In this edition the entire work has been arranged afresh, so as to render it more easy of reference: the volume has been recomposed, and it is printed in a new and very legible type. The alterations rendered necessary by the progress of geographical discovery, the political changes, and the commercial development of countries, are so great as to leave but little of the original matter as it was. A reference to a few of the more recent changes will explain this. In Europe, the kingdom of Italy was re-constructed in 1861; names of provinces lately in ordinary use have become historical, and others have been substituted in their places. The kingdom of the Two Sicilies, and several principalities and dukedoms, have been merged in the new kingdom of Italy, where, in the struggle for independence, many towns and villages, previously obscure, have acquired importance. France has added to her dominions the new departments of Savoie, Haute Savoie, and Alpes Maritimes. The Danubian Principalities have been united under the name of "Rumania." The Ionian Islands have been transferred to Greece; and Denmark and the duchies have changed their relations. In Asia, Russian surveys and explorations have opened up a new world in the centre of the continent; and Russian aggression has added such names as Transbaikal, Primorsk, Nicolaivsk, and Marinsk, to geographical nomenclature. The very recent formation of the "Central Provinces" in India, has given precision to the boundaries of a large portion of the Deccan. The arrangement of the south-eastern provinces, British Burma, Pegu, Aracan, and Tennasserim, and the incorporation of the "Straits Settlements," have extended and defined the limits of the British Empire in the East; while the new French settlement at Sai-gon gives an interest to the region of Lower Cochin-China. The opening of the "Treaty Ports" of China and Japan has given prominence to the names of many places formerly little known. The division of Oceania, the island world of the Pacific, into Australasia, Malaysia, Polynesia, and Micronesia, greatly facilitates reference to the several groups. Many names have been added to the topography of Australia since it has been traversed from south to north, and since the settlement of the vast province of Queensland. The addition of Hawke Bay, Marlborough, and Southland, has been made to the provinces of New Zealand. Many African names have been rendered familiar by the discoveries of LIVINGSTONE, BURTON, SPEKE, BARTH, and others, in the region of the Zambesi and the Nile; and by the French in Algeria and the Sahara, on its borders. In North America, British territory has extended beyond Columbia to the new settlement of Stuckeen. In the west central regions of the United States many of the former territories have been converted into states; and the new regions of Idaho, Arizona, etc., have been incorporated into the Union. In the Northern and Southern States many places have acquired a historical interest since the commencement of the civil war; and Mexico has become an empire. South America has re-named "the Granadian" and "Argentine" Confederations, and added the new Chilean province of Llanquihue, and many others.

The Notes on climate, temperature, and rainfall, have been much extended in this edition; and in the articles on the British Islands, the altitudes of towns and interesting localities have been inserted, as deduced from the levelling tables of the Ordnance Trigonometrical Survey, lately completed. The principal articles on countries and states have been enlarged, and many new places entered for the first time; and by a rigorous economy of space this has been accomplished with very little addition to the bulk of the volume. Great exertions have been made to secure the latest statistical information on the exports, imports, revenue, expenditure, armies and navies of states, and of the colonial possessions of Great Britain, France, and other countries. The notices of all the great commercial and manufacturing centres, as Glasgow, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, etc., have been re-written from materials furnished by eminent local authorities, and brought up to the present time. Populations throughout are given according to the latest census returns of each country, the dates of which are stated at the head of the tables, and generally in all places of more than 10,000 inhabitants. In consequence of the war, the United States Government has not published the detailed census of 1860, but the populations of the several states, territories, counties, and cities, are given as at that date. In countries where no enumeration of the people exists, the latest and most careful estimates have been adopted. In this edition the distance in miles of the shortest sea routes between the ports of Great Britain and those of other maritime regions, and the shortest time occupied in the voyage, have been inserted from the tables of the Board of Trade. The brief historical notices have been brought up to the time of publication, and every fact and figure has been subjected to careful revision. With these and other improvements, it is hoped the work will now be found more full of useful information, and more free from errors than in any former edition. The author begs, in conclusion, to offer his sincere thanks to the numerous friends and correspondents who have favoured him with valuable facts and emendations in the course of his labours. He would especially refer to Professor H. D. Rogers, formerly of Boston, U. S.; the Rev. Robert Hunter, late of Nagpore; the Rev. A. Mackay, A.M., author of the "Manual of Geography;" the Rev. H. T. Robjohns, B.A., of Newcastle; Samuel Mossman, Esq., late of Shanghae; Dr Scoresby-Jackson, F.R.S.E., author of "Medical Climatology;" James Newlands, Esq., Liverpool; and the late Dr Strang of Glasgow, who have each contributed important materials relative to the countries or districts to which their studies have been more especially directed.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

THIS work is intended to supply what was generally felt to be a desideratum—a GEOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY, embracing within a convenient space, and of easy reference, a much greater number of names than is usually found in similar books, even when extending to several volumes; arranged according to a uniform and methodical plan, and combining, with the utmost attainable accuracy, the most authentic information up to the present time. The Author was induced to engage in this arduous undertaking, from a persuasion that his previous studies would afford him facilities for its execution, such as few have enjoyed, and from his being possessed of an extensive and valuable collection of Books, Maps, and Notes, relating to every portion of the globe. He has endeavoured to render these materials available for the production of a Standard Book of General Geographical Reference, by compressing every article into the smallest space consistent with distinctness, by the adoption of a simple method of abbreviation, and by classing under one entry many places of the same name. Books of this kind are often chargeable with great inaccuracy in their statements of the positions and bearings of places. This may, in part, be accounted for by the difficulty of ascertaining the proper value of foreign measurements; but it is owing chiefly to such works being mere copies of previously existing and erroneous compilations. The only remedy for this serious defect was found to be a constant reference to the best maps. Accordingly, in this Work, for the first time it is believed, the plan has been systematically followed of determining by measurement, the position, extent, and bearing of every place described. No previously existing dictionary has been followed either in method or matter; every article has been written expressly for this work from original materials, and it will be found to contain many valuable notices from recent geographical and statistical works not otherwise accessible to the English reader.

It formed part of the plan of the work to enter every place under its proper name, and to spell it according to the best writers of the country to which it refers; thus French, Italian, Spanish, and German names are uniformly so written and accentuated, but the foreign name is immediately followed by the English one, as München (Munich), Wien (Vienna), under the latter of which, places are generally described as being best known in this country. For eastern names the system of spelling adopted by the Royal Geographical Society has been strictly followed. The more important places only in ancient geography, such as towns of which ruins remain, have been inserted in alphabetical order, but the ancient names of modern places are uniformly given where they are ascertained. The old provinces of France, Spain, and the Netherlands, the circles of the German Empire, and the countries forming the French Empire under Napoleon I., which, though now superseded by other divisions, are still often referred to, are described in the order of the alphabet. In so far as the limited space would permit, accurate notices have been given of the geology and physical geography, the meteorological and mineralogical conditions of countries and districts. Great care has been taken to ascertain the true elevation of mountains, cities, and places above the level of the sea, and wherever foreign authorities have been relied on, their measurements have been uniformly rendered into English equivalents. In a book comprising such a great multiplicity of facts, derived from works written in many different languages, in each of which a different standard of measurement is used, and in which the statements are often vague and sometimes contradictory, it is impossible altogether to avoid errors and omissions. For these, allowance will be most readily made by those who are best able to detect and remedy them. But from the plan on which this work has been conducted, and the scrupulous care bestowed on every portion of its progress, it is hoped that these will be found to be unimportant.

DISTANCES STATED DIRECT, where not otherwise mentioned. MEASUREMENTS are stated in English feet and English miles. TEMPERATURE is given according to the scale of Fahrenheit's thermometer.

The name in italics after the leading word generally expresses the ancient name of a place, but sometimes it indicates a variety of the national name.

In compound names the leading word is generally given under the specific letter with the prefix following, as IVES (St); but in some instances the prefix forms the leading word, as in SAN, SANTA, SANTO, SAO (Saint), etc.; and in the United States of North America, NEW, WEST, etc.

THE POPULATIONS, AREAS, DISTANCES, ELEVATIONS ABOVE THE SEA, TEMPERATURE and CAPITALS OF COUNTRIES, will be found near the beginning of each article. Historical notices and distances of sea-ports, with average length of voyage from British ports, near the end.

73,805. The parl. bor. proper consists of two towns, 1 m. apart, viz.—I. Old Aberdeen (more accurately Aberdon, from Celtic Aber, 'mouth of' and the river name), near the river Don, here crossed by two bridges. Its old pa. is now subdivided into 5 parishes. Chief buildings, the cathedral erected about 1357, King's College, founded in 1505, a town-house, and trades' hospital. Old Aberdeen has little trade, and depends for support mostly on the university.

—II. Aberdeen, situated on rising ground upon the N. bank of the Dee, near its mouth, 1 m. S. Old Aberdeen, is a handsome city, with spacious streets and houses built of granite. Chief edifices, town house, court house, and prison, a cross erected in 1686, a market, two bridges across the Dee, and one over a ravine within the city, several churches, schools, and hospitals, the county rooms, music hall, and Marischal College—all elegant public buildings. Has a good harbour. At its entrance is Girdleness lighthouse, with two lights. Aberdeen has manufs. of cotton, linen, woollen goods, carpets, combs, machinery, rope, leather, paper, soap, and sail-cloth, with iron-foundries, breweries, distilleries, and granite polishing works; a foreign and coasting trade, latter, especially with London, to which it sends cattle, salmon, provisions, and granite. Exports (1862) amounted to 14,111. Customs revenue (1862) 92,963l. Reg. shipping (1862) 254; tonnage 76,619. Steamers 15; tonnage 3660. Aberdeen sends one member to the House of Commons. Corporation rev. (1862) 11,307l. Inhabited houses 5917; value of real property (1857-8) 179,072l. King's College and Marischal College, founded by Geo. Keith, fifth Earl Marischal, in 1593, were united by the Scottish University Act of 1858, into the University of Aberdeen. It now has 21 professors, and above 600 students. There are 8 scholarships of 65l. each, and about 200 bursaries, worth from 5l. to 30l. each. There are large libraries and museums connected with the university. Mean temp. ABYSSINIA, ABESSINIA, or HABESH, an extensive country on the eastern coast of Africa, lying between lat. 8° 30', and 16° 30' N.; lon. 34° 40', and 43° 30' E., bounded on the N.W. by Nubia, N.E. by the Red Sea, S. by the country of the Gallas, and W. by the regions of the upper Nile. Estim. area 245,000 sq. m. P. 4,500,000. (?) It is a hilly region, rising from low arid districts on the borders of the Red Sea, in ranges of lofty mountains, with table-lands intersected by valleys. In the Samen mountains, inclosed by the sources of the Takazze river, Abba Jared is 15,000, and Ras Detchen, 15,986 feet high. The Lamalmon mountains form a long but broken chain running S.E. and N.W. The highest mountains are covered with snow nearly all the year. The table-lands form three distinct groups or terraces, rising one above the other from the shores of the Red Sea. The plain of Tigré, between the Mareb and Takazze rivers, has mountain peaks rising to 9000 ft. The plain of Amhara, separated from the foregoing by the Samen mountains, has a mean elevation of 8000 ft. The country sinks to the unexplored regions of the west. The largest rivers are the Abai (Bahr-el-Azrek or Blue River), Takazze or Atbarrah, and the Hawash. The former, which is an eastern branch of the Nile, rises in the Mountain of Giesh (9700 feet), flows first N. to the Lake of Dembea, through which it has a perceptible current, and sweeps southward round the province of Gojam, then northward to Khaftum, where it unites with the Bahr-el-Abiad or White River, which is the true Nile. The Takazze has its rise near the centre of Abyssinia, and after draining the mountains of Samen and Tigré, it falls into the Nile. The Hawash originates in the Fine Finnie Mountain, lat. 9° S., and flowing N.E. towards the Red Sea, is lost in Lakes Abbebad and Anssa. The Mareb rises in the mountains of Taranta, lat. 15° N., and flowing parallel to the Takazze, is afterwards lost in the sand. The Dembea or Tzana Lake is the largest in Abyssinia. It is 50 m. long, 30 broad, and 6120 feet above the sea. It is fed by several rivulets, and abounds in small islands. The small salt lake of Assal, near the east coast, is 570 feet below the level of the Gulf of Tajurrah. Abyssinia presents almost every variety of climate, from burning heat on the coast, to severe cold on the mountains. The temperature of the lowlands in summer varies from 115° to 120° in the shade. On the table-lands the air is pure and bracing, whilst in the valleys the heat is suffocating. Soil very fertile, in some places producing three crops yearly; vegetation increasing as it rises from the sandy coast. The rainy season begins on the coast at the latter end of October, and in the interior about the end of February, the river Takazze being swollen from April to September. On the table-lands there is extensive pasturage, and cedar forests on the mountain tops. The fruits are the date, orange, lemon, pomegranate, and banana. On the western mountains coffee grows wild; and on the declivities the cotton plant abounds. In other parts, sugar-cane, vine, wheat, barley, teff (Poa-Abyssinica, of which is made the bread in general use), and all kinds of esculent vegetables are cultivated. Myrrh, senna, and other medicinal plants are plentiful. Most of the European domestic animals are found here. Horses are strong and active, and oxen plentiful. The number of mules brought from the interior annually is about 1200. The Galla ox has horns four feet long. Sheep and goats are numerous. Wild animals comprise the two-horned rhinoceros, elephant, striped hyæna, lion, panther, leopard, wolf, lynx, cameleopard, zebra, quagga, camel, and monkey. Birds of all kinds abound, besides serpents, crocodiles, and hippopotami. The bee is much cared for, honey being an important article of food. The ravages of locusts are terrible. In a geological point of view, Abyssinia presents remarkable features, extinct volcanoes, hot springs, deposits of sulphur, rock salt, and malachite. Minerals are granite, slate, gneiss, antimony, iron, gold, and silver. E. of Tigré is an extensive plain of salt, which is pure and hard. The Abyssinians are Coptic Christians, but their religion is of a very corrupt form. There are, besides, many Mohammedans and Jews. The natives are rude and barbarous; being continually engaged in war, human life is not respected. Agriculture is chiefly followed by the people. Manufs. comprise leather, parchment, cotton cloths, tapestry of wool and goats' hair, and implements of iron and brass. Imports, lead, tin, copper, silk, gunpowder, glass, Indian goods, Persian carpets, French cloths, and coloured skins from Egypt. Exports ivory, gold, slaves, cattle, musk, coffee, hides, cotton, mules, and honey. The slave trade is carried on by the Mohammedan population, though it is not sanctioned by the king. There is no good harbour, no roads nor navigable rivers to facilitate intercourse with the interior, hence the traffic is carried on by caravans, and travellers are exposed to the attacks of wild hordes, and subjected to high taxes. About 20,000 dollars are annually expended in the country. Money being scarce, trade is carried on by barter. Abyssinia is divided into several independent states, the most important of which are Tigré, Amhara, and Shoa.

ADELAIDE, the capital of the British colony of South Australia, on the Torrens River, 6 m. S.E. from its port. Lat. 34° 55' S.; lon. 138° 38' E. P. (1860) 17,933. The Torrens is crossed by bridges, which divide the city into North and South Adelaide. It is laid out in squares and terraces, and the streets intersect each other at right angles. The first settlement was made in 1836, and the survey of the town lands was completed in March 1837. The progress of the city has been rapid. At first it consisted of a few huts of straw and mud covered with canvas. Gradually edifices of a more imposing character came into existence. Under the auspices of the corporation, various improvements of a public nature were from time to time effected. It is surrounded by a public demesne, termed the "Park Land," comprising 1940 acres. The city has a governor's house, government offices, post office, jail, three banks, besides a savings bank, court house, railway and telegraph stations, theatre, hospital, lunatic and destitute asylums, exchange, and a botanic garden. It has Episcopalian, Roman Catholic, Presbyterian Independent, Baptist, Unitarian, Methodist, and German Lutheran churches; a Friend's meeting-house, Jews' synagogue, and numerous schools. Manufactures—woollens, machinery, soap, and candles; breweries, tanneries, carriages, iron and brass foundries, potteries, saw mills, and flour mills. There are two daily and two weekly newspapers published. Water is conveyed by service pipes from a reservoir on the Torrens. The city is divided, for municipal purposes into four wards, and it is lighted with gas. Adelaide is connected with several other towns by railway, and an extensive system of telegraphs are in operation. The quickest voyage to Adelaide by a sailing vessel was from Plymouth in 77 days, on the great circle route. The average voyage is 100, and by steamers 60 days. Distance to England 11,400 nautical m.—Port-Adelaide harbour has a patent slip and ship-building yard, and a light ship is moored at its entrance.

Its fortifications, from natural advantages, are considered impregnable. Numerous mosques attest its former magnificence. Aden is badly supplied with brackish water from the adjacent plain: a condensing apparatus is used by the residents. It rains only once in three years, when it descends copiously for 15 or 20 days, in September: to husband the rain-water, the British have constructed a system of reservoirs in a rocky ravine, at the cost of 1,000,000*l.*, which are calculated to supply the inhabitants during the dry season. Before the rise of Mocha, it was chief trading port of Arabia. Climate moist & equable. Mean temp. in May, June, and July, 90° to 94° F.; May and September are the most unhealthy months. It has an excellent harbour on W. side of point. Chief coaling station of the steamboat passage to India, and has a magnetic observatory. Shortest sea-track from Liverpool, 9885 miles.

Lat. 41° 41' 17" N.; lon. 26° 35' 41" E. P. 140,000, of prov. 1,800,000. Area 9567 sq. m. Considered as the second cap. of the empire. It was once surrounded by a wall, now in ruins. It has an arsenal, a cannon foundry, caravanseries and bazaars. On the rt. b. of the Tundja is situated the Eski-Serai, the old palace of the sultans, now decayed. Excellent wines are made in its vicinity and there are large fields of roses for the manuf. of "attars," or essence of roses. Manufs. silks, woollens, and linens, has dye works, tanneries, and an active commerce in manufactured goods, the chief outlet for which is the port of Enos. It was the cap. of the Ottoman empire from 1366 to 1453. Hadrianopolis was founded by the emperor Hadrian on the site of the anc. Orestia.

ADRIATIC SEA (Ital. Mare Adriatico) or GULF OF VENICE, is that part of the Mediterranean which extends from the S.E., at lat. 40° to the N.W., at lat. 45° 46' N., between the coasts of Italy, Illyria, and Albania. It takes its name from the city of Adria, and forms on the W. the Gulf of Manfredonia, on the coast of Naples. The N.W. part bears the name of the Gulf of Venice. On the E. side are the Gulfs of Triest, Fiume, and Cattaro, on the coast of Austria, and of Drino in Albania. The water of this sea contains more salt than that of the ocean, and the influence of the tides is little felt. It has many shoals, and its muddy shores are covered with unwholesome marshes. Greatest depth 22, and great part of it less than 12 fathoms. On the Dalmatian side are beautiful strands formed by islands which environ the coast, affording to vessels a secure retreat from storms. During summer the navigation of the gulf is safe, because the prevailing wind is favourable for leaving it, but in winter the S.E. winds cause much destruction. The Adriatic receives few rivers of importance, except the Adige and the Po. Greatest length, from Cape Leuca to Trieste, 450 m., mean breadth, 90 m.

ÆFGHANISTAN, Afghan-land (the Ariana of the Greeks), an inland country of Asia, between lat. 26° 50' and 36° 30' N.; lon. 60° and 72° 30' E., having E. the Punjab, S. Bwhalpoor, Sinde, and Beloochistan, W. the Persian dominion, and

N. Independent Turkestan, from which it is separated by the Hindoo Koosh, 20,000 feet high. Area estimated at 225,000 sq. m., and the pop. at 5,120,000. Four-fifths of the country consist of rocks and mountains. From the table-land in the N., mountain ranges extend to the S.E. and W., 15,000 to 16,000 feet in height, and enclosing valleys and plains, some of which are fertile and well watered. The S.W. part of the country is a desert, with an elevation of 3000 to 5000 feet. Chief rivers the Cabool, Helmund, Gomul, and Lora, but none of great size. The only lake of consequence is that of Ab-istada. From the difference in elevation of surface there is a great diversity of climate in this region. The heat in the S.W. is extreme, while in Cabool and Ghuznee in the N.E., it is moderate. Rain falls for 4 or 5 weeks in summer over a great part of the country, except in the E. table-land, where it is very deficient. Snow falls in winter, and the higher mountains are always snow-clad. The vegetation in the low lands is like that of India; rice, cotton, the sugar-cane, millet, maize, and turmeric, are grown. In the uplands the timber-trees, herbs, and fruits of Europe, grow wild; and wheat, barley, beans, turnips, mustard, and artificial grasses, are cultivated. Cabool excels in the variety and excellence of its fruits. Gold, silver, mercury, iron, lead, copper, antimony, coal, sulphur, and naphtha, are met with. Plumbago is found in the N., and saltpetre and alum abound. Arts and husbandry are in a low condition; manufs. of cotton, woollen, silk stuffs, saddlery, harness, and cattle trappings, for home use. Sheep and goats are abundant, producing a fine shawl wool. Imports cottons, indigo, muslins, silks, brocade, ivory, wax, sandal-wood, sugar, and spices from India; horses, gold, silver, cochineal, and broad cloth from Turkestan; cutlery & hardware, from Russia; silks, cottons, embroidery, and chintz from Persia; slaves from Arabia and Abyssinia; silks, tea, porcelain, dyes, and precious metals overland from China; dates and cocoa-nuts from Beloochistan. Exports madder, assafetida, tobacco, fruits, horses, furs, shawls, and chintz, to India; shawls, turbans, indigo, and other Indian produce, to Turkestan; and the same articles, with Heratcarpets, to Persia. Transit trade is conducted by means of camels and horses, the employment of wheeled vehicles being impracticable. The population comprises Belooches, Usbeks, Huzarehs, Eimauks, Persians, and Hindoos, but mostly the Afghan race, and Mohammedans of the Sunnite sect. The Afghans are true highlanders, divided into tribes or clans, the most noted of which are the Dooraunes and Ghiljies; the Lahonees are the principal traders. Many ancient monuments have lately been discovered, chiefly two colossal statues in the valley of Bamian, and coins from B.C. 256 to A.D. 1000. The country is subdivided into the three separate principalities of Cabool, Candahar, and Herat. Chief cities Cabool, Candahar, Herat, Peshawer, Jelalabad, and Ghuznee.

AFIUM-KARA-HISSAR (Black Castle of Opium), a city of Asia Minor, Anatolia, cap. Sanjiack, 50 m. S.S.E. Kutaiyah. P. estim. at 60,000. (?) It has a citadel, mosques, baths, khans, manufs. of felts, carpets, arms, saddlery, and trade in opium.

AFKA, Apheca, a vill. of Lebanon, Metawely, in a valley at the sources of the Nahr Ibrahim (Adonis). Ruins of temple to Venus and Adonis.

AFRAGOLA, a comm. of South Italy, cap. cant., prov. and 6 m. N.N.E. Naples. P. (1861) 16,493. With extensive manufactures of straw bonnets.

AFRICA, Libya, one of the great divisions of the globe, forming a vast peninsula, joined to Asia by the Isthmus of Suez, and separated from Europe by the Strait of Gibraltar, bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by the Red Sea and Indian Ocean, S. and W. by the Atlantic. Its extreme points are, N. Cape Bugiaron, in Algeria, lat. 37° 6' N.; lon. 6° 26' E.; S. Cape Agullias, lat. 34° 49' S.; lon. 20° E.; W. Cape Verd, lat. 14° 43' N.; lon. 17° 34' W.; and E. Cape Guardafui, lat. 11° 50' N.; lon. 51° 16' E. Length about 4300, and extreme breadth 4000 m. Area estim. at 11,376,000 sq. m., and pop. at 60,000,000. It is divided near its centre by the equator, and the greater part of it lies within the tropics.—Orography. A border of high and mountainous land, with partial interruptions, extends round the edge of the continent, while the interior is occupied by plateaus from the parallel of 4° or 5° N. to the Cape Colony, and by plains from the same parallel to the Sahara in the N. and the plateau of Abyssinia in the E. On the N.W., Mount Atlas range covers a large portion of Morocco and Algeria, rising in Mount Miltzin to 11,400 feet. From Tunis to the delta of the Nile, the shores are low, except at Jebel Acdar, in lon. 20° E. From the Nile delta a series of terrace-formed rocky hills stretches S. along the shores of the Red Sea to the alpine region of Abyssinia, in which Ras Detschen is 15,986, and Abba Jarret 15,000 ft. above the sea. From Abyssinia to the equator, the coast country is high, rising 6500 ft. on the N. shore of the Somali country. In E. equatorial Africa the land rises from the coast range to the Sources of the Nile, where lake Nyanza is 3713 feet; and S.W. of it the mountains of the moon are 6000 to 8000 feet above the sea. Between the parallels of 15° and 16° S., the Milange hills along the E. shores of lake Shirwa are about 7000 feet high. S. of the equator the peaks of Kenia and Kilimindjaro are supposed to be 20,000 feet, and snow-clad. The coast region continues high to the S.; but where disrupted by the Zambeze river, it is only 600 to 800 feet. S. of the Zambeze the Compass Berg, highest point in Cape Colony, is 10,200 feet. The high ridge is continued W. through the centre of the Cape Colony to the Orange River; and Table Mountain, at the S.W. of the continent, is 3816 feet high. The mountain zone stretches northward between the coast and the Kalahari desert; and in Damara Land, Omatako mountain rises to 8739 feet. The border-land continues high to the right of Biafra, where the Camaroon mountains are 13,129 feet above the sea. Beyond the delta of the Niger are King William mountains, 2000 to 3000 feet; Soracte mountains, 1278 feet; Rennel mountains, 3200 feet; and the Kong mountains, 2000 to 3000 feet. The high border land terminates abruptly in Senegambia, leaving a wide expanse of nearly level desert between this and Morocco. Africa is remarkable for its vast extent of desert; in the N. the region of the Sahara, from the Atlantic Ocean to the Nile, is, in its W. portion, an immense region of sand; but in the centre and E. it is traversed by hills, and a sandstone plateau 1000 to 1400 feet above the sea, with green and fertile oases. S. of Tripoli the surface varies from 1000 feet to a plateau of 4000 or 5000 feet. S.W. of Mourzouk, similar heights, interspersed with valleys, extend S. to the country of Air or Asben. The table-land of Agades is 2000 feet; but, in the high land of Soudan, Mt. Gediwo is 3000, Mt. Mindif, S. of lake Tchad, 6000, and Mt. Atlantika 10,000 feet high. From this point the central region, within 5° on each side of the equator, is still unexplored.

Barth describes a great portion of Negroland as low, and shallow water-courses characterize N. Central Africa, formerly considered a dry elevated waste. The interior of S. Africa, explored by Livingstone, has the form of an elevated trough, the outer mountainous border enclosing an immense region of undulating and fertile table-land, with high and well-defined watersheds through which flows the Zambeze, the main stream of a river system, between lat 10° and 20° S., traversing the interior. S.W. of this region the Kalahari desert, not quite destitute of vegetation, is 3600 feet high, sloping towards the Orange river, where it is 2000 feet. W. of the Kalahari desert, Namaqua land extends for 148,000 sq. m., a barren desolate region. S. of the Orange river, the Karoo plain is an arid tract 200 m. long and 50 broad. S. of this, and N. of the Cape mountains, the table-land is 600 feet high, and in part cultivated.—Hydrography. Of the rivers which flow N. to the Mediterranean, the Nile is by far the most important; those of Marocco and Algeria, though numerous, having only short courses. To the Atlantic flow the waters of the Senegal, the Niger or Quorra, Congo or Zaire, Coanza, Orange or Gariep; and to the Indian ocean, the Jubb, Zambeze, Limpopo, and Great Fish rivers. The principal lakes are Victoria Nyanza, the source of the Nile, and Tanganyika, 1800 feet above the sea, in the E. Nyassa and Shirwa in the basin of the Zambeze in the S.E. Tchad is in the centre of N. Africa. Dembea, in Abyssinia; Melgij, in Algeria; Dilolo, on the watershed between the rivers which flow E. to the Zambeze, and W. to the Congo, 4000 feet above sea level; and Ngami, in lat. 20° 19' S., 2825 feet above the sea.—Climate. Africa is mostly within the tropics; and, from the nature of its surface, is the hottest of all the continents. The maximum temperature of the globe occurs N. of the equator, where, within an elliptical space between lake Tchad and the Red Sea, the mean annual temp. is 81°, and that of July 90°, Fahr., but it is subject to great changes; and over the whole of the Sahara it varies 80°, from maximum to minimum, and ice is often formed. The centre of S. Africa has a distinct winter cold, varying with latitude; and in the central parts of the Cape Colony the cold in winter is often severe, and the ground is covered with snow. N. Africa comprises a considerable portion of the great rainless belt of the old world; yet rain falls periodically in torrents, even in some parts of the desert. In S. Africa, rain sometimes pours for months together; and in Sierra Leone, on the W., the rain-fall amounts to 189 inches a year. Hot winds, called the Simoom and the Harmattan, prevail in the N. and W. of Africa.—In Vegetation, the products of this vast continent are abundant and varied; wherever nature or art supplies water, there vegetable life flourishes with the greatest exuberance. On the Atlas range, and the borders of the Sahara, the date-tree yields the staple food of the inhabitants; and a strip of country there is called the "land of dates." The Adansonia digitata is the most common tree in the centre of N. Africa, and the tamarind tree is the chief ornament of Negroland. The banyan tree (Ficus indica), the sago palm, oil palm, sugar cane, coffee, tobacco, and cotton, are found from the S. border of the Sahara to the valley of the Zambeze, where the grape-bearing vine grows wild. Rice is cultivated in the moist countries of Negroland, and wheat has been introduced.—Zoology. The animal kingdom is still more varied and original than the vegetable; nearly all the species of the old world are represented in their best varieties. Domestic animals are the horse of Barbary and Arabia, the Cape buffalo, the mule of Senegal, and the zebra; and, among wild animals, the lion, elephant, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, giraffe, camel, gazelle, antelope, and monkey. The forests abound in parrots of bright plumage; the ostrich and many other birds are peculiar to Africa. The crocodile is the chief reptile, and there are few poisonous serpents. Among many thousands of insects, the locust is the most destructive; and a venomous fly, called the tsetze, whose bite is fatal to nearly all domestic animals, abounds in the S.—The Mineral products comprise gold and iron. Coal was extracted near Mozambique in 1858.—Topography. The great divisions of Africa are: on the N. Barbary, Egypt, and the great desert Sahara; on the W. Senegambia, Upper and Lower Guinea; on the E. Nubia, Abyssinia, the newly discovered "Country of the Moon," the coast of Ajan, Zanguebar, Mozambique, and Caffraria; and on the S. the Cape Colony. In the centre, Soudan or Nigritia on the N., and the countries of the Zambeze on the S. of the equator.—Islands. The Azores, Madeira islands, Canary and Cape Verd islands, Fernando Po, Princes Island, in the Gulf of Guinea, Ascension and St Helena, in the Atlantic. Socotra, Comoro islands, the Seychelles, Zaanguebar, the Mascarene islands (Mauritius, Reunion, etc.), and Madagascar, in the Indian Ocean.—Man. The pop. of the N. comprises Turks, Arabs, Jews, and French. The descendants of the aborigines are the Berbers of the Atlas region, the Tibbous and Tuaricks of Sahara, and the Copts of Egypt. The Moors are of a mixed descent. The Ethiopian group of nations is dispersed in great variety over all Africa, S. of the Great Desert, and a large portion of the island of Madagascar. The Negro tribes are limited to the W. In the more elevated regions of the S., the colour of the natives is often a light bronze; the Caffres have heads finely developed, and strongly European. The Hottentots inhabit the Cape Colony and its borders. A corrupt form of the Christian religion is professed in Abyssinia; Mohammedanism is prevalent in the N.; and Feticism is the most widely spread and degrading form of superstition. The Negroes of the W. coast know how to temper steel, and those of Senegal are expert jewellers. The Ovas of Madagascar work in iron, and manufacture linen. The inhabitants of Marocco and Barbary excel in the preparation of skins. The manufacture of cloth in Bornou supplies all central Africa; and the natives of the Grain Coast engage as sailors in European vessels. Missionaries have introduced civilisation and Christianity among the tribes of the W. and S.; and the infamous trade in slaves has been abandoned by most of the nations of Europe and America.—European Possessions. The regencies of Tripoli and Tunis, and the viceroyalty of Egypt, recognise the political sovereignty of the Ottoman Porte. Portugal possesses the govts. of Madeira, Cape Verd, and the Bissagos, St Thomas and Princes Island, the gov. of Angola and Congo on the W., and Mozambique on the E. England has establishments in Senegambia and Sierra Leone, on the Gold and Slave Coasts, the islands of Fernando Po, Ascension, St Helena, and Tristan d'Acunha in the Atlantic, the islands Mauritius, Rodriguez, the Seychelles, Amirantes, and Socotra, in the Indian ocean, Natal, and the colony of the Cape of Good Hope. France possesses St Luis and Goree in Senegal, the islands of Reunion (Bourbon), Ste Marie, Mayotte, Nossi Bé, etc., in the Indian ocean, and the colony of Algeria. The Netherlands gov. possesses several factories on the coast of Guinea, of which St George Elmina is the seat of gov. Liberia, under a native president, was recognised as a free republic in 1848. Exports gold dust, ivory, gum, wax, marococo, leather, indigo, copper, salt, and dates. ALEXANDRIA (Iskenderyeh), a celebrated city and seaport of Egypt, near W. branch of the Nile, on the Mediterranean, 112 m. N.W. Cairo, with which it communicates by railway, canal, and the Nile. Lat. of Pharos, 31° 12' 9" N.; lon. 29° 53' E. Distance from Cairo, 180 m. by railway. P. (1863) about 150,000, including troops and artisans in the arsenal. The modern city is built on a peninsula (anciently the island of Pharos), and on the isthmus connecting it with the continent; the ancient city was on the mainland, where its ruins cover a vast surface. It is fortified, is the station of the Egyptian fleet, & has a palace of the pasha, naval arsenal, military and naval hospitals, and a custom-house. Its new streets and squares give it more the aspect of a European than of an African city. There are two ports, in the west-most of which ships anchor in from 22 to 40 feet water. A castle called Farillon, serving as a landmark to sailors, replaces the famous Pharos of antiquity. Alexandria is the great emporium of Egypt. Exports, corn, cotton, wool, gum, soda, rice, dates, senna, feathers, hides, and manuf. goods. The value of cotton crop in 1864 is estimated at 15,000,000l. sterling. Imports, cotton, woollen, and silk goods, hardware, timber, coal, drugs, and colonial products. Alexandria is an important station in the overland route to India, and is connected by railway with Suez, and the sea-bathing vill. of Ramleh, 7 m. distant. Consuls of the chief European countries reside here. It has a German Protestant church, and hospital, and flourishing schools under the Scotch missionaries. Of the ancient city, the cisterns, catacombs, Pompey's pillar, and the obelisk called Cleopatra's needle, are the principal remains. It was built or enlarged by Alexander the Great 332 B.C. Under the Ptolemies it was the cap. of Egypt, and the most important commercial city in the world; the centre of social art and literature among the Greeks. Under Augustus it had a pop. of 300,000, and its wealth was enormous. It was taken and ruined by Amrou, general of Khalif Omar, A.D. 640; it lost its importance on the discovery of the route by the Cape of Good Hope, and recovered it only in 1810, under Mehemet Ali. March 21, 1801, the French were defeated by the British under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, who was mortally wounded in the battle of Alexandria. Shortest sea route from Southampton 2960 m. Average time by steam 11 days. A rail. to Ramleh, 7 m. E. on coast, opened 1863.

ALGERIA (French, Algérie), a country of North

Africa, Barbary, forming a French colonial government, cap. Algiers. This territory is situated between lat. 35° 37' 5" N.; extending from lon. 2° 11' W. to 8° 53' E.; length 550 m., breadth 200 m. P. (1862) 2,999,124, comprising 2,806,378 natives, including 10,000 negroes, 30,000 Jews, and 192,746 Europeans. Algeria is bounded N. by the Mediterranean, S. by the Sahara, E. by Tunis, and W. by Morocco; is traversed by the Atlas mountains, which rise in successive stages parallel with the coast, the highest points exceeding 7000 feet. The coast is steep and deficient in good ports. The chief plains are those of Oran, Metidjah, and Shelif; the principal rivers are the Wad-el-Gedy, which rises S. of the Atlas range, and flows to the Melgig Lake; the Shelif, which rises on the borders of the Sahara, & flows to the Mediterranean; the others are the Sebous, Isser, Harna, and Jafna. There are several lakes, called sebkhas, generally dry in summer; the chief of these are in the prov. Algiers, the Zagries in Constantine, the Shott and the Sebkhia in the S.E. of the Melgig. Climate temperate and healthy on the N. slopes of the mountains, but pestilential in the marshy plains. Heat often excessive under the influence of the simoom, or hot wind of the desert. From April to October the sky is serene; winter mild, and marked by abundant rains. In the mountains of Bou Hanra there are rich iron mines, which were worked by the Romans. The country is divided by the natives into the Tel or country of grain crops, in the N., and the date country in the S. Vegetation is developed with great activity. The level part of the Tel, occupied by Arabs, is fertile in cereals; and the mountainous country, occupied by the Kabyles, has extensive forests, and rich and varied vegetation. The Algerian Sahara is not, as was supposed, a sterile desert, but a vast archipelago of oases, each of which presents an animated group of towns and villages, surrounded by olives, figs, vines, and palms. Throughout the Tel, wheat, barley, and legumes are cultivated, and in some places maize, millet, and rice, cotton, indigo, and the sugar-cane. The natives rear cattle, sheep, and goats. The horses, which are of an excellent breed, are employed for the saddle, only the camel, dromedary, ass, and mule are used for draught. Among wild animals are the lion, panther, jackall, and antelope. The harvests are sometimes ravaged by locusts. Coral and sponge are fished on the coasts. The industry of the natives, which formerly consisted chiefly of weaving and the preparation of marocco leather, is, since the French domination, nearly confined to mining; the Jews alone engage in the manuf. of jewellery. The chief trade is coastwise, that by caravans with the interior is inconsiderable. Civilization is making rapid progress in the state under French rule. Roads have been made, telegraphic communications established, bridges built, colleges and schools instituted, and trees planted. The country, originally inhabited by the Moors and Numidians, was afterwards under the power of the Romans and Vandals. In the 16th century it was invaded by Spain, but Barbarossa expelled the Spanish, and founded, under the sovereignty of Turkey, the state of Algiers, which became respectable on account of its corsairs, and compelled many of the European states to pay tribute for the protection of their merchant vessels. Repeated attempts were made by the different European powers to subdue this nest of pirates, without effect, till 1816, when the city of Algiers was bombarded by the British under Lord Exmouth, after which they continued comparatively quiet until 1827, when the French government, to revenge an insult to their consul, resolved to send an expedition on a great scale to take possession of the country. This was accomplished in 1830. Algérie is divided into the provs. of Alger, in the centre, Constantine, in the E., and Oran, in the W., and governed by a governor-general, whose authority is chiefly military.

ALPS MOUNTAINS.—The Alps are the most remarkable mountains in Europe, whether in regard to extent or elevation; they form a crescent-shaped chain, which extends from the Mediterranean, between the Gulfs of Lions and Genoa on the W., to the plains of Hungary on the E. nearly 600 m. in length. They may be divided into the following groups:—the West Alps, which have a general direction from S. to N., and extend, under the names of the Maritime Alps, from the sea to Monte Viso, near the sources of the Po, the Cottian Alps, which prolong the chain to Mont Cenis, and include Mont Genève; and the Graian Alps (Alpes Graie), which include Little St Bernard, and terminate at Mont Blanc. The East Alps, or those chains which extend from W. to E., having much greater breadth, are separated into a N. and S. series; the former comprise the Bernese Alps on the N. of the valley of the Rhone, the Alps of St Gall on N.W. of the valley of the Rhine, the Noric Alps which may be considered as extending from Lake Constance to the Kahlenberg, near Vienna, and the Styrian Alps, a small chain between the Noric and Carnic Alps. The S. series is composed of the Pennine Alps, between Mont Blanc and Monte Rosa; the Lepontine Alps, thence to Mont Bernardin, near the sources of the Upper Rhine; the Rhetian Alps, which terminate at Monte Croce, near the sources of the Piave; and the Carnic Alps, extending to the lowest part of the river Mur, which separates them from the mountains of Bakony. Mont Blanc, which attains an elevation of 15,744 feet, is the culminating point of the Alps and of all Europe; the other principal summits are Monte Rosa, 15,174 feet, Finsteraarhorn, in the Bernese Alps, 14,106 feet, Monte Viso, 12,585 feet, the Ortler Spitz in the Rhetian Alps, 12,852 feet, the Gross Glockner in the Noric Alps, 12,431 feet, the Terglou in the Carnic Alps, 9380 feet, and the Eisenhut in the Styrian Alps. The most frequented passes are the Col de Tende in the Maritime Alps, 5890 feet, the pass of Mont Genève in the Cottian Alps, 6560 feet; that of Mont Cenis, 6775 feet; the pass of the Great St Bernard, 8150 feet, and the Simplon, 6592 feet, both in the Pennine Alps; the pass of Mont St Gothard in the Lepontine Alps 6976 feet, the Spilgen, 6939 feet, in the Rhetian Alps, the Loiblberg in the Carnic Alps, and the Semmering in the Noric Alps; the Stelvio, in Austria, 9100 feet, is the highest carriage pass in the Alps, and that of St Gothard is the only one which is carried over the crest of the mountains; the others generally cross by the beds of torrents. The higher Alps present in their magnificent glaciers, the innumerable cascades which are precipitated from their summits, and the forests and meadows which cover their flanks, the most imposing and picturesque scenery in Europe. In the range of the Alps, the glaciers are estimated at 400 in number, and cover an area of 1400 sq. m. These move more or less rapidly, according to the heat and moisture of the weather; the maximum rate of motion is 30 inches a-day in summer and 16 inches in winter, the greatest velocity, as in rivers, being at the centre. The largest rivers of Europe, including the Danube, Rhine, Rhone, Inn, Drave, Save, and Po, rise in the Alps or their subordinate ranges. The central and higher ridges of the Alps consist of granite, gneiss, and other primary rocks, flanked by a wide extent of limestone, sandstone, and slate. The higher summits ascend considerably above the lower level of perennial snow (which in this latitude averages 8900 feet): the glaciers descend as low as 3400 feet above the sea. Wheat is raised at an elevation of 3600; oats 4900; barley 5100 feet: the oak is found to the height of 4500 feet; pines and larches 6000 to 7000 feet above the sea; and the Alpine rose reaches the snow line. Mineral products are chiefly iron, copper, and lead; but quicksilver, rock-salt, and some gold and silver are met with. In Piedmont châteaux are found 8500 feet above the sea, and vegetation extends to 9500 feet; the chamois ranges to an elevation of 12,000 feet; the marten and weasel, 4000; the ermine, 10,000; and the brown bear, 9000 feet; the ringed snake reaches 7000; and the common frog, 10,000 feet. [Notices of the principal summits and passes in the Alps will be found under their respective names.]

ALTAI, the collective name of a series of mountain ranges of Central Asia. They form an alpine girdle, intersected by wide valleys, and traversed by numerous rivers, extending from W. to E. about the parallel of 50° N., between the meridians of 84° and 100° E., where the Altai proper is separated from the Daurian system by lakes Kosgol and Baikal. Mount Katunsk or Bilouka, near the W. extremity of the system, is 12,796 feet high, far above the line of perennial snow, with extensive glaciers on its western flanks. The climate of the Altai is not severe; winters often mild, with little snow. Trees grow in the deep valleys, and rich grass on the mountain slopes, the sides of which are, in some places, covered with magnificent cedar forests. Stags, hares, and wolves abound in the lower, and bears in the higher portions of the mountains. The region of the Altai has long been celebrated for mines of silver, gold, and lead. The chief mining town is Barnaul, to which all the gold got in Siberia must be sent, except that from the Yablonoï Mountains, which is sent to Nerchinsk. AMAY, a town of Belgium, prov. Liege, on the Maese, 12 m. S.W. Liege. P. 2500.

