SHANG-HAE or SHANGHAI, a seaport city and foreign settlement of China, the chief emporium now open for European commerce, prov. Kiang-su, on the Wong-poo river, 160 m. E.S.E. Nanking. Lat. of British consulate 31° 15' N.; lon. 121° 26' E. P. (1864) estimated from 370,000 to 400,000, of which about 4800 are foreign residents, exclusive of the military, naval forces, and mercantile marine. It stands on a level and highly cultivated plain, and is enclosed by a wall five miles in circuit, immediately outside of which are several populous suburbs. Streets narrow and filthy; public buildings inferior to those of Ning-po; a curious tea-garden and some ice-houses are the objects in it chiefly worthy of notice. It has some flourishing manufactures of flowered silks and muslins, of a peculiar kind, and of iron wares, glass, paper, artificial flowers, and wares in ivory, bone, gold, and silver. It is an important entrepôt of the commerce between the N. and S. provs. of China, exporting manufactured goods to T'ien-tsin, in the metropolitan prov. of Chi-li, and importing large quantities of pulse, flour, meats, rhubarb, and skins from the shores of the Yellow Sea. An extensive internal communication by water facilitates its trade with all the N. half of China, and it is stated to have a direct trade with the countries of Central Asia. Its coasting trade is also very extensive, and 3000 junks are often crowded together in its river, many being from Hainan, Canton, and Malaysia. This refers to the native city only, the foreign settlement being entirely distinct. It is situated outside the walls to the N. and E., on the l. b. of the Wong-poo river, 3 m. long by 1 m. wide, and divided into the British, French, and American concessions. Of these the first is the most important, where the principal mercantile houses have built stately edifices, and there is a wide quay on the river bank called the "Bund." On the opposite bank is the Pootung suburb, where are large manufactures of machinery, and ship-building establishments. The river is here about 500 yards wide, and crowded with shipping from all parts of the world, the anchorage extending for 5 m. down, where from 250 to 300 sailing ships and steamers may be seen at anchor, some of the latter 2500 tons burthen. The chief custom-house under foreign control in China is at this port, with a harbour-master and pilot board. There are fifteen consuls, the principal being British, French, and American. These have criminal jurisdiction over the subjects of their several nations, and the Chinese are amenable to the Taoutai, or chief magistrate of the city. There is also a foreign municipality for the construction and conservation of public works, with power to tax the natives; but beyond these there is no regular executive or legislative government. Shanghai has few products of its own, its importance arises from its position as a central emporium of N. China, and the country up the Yang-tze-kiang. It has regular steam communication with all the open ports in China and Japan, and fortnightly with India and Europe. There are 3 daily newspapers, 2 weekly, and 2 fortnightly, published, in the English language; and 4 three times a week in Chinese. Principal exports to foreign countries are silk, tea, cotton, cassia, camphor, and porcelain; and imports opium, specie, cotton and woollen goods, munitions of war, hardware, and general merchandise; the value of which in 1862 was, imports, 22,863,953*l.*; exports, 14,667,406*l.* The shipping returns for the same year give, inwards, 724,000 tons, of which 353,000 were British. The customs revenue derived from this external trade, in the hands of foreigners, was upwards of 3,000,000*l.*, and that derivable from native commerce about 1,000,000*l.*, rivalling that of the richest ports of India or Australia. Shanghai was taken, 19th June 1842, by the British troops, who captured in the city 171 pieces of cannon and a large amount of military stores, and again taken by the rebels, 7th September 1853. In 1862 it was again menaced by the Taipings, who were driven back for a circuit of 30 m. by an allied force of British, French, and disciplined Chinese, and has since been fortified with a strong garrison of artillery and Anglo-Indian troops.—Shang is the prefix of the names of numerous Chinese cities of less importance.

SHANNON, the principal river of Ireland, through the centre and W. of which it flows, dividing Connaught from Leinster, and traversing the N. part of Munster, where it separates the co. Clare from cos. Tipperary, Limerick, and Kerry. It rises in Cullcagh Mountain, co. Cavan, 280 feet above the sea; flows at first S.W., and then generally S., through Loughs Allen (153 feet above the sea), Boderg, Forbes, Ree, and Derg, to near Limerick, where it turns W. and joins the Atlantic by an estuary 7 m. in width at its entrance immediately N. Tralee Bay, and 43 m. in length. Total course estimated at 254 m., for 154 m. of which it is navigable by river and canal from the N. entrance of Lough Allen. From Killaloe to Leitrim, 129 m., it is navigable for large steamers. Its basin is estimated to comprise 3613 sq. m. Affls. from the W., the Boyle, Suck, and Fergus; from the E. and S., the Inny, Brosna, Mulkear, and Maigue. It is tidal for the last third of its course, and may be ascended by vessels of 400 tons to Limerick. Between Killaloe and Limerick the fall is 97 feet, and the current too rapid for convenient navigation. It is connected all across Leinster with Dublin by the Grand Canal from Shannon harbour near Bannagher, and by the Royal Canal, which joins it at Tarnonbarry, near Longford.—Shannon Bridge is a vill. and fortified post on this river, crossed there by a 16 arched bridge, Leinster, King's co., 2½ m. N.N.E. Banagher, and in a dreary flat. P. 398.—Shannon Harbour and Shannon Grove are villages lower down the stream.

SHEERNESS, a seaport town and naval arsenal of England, co. Kent, pa. Minster, on the N.W. extremity of the Island of Sheppey, at the confluence of the Medway with the Thames, 11 m. E.N.E. Chatham. P. (1861) 15,964. Of its four divisions, Blue-town, Mile-town, Marine-town, and Westminster, the first is enclosed within fortifications. The dock-yard, occupying nearly 60 acres, contains a wet dock of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  acres in which ships are fitted, several dry docks, extensive storehouses, official residences, etc. Outside of the yard is Garrison Point, with the residence of the port-admiral, telegraph, and coast-guard stations, and large barracks. Opposite the river and sea is a long wharf, and several hulks ranged off the shore form a breakwater for the harbour. The town, latterly much improved, has a pier, bathing establishment, 1 district church, dissenting chapels, Jews' synagogue, and numerous schools. Exports corn, seeds, and oysters to London; but the trade lies chiefly in the supply of the government establishments. It communicates by steamers and railway with London and Chatham. Sheerness was taken by the Dutch under De Ruyter in 1667. The mutiny of the Nore broke out here in 1798.

SHEFFIELD, a parl. bor., manufacturing town, pa., and township of England, co. York, West Riding, near S. border of the co., cap. dist. Hallamshire, at the confluence of the small river Sheaf with the Don, both here crossed by several bridges, 45 m. S.S.W. York, and 173 m. by railway from London. Ac. of bor. and pa. 22,830. P. of parl. bor. (1851) 135,310; (1861) 185,172; increase in 10 years 49,862. It occupies the bottom of several low hills, which enclose it on all sides except the N.E. Alt. 182 ft. It is generally well built, and has been greatly extended of late years, though, from the smoke of its numerous furnaces, it presents a dingy appearance in the midst of beautiful surrounding scenery. Principal buildings, the town-hall, corn exchange, cutlers' hall, with a stone Corinthian front, music hall, a new market hall with a roof of glass and iron, cost 40,000l., theatre and assembly rooms, barracks, assay office, public baths; several handsome churches, among which is the old pa. church, a Gothic structure 240 feet long by 130 broad, with a lofty spire; St George's, with a tower 139 feet high; a Roman Catholic chapel, built 1850, with a tower 200 feet high; numerous Wesleyan, Independent, and other chapels; and an elegant stone cross, erected to commemorate a dire visitation of the cholera in 1832. Public schools numerous; comprising a Royal free grammar school; Wesley college for 250 boys; collegiate proprietary school, a charity school, which clothes and educates 100 boys; another for 70 girls; a people's college, and many other schools. Among the charitable institutions are the general infirmary, dispensary, Shrewsbury hospital, Hillis' hospital, and licenced victuallers' asylum. The mechanics and apprentices' library, the Sheffield library, with 25,000 vols., a literary and philosophical society, with a museum. The botanic garden is extensive and finely situated. One mile from the town, on the slope of a hill, is the cemetery, well arranged and covering 14 acres. The suburbs are neatly laid out, with many elegant mansions and villas; and 1 m. E. is the vill. of Atercliffe, the pop. of which are engaged in Sheffield manufs. Sheffield is the great seat of the manuf. of cutlery (for which it has been celebrated since the time of Chaucer), silver-plate, and plated goods, with nearly everything that can be made of iron or steel, including iron-plating for ships. It has brass foundries, manufs. of Britannia metal and German silver goods, buttons, combs, optical instruments, brushes and wood-turning. Steam-power is used in forging and grinding, for which operations vast buildings are constructed. A new process for the manuf. of scissors by powerful machinery introduced in 1864, greatly abridges hand-labour, and the process of grinding. In the same year an anvil block, to be used in forging large Whitworth guns, was cast at the Midland works, weighing 100 tons. Coal is abundant in the vicinity; the Don is navigable up to the town, and the canal basin admits vessels of 50 tons. There are large mercantile houses trading with the U. S. of America, Brazil, the Cape of Good Hope, etc.; cheese, corn, and fruit are staple articles of trade. Sheffield sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. elects. (1864) 8759. It is the seat of quarter sessions, and a co. court. Sheffield castle, of which no vestige now remains, was for 12 or 14 years the prison of Mary Queen of Scots. This castle, when held by the Royalist party, surrendered to the Parliamentary forces in 1644, after the battle of Marston Moor.

SHETLAND or ZETLAND ISLANDS, an archipelago of about 30 islands, in the North Atlantic Ocean, belonging to Scotland, of which country, with the Orkneys, 50 m. S.S.W., it forms a co.; mostly between lat.  $59^{\circ} 51'$  and  $60^{\circ} 50'$  N., lon.  $0^{\circ} 44'$  and  $1^{\circ} 44'$  W.; 180 m. S.E. the Faroe group, and 210 m. W. Bergen, in Norway. Ac. 598,726. P. (1861) 31,670. Mainland, in the S.W., comprises about half the area, and more than half the entire pop., together with Lerwick and Scalloway, the only towns in the group. Other islands are Yell, Unst, Fetlar, Whalsey, Bressay, East and West Burra, Papa-Stour, Foula (between lat.  $60^{\circ} 6'$  and  $60^{\circ} 10'$  N., and lon.  $2^{\circ} 5' W.$ , and conjectured to be the Ultima Thule of Tacitus), and Fair Isle, intermediate between Shetland and Orkney. Shores rocky, and greatly indented with inlets, especially in Mainland. Climate very damp and variable, but snow or frost seldom lasts long in winter, at which season the aurora borealis is highly brilliant; night is scarcely known during May, June, and July. Gneiss, mica-schist, hornblende, and other slate, serpentine, and primitive limestone, are the principal rocks. Surface generally hilly, covered with heath, destitute of trees; and the valleys in Mainland, which all extend N. and S., are interspersed with many small lakes. Soil mostly mossy or light gravel, and less productive than that of Orkney. By far the greatest part of the surface of the islands is occupied by peat moss, sometimes to a great depth, whence the inhabitants obtain their fuel. Unst is the most fertile island. Agriculture is in a backward condition; the surface is chiefly appropriated to rearing live stock, though some potatoes, turnips, and oats are raised. The cattle and horses are of small breeds, almost peculiar to Shetland; and many of the latter especially, being hardy and well-shaped little animals, have been of late years imported into England. The sheep and swine are also good. The cod, ling, and tusk fisheries are highly important, employing a great proportion of the inhabitants. Some copper, iron, and clay are met with. Freestone for building is extensively quarried at Lerwick. Bressay furnishes flagstones for pavement, and a sort of thick grey roofing slates, consisting of clay blended with silicious sand. There are now four lighthouses in the islands; one on a small island beyond the northern extremity of Unst; one on the out Skerries, the eastern extremity of the group; a third in Bressay, at the entrance of Bressay Sound; the fourth on Sumburgh Head. Manufs. are almost wholly domestic, chiefly Shetland hosiery and shawls, woven by hand from fine wool; other exports are cattle, fish, etc., sent S. in return for colonial and manufactured goods. Chromate of iron, or chrome yellow, is an important article of export from Unst. Beremeal, oatmeal, fish, and potatoes, constitute most part of the food of the people, who appear to be, as to their condition and education, in superior circumstances to the population of the N. portion of the mainland of Scotland. They are chiefly of Norwegian descent, and their ancestors are said not to have embraced Christianity until the 13th century. The islands form a synod of the Scottish church, and, together with Orkney, they send one member to H. of C. Scandinavian antiquities are numerous in the islands, and on Fetlar are the vestiges of a Roman camp. [NEW SOUTH SHETLAND.]

SHETTLESTON, a vill. of Scotland, co Lanark, suburban, and  $\frac{2}{8}$  m. E.N.E. Glasgow. Ac. 5174. P. 6914; includes vill. Shettleston, P. 1437.

SHIANT ISLES, Hebrides, Scotl., a small group of basaltic islets in the Minch, co. Ross, pa. Lochs. SHIAWASSEE, a co., U. S., N. America, in centre of Michigan. Area 576 sq. m. P. (1860) 12,349.

SHIEL (LOCK), a lake of the W. of Scotland, between cos. Inverness and Argyre, separating the dists. Moidart, Ardgower, and Sunart, 16 m. W. Fort-William. Length 15 m.; breadth 1 m. It discharges its surplus waters on the W. by the river Shiel into the sea at Loch Moidart.

SHIELDS (NORTH), England. [TYNEMOUTH.] SHIELDS (SOUTH), a parl. and munic. bor., seaport town, and township of England, co. Durham, E. division of Chester ward, pa. Jarrow, on the S. bank of the Tyne, near its mouth. Rail to Sunderland & Newcastle. Ac. of bor. 1760. P. (1861) 44,849. Is a great centre of manuf. and maritime industry, but has few attractions. The town-hall, theatre, mechanics' institute, St Hilda's church, and the market place are the principal public buildings. The Master Mariners' Asylum is a square of cottage residences with gardens. At one end, overlooking the sea, is a library and newsroom. South Shields claims to be the birth-place of the life-boat. Glass and shipbuilding are principal manufs. A substantial new road leads over the sands to the South Pier at the mouth of the Tyne. Two miles W. is Jarrow, where Bede was born, lived, wrote, died, and was buried; his bones since placed in Durham Cathedral. Remains of the old church and monastery. In the church, Bede's chair, "crucifixion" by Vandeyck, & two ancient bells. Near Jarrow is a magnificent shipbuilding yard. Nearer S. Shields the Tyne Docks, 50 ac. of water-surface, will contain 300 or 400 ships, belongs to North-eastern Railway Co. Marsden Rocks, 3 m. S.E. of the town, is a place of much resort. Grandly exposed magnesian limestone cliffs, a curiously excavated grotto, an insulated rock in the sea, and fine beach are the attractions. Sends 1 member to House of Commons. Reg. elect. (1864) 1175. Enfranchised by the Reform Act, and incorporated 1850.

SHIFFNAL, a pa. and market town of England, co. Salop, with a station on the Birmingham and Shrewsbury Rail., 12 m. N.W. Wolverhampton. Ac. of pa. 11,441. P. 5923. It has coal and iron

SHUSTER, a city of Persia, prov. Khuzistan, on the Karun, here crossed by a stone bridge, 30 m. E.S.E. Dizful, lat.  $32^{\circ}$  N., lon.  $49^{\circ} 5'$  E. Estimated pop. 8000. It stands on a hill crowned by a citadel, and on the land side it is enclosed by a brick wall, outside of which the Ab-i-Gargar canal separates it from its suburbs. Houses mostly of stone, and the city possesses many elegant buildings. It remained cap. of the prov. until nearly depopulated by the plague in 1832, and was subsequently much damaged by an inundation in 1840.

SHUSTOKE, a pa. of England, co. Warwick, 3 m. E.N.E. Coleshill. Ac. 3844. P. 558.

SHUTE, a pa. of England, co. Devon,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  m. N. Colyton. Ac. 2738. P. 610.

SHUTESBURY, a town of the U. S., N. America, Massachusetts, Franklin co. It has a mineral spring, formed by an earthquake in 1815.

SHUTTINGTON, a pa. of England, co. Warwick,  $\frac{3}{2}$  m. E.N.E. Tamworth. Ac. 980. P. 194.

SHUYA, a town of Russia, gov. Vladimir, cap. circ., on the Tesa, 50 m. N.W. Viazniki. P. 3500. It has thriving linen and cotton weaving and print-works, soap and various other factories.

SHY-YOK or SHAYOK, a considerable trib. of the Indus, India, which it joins 20 m. W. of Iskardo, after a S.E. and N.W. course. It rises in the Karakorum mountains.

SLAH-KOH (the "Black Mountain"), Afghanistan, bounds the plain of Jellalab on the N., lat.  $34^{\circ} 25'$  N., between lon.  $69^{\circ} 45'$  and  $70^{\circ} 20'$  E. It is 3000 feet above the sea.

SIAM, a native state of the island Sumatra, extending along its N.E. coast opposite Malacca and Singapore, and with a town of same name on the river Siak, 45 m. from its mouth, in lat.  $0^{\circ} 25'$  N., lon.  $101^{\circ} 55'$  E. Surface flat. Exports gold, camphor, gambier, rattans, tobacco, wax, sago, ivory, and silk stuffs; imports opium, salt, woollens, and Madras piece-goods.—The Siak river flows N.E., and enters the Strait of Malacca behind some islands nearly opposite the British settlement of Malacca.

SIAM, native THAI, an independent country of S.E. Asia, of which it occupies the centre and S. parts, extending between lat.  $4^{\circ}$  and  $21^{\circ}$  N., lon.  $96^{\circ}$  and  $162^{\circ}$  E., nearly enclosing the Gulf of Siam on the S., and having W. the Strait of Malacca and British Tenasserim provinces, E. Laos, Cambodia, and the Gulf of Siam, and N. Burma. Length N. to S. 1200 m.; breadth 400 m.; cap. Bangkok. P. estimated (in 1863) at 6,000,000, comprising 1,900,000 Siamese, 1,500,000 Chinese, 1,000,000 Malays, and 1,000,000 Laos. On the W., where alone the boundary is ascertained, Siam-proper is separated from the Tenasserim coast by mountain chains. On the other sides it is bordered by independent tribes. The kingdom comprises the W. half of Cambodia, part of the isthmus connecting the Malay peninsula with the Asiatic continent, and the N. and middle portion of the peninsula, called Lower Siam, the states of which are tributary to Siam, and where it encloses the British prov. of Wellesley. The Menam river traverses its centre from N. to S., and by annual inundations renders the great plain extremely fertile; the other principal river is the Me-Kong, and numerous tributaries. Tale Sab, or the Great Lake, is on the S.E. boundary. Climate salubrious in the mountainous districts, but the plains and forests are the seat of malignant fevers. Mean temperature of the year at Bangkok  $83^{\circ}$  Fahr. The S.W. monsoon brings abundant rain, the N.E. is dry and healthy. Chief products, rice, sugar, pepper, tobacco, cocoa-nuts, sago, tropical fruits, teak, sandal sapan, rose and other woods; coffee, cotton, rattans, and gums; copper mined by Chinese is the chief mineral product; lead, antimony, and zinc, iron and gems, are also found. The elephant, rhinoceros, tiger, buffalo, leopard, antelope, and bear, abound; serpents and crocodiles are numerous, and the rivers are rich in fish. The Siamese or Thai are of the Mongolian family, and of a mild and humane disposition. Buddhism is the state religion. The French Jesuits founded missions in 1658, and have a seminary and other schools in the capital, where American Protestant missionaries print and circulate the Bible in the Siamese and Chinese languages. They have made little progress in useful or ornamental arts, and most of the manufs. and handicrafts in the towns are carried on by Chinese or Anamese settlers. There are few roads in the country. The trade of Siam, Laos, and Cambodia is mostly in the hands of the Chinese. Exports, 1862, sugar, hides, gum, pepper, rice, horns, etc., to the value of 37,824*l*. Imports machinery, military stores, timber, iron, earthenware, beer and ale, wine, cottons, etc., to the value of 23,907*l*. Government an absolute monarchy, but the late king, who died 1851, was an enlightened monarch, who made canals and roads, built ships, introduced steamers, encouraged arts and commerce, established printing from types, which was unknown till 1835, and trained his troops in the European manner. The Siamese dominions are divided into 41 provinces, bearing the names of their chief towns, each presided over by a paha or governor. There is no standing army, but every male subject is liable to serve for a portion of the year. A numerous force of war-junks and galleys is kept up, and manned by Chinese and other foreigners. The first connection between this state and the British Government took place in 1685, when the Siamese envoys to Louis xiv. of France visited London, and concluded a treaty with Charles ii.; but little intercourse took place till 1855, when Sir John Bowring effected an agreement, by which the Crown of Siam consented to the appointment of a British consul at Bangkok, and granted entire liberty of trade to British merchants in all the maritime dists. of the empire. The Gulf of Siam, between lat. 8° and 13° 30' N., lon. 99° and 105° E., is wholly surrounded by Siam, except on the S.E., where it opens into the Chinese Sea. Length 380 m.; breadth at entrance 260 m. It receives the Menam and several other smaller rivers, and being exempt from hurricanes, shipwrecks are very rare.

SIAMO or SIAO, an isl. of Malaysia, between N.E. of Celebes and Sanghir. Circumference 35 m. Surface elevated, and it contains a volcano.

SIAMPA, a country of S.E. Asia. [TSLAMPA.]

SI-AN or SI-NGAN, a city of China, prov. Shense, cap. dep., on an affluent of the Hooi-ho, lat. 34° 12' N., lon. 108° 40' E. It is large, enclosed by strong walls, and is the principal military dépôt for the northern provinces of China, and ranks next to Peking, having been at one period for more than 1000 years the metropolis.

SIANG-YANG, a city of China, prov. Hoo-pe, cap. dep., on the Han-kiang, lat. about 32° N., lon. 112° E.—Siang is the name of several Chinese towns of inferior rank.

SIANO, a town of South Italy, prov. and 10 m. N.N.W. Salerno. P. 2843.

SIAS, a river of Russia, gov. St Petersburg, enters Lake Ladoga on its S. side, after a N.N.W. course of 100 m.—The Siaskoi canal, 25 m. in length, connects the rivers Svir and Volkhov.

SIAGUES-ST-ROMAIN, a comm. & vill., France, dep. Haute-Loire, 17 m. S.E. Brioude. P. 1701.

SIB, a maritime town of E. Arabia, dom. and 22 m. W. Muscat, on the Arabian Sea. It has the reputation of being peculiarly healthy.—Sibb is a town of W. Belochistan, 75 m. N.E. Bampur.

SIBBERTOFT, a pa. of Engl., co. Northampton, 5 m. S.W. Mkt.-Harborough. Ac. 2048. P. 394.

SIBBERTSWOLD, a pa. of England, co. Kent, 6 m. N.W. Dover. Ac. 1836. P. 411.

SIBDON CARWOOD, a pa. of England, co. Salop, 6½ m. E.S.E. Bishop's-Castle. Ac. 1090. P. 69.

SIBERIA, SIBIRI, or ASIATIC RUSSIA, comprises all the N. part of Asia, extending from the Ural mtns. to the Pacific Ocean and Behring Strait, between lat. 42° and 78° N., lon. 50° E. to 171° W., and having S. the Chinese empire and Independent Turkestan, and N. the Arctic Ocean, in which it comprises the islands of New Siberia or Liakoff. Area 5,586,513 sq. m.; length 5000 m., breadth 2620 m. P. (1858), incl. the subjugated Kirghiz, 4,070,938. Climate excessive; cold of winter extreme, and summer heat is very high. Mean temperature at the mouth of the river Yana, 4°-39 Fahr.; mercury freezes and remains solid for two months in winter. Surface in the S. elevated by the Altai chain, covered with forests, and interspersed with many fertile valleys; but by far the greater portion of Siberia is flat and sterile. Of eastern Siberia little was known till very recently; Russian explorations in 1863 have shown that the supposed elevated chain of the Yablonoi mountains has no existence, and that their place is occupied by an undulating plateau. There are many gulfs and bays on the N. shores; but as they are frozen for nine months in the year, they are wholly unfit for navigation. In 1863 a service of steam packets was established between Irbit, on the Nitsa (gov. Perm), and the towns of Siberia on the Tobol, Irtysh, and Obi, and the first steamer was launched on the Yenisei. At the same time the Irtysh was found to be navigable for barges, drawing 3 ft. water, to Lake Dzaisan. At present (1864)

a line of telegraph is in operation from Moscow to Irkutsk, 4000 miles, and this is to be extended to meet the line now opened at the mouth of the Amur, thence through Siberia across Behring Strait, to join the proposed line across Russian and British America, and so complete the circuit of the globe. In the W. are extensive steppes, inhabited by Cossack tribes or roving Kirghiz, and all the N. portion is a vast desert peopled by Ostiaks, Yakuts, Tchukchi, and other tribes in the lowest state of barbarism. The Obi, Yenisei, and Lena rivers, with their large and numerous tributaries, and the Olenek, Indighirka, and Kolyma, traverse the country in a N. direction, and enter the Arctic Ocean; and the Ural river forms part of the boundary between European and Asiatic Russia, and the Sir Daria or Jaxartes, flowing W. to the sea of Ural, separates it from Independent Turkestan. Principal lakes are those of Baikal, Tchany, and Sumy, with the Balkash-Nor or Lake Tenghiz, which forms a part of its S. boundary. In the more populous districts, corn sufficient for the pop. is grown; it is chiefly barley, oats, and buckwheat. Cattle are numerous in some parts, and in the N. the reindeer, saibles, foxes, martens, beavers, and white bears, the skins of which compose important articles of trade. The dog is used to draw the sledge; the roebuck and elk inhabit the S. Camels are used by the Kalmucs; the sheep and horses are of good breeds. Swans, geese, ducks, and partridges are common in the S., and fish abound on the coasts, and in the lakes and rivers. Siberia is, however, chiefly valuable to Russia on account of its minerals. The government has a monopoly of the gold-washings. Antimony, cobalt, mercury, and zinc are also met with; iron and copper are plentiful on the S. frontier in the gov. Tobolsk. Manufs. insignificant, except in Irkutsk, Tobolsk, and some of the provincial caps. W. Siberia consists of the govts. Tobolsk and Tomsk, and the country of the Kirghiz Cossacks. E. Siberia of Yeniseisk and Irkutsk, the prov. Yakutsk, districts of Okhotsk, the Tchukchi country, and the recently organized territory of Primorsk. [MARITIME REGION.] The country is colonized to a large extent by exiles, and partly by voluntary emigrants. The exiles, who comprise criminals, political and religious offenders, are collected at Moscow from all parts of the empire, and sent off in weekly convoys, to the number of about 10,000 per annum; one-fifth of whom die in ten years, from fatigue of the journey and change of climate. Arrived in Siberia, they are divided into three classes:—1st, Those destined to forced labour in the mines; 2d, Public labour (to be afterwards established, provisionally, as colonists); 3d, Those destined for immediate colonization, under the police. They observe the rites of the Greek Church. Among the aboriginal population in the W. of Siberia, from the northern Urals to the rivs. Irtysh and Tobol, Shamanism, more or less mixed with impure Christianity, prevails. Between the Obi and the Yenisei, in the govts. of Tobolsk and Yenisei, Shamanism prevails in the north, among the Samooides; and the imperfect Christianity of the Greek Church in the south, among the Ostiaks. In the eastern portion of Siberia, from the Yenisei to Kamatchatka, and from the Arctic Ocean to the Chinese empire, Buddhism, Paganism, and an imperfect Christianity prevail. The S.W. of Siberia, including the governments of Omsk, Tomsk, and part of Irkutsk, falls within the limits of the great Turkish branch of the human family, and the prevalent form of religion is Mohammedanism. Siberia has few educational establishments. In 1850, a ukase decided that in the govts. of Tobolsk and Tomsk, the study of Greek should be replaced by that of the Tartar language, at the option of the student. The Old and New Testaments have been translated into the Mongolian language by the London Missionary Society. Chief cities, Tobolsk and Irkutsk, respectively the W. and E. caps., with Omsk, Tomsk, Krasnoyarsk, Yakutsk, Kiachta, Semipolatsinsk, and Petropaulovsk. A line of fortified posts protects the country on the side of Independent Turkestan. [RUSSIA, AMUR, MARITIME REGIONS.]

SICIGNANO, a market town of S. Italy, prov. Salerno, 12 m. S.E. Campagna. P. 3337.

SICILIES (KINGDOM OF THE TWO), a former state of S. Italy, of which the King of Sardinia was elected sovereign by universal suffrage, 7th November 1860. It is now incorporated in the kingdom of Italy. [NAPLES. SICILY.]

SICILY, Trinacria Sicilia, an isl. in the Mediterranean, lat.  $36^{\circ} 38'$  and  $38^{\circ} 18' N.$ , lon.  $12^{\circ} 25'$  and  $15^{\circ} 40' E.$ , separated on the N.E. from Naples by the Strait of Messina, and forming, previous to 1860, the Dominii al-di-la di Faro, or the territory "beyond the Strait" of the former kingdom of the "Two Sicilies." Its shape is triangular, length E. to W. 185 m., breadth 120 m. P. (1862) 2,351,802. Its old divisions, dating from Norman times, into Val Demone, Val di Noto, and Val di Mazzara, being obsolete, since 1818 it was subdivided into 7 provs. [ITALY], each of which is subdivided into 3 or 4 districts, and each dist. into numerous comuni or townships. The Neptunian and the Madonian mountains, now known as the Peloric chain, stretching from E. to W. through the N. part of the island, consist of granite, quartz, and mica, flanked, as in the Apennines, by limestone and other calcareous formations; they rise to several thousand feet above the sea, are highest on the northern and eastern shores, and cover a great part of the surface with their ramifications. In some parts are mountains isolated from the rest, the chief of which is the volcano of Mount Ætna, near the E. coast, 10,874 feet above the sea. The principal plains border the sea, and are those of Catania, the Campi Leontini of antiquity, and Syracuse in the E., and Terranova in the south; Palermo (called the "golden shell") & Castellamare on the northern coast, and Licata. Rivers all small and not navigable: the chief are the Fiume Grande, on the north; the Giarreita, Cantara, and Anapo, on the east; the Salso, Platani, Belici, flowing to the S. coast. The chief lakes are Biviere or Lentini, near the E. coast; the pool of Enna, in the centre of the island; the Lago dei Palici, in the S.E., of volcanic formation. Soil everywhere of high fertility; in some places it consists of a rich loam from 20 to 30 feet deep. Climate one of the most delightful in Europe, generally salubrious, except in some of the low lands. Mean temperature at Catania, year  $67^{\circ} 4$ , winter  $52^{\circ} 8$ , summer  $84^{\circ} 5$ ; at Palermo, year  $61^{\circ} 1$ , winter  $52^{\circ} 5$ , summer  $74^{\circ} 4$  Fahr. Annual rainfall 26 inches. Summer heats are oppressive during the prevalence of the sirocco, which is felt most at Palermo. Snow is never seen, except on Ætna and the highest points of the Madonian mountains; and the cold of winter is never so severe as to affect the verdure of the country; hail-storms are frequent, but rain is deficient, except in November. The most prevalent winds are from the N. and W. The papyrus, sugar-cane, date palm, and other tropical products ripen at a height of 600 feet; evergreens flourish at 2000 feet, oak and chestnut woods cover the mountain sides to the height of 4000 feet, wheat thrives at 4500 feet, and beech woods prevail to 6000 feet in elevation. Under the Romans, the island of Sicily was considered the granary of Italy, and it still yields grain in abundance; but there are few countries in which agriculture is so unscientifically conducted, and the plough is a ruder instrument now than that of Virgil's time. There are no proper roads in the island. The Indian fig, a species of cactus, grows wild in profusion. Lands chiefly belong to the nobility, the clergy, or the crown. Wheat and barley are exported in small quantities. Other chief crops are beans, pulse, maize, rice, olive oil, of which the annual crop is estimated at 15,000 tons; oranges, lemons, citrons, almonds, and other fruits; potatoes, tobacco, flax, hemp, sumach, liquorice, manna, carob, hazel-nuts, and mulberry. There are 19 varieties of grapes. From 60,000 to 80,000 pipes of wine are annually made, of which from 30,000 to 50,000 are exported by English and other merchants at Marsala. About 80,000 acres are planted with fruit trees, which form a great source of wealth to the island. Silk is produced chiefly in the N.E. part of the island, and woven at Catania. Cotton now forms an important branch of the agricultural industry of Sicily, having greatly increased within the last three years. It is chiefly grown in the plain of Catania and the Val di Noto, also at Terranova and Trapani. Pastoral industry receives little attention, and, except a few merino sheep and good mules, all kinds of live stock are very inferior. The sulphur beds of Sicily are of great value; they extend in the centre and the S. over an area of 2600 sq. m., in which about 150 mines are wrought, which yield above 150,000 tons annually, and employed, 20 years since, 4400 persons. The sulphur is found in tertiary formations. Alum, nitre, rock-salt, which constitutes the wealth of Trapani, petroleum, alabaster, agates, and chalcodones, and 54 varieties of jaspers; amber, bitumen, gypsum, and marble, are valuable mineral products. Ores of copper, lead, iron, silver, antimony, and mercury are found in the mountains; but few mines are wrought there, and nearly all metallic goods are imported. Medicinal and sulphureous springs are very numerous. The tunny, swordfish, and anchovy fisheries are important. The coral fishery on the African coast is frequented by many fishermen from Trapani, where the coral procured is polished. The manufacture of silk was introduced into the island from Greece, in 1147. Nearly 500,000 lbs. of raw silk are yearly produced. At Trapani are cotton factories wrought by steam; other manufs. are unimportant. The harbours are—Palermo on the N., Trapani on the W., Messina, Agosta, and Syracuse on the E. Navigation (1862) 9200 ships, tonnage 1,300,000. Trade is chiefly carried on with Britain, France, the Baltic, Belgium, Germany, Italy, and America. Chief exports, sulphur, olive oil, oranges and lemons, saffron, wine and spirits, sumach, silks, corn, barilla, essences, salted fish, linseed, manna, rags, and skins. Total value (1862) 2,830,057. Imports sugar and other colonial produce, cotton and other manufactured goods, hides, iron, deals, and wax. Total value (1862) 3,254,903. Messina, Palermo, Trapani, and Catania are the chief seats of commerce. Each prov. is governed by a prefect or intendente, who presides over every department of the provincial administration, & some branches of the military force. There are three councils, the council of intendency, the provincial, and the district councils, the members of which are appointed by the king. Each town had its judicial court; superior courts were held in Palermo, Messina, and Catania; and a supreme court sits in Palermo, the cap. Except about 58,000 inhabitants of Greek descent, mostly near Palermo, and several thousand Jews, the inhabitants are all Roman Catholics. This island was, in ancient times, the seat of many flourishing Greek colonies, of which Syracuse and Agrigentum were the most famous, and boasts of some of the most magnificent remains of ancient art in the world. It fell successively under the Carthaginians, Romans, Goths, Greek emperors, Saracens, Normans, French, Suabians, Austrians, Spaniards, etc. It was annexed to Naples in 1736. In 1847, 1848, and 1849, unsuccessful attempts were made to shake off the Neapolitan government. Messina was bombarded and taken by the Neapolitan troops 7th Sept. 1848, and Catania 6th April 1849. The Sicilians again rose in insurrection in 1860, and, with Garibaldi at their head, defeated the Neapolitans at Calatafimi, Palermo, and Milazzo. He then at Naples annexed the two Sicilies to the new kingdom of Italy under Victor Emmanuel. [ITALY. NAPLES.]

SINAI (MOUNT), a mountain of Arabia Petraea, famous in Scripture, and generally identified with the Jeb-el-Musa, or "Mount of Moses," one of a cluster of mountains, of which Mount Horeb forms a part of the N. end, lat. 28° 30' N., lon. 34° E. Height above the sea 8593 feet. On its N.E. side is the fortified convent of Sinai, now tenanted by about 20 Greek monks. Robinson conjectures that Mount Horeb, N.W. ward, was the original Sinai, celebrated in Holy Writ.—The Peninsula of Sinai, between the Gulfs of Suez and Akabah, the scene of the Israelite wanderings in the desert, is about 140 m. in length, N. to S.; and as much in breadth at its N. extremity, whence it gradually tapers southward to its S. extremity, Ras Mohammed, in the Red Sea, lat. 27° 43' N., lon. 34° 18' E. Surface generally mountainous and rocky; in different localities of it are hieroglyphic and other ancient inscriptions.

SINALOA or CINALOA, a state of Mexico, on the Gulf of California, bounded N. by Sonora, E. by Chihuahua and Durango, and S. by Jalisco. The climate is healthy and temperate, except at some parts on the coast, where the heat is excessive. The surface is mountainous in the E., and flat and sandy along the coasts. In the interior are immense well-watered prairies, where great herds of wild horses and cattle roam. The natural products are principally grain, maize, sugar-cane, cotton, tobacco, pigs, salt, and the precious metals. Area 35,465 sq. m. P. (1857) 160,000. The chief towns are Culiacan, the cap., Cinaloa, Mazatlan, Santa Maria, de tome el Rosario, los Alamos, and Villa del Fuerte. [CINALOA.]

SINDE, a prov. of British India, now annexed to the British presid. Bombay, watered by the lower Indus, and comprising its delta, extending from the Indian Ocean, in lat. 23° 32' N., northward to the junction of the Chenab with the Indus, in lat. 23° 37' and 28° 32' N., lon. 66° 43' and 71° 3' E. Area 52,120 sq. m. P. 1,087,762. It presents, in some respects, a remarkable similarity to Egypt, being a plain divided by a large river, and bounded on one side by mountains, and on the other by a desert; but though fertile on the river banks, it is far inferior in productiveness, population, and civilisation, to the valley of the Nile. The delta is encumbered with jungle and tall grass; and the lands bordering it are poor, destitute of fresh water, and, after the inundation, incrustated with salt. Upper Sind is the most fertile part of the country, being irrigated by canals, and yielding rice, wheat, barley, oil-seeds, millet, opium, indigo, maize, sugar-cane, cotton, pulse, and esculent vegetables, with dates, mangoes, plantains, and the fruits common to Southern Europe. Much of the country has, however, been depopulated by the Amers, and laid waste for hunting grounds. Mimosas, banyans, palms, and mangroves are among the principal trees. Camels, buffaloes, sheep, goats, horses, and asses are the domestic animals; wool is an important product, and is manufactured into bags, ropes, and strong cloths. Climate extremely sultry and dry; at Hyderabad the thermometer has been found to stand in the shade at 98°·5 Fahr., during a part of the day, for six months of the year, and epidemic diseases are frequent and destructive. Tigers, hyenas, wolves, and other formidable animals are numerous, and alligators swarm in the pools of the delta. Coarse cloths, felt, mats, arms, leather, horse furniture, earthenwares, cotton, silk, and embroidered fabrics, are made in the towns, but few manufactured goods are fitted for exportation; the exports consisting chiefly of the natural produce, rice and other grains, ghee, hides, fish, wool, salt, and nitre from the soil, oil and oil seeds, bark, alkalies, firewood, opium, tobacco, camels, and horses. Imports are chiefly manufactured goods, madder and other dyes, groceries, metals, gems, timber, cordage, bamboos, and dried fruits. Kurrachee, at the mouth of the Indus, is the chief port and seat of foreign trade. Revenue (1862) 566,648. The inhabitants are partly Hindoos, partly Beloochees, and Mohammedans, the lower classes of the latter being of the soonee, and the upper or ameers of the shiah sect. Until lately the country was governed by the ameers, who exercised an aristocratic military despotism; but after open hostilities had been evinced by them against the British, their power was completely broken by the forces under Sir C. Napier in 1844, and Sindh became a British dependency. Chief towns, Hyderabad, the cap., Shikarpoor, Khyerpoor, Kurrachee, Tattah, Meerpoor, Halla, Larkhana, and Roree.

