Englishman, Adams, the Tahitian females, and 19 children, their offspring. Under the superintendence of this man the children were educated and trained up to habits of industry and morality. In 1825 Captain Beechy found a most interesting and intelligent colony of 66 persons. In 1831, with the sanction of the British government, the colony, numbering 87 persons, was removed to Tahiti. After remaining five months there, they, at their own solicitation, were again reinstated in their native island. In 1851 the pop. amounted to 160. The whole population, 198 in number, removed to Norfolk Island in July 1856. The island was seen by Carteret in 1767, and named by him after one of his officers.

PLYMOUTH; a parl. and munic. bor., seaport town, and naval station of England, co. Devon, on the N. side of the bay called Plymouth Sound; aspect due S. It is one of "the Three Towns" (a local designation) which form virtually one great town. Stonehouse (q. v.) is W. of Plymouth. Devonport (q. v.) is still further to W., but rather N.W. of Stonehouse and Plymouth. Lat. of Mount Wise (between Stonehouse and Devonport) 50° 22' N.; lon. 4° 10' 2" W. P. of munic. and parl. bor. (1851) 52,221; (1861) 62,599. Railway communication, W. by Cornwall line; E., and to all England, by S. Devon line; N., vid Tavistock, to Launceston. It stands on very uneven ground, is irregularly laid out, lies in the midst of a very beautiful neighbourhood, and from all these reasons is one of the loveliest places in the south of England. In public buildings it is not rich. The chief are the group of the royal hotel, theatre, and athenæum; the public and Cottonian libraries; freemason's hall, market, post-office, mechanics' institute, guild-hall, borough prisons, custom house, exchange; the S. Devon Railway station; and several banks are of some pretensions. Street architecture is vastly improved of late years. Plymouth is well supplied with churches—established and non-established. The principal in point of architecture are St Andrew's, Charles', Christ church, Oxford Street, St Peters, new Congregational church, Tavistock Road, Roman Catholic church, Cecil Street. The Congregationalists have a handsome college, called "the Western College," in Tavistock Road. There are public baths, an hospital, dispensary, eye infirmary, orphan asylum, the usual charities of a large town, and a fine cemetery. The citadel, beside the barracks at Millbay, is the only military establishment of importance. Other establishments, military and naval, are at Devonport and Stonehouse. The citadel stands E. of the Hoe, & commands the Sound, the entrance to Sutton Pool and Catwater, and is open, except at stated intervals, to the public, who may walk on the ramparts, which afford one of the most delightful views in the neighbourhood; it contains houses for the Lieut.-Governor and other officers, barrack, hospital, chapel, magazine, and armory. The Hoe is a commanding eminence overlooking the Sound, and extends from Millbay to the citadel. Fine limestone cliffs descend from it to the sea. Carriage drives, walks, and seats, make it the promenade of Plymouth. Part of it has been planted with ornamental shrubs. On it are an obelisk and camera obscura. Manufs., sugar soap, Roman cement, lead, rope, canvass, ship-building, iron-founding, brewing, steam saw mills, lead works, British spirits, starch, pottery.—The port includes all harbours, creeks, etc., from Looe on the W., to the river Kalm on the E., but the pilotage district extends E. to Start Point. It has a trade with America, the Mediterranean, W. Indies, the Baltic, etc. There are consuls and vice-consuls for thirty nations. An extensive coasting trade. Steamers to Ireland, Liverpool, Penzance, Falmouth, Jersey, Portsmouth, Southampton, & London. It is an emigration port; & has extensive fisheries. Chief exports, coffee, lead ores, manganese, granite, limestone, clay, fish; imports, wine, fruit, corn, timber, and coal. There are large bonded warehouses. The chief docks are Sulton Pool, opening N. from Catwater, and on E. of Plymouth; the Great Western docks and Millbay on the W. Registered shipping 457, tonnage 46,807. The celebrities of the town are Sir F. Drake (born at Tavistock); Sir J. Hawkins, who helped to defeat the Armada; General Mudge, who directed the first Trig. survey of the kingdom; Kitto, Northcote, S. Prout, Haydon, and Sir Charles Eastlake. It sends two members to House of C. Reg. elec. (1864) 2913. Plymouth Sound is an inlet of the English Channel, about 3 miles wide at its entrance, bounded on three sides by elevated land, descending abruptly to the sea. On the W. are Cawsand Bay, new fortifications, Mount Edcumbe house and park; on the N. the Hoe; on the W. Mount Balten and Bovisand Bay; on Bovisand heights are fortifications. In the Sound are Drake's island, fortified, 3 ac. in extent, and the celebrated breakwater, with its lighthouse and beacon, which cost 1,500,000*l.*, and is 5100 feet long. Eleven miles beyond the breakwater is the Eddystone lighthouse. In fine weather boats can reach it, and in summer there are constant steamer excursions. Eastward from the Sound is the harbour of Catwater, leading to a lakelike expanse called the Laira, into which falls the "sylvan Plym." Across the Laira is an elegant cast-iron bridge; on the S. Chelson meadow, the groves of Saltram, and Saltram house, the seat of the Earl of Morley; on the N. a fine embankment and the railway.

PLYMOUTH, a seaport town, U. S., North America, Massachusetts, cap. co., on Cape Cod Bay, 37 m. S.S.E. Boston. P. 6272. PO (Padus and Eridanus), the largest river of Italy, in the north, irrigating, with its affluents, the entire plain of Piedmont and Lombardy, rises in Monte Viso, lat.  $44^{\circ} 38' N.$ , lon.  $7^{\circ} E.$ , flows at first N.E. to Turin, and thence mostly E. ward with a very tortuous course to the Adriatic, which it enters by several mouths between lat.  $44^{\circ} 48'$  and  $45^{\circ} 19' N.$ , the principal surnamed the Po della Maestra, della Tolla, di Goro, and di Volano. Total estimated length 390 m., of which about 280 m. are navigable for large barges and river steamers. Principal affluents, on left, the Dora Baltea, Sesia, Ticino, Lambro, Adda, Oglio, and Mincio; and on right, the Maira, Tanaro, Trebbia, Taro, Parma, Secchia, and Panaro. The Po is, in many parts of Lombardy, above the neighbouring plains; below Piacenza it is enclosed by embankments formed by its own deposits, and carefully kept up to prevent inundations from floods. Its ordinary width averages 1900 feet; its depth varies, according to the season, from 13 to 36 feet. Its current in the dry season is sluggish, but in spring and summer turbulent. Its rapid stream, numerous islands, and the many sand banks in its lower reaches greatly impede navigation; but it is highly useful in fertilizing the country, and abounds with sturgeons, salmon, and other fish.

POLA, Pietus Julia, the great port and arsenal of Austria, near the S. extremity of the peninsula of Istria, on the Bay of Porto delle Rose, 19 m. S.S.E. Rovigno. P. (1857) 11,000. It is enclosed by Venetian walls of the 16th century, and has a cathedral on the site of an ancient temple, 3 Greek churches, convents, and one of the best harbours on the Adriatic. It was an important city under the Romans, and its former magnificence is attested by a fine amphitheatre, several temples, and other remains.

POLAND (KINGDOM OF), (Polish Polska), the W. most prov. of European Russia, comprised between lat. 50° 4' and 55° 6' N., lon. 17° 40' and 24° 18' E., bounded E. and N.E. by the Russian govts. Vilna, Grodno, and Volhynia, from which it is separated by the Bug & Niemen rivers, S. by Galicia, W. by Prussian Silesia and Posen, and N. by East and West Prussia. Cap. Warsaw. It is divided into 5 govts. Area and pop. as follows:—

Governments.	Sq. miles.	Pop. 1860.
Warsaw, . . .	14,209	1,728,090
Lublin, . . .	11,653	967,205
Radom, . . .	9,662	946,737
Augustowo, . . .	7,265	636,531
Płotzk, . . .	6,766	561,903
Total,	49,555	4,840,466

According to religion, the pop. is thus divided:—Orthodox Greeks, 4856; Roman Catholics, 3,657,140; United Greeks, 215,967; Protestants, 274,707; Reformed, 4189; Mennonites, 1581; Moravians, 1451; Jews, 599,875.

Surface a vast plain, with a mean elevation of 300 to 500 feet above the Baltic, except in the S., where offsets of the Carpathian mountains rise to 1000 feet. It is well watered, and covered with extensive forests. Chief rivers, the Narew, Niemen, Vistula, Bug, and Warta, mostly navigable. There are many small lakes and marshes in the N.E. dists. Climate extreme, but healthy. Summer very hot, mean temperature 90°; winter excessively cold, temperature 10° below zero, snow-clad and frozen for five months in the year. Soil, sandy loam, resting mostly on granite; generally fertile. Agriculture has recently been much improved, and corn is exported. The chief crop for home consumption is rye. Buck-wheat, barley, and oats are also cultivated. The grain called Danzig white wheat is grown in the S. provs. Building-timber, hemp, flax, and tobacco, are important products. The cattle, sheep, and horses are of excellent breeds. The wild animals comprise the wolf, fox, martin, and polecat, and pike abound in the rivers. Chief mineral products, bog iron, copper, silver, lead, zinc, and coal; and the chief resources of the country are in agriculture and mining. The celebrated salt mines of ancient Poland are in Galicia. Nearly all the commerce is in the hands of the Jews, and the manufs. are mostly conducted by Germans; they comprise woollen cloths, cottons, hosiery, leather, paper, glass, clocks, musical instruments, and carriages. The cap., Warsaw, is connected by railways with St Petersburg, Moscow, Berlin, etc. In the 15th century, Poland extended from Russia on the E. to Germany on the W., and from the Baltic on the N. to Turkey on the S. Its area was larger than that of France, and its pop. is supposed to have amounted to 15,000,000. It was then divided into Great Poland, Little Poland, and Lithuania, which was incorporated with it in 1386. At the dismemberment of Poland in 1773, the three neighbouring powers, Russia, Prussia, and Austria, appropriated nearly one-third of the territory. Russia and Prussia, on the second partition in 1793, seized about half of the remaining portion, and the third partition in 1795 put an end to the republic. The last king of Poland, Stanislaus Augustus, died at St Petersburg in 1793. In 1807, Napoleon I., by the peace of Tilsit, united a great part of ancient Poland under the name of the Grand Duchy of Warsaw; this continued till 1815, when the new kingdom of Poland was formed of the greater part of the former grand duchy. This state, of which the emperor of Russia was king, had a constitution, a separate army, and the use of the national language. It lasted till 1830, when a revolution took place, which terminated in 1831 by the surrender of Warsaw to the Russians, and the dispersion of the Poles. In 1832, Poland was declared an integral part of the Russian empire, but with a separate administration, and under a governor general. A fresh attempt to restore its independence was made at Cracow in 1846, which ended in the subjugation of this last remnant of ancient Poland, and its annexation to Austria. In 1862, a revolution broke out under a secret "National Government;" and the insurrection, on account of a forced conscription, which broke out at Warsaw, 22d January 1863, has led to the serious measures now (1864) in force to compel subjection. [GALICIA—POSEN.]

POLANGEN, a frontier town of Russia, gov. Courland, on the Baltic, 42 m. W. Telsch, with a custom-house. P. 1500, mostly Jews. In 1831, the Poles were here defeated by the Russians.

POLAR REGIONS, the zones surrounding the North and South Poles, within the Arctic and Antarctic circles. The North Polar Regions comprise the N. portion of Scandinavia in Europe, the N. portion of Siberia in Asia, the N. coast of North America, Baffin Bay, the greater part of Greenland, the islands of Spitzbergen, and the Parry Islands, in the North Polar Sea. Within this region the temp. is, at Melville Isl., Jan. minus 31°·3, July 42°·5, Fahr. The first attempt to discover a N.W. passage through the Polar Sea was made by Cortereal, a Portuguese, about A.D. 1500. Willoughby sailed from the Thames in 1553. From that time till 1840, about 27 different sea and land expeditions were undertaken by British navigators, without success. In 1827, Captain Parry attained lat. 82° 40' N., lon. 19° 25' E., in boats. On 24th May 1845, Sir John Franklin and Captain Crozier left England in the "Erebus" and "Terror;" they were last seen on 26th July 1845, in lat. 74° 48' N., lon. 66° 13' W. Searching expeditions were sent out in 1848; but the first traces of the missing vessels were found at Cape Riley, in Barrow Strait, August 1850, in which year also Captain McClure solved the question of a N.W. passage, having coasted the N. shore of America from Behring Strait on the W. to the entrance of Melville Strait on the E. In 1854, remains of several seamen, with cooking utensils and other relics belonging to Franklin's expedition, were discovered on King William Land, W. of the Isthmus of Boothia, but the ships were not found. The South Polar Regions were penetrated by Cook to lat. 67° 30' S., lon. 39° E., and to lat. 71° 10' S., lon. 110° W.; and in 1841, Sir James Ross discovered Victoria Land, with the active volcano of Erebus, 12,000 feet above the frozen surface of the ocean, in lat. 78° S., lon. 170° E., within 15° of the South Pole.

POLYNESIA ("many islands"), a division of Oceania, extending, in its now restricted sense, from the tropic of Cancer on the N., to the parallel of 40° S., bounded W. by Micronesia and Melanesia, & E. by the meridian of 110° W. Among its principal groups it comprises the Sandwich, Navigator, Viti (or Fiji), Friendly, Cook, Society, Low, and Gambier islands, and the small isolated islands of Pitcairn, Ducie, and Easter, on its eastern extremity. These islands are all, more or less, of coral formation; the Low and Society islands presenting the regular atoll form, with circular reefs and lagoons. The Friendly and Sandwich Islands present fringed reefs, and have active volcanoes, with mountain peaks varying from 2000 to 13,000 ft. in height. In the lower coral islands the elevations do not exceed 500 ft. In the atoll islands, Darwin supposes that a depression of surface is taking place, and that the volcanic islands are either stationary or rising, in reference to the sea level. From the great predominance of ocean, the temperature of Polynesia is comparatively moderate, the climate delightful and salubrious. Mean annual temp. of Sandwich Isls. 77°; temperature of Society Isls. 70° to 80°, and rarely 90°, Fahr. The S.E. tropical wind generally prevails, but N.W. and S.W. winds are not uncommon. Thunder-storms and water-spouts are frequent. Hurricanes are rare; earthquakes slight, and not of frequent occurrence. The refreshing coolness of the trade winds, and a regular but not excessive supply of moisture, are favourable to a luxuriant vegetation. Soil in the valleys and in the river courses, a rich volcanic mould; on the mountains less fertile. Both vegetable and animal productions are limited as to number of species. The bread fruit, peculiar to this region, the cocoa, banana, plantain, banyan, sugar-cane, yam, and cotton-plant, paper mulberry, and a species of chestnut, are indigenous. Other trees and plants of tropical climates have been introduced, and flourish; and arrowroot, sweet potatoes, the common potato, and maize, are now reared abundantly. There are several timber trees, especially sandal-wood, a few spices, and ornamental trees, which, however, have little odour or decided colour. The isls. are all remarkably deficient in indigenous animals, thus indicating their isolated & comparatively recent origin. Vampire bats are found in some of the islands. Land birds are not numerous, owls, paroquets, pigeons, and some passerinæ forming the most remarkable; wild ducks and other water-fowls are more abundant. Turtles resort in great numbers to many localities, and fish are plentiful on the coasts. Several species of whales, the cachalot or sperm whale, Cape whale, hump-back, and black fish, are peculiar to the seas of the Pacific, and their capture has been the chief inducement for ships visiting these regions. Swine, dogs, and rats were till recently the only quadrupeds; but oxen have been introduced from New South Wales, and horses from South America; they thrive well. The natives of Polynesia are in general well-formed, tall, active, and intelligent. In 1767, Wallis, and subsequently Cook, explored and described the leading islands of Polynesia. Soon after this, missionaries began to settle in the region, and after many discouragements have at last succeeded in promoting Christianity and civilisation in most of the principal islands. [OCEANIA.] (For further information, see the individual groups and islands.)

POLZIN, a town of Prussian Pomerania, gov. and 31 m. S.W. Köslin, on the Wipperbach. P. 3328. It has a castle, mineral baths, and manufactures of woollen cloth, leather, and tobacco.

POMERANCE, a vill. of Central Italy, prov. Pisa, in the Maremma, 7 m. S. Volterra, and near the famous borax lagoons. P. 7774.

POMERANIA (Germ. Pommern), a marit. prov. of Prussia, mostly N. of lat. 53° N., and stretching along the Baltic from lon. 12° 30' to 18° E., having landward the provs. W. Prussia, Brandenburg, and Mecklenburg. Area 12,260 sq. m. P. (1861) 1,389,739, chiefly Protestants. Surface level, and in many parts marshy; principal rivers, the Oder, Persante, and Stolpe. Coasts low, sandy, defended by dykes, and bordered by numerous inlets. The island Rügen is comprised in the province. Soil not very fertile. Principal crops are wheat, barley, rye, oats, potatoes, flax, hemp, and tobacco. Agriculture and the rearing of cattle and poultry, ship-building, manufs. of linen and woollen stuffs, iron and glass wares, tanning, brewing, and distilling, are the principal branches of industry. The salmon and sturgeon fisheries are very productive, and smoked geese are important articles of trade. The prov. consists of the govts. Stettin, Stralsund, and Köslin.

POMEROON, a small river of British Guiana, enters the Atlantic 40 m. N.W. the estuary of the Essequibo. The tract on the coast around its mouth is of the highest fertility, and an acre has been known to yield 6000 lbs. of sugar, or 20,000 lbs. of farinaceous food in a year.

POMEROY, a pa. and vill. of Ireland, Ulster, co. Tyrone, 9 m. N.W. Dungannon. Ac. of pa. 15,951. P. (1861) 7170; do. of vill. 614.

POMFRET, a town of England. [PONTEFRAC.]

POMFRET, several townships of the U. S., North America.—I. New York, on Lake Erie, 12 m. N.E. Mayville. In it are the vills. Dtnkirk and Van Buren harbour.—II. Vermont, 49 m. S. Montpelier.—III. Connecticut, 40 m. E.N.E. Hartford.

POMIGLIANO D'ARCO, a town of South Italy, prov. and 8 m. N.E. Naples, circ. Casoria, with a monastery and an hospital. P. 8929.

POMMERAYE-SUR-LOIRE, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Maine-et-Loire, arr. Choleb, cant. St Florent-le-Vieil. P. 3729.

POMONA or MAINLAND, the largest of the Orkney Islands, and nearly in their centre. Shape very irregular; it is divided by Kirkwall Bay and Scapa Flow into two principal portions; the W. and largest, 16 m. in length, the E. part 9 m. in length, breadth varying to  $\frac{7}{8}$  m. Total area 150 sq. m. P. (1861) 17,193. Its W. coasts are precipitous, but it has several good harbours, and that of Stromness is the best in N. Scotland. Surface hilly; highest peak, the Ward hill of Orphir, 876 feet. Much of the heath and moor has lately been improved, and there are many tracts, several miles long, of fertile and well cultivated soil, with fresh water lakes, as the Stennes, Orphir, and Birsay. The island is subdivided into 13 parishes, and the only towns in Orkney, Kirkwall and Stromness, are respectively on its

E. and S.W. coasts. It contains, in the pa. of Stennes near its centre, the famous antiquities called "the Standing Stones of Stennes," and Maes Howe. The latter was excavated in 1861, and there are about 1000 Runes or Runic letters inscribed on the walls. [ORKNEY ISLANDS.]

POMORZANY, a town of Austrian Poland, Galicia, circ. Zloczow, 49 m. E.S.E. Lemberg, with Greek and Roman Catholic churches. P. 2900.

POMPEII, an ancient city of South Italy, 14 m. S.E. of Naples, at the S. base of Mount Vesuvius, by an eruption of which, 24th Aug. A.D. 79, it was buried with cinders, scoria, and lava, and so remained until it was rediscovered in 1748. About 2-5ths of its area have since been uncovered, whence it appears that it was enclosed by walls, entered by several gates, 6 of which are exposed, and had streets paved with lava, terraced houses of one storey, with shops and shop-signs still plainly visible, a chalcidicum or hall of justice, 2 theatres, temples, baths, street of the tombs, forum, prisons, and shops of the money-changers. The most important recent discoveries (June 1864) are an altar with remnants of a sacrifice, and a well about 90 ft. deep, with water sweet and fresh. The most valuable articles recovered are preserved in a museum at Naples.

PONTIFICAL STATES, or STATES OF THE CHURCH (Ital. Stati Pontificii), a country of Italy, comprising the central part of the peninsula, between lat. 41° 12' (Monte Circeo) and 42° 52' N., lon. 11° 27' and 13° 33' E.; bounded E. and S.E. by the Neapolitan provs., W. the Mediterranean, and N. by the provs. of Grosseto and Orvieto; cap. Rome. Since the new division of the kingdom of Italy in 1860, the Pontif. states have been limited to the delegations of Rome and the Comarca, Viterbo, Civita-Vecchia, Veiletri, & Frosinone. Total area 4555 sq. m. P. (1863) estim. at 700,000. Previous to 1860 the states comprised 17,494 sq. m., with upwards of 3,000,000 inhabitants. The territory is watered by the Tiber, which forms its N.E. boundary from N.E. to S.W., and crosses it nearly in the centre of the state; with its affluents. The principal lakes are those of Bolsena, Bracciano, and Albano; and the Pontine marshes. The territory is traversed by the lower ramifications of the Apennines; in the W. and S.W. the undulating plain called the Campagna di Roma, terminates in the Pontine marshes, noted for insalubrity. The climate is very mild, and the region of the Campagna of Rome would be a blooming garden, but for the fatal effects of the miasma, which forces the cultivators of the soil to seek refuge at night in the few scattered towns near its borders. The mean temperature of the year at Rome is 60°·4; warmest month 76°; coldest month 45° Fahr. The soil is generally fertile, but neglected; much of the surface affords excellent pasturage, which is occupied by great herds of buffaloes. Considerable flocks of sheep and many horses are reared. The chief crops are wheat, maize, pulse, hemp, wine, oil, and tobacco; and in the extreme S., sugar, indigo, and cotton are cultivated to a small extent, and cork trees are numerous. The wines are of inferior quality. Chestnuts form a considerable article of food. There are in the states mines of iron, lead, sulphur, alum, vitriol, and other volcanic products, but they are all nearly unproductive. Salt is made in the lagoons. Manufacturing industry is confined to articles for home consumpt; it comprises silks, leather, gloves, paper, musical strings, iron and glass wares, and a few cotton goods at Rome. Commerce limited, and decreasing. In 1858, 2130 vessels entered and 2067 cleared the port of Civita-Vecchia; in 1859 only 1861 entered and 1822 cleared the same port. Exports to Britain (1862) to the value of 9577.; imports, 48,674. The state is traversed by a railway from Rome S. towards Naples, and N.W. to Civita-Vecchia. Previous to the 7th century, the popes were only bishops of Rome; the basis of their temporal power was laid by the successive donations of Pepin, Charlemagne, and the emperor Henry III., but was consolidated only in the 16th century. At the French revolution of 1790, the popes lost their possession of Avignon and Venaissin; and in 1797 their dominion was further diminished by the legations ceded to the Cisalpine republic. In 1808 Napoleon I. divided the other states between the kingdom of Italy and the French empire, but in 1814 all these territories were restored to the Pope, except Avignon. In 1847, Pope Pius IX. established a constitutional parliament, consisting of 99 deputies popularly elected; but the revolution of 1848, which commenced by the assassination of Count Rossi, overturned these arrangements. The pope fled from Rome, but soon returned. In 1859 the Romagna detached itself from the Papal rule; and in 1860 the Marches and Umbria followed, and their territories were incorporated into the kingdom of Italy; and the whole of the States of the Church would ere now be annexed to the kingdom of Italy but for the presence of a strong French garrison at Rome. Revenue (1860) 2,893,545l.; expenditure, 3,006,872l.; deficit, 113,327l. Army, formed by enlistment in 1863, 9588 men. There are within the states, the fortresses of Civita-Vecchia, Porto d'Anzior, and the Castel Sant Angelo, in Rome.

PONTINE MARSHES, Paludi Pontine, a vast marshy tract of Italy, in the S. portion of the Campagna di Roma, extending along the coasts of the Mediterranean, from Cisterna on the N. to Terracina on the S., a distance of 25 m., by 5 to 10 m. broad, in which the waters from the mountains stagnate, on account of the level nature of the soil and the accumulation of sand on the coast. It is traversed by the road from Rome to Naples. From the time of the Roman republic, efforts have been made to reclaim this tract, but its drainage is not yet completed. The region is highly fertile, but extremely pestilential. Part of it is cultivated, and horses, cattle, and buffaloes find pasture.

Augusta, lat. 43° 39' N., lon. 70° 15' W. P. (1860) 26,341. It has a picturesque appearance, rising like an amphitheatre from the sea. Chief buildings, city hall, court house, and churches; atheneum, with a library of 10,000 volumes, and several banks; a natural history society and museum. The harbour is safe, spacious, and defended by two forts. At its entrance, on Portland head, is a lighthouse 70 feet high. In 1862, 632 vessels (tonnage 149 690) entered the port of Portland. Value of cargoes, 1,878,920. In the same year 759 vessels (tonnage 179,959) cleared. Value of cargoes, 1,003,138. The greater part of British imports to Portland are for transmission to Canada, during the winter season, by the Grand Trunk Railway. The principal commercial business is with the island of Cuba, exporting lumber and coeprage stock, and importing molasses and sugar. Total value of foreign exports from the port for the year 1862 amounted to 4,117,292 dollars. The principal branches of trade in Portland are coeprage, drugs, fish (over 300 sail of fishermen are fitted out at the port), flour, grain, hay, lumber, molasses, oil, pork and beef, potatoes, plaster, sugar, salt, tea and coffee, and tobacco. The Portland sugar company gives employment to an average of 196 men each month. The manufactures of Portland consist of 2 iron foundries, a sugar refinery, & steam flour mills, oil works, sailcloth, matches, tanneries, wool stapling, soap works, distilleries, steam bakeries, planing mills, etc., and it has an extensive coasting trade.—II. a township, New York, on Lake

PORTSKEWETT, a pa. of Engl., co. Monmouth,  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.W. Chepstow. Ac. 1779. P. 175.