AMAZON, MARANON, ORELLANA or SOLIMOENS, the chief river of South America, and the largest in the world, in regard to its volume, length, and extent of basin. It is formed by the union of the Tunguragua and Ucayale; the former rising in lake Lauricocha (Peru), in lat. 10° 30' S.; lon. 76° 10' W. The head stream of the latter, the Apurimac, originates about lat. 16° S.; lon. 72° W. Both rivers have a general course at first; the Tunguragua, near lat. 6° S., bends, and after receiving the Huallaga from the S., joins the Ucayale, about lat. 4° 25' S.; lon. 72° 30' W. Here the stream has depth sufficient for any class of ships. Thenceforth the Amazon flows generally east, through the Brazilian territory to the Atlantic, which it enters nearly under the equator, and between lon. 48° and 50° W., its estuary widening until it is 180 m. across. Taking the Apurimac as its source, its direct length is estimated at 1769 m., and including its windings, nearly 4000 m.; for great part of which (viz., from the ocean to Pongo de Manseriche, lon. 76° 50' W.), it is navigable and uninterrupted by any rapid or cataract. At least 20 rivers, navigable to near their sources, pour their waters into it, besides numerous less important streams. Chief tributaries the Napo, Putumayo, Yapura and Rio Negro, from the N.; the Yavari, Jutay, Jurua, Coary, Purus, Madeira, Tapajos, and Xingu, from the S. By the Casiquiare, a branch of the Rio Negro, the Amazon has a direct and remarkable connection with the Orinoco. The Amazon and its tributaries afford an immense inland navigation, estimated at 50,000 m.; and the extent of its basin has been computed at about 2,000,000 sq. m. Its depth is great; in mid current no bottom is found with 20 fathoms. The velocity is at the rate of 3½ m. an hour, and its waters remain unmixed with the ocean 200 m. from its mouth. Tides ascend for 400 m. from the Atlantic, and near full moon occasion a formidable rush of water into the channel, with waves 10 to 15 feet in height, called a bore. The upper part of the river, as far as the mouth of the Yavari, which forms the boundary line between Brazil and Peru, is called Marañon, thence to the mouth of the Rio Negro it is called Solimoes, and from the Negro to its mouth, Amazon. The tropical rains swell the river annually to 40 and 50 feet above its ordinary level. The Marañon attains its greatest height in January, the Solimoes in February, the Amazon in the middle of March. In the lower part of its course, the Amazon abounds with islands, and in its estuary are the large islands Marajo and Caviana. Brazilian steamers, of 1000 tons, navigate the Amazon to Nanta in Ecuador, and as its head waters reach nearly to Quito, it has been proposed to bring down produce that way instead of taking it to Guayaquil, which is about 150 m., or nine days' journey. In 1860 the number of passengers conveyed by the Steam Navigation Co. was 61,085. The estuary of the Amazon was discovered by Fincon in 1500; in 1539, d'Orellan sailed down from the Napo, and it obtained the name of Amazon from his having reported that he saw armed women on its shores.

AMAZONAS, a vast unexplored province of the empire of Brazil, extending on both sides of the Amazon from Venezuela, lat. 5° to lat.° 10 S. P. (1856) estimated at 42,600. Cap. Manaos.

AMBALEGA, a town in the island of Madura, Indian archipelago. P. 4000.

AMBARÈS, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Gironde, arr. Bordeaux. P. 2666.

AMBERLEY, a pa. of England, co. Sussex, and 5 m. N.E. Arundel. Ac. 2900. P. 650.

AMBERT, a comm. and town of France, dep. Puy-de-Dôme, cap. arr. on rt. b. of the Dore, 35 m. S.E. Clermont. P. 7661. Extensive paperworks; manufs. ribands, lace, and linens; has mineral springs; its cheese is much esteemed.

AMBIALET, a vill. of France, dep. Tarn, cant. Villefranche, 10 m. E.N.E. Alby. P. 3221.

AMBIL, one of the smaller Philippine islands, 70 m. S.W. Manila, 12 m. in circumference.

AMBIVERE, a vill. of North Italy, prov. and circ. Bergamo. P. 738.

AMBLAUW, an island of the Eastern archipelago, 12 m. S.E. Booro. Lat. 3° 52' S.; lon. 127° 16' E. Is 10 miles long. P. 733.

AMBLECOAT or AMBLECOTE, a hamlet of England, co. Stafford, ¾ m. N. Stourbridge. Ac. 689. P. 2613. It has potteries and iron-works.

AMBLESIDE, a market town and chapelry of England, co. Westmoreland, near the N. extremity of lake Windermere, 12½ m. N.W. Kendal. P. of chapelry 1603. Woollen manufactures, slate quarry, and lead and copper mines.

AMBLESTON, a pa., South Wales, co. Pembroke, 8 m. N.N.E. Haverford-West. Ac. 3965. P. 524.

AMBLEUSE, a comm. and town of France, dep. Pas-de-Calais, on English Channel, 6 m. N. Boulogne. P. 598. Here James II. landed after his abdication in 1689; and near it is a granite column, which the Emperor Napoleon I. erected to the grand army in 1805.

AMBOISE, a town of France, dep. Indre-et-Loire, cap. cant., on l. b. of the Loire, and on railway from Orleans, 14 m. E. Tours. P. 4570. Its ancient castle has been modernized. Amboise is celebrated for the "conjuraton d'Amboise" formed against the Guises in 1560. It has manuf. of files, steel goods, fire-arms, and woollens.

AMBOISE, a cape, island, and anchorage, of Africa, coast of Benin. Lat.  $3^{\circ} 58' N.$ ; lon.  $9^{\circ} 15' E.$

AMBON, a comm. and town of France, dep. Morbihan, arr. Vannes. P. 1739, with a small port on the Penerf, and exportation of salt.

AMBOOR, a town of British India, presid. Madras, dist. Arcot, 108 m. W.S.W. Madras.

AMBOY PERTH, a city and port of the U. S., North America, New Jersey, co. Middlesex, at the head of Raritan Bay, 32 m. N.E. Trenton. P. 1865. Amboy has regular railway intercourse with New York and Philadelphia.—II. a town, Oswego, co. New York. P. 1132.

AMBOYNA, an island of the Molucca group, Eastern archipelago, off the S.W. extremity of Ceram, between lat.  $3^{\circ} 26'$  and  $3^{\circ} 48' S.$ ; lon.  $127^{\circ} 57'$  and  $128^{\circ} 27' E.$ , 35 m. by 10 m. P. (1856) 188,000, mostly Malays, with some Chinese, besides the Dutch residents. It is divided into two unequal limbs by a deep bay. Surface mountainous, but fertile, well watered, and wooded. Chief product, cloves, which, with indigo and sago, form the exports. Imports opium and European goods. Government, subordinate to that at Batavia (Java), is established at Fort Victoria, which, with the town of Amboyna, is on the S.E. side of the Bay of Binnen. P. 8966. The inhabitants are nearly all Christians.

AMBRACIAN GULF. [ARTA (GULF OF).]

AMBRACIENS, a town of France, dep. and 6 m. N. Mayenne, on the Mayenne. P. 2720.

AMBRIM, an island in the Pacific Ocean, New Hebrides, lat.  $16^{\circ} 9' 30'' S.$ ; lon.  $167^{\circ} 50' E.$  It is 50 m. in circumference, and has a fine active volcano.

AMBRIZ, a small independent Negro kingdom of Africa, South Guinea, cap. Quibanza, with a port at the mouth of the Ambriz, on the Atlantic, about 70 m. N. Loanda. Trade in gum & ivory.

AMBRIZETTE, a kingdom of Africa, S. Guinea, between the Congo and Ambrizette rivers, with a town on the coast about 30 m. N. Ambriz.

AMBROGIO (SAN), a vill., Northern Italy, deleg. Verona, with thermal baths.—II. a vill., prov. Turin, circ. Susa. P. 1206. Celebrated abbey.

AMBROIX (ST), a town of France, dep. Gard, on rt. b. of the Cèze, 11 m. N.E. Alais. P. 4060.

AMBRONAY, a comm. and town of France, dep. Ain, 15 m. S.E. Bourg. P. 1706.

AMBROSDEN, a pa. and hamlet of England, co. Oxford, 2 m. S.S.E. Bicester. Ac. 4865. P. 871.

AMBROSE (ST), an island in the Pacific ocean, in lat.  $26^{\circ} 21' S.$ ; lon.  $80^{\circ} 10' W.$

AMBROSETOWN, a pa. of Ireland, co. Wexford, 6 m. S.W. Taghmon, contains the vill. of Tullycanna. Ac. 2197. P. 519.

AMBUKOL, a town of Egypt, on right bank of the Nile. Lat.  $18^{\circ} 4' N.$

AMEENANA, a town of Scinde, on an island formed by the Narra and Indus, 12 m. N. Sehwan. Is a considerable place, well supplied with water.

AMEGLIA, a comm., Italy, prov. Genoa. P. 1845.

AMEIDE, a vill. of the Netherlands, prov. South Holland, on the Lek. P. 1079.

AMELAND, an island of the Netherlands, in the North Sea. Lat.  $53^{\circ} 30' N.$ ; lon.  $6^{\circ} 15' E.$  P. 3000. It is 13 m. by 2 m., and has three villages.

AMELIA, Ameria, a town of Central Italy, prov. Perugia, deleg. and 21 m. S.W. Spoleto. P. 7024.

AMELIA, a co. of the U. S., North America, Virginia. Area 298 sq. m. P. 3086 free, 3086 slaves

AMELIA, an island in the Atlantic, off the N.E. extremity of Florida, 10 m. N. the mouth of St John riv. 20 m. by 2 m. Chief town Fernandina.

AMELIETH, a hamlet of Hanover, near Lauenfôrda. P. 650. Celebrated glass manuf.

AMENDOLARA, a town of South Italy, prov. Cosenza, circ. Castrovillari. P. 1446.

AMENIA, a township of the U. S., North America, New York, Duchess co., 20 m. E.N.E. Poughkeepsie. P. 2229.

AMENO, a vill. of Italy, prov. Novara. P. 1748.

AMER, a town of Spain, prov. and 13 m. W. Gerona, on l. b. of the Ter. P. 1215.

AMERICA OR THE NEW WORLD, is one of the grand divisions of the globe. Continental America extends from lat.  $54^{\circ} S.$  to  $71^{\circ} N.$ , extreme length being 10,500 m. from Magellan to Behring Straits. The Tierra del Fuego islands reach  $1^{\circ}$  beyond its S. extremity into the Antarctic Ocean. Greenland has been explored to lat.  $82^{\circ} N.$ , and is supposed to extend further into the polar circle. Between the N. coast and lat.  $80^{\circ}$  is supposed to be occupied by an archipelago of islands, and Greenland from E. to W. is intersected by arms of the sea, like the regions on the W. of Baffin Bay. Area 15,089,200 sq. m. P. 67,645,490. N. of the equator it is divided by the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea into two continents of nearly equal extent, connected by a narrow region, extending through  $15^{\circ}$  of lat., called Central America, the S. extremity of which (Isthmus of Darien or Panama) is only 35 m. across. Its great rivers are the St Lawrence and Mississippi in N. America, and the Orinoco, Amazon, Tocantins, San Francisco, Rio de la Plata, and Rio Negro in S. America. The lakes of North America contain the greatest extent of fresh water in the world. The mountains are very extensive. In N. America a maritime chain of high mountains stretches along the western edge of the plateau, from Russian America to the peninsula of Lower California. The system of the Andes of S. America differs in direction, elevation, and geological formation from the mountains of the North. America was discovered by Columbus in 1492; since which time a continuous stream of emigration has flowed in from Europe, and by far the greater proportion of the population is now of European descent. The Red Indians (natives) are peculiar, having the physical characteristics of a distinct race. The tribes of the N. and S., differing little in civilisation, but using various languages, seem to have had a common origin, and through their intercourse with Europeans are rapidly becoming extinct. From the high N. and S. latitudes of the country, it is remarkable for its extreme vicissitudes of climate. The products of every clime abound in its different regions, and in some tracts vegetation is most exuberant. It yields all the cereal grains, sugar, cotton, tobacco, coffee, cocoa, dye-woods, mahogany, and medicinal barks. Minerals comprise gold, silver, iron, copper, tin, lead, coal in great abundance, sandstone, limestone, and marble. Fossil remains of gigantic animals have been found. Wild horses, originally from Europe. The bison, musk-ox, rein-deer, bear, puma, and jaguar are found. Inferior animals are in great variety, many being peculiar to this continent. Domestic animals are the llama, alpaca, guanaco, and vicuña. The following table shows the different states in America and the West Indies, with their estimated area and population:—

[BRAZIL, CANADA, RUSSIAN AMERICA, UNITED STATES, WEST INDIES.]

AMERICA (CENTRAL) is the long and narrow region, between lat. 7° and 18° N.; lon. 77° and 94° W., connecting the continents of North and South America, and comprising, besides the Central American States, Yucatan, parts of Mexico and the Granadian Confederation, the Mosquito coast, and British Honduras. In a more limited sense the term is applied to the following republics, between lat. 8° and 18° N.; lon. 81° 30' and 94° W., bounded on the E. by the Caribbean Sea and New Granada, N.W. Yucatan and Chiapas, W. and S. by the Pacific.

States.	Area in sq. m.	Pop.	Capitals.
Guatemala,	40,781	850,000	New Guatemala.
San Salvador,	7,335	600,000	Cajutepeque.
Honduras,	47,095	350,000	Comayagua.
Nicaragua,	53,173	400,000	Granada.
Costa Rica,	21,495	126,750	San Jose.
Belize or British Honduras,	13,500	25,635	Belize.
Total,	168,379	2,352,385

The greatest length from S.E. to N.W. is about 830 m.; breadth varying from 67 to 310 m., the most northern limit being Chetumal Bay, N. of Belize, and the most southern, Burica Point, S. of Costa Rica, and E. the gulf of Dulce. To this succeeds the plain of Nicaragua, 175 m. in length, and the same in breadth; is the Lake Nicaragua, which covers a considerable portion of the surface, being only 134 feet above the Pacific Ocean. The mountains of Central America are in three distinct groups.—(1.) The group of Costa Rica, surrounded by volcanoes. (2.) The group of Nicaragua, and Honduras, west of the Lake of Nicaragua, which has a mean height of 140 feet above the sea, but rises N. of the lake to 8000 feet. (3.) The group of Guatemala, which contains the greatest number of volcanoes known anywhere except in Java. The volcano of Agua, 15,000 feet above the sea, is the highest point in Central America. The climate is hot and moist in the lowlands, where there are dense forests; but is milder and more salubrious on the elevated table-lands. On the coasts of the Caribbean Sea the rains are copious. Earthquakes are very frequent, especially in the table-lands. Principal rivers, the Motagua, Rio Dulce, Rio Polochic, Chicsoi, Blewfields; San Juan, all of which flow N. or E. Principal lakes, Nicaragua and Leon, through which a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans has long been projected. [PANAMA.] On both E. and W. shores there are many good ports. Below the elevation of 3000 feet, indigo, cotton, sugar, and cocoa are the chief crops; between 3000 to 5000 feet the cochineal plant is cultivated. Maize is raised; but wheat in the high table-land in the N. only. In some parts the chicozapote, a fruit yielding a great deal of nourishment, supplies in commerce the place of corn. Other products are coffee, tobacco, dragon's blood, mastic, various balsams and drugs, tamarinds, pepper, cassia, ginger, and vanilla; mahogany, cedar, logwood, and other woods for dyeing or building; with gold, silver, copper, iron, lead, and zinc. The country is rich in precious metals. Horses, asses, goats and hogs, having been introduced by the Spaniards, are now numerous; herds of cattle are pastured in the grazing farms of Nicaragua; and flocks of sheep feed on the table-land of Quesaltenango, being reared almost wholly for their wool. Cattle and sheep breeding are, with agriculture, the main occupations of the population; but the production of coarse woollens, cotton cloths, caps, hats, earthenware, furniture, & cabinet-work, employs a good many hands, and the Indians weave mats of different colours, which are used as carpets. Principal exports are indigo, cochineal, bullion, sarcaparilla, dye-woods, hides, balsams, mahogany and other timber, sugar, coffee, tortoiseshell, and cattle. Imports consist of cotton, linen, and silk fabrics, hardware, cutlery, earthenware, trinkets, wine, oil, spirits, and provisions. The trade is chiefly with the United Kingdom, U. S., West India Islands, Spain, and France. The population consists of aboriginal tribes, of Europeans, and a mixed race. Several tribes live in an independent condition, without intercourse with Europeans, although those along the Mosquito shore consider themselves under the protection of the British. Each state has its own president, vice-president, senate, and assembly of deputies, who are chosen by electoral colleges. The cities and towns have each a municipal corporation, presided over by an alcalde. Spanish laws have been replaced by codes, modelled on those of the U. S. The established religion is Roman Catholic. Columbus discovered this region in 1502; in 1527 it was made a Spanish capt.-generalship, and it belonged to Spain until 1821, when Guatemala first declared its independence. The several states subsequently formed a confederation, which was dissolved in 1839. Many ruins of ancient cities, temples, etc., have been discovered in this region, and are supposed to be the architecture of the native population, previous to and at the era of the Spanish conquest. A project for connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by means of a canal, the river San Juan, and the lake of Nicaragua, has long been entertained.

AMERICA (NORTH) extends northwards of lat. 8° N., and between lon. 55° and 165° W. On its E. side are Hudson and James bays, the gulf of St Lawrence, the bays of Fundy, Chesapeake, and Delaware; on its S. the Gulf of Mexico; on its W., Gulfs of California and Georgia, Cook inlet, Bristol bay, and Norton and Kotzebue sounds. On the N. the Arctic Ocean separates it from Melville and Bathurst islands, Victoria

Land, Boothia, etc. Baffin bay and Davis strait divide Cockburn Island from Greenland. Chief peninsulas of North America, Labrador, Nova Scotia, Florida, and Old California. The mountains of North America are divided into several chains, of which the Alleghanies or Appalachians on the E., and the Rocky Mountains on the W., bound the great central region of North America, drained by the Mississippi and Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Kansas, Arkansas, Rio Bravo, etc. The E. part of this region is fertile, and its centre is a vast prairie; but much of its W. part is rocky and barren. N. of this region the five great lakes, Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie, and Ontario, discharge their waters eastward by the river St Lawrence into the gulf of same name. Still farther N. is the Boreal region, occupying all the surface from Canada northwards to the shores of the Arctic ocean and Hudson bay; here are the Winnipeg, Manitoba, Wollaston, Great Slave, Great Bear, and Athabasca lakes; the Mackenzie, Athabasca, Great Slave, and Great Fish rivers, flowing N.; and the Saskatchewan flowing E. The Colorado, Columbia and Great Snake rivers, with the unexplored territory of Russian America, are W. of the Rocky Mountains, which rise much farther inland from the Pacific than the Andes in South America. Around this continent are numerous islands, including Newfoundland, Prince Edward, Cape Breton, and the W. Indian archipelago on the E., and several archipelagos lining the Russian and British coasts in the N.W. [Descriptions of the different countries comprised in this vast continent will be found under the heads named in the foregoing tables.]

AMERICA (SOUTH) extends southward from lat. 12° 30' N.; and from lon. 35° to 81° 30' W. Consisting mainly of three immense plains, respectively watered by the Amazon, Plata, and Orinoco rivers. The basins of the two former are enclosed by the Andes westward, and the mountains of Brazil on the E.; that of the last is bounded northward by a cordillera of the Andes, and S. by the sierras dividing Colombia from Brazil. The system of the Andes comprises a series of parallel chains, extending along the Pacific coast in a nearly continuous line from the isthmus of Panama to the S. extremity of the continent, with a mean height of 11,800 feet above the sea. All the great rivers of this continent—the Orinoco, Amazon, Tocantins, Paranyhyba, San Francisco, Parana, Paraguay, and Rio Negro—discharge their waters into the Atlantic, the Rio Magdalena alone, with its affluents, flowing between the Cordilleras of the Andes northward to the Caribbean Sea. The chief inlets are the Rio de la Plata, Lago des Patos, and Gulfs of St Matthias and St George on the E.; the Gulf of Guayaquil on the W.; and the lake of Maracaibo on the N., united by a strait to the Caribbean Sea. Lakes Titicaca and Pansa are the only inland lakes of consequence. Tierra del Fuego, the largest isl. belonging to South America, is at the S. extremity of Patagonia, the W. coast of which country, with a part of that of Chile, is lined by numerous islands, interspersed with some of the best harbours in the Pacific.—Russian America comprises the N.W. coasts from lat. 55° to 70° N.; lon. 141° to 168° W.—British America is bounded on the N. by the Arctic Ocean, N.W. by Russian America, S. by the United States, and E. by the Atlantic. It comprises British Columbia and Vancouver island, the Hudson bay territory, including Labrador, Canada, and the Lower Provinces, (embracing New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland).—United States extend from the British possessions in the N. to the gulf of Mexico S., and from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans. Mexico extends from lat. 16° to 33° N.—Central America includes the republics of Guatemala, San Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica.—South America comprehends the republics of the Granadain Confed., Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, and Chile. Between these states and the Atlantic lies the Argentine confederation. The empire of Brazil is on the E., bounded by the Atlantic, adjoining which is the state of Paraguay. Uruguay or Banda Oriental, lies immediately to the S. of Brazil, and Patagonia and Tierra del Fuego form the southern limits of the continent.—Guiana, on the N.E. coast, between lat. 1° and 8° 40' N. contains the British possessions of Demerara, Essequibo, Berbice, the French possession of Cayenne, and Dutch colony of Surinam.—The West India Islands in the Columbian Archipelago, consist of the Bahama islands, Great Antilles, including Cuba, Jamaica, St Domingo, and Porto Rico. Smaller Antilles including Barbuda, Antigua, Guadaloupe, Dominica, Martinique, St Lucia, Barbadoes, Granada, Tobago, St Christopher, St Vincent, and Trinidad. [See the countries named in the above tables.]

P. (1861) 263,204, of whom 30,000 were Jews. The city is connected by railways with the Hague, Rotterdam, and Arnhem. It is built on piles of wood, divided into two parts by the Amstel, and intersected by numerous canals, which form ninety islands, communicating by 290 bridges. The numerous magazines, filled with the most valuable produce of the Old and New Worlds, attest the riches of a city which long possessed the commerce of the globe. Amsterdam is the seat of the administration of the marine, of which the magazines and building-yards are extensive. Among its many scientific and literary establishments, may be noted an observatory, royal atheneum, library, botanic garden, and theatre of anatomy; the royal academy of fine arts; school of navigation; royal institute of science, literature, and the fine arts; the Netherlands society of arts and sciences; a cabinet of natural history, royal museum, with a collection of paintings. Chief buildings, the Palais-royal, formerly the Stadthouse, (the residence of King Louis Bonaparte from 1808 to 1813), the present hôtel de ville, formerly the admiralty, the mansions of the East and West India Companies, the exchange, arsenal, and barracks. Among its many ecclesiastical edifices are the Oude Kerke (old church), and the Nieuwe Kerke (new church); a Scotch presbyterian and an episcopal church. Amsterdam, still one of the most commercial places in Europe, attained its greatest prosperity after the closing of the Scheldt by the Spaniards in 1648, when it monopolized nearly all the commerce of the Indies. Its trade decreased with the decline of the republic of Holland, by the opening of the Scheldt, and the rivalry of Antwerp and Rotterdam. It has regular steam communication with Harlingen, Hamburg, London, and Hull. The bank of the Netherlands was established here in 1814. Manufs. of woollen, cotton, linen, and silk fabrics, jewellery and gold lace; sugar, borax, sulphur, and other refineries; soap, oil, glass, iron, dye, and chemical works; but the most important and principal industry of the city is the cutting and polishing of diamonds, in which 10,000 persons (9000 of whom are Jews) are engaged. The annual trade in these precious stones amounts to 50,000,000 florins. Distilleries, breweries, tanneries, tobacco factories, and ship-building docks. Imports, the products of the colonies and North Europe, hides, linen, cotton, and woollen stuffs, hardwares, rock salt, sugar, tobacco, coffee, tin-plates, and coal. Exports, the produce of the Netherlands, East and West India possessions, sugar, cheese, butter, etc.; and the produce of the country, with corn and linens from Germany, Spanish, German and English wools; French, Rhenish, and Hungarian wine and brandy. Dutch gin, or Schiedam, is largely exported, no less than 800,000 cases having been despatched to Australia in 1862. It has a large transit, as well as insurance and bill-broking trade. In 1862 only 1725 vessels entered the port, a considerable decrease from the preceding year. The trade of Amsterdam is chiefly with Australia, Java, Guinea, Japan, Chile, Rio de la Plata, the Mediterranean, Sweden, Norway, the Baltic and White Sea, etc. The Dutch trade with England is decreasing.

ANAM or AN-NAM, an empire of South East Asia, occupying the E. part of Further India, between lat. 8° 45' and 23° N., lon. 102° and 109° E.; comprising Cochín-China, Tonquin, and Camboja; and having N. the Chinese provs. Quangsi and Yun-nan, W. the indep. Laos and Siamese territories, and S. and E. the China Sea and Gulf of Tonquin. Estimated area 140,000 sq. m. (?); and pop. 6,000,000 (?), of whom 500,000 Mohammedans. Surface generally fertile, rising gradually from the sea to the great mountain chain separating Cochín-China from Camboja and Laos. Tonquin and Camboja are alluvial plains of great fertility. The empire is watered by numerous coast streams, and the country in many parts covered with forests or carefully cultivated fields. There are few towns, but numerous villages, and a vast population occupy barges on the canals and rivers. Climate healthy, the heat being tempered by sea breezes. Inhabitants similar in race to the Chinese, with an intermixture of Siamese, Malays, and Moi, or dark negro race. Coasts generally bold, and abound with some of the best harbours in the world. Products, rice, sugar, cinnamon, cardamoms, pepper, and other spices; indigo, cotton, dye-woods, iron-wood, teak, and other timber; varnish, gums, an inferior tea, tobacco, bamboos, ivory, silk, copper, iron, the precious metals, edible birds' nests and pearls, form the principal exports. Imports manuif. silks, porcelain, drugs, fine teas, and household utensils from China; spices, sandal wood, and tin from the Malay peninsula; opium from India; cottons from Canton and Singapore, and a few British coarse woollens, with serges, camlets, iron, and arms, from Europe. The king is said to monopolize the legal trade, in which five square-rigged ships are employed in voyages to Canton, Batavia, and British India. Chief cities and seats of trade, Hué, the cap., Ke-cho (Tonquin), and Faifo. The government is a hereditary military despotism; the central administration is under six mandarins, heads of bureaux; and the provinces are each under a mandarin of the first or military class. Standing army was, some years since, between 40,000 and 50,000 men, besides the royal guards and 800 elephants. Navy includes about 200 gun-boats, 100 galleys, and 500 smaller vessels—the people have a maritime taste, and excel most Asiatics in ship-building. The popular religion is Buddhism. Before the French revolution, the government of Louis XVI. made great endeavours to establish French ascendancy in Anam; and by the efforts of the French residents, several of the cities were fortified in the European fashion, and European policy was introduced into the government; but these incipient reforms have since become obsolete; a more recent attempt, on the part of the French, to gain an ascendancy, having also failed. At last a powerful naval expedition, in 1860, reduced the important seaport of Saigon, sacked and burned the city; drove the inhabitants from the surrounding country, and established a French colony on the site, under a treaty with the Anamite gov. [SAIGON.] The emperor sends presents, at stated periods, to the court of Peking, which affects to consider Anam tributary to China, and invests its successive rulers with their sovereignty.

(1861) 46,090, exclusive of about 1800 Jews, who inhabit a separate quarter. The city slopes to the sea between two hills, one crowned with a cathedral and the other with a citadel. A fortified wall for the enlargement of the city is being built. Chief edifices a cathedral, exchange, lazaretto, governor's palace, town-house, college, hospitals, churches, and a terrace facing the harbour. It is connected by railways with Rimini on the N., and Pescara on the S. coast. The port, one of the best in Italy, is defended by several forts, and enclosed by two moles, on one of which is an arch erected to the Emperor Trajan, A.D. 112. On the new mole is the arch of Benedict XIV., and a lighthouse at its extremity.—In 1798 Ancona was taken by the French, and in 1799 General Meunier was besieged here. Under Napoleon I. it was cap. of the dep. Metauro, till 1814, when it was restored to the Pope. It was bombarded by the Austrians in 1849, and held by them till 1859. Steamers leave Ancona for Corfu, Patras, Athens, Smyrna, and Constantinople. Manufactures silk stockings, leather, paper, wax, and candles. Exports corn, hemp, bacon, sulphur, and tallow. ANDALUCIA, an ancient division of the South of Spain, bounded N. by Estremadura and New Castile, E. by Murcia and the Mediterranean, S. by the Atlantic, and W. by Portugal. Is now divided into the following provinces, which are named from their chief towns, Almeira, Granada, Jaen, Malaga, Cadiz, Cordova, Huelva, and Sevilla. The prov. is traversed by the Sierras Morena and Nevada; climate on the coasts extremely warm. Chief minerals, lead, copper, iron, and mercury. Fertile in grain, wines, olives, figs, sugar, cotton, silk, and cochineal. The prov. is celebrated for its breed of horses, and sheep which yield fine wool. Manufactures, formerly important, have greatly declined. The Vandals were established in this country during several years, in the 5th century. After the dismemberment of the empire of the Caliphs in 1030, Andalusia formed the kingdoms of Cordova, Sevilla, Jaen, Almeira, Malaga, and Granada, which were all successively conquered by the kings of Castile. The kingdom of Granada existed till 1492.

ANDES (Span. Cordillera de los Andes), the great mountain system of South America, extending from Cape Horn to the isthmus of Panama over 65° of lat. or 4500 m., with a breadth of from 40 to 400 m. and a mean height of 11,800 ft. above the sea, covering, with its mountains, plateaus, and declivities, nearly a sixth part of the continent. The Andes comprise a series of parallel chains, which extend along the Pacific coast in a nearly continuous line. From its S. extremity the main chain runs along the W. shore of Tierra del Fuego, and consists of rocky summits, rising in many places to 2000 or 3000 feet, the culminating point of this portion (Mount Sarmiento), being 6910 feet above the sea. The Patagonian Andes, which succeed those of the S. insular dist., run directly N. as far as lat. 42° S., flanked by rocky and mountainous islands in the Pacific, that seem to have been disunited from the mainland by volcanic agency. The extreme height of the Andes in this division is 8030 feet. The Andes of Chile, which follow, extend from lat. 42° to lat. 21° S., and some of their summits reach the height of 23,000 feet; the chain is here about 80 m. across, and toward the ocean is flanked by extensive plains from 1200 to 2000 feet above the sea, from which the mountains rise with a steep acclivity. There are several passes in the Andes here, the most important being that on the line of road between the city of Buenos Ayres and Valparaiso on the Pacific. The Bolivian Andes, which form the central and most elevated portion of the system, extend N. from lat. 21° to 14° S., over 7° of latitude, and in breadth from 200 to 250 m., the more elevated summits of which rise on the E. and W. edges of the plateau from 13,000 to 23,000 feet. In this section, the chain (hitherto forming a single undivided ridge) separates, about lat. 19° S., into two great longitudinal ridges, the E. called the Cordillera Real, and the W. the Cordillera of the coast. These run parallel to each other, and bound the table-land of Desaguadero (13,000 feet above the sea), extending 500 m. in length, and from 80 to 60 in breadth along the top of the Andes, and enclosing the lake of Titicaca. N. of this, the Cordilleras reunite in the mountain knot of Cuzco. The Peruvian Andes, separated from the Pacific by a sandy desert 1200 m. broad, extend from lat. 14° to 5° S., and detach two eastern offsets, one of which runs N.W. between the Marañon and the Hualtaga rivers, and the other between the Huallaga and the Ucayali. The main range, termed the Cordillera of the coast, runs W.N.W. parallel to, and about 50 m. distant from the Pacific. The Andes of Quito commence at lat. 5° S., and run nearly due N. to the table-land of Quito, which is 200 m. long, 30 broad, and 9600 feet above the sea, surrounded by the most magnificent series of volcanoes in the world. About lat. 1° N. the mountain knot of los Pastos contains several active volcanoes. On the E. side, lat. 2° N., is the mountain knot of Paramo, from which extend three separate chains.—1. That of the Suma Paz, going N.E. from lat. 2° to lat. 9° N., and rising to 9000 feet.—2. The chain of Quindiu, N.N.E. between the Knots of Paramo and Antioquia; and 3. the chain of Choco, between the rivers Cauca and Atrato. A low ridge extends on the W. of the Atrato, and gradually sinks between the parallels of 7° and 8° N., where there is a complete break between the systems of the Andes in the S. and the mountains of N. America. The Andes are composed partly of granite, gneiss, mica, and clay slate, but chiefly of greenstone, porphyry, and basalt, with limestone, red sandstone, and conglomerate. Salt and gypsum are also found, and seams of coal at a great elevation. The topaz, amethyst, and other gems are abundant. Volcanoes are numerous in the Chilean Andes, where there are no less than nineteen in a state of activity; and the mountains of Ecuador consist almost altogether of volcanic summits, either now or formerly in active ignition. Of these, the most dreaded is Cotopaxi. In some of its eruptions flames rise 3000 feet above the edge of its crater, and the sound of its explosions is heard at a distance of 550 m. Its form is regular and beautiful; the summit forming a perfect cone, covered with an enormous bed of snow. Earthquakes generally accompany the volcanic eruptions, and are felt over all the adjacent continent. No portion of the globe is subject to such frequent and destructive earthquakes as the countries within the range of the Andes, and those lying between them and the Pacific Ocean. The cities and towns of Bogota, Quito, Riobamba, Callao, Copiapo, Valparaiso, and Concepcion, have all at different times been devastated by their agency. The Andes are celebrated for their mineral riches,—producing gold and silver in large quantities, with platina, mercury, copper, lead, tin, and iron. The limit of perennial snow reaches the height of 18,300 ft. in the W., & 15,900 in the E. Cordillera of Chile; near the equator it is 15,800 feet, and in the Bolivian Andes (lat. 21° S.) 17,000 feet above the sea. The potato is cultivated in the Andes at an elevation of 9800 to 13,000 feet. Wheat grows luxuriantly at a height of 10,000 feet, and oats ripen in the vicinity of lake Titicaca, at an elevation of 12,795 feet. Glaciers are numerous in Tierra del Fuego, and on the W. coast of Patagonia. The following are the principal summits and passes of the Andes, arranged from N. to S., with elevations in English feet.

APPENNINES (Ital. Appennino), Apeninus Mons, a long chain of mountains which detaches itself from the Maritime Alps, in about lon.  $9^{\circ} E.$ , having a general direction first from W. to E., nearly parallel with the Pennine and Leopontine Alps, from which it is separated by the valley of the Po. In lon.  $12^{\circ} E.$  the chain turns toward the S., and traverses the Italian peninsula throughout its entire length to the strait of Messina, separating near the S. extremity, so as to embrace the gulf of Tarentum. The principal branch traverses Naples, separating the waters which flow to the Mediterranean from those which fall into the Adriatic and the Ionian Seas. The entire length of the chain is about 800 m. The Apenines often present rounded tops and a uniform crest, whence branches descend to the coasts, between which, valleys, such as that at the mouth of the Tiber, open into extensive plains. The S. slope of that part of the chain which bounds the Gulf of Genoa, is composed of escarpments, which rise abruptly from the sea. Among the detached portions of the Apenines are the mountains of Piombino in Tuscany, Mount Albano near Rome, and Mount Vesuvius near Naples. M. Bruguière proposes to distinguish the mountains in Sicily by the name of the Insular Apenines. None of the summits attains the limit of perennial snow, although snow lies on Monte Corno during nine months in the year. The culminating point of the Apenines, the Monte Corno or Gran Sasso d'Italia, between Teramo and Aquila, is 10,206 feet above the sea. The other principal summits are Monte Cimone, in the North Apenines, 6975 feet, and Monte Amaro, summit of the Monte Majella in the South Apenines, 9150 feet, but the chain in general is of lower elevation. The S.W. part of the chain is a vast volcanic region comprising Vesuvius, the only active volcano on the continent of Europe, and many thermal springs. On the N. is the volcanic mass of Voltore near Melfi. The geological formation is chiefly calcareous; primary rocks are found only at the two extremities, in Piedmont and Calabria. The mountains are poor in metals; iron is found in small quantities, and extensive saliferous dépôts occur near Cosenza; the celebrated marble of Carrara, Seravezza, and Sienna, constitutes the chief riches of the Apenines. Below 3200 feet in elevation, the flanks of the principal chain are covered with a varied vegetation, of which the orange, citron, olive, and palm form the lower zone; but forests are rare. Above 3200 feet the mountains are generally arid and devoid of vegetation.

APENRADE, a seaport town and bay of Denmark, duchy and 35 m. N. Schleswig, cap. amt, on a fiord of same name in the Little Belt. ARABIA (Arabistan of the Turks), the most westerly of the three great peninsulas of South Asia, between lat. 12° 40' and 34° N.; lon. 32° 30' and 60° E. Bounded N. by Turkey in Asia, E. by the Persian Gulf and the Gulf of Oman, S. by the Gulf of Oman and the Indian Ocean, and W. by the Red Sea. On the N.E. it is connected with Egypt by the Isthmus of Suez, and is divided in two parts by the Tropic of Cancer. Length from N. to S. about 1500 m.; average breadth 800 m. Area estimated at 1,139,000 sq. m. P. 900,000. (?) Ptolemy subdivided the country into Arabia Petraea (the stony), Arabia Felix (Araby the blest), & Arabia Deserta (Araby in the desert); the first comprising its N.W. portion, with the peninsula of Sinai between the Gulfs of Suez and Akabah; the second, the territory along the W. and S. coasts; and the last, all the rest of its extent; but this partition is unknown to the inhabs. and to Arab geographers. Its natural divisions are

Arabia proper, the high table-land sloping towards the N., with a mountain chain which runs parallel to the Red Sea, in which Round Mountain is 6178 feet high. These descend abruptly to the low coast land on the W. and S.W. On the E. the fall is gradual. The interior consists of mountain and desert tracts, with extensive districts well cultivated, well peopled, and watered by streams and periodical rains. Torrents descend from the high land of Yemen to the Persian Gulf. This region is of volcanic formation; mountains of basalt, granite, and limestone. The most fertile tracts are in the S. and W. of Yemen, highly productive and picturesque. The settled regions of the interior are more fertile than is generally believed, and the deserts afford pasture after rain. The products are date palms, vines, figs, tamarind trees, the acacia and banana; cereals, coffee, spices, drugs, gums, resins, cotton, and sugar. Minerals comprise lead, iron, silver, sulphur, and precious stones. Arabia is famous for the horse and camel; wild animals comprise the wild ass, goat, and sheep, musk deer, antelope, hare, monkeys; in the S. bears, wolf, hyæna, fox; eagle, vulture, hawk, pheasant, ostrich, tortoise, serpents, and locusts. Lions were formerly numerous. The sperm whale is found on the coasts. Hadramaut on the S. coast, rises N. of Makallah to 8000 feet in Jebel Dahûra, and 5442 feet in Jebel Kharazi. N.E. of Aden is a cultivated tract celebrated for its frankincense. The central prov. of Nejd is less known—the name means “high land.” It is a high table-land with excellent pastures. The Hejaz, “low land,” is the holy land of Arabia, chief cities Mecca and Medina. Western Arabia includes the peninsula of Sinai, and the desert of Petra, the anc. Arabia Petraea. The climate is among the driest in the world; the rainy season, which in general lasts from the middle of June to the end of September, and in Oman from November to the middle of February, occurs only in December and January in the northern deserts. Heat excessive in the plains, but temperate in the mountainous regions of Yemen and Hadramaut, and the winters are rigorous in the elevated regions of Nejd. The Simoom or Samiel, the hot wind of the desert, blows from the interior towards the coast in all directions. The inhabitants settled around the coast appear to have a distinct origin from the Bedwins or true Arabs, who are the traditionally reputed descendants of Ishmael, and wander with their flocks and herds, dwelling in tents, and subsisting partly by plunder. The Wahhabees, who form a distinct sect of Mohammedans, occupy the interior of the country, having subjected a great portion of it to their dominion at the commencement of the present century. Agricultural processes are rude, and manufs. at a low ebb. The Bedwin women weave hair tent covers, and bags; and coarse linen and woollen fabrics, rude matchlocks, lance heads, and other arms, copper and tinned vessels, are made on the W. and S. coasts, mostly by foreigners. In Oman, silk and cotton turbans, sashes, woollen and hair cloaks, canvass, arms, earthen jars, and gunpowder, are made; but most other manufactured goods are obtained from abroad, in return for the native produce. The trade of Arabia is considerable, and large quantities of merchandise are brought by caravans and by sea from the surrounding countries, partly for internal consumption, and partly for distribution among the numerous pilgrims and merchants who resort to the holy cities of Mecca and Medina. Mocha and Loheia are centres of a large coffee trade. Muscat has lately risen to eminence as an entrepôt for the trade with India and the Persian Gulf, and dows or ships of a superior kind are built there, which occasionally perform voyages to India. Jiddah or Djidda, the port of Mecca, is the other principal commercial town. A part of Arabia is under Egyptian rule; other parts compose the Imamats of Muscat and Yemen. The rest of the country is shared among an uncertain number of petty states. The gov. of the Bedwins is strictly patriarchal in each of the numerous tribes. The religion of the country is Islamism, which had its origin here towards the end of the 6th century, replacing the Sabaism and Judaism which had previously been the prevailing forms of worship. The Arabic language, called vulgar, to distinguish it from that of the Koran, is used over all the N. of Africa, and extends even to the S.E. of Asia, being among the most widely spread on the globe. The literary Arabic is still used in the liturgy of all Mussulmans. It was long the language of the sciences, arts, and civilisation, and its literature is the richest of all the anc. nations of the East.

ARCTIAS, a small isl. of the Black Sea, off the coast of Asia Minor, 2 m. W.N.W. Kerasun.

ARCTIC OCEAN, or NORTHERN ICY SEA, is that part of the ocean which extends from the Arctic circle, lat. 66° 30' N., to the North Pole; it bathes the whole of the N. coasts of Europe, Asia, and

America, and communicates on the N.W. of Europe with the Atlantic; on the N.E. of Asia with the Pacific by Behring Strait. It forms the White Sea in Europe, and the gulfs of Kara, Oby, and Yenisei, in Siberia; in North America, where it takes the name of the Polar Sea, it forms Baffin Bay. The principal rivers which flow into the Arctic Ocean are the Oby, Yenisei, Olenek, Lena, and Kolima, in Asia; the Mackenzie, Coppermine, and Back, in America. Its chief isles are Spitzbergen, the Loffoden isls., Kalgouef, Waigatz, and Novaia-Zemlia, in Europe; the isls. of New Siberia in Asia; and the Polar archipelago, in America. During winter ice extends in every direction round the pole, covering a space of from 3000 to 4000 m. in diameter; and even during the four months of summer, the surface is at the freezing-point. Icebergs and fields of ice are continually drifting southwards into the Atlantic—the former sometimes extending to 100 m. in length, and from 25 to 30 m. in diameter. The coast-line of the Arctic Ocean in Asia and Europe, has been pretty well ascertained by English and Russian navigators. Scoresby, in 1822, traced the E. coast of Greenland as far as lat. 79° N.; and Cook, Hearne, Parry, Franklin, Back, Ross, Lyon, Richardson, Dease, Simpson, Beechy and Kane, have made known most part of the coast-line in North America. Sir E. Parry, in 1827, penetrated as far N. as lat. 82° 45' 15"; and great additions, including the Queen Channel, Grinnell or Albert Land, Baring Island, and the discovery of the N.W. Passage, have been made to our knowledge of the Frozen Regions, by the expeditions sent in search of Sir J. Franklin, who left England in 1845, with two ships and a crew of 138 men, all of whom perished, and their sad fate was unknown till remains of the ships were discovered by Capt. McClintock in 1859. The Arctic is remarkable for the abundance of its animals, and it is the principal field of the N. whale-fishery.

