THE PATRIOT SPY

How General Washington Secured
 Important Information

By F. A. MITCHEL

There is still standing in Morristown, N. J., a house which General Washington while maneuvering against the British army at New York occupied as his headquarters. It is kept in excellent repair by an association organized for the purpose and contains a great many relics connected with the Father of His Country. In the kitchen is the same enormous fireplace, with cooking paraphernalia, as was used in Revolutionary times. To some the most interesting room is one on the ground floor, in the rear of the building, that was used by Washington as a private office.

One spring morning in the year 1777 a young man wearing the uniform of a lieutenant of cavalry in the Continental army passed the sentry before Washington's headquarters at Morristown, returned the man's salute and entered the main hall. There he was met by the general's orderly, whom he told to announce Lieutenant John Woodville. In a few moments the officer was standing in Washington's presence.

"Be seated," said the commander, turning from his desk. "I have sent for you to do a more important work than any with which I have yet intrusted you. I wish you to go to New York and if possible learn the intentions of General Howe. I suspect that he is intending to move against Philadelphia. If so he must either march across New Jersey, where he will have to fight us, or go by sea. If he goes by land I desire to be advised of the time he moves, that I may be prepared to intercept his passage. My main object is to so threaten him that he will not be able to send any more troops to assist Burgoyne. I deem it essential that you should understand the situation in order that you may act intelligently. How soon can you leave?"

"As soon as I can secure a disguise," "Very well. Go, and remember that our cause may depend upon your success."

Lieutenant Woodville left his commander and within an hour, in the garb of a young countryman, rode out of Morristown down the road leading to Orange, where he stopped at the tavern—the building is still standing—for dinner, thence to Newark, where he turned south toward Elizabethtown. He was now in territory within reach of the British at New York, and it behooved him to keep a sharp lookout not only to conceal his mission, but for indications of the movements of the enemy.

Woodville pretended to be a Tory to Tory sympathizers and found those of that persuasion jubilant at the prospect of ending the war and re-establishing the authority of the king. They told him that the troops from Canada were to be met near the mouth of the Mohawk river by troops from the south and the line of communication by way of the Hudson and Lake Champlain would soon be open to the British, cutting the confederated colonies in two parts. But he also heard from "patriots" that Burgoyne was marching through a wild country, in which it was difficult to feed his army, and unless he were successful in forming a junction with the force moving from the south he would be in a critical position.

This indicated to the young lieutenant that what Howe did in the way of sending troops to support Burgoyne was of great importance to the cause, and it was especially essential that General Washington should know, so far as possible, just what Howe was doing in the matter. But Woodville was not near enough to the British headquarters to learn much about the matter, so he determined to move on to the west bank of the Hudson, where Jersey City now stands. A family of patriots of the name of Curtiss lived there, to whom he was known and on whom he could rely. On his way he passed the King's Arms, a tavern kept by a Tory named Smithson, who had a pretty daughter, Jennie, upon whom the young soldier looked with loving eyes. He desired to pay her a visit in passing, but dare not do so, because if recognized by her father he would be betrayed to the British and hanged as a spy, so he went on to the Curtisses, where he was taken in and given a lodging.

Woodville noticed a number of ships lying at anchor in the river and that the boats going to them usually carried what appeared to be supplies. It looked as if they were preparing for a voyage, but to what point did not appear. The spy was near the ferry and noticed soon after his arrival a British soldier disembark, mount his horse and ride westward. A soldier becomes used to the ways of soldiers, and there was something in the man's movements that indicated to Woodville that he was going somewhere with an object. The most likely object he could have was carrying a message.

The spy ran to the barn, got out his horse and, mounting, started to follow the soldier. Catching sight of him ascending the heights back of the river, he slowed his pace, riding only near enough to him to keep him in sight. The Britisher took the road to Elizabethtown. It was drawing near the close of the day, and, passing the King's Arms tavern, he stopped, dismounted and entered.

Woodville drew rein and considered the situation. He saw a negro take the soldier's horse to the barn and argued that the latter would stay to supper and possibly all night. The American wished that he could catch sight of Jennie Smithson without her father seeing him. He waited till it was dark; then, tying his horse to a tree, stole up to the house to reconnoiter.

Looking through a window, he saw the soldier standing before the bar, while the landlord was behind him in the act of serving a mug of flip. Woodville went around to the kitchen and saw Jennie superintending a negro cook, who was cooking the supper. He managed to attract Jennie's attention and, putting his fingers to his lips, signaled her to come out to him. Jennie joined him, and the two retreated into the darkness.

Jennie did not sympathize with the Tories, for she had been born in America and, being very much in love with Woodville, was ready to do anything he asked of her. He inquired if the trooper was to remain all night, and she replied that she did not know. She thought that, having eaten his supper, he would go on to either Newark or Elizabethtown. Woodville told her he suspected the man was a messenger, and if so he desired to get possession of any document he might have on his person. He begged her to find out if possible what was the man's errand and if he were carrying a message to try to get it away from him.

Jennie promised to do all she could in the matter and, returning to the house, brought out something for Woodville to eat and put him in the smokehouse. Later she returned and said that she had talked with the soldier and learned that he was on his way to Princeton, where a British commissary of subsistence was stationed for the purpose of gathering supplies for General Howe's army at New York. She would detain him if possible.

Woodville was puzzled. Having seen the British ships loading with supplies off Manhattan Island, he had got the idea that the force would be transported by sea. Was this commissary to be directed to have supplies ready for the British on a march through Princeton, or was he to be ordered to send them to New York that they might be loaded on the ships? This uncertainty rendered it important that Jennie should secure further information on the subject. Woodville paced back and forth before the smokehouse impatiently awaiting her return.

An hour passed, and Woodville concluded to reconnoiter. Leaving the smokehouse, he went to the front of the house and saw the soldier talking to Jennie, who seemed to be doing her best to entertain him, even now and again rising, going to the bar and returning with a mug of flip for the guest. Satisfied that all was going well, the spy returned to the smokehouse. About 10 o'clock Jennie came to him and told him that the soldier had gone to bed well filled with liquor. As soon as she was assured that he was sound asleep she would go into his room and capture anything he might have in his possession.

Woodville had been deprived of sleep for several nights and while waiting fell into a slumber. He was awakened by Jennie, who thrust a sealed paper into his hands. She had taken the precaution to bring also a flint and steel and a candle and struck a light. Woodville rubbed his eyes and read the superscription on the paper. It was to Captain George Doncaster, commissary of subsistence, Princeton, N. J. Breaking the seal, he read:

"Captain—You are hereby ordered to send all the supplies in your possession to a point on the coast directly east of Princeton and deposit them on the beach at the nearest inlet, where they can be taken off in boats. You will also direct any officer in charge of a supply station south of you to transport his supplies to the coast at a convenient point for shipment. Signal by fire on the dunes. The fleet will be near you on the 11th.

By order of Major General Howe.
 When Woodville had read this he threw his arms about Jennie and gave her a dozen kisses.

"What does it mean?" she asked.
 "It means that General Howe is going to attack Philadelphia, and he dare not try to force his way through New Jersey, liable to be pounced upon by General Washington from Morristown. I must be off with the document at once."

Giving Jennie a farewell kiss, Woodville went to the point where he had left his horse and, mounting, rode away. Passing through Newark and Orange, he ascended the rise west of the latter place, and early in the morning rode up to Washington's headquarters at Morristown. Throwing himself from his horse, he asked to see the general. Washington, who had risen early to begin the work of the day, hearing that Woodville had returned, directed that he be shown to his bedroom. On entering the young man held out to him the paper he had secured through Jennie Smithson.
 "Ah!" exclaimed the general. "He goes by sea to Philadelphia. Now we know just where and when to meet him."

Washington was not able to prevent the ultimate capture of Philadelphia, but he caused Howe so much trouble that he was prevented from sending more troops to help Burgoyne out of the difficult position into which he had fallen, and the British disaster at Saratoga soon followed.

Jennie Smithson was suspected of having stolen the paper from the British trooper, but the act could never be proved against her. After independence was secured she met her reward in the husband she desired.

OLD TIME PORTRAITS.

Does There Exist a Reliable Painting of the Poet Burns?

Was this the face that launched a thousand ships? And burnt the topless towers of Ilium? asks Marlowe, writing of the vision of golden Helen. A similar question has been asked in regard to the diverging portraits of Mary Stuart. Was this the face that turned so many heads some 350 years ago? The queen of Scots was assuredly bewitching. Knox admits it; Knollys asserts it; Ruthven lost his heart to her in Lochleven castle; whoever saw her desired her. Yet not one of Mary's portraits represents her as beautiful. Romney has sufficiently explained the fascination of Lady Hamilton for Nelson. But Mary Stuart's charm remains unexplained by her portraits.

And what about Burns? The point I wish to make is that old portrait painters are not to be depended on for strict fidelity to their originals. The mere fact that they differ so much in their representations of the same subject is enough to prove it. In regard to Burns, the question bears a twofold aspect. Not only do the portraits of the poet disagree with one another, but even that which by its frequent reproduction has tacitly been accepted as the truest representation cannot be exactly like him when it was done. I refer, of course, to the familiar Nasmyth head and bust, painted in 1787, when Burns was carrying all before him on his first visit to Edinburgh.—J. Cuthbert Hadden in Scribner's.

REAL ESTATE LEASES.

Origin of the Custom of Making Rentals For 99 or 999 Years.

Whence originated the use of the odd term in leases, 99 or 999 years?

In other days lessees and mortgagees in possession of real estate for 100 or 1,000 years demised the same at an annual rental, retaining a reversion for the last year of the original term. The object of this proceeding was to be found in the unwillingness of the under tenant to become bound to the performance of the covenant contained in the original grant and also in the importance to the lessor of a reversionary interest, without which, under the old English practice, he could not recover his rent by distraint.

Sometimes this reversion was for only three days or even for only one day, but usually in long terms the last year was retained. Out of this came the popular notion that the law provided this distraint, and hence leases were made for 99 or 999 years, when there was no reason whatever for any such odd period of time.

In England there was in special cases a restraint on corporations or ecclesiastical persons prohibiting the demise of lands belonging to them to the impoverishment of their successors for a term beyond 100 years and such leases were accordingly made for 99 years.—Harper's Weekly.

Boosting a Stock.

"Stocks are valuable in keeping with the demand for them," said a Wall street man, "and the demand is often created by queer methods. A few years ago a man who is well known in the street was overladen with a certain stock. He told his wife there was money in it and that it would soon have a big rise. Next day the good woman gave the tip to the woman who came daily to massage her. The latter had many wealthy clients, to whom she gave the get-rich-quick tip. The stock became popular, the man sold out, and the massuse who set the ball in motion never knew why she received a present of extraordinary value at Christmas time from her client."

"From which one?"
 "Why, from the one who said it was a 'good thing,' of course. The others probably discharged her."—New York Tribune.

Hyderabad.

The state of Hyderabad, located about midway between Madras and Bombay, in the south central part of India, with a population about equal to that of New York and Massachusetts combined and with an area of 82,638 square miles (just about the same area as Kansas) is, generally speaking, the most important native state in India in population, wealth and potential resources. It has many wild creatures, including tigers and leopards in abundance and occasionally bison and elephants. There are also wild hogs, antelope, hyenas, wolves, jackals and bears.

He Still Had It.

"Look here, you swindler!" roared the owner of the suburban property to the real estate man. "When you sold me this house, didn't you say that in three months I wouldn't part with it for $10,000?"
 "Certainly," said the real estate dealer calmly, "and you haven't, have you?"

A Little Too Much.

"This is what I call adding insult to injury."
 "What's the trouble?"
 "An editor not only returns my manuscript, but he wants me to subscribe for his paper."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

WEEK BY WEEK.

Each Week Appear the Statements of Weymouth Residents.
Last week it was a Weymouth citizen who spoke. The week before, it was a Weymouth citizen who spoke. The week before, and for many weeks before it was a Weymouth citizen who spoke. And again this week it is a Weymouth man. You are not asked to act upon the word of a stranger. The best guidance that is humanly possible to give you—the encouraging word of neighbors, is always given.
Asa K. Binney, 112 Broad street, Weymouth, Mass., says: "I had severe backaches. My kidneys were weak and irregular in action. I found that one box of Doan's Kidney Pills made a great improvement, removing the pain and regulating the kidney action. Doan's Kidney Pills have also been used by others of my family with great benefit. My opinion of this remedy remains the same at this time as when I gave my recommendation a few months ago. I know Doan's Kidney Pills are thoroughly reliable and never hesitate to praise them.

The opportunity of a life time is now up to Kenneth L. Nash, who represents the Seventh Norfolk District in the General Court.

One of the most important bills before the legislature is that which proposes to take Brookline from Norfolk County and place it in Suffolk. Brookline is the most wealthy town in the State and its county tax is $98,000 and result of the removal will be a radical increase in taxes to other towns and cities in the county.

The opponents to this movement will of course be up against its Brookline advocates and the entire Boston influence and workers. Norfolk County members will have to get busy to overcome this large force and influence and it behooves them to get in close touch with the up-country members, using their magnetic powers, not so much in discussing the bill on the floor of the house, but in more private talks and explanations of the real situation. Brookline has been a large factor in the immense outlay of money the county has made in the last few years and it shows some very tangible reasons why a change should be made.

Town Business.

The Selectmen have been asked to rule as to tango dancing being permitted at the Town Hall, and the reply is that to a certain limit the tango dancing may not be objectionable, and the inquirers are advised to have an officer on hand who shall stop all improper dancing.