PORTSLADE, a pa. of England, co. Sussex, 4 m. W.N.W. Brighton. Ac. 2006. P. 1103.

PORTSMOUTH, a parl. and munic. bor., fortified seaport town, pa., and the principal naval station of England, co. Hants, hund. Portsdown, at the S.W. extremity of Portsea Island, and at the entrance of Portsmouth harbour. Lat. of observatory 50° 48' N., lon. 1° 6' W. Ac. of bor., including also the town and pa. of Portsea, 5090. P. (1851) 72,096; (1861) 94,799. Ac. of pa. 172. P. (1851) 10,832; (1861) 10,833. There are three railway routes to London: via Brighton and S. Coast, 95 m.; via London & S.-Western, 90 m.; via Godalming and Guildford, much shorter. The London and South-Western line connects with Southampton, and thence to all parts of the W. of England.—The island of Portsea is bounded N. by the Portsbridge Canal (a muddy creek), E. by Langstone harbour, S. by Spithead, W. by Portsmouth harbour. At the S.W. corner of the island is an immense populous district. A stranger would call it all Portsmouth. It, however, comprises Portsmouth, Portsea, Landport, & Southsea. Portsea is joined to the mainland by the railway and an ordinary bridge. The island is 4 m. long, same wide. P. 72,126. Surface level, generally fertile; shores marshy from N.W. round to E. Besides the towns so nearly related to Portsmouth, it contains the hamlets Fratton, Milton, Copnor, Kingston, and Hilssea, the last in pa. of Wymering, the rest in pa. of Portsea.—

Portsmouth is not ancient. Its importance dates from the 16th century. There are three extensive barracks in the town, besides the artillery barracks at Point, the Cambridge, the Clarence (good paintings in the mess-room), the Colewort. Occasionally imposing military spectacles on the Grand Parade and the Governor's Green. The garrison chapel is a fragment of an hospital endowed A.D. 1238; the communion-plate was given by Queen Anne, the altar-cloth by Charles II., who was married here; the graveyard is full of "hero dust." St Thomas's Church (A.D. 1210) contains on vellum the illuminated entry of the marriage of Charles II. and the Infanta, also many monuments. St Mary's Church is a very commodious chapel of ease. In the locality there are 13 established places of worship and 20 unestablished. No. 10 High Street occupies the spot where the Duke of Buckingham was murdered by Felton. The custom-house, the Green-row ball-rooms, the post-office, bank of England, house of the Lieutenant-Governor, savings' bank, building of the philosophical society, market, town-hall, and soldiers' institute, are the principal public buildings. Portsmouth proper is comparatively small, and is completely fortified. On its W. side is Point, a quarter of great historical interest, formerly much frequented by sailors. It has one principal street, Broad Street. In Capstan Square used to stand the capstan to draw "a mightie chayne of yron" across the mouth of the harbour. The floating bridge to Gosport starts from Point. Point beach is a general landing-place from boats. Between Point and the rest of Portsmouth runs in the commercial harbour called the Camber. The town of Portsea is close to Portsmouth, due N. It is separated from it by only an inlet from the sea similar to the Camber. This is called the Mill Pond, and is crossed by the Mill Gate and the Mill Dam. Portsea is regularly fortified on the E., and is entered by two gates on that side, the one with a lion on the entablature, the other with a unicorn—hence called the Lion Gate and the Unicorn Gate. Is a new place. Within this century there were only a few houses on a common. The dockyard is within these fortifications, and occupies quite half the space within the walls. The new and old gun-wharves, the Hampshire library, sailors' home, atheneum, seamen and marines' orphan school, military hospital, the Anglesea barracks, convict prison, are the principal buildings. In the atheneum is to be seen the figure-head of Captain Cook's "Resolution." Churches and chapels all modern. The Hard, with its crowd of houses of entertainment, is now the resort of sailors. From the Hard projects the Royal Albert Pier.—The Dockyard occupies the N.W. of the ground enclosed by the Portsea fortifications, the oldest in the kingdom. These waters were the rendezvous of the navy of Alfred the Great. The grand improvements, however, commence with Charles II. Queen Anne made great additions, and there are continually fresh advances. The yard is 3500 feet from N. to S., and 2000 from E. to W. Ac. 118. Has a police (91 men) and military (77 men) guard. The principal buildings and places open to visitors are the mast-house; new boat-house; royal naval college; ropery—iron ropes are fast lessening the interest of this department, the scene of three great fires, 1760, 1770, 1776; the tarring-house; the anchor rack; the block manufactory, the most interesting of all the departments by virtue of the marvellous machinery invented by Sir Isambart Brunel; the docks, owe much to Sir Samuel Bentham, but some have had lately to be lengthened to accommodate the large ships recently introduced—vessels belonging to the port, sailing & steam (1862) 259, tonnage 15,381—customs rev. (1862) 21,884; the five building slips, cover 15 ac., and were redeemed from mud-land in 1765; the steam basin, where the machinery of ships is repaired, 900 feet by 400 feet, 26 feet of water at spring-tide, opened 1848 by the Queen, has opening into it 3 docks; the steam factory; foundry; smithery, containing one of Nasmyth's steam hammers; the sheers; the wells for supplying fresh water to ships; the dock church, in the cupola the ship's bell of the "Royal George;" officers' houses; port-admiral's house; statue of William III.; guard-house; pay-house; muster-house, where the 6000 men are registered as they come in & go out in the space of 10 minutes, without the least confusion, or use of pen & ink, & with a truth that admits of no dispute; the semaphore, for announcing, by electric telegraph from Greenwich, one o'clock to the yard, and to the ships about to go to foreign stations. It is probable that the Hard may some day be taken into the yard, and thus the dockyard and gunwharves be connected. Magnificent improvements have already (1864) been proposed by the department of public works, and still further are sketched out as possible. Should these be ultimately carried out, the yard will extend so as to include both Whale Island and Little Whale Island. The proposed improvements include a tidal basin, three times the size of the present steam basin, with three docks, 30 feet deep at low water spring-tides; a repairing basin, still larger, 30 feet deep at high water neap-tides, with 4 berths for ships and a hydraulic lift. These improvements would extend the yard to a line drawn due W. into the harbour from the gasworks on the present shore. A still greater addition is possible, though not actually proposed, which would extend the yard 100 feet further N. than Little Whale Island.—Landport is the N.E. suburb of Portsmouth; not very interesting. The birthplace of Charles Dickens. Here are the Royal Portsmouth Hospital, railway terminus, and the theatre. In this same direction are Kingston church, the new Portsea cemetery, and the Hulsea barracks.—Southsea, at the commencement of the century, was open fields and gardens. It is now the S.E. suburb of Portsmouth, and a fashionable watering-place. Fine armies have here many a time had their rendezvous before going to foreign service. There are rich historical associations. The castle and two adjacent batteries constitute the key of Portsmouth. From the esplanade are fine views of Spithead and the Isle of Wight. On the beach are the baths, and the following memorials:—Russian guns, the gibbet of Pelton, the "Victory's" anchor, the Crimean memorial (an obelisk), and the largest gun ever made in England.—Spithead, the great naval roadstead, lies between Southsea and the Isle of Wight. Here sank in action in 1544, the "Mary Rose;" the "Edgar," with 400 souls, was blown up in 1711; also the "Boyne" line-of-battle ship, in 1795. Here, too, sank the "Royal George," with 900 souls, without a moment's warning, in 1792. A red buoy marks the spot.—The Harbour, the finest in the world for ships of war, is an inlet of the English Channel, about 4 m. in length by 5 or 6 m. in greatest breadth. The entrance is only 220 yards across. It has these advantages,—cannot be attacked unless the enemy be master of the sea; is so protected that no wind to injure can blow from any point; can float first-class ships at low water; is spacious enough to contain the British navy; no bars or obstructions at the mouth; the entrance perfectly commanded by forts and batteries. The resources of the dockyard, proximity of immense stores and a large garrison, and the possibility of blocking the entrance, may be added. After passing the dockyard, in front of which the water is very deep, the harbour expands into a picturesque lake, or rather series of inlets. Pleasurable water excursions may be taken to Fareham and the ruins of Portchester castle. Several islands and islets. In the harbour Admiral Byng was shot in 1757. There lie here the "Victory" flag-ship (the spot where Nelson fell is marked by a brass plate); the "Excellent," gunnery ship; the royal yacht, and the "Fairy;" and the "Britannia," training ship (in which Prince Alfred was trained); all of which may be visited.—Gospport is on W. side of the harbour. Owes all its importance to proximity to Portsmouth. Its interest as a place is centred in the Royal Clarence victualling establishment and the Haslar hospital.—The Fortifications on the Portsmouth side of the harbour are the more important. Portsmouth is the most regular fortress in Great Britain. The town's own defences consist of segments of irregular many-sided polygons. There are 6 curtains with 5 bastions, and ravelins in advance of all the curtains, some with retired flanks. The promenade is made more pleasant by the planting of trees. The fortifications of Portsea, including the dockyard, are stronger, are segments of larger polygons, consist of 3 bastions and 2 demi-bastions, with outworks; and, like Portsmouth, the ditches can be kept full of water. These two lines strengthen each other. Portsea and Portsmouth, like 2 bastions of the same fort, mutually defend each other. But new defences of late years have become necessary. These are along a curve of about  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m., at the N. side of Portsea island, commanding the Portsbridge canal. The creek itself will be deepened to admit the passage of gunboats from Langstone harbour on the E. to Portsmouth harbour on the W. The position will be immensely strong, when the neighbouring hill (Portsmouth) on the mainland, 2000 yards away, is also armed with redoubts. An enemy trying to enter the island on the N. would be thus exposed to both vertical and horizontal fire. Cumberland Fort protects the mouth of Langstone harbour. On the Gosport side, the works are in the same style, but not so complete. Along a line of 4 m. the main features are Blockhouse Fort, Monkton Fort, Gomer Fort, and Fort Elson. Nelson's pillar is on Portsdown hill, from which the view is magnificent. From Portsmouth there is steam communication with Southampton, Isle of Wight, Plymouth, Falmouth, and Dublin. Imports cattle and sheep from W. of England, corn and provisions from Ireland, timber & wines from the continent, & coals. Sends 2 mems. to H. of C., and is the polling-place for the S. division of the county. Reg. elect. (1864) 4583.

PORTSMOUTH, two seaport towns and several minor places, U. S., North America.—I. New Hampshire, Rockingham co., of which it is the largest town, and the only seaport, on a peninsula on rt. b. of the Piscataqua, 3 m. from the Atlantic, 56 m. N.N.E. Boston. Lat. of lighthouse 43° 3' N.; lon. 7° 43' W. P. (1860) 9335. It has numerous churches, an athenæum with a library of 5000 vols., museums, a state lunatic asylum, courthouse, gaol, market-houses, banks, and almshouses. The harbour is safe and deep, defended by several forts; and on Navy Island is a large U. S. navy yard. Portsmouth has woollen manufs., tanneries, distilleries, ship-building, and a considerable trade. In 1862, 39 British and American vessels (tonnage 4855) entered, and 38 (tonnage 3081) cleared the port. Many of its inhabitants are engaged in the cod fishery. Registered shipping (1860) 14,979 tons.—II. Virginia, cap. co. Norfolk, at the mouth of the Elizabeth river in Chesapeake Bay, opposite Norfolk, and 85 m. S.E. Richmond. P. 9502. It has a court-house, masonic hall, theatre, military academy; and in its suburb, Gosport, a U. S. navy yard, which employs 1000 men; dry dock, and a naval hospital. Vessels of the largest size come up to its wharves. It is connected by railway with Roanoke and Charleston.—III. a town, Ohio, cap. co., on the Scioto and Ohio rivers, 86 m. S. Columbus. It has nail and iron factories.—IV. Rhode Island, on the N. port of the island, 7 m. N.W. Newport. It has valuable fisheries, a coasting trade, and mines of plumbago and coal.

PORTSOX, a burgh of barony and seaport town of Scotland, co. Banff, pa. Fordyce, on the W. side of the estuary of the Durn, 5 m. E. Cullen. P. 1908. It has a harbour, and a brisk trade in corn, salted herrings, flax, and woollen stuffs.

PORT-STE-MARIE, a comm. and town of France, dep. Lot-et-Garonne, on the Garonne, arr. Agen, cap. cant. P. 2856.

PORT STEPHENS, an inlet of New S. Wales, co. Gloucester, 18 m. N.E. Port Hunter. Lat. of Baroinea point 32° 45' S.; lon. 151° 18' E. It extends 15 m. inland; breadth 5 m.; and receives the Keriah river. On its N. bank is Carrington, cap. of the co.

PORT-STEWART, a maritime town of Ireland, Ulster, co. Londonderry, 4 m. N.N.W. Coleraine. P. 542. It is frequented as a watering place.

PORT ST PÈRE, a comm. and market town of France, dep. Loire-Inférieure, 17 m. S.E. Faimbœuf. P. 1897.

PORT-SUR-SAÔNE, a comm. and town of France, dep. Haute-Saône, cap. cant., on the Saône, 7 m. N.W. Vesoul. P. 1944.

PORTUAL, a maritime vill. of W. Africa, Senegambia, on the Atlantic, 35 m. S.E. Cape Verd. It exports hides, ivory, and gold dust.

PORTUGAL, Lusitania, a country and kingdom of S.W. Europe, forming the W. portion of the Iberian peninsula, and situated between lat. 36° 57' and 42° 8' N., lon. 6° 15' and 9° 32' W., bounded E. and N. by Spain, S. and W. by the Atlantic; cap. Lisbon. Length, N. to S., 368 m.; breadth 80 to 140 m. Area and pop. of Portugal and its colonial possessions as follow:—(see table.) The surface has a general inclination from N.E. to S.W. It is traversed by several mountain ranges, chiefly prolongations of the Spanish mountains.—I. the Serra Estrella, a continuation of the Serra de Gata; highest point 7524 feet in elevation.—II. the Serra de Monchique, a continuation of the Sierra Morena. N. and S. of these extend fine plains, watered by the Minho, the Douro, Tagus, and Guadiana, which enter the country from Spain, and with the Mondego and the Sado, rising in Portugal, all flow W. to the Atlantic. The largest plain is that of Alemtejo, S. of the Tagus. There are no lakes in Portugal, but several marshes. The coast line, 500 m. in extent, presents many fine harbours. The climate, in general healthy, is especially so in the elevated coast regions, and on the plateaux of the interior; the exceptions are the vicinity of the salt marshes, and parts of the banks of the Tagus and Mondego. Mean temp. of year at Coimbra 62°; Lisbon

61°-3 Fahr. Rain is very abundant on the W. coast. Near Santarem, in the spring of 1864, the country was flooded, many villages inundated, and a great amount of property destroyed. Snow is rare in the S., but falls heavily on the mountains of the N. provs.; it lies permanently on Mount Gaviarra (prov. Minho), 7865 feet above the sea. Earthquakes occur frequently in the S., and in the vicinity of Lisbon. The soil is rich, husbandry is backward, and there are few passable roads. Wheat, barley, oats, flax, and hemp are cultivated in the elevated tracts; rice in the lowlands; olives, oranges, lemons, citrons, figs, and almonds in the central and S. provs.; and at the S. extremity, the American aloe, the date, and other tropical plants. The cultivation of the vine is the most important branch of industry; and the produce of the vineyards, on the upper Douro, termed port, is the staple export. There are extensive forests of oak in the N., chestnut in the centre, and the sea pine, kermes, and cork in the S. The olive oil is of inferior quality. Mules and asses are the chief beasts of burden; oxen are used for draught in the provs. Cattle and sheep are reared in considerable numbers, but the wool is of inferior quality. Goats and swine are numerous; and fish abound in the rivers and on the coasts. The wild animals comprise the wolf, boar, goat, and deer. Among birds are the partridge, and the eagle in the mountains. Iron, marble, and salt are the chief mineral products. Numerous mines were worked in ancient times, as shown by the remains of shafts, etc., now neglected. Copper, lead, tin, and coal exist in many places, but coal is worked only at Buarcos and at Cape Mondego. There are numerous salt marshes on the coast, and upwards of 200 mineral springs. The manufactures are very limited, chiefly arms and porcelain at Lisbon, woollens at Portalegre and Fundão, cotton spinning at Thomar, jewellery and trinkets at Lisbon and Oporto, glass at Marinha-Grande, paper at Alemquer, silks at Bragança and at Campo-Grande, near Lisbon. Thirty years since there was only one spinning-mill in Portugal, now (1864) the spinning-mills supply the home market with 2,000,000 kilogs. of yarn annually. Exports (1862) wine, pyrites, cattle, cork, wool, oranges and lemons, cotton, oils, onions, ivory, potatoes, copper, etc., to the value of 2,040,396*l*. Imports cottons, iron, woollens, butter, spirits, rice, silk, brimstone, tea, coals, tobacco, sugar, hardwares, etc., to the value of 1,887,065*l*. The Portuguese are a handsome people, with regular features, olive complexions, and dark eyes. The government is a constitutional and hereditary monarchy, and the religion of the state Roman Catholic, but all other forms of worship are tolerated. The number of Protestants in the country is only 500, mostly foreigners. The church is governed by a patriarch, 2 archbishops, and 14 bishops. The inquisition was abolished in 1821, and the conventual establishments were suppressed in 1834; the revenues have been applied to state purposes. Educational establishments are very defective, except in the cap., which contains extensive libraries, an observatory, & several literary & scientific institutions. The only university is that of Coimbra, which has 46 professors, and 800 to 900 students; there is a military college at Mafra. A law of 1854 enforces the sending of children to school, but it is not attended to. Within ten years, 1854 to 1864, government has founded 588 new missionary schools. In 1862 it was estimated that only one in 36 of the pop. was at school. In the extinct monastery of Belem 900 orphan and abandoned children are maintained. Portugal, which forms the greater part of the ancient Lusitania, was successively conquered by the Romans in the 2d century B.C., by the Visigoths in the 6th century, by the Arabs in 712 and 715, and afterwards by the Christians of Spain. In 1139, Alphonse Henriquez, son of Henry of Burgundy, having gained a victory over the Moors at Ourique, was proclaimed the first king of Portugal. In 1348, one-half of the population died of the plague. The dynasty of Burgundy governed the country till 1380. About this period the country rose to the highest point of political and commercial splendour. The Portuguese discovered the greater part of the W. and S. coasts of Africa, and the maritime route to India, and founded numerous colonies; they also took possession of Brazil, and retained it till 1826, when it finally separated itself. On the invasion of the French in 1807, the royal family went to Brazil. From 1827 to 1833, the throne was usurped by Don Miguel; in 1836 several changes were introduced, and the present constitution was established. In 1854 railways were projected, and have since been extended from Lisbon on a centre to 227 m. Rev. (1862-3) 3,330,000*l*. Exports 3,456,328*l*. Army of the kingdom (1862), 16,640 men. Navy, 34 ships, with 294 guns, and 2832 sailors and marines. The colonial possessions of Portugal, once so vast and flourishing, are now greatly reduced, and so late as 1860 some islands in the Eastern Archipelago were sold to the Netherlands. [See TABLE.] The troops in the colonies (1861) amounted to 8236, infantry and artillery, with a reserve of 9572 men.

PORTUGALETE, a town and river port of Spain, prov. Biscay, 7 m. N.N.W. Bilbao, on the Nervion, near its entrance into the Mediterranean. P. 1200. It has several batteries for the defence of the port, which belongs to Bilbao, sea-borne vessels not being able to go higher up the river.

PORTUGUESA, a river of S. America; Venezuela, after a S.S.E. course of at least 200 m., joins the Apure at San Fernando. Principal affs. are the Codjeda, Guanarito, and Guanapari.

PORTUMNA, a mkt. town of Ireland, Connaught, co. Galway, 17 m. E.S.E. Loughrea. P. 1160. It has a parish church, and a retail trade.

PORT VALLAIS, Portus Vallesia, a vill. of Switzerland, cant. Valais, on a flat, formed by deposits of the Rhone, 1½ m. from the Lake of Geneva, though in the time of the Romans it stood on the margin of the lake. Near it the Helvetians under Divico defeated the Roman forces under Lucius Cassius, B.C. 107. P. 602.

PORT VENDRES, Portus Veneris, a comm. and seaport town of France, dep. E. Pyrénées, on the Mediterranean, with a harbour, formed by a projecting tongue of land, 17 m. S.E. Perpignan. P. 1832. Its port is protected by several forts.

PORT WILLIAM, a vill. and seaport of Scotland, co. and 9 m. S.W. Wigtown, on the E. coast of Luce Bay. P. 884. It has a convenient harbour, and trade in agricultural produce.

POSADAŞ, a town of Spain, prov. and 19 m. W.S.W. Cordova, on the Guadalquivir. P. 3736.

POSCEGA, a town, Austrian Slavonia, cap. co., on rt. b. of the Orlyava, 16 m. E.N.E. Neu-Grasdiska. P. 6850. It was taken from the Turks in 1787.

POSCHAEV (NOVOI), a town of Russian Poland, gov. Volhynia, 9 m. S.W. Kremenetz. P. 1800.

POSCHEGON or POSCHECHONJE, a town of Russia, gov. and 69 m. N.W. Jaroslavl, cap. dist. P. 3030. It has extensive salt magazines.

POSCHIAVO (Germ. Fuschlav), a town, Switzerland, cant. Grisons, on the Italian side of the Alps, 16 m. S.W. Bormio (Valtellina). It has Roman Catholic & Protestant churches, & a transit trade across Mount Bernina. P. 2741.—The Lake of Poschiavo, on S.E., is 3 m. long, and 1½ m. broad.

POSEN (GRAND DUCHY OF), or PRUSSIAN POLAND, a prov. of Prussia, mostly between lat. 51° 30' and 53° 30' N., lon. 15° 30' and 19° E., having E. Russian Poland, S. Silesia, W. Brandenburg, and N. Prussia. Area 11,401 sq. m. P. (1861) 1,485,550, mostly Poles, of whom two-thirds are Roman Catholics and the rest Protestants and Jews. Surface mostly level, and in some parts marshy. Principal rivers, the Vistula, Netze, Warta, and Proсна, which last forms the E. frontier. It contains numerous small lakes. Climate healthy, but cold. The inhabitants are mostly engaged in agriculture and cattle-rearing. Flax, hemp, tobacco, hops, wool, bog-iron, and nitre are among the chief products. Manufs. woollen cloth, leather, and brandy. It comprises the two regencies of Posen and Bromberg. Chief towns, Posen, the cap., Bromberg, Lissa, etc.

POSEN (Polish Poznan), a fortified city of Prussia, cap. Grand Duchy Posen, on the Warta and Lowna, and at the termination of the railway from Stettin, 100 miles E. Frankfort-on-the-Oder. P. (1861) civil 43,879, military 7353. The city is walled, and entered by four gates, and has a citadel on an adjacent height. It has a cathedral, twenty-three Roman Catholic and two Protestant churches, & manufactories of tobacco and leather. On the opposite side of the Warta is the suburb of Wallischei, with an ancient cathedral. Posen was cap. of ancient Poland. In 1807 it was cap. dep. in the Grand Duchy of Warsaw.

POSEY, a township of the U. S., N. America, Indiana, co. Clay.—II. a co. in S.W. of Indiana. Area 408 sq. m. P. (1860) 16,167.

POSTLIPPO (vulg. Pausilippo), a hill of S. Italy, immediately adjoining the city of Naples, on the W., and through which a tunnel, the "Grotto of Posilippo," 2316 feet in length, 22 do. in breadth, 89 do. in height, and of very remote antiquity, forms a part of the road from Naples to Pozzuoli.

POßING, a town of N.W. Hungary, co. and 12 m. N.E. Presburg, on an affl. of the Danube. P. 4950. It has celebrated mineral baths.

POSTLINGFORD, a pa. of England, co. Suffolk, 2 m. N. Clare. Ac. 2438. P. 350.

POSSAGNO, a vill. of Northern Italy, Venetia, prov. and 22 m. N.W. Treviso. P. 2600. It is the birthplace of Canova, and has a splendid temple built by him.

POßSNECK, a walled town of Central Germany, Saxe-Meiningen, principality and 11 m. E.N.E. Saalfeld, on the Kerschau. P. 3821. It has manufs. of woollen cloth, leather, and porcelain.

POSSONNIÈRE, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Maine-et-Loire, arr. Angers, on rail. from Angers to Nantes, cant. St Georges-sur-Loire. P. 1378.

POSTA (LA), a vill. of S. Italy, prov. Aquila, on the shore of a beautiful lake of the same name, and of great clearness and depth. P. 1957.

POSTELBERG, a town of Bohemia, circ. and 8 m. N.N.E. Saatz, on l. b. of the Eger. P. 988.

POSTIGLIONE, a town of South Italy, prov. and 27 m. S.E. Salerno. P. 3047. It has an old castle, and manufs. of coarse woollen cloths.

POSTLING, a pa. of England, co. Kent, 3 m. N.N.W. Hythe. Ac. 1560. P. 139.

POSTWICK, a pa. of England, co. Norfolk, 4 m. E.S.E. Norwich. Ac. 1426. P. 291.

POTENZA, a fortified town of South Italy, cap. prov. of same name, on the E. declivity of the Apennines, 57 m. E.S.E. Salerno. P. (1861) 15,777. It has a cathedral, 6 convents, a royal college, episcopal seminary, 2 hospitals; manufs. of serge, woollen cloth, coarse cotton goods, leather, and earthenware. It suffered severely from the earthquake of December 16, 1857.

POTENZA, a river of Central Italy, rises in Monte Pennino, prov. Perugia, flows E.N.E. about 50 m., and enters the Adriatic at Porto Recanati, 2½ m. E.S.E. Loreto.