The dist. of Gran Chaco, with a population of about 100,000 free Indians, is considered as belonging to the Confederation, as well as the southern desert to the Rio Negro and Patagonia, as far as the Strait of Magellan. Of the entire population of the Republic there are 25,000 Spaniards, 25,000 British, 30,000 Italians, 3500 Germans, 3000 N. Americans, etc.; in all, 126,000 foreigners. Except a portion of the Pampas, which is watered by the Rio Negro, Colorado, and Desaguadero rivers, nearly all the country belongs to the basin of the Plata river, the great estuary of which is between this territory and Uruguay. The mountain system is comprised in four isolated groups, viz. the Andian, in the W.; the Central, formed by the mountains of Cordova and St Luis; the Southern, the sierras of Vulcan, Guamini, and Ventana, near the Atlantic; and the Brazilian, separating the Uruguay and Parana rivers. The rest of the country consists of two immense plains; the interior, extending to the base of the Andes, comprising the provs. of Mendoza, Rioja-Catamarca, Salta, Tucuman, and El Gran Chaco, watered by the Pilcomayo, Vermejo, and Salado rivers, and covered over nearly its whole extent with low brushwood, and here and there a clump of trees; the pampas, or grass-covered prairies, stretching from the S. of the Salado between the Parana and the Cordova mountains down to the almost unknown deserts of Patagonia, covered alternately with luxuriant pasture and vast crops of gigantic thistles, and interspersed with a multitude of salt lakes, some of very large size. The great Salinas, or salt plain, to the N. of the Cordova mountains, is about 200 m. in length by 60 m. in breadth. By far the most important product is cattle. Millions of oxen wander at large across the plains, or are reared on breeding estates of vast extent. Horses also are in immense herds, and mules are bred for sale to Peruvian and other traders. The breeds of sheep and swine are of inferior quality. The guanaco, llama, and vicuña abound in the vicinity of the Andes; and the native animals comprise the puma, jaguar, and armadillo; the biscacha, and the small quadrupeds which furnish the nutria and chinchilla skins. Among the forest trees are the pine, elm, oak, plane, maple, ash, and poplar. The orange, peach, and vine, once imported, have become indigenous, and abound in the Plata basin. Yerba maté, or Paraguay tea, is largely cultivated on the banks of the Parana and Uruguay rivers, and is exported to other parts of S. America. Coffee is grown in small quantity. Of late years a remarkable progress has been made in all branches of agriculture, though the immense and easy propagation of cattle in the Plata basin and the vast extent of country separating the groups of population, tended greatly to prevent it. Maize and millet are grown all over the country, wheat in the Plata basin, barley on the coast and in the valleys of the Andes, and rice in Paraguay and Tucuman. The sugar cane is cultivated in the N., but the quantity of crystallized sugar made is very small in proportion. Cotton is now grown only in Catamarca, though the whole country is well adapted for it. Wines and brandy are specially made in the valleys of the Andes, in the provs. of Mendoza, St Juan, Catamarca, and Salta. These are almost entirely used in the provinces. Other products are cochineal, tobacco, indigo, cocoa, madder, chinchona bark, and fruits. The Andian system contains in itself almost all the known metals, and the Central and Brazilian mountains are rich in minerals, but very few mines are wrought. Artesian wells are now largely made use of in the countries at the base of the Andes. With regard to climate, the country may be divided into three zones, stretching from N. to S., viz. the regions of the coast, the interior, and the Andes. On the coast the mean annual temperature is 60° or 70° Fahr., and the prevailing wind is S.E. In the interior the temp. varies from 32° to 100° Fahr., according to the season and locality, the wind being either from N. or S., and on the Andes the temp. depends on elevation. The Indians of the Chaco manufacture yarn, ropes, and fishing-nets from the fibres of the aloe, with saddle-cloths and blankets, which they dye with great skill; and in Cordova similar goods, Marocco leather and turned wares are made, but in general manufactured goods are imported from abroad in return for raw produce. Communication is carried on over the plains with Chile, Peru, and Bolivia by mules and ox-waggons. Diligences ply at set times from Buenos Ayres to Rosario, and from Rosario to Cordova and Peru, to Tucuman and Salta, to Santa Fé and to Chile. A railway, voted by Congress in 1855, is in course of construction between Buenos Ayres and Rosario. In 1852 the rivers Parana and Uruguay were opened to ships of every nation. Imports, in 1861, were worth about 91,000,000*l.* Exports, about 55,000,000*l.* 678 ships entered, and 820 cleared from the ports. Government is nominally republican, and the legislative power in theory is vested in a junta of 44 deputies, half annually renewed by popular election, and in a senate of 2 deputies from each department. Public rev. in 1860, 3,100,000 piastres (as. 3*d.* sterling). Expenditure, 2,770,549 pia. National debt, 5,541,245 pia. The country was discovered in 1517, and settled in 1553 by the Spaniards, under whom it was created into a vicerealty. Its independence of Spain dates from 1816. In 1835, de Rosas was elected to the dictatorship of Buenos Ayres, which he exercised with almost absolute rule till he was defeated by Urquiza, the governor of Entre Rios.

ASIA, the largest connected mass of land on the globe, the nucleus of the old world and the cradle of the human race, is distinguished by the massive grandeur of its table-lands and mountains, its arid steppes and fertile regions. It comprises all the countries to the east of Europe and Northern Africa, and extends, with its islands, between lat. 10° S., and 78° N.; lon. 26° and 190° E. (170° W.) From the central mass several extensive peninsulas and headlands project on the E., S., and W., with many clusters of contiguous islands. Asia is separated by a short sea distance from America on the N.E., and Australia on the S.E.; it is connected with Africa by the isthmus of Suez on the S.W., and terminates with Europe on the W. by an extensive boundary line formed by the Uralian and Caucasian mountains. Its whole area is supposed to amount to upwards of 16,930,038 sq. m., and its population to 652,500,000. (?) Table-lands and mountains. The central portion of the continent or High Asia is occupied by a vast table-land which descends in abrupt terraces or gentle slopes to the plains. It forms east and western systems, differing in extent and elevation.—1. The Eastern table-land comprises Tibet, Mongolia, and the Gobi desert, 5000 to 12,000 ft. above the sea, between the Bolor Mts. on the W., and the plain of Manchuria on the E., the plain of Siberia on the N., and the Himalayas and Mts. of Northern China on the S. The N. and N.W. slope of the highland is determined by the chains of the Thian Shan, the Altai; part of the Yablonoi and Baikal Mts. From the snow-covered crests of these gigantic ranges the region sinks gradually N. to the steppes and mossy tundras on the shores of the Icy Sea. These border Mts. have a mean height of 9000 to 10,000 feet; but isolated peaks rise much higher. They form the boundary between the largest empires in the world, Russia and China; and define a limit between the dissimilar regions of the N. and S. The N., a hilly region, well watered, and wooded with the dark stone-pine and pitch-fir, is, in winter, covered with deep snow, whence are fed the vast sources of the Yenesei. The S. poorly watered and increasing in aridity as it enters the Gobi on the W., has its lower slopes covered with larch, and its upper steppes with the rhododendron. 2. The Western, comprising the table-land of Iran or Persia, the plateaux of Armenia and Asia Minor, from the Indus on the E. to the Levant and the Black Sea on the W.; bounded N. by the low plains of Bokhara, the desert of Khiva, the Caspian Sea and the Caucasus; and on the S. by the terraced slopes of Beloochistan, Persian Gulf, and the valley of the Tigris and Euphrates. These table-lands, which meet in the Bolor mountains, near lon. 70° E., extend in all about 5500 miles in length by 2000 in breadth, or more than one-third of the continent. From the range of the Bolor mountains, which extend from N. to S. between the valleys of the Oxus and the Indus, separating the Eastern from the Western table-lands, there spring in a direction from N. to E. four parallel chains of mountains—the THIAN-SHAN, ALTAI, KUENLUN, and HIMALAYA, which constitute the skeleton of eastern High Asia, and form portions of the table-land, apart from which they have no existence. [See under these heads.] The Himalaya, the most elevated and stupendous system in the world, has a length of 1500 and a breadth of 150 miles; its mean height is 16,000 to 18,000 feet, and Mount Everest, the highest ascertained point on the globe, is 29,002 feet above the sea. Peninsulas.—1. The vast region of Arabia, the W. most of the three great peninsulas of Southern Asia, is rather African than Asiatic in its character. Its interior is an elevated table-land rising to 6000 or 8000 feet. 2. India, the great central peninsula, is separated from the eastern table-land by the Himalaya and the valley of the Ganges. 3. The south-eastern peninsula, or India beyond the Ganges, including Burma, Siam, Cochin China, and the sub-peninsula of Malaysia. 4. The peninsula of Corea on the E.; and 5. Kamtchatka, the N. E. peninsula. The rich mineral products of Asia have been known from remote antiquity. Precious stones are abundant. Amethysts, topazes, and rock-crystals are found in the Altai, Himalaya, and Ural mountains; carnellians and agates in W. India; beryl and lapis lazuli near Lake Baikal; sapphires and rubies in Ceylon; diamonds in Deccan, Borneo, and Ural mountains. Volcanic products are found near Mount Taurus, in Armenia, W. Anatolia, and in Japan and Sunda isl.; steatite, asbestos, and kaolin or fine porcelain clay, in China and Japan; talc in Siberia; coals in Hindostan and China; rock-salt in the Ural mountains, N. China, and Turkey; gold or gold-dust in various localities; mercury in China and Japan; copper and iron in the Ural mountains; and lead in Dauria, China, Armenia. Fossil shells are found in great quantities at an elevation of 16,000 to 18,000 feet in Tibet, mammalian remains in the lower Himalaya, and the alluvial soil of Siberia is full of bones of extinct quadrupeds. Plains, Steppes, and Deserts.—1. The plain of W. Siberia, the largest in Asia, is bounded W. by the Ural mountains, E. by the basin of the Yenesei, S. by the Kirghiz and other steppes which separate it from the basin of the Aral Sea and the Altai mountains. 2. The plain of the Aral, in the great basin of the continental streams, forms part of the greatest depression on the globe, in which the Caspian is 85 feet below the level of the Black Sea. 3. The valley of Cashmere, the most interesting and beautiful spot on earth, 5500 feet above the sea, and girdled with mountains. 4. The plain of the Ganges, at the foot of the Himalaya, 900 miles in length, fertile and densely populated. 5. The Indo-Chinese and Chinese lowlands, well watered, fertile, and populous. 6. The lowland of Syria, watered by the Euphrates and Tigris. Islands.—Ceylon, a pendant of India. The islands of Malaysia, the Sunda islands, Moluccas, Philippines, Formosa, Loo Choo, Hainan, Chusan, and the Kurile islands. Lakes.—Caspian Sea, Sea of Aral, Baikal, Balkash, Kosgol, Tengri-Nor, Kokonor, Issik-Kul, Urumiah, Van, Dead Sea, lake of Tiberias. Rivers.—On the N. the Obi, Yenesei, Lena, and Kolima; E. the Anadyr, Amur, Whang Ho, Yangste-Kiang, Canton river, Cambodia and Menam; S. the Irawaddy, Brahmapootra, Ganges, Godavery, Taptee, Nerbudda, Indus; W. Kizil Irmak, Sihoon, and Orontes. To the vast inland basin of the continental streams which do not reach the sea, belong the Volga and Ural, the Sir-Daria and Amoo-Daria or Jihon. The zoology of the N. of Asia partakes of the character of that of N. Europe. In the central and southern countries the characteristic animals are the elephant, rhinoceros, Bengal tiger, camel, auroch, yak, musk-deer, argal, & Tibetan goat; it is believed that all the domestic animals of Europe have been originally derived from Asia. Asia has comparatively a less variety of birds and reptiles than of quadrupeds, but the cassowary, bustard, pheasant, domestic fowl, and other gallinaceous birds are abundant; and among reptiles, the Indian python, the cobra-de-capella or spectacle snake, the gavial or crocodile of the Ganges, are formidable in the highest degree. Climate and Vegetation.—Asia exhibits every variety of climate, from the intense cold of the Arctic regions to the burning heat of the torrid zone; as compared to Europe it is continental, and therefore excessive. It is divided by its mountain chains into three climatic zones, ranging from N. to S. The limit of constantly frozen ground includes the continent from the White Sea to the Sea of Okhotsk, between the parallels of 55° and 65° N.; and the Northern limit of grain, which in Europe rises to the parallel of 70°, sinks to 60° in Central Asia. The central zone, comprising the elevated table-land of the interior, exposed to northerly winds and shut out from the S., is generally cold and dry. From W. to E. it is traversed by a part of the great rainless belt of the old world, including the N. of Arabia, part of Persia and the desert Gobi on Shamo, where rain falls only at wide intervals. This is the climate of European and tropical grains and fruits. In its northern part it is characterized by extensive forests of deciduous trees, willow, birch, Siberian pine, larch, oak, lime—and vast meadows; the cereals are wheat, oats, barley, rye, millet; also hops, hemp, flax, and tobacco. The bread line, or the boundary within which the bread plants thrive, includes rye, oats, and potatoes, to lat. 48° N. Rice in E. Asia from the equator to 40° N. Barley in Kamtchatka to 60°, on the Yenesei 58°, and in Lapland 70° N. The northern limit of the vine crosses this zone from the N. extremity of the Yellow Sea to the Caspian. S. of it the prevailing plants are maize, rice, camphor, almond, apricot, and peach. Persia and Asia Minor are characterized by the fig, citron, and walnut; the tea-shrub, camphor tree, and the orange, are characteristic of China and Japan; and the olive of W. Asia, S. of the Caucasus. The Southern zone, which includes all the countries S. of the central highlands, has a summer heat reaching to 80° Fahr., and being within the district of the S.W. monsoon rains, it is exposed to excessive precipitation from April to October. The annual rain-fall varies from 70 inches in the Deccan to 66 at Calcutta, 52 at Madras, 78 at Bombay, and from 300 to 600 inches in the mountains. This is the climate of tropical grains, palms, and bananas: in this zone Arabia is characterized by the date-palm, and the aromatic plants: India and the Eastern Archipelago, by rice, cotton, indigo, opium, the palm tribe, and the bread-fruit tree: Ceylon by cinnamon; and the Moluccas by the clove, nutmeg, pepper, and ginger. Asia is considered the cradle of the human race, whence the various nations and tribes have issued to people the other parts of the world. The number of foreigners who have migrated to and settled in Asia, is small compared to those who have left it. The races inhabiting Asia may be divided into—1. The Semitic, including Syrians, Jews, Arabs, and the descendants of the ancient Chaldeans or Aramæans. 2. The Persian Kurds, Ossetes, Armenians, Georgians, Mingrelians. 3. The Turks, forming a numerous race in central Asia. 4. The Samoiedes, N. Asia. 5. The Mongols, Buriats, Kalmucks, Tunguses, and other tribes in N.E. Asia. 6. The Japanese & Chinese. 7. The Malays, inhabiting Malaysia and the isls. of the Eastern Archipelago. The political divisions of Asia include six empires, China, Russia, Britain, Persia, Turkey, and Arabia. [ARABIA, CHINA, etc.] The British possessions are chiefly in India, or the peninsula within the Ganges. The Portuguese, whose settlements were formerly numerous, have preserved only Goa, Damaun, Macao, and a few others. The French possess Pondicherry, a settlement on the coast of Malabar, and Cochinchina. The Dutch occupy Java, Sumatra, the Moluccas, etc.

ASIA ISLES, a low and wooded group of Malaysia, E. of Gilolo. Lat. 1° N.; lon. 181° 17' E.

ASLAGO, a town of Northern Italy, deleg. Vicenza, cap. of the dist. termed the "Seven Communes," inhabited by a race of German descent, 22 m. N. Vicenza. P. of the town 5840. It is celebrated for the manufacture of straw hats and all sorts of carpenters' work.

ASIA MINOR or ANATOLIA, an oblong peninsula which forms the west of Asia, extending between lat. 36° and 42° N.; lon. 26° 4' and 41° E., having E. Armenia and Mesopotamia, S. Syria and the Mediterranean, W. the Ægean Sea, and N. the Sea of Marmora and Black Sea. Length about 700 m., greatest width 400 m. P. 10,700,000(?) Area with Cyprus, 208,370 sq. m. The country is eminently mountainous, the area of elevated surface exceeding that of plains by nearly twenty times. Near its centre the mean height of the table-land is 8280 feet. This plateau forms a long broad band, crossing the peninsula from N.W. to S.E., and contains the greatest amount of plain surface, all the rest being an agglomeration of mountains, extending from N.W. to S.E., from which lateral branches cross the country in all directions. The highest chains meet in the S., where the Taurus range (mean height 9800 feet) rises in Argis Dagh (mount Argæus) to 13,197 feet. Near the N. coast the Olympus range is 6332 feet; this continued by the Murad Dagh and the Emir Dagh on the S.E., forms the longest chain in the peninsula. The coasts are bold, and present many fine inlets. These are the Gulfs of Adalia and Makri, on the S.; those of Symi, Kos, Scalanova, Smyrna, and Adramyti, on the W.; and Ismid and Sinope, on the N. coast. Chief rivers, the Kizil-Irmak (anc. Halys), Yeshil-Irmak, and Sakaria (anc. Iris and Sangarius), flowing into the Black Sea; the Kodus, Gramalki, and Mendera (anc. Hermus, Caucus, and Meander), into the Ægean; the Sihûn and Jyhoon (anc. Sarus and Pyræmus), into the Mediterranean; and the Euphrates, forming the E. frontier. There are many lakes, some fresh, but mostly salt. Lake Tuz-gul, the largest, is 50 m. by 15 m., and 3000 feet above the sea. Its water contains 32 per cent. of saline matter. The minerals comprise copper, silver, lead, iron; alum, nitre, and rock-salt; but mining is carried on only to a small extent. The climate of Anatolia has been celebrated for its excellence in all ages. The mountains are covered with forests of oaks, beeches, planes, and ash. The flora is very beautiful, and evergreens, myrtle, bay, laurel and holly abound. Rice, barley, maize, sugar, cotton, indigo, tobacco, opium, and most of the products of S. Europe flourish. Sheep, goats, and horses are of excellent breeds, and the cat of Angora yields fine silken hair. Exports, wool, silk, gall-nuts, skins, furs, cochineal, madder, sponge, and meerschaum clay. Manufs. leather, carpets, cotton & woollen stuffs. Asia Minor is divided into the pashalics of Anatolia, Itshil, Karamania, Sivas, Marash, and a part of Trebizond. Principal cities, Smyrna, Brusa, Trebizond, Kutayah, Angora, Konieh (anc. Iconium), and Kaisariyeh (anc. Cæsarea), with Scutari, opposite Constantinople. Smyrna, Trebizond, and Brusa, are the principal seats of commerce; but all around the coasts are small ports, where fairs and markets for the produce of the inland districts are held. The name Anatolia was given to the country under the Byzantine emperors, and is retained by the modern Turks. In ancient times it was the seat of the kingdoms of Troy and Lydia, and afterwards formed a proconsulship under the Romans; and ruins scattered over almost every portion of its surface, attest its former wealth and prosperity. The present population consists mainly of Ottoman Turks; the other people are Greeks, Armenians, Jews, Koords, wandering Arabs, and a few Zingari or gypsies. The Asia of the New Testament Scriptures refers to a Roman prov. which embraced the W. part of the peninsula of Asia Minor, and of which Ephesus was the capital.

ATHENS, Athenæ, cap. of the kingdom of Græce or Hellas, and of the gov. Attica, situated in a small plain on the N.W. side of the gulf of Egina, between the rivers Ilissus E., and Cephissus W., 5 m. from its harbour, the Piræus. Lat. of the Parthenon 37° 58' 10" N.; lon. 23° 43' 50" E. P. (1861) 41,298, or with the Piræus 47,723. It is the residence of the sovereign, and has a university, and supreme courts of the Archbishop of Attica. The Acropolis or citadel, on which most of its noble monuments are placed, is a square craggy rock, 150 feet high. Summit enclosed by walls. The modern city is built on its W. and N. sides, in which directions many new thoroughfares have been laid out. Since 1835, the old walls have been taken down, & houses erected on every side. The new palace, finished in 1843, at the foot of Mount Lycabettus, is a quadrangular building, with two internal courts, a portico of Pentelic marble, and richly decorated apartments. In front is a square, in which the bloodless revolution of Sept. 15, 1844, was enacted. The university, founded 1836, is the finest modern building, and contains an anatomical theatre, a library of 30,000 volumes, 39 professors, and about 500 students. There are besides, seven gymnasia, a military academy, theological seminary, normal school, botanic garden, and society of natural history. The cathedral is a handsome Byzantine structure, with a modern steeple. Other chief modern edifices are the barracks, civil and military hospitals, an English chapel, Protestant and Greek cemeteries, royal mint, chamber of representatives, theatre, and observatory. Chief manufactures, walking-sticks and smoking tubes. A good road now connects the city with the Piræus.

[PIRÆUS.] Athens is reputed to have been founded by Cecrops, b.c. 1336; it fell to Rome, b.c. 86; since then it has belonged successively to Goths, Byzantines, Burgundians, Franks, Catalans, Florentines, Venetians, and Turks. Principal antiquities, the Acropolis, surmounted by the Parthenon, an edifice of white marble, 228 feet in length by 100 feet in breadth, & still tolerably perfect; the Erechtheum, a building 90 feet in length; remains of the Temple of the Wingless Victory; the Propylæa, or grand entrance in front of the foregoing temples; and the theatre of Herodes Atticus at the S.W. angle of the Acropolis. N. of the Areopagus is the Temple of Thesus, one of the most perfect monuments of ancient Athens, having 34 remaining Doric columns outside, and containing a rich museum of antiquities. Areopagus or Mars' Hill, where St Paul addressed the Athenians, the Pnyx, where popular meetings were held, the Eleusinium, the prison of Socrates, and Tower of the Winds, vestiges of the Temple and Theatre of Bacchus, the Grotto of Apollo & Pan. Outside of the city, 16 Corinthian columns, 60 feet in height, on a raised platform, remain of the Temple of Jupiter Olympius, and near the Ilissus, the Stadium or ancient race-course is still traceable. Athens became the seat of the Greek government (removed hither from Nauplia) in 1835. King Otho abdicated the throne and left Greece on board a British war-vessel, 24th Oct. 1862, and Prince William of Denmark accepted it as King of the Hellenes, 6th June 1863. Shortest sea track to Liverpool 2566 nautical miles. Shortest steam passage 20 days.

ATLANTIC OCEAN, Atlanticus Oceanus, one of the five great hydrographical divisions of the globe, occupies an immense longitudinal valley, extending from the Arctic circle on the N. to the Antarctic circle on the S., bounded W. by the coast of America to Cape Horn, and E. by the shores of Europe and Africa to the Cape of Good Hope. Extreme breadth 4100 m. Area computed at 25,000,000 sq. m. It is naturally divided into three portions; 1st, the N.; 2d, the S.; and 3d, the intertropical Atlantic. The North Sea, the Carribean Sea, and the Irish Sea, form portions of the Atlantic; but the Baltic and the Mediterranean, which communicate with the North Sea by narrow channels, are properly considered separate seas. The principal gulfs of the Atlantic are, in Europe, the Bay of Biscay; in Africa, the Gulf of Guinea; in America, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Gulf of St Lawrence. The chief islands are, in Europe, the British Isles and Iceland; in Africa, the Azores, Madeira, and Canary islands, and the archipelago of the Gulf of Guinea; in America, the Antilles, Newfoundland, and the islands of the Gulf of St Lawrence. The Atlantic, with its branches, drains nearly the whole of Europe W. of the basin of the Volga; all North America E. of the Rocky Mountains and the mountains of Mexico; and the whole of South America E. of the Andes. Its chief affluents are, in Europe, the Rhine, Loire, and Tagus; in Africa, the Senegal, Niger, and Congo; and in America, the St Lawrence, Mississippi, Orinoco, Amazon, and La Plata. The bed of the Atlantic is unequal in elevation, some places rising in immense sand-banks to within a few fathoms of the surface, and others sinking to unfathomable depths. The most extensive banks are those of Newfoundland, the Dogger in the North Sea, and the Agulhas off the S. point of Africa. In 1852, Capt. Denham, H.M.S. "Herald," in lat. 36° 49' S.; lon. 37° 6' W., found bottom in 7706 fathoms. From Cape Clear in Ireland to Cape Race in Newfoundland, a ridge extends for 1640 m. in length, by 400 m. in breadth, with an average depth of two miles, on which are deposited a thick layer of shells. On this ridge was laid the electric cable, which for a brief period in 1858 united Europe with America. The trade-winds blow regularly in the intertropical portion of the Atlantic; beyond these limits the winds are variable. From the prevalence of S.W. winds in the North Atlantic, the voyage from Europe to America, between Liverpool and New York, on an average of six years' sailing, requires 40, while the return voyage is performed in 23 days. The principal currents of the Atlantic are, the Equatorial, which flows from the coast of Africa to the Carribean Sea, with a velocity of from 30 to 70 miles a day; and the Gulf stream, which, leaving the Gulf of Mexico, flows through the strait of Florida, with a velocity of 80 m. a day, and a temperature of 86° Fahr., one branch extending with gradually decreasing velocity and temperature to the Azores. A branch of the N.E. gulf stream skirts the British isles on the W., and spreads northward to Iceland. Immense numbers of fish are found in the Atlantic, and herring and cod-fishing are important branches of industry in northern Europe. A great part of the surface of the Atlantic, between lat. 16° and 45° N.; lon. 35° and 75° W., is covered with a species of weed (fucus natans), the home of myriads of molluscs and crustacea. In the higher latitudes of the North and South Atlantic, navigation is impeded by icebergs, which are floated from the polar regions; and although these are generally melted before reaching the frequented parts of the ocean, they have occasionally been met with as far S. as lat. 40° 45' in the North, and near the Cape of Good Hope in the South Atlantic. This sea derives its name from Mount Atlas, as it washed the whole W. shores of the world as known to the ancients, and extended N.wards to the Hyperborean ocean; they also called it Oceanus Exterior, from its being the utmost sea with which they were acquainted. The people who lived near Mount Atlas were called Atlantei or Atlantides. The number of ocean steamers that crossed the Atlantic in 1862 was 78,926. The quickest passage on record was by the "Scotia," from New York to Liverpool in 8 days 21 hours, Dec. 1863. [For extensive information on the navigation and currents of the Atlantic Ocean, see the author's Physical Atlas, Hydrographical Division.]

ATLANTIC, a co. of the U. S., North America, in S. of New Jersey State. Area 550 sq. m. P. 11,786. Atlantic City, a vill. at terminus of railway, one of the best bathing places on the coast.

ATLAS, a celebrated mountain system of North Africa, including all the heights in the Barbary States, as well as those which are dispersed through the region of Sahara. The principal chain appears to extend from near Cape Nun, on the Atlantic, to the E. of the great Syrtis in Tripoli, traversing Morocco, Algérie, and Tunis. The highest known points of the system, which the snow clad, are situated in Morocco, E. of the capital, and S. of the town of Fez, and the chain appears to diminish in elevation as it extends towards the E. Several secondary chains detach themselves from the main system, and extend in different directions, one of which terminates at the Strait of Gibraltar. These secondary chains appear to be connected by intermediary mountains, which traverse Algiers and Tunis. The name Little Atlas is applied to the secondary range of the country of Sous, to distinguish it from the Great Atlas, which is confined to the elev. mountains of Morocco. To the S. of Tripoli several low ranges extend from the principal chain into the Sahara and the desert of Libya. The highest points, proceeding from W. to E., are estimated thus: in Morocco, 11,400 feet; Algeria, 7673 feet; Tunis, 4476 feet; Tripoli, 3200 feet. The lion and panther are found in the wooded regions of Mount Atlas. Snow lies for several weeks in winter on many of the higher ranges, and is seldom absent from the summit of Miltain 27 m. S.E. Morocco, which is 11,400 feet in elevation. The Atlas and its ramifications enclose many valleys of luxuriant fertility, and its flanks are clothed with dense forests of pine, oak, cork, white poplar, wild olive, etc. Copper, iron, lead, antimony, and rock-salt are abundant. In ancient times Atlas was supposed to sustain the world on his shoulders.

ATOLL or ATOLLON, a term applied to the chaplet or ring of coral on which an isl. rests, and hence prefixed to the names of many coral islands in the Indian and Pacific Oceans. An atoll or lagoon island is a circular reef of coral formation rising out of the sea and enclosing a lagoon.

AUSTRAL ISLANDS, a group of five isls. in the S. Pacific, between lat.  $22^{\circ} 27'$  and  $27^{\circ} 36'$  S.; lon.  $144^{\circ} 11'$  and  $150^{\circ} 47'$  W.; chief islands, Rai-vavai, Tubuai, Rurutu, Rimatara, and Rapa.

AUSTRALASIA (SOUTH ASIA) or MELANESIA, a division of the globe, forming a part of Oceania, extending between the equator and lat.  $50^{\circ}$  S., consisting of the continent of Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, and those parts of the Eastern Archipelago and Polynesia between lon.  $110^{\circ}$  and  $180^{\circ}$  E., viz., Papua, the Arru Islands, Timor-Laut, New Britain, New Ireland, New Caledonia, Admiralty, Salomon, New Hebrides, and Queen Charlotte Islands. Area in sq. m., and pop. of the settlements, are given under the respective names. [AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.]

AUSTRALIA, a vast extent of land, composing the main portion of Australasia, and lying S. of the Asiatic Archipelago, between lat.  $10^{\circ} 41'$  and  $39^{\circ} 8'$  S.; lon.  $113^{\circ}$  and  $153^{\circ} 39'$  E., having W. the Indian Ocean; E. the Pacific Ocean; N. the Sea of Timor and Torres Strait, separating it from Timor, Papua, etc.; and S. the Indian Ocean and Bass Strait, the latter dividing it from Tasmania. Length, E. to W., 2500 m.; greatest breadth, 1960. Area estimated at 2,967,500 sq. m. P. (1861) 1,063,933, together with about 200,000 aborigines. The principal indentations of the sea are the Gulfs of Carpentaria and Cambridge on the N.; Moreton Bay and Port Jackson on the E.; Port Philip, the Gulfs of St Vincent and Spencer and Great Australian Bight on the S.; Shark Bay and Géographe Bay on the W. The coasts are generally deficient in harbours, though Port Jackson, in New South Wales, and Port Denison, in Queensland, are among the best in the world. The mountain ranges are of moderate elevation; and, so far as yet known, have all a meridional direction, and consist of primary and palæozoic rocks. In the S.E. a succession of mountain ranges stretch northward from the parallel of Melbourne, at a distance from the coast of from 50 to 100 m. The Australian Alps or Warragong mountains which belong to this chain, attain to an elevation of 6510 feet in Mount Kosciusco, and 7500 in Mount Hotham (probably the culminating point of the continent), and their summits are covered with snow. These are continued N. ward by the Blue Mountains, W. of Sydney; the Liverpool Range, in which, near Port Macquarie, Mount Sea View is 6000 feet; S. of Brisbane, Mount Mitchell is 4120 ft., Mount Lindsey 5500 ft.; north of this they sink to undulating hills, rising in isolated peaks to 3000 or 4000 feet to York Peninsula, which is a plain. The resemblance of the geological formation of these mountains to those of the Ural, led Sir R. Impey Murchison, in 1844, to foretell the existence of gold in the Australian Cordillera; and, in February 1851, Mr Hargraves discovered extensive diggings in the districts near Bathurst and Wellington. Since that time gold has been found in various and wide spread localities in the province of Victoria. [AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.] The only great river system of the interior hitherto explored is that of the Murray, the main stream of which takes its rise in the Australian Alps, and is swelled in its lower course by the Murrumbidgee and the Darling from the north, with their many tributaries, the Lachlan, Bogan, Macquarrie, Peel, Balonne, etc.; and from the south, by the Mitta-Mitta, Owens, Goulburn, Campaspé, Loddon, and Wimmera, its basin being known to extend through at least  $10^{\circ}$  of lat. and  $13^{\circ}$  of lon., and probably comprising an area of upwards of 200,000 sq. m. Other principal rivers are the Hunter, Hawkesbury, Hastings, Shoalhaven, Macleay, Clarence, Richmond, Burnett, Burdekin, etc., debouching on the E.; Snowy River, Yarra, Barwon, Hopkins, and Glenelg on the S.; Blackwood, Swan, Murchison, Gascoyne, and De Gray, on the W.; and Victoria, Adelaide, Alligator, Roper, Albert, Flinders, Mitchell, and Kennedy on the N. coast; but few serve to facilitate internal navigation. Principal lakes are those of Torrens, Gregory, Frome, Eyre, and Gairdner, in South Australia. Many of these only swamps, dry in summer. Much of this great territory is still unexplored. Sturt, in 1844, penetrated to the centre, between Spencer Gulf in the S., and Carpentaria in the N., experiencing utter sterility and drought. Gregory, in 1856, in exploring the Victoria River, N.W. Australia, seemed, until Stuart's discoveries in 1860 and 1861, to have come upon the same central desert, 200 to 300 m. from the coast. In 1858, Gregory traced the Barcoo River into Cooper's Creek of Sturt, and finally, through a most unpromising region, to Lake Torrens and the head of Spencer Gulf. Much more promising, however, are the results from the subsequent three expeditions of Stuart 1858-59, 1860, and 1861,—in the first instance, for 200 to 300 m. to the N.W. of Spencer Gulf; on the second occasion, to within 250 m. of the Gulf of Carpentaria; and on the third, to within 95 m. of the opposite coast, or all but across this vast territory. From this last bold expedition he was compelled to retire before impenetrable forests, and owing to diminishing supplies. The last important exploring expedition was that of Burke and Wills, who, leaving Melbourne, Aug. 1860, arrived at Menindia on the Darling (lat.  $32^{\circ} 15'$ ; lon.  $142^{\circ}$  E.) in Oct. Their course then lay by Cooper's Creek, till they arrived at the meridian of  $140^{\circ}$ , which they kept to lat.  $28^{\circ}$ , and then struck N.E. to Flinders River, and arrived at the Gulf of Carpentaria in February 1861, thus completely traversing the continent from S. to N. On their return journey, the whole party, with the exception of King, perished from want of food, and a series of unfortunate casualties. King returned to Melbourne, November 26, 1861. These successive expeditions materially dispelled the desponding views as to the desert character of the Australian interior,—showing, in many places, a well-watered country, with undulating hills, one of which is estimated at 3000 feet above the sea. A large part of the surface is occupied by extensive sandy and stony deserts; elsewhere fine pasture and woodland are met with. The climate is very peculiar. The N. half of the country being mostly within the tropics and the range of the monsoons is subject in summer (between November and April) to heavy rains, which, however, become very irregular in their occurrence, about and beyond the tropical line. In other parts of Australia years of complete drought occasionally occur, followed by years of flood; but here the hot is also in general the dry season, a circumstance favourable to health. The N.W.

winds, blowing over the sandy deserts of the interior, towards the colonies of the S.E., are dry and hot, raising the therm. to 80° and 110° Fahr. Mean annual temp. at Melbourne, 57°; spring, 57°; summer, 66°; autumn, 58°; winter, 49°; average fall of rain 26 inches, or 2 inches more than at London. Snow is scarcely ever seen in Melbourne, except on the mountains, but hoarfrost and thin films of ice are sometimes seen in the suburbs. At Brisbane, lat. 27° 26', the mean annual temp. is 68°·7; fall of rain, 43 inches; and number of rainy days, 108. Minerals are abundant, comprising inexhaustible supplies of gold, copper, iron, and coal, together with silver, mercury, tin, zinc, antimony, and kaolin. Of 5710 plants discovered, 5440 are peculiar to this continent. Maize, wheat, flax, tobacco, indigo, vines, olives, and in some parts sugar and cotton, are raised; but, except gold digging, sheep-farming is the most flourishing branch of industry, and it is as a wool-growing country that Australia is rising into importance. In 1793 eight merino sheep were introduced by M'Arthur, a settler, and in 1861 there were 17,000,000. Great expectations, however, are formed of Queensland as a cotton-growing country, the soil and climate being admirably adapted to its cultivation. The indigenous quadrupeds are all, with very few exceptions, marsupial, even the rats; they comprise 58 species, of which 46, including the kangaroo and wombat, are peculiar to this continent and its adjacent islands. The singular ornithorychus paradoxus is an animal found here only. The native Australians are viewed by many as a distinct variety of the human race: their language has an affinity with that of the Malay Peninsula, but their dialects are endless, and not understood by different tribes even near each other. Their skin is of an earthy black, hair straight, forehead low and full, nose broad, lips thick, stature short, frame slight, and more adapted to feats of agility than strength. They live in roving tribes. Many tribes go naked, practising cannibalism, and having scarcely any notion of a deity, or of social arts and order. The race is becoming extinct. In Victoria the census of 1857 gives only 1768; while 20 years before they were perhaps 8000; and now, the entire native population of Australia is probably not 200,000. The Portuguese and Dutch, about the beginning of the 17th century, are the earliest European authenticated discoverers of Australia, though little was known of it until after Dampier, Wallis, and specially Cook, explored its various coasts. The favourable report of it by the latter was followed by the first British settlement at Port Jackson in 1788. In 1802, Port Philip, with a great extent of coast to the westward, was first made known. The name of New Holland, given by the Dutch to the N. W. coasts, first discovered by them, and subsequently extended to the whole of the mainland, is now supplanted by the more appropriate name of Australia. The British settlement of New South Wales or Sydney was made in 1788. The settlement of Western Australia or Swan River was established in 1829. South Australia, established in 1834, and colonised in 1836, extends along the coast from Fowler Bay in the W., to beyond Cape Northumberland, or from lon. 132° to 141° E., of which Adelaide is the capital. The Port Philip District, now Victoria, chief town Melbourne, colonised in 1835, was formerly a dependency of New South Wales. North Australia was colonised by the British Government in 1838, but has since been abandoned. Queensland, established 1859, embraces the N. portion of New South Wales, extending from Point Danger, lat. 28° 8' S., to Cape York, in the extreme N. of the continent, lat. 10° 41' S., and from the Pacific to lon. 138° E. [AUSTRALIAN COLONIES—NEW SOUTH WALES, VICTORIA, SOUTH AUSTRALIA, WEST AUSTRALIA, QUEENSLAND, ADELAIDE, MELBOURNE, PERTH, SYDNEY.]

AUSTRALIAN COLONIES. Under this head we give a collective view, including Tasmania and New Zealand; although, strictly speaking, these two latter belong to the more comprehensive circle of Australasia. These settlements, in the order respectively in which they were founded, consist of, 1st, New South Wales, established as a penal colony in 1788; 2d, Tasmania (late Van Diemen's Land), established, also as a penal colony, 1803; 3d, West Australia, lately made a penal settlement, but established free in 1829; 4th, Victoria, so named in 1851, but colonised in 1835; 5th, South Australia, settled in 1836; 6th, New Zealand, officially established in 1840, but colonised for some time previously; 7th, Queensland (late Moreton Bay District), established 1859. In the year 1836, Australia scarcely appeared in the commerce of Britain, and two of the principal colonies, Victoria and South Australia, had just come into existence; while, in 1861, they collectively contained 1,358,385 colonists, including about 70,000 aboriginal population. Of 121,214 emigrants that left the shores of the United Kingdom in 1862, no fewer than 41,843 were bound for these colonies. Their united imports amount to 27,500,000*l.*, and exports 22,600,000*l.*, and the net annual public revenues, apart from loans, are about 6,000,000*l.* The chief articles of Australian produce are gold, copper, and wool. Of gold, the annual produce is about 10,000,000*l.*, chiefly from Victoria; of copper, 500,000*l.*, nearly all from South Australia; of wool, above 70,000,000 lbs., worth about 5,000,000*l.*, contributed in various proportions by all the colonies. Nearly the entire of these productions is conveyed direct to British ports. Extensive railway lines have been projected, and are already partially constructed, while telegraphic communication is completed between the capitals of South Australia, New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria, and Tasmania. The following table illustrates the area, population, finances, and commerce of this group of colonies, according to the returns of 1860-61:—

* New South Wales.—The Imports, Exports, Wool, and Gold, are for the year 1860. For later information see separate articles.

In Victoria the wool clip fell off temporarily after 1864, notwithstanding the importation of sheep from New South Wales, which had the effect of arresting increase there also. In the other colonies there is a progressive yearly increase, particularly in South Australia and New Zealand. The year 1858 was marked by the extension of gold production to Nelson, New Zealand, and in 1861, to Otago. At the same time there was a decided increase in the yield of the New South Wales mines.

The climate of these colonies, although averaging from 5° to 15° higher in the annual mean than that of Britain, is, nevertheless, suited to the Anglo-Saxon constitution. The northern localities around Moreton Bay verge upon the tropics, while the southern extremities of Tasmania and New Zealand stretch into the cool regions of the 44th and 48th parallels of south latitude. Improved navigation has reduced the passage by sailing ships from England to 80 or 90 days, and by steam to 60 days; while by the overland route the postal delivery may be expected in little more than six weeks. In 1855 these colonies were placed on the footing of self-government; and since that time they have greatly advanced in the path of progress. The Australian colonies have recently had under consideration the important subject of a Federative union, but as yet nothing definite has been arranged.

AUSTRALIA FELIX, a name given by the late Sir Thomas Mitchell in 1836, in complement to the fine scenery of a part of Victoria he was then exploring. It comprises Mount Alexander and other gold fields between the river Goulbourne and the Pyrenees hills. The colonists most readily extended so flattering a designation to the entire territory, and this poetical idea was in a fair way of supplanting the earlier "Port Philip," or "Southern District," when, in 1851, on the occasion of the territory being officially detached from New South Wales and made a separate colony, all contentions were merged in the new name of Victoria.

AUSTREY, a pa. of England, co. Warwick, 6 m. E.N.E. Tamworth. Ac. 2097. P. 557.—Austrinum Prom. of the Romans. [CAPE CLEAR.]

AUSTRIA (ARCHDUCHY OF), the central prov. and nucleus of the Austrian empire, and seat of its cap., now forming the two crown lands of Upper and Lower Austria, between lat 47° 25' and 49° N.; lon. 12° 45' and 17° 8' E., having N. Bohemia and Moravia, E. Hungary, S. Hungary, Styria, and Salzburg, and W. Salzburg and Bavaria. Area of Lower Austria 7655 sq. m. P. (1857) 1,681,697. Upper Austria, 4632 sq. m. P. (1857) 707,450. The Noric Alps which form its S. boundary, next to Styria, extend their contreforts to the banks of the Danube, which traverses the province from W. to E.; the Inn river forms its N.W., and the March, part of its E. frontier. It has numerous mountain lakes and picturesque scenery. Forests and vineyards extensive. It is fertile and admirably cultivated. Wheat, oats, and barley are raised, and wine is extensively made. Mineral products comprise gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, arsenic, alum, coal, and graphite. It is divided by the riv. Enns into Upper and Lower Austria (Land Ober and Unter der Enns). Lower Austria is subdivided into four circles,—I. Lower Wiener-wald, cap. Vienna; II. Upper Wiener-wald, cap. St. Pöten; III. Lower Manhartsberg, cap. Korneuburg; IV. Upper Manhartsberg, cap. Krems; and the municipal dist. of Vienna. The regency of Lower Austria has its seat at Vienna, and is charged with the civil administration of the prov. Upper Austria is subdivided into four circles.—I. Mühl, cap. Linz; II. Traun, cap. Steyer; III. Hausruk, cap. Wels; IV. Inn, cap. Ried. The regency is established at Linz. The military affairs of the archduchy are directed by the military commandant of Vienna. After Vienna, the chief cities are Linz and Wiener-Neustadt.

AUSTRIA (CIRCLE OF), an old subdiv. of Germany, which comprised Austria Proper or Lower Austria, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, & the Tirol, bounded N. by Moravia, Bohemia, and the circs. of Bavaria and Swabia; W. Switzerland; S. Lombardy and Istria; and E. Croatia and Hungary,—most of which territories are now included in the Austrian Empire.

AUSTRIA (EMPIRE OF), Germ. Oesterreichische Kaiserthum, Fr. Empire d'Autriche, a state of Central Europe, cap. Wien (Vienna), situated chiefly between lat. 45° and 51° 2' N. (but extending in Dalmatia to lat. 42° 9' N.); lon. 8° 35' and 26° 35' E., bounded N. by Russia, Prussia, Saxony, and Bavaria; S. by Italy, the Adriatic, and the Ottoman Empire; W. by Liechtenstein, Switzerland and the Sardinian States; and E. by the Russian Empire. Area 249,985 sq. miles. P. (1857) 35,018,988. The principal part of the territory presents the form of an oblong square, parallel with the equator lengthwise, and its centre is indicated, nearly, by the position of Pesth, on the Danube. Three-fourths of its area are mountainous, and there are three great mountain systems,—the Alps in the S.W., the Bohemian and Moravian mountains in the N.W., and the Carpathians, forming a great curve, the one extremity of which abuts on the Danube at Presburg in the N.W., & the other at Orsova in the S.E. The most elev. summits are in the Alps of Tirol, where the Ortlerspitze attains the height of 12,833 feet, next Bucsecs in the E. Carpathians, 9528 feet, and 3d, the Schneekoppe in the Riesen Gebirge, the culminating point of the mountains of Bohemia and Moravia, 5275 feet. The most mountainous countries are the Tirol, Salzburg, Upper Styria, the W. part of Upper Carinthia, and the E. part of Transylvania. Austria has many plains, remarkable for uniform level, the principal being the plains of Lower Austria, on both sides of the Danube, the plains of Hungary, the plains of Slavonia, and that of the Po. It is abundantly supplied with water, nearly all of which is collected into six great rivers, viz., the Danube and the Dneister, flowing to the Black Sea; the Po and the Adige to the Adriatic; the Vistula to the Baltic; and the Elbe to the North Sea; the most important lakes of Austria are the Platten-See, and Lake Neusiedel, in Hungary, which country, from its flatness, contains also the greatest number of marshes. Of the Italian lakes only the north end of Garda is now within the Austrian territory. The principal Gulfs are those of Venice, Trieste, Quarnero, and Cattaro. The Austrian Empire is comprised between the isothermal lines of 60° and 50° Fahr. The greatest part of the territory lies in the temperate zone; the N. parts of Bohemia, Silesia, Galicia, and Bukowina, alone stretch into the subarctic. The Alpine region is one of the most rainy countries in Europe. The line of equal rainfall of 40 to 45 inches, ascends from Lake Garda by Roveredo to Treviso, Trieste, Fiume, Ragusa to Carlstadt; rising to 55, 60, and 70 inches in the higher Alps. Storms are rare in Lower Austria, and become more frequent in the S. The annual number of thunder storms is 8 in Vienna, 28 in Hungary, and 50 in the plains of Venice. Earthquakes occur in Dalmatia, Illyria, Hungary, and Transylvania. Glaciers and snow-fields are confined to the Alps at an elev. of 8000 feet. The soil in such an extensive territory is varied; the plains of Venetia and Hungary are the most fertile; next, the countries of Galicia, Bohemia, Moravia, Austria Proper, and Styria. The flora of the Austrian states comprises the different grains and plants common to the countries of Central Europe, as vines, hops, tobacco, saffron, and a great variety of fruit-trees. A third part of the productive soil is covered by forests. The Alps and the mountains of Bohemia and Moravia produce pine, beech, and larch; while the forests of Hungary, Galicia, Transylvania, and the Military Frontier, furnish oak, beech, and elm. The empire may be divided into the three following zones of vegetation:—S., the zone of olives and rice, between lat. 42° and 46°; central, that of the vine and maize, between lat. 46° and 49°, and N. that of grain, hops, and hemp, between lat. 49° and 51°. The vegetation of these zones is modified by the elevation of the soil; thus the vine ceases at a height of 1750 feet, the oak at 3000 feet, cereals generally at 4500 feet, pines at 6000 feet, and pasture at the limits of snow in the Alps. Among the fauna of Austria may be noticed, in the Alps and Carpathians, the bear, wolf, fox, lynx, and chamois; in the high Alps, the jackal; in Dalmatia the marten, otter, marmot, beaver, wild boar, wild cat, stag, deer, hare, and rabbit. Eagles and other birds of prey are found in the mountains, and herons are plentiful in the plains. Fish is abundant in most of the streams, and leeches are exported from the marshes. The empire is rich in minerals, having gold, silver, lead, copper, tin, mercury, and iron, widely spread over a large portion of its dominions. The country contains all kinds of building materials, and precious stones, and is especially rich in mineral springs. Rock salt, of which 4,000,000 cwts. are annually mined, is a monopoly of the state. The working of pit coal has increased twelve times within 30 years, and now exceeds 72,000,000 cwts.