SINDE, a river of Hindostan, rises in Malwa, in lat. 24° 1' N., lon. 77° 29' E., flows N.E. through the Gwalior dom., and between it and Bundelcund, and joins the Jumna, 26 m. S.E. Etawah. Total course 260 m. The principal affls. are the Parbati and Pohooj. [SINDE—INDUS.]

SINGAPORE (Singapura, "City of the Lion"), one of the Straits Settlements belonging to Great Britain, in S.E. Asia, consisting of an island off the S. extremity of the Malay peninsula, separated from the mainland by a strait in one part only  $\frac{1}{4}$  m. across, and having on its S. side a town of same name, in lat. 1° 17' N., lon. 103° 50' 47" E. Length of island 27 m.; breadth 11 m. Area 206 sq. m. P. (1860) 80,792, amongst whom were 25,000 Chinese, 30,000 Malays, and a few Europeans. Surface generally low, undulating, and densely wooded. Soil mostly clay, resting on sandstone and granite. Climate healthy. Mean temperature of year 80°·6, winter 79°·2, summer 81°·5, Fahr. Showers are frequent; and the annual fall of rain is about 100 inches. Catechu, fine fruits, nutmegs, coffee, and pepper are principal products. The island is chiefly valuable as a depôt for the British and Indian trade with the islands of the eastern seas. Rice is imported from Java, Bengal, and

Sumatra, and live stock from Malacca. Some manufactures of pearl-sago, agricultural implements, and arms are carried on by the Chinese, who, with British residents, are the principal merchants. Exports of Singapore (1862), including the Eastern Straits Settlements, teak, tin, pepper, gutta percha, sago, gambier, rice, coffee, sugar, caoutchouc, hides, gums, tapioca, camphor, nutmegs, canes, oils, cutch, etc., to the value of 2,375,813*l*. Imports, cottons, woollens, arms, iron, copper, linens, coals, hardwares, earthenware, beer and ale, glass, apparel, guano, etc., to the value of 1,093,164*l*. In 1862, British and American ships, with an aggregate tonnage of 346,997, arrived and departed. In the same period 2310 native vessels arrived and departed, burden 75,859 tons. The island is governed by an officer under the British presid. of Bengal, assisted by a council. Singapore was purchased from the sultan of Johore (Malay peninsula), and settled by the English in 1819. Since then it has rapidly risen into importance. The cap. town, on the S.E. coast, is on a small river in an open bay, with an anchorage 2 m. from the shore; is regularly laid out, well built, and divided into Malay, Chinese, and European quarters. The chief residence of the Europeans is on a hill, 150 feet above the sea, about 1 m. inland. It has a lunatic asylum, and an hospital for lepers. P. 26,000. Chief edifices, court-house, gaol, custom house, several churches, and Anglo-Indian college. It has convenient quays, and goods are shipped and unshipped by lighters; vessels of large burden lying in the roads from 1 to 2 m. distant. A vast system of fortifications is now (1864) in progress. Shortest sea route to Liverpool 18,598 sea miles, shortest sailing voyage 111 days. [STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.]

Inverness, from the mainland of which co. it is separated by the narrow strait Loch Alsh, Gleneig Bay, and Sound of Sleat, whence it extends for  $48\frac{1}{2}$  miles in a N.W. direction. Breadth very irregular, varying from  $2\frac{1}{2}$  m. to  $27\frac{1}{2}$  m.; it being indented N.W. and W. by Lochs Snizort, Follart, Bracadale, etc., and all round the other coast by smaller inlets. Estimated area (excluding the islands Scalpa, Raasay, etc., off its east coast) about 547 sq. m., or 350,000 ac. P. (1861) 18,751. Surface mountainous; many heights in the centre rise 2000 to upwards of 3000 feet above the sea, among which the Cuchullin hills (3220 feet) are conspicuous; its N. part and the shores are bold and strikingly picturesque. It is composed chiefly of trap rocks, quartz, limestone, old red sandstone, and lias. There are some large basaltic pillars, and a curious spar cave. Rivulets and small lakes are numerous. Climate very moist and variable; rain falls three out of four days throughout the year, which renders the soil, otherwise good, moist and sterile, except in a few spots. Rainfall at Portree 148 inches. Most part of the island is useless for agriculture, and even the pastures are chiefly in heath and coarse grass; the majority of the inhabitants are consequently in a very impoverished state, and many have emigrated to the colonies. Arable lands are nearly confined to the sea coast; cattle, fish, and kelp are the chief exports; and potatoes and fish the chief food of the pop. The inhabitants are mostly of Celtic descent. The island contains many Danish antiquities; it belongs chiefly to Lord Macdonald and the Macleod family; is divided into seven parishes, and forms, with adjacent Small Isles, a presbytery under the Scottish church establishment. Principal villages, Portree, the cap., Stein, Kyle-Akin, Broadford, Oronsay, Armadale, and Uig.

SMYRNA (Turk. Ismir), a famous city and seaport of Asia Minor, and the chief commercial emporium of W. Asia, Anatolia, on a plain at the head of the Gulf of Smyrna, and partly upon the declivity of the ancient Mons Pagus, which is crowned by a citadel. Lat. of Daraghaz point 38° 26' 5" N., lon. 27° 9' 7" E.; 212 m. S.S.W. Constantinople. Estimated pop. 150,000, of whom 80,000 are Turks, 40,000 Greeks, 15,000 Jews, 10,000 Armenians, and 5000 Franks. The streets are narrow, badly paved, and dirty; and the bazaars are large and well stocked. The Frank and Greek quarters extend for about 2½ m. along the shore; above these is the Armenian quarter; and the Turks occupy the upper parts of the city, having between them and the Armenians two close quarters inhabited by the Jews. Principal edifices, the vizier-khan, constructed from the marble ruins of the ancient theatre, the palace of the governor, barracks for 3000 men, built for the British army during the Crimean war, an English hospital and cemetery, several Jews' synagogues, Greek, Roman Catholic, Armenian, and Protestant churches, and about 20 mosques, which are always open for the inspection of Christians and others. The ruins of an ancient castle occupy the summit of a hill overlooking the bay. Numerous coffee-houses and gardens are scattered along the banks of the river Meles, which enters the gulf E. the city; and extensive cemeteries, with tall minarets and groves of cypress trees, occupy portions of the declivity of Mount Pagus, on which are various remains of the ancient city, the seat of one of the "seven churches" of the early Christian period mentioned in Scripture. Smyrna has a large Armenian academy, and it is the residence of consuls of nearly all the principal European states. It has six journals, printed in five different languages. Trade chiefly with Great Britain, Austria, France, and the United States. Exports consist of silk, raw cotton, copper, opium, hides, wool, goats-hair and skins, valonea, olive oil, drugs, gums, sponge, figs, raisins, and nut-galls. Imports comprise coffee to about 6,000,000 lbs. annually, woollen, cotton, and silk fabrics, metals raw and manufactured, sugar, indigo, spirits, cochineal, and spices. It has regular steam communication with Constantinople, Athens, Beyrout, and Alexandria. A railway, for which there is a handsome station, was opened to Aidin, 70 m. S.E., in 1864. Smyrna claims to be the birthplace of Homer. In 1402, it was ruined by Timour, and it has since suffered repeated vicissitudes, especially from destructive earthquakes and visitations of the plague, but its admirable situation for commerce has caused it, after each new calamity, rapidly to regain its wonted importance. It suffered severely from fire in July 1845.—The Gulf of Smyrna, an inlet of the Ægean Sea, extends inland for 45 m., the breadth of its entrance is 22 miles. It has in most parts good anchorage, and ships of large burden can anchor close to the quays of Smyrna near its E. extremity. It contains several isls., the principal of which, Long or English Island, is 5 m. in length. On Cape Merminiji is a lighthouse 230 feet high, with two fixed lights, in lat. 38° 37' N., lon. 26° 59' 15" E.

SOUDAN or NIGRITIA, a vast region of Central Africa, the limits of which are undefined, but it is understood to be bounded E. by Kordofan, S. by Upper Guinea, from which it is separated by the Kong mountains, and by lat. 7° N., W. by Senegambia, and N. by the desert of Sahara. The E. portion comprises the basin of Lake Tchad and Lake Fitri, where the surface is generally low and swampy, Lake Tchad being only 830 feet above the sea. It is traversed in the W. by the great river Niger and its tributaries. Between that river and Lake Tchad the country is hilly, and S. of Benue river Mount Atlantica is 10,000 feet above the sea. The inhabitants are principally negroes of various tribes, as the Fillatahs and Mandingoes; and Arabs. They are somewhat advanced in civilisation, and are skilful in cultivating the soil. They manufacture good cotton cloths, and are expert in forging iron implements. In many parts reading the Koran, and writing, is extensively taught. The country is divided into several kingdoms, the principal being Bambara, Masina, Gando, and Sokoto (the former Houssa), Bornu, Bagirmi, Waday, and Dar-fur. P. is estimated at from 30,000,000 to 50,000,000, and is very dense in some parts.

SOUND (THE), a narrow strait between Denmark (island Seeland) and Sweden, which connects the Baltic with the Kattegat and North Sea. Length, N. to S., 30 m.; breadth, at its narrowest point between Helsingfors (Elsinore) and Helsingborg, 3 m.; depth 4 to 20 fathoms. The Danish sovereigns formerly possessed the territory on both sides of the strait, and they long continued to exact toll from all foreign vessels passing through it at Elsinore, the average annual amount of which was 153,644*l.*, and the number of ships passing the Sound about 20,000 annually. In 1857 the Sound dues were abolished by treaty with the commercial nations of Europe on the payment of 3,500,000*l.*, of which one-third was paid by England.

SOUNDA or SEUNDA, a town of India, prov. Bundelcund, in lat. 26° 9' N., lon. 78° 58' E. It is situated on the rt. b. of the Sindre river. In Nov. 1817, the Marquis of Hastings fixed his headquarters here, on his advance towards Gwalior.

SOUR or SÜR, Tyre, a seaport town of Syria, pash. and 28 m. N.N.E. Acre, on the E. part of a peninsula about 1 m. in length, which is the insular site of the famous maritime city of Tyre. P. 3000 to 4000, one-half Metawileh and the others Christians. It has often been desolated, and the whole peninsula is strewn with ruins. There was a Phœnician, a Roman, and mediæval Tyre, each built on the ruins of its predecessor. In the modern town the only building of note is the old church. Outside the ruined walls is the Mohammedan burying-ground. Its port, on the N. side of the artificial isthmus formed by Alexander the Great during his memorable siege of Tyre, is now so choked as to be unfit for any but small vessels; and the trade of this ancient emporium of the East has now dwindled to small exports of tobacco, cotton, charcoal, and fuel.

SOURABAYA or SURABAYA, a seaport town of the island Java, cap. one of the three provs. into which the island is divided by the Dutch, on its

N. coast, opposite the island Madura, and at the mouth of the Kadiri, lat. of Kalemaas Fort  $7^{\circ} 12' 31''$  S., lon.  $112^{\circ} 44' 7''$  E. P. 130,000. It has a government house, a mint, and large store-houses. Its harbour is the best in Java, and defended by many forts and batteries; and it has shipbuilding docks, an extensive iron floating dock capable of containing ships of the greatest burden, a naval arsenal, and a cannon foundry. It is the seat of a civil court, and court-martial, with appeal to the supreme court in Batavia. In its province are the ruins of Mojopahit, the former cap. of Java.

SOUTH AMBOY, a township of the U. S., North America, New Jersey, at the head of Raritan Bay, at the mouth of the Raritan, and on the Camden and Amboy Railway, 2 m. S. Perth-Amboy. Manufs. stonewares; and has a good harbour, whence steamers ply to New York.

SOUTHAMPTON (COUNTY OF), SOUTHAMPTON-SHIRE, HAMPSHIRE, HANTS, a maritime co. of England, having S. the English Channel, with its inlets Spithead, the Solent, etc., E. Sussex and Surrey, N. Berkshire, and W. Wilts and Dorset. Area, including the Isle of Wight, 1625 sq. m., or 1,070,216 ac. P. (1861) 481,815. The ranges of the N. and S. Downs traverse the co., being on the W. offsets from the table-land of Salisbury Plain, and on the E. continuous with the Downs of Sussex and Surrey. In the S. are the extensive bays Southampton-water and the harbours of Portsmouth and Langston, with the islets of Portsea and Hayling. The S.W. division of the co. is mostly occupied by the New Forest. In other parts are the forests of Bere, Alice Holt, Woolmer, etc., and most parts of the co. are well wooded. A long and narrow strip is enclosed by the co. Sussex. In the N.N.E. and S.W. are extensive heaths. Soil generally well cultivated. Climate mild and salubrious. Principal rivers, the Anton, Itchin, Avon, Stour, and Tees. All the usual crops are raised; hops are cultivated on the E. border, near Farnham; large quantities of cider are made, and the bacon of the co. is in repute. Manufs., except those connected with the dockyard and shipping establishments at Portsmouth, are of little importance. Emsworth, on the border of Sussex, has extensive oyster beds; and Aldershot, on the borders of Surrey, is famous for its military camp. The Basingstoke Canal is in the N.E., and the co. is intersected by the London and S.W. Railway, with several branches, and the S. Coast Railway, terminating at Portsmouth. Trade centres chiefly at Southampton and Portsmouth. The co. is subdivided into 39 hundreds, and is included in the circle and diocese of Winchester, the cap.; besides which, it contains the parl. bors. Southampton and Portsmouth, Christchurch, Lympington, & Petersfield, and the market towns Gosport, Alresford, Alton, Basingstoke, Fordingbridge, Lympington, Christchurch, Romsey, and Ringwood. The co. sends 4 members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1864), N. division, 4116; S. division 5424. The ruined city of Silchester in the N., Porchester with its ancient castle in the S., and Carisbrooke Castle in the Isle of Wight, are amongst its principal antiquities, besides those in Winchester, the ancient cap. of the kingdom Wessex, and of England during the Saxon, Norman, and early Plantagenet dynasties.

SOUTHAMPTON, a parl. and munic. bor., seaport town, and co. of England, in the S. part of the co. Hants, occupying a peninsula between the mouths of the Test and Itchen rivers, at the head of Southampton-water, 12 m. S.S.W. Winchester, 80 m. S.W. London, on the S.W. Railway. Lat. of St Michael's spire,  $50^{\circ} 54' N.$ ; lon.  $1^{\circ} 24' 2'' W.$  Ac. of bor. & co. 1970. P. (1861) 35,305; (1861) 46,960. Alt. 62 feet. Its main street is separated into two parts by the Bargate, a portion of the ancient walls, which still partially enclose the old town. Over the Bargate is the town-hall; other principal structures are several parish churches, the audit and custom-houses, theatre, public baths, two sets of assembly rooms, dock company's office, railway station, three piers, and the cavalry barracks. The suburbs are extensive. The town is well built, clean, and abundantly supplied with water from a large Artesian well on Southampton common. Public institutions comprise a free grammar school, hospital, almshouses and other charities, a royal humane society, mechanics' literary and polytechnic institutions, an infirmary, botanic garden, and the surveying and engraving departments of the ordnance board. The new docks, on the E. of the town, opened in 1842, have an area of 208 acres, and admit steamers of above 700 tons burden. The West India, Mediterranean, East India, and China mails, have their station here, and the town communicates by steamers with all the ports of the south of England, the Channel Islands, and Ireland. The port extends from near Portsmouth to Christchurch. Vessels entered (1862) 1156; tons 362,583. Cleared 1080; tons 350,315. Vessels belonging to the port, sailing 115, tons 16,351; steam 22, tons 5521. Exports (1862) 3,379,503. Customs rev. (1862) 112,485. Manufactures silks and carpets; it has ship-building and engineering works, and a general trade. Southampton is a place of fashionable resort in summer; and it has annual races and regatta. The bor. is divided into 5 wards, and governed by a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors. It sends 2 members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1864) 2315. Southampton appears to have risen on the decline of ancient Clauentum, at Bittern, on the estuary of the Itchin; and in Saxon times it had a castle, of which, however, little, if any portion, now remains.—Southampton-Water is a fine inlet, stretching from the Solent and Spithead, N.W., into the interior of Hampshire for about 11 m.; greatest breadth about 2 m. It bounds the New Forest hundreds on the E., and receives the Anton, Itchin, and Hamble rivers, and is usually covered with shipping, having the advantage of 4 tides in the 24 hours, caused by the tidal wave being intercepted both ways by the Isle of Wight. On its picturesque shores is the Royal Victoria hospital. [NETLEY.]

SOUTHAMPTON, a co., U. S., North America, in S.E. part of Virginia. Area 614 sq. m. P. 7507 free, 5408 slaves.—Also several townships.—I. New Hampshire, 39 m. S. Concord.—II. SOUTHAMPTON ISLAND, British North America, on the N. side of Hudson Bay, is between lat. 62° and 66° N., lon. 80° and 87° W. Coasts rugged and mountainous. Cape Southampton forms its S. extremity. It is conjectured to be a collection of islands, but its interior is unexplored.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA, a British colony, between lon. 132° and 141° E., and the Southern Ocean and lat. 26° S., comprising an area of 333,328 sq. m., or 245,329,920 ac. The coast line, which is more indented than in any other part of Australia, extends about 1500 miles from N.W. to S.E., embracing Spencer and St Vincent Gulf, with York Peninsula and Kangaroo Island. The surface of the colony is mostly undulating or level. The chief mountain ranges are the Gawler Range, extending from Streaky Bay to the head of Spencer Gulf, with a maximum elevation of 2000 ft.; Flinders' Range, running in a northerly direction from the head of Spencer Gulf, attaining an elevation in some parts of more than 3000 feet. Mount Bryant, the most elevated summit E. of St Vincent Gulf, rises to the height of 3012 ft. The table-land in Eyre Peninsula, W. of Spencer Gulf, averages 1800 feet in elevation. The Murray, which has its rise in the Australian Alps, pursues the lower part of its course in this colony, and is the only navigable river. Small streams are however numerous, and the country is, on the whole, well watered. Principal lakes—Torrens, Alexandrina, Gairdner, Gregory, Eyre, and Frome. Ponds and creeks are numerous, and a series of lagoons border the coast along Encounter Bay, in the S.E. The settled portions of the colony are situated on the E. side of the St Vincent Gulf, between that inlet and the Murray, and in the S.E. between Laipède Bay, eastward, and the frontiers of Victoria, though land is leased as far as Lake Eyre. Climate healthy, and similar to that of Victoria; on the Adelaide Plains farmers occasionally suffer from hot winds and drought; but it is on the whole admirably adapted for the growth of cereals and all kinds of fruit. The colony was established in 1834. Its progress has been remarkable. The population in 1847 was 31,153; 1857, 109,917; 1860, 126,830; and at the end of 1863 it was estimated at 145,000. The sexes are nearly equal. The staple products of the colony are cereals, minerals, and wool. The quantity of land under cultivation in 1860 was 460,000 acres. The returns of stock in 1860 are as follow: sheep, 2,824,811; cattle, 287,265; horses, 49,399. The quantity of land sold by the Government, from the commencement of the colony up to the end of 1857, was 1,557,740 acres. The lands are put up at auction, generally in 80 acre sections, at the upset price of 1*l.* per acre. The local legislature is invested with control over the land fund. It is rich in mineral resources. In 1857, there were 58 mines worked in the colony, or ready for working. The quantity of ore raised during the year ending March 1857, was 10,960 tons. Coal is scarce. Iron plentiful. The wool export for 1860 was 12,000,000 lbs., valued at 1,250,000*l.* In 1860 the total imports were 1,640,000*l.*; exports, 1,784,000*l.*; revenue, 439,000*l.*; expenditure, 664,366*l.* Exports, 1862, wool, copper, corn, hides, tallow, bark, etc., to the value of 866,588*l.*; imports, apparels, woollens, cottons, iron, leather, machinery, hardwares, beer, ale, spirits, bags, stationery, glass manufs., tobacco, etc., to the value of 950,637*l.* The following are the principal lines of railway:—A line of about 7 m., connecting the city of Adelaide with Port Adelaide. 2. A line connecting Adelaide with Gawler-town and Kapunda, 50 m. long. The average cost has been 13,660*l.* per mile. The electric telegraph is in operation between Adelaide, the Port, Goolwa, and Gawler-town; being a total of 600 m. within the colony, besides being connected with the capitals of all the adjacent colonies. An important trade has sprung up on the river Murray, which is navigable from the Goolwa, near Encounter Bay, to Albury, a distance of nearly 2000 m. The climate and soil of South Australia are admirably suited for the cultivation of the vine, of which 1055 acres were under cultivation in 1857. Mean annual temperature of Adelaide 68°4. Rainfall 20 inches. Excellent wines have been produced, and promise to become a source of great trade. The quantity of wine made in 1857 is computed at 99,978 galls.—value 25,000*l.*—of which 1810 galls. were exported. Many fine fruits come to perfection; as also tobacco, hops, and indigo. Sarsaparilla, sassafras, and other drugs, are indigenous. Vegetables are plentiful. Gold has not been discovered in any great quantity in this colony. The Echuaga diggings, on the Onkaparinga, have never employed more than 200 diggers, and latterly they have been virtually abandoned. In 1860 the income of the post-office was 14,582*l.* None of the religious denominations are paid by the government, and the salaries of clergymen are very small. The religious statistics for 1860 were as follows:—Church of England, 43,587; Romanists, 15,594; Methodists, 27,994; Lutherans, 11,235; Presbyterians, 10,530; Independents, 6268; Bible Christians, 4216; Baptists, 3424; besides minor sects. The present system of education was established in 1852; the number of schools subsidized by government was 219, with 10,711 scholars; but nearly two-fifths of the schools have no connection with government; the total number of scholars in 1861 was 15,344, or 1 for every 8½ of the population. The colony, while increasing in population, wealth, and intelligence, is decreasing in crime. The government is vested in a governor; an executive council of the heads of departments, having ministerial responsibility; a legislative council, consisting of 18 members; and a house of assembly of 36 members. Both chambers are elective, but by different constituencies and with different tenures. The constitution embraces triennial parliaments, universal suffrage, and vote by ballot. The chief settlements of the colony are Adelaide, Port Adelaide, Port Gawler, Albert-town, Gawler-town, Port Wakefield, Port Angus, Goolwa, Port Elliot, Port Lincoln, Mount Barker, Strathalbyn, German-town, Macclesfield, Kapunda, and Kooriga.

SPAIN (Span. Espana, la Peninsula, anc. Iberia, Hispania), a kingdom of S.W. Europe, forming, with Portugal, the Iberian peninsula, extending between lat. 36° and 43° 48' N., lon. 3° 20' E. and 9° 21' W.; bounded N. by the Bay of Biscay, and by the Pyrénées, which separate it from France, E. and S. by the Mediterranean and the Strait of Gibraltar, and W. by Portugal and the Atlantic Ocean. Length N. to S. 540 m.; breadth E. to W. 598 m. Cap. Madrid. The principal islands are the Baleares or Balearic islands in the Mediterranean; off the coasts are the island of Leon, some islets in the Bay of Vigo, and others at the mouth of the Ebro. The surface of the peninsula is more diversified than that of any other country of equal extent in Europe; its interior forms a vast elevated table-land, which in the plateau of Castile has a mean elevation of 2300 feet. This plateau occupies almost one-half of the superficies, and is nearly surrounded by mountains. The country is traversed in a direction from E. to W. by five principal chains of mountains, called in Spanish Sierras. These are (from N. to S.)—I. the Pyrénées, extending from Cape Creux on the E. to the Bay of Biscay on the W., culminating point Pic Neihou, 11,171 feet; and their W. continuation, the Asturian and Cantabrian mountains, some of which rise to 10,000 feet.—II. the chain which separates the basins of the Douro and Tagus, the Sierras Guadarama, Gredos, and Gata. Highest point in the Sierra Gredos 10,500 feet.—III. the mountains of Toledo, Sierra Guadalupe, and Sierra Mames, between the Tagus and Guadiana.—IV. the Sierra Morena, separating the basins of the Guadiana and Guadalquivir, and connected W. ward with the Sierra Monchique in Portugal.—V. Sierra Nevada, extending from Cartagena to Cadiz, and containing the Cerro Muñalacen, next to Pic Neihou, the highest point of the peninsula, 11,664 ft., and the Pic de Veleta, 11,387 ft. above the sea. The following table shows the area and pop. of the old provinces with their new divisions:—

Spain is rich in minerals, especially iron, copper, and lead. The gold and silver mines of the time of the Romans have been abandoned, but mercury is abundant in the mines of Almaden. Lead forms an important branch of mining industry. Coal is found chiefly in the Asturias, the richest coal-field occurring on the E. of the mountains overlying the Devonian strata; copper, tin, zinc, antimony, arsenic, and cobalt are common, and rock salt is abundant in the hills of Cardona. The principal rivers of Spain are, from N. to S., the Ter, Llobregat, Ebro, Guadaluviar, Júcar, and Segura, flowing E. to the Mediterranean; the Minho, Douro, Tagus, Guadiana, and Guadalquivir, flowing mostly through Portugal W. and S. to the Atlantic. The N. slope has only the Nalon, the Bidassoa, and some mountain streams. The chief tributaries are the Esia and the Pisuerga, which join the Douro; the Manzanares, which passes Madrid, and joins the Jarama, an affluent of the Tagus; the Aragon, Gallego, and Segre, affluents of the Ebro; and the Genil, affluent of the Guadalquivir. Few of these are navigable, and those only for small boats near their mouths. The only lakes or lagoons of Spain are the Albufera in Valencia, and the Mar Menor in Murcia. The coast line of Spain, which has an extent of 1400 m., is in general little indented, except in the N.W., where it is bold and rocky. The chief capes are Finistère on the N.W., and Trafalgar on the S.W., in the Atlantic; Gibraltar, Gata, Palos, and Creux, in the Mediterranean; Peñas and Ortegál, in the Bay of Biscay. The climate of Spain varies exceedingly with elevation and position; it is warm on the coasts; the table-lands are exposed to great heat in summer, and extreme cold in winter. Many of the mountains rise above the snow line, the limit of which, in the Pyrénées, is 8952 feet; in the Sierra Nevada, 11,190 feet. Mean annual temperature at Madrid 58°·2, Fahr. The annual rainfall on the Sierra Nevada, and on the N. and W. coasts, is 25 to 35 inches; while on the table-land of Castile it is only 10 inches, and the capital is often exposed to severe drought. Winter is the rainy season. The most noxious winds are the solano (the sirocco of Italy), a hot wind from the S., and the gallego, a cold N.W. wind from the mountains of Galicia. Frost is often severe during the night in winter. Earthquakes are sometimes felt in the S. The soil is generally fertile, except in the elevated and arid districts of the central provs. Agriculture has made considerable progress. The chief crops are wheat, maize, barley, rice, hemp, and flax. The wines of Spain are highly valued; the principal growths are those of Xeres (sherry), Rota, Malaga, Alicante, Malvasia, and Val de Peñas; the other products are soda (from marine plants), honey, wax, and silk, the latter very abundant in the S.E. provs. In the S. provs. the sugar cane and cotton have been acclimatized, and there the orange, citron, almond, fig, date, and banana grow in great abundance. The best building timber grows on the N. coast; the cork tree, the kermes oak, and the sumach tree, yield valuable products. The horses of Andalucía are celebrated; the mules and asses are remarkable for beauty and size. Cattle are of good breeds. The race of sheep, called the merino, yields a great quantity of excellent wool; their exportation has always been prohibited, and their pasturage is regulated by ancient laws. Goats are very abundant in the table-lands; the chamois is found in the Pyrénées; and the bear, wolf, wild cat, marten, fox, and lynx, in the different mountains. Fish is not plentiful in the rivers, but abundant on the Atlantic coasts. Its manufacturing industry, formerly flourishing, has greatly declined; the government has still manufactures of saltpetre, gunpowder, cannon, and firearms, tobacco, porcelain, and glass, but they are mostly in decay; and the celebrated sword manufacture at Toledo is nearly extinguished. The other manufactures are of silks, cottons, woollens, and leather. Cutlery, iron, and copper goods are made chiefly in Biscay. There are no good public roads in Spain, except those around Madrid; wheel carriages are little used, and much of the transport is effected by means of mules. There are several canals, many of them on a magnificent scale, but mostly unfinished and unfit for navigation; the chief of these are the Imperial Canal, commenced by Charles v., extending along the right bank of the Ebro; the canals of Castile, Manzaneres, Murcia, Albacete, and Guadarama. The railways in operation are from Cadiz to Cordova, Valencia to Toledo and Madrid, with branch to Ciudad Rodrigo, Madrid to Guadalajara, and to Santander by Valladolid, with branch to Burgos, & Barcelona to Zaragoza & Pamplona. From the extent of its coast line, its numerous ports, its geographical position and natural products, Spain possesses greater commercial advantages than any other country in Europe. The principal exports are wool, wine, brandy, oil, fruits, iron, lead, mercury, and salt, with a small amount of silk and manufactured goods; value (1860) 10,982,634*l.* Imports colonial goods, dried fish and salted provisions, butter, cheese, rice, cotton and woollen goods, cutlery, glass, and building timber; value 14,833,135*l.* Vessels entered the ports of Spain in 1860, 10,127, tonnage 1,351,988.

The present inhabitants of Spain are descendants of the ancient Iberians, or of other races who colonized it at different periods. Four primitive families are discernible.—I. the Spaniards, descendants of the original races, and of Greeks, Romans, Vandals, Goths, and Alans, comprising 19-20ths of the population.—II. the Basques in the N., 1-24th.—III. the Moors in the S., descendants of the conquerors who ruled for seven centuries in the S. of the peninsula, 1-200th.—IV. the Gitanos, or gypsies, 1-250th. The Jewish race has disappeared from Spain since the expulsion of the Jews in 1492. The Spaniards are well formed, handsome, and vigorous, with black eyes, dark and clear complexions, passionate, and addicted to music and games. The nobility comprised (in 1863) 82 dukes, 722 marquises, 558 counts, 74 viscounts, and 67 barons.

The government, since 1837, is a constitutional representative monarchy, with a council of state organized in 1860; the religion exclusively Roman Catholic. By decree of the Cortes 1836, all convents were suppressed and their property confiscated to the nation; up to 1863, the sale of church property produced nearly 30,000,000*l.* sterling. Formerly public education was entirely in the hands of the priests, but since 1838 government grants and superintendence have greatly advanced the cause of education, especially since 1857, when teachers were subjected to examination, and schoolrooms were built. In 1861 there were 1,646,568 pupils in public and private schools; 58 public colleges for middle class education, with 757 professors and 13,881 pupils; for high class education there are faculties of literature and philosophy, science, medicine, and theology. Army (1863), including militia and national guards, 151,668 men. Navy,

2 ships of the line of 84 guns, 5 frigates, and several small vessels; in all, 35 sailing vessels with 641 guns, and 78 war steamers with 556 guns. In 1863 a sum of 500,000*l.* was granted by the Cortes for the construction of iron-clad men-of-war in progress. Public revenue (1862-63) 2,081,569,000 reals, or 20,315,690*l.*; expenditure, 2,021,135,280 reals, or 20,211,353*l.*; debt (1863) 155,500,000*l.* The peninsula, now forming the kingdoms of Spain and Portugal, was first visited by the Phœnicians, and afterwards by the Carthaginians, who here formed several establishments. It was conquered by the Romans after a resistance of two centuries: they divided it into 3 great provinces, viz., Taracoenensis in the E., N., and centre, Bætica in the S., and Lusitania in the W. The Visigoths overran the country in the 5th century, and were driven from most of it by the Arabs, A.D. 711. The kingdom of Portugal was founded in 1095. During 8 centuries the Christian princes were engaged in continual warfare with the Mohammedans. From this state the country was delivered under Ferdinand and Isabella, by the conquest of Granada, A.D. 1492. This was followed by the pillage and expulsion of the Jews, who had possessed themselves of most of the commercial wealth of the country. In the same year Columbus discovered the new world, and Spain became mistress of the greater part of America as then known. Of these vast colonial possessions, Spain has now (1864) only the following:—

From the sixteenth century, Spain was divided into large provs., having mostly the title of kingdom; but by a royal decree of April 1833 it was partitioned into 48 smaller provs., each bearing the name of its cap., except Navarra and the three Basque provs., which remain unchanged, and possess peculiar privileges. Napoleon I. attempted to place his brother on the throne of Spain, but he was driven out of the peninsula chiefly by the British army under Wellington. Since then there have been repeated civil wars and insurrections.

STIRLING (formerly Stryvelyme or Estrivelin, and in Celtic times designated Strila), a royal, parl., munic. bor., river-port, town, and pa. of Scotland, cap. co., on the rt. b. of the Forth, where it first becomes fordable, here crossed by two bridges, 31 m. W.N.W. Edinburgh, and 26

m. N.E. Glasgow. Ac. of pa., partly in co. Clackmannan, 200. P. (1861) 11,714; do. of parl. bor. (1861) 13,714; do. of town 10,276. It stands on the S.E. declivity of an abrupt basaltic hill, up which a spacious main street leads to the ancient castle, whence a magnificent view is obtained of the windings of the river Forth and the surrounding scenery. Its streets generally present the appearance of modernized antiquity, being interspersed with many residences of the old Scottish nobles. The oldest existing charter of the bor. is dated 1120, but it bears to be a confirmation of former grants. The town, from its central position, and easy communication by railway from all parts, is rapidly increasing in population and extent. A number of elegant villas have been erected in its beautiful environs. The castle, of the origin of which nothing is known, was a favourite residence of James V., and contains the palace and the parliament house built by him, but now used as barracks for a battalion depôt of Highland regiments. Amongst the most conspicuous structures are the old Gothic church in which James VI. was crowned, the West Church, and numerous other places of worship; the remains of several ancient ecclesiastical edifices, and of an unfinished palace begun in 1570 by the Regent Earl of Mar; Cowan's and other hospitals; the town-hall, atheneum, with a spire of 120 feet in height, corn exchange, gaol, union-hall, high school, tract depôt, offices of seven banks; and the old walls and bridges. Stirling has a grammar and other endowed schools, public library and reading-rooms, a mechanics' institute, and a free library with attached museum. Vessels of 150 tons can reach its quays; and it has a coasting and export trade in the products of its manufs., which comprise tartans, shawls, some cotton stuffs, ropes, malt, leather, soap, and mineral oils. The dyeing of yarns, woollen cloths, and other fabrics, is extensive. Imports consist chiefly of timber, coals, brick, tiles, lime, and large quantities of corn. It communicates by railway with Edinburgh, Glasgow, Perth, Dunfermline, and through Fife, also with Balloch, Dunblane, Doune, and Callander. Steamers ply to and from Granton Pier, near Edinburgh. The borough unites with Dunfermline, Culross, Inverkeithing, and South Queensferry, in sending 1 member to H. of C. Near to the town, in 1297, the battle of Stirling Bridge, and in 1314, the famous battle of Bannockburn, were fought. The whole district is full of interest and historical associations.—Snowdon was another name for Stirling Castle, where it gives title to a herald in the Lyon Court of Arms,—“And Snowdon's knight is Scotland's king!”

STIRLINGSHIRE, an inland co. of Scotland, extending almost across the isthmus between the Firths of Clyde and Forth, having N. the co. Perth, W. Loch Lomond, S. the cos. Dumbarton and Lanark, E. Clackmannan and Linlithgow shires and the Forth, which river also forms most part of its N. boundary. Area estim. at 502 sq. m., or 312,960 ac., of which 200,000 are returned as arable, 50,000 uncultivated, and 62,960 waste. P. (1861) 91,926. Surface mountainous towards the W. & N.W., including Ben Lomond, 3192 ft. above the sea; elsewhere are some rich alluvial vales, especially the carse lands, extending 48 m. along the river Forth. Moors and bogs prevail in some parts. Chief rivers, the Forth, Carron, Endrick, Bannockburn, and Avon. Hill sheep farms large. Principal crops, wheat, beans, barley, potatoes, and clover, in the lowlands; oats and turnips in the highlands. Many highland cattle are purchased here and fed for the Falkirk cattle fairs. Coal, ironstone, and freestone are worked; and in this co. are the Carron iron-works. Manufacturers of carpets, tartans, tweeds, winceys, agricultural implements, and shallons, at Stirling, Bannockburn, Hayford Mills, and St Ninians; blankets and serges at Alva; chemical products, and paper; and it has some large cotton mills, foundries, dye-works, and distilleries. Railways to Perth, Glasgow, and Edinburgh cross the E. part of the co., and the N. and S. parts are intersected by railways to Dunblane, Doune, Callander, Balloch, and Dumbarton. Chief towns, Stirling, Falkirk, Denny, Grangemouth, Balfour, and Kilsyth. The co. is divided into 25 pas., and sends 1 member to H. of Commons. Reg. electors (1863) 1953.

STOCKHOLM, the cap. city of Sweden, on its E. coast, at the junction of Lake Mælær with the Baltic; lat. of observatory, 59° 20' 6" N., lon. 18° 3' 7" E. P. (1859) 101,502; (1861) 116,496. Mean temp. of year, 42°-2, winter 26°, summer 60°, Fahr. The climate of Stockholm is unhealthy, owing to the exhalations from the marshy ground which surrounds it. It covers an area of 4½ sq. m., partly on the mainland, but chiefly on a number of islands, united by many bridges. The situation of Stockholm is very beautiful, surrounded as it is by majestic wooded mountains, and placed among the irregular gulfs and promontories of Lake Mælær. Its ten quarters are separated by the arms of the lake and by the sea, and communicate with one another by 13 stone bridges, and by many others of wood. On the three principal islands most of the houses are of stone, and there are clustered the chief public edifices—the palace, cathedral, bank, and hall of the diet. In the suburbs the buildings are chiefly of brick, stuccoed or painted, or else of wood. Streets irregular, paved with pebbles, and crooked on the islands; on the mainland much more regular. Many of them are built on the declivities of the hills one above another, and form a fine amphitheatre, crowned by the palace of the king. It has numerous squares, parks, and public walks, which are ornamented with statues and many picturesque royal villas. The cathedral is an imposing edifice, with paintings and statuary; and in the Riddarholm church are the tombs of the kings and most celebrated generals of Sweden, and many national military trophies. The church of Storkyrkan is the most ancient; in it the kings are crowned. The palace is a vast edifice, and contains a museum of antiquities, a picture gallery, and the royal library, containing 40,000 vols., and in which a copy of every book printed in Sweden must be deposited. In the chapel a feast is held annually in honour of Gustavus Adolphus. Other chief buildings are the opera-house, town-hall, military and civil hospitals, artillery dépôt, several prisons, a castle, lazaretto, and theatre. Stockholm has a famous academy of sciences, with a zoological museum; national museum, palace of the court of justice, arsenal, ship-building yards, and, on an isolated rock, the observatory; academies of painting, sculpture, and literature, and college of medicine; schools of navigation, a botanic garden; societies of agriculture, commerce, and philosophy; and German, Finnish, and Presbyterian churches. The royal villa of Carlsberg, on the borders of the lake, has been converted into a military school. Stockholm possesses a high court of justice, composed of 12 members. It publishes several newspapers and monthly journals. Manufactures woollen, silk, cotton, and linen goods, sail-cloth, glass, earthenwares, stockings, refined sugar, tobacco, clocks, watches, and scientific instruments, to the value of 2,000,000 francs annually. It has a cannon foundry, and steam engine factories. Stockholm is the chief commercial emporium of Sweden. The harbour, defended by two forts, though somewhat difficult of entrance, is good; large ships can lie close to the quays, in the centre of the town, and it communicates by canals, etc., with a large part of the interior of Scandinavia. Stockholm has no railway, but a telegraph line connects it with the principal maritime towns of Sweden and the S. of Norway. Stockholm was founded in the 13th century, and was originally only a fortress, built to protect the approaches of Upsala, and it was not until the 17th century that it superseded Upsala as the Swedish capital. Area of læn 2854 sq. m. P. (1860) 121,737.