POTENZA, a prov. of Italy. [BASILICATA.]
POTHÈRIE, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Maine-et-Loire, 5 m. N. Condé. P. 2035.

In the Neustadt, the new town-house, military hospital, and several churches with fine paintings.—IV. In the Kleinseite, the palace of Wallenstein, the church of St Nicholas, church of St Thomas, and the artillery barracks.—V. In the Hradschin, the former palace of the Bohemian kings, a massive and imposing structure; the cathedral church of St Vitus, a richly decorated Gothic building, containing the tomb of St John of Nepomuk, with a silver shrine weighing 37 cwt., and those of many Bohemian kings.—VI. In Wissehrad the church of St Peter and St Paul, and the royal armoury. In the vill. Smichow is a noble botanic garden. The university, founded by Charles IV. in 1348, is remarkable as the first school of learning established in Germany. The Strahow monastery has a library of 50,000 vols. There are also three gymnasia, a normal school, a school for the blind, cabinets of natural history, several large public libraries, and many public hospitals. Manufs. comprise printed cottons, linens, silks, and woollens. It is the centre of the commerce of Bohemia, its transit trade being facilitated by the navigation of the Moldau and by railways, which connect it with Olmütz and Vienna on the E. and S., and with Pilsen on the S.W. Prague was taken by the French in 1741, and by the Prussians in 1744; it was bombarred, and was the scene of atrocious cruelties, on 16th June 1848. It is the birthplace of Jerome of Prague.

PRUSSIA (KINGDOM OR) OR PRUSSIAN STATES (Germ. Königreich von Preussen), a kingdom of Central Europe, situated between lat. 49° 7' and 55° 52' N., lon. 6° and 22° 50' E., comprising a great part of N. Germany, besides the former duchy of Prussia, the prov. Posen, and a part of Poland; cap. Berlin. Prussia is composed of two distinct and very unequal portions, separated by Brunswick, Hessen, Waldeck, Lippe, and Nassau, for 30 m. at nearest point. The E. most and largest portion, or Prussia E. of the Weser, is bounded E. by Russia; S. by Austria, Saxony, and Electoral Hessen; W. by Brunswick, Hanover, and Mecklenburg; and N. by the Baltic Sea. The W. portion, or Rhenish Prussia (Rhein Preussen), is bounded E. by Hessen-Darmstadt, Nassau, Electoral Hessen, Waldeck, Brunswick, Lippe, and part of Hanover; S. by France, Rhenish Bavaria, and parts of Oldenburg and Hamburg; W. by the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxemburg; and N. by Hanover. Besides these great portions, Prussia possesses since 1850 the principality of Hohenzollern, and the territory of the Jahde, purchased from Oldenburg in 1854. The distance between the E. and W. extremities of Prussia is 715 m.; the E. portion is 550 m. long, E. to W., and 185 to 435 m. broad, N. to S.; and the W. portion 250 m. in length, N. to S., and 45 to 120 m. in breadth, E. to W. Divisions, area, and pop. as follows:—

Provinces.	Sq. m.	Pop. (1861.)

Military (abroad), . . . . .	---	14,720
Total, . . . . .	108,519	18,491,220

Of the total population 18,222,848 are civilians, and 268,372 military.

The surface of Prussia is in general flat, except in the prov. Saxony, where it is traversed by parts of the Harz mountains and the Thüringerwald; and in the S. between Silesia and Bohemia, by the Riesen Gebirge, or Giant mountains. The E. provs. belong to the basin of the Baltic, in which the chief rivers are, the Memel or Niemen, the Pregel, Vistula, and Oder, with its affluent the Warta. The W. provs. belong to the basin of the North Sea, and are watered by the Elbe, and its affls. the Saale, Havel, and Spree, the Weser, Ems, and Rhine, with its affls. the Moselle and Lippe. The canal of Bromberg connects the Vistula with the Warta; the canal of Finow unites the Oder with the Havel, an affl. of the Elbe; and the canal of Frederick William connects the Oder with the Spree. The Rhine, which is here navigable for large vessels, and is celebrated for its picturesque beauty, separates Rhenish Prussia into two nearly equal parts, each of which has an elevated table-land and a low plain; the chief part of the table-land lies N. of the Moselle, on l. b. of the Rhine, and is called the Eifel and the Hohe Veen, 1600 feet in elevation. This region is of basaltic formation, intermixed with tracts of lava; it presents evident traces of volcanic action. On the rt. b. of the Rhine, the table-land forms the elevated ridge of the Taunus, about 2000 feet; culminating point the Feldberg, 2850 feet above the sea; this table-land extends N. between the rivers Lahn & Sieg, where it is called the Westerwald, mean elevation 1600 feet. The only coast line of Prussia is that of the Baltic, 520 m. in length, and covered with extensive lagoons, the principal of which are the Curische-Haff at the mouth of the Niemen, the Frische-Haff at the mouths of the Vistula and Pregel, and the Stettiner-Haff at the mouth of the Oder. The level E. provs. are remarkable for the great number of lakes they contain; of these, Lake Spirding has an area of 20 sq. m., and Lake Mauer is nearly as large. The islands of Prussia are Rügen, Usedom, and Wollin, in the Baltic. Climate, generally temperate and salubrious, is humid and cold in the N. Mean temp. of year in E. Prussia (Prussia proper), lat. 50° 30', at an elevation of 40 feet, 48°; Central Prussia, lat. 52° 30', elevation 210 feet, 48°; Rhenish Prussia, lat. 51°, elevation 250 feet, 49°·5, Fahr. Mean annual rainfall in the W. provs., 20 inches, decreasing towards the E. Prevailing winds W., and cold often severe. The soil is fertile in many places, and grain is exported to a considerable extent. The most fertile dists. occur along the course of the Niemen and Vistula, on l. b. of the Oder, and on the Elbe, where the vicinity of Magdeburg is so fertile, that it is called the granary of Berlin. The most barren region is the Tuchler Heide, in the prov. W. Prussia, 50 m. long and 25 m. broad, which is covered with sand and stunted shrubs. The cap. is situated in an extensive sandy plain, which is interspersed with fertile tracts, and covered in some places with fine forests. Agriculture, which forms the chief source of national wealth, is carefully conducted; the principal crops are wheat, rye, oats, barley, flax, hemp, hops, sugar, beet-root, and tobacco; fruit culture has been widely extended of late years, and the forests furnish excellent timber. The vine is cultivated in Rhenish Prussia, on the banks of the Moselle and Rhine, and to a small extent in detached districts of Central and E. Prussia. The pasturage is excellent; sheep, cattle, and horses, of improved breeds, are extensively reared. In 1861, there were in Prussia 1,600,000 horses, 8000 asses and mules, 5,500,000 oxen, 16,400,000 sheep, 670,000 goats, 2,600,000 swine; wool is an important product. Goats in the mountain dists. of Silesia and Saxony; swine in Pomerania, Saxony, and Westphalia, which last is celebrated for its hams; wild boars, stags, fallow deer, hares, and rabbits, are plentiful, as are wolves and foxes; bears are seldom met with. The lynx, beaver, badger, otter, weasel, and marten, are common, but the ermine is rare. Wild geese are extremely numerous. Bees are extensively reared, and the breeding of the silk-worm has recently made great progress. The fisheries on the shores of the Baltic and in the lakes and rivers are important. Mines of iron, coal, copper, lead, zinc, cobalt, alum, and salt, are worked in the provs. of Rhenish Prussia and Westphalia, and in the Harz mountains; and mining industry is on the increase. The mountains contain marble and some of the precious stones, & there are many mineral springs. Amber (a government monopoly) is fished from the sea, or found on the shores of the Baltic. The manufactures of Prussia are very extensive, and increasing in value; the chief branches are linens, in all the provs.; woollen cloths, and cottons, in Rhenish Prussia, at Barmen, Crefeld, and Elberfeld, silk stuffs, iron founding, porcelain & glass making, carriage building, saddlery, chemical products, beet-root sugar making, sugar refining, and brewing. Commerce is very active in Prussia, & has been greatly developed by the establishment of the commercial customs union (Zollverein), by the many navigable rivers, excellent roads, and canals; and by railways, of which, upwards of 3000 miles were open in 1864; there are upwards of 3500 miles of rivers and nearly 500 miles of canal navigation; connected with these are lines of telegraph extending to the chief points on the frontier; and the postal arrangements are excellent and complete. Exports (1862) grains, timber, flax, seed, zinc, rags, oil, oil-cake, wool, spruce beer, pork, etc., to the value of 7,833,927*l.* Imports cotton, tea, herrings, iron, coffee, oils, coals, woollens, linens, machinery, copper, hides, etc., to the value of 3,998,663*l.* The population of Prussia comprises two principal races.—I. the Germans, who form the majority,—and II. the Slavonians in the grand duchy of Posen, in Prussia Proper, and in a part of Upper Silesia, besides about 80,000 Celts (French) in the Rhenish provinces, and 250,000 Jews. The government is a hereditary monarchy, & the present constitution dates from 1850, but is modified by more recent acts. The executive government is carried on under the king by an irresponsible Staatsrath, or council of state, and a council of ministers. The king is a member of the Zollverein for the German portion of his states, i. e., all except Prussia & Posen. Each prov. has a governor and a military commandant, a court of justice, and a consistory, all appointed by the king. Calvinism is the religion of the royal family, and of the majority of the people, but all sects enjoy the same privileges. In 1861 the pop. comprised—Protestants, 11,298,294; Roman Catholics, 6,906,988; Menonites, 13,716; of other sects, 16,233; Jews, 254,785; Greek Catholics, 1204. Public instruction is more developed in Prussia than in any other country in Europe; attendance at school is enforced by law. In 1861, there were 23,859 Protestant and 9895 Roman Catholic elementary schools, the children in attendance between the ages of 6 and 14 amounted to 3,500,000; and 141 Gymnasias, or higher schools, with 39,737 pupils and 1823 professors and teachers. The six universities of Prussia, Berlin, Bonn, Breslau, Halle, Greifswald, and Königsberg, with the Roman Catholic high school at Münster, had in 1862 5421 matriculated students. In the middle of the 18th century, the Teutonic knights subjugated E. Prussia, and converted the people to Christianity. Albert of Brandenburg, grand master of the order, appropriated the country in 1525; his family augmented these possessions; and Frederick, one of his descendants, obtained the title of King in 1701. By the treaty of Utrecht, William I. obtained a portion of the duchy of Gelders, he acquired the duchy of Limburg, and took from Sweden the greater part of Pomerania. Frederick II. (the Great) conquered Silesia, which was abandoned by Austria in 1742; this king and his successor took part in the dismemberment of Poland, and thus acquired the grand duchy of Posen. By the treaty of Tilsit, Prussia was deprived of all her possessions between the Rhine and the Elbe, and the greater part of Prussian Poland; but in 1815, after the fall of Napoleon I., the Congress of Vienna restored all these estates, except a part of Poland, and at the same time granted to Prussia a part of Saxony, and the duchy of the Lower Rhine. There are 27 fortresses in Prussia, of which 5 are of the first class. They are garrisoned by 7317 men in time of peace, and 135,000 during war. Military service for 2 years is imperative on all the male pop., who subsequently form the Landwehr, or militia, for 9 years more. On leaving they are enrolled in the Landsturm, which is called out for active service within the frontiers of the country only, in case of invasion. Total strength of the army (1863) 214,482 men. In 1859 the standing army was 161,000 men. In the same year the royal navy was composed of 6 screw and 2 paddle steamships carrying 178 guns; 3 sailing frigates, 113 guns; 3 brigs, 38 guns; 1 transport, 6 guns; & 22 gunboats, carrying 62 guns; in all, 37 vessels with 398 guns. Pub. rev. (1863) 137,497,302 thalers, nearly 20,000,000*l.* Expenditure 133,361,469 thalers. Public debt, 269,997,187 thalers.

PUNJAB, an extensive province of British India, embracing the country traversed by the "five great waters," of which the Indus is the most westerly, and the Sutlej the most easterly. The rivers are the Indus, Jhylum, Chenab, Ravee, & Sutlej. The outline of the district is a sector of a circle, the centre of which, is at the confluence of the Punjab and Indus. Lat. 28° 55' N.; lon. 70° 31' E. Its length from E. to W. 550 m., breadth N. to S. 420 m. Area 73,534 sq. m. P. 10,435,710. No two regions can differ more in physical character than the N. and S. part of this territory. Within the N.E. angle is comprehended the Alpine region of Kangra; the N.W. angle comprizes the Eusofzye country, Peshawur, Kohat, Huzara, and the country thence extending southward to the Salt range, the entire tract being intersected by mountain ranges, and consisting of a series of valleys encircled by hills. The remainder includes the plain country of the Punjab, stretching S.W. with a regularity rarely broken by any eminence of importance. This plain is divided into 5 Doabs, by the intersections of its rivers:—1st, Julinder, between the Sutlej and Beas; 2d, Barea, between the Beas & Ghara, on the E., and the Ravee on the W.; 3d, Rechna, between the Ravee and the Chenaub; 4th, Jetch, between the Chenaub and the Jhelum; 5th, Sind Sagur, between the Jhelum, Chenaub, and Punjnad, and the Indus; of these the latter is the most extensive, but that of Barea by far the most populous and important, containing the 3 cities, Lahore, Amritsir, and Mooltan. From the Salt range great quantities of salt, alum, sulphur, nitre, and coal are obtained. Iron is raised in Mundi, and gold is found in the sands of the streams of the Chenaub, Huroo, and Swan. The soil in general is sandy and barren, but with many fertile spots intermixed, and there are abundant means of irrigation. Summer temperature of the plains excessively hot and dry; winter cool, with frost at intervals. Temperature at Lahore in June, in the shade, 112° Fahr. The vegetation of the Punjab resembles that of Eastern India, trees being very scarce. The sugarcane, palm, orange, and other fruit-trees flourish, and all kinds of grain crops are raised, as well as opium, indigo, & tobacco. The tea plant flourishes well here; product (1862) 13,589 lbs. Camels, buffaloes, and horses are reared in the extensive pasture lands, but rural industry is by no means generally followed. Silk and cotton fabrics, carpets, shawls, and warlike arms are manufactured in the towns. A considerable transit trade is carried on in goods imported from eastern India and carried westward; bullion, silk, drugs, grain, ghee, hides, wool, cotton, carpets, shawls, tobacco, salt, horses, and dyes being received in return. The population consists of various races, being composed of Jats, Gujurs, Rajpoots, and Patans, also a few Eusofzye Afghans; the most prominent are the Jats, who formed the core of the Sikh army and commonwealth, occupying the centre of the Barea Doab, and the vicinity of Amritsir about Mooltan; they are held in little repute, their importance there being merely agricultural. The Gujurs, said to be the aborigines of Huzara, are an industrious class, giving much attention to agriculture. The localities of the Patans are Mooltan and Kussoor. From Beas to Chenaub the Hindoo race predominates, but throughout this region the Mohammedans are numerously dispersed, and in the south form the majority of the population; beyond the Indus the pure Mohammedan race prevails, and of the whole population two-thirds are Mussulmans, and the remainder Hindoos. For administrative purposes it is divided into 8 territorial divisions, Lahore, Jhelum, Mooltan, Leia, Peshawur, Jullindur, Hoshiyapoor, & Kangra. Revenue (1862) 3,097,456 rupees. Armed force 16,000 European, and 13,500 native troops. The Punjab was the scene of Alexander the Great's oriental conquests. At the beginning of the 10th century, it was overrun by Mahmoud of Ghuznee "the destroyer;" subsequently it was conquered by the Afghans, and in 1526 by Baber the Mogul conqueror. Under the late Runjeet Singh, the power and boundaries of the kingdom were greatly extended; on his death in 1839, and the subsequent massacres of his nearest heirs, the country became a scene of anarchy. An unprovoked invasion of the British territories E. of the Sutlej by a powerful army of the Sikhs in 1845, led to a series of British victories at Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Aliwal, and Sobraon, and their submission by treaty in 1846. This treaty was again broken by Moolraj and Shere Singh in 1848, and the Sikh force was finally defeated and dispersed at Goojerat, 21st February 1849. The Punjab was then formally annexed to the British possessions in India, since which time the country has rapidly improved, and is still improving.

PUY-DE-DÔME, a mountain of France, near the centre of the dep., to which it gives name. Height above the sea 4806 feet. It is the chief peak of a volcanic group of mountains, covering about 80 sq. m., and attached S. ward by a series of basaltic peaks or puys to the great mass of Mont-Dor. It is almost bare of trees, but has good pasturage on its sides, and corn land at its base.

PUY-DE-DÔME, a dep. of France, in the S.E., formed of part of the old prov. Auvergne, and surrounded by the depts. Loire, Haute-Loire, Cantal, Correze, Creuze, and Allier. Area 3069 sq. m. P. (1861) 576,409. Cap. Clermont-Ferrand. Surface mountainous, and contains a great number of puys or peaks, the chief of which are the Mont-Dor and the Puy-de-Dôme. These mountains are of volcanic origin, and contain numerous extinct craters, the lava, formerly emitted from which, is used for building and paving. Between the mountains extend rich valleys; and that of Lemagne is celebrated for its fine vegetation. The principal rivers are the Allier, and its affl. the Dor. Among the wild animals are the wolf, fox, deer, and wild boar. Chief mineral products coal, antimony, silver, alum, lead, iron, copper, zinc, and marble. There are numerous mineral springs in the dep., the most celebrated of which is that of Mont-Dor. Soil rich in the valleys, and produces grain, lint, hemp, wine, and fruits; chestnuts are in some cantons the principal food of the inhabitants, and the vine is carefully cultivated. Cattle and sheep are extensively reared; and the cheese of the dep. is in repute. The principal manufs. are linens, woollens, and paper. Many of the pop. of the sterile districts emigrate every year. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Ambert, Clermont, Issoire, Riom, and Thiers.

PYRAMUS, a river of Asia Minor. [JYHOON.]

PYRÉNÉES, Pyrenæi Montes, an extensive mountain chain of Europe, forming the limit between France and Spain, and extending in a direction S.S.E. to N.N.W. from Cape Creux on the Mediterranean in the E. to near Fuenterabia on the W., a distance of 270 m.; with a breadth of from 50 to 100 m.; is joined on the W. by the Cantabrian mountains, which may be considered a prolongation of the chain. Next to the Alps, the Pyrénées are in general the highest mountains of Europe; the summit of the chain forms a curved line with a mean altitude of 7990 feet. The slope is much more gentle on the N. than on the S. side. On the N. side the mountains send off numerous offsets which cover part of the French depts., and the descent is more gradual at the W. than at the E. extremity. The primary formation is less extensive than in the Alps; it consists of granite, micaceous schist, and primitive limestone, which form a continuous band stretching three-fourths across the isthmus. The bulk of the system is composed of secondary rocks, which are arranged in vertical bands flanking the older rocks, and consist of clayslate, grauwacke, and blue limestone. The oolite and chalk formations occur on the lower part of the chain. Snow lies deep in the mountains during a great part of the year, and is perennial on the higher points. From the Marbore to Maladetta the summits are covered with broad bands of ice, yet no true glaciers have been discovered. Corn grows in some of the upper valleys, maize is cultivated at the vill. of Lescar (Lower Pyrénées), at an elevation of 3280 feet, and the pine tree grows at 10,870 feet above the sea. The bear is found in the high desert regions near the snow line, and the lynx ascends to 8300 feet. The principal summits are Pic Nethou (Maladetta), 11,168 feet; Mont Perdu, 10,994 feet; the Vignemale, 10,820 feet; Pic du Midi, 9540 feet; and Lee Canigou, 9137 feet. The principal passes of the Pyrénées are, from E. to W., Port d'Oo, 9843 feet; the Breche de Roland, 9500 feet; d'Estaube, 8402 ft.; Tourmalet, 7143 feet; Gavarnie, 7654 feet, above the level of the sea; there are about 50 in all, of which the following are fit for carriages.—I. the Col de Perthus, between Perpignan and Jonquera, passable at all seasons.—II. the pass of Puymeries, between the valley of Segre and that of the Ariège.—III. the Port de Confranc between Zaragoza and Pau.—IV. the Port of Roncevalles, between Pamplona and San Jean.—V. the pass of the Bidassoa, between Vitoria and Bayonne. The chief rivers rising in the Pyrénées are, the Adour, Garonne, and Aude, flowing N., and the Llobregat and numerous affls. of the Ebro flowing S. The Pyrénées contain iron-ores; copper and argentiferous lead-ore were formerly worked, but are now abandoned. There are many mineral springs on the N. side. Several of the streams are auriferous, but no gold or silver mines are worked. The valley of Cardona contains a remarkable deposit of rocksalt, one of the beds measuring 390 by 750 feet. The Pyrénées give their name to three depts. of France.

PYRÉNÉES (BASSES or LOWER), a frontier dep. of France, formed of part of the old prov. Béarn, bounded E. by the dep. H. Pyrénées, S. by the Pyrénées, W. by the Bay of Biscay, on which are the ports of Bayonne and St Jean-de-Luz, and N. by the depts. Landes and Gers. Area 2943 sq. m. P. (1861) 436,628. Cap. Pau. Nearly half the surface is covered with pastures and marshes, one-sixth part is occupied by fine forests, and the rest is fertile. Numerous torrents descend from the mountains, the chief of which are the Gave-de-Pau, Gave d'Oléron, and the Nive. Minerals comprise iron, copper, and marble. The mineral springs of Eaux-Bonnes and Eaux-Chaudes are well frequented, and the salt from the springs of Salies is in repute. Among vegetable products are the oak, gall-nut, lint, and wine; and among animals, the bear, wolf, and izard, a species of chamois. Manufactures unimportant; the chief are iron forging, and manufactures of linen and paper. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Bayonne, Mauléon, Oléron, Orthez, and Pau.

PYRÉNÉES (HAUTES or UPPER), a frontier dep. of France, S.E. of the former, composed of part of the old prov. Gascoigne, having E. the dep. H.-Garonne, & N. Gers. Area 1749 sq. m. P. (1861) 240,419. Surface covered by the ramifications of the Pyrénées, enclosing the fine valleys of Adour, Campan, Barrèges, Cauterets, and Azun. The Adour and its affls., the Arros and Gave-de-Pau, rise in the dep.; the soil contains numerous minerals, but only marble is quarried. The mineral springs of Bagnères, Barrèges, and Cauterets are much frequented. Soil fertile in the valleys, but grain is insufficient for the wants of the population. Wine is abundant and of good quality. Cattle are extensively reared, horses are excellent, and the sheep are protected from the wolves by the powerful dogs of the Pyrénées. Bears and wolves are of great size and ferocity. The chief manufs. are those of woollen stuffs called Barrèges. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Argèdes, Bagnères-de-Bigorre, and Tarbes.

PYRÉNÉES-ORIENTALES, a dep. of France, having W. the dep. Ariège, and bounded E. by the Mediterranean, N. by the dep. Aude, and comprised in the old prov. Roussillon and part of Languedoc. Area 1591 sq. m. P. (1861) 181,763. The Pyrénées on the S. separate the dep. from Spain, and connect it with their centreforts; the highest point in the dep. is Canigou, 9137 ft. Chief rivers the Tet, Gly, and Aude, flowing E. to the Mediterranean, the Ariège affl. of the Garonne, and the Segre affl. of the Ebro. On the coast are the marshes of Leucate and St Naziare, and the ports Collioure, Port Vendres, Bagnols, and Nouvelle. The soil contains iron, copper, lead, bismuth, antimony, fine marble, and mineral springs. Climate cold in the mountains, but sufficiently mild in the valleys for the culture of the pomegranate and the mulberry. The orange grows here on espaliers. The wines of Roussillon are esteemed. Among wild animals are the wolf, bear, fox, wild boar, chamois, eagle, vulture, and serpents. Manufs. are unimportant. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Céret, Perpignan, and Prades; cap. Perpignan.

It covers a promontory between the two rivers, and is divided into two sections—(1.) The upper town, occupying the highest point of the promontory, which is surrounded by strong walls and fortifications; (2.) The lower town, the business quarter, built round the base of Cape Diamond. The citadel is a massive work on the summit of Cape Diamond, covering about 40 acres. It is the strongest fortress on the W. continent, and has been called the "Gibraltar of America." It is entered from the upper town by five gates, near one of which is the hospital and guard house. The St Louis gate on S.W. leads to the "Plains of Abraham," the scene of Wolfe's victory and death in 1759. The promenade above the esplanade affords extensive views. In the public garden is an obelisk in memory of Wolfe and Montcalm. Both towns are built chiefly of stone, and roofed with tin plates or with shingles. Public edifices comprise the new parliament house, which replaces the building destroyed by fire in 1854; Roman Catholic and Protestant cathedrals, convent and church of St Ursula, barracks formerly the Jesuits' college, exchange, reading-room, government warehouses, and hotel-Dieu. The French college, royal grammar school, royal institution, literary and historical society, medical school, mechanics' institute, city library, and many benevolent associations, are amongst its chief public institutions. It has distilleries, breweries, soap, candle, and tobacco factories, and ship-building yards. Its harbour, between the city and the island Orleans, is accessible for ships of the line, and merchantmen lie close to its wharfs. It is the great entrepôt for the trade of Canada with Britain, the West Indies, etc.; and in 1851, 1185 ships, aggregate burden 505,034 tons, carrying 41,899 passengers, arrived. A railway 375 m. in length, is to connect it with Halifax (Nova-Scotia). Quebec was founded by the French in 1608, taken by the English in 1629 and 1759, and finally ceded to Great Britain in 1763. A large part of the town outside of the fortifications was destroyed by fire in 1854. The Mount Hermon cemetery, above the St Lawrence, three miles from the city, covers 32 acres. The most attractive object in the vicinity is the Fall of Montmorenci, eight miles distant; the river here is 60 feet wide, and the descent of the torrent 250 feet. Shortest sea route to Liverpool 2634 sea m.; shortest steam voyage 9½ days.