The Crown lands marked thus * form part of the Germanic Confederation of 1815.

The population belongs to four principal families—the German, Slavonian, Rumanian, and Hungarian or Magyar. German is the language of the countries inhabited by the first-named family, and that employed by the superior administration; the different Slavonian dialects by the second; Italian and a mixed dialect by the third; and the Magyar by the fourth. French is the diplomatic language of Austria. Agriculture is rapidly being improved in many parts of the empire. In Styria, Illyria, and the Tirol, the rearing of cattle forms the chief branch of agricultural industry, and the produce of wine is abundant. Venetia raises a great amount of wheat, maize, and rice. The rearing of silk worms is also a source of wealth in the southern provinces. Venetia and the South Tirol supply yearly 270,000 centimes of cocoons, value 22,000,000 fl. Galicia and Bohemia produce grain in abundance. Moravia and Silesia are well cultivated, and the produce exceeds the wants of the population. Hungary also yields abundance of grain. The number of horses in Austria was (in 1857) 3,500,000 of an excellent breed. There were 24,000 mules, mostly in Dalmatia, and 100,000 donkeys in Hungary. The number of sheep is estimated at 30,000,000, two millions of which are of improved breeds, and the number of hogs at 8,100,000. Since the peace of 1815 manufacturing industry has made great progress. The most important articles produced are woollens, linens, cottons, silks, steel, wood, and glass wares. The principal imports are colonial products, oils, corn, cattle, cotton, hides, skins, and metals; exports, silk, wool, woollen goods, glass, steel, linen, hemp, timber, and seeds. Tobacco is a government monopoly; the amount of wine produced is greatly on the increase. The means of communication in the country are extensive; and many of the great routes are remarkable as works of engineering art. Railways intersect the empire in all directions, and steam packets are established on the great rivers. The Danube steam navigation was, in 1861, purchased from Bavaria by the Austrian Steam Navigation Company for 900,000 fl. Exports (1862) 833,853,018 fl. Imports 214,918,496 fl. Vessels entered the ports of the empire in 1861: sailing 66,112, tonnage 1,734,461; steamers 4185, tonnage 1,013,141. Cleared: sailing vessels 66,890, tonnage 1,739,053; steamers 4168, tonnage 1,004,781. The Austrian monarchy takes the first rank in the states of the confederation. The crown is hereditary by order of primogeniture in the male, and failing it in the female line. Nearly each province has distinct usages and peculiarities. The ancient Hungarian provinces—viz., Hungary, Transylvania, Croatia, and Slavonia—had formerly their own diets, and were, to a certain extent, independent of the court of Vienna; but in most of the W. provs. (the Tirol excepted), the rule of the emperor has always been more direct. The subordinate civil divisions of the Austrian provs. are into counties in Hungary and Transylvania, viertels (quarters) in Lower Austria, delegations in Venetia, and circles elsewhere. The empire is ecclesiastically divided into archbishoprics, bishoprics, Protestant superintendencies, and parishes. In 1857 there were 23,968,686 Roman, and 3,526,952 Greek Catholics, 9737 Armenian Catholics, 2,918,126 non-united Greeks, and 3513 non-united Armenian Catholics; Protestants of Augsburg confession, 1,218,831, Reformed 1,963,785; Unitarians 50,870, Jews 1,049,871, others 3955. The Greek Catholics and the Protestants mostly inhabit the E. provs.; the Unitarians are nearly confined to Transylvania. Education has made rapid strides in Austria—the law requiring that, in every province of the empire, every child between the ages of six and twelve shall be educated either in the school or at home. In the manufacturing districts, no child is allowed to be sent into a factory before completing its ninth year. After that age, children in factories are compelled to attend classes on Friday evenings and Sunday mornings till they have attained their fifteenth year. In Roman Catholic districts the school inspector is the priest, and in Protestant districts the Dissenting minister. In 1857 there were 48,615 school establishments, with 71,730 professors and teachers, and 3,732,862 students and scholars. There are 8 universities: those of Vienna, Prague, Pesth, Cracow, Padua, Lemberg, Graz and Innsprück. Agricultural, mining, nautical schools, and gymnasia. There are 28 public libraries with an aggregate of nearly two millions of vols. The military force of the empire is composed of a standing army, and an army of reserve (Landwehr). In 1862 the force on the peace footing was 269,103 men, and 42,201 horses. The navy consisted of 84 steamers with 399 guns and 7595 horse power, and 25 sailing vessels with 369 guns. The navy is manned by 7929 sailors, 2253 marine artillery, and 4538 marine infantry. Pola and Venice are the only harbours of war. Austria possesses a great many fortifications, of which Josephstadt, Theresienstadt, Olmütz, Mantua, Peschiera, and Comorn, are first class; Peterwardein, Brod, Altradrisca, Arad, Eszeg, Karlstadt, Karlsburg, Munkatsch, Temeswar, Ragusa, Cattaro, Zara, Legnago, Venice, Kufstein, Salzburg, Prague, and Königgrätz, second class. It has garrisons in Mentz and Piacenza. The public revenue arises from direct taxes on property, industry, and incomes, with personal and Jews' taxes, indirect imposts on tobacco, provisions, a salt monopoly, legacy and stamp duties, post-office and custom dues, and the revenues from the crown domains and mines. Expenditure (1863) 367,087,748 fl. or 37,473,475*l.* rev. 304,585,094 fl. or 31,093,050*l.*; deficit 62,502,654 fl. or 6,380,425*l.* Debt in 1862, 2,360,236,856 fl. or 224,222,501*l.* The army and internal administration are the principal sources of expense.

BAALBEK (the Baalath of Scripture, and Helio-polis of the Greeks, the city of the sun), a ruined city of Syria, formerly of great size and magnificence, situated on the lower declivity of Anti-Libanus, in a valley, opening into the plain of Buk'a'a, 43 m. N.W. Damascus, lat. 34° 1' 30" N.; lon. 36° 11' E., 3838 ft. above the sea. Its remains, more extensive than those anywhere else in Syria, except at Palmyra, comprise three temples, two formed with immense stones, besides numerous columns, altars, and the vestiges of the city walls, 2 m. in circuit. The date of its origin is lost in remote antiquity. A great temple, one of the wonders of the world, was erected by Antoninus Pius. It continued a place of importance down to the time of the Moslem invasion; was sacked in 748, and finally pillaged by Timur Bey in 1400. The present village, to the east of the ruins, contains about 100 mean houses. Some of the ruined buildings were probably erected as late as the age of Hadrian or Antoninus Pius; but others are evidently of a much earlier date, and answer to the account given of the "House of the Forest of Lebanon," built by Solomon.—(1 Kings vii. 2-5, 8-12.)

BABYLON, the earliest post-diluvian city, & the oldest in the world of which there are any traces remaining. Anciently the capital of the Babylonio-Chaldean empire, in an extensive plain on the Euphrates river, pash. and 60 m. S. Bagdad. The modern town Hillah occupies a portion of its site. Lat. 32° 28' 30" N.; lon. 44° 9' 45" E. According to Herodotus, the walls of Babylon were 56 m. in circumference, 87 feet thick, & 337 feet high, built of brick, and containing 100 gates of brass, and 250 towers. Supposed to have been originally built, b.c. 2230. The area is described as covering a space of 100 sq. m., or nearly 5 times the size of London, covered with houses, many 3 or 4 stories high. The ruins of Birs-Nimrod, on an elevated mount, are supposed to be the Tower of Babel of Scripture, and the Temple of Belus described by Herodotus. The base of this tower measures 2082 feet in circumference; its remains, constructed of brick, are 28 feet in breadth. Babylon was at the height of its power in the time of Nebuchadnezzar. It was besieged and taken by Cyrus, b.c. 538, and afterwards by Alexander the Great. Out of its ruins four great capitals, besides other cities, were built. The most prominent of the remaining ruins are Birs-Nimrod, the Kasr on supposed site of palace of Nebuchadnezzar, and the Mujahlibah, on the river bank, 5 miles from Hillah.

Carlsruhe, between lat. 47° 32' and 49° 52' N.; lon. 7° 27' and 9° 50' E., in the angle formed by the Rhine, on-turning N. at Basel. Bounded N. by Bavaria and Hessen-Darmstadt; E. by Bavaria, Württemberg, and the principalities of Hohenzollern; S. by Switzerland, and W. by France and Rhenish Bavaria. Area, population, and subdivisions, as follow:—

Circles.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. 1861.	Chief Towns.
Lake (Constance),	1367	198,160	Constance.
Upper Rhine,	1556	345,913	Freiburg.
Middle Rhine,	1610	469,782	Carlsruhe.
Lower Rhine,	1377	355,436	Mannheim.
Total,	5910	1,369,291	...

The surface is mountainous, covered for four-fifths of its extent by the mass of the Schwarzwald (Black Forest), with the contreforts which extend from it; the Alp, the Heiligenberg, and the Randan, are on the E., and on the S. the Schwarzwald Mts., which bound the E. valley of the Rhine, from which they rise abruptly, & form a chain of plateaus, varying from 2000 to 4000 feet in elevation. The culminating points are the Feldberg, 4892 feet; the Kandel, 4160 feet; the Blauen, 3822 feet; the Randan, 2600 feet; and the Kaiserstuhl, an isolated volcano near Briesach, 1900 feet. The whole west part of the territory is a continuous plain, formed by the valley of the Rhine, and extending between it and the mountains from Basel to Mannheim. Chief rivers, the Rhine, which forms the S. and W. boundary of the state, the Murg, Kinzig, and Weisen-Mayn, Neckar, and Danube, which last rises in the grand duchy. The Lake of Constance forms part of the S.E. frontier, and there are several small lakes in the interior. The climate is mild in all the valley of the Rhine; rigorous in the mountain districts, the summits of which are free from snow during the height of summer only. The vine is cultivated to an elevation of 1400 ft. The soil is generally fertile. Agriculture constitutes the chief wealth of the state. Barley, wheat, maize, potatoes, fine hemp, flax, and tobacco are raised, and fruit is grown in abundance. Sheep and cattle are extensively reared. Produce of timber estimated at nearly 1,000,000 cubic fathoms annually; masts of 150 feet in length, and oak timber, are floated in rafts to the mouth of the Rhine. Mineral products; salt from springs, alum, vitriol, sulphur, coal, iron, copper, lead, and silver; gold-washing, formerly general along the Rhine, is now insignificant. Cotton manuf., riband weaving, and the production of beet-root sugar are carried on. Schwarzwald manufs. comprise straw-plait, wooden ornaments, watches, clocks, jewellery, musical boxes, and organs. Exports, timber, wine, corn, and kirchwasser, salt, linens, clocks, & paper. Imports, colonial produce, drugs, wool, horses, iron, steel, and silks. The accession of the duchy to the Prussian Customs Union in 1835, greatly increased the transit trade, which is favoured by the creation of free ports at Constance, etc., by steam navigation on the Lake of Constance, the Rhine, Neckar, and Main, and by an excellent system of railways. The executive power is vested in the Grand Duke, and the legislative authority in a house of parliament composed of two chambers. Education is compulsory, children being prohibited from being employed in factories until they have completed their eleventh year. In 1861 there were in Baden 896,683 Roman Catholics, 445,587 Protestants, 2970 Dissenters, and 24,099 Jews. There was 1 school for every 350 of the pop. Heidelberg has a faculty for Lutheran, and Freiburg one for Catholic, theology. The former had, in 1860, 63 professors and 937 students, and the latter 215 students. Public revenue (1862), 1,428,349*l.*; expenditure, 1,867,589*l.*; debt, 8,023,698*l.* The army amounts to 14,919 men.

BAGDAD (PASHALIC OF), Chaldæa Mesopotamia, an extensive but ill-defined region of Asiatic Turkey, of which it forms the S.E. portion, mostly between lat. 30° and 38° N.; lon. 40° and 48° E. The Euphrates and Tigris flow through it, and both unite at Korna, in lat. 31° N.; lon. 47° E. The united river, now called Shat-al-Arab, flows into the Persian Gulf. The country E. of the Tigris includes Koordistan and Khuzistan; the plains of the former are fertile, producing grain and fruit; the latter, almost a desert waste, is famed for its dates. The country to the

W. of the Euphrates is a flat sandy desert, without water, and destitute of herbage, with the exception of the banks of the river, which are fertile, and produce abundant rice crops. That part of the region between the Tigris and Euphrates consists of Al-jezirah towards the N., a barren desert, and Irak Arabi, beginning where the two rivers approach each other, to the N. of Bagdad, and extending to the Persian Gulf. The pop. of the pashalic consists of Arabs, Kurds, Turkomans, Armenians, Turks, and Jews, some of whom are imperfectly subject to the Porte, and live under different chiefs. Formerly one of the most important provs. of the Turkish Empire, Bagdad has lately been divided into several smaller districts, and is now virtually limited to the country around the capital. In this region may be traced the sites of the ancient Babylon, Nineveh, Ctesiphon, and Seleucia; the field of Arbela, where Alexander the Great broke the power of Darius, and many other localities famous in sacred and profane history.

BAGDAD, a city of Asiatic Turkey, cap. pash. of same name, and formerly of the Saracen Caliphate, on the Tigris, 220 m. above where the united rivers enter the Persian Gulf. Lat. 33° 21' N.; lon. 44° 28' E. P. 65,000, (?) mostly Arabs and Turks. It stands on both sides of the river, its two portions being connected by a bridge of boats; is enclosed by a brick & earthen wall, flanked with towers, and is 5 m. in circumference. A citadel, though of no great strength, here commands the passage of the Tigris. There are about 100 mosques, many of them with lofty domes and minarets. The bazaars are large, and abound with most of the goods sold in European markets. Red and yellow leather, silks, and cotton stuffs are manufactured, and this city was long the great emporium of all the surrounding countries; but its commerce has declined since Persia has received European goods from the N. by way of Trebizond, and on the S. direct from India and the Persian Gulf. It has still, however, a large trade with Aleppo and Damascus, whence it imports cotton twist, calicoes, shirtings, prints, imitation shawls, dyes, and to which it exports tambac, galls, buffalo hides, East India indigo, pearls, Cashmere shawls, and coffee. Its climate is healthy, but very hot in summer; rain is abundant in Nov. & Dec.; snow never falls. This city, built out of the ruins of Ctesiphon, was founded by Al Mansur in 762, and continued to flourish under succeeding caliphs, until sacked by Hulaku in 1258. It has been held by the Turks since 1638.

The name Kodja Balkan is limited to the portion of the ancient Hæmus W. of the Balkan of Shipka. The W. part of the Great Balkan runs S.S.E. to N.N.W., and separates Bulgaria from Upper Moesia, on the N., whilst on the S. it serves to connect the Hæmus with Mount Rhodope. The chain in general is 4900 feet high, and N.W. of Kalofer it rises to 5325 feet. It slopes abruptly S. to the alluvial plain of Tartarbazardjik and Philipopolis, but terminates more gently on the N. by means of the crests of the Balkan of Estropol. Its waters flow chiefly in transverse valleys. Snow lies on the higher summits till June, but disappears in July. The E. part of the Balkan consists of a series of minor chains, decreasing in elevation as they approach the plains of the Danube on the N., and the Black Sea on the E. Mount Scardus, the culminating point of Tochar-dagh, is 9700 ft. high. The Balkan is connected with the mountains of Middle Europe by the ranges of Monte Negro, Herzegovina, and the Dinaric Alps on the W., and the mountains of Greece on the S. The deep and narrow gorges permit of paths difficult for beasts of burden; and the range is traversed by only one great route, that of the Gate of Trajan, by which the communication is kept up between Vienna and Constantinople.

BALTER or BALTI, Asia. [BULTI.]

BALTIC PROVINCES is the name applied to the Russian governments of Courland, Esthonia, Livonia, and St Petersburg, with the principality of Finland, situated on the Baltic Sea.

BALTIC or EAST SEA, Mare Balticum (Germ Ostsee), an extensive Mediterranean Sea of North Europe, enclosed by Sweden, Russia, Prussia, Mecklenburg, and Denmark, and open to the Kattegat and North Sea by the Sound and the Great and Little Belts. It extends from Swine-münde in the S. to Tornea in the N. about 900 m., and from Carlserona in the W. to Memel in the E. about 180 m., and its area, including the Gulf of Bothnia, occupies a space of about 125,000 square miles. It has all the characteristics of an inland sea or great lake. In proportion to its size, no sea has so great an influx of fresh water, hence it contains but little salt. In proportion to the North Sea this is found to be as 194 to 373. The N. part of the Baltic is generally called the Gulf of Bothnia, and by the Swedes "Helsingland Gulf" from the province which it bathes. On the E. are the Gulfs of Finland and Riga, on the S.E. the Gulf of Danzig, and on the S.W. the Gulf of Lübeck. The depth of this sea on the W. is not more than 15 fathoms, and in general it is only from 8 to 10 fathoms deep; on the S. it is nowhere more than 50 fathoms; but towards the N. it deepens to 100 fathoms. The Baltic receives the waters of the Motala-Elv, the Lakes of Mæler, Onega, and Ladoga, the Düna, Niemen, Vistula, and the Oder, besides numerous smaller streams. The great amount of sand and mud carried down by the rivers has considerably raised the bottom of this sea, & closed the mouths of many of its navigable streams, so that ships which formerly entered these rivers, must now be anchored at a distance from their mouths. This, together with the numerous islands, rocks, and sandbanks, and the gradual upward movement of the bed of the sea (at the rate of several feet in a century), renders navigation troublesome and dangerous. The chief islands are those of the Danish Archipelago, between the coasts of Jütland and Sweden; the islands of Rügen, Bornholm, Eland, Gottland, Dago, and Oesel, the group of Aland and that of Holmön. The Baltic has no tides, or rather the effect of the tide is so little felt as not to be observable; but is subject to changes of level, depending on the winds, retarding or accelerating the passage of the water through the Sound and the Belts. Thus, during a N.E. wind the S.W. portion of the Baltic is often raised four feet above the usual level of the North Sea; on the contrary, after N.W. gales and during spring tides, the Atlantic rises, and pouring a flood into the Baltic, commits havoc among the islands of the Danish Archipelago. The great amount of water which flows into the Baltic, especially during the melting of the snow in spring, occasions a general current in the direction of the ocean; and it has been calculated that the number of days in which the water flows into the Kattegat, is in proportion to those in which it flows in an opposite direction, as 24 to 1. During winter this sea is usually frozen to a greater or less distance along the coasts; and in severe seasons, not only the Sound and the Belts, but a great part of its surface is covered with ice. In the reign of King Christopher (1324) the Baltic was frozen so hard, that for six weeks the people travelled between Denmark and Germany on the ice. The Baltic contains abundance of fish, and a quantity of amber is gathered on its S. shores. Chief ports, St Petersburg, Riga, Königsberg, Danzig, Stralsund, Lübeck, Copenhagen, Carlserona, Stockholm, and Christiania.

BAVARIA (CIRCLE OF), an old subdivision of Germany, which comprised the S. and E. portions of the modern kingdom of Bavaria, E. of the Rhine, with the archbishopric of Salzburg.

BAVARIA (KINGDOM OF) (German Bayern or Bairern, Lat. Bavaria Vindelicia), a state of Central Europe, forming part of the German Confederation, cap. München (Munich). This kingdom is composed of two isolated masses of territory, the E. and largest of which is situated between lat. 47° 20' and 50° 41' N.; lon. 9° and 13° 48' E.; and bounded N. by Hessen-Cassel, Saxe-Meningen and Coburg Gotha, the principality of Reuss, and the kingdom of Saxony; E. by Bohemia and Austria; S. by the Tirol; and W. by Würtemberg, Baden, & Hessen-Darmstadt. The westernmost, forming Rhenish Bavaria, or the Palatinate, the original possession of the reigning family, is situated on the W. of the Rhine, between lat. 48° 57' and 49° 50' N.; lon. 7° 5' and 8° 27' E.; bounded N. by Rhenish Prussia and Hessen-Darmstadt; E. by Baden, from which it is separated by the Rhine; S. by France, and W. by Rhenish Prussia and Hessen-Homburg. The state is divided into eight circles (Kreise), the extent and population of which are as follow:—

Circles (Kreise).	Area in sq. m.	Pop. 1861.	Chief Cities.
Oberbayern (Upper Bavaria),	6,619	779,961	München.
Niederbayern (Lower Bavaria),	4,129	675,338	Landshut.
Paalz (Palatinate),	2,293	308,069	Speyer.
Oberpfalz and Regensburg,	3,796	485,895	Regensburg.
Mittelfranken (Upper Franconia),	2,640	616,743	Baireuth.
Oberfranken (Mid. Franc.),	2,937	545,235	Ansbach.
Unterfranken & Aschaffenburg,	3,423	601,768	Würzburg.
Schwaben (Swabia) & Neuburg,	3,694	376,768	Augsburg.

and the mountains of Central Germany, occupying the basin of the Danube, which river traverses it for a space of 180 m., and in that part of its course receives on the right, the Iller, the Lech, the Isar, and the Inn; and on the left the Kocher, the Würnitz, the Altmühl, the Naab, the Regen, and the Ilz. A small part of the N.E. of Bavaria belongs to the basin of the Elbe, and is watered by the Eger and the Saale. All the N. part of the principal territory is drained by the Main, which has its source in the kingdom, and receives the Tauber, the Rodach, the Saale (of Franconia), and the Regnitz. Rhenish Bavaria belongs exclusively to the basin of the Rhine, which forms its E. boundary; it is watered by the Lauter, the Queich, and the Nahe. A small portion of the Lake of Constance belongs to Bavaria. Its other lakes form a chain along the N. slope of the Alps; they are the Ammer-See, the Würm-See, on an affl. of the Ammer, and the Chiem-See, formed by the river Alz. Its smaller lakes are the Staffel-See, Kochel-See, Walchen-See, and Königs-See. The country is in general elevated and mountainous. The Alps, on the S., have, in the Zugspitz, an elev. of 10,150 feet. The highest points of the Böhmerwald, on the E., between Bavaria and Bohemia, are Arber, 4613 feet, and Rachelberg, 4561 feet: its most remarkable offset is the Bayerischer-wald, between the Danube and Regen. The other mountain chains are the Fichtelgebirge, on the N.E., in which the Schneeberg is 3481 feet. This range is connected on the N.W. with the Thüringer-wald, and on the N.E. with the Erzgebirge. The Frankischer Jura is a branch of the Fichtelgebirge, which extends S. between the Regnitz and the Vils. The northernmost chain of Bavaria is the Rhöngebirge, culminating point the Kreuzberg, 3000 feet. S.W. of this is the Spessart, an offset of the Odenwald, in which the Hohewart is 1968 feet. In Rhenish Bavaria the chief mountain is the Hardt, the highest point of which, the Donnersberg, is 2800 feet. The principal plains are the Donau-moos, on the S. of the Danube, between the Lech and the Paar; the valley of the Lech, above and below Augsburg, and that of the Isar, between München and Freising. The climate is temperate and healthy; although, on account of the general elevation of the surface, it is cold. The soil is among the most fertile in Central Europe; the mountains yield excellent pasturage, and are covered with forests of valuable timber. Grain is cultivated to an elevation of 3280 feet; forests reach to 5800 feet; and grazing extends to 8500 feet, or the snow line which occurs only on the higher Alps. The wealth of the country consists in its agricultural produce. Besides the ordinary kinds of grain, a small quantity of buckwheat and maize is cultivated. The wines of Franconia, in the valleys of the Main, the Saale, and the Taüber, are much esteemed, especially those called Steinwein and Leistenwein, from the banks of the Leiste, near Steinberg. Rhenish Bavaria also produces excellent wine. The hops are esteemed for their excellent quality. Fruit, hemp, flax, linseed, beet-root, and liquorice, are widely cultivated. Cattle-rearing is the exclusive industry of the Alps; sheep in Mittel-franken, and pigs and goats in Unterfranken. The rearing of silk worms has been introduced. The soil is rich in useful minerals. Salt, which is a government monopoly, is produced by evaporation, and from the rock, in the rich mines of Berchtesgaden, Reichenhall, Traunstein, Rosenheim, Kissingen, Soden, Orb, Dürkheim, and Philipsthal. Iron is worked everywhere in the territory. In 1861, the produce of the salt mines and works was 988,046 cwt.; value, 4,217,097 fl.; hands employed, 10,372. The coal and lignite mines employ 2703 workmen; produce valued at 1,187,931 fl. The produce of hops in 1862, was 10,000 cwt., value 1,000,000 fl. The export of beer in 1861 was 318,333 eimers; value of iron, lead, and coal, in 1861, was 1,567,063 fl. Small quantities of copper, manganese, cobalt, and mercury, are produced in Rhenish Bavaria. There are numerous quarries of marble, alabaster, gypsum, building stones, and porcelain clay. Among the many mineral springs with establishments of baths, the most frequented are those of Kissingen, Brückenau, and Rosenheim. Linen-weaving is carried on to a considerable extent. The other manufs. are tanning, paper-making, working in wood and straw, hardware, beet-root sugar, tobacco, and porcelain, jewellery, mathematical and optical instruments, toys, and wooden clocks; porcelain of the royal manuf. of Nymphenburg, and the potteries of Deggendorf and Hafnerzell, called "Pottery of Passau." Exports estimated at 1,230,000*l.* annually, and consist of grain, timber, wine, cattle, salt, hides, wool, hops, fruits and fruit-trees, liquorice, madder, butter, cheese, glass, and jewellery. Imports cotton, sugar, coffee, and other colonial products, silks and woollen fabrics of fine qualities. Bavaria possesses the transit trade between North Germany and Austria, Switzerland and Italy. In 1861, there were in operation 750 m. of railway, and 1370 m. of telegraph. The routes of navigation are, the Danube, the Rhine, & the Main, traversed by steam-packets. The other navigable rivers are, the Inn, the Salzach, Regnitz, and Altmühl. The chief floatable rivers are, the Weisse Main, the Rodach, the Iller, Lech, Wertach, Isar, & Loisach. The traffic on the Main & Danube Canal amounted, in 1861, to 4194 vessels, and 1933 rafts. [ALTMÜHL.] Among the establishments most favourable to commerce are the exchange banks of Nürnberg, Ansbach, and München. Bavaria joined the Zoll-Verein (Prussian commercial Union) in 1833.

Bavaria is a kingdom, and its form of government is a constitutional monarchy. The throne is hereditary in the male line. The constitution dates from 25th May 1818, and no change can take place without the concurrence of the national states. The executive power belongs to the king; the ministers and all functionaries are responsible. Public revenue (1861) 46,520,597 fl.; expend. 46,720,597 fl. The kingdom is divided into 2 Catholic archbishoprics, those of München and Bamberg; 6 bishoprics, 171 deaneries, and 2756 parishes. The direction of the Protestant religion is under a general consistory (Ober-consistorium), and 3 prov. consistories at Bayreuth, Kreuzwertheim, and Spire. Two-thirds of the pop. are Roman Catholics, the others Protestants. Complete religious liberty is guaranteed by the constitution. Public instruction is under the minister of the interior. Elementary schools (Volks-schule) exist in all the parishes, and attendance on them is obligatory for children till the age of 14; and after leaving them they are bound for two years more to attend a Sabbath school. The kingdom possesses 3 universities, 2 of which (München and Würzburg) are Catholic, and 1 (Erlangen) Protestant. Its universities are well attended by both natives and foreigners. Besides elementary schools, Bavaria has a school of forests at Aschaffenburg, a school of husbandry (Landswerthschaft) at Schleissheim, a mining school at Steben, a seminary for students, lycœums, gymnasia, Latin schools, normal schools, polytechnic schools, a royal school of architecture, a school of trades, schools of rural industry, a blind and deaf-mute school. The capital possesses scientific and literary institutions, and collections of art among the most extensive in Europe, besides important academies and national societies. [MÜNCHEN—MUNICH.] The armed force of the kingdom comprises the permanent army, the army of reserve, and the militia (Landwehr). Every male is liable to serve; but the sons of the nobility have the privilege of entering the military school of cadets. The army is raised by conscription, and the period of service is for four years, from the age of 21 to 25. The permanent army in 1861 amounted to 81,337, and the reserve to 24,420 men. Bavaria, formerly an electorate of the German empire, was erected into a kingdom by Napoleon I., at the peace of Presburg, in 1805.

Dutch Limbourg and Luxembourg, and Rhenish Prussia, S. and S. W. France, and W. the North Sea. Greatest length N. W. to S. E. 200 m., greatest breadth N. to S. 137 miles. The area and pop. of the provs. are as follow:—

Provinces.	Area in sq. miles.	Pop. Dec. 31, 1861.	Chief Cities.
Antwerp (Anvers),	1086	458,679	Antwerp.
West Flanders,	1251	642,354	Bruges.
East Flanders,	1162	391,630	Ghent.
Hainault,	1441	325,216	Mons.
Liege,	1190	237,218	Liege.
Brabant,	1271	812,348	Brussels.
Limbourg,	954	196,816	Hasselt.
Luxembourg,	1719	303,597	Arlon.
Namur,	1417	301,367	Namur.
Total,	11,402	4,732,255	...

Its pop. is the densest in Europe, average upwards of 400, and in some of the provs. 600, to the sq. m. About two-third are Flemings, one-third Walloons, and 40,000 Germans. Surface in the N. and W. flat; coasts low and protected against the encroachments of the sea by dykes and sand downs, though no part of Flanders is below the sea-level. The centre is undulating, and the S. and E. provs., being traversed by the Ardennes mountains, which enclose the valley of the Meuse, and separate its basin from that of the Moselle, rise above the sea to 2000 feet. The whole territory belongs to the basin of the North Sea, and is well watered. Chief rivers the Meuse (Maas), Scheldt, Rupel, Demer, Senne, Dendre, Haine, Durme, and Lys, tributary to the latter; and the Ourthe, Vesdre, Ambleve, Mark, Dommel, Geer, Mehaigne, and Sambre, afflts. of the former. Climate humid and cool; unhealthy in the low parts of Flanders and in the prov. of Antwerp. Mean temp. of year at Brussels, 50° 4'; extreme heat 91° 6'; extreme cold minus 3°, Fahr.; prevailing wind S. W. Soil in general fertile, especially so in Flanders; sandy and sterile in great part of the provs. Antwerp and Luxembourg. In the mountainous regions the riches consist in forests and mineral products. Wheat, rye, barley, oats, and buck-wheat are cultivated. Potatoes, oil-seeds, madder, and flax are grown in Flanders; hops, beet-root, chicory, and tobacco in the central provs. Inferior wine is produced on the banks of the Meuse. Horticulture is an important branch of industry. Horned cattle are numerous in Flanders. Flemish draught horses and colts are exported to France and the Prussian dominions.

The road and saddle horses have been improved by crossings with English breeds. English sheep have been imported to improve the native races. Pigs are reared in the forest regions, and the rearing of the silk-worm was established in 1826. Mining is extensively pursued, but the produce of iron and coal has greatly declined. Iron is abundant in the countries between the Sambre, Meuse, Limbourg, and Luxembourg. Export of iron (1860) valued at 25,000,000 fr. The chief coal fields are in Hainaut. The amount raised in 1860 was 9,610,895 tons. Copper and lead are deficient, but the mines of Moresnet (Liege) furnish more than half the zinc used in Europe. Fishing in the open sea and on the coasts is carried on by boats belonging to the ports of Antwerp, Ostend, Blankenberghe, and Neuport. Ostend is the principal port for the herring fishery. Manufactures comprise linen, recently revived at Bruges. Courtray, Brussels, Ghent, Antwerp, Mechlin, and Tournay produce nearly one million pieces annually; lawn and damask fabrics at Brussels, Mechlin, Louvain, and Bruges; woollens at Verviers, Liège, Ypres, Mons, etc.; carpets at Brussels and Tournay; cotton at Ghent, Bruges, Mechlin, Louvain, Tournay, and Mons. The lace trade maintains its ancient supremacy. The manufacture of Valenciennes lace alone employs 50,000 women in the two Flanders, and represents a value of 20,000,000 fr. per annum. Steam engines are built, and ordnance cast at Liege, Brussels, Charleroi, Tirlemont, and Bruges; nail-making at Charleroi; firearms are made at Liege, and exported to Brazil, Germany, Italy, Spain, and the East; and the value of exports in this branch has doubled since 1853. The demand for Belgian paper is more than all the mills can produce. Cutlery is manufactured in Namur, Brussels, and Ghent. Other manufactures are leather, glass, and porcelain, beet-root sugar, salt, chemical goods, bronze ware, scientific and musical instruments, hardwares, and jewellery.

The railway system is very complete. The works were executed by government; they centre in Mechlin, diverging N. to the Scheldt, E. to the Prussian frontier, S. to the French frontier, and W. to the North Sea. In 1862, 1063 m. of railway were open. The whole territory is intersected by canals, many of which admit merchant vessels, and others, as those in the Campine districts, are highly beneficial to agriculture. Imports: wool, cottons, silk, linens, machinery, copper, indigo, hides, iron, bacon, coffee, tallow, leather, and guano, to the value (in 1862) of 4,550,142l. Exports: silks, flax, butter, wool, glass, arms, paper, sugar, cotton, apples, hops, zinc, poultry, bark, eggs, lace, corn, oil, chicory; value (in 1862), 4,876,212l. In 1862, the number of vessels of the Belgian merchant service was 111; at the several ports, 4092 ships (tonnage 780,703) entered, & 4095 (tonnage 784,326) cleared outwards. In 1862 there were 69 beet-root sugar factories, employing 250 hands. A considerable amount of the foreign merchandise imported passes through the country into Germany. A treaty of commerce and navigation was concluded with England, and a new customs' tariff with the Netherlands, in 1862. Government is a limited constitutional monarchy; the legislative body consisting of two chambers, the senate and the house of representatives. The king, as president of a responsible ministry, is at the head of all public affairs. Punishment of death has been abolished; universal toleration, freedom of the press, and trial by jury are established. The pop. is almost entirely Roman Catholic, but the king is Protestant; part of the income of clergy of all sects is paid by the state. Each prov. has its governor, council, and court of assize. Each canton has a tribunal de paix, each arrond. a tribunal de premiere instance, and there are courts of appeal at Brussels, Ghent, and Liege. The kingdom has universities at Ghent, Liege, Louvain, and Brussels; in most of the cities are diocesan seminaries; in many, high schools, termed gymnasias. The compulsory system of education in force under the Dutch rule was abolished in 1830. Each commune has its bureau of charity for the relief of the poor, and hospitals and asylums are established in the principal cities and towns. Belgium has 22 fortified places; the standing army consists by law (1853) of 100,000 men. Public revenue (1862) 153,214,496 fr.; expenditure, 145,176,890 fr. Belgium successively formed part of the doms of Austria and Spain from the 15th century until 1795, when it was conquered by the French. It remained annexed to Holland from 1815 to 1830, in the autumn of which year it acquired its independence, after a revolution of a very few days.

It is strongly fortified. The citadel, occupied by the Turkish pasha and troops, is on the tongue of land between the rivers, behind which rises the city proper, with a cathedral and palace. The Turkish quarter slopes down to the Danube; the Servian quarter, with the custom-house and consular residence, borders on the Save. Belgrade had formerly an oriental appearance, but churches are superseding mosques; and the bazaars have now glazed shop-windows. Manufs. arms, carpets, silk goods, cutlery, and saddlery, silk and carpets; a lyceum and schools; it is the entrepôt of commerce between Turkey and Austria, and the seat of the principal authorities of Servia. It was taken by the Turks, under Solyman II., in 1522; and retaken by Prince Eugene in 1717. It was partly ruined during the Servian insurrection in 1813, but the defences were strengthened during the Crimean war.

Sinde, N. Afghanistan, W. Khorasan, and extending on the S. for 550 m. along the shores of the Indian Ocean. Area 200,000 sq. m. P. 500,000(?) It is subdivided into the 6 provs. of Kelat, Sarawan, Cutch-Gundava, Jhalawan

Lus, and Makran. Nearly the whole country is mountainous, except in the N.W. and along the coast, its general characteristics being a rugged and elevated surface, barrenness, and deficiency of water. Its mountains in the E. are connected with those of South Afghanistan, and rise to a considerable elevation; the Bolan Pass is 5793 feet, and the bottom of some valleys are upwards of 5700 feet; the cap. Kelat is 6000 feet, and in the N. the peak of Chebal Tan 12,000 feet above the sea. The rivers are insignificant, except after heavy rains; the largest, the Dustee, though supposed to have a course of 1000 m., has been found at its mouth only 20 inches deep, and 20 yards in width. The climate is cold in the elevated parts, and hot in the valleys. In the low and watered plains of Cutch-Gundava and Lus, rice and sugar-cane, cotton, indigo, and tobacco are raised; in other parts, wheat, barley, madder, and pulses, European fruits, melons, pomegranates, rhubarb, and assafetida are the principal products; on some of the mountain sides, the tamarisk and babool attain the size of large trees. In the wide sandy desert of Mekran, where the returning army of Alexander the Great suffered its severest hardships, the date is the only valuable product. Pastures are poor, and cattle few; but sheep and goats are kept. The Bactrian (or two-humped) camel and the dromedary are used as beasts of burden; in the N.W. horses are bred. The strata about Kelat and Moostung, as well as other explored localities, consist of secondary limestone, sandstone, and conglomerates; and the N.W. extremity shows indication of volcanic action. Mineral products comprise copper, lead, antimony, iron, sulphur, alum, and sal-ammoniac. Prepared skins, woollen felt and cloths, carpets, and tent-covers of goats' or camels' hair, and rude fire-arms, are the manufactured products. Trade comparatively small, and almost monopolized by Hindoos. Somceanee is the only seaport. Exports, butter or ghee, hides, wool, drugs, dried fruits, fish, corn, and vegetable oil; imports, British and Indian manufs., rice, spices, dye-stuffs, and slaves for Muscat. The pop. consists mainly of Belooches and Brahooes, two races very different in personal appearance, but both Mohammedans of the Sunnite creed, and subdivided into numerous tribes or clans. Most of the E. provs. are under the uncertain authority of the khan of Kelat, whose revenue is estimated at 30,000*l.* annually, and his armed force at 3000 men. A late khan of Kelat having acted treacherously toward the British, during their advance into Afghanistan in 1839, his capital was stormed and taken in that year. In the following year it changed hands, and was again captured and temporarily held by the British in 1841.

BENGAL, Bangala, one of the three presidencies of the British empire in India, comprising three separate divisions.—I. The Governor-General's district, including the Punjab and its dependencies, Oude, the central prov., British Burmah; and the three detached settlements of Penang, Malacca, and Singapore.—II. The two other divisions assigned to the Lieut.-Governors of the N.W. Provinces, and of Bengal, respectively. These divisions occupy the entire area from Pegu to Peshawur, and meet near the confluence of the Gogra and the Ganges; they still form the one presidency of Bengal, as distinguished from the presidencies of Madras and Bombay; are all subject to the same central authority, and under the same military rule. Area of presidency estim. at 280,200 sq. m., and pop. (in 1863) at 41,498,608, being in area six times, and in pop. nearly five times, that of Great Britain. The territory extends between lat. 10° and 35° 50' N.; lon. 69° 30' and 98° 40' E., bounded N. by the Himalaya, Nepal, Sikkim, and Bhotan, E. by Siam and Burma, S.E. by the Bay of Bengal, S.W. by the Nizam's doms., S.E. by Madras presidency, and N.W. by Afghanistan. The greater proportion of this territory consists of the immense plain or valley of the Ganges. In the N. this plain rises into the mountainous region of Kumaon, and on the S. are the Vindhyan mntns., and the table-land of Central India. The river Ganges flows in a S.E. direction, through the whole extent of the presidency, and is joined in its course by numerous tributaries, of which the Jumna, Chumbul, Gogra, Gunduck, and Sone are the most considerable. The eastern division of the country is traversed by the Brahmaputra, which discharges its waters into the Bay of Bengal, near the confluence of the Ganges. Both these rivers divide into numerous branches before reaching the sea, and their united deltas form a tract of rich alluvial soil, exceeding 30,000 sq. m. There are no inland lakes, but numerous lagoons and marshes, especially in the lower dists. The surface of the country generally exhibits a deep clay alluvium, interspersed with sandy tracts, and tertiary deposits in some localities. Approaching the Himalayan range to the N., are granitic and porphyritic rocks, with secondary limestone and sandstones; N.W. are basaltic and greenstone rocks. A great portion of the territory is covered with woods and jungles which abound in wild animals, as the leopard, tiger, jackal, and elephant. The ordinary beasts of burden are the elephant, the bullock, and the horse. Coal is worked in the dist. of Burdwan. The climate varies exceedingly according to elevation. The mean annual temperature of the plains is from 78° to 79°; on the mountains the mean max. is 73° Fahr. During the winter months in Kumaon there is frost and snow. In Bengal, the rainy season commences in June, and continues till the middle of October. The annual rain-fall in Central Bengal and the Deccan is about 70 inches; while at Cherrapoonjee, 4500 feet above the sea, it is 610 inches. The winter or cold season lasts from November to the middle of February, when the hot season begins, and continues till the middle of June. During the rainy season the lower provinces are overflowed by the Ganges and its tributaries. Hence these dists. are highly favourable to the cultivation of rice, which is here the principal product of the soil. In the upper districts, wheat and barley are the principal crops. Indigo is largely cultivated from Dacca to Delhi, there being upwards of 400 indigo factories in the presidency. Its culture occupies more than 1,000,000 of acres, and its annual produce is estimated to be worth from 2,000,000*l.* to 3,000,000*l.*, half of which amount is yearly expended in its production. Opium is a government monopoly, and is cultivated only in Bahar and Benares, where the produce is considered equal, if not superior, to the opium of Malwah. Cotton is a staple crop; and the soil in Benares is capable of producing sugar equal to that of the West Indies. Tobacco is raised, and most of the spice and fruit trees of Asia have been acclimated somewhere in this region. The forests contain teak, saul, sissu, banyan, ebony, oak, and pine timber, with rattans, bamboos, cocoa, areca, and other palms. The tea plant is extensively cultivated on the southern slopes of the Himalaya, and the cinchona (Peruvian bark) tree has lately been introduced with success in many parts of the province. A great quantity of silk is produced in Bengal-proper. Elephants' teeth and hides of various kinds form important articles of trade. Nitre is obtained principally in Bahar province. Muslins, cotton piece goods, diaper, pack-thread, sail-cloth, chintzes, silks, calicoes, blanketing, and other woven goods, are occasionally manufactured; but of late years they have begun to be superseded by fabrics from Europe. Commerce and social intercourse have been vastly benefited by the construction of a gigantic line of railway now (1864) open from Calcutta to Delhi, with branches to Hoogly and Rangunge; also a line from Umritsir through Lahore towards Mooltan, and lines in the vicinity of Calcutta. In each district or collectorate is a judge empowered to decide appeals originating within its bounds, and to try civil suits to the amount of 2000*l.* Superior to these tribunals is the High Court of Judicature in Calcutta, for the lower provinces, and all European British-born subjects throughout Bengal in criminal cases; the Sudder Adaulat Court at Agra for the N.W. provinces; and a Judicial Commissioner in each of the provinces of the Punjab, Oude, and Central India. From all these there is appeal only to the British sovereign in council. In the upper provs. the land rev. is collected for the government directly by its own officers; in the lower provs. the zemindars, or hereditary tax-collectors, constituted proprietors of the soil by Lord Cornwallis' Act, pay a fixed rent to gov. [INDIA.] Schools for the natives have been established by government throughout the presidency, and colleges at Calcutta, Delhi, Agra, Benares, and elsewhere; besides which, there are many missionary stations and schools for their religious instruction. English is taught in most of the schools, and is highly valued by the natives. The pop. of this presid. embraces a great variety of races—Hindoos of all castes, Moguls, Sikhs, Rajpoots, peculiar wild tribes in Gundwanah and Bhaugulpore; and beyond the Brahmaputra, Mughls, Garrows, and other Indo-Chinese races, differing widely from those of Western Asia. The natives of Bengal are feeble and unwarlike, and their territory has always, within historical times, been under foreign dominion. The prevailing religions are the Brahmical and Mohammedan; Buddhism is confined to the countries E. of the Brahmaputra; and the hill tribes have rude paganisms of their own. The Protestant Episcopal Church consists of an archdeacon and chaplains, subordinate to the bishop of Calcutta; there is also a small establishment for the Scotch kirk. The Roman Catholic establishment is under the vicar apostolic of Agra, and a legate at Calcutta. Public rev. is derived from the land-tax, and subsidies from protected native states; mint, post-office, stamp, and excise duties; judicial fees and fines, customs, income-tax, and opium monopoly. Total rev. (1863) 45,105,710*l.*; expend. in India 37,228,901*l.*; besides charges in England. Exports from Bengal and Pegu (1862) rice, indigo, hemp, seeds, hides, saltpetre, cotton, silk, gums, tea, sugar, teak, safflower, oils, etc., to the value of 8,699,089*l.* Imports, cottons, iron, machinery, woollens, copper, beer and ale, apparel, salt, hardware, glass, wine, etc., to the value of 8,275,117*l.* Principal cities, Calcutta, the cap. of British India; Delhi, formerly the Mohammedan cap.; Benares, Moorshedabad, Dacca, Patna, Allahabad, Agra, Lahore, and Umritsir. Calcutta was erected into a presid. separate from Madras in 1707; in 1765, the English acquired by treaty the sovereignty over the provs. Bengal, Bahar, and a part of Orissa; and in 1773, the residence of the Governor-General of India was fixed in Bengal. The principal accessions of territory since have been Benares, in 1775; Oude dists., 1801 and 1856; Delhi territory, 1805; Kumaon, 1815; S.W. (Nerbudda) dists., 1818; Singapore and Malacca, 1824; the Berar dists. and Burmese ceded provs. in 1826 and 1852; Nagpore and Jhansi, 1854.—Bengal Province, one of the largest and most important of the old Mohammedan provs. of Hindostan, between lat. 21° and 27° N.; lon. 87° and 96° E. It comprises the delta of the Ganges, with the lower course of the Brahmaputra, and is traversed by numerous other rivers, its surface being mostly a dead level. It is wholly included in the British dom., and forms, under the above presidency, the divisions of its three principal cities, Calcutta, Moorshedabad, and Dacca, which are subdivided into numerous subordinate districts. [See INDIA and the other names at the commencement of this notice.]

