THE Compiler presents a brief statement of the origin of this MEMORIAL.

The elder sons of the late Judge FREDERICK WOLCOTT, of Litchfield, — J. Huntington Wolcott, of Boston, Frederick H. Wolcott, of New York City, and Charles M. Wolcott, of Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, — commissioned their kinsman, George Gibbs, Esq., of New York, after he had published his interesting “Memoirs of the Federal Administrations,” to compile some account of the descendants of HENRY WOLCOTT, of Windsor.

For this purpose he opened a correspondence with some branches of the Family, and examined some of the public records of Connecticut. He had made considerable progress, when, in the midst of his investigations, he decided on a removal to Oregon. I had been his constant correspondent, having been in a favorable situation to learn the early history of the Family, — which, indeed, I had already traced in part; and the gentlemen at whose instance he had commenced the work, desired me to take his papers and complete it. In assenting to this arrangement, I entertained no other thought than that of becoming jointly responsible with him for its execution. But in the development of a somewhat fuller plan, I had occasion to examine personally all original sources of information, and prepare an entirely new work, for which I had to assume the sole responsibility. In the record of his grandfather, it will be seen that I have quoted from his work, and have credited to it a few letters of which I failed to take copies when the manuscripts were in my possession; and occasionally, also, with his assent, have incorporated its phraseology with the narrative of that period.

It is proper that I should indicate the principal sources from which my materials were derived. There had fortunately been preserved, among some blank pages at the end of a folio ledger, bearing the date of 1691, an extended record, under the following title: "A Chronologie of the famely of the Wolcotts in New England." The original account had been continued, and embraced several generations. The principal additional entries had been made by Gov. ROGER WOLCOTT and Gen. ERASTUS WOLCOTT, through whose hands it had descended to the writer. Other family registers and memorials were examined, together with all the church, town, and probate records, which could be supposed to throw any light on the subject. For this purpose I personally visited and examined nearly every town and district in Connecticut and Massachusetts which had ever been the residence of any member of the Family; and an extensive correspondence was prosecuted for two years with the various branches scattered through the country. From these sources the genealogical portion of the work was compiled. It will be observed that it does not profess to bring down the family records in full to the present date,—not so fully, indeed, on account of the accumulation of historical matter, as our correspondence had developed them. The earlier generations, covering the obscurer periods, have been prepared with the utmost care and completeness. The later generations, whose members are thus enabled to trace their descent without our aid, are not fully presented; of the latest, only a few are given. It is my purpose, as soon as I can arrange them in a manuscript volume, to deposit in the Library of the New England Historic, Genealogical Society, Boston, the genealogical tables which I have gathered, and for which I have not found room.

For the biographical and historical portion, some items were gathered from state, county, and town records; but my main dependence was on the private papers of the Family. These were largely in our own possession, including the voluminous and invaluable papers of the late Gov. OLIVER WOLCOTT, Jr., since deposited with the Connecticut Historical Society. Many of an earlier date had been already gathered by that Society, to whom our thanks are due for the use of them. These had been principally collected and presented by Mr. Sydney Stanley, of Tolland, to whom the Family are under special obligations for the service. The whole, embracing several volumes, have been suitably bound by the gentlemen who projected this Memorial. A large collection of letters and papers left by the late Judge FREDERICK WOLCOTT, and which are as yet in the possession of the Family, have also been examined and drawn from.

From these we pass to the ancient deeds of the Wolcott Family, — its genuine antiquities, — most of them handsomely engrossed on parchment, with the original signatures and seals attached. One of them is notable as bearing the Great Seal of JAMES I., of the Stuart line, England. Through the wonderful artotype process, exact impressions of some of them have been taken, and in the following pages they speak for themselves. These documents, deposited in a small trunk which bore, in brass nails, the initials H. W., were the most valued of "the honored heirlooms" transmitted from the elder line of the Family through the daughters of the third HENRY WOLCOTT. They were held by some related family in Windsor, until by some fortune they came into the possession of the younger Governor Wolcott, through whom they descended to Mr. George Gibbs. The latter deposited them with the Connecticut Historical Society, Hartford, their final and natural resting-place. We insert here the handsome acknowledgment of their receipt, addressed to him by the Librarian, Rev. Dr. Robbins:—

DEAR SIR:

Hartford, April 13, 1848.

Your venerable small Trunk, with various Relics of ancient days, arrived in safety, and is disposed of as one of our most valuable deposits. You have obtained an ample reward for your persevering researches among the remains of your venerable ancestors. I consider no family of Connecticut as holding a higher reputation for the two centuries we have passed, and as more sure to be held in lasting remembrance, than the WOLCOTTS. This collection of valuable documents is received with gratitude as a sacred deposit, holden at all times subject to your disposal, and with a sacred regard to the conditions you have prescribed.

Your obliged friend

THOMAS ROBBINS.

This deed-chest, or trunk, is now (1880) in the possession of Henry Goodrich Wolcott, of the Seventh Generation, residing at Fishkill-on-the-Hudson. An exact picture of it is given on the page following his record, which closes our family registers. Artotype impressions of two of the valuable documents of which it was the ark are given in our work.

The historical department of the work might have been amplified; I have condensed my materials, but have not mutilated the quotations. I have scrupulously copied the original phraseology of the documents which I have used, holding that "the old style of composition, without the old mode of orthography to convey its meaning, is a falsification of the times of the original."

The gentlemen named as having instigated these researches had looked back from the scenes of their successful commercial pursuits and business enterprises to their early, rural home in Connecticut with filial veneration, and the desire to perpetuate some suitable memorial of a revered and honored ancestry. Sharing these sentiments and feelings, it gave me sincere gratification, as far as it depended on myself, to be enabled, providentially, to carry the project into execution, both from a conviction of the value of the proposed memorial, and from sympathy with the honorable motive which prompted its preparation; namely, "not a weak family pride, but a desire to rescue from oblivion the memories and the services of patriotic and godly men." As far as this result is accomplished by the work, it will be to its projectors and prosecutors its own reward.

It was thus compiled some thirty years since, with the expectation that it would then be issued from the press. Various causes interposed to prevent this; and now, after the lapse of another generation, — its projectors and its compiler being still spared, — it goes to the press under its original auspices. It has been carefully revised, and some Family Papers of historic interest have been added. The work may have lost some of the freshness which it would have had if printed when first compiled. The substance of some of its earlier pages I contributed to the “Congregational Quarterly” in 1859 (I. 141-150), under the title, “HENRY WOLCOTT AND HIS CHILDREN—A PURITAN FAMILY.” Some passages in it have been incorporated with Stiles’s miscellaneous “History of Ancient Windsor;” the Wolcott Genealogy given in the appendix of that work was condensed, though inaccurately, from a copy of this; and other passages have crept into other publications. But the loss in freshness is more than compensated by the greater completeness which has been gained; and though some who would then have perused it with special interest have passed away, to the few in each generation for whom it has been specially compiled its interest will increase and not diminish with the ages.

The moral effect of it, I cannot but hope, will be to unite the wide-spread branches of the Family in a closer sympathy; to awaken a general interest in the success of each member in every field of honorable exertion; and to strengthen in the hearts of all the sentiment that they have a common and sacred inheritance, and that if they are not to aspire to the renown of their ancestors, they must not fail to copy their integrity and worth. I never enter the quiet churchyard of Old Windsor, in which is garnered the dust of the first settlers of the colony, and look upon the monument which the filial piety of Griswold has chiselled in memory of HENRY WOLCOTT and ELIZABETH his wife, who left the green fields of England and crossed the dreary ocean,—they and their little ones, exiles from a home of affluence and ease, that they might found in the savage wilds of Connecticut the happy fortunes of our Family,—without many solemn, tender, and grateful reflections, holier far than any feeling of ancestral pride. Of a truth, “Children’s children are the crown of old men, and the glory of children are their fathers.”

It remains for me to add, that the gentlemen already named have lately performed almost the only service which, in the way of filial tribute to the Family, was possible in Connecticut, by renovating the monuments of our forefathers; and these will now, probably, endure for centuries to come. The spirit of emigration and dispersion has fallen upon the Family, and its original seats have been forsaken. The banks of the Connecticut River, where the early generations flourished, are associated with their memories alone. The elms which their own hands planted in Windsor and in Litchfield are broad-branched and majestic, but strangers to their name and lineage now dwell beneath their shadow. Not a trace of the Family now remains in Old Windsor, except in the churchyard; in the other Windsors scarcely a dozen can be numbered; and Litchfield has no living representative. "The shades under which our ancestors reclined and the streams by which they roamed are deserted by their descendants, and grass has grown up in the paths once trod by the masters in our Israel. There is one only gathering-place of the great and good which shall never be left desolate; only the shade of the tree of life shall be always refreshing; only the stream from the fountain of life shall flow on without end."

THE WOLCOTT ARMS.

CREST : A Bull's Head erased argent, armed or, ducally gorged, lined, and ringed, of the last.

MOTTO : Nullius addictus jurare in verba magistri.

BEARING THE NAME OF "WOLCOTT."

THESE arms, which are of great antiquity, are identical with the Walcott Arms, and indicate the historical identity of the families.

We have copies of the shield etched on the silver tankard and cup of Gov. Roger Wolcott (28), grandson of the first settler, and whose father was born in England, and engraved on the tombstone of Capt. Samuel Wolcott (42), of the elder line, who was contemporary with Roger; these were not, apparently, copied from each other or from books of heraldry, and they point to a traditional copy which has disappeared.

The chess-rooks were introduced early in the fifteenth century, through a knight, of whom it is recorded in the old Family Pedigree :—

Playinge at ye chesse with Henry ye fifte, king of Englande, he gave hym ye checke matte with ye rouke, whereupone ye kinge changed his coate of armes which was ye crosse with flower de lures, and gave him ye rouke for a remembrance.

"It seemes these Chess Rooks were at first called Rooks for being in defence of all ye rest : and therefore they stande in ye uttermost corners of ye Chesseboard as Frontier Castles. Kinge William ye Conquerour lost greate Lordships at this playe. And it might well become a Kinge, for therein are comprised all ye Stratagems of Warr or plotts of Civill State." ("Heralds' Visitation.")

The motto is a line of the Latin poet, Horace, and a literal rendering is, Accustomed to swear in the words of no master. The allusion is to the schoolboy practice of repeating a form of words after the teacher; and the idea, of course, is to rest one's faith on no man's assertion, to think and decide for one's self; in a word, to take nothing on trust.

We give an excellent picture of the arms, drawn by Somerby and engraved by Richardson.

THE GREAT SEAL OF ENGLAND.

ROYAL LICENSE OF ALIENATION OF GALDON MANOR.

THE preceding document is the one to which special reference has been made in the Preface, as having been issued during the Chancellorship of Lord Bacon — attested by his brother. Its Latin, in the old black-letter text, together with both sides of the Great Seal of King James, as will be seen, have been beautifully duplicated by Harroun & Bierstadt, of New York, by the artotype process. To decipher this Latin was, obviously, an achievement of patience and learning; and for its execution we are greatly indebted to two distinguished scholars in the faculty of the University of the City of New York, — Eben. A. Johnson, LL.D., Professor of Latin, and Henry M. Baird, D.D., Professor of Greek. With the exception of a single word obliterated in the original, we give both the Latin text and the English translation, as kindly furnished by these gentlemen.

It will be observed that this instrument gives the Somersetshire orthography of the name — WOLCOTT — which has prevailed in this country; though the spelling of all names, as is well known, was less definite formerly than now. Of the ancient Family letters in our possession, written in England, the signature, the seal, and the superscription of the same letter present the name in three different forms. The traditional pronunciation of the penultimate vowel is the same as in Wolf.

BACON.

The deciphering of the original paper above rendered into Latin and English was committed to Mr. Roger Wolcott, of Boston; and were we to give in detail the time and ingenious research which have been expended on the brief sentence (involving on one or two points a final reference to living authorities in England), it would at least illustrate the spirit of accuracy which, even in matters that will not attract the notice of the general reader, has presided over the Memorial. Among other satisfactory results is the positive information that the BACON whose name is attached to the instrument was not, as had been supposed, the Lord High Chancellor, but in all probability an elder half-brother. Under date of London, Nov. 25, 1880, Mr. William Hardy, Deputy Keeper of Records, writes to Mr. Wolcott : —

On the 21st of May, in the 16th year of James I., I find the enrollment of Bacon's appointment to the office of ingrossing such licenses (Patent Roll, 16 Jas. I., Part 23, No. 10). — "Rex 21 die Maii concessit Nathanieli Bacon gen̄ (generoso) the office of ingrossinge all licenses and pardons for alienations during life." The name "Nathaniel" induces me to think that he was probably connected with the family of Nicholas, the Lord Keeper, and his son Francis, Lord Chancellor. The Lord Keeper had by his first wife two sons, — Nicholas, the first baronet created by James I., and Nathaniel; by his second wife he had Francis, the Lord Chancellor.

THE FAMILY IN ENGLAND.

THE late Mr. H. G. Somerby, an antiquarian and artist, who devoted himself to investigations of this nature, was requested to make inquiries respecting the home of the family in England. As far back as can be definitely traced, Tolland in Somersetshire was their ancestral seat, and was the home of John Wolcott, the father of Henry; though branches of the family lived in the adjacent parishes. The Old Church in Tolland, which forms our frontispiece, engraved by Richardson, from a sketch by Mr. Somerby, is the one in which our ancestors, for generations, worshipped. Under date of May 4, 1849, Mr. Somerby writes to Mr. Frederick H. Wolcott, who was the first of the transatlantic branch, after an interval of two centuries, to make a pilgrimage to the spot, which his two brothers have since visited:—

Since I have been in London, I have had access to a large mass of manuscripts, lately brought to light, called the Subsidy Rolls, in which the names and places of residence of all those persons who were assessed from the time of Henry the Seventh are to be found. Although these papers are in a very mutilated state, and many of them illegible, still I had the good fortune to find the names of your family as far back as 1525, and learn that they then resided in Tolland. William and Thomas Wolcot are the names for the above year. I find that the name is invariably spelt Wol in Somersetshire, while in Shropshire, Lincolnshire, and other places, it is Wal.

July 6, 1849. — Since I wrote you, I have visited Tolland, and collected all that now remains relating to the Wolcott family. Unfortunately, the parish register of Tolland has not been preserved prior to 1706. . . . The parish of Lidiard St. Lawrence adjoins that of Tolland; and it seems, by referring to the parish register of Lidiard, that it was not unusual, two centuries ago, — neither is it at the present time, — for persons residing at Tolland to have their children christened at Lidiard. In the case of your Anglo-American ancestor, it is fortunate that it was so; for I find in the register, which dates back to 1573, the following entries:—

Henry y^e sonne of John Wolcott was baptized the VI. of December 1578.

John, son of Henry Wollcott was bap. 1st Oct. 1607.

Henry Wolcott & Elizabeth Saunders were married 19 January 1606.

. . . The parish church of Tolland is quite romantically situated, and retains its ancient characteristics. I made two drawings of it from different points, which I trust you will recognize. There are but two monuments in the church-yard, side by side. The most ancient contains no inscription: it is completely obliterated, in consequence of the stone being of so perishable a nature. There is no doubt, however, that it belongs to the Wolcotts, as it stands so near to the one with the following inscription:—

The body of JOHN WOLCOT.

mother of the saide JOHN WOLCOT

the 5th of Aprill 1637

There are no other grave-stones, either at Lidiard St. Lawrence or at Tolland, ancient or modern, bearing the name of Wolcott.

I next visited the old mill which belonged to the family at least three hundred years ago. The house connected with the mill is the same which was standing then, and is a curious specimen of ancient architecture, both internally and externally. The mill is also the original one, with a modern addition to one end. The house is now occupied by a laborer, and is in rather a dilapidated condition. I also made a sketch of the house and mill.

I suppose you recollect enough of Tolland to know that it is one of the most secluded, quiet, and picturesque villages in England. The inhabitants appear to be very comfortable and happy ; and I saw no cases of suffering among them. Having collected all that could be found at Tolland, my next step was to consult the wills.

Of these he gives copies of a dozen, part of which he found on record at Taunton, and part at Wells, and which show clearly that the earlier generations of the staunch Protestants who emigrated to America were devoted Papists. We give abstracts of the wills of two John Wolcotts, of Tolland, the latter the father of Henry Wolcott, of Windsor, and the former, apparently, his grandfather.

The will of JOHN WOOLCOTT, of Tolland, dated Feb. 9, 1571, and proved April 11, 1572, bequeaths "my soule to Almightye god my creat^r and to o^r Lord Jesus Christ my redeemer and my bodie to Xtian buriall," with bequests "to y^e cathedrall church of Welles," "to John my sonne," "to Alice my daughter," "to Mary my daughter," "to John Howe," "to Agnes Meyn," and "unto Agnes my wief," — appointing as overseers "Henry Woolcot and Roger Woolcot my brothers."

The will of JOHN WOLCOT the elder, of Tolland, dated Nov. 10, 1623, and proved Jan. 16, —, bequeaths "my soule into the hands of god my saviour and redeemer and my body to Christian burial," with bequests "unto John Wolcott my son John's eldest sonne," "unto Agnes Wolcott the daughter of John," "unto every of the nowe children of Henry Wolcott my sonne," "unto Mary Wolcott the daughter of my sonne John," "unto Symon Wolcott my kinsman," "unto Giles More my servant," and "unto Richard Locke, Alexander Thatloke, John Sealy and Alexander Engrane;" makes John Wolcott executor; witnessed by Christopher Wolcott and Henry Woolcott, his two eldest sons — being in the handwriting of the former.

From the Subsidy Rolls, it appears that there were in the different branches of the family at this period contemporary Johns and Henrys; and the lineage of Henry Wolcott, of Windsor, cannot certainly be traced further through these papers, or through any other that have yet come to light. And as our Memorial is designed to embrace only what has been ascertained and is definitely known, we omit what is merely conjectural, however plausible or probable it may seem. The present work, moreover, is the record of the family in this country, and the mere names of their English progenitors are of little practical interest to us. It is a satisfaction to us, however, to know that our ancestors in England, as far back as we are able to identify them, either certainly or conjecturally, occupied a good social and moral position ; that they were largely British freeholders, and fair representatives of the class to which Great Britain owes her strength and supremacy ; that they supported the institutions of religion ; and that, at the repeated call of the Government, they readily furnished their quota of men and horse, all armed and equipped for the wars.

The circumstances of our own ancestor are known to have been easy, and apparently affluent. The venerable historian of Connecticut (Trumbull), whose testimony appears in its place, and who lived a century nearer those days than ourselves, makes special mention of his valuable English estate. His deed to his eldest son, which we give in course, conveys the Galdon Manor, — the principal mansion in Tolland, — “with meadows, pastures, mills, tenements, and hereditaments thereunto belonging.” This was the estate which came into his possession after his removal to America, by the death, without will, of his elder brother, Christopher ; and appears to have been wholly distinct from the estate which, according to later history, he owned and disposed of at the time of his emigration. The holders of landed estates in England were in that day persons of social rank, as in a large degree they still are.

The personal consideration with which Henry Wolcott was regarded in the Colony from the outset is evidence that he was an English gentleman of acknowledged ability, intelligence, and excellence. But gratifying as this may be, our principal object in referring to his worldly circumstances and social standing is to exhibit more fully the resolute and self-sacrificing spirit with which he turned his face towards the New World, — confirming the tradition and conviction of his descendants, that they have sprung from a worthy sire.

highly cultivated. Eastward from the church is a fine hanging wood, which clothes the steep slope of a pretty high hill, and has a pleasing appearance. The whole parish is rented at about five hundred pounds per annum, and consists of only twelve houses, four of which are in the hamlet of East Tolland. The lands are mostly arable, the general crops wheat, barley, pease, and some flax. A spring rising at North Combe, in the parish of Brompton Ralph, runs through and turns a grist-mill in the parish, whence it passes through Lidiard St. Lawrence, and empties itself into the Tone. The cross-roads here are very deep, narrow, precipitous, and overhung with hedges. Garldon, or Garmildon, an ancient manor in Tolland, belonged, 7 Eliz., to Francis Southwell, Esq. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and is a small building, consisting of a nave, chancel, and a small aisle on the north side. At the west end is a clumsy, embattled tower, thirty feet high, containing three small bells. In the church-yard are the remains of an old stone cross."

Besides the notes above, Mr. Somerby prepared an elaborate genealogical table, which has been widely published, and which carried the family back to the eleventh century in Wales, and traced its descent through a titled Walcott family in Shropshire, basing his argument on the identity of the family arms and names. We appreciate the force of these considerations; but as his table is conjectural, and as we reserve these pages for papers of clear authenticity, we do not reproduce the list.

Prof. Franklin B. Dexter, of Yale College, in his late paper on "The Influence of the English Universities in the Development of New England," refers to the "significant, if not typical, circumstance, that only three out of all the 'Mayflower' company can be traced to English homes." We had not fully apprehended how singularly fortunate we were in being able to trace our family to the identical homes which they occupied in Old England. We none the less heartily accept his conclusion:—

"It is enough to know that the primitive aristocracy of New England was an aristocracy of intellect consecrated to duty, and not of blood; that her peerage and her knighthood were honors direct from the creative hand of God, and not from the touch of a monarch." p. 17.

Our limits have precluded our touching upon the great moral issues which were pressed upon our fathers, and the consecration to duty which forced them into exile from their native land. Nor can we dwell upon the coincidence, that the same Providence which had reserved the territory prepared for its occupancy the people that were to plant its institutions, mould its laws, and impart a tone to its whole history. The two great facts challenge our attention,—that they were the only company in the world that had then learned, even imperfectly, the principles of civil and religious liberty; and that this was the only spot in the world where those principles could have a fair field, and room for expansion and growth. For this it had been preserved an unbroken wilderness, and hither, across the howling deep, they came, to establish freedom in Church and State,—“government of the people, by the people, and for the people.”

“The Parliament was hardly dissolved (1629) when ‘conclusions’ for the establishment of a great colony on the other side of the Atlantic were circulating among gentry and traders; and descriptions of the new country were talked over in every Puritan household. The proposal was welcomed with the quiet, stern enthusiasm which marked the temper of the time; but the words of a well-known emigrant show how hard it was even for the sternest enthusiasts to tear themselves from their native land. ‘I shall call that my country,’ wrote the younger Winthrop, in answer to feelings of this sort, ‘where I may most glorify God and enjoy the presence of my dearest friends.’ The answer was accepted, and the Puritan emigration began on a scale such as England had never before seen.”¹

“Several persons in the west of England, having by fishing-voyages to Cape Ann, the northern promontory of the Massachusetts Bay, obtained some acquaintance with these parts; the news of the good progress made in the new plantation of Plymouth, inspired the Rev. Mr. White, minister of Dorchester, to promote the settlement of such another plantation here for the propagation of religion.” — “Briefly, the God of Heaven served, as it were, a summons upon the spirits of his people in the English nation; stirring up the spirits of thousands which never saw the faces of each other, with a most unanimous inclination to leave all the pleasant accommodations of their native country, and go over a terrible ocean, into a more terrible desert, for the pure enjoyment of all his ordinances.”²

DEED OF GALDON MANOR

BY ROBERT MYNNE TO CHRISTOPHER WOLCOTT.

We give below, in legible English, a copy of the preceding deed, which is in the English of Chaucer's day, made specially obscure by the use of abbreviated and antiquated legal phrases. For this we are indebted to the patient research of Mr. Roger Wolcott, of Boston; and the work will be appreciated by any who may attempt to read the instrument, as given in the artotype impression, without the aid of this copy.

THE FAMILY IN THE UNITED STATES.

SECOND GENERATION.

I. HENRY WOLCOTT, who emigrated from England, and was the ancestor of the family in this country, of which a record is here given, was the second son of John Wolcott, of Tolland, in Somersetshire, England, and was baptized in the adjoining parish of Lydiard St. Lawrence, Dec. 6, 1578. He married, Jan. 19, 1606, Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Saunders, of Lydiard St. Lawrence. She was baptized Dec. 20, 1584. Children: —

1. John, baptized Oct. 1, 1607; was living in England in 1631, and apparently never emigrated to this country. He had died without issue, previous to the date of his father's will in 1655. The family record makes no mention of him.
2. Anna. She came over with her sister and youngest brother, after the family had become settled; married, Oct. 16, 1646, Matthew Griswold, of Windsor.¹
3. Henry, b. Jan. 21, 161⁰/₁₁. See II.
4. George. See III.
5. Christopher. He emigrated to America with his parents and two older brothers in 1630. The family homestead in Windsor was bequeathed to him by his father. He died unmarried, Sept. 7, 1662. By his will nuncupative, his estate was divided among his brothers and sisters, — Henry receiving the larger share.
6. Mary. She married, June 25, 1646, Job Drake, of Windsor. She and her husband died the same day, Sept. 16, 1689.
7. Simon, born between Sept. 11, 1624, and Sept. 11, 1625. See IV.

The old "Famely Chronologie, 1691," has this entry respecting the parents, Henry and Elizabeth Wolcott:—

This happie pair were married About ye year 1606. He came to New England about the year 1628, and in the year 1630 brought over his family, to avoid the persecution of those times against dissenters.

This was during the reign of King Charles I., while its oppressiveness was felt, but several years before the roused spirit of the people, under the good guidance of OLIVER CROMWELL, swept away his authority and his tyranny together.

"Every corner of the nation was subjected to a constant and minute inspection. Every little congregation of separatists was tracked out and broken up. Even the devotions of private families could not escape the vigilance of spies. And the tribunals afforded no protection to the subjects against the civil and ecclesiastical tyranny of that period." "This was the conjuncture at which the liberties of England were in the greatest peril. The opponents of the government began to despair of the destiny of their country; and many looked to the American wilderness as the only asylum in which they could enjoy civil and spiritual freedom. There a few resolute Puritans, who, in the cause of their religion, feared neither the rage of the ocean nor the hardships of uncivilized life; neither the fangs of savage beasts nor the tomahawks of more savage men,—built, amidst the primeval forest, villages which are now great and opulent cities, but which have, through every change, retained some trace of the character derived from their founders. The government regarded these infant colonies with aversion, and attempted violently to stop the stream of emigration, but could not prevent the population of New England from being largely recruited by stout-hearted and God-fearing men from every part of the old England."¹

It was at this juncture that HENRY WOLCOTT left England; and no one will question his title to the character of "a resolute Puritan,—a stout-

Old Lyme, which has now been the seat of the Griswold family for two and a half centuries. To the church in Saybrook (of which Lyme was then a part) he presented a silver cup, still in existence, and which the church has sold to an individual, bearing this inscription, "S. C. DON. DOMINI MATTHEW GRISWOLD." The title simply indicates his social standing; as does the English title, Mr., which is applied to him in the New London records. He died at the age of ninety-six, and his grave is unknown,—the more noticeable, as the monument still standing in Windsor over the grave of his father-in-law, Henry Wolcott, is ascribed to his agency.

hearted and God-fearing man." He was not an obscure adventurer, but held a fair position among the gentry in England, possessing an estate which yielded him a fair income, and his property was freely devoted to the service of the expedition which he accompanied. He had now passed his fifty-second year, and his children were at an age when they most needed such advantages in the way of education, limited though they were, as they could find only in their native land. The parents decided, as the least trying of the courses open to them (though they must have taken the resolution with a heavy heart), to leave behind them their two daughters and their youngest son, then five years of age, until a settlement had been effected in America. Taking three sons (Henry, George, and Christopher), they went forth, at this stage of life, to grapple with the hardships of a new settlement in an unexplored country,—retiring forever from their pleasant seat, from the place of their fathers' sepulchres and the birthplace of all their children (from some of whom in their tender years they were to be separated for an uncertain period), and bravely encountering the unknown future which awaited them and theirs on the deep and in the desert. They have their reward,—and they desired none other on earth,—a name and a place among those excellent companies, of whom the world was not worthy, who came out from the mother country to this, at that eventful period, on their high mission of civilization and Christianity.

The company of which they were members consisted of one hundred and forty persons; and the historian of Connecticut makes the following mention of them:—

"In one of the first ships which arrived this year came over the Rev. Mr. John Warham,¹ Mr. John Maverick,² Mr. Rossiter, Mr. Ludlow, Mr. Henry Wolcott, and

In memory of Rev. JOHN WARHAM; he was installed pastor of this church at its inauguration in Plymouth, England, in 1630; they arrived in this country the 30th of May the same year, and remained at Dorchester, Mass., five years, when they removed to this town. Here Mr. Warham continued his pastoral labours to his flock until April 1, 1670, when he slept in the Lord. He was among the most eminent of New England's early divines. Erected by his church, 1842.

Epitaph, Windsor Churchyard.

² John Maverick was a minister of the Established Church, and resided about forty miles from others of Mr. Warham's church and congregation, who first settled the town of Windsor, in Connecticut. Mr. Rossiter¹ and Mr. Ludlow² were magistrates. Mr. Wolcott had a fine estate, and was a man of superior abilities. This was an honorable company. Mr. Warham had been a famous minister in Exeter, the capital of the county of Devonshire. The people who came with him were from the three counties of Devonshire, Dorsetshire, and Somersetshire."³ "They were a very godly and religious people, and many of them persons of figure and note, being dignified with the title of Mr., which few in those days were."⁴

They sailed from Plymouth, in England, on the 20th of March, 1630, in the ship Mary and John, of four hundred tons burden, Captain Squeb, master. Before their embarkation, after their passage had been engaged, they were allowed the privilege of organizing themselves into an independent church. This is now the First Church in Windsor, — the oldest in the State of Connecticut. The Barnstable and Plymouth churches, in Massachusetts, had been organized in the same way; and these three, so far as we know, are the only New England churches which had a transatlantic origin.

They arrived at Nantasket on the Lord's Day, May 30, 1630, after a voyage of two months and ten days, and landed the next day. A brief account of the expedition from one of their own number, Captain Roger Clap,⁵ one of the first settlers of Dorchester, who was then Exeter, England; he is the first mentioned at the time of the assemblage in the New Hospital, Plymouth, England, to organize a church. Cotton Mather includes him in the "First Classis" of ministers, viz. those who "were in the actual exercise of their ministry when they left England." He was "somewhat advanced in years" at that period. He took the freeman's oath, May 18, 1631. A curious account of his drying some gunpowder, in a pan, over the fire, in the Dorchester meeting-house, which was used as a magazine also, and the wonderful escape of Maverick in the consequent explosion of a "small barrel," are described in Winthrop's Journal, I. *72. Mr. Maverick expected to remove to Connecticut, but died Feb 3, 1637, aged "about sixty," — "A godly man, a beloved pastor, a safe and truthful guide."

a young man, is fortunately extant, and we quote a few paragraphs from it.

“There came godly families in that ship. We were of passengers many in number (besides seamen) of good rank. These godly people resolved to live together; and, therefore, as they had made choice of those two reverend servants of God, Mr. John Warham and Mr. John Maverick, to be their ministers, so they kept a solemn day of fasting in the New Hospital in Plymouth, in England. spending it in preaching and praying, when that worthy man of God, Mr. John White, of Dorchester, in Dorset, was present, and preached unto us the word of God in the fore part of the day; and, in the latter part of the day, as the people did solemnly make choice of and call those godly ministers to be their officers, so also the Reverend Mr. Warham and Mr. Maverick did accept thereof, and expressed the same. So we came, by the good hand of the Lord, through the deeps comfortably; having preaching or expounding of the word of God every day, for ten weeks together, by our ministers.”¹

“When we came to Nantasket, Captain Squeb, who was captain of that great ship of four hundred tons, would not bring us into Charles River, as he was bound to do, but put us ashore and our goods on Nantasket Point, and left us to shift for ourselves, in a forlorn place in this wilderness. But, as it pleased God, we got a boat of some old planters, and laded her with goods; and some able men, well-armed, went in her unto Charlestown, where we found some wigwams and one house; and in the house there was a man which had a boiled bass, but no bread that we see. But we did eat of his bass, and then went up Charles River, until the river grew narrow and shallow; and there we landed our goods, with much labor and toil, the bank being steep; and, night coming on, we were informed that there were hard by us three hundred Indians. One Englishman, that could speak the Indian language (an old planter), went to them, and advised them not to come near us in the night; and they hearkened to his counsels, and came not. I myself was one of the sentinels that first night. In the morning, some of the Indians came and stood at a distance off, looking at us, but came not near us. But, when they had been a while in view, some of them came and held out a great bass toward us; so we sent a man with a biscuit, and changed the cake for the bass. Afterwards they supplied us with bass, exchanging a bass for a biscuit-cake, and were very friendly unto us.”²

² “Which,” saith Elder Blake, “our people ascribe to God's watchful providence over them, in their weak beginnings.”

“ We had not been there many days (although, by our diligence, we had got up a kind of shelter to save our goods in), but we had order to come away from that place, which was about Watertown, unto a place called Mattapan, now Dorchester, because there was a neck of land fit to keep cattle on. So we removed and came to Mattapan. The Indians there also were kind unto us.¹

“ In our beginning, many were in great straits for want of provisions for themselves and their little ones. Oh! the hunger that many suffered, and saw no hope in an eye of reason to be supplied, only by clams and mussels and fish. We did quickly build boats, and some went a-fishing. But bread was with many a very scarce thing, and flesh of all kinds as scarce. And in those days, in our straits, though I cannot say God sent a raven to feed us, as he did the prophet Elijah, yet this I can say, to the praise of God’s glory, that he sent not only poor, ravenous Indians, which came with their bags of corn on their backs to trade with us (which was a good supply unto many), but also sent ships from Holland and from Ireland with provisions and Indian corn from Virginia to supply the wants of his dear servants in this wilderness, both for food and raiment.²

“ In those days, God did cause his people to trust in him, and to be contented with mean things. It was not accounted a strange thing in those days to drink water, and to eat samp or hominy without butter or milk. Indeed, it would have been a strange thing to see a piece of roast beef, mutton, or veal, though it was not long before there was roast goat. After the first winter, we were very healthy, though some of us had no great store of corn. The Indians did sometimes bring corn, and truck with us for clothing and knives; and once I had a peck of corn, or thereabouts, for a little puppy-dog. Frost-fish, mussels, and clams were a relief to many.”³

The name of Henry Wolcott appears in the first list of “freemen” made in Boston, Oct. 19, 1630. This was the day on which the first General

Court in Massachusetts was held, consisting not of representatives, but of individual freemen. Under the ancient charter of the Colony, none were recognized as members of the body politic, except such as were admitted by the General Court, and took the oath of allegiance to the colonial government.

“May 13, 1634. There is liberty granted to Mr. Israell Stoughton and Mr. Wulcotte to looke out ffermes for themselves with promise to accom̄idate them.”¹

In three or four years after their settlement, the Dorchester Company had their attention directed to the unoccupied and fertile lands in the Connecticut Valley.

“In September of this year (1633), Mr. John Oldham with three others travelled through the wilderness to Connecticut, to view the country and trade with the Indians.² They appear to have had information from the Dutch of New York of a valuable tract of land lying upon that river. They were hospitably received by the Indians, and brought back such flattering accounts of the fertility and products of the soil as, in 1635, induced a large number of the people to emigrate thither.”

“Actuated by the noblest spirit of the times, these men had determined to remove as early as the year 1634; and they applied to the General Court of Massachusetts for permission to go in quest of new adventures in a better land. But, owing to a division in that body with regard to the propriety of the measure, they did not now obtain their desires. Yet they could not be satisfied till they had accomplished their intention, and had obtained leave of the Court. For it was the general sense, that the inhabitants were all bound to one another by the oath of a freeman, as well as the original compact, so as not to be at liberty to separate without the consent of the whole.”

“A number of Mr. Warham’s people came this summer (1635) into Connecticut, and made preparation to bring their families, and make a permanent settlement on the river.¹ These pioneers encountered great privations, and were mostly compelled by the severity of the winter and the prospect of famine to return to Massachusetts. The people who kept their stations on the river suffered in an extreme degree. After all the help they were able to obtain by hunting and from the Indians, they were obliged to subsist on acorns, malt, and grain. A great number of cattle perished. The Dorchester or Windsor people lost in this single article about £200 sterling. Their other losses were considerable."

"Several of the principal gentlemen interested in the settlement of Connecticut — Mr. John Haynes, who at this time was Governor of Massachusetts, Mr. Henry Wolcott, Mr. Wells, the ministers of the churches, and others — had not yet moved into the Colony.² As soon as the spring advanced and the travelling would admit, the hardy men began to return from the Massachusetts to their habitations on the river. No sooner were buds, leaves, and grass so grown that cattle could live in the woods, and obstructions removed from the river, so that vessels could go up with provisions and furniture, than the people began to return in large companies to Connecticut. Many who had not removed the last year, prepared with all convenient despatch for a journey to the new settlement on the river."³

The following succinct and satisfactory account of this emigration I extract from a manuscript historical discourse by the Rev. Dr. McClure, of South Windsor:⁴ —

At the time they were about to remove, the Dutch, who had possessed themselves of New Netherlands (New York), extended their claim to the Connecticut

Another church in Dorchester was organized with a few members, Aug. 23, 1636.

² Mr. John Haynes became Governor of Connecticut also. He was a man of eminent abilities. Mr. Thomas Wells, also, became Governor of Connecticut.

River. They had made a small settlement a few miles below, in Hartford Meadow, for the purpose of trade with the Indians. From the Dutch, the people of Plymouth had heard of a rich country of land in this quarter, and some adventurers from Plymouth had come, two or three years before, and built trading-houses in Windsor, near the mouth of Little River.

The towns of Windsor, Hartford, and Wethersfield were settled by people from Dorchester, Newtown (now Cambridge), and Watertown. The Dutch and the people from Plymouth (who had begun to engross the Indian fur-trade) were unwilling to admit them into their neighborhood. The Plymouth people were satisfied with compensation, and the Indians were paid what they demanded for the land. The title of the Dutch was too slender to support a claim.

Having thus prepared the way for their peaceable settlement, the three companies arrived in the summer of 1635.¹ When we consider the difficulties and dangers which they had to surmount, we may well admire their pious zeal and fortitude. The greater part came through the woods by land, and the remainder by water. It was a long, fatiguing, and dangerous march. About one hundred men, women, and children took their departure from the three towns, encumbered with baggage and cattle, to travel through an unexplored territory. They shaped their course by a compass. They had to pick their way through forests, over or around swamps and mountains, and to construct rafts to help them over the streams. They saw here and there a solitary foot-path leading to the Indian villages. The Nipnit or inland Indians, whose country they passed through, were numerous, and might have taken advantage of their weak and defenceless condition to cut them off. But the God of Israel, who conducted the chosen tribes through the desert of Arabia, and caused the fear of the people of God to fall upon their enemies, in like manner restrained the savages of the wilderness from molesting this worthy company. They were fourteen days performing this tedious journey. Their hearts did not sink under the pressure of sufferings. Some of them had lived delicately in their native country, but they cheerfully encountered the hardships of the way. They fed upon the milk of their cattle; and, wrapped in their cloaks and blankets, they slept upon the ground, amid the nightly howlings of beasts of prey. They were supported by the goodness of the cause for which they had followed God into the wilderness; his providence had pointed out to them the path of duty; and they devoutly prayed and sung Psalms as they marched along, and the woods for the first time resounded with sacred hallelujahs. They at length came in sight of this river, the object of their ardent expect-tation, — probably near the mouth of the Scantic River in this town, — and proceeded to form their settlements with a view to their future enlargement. The next year, another company came by the same route from the same towns in Massachusetts, and joined them.

The Indians upon the river and in its vicinity were then numerous, consisting principally of three powerful Sachemdoms. The seat of one was near the mouth of the Podunk River in the south border of this town ; the seat of another was about twenty miles down the river at Middletown ; and that of the other on Little River at Farmington.

Some of the first settlers of these towns were gentlemen of opulence, education, and worth. The right of settling here they purchased of the Plymouth Company, in England, who held this country by grant from the Crown. But they did not esteem their title valid until they had purchased their land of the Indians, whom they looked upon as the only rightful proprietors. The Assembly of the infant colony in the Massachusetts gave to the people of these three towns, on their removal, authority to form themselves into a political body, although they were beyond their jurisdiction. They soon proceeded to form a system of laws, similar to those of Massachusetts, except that they did not make church-membership a necessary qualification for civil office.

In the year 1637, the first General Assembly was held in Connecticut. Mr. HENRY WOLCOTT had been elected a member of the committee, twelve in number, which constituted the Lower House, or popular branch of that body ; and thus he participated in the first legislative proceedings of both Colonies. In 1640, his name stands first in the list of inhabitants in Windsor. In 1643, he was elected a member of the House of Magistrates, as the Upper House, the present Senate, was then styled, consisting of six or eight members ; and he was annually re-elected during life. “ He was, probably, after the pastor, the most distinguished man in Windsor.”¹ By the decease of his elder brother without issue he had become proprietor of the family estates, including the manor-house and the mill already referred to ; and in the year 1640 he appears to have visited England. His younger children, Anna, Mary, and Simon, had probably joined the family in America before this date ; we can only ascertain that they came between the years 1631 and 1641.

We have in our collection of family manuscripts a number of letters sent from England during the first thirty years of their settlement here. Letters of this date, handed down through eight generations, are so rare as to be a curiosity, and a somewhat liberal insertion of them is warranted. Those which we here give were addressed to the elder Henry. An earlier date will be found among those later given, addressed to his son, the second Henry.

Mr. Wolcott's residence in Windsor was toward the southern end of the town, south of the Farmington River, on a tract of high land which has always borne the name of "The Island," along which the road passes southward, and then through the meadows,—being the first, or meadow, road to Hartford. The lot of his eldest son, Henry, Jr., adjoined his own on the south, both fronting the west. He continued an honored resident of Windsor until his death, which occurred May 30, 1655. His will was dictated on the day of his death, and was as follows:—

LAST WILL.

The thirtieth of May (1655), I, HENRY WOLCOTT, sick of body, but of perfect memory, do make and ordain this my last will and testament, in manner and form following.

First. I commend my soul to God my maker, hoping assuredly through the only merit of Jesus Christ my Saviour, to be a partaker of life everlasting; and I commend my body to the earth, whereof it was made.

I will that my wife shall have all my house lot, orchard, garden, hop-yard and my lot in Plymouth meadow, during the term of her natural life. Also, I give unto my wife two of my cows, and half the household goods in my dwelling house.

Also, I leave my land in England to Henry my eldest son, without encumbrances. Also, I give unto him my two books of martyrs.

Also, I give to Christopher my second son, my lot in the Great meadow, — and also, my house lot and houseing upon it, after the death of my wife, he paying out of it thirty pounds, after my wife's decease, as I shall hereafter appoint.

Also, I give to George my third son, the five pounds he owes me, and five pounds more.

Also, I give to Simon, my youngest son, all my land on the easterly side of the Great River and also my lot at Arramonets.

Also, to the children of Henry, my eldest son, five pounds to Henry the eldest of them, and to the rest of them forty shillings apiece.

I give all the rest of my goods to be equally divided amongst all my children.

Also, I appoint Henry Wolcott, my son, to be overseer of this my will and testament.

Also, my will is, that Christopher, my son, shall have my lot in Plymouth meadow, after the decease of my wife.

My will is that my debts shall be first paid.

October 4, 1655. The above written being testified to the Court by Mr. Henry Wolcott, upon oath, and by Mr. Wichfield to be the last will and testament of Mr. Henry Wolcott, senior, deceased, the Court approbated of the same, and ordered it to be recorded.

JOHN CULLICK, Secretary.

His widow survived him about five weeks; she died July 7, and her will, dated July 5, is attested by her mark. The explanation of this, which we find in one of our old manuscripts, is unquestionably authentic: "Their wills were made just before their deaths, and Mrs. Wolcott, not being well enough to write her name, only made her mark."

The inventory of Henry Wolcott's estate, exclusive of property in England, amounted to £764 8s. 10d. This schedule, compared with the amount which he was worth on leaving England, illustrates forcibly the following observation of the Connecticut historian, Dr. Benjamin Trumbull:—

“In purchasing the lands and making settlements, in a wilderness, the first planters expended great estates. It has been the opinion of the best judges, who have had the most perfect acquaintance with the ancient affairs of the Colony, that many of the adventurers expended more, in making settlements in Connecticut, than all the lands and buildings were worth, after all the improvements which they had made upon them.”¹

To the brief sketch which we have now given of our ancestor, we annex the notice which the venerable historian, already quoted, gives of his death. On examining the MSS. of Dr. Trumbull, deposited in the library of Yale College, I discovered that the authority for his statement was a letter from Gov. R. Wolcott to the Rev. Thomas Prince, of Boston, dated Aug. 15, 1754, to which there is a reference. On examining the remnants of the library which Mr. Prince left in Boston, I ascertained that this letter unfortunately was among the other valuable manuscripts, which were deposited in the steeple of the Old South Church, and which were destroyed by the British soldiers while they held possession of the church.

“This year (1655) died Henry Wolcott, Esq., in the 78th year of his age. He was the owner of a good estate in Somersetshire, in England. His youth, it is said, was spent in gayety and country pastimes; but afterwards, under the instructions of Mr. Edward Elton, his mind was entirely changed, and turned to the sincere love and practice of religion. As the Puritans were then treated with great severity, he sold about £8,000 worth of estate in England, and prepared for a removal into America. He came into New England with Mr. Warham, in May, 1630, and settled first at Dorchester, in Massachusetts. In 1636, he removed to Windsor, and was one of the principal planters of that town. He was chosen into the magistracy in 1643, and continued in it until his death. He left an estate in England, which rented at about £60 a year, which the family for some time enjoyed; but was afterwards sold. After his decease, some one of his descendants was annually chosen into the magistracy, for a term of nearly eighty years. Some of them have been members of the Assembly, Judges of the Superior Court, or magistrates, from the first settlement of the Colony to this time, during the term of more than a century and a half. — A.D. 1797.”²

Over the graves of Henry Wolcott and Elizabeth his wife there is an arched monument of brown stone. Around it are the monuments of their children and children's children. The cemetery lies in the rear of the First Congregational Church, on the high northern bank of Farmington River; the railroad passes on its western side. Here these worthy pilgrims, and their companions in tribulation and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, found a resting-place from their wanderings and toils; they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.

We add, from our ancient "Chronologie," the simple statement which follows the record of their death, and which is of more worth than all other history and eulogy:—

These both dyed in hope and Ly buried under one Tomb in Windsor.

Of this ancient monument and its inscriptions we give on the next page a clear picture, engraved by Richardson, from a sketch by Ellsworth. It is said to be the oldest monument, of this style, in the country. Erected about thirty-five years from the landing at Plymouth, it is still in perfect preservation. The church whose organization we have stated (p. 14), and which, historically, leads the column of the Connecticut churches, is observing, as these pages pass through the press, its "Quarter-Millennial Celebration." When in the good providence of God it shall reach its Semi-Millennial, we see no reason to doubt that this sepulchre of one of its founders will remain with it, intact.

DEED OF GALDON MANOR

BY HENRY WOLCOTT TO HIS SON HENRY.

We give a copy of this deed, although the engraved copy is very legible. The estate appears to have been largely, if not wholly, that which was conveyed by Robert Mynne to Christopher Wolcott. The last-named condition, requiring the wife, if she survived her husband, to relinquish her legal interest in the estate, was obviously designed to allow it to pass unencumbered to the eldest son in succession, in accordance with the English law of entailment. This will appear more fully in the sequel.

THIRD GENERATION.

II. HENRY WOLCOTT (3) came to America with his parents, and was admitted a freeman by the General Court, at Boston, April 1, 1634, which shows that he was at that time a member of the Dorchester church. He removed with the family to Windsor in 1636, where he married, Nov. 18, 1641, Sarah, daughter of Mr. Thomas Newberry.¹ Children:—

- 8—1. Henry, b. Jan. 6, 1643. See V.
 9—2. John, b. Feb. 28, 1645. See VI.
 10—3. Samuel, b. Oct. 8, 1647; d. May 10, 1648.
 11—4. Sarah, b. July 5, 1649; m. June 6, 1674, Capt. John Price, of Salem, Mass.²
 12—5. Mary, b. Dec. 6, 1651; m. June 2, 1679, James Russell, Esq., of Charlestown, Mass.³

² "Capt. John Price was the son of Capt. Walter Price, who came to Salem in 1641, and was a respectable merchant, a deputy to the General Court, and an estimable member of the community. He was himself a merchant, and his estate was over £2,245. He held various offices, was frequently selectman, and deputy to the Grand Court. His life gave promise of continued and distinguished usefulness; but it was cut off, to the sorrow of many, Aug. 13, 1691. His widow died March 5, 1699."

"Major Walter Price, only son of Capt. John Price and Sarah Wolcott his wife, graduated at Harvard College in 1695. He was a captain in the battle of Haverhill in 1708. He was a commissioner of the Province loan for Essex, and naval officer for the port of Salem. He followed in the useful and honorable path of his ancestors."—Felt's Annals.

1680, 8^{mo}. 10^{day}, Mary y^e daughter of y^e worshipfull James Russel and Mary his wife.
 Mrs. Mary, the wife of the worshipffl James Russel Assitt, died August the 5th 1683.

We copy the inscription on his tombstone in Charlestown:—

Here lieth the body of JAMES RUSSEL, Esq^r, son of RICHARD RUSSEL Esq^r and MAUD, his wife, who was born in this town 4th October 1640 and was elected a counsellor for the Colony in the year 1680, from which time to his death

- 13—6. Hannah, b. March 8, 1653; died at Charlestown, Sept. 4, 1683, a month after her sister Mary.
- 14—7. Samuel, b. April 16, 1656. See VII.
- 15—8. Fosiah, b. July 21, 1658. See VIII.

Mr. Henry Wolcott was an importing merchant, and his ledger has been preserved. He appears to have been in England on business in the spring of 1654. He was engaged in public life, and held various appointments; was one of the nineteen gentlemen prominent in the Colony who were named in the Charter of Connecticut. He was elected a member of the House of Deputies in 1660, and of the House of Magistrates in 1662, and successively after, until his death.

He was master of a short-hand which had puzzled us in several documents, and to which we did not imagine that any key could ever be found. Among the papers deposited in the library of the Connecticut Historical Society, many years since, was a stout little vellum-covered volume of nearly four hundred pages, closely written in this hand, with no clew to the subject nor to the writer's name. It lay unnoticed until about the year 1857, when it attracted the attention of J. Hammond Trumbull, LL.D., who is as ingenious in such matters as he is persevering in his researches. He succeeded in deciphering it, and found it to consist of notes of sermons and lectures, delivered in Windsor and Hartford, between April, 1638, and May, 1641, in regular course. The writer's name is not given, but his birthday is noted on the first leaf of the volume, and this and other facts identify him as Henry Wolcott, Jr.; and it is a curious fact that the only record of his birth is found among these hieroglyphics, and the date has been unknown till now. Having called Dr. Trumbull's attention to this fact, we give his answer, which explains his discovery of the authorship:—

I was aware that the entry of Henry Wolcott's birth in the short-hand notebook supplied a date not hitherto ascertained, and corrects the year to which his he was annually chosen, saving in the few years of the reign of King James, when the people were deprived of that privilege. He also served God and his Country, in many other eminent stations, as a Treasurer, a Judge, and other places of the highest trust, all which he discharged as became a faithful steward. He changed earth for Heaven on Thursday the 28th of April 1709, being the 69th year of his age.

birth has been usually assigned. This entry was my first clew to the ownership of the note-book. It is made at the top of the first leaf in the volume, in a single line, which, deciphered, reads: "The day I was born was the 21 of January 1610" — that is, of course, 1611, N. S. So I had given, a regular hearer of Mr. Warham and Mr. Huit from 1638 to 1641, who was an occasional hearer of Mr. Hooker and Mr. Stone, at times when the Court was in session at Hartford, and who was born in 1611. Henry Wolcott, Jr., was the only man in the Colony that could satisfy the conditions of the problem; and on looking, for corroboration, into the "Wolcott Ledger," I found numerous entries in the same characters employed in the note-book. The latter contains no other entry of personal or family matters. The Ledger notes the birth of one or two children in short-hand, but supplies no new dates.

The notes in the little volume give the dates, texts, and general outlines of the discourses of the Rev. Messrs. Warham and Huit, in Windsor, and of the Rev. Messrs. Hooker and Stone, in Hartford, during the sessions of the General and Particular Courts. Among the former is one delivered by Mr. Warham, Nov. 17, 1640, "at the betrothing of Benedict Alvord and Abraham Randall," from the text, Eph. vi. 11, "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." The preacher "improved" the theme, "for teaching the betrothed lovers that marriage is a war-faring condition," and "for reproof to those who think nothing is needed for marriage but the consent of the parents." In the face of these solemn admonitions, it appears from the Windsor records that both were duly married before the expiration of the year, — the happy Benedict to Joan Newton, and the other to Mary Ware.

Among the latter discourses are Mr. Hooker's two Election Sermons, of May 31, 1638, and April 11, 1639. Of the first, from the text, Deut. i. 13, Dr. Trumbull gives an abstract of deep interest, as showing the "politics" which were preached by the ablest and best of the Puritan Fathers. "The Luther of New England," in the infancy of the Colonies, proclaimed boldly the fundamental doctrines of constitutional liberty.¹

Mr. Wolcott gave much attention to the cultivation of fruit, of which he kept a record in his short-hand volume. Josselyn, who, on a second return voyage, was his fellow-passenger, says: —

“The Country is replenished with fair and large Orchards. It was affirmed by one Mr. Woolcot (a magistrate in Connecticut Colony) at the Captaine’s Messe (of which I was) aboard the Ship I came home in, that he made Five Hundred Hogsheads of Syder out of his own Orchard in one year. Syder is very plentiful in the Country, ordinarily sold for ten shillings a hogshead.”¹

“Mr. Wolcott’s apple orchard was one of the first, and for many years was probably the largest, in the Connecticut Valley. It was in bearing before 1649, and his cider-presses were at work in 1650. For twenty years afterwards, he supplied young trees, summer and winter apples, and cider by the hogshead, gallon, or pint, not only to his neighbors at Windsor, but to other towns in the vicinity, and occasionally for exportation to other colonies.”²

The following are among the letters addressed to him by his kinsmen in England which have been preserved. It appears that he was expected to return for his sisters and younger brother; whether he performed this service, we do not know. We have evidence that he visited England about the year 1671.

He appears to have taken as prominent a part in church matters as in town and state affairs. Previous to the death of Mr. Warham, the town had been agitated by an unpleasant ecclesiastical controversy. A colleague having become necessary for the aged pastor, various candidates preached, and the people became divided in their preferences. The General Court at that time charged itself with the care of the churches, and many papers are on file in its archives relating to the difficulties in this church. Its final adjustment in relation to two candidates — Rev. Nathaniel Chauncey and Rev. Benjamin Woodbridge — is thus recorded:—

“Oct. 10, 1667. This Court doth desire and require the Town of Windsor to meet on Monday next at the Meeting House, by sun an hour high in the morning, and all the freemen and householders within the limits of said Town and Massaco are to bring in their votes to Mr Henry Wolcott; Those that would have Mr Chauncey to be the settled Minister for Windsor, are to bring in a paper to Mr Wolcott with some writing on it, those that are against his continuance are to bring in a white paper to Mr Wolcott. And Mr Wolcott is desired to take the account of it, and make a report thereof to the General Assembly. And this Court doth hereby require and command all and every the inhabitants of Windsor, that during this meeting they forbear all discourse and agitation of any matter as may provoke or disturb the spirit of each other; and at the issue of the work that they repair to their several occasions, as they will answer the contrary. If any should object against the vote of any person, Mr Henry Wolcott is to decide it. This to be published on the sabbath day after the morning exercise.”

“Oct. 14, 1667. Mr Wolcott returns that this day the Town hath met, and that there was eighty-six votes for Mr Chauncey's continuance, and fifty-two voted against it.”¹

The Assembly voted the church liberty to settle Mr. Chauncey, and on petition of the minority voted them leave, in view of the state of feeling, to settle “an able, orthodox minister;” and each party had its favorite.

We find this entry in the Colony Records:—

“At a General Assembly held at Hartford, Oct. 14, 1669, the Court grants Mr. Henry Wolcott three hundred acres of land, provided he take it up where it doe not prejudice any former grant.”

An order was passed Oct. 4, 1717, laying out to his heirs the land thus granted.

It was through a member of his household that Springfield was seasonably forewarned of the plot of destruction, partially successful, prepared for it in King Philip's War, 1675.

“While such was the feeling of composure here [Springfield], twenty miles down the river, at Windsor, there was one person whose bosom was agitated with emotions so powerful that they could not be concealed. This person was an Indian, named Toto, who was domesticated in the family of Mr. Wolcott, and was friendly to the English. He was in possession of a secret that stirred the very depths of his nature. Upon being questioned by the family, and urged to explain the cause of his manifest distress, he at length revealed the fact, which had in some way become known to him, that a plot had been formed to destroy Springfield, and that for this purpose a large body of Philip's men had been treacherously admitted by the Springfield Indians to their fort. This fort was situated on Long Hill, about a mile south from the central part of the town.”¹

IV. SIMON WOLCOTT (7) was but five years old when his father emigrated to America. He remained in England with his two sisters until the family had effected a settlement in this country ; they came over within ten years after, but the exact time of their arrival we have not been able to ascertain.

He was admitted a freeman in 1654. He married (1st), March 19, 1657, Joanna, daughter of Aaron Cook, one of the first settlers of Windsor ; she was born Aug. 5, 1638. Her married life was brief ; she died April 27, 1657, at the age of eighteen years. He married (2d), Oct. 17, 1661, Martha Pitkin, described in the Windsor Records as "late from England." Mrs. Martha Wolcott was the sister of William Pitkin, Esq., of East Hartford, Attorney-General and Treasurer of the Colony. She is represented to have been a superior lady, having received an accomplished education in England. In the obituary notice of one of her sons, published in the "Connecticut Courant," July 27, 1767, the following mention is made of the mother: —

"Her maiden name was Martha Pitkin, a woman of eminent good sense, virtue and piety; she was sister to Mr. William Pitkin, who was likewise an Assistant before the Charter, famous in his time for distinguished good sense and eminent piety, and founder of the honorable family of Pitkin in Hartford."²

¹ There is in Longmeadow an antique volume of manuscript poems, written by one Jonathan Stebbins, a native bard, the chief merit of whose verses is that they "teach the rustic moralist to die." This lady is the subject of an elegiac poem of eighteen stanzas, the last two of which are devoted to her brother, Gov. Roger Wolcott. The piece is entitled, "An elegy on the Death of that pious, useful, and aged Matron, Mrs. Joanna Colton, of Springfield, Longmeadow. Who departed this life Janu^{ry} 10th A.D. 1755, in the 87th year of her age."

Come, Zion's Daughters, try your skill,
In mournful accents lead the song;
Let sighs and groans your voices fill,
While death in triumph rides along.

Come, ye surviving Daughters, come,
Offer the tribute of a tear,
Inscribe your grief on Colton's tomb,
And speak her praise and virtues here.

² From memoranda furnished by a lady of the Pitkin family, East Hartford, we learn that William Pitkin, who emigrated to Connecticut in 1659, was born in the city of London in 1635, probably in the parish of Mary-le-bone, where he lived at the time of his emigration, and where he had received an excellent English as well as law education. His superior legal training soon became known, and led to his advancement to the public trusts named above. The records of the Courts, which at that day gave at length the written pleas of the counsel engaged, are evidence that he was one of the ablest

Her son, Gov. Roger Wolcott, pays a grateful tribute to her in his private Journal, which is given in its place, and to which we refer the reader. There is a current tradition — which we trace to a respectable source, and believe to be authentic — that she came on a visit to her brother, and that some of the leading men of the Colony, desirous of securing her residence in the country, through a suitable marriage-connection, selected her future husband as the most promising young man then in the Colony to make the proposal to her.¹

He purchased the house-lot of Goodman Whitehead, opposite the residence of his father, on the meadow-road to Hartford. He had received with others a grant of land in Simsbury, then Massacoe, in 1667; and in 1668 was appointed by the General Court one of a committee who were empowered, with reference to grants in that place, “to further the planting of the same, and to make such just orders as they shall judge requisite for the well ordering of said plantation, so they be not repugnant to the public orders of this Colony.” In April, 1761, he sold his place in Windsor to the Saunders Brothers, and removed to his farm in Simsbury.

It is a significant sign of the change of public sentiment, that, “until an ordinary be set up in Simsbury,” an order of the General Court lawyers then in the Colony, and that no one was more generally employed in cases of importance. He died Dec. 10, 1694, at the age of fifty-nine, and his departure was a heavy affliction to the Colony. In a funeral sermon at the death of Governor Saltonstall, preached by Rev. Eliphalet Adams in 1724, referring to the removals year by year of their eminent magistrates, he makes mention of “the worshipful William Pitkin, a gentleman of great worth, wisdom, and piety, whose loss we feel and lament even to this day.”

His great interest in religious subjects is evidenced by the manuscripts which he left behind, now in Miss Pitkin's possession, embracing one hundred and sixty-three essays on various texts of Scripture, and filling a large folio volume of six hundred and fifty closely written pages.

He left in England an only brother, Roger, an officer in the royal army, and an only sister, Martha, who was strongly attached to him, and who in the year 1661, at about the age of twenty, crossed the ocean with the view, it is said, of inducing him to return to England with her.

¹ “This girl put the Colony in commotion. If possible, she must be detained; the stock was too valuable to be parted with. It was a matter of general consultation, what young man was good enough to be presented to Miss Pitkin. Simon Wolcott, of Windsor, was fixed upon, and, beyond expectation, succeeded in obtaining her hand. Her brother favored the proposal, and the results showed that they had judged worthily.” — Rev. Dr. Robbins, quoted by Miss Pitkin. Chancellor Walworth, in his “Hyde Family,” mentions the tradition. It has long been current, and has sometimes appeared with romantic embellishment.

(Oct. 12, 1671) granting him liberty, under proper restrictions, to "dispose" of alcoholic liquors, was evidence of public confidence in him and of his good social standing.

"Aug. 11, 1673. The Committee for the Militiæ do hereby appoynt Mr. Simon Woolcott and John Griffin to be those that shall command the Traine Band of Simsbury for the present, and untill the Generall Court order otherwise, or the people there make their choyse."¹

The same gentlemen were, in 1674, chosen townsmen, or selectmen.²

His investment in Simsbury proved unfortunate, as the settlers were driven from the place by the Indians in 1675, and his property was destroyed. It is said that on his flight from the place he filled a brass kettle with his plate, &c., and sunk it in the deep mud of the swamp, but was unable to find it afterwards.³

After the loss of his place in Simsbury, he remained a few years in Windsor, and in 1680 settled on his land, on the east side of the Connecticut River, in the present town of South Windsor.

"May 13, 1680. This Court grants Mr. Simon Woolcot two hundred acres of land for a farme, provided he take it up where it may not prejudice any grant to any perticular person or to any plantation."⁴

In the Windsor Town List of 1686 his "Estate Rateable" is among the largest entered; but it was involved, and there remained little at his decease. He is one of six on the list whose names have the prefix of Mr., which was then a title of civil distinction.

He died Sept. 11, 1687, and was buried in the Windsor churchyard. His death was hastened, according to his son's account, by gloomy anticipations of the oppression and suffering which awaited the colonists under the coming administration of Sir Edmund Andros. These fears, as the result proved, were not wholly groundless, and they were probably heightened in his mind by the tragic scenes which had recently been enacted in his native county in England. Somersetshire had been the principal seat of the unfortunate operations of Monmouth's fatal expedition, and the former neighbors of the family in England, and their families, had furnished some of the victims for the "judicial massacre" of the brutal Jeffreys during his Bloody Assizes. The reign of King James II., during the few years it lasted, was naturally an object of strong dislike and dread to the colonists.

To the brief account of this worthy ancestor, given in the Journal of his son Roger, we choose to refer the reader, rather than detach the passages from their place in the narrative.

The widow of Simon Wolcott married (2d), 1689, Daniel Clarke, Esq., of Windsor, being his second wife.¹ She died Oct. 13, 1719, aged "eighty years." A head-stone marked her grave in the old churchyard of South Windsor; but her name has since been inscribed on the durable monument of her first husband in the Windsor churchyard. We give this monument, engraved by Richardson from a sketch by Ellsworth.

or three of his college text-books, with his autograph, have come, in good state, into the writer's possession. Among his papers is a term-bill, sent to his father by a college officer, who appears to have acted as his steward, giving in detail his disbursements.

On the day of his graduation, he was engaged by the selectmen as school-master in his native town, — the school to be taught three months on the east side of the Great River, and nine months on the west side, half on the north side and half on the south of Little River.

“Agreed with Mr. Samuel Wolcott to keep a reading and writing and cyphering and grammer school for one full year, to begin on the twelfth day of this month; to take none but such as are entered in spelling. His salary to be thirty-five pounds in county pay or two thirds of so much in money. The school is to be kept at the several places agreed on by the townsmen.”¹

In 1701, he took his Master's Degree at Harvard, and the theme which he publicly maintained is quite significant of the early religious sentiment that pervaded the venerable University which bears on her seal the sacred motto: “CHRISTO ET ECCLESIE,” — “For Christ and the Church.”

Affirmat Respondens SAMUEL WOLCOT.”

(Ord. Ex. Com., 1701.)

“General Court, Oct. 1705. Samuel Wolcott is appointed to be Capt. of the Troop in the countie of Hartford.”²

In 1706, he was chosen by the town of Windsor a Representative to the General Assembly, and was, evidently, a young man of rising influence and promise. Colonel Allyn, in a private letter, makes mention of him as “my very kinde brother.” He died June 25, 1709, at the age of thirty years, a few months before his father's death; and with him perished the hopes of the elder branch, in the male line.

It had been the expectation of his father that, as the only surviving son, he would succeed to the possession of the real estate which the first Henry Wolcott left in England, and which had descended by will, first to his eldest son, the second Henry Wolcott, and then to his eldest son, the third Henry Wolcott. It was their evident desire that the property should remain in the family, in the possession of the eldest heir in the male line. On the death of the third Henry, without male issue surviving, it naturally reverted to the heirs of his two daughters, Mrs. Allyn and Mrs. Chauncey. Their claim was contested by the heirs in the male line. The suit was regarded with much interest in the Colony, as it was supposed to involve the question whether the English law of primogeniture and entail should be recognized in this country. The claim of the Wolcotts was disallowed, and the property was divided between the Allyns and the Chaunceys. The decision caused some unpleasant feeling in the family; and Benjamin, the son of John Wolcott, proceeded to England, and took personal possession of the property, which caused difficulty there. The demands of the Wolcotts, whether legal or not, were subsequently purchased by Colonel Allyn. So much of the estate as remained in the possession of his heirs in 1787 was disposed of at that time by Henry Allyn, Esq., for £850 sterling.

Many details respecting the estate are preserved among the Allyn family, most of which were in 1848 in charge of Dr. Theodore Sill, of Windsor, through whose courtesy I had the examination of them.

Not only did the real estate pass out of the Wolcott family, but the personal effects passed legitimately to the daughters, and through them to the branches which sprung from them, among which they were dispersed.

The valuable papers recovered by Mr. Stanley, to which reference is made in the preface, were a small portion of them. The larger portion, together with some heirlooms, — among which was a silver tankard, probably that named in the distribution of the estate of Capt. Samuel Wolcott, — have been irrecoverably lost. One of the latter, however, through the generosity of the lawful heir, has lately come again into the family.

Hon. Elisha N. Sill, of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, who emigrated from Old Windsor in his youth, was in one line of descent from the Allyns and Wolcotts, and had inherited some of their effects. He had already sent me a college text-book, with the clear autograph of Samuel Wolcott, dated in the seventeenth century, with a facetious recognition of it as a stray volume from my library! On a subsequent visit to him, he surprised me by producing, in the little box in which it had been preserved for two and a half centuries, the identical gold signet-ring [H. W.] which had come down as a legacy from the successive Henrys. This surprise was followed by a greater, — in his cordial gift of the treasure to me, saying in a subsequent note :—

It is not without interest to me: it seems a connecting link, binding the eight generations together; and I never took it in hand without feeling that I was reaching past all of them, and taking the original owner by the hand.

It had rendered service in the family through three generations; and, after a partial exile through five, it has come back again most unexpectedly, and will now be transmitted with Governor Roger's silver tankard.

Among Mr. Wolcott's family letters we find the following:—

Mr. Henry Wolcott was elected a member of the House of Deputies in 1686, and subsequently he was for many years the Town-Clerk of Windsor. He made a visit to England, — the date of which is not known, — to look after his property there. He and his wife, who survived him seven years, were buried with their kindred in the Windsor churchyard ; and their epitaphs, which we give below, are inscribed on stone slabs, inserted in opposite sides of a square brick monument.

² "Col. Samuel Appleton held several offices, was Representative to the General Court, member of the Governor's Council, and Judge. In 1675, he was ordered to keep five hundred men for the defence of the frontier towns at the West against the Indians. In this quarter he was several times successful in repelling the enemy and preventing several places from being consumed. When Hatfield was attacked, October 19, a bullet passed through his hair, and a sergeant was mortally wounded by his side. He served as major in an expedition against the Narragansetts, December 9, and had the command of five hundred men in the great battle. His skill and bravery and exertions did much toward securing victory. While in this campaign he had his tent burnt, and his men lost their clothes and

Mr. Samuel Wolcott was a merchant in Windsor, and was elected deputy to the General Court in 1685. He subsequently removed to Wethersfield, and located himself on a gentle swell of land, which has since borne the name of Wolcott Hill,—a pleasant range, lying about a mile west of the village. The tract is still (1848) occupied by his descendants, including all of the name who now reside in Wethersfield. He died June 14, 1695.

Here lies Interred the Body of Mrs. JUDITH WOLCOTT, relict of Mr. SAMUEL WOLCOTT Dec'd., and daughter of the Worshipful SAMUEL APPLETON Esq^r. of Ipswich, who died Feb^y 19th 1741, about 88 years of age. — Epitaph.

“March 6, 1676. The Councill grant Mr Wolcott liberty to transport thirty bushels of grayne upon Mr John Stevens ketch to Salem for the supply of some of his family that purpose to pass thither shortly.”²

Reference has already been made to the Ledger of Mr. Josiah Wolcott, which in its other character of a family record has proved so serviceable to a family of Galloway, the heir whereof they had married. They have a stately castle-like seat; and from this family (increaseth vanity) I myself am descended by the mother's side.”

“Capt. George Corwin was born at the above seat, Workington, County of Cumberland, England, Dec. 10, 1610. He came to Salem in 1638, and died Jan. 6, 1685. He left property over £5,694. He was often Selectman, and Deputy to the General Court; and was in service against the Indians. He possessed a good understanding, which was actively, honestly, and patriotically applied. He deserved esteem, and it was readily and largely granted him.”

¹ “He was a Justice of the Gen. Sess. Court. By his will he bequeathed six silver pint cans to the Third Church; £40, to the poor of Salem; £66:13:4 L. M. to the Society for promoting Christian knowledge among the Indians; £133:6:8 to Harvard College.” — Felt's Annals, 468.

We learn from Felt's "Annals of Salem" that he was for a number of years a Representative in the Legislature and a Justice of the Peace. In 1722, he was appointed a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in which office he continued until his death, extensively useful and much respected.¹ His place of residence in Salem, afterwards occupied by his son John, is still known.² His first wife was granddaughter of Gov. Edward Winslow.

We have a file of his letters, addressed to his brother Henry at Windsor, mostly on business; the first written when he was a young man, and the rest after he was settled in Salem, some of which indicate a generous interest in his relatives. We give brief extracts.

J. WOLCOTT

At a town meeting in Salem, March 10, 1712, Mr. Wolcott and three other citizens were chosen a committee "to procure a suitable Grammar school master for y^e instructing of youth in Grammar learning, and to fitt them for y^e Colledge, and also to learn them to write and cipher and to perfect them in reading." The accomplishment of spelling is not specified, though doubtless included.

For some time after his removal to Massachusetts, he retained considerable property in Connecticut, and was one of the original proprietors of the present town of Thompson.

He died Feb. 9, 1729. His tomb, covered with a brown freestone slab, containing a slate tablet with an inscription, was standing in Salem until within a few years, but is now defaced by time. His domestic bereavements were unusually severe. Of his eleven children, only two reached adult years. From his own papers, which we have quoted so freely, as well as from the testimony of his contemporaries, it is evident that he was a man of sterling character.

His widow died in 1752, having survived all her family.¹

IX. GEORGE WOLCOTT (17) married, Aug. 30, 1691, Elizabeth Curtis, who died Aug. 13, 1741. He lived in Wethersfield, and died July, 1726. By his will he gave land in Hebron to his son. His estate amounted to £840. Children:—

X. SIMON WOLCOTT (22) married, Dec. 5, 1689, Sarah, daughter of Capt. John Chester, of Wethersfield; lived in South Windsor; was one of the original proprietors of Tolland. Children:—

- 73—2. Martha, b. 1692; m. July 17, 1735, Sergt. William Stoughton.

¹ Her father was a prominent merchant in Boston, and she received from her grandfather, Thomas Freke, Esq. of England, a large estate in this country, described in the indenture as "a parcel of Forrest Land, known by the name of Freke's Land or Division of Land, containing by Estimation, Two Thousand Acres, Scituate, etc. at a place called Queneuslett in the Nipmugg Country, within the County of Suffolk in the Province aforesaid, etc., also one other parcel of Land within the Township of New Oxford in the Nipmugg Country aforesaid, containing about Two Thousand Acres."

The church-rate book of the Rev. Timothy Edwards, who appears to have collected his own salary in cash and produce, and kept an account with each parishioner, has been preserved. It includes a dozen of the Wolcott families; and, as a fair specimen of it, we cite extracts, embracing both the debit and the credit side of his annual reckoning with this parishioner.²

¹ As I am unable to verify the surname by any decisive record, I do not vouch for its correctness.

Lieut. Henry Wolcott was one of the original proprietors of Tolland and Wellington, in Connecticut, and was a man of affairs in his own town. He and his family are said to have been of unusually tall stature. He died November, 1746.

THE OLD WOLCOTT HOMESTEAD IN SOUTH WINDSOR.

The four sons of Simon Wolcott (IV.) located themselves on the main street in East, now South, Windsor: the two eldest, Simon and Henry, about a mile south of the present meeting-house, — the latter on the west side of the street; the third, William, about a quarter of a mile farther north, on the same side; and the fourth, Roger, about a third of a mile north of the meeting-house, also on the west side of the street. The residence which we give, engraved by Richardson, from a sketch by Ellsworth, occupied the site of Henry's house; and the materials of the latter were used, in part, in its construction; the exact date of its erection has not been ascertained. The children of his grandson, Samuel Wolcott (LII.), and some of the grandchildren of the latter, were born in it. It stood on a knoll or ridge, fronting the east, and survived the longest of all the early Wolcott homes. The site has passed out of the possession of the family, and the building has been superseded only within the past generation. Some of the ancient elms remain in the dooryard; and the great tree, of which an engraving is given elsewhere, stood in the street opposite. As Roger was but eight years old at his father's death, and returned with his mother to Old Windsor, this location of the elder brothers was probably an original family-seat on the east side of the river.

XII. WILLIAM WOLCOTT (27) married, Nov. 5, 1706, Abiah Hawley, of Windsor. Children:—

84 — 1. Abiah, b. Jan. 14, 1708; married Samuel Stoughton.

85 — 2. Lucia, b. May 7, 1710; married Stephen Olmsted.

86 — 3. William, b. July 21, 1711. See XXV.

87 — 4. Ephraim, b. March 13, 1714. See XXVI.

88 — 5. Martha, b. Jan. 20, 1718; m. Oct. 21, 1749, Josiah Chapin, of Springfield.

Mr. William Wolcott's estate in South Windsor was a little north of his brother Henry's, and is still in the family. Tradition describes him as "a large, fleshy man, very handsome and good-natured." He was buried in the old churchyard.

¹ We learn from a family record that this gentleman was a son of Capt. Benjamin Newberry and grandson of Thomas Newberry. He graduated at Yale College in 1726. He received the commission of a captain on the English Establishment, and commanded one of the companies belonging to Connecticut enlisted in his Majesty's service against the Spanish West Indies. He died May 6, 1741, on his return from Carthagen to Jamaica, about three days before the "Transcript" arrived. His widow received a pension from the British Government. The Hon. Roger Newberry was the eldest son of Capt. Roger Newberry and Elizabeth Wolcott his wife, and was a member of the Upper House, 1790-1809. He received an honorary degree from Yale College. A portrait of him is in the possession of his daughter, Mrs. Sargent, of Windsor; and, according to tradition, he bore a striking resemblance to his grandfather, Gov. Roger Wolcott.