Permission was granted to Philip J. Sullivan for the Sportsman's Club to hold a dance at the Town Hall, Friday night, the 13th.

The State Fire Warden has approved of the appointment of Edgar S. Wright as Town Warden.

Division Superintendent Gannon of the State Street R. R., was given a hearing in regard to improving the condition of the track from Washington to Lincoln square and one or two other locations, and work on the same will be arranged as soon as the roads are in working condition.

A hearing was held by the Board on Monday in regard to the laying out of a town road from Lovell to North street, and there being no remonstrants the proposed road will come before the town meeting for acceptance.

High School Notes.

An official of the Tucker Teacher's Agency was about school on Wednesday, and was reported to have made tempting offers to different members of the teaching corps. It is said that each one refused to "jump."

On next Monday, at three o'clock, a lecture by Mr. L. True Ames Meade, on "Common Fallacies of Peace and War," will be given, through the courtesy of the Monday Woman's Club, in the assembly hall.

The date of the operetta "The Egyptian Princess," is Friday, February 20th, and the place Odd Fellows' Building, East Weymouth.

The girls of the senior class have held several meetings to discuss the advisability of forming a literary society. Mrs. Vallin of South Weymouth started the idea, and suggests "Stoddard's Lectures," as a good subject to begin on.

The game which was to have been played with Oliver Ames at North Easton on last Friday, was cancelled. The team got as far as Braintree, but received a telegram that no power could be secured in the gym at North Easton, and consequently no lights.

The following have received a letter in recognition of work on the cross-country team: R. Hiatt, '17; B. Sprague, '17; L. Campbell, '17; G. Proctor, '16; C. Sweet, '16, and R. Talbot, '15.

WEYMOUTH 114: COHASSET, 4.

"45 MINUTES FROM BOSTON."

Mrs. May Fiske Hoffman's Musical Comedy Scores Second Grand Success in Odd Fellows' Hall, East Weymouth on Wednesday Evening.

A large audience gathered in Odd Fellows Hall, East Weymouth, on Wednesday evening, to witness the second performance of "Forty-five Minutes From Boston," written and presented by Mrs. May Fiske Hoffman of East Weymouth. The affair was given under the auspices of Dorothea L. Dix Tent, Daughters of Veterans, of the town, and like the first presentation was a huge success from start to finish. All the old favorites, "Allie" Gardner, Milton Richmond, Gideon Murray, Jr., Clement Gardner, Lyman Pratt, Mrs. Farrington, Mrs. Lord, Mrs. Bailey, Harry Richmond, Mrs. Morgan and others in the cast took their parts extremely well, while Miss Polly Daley, a new member of the cast this time, perfectly enacted the "summer girl" part allotted to her. Miss Zelia Hall was highly applauded at the close of her solo dance, and the "Little Brown Man," Charles Perry, received an ovation on his appearance on the stage.

The orchestral numbers of the program were played by an orchestra under the direction of J. H. Tower, and later this orchestra furnished music for the dancing.

At the conclusion of the comedy, the floor was cleared and dancing was enjoyed until midnight.

Union Literary Circle.

The next meeting of the Circle will be held at Union church, Tuesday evening, February 10th. Subject: "Illustrated Lecture on California." Speaker, Mr. Ernest M. Vaughan, whose long residence in the state qualifies him to speak with authority on the subject. Members are privileged to invite guests.

ON THE FARM

Read this column and you can have it delivered at your house with something new every week for a full year by sending $2.00 to this office now.

Those who failed to set out shade trees during the fall should prepare now to do so in the spring.

Now is one of the best times to haul out and apply manure on the meadows and mowing the meadows is one of the best plans of keeping the fertility.

There is really no economy in feeding a ration that is spoiled, musty, or filthy to any of the farm fowls or animals. It may seem the part of thrift at the time, but in the end the practice is pretty sure to result in more harm than good.

There is plenty of work to do in the winter if the farm is rightly managed. It is the season of the year for all repairs and renewals. Every implement or piece of machinery should be overhauled and all repairs ordered, so as to be ready for spring work.

The dairyman who allows his stalls to be in such condition that the sides of the cows become plastered with filth and the udders and teats smeared with the liquids of the stalls is guilty of neglect. The use of straw for several successive days and nights without change is a mistake.

The majority of farmers now are attempting to make as much manure as possible. The product is being cared for now in a better way. Manure piled in deep masses against the sides of the stable is no longer a familiar sight in the country. The average man realizes that it is better for it to rot in the field than to rot down the stable walls.

The last year has been one of great agricultural prosperity throughout our favored land, and one, we confidently believe, of much progress in the art. Mind, among the farmers, has had more thought for the causes and reasons of things, than ever before, and it promises to be still more active and inquisitive in the future.

Good grains are the cheapest in the long run to feed the fowls. It pays to purchase the best for poultry if the very best returns are to be expected. This does not mean the buying of fancy or expensive feeds, but the best in staple grains, oats, wheat, corn, barley are grains that can always be fed with good results.

An asparagus plantation should be supplied annually with well-rotted stable manure or mineral fertilizers distributed in furrows run each side of a row. The application of stable manure, ground bone, bone meal, acid phosphate and muriate or sulphate of potash can be made to best advantage early in the spring before growth starts.

Chicks must be hatched early and the pullets grown for early maturity if eggs are expected in the fall and early winter. February and March hatched pullets of any of the breeds can be matured and be ready for laying by October, the time when eggs begin to rise in price. Right early-hatched pullets of some of the breeds will begin laying the latter part of August and continue all fall and winter with the right kind of feed and care. Get your hatches out early for winter egg laying.

As many die from lack of work as from overwork. A horse standing idle on a full ration finds his digestive and excretory organs overtaxed, with the result that poisonous elements form in the alimentary tract. These may be stored up in the blood and become active only when the horse is again put to work, or may become immediately effective. The horse that is not doing his usual amount of work should be put on a very much lighter ration than ordinary.

Do not forget that the implements and machines on the farm represent an investment, and that when exposed to the weather they deteriorate rapidly, thus making the upkeep and original cost a heavier charge against the equipment. Dew, rain and sunshine may cause greater deterioration in expensive implements than ordinary use. To leave the implements at the end of the rows or in the field without shelter means great loss. No progressive farmer can afford it.

Eve's Decision Was Final

Romance of the Heiress of Double X Ranch.

By CLARISSA MACKIE

The morning sunshine streamed through the open windows of the ranch house, where Seba Winton and his daughter sat at breakfast. It strengthened the deep bronze of Seba's cheek and brought out high lights in Eve's copper colored hair.

"You look like you wasn't feeling up to the scratch, honey," said Seba solicitously. "I reckon all this dancing and nightfulin' entertainments ain't good for little girls."

"I'm all right, dad," said Eve listlessly, "only it's tired sort of weather, you know." She looked past him through the eastern window where the outline of the sun scorched hills melted into a sepia haze.

"Let me see, honey. I most forgot how long you and Buck's been engaged," he said, with clumsily assumed carelessness.

Eve reddened from brow to chin, and the fork in her hand rattled to the floor. She laughed nervously—Eve who had never confessed to nerves in all her free young life—and still kept her eyes on the eastern hills.

"Oh, I believe it's three years, dad. It's funny, but I've almost forgotten too!"

Seba Winton got upon his feet and paused behind her chair.

"I don't want to lose you, Evie, but if you're keeping Buck waiting because of your—your sense of duty to me—why, you needn't mind. I only want you to be happy." He kissed the top of her head and hastily left the room.

When the Chinese servant had received his orders for the day Eve put on her riding things and went to the corral.

"Jim, where is my father?" she asked of the lad who saddled the roan mare.

"He went to the gulch with Wade. There's some dispute over a critter with three brands, and Mr. Winton's gone over to see about it."

Jim watched Eve curiously as she mounted and rode away without her accustomed gay leave taking.

"If it's that skunk of a Buck Miles that's making her look that way I'll smash his head!" muttered Jim, for Eve was adored by every member of the Double X outfit.

The night before there had been a dance at the gulch schoolhouse, and the wailing sweetness of the violins

"Isn't this lovely?" asked Eve, still haunted her ears with irritating persistence—irritating because the evening had been such an unhappy one for poor Eve.

She had gone to the dance with her father, as usual, but Seba Winton had remained only long enough to deliver his daughter into her lover's care, and then he had departed for home and an early bed.

To Eve it seemed that the evening would never end. Buck had danced once with her and after that had openly devoted himself to black-eyed Mattie Young, to the wonderment and disgust of the male guests.

Eve, pale and frightened at what she knew not threatened to destroy her happiness, did not lack for partners. They swarmed about her like bees, and there were much laughter and merriment among them, for to a man they strove to eliminate the idea that Eve was being neglected by Buck Miles.

Eve remembered their efforts with warm gratitude, and she recollected that the new schoolteacher unbent from his dignity and danced with her several times. He talked to her in his pleasant, well modulated voice, but to day Eve could not recall a word of their conversation. She only knew that she had felt a sense of protection in his tall, broad shouldered figure and in the warm kindness of his voice.

And when it was all over the schoolteacher had gone home with her. To Eve's consternation, Buck Miles had disappeared before the last dance with pretty Mattie. She was quivering under this last insult when out of the chaos of the evening had come Philip Landon's deep voice, ringing clear and insistent above the chatter and movement of departure.

"I hope you have not forgotten your promise that I shall take you home, Miss Winton," he said, and every one heard him and was glad. Although no such promise had been asked or given, Eve had smiled and taken his proffered arm and entered the waiting buggy.

And now, after a sleepless night, she was racing over the parched ground, riding away from Buckman Miles' property, which bordered her father's ranch on the south.

Over to the south, away from which she was now riding, lay the Lazy O ranch, of which Miles was the owner.

Eve Winton and Buck Miles had grown up together, and every incident in Eve's happy, care free existence seemed to have been interwoven with that of her neighbor. It was quite natural that later they should fall desperately in love and become engaged. But there it had paused, for three years had passed since Buck had slipped a diamond ring upon Eve's slim finger, and Buck had never mentioned their marriage, except in the most casual manner, as something very far ahead in the future.

Suddenly came the pounding thud of hoofs along the trail behind. She did not turn around even when the swift gallop broke into a trot and some one rode at her elbow.

Of course it was Buck Miles, eager and repentant after his insults of the evening before.

"You need not follow me," said Eve coldly and without turning her head. "I prefer to be quite alone."

With a startled ejaculation the unseen rider turned and galloped rapidly along the trail.

This action was so unlike Buckman Miles that Eve turned and looked after him.

To her horror it was not Buck Miles. It was Philip Landon.

Placing both hands to her lips, Eve hallowed with piercing sweetness. Landon turned, hesitated, and then swung about and came toward her.

"You wished to speak to me?" he questioned gravely.

"Oh, I am so sorry that I spoke in that way—you see, I didn't know it was you. I thought it was some one else," faltered Eve with drooping eyes and shamed cheeks.

A light of understanding flashed into the young man's eyes and then was subdued.

"Thank you for explaining," he said soberly, "but I shall not take it amiss if you prefer to be alone."

"I shall be glad if you will come with me," she said cheerfully. "I'm going to ride to Devil's fork."

He looked at the brazen sky. "I hardly believe it will rain today, but is there water at Devil's fork?"

"Plenty of sweet spring water," was Eve's reply, and then they rode on side by side, with now and then a brief interchange of words concerning the heat of the ascending sun or the danger of grass fires, for the crisp herbage was crackling under their feet, so dry had been the long season.

Landon found himself watching the changing expressions on Eve's sweet face. There was something irresistible in the soft curves of her lips and the upward sweep of her long, dark lashes.

Suddenly she turned to him. "You were very kind last night," she said impulsively.

"You were kind to me," he chided gently. "I am afraid I bored you with my talk about myself."

"That was only part of your kindness," she retorted, and after that Landon was silent.

They had descended a long slope and were now in the cool shadow of another range of hills, higher, and broken here and there by small canyons. Toward one of these they were riding.

"Where is the devil, and where are his forks?" asked Landon curiously as they entered the canyon.

"Wait," replied Eve. "They passed along a narrow trail and emerged upon a dark and gloomy canyon whose steep sides were clothed in cottonwoods."

A little to the right of the trail a mad white torrent gushed out of the rocks, and, spilling itself into three worn channels, it raced across the canyon to disappear in a boiling froth of foam among a heap of boulders.

Under the cottonwoods there was grateful shade and the promise of green grass for the horses.

"Isn't this lovely?" asked Eve after she had pointed out to her companion the stream with its forks which gave the place its name.

"I didn't know that such a retreat existed in the neighborhood," cried Landon enthusiastically. "Shall we sit under the shade yonder?"

"Yes, after poor Peggy has had a drink of the best water in the world," laughed Eve as she slipped from the saddle.

Landon produced a folding drinking cup, and the man and the girl quenched their thirst before Peggy and the schoolmaster's black horse were led to the stream. Then, while the animals nipped eagerly at the green grass along the waterside, Eve and her companion sat down under the cottonwoods.

Eve quite forgot her troubles as she listened to Philip Landon's soothing voice. He talked of many things—of places he had visited, of people whom he had met and of many amusing incidents in his eventful life.

And while they sat there a clatter sounded on the stones and a horseman flashed into view.

It was Buck Miles, pale beneath his tan, his black eyes flashing and his handsome face carved into grim lines of resolve.

"Eve!" he called. Eve arose and walked out to the edge of the trail.

"You are calling me?" she asked coldly.