BENGAL (BAY OF), Gangeticus Sinus, a part of the Indian Ocean, extending between Hither and Further India, including the sea from Cape Negrais on the E., to the delta of the Godavery on the W., between lat. 16° 30' and 23° N. Angola, from which it is separated by the river Coanza, and W. the South Atlantic. Surface mountainous, and rises progressively inland by a series of terraces. Principal rivers have all a W. course. Climate unhealthy, and fever prevalent. Temp. varies from 94° to 105° Fahr. in the shade at noon. The soil is well watered, and productive; little corn is raised, but tropical fruits, European vegetables, and cattle are abundant, and furtles are obtained on the sea coast. Mineral products comprise copper, sulphur, petroleum, and gold. Near the town is a very rich mine of saltpetre. Among the natives here, are the Giagas, a race of fierce savages, whose incursions are much dreaded by the Portuguese. Feticism is the prevailing superstition. Beasts of prey, including the lion and hyena, are numerous. The government of the prov. is under the immediate control of the governor-general of Loando. New Benguela and Novo Redondo, on the coast, and a few stations in the interior, are occupied by the Portuguese.

P. in 1700, 29,000; 1861, civil 524,945, military 22,626. Built in a sandy plain, on both banks of the Spree; it is 10 m. in circumference. The chief divisions of the city are—1. Berlin Proper; 2. Cologne (Alt and Neu Köln), on the Spree; 3. Louisenstadt, in the S.; 4. Friedrichstadt, in S.W.; 5. Friedrichswerder, between Alt and Neu Köln and Friedrichstadt; 6. Neustadt or Dorotheenstadt, between Friedrichstadt and the Spree; 7. Friedrich Wilhelmstadt, built 1828, and the suburbs of Stralhan, Spandau, and Königstadt, Oranienburg, and Potsdam. The city is entered by 14 gates, one of which, the Brandenburg gate on the W., is a colossal structure, surmounted by a victory, in a car drawn by 4 horses. It was carried to Paris in 1807, and restored in 1814. Of the 40 bridges which cross the Spree and its branches, the principal are the long bridge, with an equestrian statue of the great elector Frederick William; the Schlossbrücke or palace bridge, with groups of heroes in marble; Frederick Bridge, consisting of 8 arches, and constructed of iron. The finest streets are in Friedrichstadt and Dorotheenstadt; the most celebrated is that called "Unter-den-Linden," ornamented by an equestrian statue of Frederick the Great, terminated by the Brandenburg gate at the one end, and the royal palace at the other. Around the principal squares and streets are grouped numerous public buildings, among which are the royal castle and palace, the arsenal, university, museums, exchange, opera-house, theatres, and the palaces of the princes. There are 33 churches, of which 23 are evangelical, 4 French Calvinist, 2 Roman Catholic, and a chapel of the Bohemian Brothers. The suburbs have many attractions, among which are the Thier-garten, a large open park outside of the Brandenburg gate, in which a "corso" has been established, and the Kreutzberg, a sandhill S. of the gate of Halle, on which is erected an iron monument to the memory of the Prussians who fell in the wars of Napoleon I. Berlin is the great centre of instruction and intellectual development in North Germany; its educational establishments are numerous and celebrated. The university, founded in 1810, and comprising schools of jurisprudence, medicine, and philosophy, is attended by about 1200 students. There are 6 gymnasia, 2 Protestant theological seminaries, a military school; schools of artillery, military engineering, architecture, sculpture, painting, and music; a preparatory school of music, and many elementary schools. The royal library, founded in 1650, has 600,000 printed vols. and 500 MSS. Among its collections are royal museums of painting, sculpture, antiquities, coins, and medals; a museum of natural history, a royal astronomical and magnetic observatory, and a royal botanic garden. Its academic institutions comprise the academies of sciences (Akademie der Wissenschaften), of the fine arts, of industry, and of music; a geographical society, founded in 1828, and a society of natural history. It has two royal theatres, and an opera-house. Among its charitable institutions are the Hôtel des Invalides, for 300 soldiers and 12 officers, and an orphan hospital. Berlin is the first city in Germany for the variety and importance of its manufs., comprising the celebrated Berlin china, cloths, linens, carpets, silks, ribbons, and iron wares called "Berlin jewellery," paper, porcelain, mathematical and optical instruments, chemical and dye-stuffs, and musical instruments. Among its great industrial establishments are the royal iron foundry and royal porcelain manufactory. The productions of the press in typography, cartography, and lithography, are numerous and excellent. For the encouragement of commerce there is a royal bank, a royal mercantile marine (Seehandlungs-institute) established 1772, and steampacket companies. All the great roads in the kingdom meet in Berlin; and by canals it communicates with the Baltic and the North Sea, and with the rivers Elbe, Oder, and Vistula, rendering its navigation of considerable importance; and it is the centre of a vast system of railways. Berlin was occupied by the Austrians and Russians in 1760, and by the French in 1806.

BERLIN, a township of the U. S., North America, Connecticut, co. and 12 m. S.W. Hartford. Manufs. tin wares.—II. a town, Rensselaer, co. New York.—New Berlin is a township, 8 m. N.E. Norwich.

BERMONDSEY, a pa. of England, and suburb of London, co. Surrey, included in the borough of Southwark, on the E. Ac. 688. P. 58,355.

BERMUDA, BERMUDAS, or SOMERS ISLANDS, a group of about 300 small islands, belonging to Great Britain, in the Atlantic, 580 m. S.E. of Cape Hatteras, in S. Carolina. Lat. 32° 20' N.; lon. 64° 50' W. Area 24 sq. m. P. (1861) 11,450, the majority of whom are coloured. Surface mostly low, and composed of a shelly coralline rock, while coral reefs surround the Bermudas, which are visited by severe gales in winter; but among the islands are several good anchorages. Climate mild and delightful, and highly salubrious, but severe thunder-storms frequently prevail, and the atmosphere is sometimes charged with excessive humidity. Mean annual temp. 71° to 75° Fahr. Principal exports, arrow-root, cocoa, potatoes, onions, palmetto, and straw-hats. The fruits of both tropical and temperate regions are raised; poultry and veal are plentiful. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the transit and other trade between Newfoundland and the West Indies; and others in the whale-fishery. Exports: cotton, timber, and arrow-root, to the value, in 1862, of 78,642*l.* Imports: arms, leather, woollens, cottons, coffee, coals, tea, and saltpetre, value, 1862, 248,055*l.* Revenue, 16,000*l.*; imperial expenditure for civil & military purposes, 91,637*l.* Government vested in a governor, a council of 8 members, and an assembly of 36 members, 4 being returned by each parish. The principal islands are Bermuda or Long Island, St George, Somerset, St David, and Ireland. St George and Ireland islands are strongly fortified; on the former is Hamilton, the cap., and the latter is entirely occupied by its fortress, arsenal, and dock-yards. It is a convict station. Its harbour, which is completely land-locked, is said to be one of the finest in the world. This group of islands was discovered in 1522 by Bermudez, a Spaniard. Sir G. Somers was wrecked here in 1609, and soon after this they were colonized from Virginia and England. There is regular steam communication between Bermuda & New York, Bermuda & Halifax, & Bermuda and St Thomas. Shortest track to England 2858 sea m. Shortest steam passage 25 days.

BERN or BERNE (CANTON), a state of Central Europe, one of the three Vorort, or governing cantons of the Swiss Confederation, situated between lat. 46° 20' and 47° 30' N.; lon. 6° 50' and 8° 27' E. Bounded N. by France, E. by the cants. Soleure, Aargau, Lucern, Unterwalden, and Uri, S. by the Valais, and W. by Vaud, Fribourg, and Neuchatel. Area 2615 sq. m. P. (1860) 467,141, most of whom are Protestants. The country is mountainous, comprising, in the S., many of the highest points of the Alps, as the Finster-aar-Horn, Jungfrau, Schreckhorn, and Mönch, the terraces and contre-forts of which form the Bernese Oberland, celebrated for the beauty of its valleys, the chief of which are the Simmenthal, Lauterbrunnen, Grindelwald, and Hasli. The N. part of the cant. is covered by the Jura mountains, the two regions being separated by the valley of the Aar. Nearly the whole territory belongs to the basin of the Rhine, and is drained by the Aar and its tributaries, the chief of which are the Emmen, Simmen, Kander, and Thiele. The lakes of Neuchatel and Bienné are formed by the Thiele, and those of Thun and Brienz by the Aar. Climate healthy; excessively cold in the region of the Alps, where perennial snow forms the most extensive glaciers in Switzerland, but mild at the foot of the Jura, and in the valley of Interlachen. The mountains are covered with forests of pine and beech, and the soil is fertile in the valleys. The amount of grain, potatoes, hemp, and lint, is insufficient for consumption. The vine is cultivated to a considerable extent in the valleys of the Thiele, and on the lakes Neuchatel, Bienné, and Thun. Pasturage is extensive, and the rearing of cattle, the chief source of wealth; those of the valleys of the Emmen and Sarine being considered the best in Switzerland; and the cheese there produced is one of the chief articles of commerce in the canton. The horses of the Emmenthal are highly valued. The canton has mines of iron, lead, and copper, marble and gypsum quarries, fine freestone, granite, and lime. Iron is worked extensively in the Jura. Among the many mineral springs, those of Weissenburg, Blumenstein, Frutigen, and Gurnigel, are most frequented. Chief objects of industry are the manufs. of linens and woollens, iron and copper wares, watchmaking, and the wooden wares of the Oberland. Imports are salt, colonial products, grain, tobacco, and metals. The canton is traversed by excellent roads, and steam packets ply on the lakes, and on the river Aar. The educational establishments of the canton comprise a university, polytechnic and normal schools, and the agricultural and industrial institution at Hofwyl. In 1863 the canton issued 45 journals. Bern is the largest canton of the Swiss Confederation, and holds the second rank in the federal diet. Its contingent to the army is 5824 men.

BERN, a town, Switzerland, cap. cant. of same name, on a small peninsula formed by the Aar, 80 m. N.E. Geneva, and 23 m. S. Basel, 1907 feet above the sea. P. (1860) 29,016, of whom 1686 were strangers. Bern is the seat of the federal diet, alternately with Zurich and Lucern, and residence of three foreign ministers. It is built of freestone, and is remarkable for the arcades formed by the houses in all its principal streets, and for its fountains. It has a Gothic cathedral, university, an observatory, public library with an extensive collection of MSS. on Swiss history, museum of natural history, arsenal, cantonal and state bank; chief industry manuf. of gunpowder, firearms, and mathematical instruments, straw hats, paper, and leather. Bern was surrounded by walls in 1191, declared a free city in 1218, and admitted into the Swiss Confederation in 1352; its fortifications were demolished in 1835. It is the birthplace of Haller.

BERNARD (GREAT ST), Mons Jovis, a mountain pass in the chain of the Alps, between Piedmont and the Valais. It owes its modern name to the celebrity of the hospice, said to have been founded by Bernard de Menthon, in 862, for the succour of travellers, who have been assisted to the number of 600 in one day. The hospice, a stone building, is situated on the summit of the pass, 11 m. N.N.W. Aosta, and 17 m. S.S.E. Martigny, 8113 feet above the sea. It is the highest habitation in Europe; and the cold is so intense, that a small lake in its vicinity is frozen over nine months in the year. Mean temp. of year 28°·55; summer 41°·5, winter 17°·5. At all times, the philanthropic inmates, monks of the order of St Augustine, with their valuable dogs, hold themselves in readiness to assist travellers arrested by snow, which in winter accumulates to a depth of from 10 to 40 feet. This gorge, which was traversed by Roman armies, by Charlemagne, & by Frederic Barbarossa, is celebrated for the passage of Bonaparte I., at the head of the French army of 30,000 men, with cavalry and artillery, 15th to 21st May 1800. Little St Bernard is a mountain of the Graian Alps, S. of Mont Blanc. BIRKENFELD, a town of Germany, cap. above principality, near the Nahe, 25 m. E.S.E. Treves. P. with adjoining vill. of Eckweiler, 2400, who manuf. linen and woollen fabrics, and leather.

BIRKENHEAD, a town, township, and chapelry of England, co. Chester, pa. Bidstone, on the W. side of the Mersey about  $\frac{3}{4}$  m. from the sea, opposite Liverpool, and 15 m. N.N.W. Chester. Area about 1888 ac. P. (1861) 36,212, inhabited houses 4669. Its pop. in 1881 was only 2500. The first wet dock here was begun to be made at Wallasey Pool, a creek of the River Mersey of about 340 acres extent, in 1824, and Morton's patent slip was established here by the Council of Liverpool in 1826, previous to which an extensive boiler yard was established. The town dates its rise from that time, and its progress has been marvellously rapid. The first Act of Parliament for watching, paving, lighting, cleaning, etc., and establishing a market, was obtained in 1833. Under this, commissioners were appointed. Subsequent Acts gave power to purchase the ferry across the Mersey, to form a park, to regulate buildings and width of streets, and to form a cemetery. The town has now a noble park of 120 acres, a public market 480 feet long by 130 feet wide, a public slaughter-house, a handsome square of  $6\frac{1}{2}$  acres, public library and news room, hospital and public cemetery. The gas and water supply are the property of the ratepayers. Wallasey Pool has been recently formed into a float, with docks and basins. The area of the float, docks, and basins is 167 acres 1427 yards, and there is quay space extending to 9 miles 198 yards. The London and North-Western and the Great Western railways are connected with the quay. The float, docks, and basins are under control of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board. In addition to these, the corporation of Liverpool have, within the last few years, constructed spacious graving docks and ship-building yards on that side of the Mersey. There are three ferries, Woodside, Monks, and Birkenhead. The former has an immense floating landing-stage. Monks ferry is solely for railway accommodation, and it and Birkenhead ferry have piers in the Mersey. There are in the town six churches, one of which, St Mary's, stands within the precincts of the ancient priory, part of the ruins of which still remain, also one English Presbyterian church, three United Presbyterian chapels, one Wesleyan chapel, and several smaller places of worship belonging to different denominations. The educational establishments rank high; and hotels numerous. It returns 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. elect. (1864) 3526.

BIRMINGHAM, a parl. and municipal bor., one of the principal manufacturing towns of England, near its centre, co. and 17 m. N.W. Warwick, 100 m. N.W. London, and  $78\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.E. Liverpool. Area 18,780 ac. of borough, which includes the adjacent townships, Aston and Edgbaston. P. (1690) 4000; (1801) 60,822; (1851) 232,841; (1861) 296,076. The town, on the Rea, occupies the E. declivity of three undulating hills 474 feet above the sea. In its centre is a handsome quarter, containing the town-hall, the grammar school of Edward vi., St Philip's and Christ's churches, Queen's college, Midland institute, central free library, theatre, and other edifices. The uneven ground on which the town is built, facilitates its drainage, and thus contributes to its salubrity. The superb town-hall, in the classic style, occupies a commanding site; it is built of Anglesea marble, and has a saloon 145 feet in length, 65 feet in breadth, and the same in height; it can accommodate 8000 persons standing (or 2500 seated), and has a fine organ. In this hall the triennial musical festivals are held. The free grammar school, founded in 1552, is a richly decorated Gothic edifice, rebuilt in 1834, after the design of Sir C. Barry, at a cost of nearly 50,000. It has a revenue, now probably amounting to 11,000, a year. Queen's College, incorporated by royal charter in 1843, and munificently endowed by the late Dr Warneford, is in connection with the University of London, and regulated on the old collegiate system: attached to it are a medical school and Queen's hospital. Birmingham originally consisted of but one pa.; it is now divided into five—St Martin, St Philip, St Thomas, St George, and All Saints. St Martin's church, in the Bull-ring, was built in the 8th century. There are several other churches belonging to the Establishment. These parishes were formerly within the Archbishopric of Lichfield and Coventry, but were transferred by the church commissioners to the diocese of Worcester. Dissenting chapels comprise those of Independents, Friends, Methodists, Swedenborgians, Roman Catholics, and Unitarians, and there is a Jews' synagogue. Other principal buildings are: a gaol, lunatic asylum, theatre, a general hospital, dispensary, trade and corn exchanges, market-hall, Roman Catholic cathedral, barracks, and central railway station, which last is a general point of junction of railways from London, Liverpool, Derby, Worcester, etc. The public institutions comprise a society of artists, with a life academy, and annual exhibition of paintings; public and free libraries; baths, dining halls and clubs for the working classes; a central scientific or Midland institute, where lectures are given, and classes are open for general and scientific education; a college for Dissenters at Moseley; national and proprietary schools, and a great variety of other educational establishments; deaf-mute, and Magdalen asylums; eye and ear, and lying-in hospitals; a botanic garden, and horticultural society. There is a cemetery at Witton; also Church of England and general cemeteries in the immediate vicinity of the town; three public parks for the recreation of the people: viz., Aston, opened by Her Majesty in person, June 18, 1858, Adderley, and Calthorpe parks. Birmingham has made rapid progress in manufacturing industry within the present century. Its manufactures comprise almost every description of iron and steel goods, brass and iron founding, saddlery, firearms, cutlery, gold, silver, plated, bronze, or-molu, and japanned wares; papier-mâché goods, toys, jewellery, electro-plated goods, buttons, steel-pens, glass, tools, steam-engines, and all kinds of machinery. The engines, of which there are 724 employed in its factories, are as follow:—High pressure, 6623 horse power; low pressure, 3287 horse power; total horse power, 9910; smelting and casting furnaces, number in all 1013; estimated value of engines, 92,337*l.*, and consume 600 tons of coals daily. The annual value of manufactures has been estimated at 4,000,000*l.* Among the manufacturing establishments is the steam-engine factory with which the name of the celebrated Watt is associated, which still bears the name of the Soho, though removed from its original site—the original building having been taken down recently. Wages are higher in Birmingham than in most of the manufacturing towns of the North of England; and the condition of its artisans is in favourable contrast to that exhibited at many other places, both as to health and prosperity. It is computed that 20,000 families are employed in trade, manufactures, and handicraft; and a few years ago upwards of 40,000 of its inhabitants were members of friendly societies. Land and building societies are also features. The town is a rapidly extending one, and the style of architecture now adopted in the public buildings, etc., partakes of the improving spirit of the age. The immense coal and iron beds of the district by which Birmingham is surrounded, may be viewed as the main source of its manufacturing prosperity, which has also been greatly aided by canals, communicating with the Thames, Severn, Mersey, Trent, and Humber, and more recently by railways, which bring London, and all the great towns of the North of England, within a few hours' journey. The London and Birmingham railway was commenced in 1834, and completed in 1838, at an expense of 5,500,000*l.*; and by means of the Grand Junction railway, Birmingham has communication with Warrington, Stafford, Manchester, and Liverpool. By its charter of incorporation, dated 1838, Birmingham is divided into 16 wards, and governed by a mayor and recorder, 16 aldermen, and 48 common councilmen. Corp. rev. 138,564*l.* It has a bor. court of quarter-sessions, bankruptcy and county courts. Assessed taxes, 18,876*l.*; poor-rates, 108,962*l.* Since the Reform Act it has sent two members to House of Commons. Registered electors 14,371. This town is supposed to have been a place where arms were manufactured in the time of the ancient Britons; its high commercial importance dates, however, only from the 17th century.

BLACK or EUXINE SEA, Pontus Euxinus, a great inland sea between Europe and Asia, within the parallels of lat. 40° 45' and 46° 45' N., extending from lon. 27° 30' to 41° 50' E.; extreme length 700 m., greatest breadth 580 m. Area 172,000 sq. m. It is surrounded by the countries of Russia, Armenia, and Asiatic and European Turkey, and communicates by the strait of Yenikale, ancient Cimmerian Bosphorus, with the Sea of Azov on the N.E., and by the Bosphorus, with the Sea of Marmara, in the S.W. The shores of the Euxine are bold and high on the N.E., E., and S.W., but flat on the N. and N.W.; its depth varies from 4 to 48 fathoms near its shores, but in the middle no soundings have been obtained at 150 fathoms. The water contains 1-7th less salt than the ocean, and is so fresh that it easily freezes. It has numerous small ports; but the only gulf of importance is that of Kerkitin, between the Crimea and the continent of Russia. There are several islands near the mouth of the Danube—the largest of these, Serpent island, has a lighthouse. The chief affluents of the Euxine are the Danube, Dniester, Bug, Dnieper, the Don (by the Sea of Azov and the Strait of Yenikale), and the Kuban in Europe; and the Kizil-Irmak and Sakara in Asia. The streams of these rivers produce strong currents, particularly in the beginning of summer. The Black Sea has no perceptible tide; it is liable to frequent storms, such as are generally met with in great lakes and enclosed seas; but its navigation is so far from being very dangerous, as formerly represented, that probably no sea of equal extent is more safe. It has neither islands, rocks, nor reefs in the tracks of navigation, and has everywhere excellent anchorage. It is traversed regularly by steam-packets between Constantinople and the mouths of the Danube, & between the principal ports of Russia. The principal trade of the Black Sea is carried on at Odessa, in grain, iron, and furs.

sprung up within a few years. The first iron-clad ship of the navy, the "Warrior," and the "Minotaur," of 50 guns, were built at Blackwall.

BLACK-WARRIOR, a river of the U. S., North America, rises in North Alabama, and after a S. course of 180 m. joins the Tombigbee river. It is navigable for steamers up to Tuscaloosa.

BLACKWATER, two rivers of Ireland.—I. Munster, co. Cork, rises about 16 m. N.E. Killarney, flows at first southward, but afterwards E. to Cappoquin, where it abruptly turns again southward, and enters the sea at Youghal, after a course estimated at 100 m. The tide rises in it to Cappoquin, to which town it is navigable; and besides which, Mallow, Fermoy, Lismore, and Youghal are on its banks. Affs. the Dundalo, Awbeg, Funcheon, and Bride.—II. Ulster, cos. Tyrone and Armagh, falls into Lough Neagh at its S.W. corner. Caledon and Charlemont are the principal towns on its banks, at which last it receives the Ulster Canal.

BLACKWATER, three rivers of England.—I. co. Essex, rises near Saffron-Walden, flows south-eastward, and, after uniting with the Chelmer, falls into the arm of the North Sea called Blackwater Bay.—II. co. Dorset, rises near Cranbrook, and is tributary to the Stour.—III. co. Hants, forming a part of the boundary betw. that co. and Berks, joins the Loddon, 5½ m. S.W. Wokingham.

BOHEMIA (KINGDOM OF), German Böhmen, a political and administrative division of the Austrian empire, forming the E. part of the Germanic confederation, between lat. 48° 33' and 51° 3' N.; lon. 12° and 16° 46' E., bounded N. by Saxony and Prussian Silesia, E. by Prussia and Moravia, S. by Lower Austria, and W. by Bavaria: cap. Prag (Prague). Area estimated at 20,068 sq. m. P. (1857) 4,705,525. The territory forms an enclosed plateau, nearly surrounded by elevated chains of mountains, the chief of which are the Riesengebirge (Giant mountains) on the N., the Sudetengebirge N.E., the Böhmerwald S.W., and Erzgebirge (Ore mountains) in the N.W. The interior is traversed by the con-treforts of these chains. Its principal valleys are those of the Elbe and Moldau, forming the upper basin of the Elbe, to which nearly all its streams are tributary. The country is richly watered. The Elbe rises in the Riesengebirge, and receives on the right the Isar, and on the left the Aupe, Mettau, Erlitz, Moldau, Eger, and Bila. The Moldau, the largest river in the kingdom, receives on the right the Czazawa and the Luschnitz, on the left the Watawa and the Beraun. The climate is in general healthy, mild in the valleys, but cold in the mountainous regions; the higher mountains being covered with snow during great part of the year. Soil in general fertile, especially in the N. and N.E., in the valleys of the Eger and Elbe. The productive part of the land forms nearly 13-16ths of the superficies. Bohemia is both an agricultural and a manufacturing country, but especially rich in the produce of its agriculture. The principal products are rye, oats, potatoes, fruit, flax, hops, and beet-root for the manuf. of sugar. Vines are grown in part of the valley of the Elbe only. The forests yield a large amount of timber. Chief mining districts are in the Erzgebirge and the contreforts of the Fichtelgebirge. The gold mines are now abandoned, and the silver mines have lost much of their importance. Among the other metals and minerals are cinnabar, bismuth, chrome, zinc, sulphur, alum, marble, coal, iron, copper and tin. Bohemia possesses a great number of mineral springs of all kinds. Manufs. thread, linens, cotton, iron, woollens, glass, and paper. The commerce of the country consists in the exportation of the products of the soil and manufs., the importation of colonial goods, and the transit of merchandise from North Germany to Austria, Switzerland, and Italy. The Elbe and the Moldau are navigated by steam packets, and the latter communicates with the Danube by a railway from Budweis to Linz. Prague is connected by railways with Olmütz on the E., Lana on the W., and Leitmeritz and Dresden on the N. Bohemia, with the title of kingdom, forms a provincial government of the Austrian empire, having certain political privileges. The Emperor of Austria bears the title of King of Bohemia, and is crowned at Prague. It came into the possession of the house of Austria in 1526. It consists of 1 district, that of Prag, and 16 circles: Beraun, Bidschow, Budweis, Bunzlau, Chrudim, Czaslau, Elbogen, Kaurzim, Klattâu, Königgrätz, Leitmeritz, Pilsen, Prachim, Rakonitz, Saaz, and Tabor. Roman Catholicism is the religion of the state, but other forms of worship are tolerated. Bohemia possesses many establishments for public instruction. The university of Prag is one of the most ancient in Germany. The kingdom has 3 episcopal schools and 22 gymnasia. It has many learned societies, with which are connected public libraries, botanic gardens, and scientific collections. The chief fortifications are at Prague, Josephstadt, Königgrätz, and Theresienstadt.

BOKHARA or UZBEKISTAN (Uzbeks-land), a state of Central Asia, indep. Turkestan, between lat. 36° and 41° N.; lon. 63° and 70° E.; having N. the Sea of Aral and the country of Khokan, E. Koondooz, S. the Oxus, and W. Khiva. Estimated area 235,000 sq. m. P. 1,500,000. Surface level; fertile where watered by the Oxus, Kohik, and Kurshee, its principal rivers, but elsewhere mostly a sandy waste. Rice, wheat, barley, maize, cotton, indigo, and fine fruits, are chief objects of culture. Mineral products are gold, salt, and sulphur. Timber is got only in the mountains. The guinea-worm (rishu), which burrows in the flesh of the human body, and causes much pain, is one of the greatest evils with which the country is afflicted. Cattle and live stock comprise sheep, goats, and camels. The Bactrian camel is the beast of burden. Manufs. cotton, silk, shagreen, sabres, cutlery, gold, silver, turned articles, and firearms; and by its position between the Russian dom. and Southern Asia, the country has considerable commercial importance. The Russian trade is carried on by means of caravans, from 3000 to 5000 camels being employed in the transport of merchandise from Bokhara to Russia. Trade with Cabool, Herat, and Cashmere is also carried on by means of camels. Exports silk, cotton, wool, coarse chintzes, cotton thread, lamb-skins, lapis lazuli, dried fruits, etc. Imports muslins, Benares brocades, white cloth, sugar, and shawls from the S.; and from Russia numerous kinds of European manufactures, a large quantity of which are British. From Chinese Turkestan, coarse porcelain, musk, tea in great quantities, silks, rhubarb, and Tibet wool, are received. The Khan, though nominally despotic, is greatly under the influence of the priesthood; and Mohammedanism being very strict here, no other religion is publicly professed. BOLIVIA or UPPER PERU, a republican state of South America, between lat. 10° and 23° S.; lon. 57° 30' and 70° 10' W.; having N. and E. the Brazilian dominion, S. the Argentine Confed., and W. Peru, with only a short coast-line on the Pacific, at its S.W. extremity. Length estimated at 1000 m., width 800 m., but its boundaries are disputed and undefined. In 1858 the pop. comprised 245,000 Indians, besides the following:—

Departments,	Area in sq. m.	Population.	Chief Cities.
La Paz (de Ayacucho),	39,850	475,322	La Paz.
Potosi, . . . . .	31,800	391,229	Potosi.
Oruro, . . . . .	8,480	110,931	Oruro.
Chuquisaca or Sucre, .	34,350	223,668	Sucre.
Cochabamba, . . . . .	40,000	349,692	Cochabamba.
Beni, . . . . .	200,000	53,973	Trinidad.

Tarjia, . . . . .	20,000	88,900	Tarjia.
Atacama, . . . . .		5,273	Cobija.
Total, . . . . .	374,480	1,742,352	...

According to other calculations the whole area is 510,368 sq. m.

The centre of the country is covered with ramifications of the Andes, which here divide into two cordilleras, enclosing the Lake of Titicaca. The W. Cordillera forms the boundary on the side of Peru, between lat. 16° and 22° S., and the volcanoes of Atacama and Tacora. The region between the Pacific and the Andes is nearly barren, and is called the desert of Atacama. The valley of Titicaca is fertile, especially in the vicinity of the lake. The long valleys S. of the Sierra de la Cruz, are the most populous and best cultivated parts of Bolivia, especially the valley of Cochabamba. The Yunga valleys N. of Sierra de la Cruz are also fertile. The plains of Moxos and Chuquitos are covered with dense forests. The streams which descend from the W. valley of the Andes do not reach the Pacific, except the Loa, which flows 180 m., but with a scanty supply of water. Numerous rivers descend from the E. declivity of the Andes. These belong to the basins of the Amazon or La Plata; among the former class, the Beni, Mamore, Rio Grande or Guapai, tributaries of the Madeira, are the principal; and, among the latter, the Pilcomayo and Paraguay. The Desaguadero, which has its entire course 200 m. in Bolivia, flows out of Lake Titicaca, the largest lake in South America. Besides Lake Titicaca, the S.E. half of which is in this republic, there are many others in the wide plains in the E., a region said to be little above the sea-level. In the middle region the rainy season lasts from November to February; but on the coast rain seldom falls. Amongst the vegetable productions are cacao, cotton, indigo, rice, barley, oats, potatoes, maize, sugar-cane, cinchona (Peruvian bark), and many other valuable drugs, the finest fruits, and timber fit for every purpose. Gold is found in all the rivers in the E. Cordillera of the Andes; and the productiveness of the silver mines of Potosi were long very great, though now on the decline. Lead, tin, salt, sulphur, nitre, are also met with. Copper mines abundant, but too far inland to be wrought to advantage. Among the wild animals are the tapir, jaguar, leopard, monkey, amphibious reptiles, birds, and fishes in great numbers. The climate of the plains is too hot for sheep; but herds of cattle graze on the banks of the rivers, and the llama, guanaco, and vicuña live in the mountains. More than 3-4ths of the population are Indians, the rest Mestizos, Spaniards, and a few Africans. The natives of the valley of Titicaca follow agriculture and the rearing of cattle. The plains are inhabited by numerous Indian tribes, who manuf. fine cloths, fans, and parasols. The other manufs. are of cotton goods and glass wares at Cochabamba, cloths of llama and alpaca hair at La Paz, hats of vicuña wool at Atacama, vessels of silver wire in the mining districts. The Jesuits, who founded missions in the provs. of the Moxos and Chiquitos, have been partly successful in uniting all the tribes under a uniform language (Chiquito) and code of laws. The foreign commerce of Bolivia is small, owing to its being almost shut out by the Andes from contact with the sea. Foreign goods mostly come from Peru by way of Arica and Tacna, and are subject to a high transit duty. Imports, iron, hardwares, silk, and a few other articles; and exports, the precious metals, wool, woollen goods, hats, pewter, cacao leaf, cinchona bark, skins, soap, and tobacco. The executive government is vested in a president; the legislative functions are exercised by a senate, tribunes, and censors. The country is divided into 3 bishoprics; but there is no church exclusively supported by the state. Public revenue about 1,700,000 dollars a year. Standing army about 2000 men. There is said to be no public debt. Bolivia, under the name of Upper Peru, was formerly a part of the Spanish viceroyalty of Buenos Ayres; but it acquired its independence in 1824, and its name was assumed in honour of Bolivar, who, in 1826, drew up its earliest constitution. Sucre is the cap. and seat of general government. Cobija is the only seaport.

BOLTON-LE-MOORS, a manufacturing town, parl. munic. bor., and pa. of England, co. Lancaster, hundred Salford, on an affluent of the Irwell, 12 m. N.W. Manchester, and 175 m. N.N.W. London. Alt. 300 ft. Ac. of pa. 30,062. P. 97,215. P. of bor., chiefly composed of the townships of Great and Little Bolton, (1851) 61,171, (1861) 70,395. Chief edifices are: a parish and seven other churches, dissenting places of worship; town-hall, 2 cloth-halls, an exchange, theatre, assembly and concert rooms. It has public libraries and a mechanics' institute. There are coal-pits in the vicinity. The woollen manufactures of Bolton, introduced by the Flemings in 1337, were in a flourishing state before the reign of Henry VIII.; but the great prosperity of the town dates from the introduction of the invention of Arkwright and Crompton, constructors of the mule-jenny, since which time it has become one of the principal seats of the English cotton manufacture. Manuf. muslins, calicoes, cotton shawls, quiltings, jeans, and fustians; and the average quantity of cloth bleached in the parish annually, has been estimated at from 6,000,000 to 7,000,000 pieces. It has paper, flax, and saw mills, chemical works and foundries, and is head of a poor-law union. Connected by canal with Manchester, and by railways with Bury, Manchester, Leigh, Liverpool, Preston, etc. It sends two members to House of Commons. Reg. elect. (1864) 2082.

BOMBA, a vill. of S. Italy, prov. Chieti, 18 m. W.S.W. Vasto. P. 3028. Its vicinity produces oil and wine.

BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, the most westerly of the three presids. of British India, between lat. 14° 20' and 28° 30' N.; lon. 66° 30' and 77° 20' E.; having N. Afghanistan, W. Beloochistan and the Indian Ocean, E. Rajputana, Indore, and the Nizam, S. Goa, and the Madras presid. Area 137,743 sq. m. P. (1852) 11,109,087; in 1864 probably 20,000,000. The W. Ghauts separate the W. or maritime from the E. districts, which latter form a part of the great table-land of the Deccan. In the N. the mountains belong to the Sautpoora & Vindhyan chains. Principal rivers, the Nerbudda, Taptee, Mhye, and Sabermutty, falling into the Gulf of Cambay; above the ghauts, the rivers are tributary to the Godavery and Kistnah. Climate moist; mean temp., April to June, 85° Fahr. Annual rain-fall 78 inches, on 102 rainy days. Unhealthy except from Jan. to June. The absence of practicable roads and navigable rivers is now compensated for by magnificent lines of railway, crossing the prov. in a N.N.E. and S. direction. It contains the richest cotton fields in India. Rice is an important article of culture. Sugar and indigo are raised in Candia. Cardamoms, pepper, and the teak of India proper, are almost exclusively the growth of this region. The N. dists. are famous for their variety of fruits; cocoa palms cover a large extent of sandy land in the Concan. Wool is exported in considerable quantities, and great exertions have been made to introduce the culture of silk. The cattle of Guzerat are a large and fine breed; W. of the ghauts the ox and buffalo are almost the only domestic animals. The whole presid. is assessed under the native village-system of India, except the dists. of Surat and Kaira, where the ryotwarry system is in force. Principal manufs. embroidered silks, and woollen and cotton cloths. Government vested in a governor and 8 members of council (into which, as into the councils of the other presidencies, native members have recently been admitted), subject to the control of the Gov.-General of India in Council. In the cap. of each collectorate is the seat of a British collector, and a judge, subordinate to the central court of Bombay. Revenue (1863) 5,650,000*l.* Value of imports from Bombay and Seinde in 1862, 21,908,616*l.* Exports, etc., 5,806,082*l.* The army comprises about 53,000 men and officers. In the S. there are many native, Roman Catholic, and Nestorian Christians. The Parsees are now almost confined to this part of Asia. There are in the presidency an English episcopal bishopric with 24 clergy, a Scottish church and Roman Catholic establishment, which receive government aid. Elphinstone college, founded 1837, had, in 1863, 69 students; and there are many schools for the native Hindoos, besides native village schools. Bombay was the earliest possession of the British in the east. It was ceded by the Moguls to the Portuguese in 1530, and came into the possession of the English in 1662, as a part of the dowry of the Infanta of Portugal, on her marriage with Charles II.; but by far the greater part of the territory was acquired between 1803 and 1818.

BOMBAY, a city, seaport, and cap. of the above presidency, is situated on a narrow neck of land at the S.E. extremity of the island of Bombay, on an excellent land-locked harbour. Lat. of observatory 18° 53' 45" N.; lon. 72° 48' E. P. of the islands of Bombay and Colaba by census of 1849, 566,119, now (1864) upwards of 600,000. It consists of the fort or old town, 1 m. in length by  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. in breadth, and in which the European inhabitants, and most of the Parsee merchants, reside; and the new town, about 1 m. northward, inhabited by the Hindoos and Mohammedan native pop. It has a university in full operation, conferring degrees for the first time in 1862. There were at same date 405 native Christians in the city; four banks, insurance offices, and extensive bazaars. Principal edifices in the fort are the court-house, and other government offices, custom-house, town-hall, castle, mint, cathedral of St Thomas, and St Andrew's Scottish church, European hospital, Sir J. Jejeebby's hospital, the Byulla church and club, the house of correction, theatre, and the Hindoo temple of Momba Devi. On the S.W. the fort is connected by Colaba causeway with the island of Colaba, on which are the lighthouse, observatory, lunatic asylum, and a stone pier. The government-house is at Malabar Point. The harbour affords good anchorage for ships of the largest burden, and the dockyard covers about 200 acres. The railway terminus is beside the native barracks at N. end of the esplanade. The development of commerce since the outbreak of the civil war in America in 1861 is unexampled, and Bombay now exceeds any other port of India in exports and imports. The cotton shipped during Jan. and Feb. 1863, amounted to 28,362,335 lbs., value 1,468,078*l.* In 1837, steam navigation was commenced between Bombay and Suez; and mails are despatched every fortnight between England and India; average time by overland route 35 days. The first line of railway in Hindostan was opened between Bombay and Tannah, 20 m. N.N.E., in 1853; the line to Ahmedabad, 310 m., in 1864. In 1865 it will be connected by rail with Calcutta and Madras. Shortest sea track to London 10,597 sea miles. Shortest steam voyage by the Cape 83 days.—Bombay Island, on which the city is built, is 8 m. in length and 3 in breadth, and is formed of two ranges of greenstone, connected in the middle by sandstone strata. The interior lies low, and was at one time liable to be flooded by the tide. Area, including Colaba island, 18 sq. miles.

BOOSNAH, a town of British India, presid. Bengal, dist. Jessore, 102 m. N.E. Calcutta.

BOOTAN or BHOTAN, a country of North Hindostan, partly independent, but, according to recent information, partly also dependent on Tibet, between lat. 88° 32' & 92° 30' N.; lon. 26° 18' & 28° 2' E.; having W. Sikkim, S. and E. Bengal and Assam, and N. the main chain of the Himalaya, which here rises to 25,000 feet in elevation. Area estimated at 64,500 sq. m. P. 1,500,000. (?) Surface mountainous, with a slope S.; and this region differs from most others, in its lower hill ranges having but a scanty vegetation, while its finest forests are from 8000 to 10,000 feet above the sea. Products are oak, pine, rattans, fruits, and vegetables. Wheat, barley, rice, maize, and buckwheat are raised in terraces along the hillsides; but supplies of grain, as also of sugar and tobacco, come from Bengal, in return for native cloths, rock-salt, rhubarb, jabrung spice, Tibet goods, mules, and ponies. Iron is the only mineral raised, though Bootan is reported to be rich in copper and other metals. Manufs. are of woven goods, paper, a species of satin from bark, tobacco-pouches, gunpowder, arms, and hardwares. Principal trade is with Bengal; from Tibet, however, some silks and tea are imported. Towns are few; the principal are Tassisudon and Punakka. Dherma Rajah, or nominal sovereign and ecclesiastical chief, is supposed to be divine, leaves state affairs to the Deb-Rajah and council of state, which consists of eight members (one of whom he appoints), without whose authority the Deb-Rajah can do nothing important. The state religion is Buddhism, and Bootan swarms with priests, the monastic endowments absorbing a large part of the national property. The custom of polyandry is prevalent; but polygamy also prevails; & to these causes the comparative thinness of the population has been attributed.