STOCKHOLM, a township, U. S., North America, New York, on the river St Regis.

STRASBOURG, Argentoratum, a strongly fortified city of France, on its E. frontier, cap. dep. Bas-Rhin, and formerly cap. prov. Alsace, on west bank of the Ill, near the l. b. of the Rhine, to which its glacis extends, and across which it communicates with Kehl (Baden) by a bridge of boats, 72 m. N. Basle. Lat. of observatory 48° 34' 56" N.; lon. 7° 44' 51" E. Pop. (1856) 77,856, (1861) 82,014. Mean temp. of year 49°-7, winter 34°-2, summer 64°-5 Fahr. It is a fortress of the first class, triangular in form, enclosed by bastioned ramparts, strengthened by numerous outworks, and entered by 7 gates. At its E. extremity is a strong pentagonal citadel, and by means of sluices the adjacent country may be laid under water. It is intersected by branches of the Ill, and outside of the walls are several suburbs, a large artillery ground, a hippodrome or race-course, numerous gardens, and places of public resort. The vast cathedral, founded in 504, and the choir built by Charlemagne, has a spire 466 feet in height, or 33 feet higher than St Peter's at Rome, formerly the highest in the world, but now surpassed by a few ft. in the cathedral spire at Vienna. The building is in every part richly decorated with sculpture, & it has a remarkable astronomical clock, & fine stained glass windows. Other buildings are the Temple Neuf, a Protestant church; the church of St Thomas, Jews' synagogue, theatre, court-house, prefecture, public library, academy comm. college, corn hall, public granaries, custom-house, arsenal, barracks, & other military establishments. Several hospitals and asylums, penitentiary, an exchange, corn, fish, and other markets, and a botanic garden. Strasbourg is a bishop's see, the seat of a Protestant faculty, a chamber of commerce, societies of agriculture and arts, faculties of law, medicine, pharmacy, arts, letters, etc., and has a mint, arsenal, and cannon foundry. It has a very extensive transit trade, by its connections with Germany, Switzerland, N. Italy, and all W. continental Europe. Its manufs. are in great variety; among the principal are beer and leather, for which it is especially famed; cotton, woollen, and silk fabrics; canvas, jewellery, buttons, cutlery, clocks, musical and mathematical instruments, and chemical products; it has copper and iron forges, distilleries, soap factories, and a large bookselling trade. Its patés de foies gras have high celebrity. The Basle and Baden Railways, the railway to Paris, and the canals connecting it with all the great rivers of France, and with the Danube, are important aids to its commerce. Steamers ply between Strasbourg and Basle, Rotterdam, and London. It has belonged to France since 1681; and is the birthplace of Marshal Kellerman, General Kleber, and of Pierre Schœffer, who contests with Gutenberg the invention of printing.

SUMATRA, the most W. of the Sunda Islands, Malaysia, and, next to Borneo and Papua, the largest in the E. Seas, between lat. 5° 40' N. and 6° S., lon. 95° 20' and 106° E., separated N.E. from the Malay peninsula by the Strait of Malacca, having E. the Java Sea and the Strait of Sunda, separating it from the island of Java, and on other sides the Indian Ocean. Length, N.W. to

S.E., 1025 m.; breadth 60 to 240 m. Area has been estimated at 177,000 sq. m.; pop. very vaguely at from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000, mostly Malays, but partly of the Papuan Negro race, with Moors in the N.W., and Dutch and other foreigners. A mountain chain of primitive formation extends along the whole length from Point Atchin to Sunda Strait, keeping near to the W. coast, rising in Mount Ophir at the equator to 9944 feet, Bonko 5400 feet, Mount Aboung-Aboung 7300 feet. The range contains three volcanoes, and in them are found granite, marble, syenite, porphyry, and petroleum, gold, copper, iron, lignite, saltpetre, and tin. Sulphur is abundant in some localities. The E. half of the island is mostly level or undulating, and along the coasts there are many sandy and marshy plains traversed by the Siak, Judrageri, Jambi, Palembang, and other rivers of large size. Climate in the plains not oppressive; at mid-day the thermometer usually ranges between 82° and 85°, sometimes rising to 88°, but at sunrise not more than 70° Fahr. Thick fogs, thunder-storms, and waterspouts off the coast are frequent. Much of the island is occupied by dense forests. Products consist of rice, sago, millet, cocoa-nuts, betel, sugar-cane, an abundance of tropical fruits, turmeric, ginger, coffee, rattans, scented wood, teak and other timber, and the European colonists successfully cultivate the vine; but the principal articles of export are pepper to about 3,000,000 lbs. yearly, gold-dust, copper ore, sulphur, & camphor, in the N.; nutmegs, cloves, and mace, in the Dutch territory of Bencoolen; and coral, benzoin, gutta percha, tin, in Palembang and Menankabow; many of which articles are brought by natives from the interior, and bartered at the ports for Indian and European manufactured goods; tools, iron, coal of inferior quality, and naphtha, are amongst the mineral products. Buffaloes are the most important live stock; the breed of horses is small, but hardy; swine and goats are both domestic and wild; the elephant, rhinoceros, tiger, bear, deer, orang-outang, etc., roam in the forests, and the hippopotamus and crocodile are met with in the rivers. The inhabitants build their houses on posts, and adopt other usages of ultra-Gangetic nations; they manufacture gold and silver filagree work with great skill, also silk and cotton fabrics, earthenwares, arms, and domestic goods generally; from Palembang, lacquered basins, cane boxes, and rattan mats of the best quality, are exported to Singapore; and it is said that cannon were formerly cast at Acheen in the N.W., which territory is, however, peopled by a race of Moorish descent. Exports (1862), rice, caoutchouc, cassia, lignea, etc., to the value of 2690l. Imports, besides manuf. goods already mentioned, are opium and salt from India, coarse porcelain, iron wares, gold thread from China, striped cottons, spices, krises and other weapons from Java, Celebes, and other islands of the Archipelago. The island is divided amongst a number of native states, the chief being Acheen and Menankabow in the central mountain region; Batak, Siak, Jambi, Palembang, and Lampong along the E. from N. to S., mostly under the supremacy of the Dutch, who possess the settlements Bencoolen and Padang, on the west coast.

SUMBAWA, one of the Sunda Islands, Malaysia, between lat. 8° and 9° S., lon. 116° 50' to 119° 10' E., separated W. ward from Lombok by the Strait of Allass, and E. from Comodo by Sapy Strait. Length 160 m.; breadth 20 to 60 m. Area 5362 sq. m. It is nearly divided into two portions by a deep bay off its N. coast, having at E. side of entrance the volcano of Tomboro, 9000 feet high, the eruptions of which have been most violent and destructive. Soil of great fertility. Products comprise rice, which is exported in large quantities, tobacco, sapan teak, and other timber, wax, edible birds' nests, nitre, gold dust, pearls, sulphur, and excellent ponies. Imports opium, Indian piece goods, and European manufactures, chiefly brought to it by the Dutch, who have a small establishment at Bimah, on a noble bay of the N. coast.—Sumbawa, a town on the N. coast of the island, 100 m. W. Bimah, is in lat. 8° 30' S., lon. 117° 30' E. It has a good harbour, and is the residence of a chief, subject to the sultan of Bimah.

SUNDA ISLES, Malaysia, comprise Sumatra, Java, Bali, Lombok, Sumbawa, Floris, and the other isls. of the same chain as far E. as Timor, and separate the seas of Java and Flores, with the rest of the Malaysia, from the Indian Ocean.

—The Strait of Sunda is a passage between the islands Sumatra and Java, from the Indian Ocean into the Sea of Java. Breadth 70 to 90 miles.

SUNDAY ISLAND, Pacific Ocean, is a lofty and rugged island, lat. 29° 12' S., lon. 178° 15' W.

SUNDAY RIVER, South Africa, Cape Colony, divs. Graff-Reynet and Uitenhage, rises in the Sneeuwberge, flows S.E., and enters Algoa Bay, 18 m. N.E. Port Elizabeth, after a course of 200 miles. It receives numerous small affluents, and the tide rises in it to 15 miles from the sea; but a bar at its mouth impedes navigation, and it has a rapid current.

SUNDERBUNDS, a maritime tract of British India, forming a cluster of small marshy islands, separated by narrow channels, having in some places fresh, and in other places brackish water, presid. Bengal, extending from the mouth of the Hoogly, lat. 21° 40' N., lon. 88° 3' E., to Rabanabad Island, lat. 22° N., lon. 90° 30' E.; length 158 m., breadth 75 m. Area 6500 sq. m. These islands have been formed by the deposition of earth washed down by the Ganges during its periodical inundations. The waters of the Ganges enter the Bay of Bengal by 14 principal channels, which are sufficiently deep to admit the largest coasting vessels, but so narrow that their rigging frequently becomes entangled with the trees on their banks. Vigorous efforts are being made for clearing these islands, which are harbours for tigers and other ferocious animals, besides engendering a deadly malaria; and being contiguous to Calcutta, government holds out great inducements for settlers. A large portion being cleared, rice, cotton, indigo, sugar-cane, the mulberry tree for feeding silk-worms, and honey, are extensively produced. Calcutta is well supplied with fish from its numerous channels and water-courses, the taking of which is attended with danger to the fishermen, from the great number of large and fierce alligators which here abound. [GANGES.]

SUNDERLAND, a parl., munic. bor., seaport town, and pa. of England, at the mouth of the Wear, in the North Sea, co. and 13 m. N.E. Durham, with which city, and with Shields, Gateshead, Hartlepool, Stockton, Darlington, and other places in the co., and all parts of England and Scotland, it is connected by the N.E. Rail. Co.'s system. Lat. of light, on N. most of two noble piers from the entrance to the harbour, 54° 54' 5" N.; lon. 1° 22' W. Ac. of pa. 178; of parl. bor. 5095. P. 17,107. Ac. of bor., comprising Bishop-Wearmouth on the S., and Monk-Wearmouth and Southwick on the N. bank of the river, 5095. P. (1851) 63,097; (1861) 78,211. The municipal borough comprises the parish of Sunderland and parts of Bishop-Wearmouth on the S., and Monk-Wearmouth on the N. bank of the river, which is spanned by a noble cast-iron bridge of 1 arch, 236 feet across, and 100 ft. above the Wear at low water, erected in 1796, and restored, widened, and improved at a cost of about 40,000*l.* in 1858, under the superintendence of the late Robt. Stephenson, Esq., M.P., C.E. The whole town, which extends far beyond the municipal boundaries, and includes Sunderland, Bishop-Wearmouth, and Monk-Wearmouth, and numerous places, formerly outlying villages, takes its general name from the parish of Sunderland, which was till 1719 a township of the parish of Bishop-Wearmouth, but constituted a separate parish in that year. In addition to the three mother churches of the parishes of Sunderland, Bishop-Wearmouth, and Monk-Wearmouth, there are various ecclesiastical district churches and chapels of ease of all denominations; and a Jews' synagogue, three theatres, exchange, athenæum, library, barracks, custom-house, excise office, council chambers, infirmary, dispensary, various almshouses, orphan asylum, a mechanics' institute, and a floral and horticultural society. The municipal borough is well paved, channelled, flagged, and lighted by gas; it has a good supply of water from wells sunk to the limestone rock at Humbleton Hill, Fulwell, and Cleadon in the immediate vicinity. There is a wet dock on the N. side of, and having an entrance from the river; on the S. side also there are extensive wet docks (the whole area of which has been reclaimed from the sea), having an entrance from the river and another from the sea. Vessels of the largest tonnage resort from all parts of the world to the port. The harbour is defended by batteries. Vessels belonging to the port: sailing 830, tons 218,168; steam 28, tons 12,574. Customs rev. (1862) 88,666*l.* Exports (1862) 480,912*l.* Sunderland is one of the largest shipbuilding ports in the kingdom, and it and Newcastle are the two greatest coal-shipping ports in the world. Sunderland has besides extensive exports of glass, earthenware, rope, grindstones, chains, anchors, wire rope, castings, and other iron manufactures; the principal imports are grain, flour, wine, tobacco, spirits, timber, tar, tallow, iron, and hemp. Monk-Wearmouth colliery, the deepest excavation known, is within the municipal borough. The town was formerly much resorted to as a bathing place; but latterly, in consequence of the formation of the docks, this is now confined to the much frequented village of Roker, within a mile of the town. There is a beautiful public park on an eminence commanding a fine view of the sea and the Yorkshire coast, with a statue in bronze, by Behnes, to the memory of the late Gen. Sir Henry Havelock, a native of Sunderland. The municipal government is in the hands of a mayor, 14 aldermen, and 42 councilmen. It sends two members to H. of C. Reg. elect. (1864) 2781.

SURAT, a city of British India, presid. Bombay, cap. dist., on the south bank of the Taptee, 20 m. from its mouth in the Gulf of Cambay, and 150 m. N. Bombay. P. 95,000. Rainfall 30 inches. The town proper, 6 m. in circumference, is enclosed, except facing the river, by a semicircular wall flanked by towers; it is poorly built, but outside the wall are some good European houses; and Surat has a fort garrisoned by European troops, an English church and school, European cemetery, numerous Hindoo schools, and a Hindoo hospital for sick animals of all kinds. It is the seat of a high court for the presidency, and the residence of a British military commandant and other authorities. Its manufactures of woven goods, formerly famous, have declined; but it still has an active export trade, and sends large quantities of cotton to Bombay. The town has often suffered severely from inundations of the Taptee. Among its inhabitants are many Parsees, the descendants of the ancient fire-worshippers, who were expelled from Persia by the Mohammedans. The English factory, founded here in 1615, was the first mercantile establishment of the East India Company in the Mogul dominions. The district of Surat has an area of 1629 sq. m., and a pop. of 492,684.

SURIGAO, a town of Malaysia, Philippines, at the N. extremity of Mindanao, lat. 9° 51' N., lon. 125° 25' E., with a fort belonging to the Spaniards.—The Surigao Islands are N.E., and the Surigao Passage on the N.W.

SURINAM, a river of Dutch Guiana, traverses the centre of that colony, which is sometimes called by its name, and after a N. course of 300 m., enters the Atlantic near Paramaribo. It receives several affluents, and is navigable in most part of its course to the base of the mountains, and for large ships to about 30 m. from the sea. Banks in general densely wooded; below Paramaribo they are laid out in plantations. Its entrance is defended by the forts New Amsterdam and Zelandia.

SURJOO, two rivers of British India, tributaries of the Ghogra.—I. (Eastern), rises in lat. 28° 15' N., lon. 81° 57' E., and after a tortuous course of 120 m. enters the Ghogra in lat. 26° 58' N., lon. 81° 46' E.—II. (Western), rises in a gorge in the S.

face of the Himalaya, and after a tortuous course of about 90 m., the whole of which distance is a continual rapid, enters the Ghogra in lat. 29° 27' N., 80° 18' E.

SURLINGHAM, a pa. of England, co. Norfolk, 5 m. E.S.E. Norwich. Ac. 1740. P. 467.

SURREY (Saxon Suth-ric, "the South Kingdom"), an inland co. of England, having N. the Thames, separating it from Middlesex and Bucks, S. Sussex, E. Kent, and W. Hants and Berks. Area 759 sq. m., or 485,760 ac., of which more than 4-5ths are under culture. P. (1861) 831,093. The N. Downs, of which the Hog's Back and Boxhill form portions, intersect the co. from W. to E., dividing it into two parts; the N. of these has a fertile and diversified slope to the Thames; the S. is again partially divided by a steep range of sandy hills (Hindhead, Hascomb, and Leith Hill), having the vales of Godalming, Albury, and Dorking, on the N., and on the S. the Weald, a rich tract continuous with the Weald of Sussex and Kent. An expanse of wild heath-land covers all the W. of the co., and the S.W. hill-chain, where Leith Hill rises to nearly 1000 feet above the sea, and commands a view over parts of 14 cos. In the vales and the N. there is a good deal of fertile soil; the N.E. quarter is wholly occupied by suburbs of London. A large portion of the soil is under tillage, but agriculture is backward. Hops of the first quality are raised at Farnham, medicinal plants about Mitcham, and in the N. a great deal of land is in gardens for the supply of vegetables to the London markets. Woods are numerous and extensive; swine and poultry are plentifully reared. Except in Southwark, Lambeth, and elsewhere near London, manufs. are of little importance. The only river of consequence is the Wey, forming a part of the Wey and Arundel Canal to Guildford. The Basingstoke Canal is in the N.W., and the S.E. S.W., Brighton, Croydon, and Richmond Railways from London, and the Reading and Reigate Railways traverse the co. Surrey is in the home circuit, and forms an archdeaconry of the diocese of Winchester. It returns 4 members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1864). E. division 9500, W. division 4032. Besides Guildford, the cap., it contains the parl. bors. Southwark, Lambeth, and Reigate, and the towns Kingston-on-Thames, Wandsworth, Croydon, Epsom, Ewell, Dorking, Godalming, and Chertsey. Under the Saxon heptarchy, it chiefly formed a part of the kingdom of Sussex.

SUSA, Segusium, a town of N. Italy, prov. and 31 m. W. Turin, with which it communicates by railway, cap. circ., on rt. b. of the Dora-Riparia, at the junction of the two routes across the Alps by Monte Cenis and Genevre. Pop. of comm. 4989. It is the seat of a bishopric. Numerous antiquities are here interspersed among modern edifices, and it has a remarkable arch and a Gothic cathedral. Above the town are ruins of the fortress La Brunetta, and a steep height 11,000 feet above the sea, crowned by a chapel, to which an annual procession takes place. Near it are iron mines, marble quarries, and a celebrated abbey.

SUSAN, cities, Persia. [SUS and SHUSHAN.]

SUSIANA, a prov. of ancient Persia, answering to the modern Khuzistan.

SUSQUEHANNA, a river of the U. S., North America, the largest in Pennsylvania, formed by the junction of two branches called the E. and the W. branch; the former rises in Ostego Lake, New York, flows mostly S. and joins the W. branch from the W.; from this point it flows S. to the confl. of the Juniata, then S.E., and falls into Chesapeake Bay, near the N.E. corner of Maryland, after a course of 500 m. Principal affls., the Chemung, Juniata, and Swatara Tioga. It is obstructed by falls and rapids during the greater part of its course, but affords communication with the interior, by the aid of various canals constructed along its banks.

SUSQUEHANNA, a co. of the U. S., North America, in N.E. of Pennsylvania. Area 712 sq. m. P. (1860) 36,267.

SUSSEX (South-seaxe, "the South Saxons"), a maritime co. of England, bordering the English Channel from Selsey to Rye, having W. Hampshire, and N. Surrey & Kent. Area 1466 sq. m., or 936,911 ac. P. (1861) 363,735. The South Downs, a range of chalk-hills covered by fine turf, continuous with the Downs of Hants near Petersfield, traverse the co. E. ward to Beachy Head, where they terminate on the English Channel in a lofty cliff. N. of this chain, extending to the hills of Surrey, is a fertile and richly timbered tract, termed the Weald, and which was anciently the forest of Auderida, it having been famous for its woods from time immemorial. Between the Downs and the sea is a good deal of fertile soil, as also in the marsh lands E. of Beachy Head. Principal rivers, the Arun, Rother, Ouse, and Adur, all small, and flowing S. to the Channel. Climate mild, and harvests early. Rainfall at Battle 29 inches. Farms in the Weald are mostly small; on the Downs they often vary from 1200 to 2000 acres; wheat, oats, barley, and turnips are principal crops. In the E. many hops are raised. The black-faced South-down sheep and the Sussex cattle are breeds in high repute. Swine, fowls, and rabbits are sent in large numbers to market. Limestone, charcoal, salt, gunpowder manufactured at Battle, potash, bricks, and earthenwares, are other principal products; and in the small towns, along the coast, some ship-building is carried on; but the trade is chiefly in rural produce. The Guildford, Arundel, and Chichester Canal intersects the W. and S. of the co., which is also traversed in length and breadth by the London, Brighton, and S. Coast Railway. Sussex is divided into 6 rapes, is in the home-circuit, and composes the diocese of Chichester, its cap., besides which city it contains the parl. bors. of Brighton, Lewes, New Shoreham, Hastings, Horsham, Arundel, and Rye, with the towns E. Grinstead, Winchelsea, Petworth, Cuckfield, Battle, Worthing, etc. Most of the towns on its coast are resorted to as favourite watering-places in summer. It sends four members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1864), E. division 6408; W. division 2649: It composed (with a great part of Surrey) the second kingdom erected by the Saxons in England; its antiquities are not, however, numerous, and are mostly of the Roman period.

SUTHERLAND, a maritime co. of Scotland, near its N. extremity, extending from the sea, between cos. Ross and Caithness, having N. and W. the Atlantic Ocean, E. Caithness and Moray Firth, and S. the Firth of Dornoch and cos. Ross and Cromarty. Ac. 1,207,188. P. (1861) 25,246. It contains 13 parishes. Surface, except E. shore, rugged and mountainous, interspersed with morasses and deer forests. Ben Clibrig is 3164 feet high, Ben More 3281, Ben Hee 2858, Ben Griam—more 1135 feet above the sea, and Fashven mountain, a station of the Ordnance Survey, lat. 58° 33' 42" N., lon. 4° 53' 55" W., 1495 feet above the sea. Principal rivers, the Oikel or Oykil, Fleet, Broila, and Helmsdale, valuable for their salmon fishings. Principal lakes, Lochs Shin, Hope, Laoghal, Asynt, More, & Naver. The arable soil along the E. coast has been well enclosed and drained, & extensive agricultural improvements have been effected. Chief employment, sheep and cattle breeding, especially the former. The breeds of sheep are excellent, and about 220,000 are annually exported to the south. Ptarmigan, grouse, black-cock, Alpine hares, etc., are abundant. Farms large, especially sheep farms, in the mountainous districts; of medium size in the E. Average rent of land 7d. per acre. Rainfall at Dunrobin Castle 32 in. Lime and freestone are obtained.

Manufactures, except in a very restricted sense, are unknown. The trade of the county consists chiefly in the exchange of sheep, wool, cattle, and fish, for woven fabrics and other manufactured goods, and colonial produce. The herring fishery is successfully carried on, both on the E. and W. coasts, chiefly at Helmsdale. The co. is subdivided into 14 pas. Principal town Dornoch. It sends 1 member to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1862) 191.

SWAN RIVER, the principal river of W. Australia, rises under the name of Avon, near lat. 32° 30' S., lon. 117° E., flows successively N. and W. through the cos. Grantham, York, and Perth, and enters the Indian Ocean at a bay called Melville Water, lat. 32° S., lon. 115° 42' E. Chief affluents, the Dale, Toodyay, Howick, Ellenbrooke, Helena, and Canning. On its banks are many tracts of fertile land; and the settlements Freemantle, Perth, Guildford, Toodyay, Northam, York, and Beverley. It is liable to sudden and violent floods, which inundate the surrounding country. It gave name to the first colonial settlement in W. Australia, founded in 1829. [WESTERN AUSTRALIA.]

SWANSEA (Welsh Aber-Tawy), a parl., munic. bor., seaport town, and pa. of South Wales, co. Glamorgan, on the W. side of the Tawy or Towy, at its mouth in Swansea Bay, Bristol Channel, 28 m. W.S.W. Merthyr-Tydvil. Lat. of lighthouse 51° 37' N.; lon. 3° 56' W. Ac. of pa. 9029. P. (1851) 31,461; (1861) 33,972. It has a market-house, court-house, infirmary, assembly rooms, and a theatre; reading and news-rooms, royal and mechanics' institutes, various chapels, a Jews' synagogue, schools & public endowments, banks, a co. house of correction, and the remains of an old castle, now used for barracks; a prison, and stores. The harbour, at the mouth of the river, is nearly enclosed by two piers, on the W. side of which is a lighthouse. Vessels belonging to the port 103, tons 19,112. Customs rev. (1862) 6460l. Exports 849,995l. Floating docks have been constructed here, and Swansea communicates with London by the S. Wales Railway, by canals, and with Neath and the coal districts, also by tram-roads with Oystermouth and Mumbleshead. It has brass and iron-foundries, potteries, tanneries, breweries, and rope-walks; but its chief trade is in the export of coal, and in smelting British, foreign, and colonial copper ore, for which it has extensive works on both banks of the river. Imports consist chiefly of ores, limestone, clay, rottenstone, tin-plates, and timber, besides provisions. From the beauty of its situation it is resorted to as a watering-place. The bor. is divided into two wards. Swansea unites with Aberavon, Neath, Loughor, and Kenfig, in sending one member to H. of C. Reg. electors (1864) 1926.—Swansea Canal, up the vale of Tawe to Ystradgynlais, etc., is 17 m. long, and has 36 locks with a fall of 373 feet. It brings down bituminous and anthracite coal.

SWEDEN, Sverige, the most N. country of Europe, forming the E. and larger portion of the Scandinavian peninsula, and one of the kingdoms, composing the monarchy of Sweden and Norway; between lat. 55° 20' and 70° 11' 40" N., lon. 11° 15' and 24° 10' E., bounded E. by the Baltic, the Gulf of Bothnia and Russia, S. by the Baltic, W. by Norway, the Kattegat, and the Sound; cap. Stockholm. Area & pop. as follows:—(See Table.) Sweden is divided into 24 län or prefectures, subdivided into 117 fögder, excepting the capital, which forms a government by itself. These administrative divisions are grouped in 3 regions, Norland, Sweden Proper, or Scaeland and Göttland, Swedish towns are thinly inhabited, being left almost entirely to manufacturers and merchants, while there are no beggars; and all landed proprietors, and even the nobles, engage in agricultural operations. The Scandinavian Alps traverse the country in the W., and separate it from Norway; many of their summits are constantly snow-clad. [NORWAY.] From this mountain range the country slopes E. to the Gulf of Bothnia, forming in its descent two elevated table-lands, the 1st or W. most is 2000 feet, and the E. most 360 to 800 feet above the sea. The tract of country bordering the Baltic is under 300 feet in elevation. The greater part of the surface is flat, and the S. portion constitutes the plain of Scania. A line is supposed to traverse the country in lat. 66° 3' N., north of which to Cape North the land is gradually rising at the estimated rate of 4 feet in a century, while S. of it there is a slow and gradual subsidence. The country is watered by numerous streams, none of which are large; the principal are, from N. to S., the Tornea, Lulea, Pitea, Umea, Angermann, Dal, and Göta-Elf, the largest of these rivers, which flow S.E. to the Gulf of Bothnia, and the Motala, which traverses Lake Wetter to the Baltic. Nearly one-eighth of the superficies is covered by lakes, some of which are very extensive. The largest are Wener, Wetter, Mælar, and Hielmar, all in the S. provs.; they afford great advantages for navigation. These lakes are connected by canals, the chief of which are those of Södertelge, Hielmar or Arboga, Strömsholm, and Trolhätta, which with two other canals unite the Atlantic Ocean with the Baltic Sea, and are called conjointly the Göta Canal. There are extensive marshy tracts along the shores. The coast, which has a development of 1400 miles, is deeply indented, forming vast bays and fiords, and studded with a multitude of low sandy isls, the chief of which are Gothland and Oeland in the Baltic. The latter is separated from the mainland by the strait of Calmar, and has good pasture-ground. The climate of Sweden is mild for its northern position, the mean temperature of the year at Stockholm being 42°·2 Fahr. The W. coasts are more mild and moist than the E. coasts. The summers are very hot, and the winters extremely cold. Spring is almost unknown. In the N. the rivers are frozen, and snow covers the ground for five or six months in the year; in the central regions winter lasts for three or four months. N. of lat. 61° mercury often freezes. In Swedish Lapland the summer lasts for 56 days, from the 23d of June till the 18th of August, when the ground is again covered with snow and ice. The amount of rain is much less than in Norway. The air is generally pure, and there are no contagious diseases. The prevailing winds are S.W. and W. The soil is not generally fertile; but the produce is adequate to the consumption. The part of Sweden comprised between the Sound and the River Dal has made great progress in agriculture within the last 20 or 30 years. Barley is cultivated as far N. as lat. 69°, but the crops frequently fail. Rye, hemp, and potatoes are grown to lat. 66° N. Oats ripen to 63° 30'; wheat and hops cease to be cultivated with advantage beyond lat. 62° N. Fruit trees are limited to the S. of lat. 62°, but N. of this lat. two species of briar are cultivated for their delicious berries, which are very much used in a variety of forms. The reindeer-moss furnishes food for these animals and for cattle. One-fourth of the surface is covered with forests, but the produce of timber is small; much of it is used for fuel, and made into charcoal for use in the mines. The principal trees are the pine, fir, and birch, which extend to the extreme N. of the country; the lime, elm, ash, willow, and alder between lat. 61° and 68° N.; the oak to lat. 61°, and the beech to lat. 57°. Tar and pitch are extracted from the roots of the pine. Kearing of live stock is an important branch of industry, but the pastures are poor, horses and cattle small, and the sheep yield an inferior wool. Great encouragements, however, are given to improvements in the breed; and the introduction of the merino and saxon sheep promises complete success. N. of lat. 64°, the reindeer is the only domestic animal. Among wild animals are the bear, which, however, is scarce, the wolf, lynx, fox, marten, lemming, hare, and squirrel. Fish are abundant on the coasts, and in the lakes and rivers; the herring fishery has greatly declined, but lobsters are exported, and salmon are caught in all the principal rivers. The mining districts of Sweden, mostly in the central provs., extend over 16,000 sq. m.; the mines are open like stone-quarries; the chief product is iron, which is distributed over nearly all the country, but the best is found in the län Upsala; the annual produce of all the mines is about 70,000 tons of bar iron. The richest copper mines are at Fahlung; the annual produce in all is about 1000 tons. Gold is procured only to a small extent. The other mineral products are silver, alum, manganese, zinc, sulphate of iron, cobalt, and coal of inferior quality. Industry, notwithstanding recent progress, is still little developed. Exports (1862) timber, grains, iron, steel, tar, cotton, etc., to the value of 2,698,216*l*. Imports cotton, iron, coals, wool, hides, machinery, hardware, coffee, apparel, oils, indigo, copper, logwood, soda, sugar, etc., to the value of 970,429*l*.—Manufs. woollens, sugar, tobacco, paper, linens, cotton (in small quantity), gloves, mathematical and other instruments; tanning is an important branch of industry. Ship-building is carried on to some extent in the ports of the Baltic. Distilling and brewing are extensively prosecuted. The internal commerce of Sweden is considerable, and Swedish vessels visit most of the Atlantic ports of South America, and the Mediterranean, England, and Russia. The rail. from Stockholm to Gottenburg, a work of vast importance to the country, was opened in 1862. Government is a limited constitutional monarchy. its administration is entirely distinct from that of Norway, and the king shares the legislative power with the assembly of the states, which is composed of four chambers. The established religion is Lutheran, to which all belong, except 900 Roman Catholics, and 950 Jews; but all sects are tolerated. An archbishop chosen by the king resides at Upsala, and the people nominate their own pastors. Education is widely diffused, and well conducted in gymnasia, high and burgher schools. It has been stated that there is not one person in 1000 who cannot read and write. The simple and almost patriarchal hospitality of the Swedes is very marked, especially in the most isolated provinces. There are universities at Upsala and Lund. Total rev. (1862) 7,290,271*l*. Army (1863) 144,010 men, of whom 6000 cavalry and 5000 artillery. Navy, 2 (seventy-four gun) screw steamers of the line, 4 frigates, 8 corvettes, and 125 gunboats. The island of St Bartholomew, W. Indies, is the only colony of Sweden. [BARTHOLOMEW, Str.] In 1394, by the treaty of Calmar, the crown of Sweden was united to those of Denmark and Norway by Margaret of Denmark. The Swedes recovered their independence under Gustavus Vasa in 1521. The House of Vasa ascended the throne in 1523, and gave to Sweden the celebrated Gustavus Adolphus. It was succeeded by the House of Deux-Ponts, which furnished the famous Charles XII.; to this succeeded the Houses of Hessen-Cassel and Holstein-Gottorp. In 1810, Marshal Bernadotte of France was chosen crown prince, and ascended the throne as Charles-John XIV. in 1818. Norway was annexed to Sweden in 1814, retaining its own laws. [NORWAY.]

are from 9000 to 14,000 feet above the level of the sea. The Alps cover all the central, S., and S.E. portion of the country, and occupy more than one-half of its superficies. The highest point is Monte Rosa, 15,174 feet above the sea. [ALPS.] The Jura mountains extend along the N.W. borders; culminating points, the Dôle and Mont Tendre [JURA], and between these is an undulating plain or table-land, 135 m. in length, from the Lake of Geneva in the S.W., to the Lake of Constance in the N.E. Its extreme breadth is 50 m. Next the Alps it is 2000 feet above the sea, sloping towards the Jura, where it is 1350 feet. It has numerous valleys, some of which are of considerable extent. Among its mountains and hills are the Jorat in the Valais, the Albis between Zug and Zurich, the Allmna in the E. of Zurich, and the Hauenstein between Basle and Soleure. The high Alps form vast reservoirs, whence issue thousands of fertilizing torrents. The chief rivers flow by the Rhine to the North Sea, by the Rhone to the Mediterranean, by the Ticino to the Po and the Adriatic, and by the Inn to the Danube and Black Sea. The other principal rivers are the Thur and the Aar, affs. of the Rhine; the Emmen and the Limmat, affs. of the Aar. No country in Europe, except Scandinavia, has, in proportion to its size, so many lakes as Switzerland. Those of the Alpine regions occupy the lower parts of the valleys. They vary in depth from 500 to 1900 feet, and are situated at an elevation of from 1200 to 1800 feet above the sea: the chief of these are Lake Lemán, or the Lake of Geneva; Brienz, Thun, Waldstätten or Lucerne; Zug, Wallenstadt, Zurich, Constance, or the Boden See; and on the S. of the Alps, Lugano and Maggiore. Most of these are traversed by steam-boats. The table-land contains Lakes Morat, Sempach, Baldeck, Hallwyl, Greiffensee, and Pfäffikon. In the Jura are the lakes of Neuchâtel and Bienne. The climate of Switzerland, owing to its elevation and other causes, is much more severe than is due to its position, nearly in mid-distance between the Equator and the North Pole. It presents the greatest extremes and the most violent contrasts. In Geneva, at an elevation of 1230 feet, the mean pressure of the barometer is 27 inches; the therrometer ranges from 84° to 66° Fahr.; and the average rainfall is 29 inches. On Mount St Bernard, barometer 21 inches, thermometer 18° to 43° Fahr., and rainfall 65 inches. The elevation of the lower limit of snow in the mountains is 8900 feet. On the table-land and in the lower mountains snow falls in greater abundance than in other countries of the same lat. in Europe. On St Gothard snow falls at least once a month in summer. The large lakes are seldom frozen. In the upper valleys of the Jura winter lasts six months; it is longer in those of the Alps. S.W. winds, which are frequent, usually bring rain; the N.E. wind, which blows on the table-land in spring, is cold and dry. The warm S. wind greatly favours the climate of the canton Ticino; under the name of Föhn, the sirocco of the Alps, it blows with extreme violence, and causes great damage on the lakes. At an elevation of from 1000 to 1600 feet, the climate is pure and salubrious; but it is unhealthy in many of the deep and narrow valleys. Vegetation corresponds with the extremes of climate. In the Valais, the fig and grape ripen at the foot of ice-clad mountains, while near their summits the rhododendron and the lichen grow at the limit of the snow line. The corn raised in Switzerland is not nearly sufficient for the supply of its pop. The most productive cantons are those of the N. and W. Here the vine ripens at an elevation of 1900, and in some places at 2100 feet above the sea. It is cultivated on the slopes of the Jura, and in the valleys of the Rhine, Rhône, Reuss, Limmat, and Thur; and wine is exported. Buckwheat ripens at an elevation of 2200 ft., and with a S. exposure at 3000 feet; wheat at 3600, oats 4300, barley 5100 ft. Flax and hemp are extensively grown; irrigation is judiciously managed; and in general, agriculture is making considerable progress. The slopes of the Jura and of the Alps, and the high regions of the table-land, are covered with valuable timber trees, the oak, beech, larch, and birch. The pine and larch grow to an elevation of 6500 feet, shrubs to 7400 feet. The principal wealth of Switzerland consists in its rich and excellent pastures, which in summer support vast numbers of cattle; the finest breeds are those of the Simmenthal, Gessenay, Gruyere, Zug, and Schwytz. The silk-worm is reared in the valleys S. of the Alps, and of late also in the N. The forests abound in game; the lamergeyer inhabits the highest mountains, and the chamois is hunted in the Valais and in the Oberland. Fish of excellent quality is abundant in the lakes and rivers. Iron is found in the mountains generally, but chiefly in the Jura; there are mines of lead and zinc in the Grisons. Turf is abundant in the marshy dists., and coal is found in the table-land. The principal salt springs are at Ex, in the valley of the Rhone. Switzerland contains upwards of 300 mineral springs, 18 bath establishments of the first, and 186 of the second class. Cheese is a valuable product; it is made chiefly in Gessenay, the Simmenthal, and the Emmenthal; that called Gruyere is highly valued, and extensively exported. Kirschwasser, cider, and perry are made. The country has made rapid progress in manuf. industry. Cotton goods are made chiefly in Appenzell and St Gall. Silks are woven in Zurich and Basle, and linens at Berne. Neuchâtel has superior printing establishments. Watches, jewellery, and musical boxes are the principal manufs. of the W. cantons; here 230,000 watches are made every year. In 1862 (1082 kil.) 676 m. of rail, and (2990 kil.) 1868 m. telegraphic wires were in operation. In winter the pop. of the Alps inhabit vills. scattered over the lower valleys. In May, the cattle are led to the lower pastures; in July, they ascend to regions 6000 feet above the sea; and about the 10th August they pasture on the highest mountains, whence they descend to the valleys about the 10th October.

