The report of violation of American territory by Fenian volunteers and a consequent engagement near Sarnia has proved false.

The Times says that the immediate difficulties of the Fenians and other European despots originating from that the American government is necessary by the proceedings of the Italian Government. Disposition abiding America, relying on the word of the President King, considers any invasion of dominion against Prussia unnecessary. The minor German States are said to have spoke in a complaint to Bismarck, not to the Emperor. There is a daily expectation of the Austrian bombardment of Valparaiso. The Spanish fleet as an "embargo," a "barbarity," of which civil governments, such as the United States, France, and Italy, not to have permitted the bombardment. When we look at the Spanish fleet, there is nothing in them to remove it by the integrity of a legitimate incident of war, and to equip the recognized laws and usages of nations. It may have been impolitic, vindictive, objectionable in every respect, but not illegal, or in violation of international law. But is the Times logical, or if it is Christian in any sense? April is Spain, of all nations, to appeal for not making her stand on the principles of the Christian religion? It would be a good thing if all Europe would unite in a demand that the Spanish fleet should be stopped altogether, and in accordance with war, by common consent, Spanish vessels must go with war vessel and not be allowed as to exercise belligerent rights under that law of nations. To destroy private property, whether belonging to subjects of a hostile country, is contrary to the usages of civilized warfare, and the Spanish government, in which the United States, proposed to amend to the Constitution, in which the United States proposed to secure by the Paris Convention, would have it should be adjusted by the arbitration of friendly powers. It is to be hoped that the above problem will be solved to the satisfaction of the world, and of humanity, and of the principles of international law