BORNEO (native name Bulo-Kalamantin), an island of Malaysia, near the centre of the Eastern Archipelago, in the Pacific Ocean, between lat. 7° 4' N. and 4° 10' S.; lon. 108° 50' and 119° 20' E.; divided by the equator into two nearly equal portions, and bounded N. and W. by the Chinese Sea, S. by the Sea of Java, and E. by the Sea of Celebes and the Strait of Macassar. It is of a compact form, has few indentations of the sea, but many bays and creeks, and a coast line of nearly 300 miles. Length 800 m., breadth 700 m. Estimated area 280,000 sq. m. The pop., vaguely estimated at 2,000,000 to 3,000,000, is supposed to comprise Malays, about one-fourth; Dyaks, two-thirds; the others Chinese and Europeans. The shores are low and often marshy, being surrounded by numerous islets and rocks. Little is known of the interior except in the district of Banjermassin, on the S.E., and a portion of Borneo Proper on the N. Two nearly parallel ranges of mountains run through the island from S.W. to N.E., between which are extensive and well-watered plains. The W. most of these chains rises in the territory of Sarawak, with an elevation of about 3280 feet, and gradually increases in elevation till it terminates near the N. coast in Mount Kini Balu, 13,700 feet high, on which trees grow to 7000 feet. The second range, which crosses the equator, in lon. 113° E., appears to be much lower than the former: a cross range leaves the first chain about lat. 2° N., and running S.E. extends through Banjermassin. The chief rivers are, on the N. and W. coast, the Borneo or Bru-nal, on which is situated the cap. of the isl., and which opens into a bay of same name, in lat. 5° N.; and the Seriboe, which falls into the China Sea, in lat. 2° 10' N.; the Batang-lopak, a magnificent river, the mouth of which, 4 m. wide, is in lat. 1° 30' N.; on its l. b., 35 m. from its mouth, is the town of Patusen, which was strongly fortified and held by a band of pirates, but was destroyed by the expedition under Sir James Brooke in 1846; the Morotaba or Sarawak, which flows N.E. and N. nearly through the centre of the territory of same name; the Pontianak, formed by the junction of numerous streams, rises about lon. 112° 30', and reaches the sea in lon. 109° 15' on the equator; the Majak opens into a wide estuary in lat. 0° 50' S. On the S. are the Pembuan, Sampet, and Mendawa, in districts of same names, between lon. 112° and 113° 30' E.; the Kahajan and Murong, or rivers of the Great and Little Dyaks; and the Banjer or Barito, which rises in the central mountains, lat. 0° 30' N., flows first E. and then S., with a very winding course, and reaches the Java Sea by a wide estuary, in lat. 3° 30' S., lon. 114° 35' E., about 12 m. S. the town of Banjermassin, of which territory it forms the W. boundary. On the E. coast the Koeteli forms a wide delta between lat. 0° 20' and 1° S., and the Berou reaches the sea by several branches, about lat. 2° N. Most of these rivers are navigable. The only known lake of importance is that of Kini Balu, S.E. of the mountain of same name, the centre of which is in lat. 5° 40' N., lon. 117° E.; it is 35 m. long, and 30 m. broad. The climate is tropical in the interior, but on the N. coast it is European. Minerals comprise gold (which is found in grains on the hills between lat. 2° N. and 1° S., across the island, yielding on an average 350,000 ounces a year), silver, iron ore, and coal. The diamond mines are in Landak, 50 m. N.E. Pontianak, on river of that name. The largest diamond found weighs 367 carats; the mines are worked by the Dyaks. Excellent coal is worked in Borneo-Propri, in the island of Lubuan, and Banjermassin. The soil is very fertile. The forests furnish valuable timber, and the gutta-percha tree. Among the vegetable products are benzoin, found in Brunai, sago, camphor, palm sugar, and ratans, which latter are exported to the value of 100,000l. a year. The animals comprise the elephant, rhinoceros, leopard, ox, wild hog, deer, horse, and monkey; among these the orang-outang is conspicuous. The birds are varied and rich in plumage: there are few reptiles. The Dyaks are the aborigines of Borneo; they are divided into numerous tribes, and they still retain possession of the interior of the island. Each petty tribe is named after the river on which it is settled. Those on the W. side of the island live in sheds or houses large enough to contain the whole community. The houses are built on piles of wood from 5 to 20 feet from the ground, the floors being of split bamboo, and the roof of the leaf of the Niebang. In the centre of the building is the apartment of the chief and the "head room," where are kept the heads which every man must procure before he is allowed to marry. They have no religious ceremonies nor priests. Their chiefs have some influence, but are not armed with full power. When the fertility of their rice grounds is exhausted, they remove their settlement elsewhere. In the province of Banjermassin, a savage tribe live in trees, and hold no intercourse with other people. The Malays retain their distinctive character as a separate nation, having great partiality for the sea, and following piracy as an occupation. They are leagued together by societies called Kong-sics, and confirm their oath by drinking blood, to protect themselves against the other tribes. They are skilful in working iron, and the sword-blades and kreeses of the Southern Dyaks are of repute in Europe. The mining operations of the country are conducted by the Chinese. The British trade, which is the most extensive, is carried on by the port of Singapore.

Borneo is divided into many separate states, governed by native chiefs. The best known of these are Brunai or Borneo Proper, which extends over the level space on the N. coast, the sultan of which is now placed under the superintendence of Sir James Brooke; Sambas, Pontianak, Simbang, and Matan, on the W. coast; Banjermassin on the S.; and the territory of the sultan of Sooloo on the E. Off the N. coast of the island, and about 30 m. N.E. Brunai, is the island of Labuan, now belonging to Britain [LABUAN]; and on the N. coast, near the N.W. part of the island, is the territory of Sarawak, extending between lat. 1° and 2° N., lon. 109° 40' and 110° 45' E., bounded W. and S. by the mountains of Krimbang, and watered by the river Sarawak and tributaries. This territory enjoys an excellent climate, is rich in mineral coal and agricultural products, and is well situated for trade. The capital is Sarawak (formerly called Kuchin). P. estimated at 12,000, including 150 Chinese. 'Under the government of Sir James Brooke, the inhabitants of this part of Borneo have commenced a hopeful career of civilisation; an English church mission has been established, & a native school built at the town of Sarawak, which, previous to his visit, comprised only a few mud houses, & about 1500 inhabitants.

The authority of the Dutch possessions are divided politically into the residency of the W. coast, cap. Pontianak, and the residency of the S. and E. coasts, cap. Banjermassin. P. of Dutch possessions 844,000. By a decree of the gov.-gen. of the Netherlands East Indies, dated 1846, these possessions are henceforth to form a special government. [BANJERMASSIN-PONTIANAK.] Borneo was discovered by the Portuguese in 1521. The English and Portuguese several times attempted to found establishments on its coasts, without success. The Dutch had extensive commercial relations with the W. coast, where they had factories at Soekadana and Pontianak, at the commencement of the 17th century; part of the W. coast was ceded to them by the king of Bantam in 1780, and they founded the establishment of Pontianak in 1823. The sovereignty of the S. coast was ceded to the Dutch by the sultan of Banjermassin in 1787. But the most important event in the recent history of Borneo, is the enterprise of Sir James Brooke, who first visited the island in 1839, and has since been actively engaged in the suppression of piracy, the administration of justice, & the encouragement of commerce & manufs.

Lat. of state-house 42° 21' 23" N., lon. 71° 4' 9" W. Pop. (1850) 138,788, (1860) 177,812, exclusive of the suburbs of Charleston, Dorchester, Brookville, Cambridge, etc., with which it communicates by several bridges. The city proper is mostly built on a peninsula, 3 miles in length by 1 in breadth, and connected with the mainland by a narrow isthmus. Its streets, lined with houses of deep red brick, are irregularly laid out on an uneven surface. The quays are extensive; and the common, consisting of nearly 50 acres, forms a beautiful promenade. Chief edifices, the state-house, city-hall, Faneuil-hall, in which public meetings are held, Faneuil-hall market, 536 feet in length, the Massachusetts hospital, custom-house, co. gaol, houses of industry and correction, two theatres, an atheneum with a picture gallery and a library, an Odeon, and about 100 churches of different sects. Here are the medical branch of Harvard university, numerous superior schools, literary, scientific, and charitable institutions, an admirable public library, banks and insurance companies. There are 12 daily newspapers, besides other publications, issued in Boston. The harbour is commodious, vessels of the largest class approaching the quays; and the bay (which has at its entrance a revolving light 65 feet in height) is studded with numerous elevated islets, which protect the port from the winds, and furnish convenient sites for fortresses. The city is connected with Worcester, Providence, Lowell, Maine, and other parts of the interior by railways, canals, and navigable rivers; and several British steam-ships form a packet line between Boston and Liverpool, calling at Halifax, Nova Scotia. Boston is not the only port of the manufacturing region of the United States, but the great emporium of New England. In 1862, 3030 vessels from foreign ports entered, and 2946 cleared. Coastwise, entered, 6273; cleared, 2451. The products of the United States exported from Boston in 1862 amounted to 12,183,046 dols.; the products of foreign countries exported, 1,687,089 dols. Total value of exports, 13,870,135 dols. Boston is the chief seat of the American ice trade, from Wenham Lake, 20 m. N.N.E. the city. In 1860 the exports of ice amounted to 142,463 tons, but in 1862 only 78,102. (Annual value of manuf. products estimated at 266,000,000 dols.) Imports, (1862) 604,865 tons foreign and domestic coal, 43,493 bales cotton (a decrease of 338,473 bales since 1860), 20,910 tons logwood, 1,865,832 barrels flour, 3,058,012 bushels corn and oats, 323,109 bushels rye and shorts, 15,351 bales gunny bags, 44,722 barrels beef, 45,384 hhd. sugar, 2789 hhd. tobacco, 99,603 bales wool, besides large amounts of fish, fruit, hemp, jute, hides, iron, lead, leather, linseed, molasses, naval stores, provisions, rice, salt, spices, spirits, and wines. Exports in 1862 comprised 10,540 bags coffee, 251 bales cotton (against 10,403 in 1860), 8984 packages cotton goods, 13,665 tons logwood, 555,591 barrels flour, 123,929 bushels corn and wheat, 10,780 hhd. molasses, 1041 hhd. tobacco, with large quantities of fish, lead, lumber, provisions, spirits (especially rum), sugar, and sumac. This city enjoys the largest share of the United States trade with India and China. In 1822 a municipality was adopted, and the city is governed by a mayor, aldermen, and common council. The town was founded in 1630, and named after the English town, whence many of its inhabitants had emigrated. The American revolution commenced in Boston, which town took the lead in opposing the taxation of the colonies. In 1775 the British army, 10,000 strong, had possession of the town, but were compelled to withdraw in March 1776. BOURBON or ILE DE LA RÉUNION, an island of the Mascarene group, Indian Ocean, forming a French colony, cap. St Denis, in lat. 20° 51' 43" S.; lon. 55° 30' 16" E. Area 824 sq. m. P., exclusive of its dependencies, Nossi-Bé and Mayotte, and the small island of St. Marie, near Madagascar (1861), 183,361, including Indians, Chinese, Negroes, a garrison, and officials. The island, of volcanic origin, and of an elliptical form, is traversed from N. to S. by a chain of mountains which divides it into two portions, differing in formation, climate, and productions; these are on the E. partie du vent (windward), and W. partie sous le vent (leeward) side. The chief summits are the Piton de Neiges, an extinct volcano 10,100 feet, Grand Bernard, 9500 feet, Cimandef, 7300 feet, and Piton de la Fournaise, an active volcano, 7218 feet above the level of the sea. There are no extensive plains, but the mountains, which cover the entire surface, are separated by narrow valleys; it is watered by numerous streams, all of which are rapid and none navigable. The climate has recently undergone a great change, being formerly very salubrious. The bloody flux and a typhoid fever attack every European after a residence of four or five years on the island. Mean temp. at St Denis 77° Fahr. Annual rainfall 128 inches. Yearly mean of wind 309 days E., 56 days W. Winter, 1st May to 1st October; rainy season, 1st Nov. to 30th April. The prevailing winds drive the rain-clouds to the E. side of the island, and often originate terrific hurricanes; on such occasions the waves, usually 3 to 4 ft. high, rise to 30 or 40 ft., the sky assumes a copper colour, the temperature rises to its maximum intensity, the barometer sinks to its lowest point, rain falls in torrents, and the wind blows with resistless force,—men, animals, trees, and houses are overturned. It has no port, and its anchorage is insecure. In one year 11 large vessels were wrecked near its shores. The soil is fertile in the vicinity of the coast. The products are sugar, coffee, cloves, maize, rice, and tobacco. The corn raised is insufficient for consumption, and is only used by Europeans, manioc being the chief food of the slaves. Principal exports, sugar, coffee, cloves, dye-woods, and saltpetre; imports, wheat, oil, wine, cattle, timber, salt, glass, and manufactured goods. Bourbon was discovered in 1545 by the Portuguese, who called it Mascarenhas, from the name of their chief. It was occupied by the English in 1810, and restored to France in 1814. The island is divided into the arr. St Denis, comprising the natural division called the "partie du vent," and the arr. St Paul, comprising the "partie sous le vent."

Besides the islands of Fernando do Noronha, Trinidad, and Martin Vaz. The country is generally mountainous in the E. and S., and level in the N. and W. The mountain system covers the E. extremity of the continent 2000 miles inland towards the W. and S., nearly to the Rio de la Plata. The chief peaks are Itambe, 5960, Itacolumi, 5750, and Itabira, 5250 ft. above the sea. The Organ mountains, near Rio, are remarkable for picturesque outlines and rich vegetation. Several minor ranges intersect the country, enclosing tracts, some of which are elevated, and others low-lying plains. The N. part of Brazil consists of the greater part of the plain through which flows the river Amazon and its tributaries, and varying in width from 350 to 800 miles. The empire abounds in magnificent rivers, forming a complete network, the soil of which is deep and soft, and covered for the most part with dense forests. The principal rivers in the S.E. are the Tocantins, Araguay, Parnahiba, San Francisco, Belmonte, Doce, Parahiba-do-Sul, & Rio Grande-do-Sul, all of large size, but of difficult navigation, in consequence of rapids. The table-land on the S.W. is separated from the Andes of Bolivia by a large plain, traversed by those rivers, which join to form the Madeira. From seven lakes on this table-land rises the river Paraguay, which flows S. through a swampy country, and then through the plain of Paraguay to join the Parana. The latter receives the Rio Grande, the Parnahiba, Sapucahy, Pardo, and many others, which flow in a S.E. direction into the Atlantic. The Uruguay flows S. through another table-land to the plain of the Missiones. The principal lakes are Patos, an enlargement of the Rio Grande, and Lake Mirim. There are many small lakes and marshes near the W. boundary in countries yet unexplored. The climate of the Amazon Valley is of a tropical nature; only the dry and rainy seasons are not distinctly marked. The nights are cloudless; but in the morning the clouds accumulate and continue till the afternoon, when thunder and lightning, with torrents of rain, prevail for two hours, and all again is clear. The climate of Central and West Brazil is more varied, the heat in the dry season being excessive, while frosty nights are of frequent occurrence in winter; rain in some situations is of rare occurrence. The climate in the valley of the S.E. coast is, notwithstanding its low latitude, as genial as that of Italy, being clear and serene, and refreshed by the sea-breeze from the E. At Rio de Janeiro the annual mean temp. is 77° F. The shores of the E. coast are low, the country rising gradually behind into the mountain region, which runs parallel to the coast. The harbours of Rio de Janeiro and Bahia are excellent. The population of Brazil consists of Europeans, whites born in the country, who call themselves Brazilians; Mulattoes; Mamalucos, or offspring of whites and native Indians; Negroes; Mestizoos or Zamboes, mixed castes between Negroes and Indians, and the Aborigines or American Indians. The slave pop. consists of Negroes and mixed breeds. Of the Aborigines, a portion are in a civilised condition, who are styled Cabocloes; the others are in a savage and unreclaimed state. In 1863 it was estimated that there were 3,300,000 negro slaves, and 2,800,000 free coloured. Brazil, the U. S. of N. America, & the Spanish colonies, are the countries where slavery is still upheld by the European race. Aboriginal slavery was abolished in June 1854; and the laws regarding domestic slaves are not stringent. The slave can demand his liberty on paying a sum equal to his value. There is little political division of castes; and intermarriages among the different races are common. There are in Brazil eighty-eight titles of nobility; but these are not hereditary. Very little has been done for education throughout the empire; schools and school-books are deficient. The ecclesiastical establishment is also at a very low ebb, and many districts are almost wholly destitute of religious teachers. The religion of the state is Roman Catholic; but all other forms of Christianity are tolerated and protected. The monastic system is on the decline. The country along the coast and the banks of some of the rivers, besides tracts in Minas Geraes, have been improved, but it is calculated that not one acre out of 150 is cultivated. The forests furnish every variety of timber, more than 100 species of palms, logwood, mahogany, Brazil, and numerous other dye-woods, with sassafras, sarsaparilla, ipecacuanha, and a great variety of other drugs. Cocoa, caoutchouc, and manioc are indigenous products; maize, sugar, coffee, cotton, rice, wheat, and tobacco have been introduced by European culture. The culture of the China tea plant has not been successful; the verba maté, or Paraguay tea, is, however, an abundant product of the W. provs. The horse, ox, and sheep, derived from European stocks, have been naturalized in the country; and herds of cattle are reared on the more open parts. Wild animals comprise the jaguar, hyena, tiger-cat, tapir, wild-hog, and a great variety of birds of the richest plumage. The diamond mines of Minas Geraes are very productive. Other gems, gold, silver, copper, iron, & platinum, are among the mineral products of the same prov.; these mines are now wrought by the Anglo-Brazilian mining company, organized in 1825. Manufs. cotton-weaving, and tanning; nearly all branches of industry being performed by slaves. From its central position in reference to the chief commercial countries of the globe, and its extensive line of coast, Brazil is favourably situated for trade. Railways were commenced in 1854. The first opened was from Rio de Janeiro to Petropolis, 35 miles. The line from Bahia N.W. to the San Francisco riv. is in progress, and an English company is now (1864) engaged in constructing a line from Pernambuco S.W. to the waterfall of Paulo Affonso, the head of navigation on the San Francisco. Exports from the N. provs. are coffee, cotton, cacao, sugar, and tobacco; from the S., hides, tallow, and other animal products; and from the capital and middle provs., these, with drugs, diamonds, gold-dust, dyes, rice, manioc, tapioca, spirits, and rosewood. The staple product of Brazil is coffee, which yields more than half the total exports. In 1861, 2764 vessels (tonnage 878,598) arrived in the ports of the empire from foreign countries. From Brazil to foreign countries, 2469 vessels (tonnage 916,491). Exports (1861) 124,000,000 milreis; imports, 119,326,303 milreis. Nearly one-half of the trade is of British origin. On the Upper Amazon there is an extensive deposit of pure rock-salt; and in the prov. of Rio Grande do Sul, coal, suited for steam purposes, has been discovered.

The government is an hereditary limited monarchy; the legislative power is vested in a senate of 54 members, and a chamber of deputies, the former elected for life, and the latter for four years, elected by free citizens having property to 200 milreis annually. Each member of the legislature receives a salary. Parliaments are quinquennial, each sitting lasting four months. The justices of the peace are elected by the people in each district. Trial by jury exists in both civil and criminal courts. In Rio and Bahia are superior courts, with eight judges each; and the former city is also the seat of a supreme judicial tribunal, with twelve judges appointed by the crown. The executive government is in the six departments of the empire, justice, foreign affairs, navy, war, and finance. Income (1863), 51,500,000 mil. Estim. expend. (1863-4) 51,029,053 mil. Debt 190,232,276 mil. Military force (1860) 22,546 men, of whom 3727 were cavalry. In 1863 the navy consisted of 1 frigate, 6 corvettes, and 10 smaller sailing vessels, and 22 steamers. Brazil was first discovered in 1500, and began to be colonized by the Portuguese in 1531. In 1808, King John VI. of Portugal took up his residence in Brazil; and in 1815 constituted it a kingdom. In 1822 it declared itself an independent state, and obtained a constitution in 1825. Rio de Janeiro is the cap. of the empire and the seat of government.

Lat. of lighthouse, chain-pier, 50° 50' N.; lon. 0° 8' W. Ac. of pa. 1562. P. (1801) 7339, (1851) 65,515; (1861) 77,693; parl. bor., 87,311. The town, sheltered on the N. & N.E. by the Southdowns, extends (including Cliftonville) for 3 m. along the coast, fronted by a sea-wall about 60 feet in height, and occupying declivities on the E. and W., with a central valley. Consists almost wholly of new and elegant streets, squares, and terraces. Principal buildings are the pavilion, built by George IV. when Prince of Wales, now the property of the town; the suspension chain-pier, extending 1014 feet into the sea; St Peter's church, the co. hospital, dispensary, college, town-hall, theatre, assembly rooms, hotels, club-houses, and baths. There are 63 boarding-schools for young gentlemen, and 96 for ladies, besides many day schools. It is the seat of the Sussex literary and scientific institution, founded in 1836. Brighton has boasted of a pack of hounds above 150 years, and there are in the vicinity several other packs, both hounds and fox-hounds. Its fisheries employ many boats, and supply large quantities of fish to the London markets. It communicates with London by London and Brighton Railway, by the South Coast Railway with Portsmouth, 44 m. distant, and with Hastings by its E. branch, and by steamers from Newhaven with Dieppe (France), 80 m. distant. Petty-sessions daily in the town-hall. Brighton was incorporated by royal charter in 1854, since which time courts of quarter-sessions are held under the presidency of the borough recorder. It sends 2 members to H. of Commons. Reg. electors (1863-4) 5434.

BRISTOL, a city, seaport, and co. of England, situated chiefly in Gloucestershire, and partly in Somersetshire, on the Avon, at its confluence with the Frome, and 8 m. S.E. of its mouth in the Bristol Channel:  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. N.W. Bath,  $3\frac{3}{4}$  m. S.S.W. Gloucester, and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. W. London by G.W. Railway; 41 feet above the sea; mean temp. of year  $49^{\circ}1$ ; rainfall 31 inches. Lat. of cathedral  $51^{\circ}27'$  N.; lon.  $2^{\circ}36'$  W. Ac. of bor., including the dist. added by the municipal act, 1870. P. (1851) 137,328, (1861) 154,093, including parliamentary boundary. Principal edifices, the cathedral; 19 parish churches and many dissenting places of worship; guild-hall, council-house, gaol, and bridewell; the exchange, used as a corn-market; commercial rooms; Bristol institution, with a library and museum; infirmary, assembly rooms, Victoria rooms, a hall used for concerts, the baths and pump-rooms at Clifton, a theatre, and numerous bridges.—Bristol has a proprietary Baptist college, a school of medicine, a public library, law and medical libraries. It has iron and brass foundries; copper, tin, zinc, glass, chemical and colour works; sugar refineries and distilleries; and manufs. of pins, shot, soap, leather, tobacco, cottons, hats, and floor-cloths, with shipbuilding yards; and in its vicinity are brick and coal works. The Avon at Bristol, though narrow, is deep enough for large ships. In 1804-9 docks were formed by changing the course of the rivers Avon and Frome, and by placing locks at the extremity of the old channel. Imports, sugar, molasses, rum, coffee, tobacco, wool, turpentine, hemp, timber, wine, and brandy. Exports, manufactured goods. Ships entered (1861-2), 958; tonnage, 267,883. Cleared, 288; tonnage, 86,006. Vessels belonging to the port, 208; tonnage, 61,904. Bristol communicates by railway with Birmingham and Exeter, with the Thames by the Kennet and Avon Canal. It was the first port in Britain whence regular steam communication with the U. S. of North America was established. The s.s. "Great Western" and "Great Britain" were built here; but for want of proper dock accommodation, not a single ocean steamer now leaves the port. It has a chamber of commerce, mercantile corporate bodies, and banking companies. In 1848 it was made a free port. The city is divided into ten wards, and governed by a mayor, 16 aldermen, and 48 councillors. Its corporation has jurisdiction on the Avon from 4 m. above the city down to the sea, and along the channel to Clevedon. Spring assizes for civil causes, quarter-sessions, sheriff's and other courts are held here. Bristol belongs to Clifton and Bedminster poor-law union. Customs rev. (1862) 1,317,177l.; expenditure 298,260l. Sends two mems. to H. of C. Reg. elect. (1864) city and bor. 13,829. Birthplace of Chatterton and Southey

BRISTOL BAY, an inlet of the Pacific, Russian America, between Cape Newnham and the peninsula of Aliaska, in lat.  $54^{\circ}$  N.; lon.  $160^{\circ}$  W.

BRISTOL CHANNEL, an arm of the Atlantic, entering between St Ann's Head on the N. and Land's End on the S., extending into the S.W. part of Great Britain, between lat.  $50^{\circ}$  and  $51^{\circ}40'$  N., lon.  $3^{\circ}$  and  $5^{\circ}30'$  W., bounded N. by South Wales, and S. by the English cos. Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall. At its E. extremity it terminates in the estuary of the Severn, besides which river it receives the Parret, Taw, Torridge, Taff, and Towy. Sandy Island, with lighthouse, is in the mouth of the channel. Contains Milford Haven, Carmarthen Bay, and Swansea Bay on the N., and Barnstaple, Porlock, and Bridgewater Bay on the S. Its tides flow rapidly upward, and meeting with the currents of the Severn, cause the phenomenon called the "bore."

BRISTON, a pa. of England, co. Norfolk, on the Bure,  $3\frac{1}{2}$  m. S.S.W. Holt. Ac. 2751. P. 931.

BRITAIN, or GREAT BRITAIN, including England and Scotland, is the largest island of Europe, and the principal of the group of the British Isles; bounded on the E. by the North Sea; N. and W. by the Atlantic Ocean and Irish Sea; and on the S. separated from France by the English Channel. Its extreme length extends from lat.  $49^{\circ}57'$  to  $58^{\circ}40'$  N., or about 587 m.; its greatest breadth from lon.  $5^{\circ}47'$  W. to  $1^{\circ}45'$  E., or about 360 m. Area 83,826 sq. m., or, including the adjacent islands, 90,038 sq. m., or 66,000,000 imperial ac. P. (1861) 23,266,621. The births in 1862 were 818,829, and the deaths 503,673. The number of emigrants that left the United Kingdom in the same year was 121,214, of whom 41,843 went to our Australian colonies, 15,522 to British America, 58,706 to the United States, and 5143 to other countries. In general form it is wedge-shaped, being broadest at its S. extremity, and narrowest at its northern. Its eastern coast forms a waving, continuous, and rarely broken line; but the western coast is extremely irregular, and deeply indented with many bays and arms of the sea, interspersed with numerous islands. The S.E. part of Britain is a level alluvial surface; the centre undulating and hilly; the W. and N.W. mountainous and irregular. In the N. and W., primary strata and granite rocks prevail; in the middle districts, coal, lime, salt, and ironstone are abundant, and these are succeeded in England, in its E. and S.E. counties, by oolite, chalk, and the newer geological formations. A mountain range, more or less elevated, extends from S. to N. of the island. Commencing at Land's End in Cornwall, & traversing Devonshire, Somersetshire, & Wales, it varies in elevation from 1500 to 3500 feet. The highest summit in this branch, as also in S. Britain, is Snowdon, in Wales, 3590 feet. Another branch extends from the Cotswold Hills, Gloucestershire, and runs through Derbyshire, Staffordshire, Yorkshire, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Northumberland, with elevations from 2000 to 3000 feet; highest summit, Scawfell, in Cumberland, 3229 feet. Succeeding these are the Cheviots, between England and Scotland; highest summit, Cheviot Peak, Northumberland, 2688 feet. Farther N. is the great Grampian range which intersects Scotland, and whose extreme altitude is measured by Ben Nevis on the W., attaining an elevation of 4406 feet, and forming the culminating point of the British Isles. The most considerable rivers are the Severn, Medway, Dea, Mersey, Clyde, on the W.; and the Thames, Trent, Humber, Tyne, Forth, Tay, and Spey, on the E. The principal lakes are those of Cumberland and Westmoreland in England, and Lochs Lomond, Tay, and Maree, in Scotland. Loch Lomond, the largest lake in Great Britain, has an area of 40 sq. m. The principal bays and estuaries are the Bristol Channel, Cardigan Bay, Lancaster Bay, the Solway Firth, Firth of Clyde, on the W.; the estuary of the Thames, the Wash, the Humber, the Firths of Forth, Tay, Moray, and Cromarty, on the E.; while on the S. there are Falmouth, Plymouth, Portsmouth, and other important bays and harbours.

The British Isles, or "United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland," form an immense archipelago of about 5500 islands and rocks, at a small distance from the W. shores of Central Europe, from which it is separated by the North Sea, the Strait of Dover, and the English Channel. The area of the entire archipelago is 122,550 sq. m., and the population (by the census of 1861) 29,307,199. Including the Norman or Channel Isles, which do not strictly belong to the archipelago, the lat. extends from 49° 13' to 60° 49'; and the lon. from 1° 45' E. to 10° 26' W. The principal islands and groups are Britain, Ireland, the Isle of Wight, Anglesea, Man, the Scilly isls., Bute, Arran, the Hebrides, Orkney and Shetland islands. Being surrounded by the ocean, and having a branch of the Gulf Stream flowing along the W. coasts, the mean annual temperature of the British Isles is equal to that of countries in much lower latitudes on the continent of Europe, while the winter temperature is much higher. The mean annual temperature of the central parts of the archipelago is about 49° Fahr., that of Unst, in Shetland, being 44° 50, and of Cornwall in the extreme S. 51° 50. From observations taken in upwards of 100 localities between 1857 and 1861 inclusive, it appears that our mean summer temp. (July) is 60° 02, our mean winter (Jan.) 39° 42; while our average rain-fall is 33.79 inches. Prevailing winds for nine months of the year, S.W., W., and N.W. From March to May, E.N.E. & N. winds prevail. Though variable, the climate of Britain is found, from tables of longevity, to be one of the most salubrious in the world, while the very general cultivation and drainage of the soil have removed those maladies that originate in marsh effluvia. Within the last century the average longevity of the population has been much increased. In 1800 the average mortality was 1 in 32; in 1847, 1 in 45. The indigenous vegetation of the British Isles partakes of the character of that of the contiguous parts of Europe, & contains few or no species peculiar to that archipelago: number of species estimated at 4400, of which about 1600 are flowering plants. All the grains and grasses, & the common European fruits, grow in almost all districts & situations not too elevated, and both agriculture and horticulture have been brought to a great degree of perfection. The breeds of horses, cattle, sheep, and other useful animals, are also of the best description. Of wild animals, the fox, badger, wild cat, stoat, martin, otter, squirrel, hedgehog, dormouse, mole, mouse, hare, and rabbit, are the principal. The stag and fallow deer are still abundant in several localities. The bittern, eagle, and other birds of prey, are becoming more rare. The eastern half of the island is generally an agricultural, while the western is a grazing country. Estimating the entire surface at 78,000,000 acres, it is calculated that 20,000,000 are under crop; 28,000,000 under pasture; 15,000,000 waste, but capable of cultivation; and 13,000,000 hopelessly waste. The amount of corn, after deducting seed, is estimated at 54,232,000 qrs. In 1862, the annual value of real property assessed to the property-tax in Great Britain amounted to 301,380,730*l.*; and the number of houses charged with the house-duty was 475,617 houses, and the amount assessed 708,970*l.* In 1860, the total rev. of the British colonies amounted to 11,237,000*l.*; debt, 27,161,000*l.*; imports, 59,432,000*l.*; exports from do., 49,626,000*l.*; imperial expenditure on, for civil and military purposes, 3,509,465*l.* Merchant ships belonging to colonies, 9829, carrying 906,135 tons. The penal establishments form a large part of the charge for civil services. Revenue of the United Kingdom for 1862 amounted to 71,511,552*l.*, the expenditure to 72,086,000*l.*, and the national debt to 800,770,233*l.* Exports of British produce, 1862, 123,992,264*l.*; of foreign & colonial produce, 42,175,870*l.*; total, 166,168,134*l.*: total imports, 225,716,976*l.* Our imports are chiefly of two classes, viz., food for our people, and raw material for our manufactures. In 1862 alone we paid for foreign corn no less than 35,000,000*l.*, or about one-half the whole subsistence of the people. The principal articles of raw material imported are cotton wool, sheep's wool, & silk wool; while our exports consist chiefly of cotton, woollen, and linen goods, metallic goods, machinery, coals, and apparel. Number of vessels arrived, 55,466, carrying 13,091,090 tons; cleared, 56,209, carrying 13,444,349 tons. The total mercantile fleet of sailing and steam vessels amounted to 27,525, carrying 4,860,191 tons, manned by 222,430 men. In 1862, the royal navy numbered 565 ships of war, carrying 14,748 guns: the majority of these are propelled by steam, including 61 ships of the line, 53 frigates, and 26 iron-clad steamers. In the same year our military force amounted to 228,963 men and officers (of whom 83,523 were serving in India), besides the militia and 163,000 volunteers. The army and navy cost the country annually about 28,000,000*l.*, of which more than one-half go to the army. In the same year the coinage was 7,337,731*l.* Number of miles of railway open in 1852 amounted to 6890, employing 56,000 persons; but in 1862 the number of miles in actual operation had swelled to 11,551 miles, conveying 180,429,000 passengers, and drawing 29,128,551*l.* of annual receipts. The country is intersected by electric telegraph wires along the lines of railway, and England is connected by submarine telegraph with Ireland, also with France by the Dover and Calais' submarine telegraph. The value of mineral produce in the United Kingdom for 1863 was 29,151,976*l.*, the coal alone amounting to 20,572,945*l.*, & the metals to 15,527,452*l.* The total area of the coal-measures is estimated at about 800 sq. m., and the rate of consumption is at present 86,292,215 tons annually. The government is a limited monarchy. The legislative authority is vested in the sovereign and the parliament (Lords and Commons), the concurrence of all which estates is necessary to the enactment of new laws, or to the repeal of those already in force. The House of Peers consists of 451 Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and is composed of princes of the blood royal, 2 archbishops, 24 English bishops, 4 Irish representative archbishops and bishops, 20 dukes, 21 marquises, 111 earls, 24 viscounts, 197 barons, with 16 Scotch and 28 Irish representative peers. The House of Commons consists of 685 members, 500 of whom are chosen by the electors of England and Wales, 105 by those of Ireland, and 53 by those of Scotland. The electors form about one twenty-fourth of the entire population.

Nothing is known historically of Britain before the invasion of Cæsar (B.C. 55, 54), except by a few obscure allusions. It is conjectured to have been originally peopled from the adjoining continent, first by the Celts from Gaul, and afterwards by Teutonic tribes from Germany and Scandinavia. After the invasion of Cæsar, the Romans did not return to Britain for about a century; under Agricola, Antoninus Pius, Severus, Caracalla, it was subdued and occupied till about A.D. 420, when it was abandoned by the Romans. Agricola built a wall between the Firths of Forth and Clyde, in order to bound the empire and defend it from the Caledonians. Adrian erected a mud wall from the Solway Firth, to the Tyne; and Severus built a stone wall in the same direction, portions of which still remain. After the termination of the Roman power, the greater part of Britain was conquered by the Saxons, Jutes, and Angles, the latter giving their name to England; this conquest commenced in 449, and occupied about 130 years. In 1066 the Normans made a descent on England, and possessed themselves of a great part of the country. In 1172 Ireland was subdued, and came under British government. Magna Charta was obtained by the Barons in 1215. In 1203 Wales was united to England. In 1604, the accession of James VI. united the crown of Scotland to that of England. A civil war in Britain terminated in the execution of Charles I. in 1649, followed by a Commonwealth that lasted 11 years, in which Oliver Cromwell assumed the dictatorship. In 1660 monarchy was restored, when Charles II. ascended the throne of his father. William III. was called to the throne after the revolution of 1688. The legislative union of Scotland and England took place in 1707. The American war of independence began in 1776, and terminated in 1784. The French revolution and war with France began in 1793, and terminated by the battle of Waterloo in 1815. The legislative union of Ireland with Britain took place in 1800, and was followed next year by the first regular census of the British Isles. In 1829 the Catholic Emancipation Act was passed; and a reform of the British parliamentary representation was effected by the Act of 1832. In 1842, the tariff reform was begun, which has resulted in free trade; and in 1854, in alliance with France, Turkey, and Sardinia, war was declared against Russia, in consequence of its encroachments on Turkey. In 1855, Sebastopol was taken by the allied armies, and peace established in 1856. In the year following a formidable insurrection broke out in India, which induced the British Government to take the immediate superintendence of their vast possessions in that country into their own hands. The Cabinet Council for carrying on the business of the state is composed of the president of the privy council, the lord high chancellor, first lord of the treasury, lord privy seal, chancellor of the exchequer, minister of war, three secretaries of state,—viz., home, colonial, and foreign affairs,—the commander-in-chief of the forces, first lord of the admiralty, presidents of the boards of control (India) and of trade, secretary at war, and the paymaster-general. The courts of law and local government vary in different divisions of the empire; but each co. throughout the kingdom is governed by a lieutenant, sheriff, and other officers appointed by the Crown. The episcopalian form of church government, of which the sovereign is the head, is the state-established religion in England and Ireland, and the presbyterian form that of Scotland. There is, however, the most complete toleration of all other religious sects throughout the empire. The most perfect degree of personal freedom is guaranteed by the Habeas Corpus Act (which secures to the suspected prisoner a trial or liberation within a limited time), trial by jury, liberty of the press, liberty of conscience, and the total abolition of slavery. Each city and municipal borough has the election of its own separate corporate officers. The colonies have each a governor appointed by the Crown, who is assisted in each of the British North American colonies by a council and legislative assembly, as also in each of the West India islands, except St Lucia and Trinidad. These two islands, and British Guiana, Gibraltar, Malta, the Cape of Good Hope, Ceylon, the Mauritius, and Hong Kong, are placed under a governor and council. The African settlements, all the Australasian colonies, the Falkland islands, and St Helena, are each ruled by a governor, council, and British Acts of Parliament; and Honduras is governed by a superintendent and magistrates.

The British Empire is the largest and most powerful in the world, comprising a vast extent of territory, estim. at 7,103,000 sq. m., with a pop. of 224,360,000. Its subdivisions, with their area and pop. at last census, are stated below:—

Brunswick, . . .	209	72,996
Wolfenbüttel, . . .	295	54,573
Helmstedt, . . .	304	48,160
Gandersheim, . . .	211	42,965
Holzminden, . . .	221	40,116
Blankenburg, . . .	183	22,898
Total,	1423	281,708

Besides this, the duchy has the following detached possessions:—In Prussian Silesia, 1st, in the gov. of Breslau; the principality of Oels, with the seignory of Medzibor (area 791 sq. m., having 8 towns, 1 bourg, 324 villages, etc.), and the land of Plomnitz in the co. of Glatz, circ. Habelschwert;—2d, in the dist. of Oepeln, circ. Lublinitz; the seignory of Gutentag. The entire duchy has an area of 1526 sq. m. The principal part, with the cap. city, lies between Prussia and Hanover; the 2d extends E. to W. along the S. bound. of Hanover, limited on the E. by Prussia, and W. by the Weser; the 3d lies S.W. of the above, between Prussia, Hanover, and Anhalt. The country is mountainous in the S., which is traversed by ramifications of the Harz mountains; the Worm-Berg, 3230 feet, is the highest point in the duchy. It is badly watered; the Ocker flows N. past Brunswick, the Leine at Gandersheim, and the Weser on the extreme W. limits of the territory; there are several small lakes in the Harz, and mineral springs at Helmstedt and Seesen. The climate is rigorous in the Harz, where harvest is a month later than in the rest of the territory. Agriculture is the chief source of wealth. Principal products, grass, rye, barley, oats, seed-oil, flax, tobacco, chicory, hops, and fruits. Cattle-breeding is important; great care is bestowed in the improvement of horses, for which there is a stud in Harzburg; and the sheep are of improved breeds. Exports timber. Mining is carried on in the Harz mountains; its chief products are gold, silver, lead, litharge, copper, sulphur, vitriol, and alum. The iron-works employ 9 smelting houses and 10 furnaces; marble and alabaster are also procured. Manufactures limited to tobacco, paper, soap, sal-ammoniac, and madder, linen and woollen weaving and spinning, and lacquered wares, glass, and beer. Trade is active, and is much facilitated by the two annual fairs at Brunswick, and by railways. The duchy has a college, an anatomical school, five gymnasia, and several other schools. The library of Wolfenbüttel is celebrated. Brunswick belongs, with Hanover, to the German commercial union. The government is exercised by a hereditary duke, and based on the constitutions of 1832 and 1851, with a single legislative chamber, composed of 43 members. The court of appeal at Wolfenbüttel is the highest legal tribunal. Nearly all belong to the Lutheran church, except 1167 Calvinists, 2458 Roman Catholics, and 1078 Jews. Public revenue for 1862-3, 4,893,000 thalers, or 747,456*l.*; expenditure same amount. Military establishment in 1863, 1 regiment of infantry of 2000 men; 1 battalion of life-guards, 700 men; 1 do. light dragoons, 437 men; and 1 brigade of artillery, 300 rank and file.

Mean temp. of year 49° 6', winter 38°, summer 64°, Fahr. It is the most important city in the kingdom, the chief seat of public instruction and industry, the residence of the courts, seat of the legislative assemblies, courts of appeal and chamber of commerce. Consists of an upper or new, and a lower or old town, the former of which is the fashionable and more healthy quarter, and contains the royal palace, the government offices, and the finest streets and hotels; it is well supplied with water, and has many richly sculptured fountains. Principal buildings are the palace of the chambers, King's palace, palace of the "Prince of Orange," palace of the fine arts, public library and museum, church of Notre-Dame-de-Bon-Secours and that of Grand-Béguinage, and the theatre. The anc. buildings in the lower city comprise the Hôtel de Ville, a noble Gothic structure, with a spire of open stone work 364 feet in height, surmounted by a statue of St Michael. The other churches in general decorated with rich sculptures and paintings; the finest is the cathedral of St Gudule, built in 1273, and celebrated for its painted glass, numerous statues, and finely carved pulpit; the church of Notre-Dame-de-la-Chapelle, and that of Notre-Dame-des-Victoires, the Broet-Huys, or old Hôtel de Ville, and several gates of its anc. walls, which are removed, and the space converted into boulevards. The finest promenades are the Allée-Verte, along the canal from Brussels to the Scheldt, and the park, an extensive enclosure, near the royal palace, laid out with avenues of trees, and ornamented with statues. This was the scene of the chief struggle in the revolution of 1830, and a memorial to those who fell is erected in the Place des Martyrs. A colossal statue to Godefroid de Bouillon was inaugurated in 1848. Three m. N. is the country palace of Laeken. It has numerous and excellent establishments of public instruction; a free university founded in 1834, with faculties of law, medicine, mathematical and physical sciences, and belles-lettres; a primary normal school, polytechnic school, an academy of painting, sculpture, and engraving, a royal school of music, a school of deaf-mutes and blind, established in 1834, and numerous primary schools and schools of industry. Among its private collections are the library of the Bollandists, and that of the geographical establishment of M. Ph. Vandermaelen, containing a large collection of maps, and a museum of natural history. Brussels is the seat of the principal banks, and of the only mint of the kingdom, and has a savings' bank, and many charitable institutions; is one of the great centres of Belgian industry, and is celebrated for its lace and carpets. Its other chief manufs. are of fine linens, damask, silk and cotton ribbons, gold and silver embroidery, hats, paper, machinery, jewellery, and mathematical and musical instruments. Carriage-building and cabinet-making are important branches of industry. Manufs. of chemical products, soap, porcelain, and crystal; sugar refineries and breweries. Book printing and lithographic establishments are extensive, and 10 or 12 newspapers are issued daily. Commerce is facilitated by a canal, which connects it with Antwerp; by excellent roads, and by railways, which radiate from it in every direction. Brussels is an ancient city, believed to have been founded in the 7th century; was fortified in the 11th century, and was the residence of the Dukes of Brabant, and afterwards of the Spanish and Austrian governors-general of the Netherlands; its fortifications were dismantled by Joseph II. It was, under the French empire, cap. of the dep. of the Dyle; previous to 1830 it was one of the caps. of the kingdom of the Netherlands, and alternately with the Hague, the seat of the court and of the states-general. It is the birthplace of the physicians Vesalius and Van Helmont, and of the two painters Champaigne.

BUENOS AYRES, the largest, most populous, and most flourishing of the provs. which comprise the Argentine Confederation, South America. Extends from Bahia Blanca, lat. 39° S., along the Atlantic Ocean to the S. bank of the Parana Guazu R., and follows it within 30 m. of Rosario. This river separates it from the prov. of Entre Rios. Thence the W. boundary is formed by a line drawn S.W. to the lake of Chiquita, and then S. to Bahia Blanca on the Rio Negro, according to some authorities; E. by the Atlantic Ocean. But its boundaries are quite undetermined. Area 83,615 sq. m. P. (1860) 350,000 (130,000 Argentines and 20,000 Indians, the rest Monte Videans, Europeans, and 1000 Americans). The annual immigration since 1856 is about 8000. The N.

includes a portion of the eastern Pampas, and is flat, with lakes and swamps. The S. part comprehends the low hills of the Sierras del Vulcan and Curra-Malal. Principal rivers, the Salado and Quequen. Climate humid and variable; ice seldom occurs; mean summer heat 90° Fahr. The N. winds prevailing here have the disagreeable character of the sirocco of Italy; the S.W. winds, or pamperos, are hurricanes accompanied with thunder. There is sufficient rain in general throughout, but occasionally there are years of excessive and destructive droughts. The soil is fertile in many places, but it is estimated that there is not a thousandth part under cultivation. Hides, hair, horns, tallow, and jerked beef are chief exports; horses, mules, and asses are also exported. The breed of sheep has been improved, and wool now forms an article of export. Formerly the cultivation of the soil was so neglected that grain was required from abroad; now, wheat is exported to some extent. Buenos Ayres became independent of the Spanish government in 1816, and along with the neighbouring states joined in a confederated republic (the Argentine or La Plata), from which it separated in 1853, but was reunited in 1859. The religion of the prov. is Roman Catholic, but others are tolerated. A chain of forts has been established along the W. boundary to overawe the Indian population.

BUENOS AYRES ("good air"), the cap. city of the province of same name, is situated on the S. of the Plata estuary, about 150 m. from the sea, opposite the town Colonia. Lat. 34° 36' 29" S.; lon. 58° 23' 34" W. P. (1863) 140,000. It covers a surface of about 2 m. in length by 1½ m. in breadth, and is regularly laid out, all its streets crossing each other at right angles, and now mostly paved with granite. Almost all its houses are but one storey in height, flat-roofed, and built around court-yards. It is ill provided with water, which is brought by carriers from the river. Principal edifices are churches, cathedral, convents, foundling hospital, and orphan asylum—all built of a fine white stone quarried near the city. The government offices are in a fort near the river. The university occupies an extensive building, and has a valuable library; besides which there are a superior academy, a military college, various public schools, several printing establishments, and manufs. of cigars, carpets, furniture, boots and shoes. The navigation of the Plata, here 36 m. broad, is difficult; and ships drawing 16 feet water are obliged to anchor in the Amarradero, a roadstead 7 or 8 m. distant, to and from which merchandise has to be conveyed by lighters and rude ox-carts. In 1860, the exports were valued at 4,176,446*l.*, and comprised ox-hides, tallow, wool, and jerked beef. Buenos Ayres was founded in 1535; in 1775 it was made the seat of a viceroyalty. In 1806 it was taken by the English, but it was retaken by the Spaniards in the same year. Shortest track to Liverpool, 6210 sea miles; shortest sailing voyage, 67 days. In 1864 the Northern line of railway was opened from Buenos Ayres to San Fernando, & the Great Southern line from the capital was in progress.

