The main area shows a PDF viewer for the document 'Evaluating the Benefits of State-Led Language Preservation Efforts'. The viewer includes a navigation bar at the top with 'retrieve', '1 / 33', '99%', and icons for zooming and navigation. The document content is displayed in two pages, with page 1 on the right and page 2 on the left. Page 1 features the journal title 'INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL ON MINORITY AND GROUP RIGHTS 27 (2020) 410-441', the publisher 'BRILL NIJHOFF', and the author 'Matt Watson, University of Queensland, St Lucia, QLD, Australia, m.watson@law.uq.edu.au'. The abstract on page 1 reads: 'Abstract Advocates of government-led efforts to preserve endangered languages point to a range of benefits that are, allegedly, thereby fostered. In this article, I analyse six such arguments for preserving endangered languages, with the aim of ascertaining whether language preservation can be expected to help secure the various putative benefits. I evaluate, in turn, the claims that governments should strive to preserve languages because doing so will help to maintain the unique worldviews of endangered linguis...

The screenshot shows a Google Scholar search for 'linguistic anthropology duranti'. The search results page displays a book titled 'Linguistic Anthropology: A Reader' by Alessandro Duranti. The book is available in print but not in e-book format. The search results also show a preview of the book's 'Acknowledgments to the Second Edition' page, which includes a special thanks to students and colleagues who provided feedback on the first edition and to the staff at Wiley-Blackwell for their assistance and patience in the preparation of the second edition. The preview also mentions that undergraduates in the author's lower division course, 'Culture and Communication' at UCLA, have played a role in the book's development.