² He was a descendant of the fourth generation of Matthew Griswold and Anna Wolcott his wife. He died in Lyme, April 28, 1799. The following notice of him we extract from the sermon preached at his funeral, by Rev. Lathrop Rockwell:—

"His Excellency Matthew Griswold, Esq., descended from a respectable family, and was born in Lyme, March 25, 1714. Not being favored with a public education, he spent his earliest days in the more retired walks of life. But possessing naturally a strong and inquisitive mind, accompanied with a desire to be useful to mankind, he entered on the study of law, which he pursued till he was qualified for admission to the Bar, where he served for many years as counsellor and also as king's

Gov. ROGER GRISWOLD was their youngest son; and the following brief notice of him we extract from Judge David Daggett's extended Eulogy, delivered at the request of the General Assembly, Oct. 29, 1812:—

“GOVERNOR GRISWOLD died at Norwich on the last Lord's day, at two o'clock in the afternoon. About the time of the evening sacrifices of the various religious assemblies, while prayers were ascending from many hearts for the restoration of his health, his spirit departed to the realms of immortality. He was born at Lyme, in this State, on the 21st of May, 1762. His father, the Hon. MATTHEW GRISWOLD, was for many years Lieutenant-Governor of the State, and Chief Judge of the Superior Court; and in 1784 was chosen Governor. His mother was the daughter of the Hon. ROGER WOLCOTT, of Windsor, who was for a long period Governor, and highly respected for his talents and virtues. The descendant of these fair ancestors has not sullied their fair name, but added to it a new lustre, and more indelibly stamped immortality on their names. He was educated at Yale College, where he graduated in 1780. In 1783, he was admitted to the Bar, where he remained, an ornament to the profession, and full of business, till removed by his fellow-citizens to a higher sphere of action. In 1794, the Freemen of the State chose him a representative in Congress. This place he filled for the period of ten years, with high honour to himself, and to the great satisfaction of many eminent men in the nation. In 1801, he was appointed by President ADAMS, Secretary of War, which office he declined. In 1807, he was appointed a Judge of the Superior Court. In 1809, the Legislature chose him Lieutenant-Governor, which office he held till May, 1811, when, by the suffrages of the Freemen, he was elevated to the office of Governor.

“To these several exalted stations he was called by the voice of the people. He sought no elevation. No man enjoyed a more enviable and honourable popularity than Governor Griswold, for no man courted it less. He wished for popularity, for no good man is insensible to it; but it was ‘that popularity which follows, — not that which is run after, — that popularity which sooner or later never fails to do justice to the pursuit of noble ends by noble means.’”

Unfortunately, no portrait of him is known to exist; he is said to have been a man of uncommonly fine presence. The house which he built in attorney, with integrity and reputation. After being frequently chosen a Representative to the General Assembly, he was elected into the Council of the State in 1759. In the year 1766, he was appointed one of the judges of the Superior Court, and in 1769 was elected Lieutenant-Governor, which office was connected with that of Chief Justice of the State. In 1784, he was chosen Governor, and in 1786 he retired from public life, till the adoption of the Federal Constitution by the convention of this State, in the year 1788, when he was called to officiate as president of that body. In all the offices which he sustained he distinguished himself as a faithful servant of the public; and the whole tenor of his conduct was happily designated with fidelity, uprightness, and a high regard for the good of his constituents.”

Blackhall, with its pleasant outlook over the waters, is still occupied by his grandchildren.

We have given above some account of the Governors Griswold, husband and son of Ursula Wolcott. One of her descendants — Mrs. Evelyn McCurdy Salisbury — has prepared an ingenious and unique monograph, tracing with careful and curious research the blood relationship of this lady to Governors, Judges, and other distinguished characters; the reader is respectfully referred to this paper.¹ We give an extract from the sermon preached at her funeral by the Rev. John Devotion, of Saybrook:—

“That, Sir, which a mind not so well furnished with knowledge might view as an aggravation of the bereavement, may justly afford a degree of consolation, which, though somewhat different from the usual mode of consolatory address, is the result of thought and consideration. That you, Sir, through God’s mercy, have had the happiness of connection with a family, and long enjoyment of a consort, the daughter of the Hon. ROGER WOLCOTT, Esq., Governor of this Colony of Connecticut, whose great powers of mind, joined to assiduous application and approved integrity, opened to him the way to the highest seat of honor in this then Colony; that you was connected with the sons of that great man, who inherit a good share of that native greatness of mind, assiduous application, and integrity, which has distinguished several of them also in this State; that your consort was their sister, who, inheriting a good share of mental endowments, yet knew her place, and was a crown to her husband; that your Excellency has been blessed with a consort well versed in frugality, industry, and economy, — one who feared God, revered his sanctuary, loved his ordinances, bare testimony against vice, was a friend to order, virtue, and religion, and exemplary in the duties of Christian life. Has your Excellency enjoyed such a blessing so long, and shall not your soul glow with gratitude to the great disposer of all events?”

The following epitaph we copied, on a recent Sabbath afternoon (October, 1879), from the headstone of her grave in the cemetery of Old Lyme:—

¹ N. E. Hist. and Gen. Reg., XXXIII. 223–225. Among the descendants of Gov. Roger Wolcott by his daughters, mention may properly be made, in this connection, of Charles Wolcott Brooks, of San Francisco, and Fabez Haskell Hayden, of Windsor Locks, among the living; and among the deceased, a special tribute is due to Miss Ferusha Treat, of South Windsor, daughter of Samuel Treat and Esther Wolcott his wife (194), who lived under the shade of the Great Elm, and whose researches into the genealogy of all branches of the Wolcott family were untiring.

CONNECTICUT UNDER THE CHARTER.

Before proceeding to our record of one of the Colonial Governors, it may be proper to make a passing reference to a section of the history of Connecticut, which does not come under direct review in the manuscripts before us. From our Family Records, as presented in this Memorial, the reader will gather some correct idea of the early settlements of the country, of the conflicts with the savages, of the French wars, of the War of the Revolution, and of the civil government which succeeded it. But the interval of half a century which preceded the introduction of Roger Wolcott to public affairs, though of special historic interest, is not described in any of our Family Papers which have survived; while they contain allusions, on which a brief statement will throw light.

The restoration of King Charles II. to the throne of England in 1660 awakened forebodings in the infant transatlantic colonies, as well as among sober and thoughtful persons in Great Britain, for they knew that the ocean was not a protection from royal despotism and greed. The General Court of Connecticut, at a session held in the first year of his reign, with prudent foresight, declared:—

“It is our duty, and very necessary, to make a speedy address to his Sacred Majesty, our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, to acknowledge our loyalty & allegiance to his Highnes; hereby declaring and professing ourselues, all the Inhabitants of this Colony, to be his Highnes loyall and faythfull subjects. And doe further conclude it necessary that we should humbly petition his Majesty for grace and fauour, and for y^e continuance and confirmation of such priviledges and liberties as are necessary for the comfortable and peaceable settlement of this Colony.”¹

A committee was appointed to draft a suitable address, which Governor Winthrop was commissioned to bear to England, with a formal application to the king for a charter; and funds were provided for the purpose. The Colony was fortunate in its agent. Winthrop possessed a grace and culture which appear to have been transmitted in the family to our own generation. With superior natural endowments, and a mind enriched by study and foreign travel, combined with refined and elegant manners, he was equally at home in the humble abodes of the colonists, in the castles of nobles, and in the palaces of kings. He prosecuted his mission with great tact and wisdom; and, after availing himself of collateral sources of influence, placed special reliance on a remarkable souvenir which he carried in his hand. This was no other than a ring, once in the possession of the unhappy King Charles I., father of the monarch, a gift from him to the grandfather of Winthrop, and now brought back to his son. This touching remembrancer of his father, the King accepted with filial gratitude.

“Under these circumstances, the petition of Connecticut was received with uncommon grace and favor. Upon the 20th of April, 1662, his majesty granted his colony the letters patent, conveying the most ample privileges, under the great seal of England.”²

It was to this successful agency that Roger Wolcott paid the tribute of verse, which will be referred to in its place. From its thirty-six printed pages, as published by the Massachusetts Historical Society, we give here a few lines pertinent to this historical episode, quoting them as history and not as poetry:—

“ ‘ Be it so then, and WE OURSELF decree,
 ‘ CONNECTICUT shall be a COLONY ;
 ‘ Enfranchised with such ample liberties
 ‘ As thou, their friend, shall best for them devise :
 ‘ Chief in the patent, WINTHROP, thou shalt stand,

² Trumbull, I. 248.

‘ And for chief senators and patentees,
 ‘ Take men of wealth and known abilities ;
 ‘ Men of estates, and men of influence,
 ‘ Friends to their country and to us their prince.
 ‘ Let law and right be precious in their eyes,
 ‘ And hear the poor man’s cause whene’er he cries.
 ‘ So peace may spring from the earth, and righteousness
 ‘ Look down from Heaven, truth and judgment bless.’”¹

The eventful fortunes of the charter, thus graciously granted by the King, and so highly prized by the freemen of Connecticut, need not be recited here; her school-children all know the story, — the appointment of Sir Edmund Andros, as Governor, by the perfidious King James II.; his exercise of arbitrary authority; his coming to Hartford with his body-guard of troops, and demanding of the General Assembly, then in session, the surrender of the charter, preliminary to his suppression of the rights and liberties which it guaranteed; the conference with him, protracted till evening, when the instrument was produced and laid upon the table; the sudden extinction of the lights, and the discovery, when they were rekindled, that the charter had disappeared and could not be found; its subsequent recovery from the hollow of the great oak fronting the residence of Samuel Wyllys, where it had been safely deposited; and its transfer to the State House in Hartford, where it is now preserved as a sort of palladium. This is the outline of the story. This famous oak is one of the distinct remembrances of the writer’s boyhood, as he has often sat under its shadow and climbed into its branches.

“ The Charter Oak it was that saved the People’s Liberty.”

The reference, in one of the papers which follow, to the exuberant joy of the colonists on the accession to the throne of the Prince and Princess of Orange, is finely exemplified in the address to the King of the General Court of Connecticut, convened in special session for the purpose, June 13, 1689, as soon as the joyful tidings were received. We give a few sentences: —

“GREAT SOVEREIGN :

“GREAT was that day, when the Lord, who sitteth upon the floods, and sitteth king forever, did divide his and your adversaries from one another, like the waters of Jordan forced to stand upon an heap, and did begin to magnify you like Joshua, in the sight of all Israel, by those great actions that were so much for the honor of God, and the deliverance of the English dominions from popery and slavery, and all this separated from those sorrows that usually attend the introducing of a peaceable settlement in any troubled state ; all which doth affect us with the sense of our duty to return the highest praise unto the KING of KINGS, and LORD of HOSTS, and bless HIM, who hath delighted in you, to sit you on the throne of his Israel, and to say because the LORD loved Israel forever, therefore hath he made you king, &c. . . .

“ Which we trust we shall not forget nor be unprofitable under ; but as we have this day with the greatest expressions of joy, proclaimed your majesty and royal consort king and queen of England, France, and Ireland, with the dominions thereto belonging, so we shall ever pray, that God would grant your majesties long to live, and prosperously to reign over all your dominions, and that the great and happy work you have begun may be prospered here and graciously rewarded with a crown of glory hereafter.

“ By order of the General Court of Connecticut,

“ JOHN ALLEN, Secretary.”¹

In the atmosphere of sentiments like these, fraught with loyalty and religious faith, were developed the youth and early manhood of the ancestor whose record we now give. Among the papers left by Gov. Roger Wolcott is a brief autobiography or private journal, in which he has noted down the leading events of his life, which we are happy to be able to give almost entire, it being a consecutive narrative.

To call to and keep in remembrance Mercy, and some remarkable Providences that have hitherto fallen to my share, in this weary pilgrimage of life.

Windsor June 10th 1755.

Come, my soul, enter into thy chamber and shut the door. Consider seriously thy sun is setting and just in the horizon, yea the shadows of the evening are already drawn over my heart, and my strength faileth. I am now far advanced in the 77th year of my age ; the things of time and sense have lost their relish ; I can no more hear the voice of singing men and singing women, and the things of God, if any there be that remain in thee, are ready to dye. Dost thou not want to have them strengthened ? Canst thou not call the sun some degrees back upon thy dial, by calling to mind the days of old and the right hand of the most high, to excite thy thankfulness and dependence upon him ? Is there nothing in these many stages of time and tasks of life that thou hast already passed, that may subserve hereunto ? Come, then, and with the sweet Psalmist of Israel — Psalm 103. 2. Forgett not all his benefits.

I was the youngest child of my hon^d father M^r Simon Wolcott, tender and beloved in the sight of my mother M^{rs} Martha Wolcott, and was born January 4th 1679 at a time when my father's outward estate was at the lowest ebb.

Some years before, he sold his estate on the west side of the River in Windsor, to settle on a farm at Simsbury, to which he removed and laid out his money to promote his settlement there. But in the calamitous year for New England 1675, he was driven back to Windsor with his Family by the war ; his buildings were burnt, and his Farm at Simsbury ruined by the Indians. He had left about 200 acres of meadow and uplands adjoining, on the east side of the River in Windsor, but durst not then settle upon it for fear of the enemy. His family was chargeable, the publick taxes high, he was much in debt, and no house to put his head in but upon hire, and that upon high rents and difficult to be obtained.

Soon after I was born, I was taken with a sore mouth, which prevailed to that degree that my life was almost despaired of, but thro' Divine Goodness recovered, and thro' mercy this is the only threatening sickness I have had in my life.

In the year 1680 my father settled on his own land on the east side of the River in Windsor. Every thing was to begin ; few families were settled there. We had neither Minister nor school, by which it hath come to pass that I never was a Scholar in any school a day in my life ; my parents took care and pains to learn their children, and were successful with the rest but not with me by reason of my extreme dulness to learn.

On September 11th 1687 dyed my hon^d father in the 62^d year of his age ; it was just before the coming of Sir Edmund Andross. It was generally expected persecution for religion would soon ensue ; it filled him with agonizing fears, and excited his fervent prayers for deliverance, but God took him away from the evil he feared to come. . . .

We were now a widow and six fatherless children ; the buildings unfinished, the land uncleared, the estate much in debt, but we never wanted.

In the year 1689 my mother married with Daniel Clark, Esq. ; I went with her to live on the west side of the river.

The times were now changed. King William and Queen Mary ascended the British throne ; with them all fears of persecution vanished. Those that come after will never conceive the joy of New England at King William and Queen Mary's Coronation ; the French Leviathan, that had long been King of the children of pride was by our glorious monarch stopt in his career.

In the year 1690 my mind turned to learning and I soon learned to read English and to write.

In the year 1691 thro' the constant monitions of my father in law and my mother, I had many convictions of my sin and danger, but after a while they wore off.— In 1694 I went an apprentice to a Cloathier.

The year 1697 was a year of great scarcity and mortality. The summer was cool and cloudy, not a month without a frost in it ; the winter very long and severe. In February and March the snow was very high and hard ; there was a great cry for bread ; the cattle famished in the yards for want ; the sickness very distressing and mortall ; those in health could scarcely get food, tend the sick, and bury the dead. Many suffered for want of fire wood and tendance, but I was preserved in perfect health and never wanted.

On January 2, 1699 I went into my own business. My hands were enabled to perform their enterprise and my labor was crowned with success.

December 3^d 1702 I married M^{rs} Sarah Drake and went to live on my own land, on the east side of the river in Windsor. My settlement here was all to begin, yet we lived joyfully together ; our mutual affection made every thing easie and delightfull ; in a few years my buildings were up and my farm made profitable.

In 1707 I took my first step to preferment, being this year chosen selectman for the town of Windsor.

In the year 1709 I was chosen a Representative for that town in the General Assembly.

In the year 1710 I was put on the Bench of Justices. This year, the 10th of August, dyed my kind father in law Daniel Clark Esq^r. in the 86th year of his age, with which I was much affected, and soon after these words came powerfully into my mind :— What hope hath the hypocrite tho' he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul ?— and were followed with such convictions as I hope will never wear off.

In 1711 I went in the expedition against Canada, Commissary of the Connecticut Stores. In October my little son Alexander was killed by a cart wheel ; the memory of this sweet child often recurred, attended with this verse :

Farewell, sweet Babe, my heart's too much content,
 Farewell, sweet babe, the pleasure of my ey
 Farewell, sweet flower, that for a time was sent,
 Then taken away into eternity. . . .

In 1714 I was chosen into the Council.

On the 13th day of October 1719, dyed my honoured mother M^{rs} Martha Clark in the 80th year of her age. She was a gentlewoman of bright natural parts, which were well improved by her education in the City of London. She came to New England in 1661, the same year was marryed to my father. The rest of her useful life she spent in this wilderness, in doing good and setting an example of piety, prudence, charity, and patience. . . .

In the year 1721 I was appointed Judge of the County Court. In the year 1732 I was appointed one of the Judges of the Superior Court.

In March and April 1733 my family was visited with sore sickness, my house like a hospital was full of sick persons ; all in it were sick but myself, my wife, and one child. In this hurry and distress I was imprest, as if it had been a voice: Be still and know that I am God ; this something laid my troubled mind, and disposed me humbly to wait the issue. I lost in this sickness a son and a servant ; the rest after a long time recovered. Note :

Be still, my soul, be still, and gain a sense
 Of what is sin, by what's the recompense,
 And tremble at that guilt that doth prepare
 Such arrows and such coals of Juniper.

On the 6th day of January 1735 dyed my pious and ingenious daughter Sarah Wolcott at 20 years of age. Her sickness was long and in her languishing she often exprest her ravishing sights of Christ and longing to be with him and that her joy in believing was unspeakable and full of glory ; the afternoon before she dyed I told her M^{rs} Filer (an ancient and pious gentlewoman) was dead ; she said she wished it had been her turn ; then summoning up her whole strength she thanked her parents for all their care and kindness to her, and blessed God she had been brought up in a Christian family ; then spoke to her brothers and sisters counselling them to live well and prepare for death and gave her Bible to her little sister ; she continued till on the next morning being the Lord's day, and now when she was ready to be offered up and the time of her departure was apparently at hand she met death with confidence and comfort complaining why is his chariot so long a coming, why tarry the wheels of his chariot; her last words were Rejoice, Rejoice, and expired without a groan.

Like bird of prey Death snatch't away
 This harmless Dove,
 Whose soul so pure now lyes secure

In the year 1741 I was chosen Deputy Gov^r of this Colony and appointed Chief Judge of the Superior Court.

In the year 1745 I led forth the Connecticut troops in the expedition against Cape Breton and rec^d a Commission from Gov^r Shirley and Gov^r Law for Major General of the Army. I was now in the 67th year of my age and the oldest man in the army except the Rev^d Mr. Moody.¹

It was a tough business ; Divine Providence appeared wonderfully in our favor and should forever be remembered with thankfulness, nor ought the firmness of our troops ever to be forgotten. After we had continued the siege 49 days the City of Louisburg was surrendered on Capitulation and we with great joyfulness entered it.

On the 21 of January 1747 God took away the desire of my eyes with a stroke. My wife for a long time had been out of health, but constantly attended her business and rose this morning not well, but took care of and went about the business of the family. About two hours after she was up she was taken with an apoplexy and in a short time expired in the 61st year of her age. Upon consideration of her life and sudden death my thoughts burst out in the following reflections :

This bird of Paradise upon the wings
 Of flaming Seraphs mounts, she sits and sings
 And sees as she is seen her God above
 And in the armes of Jesus drowns in love.
 Me ah ! bereaved ! me now left alone
 My lovely turtle ever to bemoan ;
 So long my morning star whose beaming eyes
 Did never open but my day would rise ;
 So long my constant help to give relief,
 Double my comfort and divide my grief ;
 So long my loving wife, of thee bereaven,
 I have no friend so good unless in Heaven ;
 I'll not forget thy kindness nor thy charms
 But love thee dead that long lay in my arms.

In the year 1750 I was chosen Governor of the Colony of Connecticut.¹

In November 1752 the Spanish Snow S. Joseph and S^r Helena, Don Joseph Mig^r de St. Juan, Supercargo, came by distress into New London Harbor. Such care was taken to give him protection and relief that he might have been gone in 20 days after he entered the port, but he dismiss his men and went to New York and delayed and embarrassed his affairs to the great loss of the cargo and in October 1753 demanded the Assembly damages and laid a part of the blame for his delay upon a copy of a letter the Collector had got which I had sent to the Merch^t and which was then in his hands. The Council approved of what I had done but the House of Representatives were terrify'd with it and refused to approve it. Soon after the rising of the Assembly, the land was filled with Reports that I had oppressed the Merchant and extorted vast sums out of his cargo, and occasioned his delay and loss of time; that I had laid my proceeding in the affair before the Assembly to be approved, but they refused to approve it; that then I pleaded with the Assembly to tax the Colony for damages but could not prevail, but it must be expected this would be the end of it. The people see the cargo wasted, and these reports so imprest upon them, that at the election in May 1754 I was dismiss by a great majority of voices.²

I had now the common fate of discarded favorites. Neither the Government or Assembly took any more notice of me than of a common porter. To redeem my name from infamy and the people from their fears, I moved to their Court to be examined on oath upon that affair, and submit to their judgment, but they shut their doors against me. Note:

If solid virtue don't support the frame,
They are but fools who hold on babbling fame.
Ransack thy conscience; there if thou find friends,
Leave it to time to make thy name amends.

² In consequence of their misapprehension of the matter, of which they were subsequently disabused, he failed of re-election. His friends voted for him the subsequent year, and he was nearly successful, but was not again a candidate. His successor was Gov. Thomas Fitch, who, after a service of some years, was in like manner superseded, with a great deal of popular indignation, for taking an oath, in his official capacity, to help enforce the odious Stamp Act, — Jonathan Trumbull, Matthew Griswold, and others withdrawing from the Council Chamber, rather than witness the degradation.

And having now done all I could, here I left it supported with the sense of my own innocence, and it was not in vain; for the redemption of my name, that I could not obtain from the Assembly, was in a short time rolled upon me. The Assembly's complaint was laid before the King in Council, when no fault was found in any one step of my conduct in it; yea the merchant declared that I had been friendly and favorable to him, and in this manner went off with his cargo. A universal opinion prevailed that I was innocent and abused by these reports, and the reporters sunk into contempt.

My conduct being thus searched to the bottom, and thereby appearing to be without fraud or error, the freemen now looked upon the whole affair in a true light, and at the next election, in 1755, I had more than 2500 of their voices, and did not want 200 more to put me in my former seat.

Undoubtedly there were a few malicious persons, that were from that principle active and furious in raising and fomenting these Reports; but the effects were from mere terror, and how can we blame the Assembly, or the people, acting under this passion?

It is certain that terror may be and often is impress as strongly from imagination only as from real danger, and when it is by any means impress upon the mind, it is an irresistible passion. It has made a whole herd run violently down a steep mountain into certain perdition. The Syrian army that in the days of King Joram fled from the walls of Samaria and left the camp as it was and cast away their garments and their vessels in the flight, tho' we may imagine that when they had rested and found they had neither seen an enemy nor lost a man, it raised many speculations among them, yet we have no reason to think they blamed themselves for making haste in the condition they had been under.

Nor may we in these times, without offering violence to human nature, blame men that are much in the same condition for acting a like part. No — nor may we blame them for not staying to examine, for in such case men can think of nothing but now or never and then 'tis best to cut and run, and yet we find that afterwards, if they find they had an old servant that dare stand the shock and prudence to avert the danger, he will not fail of their esteem.

I am now stript of all public trust and business and yet have lost nothing that was my own or that I had right to claim a continuance of, or any thing that, considering my age, it is not better for me to be without than to have. May I not then take this as a benefit and since my mother's Sons have discharged me from keeping their vineyard, apply myself more closely to the keeping of my own. There is work enough to be done in thankful acknowledgments of former favors and living up to my duty for time to come. I will close with the Psalmist:—

THE WOLCOTT MEMORIAL.

Thine eyes did on my substance look
 When yet I wanted frame,
 And all my members in thy book
 Were written down by name.

From my youth up, oh mighty God,
 Thou hast instructed me,
 I hitherto have show'd abroad
 The wonders taught by thee.

My mouth shall of thy righteousness
 And thy salvation show
 From day to day, for of the same
 No numbers do I know.

Unto the time of elder age
 O cast me not away,
 O do not thou abandon me
 When my strength doth decay.

And now, O Lord, when I am old
 And hoary hair'd, O God,
 Forsake me not till I have told
 Thy mighty power abroad.

With righteousness my soul adorn,
 Conform my heart to thee,
 And with thy likeness in the morn
 I satisfied shall be.

O stretch my thoughts beyond the skies,
 There let me see and there adore
 Thy presence, and at thy right hand
 Be filled with pleasures evermore.

The extracts which we are able to furnish from his correspondence begin with the date of the expedition against Louisburg ; and before presenting them we select the following brief account of the enterprise and its leaders from the pages of Grahame's " Colonial History : " —

"The qualities of a commander were happily combined in WILLIAM PEPPERELL, a colonel of the Massachusetts Militia, an eminent merchant, possessed of a great landed estate, and generally known and esteemed in Massachusetts and New Hampshire. He was not a stranger to such scenes of war as American experience could supply, — having served from his youth in the provincial militia, and inhabiting a part of the country peculiarly exposed to the assault of French and Indian hostility. Happily for his country and for his own fame, Pepperrell was induced by the earnest instances of Governor Shirley to accept the chief command of the forces, and next to him in authority was ROGER WOLCOTT, the lieutenant-governor of Connecticut, and one of the most respected and popular of its inhabitants. The station and character of these men, and the great sacrifices which they now incurred of ease and interest, produced a powerful effect in inciting persons of humble rank to abandon for a season their own less important concerns for the service of their country, and to imitate on a small scale the virtue and public spirit of their favorite leaders. Many who enlisted as private soldiers were themselves freeholders, and many more were the sons of thriving farmers and substantial tradesmen, — men whom only views of public interest could persuade to enlist, or to consent to the enlistment of their children. Never did an army take the field, in civilized warfare, less formidable by its experience and tactical accomplishments, or more likely, from the piety and virtue, the manly fortitude and patriotic enthusiasm that prevailed in its ranks, to minister occasion either of unstained and honorable triumph, or of profound affliction and regret to its country. The earnest expectation that pervaded New England was at once sustained and regulated by religious sentiment. Fasts and prayers implored the divine blessing on the enterprise; and the people and their rulers, having exhausted all the resources of human endeavor, and girded the choicest of them for battle, now sought to prepare their minds for either fortune by diligent address to the Great Source of hope and consolation, and awaited the result with anxious and submissive awe, or with stern composure and confidence.”¹

To Mrs. Sarah Wolcott

These

“April 1st Gen. Wolcott arrived and was welcomed with salutes from the fort and sloop Defence. His tent was pitched on the hill at the south-east corner of the burial place. On Sunday the 7th, Mr. Adams preached to the General and soldiers, drawn up on the meeting-house green. On the 9th the commissions were published with imposing ceremonies. The eight companies were arranged in close order on the green, and the throng of spectators around the hill. Through them Gen. Wolcott, supported right and left by Col. Andrew Burr and Lieut. Col. Simon Lothrop, marched bare-headed from his tent to the door of the custom-house where the commissions were read. The troops embarked Saturday April 13th, and the next day, at one o'clock P.M., the fleet sailed. The Defence carried Gen. Wolcott and 100 men.”¹

He arrived at Cape Breton with the troops on Tuesday, April 30, and on Monday, June 17, the city of Louisburg capitulated, and the provincial forces entered it. We have his daily journal from May 30 to July 2, inclusive, detailing the events of the siege, and giving copies of the official communications which passed between the respective commanders-in-chief. Following the journal is a connected narrative, carefully drawn up, prefaced with this sentence, “Having now past through what I am now to act in this memorable siege, attended with so much danger and hard service, I have time to make a short pause and take a retrospect of this expedition, in the projection, prosecution, and success of it." These papers are a valuable historical document. A fair copy covers twenty-eight folio pages, and the length precludes its insertion entire; we give merely the conclusion of the narrative.

'Tis God has done it, and the praise belongs to him alone. God hearing the prayers of his people by many signal instances of mercy has led us on from step to step to victory.

Let us stand and see the salvation of the Lord —

First By bringing in the forces and the Ships from such different and distant places just at such a time as would best serve for our success.

2^{dly} By giving as fair weather at our landing and during the siege as has not been known in the memory of man in this country usually cover^d with palpable fog and rains in this season for the greatest part of the time, and this is the more remarkable for that altho' the fair weather generally continued until we entered the City yet the rain and fogg came on before we could reach the Intendants house and continued for eight or ten days verry severe, which the French took notice of and said that if the English had not come into the town, it would have been fair weather still.

3^{dly} By the great health afforded us, for altho' about the 27th of May it was judg^d we had about 800 sick in the Camp it prov^d mortal to but few.

4^{thly} By causing our enemys to become bread to us by their surrendering up the Royal Battery, cannon shells and great shot that were there without which we could have done nothing and by the supplys of powder and shot &c. afforded us out of the Vigilant and other Ships taken by sea without which we could not have gone on.

5^{thly} By the wonderful protection of our lives from the fire of the enemy. At our Batterys those who kept the account say they discharg^d 9657 great shot and shells against the Town besides small shot in abundance and 'tis supposed the fire of the enemy did equal if not exceed ours; in the last 24 hours of firing they sent 74 large shells to our batterys and several of them fell in the Trenches. The ground about our Battery was plow^d up like a corn field and the earth as it were cover^d with broken shells, and yet we lost not 20 men by the fire from the Town and about 130 in all.

6^{thly} By intimidating our enemys to surrender to us the Royal Battery without a blow and afterwards the City which considering the breastwork, Pikes boom and several other things by which they had strengthened it during the Siege was more defenceable when we entered it than when we first set down before it. This is the Lord's doing and it is marvellous in our eyes.

This town of Louisburg has a very large and good Harbour before it and it is easily if not already made impregnable by sea. It is seated in the gulph of the Bay of St. Lawrence and the gut of Canso dependant upon it and being under His Majesty's obedience secures all these to the Crown of Great Britain and will be a better estate to the Nation than the mines of Peru are to the Crown of Spain. It is a place of that importance that there is no doubt His Majesty will secure and settle it under his Government; and to facilitate this I wish His Majesty would graciously set up a Civil government there with liberty of conscience to all Protestants and that God would spirit teachers after his own heart to go there and teach the people the good knowledge of his word.

So prays

ROGER WOLCOTT

Maj. Gen^l. to the Army.

The colonial historians all make mention of the demonstrations of exuberant joy with which the intelligence of the reduction of Louisburg was received in the Provinces. Our next letter exhibits this fact in a very vivid light.

We have his Diary again from his embarkation at Louisburg, July 2, on his return home, and his arrival at his residence, July 30. We omit the record of the voyage.

Tuesday July 2^d. I went to view the Island Battery, and from thence on board the Diamond, Ephraim Done Captⁿ to return to N. Engl^d with 77 men mostly invalid, myself very weak and full of pain.

Thursday July 18th In the morning were abreast of Point Juda Wind at S. W. A brisk gale. Turn'd to windward; past through Fisher's Island Sound and by sunset were at anchor in New London Harbor. Saluted the Fort at the Harbor's mouth with three swivels which return^d our cannon, and the Town with seven which return^d an equal number. I was receiv^d by a number of gentlemen on the wharf who gave me a hearty welcome. Took my lodgings at Mr Miller's. Very weak and out of health. Here I tarry^d until Monday 22^d I went with Mr. Griswold to Lyme where I tarry^d until Saturday 27th I set out from Lyme with my Son Erastus, arriv^d at Middletown about sunset very weary — quarter^d at Mr Sage's

Sunday 28th Heard Mr Russell

Monday 29th Went forward in Company with six gentlemen to Weathersfield — weather very wet.

Tuesday 30th Col. Whiting with his troop and sundry gentlemen from Hartford and Weathersfield came to me at my Lodgings, from whence they attended me to my own house at Windsor, where we arriv^d about two afternoon. Here we had a good dinner, drank some bowls of punch &c. and after the discharge of the great Artillery and small arms, gave three Huzzas and parted good friends.

HON^{BLE} SIR

Louisbourg December 13th 1745

Your favour of the 23^d of October Last I received, wherein find that you had received mine of the 20th of Sept^r, it gives me great Pleasure to hear that you was Safe arrived with your Dear family, and had Recovered your health ; I desire that the Almighty will be graciously pleased to Continue your Life and health for a Long Time to Come a Blessing to your King & Country, & that you may yet be Enabled to do more Eminent Service.

I am greatly obliged to you for your Congratulation, and do joyn with you in opinion that the honour done to the Head, is to all the Army.¹ As you Justly Observe there are no Braver, Activer men, than our Country men are and they ought to be Encouraged — I must Acknowledge that this Campaign has bore much upon my Constitution and almost wore me out ; But if it should please him who made us willing to Come on this Expedition, to Call us on another, He Can Support & Carry us through ; and I hope we shall at all times be enabled to rely and trust on him. — The Short Acquaintance I had with you, gave me a great Value & Esteem for you And should have been glad if your Health had permitted you to have tarry^d Longer here ; I hope in a short time to pay you a Visit and talk all our old affairs over ; But if Providence should deny us this favour ; I hope thro' the merits of a Glorious Redeemer, we shall meet in a happy Eternity: We are much Obliged to you for the Chaplain you have sent, and your good Advice, which I always Valued and Honoured.

Be pleased to give my Service to all inquiring friends but more particularly to those that were here with us on this Expedition which I shall always Value & Honour.

FROM GOVERNOR SHIRLEY.

SIR

Boston Dec^r 24, 1745.

Being informed that the Affairs of War are committed by the Govern^t of Connecticut to a Number of Gentlemen of which you are the first in Commission, I am therefore now to inform you that Application has been made to me from the Proprietors & others of the Towns of Stockbridge & Blanford, to desire that they may have some Soldiers sent for their protection, they being much exposed to the Indian enemy ; & the Inhabitants likely to draw off unless they can be soon relieved. I have laid the Affair before the Assembly of this Province, who have desired that I would move the govern^t of Connecticut to send sixty men for the Protection of Blanford & Stockbridge & the Settlements between them, at least till such time as men may be raised in this Province & sent thither.

¹ An allusion to the baronetcy which had been conferred on him.

I must therefore desire that you would with all possible Expedition send such a Force into those Places as may be sufficient for their Defence; Which I am the rather inclined to expect and hope for, because these Places are a Barrier to some part of your Colony, & if they should be deserted your own Towns will be much more exposed to the Enemy; And if I mistake not you have signified your Intention to do something of this Nature in one of your Letters to Col^o Stoddard. You will please to let me have your Answer as soon as may be.

It would have been a great Pleasure to me to have seen you at Louisbourg, I hope you have by this time perfectly recovered your Health, & that the Service you did your Country, for which I think they are much oblig'd to you, as I am myself for the Honour you did my Commission thereby, will not finally prejudice it.

I shall write soon to the Governour; and am with great Regard

SIR

Windsor Dec: 27th 1745

By this I acknowledge y^e favour of yours of y^e 24th Instant & altho' an offensive war against our Enemy in North America has ever been my favorite opinion yett Would omitt nothing necessary & proper for the Defence of the frontiers.

Upon a motion from Coll^o Stoddard, the Councill of War Sent an hundred men to Deerfield & offer^d him fifty more for the Defence of Stockbridge till you Could place a Sufficient Garason, then y^e Coll^o answer^d, he thought ten men from us Would be Sufficient for Stockbridge, accordingly We Sent ten men there.

On the 18th Instant I Rec^d a Letter from Coll^o Stoddard and of the near approach of a considerable force of the Enemy as twas Expected on the frontiers up the River moveing for our Assistance on this Exigency, Imediately we sent up about 150 men, they sett forward the 20th Instant and I have not heard from them since, so that we have now about 260 men on the frontiers in your Government besides 40 in our own, this with what we have at Louisbourg raiseth a charge beyond our power to support, the Colony consist only of Labouring Husbandmen and I suppose the . . . our Currency into the Treasury Annually. Nevertheless in Case of War it is my mind that nothing that is possible to be done should be left undone. I will therefore Imediately advise with the Councill if we shall make up the ten men at Stockbridge to be 50 till you can Supply a Garason there which I hope will be speedily.

I heartily Congratulate your Excellency on your Return to your Government. Indeed during the siege I promised my self a great deall of pleasure if we Could Gitt into the Town, but as it pleased God the next day I was taken with sickness, by the force of which I had no ease then nor in my voyage home nor for some time after my Return, but thro' Mercy I am now Well Recovered. I should not have deprived my self of the Hon^r of Waiting upon you at Louisbourg had my health permitted, however it was a pleasure to me to learn that you were Going to the place where I knew you was so much wanted, pray do me the Hon^r to make my service known to S^r William Peperill at the first oportunity.

The Campain being over I am very contentedly Retired into my own Business, Where I hope I shall have time to Attend any service that the publick or my friends shall Expect from me and especially any Commands your Excellency shall do me the Hon^r to Lay upon me who am your Excellency's

HONOURABLE SIR,

We are very sensible Virtue carries its own Reward, and doubt not of the Solid & lasting Pleasure you have from your own Consciousness of the good Principles, which have excited you to, & carried you thro', the many useful & publick Services you have performed, & by your Example & Address influenced others to do; And how little soever the wise & virtuous are affected by such remote Considerations, as the Opinion & Sentiments of others, yet we could not but think, that common Justice & Gratitude required Our Acknowledgments of the large Share you had in the late Reduction of Cape Breton; to you our eyes were more particularly turned, on our first Application to your Government in this Affair, & we happily found Our Selves not mistaken, by their generous Assistance in that successful Expedition, more particularly obtained by your Care & Influence; for this publick Service & for the just & kind Sentiments you have always had towards this Province on other Occasions, We now publickly profess our Esteem & Obligations, which we shall ever be glad at all Opportunities to Acknowledge.

THE WOLCOTT MEMORIAL.

FROM GOVERNOR SHIRLEY.

SIR,

Boston Febr^y the 4th 1745

I hope you will be pleased to exert your best Endeavours for promoting the raising of mine & Sir William Pepperrell's Regiments within your Colony, and favour Cap^t Gridley with your Advice & Direction in the Service; And this I shall not doubt of as I am perswaded you must have the preservation of Louisbourg, towards the Acquisition of which you have so much Contributed by your personal Services, at Heart. I thank you for the last Supply of men w^{ch} you sent us upon my Letter to you requesting it, & am entirely of your Sentiments y^t it would be more for our Interest to act offensively in the management of the Warr, yⁿ to Content ourselves with being upon the Defensive; As the first measures will indeed not only more effectually Defend our Frontiers by keeping the Enemy at Home, but very much weaken them, at least by being harrassed in their own Country, towards effecting w^{ch} I have brought forward the Consideration of the Affair of the Enemy's Fort at Crown Point, in w^{ch} both Governments, & our Neighbours of New Hampshire, New York, &c. are Concerned; & shall Let you know what this Government proposes for the good of the Common Cause, as soon as we Come to a Determination. Our Proceedings at Crown Point, by opening Lake Champlean to us, would be a Considerable Step towards our penetrating into Canada at a proper Opportunity; the Reduction of w^{ch} Place would indeed Comprehend every thing in Favour of the Colonies, & crown our Success most Completely; & I have accordingly represented it to the Ministry as a matter of the greatest Consequence to his Majesty's Subjects upon this continent.

If you think I may be of Service to you by the Recommendation of any thing in particular in favour of you be pleased to Let me know it & I will serve you to the best of my Power.

I am with great Regard

FROM SIR WILLIAM PEPPERRELL.

HON^{BLE} AND DEAR SIR,Louisbourg April 15th 1746

As I have wrote you at large since I have had any of your Favours, and am greatly hurried, I beg Leave to referr you to Colonels Lothrop and Goodrich for a particular Account of Affairs here ; but having this Opportunity by a Vessel bound to Connecticut, I could not omit my Compliments to You, and just let you know that through God's Goodness, I am still alive. We have endured great Hardships and Anxiety the Winter past, especially on Account of the terrible Sickness and Mortality that has raged amongst us to such a Degree, that it looked sometimes as if the whole Army was destined to Destruction by it ; and which has actually carried off above one third of our Numbers since November. But Blessed be God, he has in the midst of Judgment remembered Mercy, and I can now with Pleasure inform you that it is a Time of General Health in the Garrison. Among those that have been taken away, is the Reverend and valuable Mr Baccus,¹ who was much esteemed here, and his Death greatly lamented.

As his Majesty has been graciously pleased to give me the Command of a Regiment for the Defence of this Place, to be raised in his American Colonies, I hope I shall have the Assistance of the Gentlemen who were with me on the Expedition, and I flatter myself that your Interest will not be wanting to promote my raising Part of it in your Colony. It gives me much Uneasiness that it is put so much out of my Power to reward the good Services of the brave Officers who, by the Blessing of God on their exemplary Bravery and Resolution to surmount all Difficulties in their Way, have gained the noble Acquisition. What little I have in my Power to bestow I shall endeavor to distribute in the most impartial Manner I am able, and sincerely wish it was in my Power to reward every Officer and Soldier that came in that Expedition.

I hope your Government will be so good as to transport what Men shall be raised amongst you in those Vessels that they send to fetch home their Troops now here.

I am with much respect

Your Sincere Friend &

Most Humble Serv^t

W^m PEPPERRELL

There was one result of this successful expedition which excited much unpleasant feeling among the colonists, and to which we find allusions in the papers before us. The matter has been fairly stated by the candid Scotch historian.

“The provincial troops, who performed the original and most substantial part of the enterprise, and who for nearly a year formed the sole British garrison by which Louisburg was occupied, together with the crews of the New England vessels which co-operated with the British ships of war, vainly expected and demanded a share of the prize-money that accrued from the captures. Their claim to participate in this advantage was disallowed by the British Government; and the whole of the prize-money was appropriated to the officers and crews of the royal ships of war. The British Government, though favored by this provincial enterprise with the first ray of success that illustrated its arms during the war, displayed the most illiberal desire to magnify the recruits of the royal and naval force, and to depreciate the fair claim of the colonists to the glory of the conquest. Among the rewards, the title of baronet was conferred as an acknowledgment of the services of Warren, the British commodore, and though a seeming impartiality of recompense was studied, by the communication of the same dignity to Pepperrell, the official accounts of the conquest of Cape Breton, that were published in England, suppressed the merits of the provincial forces in a manner that filled them with equal surprise and resentment, and taught them to consider the reputation of America as a distinct and separate interest, instead of blending it in their regard with the general glory of Britain.”¹

This was wounding the colonists on a tender point. Circumstances had made them warlike; their fire-arms were as familiar to them as their implements of husbandry. Surrounded by savage tribes and hemmed in by the hostile French, warfare with them was traditional. And this was the commencement of a protracted series of conflicts with the hereditary enemy of Britain, in which they discovered, to their chagrin, that their bravery and skill were habitually slighted by the parent government, to whose service they were so generously devoted. In the swamps of Louisburg, in the forests of the Alleghanies, and on the plains of Quebec, the provincial levies were not merely conspicuous, but principal. And when under “their favorite leaders” they had reduced the “impregnable” fortress of the eastern islands and coast; when guided by the prudence and valor of their own Washington they had covered the retreat of Braddock’s rash expedition and saved his army from total destruction; and when at the bidding of the heroic Wolfe, they had scaled the heights of Abraham and stormed the citadel of the north, and found that to others were assigned the honors, trophies, and rewards of achievements which they had performed and victories which they had won, — their self-respect was stung, and the alienated feeling thus produced hastened the day of their independence.

The writer of the letter from which we next give an extract was a prominent citizen of New York, and afterwards one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

FROM THE HON. PHILIP LIVINGSTON.

SIR

New York 12 February 1748

I am Concerned to hear and So are all those who have the hon^r to be acquainted with you that you are not promoted to Some Considerable Post of Profit for your Singular Conduct & behavior in the reduction of Cape Britton, this Step taken to promote those who have not been on the Expedition is Somewhat Extraordinary (and in my opinion) very Imprudent, for this may much discourage the Imediate Service, and be attended with bad Consequences in not being able to Raise the two Regiments. I think you be not well used, be it either willfull or Ignorant the Publick Service must Suffer for Such Conduct. I Expected at least you would have had a Lieu^t Coll^o Post and one of your Sons a Cap^t on the Establishment, which would have been but a reasonable Recompense due for your Services, as you be Justly Entitled to this I hope you may Soon Enjoy it.

Sir, your most Humble Servant

PH. LIVINGSTON.

To the Hon^{ble} Roger Wolcott Esq^r.

In raising the men for the campaigns of the subsequent years, the expeditions against Nova Scotia, Ticonderoga, Crown Point, Niagara, and Quebec, for which Connecticut furnished more than her quota of troops, the influence of her former chief magistrate was efficiently exerted. Our limits forbid us to enlarge; and from the papers before us we give but one letter more.

TO GOVERNOR HAMILTON.¹

SIR

Windsor March 13, 1754.

Yours of the 4th Instant is rec'd & I hope that by your Letter and my Discourse with Mr. Armstrong I am now better Informed than before of the state of the Susquehannah Lands. It is with Concern that we in these parts of the Country continually hear News that the French are blocking up the Avenues of the Country North & West & encroaching upon the lands belonging to the Crown of Great Britain. We fear that this is very much from the Backwardness in the Western Governments in promoting New Settlements, & their being now no unappropriated Lands with us, some of our Inhabitants hearing of this Land at Susquehannah & that it was North of the Grant made to Mr. Penn. & that to Virginia, & upon a design of making a purchase of the Indians & hope to obtain a Grant of it from the Crown, this appearing to be a designe to promote His Majesty's Interest & render the Country more defensible, we were all wishers to it.

But Mr. Armstrong informs me, that this Land is certainly within Mr. Pen's Grant. If so I don't suppose that our people had any purpose to quarrel with Pensilvania, Indeed I don't know the mind of every Private man, but I never heard our leading men express themselves so inclined.

Your proposal to move Mr. Pen and the government of Virginia to promote new settlements in the easiest manner, if elected, may turn the eyes of our people that way, & it is but reasonable that Lands so far from the sea & on the frontiers should have the settlers on it encouraged. In my opinion you may serve your King, your Proprietaries, & your Country in promoting this Scheme, & this may probably draw many of our people to settle in those parts, which I hope will prove Orderly & Industrious Inhabitants, & being used to War may be of good Service on that account. This seems to be a time if ever to promote so good a worke, & if omitted may prove our Last Opportunity.

We in New England from our beginning have often had Wars with the French & Indians, & Hitherto made our part good with them. It is probable the War will extend in the Western parts, & you must come to a push with the French which shall be the Masters of the Country, in which case every man will be serviceable according to his Strength of body, and Resolution of mind. The Resolution of the Soldier will be very much in fighting for his Country according to his Interest in it, and if I must go out, Let me have an Army of freeholders or freeholders' sons.

I have seen an instance of this in the siege of Louisbourg. We had but about 3700 men, & before we had done about 700 of these were Lost or Invalids. With these we beat the French at our Landing & besett the City. The walls were 34, 30, & in some places 20 feet high from the bottom of the Trench, & built so regular that one or more Cannon swept every face of it. The Trench was 11 feet deep, & 10 rods wide, without it a picket and glacis, on the walls were mounted 101 Cannon &

78 Swivells, in the Town were 5 Mortars & all warlike Stores, Besides this we had the Grand Battery and the Island Battery to subdue. In the Town were 2100 Men and Lads able to bear Arms. Before these walls we lay 49 dayes, hourly expecting an Army the Enemy had raised to take Anapolis would be upon our backs. We advanced our Battery within 40 rods of the Wall ; we accounted we received from them 9000 Great Shot & Bombs ; yet I never heard a man in this time, excepting those in the Hospital, move to go home till we had taken the City, and we took it. God gave us the victorie, but humanly speaking it was because our Soldiers were freeholders and freeholders' sons, and the men within the walls were Mercenary troops.

Whenever the War commences with you, I think a small Army of such men, well Appointed, and Disciplined, will soon Convince the French of their Error in provoking and Insulting of you. I think a few of them will be more than a Match for a Multitude of their soldiers brought up in slaverie & that have nothing to fight for of their own. This brings to my mind a story a Gentleman told me, that he went in to see his Negro man then dying, and seeing him fast going said to him, Cuffee, you are fast going, are you not sorry? No, massa, says the fellow, the Loss will not be mine.

Pardon the length of this Letter, and be assured that I am with great Esteem

Your Hon^{rs}

Most obedient very Humble Serv^t

R. WOLCOTT

*To the Hon^{ble} James

CALL OF REV. MR. PERRY.¹

At a meeting of the Second Church of Christ in Windsor, regularly convened on the 15th day of April, A.D. 1755, the Hon. Roger Wolcott, Moderator, Matthew Rockwell, chosen Clerk ; the following call to Mr. Joseph Perry to be the pastor of this Church in the Lord, together with the declaration, &c. of the Faith and Order of this Church is voted and subscribed unto by the members of this Church.

The call thus extended was accepted by the pastor-elect, and the usual provision for an ecclesiastical council was made by the Church.

Messrs Roger Wolcott, Jr., William Wolcott, Matthew Rockwell, and Abiel

Abbott are appointed a Committee to wait upon the Ordination Council, to answer such inquiries, and do such services, as there shall be occasion for.

N. B. Governor Wolcott drew up the Covenant on the Church's part, and when he laid it before the Church he informed them, that by the Westminster Confession of Faith they were to understand the same as the Assembly's Catechism. So that the faith which this Church hath subscribed unto is contained in the Assembly's Catechism.

Gov. Roger Wolcott published during his lifetime, so far as is known to us, three pieces or works. The first was poetical, being a little volume of seventy-eight pages, 18mo, with the following title:—

“Poetical Meditations, Being the Improvement of some Vacant Hours, by ROGER WOLCOTT, Esq; With a Preface by the Reverend Mr. Bulkley of Colchester. New London: Printed and Sold by T. Green 1725.”

The collection consists, besides a dedication to the Rev. Timothy Edwards, of seven other pieces in verse, mostly religious. The longest of them is historical, and has been reprinted by the Massachusetts Historical Society.¹ It is entitled,—

“A Brief Account of the Agency of the Honourable John Winthrop, Esq; in the Court of King Charles the Second, Anno Dom. 1662, When he Obtained for the Colony of Connecticut His Majesty's Gracious Charter.”

The key-note of the sentiment which pervades it appears in the closing lines of the prayer to God, which he puts into the mouths of the colonial forces under Mason, at the moment of their terrible onset upon the Pequots in 1637.

“Let the Proud Dwellers of the Nations see
 ‘There's none that is Invincible but thee,
 ‘So shall the Wrath of Man Honour thy Name,
 ‘And this shall their remaining Wrath restrain:
 ‘And this thy Peoples Thankful Hearts shall raise

We take leave of the venerable Governor as a poet¹ with the following notice from a recent work, entitled "The Poets of Connecticut, with Biographical Sketches; edited by Rev. Charles W. Everest:"—

"We commence our work with the name of HON. ROGER WOLCOTT. Although his verses are quaint relics of a by-gone age, their author must not be passed by in silence. He is the Chaucer of our 'goodly companie,' and must lead the van of the 'Poets of Connecticut.' He was compelled to rely entirely upon his own exertions, both for his temporal support and his acquisitions in learning. To this circumstance it is probably owing that his name has come down to us. Had his childhood been spent in pampered indulgence, his youth might have been wasted in slothful indolence, and his name might never have graced the page of history, nor been known upon the scroll of letters."²

His second publication was ecclesiastical, being a controversial letter to a clergyman, an octavo tract of twenty-four pages, with the following title:—

"The New-English Congregational Churches, are, and always have been, Con-sociated Churches; and their liberties greater and better founded, in their Platform of Church Discipline agreed to at Cambridge, 1648, than what is contained in the Agreement at Say-brook, 1708; Asserted in a letter to the Rev. Mr. Noah Hobart." Dated Windsor, April 25, 1760. Printed at Boston, 1761.

This tract is written with considerable spirit, and is an earnest vindication of the ancient liberties of the Congregational Churches.³ The writer's attention had been directed to the subject many years before, in connection with some points of church polity and discipline which came up for discussion between the Rev. Mr. Edwards and the church of South Windsor, in which he had maintained the same ground. He subsequently embodied the facts and arguments of that controversy in a manuscript narrative, from which some passages have been transferred to the printed pamphlet. The former was prepared for publication, but was not printed. It was entitled, —

“A Narrative of the Troubles in the Second Church, from the year 1735 to the year 1741. With the Reasons why the Brethren of that Church Adhere to the Order of Church Government assented to by the Churches of New England, A: Dom: 1648; and Refuse to Submit to the Order of Discipline agreed upon at Saybrook, 1708.”

The opening letter in the manuscript volume, addressed to Mr. Edwards, and evidently from the pen of Gov. Roger Wolcott, sufficiently indicates the respective positions of the parties. The whole discussion shows that the Governor and the intelligent laymen associated with him were much in advance of their pastor and some of his ministerial brethren in the assertion of the fundamental principles of religious freedom. The reader who is interested in the matter will find the details in the manuscript referred to, in the Wadsworth Athenæum.

The third piece which Governor Wolcott published over his name was political, being “A Letter to the Freemen of Connecticut,” which appeared in the “Connecticut Gazette,” March 28, 1761. We extract a sentence or two, to show its drift: —

“I am now advanced into the eighty third year of my age, and for the far greater part of it have been of your number. In this time you have been pleased to confer many Honours upon me and intrust me with much of your Public Business.

“I have no desire to appear in public: but seeing the prevalence of this Ambition or Party Spirit and fearing the confusion it may produce: it has moved me to give myself and you the trouble of this Letter, if possible to secure our Foundation laid in you. If this in any way can be done, I am happy — if not, I shall go to the Grave in more Peace, having washed my Hands of so great a Mischief.”

A writer in the next number of the “Gazette,” who signs himself “A Freeman,” cordially thanks him, “the father of our commonwealth, for his aged, and as it were dying counsel to us, to remember our exalted privileges.” He survived some years longer, and died May 17, 1767. Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season.

An obituary sketch appeared in the "Connecticut Courant" of July 27 succeeding, entitled, —

"Memoirs of the Life and Character of the Honorable ROGER WOLCOTT, Esq., late Governor of Connecticut."

We omit some portions which have been anticipated.

"This great and good man was descended from honorable parents. He was one of those happy few whose minds seem to be formed with an original strength and force, not to be suppressed by misfortune or want of exterior advantages; and though this did not appear early, yet, like the hidden gem in the mountain, was daily ripening, in due time to be produced to light, polished, and make a shining appearance in many exalted stations in life.

"As soon as he left his master, he was determined to have a liberal education, if possible, but on taking an inventory of his estate, he found it not to amount to fifty pounds, so he was obliged to drop that design; but, still unalterably determined not to remain in a state of ignorance, he borrowed such books as he could get, and read with attention; and, having a retentive memory and solid natural judgment, what he read he retained, digested, and made his own. He got an acquaintance with men of the best abilities of his time, and by an indefatigable industry and application got acquainted with most branches of literature; for he was an exact chronologer, well acquainted with history, ecclesiastical and civil, and geography, both ancient and modern, and with the Newtonian philosophy, and most of the curious discoveries of the moderns.

"He had a taste for the Belles Lettres; and some poetical pieces he has left behind, to show that, had his Genius been well cultivated, he might have made a considerable figure among the Sons of the Muses.

"But the law and arts of government were his favorite study. Accordingly, he soon made his appearance at the barr, where he distinguished himself so far as to be soon called into public employment.

"He filled the post of Governor, as he had the rest, to good acceptance, till the affair of the Spanish ship, a considerable part of whose rich cargo being embezzled through the indolence, inadequateness, and inattention of the Spanish merchant, the freemen were by some designing persons made to believe that that loss was occasioned through Governor Wolcott's fault, and that the people must be taxed for repayment.

"He retired with composed, unruffled grandeur, cheerfully referring it to Divine Providence to find means to evidence that innocence that he had an inward consciousness of; nor were his expectations disappointed, for we suppose every one is now fully convinced that that affair was well conducted, — and that to a wonder, considering its suddenness, and the little acquaintance this Colony had in affairs of this nature.

“After his retirement from public life, he divided his time between devotion, reading (which was principally church history, and the works of the most celebrated divines, especially Doct. Owen and Doct. Bates), agriculture, — his beloved employ, — and the enjoyment of his friends.

“And though his constitution was excellent, yet as he knew that, in the course of nature, the time of his departure was at hand, his great and constant business was to stand with his loyns girt and his lamp burning, waiting for the coming of his Lord. Thus he lived till about the middle of April last, when he complained of a disorder in his legs, which soon turned of a livid colour, his strength from that time declining fast, till Sunday, May 17th, on which day, about noon, his constitution (firm as it was), not being able longer to support itself, sunk under the weight of old age, he being then in the eighty-ninth year of his age.

“His funeral was, agreeable to his own directions, attended without much pomp or show; at which time the Hon. Deputy Governor Trumball, and Hezekiah Huntington, Esq., from the Upper House, and eight of the principal members from the Lower House, being specially appointed for that purpose by the General Assembly, then sitting in Hartford, attended, and delivered a message to the mourners, wherein they did honor to the wisdom, patriotic spirit, religion, and virtue that adorned his life, and expressed their full approbation of his public services in the various posts he sustained in this Colony.

“His body was strong and well proportioned; his countenance and deportment peculiarly adapted to command reverence and esteem; his wit was ready, and uncommonly bright; his method of reasoning (free from sophistry) was clear, nervous, and manly, as became a generous inquirer after truth, and not a noisy wrangler for victory only. He was a sincere, unfailing friend to every industrious, virtuous, honest man, who acted his part well, whatever was his station in life; but the indolent sluggard, and soft, enervated, unexerting debauchee was his aversion. But, above all, persons of true piety were his delight. He was a true friend to regular and firm government, and was an equal enemy to tyranny on the one hand, and licentiousness on the other. He thought that the practice of industry, economy, frugality, and temperance was the only way to relieve this Colony, and America in general, from their present distresses, and therefore was often recommending them.

“He was a wise legislator and an able statesman. While he was a judge, he held the balance of justice with a steady unwavering hand ; and being far superior to venality, or the influence of personal, family, or party connections, he pronounced the law impartially, on all the causes brought before him. As a governor he appeared to advantage : this was his proper element, for he seemed originally formed to govern. He was a kind and provident husband and parent. His moral character was unblemished, his religion and piety were unaffected ; and he died as he had long lived, a member of the Second Church in Windsor. In short, we take this to be one of the few lives spent in so useful and exemplary a manner, that 'tis worth while to hold it up in view of the world, as being in general worthy of their imitation.”

We have a copy of the funeral discourse of his pastor, twenty-eight pages quarto, entitled, —

“The Character of Moses illustrated and improved in a Discourse occasioned by the Death of the Honorable ROGER WOLCOTT, Esq., of Windsor, who for several years was Governor of the Colony of Connecticut, and died May 17, 1767, in the 89th Year of his Age. Preached the first Opportunity after his Funeral. By Joseph Perry, A. M., Pastor of the Second Church of Christ in Windsor.

“Isaiah lvii. 1, 2. The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart ; and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken from the evil to come. He shall enter into peace ; they shall rest in their beds, each one walking in his uprightness.

“Psalm cxii. 6. The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.

“Psalm lviii. 11. Verily there is a reward for the righteous.

“Hartford : Printed by Thomas Green.”

Text : Deuteronomy xxxiv. 5. So Moses, the Servant of the Lord, died there, in the land of Moab, according to the Word of the Lord.

The text indicates the strain of the discourse ; we subjoin a few paragraphs : —

“He seldom ever undertook any business but what he accomplished, and carried through, however difficult it might be. At the head of government, he was a wise and able governor ; at the head of an army, a general true to his king and country ; on the bench, a just and upright judge ; and at the bar, an able lawyer. For all these great and beneficial services he received the thanks and enjoyed the smiles of his country, and has now received the approbation of the LORD, in the heavenly world, whose servant he was. In his own person he was frugal, chaste, and temperate. View him at the head of a family, he was a kind husband, a good father, and a compassionate master. He was a member of this church for a great many years; a steady professor of the Christian name, a constant and devout attendant on public worship and holy ordinances. He was one of your praying rulers; had the grace as well as the gift of prayer. He made the Bible his test, and had a particular affection for the peculiar doctrines of grace, rightly understood; and with a catholick spirit, embraced the Calvinistick scheme.

“He was able to make a good figure, in conversation, among the learned, upon almost any subject, and had a good acquaintance both with men and things. He was very easy of access; no forbidding air sat upon his countenance; free, affable, and unaffected, in conversation; he had a peculiar talent in making himself agreeable to all sorts of company, so far as innocency would permit. He was a man of ready wit and great humor. In the later period of his life he devoted himself to reading, meditation, prayer, and self-examination. The authors he read principally were the most approved in divinity, and often feasted himself with the great Doctor Owen, for whose works he had a particular affection. The subjects of his meditation and frequent conversation were the transcendant perfections of God, the displays of them more especially in the Christian institution: of this scheme of salvation he frequently conversed with great delight and admiration.

“On making him a visit, in his last sickness, a few days before his death, I was surprised to find how well he retained his intellectuals, and glad to see how well he supported a firm trust in GOD, and dependence on CHRIST, and a good hope of glory.

“The General Assembly, from a grateful sense they had of his past services, and out of regard to so worthy a character, chose a committee from both Houses, to pay their respects, in the name of the Assembly, on the solemn occasion of his funeral. Thus lived, thus died, and thus was buried, that eminent servant of the LORD, whom we may, for his resemblance, in many instances, to the illustrious Hebrew in the text, call the Moses in our Israel.”

We have no portrait of him. In one of the political squibs of the day he is referred to as “stately, smoking Roger.” For the following description of his public appearance, in his official costume, we are indebted, through a friend (Hon. Isaac W. Stuart), to a lady in Wethersfield, Miss Marsh, the daughter of a venerable clergyman long since deceased, who gives it as she received it from her mother, who had often seen him in her childhood:—

He was a visitor at her father's, and the costume of an officer under the regal government was too imposing to pass unnoticed. Several times a week he rode out on horseback, and never appeared abroad but in full-dress.

He wore a suit of scarlet broadcloth. The coat was made long, with wide skirts, and trimmed down the whole length in front with gilt buttons, and broad gilt vellum button-holes, two or three inches in length. The cuffs were large and deep, reaching nearly to the elbows, and were ornamented, like the sides of the coat, as were also the pocket-lids, with gilt vellum button-holes and buttons. The waistcoat had skirts, and was richly embroidered. Ruffles at the bosom and over the hands were of lace. He had a flowing wig, and a three-cornered hat with a cockade; and rode slowly and stately a large black horse, whose tail swept the ground.

A little north of his residence in South Windsor was a public road to the river, where he owned a ferry, connecting with Plymouth Meadow on the other side, the right of which was granted him by the General Court, in 1725. His house, which is one of the recollections of the writer's boyhood, was about a third of a mile north of the present meeting-house. He built it in 1704, the year of the attack on Deerfield, and the walls of the front room were covered with a painting descriptive of that scene. The house was taken down a few years since, and some of the panels which belonged to that apartment are preserved in the neighborhood as relics. He spent the last years of his life with his daughter, Mrs. Newberry, in Old Windsor, and was buried there with his fathers, although his home had been on the other side of the river. His estate was inventoried at £1,805 4s. 2d., and was distributed among his surviving sons and daughters, and the children of his deceased son Roger.

TANKARD AND CUP.

The silver tankard and silver cup, mentioned in his will, and which are still in the family, bear each an engraving of the Wolcott arms, and also the initials R^WS. The church in South Windsor has two valuable communion cups of silver, which he ordered from England and presented to it, bearing the initials, the one of his own name, the other of his wife's, with the date: "R. W. 1756," "S. W. 1756." It is not improbable that all these pieces were procured at the same time. The tankard is mentioned again in the will of Judge Erastus Wolcott, from whom it passed to his son, Capt. Erastus Wolcott; from the latter to his daughter, Juliana Wolcott; and from her to her step-son, the writer of this, in whose possession it now is (1879), its fifth owner, each representing a generation. The cup and gold buttons are now in possession of Frederick H. Wolcott, of Astoria, Long Island, N. Y.

We are indebted to Bierstadt and the artotype process for the accurate representation which we give of both tankard and cup.

We have devoted more space than we purposed to this worthy patriarch, without exhausting our materials. His character cannot fail to command the veneration of the Family, to the latest generation, as that of one who was neither elated by prosperity nor cast down by adversity; who, in each extreme of fortune and under every variety of temptation, was true to his principles, and maintained throughout a simple integrity, with a manly self-reliance and a calm faith in God.

It was our purpose to let him retire from these pages in the garb of his own sentiments, which to us appears richer than any biographical sketch. There remain, among the manuscripts before us, two of his longer religious Meditations, — one of them founded on a passage in a book of the Apocrypha, the other on a chapter in the book of Proverbs. We had selected brief extracts from each, but refrain from giving them, on account of the length of the preceding sketch. They justify the strain in which the writer in the "Connecticut Gazette," whom we have already quoted, addresses him in conclusion:—

"I congratulate you on all the good Publick Services you have done for us, You may now sing a Requiem to your Soul, and join the rapturous song of good old Simeon, 'Now, Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in Peace,' and, having been faithful in a few things, may you be made Ruler over many."

His monument in the old Windsor churchyard is a tablet of brown stone, supported by five columns, to which the name of his wife has lately been added. We give an engraving by Clement, from a sketch by Ellsworth.

It is stated by Felt that John Wolcott, Esq., was for a time engaged in mercantile business with Col. William Brown. He represented the town in the General Court, was a justice of the peace in 1733, and in 1737 succeeded Benjamin Marston, Esq., as high sheriff of Essex County. She was the daughter of THOMAS SAUNDERS. The Wolcotts had lived for several generations at Tolland, just across a stream, and Henry was undoubtedly born there. He was a well to do country gentleman. In 1630 he came to America as a member of Rev. John Warham's congregation, and was one of the founders of Dorchester, Mass. In 1636 Mr. Warham's flock, comprising most of Dorchester, moved on to Connecticut, where they settled Windsor, and this village is considered the ancestral home of the Wolcotts in this country. Henry Wolcott was a prominent citizen there, and held various offices. He and his wife were buried in the old cemetery there, and their tomb is still standing, or at least it was in 1916. They had seven children, among them

SIMON WOLCOTT b ---- 1625, probably at Tolland, Eng. or else at Lydiard St. Lawrence. d Sept. 11, 1687 at Windsor. Mar. at Windsor Oct. 17, 1661

XXII. THOMAS WOLCOTT (79) married (1st), Aug. 12, 1725, Catharine, daughter of Moses Loomis, of Windsor; she was born Dec. 19, 1702, and died March 24, 1738. In the "Record of Burials" in East Windsor we find the entry, "1723 — Oct. 5. Thomas Wolcott's wife." If this is correct, the above was a second marriage.

Mr. Thomas Wolcott was one of the first settlers of Tolland, and resided there a number of years. The names of Henry and Simon Wolcott appear at the head of the list of the original proprietors of this town. Tolland and the adjacent town of Wellington (now Willington), in which they were also proprietors, were named by them in honor of the seats of the family in England. Children: —

- 156 — 1. Thomas, b. Sept. 1, 1726; married Catharine Sackett, of Dover, N. Y., where he lived and left a family.
 157 — 2. Miriam, b. Feb. 26, 1728; married Stone Mills, of South Windsor.
 158 — 3. Luke, b. Sept. 4, 1730; married Jerusha, daughter of Joseph Diggins, of South Windsor; d. March 11, 1762, leaving children.
 159 — 4. Jane Catharine, b. Feb. 22, 1733; m. Nov. 18, 1751, Ellis Russell, of Windsor.
 160 — 5. Redexelana, b. May 16, 1735; m. June 8, 1756, John Loomis, of Windsor.
 161 — 6. Rachel, b. April 4, 1737; m. Sept. 15, 1757, Elijah Loomis, of Vernon.

After the death of his wife, Mr. Thomas Wolcott removed to Taghanic, N. Y., where he is said to have married again, and had several children. The names of nine have been reported to us, additional to those above given, though with but a single date. Their descendants reside in Copake, Dover, Taghanic, Hillsdale, and Ancoram. We give the descendants of the one the date of whose birth is reported; but, though they apparently belong to our lineage, the connecting link at this point does not as yet rest on historic evidence.

- 162 — 7. Gideon, b. Feb. 24, 1750. See XXXIX.

XXIII. PETER WOLCOTT (80) married, May 30, 1733, Mrs. Susanna Cornwell, daughter of William Hamlin, of Middletown; died, December, 1733, in Cork, Ireland. Child: —

“The affection of Mr. Robinson towards his first wife, with whom he was united a little over two years, was the earliest and probably the most devoted attachment of his life. He loved her for her personal qualities, and cherished the highest respect for her character. This, indeed, is manifested in the inscription upon her tomb-stone:”²—

Wife of the Rev. William Robinson.

She was born at East Windsor, Sept. 28, 1754,

She was peculiarly beloved in life, and at death universally lamented.

She died of the small pox in the 28th year

Hers was the character so strikingly described in the 31st Chap. of Proverbs; and to none could the closing verse be more appropriately applied than to her: “Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all.”

Capt. Gideon Wolcott commanded one of the companies raised by the colonists in 1760 against the French and Indians. We have only this tradition of him, that "his contemporaries and those who knew him best regarded him as one of nature's noblemen." The inventory of his estate at his death was rendered at £2,557 2s. 3d.

THE OLD WOLCOTT ELM IN SOUTH WINDSOR.

This patriarchal tree, which cannot be traced to the hand that planted it, we associate with the name of the family because it stood opposite the original estates of its members; both sides of the street at this point having been occupied, early and late, by them and their kindred. The first settlers and their immediate descendants planted a row of elms, fronting their farms, along the middle of the street in almost a continuous line for a mile south of the meeting-house, with a carriage-road on each side. Those whose recollections reach back to the first quarter of this century remember long sections of this row of trees, that had attained gigantic stature, which were felled, in order that the street might be graded into one dry carriage-road. There are spots where the double road still (1879) exists, separated by the original trees or their successors. At the point where the Great Elm stands, the west side of the street rises by a gentle swell to the site of the Samuel Wolcott residence, of which we give a drawing, throwing the carriage-road into the middle of the street; and this tree, with its mates, was planted on its level east side. A friend who measured its trunk for us, ascertained that at the height of five feet it was twenty-three feet in circumference, and at the height of eight feet, twenty-nine and one-half feet in circumference. Learning that Dr. Gurdon W. Russell, of Hartford, had examined it with the eye of a naturalist, we applied to him for his observations, and he has kindly furnished other measurements: —

The spread of the branches from north to south is one hundred and two feet in diameter. There are numerous branches starting out from the trunk at the height of about eight feet. The tree is one hundred and eight feet in height. It is a most noble specimen of the elm, and is still healthy and vigorous, and likely to live for many years. I know of only one larger; that is standing in Broad Street, Wethersfield, four miles below Hartford.

He considers it to be less than two centuries old,—an age which he thinks the elm rarely attains. It may be somewhat less, and still be coeval with the first settlers. If not planted during the residence of Henry Wolcott on the site opposite (as I am inclined to believe), it was certainly standing here while the spot was the home of Gideon Wolcott.

An admirable drawing of it has been made by E. W. Ellsworth, and Harroun and Bierstadt have reproduced its exact form and appearance. Bearing in mind that this sketch represents an altitude of one hundred and eight feet, and a corresponding breadth, we get an idea of the majesty of this monarch of the plain. From photograph by E. P. Kellogg, Hartford.

XXV. WILLIAM WOLCOTT (86) graduated at Yale College, 1734. As was common in that day, he was evidently fitted for college by the pastor. Among the items charged to the father in Rev. T. Edwards's rate-book we find: "To instructing his son William in the Latin & Greek Tongues." He was tutor in the college, 1735-36. He married, Feb. 26, 1747, Abigail, daughter of Abiel Abbott; she was born Nov. 25, 1718. Children:—

"The Hon. Oliver Ellsworth was born at Windsor, in the county of Hartford, April 29, 1745. He entered Yale College in the year 1762, and continued in that seminary three years, when he went to the college at Princeton in New Jersey, and there finished his education. He was admitted to the bar in 1771, and soon rose to great distinction among his professional

We append in the note some account of this distinguished gentleman. His widow died Aug. 4, 1818. The drawing-room of their mansion in Windsor is graced with full-length portraits of both, painted by Earle, on one canvas. This apartment, which retains some of its original furniture, is one of the historic rooms of Connecticut; Washington and Lafayette have been the guests of this house. Among the pictures on its walls is a piece of embroidery presented to the Chief Justice by the First Napoleon. This pleasant family-seat, shaded by the now stately elms which he planted, is still (1879) in the possession of the family.

Four of their sons were graduates of Yale College: Oliver Ellsworth (1799), also a tutor, died 1805; Martin Ellsworth (1801); William Wolcott Ellsworth (1810); Henry Leavitt Ellsworth (1810). William Wolcott Ells- brethren. Upon being appointed State attorney for the county, he removed to Hartford, where he resided several years, and was universally considered as at the head of the bar. In 1776, he was appointed by the Legislature a delegate to the Continental Congress. In 1780, he was elected a member of the Council, a place which he occupied for four years; and in 1784 he was appointed a judge of the Superior Court. In 1787, he was chosen a member of the convention which formed the Constitution of the United States, and was one of the most able and efficient members of that dignified assembly. When the document was submitted to the people of the States for their approbation, he was elected a member of the State Convention, chosen for that purpose, and probably had more influence in procuring its adoption than any other member of that body. At the organization of the national government, he was appointed a Senator of the United States. He held his seat in that body until March, 1796, when he was appointed Chief Justice of the United States. In 1799, he was nominated Envoy Extraordinary to France, and having finished the negotiations with which he and his associates were intrusted, with the French government, he visited England for the benefit of his health, which had been seriously impaired by the voyage to Europe. Whilst he was in England, he resigned his office of Chief Justice of the United States. Immediately after his return to this country, he was elected a member of the Council, and was appointed Chief Justice of the State, an office which he declined, in consequence of the state of his health. He remained, however, in the Council until his death, which occurred Nov. 26, 1807."

"Mr. Ellsworth was formed to be a great man: his imagination was uncommonly vivid, his wit brilliant and piercing, his logical powers very great, and his imagination fitted for capacious views and vast designs. Intense thought appeared to be his amusement, and he unfolded his views on every occasion with an arrangement singularly clear and luminous. His eloquence strongly resembled that of Demosthenes, — grave, forcible, and inclined to severity. In the numerous public stations which he filled during a period of more than thirty years, he regularly rose to the first rank of reputation; and to this superiority of intelligence his moral attributes were peculiarly suited. In private life he was just and amiable; in public life his impartiality, fairness, integrity, and patriotism awed and defied even calumny and suspicion. Retentive as his memory was, he must, from intense application to public affairs, have lost much of that ready recollection and that exact knowledge of the law which are necessary for the bench. Yet he sustained the office of Chief Justice of the United States, with high and increasing reputation, throughout every part of the Union. As a senator he was pre-eminent. His mind discerned political subjects with an intuition peculiar to himself. It may be added, that in the highest excitement of party spirit no attack was ever made upon his public integrity or private worth."¹

"He died greatly regretted, as in his life he had been admired for his extraordinary endowments, his accomplishments as an advocate, his integrity as a judge, his patriotism as a legislator and ambassador, and his exemplariness as a Christian."²

"He was a lover of the peace and order of society; one that respected the public institutions of Christianity; a professor of the religion of Jesus from his youth; a constant attendant upon the worship of God in his sanctuary, and on the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. In private life he was regular and strictly temperate. In his intercourse with men he was social, easy of access, and from the improvement of his mind, and that fund of useful knowledge which he possessed, his conversation was improving and highly entertaining."³

William Wolcott, Esq., resided in South Windsor, and was a justice of the peace. Among the papers of Mr. E. N. Sill, before named (p. 63), is a manuscript folio, in paper covers, of one hundred and fifty pages, entitled, "Henry Allyn's Book of Record: Containing Judgments of Court, Recognizances, &c., made and performed by me as one of His Majesties Justices of y^e peace for y^e County of Hartford for y^e Year of our Lord—1734." The record covers several years. In some instances, it seems, the magistrates sat as a board, and we copy one of the cases in which Mr. Wolcott officiated. At this session, six persons were separately arraigned, of apparently respectable social standing, all of whom were charged with the same offence, were each adjudged guilty, and received each the same sentence. It is a most striking, and in our day strange, illustration of the state of public sentiment on such questions, in Connecticut, a century and a half ago.

Mr. Wolcott was for many years a representative of the town in the General Assembly. He took an active part, as a civilian, in the stirring discussions which preceded and attended the War of the Revolution; was chairman of the Town Committee of Correspondence, and of the County Committee of Observation. The latter held important meetings at Hartford, over which he presided; we copy extracts from the minutes adopted at two of them:—

“At a meeting of the Committees of Observation in the several Towns in the County of Hartford, to consult and resolve on the most effectual and uniform Measures for carrying the Association of the Continental Congress into Execution, held at Hartford the 25th Day of January, A.D. 1775.

“WILLIAM WOLCOTT, Esq., Chairman.

“WILLIAM WOLCOTT, Esq., in the Chair,

His will was dated July 31, 1791; its preamble recites:—

Being far advanced in age, and my departure from this world draweth nigh—commending my Soul to God who gave it, hoping for a happy immortality beyond, thro' the mediation of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and my Body after my decease to a decent burial in the Earth from whence it was taken, etc.