BUFFALO, a city and port of entry, U.S., N. America, New York, cap. co. Erie, at the E. extremity of Lake Erie, where it contracts into Niagara river, 16 m. S.S.E. Niagara Falls. P. (1860) 81,129. Principal edifices, churches, court-house, theatre, markets, city-offices, orphan asylum, university, lyceum, banks, fire, life, & marine insurance cos. Manufs. iron: woollens, saw-mills, and shipbuilding. Its harbour, formed by Buffalo Creek, has a stone pier, 1500 ft. in length, terminated by a lighthouse; admits vessels drawing 13 feet water. In winter ice is often driven into it by westerly winds, where it long remains after the lake is clear. Since the completion of the Erie Canal, and the formation of railways uniting it with New York, the other cities on the Atlantic coast, the Ohio and Mississippi valleys, Pittsburg and Canada, it has become a place of great commercial importance. There are about 3500 boats, average 200 tons, employed on the canal, but only 2000 of these are suited to carry grain. In 1861, 8201 vessels, of 3,356,154 tons, entered, and 8189 vessels, of 3,333,037 tons, cleared. The receipts of all kinds of grain and flour at the port in 1862 amounted to 72,872,454 bushels. Imports from Canada in 1862 were worth 2,613,624 dols. Exports to Canada 577,598 dols. The total exports from Buffalo of forest and agricultural products, manufactures, etc., amounted to 53,424,992 dols. The total imports, 41,448,623 dols. The total eastward movement of freight by the Erie Canal in 1862 was 1,980,982 tons; total westward, 353,422 tons. It was burned by the English in 1814.—II. a township, Missouri, co. Pike. BURMA or BRMAH, the Burmese empire, or kingdom of Ava, a state of Further India, and formerly the most extensive and powerful in that peninsula; but since the wars with the British, 1824 to 1852, its territories are comprised within lat. 19° 30' and 28° N.; lon. 94° to 102° E.; having W. Assam, Independent Tipperah, and Aracan, N. Tibet and Assam, E. the Chinese prov. Yunnan, from which it is separated by the Ku-lung river, and Ton-King; and S. Siam, and the British province of Pegu. Area 185,000 sq. m., & pop. 3,000,000. (?) It is composed of the kingdom of Burma, with portions of the tributary Shan & Khyen states. It is enclosed on the W., N. and S.E. by mountain ranges, level on the S. and S.E.; its central part consists of the upper basin of the Irrawadi. The country is reckoned salubrious. From May till the middle of Sept. is the rainy season. From Sept. till March the weather is delightful, temp. seldom exceeding 75° Fahr. In April and May the heat is great, but soon mitigated by the rains. Annual rainfall 150 to 200 inches. The soil is of high fertility; but except near the towns, most of it lies waste, and agriculture is in a backward state. Rice is the chief crop in the S.; Indian millet and maize in the N.; and sesamum is universally cultivated for cattle. Other products are cotton, indigo, yams, sweet potatoes, tobacco, oil plants, bananas and other fruits, betel-nut and leaf, sugar cane, onions, garlic, and in the N. a kind of tea. Teak, oak, and other woods abound on the mountain ranges, and palm and bamboo are also plentiful. Oxen, elephants, horses, buffaloes, and goats are the domestic animals. Mineral products are gold, silver, iron, copper, lead, tin, amber, petroleum, marble, serpentine, sapphires and other gems, antimony, sulphur, nitre, and coal. In physical form, the Burmese are more allied to the Mongolians of E. Asia than to the Hindoos; figure short, robust, and fleshy, face lozenge-shaped, cheek-bones large and oblique; hair black, coarse and lank, and skin light brown or yellowish. Their language is monosyllabic, allied to the Chinese. The Burmese are gay, and fond of amusements, but less civilised than the Hindoos. They have boat-building, bell-casting, work in gold and silver, dye silk and other fabrics, manuf. lacquered wares, paper and coarse earthenwares; but most of their manuf. goods are imported from foreign countries. China sends silks, porcelain, copper, carpets, metals, drugs, and tea, in return for raw cotton, feathers, ivory, birds' nests, horns, gums, and British manufs. From the Shan tribes the Burmese obtain their best sword-blades, with lac, wax, and varnish, in return for salt and dried fish. British cotton goods, areca and cocoa-nuts, tobacco, iron, hardwares, copper, lead, and other minerals, opium, sugar, spirits, English glass, earthenwares, firearms, and gunpowder, are imported from British India. The government is hereditary and despotic. Buddhism is the prevailing superstition; there are a few Christians and Jews. Education, in so far as reading and writing are concerned, is generally diffused. Public revenue is derived from a tithe of the profits of cultivation, duties on imports and exports, on petroleum, a royal monopoly of marble, amber, the precious metals, and gems. Ava and Amarapura were successively the seats of government; the present capital is Mandalay. Other towns, including Bamo, are chiefly on the Irrawadi. In 1823 the Burmese provoked war with the British, which lasted during the years 1824-5, and was renewed in 1852. In both cases it terminated in their defeat, and the cession of several territories to the English. In 1862 the three maritime provinces of India beyond the Ganges which had been conquered from the Burmese, were united under one local administration, and called 'BRITISH BURMA.' These provinces comprised the ancient kingdoms of Pegu and Aracan, with the long line of coast known as Tenasserim. Pegu was occupied in consequence of the war of 1852. Aracan and Tenasserim were acquired by treaty, after the wars of 1825-6. The province of British Burma extends along the E. shore of the Bay of Bengal, from 20° 50' to 10° N. Length of coast line 1100 m. Area 90,000 sq. m. Each division has a chief seaport; Tenasserim has Moulmein, Pegu Rangoon, and Aracan Akyab. Aracan, the N. most division of the province, is separated from Pegu and Burma by a range of mountains 7000 feet high. Pegu and Martaban lie in the valley of the Irrawadi (now traversed by English steamers) and Sitang rivers, bounded E. and W. by mountain ranges. The valley of the Irrawadi expands into a magnificent alluvial region, extending over 10,000 sq. m. North Tenasserim is bounded W. for 100 m. by the river Saluen; it is a wilderness of hills, densely wooded. P. of British Burma (1861).—Pegu, 1,150,189; Tenasserim, 371,402; Aracan, 376,306; total, 1,897,897. In 1859 it was only 948,371; the increase is due to immigration to Pegu, comprising Europeans and their descendants, 2562; the others chiefly Burmese, including Aracanese, Karens, Chinese, and Indians. Soil very fertile, agriculture rude; all the tribes are truthful and hospitable. The houses are built of bamboo; food and clothing abundant. The introduction of Christianity has made great changes in the rude hill tribes. The natives grow cotton and weave textures of different colours. The cultivation of the tea plant has been commenced at Akyab. Exports of grain (1862), Pegu, 216,144; Tenass., 30,705; Aracan, 106,830; in all, 353,679 tons. Rev. (1862) 9,627,648 rupees, about 10 mill. rupees above 1861. A treaty between Great Britain and the king of Ava, of date 1863, gives free access to the territory of the Burmese Empire.

CABOOL or CABUL, a fortified city, and cap. prov. Cabool, on the Cabool River, here crossed by three bridges, 6396 feet above the sea, and 82 m. N.N.E. Ghuznee. Lat. 34° 30' N.; lon. 69° 6' E. Pop. about 60,000. It is enclosed on the N.W. and S. sides by hills, along which run weak ramparts, and at its E. end is the Bala Hissar ("palace of the kings"). This citadel comprises the residence of the chief, government offices, royal gardens, an inner fort, and a town with 5000 inhabitants. The outer town, 3 m. in circumference, is entered by four gates, and has two principal thoroughfares running parallel to each other, the N. of which led to the magnificent bazaar, destroyed by the British on their evacuation of Cabool in 1842. The city is subdivided into dists., each enclosed with walls. In the S.W. dist. is a strongly fortified quarter, inhabited by Persians or Kuzzilbash, of whom there are from 10,000 to 12,000 in the city. Streets intricate and badly paved. Houses in general two to three storeys high, built of sun-dried bricks and wood, with flat roofs; those of the wealthy have extensive courts and gardens. Outside of the city are the tombs of the emperor Baber, who made Cabool his cap., and of Timour-Shah. Cabool has an active trade; imports precious metals, firearms, paper, tea, cotton goods, broad cloths, velvets, kermes and other dyes, iron wares, cutlery, needles, raw silk, to from 40,000L. to 50,000L. yearly, mostly brought from the Russian and the Chinese dominions, and Independent Turkestan; and which goods are mostly expedited southward into Hindostan. It has markets for corn, cattle, and fuel, and is well supplied with vegetables and fruits. From its elevation, the winter in Cabool is long and severe; the summer is delightful; average temperature from 75° to 85° Fahr. The inhabitants are tall, well made, not very dark, and have Jewish features. They are Mohammedians of the Sonnee sect. The higher classes speak Persian, the common people the Pushtoo dialect. It was taken by Sebuctaghi in 977, by Tamerlane at the end of the 14th century, and in 1738 by Nadir Shah. It was the scene in 1842 of the treacherous outbreak of the chiefs, the murders of Sir W. Macnaughten and Sir A. Burnes, and the massacre of 3800 soldiers and 12,000 camp followers; was retaken in the same year by the British troops under Sir R. Sale, the bazaars and public buildings burned and finally relinquished. Its chiefship is considered to extend from the S. of Ghuznee to the Hindoo Koosh, and from Bamian to the Khyber mountains, comprising an area of about 10,000 sq. m., with the cities of Cabool, Istalif, Ghuznee, and Jelalabad. Dost Mahomed's army amounted to 2500 infantry, and 12,000 to 13,000 horse. His annual revenue is said to be 150,000L. Cabool River or Jui-Shir, the only large tributary of the Indus from the W., rises near lat. 34° 21' N., lon. 68° 20' E., at an elevation of 8400 feet, and after an E. course of 320 m., and the addition of many tributaries, joins the Indus nearly opposite Attock: it is navigable for boats of 40 or 50 tons, from the Indus to Dobundee, a distance of 50 m. Lat. 30° 2' 4" N.; lon. 81° 15' 36" E.; altitude 40 feet above the sea. Pop., including the suburbs of Boulac and Old Cairo, estimated at 254,000, comprising Mohammedans, Copts, Jews, and numerous foreigners. Climate healthy and little variable. Mean temp. of year 72°-2, of winter 58°-5, of summer 85°-1, Fahr. Rain falls 10 or 12 times a year, but lasts for only 1 or 2 hours. The city proper is built on a slope at the foot of one of the lowest ridges of the chain of Jebel Mokkatam, and occupies an area of 3 sq. m.; it is surrounded by old walls, and the highest part of the ridge is occupied by a citadel, which contains the palace of the viceroy, the arsenal, mint, public offices, and the magnificent new mosque of Mohammed Ali. The citadel is commanded by forts placed on the extremity of the chain of Mokkatam. The city is separated from its suburbs Boulac and Misr-el-Aatik (improperly called Old Cairo) by a series of gardens and plantations. Cairo is divided into several distinct quarters according to the religion and race of its inhabitants, as the Coptic quarter, Jews' quarter, and Frank quarter, which are separated by gates. The city is traversed by a canal of irrigation, which commences at Old Cairo. The remarkable edifices of Cairo, which comprise many of the finest remains of Arabian architecture, all date from the reign of the Arabs and the ancient sultans of Egypt. Among these are about 400 mosques, with picturesque minarets, several of the ancient gates, an aqueduct for conveying water from the Nile to the citadel, the ancient works of the citadel, and the palace and well of Joseph. Shepherd's hotel, a large and well-conducted establishment, is the great resort of the English. At Old Cairo are the seven towers still called "the Granary of Joseph," and serving their ancient purpose. In the island of Rhoda is the celebrated Nilometer, a graduated column for indicating the height of the water during the annual inundation of the river; numerous ancient cisterns and baths still ornament the city; on the S., outside the walls, are the tombs of the Mameukes, and on the N.E. the obelisk of Heliopolis. There are four primary gov. schools in Cairo, excellent schools conducted by the American missionaries, who also preach in Arabic, museum of Egyptian antiquities, magnetic observatory, hospitals, and a lunatic asylum. There are two newspapers published here, one in Turkish and the other in Arabic. Cairo was long the chief entrepôt for the commerce of Egypt, and its trade has greatly increased since the opening of the railway to Alexandria and Suez. The bazaars are well supplied with goods of every description, and are thronged by crowds of visitors of all nations; caravans arrive annually from Mourzouk, Sennaar, and Darfur. There is a branch railway 1 mile to Boulac, the port of Cairo, and teleg. lines to Alexandria, Suez, and Damietta. [BOULAC.] [EGYPT.] Cairo was founded by the Arabs in 970; its citadel was built by Saladin in 1176; and it was the capital of the sultans of Egypt till the time of the Turkish conquest in 1507; since that time it has been the residence of the Pachas, governors of the province; it was taken by the French in 1798, and held by them for 3½ years.

It is divided into two distinct parts, that on the N. being the native portion. The streets are narrow, and the buildings are occupied as bazaars in the lower parts, and as dwelling-houses above. The S., called "Chowringhee," the European portion, is the fashionable part. The streets are wide, and many of the houses detached in their own gardens. Public buildings are Fort William, the largest fortress in India, constructed at a cost of 2,000,000*l.*, is garrisoned by a detachment of artillery, European and native regiments, it mounts 619 guns, and in the armoury are 80,000 stand of small arms; the government-house, mint, custom-house, town-hall, gaol, hospitals. There are churches and chapels of all denominations and creeds. The educational institutions comprise Hindoo, Sanscrit, Mohammedan, and Anglo-Indian colleges, grammar and various other schools; of the non-government colleges the principal are the Free Church, established and erected by the great missionary, Dr Duff, and the Doveton college for the East Indian community. The literary and scientific establishments comprise the Asiatic society, the Bethune society; a literary, scientific, and philosophical institution for the educated natives of the city; Dalhousie institute, native medical college, public library, horticultural and agricultural society, with botanic gardens.—Calcutta is the headquarters of the governor-general, and of the government, the supreme courts of justice, and court of appeal for the lower provinces of Bengal, the seat of the chief bishop of the Church of England in India and Ceylon, and of the vicar-apostolic of the Roman Catholics. Several newspapers are published in the city, in the English and native languages. There are several banks, insurance, and navigation companies, and a chamber of commerce. A cannon foundry, sugar refining, cotton, flour, saw and oil mills, and ship-building docks. The commerce of Calcutta is extensive, monopolizing the internal trade of Bengal. Imports silks, cotton goods, yarn, cutlery, wines, and spirits. Exports sugar, opium, indigo, country-made cotton piece goods, and raw silk. [BENGAL.] The Hoogly, opposite the city, is not quite one mile across, and ships can anchor in six fathoms water. The navigation of the river is dangerous, on account of shifting sands and a rapid current. The coinage of the presidency are the gold and silver rupee and copper piece. A gold coinage is to be introduced, and there is a paper currency to the extent of  $5\frac{1}{2}$  millions sterling in 1864. The value of the mohur, which is not a legal tender, is 16 rupees, and a rupee is valued at 2*s.* English money. A railway from Calcutta to Ranungee, 122 m. N.W., was opened in 1855; and now, 1864, the East Indian Railway, which is to extend to the Chenab, a tributary of the Indus at Moultan, is opened as far as Delhi. Another line of rail. extends N.E. towards Dacca, and a third S.E., terminating at the Muth-lah river, in the valley of the Ganges. An electric telegraph has been formed between the city and Saugor at the mouth of the Hoogly. There is regular steam communication with England by the overland route, the mails being despatched every fortnight. Average time on the voyage 42 days. The elevation of the city is 18 feet above the sea. Annual fall of rain,  $64^{\circ} 1$  inches; rainy season, middle of June to middle of October. Mean maximum temp. of year,  $90^{\circ}$  Fahr. European society is good, exhibiting much social feeling and gaiety, with some formality in official circles. Equipages are very numerous; the esplanade (the Hyde Park of India) is a place of great resort, the evening drive being esteemed indispensable. The rich native families, who now assimilate in the splendour of their houses and equipages to the English, are of very recent origin, and owe their wealth and consequence to the commercial facilities which the city affords. In 1698, the seat of the East India Company's factory was removed from Hooghly to Calcutta, previously to which Calcutta was an inconsiderable village surrounded with jungle. In 1756, an attack was made on the English factory by the Nawab of Moorshedabad, and 146 Englishmen were shut up in the "black hole," of whom 118 died before morning. In 1757 the fort was retaken, and has since been demolished.

CALIFORNIA, the most westerly of the U. S., North America, bounded N. by Oregon, E. by Utah and New Mexico, S. by the Mexican territory of Lower California, and W. by the Pacific. Cap. Sacramento. The state extends along the Pacific nearly 750 m. from S.E. to N.W., with an average width of 250 m. Area 188,982 sq. m., or nearly twice the size of Great Britain. P. (1850) 92,597, (1860) 379,994, of whom 23,348 were Chinese and Mexican half-breeds, and 14,555 Indians. The pop. has representatives from all parts of the world. In 1848 the United States acquired this territory by conquest and purchase from Mexico. In 1850 it was erected into a state, and admitted into the Confederation; it is composed of 43 counties. The country is mountainous; Mount Shasta, near N. end of the Sierra Nevada, the highest peak in the U. S. territory, has an elevation of 14,440 feet, and is snow-clad. The Sierra Nevada divides the state on the E. from the Great Basin, and the coast range: on the W., between these, there is a rich valley 500 m. by 75 m., with a warm climate and productive soil. The chief bays are San Francisco, Humboldt, Monterey, Sir F. Drake, Santa Barbara, and San Diego. Principal rivers, the Sacramento and San Joaquin, with their tributaries. Chief lakes, Tulare, Clear, Owen, Goose, and Honey. There are many artesian wells in the state. The climate is very varied, but on the whole W. of the coast range very windy, with a surplus of rain during winter, and very little during summer. In the S. the heat is intense, with little rain. In 1864 there were 76 miles of railway open. In the valleys the soil is very productive, yielding figs, dates, sugar, tobacco, wheat, rye, rice, coffee, cotton, and fruits. The vine is successfully cultivated. More than two million vines have been planted; and in 1860, 157 cars of wine were exported. Minerals are important, and comprise coal, granite, marble, diamonds, iron, lead, copper, quicksilver, silver, and gold, which last is found in abundance, and was accidentally discovered in 1848 in New Helvetia, on the banks of the Sacramento. The value exported from San Francisco in 1857 was estimated at 14,000,000l., and the entire yield of gold to 1st July 1862, 136,000,000l. The timber trade is important, and there are 388 saw-mills in the state. The fauna comprises the grizzly bear, Californian lion, silver fox, elks, wild horses, horned cattle, squirrels, etc., but the furred animals are driven to the Sierra Nevada. Birds and fishes of all kinds are in abundance. Exports (1862), corn, quicksilver, wool, timber, silver, etc., to the value of 355,846l. Imports cottons, linens, woollens, iron, earthenware, beer and ale, apparel, jute, hardwares, wine, bags, coals, spirits, etc., to the value of 375,462l. Number of public and private schools in the state (in 1861), 892; total children in attendance, 38,092. The judiciary comprises a supreme court, with one chief and two subordinate judges, elected by the people for six years, besides district and county courts. The government consists of a governor, a senate of 40, and a house of representatives of 80 members, and the state sends two representatives to Congress. It has a lunatic asylum, two hospitals, a penitentiary, and an institution for deaf, dumb, and blind. Shortest sea route to Land's End, England, 12,236 sea miles. Average time by sailing vessel, 122 days.

CALIFORNIA (GULF OF), OR SEA OF CORTEZ, an arm of the Pacific Ocean, between lat. 23° and 32° N., lon. 107° and 114° W., separating the peninsula of California on the W. from Sonora and Sinaloa (Mexico) on the E. Length 700 m., breadth 40 to 100 m. Its W. coasts are abrupt, and offer few places of shelter; E. coasts low. The tide is little felt, and in many respects it resembles the Adriatic. It contains numerous islands, and at its N. extremity it receives the rivers Colorado and Gila. The vills. Loreto, La Paz, and Guaymas are on its shores. It is noted for its pearl fishery.

CAMARGUE (LA), an island of France, dep. Bouches-du-Rhône, formed by the two arms of the river Rhône, at its mouth. It is quite flat; soil composed of mud banks, arid sand, or bare gravel beds, alternating with salt marshes and lagoons, from 2 to 7 feet above the sea, resembling the borders of the Nile. The mirage occurs during the heats, as in the deserts of Africa, and it is the resort of the ibis, pelican, and flamingo. The ground is so impregnated with salt that the water is brackish. The sea is excluded by dykes, and the waters of the Rhône are used in irrigation, to counteract the effects of the salt. The banks of the Rhône are fertile, yielding wheat and wine; the lower parts are pasture ground, on which are sheep and cattle, and wild horses. The island is divided into 9 comm. and has several lagoons.

CAMARIÑAS, a marit. town of Spain, prov. and 43 m. W.S.W. Coruña, on the N. side of the Bay of Camariñas, on which it has a harbour. P. 1440.

CAMAROONS MOUNTAINS, Africa, Upper Guinea, form a parallelogram between lat. 4° 20' and 3° 57' N.; lon. 9° 1' and 9° 25' E. The country is thinly populated and quite uncultivated. Having every range of climate, from a mean of 78° Fahr. in the lower regions, to frost and snow in the upper, it is admirably adapted for a sanitarium. The principal peaks, Albert and Victoria, are enormous craters, the former 13,119 feet above the sea. The palm-oil tree and cocoa-nut grow wild, the antelope and eagle abound. Victoria mission station, at the foot of the mountain on Amba Bay, was founded 1858. The Camaroon river skirts the mountains on the E., and enters the Bight of Biafra in 4° N., 9° 40' E., by a large estuary. Cape Camaroon is on an isl. in the estuary. Camaroon is on the Portuguese Camarão, a shrimp.

CAMASTRA, a town of the isl. Sicily, prov. and circ. Girgenti. P. 1067.

CAMBAY, a seaport city of India, cap. of a small territory in the prov. Guzerat, at the head of the Gulf of Cambay, 230 m. N. Bombay. Pop. about 10,000. It has a curious subterranean Jain or Buddhist temple. Trade has declined, owing to the progressive shallowing of the Gulf; it still, however, exports cotton, grain, ivory, and articles in bloodstone and carnelian, its manufs. of which are in high repute. The Gulf of Cambay lies between lat. 21° 5' and 22° 10' N., and lon. 71° 50' and 72° 40' E. Length 80 m.; breadth 25 m. Receives the rivers Narbada, Dhadar, and Mahi from the E., the Saburmutte from the N., and the Bhadar from the W.

CAMBO, a vill. of France, dep. Basses Pyrénées, arr. and 9½ m. S.S.E. Bayonne. P. 1467.

CAMBODIA, CAMBOJA, or MA-KONG, a river of Asia, rises in the Chinese prov. of Yun-nan, about lat. 27° 40' N., traverses the rich valley which separates the countries of Anam on the E., from Siam and Cambodia on the W., and enters the Chinese Sea by many mouths. Little is known of its upper course, but on the S. border of China, 800 m. direct from its mouth, it is, during the rains, 1600 feet wide, and in many places very deep. In its lower course its banks are low and sandy, and it annually inundates its valley.

CAMBODIA or CAMBOJA (native Khmer), a maritime country of S.E. Asia, bounded S. by the Gulf of Siam, S.E. by Lower Cochinchina, N. & N.W. by Anam and Siam; length S.W. to N.E. 270, breadth 150 m. In the time of its splendour it extended from lat. 8° 50' to 14° 50' N.; between lon. 102° and 108° E.; but it has long been in decadence through encroachments of Siam and of Anam, to which latter state it is now tributary. The country is flat, and in many respects resembles Egypt, being watered by the Cambodia, which enters it from the N.E., and below Udong is met by the great river from the Tale Sab lake. This vast sheet of water, during the five rainy months of the year, covers an area which took three days to traverse; it is in the form of a violin, and at its N. end is crowned by high mountains. Near its centre is a great mast, marking the boundary between Siam and Cambodia. It swarms with fish, and there are thousands of pelicans and cormorants on its shores. Chief products, timber, tobacco, pepper, ginger, sugarcane, and especially cotton and gums. The mountains contain gold, copper, argentiferous lead, zinc, and iron ore; but there is no industry, the people being oppressed by the mandarins. Its pop. is now estimated at not more than a million, many of whom are Chinese and Malays. The former power and populousness of the country is attested by splendid ruins of vast pagodas. Its present cap. is Udong, on the W. bank of the Cambodia river, near the ruins of an anc. citadel; it is surrounded by walls and palisades.

CAMBON, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Loire-Inf., arr. and cant. Saveny. P. 4560.

CAMBRIA, a co. of the U. S., North America, in S.W. central part of Pennsylvania. Area 670 sq. m. P. (1860) 29,155. Surface mountainous, irregular, and broken, traversed by deep ravines, and covered with forests. Yields wheat, oats, and butter. It has iron-works, saw, grist, wool-carding mills, and tanneries. Coal and iron are plentiful. The co. is traversed by the Pennsylvania Canal and Portage Railway, which connect at Johnstown, and by the Central Railway. Cap. Ebensburg.—II. a township, New York, co. Niagara, 22 m. N.N.E. Buffalo. P. 2366.

CAMBRIDGE (anc. Granta), a parl. and munic. bor. and market town of England, cap. co. Cambridge, and seat of one of the English universities, on both sides the Cam, and on the Great Eastern Railway, 57 m. N.N.E. London. Ac. 3470, which includes 14 par., and extra-parochial dist. of the university. Pop. (1851) 27,815; (1861) 26,361. Principal buildings connected with the town, St Mary's and Trinity churches, St Sepulchre's, a grammar school, a national school, an hospital, theatre in the suburb of Barnwell; shire-hall, town-hall, and gaol; a union workhouse, a house of correction, and house of industry, founded in 1628 by Hobson, the eccentric carrier. Cambridge has no manufs., but carries on a trade by the riv. with Lynn, in corn and coals. Divided into 4 wards, and governed by a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors. It is the seat of co. assizes, bor. and co. quarter-sessions, and petty-sessions, weekly on Friday. [BARNWELL.] Cambridge (independent of its university) sends 2 members to H. of C. Reg. elect. 1875. It gives the title of Duke to George, Prince of the royal blood. The University of Cambridge, supposed to have been founded in the 7th century by Sigebert, King of East Anglia, consists now of 16 colleges and 1 hall, as follow:—St Peter's College or Peterhouse, founded in 1257; Clare College, 1326; Pembroke College, 1347; Caius College, 1348; Trinity Hall, 1350; Corpus Christi College, 1351; King's College, 1441; Queen's College, 1446, by Margaret of Anjou, and re-founded by the consort of Edward IV.; Catherine College, 1475; Jesus College, 1496; Christ's College, 1505; St John's College, 1511; Magdalen College, 1519; Trinity College, 1546; Emmanuel College, 1584; Sidney Sussex College, 1596; and Downing College, 1800. Principal edifices connected with the university are the senate-house, the public schools, library, observatory, Pitt press or university printing-office, and Fitzwilliam museum. The principal edifices belonging to the colleges are the chapels of King's College and Jesus College, the hall and library of Trinity College, and a magnificent chapel now in course of erection by St John's College, from the designs of Mr G. G. Scott. Each college or hall is a body corporate, internally governed by its own statutes, and maintained by the endowments of the several founders and benefactors. The government of the university, so far as legislation is concerned, is vested in the senate, a body composed of those members of the several colleges who have taken the degree of M.A., or any higher degree, and who have professed themselves bona- sic members of the Church of England. The executive government is vested in the chancellor (at present the Duke of Devonshire), the vice-chancellor, high steward (at present Earl Powis), commissary, proctors, and other officers, and an elective body called the council of the senate. The council of the senate originate all measures proposed to the senate. The number of members on the boards at present (1864) is 7922, of whom 5004 are members of the senate. The statutes by which the university is now governed were approved by the Queen in council in July 1858, and many important changes, tending to make the constitution of the university more liberal, were then introduced. Classics and mathematics, moral and natural science, form the curriculum; but the highest rewards of the university are bestowed for proficiency in the two former. Candidates for university honours rely more on the teaching of private tutors for instruction than on that of the professors. The income of the university is about 12,000*l.* a-year. That of the colleges in the aggregate amounts to a little more than 200,000*l.* per annum, of which sum upwards of 20,000*l.* is bestowed in scholarships and exhibitions. The university sends 2 members to the House of Commons, who are chosen by the senate. Reg. electors (1864) 5184.

CANADA, a British colony of N. America, extending in a triangular form from Gaspé Point, in the Gulf of St Lawrence, lon. 64° W., to the shores of Lake Superior, about lon. 90° W., and between lat. 42° and 50° N.; bounded N. by the Hudson Bay territory; S. by Lakes Huron, Erie, Ontario, the St Lawrence, New Brunswick, and the U. S. of New York, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine; and W. by the N.W. shores of Lake Superior. Length 1275 m., breadth 200 to 400 m. Area 357,822 sq. m., including the island Anticosti. Pop. (1861) 2,506,755, of whom 1,896,091 belonged to Upper Canada, and 1,110,664 to Lower Canada. The inhabited or settled portion covers about 40,000 sq. m. The country, divided by the Ottawa river into the provs. of Upper and Lower Canada, was united in 1840, though differing in laws, manners, and customs. The former is divided into 42, and the latter into 60 counties; cap. Ottawa, on river of same name, with 14,669 inhabitants. The upper prov., or Canada West, has a level surface, except in the W., where an undulating plateau, stretching from S.W. to N.E., forms the water parting between Lakes Huron and Superior. The upper prov. is watered by streams flowing S. to Lakes Erie and Ontario; the principal rivers are the Thames, flowing into Lake St Clair, and the Ouse, which enters Lake Erie. The Niagara separates the peninsular portion of S.W. Canada from the state of New York on the E. Lower Canada, or Canada East, is characterized by picturesque scenery; it is traversed from N.E. to S.W. by the Green mountains, 4000 feet high, on the S. of the St Lawrence, and the Watchitsh mountains, between Hudson Bay and the Gulf of St Lawrence. Canada is wholly embraced in the basin of the St Lawrence, that river forming, in part of its course, the boundary between Canada and the state of New York. Of its tributaries, the principal are, on the N., the Ottawa, which flows S.E. and joins the main stream above Montreal; the St Maurice or Three Rivers, which flows S. and joins it 70 m. W. of Quebec; and the Saguenay from Lake St John. On the S. side of the St Lawrence the chief affluents are the Richelieu (the outlet of Lake Champlain), St Francis, and Chandiere. Besides the great lakes Superior, Huron, Erie, and Ontario, which have an aggregate area of 63,000 sq. m., the surface of the country is covered with sheets of water connected by numberless small streams. Climate excessive. Mean annual temp. at Toronto 44°, July 67°, Jan. 23°·7; but at Stratford, in the interior of Upper Canada, 1182 feet above the sea, the temp. ranges from 78°·5 to 6°·2; fall of rain 32 inches; rainy days 105; total depth of snow 80·4 inches; but the dryness of the air, and the absence of high winds, greatly mitigate the cold of winter, and render the climate salubrious and conducive to longevity. In 1861 the number of acres cultivated in Upper Canada was 6,051,619, yielding 24,620,425 bushels wheat, 21,220,874 bushels oats, 18,206,959 bushels turnips, and 15,325,920 bushels potatoes. The live stock numbered 377,681 horses, 1,015,328 cattle, 1,170,225 sheep, and 776,000 pigs. In the same year there were in Lower Canada 4,678,900 acres under tillage. Until recently, farming was carried on without any of the scientific systems introduced by agriculturists in England or Scotland, there being no rotation of crop, the fields on getting exhausted being abandoned. By the emigration of scientific agriculturists, and the formation of agricultural societies, a great change has taken place, the abandoned fields are being reclaimed and judiciously treated, and a different and better kind of stock introduced. The chief agricultural products of the country include wheat, oats, barley, pease, potatoes, butter and cheese, beef, pork, mutton, and wool, besides hemp, flax, tobacco, maple sugar, timber, and fruit. About 30,000,000 cubic feet of timber, in a rough state, were exported in 1862, besides 400,000 square feet of sawed timber. In 1860 the revenue of the colony was 1,499,000l., the debt 11,971,000l., and the imperial expenditure for civil and military purposes 211,596l. In 1861, 1844 vessels of an aggregate tonnage of 775,820 tons arrived, and the customs duties amounted to 881,632l. Exports (1862) corn, timber, skins, ashes, butter, petroleum, cheese, bacon, etc., to the value of 6,572,430l. Imports, cottons, woollens, linens, iron, apparel, tea, hardwares, coals, cotton, indigo, coffee, rice, wool, wine, sugar, currants, cloves, salt, etc., to the value of 2,757,859l. Minerals comprise iron, lead, tin, copper, silver, gold, marble, and lithographic stones, together with peat, petroleum, and asphalt; but hitherto no coal has been discovered. Wild animals include the bear, wolf, beaver, fox, otter, lynx, and wild cat. Birds consist of swans, the Canada goose, turkeys, ducks, snow owls, and many varieties of smaller birds. The fisheries on the coasts, lakes, and rivers are highly important. In 1861 the population, according to race and religion, was as follows:—Inhabitants born in the country, 1,917,777, of whom 1,037,070 were of British origin, 880,607 of French origin, and 12,711 Indians.

In 1858 there were in West Canada 12 colleges, 121 grammar schools, 3866 common schools, and 255 private schools; making a total of 4254 educational establishments in operation, with 306,626 students ad pupils, and costing the country 303,200l. In Canada East the number of schools in the same year was 2985, attended by 156,872 pupils; this number includes 2 colleges, 10 superior schools, and 170 secondary: the total contributions for these amounted to 91,879l. The press is advancing rapidly; the journals are unstamped, and there is no duty on paper or advertisements. There are 20 newspapers in East, and 30 in West Canada; some of these are daily papers, and several of those in East Canada are entirely in the French language. Canada is peculiarly inviting as a field for emigrants, the soil being fertile and easily cultivated, with facilities for commerce on the rivers and lakes almost unbounded. There were (in 1863) 1876 miles of railway in operation, independent of the Grand Trunk extension to Portland, besides several excellent roads and canals opening up the interior. Postal communication is everywhere complete, the most distant hamlet having its post-office; while the electric telegraph passes through every town, the total number of miles being now 4046. Land is easily attainable; there being 2,460,000 acres for sale in Upper Canada, and 4,540,000 acres in Lower. Crown lands in Lower Canada can be purchased at from 30 cents to 1 dollar per acre, according to situation, the purchase-money being payable in five yearly instalments from the date of purchase. In Upper Canada the cost of land is 2s. per acre, the purchase-money being payable in five yearly instalments. The colonial government will allot land without purchase, in either province, to the extent of 100 acres, to persons of 18 years of age and upwards, who have never received a grant of land from government, on giving security that they can support themselves till a crop be raised. The British and American Land Company sells its land in Lower Canada at from 8s. to 12s. per acre, and requires interest only for the first six years, and then allows four years for the payment of the principal. The Canada Company sells land on the S.E. shore of Lake Huron, at from 2s. to 24s. per acre, according to vicinity to the lake. Agricultural labourers are in demand, and wages are high. In 1851, the sum of 15,515l. 16s. 10d. was remitted through the Canada Company alone by emigrants to their friends in the British Islands and Germany, to enable them to reach Canada. The number of emigrants that arrived in Canada in 1862 was 22,358 persons, of whom 14,401 were from the United Kingdom, 2516 from Germany, 5289 from Norway and Sweden, and 152 from other countries. This country was discovered in 1499 by J. and S. Cabot, and acquired by the British between 1759 and 1763. In 1774, by an Act of the British Parliament, a legislative council of 23 members was appointed to assist the governor. In 1791 two legislative chambers were constituted; and after several years of much discontent in the colonies, and at last an open rebellion in 1837-8, a bill was passed in 1839 to reunite the two provinces under the administration of a governor-general, a legislative council of not less than 22 elected by the Crown, and a legislative assembly of 42 members from each prov. elected by the people, the electoral qualification being the possession of a 40s. freehold. In 1793 Canada was made an English bishopric. There are now bishops of Quebec, Montreal, and Toronto, besides Roman Catholic bishops, and Protestant dissenting ministers of all denominations.

CANARIES or CANARY ISLANDS, Fortunate Insulæ, an archipelago, Atlantic Ocean, 60 m. from the W. coast of North Africa, between lat. 27° 40' and 29° 25' N.; lon. 13° 25' and 18° 16' W. They consist of 7 principal islands and several islets, arranged in the following order from E. to W.:—Lanzarote and Fuerteventura, with the islets Graciosa, Montaña Clara, Alegranza, and Lobos; Gran Canaria, Tenerife, Gomera, Palma, and Hierro (Ferro). Area of the whole estimated at 1758 sq. m. P. 234,046. The coasts of the islands are rocky and abrupt, and they are covered with mountains, of which the Pico de Teyde in Tenerife is 12,182 feet above the sea. The islands consist of a continuous series of volcanic mountains, which rise in a circular form from the coast around a principal crater; the greater part of them are deeply indented, and in the form of a cone reversed. The surface is volcanic, presenting a succession of mountains and plains, extinct craters and fertile valleys. There are no rivers, but numerous torrents. The tropical heat is moderated by the Atlantic breezes, and the climate is equable. Winter is almost unknown on the coasts. The annual mean temp. at Santa Cruz is 71°-15; winter 64°-85, summer 76°-68. The rainy season commences in November and continues till February. During the dry season, from April to October, the weather is uniformly fine, and the trade winds blow steadily. E. and S.E. winds are the scourge of these islands; blowing over the burning plains of Africa, they carry an intensely hot and dry air, which destroys vegetation and induces disease. In 1704 the Canaries suffered severely from this cause. Fresh water is so scarce, especially in the S. islands, as in some seasons to compel the inhabitants to emigrate; and in 1864 the drought was so excessive as to threaten a famine. The vegetation of these islands is not less interesting than their geological formation. [Johnston's Physical Atlas.] The chief productions are wine, oil, grain, the sugarcane, and fruits of all kinds; and the surrounding seas abound in fish. The principal foreign trade is carried on with the U. S. of North America, England, and Hamburg, and there is considerable commerce between the different islands. Exports (1862), cochineal, wine, barilla, etc., to the value of 164,754*l.* Imports, cottons, woollens, linens, coals, apparel, hardwares, tobacco, guano, flax, earthenware, etc., to the value of 152,766*l.* The goat is valuable; dogs are numerous, and all the domestic animals of Europe are easily naturalized. The camel & the ass are used as beasts of burden. Among birds are the vulture, bustard, pheasant, wood pigeon, red partridge, blackbird, linnet, and the thistle finch or canary bird. The inhabitants are of European origin, mostly Spaniards, and the prevailing religion is Roman Catholic. Since 1493 these islands have belonged to Spain, of which kingdom they form a prov., governed by the same laws as the peninsular portion. Las Palmas, in the island Gran Canaria, is cap. of the prov. of the Canary isls.

CANTERBURY, a city, bor., and co. of itself, Engl., and its metropolitan see, within co. Kent, on Watling Street, & on the Stour, 55 m. E.S.E. London, or 81 by the S.E., & 60 by the London, Chatham, & Dover line of railway. Lat. 51° 16' 48" N.; lon. 1° 4' 31" E. Alt. 38 ft. Ac. 3240, which includes 14 pas. P. (1861) 21,324. Its cathedral, erected in 12th & two following centuries, on the site of the first Christian church built in Saxon England, is in the form of a double cross, with a central and two western towers, and presents a union of almost every style of Christian architecture. The choir is large, and the pavement of the chapel of the Holy Trinity is worn into hollows by the knees of the pilgrims who here worshipped at the shrine of Thomas à Becket; and here are monuments of Henry IV. and his Queen, the Black Prince, and many prelates. A chapter-house and a library are attached to the cathedral, under which is a crypt, used as a French Protestant church since the reign of Elizabeth. The parish churches are mostly ancient, but possess little interest. The grammar school was founded by Henry VIII. There are numerous other endowed schools; an infirmary, guild-hall, gaol, house of correction, workhouse, exchange, theatre, and philosophical institution, with a library and museum, cavalry, infantry, and artillery barracks, and military hospital. In the vicinity are extensive nurseries, woollen mills; but the chief business is the export of agricultural produce, especially of hops. Petty-sessions, Thursdays. Quarter-sessions are also held. Canterbury sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. elect. 1853. The archbishopric was founded in 597. The archbishop is "primate of all England," and metropolitan, first peer of the realm next to the royal family. He crowns the sovereign in Westminster Abbey, and his ecclesiastical province includes all England except the six northern counties. His seats are Lambeth Palace and Addington Park. Income 15,000*l.* a year. Amongst other privileges has that of conferring degrees in divinity, law, and medicine.

CANTERBURY, one of the prov. govts. of New Zealand, occupying the centre of South island. P. (1863) 21,000. Chief towns, Christchurch and Lyttleton. A railway from Canterbury to its port, Lyttleton, was opened in 1864. The province is level on the E., & rises to elevated mountains on the W. These, which form the magnificent snow-clad range of the Southern Alps, from which enormous glaciers descend, were explored by Dr Haast, the state geologist, in 1861–62–63. The mountains are pyramidal in form, and many rise above 10,000 feet. The highest peak is Mount Cook, 30 m. from the W. coast, and 12,460 feet above the sea. Between the mountain systems there are passes 6500 to 8000 feet high, and from these rapid torrents fall into the ocean on the W. coast. Between Mount Cook and Mount Stokes there is a cleft or col 7000 feet above the sea, through which alone it is possible to reach the W. coast, and which will be made available for ponies. The valleys on both sides of the range are densely clothed with forest trees, and the scenery is described as truly grand and sublime. The most prominent of the snow-clad peaks, besides Mount Cook, are Mounts Murchison, Darwin, Brewster, Forbes, Tyndall, and Keith Johnston.

CANTON (Chinese Sang-ching, the "city of perfection"), a city and seaport of China, cap. prov. Quangtung, on l. b. of the Canton or Pearl (Choo-keang) river, about 70 m. from its mouth, in the China Sea. Lat.  $23^{\circ} 6' 9''$  N.; lon.  $113^{\circ} 15'$  E. Mean temperature of year,  $69^{\circ} 9'$ ; winter,  $54^{\circ} 8'$ ; summer,  $82^{\circ}$ , Fahr. Pop. (1863) estimated at 1,210,000, including boat pop. 230,000, & Ho-nam suburb 100,000. With its suburbs it occupies the N. bank of the river, extending inland nearly to a row of heights commanding it on the N. and N.E., but between which and the city is a broken ravine; to the S. is an alluvial plain, formed by the delta of the river. The city is enclosed by a wall of brick, on a foundation of red sandstone, 6 or 7 m. in circumference, and entered by 12 gates; and it is unequally divided by another wall, with 4 gates, into the old and new town, in the former of which are the residences of most of the high officers, and the arsenal. The walls are in some places mounted with cannon. On the N. heights are four forts, and on some islands in the river are other forts, now in ruins, termed the "Dutch" and the "French folly." Various detached batteries also guard the approach to the city by the river. The suburbs are nearly as large as the city itself; on the S. they stretch all along the river side. Formerly at their S.W. corner were the foreign hongs or European quarters, which were destroyed by fire during the bombardment of the city in 1857, and the site abandoned by foreigners after the cessation of hostilities, when they took up their abode on the Ho-nam side of the river. Under the treaty of Tien-tsin a new site was fixed upon in the Sha-meen suburb about 3–4ths of a mile up the river. Here a triangular piece of ground is separated from the mainland by a wide canal, faced with masonry, crossed by 3 stone bridges, having a strong stone bulwark along the river's bank for upwards of half a mile, where trees have been planted and a promenade formed by the resident British. The ground is well laid out, but to the present date (1864) only a few merchants have built hongs on the site. Several canals intersect the city, crossed by stone bridges. The residences of the wealthy, built within a walled court, are richly furnished; those of the middle classes, in which about one-third of the pop. resides, have no courts; and those of the lower orders, which are numerous, along the banks of the canals and in the suburbs, are mud hovels, in which from 10 to 20 persons are sometimes crowded in one apartment. A large part of the pop. resides on the water. The river is crowded with vessels and rafts of all kinds, on many of which large numbers of poultry are reared. Upwards of 120 temples are enumerated in and adjacent to Canton. [HO-NAM.] Within the old city are two other temples, and a Mohammedan mosque; and outside of the walls, on the N. side, an immense five-storied temple. The city has several hospitals, a grand hall for examination of candidates for literary honours, with 7000 student dormitories, 14 high schools, & about 30 colleges, three of which have each 200 students. Manufs. various and extensive, and the shops are filled with articles of Chinese workmanship. Great numbers of individuals work in wood, stone, iron, and brass. The markets abound with all kinds of live stock for food, including dogs, cats, owls, etc., suitable only for Chinese consumers; but provisions of all kinds are abundant and cheap. Canton is well supplied with water from reservoirs and springs. Until 1843, all the legitimate foreign trade of China was conducted at Canton. Since then the opening of the northern ports has seriously checked the trade of this southern emporium, especially those on the Yang-tse river, whence the greater part of the teas are exported which were formerly shipped at Canton. Tea is the great article of foreign export; next silk and silk piece goods, precious metals, cassia, sugar, porcelain, and other articles. The importation of opium into Canton and other ports is tacitly permitted, though not legalised. The exports in 1845 amounted in value to 6,622,726*l.*, and the imports to 3,046,942*l.* Far from increasing, the internal trade is less now (1864) than it was 20 years since. On the 26th of May 1841, the Chinese troops were defeated, and the river defences and the hill forts above Canton captured by the British, who, however, did not enter the city, a truce having forthwith been agreed to. In 1847, and again in 1856, for similar reasons, the British destroyed the forts, bombarded and took the city, and sunk 23 war-junks. In 1858 the allied British and French forces took military possession of Canton as a material guarantee for the payment of indemnity money for war expenses, and evacuated it in August 1862, under friendly relations with the Chinese government. CANTON River (Chinese Choo-Kiang or "Pearl River"), is the lower part of the Pe-kiang, which has a navigable course for 300 m. further inland, through the provs. Quang-tung and Kiang-see, in China, and is joined about 4 m. W. of Canton by a branch from the Si-kiang. Opposite the city it is crowded with vessels, and deep enough for ships of from 800 to 1000 tons; but foreign ships come up only as far as Whampoa, about 15 m. lower, loading and unloading by means of native boats. At about 40 m. below Canton, it is called the Boca Tigris, and widens there into a large estuary, termed the "Outer Waters." All around and below Canton it forms a multitude of islands, including Ho-nam, Whampoa, French, Dane, Junk, Ty-cock-tow, Anung-hoy, Chuenpee, Tiger island, on which rice is grown and numerous forts are placed. It was blockaded by the British in 1857. [BOCA TIGRIS.]