The principal races inhabiting the count the Teutonic and the Celtic. The Germanic is spoken in a variety of patois by th in the N. and E. French is spoken in the and on the table-land W. of the Lakes of B and Morat, and of the river Sarine, in part o. Valais, and the Alps in its vicinity. S. of Alps the Italian language is used; the Romanca. is spoken in the Engadine, and in the valley of the Rhine. The inhabitants of the Alps are mostly Roman Catholics. In the Jura, and on the table-land, Protestants are most numerous. In 1860 the proportions were: Protestants, 1,476,982; Roman Catholics, 1,023,430; other sects, 5866; Jews, 4216. All Christian sects are tolerated, but the Jesuits are excluded. Switzerland has universities at Basel, Berne, and Zurich; and there are superior gymnasia in all the chief towns. Public instruction is widely disseminated, and in the Protestant cantons Sunday and infant schools are on the increase. School attendance is compulsory from the age of 5 to 8. In the Protestant cantons the proportion of children at school is as 1 to 5 of the pop., in the mixed cantons 1 to 7, and in the Catholic cantons 1 to 9. In 1863 the State had 435 journals; 185 political, 22 literary and scientific, 20 religious, 15 Protestant, & 5 Roman Catholic. 231 are printed in German, 105 in French, 8 in Italian, and 3 in Patois. The Swiss Confederation is composed of 22 cantons, forming 25 independent states, united in a perpetual league. The central and W. part was called Helvetia by the Romans, and the E. part, or the Grisons, Rhætia. The Confederation was founded 1st January 1308, by the 3 cantons Uri, Schwytz, and Unterwalden. In 1353 it numbered 8 cantons, and in 1513 it was composed of 13 cantons. This old Confederation, of 13 cantons, was increased by the adherence of several subject territories, and existed till 1798, when it was replaced by the Helvetic Republic, which lasted four years. In 1803 Napoleon I. organized a new Confederation, composed of 19 cantons, by the addition of St Gall, the Grisons, Argovia, Thurgovia, Tessin, and Vand. This Confederation was modified in 1815; the number of cantons was increased to 22, by the admission of Valais, Neuchâtel, and Geneva. The federal government was composed of a diet, and of a Vorort, or federal directory. By the new constitution of 1848, the federal assembly is composed of two divisions, a national council and a senate, and Berne was chosen as the federal city. Every parish supports its own poor. The constitution forbids the maintenance of a standing army, but, to provide for the defence of the country, every man capable of carrying arms is liable to be called out. The troops form 4 classes:—1. The "Bundesauzug," all men from the age of 20 to 34; 2. The army of reserve, men between 35 and 40; 3. The Landwehr, age 41 to 45; and 4. The Lands-turm, or army of defence, all above 45. Total number (1862) 339,926 men. Foreign enlistment is forbidden by the constitution. Total rev. (1861) 824,862*l.*; expenditure 812,893*l.*

SYDNEY, the cap. town of the British colony of New South Wales, is built on the southern shores of Port Jackson, 7 m. from the entrance of the harbour. Lat. 33° 51' S.; lon. 151° 14' E. It is the oldest city in Australia, and was founded in 1788 by Captain Arthur Phillip, who had been despatched by the Imperial Government to establish a penal settlement in this remote region, and who after first landing at Botany Bay, and remaining a short time at that inconvenient locality, soon after discovered and removed to the fine harbour of Port Jackson, which has since become so widely known in the world's commerce. P. (1846) 38,358; (1856) 53,358, besides 28,223 in the suburbs; (1861) 56,846, including suburbs 93,686. In 1862, 935 vessels, exclusive of coasters, cleared the port, tons 317,849; entered 971 vessels, tons 313,302. Exports 7,102,562. Imports to the value of 9,334,645. The harbour is quite land-locked, with deep water to the edge of its rocky shores. The old part of the town is fast disappearing, and giving place to a handsome city, with numerous public buildings, banks, warehouses, and elegant private residences, built of fine sandstone. The city has a mayor and municipal corporation; and there also the governor resides, and the Colonial Parliament of two houses holds its session. It is lighted with gas. There are three colleges, a grammar school, and in 1852 a University was established, which has since acquired, with regard to its degrees, the status of our home universities. It possesses also two large dry-docks, an observatory, and museum. Mean temp. of year 66°; coldest month 59°, hottest 73°, Fahr. The gold discoveries in 1851 have considerably augmented the commerce and importance of Sydney, and a branch mint was granted by the Imperial Government, which came into work in May 1855, and has done considerable business, coining from one to one and a quarter million of gold money annually. The place is defended by several fortifications, including Pinchgut Island, a small rock artificially cut to nearly a level with the water. There is communication by telegraph with the Heads of Port Jackson to the E., and with Melbourne to the S.W., a distance of 58 m., and by railway W. and S. to Penrith and Picton. Alt. 145 feet. Mean annual temp. 67°-2. Rainfall 58-36 inches. Number of wet days 157. Rate of mortality 1 in 40. Shortest sea route to London 12,040 miles. Shortest sailing voyage 86 days.

SYMI, Syme, an island off the W. coast of Asia Minor, at the entrance of the Gulf of Symi, 15 m. N.W. Rhodes. Lat. 36° 30' N.; lon. 27° 54' E. Length and breadth about 6 m. each. Estimated pop. 7000. Outline very irregular, and the island a rocky mass of limestone rising to 1000 feet above the sea. Soil mostly barren, but every available patch of ground is assiduously cultivated, and the inhabitants are distinguished for industry and commercial enterprise. Symi exports sponge and wood from the shores of its gulf. It has three harbours, and a small town of same name on its N. side, with about 1000 inhabitants, and some remains of antiquity. It is subordinate to the pasha of Rhodes, who derives from it an annual revenue of 270*l.*—The Gulf of Symi (anc. Sinus Doridis) is an inlet of the Mediterranean, on the S.W. coast of Asia Minor, bounded by two long promontories, the N.W. of which (Triopium Promontory) separates it from the Gulf of Kos. Depth inland, and breadth at entrance, about 27 miles each. On its E. side are three subordinate bays (the anc. Thymnias, Schœnus, and Bubassius). Shores very picturesque, and on them are various Cyclopean and other remains. At its entrance is the island of Symi.

SYMPLEGADES, a group of rocky islets in the Black Sea, immediately off the point of Rumili, at the entrance of the Bosphorus.

SYRA (Syros), an island of the Grecian Archipelago, among the Cyclades, 20 m. N.W. Paros. Area about 55 sq. m. Estimated p. (1853) 27,000. Surface mountainous, and near its N. extremity is a peak rising to 4000 feet above the sea. Many parts of the island are fertile, producing corn, wine, silk, figs, and cotton. It forms, with the islands Zea, Mycone, Thurmia, Serpho, Siphanto, Kimolos, Milo, and Sikinos, a gov. of Greece.—Syra or Hermopolis, the cap., is a maritime town on the E. shore. P. 14,000. The harbour is accessible to line-of-battle ships, has good anchorage, is well sheltered, and a lighthouse has been erected, with a revolving light, on the Gaidoro island, 1½ m. distant S.E. It is the residence of consuls of most European states, and a principal station of the Mediterranean steamers going to and from Constantinople.

SYRACUSE (Ital. Siragosa, anc. Syracuse), a fortified city of the island Sicily, on its E. coast, cap. circ., dist., and cant., in modern times occupying only the site of the original and smallest quarter of the famous city of antiquity—viz., the island of Ortygia, between the sea and the great harbour, 30 m. S.S.E. Catania. The climate is mild in winter, but unhealthy from miasma in summer. Lat. of lighthouse 37° 3' N.; lon. 15° 17' 5" E. P., which in ancient times was said to have amounted to 200,000, was in 1861 only 19,757. The cathedral, formerly the temple of Minerva, which was renewed for the splendour of its decorations, is of Doric architecture, and has been a place of worship continuously for 2500 years. The church of St Marcian claims to have been the earliest in Europe for Christian worship. The chief vestiges of antiquity are the catacombs and the latomæ, or ancient prisons, in the quarries from which the materials of Syracuse were taken; the "ear of Dionysius;" the famous fountain of Arethusa, now used for a washing-trough; the remains of the strong fortress Hexapylon, of a temple of Diana, and Roman amphitheatre, some baths, walls, gates, the ara or altar, a Greek theatre, the walls of Dionysius, Fort Euryalus, aqueducts, well of S. Filippo, and the palace of sixty beds, constructed by Agathocles. The middle age citadel of Maniaces, barracks, a college, royal academy, museum of antiquities, and public library containing 9000 vols., with numerous churches & palaces, may be chiefly noticed as belonging to the modern city. The harbour is admirably adapted for a commercial emporium; but its trade is now nearly confined to a few exports of salt, wine, oil, and fish. It is still celebrated for its wines, fish, honey, and fruits. Syracuse was founded B.C. 734, by a colony from Corinth, governed alternately as a republic or under kings: unsuccessfully besieged by the Athenians B.C. 415, and by the Carthaginians B.C.

396; taken by the Romans B.C. 200; and again after a lengthened siege, in 878, by the Saracens, who partially destroyed it, but it was chiefly ruined by the earthquake of 1693. It was the residence at different periods of Plato, Simonides, Zeno, and Cicero, the place where Hicetas first propounded the true revolution of the earth, and the birthplace of the poets Theocritus and Moschus, and the philosopher Archimedes, who lost his life at the capture of the city by the Romans.

SYRACUSE, a town of the U. S., North America, New York, township Salina, cap. co. Onondaga, at the junction of the Erie and Oswego canals, and on the W. railway, 34 m. S.S.E. Oswego. P. (1860) 28,119. It has highly productive salt wells; and had, in 1850, 192 salt factories, producing more than 5,000,000 bushels of salt per annum.

SYRIA-WITH-PALESTINE, a large division of Asiatic Turkey, mostly between lat. 31° and 37° N., lon. 34° 30' and 40° E.; bounded N. by the Amanian mountains, E. by the Euphrates and the Arabian desert, S. by Arabia Petrea, and W. by the Mediterranean Sea. Estimated area 146,070 sq. m. P. about 2,750,000, mostly Mohammedans, but comprising about 350,000 Greek Christians, 260,000 Maronites and Roman Catholics, 175,000 Jews, 48,000 Druses, and 17,000 Metualis and Yezidis. The W. or coast portion is mountainous; the E. chiefly an elevated plain. The mountain ranges proceed mostly N. to S.; the Alma-Dagh (anc. Mons Amanus), and Mount Lebanon (anc. Libanus), in which Jebel Mukhmel, 10,200 feet, is the highest point in Syria. These terminate on the coast in bold headlands, as do several spurs of Anti-Libanus, which range in Palestine, enclosing the fertile valley Coele-Syria. The mountains are rugged, consisting of limestone, overlying graywacke, slate, and other silurian rocks, which appear in the summits of Libanus; but at their bases are many fertile tracts, in the basins of small rivers; and here are several plains of high fertility, as those of Haouran in the E., Antioch and Aleppo in the N., Esdraelon and Sharon in the S. In the S. and E., granite, gneiss, and dolomite mountains skirt the volcanic region of the Dead Sea, which is entered by the river Jordan; besides which, the chief rivers are the El Asy or Orontes, the Leontes, and the Nahr-el-Kebir, entering the Mediterranean, and the Abana, which waters Damascus. The principal lakes are the Dead Sea, Tiberias, and Huleh, in the valley of the Jordan; and some smaller lakes or marshes near Damascus and Antioch. The surface being very uneven, the climate and products vary greatly within short distances. Along the coasts, and in the valley of the Jordan, the heat is great, and the orange, banana, and date flourish, while the summits of the mountains are seen covered with snow. In the N., and on the elevated plain E. of the mountains, the climate is colder; but at Aleppo frosts are seldom severe, and snow rarely lies on the ground for more than a day at a time. The corn is ripe early in May; and from June to Sept. summer heats prevail, unbroken by any rain, though tempered in the W. by sea breezes. The samiel, a wind like the simoom of the desert, sometimes occurs at this season, and shocks of earthquakes are frequent. There are heavy rains in spring and autumn, and the trees frequently retain their foliage till the beginning of December. Syria comprises a large extent of very productive soil. It is stated that the country is capable of producing sufficient to maintain ten times its present population; yet such is the rude method of agriculture, the depressed condition and insecurity of the rural population, and the uncertainty of taxation and government regulations, that in bad years corn must frequently be imported from Egypt and elsewhere. Wheat, barley, maize, millet, lentils, and sesamum are raised in the plains, principally in the Haouran, which has always been considered the granary of Syria. Cotton and the mulberry flourish on the coast, and silk is extensively produced on the slopes of Lebanon. Other chief products are sheep's wool, olive oil, sugar, indigo, scammony and other gums, safflower, dates, timber, hides, and skins. The wild animals include the buffalo, hyæna, and jackal; the camel and mule are employed as beasts of burden; horses are small, but strong and active. Sheep and live stock form, as in ancient times, a chief part of the wealth of the inhabitants; and all merchandise being conveyed on the backs of animals, it is estimated that the transit trade employs 80,000 beasts, and about 30,000 drivers. About 3500 okes of sponge fished on the coast are sent to the ports of the Mediterranean annually. Damascus had, till 1860, many looms employed in the manufacture of silks, and the same manufacture is carried on to a considerable extent in Aleppo and Beyrout. Cotton, and some woollen fabrics, shawls, gold and silver thread stuffs, are also woven there and elsewhere. Glass, earthenwares, leather, and soap are made in the above and other towns, and in Palestine ecclesiastical ornaments are manufactured for sale. Commerce is greatly impeded by the want of roads, those that exist being mere mule or camel tracks. The only carriage road is that from Beyrout to Damascus, opened in 1863. But as Syria is on the high route from Bagdad, Mosul, and Erzeroum to Mecca, caravans annually traverse it, bringing galls, indigo, Mocha coffee, skins, Cashmere shawls, and other Indian manufactures, also the products of Asia Minor, Mesopotamia, and Persia, which are exchanged here for European manufs., and cochineal. Exports (1862), grains, seeds, cotton, galls, wool, madder-root, gum, etc., to the value of 126,242*l*. Imports, cottons, copper, iron, tin, woollens, coals, indigo, pepper, coffee, apparel, etc., to the value of 603,513*l*. Latakia, Tripoli, Beyrout, Kisariah, and Jaffa are the principal seaport towns. The trade of Syria is chiefly conducted by Christians, Jews, or Armenians. The Mohammedans are most numerous in the secondary towns, and in the rural districts. The Druses, a peculiar tribe, are chiefly agricultural, but partly occupied in domestic weaving and other manufs., and inhabiting a part of Mount Lebanon, where they live under an emir, or prince of their own race. The Maronites are also a peculiar people, dwelling in their vicinity, and having a patriarch, twelve bishops, and numerous convents. The Metualis are Mohammedans of the Persian or Shiah sect; and the Yezidis, and some other tribes, are adherents of idolatrous or heretical creeds. Syria is divided into the pashalics of Aleppo, Damascus, & Beyrout or Sidon; the chief cities and towns are of the same names, besides Antioch, Hamah, Homs, Jerusalem, Nablous, Sichem, Saida, and Gaza. The great majority of the Christian pop. of Syria belong to the Roman Catholic church, or some of its Eastern forms, as Maronites, Greek Catholics, etc. In consequence of an outbreak among the Druse pop., caused by religious fanaticism and political jealousy, and ending in a massacre of the Christians [DAMASCUS], a French army occupied the country from 17th August 1860 to June 1861. The massacre left 10,000 orphans to be provided for. The government is conducted in the same corrupt and extortionate manner as in the other provs. of Turkey. Public revenue, derived from taxation of every kind, is estimated at 440,000*l*. [PALESTINE.]

TARSUS or TARSOUS, a city of Asia Minor, pash. and 18 m. W.S.W. Adana, on the W. side of the river Cydnus (which anciently flowed through its centre), 12 m. from its mouth in the Mediterranean. Lat. 36° 56' 30" N.; lon. 34° 58' 45" E. Permanent pop. estimated at 7000; but in winter it is reported to have 30,000 inhabitants (Mohammedans, Greeks, and Armenians, with a small Protestant community). The modern town, partly surrounded by a wall, covers only a portion of the ancient site. Houses low, mostly of stone, terrace-roofed, and built of the materials of ancient structures, surrounded by gardens, palms, plantains, and oranges. Principal edifices, a castle, several mosques, caravanserais, public baths, and an ancient church. The Cydnus is now navigable only for small boats; and largo vessels anchor in the roadstead of Mersin, 8 m. W. its mouth. The vicinity of Tarsus is highly productive in corn and cotton, which articles, with wool, copper, gall-nuts, wax, goats' hair, skins, hides, and hair sacks, form its chief exports; imports rice, sugar, coffee, and hardwares. According to some authors, this city was founded by the Assyrian king, Sardanapalus. It was taken by both Cyrus and Alexander the Great, and was subsequently famous in Roman history, and as the birthplace and residence of St Paul; the stoic Antipater, and the philosopher Athenodorus, were also among its natives. It was made a free colony by the Greeks, an honour granted also by the Romans; hence St Paul styled himself a free-born Roman, and claimed the privileges of a Roman citizen.

TASMANIA (formerly VAN DIEMEN'S LAND), a British colony of the South Pacific, forming a large heart-shaped island off the southernmost point of Australia, from which it is separated by Bass's Strait, 129 m. wide. It is comprised between lat. 41° 20' and 43° 40' S., and lon. 144° 40' and 148° 20' E., 200 m. from N. to S., with an extreme of 200 m. from E. to W. Contains 26,215 sq. m., while the coast-line is about 700 m. There were in 1851, 3008 convicts (2189 males, and 869 females), the comparatively small and expiring remains of the transportation system. The abandonment of this system in 1852 led to the change of name to Tasmania, which was officially substituted after 1853. P. (1862) 90,380, of whom 49,319 were males and 41,061 females, besides 347 military. The number of British emigrants in 1862 was 3871. The aborigines, who were estimated at 5000 in 1814, are now extinct, excepting 15 individuals, 5 men and 10 women, of whom 14 are in charge of the government. A small remnant was removed 17 years ago to Flinders Island, when in January 1845 they numbered only 57 persons, who were so prostrated in spirit, that it was deemed but an act of humanity to send them back to their own country. The central part of the island is a table-land, averaging 3000 feet above the sea, on which are seven lakes varying in size from 2500 to 50,000 acres. The scenery is diversified with lofty mountains and immense forests, particularly over the western parts, which are still all but uninhabited. Of the Eastern mountain range, Ben Lomond is 5010 feet in elevation, Mount Barrow 4644 feet, and Mount Wellington, a magnificent pile, rising close to the sea-level behind Hobart Town, is 4166 feet. The western range has Cradle Mountain 5069, Frenchman's Cap 4756, Dry's Bluff 4257 feet, and Valentine's Peak 4000 feet, which is seen 60 m. off. The chief rivers (in the S.) are the Derwent and its branches, and the Huon, and in the N. the Tamar, with its tributaries, the North and South Esk, the Mersey, and the Forth. The chief harbours are Storm Bay, leading to Hobart Town, and Macquarie Harbour, on the W. coast. The soil is good; but owing to the prevalence of the forest, the labour of clearing has been very great, and thus of late there has been no great extension of cultivation. The principal minerals are gold, lead, copper, iron, coal, and precious stones. Coal exists in nearly every part of Tasmania. The mines chiefly wrought hitherto are situated in Tasman's Peninsula, but it is believed that coalbeds of far greater value exist in other parts of the island. Anthracite is abundant on the southern side of the island. The small quantity of gold hitherto found was obtained near Fingal, though it is probable the whole country is more or less auriferous. Iron ore of excellent quality abounds all over the colony, while galena and copper ore are found in different places. The forests yield inexhaustible supplies of valuable timber adapted for house and ship-building. The climate is salubrious and delightful. At Port Arthur in Tasman Peninsula, lat. 43° 10' S., the mean temp. of the year is 58°, of the coldest month 53°, of the warmest 62°; the mean temp. of the whole island being about 53°. The average annual rain-fall there is 44 inches, but in the island generally it is less, averaging about 21 inches. The staple products are wool, grain, fruit, and timber. The live stock numbered in 1860, sheep 1,700,930, cattle 83,366, horses 21,034. Exports (1862) 915,649. Imports 857,423. Acres under culture (1858) 229,489, of which 50,463 acres were devoted to wheat. In 1857 the ships inward were 547, of 105,548 tons. The whaling trade is a branch of industry which yields to the colony about 60,000, a year. Revenue for 1862, 371,594. Excluding public debt; and for 1860, 390,000. Expenditure 555,864. There is an imperial grant, in consideration of the heavy expenditure for police and gails, caused by the convict elements of the population, which is gradually diminishing, and was only 6000l. in 1860. Total imperial grant for civil and military purposes, 41,113l. The religion of the people, by census of 1861, appear as Church of England 49,233; Church of Scotland, 6616; Wesleyan Methodists, 6169; other Protestants, 6450; Roman Catholics, 19,454; Jews, 456. Including Flinders and Barren isles it is divided into 19 counties. The towns of chief note are Hobart Town in the S., containing 19,449 inhabitants; and Launceston in the N. at the head of the Tamar navigation, 10,359; Richmond, on Coal river, 9000; Longford, Perth, Westbury Outlands, New Norfolk, etc. The island has an extensive system of electric telegraph, and in August 1859 a cable was laid across Bass Strait. In common with the adjacent colonies, Tasmania enjoys self-government. The governor is appointed by the Queen, and there are two houses of legislature, both being elective, but upon different qualifications. The island was discovered by Tasman in 1642. It was afterwards partially explored by Cook. The first penal settlement formed there was in 1803, and transportation to Tasmania was abolished in 1852.

TENASSERIM PROVINCES, British India, consist of a long and narrow slip of territory extending along the eastern coast of the Bay of Bengal, between 10° 48' and 18° 25' N., lon. 96° 35' and 99° 30' E., having E. a mountain-chain separating them from Siam, W. the Indian Ocean and Salween river. Length, N. to S., 500 m.; breadth 40 to 80 m. Area 30,000 sq. m. Estimated pop. 191,476, mostly Tilians, also many Karen tribes. Surface in great part mountainous, and covered with fine forests; but there are extensive and rich alluvial plains, well adapted to the culture of cotton, indigo, tobacco, which, with rice, sugarcane, fruits, teak and sapan wood in the N., bamboos, rattans, drugs, gums, betel, cocoa-nuts, balachang, tortoise-shell, horns, and coal at Mergui, are the chief products. The rivers are the Salween, Attaran, Sitang, and Tenasserim, most of which are navigable to some distance inland. Climate healthy, thermometer ranging from 75° to 100° Fahr.; annual rainfall 108 inches; rainy season from May to October, after a dry season of six months. Iron and tin are plentiful in the provs. Tavoy and Mergui; but few, if any, mines are wrought. Elephants, rhinoceroses, tigers, the wild hog, and deer, abound in the forests. The population are mostly Buddhists, except the Karens; they manufacture cotton and silk fabrics, but the use of these has been almost superseded of late years by the importation of Indian and British piece-goods. The ports are entirely free, and many vessels are built on the coast. This territory is under the presid. of Bengal, and is subdivided into the provs. of Amherst, Tavoy, and Mergui, which with Moulmein are the principal seats of foreign trade. The Karens, who have many traditions apparently derived from the Old Testament, have within the last few years come over to Christianity in large numbers.

TEXAS, the largest of the U. S., North America, formerly belonging to Mexico, and independent from 1836 to 1845, when it was annexed to the United States, between lat. 26° and 36° 30' N., and lon. 93° 30' and 106° 40' W., having E. the states Louisiana and Arkansas; N. the Indian territory, from which it is separated by the Red river; W. New Mexico and Arizona; S.W. Mexico, from which it is separated by the Rio Bravo del Norte; and S.E. the Gulf of Mexico. Area 237,231 sq. m. P. (1860) 604,215, of whom 355 were free coloured, and 182,566 slaves. Along the coast, on the S.E. shore, is a flat reach, 30 to 60 m. wide, then a belt of undulating prairie land, 150 to 200 m. wide, and this is succeeded in the W. and N.W. by a region of bold hills and tablelands. The plateau of Texas, with part of New Mexico, extends 250 m. N. to S., and 300 m. from the Rio Grande E. The upper part, Llano Estacado, or "Staked Plain," is 2500 feet above the sea, and destitute of trees, except near the streams. The N. most part of the state forms part of the great American desert, and the high lands of the W. and N.W. are yet a wilderness, visited only by buffalo hunters. The state abounds in mineral wealth; gold, iron, and coal are found; and there are salt lakes and springs, and deposits of sulphur, nitre, and fire clay. The coasts are lined with a chain of low islands, and the Bays of Galveston, Matagorda, Espiritu Santo, Aranzas, Corpus Christi, and Laguna del Madre, range from 30 to 100 m. in length. Principal rivers, the Sabine, Neches, Trinity, Brazos, Colorado, Guadalupe, San Antonio, and Nueces, all of which enter the Gulf of Mexico, or lagoons along its coasts. Cotton is the great staple product; maize, wheat, hemp, coffee, and rice on the coast; indigo, tobacco, sugar, and the fruits common in South Europe. Grapes come to perfection, and some good wine is made. Oak, ash, elm, hickory, acacia, walnut, sycamore, and other timber, is abundant, especially on the river banks; and in the S.W. the mountainous parts are covered with pine forests. Vanilla, sarsaparilla, and a great variety of medicinal and dyeing plants grow wild. Cattle and silk are exported to the West India Islands and to New Orleans, which is a depôt for a large portion of the trade of Texas. Hides, horns, tallow, wax, and other natural products compose the rest of the exports; the imports consist of lumber, furniture, manufactured goods generally, and some colonial produce. The Houston and Texas Central Railway extends from Houston 70 m. to Navasot. Texas is divided into 77 counties. Government vested in a senate and house of representatives, with a president elected for two years. It sends two representatives to the U. S. Congress. Principal towns, Austin and Houston, which have been alternately the caps., Galveston (the principal port), and San Antonio de Bexar.

TEXAS, a co. of U. S., North America, Missouri, P. 6011 free, 56 slaves.

THAME or TAME, a river of England, co. Bucks and Oxford, after a S.W. course of 40 m. past Thame and Stadthampton, at Dorchester, joins the Isis, to which it afterwards gives the name of Thames. [TAME.]

THAMES or ISIS (Tamesis, Saxon Temese), the principal and the longest riv. of England, through the S. part of which it flows mostly in an E. direction. It rises about 2 m. S. Cirencester, and 376 feet above the sea, flows at first S. to near Cricklade, then E.N.E. past Lechlade to near Oxford, and S.E. past Oxford, Abingdon, and Wallingford to Reading, after which its course is mostly E. to Gravesend. A few miles beyond this it expands into an estuary, which, at its junction with the North Sea, at the Nore, between the Isle of Sheppey and Foulness Point, is 15 m. across, and has on opposite banks the towns Sheerness and Southend. Total course estimated at 250 m.; area of basin 6160 sq. m. The mean discharge of water per minute is 80,000 cubic feet. At Dorchester it receives the Thames from the N., and thenceforth assumes its proper name; other principal affluents are the Churnet, Coln, Wainrush, Evenlode, Cherwell, Colne, Brent, Lea, and Rodding from the N., and the Cole, Kennet (its chief affl.), Wey, Mole, and some smaller rivers, from the S. The Medway joins its estuary at Sheerness. It is of vast commercial importance. The tide flows up for about 80 m.; it is navigable for ships of any burden to Deptford, for vessels of 200 tons to London Bridge, and for barges 130 miles further, where it is united by the Thames and Severn Canal with the Severn, below Gloucester; it is also connected with all the centre of England by the Oxford and Warwick and Grand Junction Canals, and by other canals with Bristol, Basingstoke, Arundel, etc. Under the Romans it formed the N. boundary of the province Britannia Prima. During the Saxon Heptarchy, it divided the kingdoms of Wessex, Sussex, and Kent, from those of Mercia and Essex; it now separates the cos. Oxford, Bucks, Middlesex, and Essex on the north, from those of Berks, Surrey, and Kent on the south. Its name is not derived from the junction of the Thames and Isis, since it was always called the Thames or Temes, above its meeting with the Thames.

THAMES, a river of Canada West, cos. Perth, Middlesex, Elgin, and Kent, flows through a fertile country in the peninsula between Lakes Huron and Erie, and after a S.W. course of 160 i. enters Lake St Clair. Length 10 m.; breadth 5 m. Ac. 26,500. P. (1861) 31,862. Surface level, lofty, and commands views of the sea and the coast of France. Soil fertile, and here, amongst other products, large quantities of canary-seed are grown. Its N.E. point, the North Foreland, lat. 51° 22' 29" N., lon. 1° 26' 47" E., has a lighthouse, 340 feet above the sea, and visible for 22 miles. Near it are two large tumuli, said to mark the place of a battle between the Saxons and Danes in 858. Reculvers, on the N.W., marks the site of the ancient Regulbium; and Richborough, on its S. side, was the anc. Rhulupium. Thanet was the first possession of the Saxons in Britain. On it are the favourite watering-places, Ramsgate, Margate, and Broadstairs; and it is intersected by a branch of the South-Eastern Railway, between the two former towns.

Among its temples are those of Karnak and Luxor, on the E. bank of the river; the former, the temple of Jupiter-Ammon, occupying an area of 9 acres, and in many parts comparatively perfect. The temple of Luxor, 1½ m. S. Karnak, is of a less size, and in front of it were formerly two monolith obelisks, 80 feet in height, one of which has been conveyed to Paris, where it is erected in the Place de la Concorde. W. of the Nile are the famous temple of Medinet-Aboo, the Rhamesian, and two enormous sitting colossi, one of which was the celebrated Memnon; and in the mountains on the same side are the tombs of most of the earlier Pharaohs. Several villages are scattered over the site of Thebes, which declined with the removal of the seat of government to Memphis. Its importance was finally destroyed on its capture, after a three years' siege, by Ptolemy Lathyrus, in the 5d century B.C.

TIBER (ancient Tiberis, Ital. Tevere), a river of Central Italy, rises in the Tuscan Apennines, 5 m. N. Pieve-San-Stefano, and flows S.S.E. as far as Barberini, within 20 m. of Rome, where it turns S.W., and after a course of 185 m. enters the Mediterranean, 17 m. below Rome, by two mouths, which enclose a small delta, the ancient Isola Sacra. It is navigable at certain seasons as far as the confluence of the Nera, 30 m. N. Rome. Principal tributaries, the Topino, Nera, (anc. Nar), and Teverone (anc. Amio), from the E.; the Nestore, Chiana, and Nepi, from the W. Its banks are not picturesque; and the stream, usually sluggish, is rapid in spring, and brings down with it a coloured muddy deposit, which caused it anciently to be termed the "yellow Tiber." At Rome it is about 300 feet broad.

TIBERIAS, a lake, etc., Palestine. [TABARLA.]

TIBERTON, a pa. of England, co. and 9½ m. W. Hereford. Ac. 1111. P. 153.

TIBET, an extensive region of Central Asia, included in the Chinese empire, stretching from lon. 79° to 103° E., and from the great chain of the Himalaya to about 36° N., having N. Chinese Turkestan, the desert Gobi, and the Ko-ko-nor territory; W. Ladakh, Leh, and the other countries of "Little Tibet," lately belonging to the Sikhs;

E. China-Propriety; and S. the territories of Burma, British India, Bootan, Sikkim, Nepal, and the Punjab. Length from E. to W. 1400 m.; breadth 600 m. P. 6,000,000. The W. part, which alone has been explored by Europeans, is a lofty table-land, with a very dry climate, cold, but not severe; and the lower limit of the snow-line is higher on the N. than on the S. slope of the Himalaya. The highest plains are more than 10,000 feet above the sea. Many of the principal rivers of Southern Asia, the Indus, Sutlej, and Brahmaputra, rise in Tibet. Numerous affluents of the Ganges break through the Himalaya also, from W. Tibet. From E. Tibet, which seems to be a maze of mountains, flows the Yang-tze Kiang and many large tribes of the Brahmaputra. Tibet contains many lakes, some of which are of great size; the principal are Tengri Nor, Paltee lake, Ike Namur Nor, and Bokha Namur Nor. The land in W. Tibet, so far as has been discovered, is very bare of trees, or large vegetable products; yet it abounds with game and other wild animals, and numerous flocks of sheep and goats, the hairy wool of which is used for the manufacture of shawls and other fine fabrics in Cashmere. The yak (Bos grunnicus), and several other kinds of cattle, are reared; horses, mules, and sheep are used as beasts of burden. A fine race of dogs, and the musk deer, a small species, are natives of Tibet. Barley, pease, and wheat, are the chief crops raised; garden vegetables and fruits are in little variety, and the inhabitants live more by pastoral than agricultural pursuits. Clay-slate, granite, quartz, and limestone, are constituents of the mountain ranges; borax in great quantity, nitre, rock-salt, lead, silver, copper, gold, turquoise, and lapis-lazuli, are among the mineral products; but the great scarcity of fuel forms a serious obstacle to mining and the reduction of metals. Manufactures of woollens, sacking, and other woven fabrics, are pretty general, and much cloth is sent from Lassa into China. The traffic through Tibet is extensive, and mostly monopolized by the government and officers of state. The trade with China is conducted at Lassa and Sin-ning, a town of the Chinese province Kan-su, where the Tibetan caravans exchange the native produce and Indian goods for tea, silver, bullion, brocades, fruits, tobacco, quicksilver, cinnabar, furs, porcelain, musical instruments, pearls, and corals. Nepal and Bootan derive all their Chinese goods through Tibet; and from the former and Bengal, English and Indian piece goods, sugar, tobacco, indigo, paper, rice, spices, sandal-wood, and gums, are received; from Assam, silk, iron, and stick lac; from Chinese Turkestan, horses and camels; from Ladakh, dried fruits, shawls, gamboge, saffron, copper, tobacco, and timber. The roads and bridges are far inferior to those of China. Tibet, which became subordinate to China in 1648, is politically divided into E., or Hither, and W., or Ulterior Tibet, each ruled by a minister from Pe-king, in conjunction with the ecclesiastical heads of the country; the Dalai-lama, at Lassa, the E. cap., and the Bantchin-erdeni, at Teshoo-Lombo, the W. capital. Tibet is the headquarters of Buddhism, which is here exhibited in its greatest purity. The country abounds with temples, and it is stated that 80,000 lamas or priests are supported at the expense of the government. Amongst the inhabitants there are believed to be about 8000 Roman Catholics. The Chinese armed force consists of 60,000 men, of whom 50,000 are infantry. The population, like the other inhabitants of the table-land of Central Asia, are of the Mongolian race. Besides Lassa and Teshoo-Lombo, the chief towns are Shigatze, Jiga-Gounggar, Nattan, etc.

TIMBUCTOO or TOMBUCTOO, a town of Central Africa, Soudan, near the border of the Desert Sahara, 8 m. N. of its port Kabara, on the Joliba (Niger), lat. 18° 3' N., lon. 3° 10' W. P. 20,000 (?), principally Negroes, with some Moors. It is situated on dry and barren soil, except on the side next the Quorra, where it is more fertile. The walled enclosure, about 3 miles in circumference, is built in a triangular form; houses of mud and stone, many of them having elegant façades. The streets are clean, and wide enough to admit three horsemen abreast. Among its mosques are two with towers and walls about 15 feet in height. Provisions have to be brought from Jenné, on the Niger, about 300 m. S.W.; and the sole importance of Timbuctoo is due to its being an entrepôt for the trade between Guinea, Senegambia, and North Africa. Caravans from Marocco and the other Barbary states here exchange dates, European manufactures, fire-arms, gunpowder, coral, tobacco, and paper, for slaves, gold dust, salt, ostrich feathers, gums, and palm oil. It was twice taken and held by the Moors, but is now governed by a native chieftain.

TIMUR or TIMOR, an island of Malaysia, the most E. of the Sunda chain, between lat. 8° and 10° 20' S., lon. 123° 30' and 127° E., separated from N.W. Australia by the Timor Sea. Length, 340 m.; breadth, 40 to 60 m. Estimated area 11,212 sq. m. It appears to be very populous. In the interior the inhabitants are mostly of the Papuan Negro race; on the coast, Malays, with an intermixture of Dutch and Portuguese settlers. It is traversed in its length by a mountain chain, partly covered with forests; in the interior are some fertile plains, where wheat and other products, not common in the Archipelago, are grown. Around the coasts every spot of ground, admitting of cultivation, appears to be occupied, and the country is covered with dwellings and plantations. Principal exports are sandal-wood sent to China, bees-wax to Java, and cattle, horses, maize, and sago to the Australian colonies, Mauritius, and Singapore, in return for muskets, gunpowder, hardwares, calicoes, and other British manufactures, which constitute the chief imports, besides rice, arrack, and other native produce from Java and Macassar. British ships frequently visit Timur, chiefly homeward-bound whalers, as also Dutch ships and native vessels. Sago is the chief article of food; millet, maize, yams, sweet potatoes, and cotton are grown; gold, copper, and rock salt are met with, but no mines are wrought. Pearls are fished off the S.W. extremity of the island. The Dutch possess the southern part, including the settlement of Coepang in the S.W., which is a free port. Dilli, on the N.W. coast, is a settlement belonging to the Portuguese, who possess the northern portion. In these settlements the natives are said to be Christians; in the interior the great majority are idolaters. Pop. of the Portuguese portion is 850,300; of the Dutch, 907,146.

TIMUR-LAUT, an island of Malaysia, between lat. 7° 10' and 8° 30' S., lon. 131° and 131° 40' E., 250 m. N.E. Timur. Length 125 m. Surface mountainous and wooded.

TIRNOVA or TERNOVA, a fortified town of European Turkey, Bulgaria, on the Jantra, a tributary of the Danube, 35 m. E. Sistova. P. 16,000. It stands on a basaltic hill 1000 ft. high, is enclosed by a wall and trench, and has numerous mosques, churches, and Jews' synagogues.

TIROL or TYROL, and VORARLBERG (ancient Rhaetia, and a part of Noricum), a crown-land of the Austrian empire, with the title of county, between lat. 45° 39' 30" and 47° 45' 15" N., lon. 9° 35' and 13° E., having E. Salzburg and Carinthia, S. Venetia, N. Bavaria, and W. the principality of Liechtenstein and Switzerland. Area 11,311 sq. m. P. (1858) 876,263, mostly of German, but in the S. of Italian, descent. It is almost entirely occupied with the Alps and its ramifications, only about one-tenth of the country being level. The Rhetian Alps, which separate the valley of the Inn in the N. from the valleys of the Drave and Adige in the S., run E. and W., and contain the principal culminating summits, rising far above the snow-line. Probably one-tenth of the surface of Tirol is always covered with snow; Mount Ortler, on the W., rises to 12,822 feet, and the Gross Glockner, on the E., to 12,957 feet in elevation. Besides the Ina, Drave, and Adige, with their affls., the N.W. part, Vorarlberg, is watered by the Ill and Bregenz, flowing into the Lake of Constance, which forms the N.W. boundary. Small lakes are numerous, and the N. part of the Lake of Garda is in the Tirol. Climate severe in the uplands; mean temperature of year at Innsbruck 48° 8, and at Botzen 55° 4, Fahr.; the narrow valleys of the S., however, have a warm climate, similar to that of the adjacent part of Lombardy. Some maize, wheat, and pulse are grown in the lower valleys, and buckwheat, rye, and oats on the mountain-sides; but the corn raised is not sufficient for home consumption, and the chief wealth of the rural population is in their cattle and other livestock. Wine and silk are the products of the southern provinces. The rearing of canary birds is pursued on a large scale in the valley of the Inn, and most parts of Europe are supplied with singing birds from the Tirol. The wolf, bear, wild boar, marmot, and chamois, inhabit the mountain districts. Mining industry is important. Coal, iron, and salt are the principal minerals obtained; copper, gold, silver, lead, and cobalt are met with, but few metallic mines, except iron, are wrought. There are numerous mineral springs. Silks are manufactured in the S.; iron goods, cottons, linens, leather, and wooden articles, are made with much ingenuity at Innsbruck, etc.; in the Inn valley, glass and paper are the other principal manufactured products. Principal exports are cattle, cheese, silk, iron and iron wares, salt, wine, timber, tobacco, and silk goods; corn, and various manufactured goods. The transit trade between Germany and Italy is the most important, occupying many of the pop.; the principal passes for traffic are the Brenner and Stelvio, across the main chain of the Alps, and the routes by Trient and the Pusterthal in the S. Many of the inhabitants emigrate annually as labourers into the neighbouring countries. Nearly all are Roman Catholics, under 10 bishops, suffragans of the archbishop of Salzburg. The Tirol has its own national diet, composed of the nobility, clergy, deputies of the towns and of the rural districts, who meet in one chamber. It is divided into the 7 circles of Roveredo, Trient, Etsch, Pusterthal and Eisach, Lower Inn and Wipperthal, Upper Inn and Vintschgau, and Vorarlberg, also named from their chief towns; cap. Innsbruck. The Tirol passed into the possession of the house of Hapsburg in the 13th century, and its inhabitants are among the most attached to the imperial rule in the Austrian empire.