Sacred to the memory of WILLIAM WOLCOTT, Esq. who died May 22, 1799, aged 88 years.

He possessed an enlightened mind,
Aided by a liberal education,
And in early life dedicated himself
To the service of God, and of mankind.
He sustained several important
Offices in this state, and discharged
The duties of them with fidelity.
Throughout a prolonged life
He was a pillar of the church and an Ornament to his Christian profession.
The memory of the just is blessed,
His life was pure, beneficent, approved
Of God and man, and happy was his end. (Epitaph.)

Major Roger Wolcott was contemporary with Jonathan Edwards. There was less than a year's difference in their ages; and their birthplaces — their fathers' residences — were not half a mile apart, on the main street in South Windsor. His own residence is said to have been the estate adjoining his uncle Henry's on the south, about a mile south of the meeting-house, on the west side of the street, — the place afterwards owned by Mr. Elihu Wolcott, and where the writer was born. The house, with some additions, is still (1879) in good preservation.

He was a Representative of the town in the General Assembly, a Major of the Connecticut troops, a member of the Council, a Judge of the Superior Court, and one of the Revisers of the laws of the State. His premature removal by death defeated and disappointed the general desire and purpose of the freemen to elevate him to the highest office in their gift.

He was one of three Commissioners appointed by the Colony to meet the Commissioners of the other colonies in convention at Albany, June, 1754, to arrange a plan of union for the several colonies. The Connecticut delegation dissented from the plan then proposed, and it fell through.

None of his papers have come down to us, but we have the testimony of his contemporaries to his high standing and worth. A writer in the "Connecticut Courant," under date of March 16, 1767, arguing against the propriety of having two of the leading offices in the government filled at the same time by members of the same family, cites the following illustration:—

"When the Honourable Governour Wolcott was at the head of this government, his worthy Son, since deceased, was in the nomination (for the Council) a Gentleman universally known, and universally esteemed, loved, and admired by the Freemen of this Colony, yet they omitted advancing him into the Council, until the Dismission of his honoured Father."

His pastor, the Reverend Joseph Perry, in the funeral sermon for his father, who survived him several years, pays the following tribute to his virtues:—

"One Son, especially, whose memory is dear to this place and government; an ornament to the family, employed and approved of in many of the most important places of public trust, but was taken away suddenly; of whom it may be said, his sun set before noon,—I mean before he had arrived at that pitch of honor and usefulness there seemed to be the fairest prospect of,—the Hon. Roger Wolcott, Jun., Esq., of Windsor, a member of his Majesty's Council for the Colony of Connecticut, and one of the judges of the hon. the Superior Court for said Colony. This gentleman was universally esteemed for his distinguished accomplishments, natural and acquired. He was an able statesman, a most reliable friend, and an exemplary Christian. By his death, not only his bereaved family and near relatives were put into tears, but the town and government also gave expression of deep resentment and bitter grief."

Among our books is a pamphlet of ten octavo pages, with the title,—

"Judge Wolcott. A Funeral Poem upon ROGER WOLCOTT, Esq.; Who was one of the Honorable Council of the Colony of Connecticut, and a Judge of their Superior Court, who died October 19th 1759, in the 56th Year of his Age. Inscribed to William Wolcott, Esq.

“My whole Life tells me, that a just Demand for Esteem is sacred, but rare.
We may well afford to pay it where it is due. The Centaur not fabulous.

“New-Haven; Printed by James Parker & Co., 1760.”

Of this tribute to his memory by some unknown friend we give the concluding lines:—

“Strong was his moral taste ; his sense as strong
Of his own weakness, as of right and wrong.
His humble trust secured the Almighty’s aid ;
He feared not man, nor of the grave afraid,
Peaceful and calm the dreary vale he trod,
Sweet sleeps his flesh ; his spirit’s with his God.”

A writer in the “Connecticut Gazette,” Dec. 1, 1759, offers an extended poetical “epitaph” upon him, which contains a glowing description of the “manly grace” of his person, and of the excellent qualities of his mind and heart.

 201—13. Elizabeth, b. Jan. 13, 1763; married Elizur Wolcott (176), of South Windsor.

Dr. Alexander Wolcott accompanied his father as surgeon in the expedition against Louisburg. He removed from New Haven after his last marriage, and settled in Windsor as a practising physician, and soon distinguished himself in his profession. He is said to have been “a man of commanding personal appearance and of great talents,” and he was called to take an active and prominent part in public affairs, which were becoming critical. He was a Justice of the Peace, and repeatedly a Representative of the town in the General Assembly, in which he took an active and influential part in the discussion which preceded the Declaration of Independence. During the War of the Revolution he was chairman of the Windsor Committee of Inspection, and was placed by the General Assembly at the head of a commission to examine applicants for the post of surgeon and surgeon's mate.

“ His library was large and well selected, and its array of folios, mostly in Latin, would make a student of this day shudder with apprehension. Dr. Wolcott was in the practice of reading these ponderous tomes of Latin and Greek. He had a faithful servant, originally a slave (Primus), to escort him when he visited his patients, and aid him in preparing medicines for the sick. In this way Primus and his master lived on for years, till it occurred to the latter that the old negro should be released from bondage. Primus was free, but he did not waste months in doubt respecting his future course. He immediately removed to the opposite bank of the river (the east side), and was at once recognized as a doctor, and as such frequently employed. On one occasion he was requested to visit a sick child in Poquonnock, — the west side. Primus obeyed the summons; and on his way home rapped at the door of his old master, who came out to inquire what was wanted. ‘ Nothing particular, Master, I called to say that I was sent for to see a child of our old neighbor, but found it to be a very simple case, and said to the mother it was not necessary to send so far for a doctor, for you would have done just as well as any one else.’ ”¹

Like his father, he occasionally wrote verses, and we insert the opening and closing lines of one of his pieces: —

A Penitential Prayer.

Almighty God, most merciful and just,
Who, many times, hast wrought salvation for me,
O hear thy suppliant's prayer, Ere yet the sun
Breaks from the hidden chambers of the East,
To drink the morning cloud and early dew —
Fair emblem of my life — my prayer begins,
Nor ends when night has curtained o'er the sky. . . .

Here then I bow — and on the bended knee
Of humble gratitude, accept the mercy.
And in return to thee, my God, my Saviour,
I give myself, and every power I have,

To be devoted ever to thy service ;
 Accept the dedication which I make,
 Assert thy rightful empire o'er thy servant,
 Reign king supreme forever in my breast ;
 O tune my nature in unison to virtue,
 May my heart glow with that celestial order
 That animates the seraphs round thy throne.
 And when this mortal life on earth is ended,
 O may I rise and join the flaming throng,
 And dwell forever near thee.

The writer's father once told him that Dr. Alexander Wolcott, whom he saw when a child, far advanced in years, was very tall, and erect as a plane-tree, with hair hanging down his shoulders, of silvery whiteness, and with an eye and eyebrow and complexion of a dark hue ; his appearance was exceeding noble.

General Erastus Wolcott settled in South Windsor, on the homestead adjoining his father's on the south ; was repeatedly a Representative of the town in the General Assembly, and also Speaker of the Lower House, Justice of the Peace, Judge of Probate, Judge and Chief Judge of the County Court, Representative in Congress, and Judge of the Superior Court. He held the rank of Brigadier-General of the Connecticut troops in the Revolutionary War. We find a sketch of his life in his funeral discourse, a pamphlet of twenty-eight pages, with the following title:—

“A Sermon delivered in East Windsor, Connecticut, at the interment of the Hon. ERASTUS WOLCOTT, Esq., who departed this Life September 14, 1793, in the 71st Year of his Age. By David McClure, A.M.

“‘To few, and wondrous few, has heaven assigned
A wise, extensive, all considering mind.’

“Printed at Hartford, by Hudson and Goodwin, MDCCXCIV.”

Text: Psalm xii. 1, “Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail from among the children of men.”

Dedication: “To ERASTUS WOLCOTT, Esq., and the surviving Brethren and Sisters, the Children of the deceased, the following Discourse, a tribute of Respect to the Memory of their worthy Father, who though dead yet speaketh to them, by an exemplary life of well-doing, is affectionately inscribed by their sympathizing Friend and Servant, the Author.”

We give a few paragraphs:—

“His younger life was spent in the business of agriculture, an employment pleasing to him thro’ his whole life. He had the advantage only of a common-school education, yet he acquired great knowledge in useful science. He had much experience in public business, having had the advantage of the instructions of his worthy father, formerly the chief magistrate and governor of the State; and by being called to public employment, either in this his native town, in the legislature, at the council-board, or on the bench of judicature, between thirty and forty years. And in all his civil and military offices and services for the public he obtained the approbation of his countrymen, as a wise, judicious, and faithful man.

“In the spring of 1775, Dr. Johnson,¹ now president of New York College, and Major Wolcott were sent by the Legislature of the State to Boston, then the headquarters of the British troops, to investigate, if possible, the designs of the British in their military manœuvres, and ascertain the necessity of immediate preparation for the worst events. They had an interview with Gage, and obtained only specious and delusive promises of peace. In 1776, he was appointed to the command of a regiment of militia, and marched to the army investing Boston, and, under the illustrious Washington, was active in throwing up the works on the heights at Dorchester, which eventually compelled the British fleet and army to evacuate the town and harbour of Boston. The same season he proceeded to New London, and superintended the erection of fortifications to defend the harbour; and garrisoned Fort Trumbull and Fort Griswold with his regiment during the summer. Having received the appointment of brigadier-general of the first brigade of militia of Connecticut, in 1777 he went on an expedition to Peekskill, on Hudson's River, where he was stationed for a season, to guard some important places, while the continental army were recruiting and the regiments filling up. On the arrival of the news of the destruction of Danbury by a part of the enemy under the command of Tryon, he left his encampment on Hudson's River, and marched to oppose him, but on the road received intelligence of the enemy's retreat to Long Island.

"The offices of trust and honour which were conferred on him by his fellow-citizens were conferred without his solicitation. He was repeatedly chosen by the freemen as a delegate to the Congress of the United States. The university of this State (Yale College), as an expression of their estimation of his merit, conferred upon him an honorary degree. He was a firm patriot and able advocate for the liberties of his country. His name and exertions for the prosperity of his country will remain among the bands of patriots, when the virtuous sons of New England were

Their great forefathers' virtues, and their own.'

He well understood the nature of government, and was a zealous friend to republican principles.

"While we would shun unmerited encomiums on the dead, or flattering compliments to the living, it becomes us, in the language of truth and soberness, to pay a decent respect to the memory of the man whose obsequies we are now attending. And were not the general traits in the character of the faithful and godly man happily seen in the Hon. Judge WOLCOTT? Tho' descended from respectable ancestors, his merit did not depend upon his honourable pedigree. He possessed a strong and penetrating mind, a quick discernment and solid judgment, beyond what is common to men. And these gifts of the universal Parent were united to great integrity. His opinion in all important matters was the dictate of wisdom, and expressed in plain and comprehensive language, the language of masculine sense, and always with a respectful deference to the judgment of others. Assemblies listened to him with instruction and applause. He was firm and persevering in all affairs of moment, on which he had formed an opinion after mature deliberation. His superior powers of mind, which were improved by reading and reflection, were at length devoted to the service of the public. Desirous, at length, of contemplative retirement from the labours of public office, he resigned his seat as one of the judges of the honourable Superior Court, with great dignity to himself; and too soon, for his friends and country, felt the shock of death's approach. A life of virtue and religion prepared him to meet his dissolution with fortitude, resignation, and hope; the consolations of the gospel were his support and joy.

“It has pleased a holy God to remove from this church and society one whose presence and faithful assistance they had long enjoyed. His seat in these earthly courts is now vacant; exchanged, we trust, — O happy exchange! — for a glorious seat in the church of the first-born, in the general assembly of the spirits of just men made perfect. As a church, we feel the loss of a wise father and friend. He honoured the institution of the Sabbath, public worship and ordinances. The Holy Scriptures were the subject of his pleasing meditations. Thus the brightest geniuses which the world hath seen, a Newton, a Locke, an Addison, fatigued in the pursuit of human knowledge, sat down, delighted at the sublime and glorious truths contained in the Holy Scriptures as the only satisfying science. A reviving light on divine subjects, particularly the distinguishing doctrines of grace in our redemption by Jesus Christ, shone with lustre and comfort on his mind some time before his last sickness. He was catholic in sentiment, and charitably embraced good men of other denominations. A condescending spirit of forbearance and Christian moderation among his brethren were branches of his worthy character.

“Our deceased friend bore his last long sickness and the pains of dissolution with great patience and submission to God; possessing that cheerful serenity and fortitude which his whole life displayed. And when his speech failed, he raised his dying hands in testimony of his hope of heaven and joy in God, through a glorious Redeemer. May it please a holy God to sanctify this affliction to the children who mourn the loss of an affectionate father and friend, to the surviving brethren and sisters, to the aged of his acquaintance, to this church and town, to the people of this State, and to each of us.”¹

One of the volumes in our possession is a long manuscript letter from a prominent citizen, Benjamin Gale, of Killingworth, calling his attention to measures of public policy, on which an expression of his views will be welcome, on account of the sentiments which "many Freemen of this State entertain respecting the frank, open, and undisguised line of Conduct which you have ever maintained in your Public Station, and therefore what you say will have great weight."

We have the following traditionary notice of him : —

He was a tall man, of large frame, with light gray eyes and light hair. He was rather reserved in conversation, and seemed to look forward to the result of things ; had a high reputation for sagacity, and was familiarly known among his neighbors as "Old Long-Head." He was plain in his manners, and accessible to all, and patient in hearing every one. He had great decision of character when he had made up his mind. He was noble-hearted and generous, and when he died the town felt that one of its props was taken away.

The writer's father, (who was a grandson of the Judge, familiar with his home, and nine years old at the time of his decease,) once furnished him with the following interesting sketch, drawn from the recollections of his boyhood : —

I well remember sitting on Gen. Erastus Wolcott's knee, when I was quite a child, and listening with intense interest to stories which he told to amuse me. Well do I recollect that gigantic frame and noble countenance. But I cannot minutely describe him. He was as wise and as truly great a man as ever bore the Wolcott name. But he had no ambition for public life ; and such public offices as he filled, he accepted not from choice, but from a sense of duty. Had he been ambitious, he might have risen to the very highest distinction. Whether engaged in public or private business, he was a man of indefatigable industry.

None of his papers are left, except a few brief military letters. Appended to his funeral sermon is a disquisition on the Moral Government of God, written by him about two years before his death ; and from this piece, being all that we have of his own composition, we give a brief extract. It is thus introduced by the author of the sermon : —

“ Thoughts on God’s Moral Government of the World, as it is connected with the Redemption of Mankind. By the Hon. ERASTUS WOLCOTT, Esq.

“Written about two years before his death, and put into the hand of the author of the foregoing discourse, with a view, as himself expressed, to consideration and candid enquiry. They are now published with a desire that the important thoughts suggested may edify those who may peruse them.”

“The language of the Deity, in his word and by his providences, to the children of men, is: ‘I have laid help on one mighty to save, even my own Son, whom I have appointed to be the Lord your righteousness, and thereby opened a way, consistent with the justice of my government, to exercise my mercy, goodness, and long-suffering to you during your probationary state; for it is my design to form your minds to habits of holiness and goodness, that it may be your increasing happiness to bear a part in the higher employments and enjoyments of another world, among the good and virtuous from all parts of my universal dominions. I have seated myself on a throne of mercy, to which all may freely repair, — the vile for mercy, the afflicted for consolation. My providence attends you to supply your wants, and guard you from evil. If I chastise you, it is for your good, that chastisements may produce in you the peaceable fruits of righteousness, and teach you the evil of disobedience. My laws are written on your minds, and consist in love and obedience to the author of your being, and the practice of love and benevolence to one another.’

“The beneficent effects of that important transaction are not confined to the children of men, but angels and superior intelligent beings above share and participate in the joy of so glorious a deed, and are filled with adoring views of the wisdom, power, and goodness of God displayed in the redemption of mankind.”¹

A full-length portrait of Mrs. Moseley, with her little son, Charles, by Earle, hangs over the broad stair in the hall of Mr. Charles Moseley Wolcott, at Roseneath. We find among our papers a letter to her brother, which refers to this painting.

DEAR BROTHER.

I am told that you begin to indulge hard thoughts of me for not writing oftener; you ought to consider that my attention has been engrossed by Mr. Earl, and that I have had enough to do, to acquire the grace of patience; I assure you, I have nearly attained it, and probably in the course of two or three months shall arrive at a state of perfection in this virtue. Painting goes on steadily, though slowly, and my Portrait looks — I can't tell you how. Earl has two or three

The widow of Captain Collins was for many years an inmate of the family of her son-in-law, Governor Wolcott. She was buried in the west burial-ground at Litchfield. Their son, the Rev. Daniel Collins, graduated at Yale College in 1760, and was the first clergyman in Lanesborough, Mass.

¹ “The Hon. Chauncey Goodrich was the eldest son of the Rev. Elizur Goodrich, D.D., of Durham, in the county of Middlesex. He was born in the year 1759, and received his education in Yale College, where he graduated in 1776. He was afterwards chosen a tutor, and acted as such for a considerable time with much reputation. He prosecuted his legal studies in the office of Charles Chauncey, Esq., in that city, and was admitted to the bar in New Haven County. In the year 1781 he fixed his residence in Hartford, and commenced the practice of law. He soon rose to distinction at the bar, and for many years was considered as at the head of the profession. In October, 1793, and May, 1794, he represented the town in the State Legislature; and in September following he was elected a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, — a place which he occupied by successive elections for the six following years.

“In 1801, he relinquished his seat in Congress, and resumed the practice of law in Hartford. In 1802, he was chosen a member of the State Council, which at that time formed the upper branch of the State Legislature, and remained connected with that body until the year 1807, when he was appointed a Senator of the United States. After holding his seat in the Senate six years, he was chosen Lieutenant-Governor of the State, and by the citizens of Hartford, mayor of that city, — offices which he held to the time of his death, in August, 1815.

“Mr. Goodrich was a man of extensive attainments as a scholar; and his reputation while acting as a tutor in the college was deservedly high, not only among his associates in the government of that institution, but among the students who were placed under his oversight and instruction. By them he was regarded with sincere esteem, and a degree of affection little short of filial. At the bar, no man stood higher for personal as well as professional integrity and honor. To the younger members of the profession he was kind, liberal, and friendly. To those of more advanced age he ever manifested the greatest degree of frankness and urbanity; and to the courts the most uniform and punctilious respect. As a politician, his sentiments and principles were formed and adopted with marked deliberation, and were ever maintained with candor, firmness, and dignity. He engaged in political life from a sense of duty, but with an entire destitution of the feelings of selfishness or ambition. In private life, he was mild and amiable in his manners, unreserved in his social intercourse with his friends, cheerful and affectionate in his disposition and temper, and of the most exemplary purity of morals. He was a wise councillor, an able and upright magistrate, and an example of all that is virtuous in the private relations of life.” — Conn. Courant, May 23, 1840. See also Funeral Sermon, by Rev. The following notices of the life of Gov. OLIVER WOLCOTT, Sen., are copied from family documents. The original sketch, published in Sanderson's "Biography of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence" (III. 63-67), is among these papers, having been drawn up by his son, the late Gov. OLIVER WOLCOTT, Jr.

On leaving College, he received a commission as Captain in the Army, from Gov. George Clinton, of New York, and immediately raised a company, at the head of which he marched to the defence of the Northern Frontiers, where he served until the Regiment to which he was attached was disbanded, in consequence of the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle. He then returned to Connecticut and studied medicine, under the direction of his Brother, Dr. Alexander Wolcott, then a distinguished practitioner. Before he was established in practice, the County of Litchfield was organized, and he was appointed the first sheriff of the county, in 1751. He settled in Litchfield, and was a representative of the Town in the General Assembly. In the year 1774, he was chosen an Assistant or Councillor, to which station he was annually elected till the year 1786. While a member of the Council, he was also Chief Judge of the Court of Common Pleas for the County, and for many years Judge of the Court of Probate for the district of Litchfield. He served in the militia, in every grade of office, from that of Captain to that of Major-General. On all the questions preliminary to the Revolutionary War he was a firm advocate of the American cause.

At the Town Meeting held in Litchfield, Aug. 17, 1774, to consider the Resolutions of the Legislature, on the subject of the Boston Port Bill, he presided, and drew up the eloquent preamble and resolutions then adopted, which we give in their place.

He was chosen a member of the Continental Congress, and in July, 1775, was appointed by that body one of the Commissioners of Indian affairs for the Northern Department, — a trust of great importance, its object being to induce the Indian nations to remain neutral during the war. While he was engaged in this business, the controversies respecting the boundaries between Connecticut and Pennsylvania, and between New York and Vermont, menaced the tranquillity of the Colonies, and exposed them to the seductions of British partisans. His influence was exerted with great effect to compromise these disputes, and to unite the New England settlers in support of the American cause.

In January, 1776, he attended at Philadelphia the session of Congress at which the DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE was adopted, of which he was one of the SIGNERS. In this connection Barlow thus refers to him in his poem, the "Vision of Columbus:" —

"Bold Wolcott urged the all-important cause,
With steady hand the solemn scene he draws ;
Undaunted firmness with his wisdom joined,
Nor Kings nor Worlds could warp his steadfast mind."

During the session he returned to Connecticut. He carried with him from the city of New York the leaden statue of King George III., which was converted into bullets at Litchfield, under his direction. On the 15th of August, he was appointed by Governor Trumbull and the Council of Safety to command fourteen Regiments of the Connecticut Militia, which were ordered for the defence of New York. This duty he performed, till the force, amounting to more than five thousand men, was subdivided into four brigades. He then returned home for a few weeks.

In November, 1776, he resumed his seat in Congress, and accompanied that Body to Baltimore, during the eventful winter of 1777.

On the 17th of January, he was appointed by the General Assembly of Connecticut, Brigadier-General, and was constantly employed, the ensuing summer, in superintending detachments of militia, and corresponding on military subjects. After detaching several thousand men to the assistance of General Putnam on the North River, he headed a corps of between three and four hundred volunteers, who joined the Northern Army under General Gates, and took command of a Brigade of Militia, and aided in reducing the British Army under General Burgoyne. From February to July, 1778, he attended Congress at Yorktown.

In the summer of 1779, he was in the field at the head of a Division of Militia, for the defence of the sea-coast. During the severe winter of 1779-80, famine added its terrors to excessive cold. The deep snows in the mountain region of the State, and the explosion of the paper system, rendered it almost impossible to procure the necessaries of life. Connecticut had been in the foremost rank of the supporters of the war ; she had contributed freely from her narrow resources, and the blood of her sons had moistened every battle-field. And now, when cold and hunger threatened their utmost rigors, and a dark cloud hung over the fate of the country, the courage of her citizens failed not. The records of her Towns — the votes of recruits to the army and of bread to the suffering — showed that she had counted the cost of the struggle, and was ready to meet it. It may well be supposed that the resources of so zealous an advocate for the war as General Wolcott were not withheld. Every dollar that could be spared from the maintenance of the family was expended in raising and supplying men ; every blanket not in actual use was sent to the Army, and the sheets were torn into bandages or cut into lint by the hands of his wife and daughters. From 1781 to 1783, he occasionally attended Congress. In 1784 and 1785, he was one of the Commissioners of Indian affairs for the Northern Department, and in concert with Richard Butler and Arthur Lee prescribed the terms of peace to the Six Nations of Indians. His military services, his known probity and judgment, his ardent attachment to the Republican cause, and his social standing, all contributed to give him an extended influence, which was faithfully exerted for the public good. From the beginning to the end of the Revolutionary War, he was constantly engaged, either in the Council or in the field.

In 1786, he was elected Lieutenant-Governor of Connecticut, and annually thereafter, until he was chosen Governor. In November, 1787, he was chosen a member of the State Convention which adopted the Constitution of the United States. In November, 1789, he was further appointed by the State, in connection with Samuel H. Parsons and James Davenport, to hold a treaty with the Wyandottes and other Indians, for extinguishing their title to the Western Reserve of Connecticut.

In the fall of 1796, he was chosen a Presidential Elector, in which capacity he voted for John Adams and Thomas Pinckney. The same year, he was chosen Governor, which office he held until his death, in the seventy-second year of his age.

Such is a brief catalogue of the more important political offices and services of Oliver Wolcott, the elder. During a long and laborious life devoted to public service, he enjoyed the unremitted confidence of his fellow-citizens.

TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

D^R. SPOUSE*Hartford 18th May, 1767*

Yesterday, about 12 of the clock, my father departed this life, and to-morrow in the afternoon his Remains are to be interred. I visited him the Evening I left Home, and found him very low; since, he has decayed sensibly till his Death, at which I was present. Death in him seemed to be but the irrevocable Sentence of Mortality; or it seemed to be the effect only of natural Decay. He did not die by a mortification, but the force of animal Life failed. But notwithstanding his Death ought to be an alarming Lesson to us, and I wish we might be wise enough to be instructed by it.

To-morrow hope to attend the funeral Solemnities, after which shall probably be more steady than I have been at this Place. I greatly want to hear from you and the State of my Family — which I hope I may soon, by Mr. Marvin. Am myself well, which I hope is your condition, and that of my Children. Shall write to you as often as I have opportunity.

Sister Newberry is in a low state of Health, but hope she will recover it; other Friends are well. Would have you provide for yourself what you may want, and may judge decent for Mourning. I want much to be with my Family, which would be much more agreeable to me than my present condition. Have no news. Election was made as it was the last year. I most cordially wish your Happiness, and am your most loving Spouse

REVOLUTIONARY RESOLVES OF THE TOWN OF LITCHFIELD, DRAFTED BY OLIVER WOLCOTT, SEN.

At a meeting of the Inhabitants of Litchfield, legally warned and held in Liberty. Litchfield on the 17th day of August, A.D. 1774.

OLIVER WOLCOTT, Esq., Moderator.

The Inhabitants of Litchfield in legal Town Meeting assembled on the 17th day of August, 1774, — taking into Consideration the Distresses to which the Poor of the Town of Boston may likely be reduced by the Operation of an Act of the British Parliament for blocking up their Port, and deeply commiserating the Unhappiness of a brave and loyal People who are thus eminently suffering in a General Cause, for vindicating what every sensible, virtuous American considers an essential Right of this Country, — think it their indispensable Duty to afford their unhappy and distressed Brethren of said Town of Boston all reasonable Aid and Support; and this they are the more readily induced to, not only as the Inhabitants of said Town are thus severely condemned for their Reluctance to submit to an arbitrary, an unconsented-to, and consequently unconstitutional Taxation, but the whole of the great and loyal Province of the Massachusetts Bay have been condemned unheard in the Loss of their Charter Privileges by the heretofore unknown and unheard-of exertions of parliamentary Power; which they conceive is a Power claimed and exercised in such a manner as cannot fail of striking every unprejudiced Mind with Horror and Amazement, as being subversive to all those inherent, essential, and constitutional Rights, Liberties, and Privileges which the good People of this Colony have ever held sacred and even dearer than Life itself, nor ever can wish to survive — not only every Idea of Property, but every Emolument of Civil Life, being thereby rendered precarious and uncertain.

In full Confidence, therefore, that no Degree of Evil thus inflicted on said Town and Province will ever induce them to give up or betray their own and the American Constitutional Rights and Privileges, especially as they cannot but entertain the most pleasing Expectations that the Committees of the several North American Provinces, who are soon to meet at Philadelphia, will in their Wisdom be able to point out a Method of Conduct effectual for obtaining Redress of those Grievances — a Method to which (when once agreed upon by said Committees) will look upon it their Duty strictly to attend.

And in the mean time, we earnestly recommend that Subscriptions be forthwith opened in this Town under the Care of REUBEN SMITH, Esq^r, Capt. LYNDE LORD, and Mr. WILLIAM STAUNTON, who are hereby appointed a Committee to receive and forward to the Selectmen of Boston, for the use of the Poor in that Place, all such Donations as shall be thereupon made for that Purpose; as also to correspond with the Committee of Correspondence there or elsewhere as there may be occasion. We also take this Opportunity publickly to return our thanks to the Members of the Hon^{ble} House of Representatives of this Colony, for their patriotic and loyal Resolutions passed and published in the last Assembly, on the Occasion, and order them to be entered at large on the public Records of this Town — that succeeding Ages may be faithfully furnished with authentic Credentials of our inflexible Attachment to those inestimable Privileges, which we glory in esteeming our inalienable Birthright and Inheritance.

We copy this stirring minute from the Town Records of Litchfield, where it is followed by a copy of the resolves adopted by “the House of Representatives of the English Colony of Connecticut, May, 1774.”

These "Resolves" are eleven in number, preceded by an extended preamble. They herald the Declaration of Independence; containing, like that, a recital of grievances, together with earnest professions of loyalty, which in two years were to become exhausted, and cease forever. They may be found in Document No. 46, Vol. I., Revolutionary War. We give a vote passed at a later meeting:—

"At a legal Town Meeting of the Inhabitants of Litchfield on the 6th December 1774 Voted that the Honorable OLIVER WOLCOTT, Esquire, and [twelve other citizens named] be a Committee for the purposes mentioned in the Eleventh Article of the Association Agreement of the Grand Continental Congress in Philadelphia, 5th September last, and approved, adopted and recommended by the General Assembly of this Colony at their Sessions in October last."

Of the Resolutions which follow, we can give no other explanation than that we find them, written in a lady's hand, among the papers of Governor Wolcott. They evidently belong to this period, or a little later, and we give them as a mirror of the times.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE LADIES OF HARTFORD.

The Ladies in this City, attentive to the impoverished state of their Country, and to the well-founded charge of extravagance in our manner of living, offer to their sisters in this State the following considerations:—

1. We consider it as a general truth, that the manners and fashions of every country should be adapted to its particular situation and circumstances.

2. We believe that the English and French fashions, which require the manufacture of an infinite variety of gewgaws and frippery, may be highly beneficial and even necessary in the countries where those articles are made; as they furnish employment and subsistence for poor people.

3. We believe, also, that it is very politic in foreign nations to introduce their fashions into this country, as they thus make a market for their useless manufactures, and enrich themselves at our expense.

4. But we are of the opinion, at the same time, that our implicit submission to the fashions of other countries is highly derogatory to the reputation of Americans, as it renders us dependent on the interest, or caprice, of foreigners, both for taste and manners; it prevents the exercise of our own ingenuity, and makes us the slaves of the milliners and mantua-makers in London or Paris.

5. We consider, also, that this servile imitation of foreign fashions is one of the circumstances which operate to embarrass and distress this country.

6. We also consider many of the fashions which now prevail among us as in many respects extremely inconvenient, and consequently as proceeding from a false taste in dress, or a total want of taste.

7. We are of opinion that an attention to industry and economy, among all ages and ranks of people, is an infinitely better way to promote the prosperity, and to relieve the distresses, of this country, than quarrelling with laws, debts, and courts of justice.

Convinced of these truths, and desirous of silencing all complaints of extravagance, and of contributing all in our power to deliver the country from this slavery of fashions, and the consequent expenses and embarrassments, we subscribe the following Articles:—

ART. 1. That after the signing of these articles, we will not purchase, or wear, any superfluous articles of dress, such as gauze, ribbons, flowers, feathers, lace, and other trimmings and frippery, designed merely as ornaments.

ART. 2. That we will not purchase the richer kinds of articles which are used as necessary dress; such as silks, muslins, expensive hats, &c., except a single suit for a wedding, or for mourning; but that for the future we will wear on visits, and in public places, such articles only as we have on hand, or newly purchased calicoes and other cheap articles, without ornaments or trimmings.

ART. 3. That we will endeavor to retrench the expenses of visits and entertainments, by not suffering them to interrupt our attention to industry, by reducing the number and price of the articles which furnish our tables, and particularly by giving the preference to such articles of provision as our own country supplies.

ART. 4. That we will not attend a public or private Assembly oftener than once in three weeks.

ART. 5. That we will use our influence to diffuse an attention to industry and frugality, and to render these virtues reputable and permanent.

Conscious to ourselves that our intentions are laudable, and calculated to secure the reputation, the morals, the prosperity, and the social happiness of our Country, we shall pay no regard to any reflections, or ridicule, that may be cast upon our conduct; but now pledge ourselves to each other and to the world, that we will carry these resolutions into practice.

We will now give brief extracts from some of his numerous manuscript letters before us. They were for the most part private, and written under the pressure of official duties, and often in great haste ; but we do not think it necessary to copy the apologies which the writer frequently offers on this account. We give but a small portion of the correspondence, and from several of the letters we give only extracts.

FROM COLONEL ALLEN.

HONOURABLE SIR

Sheffield, 1st March, 1775.

The confused and difficult Circumstances of the New Hampshire Settlements urge me to request your Honour's Sentiments respecting the expediency of a Compact, &c., for the Conduct of those Settlers. I am the more emboldened to desire this special favour of your Honour, as you have shown yourself Friendly to our Oppressed Cause as well as to the Rights and Liberties of English America

Provided I could be favoured with your Honour's Opinion, I should esteem it not only a Friendship to myself, but to those inhabitants in general to whom I shall exhibit the same ; and provided the Controversy between Great Britain and the Colonies should terminate in a War, the Regiment of Green Mountain Boys will, I dare engage, assist the American Brethren in the capacity of Rangers. I am, Sir, with due Respect, your Honour's most obedient and humble Servant

ETHAN ALLEN.

To Col. Wolcott, Litchfield.

TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

MY DEAR

Litchfield, May 1, 1775

The Want of Opportunity and Hurry of Business in the Assembly have prevented my writing to you earlier. The Assembly mean to raise Six Thousand men for the Defence of the Colony, and have appointed a number of old officers, viz. Wooster, Spencer, and Putnam to command them. The Army of Observation continues near Boston. When the Assembly will rise uncertain. Much to be done. Successful Opposition or the most direful Ruin inevitable. The union of all the Colonies seems as if it might be depended on. With regard to my own Business I have neither Time nor Opportunity to write or think of it. The General Training put by. Am well. May God preserve, direct, bless and support you and Family. I am yours most affectionately

O. WOLCOTT

Mrs. Lorrain Wolcott.

TO MR. S. LYMAN.

SIR

Philadelphia, Feb. 3^d 1776

I do myself the pleasure to let you know I am well and have been so, since I left home, And as I write to you from this place, I believe you will expect I shall tell you much more news than I am furnished with ; and if I should do so, it would be nothing uncommon in a story teller. But the news of this day, and which may be believed, is that a Capt. Mason of this city, a private adventurer, has brought into this river (Delaware) 60 tons of Salt Petre, 20 tons of Gunpowder, and 2000 Stands of Arms. This, together with the 60 tons of Petre before rec'd, will be a small, but needful supply ; the mills are constantly at work, and I wish to hear they may be soon so in Connecticut. The Ladies, I hope, will still make themselves contented to live without Tea, for the good of their Country. The news you have in the publick prints. It seems the Ministry intend to offer special pardons upon the points of bayonets. But I think we are not well disposed to receive their graces in that manner. The old trick of endeavouring to divide will be probably still practiced, but I believe without effect. I think the word rebel is not made quite so free an use of by their High Mightinesses of late. But I more fear their temporary moderation than their arms. Common sense operates pretty well but all men have not common sense. We hear nothing in special from the westward. Our fleet are still frozen in the river. The repulse at Quebec I suspect was necessary for our good ; tho' I most sincerely regret the loss of our brave officers and men. The exertions of the New England people would do them great Honour, if it had not become so habitual as to render it less noticed ; but I hope they will persevere. The people, under God, are most to be relied on. The establishment of these Colonies in peace and security will require great deliberation, But I know of no time that can be more necessary and seasonable than the present, to conclude this mighty affair. To give up any of our rights I hope will never be done ; and I imagine Great Britain will never settle with us upon the terms of enjoying them. What consequences these contrariant and fixed claims must produce, will be easily conceived. That America may be happy is my ardent wish — and also that you in particular may share in the blessings of the Almighty. I am, Sir, your most humble servant

OLIVER WOLCOTT.

To Mr. Samuel Lyman.

TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

MY DEAR

Philadelphia, 19 Feb'y 1776

Retired from Business, Noise and Politicks, I enjoy a solitary and pleasurable hour in writing to you. I am sorry you suffer any Solicitude on my account. You have much more reason to attend to your own Comfort, having so many Cares to trouble you, and in a state of Health too much impaired. I am well by divine Blessing, and with some very good Friends. An Anxiety may become habitual for us to suffer, on account of Friends most dear to us; but it is a fruitless Grief, and let us not indulge it. We cannot know whether our absent Friends enjoy the Comforts of Existence, or are torn by the sharp Thorns of Adversity. An omnipresent God orders the Circumstances of all, and with calm hope and trust may we commit every thing to his providential Care. I know your Cares must be many, but I hope you and the Family may be supported and provided for. The tender feelings may become too sensitive and destroy Fortitude. Let us not pervert the bounties of our Creator by an unreasonable Solicitude, but enjoy with Gratitude the Blessings we possess. I do not mean this as a Reproof, but to advise you to lay aside unprofitable Care.

Every thing is ripening to produce a most important Crisis, and I hope Wisdom will be given to those to whom the publick Counsells are committed. An Accommodation with Great Britain I think becomes less and less probable. Wisdom and Firmness are necessary, and I hope they will mark the Lines of Publick Conduct.

My love to my Children and kind Regards to all Friends. I am yours affectionately

MY DEAR

Philadelphia, March 2, 1776

I feel much concerned for the Burden which necessarily devolves upon you; I hope you will make it as light as possible. You may easily believe from the Situation of publick Affairs, that the critical Moment is near, which will perhaps decide the Fate of the Country; and that the business of Congress is very interesting. Yet if any time can reasonably be allowed for my return, I shall think myself justified in doing so. The circumstances of my affairs demand it.

March 19th

My own wishes are not gratified in living from my Family, but as in an important Circumstance of Life, which has since led me much from Home, I committed the future Allotments of Life to the Disposal of Divine Providence, I humbly hope it may please God to bless me with his Guidance, and take care of and protect those who are most dear to me, tho' I am unworthy of his favours. Your own Cares must be many; I earnestly wish you may enjoy Health and fortitude of Mind. Mr. Sherman is going to make a short visit to his Family; when I may do so, is uncertain. The publick Trust is very important, and a hasty recess from it will not be justified but for urgent reasons.

March 27th

There are many things here which discover great Ingenuity and Design, but nothing struck my mind in any degree like the amazing Orrery of Mr. Rittenhouse. As I am but little acquainted with Astronomy or Mechanism, I could only view it with the strange Wonder of a Barbarian, for such I could only consider myself. This work is calculated to make an ordinary Genius humble, while it leads us to adore the fountain of Wisdom.

My love to my Children, and my best Compliments to all my Friends. Wishing you all possible Happiness, I am yours with tenderest affection

OLIVER WOLCOTT

TO THE SAME.

MY DEAR

Philadelphia, 10th April, 1776.

A merciful Providence still continues my Health to me. Thro' various scenes of Life God has sustained me; may he ever be my unfailing Friend; may his Love cherish my Soul; may my Heart with gratitude acknowledge his Goodness; and may my Desires be to Him and to the remembrance of his Name. Vanity, by the Wisest of men, has been inscribed on every Thing mortal, and no Experience has ever contradicted this Declaration. May we then turn our Eyes to the bright Objects above, and may God give us Strength to travel the upward Road. May the Divine Redeemer conduct us to that Seat of Bliss which he himself has prepared for his Friends; at the approach of which every Sorrow shall vanish from the human heart, and endless scenes of Glory open upon the enraptured eye. There our Love to God and each other will grow stronger, and our Pleasures never be damped by the fear of future Separation. How indifferent will it then be to us, whether we obtained Felicity by travelling the thorny or the agreeable Paths of Life; whether we arrived at our Rest by passing thro' the envied Road of Greatness, or sustained Hardship and unmerited Reproach on our Journey. God's Providence and Support thro' the perilous, perplexing Labyrinths of human Life, will then forever excite our Astonishment and Love. May a happiness be granted to those I most tenderly love, which shall continue and increase thro' an endless Existence. Your Cares and Burdens must be many and great; but put your Trust in that God who has hitherto supported you and me; he will not fail to take Care of those who put their Trust in him.

The general Complexion of Affairs gives little ground to expect an Accommodation with Great Britain on former Terms. There is a great Ardor amongst the People this way in support of American Rights. It is most evident that this Land is under the Protection of the Almighty, and that we shall be saved, not by our Wisdom, nor by our Might, but by the Lord of Hosts, who is Wonderfull in Councill and Almighty in all his Operations.

11th May

The natural World opens upon us with great Beauty, while the political one is all convulsed. When will Tyrant Worms cease to disturb human Happiness? We may soon expect to hear of further arrivals of the Enemy; we know they mean to prosecute the War. In such tempestuous Times no one can say what the Events of Things may be, tho' I have no apprehension that Great Britain can subjugate this Country; to give us much trouble, is doubtless in her Power, and a People engaged in War must not always expect prosperity in all their undertakings. God has indeed in a wonderful Manner hitherto granted us his Protection, and I hope he will still continue it. Possess your own Mind in Peace. Fortitude not only enables us to bear Evils, but prevents oftentimes those which would otherwise befall us. I do not apprehend any personal danger, and if I did, I hope I never shall betray that Baseness as to shrink from it, but I do think it is not unlikely we may have a troublesome Summer. And if so, let every one bear his part of the publick Calamity with Fortitude.

1st June

It is now a long time which I have been here, and I do most sincerely wish to return to the Pleasures of a domestick rural Life — such a Life as Poets and Wise men have always with so much Propriety praised. Here I see but little except human Faces which I know not, and numerous Piles of Buildings, which have long since satiated the Sight, and the street rumble is far from being musical. But as I was not sent here to please myself, I shall cheerfully yield to my Duty, convinced of this Truth, that the Noise and Bustle of this World are the best Lessons to teach a man how few are its Enjoyments.

You see by the Papers that our inveterate Foes threaten us with a large Armament this Summer, tho' I rather think their Land Forces will not probably be more than about Thirty Thousand. These Exertions of our Enemies will call for the like on our part. I think we have no Reason to be discouraged. Our cause is just; we may therefore hope God will, as he has done, appear to vindicate it. Our Resources are numerous.

11th June.

We seem at present to be in the midst of a great Revolution, which I hope God will carry us safe thro' with. Every Thing is tending to the lasting Independency of these Colonies. Much Wisdom and Firmness are requisite to conduct the various and most important Matters which are necessary to be determined upon. This year will probably be productive of great and most interesting Consequences; and my Wish is, that the Supreme Ruler of the Universe would guide every publick Measure.

By the Blessing of God I enjoy Health, which demands my gratitude. The Service is hard, and affords but little Time for Exercise; but I hope before next month is out, to be upon my return to my Family, whom I do most sincerely desire to see. My Love to my Children, and accept the tender Regards of him who always esteemed himself happy in your affection —

OLIVER WOLCOTT.

Mrs. Laura Wolcott.

In less than a month from the preceding date the DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE was adopted and signed, and Mr. Wolcott made his anticipated visit to Connecticut. And of those whose names occupy a conspicuous place in the history of that contest, there was not one who, in his own province, redeemed more faithfully than he the sacred pledge of the SIGNERS.

The following account, with the explanatory note, we find among our papers; the incident has been already stated. The youngest of his three children who participated in this patriotic service, Frederick, was then in his tenth year.

N. B. An Equestrian Statue of George the Third of Great Britain was erected in the City of New York, on the Bowling Green, at the lower end of Broad Way. Most of the materials were lead, but richly gilded, to resemble gold. At the beginning of the Revolution, this Statue was overthrown; Lead being then scarce and dear, the Statue was broken in pieces and the metal transported to Litchfield as a place of safety. The Ladies of this Village converted the lead into Cartridges for the Army, of which the preceding is an Account.

FROM GOVERNOR TRUMBULL.

SIR

Lebanon, Aug. 12th, 1776

Having rec'd the most pressing application from General Washington to send forward a part of the Militia of this State to his Assistance, have given orders to the Commanding Officers of 14 Regiments to march with their Reg^{ts} immediately to New York, to join Gen. Washington's Camp. And as it was judged by myself and Com^{tee} of Safety absolutely necessary for the good of the Service to have a Genl Officer especially appointed to command the Brigade now going on to N. Y., have appointed you a Brigadier General to command the same, and shall send forward a Commission accordingly. Having formed raised expectations of your Disposition and Ability to serve your Country in this most important Crisis, on which the Fate of America seems so much to depend, I trust you will cheerfully undertake the Service, and it will be of great Importance for you to be at New York as quick as possible. Heartily recommending you and the Army to the God of Armies, to whom it becomes us to look, and humbly depend for Success, I remain with great Esteem your humble Servant

MY DEAR

N. York. 28th Aug. 1776

I wrote to you on Monday, since which an irregular Fire has been kept up on Long Island. The Battle has been very diffuse over a large Country, but nothing decisive has been done; some Loss on both sides. The People are in high spirits, and I hope God will crown our Enterprise with Success.

2^d Sept.

It was found necessary to evacuate Long Island, of which the Enemy are in possession. No Action has happened in some days. May God protect you and my Family, and grant you his support and Blessing. I find my time very busily employed, but can go through the Service with less fatigue than I expected. I am, in haste, yours most affectionately

Philadelphia 1st Octbr. 1776

This morning I arrived safe in this City, with as much Health as when I left Home, tho' a little fatigued with a long Journey.

8th Octbr.

The aspect of publick affairs is the same. I wish that God in his Providence would bring this country into a State of Peace, safe and equitable; but I fear this happy Period is pretty remote. Yet I think we have no Reason to despair of our Cause, tho' it is attended with many Perplexities. God can, and I trust will, bring Order out of this Confusion.

17th Octr.

At the Expiration of my present Delegation, if God spare my Life, I shall with great cheerfulness return home, and shall hope to relieve you from some part of your present Cares, and enjoy those Pleasures which are to be found only in domestick Life. That the Almighty may be your and my guide and support and the Protection of our Children and Friends, is the sincere Wish of him who is yours with the most inviolable Affection

MY DEAR

Philadelphia, 16th Nov. 1776

We had the happy News of Carlton's going back to Canada, the 14th. This I hope will give Peace for the present to the Northward; tho' if he had been heartily drubbed before he set out, it would have been well; but Nobody but himself is to blame in that it was not done, and God be thanked that the Affair has turned out so favourably.

13th Decr.

The 11th in the Evening, a Detachment of the Enemy took possession of Burlington, about 20 miles from this City on the Jersey Shore. The Rest of their Army are at Trenton, and upon the Banks of the River above it. Their numbers are uncertain, but are computed about Twelve Thousand; and as their Designs are undoubtedly to gain Possession of this City, the Congress, upon the advice of Gen^l Putnam and Mifflin, who are now here to provide for the Protection of the Place, as well as from the Result of their own Opinion, have adjourned themselves to Baltimore in Maryland, about 110 miles from this City; as it was judged that the Council of America ought not to sit in a Place liable to be interrupted by the rude Disorder of Arms — so that I am at this moment going forward for that place. Whether the Army will succeed in their cruel Designs against this City, must be left to time to discover. Congress have ordered the General to defend it to the last extremity; and God grant that he may be successful in his Exertions.

Whatever Events may take place, the American Cause will be supported to the last, and I trust in God that it will succeed. The Grecian, Roman, and Dutch States were in their Infancy reduced to the greatest Distress, infinitely beyond what we have yet experienced. The God who governs the Universe, and who holds Empires in his Hand, can with the least Effort of his Will grant us all that Security, Opulence, and Power, which they have enjoyed. The present Scene, it is true, appears somewhat gloomy, but the natural or more obvious Cause seems to be owing to the Term of Enlistment of the Army having expired, I hope we may have a most respectable one before long established. The Business of War is the Result of Experience.

It is probable that France before long will involve Great Britain in a War, who by unhappy Experience may learn the Folly of attempting to enslave a People, who by the Ties of Consanguinity and Affection ever were desirous of promoting her truest Happiness.

Gen. Howe has lately published a Proclamation, abusing the Congress as having sinister Designs upon the People, and has offered to such as will accept of Pardon, upon an unlimited Submission, royal Forgiveness. But who is base enough to wish to have a precarious Case, dependent upon the Caprice of Power unrestrained by any Law, and governed by the dangerous Thirst of Avarice and Ambition?

My best Love to my Children and Friends. May the Almighty ever have you and them in his Protection. I am yours, with the tenderest and most inviolable Affection

MY DEAR

Baltimore Town, 25th Dec: 1776

You excuse yourself from writing to me on account of the difficulty and uncertainty of Conveyance. The Delivery of Letters is a matter of some uncertainty, but if they should fall into the Hands of the Foe, such as come from you and my Friends I am sure I shall never be ashamed of, and as for mine they will find more Trouble in reading them than Entertainment.

I am still here alone from Connecticut, which I do not very well know what else to attribute to, except that Affairs since last July wear such a benign Aspect as to render the Circumstance of a Delegation a Matter of a good deal of Indifference!

1st Jan^y 1777

Take Care of your Health ; make the Cares of Life easy. Prosperous and happy Times I trust will return to our Country, and that God will grant us the Peace and Happiness of former Days — a Happiness which I most sincerely covet, tho' I trust I shall never wish for Peace with the Loss of the Security of my Country. For what is there which we can leave our Children, equal to the Advantages of civil and religious Liberty ?

5th Jan^y

We flatter ourselves that we shall soon hear of some farther advantages obtained over the Enemy in the Jerseys ; and as it is certain that the Spirit of the People is now rousing, and that our Army is greatly increased and daily acquiring Strength, it is hoped that the Enemy will soon be obliged to leave the Jerseys, where it is said their Brutality and Violence have been most shocking.

14th Jan^y

I wish these troublesome Times were over, that we might enjoy those peaceful and happy Days which we have formerly done. But this I do not wish for, till the Rights of this Country are fully secured. How long a hardened, unjust Foe will maintain the Controversy, God only knows. Well satisfied I am, that the Force which they now have in this Country, will be very unequal to subdue it.

21st Jan^y

My Situation gives me the knowledge of many Opportunities of writing which you have not, almost every one of which I embrace, not only as I take a Pleasure in writing to you, but I well know that you wish frequently to hear from me. You are more especially intitled to a Letter of this Date, as it is an important Anniversary in our Lives, which cannot fail of producing in me the most agreeable Recollections. My distant Situation does not diminish my Regard for you and my Family. I feel the warmest Wishes for your Welfare, and hope that it will please God to bestow upon you and our Children every Blessing. I am not able to give you the least Advice in the Conduct of my Business. Your own Prudence in the Direction of it I have no doubt of. I only wish that the Cares which must oppress you were less. But if the present Troubles shall terminate in the future Peace and Security of this Country (which I trust will be the Case) the present Evils and Inconveniences of Life ought to be borne with Cheerfulness. I fear that by Reason of the scarcity of many Articles in Connecticut, you find a Difficulty in supplying the Family with some Things which may be wanted. But I trust the Essentials of Life you are provided with, and I wish that you may not want any of the Conveniences of it.

My kindest Love to my Children and Friends, and be assured that I am yours with tenderest Affection

OLIVER WOLCOTT

Mrs Laura Wolcott

TO THE SAME.

MY DEAR

Philadelphia, 11th March, 1777

My last to you was from Baltimore, since which Congress have adjourned to this City, from whence I hope Howe will not again attempt to drive them; and if he should, that he will meet with that Rebuke that his Insolence deserves. We have suffered some for the Want of a Regular Army, but I hope that Inconvenience will be soon remedied.

I am very solicitous of hearing from you, as by my last Information you was in an ill state of Health. But we must commit the Care of our absent Friends to a merciful Providence, and not be anxious about Matters which it is not in our Power to alter. With Gratitude let us enjoy the Blessings of our Maker, and with an unruffled mind bear the Hour of Adversity. By the Blessing of God I enjoy Health; and I hope that the same will continue to brighten more and more upon our publick Affairs.

22^d March,

I have this instant rec'd a Letter from Dr. Smith, of the 12th, wherein he tells me that you and the children have been inoculated for the Small Pox, and that he apprehended you was so far thro' it as to be out of Danger, Casualties excepted — News which is very agreeable to me, as I have for some time been much concerned lest you should take the Infection of that distressing Disease unprepared. I perceive that Mariana has had it bad — he writes, very hard. I am heartily sorry for what the little Child has suffered, and very much want to see her. If she has by this lost some of her Beauty, which I hope she has not, yet I well know she might spare much of it and still retain as much as most of her Sex possess. But I hope the Small Pox will give her no Uneasiness, tho' it may have a little hurt her Complexion, as there is no valuable or lasting Beauty but what exists in the Mind; and if she cultivates these Excellencies, she will not fail of being beloved and esteemed. May a grateful Sense of the divine Goodness be deeply impressed upon my Mind, in that God has taken the Care of you and our Children, and for the Health which I am favoured with.

Would that the Knaves and Oppressors of this World would cease their Villany, so that one might return to domestick Enjoyment, and possess unenvied that Peace which cannot be had in any other Circumstance of Life. I want much to see my Family, and shall return by May or June at farthest ; I think by that Time, and perhaps much earlier, a good Opinion may be formed as to the Extent and Duration of the War. I have no particular attachment to this City, or the Way of Life which I am in. If I can, in any Way, serve my Country, my Family, and my Friends, it is a Matter of great Indifference to me what my Situation is. I have no other Wish of my own, than simply to do the Thing which is proper, just, and honourable ; and whatever that appears to be, I shall do it.

1st April

I wrote a Letter to Oliver, the 11th last Month, directed to him at New Haven, but probably enough it did not find him there, as I think he was kept at Home, till the Family had got thro' with the small Pox. Wherever he is, I hope he spends his Time well, in relieving the Wants of others, or improving his own Mind, in the precious Days of Youth, so as to enjoy those happy Fruits in the future Periods of Life, which a proper Use of Time will never fail to yield. I have no more Reason to doubt of his Attention, than I have of that of any young Person ; but such want the kind Advice of Experience to guide them thro' the dangerous Paths of Youth, tho' such Advice is often suspected to be no more than the Peevishness of Age. The other Children are under your more immediate Notice, and consequently will have that Advantage which no other situation would afford them. I have not been told whether the School has been kept up. I hope the Unhappiness of the Times has not prevented an Attention to Education.

9th April

American Affairs undoubtedly bear a better Aspect than they did a few Months past, and a fortunate Blow on our Part might nearly settle the present Dispute. God grant that the insolent, barbarous Enemy may be speedily curbed, and that the happy Days of Peace may return. But at all Events, the Freedom of this Country must be established, which can never be done but by establishing the Independancy of it. The Probability of that is so great, that scarcely the least Degree of Doubt can remain respecting the accomplishing of it. But if the Blessing is bestowed, which I fully believe it will be, the Favour will be granted to a People who in no Respect may be said to deserve it, except on account of the Injuries which they receive from Britain ; for as to the Morals and Virtue of this People, I believe they have for a long Time been upon a most rapid Decline.

You may expect that I should say something in regard to my returning Home. I trust the Affairs of America will soon put on a brighter Face, and whenever that shall be the Case, I shall most gladly enjoy the Sweets of domestick Happiness. But as I have had so much Service to go through with, in this important Dispute, I should be glad to see more clearly the probable end of it, before I leave the Service.

15th April

By letters from Mr Lyman, I am informed of your own and the Family's Recovery of the small Pox. May the merciful Dispensation which has carried you thro' this Disorder be remembered by me with that Gratitude which it becomes a Subject unworthy of Favour to render to him who is the Parent of all Good.

30th April

Since I wrote you my Letter of this Date, which has gone into the Post Office, I have heard of the Irruption of the Enemy into Danbury, an Event which demands the publick Attention. This has determined me to return Home. Whether I can be of any Service to my Country, I cannot say; but if my Wishes were gratified, it would receive a Benefit from me. In my present View, I think it probable that I can be of more service there than here, which has determined my Choice. I am yours

TO THE COLONEL OF EACH REGIMENT BELONGING TO HIS BRIGADE.¹
SIR:

When a merciless Foe, in conjunction with Savages, are spreading Devastation and Horror over a Country once the Seat of Peace and Happiness, but now suffering all the Cruelty which an exasperated Tyranny can inflict, little need be said to rouse the Virtuous and the Brave to vindicate the Rights of Humanity, and repel a brutal Enemy, whose Conduct has been distinguished only by Violence, Rapine and Murder.

And whereas I have received an earnest Requisition from Gen^l Gates, that the approved Friends of their Country would more especially at this Time step forth to assist him in suppressing the Army under the Command of Mr Burgoyne, and as it is very certain that such is the present Situation of his Army that a vigorous Exertion on our Part would probably be attended with the greatest Success— I do therefore, Sir, relying on the firm Virtue of the Militia under my Command, earnestly invite all such as are able and effective to go forth with me to meet this insolent and rapacious Foe, and by the Aid of the Almighty prevent their farther Devastation and Plunder.

This Invitation you will in my Name be pleased to make to the Regiment under your Command. A Consciousness of the Rectitude of our Cause, the Feelings of Humanity, a regard to Ourselves, our Country, and Posterity, will be our Motives for the present Undertaking. These are the Motives which influence the virtuous and the good ; and I trust they are Motives which will influence us.

To prevent any Loss of Time in carrying the Design of annoying the Enemy into immediate Execution you will, Sir, nominate such Officers in your Regiment as will be most proper and likely to enlist or collect the Men for this Service. Those who engage in the present Enterprise will provide themselves with such Provisions as will be necessary to carry them to Albany or such other place where they may be directed, and where they can obtain Continental Supplies. The men will, at their Option, either ride or march on foot as will be most agreeable ; if they ride, faithful Persons must go with them to bring back their Horses. The Men will furnish themselves with Arms, Ammunition, and every necessary Accoutrement.

As the Service is intended to be not only entirely voluntary, but entered upon with the greatest Dispatch, you will therefore recommend to your Regiment the utmost Expedition in their Equipment and March, without which their Service will not probably be attended with the Advantages which it is designed to obtain.

You will give such Orders in regard to the Destination of your Regiment as you shall think proper until other Orders are received.

The Motives of pecuniary Reward will have but little Influence upon Men who engage in a Service so generous and noble, yet every one who engages in it may expect such Reward as shall be honorable and just.

OLIVER WOLCOTT,
Brigadier General

TO GOVERNOR TRUMBULL.

SIR

Litchfield, 25th Sept. 1777

The Draught that was lately made from my Brigade for the Peekskill has been less productive than I could wish, but I was apprehensive that many men would prefer paying a five-pound Five, to the personal Inconvenience which would attend the Service ; this, together with the Militia having been so lately called out, and a certain Disgust which I find prevails against Draughting, has occasioned that not more than 400 have gone from this Brigade.

On Tuesday I had sent to me the enclosed Requisition from Gen' Gates for Militia Aid. The Importance of suppressing the Enemy at the Northward I considered as very essential ; and the State of Gen. Gates's Army, as a considerable Part of the Assistance sent him was at Fort Edward and the country above, requiring a Reinforcement, induced me upon Advice with the Court which was then sitting to send to the respective Colonels of this Brigade an Invitation to those under their Command to turn out voluntarily and go with me to the Assistance of our Northern Friends. A Copy of this Invitation I enclose. The Step which I have taken is new, and what the Law has not particularly pointed out; but as I tho't in the present Case the Method would more likely succeed than any other, I ventured to adopt it, and I wish it might obtain your Excellency's and your Council's Approbation. I cannot yet say what success the Measure will have, but at present the Appearance is flattering, and I am well persuaded it will procure more Men than any other which could be gone into. The Court will rise this Morning, some of whom, with a number of the Barr, will accompany me to the Northward. I find Gentlemen here are very willing to give all the Efficiency to the Measure in their Power.

Yesterday I received the enclosed Letter from Mr Fay, and sincerely congratulate your Excellency on the Import of it. Providence seems to have thrown the Enemy's Northern Army in our Power, and if we are not inattentive to our Safety, it may undoubtedly be suppressed — which in my Judgment is a Matter of that Consequence that it ought to be done at this Time, though the Strength of three-quarters of the New England States were called out to effect it. The Suppression of that Army I think would give an essential Turn to our Affairs. There is Nothing from the Southward which can be depended upon. The Retreat of Gen! Washington was an Event very unexpected, but I hope there may be no Occasion to repeat it.

I am with Esteem

Your Excellency's most obedient humble Servant

Gov. Trumbull

OLIVER WOLCOTT

P. S. To-morrow or the day after I shall go forward, Northward.

TO HIS WIFE.

MY DEAR

Stillwater, 2 Octbr 1777

I came here the Day before Yesterday, and am stationed about two Miles from Headquarters. Mr Burgoyne, I apprehend, will not choose to attack this Army; so that it is a Matter of Uncertainty whether any Thing very interesting will turn up immediately. Deserters are daily coming in from the Enemy, as well as Prisoners. Burgoyne's Situation must be disagreeable to him, as he cannot hope to achieve any thing, while such a Force opposes him, and is liable to many disastrous Events. Endeavors will probably be used to draw him out of his Lines, but I believe he will cautiously avoid such a Circumstance. Our Army are in great Vigor and healthy, and Provisions are plenty. My own Situation is more comfortable by far than I expected to find it. I live in a good and convenient House, and the Volunteers are well accommodated. May the Almighty take Care of you and the Family.

I am yours affectionately,

O. WOLCOTT

TO GOVERNOR TRUMBULL.

SIR:

Camp Bemis Heights, 10 Oct^r 1777.

I came to this Camp the 30th ultimo with a little more than 300 Men. The apparent Exigency of our Affairs in this Department and the Probability of affording some usefull succour to this Army were, as I observed in my former Letter, my Inducements to this Undertaking. How far the Step which I have taken has been approved of by your Excellency and Council of Safety I have not been told ; but as I was directed to afford such Aid to this Army as I tho't proper, it was my Opinion, and the Opinion of all Gentlemen whom I consulted, that the Enemy could not be so deeply wounded any where as in this Quarter ; and I am happy to find that the Success which has attended our military Operations in this Department has justified my Opinion.

After the Action of the 19th the Enemy kept close till the 7th, before which Time a large Force was collected at this Place. On the 7th about two oclock, P. M., the Enemy began to advance upon our Left, upon which our Army were ordered to their Posts, and part of Gen! Arnold's Division was sent out to oppose the Enemy. About three the Enemy began to play with their Field Pieces ; and as our Party was much inferior to that of the Enemy, our People gave Ground about sixty Rods, when Gen! Arnold came up with a Reinforcement about four, upon which the Fire of the Musquetry became violent and incessant until Night when the Enemy retired to their Lines, the outermost of which our People entered and kept possession of, that night. Within these Lines Gen! Arnold had his Horse shot under him, and immediately after, unfortunately, had a Musquet Ball pass through his Ankle, which broke the Bone and he has since been carried down to Albany. I cannot precisely say what was the Loss on either Side ; ours was, undoubtedly, inconsiderable. I suppose we had about 20 killed and 60 wounded. The Enemy had about 100 killed, 193 taken, and 200 or more wounded. I believe I shall not reckon too high, when I say that the Enemy were weakened by this Action not less than Five Hundred. Amongst the wounded was Gen! Frazer who is since dead. Taken, one of Gen! Burgoyne's Aid de Camps, two Majors and some other Officers. We had no Field Officer killed and but very few Officers wounded. We took from the Enemy two 12, and six 6, pounders (Brass.) We had no Field Pieces of our own in the Action. We also took from them between 300 and 400 Tents. It is supposed we had between three and four Thousand in the Action, and it is said that the greater Part of the Enemy were engaged. Col. Cook's Regiment was in this Day's Action, who behaved much to their Honour. Col. Latimer's Regiment took a Part in the former Action, and both of them have acquired much Reputation.

It was fully expected that the Enemy would retreat towards Lake George, the Night after the Action. In Consequence of this, nine or ten Regiments were sent out very early the next Morning, who returned towards Night, having gone above the Enemy's Encampment about four miles, as far as the River; they found they had not passed. This intelligence was unexpected, as it had been confidently asserted by those who had come in that Morning, that the enemy had retreated about 2 o'clock. In this Persuasion, about 500 Men were sent out on the Morning of the 8th, to drive what was supposed only a covering Party out of their Camp. Nothing of Consequence was done that Day. The Enemy kept up a scattered, irregular Fire which was returned, and a few People were killed on both Sides. Gen! Lincoln had that Day a Musquet Ball pass thro' his Leg which broke the Bone. On this Day I fancy both Partys were much deceived. Otherwise, the Enemy would not have failed to destroy the few of us who were then out before their Lines, which they might have done with great Facility, as their whole Army was then in Camp. I suppose they tho't the petty Appearance which we made was only a Decoy to draw them out.

The Night following the 8th, the Enemy evacuated their Camp, leaving about 300 wounded, principally British Troops, which Gen. Burgoyne, the next Morning, by Flagg recommended to the Care of Gen! Gates. Very early on the Morning of the ninth, large Partys were sent out of Camp to harrass the Enemy in their Retreat, but it proving a very rainy Day, but little was effected, so that the Enemy marched yesterday about four Miles without much Molestation.

This Morning, very large Detachments are gone out, and the Fire of Field Pieces is heard. The People with me are ordered to keep the Camp. Gen! Fellows is posted with about 2000 Militia on the east Side of the River, near Gen! Schuyler's Plantation. This Day will probably be attended with important Events.

11th. I intended to have closed my Letter yesterday, but as I was desirous to communicate to your Excellency as many Events as possible of this most interesting Period, I have stopp'd the Express till this Morning, to give you the History of yesterday, but which I cannot do with Particularity, but can only in general observe that almost the whole of our Army went forward yesterday. Gen! Gates followed about 2 o'clock P. M. The Enemy attempted to cross the River near Schuyler's Plantation, but were hindered by Gen^l Fellows. They then made an Attempt to go off from the River and flank our People on the west Side, but were prevented. Our Army are on their Front and Flank, and on the opposite Side of the River. Yesterday, and in the Evening especially, the Enemy appeared to be in the greatest Confusion and Distress, environed on every Side by our Army, their Baggage scattered and a good deal of it destroyed by themselves. A great number of their Horses are killed on the Road, and several hundred Barrells of Provisions have fallen into our Hands. Our Army, the last Night, lay on their Arms, to renew the Attack this Morning. What will be the Events of the Day God only knows. But in all Probability it will end in, at least, the total Loss of all the Enemy's Artillery Stores and Baggage, if not of the greater Part of their Army. I cannot well conceive of an Army being bro't into a worse Situation than that of the Enemy's. But the Fate of it will be fully known in two or three Days. May it please a merciful God to grant that the kindest Events may take place as it respects ourselves.

It is my Belief that the Events of the Campaign in this Quarter will open to us the brightest Schemes and will involve in it Consequences which will fully establish the American Independency. And although our Affairs put on a disagreeable Aspect in other Parts, yet an Aurora Borealis from this Quarter will dispell the dismal Gloom.

I expect soon to be discharged; but before that Time I hope I may have the Pleasure to congratulate your Excellency on the full Establishment of our Affairs in this Department, except the Re-capture of Ticonderoga, &c., which I hope will before long be also effected.

I am your Excellency's

Most obedient humble Servant

Gov. Trumbull

OLIVER WOLCOTT

P. S. We took on the 7th four Artillery Wagons. The Enemy in their Retreat have burnt Gen^l Schuyler's House, Barn, Mills, and the Barracks; and in their Progress have burnt the House of every Man who has been reported friendly to his Country.

TO HIS WIFE.

MY DEAR

York Town 18th Febr^y 1778

I arrived here the 15th, well, after having been detained about two Days by the Susquehannah. I performed the Journey with much less Fatigue than I expected, and my Horse held out bravely, and has suffered nothing. We have no European News. An Exchange of Prisoners between Washington and Howe is agreed upon.

I can add nothing except my earnest Wish, that the Almighty Being who has hitherto taken Care of us, would still extend his Protection over us and our Children, and grant us such Direction and Support as may be necessary for us. I am by the Blessing of God well, and enjoy a Freedom of spirits. God I trust will take Care of this Land, and will bring us together again in Peace. Trust in your Maker, and he will do you good.

The Service in attending Congress is more arduous than I have before known it. We sit sometimes till between 10 and 11 o'clock at Night, but in those Cases we have an Adjournment at Noon. I have been so confined as not to have been on Horseback since I came here, which I find has been some Injury to my Health.

As to the Gloominess of the Times which you mention — Times I admit are bad, but I do not believe that God will consign this Country to Destruction. Light in due Time will arise, and the happy Days of Peace — fair, equitable, and just Peace — will return. Suffer not your Mind to be under any overwhelming Solitude on this account, God will take Care of this People, and I trust that both you and I shall live to see the most convincing Proofs of it, in the establishment of their Independency and Safety.

I do not know what I can add, but to advise you to take the best care of your Health, and free yourself, as far as you can, from anxious Care. Remember that he, who does not suffer a sparrow to fall to the ground but under his providential Appointment, and who knows the Wants and Desires of all his Creatures, will do that which upon the whole will be best for every one who humbly confides in his providential Goodness. Your own Experience has taught you that you have suffered many unnecessary Inquietudes; I am sure that mine has, in numberless Instances. Let us then commit all our Concerns to the Disposal of our Maker, who I believe will order that concerning us which shall be for our greatest Advantage.

9th May

I think that Great Britain can proceed no further. I consider our Independency as established. And as I wished not to continue in the bustle of Business abroad, any longer than till the happy Days of Peace returned, I shall hope it will please God to grant that for the short Time I may have to live in the World, I shall enjoy with you the humble Condition of rural, blissful Retirement.

5th June

My own Opinion is that Great Britain will not continue a Land War in this Country; and I am persuaded that the proud Spirit of that Nation is more humbled than it ever has been since it had an Existence. This great Variation in the Circumstances of our Affairs is the Lord's Doings, and it is truly Wonderful. May we ascribe it to that Great Cause which produces all the Good which we experience.

12th June.

The Enemy will endeavour, if possible, to divide the Americans; but I believe that it will not be in their Power. Congress are united and firm not to enter into any kind of Negotiation, but upon the acknowledged Principles of our Independence. This is an interesting Period.

20th June.

Put your Trust in the Most High, whose Providence in the late Event of the Enemy's leaving Philadelphia has been most signal. After having been almost nine Months in the Possession of that City, they have now left it without Compulsion and in apparent Terror. God will establish us in Peace and Safety. My tenderest Love to my Children and Friends. I am affectionately yours

OLIVER WOLCOTT

Mrs Laura Wolcott.

Head Quarters, 10th July 1779

GENERAL WOLCOTT has a high Sense of the Activity with which the Militia now in this TOWN have come forth for the Defense of the State, and to repel the wanton, savage Violence of the Foe who not only insulted every Principle which governs civilized Nations, but by their Barbarities offered the grossest Indignities to human Nature. The Numbers and Alertness with which the Militia have assembled at this most busy Season, at once shows their Detestation of the Foe, and their inflexible determination to vindicate their own Rights.

FROM CITIZENS OF NORWALK.

HON'D SIR

Norwalk, July 19th 1779

We need not inform you that our Habitations are burned. But as our Lands and Crops are here, we have determined to remove as near as we can find Shelter to our former Abodes, and People are gathering as fast as they can in the Borders of the Town, but have no Guard sufficient to protect us. We are fearful to continue here, and yet we know not how to subsist elsewhere. We therefore earnestly entreat you to commiserate our Distresses, and send us Men to defend us.

THADDEUS BETTS

STEPHEN ST JOHN (and others)

FROM GENERAL HEATH.

DEAR SIR

Mandeville's, July 19, 1779

I am just honored with your very obliging favor of yesterday. Every assistance in my power shall be given you. The late wanton and savage Conduct of the Enemy must be execrated by every person who is actuated by principles of humanity. The Enemy have moved towards King's Ferry in force. I have the Honor to be very respectfully, my Dear Sir, your ob't serv't

W. HEATH

Maj. Genl. Wolcott

FROM GENERAL PARSONS.

DEAR GENERAL

Highlands, 20th July '79

We arrived at North River last Night, after a most fatiguing March. The Fort at Stony Point was taken by Storm, with the Loss of about 90 men killed and wounded on our Part. The Action continued about Ten Minutes, and our Troops behaved with the greatest Firmness and Intrepidity. The Loss of the Enemy is 516 killed, wounded & Prisoners — about 120 killed & wounded. The Body of the Troops now seem to be directing their Course this Way. I believe they will repent their Attempt, should they make the Attack.

In arranging our Line, a number of Ensigns are vacant. If your Son is willing to accept one of these Vacancies, I shall be happy in having it in my Power to gratify the Inclination of the Son of so worthy a Father. I am determined to have these Offices filled by young Gentlemen of Spirit and Learning, to make the Army respectable, or to leave them vacant. I am, Sir, with much Esteem and Respect your obe't Serv't

SAM^l H. PARSONS

Hon. Maj. General Wolcott.

FROM GENERAL WASHINGTON.

SIR

Head Quarters, July 24th 1779

I was favored with your letter of the 17th Instant a little time past and prevented from giving it an earlier answer, from the hurry of unavoidable business.

Be assured, Sir, that I have felt much pain at the destruction of your Towns, and been unhappy that I could not, consistent with the general good, afford such an aid of Continental Troops as might have prevented it ; I hope, however, that the late fortunate attack on Stony Point will tend to give a check to the continuance of the ravages in your State. Gen! Glover has been directed to halt his Brigade at Ridgefield, a situation that will enable him to afford you some assistance, should the Enemy return to the object they begun with in the Sound.

I am with esteem, Sir, y'r most obe't serv't

G^o WASHINGTON

Major Gen! Wolcott

TO GENERAL PARSONS.

SIR

Horseneck, 25th July 1779

Should the Enemy choose to attack us here in large Force, the Consequence must perhaps be unavoidable, that we leave the Places. But whatever happens, I hope if we do retreat, the Reasons for it will be apparent.

Your kind Design, Sir, with regard to my Son merits my most respectful Acknowledgments. He is now in a Course of Studies to fit him for civil Life, which I do not wish him to leave. You will therefore please to accept of my Gratitude for the proffered Favour. I am, Sir, with much Respect,

Your ob't ser't

OLIVER WOLCOTT

FROM GENERAL E. WOLCOTT.

SIR

East Windsor, July 27, 1779

Your Orders of the 24th are received. I received Orders from the Captain General to detail and have in Readiness, properly officered, one half of my Brigade on the West Side of Connecticut River, to march on the shortest Notice ; I issued my Orders accordingly. Soon after, I had Orders for one half of those detailed, to march to New Haven and act as occasion shall require, under the Commanding Officer to the Westward. I gave my Orders accordingly, and the Men marched under Command of Lieut. Col. Hez. Wyllys and Lieut. Col. Howell Woodbridge.

We are now making Detachments to fill the Continental Army & the Two Regiments raised for the Defence of this State. I expect the Returns every Minute, and hope they will be ready soon to march. This being the State of affairs in this Part of the Country, would it not be best that the Men now on the Sea Coast should content themselves a little longer? But this I submit, and shall punctually comply with any Orders from you, and am, Sir, with Regard your most obe't Serv't

ERASTUS WOLCOTT

Hon^{ble} Maj^r. Gen! Wolcott

THE WOLCOTT MEMORIAL.

TO GENERAL E. WOLCOTT.

SIR

Horseneck, 30th July 1779

Your Favour of the 24th is rec'd. I never had any Intention that more than one Quarter of the Militia should be out at once, but in Cases of the last Extremity. That Case does not yet exist. I am directed by the Governor to defend, according to the best of my Discretion, the Sea Coast from Connecticut River to this Place. I shall be satisfied, Sir, if you keep in constant Service, for the Defence of the State, one Quarter of your Brigade West of Connecticut River, and shall leave it to you to judge in what Manner it shall be effected.

Whether the Enemy will attempt this Place, or go to New York, a Day or two at farthest will determine. If they shall go to New York, I shall proceed to the Eastward, leaving the detachment now here at this Place. Yours with much Respect,

OLIVER WOLCOTT

Brig. Genl. Wolcott

TO ONE OF HIS DAUGHTERS.

MY DEAR CHILD

Philadelphia 25th Decr 1781

I wrote to your Sister on the 19th instant, acknowledging her Letter of the 10th. I hope that you will put it in my Power to acknowledge the like Kindnesses from you, as nothing gives me more Pleasure than to hear from my Family.

In my Absence I shall frequently write to some of you, tho' I may not have any thing material to communicate. The able Advice which you will receive from a kind Mother, and your own Discretion, will render any Counsel from me in a very great Degree unnecessary. I write principally to gratify my Inclination for a correspondence, and to recommend to your Observance the same Principles of Honour and Virtue which have hitherto governed your Conduct.

You will let your Mamma know that by the divine Goodness I enjoy Health, and will present my kindest Regards to her, your Sister and Brother. I am affectionately yours

TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

MY DEAR

Philadelphia, 21st Jan^{ry} 1782

The Date of this I hope you remember with the same agreeable Recollections which give Pleasure to my own Mind. But yet this Circumstance reminds me of the rapid Flight of Time. But what is its Importance, except how it is used? Properly employed in the great Duties of Life, it will insure us Pleasures lasting and sublime.