Unites with Dunfermline, Inverkeithing, Culross, and Stirling, in sending one member to H. of C.—II. (North), on the opposite side of the firth, here 2 m. across, co. Fife, pa. Dunfermline. P. 396.

QUEEN'S FORELAND, an island of British North America. Lat. 62° 30' N.; lon. 65° W.

QUEENSLAND, a British colony of E. Australia, established as a distinct colony in 1859, under S. G. Bower as first governor. Lat. 10° 40' (Cape York) to 28° 8' S. (Pt. Danger); lon. 141° to 153° 33' E. Its settled portion was mainly the Moreton Bay district, forming the N. part of New South Wales, and was a penal settlement till 1842. From that colony it is now divided by a line from Point Danger in 28° 8' S. lat., following for the most part the parallel of 29° to 141° lon. E., then N. to the 26th parallel, then W. to lon. 138°, and thence N. to the G. of Carpentaria, where it includes the "Plains of Promise." This large area comprises 678,000 sq. m., nearly twice as large as Canada, & 6 times as large as the United Kingdom. Approximate area of country occupied by pastoral stations 195,000 sq. m. P. (1862) 45,077 Europeans, 15,000 Aborigines. On 30th Sept. 1863 the population was 57,129, and colonists are now (1864) arriving at the rate of 3000 a week. Immigrants from Britain (1862) 8573. Sea-board well suited for maritime commerce, having many noble bays, among which are Moreton Bay (65 m. long by 20 m. wide), Keppel Bay, Wide Bay, Port Curtis, Port Bowen, and Port Denison. Ranges of mountains run parallel with the E. coast at a distance of 60 or 70 m., and give rise to numerous streams and rivers (many of which are navigable), as the Brisbane, Burnett, Fitzroy, Barcoo, Burdekin, etc. Chief towns, Brisbane and Ipswich, both on the river Brisbane; the former the capital, pop. (1861) 4225; the latter at the head of the navigation, pop. 3500. Imports (1862) 1,830,225*l.*; exports 769,742*l.* Exports (1860) chiefly wool, quantity 5,007,167 lbs.; value 444,188*l.* Climate warm but healthy, and closely resembling that of Madeira; mean annual temperature at Brisbane 68°; of June and July 55°; of December and January 78½°. Rainfall 43 in. during 108 days, chiefly in February, March, April, and August. The mineral products of the colony are varied and abundant. Gold of the finest quality has been found in several localities; copper and tin are also found in a very pure state. Coal of excellent quality and iron are abundant. The success which has attended the attempts to grow cotton, promises to make this invaluable textile the greatest source of wealth to the colony. Numerous samples of Queensland cotton from widely separated localities, were shown in the International Exhibition of 1862, from which it appears that Sea Island cotton of the finest texture can not only be grown in the coast region, but also on the elevated table-lands of the interior. The cost of cultivation is about 9*l.* per acre, and the quantity grown (1862) was 14,344 lbs.; in the year ending 31st December 1863, it was 34,000 lbs. The colony also seems admirable for the growth of the sugar-cane, maize, arrowroot, and the coffee-tree. The mulberry tree has also been successfully reared, and silk of good quality has been manufactured. Number of sheep in the colony (1861) 3,449,350; cattle 492,890; horses 23,504. Education is well attended to. The form of government resembles that of other principal Australian colonies—that is, a governor and two Houses of Legislature. The legislative council, or Upper House of Parliament, is nominated by the governor, while the House of Assembly is elective. Public rev. (1862) 346,431*l.*; expenditure 318,311*l.*

RED RIVER or RIO ROXO, a river of the U. S., N. America, rises in the Llano Estacado, in the N. of Texas, at an elevation of 2500 feet above the sea, flows at first E., forming the limit between Texas and the Indian territory, and then S.E. through Arkansas and Louisiana, and joins the Mississippi 128 m. N.W. New Orleans. Total course estimated at 1200 m. Area of basin 97,000 sq. m. At 450 m. above the mouth commences the Atchafalaya raft, formed by vast collections of fallen timber 13 m. in length, and divided into numerous channels. The United States government have expended large sums in its removal, but without permanent success. Affluents, the Washita and False-Washita from the N.—There are three other Red Rivers in North America.—I. the Red River of Lake Winnipeg, forming the W. boundary of Minnesota.—II. the Red River of Texas.—III. the Red River of California, or Rio Colorado.

RED RIVER, a co. of U. S., N. America, Texas. P. 5496 free, 3039 slaves.

RED RIVER OF THE NORTH, rises in a series of small lakes in the centre of Minnesota, flows 50 m. S.W., then turns to the N.W. and N. through Minnesota into Hudson Bay.

RED RIVER SETTLEMENT, British North America, Hudson Bay territory, on the confines of the U. S., between Lakes Superior and Winnipeg, lat. 49° 30' N., lon. 97° W., was founded by the Earl of Selkirk in 1812. P. (1857) 6522. Soil well cultivated, and produces fine wheat. Live stock extensively reared. The Atlantic and Pacific Transit and Telegraph Company, established in 1863, propose to construct and maintain a post road and line of telegraph between Fort William, at the head of Lake Superior, and New Westminster, in British Columbia, passing through this settlement. This line of communication will also connect the Red River with the Saskatchewan. Hitherto all British communication with this settlement has been through Minnesota.

REDRUTH, a market town and pa. of England, co. Cornwall, 9 m. W.N.W. Falmouth. Ac. 3907. P. 11,504. It has rich copper and tin mines in the vicinity, employing 2500 persons, the ore of which is transported by railways connecting with the Fal river, and with St Ives' Bay. It has two churches, a grammar school, union workhouse, reading-room, branch bank, and a theatre. Near to the town is the hill called Carn Brae, with Druidical remains.

RED SEA or ARABIAN GULF, an inland sea between Africa and Asia (Arabia), lat. 12° 40' to 30° N., lon. 32° 30' to 43° 30' E. Length, N.W. to S.E., 1490 miles; breadth varies to 200 miles. At its southern extremity it communicates with the Indian Ocean by the Strait Bab-el-Mandeb. In its N. part it bifurcates into the Gulfs of Suez and Akabah, which enclose the peninsula of Sinai. Depth varies, average about 100 fathoms. It abounds with islands and coral reefs, and is supposed to have derived its name from the red coral and pink-coloured fuci which it yields; or from the anc. Idumæ, "Sea of Edom" or "Red Sea;" or from the blood-red colour frequently imparted to it from animalculæ. The country almost everywhere around it is mountainous. The S.E. monsoon blows constantly for eight months of the year, and during the remainder, the N.W. monsoon. From October to May, when S. winds prevail, the water rises in the N. part of the sea, which then attains an elevation much higher than the Mediterranean, but from careful levellings it has been ascertained that the low water levels of the Red Sea and Mediterranean are identical. The navigation is difficult, owing to the sudden changes of wind and heavy gales. Principal ports are Mocha, Hodeida, Locheia, Jiddah, and Yembo, on the Arabian side; and Suez, Kosseir, Suakin, and Massuah on the Egyptian, Nubian, and Danakil coasts. The Jews and Phenicians appear to have carried on an extensive trade upon this sea; and after the destruction of the Persian empire, it resumed importance as the principal route of traffic between Europe and the East, which distinction it retained until the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope. [ADEN—BAB-EL-MANDEB.]

REDWITZ, a market town of Bavaria, circ. Upper Franconia, 23 m. E. Baireuth. P. 1580.

RHINE (German Rhein, French Rhin, anc. Rhenus), an important and celebrated river of Europe, is formed in Switzerland by the union of two small streams, the Hintere and Vordere Rhein; the first springs from the glacier of Rheinwald, and the second rises on the N. side of Mount St Gothard at a height of 7650 feet; these meet at Reichenau in the canton of Grisons. The united stream flows generally N. past Meyenfeld, and enters the Lake of Constance on the S.E. near Rheineck, 1344 feet above the sea; at Stein it quits the Lake of Untersee at its W. extremity, flows W. past Schaffhausen, where it falls 70 feet, and Lauffenburg, separating Switzerland from Baden. At Basle, where the Upper Rhine terminates with an elevation of 755 feet, & a breadth of 550 feet, it turns to the N., and flows past Alt Breisach, Strasbourg, and Speyer to Mannheim, where it receives the Neckar, and where its bed is 300 feet above the sea, between the territories of Baden on the E., and France and Rhenish Bavaria on the W. From Worms to Mayence, it traverses Hessen. At Mayence it receives the Main, and flows W. to Bingen, where it turns to the N.W., passing Coblenz, Bonn, Cologne (110 feet above the sea), and Düsseldorf (near which it attains its greatest breadth, 2300 feet), Wesel and Emmerich, where its course is again westerly, till entering the Netherlands it reaches the North Sea by several branches, having a delta larger than that of any other European river, which begins 104 m. above the mouth. [NETHERLANDS.] The principal affluents of the Rhine are, on right, the Kinzig, Neckar, Main, Lahn, Sieg, Ruhr, and Lippe; and on left, the Thur, Aar, Ille, Moselle, and Meuse, which joins it in the delta. From Chur to Basle, the Rhine is only partially navigable, on account of the rapidity of its current, the numerous rocks which impede it, and its waterfalls, the greatest of which is at Laufen, near Schaffhausen. From Basle to the sea, the navigation for steamers and large barges is continuous. It is navigated by steam vessels, belonging to several companies, which ply constantly on its middle course, and is visited by tourists from all countries, on account of its picturesque scenery. The goods traffic amounts to about 3,500,000 tons annually. Below Cologne it is navigable for sea-going vessels, and the current is sluggish. In September 1852, it rose 13 feet above its highest water-mark, and overflowed the country near Strasbourg. In the Netherlands it is connected by canals with its several branches and to the sea. The Great North Canal unites it to the Meuse and the Nêthe, affluent of the Scheldt; and the canal of the Rhône and Rhine in France connects it with the Rhône by the Saône. In Bavaria it communicates with the Danube by means of the Main, and the Atmühl and Ludwigs Canal. The direct distance of the Rhine from its source to its mouth is 415 m. The following are the distances in miles of various points from the mouth, according to the windings: to Cologne, 218; to river Main, 344; to Basle, 570; to Stein, at the mouth of the Lake of Untersee, 654; to Rheineck, 692; and to the source, 800. Its basin comprises an area of 87,178 sq. m., or including the Meuse basin, 105,560 sq. m. The Rhine gives name to 3 circles of Baden, to a prov. of Hessen-Darmstadt, a prov. of Bavaria, 2 depts. of France, and a prov. of Prussia.—Rhine Confederation. [GERMANY.]

RHO or RO, a market town of North Italy, prov. and 8 m. W.N.W. Milan. P. 4002.

RHODA, an island of Egypt, in the Nile, immediately opposite Cairo, 2 m. in length. It contains the Pacha's gardens, and the famous Nilometer, a graduated pillar, divided into denaks or cubits to mark the rise of the inundation, the amount of which is watched with the greatest anxiety, and daily proclaimed by criers. The pillar is erected in a square, well-like building, which was once covered with a dome. Here Arab tradition fixes the finding of Moses by Pharaoh's daughter.

RHODE ISLAND, the smallest of the U. S. of North America, in the N. part of the Union, between lat. 41° 18' and 42° 1' N., lon. 71° 6' and 71° 55' W., having S. the Atlantic, W. Connecticut, and on other sides Massachusetts. Area 1306 sq. m. P. (1860) 174,620, of whom 3952 are free coloured. Number of deaths 1 in 50. It derives its name from Rhode Island in Narraganset Bay, 17 m. in length by 3 m. in width, besides which it comprises some other islands in the Atlantic. Surface hilly in N., elsewhere level or undulating. Principal river the Pawtucket. Soil better adapted for grazing than tillage. Scarcely sufficient corn is raised for home consumption. Principal exports are flax, seed, cattle, beef, pork, and cotton goods. Manufs. of cottons, woollens, iron goods, leather, and paper, are important. There are 221 churches of all denominations; and a university. Number of schools (1864) 512, attended by 27,075 pupils. Total length of railways 56 m. Value of imports (1852) 201,680 dollars; do. of exports 179,175 dollars. Public revenue (1864) 372,289 dollars. Interest on state bonds 15,000,000 dollars. A constitutional government was formed in 1842. The governor, lieutenant-governor, sec. of state, treasurer, and attorney-general, are chosen annually by the people at an election held on the first Wednesday of April. It sends 2 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Providence and Newport, alternately the caps., Bristol, Warwick, and Coventry. It was first settled at Providence in 1636.

RHODEN, a town of Central Germany, princip. Waldeck, 24 m. W.N.W. Cassel. P. 1846.

RHODES, an island of Asiatic Turkey, in the Mediterranean, off the S.W. coast of Asia Minor, termed "the pearl of the Levant," between lat. 35° 58' and 36° 28' N., lon. 27° 40' and 28° 12' E. Length 46 m.; greatest breadth 18 m. Area 420 sq. m. P. estimated at 30,000, of whom 500 are Europeans, 6500 Turks, 21,000 Greeks, and 2000 Jews. It is traversed by a mountain chain, covered with forests, which supply good timber for ship-building. Climate excellent, and the soil of high fertility. Shipping (1862) 396 vessels (tonnage 137,969). Principal exports, wax, honey, madder, roots, bark, cotton, liquorice, apricots, figs, oranges, lemons, pomegranates, wine, and manufactured silk. Value (1862) 60,833*l*. In addition to which, sponge, timber, shoes, and red leather are among its products. Imports, colonial produce, American cotton, German woollens, iron, nails, shot, tin, paper, soap, salt-fish, cordage, glass and earthenwares, hardware and cutlery, and French fancy articles; coals from England, for the supply of the Mediterranean steam-packets, and horses, mules, cattle, sheep, poultry, hides, skins, wool, carpets, and corn, from the opposite coast of Asia Minor. Value 132,979*l*. Rhodes is governed by a pasha, immediately subordinate to the capitan pasha, and whose jurisdiction extends over the Turkish Sporades, and the naval station Marmorice.

RHODES, a strongly fortified city and seaport of Asiatic Turkey, cap. of the island Rhodes, at its N.E. extremity, 13 m. S.E. the nearest promontory of Asia Minor. Lat., tower of St Elons, with revolving light, 118 feet high, 36° 27' 9" N.; lon. 16° 10' E. P. 15,000, of whom 8000 are Turks, and 8000 Jews. It is enclosed by walls, built by the knights of St John. On the N.E. side two piers enclose a harbour, which is fast silted up. The city has 33 mosques, a Jews' quarter and ruins of synagogue, and the ancient hospital of the knights of St John. Outside the walls, on the N., are the pasha's palace, the dock-yard, and a Roman Catholic quarter. S. of the city are the Greek suburbs, with about 3000 inhabitants, and 10 churches. Rhodes has 3 Mohammedan colleges, a Turkish library, Turkish and Greek schools, and manufs. of red leather, and shoes for exportation. It is the residence of a Greek consul, French and other vice-consular agents. An earthquake, which occurred on 22d April 1863, ruined the light tower, and the palace of the Grand Master, recently converted into a prison, destroyed 2000 houses, and killed many of the inhabitants. In ancient times it was a celebrated Greek city, and boasted of the famous brazen Colossus—one of the seven wonders of the world. After the destruction of its republic, it belonged successively to the Romans, the Greek emperors, the Genoese, and the knights of St John of Jerusalem; which last held it from 1308 to 1522, when, after a heroic resistance, it capitulated to the Turks under Solyman the Magnificent.

RHÔNE, a dep. of France, in the S.E., formed of the old prov. Lyonnais, cap. Lyon, bounded

E. by the Rhône and Saône, and the depts. Ain and Isère, S. and W. by the dep. Loire, and N. by Saône-et-Loire. Area 1077 sq. m. P. (1861) 662,493. It is partly covered by the mountains which unite the Vosges and the Cevennes, and contains the summits Mont d'Or and Pilat. The wolf, fox, and badger are found among these mountains. Soil rich in mines of copper, iron, and coal, besides argentiferous lead mines. It produces excellent wine, the most valued of which is that of Côte-Rotie, Condrieux, and Beaujolais. The goat-milk cheese of Mont d'Or is in high repute. The silks of Lyon are sent to all parts of the world, and muslins are extensively manufactured at Tarare. The other branches of industry comprise cotton and linen spinning and weaving, hat making, glass and paper making, and the rearing of silkworms. The railway from Lyon to St Étienne was one of the first constructed in France. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Lyon and Villefranche.

RHÔNE (BOUCHES DU.) [BOUCHES-DU-RHÔNE.] RHÔNE, Rhodanus, an important river of Europe, rises in Switzerland, in the Rhône Glacier, on the W. of Mount St Gothard, between Mounts Furka and Grimsel, at an elevation of 5500 feet, flows S.W. past Brieg and Sion to Martigny, where it turns sharply to the N.W., and enters the Lake of Geneva near its S.E. extremity. At Geneva it leaves the lake and takes a S.W. direction, forming the boundary between Italy and the French dep. Ain. At Seyssel it becomes navigable; its course is now W. to Lyon, where it receives the Saône, and it then flows nearly due S., past St Genis, where its bed is 640 feet above the sea, Vienne, Tournon, Valence, Avignon, Beaucaire, to Arles, where it separates into several branches, forming a delta called the Ile de la Camargue, and enters the Gulf of Lions, Mediterranean. The E. arm is called le Petit Rhône, and the W. the Rhône Mort. Principal affls., on right, the Ain, Saône, Ardeche, and Gard; on left, the Isère, Drôme, and Durance. Its fall is much greater than that of the Rhine, and consequently its navigation is difficult and dangerous. It is connected with the Loire by means of the Saône and Canal du Centre; the Canal of Burgundy unites it to the Yonne and Seine, and that of the Rhône and Rhine connects it with the Rhine. Distance from source to mouth 285 m., following windings 645 m., extent of basin 30,000 sq. m. The Rhône formerly disappeared at a place called the Perte du Rhône, on the frontier of France, but the rock which covered it has been removed. Below Lyon it is navigated by steam packets, which, by means of the Saône, ascend as far as Châlons.

out, but built chiefly of wood. Principal structures, the cathedral, church of St Peter, the castle, with a chantery, and residence of the general and civil governors; hall of the provincial states, town-house, exchange, arsenal, and a column with a colossal bronze statue of Victory. It has several colleges, a school of navigation, a public library, and numerous rare MSS., a cabinet of natural history, an observatory, and a society of Lithuanian literature. The Riga-Dunaburg Railway was opened in 1861; and a connection subsequently made with the St Petersburg and Berlin Railway, places Riga in direct communication with the rest of Europe. The inner harbour admits vessels drawing 12 to 15 feet water, and ships of larger burden load and unload at Bolder-aa, a small port outside of the bar, at the mouth of the Duna, where is the custom-house. In 1861, 1870 vessels (tonnage 285,990) entered, and 1864 (tonnage 284,490) cleared the port. Total value of exports (1861) 3,428,800*l.*, a decrease of 952,835*l.* as compared with the preceding year. RIO ARIBA, a co. of the U. S., North America, in New Mexico. Area 56,000 sq. m. P. 9849.

RIO BRANCO, QUECUEME, PARAVIANA, or PARIMA, a river of Brazil, prov. Amazonas, rises near the source of the Orinoco, lat.  $4^{\circ}$  N., lon.  $65^{\circ}$  W.; runs E. to its junction with the Takutu, and thence mostly S.S.W. to the Rio Negro, which it joins as its principal affluent, by several mouths, 90 m. S.E. Barcellos. Total course 850 m. Principal tributaries, the Itacutu or Takutu, Macajahi, and Uanauau. In lat.  $1^{\circ} 45'$  N., its navigation is impeded by a series of falls and rapids, formed by ledges of granite rock. The aggregate perpendicular descent of these throughout 7 m. is estimated at 60 feet, and at the largest, the Caruwanna, canoes must be unloaded. Its waters are opaque and whitish. On it are Fort St Joaquin, and the towns Carmo and Santa Maria.—The upper part of the river San Miguel, Brazil, has the same name.

RIO BRAVO DEL NORTE. [RIO GRANDE.]

RIOCHICO, a town of Santiago de Alanje.

RIO DAS MORTES, a river of Brazil, prov. Mato Grosso, joins the Araguay; course 500 miles.

RIO-DE-JANEIRO, the metropolitan prov. of Brazil, between lat.  $21^{\circ}$  and  $23^{\circ} 20'$  S., lon.  $40^{\circ} 53'$  and  $44^{\circ} 40'$  W., having E. and S. the Atlantic, and landward the provs. São Paulo, Minas Geraes, and Espirito-Santo. Estimated area 18,283 sq. m. P. (1856) 1,200,000, of whom many were slaves. Surface low along the coast, but the interior is mostly mountainous, consisting of the Serra do Mar, Organ mountains, and their ramifications. Principal river, the Parahyba, which forms a part of the N. frontier. Soil extremely fertile; products comprise sugar, coffee, cacao, cotton, maize, rice, indigo, and fine woods. After Rio, the chief towns are Niteroy (the cap.), Cabo Frio, Cantagallo, S. João-da-Barra, and Lorena.

RIO-DE-JANEIRO, the cap. city of Brazil, forms with its environs a neutral municipality independent of the prov. Rio. It is the most important commercial city of South America, is situated on the W. side of a vast bay. Lat. of Fort Vilagagnan  $22^{\circ} 54' 7''$  S., lon.  $43^{\circ} 9'$  W. P. (1855) 296,136, of whom 77,989 were native whites, 36,329 white strangers, 10,722 free coloured, and 78,835 slaves. Mean temperature of year  $73^{\circ} 7'$ , winter  $68^{\circ} 5'$ , summer  $79^{\circ}$ , Fahr. Its port, which is large and deep, is defended by a castle. Rio consists of an old and a new town, the latter of which dates from 1808, and is separated from the former by an open space called the Campo do Honra; it extends on uneven ground, along the side of the bay. Streets generally straight, but narrow and ill-paved. It is so placed as to be deprived of the benefit of the land breeze by a range of mountains, and is exposed to suffocating heat, relieved only by the sea breeze in the middle of the day. The city is supplied with water by means of an aqueduct, which traverses a deep valley 7 m. in length, and has numerous public fountains. The churches, of which there are upwards of 50, have no external elegance, but are richly decorated in the interior. The chief public edifices are the Imperial palace, a plain brick building, the old palace on the shore, used for public offices, the naval and military arsenal, and a public hospital. Its educational establishments are the Imperial college of Don Pedro II., the college of St José, schools of medicine and surgery, military and naval academy, and many public schools. The national library has 120,000 printed volumes, and valuable MSS. Rio is the see of a bishop, the residence of a governor, and the seat of an electoral college; it has many scientific establishments, a museum of natural history rich in ornithology and mineralogy, an alcaza or theatre, and a public botanic garden. From its position, Rio is naturally the great mart of Brazil, and especially of the provs. Minas Geraes, St Paul, and Goyaz, and its advantages are such as to fit it for concentrating the commerce of the globe. Its imports comprise the products of every country; its chief exports are cotton, sugar, coffee, rum, building timber, leather, tallow, gold, diamonds, topazes, amethysts, and aquamarine. In 1864 a line of railway was opened to the foot of the Serra do Mar, 50 m., and another to Belem, 520 m. The bay or inlet of Rio, 17 m. in length, and 11 m. in extreme width, forms one of the noblest harbours in the world. Its entrance, 2 m. S. of the city, is  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. wide between Fort Santa Cruz on the E., and a fort on the sugar loaf rock on the W. The bay contains many small islands, the largest of which is Ilha do Governador, 6 m. in length. Shortest sea route to London 5240 sea m. Shortest sailing voyage 52 days.

RIO DE LA PASION, a river of Central America, rises in the Lake Lacandon, British Honduras, flows W., and having been joined by the rivers Santa, Isabel, Mataquece, and Sacapulas, it acquires the name of Usumasinta (which see) During the rains it is often half a league across

RIO DULCE, the outlet of the Golfo Dulce, Central America, state Guatemala, enters the Caribbean Sea in lat. 15° 50' N., lon. 88° 46' 20" W., after a winding course of 23 miles, during which it expands into El Golfeito or the Little Gulf, 9 m. in length by 2 m. across. At its mouth is a bar with less than 6 feet water. Banks skirted by abrupt wooded heights, rising to 300 feet in elevation. The Upper Rio Dulce enters the Gulf from the West.

RIO GRANDE, a river of W. Africa, Senegambia, rises in the Futa Jallon, near Laby, lat. 10° 30' N., lon. 11° W., flows W. and enters the Atlantic by an estuary 10 m. across, between the Geba and Cassini rivers. On it is the town Kade, and opposite its mouth are the Bissagos islands. The whole country between it and the Nuñez is supposed to be a collection of islands, divided by its branches, many of which remain unexplored. Its banks are densely wooded, and studded with immense ant hills. The country watered by it is populous, and produces gold, ivory, wax, hides, and horses.

RIO GRANDE, a river of Bolivia. [MAMORI.]

RIO GRANDE, a river, Granadian Confederation, state Panama, rises N.W. Panama, about 2 m. from which city it enters the Pacific Ocean. It receives several streams, is navigable for the last 5 m. of its course, and admits the entrance of large vessels at high water. Its head is near the Obispo, an affluent of the Cruces.

RIO GRANDE (OR RIO BRAVO DEL NORTE), the largest river of Texas, of which it forms the S. boundary, rises in the Rocky Mountains, lat. 41° N., lon. 110° W., flows S.S.E., and enters the Gulf of Mexico at El Refugio, in lat. 25° 56' N., lon. 97° 12' W. Total course 1800 m. Principal affls. the Puerco and Conches. Its navigation is impeded by rapids and shoals, but small steamers ascend 450 m. from the sea to Kingsbury Rapids. —I. a river of the Argentine Confed., dep. Salto, tributary to the Rio Vermejo.

RIO GRANDE-DE-SANTIAGO, a river, Mexico, states Queretaro, Guanajuato, Michoacan, and Jalisco, enters the Pacific near San Blas, after a N.W. course of 400 m. across the Anahuac tableland. It is greatly interrupted by cataracts, and is very rapid. Affluents, the Lerma, etc. It traverses a part of the Lake of Chapala.