Peru and Bolivia, in a wide valley of the Andes, between lat. 15° 12' and 16° 20' S., lon. 68° 35' and 70° 2' W. Celebrated as the cradle of Peruvian civilisation. Estimated area 2225 geog. sq. m. Length 120 m.; breadth 38 m. Elevation of surface above the ocean 12,850 feet; in some parts no bottom has been found at 200 fathoms. Shape very irregular; it has several extensive bays, enclosed by projecting peninsulas. On its W. shore are the towns Puno and Chucuito. It receives several small rivers, and discharges its surplus waters S. ward by the river Desaguadero. The water is fresh, but of bad taste. Several species of fish abound, which supply food for the towns and villages on its shores. It is stated (1863) that steamers are to be launched on it, which, in connection with the projected railroad from Islay to Arequipa, will much facilitate commerce in the interior. It contains many small mountainous islands, on one of which, named Titicaca, towards its S. extremity, the last Inca dynasty is said to have had its origin.

TRANSVAAL REPUBLIC, an inland state of S.E. Africa, bounded S. by the Vaal, a large tributary of the Orange river, N. by the Limpopo, E. by the Drakenberg mtns., & W. by the Bechuana tribe. Area undefined. Length 500 m., breadth 225 m. Surface an elevated plateau, with thinly wooded hills and excellent pasture. Wheat grows luxuriantly in the watered districts. Peaches, grapes, and oranges flourish; and from the nature of the soil, and the excellence of the climate, it is well adapted to the culture of cotton, coffee, & the sugarcane. It was founded by the boers, or Dutch colonists, emigrants from the Cape Colony; and its government is a singular union of communism and oligarchy, the executive power being in the Volkerand, or assembly of the people. The government exacts a tax from the Caffres, payable in ivory or cattle. Chief town, Potchefstroom, on a trib. of the Vaal. P. 1500. It was formerly the seat of government, which is removed to Pretoria, on N.E., a pretty little town of 300 inhabitants. Near it is a place called Derdepoot, where is an immense tree which could shelter 400 sheep. Ivory is the principal source of trade, and serves for the coin of the country.

TRANSYLVANIA (Germ. Siebenburgen, "the Seven Towns"), the most E. prov. of the Austrian empire, with the title of crown-land, between lat. 45° 30' and 47° 40' N., lon. 22° 15' and 26° E., having W. and N. Hungary and the Bukowina, E. the Bukowina and Moldavia, S. Walachia, from which it is separated by the main range of the Carpathian mountains. Cap. Klausenburg. Area 21,208 sq. m. P. (1857) 1,926,727. Surface mostly covered by ramifications of the Carpathians, and Mount Bucecs, south Cronstadt, is 9528 feet in height. Principal rivs., the Szamos in the N.; Maros, with its affls., the Kukels in the centre, and the Aluta in the S. The banks of these rivers are densely wooded, especially those of the Maros, and hence the province derived its name, signifying a forest region. These forests yield valuable timber. Soil very various. Climate on the mountains rude, but in the valleys as mild as that of N. Italy, and a surplus of corn over the home consumption is raised. Chief crops, wheat, barley, oats, rye, buckwheat, maize, pulse, potatoes, fruits, tobacco, flax, hemp, saffron, and wine. The rearing of horses, sheep, and other live stock, is important. In the Szekler country is a breed of hardy ponies, and the horses elsewhere have been much improved. Buffaloes are used for field labour; the bear, wolf, and an abundance of game, roam in the forests, in which also great numbers of swine are fed. The most remarkable mineral product is rock-salt, a bed of which extends from Walachia through Transylvania to Galicia, covering a space of 570 m. in length, and from 60 to 80 m. in breadth; 1,500,000 cwts. of salt are procured annually from mines; there are, besides, 120 salt springs. Gold, silver, iron, lead, copper, antimony, arsenic, mercury, alum, sulphur, nitre, gems, and marble, are amongst the chief mineral products. Twenty-two gold mines are wrought, and nearly every stream in the country is auriferous. The annual produce of gold is 2500 merks, of which 1800 is obtained from washings. Silver yields annually 5000 merks. It has manufactures of woollen and cotton stuffs. Exports consist of salt, corn, cattle, horses, hides, wax, honey, timber, metals, in return for manufactured goods, woven fabrics, jewellery, hats, glasswares, etc. The trade is mostly in the hands of Greeks and Armenians. The Maros and Szamos rivers serve as the chief routes for conveyance of goods. Roads are almost impassable; except in a few towns, inns are unknown. The peasantry generally, especially those of the Greek church, are depressed and ignorant, except in Saxonland in the S., which derives its name from having been settled by colonies from Lower Saxony, in the 12th century: it is divided into the districts or stuhls of Mediasch, Mühlentbach, Hermannstadt, Klausenburg, Scheuerstadt, Reussomark, and Broos or Szasnaras (the "Seven Towns"), to which Cronstadt and Bistriz were subsequently added. The Szeklers occupy five dists. or stuhls in the E. part of the country, and the rest of the principality, comprising 3-5ths of the whole, and divided into 9 cos. and 2 districts, is termed the Magyar-land, from its predominant people. No country in the world has, within so small a compass, so great a variety in its population. These comprise 14 distinct races, of which the 3 principal are Hungarians, Szeklers, and Saxons; the others are Walachians, German colonists, Bulgarians, Armenians, Greeks, Russians, Poles, Jews, Moravians, and Gypsies. The different forms of religion, which are supported by the state, and enjoy equal privileges, are, Roman Catholic and United Greek, Protestant, and Unitarian; Jews and professors of the Disunited-Greek church are tolerated. The Roman Catholics have a lyceum at Klausenburg, and nine gymnasia; and the Protestants have four colleges or large gymnasias, the chief of which is at Nagy-Enyed, and nine smaller gymnasia; the Unitarians, a college at Klausenburg, two gymnasia, and several schools. Transylvania was annexed to the Austrian empire by Joseph II. in 1699. In 1848 and 1849 it was the seat of protracted warfare, during which it is estimated that 200 towns and villages were burned, and 10,000 of the population perished.

TRANSYLVANIA, a vill. of the U. S., North America, Ohio, on the Little Miami, 68 m. W.S.W. Columbus, and founded in 1829.

TRAPANI, Drepanum, a fortified seaport town of Sicily, cap. prov., on the W. side of the isl., 46 m. W. Palermo. P. (1861) 30,592. It is the see of a bishop, has a castle, senatorial palace, cathedral, 51 churches and several convents, three hospitals, a college, two seminaries, a public library, a theatre, and numerous palaces, built in a quaint mediæval style. The harbour is accessible to vessels of 300 tons, and its trade is considerable; exports comprise salt, tunny, coral, from the coast of Africa, which is cut and polished by the inhabitants, who claim the invention of cutting cameos on shell; soda, alabaster vases, statues, and gems. Drepanum was early occupied by the Carthaginians, and was the scene of a celebrated sea-fight (B.C. 249) between the Roman and Carthaginian fleets. Area of prov. 1058 sq. m. P. (1862) 214,981.

TRAS-OS-MONTES, a prov. of Portugal, in the N., having N. and E. Spain, S. the prov. Beira, and W. Minho. Area 4030 sq. m. P. (1863) 340,186. The Douro forms all its S., and most part of its E. border; other principal rivers are its affls., the Tamega, Tua, and Sabor. Surface mountainous, but it contains many fertile valleys, and the banks of the Douro are famous for the production of port wines. Cattle-rearing is important. Silk and woollen fabrics, and linen thread, are the chief manufactured products. Principal towns, Braganza, Villa Real, Torre de Moncorvo, and Miranda.

TRAU, Tragurium, a seaport town of Austria, Dalmatia, circ. and 10 m. W. Spalato, on an islet in the Adriatic, between the island Bra and the mainland, and connected with both by bridges. P. 3800.

Malabar, Coimbatore, Madura, and Tinnevely, between lat. 8° 4' and 10° 21' N., lon. 76° 14' and 77° 38' E. Area 4722 sq. m. P. 1,011,824. Surface mountainous in the E.; elsewhere varied with hill and dale, and well watered, but only about 2-3ds are capable of cultivation. Products comprise rice, almonds, cardamoms, pepper and other spices, betel and cocoa nuts, tobacco, ivory, and bees' wax. Property of all kinds, as in Canara, descends in the female line. The inhabitants are mostly Hindoos, but there are 150,000 Christians, and in some communes Christian churches are much more numerous than pagodas and mosques. In the secluded parts of the mountains is a wild and barbarous race, who live on game or the spontaneous produce of the forest. The race is held in bondage, and hired out to parties who require their services. The British authorities have urged the emancipation of the children of these slaves, and also of their parents. In 1853, a proclamation was issued, declaring the freedom of children subsequently born, and other privileges to the slaves. Principal towns, Trivandrum, the cap., Anjengo, & Quilon.

TREBIZONDE or TREBISOND (PASHALIK OF), a subdivision of Turkish Armenia, extending along the coast of the Black Sea, between lat. 40° 30' and 41° 30' N., lon. 38° and 42° E., having landward the dist. Gurul, and the pashas. Akhalkzikh, Kars, Erzeroum, and Sivas. Surface mostly mountainous, and the coast-line clothed with dense forests, rises to from 4000 to 5000 feet above the sea. Many tracts are highly fertile and well cultivated; and it produces wheat, barley, and maize, with hemp, flax, tobacco, wool, honey, wax, fruits, charcoal, and timber, which, with linen cloths, carpets, leather, soap, salted fish, wine, tar, and leeches, form the chief exports. Cotton-growing is rapidly increasing. Its E. part, called Lazistan, is destitute of towns, from being inhabited by Lazes, a rude people, numbering about 50,000. Principal towns, Trebizonde, Kerehsun, T'rehbolli, Kizah, and Batum, all on its coast.—Trebizonde (anc. Trapezus), the cap., is an important fortified seaport city, on the S.E. coast of the Black Sea, 120 m. N.W. Erzeroum. Lat. of lighthouse 105 feet high, on the battery at Kalmuk Point, 41° 1' N.; lon. 39° 45' 48" E. Estimated pop. 45,000, the greater number of whom are Mohammedans, inhabiting the walled city. It stands on the slope of a hill facing the sea, enclosed by a castellated barrier, and further defended by a citadel on an adjacent height. Outside of the walls are deep ravines, filled with gardens and crossed by long bridges; besides several suburbs, in which are most of the Christian dwellings, with the principal bazaars and khans. Houses mostly of one storey, built of stone and lime, roofed with red tiles, and so much interspersed with gardens and plantations that scarcely a house is visible from the sea. It has about 20 Greek churches, and nearly all its mosques have been formerly Christian places of worship; that of St Sophia, about 1 mile distant, is a handsome edifice. Trebizonde has a fort on each side of a peninsula projecting into the Black Sea. From its position, the city is the natural entrepôt of the trade of Armenia, N. Persia, and Georgia, with Europe; and owing to the establishment of steam navigation on the Black Sea, and between Trebizonde and Constantinople, its trade has lately received a remarkable extension. Its exports consist chiefly of silk, wool, tobacco, wax, galls, oil, opium and other drugs; honey, butter, timber for ship-building, the produce of Asia Minor; and silk fabrics, Cashmere shawls, carpets, saffron, cotton, and camel-skins from Persia. At this city Xenophon and the Ten Thousand Greeks reached the sea in their memorable retreat. From 1203 until the subversion of the Eastern Empire, Trebizonde was the cap. of an independent dominion, extending from the Phasis to the Halya.

TRIPOLI, a beylik of the Ottoman Empire, the most E. of the Barbary states, N. Africa, its dom. comprising Barca, and the region extending from the Lake Biban to the S. extremity of Milhr Bay, between lat. 28° and 33° 30' N., lon. 10° 30' and 25° E., having N. the Mediterranean, E. Egypt, W. Tunis, and S. Fezzan and the Libyan Desert. Estimated area of Tripoli Proper, 100,000 sq. m., and pop. 600,000; but the whole dominion is supposed to have an area of upwards of 200,000 sq. m., and a pop. of from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000. The coast region, which has an extent of 1100 m., presents few inlets, and only one harbour, that of Tripoli. It is of the most luxuriant fertility for a few miles inland, beyond which the whole country is little better than a sandy waste, the rivers of Tripoli being mere torrents. Parallel to the coast two mountain chains, with summits 4000 feet high, extend from E. to W. Products of the coast are corn and fruits, in great variety; cotton, silk, tobacco, saffron, madder, and castor oil; in the interior, senna, dates, and galls are the chief sources of wealth, and the carob and lotus are indigenous. The surplus produce of the date and olive plantations, with straw mats, earthen jars, and other domestic manufactures, are partly exported by sea and partly disposed of to Bedouin traders. Wine of superior quality might be produced. Cattle, sheep, and poultry are sent to Malta. Exports (1862) cattle, wool, skins, etc., to the value of 29,666*l.* Imports, 11,880*l.* Manufs. carpets, cloaks, and other articles of clothing; camels, goat's hair, sacking, prepared skins, marocco leather, earthenwares, and potash. Foreign commerce is mostly with Malta, Tunis, and the Levant; and the chief trade is in the barter of European goods for those of Central Africa, whence several caravans arrive annually with slaves, gold dust, ivory, senna, and natron. Tripoli is stated to be the most civilised of the Barbary states. State religion Mohammedanism. Gov., since 1835, exercised by a pasha, a vassal of the Porte. Army, a Turkish brigade of 4000 men.

TRIPOLI, anc. Tea, a fortified maritime city of N. Africa, cap. state, on a low rocky promontory extending into the Mediterranean. Lat. (of castle) 32° 53' 9" N.; lon. 13° 11' E. P. estimated at 15,500; viz. 12,000 of Turkish descent, 1500 Christians, & 2000 Jews. Principal edifices, the citadel, with the residence of the pasha, a dockyard, mosques, Jews' synagogues, churches, market places, and European hotels. It has a triumphal arch, erected A.D. 164, in honour of Aurelius Antoninus & Verus, besides other remains of antiquity. Its port, though small, is secure, and can accommodate vessels drawing 18 feet water, and it has an active trade in the products of the interior as far as Bornou and Timbuctoo.—Tripoli Vecchia or Old Tripoli, is a small maritime town, 45 m. W. ward.

TRIPOIS or TARABŪLŪS, Tripolis, a seaport town, Syria, cap. pash., on the Mediterranean, at the base of a spur of Mount Lebanon, and at the mouth of the Kadisha, 56 m. N.E. Beyrouf. Lat. 34° 26' 4" N.; lon. 35° 49' E. P. 20,000. It is surrounded by fine gardens, but the marshy character of its vicinity renders it unhealthy.

Houses chiefly of stone, and the town has many remains of middle-age architecture; in and around it are numerous granitic columns and traces of antiquity, and an old castle stands on an adjacent height. It has a custom house, a Spanish fort, and a British consulate. The government powder magazine exploded on 30th May 1864, and destroyed a large part of the town: 300 or 400 lives were lost. Tripoli doubtless owed its name to its consisting of three distinct towns, while the Marina or El Mina, the principal seat of trade, is a separate quarter S.W. ward, on a projecting point of land bordering the port. The harbour is small, shallow, and frequently unsafe; but it has an export trade in silk, wool, cotton, tobacco, galls, cochineal, and soap. Tripoli is a Greek bishop's see, and the residence of several European consuls. It was taken by the Crusaders in 1108, at which time a large and valuable library was consigned to the flames.—II. a ruined city of Asia Minor, Anatolia, near the Menderes, 36 m. S.E. Allah-Shehr.—III. a town of Turkish Armenia. [TRĒNBOLI.]

TRIPOLITZA or TRIPOLIZZA, a town of Greece, Morea, cap. gov. Mantinea, in a plain 3000 feet above the sea, 22 m. S.W. Argos. It was the residence of the Turkish pasha of the Morea, and had 20,000 inhabitants; but it was stormed and taken by the Greek insurgents in 1821, and again in 1828 by the troops of Ibrahim Pasha, who razed it to the ground: it has been since rebuilt. It owes its name to being the modern representative of the three cities, Mantinea, Tegea, and Pallantium, traces of all which are found in its vicinity.

TRISTAN D'ACUNHA, the principal of a group of islets in the S. Atlantic Ocean. Lat. 37° 2' 48" S.; lon. 12° 18' 39" W. P. 85, in 16 families, English, Dutch, Danish, and American. Surface mountainous, and one peak rises to 8300 ft. above the ocean. The other islands are Nightingale and Inaccessible Island. Potatoes and corn are grown; cattle, sheep, and poultry numerous. TURIN (Ital. Torino, anc. Augusta Turinorum), a city of North Italy, on l. b. of the Po, at the junction of the Dora Riparia, 79 m. W.S.W. Milan. Lat.  $45^{\circ} 4' 8'' N.$ ; lon.  $7^{\circ} 41' 49'' E.$  Greenwich. P. (1862) 204,782, exclusive of a garrison. Altitude 892 feet. Mean temp. of year  $53^{\circ}-1$ , winter  $33^{\circ}-1$ , summer  $71^{\circ}-16$ , Fahr. The winters are cold, rain and hail storms are frequent. It is 4 m. in circumference, and, though formerly fortified and possessing a fine citadel, is now an open city, in a rich and well-watered plain studded with villas. Railways connect Turin with Genoa, Novara, and Vercelli. Near the middle of the city is the Piazza-reale, and from it run several fine streets; the Strada del Po, with many lofty palaces, leads to a bridge of five arches over the Po. In the centre of the Piazza del Castello is the ancient castle, now the Palazzo Madama, containing the hall of assembly and offices of the senate, royal gallery of pictures, and the astronomical observatory. The finest square is the Piazza di San Carlo. Chief public edifices, a royal palace, with a rich library of 40,000 vols., and gardens; adjoining it are several of the government offices, the royal armoury, the military academy, and the royal opera-house; the old palace of the Dukes of Savoy, now converted into the house of assembly for the senate and an extensive picture gallery; the university, with five faculties and a library containing upwards of 120,000 volumes. The cathedral, a Gothic structure, was formerly very wealthy in plate and jewels, which Napoleon I. sold, and applied the proceeds to embark and build the bridge over the Po. The interior has been very recently decorated with frescoes. A Waldensian church was opened in 1853; there are between 40 and 50 other churches, a school of industry, the Retiro delle Rosine, an asylum for the female poor founded in 1740 by a poor girl of Mondovi; a lunatic asylum, a maternity and an ophthalmic hospital, three other hospitals, one of which receives annually 6000 patients; royal academy of sciences, with a very rich collection of Egyptian antiquities, and a museum of natural history; an arsenal, academy of fine arts, 8 theatres, a fine cemetery, a botanic garden, barracks, chambers of agriculture and commerce, etc. Its manufs. are chiefly of silks, velvets, hosiery, silk twist, and orgazine, and it has others of woollen and cotton fabrics, steel and iron wares, stained paper, glass and porcelain, liqueurs, and paper; a royal gunpowder factory. During the French empire under Napoleon I., Turin was cap. of the dep. Po. Turin has been greatly extended of late years, having now no suburbs, and owing to its liberal institutions has been made the refuge of the oppressed all over Italy. The first parliament of the new kingdom of Italy was held here, 18th February 1861. It is supposed to have been founded by a Ligurian tribe, afterwards it became a Roman colony. In the 11th century it was the cap. of a county, and has sustained two memorable sieges, one in 1649 during the contest between the French and Spaniards, the other in 1706 during the war of the Succession, which ended in the defeat of the French by Victor Amadeo. In the vicinity is the Basilica of La Superga, with a cupola, flanked by two bell towers. Adjoining it is the college. The prov. of Turin had, in 1862, an area of 3964 sq. m., and a pop. of 941,992.

TURIN, a township of the U. S., North America, New York, 110 m. N.W. Albany.

TURINSK, a town of Siberia, gov. and 140 m. W.S.W. Tobolsk, on the Tura, an affluent of the Ob. P. 2000. It has iron works.

TURINSK (NUNII and VERKNI), two contiguous towns of Asiatic Russia, gov. Perm, immediately E. the Ural mountains, 50 m. S.W. Verkhoturie, with valuable iron mines.

TURIS or TURRIS, a vill. of Spain, prov. and 20 m. W.S.W. Valencia. P. 3900. Marble and jasper are procured in its vicinity.

TURISK, a market town of Russian Poland, gov. Volhynia, on the Turija, 10 m. S.W. Kovel.

TURUVICARY or TURAVACARA, a fortified town of S. India, Mysore, 52 m. N. Seringapatam.

TURK-DEAN, a pa. of England, co. Glo'ster, 2½ m. N.N.W. Northleach. Ac. 1890. P. 291.

TURKESTAN or TARTARY, a region occupying the centre of Asia, between lat. 30° and 48° N., lon. 50° and 92° E., forming a part of the great continental basin, and consisting of the two following chief divisions.—I. Chinese Turkestan, called also Thian-Shan Nan-loo & Little Bucharja, an extensive region forming the W. portion of the Chinese empire, and including Dzungaria or Thian-Shan-pe-loo, comprised between lat. 30° and 48° N., lon. 71° and 92° E., surrounded by Mongolia, the Ko-ko-nor country, Tibet, W. Siberia, and the table-land of Pamir, which separates it from Independent Turkestan. Area and pop. uncertain, as it is little known to Europeans, but estimated at 50,000 sq. m., and pop. 2,500,000. It is an elevated table-land, traversed by several lofty mountain chains, and watered by rivers which terminate in extensive salt lakes. Much of its surface forms part of the desert Gobi; elsewhere are many fertile districts producing corn of all kinds, rice, cotton, and fruits, which, with cattle and various mineral and manufactured products, form the principal exports. A large commercial intercourse is kept up with the countries to the W. and S.W., and with Asiatic Russia. Imports from Cashmere comprise shawls, kincohs, white piece goods, and leather; in return for refined silver and shawl-wool. From Fyzabad, in Budukshan, slaves and gems are the principal imports; from Khokan, piece goods; and from Russia, broad cloth, brocades, and bullion; the returns to these countries consisting of tea, silver, and Chinese porcelain. The pop. Mohammedans or Buddhists, with some Christians and Jews. In the N. the government is wholly military; elsewhere, Chinese and Mantchoo troops garrison the cities, which have their own civil government, and the principal of which are Yarkand, Cashgar, Khoten, Ili, and Khamil. It was conquered in 1758 by the Chinese, but their rule here has been repeatedly disturbed, and a formidable insurrection took place in 1826-7. [THIAN-SHAN-NAN-LOO, DZOUNGARIA.]—II. Independent Turkestan, a region of Central Asia, between lat. 34° and 46° N., lon. 50° and 79° E., having E. the Pamir table-land, separating it from Chinese Turkestan, N. the Kirgis Steppe of Western Siberia, W. the Caspian Sea, and S. Persia and Afghanistan. Estimated area 642,000 sq. m., and pop. supposed to be about 4,000,000. In the E. and S. it is mountainous, elsewhere generally level, with a slope towards the W., and in that direction the Oxus and Jaxartes rivers flow through it to the Aral Sea, which is partly comprised within its limits. It consists of the doms. of Bokhara, Khiva, Khokand, Koondooz (which see for further information).

TURKESTAN, a town of the above, khanat and 220 m. N.N.W. Khokand.

TURKEY-FOOT, a township, U. S., North America, Pennsylvania, 15 m. S.W. Bedford.

TURKEY (properly the Ottoman Empire), a vast country occupying the S.E. part of Europe and the W. of Asia, and comprising, at least nominally, the Hedjaz in Arabia; Egypt, Nubia, and the beyliks of Tripoli, Tunis, and Fezzan in Africa; cap. Constantinople. The administrative divisions of Turkey are ill defined, and subject to frequent changes. Turkey in Europe is divided into 14 Eyalets or governments, and subdivided into 43 Sanjaks or provinces, and 376 kazas or districts. Turkey in Asia has 18 eyalets, 78 sanjaks, and 858 kazas, and Turkey in Africa 3 eyalets, 17 sanjaks, and 86 kazas. [See table of divisions, page 1297.]

TURKEY IN EUROPE, between lat. 39° and 48° 20' N., lon. 15° 40' and 29° 30' E., is bounded E. by the Black Sea; S. by Greece, the Archipelago, and the Sea of Marmora; W. by Austria, the Adriatic, and the Ionian Sea; and N. by Austria and Russia. Surface is an undulating region of hills and valleys, mountains and tablelands, of little elevation; but it is traversed in the centre from E. to W. by an extensive mountain chain. [BALKAN.] The other principal mountains are the Despotie Dagh or Rhodope in the S., Pindus in the S.W., the Dinaric Alps in the W., and the Carpathians in the N. Turkey is watered by numerous rivers, the chief of which are the Danube, and its affls. the Drina, Morava, Aluta, Sereth, and Pruth, in the basin of the Black Sea; the Maritza, Strymon, Vardar, in the basin of the Archipelago, in the S.; and the Voyussa, Drin, and Narenta, in the basin of the Adriatic, in the W. The largest lakes are those of Ochrida and Scutari in the W. The climate is more severe than might be supposed from the geographical position of the country; in the recesses of the highest mountains snow lies during the greater part of the year. It is excessively cold in winter during N.E. winds, which are then prevalent, and in the plains of Walachia & Moldavia the sledge is used as in Russia. A great portion of Albania, protected by elevated mountains from the N.E. winds, enjoys a delicious climate; but this region is liable to be visited by destructive earthquakes. In the rocky districts of the interior, and in the maritime valleys of Albania, the summer is insupportably hot. Destructive storms are frequent in the S. A great portion of Turkey is covered with forests; the best oak grows in Servia and Lower Bosnia; the largest forests of fir and pine occur in Bosnia and Upper Croatia. The olive thrives in the maritime plains of Albania, where also the orange and citron are cultivated. The vine grows in S. Turkey, Herzegovina, and Servia, at an elevation of from 1400 to 2000 feet. Maize is cultivated in the S.; rice, cotton, rye, and barley in Central Turkey, at an elevation of 2000 to 3000 feet. Agricultural operations are conducted in the rudest manner, and only a small portion of the country is cultivated. The principal wild animals are the brown bear in the wooded mountains between Albania and Macedonia, Bosnia and the Lower Rodope, but seldom in the Balkan; the wolf is common; the wild boar, chamois, and stag, in the forests; the hare is abundant in Walachia; these are mostly hunted for their skins. Domestic animals comprise the dog, cat, and swine; sheep form the principal riches of the Walachian provs., whence an immense quantity of wool is exported. Goats are abundant in Turkey. Cattle are extensively reared in Walachia, Servia, and Bosnia, and the buffalo is common in Walachia, Bulgaria, and Thrace. The horse of Turkey is small, but active; the ass and mule are chiefly employed in Thrace. The only railway in European Turkey is a line from Kustendjii to Tchernavada, 38 m.; another from Varna to Rutchuk was commenced in 1864. Trout, etc., are plentiful in the rivers; & leeches, which abound in the marshes, are important articles of export. Turkey has mines of iron, lead, salt, and marble, but none of them are worked to advantage. Manus are almost entirely domestic; the chief comprise saddles, copper and tin utensils, fire-arms, swords, coarse woollen cloths, linen and cotton spinning. Silks are manufactured chiefly at Salonica, Seres, and Larissa. Shawls are made only in the Asiatic provs., especially at Beyrout. Carpets wrought by hand in the style of the Gobelins tapestry are manufactured in Bulgaria and Servia. There are cotton-printing works in different localities; and dyeing, especially of bright red colours, in Bulgaria and the S. provs. Tanneries are numerous; embroidery is carried on by the females in the S. provs. Distilleries of brandy from prunes are common throughout all the country. Printing is carried on only at Bucharest, Belgrade, and Constantinople; filigree work is made in the large towns, and there are gunpowder-mills near Constantinople. Commerce is almost entirely in the hands of Greeks, Armenians, and Jews. Exports (1862), 68,000,000*l.*, of which

48,000,000*l.* was to foreign countries. The enormous increase of trade in late years shows the advance of Christian energy, and the declension of Mohammedanism. [ADRIANOPLE, BOSNIA, BULGARIA, CONSTANTINOPLE, SERVIA, WALACHIA.]

TURKEY IN ASIA is between lat. 30° and 42° N., lon. 26° to 48° E.; bounded E. by Persia, S. by the Persian Gulf and Arabia, W. by the Mediterranean, N. by the Sea of Marmora and the Black Sea, and N.E. by Russia, and comprises, in the Archipelago, the islands Mitylene, Scio, Samos, Nicaria, Patmos, Cos, Rhodes, Scarpanto, & Cyprus. The principal lakes are Van, Bei-Sher, Egerdir, Tuzla Gol, and the Dead Sea, and the chief rivers the Euphrates, Tigris, and their affluents, which flow S. to the Persian Gulf; the Kizil-Irmak, Yeshil-Irmak, which flow N. to the Black Sea; the Sarabat and Meander to the Archipelago; the Sihun, Jihoon, Aasay, to the Mediterranean; and the Jordan to the Dead Sea. The chief mountains are the ranges of Taurus, Anti-Taurus, and Lebanon. The soil and climate present many varieties; in the S. are vast arid plains, but on the river banks and in the valleys of Lebanon the soil is extremely fertile. The summits of Taurus are clad with snow, and their flanks are covered with the vegetation of cold and temperate countries; while the valleys have a temperature almost tropical, and produce the fruits of S. Asia. The climate of Anatolia is temperate, and the soil is capable of producing all kinds of grain and fruit. The mountains contain all the useful metals. The chief products are oil, dye-stuffs, medicinal plants, gums, wax, dried fruits, gall nuts, cotton, silk, wool, goats' hair, leeches, and sponges. The first railway in Asiatic Turkey, from Smyrna to Aidin Guzel-hissar, 62 m., was completed in 1864. Exports (1862), valonia, madder, opium, raisins, grains, figs, wool, sponge, goats' hair, olive oil, liquorice, gum, yellow berries, etc., value 1,800,127*l.* Imports, cottons, coffee, iron, woollens, coals, sugar, copper, tin, indigo, linens, apparel, etc., value 689,550*l.* The general features of the country are described under ASIA MINOR, and particulars under the heads ADANA, ARMENIA, BAGDAD, DAMASCUS, ERZEROU, KARAMANIA, KURDISTAN, MESOPOTAMIA, PALESTINE, SYRIA, and TRIBIZONDE. The Turks, originally from Turkestan, founded, at different times, several empires in Asia. At the end of the 13th century, Osman or Othman, one of their emirs or princes, established the present empire in Asia Minor. The Turks invaded Europe at the end of the 14th century, and conquered successively their present provinces; they took Constantinople in 1453. In the 16th century their dominion extended in Europe over the whole of Greece, part of Hungary, the Crimea, and the shores of the Black Sea; and the whole of the countries now forming Turkey in Asia, the Hedjas, Egypt, and the regencies of Tripoli, Tunis, and Algiers, were subjugated by them. But since the 17th century their power has greatly declined. Austria has expelled them from Hungary; Russia has deprived them of the provs. between the mouths of the Danube and the Caucasus in Europe, and those forming W. Transcaucasia in Asia; the Greeks have formed an independent state; Algiers has been wrested by the French; Moldavia, Walachia, and Servia are only nominally subject to the Porte, whose power has nearly vanished from many of the provs. of Asia Minor, Arabia, and Egypt. In 1862 the army of the Ottoman empire amounted to 216,893 men, including detached corps in Crete, Tripoli, and Tunis. Previous to the late war with Russia, the navy comprised 6 ships of the line, 10 frigates, 6 corvettes, 14 brigs, 16 cutters and schooners, 6 steam frigates, and 12 other small vessels. Total 70 vessels, manned by 34,000 sailors and 4000 marines. Many of these ships have since been destroyed at Sinope, and others foundered in storms in the Black Sea. In 1862, there were built 23 screw steamers with 820 guns. Estimated revenue (for 1863-4) 13,684,271*l.* Expenditure 13,495,477*l.* The Turks, who call themselves Osmanlis, from Osman, number about one-third of the pop. in European and Asiatic Turkey; the remainder are Tartars, Moravians, Walachians, Servians, Bulgarians, Morlaks, Montenegrins, Albanians, Jews, Bohemians or Gipsies, Armenians, Georgians, Franks or Christians, Turcomans, Kurds, Arabians, and independent nomade tribes in Asia. Mohammedanism is dominant in the empire, and the Mohammedans are still bigoted, but persecution on religious grounds has been recently abolished; a great portion of the pop. are Christians, who, indeed, far outnumber the Mohammedans in European Turkey. There is a minister of public instruction; all sects conduct their schools in their own way. Government has published a number of improved school-books, a geography, arithmetic, etc., and these are gradually coming into use, but the amount of instruction conveyed is very small; the lower classes do not send their children to school—the public writer suffices for them. The number of Mussulman common schools in the Constantinople district in 1864 was 280, with 16,757 pupils, which, added to those in the Rushdiyyeh (corresponding to our grammar schools), would make 20,000, or 1 in 15 of the population. Of these Rushdiyyeh schools, there is one in every chief town in the empire, 34 in Rumelia, and 14 in Anatolia,—48 in all, with 3125 scholars, —and 12 in the capital, with 4396 scholars. In these latter, French and drawing are taught. The emperor, who is styled sultan or grand signor, is regarded as sovereign of the state, and Supreme Pontiff. His power is absolute in so far as in accordance with the Koran. The provs. are placed under pashas, whose authority is exercised with great caprice, and is frequently most oppressive. Several towns and small communities form a species of republics in the middle of this despotic state. Moldavia and Walachia were invaded by a Russian army in 1853, and in September the Porte declared war against Russia. The preceding tables give the provinces, with the pop., according to the latest census in 1844.

TUSA, a town of the island Sicily, near its N. coast, prov. Messina, 6 m. W.N.W. Mistretta. P. 4057. Close to it are the ruins of Alassa.

TUSAPAN, a ruined city of Mexico, state Vera Cruz, 40 m. W. Papantla.

TUSCALOOSA, a town of the U. S., Alabama, on the Black Warrior river, at the head of steamboat navigation, 125 m., by plank road from Montgomery. P. 4000. Once the cap. of Alabama, and is the seat of its university, esta. 1831, and of a lunatic asylum.—The co. Tuscaloosa has an area of 1507 sq. m. P. (1860) 18,055 free, 10,145 slaves.

TUSCANY (GRAND DUCHY OF) (Italian Toscana, ancient Etruria), a former grand ducal state of N.W. Central Italy, annexed to the kingdom of Sardinia in 1860, and now merged in the kingdom of Italy, W. of the Apennines, lat.  $42^{\circ}$   $22'$  to  $44^{\circ}$   $30'$  N., lon.  $9^{\circ}$   $45'$  to  $12^{\circ}$   $22'$  E., bounded N.E. and S. by the Pontifical States, and W. by Sardinia and the Mediterranean Sea. It had beyond Tuscan Proper three separate districts.—I. Barga, in the valley of the Upper Serchio, nearly surrounded by Lucca, and constituting the grand duchy of Garfagnana.—II.

Versilia, a dist. of Pietrasanta, between the Mediterranean and Lucca.—III. the grand duchy of Lunegiana, composed of fragmentary portions of territory in the dominions of Savoy, Parma, and Modena; the island of Elba and the small island Giglio in the Mediterranean. Cap. Florence.

The chain of the Apennines covers the N. and N.E. portion of the state; the highest point, Monte Falterona, in which the Arno has its origin, is 5557 feet above the sea; the rest of the territory is agreeably diversified by hills and valleys. The principal rivers are the Arno, Chiana, Ombrone, and Serchio, the former receiving nearly all the streams from the S. slope of the Apennines, and flowing to the Mediterranean. The Tiber rises in the E. of Tuscany. The canal of Chiana unites the river Chiana with the Arno. Tuscany has no lakes of any extent, but numerous pools and extensive marshes. The climate is mild and salubrious, except in the Maremma, a marshy dist., extending along the S. coast, and covering nearly 1-6th part of its superficies, the malaria from which produces pestilential fevers, on which account it is nearly deserted. Tuscany is celebrated for its mineral riches, and the number of its mineral and thermal springs. Iron is most abundant in the island of Elba; copper, argentiferous lead, sulphur, mercury, alum, coal, statuary marble, and alabaster, in different parts; and borax is supplied in abundance from the singular borax lagoons of Volterra. The copper mines of Tuscany have of late years proved very productive, especially those of La Cava, belonging to two English gentlemen. The mines of Elba produce 60,000 tons of iron-ore annually. From its fertility, the valley of the Arno is called the garden of Italy; but agriculture is so imperfectly conducted, that the corn grown is insufficient for home consumpt, and chestnuts form the chief food of the mountaineers. The chief crops are maize, wheat, rye, and barley. The culture of oil is prosecuted with great care, and that called Florence oil is celebrated. Wine is generally of inferior quality, though the process of making it is better understood in Tuscany than in any other part of Italy. The Aleatico vine, grown to perfection near Montepulciano, is the best. Mules and sheep are of superior breeds, and herds of cattle are pastured in the drained portions of the Maremma. The principal manufs. are silks, in which Tuscany maintains its celebrity. Florence is the principal seat of the silk manufs. There are silk-works also at Sienna, Pistoja, and Prato; woollen manufs., which at one time employed 30,000 persons in Florence alone, but which are now confined to coarse cloths and carpets. Turkish woollen caps are made chiefly at Prato for the Levant market; the value exported is estimated at nearly 75,000*l.* sterling. Paper of excellent quality is extensively manufactured. The making of straw hats has greatly declined, although still important, especially in the vicinity of the capital, where great numbers of the peasantry are employed in preparing the straw. They have long formed an extensive article of export, especially to England and the United States; the value of hats and plating exported has averaged from 216,000*l.* to 250,000*l.* per annum. Florence, Prato, Pistoja, Pisa, and Leghorn are the principal centres of this manuf. The other branches of industry comprise the manuf. of glass and crystal, articles in marble, alabaster, iron, brass, porcelain, coral, wax, and typography, linen and cotton, tanning, and cutlery. The export of manufactured goods forms a chief branch of the trade of Leghorn, whence 40 or 50 barges, with 10 or 12 men each, are annually sent to the coral fishery. It was in Tuscany that the art of painting was revived in the middle ages—artists then studied not in the academy, but in the workshop; the goldsmiths' craft was the chief school. The fine arts in Tuscany have greatly declined since the time of Michael Angelo; there is now no approach to the talent of former times. Pisa, Siena, and Florence are the seats of universities. By decree of 22d March 1860, Tuscany was united to the kingdom of Sardinia, and now forms part of the kingdom of Italy. [ELBA, ETRURIA, ITALY.]