And how noble and exalted the Joy, to spend an Eternity together in the Participation of Delights becoming rational Natures to enjoy, and such as the Profusion of divine Goodness will bestow. The future Life must give the Stamp to human Wisdom or Folly. You I trust have made that rational Choice, which both respects your Duty and your Happiness. May we both attend to the great Concernments of Immortality, and never forget the Obligations which we are under to our Maker. By the Goodness of God I enjoy Health, and find my Service here far less burdensome than I expected. My kindest Regards to my Family and Friends. I am yours most affectionately

Philadelphia, 15th Jan^y 1783

Mr Ellsworth says that you will succeed in the Business which you propose. I am very glad that he has a good Opinion of you, as there is no one whose Friendship will be more serviceable to you. And as he is a Gentleman of great Candor and Integrity, as well as in high Reputation in his Profession, you will I doubt not merit that Regard from him, which I believe he is inclined to bestow.

May the divine Being guide, protect, and bless you.

MY D^R FRIEND

Litchfield, 15th Sept: 1783

I have of late frequently recommended to you that you do not so assiduously attend upon the Business of the Pay-table Office. About a Year ago you had all the Appearance of possessing vigorous Health, but since that Time you have gone thro a Service, which the most athletic Constitution must have suffered by. And in addition to all this, I suspect that you have read considerably every Night. This is too much. Relax your Attention; throw aside your Books; Ride or Exercise moderately in good Weather; suffer your Mind to be more vacant; and Lodge where it shall be most agreeable to you, without regarding any other Consideration. Your Labours and literary Improvement will justify such an Exemption. You want Time and Opportunity to recover a Tone — and which I trust that God will give you, if you shall not be wanting to yourself. Your Pursuits are too urgent, more I believe than those of any other Person that I was ever acquainted with. When I consider your Years and the Business that you have done, and the literary Improvements which you have made, I am astonished at your Industry. But take my Advice, and essentially abate this Fervour of Pursuit, and come and see us as often, as it can be convenient for you ; tho I cannot say that I have any Thing very special to induce me to ask the Favour of you, except the Gratification of a Parent's Fondness.

7th Oct^r

I shall not go to New Haven till next week. I will if God please attend one Session more, which I expect will be a disagreeable one. But I will act what I believe will be most for the Interest of my Country, without any Regard to any personal Consideration. I believe that we must suffer much Distress before this Confederacy will be brought to that Consistency which will secure us in the Possession of internal Peace.

I am yours with the tenderest affection

I arrived here yesterday ; the Indians are not yet generally come in, but we expect a full representation of them in a few days. We made them a short address yesterday, and find that the Savages appear much disposed to be friendly. How long the Negotiation will continue is uncertain, tho' I do not expect to leave the Place in less than ten days or a Fortnight. The number of Indians now here is about one hundred, and a much larger number will probably be here within three days.

The Marquis de La Fayette, with his Aid the Chevalier de C., who are on their Journey to Boston are here. The Marquis will go by Hartford and will deliver you this Letter, to whom I wish you would make yourself known.

Your Letter of the 4th instant is received. The Character of the young Lady, whom you mention as the Object of your Affection, justifies your Choice, and receives the Approbation of your Parents. DEED OF EMANCIPATION.¹

Know all men by these presents, that I, OLIVER WOLCOTT, of Litchfield, in the State of Connecticut, in expectation that my negro servant man, Caesar, will by his industry be able to obtain a comfortable subsistence for himself, and that he will make a proper use of the Freedom which I hereby give him, do discharge, liberate and set free, him, the said Caesar, and do hereby exempt him from any further obligation of servitude to me, my heirs, and every other person claiming any authority over him, by, from, or under me.

And that my said servant, whom I now make free as aforesaid, may be known hereafter by a proper cognomen, I hereby give him the name of Jamus—so that here-after he is to be known and distinguished by the name of CAESAR JAMUS. As witness my hand and seal in Litchfield, Nov. 23^d A. D. 1786

Litchfield, Sept. 10th 1787

We most sincerely join with you and Betsey in our Congratulations upon the Birth of your Son, and devoutly wish that he may live and so conduct in Life as to give you that Pleasure which none but a Parent can feel.

Oct. 3^d

We are sorry that the Badness of the Roads has prevented us the Pleasure of seeing you and Betsey and your little Son, who all agree is a very fine Boy. You will take the first Opportunity to bring him here, as we wish to become acquainted with the young Stranger.

I have examined the Constitution proposed by the Convention, and I find that they have attended to the great Object of rendering Government efficient, yet capable of having its Errors corrected without publick disturbance, and guarded both in the constitution of its Offices and in its Operations, against the Impressions of Faction. These important Points have never been effectually combined in any System of national Government, which I have had the Knowledge of; and if fully obtained, it may be considered as a high Improvement. Upon the whole, I think there is much to be admired in this Constitution; it is the Production of the wisest and the best of Men, and I hope that it will be so considered.

I shall probably go to New Haven on Wednesday, and shall hope to see you there in the Course of the Session. Our Love to Betsey.

MY D^R FRIEND

Upon my return home; I found my Family as well as usual. You will easily believe that your Mother felt the most sympathetic Grief with the Rest of the Family on account of the Loss of that sweet Babe, who I trust now enjoys a Happiness which he cannot wish to exchange for the uncertain Pleasures of this Life. Our Grief for the Loss of those who are most dear to us is I believe very often selfish and partial; mine I fear is so in the last Instance which has occasioned it, tho' it has been and still is too pungent, not to distinguish it from all others which I have ever suffered. But God grant that we may all submit to this divine Dispensation. God grant that we may all be prepared to enter, after Life, into that social State, which will not be interrupted by any Thing like the Evils of this Life, where both the Society and the Happiness will be endless.

Every Thing in this Life presents a faded Aspect to my View. May we seek for a Happiness which is permanent. What can a rational Being place his wishes upon short of the permanent Favour of his Maker? So far as we resemble our Creator, so far and no farther do we attain to Perfection. May you and I and all of this Family possess those Dispositions of Mind, which are correspondent to the heavenly State, and if this shall be our happy Condition, we shall soon enjoy the Society of our young Friend, who I doubt not is exempt from the Evils which he must have suffered, had he continued in this Life.

Your Mother presents with me her kindest Love to you and Betsey. May both of you be enabled with Calmness and Resignation to submit to the divine Dispensation, under this persuasion that we are but poorly able to judge either what is best for ourselves or for those who are most dear to us.

Feb. 22^d

We live in a mutable World; but our Understandings are weak and most liable to err. We doubtless frequently grieve, when the divine Dispensation is intended in mercy to ourselves and those for whom we lament. Let us be assured that infinite Wisdom knows, and supreme Goodness disposes for the best. God will not forsake those who put their trust in Him. He will give you Peace.

Yours with the kindest Regard

SIR

Litchfield, Nov. 24th 1789

Old Age is very apt to be vain in giving Advice. No one, I believe, of your years, requires it less, as you have been long conversant with People of almost every Condition, and very readily investigate the Principles of human Action. Yet I will indulge myself once, and which I shall probably never think it necessary to do again, advise you that in every Matter of Consequence, you depend (in the last Resort) upon your own Judgment rather than upon that of any other. In this Mode of Conduct you will less frequently err; it will induce a stricter Habit of Reflection; and if you mistake, you will not feel the Mortification of being misguided by such as may have an Interest in deceiving you. The Executive Officers with whom you will have most Intercourse will, I believe, be inclined to treat you with Generosity and Frankness, from the First Magistrate downwards. An open, unassuming Behaviour will be most agreeable to them; this naturally induces Confidence, and may be done consistently with such Reservations as may be necessary. It is generally said that Courtiers always act in Disguise. This is far from being universally the Case; and when it is, it is more generally owing to their Situation than Choice, especially among those who are to be denominated good Men, to which Character I truly believe the First Magistrate, and the Heads of the Executive Departments, (all of whom I know,) are justly entitled. The Habits and Manners of a Soldier are naturally open and frank, and if at any Time it shall seem to be otherwise, such Conduct will be rather assumed and political than natural.

Your Service will be complicated and arduous; but you will reflect that those who are to judge of your Service, will be most capable of making a just estimate of it. You may therefore safely indulge yourself with as much Exercise and Relaxation, as will be necessary for your Health. Endeavor to preserve the mens sana in sano corpore, by indulging at times a certain Vacancy of Thought, &c. As to your Mode of Living, I need say but very little; your Habits of Temperance will render it unnecessary—only this you will recollect, that there are many old Men in Connecticut, who have drank Cyder freely for three Quarters of a Century, who are active and almost blooming, and exempt from all Gout, Rheumatism and Stone; while the Drinkers of Beer and Spirits die soon, and in Misery. Simple Diet and fermented Liquors, except rich Beer, will with the moderate use of Water, be always found to be best, especially for sedentary Persons.

Thus far I have wrote, which is much farther than I intended when I began to scribble. You need be under no Apprehension that I shall oblige you to read such long Letters of grave Advice in future, and will consider this rather as an Evidence of my Regard for your Happiness, than of any Anxiety I feel lest you should be under any misapprehension of what Principles ought to govern your Conduct.

Our sincere Love to Betsey, which you will also accept for yourself. I am with the kindest Regard

Yours

SIR

Litchfield, June 11th 1790

Your Mother has received your two Letters, informing her of the Birth of your Son, and has desired me to express to you and to your Spouse her most sincere Congratulations upon this auspicious Event; and that her devout wishes might be accepted for the Happiness of both of you and for that of your Child. She hopes that she shall be gratified by seeing you all at Litchfield, as soon as it can be done with a proper Attention to their Health. A wise Providence has rendered all our Enjoyments in Life precarious. You have had a very sensible Evidence of this Truth; and will therefore always endeavor to be prepared to submit to every divine Dispensation.

Litchfield, July 4th, 1791

I have been happy to be informed by the publick Prints that the President has been pleased to appoint you the Comptroller of the Treasury. This mark of Approbation and Confidence is highly honourable to yourself, and will have (I doubt not) a constant Influence upon you to persist in that undeviating Course of Integrity which, I am happy to believe, has procured you that Trust which is really more confidential than almost any other. Let us ever act, conscious that we are always under the Inspection of the Almighty, and that He justly requires of all his Creatures, that they use the Powers which He has given them for the Purposes for which they were bestowed.

I suppose that this Morning you are putting on your best Coat, decently to celebrate the Anniversary of American Independence—an Event, indeed, which seems to become more and more important, and which fully justifies the Struggle which we made to obtain it. This Country has already much more than recovered all the Damages or real Inconveniences, which resulted from the War. What a Misfortune must it have been to us, to have been connected with a Power which is continually either making, or finding, an Enemy in every Part of the Globe.

We wish you enjoyed some of our cool Litchfield Airs this Season. I hope that you will take Care of your Health and of that of your Family, and that your Service will not be so extremely arduous as it has been.

Our kind Regards to Betsey and yourself. Your little Boy we hear is a fine red-faced jolly Fellow ; and we wish he might ever be as happy as he shall deserve to be, and indeed more so, unless he shall prove to be better than most Folks.¹

Yours.

You will remember that I always write fast

MRS. GOODRICH TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

MY DEAREST MAMA

Hartford, 14th Jan^y 1791

I have been quite uneasy that so many weeks should elapse without my writing to you ; but I hope to be pardoned, when you know how entirely my time has been taken up with the attention I have been forced to pay to company, and the necessary business of my Family. I have, however, been made happy by receiving several letters from Frederick, which have informed me of the welfare of the family, and that you and my Father would certainly make us a visit this Winter. The expectation of this visit has employed so many of my waking and sleeping hours, that it would indeed be a cruel disappointment, if any thing should happen to prevent it. It is painful to me to reflect that I have lived here so long, in a place that my dearest Mother has never seen, and that those objects which have become perfectly familiar, and so much endeared to me, should all appear strange to friends, whose Interests and Happiness I used to consider as entirely inseparable from mine. I hope there is nothing whimsical, or singular, in the feelings which I have expressed, for they impress my mind too forcibly to be easily subdued.

I received a letter from Oliver, two days ago ; the family were all very well at the time he wrote ; we hear from him but seldom, and his letters appear to be written in haste — which we cannot think strange.

Laura is gone to the Assembly this evening, with all the gaiety and good spirits of a girl of sixteen. I should have gone too, but my friend Peggy was not in spirits to attend; and tho' I consider myself as well as most people, I mean to take Oliver's advise "not to play too many modish pranks," this Winter. I have not heard whether my Father is gone to New Haven; if he is not, you will remember me affectionately to him, and beg of him to write to me sometimes.

MY DEAR MAMMA

Hartford, 3^d April 1791.

We have been very assiduous to find an Opportunity to send to Litchfield for a fortnight past, but have not heard of any, tho' M^r: Pomeroy and M^r: Webster have been there without informing us of it. I am very much pleased that it is in my power to inform you that my wrist is almost well, and will probably soon be as strong as the other. I am sure you will approve of my fortitude in submitting to the Operation, since it is likely to restore to me the use of a limb, that I had consider'd as almost lost. I shall soon have not the least shadow of an excuse for being indolent and useless to my friends. I hope I may enjoy my health, and live to discharge some part of the obligation I am under to those, who have so kindly and tenderly assisted me, thro' a long and dangerous illness. The gratitude which I have felt is now become a very pleasing emotion, since I flatter myself, that I can make my services and attentions, somehow beneficial to my friends.

We were very happy in my Father's company the few days he spent with us — we hope to enjoy the same pleasure again when the Court of Errors meet. I have procur'd a pair of shoes for you which I hope will suit, — the cloth is exceedingly durable, and I think almost as handsome as sattin.

Laura and I have taken pains to collect you some flower seeds, but we cannot get any great variety. We are making up our gardens and things begin here to wear the appearance of summer. The flood is up, which prevents their taking any Salmon, otherwise we might perhaps have the pleasure of sending you one. There is to be an Ordination here next week — I wish my dear Mama that you would persuade Frederick to come. I cannot tell you how much I want to see him, and I am certain the ride will be for his health.

We have not heard from Philadelphia since M^r: Ellsworth's return. Miss Wadsworth tells me that my Brother and Sister seem to be very happy, and that little Oliver is as handsome an Angel. M^r: Goodrich, M^r: Mosely and Laura, are all well and join with me in the most affectionate regards to my Father and yourself.

TO HIS SON OLIVER.

SIR

Litchfield, May 5, 1794.

By my Letter of the 21st ultimo, I informed you of the Death of your Mother. Her Children will render their best Regards to her Memory, as well as most benefit themselves, by observing the Instructions which she has given them, and by an Imitation of her Conduct.

The Circumstances of human Existence would be involved in impenetrable Darkness, but as we are instructed by the Christian Religion; not but that those who have not that Aid, by governing themselves by the intellectual Sense which God has given them, may attain to that State of Happiness and moral Improvement, which is the ultimate Object of the Religion of Christ Jesus. But by him Life and Immortality are brought to Light, of which without that Aid no certain knowledge could be obtained. This teaches us that adequate Provision is made, and the Application thereof rendered certain to such as shall sincerely desire it, for our recovery and restoration to a State of moral Purity, and the Possession of a Happiness most exalted and refined and which will never end.

That your dear Mother is in a state of exalted Happiness, and which is rendered sure to her by that Almighty Being, who will never disappoint those who in the Observance of a proper Conduct put their Trust in Him, I have no doubt. May we so conduct, and so place our Hope and Confidence in Him who is able to save to the uttermost, as that we may finally participate in that Happiness.

My kindest Love to Betsey. May the Almighty bless you, her, and your Child.

SIR

Litchfield, Feb. 16th 1795

I am happy to find it announced in the publick Papers that you are appointed to the office of Secretary of the Treasury, not only as it is an official Honour, but as it is a publick Testimonial of the Merit of your Services and your Ability to execute the Trust, by those whose Judgment will be fully confided in. The Appointment is more important and confidential than any single Trust held under Government, and consequently has the highest Responsibility annexed to it; but I persuade myself that it will be executed by you in such a Manner as will fully evince the Propriety of the Designation. In transacting very important Business, it is necessary for obtaining Success, that a Man should not despair of his Ability to effect it. In conducting a national fiscal Department, it is, so far as I have been informed, in certain publick Exigencies, and upon unforeseen Events, for the Officer to exercise certain discretionary Powers, in Confidence that his Conduct, if evidently directed to publick Utility, will obtain Approbation ; and such Conduct might well be sanctioned, when its Consequences have been evidently beneficial.

But the Exercise of such Discretion is ever attended with much Risque ; and it will be peculiarly so under our Government, where many are seeking to find Grounds for Discontent, and when they are not real, will create such as are imaginary. I think that an Officer should never depart from established Rules, unless the Necessity be most urgent and apparent.

Col. Hamilton leaves the Office with high Reputation, in the Opinion of those whose Judgment deserves to be respected. His Successor can have no higher Ambition than to execute the Office in the same honourable Manner which he has done.

I hope that Betsey has recovered from her Indisposition, and that she and her dear Babe will spend as much as it can be agreeable to her of the next Summer with us, and that you will accompany her hither.

The Situation in which you are placed is highly important to the Publick, as well as honorable to yourself, but I have full Confidence that in case you enjoy Health, which you ought to endeavor to preserve, the Duties of it will be honourably discharged and to the good Acceptance of the Publick. At the same Time it will be well for you to expect to meet with Calumny, which no Man who faithfully does his Duty has any Reason to hope to escape. The Man who shall so conduct as to enjoy the Approbation of his own Conscience, and the Respect of the virtuous, the sensible, and the good, obtains every Thing in Life, as it respects his Character and Peace of Mind, which he ought to wish for. This Satisfaction I trust you will enjoy, and finally, a Happiness which the World can neither give, nor take from you.

My kindest Love to Betsey, your little Child, and yourself.

I am, &c.

SIR

Litchfield, Jan. 11th 1796

I have little to communicate, but as I think much of my Children, it could not escape my recollection that this is your birth-day. How short is the period from infancy to middle life, and from that to old age ! But a wise man will estimate whatever respects his permanent existence, and regulate his conduct accordingly. We ought to consider it one amongst innumerable Evidences of Divine Goodness, that a state of being so impotent and frail in every respect as the present, has been ordained of God to be of short duration, especially as the most ample Provision is made by the Author of all good, not only to exempt us from all present infirmities, both natural and moral, but to conduct us, unless we shall neglect what essentially concerns us, to the possession of the most exalted and refined pleasures, of endless duration. May we by the most inflexible perseverance endeavour to obtain a prize of such inestimable Value.

My kindest Regards to my dear Connections who are with you. We have our usual health.

Yours, &c.

TO PRESIDENT WASHINGTON.

SIR

Litchfield, Jan. 21st 1796

I conceive it to be my Duty to inform you, Sir, that in Consequence of the Death of our late worthy Governour, His Excellency, SAMUEL HUNTINGTON, the Powers annexed to that Office have devolved upon me as Lieutenant Governour of the State; and you will be pleased, Sir, to be assured that whatever official Duties you shall require of me, will be strictly observed.

Permit me, Sir, upon this Occasion, to express the deep Regret which I have long felt at the extreme Impropriety with which the national Administration has been treated by disappointed Ambition, and from other Motives not less improper; and to assure you, Sir, that the People of Connecticut have ever preserved the most perfect Confidence in the Wisdom and Rectitude of your Administration, and are fully persuaded that in Consequence thereof, their Country has been exempted from Evils the most calamitous and distressing; and they are very sensible that they enjoy every Benefit which can possibly be derived from Government.

The favourable Opinion which you have been pleased to entertain of my Son, by appointing him to the very important and confidential Office of Secretary of the Treasury, excites in me the most agreeable Reflections. I shall flatter myself, Sir, that he will, by his Assiduity, Discretion, and Fidelity, continue to merit the Confidence you have placed in him. With great Deference, Esteem, and Respect, I am, Sir, your most obedient and most humble Servant,

OLIVER WOLCOTT

The President of the United States.

AUTOGRAPH LETTER OF GENERAL WASHINGTON.

An impression of the next letter which we had selected, — a perfect fac-simile, by the beautiful artotype process, — has been taken by Bierstadt; and giving it in that form, we omit it from the text.

The confidence, which in this letter is expressed in both of these gentlemen by the Father of his Country, was shared by the freemen of Connecticut. Mr. Wolcott, Sen., was placed in the Governor's seat by their votes at the succeeding election, — a result foreshadowed in the Election Sermon of 1796, from which we give an extract, preached by the Rev. John Marsh, D.D., of Wethersfield. The impressive custom, upon the organization of the two branches, of marching in procession, with the Executive, to the sanctuary, and engaging in divine worship before entering upon legislative duties, — a custom handed down from the early generations, but now perpetuated in Massachusetts alone, — was then observed, also, in Connecticut.

“The Lieutenant-Governor, on whom the chief command devolved in consequence of the death of his Excellency, we trust is no stranger to the joy and satisfaction arising from a consciousness of a prevailing and habitual regard to God, in the discharge of the duties of public as well as private life. May his Honor, whose great talents have been employed many years, in various, important public stations, continue, under the invigorating influence of the great principles of religion, to exert all his abilities, as God shall give him opportunity, for the good of this State and Nation and of mankind.”

We refrain from further extracts from the correspondence, but give from a manuscript copy the opening and the concluding paragraphs of his last Address to the Legislature of Connecticut.

TO THE LEGISLATURE.

GENTLEMEN OF THE COUNCIL, AND

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

A continuance of the sickness with which I have been visited for several months, will forbid my attendance with you at the approaching Session of the General Assembly, and apologize for a written communication of the few matters it is my duty to lay before you. . . .

Philadelphia 1. Feb^y. 1766

I have been duly honored with your letter of the 21st Oct^r. announcing the death of M^r. Austin, late Governor of Connecticut. —

At the same time that I regret the loss of so worthy a character, I cannot but feel consoled, that the administration of the Government of that State has fallen into such good hands as yours. — And let me pray you to accept my sincere thanks for the assurance therein given of your readiness to observe the relationship which it bears to the general Government.

I feel equally obliged by the expression of your concern for the attacks which have been made upon my Administration. — If the enlightened, and virtuous part of the Community will make allowance for my involuntary errors, I will promise they shall have no cause to accuse me of wilful ones. — Hoping for for the first, I feel no concern on account of the latter. -

Your Son, as far as my knowledge of him extends, is a very deserving character. - He discharges the duties of his Office with integrity and ability; and,
I am persuaded, may bid defiance to all those who seem to be continually on the lookout for occasions (without being at the trouble to investigate facts) to arraign the conduct of public Officers. -

With great esteem & respect

I am - Sir
Y^r obed^t H^{ble} Serv^t

G. W. W. W.

Oliver Wolcott

Under a serious impression of the uncertain issue of my present sickness, I cannot forbear, in closing this communication, to express the deep sense I feel of my Obligations to our Constituents, for their candour and confidence manifested towards me in the various and important Offices with which I have been honoured by their suffrages. My particular and sincere thanks are also due to those Gentlemen, with whom I have been associated in public life, for the many instances I have experienced of their friendship and respect. My best wishes attend them and all the members of the Legislature for their personal happiness. And I commend your deliberations, and the interests of the State, to the divine guidance and blessing.

OLIVER WOLCOTT

Litchfield, October 1797.

His apprehensions, as above intimated, were realized, and he expired at his seat in Litchfield, Dec. 1, 1797, it being his seventy-first birthday.

In person, Governor Wolcott was tall and erect, and of dignified appearance and bearing. His complexion was dark; his features bore the impress of his iron will, and their general expression was sedate. Though firm in his own opinions, he manifested deference to the opinions of others. He was never idle; dissipation had no charms for him. His love of domestic life is fully exhibited in the extracts which we have given from his letters. He was intimately acquainted with public law, and his Alma Mater, Yale College, conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He was personally acquainted with, and esteemed by, most of the great actors in the American Revolution, and his name is recorded in connection with most of its important events. On all occasions he showed himself an inflexible Republican, and a lover of social order. His character was worthy of the trust reposed in him by his country. It may be said of him, as Jenkins said of Coke, that "he was one whom power could not break nor favor bend." Of unswerving integrity; of devoted patriotism; a sincere and humble Christian, untainted by bigotry or intolerance; exemplary in his private as well as in his public relations; possessing natural abilities not brilliant but sound; of indefatigable industry and immovable resolution, — the State had no truer servant and no better citizen.

His funeral discourse, of twenty-four pages, bears the title:—

“Printed at Litchfield, by T. Collier.”

“Text—2 Chronicles, xxxii. 33. And Hezekiah slept with his Fathers, and they buried him in the chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David; and all Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, did him honor at his death.”

We give a few sentences:—

“By this death, the State is called to mourn one of the real friends of the simplicity and purity of her ancient institutions. In the language of the prophet, she may say that ‘One of her strong rods is broken and withered.’ Descended from ancestors distinguished among the first settlers of New England, Governor WOLCOTT was a real and not a theoretic republican. He revered and embraced the religion of his country. . . .

“In the discharge of these several offices, Integrity and firmness were the leading features of his character. He was an eminent exemplification of the ‘Vir tenax propositi’ of the bard of Venusia. Although he possessed a strong mind capable of deep and thorough investigation, his abilities were not of that brilliant cast, which have often ruined men in popular governments. He always seems to have aimed more to do his duty than to shine; to be useful, than to dazzle. By his death, the true interests of science have lost a strenuous defender; Virtue, religion, and good men, a sincere friend. Like good Hezekiah, he revered and loved public worship and divine ordinances; was a tried, but not an ostentatious, friend of the gospel ministry. He sensibly felt every attempt to depart from puritan practice and morals. He set his face like a flint against all the specious sophistry of new political theories, and the madness of infidel fanaticism. Rather than flatter or license the vices of the community, like a popular sycophant, he was willing to put his continuance in office at hazard, and his reputation in jeopardy, that he might discharge a good conscience. With the same firmness that he sustained the ills of life and the perils of office, he met the King of Terrors. With all the splendor of his station and his well-earned fame, he was not ashamed to pray in the expressive language of the Publican, ‘God be merciful to me a sinner!’ and to make the most feeling declarations of his own personal unworthiness.

“To what insignificance do human honors dwindle, before the grandeur of eternity! Nevertheless, the death of such a character is a grievous loss; especially under the present threatening aspects of Divine Providence, and the perilous situation of this country. Such tried characters are the pillars of our national existence. The presence, firmness, counsels, prayers, and example of such Fathers, should be esteemed ‘the chariots of our Israel and the horsemen thereof.’

“While we have assembled this day, to do honor to the remains of our beloved Chief Magistrate, how does the occasion echo the divine declaration, ‘All flesh is grass, and all the goodness thereof is as the flower of the field.’ This is the end of all living. No character, no distinction, can exempt us from a war in which there is no discharge. The richest furniture of the mind and the most excellent human accomplishments little avail in that land of darkness, where all distinctions are levelled. But let it not be said of us, that the righteous and the excellent of the earth are taken away, and no man layeth it to heart. When persons of superior merit and usefulness are removed, let them not, with the useless and vicious part of the community, be buried in oblivion. Let us cherish the memory of their virtues, and strive to have them engrafted into our own characters. To honor a father of the people is the duty of all who have been happy under his official administration. Let us revere the men who have firmness to resist the prevailing current of a wicked world. Let modern Jeroboams, and their adherents, bow to their own calves of Dan and Bethel. But let our conduct show that we are more zealous to be found citizens of the heavenly Zion, than to obtain the plaudits of capricious mortals. Feeling that we have here no continuing city, may we look for one which cannot be shaken by the broils and tumults of this noisy world.”

Two portraits of him, duplicates, by Earle, have been preserved. One of these is in the State House at Hartford, presented by his grandson, the late Dr. John S. Wolcott. This has been engraved for Sanderson’s “Lives of the Signers,” from a reduced copy by his granddaughter, Mrs. Laura W. Gibbs. The other is in the library of the Connecticut Historical Society, at Hartford, presented by Mrs. Gibbs. An excellent engraving of the former picture, by F. Halpin, of New York, accompanies our work.

In connection with the preceding sketch of General Wolcott, honorable mention is due to Mrs. Wolcott. During his almost constant absence from home while engaged in the arduous service of the Revolutionary War, she educated their children and conducted the domestic concerns of the family, including the management of a small farm, with a degree of fortitude, perseverance, frugality, and intelligence, equal to that which in the best days of ancient Rome distinguished her most illustrious matrons. Without her aid, his public services could not have been rendered, without involving a total sacrifice of the interests of his family; with her aid, his house was a seat of comfort and hospitality, and by means of her assistance he retained during life a small estate, a part of which was a patrimonial inheritance.

Her portrait, also by Earle, now in the possession of her grandson, Mr. J. H. Wolcott, of Boston, and engraved by C. H. Smith, of Brooklyn, for this Memorial, presents her as a woman of fine countenance and majestic figure, and authenticates the current tradition that in her day she was the most beautiful woman in the village. Her remains lie beneath the same monument with her husband's, in the east graveyard of Litchfield.

The family which they founded, and which throughout the State was for nearly a century so honorably associated with this pleasant village, has now no living representative within its dwellings and beneath its shades.

To the Memory

Also of

& who died Ap^rl 19th 1794. (Epitaph.)

Josiah Wolcott, Esq., settled in Oxford, on the estate bequeathed to him by his grandmother, being a portion of the estate which she had received from her grandfather in England. The Rev. John Campbell, whose daughter he married, was a native of Scotland, and a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, and is said to have been a kinsman of Lord Loudon. The latter paid him a visit at Oxford, when he was on official service in this country.

“It was arranged that for the entertainment of his lordship while at Oxford, he should be the guest of Mr. Wolcott, his son-in-law, who, by his wealth and more aristocratic style of living, could better provide for him. Mr. Wolcott’s house was in close view, across the street, from Mr. Campbell’s. Soon after the arrival of Loudon, with a single attendant, at the Wolcott house, Mr. Campbell left his more humble habitation, in full dress, his wig carefully arranged, to welcome his friend. Loudon saw him, and at once advanced to meet him. The little stone bridge, about equidistant from the two houses, was the spot where they met and embraced. They returned to the Wolcott house, and supped and passed the night together.”¹

Mr. Wolcott was a Justice of the Peace, and held other public trusts. We have picked up the following note, in his handwriting:—

Josiah Wolcott with his Children Desire to give thanks to God in this Church & Congregation for God’s Great Goodness to him, altho he has been shakeing him over y^e Gates of the Grave by Sore Sickness—But Blessed be God that he has Granted him a Reprieve, & has Raised him to Such a Measure of Health that he is Able to Wait Uppon God with his people in this his House of Prayer, & again to Worship him in the Beautys of Holiness.

The inventory of his estate embraces among personal items several pieces of painting and needle-work, including “two large, gilt-framed likenesses,” one of a gentleman, the other of a lady and child, reported to have been brought from England, and supposed to be portraits of his grandmother’s ancestors, of the Freke family.

A correspondent writes:—

Capt. Simon Wolcott received his commission in Colonel Gay's regiment, June 20, 1776. He marched with his men to New York, and was engaged with the British, when they came over from Long Island, in the action of September, 1776. Soon after their arrival, Colonel Gay sickened and died, and was succeeded by Colonel Hart, who was taken prisoner. Captain Wolcott and his company served out the remainder of their term with Major Mott, and returned home about the 1st of January, 1777. His son Peter was a member of the company.

Reference has already been made (p. 129) to some obscurity connected with the earlier history of this branch. The family record of Mr. Gideon Wolcott is authentic; his descent from Mr. Thomas Wolcott, who removed from Tolland to Taghanic, N. Y., though highly probable, is to us only traditional. His children appear to have been among the early settlers of Yates County, N. Y., settling in Benton, Barrington, and Dundee; and interesting notices of them appear in Cleveland's History of that county. From this point onward their record is clear. The Family is still represented in the county; while a portion of them removed to the West, and became identified with Milwaukee.

XL. SAMUEL WOLCOTT (165) married, Dec. 29, 1774, Jerusha (214), daughter of Gen. Erastus Wolcott, of South Windsor. Children:—

287—1. Ferusha, b. Oct. 8, 1775; m. Nov. 30, 1794, Epaphras Bissell, of East Windsor Hill.

288—2. Naomi, b. Oct. 10, 1777; m. Oct. 1, 1804, James Wadsworth, of Geneseo, N. Y.¹

Their eldest daughter, Harriet Wadsworth, b. Sept. 13, 1805, married Martin Brimmer, Esq. (grad. H. U. 1814), Mayor of Boston, whose only son, Martin Brimmer, Jr., graduated H. U. 1849.

Their youngest daughter, Elizabeth Wadsworth, b. July 26, 1815, married Hon. Charles A. Murray, British Consul-General in Egypt.

Their eldest son, James Samuel Wadsworth, b. Oct. 30, 1807, studied law at Harvard and Yale, and was admitted to the bar in 1833. He gave his time to the management of his large patrimonial estates, and took a deep interest in the cause of freedom, as well as of education. When a famine was prevalent in Ireland, he chartered a vessel, and sent it out with supplies of grain. At the outbreak of the Rebellion he was one of the first to offer his services to the Government. He was made a major-general, and commanded a division in several battles. He fell, at length, at the head of his troops, in the Battle of the Wilderness, May 6, 1864.

“The country’s salvation claimed no nobler sacrifice than that of Gen. James S. Wadsworth, of New York. Born to affluence and social distinction, already past the age of military service, he had volunteered in 1861, under the impulse of a sense of duty alone. As an Aid of General McDowell, he was conspicuously useful at Bull Run. Accustomed to every luxury, he had courted ever since the hardships and perils of the field. Made the Republican candidate for Governor of New York, in 1862, by an overwhelming majority, he could not have failed to be elected could those have voted who, like himself, were absent from the State at the call of their country; and though he peremptorily declined, his fellow-citizens, had he lived, would have insisted on electing him

¹ James Wadsworth, Esq., widely known as a philanthropist, was born in Durham, April 20, 1768. He graduated at Yale College in 1787, and in 1790 removed with his brother to the Genesee Valley, New York, where they purchased a large tract of valuable land, and encountered for a few years the privations and exposures of the wilderness. He thus became one of the most opulent landholders in the country. He took a warm and active interest in the cause of education, to which, in various forms, he contributed nearly $100,000. He died in Geneseo, June 7, 1844.

Governor in 1864. Thousands of the unnamed and unknown have evinced as fervid and pure a patriotism, but no one surrendered more for his country's sake, or gave his life more joyfully for her deliverance, than did JAMES S. WADSWORTH."¹

- 289—3. Samuel, b. Dec. 12, 1781; d. Feb. 17, 1795.
- 290—4. Elihu, b. Feb. 12, 1784. See LXVII.
- 291—5. Sophia, b. March 29, 1786; m. Oct. 19, 1807, Martin Ellsworth, of Windsor. He graduated at Yale College, 1801; a son of Chief Justice Ellsworth, whom he succeeded in the occupancy of the family mansion and estate. Their eldest son, Oliver Ellsworth, graduated at Yale College, 1830.
- 292—6. Ursula, b. Nov. 17, 1788; m. May 10, 1815, Rev. Newton Skinner, pastor of the Congregational Church, New Britain. He graduated at Yale College, 1804. Their only son, Samuel Wolcott Skinner, graduated Y. C., 1842, and M. D., 1846.
- 293—7. Elizabeth, b. Sept. 23, 1791; m. Nov. 23, 1820, Erastus Ellsworth, then of New York City, born in Windsor. He was a successful merchant, and an elder in the Presbyterian church; at the close of his business career he purchased a pleasant residence on East Windsor Hill, which had been successively occupied by his brothers-in-law, Epaphras Bissell and Elihu Wolcott. He became one of the founders and benefactors of the Theological Institute of Connecticut, and died, respected and honored, April 30, 1879, in his ninetieth year.
- Their only surviving son, Erastus Wolcott Ellsworth, graduated at Amherst College, 1844. He has published a little volume of poems, one of which is given in Whittier's "Songs of Three Centuries." He has brought out several ingenious mechanical inventions. He has kindly prepared for our work, with a skill which engravers admire, several of the sketches which we give.
- Their daughter, Mary Lyman Ellsworth, married William Wood, M.D., of East Windsor Hill, author of "The Birds of Connecticut," whose ornithological and oölogical cabinet is said to be the finest in the country.
- 294—8. Horace, b. March 25, 1794. He was captain of a mounted troop in his native town; removed first to Michigan and then to Illinois, where he died in 1838.

¹ Greeley's Am. Conflict, II. 570.

Mr. Samuel Wolcott served as a commissary in the Revolutionary War. He occupied the residence of which we give a sketch, and the farm in South Windsor which had been held by his father and grandfather. The inventory of his estate was sworn at $30,669.09. A correspondent has given us the following description of him:—

At the time of my earliest recollection of him, he was somewhat crippled by severe attacks of the gout, which heavily afflicted the latter years of his life. When young, he must have been a person of great manly beauty. His height was near six feet; his frame robust, and well covered with muscle; his whole physical structure adapted alike to strength and activity. His hair was very dark, but not quite enough so to be called black; his eyes dark hazel, and of uncommon brightness; his features regular, and his whole countenance indicative of a strong and active mind.

“Died, suddenly, at his paternal residence in East Windsor, on the 7th inst., Mr. Samuel Wolcott, aged 62. In active and extensive business distinguished for incorruptible integrity, beloved by a numerous acquaintance, a most judicious counsellor of the many who sought his assistance, and the poor man’s friend.”¹

He settled in Windsor as an attorney, and married (1st), September, 1785, Frances Burbank, of Springfield, Mass., who died June 17, 1800. He married (2d), June 7, 1807, Lucy Waldo, of Boston, Mass. Children: —

353 — 3. Alexander, b. Feb. 14, 1790; grad. Yale Coll. 1809; married Eleanor M. Kinzie.

354 — 4. Mary Ann, b. Feb. 11, 1792; lived in Middletown.

Alexander Wolcott, Esq., was a Representative of Windsor in the General Assembly. He subsequently removed to Middletown, and held the office of Collector of that Port under the successive administrations of Presidents Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and J. Q. Adams. He was also a Justice of the Peace. He was a prominent leader of the Democratic party, which was in a minority in the State. This prevented him from filling any high State office, but he stood high in the favor of the above Presidents. President Madison nominated him to the dignity of Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States; but the nomination failed in the Senate by seven votes.

He is said to have been a man of splendid intellectual powers, and of a very handsome person, large frame, and extremely powerful. There is said to be a miniature portrait of him existing. He was one of the early manufacturers of woollen cloths in this country, and a great promoter of American manufactures generally. Hon. John M. Niles, a political admirer, pays the following tribute to his abilities:—

“Mr. Wolcott possessed a highly original character. A gigantic stature, marked with prominent and intelligent features, with a mind not less gigantic, gave him a commanding personal dignity, inspiring respect without exciting awe, of which there are few examples. His mind was profound rather than brilliant, and, although slow in its operations, it possessed great energy and strength; but a striking, peculiar originality was its characteristic feature. In independence of character and unshaken firmness of purpose he has been surpassed by few, and such was the clearness and force of truth on his mind, that he could never resort to any other means than fair argument and conviction to advance any cause he espoused. Always frank in his purposes, he was equally direct in his means, despising chicanery and artifice, the constant resource of feeble minds. For many years he was regarded as the leader of the Republican party in Connecticut. He was the Atlas against which the shafts of his political opponents were constantly directed; but amid all the rage of the political storm he remained unmoved, firm in his integrity, unshaken in his purposes, untiring in his efforts, until their wrath having spent itself, they were constrained to pay homage to his inflexible integrity and stern Republican virtues.”

ALEXANDER WOLCOTT. Died June 26, 1828. Aged 70 years.—Epitaph.

He removed to Lagrange County, Ind., in 1837, and erected mills and other buildings at a place called Wolcottville, making it the seat of a Young Ladies' Seminary, the buildings of which he also put up. "All the money used by Mr. Wolcott in these enterprises was from his own resources. He also gave largely for the support of the gospel, and was in the true sense of the word the poor man's friend."¹

"Dea. Guy Wolcott removed to Torrington in 1783. He and his family were of considerable prominence in the town, through various business enterprises. Wolcottville is the principal village of the town of Torrington. The name was given to it by popular vote in 1813, on the day of the raising of the woollen mill, built by Frederick Wolcott, of Litchfield, and Guy Wolcott, of Torrington, who had purchased extensive mill privileges on the Waterbury River at this point. To this establishment the village largely owed its rise. Its construction was superintended by James, the son of Guy, who had had some experience in the manufacture, and whose persuasions are said to have induced the purchase. Dr. Christopher Wolcott was the general manager; a faithful, upright man, and earnestly religious." ¹

"Dea. Guy Wolcott's sons were among the most intelligent, enterprising, and ambitious in the town. They were celebrated for being the most sedate and quiet at home, being trained in the strictest manner; while abroad, or out in company, they were as full of sport and enjoyment as anybody." ²

He removed to Tallmadge, Ohio, in 1822, and died the next year.

¹ The Stoughton family, several of whom have intermarried with the Wolcott, were distinguished in the early annals of Connecticut in connection with the Indian wars and other events of importance. Their ancestor was Thomas Stoughton, of Windsor, one of the five gentlemen who were appointed to superintend and bring forward the settlement of that place. The other four were the Hon. John Mason, Hon. Roger Ludlow, Hon. Henry Wolcott, and Elder John Strong, the ancestor of Gov. Caleb Strong, of Massachusetts. They had emigrated from England together. Stoughton's name stands next to Wolcott's in the first list of Freemen made at Boston.

Capt. John Stoughton was an officer in the British provincial army. He was appointed by Sir Jeffrey Amherst, Dec. 15, 1758, a Lieutenant in the Independent Company of which Horatio Gates was Captain, and performed meritorious services in the war against the French. He was the son of Nathaniel, and was born in Windsor, Nov. 22, 1733. He married, Jan. 22, 1765, Ruth, daughter of Thomas Belden, of Wethersfield, and settled with her upon lands granted him by the Crown for his military conduct, which are still known as the Stoughton Patent, situated between Lakes George and Champlain. He was drowned near Lord Howe's Point on Lake George, by the sinking of a boat, Nov. 27, 1768,—his daughter Elizabeth being then an infant a year old. His widow married (2d), Col. Samuel Wyllys, of Hartford.

² "Colonel Gibbs was a man of singular culture and talent. Brilliant in conversation, polished in manners, and of large and various experience of men and life, he was one of the marked men of his day, and his large mansion at Sunswick was the seat of a broad and elegant hospitality rarely to be met with in this country at that time. The beautiful mansion, with its front upon the East River, at one of its most picturesque points, and its rear opening upon a broad inward landscape of fertile fields, was then one of the landmarks of the river. Within was his fine library, abounding in works of the best authors, and in many tongues; added to this, a mineralogical collection. The extensive and valuable collection now in the possession of Yale College was made by Colonel Gibbs himself while abroad."—J. A. Stevens, Jr.

tinguished name in science. A third son, Alfred Gibbs, received a major-general's commission in the army, and rendered gallant service in the field.

A correspondent who knew Mrs. Gibbs intimately writes us: "No more noble and vigorous soul has honored the name since history began." The sermon by Dr. Bellows, after her death, was a most just and appreciative utterance.

We give the opening and the closing paragraphs of this Funeral Address: ¹—

"One of the last links binding the present with the early and heroic period of our national history has parted, and we are gathered about all that remains of its once vigorous fibres. The daughter of Oliver Wolcott, a member of the Cabinet of Washington, lies in this coffin, and will carry into her tomb a store of vivid recollections of the men and the times when our national life was young and earnest, anxious and devoted, — after having given in her own person and life one of the best illustrations of the spirit and character of the fathers. A descendant of three generations of Governors of her native State (Connecticut), grandchild of the first Oliver Wolcott, who was a General in the Revolutionary Army, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and daughter of the second Oliver Wolcott, who succeeded Hamilton in the Department of the Treasury, and who was a Cabinet officer, a Judge, a merchant, a financier, and Governor of his own State for a decade, her earliest years were too thoroughly steeped in the memories and traditions of the great struggle that made us a nation, to allow her character to escape the most shaping and permanent effects from it.

"Oliver Wolcott's mother — Lorrain Collins, of Guildford, a woman of remarkable courage, masculine judgment, and business character — gave her son no small portion of her own strong nature. He himself was one of those hard-headed, truth-seeking, and truth-telling men, to whose indomitable energy, firmness, and patriotism we owe the consolidation of our independence. The ancestral home for three generations must have been the resort of all the chief friends of the country and the cause; and Oliver Wolcott's daughter, the heiress of his vigorous intellect and decisive will, motherless from childhood, and taking her place in her early teens at the head of her father's table, must from very infancy have been more accustomed to the discussion of public questions and the sight of public men than to the prattle or the playthings belonging to the nursery. So fresh and active were these impressions, that it was impossible to be in the company of Mrs. Gibbs for the shortest time without feeling that public questions, public interests and duties, were her natural or inherited concern. She had a man's, almost a statesman's, interest in the country, and talked as if, for her, the revolutionary times were not yet over, and the temper and spirit of those heroic days when private affairs were merged in public dangers and duties not less timely or less natural now than then.

“Sometimes the character of parents interprets their children, and sometimes the knowledge of the children interprets the parents. I confess I always felt, in the presence of Mrs. Gibbs, as if I were talking with Oliver Wolcott himself, and saw in her self-reliant, self-asserting, and independent manner and speech an unmistakable copy of a strong and thoroughly individual character, forged in the hottest fires of national struggle. The intense individuality of her nature set her apart from others. You felt that from the womb she must have been just what she was, — a piece of the original granite on which the nation was built. It was very easy, from such a sample of the old stuff, to understand how the Revolution was accomplished. The force, the courage, the self-poise she exhibited in the ordinary concerns of our peaceful life would in a masculine frame have made, in times of national peril, a patriot of the most decided and energetic character, — one able and willing to believe all things possible, and to make all the efforts and sacrifices by which impossibilities are accomplished. I do not know that Mr. Wolcott got his Christian name from any special sympathies which his father or grandfather had with Oliver Cromwell, but there has always seemed some resemblance between his character and the great English Republican; and certainly her strong and serious face might well have passed for that of a descendant from the massive, rugged, and noble Protector. . . .

“I have thought it a duty to take this brief public view of the feelings aroused by the death of this strong woman, who represented so much of the past history of the country. I beg seriously to commend her example to the consideration of those who think the home and the family a small sphere for a woman to occupy. She proved how large, how decisive, how excellent may be a woman's sway who merely improves her domestic and social opportunities! She was one of the heirs of the great women that matched our Revolutionary sires, and who did their full part in achieving and consolidating our liberties, without once deserting the woman's place, or imagining her sphere to be contracted. May her death add a fresh sense to the lesson her worthy and vigorous life inspired! She gave the nation sons who illustrated her blood, — one dying a general in the country's service, and one leading its fame in chemical science; and we pay, in these services, only due honor to the daughter of a line of patriots, and to the mother of sons not unworthy of their sires ; but best of all, a woman of the strongest and most upright nature and character, and a Christian of practical and unpretending genuineness of faith and works."

The author of the address quoted above was the distinguished President of the United States Sanitary Commission ; and it seems suitable to give here the following extracts from his interesting " Historical Sketch of the Union League Club of New York : " —

"The Union League Club of New York is a child of the United States Sanitary Commission. That body was represented when not in session by an Executive Committee, all residents of New York City, consisting, up to the date of the origin of the Union League, of five persons only, — its President, Dr. Bellows, its Treasurer, George T. Strong, Prof. Wolcott Gibbs, Dr. Cornelius R. Agnew, and Dr. William H. Van Buren.

"The Sanitary Commission was not, from its inception, a merely humanitarian or beneficent association. . . . Its projectors were men with strong political purposes, induced to take this means of giving expression to their solicitude for the national life . . . develop, purify, and strengthen the imperilled sentiment of nationality, and help to make America sacred in the eyes of the living children of her scattered States.

"Prof. Wolcott Gibbs was the first to suggest that the idea on which the Sanitary Commission was founded needed to take on the form of a club, which should be devoted to the social organization of the sentiment of loyalty to the Union ; and he chose Mr. Frederick Law Olmsted as the first person to be consulted and advised with. Professor Gibbs had a natural right among his co-workers to be earliest in the field with a plan which concerned the existence of the Union. His grandfather, OLIVER WOLCOTT, had been among the most vigorous and earnest of the patriots who formed the Union and guided its earliest steps. His mother was known all her life long as a noble daughter of a revolutionary father, worthy of the name she bore, and inheriting and transmitting a profound interest in the honor and dignity of the country, intensely alive to all that concerned the purity of our politics and the stableness of our institutions. No better source could have been found for the Union League than the heart and head of a grandson of Oliver Wolcott. It was an additional merit that Professor Gibbs, a man of science, and already, perhaps, the most distinguished of American chemists, was not a politician or a man of affairs. His patriotism was pure and simple, without a taint of partisan feeling, of lust for office, or of taste for power ; absorbed in his engrossing studies, private in his tastes and habits, nothing less than the great perils of his country could have taken him out of his laboratory, and made him for many years an earnest and active member of the Sanitary Commission, and at length the corner-stone of the Union League Club."

IN MEMORIAM.

We cannot take leave of the above record, and proceed with the family narrative, without some further, yet necessarily brief, notice of our dear friend GEORGE GIBBS, whose name so unexpectedly claims in these pages a passing and parting tribute.

Mr. Gibbs received his school training at the famous Round Hill School of Northampton. He early developed a taste for natural history, and before reaching the age of twenty had gathered and mounted, himself, a large collection of birds. After two years' travel in Europe, he entered the Harvard Law School, and took his degree in 1838. He opened a law office in New York, but his mind retained its early bent, and he gave much of his time to literary and scientific pursuits. He was for several years Librarian of the New York Historical Society, and after his decease the Society devoted a session to his memory. A "Memorial"—an essay uncommonly tender—was read by his life-long friend, Mr. John Austin Stevens, Jr., and published by the Society. The paper was honorable alike to its subject and its author, and the personal friends of the former will all bear witness to the justness of its warm eulogium.

In 1846, Mr. Gibbs published, in two octavo volumes, "Memoirs of the Administrations of Washington and John Adams, edited from the Papers of Oliver Wolcott, Secretary of the Treasury," — a work throwing much light on a great epoch in our history, and exhibiting the strength of the author's political convictions and the qualities of his literary style. In 1849, he went to the Pacific coast; in 1854, he was appointed Collector of the Port of Astoria. In 1857, he accompanied a Government Exploring Expedition, as geologist and botanist; he served also on the Boundary Commission, and prepared an elaborate report on the geology and natural history of the region. In 1860, he returned to the Eastern States, and was employed by the Smithsonian Institution in editing a large collection of documents relating to the ethnology and philology of the Indian tribes.

This briefest summary of his work indicates the great versatility of his talents. His interest in every department of historical research was abreast with his interest in physical science. In one of his letters to the writer he casually observes: —

When I want to feel very New England and old-fashioned, I dig a little into Cotton Mather. I believe that I am one of very few living men who ever read the Magnalia. The preface by John Higginson is a superb piece of English writing; his exordium is truly eloquent.

With all his acquisitions, the charm of his character was the generous warmth of his heart. The proofs of this which lie nearest to me cannot be delicately cited. I give a single extract from a letter, Feb. 5, 1849, written when he was preparing to start for Oregon: —

I choke sometimes to think that the step I am about taking carries me away from every thing that I love, every association of youth and manhood, from domestic affection, from friendship, from old paths and old tastes and pursuits. But I know that I am acting wisely, so far, at least, as we can know any thing of the future; and I trust to tread boldly the unknown path that opens itself. I thank you heartily for your God-speed; I know that it is not merely conventional, &c.

In 1871, he married his cousin, Mary Kane Gibbs, daughter of Ex-Governor William C. Gibbs, of Newport, R. I. He made his home in the city of New Haven. The next year, it was my privilege to be a guest in it for a few days, and its cordial, genial hospitality is one of the delightful memories of my life. A subsequent invitation from his widow to share it again, which could not be accepted, is touchingly associated with the thought that her gentle spirit has also passed away.

My dear Husband spoke of you two or three times during his illness, and anticipated so much pleasure in the hope of seeing you again. His illness was very short, and we were wholly unprepared for the result. We knew he could never be well or strong again, but we hoped to keep him with us for years. I need not tell you how lonely and desolate I am, for you have seen us in our cheerful happy home, and you know what a tender, loving nature my Husband had.

In preparing the sketch of Gov. Oliver Wolcott, Jr., we have had free access to the manuscripts from which his grandson, George Gibbs, drew the materials for his work already described; and from the latter, also, we freely quote. The village which became the seat of this branch of the Family is thus described in its earlier days:—

“At a period much later than this, Litchfield was on the outskirts of New England civilization, and presented a very different aspect from its now venerable quiet. The pickets which guarded its first dwellings were not yet decayed. The Indian yet wandered through its broad streets; and hunters, as wild as our present borderers, chased the deer and the panther on the shores of the lake. The manners of its inhabitants were as simple and primitive as those of their fathers a century back, in the older settlements on the Connecticut. Travelling was entirely on horseback, except in the winter; and but a casual intercourse was carried on with the distant towns. Occasionally, and more frequently as they became more interesting, tidings reached them from Boston, and even from the Old World.”¹

Among these secluded hills young Oliver passed his childhood, of which he has fortunately left us a pleasant autobiographical sketch. This was written when he was over seventy years of age. It was apparently his intention to beguile his leisure hours with a familiar narrative of his whole life; but the sketch covers only the early portion of it, and this we are happy to lay before our readers.

I have thought that my recollections extend back to the time when I was nourished by my Mother. The songs of the Nursery were my great solace, and some of

Doct. Watts's Hymns and Songs are still perused by me with thrilling emotions, and I shall ever consider them as among the best Poetry of our language. My Mother and Grandmother learned me to speak early; I could read before I was four years old, and was proud of my acquirements.

The School House was in the street near the N. W. corner of my Father's Home-Lot, and was about twenty rods from home. The street was nine or ten rods wide, and the hillocks were covered with whortleberry bushes, which were tall enough to hide a young man or boy from observation. It was an excellent place for truants, and used for that purpose by many of the larger Boys of the School. When I had attained the age of six or seven years, I was told that it was time for me to go to School, and was flattered by my Mother that my learning exceeded that of Boys twice my age. I was accordingly dressed in my Sunday habit, and sent out, whip in hand, on a Monday morning. I was the smallest and most slender boy who appeared, with a pale face and white hair. The Master was a stout, rough man, and I think it probable that he was a foreigner. When I was called before him, he, judging from appearances, took me between his knees, and with a ferule and Dilworth's Spelling Book in his hand, offered to instruct me in spelling words of several syllables. My astonishment and indignation exceeded all bounds; I considered it as the greatest possible indignity. I had no conception that a Schoolmaster, whom I deemed a great personage, could be so ignorant as not to know that I could read in the Testament. I remained mute, and stifled my proud sobs as well as I was able. The Master supposed that he had put me too far forward, and turned me back to words of one syllable. My wrath increased, and I continued silent. He tried me in the Alphabet; and as I remained silent, he told me that I came to learn to read, and that I must repeat the words after him, or he would whip me. He actually struck me, supposing me to be obstinately mute; my sobs nearly broke my heart, and I was ordered to my seat. Some of the Boys tried to console me, and others laughed. I left the School with the most decided disgust, resolved never to enter it again.

I evaded going to School as long as possible; and when I did go, I hid myself in the Bushes. At length the Master enquired why I had left the School. This brought out my explanation; and such were my horror and antipathy, that my parents judged it proper to excuse me, and I was soon sent to another School, kept by a Miss Patterson, whose mild and conciliating manners attracted my affections. In reading and speaking I was a great proficient, and distinguished for committing long lessons to memory.

At about eleven years of age I went to the Grammar School, which was kept by Nathl Brown Beckwith, a graduate of Yale College. Here I began Latin in Lilly's Grammar and the Accidence. Lilly's Verses (in what was called Hog-Latin) took my fancy greatly, and I soon could repeat much or all of it from memory. The Ryme of this old hog-Latin was much of it excellent, and till a late period of my life was strongly impressed on my memory.

I was far from being a student. One of the eldest and stoutest Boys was still less so; he and the Master were attached to Fishing and Hunting. Trouts, Partridges, Quail, Squirrels both grey and black, and in the season Pigeons and Ducks, were in great abundance. To these Sports all our Holidays were devoted, and I engaged in them with alacrity, in which the Master joined on the footing of an equal. In this course I continued till, in the summer of 1773, Master Beckwith pronounced me fit to enter College.

My Father thought I was too young; but I was equipped, and furnished with a steady Horse, and a Letter of introduction to Parson Trumbull, the Father of our great Poet and Scholar, John Trumbull. I found Parson Trumbull in a field, superintending labourers; he received me kindly, ordered my horse to be taken care of, and invited me to partake of a Farmer's dinner. He looked kindly at me, and, placing his hand on my head, said I was one of the old Stock of Independents. I did not then understand his meaning, but the sound pleased my ear, and as it was said to be a family characteristic, I recollected it ever after. Parson Trumbull was a great farmer, and partook his meals with his labourers. I was dismissed in season to get down to Parson Leavenworth's, at Waterbury, before sunset. Here I found another agricultural Clergyman, who lived well, in a good House, but in a poor Parish, where the lands did not allow his Parishioners to afford a support equal to that received by Parson Trumbull. On enquiring my name, and placing his hands on my head, he enquired whether I intended, if I was able, to be like Old Nol, a Republican and King Killer. These were new phrases in my ears; but I treasured them in my memory.

The next morning, I proceeded down through Salem, and soon began to ascend the mountains of Bethany (now Woodbridge) till on the Heights I got a view of Long Island Sound. This was the first time I had seen the salt sea, or Ocean; the emotions were peculiar, and the excitement made strong impressions on my mind. I accelerated my Journey, and arrived seasonably at Mrs. Noyes's, a Widow Lady, who afterwards married General Silliman, the father of Professor Silliman, of Yale College. I had read of Cities, and seen some Pictures in Books, but the grandeur of New Haven (which was then merely a small Village), with its State House, Prison, College, and Meeting Houses, with the rows of Elms with which the Green was surrounded, appeared to my fancy as a work of Magic.

Mrs. Noyes had three Sons ; the eldest, Joseph, was afterwards my Classmate ; the three were mild, amiable youths, and they were, of course, my companions and playmates.

I went up to College in the evening, to observe the Scene of my future exploits, with emotions of awe and reverence. Men in black robes, white wigs, and high cocked hats ; young men, dressed in camblet gowns, passed us in small groups. The Men in Robes and Wigs, I was told, were Professors ; the young men in Gowns were Students. There were young men in black silk Gowns, some with Bands, and others without. These were either Tutors in the College, or resident Graduates, to whom the title of Sir was accorded. When we entered the College Yard, a new scene was presented. There was a class who wore no Gowns, and who walked, but never ran or jumped, in the yard. They appeared much in awe, or looked surlily, after they passed by the young men habited in Gowns and Staves. Some of the young Gownsmen treated those who wore neither Hats nor Gowns in the yard, with hardness, and what I thought indignity. I give an instance : “ Nevill, go to my room, middle story of old College, No. —, and take from it a pitcher, fill it from the pump, place it in my room, and stay there till I return.” To such a mandate, delivered by a slender sprig to a sturdy Country Lad, apparently much his superior in Age and Strength, the answer might be various, according to circumstances and the temper of the Parties, viz. “ I have been sent on an errand.” “ Who sent you ? ” “ Tutor H.” Or the mandate might be submitted to, pleasantly with a smile, or contemptuously with a sneer. The domineering young men in Gowns, I was told by my conductors, were Scholars or Students of the Sophomore Class, and those without Hats and Gowns, and who walked in the yard, were Freshmen, who, out of the Hours of Study, were waiters or servants to the Authority, President, Professors, Tutors, and Undergraduates.

These exhibitions of Wigs, Bands, Gowns, and Staves, and especially of Sophomorical dictation, raised emotions illy adapted to recommend Collegiate discipline to the Youth who was descended from the old Stock of Independents, and who was a namesake of Old Nol, the King Killer.

When the hour for examining Candidates for admission into the College was approaching, my repugnance to encountering the perils of the unknown scrutiny increased. I recollected that my Father and Mother had both told me that I was too young to go to College. The appearance of the high dignitaries I had seen struck me with awe and reverence, and the insolence of the Sophomores filled me with disgust. I resolved to return home and study another year ; and I mentioned this to Mrs. Noyes and her Sons. She used no counter arguments ; and in subsequent years I concluded that my journey had been promoted by my Parents, to wear off my Bashfulness, and give a new direction to my natural temperament.

When I got back to Litchfield, it took a long time to recount all the wonders I had seen,—the grandeur of New Haven, its numerous Streets, beautiful Trees, Shrubbery and Flowers in the House Yards, the Vessels at the Long Wharf, and the peculiar dress and language of the Mariners. With one of these I had formed an involuntary acquaintance, which cost me a shilling. The wharves of a mud harbour presented no prospect of the Sea; to mend my prospect, I climbed a part of the way up one of the strands, when I felt a Sailor below me, who was tying one of my legs to what I considered a rope ladder. He did it mildly and silently. As I could move neither up nor down, I soon began to lament, which brought my companions to my aid. They desired the Sailor to untie and let me down. He enquired who I was, and why I climbed his Vessel without his liberty. I assured him that I intended no harm, and was ignorant that I was doing wrong; that I was a boy from the Country, and having seen the Sea on coming to New Haven, I was desirous of seeing its Shores. This account was confirmed by my friend Noyes. The Sailor said, that as it was the first time I had been on board a Sea Vessel, and had seen and smelt the Salt Water, I ought to pay what he called beverage; that he would require but a Shilling, though if I was a Scholar, he would exact three Shillings. I agreed with joy to his demand, and was instantly let down, amidst the hearty laughter of his comrades; it seemed no unusual occurrence, so my friends joined in the joke. The Sailor told me that no person ought to pay twice, and that if I found myself tied up again, and called upon him, he would see me liberated without expense.

When I had recounted my travelling News to my School Mates, I was advised to resume my Studies, and repeat my travelling Stories out of School hours, which I thought but reasonable. In addition to the character of being one of the best Scholars in the School, especially in reading and in recitations which I had committed to memory, I had seen the inside of Yale College, the Library room, and the Pictures of Mr. Yale, Governor Saltonstall, &c., which no other of my Schoolmates had done.

I had now passed the infantine period, and was between thirteen and fourteen years of age. I was no longer a Child, but a Boy, and hoped soon to be a Man. I found myself useful to my Mother. I could drive Cows to and from Pasture, ride the Cart Horse to Mill, bring in light wood and chips for the kitchen fire, and rock the Cradle, when necessary. My Mother was very fond of flowers, of which she had beautiful kinds in the Garden. She was always ready to direct, and I could execute; and what was better, as she said, I could learn, which, as it pleased her, I did with great readiness.

Sunday was to me the most uncomfortable day of the Week, from the confinement in dress and locomotion which it imposed on me. After Prayers and Breakfast,

I was taken by my Mother to a Wash Tub, and thoroughly scrubbed with Soap and Water from head to foot. I was then dressed in my Sunday Habit, which, as I was growing fast, was almost constantly too small. My usual dress, at other times, was a thin pair of Trowsers, and a Jacket of linsey-woolsey; and I wore no shoes, except in frosty weather. On Sunday morning, I was robed in a Scarlet Cloth Coat with Silver Buttons, a white Silk Vest, white Cotton Stockings, tight Shoes, Scarlet Cloth Breeches with Silver Buttons to match my Coat, a close Stock, Ruffles at the Breast of my Jacket, and a cocked Beaver Hat with gold lace Band. In this attire I was marched to the Meeting House, with orders not to soil my Clothes, and to sit still, and by no means to play during meeting-time.

Parson Champion succeeded Parson Collins, our first Minister, Doctor, and Justice of the Peace. Mr. Champion was a pleasant, affable man, and a sonorous, animated Preacher.¹ I liked loud preaching, and suffered only from the confinement of my Sunday dress. Mr. Champion not unfrequently exchanged Sunday services with a neighboring Parson, whose performances were most uncomfortable. They were dull, monotonous, and very long; in the afternoon they frequently extended to two hours. As I was not allowed to sleep during meeting time, my sufferings were frequently extreme.

After service, new toils awaited me. Our Sunday was in fact the old Jewish Sabbath, and continued from sunset to sunset. In the interval, from the end of services in the Meeting House till Sunset, my Father read to the Family from the Bible or some printed Sermon, and when he had done, I was examined by my Mother in the Assembly's Shorter Catechism. I learned to recite this, in self-defense; and I comprehended it as well then as at any time afterwards. When this task was ended, I was allowed to resume my ordinary Habit. It exhilarates my spirits, even at present, to think of the ecstasies I enjoyed when I put on my Jacket and Trowsers, and quit my Stockings and Shoes. I used to run to the Garden Lawn or into the orchard; I would leap, run, lie down and roll on the grass, in short, play all the gambols of a fat calf, when loosened from confinement.

 I see him yet, as in my early youth;
 His outward man was rather short than tall,
 His wig was ample, though his frame was small,
 Active his step, and cheerful was his air,
 And O, how free and fluent was his prayer!
 He sleeps in peace and honor —"

(Pierpont's Litch. Cen. Poem, 78.)

The reader, we are sure, will share our regret that this charming autobiography was not continued and completed. The further incidents named are taken principally from his grandson's published volumes.

The following year, 1774, he returned to New Haven, and entered the college in the same class with his cousin, Alexander Wolcott. Of this class there were several who afterwards became eminent in different pursuits, among whom may be mentioned Noah Webster, Joel Barlow, Uriah Tracy, and Zephaniah Swift. One of them, Barlow, thus writes to him soon after leaving college :—

Now respecting yourself, I think it is a shame to the world, and a dishonor to yourself, that you should bind your whole attention to the Law and neglect the fine arts, and especially Poetry, a study of all others the most capable of a delicate sublimity, which is exactly suited to your genius. I have been waiting a long time to see some of your poetry, and saw it not. I hope ere long to rejoice in the vision.

He had more discretion than his friend, though he did achieve some poems, one of which has been preserved in manuscript. Another of his classmates, Dr. Webster, thus writes, late in life, respecting his collegiate reputation :—

I was an intimate friend, class-mate, and for some months room-mate, with Gov. Wolcott. My acquaintance with him was of nearly sixty years' duration. I found him always frank and faithful in his friendship, and generous to the extent of his means. He was in college a good scholar, though not brilliant. He possessed the firmness and strong reasoning powers of the Wolcott family, but with some eccentricities in reasoning.

Thick-coming events soon explained the meaning of the remarks which had dropped from his father's clerical friends on his first journey to New Haven. In April, 1777, his studies were broken in upon by a call to a less peaceful scene than the groves of Yale. He had gone home on a visit, his father being absent attending Congress, when the news arrived at Litchfield that a large body of the British under Tryon had landed and marched to Danbury to destroy the continental stores. Awakened at midnight by the summons to repair to the rendezvous of the militia, he armed himself; and his mother, furnishing his knapsack with provisions and a blanket, hastened his departure, and dismissed him with the charge "to conduct like a good soldier." The party to which he was attached reached the enemy at Wilton, where a skirmish took place, in which, as well as in the subsequent attacks during the retreat of the British, he participated.

The next year he took his degree at Yale College, and immediately commenced the study of law at Litchfield, under Judge Reeve. In 1779, after the destruction of Fairfield and Norwalk, he attended his father to the coast, as a volunteer aid. He shortly after accepted a quarter-master's commission in the service, without relinquishing his professional studies. This was a period of great privation and distress, and the absence of his father, who was with Congress, threw upon him an almost insupportable burden, in obtaining fuel and provisions for the family, and in keeping open the roads for the transportation of the army stores and ordnance which were under his charge.

His father's public character, and the hospitalities of his house, introduced young Oliver to many persons of distinction in the army and in Congress. In the year 1780, he thus received General Washington, who with his suite, among whom was Colonel Hamilton, passed through the district. The arduous duties thrown upon him at so early a period of his life, and his constant intercourse with men, were high advantages in their influence in forming and ripening his character.

In January, 1781, he became of age, and was immediately admitted to the bar. He shortly after removed to Hartford. Such was his poverty, that he left home with no more than three dollars in his pocket; and to defray his expenses, on reaching Hartford, he accepted a clerkship in the office of the Committee of Pay-Table, with a salary amounting to about fifty cents a day, in specie value.

He this year took the Master's degree in Yale College, his thesis being, —

"An Agricultura in Republica Americanâ sit magis colenda quam Commmercium.

"Affirmat respondens OLIVERUS WOLCOTT."

(Quest. discut. a Laur. Magis. Cand. MDCCLXXXI.)

His diligence in his employment had attracted the notice of the General Assembly, who in January, 1782, unsolicited, appointed him one of the Committee, at that time the central board of accounts. Being the junior member, it became a part of his duty to call upon the Council of Safety, at their almost daily sittings, and receive and execute their directions. There, under the keen inspection of Governor Trumbull and the Council, he became initiated into the system of conducting public affairs, and personally known to many of the prominent characters in different departments. His labors from this time to the end of the war were incessant. Cut off from the society natural to his age, and at twenty-one thrown upon his own resources in a situation arduous and responsible, associating with men of ability, he acquired the self-confidence, the intense application to business, practical habits, and iron perseverance, which formed the basis of his success in life.

In May, 1784, he was appointed a Commissioner for the State of Connecticut, in concert with Oliver Ellsworth, to adjust and settle the accounts and claims of the State against the United States. This duty, which was continued through several years, was performed in addition to his ordinary occupation as a member of the Board of Pay-Table.

In May, 1788, the Pay-Table Committee was abolished, and the office of Comptroller of Public Accounts instituted, to which their duties and some others, until then differently distributed, were assigned. He was appointed Comptroller, and arranged the financial affairs of the State anew, in a manner which met the approval of the Assembly, and has since been tested by experience. In this post he continued until the establishment of the National Treasury, in September, 1789, when he was appointed Auditor, with a salary of $1,500, in the Treasury Department, of which Colonel Hamilton was appointed Secretary. He removed to New York, and entered upon the duties of his new office in November. He was appointed Comptroller of the Treasury in June, 1791; and in February, 1795, Secretary of the same,—which last office he held through the remainder of Washington's and nearly the whole of the elder Adams's administrations. He resigned in December, 1800, and in February, 1801, was appointed, under the new Judiciary Act, a Judge of the Second Circuit of the United States. On the destruction of these Courts, by the repeal of the act creating them, he removed to New York, and entered upon business as a merchant. After the close of the last war with Great Britain he returned to Litchfield, and in 1817 was elected Governor of Connecticut, being the third of his family, in lineal succession, who attained that honor. He was re-elected ten years successively, closing his administration in 1827.

He has left behind him a valuable collection of manuscripts, — more than fifty folio volumes. They embrace a full correspondence with the able political leaders of his party, and the public men of that period, — Washington, Hamilton, Ames, Cabot, Ellsworth, Pickering, Griswold, King, Hillhouse, Hopkinson, Quincy, and others, — gentlemen in whose confidence he stood high, and in whose counsels he actively participated. Two volumes, embracing a portion of these papers, have been already published, and others may eventually follow. The political discussions contained in them, however able and interesting, do not fall within the scope of our plan. We extract, therefore, from the voluminous mass, such passages only as seem to us to belong properly to a family work of this character. The portions which we give are faithful copies of the originals; but those which we necessarily omit are so numerous that we have seldom indicated them. We begin with one written at the age of fifteen, in his first college year; followed by one written by his sister in her girlhood.

HONOURED FATHER

New Haven, Tuesday 1775

I take my Pen in hand to write unto you to acquaint you by this favourable Opportunity of my Health and of the anxious Concern I endure for my Mamma's Recovery. Mr Adams has just brought the melancholy News of Aunt Lyman's Decease and likewise of Mamma's hurt, but I hope she will recover soon. I am well, and at my Studies which I intend to prosecute with the utmost Diligence, being sensible what great Joy it will give my Parents, and the exquisite Grief my Failure must occasion. With a lively Hope that the Lord will be your Deliverer, I subscribe myself your Obedient Son,

MISS WOLCOTT TO MISS STOUGHTON.

MY DEAR ELIZA

Litchfield, July 5th 1784

You want to know "what we are about on this Western Hill." Since you will not be so good as to come and see, I will tell you that our Sister Laura is thinking and dreaming of her Beloved. As my soul was not made to be puffed away in sighs, I spend many an hour of clear comfort in the Grove, the Bower, and my Chamber. At this delightful season, when all Nature is singing, I think it best to dismiss all our cares, or give them a parole till sullen Winter returns, when we can think of nothing else. And I believe after all, Eliza, that there are few of us who have not our pensive moments — and at every season. For myself, I will confess that I have often, this very summer, retired to the brink of a purling stream, and thought how convenient a place it was, for a despairing Lover to end his days! I have recommended it to two or three, but they are not yet far-gone enough to be willing to take the leap.

I shall dispatch Zephyr (who loves to reside in L——d) with a particular command never to quit Col. Wyllys's Arbour; and thither, my dear, I advise ye all to repair from the sultry hours of Noon. But I cannot accompany him — my presence is indispensably necessary at home this summer; but I thank you from my heart for your friendship, and from my heart I love you for it. But methinks that you, my dear one, are sadly to blame; these short excursions that my Brother makes — it cannot be inconvenient (I believe) for you to come with him — come then, my dear Eliza, and see how delightfully we look on this Mountain. — Laura sends love, so does Mr Wolcott (I could tell you something else) and so does thy

DEAR BETSEY

Hartford, Sept. 21st 1786.

I have waited impatiently till this evening for a Letter from you, that I might know whether you arrived safely in New York, and how I might direct my Letters.

Your small family of folks and kittens are as well as usual, and if they love you as well as I do, will be very glad when you return. If nothing extraordinary shall prevent, I shall set out for New York next week.

Pray, Betsey, be careful of your health, and write by every stage, if it be only one line to inform me of your condition. Please to present my best respects to Mr. and Mrs. W., and believe me to be with the greatest affection and sincerity

Your friend and humble serv^t:Mrs. Elizabeth Wolcott

OLIV: WOLCOTT JR.

TO HIS FATHER.

SIR

New York, Nov. 3^d 1789

We arrived here after as good a passage as could be expected, and have procured lodgings at Mrs Grinnell's, No. 27 Queen Street, in a good family.

I have not been able to inform myself of the extent of the business in which I am engaged, as Col. Hamilton has been unwell, and as Mr Eveleigh has not arrived ; though the business will be for some time difficult, it will not be insurmountable, and I trust that I shall be able to discharge my trust, with as much reputation as the nature of such an appointment will permit.

What arrangements are in contemplation with respect to the public debt, I have not been able to learn, though I believe from the character and manners of the Secretary, that they will be prudent, sensible, and firm.

As soon as I shall have formed such acquaintances, as will enable me to write Letters, that may convey information of the state of our Affairs, I will write fully to you ; in the mean time be pleased to present mine and Betsey's love to my Mamma and to my Brother.

I am with respect your obe^t Son

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Hon^{ble} Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

MR. AND MRS. GOODRICH TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

MY DEAR SISTER,

Hartford, 15th Nov. 1789

I received your good letter ; it found me exactly in the situation which you wished it might — “ seated by the fire with my good man like sober honest people.” Indeed, if I had ever so much inclination to ramble from my fireside, it has not been in my power since I have been here, for I took a most violent cold coming from Litchfield, and have been quite sick and confined ever since with the Influenza. You can sympathize with me, for I am told you had it severely, and Oliver writes that you are unwell yet. Pray, my dear sister, be careful of yourself. We are all concerned for you ; always cherished in the bosom of your Mother — how can you support the separation ? But I am a queer girl to say this, for I know, and feel myself, that the place of a Mother may be supplied by a yet dearer friend. You do not know how much we miss you. It seems to me that you might be happier here than at New York ; but if you must, and will, stay there, keep up as good spirits as possible. I know it would please you to see my swain and me in our own home. Tell Brother Oliver not to encourage Oppression and Tyranny. If he sends any more such letters, they shall be sent back. It is giving advice in a very critical time, for it is not determined yet where the power is lodged. As for being "obedient" and "dutiful," tell him it is not in my creed.

I received letters from Litchfield yesterday ; they are as well as usual. I wish when you get well you would write to my Mamma ; poor Lady ! she is quite solitary. She felt it very strongly, your going away. And when shall we see you here ?— some time the Winter if the weather is good ; and next Summer, after you get to housekeeping, we will go and see you. In the mean time, write to us, I beseech you ; we shall improve every opportunity. I have more to say, but I have written two or three letters to Litchfield, and it has fatigued me. Tell my Brother that I love him sincerely. My good man writes a postscript for himself. He is frequently mentioning you to me as a pattern worthy of my imitation. I tell him when he becomes as good a husband as my Brother, I shall endeavor to imitate your perfections, and not before. Adieu.