He nodded and held out a glittering diamond ring.

"I got this awhile ago. Why did you send it back?"

"You know why I returned it."

"I didn't suspect you of petty jealousy, Eve," he flashed.

"I am not jealous now, Buck," said Eve quietly. "You are free to make your choice now. I cannot marry you."

"Why? Has that white livered school-teacher?"

Philip Landon stepped out beside Eve.

"You are shouting so loud I can't help hearing what you say," he said grimly. "If you have any grievance with me we'll have it out together. There is no necessity for annoying Miss Winton."

Buck Miles glared at Landon.

"I'll have it out with you whenever and wherever I please!" he raged.

"What do you mean by going home with my girl last night?"

"If you will get off your horse I'll knock you down for that," returned

Landon coolly. "None of that gun play, any. Only coward can shoot an unarmed man."

Buck's hand dropped from his hip. At the same moment he slipped from the saddle and came toward the schoolmaster.

"What right you got to dictate to me?" he demanded fiercely. "If you're going to marry Eve—why, then—I suppose I haven't got any right to interfere, seeing that she's sent me back my ring. What you got to say, eh?"

Landon found himself looking down the blue mouth of Buck's gun.

"Leave Miss Winton's name out of the matter," ordered Landon.

"If she's going to marry you I'll let you off, but if you're just butting in, thinking you can make me jealous just to pay me back for—for what I didn't do last night, why?" He smiled significantly.

Eve realized that Buckman Miles was drunk. She looked at Landon's set face, and she knew that he was chivalrous to the point of folly.

"One!" cried Buck ominously. Landon smiled.

Eve's hand went out. "Don't shoot, Buck," she said tensely. "You have no right to make me so unhappy."

"You mean—you love this fellow?" asked Buck brokenly.

Eve flushed scarlet, and she looked from one stern face to the other. As her eyes met Landon's a great and blinding light seemed to open her eyes to a wonderful fact.

She was quite pale when she faced Buck Miles.

"Yes," she said simply. Buck's hand dropped, and he stared open mouthed. "Well," he said awkwardly, "all's well that ends well, I guess. Mattie made me come over and bring this ring back to you. She said I wasn't treating you fairly, but if you don't want it—if you really love Landon here—I guess there isn't any reason why I can't go back and marry Mattie."

"Have you seen Miss Young this morning?" asked Landon.

"No."

"Before I left the gulch Postmaster Squires told me that his son had eloped with Miss Young early this morning and that they left word they were to be married in Foster before noon."

"It's a lie!" shouted Buck and, throwing himself on his horse, dashed out of the canyon and disappeared.

Philip Landon turned his blue eyes on blushing Eve.

"I'm sure you saved my life. He was blind with rage and drink. Although I have loved you ever since we first met a year ago, I shall not hold you to that statement so rashly given to save my life."

"You love me?" whispered Eve incredulously.

"Yes."

"Then," said Eve, who had learned so much in the last few minutes—"then I shall not retract my statement!"

"And we are engaged?" Landon's arms were around her and his eyes looking down into hers.

"I hope so," answered Eve demurely.

Weymouth Gazette
AND TRANSCRIPT

FRIDAY, FEB. 13, 1914.

The mild spell of weather we had last week was only a trick of old Boreas who got a new grip on the cold winds, and came back with a vengeance, giving us the coldest wave for many years. Schools were closed and in many homes people are sitting up nights to reduce their fuel piles.

We might say much this week in regard to Town Business, as there is much in the air. For instance, a record breaking Warrant for Town Meeting with 115 articles in it. Candidates and nominations with a large field of candidates for the various offices, but much of this now, is in the embryo state and we can give our readers a better story of it next week, for which get our next issue.

The warrant for the coming annual town meeting will contain several suggestions in regard to town officers, their manner of election and terms of office.

If the system is as bad as some contend why not wipe out the entire form of business, and start in on the Dayton, Ohio plan, i. e. — Invest the whole business in a city, or with us a town, manager, who shall be the only executive officer of the town.

"The city manager plan differs materially from all the other methods of government, either by commission or other boards, and places in the hands of one man the executive leadership of the various departments. It is a practical recognition of the fact that municipalities are business.

Weymouth Teachers' Association.

At the monthly business meeting of the Teachers' Association, held Tuesday afternoon at the Jefferson school, the following officers were elected: President, Charles Berry; Vice-president, Miss Martha J. Hawes; Secretary-treasurer, Miss Stella Tirrell; Executive committee, Miss Inez Allen, Miss Elizabeth Hall, Joseph Crowell and E. J. Goulart.

The committee appointed at a previous meeting to secure information in regard to raising the salaries of the elementary teachers to the maximum this year reported favorably.

W. R. C. Notes.

The East Weymouth supper committee served a bountiful supper at 6:30, Captain Quincy Spear of Post 58 invoking the blessing. The president and patriotic instructor of all the allied orders were guests. The entertainment following was in honor of Lincoln, and was opened by the salute to Our Flag by the audience. The following program was carried out, nearly every number being encored Quartette numbers by the Sherman Four; piano solos by Mr. McDonald; vocal solos by Miss Elinor Blanchard, and readings touching on the life of Lincoln by Mrs. Alice Helbeck, Mrs. Estelle Richards, Miss Eunice Pratt, Ernest Smith and Mr. Jewett. Commander Culley's granddaughter, little Miss Gertrude recited Lincoln's Gattysburg speech. Mrs. Baldwin called on P. D. P. Mrs. Mary Holbrook, P. D. P. Mrs. Carrie Loring and Pres. Mrs. Clara Maynard of Tent 32, D. of V. all of whom responded entertainingly. The singing of America closed an evening with but one drawback, the absence of our dear Patriotic Instructor.

An organization in Greater Boston has just successfully carried out a "Cycle of Time" raising $1,000 and believe they are the first to do this. Under Mrs. Carrie Loring's presidency our Corps accomplished this feat about three years ago; so we claim the banner. Furthermore, Mrs. Loring also carried this plan out successfully in the Department, in each instance raising over $1,000.

Citizens' Caucus

A Citizens' Caucus will be held in Town Hall, East Weymouth Monday Evening Feb. 16, 1914 at 8 o'clock

for the purpose of nominating candidates for the several Town Offices to be balloted for at the Annual Town Election held on March 2, 1914, as follows:

One Town Clerk, a Town Treasurer, five Selectmen, five Overseers of the Poor, two Assessors for three years, one Collector of Taxes, three Auditors, two School Committee for three years, one Park Commissioner for three years, a Tree Warden, three Trustees of Tufts Library for three years, one Water Commissioner for three years, one Commissioner for Ward Two Schoolhouse Sinking Fund for three years, one member of the Board of Health for three years, ten Constables, and any other officers;

And for the transaction of any other business that may properly come before the Caucus.

This Caucus is called under Chapter 11 of the revised Statutes and amendments thereto, and will be called to order by the chairman of the Committee.

Per order,

Citizen's Committee,
CARMINE GAROFALO, Chairman
RALPH P. BURRELL, Secretary
Weymouth, Feb. 7, 1914. 11

J. W. GORMAN'S MUSICAL COMEDY
COMEDY.

Present "7 Reasons Y" at Bates' Opera House, Weymouth.

Mr. Ott is a firm believer in the number "7." He was born on the "7th" of January, No. 7 Seventh avenue, N. Y. City. His father Adam Ott, was the 7th son. Previous to Mr. Ott's first appearance on earth, six brothers preceded him, therefore he is the seventh son of a seventh son. Nevertheless, we are not talking about Mr. Ott, we are trying to describe his latest play, "7 Reasons Y." Once upon a time Mr. Ott told the public what would happen if a man spent SEVEN HOURS IN NEW YORK, now he is telling us that there are SEVEN REASONS why a man should marry, and SEVEN REASONS why a man should not marry. All who are familiar with his work will say that this is the funniest and best ever written. The mission of farce does not extend beyond mere amusement, therefore it is useless to discuss qualities to which it makes no pretence "SEVEN REASONS WHY" goes the limit as a pure laugh maker.

WEYMOUTH HEIGHTS

The L. B. S. held a sewing meeting with Mrs. James Jones last Wednesday afternoon.

The four-year-old daughter, Gladys, of Mr. and Mrs. Alton Blanchard is ill with scarlet fever.

Mrs. Edwin Murphy pleasantly entertained the Larkin club at her home this afternoon (Friday).

A business meeting of the Waukana club was held with the president, Mrs. F. C. McDowell, last Thursday evening.

Clement Curtis has resumed his duties in the office of the Walter M. Lowney Co., Boston, after a year's absence on account of illness.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Grace C. Sampson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Z. Sampson of Marshfield, and Mr. Louis Carlton Bradford of this place.

The service of the Old North church, next Sunday evening, will be held in the church at seven o'clock, under the auspices of the Sunday school. The subject will be Abraham Lincoln. Music will be rendered by the Wide Awakes. The community is cordially invited to attend this service.

The Wide Awakes gave their second annual reception in the Old North chapel last Wednesday evening. A delightful live consisting of the Misses Isabel Jones, Ruth Nash, Helen Ries and Ruth Sladen, received forty-five guests, which was followed by a welcome song by the Wide Awakes, accompanied by Mrs. James White. Reports for the past year were read by Ruth Nash, treasurer, and Helen Ries, secretary. A program of games of all sorts were indulged in and a good time was enjoyed by all. A flag drill was rendered by twelve Wide Awakes, which received much applause. Refreshments were served.

LIGHTING SERVICE

We propose to talk to the people of Weymouth for some time about LIGHTING SERVICE.

Not just about Light, but about LIGHTING SERVICE.

It is possible that the thought of LIGHTING SERVICE may be a new one to many of our consumers or to some who are not yet our consumers—which is our reason for talking about it.

As everybody knows, a large part of our business is to sell light, but a fact that is NOT generally known is that a more important part of our business is to render perfect LIGHTING SERVICE.

Our first step toward rendering perfect LIGHTING SERVICE is to call attention to the

—The Norfolk Club bowling team journeyed to East Weymouth on Wednesday evening and rolled the C. M. A. bowlers on the latter's alleys. The local aggregation returned home a winner at the candlepin game by 24 pins. The locals took the first two strings and the total, but the Clapp boys won the third string by three pins. The strings resulted as follows: Norfolk, 440-468-474-1372; C. M. A., 480-441-477-1348. Abbott of Norfolk got the high single with 103 pins, while Lewis Loring of the C. M. A. got 298 for high three string total. The Norfolk boys were accompanied by about fifty rooters who made the trip in a special car.

Old South Church Notes.
A glad, hopeful day last Sunday. Revive and strengthen the habit of church-going!

The pastor will preach next Sunday morning. The Sunday school will study the life of Christ. The C. E. Society, at 6 o'clock, has a temperance rally. The evening gospel service will be at 7 o'clock in the vestry, with addresses by the pastor. Welcome to all.

The Go-to-Church Band, which has been under consideration for some time, begins next Sunday.

Union Church Notes.

The Go-to-Church Band, following hard on Go-to-Church Sunday, will begin its first term next Sunday, the term continuing till June 1. Any who have not as yet taken their cards or coupons which register attendance and who are present at the service next Sunday morning may get credit for that day and join the Band with the others. Topic: "Why Every One Should Sign a Temperance Pledge." Leader: Randolph Lamprey. The pastor will have something to say on the book: "John Barleycorn."

The annual offering for Women's Board of Missions will be taken at the morning service. It is urged that the people make this offering a memorial to the late Mrs. H. B. Reed, president of our Women's Missionary Society at the time of her death.

This Will Hold Your Attention

I know that Electric Lights in the home are a constant source of comfort.
I know a house rents more quickly when it is lighted by electricity.
I know that the cost is less for repairs and renewals, due to blackened ceilings, soiled walls and dingy paint.
I know it will make my house, or any house I own, more valuable to install electric lights.
I will 'phone or write our Electric Light Company today for full particulars of their very best offer.

ON THE FARM

Read this column and you can have it delivered at your house with something new every week for a full year by sending $2.00 to this office now.

Don't drive upon the meadow when it is soft, and be sure and keep the cattle off of it.

Take a few of your best layers out of the main house and keep them in a place by themselves with the best male bird you can get. The eggs from these hens will be your stock for the chicks that are to be.

Many allow their cows to decrease in milk at this season for want of good feed. It will pay to purchase bran and other good feeds if you have not enough of home-grown kinds.

This is a good time of the year to prepare and build fences. Get all of the post timber cut and seasoned before it is placed in the ground. A seasoned post set in the ground will last much longer than a green one.

Do not attempt to secure warmth in the stables by banking windows and closing everything up tightly. The horse is a breathing animal and needs fresh air, but it should be supplied without exposure to drafts.

This is the season, too, for studying plantations and marking for removal of trees which are injuring their more valuable neighbors. No tree can attain its full stature or its noblest expression or have a reasonable hope of longevity unless it is exposed to the influence of air and sunshine.

When the value of this trinity—lime-stone, phosphate and clover—becomes common knowledge and is applied to agriculture, then will we see high production on a basis that may be indefinitely continued—more permanent than the everlasting hills, because it can make a fertile soil after the hills wear out.

Enough experiments have been made with cow testing to convince any farmer that the average common cow is not worth her keeping. Many are maintained at an actual loss. There is no sane reason why a farmer should make money in one line and lose in another. With only general observation any one can tell if a cow is paying her way. By weighing her milk one day out of every week her value can be determined with accuracy.