RIO GRANDE DO NORTE, a maritime prov. of Brazil, between lat. 5° and 6° 30' S., lon. 35° and 38° 40' W., having N. and E. the Atlantic, W. the provs. Ceara and S. Parahiba, forming the most N.E. corner of Brazil. Area 17,050 sq. m. P. (1856) 190,000. Its name is derived from a river which, after an E. course, enters the Atlantic at Natal. Other rivers are the Serido and Appody. Surface level near the coast, uneven inland. Products, the best Brazil wood, cotton,

ROCHESTER, a city, parl. and munic. bor., and river port of England, co. Kent, 7 m. S.E. Gravesend, connected by rail, with London, Maidstone, and Canterbury. Alt. 30 ft. Ac., with Chatham, 4273. P. of parl. bor. (1851) 14,938; (1861) 16,862. It is situated on a bend of the Medway, here crossed by bridges, with Chatham on the E. and Stroud on the W. The cathedral, mostly constructed by Gundulph, the first bishop after the Conquest, presents, in its recently repaired interior, one of the finest specimens of Norman and early English architecture; length 383 feet. The parish church of St Nicholas is also very ancient. The grammar school was founded in 1542. It has a custom-house, theatre, guild-hall, corn exchange, free mathematical school, and several alms-houses, baths, remains of ancient walls, gateways, and monastic structures, and on a bank rising from the river, majestic ruins of a Norman castle built by Bishop Gundulph, and a new public hospital. The trade of the city is comprised with that of Chatham. Coal is extensively imported for the supply of the interior of the co., and hops are exported. Vessels of heavy burden come up to the bridge. Customs rev. (1862) 7234*l*. Exports 5268*l*. Reg. shipping (1864) 24,392 tons. It sends 2 members to H. of C. Reg. elect. (1864) 1599. The bishopric is, next to Canterbury, the most ancient in England, having been founded by St Augustine in 604, but it is also the smallest.

ROCHESTER, a city of the U. S., North America, New York, Monroe co., on both sides of the Genesee, here crossed by three bridges, on the Erie Canal, at the terminus of the Genesee Valley Canal, and on the G. W. Railway, 7 m. S. Lake Ontario, & 203 m. N.W. Albany. P. (1856) 44,403; (1860) 48,204. It has risen into consequence since 1812, when it consisted of only two wooden frame buildings. It has a collegiate institute, 2 female seminaries, several academies and other schools, two orphan asylums, museum, arcade, atheneum, and mechanics' institute. It principally owes its rise to the water power caused here by the falls in the river Genesee; and it has manuf. of machinery, cotton and woollen stuffs, leather, ropes, and earthenware, besides distilleries, breweries, & numerous saw, oil, fulling, and flour mills. Also several townships.—I. Massachusetts, on Buzzard Bay, 48 m. S.S.E. Boston.—II. New York, on Roundout Creek, 16 m. S.W. Kingston.—III. New Hampshire, on the Cochecho, 30 m. E. Concord.—IV. ROCKY MOUNTAINS of CHIPPÉWYAN CHAIN (French Montagnes rocheuses, German Felsen-gebirge), a lofty range of North America. It consists of a continuous broad and elevated belt of great parallel mountain-chains, and high included table-lands, occupying the whole N.W. side of the continent; and twice as broad and almost as long as the Andes of South America, commencing in the S. with the plateaus and cordilleras of Central America, where, between the parallels of 7° and 8° N., a wide depression separates the system from that of the Andes, and ending on the N.W. in the broken ridges of Russian America. The name Rocky Mountains, however, is more particularly confined to those portions situated in U. S. and Brit. America. This chain is not less than 5000 miles in length, and embraces three distinct grand parallel belts; first, on the E. the lofty Chippéwyans, or double chain of the Rocky Mountains proper; secondly, a range of high, wide, and broken table-lands, lying W. of that chain; and thirdly, bounding the table-lands and overlooking the narrow Pacific slope, a still more lofty chain, partially volcanic and extremely rugged, the Pacific Alps of the N.W. coast, the cascade range of Oregon and Washington, the Sierra Nevada and coast range and the peninsular mountains of Lower California. These belts unite in the table-land of Anahuac, in Mexico, on which are the volcanoes of Orizaba and Popocatepetl (17,783 feet), the highest mountain in North America. The great E. range lifts itself out of the western edge of the steppes of the central continental plain, like a colossal wall, deeply indented and gashed on its steep flank, and with vast mountain buttresses jutting forward into the desert. The whole system includes longitudinally many sections, separated by the river passes, which break it, and by the interruptions of the leading crests which are not in strictly continuous lines. The chief rivers and streams pass round the ends of the long ridges rather than through true gorges cutting them. This feature presents great facilities for carrying railways through this broad and lofty mountain chain linking the Atlantic and Pacific coasts by avenues of easy commerce. In N. Mexico, the eastern range is called the cordillera of Cohahuela and Potosi, the Gaudaloupe mountains being only an eastern outlying branch; and the western range is the Sierra de los Mimbres and Sierra Madre. Further north, at the sources of the Arkansas, the eastern belt is named the Moro, and Chowatche, or Wet Mountain; and the western the Sierra Verde or San Juan. These two ranges enclose between them the noble valley of Santa Fé, or of the Rio del Norte, a fertile plain nearly 50 m. broad at its northern end. Between this high plain, descending southward to the Gulf of Mexico, and the great middle table-land—here the basin of the Colorado—there interposes no mountain axis whatever, the watershed of the eastern and the western waters being on a level at the northern end of the San Juan or Sierra Verde, in a passway some 8 m. broad, and about 9000 feet above the sea. From the Arkansas to the N. fork of Platte River, the chain is more complex and triple; and its eastern range, including the Medicine Bow Mountains, contains some of the highest summits in the whole chain; such are the Spanish Peaks, and Pike's, Long's, and Laramie's Peaks, which rise to 10,000 and 12,000 feet above the sea. North of the main Platte River are the Wind River Mountains, where Fremont's Peak has an elevation of 13,370 feet. This great mountain axis is the central water-shed of the whole continent; for from its flanks descend the head streams of the Missouri, which flows towards the Atlantic, and those of the Columbia and the Rio Colorado going W. to the Pacific. Westward of the Wind River range, and diverging from it southward near lat. 44°, occurs the N. end of Wahsatch range, a long and lofty mountain axis, which passes west of the Green River or Upper Colorado, and forms the eastern boundary of the Great Utah basin. This is not strictly a ridge of the proper Rocky Mountain chain, but of the Desert table-lands. To the northward of the Wind River Mountains, the main axis, which is here also the eastern one, is exceedingly high where it separates the middle & northern sources of the Columbia River from the head streams of the Missouri and Saskatchewan. Near the head of the latter, in British America, towers the great peak of Mount Hooker, 15,700 feet above the sea, and a little further N. that of Mount Brown, 16,000 feet. From this culminating point northward the crest gradually declines in elevation to the Arctic Ocean, but even in lat. 62° it is estimated at between 3000 and 4000 feet. Beyond lat. 55° the eastern range ceases to be the main water-shed of the Pacific and Atlantic drainage.—The Great Interior Plateau is a wild and elevated middle belt, between the Rocky Mountains proper on the E., the Pacific Alps and Sierra Nevada on the W., and stretches from the Gulf of California to the Arctic Ocean, having a mean elevation of nearly 5000 feet above the sea. It is naturally divided into three regions, a Central, a S., and a N. The Pacific Mountain chain is the third or western belt of the system, and observes a general parallelism with the eastern or proper Rocky Mountain chain, and ranges from the peninsula of California, where it is comparatively low, northward, with augmenting height, till it becomes in the N. part of California, and thence the whole distance to Russian America, a wide and very elevated chain. Its loftiest peaks surpass in elevation those of the highest in the eastern belt. The Cascade range contains, in the vicinity of Columbia River, the three colossal peaks of Mount Jefferson, Mount Hood (11,934 feet), and Mount St Helens (13,300 feet), and Mount Shasta, in California (14,400 feet). Mount St Helens and Rainier (12,000 feet) are volcanoes, though rather torpid. Mount Fairweather 14,782, and Mount St Elias 14,970 feet, the culminating summits of the whole chain, are both volcanoes, and are supposed to be occasionally in eruption. Castle Peak in the Sierra Nevada is 13,000 feet above the sea.

ROME (Ital. Roma), a city of Italy, cap. of the Pontifical States, and formerly the metropolis of the greater part of the world known to the ancients, is situated on the Tiber, 17 m. N.E. its mouth in the Mediterranean. Lat. of the Roman College 41° 53' 52" N., lon. 12° 28' 40" E.; altitude, on the Tiber, under the Ælian bridge, 20 feet. P. (1800) 153,000; (1833) 170,701; (1846) 180,200, including 18,650 visitors; (1862) 197,078. The city is built on marshy ground, at the foot of a range of low hills, and is separated by the Tiber into two unequal portions, which are divided into 14 Rioni or quarters; of these 12 are in Rome proper, or the space on the E. or l. b. of the river, and only 2 on the W. or rt. b., called the Borgo and Trastavere; in the former are the Vatican and the castle of St Angelo. Its walls are 12 m. in circumference, with nearly 300 towers, and 50 feet high on the outside; they are pierced for 16 gates, 4 of which are built up,—the finest are the Porta del Popolo, the ancient Porta Flaminia, on the N.; the Porta San Giovanni on the S. of the city; and the Porta S. Pancrazio, by which the French effected a breach in 1849. Little more than one-third of the area within its walls is inhabited. N. of the Capitol is modern Rome, all S. of it ruins and vineyards. The most populous part of the modern city occupies the site of the ancient Campus Martius, a plain extending between the Capitoline, Quirinal, Pincian, and Viminal hills, and the river. The Tiber, within the walls, has a winding course of 3 miles. It is navigable for large boats and river steamers; after heavy rains it frequently rises 20 or 30 ft., and inundates a great part of the city. Near the middle of its course the Tiber forms an island, called S. Bartolomeo, 900 feet long and 300 feet broad, connected with the mainland by 2 bridges, the Ponte di Quattro Capi, and the Ponte S. Bartolomeo; besides which, are Pons Sublicius, the oldest & most celebrated of all the Roman bridges; the Ponte Sisto, the Ponte Rotto, now converted into a suspension bridge, and Pons Ælius, now the Ponte S. Angelo, the latter connecting the city with the Castle of St Angelo, the citadel of Rome, which serves for a state prison, and which has a covered way to the Vatican. Only 4 of these bridges are now in use. The three principal thoroughfares of Rome diverge from the Piazza del Popolo, an irregular open space at its N. extremity; the central of these, the Corso, extends in a direct line S.S.E. for about a mile. There are in all 506 streets, 275 lanes, and 148 squares, of all dimensions; most of these are ornamented with richly sculptured fountains, of which there are in Rome 150. These are supplied with excellent water by

3 aqueducts; the finest fountain is that called Aqua Vergine—the others are Aqua Felice (called also the Fountain of Moses), Aqua Paola, and the Fontana di Trevi, the largest in Rome. The water supply for the city is about the best in Europe, being 944 litres per head per day. The municipal body of Rome consists of a senator (who is appointed by the Pope for 6 years), of 8 conservators, and of 40 councillors. The police of Rome is entirely under the director-general of police, whose residence and offices are in the palace of Monte Citorio. The Carnival, the great public festival of Rome, begins after New Year's day, & continues until the beginning of Lent. The masking only takes place during the last 8 days. Notwithstanding its architectural and artistical riches, modern Rome has a sad and desolate aspect. Most of the streets are narrow, dirty, and paved with cubes of lava; in these the finest palaces and the most wretched hovels are often seen side by side. Near the Capitoline Mount is the Ghetto or Jews' quarter, a filthy space, enclosed by walls with gates, under charge of the police, within which 6000 or 7000 Jews reside. The situation of Rome is unhealthy, from the effects of malaria, especially in summer; but from the mildness of its winter climate, it is a favourite resort for invalids. The mean temp. of the year is 59°-3, winter 44°-5, summer 75°, Fahr. The tramontana or N. wind is often attended by severe storms. The sirocco or S. wind is debilitating in summer. Frost seldom lasts over the night, and snow falls on an average only 1½ days in the year; but, in the severe season of 1812, and again in 1863, the ponds were frozen over for several days. Rome has 354 churches, with 7 basilicas, many of which are remarkable for their architecture and their decorations; of these the cathedral of St Peter's is the largest and most sumptuous in the world. Founded A.D. 1450, its building occupied 176 years; it was planned and commenced by Bramante, but altered and carried on by Raphael, Peruzzi, Sangallo, and Michael Angelo Buonarroti. It was dedicated by Urban VIII., 18th November 1626. Length of the cathedral 613 feet, width 286 feet, height to top of cross 484½ feet. The space covered by the buildings of St Peter's is said to be 240,000 sq. feet; and the cost, exclusive of the sacristy, bell-towers, etc., was 10,000,000*l.* In A.D. 306 Constantine the Great built a basilica on same area, which, in 1450, had fallen into decay. The church of St John Lateran, founded by Constantine, in which the Popes were crowned, is the mother church of Rome, and contains the gorgeous Corsini chapel. The 5 general councils, known as the Lateran councils, have given celebrity to this basilica, which also contains the Scala Santa, consisting of 28 marble steps, with the Sancta Sanctorum, a Gothic chapel at the summit. The basilica of S. Maria Maggiore, and the ancient church of Ara Coeli, built about the 6th century. The Palace of the Vatican, adjoining St Peter's, is said to contain 4422 halls, chapels, and other apartments; it became the permanent residence of the Popes after their return from Avignon in 1377, and has extensive gardens. Its galleries and halls, the Sala Regia or ambassadors' hall of audience, and the Sistine chapel, decorated by Raphael and Michael Angelo, contain the most choice paintings and statues, including the great fresco of the Last Judgment, and the portion of those carried off by the French, which were restored in 1815. A series of its galleries, splendidly decorated with statues and marbles, contains the famous library of the Vatican, founded A.D. 1447, which is estimated to comprise 30,000 printed books, though generally supposed to amount to 100,000 volumes, and 23,580 MSS. in all languages. Its museum of sculpture, the richest in the world, contains among other specimens the Apollo Belvidere, the Torso, and the Laocoon. The superb palace of the Quirinal, or palace of Monte Cavallo, is surrounded by extensive gardens; attached to this is the palace called the Dataria Apostolica, whence the pontifical bulls are issued. In the square of the Quirinal is the palace of the Consulta, seat of the supreme tribunal. The palace of Salviati contains the archives of Rome. In the Campidoglio, or modern Capitol, forming three sides of a square, are the palace of the senator of Rome, that of the conservatori, the Capitoline museum, rich in objects of art and antiquities; between these is placed the famous bronze statue of Marcus Aurelius. There are upwards of 60 splendid private palaces; the finest of these are the Barberini palace, the Doria palace, remarkable for its extent and its gallery of paintings; the Colonna palace for its gardens; the Rospigliosi and Farnese palaces, the latter celebrated for its architecture; the Borghese palace, with colossal statues, and one of the richest picture galleries in Rome; the Cenci Palace, scene of the tragedy of which Beatrice Cenci was the victim. The villas or residences of the Roman nobles, in the suburbs of the city, are situated amidst orange and citron groves, and are ornamented with fountains and statues; the most magnificent of these is the Villa Borghese, on the Pincian hill, outside of the Porta del Popolo, with gardens 3 miles in circuit, which were much injured during the revolution of 1849. The Villa Medici, formerly celebrated for its Venus, now belongs to the French government, and an annual exhibition of pictures by French artists is held here. The Villa Albani is rich in ancient sculptures and architectural treasures. Of the many scientific and literary establishments, the university of Rome has the first rank. It was founded A.D. 1244, as a school for the canon & civil law. Succeeding Popes enlarged it, and added new chairs. There are now 42 professors, and it is well attended. The chief of the others are the Roman college, founded by the Jesuits, with a rich library and museums of natural history and antiquities, and a celebrated observatory; the college of the Propaganda, in which natives from all parts of the world are trained as missionaries for the spread of the Roman Catholic faith, and to which a celebrated printing establishment is attached. The principal academies are that called degli Arcadi, one of the oldest and most celebrated in Europe, Acad. Archaeologica, Acad. de Lincei, Acad. of the Fine Arts, etc., and the academies of theology, archaeology, the Tiberina, and others. Next to the library of the Vatican, the chief public libraries are the Casanatense in the convent of Minerva, with 120,000 vols. and 4500 MSS.; the Angelic library, with 84,820 printed vols. and 2945 MSS.; and the Corsini library, with 60,000 printed books and a large collection of engravings. Besides the museums of the Vatican and the Capitol, the public collections comprise museums of anatomy, natural history, mineralogy, antiquities, and mosaics, and there are numerous and valuable private collections. Rome has at present 8 theatres, the finest of which is that of Apollo, on the Tiber, near the bridge of St Angelo; others are the Valle and the Argentina; a deaf-mute institution, and numerous hospitals and benevolent institutions, orphan hospitals, and houses of industry, the chief of which are San Spirito, containing a founding hospital and lunatic asylum; the Holy Trinity, and Santissimo Salvatore. In the hospital of San Michele at the Ripa Grande, 800 children are instructed in arts & trades. This institution contains also numerous schools of painting, sculpture, and architecture, a house of correction for juvenile offenders and women, and an asylum for old people; also hand-loom for supplying clothing to the papal troops. The Protestant cemetery is situated near the Pyramid of Caius Cestius, and contains the tombs of Shelley and Keats. The chief industry of the inhabitants of Rome is connected with the production of articles of art, and the supply of the numerous artists, invalids, and other visitors; its few manufactures are confined to woollen and silk fabrics, hats, gloves, strings for musical instruments, artificial feathers, false pearls, mosaics, jewellery, trinkets, coarse glass, and pottery. Many of the population are occupied in attendance on the ecclesiastical courts. The number of priests and friars is about 4500, and of nuns 1900. The remains of ancient Rome comprise the Cloaca Maxima, a great subterranean tunnel still in good repair, the aqueducts, the circus of Romulus, and the circus Maximus, the coliseum, remains of the theatres of Marcellus and of Pompey, the palace of the Cæsars, the temple of Æsculapius on an island in the Tiber, the temples of Concord, of the Sun, and of Vesta, the mausoleum of Augustus in the Campus Martius, the tomb of Cocilia Metella, the mausoleum of Hadrian, now the castle of St Angelo, the columbaria on the Appian way, the Tarpeian rock, the Mamertine prisons, the Prætorian camp, fountain of Egeria, the pantheon, a part of the Thermae of Agrippa, those of Caracalla, Diocletian, Nero, Titus, etc.; the triumphal arches of Titus, Constantine, and Septimus Severus; the columns of Antoninus and Trajan, several Egyptian obelisks, the Roman forum, now called Campo Vaccino. Ruman is said to have been the oldest appellation of the Tiber, hence the name of the cap. Rome, which was founded by Romulus 754 B.C. In the two centuries preceding the Christian era, its dominion extended over all the countries of the Mediterranean; its territories were further extended by the first emperors; but in the 5th century, the barbarians of the N. and E. deprived it of several provs. The city was taken by Alaric in 410, and by Genseric in 455. It passed successively under the domination of the Ostrogoths and the Emperors of the East; it was given to the Popes by Pepin and Charlemagne in the 8th century, and then became cap. of the States of the Church. From 1809 till 1814, it was cap. of the dep. Rome in the French empire under Napoleon I. In 1848, an insurrection broke out after the assassination of Count Rossi, the Pope's prime minister, 15th November; the Pope fled in disguise on the 24th. A republican form of government was attempted in 1849, when on the 8th February the national assembly declared the Pope divested of all temporal power; but this was overturned by the intervention of a French force, which now has possession of Rome.

ROXBURGH, a co. of New South Wales, enclosed by the cos. Wellington, Philip, Hunter, Cook, Westmoreland, and Bathurst. Ac. 972,760, of which 7087 are cultivated. P. (1861) 8932. Surface mountainous, but interspersed with fertile tracts. Rivers are afls. of the Macquarrie. Chief town, Sofala. Lat. of centre 33° 15' S., lon. 149° 45' E. With the co. Wellington it sends 1 member to the legislative assembly.

ROXBURGHSHIRE, one of the border counties of Scotland, lies in the extreme S.E., bordering on England for about 60 m., between lat. 55° 6' & 56° 43' N.; lon. 2° 12' and 3° 7' W. Is extremely irregular in form; breadth 23 m., length 32 m. Climate mild. Contains 670 square m., or 428,494 statute acres, of which 425,638 are land, and 2856 are water. P. (1861) 54,119. The annual value of real property for the year ending Whitsunday 1864 was 355,841l. 17s. 5d., and that of railways, 26,525l. 3s. 6d. The Tweed is the principal river in the co., although it only runs through it for a short distance. The county is divided in a great measure into valleys, popularly called "waters," through which small streams run, having their rise in the upland districts. The Teviot may be said to be the only river in the county, having its rise and termination in it. It runs from the S.W. to the N.E., and receives in its course mostly all the "waters" or small streams. The trout-fishing, formerly unequalled, is injured by the drainage. Jedburgh is the only royal burgh. The other towns are Hawick, Kelso, Melrose, and part of Galashiels. A great source of industry existed in the smaller villages, from handloom weaving, but within the last 30 years this has almost entirely ceased, since the rapid rise of the woollen manufacture in Hawick & Jedburgh, and the employment of steam. It is estimated that the capital invested in the woollen trade in the county is above a quarter of a million, the pop. directly employed 2500. Agriculture in Roxburgh is in a very advanced state in all departments. Oats and barley are the chief cereal crops, though wheat is grown in certain districts to great advantage. The turnip crop within the last 30 years has increased to an enormous extent; and this has given rise to almost a new branch, the feeding of cattle. The sheep formerly reared were Cheviots, but this description has been almost superseded, except in the higher districts, by the Leicesterers. Roxburgh has few minerals of any value; lime and freestone are the most frequently wrought. It is now completely intersected by the N. B. Railway and its branches. It returns one mem. to H. of C. Reg. elect. in 1863, 1618.

RUSSTI, a comm. and vill. of N. Italy, prov. and circ. Ravenna. P. 3747.

RUSSIA (EMPIRE OF) is the largest state in the world, extending in Europe, Asia, and America, between lat. 38° 20' and 71° 24' N., lon. 190° E. to 167° 59' W. Surface estimated to comprise 1-26th of the superficies of the globe, 1-7th of its land, and more than double the extent of Europe, the total area being (as shown in the table) 7,813,953 sq. m.; coast line 25,000 m. It is but thinly peopled, P. 74,139,394. Capital, St Petersburg. The Russian empire contains a greater number of distinct races than any other country, comprising Slavonians, Lettons, Germans, Caucasians, Jews, Walachians, Greeks, Persians, Indians, Samoyedes, Tartars, Tunguses, and Turks. It is usual to treat of the empire as divided into European, Asiatic, and American Russia, although these divisions are not officially recognised, and several of the govts., as Perm and Orenburg, are partly in Europe and partly in Asia. European Russia extends from the N. slope of the Caucasus Mountains, lat. 40° 20', to Lapland, lat. 70° 16' N.; and, including the kingdom of Poland, from lon. 18° to the W. slope of the Ural Mountains, gov. Perm, lon. 60° 45' E. It is bounded E. by Siberia and the Caspian Sea, S. by Asiatic Russia, the Black Sea, and the Ottoman and Austrian empires, W. by Moldavia, Austria, Prussia, the Baltic, and Sweden, and N. by Norway and the Arctic Ocean; and is divided into 49 govts. and 12 provs., besides the country of the Cossacks, a kind of military republic, and the grand duchy of Finland. The surface of Russia in Europe may be considered as one vast plain, enclosed by the Ural Mountains on the E., the Caucasus on the S., and partly by the Carpathians on the W. It opens to the Caspian Sea on the S.E., and the level countries of N. Germany on the W. Throughout its vast extent it does not contain a single mountain; the highest point between the Baltic and the Black Sea, near Kremenetz, is 1328 feet above the ocean. The Baltic provs. have a mean elevation of 1000 feet above the sea. The centre of the country is occupied by a dome-shaped elevation traversed by the Valdai hills, the average height of which is 800 to 900 feet, and the summit 1100 feet above the sea; these sink rapidly to the S.E., where they are lost in marshes. Russia is traversed by the largest rivers in Europe; these form the great N. and S. basins, the water-parting between which is marked, not by mountains, but by slightly undulating ground: the Baltic receives the Tornea, Kemi, Ulea, Kumo, Neva, Narva, Duna, Niemen, and Vistula; the Arctic Ocean receives the Pasvig, Kola, Petchora; and, by the White Sea, the Vigo, Omega, Dwina, and Mezen; the Black Sea receives the Danube, Dniester, Dnieper, Don, and Kuban; the Caspian Sea, the Ural, Volga, Kuma, and Kerek. In the N. of Russia there are numerous and extensive lakes; the chief are Lake Ladoga, the largest in Europe; Lake Omega, in the gov. Olonetz; Lakes Saima, Payama, and Kolgis, in Finland; Peïpus between the govts. Revel, Riga, Pskov, and Petersburg; Ilmen in the gov. Novgorod, and Enara in Lapland. The smaller lakes, Bielo in Novgorod, Koubinskoe or Koubenski in Vologda, are important for the internal navigation of the empire. The most valuable of the salt lakes is Elton in Saratov. Among the numerous islands belonging to the empire, the chief are the group of Novaia Zemlia (new land), in the Arctic Ocean, the archipelago of Spitzbergen, which is claimed by Russia, Kalguef, and Waigatz Islands. Geological phenomena, confirmed by history and tradition, warrant the conclusion that a great portion of Central Russia was under the sea at a comparatively recent period. The soil comprises every variety, much of which is unfit for cultivation. The vast region of the tundras, extending from lat. 64° N. to the N. coast, is a swamp in summer, and is covered with ice for nine months in the year; it produces only moss. S.W. of this the country, for a space of 150,000 sq. m., is covered with forests of pine, larch, and birch. The isthmus of Finland, between the White Sea and the Gulfs of Finland and Bothnia, a space occupying 500 m. in length, and 400 in breadth, is covered with lakes interspersed with rocks and sand hills; while in the S.E. an immense desert, called a steppe, extends between the Ural and the Volga, estimated to contain 330,000 sq. m.; a portion of it affords tolerable pasture. W. of lon. 46°, a series of salt lakes occupy a hollow space, which probably once formed a portion of the Caspian Sea. This steppe is exposed to the greatest extremes of temperature; in winter the thermometer is generally 15°, and sometimes 35° below zero, while in summer the heat is upwards of 100° Fahr. From its vast extent, Russia has a great diversity of climate; the plains of the N., exposed to the winds of the Arctic Ocean, are much colder than the other countries of Europe in corresponding latitudes. The whole of the N. coast, from lat. 66° on the White Sea, S.E. to lat. 62° N., lon. 59° E., has a temperature below zero, and the surface is constantly frozen. Between this frozen space and lat. 58° N., the mean temperature varies from 32° to 40°; at St Petersburg, which is within this space, the thermometer in December and January sinks to 22° below zero, while in summer it rises to 85° or 90°. S. of lat. 58° the mean temperature is between 40° and 55°; the winters are short and severe, summers long and hot. In the interior S.S.E. and S. winds prevail, while W. and N.W. winds are most common on the coasts. Rain is most abundant in the Baltic provs., where the average annual fall is 15 to 20 inches. The amount and frequency decrease in proceeding from W. to E., and during the long summer of the S. provs. rain very seldom falls. Snow falls early in winter,—the average number of days in the year on which snow falls at St Petersburg is 70.