Yours faithfully

M. GOODRICH

Mrs Wolcott

DEAR BETSEY

I love you too well to be content to leave it to my good Girl to insert it in her Letter in the usual formal mode ; and therefore add a codicil to assure you of my remembrance of you and regret at your departure. Your husband is a very worthy man, but it was not a very benevolent act in him, to run away with you just as I had the Rights of a Brother to see you, to be visited by you, to chat, laugh — and a thousand other clever things. We are now in a comfortable, family state ; my Girl is a good Wife, and I believe much indebted to your example, for which I am obliged to you ; as also to your Spouse, for his Advice to her to mind her Husband — in exchange for which good Advice to my Wife, I cannot make a Return more suitable, than by praying of his to be regardful of her health.

Believe me to be, as I really am, your affectionate friend

C. GOODRICH.

FROM THE REV. DR. STRONG.

DEAR SIR

Hartford, Dec: 3^d 1789

By every account I receive, the department in which your are fallen is a busy one ; and I fear your Ambition will lead you to such Industry as may destroy your Constitution, in the very Beginning of what I esteem your public Usefulness. You ought to remember that none of your predecessors have killed themselves in the service of their Country ; and tho' I esteem fidelity, I should not wish that kind of Suicide to come in fashion. You will forgive this caution, when you consider that it flows from friendship, joined with some knowledge of your persevering disposition. I wish you to fulfil the old promise you made me, of living to see eighty; and when you have done that, I shall allow you to be a Gentleman who can keep your Word, in every Instance.

As for Politicks, I have Nothing which will be new to you. Connecticut has a few Geniuses, who intend to bring themselves up, by insinuating against the general Government; you know the Men, that they are Rogues in grain.

You know that in this Country we all play the Politician. For me, in the Retirement of my Study, and unknown to Mankind, it has neither danger nor advantage; but to you Gentlemen who move in the public sphere of a court, it is life or death; therefore be cautious, but firm, and if old death should chance to threaten you, be as stubborn as he is.

With my best Regards to Mrs. Wolcott and yourself, I remain yours with much affection and respect

NATHAN STRONG

FROM MR. J. TRUMBULL.

DEAR SIR

Hartford, Dec^r 9th 1789.

I received yours by Dr. Cogswell, who appears a sensible, agreeable young man, and I am glad that he proposes to settle in Hartford. Indeed our circle of friends wants new recruits. Humphreys, Barlow, and you are lost to us. Dr. Hopkins has an itch of running away to New York, but I trust his indolence will prevent him. However, if you should catch him in your city, I desire you to take him up and return him, or secure him so that we may have him again, for which you shall have sixpence reward and all charges. Webster has returned and brought with him a very pretty wife. I wish him success, but I doubt in the present decay of business in our profession, whether his profits will enable him to keep up the style he sets out with. I fear he will breakfast upon Institutes, dine upon Dissertations, and go to bed supperless.¹ I cannot conceive what Barlow is doing. After being eighteen months abroad, you tell me he has got so far as to see favourable prospects. If he should not effect something soon, I would advise him to write "the Vision of Barlow," as a sequel to those of Columbus and McFingal.

Pray congratulate Col. Humphreys, in my name, on his late promotion in the diplomatic line. If I understand the matter rightly, he holds the same post which

— Memoir of Webster.

Crispe promised George, in the Vicar of Wakefield. You remember Crispe told him, there was an Embassy talked of from the Synod of Pennsylvania to the Chickasaw Indians, and he would use his interest to get him appointed Secretary. Tell him not to be discouraged too much at his want of success. The President has tried him on McGillivray first, and he did not suit the skull of the Savage; but we cannot argue from that circumstance, that he would not sit as easy as a full-bottomed wig upon the fat-headed Sovereigns of Europe. Tell him this Story also for his comfort, and to encourage his hopes of speedy employment: — A King being angry with an Ambassador, asked him whether his Master had no wise men at his Court, and was therefore obliged to send him a fool? “Sire,” said the other, “my Master has many wise men about his court, but he conceived me the most proper Ambassador to your Majesty.” Upon this principle, I am in daily expectation of hearing that he is appointed Minister Plenipo. to George, Louis, or the Stadtholder. For is not his name Mumps?

You must know that at this present writing, I am confined with this paltry Influenza. I kept it for six weeks at the stove's end, as Shakspeare's Malvolio did Beelzebub; but it has driven me into close quarters at last. Indeed I could not expect to avoid it, for old Wronghead says it is a federal disorder, bred out of the New Constitution at New York, and communicated by infection from Congress.

I see the President has returned, all fragrant with the odour of incense. It must have given him satisfaction, to find that the hearts of the people were united in his favour; but the blunt and awkward adulation of our addresses must often have wounded his feelings. We have gone through all the Popish grades of worship, at least up to the Hyperdoulia.

I expect something capital with regard to the arrangement of the public debt, from the abilities of the Gentlemen in the Treasury Department. You will avoid the complicated and embarrassed Systems of Financiers, who affect to be mysterious and artful, and form a Plan at once bold, simple, and decisive. I almost envy you the friendship of Col. Hamilton, with whom I doubt not you are already in the closest habits of intimacy.

I perceive I shall repay your correspondence in quantity. Indeed, writing this letter is the only amusement I could have found under this unpleasant indisposition. Mrs. Trumbull joins in our affectionate Compliments to yourself and Mrs Wolcott. I am, Dear Sir, with the highest esteem, your Friend and humble Serv^t

JOHN TRUMBULL

Oliver Wolcott Jr., Esq.

MADAM

New York, Dec: 21, 1789

By a letter from my Father I was informed of the pleasing intelligence that you were in usual health, and that my brother had so far recovered, as to be able to renew his studies with Mr Reeve.

I can easily judge, from my own feelings, that your situation, since the removal of my Sister, must be in some respects lonely and disagreeable. But as you will be able to hear frequently from her, and must be perfectly satisfied with the character of Mr Goodrich, I feel not so much anxiety on that account, as from the multiplied attention which you will give to the family of servants, with which you are burdened. I must request that your humanity to them be not so particular as to suffer your health to be impaired on their account. If any measures consistent with propriety can be taken, to prevent an increase of that kind of trouble, it is surely your duty to attempt them.

My health is good, and though my business is laborious, yet as I have able Clerks, I find it less burdensome than my former employment. The compensation is better; and though economy will be necessary to make any considerable savings, yet I am disposed to exercise it, with a view of some time or other enjoying more leisure. Any considerable degree of affluence is not attainable in public service, consistent with integrity; my prospects on that head are therefore very limited.

The manners of the people are favourable to the plan which I have in view; great expense is not required, nor does it add to the reputation of any person. There appears to be great regularity in the City; honesty is as much in fashion as in Connecticut; and I am persuaded that there is a much greater attention to good morals, than has been supposed in the Country. So far as an attention to the Sabbath is a criterion of Religion, a comparison between this City and many places in Connecticut would be in favour of New York. The greatest inconvenience which I shall suffer, will arise from being separated from my friends; this I must remedy by keeping up a strict correspondence with them.

We have not been able to hire a house, and shall continue in lodgings till the Spring; this mode of living, taking all things into consideration, is the best for us at present.

With the most sincere wishes for your health and happiness, permit me to subscribe myself your obe^t Son

New York, Feby 1st 1790

SIR

Congress appears to be going on smoothly, the opposition to the government is diminished, and if the people will in practice submit to what in theory they have admitted to be proper, all will be well.

My situation is as agreeable as possible, considering the unreasonable accumulation of business thrown upon me; if I get through with it, it will operate to my advantage. I am treated very fairly by all the Officers of the Department, and I have been noticed by all the principal Gentlemen in the public Service. The favours I have received I am very happy to mention to you, as I am certain that they have been bestowed upon me under the auspices of your reputation.

I have reason to believe that when we shall keep house by ourselves, you could spend a few weeks here very happily, with many Gentlemen with whom you have been well acquainted during the War; and I flatter myself that you will be persuaded to accept the Invitation.

Betsey is better than she has been; she some time since intended a visit to Connecticut, but from the state of the roads, this Winter, I think it will not be prudent for her to undertake so long a Journey. She desires me to present her best respects to Mamma and all the family.

As a Post is now established from hence to Litchfield, I flatter myself that you will write to us by every opportunity; I shall do every thing in my power to be punctual on my part. With respects to my Mamma and love to my Brother I remain with the greatest respect your obe^t Son

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

The Hon. Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

MRS. GOODRICH TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

Hartford, 22 March, 1790

I am very happy, my dear Betsey, to find so direct a conveyance as by Col. Wadsworth, to answer your good long letter, for which I most sincerely thank you. I perceive by it that you are the same good Sister which I have ever found you, and not at all the worse, for living in New York. I know your disposition too well, to believe that there is any danger of your losing your attachment to those friends you have left behind, or of your becoming at all dissipated. We have repeatedly heard that you have had a great deal of company, and that the first people in the City are proud of your acquaintance — together with many other things, which I dare not mention, for fear of being taxed with Flattery.

But I can easily believe you, my dear Betsey, when you tell me that all this affords but a cold, insipid enjoyment, when compared with that which the society of a few good friends brings with it. You have one great satisfaction, which is that of knowing that your best beloved is highly respected, and has the esteem of the best Characters — which Col. Wadsworth tells us is the case. You will reflect, too, that the same company and amusements, which at present you do not relish very highly, may after a while be very pleasing to you. I would not, my dear Sister, if there were the least prospect of our ever getting you back to this Town, say one word in favour of your present situation ; but I see we must resign you ; and since this is inevitable, I want to have you as happy as possible. Remember that I am most sincerely your affectionate Sister

M. GOODRICH.

Mrs. Wolcott.

FROM MR. GOODRICH.

DEAR SIR

Hartford, March 23, 1790

I certainly have the most reason to regret your want of Leisure to write to your friends, for were it not for that ambition of yours of doing every thing better than other folks, and more than any Body else, I might claim from you to know what wise men think, which I believe cannot always be found out from what they say and do ; and also know your own feelings and reflections, in which I am really more interested, than in political systems, or in the noisy clamour of Congress.

We draw our Lottery the next week ; and Mary Anne is to have the highest Prize, which is already laid out in a most economical manner, for the best good of the family ; and the Sum of three hundred Pounds is about enough to begin a good system of economy with.

Col. Wadsworth gave us a very sensible satisfaction, by the account he has given of the high estimation in which you are had by Mr. Hamilton, and the public. I could easily believe it, for I knew you would deserve it. I am, my dear Sir, your friend.

MADAM

New York, May 31, 1790.

We are now conveniently situated in a very healthy and convenient part of the Town, and expect to live more at ease than we have done, and shall be happy to see such of our friends as will visit us. From my Brother we have received a promise, which we expect he will shortly fulfill with good faith.

I have nothing new, not even in the world of Politics, of which you can wish to be informed, except that the House of Representatives have this day resolved to remove to Philadelphia. This event is indifferent to me, except as it will require me to remove farther from my friends. I often think of you and my friends, and regret that my fortune in life compels me to live from them; a hope, which is perhaps vain, is frequently indulged, that some incident will enable me to return, with a prospect of business which will support me. In all events, it will be my constant prayer that you and they may live in health and prosperity.

Betsey directs me to present her best respects to you and my Brother Frederick, and to inform you that she will make you a speedy visit. With every sentiment of respect I remain, Madam, your obed^t Son

OLIV: WOLCOTT, JR.

Mrs Laura Wolcott.

TO HIS WIFE.

DEAR BETSEY

New York, Aug. 26th, 1790.

I find it but a dull business to live alone, especially since Congress have adjourned. The difference which this and the removals of the citizens into the country have made in the appearance of the city, is much greater than I could have imagined. I have heard or seen, I know not which, the advice which you sent to Miss M. and Miss W., to inform you how I behave. Miss M. has gone into the country, and Miss W. cannot give you much information. I know more than both of them respecting the matter. In general I have behaved well; but to enumerate my good actions would savour of vanity, for which reason I am prevented from affording a great part of the history of my conduct; and I do not think that what has been amiss ought to be published to the world, which is as good a reason why the remaining part ought not to be committed to writing. As I know you cannot have done any thing which is not praiseworthy, and as the Ladies are permitted by custom to compliment themselves, it will be perfectly proper, and will be a satisfaction to me to know how you have behaved, which I doubt not you will be good enough to inform me.

I suppose this Letter will find you at Litchfield, where I hope you will be able to breathe a great deal of good air, and acquire much health. I am glad that the little boy is well, and has seen so much of the world as to recommend himself to his Grand Parents. You must learn him all the tricks proper for a gentleman of his age before I come.

I suppose the reason that I have not heard from Litchfield, has been that my friends supposed me to be from the city. It is a sore disappointment that I have not, but Mr. Eveleigh's (the Comptroller's) sickness, and the labour necessary to prepare to execute the acts passed the last session have absolutely prevented. At no future period will my business be so burdensome as it has been, and in one or two years it will be easy. Give my love and respects to all friends, particularly to my Parents & Brother when you see them. I am your friend with the greatest sincerity,

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Mrs Wolcott.

TO THE SAME.

DEAR BETSEY

New York, Sept. 7, 1790.

I have at length been to Philadelphia, and with much difficulty have procured a house in Third Street, which is a reputable part of the City. Philadelphia is a large and elegant city. It did not, however, strike me with all the astonishment which the citizens predicted. On account of the absence of the Comptroller, considerable business has devolved on me, and though I wish much to see you and the little boy, yet I cannot at this time be spared without injury to the public business, and missing an opportunity favourable to my views.

Pray take all the care in the world of our little son ; and yet this is unnecessary advice, you are too kind and too much interested in him to permit any accident to befall him that human foresight can prevent. His life is I believe the care of a good God, who will save him for us.

Give my love to all friends, to my Mamma and to my brother.

Adieu — may God bless you.

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Mrs. Wolcott.

TO THE SAME.

DEAR BETSEY

New York, Oct. 3^d 1790.

Your very good and acceptable favour of the 30th I received last evening. I am happy to hear the flattering accounts which you give of our little son, and wish that it had been in your power to inform me that your own health was more than tolerable.

I live here exactly like an Owl, in one month more I should become one ; indeed I would not live such another month as the last for any thing which I can expect to attain by common fortune. My health, though not confirmed, is mending. I take the bark and bathe every morning, by which you will know that I am recovering. I have sent off a part of my Office Papers and furniture, and have got our glasses packed, and cases made for the other furniture ; the rest of the business can be done in a short time, when I am otherwise ready.

Give my love to all friends, and kiss the little boy for yourself and me.

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Mrs. Wolcott

TO HIS FATHER.

SIR

Philadelphia, March 28th 1791.

The business in which I am engaged continues to be arduous ; but I shall gradually be able to render my situation more tolerable. I have been well treated since I have been here ; frequent inquiries are made after you, and many Gentlemen have expressed their wishes to see you here. I need not add that such an event would render us very happy.

The President has set out on a Tour for the Southern States. This will serve to conciliate the affections of the people ; though he will not be received with all that cordiality, or those zealous acclamations, which attended his journey to New England.

The little Oliver grows finely, and is a very promising boy ; he almost exactly resembles his dear and lamented brother. I am very respectfully your obe^t Son

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

SECRETARY HAMILTON TO PRESIDENT WASHINGTON.

SIR

Philadelphia, April 17, 1791.

You will probably recollect, that previous to your departure from this place, anticipating the event which has taken place, with regard to the death of Mr. Eveleigh, I took the liberty to mention to you that Mr. Wolcott, the present Auditor, would be in every respect worthy of your consideration, as his successor in office.

Now that the event has happened, a concern as anxious as it was natural, for the success of the Department, united with a sentiment of justice towards Mr. Wolcott, leads me to a repetition of that idea. This gentleman's conduct in the station he now fills has been that of an excellent officer. It has not only been good, but distinguished. It has combined all the requisites which can be desired ; moderation with firmness, liberality with exactness, indefatigable industry with an accurate and sound discernment, a thorough knowledge of business, and a remarkable spirit of order and arrangement. Indeed I ought to say, that I owe very much of whatever success may have attended the merely executive operations of the Department to Mr. Wolcott ; and I do not fear to commit myself when I add, that he possesses in an eminent degree all the qualifications desirable in a Comptroller of the Treasury ; that it is scarcely possible to find a man in the United States, more competent to the duties of that station than himself—few who could be equally so. It may truly be said of him, that he is a man of rare merit ; and I have good evidence that he has been viewed in this light by the members of Congress extensively, from different quarters of the Union, and is so considered by all that part of the public who have had opportunities of witnessing his conduct.

The immediate relation too, which his present situation bears to that of Comptroller, is a strong argument in his favour. Though a regular gradation of office is not admissible in a strict sense, in regard to offices of a civil nature, and is wholly inapplicable to those of the first rank, (such as the Heads of the great executive Departments,) yet a certain regard to the relation which one situation bears to another, is consonant with the natural ideas of justice, and is recommended by powerful considerations of policy. The expectation of promotion in civil as in military life, is a great stimulus to virtuous exertion, while examples of unrewarded exertion, supported by talent and qualification, are proportionable discouragements. Where they do not produce resignations, they leave men dissatisfied, and a dissatisfied man seldom does his duty well. In a government like ours, where pecuniary compensations are moderate, the principle of gradual advancement as a reward for good conduct, is perhaps more necessary to be attended to, than in others where offices are more lucrative. By due attention to it, it will operate as a means to secure respectable men for offices of inferior emolument and consequence.

In addition to the rest, Mr. Wolcott's experience in this particular line pleads powerfully in his favour. This experience may be dated back to his office of Comptroller of the State of Connecticut, and has been perfected by practice in his present place.

A question may perhaps, Sir, arise in your mind, whether some inconvenience may not attend his removal from his present office. I am of opinion that no sensible inconvenience will be felt on this score, since it will be easy for him as Comptroller, who is the immediate superior of the Auditor, to form any man of business for the office he will leave, in a short period of time. More inconvenience would be felt by the introduction of a Comptroller not in the immediate train of the business. Besides this, it may be observed that a degree of inconvenience on this score cannot be deemed an obstacle, but upon the principle which would bar the progress of merit from one station to another.

On this point of inconvenience a reflection occurs, which I think I ought not to suppress. Mr. Wolcott is a man of sensibility, not unconscious of his own value, and he doubtless must believe that he has pretensions from situation to the office. Should another be appointed and he resign, the derangement of the Department would truly be distressing to the public service.

In suggesting thus particularly the reasons, which in my mind operate in favour of Mr. Wolcott, I am influenced by information that other characters will be brought to your view by weighty advocates, and as I think it more than possible that Mr. Wolcott may not be mentioned to you by any other person than myself, I feel it a duty arising out of my situation in the Department, to bear my full and explicit testimony to his worth, confident that he will justify by every kind of substantial merit any mark of your approbation which he may receive.

I trust, Sir, that in thus freely disclosing my sentiments to you, you will be persuaded that I yield only to the suggestions of an honest zeal for the public good, and of a firm conviction, that the prosperity of the Department under my particular care, (one so interesting to the aggregate movements of the government) will be best promoted by transferring the present Auditor to the office of Comptroller of the Treasury. I have the honour to remain, with the truest and most respectful attachment, Sir, your most obedient and humble servant

ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

The President of the United States.

FROM MR. GOODRICH.

DEAR SIR

Hartford, July 2, 1791.

We have received the news of your new appointment, though you have not been kind enough to write us on the subject, and let us know how you feel on having one cubit more added to your stature. We impute it to the modesty which is the prevailing trait of character among courtiers, that your pen has been silent. Be assured, however, that we rejoice in this instance of your good fortune; and the more so, as we know, and everybody believes, you richly deserve it. We wish you more ease than you have had in your Business, and really imagine that you have laid up reputation enough, or as the Prompter says, have so well got your name up, that you may be a little more idle. We are affected at the news of your little Boy's illness, but are encouraged from your letter to Mr. Mosely, that we shall hear from you soon of his entire recovery. All your friends here are well. We set off to-morrow morning on a visit to Litchfield.

July 30th

You will believe, without any assurances from me, that I feel a very tender sympathy and concern for you and sister Betsey under the severe affliction by the death of your dear child. But you cannot realize how much all your friends have regretted their absence from you, and wishes to be present to relieve you in this affecting scene. We do most ardently pray that your health and spirits may not sink under this severe trial; and that the delicate frame of our sister Betsey may enjoy the kindest and best of Heaven's blessings to support her.

You can determine best, but if it would consist with your official Engagements, I imagine a journey with Mrs. Wolcott to Connecticut would be advisable. It is greatly wished for by your friends, who cannot help feeling very anxious for you in this uncommon sultry Season, so long as you are in Philadelphia. Present my sentiments of Condolence and Affection to sister Betsey, and believe me to be always your sincere and affectionate friend

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

TO HIS FATHER.

SIR

Philadelphia, July 21st 1791.

I am now to acknowledge your favour of the 4th instant, and several others which have remained unanswered, not for want of respect, but for a reason which I fondly hoped I should explain in a manner pleasing to myself and not unacceptable to my friends.

Our little hope, about five weeks since, was attacked with a disorder of this climate, peculiarly fatal to infants ; he, however, by proper care was nearly recovered, when a change of the weather produced a relapse ; from this, also, he was considerably restored. As his strength had suffered considerable diminution, it was the opinion of physicians that he should be removed to New England. The time spent in recruiting his strength, and making preparation for so long a journey, at this season of the year, unfortunately exposed him to severe trials from this variable atmosphere ; but on Saturday last, Mrs. Wolcott proceeded, under the protection of kind friends, to New York. In the evening, the disorder was reproduced by the old cause, and on Sunday evening, the little darling ceased to suffer.

Betsey has sustained this shock with more fortitude than I could have expected ; but her feeble frame, nearly exhausted with exertion and anxiety, and now wounded in those nerves which possess peculiar sensibility to suffer, is an object for tender commiseration.

My health has been as good as I could expect, considering the change of climate, and my confinement, until within a few days, when I have had a slight attack of intermittent fever ; from what I can judge, I shall have no trouble from it, except for a few days, and it will oblige me to be more careful of my exercise, for which purpose I have purchased a horse.

With the greatest respect and the sincerest wishes for your health and happiness I remain your obe^t Son

OLIV: WOLCOTT, JR.

Hon. Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

A national bank was established in 1791, and Mr. Wolcott was offered the Presidency of the institution, with an ample salary, which he declined, "preferring the public service, and believing that such a station would be deemed unsuitable for a young man without property."

TO HIS BROTHER.

DEAR BROTHER

Philadelphia, April 6th, 1792.

We shall make you a visit in the ensuing summer, when I hope for a short time to feel, as formerly, free from the vexations and toils of a busy life. Col. Tallmadge is here, and will tell you when he returns how I live. I am more plain, and certainly work harder, than most Quakers. I shall not, without some misfortune befall me, be in debt, but I shall never be rich. I hope to do some good, and to steer through the maze without injuring others, and with sufficient philosophy to be inattentive to small disappointments. You know how much I love you and some of my Connecticut friends. I pray that I may never love them less; as a reflection on the past pleasures of their society is my chief amusement. Betsey sends her love to you, and to my father and mother. Accept and circulate mine to our common friends, and believe me to be with the most sincere wishes for your prosperity your affectionate brother

Frederick Wolcott, Esq.

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

TO HIS WIFE.

MY DEAR BETSEY

Philadelphia, July 10th, 1792.

The life of an old bachelor does not prove to be the thing which I represented it to you. Instead of being still, quiet, and at leisure — learning French and reading poetry — I find it very dull and insipid. It would please you proud Ladies, to observe the sober faces which we, poor wifeless souls, make in this hot City. You are so good a girl that I know you will pity me, though you may laugh at the rest.

My Dear Betsey, improve the present to make yourself as happy as possible, and expect to see me soon. All your neighbours and friends enquire after you and send their love.

July 22^d

I received your kind and good Letter of the 15th, written under the inspiration of the pure breezes of Litchfield; and feel grateful that you are well, and that my good mother is so much better than I expected from your last accounts.

July 24th

I shall break away from my business, and hasten to you, by the time I promised. In the mean time laugh and be as happy as possible, in that best of places, our dear native soil of Connecticut.

Give my love to all friends, and believe me to be your best and unfailing friend

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Mrs. Wolcott.

TO HIS BROTHER.

MY DEAR BROTHER

Philadelphia, March 9th, 1793.

I received your letter of the 5th instant and though the information therein contained is somewhat more encouraging than when my father wrote last, I cannot but feel the most extreme solicitude as to the issue of my mother's illness. The probability doubtless is, that we must soon feel the pang of separation from a parent, whose kindness and affection to us, and whose virtues and respectable example will demand a perpetual homage to her memory. When we shall be called to mourn the afflicting bereavement to us and to society, it will become us to reflect that she arrived to the usual period of human life, and that in every situation she was justly esteemed and honoured. Sincere ought to be our gratitude, that such has been the tenor of her life as to render death no evil to her, and be a source of consolation for a loss ordained to be inevitable.

I have been exceedingly engrossed this winter, which has prevented me from writing to my friends as often as I should have otherwise done. You have doubtless heard of the attack of the Virginians upon the Treasury. The result has been such as the merits of the case required; every thing has been fully explained, much to the honour of Col. Hamilton and to the great chagrin of his adversaries. I enclose the Journal of the House on this subject.

Mrs Wolcott is well and desires to be remembered to the family. Yr^s

OLIV. WOLCOTT Jr.

Fred^o. Wolcott, Esq.

TO THE SAME.

MY D^r BROTHER

Philad: June 11, 1793

I have perfectly recovered from my indisposition, and wish that I could indulge myself on your Hill in eating strawberries, and breathing the pure air of freedom. This cannot be permitted for the present; I must remain busily employed this summer. Until the present storm is blown over, it is necessary that all the seamen should stay with the ship.

You good people of New England ought to be proud of your situation. While the world is contending for and against Liberty and Equality, you can enjoy the blessings of peace, security, and independence; and if you but preserve the old manners and institutions of your Country, you will have the consolation of extending the happiness, which they bestow, to every part of America. You may be assured, that the success of the republican system in a great measure depends on the conduct of the people of New England. I wish you to present my own and Betsey's most affectionate respects to our Mother, and assure her of our constant wishes for her recovery.

I am, D^r Brother, your friend & obed^t serv^t

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Fred. Wolcott, Esq.

MRS. GOODRICH TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

Hartford, 30th March, 1793.

I have made two or three attempts to write to you, my dear Sister, and have been interrupted by company. I know that you are not wont to suspect your friends of unkindness, or I should fear that you thought me very inattentive.

Your kind and sympathetic letter of the 5th inst. afforded me a great deal of Consolation, and has added to the tenderness of my friendship for you. I have hardly yet recovered my usual health and spirits, since the trying scene I went thro' at Litchfield. I had no expectation of finding my Mother alive, and experienced what it is to part with a beloved Parent. But it was the will of Providence, that her sufferings should not then be terminated. I attended upon her for a fortnight, and it was with the greatest regret that I left her, which I should not have done, had not my Health made it necessary. Her situation is very affecting indeed; but she is perfectly calm, and resigned to her fate. Frederick writes to me that he hopes there is a little alteration for the better in her symptoms, but I do not think we can indulge the expectation of any material improvement.

There has nothing happened here, worth communicating. We have a company of Players in Town; tho' I believe they exhibit nothing very naturally, except their own folly.

20th September.

I have received your letter of the 14th, my dear Sister, which gave me great pleasure. My good brother always takes liberties with me, which my self-love is apt to interpret as an evidence that he thinks highly of my good-nature at least. I think, however, it is best he should know that a Woman can never forgive an attack upon her beauty; and when I see you, we will devise some punishment, that shall teach him never to be so imprudent in future.

December 1st

We are at length quietly settled, and I feel myself more at home, as we say, than I have before, since I lived in Hartford. Every object, almost, appears familiar, and brings to my remembrance the days of my Youth, and a variety of interesting and agreeable scenes that took place, when I formerly visited you in this Mansion. On the other hand, as it constantly reminds me of the separation which has since taken place between us, I sometimes feel as if I could never enjoy the pleasantness of the situation so highly as I should if we were not indebted for it to so painful an event. This is a subject that will awaken your sensibility; and I should not have said a word upon it, if I could possibly have avoided it. You have heard me often enough, and strongly enough, express my Disappointment at my dear Brother's leaving this Town. I feel, more and more, the want of your society; but my hopes are now all founded upon the promise which my Brother made to us both at New Haven. I beg you to use proper means to keep it in his memory; and in order to the fulfillment of it, you must be careful not to let the enemy, Ambition, gain too powerful an ascendancy over his mind; he will make his approaches in a variety of shapes, but I trust you will oppose yourself to him, in every avenue to your Husband's heart, and keep the entire possession of it yourself. Tell the good Man if he supposes me an Aristocrat, he is not mistaken. He knows I am so constitutionally; I am so, likewise, from feeling and sentiment—I hope it is not arrogance, in Philadelphia, for a Woman to have sentiments. If he is not pleased with this declaration, perhaps he may be with what follows—if he will not aspire to any higher Dignities himself, than being a good and respectable Justice of the Peace in this Town, I will use my influence to have a Democratic Government established in France, and secured perpetually to the people of America.

I will thank you to give my best Love to Mr. Wolcott, and tell him that I mean to get Mrs. Wolstonecraft's book, and make Mr. Goodrich read it aloud in the Family, in the same manner that he advised; I have a perfect reliance upon his opinion and recommendation of it. Tell him, also, that his promise to write me a long Letter, which he has not yet performed, is registered against him. Mr. Goodrich, I suppose, will write to you, for he refuses to send his love in this Letter—he says there is too much of it already. So I will bid you adieu, my dear Sister, with a sincere prayer for your health and happiness.

Yours truly and affectionately

M. A. GOODRICH.

P. S. Do desire Mr. Wolcott, in his next letter to Mr. Goodrich, to inform him what new fashions have lately arrived, and his opinion of them.

TO HIS FATHER.

SIR

Phil^a, Sept. 12th 1793.

I have judged it best to remove Mrs. Wolcott, her little Sister, and a part of our domesticks, into the Country, where I shall soon follow them. At present I remain, partly because from this place I can safely render some services to friends who stand in great need of them.

The apprehensions of the Citizens cannot be increased ; business is in a great measure abandoned ; the true character of Man is disclosed ; and he shows himself a weak, timid, desponding and selfish being. One half of the risques which are incurred in the gratification of idle curiosity, or in the practice of the most degrading fanaticism, would administer relief to numbers who perish without notice, or the least assistance from their friends. The Africans are said not to be affected ; and much to their honour, they have zealously contributed every aid in their power. Sunday and Monday of this week have proved the most mortal ; since, the disorder is said to have abated ; it is very certain that it is communicated only by contact, or by specific contagion. The fever has not, except in one or two instances, appeared in the quarter where I live, and my situation is as favorable as almost any in the City. When I leave the City, I expect not to be permitted to return ; the alarm of the Country being so great, as to restrain much intercourse. If you should not hear from me for some time, you will not therefore be alarmed.

Col. Hamilton lives about two miles out of the City, and by entering the house of a sick person, caught the fever. He was violently attacked ; but by proper treatment, which few have had the good fortune to experience, he is believed to be out of danger. I am the better satisfied with being in town, as by information from his servants I can render him some services, without risque to myself.

I have every motive to induce caution, and feel no apprehension ; I hope none will be experienced by friends, as it can render me no service. With best respects to my Mother and love to brother Frederick I remain your obe^t Son

Smith's House, near Phil., Oct 11th 1793

The dreadful sickness in the City continues to occupy our chief attention. Its ravages are extending, with added circumstances of terror and distress. Many now die without attendance. The kind attentions, the tears of condolence and sympathy, which alleviate pain, and in some degree reconcile the dying to their fate, are frequently omitted by the nearest friends and relatives ; when generously bestowed, they are too often the price of life.

Though I hope that myself, Mrs. Wolcott, and a part of our domestics are safe from this disease, yet I am sorry to be informed that the contagion has reached to my house in town. One person will certainly die ; the lives of two others, now apparently well, must therefore be endangered. Under these circumstances, though I shall not expose my own life, I feel bound to provide for their relief ; this I shall do, whatever be the trouble or expense.

Oct. 17th

Since I wrote last, we have had some rain and cool weather. The effects are already very beneficial ; the mortality has greatly abated, and but few comparatively are taken sick. May God grant a speedy relief from the awful scourge with which we have been afflicted !

I believe you need feel no anxiety for our personal safety. I take every precaution which appears to be necessary ; and experience has not evinced, that persons are affected under such circumstances.

I am with much respect, Sir, your obe^t Son

FROM DR. HOPKINS.

MY DEAR FRIEND

Hartford, 22^d Dec: 1793.

I heartily congratulate you and Mrs. Wolcott, that you have escaped the Pestilence that walked in darkness, and the Destruction that wasted at noon-day. I was anxious for your safety during the prevalence of this disease ; but less so than I should have been, had I believed that all the danger lay in mere Contagion, unaided by other causes. I now feel glad that one Officer of Government had the Patriotism and Fortitude to continue so near the scene of terrible and complicated distress and danger, as to keep alive the public business.

I hope that France, England, Algiers, and the Western Indians will inspire our Councils with unanimity on great national questions.

Dear Friend — Farewell !

FROM THE REV. DR. DWIGHT.

DEAR SIR

[1793]

Allow me, without detailing apologies for my apparent negligence in so long delaying this letter, to thank you, with much sincerity and affection, for the uniform good-will and hospitality, which I found at your house. Assure Mrs. Wolcott of the grateful sense I shall ever retain of the very polite and very friendly manner, in which she rendered my residence there peculiarly agreeable, and of my best wishes for your united happiness. Should your affairs allow, you would add much to our little circle of enjoyments, by giving us a visit, in your next Connecticut tour. Mrs. Dwight, I need not tell you, very sincerely joins with me in every wish of this nature. I was, on many accounts, greatly pleased with my journey to Philadelphia.

Our season is fine and fruitful, and is a beautiful symbol of general prosperity. Were we fairly freed from Indian troubles, we should have nothing to regret. Greenfield Hill is at present in a dormant state. With sentiments of sincere respect and affection, I am, dear Sir, your friend and servant.

MY DEAR BROTHER

Phila., March 3^d 1794

You Gentlemen of the Country, instead of thinking that you know less, ought to be sensible that you know more of everything useful and desirable to be known, than those who live in Cities, which are for the most part the seats of ignorance, vanity and vice. Of this be certain, that when the Country becomes possessed of the same spirit and character, which is prominent in most of our great Towns, the happiness and liberty of our Country will be terminated. This is not spleen of mine, for I have met with nothing special to excite disgust. Ask Mr Tracy or Mr Swift when they return, and they will tell you as I do. The people of Connecticut at this time enjoy the best state of Society, and are the most happy Community under heaven. They have the reputation of being in this situation; they have the strongest motives for maintaining their present character. Be assured that their representation in Congress is considered as the most respectable in the United States — having no scape-goat and no character destitute of respectable Talents.

The only effect which this information is intended to produce, is contentment with what passes in this imperfect state. By knowing what is the best which we are to expect, we naturally become satisfied. It is not natural, but artificial evil, which is the chief cause of our anxiety.

Betsy is well and sends her best love. Present my respects to my friends — Mr Reeve, Allen, Belden, Tallmadge, etc., and believe me ever with great sincerity to be your friend and brother.

SIR :

Philz, May 3^d 1794

I received your letter announcing the intelligence of my mother's death. Though this event has been for some time expected, yet it was not the less agonizing to me, who have been deprived of a parent who possessed and well deserved my most perfect affection, gratitude and respect. It is, however, on such melancholy occasions, that the dignity of virtue and the consolations of religion appear most conspicuous ; and happy it is for us, that in the life and death of our mother, they have been fully illustrated. To live with honour and respect, to die lamented, and confidently to expect a happy futurity, is to attain every good allowed to humanity. In all these particulars our departed parent was eminently distinguished.

The fortunes of America and the destiny of Republicanism depend on the stability of the Northern States. We must have a government, and this is the last that can be settled in the United States, by the general consent of the present members. With perfect respect I remain your obe^d Son

FROM THE REV. DR. MORSE.

MY DEAR SIR

Charlestown, Dec^r 17th 1794.

I take the liberty to enclose you Mr. Osgood's Thanksgiving Sermon, with which I think you will be pleased. I could wish, if you think it proper, that the Sermon might, in a suitable way, be put into the hands of our most Worthy President, with this remark accompanying it, that the Clergy in this Commonwealth, generally, approve of the same sentiments. I wish it because it may possibly add to his satisfaction, and will certainly to our honor in his view.

I am sorry to hear of the intended Resignation of Mr. Hamilton, who has merited so much from his country. He will retire with victory over his enemies, and with the "loud applauses" and good wishes of his numerous friends. It is happy that we are not wanting in men of ability to succeed him ; we are not much at a loss who will be his Successor.

Your Letters are ever highly acceptable and gratifying to me, and of course it would be pleasing to receive more of them ; but I know your engagements, and would only hope that once in a while you will amuse yourself, in a leisure moment, in writing me a line. With regards to Mrs. W., I am with great sincerity and esteem

Your friend

JED^H MORSE.

TO HIS FATHER.

SIR

Phil^a, Jan. 6, 1795.

The office of Secretary of the Treasury is justly viewed of high consequence to the public; it will be found a very responsible situation, and no man can hold it without being opposed and attacked. Other qualifications than those which respect skill and capacity for the mere business of the Treasury will be desirable; and in these respects a successor to Col. Hamilton will not be found. A change in the Executive Department, like what must happen, will therefore be of importance, and may explain the nature and bias of our government.

I shall take no measures for putting myself in the way of this appointment; if it is offered to me, I shall accept it, and I shall certainly conduct the mere business of the department in an orderly and proper manner. Whatever may be said or done, I shall suffer no disgrace eventually, unless it shall be found that the talents of a politician, and a certain address in persuading and informing individuals and the public on certain conjunctures, are necessary qualifications. In these matters I shall be understood, if I am appointed, to have no responsibility. I have arrived at all that degree of advancement to which a man can himself lay claim; public opinion and the exigencies of the times will determine what is to be my situation hereafter. I mention these things, as it will be natural for you to feel some concern respecting me; but that is unnecessary, as I shall in any event be properly and fairly treated, and my ease and reputation consulted as far as I ought to desire.

I remain with great respect your ob^d Son

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Hon^{ble} Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

TO PRESIDENT WASHINGTON.

SIR

Phil^a, Feb. 4th 1795.

I have been informed, through the Secretary of State, that you have been pleased to appoint me to the Office of Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

It is with real diffidence that I undertake to discharge the important duties incident to this appointment; yet if constant exertions and strict fidelity can compensate for such qualifications as I may not possess, I indulge a hope that my services will receive your approbation.

But whatever may be the effect of my endeavours, in respect to my own reputation and the interests confided to my care, I beg leave to assure you, that this distinguished token of confidence will never fail to excite in my breast lively sentiments of respect and gratitude.

I have the honour to be with perfect deference, Sir, your most obed^t serv^t

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

The President of the United States.

FROM HIS FATHER.

SIR

Litchfield, March 16th 1795

The Situation in which you are placed is highly important to the public as well as honourable to yourself; but I have full confidence that in case you enjoy Health, which you ought to endeavour to preserve, the Duties of it will be honourably discharged, and to the good Acceptance of the public. At the same Time it will be well for you to expect to meet with Calumny, which no Man who does his Duty has any Reason to hope to escape. The Man who shall so conduct as to enjoy the Approbation of his own Conscience, and the Respect of the virtuous, the sensible and the good, obtains every thing in Life as it respects his Character and Peace of Mind, which he ought to wish for. This Satisfaction I trust you will enjoy, and finally a Happiness which the World can neither give nor take from you.

Yours with tender Regard

OLIVER WOLCOTT

O. Wolcott, Jr., Esq.

TO HIS WIFE.

MY DEAR BETSEY

Philadelphia, June 18th 1795

I rejoice to hear that you are all well; take good care of yourself and the little girl, and tell me whether she learns to talk, whether she grows, and whether her teeth affect her — in short, every thing respecting her.

We are all well. Miss M. has visited me but once; I presume she is afraid that Mr. Ellsworth will inform you, if she comes while he is here.

June 25th

Mr. Ellsworth sets out for Hartford this day, and I cannot deny myself the pleasure of writing to you again. The Senate have substantially ratified the Treaty, though as one point is suspended, it may be considered as open. I understand they have determined not to countenance a publication, though they have reserved the right of conversing generally about it; perhaps this will be found equivalent to a publication. At present, however, it may not be correct to write what it would be contrary to the rule to print. Mr. Ellsworth, however, has so far experienced your faculty of keeping State Secrets, that I doubt not he will tell you every thing that you wish to know, and you have my consent to tell others any thing that he tells you. This, I think, is a generous indulgence on my part.

You must be careful of yourself and little Blue Eyes. I hope you will be able to bring her back as plump and hearty as a partridge. I am in perfect health, and Mr. Ellsworth will tell you how I behave. Indeed, I think I am rather more steady than usual; it is certain that I am not less so. Our friends are as usual. Mrs. Washington enquires after you often, as also the President and the young Ladies.

July 31st

It will be a circumstance very far from being agreeable in itself, if you should not be able to return here in September; and yet your health and that of our dear little Girl are of more consequence, than the evil of separation. In what you determine, be governed entirely by what shall be advised as most safe.

Adieu and may God bless and preserve you. Kiss Laura for me.

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Mrs. Wolcott.

FROM VICE-PRESIDENT ADAMS.

DEAR SIR

Quincy, September 16, 1795.

The Treaty operates in Boston like the Hogsheads of Lime which I am putting under Earth and Weeds and Mud and Straw to make manure. It occasions some Smoke and some Dust and some hissing but will end in reducing all to one rich mould I hope.

I am, Dear Sir, with great esteem and affection your Friend and humble servant

JOHN ADAMS.

Oliver Wolcott, Secretary of the Treasury.

TO HIS FATHER.

SIR

Phil^a April 18th, 1796.

I understand from all quarters that you will succeed to the Office of Governor. At this I rejoice, as it is proper in itself, and as it is a proof of the stability and gratitude of the people of the State. Mr. Trumbull, it is said, will be chosen Lt. Governor; this is also well, except that it will take a good man from the Senate. It appears to me to be important, that the good old habits of Connecticut should be maintained. Among those habits, that of promoting men in regular gradation is one of the best. This principle will, I think, have its influence on the appointment of Senators.

May 26.

It gives me great pleasure to observe the result of the election, and the evidences of stability and moderation in the conduct of the Legislature. While the Northern States continue firm, and while honest and able men can be induced to hold public offices, we shall be able to maintain the present Government. It will fail, whenever it shall be administered by the demagogues of the day.

We are well, and I remain with perfect respect your obe^t son

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Gov. Wolcott.

It marks a revolution in public sentiment on this point, and indicates the centralizing, or national, drift of the Republic, that the transfer from a seat in the Senate of the United States to the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the State of Connecticut, was in that day regarded as a political promotion.

Mr. Trumbull was the son of the Governor Trumbull of the same name, Washington's great co-adjutor, who had held the office during the War of the Revolution — the official record of Connecticut exhibiting the coincidence of two Jonathan Trumbulls, father and son, and two Oliver Wolcotts, father and son, besides two Griswolds, father and son, succeeding to this post. The following is his letter acknowledging the new dignity:

SENATOR TRUMBULL TO GOVERNOR WOLCOTT.

SIR

Philadelphia, 19th May, 1796

I have received your favour of the 4th instant. Disposed as I am at all times, to follow the voice of my fellow-citizens in their call for my services, I now cheerfully listen to the late honourable expression of their will, and accept with gratitude and pleasure the appointment which your Excellency has announced to me, of Lieutenant Governour of the State. But as our State has at this time but one member on the floor of the Senate of the United States, and as several Senators are absent from that body, I shall think it my duty to remain in my present situation, either until I am especially called from here, or until the close of the present session of Congress, which I expect will probably terminate in the course of next week.

Your Excellency justly observes that Congress ought to do some material public good to compensate for the vexation they have occasioned. Some valuable acts will be completed, but perhaps it will appear that the most material good that will be accomplished, will be the prevention of evil that was intended. A truly valuable object this — if properly effected. All necessary treaty appropriations are completed, and all arrangements are made, and making, for their full execution; in consequence of which our happy country will, I trust, continue to enjoy the blessings of neutrality peace, and security.

The new British minister has arrived, and has been presented to the President. It is said he is furnished with full instructions to conciliate the affections, and to further the interests of our country; and that he possesses the best dispositions towards effecting these desirable objects. I am sure the President and Executive will be prepared to meet him in these estimable views.

I beg leave most sincerely to congratulate your Excellency on your election to the first Chair of the State, and have the honour to be, with great esteem and regard,
Sir,

Your obedient and humble servant

J. TRUMBULL.

Hon^{ble} Oliver Wolcott

FROM VICE-PRESIDENT ADAMS.

DEAR SIR

Quincy, June 1, 1796.

The Political World in this Quarter of it, is as Still and calm as a Dutch Canal. We have not yet heard of the Rising of Congress. If any Thing very curious should turn up, I should be much obliged to you, for a Line now and then. I am much pleased with the Appointment of Mr. King and Mr. Humphreys. I shall have more confidence in future in Representations from abroad.

With great Regard and Sincere friendship I am, dear Sir, your most obe^t

JOHN ADAMS.

Oliver Wolcott Junr, Secretary of the Treasury.

FROM HIS FATHER.

SIR

Litchfield, July 4, 1796

The inadequate Support which the most important Officers of the Government receive, their high Responsibility, severe Services, the Malignity which they have to encounter from the Envy and venal Influence of some, and the stupid Pride and Ignorance of others, must be very discouraging to Men to continue in Services in which they are conscious that the public derive every attainable Benefit from their greatest Exertions and most able and faithful Conduct.

I have always had the Pleasure to know that you were respected by the sensible, the virtuous and the good. These are great Rewards which a Man ought to receive for faithfully conducting a Business of the greatest national Importance under Government. In this State, which is very economical, I never heard of any Complaint of the extravagant Pay of the Officers of the United States. I believe that they are very willing that they should have more than is necessary for a bare Subsistence.

I sincerely wish that the President would suspend the Enjoyment of Retirement till the Wars of Europe shall be brought to a final Close. No one, on the Ground of Services, can have a greater Claim to it than he has ; but our Country will be in a very precarious Condition if he shall retire before they are ended. It will be impossible for this country not to be deeply affected while they continue.

My Congratulations on the Day. Our Country, at the Period commemorated, was united but distressed ; it is now disunited, rich and unhappy. I am with the most affectionate Regard

OLIVER WOLCOTT

O. Wolcott, Jr., Esq.

TO HIS FATHER.

SIR :

Philadelphia, Aug. 9, 1796

I am well, and so is my family. Mrs Wolcott lives at a farm-house about six miles from the city. The place is healthy, but inaccessible to company, there being no road near the house. If I were a democrat, I might raise a fund of popularity upon a circumstance of this kind, but it is well known that we live as we do because we cannot afford to live better, and this destroys all title to merit.

The affairs of the country are prosperous, except that the preservation of the public credit is a work of increasing difficulty. I shall get along for the present, and at any rate prove that nothing has been wanting on my part.

Whether the President will decline or not, is not certainly known to the public — to you I can say that I think he will not. His decision ought not, however, to be anticipated.

I shall be able to write you shortly upon some political subjects ; as yet I have not been able to dispatch the business of the last session. I am, Sir, with much respect your obe^t Son

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Gov. Wolcott

In March, 1797, Mr. Adams succeeded to the Presidency. "On the retirement of General Washington," Mr. Wolcott writes, "being desirous that my personal interests should not embarrass his successor, and supposing that some other person might be preferred to myself, I tendered my resignation to Mr. Adams before his inauguration. The tender was declined, and I retained office under my former commission."

But the void which Washington's retirement created was never filled in the hearts of the friends whom he left behind him at the seat of government, and by none, perhaps, was it felt more sensibly than by Mr. Wolcott, who had grown up, as it were, under Washington's eye.

"The relation in which the Secretaries had stood with the President had been one of respectful but affectionate intimacy. Familiarity with him was a thing impossible, but the most cordial and unreserved friendship was extended to all whom he trusted and esteemed. On their part there was a no less sincere love for their chief. His death hallowed his memory in their hearts to a degree and with a sanctity which none can know who have not heard from their own lips; and in like wise the wife and family of Washington were cherished. Wolcott among others had enjoyed much of the domestic society of the President's house. His gentle and graceful wife had been regarded with maternal tenderness by Mrs. Washington, and was the friend and correspondent of her eldest daughter. His child had been used to climb, confident of welcome, the knees of the Chief; and though so many years his junior, while Mr. Wolcott's character and judgment had been held in respect by the President, his personal and social qualities had drawn towards him a warm degree of interest.

"On leaving the seat of government, General Washington presented, it is believed, to all his chief officers some token of regard. To Mr. Wolcott he gave a piece of plate. Mrs. Washington gave to his wife, when visiting her for the last time, a relic still more interesting. Asking her if she did not wish a memorial of the General, Mrs. Wolcott replied, "Yes, I should like a lock of his hair." Mrs. Washington, smiling, took her scissors, and cut off for her a large lock of her husband's and one of her own. These, with the originals of Washington's letters, Mr. Wolcott preserved with careful veneration, and divided between his surviving children."¹

FROM GENERAL HAMILTON.

DEAR SIR

April 5th, 1797.

I have received your letter of March 31. I hope nothing in my last was misunderstood. Could it be necessary, I would assure you that no one has a stronger conviction than myself, of the purity of the motives which direct your public Conduct, or of the good sense and judgment by which it is guided. If I have a fear (you will excuse my frankness) it is lest the strength of your feelings — the companion of energy of character — should prevent that pliancy to circumstances, which is sometimes indispensable. I beg you only to watch yourself on this score, and the public will always find in you an able as well as faithful servant.

The situation of our country, my dear Sir, is singularly critical. I am clearly of opinion that the President should come forward to Congress in a manly tone, and that Congress should adopt vigorous, defensive measures. Those which you propose are proper, and some others on which I may write hereafter.

Yours very truly

A. HAMILTON

Oliver Wolcott, Jun. Esq.

MISS CUSTIS TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

MY DEAR MADAM

Mount Vernon, May 11th 1797.

I should not have delayed so long an answer to your kind letter of April 17th, but I am just returned home after an absence of three weeks, which I passed happily with my Mother and Sisters in the City. My beloved Grandmamma is now very well, and looks much better than when I left her ; Grandpapa is perfectly well.

We are much obliged to you, and our other Friends in Philadelphia, for their regret at our absence. I shall always remember them with affection and gratitude ; but I sincerely rejoice that we are now released from the form and ceremony, which attended us there. This place is now really delightful ; and this Month the most pleasant in the year, I think. We sincerely wish that Mr. Wolcott's business would permit him to visit us here, and bring you, and your children. I think you would be pleased with the extensive prospects, verdure, &c., which render this spot so charming. We hope, if not this Summer, that the next will afford us that pleasure.

My Grandparents desire to be sincerely and affectionately remembered to you and Mr. Wolcott, in which my Sisters and self join ; kisses for your little girls, who I hope are well. With sincere regard and affection,

Believe me, My Dear Madam, your Friend

ELEANOR PARKE CUSTIS.

Mrs. Wolcott

FROM GENERAL WASHINGTON.

DEAR SIR

Mount Vernon, 15th May, 1797.

I thank you for the information contained in your letter of the 19th ult., and infer from it, with pleasure, that you must be better, if not quite recovered of the indisposition of which you complained, by your being enabled to write. To know this, however would give me satisfaction, as I entertain an affectionate regard for you.

Various conjectures have been formed, relative to the causes which have induced the President to convene the Congress at this season of the year; among others, that laying an embargo is supposed by some to be in contemplation; whether with or without foundation, you who are acting on the great theatre have the best means of judging. For myself, having turned aside from the broad walks of political, into the narrow paths of private life, I shall leave it with those whose duty it is to consider subjects of this sort, and, (as every good citizen ought to do) conform to whatsoever the Ruling Powers shall decide. To make and sell a little flour annually; to repair houses going fast to ruins; to build one for the security of my Papers of a public nature; and to amuse myself in agricultural and rural pursuits, will constitute employment for the few years I have to remain on this terrestrial globe. If, to these, I could now and then meet the friends I esteem, it would fill up the measure, and add zest to my enjoyments. But if the latter ever happens, it must be under my own vine and fig tree, as I do not think it probable that I shall ever extend my walks beyond a radius of 20 miles from them.

To detail matters of private concern, would be as improper as it would be uninteresting; and therefore, upon the principle I have adopted, it will never be in my power to make adequate returns for your kind communications; which I wish may be continued whenever you are at leisure and liberty, for there is so little dependence on newspaper publications, (which take whatever complexion the editors please to give them) that persons at a distance and who have no other means of information, are oftentimes at a loss to form an opinion on the most important occurrences.

Mrs. Washington and Nelly Custis unite with me in cordial remembrance of Mrs. Wolcott and yourself; and with great truth, I remain, Dear Sir,

Your affectionate friend

GO. WASHINGTON.

Oliver Wolcott, Jr., Esq.

TO GENERAL WASHINGTON.

SIR

Philadelphia, May 18, 1797

I have had the pleasure to receive your favour of May 15, and while I rejoice that you enjoy that repose and tranquillity so richly earned by a life of services and benefits for mankind, the reflection, that he who so long directed public opinion, and whose counsel at this time would possess and deserve universal confidence, is a private citizen, excites mixed emotions which I am unable to describe.

In what concerns public duties at this interesting crisis, all are satisfied, who are friends to our country, that the principles of your administration must be supported. The President's speech to Congress, which I enclose, will prove his conviction how important this principle is esteemed, and the measures which he deems necessary to be pursued.

What censure can be too severe upon those who have invited the assaults of a foreign power, and who foster internal divisions! The situation of those who have any concern with public affairs is disagreeable; a consciousness of pure intentions is, indeed, almost the only reward now remaining.

Mrs Wolcott joins me in presenting to yourself, Mrs Washington, and Miss Custis, her cordial respects. For myself, duty and inclination concur in proffering expressions of the most lasting attachment.¹

FROM GENERAL WASHINGTON.

DEAR SIR

Mount Vernon, 29th May 1797

I have received your letter of the 18th instant, with its enclosures, and thank you for both. The President has, in my opinion, placed matters upon their true ground in his last speech to Congress. The crisis calls for an unequivocal expression of the public mind, and the speech will, mediately or immediately, bring this about.

Our own affairs, maugre the desolating scenes of Europe, might continue in the most happy, flourishing and prosperous train, if harmony of the union was not endangered by the internal disturbers of its peace.

With sincere and affectionate regards, I am always yours,

Oliver Wolcott, Jr., Esq^r.

GO: WASHINGTON

MRS. GOODRICH TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

MY DEAR SISTER

Litchfield, June 1797

I think now that I shall soon be quite well. I wish I could say the same with respect to my Father. He is indeed considerably better than he has been. His Physicians tell us not to be too confident of his recovery. They say, however, that he may regain a comfortable degree of health. I attend solely to him, prepare his food, administer his medicines, and do every thing for him. You will believe that I find this a pleasing employment, though I lament that there is any necessity for it.

I shall not fail to inform you by every mail of my father's situation. He desires me to present his kindest regards to you and my brother; be pleased to accept the same from Frederick and your affectionate friend and sister

Mrs. Wolcott.

TO HIS WIFE.

DEAR BETSEY

Gray's Gardens, Sept. 15, 1797.

I am well, though I find it a dull story to live alone, in a small room, in a Tavern, with a prospect of a crooked river, and occupied either with some dull business, or talking of the distresses of a great City. For the present, however, it will be my duty to remain here.

The Jacobinical affection in my bowels has been cured by small doses of rhubarb, and drinking camomile tea. I should have had the honour, if I had been in the City, of having been cured of the yellow fever, at an expense of 150 ounces of blood and a salivation. The deaths in the city have latterly diminished; whether the disorder is running out, I cannot say.

In the morning when I walk in these gardens, I fancy I feel much as Adam did in Eden before he lost a rib. The place is mighty pretty, and that is all. After a man has gone round the walks one way, if he pleases, he may go round again; or he may return back upon his track; or he may sit down; or go into the house, or go down upon the bridge and see a lazy fellow hold a line for hours in the River without taking one fish; but if he means to enjoy himself tolerably well, he will do as I do, either read or sit down to business. In the evening, the scene changes. Then we have Eves in plenty, of all nations, tongues, and colours—but do not be jealous; I have not seen one yet, whom I have thought pretty.

I often go to the Woodlands; once I dined in company with Mr and Mrs Liston, who enquired kindly after you. Kiss the Girls and believe me yours

OLIV: WOLCOTT, Jr.

Mrs. Wolcott.

FROM PRESIDENT ADAMS.

DEAR SIR

East Chester, 20 miles from New York, October 12, 1797

Last night I arrived at Col. Smith's, and my family will probably make this house their home till they can go to Philadelphia with safety. Your reasons against convening Congress at any other place than Philadelphia, have great weight; but must all be overruled if the plague continues in that city. I shall wait for time and your advice.

Mrs Wolcott was well at Hartford on Sunday. The child had an ill turn, but was better. It is a great pleasure to me to be again within a hundred miles of you, and I pray you to write me as often as possible. Your minutes of communications and recommendations to Congress at the opening of the session, I wish to have as soon as possible. With great respect I am, dear Sir, your most obedient servant

Oliver Wolcott, Jr., Esq.

FROM MR. GOODRICH.

DEAR SIR,

Hartford, Oct. 29, 1797.

Mrs. Wolcott will shortly give you all the anecdotes in the land of Connecticut, up to the time she left it; and since, nothing has happened worthy of your whim, considered as a man, or with your adjunct of an aristocratic man, the Secretary of the Treasury. My wife, good woman, sends forth many doleful complaints on account of my being about to leave her; and yet, as a Christian woman ought, she bestirs herself notably to get everything in order for our once more quitting our house. It is yet doubtful whether I shall set out in season to be present at the pronounciation of your speech. When a great man is overwhelmed with expressions of public applause, I suppose all in subordinate grades take a share. If the winds have blown from our hemisphere, take care you don't charge the speech with too much gas; always remember, nothing gives a sans-culotte more joy, than to take a sturdy aristocrat when vaunting.

From the accounts we have of our father, we hope he has been, some days past, less subject to nervous symptoms. I don't perceive that the approach of cold weather proves unfavourable to him. I shall put up the things Mrs. Wolcott directed, and have them sent by a vessel that goes from this place about the middle of next month. Mary Anne and all of us are anxious to hear of Mrs. Wolcott's safe arrival. Our love to her and the children. Affectionately yours,

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH.

FROM GENERAL WASHINGTON.

DEAR SIR

Mount Vernon, 17th Dec., 1797.

Your letter of the 24th ult. has been duly received, but one cause or another has prevented the acknowledgment until now, when I thank you for the President's speech which it enclosed, and your obliging offer to render me any services I might need in Philadelphia.

I cannot conclude without offering you my condolence, and I do it sincerely, on the death of your worthy and much respected father. As it was an event, however, which for some time has been expected, you could not have been unprepared for the stroke; and amidst the affliction, you have the consolation to know that he died "full of years and honours," and regretted by all who knew him. With best respects for Mrs. Wolcott, in which I am joined by Mrs. Washington and Nelly Custis, I am, my dear Sir, your sincere and affectionate friend,

GO: WASHINGTON.

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

TO GENERAL WASHINGTON.

SIR,

Philadelphia, Jan. 12, 1798.

The condolence which you are pleased to express, on account of the bereavement which I have suffered, has, I trust, made a proper impression on my mind; and I hope the consolations, which the occurrence admits, are also suitably appreciated. Considering the prospects of our country, it appears to me that death can have no terrors for those who have had the felicity to be the benefactors of their age. I have the honour to be, Sir, with perfect respect, Your obe^t serv^t

OLIV: WOLCOTT

FROM MR. CABOT.

MY DEAR SIR

Brookline, Jan. 19th, 1798.

It would not be easy to describe to you the pleasure it gave to Mrs. C. and me to see our son warm from your fireside. His unaffected relation of the manner in which we were recognized through him, seemed to place us at the corner of Fourth and Spruce streets, where we have passed our most agreeable hours. When may we hope for the gratification of meeting you and Mrs. Wolcott in this part of the country? I hardly know on what grounds my hopes have rested, but certainly I have persuaded myself that you made a half-promise of that sort. Mrs. Cabot says more affectionate things than I have leisure to repeat. It is sufficient that you and Mrs. Wolcott know how dear you are to us.

Yours, fideliter,

G.^t CABOT.Mr. Wolcott.

FROM THE SAME.

MY DEAR SIR

Brookline, March 26th 1798

Nothing could be more gratifying to Mrs Cabot and me, than the expressions of friendship from Mrs Wolcott and you, contained in your letter of the 17th. Be assured we receive them as testimonials of an esteem and affection which our hearts constantly covet, and which they liberally return.

I have written to you less frequently than might have been expected, because I have felt no disposition to bear any thing like an agency in political affairs, and because I thought it little less than criminal to occupy any part of the time of our public slaves. Indeed, such is my sympathy with many of our public men, that it has become extremely painful to think of their tasks.

I live perfectly recluse, scarcely going beyond the limits of my farm once in a month; I do not pretend, however, to be uninterested in what passes in the world; on the contrary, I partake in all the anxieties of those who foresee and tremble at the destiny of our country ; but while I am so selfish as to applaud myself for shunning all responsibility which might belong to official character, I have omitted no opportunity to inculcate just sentiments upon those who hear me prate, or read what I write ; for I have often been tempted to write, by the belief that public opinion depended much on the newspapers, and that I could say much that would be useful. It ought to be some compensation to our Executive Officers to know, that their administration is universally approved, and generally admired by the wise and the good.

Your sincere and affectionate friend,

G. CABOT

O. Wolcott, Esq.

FROM MR. AMES.

MY DEAR SIR

Dedham, 22^d April, 1798.

I am flattered, and I pray you to believe that I am thankful, for your repeated favours. I have not written till I am, I find, very much in your debt, for a reason which I also desire you to be persuaded is the only one — that I have not thought it right to force upon a busy man the correspondence of a recluse one. My sick chamber has enfeebled and impoverished the ideas, that my situation in the country might otherwise have obtruded. Do not, I pray you, think I flatter, or that I am too civil, when I assure you my clearest knowledge of public affairs is derived from your letters.

I saw Go. Cabot two days ago ; he talks of you with affection and respect, and is disposed to use his exertions in Boston to promote a right conduct. No man is good, who is not now firm. Passive virtues are little better than Treachery. Zeal is now better than logic.

I am in very poor health, but recruiting. I shall ride about, and mind business but little. Scribbling is not more of a labour than backgammon.

Yours truly

FISHER AMES.

Mr. Wolcott.

FROM MR. HOPKINSON.

DEAR SIR

New York, May 17, 1798

As I shall not take my departure from this place for an hour or two, I cannot employ a part of this time more to my own gratification than by devoting it to you. I write to you from a box in the Tontine, and the clatter of two or three hundred merchants and the bawlings of a vendue crier ringing in my ears. It is a mortifying fact, my dear sir, that the federal spirit of this city is not worth a farthing. It is entirely unlike that which animates us in Philadelphia, and although as a Philadelphian I am proud of our pre-eminence, as an American I am mortified and distressed to find the difference. The people here are driving at their private occupations, and seem plunged in the mire of commercial avarice. They attend to nothing else; they seem to consider themselves as having no kind of connection with the affairs of the nation, and no interest in it. If I were an absolute despot here, I would order the whole city to undergo the Turkish ceremony of the bastinado. I would rouse the lazy drones with a whip, or allure them into action by instituting public games and military exercises for brass farthings since money is their god. If I except a delightful and lengthy conversation I had with Col. Hamilton, I can assure you I have heard nothing like politics since I came here. This is a kind of intolerable political starvation to me. The tri-coloured cockade is by no means an unfrequent sight here, but I have not yet seen one of our own sort.

When I came to peruse the letters of introduction you were kind enough to favour me with, I found myself a good deal puzzled to decide what to do with them. On the one hand, I am unwilling to forego the pleasures and many advantages I should derive from your friends to whom you have written; and on the other hand, as I never expect to get such flattering and honourable testimonies again to my character, I don't quite like to part with them. A man once brought an action for slander. When he saw the declaration of his lawyer, in which he was stated to be a good, honest, and faithful citizen, free from all manner of crimes, stain, or reproach, &c., he put the declaration in his pocket as a valuable certificate of his good character and gave up his action. So keeping this story in view, I will not suffer my vanity to mistake your friendly politeness for my merit. Remember me very affectionately to your good wife, to my democratic friend, Mrs Goodrich, and her husband.

Yours

JOSEPH HOPKINSON

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

FROM MR. DAVIS.

DEAR SIR

Boston, July 16, 1798

Presuming that a perusal of the enclosed oration would be gratifying to you, I do not hesitate a moment to offer a copy for your acceptance. My friend, Mr. Quincy, who has much the right sort of ambition, will be much gratified if it meets your approbation. We have sustained a severe loss in the death of the excellent Dr. Belknap. As a scholar, a divine, a friend, and a gentleman, he was most distinguished. On my removal to this town, I became his parishioner ; and now, when the intimate connection I formed with him has failed, I sensibly feel how considerable a portion of my happiness was derived from it.

The correct and manly tone which the public mind has assumed, is formed on such a basis, that it promises to remain for some time unabated. It is said of Pericles that he frequently repeated to himself, "Remember, Pericles, that you command freemen — that you govern Grecians." A greater and better man than Pericles, seems to decide and act under the spirit of a similar reflection, and I feel a consoling confidence he will not be disappointed in the honourable opinion he has formed of his countrymen. Yours with sincere and respectful regard

JOHN DAVIS

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

FROM MR. GOODRICH.

MY DEAR SIR

Hartford, Aug. 12, 1798

On Friday morning Mrs Wolcott was as well as ordinarily she had been, since her arrival. Our friends consider her as amending. No other evil besets us but the indolence of the intense weather. In addition to that — of itself, enough to suspend all action — you have again the city's old enemy, the fever or plague, and if we may believe accounts, of the most malignant type. I hope you have left the city.

We have not made up our minds as to European news ; it looks as if soon we should have one of those ship loads of political information, that come out two or three times only in a year. Mind our own business, is our motto ; take care of our own Jacobins. Here the converts are nestling for office. Some of our friends suspect a concert to get as many as they can into the army. Be that as it may, every one of them ought to be rejected, and men only of fair property employed in the higher and most confidential grades. It is said men will enlist here, if good officers should be appointed ; the service depends on it. Mary Anne sends her love.

Yours affectionately,

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

TO PRESIDENT ADAMS.

SIR

Phila., Aug. 13, 1798

I was unfortunate in not having the honour of paying my respects to you on my return from Connecticut. I arrived at New York by water, the day you left the city. Mrs Wolcott has gained strength, but as she is not free from dubious symptoms, I feel extreme concern respecting her situation. Since my return, I have been engaged in a scene of various and pressing business ; that part which relates to my office, has been for the most part accomplished.

The sickness has alarmed the citizens very generally ; in a few days business will be at an end, and the melancholy scenes of 1793 and 1797, in all probability renewed. Preparations are making for removing the public offices to Trenton. It is by no means the least distressing idea which this sickness presents, that the measures for executing the acts of the last session will be considerably delayed and enfeebled.¹

“The pestilence which had for some years scourged the principal cities of the seaboard, again appeared, accompanied with its further afflictions of distresses among the poor. A letter from the President to Mr Wolcott, written in September, contains the honourable request that he would contribute on his behalf to their amelioration. ‘The distress of the poor at Philadelphia is so great, that I pray you to subscribe and pay for me, under the title of a friend, and to let nobody know but yourself from whom it comes, five hundred dollars.’ ”²

TO HIS WIFE.

DEAR BETSEY

Trenton, Sept. 18th 1798.

I received your Letter of September 9th, which afforded me much satisfaction, as I now consider you out of all danger from the attack which you had in New York. My fondest hopes, my ardent wishes, and constant prayers, are answered in the prospect that you will continue the partner of my joys, and the solace of my troubles in this incomprehensible pilgrimage of human life. You will, however, remain during the ensuing winter, in a state which will render it proper that your sole, or rather principal attention, should be directed to the confirmation of your health.

Oct. 2^d

I have before me your Letter of Sept. 24th, and rejoice to know that your restoration to health is progressive, and that cool weather is not disadvantageous.

I am to be beatified with the company of Judge and Lady C., for a few days. We shall be in high spirits, with a Lady in the House. For some reason, which I cannot comprehend, the young and pretty damsels of this Town will not come and see us ; we must therefore, instead of a handsomer — a better there cannot be — make Love to the old Lady.

Kiss the Girls and believe me assuredly yours

Mrs. Wolcott.

SIR

Quincy, April 3^d, 1799

I received yesterday your favour of the 25th of March, and thank you for the letter in it to Gen. Lincoln. I wish the expense of marching a force against the malcontents could be laid upon them alone. Our elections are supposed to have gone very well, much better than had been feared and expected. In a violent snow storm this is written by, Sir, your most humble

JOHN ADAMS

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

FROM MR. GOODRICH.

DEAR SIR

Hartford, April, 1799

I thank you for your letter. You will not let any untoward circumstance keep Mrs Wolcott and the children too late in Philadelphia; an easy journey here will do her good, and she will here be most comfortable through the summer. All our friends are well; the long winter has made us torpid; we shall after a while put on our sheep-skins and crawl about.

The President's absence excites no general attention; a few speak of it among themselves with regret. The internals of the Cabinet appear less generally known than I had foreboded. The disposition of the State is to cling to the public acts of the government. Freemen's meeting has passed with less excitement than ever known. A few Jacobins will steal into the House—mere kittens, however.

The trade on the River begins to look up; our vessels quite successful; great deal of ship-building going forward. The scarcity of forage is a serious calamity; we have no other. As yet the direct tax has caused less noise than the state dog-tax. The commissioners are viewing some parts of the State; they mean to execute the principles of equality.

A firm execution of the law towards the ringleaders, only, will satisfy public justice and sentiment. Government should not cringe. It has been regretted by every body the troops did not march earlier.

Write when you have leisure. Give my best love to Mrs Wolcott and the little girls. Mary Anne sends hers.

Yours affectionately,

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH

SIR

I take the liberty to enclose a copy of a Discourse delivered at the late National Fast, which you will be pleased to accept as a small testimonial of my personal respect and esteem for yourself, and of my best wishes for the success of the measures of the Government in which you hold so conspicuous and interesting a place.

Make my compliments acceptable to Mrs. Wolcott, and believe me to be with great and respectful regard, Sir,

MRS. GOODRICH TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

Hartford, 15th May, 1799.

I am more disappointed than I can express, my dear sister, to find that the probability is, that you will not come to Connecticut this summer. I yet hope that you will ; and that my brother, good man as he is, will give up his selfish project of stowing you into some farm-house near Philadelphia, that he may have the satisfaction of spending, perhaps, an hour or two with you, in every week. I know the whole world cannot supply to you the place of your husband, for which partiality I can forgive you, as I am at a loss whether I do not love him myself, better than I ought to ; but if you come here, it will make all your friends happy, and we will do all we can to make you so. You will at least enjoy a purer air ; and Brother Frederick, who sets his heart upon seeing you, will ride with you wherever you wish to go. And after all, you will be separated from your husband only a few weeks. I should not feel so anxious about the matter, if I was certain that you could obtain an equally healthy situation near Phil^l, and if there was a prospect of my spending the next winter with you. But since my good Man has tried the state of widowhood, he seems so enamoured of it, that there is not a word said of my ever accompanying him, in future, upon his Congressional tours. The next year you will be taken to the City of Washington, a distance so great that I do not like to think of it. And now I bid you adieu, with mine and Mr. Goodrich's best wishes and love to yourself, your good husband and the dear children.

FROM MR. CABOT.

MY DEAR SIR

Brookline, January 16, 1800

Mr Ames passed last evening with me. He is to pronounce the eulogy of Washington before our State Legislature, three weeks hence. I hope he will weave into it as much as possible of his own politics. They are such as Washington approved; and I hardly know what greater praise can be given him than a display of this fact.

Your view of Continental Europe is more unfavourable, and much more profound, than my imagination had formed. Doubtless the selfishness of the German Emperor is a bar to the exertions of the conquered States; a glorious opportunity has been lost to destroy the power of Jacobinism. But will not the adversity which closes the campaign operate to unite more closely and effectually the three great powers? I confess to you, nothing can exceed my chagrin at seeing a campaign which promising every thing to my hopes, produces so little. Still, however, it has produced something of value. It has proved to the terrified people of various countries, that their oppressors are not immortal, and that whoever opposes them with courage will defeat them. I do not yet despair of reaping, next year, the golden harvest I vainly expected at this time.

Heaven bless you and yours,

G. CABOT

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

FROM PRESIDENT ADAMS.

SIR

Philadelphia, May 17, 1800

I thank you for your report of the 16th of this month, and for your early attention to the important subject of the loan. I have subscribed, and send you with this, an authorization to borrow to the amount of the law ; but if the public exigencies can be satisfied with a part of it, your own public spirit of economy will induce you to confine yourself to such part.

The rate of interest is a subject of great anxiety to me. When I recollect that I borrowed for this country near a million sterling, at a rate of interest from four and a half to six per cent, or thereabout, more than fifteen years ago, when the nation had not two-thirds of its present population, when it had a very feeble government — no resources, no taxes — by barely pledging the faith of the people, which faith has been most punctually and religiously kept, I cannot but suspect that some advantage is taken of this government, by demanding exorbitant interest. As Great Britain, with her immense burdens, after so long and so wasting a war, is able to borrow at a moderate interest, I entertain a hope that we may at least abate somewhat of a former interest.

As I know your zeal for the interest of your country to be equal to my own, I have entire confidence in your exertions that we may take up as little as possible of the sum, and at as low an interest as can be obtained.

With great esteem I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

MY DEAR SIR

Boston, 30 May 1800

I shall embark from this place about the 10th June, and shall be very happy to bear any of your commands to the other side of the ocean. Under the existing circumstances, it would give me singular satisfaction to have one hour's conversation with you before my departure ; but that is impossible ; although not less so to communicate all I feel, and all I fear, as to our future situation. I hope, and in that hope I am sure I am joined by almost every honest and every sensible man in the community, that our very honourable and respectable friend, Col. Pickering, will not find it expedient to retire from the active scenes of society.

I pray you to present my affectionate regards to Mrs Wolcott, and to believe me sincerely your friend and servant,

CHRISTOPHER GORE

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

FROM MR. GOODRICH.

DEAR SIR,

Hartford, June 19, 1800.

As the summer work comes on, we Yankee farmers begin to let politics alone, which I suspect will be much in favour of the good old grace of Christian patience, and probably of no dis-service to the body politic while in its truant state.

The letters I enclosed came under cover to me. Mrs. Wolcott and the family left us on Tuesday for Middletown; yesterday, all were well; Mary Anne is better than while you were here. I have furbished up my office, and am furbishing up my brain for lucubration in the science of Law. If you at any time should be bereft of the great Law character of the country, or Government rather, I expect soon to have on hand some of Lord Coke's conundrums for your use; so after a while you may send forward your knotty points.

I see the New Jerusalem of our Empire has been consecrated, not, indeed, after the old New England mode, but with meats and viands. Pray, in what line has the enterprising Genius of the inhabitants of Georgetown been displayed, except in a commerce with Greenleaf's, Morris's, and Nicholson's Notes? The compliment may, however, be literally true, if they have only been enterprising in that way, for the gist of the thing is enterprise.

Was it not going a little too far, to pray that the Government may at all events abide forever and forever at Washington? Who knows what may happen in the mean time? According to all calculations of the mundarians, Tristram Dalton and all the rest of the good folks, on the Potomac and south of it, must be gone far away before the end of the period. It seems to me, a thousand years would have satisfied on that point. But perhaps he who begot the Government, nursed it up, keeps it from being eat up, either by Frenchmen or Englishmen, Federalists or Jacobins; who is the Opossum in which it sleeps by day and night, knows, and can and ought to say, where it shall live evermore. I consider it as now fixed, till the millenium at least, for the time in which Man and Devil are to rule, by the irreversible laws of diplomacy; and no little imp or greenhorn, come from Mother's womb since 1776, is to say anything about it. The fiat has been pronounced in the temple of the Laws by the Founder of the Empire himself; and let no one kick hereafter against the pricks.

The Frenchmen keep up the game of catching our vessels in the West Indies.

I am your affectionate friend,

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH.

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

TO HIS WIFE.

MY DEAR BETSEY

Washington, July 17, 1800.

In my last I mentioned my intention of visiting Alexandria and Mount Vernon, which I have since done. Alexandria is a beautiful place. It is situated on a plain, covered on the West by rising grounds, from which the prospects are delightful. The town contains about six thousand people ; it is well built, and the streets are well paved. This place would have been established as the Seat of Government, if General Washington had not been confined to a choice on the East side of the Potomac. I dined on Saturday with Dr. Craik, who is one of the antient and best sort of Gentlemen, of mild and amiable manners ; in short, such a man as the friend of General Washington ought to be.