According to canning experts of the department of agriculture, about 50 per cent of all the vegetables that are produced every year go to waste and are actually lost for human value because the average home has not learned how efficiently to care for the surplus product.

Some orchard men neglect to gather all the pruned brush and some men pile the same outside the orchard, usually in a ditch, and allow the wood to decay as best it can. It is true that such brush is a real hotbed for fungus diseases. It is a common sight to see side by side a well kept commercial orchard and neglected, unkept orchard.

A particular class of American people who have underrated mutton are the farmers, many of whom keep a flock yet seldom, if ever, slaughter one for their own use. A lamb or sheep could frequently be killed for use by the owner and it would prove to be cheaper than buying meat. There would also be the satisfaction of knowing that the meat was fresh and wholesome.

Where improvement of the mechanical condition of the soil is the principal object sought, fresh manure is best adapted for this purpose to heavy soils and well rotted manure to light soils. Where prompt action of the fertilizing constituents is desired the best results will probably be obtained by applying fresh manure to the light soils, although excessive applications in this case should be avoided on account of the danger of "burning out" of the soil in dry seasons.

If the egg-producing hen is herself the result of careful selection, her duty must first of all be considered one of the potent factors in egg production. All the conclusions of the late experiments point to the fact that "there is more in the feed than the breed," so, after using the hereditary principle for all it will do, we must naturally employ every means of furnishing our egg machine with materials for making the eggs. Then we must remember that only in the highest state of health can she be expected to do her duty, and every inducement must be offered in the way of protection against disease.

A Story For St. Valentine's Day

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Among all the gay valentines in the window of the bookshop one stood out distinctly.

Jack Edmonds saw nothing save that golden satin heart, dainty with lace and ribbons and bearing a message for whoever might read:

Here's a message for you, heart of gold. I am waiting with a secret yet untold. Oh, heart of gold, accept this valentine. It bears the message—love, be mine.

"Heart of gold," murmured Jack grimly; "that's what I used to call little Rose before she grew independent and ran out into the world. I wonder if I will ever find my heart of gold?"

"Good morning, Mr. Edmonds," a gay, sweet voice broke in on his musings. "Are not the valentines perfectly dear?"

"Very pretty indeed," laughed Jack, shaking hands with Margaret Mordaunt. "It would be hard to make a choice."

Margaret made some laughing rejoinder and they chatted a few moments, the girl all a-sparkle with a most betraying lovelight in her eyes.

More than once his eyes wandered to the golden heart in the middle of the window, and she, guessing that perhaps he desired to enter the shop and purchase it for her, bade him a laughing farewell while he handed her into the waiting motorcar.

"I hope you have not forgotten the St. Valentine's ball," she cried eagerly as the machine rolled away.

He smiled and nodded and replaced his hat and returned to the window. A few moments later when he left the shop the golden heart was gone from the window.

She had surprised a strangely tender look on his face that morning as she came upon him at the bookshop, and, fool that she was, she told herself fiercely, she had believed that he was thinking of her!

And that telltale wrapper that had come around the golden heart!

Margaret went into her room and, unlocking a drawer of her desk, took out the paper.

"For Miss Rose Blakely, 107 Galbraith Terrace, City, Please Forward."

Galbraith terrace was Rose Blakely's old address, and the missive had been forwarded from one place to another until it had reached the Mordaunt home, where Rose, now in reduced circumstances, was living.

"But she cannot want it as I do!" cried Margaret passionately, as she tossed the telltale paper in the fire and watched it turn to black ashes.

"Why, out of all the men in the world, should he be the only one I care for—and why should he be indifferent to me?"

Thus poor Margaret Mordaunt voiced the wall of unhappy women since the world began. For a long time she sat there gazing into the fire's heart, thinking of many things. At last her maid came to dress her for the ball.

Margaret listlessly gave herself into Pauline's skillful hands, and presently, when she emerged dressed as the Queen of Hearts, no one would have suspected that her own heart was sore and aching.

As she tied the little black mask over her eyes she said to Celeste:

"Perhaps Miss Blakely would like some assistance, Celeste."

"I have asked her, Miss Margaret, but she sent word that if you would excuse her she would not come down. She has a bad headache."

"I am sorry," said Margaret, but she could not help the relief in her heart.

She stopped at Rose's door and urged her to come down later, but the girl looked so pale and unhappy that Margaret closed the door gently and came away.

Three hours later the rooms were aglitter with lights and gay with the varicolored costumes of the dancers. Mrs. Mordaunt, stately and handsome as Queen Elizabeth, was unmasked. Once she beckoned the queen of hearts to her side.

"Margaret," she said, "Miss Blakely is feeling better, and she is upstairs in the little brown study. I have urged her to come down later, and she has half promised. She will wear a little red domino. Don't forget."

"No, mother, dear," said Margaret, with unaccustomed gentleness.

"Who is the tall man garbed as the melancholy Dane? The one you have danced with so often?" smiled Mrs. Mordaunt.

"Oh, Hamlet!" laughed Margaret. "I suspect it's Mr. Edmonds. It's so puzzling, and such fun!" She danced away, and Mrs. Mordaunt smiled because Margaret was so beautiful and slight because she knew the girl was unhappy, which is a way that mothers have.

"Oh, prince," said Margaret suddenly. "I would have you do me a favor. Hamlet bowed gracefully. "As your majesty pleases."

"Please go upstairs," ordered Margaret with trembling haste, "to the cozy room we call the 'brown study.' It is at the head of the stairs. There you will find a very beautiful rose. If you can gain possession of it you may bring it down here and wear it. I wish you success."

For an instant Jack Edmonds surveyed the girl through the narrow eye holes of his mask. He recognized Margaret Mordaunt, as many of her guests had done, but he wondered at her gay mood with him.

Again he bowed and made his way toward the door, many a charming eye following the progress of his tall, graceful form. It was not often that Jack Edmonds ventured into society. He was a busy man, and the urgency of affairs called him away from home very often. But in the last few months he had become well acquainted with the Mordaunts, and now he felt quite at home in the hospitable mansion.

He paused at the door of the brown study. "I wonder if I shall find the rose," he smiled as he turned the knob.

The rose was there, but it was not the hothouse flower he had expected to find.

It was Rose Blakely, his rose. Rose of the golden heart.

She glanced up as he entered and a startled look came into her eyes. She was in the act of fastening a crimson domino over her little black frock, and the entrance of the masked man had surprised her.

"I was sent here to find a rose," said Hamlet softly.

At the sound of his well remembered voice Rose Blakely trembled and hid her face in her hands.

"Margaret Mordaunt sent me here to find a rose," he went on, "and if I could win it I was to wear it against my heart. Rose, my girl of the golden heart, haven't I waited long enough for you?"

And then Rose came to him.

Later they went downstairs together, the demure little form in the crimson domino and the black garbed prince of Denmark. Their masks half concealed their happy faces.

Margaret Mordaunt saw them coming, and her lips whitened. One jeweled hand clutched her heart, against which lay the golden satin valentine which was all she had left of the day's joy, all that remained to her save the knowledge that she had been tempted and had resisted.

And, although Margaret Mordaunt did not know it then, at that moment when she met these two and smiled bravely upon them, at that moment her own heart became a golden one and the beauty of it lighted her whole life and that of the man who afterward won her love.

A PERILOUS CROSSING.

They Got Safely Over and Then Came a Curious Climax.

Mrs. Exe stood on a crowded corner when the traffic was at its height, staring at the thick, tangled come and go of motorcars and drays and cabs, and not daring to venture in among the dangers of that moving mass.

"May I cross the street with you, madam?"

She turned and saw an elderly stranger with lifted hat and gallant smile.

"Oh, thank you!" said Mrs. Exe. And the stranger grasped her arm with a firm grip, and together they plunged boldly into the wild crush of vehicles.

In and out, right and left, up and down, they zigzagged, at imminent peril of life and limb. Pedestrians on the sidewalk stopped and looked at them. Drivers and chauffeurs shouted and swore at them. It was plain to all that they were in unusual danger.

The escort of Mrs. Exe, still wearing his gallant smile, still grasping her arm firmly, seemed to make no effort to avoid the oncoming vehicles. He darted erratically and yet calmly this way and that.

At last by a miracle the other side was reached. Mrs. Exe then jerked her arm away from her escort's grasp, and, with a look of scorn, she said:

"It's no thanks to you that we were not both killed. Why, the way you positively courted danger one would think you were blind!"

"Madam, I am blind," he replied. "That's why I asked if I could cross with you."—New York Tribune.

TALE OF A LOST MINE.

It Is Somewhat Cloudy as to Its Source and Its Veracity.

This touching tale, for the veracity of which we do not vouch, comes from a source that we do not know, says the Engineering and Mining Journal:

"About 1600 a Spaniard in Peru named Jose Salcedo fell in love with an Indian girl. He proceeded to do a thing almost unheard of in those times—he married her. Out of gratitude her mother revealed to him a vein of silver of unexampled richness. He worked it and drew from it considerable wealth too much for his happiness, for his opulence excited the cupidity of the viceroys. Comte Lemos, who had him charged with high treason, the penalty of which was death and the confiscation of all worldly goods.

"It was in vain that Salcedo demanded permission to appeal to Madrid and offered to pay two ingots of silver daily during the fifteen months that must elapse before a reply was returned. The count refused and hanged him in 1609. But the butcher got small good out of it. The Indians, intent on avenging their friend, destroyed the works of the mine, filled it with water and concealed the entrance so cleverly that it could never be discovered. Neither promises nor threats could extract their secret, which remains so to this very day."

This story is more romantic than those of the Gun-sight, Pegleg and several other "lost mines" of the American desert.

Getting Even With the Parson.

Parson Wheeler was invited out one afternoon for a motorcar ride with one of his friends. The minister, who enjoyed all outdoor sports, was very enthusiastic over motoring, so he was allowed to drive the car. While speeding along he was stopped by a constable and ordered to the station house.

"Well," said the captain, after listening to their story, "you say you were going at only fifteen miles an hour, but the constable declares you were traveling at forty. Now, I don't like to doubt the word of either of you. Can you think why he insists you were traveling at that rate of speed? Is there any grudge he owes you?"

"No," said the clergyman thoughtfully. "No, I can't think of anything—unless it is that I married him four years ago."—Lippincott's.

Alternatives.

A stalwart young German applied for a position on a farm. As he walked into the barn he addressed the farmer. "Hey, mister, will you job me?"

"Will I what?"

"Will you job me? Make me work yet."

"Oh, I see; you want a job," said the farmer. "Well, how much do you want a month?"

"I tell you—if you eat me on der farm I come for five dollars, but for twenty-five dollars I eat myself at Schmidt's."—National Food Magazine.

The Same Medicine.

"Doctor, do you remember three years ago that you predicted positively that I would be a dead man in six weeks?"

"Why, yes, I—"

"Well, I've got a friend in the next room who is despondent about himself. Just tell him there is no hope for him, will you?"

This is a great and glorious nation and its people enjoy blessing and comforts far in excess of those of any other people on earth. We are now about to celebrate the birth of him who made all these things possible. Let us all do honor to the Immortal Washington.

Weymouth's "Blue Book" for the year 1913, printed at this office, and the mammoth warrant for the Town Meeting of 1914 are now in the hands of the people. These documents are of more importance to the people of Weymouth than the "Blue Book" of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or Congressional reports from Washington, and should be read carefully by every citizen of the town before town meeting. The reader will find in them a review of the past and an insight into the future. The direct town matters are of importance, and also are the several legislative acts which call for approval or rejection. All of these add to expenditures and additional tax rate, and the voter should carefully consider whether the benefits to be derived are worthy of the expense to be incurred.

Press Criticism of the "Pinafore Kiddies." "Pinafore" Score Success. Gilbert & Sullivan's Comic Opera Success "Pinafore" has been produced a thousand and one times by all kinds and conditions of operatic companies and by amateurs galore, but it is doubtful if a more pleasing rendition of it has ever been presented than that offered in "tabloid" form by the clever Pinafore Kiddies at the Lyric theatre, Monday matinee and night. The "Kid" soloists do not outstrip the great comic opera stars who have in years gone by, sung the tuneful score of this popular opera; neither does the comedians out-Hopner the great Dewolf, but this aggregation of twenty-five clever youngsters certainly do crowd an hour and a half with tuneful amusement and their work bespeaks much of the patience and ability of Mr. Charles Rex, under whose personal supervision the "tabloid" form was produced.

Want of space prohibits the writing of all the nice compliments which the individual "Kiddies" are entitled to, although special mention must be made of the cleverness of the little Misses Rice, Perrett and Smith and diminutive Messrs. Nelson, Tobin and Lambert.

Master Nelson announced that on Thursday afternoon, after the performance, an informal reception will be held on the stage.—The Mobile Register.

There is nothing that improves the looks so much and helps to make wooden things exposed to the weather last longer than paint. Every wooden thing on the farm, from barn to hog-houses and poultry coops, should be painted and kept in good paint. All the wooden parts of tools implements and machinery should be treated with the brush to make them last longer. It is impossible to keep implements sheltered all the time, but if the wooden parts are preserved with good paint, leaving them out in the weather will have little effect on them.

Learn the use of the arsenate of lead for all insect pests. Get expert with it.

Forcing laying hens with stimulants of any kind, except those nature supplies in good food, is a dangerous and costly process in the long run.

When you buy dairy cows you do not want beef animals, for they are inclined to lay on flesh instead of giving value received for their feed and care in the bucket.

The first milk of the cow is of a peculiar character—called colostrum—acting as a purgative, and this puts the bowels of the young calf in perfect working condition.