TUSCARAWAS, a co. of the U. S., Ohio, in its E. part, watered by the Tuscarawas, an affl. of the Muskingum; cap. New Philadelphia. Area 704 sq. m. P. (1860) 32,463.—II. a tnspp., Ohio, co. Stark.

TUSCOLA, a co. of the U. S., Michigan. P. 4886.

TUSCUMBIA, a tn. of the U. S., Alabama, 60 m. W. Huntsville. A rail. connects it with Decatur.

TUSKAR ROCKS, four rocks off the S.E. coast of Ireland, Wexford, in lat. 52° 11' N., lon. 6° 12' W., 5 m. S.E. Greenore Point. It has a lighthouse 101 feet high, having a revolving light, and during foggy weather a bell is tolled every half minute. Around these rocks the average depth of water ranges from 6 to 30 fathoms.

TUSMORE, a pa. of England, co. Oxford, 5½ m. N.N.W. Bicester. P. 45.

TUSPAN, a maritime town of Mexico, state and 145 m. N.W. Vera Cruz, on a river 5 m. from the Gulf of Mexico. P. 1000. It has some trade with Tampico and Campeachy.

TUSTEREN, an island off the W. coast of Norway, stiff Trondhjem, immediately E. Christian-sand. Length 12 miles, breadth 6 miles.

TUTBURY, a pa. and vill., formerly a market town, of England, co. Stafford, on the Dove, 4½ m. N.N.W. Burton-on-Trent. Ac. 4001. P. 1982. Wool-stapling was formerly the chief trade of the town; it now has a cotton factory & glass-works. In the castle, now in ruins, once a seat of the Mercian kings, and afterwards of the Earls and Dukes of Lancaster, Mary Queen of Scots was imprisoned in 1569-70, and from 1584 to 1586.

TUTICORIN, a maritime town of British India, presid. Madras, dist. Tinnevely, 65 m. N.E. Cape Comorin. It exports to England and China about 7000 bales of cotton annually.

TUTNEL with COBLEY, a hamlet of England, co. Warwick, pa. Tardebigg, 2 m. E.S.E. Broms-grove. Ac. 3450. P. 508.

TUTSCHKOW, a town of South Russia, prov. Bessarabia, on the Danube, 3 m. E. Ismail.

TUTTINGTON, a pa. of England, co. Norfolk, 2½ m. E. Aylesham. Ac. 830. P. 202.

TUTTLINGEN, a town of Württemberg, circ. Black Forest, on the Danube, 20 m. W.S.W. Sigmaringen. P. 5160. It has manufs. of woollezen, linen, and silken fabrics, and paper.

TUTUILA or PAGO-PAGO, an isl. of the Pacific Ocean, lat. 14° 19' N., lon. 170° 37' W.; length 17 m., breadth 5 m. Estimated pop. 8000. Surface mountainous. Matafoa is a peak 2327 feet above the sea. The harbour Pagopago nearly divides it into two peninsulas. Its shores are populous.

TUXFORD, a pa. and market town of England, co. and 22 m. N.N.E. Nottingham. Ac. 3000. P. 1034. It has a free grammar school, and trade in hops, raised in the neighbourhood.

TUX, Tudæ ad Fines, a walled frontier town of Spain, prov. and 27 m. S.S.E. Pontevedra, on the Minho, opposite the Portuguese town Valença. P. 2781. It has a cathedral, and manufs. of table-linens, hats, leather, and liqueurs.

TUY, a river of South America, Venezuela, flows E.ward, and enters the Caribbean Sea 60 m. E. Caracas. Total course 90 miles.

TUZLA GOL, Palus Tartarus, a large salt lake of Asia Minor, pash. Karaman, its centre being in lat. 38° 40' N., lon. 33° 30' E. Length 45 m.; breadth varies to 16 m. Elevation above the sea 2500 ft. It receives some small rivers, but during a part of the year its bed is wholly dry. Its E. banks are inhabited by settled Turkomans, its W. by predatory Kurds.

TVER, a gov. of Russia, between lat. 56° and 50° N., lon. 32° and 38° 20' E., having E. Jaroslavl, S. Smolensk, Moscow, and Vladimir, W. Pskov, and N. the gov. Novgorod. Area 24,730 sq. m. P. (1858) 1,491,427. Surface more elevated than in most parts of Russia, and here the Volga and its affls. the Tvertza, Mologa, and Medveditza, rise. The N. of the gov. is hilly; elsewhere the surface is chiefly level, abounding in small lakes. Climate severe; soil generally poor; but sufficient corn is raised for consumption. Large quantities of hemp, flax, and beans are raised. Forests extensive, particularly in the N. Cattle for consumption are mostly imported. Manufactures comprise bricks, glasswares, woollen cloths, leather, dyeing materials, and spirits. Commerce active. The gov. is subdivided into 12 circles or districts. Principal towns, Tver, the cap., Rshov, Torshok, Ostashkov, and Vishnii-Volotchok.

TVER, a city of Russia, cap. gov., on the Volga, here crossed by a wooden bridge 550 feet in length, and joined by the Tvertza, 90 m. N.W. Moscow. P. (1858) 25,260. Since its almost total destruction by fire in 1763, it has been rebuilt with much regularity. It comprises the town proper, several suburbs, and a citadel; an imperial palace, a cathedral, numerous other churches, and a seminary. It has also numerous government offices, barracks, a theatre, a college, and various schools. Its trade is considerable, and facilitated by canals, which establish a water communication between the Baltic and Caspian Seas. Tver being on the high road between Moscow and St Petersburg, is an entrepôt for corn from the S. destined for the capital, and for goods conveyed overland to and from Riga. It was founded in 1182, and was cap. of a principality from 1240 to 1490.

TVERTZA, a river of Russia, gov. Tver, after a S.E. course of 110 m., joins the Volga on the left at Tver. A canal joins the Tvertza to the Msta, affl. of Lake Ilmen, and thus forms a communication between the Caspian Sea and the Baltic.

TWEED, a river of Scotland and England, which drains almost all the E. portion of the Scottish lowlands. It rises at Tweedshaws, S. extremity of Peebleshire, 1500 feet above the sea, flows N.E. and E. through the cos. Peebles, Selkirk, and Roxburgh; and then between Berwickshire on the N., and the English co. Northumberland on the S.; and finally enters the North Sea at Berwick, after a course of 96 m., in which it traverses a basin estimated at 1870 sq. m., or larger than that of any other Scottish river, except the Tay. Principal affluents, the Yarrow, Etrick, Teviot, and Till from the S.; Biggar, Eddleston, Gala, Leader, and Adder from the N. Before reaching Peebles, it has completed 1000 feet of descent, and in the remaining part of its course it has generally a very gentle current. It is tidal to Norham Castle, 10 m. from the sea, but navigable only in its last 6 m. for boats of 30 tons burden, and the traffic on its waters is mostly confined to Berwick. The Tweed and Clyde take their origin in the same mountain range. The Biggar, an affluent of the Tweed, is separated from the Clyde by a level boggy tract only 6 m. across; they could be easily connected by a canal. The salmon fisheries of the Tweed were formerly of more value than at present.

TWEED, a river of New South Wales, co. Rous, enters the Pacific Ocean near lat. 28° 10' S.

TWEEDDALE, popular name of PEEBLESHIRE. TWEEDMOUTH, a pa. and vill. of England, co. Northumberland, on rt. b. of the Tweed, opposite Berwick, of which it forms a suburb, connected with it by a stone bridge, & on the Newcastle and Berwick Rail. Ac. 2328. P. 2884. It has a Gothic church, an iron foundry, and a salmon fishery.

TWEEDSMUIR, a pa., Scotland, co. Peebles, at its S. W. extremity. Ac. 32,612. P. 196. Here are uplands on which many Cheviot sheep are pastured.

TWELLO, a vill. of the Netherlands, prov. Gelderland, 3 m. W. Deventer. P. 1000.

TWENTY-FOUR PERGUNNAHS, a dist. of British India, presid. Bengal, between lat. 21° 55' and 22° 48' N., lon. 88° 6' and 88° 43' E. Area 2277 sq. m. P. 701,182. Surface little elevated above the sea, and traversed by numerous streams and water-courses. The Hooghly river divides it on the N. W. from the Hooghly district. In the E. a large portion is jungle, harbouring tigers, tiger-cats, hyænas, wild hogs, and deer. It has a trade in cotton cloths, coarse silks, hemp, coir or rope made of cocoa-nut fibre, teak, sugar, honey, wax, oil of mustard-seed, indigo, rice, hides, and salt fish. There are three seasons in this district: the hot, commencing early in March, and continuing till the beginning of June, when the thermometer often reaches 112° Fahr. in the shade, and 140° exposed to the direct rays of the sun. The rainy season begins in June, and continues until the middle of October; annual fall of rain 80 inches. Jan. and Feb. are the cool and healthy months. In 1757, the district of the Twenty-Four Pergunnahs was granted by the Nabob Jaffer Ally Khan to the E. India Co., which was their first possession of any extent in India.

TWICKENHAM, a pa. and vill. of England, co. Middlesex, on the W. b. of the Thames, immediately opposite Richmond, with which it is connected by a stone bridge, and on the rail. between London and Staines, 11½ m. W. S. W. London. Ac. of pa. 2249. P. 8077. Twickenham Ait, or Eel-pie House, on an island in the Thames, is a favourite resort of holiday visitors from London.

TWIGGS, a co. of the U. S., in centre of Georgia. Area 393 sq. m. P. 3002 free, 5318 slaves.

TWING, a pa. of England, co. Glo'ster, 2 m. N. Tewkesbury. Ac. 3155. P. 992.

TWINESTEAD, a pa. of England, co. Essex, 5 m. N. E. Halstead. Ac. 1008. P. 193.

TWISLE, a township of England, co. Northumberland, pa. Norham, 10 m. S. W. Berwick-upon-Tweed. Ac. 2190. P. 305. The vanguard of the English army crossed the River Till at this place on their march to Flodden-field.

TWISS, a co. of West Australia, having N. the cos. Melbourne and Glenelg, E. Victoria, S. Perth, and W. the Indian Ocean. It is intersected by the Moore, the Northcote, and affis. of the Swan river, and it contains some good soil, forest land, and several fresh and salt lakes.

TWITCHEN, a pa. of England, co. Devon, 5½ m. N. E. South Molton. Ac. 2918. P. 227.

TWIVERTON or TWERTON, a pa., England, co.

Somerset, on the Avon, here crossed by a bridge, and on G. W. Railway, 2 m. W. Bath. Ac. 971. P. 3012, partly employed in woollen manuf.

TWOPOLD BAY, an inlet on the coast of New S. Wales, co. Anckland, 80 m. N. Cape Howe. Lat. of Point Brierly, near the head of the bay, 37° 6' 2" S.; lon. 149° 58' 2" E. It receives the Towamba river, affords good anchorage, is surrounded by much fertile land, and is conveniently situated for commerce, about midway between Sydney and Melbourne, Launceston and Hobart Town. On N. side is the vill. Eden (P. 482), and on S. shore the thriving port Boyd-town, which has a good jetty, a lighthouse, Gothic church, and an active export trade, and is resorted to by numerous whaling vessels, steamers, and emigrant ships. It communicates with Maneroo plains by a good road, 45 miles in length.

TWO SICILIES (KINGDOM). [NAPLES—SICILY.] TWXCROSS, a pa., England, co. Leicester, 4½ m. W. N. W. Market-Bosworth. Ac. 1350. P. 336.

—V. a chapelry, cos. Berks and Wilts, with a station on the G. W. Rail., 5 m. E. N. E. Reading.

TWYNELLS (St), a pa. of South Wales, co. and 4 m. S. W. Pembroke. Ac. 1358. P. 220.

TWYWELL, a pa. of England, co. Northampton, 3 m. W. Thrapston. Ac. 1400. P. 386.

TYBER, an island of the U. S., North America, Georgia, enclosed by the Savannah, at its mouths in the Atlantic Ocean. On it is a lighthouse 100 feet in elevation, lat. 32° N., lon. 80° 42' W.

TYCOCKTOW ISLAND, in the Canton river, China, 8 m. long, 6 m. broad; bounds the "inner" and "outer waters" at the entrance of the Boca Tigris. Taken by the British in 1841.

TYDD, two pas. of England.—I. (St Giles), co. Cambridge, 5 m. N. N. W. Wisbeach. Ac. 4991. P. 924.—II. (St Mary), co. Lincoln, 7 m. S. E. Holbeach. P. 977.

TYKOCZYN, a frontier town of Russian Poland, prov. Augustow, on the Narew, 17 m. W. N. W. Bialystok. P. 1800. It has a trade in corn.

TYLER, two cos. of the U. S., N. America.—I. N. W. of Virginia. Area 373 sq. m. P. 6499 free, 18 slaves.—II. Texas. P. 3377 free, 1148 slaves.

TYLDESLEY-CUM-SHAKERLY, a township of England, co. Lancashire, pa. Leigh, 7 m. E. N. E. Newton-in-Makerfield. Ac. 2474. P. 6029.

TYMOCHTEE, a township of the U. S., N. America, Ohio, on Tymochtee Creek, an affl. of the Sandusky, 71 m. N. Columbus.

TYNAGH, a pa. of Ireland, Connaught, co. Galway, 7½ m. N. W. Portunna. Ac. 12,453. P. 2265, of whom 179 are in the village.

TYNAN, a pa. of Ireland, Ulster, co. and 6½ m. W. S. W. Armagh, on the road to Monaghan. Ac. 17,045. P. 6532.

TYNDRUM, a vill. of Scotland, co. Perth, pa. Killin, near source of river Tay. Alt. of bridge 740 ft.

TYNE, a river of England, co. Northumberland, the W. and S. parts of which it drains, is formed by the junction of S. and N. Tyne at Hexham, whence flows E. to the North Sea. The South Tyne springs from the slopes of Cross Fell. The stream is rich with border associations, & castles and peel-houses (ancient fortified cattle retreats) crowd the landscape. Alston, the centre of English lead-mining, is near the source. Several interesting villages are on the line of the water course. Willimonstwick castle is the birthplace of Ridley. Near Bardon Mill, Borocovicus, a splendid Roman station, and much of the Roman wall. At Hexham are Roman, Saxon, & monastic remains. The tributaries should be explored for the picturesque and rich historical associations. The rise in the series of rocks of the carboniferous formation, above the great Whin Sill, which are denominated (by Phillips) "Yoredale" rocks. Flows northerly through the whole series of these till they are thrown down to the N. by the great 90 fathom dyke; then it runs E. along the depression caused by this dyke, through the Yoredale series, to the junction with the North Tyne.—The North Tyne is darker, swifter, bolder. It rises on the border line a little beyond Keilder castle, and at once receives many tributaries. It rises in the Scar-limestone series of the carboniferous formation, cuts through the coal-beds of the Plashetts district, crosses the great Whin Sill below Wark, and then traverses a portion of Yoredale rocks to the junction. Picturesque villages, shooting-boxes, halls, seats, and castles crowd the valley; one of the most attractive spots in N. of England. Near to Keilder the red deer last roamed wild in England. The tributary Reed rises from the flanks of Carter Fell, passes two important Roman stations, the battle-field of Otterburn, and is twice crossed by the Roman road, the Watling Street. Wark is the centre of one of the greatest baronies in the kingdom. Chollerford is a good centre for exploration. Great beauty here; the river also crosses the line of the Roman wall, and here is a bridge hoary with 17 centuries. On Warden hill is an ancient British fortification. After the junction the river passes through the Millstone Grit series, till, at Stocksfield, it cuts through the lower parts of the coal measures, over which it flows for 20 m. to Tynemouth, near the junction of the coal measures and the Permian rocks. The places of interest from Hexham to Newcastle are: Dilston Hall and the Devil's water; Beaufort, Sandhoe, & Aydon Castle near Corbridge; Prudhoe Castle, and opposite Ovingham, a place of rare beauty; Wylam, the birthplace of Geo. Stephenson; Ryton and Blaydon, where the navigation begins. Hence furnaces, foundries, and factories line both sides of the river to Tynemouth. At Scotswood are a railway and suspension bridges. These are close to Newcastle. Besides Newcastle and Gateshead, there are on the Tyne the two important towns of North and South Shields, one at each side of the mouth of the river. The so-called Port of Newcastle extends from Sparhawke (a rock in the sea) 17 miles to Heddon; over this distance the tide flows. The shipping registered in the ports of the Tyne exceeds in tonnage the shipping of the whole of Ireland, and that of any other port in Great Britain except London and Liverpool. The shipping is, however, registered under the heads of Newcastle, Shields, & South Shields; its custom-house returns are also divided; and so the Port of Tyne does not take the place it should. For custom-house purposes the lower part of the river has been made a separate port, styled the Port of Shields. In 1850 the corporation of Newcastle obtained an act of Parliament to transfer to Commissioners the conservation and management of the river and port. "The Tyne Improvement Commissioners" consist of 4 for life, and 14 elected annually—6 by the town council of Newcastle, 2 do. Gateshead, 3 do. North Shields, 3 do. South Shields. The 4 for life are ultimately to be 2, nominated by the Admiralty.

For the improvements at and below Newcastle, see NEWCASTLE. Length of the Tyne: to Hexham 35 m., to head of N. Tyne 80 m. Drains 1100 sq. m. The rail runs parallel to Tyne and S. Tyne, from the mouth to Haltwhistle. Salmon fishery has decreased of late years. The Derwent is a tributary of some magnitude, and joins the Tyne just below Blaydon. [SHIELDS, SOUTH.]

TYNE, a small river of Scotland, rises in pa. of Borthwick, flows mostly N.E. through Haddingtonshire, and enters the North Sea at Tynningham, 2½ m. N.W. Dunbar, after a course of 28 m.

TYNEHAM (WEST), a pa., England, co. Dorset, 6 m. W.S.W. Corfe Castle. Ac. 2915. P. 272.

TYNEMOUTH is itself a small village and pa. on the left bank of the Tyne, at its mouth in the North Sea, co. Northumberland, England. Is connected by rail with Newcastle, distance 8 m. Although small, lends its name to a parl. and munic. bor., which comprises Tynemouth, the large town of North Shields, and the three villages of Chirton, Preston, and Cullercoats. Ac. of pa. 6570. Pop. of parl. bor. (1861) 33,991; of township of Tynemouth, 14,650; of North Shields, 8882. But lest these numbers should mislead, note that much of the township of Tynemouth is a part of what would be popularly considered North Shields. The latter is the town; Tynemouth is but a good-sized village, and is a watering-place much frequented by Newcastle people. Much of Tynemouth is ill-built and unattractive. The new houses are, however, a great improvement. The long sands, about a mile of good bathing ground, is the great place of resort. At the end of them is the smuggler's cave, and the picturesque village of Cullercoats. The main attractions of Tynemouth are the Master Mariners' Asylum, with statue in front of the late Duke of Northumberland; promenade and assembly rooms at the Bath Hotel; drinking fountain with clock and meteorologic apparatus; castle and fortifications; magnificent ruins of a priory and lady chapel; light-house (lat. 55° 1' 3" N., lon. 1° 25' W.); Prior's haven; the Spanish battery; the new piers at the mouth of the Tyne (see Newcastle); and the Collingwood monument. North Shields has risen chiefly within this century, and is a well-built sea-port. It has extensive water-works, two churches, numerous chapels, literary and philosophical institute, mechanics' do., theatre, town-hall, several public halls for lectures, etc., two cemeteries, people's park, public baths and wash-houses, a sailors' home, market place, custom house, and two light-houses. The town is extending rapidly into Chirton township on the W. Its harbour, bordered by quays, is capable of containing 2000 vessels of 500 tons burden. Belongs to the port of Newcastle and North Shields. There are ship and boat building-yards, and establishments for the manufacture of anchors, chain cables, windlasses, blocks and masts, and other shipping gear; iron foundries, salt pans, tanneries, earthenware works, and breweries. Hats, gloves, and tobacco are manufactured also. North Shields has a large share of the coal trade. Tynemouth (with included townships) sends one member to House of Commons. Reg. elect. (1864) 1135.

TYNROD, a pa. of Scotland, co. Dumfriesshire, 3 m. W.S.W. Penpont. Ac. 15,752. P. 446.

TYPINSAN, the most E. and largest of the Madjicosima Islands, in the China Sea. Lat. 24° 43' N.; lon. 125° 29' E. Length 20 m.; greatest breadth 10 m. at its W. end. There is a dangerous reef on N. side, on which the "Providence" was lost in 1797.

TYRE or SUR, a city of antiquity. [SOUR.]

* Slavery abolished in Maryland in 1864.

The United States Territories, in their northern boundary, commence on the S. side of that elevated water-shed which extends in a waving line from lat. 50 to 55° N. on the western side of the continent, to lat. 45° on the eastern side, and which divides the rivers that flow N. to the Arctic Ocean from those that flow S. into the Atlantic and Pacific. The chain of the Rocky Mountains runs N.N.W. and S.S.E., and occupies, with its many ranges and enclosed table-lands, the whole western territories, and has a breadth of from 570 to 1040 m., rising in Mount Shasta to 14,440 feet, which is the highest ground in the U. S. (For a detailed account of these mountains, see the article ROCKY MOUNTAINS.) In the eastern states, the Appalachian Mountains or Alleghanies, of a much inferior elevation and extent to the Rocky Mountains, traverse the country in a N.E. and S.W. direction, at a distance from the Atlantic of from 80 m., at their N. end in Maine, to about 300 m. at their termination in the N.E. corner of Alabama. The mean elevation of this system is only 2500 ft., but rising in some of the higher peaks to 6000 ft. These two mountain systems divide the territory of the U. S. into 3 distinct sections. The first, the Atlantic slope, extends between that ocean and the Alleghanies, and has an area of 767,000 sq. m. The rivers in this section have generally a S. or S.E. direction, with lengths varying from 100 to 600 m., and are tidal for a long distance, and navigable for steamers as far as the hilly country. The second section, the Pacific slope, comprises all the land west of the great water-shed of the Rocky Mountains proper, whose rivers flow to the Pacific, or are confined to the Great Utah Basin. The area of this region is 988,000 sq. m. The third and greatest section, the Great Central Plain, is that contained between the Rocky Mountains and the Appalachian system. It is almost entirely occupied with the basin of the Mississippi and its tributaries, but is also drained by smaller rivers which run to the Gulf of Mexico, by the Red River of the north, and by the feeders of the great lake basin of the St. Lawrence. These northern rivers are separated from the streams which run southwards by a high table-land, which traverses Minnesota and Wisconsin, and rises to 1916 feet above the sea. Area of this section 1,240,000 sq. m. The coast line of the U. S. is extremely irregular on the Atlantic, and contains numerous fine bays and harbours. It is more regular on the Pacific. The Chesapeake, Delaware, Massachusetts, Penobscot, San Francisco, and Monterey are the principal bays. Principal harbours are—Portsmouth, Portland, Boston, New York, Baltimore, Charleston, and New Orleans. In 1853 the main shore line (excluding bays, sounds, islands, etc.) was ascertained to be 12,609 statute miles in extent. If the bays, sounds, islands, etc., be included, and the rivers entered to the head of tide water, the shore line will measure 33,069 miles.

So vast a region as the United States necessarily embraces a great variety of climate. In the N.E. states the temperature is variable, being occasionally as warm as S. Europe in summer, while the winters are sometimes as severe as those of Sweden and Russia. In the S. states the climate has, in summer, almost a tropical character. It is milder on the Pacific coasts, and there, (in the N.) is more moist than on the Atlantic. In the central states the temperature in winter frequently varies from an Italian-like mildness to the rigour of that of Russia. The mean annual rainfall at New York is 36 in.; at Charleston, S. Carolina, 47 in.; and at Marietta, Ohio, 34 in. N. of lat. 45° the birch, pines, American elm, willow, maple, and the plants of N. Europe, are chief forest products; between lat. 44° and 35° N., especially in the uplands, the oak, beech, sycamore, acacia, poplar, walnut, sassafras, and cedar are predominant trees; and in the lowlands of this region the cypress and other products of S. Europe. S. of lat. 35° the magnolia, the vine, orange, sugar-cane, cotton, maize flourish, and the vegetation has a tropical character. Wheat and maize are grown in every part of the Union, the largest quantity of the first being produced in the states of Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Illinois, Indiana and Michigan. Oats, rye, buckwheat, and rice are the other principal grains; rice is grown in the greatest quantity in South Carolina. In the N. the sugar-maple supplies the place of the sugar-cane. The culture of cotton is confined to the S.E. The amount produced in 1860 was 2,160,000,000 lbs., of which 1,767,686,338 lbs. were exported, and valued at 191,806,555 dollars. In 1862 only 5,064,564 lbs. were exported. Tobacco is grown more or less in every state and territory, but chiefly in Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Maryland, Missouri, Ohio, and North Carolina. In 1859, 429,390,771 lbs. were grown, and it was exported in 1860 to the value of 15,906,547 dollars. Wax, silk, hemp, flax, olives, madder, and indigo are the chief remaining crops. In the N. states farms and properties are mostly small, and cultivated by the proprietors; in the S. and W. are many large properties. Price of land extremely variable; near Philadelphia, the best cleared land fetches from 100 to 120 dollars per acre; in parts of New York, 25 dollars is an average price; the prairie lands in the W. states (Michigan, Illinois, etc.) are sold by the government at an upset price of 1½ dollar per acre. The domestic animals of America have all been introduced from Europe. It has been estimated that there are in the Union 25,000,000 sheep, 1-8th being in the state of New York, which has also the largest proportion of cattle, and most other live stock; swine are, however, most plentiful in the middle states, and Cincinnati (Ohio) is the greatest mart for pork. Vast herds of bisons wander over the wide plains of the W.; the American elk, antelope, cougar, Virginian deer, bears, foxes, racoons, opossums, and many large birds of prey, and serpents, are amongst the wild animals. Gold is found in great abundance in California, Arizona, and Nevada, and has also been discovered in most of the other territories, which also yield iron, lead, copper, and silver. Mercury is found in California, Kentucky, Ohio, and on the borders of the great lakes, and copper, especially in the vicinity of Lake Superior. Coal is now extensively mined in many parts W. the Alleghany Mountains, particularly in Pennsylvania, which has accordingly become the great seat of the manufacture of iron. Coal mined in the U. S., 1860, bore a value of 19,715,394 dollars, and amounted to 15,550,988 tons. Illinois and Wisconsin possess very rich lead mines; the lead raised in Wisconsin in 1861 was valued at 264,757 dollars. The salt springs in New York yielded, 1860, 7,521,335 bushels of salt, value 1,289,511 dollars. Mining employs a great many persons. The cod and whale fisheries are extensively pursued; and, in 1860, whales were caught to the value of 7,521,588 dols., cod-fish 4,183,503 dols., other fish 1,219,001 dols.; total, 12,924,092 dols. The United States are to a great extent supplied with British and other European manufactures; but of late years extensive home manufactures have been in operation, especially of cotton, woollen, leather, metallic wares, and other goods, chiefly in the Eastern States. Exp. (1860) grains, bacon, cotton, tobacco, butter, lard, cheese, guano, oils, tallow, hams, timber, beef, pork, oilcake, hops, petroleum, skins and furs, seed, hides, iron and steel, ashes, rice, log-wood, rosin, etc., to the value of 400,122,296 dols. Imp., woollens, cottons, linens, iron, arms, wool, tin, apparel, indigo, soda, hardware, earthenwares, silks, lead, coals, tea, rice, drugs, gums, saltpetre, bags, opium, salt, caoutchouc, etc., to the value of 362,163,941 dols. In 1863 produce of all kinds to the value of 331,809,459 dollars were exported. Total imports for 1863, 252,187,587 dollars. Of late years a considerable quantity of grain and agricultural produce has been exported to Europe. In 1863, bread stuffs (so-called) to the value of 139,100,380 dollars' worth. The internal communication is facilitated by numerous canals and railways. In 1861 there were 4185 miles of canals in operation; and on 1st Jan. 1864, 33,860 miles of railway. Telegraphic communication, and postage at a cheap rate, extend throughout all the more densely peopled states.

In its political organization, the United States is a representative republic, embracing thirty-five states and nine territories, united in federal union. The affairs of this federal union are regulated and administered by a federal executive, a national Congress or legislature, composed of a senate and house of representatives, deputed from all the states and territories, and a judiciary or supreme court, composed of ten judges. The chief of the executive department is the President, who is elected by a national vote every 4 years, but is eligible for re-election. He appoints his secretaries or ministers for conducting the details of the several departments; namely, the secretaries of state, of the treasury, of war, of the navy, of the interior, the post-master, and the attorney general. His prerogatives and duties are defined by the federal constitution. The senate, or upper house of the national legislature or parliament, is composed of two senators from each state, chosen by the legislature of such state for a term of six years. The house of representatives, the popular branch of the Congress, consists of members chosen every second year by the people of the several states, the number of representatives at this time (1864) being 241, and the ratio, as determined by the census of 1860, being 1 for every 124,183 of the population. Besides the senators and representatives, there are other members of Congress termed delegates, at present 9 in number, one representing each of the nine organized territories. They can originate subjects for legislation, and are privileged to address the house, but they possess no vote. The vice-president of the United States is president of the senate, but votes only when that body is equally divided. Congress holds its sittings in Washington, the cap. of the republic. No person holding any office under the United States is eligible for membership of either house of Congress during his continuance in office. The federal judicial power is vested in the chief justice and 10 associate judges of the supreme court, which holds one session annually, and its place of meeting is the Capitol, in the city of Washington. Of the ten United States circuit courts, each convenes twice a year in its appropriate district within each state of its circuit, and is presided over by a justice of the supreme court assigned to it, aided by the district judge of the state or district in which the court sits.

Besides the national political organization, each state has its own special constitution, laws, legislature, judiciary, and administration or executive, framed, or intended to be framed, in accordance with the federal or national constitution.

The system of law throughout the states is the common law of England, modified by local acts of the states and of the federal government. (For the political structure and much else respecting the individual states the reader is recommended to refer to them under their respective titles.)

Educational establishments are very numerous, both of the higher and more elementary kinds, and the national allowance for education for 1861 amounted to about 23,000,000 dollars. The revenue of the United States is derived chiefly from customs and imposts, sale of public lands, and recently from direct taxation. Aggregate estimate of revenue for year ending July 1, 1864, was 755,568,500 dollars, and the expenditure 749,731,961 dollars. In year ending 30th June 1863, the coinage of the United States amounted to 22,645,730 dollars in gold, 1,564,297 dollars in silver, and 478,450 dollars in copper; total, 24,688,477 dollars.

The navy, at date of latest report in 1863, consisted of 588 vessels, of which 46 were iron-clad steamers for coast service, 29 do. for inland; 203 side-wheel steamers; 198 screw steamers; and 112 sailing vessels: in all carrying 4443 guns.

By the eighth census it appears that, of the free inhabitants in 1860, 23,353,386 were natives, and 4,136,175 were foreigners. The nativity of many could not be ascertained. Of the total number of foreign-born inhabitants 3,756,024 were residents of the free states, and 380,151 of the slave states. Persons of foreign birth form 11 per cent. (11.06) of the whole free population. The nativity of the greater portion of the immigrant population in 1860 was as follows:—Great Britain and Ireland, 2,199,079; Germany, 1,301,136; British America, 249,970; France, 109,870.

The British first settled in Virginia in 1607. The revolution commenced in 1773; the first battle of independence was fought at Lexington in 1775, and the war terminated by the surrender of Lord Cornwallis in 1783; in the same year the first Congress assembled in Philadelphia. In 1789 the constitution was adopted, and Washington was elected president. The Confederation gradually extended westwards, displacing the aborigines. In 1846 Texas was annexed; in 1848 New Mexico and Utah were ceded, and in the same year California was acquired from Mexico. Of the 9 territories, Colorado was organized in 1861, Dakota in 1861, Nevada in 1861, Nebraska in 1854, New Mexico in 1848, Utah in 1850, Washington in 1853, Arizona in 1863, and Idaho in 1863. In February 1861, the confederate delegates at Montgomery adopted a constitution for the provisional government of the Confederate States of America, Jefferson Davis president. The States in secession or rebellion are South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Virginia, Arkansas, N. Carolina, and Tennessee. The first shot in the civil war was fired at Fort Sumter, 12th April 1861.

URUGUAY, a large river of S. America, one of the chief tributaries of the Plata, rises in Brazil, lat. 29° S., lon. 50° W., flows successively W. and S., and forms the boundary between the prov. Rio Grande do Sul and the state Uruguay on the E., and the provs. S. Catharina and Parana and the Argentine depts. of Corrientes and Entre Rios on the W., and joins the Parana to form the Plata estuary, 40 m. N. Buenos Ayres. Total course estimated at nearly 1000 m. Chief affls., the Ybicuy and Rio Negro. On it are the towns Salto, Paysandu, and Soriano. Its navigation is impeded by numerous cataracts and rocky reefs.

URUGUAY, formerly BANDA-ORIENTAL, a maritime republic of South America, on the N.E. side of the Plata estuary, which separates it from Buenos Ayres, has W. the Uruguay river, N. the Brazilian prov. Rio Grande do Sul, and E. the Lake Merim and the S. Atlantic Ocean. It extends between lat. 30° and 35° S., and lon. 53° and 58° W. Area and pop. as follows:—

Departments.	Eng. sq. miles.	Population 1860.
Monte Video, . . . . .	294	70,078
Camelones, . . . . .	1,844	30,000
Florida, . . . . .	4,729	15,925

Colonía, . . . . .	2,218	15,707
Soriano, . . . . .	3,603	17,122
Durazno, . . . . .	5,592	11,123
Minas, . . . . .	5,642	16,268
Maldonado, . . . . .	5,938	15,000
Salto, . . . . .	9,369	21,434
Paysandú, . . . . .	8,232	17,751
Cerro Largo, . . . . .	8,686	17,000
Tacuarembó, . . . . .	12,049	18,000
	72,679	281,500

In 1864 the pop. was estimated at over 300,000. Cap. Monte Video. Surface along the coast level, and bare of wood; inland mostly undulating, except in the centre, where it is mountainous, full of ravines and heights, and clothed with forests, yet wild animals and venomous reptiles are unknown. It is watered by numerous affls. of the Uruguay; the principal, the Rio Negro, traverses its centre from E. to W., and is navigable for a considerable way. Climate generally damp, but temperate and healthy; in the winter heavy rains and cold winds are prevalent, but in the lowlands frost is said to be unknown. Natural pastures are very extensive and luxuriant. Cattle and horses form the principal wealth of the population; and their products, hides, skins, hair, horns, jerked beef, and tallow, are the chief exports. In Dec. 1861, the approximate number of cattle in Uruguay was 8,096,000; horses, 1,457,000; mules, 116,600; sheep, 3,618,000; goats, 18,500; swine, 126,200. Imports (1861) 9,642,522 dols.; exports 7,576,257 dols. Oats, rice, barley, rye, maize and wheat, cotton, saffron, safflower, indigo, flax, beetroot, tobacco, vines, and yerba-maté are produced, and the country is adapted for the culture of most fruits and vegetables of temperate climates; but at present no more agricultural produce is raised than is required for home consumption, and agricultural processes are of the rudest kind. Rich gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, coal, salt, and sulphur mines have recently been discovered in the dep. of Minas, and a company for working them is now (1864) about to be formed. Granite and limestone rocks prevail in the mountainous region; jasper and chalcodony are met with. Monte Video, the cap., is the centre of all the foreign trade. Other towns are Maldonado, Colonia, and San Jose; Camelones, Soriano, and Salto. Uruguay has formed an independent republic ever since 1828, but of late years it has had unceasingly to contend against the intrigues and hostility of Buenos Ayres. In 1853 a revolution occurred, but on the interference of a Brazilian army, order was restored. Religious toleration exists in the republic.

The E. Cordillera of the Andes extends through its N. part from W. to E., terminating in the peninsula of Paria. It rises in Sierra Nevada to 15,300 feet. South of this is a wide plain country traversed by the Orinoco, the whole course of which river is in this region. Other principal rivers are the Guaviare, Meta, Apure, Cuara, and Carony, tributary to the Orinoco; the Cassiquiare, connecting it with the Amazon, and the Tocuyao, Zulia, and Cuyuni in the N. and E. The Lakes Maracaybo and Valencia, and islands Margarita and Tortuga, belong to this republic. All the finest tropical products grow luxuriantly. The principal sources of wealth are cacao, coffee, tobacco, indigo, cotton, sarsaparilla, dye-woods, timber, and especially cattle, and the articles of trade which they yield. Exports, fustic, divi-divi, cotton, etc. Imports, cottons, linens, woollens, hardwares, earthenwares, silk, apparel, rice, machinery, beer, ale, palm-oil, etc. Venezuela has no metallic currency of its own, and the monies of all nations are in circulation. Government vested in a senate and house of representatives; the executive power being in the hands of a president and vice-president. Venezuela has been in almost constant disturbance by warring factions from 1848 till Oct. 1863, when Puerto Cabello, the last refuge of the insurgents, surrendered to the gov., entirely accomplishing the pacification of the country. On the 10th Dec. of the same year, a provisional constitution was formed, guaranteeing to the people entire personal freedom, as it exists in Britain, the freedom of the press, and many important privileges. Slavery, capital punishment, and banishment are also thereby abolished. The territory is divided into the five depts. of Maturin, Caracas or Venezuela, Zulia, Apure, and Orinoco; and into 13 provs., each of which has its intendant or governor. Chief cities, Caracas, the cap., Valencia, Maracaybo, Barquisimeto, Cumana, & New Barcelona. [GULANA (VENEZUELAN).]

VENICARLO, a town of Spain. [BENICARLO.]