The lands on the road below Alexandria to Mount Vernon are, in general, stiff, dry, and unproductive. You ride three miles through forests on the Mount Vernon Estate, before the Mansion appears, which is still more venerable than my imagination had painted it. In the buildings, walks, and gardens, and in every disposition for the accommodation of a numerous household, traces of the character of the incomparable Washington may be discerned ;—here, elegance is combined with utility ; there, magnificence is disencumbered of ostentation.

Mrs. Washington received me with great cordiality, and inquired after you and the Children, with lively affection. She appeared to be grieved that you were not of the party. Her mind is generally serene ; but the decay of strength, the increasing marks of age, and occasional suffusion of the countenance, plainly show, that the zest of life has departed. Mrs Peter and Mrs Lewis with their husbands and children, Miss Dandridge and a Miss Henley (relations of Mrs Washington) were at Mount Vernon. Mrs Peter has two daughters and a son, and Mrs Lewis a daughter, all fine children. The ladies enquired after you ; Nelly, though a matron, appears friendly, amiable, and gay as formerly. Her attachments to her old acquaintance remain undiminished, and she mentioned her desire to renew a correspondence with you. If you can without too much fatigue, I wish you to write to her and Mrs. Washington.

If Mount Vernon could remain as at present ; if the Trees, which shade the Tomb at the foot of the Lawn, could be preserved in immortal verdure, if the unfinished improvements could be protected from further decay, no other monument, than what now exists, ought to be desired by either friendship or patriotism. The works which have been completed, indicate the mind of their late Master, while those of which the designs only remain, prove that death alone arrested a persevering progress towards perfection.

I rejoice to hear of your health, and that of our Children ; you are much in my thoughts. I am more and more satisfied that I must turn my attention to some private business. The post in which I am placed will, I am certain, be soon untenable.

Kiss the Babes and believe me ever yours

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

DEAR SIR

Washington, July 20, 1800.

I received your favour of June 19th in due season, and have been half vexed that you should be so contented and good-humored ; why can you not appear to be in the dumps ? To write such a Letter to a man at the Seat of Government, is almost as uncivil as the conversation of the Fox, to the Goat in the well. I shall, however, have my revenge next Winter, when I shall be comfortably lodged within half a mile of my Office, while the Legislators of the Capitoline Mount will be surrounded with mud to an immeasurable distance.

The Law Character you mention has gone to the Capes of Virginia ; on his voyage, he will have an opportunity of becoming acquainted with Maritime Law, as practised by the sages who navigate Chesapeake Bay. He will be so well qualified for solving doubts, that we shall not probably stand in need of another Councillor.

If you let Mary Ann read this Letter, tell her not to laugh at it ; whatever she may think, it is a sober Letter. Give my love to all friends, and believe me

Assuredly yours

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

Mr. Goodrich.

FROM MR. CABOT.

MY DEAR SIR

Brookline, July 20, 1800

Mr Ames put into my hands the letter you wrote from Hartford, and I have since received your favour of the 18th June, from Philadelphia. Let me repeat to you now the wish which is daily expressed by your friends here, that you will not quit the treasury while a just sense of character will permit you to remain. Doubtless a man may act independently in office as well as out, and he can only be made responsible for his own individual opinions and those acts which he approves. If you were out of office you would not wholly avoid the anxiety which you now feel for the national welfare and the dignity of the government ; and although you would escape some mortifications, I doubt, on the whole, whether you would then allow them as much weight as you do now. It is, and must be, the fate of every man of sensibility, to suffer in the public service. If the cause of the present chagrin were removed, I apprehend no less would proceed from other sources inherent in our system. I lament that for the sake of the public, and for your own sake, you were not born under Saturn, instead of Mercury, and that your nativity was not in Germany, where a good stock of phlegm would have been nourished in your constitution. But these things cannot be altered, and it only remains to accommodate to them.

With unfeigned esteem and respect I remain your faithful friend,

G. CABOT

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

FROM MR. GOODRICH.

MY DEAR SIR

Philadelphia, July 28, 1800

I left Mrs Wolcott and family yesterday, well, and conveniently situated. Mary Anne is with them. I know what vexations you will experience while in your present place; you can't hold it with any satisfaction, and no other man could on the terms you must, without at least being entangled in some ugly snare. I think you must get ready to quit. Let who will be President, the pride of American character and office for a while must be faded; there is neither object nor reward for your anxieties and exertions. Will it not be best to arrange the business of the Department, and quit a short time after the meeting of Congress? You will ask what you shall do. Get a small farm in this State, and look about you. I will talk with some friends who love and feel for you, and write more. Let me hear from you.

Affectionately yours,

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

FROM THE SAME.

DEAR SIR

Hartford, Aug. 26, 1800.

I take a new sheet of paper because I am going to write about yourself and myself, and do not love to mix up these more interesting topics with the disgusting ones of politics. As what concerns me can be shortly despatched, I first speak to that point, and announce that the paragraph you will see in our papers of my declining a re-election to the great sanhedrim of the nation, is genuine. I perceive it is not a very popular act, but as it is perfectly justifiable in respect to the public, and absolutely necessary to myself, I am entirely at my ease about it. Personally, I have no other regrets than what I experience in setting out anew in my profession; as, however, I shall be attentive to it, I hope to gain from it a decent subsistence; that is about all it will give.

I think, with you, you must quit your office. That point once settled, you have only to consult your convenience and character as to time and manner. When you quit, you will wish to leave the business of your department well arranged, and the evidence to the public of its being so. I trust the honest part of the community are well satisfied as to the last particular. You can best judge how far a formal investigation is necessary, on account of the attacks in the papers. A call for an enquiry may give them an importance they do not merit, or would not otherwise receive. Perhaps it may be well to give a pretty ample detail of the finances in your report at the opening of the session; viewing it as a public record of the state of things when you quit. On such an occasion it may be allowable to amplify.

In your letter you ask me to make enquiries for a place near Hartford. Do you mean bordering on the town, or in some of the neighbouring towns? In either case pleasant situations of good land may be found, but it will be difficult to get a good house. There is a little estate next south of Samuel Wolcott's, of 22 acres of most excellent land, running west to the meadow; a pretty decent house, wants repairs, price £750; repairs as to fences, &c., $400. Col. Wadsworth commends it much.¹ If you can, I think you had better get a place on this side the River; let me know your wishes. As to business, that must be found. Some of our friends here ask, if Tracy becomes Governor of St. Clair's Territory, whether, till something better offers, you will go into the Senate. I am confident business will offer. If you possibly can, come here this fall. Mary Anne is well.

Affectionately yours,

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

TO MR. HAMILTON.

DEAR SIR

Washington, Sept. 3^d 1800

I am favoured with your letters of the 3^d and 19th ult. You will have thought it strange that the first has not been acknowledged; it has been out of my power. The effects of a new climate, want of exercise, and too much application to official business, produced a serious indisposition, which disabled me from writing for a fortnight. I am recovering, though I remain weak.

I had commenced the statement which I had promised, and soon found myself embarrassed with the reflection which has occurred to you. The situation in which we are both placed, is delicate and somewhat perplexing. Whatever you may say or write, will by a class of people be attributed to personal resentment; while it will be said that the President has not injured me — that he has borne with my open disapprobation of his measures, and that I ought not to oppose his re-election by disclosing what some will term personal or official secrets.

Having reflected on the dilemma, I have concluded that as it respects myself, I was justifiable in continuing in office during the present year, on the ground of the sudden innovations in the administration, which afforded me no opportunity for reflection before the termination of the last session of Congress; that the unsettled state of two of the Departments, the removal of the offices to this place, the absence of the President from the seat of government, and the duty of preserving order in a branch of business which had been committed to my care, were circumstances which should justly dissuade me from an abrupt resignation, while they left me free to exercise my opinion, and my rights as an individual, upon any question relative to the public policy and interest. To secure myself from the imputation of being concerned in a secret cabal, I have, however, thought it my duty to express my opinions and intentions frankly to my colleagues, in the same manner as I have done to my private correspondents. I am apprized that I shall by some be considered as factious; but the accusation is less offensive than the suspicion of cunning, or subserviency to measures which I seriously disapprove, and to which I should otherwise be opposed.¹

FROM CHIEF-JUSTICE ELLSWORTH.

DEAR SIR

Havre, October 16, 1800

You will see our proceedings and their result. Be assured more could not be done without too great a sacrifice; and as the reign of Jacobinism is over in France, and appearances are strong in favor of a general peace, I hope you will think it was better to sign a convention than to do nothing. — My pains are constant, and at times excruciating; they do not permit me to embark for America at this late season of the year, nor if there, would they permit me to discharge my official duties. I have therefore sent my resignation of the office of Chief Justice, and shall, after spending a few weeks in England, retire for winter-quarters to the south of France.

I pray Mrs Wolcott to accept of my best respects, and shall ever remain, Dear Sir,

Your affectionate friend,

OLIV. ELLSWORTH

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

P. S. You certainly did right not to resign, and you must not think of resignation, let what changes may take place — at least till I see you. Tho' our country pays badly, it is the only one in the world worth working for. The happiness it enjoys, and which it may increase, is so much superior to what the nations of Europe do, or ever can, enjoy, that no one who is able to preserve and increase that happiness, ought to quit her service while he can remain in it with bread and honour. Of the first, a little suffices you, and of the latter it is not in the power of malevolence or rapine to deprive you. They cannot do without you, and dare not put you out. Remember, my dear friend, my charge — Keep on till I see you.

O. E.

TO PRESIDENT ADAMS.

SIR

Treasury Department, Washington, Nov. 8, 1800.

I have, after due reflection, considered it a duty which I owe to myself and family, to retire from the Office of Secretary of the Treasury, and accordingly I take the liberty to request that the President would be pleased to accept my resignation, to take effect, if agreeable to him, only at the close of the present year.

In thus suggesting my wishes, I am influenced by a desire of affording the President suitable time to designate my successor, and also of reserving to myself an opportunity to transfer the business of the Department without injury to the public service.

I have the honour to be with perfect respect, Sir,

Your obed^t serv^t

OLIVER WOLCOTT.

The President of the United States.

FROM PRESIDENT ADAMS.

DEAR SIR

Washington, Nov. 10, 1800.

I have received your Letter of the 8th of this month, and am sorry to find that you judge it necessary to retire from office. Although I shall part with your services as Secretary of the Treasury with reluctance and regret, I am nevertheless sensible that you are the best and only judge of the expediency of your resignation.

If you persist in your resolution, your own time shall be mine. I should wish to know whether, by the close of the present year, you mean the last of December or the fourth of March. If the first, it is so near at hand that no time is to be lost in considering of a successor. I am, Sir, with great esteem, your most obedient and humble servant,

JOHN ADAMS.

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.Secretary of the Treasury.

TO PRESIDENT ADAMS.

SIR

Washington, Nov. 11, 1800.

I have the honour to acknowledge with thanks the President's obliging Letter of yesterday. The time contemplated by myself for retiring from office, is the last day of December next. It will, however, be necessary for me to remain here several weeks after my resignation takes place, whenever that event may happen, for the purpose of completing the business which will have been by me previously commenced. Notwithstanding my resignation will take place, agreeably to the President's permission, on the last day of December, any services which I can afterwards render while here, will be at the disposal of my successor or the Government.

I have the honour to be with great respect, Sir,

Your obed^t serv^t

OLIVER WOLCOTT.

The President of the United States.

TO MR. CABOT.

DEAR SIR

Washington, Nov. 16th 1800

I received your favour of Oct. 5th, a few days since, after my return from a visit to Connecticut. After due reflection, I have considered it to be my duty to retire from office. I have accordingly written a respectful letter to the President, offering my resignation at the close of the ensuing month, to which I have received an obliging answer. I reflect with satisfaction that the business of the Treasury Department has not suffered in my hands; that the revenue of the present greatly exceeds that of any former year, and that loans can be obtained if necessary. It would be affectation to pretend that my resignation has not been attended with a conflict of emotions. I can, however, declare that none of them have been of a nature to produce self-crimination, and I presume to hope that my future conduct will evince a zealous attachment to the interests of my country and its government, and sincere gratitude to those who have honoured me with their confidence, friendship, and support.¹

TO THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR,

Treasury Department, Washington, Nov. 22, 1800.

I deem it proper through you, to inform the House of Representatives, that I have obtained the permission of the President of the United States, to resign the office of Secretary of the Treasury, at the close of the present year.

I indulge a hope, that I may without presumption declare, that the different offices with which I have been entrusted since the establishment of this Department, have been executed according to my best skill and judgment ; with a conscientious regard to the rights of the public, and of individuals, and under an impressive sense of responsibility to the government. In conformity with these professions, I now fully submit the whole of my conduct to any investigation which the House of Representatives may be pleased to institute.

I cannot omit this only opportunity which may ever be afforded, of expressing the sincere sentiments of gratitude which I now feel, and shall ever cultivate, for the many proofs of confidence and indulgence, which I have experienced in the course of my official communications with the Legislature. At the same time, I request that if the liberty I have now taken, to invite their attention to a matter of personal concern, should be deemed in any degree unsuitable, the error may be attributed to a just and reasonable desire that my conduct and character may, on proper evidence, appear to have deserved their approbation.

I have the honour to be with perfect esteem and deference, Sir,

Your most obed^t serv^t

OLIVER WOLCOTT

The Hon^{ble} Theodore Sedgwick, Esq. Speaker, etc.

This letter was referred to a committee of seven, who, on the 28th of January following, presented a full report, of which we give only the concluding sentence. Coming as it did unanimously from an able committee, whose members belonged to different political parties, it was an honorable and gratifying testimonial of the merits of the Secretary's administration and services.

“ On the whole, after such examination as they have been enabled to make, the Committee beg leave to express their opinion, that the business of the Treasury Department has been conducted with regularity, fidelity, and a regard to economy ; that the disbursements of money have been always made pursuant to law ; that every attention, consistent with the nature of the business, has been bestowed in removing delinquents from office, in compelling them to account, in securing moneys due from them, and in preventing an improper and unreasonable accumulation in the hands of public agents ; that the loans effected on account of government, have been procured on the most advantageous terms for the public ; that the most eligible modes of remittance to Europe have been devised ; and generally, that the financial concerns of the country have been left by the late Secretary in a state of good order and prosperity."

FROM MR. CABOT.

MY DEAR FRIEND

Brookline, Nov. 27, 1800

Although I had long contemplated the possible event of your retirement from office, yet my mind was not quite prepared for it, when your letter of the 16th arrived I have revolved it the greatest part of the last night, which I found impossible to pass in sleep ; and I still can view the subject only as grief, or indignation, presents it. A government which cannot tolerate the virtues which have been exhibited in ours, cannot long enjoy the confidence of the wise and good. It cannot long be preserved pure, and will soon be thought not worth preserving. You must indulge my wishes to know your future destiny, so far at least as it is foreseen by yourself. I am anxious to learn what course you have prescribed yourself, that I may direct the prayers of my heart in conformity.

With the highest esteem and purest regard, I remain ever yours

GEORGE CABOT

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

FROM MR. AMES.

MY DEAR SIR

Dedham, Dec. 15, 1800

It grieves every thoughtful friend of the country, that you should be placed in a situation which you think you ought to renounce. If the fault was generally known to lie where I suppose it does lie, it would greatly increase the displeasure that is already felt. Who will succeed you, or how our affairs are to proceed in future, when a man born in office with the government, so attached to it, and so familiarly acquainted with it, as you are, receives from the head of the government such uncomfortable and discouraging treatment, though not personally affrontive, I know not. The very Jacobins abuse you with measured moderation, and allow me to say, (it really is my opinion, and I would not insult you with flattery), that those whose good opinion you would value were progressively raising their esteem and respect for your character. The success of governments depends on the selection of the men who administer them. It seems as if the ruling system would rob the country of all chance, by excluding the only classes proper to make the selection from. I am, dear Sir, with great esteem,

Yours truly,

FISHER AMES

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

FROM MR. PICKERING.

DEAR SIR

Philadelphia, Jan. 3, 1801

I am truly sorry for the sake of our country, that you cannot continue at the head of the Treasury. But as to yourself and family, I am sure you will be more happy, and quite as rich, on your little farm, as if you continued a public servant during life. Should you be willing, however, to accept of any public employment in the gift of Connecticut, it will certainly be conferred. But in whatever way you shall be occupied, my best good wishes will attend you and yours. Next week I expect to proceed for Boston and Salem, and if I pass through Hartford, will do myself the pleasure to call on Mrs. Wolcott.

With perfect sincerity I am your friend and servant

TIMOTHY PICKERING

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

We have hardly hinted at the reasons which impelled Mr. Wolcott to resign his responsible post, and which may be gathered in full from his published correspondence. His final judgment, which was seldom erroneous, was expressed decisively in a letter of this date to his wife:—

I was never better pleased with any act of my life, than with my resignation at the time and in the manner I did. It appears to have been the only way I could have taken to avoid dishonour. I will try to be contented hereafter, and doubt not it will be in my power.

Mr. Wolcott had now, as he supposed, taken a final leave of public life. The necessities of his family required that he should at once enter upon some active employment for their maintenance, — his whole property at this time consisting of a small farm in Connecticut, and a few hundred dollars in cash. He had the satisfaction of going out of office poorer, after a service of eleven years, than when at the first establishment of the government he entered upon the auditorship. His retirement drew from his political friends at the seat of government many expressions of personal regard, among which was a public dinner from Members of Congress.

FROM SENATOR ROSS.

DEAR SIR,

City of Washington, 24 Jan., 1801.

Your determination to retire from the station which you have so long and so ably held, could not but sensibly affect those who had been witnesses of your unremitting exertions to advance the public good.

Fully persuaded that those exertions have not been less useful to your country than honourable to yourself, your numerous friends in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States cannot without violating their feelings, permit you to depart from the seat of government unaccompanied with the strongest assurances of their conviction of the worth and purity of your public life.

As a parting testimonial of their high respect for your person and character they have ordered a public dinner to be prepared for you at Still's hotel on Wednesday next; and on their behalf I am directed to request that you would accept and partake of this entertainment, where we can all have an opportunity of bidding you a friendly and affectionate farewell.

With most sincere respect I have the honour to remain, Dear Sir, your most obedient servant,

JAMES ROSS.

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

TO SENATOR ROSS.

DEAR SIR

City of Washington, Jan. 26, 1801.

I have been honoured with your favour of the 24th instant, and beg leave to express to you, Sir, and the other Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives therein referred to, my most respectful and grateful acknowledgments for the distinguished manner in which they have been pleased to manifest their approbation of my public services.

I shall meet the Gentlemen at the time and place proposed in their invitation, with pleasure unalloyed by any other reflection, than that a few days must separate me from the society of the guardians of the public welfare, whose talents, services, and virtues have been the constant objects of my esteem and veneration.

I request you, Sir, personally, to accept assurances of the inviolable attachment and respect with which I remain, Dear Sir, your obed^t serv^t:

The Hon^{ble} James Ross, Esq.

TO HIS WIFE.

MY DEAR BETSEY

Washington, Jan. 31, 1801.

The Report of the Committee on my letter was unanimously agreed to, and is entirely satisfactory. I have been treated with attention by the Citizens, and Members of Congress. God be praised, that my sincere exertions for the public good have not, as has sometimes happened to others, been ungratefully requited.

Yours with affection

FROM SENATOR HILLHOUSE.

MY DEAR FRIEND

Washington, Feb'y 18, 1801

I have the pleasure to announce to you the agreeable intelligence of your being nominated by the President of the United States, to be a Circuit Judge under the new Act. The nomination has been brought about in a manner perfectly delicate as relates to yourself, and highly honourable as regards the President. I will write you confidentially and more particularly by to-morrow's mail. Our friend, Elizur Goodrich, is nominated Collector for the port of New Haven.

With my kind regards to Mrs Wolcott, I am, Dear Sir, in sincerity and affection your friend

JAMES HILLHOUSE

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

FROM CHIEF-JUSTICE MARSHALL.

DEAR SIR

Washington, Feb. 24, 1801

It is with peculiar pleasure I transmit to you the commission which accompanies this letter. Permit me to express my sincere wish that it may be acceptable to you. At the same time I will allow myself to hope that this high and public evidence given by the President of his respect for your services and character, will efface every unpleasant sensation respecting the past, and smooth the way to a perfect reconciliation.

I am, Dear Sir, with much esteem your obed't

J MARSHALL

FROM MR. GOODRICH.

MY DEAR SIR,

Washington, Feb. 24, 1801.

Your appointment to the office of Judge passed the Senate unanimously. You may be assured your friends have manifested peculiar felicitations in a circumstance which they believed would be both grateful and advantageous to you. They have not been inattentive to the embarrassments you may at first experience, for want of technical knowledge of practice. All, however, are of opinion that these embarrassments will soon be overcome; and then, they expect to see in you the American Mansfield—a kind of character, if it exist at all in our country, we certainly are not overstocked with. I think you ought not to hesitate as to an acceptance, and you know the value of my sentiments on cases much more casuistical than this.

Mrs. Lewis is standing just behind me, at my elbow; and all males however wise, and all females however lovely, at a distance, will agree that the matter in hand is of all others most pressing; and Mrs. W. must be content with my love en passant. I am your affectionate friend

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH.

TO CHIEF-JUSTICE MARSHALL.

SIR

Middletown, March 2^d 1801

I have received your favour of the 24th of February, and cordially thank you for the obliging expressions of your friendship. The appointment with which I have been honoured was unexpected; and I learn with pleasure that it was unsolicited by my friends.

Being sensible that I owe this distinguished proof of confidence to the favour of the President, duty and inclination naturally inspire sentiments of gratitude and good will; and I assure you that I yield to their influence, not only without reluctance or reserve, but with the highest satisfaction.

It is impossible that I should not feel the greatest diffidence of my qualifications for the appointment, yet so far as diligence and fidelity can compensate for the deficiencies of which I am conscious, I may hope to render my services acceptable.¹

TO SENATOR HILLHOUSE.

DEAR SIR

Middletown, March 18, 1801.

I have not been able before now, since your return to Connecticut, to acknowledge your kind favours of Feb. 7, 18 and 19, from Washington. The part you have acted has been that of a sincere and intelligent friend; and the opinions which you, and the other gentlemen expressed, on the subject of the late appointments with which I have been honoured were sufficiently favourable. I feel the utmost diffidence of my qualifications, but under the influence of the most grateful sentiments, I shall certainly endeavour, by all the means in my power, to merit their confidence and approbation.²

TO EX-PRESIDENT ADAMS.

SIR,

Middletown, March 28th, 1801.

I embrace the earliest opportunity which I have been able to improve, since your arrival at Quincy, to express my most sincere acknowledgments for the distinguished proof which I have received of your confidence, in being appointed a Judge of the Second Circuit of the United States.

My friends have communicated to me the circumstances which attended this appointment; by which I learn with the highest satisfaction, that I owe the honourable station in which I have been placed purely to your favourable opinion, and in no degree to their solicitation. Believing that gratitude to benefactors is among the most amiable, and ought to be among the most indissoluble of social obligations, I shall, without reserve, cherish the emotions which are inspired by a sense of duty and honour on this occasion.

Mrs. Wolcott joins me in expressing to yourself and Mrs. Adams our common sentiments of respectful attachment. I have the honour to be with perfect deference, Sir, your most obed^t and oblig'd serv^t

OLIVER WOLCOTT

Hon. John Adams, Esq.

FROM MR. ADAMS.

SIR

Stoney Field, April 6, 1801.

I have received your favour of the 28th of March, and read it with much pleasure. The information you have received from your Friends concerning the Circumstances of your nomination to be a Judge of the Second Circuit of the United States is very correct. I have never allowed myself to speak much of the Gratitude due from the public to Individuals for past services. But I have always wished that more should be said of Justice. Justice is due from the Public to itself, and Justice is also due to Individuals. When the Public discards or neglects Talents and Integrity, united with meritorious past Services, it commits Iniquity against itself by depriving itself of the benefit of future Services, and it does wrong to the Individual by depriving him of the reward which long and faithful Services have merited. Twenty years of able and faithful service on the part of Mr. Wolcott, remunerated only by a simple subsistence, it appeared to me, constituted a Claim upon the Public which ought to be attended to.

As it was of importance that no Appointment should be made that would be refused, I took measures to ascertain from your friends the probability of your Acceptance, and then made the nomination — happy to have so fair an opportunity to place you beyond the reach of Will and Pleasure.

I wish you much pleasure and more honour, in your Law Studies and Pursuits, and doubt not you will contribute your full share to make Justice run down our Streets as a Stream.

My Family joins in friendly regards to you and yours. With much esteem, I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient and humble servt!

JOHN ADAMS.

The Hon. Oliver Wolcott, Judge, etc.

FROM MR. AMES.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Dedham, April 4, 1803.

It is not often the case, that even very good performances are the better for being long. Yet all our friends here concur with me in saying, that your letter of 45 pages would not have been half so excellent, if it had been only half as long. A view of our politics, so luminous and profound as you have taken, is a drama livelier than the life. We understand better, as you describe, than when, without that aid, we are lookers on, and observe for ourselves; so that your exhibition seems real, and the actual scenes of politics make impression only as if they were theatrical. A few select friends are in turn reading and pondering on your instructive letter. It is to be returned to me for safe keeping as a treasure.

For myself, I look neither far round nor far forward. A little business at the bar, more on my farm, some pleasure sought in books, more with friends, and my affections, plans, and hopes chiefly centered in my family, afford a substitute for the rewards, and a refuge from the terrors and vexations of politics.

I wish you success as a merchant, because competence at least is essential to liberty. Great wealth indeed is slavery; the over-rich pilgrim must travel through life with a pack at his back. With your habits and qualifications for business, I anticipate a good event. I pray you not to permit your counting house to exclude me wholly from your remembrance and regard — as I shall not cease to value and reciprocate them.

Mrs. Ames desires to join with me in offering to you and Mrs. Wolcott her best wishes for your happiness and that of your family. I am, dear sir, with unfeigned attachment

Yours truly

FROM MR. WEBSTER.

DEAR SIR

New Haven, April 13, 1803.

I perceive by the papers that you are establishing business in New York, under very favourable auspices, and have an appointment that will secure to your family permanent subsistence. I rejoice at these events; as the most meritorious services in public life, and such I consider yours to have been, cannot secure more than a temporary subsistence, even with all the toil, and exposure to calumny, attending such services.

Accept my best wishes for your prosperity, and believe me yours affectionately

N. WEBSTER, JR.

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

TO HIS DAUGHTERS.

MY DEAR DAUGHTERS

New York, July 2nd, 1804.

I intended to have wrote you a Letter before now, but have been prevented by urgent business. You will remember, I hope, that the present is the most important period of your lives. If you do not improve the few years which are to come next, in case your health is spared, you will never be accomplished in those branches of knowledge, which can alone render you amiable, respected, and beloved in this world, and happy in the next.

Though I do not wish to divert your minds wholly from the amusements suitable for your age, yet you are now old enough to consider, that this is not a world for dissipation and mere amusement. It is now time to study and to think, and also to begin to be useful. You ought to, and I hope do, reflect that your Dear Mamma is in a state of feeble health, and that I am obliged to be absent, to procure the means of supporting you and your Brothers, and that you ought to do all in your power to lessen her cares, and also to set a good example to your young Brothers.

You must write to me every Week, and inform me how the boys behave, and whether you like the Country better than New York.

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

Miss Laura Wolcott, and Miss Elizabeth S. Wolcott, Litchfield.

TO HIS WIFE.

MY DEAR WIFE

New York, July 11, 1804.

I had prepared to set out to see you, to-morrow morning, but an affecting event has just occurred, which renders it proper for me to postpone my journey a few days. This morning my friend Hamilton was wounded, and as is supposed mortally, in a duel with Col. Burr — the cause, the old disagreement about Politicks.

I have just returned from Mr. W^m Bayard's, where Hamilton is. I did not see him; he suffers great pain, which he endures like a Hero. Mrs. Hamilton is with him, but she is ignorant of the cause of his Illness, which she supposes to be spasms; no one dare tell her the truth — it is feared she would become frantic.

Gen. Hamilton has left his opinion, in writing, against Duelling, which he condemns as much as any man living. He determined not to return the fire of his adversary; and reasoned himself into a belief, that though the custom was in the highest degree criminal, yet there were peculiar reasons which rendered it proper for him, to expose himself to Col. Burr in particular. This instance of the derangement of intellect of a great mind, on a single point, has often been noticed as one of the most common yet unaccountable frailties of human nature.

While there is life there is Hope, but that is all which can be said. Thus has perished one of the greatest men of this or any age.

I am as well as could be expected, considering how my mind is agitated by this event; and I will come to you as soon as the issue is decided. Kiss the Children, and believe me affectionately yours.

OLIV: WOLCOTT

P. S. Hamilton spent the afternoon and evening of Monday with our friends at my House, in company with M: Hopkinson of Phil^a. He was uncommonly cheerful and gay; the duel had been determined on for ten days. Monday was first proposed; it was then postponed till Tuesday, and took effect this morning. Judge Pendleton was his Second.

TO THE SAME.

MY DEAR WIFE

New York, July 13, 1804.

Yesterday Gen! Hamilton expired in the midst of his family, who are agonized beyond description. No person who witnessed their distress, will ever be induced to fight a duel, unless he is a person wholly insensible to every sentiment of humanity.

Nothing can present a more humiliating idea of the imperfection of human nature, than the scene we have witnessed. A man of the first endowments of mind, the most strict propriety, the greatest sincerity, and the most tender attachments, has for a considerable time been deliberately settling his affairs, in contemplation of the event which has happened, as one highly probable. He left his family in perfect health, as if proceeding on ordinary business, and with the same deliberation has received a mortal wound; thus proving his respect for justice in comparatively small matters, and at the same time disregarding its obligations on points of the first importance. This inconsistency has, moreover, happened, in compliance with a custom which he deemed wholly criminal and indefensible, by which he had lost a darling Son in the prime of Life, and with which he had resolved never to comply, except in respect to the disposal of his own Existence. The defense of all this Conduct is, that there was a Chance for an escape, and that it would be wrong to torture his family with unnecessary Anxiety. This excuse is weak and unsatisfactory; and it proves that, on certain points, the most enlightened men are governed by the most unsound reasons.

To-morrow the funeral will be attended, and I have supposed that you would think it my duty to be present. I feel the most sincere regret at the delay, and more so, as I am concerned to hear that you are unwell. I will come, the next Stage, at all Events.

Give my Love to Mary, the Children, and my Brother's family, and be assured of the attachment of yours

Mrs Wolcott.

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

TO MR. WILLING.

MY DEAR SIR

New York, July 16, 1804.

The afflicting intelligence, that our revered and beloved Hamilton is no more, has already reached your ears. I will not attempt to describe my feelings; and to you, who have had ample opportunities of estimating his worth, it is unnecessary to describe his character. I address you at the request of a number of Gentlemen, who are desirous of testifying their gratitude for those services which, more than those of any other man, have contributed to the prosperity of our Country. . . .

I communicate the design to you, with the most perfect conviction of your cordial co-operation. I have the honour to be, with perfect Respect, Dear Sir, your obe^t serv^t

Thomas Willing, Esq., Phila.

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

The great statesman who passed from the stage of human affairs in this tragic manner, in view of his close relation to the subject of the sketch before us, is entitled here to a commemorative line. Of the deep and bitter lamentations which were called forth by his untimely death, — “more deep, more bitter, because unavailing,” — none can be more suitably inserted here than that of the brilliant Massachusetts orator and patriot, whose classic eloquence is one of the traditions of Congress, and whose relations to both Hamilton and Wolcott were those of unreserved intimacy. We can give but brief, detached sentences from his glowing eulogium.

“In every place he made it apparent that no other man could have filled it so well; and in times of critical importance, in which alone he desired employment, his services were justly deemed absolutely indispensable. As Secretary of the Treasury, his was the powerful spirit that presided over the chaos : —

“ ‘ Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood ruled.’

“ It is not as Apollo, enchanting the shepherds with his lyre, that we deplore him ; it is as Hercules treacherously slain in the midst of his unfinished labors, leaving the world overrun with monsters.

“ While the power of his friends over him seemed to have no limits, and really had none in respect to those things which were of a nature to be yielded, no man — not the Roman Cato himself — was more inflexible on every point that touched, or only seemed to touch, integrity and honor. With him it was not enough to be unsuspected ; his bosom would have glowed like a furnace, at its own whispers of reproach.

“ The tears that flow on this fond recital will never dry up. My heart, penetrated with the remembrance of the man, grows liquid as I write, and I could pour it out like water. I could weep too for my country, which, mournful as it is, does not know the half of its loss. It deeply laments when it turns its eyes back, and sees what Hamilton was ; but my soul stiffens with despair when I think what Hamilton would have been.

“ Alas ! the great man who was at all times so much the ornament of our country, and so exclusively fitted in its extremity to be its champion, is withdrawn to a purer and more tranquil region. We are left to endless labors and unavailing regrets.

“ ‘ Such honors Ilion to her hero paid,
And peaceful slept the mighty Hector’s shade.’

“ That nation is fitted to ignominy and servitude, for which such men have lived in vain. Power may be seized by a nation that is yet barbarous ; and wealth may be enjoyed by one that it finds, or renders, sordid. Both are mutable, and have passed away without leaving behind them any other memorial than ruins that offend taste, and traditions that baffle conjecture. But the glory of Greece is imperishable, or will last as long as learning itself, which is its monument ; it strikes an everlasting root, and bears perennial blossoms on its grave. The name of Hamilton would have honored Greece in the age of Aristides. May Heaven, the guardian of our liberty, grant that our country may be fruitful of Hamiltons, and faithful to their glory !” —

The latest tribute to this eminent statesman reaches us as we are revising the proof of the preceding, in the telegraphic report of the opening remarks of General Garfield, Republican candidate for the Presidency, from a balcony on Fifth Avenue, New York, to the crowd below, Aug. 5, 1880:—

“This is New York, and yonder toward the Battery, more than one hundred years ago, a young student of Columbia College was arguing ideas of American Revolution and American Union against un-American loyalty to the monarchy of his College president and professors. By and by he went into the patriot army, was placed on the staff of Washington, to fight the battles of his country; and while in camp, before he was twenty-one years old, upon a drumhead, he wrote a letter which contained every germ of the Constitution of the United States. That student, soldier, statesman, and great leader of thought, Alexander Hamilton of New York, made this Republic glorious by his thinking, and left his lasting impress upon New York, the foremost State of the Union.”

Our next letter was prompted by a bereavement which had in it no tragic element, but which awakened most pensive and tender regrets. The favorite sister, the devoted wife, whose facile pen has enlivened our Memorial, and whose face, as seen in the portrait which adorns it, justifies the admiration which her presence evoked, died March 12, 1805.

TO MR. GOODRICH.

MY DEAR SIR

New York, March 18th, 1805.

By letters from our Friend, Mr. Dwight, I am informed of the affecting event; which calls us to lament the separation of the tenderest ties of Nature. Perhaps your relation to the deceased, still more intimate than that of Brother, gives you a right to expect from me some attempt to offer you consolation. Alas! this is not in my power. The intelligence of our bereavement has reached me at a moment, when my mind, unprepared for the Stroke, and susceptible only of Anguish, is agonized at the prospect of a similar Misfortune.

Yet believe me, my Dear Brother, my own sufferings can never render me indifferent to any Event, which affects your Happiness. My Tears shall constantly flow with yours; we will mutually cherish a lively recollection of that excellence which has departed. Though Clouds of adversity darken our Dwellings, yet we will not forget that we have duties to perform ; that the cares and pains of this Life. will soon be over, when we shall rejoin the Society of our Friends, in a state of glorious and immutable Felicity.

With sincere condolence, and the most perfect Esteem and Friendship, I remain, Dear Brother,

Your affectionate

OLIV: WOLCOTT

Chauncey Goodrich, Esq.

TO HIS WIFE.

MY DEAR WIFE

New York, June 28th, 1805.

I arrived home on Wednesday Evening, without meeting any unlucky accident and found the House and every thing in order. Your friends, whom I have seen, enquire after you with much affection, and desire me to present their Love. It grieves me sincerely, that in your critical and feeble state I cannot be constantly with you, to administer such comfort and support as might be in my power. You are sensible, however, of the motives for our present separation, and acquiesce in them as fully, as if you were not personally interested. You will I hope, also, endeavour to support your spirits, to preserve tranquillity of mind, and after resorting to all reasonable methods for preserving your Life and recovering Health, acquiesce with serenity in the determination of Heaven. In the most unfavourable issue, you will possess every advantage, which the lot of humanity affords. I am certain that no person is better prepared to live, or to die, than yourself. In your family, friends, and acquaintances, this world presents as many attractions to you as to any other person ; and a review of your Life and conduct must console you, in respect to the untried Scenes of futurity.

I shall be glad to hear from you often, but do not wish to fatigue you with writing. Unless something extraordinary occurs, a line written by Laura will be sufficient.

I feel as if I had more weighty duties to perform, than at any former period. They are, however, different from those which have principally occupied my Life. I shall perform them in the best manner in my power, and hope for that aid, which has in a distinguished manner protected and supported you through Life.

Present my Love to all Friends and to our D^r Children, and remain assured of the affectionate attachment of yours

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

FROM THE REV. DR. MORRISON.

DEAR SIR

Canton, Old French Factory, Oct. 19th 1807

Being at length brought by the good Providence of God to this eastern verge of the old world, I beg leave to express my obligations to you for the favour of a passage in the Trident, and introductory letters to Messrs Milner and Bull. Capt. Blakeman, and the Officers on board the Trident, showed towards me, on the whole of our passage, every disposition to render my situation comfortable. Messrs Milner and Bull have, since my arrival, treated me with the utmost politeness. They have favoured me with two rooms in their factory, and allowed me to board in the family.

I hope to be permitted to remain in this country, but do not by any means consider it as certain.

I remain, Dear Sir, with much respect and esteem

Yours sincerely

Voted — That the Two Thousand Dollars, presented this College by the HON. FROM THE REV. DR. DWIGHT.

DEAR SIR

New Haven, Jan^y 18, 1808.

It is unnecessary to tell you, that I cordially unite in the sentiments expressed by our Corporation. It is hardly possible that any other person should feel this subject as I feel it. The interests of this Institution are by habit become my own; and are incapable of being regarded by me as the interests of a Stranger. The aid, which you have given us, is a prop to a weak part of our building, essential to the symmetry and usefulness of the whole structure. In no other manner could the same benefaction have been equally useful. Accept my best wishes for your health and happiness.

The Prudential Committee of this Institution voted, at their late meeting, to return you their cordial thanks for your kind offices to us, in forwarding the objects of Mr. Silliman's Mission. I do it with sincere pleasure. We are not merely satisfied; we are greatly obliged, and feel no small gratification in declaring it.

I am, Dear Sir, very respectfully your obedient friend and servant

TIMOTHY DWIGHT.

Hon. Oliver Wolcott, Esquire.

TO PRESIDENT DWIGHT.

New York, Aug. 24, 1808.

Various avocations have hitherto delayed my acknowledgments of your much esteemed favour, transmitting the resolution of the President and Fellows of Yale College, of the 8th of September last. As the Board will soon convene, I request you to express to them my Thanks for the honour conferred on me, by their Vote. That it has been in my power to perform an Act, which would excite the feelings expressed in your Letter, affords me the highest satisfaction.

That your life may be prosperous, and that you may long continue the ornament, guide, and benefactor of an Institution, of the highest importance to Society, is the constant Wish of, Rev^d and Dear Sir, your sincere Friend and obed^t Serv^t

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

Rev^d Timothy Dwight, D.D.

TO MR. GIBBS.

MY DEAR SIR

Litchfield, April 7, 1817.

Our Election has been held this day. In this Village, Gov. Smith had 222, and your humble servant 322 votes. I own that I am pleased with obtaining the majority in this Town, as every possible exertion has been made to oppose me. I know that seven eighths of the Town are pleased with the result, though many of them dare not confess it. I knew my Conn^t Comrades well; when a strange animal, as they consider me, comes among them, they first attempt to knock him on the head. If they find him too strong, they will make peace on pretty fair terms, and like him the better for having resisted them. I do not want an office, but I could not decline this Contest with Honour nor with Safety.

Take good care of George, and with love to Laura, remember that I am affectionately yours

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

George Gibbs, Esq.

He was chosen Governor of the State at this election, and we give below the opening and concluding sentences of his first Message to the Legislature:—

“Gentlemen of the Council,

“Mr. Speaker, and “Gentlemen of the House of Representatives :

“I enter upon the duties of the honourable station which has been assigned me, with emotions which I cannot describe. After a long absence from the State, I found myself, on my return, almost a stranger in the land of my Fathers; and, till a recent period, I should have deemed no event more improbable, than that which has rendered it my duty to address you from this place.

“You, Gentlemen, are all witnesses, that the publick suffrages have not been influenced by my solicitations or exertions; neither ought I to attribute the invaluable proof of the confidence of my fellow citizens, which at this time demands my grateful acknowledgements, to personal favour. If, indeed, my countrymen have been in some degree influenced in their choice by a favourable estimate of the services I have performed in various stations, still it is my duty to acknowledge, that those services were commenced and continued, under the guidance of illustrious men, who were among the founders of our Nation; and that to the wisdom of their precepts, whatever has appeared to be most meritorious in my conduct, ought chiefly to be referred. It is sufficient honour for me, to have obtained their confidence and approbation. Disclaiming all pretensions to participation of their Glory, I cannot omit to express the reverence I entertain for those sages, whom no artifices could deceive, no temptations seduce, no dangers intimidate. Their names have already been inscribed on the imperishable tablets of History, and in now tendering my homage to those, who, by divine favour, were instrumental in achieving our Independence and establishing our Government, I presume that I perform a duty, which will be repeated by every future generation, with increasing gratitude.

“Notwithstanding every embarrassment incident to the present period, the rise, progress, and actual condition of this State, in connexion with the American Republic, affords just cause for patriotic exultation. In particular I desire to thank God, that my existence in this life has been allotted, during a period distinguished by remarkable events; that I have constantly witnessed his protecting care of our beloved Country; that I have seen the Tree of Liberty, the emblem of our Independence and Union, while it was a recumbent plant, fostered by vigilance, defended by toil, and not unfrequently watered with tears ; and that by his favour, I now behold it in the vigour of youthful maturity, standing protected from violation by the sound heads, glowing hearts, and strong arms of a new generation, elevating its majestic trunk towards Heaven ; striking its strong roots in every direction through our soil ; and expanding its luxuriant branches over a powerful, united, and prosperous Nation.

“ OLIV: WOLCOTT.

“ GENERAL ASSEMBLY,

“ MAY SESSION, 1817.”

The document, from which we have given brief extracts, found its way to England, and the “ London Times,” the leading political journal of Great Britain, which has always been sparing in its commendation of any American production, had the following editorial notice in its columns, under date of July 8, 1817:—

“ We have just received the Inaugural Address of his Excellency OLIVER WOLCOTT, Governor of Connecticut, which we have perused with much satisfaction and delight, and which we lay before a class of our numerous readers. It is worthy of the republican Chief Magistrate, from whose pen it emanated. It is a lucid disclosure of topics which it presents for legislative consideration. When we look at the simplicity and dignity of its manner, the beauty of its style, the purity of its language, the elegance of its diction, and the originality of the composition, we have no hesitation in saying, that we consider it one of the most splendid State Papers that has ever yet appeared.”

TO MR. OTIS.

SIR

Litchfield, Aug. 9th 1820.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your Letter of July 15th, with the first volume of your translation of Botta's History of the War of American Independence, which I have attentively perused with great satisfaction. If the remaining volumes are executed with the same spirit, truth and intelligence, which distinguished the first, this work will, in my opinion, be justly considered as by far the most philosophic and classic History of the memorable events it celebrates, which has yet appeared ; and will deserve a place in the library of every patriotic American.

It will be in vain, hereafter, for the advocates of Royalty, Hierarchy, and Feudal Privileges, to assign to the Founders of our Nation a low rank in the scale of intellect. Learned investigations have at length demonstrated, that the ascendancy of America, in every progressive stage, ought to be ascribed no less to mental energy, than to military prowess. Perhaps the period is not remote, when European Statesmen will generally admit, that it constitutes the chief glory of the British Nation, that the sublime doctrines of civil and religious Liberty, which were promulgated by Hampden, Sidney, Milton, Locke, Berkeley, and other illustrious luminaries of their age, were transplanted, invigorated, and firmly established on this Continent by their contemporaries and associates.

It appears to have been the design of Mr. Botta, to evince that the principles of the Founders of our Nation, have been in every period, and especially during the War of the Revolution, no less ably and efficiently defended by their descendants in the Council, than in the Field ; and with equal virtue, by the great body of the People. And I humbly trust that, by the favour of a gracious Providence, these principles will be diffused throughout the world, with every future expansion of arts, science, and civilization.

I tender you my thanks for the pleasure your translation has afforded me, and I entertain no doubt, that your labours will be rewarded by an extensive diffusion of the publication.

I am with great respect, Sir, your very obed^t serv^t

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

George A. Otis, Esq. Phil^a

TO MR. GRACIE.

MY DEAR SIR

Litchfield, Jan^y 8, 1822.

When you see the Marquis La Fayette, please to present my best respects to him. I recollect his appearance, soon after his arrival in this Country ; his erect form, bright brown hair, blue eyes, and brilliant complexion, rendered him the most interesting young man I had then seen. I have lately read a description of his figure, as at present. Time and the Events, to which he has been exposed, have it seems changed his aspect to that of venerable age. The Marquis is certainly the most fortunate and illustrious Frenchman of his Age ; he has passed the ordeal of tribulation, and survives, covered with glory as with years. I should like to know the Fortunes of his Son, George Washington La Fayette ; if I recollect right, he was distinguished in the army.

I hope to be able to write you with more punctuality hereafter ; for the present, I subscribe myself with great sincerity and truest affection yours

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

William Gracie, Esq., Paris.

FROM THE REV. DR. DAY.

SIR

Yale College, Feb. 12, 1822.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of yours of Jan. 31st, accompanied with a valuable collection of books, to be added to the repeated contributions with which your liberality has already enriched our Library. Should your example be followed by a few of the friends of the Institution, we might soon have a collection of books, which would be an honour to the State, and of inestimable value to the literary public.

I have the honour to be, with sentiments of the highest respect, your Excellency's obed^t: serv^t:

JEREMIAH DAY

FROM EX-PRESIDENT ADAMS.

MY DEAR AND WORTHY OLD FRIEND

Quincy, 17th November, 1823.

With real pleasure I received your kind letter of July 28th, though I received it but a few days ago. I thank you for introducing to me Major Wolcott Huntington, whose appearance and manners do honour to both his names.

I rejoice to learn that you enjoy good health, and I wish that your Life may be prolonged for the Government of Connecticut as long as mine has been, which has extended beyond all my anticipations and expectations.

I have received a letter from our fellow Citizen and noble General, La Fayette, within a few days, in which he hails Faneuil Hall as the Cradle of Universal Liberty to all Mankind. This is very flattering to the City of Boston, and to all the United States, but the prospect at present is somewhat clouded. The old dragon, the offspring of the unholy alliance between political and ecclesiastical tyranny, now appears under the title of legitimacy, which threatens to destroy the rights of the People to institute their own Government, and it will undoubtedly produce great calamities to mankind. But great is truth, and will ultimately prevail.

Our political discussions are only a warfare of words, our Cannon are only Goose Quills, and our shot nothing but black ink; we shall preserve our Liberties a long time, let the crowned noddles of Europe bluster as they will.

A session of Congress approaches in no gloom, and with no formidable apprehensions of danger or difficulty. The next Election, thoroughly discussed beforehand, will go off in great tranquillity, whoever draws the highest ticket in the Lottery. Our Governor Eustis sits very easily in his Chair, and we are as happy as we ever shall be.

I am, Sir, with assurances of high esteem and regard, and in daily expectation of a summons to another department,

Your friend and humble servant

JOHN ADAMS.

Governor Wolcott.

In August, 1824, he had the pleasure, as Governor of the State, of extending its welcome to his old friend, General La Fayette, on the occasion of his visit to the United States. We give his Address:—

“DEAR GENERAL,

“I rejoice in this opportunity of renewing our welcome to you, in this ancient Capital of Connecticut, where a virtuous and enlightened people have during nearly two centuries, enjoyed Republican Institutions, which were devised by themselves, and which have been administered by agents annually designated by their voluntary suffrages. The principles which you have advocated in the Council and defended in the Field, have been here triumphantly established, and by the favour of Heaven we hope to transmit them unimpaired, to the latest posterity.

“These principles are now diffused on every side, from the Ocean to the high Plains of Missouri, and from the Lakes to the Bay of Mexico. Over this great region, our sons and our daughters, parents of future millions, are rapidly extending science, religion, industry, and all the arts which perpetuate and embellish powerful communities. Literature and commerce augment our strength and resources. We are united with elevated spirits from every country, who have come here to enjoy all that freedom of opinion and of action with which our own minds are imbued. You can proceed to no spot where you will not be met by Patriots who have aided your exertions, in both hemispheres, or by their admiring relations; and in every class you will find an interesting proportion of Frenchmen, including numbers of the descendants of those early immigrants who imbibed the liberal and gallant spirit of your Fourth Henry.

“Every class of citizens will instantly recognize in you an illustrious Benefactor of the United States and of mankind, and they will unite in spontaneous benedictions, with ardent invocations to the Supreme Being that you may be prosperous in life, with a happy transition to a blessed immortality.”

TO DOCTOR RHINELANDER.

MY DEAR SIR

Litchfield, Oct. 4th 1829.

I took up my Pen to write you a Letter, to acknowledge files of Newspapers which, in the absence of Books, have kept my mind in action, and preserved my reason, my health, and some share of vivacity. It is proper that I should return you thanks for these favours, which I do with perfect sincerity.

The difference between savages and civilized men, is chiefly to be ascribed to the arts of writing and printing. Who can contemplate without wonder, admiration, and gratitude, the advances which have been made in physical arts and science, since the commencement of the reign of George the Third of England, a period within my personal recollection! But "the end is not yet;" the progress of improvement is continually extending, and becoming more rapid. Where it will end, and what will be the consequences, in respect to our species, is known only to God, who established the Ordo rerum by which all nature is surrounded, and which he only can overrule and control.

When I review the incidents of my own life, I am compelled to acknowledge, with sincere and reverential gratitude, that many of the most important, in relation to my standing in society, my health, my fame, my family, and my children, have occurred without my contrivance, and have terminated contrary to my expectations and wishes. I have suffered severe afflictions; yet on the whole, my life has, so far, been happy and fortunate.

I have been connected with great Men, who were Actors in events, of which they saw not the results, nor are they yet to be foreseen. I am now engaged in small affairs, which seem to me important to my Family.

From your friend

OLIV: WOLCOTT.

Doct. J. R. Rhinelanders.

Time has softened the political asperity and rancor of the period embraced in the preceding record, and we have a clearer perspective than the parties had of the questions which divided them. Without entering here into any analysis of these questions, which our kinsman has fully done in his work, we presume there are few of our readers who will not assent to the general justness of the encomium given below, which we extract from his closing pages.

“The merits of the Federal Administrations do not require to be estimated by comparison with those which have followed. With an exception springing from the abandonment of Federal policy, the first twelve years of our constitutional government deserve, and from an impartial posterity will receive, the admiration and respect of our country. ‘In those days there were giants in the land.’ Dignified and elevated as was the character of Washington, pre-eminent as he stood among the great and illustrious personages of history, there were around him and with him upon the stage of public action others who at any time would have been, who even then were, conspicuous as monuments amidst their race; men who are found only in revolutions; who in times of fat and prosperous security remain inert and obscure; who appear only with the storms of state; whose ardor and patriotism are roused in proportion to the danger; whose self-reliance increases with peril, and whose resources are fertile in the same degree that they are taxed. Such were the great representatives of the Federal party, the men whose names are household words, examples for the imitation of those that come after. Blot these names from our records, and what indeed would remain! The tone of their government was in accordance with the character of its administrators; they had considered official station, not as a reward of partisanship, but as a trust confided by the nation to those who had marked themselves worthy of the trust; they had inculcated maxims of reverence for the laws, as the true loyalty of republicans; their foreign policy was distinguished by a pure and undeviating love of country; their domestic, alike by ability, integrity, and foresight. Firm, prudent, and honest, they indulged in no levity of resentment to other nations, nor wavered at the apprehension of danger from them. With the single object of the public good, they never hesitated to incur individual odium or misrepresentation.”¹

We abstain from any further extracts from our voluminous papers. Our purpose is accomplished in having furnished the materials for a fair judgment of the character and services of Oliver Wolcott, the younger. We have seen him, at the early age of thirty-five years, selected by the sagacious Washington for a post in the Cabinet, second in importance to no other, as the successor of the accomplished Hamilton. And he fully justified the confidence of his chief, and showed himself possessed of the qualities requisite in a minister of finance. He had not, it is true, a brilliant genius, but he had a sound and well-regulated mind, a judgment matured and reliable, strong practical good sense, and native shrewdness. His conceptions were broad and comprehensive, his reasoning was vigorous and clear. He was well acquainted with the resources of the country, and with the views and interests of its different sections, thoroughly versed in the duties of his office, capable of continuous application, methodical and strictly business-like in his habits. To his capacity for detail the Government were indebted for the admirable arrangements adopted in the Department of the Treasury, which was chiefly modelled by him; and to his financial ability for some of its ablest and most lucid Reports. He had no desire to obtain a shining reputation, and little ambition, other than to fill honorably an honorable station. His employment from so early a period in subordinate official services, while it had perfected his qualifications for his particular Department, had withdrawn him entirely from those fields of action where men gain personal popularity. He brought, therefore, no addition of political strength into the Cabinet, had this been sought, but he did bring, what at that time was perhaps equally valuable, the entire confidence of many (including General Hamilton) who themselves occupied a high and deserved rank in the public regard.

He possessed withal, unflinching resolution, a high-toned sense of honor, and an integrity of character beyond the power of temptation; he could never bend, even in appearance, from what he considered right. No idea of expediency, no hope of attaining a cherished object, ever made him swerve from his path; he was, in every matter of principle, stern and uncompromising.

The late Hon. Joseph Hopkinson, one of his distinguished political associates, thus writes respecting him:—

During his residence in Philadelphia, the division of political parties in their social intercourse was more decided than it has ever been since. His associations, therefore, were almost exclusively with the federal members of the Administration and of Congress, together with families residing in the city of the same politics, which then certainly constituted the best society of the city. In his parlor, of an evening, you would meet more or less company of that description. Leading members of the Senate and House of Representatives, especially from New England, were habitually there, and sometimes at my house. When I mention such names as Ellsworth, Ames, Griswold, Goodrich, Tracy, and others, you may imagine what a rich and intellectual society it was. I will not say that we have no such men now, but I don't know where they are.

Mr. Wolcott was a man of a cheerful and even playful disposition. His conversation was interesting and earnest, but gay, unless the occasion was unfit for gaiety. He enjoyed a good joke from himself or another, and his laugh was hearty and frequent. He delighted in the discussion of literary subjects and the works of distinguished authors, and was particularly fond of poetry. Indeed, I understand that in his younger days he was a poet. He had a good taste in literature, with one exception about which we often disputed, and in which his New England attachments or prejudices controlled his judgment. He had an excessive admiration of Dr. Dwight's "Conquest of Canaan." His domestic life was most exemplary; his greatest happiness was in his family, with the friends who congregated there. His devotion to the business and duties of his office was severe and unremitting. He possessed, in a high degree, a very rare qualification, the capacity for continued hard work, and was in everything systematic and orderly. His attachments to his friends were strong and lasting, never taxing them with unreasonable exactions, nor subjecting them to unpleasant caprices. He was open and direct in all his dealings, without duplicity or intrigue in anything; his sincerity was sure, he deceived nobody. His political opinions were the honest convictions of a man of undoubted integrity, of distinguished intelligence, and high attainments, and, above all, of a true and sincere lover of his Country.

It may be added here, that during the pressing occupations of his public life he never forgot his literary tastes, — his retentive memory enabling him to recall long passages of the British poets, with whom he was specially familiar. He received at different times, from Brown University, New Jersey College, and Yale College, respectively, the honorary degree of LL.D.

The office of Governor he sustained for ten years with dignity. During this period he became the author of some of the ablest papers in the Records of the State. His annual Messages to the Legislature, his Veto of the act known as the Steamboat Bill, his Plan of Taxation, and his Draft of the new Constitution, fully sustained the reputation for ability which he had gained in the Cabinet of Washington.

After his retirement from public life, he returned to the city of New York, and his few remaining years were passed there, at the seat of his son-in-law, Col. George Gibbs, or in its immediate vicinity. He died June 1, 1833, and his remains were taken to Litchfield.

"He was the last survivor of Washington's Cabinet. The departure of few men ever produced a more deep and general feeling of sorrow. All felt that a most important link in the chain that united the present generation with the one of the Father of his Country was broken."¹

"The character of Mr. WOLCOTT was strongly marked. Stern, inflexible, and devoted in all that duty, honor, and patriotism enjoined, he was in private life of the utmost gentleness, kindness, and simplicity. With strong original powers, which the stirring events of the revolutionary days in which he was born only developed, he had acquired a habit of self-reliance which little fitted him for that sort of political co-operation, which results from expediency rather than right. He aimed at the right always, and at all events, according to his best convictions; and if any questioned his judgment, none could impeach his honesty and sincerity."²

The Common Council of the city of New York, on the occasion of his death, unanimously adopted the following resolution, June 3, 1833:—

"Resolved, That this Board, entertaining a high respect for the Character of the Honorable OLIVER WOLCOTT, late Governor of the State of Connecticut, lately deceased, will attend his Funeral; and that a Copy of this Resolution be furnished by the Clerk to the Family of the deceased."

The Governor of Connecticut made the following address to the Legislature, at the close of their session, June 6, 1833:—

"While met with you for the purpose of closing the session, I cannot omit a momentary and passing notice of one who once filled the place I occupy, and who has very recently been called to another world. His life had been devoted to the service of his country. Blessed with a vigorous mind, highly cultivated and improved by education ; called at an early period into the public service ; his advantages were great, and they were not unimproved. In all the various stations he has held, he has rendered distinguished services to our State and Nation ; among these services, those which he rendered as the Chief Magistrate of this State, will not soon be forgotten. He went into office at a most important and interesting period, at a time when great and important changes in our institutions were contemplated. He brought to the work the full powers of his vigorous mind, the treasures of his long experience, careful attention, laborious research, and a liberal, enlightened, and ardent patriotism. In the foundation of what is most valuable and most esteemed in our present institutions, we trace the work of his hand. While civil and religious liberty, equality of rights and privileges, an equitable distribution of public burdens, an economical and judicious appropriation of the public revenues, are deemed objects of value in our State, the name of OLIVER WOLCOTT will be cherished and revered.

“Time and the occasion admit of nothing more than this momentary notice, and the tribute of a tear to the memory of one, who so long and ably led the councils, watched over the interests, and presided in the administration of the concerns of the State.

“HENRY W. EDWARDS.”

In the “Litchfield County Centennial Celebration,” August, 1851, brief tributes were paid to the brothers Oliver and Frederick Wolcott, both in the Address by the Hon. Samuel Church, Chief Justice of the State, and in the Poem by Rev. John Pierpont, of Boston. An extract from the former we give here:—

“Hon. OLIVER WOLCOTT the younger, late Governor of this State, was also a member of this Bar, and though he engaged in public life soon after his admission, we are entitled to retain his name on our catalogue. I shall not now speak of his life and eminent services. They make a prominent part of the country’s history, and have been, within a few years, faithfully written by his near relative. His bust has been presented, on this occasion, to the Bar of this County.”

Governor Wolcott was in person about the ordinary size, and as he advanced in life inclining to corpulence. His head was large, and his countenance strongly delineated and expressive. He possessed much dignity of manner ; his disposition was sedate, but cheerful, and with some causticity of humor.

Several portraits of him exist. The one from which the preceding engraving, by Andrews and Tappan, was taken, is by Colonel Trumbull, and was painted for the Hon. Josiah Quincy, of Boston; was bequeathed by him to Prof. Wolcott Gibbs, of Harvard University, in whose possession it now is. Another, painted by Gilbert Stuart, is in the State House at Hartford; another, painted by R. Earle, is in the library of the Connecticut Historical Society, Hartford. The later portrait which we here give is from a crayon sketch, by Rembrandt Peale, of much value as a likeness, taken, it is said, while the Governor was delivering his Inaugural Address to the Legislature, and engraved for the Memorial by Charles Burt, of Brooklyn, N. Y. An admirable bust, executed after his death, by Mr. S. V. Clevenger, is in the possession of the family.

“During the whole of Mr. Wolcott’s residence in Philadelphia, his situation, though involving laborious duties, was in a high degree delightful. A society at that time existed there, marked by every characteristic which could recommend it to one of a cultivated mind and social disposition, embracing much of the genius, the worth, and no little of the wit and beauty, of the country, and cemented by mutual confidence and congeniality of opinions and pursuits. Of this society, two members of his family, his younger sister (Mrs. Goodrich) and his wife, were no inconspicuous ornaments. The former was distinguished for her personal beauty and brilliant conversation. Mrs. Wolcott, with less beauty, had still a countenance of much loveliness, and manners graceful and dignified. To the most feminine gentleness of disposition, she added sound sense, and that kind of cultivation which is acquired in intercourse with thinkers. Both belonged to a class of women of whom Connecticut could then boast many, whose minds were formed, and habits of reflection directed by men; and without coming within the category of female politicians, they had been almost from childhood familiar with questions of public and general interest. An anecdote of Mr. Tracy, whose sarcasms were of old dreaded alike in the Senate Chamber and the drawing-room, has been preserved, commemorative at once of Mrs. Wolcott’s attractions and his own peculiar wit. Mr. Liston, the British Minister, who was thoroughly English in his ideas, on some occasion remarked to him: ‘Your countrywoman, Mrs. Wolcott, would be admired even at St. James.’ ‘Sir,’ retorted the Senator from Connecticut, ‘she is admired even on Litchfield Hill!’”¹

“At the houses of the principal Federalists connected with the government there was a very different style of conversation ; religion was treated with reverence ; the instructions of the past were received with humility, and visions of the future were seen through the softening light of experience. The New Englanders clustered about the home of Wolcott.”¹

We find among our papers a letter from his wife, dated Litchfield, August 29th, addressed to him at New York, and closing as follows : —

My cough has been a little tighter, a few days past, otherwise I am much as when you left me. The children are much as usual ; they join me in love to Papa. Remember me affectionately to all friends. Adieu, my dearest friend. That God may bless you and bring you again in safety is the constant prayer of your affectionate

ELIZA WOLCOTT

To this letter he has appended this memorandum, written, evidently, in his latter years : —

This is the last letter which I ever received from my most excellent Wife, the mother of all my children — a beautiful and intelligent lady, admired by all her acquaintances and affectionately beloved by me. She discharged every duty of life in the most exemplary manner, and her calm, firm spirit enabled me to suffer the distresses to which I was exposed during the toils of my public life. She was a sincere and devout Christian. During the year 1798, her fatigues occasioned a rupture of her lungs, after which her health gradually declined. She continued, however, to attend to domestic duties till the day of her death. She rode on horseback several miles with me on the morning of Sept. 22^d 1805, was dressed and saw her friends in the afternoon ; took her supper, went to bed as usual, and resigned her spirit to God who gave it, about 11 o'clock in the evening. She passed a useful and honourable life, esteemed by the most distinguished and virtuous of the age in which she lived, and closed her days with a serene confidence in God.

In the gubernatorial gallery of the new State House in Hartford, a portrait of Roger Wolcott is, unfortunately, among the few that are wanting. The portraits of his son and grandson hang in their places, and we give here, from the Records of the Senate of Connecticut, the official vote of thanks to their donor : —

Whereas, Doctor JOHN S. WOLCOTT, on the 29th day of May, 1834, made a written communication to the Senate, that he had in his possession original Portraits of his Grandfather, OLIVER WOLCOTT, one of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, and of his Father, OLIVER WOLCOTT, late Governors of this State, both by eminent artists; and informing the Senate, that should they deem them worthy of a place in the Senate Chamber he would present them for that purpose; therefore Resolved by the Senate, that they entertain a very high regard for the memory of the former and later Governors WOLCOTT, and with just sentiments of esteem accept the present of their portraits, and duly appreciate the liberality of the donor, and order the same to be placed in the Senate Chamber in New Haven.

Resolved, further, that the thanks of the Senate be presented to Doctor John S. Wolcott for the respect he has shown them in presenting the portraits of his Grandfather and Father, and assure him that they are esteemed highly worthy of a place in the Senate Chamber.

LAST WILL.

To all persons whom these presents may concern, be it known that I, OLIVER WOLCOTT, a native citizen and lately an inhabitant of the Village, Township, and County of Litchfield in the State of Connecticut, but lately and at present a resident in the City, County, and State of New York, being at present in the seventy-third year of my age, but free from any restraint and of sound mind and memory, reflecting on the uncertainty of human life, do hereby make and establish this instrument as my last will and testament.

First, I give to my beloved and only surviving son, Doctor John Stoughton Wolcott, who resides with me and is the protector of my declining age, all my books, papers, manuscripts, pictures, and household furniture, wherever found or situated. From this general donation of personal property I except money on hand, or deposited to my credit in banks, or notes or securities remaining due, or uncollected. Also, all articles which I have given to my daughter, Laura Gibbs, and which remain in her possession, which she is to retain without rendering any account.

Second, I do also give to my said son my home-farm in Litchfield, with all the buildings thereon, and the appurtenances thereof, including the pictures and furniture in the mansion-house in which I once resided; and my will further is, that if by any means this property becomes depreciated, so that within five years after my decease, it will not produce ten thousand dollars at a public sale, that any deficiency of this sum shall be supplied from any other property which I have.

Third, my will further is, that all the real property which I have, after satisfying my just debts, shall be divided into two shares, by partition or otherwise, one share of which shall be appropriated to my dear daughter, Laura Gibbs, wife of Col. George Gibbs of Long Island, and her children, in addition to what I have already given her; the other share I give to my son, Doctor John Stoughton Wolcott, and I enjoin it upon my said son to take care of, support, and educate my dear grandson, Oliver Wolcott, son of Oliver Wolcott and my daughter-in-law, Jane L. Conard; this is to be in addition to the property settled upon her and her son, lying near Camden in New Jersey.

Fourth, I request William Gracie, Esq., to accept one hundred dollars, to be invested in some token of my affectionate regard for him, as the husband of my dear daughter, Elizabeth Gracie, deceased.

In testimony whereof, I, Oliver Wolcott, do declare this Instrument, written with my hand on one sheet of paper, and sealed with my seal at Washington Hotel, this fourteenth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, to be my last will and testament.

OLIV: WOLCOTT [L. s.]

Signed and sealed in the presence of us, who at the request of said testator, who is to us well known, have subscribed and sealed this instrument, with our places of residence, in his presence, and in the presence of each other.

LVII. FREDERICK WOLCOTT (213) graduated at Yale College, 1786, with the first honors of his class, which appears to have embraced much talent; not less than eight of his classmates became members of Congress, and several were eminent as clergymen. “Salutatory Oration in Latin by Sir Wolcott.” (Ord. Com.)

He married (1st), Oct. 12, 1800, Betsey, daughter of Col. Joshua Huntington, of Norwich, Conn.;¹ she was born Nov. 8, 1774, and died April 2, 1812. He married (2d), June 21, 1815, Mrs. Sally Worthington Cooke, daughter of Rev. Samuel Goodrich, of Berlin;² she was born Aug. 7, 1784, and died Sept. 14, 1842. Children:—

387—1. Mary Ann Goodrich, b. Aug. 9, 1801; m. May 22, 1827, Asa Whitehead, Esq., of Newark, N. J. He was a leading member of the New Jersey Bar.

388—2. Hannah Huntington, b. Jan. 14, 1803; m. April 21, 1834, Rev. Frederick Freeman, of Sandwich, Mass.

389—3. Joshua Huntington, b. Aug. 29, 1804. See LXXV.

390—4. Elizabeth, b. March 6, 1806; m. May 22, 1827, John P. Jackson, Esq., of Newark, N. J. She died Oct. 15, 1875. Of this generation of the Wolcott daughters there is not, probably, one who has combined more harmoniously the elements of a charming character. A writer in the New York “Evening Post,” upon her decease, expressed the warm appreciation of all her friends.

¹ This gentleman was the worthy scion of a family renowned in the annals of Connecticut. His father, Gen. Jabez Huntington (gr. Y. C. 1741), consecrated his wealth to the cause of Independence, and was appointed Major-General of the entire State force. His eldest brother, Gen. Jedediah Huntington (gr. H. U. 1763), bore a part, at the head of his troops, in some of the most important scenes of the war. His youngest brother, Gen. Ebenezer Huntington (gr. Y. C. 1775), was also prominent in the army and in public life. Col. Joshua Huntington was engaged in mercantile business in Norwich, when, on the receipt of the news of the battle of Lexington, he hastened with a hundred men under his command to the scene of action, and was attached to General Putnam’s brigade. Through a long life he maintained the character of a high-toned Christian gentleman and was held in great esteem. Mrs. Sigourney relates that his countenance was the most benign that she had seen; and it was the index of his temper and life.

² He was the son of Rev. Elizur Goodrich, D.D., of Durham; his wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Col. John Ely. Three of his daughters married clergymen; and two of his sons, Charles A. and Samuel G. Goodrich, became known as writers. See p. 380.

“ It may be said that she never had an enemy. Those persons who knew her well will testify to her sweetness, firmness, warm love for humanity, ardent patriotism, and domestic devotion. She loved hospitality, and never tired of entertaining her friends.”

Their eldest daughter, Laura Wolcott Jackson, married Charles H. Parker, Esq. (gr. H. U. 1835), of Boston. Their eldest son, Fredrick Wolcott Jackson, studied at Sheffield Scientific School, Yale College; is (1879) General Superintendent of the United New Jersey Railroads, Pennsylvania Company. Their second son, Joseph Cooke Jackson, graduated at Yale College, 1857, Harvard University, LL.B., 1860; served through the late war in various grades, closing as Brigadier-General; Assistant United States Attorney, Southern District of New York; author of treatise, “Relations of the American Lawyer to the State.” Their third son, John Peter Jackson, graduated at Princeton College, with the first honors of his class, 1856, Harvard University, LL.B., 1858; has been a member of the Newark City Council and of the New Jersey Legislature. Their fourth son, Huntington Wolcott Jackson, graduated at Princeton College, 1863, and studied at Harvard Law School; served in the late war in several grades, ending as Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, for gallant and meritorious conduct; member of the Illinois Bar, and Supervisor of South Chicago. Their fifth son, Schuyler Brinckerhoff Jackson, graduated at Yale College, 1871, Columbia Law School, 1873; is a Trustee of the State School Fund, and (1879) Speaker of the General Assembly of New Jersey.

A fine monument to the memory of Mr. John P. Jackson has been erected by the New Jersey Railroad Company, of which he was Vice-President, and through whom, largely, the great enterprise had been inaugurated and carried through. We copy the inscription:—

JOHN P. JACKSON,

Born June 8th 1805. Died Dec^r 10th 1861.

He was born at Aquackanonk, N. J.; was graduated at Princeton College in 1823, with distinguished honor, and left a successful practice of law for a generous devotion to works of internal improvement and Christian benevolence.

At home, the pillar around which the affections of all most tenderly clung; in social life, the faithful, sympathizing friend; in public, a zealous patriot and influential citizen; in the church, an ardent and exemplary Christian. In the highest maturity of his powers, he exchanged his life of eminent usefulness here for the higher enjoyments of heaven.

The following recollections of Mr. Frederick Wolcott, as he appeared in his college days, we give from a private letter of his venerable contemporary, Rev. Calvin Chapin, D.D., of Rocky Hill: —

His countenance was indicative of intelligence and strength. Personally, he was portly, and doubtless as near perfection as any individual in the Seminary. His manner was uniformly distinguished by dignity. In classical scholarship, his place was with the first among his fellow-students. His undeviating use of college privileges through the academical course proved him voluntarily joined to the wise, but small, company of those who go there for abiding intellectual and moral improvement. The expenditure of time and money in the momentary pleasures of trifling and vicious foolery had no place in his purposes and plans, his occupations and hopes. If memory fails not, the highest, at that day, and most honorable part, — the Salutatory Oration, — was assigned to him at graduation.

Soon after leaving College he entered upon the study of the Law, but was prevented by ill-health from engaging in its practice. He was appointed Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas in 1793, and in 1798 Clerk of the Superior Court of Litchfield County, then first established. These offices he held until 1836, and on his resignation the County Court issued a special order, expressing “their most unqualified approbation of the fideliſy, integrity, and courteſy with which he has performed the various duties of the office.” In 1796, he was alſo appointed Judge of Probate of the Diſtrict, which laſt poſt he retained till his death. He was a Representative of the Town in the General Aſſembly, and in 1808 he was choſen one of the Preſidential Electors. He was elected a member of the State Senate in 1810, and annually thereafter until 1823. During the laſt ſix years of his ſervice as Senator, he was one of the Fellows of Yale College,—his brother, as Governor of the State, being at the ſame time a member of the Board.

He was the prime mover in the manufacturing enterpriſe ſtarted at Wolcottville, elſewhere noticed, in which his brother Oliver was aſſociated with him, bearing a part in the early development of the manufacture of woollen cloths in this country. They were alſo aſſociated in another ſpecialty, namely, the improvement of agriculture, and the introduction of improved breeds of ſtock, particularly the Devon and Durham cattle, and the Merino ſheep, of both which they were importers,—the latter from Spain and the former from England. Theſe two brothers, influenced largely by patriotic motives and the deſire to render this country independent of Europe, were among our pioneers in the advancement of theſe great national intereſts, both agricultural and manufacturing,—a rank which they attained not without pecuniary riſk and ſacrifice.

From the family correſpondence we ſelect two letters addreſſed to him by his father and his brother, then twenty-two years of age, ſoon after he had entered college, having at their date juſt paſſed his fifteenth birthday, and a third when he entered upon his Sophomore year.

I have no doubt but that you will attend to your literary Improvement as far as ſhall conſiſt with the Preſervation of your Health, which you cannot expect to enjoy unleſs you indulge yourſelf in ſuch innocent Recreations as are neceſſary to give Vigor both to the Body and Mind; perhaps, indeed, your Service as a Freshman ſubjects you rather to an Exceſs of Exercise than otherwiſe; but you will beſt know what will be neceſſary for you by your own Experience.

I have nothing in special to recommend to you, but that you attend to the great Dutys of Religion and Virtue without which you will not enjoy any comfortable Reflections in this Life nor Happiness hereafter. — May unerring Wisdom be your Guide thro' the slippery Paths of Youth. I am yours

FROM HIS BROTHER.

MY DEAR BROTHER

Hartford, December 4th 1782

I have an opportunity to write to you, and it is with pleasure I embrace it. I suppose this will find you a Freshman with your Hat under your Arm under continual Apprehensions of some severe Discipline from those self-important Gentry who affect to stile themselves your Superiors. You ought however to remember that this Superiority will be of short Duration in case you make a proper Use of the Advantages which are now in your hands. It is not being one Year before you in College that gives any person an Advantage over you, but it is the improvement they have made of that Year. You have an undoubted right to despise an ignorant Fellow, who values himself upon his priviledge of wearing a Gown, though it would be improper and imprudent to express any Contempt publicly; and as you have a Right to entertain this Opinion of Others, they have the same Right to think of you in a Way much to your Disadvantage should you be so foolish as to be proud of any thing but your Learning. I suppose that there are many in Your Class who are older than you, and who will certainly surpass you in Scholarship if you do not pay the strictest Attention to your Studies; and depend upon it that those who gain the Reputation of being good Scholars the first Year, maintain that Reputation through Colledge.

It will be more difficult for you to be the best Scholar in your Class than for some, your Superiors in Age, but it will not be impossible, and you know that it will be more honorable to excell under these disadvantages, than if it was the general Expectation; besides, as I had the Reputation of being a good Scholar while I was in College, if you do not equal or excell me you may depend upon it that people will make a Comparison to your Disadvantage — a thing which I hope you are too proud to suffer.