Our leading dairymen have silos and feed ensilage nights and mornings and a feeding of hay at noon. They are not feeding very much grain at present prices. The best wheat feeds, gluten and cottonseed meal, are the principal grains.

The condensation of moisture, the drying out of lumber in the poultry house and the moisture exhaled by the fowls will all be conducive to dampness. The best way to keep a poultry house dry is to have all the windows and doors open on clear, sunlight days. The front of the poultry house should be open to allow the sunlight and air in.

A cow that has a good dairy form has a lean appearance over every part of the body which indicates a nervous temperament and that she utilizes a large proportion of the feed consumed for the making of milk. She has a wedge shaped appearance, viewed from above, in front and from the side.

If only the hired man is handy with tools he can be kept very busy in winter at work under cover which will help save and make many a dollar during the first rush of the busy season. Whenever the ground thaws for a few days will be a good time to set posts and gates, dig pits for hot-bed sashes, transplant large trees and drag rocks from the surface of the fields.

In selecting dairy cattle the real test must be the scales and the Babcock tester. The cow is a machine to convert food into milk; thus she must have a large middle and a strong constitution to insure the best results. She must also have a large udder, large milk wells, large crooked milk veins and good-sized teats.

During the first years that the young fruit trees are making their growth in the orchard they must be pruned to proper shapes. Some kinds must be pruned more than others. Apple trees need most careful attention in pruning while cherry trees need least of any. In pruning a fruit tree, aim always to cut out diseased and mangled branches, if there any. Have a definite head of the mature tree in the mind, and remove branches to that end.

The man that keeps his share of dairy cows and manages them in the right manner will never find his land losing its fertility. As a means of keeping up the fertility of the soil, the dairy business can't be beaten. Only a small amount of the elements are taken away from the soil without being returned, and that small amount is very profitable.

Nothing pays better than to keep the orchard clean and free from troublesome fruit insects and diseases. Keeping the fences and grounds clean will aid. When insects and diseases appear, they must be met and destroyed before they have gained a foothold in the orchard. If the

We propose to talk to the people of Weymouth for some time about LIGHTING SERVICE.

Not just about Light, but about LIGHTING SERVICE.

It is possible that the thought of LIGHTING SERVICE may be a new one to many of our consumers or to some who are not yet our consumers—which is our reason for talking about it.

As everybody knows, a large part of our business is to sell light, but a fact that is NOT generally known is that a more important part of our business is to render perfect LIGHTING SERVICE.

Our first step toward rendering perfect LIGHTING SERVICE is to call attention to the Farmers' Week to be the Best Ever Held.

Plans for the biggest gathering of farmers ever gotten together in Massachusetts are rapidly nearing completion at the Agricultural college at Amherst. The sixth annual farmers' week is scheduled for March 16th to 20th inclusive. The college during that time is thrown open to the people of the state, no fees of any kind are charged, and the very best kind of a program of practical talks and demonstrations for the general farmer, the dairyman, fruit grower, poultryman, market gardener, florist, and in fact for anyone and everyone who is engaged in, or is interested in, any phase of agriculture, is offered. And not only this, but a solid three day's program of talks and demonstrations for farmers' wives and other women has been arranged. A section which will devote its allotted time to problems of general community progress has also been included. The program begins on Monday afternoon and continues until Friday noon and one may have his choice of subjects at all times. Room and board are available at very moderate cost, both in Amherst and in the neighboring city of Northampton. The evening will be devoted to demonstrations of progressive methods of agriculture and farm management as shown by moving pictures, addresses by prominent men from different parts of the country, as well as a large number of the regular College and Extension Service faculty are included in the program of the week. Farmers' week is an effort to give to those who can only come to the college for a few days' time, the very best opportunity to benefit from their visit. A cordial invitation is extended through this paper, by Prof. W. D. Hurd, Director of the Extension Service, to every person who is either directly or indirectly interested in agriculture and country life. A complete program will gladly be sent upon request.

REPUBLICAN NOMINEES

The Republicans of Weymouth present to the Voters the following Candidates for office to be voted for MONDAY, MARCH 2.

Polls open at 5.45 A. M. Vote early.

CLERK
John A. Raymond.

TREASURER
John H. Stetson.

SELECTMEN AND OVERSEERS OF POOR
A. Francis Barnes, William P. Denbroeder, Bradford Hawes, Edwin W. Hunt, George L. Newton.

COLLECTOR OF TAXES
Winslow M. Tirrell.

ASSESSORS for three years
George A. Benson, Lewis W. Callahan.

COMMISSIONER for three years
Louis A. Cook.

WATER COMMISSIONER for three years
George E. Bicknell.

SCHOOL COMMITTEE for three years
Arthur H. Alden, Sarah S. Howe.

AUDITORS
Frank N. Blanchard, John P. Hunt, William H. Pratt.

TRUSTEES OF TUFTS LIBRARY for three years

Town Business.

The selectmen have received notice from the Public Service Commission that all the conditions for a trolley freight traffic had been complied with and the Bay State Street Railway may now proceed with the business.

The selectmen at its Tuesday meeting granted a permit to the Women's Relief Corps to serve dinners at the Town hall on March meeting day and at a meeting of the Corps last night plans were discussed for that day.

Up to date the registrars have had an unusually quiet time, there seems to be but few people not already enrolled who are hurrying up much to qualify themselves for next Monday's election.

The Appropriation committee are giving a hearing on the several articles in the warrant and gathering material for an executive session which will take their course.

School Committee.

Town officers should be selected not only because they are available but in addition because they are familiar with the work to which they will be called and that applies to Mrs. Sarah S. Howe, a candidate for school committee.

Mrs. Howe is not only a graduate of Weymouth schools but has a record of several years of success as a teacher in our public schools which has been followed by constant visitation and a great factor in introducing industrial work in the schools to which the Old Colony club, of which Mrs. Howe is ex-president and the Monday club have been large financial contributors.

Mrs. Howe's name came before the Republican caucus on recommendation of the Old Colony and Monday clubs and was unanimously approved and accepted.

Owen S. Chandler, Dead.
Owen S. Chandler, aged 42, died at his home on Hillside avenue, East Weymouth on Wednesday morning, from the effects of heart trouble.

He was born in New Hampshire and came to this town to reside when a young man. For many years he has held a responsible position with the Edwin Clapp Shoe Co. and represented that firm on the Boston Chamber of Commerce trip to South America last summer. He was a member of Orphans Hope Lodge A. F. and A. M.; Pentalfa Chapter R. A. M. and South Shore Commandery Knight Templars. Besides his wife, he leaves three children. Funeral services will be held tomorrow (Saturday) afternoon at 2 o'clock.

TUFTS LIBRARY.

Art Exhibition.
"The Mining of Coal and Manufacture of Coke" is the subject of the photographs now in the Reading room.

"Most of these pictures represent anthracite coal mining at Scranton." The exhibit will remain until March 25.

Townsend—Litchfield.

Howard W. Townsend, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Townsend of Hingham and Abbie L. Litchfield, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin T. Litchfield of Weymouth, were married Wednesday, Feb. 18th at four o'clock, at the residence of the Universalist minister, Rev. Merrill C. Ward, Jamaica Plain.

The bride was attended by Miss Ella Townsend, sister of the groom, as maid of honor and the best man was Leslie C. Townsend, brother of the groom.

Mr. and Mrs. Townsend will be at home after April 1st at 137 South st., Hingham.

Joseph D. Sargent at Rest.

Joseph D. Sargent, a prominent citizen of South Weymouth, passed away at his home on Hollis street last week Wednesday, at the age of 56 years. He is survived by his wife, a son, Percy D. Sargent and one daughter, Mrs. E. B. Nash. He was a member of the Second Universalist church of South Weymouth and of Wilsey Lodge I. O. O. F.

Funeral services were held Sunday from his late home and were largely attended. Rev. L. W. Attwood and Rev. W. W. Rose conducted the services. Selections were sung by a male quartet. There were many beautiful floral offerings. Interment was in Mt. Hope cemetery.

Funeral of J. H. McDonough.

The funeral of Mr. J. Hooker McDonough, who died at his home on North street, North Weymouth on Monday, Feb. 23, was held on Wednesday afternoon at 1 o'clock, Rev. Charles Clark of the Pilgrim Congregational church, officiating. Interment was at the Cedar Grove cemetery, Milton. Mr. McDonough leaves a widow, a son and a daughter to mourn their loss.

ON THE FARM

Read this column and you can have it delivered at your house with something new every week for a full year by sending $2.00 to this office now.

Are the patches in the yard bare of grass? After the first thaw sprinkle some red grass seed on them and rake in when the ground gets dry enough. A little white clover, too.

As the weather is still cold, not more than eleven eggs should be given a hen. When a larger number is allowed, the eggs are not sufficiently covered, and those on the outer edges of the clutch are likely to become chilled.

In setting young asparagus in the spring it should always be done before the shoots start, because the first buds that start are always the strongest, and if these are broken in setting weaker buds have to do the work.

As cultivation is needed anyway, it is well to raise vegetables in the orchard, thus making the land pay a good acreage profit even if the fruit has a bad season. Weeds are to be kept out of an orchard as zealously as out of a garden.

Hard enough to sit for three weeks, without having to be gnawed all the time by insect pests. Look at your sitting hens once in a while and be sure they are free from enemies of this kind.

Lime itself is not a plant food, but it charges the elements in the soil so that they can be used by the plant. Acids kill the bacteria. Lime neutralizes the acids and so makes the right kind of home for these helpers. The addition of lime to a soil also makes it loose and allows a free circulation of air, which is another necessity for plant growth.

In many cases it will be found that the old trees have exhausted practically all the available nutritive material contained in the soil, and they need considerable nitrogen in order to produce new wood and to put new vigor into them, and therefore they will stand lots of stable manure. But if they were young, bearing trees in their prime they would need only a light dressing of manure.

With good seed, the soil well prepared and good tilth, and care taken to plant in good season, less seed will be needed than when less care is provided these essentials is taken. Different seeds require different conditions in order to germinate. Some will germinate at a much lower temperature than others, but with all kinds of seeds a certain degree of heat and moisture is required and the nearer these conditions are provided the better will be the germination.

We believe heartily in purchasing fowls and eggs for hatching for the improvement of farmers' flocks of poultry. Judicious mixture of breeds, on the trial of a breed in its purity, will accomplish much. But that, of course, is not all there is in breeding. In the same flock, out of the same litter of pure-bred fowls, will be some that have a greater capacity for egg production than others. Save the eggs from these for setting. Keep on in this selection for egg products.

The soil of newly cleared land is nearly always much warmer than the soil of fields that have been in cultivation for many years. Of course any soil must be dry to be warm, and if the new ground is not well drained it will not be warm. Spots on the farm where old feed lots have been and where straw stacks have rotted down are usually rich and warm for early crops. Old brushy fence rows that have been cleared and ploughed up are almost always warm and fertile.

Some years ago hogs were classified as to bacon hogs, lard hogs, and so on. But styles with butchers, packers and the public change in this matter. Any of the breeds will make good bacon, and any will make good lard. At some seasons there will be a market premium for light animals, while during the same year a premium will be paid for heavy hogs "hog fat." You will be just as certain to derive the most money from your stock if they are healthy and well grown whether you grow the strictly lard type or bacon type.

Hotbed sash are all of standard size, 3 feet wide by 6 feet long. If, for instance, you wish to make a hotbed this spring and have no sash on hand, go ahead with the excavation and frames now. If the

THE EVENT OF THE SEASON

Shouth Shore Commandery, No. 31 Knights Templars Ladies' Night.

The 22nd of February always means to South Shore Commandery Knights Templars, a celebration of Washington's birthday and a Ladies' Night and their celebration for the year 1914, which took place in the Masonic Temple, East Weymouth, last Monday evening, "until future ages" makes a better one, will have to stand as the best in the long series of winter events.

The committee directly in charge was Em. Sir Gardner R. P. Barker, commander; Em. Sir Eben H. Cain, Sir Edward Pratt and Sir Charles G. Jordan and each and all of the well arranged events was a success far beyond the expectations of the committee which arranged them.

The reception committee consisted of Em. Sirs Gardner R. P. Barker, William S. Wallace, George Cushing, T. John Evans, Francis A. Bicknell, David J. Pierce, Eben H. Cain, Arthur W. Burr and Frank W. Bates and it was early in evidence that they would receive a record breaking assembly, with all of the Weymouths, Hingham, Cohasset, Braintree, Quincy, Wollaston and other places well represented.

Following the reception came the banquet alone, which surpassed any of the events of the old Masonic building, which went up in flames and smoke about two years ago. The entire capacity of the hall was taken up at the first sitting, with a good overflow in waiting for room.

The tables and service were in the immediate charge of Sir Knight Charles T. Humphrey and while nearly 400 people were served no one found fault with the quality or quantity of the menu.

The evening's entertainment was by the Weber Concert Company: A. C. Prescott, first tenor; A. F. Cole, second tenor; G. H. Woods, baritone; W. E. Davison, bass; L. Littlefield, soprano; Edith MacGregor Woods, contralto; Grace Sanborn Cole, reader; Ernest Harrison, pianist.

The Weber Company is an all star company but any one who has been a night student of the blue arch above us has discovered that there are stars of different magnitude and this was also true of the entertaining company.

The several sextette and quartette selections of the company were of a high order, classic and received merited applause and called for encores but each of the following stars revolved in a sphere of their own.