VENICE (Italian Venezia, German Venedig, ancient Venetia), a fortified city of Northern Italy, cap. gov. and deleg., in the lagoons of Venice, a sort of vast lake separated from the Adriatic by a long belt of low land, which is divided by six channels between the Pieve and the Adige, the chief of which is the Port of Lido, and S. of it the island of the same name, 2 m. from the continent, with which it is connected by a stupendous bridge of 222 arches, forming part of the railway to Padua; lat. of St Mark 45° 25' 9" N., lon. 12° 20' 2" E. P. (1857) 118,172, besides the garrison. Mean temp. of year 55°-6, winter 38°, summer 73° Fahr. It is the see of a Roman Catholic primate, Greek and Armenian bishops, and the residence of the viceroy during part of the winter; the centre of the maritime establishments of Austria, and the residence of the commander-general of the imperial marine. Venice, for many centuries the cap. of a celebrated republic, the first maritime and commercial power of the world, and one of the finest cities in Europe, is unique, both as regards position and construction, being built entirely on piles, and occupying 70 or 80 small islands, separated by canals, which are crossed by 306 bridges. The chief of the former is the Canalazzo or Grand Canal, 100 to 180 feet wide, and bordered by magnificent palaces and churches; it separates the city into two nearly equal portions, which are connected by the bridge of the Rialto, built of white marble, and consisting of a single arch. Near the bridge is the island of the Rialto, the spot on which Venice as a city first existed. Two other (iron) bridges cross this canal. The streets or lanes (calli) are so narrow and intricate as to render the city a vast labyrinth; and being fit only for foot passengers, the place of wheel carriages is supplied by small barges, called gondolas, the peculiar form and great number of which constantly traversing the principal canals, presents one of the chief characteristics of the city. The largest street, the Merceria, in which are the best shops, is only 15 feet wide; the principal promenades are the square of St Mark, and the public gardens, which are nearly surrounded by the sea. Among its many squares, the most remarkable for extent, regularity, and beauty of situation, is the Piazza di San Marco (St Mark), on the south side of the city, at the entrance of the Grand Canal. On the E. side of this is a smaller square called the Piazzetta, and at the angle, between these, is the church of St Mark. Venice contains a vast number of magnificent churches and palaces, adorned with the paintings of Titian and the frescoes of Tintoretto and Paul Veronese. The chief edifices are the palace of the Procuratie Vecchie, standing upon 50 arches, and the Procuratie Nuove, which occupy the greater part of the square of St Mark, around which extends a vast gallery, containing elegant shops and cafés. The portion of the Procuratie Nuove next the Piazzetta is the chef-d'œuvre of Sansovino, and a remarkably fine building. The old library of St Mark occupies a magnificent hall, and in the same building is the Zecca or mint, where, in 1284, the celebrated ducat of Venice, the most ancient coin in Europe, was struck. From this establishment the Zecchino or Sequin, the anc. gold coin of the republic, derived its name. The former palace of the doge, or Ducal palace, on the E. side of the Piazzetta, begun under Marino Faliero in the 14th century, is remarkable for its architecture and its imposing mass; its interior is decorated with many of the finest works of the great masters. The Bridge of Sighs connects this palace with the former prisons and dungeons of the inquisition. Among the ecclesiastical edifices, the most magnificent is the church of St Mark, founded in 977, and made a cathedral in 1807, with its golden ceilings, its pavement of jasper and porphyry, its 500 columns of black, white, and veined marble, bronze, alabaster, porphyry, verde antique and serpentine. It contains the celebrated Palla d'Ora, a species of mosaic, in gold, silver, and enamel, made at Constantinople in the 10th century, and a vast reliquary, with many antiquities and objects of art. Over the portal of this magnificent temple, the 4 celebrated bronze horses which were founded at Corinth, and successively adorned Athens, Rome, Constantinople, Venice, and Paris, were replaced in 1815. In front of St Mark are three bronze pedestals, from which once floated the three gonfalons of silk and gold, emblematic of the three dominions of the republic, Venice, Cyprus, and the Morea, with masts, now bearing the Austrian standards; and near it are the Campanile or Bell-tower, the Torre dell'Orologio, or clock tower, which, when it strikes two o'clock, assembles every day a vast number of pigeons which are fed at the expense of the government, and 2 granite columns, one surmounted by the bronze lion of St Mark, and the other by the statue of St Theodore, also the square pillars of St John of Acre. La Madonna dell'Orto, formerly the richest church in Venice. The church of S.S. Giovanni e Paolo, filled with monuments of the Doges. The other churches are San Giorgio Maggiore; the church of the Salute, with a fine cupola; the churches of the Jesuits, magnificently decorated; the Scalzi, and those of Miracoli and of St Peter, formerly the patriarchal see, the cathedral of Venice till 1807; and the church of the Frari, with fine monuments of Canova. The armoury contains many interesting objects. Most of these, with the dogana or custom-house, the Palazzo Balbi Grimani (now the post-office), and other splendid palaces, the municipal museum, etc., are situated on the Grand Canal. Venice has 6 theatres, the 7th and finest having been destroyed by fire in 1836. The arsenal, containing four basins, situated on an island, surrounded by high walls, nearly 2 m. in circuit, was long the first in Europe. Near the principal gateway stand the two colossal marble lions, brought from Athens in 1687. The chief scientific and literary institutions are the lyceum, with a rich cabinet of natural history and a botanic garden, two royal gymnasia, and the seminary of the Salute, occupying the former convent of this name, with valuable scientific collections & a rich library: normal high school, marine college, academy and school of the fine arts, with an extensive Pinacoteca, containing paintings by Titian, Tintoretto, & other celebrated artists of the Venetian school, the oldest of its kind in existence. The Palazzo dei Poli, where Marco Polo lived, and died in 1323. The library of St Mark, comprising about 120,000 vols. and 10,000 MSS., which in 1812 were transferred from the old library to the saloon in the ducal palace, and some rooms adjoining, with a fine cabinet of antiquities and medals, is one of the richest in Italy, and among the largest in Europe. One of the most remarkable institutions in Venice, is that of the Archivio Generale, attached to the church of the Frari, which contains an immense mass of documents relative to the history of Venice, said to fill 295 rooms. The Venetian dialect has great softness and pleasantness of sound, and was formerly so much cherished as a token of nationality, that the speakers in the senate were compelled to employ it in preference to the Tuscan or Volgare. Many of the inhabs. are employed in fishing and in navigating vessels belonging to the port, of which there are about 30,000. In 1862, 569 vessels entered the port, ton. 140,357. Imports (1861) 3,914,518l.; exp. 1,698,250l. The trade of Venice has suffered greatly from the increasing prosperity of Trieste. It is a free port, and within a few years extensive moles have been formed with great success. In the middle ages, Venice had a monopoly of the manufacture of glass, but this has greatly declined, and its manufs. are now confined to mirrors, jewellery, artificial pearls, coloured beads, silks, laces, velvets, soap, sugar-refineries, etc. Printing is extensively carried on, and its book trade is still extensive. Imports comprise sugar, coffee, & other colonial produce, cotton and woollen fabrics, cotton yarn and raw cotton, hardware goods, dye-stuffs, salted fish and grain. Exports, silk and silk goods, glass wares, and books. Outside of the city, on an island, is San Lazzaro, the Armenian convent, a centre of Armenian literature where Byron studied the language. Venice is now well supplied with water, several Artesian wells having been sunk in 1847. Formerly it was dependent on its cisterns, and on supplies from the mainland. The origin of Venice dates from the period of the invasion of Attila A.D. 452, when a number of the inhabitants of Venetia, and other parts of Italy, taking refuge in the islands of the Adriatic, formed a confederation to oppose the barbarians. In 697 they elected, as the head of their government, a doge or duke (dux). The Venetian States formed themselves into a republic in 809. In 997 they took possession of the town of Narenta, a nest of pirates, and thus commenced their maritime power; they afterwards subjugated all the towns of Dalmatia. The crusades were a source of aggrandisement for Venice. At the end of the 12th century, the Venetians made themselves masters of part of the Morea, Corfu, Cephalonia, and Crete. During two centuries they monopolized the commerce of India by the route of Egypt; but they lost this on the discovery of the passage by the Cape of Good Hope. The state attained the height of its prosperity in the 15th century. It began to decline at the beginning of the 16th century, and its overthrow was completed by the French in 1797. By the treaty of Presburg, in 1805, it was made over, with the provs. of the continent, to the kingdom of Italy, and was held by the French till 1814, when it reverted to Austria. In 1848 the Venetians revolted against the Austrians, and held the city for several months. The Crown-land of Venice comprises 8 delegs., which bear the names of their caps, Venice, Padua, Vicenza, Verona, Rovigo, Treviso, Belluno, and Udine. Area 9111 sq. m. P. (1857) 2,306,658. [LOMBARDY.]—The Gulf of Venice is formed by the Adriatic, on the N.E. coast of Italy, bounded by the Piave & Brenta.

VERA, a town of Spain, prov. and 39 m. N.E. Almeria, near the Mediterranean. P. 8470. It has a small harbour, manufs. of nitre, an active fishery, and some export and import trade. Near it are traces of the ancient Urci.

VERA CRUZ, a maritime state of Mexico, between lat. 17° 30' and 22° N., lon. 94° 45' and 98° 45' W., having E. the Gulf of Mexico, & landward the states Tamaulipas, San Luis Potosi, Mexico, Puebla, Oajaca, and Tehuantepec. Area 25,825 sq. m. P. (1857) 349,125, mostly of a mixed race. Surface elevated, except near the coast, where it is extremely unhealthy; but it is also highly fertile and luxuriant. Principal rivers, the Coatzacoalca, Jalapa, and Alvarado. Chief products, vanilla, tobacco, sugar, cotton, cacao, and livestock; and its cotton manufactures are extensive. Chief towns, Vera Cruz, the cap., Jalapa Orizaba, Tuxpan, and Cordoba. Through this state leads the main route to Mexico from the Atlantic.

VERA CRUZ, the principal seaport town of Mexico, in above state, on the Gulf and 242 m. E.S.E. of Mexico. Lat. of lighthouse 19° 11' 57" N.; lon. 96° 8' W. P. 8228. It is well built, and has splendid hotels and palaces, but is in a most unhealthy situation, surrounded by sandhills and marshes. Yellow fever is most prevalent from May to November. Houses generally large, flat-roofed, and several stories in height. The harbour is between the mainland and the island of San Juan de Ulloa, which is covered with a strong fortress, dating from the time of Philip v. in 1719, and has a lighthouse 79 feet above the sea. It communicates by railway with San Juan. Storms and violent N. winds here often injure shipping; but Vera Cruz has an extensive trade, exporting bullion, cochineal, sugar, flour, indigo, provisions, drugs, vanilla, logwood, and pimento, and importing woven fabrics, cacao, paper, brandy, wines, and metals. Vera Cruz was bombarded and taken by the army of the U. S., North America, in 1847.—Old Vera Cruz is a village, 15 m. N.W., where Cortez disembarked in 1519. It was the first Spanish establishment on the coast.

VERAGUAS (SANTIAGO DE), a town of Central America, but belonging, with its prov., to the Granadian Confed., dep. Panama, 27 m. N. Montijo Bay, Pacific Ocean, and 125 m. W.S.W. Panama. P. 5000. It is well built, and has some trade in gold dust, copper, cotton, and dyes.—The prov. Veraguas, between lat. 7° 15' and 9° 40' N., lon. 80° 20' and 82° 50' W., extends from the Pacific Ocean to the Caribbean Sea. Most of the surface is covered with mountains and forests. The rivers have short courses, but frequently inundate the country after heavy rains.

VERA PAZ, the largest dep. of Guatemala, Central America, comprising nearly half the state, mostly between lat. 16° and 18° N., lon. 89° 30' and 91° 40' W., having S. the prov. Guatemala, N. Yucatan, E. British Honduras, and W. Chiapa. P. 6200. Its centre is a region of lofty mountains, bordered by lower lands on the banks of considerable rivers; the Rio Grande or Montagua, flowing E., bounds it on the S. and E.; the Rio Pasion or Usumasinta, flowing W., forms its N. frontier; the Golfo Dulce is comprised within this province. It contains the mysterious lake of Itza or Peten, said to be 45 m. long, 3 m. broad, and very deep. Climate in the uplands is severe, in the lowlands hot, and heavy rains and storms are frequent. Products, sugar, cacao, annato, dyewoods, cedar and other large timber adapted for ship-building, cotton, balsams, and dragons' blood; but the almost entire absence of roads interposes great obstacles to commerce. Besides the city of Coban, the principal places are Tactic, Salama, and Robinal.

VERONA, a fortified city of Northern Italy, Venetia, cap. deleg., on the Adige, and on railway from Milan to Venice, 22 m. by rail. N.N.E. Mantua. P. (1857) 59,169. From its vicinity to the Alps the climate is somewhat cold, but healthy. The floods of the Adige are tremendous. Situated near the gorges of the Tirol, and surrounded by the fortresses of Peschiera, Mantua, and Legnago, Verona has always been considered an important position for the defence of North Italy. The modern fortifications are among the most remarkable works of military engineering in Europe. It has a garrison, capable of accommodating 20,000 men. Since 1848, the Austrians have constructed new works, bastions, detached forts, and an entrenched camp. It is now the point from which all the communications between Austrian Italy and Germany diverge; and from its fine situation, rich historical remains, and literary institutions, it is one of the most interesting cities in Italy. The principal public edifices are the church of San Zenone, supposed to date from the 9th century, and the most interesting example in Verona of the ecclesiastical architecture and decorations of the middle ages, with a beautiful campanile, or bell-tower; the cathedral, built in the 9th and 12th centuries; the church of St Anastasia, remarkable for its great size, its monuments, paintings, and altars; and that of St George, for its fine paintings; San Stefano, in which 20 of the bishops of Verona are buried;

two magnificent gates; the palace of the Gran Guardia, a modern edifice; the palace of Consiglio, surmounted by statues of the celebrated men Verona claims as her own; the Miniscalchi palace, with valuable collections of armour, and of Oriental MSS.; the custom-house, the exchange, the bishop's palace, and three theatres. Its Roman antiquities comprise the celebrated amphitheatre, a building of imposing grandeur, supposed to be contemporaneous with the Coliseum, the most perfect of its kind, and the only one still used for public spectacles; traces of a Roman theatre and two Roman arches,—one, the Porta dei Borsari, is double. The tombs of the Scaligers, a curious monument of the Middle Ages, are a series of Gothic pyramids surmounted by an equestrian statue of each prince. They are in a small churchyard, enclosed by a beautiful iron trellis-work. The literary institutions of Verona comprise a lyceum with fine scientific collections, episcopal seminary, the royal school for the education of ladies, 3 gymnasia, a school of painting and design, a botanic garden, a philharmonic academy, 2 valuable public libraries, the museum of the Lapidario, with remarkable Etruscan inscriptions and ancient marbles. A congress was held here in 1822. It is the birthplace of Cornelius Nepos, Catullus, the younger Pliny, Paul Veronese, Fraacastoro, poet and physician, Bianchini, Scipione, Maffei the historian, & many other distinguished men. Verona is renowned for its dye-works. It has manufs. of woollens & cottons, numerous silk mills moved by water power, and an extensive trade in silk and rural produce.

VERSAILLES, a comm. and city of France, cap. dep. Seine-et-Oise, 10 m. S.W. Paris, with which it communicates by two lines of railway. P. (1861) 49,899. It is divided into the quarters St Louis and Notre Dame, to which Montreuil is attached, and is noted for the regularity of its construction. It has many remarkable edifices, fine squares, public fountains, and beautiful boulevards, the church of St Louis, the prefecture, and the chancery. The palace of Versailles was restored during the reign of the late Louis Philippe, and is now used as an historical museum: the immense galleries contain a series of paintings and statues arranged in chronological order. Connected with the palace are a decorated chapel and theatre, an orangery, flower gardens, and a park, in which are statues and fountains supplied with water by the machine of Marly, and at the extremity of the park the two palaces called the Great and Little Trianon. Versailles is a bishop's see, and has a national college, a normal school, many scientific and literary societies, a public library of 56,000 vols., and a chamber of commerce. The palace of Versailles, built by Louis xiv., was, from 1672 to 1790, the residence of the kings of France. Many treaties have been signed here, at one of which, in 1783, England recognised the independence of the United States of North America; and here, on 20th June 1789, the representatives of the communes of France constituted the national assembly, and took the famous oath termed the "Jeu de Paume!" From 1790 to 1837, Versailles was nearly deserted; but, since the opening of the museum in the latter year, it has regained much of its former importance. It is the birth-place of Philip v. of Spain; Louis xv., xvi., and xviii., and Charles x. of France; the Abbé de l'Épée, Ducis, and General Hoche.

VESUVIUS (MOUNT) (Ital. Vesuvio, Vesbius of the Romans), a celebrated mountain of Naples, and the only active volcano of any consequence on the continent of Europe; on the E. side of the Bay of Naples. Lat. of crater 40° 49' N.; lon. 14° 26' E. It rises out of the fertile and luxuriant plain of Campania; the diameter of the circular area occupied by it and Monte Somma being about 8 m. The height of the eruptive cone of Vesuvius has varied during the last 20 years from 4070 to 3400 feet. Its lower part is a sloping plain, covered with stones and scorie, 5 m. in length, and rising to 2000 feet, above which a cone of black stones extends to 3500 feet. It is flanked on the land side by Monte Somma, an abrupt circular precipice, whose highest point is 3747 feet above the sea. The summit of its cone is 2000 feet in diameter, and after the eruption of 1839, had in its centre a crater 1600 feet in diameter, and 500 feet deep. Somma and Vesuvius are separated by the deep valley called the Atrio del Cavallo, and are different in their geological formation; the former consists of tufa, leucite, augite, labradorite, and some nodules of olivine, intersected by dykes of compact lava. Vesuvius is almost wholly composed of lava, scorie, and tufa. Around it a larger number of simple minerals have been discovered than on any other area of like dimensions; and the vegetable products on its flanks comprise euphorbias and many other plants not found elsewhere in Italy. The famous wine, lacrima christi, is raised on its sides. The first recorded eruption of Mt. Vesuvius occurred A.D. 79, when the elder Pliny perished, and the cities Herculaneum, Pompeii, & Stabia were overwhelmed and buried by lava and ashes, described by the younger Pliny, the historian. From that time to 1861, many eruptions are recorded, of which the most celebrated occurred in 472, 1631, 1779, 1794, 1822, 1834, 1850, 1855, 1858, and 1861.

VICTORIA (formerly called the Port Phillip District, or Southern District of New South Wales, from which colony it was separated 1st July 1851), a British colonial territory in the S.E. part of Australia, comprised within lat. 34° and 39° S., and lon. 141° and 150° E.; bounded on the W. by the 141st meridian, beyond which is South Australia; on the S. by Bass Straits to Cape Howe; on the N. by New S. Wales, separated from it by the Murray river, eastwards to its source, and thence by a straight line to Cape

Howe. The country has a triangular shape, with the apex at Cape Howe, and the W. boundary, as a line of base, extending 275 miles. The length from Cape Howe to this boundary is 490 m., and the average breadth 150 to 200 m. Area 86,944 sq. m., or 55,571,840 acres, being nearly the size of Great Britain; the extent of land sold up to 1860 was 3,933,844 ac., while in 1861 there were 419,592 ac. under cultivation, of which 161,000 were under wheat, 86,000 under oats, 4000 under barley, 24,800 under potatoes, and 90,800 under hay. P. (1851) 77,345, (1861) 548,944, (estimated 1863) 556,640. This increase of population is unprecedented in the annals of British colonies, the gold discoveries and general success of the colony having attracted a continuous stream of emigrants for several years. The number of emigrants that arrived in 1861 was 26,910. About 68 per cent. of the population were British born, 18 per cent. colonial born, mostly of British parents; and of the remainder two-thirds were Germans, Italians, and French; 24,322 Asiatics, chiefly Chinese; and the native population was about 2000. Emigrants from the United Kingdom (1862) 15,535; aborigines (1863) only 2165 persons, who have no settled residence. The colony has few harbours except Port Phillip. Average passage from London or Liverpool to Port Phillip 96 days. It is very generally covered with grass, and either open or overspread with open forests. Towards the east is a considerable Alpine region, whence from the northern and western slopes issue the source and chief tributaries of the Murray. The highest of these ranges, the Warragong, or Australian Alps, rise to 6563 feet; N. of this a lofty group, containing Mount Hotham, 7500 feet above the sea, the highest land in Australia; also Mount Latrobe, 7300 feet. In the Grampians, to the westward, Mount William rises to 4500 feet. There are many volcanic hills throughout the western districts. The chief river is the Murray, whose main stream flows from the Australian Alps. From the south flow into the Murray those rivers that drain the Victoria territory,—Mitta Mitta, Owens, Goulburn, Campaspe, Loddon, Avoca, and Wimmera, which last, after passing lakes Hindmarsh and Albacutya, loses itself in the sand and scrub, excepting when its upper waters are swollen with heavy rains. The other rivers are the Snowy river and several streams of Gipp's Land, flowing into its lake system; the Yarra Yarra passing Melbourne, the Barwon passing Geelong, and the Glenelg at the western boundary. The climate is reckoned the finest in the entire southern hemisphere, and fully equal to that of Lisbon. It is milder in winter and cooler in summer than London. Mean annual temp. of Melbourne 57°, spring 57°, summer 66°, autumn 58°, winter 49°. The coldest period of the year is from the 20th to the 24th July, when the thermometer stands at 44°, while the lowest temp. ever experienced is 32°. Occasionally during the hot winds of January the temp. rises to 111° in the shade. Hoar-frost and thin films of ice are sometimes, but very rarely, seen in the suburbs of the capital; but snow is rarely if ever seen at sea level. Average annual rainfall 26 inches; number of days on which rain falls 104, the rain lasting generally for only a few hours, but descending with great violence. Mean height of the barometer at Melbourne (120 feet above the sea) 29.9 inches. The prevailing winds for the greater part of the year are W., S., or S.E. In 1860 the number of sheep in the colony was 5,794,127, cattle 683,534, horses 62,288. The colony has been very successful in introducing foreign animals; camels, alpacas, llamas, Cashmir goats, and British birds are now abundant; and the salmon was born in the rivers in 1864. Agriculture has made great progress since 1851. The exports in 1860 amounted to 12,962,704*l.*; the principal articles being gold, valued at 8,624,860*l.*, and wool, valued at 2,025,066*l.* The tonnage of vessels entering the colony in same year was 581,642 tons, & of clearing 599,137 tons. The imports amounted to 15,093,730*l.*, embracing 9,564,093*l.* worth of British manufactures. The revenue, which amounted to 3,066,220*l.*, and the expenditure to 3,287,600*l.*, is derived chiefly from customs duties and land sales. In 1857, 202,833*l.* were expended in conveying free 14,369 immigrants. During the ten years 1851-60 there was expended on public works 3,891,752*l.*

Minerals comprise gold, silver, iron, tin, antimony, and coal; but the extraordinary richness of the gold-fields has prevented much attention being paid to the other mineral products. The coal-fields occupy an area of about 3000 sq. m., chiefly in Gipp's Land and Portland Bay district, and in the vicinity of Geelong. Iron ore is plentiful, especially at Sandhurst; tin in the Ovens district. The auriferous dists. of Victoria extend over about 16,000 sq. m.; but of this wide area, only a small part is actually worked. They are in the following order of relative importance, according to the quantities of gold brought down by escort in the year 1857: viz., Ballarat, etc., 948,709 oz.; Sandhurst, etc. (Bendigo), 525,018 oz.; Maryborough, etc., 348,751 oz.; Beechworth, etc. (Ovens), 345,349 oz.; Castlemain, etc. (Mount Alexander), 315,777 oz. The total quantity of gold exported from Victoria from Oct. 1, 1851, to Oct. 1, 1861, amounted to 26,162,432 oz. troy, equal in value to 104,649,728*l.*, or more than one-fourth of the national debt of the United Kingdom. This was represented in the International Exhibition of 1862 by a pyramid 44 ft. 9½ in. high by 10 ft. square at the base. In religious affairs there are no national establishments; but an aid of 50,000*l.* is annually distributed to all the Christian sects that will accept it, proportioned to population. In 1861 there were 884 places of public worship, with accommodation for 150,000 persons; the number of clergymen was 340, of whom 81 were of the Church of England, 42 Roman Catholics, and Presbyterians 83. Education, with reference to State support, is conducted under the two systems called National and Denominational, the latter being most prevalent. At the commencement of 1861 the number of schools in the colony was 886, the number of scholars 51,668, while the aid received from government was 110,155*l.* A new system, on a secular basis, has been repeatedly proposed by the government, to supersede these rival modes, but opposed and never carried out. There is a university on a most costly scale, a national museum, and a very large public library. The colony is divided into 24 counties and 3 districts, the latter being the interior parts as yet unreduced into counties. The chief towns are Melbourne and Geelong, and the smaller but incorporated towns of Ballarat, Sandhurst, Castlemain, Beechworth, Portland, Kyneton, etc. Roads and railroads are being extensively constructed. On 1st Oct. 1861, 100 m. of government railways had been opened, and 182 m. were in course of construction, involving an expenditure of 8,000,000*l.*, besides 21 m. opened by private enterprise; 1504 m. also of electric telegraph had been established within the colony, while Melbourne was in communication with the capitals of all the adjacent colonies. In 1855 Victoria was granted self-government. The ballot system and manhood suffrage have been enacted. The governor is of imperial nomination, and is assisted by the Colonial Parliament, which consists of a council & assembly, the first elected by a property qualification as to voter and member, the second without either.

VIENNA (Germ. Wien, anc. Vindobona), a city of Central Europe, cap. of the empire of Austria, of the archduchy of Austria, and of the gov. of Lower Austria, in a fertile plain, near right or S. bank of the Danube, which here receives the small rivers Wien and Alster. Lat. (of observatory, 543 feet above the sea) 48° 12' 36" N.; lon. 16° 23' E. P. (1857) 476,222; at the end of 1863, about 560,000. Mean temp. of year 51°-45; winter 32°, summer 61°-45, Fahr. The situation is unhealthy; climate very variable; fogs are frequent, and the islands and lower parts of the city are exposed to inundations. It is an archbishop's see, and the residence of the Protestant superintendent for the W. provs. of the empire. It is divided into an old and a new city, the former 3 m. in circumference, and nearly circular. In 1827 it contained 1229 houses only, while its 34 suburbs contained 7415. The new city is surrounded by a broad fosse and a wall 40 to 50 ft. high, forming the Bastei, a fashionable promenade; it is entered by 12 gates. Beyond the fosse is the glacis, a public walk, extending nearly all round the city, and separating it from its suburbs. The gate called the Burghor is very fine. Among the many public edifices, the chief are the Burg or imperial palace, residence of the emperor, with a library and an imperial chapel and theatre; the mint, university, academy of the fine arts, imperial and city arsenal, and the custom-house. There are numerous private palaces, containing valuable libraries, paintings, and other objects of art. The cathedral of St Stephen, a Gothic edifice, is now (1864) being restored. Its spire, formerly 453 feet high, is to be raised 15 or 20 feet, so as to surpass that of Strasbourg. The church of St Peter is built on the model of the basilica of St Peter at Rome. The educational, literary, and scientific establishments comprise the university, which is celebrated for its school of medicine, with a library of 120,000 vols., and a theatre of anatomy; the school of Orientalists for training interpreters; the Theresianum, founded by Maria Theresa; the Josephine academy of medicine & surgery for the army; academy of the fine arts, with 18 profs.; polytechnic institute; normal school; academy of engineers, with 18 professors; a veterinary institute; a conservatory of music; 5 gymnasia or colleges; and an observatory, with a school of astronomy. The imperial library contains 300,000 vols., many thousand MSS., an immense collection of engravings, & the famous Tabula Peutingeriana, a map of the Roman empire in the 4th century. The other collections comprise paintings in the Belvedere, the lower part of which contains the Ambras collection of ancient armour and jewels, the most interesting in Europe; and the imperial cabinets of antiquities, medals, and natural history. The imperial arsenal contains 15,000 stand of arms. The principal theatres are the Hof or palace theatre, the Kärnthertor, and the comic theatre. It has a deaf-mute asylum, and numerous well-conducted charitable establishments. Vienna is the chief manufacturing city of the empire; its manufs. comprise silk velvets, shawls, woollens, ribbons, carpets, cottons, paper, gold and silver lace, porcelain, and musical instruments. Coach-building, book and map printing, form important branches of industry. It has an imperial cannon foundry, and manufactures of small arms. Its commerce is extensive, and was greatly increased by the navigation of the Danube and the opening of railways. In the suburbs are the cavalry barracks, the Belvedere palace, the church of St Charles, the theatre on the Wien, the great public hospital, containing 2000 beds, and receiving annually 15,000 to 18,000 patients, the vast building for the imperial manuf. of porcelain, and numerous private palaces with magnificent gardens. The cap. of Austria is ornamented by many superb promenades, the chief of which is the Prater, a natural forest in an island of the Danube, laid out in long alleys, and containing deer parks, numerous coffee-houses, a panorama, and circus; on fête days it is crowded with pedestrians and the most splendid equipages. The others are the Augarten, a public park on the same island, and the Volksgarten, a beautiful public garden. The environs are very picturesque, surrounded by vineyards, and having the Kahlenberg mountains on the W., the islands of the Danube on the N., and on the S. the Schneckberg mountain, part of the Noric Alps; they are adorned by many villas and summer palaces, among which are the imperial palace of Schönbrunn, with a botanic garden and menagerie; the vill. of Maria Hützing, with a theatre and a bath establishment; Laxenburg, with an imperial summer palace and a spacious park. Few cities are surrounded by so many fine gardens, many of which contain the richest and rarest plants. Vindobona was a station of the Roman legions in Upper Pannonia; it was afterwards cap. of the E. provs. of the empire of Charlemagne. The king of Hungary established his court here in 1484, and it soon became the fixed residence of the House of Austria. Vienna was besieged by the Turks in 1529, and again in 1683; on the latter occasion it was relieved by the Poles under John Sobieski. The French took it in 1806 and in 1809. The congress of Vienna, which fixed the present limits of the countries of Europe, was held here from Nov. 1814 to June 1815. The city was held by the revolutionary party for a short time in 1848; the barricades were raised on 6th October, but it surrendered to the imperial troops on 30th of same month, having suffered severely from a bombardment. The city has been greatly improved, with many elegant new streets and churches, and it contains more places of amusement than any other capital in Europe.

Total, . . .	7385	4,732,486	1,111,786	...

Of the above cos., Anglesey, Carnarvon, Denbigh, Flint, Merioneth, and Montgomery compose North Wales; while South Wales consists of the shires of Brecknock, Cardigan, Carmarthen, Glamorgan, Radnor, and Pembroke. Except the island Anglesey, which has a level or undulating surface, nearly all Wales, especially its north half, is mountainous. Snowdon, in Carnarvonshire, is 3590 feet; Cader Idris, Merionethshire, 2959 feet; the Brecknock Beacon (S. Wales), 2862 feet; and many summits rise to between 1500 and 2300 feet above the sea. Chief rivers, the Severn, Wye, Usk, Towy, Teify, Dovy, Conway, Clwyd, and Dee, the vales of some of which are very fertile. Lakes are insignificant; that of Bala, the largest, is only  $3\frac{1}{2}$  m. in length. Principal inlets are, on the W. coast, Carnarvon and Cardigan Bays, St Bride's Bay, and Milford Haven; on the S. Carmarthen and Swansea Bays, separated by the peninsula of Gower; and on the N. the estuary of the Dee, and the harbours of Beaumaris and Holyhead. Principal headlands, Gt. Ormes Head, Briach-y-Pwll and St David's Head. Agriculture is extremely backward. Barley and oats are the chief grains raised; the culture of potatoes and turnips is extending. Farms mostly small, averaging in S. Wales only from 50 to 60 acres. Large numbers of cattle are reared. The number of sheep is estimated at 1,250,000, and the annual produce of wool at 10,000 packs. A hardy small breed of ponies is reared, especially in the cos. Montgomery and Merioneth. Mining industry is highly important. Iron, copper, lead, silver, slate, limestone, and in the S. large quantities of coal, are mined, which is extensively exported, and used on the spot for smelting both British and foreign ores. In 1863 South Wales had 123 blast furnaces in operation, and 74 out of blast, making 847,758 tons of iron, & N. Wales 7 furnaces, producing 51,076 tons of iron, and 6 out of blast. The principal iron works are at and around Merthyr-Tydvil, Tredegar, Aberdare, and Rhuabon; at Swansea, large quantities of American and other copper ores are reduced. Manufactures of woollen fabrics, especially of flannel and hosiery, are very generally pursued in the cottages of the peasantry, particularly in North Wales, where Welspool is the chief mart for these products. The cotton manufacture has extended into some of the N. cos., where also many hands are employed in woollen, flax, and silk factories. There is a manufacture of slate articles at Bangor. Trade principally in the export of mineral produce, cattle, and woollen goods. Principal ports, Swansea, Newport, Cardiff, Carnarvon, and Beaumaris; besides which, Holyhead is a chief packet-station for communication with Ireland, and Milford is a naval port and the seat of a government dockyard. Roads through the principality are now generally good. Railway communication extends in the N. from Chester to Holyhead, and S. to Merthyr-Tydvil, and in the S. from Cardiff to Haverfordwest. Wales is in the ecclesiastical prov. of Canterbury, and divided into the 4 bishoprics of Llandaff, St David's, Bangor, and St Asaph. It contains 13 boroughs, besides contributory bors., each of which sends 1 member to House of Commons, as does each of its cos. Wales is still inhabited by the aboriginal Celtic race, who speak a dialect of the Celtic language called the British or Cambrian. The country was entitled Britannia secunda by the Romans, who constructed many roads and stations in the country. Memorials of its past history abound in the form of cromlechs, camps, abbeys, castles, etc. It maintained a successful struggle against the Saxons, and was not wholly subdued by the Normans until 1284, since which era the heir apparent of the English throne has always held the title of Prince of Wales. WASHINGTON, the cap. city of the U. S., North America, in the federal dist. of Columbia, on the Potomac, at the influx of the Anacostia, each here crossed by a bridge, 40 m. S.W. Baltimore, and 226 m. S.W. New York, with which cities and with all the chief towns of the Union it is connected by railway. Lat. of observatory 38° 53' 39" N.; lon. 77° 2' 48" W. P. (1860) 61,122. It is laid out with great regularity, and on an extensive plan. The streets are from 75 to 110 feet wide, and the avenues 180 to 160 feet. Public edifices are amongst the most splendid in the Union. The capitol, or seat of the United States legislature, on a hill 72 ft. above the Potomac, is of freestone, and has a portico with 22 Corinthian columns, and several domes; it was greatly enlarged in 1851, and its frontage is now 751 feet, with a marble statue of Washington in front, and decorated internally with works of art; it contains the Senate Chamber and Hall of Representatives, the Congress library of 50,000 vols., and supreme court of the United States; is surrounded by grounds covering 22 acres, in which is located the Smithsonian Institution, built of red sandstone, with 9 towers 75 to 100 feet high, a laboratory, library, and picture-gallery. About 1½ m. N.W. is "White House," the official residence of the President of the United States, an elegant edifice, built of freestone, painted white, also on a height, and near it are the buildings of the navy and war offices, state, and treasury departments. The general post-office is of great dimensions, built of white marble; the national observatory on the Potomac, and patent office, the navy yard, covering an area of 17 ac., arsenal, city hall, hospital, penitentiary, theatre, and upwards of 50 churches. Other institutions are the Columbia and medical colleges, the Union and literary society, and the city library. Washington has manufs. of metallic goods and glass, and an extensive retail business; but George-town, on Rock creek, adjacent, and Alexandria lower down the Potomac, absorb most of the foreign trade. A new park has been formed, in the centre of which is to be erected, by public subscription, a magnificent monument to General Washington, with a temple at the base, and a shaft, in all 600 feet high. Washington communicates with the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal by a branch terminating in the city with ample basins. It became the seat of the federal government in 1800. Mount Vernon, the seat of General Washington, after whom the city was named, and where he was buried, is about 15 m. distant.—Mount Washington, the principal peak of the White mountains in New Hampshire, is 6620 feet high.

WASHINGTON, the most N.W. territory of U. S., North America, was organized 1853. Cap. Olympia. Area 71,800 sq. m. P. (1863) 12,519. It is bounded N. by British Columbia, W. by the Pacific Ocean, S. by Oregon and Idaho, separated from the former by Columbia river, and E. by Dakota, from which it is divided by the Watershed between Missouri and Columbia rivers. Its surface is covered by ramifications of the Rocky mountains, having in the W. Cascade Range, and in the E. the Bitter Root mountains. Extensive discoveries of gold have lately been made on the Upper Columbia, and on the Snake river of Washington Territory.

WESTERN, a township of the United States, North America, New York, 18 m. N.W. Utica.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA (formerly Swan River Settlement), a British colony defined by her Majesty's commissioners as including that portion of the Australian continent situated to the W. of the 129th meridian, and bounded on the other three sides by the Indian Ocean. Its greatest length from N. to S. is 1280 m.; breadth about 800 m. Estimated area 978,000 sq. m. P. in 1861, 17,246. In 1851, the pop. was only 5886. Only a small portion of this vast territory, viz., the S.E. angle, is inhabited. This is the oldest of our Australian colonies, having been formed in 1829. There are no colonial funds appropriated for emigration to the colony; but from 1840 to 1862, the Government Emigration Board sent out 4926 emigrants, of whom 2336 were English, 1993 Irish, and 177 Scotch. The passage money of these emigrants amounted to 67,478*l.* In 1862, the number of emigrants that arrived was 623, of whom 553 were assisted. The native population in the settled district is estimated at about 1500. Three parallel mountain ranges traverse the co. from S. to N., rising in height from the coast inland. Elevation of Tulbanop, the culminating point, 5000 feet. Granitic rocks, with claystone and limestone, prevail. Columnar basalt is met with around Géographie Bay, and other localities. From this point to Shark-Bay, a band of coal runs for about 600 m. In the parts hitherto explored auriferous rocks, and indeed all the older palaeozoic strata in which alone these usually occur, seem entirely absent. Soil light and dry, both on the coast and in the interior. In the middle of the colony are bands of more fertile land, suited for the culture of the vine, olive, and fig, and where sandal-wood & other trees grow abundantly. Principal stream, Swan river, with its tributaries. In the interior are several salt lakes and pools, but the colony is in general not well watered. Climate arid, but comparatively healthy. Mean annual temp. at Perth (lat. 32° S.) 56°, winter 54°, summer 72°-25 Fahr. In 1855, 14,693 acres of land were under cultivation. In 1855, the sheep numbered 184,134, cattle 12,173, and horses 4887. Iron is abundant, and some good lead ore, and ores of mercury and zinc, are found. The principal timber trees of the colony are of the eucalyptus or myrtle family; of these the Jarrah and Tovart are valuable for ship-building, the former being remarkable for its resistance to decay, whether from time, weather, water, the white ant, or sea worm. The sandal wood also forms a valuable article of export. Trade chiefly with Britain, with occasional imports from Mauritius, India, and China. Exports (1862) wool, copper, etc., to the value of 119,313*l.*; imports, apparel, beer and ale, iron, spirits, cottons, woollens, etc., to the value of 172,991*l.*; revenue (1862) 69,406*l.*; expenditure 72,267*l.*; revenue raised in the colony 61,000*l.*; debt 2000*l.*; imperial expenditure for civil and military purposes 37,221*l.*; number of imperial troops stationed in the colony 183. The colony is ruled by a governor and council, and has 32 counties or districts. Chief towns, Perth, Freemantle, and Albany. After the cessation of transportation to Tasmania, this colony was, by consent of the more prominent colonists, made a penal settlement, a circumstance that has given a decided impetus to its commerce and population.

WESTERN-PORK, an inlet of the S. coast of Australia, Victoria, co. Mornington, 15 m. at the nearest point S.E. the inlet of Port-Philip. Length and breadth about 20 miles each, but it is nearly filled up by French and Grant islands. The entrance on the W. side is adapted for large vessels. It forms a secure harbour.

WESTERVIK, a town of S. Sweden, län and 75 m. N. Kalmar, on a deep inlet of the Baltic, here crossed by a bridge of boats. P. 5330. It has a fine church, safe and convenient harbour, ship-building docks, manufactures of linen fabrics, and a trade in iron, wooden wares, tar, and pitch.