Russia produces all the plants common to the other countries of Europe. Corn is raised more than necessary for consumption, and is exported, although agriculture is in its rudest state. Rye is the chief crop, and is very widely grown; the cultivation of barley extends to lat. 67°, and oats to lat. 62° N.; wheat is grown chiefly in the Ukraine. The countries of Central Russia, in the upper basin of the Volga, are the most fertile in the empire; and its middle portion, comprising the govts. of Nijnii-Novgorod, Penza, Kasan, and Simbirsk, is called the granary of Russia. Hemp and flax are grown chiefly on the Upper Volga; tobacco is cultivated principally in the Ukraine; grapes are grown in the Crimea, and on the lower courses of the Don and Volga. The forests yield valuable produce, and building timber, tar, pitch, and potash are widely exported. Black cattle and sheep are extensively reared; tallow and hides are exported in great quantities; sheep-skins form the dress of many of the peasantry, but the wool is of inferior quality. The horses of the S. and central provs. are large, in the N. they are small; those of the Cossack tribes are capable of enduring great fatigue. Camels are kept in large herds by the nomadic tribes in the steppes, and dromedaries in the Crimea. The bison is found near the sources of the Narew; the reindeer is confined to the region N. of lat. 66° N.; the elk, wild swine, deer, and hare are found in the forests of the N.; and the fur-bearing animals are actively hunted. Wolves and bears are common. In addition to the birds common to other countries of Europe, the capercaillie is found in the N., and the pelican in the S., on the shores of the Black and Caspian Seas; geese and ducks abound in the lakes. Fish is plenty in the rivers, especially in the Volga and the Ural, and in the White Sea and the Sea of Azov. In the Arctic Ocean, on the shores of Novaia Zemlia, the whale and seal are fished. The E. part of Russia is rich in minerals; the two govts. of Orenburg and Perm, and especially the latter, have numerous mines of gold, platinum, and copper; silver does not occur in European Russia; iron abounds in the S. provs. In the mining districts of the Ural, the pop. is flourishing and industrious; the utmost activity is manifested, forests have been cleared, marshes drained, and the gorges of mountains have been filled with artificial lakes, water being the chief motive power. Salt is extensively made in the govts. Perm and Viatka, and in the W., south of Lake Ilmen. Lignite and brown coal occur in the Crimea, and on the W. of the Ural mountains; the coal field on the Donetz is estimated at 100 m. long, and several feet deep. Coal beds of immense extent were discovered in the gov. Moscow in 1844. Since the time of Peter the Great, the progress of manufs. has been most rapid, and the improvement of their products have been commensurate with it. The staple manufs. are woollens, silks, linens, cottons, metal wares, soap, and candles; besides which are manufs. of glass, paper, porcelain, arms, jewellery, and morocco leather. Most of the articles used by the peasantry are made in the villages, one of which is usually devoted to a single branch of industry. In the kingdom of Poland, the chief manufs. are of woollens, linens, leather, and fur goods. The commerce of Russia is greatly facilitated by its numerous navigable rivers, and its vast and excellent system of canals, by means of which, not only do the Baltic and the White Sea communicate with the Caspian and the Black Sea, but the great lakes and the principal rivers are united into a complete system of inland navigation. The American Commercial Company, formed in 1797, has establishments in Russian America, and at Moscow, Kazan, Tomsk, Irkutsk, and Kamtchatka. The railways completed are 715 m. in length; the chief are from Warsaw, by Czenstochau and Cracow, joining the Austrian and German lines at Kosel, and that from St Petersburg to Moscow and Nijnii-Novgorod. Moscow is the centre of internal commerce; and the chief seaports are St Petersburg, with Kronstadt and Riga on the Baltic, Archangel on the White Sea, Astrakhan on the Caspian Sea, and Odessa on the Black Sea. Exports (1862)—northern ports, flax, timber, hemp, seeds, tallow, wool, tar, bristles, cable yarn, iron, cotton, isinglass, bones, linens, oil-cake, silk, etc., to the value of 10,328,153*l.*; imports, cotton, tea, woollens, iron, machinery, coals, coffee, cochineal, lead, hardwares, soda, tin, linens, salt, rice, wine, etc., to the value of 3,224,455*l.* Exports, southern ports, beef, seeds, grains, tallow, wool, etc. to the value of 4,772,906½; imports, machinery, tea, coffee, iron, coals, cottons, sugar, agricultural implements, earthenware, etc., to the value of 509,163½. Ports on the North Pacific Ocean—imports (1862), cottons, woollens, machinery, iron, etc., to the value of 7914½. The government of Russia is an absolute hereditary monarchy. All power emanates from the emperor or czar, who is head of the church, and by law a member of the orthodox Greek church. All rank is based on the tenure of civil or military office. The nobility are a privileged class; they have great political power, and possess more than half of all the cultivated land of the country, but they have suffered a heavy loss by the recent serf emancipation. The established religion of the empire is the Greco-Russian, officially styled the Orthodox-Catholic faith. The emperor appoints to every office in the church. There are in Russia 500 cathedrals, and nearly 30,000 churches of the establishment, with 70,000 secular or parochial clergymen, and 550 convents. The total number of the clergy of all orders is about 255,000, supported mostly by their own flocks. All religionists are tolerated except the Jews, who are excluded from Russia Proper. There are upwards of 2,000,000 Mohammedans in European Russia, besides Jews, Feticists, worshippers of the Grand Lama, and many sectaries. The nearest estimate gives to the orthodox faith 56,000,000, Roman Catholics 6,500,000 (chiefly in the Polish provs.), Protestants (mostly Lutherans in the Baltic provs.) 4,000,000, Jews 2,000,000, nearly one-half in the kingdom of Poland. Education is still in a very backward state, although great efforts have been made to extend it of late. In 1860 the educational establishments comprised 6 universities, and, according to the Minister of Public Instruction, in the whole empire 8937 schools, with 950,000 pupils, giving 1 pupil to every 17 of the population; but this is believed to be much too favourable, and other calculations allow 1 pupil to 140 of the pop. The army of Russia is formed of the regular troops, and the feudal militia of the Cossacks, etc. The actual strength of the armed force is not known. One estimate (1863) makes the whole amount to 1,000,285 men; another in Sept. of the same year, makes the whole force consist of 36,674 officers and 1,161,958 privates. The Russian navy consists of two great divisions, the fleet of the Baltic and that of the Black Sea, which are again subdivided. An official report of July 1863 gives the following 6 divisions:—The Baltic fleet, 12 ships of the line, 14 frigates, 6 corvettes, gun-boats, steamers, etc., in all 64 sail; the Black Sea fleet has 42 war steamers; the White Sea fleet, 2 war, and 3 smaller steamers; the Caspian fleet, 10 steamers, and 10 steam transports; 2 steamers in the Sea of Aral; the fleet on the Amur comprises 6 corvettes, 7 schooners, and 11 steam transports. A fleet of iron-clad vessels and steam rams are now (1864) being built at St Petersburg and Nicolaef. The first public account of revenue and expenditure was issued by the Minister of Finance in May 1862, when the income was stated at 42,265,977½, expenditure 44,374,248½, deficit 2,108,271½. Great changes in the sources of income have taken place. On 1st January 1863 the right of farming out the supply of brandy ceased, and was replaced by free trade; and the poll-tax in towns was abolished, and replaced by a house-tax. On 3d March 1861, an imperial decree was passed, declaring the emancipation of the serfs throughout the empire. This came into full force on 3d

March 1863, and the owners received compensation at rates varying according to circumstances. There were 22,000,000 serfs belonging to private owners, besides 22,225,000 crown peasants, men and women, whose emancipation was accomplished at the end of 1863. By an imperial decree of the same year land was granted to the freed serfs, for which they are to pay rent for 49 years, then become freehold landowners. Great Russia is the north and middle portion of the empire in Europe, formerly called Muscovy.—White Russia, a portion of Lithuania.—Black Russia, the west part of Lithuania.—New Russia, a region in the south, comprising the territories of the Cossacks.—Little Russia, in the south-west.—Red Russia, which, until 1396, was an independent dukedom, now forms a part of Austrian and Russian Poland (Galicia and Poland). In consequence of the invasion of the Danubian provinces by the Russians, war was declared by the Turks against Russia, and afterwards by England and France, which resulted in the invasion of the Crimea by the combined forces in 1854.

Russia in Asia embraces Siberia, or the whole of N. Asia, E. of the principal crest of the Ural Mountains, comprising the govts. of Tobolsk, Tomsk, Yeniseisk, and Yakutsk [SIBERIA]; parts of the region of the Caucasus, forming the govts. of Stavropol, etc., and the territories of Transbaikal, Yakutsk, Semipolatsk, the Kirghiz of Siberia and those of Orenburg, with the recently acquired territories of the Amur, extending to the Pacific. [AMUR, MARITIME REGION, CASPIAN, CAUCASUS, CRIMEA, DAGHESTAN, GEORGIA.]

Russian America comprises the continent of N.W. America, W. of lon. 141° W., and a strip of coast extending S. to lat. 55° N., bounded on the E. by British America, S. and W. by the Pacific, and N. by the Arctic Ocean. Area estimated at 394,000 sq. m. P. (1864) about 80,000, of whom 10,144 are Russians; and the following island groups:—Prince of Wales Island, Duke of York Archipelago, George III. Archipelago, the Kodiak islands, and the Aleutian islands. Interior little known; climate severe, and soil sterile. The principal settlement is New Archangel, a small town with 1500 inhabitants, on the island Sitka, called Baranov by the Russians, the largest of the group of George III. Archipelago, which was so named by Vancouver. It is the seat of the governor of the establishments of Russian America, and has fortifications, magazines, and a governor's residence, all built of wood. The Russian American Company, incorporated 1799, for fishing and hunting fur-bearing animals, whose chief establishments were here, had 50 ships of all sizes engaged in the collection and conveyance of peltry. It employed 847 men, of whom 39 were sailors of the fleet, and 179 soldiers of the Siberian regiments. The privileges of the company expired at the end of 1863, when the territory was placed under a civil organization. Besides these possessions, Russia has a small colony called Bodega, in California, N. of San Francisco; its port is small, but important for the Russian fur trade.

Russian Poland, comprises, besides the kingdom of Poland as established in 1815, the govts. Vilna, Courland, Vitebsk, Moghilev, Minsk, Grodno, Volhynia, Kiev, Podolia, and the prov. Bialystok, formerly composing Lithuania, Samogitia, and the Ukraine.

Russian Tartary, comprises the E. part of European, and the W. of Asiatic Russia, and forms the govts. Perm, Viatka, Kazan, Simbirsk, Pensa, Saratov, Orenburg, and Astrakhan.

The largest of these are the Great Oasis, about 90 m. in length, and those of Fezzan, Gadames, and Tuat. Pasture is excellent also in the country near the Atlantic. Its inhabitants are Arabians, Berbers, Tuariks, and Tibboos, estimated at not much more than 1,000,000. They profess the Mohammedan faith. It is traversed in many directions by caravan routes; travellers on which are exposed to many dangers, and often undergo the most intense sufferings from thirst, and from exposure to the simoom, or hot dry wind from the S. and E., which usually lasts 10 or 12 hours; during its continuance the air is impregnated with fine sand, and the sun is barely perceptible. Rain appears to fall in torrents at intervals of 5, 10, or 20 years, and many places of the desert bear evidence of its action having been at one time more continuous. The heat is excessive during summer, but in winter the evenings are cool, and during night frequently cold. Palm trees grow on the borders of the Sahara, and the chief products of its oases are dates, gums, and salt. Its fauna comprises the ostrich, camel, gazelle, lion, panther, and serpents, and even monkeys in the less sterile parts.

SAIDA, Sidon, a maritime town of Syria, cap. pash. of Sidon, on the N. side of a steep promontory, extending into the Mediterranean, lat. 33° 34' N., lon. 35° 21' E., 13 m. S. Beyrout. P. 5000, of whom 3000 are Moslems, 600 Jews, and the rest Catholic and Maronite Christians. It has well-supplied bazaars, and its vicinity abounds with orchards and plantations. It has ruins of a castle, and its peninsular site is shut off from the mainland by walls. The harbour was, in the 16th century, rendered unfit for any but boats, and its commerce declined on the rise of Beyrout; yet it has still some trade in silk, fruit, oil, and gall nuts. There is a school and Protestant chapel here, conducted by the excellent American missionaries. The original Sidon, some traces of which are supposed to remain about 2 m. inland, was a city of the highest antiquity. It is called the "Great Zidon" in Scripture, is mentioned by Homer, and was subsequently eclipsed in importance by Tyre, but it remained a place of consequence long after the Christian era.

SAIGHTON or SAUGHTON-ON-THE-HILL, a township of England, co. and 4 m. S.E. Chester, pa. St Oswald. Ac. 1720. P. 272.

SAI-GON, a fortified city and river port, cap. of the new French colony of Lower Cochinchina, on the rt. or W. bank of the river of Sai-gon, 34 m. from its mouth in the China Sea, lat. 10° 47' N., lon. 106° 41' E. P. has been estimated at 180,000, including many Chinese. It consists of two towns, connected by a straggling suburb with the citadel on the W. side of the Sai-gon. The colony of which Sai-gon is the cap. comprises the three provs. of Dong-Nai, Bienhoa, and Sai-gon, or that portion of Lower Cochinchina extending east of the river Cambodia to the small river Kumi, 85 m. in a direct line, and N. on the Cambodia to 11° 10' N., 130 m. along the river course. It is watered by many large streams, besides the Cambodia and Sai-gon. Coasts very much indented with deep bays. Climate hot and humid; soil extremely fertile; and trade extensive. P. (1864) estimated at 1,500,000. In 1862, 114 European ships and 72 Chinese junks entered the Sai-gon river. Exports (same year) 2430 tons of dried fish, 2363 barrels cocoa-nut oil, 18,635 buffalo hides and 16,570 horns, 45,130 mats, 715 tons Arracan nuts, 1023 bales cotton, and 1746 bales calico, besides 42,470 tons rice, sugar, tobacco, and silk. It is regularly built, and intersected by canals, some of which are lined with quays of stone and brick-work. Houses mostly of earth, of one storey, and thatched with palm leaves. The citadel, fortified in a European fashion, contains barracks, officers' quarters, and the governor's residence. Sai-gon has a naval yard and arsenal, where some good junks have been built, a royal palace, and large rich magazines. It communicates with the Cambodia by a canal 50 m. in length. It was taken by the allied French and Spanish troops in 1860, when it was made a free port, and telegraph lines were laid through the province. A treaty between the emperors of France and Spain and the king of Anam, 1st Jan. 1863, gives the French command of all the mouths of the Cambodia river, with the island group of Pulo-Condor.

SAINT ANDREWS, a pa. and seaport city of Scotland, on the east coast of Fifeshire, connected by a branch, which terminates here, with the N. B. Railway. Ac. of pa. 12,500. P. (1861) 7550; (census return), parl. burgh 5176. The city is situated on the rocky edge of a bay of the same name. Lat. 56° 20' 26" N.; lon. 2° 47' 40" W.; about 30 m. N.N.E. Edinburgh. Created a royal burgh by David I. in 1140, and an archbishop's see, according to Sibbald, in 1471. The cathedral of St Andrews, the ruins of which still attest its former magnificence, is supposed to have been founded about the year 1159, and was destroyed 400 years later, at the reformation, which was carried on here by John Knox. South of the cathedral stood a priory, and to the east of it the church of the Kirkheugh, consisting of a provost and ten prebendaries, and formerly belonging to the Culdees. The foundations and part of the walls of this edifice, which stand close to the edge of a precipitous shore, were uncovered in 1860. The ancient tower and chancel of the chapel of St Regulus, still exist in excellent preservation. St Andrews also possessed monasteries of the Black and Grey Friars; and the ruined chapel of the Black Friars, surrounded on three sides by the playground of the Madras College, picturesquely lines the South Street, the principal street of the city. The university is the oldest in Scotland, having been founded in 1411. St Salvator's College was founded in 1455, St Leonard's in 1512, and St Mary's in 1537. St Mary's is the divinity hall. St Salvator's and St Leonard's, now united, have a principal and 9 professors, and 59 bursaries; attendance (1864) 144 students. St Mary's has 4 professors, one of whom is also principal. There is a library belonging to the university, and a museum within the buildings of the United College, belonging to the Literary and Philosophical Society. The cost of the purchase of books for the library is met by an allowance of 630*l.* per annum, in lieu of the privilege of Stationers' Hall. Besides class fees, the university and its colleges have a net revenue, after deducting public burdens, bursaries, etc., of about 3300*l.* St Andrews set the example in Scotland of the establishment of a college hall, or institution presided over by a warden, and designed for the board, lodging, and instruction of young gentlemen attending the university. The buildings of the College Hall were formerly those of the old St Leonard's College. St Andrews was the scene of many of the most remarkable political and religious events in the history of Scotland. It was also a place of considerable trade, but fell into decay in this as well as in other respects. The only manufs. at present are those of golf clubs and balls. Johnson, who visited the city in 1773, notices its character of silence and solitude. More recently, however, it has been undergoing a renovation. Since 1800 its inhabitants have more than doubled, its population in that year being only 2519. This may be partly owing to the erection of the Madras College, which is seen in rear of the Blackfriars Chapel, already noticed. The ground on which it stands anciently formed part of the monastery of that order. This institution was founded by the Rev. Dr Andrew Bell, a native of this city, who died in 1832, and was built after his death. It is a school of general education, including classes on the Madras system, which was imported by its founder from India. Average number of pupils 900. There is also an infant school, with an average attendance of 120. Much credit for the improvement of the city is due to the late provost, Lieut.-Col. Sir Hugh Lyon Playfair. Through his exertions a broad foot pavement has taken the place of grass-grown causeway, and the old town-house, which formerly stood in the middle of Market Street, obstructing the thoroughfare, is now swept away, and a more elegant building erected instead in South Street. St Andrews is becoming increasingly a place of fashionable resort, and its buildings are rapidly extending. The following religious denominations exist within the city:—Established Church of Scotland (which has three places of worship), Free Church, United Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Independent, and Baptist. There are also a quoad sacra parish Church and a Free Church at Strathkinness, and a preaching station connected with the Established Church at Boarhills, within the parish. The castle was built by Roger, bishop of St Andrews, about the year 1200, and stood upon a point of land projecting into the sea. Here JAMES III. was born. The sea is making considerable encroachments on the shores along the bay. Traditional evidence of this, as regards the environs of the castle, may be found in Martine's Reliquiæ D. Andree. St Andrews unites with Cupar, Crail, the Anstruthers, Kilrenny, and Pitvenneem, in sending a member to H. of C. Reg. elect. of dist. of burghs 830; of St Andrews 297.

SALISBURY or NEW SARUM, a city, parl. and munic. bor. of England, cap. co. Wilts, on the Avon, here crossed by 3 bridges, 96 m. W.S.W. London, on the S.W. Railway. Pop. of bor., comprising, with the city, parts of the pas. Fisherton-Anger and Milford (1861), 12,278. It stands in a fertile plain, partially enclosed by walls, and drained by brooks, which flow down most of its streets. Altitude 151 feet. In its centre is a market-place, in which are the council-house, the public library, and news-room. The cathedral is a splendid structure, wholly in the early English style, and in the form of a double-cross; length 474 feet, width of larger transepts 210 feet, height of spire 404 feet. Its foundation was laid by Bishop Poor. It was built in 43 years, and dedicated A.D. 1258, in the presence of King Edward III. The cathedral and the town of Salisbury were built at the same time. Attached to the cathedral are spacious cloisters, a chapter-house, library, etc.; and in the close are the bishop's palace, deanery house, and residences of the canons and other dignitaries. The see comprises the cos. Wilts and Dorset. Beside three parish churches, here are chapels of Roman Catholics, Independents, Baptists, Swedenborgians, Wesleyans, and Unitarians, a grammar school, co. gaol in Fisherton-Anger, theatre, assembly and concert rooms, and a co. infirmary. There is a bronze statue of Lord Herbert, 9 feet high, in the market-place. Its woollen and cutlery manufs. have long declined; principal trade in agricultural produce. It communicates by a branch of the S. W. Railway with Southampton, 20 m. distant, and is the seat of county assizes, and spring quarter and petty sessions, and a court-leet for the manor. The city sends 2 members to H. of C., reg. elect. (1864) 688; and is the place of election for the S. division of the co. It rose on the removal of the see from Old Sarum 2 miles northward, in 1217; and parliaments were occasionally held in it in the 13th and 14th centuries. The inhabitants evacuated Old Sarum in consequence of the scarcity of water, and therefore they supplied New Sarum (Salisbury) with a rivulet in each street.

SALISBURY, several townships, U. S., North America.—I. New Hampshire, 16 m. N.N.W. Concord. Birthplace of the Hon. Daniel Webster.—II. Massachusetts, on the Atlantic, 36 m. N.N.E. Boston.—III. SALT LAKE (CITY OF THE GREAT), a city of the United States, North America, cap. of Utah territory, on the Jordan river, which flows thence N. 9 m. to Great Salt Lake. Lat. 40° 46' N.; lon. 112° 6' W. It is 776 m. from San Francisco by the usual route of travel. P. (1862) about 15,000. The city is 4 m. in length by 3 m. in breadth, the streets are at right angles, upwards of 150 feet wide, ill paved and muddy, and through the city flows a stream of clear water. It has a mint, court-house, arsenal, and a temporary place of worship, used until the grand temple, which is in progress, be finished. It is the seat of the Territorial Government of Utah. This settlement was formed in 1847 by the "Mormons" or "Latter Day Saints," after their expulsion from the city of Nauvoo, in Illinois. Their prophet Joseph Smith, and his brother, were murdered in the gaol of Carthage by an armed mob. In the beginning of 1846, the van of the Mormons crossed the Mississippi on their route to the western wilderness, under the guidance of Brigham Young, the successor of Joseph Smith; and after enduring great privations during the journey, in 1847 the pioneers reached the spot where they established the city, and in autumn were joined by the main body. During the winter and spring they suffered from famine, but on the arrival of harvest provisions became abundant. Large flocks of sheep and herds of cattle are reared; and, with the view of being a self-sustaining colony, beet-root is grown for the manufacture of sugar, a woollen factory has been built, besides grist-mills, cutlery and pottery manufactories. Owing to the scarcity of rain, great attention is paid to artificial irrigation, by means of reservoirs of snow, which accumulates in the gorges of the mountains and yields never failing streams during summer. The soil is remarkably rich. The "Mormons" are zealously engaged in the task of spreading their dogmas, by a numerous staff of missionaries in all parts of the globe, having this city as their head-quarters, and a large emigration fund has been established. As circumstances require, new cities are founded in the wilderness, to meet the wants of immigrating converts. Cedar City, 250 m. S. of the Great Salt Lake City, has been laid out in a spot having the advantage of water, good soil, wood, iron ore, alum, and the appearance of a plentiful supply of coal. It is the design of the "Mormons" to found stations where the country will support a numerous population, to establish a line of communication with the Pacific, so as to assist their brethren on their pilgrimage to the head-quarters of the church. The "Mormons" have heavily taxed themselves for the purposes of their sect. Already have schools been built in most of the districts both in the city and country, which are well attended by old and young, with a normal school for the instruction of teachers, besides liberal assignments in money and land for the support of a university, the site of which has been laid out and enclosed, on a terrace of the mountain overlooking the city. Captain Howard Stansbury, chief of the U. S. survey corps, who resided amongst them upwards of twelve months, describes them as being "industrious, hospitable, and patriotic;" & Burton (1861) describes them as being humane and kind to the Indians. "All civil and ecclesiastical power is vested in the priests, and justice is promptly and wisely decreed. A plurality of wives is allowed." In March 1849, they adopted a constitution, to remain in force until the United States Government should otherwise provide for the government of the territory, and sent a delegate to Congress. The government afterwards ratified the constitution, and appointed President Young governor of the new territory.

SALT LAKE, a co., U. S., North America, Utah. P. (1860) 11,295.