As a reader Mrs. Grace Sanborn Cole has a personal with ease and grace which wins favor before her utterance begins, in diction she is clear and distinct, as a delineator of character she shows a clear insight into human nature and the characteristics of men, women and children.

The audience was not without musical critics, of which Weymouth has many competent ones, and the universal opinion expressed was that Lida Littlefield soprano, Edith MacGregor Woods, contralto and Arthur F. Cole, tenor soloist, had added materially to the evening's enjoyment.

The final event of the night took place in the drill hall of the Commandery and it was a dance under the direction of Em. Sir Eben H. Cain, Sirs Charles G. Jordan, Edwin R. Bond, Harry J. Beck and Henry P. Tilden.

Maxim's orchestra furnished the music and for two hours the floor was the scene of grace and beauty. Right here we had intended to say something of dresses but when we start to specify there will be no place to stop so we simply say that all of the colored fashion plates of Paris, New York and Boston were well represented as was also much home art which never found its way into a book.

The evening's entertainment was by the Weber Concert Company: A. C. Prescott, first tenor; A. F. Cole, second tenor; G. H. Woods, baritone; W. E. Davison, bass; L. Littlefield, soprano; Edith MacGregor Woods, contralto; Grace Sanborn Cole, reader; Ernest Harrison, pianist.

There is much in a name. A ship belonging to a man named Heaven was due to sail from Cardiff with a cargo of coals, when it was discovered that she had not received her full loading. The shipping agent started his clerk with the command—"Telegraph to Heaven for more coals!"

HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS IN CAST.

Odd Fellow's Hall East Weymouth Scene of Splendid Presentation of "The Egyptian Princess" Last Friday Night.

An extra large audience gathered in Odd Fellow's Opera house, East Weymouth, last Friday evening, to witness the presentation by high school scholars, of the romantic operetta in two acts, entitled "The Egyptian Princess," given under the direction of James W. Calderwood and Miss Inez E. Wheaton of East Weymouth.

The cast of characters comprised the following high school pupils: Queen of Egypt, Ruth Sargent; Princess Aida, Mary Cassese; Princess Tabun, Jeannette Shaw; Nyssa, Bertha Nash; Phila, Helen Hunt; Alva, Flora MacDonald; Queen Grania, Bertha Hanson; Herub, Addie Deane; Herald, Evelyn Ashton.

Priestesses, Dancing Slave, May Allen; Priscilla Alden, Bertha Johnson, Elsie Monroe, Edith Newman, Flora Blenis, Avis Lound, Helen Corbican, Carolyn Corbican.

Chorus, Eleanor Gould, Marie Davis, Dorothy Turpel, Hazel Drexelmer, Marjorie Rea, Isabelle Jones, Barbara Harris, Dorothy Halian, Marjorie Holbrook, Helen Cunliff, Lillian Smith, Edith Wilde, Dorothy McCarthy, Hazel Aylsworth, Nettie Maloney, Alice Toumy, Laura Sherman, Alice Killory, Lillie Guertin, Theresa Nolan, Margaret O'Connor, Edith Smith.

Slave Girls, Louise Melville, Catherine Lyons, Florence Pratt, Clara Brassill.

Mr. Calderwood and Miss Wheaton, particularly, worked extremely hard in the drilling of the cast, and both are to be congratulated on the huge success of the initial performance of "The Egyptian Princess."

Special costumes and scenery were used in the presentation. It was early in evidence that the management had gone deep in the study of the early history of Egypt, its people and their habits, as the several parts presented characters, costumes and manners which were decidedly realistic and would have a credit to professional players and singers, who had travelled in the land of the Pharaohs in the days when Egypt was the leading empire of the world.

Wrestling Bout a Draw.

Three hundred wrestling "fans" packed the Clapp Memorial gymnasium last Saturday night, to witness the professional wrestling bout between Archie Jeannette of East Weymouth and Edward Anderson of the Marblehead Y. M. C. A.

After two hours of hard wrestling neither had obtained a fall, so Jeannette and Anderson agreed to call the bout a draw and will meet again in the near future. The bout was as good as has been seen in this section for some time, Jeannette being the aggressor from the start. Dr. W. F. Provan refereed the big bout.

After the wrestling four boxing bouts between members of the Lynn Y. M. C. A. and the Clapp Memorial were held resulting as follows:
Harold Cross, C. M. A., won the decision over C. Chisholm, Lynn Y. M. C. A.; Martin Zeoli of C. M. A. won from John Boston; William Quinn, Lynn Y. M. C. A. defeated Frank Zeoli C. M. A.; Harry Cannon C. M. A. defeated O. Herbert Lynn Y. M. C. A.; Ed. Walsh of Cambridge refereed the bouts and J. E. Fabyan and Dr. W. F. Provan were judges.

Daily Thought.
No man is born into the world whose work is not born with him.—Lowell.

Character Told by the Hair.
Men with fine dark brown hair make the best husbands. They are alert, thoughtful and unselfish. The man whose hair turns gray early in life is almost invariably a good fellow. He is likely to be nervous but intelligent and very honorable.

She Was Too Careless.
According to a Kansas paper a man in that state bought his wife a revolver with which to defend herself, but after a bullet had been dug out of his leg and the cow had been buried he decided she had better do her defending with an ax.—Kansas City (Mo.) Journal.

Curing a Cold.
A doctor's prescription for a cold is to first take a quick acting laxative, then a mustard foot bath, which will relieve most of the cold in the head. If preferred take a general hot bath, remaining in the water twenty minutes with a cold wet cloth tied on the head. But when this whole bath is taken a blanket must be wrapped round the body or, better yet, a soft bath robe slipped on. Take hot lemonade or flaxseed tea.

Vital Statistics.

We give below some vital statistics of the town of Weymouth for the year 1913 with comparative figures of 1912:

	1912	1913
Marriages	150	147
Births
Male	124	146
Female	133	109
	257	255
Deaths
Male	98	114
Female	97	97
	195	208
Excess of births over deaths	62	47

As in past years the figures show Weymouth as ranking among the most healthy towns in the State or Nation; the average age of those who passed out being 51 years and two months; among them was one who passed the century mark, 3 between 90 and 100; 21 between 80 and 90; 42 between 70 and 80; 35 between 60 and 70.

Norfolk Bar Associates.

At the annual meeting of the Bar Association of Norfolk County, held Feb. 14, the following list of officers were elected for the ensuing year: president, Asa P. French; vice-president, Albert E. Avery; treasurer, Edwin C. Jenney; secretary, Robert W. Carpenter; council, Frederick D. Ely, Emory Grover, James E. Carter, Albert P. Worthen, James H. Flint, Oscar A. Marden, Patrick O'Loughlin, Paul R. Blackmur and Henry T. Richardson.

D. A. R.

The Susannah Tufts Chapter, D. A. R. met with Mrs. W. B. Clapp at her home on Front street, Weymouth, Monday afternoon, Feb. 23, at 2.30 o'clock. Miss Willard, ex-Regent of the Hingham chapter read an interesting paper on Germany and it was enjoyed by a large number of members and guests.

The rooms were decorated with flags and favors in honor of Washington's birthday and a miniature cherry tree in center of the table made a very attractive setting for the delicious lunch. Mrs. Harriet Bachelder poured and Miss Harriet B. Nash assisted Mrs. Clapp in serving.

The sun room opening out of the dining-room was a real spring garden with its daffodils, hyacinths and crocuses in full bloom. Many rare plants were also in blossom. The meeting was a large one and every one thoroughly enjoyed the afternoon.

GLEANINGS ON BEACON HILL

Legislators May Hear Foss Talk on Taxation

NEW "BLUE SKY" PROPOSITION

Features Which Caused Defeat of Previous Measure Are Eliminated—Many Foolish Bills Make Appearance—Walker a Progressive Leader but Not Candidate For Governor

Former Governor Foss is being urged to make one trip to the state house this year on a matter of legislation. This is upon the question of the classification tax, which is shortly to be heard.

During the first year of his administration the governor declared that getting the word "proportional" out of the constitution was one of the biggest things that Massachusetts could do.

Thereafter he sent many messages to the legislature, asking that the constitutional amendment be passed giving the legislature the right to tax personal property at a rate different from real estate.

Mr. Foss is said to be very much interested in the matter today and that is why the friends of the amendment want him to make at least one speech before the legislature upon it.

Governor Foss' suggestion was that the income of intangibles should be taxed at the rate of 5 percent. The income of taxable intangibles would now be 25 percent, if they were discovered by the tax collector.

Blue Sky Law
Another "blue sky" law is being framed by Tax Commissioner Trefry, who is also commissioner of corporations, and in a short time it is due to make its appearance.

The "blue sky" law is intended to give the state banking officials control of the promotion of securities. The banking interests do not oppose the law; in fact some of them are very much in favor of it.

But last year there were a lot of inartistic features in the bill and they really caused its defeat. For instance, every bit of advertising was supposed to be passed upon by the tax commissioner, which would have been a complete impossibility. In addition there were drastic provisions about the examination of books and examinations and accounts at such intervals as to make it hard work for any concern, reputable or otherwise, who was in the business of selling securities.

Fool-Bill Killer Wanted
Some local politician defeated in his own town or city on some trivial matter, such as, for instance, as whether paris green should be put on the potato vines with a sprinkler or by hand, rushes to the legislature with a bill to regulate the use of poison and the manner of its application.

He's a good fellow, they say, and the passage of the bill will help him come back the following year. He gets a favorable report from the committee. Every Tom, Dick and Harry insists on talking when the bill is up in the senate or house, and days are wasted on just such measures.

What the state needs is a fool-bill killer. That other states see us better than we see ourselves is shown by an editorial which recently appeared in the Portland Press stating that the real trouble in Massachusetts is too much conversation about the legislature.

Mr. Walker Walking
As Joseph Walker walks from committee to committee about the state house it is to be noted that a certain drift of opinion rolls up behind. It is to the effect that Walker is taking the place of Charles S. Bird as the real leader of the Progressive party and that he may be regarded as the prospective Progressive candidate for governor next fall.

It is a long look ahead, but the friends of Walker who stuck to him as long as he remained in the Republican party venture the thought that he has not the slightest intention of running for governor. Walker has been told that so long as he stays in the ranks of private citizenship he will be regarded as very sincere in his Progressive views. But the moment that he appears as a candidate he will be hailed as an opportunist.

He has twice been candidate for governor of Massachusetts and gained a whole lot of valuable experience each time. There probably isn't the slightest chance in the world of Walker taking the Progressive nomination for governor next fall.

Boards Fight
Governor Walsh is very anxious to have the unpaid boards and the commission on economy and efficiency get together upon the scheme of a centralization of state control of all institutions.

When there were frequent pleasant conferences between Chairman Cole of the commission and various chairmen of the unpaid boards it almost seemed as if this might be done. But as the discussion waxed warm it seems now as if the change suggested by both the governor and the commission will not take place without big fighting if it can take place at all.

While the unpaid boards have not been in all cases models of efficiency, they contain the names of many staid old business people of the state who deeply resent the criticism that they have been careless in expending the money of the state. And there are signs throughout the legislature that everything is not going to be all one way about the matter.

Cole Is Energetic
Chairman Cole, however, is quite tireless. He is showing the same energy that he showed while speaker of the house. He keeps the experts of his board out on the job all the time and promises a series of important reports throughout the spring. He believes that when Governor Foss named him as chairman of the board he was given a mission for which he is especially well fitted.

Cole as chairman of the commission has power to send for persons and papers and get information. His is a real state finance commission, except that it has not played the big political part that the finance commission of Boston has played. But let nobody mistake that fact that Cole is a politician of consummate power and will make his influence felt upon the legislature before the close of the session.

No Break Yet
The men who have been looking for a bad break between Mayor Curley and the Republican leaders of the legislature are looking in vain. As yet the mayor has not availed himself of the offer of Representative Cox to send his measures to the legislature. Instead he says he has no measure of especial importance. But he is anxious to have no measure pass which shall cost Boston a whole lot of money.

Consequently John A. Sullivan, the new corporation counsel, is doing most of his legislative work, studying the measures and talking with the committee chairmen about them.

Already many of the petitions submitted by Mayor Fitzgerald have been quietly rejected, and the present mayor, when asked about things, merely says that in case of doubt kill it.

The committee on metropolitan affairs, however, is holding a measure to dredge the Mystic river so as to accommodate a company which says it wants to send a fleet of boats from Boston through the Panama canal.

The mayor does not favor the measure, because if he did he would have to take a position in a specific case, contrary to the general position which he has taken. Instead he is using this measure as a reason for starting his big "boost Boston" fund, which is now nearing the $100,000 mark. But no part of this money will be spent on the Mystic until the port directors put their O. K. upon the steamship project.

National Prohibition
One of the little big matters that may be expected before the end of the session is a resolve favoring national prohibition. It is a little matter because the passage of a memorial of this character to congress can have no binding effect. But it is a big matter as a part of the fight which the anti-saloon league is making in Massachusetts in behalf of national prohibition.

This fight now going on is one reason why so little attention is being paid to liquor legislation directly. And for the first time there is no concealment upon either side of the question as to the real nature of the fight.

Industrial Disputes
A big crowd of students of labor disputes is now filling the state house corridors over the measure to put the pressure of a law upon those who are principals in strikes or lockouts.

The date of the hearing was Feb. 25, but before that time there had been much discussion on the subject by the Boston chamber of commerce.

The bill as presented to the committee is said to be in much more perfect form than was the bill of last year, although it is intended to go farther, even to the extent of stopping disputes in private business.