WEST INDIES, Antillia or Antilles, an archipelago of islands which extend from the Gulf of Florida to the Gulf of Paria, between lat. 10° and 27° N., lon. 60° and 85° W., bounded on N. and E. by the Atlantic, and on the S. by the Caribbean Sea, which separates them from the N. coast of South America. The N.W. group, Leeward Islands or Greater Antilles, contains the larger islands, comprising Cuba, Jamaica, Hayti, and Porto-Rico. Another group, the Lesser Antilles, Caribbee or Windward Islands, extends in a semicircular form from the E. extremity of the island of Porto-Rico, S. to the Gulf of Paria, and the smaller group, stretching from E. to W. along the coast of Venezuela, are the Leeward Islands of the Spaniards. N. of Cuba and Hayti is the group of the Bahamas. The following table shows by whom the islands were first occupied, the date of occupation, and the countries to which they now belong:—

Total area of the archipelago, according to Schomburgh, 86,548 sq. m. P. of the Spanish isls. 2,032,062; Brit. 941,471; Hayti 560,000; French 273,164; Danish 37,137; Dutch 32,881; Venez. 32,000; Swedish 8500. Total 2,917,215. Many of the islands are of volcanic origin. Climate of the whole tropical, but modified by the surrounding ocean & the elevated surface of many of the isls. Exports from Brit. isls. to Great Britain (1862), sugar, cotton, spirits, cocoa, coffee, logwood, pimento, guano, ginger, sponge, arrowroot, etc., to the value of 4,644,842l. Imps., British & foreign cottons, apparel, arms, leather, woollens, iron, linens, drugs, soap and candles, casks, hardwares, rice, beer and ale, wine, etc., to the value of 2,563,548l. Cuba and Porto-Rico export to Britain (1862) sugar, cotton, tobacco, copper, timber, cedar, etc. Value 4,231,083l. Imports European and Eastern manuf. and produce. Columbus landed on St Salvador, Bahama group, in October 1492; and the archipelago, under the erroneous impression, at the time of discovery, that it formed part of Asia, was called the West Indies. The Bermudas are not properly West Indian islands, although they were officially considered as such till 1834. The history of the West India Islands, "from the period of their discovery in 1492 till 1816, presents little more than a melancholy series of calamities and crimes. The islands have been laid waste by hurricanes, and visited by pestilence; but the sufferings which have arisen from natural causes are few and trifling in comparison with those which moral and political circumstances have produced." Among these may be classed the annihilation of the Indians, the introduction of slavery, the atrocities of the Buccaneers, and international wars. [Particular descriptions are given under the heads of the various islands.] Slavery was abolished in the Dutch West Indies, 1st July 1863.

WINCHCOMBE, a pa. and market town of England, co. Gloucester, in the vale of the Islip, 6 m. N.E. Cheltenham. Ac. of pa. 5700. P. 2937. It has a Gothic church, paper mill, silk mills, and manufs. of stockings and thread.

WINCHELSEA, a parl. bor., cinque-port, market town, and pa. of England, co. Sussex, near its E. extremity, 2 m. S.W. Rye. Ac. of pa. 1510. P. 719. Altitude 126 feet. The town, about 2 m. in circuit, extends into three adjacent parishes. Old Winchelsea, a place of importance in the Roman period, stood at the mouth of the Rother, 2 m. distant, but was destroyed by an inundation of the sea in 1287, after which the inhabitants removed and founded the present town, which has been ruined by a precisely opposite cause, the sea having receded  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. since the 16th century, leaving around it a salt marsh. The church, formerly an elegant structure, is partly in decay; two other churches have fallen into ruin. Winchelsea returned 2 members to H. of C. until the Reform Act included it in the borough of Rye.

WINCHENDON, two pas. of England, co. Bucks.—I. (Nether), 6 m. W. Aylesbury. Ac. 1520. P. 316.—II. (Upper), 5 m. N.W. Aylesbury. Ac. 1030. P. 220.

WINCHENDON, a township of the U. S., North America, Massachusetts spring, 50 m. W.N.W. Boston. It has a sulphureous spring.

WINCHESTER, Venta Belgarum, a city, parl. and munic. bor. of England, of which it was long the cap., now cap. co. Hants, nearly in its centre, on rt. b. of the Itchen, across which it communicates with a suburb by a bridge, on the S.-W. Railway, 67 m. W.S.W. London. Lat. 51° 4' N.; lon. 1° 20' W. Ac. of city and soke-liberty 2250. P. of bor., which includes St Cross, Winnal, etc. (1851) 13,704; (1861) 14,776. Altitude 156 feet. The ancient city was enclosed by walls, of which the site only is now traceable. The modern city consists chiefly of a main street, crossed at right angles by many others; but the suburbs, outside the gates, are being rapidly built over, especially on the W. and S. sides. Nearly all its S.E. quarter is occupied by the cathedral and its precincts, supposed to have been founded in the 2d century. It is 543 feet in length externally, 208 feet in breadth at the transept, with a nave 351 feet, a choir 136 feet in length, and a central tower 150 feet in height. Except its W. front, its exterior is heavy, but its interior is magnificent. It contains the tomb of William Rufus; and, in a series of carved chests over the choir, the remains of many of the kings of Wessex, and of the Saxon kings of England. Its altar-piece is the celebrated 'Raising of Lazarus,' by West. The see of Winchester comprises the co. Hants, the greater part of Surrey, and the Channel Islands, including 884 pas. At one period Winchester is said to have had 90 churches, chapels, and monastic institutions, many of which were swept away at the Reformation; at present it has 9 parish churches, of which those of St Lawrence, the Mother-church, into which the bishop makes solemn entry on taking the see, St Maurice, St Michael, and St Swithin, over a postern gate, were most worthy of notice; but the old church of St Thomas was pulled down, and a fine new Gothic building erected on another site in 1847, to which a beautiful spire was added in 1858. Two other new district churches have since been built in the city—Christchurch in 1860, and Trinity in 1854. Winchester College, founded in 1387, has fine buildings. Other principal structures are St John's house, barracks for 2000 men, fine building for officers' quarters, abutting on parade, non-commissioned officers' quarters, large new hospital, and the assize-hall, on the site of an ancient castle; the guild-hall, co. model gaol, co. hospital, a new diocesan training college for 56 students, a Roman Catholic and other dissenting chapels, corn exchange, market-house, and assembly rooms. Of 4 ancient gates, only the W. remains. In an apartment over it are preserved the original Winchester bushel of king Edgar and other Anglo-Saxon standards of measure. Near it is an obelisk to commemorate a destructive visitation of the plague in 1669, and a public cemetery was laid out here in 1840. Winchester has many almshouses and other charities; the hospital of St Cross, 1 m. S. the city, but now inclosed within the bor., founded in the reign of Stephen by Henry de Blois, bishop of Winchester, in 1136, for the maintenance of 13 poor men and the assistance of 100 more, also for a master, 4 chaplains, 13 clerks, and 7 choristers, the original foundation being increased by Cardinal Beaufort. The charity now consists of 13 brethren and a porter, under a clerical master. These are well provided for. There are also occasional "doles" of bread and copper money to the poor indiscriminately, and travellers and wayfarers are allowed a horn of ale and a marchet of bread on application. It has a very remarkable ancient church, and other buildings. There are a mechanics' institute, public library, and savings and penny bank. It is governed by a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, is the seat of the co. assizes, and has quarter and petty sessions, a recorder's court, and a chency court of the bishop. It sends 2 members to H. of C., and is the place of election of members for the co. Reg. electors (1864) 933. Under the name of Caer-Gwent, it was an important city of the anc. Britons; it became a Roman station, and having been taken by Cerdic in 519, it remained the cap. of the kingdom of Wessex and of England throughout all the Saxon, Danish, and early Norman dynasties. In the time of Henry I. it had reached its greatest eminence; in that of Henry VI. it had materially declined, but was a residence of the English sovereigns down to the accession of George I. Henry III. was born here in 1207, and here Henry VIII. entertained the Emperor Charles V. Mary of England and Philip of Spain were married at Winchester in 1554.

WINCHESTER, several townships of the U. S., N. America.—I. a town of Virginia, in its N.E. part, cap. co. Frederick, 48 m. S.W. Frederick, Maryland, with which, and with Baltimore, it is connected by railway. It has an active general trade.—II. New Hampshire, on Ashuelot river, 50 m. S.W. Concord.—III. Connecticut, 23 m. N.W. Hartford. It has extensive iron works and various manufactures.—IV. Ohio, co. Adams.—V. Kentucky, cap. co. Clarke, 42 m. E.S.E. Frankfort. WINCHESTER, a pa. of England, co. Hants, 2½ m. N.E. Odiham. WINDERMERE, a pa. of England, co. Westmoreland, 8½ m. N.W. Kendal, with which it communicates by railway. Ac. 17,139. P. 4223. The church, an ancient structure, contains a curious window of stained glass. The islands of Windermere are in this parish.—Lake Windermere, or Winandermere, one of the finest of the English lakes, partly between cos. Westmoreland and Lancaster, but chiefly in the latter co., is 11 m. in length by 1 m. in width, and discharges its surplus waters S. ward by the Leven, into Morecambe Bay. Shores mostly well wooded, especially on its W. side, where Furness-fell, a steep height, is clothed with a forest of larch and fir. In its centre is a group of small islands, the largest of which comprises 28 acres. Bowness is on its E. side, and Ambleside near its N. extremity. Among the fish taken here is the char, peculiar to the deep lakes in this region, and which when potted is a highly esteemed delicacy.

WINDHAM, two cos. of the U.S., North America.—I. Vermont, in its S.E. part. Area 730 sq. m. P. (1860) 26,982.—II. Connecticut, in N.E. part, cap. Brooklyn. Area 620 sq. m. WINDSOR or NEW WINDSOR, a pari., munic. bor., town, and pa. of England, co. Berks, on the rt. b. of the Thames, across which it is connected with Eton (Bucks) by a three-arched iron bridge, on granite piers, 2 m. S. the Slough station of G. W. Railway, and 23 m. S.W. London. Area of bor., comprising Windsor Castle and Little Park, with parts of the pas. New Windsor & Clewer, upwards of 1666 ac. P. (1861) 5418; do. of pa. 6728. The town consists chiefly of a main thoroughfare, winding close around the W. and S. sides of Windsor Castle, 2 other principal and several smaller streets. It is well built. Principal edifices, the town-hall, infantry barracks, pa. church with fine carved work, monuments, and an altarpiece presented by George III.; various dissenting chapels, a theatre, and buildings of schools and charities. It has a public ground, with an obelisk commemorative of the jubilee of 1820; and S. the town are cavalry barracks. George III. established an hospital for invalid soldiers; and here are a pa. hospital for 12 poor persons, a lying-in charity, royal general dispensary, almshouses, minor charities, with an aggregate annual revenue of about 2877*l*. It has well supplied markets, some trade in corn, and is famous for its ale; but the resources of the inhabitants are almost solely derived from the presence of the court, and the influx of visitors, the latter of whom come to visit the Park, Virginia Water, and the Castle in great numbers. In St George's chapel the great E. window has been filled with magnificent painted glass, and Wolsey's tomb restored in 1864. It sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. elect. 650.—Old Windsor, a pa. 1½ m. E.S.E. New Windsor, crossed by a Roman road from Silchester. Ac. 5401.—P. 1835. Its church contains many handsome monuments, and a new church has been built at Sunning-dale Hill. During the Saxon dynasty a palace existed here, but the royal residence was removed to the present locality by William the Conqueror.—Windsor Castle, the principal residence of the sovereigns of Great Britain, is situated immediately E. of New Windsor. This magnificent structure was originally built by William the Conqueror, and has been embellished by most of the succeeding sovereigns. It covers 12 ac., and is rich in its historical and architectural features. The collections of paintings and articles of vertu are also most valuable. The Great Park of Windsor comprises about 10,000 ac., well stocked with deer, and W. of it is Windsor Forest, 56 m. in circumference. The Little Park, an anc. & beautiful domain, surrounds the castle on two sides, and contains 500 acres.

WOOLWICH, a pa., town, and naval port of England, co. Kent, 9 m. E.S.E. London, with which it is connected by railway. Ac. of pa. 1596. P. (1861) 41,693, chiefly dependent on the government establishments. The town, about 1 m. in length, is on an elevated site, separated from the Thames by the dockyard; it has an old church, a new church, and several chapels; a Scotch church, dissenters' meeting-houses, numerous schools, and a theatre. The dockyard, the most ancient in the kingdom, has some fine new docks. Ships were first built here in Henry VII.'s reign. The dockyard is upwards of 1 mile in length. Here were built several first-rate ships; but from the comparative shallowness of water, this yard is chiefly employed for constructing steamers. Woolwich has the largest arsenal in Britain, covering more than 100 acres, and containing nearly 24,000 pieces of ordnance, besides other warlike materials for the army and navy, a royal laboratory, etc. It is the headquarters of the royal horse and foot artillery, and royal sappers and miners, for whom, and other corps, there are extensive barracks, with a frontage of over 400 yards; and on a fine parade ground, S. the town, are a repository for military models, and an observatory. It is the seat of a royal military academy for engineering and artillery. Woolwich joins with Deptford and Greenwich in returning 2 members to H. of C. Monthly petty sessions are held here. The dockyard may be seen (free) daily, Sundays excepted.

WORCESTER (pronounced Wooster), a city, parl., munic. bor., and co. of England, cap. co. Worcester, on l. b. of the Severn, here crossed by a bridge, 3½ m. N.W. the Spetchley station of the Birm. and Bristol Rail., 25 m. S.W. Birmingham. Area of city and bor., comprising 11 entire parishes, and other subdivisions, 355 ac. P. (1851) 27,528; (1861) 31,227. Alt. 77 feet. Rain-fall 22 inches. The city was formerly enclosed by a wall, some vestiges of which remain; and the college precincts were, in early Saxon times, surrounded by separate fortifications. The cathedral was founded in 680, but the present edifice, with its appendages, dating from the 14th century, is a plain Gothic building, with a central tower 200 feet in height. It is now (1864) being restored at an estim. expense of 60,000. Adjoining it are the cloisters, with residences of the cathedral dignitaries, the chapter-house, with a valuable library, a large ancient hall, now occupied by the King's school, and the bishop's palace. The see of Worcester comprises the cos. Worcester and Warwick, with portions of adjacent cos., in all embracing 362 pas. The churches of St Andrew's, St Clement, and St Nicholas, are handsome buildings, and there are chapels for Roman Catholics, Independents, Friends' meeting-houses, etc. It has a guildhall, county courts, county and city gaols, music hall, market-house, house of industry, county infirmary, public subscription library, museum of nat. hist., and theatre. The royal grammar school, founded by Henry VIII., affords the privilege of competition for 2 exhibitions at Balliol college, Oxford. The free grammar school, founded by Queen Elizabeth, has 14 exhibitions of 30*l.* to the universities and scholarships at Worcester college, and Magdalen hall, Oxford. It has national, Lancasterian, and other endowed schools. Total revenue of charities 438*l.* annually. There are also a female penitentiary, lying-in, ophthalmic, and other medical institutions, humane and other societies; and Worcester is the headquarters of the Provincial Medical Association of Great Britain, and with Glo'ster and Hereford, the place of a triennial musical festival, the proceeds of which are applied to the relief of widows and orphans of the clergy. Principal manufs. china wares, gloves, lace, spirits, leather, nails, and turned wares. There are extensive iron works on the canal and river banks; and the city is the centre of a large trade in corn and hops. Warehouses and quays border the Severn, which is here navigable for large barges, and Worcester is the entrepôt for a large and populous district. It has several banks. The borough is divided into 6 wards, and governed by a mayor, 11 aldermen, and 36 councillors. It sends two members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1864) 2674. It is the place of election of members for the county. Under the name of Caer Guorangan it was one of the principal cities of the ancient Britons, and in the early Saxon period became the second bishopric in Mercia. The troops of Cromwell here obtained a decisive victory over those of Charles I., Sept. 3, 1651. Lord Somers was born at Worcester in 1652.

Germany, between lat. 47° 35' and 49° 35' 30" N., lon. 8° 15' and 10° 30' E.; bounded E. by Bavaria, S. by the Lake of Constance, S.W., W., and N. by Baden; cap. Stuttgart. Length 140 m.; breadth 20 to 100 m. It is divided into the circles Neckar, Black Forest, Danube, and Jaxt. Area and pop. as follows:—

Circles.	Sq. M.	Pop. 1861.
Neckar.	1284	497,375
Black-Forest.	1843	431,676
Danube.	2417	376,753
Jaxt.	1986	414,904
Total.	7530	1,720,708

The territory belongs to the basins of the Rhine and Danube. Its surface is mountainous, except in the S. The principal chain is that of the Alps of Swabia, which unites on the S.W. with the Schwarzwald, and separates the basins of the Neckar and Danube. The highest points are not more than 3800 feet. The principal rivers are the Danube and Neckar, the latter of which drains the greater part of the kingdom. A portion of the Lake of Constance belongs to Würtemberg, and there are many small lakes in the S., the chief of which is the Feder-see. Climate in general temperate and healthy, but variable. Temperature ranges from 77° to 86° in summer, and 5° to 10° Fahr. in winter. The soil is extremely fertile in the valleys of the Tauber, the Neckar and its affluents, and on the Lake of Constance. Agriculture has made rapid progress, and there is an agricultural institute at Holsenheim. The potato, introduced in 1710, is now the principal sustenance of one-fourth of the pop. The cultivation of the vine is limited to the valley of the Neckar and the Tauber, and to the shores of the Lake of Constance. Area of vineyards (1862) 80,000 ac.; value of wine 8,715,941 fl. The Neckar wines are the best; some of the others resemble Rhenish wines. The principal fruits are apples, pears, prunes, and cherries, and fruit trees are cultivated over all the territory; beet-root is grown for the manuf. of sugar; hemp, lint, tobacco, and hops are raised in small quantities. The Alps and the Schwarzwald are covered with vast forests, which yield valuable timber. The rearing of horses, cattle, and sheep is an important branch of industry and trade. The most important branch of industry is the mines, foundries, and salt works, all worked by the state. Iron and coal are abundant. Silver, copper, cobalt, and lead are found in small quantities; and there are quarries of building stones and marble. Würtemberg has many mineral springs; the best frequented baths are those of Wildbad, the only thermal springs in the territory. Salt is an important product, and turf is very abundant.

Manufs. comprise linens, woollens, silks, carpets, hosiery, leather, porcelain, iron and steel goods, and tobacco; breweries and distilleries are numerous. The transit trade is considerable, chiefly by the navigation of the Neckar. In 1863, 330 m. of railway were open. Württemberg has long been favourably distinguished for the number and excellence of its educational establishments. Each commune and even hamlet has its primary school, attendance at which is obligatory on children between the ages of 6 and 14, and the number at school is in the proportion of 1 in 6 of the pop. The university of Tübingen is celebrated, and has an average attendance of 1000 students. There are infant schools in the cap. and several of the larger towns, and an institution for young ladies, normal schools, polytechnic and military schools. Württemberg is a constitutional representative kingdom, governed according to the constitution of 1819, with a diet of 2 chambers. The pop. is almost exclusively German, except a few Jews. In 1861 there were 1,179,814 evangelical Protestants, 527,057 Roman Catholics, 2499 dissenters, and 11,388 Jews. YANG-TSE-KIANG ("Son of the Ocean"), a large river of China, its course lying S. of that of another great river, the Hoang-ho. It is formed by the junction of the Ya-long-kiang and Kincha-kiang rivers, which have their sources in E. Tibet, near those of the Menam-kong and Irrawadi, and which unite on the boundary between the provs. Sze-chuen and Yun-nan, near lat. 26° 30' N., lon. 102° E. Thenceforth the Yang-tse-kiang has a very tortuous E.N.E. course, through the provs. Sze-chuen, Hoo-pe, Ngan-hoei, and Kiang-su; and it joins the sea by an estuary 80 miles across, in lat. 32° N., lon. 121° E. Total course estimated at 3600 miles. It receives numerous large affluents, drains all the central provinces of China, and brings down a great quantity of mud, which has formed several low islands at its mouth, and the whole of the low lands for 100 m. around Shanghai, which is only part of the great delta that reaches Silver Island 180 m. up. It is crossed by the Imperial Canal, by which it communicates with the Hoang-ho river, and with most parts of China-proper. The tide ascends it, when very low, to the lake Po-yang, 520 m. from the sea, beyond which it is navigable for 1000 m., and it may be navigated to 900 m. from its mouth, by ships of the largest class. Area of basin 700,000 sq. m. There is a large steam traffic on it up to Hankow, nearly 700 miles from its mouth, many vessels being 2000 tons burthen. It has a regular annual flooding and fall of 30 to 40 feet at that port, the former reaching its highest in Sept., and the latter its lowest in February. The area of land covered by the flood below Hankow is estimated at four times that of the river, and is navigable for small boats for hundreds of miles during the season. Coal is said to be plentiful in many places along its banks, above Hankow.

YANINA (improperly Joannina, probably the ancient Euræa), a city of European Turkey, cap. prov. Epirus, on the W. side of the Lake of Yanina, 44 m. N. Arta. P. estimated at 36,000, of whom 20,000 are Greeks, and from 6000 to 7000 Jews. It was much more populous before 1820, when it was burnt down by order of Ali Pasha. It has a fortress containing the palace of the pasha, and is the residence of the head collector of customs for Epirus, and of British and other consuls. It had formerly a large trade with Albania, Rumili, etc.; but its commerce has greatly declined.—The Lake of Yanina is 5 m. in length, by 3 m. in greatest breadth. Here are said to be some valuable mines of gold and silver. Annual value of produce about 450,000. Yesso is not considered an integral part of Japan, but a dependency of which the Japanese took possession in consequence of the extension of the Russian dominion into the Ku-rite archipelago. Its inhabitants preserve their own religion, laws, customs, and public offices, though the election of the last has to be confirmed in Japan. Principal city Matsmai, near the S. coast.—The Strait of Yesso, between this island and Kunashir, is 12 m. across.

YESTE, a town of Spain, prov. and 50 m. S.W. Albacete. P. 5900. It has manufs. of woollens. Near it are medicinal baths.

YESTER or GIFFORD, a pa. of Scotland, co. and 4 m. S.S.E. Haddington. Ac. 8847. P. 1033. Copiously wooded, and comprising much fertile and well-farmed land. In it are the vills. Gifford, pop. 458, Long-Yester, and Long-Newton. Near Gifford is Yester House, the seat of the Marquis of Tweeddale.

YETHAN, a river of Scotland. [YTHAN.]

YETHOLM, a pa. of Scotland, in the N.E. part of co. Roxburgh, with two contiguous vills, Kirk and Town Yetholm, connected by a bridge across the Beaumont, near the border of England, dist. and 8 m. S.E. Kelso. Ac. 6036. P. 1207, of whom 902 are in the villages. Kirk-Yetholm is the head-quarters of the Scotch gypsies. Yetholm is governed by a baron-bailie, and has a school-house, and two annual fairs for live stock.

YETHOLM, a pa. of New South Wales, co. Roxburgh, E. Melrose.

YETMINSTER, a pa. of England, co. Dorset, 5½ m. S.W. Sherborne. Ac. 4321. P. 1430.

YEU or YEOU, a considerable river of Central Africa, supposed to flow into Lake Tchad, on W.

YEU, an island, W. of France. [ILE D'YEU.]

YEZD, a city of Persia, cap. prov., near the E. base of a mountain range in the Persian desert, lat. 32° 10' N., lon. 54° 50' E. Its walls are, exclusively of a citadel, separately fortified, and surrounded by a deep trench. Its bazaars are spacious, and it has manufs. of velvets and other silk fabrics, cotton and woollen goods, arms, and loaf-sugar. Provisions are dear, owing to the sterility of the country everywhere around it. Among the pop. are many Parsees or Ghebers (fire-worshippers), this being nearly the only place in Persia which they inhabit.

YGRANDE, a comm. and market town of France, dep. Allier, 18 m. W. Moulins. P. 1862.

YI, a river of South America, Uruguay, flows W., and joins the Rio Negro. Length 120 miles.

YI-CHOW, a town of China, prov. Shan-tung, cap. dep., on the Y-ho, 140 m. S.E. Tsi-nan.

YKI, an island of Japan, in the Strait of Corea, 15 m. N.W. Kiusiu. Length 15 m., breadth 8 m.

YLO, a maritime town of S. Peru, dep. prov. and 35 m. W.S.W. Moquegua, at the mouth of the Ylo in the Pacific Ocean.

YNIESTA, a town of Spain. [HINIESTA.]

YNYS-CYNHALIARN, a pa. of North Wales, co. Carnarvon, 7 m. E. Tremadoc.

YO-CHOW, a city of China, prov. Hoo-nan, cap. dep., at the influx of the lake Tong-ting into the river Yang-tse-kiang.

YOKOHAMA, a foreign settlement in Japan, on the east coast of Nippon Island, in Yedo Bay, with Kanagawa as its port. It is the chief place open to foreign trade, and has been specially laid out for this purpose by the Japanese, who have endeavoured to remove it several times since the Elgin treaty of 1858, by which it was established. Notwithstanding many drawbacks, commerce has gradually increased, and there is now a considerable traffic in tea, silk, cotton, flax, tobacco, oil, wax, timber, sea-weed, dried fish, etc., under British, Dutch, American, Prussian, French, and Russian flags. The trade returns for 1863 exhibit a total value of 3,850,000*l.*, of which 2,149,291*l.* are exports, and 635,731*l.* imports in British ships. The imports are general merchandise, and Peking gold bars amounting to 225,351*l.*; but no return of silver specie is included: it is estimated at 1,800,000*l.*

YOLO, a town of Central Africa, cap. Adamawa, in lat. 9° 28' N., lon. 12° 10' E. It was visited by the traveller, Dr Barth, in his overland journey from the north in 1851, and again by the steamer "Pleiades," which, for the first time, navigated the Benue river in 1854. P. 12,000(?).

YOLO, a co., U. S., N. Amer., California. P. 4716.

YONKERS, a township of the U. S., North America, on the E. bank of the Hudson river, a few miles above New York.

YONNE, Yonna, a river of France, rises in the E. of the dep. Nièvre, flows N. past Clamecy, dep. Auxerre (where it becomes navigable), Joigny, Villeneuve-le-Roi, Sens, Pont-sur-Yonne, and joins the Seine at Montereau. Length 150 m. It is connected with the Seine by the canal of Bourgogne (Burgundy), and with the Loire by that of Nivernais.

YONNE, a dep. of France, in the N.E. formed of part of the old prov. Burgundy, between the deps. Seine-et-Marne, Loiret, Nièvre, Côte-d'Or, & Aube. Area 2868 sq. m. P. (1861) 370,305. Cap. Auxerre. Surface undulating, with rich pasture lands. Chief rivers, the Yonne with its affluents, the Cure, Armançon, and Vannes. Soil rich in grain, and produces excellent wine. Deer, wild boars, and badgers are among the wild animals. Chief mineral products, iron, lithographic stones, and ochre. The department is traversed by the railway from Paris to Lyon. Manufs. woollens and cottons, and beet-root sugar. Exports timber, corn, and wine. The dep. is divided into the arrs. Auxerre, Avallon, Joigny, Sens, and Tonnere.

YORGAN-LADIK, Laodicea Combusta, a large town of Asia-Minor, pash. and 27 m. N.W. Koniah, and famous for manufs. of carpets. It has many antiquities, consisting of altars, etc.

YORK, Eboracum, the second city of England in point of rank, though not in size or commercial importance, a parl. and munic. bor., and co. of itself, cap. co. Yorkshire, near the centre of which it stands, at the junction of the three Ridings and ainsty, on the Ouse, at the influx of the Foss, and at the meeting of railways from Berwick, London, and the central cos., 22 m. N.E. Leeds. Lat. of Minster 53° 57' 43" N.; lon. 1° 4' 49" W. Alt. 53 feet. Area of city 2720 ac. P. (1851) 36,303; (1861) 40,433. The parl. bor. comprises in whole or part 36 pas. and some extra-parochial dists., and is nearly coincident with the municipal bor. P. of bor. 45,385. The city is enclosed by anc. walls, and is entered by five principal and five minor gateways, some of which former are remarkable structures. The Ouse and Foss traverse the interior of the city; the Foss is crossed by four, and the Ouse by two bridges, one of them an elegant iron bridge connecting the railway station with the minster, erected 1862, at a cost of 35,000*l.* Except the castle, occupying nearly 4 acres, between the Ouse and Foss, and containing the county-hall and gaol, most of the public edifices of interest are in the N. of the city. At the head of these is York minster or cathedral, the finest structure of its kind in England, mostly built in the 13th and 14th centuries, 524½ feet in length, and 222 feet in breadth internally, with a great tower 234 feet in height, magnificent W. front flanked by 2 towers 196 feet in height, and richly adorned within. It was set on fire by the lunatic Martin in 1829, and suffered from an accidental fire in 1840, but the injuries have been fully repaired. It has a magnificent peal of 12 bells, presented by the late Dr Beckwith. The see of York comprises the East and West Ridings of the co. and the archdeaconry of Cleveland; the authority of the archbishop extends over the province of York, consisting, with the archbishopric, of the bishoprics of Durham, Carlisle, Chester, Ripon, and Sodor and Man. Revenue of see 10,000*l*. Many of the churches are handsome; St Michael-le-Belfry and St. Martin's are built in the late perpendicular style; All-Saints, St Mary's, Castlegate, St Denis, St Lawrence, St Margaret, and St Mary Bishop-hill the Elder, are all fine structures. The chapter-house; the mansion-house, with an Ionic colonnade and a state-room; the guild hall, a Gothic structure; the assembly-rooms, concert-hall, theatre, buildings of the Yorkshire philosophical society, museum, subscription library; city gaol, Roman Catholic and several other dissenting chapels, and the chief railway station, deserve especial notice amongst the numerous public buildings. Outside of the city are the co. hospital, a lunatic asylum, another and famous institution for the insane, the Retreat, about 1 m. distant, managed by the Society of Friends; the cavalry barracks, and Bishopsthorpe palace, the residence of the archbishop. A fine planted walk extends along the Ouse, and near it are excellent baths. York has several Roman antiquities. Charities are very numerous, & have an aggregate revenue of 4522*l*. It is governed by a lord mayor, and had, until the municipal Reform Act, a corporation, who sat, as in London, in two separate chambers. It is now divided into 6 wards, and has 12 aldermen and 36 councillors. Courts of assize for the city and co. are held in it twice annually, and it has quarter sessions, a court of pleas, and petty sessions, twice weekly. There are several commercial corporations in the city; glass and iron wares, carpets, white and red lead, paper-hangings, and many articles of luxury are manufactured. York has an active trade in the import of coal, but its chief prosperity is due to its being resorted to by the gentry of N. England, as a kind of northern metropolis. It has four banking companies, and a private bank, and two weekly newspapers. It communicates by the North-Eastern Railway with Darlington, Durham, Newcastle, Hull, Scarborough, Whitby, etc.; by the Great Northern, with Doncaster and London; and by the Midland, with Sheffield and Derby. The cattle market was greatly improved in 1856, and fortnightly cattle fairs are held. Horse-races are held twice a year in an excellent course near the city. It sends two members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1864) 4626. York was originally a town of the Brigantes, one of the Brit. tribes, and afterwards the residence of Hadrian, Severus, Constantius Chlorus, Constantine, and other Roman emperors; and the funeral obsequies of Severus, who died there in 212, are supposed to have been performed on Severus-hill, W. the city. It was the chief station of the prov. of Britain. Under the Saxons it was successively the cap. of the kingdoms Northumbria and Deira, which extended as far as the Firths of Forth and Clyde. It suffered greatly for opposing William the Conqueror. In the civil wars it sided actively with the king, but it was equally noted for its opposition to the arbitrary decrees of James II.—Ainsty of York.

(Yorke), a tongue of land, S. Australia, between St Vincent and Spencer Gulfs, N.W. Adelaide. Length 100 m., greatest breadth 80 m. Cape Spencer is its S. extremity.

YORKSHIRE, the largest co. of England, in its N. part, between lat. 53° 18' and 54° 40' N., lon. 0° 10' E. and 2° 37' W., having E. the North Sea, and landward the cos. Durham, Westmoreland, Lancashire, Cheshire, Derby, Notts, and Lincoln, from which last it is mostly separated by the estuary of the Humber. Area 5981 sq. m., or 3,827,847 ac., of which about 2,500,000 are estimated to be productive. Length and breadth about 105 m. P. (1861) 2,015,541. Surface very much diversified; in the N.W. are some of the highest mountains in England (Whernside 2414 feet); elsewhere barren moors alternate with the richest tracts. In the W. are limestone and coals, succeeded towards the E. by lias, oolite, and chalk. Ironstone was discovered in the vale of the Derwent, near Malton, in 1862, and mining was commenced on a large scale in 1864. At Holderness, in King Edward III.'s time, from the nature of the coast, the towns Frismerk, Ravensere, etc., were swallowed up by the sea. Rivers, including the Don, Wharfe, Aire, Ure, Swale, Derwent, and Hull, are all tributaries of the Ouse and Humber, except the Tees, forming the N. boundary, and the Ribble in the extreme W. Principal capes, Flamborough-head and Spurn-head. Yorkshire is an agricultural, a grazing, and a manufacturing county of the first rank.

Large numbers of horses are bred; and the co. supplies many of the cows used in the London dairies. Sheep have been estimated at 1,200,000, and the annual produce of wool at 2800 packs. Swine are numerous, and York is famous for its hams. Properties more subdivided in the N. and W. than in the E. Farms generally small. The W. division of the co. is the chief seat of mining and manufacturing industry, and has woollen, cotton, flax, and silk mills. The co. is divided into N., E., and W. Ridings (a name said to be derived from a Saxon word signifying thirds), each of which sends 2 members to H. of C.; and into the ainsty of the city of York. It is subdivided into 17 wapentakes and 2 liberties, and into 613 parishes. It contains one archi-episcopal city, in the see of which, and that of Ripon, it is mostly comprised; and it has 17 parl. bors. and 59 market towns. Reg. elects. (1864) W. Riding 40,476; N. do. 15,240; E. do. 7241. The E. Riding comprises the hilly district termed the wolds, and much moorland. Ac. 768,419. P. 274,425. It is watered by the Derwent and Hull rivers, and traversed along its S. extremity by the Hull and Selby Railway. It contains the towns Hull, Beverley, Great Driffield, Market-Weighton, Pocklington, and Bridlington. The N. Riding, ac. 1,850,121, pop. (1861) 211,109, is chiefly famous as a grazing country. It contains the rich agricultural dists. Cleveland and Ryedale, and has mines of alum and lead, with freestone and marble quarries. Principal rivers, the Ure, Swale, and Tees; and it is traversed by the Gt. N. of England Railway, and the lines from York to Whitby and Scarborough. Within it are the towns Northallerton (which may be considered its cap.), Boroughbridge, Richmond, Thirsk, Stokesley, Kirkby-Moorside, Pickering, Scarborough, and Whitby. The W. Riding comprises all the S. and W. parts of Yorkshire, and borders on 6 other cos. Ac., excluding ainsty, 1,709,307. P. 1,530,007. Surface very irregular, and it contains some of the best land and most picturesque scenery in England. Principal rivers, the Wharfe, Calder, Aire, Don, and Ribble; and it is intersected by numerous canals and by railways between all of its large towns. Principal crop wheat. Timber is plentiful, and a large part of the surface is in pasture. The valuable coalbeds around Leeds, Sheffield, Bradford, and Wakefield have been a main source of the prosperity of those towns; iron, stone, and lead, at Grassington & Pateley Bridge, are also abundant. In manufacturing industry this Riding has importance equal to that of S. Lancashire. Leeds, Bradford, Huddersfield, Halifax, Wakefield, and Dewsbury are the great seats of the English woollen manufacture; flax-spinning is extensively carried on at Leeds; Sheffield has manufactures of the best cutlery and hardwares; and Rotherham possesses large ironworks. Besides the above named towns, Pontefract, Barnsley, Doncaster, Bawtrey, Thorne, Goole, Selby, Wetherby, Otley, Knaresborough, Ripley, Ripon, and Skipton are in this Riding.

Area about 70,000 sq. m. P. estimated at 2,500,000. Towns numerous and large, many of them 10 or 12 m. in circumference, and containing thousands of houses. The seaboard supplies palm oil, and the interior is rich in shee-butter, and ivory; and is now (1864) covered with cotton plantations. The principal port is Lagos, which became a British possession in 1861. The state is constantly engaged in petty wars and human sacrifice, and the slave trade still exists.

YOUGHAL (pronounced You'all), a pa., parl. munic. bor., and seaport town of Ireland, Munster, co. and 27 m. E. Cork, on the W. side of the estuary of the Blackwater, which forms its harbour. Ac. of pa. 4830. P. (1861) 8378. Ac. of parl. bor. 504. P. 6514. Altitude 19 feet. It was formerly enclosed by walls flanked with towers. The town is antiquated. It has a parish church, a chapel of ease, Roman Catholic & other chapels, the town-house, assembly rooms, court-house, custom-house, savings' bank, fever and lying-in hospitals, prison, barracks, and the house of Sir Walter Raleigh, which is preserved nearly entire. The harbour, a dependency of that of Cork, admits at highest tides vessels drawing 12 ft. water, and Youghal is the seat of an export trade in corn, live-stock, and other rural produce, and imports coal, timber, tallow, herrings, salt, and colonial produce. It has some potteries, brickworks, and a salmon fishery.—Youghal sends 1 member to H. of C. Reg. electors 223. ZANZIBAR or ZANGUEBAR, an island off the E. coast of Africa. Lat. of town 6° 27' 7" S.; lon. 39° 33' E. Length of island about 40 m., breadth 15 m. P. 300,000, consisting of Arabs, Sowly Africans, and Negro slaves. The island is the metropolis of the Iman of Muscat's possessions on E. coast of Africa. The town called Shangani is situated on a low point of sand, has a wooden fort, and is irregularly built. P. about 60,000. The climate is not unhealthy, but the excessive humidity, added to there being no cold season, renders it exceedingly enervating. Mean temp. of year 79°. Rainfall 167 inches. It has a large French hospital. A considerable trade is carried on with Arabia and the ports in the Red Sea. In the town is a bazaar. Ship-building, stone-masonry, carpentering, goldsmiths', silversmiths', coppersmiths', & blacksmiths' work, besides manufactures of inferior cotton goods and trinkets, are carried on. Between the W. shore of the island and the mainland are dangerous shoals, and several islets, the largest of which is Tumbal. The harbour of Zanzibar is commodious, and perfectly safe at all seasons, being protected on the N. and W. sides by four small islands, connected by coral reefs. The supply of fresh water is abundant and pure. Prevalent winds S., W., and E. Zanzibar is now the chief market in the world for the supply of ivory, gum-copal, and cloves. In 1859, 80 vessels (tonnage 23,340) entered and cleared the port. Imports consist chiefly of American, English, and Indian cottons, cowries, hides, salt fish, rice, beads, ghee, muskets, gunpowder, sandal wood, bullion, etc.; value (1859) 908,911. Exports comprise ivory, cloves, gum-copal, hides, cowries, sesamum, cocoa nuts & oil, red pepper, etc.; value (1859) 755,666. The cloves are entirely the produce of the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba. The first clove trees were introduced in 1840 from the Mauritius; being found to thrive, they were extensively planted, and their cultivation has now almost superseded that of sugar and rice, which were formerly the chief products of these islands. The average crop of cloves is about 7,000,000 lbs., valued at 80,000*l.* Cotton and sugar-cane grow in great perfection, but are not exported.