As for those Butterflies you will see every Day in New Haven who think that they are the best people because they wear the richest Cloaths, drink the most Wine, and do the most Mischief, you may depend upon it that they will in ten Years time — a period which will soon arrive — be the most despicable part of the Community. They will be ignorant, unhealthy and poor, consequences that naturally follow from Inattention, Profligacy, and Extravagance. And what is worse, they will be more despised by comparing the Inconsistency of their Conduct, in the days of their Prosperity and Disgrace. This will appear very evident when you think of those persons with whom you are acquainted. I dare say that you never despised an honest Farmer who attended to the Business of his Occupation and was contented with his Situation in Life; though he is a very ridiculous Creature when he sets up for a Gentleman and looses his Estate by endeavoring to imitate what is called high Life. The same inconsistency distinguishes every Person who aims at any thing beyond his Reach. To be a real Gentleman, it is necessary to possess Learning, Politeness and Money sufficient to defray necessary Expenses — Qualities which a Fop can never possess as his Inattention renders him ignorant and uncivil and his Dissipation deprives him of his Money. But while you are pursuing your Studies, you ought to pay the strictest Attention to those inferior Accomplishments of which every person is a judge — such as graceful Behavior, Elocution, Handwriting, &c. You never will be considered as a Man of Learning if you are not really so; for there are some Judges who will give you your due in this Respect and no more, and if you acquire their good Opinion you will go current over the World as a Man of Learning; for there are but few in Comparison of the whole who are Judges of Learning, and Mankind receive their opinions in this Matter implicitly. But of those Accomplishments which I mentioned above, all persons either are or suppose themselves capable of judging; the most ignorant person you will find will give his Opinion whether you speak and behave with propriety and can write your Name so as to be legible; and if you are deficient they will entertain an Opinion to your Disadvantage. — Never imitate any of those persons who are called queer droll Fellows, for I never knew one of them who was a Man of sense or honesty.

I am dear Brother with the greatest Friendship yours

D^S CHILD*Litchfield, Nov: 29, 1783*

I do not believe that I have the least occasion to say any thing to you to excite you to a more vigorous Pursuit of your Studies, but rather on the contrary to advise you to more Moderation than you probably allow yourself. Attend properly to your Health, which I think you may do, and yet be the best Scholar in your Class. This Character I shall expect you will support, and that your literary Improvement will be of the best kind. The great Obligations of Virtue and Religion you will never forget, as an Observance of them is necessary for your present and future Happiness.

The Assembly will sit at New Haven on the 3^d of Janu^{ry}, and probably you may return home on the Horse I shall ride there. Your Mother sends her Love to you.

Yours,

O. WOLCOTT

Among our Family Papers we find a number of letters addressed to him in his youth by his accomplished sister, whose lively pen will be recognized by the readers of her letters given in preceding pages; off-hand effusions, affording glimpses of a former century, not less interesting because written impromptu, and addressed in confidence to a loving brother.

FROM HIS SISTER MARIANN.

DEAR BROTHER

[Hartford] Sunday Afternoon

We have had some of our good friends to dine with us to-day; but they are all gone to Church, and I am left to the luxury of being alone, and indulging my own reflections. The best use which I can make of my freedom, is to discharge the obligation that I am under to you, for a very good Letter which I was incapable of answering last week. Can you believe that these people have actually forbidden me the use of pen and ink? Yet this is a trifling grievance, compared with some which I am compelled to endure. I am laid, every night, upon a bed of straw, and even this will not long be allowed me. In the morning, I am plunged into cold water, or rather have it poured upon me, till my breath forsakes me; and then they take the hint and wrap me in a warm blanket till they perceive returning life. I am then compelled to swallow some nauseous drugs, to sharpen my appetite for a dish of soup-meagre, which is my breakfast.

I cannot relate to you my numerous griefs; but if you will, like a kind and sympathetic brother, come with your Waggon and release me from this state of thralldom, I do assure you that neither my weakness, nor the bad roads, "nor storms, nor night, shall keep me here." Doct^r Hopkins has written a Letter to Mamma, and has advised her to let me stay here — but pray don't mind him. I know that I shall be well enough to go this week, or the beginning of next. It is now two days since I have had scarcely any pain at all, and I am gaining strength fast. I have several times rode to Wethersfield in a Carriage, without fatiguing me at all. I know I can follow Doct^r Hopkins' prescriptions, and practice all the self-denial which he wishes me to, as well at Litchfield as here. In short, I want to go home—and will, in some way or other.

Yet let me in justice to my friends say, that there never was a girl treated with greater tenderness; it is all for my good, that I am so severely restricted. The ties which bind me to my friends in this town, are some of the strongest and tenderest which the human heart can know; but I have formed no attachment which is incompatible with the tender claims which you have upon me, and the affection and duty which I owe my Parents. My thoughts will wander back to my native Hill; but they are not allowed long to contemplate distant objects.

The roads have got to be very fine, in and about the Town. The river, which was "bound in icy fetters" when you was here, is now filled with shipping. The meadows begin to look green, and the lilac bushes under my window are putting forth their leaves. By the way, you must not forget to uncover my flower beds. I expect to spend some time very innocently, at least, amongst them this summer.

I must hasten to a conclusion, for our people will come home soon, and they must not find me transgressing. I must, however, once more request you to come for me, as soon as the last of this week. My kindest love to Papa and Mamma. I hope the post will bring me a letter; and so, with a thousand good wishes I leave you.

M. WOLCOTT

FROM THE SAME.

DEAR FREDERICK

Litchfield, Febr^y 24th 1786

Your going off so suddenly prevented my having an opportunity to thank you for recovering me from the Night-Mare. I believe I should not have breath'd again if you had not wak'd me — and then I could have resign'd my life with a very good will, tho' it is now become very dear to me.

I suppose you expect to hear of a Wedding or some such high matter, but I assure you that I have better news to tell you — which is no other than this, that your Sister Mariann is not a going to be married at all. The night after you left us, Mr. W.

and his Family, which consisted of Mrs G. and his boy Nat, and his dog Caper, arrived here — and Saturday they set off for Albany ; but before they left us, it was agreed that there should be a total cessation of hostilities, from this time henceforth and for ever, Amen. I could add Hallelujah — for my very soul is in raptures at the deliverance. Oh, Frederick, this indeed is happiness — such happiness as my bosom has long been a stranger to. This is a strange story, you will hardly credit me, but it certainly is true, and I have not done any thing dishonourable neither — my Parents approve of my conduct, and so will you when you know my motives. I have not leisure now to tell you any thing more about it. I wish you were here to rejoice with me, for I have had a most lucky escape. You may tell people that this Business is at an end, but do not show this Letter to any living mortal. Next Election, I hope we shall go to H——d together. I am sure I shall be more impatient to see you before Vacation than I ever have been before. Litch^d people are all well — they have now got something to wonder about. You would laugh to hear the strange conjectures that are made.

Pray write me by Beers, if the Wretch ever means to return again, and do not let this Letter make you suppose me beside my wits, for I have not had but three minutes allowed me to write it. I will do better next time.

In true singleness, and sincerity of heart, I am my dear Brother, your loving and affectionate Sister, until Death

MY DEAR BROTHER

[Litchfield]

I have been able to find only the 1st and 5th Nos. of the Crisis ; you must therefore content yourself with those ; the other books I send you as desired. I suppose it happens to be your part to speechify at Commencement ; and you are anxious, upon that important day, to utter Common Sense, if nothing better — be it so, and may your Speech be such that he who heareth may understand. Do not let it be so sublime as to be incomprehensible. I know some fools who make their compositions, and even their common conversation, excessively ridiculous, by aiming at something brilliant. I hope your good sense and discernment will forever prevent your falling into this error. If you address the Passions of men, you will find them most powerfully awakened by the simple language of Nature. If you would convince their Judgments, you will do it easiest by delivering a plain unvarnished tale, without ostentation, or pomposity. I suppose one's language may be refined without being ridiculous, and simple without being vulgar ; pray let your composition be so. But all this is very foolish in me ; I forget that I am writing to one of the wiser sex, and to one that is a Scholar forsooth, and knows every thing. Shall I then, in the true female style, tell you that I am in great haste, and cannot stay to write a long Letter, and that you must excuse all errors ?

Mr A. I suppose told you all the news there was to be told. It would grieve you to hear of all the ill-natured remarks which are made about your poor Sister. Coquette is the least odious epithet they bestow upon me. But I have the satisfaction of knowing that every person, whose opinion I care any thing about, believes that I have done right. Those who judge rationally, suppose that I have motives for my conduct, sufficient to justify me, if I do not impart them ; and those who know my motives, approve of what I have done.

I wish you would tell me in your next, how you can prove that W. winks slow. For my part, I have not seen him wink at all, the fortnight past ; he has taken a composing draught, that I hope will keep him asleep this some time. I wish it was in my power to lay B., with as little trouble ; but this is a secret.

Love or Compliments to P. If you was not a sinner, you would not compel me to write such long Letters. Love from all friends. Yours

DEAR FREDERICK

Litchfield, Aug. 23^d

It is a long time since I have heard from you, and longer since I wrote to you. What you can say for yourself I do not know ; but I am certain if you knew the many and various cares which have exercised the head and hands and heart of your Sister, you would not open your mouth by way of murmuring. Verily, Frederick, there is no sense in living in this world ; if I had one wing, one single pinion to buoy me up — I would endeavor to keep aloof from it.

I expect to see you at Commencement ; I shall go with — my Papa ; I believe we shall come in a carriage, for the sake of confabulation.

I have been dancing all the forenoon, and my hand trembles so, I can hardly write intelligibly. We dance again, this evening ; and we all wish for your company. Mean time, you are poring over some antiquated subject, that is neither instructive nor entertaining. You cannot say so of our dancing ; it is "an amusement that profits the mind." I cannot write you a long letter now ; adieu — pray thee write me speedily.

Heaven bless you !

Litchfield, Nov. 28th 1786

I think you say Brother Frederick that I never write but to reprove you. I will therefore spare you this time, tho' Charity itself must confess you richly deserve chastisement — a breach of promise, where the happiness of a friend was concern'd, is no small crime. But if you are not case-harden'd — in the rebukes of your Conscience, you have received your desert. Alone as I am, without one friend to complain to, I look not for much happiness; you should not then deprive me of what share your letters would afford. Since my return from Hartford, (which was last Tuesday evening) I have hardly known whether I was in the body, or out. Never was poor mortal so impatient to get home; but when I came into the House it look'd so empty and deserted that nothing but the pleasure I saw my return gave my Parents supported my spirits — now I find no interruption to my gloomy reflections — the present I am sure is destitute of comfort, and the dreaded future will be yet harder to sustain. I have however a peaceful shore in view, from whence I shall look back with exultation on the rude tempests which have assaulted me on my way. Ye who have in prospect fairy-fields and cloudless suns — Ye will laugh; you too my Brother will laugh, I suppose, at these reflections. May you never know experimentally how hard to conquer, the feelings are from whence they spring — there are circumstances of distress from which the mind by its utmost efforts cannot disengage itself. — But I am to blame for all this, and yet I fear to write another sentence, lest it should be more faulty still. I expect Mr Allen will deliver you this; I have not seen him, and I suppose I shall not — but I pray you to write when he returns, and let it be a merry letter, tell me you are happy, and intend always to continue so; at any rate write something — I cannot bear any neglect now. Your Parents have you in dear remembrance. Adieu, my Brother — and may the Heavens regard you benignly.

MARIANN WOLCOTT

I beseech that you will commit this to the flames — if it deserves so honourable a death.

We have already given (p. 150) a brief biographical sketch of the writer of the next letter, and have inserted in the preceding records several letters more or less characteristic of the man. Our readers have already learned something of his ability and eminence in his profession, and of his high personal and social qualities. His coming into the Family by marriage was the accession to it of a highly esteemed and valued member. Those of our readers who through her letters have made the acquaintance of the daughter of the house, whom he won and wedded, must recognize a special affinity and fitness in the relationship, which was so happy while it lasted. The letter which follows happens to be, chronologically, his introduction to our work. It will be recognized as one of those sallies of wit, with which a grave young lawyer, pressed with business, enlivened his office cares. Though representing a class of literature which, as a general rule, is not edifying to the average reader, it combines with its exquisite humor a dignified delicacy, which leads us to trust it to the readers of our Family Memorial.

FROM MR. GOODRICH TO HIS SISTER.

Hartford, Monday Evening

You ask, MARIA, what objects engage my attention and pray me to tell you. As much as to ask of me, What do you think about, whom do you see, and what do you do? A hard task it is you impose, for if my Conscience be ever so ready to return an answer, my Pen would be at a loss in what style to dress out the fine story. Cæsar only, of ancient and modern writers, had talents to write entertainingly of himself. But you pray. When pretty saints pray, they must be heard, and when they pray in Sincerity and Love, they ought to be gratified. Instead then of moral themes, take on this white, pure quarter-sheet of Paper, a summary sketch of the thoughts, life and conversation of Chauncey Goodrich, Esq! — and to begin with his thoughts.

He thinks principally of yourself and of himself, and eke more also when both these selves shall become one self.

Now he is a little Boy, he lives by himself,
 All the Bread and Cheese he gets, he puts on ye shelf;
 The Rats and the Mice make such a strife,
 He is forced to go to London to buy a wife.

When the good man is serious, he thinks of your sentimental Observations; when gay, of the sprightly humour that dissipates the gloomy hour, and enlivens the sociable one. When he retires within his own Bosom, and indulges softer Emotions, he thinks that kindred Emotions flow in a purer Bosom, and are kindly interested in the little incidents which mark his life and manners. So he thinks about yourself and himself.

Of the world, viz: of Men and Women—he thinks about them very good-naturedly, and much to their advantage when they manifest such good thoughts towards him. But tho' an admirer of the best Sentence ever uttered—to pray for Enemies, and bless those who curse us—he is not good Christian enough to practise according to this benign Law of human Happiness. He thinks ill of those who think ill of him.

Already, you say, come to his Conversation—What is it, and with whom is it? He says, Maria, but little in public circles. His years are three times ten, in which time he has learned the truth of the old Adage: There is much safety in silence. Women don't like to be interrupted. Men are rivals for wealth and power, and Conversation is to worm out each other's designs. If he can draw a little, sweet Nymph to some rural walk, or some retired room, the modest man might even dare to open his lips. O Flattery! balm of female minds, thy Powers only can check the vociferation of female tongues. Unfortunate man! that its mellifluous influences do not flow from thy lips. To the Nymphs thou canst only speak in the undisguised language of a Brother. Saturday, one came to my office for advice. She was handsome; her Uncle was with her. The Uncle introduced the tender tale of Woe. The Case was broken Vows. I listened. He ended by saying that he had always heard of me as an honest Lawyer. I sent my Clerks away—they tittered too much. I told her that she had come to the right Place, for of all the Lawyers in the Town, I was the only one who could find for her a Remedy: Your lover was a fool to leave so nice a Girl; think no more of him; take a sincere and honest-hearted Lawyer. The little Vixen expressed this diabolical sentiment: That she should be much more happy in giving Pain to her former lover, than Pleasure to her new one; that before my suit should prevail, I must prevail in her suit against her quondam sweet-heart. Now as her Honest Lawyer knows that her suit will not be ended these many days, he thinks best to be off too. The Uncle went away; her Lawyer consulted the Case soberly, and had from her the whole courtship—solemn vows, a bundle of foolish letters, much like those the Esq: himself writes to Miss Wolcott. Just as I was taking my pen to draw the writ, I reflected that it was a common case and might also happen to me; it was possible. It softened me prodigiously, as I told the pitiful story; it was pitiful, wondrous pitiful.

This, Maria, is the only object which has engaged my attention; forgive me, it was a sudden case—one as Lawyers say exactly in point.

Tell Betsey that I love her.

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH

DEAR FREDERICK

Hartford, Nov. 15th 1789

If I can assist you, by instructing you in the mysteries of the female heart, I think it my duty to do so, and shall not fail to administer some wholesome counsel. You need not tell me that you are able to speak for yourself — it will never answer ; such novices as you are know nothing about the Language of Gallantry. Your lips must drop honey, and your expressions be smoother than oil. Sometimes you must pay silent adoration — this you will think is easily done, but I assure you it is more difficult even than speechifying. Your face must express devotion mixed with fear, and the lifted whites of both your eyes must witness great inward anguish. For we do love, Frederick, to see our Lovers unhappy ; at least, we love to think that it is in our power to make them so. Believe me, the Lover, even the highly favoured Lover, ought frequently to complain of his Mistress's cruelty. We love to have you feel and to feel ourselves, as if we were doing a mighty benevolent, disinterested act, when we recompense your sufferings.

And now I wish to return to the subject of your obstinacy in not coming here. I want you to see what a good wife I am, and what a good Husband I have. He sometimes threatens, indeed, that he will carry me back to you ; but as soon as I begin to make ready to go, he tells me, with tears in his eyes, that he cannot think of my leaving him. We are going to Durham to keep Thanksgiving, and expect E. and N. to meet us there. The first sleighing, we will go to Litchfield ; and if you do not come before you must certainly return with us and spend the Winter here. How is your head now ? Does it ache ? If it does not, you may read Mr. Goodrich's Law books ; if you are not able to do that, you may play cards. Write to me and tell me of every thing. I am not yet so estranged from you, as not to feel an interest in every thing which interested me when I was with you. Give my Love and Duty to my Parents, also Mr. Goodrich's ; and accept of our best wishes for yourself.

I am yours most sincerely

M. GOODRICH.

Mr. F. Wolcott.

FROM MR. GOODRICH.

DEAR FREDERIC

Hartford, Jan^y 25, 1790

In Obedience to the Commands of my dear Wife, I have stayed at Home from meeting, to preach and be preach'd to, by our fireside ; and now our sermons are ended, I cannot find a better Employment than writing to you, though I have nothing of any consequence to send. But really the principal Object of the Letter is to tell you how much we want to see you here, for the fates determine that we shall not visit Litchfield. We both of us fear that an uninterrupted attention to your studies will not suit your Health; and think it will be best promoted by coming to the circle of your friends. When you was with us Mary Anne's health was at a low ebb; since it has improved, and she is generally free from fever, and makes all the folks happy. I have known her worth for many years, but to me she appears every day with additional lustre. Her ill health has prevented her from shewing the improvements of a refined and affectionate Courtship, and of the sober maxims and useful sentiments of domestic and married life; but this being removed, we now have them all in full blossom. It is pity, Frederic, that you should not enjoy them as well as the rest of us. Another Inducement for you to come is that our Court is and will be in session for this fortnight, and you may hear a great Quantity of pompous nonsense, and your Brain may be relieved from its exertion which is quite ugly for the Headache. Again, as the Lawyers say, our Ladies who have been for Mo^s shut up by the Influenza and bad roads, daily and nightly now sally forth, and I think were never more lovely, sensible, or witty. And so Mary Anne thinks too, and we are also well agreed that in these respects she excells them all. But if you meet with nothing else you will find two folks, who are happy themselves, and will be more so by your company. We understand that you are highly improved in the sweet powers of music, and as our family is mostly destitute of that enchanting commodity, except in the female voice, we shall be much delighted by the agreeable addition you will bring to it. When a man's own wit fails him, it is very handy to have a ready stock in his wife's brain to draw upon; and mine, to drag out this Letter, has bid me to tell you that our Assemblies are most brilliant; at the last were forty Ladies in most superb attire, among whom was Mrs Goodrich in a most elegant fancy dress. And also, that if you are pleased with scenes of a more serious and solemn kind, we have a most excellent Methodist Preacher, who one evening in every week calls our attention from trifles, to subjects grave and awakening.

When I robbed your House of Maria, I intended that she should have revisited it sooner, but there has been no means of conveyance. We mean to send the Girls under the care of my honest Man Daniel, if there should be sleighing before the Court rises. Remember us affectionately to our Parents. I am, Dear Frederic, your affectionate Brother

[Hartford] March 28, 1791

I should have answered your good Letter the next morning after I received it, but the Posts demands are so unreasonable that I do not think my letters are worth it. I have now for several days had nothing to do — or rather have not been allowed to do any thing — but though it is a state which most of mankind would think very enviable, I do not believe that it is at all favourable to Happiness, or the gentle mild virtues of Contentment and Benevolence. I believe we generally behave better when we are guided by the impulse of the moment, or go on mechanically without reflection, than when we pretend to reason and lay plans of conduct. In short I have a poor opinion of this dame Reason; she is constantly intruding upon one's privacy, and pointing out some insurmountable obstacle in the road to our desires, and shewing us the unsubstantial fading texture of that fine fabric with which Fancy has veil'd them for our view. How poor indeed, and unworthy of a rational and an immortal mind, do almost all our pleasures appear when analys'd by Reason. Let me then banish this enemy from my bosom — this spoiler of my peace, who is always suggesting to me that I am not happy, and discouraging all my exertions by pointing out to me that I am a creature of a few days, and that the years draw nigh when I shall say I have no pleasure in them

DEAR FREDERICK

April 3^d

I ask your pardon for sending you a part of an old Letter; it is to let you see that I have not been altogether unmindful of you — indeed I have thought much of you for a fortnight past, for I have had nothing to do but think and build Air-Castles. I am now imagining that I shall have the pleasure of seeing you here before long in the Capacity of Deputy from Litchfield; when this happens, I request you to come and put up with us; and I will teach you how to manage state Matters, and how to make Public Good subservient to your own Interest. We have read your piece entitled Popular Magic, and we desire the next time that you will favour us with some-thing a good deal better. In the next place we would remind you that Mr Flints ordination is the 20th of April A. D. 1791; — a word to the wise; if you do not take the hint, I shall allow you but little credit. Chauncey and I wish to know whether you have receiv'd any answer from P. since you wrote last. I have not heard directly from there since last Feb. . I am sorry to hear that your head continues to ache; it will be better when the warm weather comes on: let this encourage you. — [Remainder lost.]

FROM THE SAME.

DEAR FREDERICK

Hartford, 13 Aug. 1793.

You have at present some severe trials to support, but I trust that better days await you; you must not be discouraged. Your filial Piety is spoken of with esteem, and will meet with the promis'd reward; your days will be long and honourable in the land, and your posterity, to the third and fourth generation, will call you blessed.

Mr Goodrich is very desirous to have you come here this week or next; you will easily believe we all wish it, but you must consult your convenience. I was glad to hear that Mama grows no worse, and may perhaps get some better. I hope you will attend to Papa's health and encourage him in moderate exercise and to live generously. It is supposed that Mr Sherman and Gen. Wolcott brought on their disorders by too great Temperance in living. I hope our Father will be a comfort to himself and a blessing to us for a long time. My duty and Love to him and my Mother.

In haste I remain yours ever

SIR

Smith's House, near Phil^a, Sept. 21, 1793

I have engaged Doct. Smith's house near the falls of Schuylkill, for temporary offices, which I hope will render it unnecessary for me to enter the City while the danger continues — myself & the family through the favour of God having hitherto escaped sickness.

My imagination could not have conceived of such an alteration as happened in a short time in Philadelphia. I left town myself last evening; business was suspended; a great proportion of the houses deserted; every face was sad; all intercourse avoided; no man would speak to another except at a distance; the once busy streets were nearly as silent as at midnight. These dismal appearances were however in a great degree the effect of panic. The alarm has extended to the neighbouring towns; a military force is stationed on all the approaches to Maryland; the people of New Jersey & New York are said to have forbidden all intercourse. Their language and conduct appears to us to be rather severe & inhospitable; but perhaps we are not impartial judges. Great caution is doubtless necessary and proper to prevent the introduction of so desperate a calamity.

To increase the despondency, there is a difference of sentiment among medical men as to the proper mode of treatment. Some have abandoned their Posts ; others are disconcerted. A few resolute & benevolent men stand their ground and keep alive some exertion. In my opinion, public statues ought to immortalize the generosity of some of the sect of Friends who have ventured their lives in this time of general calamity. I am I believe well informed of the real state of the business, & in my opinion the Malady has within a few days abated.

Be pleased to make our respects acceptable to our Mother & brother Fred^d.

Oct. 1st, 1793

I wish it was in my power to inform you that the distress of Philadelphia was diminishing. I fear however that there are yet no grounds for such an opinion. Every day adds to the melancholy catalogue of ruined families, and new circumstances afflicting to humanity.

The alarm which has spread through the Country adds much to the distress. The Citizens are confined at home by the same causes which interrupt their usual supplies ; the prices of the necessaries of life are at the same time augmented and their employments are at an end. Though the danger is such as to justify some caution, yet oppression ought not surely to be added to calamity.

I see that the Connecticut papers propose that measures be taken for the general safety. I sincerely hope that nothing more will be done, than to secure an inspection of Vessels from this Port. You may be certain that the approaches to this City are so watched, that a man who can reach Connecticut by Land, cannot have the fever. It is as well ascertained as the case will admit, that the contagion becomes active in the constitution in four days ; and it is still more certain that no man can travel after he becomes affected. I should much regret any regulations to interrupt intercourse by Land ; they will not indicate either good sense or humanity.

By the blessing of God we are well, and we desire to be remembered to our mother and the rest of your family.

I am with great respect your obed^t son

Hartford, 7th April 1794

My health has been very good for some time past ; I have now a severe cold imprudently caught by standing in the air last Sunday to look at the dreadful fire we had here. I shall if possible go to Litchfield next week. Distressing as it will be to me, I have a great desire to see my dear Mother once more ; it is perhaps sinful to wish her sufferings may be prolonged a single hour, but I have felt thro' the whole of my confinement as if I should see her before her death, and as if I could not otherwise acquiesce in the dispensation. Give my best love and duty to my Father, and tell him it has been my first wish a great while to be able to go and see him.

I shall send Papa a piece of salmon.

I will bid you adieu.

Hartford, Monday Morning

I received your letter, my dear Frederick, just as we were leaving New Haven. My father I left in very good health and spirits, tho' much engross'd by business. He will come home on Saturday on the Stage, & expects you to send his horses here.

I shall be much pleased with such a jaunt as you mention, but I cannot engage to be gone a week. You know I have a long journey to prepare for, and must economize my time. I will promise however to make you very happy, and have already laid several plans for that purpose. You have indeed been much confined lately, & I sincerely wish you would accompany us to Philadel^a, or at least as far as N. York. We shall go in Rice's Carriage with Senator Hillhouse and Citizen General Tracy; there will be plenty of room for you, so I beg you to think seriously of it.

New Haven folks, especially the women, are most terribly angry at Mr G. for quitting Miss W. They say he has been engaged to her seven years, and now he writes her a civil letter informing her that he has been so unfortunate as to fall in love with Sally T., and cannot possibly fulfil his promise to her Ladyship — and so wishing her a great deal of happiness he bids her adieu. I had several reasons for taking the gentleman's part, which I did with some zeal. I told them it had always been an established practice with the Litchfield Ladies to steal the hearts of all the Gentlemen who came there, and that I thought a New Haven Lady must have a degree of modest assurance to expect to keep her sweet-heart after he had seen the Litchfield beauties!

My compliments to our friend Mitchell.

Expecting to see you soon I bid you adieu.

DEAR SIR

Hartford, Nov. 18, 1796

We set out for Philadelphia on Tuesday morning, where we mean to arrive at the commencement of the Session. Since it is evident the enemies of our peace and welfare mean to do us mischief and embroil our affairs, it is fortunate their intemperance has propelled them so clearly to eclaircise their views. This Country will not be cajoled by soft words, nor intimidated by any menaces or insults to yield its essential prerogatives.

You will write me often ; cooped up as we shall be in the pestiferous atmosphere of knaves and fools, we shall want the breathings of northern genius upon us. If I can get a moment to write your father, I mean it ; if not, you will make to him our acknowledgments of affection and respect. I bid you farewell with our love and cordial wishes for your enjoyment this winter, and subscribe myself your affectionate friend

Gray's Gardens, Sept. 15, 1797

Betsey writes me that you are in your office, by which I know you are much better ; pray take care of yourself, and in particular, wear flannels and dress warm ; you know I suppose myself to be a skilful physician except as to the administration of medicines — that branch I have yet modesty enough to leave to the faculty.

My father I understand yet rides daily and is supposed to be gaining health gradually ; his disorder not being of an acute kind, a rapid convalescence is not to be expected. I fear it will appear too dull & uniform an exercise, to ride constantly about home ; perhaps you may find it convenient to visit our friends in Hartford or elsewhere with him ; but of this you are the best judges. My sister Laura is I am happy to hear perfectly well ; on the whole my news from Litchfield, though not the best, must be considered as good.

Here I am at Gray's beautiful Gardens ; we have the Green House for offices for the clerks &c. I have a small room in the Tavern, furnished with a bed, and as many books & papers as a poet's chamber, but not containing one line or sentiment at all poetical. Compared with the situation of thousands who have left the City, I am in a paradise ; but notwithstanding, I question whether I enjoy myself as well as Adam did, even while a bachelor — which was far from being a state of perfect happiness.

The state of things in the City has been better for two or three days, but whether the disorder is really diminishing, or whether there is any unusual disorder, are questions upon which I have latterly had some doubts. The depopulation is prodigious; nearly two thousand Houses are shut up, and almost all business suspended. The Doctors dispute, frighten people, bleed & give mercury; robbers break houses; and prudent people who are able, get away as fast as possible. I do not see but that I must stay about here to have some oversight of my business & to watch my House; but I shall be prudent & take care of myself.

My visit has done me a great deal of good. I have had opportunity to reflect on the folly of working too much; and have seen, what I had not seen for years before, how rational people live in the Country. I shall be wiser during my life, for the last journey.

Please to present my respects to my father & love to Laura. Remember me also to Messrs. Tracy, Allen, Smith, Sheldon, Reeve, &c.

Yrs with sincere affection

FROM MR. GOODRICH.

MY DEAR SIR,

Philadelphia, Dec: 8, 1797

Your obliging attention had beforehand familiarized to our expectation the news yesterday announced to us of our beloved Parent's death; in mingling my sensibility with yours, I bewail the loss of both the venerable personages of my attachment and respect.¹ And while their exit endears to me the rich legacy of their virtues they have left behind for our imitation, it admonishes us of the uncertain hold we have on life, and the blessings of beloved and useful connexions. The scene our feelings have been and yet are so much interested in, was strikingly diversified, teaching us what indeed we well knew, tho' not habitually realized, that we may go hence with little or no sense of our departure, or with severe struggles of our nature & convulsive shocks. We shall however do well not to confine our view to the single point of the Exit of our dear Parents out of life, for perhaps even in that, infinite benevolence has been no less at work, than in the circumstances of their lives. I think on review we have reason to acknowledge that the allotments of Providence towards them were kind in respect to what they had to do, suffer and enjoy. And having done much and extensive good, we may humbly hope that they have passed to a state of blessedness.

I hope repose and reflexion will afford a quick relief for your sufferings in body and mind. The best of blessings remain to us; we will improve them wisely, and they will not on our quitting them, or being quitted by them, add the stings of reproach to the pain of separation. Indeed my sorrows except on account of my Mother, Mary Anne & my sister, have ceased to be painful; they are precious and will ever remain precious to my heart. And I cannot but console myself that they will all be refined in this furnace of sore trial yet more than ever to bless and be blessed.

I need not use many words to assure you how much all my affections are with you; you will believe it, pray write me often. Adieu, and Heaven bless you. I remain with the sincerest attachment your Brother

CHAUNCEY GOODRICH

FROM HIS BROTHER.

MY DEAR BROTHER

Philæ, Decr 13, 1797

We have heard the tidings of the death of our revered parent and most sincerely do we mingle our tears of condolence with yours on this afflicting occasion.

The death of a venerable man such as you have witnessed is a scene which more than any other is calculated to produce strong and various emotions. The strength & greatness of the human powers, the dignity of virtue, the consolations arising from moral rectitude when other things have lost their value, prove the elevation of our nature, and support our faith in a future existence. On the other hand, the pain, the imbecility, and the dissolution of our bodies, are instructive & mortifying lessons to human pride.

If however, as ought to be the case, the stroke of separation is agonizing in proportion to the value of him we have lost, still we are not without peculiar consolations. Our father arrived at the destined term of human life, in the whole course of which he was an example of whatever is good or great in our nature; in scenes of difficulty and danger to himself and country, he supported what is most valuable — a good character; we have reason to believe that he is promoted to the enjoyment of happiness in a more glorious state of existence. Let us imitate his example & perform for the present age, and for ourselves in a future world, our duty.

I certainly wish to be with you, but it is impossible. My own health would suffer & be endangered by travelling this season. Mrs Wolcott has been tolerably well; the children have both been sick, but are recovering. She joins me in affectionate expressions of love & friendship to you & Mary Anne.

MY DEAR BROTHER

Philadelphia, 6th Dec: 1799

We arrived here in safety last Saturday evening, and had the pleasure to find our brother's family in good health. You may have heard that we came near being lost in attempting to come by water to N. York. We were indeed in very great danger, but a kind protecting providence preserved us. The weather was mild, and the wind favorable, when we went on board the packet, and it was not till we had got out of the harbour that we discover'd that our vessel was very leaky, & deeply laden with salt & other heavy articles, & commanded by a fellow ignorant, stupid, & dishonest. About midnight the wind got ahead & blew a heavy gale; this, together with the swell which was very great, strained the vessel till the leak in the hold became large enough for a man to thrust in his arm. In this situation we were, with a number of hogsheads of sugar and salt on deck, that were not lash'd, rolling about; the lower deck lying under water, & every wave beating over the quarter deck, the hold almost full of water, & twenty passengers as sick as mortals could be — when the helmsman quitted the helm & swore it was impossible to save the vessel. She was, however, with much difficulty got about, and at ten o'clock next day we got into Milford, after a night of such distress, that I cannot think of it without shuddering.

Laura is here yet with Charles, waiting for a conveyance to Nazareth. We have taken lodgings at the distance of one square from Oliver's. We are agreeably situated; Mr Brace and Brother Elizur live with us.

I suppose you have the President's speech — and how do you like it? There is an answer reported to the house, but they have not yet acted upon it.

I think Mrs Wolcott is in as good health as I have ever seen her. She and her husband and Mr Goodrich join me in love to you, and request that you will write often to some of us. Present my respects to Mr Huntington and your household, and kind regards to Mrs Tallmadge, etc.

MY DEAR BROTHER

New York, Dec: 26, 1808

I have rec^d your Letter of the 19th instant and wish that I could converse with you a few Hours; but as this is impossible, I will give you a brief statement of my opinions.

Any project which cannot be executed without producing a Civil War, must be a bad one. New England is actually divided in opinion respecting the present policy of our Government. If a new question, still more intricate than the question of Embargo, is agitated, it will not compose any existing controversies, but increase them.

There is no instance of a State having voluntarily renounced its name and authority; we must presume the measure suggested to be utterly impracticable in Connecticut, etc.

But if practicable in New England, I assure you it would excite the utmost alarm and hostility here. New York is now a powerful State; will she consent to become comparatively a weak State, or a section of a large State, in which she is not to possess a controlling Influence? Certainly not.

I might extend the reflections arising out of this simple view of the subject much further; but it is unnecessary. It must be evident to your mind that a change of the Government, at the present time and in the present state of Parties, can only be produced by a Civil War. Who is to gain by a Civil War? Not you, nor I, nor any of our Friends and Connexions.

Will our Country generally be a Gainer? In my opinion a Civil War will be the signal for Factions to arise, directed by Foreign Influence. The consequence will be the subjugation of our Country, or the establishment of a Despotism. I am utterly opposed to all violent projects at this time, and will resist them by whomever recommended. Let us wait; the Embargo does not distress the Federalists more than the Democrats, and the former can bear it as well as the latter. When all Parties are united, as they will be if we are prudent, we can control the measures of the Govt. If we once get the command, changes may be made beneficial to the Interests of the Commercial States.

The World is in a critical state. The suspension of Commerce is not peculiar to this Country. The Commerce of the World is suspended. The English say they like our Embargo; so say the French, and we say the same. The Pride of every Country is concerned in not admitting that they can be ruined by a suspension of their Commerce. The truth is, no Country will be ruined, but all will suffer great losses and inconveniences. Where the chain will break I cannot say, but let us not break it and incur the danger and disgrace of appearing to take a side opposed to the cause of our Country.

The pressure upon the Country may however become so extreme, as to render it necessary to do something, in order to prevent the people from ruining themselves by some act of Rashness. It should be the part of wise men to moderate and guide their Passions ; but at all events I pray you to preserve the forms of our Institutions, till a more quiet and auspicious period for reforming them.

With love to you and yours and to my Dear Children, I remain in haste

Your affectionate Brother,

OLIV. WOLCOTT

MY DEAR BROTHER :

New York, May 3^d 1811

I think that the Election of our Cousin Griswold may be rendered of permanent advantage to the State. It is time to mitigate the dangerous rancour of Party Spirit; to cultivate American sentiments and feelings; and to extirpate from Federalism the poisonous mixture of Toryism, with which it has been too much alloyed of late years. We have nothing to hope from any foreign Government. Our dependence must be on God and our own resources; and the sooner they are brought into activity, the better will be our condition.

New York, May 11, 1811

If you think as I do, you will resist in the most public and decided manner, the project of the New Haven Resolution Matters. I respect the Gentlemen whose names are given to the public; but as I believe that they have totally mistaken the Interests of the Country and their duty, I will not march with them in the Road to Ruin. I shall consider Connecticut as nearly ruined, if the Assembly gives countenance to the opinions expressed in the Resolutions. Depend on it, that you and I cannot live long enough to repent the consequences of a mistake on this subject.

New York, Nov. 22^d 1811

It is impossible for this Country to recede from the principles which it has contended for, without ruin. The Government has certainly the right of the question and ought to be supported. This will be the general sentiment of the Country; and no body of men who abet the claims of the British Govern^t will be able to maintain their influence with the people. It is impossible for Commerce to revive while the British system continues. Non-importation, or War, are our alternatives; and if smuggling can be discountenanced without war, that will be best for the Country in general.

Yrs. affectionately

I have been informed of the very afflicting event, which has deprived you of an excellent Wife, and your Children of their affectionate Mother. I can say nothing to diminish the sensibility of your feelings on this occasion; it is certain that your and their loss can never be repaired.

The deceased has attained a more exalted existence, as the reward of virtuous actions performed in this life. Your probation, my dear Brother, is not yet finished, and I hope you will not forget that your exaltation is also to depend on your conduct. To yield to despondency, would be to desert the station in which the Providence of God has placed you. You have new motives to preserve your life and the vigour of your mind, that you may the more efficiently perform the additional duties for which you are responsible to your Children, your Friends, and your Country. Unless we discharge these duties, we are not permitted to hope for the approbation of Heaven.

My Children join me in expressions of affectionate sympathy and condolence with you and our common friends.

I remain, D^r Brother, truly yours

I am just informed by Mr Holmes's letter of Mrs Wolcott's death. I feel for you all with a tenderness I know not how to express. If I was with you, my heart would commune with you in all its griefs. Now, alone by myself, I sympathize with your bereaved family circle, and mourn our loss. It is indeed ours; for our beloved friend, thro' the merits of our Redeemer, on which she has reposed, has, we humbly trust, found the felicities and rewards of her piety. The same divine grace which shed peace and triumph on her last moments, can alone sanctify and console bereaved relatives and friends. I join with them in supplications for the blessings of the good Spirit on us all, and commend you and your dear children to the divine care.

I am, with real sympathy,

FROM THE SAME.

MY DEAR BROTHER :

Washington, April 25, 1812

Your letter of the 14th, that came by yesterday's mail, unbosoms to me your griefs on the death of your beloved wife. My heart, be assured, receives them all, and sympathizes with you in your sorrows, with fraternal affection. I pray that the Spirit of grace may invigorate your mind with humility and resignation, and give you the supports and consolations of the gospel. It is matter of pious joy and grateful acknowledgment to the Father of lights and of love, that he was pleased to sustain our dear friend in nature's last and great conflict, and enable her to add to the example of a good life, resignation and the triumph of hope in death. The beams of divine goodness irradiating the bed of a dying saint, shine with peculiar lustre. While it sheds light on the dark valley, thro' which we pass to immortality, and sustains the departing spirit on the way, it assures survivors of the efficiency of the grace of the gospel, and the prevalence of the intercessions of our exalted Redeemer in behalf of his beloved children. It is the grace of the gospel that connects us with heaven, and holds forth hope of our union with its blessed inhabitants. If we ask aright, we shall receive whatever of grace may be necessary for us both in life and at death. Our path then will be made to shine more and more unto the perfect day. We also shall inherit the promises together with those who go before us.

As we go along on our journey, we are not only getting onwards nearer and nearer to its end, but acquiring new and tender interests in that future state, to which we are going. It is the abode of our friends and relatives. There are our parents, brothers, sisters, and wives. Our best hopes and wishes tend upwards to them, to their and our Father in heaven. But we are left on the course of life, where there is much suffering from which they are relieved, and many duties remaining, in which they were partners with us. Why they are taken from the last, when it would seem they were both willing and able to do great good, and at the very moment when they were about it, and we hardly know how their places are to be supplied, if indeed they can be supplied at all, appears to us strange. We know little, and very imperfectly that we do know. Why is an affectionate and discreet wife taken from a husband, who in her intercourse with him is alluring his heart to the cause of religion? Why is the intelligent, pious, and fond mother taken from a group of little children, when by God's own law of our being she seems to have been constituted their priestess, in their tender age, to lead them to himself, the great end of being? If left to us, we should order otherwise. Notwithstanding, in these, as in every thing else, the providence of God is right, wise, and good. His will is a perfect law, and his pleasure is a father's good pleasure. How favoured we are that our interests, especially our immortal interests, are in his hands. Our dear friend experienced all the advantages of this blessed truth. She gave up her soul and all that was most dear, to God, in full assurance of his accomplishing his good and wise purposes for his own glory, in reference to herself and them. Her memory will be pleasant, her example instructive, and her death consoling and animating.

She has left you a rich legacy in her children, to whom she performed all the maternal duties while permitted to act, and whom with her expiring breath she dedicated to her Heavenly Father. She sought for them the blessings and promises of the covenant, which comprehends both parents and children. It has not failed, nor will it ever fail. Your own loss—and what it is the great Disposer of events has taught me to feel, once and again—is swelled in its dimensions by your children's loss. Our friend will be missed in all the relations and concerns where she moved—most in the maternal. Her parents under the weight of years now look in vain on earth for the delight of life and the favourite object of affection. But the saint in heaven has left you and them and her children most precious gifts, most endearing comforts. Your loss is great both because it comprehends what was delightful, good, and useful in social life, and for its intimate connexion with the nurture and education of your children. Even on this point, where you are tenderly touched, your loss is thus great because of its relation to the great blessings which a kind providence has vouchsafed to you. The divine benignity is every where, and every where active; it visits the dwellings of sorrow, watches over the silent recesses of the tomb, and will awake the slumbering dust to fresh vigour and immortality. Affliction, tho' it comes under dark and forbidding aspects, is one of the most necessary and salutary branches of parental authority and love. Whom our Father loveth, He chasteneth. Let your heart stay itself on his mercies and promises. Christian submission to his will is amongst the most unequivocal evidences of Christian virtue, and the most difficult and sublime attainments in the Christian graces.

I have been called to a large share of family bereavement; my house is bereft of its delights. But the visions of the past often come in pleasing remembrance, to solace the solitary hours, that sit heavy on me. How little have I profited by the merciful and corrective discipline of providence towards me! How illy am I qualified to point your thoughts to the true sources of religious improvement and consolation! Near at hand is the Man of our counsel, inexhaustible in instruction and comfort. Inspired wisdom best teaches us meekness and humility so becoming our state and our dependence on God, the only Rock of ages. It opens to the benighted mind the only rational hopes of the favour of our God and immortal happiness.

I regret my absence from you, and the more, as it is still uncertain how long it will last ; if we do not have a short recess, our session will be protracted to an irksome length.

The Vice President died about nine o'clock yesterday morning, full of years and public services. His funeral is to be attended to-day.

Mention me kindly to the children, and respectfully to our friends. Write as often as your leisure will permit, and believe me ever

I wrote you a few lines the week after my return from Litchfield & have been in hopes of receiving a letter from you ; the Death of our Dear Child is constantly in our thoughts, and every object is gloomy, and the thought of not seeing her again fills us with anguish ; it is our duty to be still. God gave and has a good right to take away ; to this our Judgment assents but our feelings revolt.

I presume you feel the Loss of your dear Wife equally with her Parents. When we are deprived of our earthly comforts we must seek to God for support ; he has promised that those who seek shall find. Our afflictions are very grievous to be borne by us, but we are Assured they will work out a far more exceeding & Eternal weight of Glory. That Being who sends these trials will grant those consolations which the World knows nothing of ; and when we can by faith embrace that promise, all things will work together for our Good. We often think of you & feel for you in your disconsolate situation, & we pray that you may be comforted and supported.

It would be very gratifying if we could step in and see you & the dear Children with the rest of your family, though the visit would be a gloomy one, our dear daughter being gone. Your children with us are well as are all our family and friends. Mrs. Huntington & the Children unite with me in affectionate Love to you & your Children, Mrs. Williams and Cousin Jabez. Please to remember me to Mr. & Mrs. Reeve.

New York, July 1st 1812

A crisis has arrived in our public affairs, which I have long considered inevitable. I wish the Country was better prepared for war, and better united than it is. Our principal danger is not from the force of the Enemy, but from our own divisions. Every man must judge for himself, and all ought to be willing to tolerate the opinions of others. In my opinion, the Government ought to be supported. We may endure the privations of a foreign war, but a civil war will destroy every thing—liberty, freedom, property, and perhaps, national independence.

Col. Gibbs will call on you at Litchfield in a few days, and perhaps I shall have occasion to request you to keep Eliza till I can make some arrangement for her. My love to you all, and remember that I am ever yours.

Washington, Nov. 2, 1812

I have had an easy tour to this place, where I arrived in good health, Saturday. The Senate has adjourned without a quorum, a single member being wanted.

At Philadelphia I first met the afflictive intelligence of Gov. Griswold's death. Altho it came in a form to claim credit, my mind brooded in gloomy silence over the hope that it might not be true, till I came here, where the painful news was confirmed. I have lost one of the best friends of my early life, with whom I have been unreservedly intimate and confidential for many years. It is indeed a wide breach, and at a time when, it seems to us, as if his services could not be spared. We can reconcile our minds to the event only on the ground that our relations in private life, and the dispensations of providence in the deaths of eminent public characters, are arranged and ordered by perfect goodness and wisdom.

Make my remembrances to Mrs Williams and Mr Huntington, and give my love to the children.

Before I rec'd your letter, I had rec'd the mournful intelligence of the death of our beloved Sister, Mrs Moseley. The information was very unexpected to me, as I had before understood that she was recovering. I should have made an effort to be present at the Funeral, if the state of my Health had permitted ; but having suffered considerable pain from rheumatism, I was afraid to expose myself to the rigor of the season.

I humbly trust in the merciful and just Disposer of events, that our Sister, after having performed her duties to God and Mankind, in an acceptable manner, has exchanged the cares and anxieties of this probationary Life, for a state of permanent Felicity. The number of our Friends is fast diminishing, and this ought to strengthen the ties of affection between those who remain.

I will acknowledge that in forming my opinion on certain political questions, I have experienced no small embarrassment by finding that my judgment respecting them did not accord with yours. The respect I have ever been in the habit of entertaining for your opinions on all questions will always incline me to hesitate, and greatly to distrust my own judgment, when I find my opinion on important questions varies from yours. Every person, however, must act according to the dictates of his own conscience, and according to his judgment. No honest man can act differently. He must either be silent and inactive when questions which involve the essential interests of his Country come under consideration and are to be decided, or he must support and advocate the measures which he conceives to be correct. I hope, however, I shall never be found to support the measures of any party indiscriminately, or because they are the measures of a particular party. And if I be so unfortunate as to differ from you on any of the questions which divide our Country, I have no apprehension that opinions, honestly entertained, can ever endanger our friendship, or diminish our mutual confidence or respect. I am no Friend to civil dissention, and cannot be benefited by it. If I have any influence, it will be exercised not merely in supporting the institutions of this State, but in maintaining our national Government in the exercise of its constitutional powers. I may judge incorrectly respecting the extent of these powers, but it is impossible that I should not act according to the dictates of my Conscience and Judgment.

Litchfield, Oct: 1820,

Saturday at Noon

I write to communicate to you the painful intelligence of the death of your dear little Brother, Chauncey Goodrich Wolcott. My dear Child, how it distresses me to inform you, that yesterday at half past two o'clock P. M., while at play in the kitchen, he ran backwards and fell into a kettle of very hot tho' not boiling water, which was set on the hearth the moment he reached it. His mother saw him tumbling into it and he was instantly taken out, and two pails of cold water were immediately thrown upon him, and afterwards every medical aid was afforded — but all in vain. As lovely and promising a child as was ever born, is taken from us, and we can only grieve and forever lament his death. May our kind Parent in Heaven enable us to sustain this very severe bereavement, and make it productive of everlasting good to us all.

I send the bearer to Hartford with my Horses and Wagon, to bring you home to attend the funeral. I can only inform you further, that the rest of the family enjoy health.

In haste, your affectionate Father.

F. WOLCOTT

TO ONE OF HIS SONS.

DEAR —

[Litchfield—1824]

I do not write at this time because I have anything special to communicate, but I wish to assure you of my constant remembrance of you, and of my regard. I am very glad that you find leisure frequently to write to your Mamma and Sisters. I think your correspondence with them will be beneficial to you; you are certain of their perfect and disinterested regard for you, and your Mother is very capable of giving you advice which will be worthy your attention.

We have been much gratified with the information we have had, from various sources, that you continue to conduct, as we expected you would, with strict propriety, and that you give satisfaction to the Gentlemen with whom you live. It is hardly possible that you can fully realize the importance to yourself, of the character and the habits which you are now forming. You observe an amazing contrast in the conditions and characters even of those who are considered men of business, and persons of good standing. Almost the whole of this diversity of character and condition, has arisen from the habits which these persons acquired, within a short period, when of your age. If you now associate with persons of respectable character, and merit their confidence, you will continue thro' life to associate with such, and will acquire the honours and emoluments which they now enjoy. A young Gentleman whose connections are good, and on whose character there is no stain, can just as easily form his acquaintance and friendships among persons of respectability and culture as with those who can never benefit him, and with whom an intimacy would be degrading. How much more rational a satisfaction you enjoy in the confidence and regard of your friend, DANIEL WADSWORTH, than you could possibly have from any intimacy with low-minded and vulgar men.

If you meet with no special misfortune, you will succeed in life, if you start on a correct plan. Be, from principle, invariably an honest man, and a man of honour. Be habitually accurate and industrious. Be obliging and respectful to your superiors in age; this will conciliate their friendship, and incline them to favour and benefit you. Treat with civility your equals in age, and all with whom you may have occasion to associate; but form your particular friendships and intimacies with the utmost caution. Constantly aim at acquiring the character of a man of business and of honour, and take special care that you become, not superficially but in fact, well qualified to do business, and then your success will be certain.

Whenever you have leisure, as far as your health will permit, I hope you will not fail to read with attention Books, from which you will obtain solid and useful information. Most of the reading of our young men is merely for amusement ; such reading, tho' it may occasionally be indulged in, can be but of little use. Remember that your first object must be, to acquire information which it will be indispensable for you to possess ; when this has been fully accomplished, you may read for amusement, if you please. No man can succeed in any kind of business, till he become thoroughly acquainted with the principles on which it is conducted. If you regard your own ease and character and comfort in future life you will not forget or disregard my intimations on this subject. Your future prospects depend, in a great measure, on your exertions this year. If you go through this year favourably, you will find, the next year, that you are enjoying the advantages which a good character has acquired for you ; and the information you will have obtained, will render your business more easy. Every day devoted to laudable pursuits renders a life of virtue, honour, and comfort more secure. It is because I have confidence in you, that I say these things to you. If I expected nothing from you, and had no regard for you, I should not trouble you with such observations.

Your sisters will write to you. Be very careful of your health, and let us hear from you when convenient. Remember me respectfully to the Messrs —.

Your affectionate Father

FREDERICK WOLCOTT

The votes which Judge Wolcott received whenever his name was proposed to the people showed that no man in the State had a stronger hold on the confidence and regard of his fellow-citizens. And though no man was ever less covetous of office and popular applause, he would have been elevated to a higher station, had he not felt that his health was inadequate to its cares and responsibilities. For this reason, he declined a nomination for the office of Governor, which on two different occasions was tendered him by a convention of his political friends ; in both cases, their final nominee was elected.

He was an accomplished belles-lettres scholar, and kept up his acquaintance with the ancient classics. He was a gentleman of the old school, of the most pure and high-toned sentiments, and distinguished alike for the benignity and delicacy of his feelings and the suavity of his manners. The compiler of this Memorial recalls with great distinctness a pleasant afternoon and evening passed at the mansion of Judge Wolcott, in the spring of 1834, and the impressions made alike by his mingled urbanity and dignity, and by his delightful reminiscences of WASHINGTON and the other leaders of the Revolution, whom he had personally met, when in his youth he visited his brother at the seat of Government.

He was retiring and modest, almost diffident, unless there was a principle to be asserted, and then he was unwavering and unyielding. His love of truth and justice, and his loyalty to duty, were paramount to all personal considerations. Above all, he was a humble disciple of Christ, and adorned his profession by a blameless life.

He died at Litchfield, on Sunday morning, May 28, 1837.

A Funeral Sermon was preached by his pastor, the Rev. Jonathan Brace, from a manuscript copy of which we give the following extracts:—

He was a man of sterling integrity; all believed that whatever he did was right, or at least that he sincerely believed it to be right. Great confidence was therefore reposed in him, which in no instance was abused.

His judgment was uncommonly sound and mature. It may be doubted whether there was a man in the State superior to him in this respect. This singular ripeness of judgment was universally acknowledged; hence those frequent cases in which he was called to arbitrate. His mind was a good mind,—well-balanced, well-disciplined, well-furnished, and well-regulated by common sense and experience,—and most accurate in those conclusions to which by patient investigation it arrived.

Another trait of character which he possessed was magnanimity. His standard of honor was an elevated standard. The dignity of his person was not an assumed, fictitious dignity. It was the medium through which a large, magnanimous soul manifested itself. His stately figure was a fit tabernacle for its spiritual occupant,—an occupant that scorned every thing narrow and sordid.

He was likewise a generous man; the amount of his contributions to worthy objects was great, in proportion to his means. Every charitable enterprise received his cheering smiles and patronage. No meritorious, suffering cause passed him unrelieved. The fountain of benevolence in his heart was not sealed up, it was always open. This secured him many friends, which suggests one other feature in his character,—friendly feeling. He was pre-eminently formed for friendship, and he did not desert his friends; he was alive to their good qualities, and loved them so long as such qualities continued to exist.

He died at home, in the bosom of his family, deprived of nothing which could minister to his comfort; and now that he is no longer upon the earth, we send our thoughts upwards to Heaven, assured that he is happy there. This church feels keenly the afflicting stroke; it has been deprived of an exemplary and valuable member. He was emphatically a mediator between parties; equally removed from wild enthusiasm and empty formality, and sound in all his sentiments, he could lay his hands on extremes and bring them together. A spiritual man himself, and devoted to the best interests of Zion, he could be relied on in every emergency.

The loss is a public loss. Our deceased friend did not live for himself alone; as a neighbor and a citizen he was every thing that could be wished. He was a man who could always be found; and when found, was always seen on the side of education, good order, and public improvement. And if there was a man in the village whom the aged respected, and to whom the young looked up with reverence, that man was FREDERICK WOLCOTT. But he will be seen in our streets no more. He is gone, and he is the last of his order. REEVE has been carried out before him. We go to commit his remains to the same home, to mingle with the same dust, that they may rise together, glorified spirits, in the morning of the resurrection.

An obituary notice of him appeared in the "New York Commercial Advertiser" a few days after his decease, from which we extract the following passages:—

"His clear and comprehensive mind, combined with a tender conscience, furnishing strong instinctive and enlightened perceptions of right and wrong, admirably qualified him for an arbitrator and judge. All his official duties were discharged in a most exemplary manner, and those who required his services and counsel will long remember the fidelity, purity, urbanity, and ability with which they were performed.

"But the charms of his character were most attractively unfolded in the peaceful and retired scenes of private and social life. In these he most delighted to move, and in these it is most pleasing to contemplate him. Possessing a singularly modest and unassuming deportment, a frank, generous, and cordial disposition, he loved the exercise of those kindly offices which pertain to the citizen, the neighbor, the friend, the father, and the Christian. In the performance of the varied duties incident to these interesting relations, he was pre-eminently happy. In these the daily beauty of his life was developed in all its loveliness. Fitted both in form and feeling to command respect and esteem, the dignity of his person and the magnanimity of his soul marked him one of 'nature's noblemen.' He rejoiced in relieving the distresses of the widow and the orphan; delighted to bind up the broken-hearted, and to pour the oil of consolation into the bosom of affliction. Meek and merciful, pure in heart, and a peace-maker, like his great Master he went about doing good. Hence he was appropriately denominated the patriarch of the village, a pillar in the church, a luminary in the land. The memory of this revered patriot, philanthropist, and Christian is embalmed with pious affection in the hearts of many; the sweet fragrance of his virtues will rise in holy incense from his tomb. Let us all emulate his noble example in life, so that we may 'die the death of the righteous, and our last end be like his.'"

"I make the same claim to retain among the names of our departed brethen that of Hon. Frederick Wolcott, of this village. He became a member of this bar in early life, and with high prospects of professional distinction; but he accepted the proffered offices of Clerk of the Courts and Judge of Probate for this district, in 1793, and soon relinquished professional duties. For several years he was a prominent member of the Council, under the Charter administration. An intimate connexion with this gentleman, both public and private, justifies the high opinion I have ever entertained of his purity of life and character, his public spirit, and his frank and open bearing. I never pass by the venerable mansion of the Wolcott family, in my daily walks about this village, without recalling the stately form and ever honorable department of Frederick Wolcott. The duties of his official station were discharged with the entire approbation of the community for many years, and until a short time before his death, and amidst the conflicts and overturnings in the political revolutions of the times."¹

"In the old school of truth and honor bred,
Guarding alike the living and the dead,
Thy WOLCOTTS, grave, inflexible, sedate,
Honoring at once the nation and the state,
Before us pass. The Treasury and the Bench,
With moral courage, never known to blench,
The one adorned; the other calmly wore
The robe of righteousness, laid up in store
For him who lives trustworthy to the end—
The widow's counsellor, and the orphan's friend."²

Two excellent portraits by Waldo and Jewett, of New York, are in the possession of his eldest sons, and the preceding engraving was executed by Halpin, of New York. He was of fair complexion, of commanding stature, and most dignified mien; and his character evidently did not belie the outward semblance of THE MAN.

The family monument in the Litchfield cemetery, erected by his sons, bears the arms of WOLCOTT. Of the group on the next page, engraved by Richardson from a drawing by Hosier, the left is his, the right, his brother Oliver's, and the middle, his father's, in the rear of which is seen the head of the monument of his son Henry.

REVIEW.

The preceding record is that of the last member of the Family who has been prominently identified with the public affairs of Connecticut. From the settlement of Henry Wolcott in Windsor, 1635-36, to the decease of Frederick Wolcott in Litchfield, 1837,—a period of two centuries,—the history of this little Commonwealth can hardly be written without a partial biography of some member of the Family. A brief review seems suitable at this point, especially as the preceding pages have been supplied with few connecting links, except such as were furnished by the Family Records themselves.

The early generations were almost exclusively identified with Connecticut, though connections were formed with a few Massachusetts families,—Appleton, Corwin, Eliot, Freke, Goffe, Price, and Russell. We have mentioned (p. 65) the marriage of Mary Wolcott (41) and John Eliot. In the record of the Eliot Family, given in Mather's "Magnalia" (I. 479), special mention is made of the ecstatic death-bed experience of John Eliot, father of the above-named, who died in 1668, and a regret is expressed that some of his wonderful utterances have not been preserved. Among the papers of the descendants of Mary Eliot's kindred, the writer found a manuscript, yellow with age, containing, among other things, "A Speech of Mr. John Eliot upon his Death Bed." As a striking historic corroboration, and an authentic, antique souvenir of this family, we furnished a copy for the press, to which we refer the reader,—"Congregational Quarterly," VII. 193, 194.

What individual share Henry Wolcott and his sons may have had in the pioneer labors and hardships which preceded and attended the settlement of the Dorchester Company in Windsor; what in the construction and manning of the Palisado, which was relied on as the protection of the families from the surrounding savages; and what in the sharp, incisive campaign against the Pequods, under the command of Capt. John Mason, of Windsor, in 1637, and which resulted in the destruction of the hostile Indians and their fort at Mystic together, — does not appear from the records. The spirit of religious fervor, or frenzy it might be termed, with which the extermination of these fierce men was prosecuted, such as breathes through the lines of Roger Wolcott which we have quoted (p. 110), finds full expression in the harangue of the eloquent preacher to the troops, as reported by Edward Johnson, in the “Wonder-working Providence of Sion’s Saviour in New England,” a sentence or two of which we quote: —

“The Souldiers arriving in safety at the town of Hartford, were encouraged by the reverend Ministers there with some such speech as follows :

. . . . “You, my deare hearts, purposely pickt out by the godly grave Fathers of this government, that your prowess may carry on the work, where there Justice in her righteous course is obstructed, you need not question your authority to execute those whom God, the righteous Judge of all the world, hath condemned for blaspheming his sacred Majesty, and murdering his servants ; every common Souldier among you is now installed a Magistrate ; then shew yourselves men of courage. . . .

“And now the Lord hath prepared this honour for you, oh you couragious Souldiers of his, to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and correction among the people, to binde their Kings in chaines, and Nobles in fetters of Iron, that they may execute upon them the judgements that are written ! this honour shall be to all his Saints,”¹ &c.

The divine edicts against the ancient Canaanites stood our Puritan ancestors in good stead in their wars with the Indians. The separate jurisdiction of the Connecticut Colony was established in 1639, by the adoption of its first constitution.

“The men who formed this constitution deserve to be held in everlasting remembrance. They were not ignorant, or rash, or timid men. They were Ludlow and Haynes and Wolcott and Hopkins and Hooker, and others of kindred spirit ; men of clear minds and good hearts, — men who, in their views of civil and religious liberty were far in advance of their age, and who, under the guidance of a kind

Providence, introduced a form of government which for two centuries has secured to the people of this State a measure of peace, of liberty, of order and happiness not surpassed by any other people on earth.”¹

“The constitution which was thus framed was of unexampled liberality. More than two centuries have elapsed; the world has been made wiser by various experience; political institutions have become the theme on which the most powerful and cultivated minds have been employed; dynasties of kings have been dethroned, recalled, dethroned again; and so many constitutions have been framed or reformed, stifled or destroyed, that memory may despair of a complete catalogue; but the people of Connecticut have found no reason to deviate essentially from the government established by their fathers. The laws of honest justice were the basis of their commonwealth; and therefore its foundations are lasting. These humble emigrants invented an admirable system; for they were near to Nature, listened willingly to her voice, and easily copied her forms. History has ever celebrated the commanders of armies on which victory has been entailed, the heroes who have won laurels in scenes of carnage. Has it no place for the founders of States, — the wise legislators who struck the rock in the wilderness, and the waters of liberty gushed forth in copious and perennial fountains?”²

With the civil administration which followed, the Family were associated from the first, the senior Henry, and his eldest son and grandson of the same name, having under this instrument, in successive generations, held the office of Magistrate; and this brings our record to the early part of the succeeding century. It covers the season of gloom, terror, and suffering connected with the breaking out of King Philip's War, in 1675, in which they took their share of the burden of Connecticut, that freely contributed her quota of men and of means to the common defence. The Indians within her own borders remained friendly; and though for two years this savage war was the common affliction of New England, its desolating track did not cross the Connecticut Colony, — the Plymouth and Massachusetts Colonies being the theatre of its ravages, but the sons of Connecticut yielding their lives in its battles.

We have already referred to the following half-century (p. 80), and the entrance upon public life of Roger Wolcott, the grandfather of Frederick

² Bancroft's Hist. U. S., I. 402, 403.

Wolcott. The French wars which succeeded, and the siege and capture of Louisburg, in which he bore a part, need no further recital here. Measuring his achievements by his scant early advantages, and estimating his innate force by this standard, he is to be recognized, perhaps, as the historical head of the Family. If his title to this distinction is not clear on personal grounds, it manifestly belongs to him as the father of the stalwart sons whom he trained for his country's service. Not less than four of them bore a distinguished part in its annals; all of them prominent in the State Assembly, one of them Speaker of the House, one of them Lieutenant-Governor and Governor, two of them Members of Congress, three of them Judges, and two of them Generals in the Army; while two of his grandsons succeeded to the Governorship. The part which the Family, at that period, bore in the council chambers of the nation, and in the fields on which its destiny was decided, is sufficiently indicated in the preceding pages.

We have stated (p. 112) that the Governor took liberal ground on ecclesiastical questions. While jealous for the liberties of the churches, and resisting any tendency to priestly usurpation, he shared the convictions stanchly held by the Puritans, and which they had proclaimed from the elder Winthrop down, that a Christian government was bound to provide for the religious welfare of the people, and make good the inspired prediction that kings should be nursing-fathers, and queens nursing-mothers, to the church of Christ. The racy letter which follows was addressed to one who had been a Congregational minister, and having declared for Episcopacy, and obtained a commission from the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, was disposed to set aside the civil regulations of which he had availed himself in his previous charge: —

Windsor, Jan^y 30th 1752

Yours of the 11th of this instant I acknowledge & observe that the late Bishop of London was of Opinion, that the Religious State of this Country is founded upon an equal Liberty of all Protestants; none can claim a national Establishment, nor any Superiority over the rest. As far as I can know any thing about it, this Government is of the same Opinion, & that this is the best Foundation of Love & Peace.

Yet it is certain the Charter grants us a Power to govern the People religiously. This must intend something, & if it be not a Power to set up the Gospel & support it & to oblige the people to attend the Publick Ordinances of it, it is nothing: for where there is no Religion, there can't be any acts of Government about it.

When the Charter was granted, there was scarcely a Chh man in the Country. It was chiefly settled with Congregationalists & Presbyterians, & these two Sects are now intermixt in almost all our Plantations, and where either of these Sects were able separately to settle & support a Minister, they were never denied, & the like Liberty is granted to all other Protestants; and the Professors of the Chh of England are expressly allowed this Liberty. But when in any of our Plantations one Sect was not able to settle & support a Minister, the Law is that they shall do it joyntly, and this without any View or Consequence of setting one Sect above another, but as a thing necessary for the Being of the Publick Worship in our Plantations; and this order has flourished for more than 100 years. The Chhs settled in our several Plantations have flourished in Peace & Love &, I hope, in abundant Increase of Godliness, & no one Sect in all this Time have complained y^t they were made inferior to another. And altho' at this Time y^e Congregationalists & Presbyterians together support the same Minister, yet neither of 'em think themselves superior or inferior to the other.

And is there not the same Reason that the Professors of the Chh of England, that are not able to settle & support a Minister of their own, neither live so near that they can and do hear one, sho'd have the same Easiness to be looked upon as no ways made inferior by it? Especially since it is necessary it sho'd be so, in order to support the Gospel and oblige 'em to attend the publick Ordinances of it.

You inform me that those that submit to you, meet every Lord's Day, worshipping according to the Liturgy & read Sermons. I suppose all this without any Minister — & suppose this had been allowed to the Presbyterians, Congregationalists & all other Sects from the Beginning — no publick meeting Houses, no Order, no Sermon preached, no Officers to take notice of, or punish Omissions in Attendance — what can we conclude, but that the People wo'd have been without Knowledge, & even almost without the Trace of Religion, w^{ch} I believe you will acknowledge to be generally the Case in all the Places of his Majesty's Dominion in America, where no Care is taken of Religion by the Government? And if the Professors of the Chh ought to be left at this Liberty, so ought every other Sect: and all wo'd sink into a mist of Ignorance & Profaneness.

When these things are well considered, I think the Apprehension of our setting one Sect above another will cease, & the Society will be satisfied. For I presume the Society for propagating the Gospel will never be fond of using their Power to screen men from attending the publick Ordinances of it.

But I am concern'd to find that you purpose to enter the Prison when the Execution is served, & tho' I can't supersede the Judgment, yet I sho'd rejoice to be a means to prevent your going to Prison. And why, Good S^r, sho'd a Gentleman of your Estate & Character be so fond of going to Prison ?

The reason y^t you intimate is y^t it will not sound very pleasantly at Home, & I may say that it will not sound very pleasantly here, for it is indeed a moving thing to see a Gentleman of the Clergy go to Gaol. But wise & good men will consider the Legality of the Action & Justness of the Cause & Censure accordingly. And in this Case it will be found, y^t you were not committed for your Religion, nor forced into the Law & condemned beyond w^t you are able to bear, but upon a Judgment obtained against you in a civil Action, brought by yourself, & so is no more than is the Case of every other Subject.

You further observe you are a Member of one of the greatest Societies in the Nation & Missionary from another. Wise men will always allow you all that Respect that is due to your Character, but will hardly allow you to be bigger than the King, who is much in the Law and often cast, but has never yet pleaded his character as sufficient to exempt him from abiding the Judgment.

You further observe that you shall be committed for non Payment of an Execution for a Tax taken from your Parishioner. 'Tis the first Time I ever heard that an Itinerant was Minister of a Parish. I have heard that your Mission extends all over New England ; if so, you've a large Parish. Be that as it will & admitting y^t all you say is true, yet it was a Question whether you had a Right to y^t Tax, & in bringing your action you claimed your Right to it by the Statute & prayed the Opinion of the Court upon it. The Court determined it against you ; 'tis impossible you sho'd be wronged in this Case, unless the Court denied you a fair Tryal or erred in Judgment, but of these you don't complain. When these things are duly considered, good S^r, this Action of yours may rather blemish than serve your Cause as merely voluntary to stir up Resentment without suf^t Grounds.

But I submit the Matter to you, & if you think there is nothing in what I have s^d, yet be assured it was done to serve you, & is all, I think, that at present I can do in this Case, consistent with Reason & the Law. You'll therefore excuse the Freedom I have taken & esteem me

Your Friend & humble Serv^t:

Of the characters sketched in this Memorial, none appears to the writer to have excelled in symmetry that of the senior Oliver Wolcott. Like most of the prominent actors in his day in our country's affairs, he was called to bear a part both in military and civil relations. The papers which he addressed to Governor Trumbull, and which appear on pp. 170-175 of our work, are a fresh and valuable contribution to the literature of the war. They were taken from the Trumbull MSS., now in the possession of the Massachusetts Historical Society, and we are indebted to the courtesy of that Society for permission to copy them. Of the hundreds of his letters which have been preserved, we have not noticed any which are not pervaded with the same good judgment and good feeling as those which we have selected for the Memorial.

With a character of such excellence as his, the relation of slaveholding was not, in his day, regarded as in the least degree inconsistent. The Declaration of Independence was partially accepted, and happy would it have been for the nation had it been universally construed, as the national abolition of the system. We have given (p. 183) his own manumission of a slave, at a later day. We here annex a copy, which we find among our papers, of a Bill of Sale to him of a slave, several years before, as illustrative of the times :—

Know all men by these Presents That I Eunice Gardiner of Hartford in the County of Hartford and Colony of Connecticut Administratrix on the Estate of William Gardiner late of said Hartford Dec^d for and in Consideration of the Sum of Thirty Pounds Lawfull money to me in Hand Paid and received to my full Satisfaction of OLIVER WOLCOTT Esq^r of Litchfield in the County of Litchfield & Colony aforesaid Have and by these Presents do Bargain Sell and Deliver unto the said Oliver Wolcott and to his Heirs and Assigns a Certain Negro Girl named Zillah of the age of about Ten Years a Slave for Life To Have and to Hold the said Negro Girl unto him the said Oliver Wolcott and to his heirs and assigns to his & their only use and behoof for and during the Natural Life of the said Zillah, and I the said Eunice Gardiner do Covenant to and with the said Oliver Wolcott his Heirs &c. That I have good right and Lawfull Authority to sell and dispose of the said Negro Girl in manner as aforesaid and that the said Zillah at the time of Delivery and Ensealing hereof is sound and free from any Bodily Distemper whatever and shall and will warrant her to be so as well as against all Lawfull Claims of any Person or persons whatsoever In witness whereof I have hereunto Set my Hand and Seal this 26th Day of March Anno Domini 1768.

Right and wrong are immutable distinctions, but different standards of right and obligation have obtained in different ages of the world; and if we are somewhat surprised at the low standard here indicated as prevalent on one point, among "the saints in the earth, and the excellent," we are nevertheless cheered by it, as one among many tokens of the steady advance of humanity.

The scope of our work has not allowed us to enter upon the political discussions of that day, which compose the bulk of the papers before us. Mr. Wolcott took a lively interest in all public questions, but his spirit was calm and judicial, free from the heat of partisanship. We should have referred in its place to his service as Delegate to the State Convention, which met in Hartford, Jan. 3, 1788, to act upon the proposed National Constitution. The master-spirit of this Convention, as he had been of the National Convention which adopted the instrument, was Oliver Ellsworth, whose earnest advocacy of its ratification was ably seconded by Oliver Wolcott. The latter remarked of it:—

It effectually secures the States in their several Rights. It must secure them for its own Sake, for they are the Pillars which uphold the general System. The Senate will secure the Rights of the States; the other Branch, the Rights of the People.

He utterly condemned the imposition of a test.

In the measures which followed the close of the war and the adoption of the Federal Constitution, the financial problem came, unavoidably, to the front as one of great importance and concern, and on this subject he took firm and unambiguous ground.

National Reputation is undoubtedly of the last Importance. This must be supported by a determined and apparent Effort to do substantial Justice ; by an unequivocal Punctuality of Payment in the Manner and Time proposed ; by being always in a Condition to provide against untoward Accidents ; and by a firm Union among ourselves.

“ The party denominated federal having prevailed at the elections, a majority of the members were steadfast friends of the constitution, and were sincerely desirous of supporting a system which they had themselves introduced, and on the preservation of which, in full health and vigour, they firmly believed the happiness of their fellow-citizens and the respectability of the nation greatly to depend. To organize a government, to retrieve the national character, to establish a system of revenue, and to create public credit, were among the arduous duties which were imposed upon them by the political situation of their country. With persevering labour, guided by no inconsiderable portion of virtue and intelligence, these objects were in a great degree accomplished.”¹

OLIVER WOLCOTT, Esquire,

Governor and Commander in Chief of the State of Connecticut,

A PROCLAMATION.

When the Supreme Ruler of the Universe has liberally conferred his blessings upon a people who enjoy the inestimable benefits of divine revelation, it becomes in a special manner their duty to adore their beneficent Creator with public thanksgiving and praise.

IMPRESSED with this sentiment and contemplating the many favours which by the dispensations of Divine Providence the people of this State have enjoyed the current year, I have thought proper by and with the advice of the Council and at the desire of the House of Representatives, to appoint, and do hereby appoint, Thursday the 22^d day of December next, to be religiously observed as a day of PUBLIC THANKSGIVING AND PRAISE to Almighty God, throughout this State ; hereby recommending to Ministers and People of every Society, Church and Congregation, to assemble on said day and devoutly render their tribute of praise to their Almighty Creator, for the various manifestations of his goodness towards us: particularly, that it has pleased God to grant to his people the blessing of general health; and prospered our agriculture, commerce and manufactures and other of our lawful vocations and employments; and continued to us the unmolested enjoyment of the blessed Gospel of Christ Jesus, the Saviour;—to supplicate the Almighty to continue to us his favour and blessing, and make us sensible of our dependence upon his providence and disposed to manifest the sincerity of our gratitude by a cheerful obedience to the Divine Will.

That thanks be rendered to Almighty God for the prosperity which he has granted to our Nation; that our liberties and Independence have been preserved and a national peace established; that God has preserved the life and important usefulness of the President of these United States, and to supplicate the Almighty to continue to him divine aid and protection.

That God would ever influence and direct the public councils and administration of this State and of the United States of America, and render them subservient to the important ends of their Institution; that our nation may always be under the protection of a most gracious Providence, and that no evil machinations may be permitted to disturb our National Union and Peace; that the precepts of our holy religion may have their proper influence upon the conduct of mankind; that righteousness and peace may universally prevail.

All servile labors are forbidden on said day.

Given at the city of New Haven, the thirty-first day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-six, and the twenty-first year of the Independence of the United States of America.

OLIVER WOLCOTT

By his Excellency's Command,

SAMUEL WYLLYS

Secretary.

He was honored with official trusts to the very close of his long career, which seems to have been singularly free from the annoyance of detraction and defamation. The prevalent sentiment of personal kindness towards him was expressed in Mr. Goodrich's congratulations on his accession to the gubernatorial chair.

I am happy to find from your letter of the 15th, and others from my friends, that your election has been conducted with so much unanimity, and so highly for the honor and welfare of the State. I need not add my sincere wishes that your virtuous administration may be followed with your own personal happiness.

“ No resident of the town ever achieved a more honorable and wide-spread fame than OLIVER WOLCOTT ; and no name in the historic annals of the town and State in which his life was passed, is more earnestly and affectionately cherished than his.”¹

His son, the second Oliver Wolcott, was probably gifted with the strongest intellect which the Family has contributed to the country. His mind was logical and his judgment comprehensive, and he had the faculty of lucid statement. His mental traits appear fully in that portion of his published correspondence to which we have frequently referred, — the two volumes compiled by his grandson. It should be borne in mind that only a part of his papers have yet been printed ; and none of his extended and earnest political discussions are embraced in our own work. The intelligent reader of the whole will not probably dissent from the judgment expressed by his correspondents, — repeatedly by his friend, Fisher Ames, as quoted by us on pp. 267, 290. He was well fitted for that work of civil construction which followed the scenes of successful revolution in which his father and uncles participated.