The Canadian law upon which it is framed applies mainly to public enterprises, traction companies and coal mines. It resulted from a big coal strike years ago. The principle involved is in having compulsory arbitration before the strike or lockout begins. The penalty is fixed upon those who are responsible for the strike or lockout before a report has been made by a public authority upon the situation.

The difference between the bill of last year and the bill of this year is that the former bill provided for hearings by the board of arbitration and conciliation, while the present bill provides a different board for every dispute.

The reason for this change is that if one tribunal sits upon all disputes it will become so unpopular that it cannot exist, while an indefinite number of boards will not run into that difficulty.

Washburn Waiting
Somebody remarked the other day that Robert Washburn was not in his old-time form. There may be some truth in it, although Washburn has been fairly active all the time in debate. He has recently taken the fancy of attacking Martin Lomasney with some bitterness, and this has caused surprise, as the two men were formerly the best of friends, and Washburn was never a strong Cushing supporter.

But on railroad matters, where Washburn shines, he has unquestionably been more quiet since the rejection of his resolutions asking the federal government to keep its hands off. Washburn in his corridor talk says he is going to give the government a chance to try now.

NOTHING LIKE CHEEK

By EVERETT P. CLARKE

When I began business at eighteen years of age I entered the counting room of Stoughton Bros. on a salary of $4 a week. I had assurance enough for ten men of my age, and it is assurance that tells. I have often wondered why this is so largely the case and have come to the conclusion that it is based on the principle of mechanics that a body started through space in which there is no resisting medium will go on at the same rate forever. A body that is not started will not move, and when struck will be knocked into "pi."

I had no reverence for my superiors, but treated them with eminent respect except when they undertook to brow beat me, when I jumped on them with both feet. This I kept up as long as I was paid little or nothing for my services; when I felt it essential to retain my position I didn't take so many chances.

There was a banker in the street by the name of Ogden. He did an enormous business and was very rich. To us clerks he was like the mogul of Tartary to a washie-washie Chinaman. Not that he put on any airs, but because his position was so lofty. I used to hear stories about how he got his start and learned that he went into the cotton market one day $50,000 in debt and in a few months was $300,000 to the good. At the time I entered business he was worth millions.

Belonging to an excellent family and not being troubled with backwardness, I was a butterfly of fashion. My capital was one dress suit, which, notwithstanding my youth, was too small for me, but for 50 cents I got a tailor to enlarge it. At functions I used to meet men who were the heads of large business concerns, as well as of families. Some of them I occasionally went to during business hours on business, with my hat in my hand. But, meeting them socially, I considered that while we were on a different basis it behooved me to keep up an outward show of deference.

Time passed, and my salary, though slightly enlarged, was far too small for my requirements. The elbows of my dress coat were getting ragged, and it was impossible for any tailor to hide their nakedness. I did fairly good work myself in that respect with ink. Some of my fellow clerks got small raises by being obsequious to those above them, but I kept on in the even tenor of my way—that is, being ordinarily respectful and standing up for my rights. It didn't occur to me that it would pay me to toady to a man for the purpose of getting an additional two or three dollars a week.

One spring we had a heavy snow-storm, followed by a freeze and then a deluge of rain. There's no worse meteorological combination for transportation than this, and the city was well high impassable. There were large pools of water everywhere, and the devices for getting over them were not the work of educated engineers. There was nearly a block near the house where I was employed that was so flooded that the whole distance was only passable by means of a string of boards. Just before bank closing I was directed to make a deposit and started on this narrow plank walk. I had just entered upon a lagoon of considerable length when I saw the sovereign of the street, Mr. Ogden, about as far advanced on the other side of it. It was my part as an understrapper to make way for the great man.

But my dislike for making way for those above me deterred me. I would have been willing to do so for an equal and would have been pleased to do so for an inferior, but to get out of a wealthy man's path by going back or stepping into two feet of water did not please me. Mr. Ogden was thinking of some great business problem. I suppose, for he didn't look up till we met very near the middle of the street. On seeing me he stopped. One of us must give way. Which should it be?

General Grant said that when he was marching to meet his first enemy during the civil war he felt the responsibility until he remembered that quite likely the other general felt as uncomfortable as he. That decided him, and he pushed on. It occurred to me that Mr. Ogden was as much loath to have me give way to him as I was to do so. Moreover, I knew that he was a natural gambler. Taking a quarter from my pocket, I said:

"Heads or tails for the right of way?"

"Heads," he replied, with a twinkle in his eye.

I knew how to flip a coin and have it come down as I wanted it, so I threw the quarter with my thumb and called, "Heads!" and stepped off into the water. I had saved my face—that is, I had given way, but had not surrendered my rights.

That action made me a millionaire. I met Mr. Ogden some time after that at a social function, and he asked me where I was employed. I told him, and he told me if I should leave my position to let him know. A few weeks later I left Stoughton Bros. voluntarily and called on Mr. Ogden. He took me into his service and promoted me so fast that I grew dizzy. He is now retired, and I am the manager of his business. I believe that Mr. Ogden when I flipped for the right of way saw in the act indication of a quality he wanted in his business.

Sir Galahad's Reward

Sacrifice of Kirk Stanley Brought Its Recoemose

By JAMES B. ALLEN

Little Mrs. Webb clasped her hands convulsively and watched Kirk Stanley's face. Her breath came in gasps, and the lace frill on her breast rose and fell tumultuously. "Can't you make it all right for Wilbur?" she whispered from his hard set lips made no utterance in response to her frenzied plea for her husband's immunity from punishment.

"How can I make it all right for him?" asked Kirk at last. Emma Webb moved her fair head impatiently. "There must be some way." "There is only one way," he said slowly, with his dark eyes fixed on her pleading blue ones, "only one way to save Wilbur Webb from the punishment he deserves for using $5,000 of the company's funds."

"And that way is?" she asked breathlessly. "To assume the blame myself," he said in an even tone, his eyes burning into hers. "As Wilbur's coworker in the cashier's office I was equally tempted by the careless methods of the company. Wilbur succumbed to temptation—his craze for cards was his undoing. Undoubtedly his intentions were good. He meant to replace the money, but he lost instead of winning; they usually do lose! The examiner came, found the evidence against Wilbur and put it up to him. Your husband denied it, but that very night he tried the cards again and won—think of it, Emma—he won $5,000 and replaced the money!"

"The guilt was still there, and the company discharged Wilbur. Now you ask me to save him from the disgrace that must inevitably follow when some one's tongue is loosened. Some one will talk, and the secret will come out. Wilbur's standing in the town will be ruined, and he must go to a new place and begin all over again. Why not let him go? If you stand shoulder to shoulder with him, Emma Webb, he will rise again, and his love for you will hold him straight in the future. He will be a better man for the experience."

Mrs. Webb shivered. "I could never go to a strange city, Mr. Stanley. All my family, all my friends are here. I have spent my life in Linwood; I would not be happy elsewhere." She hid her face in her hands, for she knew that three years ago she had played false to Kirk Stanley and thrown him over to marry the more showy Wilbur Webb, just home from college and a tour of the world. She had married reckless young Webb, and now he had brought disgrace upon her. She was pleading with her old lover to save her husband from the result of his folly.

"Mr. Hardwick says that there is only one way that Wilbur can prove grace their position in the community would be unassailable, and life would go on in the same pleasant, easy manner it had before, only Wilbur would be more careful in the future. He had promised to leave cards alone, and—"

Kirk Stanley had met him when he first came to the lumber camp and had been grateful when Locksley invited him to share his comfortable little four roomed cabin. Six months afterward Locksley's daughter, Nellie, came from the states to keep house for her father, and as the girl had made no objection to doing for the quiet young boarder, the three had spent six idyllic months amid the Canadian snows.

On this particular evening Kirk was gazing homeward, his eyes eager for the first glimpse of Nellie Locksley. He hoped she would be standing in the cabin porch watching for his return. He loved to watch her unseen and revel in the sweetness of his love for her and the budding hope that it was returned.

But mingled with the sweetness was the bitterness of recollection. What could he offer her but a tarnished name? Before he could ask her hand in marriage he must tell her father about his life in Linwood and he must reveal the past to Nellie. Whether he regretted his part in sacrificing himself for Wilbur Webb I do not know, but it is certain that he was very grave in those latter days of his wooing, and he did not whistle joyously as he had been wont to do in his first acquaintance with Locksley's lovely daughter.

The sternness of his face relaxed as he glimpsed the girl in the shadow of the porch, and a tender smile curved his lips as she vanished at the first sight of him. When he entered the cabin Nellie was reading a week old newspaper that had arrived with the mail that day, and her father was enjoying the dry paragraphs of some scientific journal.

"Mail day?" asked Kirk, with the careless indifference of one who never receives any letters. John Locksley laid down his paper and looked over his spectacles at the younger man. "Yes, Kirk; you will be surprised to hear that my physician says I may come home and try it for a year. We want to be off by the end of next week. How would you like to keep the cabin for your headquarters?" Kirk paled under his tan, and there was an uncomfortable tugging at his heart. So he was to lose Nellie as well as honor and everything else! "Thank you, sir, I shall be glad to," he said grimly. "It will seem the more like home to me because you and Miss Nellie have made it so pleasant for me, but I shall be mighty lonesome."

"Come back into the world, Kirk," cried Locksley impulsively. "You are cut out for better things, and I can give you a chance. I'm not the beggar I appear to be in this mountain cabin. I have money and influence. I can push you along to the front. Why should you bury yourself in a lumber camp?" Kirk looked from father to daughter. Nellie was regarding him with shy eagerness, but her eyes would not meet his.

His hands gripped the arms of his chair. It was time to tell them. The punishment of seeing their kind faces hardened against him was almost more than he could bear, but Kirk was not a craven.

"I came away. I came into the wilderness to lose the past," he said slowly, meeting their glances openly, frankly. "I was cashier with the Consolidated Gas company of Linwood, and one day $5,000 was missing, and I confessed."

He bowed his head and awaited their denunciation. There was silence, and he spoke again: "It is the harder to tell you, sir, because I love Nellie. I cannot offer her a tarnished name—and yet, if you knew the truth you would not blame me."

John Locksley slapped his hand upon the table and interrupted Kirk's words. "I do know the truth, Kirk! I have known it for months, and I have honored you above all men for your heroic sacrifice! It is a small world and Arthur Hardwick happens to be one of my best friends. In writing to him one day I included a snapshot photograph of the lumber camp, and he recognized your picture. He wrote me and said: 'I see you have my Sir Galahad with you, Locksley. You cannot do him too much honor, for he is expiating the crime of another man. Some day, when the time seems proper to you, tell him that Wilbur Webb has recovered his manhood and confessed his own guilt; tell him his old place awaits him with certain promotion, for our treasurer is growing old. Tell him I never believed his proposterous confession for one minute.' That's what Hardwick said," ended John Locksley, as he clapped his hand on Kirk's bowed shoulder and left the room.

The clock ticked on the shelf and outside a bird sang a lullaby in the pine tree. Nellie arose and went softly to Kirk. She knelt down and laid her cheek against his. "My dearest," he said, "what I did is not worthy this great reward. I took the blame because I had no kin who would be ashamed by my disgrace. I had lost father, mother and sisters. I came here into the wilderness, and I have found a father and a wife!"

When the furniture of Charles James Fox, the famous English orator and statesman, was sold by auction, there was among the books a copy of the first volume of Gibbon's Roman history. It appeared by the title page that the book had been presented by the author to Fox, but no considerations of sentiment deterred the recipient from writing on the fly leaf this anecdote:

"The author at Brooks' said there was no salvation for the principal persons in administration were laid on the table. Eleven days after this same gentleman accepted a place of lord of trade, under those very ministers, and has acted with them ever since."

Such was the avidity of bidders anxious to secure the least scrap of the writing and composition of the famous owner of the copy that owing to the addition of this little record the book sold for 3 guineas, a large sum for the times.

grace their position in the community would be unassailable, and life would go on in the same pleasant, easy manner it had before, only Wilbur would be more careful in the future. He had promised to leave cards alone, and—"

"Yes," was his answer as he turned away. "I will write to Mr. Hardwick. I will go away. Remember, if Wilbur yields to temptation again he will have to bear the consequences of his crime, and the discovery will prove my innocence in this case. Please go now, and bear the news to your husband. The strain will be over in a day or two. I must have time to make preparations."

Three days later Arthur Hardwick, president of the Consolidated Gas company, found a brief letter from his chief cashier on his desk. He read the letter several times, and a quizzical smile curled his lips at the corners. He pressed a button, sent for the discharged cashier, and presently the pale face of Wilbur Webb confronted him.

"Good morning, Webb. Stanley has resigned, and you may take his place in the office. If you have suffered an injustice at my hands in being accused of the $5,000 shortage please accept my heartfelt apologies. This letter from Kirk Stanley declares that he is the guilty one, and he is disappearing from Linwood today. In view of the fact that the money has been replaced the company will not prosecute the case. You are not surprised at Stanley's confession?" he rapped out suddenly.

Webb's face turned a sickly greenish pallor. "I am not surprised that he has confessed," he stammered vaguely, his weak eyes blinking back at the official's hard orbs.

"Ah, yes, thank you, Webb! The incident is closed now, and so far as Stanley is concerned, the knowledge of his own guilt should be punishment enough, eh?" "Why—er—yes?" gasped Wilbur weakly.

"That will do. Send in Miss Smith. I wish to dictate." Alone once more, the president of the Consolidated Gas company locked Kirk Stanley's confession in his private safe and smiled a very human sort of smile. "Sir Galahad—Don Quixote—old chaps, you're not in it with Kirk Stanley, bless him!"