SALT LAKE (GREAT), an inland lake of North America, Utah territory, near the E. side of the "Great Basin," on the W. slope of the Wahsatch Mountains, 4200 feet above the sea. Length, N.N.W. to S.S.E., 75 m.; breadth 15 to 40 m. It contains Antelope, Carrington, Stansbury, Fremont, & many smaller islands; receives the Bear River from the N., and the Jordan from the S., but has no visible outlet. These rivers, when in flood, raise the lake to a maximum of 4 ft., covering many miles of flat shore. The lake is bounded by large-saline incrustations; and on the W. the country is a complete desert. Its waters are charged with 20 per cent. of common salt, and above 2 per cent. of foreign salts. Near its shores the atmosphere is bluish and hazy from the effects of active evaporation.

SALTNEY, a township, N. Wales, co. Flint, on the Dee, pa. Hawarden, on Chester and Shrewsbury Rail.,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.S.W. Chester. Ac. 2185. P. 1325.

SALT RANGE, a group of mountains in India, in lat.  $32^{\circ} 30' N.$ , lon.  $33^{\circ} 20' E.$ , stretching from W. to E. Highest peak 2500 feet above the sea. This famous range commences near the river Jhelum, and runs thence due W. right athwart the Sind Sagur Doab (separating the Doab into two divisions), till it reaches the Indus. There, leaving at Kalabag a narrow channel for the river to pass through, it crosses the Trans-Indus region, till it meets at right angles the Suliman range, which runs from N. to S. The salt range is bleak and barren on its surface, having neither trees nor verdure of any kind; and yet is rich in iron ore, slate, coal, gypsum, limestone, and rock salt, this last mineral being so pure that it only requires pounding previous to its being used. The salt is either found cropping out in all directions, or lies in strata, commencing near the surface, and extending downwards in inexhaustible veins.

SANTIAGO DE COMPOSTELLA, Compostella, a city of Spain, formerly cap. of Galicia, prov. and 33 m. S.S.W. Coruña, on the Sar. P. 28,970.
It is built around its celebrated cathedral; has numerous arcades, and fountains. The cathedral has a striking interior, and each of its sides faces a public square; in one of which squares is the diocesan seminary, and a large hospital, founded in 1504, for the numerous pilgrims who used to resort to the city; the area of the square serving for a bull-ring. It has numerous other hospitals and convents, 2 collegiate and 15 pa. churches, a university, into which all its colleges have been incorporated; manufs.
of hosiery, cotton, hats, and leather; but its chief resources are in its ecclesiastical establishments, and the resort to it of numerous devotees, the roads around it being so bad as scarcely to admit of commercial traffic. It is the see of an archbishop, and the metropolis of the knightly order of St James of Compostella.

Principal rivers, the Volga, which intersects its centre, and its tributaries the Tereshka, Saratovka, and Jeruslau; besides the Choper and Medveditza, tributaries of the Don. Principal lakes, the Elton and Yarko-jeosero, from the former of which about 17,850 tons of salt are said to be annually obtained. Rye, wheat, oats, millet, and pease are cultivated, partly for export. Potatoes, flax, hemp, tobacco, hops, melons, and grapes, are also produced. Sheep and cattle breeding are conducted on a large scale, and the rearing of bees and silkworms is increasing. The fisheries in the Volga are valuable, and salt fish and caviare are exported. Principal minerals, salt, mill-stones, and iron. Manufactures linen, cotton, and woollen fabrics, hosiery, iron-ware, leather, and earthenwares. The inhabitants comprise Tartars, Kalmucks, Kirghiz, and Germans; the latter are colonized in great numbers on the Volga, having had grants of land and privileges conferred on them by the Empress Catherine II., in 1763. The gov. is subdivided into 10 circs. Principal towns, Saratov, the cap., Petrovsk, Kamuschin, and Tzaritzin.—Saratov, the fortified cap., is situated on rt. b. of the Volga, 290 m. E. Voroniej. P. (1858) 63,888. Consists of an upper and lower town, built chiefly of wood, and has Lutheran, Roman Catholic, and Greek united churches; a mosque, monasteries, an archbishop's palace; government buildings; a bazaar, several hospitals, a college and other schools; an ecclesiastical seminary, manufactures of cotton cloths, cotton and silk hosiery, clocks, watches, leather, tobacco, rope, and earthenwares; a bell-foundry, breweries, distilleries, and vinegar factories. From its position on the Volga, and between Astrakhan, Moscow, and Nijnii-Novgorod, it imports colonial goods, and exports corn.

SARAWAK, a country of Borneo, on the W. coast of the island, extending between lat.  $1^{\circ}$  and  $2^{\circ} N.$ , lon.  $109^{\circ} 40'$  and  $111^{\circ} 40' E.$ , bounded W and S. by the mountain Krimbang, and watered by the river Sarawak and its tributaries; cap. Saravak, formerly Kuchin. P. 15,000, including 150 Chinese. It is governed by a chief of British origin, Sir J. Brooke, who has taken the title of rajah; before his appointment in 1841, it had only 1500 inhabitants. An English church-mission has been organized, and native schools built. Geological formation, granite. It yields the most abundant supply of sulphuret of antimony in the world. It has Greek and Roman antiquities, and some of a much remoter period. Exports, gutta percha, gold dust, birds' nests, sago, wax, and Indian reeds. The imports consist principally of cotton stuffs, rice, opium, and arms.

SARAWAN, a prov. of Beloochistan, mostly between lat. 28° and 30° 20' N., lon. 64° and 67° 40' E., having N. Afghanistan, E. the prov. Cutch-Gundava, and S. Jhalawan and Mukran. Area 15,000 sq. m. P. 50,000. Surface mostly mountainous and rugged; Mount Tukato, in the N., rises to upwards of 11,000 feet and the prov. comprises the high table-land of Kelat; but has some fertile valleys, as those of Shawl and Mustang, which produce corn, pulse, madder, tobacco, and excellent fruits. Principal towns, Sarawan, Quetta, and Mustang.—Sarawan, the cap., enclosed by a mud wall, 98 m. W. Kelat, consists of about 500 houses in a barren district.

SARDARA, a vill. of the island Sardinia, prov. Cagliari, 23 m. S.E. Oristano. P. 2421.

SARDINIA (Ital. Sardegna), the largest and next to Sicily, the most important island of the Mediterranean, S. of Corsica, from which it is separated by the Strait of Bonifacio, 115 m. S.W. the nearest point of the Italian peninsula, between lat. 38° 51' 50" and 41° 15' 42" N., lon. 8° 3' 39" and 9° 50' 30" E. Length 164 m., average breadth 61 m. Area, including the island of Capraia, 9359 sq. m. P. (1862) 588,064. Surface generally mountainous. Mount Genargentu, near its centre, is 7000 feet above the sea. On the W. are extensive plains, that of Buddoso is 3000 feet above the sea. The Tirsu, the largest river in the island, rises in this plain, and flows W. to the Mediterranean; the other rivers, the Coghinas, Flumendosa, and Fiume Bosa, are small; the finest and most fertile valley is that of Campidano, between the Gulfs of Cagliari and Oristano; there are no large lakes in Sardinia, but numerous ponds and marshes. Coast much indented, and forms excellent harbours; that of Cagliari is one of the best in the Mediterranean. The principal gulfs are Cagliari in the S., Orosei in the E., and Oristano in the W. There are numerous small islands near its shores; the chief are Asinara off the N.W., S. Pietro and S. Antioco off the S.W., Madalena, Caprera, and Razzoli off the N.E. points. Climate very variable; snow lies on the highest mountain for 6 or 7 months in the year; long droughts frequently occur in summer, when many districts are rendered extremely unhealthy on account of malaria. Prevailing winds, the misel (N.W.) stormy, and the Levante (E.) hot and dry. Rain falls mostly from October to December during the S.W. and N.W. winds. One-third of the superficies is occupied by barren and stony deserts. There are extensive forests of the oak, pine, cork, and chestnut trees; wheat, barley, and pease are exported, but agricultural operations are conducted in the rudest manner, although in ancient times the island was considered the granary of Rome. The cultivation of the vine is increasing in importance; olive oil is of inferior quality. Near Milis, 12 m. N.N.E. Oristano, excellent oranges grow, and cotton thrives near Cagliari in the S. Tobacco and salt are a royal monopoly; silk is produced in small quantity. Domestic animals are small and of inferior breeds; the moufflon, a species of sheep, is supposed to be indigenous. Cheese from the milk of sheep and goats is extensively made, and forms a valuable export. Deer, wild boars, and foxes abound, and the skins of hares, rabbits, martens, and foxes, are exported. Tunny, anchovy, and coral fisheries are important, but conducted chiefly by foreigners. The island yields gold, silver, lead, and other minerals, but they are rendered useless for want of means of conveyance; only lead mines are in operation. Good coal was found in the S.W., near Iglesias, in 1851; and there are many mineral springs. Manufs. are limited to gunpowder, tobacco, and, on a small scale, cotton, silk, woollens, and pottery. The island, under the administration of the kingdom of Italy, is divided into 2 provs., Cagliari in the S., and Sassari in the N. These are subdivided into 9 circles, named from their chief towns Alghero, Nuoro, Ozieri, Sassari, and Tempio, in Sassari; Cagliari, Iglesias, Lanusei, and Oristano, in Cagliari. Chief town, Tempio. The island is governed by a viceroy, resident at Cagliari. Religion exclusively Roman Catholic. There are two universities, one at Cagliari, and another at Sassari, and a primary school in each village. Sardinia was colonized by the Carthaginians, from whom it was taken by the Romans after the third Punic war. On the fall of the Western Empire, it came successively under the power of the Vandals, Goths, and Moors. At the end of the 12th century, it was held by the Genoese, and afterwards by the kings of Aragon till 1713. In 1720 it was acquired by Savoy in exchange for Sicily. It was the only portion of the Sardinian dominions which was left in the power of the sovereign during the usurpation of the French from 1798 to 1814.

SARDINIA or THE SARDINIAN STATES (Ital. Stato Sardi), the N.W. portion of the kingdom of Italy, formerly a separate kingdom, consisting of two parts—I. the Continental States; and II. the Island of Sardinia, from which it derives its name. The continental portion comprised the duchy of Savoy, now forming the French depts. Savoie and Haute-Savoie; the country of Nice, now the French dep. Alpes Maritimes; the principality of Piedmont; the marquisesates of Saluzzo and Monterrat; Genoa, & the W. portion of the old duchy of Milan. It was bounded N. and E. by Switzerland; E. by Lombardy and Venice, now divided into the provs. of Alessandria, Cuneo, Genoa, Novara, Pavia, Porto Maurizio, and Turin (see Table of Italy); S. by the Mediterranean; and W. by France. Surface mountainous, covered W. and N. by the Western and Central Alps; the culminating points of which, within its new boundaries, are Monte Rosa, the Grand Paradis, Mount Cenis, and Monte Viso; and over the passes of the Alps are the routes of the Splugen, St Gotthard, St Bernard, and Mount Cenis. It is watered by the Var and Magra, which flow to the Mediterranean, and by the Po and its affls. the Maina, Tanaro, Stura, Dora, Sesia, and Tessin. Climate cold in the mountainous districts, but warm in the valleys, many of which are rendered unhealthy from rice fields. Principal crops, rice, maize, wheat, chestnuts, vines, olives, figs, oranges, and citrons. Mules are extensively reared. The silk of Piedmont is considered the best in Italy. Chief exports, cattle, iron, silk fabrics, olive oil, and flax. The Kingdom of Sardinia, the origin of which was the duchy of Savoy, was successively enlarged by the annexation of Piedmont, the co. of Nice, and the island of Sardinia. From 1798 to 1814, its continental portion formed part of the French empire. In 1815, it was augmented by the addition of Genoa and the island of Capraja. In 1855, Sardinia, in alliance with the British and French, took the field against Russia. In April 1859, the Austrians invaded the Sardinian territories by crossing the Ticino; and, as the result of several victories gained by the Sardinians and the French, Lombardy was annexed to Sardinia. On 17th March 1861, the king, by decree of the Chambers, took for himself and his descendants the title of the king of Italy. [ITALY, PIEDMONT, LOMBARDY, SAVOY.]

SASKATCHEWAN ("Swift Current"), a river of British North America, N.W. territory, rises in the Rocky Mountains, near lon. 115° W., by two principal heads, one in lat. 49°, the other in lat. 53° 30' N. These branches flow generally E. to their junction about lat. 58° 20' N., lon. 105° W., whence the river has a tortuous course to its mouth in Lake Winnipeg. It is navigable thence and along its N. branch for about 1000 m., to Acton or Rocky Mountain House. It gives name to a wide district. The climate of the valley of the Saskatchewan is very healthy, though the cold is severe in winter. Coal and iron of the best quality exist in several places, the former discovered by Dr Hector in 1860. More recently gold has also been discovered on the northern arm, but hitherto little has been done to turn it to account. It is estimated that between the point of confluence of the two main arms of the river and the lake of the woods, there are no less than 11,000,000 acres of arable land, well adapted for growing wheat and maize. The proposed line of post road and telegraph connecting Canada with British Columbia will pass through this district of country, when every facility will be held out to British immigrants to settle in it.

SAXON LAND, the south part of Transylvania, watered by the Aluta river and its afflu. Area about 4243 sq. m., and pop. 465,000. It is subdivided into seven jurisdictions or stuhls, named from their caps. Herrmannstadt, Klausenburg, Mediasch, Muhlenbach, Scheuerstadt, Reusmarkt, and Broos or Szasvaros (whence Transylvania derives its German name of Siebenburgen or the "Seven towns"), to which Kronstadt and Bistriz were afterwards added. The present inhabitants preserve almost unmixed their German language and hereditary usages, and are the most industrious race in Transylvania. Agriculture is carefully conducted. Manufactures of woollen, cotton, and other goods, are carried on in the towns, the principal of which are Hermannstadt and Kronstadt.

SAXON SWITZERLAND, is a name applied to the mtnous. part of the kingdom of Saxony, S.E. Dresden. It is highly picturesque, but none of its mtns. rise to above 2000 feet in elevation.

SAXONY (Germ. Sachsen), an old division of North Germany, which extended between the Baltic and the North Sea in the N., and Bohemia and Bavaria in the S. In the former partition of Germany, the circle of Upper Saxony composed the greater part of the present kingdoms of Prussia and Saxony, and that of Lower Saxony, Hanover, Brunswick, Mecklenburg, and Holstein.

SAXONY (Germ. Sachsen), a kingdom of Central Europe, in the middle of Germany, between lat. 50° 10' and 51° 28' N., lon. 11° 55' and 15° 3' E. Bounded S. by Bohemia, W. and N. by Bavaria, Reuss, Saxe-Weimar, Saxe-Altenburg, and Prussia; cap. Dresden. Length 144 m., breadth 15 to 88 m. Area and pop. as follows:—

Circles.	Sq. m.	Pop. 1861.
Dresden, . . . . .	1675	583,213
Leipzig, . . . . .	1342	506,294
Zwickau, . . . . .	1791	827,245
Bautzen, . . . . .	971	308,488
Total, . . . . .	5779	2,225,240

According to religious worship, the population is thus divided:—Lutherans 2,175,392, Reformers 4515, English Church 333, Roman Catholics 41,963, German Catholics 1722, Greek Catholics 460, Jews 1555—total 2,225,240

S.E. frontier by the Erzgebirge and Riesengebirge, the latter rising to 4000 feet in height; the mean elevation of the country is about 1100 feet. The climate of Saxony, in the plains, is mild and salubrious, but a portion of the mountain district of the Erzgebirge is termed "Saxon Siberia," from the severity of the winter climate. Mean temperature of year at Dresden 49°-1, winter 32°-7, summer 66°; at Altenberg the mean temperature is only 42°-5 Fahr. Soil fertile in grain, and cultivated with great care; the chief crop is rye; wheat and barley are grown in the valleys, oats and potatoes in the higher districts. Fruit is extensively cultivated, and wine of inferior quality is produced from the vineyards of the Elbe. The forests, which cover 1-4th of the surface, furnish excellent timber. The breed of merino sheep is celebrated, and yields valuable wool, much of which is exported to England. Cattle breeding is important in the high grounds, and sheep breeding for wool, which is excellent in quality. Horses are not extensively reared. The country is watered by the Elbe, which traverses it from S.E. to N.W., entering it through the range of the Erzgebirge, navigable for barges and small steamers, and its afflu., the Little Elster, the Zwickauer Mulde, Zschopau, Freiburger Mulde, Röder, Spree, and Pleisse. Saxony is rich in iron, lead, copper, silver, cobalt, bismuth, antimony, and coal. Upwards of 500 mines are in active operation; the centre of the mining districts is the Freiberg. Porcelain clay, marble, and building stones are abundant. The chief manufacture is that of cotton, in which great improvements have been made, and there are many cotton printing works. The other chief branches of industry are linen and woollen weaving; woollen cloth making, including merinos and delaines, lace and embroidery; and the fine porcelain of Meissen, called Dresden China, which is equal to that of France; paints and articles for decorative use made from cobalt ore; pianos and other musical instruments. Commerce, which is very extensive, especially in books and manufactured goods at Leipzig, is facilitated by the river Elbe, and by railways from Dresden to Leipzig, Halle, Berlin, etc. In 1862 there were 252 m. of railway in operation. The religion of 97 per cent. of the pop. is Lutheranism, but the royal family are Roman Catholics. Public instruction is well developed, the proportion being 1 pupil to every 6 of the pop. (95 of every 100 children capable of instruction being in attendance at school), and the university of Leipzig is one of the principal in Germany. There are 9 normal colleges. The electorate of Saxony, created in 1422, was erected into a kingdom by Napoleon I. in 1806, who united to it the grand duchy of Warsaw, which, along with some portions of the Saxon territories, was detached from it in 1815. Previous to 1835, Saxony was divided into the 5 circles of Meissen, Leipzig, Erzgebirge, Voigtland, and Lusatia. Saxony is a member of the Germanic Confederation, in which it holds the fourth rank. The government is a hereditary limited monarchy. Public revenue and expenditure (1861-63) 12,356,352 thalers, or 1,853,452*l.* Debt (1861) 61,725,499 thalers, or 9,258,210*l.* Armed force 25,400 men, with 56 guns.

Lat. of chief town on its E. coast 38° 33' 7" N.; lon. 26° 1' E. Length N. to S. 32 m., greatest breadth 18 m. Area 508 sq. m. Surface very much diversified; it is naturally one of the richest and most beautiful islands of the Levant. Principal products, wine of superior quality, mastic, silk, wool, cheese, figs, lemons, oranges, and other fruits. Previously to 1822, this island was the best governed and most prosperous in the Grecian archipelago, and had thriving silk manufs., and a considerable trade with Constantinople, Syria, and Egypt; but in the above year, some of its inhabitants having joined the Samians in their revolt, nearly all the population, comprising from 120,000 to 130,000 persons, were massacred or sold into slavery by the Turks, and the buildings and plantations were for the most part destroyed. Principal town Kastro, on its E. coast. The tragic poet Ion, the historian Theopompus, the sophist Theocritus, and the philosopher Metrodorus, were natives of this island, which also claims, in opposition to Smyrna, to have been the birth-place of the Greek poet Homer.

At ancient Scone, of which almost the only remnant is a market cross, the kings of Scotland were formerly crowned, on a famous stone now preserved in Westminster Abbey. Here was an abbey and royal palace of the Scottish kings, on the site of which now stands a modern palace.

SCONE, a post town of New S. Wales, co. Brisbane, on Kingdon Ponds, 75 m. N. W. Maitland. P. (1861) 343.

SCOONIE, a pa. of Scotland, co. Fife, comprising the town of Leven. Ac. 4286. P. 3257.

SCOPELO, island, Archipelago. [SKOPELO.]

SCOPIA, a town of Europ. Turkey. [USKUF.]

SCOPWICK, a pa. of England, co. Lincoln, 8 m. N. Sleaford. Ac. 8190. P. 383.

SCORBOROUGH, a pa. of England, co. York, E. Riding, 4 m. N. N. W. Beverley. Ac. 1324. P. 89.

SCORDIA, a town of the isl. Sicily, prov. and circ. Catania, on the border of the prov. Noto. P. 5668.

SCORTON, a township of England, co. York, North Riding, pa. Caterick, on the Swale, with a station on the Preston and Carlisle Railway, 8½ m. S. E. Lancaster. Ac. 1500. P. 111.

SCORAX, a township of Engl., co. Cumberland, on Newcastle and Carlisle Rail., 2½ m. E. Carlisle. Ac. 1672. P. 520.—Scotforth is a township, co., pa. and 1½ m. S. Lancaster. Ac. 2764. P. 955.

SCOTLAND, the northern portion of Great Britain, extends in its mainland from lat. 54° 38' to 58° 40' N., lon. 1° 46' to 6° 15' W., and including its islands, to lat. 60° 51' N., lon. 7° 44' W. It is of an oblong irregular form, the mainland measuring from N. to S. about 276 m., and the breadth varies from 30, 50, 100, to 175 miles. It is bounded on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean, on the E. by the North Sea, and on the N. by the Pentland Firth, which unites the Atlantic and North Sea, and divides the Orkney and Shetland Islands from the mainland. On the S. E. it is separated from England by the river Tweed: direct S. by a waving line of the Cheviot hills, and S. W. by the Solway Firth. Estimated area, including its 186 islands, 30,685 sq. m., or 19,639,377 ac., or 6'41 ac. to each person, of which 5,043,450 ac. are cultivated, 13,000,550 uncultivated, and 688 sq. m. are lakes & rivers. P. (1801) 1,599,068; (1841) 2,620,184; (1851) 2,888,742; (1861) 3,062,294. The coast line, including the main inlets, is estimated at 2506 m. On the N. are the two groups of the Orkney and Shetland Islands. On the W. the Hebrides or Western Isles, running N. to S. from ½ a mile to 50 miles from the coast. This group comprises the islands of Lewis and Harris, N. and S. Uist, Skye, Mull, Jura, Islay, etc. On the W., arms of the sea penetrate inland, forming Loch Long, between Argyle and Dumbarton shires, Loch Fine and Loch Linnhe in Argyle-shire, and Loch Eil in Inverness-shire. In Ross-shire Lochs Carron, Torridon, Gair, Ewe, Grei-nord, Broom, and Enard. In Sutherlandshire Lochs Assynt and Laxford. In addition to these there are innumerable inland fresh water lochs. On the E. the indentations are called firths, comprising the Forth, Tay, Moray, Dornoch, and Cromarty; and on the W. coast is the Firth of Clyde, which is of great commercial importance. The Atlantic and North Sea are connected by the Caledonian Canal, Loch Fine and the Atlantic by the Crinan Canal, and the rivers Forth and Clyde by the Forth and Clyde Canal. There are numerous headlands and promontories on the coast, the chief of which are St Abb's Head, Berwickshire; Fifeness, a low sandy headland, is the termination of the peninsula of Fife; Budoness, in Forfarshire, with a lighthouse; Girdleness, with a lighthouse, at the mouth of the Dee, in Kincardineshire; Buchanness, with a lighthouse, in Aberdeenshire, and the most easterly land in Scotland: and Kinnaird Head, also with a lighthouse, at the entrance of Moray Frith; Tarbetness, with a lighthouse, on a peninsula between the Dornoch and Beaulie Firths, in Ross-shire; Clyth Ness, Noss Head, Holborn Head, Duncansby Head, and Dunnet Head, the latter with a lighthouse, in Caithness; Strathey Point, Whiten Head, Far-out Head, Assynt Point, and Cape Wrath, with a lighthouse, in Sutherlandshire; the Mull of Cantyre, with a lighthouse, at the entrance to the Clyde, besides Toward and Cloch Points, with lighthouses, on the Clyde; Corsewall Point, with a lighthouse, at the N.W. extremity of the Rhinns of Galloway; Mull Head and the Mull of Galloway, the last with a lighthouse, are in Wigtonshire, besides numerous other headlands. The chief rivers are the Tweed, Forth, Tay, North and South Esk, Dee, Don, Spey, Deveron, Lossie, Findhorn, Ness, Conon, Brora, Helmsdale, and Wick, on the eastern side; the Nith, Annan, Dee, Cree, Ayr, Doon, and Clyde, on the S. and W. The principal harbours and piers on the E. coast are Berwick, Leith, Granton, Burntisland, Grangemouth, and the roadsteads of Inchkeith and St Margaret's Hope; on the N.E. Dundee and Aberdeen; and on the W. Greenock and Glasgow. Mountains are numerous: the Grampian range commences with Ben Nevis (the highest summit in the United Kingdom, 4406 feet), in the S.W. corner of Inverness-shire, and extends in a N.E. direction, intersecting the country to near the E. shores of Aberdeenshire, with branches stretching S. to the Tay, and N. and N.W. to the shores of the Moray Firth. The Grampians, with their off-sets, form an extensive mountain chain, with elevations varying from 4400 to 3000 and 2000 feet in elevation above the sea. The valley of the Caledonian Canal separates this region from the mountainous district of Sutherlandshire, which terminates at Cape Wrath. On the S., bordering on England, are the Cheviot hills, rising in Cheviot Peak, Northumberland, to 2688 feet; in the S.E. the Lammermoors, between Haddington and Berwick, 1600 feet; in Dumfriesshire, Queensberry hill, 2140 feet; the Lowthers, 8100 feet; Hartfell, 2638 feet; & in Peeblesshire, Broad Law, 2741 feet above the sea. The geological formation of the country comprises granite, porphyry, primary schists, marble, and quartz rock, with occasionally metallic veins; while the old red sandstone formation fills up the valleys and the coast line on each side N. and S. of the Grampian mountains, extending, with the exception of the E. part of Aberdeenshire, along the whole coasts of Scotland, both E. and W. sides, from the Tay and Clyde N.wards. The middle portion of Scotland, from St Andrews to St Abb's Head, and in corresponding lines westward to Dumbarton, comprehends the great coal-field of the country, intersected by the greenstone ranges of the Ochil hills on the N., and the Lanarkshire hills, Pentlands, and Fife Lomonds, in the centre. Another coal district extends also into Berwickshire and part of Roxburgh, while the whole region from the Lammermoor range S. and W. into Peebles, Dumfriesshire, and Wigtonshire, is composed of the lower Silurian or greywacke formation. Limestone and ironstone are found in the coal districts, lead ore in the greywacke districts of Leadhills, silver in the Ochil hills, with lead, antimony, and manganese in the primary range of the Grampians. Traces of oolitic strata are found in the North and in the Western Islands. Temperature in the W. and S. parts mild, but humid; the central elevated regions chill and humid; the eastern plains and Lowlands more genial, though exposed in spring to chill easterly winds. In the Lowlands the summer is not so hot; but the winter is, on the whole, milder than that of England, and the climate is reckoned salubrious, and favourable to longevity. From meteorological observations at 39 different localities extending over all parts of the mainland and islands, for the 5 years 1857-61, the mean temp. for January was 38° 03' Fahr., and for July 57° 6'. The following table exhibits the temperature of several localities:—