Something like the interest with which we trace a celebrated stream to its source attaches to the letter which follows, recognizing the first association with the Supreme Court of one who was destined to become its distinguished ornament, and forecasting clearly the traits which became illustrious in Washington's biographer and the future Chief Justice.

FROM MR. HOPKINS.

D^R SIR

Richmond, January 18th 1795

This will be handed to you by, and is to introduce to your acquaintance, my friend, John Marshall. He is your friend and the friend of every good Republican citizen, whether he comes from the East, West, North or South — but a great political foe to every man whose principles are the reverse, and whose object is confusion and disorder; and some such, alas, there is too much reason to fear we have amongst us. He goes to Ph. to argue the cause before the Supreme Court of the U. S. between the British debtors and creditors upon an appeal from the Virg^a Circuit. I wish you to become acquainted with him. You will find him possessing great liberality, solid sense and judgment; an agreeable companion, free from all party prejudices or passions; an upright, candid and, in fine, an Honest Man.

Who is to be the Secretary of the Treasury? Are you? It is so expected and believed here, and I may add, desired.

Yours sincerely

Oliver Wolcott, Jr., Esq.

FROM REV. DR. ELIOT.

SIR

Boston, May 9th 1801

The MASS. HIST. SOCIETY, at their last meeting, directed me to make their particular acknowledgments of your care and kindness in sending the transactions of Congress while you were Secretary of the Treasury.

It is one of our Regulations to give publick thanks to our benefactors thro' the medium of a Newspaper. But this is not sufficient to express our gratitude to one whose assistance has been of such advantage to the Institution. Many of these papers, we are well persuaded, would not have been procured but for your attention to the business. These now make a handsome, as well as very useful, part of our Library, and often bring to remembrance the worthy Corresponding Member, thro' whose hands we received the valuable present.

With the highest esteem, I am, Hon^{ble} Sir,

Your much obliged and hum^{ble} servant,

JOHN ELIOT

Cor. Sec. Mass. H. Soc.

His political correspondents and valued friends, to whom he wrote so freely on public affairs, were the trusted leaders of the Federal party; and the ties of mutual confidence and affection which subsisted between them were somewhat rare in public men. Foremost among them was the beloved and revered Federal chieftain; and it is the published testimony of a political opponent, that "Oliver Wolcott of the Treasury Department was more perhaps in the unreserved confidence of Colonel Hamilton, the chief of the party, than any other man."

Another of the group, and probably the most brilliant, was the Massachusetts Representative, Fisher Ames, one of whose eloquent speeches in Congress received the compliment of an immediate adjournment of the body, that its members might be able to vote calmly on the subject on which they had been addressed. Mr. Wolcott's intimacy with this gifted and charming man is sufficiently apparent from the shreds of their correspondence which we have given. In one of the letters which we have not quoted, Mr. Ames writes to him thus: —

Dedham, Jan. 12, 1800.

I am flattered exceedingly by your frankness; I know that it is a mark of your trust both in my friendship and discretion; you do not lavish such things. I am not behind Mr. Cabot in regard for you, and I will add in respect, too; he alone shall know the contents; they are a treasure which I should be unworthy to possess if I could not bring myself to destroy. I will do it after I have read the letter a hundred times more; yet I confess, however informing, I was not quite unapprised of most of the circumstances detailed in it. My knowledge is now more perfect on each article, and much the more comprehensive for your assistance.

Another of his most endeared and confidential friends has just been named, — a Massachusetts senator of great influence, distinguished by the dignity of his presence, to whom his later successor, Daniel Webster, paid the following tribute on an anniversary occasion: —

“The mention of the father of my friend brings to my mind the memory of his great colleague, the early associate of Hamilton and of Ames, trusted and beloved by Washington, consulted on all occasions connected with the administration of the finances, the establishment of the treasury department, the imposition of the first rates of duty, and with every thing that belonged to the commercial system of the United States, — George Cabot of Massachusetts.”¹

After Mr. Cabot's voluntary retirement from political life, President Adams offered him the Secretaryship of the Navy, which he declined; nothing could draw him from his chosen retreat. In one of his letters to Mr. Wolcott occurs the following domestic sketch: —

MY DEAR SIR

Brookline, Aug. 3, 1801.

We are in a very pleasant village, five miles from the centre of Boston, sufficiently retired, yet within visiting distance of several agreeable neighbors, besides the accessibility of town friends. My family consists of Mrs Cabot and my only daughter (a girl of sixteen) and myself. My farm is very good as well as pleasant, and my love of ease is more gratified than is salutary. I am not rich, yet my income is as great as my expenses, and my expenses as great as my desires. Mrs Cabot is in better health than when you knew her. We visit very little, yet we are not long solitary. A single man and three females form our list of domestics, the former of whom drives us round the country every fine day. The labor of my farm is performed altogether by a tenant, to whom I give specific benefits, that he may have no control over the management ; and the benefits are liberal, that he may be happy, and tied to me by his interest. When I have no living company, I call upon the dead, who are always ready to come from my library and entertain me.

Among the friends who contribute greatly to my happiness, Mr Ames is almost the only one with whom you are acquainted, but you can easily conceive how precious he is. Our intimacy, and I believe our mutual attachment and confidence, have continually increased. He lives seven miles from me, and sometimes takes my house in his way to or from Boston ; and I often go to Dedham to see him. We never meet without talking of you, and expressing our desires to see you. I shall indulge this hope till it is realized. You know so well that Mrs C. and I wish to see you and Mrs Wolcott as our guests, that when you come to this part of the country, you will certainly make our house your home.

Yours affectionately and faithfully,

GEORGE CABOT

After his release from confining duties, Mr. Wolcott visited his old friend at his delightful residence, and upon his return home sent him the following reminiscence of the visit : —

Litchfield, Aug. 28, 1802.

I often think of the felicity of your situation ; and you will believe me, when I assure you that the reflection affords me the highest pleasure. In the vicinity of one of our most wealthy and polished towns, surrounded with those friends whose society you prefer, with a mind disposed to review the events which have passed, and in a situation which affords you early information of those which are passing, you at once realize the great objects of human pursuit. May you long live to enjoy them, and if possible, may they be increased.

Another of his intimate associates was Joseph Hopkinson, of Philadelphia, who lived till 1843, and was a leading member of the Convention for the Revision of the Constitution of Pennsylvania in 1837. He was a physician in Philadelphia, in successful practice, but his intense interest in politics, which does not seem to have affected his genial temperament, brought him into civil office, and he was appointed District Judge. He was President of the Academy of Fine Arts, and is known in literary circles as the author of "Hail, Columbia!" To his letters already given we add the following:—

JUDGE HOPKINSON TO MRS. WOLCOTT.

MY DEAR FRIEND

Philadelphia, July 31, 1800

My little woman being from home when your letter came to hand, I took the liberty to read it before her. It was impossible to refrain; my feelings have always been an over match for my politeness. Be assured my heart gave its kindest welcome. While it reviewed the memory of times past and pleasant to the soul, it introduced the sad reflection that they will probably return no more. With what delight did I look upon even the imperfect representation of yourself! How did I dwell on every line and word that brought me once more into conversation with my dear kind neighbor. You desire Mrs H—— to prevail on me to write to you, can you believe that anything more is necessary than to know my letters would be acceptable to you. I cannot have a greater pleasure than to write to you under this assurance. Mrs H—— was excessively disappointed in not receiving a line from you by Mr Wolcott, by whom I believe she wrote to you. She impatiently looked day after day, for a letter from you, and I fully united in her anxiety, indeed you are very dear to us both, and the loss of your society has not been and will not be compensated to us. Our children have all been pretty severely handled with hooping cough particularly the little girl, which obliged me to part with them all and my wife in the bargain for several weeks past. Mrs H was three weeks at Bordentown, and has now been three more in Northampton county, over the mountain at our friends, Mr Stroud's. I forwarded your letter to her, knowing I could not bestow a greater gratification

Business comes on with me much better than I could reasonably have expected. I shall keep my chin above water. I am determined I will not say one word about politics, to convince you that whatever my propensity towards them may be, I like my freinds better, and can write to them without perplexing them on this fruitless topic — I mean fruitless of advantage

You may depend upon hearing from us from time to time, and do not neglect to let us know frequently how you and yours come on.

Most truly

Y^r friend & h[']ble serv^t

JOS HOPKINSON

FROM THE SAME.

MY DEAR SIR

Philad. Septemb. 25, 1803.

We received the letters from Mrs Wolcott and yourself with that excellent satisfaction which the kind remembrance of such friends affords. Although it is a very long time since I have heard directly from you, I have kept a pretty steady eye upon you, and never neglected an opportunity of enquiring after your welfare. You will be assured there was much joy in our house when we were informed of the very honorable and advantageous situation you have acquired in New York. We could not indeed but reflect how much better it would have been if the same thing had happened in Philadelphia ; but as it is, we feel so much within reaching distance, as to give us a hope of seeing you sometimes. A journey to New York I shall consider as a very inconsiderable impediment, in comparison with the pleasure of spending a few hours in your parlour, after our old manner.

Remember me in the sincerity and truth of friendship to your wife and my kind neighbour. I must and will see you all again together,

Most truly and affect^{ly} y^{rs}

JOS. HOPKINSON

Oliver Wolcott, Esquire

Still another of this circle of personal and political friends should be named here, — Mr. Josiah Quincy, of Boston, the representative of a family then holding a distinguished rank, which it still retains. Mrs. Adams, referring to him in one of her letters, writes: " This young man is a rare instance of hereditary eloquence and ingenuity, in the fourth generation. He comes into life with every advantage of family, fortune, and education, and I wish him all the success which such auguries naturally present to him in prospect." At the age of thirty-five, he was the leader of the Federal party in the House of Representatives at Washington. After leaving Congress, he was chosen the first Mayor of the city of Boston. On his retirement from politics, he was elected to the presidency of Harvard University. He survived his ninety-second birthday, retaining his faculties to the close of his life,—an object of veneration to the generations that had grown up around him. His intimacy with the Wolcotts, to which we are indebted for one of the portraits given in the Memorial, appears to have commenced through the accomplished young lady who became his wife, and who had been previously intimate with them.¹ We give such parts of a few of his letters as can be detached from the political topics which they freely discuss, together with an extract from his published diary, relative to his visit to New York on his way to Washington, travelling with his wife and daughter in his own carriage, being about a month on the road.

FROM MR. QUINCY.

SIR

Boston, 30 Sept. 1801

I enclose to you the last volume of the publications of the Historical Society and all of the Agricultural.

We reached home in four days from Litchfield, and found nothing terrible on the Hartford side of your hills ; nothing which the recollection of the attentions and pleasure we had received from our visit did not make appear trifling obstacles. It is impossible for Mrs Quincy and I not to reckon the time passed at your house as the most delightful part of our excursion, as well as not to dwell upon your promise to give us in the Spring, by a long visit, a chance of returning a few of those many kindnesses which you and Mrs Wolcott found means to extend in so short a time.

I have found in no part of the United States I have visited, so much calmness in the political sky as about Boston. The confidence of monied men seems to increase exactly in proportion as the evidences of want of stamina in government multiply. The mass of men never think that the ship can sink or fly to pieces in a calm. I have been, I confess, more at a loss to account for this than for any of the late occurrences, as it has happened directly contrary to my expectations. However, I suppose that all theories that relate to men in a mass are very apt to be found erroneous.

Present me with all respect to Mrs Wolcott, in which Mrs Quincy unites, together with our best wishes for the happiness of yourself and family.

I am, Sir, your most obed^t serv^t

FROM THE SAME.

SIR

Boston, 26 March 1802

I enclose the last publication of our agricultural society. I cannot omit this opportunity of reminding you and Mrs Wolcott of the promise you made of visiting us this spring. Not only Mrs Quincy and myself, but many very numerous friends of ours in this place and neighborhood will be delighted by your performance of it. My little daughter already begins to plan little schemes of amusement for Miss Eliza or Miss Laura. We hope you will not disappoint one so near to us ; but bring one or both with you. I know Mrs Wolcott will be happy in being informed that Mrs Quincy presented me, about two months since, with a fine Boy, and that both mother and child enjoy the most perfect health.

I will say nothing concerning the aspect of our political affairs. It is so gloomy that to say little would not do justice to my own feelings, and to write much, as little justice to yours. I cannot help however anticipating even with pleasure that despondence and regret, which conversations with you on this subject will occasion me, at a time when your and Mrs Wolcott's presence in my family will make every other object bright about me.

With respects to Mrs Wolcott, in which Mrs Quincy joins,

I am y^r most obed^t serv^t

SIR

Boston, 31 Aug. 1802

You will have seen by the public prints before this reaches you, that your address has been published ; I hope with as much correctness as publications of this kind are usually made.

Present me very respectfully to Mrs Wolcott. We associate recollections of you and your lady with the objects of our domestic scenes, and delight to remember that you have been with us. Our home is more valuable to us on this account, and my wife and family often recur to it with gratitude and satisfaction. You shall hear from us more fully hereafter.

With great respect,

I am your most obed^t serv^t

JOSIAH QUINCY

Oliver Wolcott, Esq.

“Dec 9th. Dined with Mr. Gracie, at his country-seat, about eight miles from New York. Gracie is a merchant of eminence, a particular friend of Mr Wolcott, through his attachment to whom I am probably indebted for his politeness to me — the dinner having been made particularly on my account. Wolcott's character of Gracie is, that he is one of the most excellent of the earth — actively liberal, intelligent, seeking and rejoicing in occasions to do good. I have great reason to be gratified for this attention. His seat is upon the East River, opposite the famous pass called Hell-Gate. The scene is beautiful beyond description. A deep, broad, rapid stream glances with an arrowy fleetness by the shore, hurrying along every species of vessel which the extensive commerce of the country affords. The water, broken by the rocks which lie in the midst of the current, presents a continued scene of turbulent waves, dashing, foaming, and spending their force upon the rocks. The various courses every vessel has to shape, in order to escape from the dangers of the pass, present a constant change and novelty in this enchanting scene. The shores of Long Island, full of cultivated prospects, and interspersed with elegant country-seats, bound the distant view. The mansion-house is elegant, in the modern style, and the grounds laid out with taste in gardens. Judge Pendleton, Dr. Hosack, Mr Wolcott, and Mr Hopkins, were of the party.”¹

FROM MR. QUINCY.

DEAR SIR

Washington, 11 Dec. 1805

I cannot express how much I value your excellent and kind communication. All the hints, personal or political, I can only promise to note, and make the rule of my conduct as far as you can expect or wish.

I thank you for your hint not to commit myself upon a certain question. Be assured I am as aware of the consequences as you can possibly be, and I promise to throw the lead every inch I advance. If I get upon the breakers, it shall be from an overscrupulous zeal for the real interests of my country, and not from an overhasty eagerness to lead, or to follow, on a course unexplored.

You will see from the papers that I have taken a very small share in the debates. It was my intention not to have taken any at an early period of the session. But from the state of the house I find it inevitable. It is impossible for me to vote on any question without having some public avowal of the principle on which I agree or differ, given either by myself or by those whose coincidence in political sentiment with me will, in explaining their own, justify my vote. But I find an inertness in most of these, in relation to such explanations, that I cannot acquiesce in. It seems to me that the more correct and honest the views disclosed, the more honour to our party, and the sooner the best men will rise out of their down-trodden state. I mention this to you by way of apology. I put the spur and the rein into your hand. Urge me up to the mark, or force me back if I exceed the proper limit of duty or just reputation.

Washington, 5 Jan. 1806

For my own part, I have no sort of apprehension of engaging the enemy at close quarters. If our little band be beaten for the present, it is no matter. It will show our spirit and harass the adversary. The time will come, and in my opinion it is not many years distant, when we shall gain the victory. The best maxim of life, which I endeavour always to keep in my mind, and to infuse into practice, is the Sibyl's parting advice to Æneas :

*Tu ne cede malis, sed contra audentior ito,
Quam tua te Fortuna sinet. Via prima salutis,
Quod minime reris, pandetur.*

Thus most classically and most sincerely

Hon. Oliver Wolcott

FROM THE SAME.

DEAR SIR

Boston, 11 March 1821

I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 6th inst, with respect to my address, I apprehend you "understand it as well" as I do myself. I did not seek the opportunity of writing it, but yielded, in undertaking the task, to a sort of moral compulsion; which however I did not regret. In executing it, I restricted myself only to say what was true, and what I believed. As to theories, I have none; nor yet application of principles therein stated to the particular conditions of the U. S. For a long time yet to come we must have armies and navies and military apparatus. But that in proportion as the moral and intellectual condition of the mass of mankind improves, wars will diminish, I cannot doubt, and that in an exceeding high condition of both, they will be of exceeding rare occurrence, and even the custom annihilated, I believe. But as that time is at a great distance, I quarrel not with the fashions of my own times, and am rather disposed to countenance than to condemn them; provided always that they require little wear of purse and no tear at all of conscience.

As to pauperism, it is an unexplored depth, and one of the most difficult as well as of the most important of all objects of investigation. The poor come in shoals from Nova Scotia & Ireland; and we must find some means to reduce the number, or we shall all be candidates for the almshouse. Our legislature have taken it up very seriously, but whether any thing will come of it, remains to be proved. I think, however, we shall want nerve to apply the only efficient remedy.

It gives me great pleasure to receive from yourself a testimony of your recollection of me. And it will be a great gratification to be permitted, as you propose, occasionally to hear from you.

The season reminds me of my farm and I am preparing to renew my addresses to that coy nymph, Agriculture, who is eternally promising to bring you riches for a dowry and is always disappointing your expectations. What shall we farmers do? Indian corn at New Orleans is at 25 cents the bushel. Here it was sold last week for forty cents. Yet wages continue at but little below their old level. The business, however, is as good, all things considered, as Law or Commerce, so that we have no great reason of complaint.

Mrs Quincy desires to be affectionately presented to your recollection with Very truly & respectfully

His Excellency

Oliver Wolcott

If you have not received the last numbers of our agricultural repository, published by our society, I will transmit them to you.

Mr. Wolcott was the last of Washington's Secretaries to retire from the cabinet of Mr. Adams, in which he had remained by invitation. His colleagues had been dismissed, or asked to resign, by the President; he withdrew, at length, of his own accord. The matter is referred to in the correspondence which we have given, but without details; and for this reason it may be worth while to quote the testimony of a historian so impartial as Mr. Hildreth, who thus states his position:—

“Wolcott was not less decisive in his political opinions than either of the other Secretaries. But he had preserved towards the President great courtesy of manner; he was an excellent Secretary of the Treasury, whose place it might not be so easy to fill ; and perhaps the President considered it politic to allow to the ultra section of the Federal party a representation, though not a majority, in the cabinet.”¹

“ Ever since the dismissal of his colleagues, Wolcott had felt his position in the cabinet very uncomfortable ; but the urgency of his friends, and the desire to leave the affairs of his department on a good footing, had hitherto induced him to remain. He had fixed, however, on the end of the year as a period for retiring, of which he had notified the President and the House, asking, at the same time, an investigation into his official conduct. He left the treasury in a flourishing condition.”²

The letter in reply to the following we have already inserted (p. 302). We give this with the more pleasure, as the writer’s political relations to his distinguished correspondent were at one time somewhat trying, and it furnishes evidence that, if time had not changed his convictions, it had mellowed his feelings.

TO EX-PRESIDENT ADAMS.

SIR

Litchfield, Connecticut, July 28th 1823

The bearer, Major Wolcott Huntington, is a very estimable young Gentleman, son of General Ebenezer Huntington of this State, who served in the American Army from the year 1775 till the close of the Revolutionary War. In common with the patriotic young men of the present age, he is desirous of personally manifesting the admiration and gratitude with which all men are animated, towards the eldest and most distinguished of the surviving actors in those great Events which established the liberties and independence of the United States.

I am happy in being the organ of expressing Major Huntington’s wishes on this occasion, and while thus recalling myself to your recollection, I cannot omit to express my thanks to heaven, that your life has been happily protracted and actively employed in disseminating wise and salutary counsels, which cannot fail to enlighten and direct the conduct of successive generations.

With profound respect and perfect deference I remain

Sir,

Your devoted servant,

TO MR. WHARTON.

MY DEAR SIR

Litchfield, Feb^y 22, 1825

I feel the most lively attachment to Philadelphia, where I long resided, where most of my children were born, and particularly to your Family, from whom I rec^d many proofs of kindness and attention. If I could be useful to any member of your family, gratitude would demand every exertion in my power. I request you to present my respectful regards to your Mother and Aunt and to all remaining friends. With sincere attachment and the best wishes for the prosperity of yourself and family, I remain, Dear Sir,

Your obed^t ser^t

Fishbourn Wharton, Esq.

P. S. My son Oliver, who was an infant when I left Philadelphia, has married one of your fair Quakeresses, who has presented me with a fine Grandson, who is a great comfort in my declining years.

O. W.

The two names which authenticate the Proclamation which follows became so familiar, in this connection, to the ears which had listened to them twice a year on preceding Sabbaths for a long period, — calling to the observance of Thanksgiving and Fast Days, — that when at length a similar Proclamation was attested by other names, it sounded unnatural to the good people of Connecticut. The combination below belongs to the memories of the writer's boyhood, and recalls days which, in their religious associations, were week-day Sabbaths.

By his Excellency

OLIVER WOLCOTT,

Governor and Commander in Chief in and over the State of Connecticut,

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas it is the duty of all men to acknowledge their dependence upon God, the great Creator and Preserver of the Universe, and publickly to express their gratitude for the bounty and protection, which they derive from his indulgence and favour:

I HAVE therefore thought fit, by and with the advice of the Council, and at the request of the House of Representatives, in General Court assembled, to appoint, and I do hereby appoint, Thursday the twenty-sixth day of November next, to be observed, throughout this State, as a day of PUBLIC THANKSGIVING AND PRAYER. And I do accordingly invite the Ministers and Teachers, of all denominations, with all the good people of this State, to assemble on said day, and with sincere and devout affections, to present the reverential homage of their hearts to Almighty God, for his inestimable favours to our State and Nation ; in particular, that he has continued to us the great blessings of peace, internal tranquillity, general health and fertile seasons ; above all, to render united and humble thanks, for the divine revelation, perfect example, and expiatory sacrifice of His son, our Saviour and Judge, and the assurance thereby afforded of a happy and immortal existence, through faith, penitence and obedience.

At the same time, to supplicate the divine guidance and protection, in behalf of the President of the United States, and all others entrusted with rule, counsel and authority ; to entreat that they may possess the spirit of their stations, and cause right and justice to prevail ; that all institutions for promoting piety, science, morality, benevolence and charity may flourish ; that liberty, happiness, peace and security may be continued to our country, to the latest generations, and be speedily extended to all mankind.

All servile labour and vain recreation on said day are by law forbidden.

Given under my hand, at the Council Chamber in New Haven, this twenty-second day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, and in the forty-third year of the Independence of the United States of America.

OLIVER WOLCOTT

By his Excellency's Command,

THOMAS DAY,

Secretary.

It was in Governor Wolcott's day that the Missouri Compromise was enacted, — a proceeding which drew in its train the great rebellion ; and in his address to the Legislature in 1820 he referred to the subject of slavery, pointing out the feature in the system which made it a dangerous element in our politics.

It cannot have escaped your attention, that a diversity of habits and principles of government exists in this country ; and I think it is evident that slavery is gradually forming those distinctions which, according to invariable laws of human action, constitute the characteristic difference between aristocratical and democratical republics.

The names of a dozen of his political associates are recalled in the letter which follows; and besides these, Rufus King, Oliver Ellsworth, and other prominent statesmen were, in their day, his constant correspondents. This was written in the evening of his life, in answer to a correspondent who had called his attention to a partisan address, reopening the stormy questions that had convulsed the country in the administrations of the early Presidents. While faithful to the memories of his early friends, he had evidently survived the political animosities of that excited era. His scrupulous preservation of the rough drafts of all his writings evinces his confidence in the integrity of his own record; but it was foreign to his feelings that the political controversies of a former period should be revived, and especially repugnant that his papers should be used for the purpose.

TO DOCTOR RHINELANDER.

MY DEAR FRIEND

Litchfield, March 12th 1829

Your very kind and acceptable letter of the 5th inst. accompanied one from my daughter, and was received on the 11th. From this delay you will judge of the state of the roads and what has been my painful seclusion during this horrid season of the year. Though not enjoying the comforts of your anthracite coal fire, and though instead of the cheering rays of your Southern sun, my windows are darkened by a cold North Easterly rain, I have been rendered very tranquil by hearing that you and my other friends are well and happy. You say that you and Col. Gracie are undetermined what characters to assume at the Ball. I cannot suggest any idea on this subject which would be pertinent. I can only think of either of you in your natural characters, which will always be most attracting to my eyes. I have heard nothing of any legacy to William; I hope it is sufficient for his purposes. An ample fortune is due to Mr Gracie, and no man more richly deserves to enjoy it.

A part of your letter is devoted to the Political controversies of the day—a subject most revolting to my mind of any it can contemplate. Cabot, Ames, Quincy and Hamilton were my intimate friends, and I corresponded with each of them; but Ames was in declining health after he resigned his seat in Congress. No man possessed a purer and more exalted mind, or a more fascinating eloquence; in his last days he seems to have been hypochondrical in respect to the consequences of the French Revolution, and he probably communicated some of his opinions and impressions to his friends. Cabot was a pure and honourable man, and the same may be said of Quincy, who is alive and can speak for himself. The temperament of these men was different from mine, our opinions on some points differed, but still we continued friends. With respect to Hamilton my intercourse was constant, till his conflict with Col. Burr which was concealed from me, or at any risque I would have endeavoured to prevent it. Rencontres of a similar nature I had arrested on two former occasions, and to this alone can I attribute the secrecy which was observed towards me. I assure you, my friend, that Hamilton's pure and just fame, as a patriotic statesman, is in no danger of violation. Authentic and incontrovertible documents exist which will vindicate him, but the present is not the time to publish or reveal them.

I possess portraits of Washington, Adams, Jay, Hamilton and Robert Morris, which I value as memorials of great and good men who were my friends. If their successors have chosen to run wild, I see no motive for following them in a mad career to furnish employment for factious printers. I had rather burn all my papers, than be an instrument of such mischief. Now that Pickering is dead, who was as honest a man as either of the others I have named, I am the last survivor of the civil companions of Washington and the elder Adams. I am willing to bear testimony to any fact I know in favour of either, but not to be drawn into any controversy with others. Chauncey Goodrich, who married a beloved sister, with Judges Swift and Smith of this State, were members of the Hartford Convention. But after all due allowance in favour of individuals, it was, in my opinion, a monstrous Political mistake.

This letter contains no secrets, and you may show it to Col. Gibbs, to my daughter, and to our mutual friends. With esteem and love for all whom, I remain

Affectionately your friend,

OLIV: WOLCOTT

Doct. John R. Rhinelanders

We give place here with pleasure to the following letter from the noble Frenchman who in the darkest day of our late rebellion did not lose faith in the Great Republic, and issued his thrilling address, "The Uprising of a Great People:" —

FROM COUNT DE GASPARIN TO MRS. GIBBS.

MADAM

Rivage, 16th Feb^y 1864

It is with deep emotion that I have received the lines with which you have honored me, and the precious letter of WASHINGTON which you have been so good as to send.

It is not only precious in itself ; it is so, also, from the hand which transmits it. You, Madam, daughter and grand-daughter of illustrious men, who have labored in laying the foundations of the United States, will permit me to say, that your letter is also an autograph which I shall place, and religiously preserve, side by side with that of Washington.

May God bless your noble country, and grant that you may soon see with your own eyes what I have always called the second birth (regeneration) of the United States. Rely on the true sympathy and on the prayers of your European friends.

Receive, Madam, with the assurance of my gratitude, that of my devoted and respectful regards.

A. DE GASPARIN

The younger brother, Frederick Wolcott, the last of our Family who sat in the Senate of Connecticut, or bore a part in its public affairs, was a worthy representative of the succession which terminated with him.

In Dr. Fowler's Appendix to the "Chauncey Memorials," lately issued, we find the following just tribute to the second Mrs. Wolcott and her sisters, which we take pleasure in transferring to our own Memorial : —

"The six daughters of the Rev. Samuel Goodrich were all of them distinguished for their mental, moral, social, and personal qualities. These qualities were largely derived from ancestral influences. From the Chaunceys they seem to have derived their love of learning and of books ; from the Worthingtons, their personal beauty, bland manners, and affectionate hearts ; from their paternal grandfather, Rev. Elizur Goodrich, D.D., something of his good sense and self-control ; and from their maternal grandfather, Col. John Ely, his free and fluent vein of conversation.

"They enjoyed, to some extent, advantages for school instruction in New Haven, Durham, Litchfield, Stamford, and elsewhere ; but the best of their education they received at home, under the guidance of their parents. Here were cultivated their social affections, their love of learning, their love of labor, and their love of the truths and duties of the Christian religion.

"SARAH WORTHINGTON [MRS. WOLCOTT], the first-born, was the leading star in that bright family-constellation. 'She was distinguished equally for her love of books, for her love of the cultivation of flowers, and for her love of labor.' She was fitted for Yale College when she was twelve years of age, and cried because she could not enter that institution. In her position at Litchfield she sustained the relation of mother towards three sorts of children in her family, to each and all of whom she showed a tender and generous affection. In the midst of her beautiful daughters she sat as a queen surrounded by her maids of honor, who yielded her love and homage." pp. 348, 349.

We have more than once, in the preceding record, been reminded of passages in Dr. Bushnell's eloquent "Speech for Connecticut."

"Mr. Bancroft, the historian, thoroughly acquainted with the relative character and merit of the American States, not long ago said, 'There is no State in the Union, and I know not any in the world, in whose early history, if I were a citizen, I could find more of which to be proud, and less that I should wish to blot.' My own conviction is that this early history, though not the most prominent, is really the most beautiful that was permitted to any state or people in the world."

"Such, I say, is Connecticut! There is no outburst of splendor in her history, no glaring or obtrusive prominence to attract the applause of the multitude. Her true merit and position are discovered only by search; she is seen only through the sacred veil of modesty — great only in the silent energy and worth of beneficence. But when she is brought forth out of her retirement, instead of the little, declining, undistinguished, scarcely distinguishable State of Connecticut, you behold, rising to view, a history of practical greatness and true honor; illustrious in its beginning; serious and faithful in its progress; dispensing intelligence without the rewards of fame; heroic for the right, instigated by no love of applause; independent, as not knowing how to be otherwise; adorned with names of wisdom and greatness fit to be revered as long as true excellence may have a place in the reverence of mankind." pp. 6, 33.

THE WOLCOTT HOMESTEAD IN LITCHFIELD.

Windsor, South Windsor, and Litchfield have been the seats of the Family in Connecticut. Of the homes of the early generations in Windsor not a trace remains. We lately visited the site of the residence of the first Henry Wolcott, and found the lot vacant. We have fortunately secured an accurate representation of one of the early homes in South Windsor (p. 75), and are happy to add another of the later, yet ancient, homes, still standing in Litchfield.

This mansion was built by the first Oliver Wolcott, as early as 1754, and was the home of the Family during all the years in which its name was identified with that of the village. It was the home in which his children and grandchildren were born, and from which he and his youngest son, Frederick Wolcott, each at the age of threescore and ten, were borne to their burial. At the date of its erection, it was considered the most elegant residence west of the Connecticut River; and it appears attractive to the last in the sketch which we give, engraved by Richardson, from a recent drawing by Herrick.

To name the eminent men, of the Colonial and Revolutionary periods as well as of later date, who have been entertained as guests in this home, would make a list of names for which we have not room; including President Washington, Secretary Hamilton, Count Rochambeau, General Lafayette, and a host of Senators, Governors, Judges, Divines, and men distinguished in every walk. In a location which favored the opportunity, the character of its occupants has made it, from the first, the abode of a refined and generous hospitality. The celebrated Law School which once flourished here attracted hither, and introduced into the social life of the place, young men of liberal education and representatives of some of the best families in the country; and the Young Ladies' Seminary, established here by the Misses Pierce,—an institution unrivalled in its day,—was thronged by pupils who represented the best culture of New England. This home was surrounded with these influences, and partook of them freely; and some of its daughters, like Mrs. Goodrich in Hartford, and Mrs. Jackson in Newark, have “shed its power” on other homes and communities.

Here, as in Windsor, its earlier seat, the Family has become extinct as a living name; and here as there the sepulchres of its departed are preserved, and their memories are honored; while scattered in different localities a few of its members survive, with many more not directly related to them, whose youth was associated with this village, and to whom the familiar picture of this old homestead will call up pleasant recollections.

¹ "The Rev. Dr. McClure was born in Boston, November, 1748. His grandfather was one of the emigrants from the north of Ireland, who with their pastor, Rev. John Moorhead, established a flourishing church in Boston, in 1730. His grandfather, father, and brother were deacons in that church. He was educated at Yale College, where he graduated in 1769. He was an assistant of the Rev. Eleazer Wheelock, D.D., in the establishment of Dartmouth College. In 1772, he was ordained as an Evangelist at Dartmouth, and went on a mission to the Indians on the Ohio. In 1776, he was settled in the ministry in Hampton, N. H., and continued there till 1785. The year following, he was installed the pastor of this church. He continued in great harmony with his people, laboring with fidelity, till, by the mysterious appointment of God, his voice gradually failed, about the year 1805, so that he was unable to speak in public. Though able afterwards to preach but very little, he enjoyed generally comfortable health till his last sickness. He died of a dropsical complaint, after a distressing illness of four months, on Lord's day, June 25, 1820. His funeral was attended with much solemnity on the 27th. The sermon was preached, at his request, by the surviving pastor, on Eccles. ix. 1.

"Dr. McClure was uniformly attached to the doctrines of grace received by our churches, usually denominated Calvinistic. He was an intelligent divine, an accomplished scholar, a man of extensive and profitable reading, possessing a great variety of useful and interesting information. He was a man of great prudence, of uncommon self-command, of great uniformity of feeling, and a peculiar suavity and mildness in all his deportment. He was beloved in life, and lamented in death. 'Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord.'" — Church Records, South Windsor. For a fuller sketch, see Sprague's Annals of Am. Pulpit, I., 7-9.

Elihu Wolcott, Esq., represented the town in the Legislature. His residence and farm adjoined his father's on the south. His second wife had occupied, before her marriage, the family seat of her father, Capt. Erastus, and of her grandfather, Gen. Erastus Wolcott. He sold both estates, and in the autumn of 1830 removed with his family to Jacksonville, Ill., choosing for his future home in the West a spot which had just been selected as the site of Illinois College. It was beautiful at that time in its prairie wildness, and it has become a place of culture and the pleasantest town in the State, — the appropriate seat of its humane institutions and of various educational enterprises. He engaged in mercantile business, but relinquished it after a time, and devoted his later years to the care of his real estate. His property, at his death, was inventoried at $100,000.

Moral questions which have since convulsed the nation were then pressing for discussion, and Mr. Wolcott occupied no doubtful position. He never stood in fear of his fellow-men, and his sympathy with the cause of freedom and humanity was earnest, practical, and outspoken; the oppressed and the weak found in him a steadfast protector and benefactor. In the assembly that came together at his funeral, it was impressive to see so many of the poor Portuguese exiles and colored people, who manifested their appreciation of the loss of their best friend in the community.

His last sickness was brief, and he sank peacefully to his rest, the serenity of which seemed to linger on his countenance. The funeral service was conducted by his valued friend, Rev. J. M. Sturtevant, D.D., President of Illinois College. His discourse was based on the text, "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." He concluded with a tribute to the departed, a portion of which is here given:—

Of the power of this motive to steadfastness, our deceased friend has afforded an eminent example. From the very infancy of this place he has had his home among us, and his strong and peculiar character has made its impression upon this community. He came with his interesting family, and I have noticed but three persons in this audience who were here to welcome him, and to rejoice in so important an addition to our society. In all this period, approaching the lifetime of a human generation, he has evinced a uniformity, steadiness, and consistency of character seldom surpassed. Three traits of character seem to me to have distinguished him: intuitive insight and discernment of principles; the power of giving to his convictions a concise, lucid, and often irresistible expression in language; and an inflexible steadfastness in adhering to his convictions, in whatever circumstances and at whatever cost.

In the formation of his opinions, he was in the strictest sense original. He used the aid of other minds only in the way of information or suggestion. The judgment was purely his own, and often seemed to be the result of seizing at a glance some decisive view of the case, which terminated all doubt and left no room for argument. With this intuition of truth, the lucid and transparent brevity of his expression perfectly corresponded. In many instances of painful and perplexing deliberation, sometimes indeed in the midst of excited and vehement popular passion, he has been known to present, in a few calm and lucid words, a view of the whole subject at issue, so clear that all could understand it, and so convincing as to terminate debate and secure a prompt decision in accordance with his opinion.

In his modes of life and the character of his education he ranked as a man of business rather than as a man of study; in his modes of thought and the style of his conversation, a person, unacquainted with his history, would have placed him among scholars and philosophers. His use of the English language was characterized not only by unailing grammatical accuracy, but by eminent felicity in the choice and collocation of words, for the expression of his thoughts with clearness, force, and beauty. Few men ever used the English language in conversation with greater purity than he.

But eminent above all these purely intellectual traits was his unbending adhesion to his convictions in all circumstances and at whatever cost. Opposing public opinion, however overwhelming in its numbers, however clamorous and imperative in its tone, did not move, nor even disturb him. He was sure that truth and right were on his side, and with that he was content. He made little effort to exert influence on other minds; he was not at all ambitious of the world's honors or praises; he was not even ambitious of being a man of influence. It was enough for him that he saw a truth clearly, that he enjoyed the luxury of giving it clear and forcible utterance, that he should steadily adhere to it to the last, and that sooner or later it must prevail. The doctrine of immortality was to him no theory, but a great practical reality, and supplied an unfailing motive to immovable steadfastness in the work of the Lord.

Whether we hold all the opinions of our departed friend or not, we should all unite around his open grave in thanksgiving to God, that we have had one man in the midst of us who was willing to stand alone and suffer obloquy, rather than be disloyal to his convictions of truth and right; one man whose opinions were never in the market, and were formed and held and expressed without the slightest regard to their bearing on his temporal interests. Such examples the American people need more, perhaps, than any other. It is at this very point that we are encountering our greatest danger. Many persons seem to regard the utterance of an unpopular sentiment as a crime. Mr. Wolcott had formed his character in a very different school of morals. And we should unite in honoring the noble example which in this respect he has set us, however we may differ in respect to the truth of those opinions which he maintained with so much steady consistency.

He has gone. We shall no longer be guided by the light of his clear intellect, cheered by his generous liberality, or sustained in the hour of conflict by his firm voice and the calmness and tranquillity of his spirit. May his mourning children and grandchildren treasure up all the precious lessons of his life and example, and may his brethren in the church ever imitate his steadfastness in all the work of the Lord!

LXXV. JOSHUA HUNTINGTON WOLCOTT (389) received his school-training in Litchfield, under Mr. John P. Brace, a teacher of high repute, and entered in his youth upon his business career in Boston. He became, early in life, a partner in the mercantile house of Messrs. A. and A. Lawrence & Co., of Boston, with which he remained connected until its dissolution; surviving, by many years, his distinguished associates and friends, Messrs. Amos and Abbott Lawrence. This firm bore a leading part in the development of the great manufacturing and commercial interests of New England, and through its long and honorable career sustained a reputation for energy, sagacity, and probity which was unsurpassed.

He married (1st), Nov. 12, 1844, Cornelia, daughter of Samuel Frothingham, Esq., of Boston; she died June 1, 1850. Children:—

521 — 1. Huntington Frothingham, b. Feb. 4, 1846; d. June 10, 1865.

522 — 2. Roger, b. July 13, 1847. See LXXXVI.

The writer's personal acquaintance with Mrs. Wolcott was limited to a single visit to the home over which she presided; and the vision of loveliness which it recalls assures him of the fidelity to truth of the tributes to her rare beauty and worth, with which he has been favored from those who knew her intimately. One who had known her from childhood writes of her:—

The peculiarity of her character was its freedom from fault. I have known others with great virtues, but in the long time I have known her, in great variety of circumstances, she has been always the same,— affectionate, overflowing with kindness, thoughtful of every one, and loving her friends with a warmth and constancy, a perpetual well-spring of affection that to colder natures would seem exaggerated. Kind to the poor, most kind and judicious to those in her own household, she met all the perplexities and cares of daily life with a sound, efficient, and courageous mind. She had a taste for the purest and highest in poetry and literature, and a true relish also for the humorous, having too much perception herself not to appreciate it in others. To every one connected with her she was a radiating centre of kind deeds and out-flowing affection. She gave little pleasures that sweetened existence to the happy; she gave her feelings, her sympathies, her whole heart, to the suffering. The stream of her life has flowed clear to the last, reflecting unbroken the image of the heavens above it. We shall stand by its waters and be refreshed and comforted no more; yet who may wonder or repine that she should have passed into that heaven whose light was all around her, even while she was with us here.

Another, who was bound to her by the even closer tie of near relationship, says:—

Words cannot paint her outward loveliness. The unaffected interest she felt in every one she addressed, the desire to make all happy, gave a fascination to her presence which won all hearts. The gift of language and extraordinary conversational powers made her brilliant in society, where, with a native grace and dignity of manner and a most winning address,—elegant, simple, and earnest, and yet as glad as a bird, and as free,—she became its ornament and inspiration.

Mr. Wolcott married (2d), Nov. 12, 1851, Harriet Frothingham, sister of his first wife.

The elder of the sons (Huntington) had not completed the years, or the preparatory training, of his minority when he responded to the call of his country for service in the field,—a representative of that large class of patriotic youths, born in the same and the preceding decades, whose life-plans and destinies were wholly changed by the late Civil War. With a physique of uncommon strength and beauty, with a pure and fervid spirit, and with a charm and dignity of manner which impressed themselves upon all, his was one of those rare natures which seem to combine all the distinctive qualities of noble manhood with all the sensitive delicacy and grace of fair womanhood. Before he was nineteen years old he received from Governor Andrew a commission as Second Lieutenant in the Second Regiment of Massachusetts Cavalry, and was appointed Aid to Major-General Gibbs.

This officer, to whom we have before referred (p. 217), was his kinsman. He was born April 22, 1823; entered West Point at the age of eighteen, and after graduation was in the Mexican war with General Scott's command. He took part in its principal battles, and repeatedly received honorable mention for gallant conduct. During the War of the Rebellion he was constantly in active service, and was successively promoted till he reached the rank of Brevet Major-General in the regular army. He was a perfect soldier in all his feelings, and was valued always as one of the bravest and most loyal officers in the service. He died at Fort Leavenworth, Dec. 26, 1868, in the very meridian of life.

In a note to the Lieutenant's father, announcing his arrival at the front, the General writes:—

Camp at White House, Va., March 24, 1865.

Lieutenant Wolcott joined me this morning. He comes just in time before we start on another of Sheridan's raids. He will have plenty of opportunities of showing the stuff the Wolcotts are made of, and distinguishing himself.

The opportunities came. The young soldier, who had been prevented only by his extreme youth from devoting his life to the service of his country at an earlier period of the war, had now gone to the front just in time to take part, side by side with veterans, in the toilsome and brilliant campaign under Sheridan, which resulted in cutting off Lee's retreat from Richmond, and thus compelling his surrender. The weeks which followed were weeks of arduous marching and constant fighting. How Lieutenant Wolcott acquitted himself may be judged by the following extracts from letters of General Gibbs. Immediately after the Battle of Five Forks he writes:—

We have just passed through one of the most terrible and decisive battles of the war. We have turned Lee's right, captured 7,000 prisoners, 9 pieces of artillery, 10 battle-flags, and are now moving on the South Side Railroad, Lee's present only source of supply. If as successful as we hope to be, Mr. Davis's chimera will explode like a soap-bubble. Huntington Wolcott, who was acting on my staff, behaved nobly,—like a Wolcott,—went into the thick of the fight and brought down a lot of prisoners. He is just as earnest and ardent as ever, in action as well as in expression.

May 9, 1865.

I consider his pluck as most extraordinary, and he has been so fortunate as to have joined us in the most eventful campaign of the war,—the one that sealed the fate of the hated confederacy. He has passed through it unscathed. From frequent and close observation of his conduct, I have noticed particularly his gallantry at Dinwiddie Court House, Five Forks, "Clover Hill," "April 9th," and on various other occasions, and have often refused him permission to "go in," when duty did not require him to do so. He has had a terribly tough baptism in military service, but has come out of it with increased vigor and vitality of both body and mind.

The war was over, and with the rest of the victorious army the regiment to which Lieutenant Wolcott was attached joined in the Grand Review in Washington. Some who saw him on that occasion wrote, after his death, which was so soon to follow: "It was impossible not to notice particularly young Lieutenant Huntington Wolcott, with his manly bearing and inspired face." "He seemed the impersonation of one's ideal of noble youth." "The radiant beauty of young Lieutenant Wolcott was to me the fulfilment of the Scripture promise, 'If thine eye be single thy whole body shall be full of light.'"

Almost on the very day following this grand celebration of the nation's restored unity he was prostrated by camp-fever, which had taken insidious hold of his system. He was carefully transported to his father's country residence, — the summer home of his boyhood, on the Milton Hills; but nothing could avail to prolong his life. He lingered a week, happy to have reached a spot so dear to him, and died June 9, 1865.

The following tribute to his memory was written, at the time of his death, by a friend of the family in Washington who had known him in his boyhood, and it well expresses the sentiment of all who knew him:—

IN MEMORIAM.

Among the thousands who have fallen victims in battle or by disease during this war, no one has laid down his life with nobler devotion than this young officer. Without personal ambition, possessed of every thing which makes life desirable, and with every inducement to ease and indulgence in the pleasures of youth, a simple sense of duty called him to take part in the great struggle of his country. Under all the temptations of army-life, he retained unsoiled the purity of his character. His gentleness won the affection of his fellow-soldiers, as his courage did their respect.

LIEUT. HOLMINGTON PROVINGHAM WOOD.

2nd Reg. U.S. Inf.

A Memorial Volume, prepared by his mother, illustrating the career of honor which he had completed before he reached the age of twenty, is one of the treasures of the household. The likeness which we give is from a portrait painted by the late W. M. Hunt, who had known him long and well, and who wrote after his death: "He combined the character of the lovely boy and noble and devoted patriot and soldier in a more striking manner than any one I have ever known." Lieutenant Wolcott was buried at Mount Auburn Cemetery.

Mr. J. Huntington Wolcott represents the Family in the Society of the Cincinnati, of which his grandfather was an original member. This association was organized at the close of the War of the Revolution, and was composed of officers in the army, with a provision for its perpetuation in the persons of their descendants and representatives. It was an expression of the fellowship which the war had created, a memorial of the patriotism and valor which had sustained it, and was designed to guard in civil relations the liberties which it had achieved in battle. It embodied the most patriotic traditions of the Republic, and linked its different sections with the memories of a common struggle and a common triumph and renown. Many of the officers of the Revolutionary Army were men of liberal education, familiar with ancient classic literature. The record of Cincinnatus, the hero of Republican Rome, who at the close of his eminent public service retired to the farm, which at the call of his country he had left to assume the supreme control of affairs, and whose spirit was exemplified in their own Chief, suggested the fitting name. Washington was its first president.

In later years, Mr. Wolcott's time and means have been freely devoted to various humane institutions, public and private. During the war, he was Treasurer of the Boston Sanitary Commission; and the untiring and effective devotion both of Mrs. Wolcott and himself to sick and suffering soldiers and their families, and to the cause for which they suffered, claims grateful commemoration. He resides (1880) in Boston, with a summer residence in Milton.

The family monument in the Mount Auburn Cemetery is of pure Italian marble, in the form of a sarcophagus, bearing on one end the Wolcott coat of arms.

(Epitaph.)

LXXVI. FREDERICK HENRY WOLCOTT (391) fitted for college under Mr. Brace and Judge Reeve, but at an early age engaged in mercantile business in New York City. He married (1st), June 12, 1838, Abby Woolsey, daughter of Gardiner G. Howland, Esq., of New York City, a descendant of John Howland, of the "Mayflower;" she died Jan. 14, 1851. Some friend, in a succeeding number of the "New York Observer," paid an affectionate tribute to her Christian gentleness and worth.

"Shrinking from notoriety, and unassuming and meek in her whole deportment, her gentle spirit might almost rebuke this tribute to her worth. I would not bring out to the world's gaze the overflowing charities of her domestic life, in all the relations of daughter, sister, wife, and mother; surrounded by all the appliances of wealth, station, and influence, she yet made them all subject to the possession of the more enduring treasures of eternal grace. For nearly two-thirds of the whole period of her life she was a follower of Christ, and sought not her own, but his. She was remarkably conscientious, and evinced an exalted purity of thought and action throughout her whole life. Her virtues shone brightest in the domestic circle; and disliking ostentation from principle, she in a remarkable degree exemplified the consistency of a Christian in all the proprieties of the station which Providence had assigned her. Her last utterance was, 'My God is good.'"

Mr. Wolcott married (2d) Jan. 18, 1855, Sarah Elizabeth Chase, daughter of Gen. Charles S. Merchant, U. S. A., who graduated at West Point, 1813, and at his recent death, Dec. 6, 1879, was the oldest ranking officer in the army. She was born in Plattsburgh, N. Y., Oct. 10, 1822.¹ Children:—

523—1. Frederick Henry, b. Oct. 30, 1845.

524—2. Gardiner Howland, b. Aug. 25, 1848.

525—3. Oliver Huntington, b. Oct. 24, 1850; d. April 15, 1851.

526—4. Charles Merchant, b. Nov. 16, 1855; d. April 3, 1858.

527—1. Elizabeth Huntington, m. Nov. 20, 1861, Stephen L. Merchant, of New York City. Their son, Huntington Wolcott Merchant (b. June 14, 1869), is the only representative of the family (1880) in the third generation.

528—2. Abby Howland.

529—3. Alice.

¹ She was the widow of Capt. Leslie Chase, U. S. A. (gr. West Point), and their son, Leslie Chase (gr. Col. C.), became a member of Mr. Wolcott's family.

Mr. Frederick H. Wolcott retired from business in middle life, and his time has been specially devoted to charitable and benevolent enterprises. He took an active part in the organization of the New York Juvenile Asylum; and he has been particularly identified with the American Bible Society, having served for many years on its Board of Directors; is now one of its Vice-Presidents, and Chairman of the Committees on Distribution and on Anniversaries. He has been for a long period an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and has several times represented his Presbytery in the General Assembly.

As we close this record, our eye falls on a report from the Committee on Anniversaries of the Bible Society, just issued, and drafted by Mr. Wolcott, relative to the celebration of the Semi-Millennial of the Translation of the Bible by Wycliffe into English vernacular, A.D. 1380, embodying a recommendation which the Society has adopted. The paper strikes us as so appropriate and well expressed, and relates to a subject of such universal interest, that we are happy to give an extract from it, and thus associate with these pages an event of which the Society justly remark, in their last Annual Report: "A wide-spread observance of this anniversary would doubtless be fruitful of excellent results, since it is impossible to meditate upon the good which has been accomplished by the English Bible, without emotions of devout and reverent gratitude to our own and our fathers' God."

REPORT.

"New York, Dec. 1, 1879.

"Your Committee recommend the observance of this important event, so fruitful in its benefits and blessings to mankind. We recognize the fact that previous to this epoch the Holy Bible was almost a sealed book, and that a knowledge of the sublime revelation contained in the life and teachings of our Lord, His prophets and apostles, was purposely concealed from the people by designing men, and in their stead a gross superstition was inculcated, which exercised a debasing and corrupting influence.

"It must be admitted that the door opened by a translation of the Bible into the common language spoken by the people of England was an event transcendent in its influence for good, and proved to be the instrument through which was revealed unto man the knowledge of his rights, and his responsibility to God for the use of his talents, which were thereby brought into active life. It is not the province of your Committee to enlarge upon the wonderful development of true Christian civilization, in the sciences, arts, and industries by which the races of men have been elevated, as the outcome from the teachings of the Bible.

“We believe the occasion justifies, and demands, a thorough historical, philosophical, and religious presentation, exhibiting the influence of the English Bible upon the English-speaking people, and through this instrumentality upon the whole human race; and we recommend the appointment of an Orator who, thoroughly appreciating its grandeur and importance, shall represent our Society in the preparation of a Commemorative Discourse, to be delivered on the 2d day of December, A.D. 1880, in the Academy of Music, in New York. . . . We advise the appointment of Rev. RICHARD S. STORRS, D.D., LL.D., of Brooklyn, to be our representative and speaker, and he is hereby respectfully and most affectionately invited to undertake this duty as set forth in this Report.”

Mr. Wolcott has cherished a filial reverence for his ancestors; and for much that has been done to trace the lineage, preserve the monuments, and perpetuate the memories of the early generations,—including the publication of this compilation,—the Family are largely indebted to his enterprise and zeal. His principal residence for many years has been on the East River, near Astoria, Long Island, N. Y.

The family monument in the Greenwood Cemetery, of which he is one of the trustees, like his brother's, just described, is of Italian marble, in the form of a sarcophagus, and bears the family arms.

Dr. Erastus B. Wolcott removed to Milwaukee in 1840. In 1846 he was commissioned Major-General of the First Division of Wisconsin Militia. In 1850 he was appointed on the Board of Regents of the State University. He was Surgeon-General of the State of Wisconsin through the late war, and in 1866 was appointed by Congress one of the Managers of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers at Milwaukee. He has long been identified with the growth and prosperity of the city, and stands at the head of his profession in the State.

“His form is symmetrical, his movements are graceful, and his youthful energies are unimpaired. His mind is vigorous and active, embracing a wide field of observation. Always eminent in his profession, he keeps a steady step in the march of medical science. Skilled as a surgeon, the knife does not tremble in his hand. Unerring in his diagnosis, he waits with the patience of a nurse. His sensibilities are alive to every object of human suffering. As husband, father, and friend, he discharges his duties with scrupulous fidelity.” — Wisconsin Centennial, 1875.

The preceding record had but just left our hands when intelligence reached us of the death of its subject, followed soon by full obituary notices and the details of funeral obsequies, in which the whole community participated. We can here make room for but a few sentences.

“THE DEATH OF A NOBLE MAN.

“Dr. ERASTUS B. WOLCOTT, Surgeon-General of the State of Wisconsin, one of the most widely known men of the Northwest, died at his residence on Milwaukee Street, at eleven o'clock last night, after an illness of one week. There are few men whose death would cause more general sorrow; few men have worked as faithfully and unselfishly, so long and laboriously, in one of the most noble of professions, as Dr. Wolcott. The announcement made this morning will carry pain to hundreds of households, where the cheerful face of Dr. Wolcott has brought hope and his skill has brought relief from suffering. . . . Of an historic family, fine education, great practical sense, keen powers of observation, great kindness of heart, and wide experience, he made a place for himself which it will be impossible to fill. . . . Of a fine presence, not unlike in appearance the late William Cullen Byrant, he was a notable person in any gathering, and he will be missed more than any other man would be. . . . In enterprises of public moment he was always among the first, and his advice was always sought for in relation to public matters.”¹

“ . . . Dr. Wolcott was very eminent as a surgeon, and in difficult cases was sent for from all parts of the State, and built up an extensive and lucrative practice. In politics he always took an active part; was an original Abolitionist; helped to organize the Republican party in Wisconsin, fought its battles and rejoiced in its victories. His personal appearance was very striking, and he was a conspicuous figure in all public assemblies. Physically, he would have been a fine model for the Grecian artists to copy for a god. By his death, the medical profession loses one of its brightest ornaments, and the Republican party one of its most stalwart members.”²

“STATE OF WISCONSIN, EXECUTIVE OFFICE, “MADISON, Jan. 6, 1880.

“GENERAL ORDER No. 2.

“The sad duty is devolved upon the Governor of announcing to the people of Wisconsin, and especially to the officers and men of the Wisconsin National Guard, the sudden and unexpected death of Brig.-Gen. ERASTUS B. WOLCOTT, M.D., which occurred at his residence in the city of Milwaukee, at eleven o'clock yesterday evening. . . .

“It may be truthfully said of General Wolcott, that in all these public positions, and in the wide and possibly more important sphere of a citizen, he was efficient, faithful, and zealous. Broad and sympathetic in his views, polished in manner, wise in counsel, vigorous in action, the personification of honor and integrity, his death may well be mourned as a public calamity. In token of respect for his memory, the members of the staff are requested to wear the usual badge of mourning for a period of thirty days from the receipt of this order, and all officers of the Wisconsin National Guard will wear a similar badge during the same period, when in uniform. On the day of his funeral the flag upon the capitol will be displayed at half-mast, and the Adjutant-General will direct such guards of honor and formal escort to be furnished as may be agreeable to the family and immediate friends of the deceased.

“NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOL. SOLDIERS, N. W. BRANCH,

“GENERAL ORDERS, No. 3.

“It is the sad duty of the undersigned to announce the decease, at his residence in the city of Milwaukee, at eleven o'clock on the evening of the 5th inst., of Brigadier-General ERASTUS BRADLEY WOLCOTT, M.D., a member of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and formerly Commandant of this Branch. . . .

“During the seven years that the undersigned has been in command of this Branch, General Wolcott has with almost unfailing punctuality visited the Home on each Tuesday morning. His gratuitous and untiring services rendered to the Home, and to the interests of the disabled soldiers of the country, entitles his memory to their grateful and affectionate regard. His uniform courtesy and kindness, and his ever genial deportment, have endeared him to all who knew him, and the tears of a community attest the universal affection in which he was held.

“The remains of the deceased will lie in state in the Arcade of the Plankinton House, from ten A.M. to one P.M. on Thursday the 8th instant, and the funeral ceremonies will take place from his late residence, 471 Milwaukee Street, Milwaukee, at three o'clock, P.M., on the same day.

“As appropriate honors to the memory of the deceased, half-hour guns will be fired by the Home Battery from sunrise until sunset on the day of the funeral, and the national flag will be draped in mourning and displayed at half-mast at this Branch until sundown of the 8th instant.

“The usual badge of mourning will be worn by the officers of the Home for thirty days.

“EDW. W. HINCKS,
“Commandant.”

“THE PUBLIC HOMAGE.

“The love that Milwaukee bore for her late distinguished townsman, Dr. E. B. Wolcott, found expression yesterday in a way at once simple and touching. Shortly before ten o'clock his remains were escorted to the Plankinton House by a committee of citizens, and a detail of sixteen men from the Sheridan Guard as a guard of honor. The body was borne to the Arcade, where it lay in state until half-past one. The casket was placed on a catafalque in the centre of the room. . . . Several thousand people viewed the remains. For nearly three hours they came and went, and yet there were those who were not permitted an opportunity. At one o'clock the doors were closed, and the remains escorted back to the late home of the deceased, where the obsequies took place, at three o'clock. The house was crowded, and the streets for a distance of two blocks were filled with people and carriages. The funeral was one of the largest ever seen in the Northwest. The procession, which was very long, was headed by a military escort. Arriving at Forest Home Cemetery, a few simple services, and Erastus B. Wolcott, loved in his lifetime and mourned in his death, was shut out from mortal vision." — Sentinel, January 9.

"Milwaukee has lost a friend, — one who was an enthusiastic worker in every direction which meant a city's welfare. Her citizens have lost a friend, — one who was a skilled and sympathetic helper whenever and wherever suffering called for aid, an attentive gentleman, answering social calls with genial, courtly grace. Humanity has lost a friend, — a warm, unselfish, loving friend, who hastened to its every call upon his counsel and his generosity, and freely gave of his abundant gifts of wisdom and honorable devotion, as well as of professional skill, without partiality, without fear or favor.

"Gratuitous services were given by him in all charitable institutions in the city; and among the profusion of floral tributes bestowed upon his remains, as they lay for a few hours in a public place, that all his friends might take one last look upon the noble, kindly face, were many that came as tokens of gratitude from those he had ministered unto without money and without price.

"Far and near, in our homes and in distant homes, the summons to come or to go was never unheeded by him. There will be many a home where the news of his death will carry, not only the pang of loss, but the anxious thought and fear that all cannot be as well with them henceforth.

"The citizens of Milwaukee desired to give all attention and honor to the beloved and respected dead, but were restrained from parade and show by Dr. Wolcott's family, who regarded his oft-expressed wish that in the event of his death there should be no public display." — Index, January 22.

THE OLD MEETING-HOUSE IN SOUTH WINDSOR.

THE heads of the two preceding families were born in South Windsor; and we introduce here its venerable sanctuary, which was standing in their youth. The first and second meeting-houses in South Windsor were built near the old cemetery. The third, of which we give a sketch, engraved by Richardson from a drawing made by Ellsworth and completed by Bonwill, stood a mile and a half south of the above site, in front of the present burial-ground. It was erected in 1761, and remained till 1846.

It was a fair representative of the type of church architecture which prevailed in New England for more than a century. It stood with its side to the street, and a door in the middle, which opened into the broad aisle, with the pulpit at the opposite end. There was an entrance, also, at each end of the house,—that on the north opening into the vestibule, or lower room, of the steeple. The pulpit, up in the middle of the western side, was ascended by a flight of narrow stairs, and above it was the sounding-board, suspended by an iron rod from the ceiling. In front of the pulpit was the deacons' seat; and the remaining space below was occupied by square pews with seats on three sides, and aisles which reached them from all the entrances, and into which their doors opened. In each front corner were stairs mounting to the gallery; and at the head of each flight, in the most secluded corners of the house, were the negro-pews, or seats for colored people. The front seats of the gallery, which extended around three sides of the house, belonged to the singers, whose leader gave the key-note with his pitch-pipe; and in the rear, at a higher elevation, was a row of square pews. An æsthetic culture may be satisfied with the voices of a quartette, the operatic airs, and the sentimental songs which modern taste has introduced into the religious exercises of the Lord's Day. But, to one who remembers the old-time worship, never will "the service of song in the house of the Lord," never will the soul of devotion, find such expression in these strains, as when, by the great choir circling the gallery, the devout praise of the congregation was borne heavenward in sacred lyrics to the tunes of "Majesty" and "Old Hundred."

The pastor of the church that worshipped in this meeting-house during the writer's boyhood, and who made a formal bow to the families seated on each side as he walked up the middle aisle, wore knee-buckles and top-boots, — though the ancient costume, introduced into the picture, had at that time very generally disappeared. The swallows circling around the spire and alighting on the ridge-pole have a very familiar look; as has also the whipping-post at the corner, which had been an indispensable institution in the early Puritan administration, but which in the writer's youth served only the purpose of a bulletin-board. Beneath the very shadow of this sanctuary was laid to her rest, nearly sixty years ago, the mother who within its walls had dedicated to God her first-born son, who here brings his filial tribute to her grave.

LXXXIV. RICHMOND WOLCOTT (479) graduated at Illinois College, 1859; commanded a company in the late war; lives (1879) in Springfield, Ill., an attorney-at-law; married, July 11, 1865, Jane Van Vechten, daughter of James D. B. Salter, of Springfield. Children:—

572 — 1. Cordelia Leland, b. May 9, 1866.

573 — 2. Lucy Salter, b. Nov. 13, 1867.

574 — 3. Ella Richmond, b. July 5, 1873; d. Feb. 3, 1875.

LXXXV. CHRISTOPHER PARSONS WOLCOTT (503) married, April 25, 1844, Pamphila, daughter of David Stanton, M.D. Children:—

575 — 1. Christopher Darwin, b. Sept. 13, 1846.

576 — 2. Samuel Merwin, b. Dec. 7, 1848.

Hon. Christopher P. Wolcott came when a lad with his father to Steubenville, Ohio. He read law in the office of Tappan and Stanton, — the former, Benjamin Tappan, afterwards United States Senator from Ohio, and the latter, Edwin M. Stanton, the distinguished Secretary of War, whose sister he married. He established himself at Akron, in 1845, and soon came to the front rank in his profession. Judges of that period concur in pronouncing him the most gifted and brilliant member of the Bar in Ohio.

In 1856 he was appointed Attorney-General of the State, and held the office four years. In 1861 he was appointed Judge Advocate General, and served in this capacity until he was appointed Assistant Secretary of War. He died at Akron, April 4, 1863, in the very prime of his life, — a sacrifice to his country, as was justly claimed by the editor of the Akron "Beacon," in an obituary sketch, from which we give an extract:—

"As a lawyer he probably had no superior in Ohio, and his loss will be severely felt in legal circles throughout the State. He was not only one of our greatest lawyers, but one of the most profound thinkers upon constitutional questions, and, in the true sense of the word, a statesman. The abilities he displayed in conducting public affairs brought him the offer of the position of Assistant Secretary of War; this he reluctantly accepted. He was then worn and jaded with the rush of business, and the ardent and laborious way in which he had thrown all the force of body and soul into this war. He had, after spending over a year from home, gone there to recruit his impaired strength, when he received this new summons. He looked upon it as his duty to accept it, though it cost him life itself. He went to Washington City, and entered upon those arduous duties incident to such a position, in such a war as we are now waging, and there he toiled through the hot months last summer, from six in the morning until one and two o'clock at night. He took a slow fever, but worked on until he was so sick he could work no longer. After being in the hands of a skilful physician in New York City some three months, he, in November last, returned to take his place as Assistant Secretary of War. He again put on the harness, and toiled on and on. His friends and relatives remonstrated, but he could not be diverted from his purpose. He would reply to such remonstrance, 'Why can I not give myself to my country, as thousands of soldiers are doing every day.' He worked on until he could work no longer, and then he went home to die. He did indeed give his life to his country with as determined a purpose to do so as any soldier who has met his death on the battle-field.

"But with all his talent and energy of character, his strong love for his country, and his intense desire for her speedy restoration to peace and prosperity, the statesman, the patriot, the neighbor, the friend, has been summoned from earth in the prime of life and vigor of manhood. Let us all, while lamenting his early departure, proudly cherish the memory of his devoted patriotism, and endeavor to emulate his example, in giving all that we have, even life itself, if need be, to the service of our beloved country, in this her hour of peril and of trial."

LXXXVI. ROGER WOLCOTT (522) graduated at Harvard University, 1870, and delivered the Class Oration; theme of Commencement Oration, "The Early Franciscans;" Tutor in the College, 1871; LL.B., 1874. He married, Sept. 2, 1874, Edith, daughter of William G. Prescott, of Boston, and Augusta Peabody his wife. She was born April 20, 1853; granddaughter of William H. Prescott, the Historian.¹ The two lines connect the children with the Frothingham, Huntington, Peabody, Pickering, Prescott, Putnam, and other leading families in New England.

Roger Wolcott is a member of the Boston Bar; member (1879) of the Common Council; his summer residence is near his father's, on the slope of the Blue Hills, in Milton. Children:—

577—1. Huntington Frothingham, b. Nov. 29, 1875; d. Feb. 19, 1877.

578—2. Roger, b. July 25, 1877.

579—3. Prescott, b. May 1, 1880.

In adding to our record the last name in the series,— the number succeeding this, a Christian name which had done illustrious service in the Family,— we referred to the coincidence of the birth with the publication of our Memorial. It gives us sincere pleasure, before reaching the final page, to introduce to the record a still later comer, and join with our own surname, as a Christian name, one which is redolent of revolutionary and literary fame and synonymous with patriotism. Our best wishes attend these cousins, our latest representatives,— whom it is our privilege thus early to greet "with cordial salutation" as they "arrive on the shore of being,"— for their own sake, and for the sake of the Family, whose future, under God, is to be committed to them and their associates.

The emigrant ancestor of the family, John Prescott, representative of an ancient English family, came to this country in 1640. He lived first at Watertown, and afterwards established himself at Lancaster, then on the frontiers of civilization. There he acquired a good estate, and defended it bravely from the incursions of the Indians, to whom he made himself formidable by occasionally appearing before them in a helmet and cuirass, which he had brought with him from England, where he is said to have served under Cromwell. He was a strong man, of large frame, with a stern countenance; he died in 1683.

LXXXVII. HENRY GOODRICH WOLCOTT (531) graduated at Yale College, Ph.B., 1873; Columbia College, LL.B., 1877. He married, May 22, 1879, Julia Sterling, only daughter of Hon. Waldo Hutchins, Member of Congress from the Twelfth District, of New York City, and Elizabeth Ellsworth, his wife. She was born July 17, 1855; great-granddaughter of Chief Justice Ellsworth and of Noah Webster.

Henry G. Wolcott is a member of the New York Bar and United States Commissioner; is Lieutenant-Colonel of the Twenty-first Regiment of New York National Guards. He resides at Roseneath, his father's seat, near Fishkill on the Hudson. Child:—

580—Oliver, b. March 14, 1880.

This "heir of all the ages," with whose name our record closes, has been born into the Family while our work is in press. He is the lineal descendant of the following seven Governors, namely: William Bradford, one of the Pilgrim Fathers, and the second Governor of the Plymouth Colony; Thomas Welles, John Webster, William Leet, and Roger Wolcott, who were Colonial Governors of Connecticut; and Oliver Wolcott and William Wolcott Ellsworth, who were Governors of the State of Connecticut. We name this lineage merely as a remarkable coincidence, and not with any ostentation. This household concur with us in the sentiment expressed by Cowper, that a Christian parentage is the highest distinction and privilege of a child. On a recent delightful October Sabbath, while sharing the hospitalities of the Roseneath mansion, the writer had the pleasure of being present at the consecration in baptism of this child, in the neighboring church of St. Luke. The Christian name pronounced over it in this interesting ceremony is one which in both ancestral lines has been honored by Oliver Wolcott and Oliver Ellsworth, who dignified civil station by Christian virtue,—a feature of our Memorial which we take pleasure in again commending to the advancing generation.

DEED-CHEST OF HENRY WOLCOTT, 1630.

APPENDIX.

JOSIAH WOLCOTT (70) married (1st), April 23, 1740, Mrs. Lucy W., widow of Joseph French, and daughter of Capt. Daniel White. She was born July 17, 1715, and died Nov. 29, 1760. He lived in Andover, removed to Saybrook about 1750, and afterwards to New Jersey, where he married again, and died Oct. 24, 1784. He left children; among others a daughter, Theodora Wolcott (b. Nov. 5, 1746), who married, Nov. 17, 1768, Michael Baldwin. Their sons, Michael Baldwin and Henry Baldwin, graduated at Yale College, 1795 and 1797. The latter became a Member of Congress and one of the Justices of the United States Supreme Court. Another daughter, Sarah Wolcott (b. March 26, 1752), adopted by Rev. John Devotion, of Westbrook, married Col. Asa Lay, of Westbrook.

CONCLUSION.

WE have now completed our Memorial, and are ready to take leave of the work. The acquaintance to which it has introduced us, both with the departed and the living, has been instructive and pleasant to us; and we would fain utter some brief valedictory of exhortation and encouragement to those of our kindred now on the stage of life on whom are resting, under God, the future hopes and fortunes of the Family, and to those who may succeed to their responsibilities. This desire we are providentially enabled to gratify, with parting words more impressive than our own.

A larger number of the Family than have since been fellow-worshippers in one sanctuary attended on the ministry of the Rev. Dr. McClure, in South Windsor, and listened to his "Century Thanksgiving Sermon," in 1795, from which we have already given extracts. He closed this discourse with an appeal to them, which seems to us a not less fitting conclusion of a work like this. The manuscript from which he thus addressed our fathers, nearly a century ago, now lies before us; and although we cannot but be sensible, as we copy its closing paragraphs, how much the effect of its delivery was enhanced by the venerable figure of the preacher as he stood, in clerical costume, beneath the antique sounding-board, and by the silvery tones of his simple and devout eloquence, as they fell on the listening ears of his congregation in the square pews below, gathered "in families like a flock," still we cannot doubt that the silent perusal of the same strains in these pages will awaken in the hearts of their descendants a similar response.

While we admire and adore the marvellous displays of the protecting providence and goodness of God towards our ancestors, the first planters of this land, let us, Sirs, labour to emulate their virtues, and maintain that fear of God, that sacred regard to his word and ordinances, and zeal for our holy religion, of which they gave so illustrious so disinterested an example. They left the dear delights of their native land, to follow God into this wilderness. They gave the most unequivocal proof of their piety and sincerity. The glory of God, the purity of worship, doctrine, and ordinances, and the enjoyment of civil and religious liberty, were the great and noble objects which animated them. When their settlements here were few and feeble, they formed a friendly confederation, the preamble of which states the laudable design of their coming: "Whereas we are all come into these parts of America with one and the same end and aim, namely, to advance the kingdom of Jesus Christ, and to enjoy the liberties of the Gospel in security with peace." And they took care that the invaluable legacy might descend to their posterity, as it is this day. Let us, Sirs, stand fast in the liberties, civil and sacred, in which the God of our fathers hath made us free. Beyond the reach of the arm of arbitrary power, with the Bible in their hands, they laid here the foundation of the churches in truth and purity, according to that perfect standard. And God has remarkably owned and blessed them, and multitudes have gone to glory, who long sat under the shadow of their ordinances with delight. An honourable inhabitant of this town, and for several years the chief magistrate of the Colony, in a letter written several years past, says: "The Congregational churches in New England have subsisted more than one hundred years. What orthodox divinity, what peace, what love, what vital piety and good order, are obvious to all, and taken so much notice of abroad, that they have said, The Lord is there. The churches have multiplied, and this wilderness of heathenism has become a fruitful field."*

Our descent from such worthy ancestors, and our local situation and advantages, demand from us the warmest gratitude. They were men of liberal and enlarged minds, and nobly disdained to be bound in the chains of bigotry and oppression. They looked into the perfect law of liberty, and led the way to freedom of thought on this great subject, so necessary to the repose of mankind. They possessed the spirit of the primitive martyrs, and for Christ's sake endured all manner of suffering; and though persecuted, they were not forsaken. The infant Churches of New England, like the woman represented to St. John in heavenly vision, fled from the face of the dragon of bloody persecution across the Atlantic; and the sails of the ships which wafted them hither were as the two wings of an eagle, that were given them to fly, and hide in this wilderness from the flood cast out to destroy them. And here they found an asylum, and have been nourished more than a century and a half. Mountains of danger and suffering became as pleasant plains; the Red Seas and the swelling Jordans of trouble gave way before them; a table was spread for them in the wilderness, and God brought them in, to give them this land for an inheritance, as it is this day.

It is our duty, Sirs, with humble importunity, to implore the Most High to continue his mercies to us, saying with the prophet, Where is the Lord God of our fathers? From their graves they seem to call us to a holy emulation of their virtues, addressing us, as did the pious king of Israel his son Solomon: "Beloved children, fear ye the God of your fathers, and serve him with a perfect heart and a willing mind." In all their institutions, their extended views regarded their children's children to perpetual generations. Let a lively gratitude embalm their memories!

O God, our fathers have told us what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old. How thou didst drive out the heathen with thy right hand and plantedst them, and the light of thy countenance shone upon them, because thou hadst a favour unto them. In God we boast all the day long, and praise thy name forever. And we thy people, and the sheep of thy pasture, will give thee thanks forever: we will show forth thy praise to all generations. AMEN.

NOTE.

THE HON. JOSIAH QUINCY, of Wollaston, Mass., ex-Mayor of Boston, — the “fine Boy” referred to on page 371, — has favored us with the following interesting reminiscence, drawn from his sister’s diary (Sept. 1818), several years after Mrs. Wolcott’s decease: —

Mrs. Quincy, on her way to visit her sister, Mrs. Bogert, at Beckman, Dutchess Co., N. Y., travelled across the State of Connecticut, of which Mr. Wolcott was then Governor, accompanied by two of her daughters and her niece, Sophia Morton. After following the beautiful Farmington River, travelling in her own carriage, Mrs. Quincy arrived one evening at Litchfield. After engaging accommodations at the hotel, and taking the refreshment of tea, she wrote a note to Mr. Wolcott informing him of her arrival in Litchfield, and that on her way the next morning before resuming her journey, she would have the pleasure of calling on him at his house. The messenger had hardly departed before, to the great surprise of the company, Governor Wolcott, attended by one of his sons, appeared, to call on Mrs. Quincy and insist on her removing immediately with all her party to his house. Being told that all their arrangements were made and this change was impracticable, Mr. Wolcott said, “Then you must all breakfast with me to-morrow.” Again Mrs. Quincy said she would not trouble him to give them breakfast. On this, the Governor was quite excited, and said, “At your peril, Ladies—if you do not all appear at my breakfast-table to-morrow morning, I will order out the militia and send a troop of horse after you. What use is there in being Governor, if I can’t make people do as I please?”

This formidable threat had its due effect; the Ladies were all at the appointed hour before the Governor’s mansion. He came out to the gate and assisted Mrs. Quincy from her carriage into his breakfast-parlour. They had a most interesting visit, and walked in the garden which commanded a beautiful view.

A memoir of this lady mentions the Governor’s leading her “with great emotion into his library to the portrait of his wife, her early and much loved friend.” Of the visit named on p. 367, it says: —

The following summer, Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott passed a month with us. Their numerous friends gathered around them, and we were engaged in a succession of parties and entertainments, including several visits to Pres^t and Mrs. Adams at Quincy. The time passed delightfully away in the companionship of these distinguished friends. pp. 78, 79.