CAPE ANN, a promontory of the U. S., North America, Massachusetts, lat. (N. light) 42° 38' 21" N.; lon. 70° 34' 48" W.

CAPE BRETON, an island of British North America, at the E. extremity of Nova Scotia, from which it is separated by the Gut or Strait of Canso, from 1½ m. to ½ m. broad; mostly between lat. 45° and 47° N.; lon. 60° and 61° 30' W. Extreme length from N. to S. 100 m.; extreme breadth from E. to W. 85 m. Area 3120 sq. m. P. (1861) 63,063, the majority of whom are descendants of emigrants from Scotland, but many are of French origin, while a few are from Ireland. The principal religious denominations are Presbyterians & Roman Catholics, who are nearly equal in numbers. It is irregularly shaped, and indented with bays; almost intersected by an arm of the sea, called the Bras d'Or, 50 m. long. From this gulf to the Atlantic a canal is being constructed; the total length is to be 2300 feet. Surface uneven. Granite, limestone, and primary slate prevail; and gypsum, salt, and coal are found. The land to the N. has an elevation of 1800 feet. There are fresh water lakes and rivers, but not navigable. Salt springs on the coast. The climate is varied. Mean annual temp. 43°, the extremes being 24° below zero and 95° above; fall of rain 41 inches; number of rainy days 411. Vegetation is rapid. Maize, wheat, rye, and other grains are raised; but the corn produced is insufficient for home consumption. In 1861 the number of acres alienated was 813,543, while 777,438 remained open for settlement. Principal exports are pine, oak, birch, and maple timber to Great Britain; fish and coal to the United States and West Indies. Cape Breton was first colonized by the French in 1712; it was ceded to the British by the treaty of Paris in 1763; it formed a separate colony from 1784 to 1819, but in the latter year it was incorporated into the province of Nova Scotia, and sends two members to its House of Assembly. It is divided into 4 counties—Richmond, Inverness, Victoria, and Cape Breton. Principal towns, Sydney, the cap., Arichat, and Port Hood. [NOVA SCOTIA.]

CAPE CHARLES, a headland of the U. S., North America, Maryland, on the N. side of the entrance to Chesapeake Bay.

CAPE CHARLES, a headland of British North America, Labrador, immediately N. the Strait of Belleisle. Lat. 52° 25' N.; lon. 55° 10' W.

CAPE CLARENCE, a headland of Barrow Strait, Baffin Bay, in lat. 73° 53' N.; lon. 90° 10' W.

CAPE CLEAR, Astrium Prom., the most S. headland of Ireland, Munster, co. Cork, on an island, having an area of 1506 ac. P. 819; with a lighthouse on an abrupt cliff 455 feet above the sea, lat. 51° 26' N.; lon. 9° 29' W.

CAPE COAST CASTLE, a town and fort of Africa, cap. of the British settlements on the coast of N. Guinea. Lat. 5° 5' 25" N.; lon. 1° 12' 45" W. The principal fort is situated on a granite rock which projects into the sea; near it are two small outposts, Fort William and Fort Victoria. P. 10,000. The soil in the vicinity is wooded, but deficient in water; climate damp and unhealthy. Mean temp. of year 78°; Feb. 80°·5, Sept. 73°, Fahr. Exports, palm-oil, gold-dust, maize, and tortoise-shell. The settlement is under a president and council, assisted by subordinate officers.

CAPE COD, a peninsula of the U. S., North America, Massachusetts, in the Atlantic. Lat. of lighthouse, 42° 2' 23" N.; lon. 70° 3' 55" W. It is hook-shaped; 65 m. in length by 8 in average breadth; and encloses Cape Cod Bay.

CAPE COLONY, or CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, an important colony of Great Britain, occupying the S. part of the peninsula of Africa, between lat. 26° 30' & 34° 51' S.; lon. 16° 20' & 28° E.; bounded S. and E. by the Indian Ocean, Kafirland, Natal, and the Drakenberg mountains, W. by the Atlantic Ocean, N. by the Orange and Vaal Rivers. Length

W. to E., from the mouth of the Orange River to the Drakenberg mountains, 700 m.; average breadth, 400 m. Area, including the Orange River Free States (though now abandoned), but not Natal, which is now an independent colony, about 168,000 sq. m. P. (1856) 267,096. The country is formed by terraces, rising in stages from S. to N. The chief mountain chains are the Zwarte Berg, 4000 feet high, Nieuveland and Sneeuw-Bergen, in which last is the Spitzkop or Compass-berg, 9000 feet in elevation, and the Drakenberg, between the Orange Free State and Natal, estimated at 10,000 feet, and forming the culminating point of all South Africa. The summits of this range are covered with snow for upwards of four months in the year. Table Mountain, at the S.W. extremity of the colony, in the Swellendam range, is an insulated flat-topped mass, 3582 feet in height, the S. point of which forms the promontory of the Cape of Good Hope, 1000 feet high, in lat. 34° 22' S.; lon. 18° 29' E. It was discovered by Diaz, a Portuguese admiral, in 1486, and called by him "Cape of Storms." Cape Agulhas is the southernmost point of Africa, in lat. 34° 51' S.; lon. 20° 2' E.; it gives its name to an extensive sand bank, and to an important current which flows from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean. The most extensive plain is the Great Karroo, an arid tract upwards of 200 m. in length and 50 in breadth, between the Zwarte Berg and the Nieuveland mountains. The only passage from one terrace to another is through the Kloofs, narrow and difficult mountain gorges; some of these have been made passable for wheeled carriages, but the roads in general are very bad. The principal bays are (from W. to E.) St Helena, Table, False (the W. part of which forms Simon Bay), St Sebastian, and Algoa. Streams are numerous, but rapid, mostly dry in summer, and unfit for navigation. The chief are, on the E. and S. coast, Great Kei (between the colony and Kafirland), Keiskamma, Great Fish, Sunday, Camtoos, and Breede; on the W. the Elephant or Oliphant; and on the N. several small streams tributary to the Orange. [ORANGE or GARIEP.]—Climate mild and healthy, but very dry; rains irregular, often falling in torrents on the coast, but rare in the plains of the interior. Snow falls only in the mountains. December and January are the warmest, and June and July the coldest months. [CAPE TOWN.] The colony is remarkably free from epidemic disease, & favourable to Europeans labouring under pulmonary complaints, yet few of the inhabitants attain an advanced age. Soil fertile, where sufficiently watered, but the general appearance of the country is sterile & monotonous. The arid steppes or *Karoo*s of the interior are destitute of trees, and covered with an ephemeral vegetation after heavy rains only. The flora of the colony is of a peculiar and varied character, which is more remarkable for variety and beauty of the flowers than for their uses. There are no large forests, but the heath tribe attains here its perfection, and numbers about 400 species. The most valuable plant is the aloe, the produce of which has been exported in one year to the amount of 27942; a species of soda, found in the Karroo, is employed in the manuf. of soap, and candles are made from the covering of the wax-berry. European grains, and the fruits of temperate and tropical regions, have been successfully introduced. Corn is raised more than requisite for consumption, and the cultivation of the vine is an important source of wealth; a good white wine is produced in the interior, but only the small vineyard at the foot of Table mountain produces the celebrated liqueur called Constantia. Cattle-rearing is the chief branch of rural industry; and the introduction of the merino sheep has rendered the rural trade of the colony important. The coasts abound with fish. Gold has been discovered in the basin of the Orange; and, near its mouth, copper mines, yielding 60 to 70 per cent. of pure metal. Some of the wild animals of Africa are still met with, but the larger species decrease in proportion as colonization extends. The lion, hyena, buffalo, hippopotamus, and zebra, are occasionally seen; the rhinoceros is rare, and the elephant is driven beyond the boundary. The ostrich is found on the plains, and the eagle in the mountains. Snakes are numerous. The commerce of the colony is extensive; the ports are Cape Town and Simon Town in the W., and Port Elizabeth in the E. Exports (1862): wool, skins, copper, ostrich feathers, cotton, ivory, hides, aloes, &c., to the value of 1,517,851l. British and foreign imports: apparel, cottons, woollens, leather, iron, hardwares, beer and ale, soap and candles, arms, machinery, timber, linens, glass, &c., to the value of 2,034,558l. The colony consists of an E. and a W. province, and these are divided into 21 districts, viz., Cape, Paarl, Stellenbosch, Caledon, Swellendam, George, Beaufort, Worcester, Tulbagh, Malmesbury, and Clanwilliam, in the Western Province; and Uitenhage, Somerset, Albany, Victoria, British Kaffraria, Queenstown, Cradock, Graaf Reynet, Colesberg, and Albert, on the Eastern. The capitals have the same names as the districts, except Albany, the cap. of which is Graham Town, the seat of gov. for the Eastern Province; and Alice, the cap. of Victoria. Stellenbosch is the chief wine, and Swellendam, the principal corn growing district; the others are appropriated to grazing. The government is vested in a legislative council, consisting of 5 official members—viz., the governor, the second in command of the forces, colonial secretary, attorney-general, and treasurer—and 5 unofficial members, inhabitants of the colony, nominated by the governor; its debates are published. The only educational institutions of importance were, till 1839, the South African College and the South African Institution, at Cape Town; but a comprehensive system, embracing primary and classical schools, was then instituted by the government. In many of the districts are missionary schools, supported by different Protestant societies. The English language alone is used in courts of law, but Dutch is also taught in government schools. The money in use is exclusively British, and Dutch weights and measures are nearly superseded by the English. The Dutch founded a colony at the Cape in 1652, which was taken by the British in 1795. The boers or farmers, descendants of the original Dutch settlers, have lost much of their ancestral industry and cleanliness; they are affectionate in their family relations, strict in religious observances, but prejudiced and illiterate. The peace of the colony is frequently interrupted by incursions of the Kaffirs and other savage tribes on the frontiers. Shortest sea route to Liverpool 5998 m.; average time by sailing vessel 63 days, by steam 36 days.

CAPE-DA-ROCA, the most W. headland of Portugal, prov. Estremadura. 20 m. W.N.W. Lisbon, with a fort and a lighthouse.

CAPE DIAMOND, a headland of Lower Canada, terminating the promontory on which the city of Quebec stands. At the junction of the St Charles and St Lawrence rivers, Lat. of observatory 33° 56' S.; lon. 18° 28' 7" E.; 32 m. S.E. "the Cape." Mean temp. of year 64°-7, mean of highest temp. 68°-8, do. of lowest 54°-7 Fahr. Annual rainfall 24 inches. P. 25,000. It is laid out in the Dutch style, with canals in the principal streets; the houses are flat-roofed and painted or white-washed, with terraces in front, public buildings, a royal marine and a magnetic observatory, commercial exchange, churches & chapels. The educational establishments are the South African College and the South African Institution; a public library, and a valuable botanic garden. There are several banks, and numerous industrial establishments. Cape Town was constituted a bishopric in 1847. Table Bay is capacious, but is exposed to W. winds, which from June to August produce heavy swells; its N.W. point is marked by two lighthouses. The first Parliament elected by the colonies under the constitution granted by the Queen, was opened here 1st July 1854.

CAPE VERD, the most W. cape of Africa, in the Atlantic Ocean, between the rivers Senegal and Gambia. Lat. 14° 43' N.; lon. 17° 13' N. Its name is derived from a group of enormous baobab-trees which crown its summit.

CAPE VERD ISLANDS, a group in the Atlantic, belonging to Portugal, situated 320 m. W. of the Cape, between lat. 14° 45' and 17° 13' N.; lon. 22° 45' and 25° 25' W. The archipelago consists of the following 10 isls.—Sal, Boavista, Mayo, Santiago (St James), the largest, Pogo, Brava, Grande, Rombo, S. Nicolão, and S. Luzia; and 4 islets, Branco, Razo, S. Vicente, and S. Antão. Area estimated at 1650 sq. m. P. (1860) 89,310. (1863) 85,400; the white pop. in the whole archipelago is to the coloured as 1 to 20. The surface of the isls. is in general mountainous, and the volcano of Fogo is 9157 feet above the sea. The soil is various but fertile; the scarcity of water is the cause of frequent and severe distress, which induced a famine in 1864. Climate very hot, but tempered by the sea breezes; mean temp. of May and Aug. 70°-9, April to Sept. 70°, during the other months 65° Fahr. The mornings and evenings are cool, and dews abundant. Chief vegetable products, maize, rice, and French beans. Coffee, introduced in 1790, has completely succeeded; the cotton shrub is indigenous; indigo grows wild, and tobacco is cultivated in some of the isls.; tropical fruits are abundant. Orchill, the trade in which was formerly monopolized by the government, and yielded an annual revenue of 24,000*l.*, decreased in value so rapidly, after the trade was thrown open in 1837, as to require new restrictions, which were put in force in 1844. Cattle are reared; goats and pigs numerous. Asses and mules are the beasts of burden. Fowls are abundant. Whales abound in the neighbouring seas, and are fished by the English and Americans. Amber is found on all the coasts, which are frequented by turtle. The natives are quiet and docile, but indolent; the Portuguese language is corrupted into a jargon called lingua creola. Agriculture and the preparation of salt are chief branches of industry; linens, pottery-ware, soap, and leather, are manufactured in some of the isls. Exports (1861), nuts, orchal, etc., to the value of 1180*l.* Imports (1862), coals, cottons, iron, etc., to the value of 18,487. These isls., together with the Portuguese possessions on the continent of Africa, near Cape Roxo, constitute the province of Cape Verd, the cap. of which was removed from Porto Praya to Mandello in the isl. St Vincent, in 1838. The prov. is under a governor-general, who exercises both civil and military power. The Roman Catholic is the only form of worship.

CAROLINA, two towns of South America.—I. Venezuela, dep. Orinoco, on the Arui, 50 m. S.W. Angostura.—II. a town, dep. Cundinamarca, prov. Antioquia.

CAROLINA (NORTH), one of the U. S., North America, in the south part of the Union, mostly between lat. 33° 50' and 36° 30' N., lon. 75° 45' and 84° W., having N. Virginia, W. Tennessee, S. Georgia and South Carolina, and E. the Atlantic. Length 430 m.; breadth 180 m. Area about 45,000 sq. m. P. (1860) 992,622, of whom 331,059 were slaves. The coast is bordered with sandy islands; a marshy flat extends from the sea inland S. for 60 or 80 m., intersected by creeks and estuaries, the principal of which are Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds, having between them the great Alligator swamp. N. of this, extending into Virginia, is the great Dismal swamp. The cultivated portion of the state is flat and gently undulating, and in some districts fertile; its W. part comprises a portion of the Appalachian mountain chain, which here rises in several peaks to upwards of 6000 feet in height. Principal rivers, the Roanoke, Chowan, Neuse, Tar, Cape Fear, Pamlico, and Yadkin. The climate of the low swampy plains is unhealthy; on the elevated parts of the state the air is pure and salubrious. Rice, maize, and cotton are the chief crops in the lowlands; wheat, rye, barley, oats, and flax are produced in the interior uplands; tobacco, maize, and various fruits, including grapes, are raised in every part. The pitch pine is of prevalent growth, and affords tar, turpentine, pitch, and wood for export. Hogs are reared. Principal mineral products, iron, copper, and a little gold. In 1862, 943 m. of railways had been completed in this state. Owing to the want of harbours, most part of the foreign trade is conducted through the adjacent states. Exports chiefly rice, cotton, and pine timber. In 1860 the total value of annual product was 14,450,000 dollars. The first permanent settlement made in N. Carolina was in 1650; it and S. Carolina were called the country of Albemarle. The constitution (adopted 1776) consists of a senate of 50, a house of commons of 120 members, and a governor, elected biennially by the people. It is divided into 79 cos., and sends 8 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Raleigh the cap., Wilmington, Fayetteville and Newbern.

CAROLINA (SOUTH), one of the U. S., North America, in the south part of the Union, mostly between lat. 32° and 35° N., lon. 78° 24' and 83° 30' W., having E. the Atlantic, and on other sides North Carolina and Georgia. Length 200 m.; breadth 125 m. Area 24,500 sq. m. P. (1860) 703,708, of whom 402,406 were slaves. The coast is bounded by a chain of isls. Surface low and marshy for 100 m. from the coast; which region is succeeded by one of sand-hills; country further inland is undulating, fertile, and salubrious, rising at the N.W. extremity into the Appalachian mountain chain, which, in Table mountain, reaches to an elevation of 4000 feet. Chief rivers, the Great Pedee, Santee, Edisto, and Savannah. Products are cotton, maize, and rice; the islands bordering the coast produce the famous sea-island cotton. Maize, wheat, and other grains, short stapled cotton, tobacco, indigo, sugar, and silk, are the other crops. Live stock numerous. Value of annual products in 1860, 6,800,000 dollars. There is the Sanlee and other canals in this state; and 659 m. of railway were opened. Public revenue, 600,292 dollars.

The first settlement was made at Port Royal in 1689. Constitution of South Carolina, formed in 1790, consists of a senate of 45 members, elected for four years, and a house of representatives of 124 members, elected for two years; with a governor and lieutenant-governor, elected by both houses of representatives, for two years. It is divided into 29 dists., and sends 5 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Columbia the cap., Charleston, and Georgetown.

CAROLINE, co. U. S., North America, in E. part of Maryland. Area 310 sq. m. P. (1860) 10,390 free, 739 slaves.—II. co., in E. part of Virginia. Area 580 sq. m. P. 7792 free, 10,672 slaves. Surface hilly; soil various. Products, corn and tobacco, and it has flour, grist, and saw mills, and tanneries.—III. a township, New York, Tomkins co., 12 m. S.E. Ithaca. P. 2457.

CAROLINE ISLANDS or NEW PHILIPPINES (Spanish Carolinas, Nevas Filipinas), an archipelago of Oceania Micronesia, between the Philippines, the Mariannes, the Marshall isls., and Papua, extending from lat. 3° 5' to 12° N., and including the Pelew isls. (which, from the character of their inhabitants and the history of their discovery, form part of the archipelago), extend from W. to E. over a space of 2000 miles. P. (1862) estim. at 23,580. They are divided into numerous groups, the W. most of which, the Palaos or Pelew, consists of seven large and many small isls., all of coralline formation, flat, and affording no secure anchorage. N.E. of these is the group of Yap, the chief isl. of which is elevated, and its mountains contain the precious metals. E. of Yap is the group Egoi, nearly all of which are low coralline isls., fertile, and partly inhabited. The other principal groups are called Siniavine, Lutke, Mortlock, Enderby, and Hogoleu. Ulalan, the E. most of the group, in lat. 5° 19' N., lon. 163° 6' E., is 24 m. in circumference, and has abundant supplies of water, fruit, and fish. The climate of the Carolines is mild and agreeable. The inhabitants live almost on the produce of their fishing; the greater portion are of the Malay race, and are excellent seamen. The Carolines were discovered by the Spaniard, Lopez de Villalobos, in 1543, and they were so named in honour of Charles II. These isls. nominally belong to Spain, and form part of the government of the Philippines, but the Spaniards have no settlement on any of them.

CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS or KRAPACKS (German Karpathen), form the N.E. portion of the mountain system of Southern Europe, and extend, nearly in the form of a semicircle, the concavity of which is towards the S.W., over a space of 800 m. from the Danube, near Presburg on the S.W., to a point on the same river, near Orsova, on the S.E., or between lat. 44° 30' and 49° 40' N.; lon. 17° and 26° E., enclosing the whole of the left basin of the Danube in Hungary. They consist of a series of mountainous groups, connected by elevated plateaus. Their chief divisions are on the W., the little Carpathians extending N.E. between the Waag and the March; the Jablunka mountains to the E. of these; the western or proper Carpathians extending E. and S.E. from lon. 19° to 25° E., and comprising the groups of Tatra, Lomnitz, and Bisztra; and the E. Carpathians, on the S.E. of Transylvania. The culminating point is Mount Butschetje in Transylvania, 9528 feet, the Lomnitzer spitze, in the Tatra group, being 8779 feet in elevation; the lower peaks vary from 200 to 3000 feet. The principal passes are Tergova, on the route from Orsova to Temeswar; Vulcan, in the valley of the Strehe; Rothen-Thurm, in the valley of the Aluta; Türzburg, on the route from Bukharest to Kronstädt; Ujitos and Gymes, between Moldavia and Transylvania; Borgo, between Bistritz and Bukovina; and Jablunka, on the route from Presburg to Cracow. Although the Carpathians do not attain the elevation of the Alps or the Caucasus, yet they derive a peculiar grandeur from the rugged nature and pyramidal form of their summits; their steepest sides are generally towards the N. Granite forms the basis of the group, and this is interspersed with gneiss, horn-blende, and a variety of volcanic substances. They are rich in gold, silver, copper, lead, mercury, and rock salt; their valleys produce excellent grain, and their sides are covered with forests.

CASPIAN SEA (Mare Caspium or Hyrcaianum), an inland sea or salt-lake of West Asia, and the largest of its kind known on the globe, between lat. 36° 40' and 47° 20' N., lon. 46° 50' and 55° 10' E., enclosed by the doms. of Russia, the Kirghis, Khiva, and Persia. Length N. to S. about 700 m.; greatest breadth about 270 m., though the average does not exceed 200 m.; & in some places it is not more than 150 m. across. Estim. area 140,000 sq. m. Coast-line irregular, especially on the E. side, where are the gulfs of Mertvoi, Kenderlinsk, and Balkan. Opposite the last, the peninsula of Apsheon (celeb. for its naphtha) stretches into it on its W. side. The S. coast is almost unbroken, and bounded at a short distance by lofty mountains; its N. shores are low and marshy, or composed of sandy flats, and broken into countless islets, especially about the mouth of the Volga. Depth of water along the coast inconsiderable, & even several miles from the shore it rarely exceeds 12 ft.; but in the centre it varies from 120 to 300 ft., & in one place no bottom was found at 480 fathoms. Its surface is now ascertained to be 85 feet below the level of the Black Sea, and the difference is supposed to be augmenting by the decrease of the Caspian; a phenomenon remarkable on account of the vast quantity of water which it receives from the Volga, Ural, Tereh, Kur, and other rivers, but due probably to its extensive evaporating surface. The water of this sea is not nearly so salt as that of the ocean. It has no tides, and in winter its N. part is covered with ice. Sturgeons, salmon, sterlets, and seals are abundant, and many fisheries are carried on in this sea, the trade of which is nearly monopolized by Astrakhan. Guriev, Derbend, and Baku are the other towns on its coasts. There are three series of canals connecting the Caspian with Lake Ladoga. In 1863 the Russian fleet stationed in the harbour of Ashuradah, on an island, close to Persian shore, comprised 8 war steamers and 5 war sloops, besides merchant steamers and transports. The Caspian was known to the Greeks and Romans. Strabo derives its name from the Caspii, who inhabited its S. coast.

CASTILE (Span. Castilla), a former kingdom of Spain, which occupied the central table-land of the peninsula, composed chiefly of tertiary formation, and elevated 2300 feet above the sea. In the 10th century this region was a country, of which Burgos was the capital; at the commencement of the 11th century it was erected into a kingdom, and was successively extended by the addition of the kingdoms of Leon, Estremadura, and Andalusia. The marriage of Ferdinand, king of Aragon, with Isabella of Castile, in 1474, united under one sceptre all the Christian states of the Peninsula; and the conquest of Granada, in 1492, led to the establishment of the kingdom of Spain. From the great importance of Castile, as the centre of the kingdom, the appellation "Castilian" is often used to indicate Spaniards in general.

CASTILE (New), (Span. Castilla-la-Nueva), an old prov. of Spain, forming the S. portion of the anc. kingdom of Castile; cap. Madrid. It is now divided into the provs. of Madrid, Toledo, Ciudad-Real, Cuenca, and Guadalaxara. This region forms part of the central table-land of Spain, bounded N. by the mountains of the Sierra Guadarama, S. by those of the Sierra Morena, and traversed by several minor chains, which separate broad plains or valleys. Its rivers comprise the upper courses of the Tagus, Guadiana, the Guadalquivir, the Segura, and the Xucar. Climate dry and healthy. From the elevation of surface, the winters are cold. In summer the heat is great in the valleys. Winds are violent and very dry; and in summer the air is loaded with dust. Soil fertile, but suffers from drought; water is scarce; often for several months in succession it does not rain, and the average annual fall for the table-land is only 10 inches. Agriculture is in a neglected state, yet grain is raised sufficient for consumption. Oil and wine abound in many parts of the prov.; the most celebrated wine is that of Val-de-Penas, in the prov. Ciudad Real. Saffron, madder, lint, hemp, and fruit are cultivated. The rearing of cattle is an important branch of industry; horses are of an excellent quality; the sheep of the Sierras Cuenca and Molina supply the celebrated merino wool. The mountains of the Sierra Morena afford the richest supply of minerals in the kingdom. The chief mines are those of Almaden. The prov. affords excellent marble and rock salt, and contains numerous mineral springs. Principal manufs. cloth, silk, cotton, and paper.

CASTILE (OLD), (Span. Castilla-la-Vieja), an old prov. of Spain, comprising the N. portion of the anc. kingdom of Castile, and forming the new provs. of Burgos, Valladolid, Palencia, Avila, Segovia, Soria, Logroño, and Santander. The S. portion of the territory is traversed by the Sierra Guadarama, and the N. by the mountains of Asturias, while in the centre the Sierra Oeca separates the basins of the Ebro and the Douro. The climate is more moist than in New Castile, and is mild in the plains. Timber is rare, except on the mountains; soil fertile, and yields abundance of grain in the plains, and wine, madder, oil, lint, and fruits are produced. Pasturage is excellent, and cattle and sheep are extensively reared. The merino wool of Segovia is considered next in quality to that of Leon. The mountains supply useful minerals, and there are many mineral springs. Manufs. unimportant; cloth is still the principal, next to which are leather, paper, glass, and stoneware. Corn, madder, and wool are the principal articles of export.

CAUCA, a river of South America, Granadian Confed., rises near the frontier of Ecuador, flows N. between two Cordilleras of the Andes, and joins the Magdalena 25 m. N.W. Mompo, after a course estimated at 500 m. Chief tributary the Nechi. On it are the towns Popayan, Antioquia, and Caceres. It waters a highly productive region, and gives name to a dep. having 68,300 sq. m., and 330,331 inhabitants.

CAUCASUS, an extensive mountain chain, between Europe and Asia, of which it forms the boundary by closing the isthmus which separates the Black from the Caspian Sea. It commences in a tongue of land called the peninsula of Taman, which separates the E. part of the Sea of Azov from the Black Sea, in lat. 45° 10' N., lon. 36° 45' E., and runs S.E. in the direction of the coast to lat. 48° N., where it turns first E., and then S.E., till it terminates in the peninsula of Apscheron in the Caspian Sea. Lat. 40° 20' N.; lon. 50° 20' E. Extreme length 750 m.; breadth 65 to 150 m. The culminating point of the chain, Mount Elburz, in lat. 43° 20' N., lon. 48° 30' E., rises between the sources of the rivers Kuban and Terek, to an elevation of 18,493 feet. The next in elevation is Mount Kazbek, in lat. 42° 50' N., lon. 44° 20' E., 16,545 feet; but the mean elevation of the other peaks is much less. With few exceptions, the mountains are covered with perpetual ice and snow. The snow-line is 11,000 to 12,000 feet. W. of Elburz the chain decreases rapidly in height, and on the shores of the Black Sea it is only about 200 feet in elevation. E. of the central mass it maintains a considerable elevation till it approaches the Caspian Sea. A contrefort, which leaves the central mass in lon. 44° E., runs S. between the rivers Kur and Rion, and connects the Caucasus with the mountains of Armenia. On the S. the Caucasus descends gradually by a succession of terraces, while on the N. it is more abrupt and precipitous. The mountains are either flat or cup-shaped. The existence of glaciers in the Caucasus is uncertain, and there are no lakes of importance; hence the region in general is not well watered. The chief rivers are, on the N. of the chain, the Terek and Kuban, the former of which flows E. to the Caspian, and the latter W. to the Black Sea; and on the S. the Rion, a tributary of the Black, and the Kur, of the Caspian Sea. The climate is healthy although tempests are frequent, and the higher plateaux are exposed to burning heats in summer. The soil is fertile in the valleys, and the mountains are covered with timber; every species of grain is abundant, and is cultivated to a height of 8300 feet, while the lower valleys produce cotton, rice, lint, tobacco, indigo, and wine. The auroch, a species of domestic ox, is still found in the mountains;—the forests teem with fur-bearing animals, and the rivers abound in fish. The greater part of the mountains are of secondary formation, interspersed with volcanic rocks. The chain contains no active volcanoes, but is frequently visited by earthquakes. Minerals comprise copper, lead, iron, sulphur, and coal. The only pass which has been rendered practicable for carriages is that from Mozdok to Tiflis by the valley of the Terek. The principal pass on the E. is that of Derbend. The Caucasus mountains have been celebrated from the highest antiquity; the people who inhabit them have almost always maintained their independence, and though nominally subject to Russia, many of the tribes still maintain a constant struggle against her authority. The principal tribes are the Circassians, Ossetes, Lesghians, Abasians, Georgians, Misheges, and Mingrelians. The Circassians and Georgians are considered the finest types of the human family; and the Caucasian race is the name by which the white population of Europe, America, and part of Asia, Australia, and Africa, is distinguished.

CAUCASUS, or the CAUCASIAN REGION, is the name given to those portions of the Russian empire situated near the Caucasus mountains. These are, in Europe, Cis-Caucasia, comprising the provs. of Stavropol, Circassia, and Daghestan; and in Asia Trans-Caucasia, or the countries situated between Turkey, Persia, the Caspian and the Black Seas, and the range of the Caucasus mountains, comprising the provs. of Abasia, Mingrelia, Imeretia, Georgia, Shirvan, and Russian Armenia. Area 170,790 sq. m. Pop. of the Lieutenancy of the Caucasus (1858) 4,257,704.

CAUCASUS or CISCAUCASIA (NOW STAVROPOL), a former gov. of Russia, at the N.E. declivity of the Caucasian mountains, cap. Stavropol. It is bounded N. by the gov. of Astrakan and the country of the Don Cossacks, E. by the Caspian Sea, S.W. by Kabarda and Circassia, and W. by the Cossacks of the Black Sea. P. (1858) 562,317. The country is flat, and in great part covered with salt marshes. Climate warm; soil fertile on the banks of the rivers, and the steppes afford good pasturage. CELEBES, a large island, Asiatic Archipelago, mostly between lat.  $1^{\circ} 50' N.$  and  $5^{\circ} 30' S.$ , lon.  $119^{\circ}$  and  $125^{\circ} E.$  It is of most irregular shape, consisting of four peninsulas uniting in a common centre (no point being further than 50 m. from the sea), from which they extend N.E. and S.; separated by the Bays of Gorontalo, Tolo, and Boni. Estimated area 73,000 sq. m. Pop. supposed to be between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000. Surface greatly diversified, & well watered by three rivers and many streams. Climate healthy. The centre is mountainous; highest part, Lampo Betang mountain, 7000 feet in elevation. There are volcanoes in the N. and S. peninsulas. Minerals are gold, iron, and salt. Extensive grassy plains in the low grounds. Timber is not generally plentiful, but in one part is a large forest. Products, rice, maize, cassava, tobacco, and cotton, with yams, sago, sugar-cane, and excellent breeds of horses and other live stock. The pop. is composed of distinct races; the Turajas or Horafores of the centre being the supposed aborigines. The coasts are inhabited by the Bughis, a maritime commercial people. Imports (1862) cottons, coals, woollens, beer and ale, earthenware, spirits, arms, etc., to the value of 7919*l.* The Mohammedan Bughis collect the native produce of its E. islands, which they exchange at Singapore for calicoes, iron, musket-gunpowder, & British and Indian manufactures. They have also established flourishing colonies in Flores, Sumbawa, and other islands. The women manuf. cloths and variegated mats. The Badjus, or "sea-gipsies," are a people constantly residing on board their vessels; they carry on an active trade with the Chinese, whose ports they visit with cargoes of cotton, birds' nests, trepang, sharks' fins, tortoise-shell, and pearl. Turtles abound on the coasts. Celebes is divided into about 13 independent states, the most powerful being the confederacy of Boni in the S. peninsula. In most of them the government seems to be a limited monarchy. The Dutch have possessed settlements here since they expelled the Portuguese in 1660. They divide the isl. into the gov. of Mangkasser, embracing the two S. peninsulas, the residency of Menado in the N., and Ternate on the E. Their principal establishments are Menado, near the N.W., and Kema, near the N.E. extremity of the island, both declared free ports in 1849, and Mangkasser on the W. coast, near the S. extremity of the island, where formerly stood the native town of Macasser, the harbour of which was made a free port in 1847. The pop. subject to the Netherlands government amounts to about 279,000. In 1811, the British took possession of these Dutch settlements, but they were again restored in 1816.

CETTE, a comm. and fortified seaport town of France, dep. Hérault, cap. cant., at head of railway from Beaucaire, between the Mediterranean and the lagoon of Thau, 17 m. S.W. Montpellier. Lat. of lighthouse 43° 23' 48" N.; lon. 3° 42' 16" E. P. (1861) 22,438. It is defended by a citadel, and its harbour is formed by two piers with a breakwater in front, defended by two forts, one on either pier. A broad and deep canal, bordered with quays and warehouses, connects the port with the lagoon of Thau, and with the Canal-du-Midi, and canals leading to the Rhône, by which means Cette has an extensive traffic with the interior. Imports Benicarlo wine from Spain, for mixing with French wines for the English and other markets. Exports wine & brandy, almonds, verdigris, salt, syrups, liqueurs, soap, perfumery, and glass wares. It has shipbuilding yards, and an active oyster and anchovy fishery.

CEUTA, Septa, a seaport town of Africa, belonging to Spain, in Morocco, opposite and 17 m. S.S.E. Gibraltar. Lat. (Mount Aho) 35° 54' 4" N.; lon. 5° 16' 6" W. P. 8200. The castle occupies the highest point of a mountain (the anc. Abyla, and one of the Pillars of Hercules—the rock of Gibraltar being the other) at the extremity of a peninsula. On the narrow isthmus at the opposite extremity is another strong citadel; and between the two is the town, with a cathedral, several convents, hospital, convict establishment, and schools. It is well supplied with water. Ceuta is the chief of the Spanish presidios on the African coast, the seat of a royal court, and the residence of a military governor and financial intendant. It was taken from the Moors by John, king of Portugal, in 1415, and has permanently belonged to Spain since 1640.

CEVA, Ceba, a town of North Italy, prov. and 26 m. from Coni, circ. Mondovì, cap. mand., on the Tanaro. P. 4233. Manufs. of silk twist, and trade in cheese called Robiole.

CEVARESE, a vill. of North Italy, Venetia, prov. and dist. Padua. P. 1932.

CEVENNES, Cebennæ Montes, a range of mountains in the S. of France, commencing at the Canal-du-Midi, W. of Carcassonne, and running N.N.E. to the Canal-du-Centre. They are divided into the S. and N. Cevennes; the former, under the names of the Montagnes Noires, Espinouse, Garrigues, and Lozère, extend over 120 m. to Mont Lozère, where the chain forms a group called Monts du Gévaudan, which sends several contreforts to the N. and S. The N. Cevennes take the name of Monts Vivarais, Lyonnais, Forez, and Charolais. The Loire, Allier, Lot, Aveyron, Tarn, Hérault, Gard, and other rivers, have their sources in these mountains, the S. portions of which contain extinct volcanoes, and present many deep fissures in the higher valleys. The highest points are Mezin, 5794 feet, and Lozère, 4884 feet above the level of the sea. The Cevennes served as a retreat for numerous Frotestant families after the revocation of the edict of Nantes.

CEVENNES, an old country of France, which formed the N.E. part of the government of Languedoc, cap. Mende. It was divided into Gévaudan, Velay, Vivarais, and Cévennes Proper. The Cévennes Proper is now included partly in the dep. Gard, and partly in Aveyron.

CEVIO, a vill. of Switzerland, cant. Ticino, dist. Val-Maggia. P. 602.

CEYLON (Singala, anc. Taprobana), an island of British India, separated from the S. extremity of Hindostan by the Gulf of Manaar; between lat. 5° 55' and 9° 51' N.; lon. 79° 42' and 81° 55' E. Shape pyriform, with apex to the N. Extreme length from N. to S., 271 m.; greatest breadth 137 m. Area 24,700 sq. m., or including its dependent islands, 25,742 sq. m. P. (1862) 1,919,487. Nearly four-fifths of the surface consist of undulating plains, slightly diversified by offsets from the mountain system which entirely covers the remaining fifth. In this stupendous mountain knot the highest elevation is Pedrotallagalla, 8280 feet, while Adam's Peak attains to a height of 7420 feet. The E. shore is frequently bold and rocky, with deep water. The W. shore is uniformly low, and indented with bays and inlets. The N.W. part of the island is almost joined to the neighbouring peninsula by the island of Manaar, from the west point of which a shoal stretches to the island of Rameseram, a dist. of about 30 m. [ADAM'S BRIDGE], leaving open only two navigable passages, that between Manaar and Ceylon, which has not more than four feet water at ebb tide, and the narrow passage of Paumben between Rameseram and the mainland, which is six feet in depth at high water. The island is chiefly formed of gneiss, especially in its southern portions, while coral and marine deposits prevail in the more level parts of the northern plains, but these are entirely destitute of fossils. Dolomite is found in the interior, and hornblende rock forms the summit of Adam's Peak. Among the most abundant minerals are iron, manganese, plumbago, nitre in caves, salt, anthracite, and kaolin; while gold, tin, nickel, cobalt, and the rare metal tellurium, exist in smaller quantities. Quicksilver has recently been discovered near the capital, and the island has for ages been celebrated for its precious stones, among which are the sapphire, topaz, garnet, amethyst, ruby, but no diamonds. The climate is hot and moist. Mean annual temp. at Colombo, on the W. coast, 75°-92, but at Trincomalé, on the E. coast, 81°-4 Fahr. The mean temp. of each month of the year is very nearly the same; annual rainfall at Colombo, 90°-75 inches; snow is unknown, but hail falls occasionally in the Kandian mountains, and water-spouts are frequent. At Trincomalé the rainfall is only 40 inches, while the temp. varies from 70° Fahr. in Jan. to 94° in June. The N.E. monsoon prevails from November to February, modified and interrupted by local circumstances; the S.W. monsoon from April to November. Rivers are numerous, especially on the W. coast, where there are ten of considerable magnitude. The largest is Mahawelliganga (the Ganges of Ptolemy), which has its origin in the highlands in the S., and flowing N.E., enters the ocean at Trincomalé, after a course of 134 miles. The soil is chiefly ferruginous and quartzose in the S., and sandy and calcareous in the N., with a small proportion of vegetable matter; yet vegetation is most luxuriant; and irrigation appears to have been anciently practised from artificial tanks and lakes still existing. Rice, cotton, tobacco, pepper, coffee, and various vegetables are raised, but the soil is ill adapted for systematic cultivation. The cocoa palm, Palmyra palm, talipot, jack-tree, tamarind, bread-fruit, and cinnamon, are among the most useful trees; the last is cultivated to a great extent, but some recent attempts to cultivate extensively the sugar-cane appear to have failed. The indigenous flora, which includes about 3000 flowering plants, is now regarded as approximating more closely to the vegetation of the Malay Archipelago than to that of the Deccan. The zoology of the island is much the same as in S. India, but many of the larger animals of the latter are unknown in Ceylon, and some species are peculiar to the island. The mammalia include 6 quadrumana, 35 carnivora, 18 rodentia, 1 edentata, 3 pachydermata, and 1 cetaceous animal. There are also 320 species of birds, about 88 of which are peculiar to Ceylon; 109 reptiles, of which 19 are peculiar; and upwards of 600 fishes, all of which were captured at one spot. [COLOMBO.] This is the largest collection of fishes known to exist in one locality. Marine testacea are also extremely numerous, while insects swarm in myriads. The elephants, once very abundant, are getting much more rare: for the most part they are destitute of tusks. Little is known of the aboriginal inhabitants of Ceylon, though in all probability they were of the same stock as the original inhabitants of the Deccan, now represented by the hill tribes of the Concan, Canara, Gujerat, & Cutch, for not only are the early superstitions of both peoples identical, but there is also a marked affinity between the Singhalese now spoken in the centre and S. of Ceylon and the Tamil, Telingu, and Malayalim of the Deccan, none of which is of Sanscritic origin. At present the inhabitants of Ceylon are similar in all respects to the Hindoos of the neighbouring continent, and consist of Singhalese, inhabiting the interior and parts of the coast, Malabars, Mohammedans, Europeans, and Negroes. Ceylon was known to the Greeks in the time of Alexander, as also to the Romans. The Portuguese formed a settlement at Colombo in 1517. They were superseded by the Dutch in 1658; and at the close of the 18th century, the British, after various encounters with the Dutch and French, obtained possession of the stations on the coast; and finally, in 1815, at the invitation of the native chiefs, took possession of the whole isl. The government now consists of a governor & an executive council of five members, and legislative council of nine more, and six unofficial members, natives or naturalized subjects, and proprietors or principal merchants of the isl. The isl. is divided into five provinces, and these into districts, each with an agent and assistant. There are a supreme court, provincial courts, and magistrates. The island was constituted a bishopric of the English Church in 1846. There are besides clergymen of other denominations. Educational establishments have been formed chiefly by religious and missionary societies. In 1850 there were 84 government schools, with a large attendance of scholars. Buddhism was almost the universal creed of the natives, and still remains so. The Singhalese language is peculiar to this island, but Tamul is spoken by the Malabars in the N., and by the Moormen dispersed through all parts of the island, and Indo-Portuguese by the descendants of the European settlers in many of the seaport towns. Pali is the language of the religion and literature of the Buddhists. The British government have formed many excellent roads throughout the island, and there is a canal and river communication between Colombo and Calpentin. The natives are ingenious workers in metals, and in manufactures of cordage, matting, and baskets. Revenue (1860) 767,000*l.*; imperial expenditure, 110,268*l.* The total strength for civil and military purposes in the same year was 2370 men. Exports (1862), coffee, cocoa-nut and other oils, cotton, cinnamon, coir-rope, plumbago, etc., to the value of 2,488,262*l.* Imports cottons, iron, coal, apparel, beer and ale, wine, woollens, hardware, earthenware, guano, spirits, paper, etc., to the value of 607,215*l.* The chief towns are Colombo the cap., Kandy, Trincomaldé, Point-de-Galle, Jaffna, Calpentin. Ceylon is now the central point for the Oriental mail packets. The mail which leaves Southampton every fortnight, via Alexandria & the Red Sea, touches at Ceylon, whence issue branch mails to Madras, Calcutta, Penang, Singapore, Hong Kong, and Australia. Shortest sea route to England, by "the Cape," 10,010 sea miles. Average time by sailing vessels 122, shortest 106 days.