	Mean of winter.	Mean of summer.	Mean of year.	Rain in inches.
Edinburgh, . . . . .	Deg. 38·4	Deg. 57·2	Deg. 47·1	25·
St Andrews, . . . . .	39·2	58·9	48·6
Aberdeen, . . . . .	39·0	58·5	49·2	27·5
Elgin, . . . . .	38·4	60·4	47·7	24·0
Inverness, . . . . .	35·0	57·0	46·0	27·0
Glasgow, . . . . .	38·6	57·6	47·1	45·4
Perth (Kinfauns), . . . . .	37·6	57·2	46·9	30·8

Mean annual temperature of mainland 47°·9 Fahr. Average rainfall for the 10 years 1850-59, as calculated at 16 distinct places, including the islands, 37·4 inches. At Torosay, in Mull, it was 74·64 in., while at Pittenweem, in Fife, it was only 38·24 in. In general, much more rain falls on the W. coast than on the E. Prevailing winds W. and S.W.; in spring N. and N.E. The central, W., and N.W. districts are chiefly grazing and pastoral, the valleys and plains of the E. and S. districts agricultural. The alluvial or carse lands of Stirling, Falkirk, and Gowrie, the plains of the Lothians and Clydesdale, portions of Fife, Berwick, and Roxburgh-shires, in the S., and Moray and Ross-shires in the N., are highly cultivated, and all the usual agricultural products are raised. Farms almost universally on leases, varying in extent from 50 to 1000 ac., and pasture farms extend to 3000 and 5000 ac. Farming, since the middle of last century, has attained to a high degree of perfection. Estimated annual produce of grain crop of the entire country 9,675,000 qrs. Except in the greater preponderance of Alpine plants, the flora of Scotland resembles very much that of England. There are about 3230 indigenous plants. Extensive pine forests, both natural and artificially planted, abound, and the usual fruit trees thrive well. Grouse and ptarmigan abound in the moors, but the capercaillie (Tetrao Urogallus), formerly abundant, was exterminated about 1760. The nightingale is unknown in Scotland. Salmon and trout abound in the rivers; and herrings, cods, haddocks, and other fish, in the seas. The pearl oyster fishery of the Tay, Teeth, Don, Garry, and Tummel, revived in 1860, when fine specimens were procured. Manufs. cotton, linen, woollen, glass, and stoneware; coal and iron working, ship-building, coach-building, and whisky distilling, are pursued. Iron furnaces built in 1863, 169; furnaces in blast, 134; make of pig-iron 1,160,000 tons. In 1863, 6,292,771 gallons of whisky were entered for home consumption. Total quantity of herrings cured in 1863, 654,816 barrels; barrels branded 276,880; fees for do. 4614*l.*, 13*s.* 6*d.* Exported 403,694 barrels. During the same year the quantity of cod and ling taken was 788,261 fish, of which were cured, dried 129,559 cwts., do. in pickle 7337 barrels. The number of boats employed in the herring fishery on the E. and W. coasts was 12,575 (tons 91,366) manned by 43,782 men and boys; value of boats and gear 781,255*l.* The salmon-fishing is also very valuable. Nett revenue of property and income tax 10,715,385*l.* Registered shipping 3245, burden 615,394 tons; steamers 207, burden 43,747 tons. Number of British sailing vessels entering coastwise (1862) 14,339, tonnage 945,769; steamers 6712, tonnage 1,458,237; British sailing vessels cleared 16,417, tonnage 1,044,085; steamers 6660, tonnage 1,454,042. The country is everywhere intersected with excellent roads, and railway communication to all the leading towns. In 1862, 1777 miles of railway were opened, and several connecting branch lines projected and in course of formation. The total number of passengers 17,610,927, receipts for goods and passengers 3,153,404*l.* In 1864 railway communication extended as far N. as the borders of Sutherland. Principal canals are the Forth and Clyde, Union, the Crinan, and Caledonian. Scotland is divided into 33 counties, the area, population:—

Scotland contains 140 towns of less than 10,000 inhabitants; 10 of more than 10,000 and less than 20,000, of which the principal are Ayr, Arbroath, Montrose, Dumfries, Stirling and Dunfermline; 5 of more than 20,000 and less than 50,000, namely, Paisley, Greenock, Leith, Perth, and Kilmarnock; 2 of more than 50,000 and less than 100,000, namely, Dundee and Aberdeen; and 2 of above 100,000, Glasgow (446,639), and Edinburgh, the cap. (168,121). There are, besides, 529 villages. In each of the counties are a lord-lieutenant, a sheriff-depute and substitute, and local justices. The courts of session and judiciary exercise the supreme jurisdiction. [EDINBURGH.] Popery was abolished as a national church in 1560, when the Presbyterian form of worship was substituted, consisting of local presbyteries and Synods, and a General Assembly meets yearly in Edinburgh. Since 1712, the right of appointing to livings is vested in the Crown, or with private parties. A secession on account of patronage took place in 1741. In 1834 the Veto Act passed the General Assembly, modifying the right of patronage; but this act having been overthrown by Parliament, a disruption took place in 1843, when 470 clergymen, along with a large number of adherents, left the Establishment and formed the Free Church. In 1861 these had increased to 973 ministers, while the Established Church had 1486, the United Presbyterian Church 588, Episcopal Church 198, Roman Catholic 185 priests, and all other denominations 396 ministers. Altogether there were 5642 ministers and other church officials; 5400 persons connected with the law, while 5464 were physicians, druggists, midwives, and other persons connected with medicine; 372 authors and literary persons; 11,835 teachers; 467,056 scholars, being 15.2 per cent. of the population, or 1 in every 6.5 persons. The proportion in England is nearly the same, being 15.7 per cent. The number of persons that emigrated from Scotland to foreign parts in the ten years ending 8th April 1861 was 183,627, not including the large number that went to England and Ireland. There are 3395 places of worship of all denominations, affording 1,834,805 sittings, the proportion of sittings being 63.5 per cent. The various religious denominations bear the following proportion to the population:—Established Church 34 per cent., Free Church 32 do., United Presbyterian Church 18 do., all other churches 16 do. Popery in the 17th century was dominant in the western portion of the country, and in the isls. of Inverness and Ross-shires. Its chief seat now is in the Hebrides, on the west coast, and islands of Inverness-shire, and in the counties of Aberdeen and Banff. In the island of Barra fully one-half of the population are Roman Catholics. Episcopalians are now most numerous in the districts where Episcopacy at one time predominated—Inverness-shire, and the neighbouring district of Strathnairn, the south-east of Ross-shire, in Fort-William and Appin, and in the vicinity of Dunkeld. There has been no bishop of Caithness and Orkney since 1762. Irish immigration has greatly increased the number of Roman Catholics in the large towns. In 1863 the number of primary schools inspected was, exclusive of Roman Catholic schools, 1512; the average number of children in attendance was 162,120. Number of registered paupers and their dependents (exclusive of casual poor) in receipt of relief in parishes in 1863 was 120,284, in 884 parishes. Total amount expended in relief and management of the poor (1863) 736,028*l.* The Gaelic language still prevails in the Hebrides and in the west and inland parts of Argyll, Inverness, Ross, Sutherland and Caithness shires; but it is rapidly receding from the lowland borders. The old Scottish language is a cognate Teutonic dialect; it is now generally superseded by the modern English, though it will live in the works of Ramsay, Burns, and Scott. Scotland, previously an independent kingdom, was joined to England in 1603, on the accession of James VI., and a legislative union of the two kingdoms took place in 1707. By this treaty 16 peers, elected from the whole body of Scottish peers, represented the country in the House of Lords; and the counties returned 80 and the boroughs 15 members to the House of Commons. In 1832 the borough members were increased to 23, the entire number being now 53. The elective franchise nearly corresponds to that of England. [BRITAIN.]

In its perpendicular side, facing the sea, is a cavern termed the "bone cave," from 400 of the inhabitants of Eigg having been smothered here by the clansmen of Skye.

SCURGOLA or SCURCULA, a vill. of South Italy, prov. and 22 m. S.S.W. Aquila. P. 2986. Near this, in 1268, Charles of Anjou gained the battle of Tagliacozzo.

SCUTARI or ISKUDAR, Chrysopolis, a town of Asia Minor, on the Bosphorus, immediately opposite Constantinople, of which it is considered a suburb, although 2 m. apart. Pop. estimated at 60,000. It is built on several hills, and has, externally and internally, a great resemblance to the Turkish capital, with numerous mosques and imarets or kitchens for the poor, a palace and gardens belonging to the Sultan, a college of howling dervishes, barracks, an extensive Turkish cemetery, public baths and bazaars, corn warehouses, and manufactures of silks and cotton fabrics. Its hospital was occupied by the Anglo-French army in 1854-5, and in the beautiful English cemetery there is a monument to the heroes of the Crimean campaign. It is the great rendezvous for caravans from Asia trading to Constantinople, and between it and Chalcedon; 1½ m. S.ward is the plain where the Turkish forces usually assemble for Asiatic campaigns. Here, in 325, the troops of Constantine the Great finally defeated those of Licinius.

SCUTARI or SKUTARI, Scodra, a town of European Turkey, Albania, cap. sanj., at the confl. of the Boyana and Drinassi, at the S. extremity of the Lake of Scutari, 45 m. S.E. Cattaro (Austrian Albania). P. 40,000, about one-half of whom are Roman Catholics. Immediately adjacent is a lofty height crowned by a citadel, and containing the residence of the governor, with an arsenal and barracks. It has a bazaar, mosques, Greek and Roman Catholic churches, several bridges, yards for building coasting vessels, and manufactures of cotton goods and fire-arms. Its merchants are the principal traders in W. Turkey; they export wool, wax, hides, skins, tobacco, and dried fish, to Trieste, Venice, and Avlona; and import in return colonial produce, with silk fabrics and other manufactured goods for sale at the large fairs of Turkey.

SCUTARI (LAKE OF), Palus Labeatis, European Turkey, Albania, sanj. and kadilik Scutari, is 20 m. in length from N. to S.; average breadth 5 m. Besides several other rivers, it receives the Moratsha at its N. extremity. Scutari is on S. b.

Length 470 m., for 350 m. of which it is navigable; but, with its tributaries, about 900 m. Its waters are sluggish, and its banks are highly picturesque in the lower part of its course. It waters the depts. Côte-d'Or, Aube, Marne, Seine-et-Marne, Seine-et-Oise, Seine, Eure, and Seine-Inf. Chief affls., on the left the Yonne, Loing, Essonne, Eure, and Rille; on the right the Aube, Marne, and Oise. At Troyes its bed is 331 ft. above the sea, at the confluence of the Loing 184, at Corbeil 147, and at Rouen 111 ft. It communicates with the Loire by the canals of Loing, Orleans, and Briare. The Yonne unites it with the Saône and Rhine by the canals of Burgundy, and those of the Rhone and Rhine. The Oise connects it with the Somme, Scheldt, and Sambre, by the canals of Crozat, St Quentin, and the Sambre, and it communicates with the Meuse by the Aisne and the canal of Ardennes; by the canal from the Marne to the Rhine, it communicates with the Meuse, Moselle, and Rhine.

SEINE, the most important dep. of France, in the N., enclosed by the dep. Seine-et-Oise, formed of part of the old prov. Ile-de-France; cap. Paris. Area 183 sq. m. P. (1861) 1,953,660. The surface of this dep., forming the environs of the cap., is covered with towns, villages, villas, and manufactories. It contains Mont Valerien, Montmartre, and some other hills; is watered by the Seine and Marne, and traversed by the canals of St Denis & St Martin, and by several railways. The dep. has valuable quarries of building stones and gypsum. It furnishes Paris with vegetables, melons, peaches, and strawberries. Its industry is concentrated in the cap. It is divided into the arrs. Paris, St Denis, and Sceaux.

SEINE-ET-MARNE, a dep. of France, in the N.E., forming part of the old prov. Ile-de-France, and surrounded by the depts. Marne, Aube, Yonne, Loiret, Seine-et-Oise, and Aisne; cap. Melun. Area 2215 sq. m. P. (1861) 352,312. Surface slightly undulating, traversed by the rivers Seine and Marne, Morin and Yères, and by the canals of l'Ourcq and Loing. One-sixth of the dep. is covered with forests, among which is that of Fontainebleau. Corn is grown, and it has excellent pasturage, in which cattle are reared; it furnishes a great quantity of the cheese of Brie. Manuf. millstones. The wine is of inferior quality, except the Chasselas of the environs of Fontainebleau, which is the best in France. The roses of Provins are employed in medicine and perfumery. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Coulommiers, Fontainebleau, Meaux, Melun, and Provins, & is traversed by many lines of railway.

SEINE-ET-OISE, a dep. of France, in the N., entirely surrounding the metropolitan dep. Seine. Area 2163 sq. m. P. (1861) 513,073. Surface undulating. It is watered by the Seine, Essonne, Oise, Bièvre, and Epte. Climate very healthy; soil not fertile. Near Paris, however, it is liberally manured. Industry chiefly agriculture; oats are extensively imported, but other grains are grown in sufficient quantity for home demand. The wine is mostly of inferior quality; cider and beer supply its place. The rearing of cattle and sheep, and cultivation of fruits and vegetables for the Paris markets, are important. The famous Sevres porcelain, and printed fabrics, cotton yarn and cloths, hardwares, leather, and chemical products, are among the chief goods manufactured; plaster of Paris and sand are among the mineral products. SERVIA (Mæsia Superior, with a part of Illyricum), a state of South Europe, cap. Belgrade, between lat. 42° 21' and 45° N., lon. 19° 10' and 22° 45' E., having N. the Danube separating it from Hungary, E. Wallachia and Bulgaria, S. Macedonia, and W. Bosnia and Albania. Area 12,600 sq. m., and pop. (1861) 1,098,281, of Slavonic descent, and mostly Christians of the Greek church. Surface mountainous, having in the W. branches of the Dinaric Alps, and in S. and E. of the Balkan, in many parts densely wooded and interspersed with numerous fertile valleys. Principal rivers the Morava and its affls. in the centre, and the Timok and Drin, forming respectively its E. and W. frontiers. Maize is the chief grain, but every other species common in Europe is raised. Chief products, hemp, flax, tobacco, and cotton. Timber, chiefly oak, of superior quality, would be a chief source of wealth if facilities were afforded for its export. Pigs fed on acorns in the splendid oak forests are extensively exported; and many cattle, sheep, and horses are reared in the mountains. Leeches and valonea bark are important articles of trade. Iron, copper, lead, mercury, and coal are met with, but few, if any, mines are wrought. Manufs. few; the principal is of cotton fabrics. Servia is divided into 6 provs. and 13 dists.; chief towns, Belgrade the cap., Semendria, Nissa, Jagodina, Kragujevac, and Poschega. The gov. is vested in a prince and a council of 5 ministers. Criminal code founded on that of Austria. Servia was conquered by the Turks in 1385. From 1806 until 1814, it was independent under Czerny George, when it reverted to Turkey; but another revolt, headed by Milosh, occurred in 1815; and by the treaty of Paris, 30th March 1856, it was placed under protection of the great European powers as a semi-independent state. Revenue and expenditure (1863) 447,278L. Tribute to the Turkish government 23,000L. Army 4000 men, with a militia estimated at 70,000 men. The Turks occupy Semendria, Belgrade, and other five fortresses.

SEVASTOPOL, a town and naval arsenal, formerly the Gibraltar of S. Russia, gov. Taurida, near the S.W. point of the Crimea, 38 m. S.W. Simferopol. P. (1842) 41,155, now (1864) only a few thousands. The great harbour or inlet, on the S. side of which the town is situated, extends 4½ miles from W. to E., with an average breadth of half a mile, and is so enclosed by calcareous hills as to conceal the masts of the largest vessels.

This was the station of the Russian Black Sea fleet, and the great school of marine exercise. At a right angle to the great harbour, the South Bay runs 1½ m. from N. to S., and to the W. of it Artillery Bay runs about ½ mile in the same direction; between these bays the town rose in the form of an amphitheatre. The principal buildings, commencing at the shore, were, the house built for the reception of the Empress Catherine II. in 1787, and behind it the admiralty, arsenal, and offices of the marine. In the upper part were the houses of the inhabitants, markets, and a Greek church. The hospitals, barracks, and stores were mostly on the E. side of South Bay, while the quarters of the artillery and the quarantine station were in Artillery Bay. By a special ukase, Russians alone were permitted to reside within its walls. Jews and Tartars were expressly excluded. The South Bay was used for arming and discharging vessels, and for mooring the hulks for prisoners employed in the arsenal. Beyond this on the E. is the Bay of Carenage, with accommodation for 3 ships of the line and 2 frigates. The chief defences were, Fort Constantine, the Quarantine Fort, Fort Nicholas, and Fort Alexander. The 4 forts were built of limestone, faced with granite and porphyry, composed of 3 tiers of batteries, and having each 250 or 300 pieces of artillery. The harbour is infested with myriads of the worm teredo navalis, which attaching itself to the vessels, pierces their timbers, and renders them unfit for service in two or three years. The site of Sevastopol, previously occupied by the old vill. of Aktiar, was chosen by the Empress Catharine II. in 1787. It sustained a siege of 11 months, from 1854 to 1855, by the Anglo-French army, and was several times bombarded; the S. side was ruined, and taken by assault on the 22d September 1855. The Russians sunk some of their ships to block the mouth of the harbour. By the treaty of Paris, March 1856, the marine and military works are not to be restored, and the town is now (1864) in a dilapidated state.

SEVERINA (SANTA), a town of S. Italy, prov. Reggio-Calabria, 13 m. W.N.W. Cotrone. P. 1305.

SEVERN, one of the principal rivers of England and Wales, rises in Montgomeryshire, in a small lake on the E. side of Pinnimmon, 1500 feet above the sea, flows at first generally N.E. until it enters England, and then successively S.E. and S. through Shropshire, Worcestershire, & Gloucestershire, and between Somersetshire and S. Wales, to its expansion into the Bristol Channel, 22 m. S.W. Bristol. Total length estimated at 210 m. Principal affls., the Terne, Upper and Lower Avon, Leyden, Chilt, and Frome, from the E., and the Terne, Wye, Usk, and Taft, from the W., many of which pour themselves into its estuary. From Newtown it has a total descent of 465 feet to the sea; whence it is navigable 180 m. to Welshpool. Barges ascend it as high as Bewdley, but its navigation is tedious and difficult, to obviate which, a canal, 18½ m. in length, has been cut from Gloucester to the sea, navigable for vessels of 350 tons. From Welsh-pool to Newton, its navigation is continued by the Montgomery Canal, and other canals connect it with the Thames, Trent, Mersey, and most other rivers of Central England. The tide, here termed the eagre or bore, rushes into the Severn with such violence, that the stream sometimes rises suddenly 9 feet in height at Gloucester, and extensive embankments have been formed below that city, to obviate the effects of its irruption. The tide is perceptible in the Severn as far as Diglis, below Worcester. At its junction with the English Channel, the Severn is 8½ miles across, and drains about 6000 sq. miles.

SEVERN, two rivers of British America.—I. Canada West, co. Simcoe, discharges the surplus waters of Lake Simcoe N.W.ward into Georgian Bay and Lake Huron. Course about 20 m. It has several rapids and falls.—II. N.W. territory, flows through Severn Lake, and enters Hudson Bay on its S.W. side, after a N.E. course of about 350 miles.

SEVERN, a river of the U. S., North America, Maryland, enters Chesapeake Bay near Annapolis, which city is on its S. bank.—The Severn or Dumaresque river, E. Australia, joins the Darling in lat. 28° 40' S., lon. 150° E.

SEVERN STROKE, a pa. of England, co. and 7 m. S. Worcester. Ac. 3313. P. 679.

SEVERO-VOSTOTCHNOI, the most N. point of Asia, Siberia. Lat. 78° 25' N.; lon. 108° E.

SEVIER, two cos. of the U. S., North America.—I. in E. of Tennessee. Area 526 sq. m. P. 8584 free, 538 slaves.—II. in Arkansas. P. (1860) 7150 free, 3366 slaves.

SEVIGNAC, two comms. and vills. of France.—I. dep. Côtes-du-Nord, arr. Dinan. P. 2580.—II. dep. B. Pyrenées, arr. Pau. P. 959.

SEVILLA or SEVILLE, Hispalis, a city of Spain, and its cap. during a part of the Gothic dynasty, cap. prov., on l. b. of the Guadalquivir, here crossed by a bridge of boats communicating with its suburb Triana, 60 m. N.N.E. Cadiz. Lat. (La Giralda) 37° 22' 44" N.; lon. 6° 0' 59" W. P. (1857) 152,000. Is surrounded by Moorish walls about 5 m. in circuit, having gates and towers, and the ramparts forming public walks; its interior has almost wholly an oriental appearance. The cathedral, a structure of the 14th and 15th centuries, occupies the site of a mosque, and is 400 feet in length, by 269 feet in breadth; and has a square tower, 337 feet in height, and surmounted by a colossal bronze statue of Faith. The interior is still richly adorned, though many of its treasures were removed by the French, and it has numerous chapels, pictures by Murillo and other great artists, organs, and the tomb in which the remains of Columbus were first deposited. Around this edifice are the archbishop's palace, the chapter house, the alcázar, and the exchange, in which are the archives of Spanish America. The Alcazar, a royal palace and gardens constructed in imitation of the Alhambra at Granada, contains the "court of Lions," hall of ambassadors, royal apartments, with many fine paintings, and dwellings which are let out to private individuals or for lodging houses. Before the French revolutionary invasion, Sevilla is reported to have contained 140 parish churches, besides numerous convents, most of which are now converted to other purposes. Other principal buildings are 29 monasteries, 35 convents, 11 hospitals, the city hall, barracks, prisons, theatres, the cannon foundry, arsenal, and in the centre of the city the bull-ring, capable of containing 14,000 spectators. The Torre d'Oro is an octagon tower, probably of Roman construction; a Roman aqueduct still conveys water to the city from Alcalá; and here are other remains of classical antiquity. On one side is the Quemadero, or "burning place of the Inquisition," near which are a large cemetery, and the English burying-ground. The suburb Triana, beyond the river, is inhabited chiefly by gypsies and smugglers, and near it is a Moorish dam erected to prevent the effects of inundations, to which the lower parts of the city are liable. Sevilla is the residence of a captain-general, and the seat of a royal audiencia, and of a university establishment in what was formerly a Jesuit college, and in which and in the city museum are many paintings. It has a lyceum, and other public schools, and scientific associations. Manufactures of silks, woollen and linen cloths, hats, combs, soap, and earthenwares; leather factories; government foundry of bronze and brass ordnance; and muskets and gunpowder; an active fishery in the river, a coasting trade, and exports of oranges, olives, and oil, extensively raised in the vicinity. The royal tobacco and cigar factory employs 3000 hands, chiefly females. The Guadalquivir is navigable up to the city for vessels of 100 tons burden; ships drawing more than 10 feet water load and unload 8 m. below the city. Chief imports are manufactured goods from England, hides, hemp, and flax from the Baltic, iron from Bilbao, and colonial produce from Cuba, etc. The Goths removed their capital from Sevilla to Toledo in the 6th century. The city was taken by the Moors in 711, and by Frederick II. in 1247, after which, until the time of Philip V., it was the chief residence of the Spanish monarchs. The French took it in 1810, and again in 1823. A few miles distant, on the W., is the village Santa Ponce, the ancient Italica, the birthplace of the emperors Trajan, Hadrian, and Theodosius the Great, and where are the remains of a Roman amphitheatre, and other vestiges of antiquity. Santa Ponce and Triana are the seats of large annual fairs. Area of prov. 5292 sq. m. P. (1857) 463,486.

SEVINGTON, a pa. of England, co. Kent, 2 m. E.S.E. Ashford. Ac. 832. P. 113.

SEVRE-NANTAISE, a river of France, rises in the dep. Deux-Sèvres, flows N.W. past Monnières, where it becomes navigable for boats, and enters the Loire on left, opposite Nantes. Length 70 m.—The Sèvre Niortaise rises in S.E. of same dep., passes Niort, where it becomes navigable; it partly separates the dep. Vendée from Charente-Inférieure, passes Marans, and enters the Atlantic at Aiguillon. Length 65 miles.

SEVRES, a comm. and town of France, cap. cant. Seine-et-Oise, arr. and 4 m. E.N.E. Versailles, on railway to Paris. P. 6328. It is celebrated for the great national manufacture of porcelain, and has also manuf. of glass, etc.

SEVRES (DEUX), a dep. of France, in the W., formed of part of the old prov. Poitou, surrounded by the depts. Vienne, Charente, Charente-Inférieure, Vendée, and Maine-et-Loire; cap. Niort. Area 2816 sq. m. P. (1861) 328,817. The surface is divided by a plateau in 2 parts: 1, a mountainous rocky region, partly wooded in the N.E., called the Gatine; and 2, the plain in the S.W. Principal rivers, the Sèvre-Niortaise and Sèvre-Nantaise, from which it derives its name. Soil generally fertile. Pasturage excellent; and cattle, horses, mules, and asses, the latter of an excellent breed, are reared. Game and fish abound. Wolves, foxes, and wild boars are also found.