A year later Kirk Stanley was bossing a gang of men in a Canadian lumber camp. The sturdy outdoor life had added breadth to his shoulders and had browned face and hands to a deep bronze tint. In his rough dannel shirt and corduroys tucked into high boots he tramped to and fro, bringing order out of chaos, steadily growing in the favor of his employers and day by day forgetting all the old life from which he had fled to give a fallen comrade another opportunity to arise and make good.

When the day's work was over and the axes ceased their ringing clamor and the crash of falling trees was hushed, Kirk dropped his air of authority, and with a new glad look in his eyes he would hasten along a winding, leafy path that led to the cabin of John Locksley. The cabin was perched on a hill among pines, and John Locksley was a student who had left civilization to live in the wilderness and regain shattered health.

Kirk Stanley had met him when he first came to the lumber camp and had been grateful when Locksley invited him to share his comfortable little four roomed cabin. Six months afterward Locksley's daughter, Nellie, came from the states to keep house for her father, and as the girl had made no objection to doing for the quiet young boarder, the three had spent six idyllic months amid the Canadian snows.

FRIDAY, FEB. 27, 1914.

The Gazette & Transcript is printed and mailed Friday afternoons, and is for sale at all News-stands in the Weymouths and at the South Terminal, Boston.

All communications must be accompanied with the name of the writer, and unpublished communications cannot be returned by mail unless stamps are enclosed.

Notices of all local entertainments to which admission fees is charged must be paid for at regular rates, 10 cents per line in the reading matter, or regular rates in the advertising columns.

If you have the don't care spirit in regard to the License Question because liquor always has been and probably will be as long as it is made, sold in Weymouth, get above the "don't care" and vote No.

Political campaigns serve not only to elect officers to fill certain positions, but are or should be, educators of the people. When there is a board of three or five officers to be elected there is no reason why there should not be a marking for the full board. If the voter does not like the candidates in nomination, he is at perfect liberty to make his own ticket and he can always find good men to vote for. Again it is very evident that the ballot is not understood by many of the voters. One only needs to listen for a few moments to the calling off of the vote, to be convinced that the voter either did not know what he was doing or else looked upon voting as a thing to be trifled with.

There are many good features to the Australian ballot, but it needs some amendments and among them one which throws the ballot out if not marked in full.

Look at last year's record of the town's vote—16 men on the ballot for selectmen, with five to be elected and there were 2258 blanks; with 6 on the ballot for school committee, two to be elected, there were 936 blanks and one ballot cast without an X, save a "Yes" on license.

Four Words Coined Each Day.
Four new words are added to the English language every day, if the dictionaries may be accepted as a standard of measurement. During the last three centuries the rate of growth of the dictionaries has been 1,500 words a year.

Beauty in Mexico.
The beauty of the Mexican women consists in superb black eyes, fine and very abundant dark hair, lovely arms and extraordinarily beautiful hands and feet. The Indian women sometimes add to these points of beauty a perfect figure, dark but glowing complexion and teeth like snow.

What Man Escapes.
Women may have a sense of humor. But if a man wore a section of elevator cable around his neck, and fastened onto it a can-opener, a young monkey-wrench, an ice-pick, a whiskey-desk, a screw-driver and a sardine-can, he wouldn't have nerve enough to call the mess his vanity outfit.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Fact Remains

No amount of misrepresentation by the peddlers of alum baking powders, no juggling with chemicals, or pretended analysis, or cooked-up certificates, or falsehoods of any kind, can change the fact that

Royal Baking Powder has been found by the official examinations to be of the highest leavening efficiency, free from alum, and of absolute purity and wholesomeness.

Royal Baking Powder is indispensable for making finest and most economical food.

Following Are a Few of the Items Which Appeared in the Gazette Years Ago This Week.

Forty-six years ago.
North Weymouth, Feb. 21, 1864
Headquarters Post 40, G. A. R.
At a regular encampment of this post this evening, after a muster in of candidates and a transaction of the regular business of the encampment, it was voted to choose a committee to make arrangements to hold a levee in the vestry of the Pilgrim church, (if it can be obtained and if not, to hold it in Webster hall of this place) for the purpose of raising a charity fund and the following comrades were chosen as the committee: C. G. Jones, G. L. Newton, Eli Colley, F. A. Bicknell, B. F. Thomas, I. H. Walker, J. H. Whelan, F. B. Pratt, J. L. Bates, A. J. Garey, E. L. Pierce and G. L. French.

Good Position.
"What does your father do for a living?" asked one little girl. "Why," replied the other, "he takes up the collections in church."

The Intruder.
Sir Arthur Sullivan, of the famous Gilbert and Sullivan combination, loved to hang about the back of the dress circle a few nights after his first performances. One night he was rather taken with one of his tunes, and started humming the melody, when an angry patron cried out: "Silence! I came here to hear Sullivan's music, not yours."

One Way to Decrease Jags.
In Copenhagen the police have decreased the number of drunkards by a novel plan of "tit-for-tat." If a man is found drunk in the streets he is escorted home in a cab by a police officer, and the cab fare is charged to the publican who served the man with liquor. Needless to say, publicans take very good care that none shall drink too much on their premises, in case they should be called upon to pay the cab bill.

LIGHTING SERVICE

Few people today realize to what a tremendous extent commercial success is dependent upon good LIGHTING SERVICE.

It shows, however, in countless different ways, and the wise manufacturer or merchant of today pays very careful attention to the proper and most effective lighting of his factory or store.

One reason for this is that it is recognized nowadays that employees are more content and more efficient when they work under the cheerful conditions produced by good light.

Remember; good light does not necessarily mean glare—it means light exactly suited to a specific requirement.

Good LIGHTING SERVICE means not only seeing to it that you get enough light to meet your needs, but that you get the exact quality and quantity of light you ought to have.

MODERN GAS LIGHTS

will provide it, and to reap the greatest profit from your business you should familiarize yourself with our LIGHTING SERVICE and with

—W. H. Blake and family spent the holiday with Mr. and Mrs. Carl Davis of Norfolk Downs.
—Mrs. A. W. Bartlett has been receiving fruit from her sisters, the Misses Goodale, who are spending the winter at Daytona, Fla. Last week she received a lemon weighing 1 pound, 6 ounces and a grape fruit which weighed 2 pounds, 4 ounces.
—Miss Margaret Dingwall has been the guest of friends in Dorchester this week.
—J. L. Peckham is remodeling the large stable in the rear of his house into two tenements. Charles Blackwell has the contract.
—Miss Helen Ward spent the week end and holiday at New Haven, Conn.
—Allan A. Emery will be the speaker at the evening service of the Pilgrim Brotherhood at the Pilgrim church next Sunday. He will talk on "A Man's Religion."
—The regular monthly meeting of the Men's Brotherhood of the Pilgrim church will be held on Tuesday evening, March 3rd. Supper will be served at 6:30 o'clock. At 8 o'clock Captain Frederick G. Bauer of South Weymouth will give a stereopticon lecture on "Three Centuries of the Massachusetts Militia" after which there will be moving pictures of the militia maneuvers. This lecture is given through the Publicity Department of the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia. The public is cordially invited to this lecture.
Great Idea.
Mrs. Willis (at the Ladies' Aid Society)—"Now, what can we do for the poor boys at the front?" Mrs. Gillis—"I was reading today where the soldiers are always making sorties. Now, why can't we get the recipe for those things and make them ourselves and send them to the boys?"—Puck's Quarterly.
The Great Majority.
Any approximate estimate of the number of persons who have died since the beginning of the human race is out of the question; but there is no doubt that their number far exceeds that of the present population of the world, as expressed in the saying, "to go over to the great majority." I. e., to die.
New Way of Finding Water.
An Arizona observer has found out how to tell by the mesquite whether water is near the surface or not. When the mesquite grows up into tree form the ground water lies within fifty feet of the surface, but if it remains a shrub prospects for finding water are not so good. We are always learning that every natural phenomenon has meaning for us, if we can only read the meaning.—Farm and Fireside.

NORFOLK, SS. PROBATE COURT.
TO the heirs-at-law, next of kin, creditors and all other persons interested in the estate of LYDIA MARCELLE CHESSMAN late of Weymouth, in said County deceased, in testate.
Whereas, a petition has been presented to said Court to grant a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased, to Lydia May Chessman of said Weymouth, without giving a surety on her bond. You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Dedham, in said County of Norfolk, on the eighteenth day of March A. D. 1914, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause if any you have, why the same should not be granted. And the petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof by publishing this citation once in each week, for three successive weeks in the Weymouth Gazette, a newspaper published in said Weymouth, the last publication to be one day at least before said Court.
Witness James H. Flint, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-fourth day of February A. D. 1914.

Land of Indolence.
There is no doubt that the climate of Mexico inclines to both physical and moral indolence, and exercise of either body or mind such as people indulge in in the United States or Europe seems impossible there. The old fashioned Mexican of culture was quite content if his daughters went to church constantly, embroidered, sang a little and painted a little.

Diamonds in a Vacuum.
A four or five carat diamond, if placed in a vacuum, emits as much light as a candle. And the color of the light varies with its facets. A ruby in a vacuum looks as if it was on fire. An emerald shines with a crimson glow.

Baker's Dozen.

The custom on the part of bakers allowing 13 to the dozen dates back to medieval times, when bakers were carefully watched. The trade was surrounded by many laws, and the most severe penalties were imposed for any shortage in weight. In order to avoid the possibility of falling below the standard measure it became customary for bakers to allow an extra loaf with every dozen.

Described.

Various dishes in the Hungarian restaurant were numbered for the convenience of the waitresses and the benefit of the patrons. A young couple entered. The orchestra struck up the "William Tell" overture. Turning to her escort, the young woman said: "That's a fan—what is it?" The man glanced up at the orchestra and saw the number three displayed. Then, with the air of one who is accustomed to cafe life, he looked up number three on the bill of fare. "That," he replied, when he had located it, "is 'Flet Mignon,' by Champignons."

A Desperate Situation

BY EUNICE BLAKE

At an Episcopal mission on the Chinese coast situated far from any white settlement the Rev. Mr. Waterman, a lean and hungry looking bachelor of forty-five, went to the superintendent, Mr. Blanchard, and said:

"I have been laboring in this field now for twenty years and have never been associated with any but Chinese during that time save only my co-workers. I must resign and go to another field."

Mr. Blanchard, unwilling to lose so valuable an assistant, said:

"Supposing, brother, a companion could be given you—a wife to labor with you and cheer you?" Mr. Waterman thought in that case that he could stand it awhile longer, but he didn't know where the wife was to come from. There were only married white women at the station, and he would not marry a heathen Chinese woman. Mr. Blanchard told him that there were women without husbands in civilized lands who might be induced to come out and marry a clergyman.

A few months after this conversation the Rev. Mr. Southgate, twenty-five years old and a bachelor, was standing on the dock belonging to the station awaiting the coming of a ship that appeared to be the eastward. He was so homesick that anything coming from a Christian land interested him, and his object in being on the dock was to see a ship that had come from the land he loved.

When the ship was docked and the gangplank in position the only woman who came down it was not only white, but comely. She seemed much cast down. Mr. Southgate approached her, raised his hat and asked if he could do anything for her.

"I have some business with the Rev. Mr. Waterman," she said, "but I don't wish to go directly to his house. Can you direct me to a place where I can lodge temporarily?"

"Let me take that bag," was the reply, "and the other things. I will think of some place for you while we are walking to the station. There is not much in the way of accommodation here. How long will you need a lodging place?"

"That I can't say. Do you know Mr. Waterman?"

"Oh, yes, very well."

"What kind of a person is he?"

"A very excellent man indeed."

"Is he good looking?"

"Oh, no. Mr. Waterman is not good looking."

"How old is he?"

"Between forty-five and fifty."

"Light or dark?"

"Neither. He has red hair and many freckles."

The young woman stopped. Mr. Southgate looked at her inquiringly.

"I'm going back on the ship," she said.

"Going back on the ship?"

"Yes," sobbing—"I came out here to marry Mr. Waterman, not knowing anything about him. From what you say he must be frightful!"

There was a long silence, during which the young woman wept.

"You are sure you wouldn't marry Mr. Waterman?"

"Yes, I am. I'll jump in the sea first. I have nothing to go back to and am desperate. Perhaps the best thing I can do is to drown myself."

"Oh, dear, no! You needn't do that. Would you be contented to remain here as the wife of a man about my age?"

"Perhaps," was the indefinite reply.

"I wouldn't mind helping you out; that is, if you would permit me."

There was no reply to this, but the sobs were less frequent.

"If you're going to take me," continued Mr. Southgate, "it might be less embarrassing for you to marry me before you see Mr. Waterman."

"Perhaps it would."

"But there must be some reason given. It must be reported as a mistake."

THEY DON'T WASTE WORDS.

Nyasaland Natives Exist in a State of Partial Coma.

Referring to the native peculiarities in Nyasaland, the author of "Hunting the Elephant in Africa," Captain C. H. Stigand, comments on a certain state of coma into which the "boys" descend when there is no active work for them to do, or at least when there is no compulsion to do it. He believes that the native is capable of assuming a state in which the mind is absolutely detached and not working, and when in such a state he is only recalled by a start to his present surroundings.

The life of the head man of a village in Nyasaland, when not engaged in the strenuous pursuit of his official duties, is something like this: At sunrise he crawls out of his hut and sits outside. After a short time his wife crawls out and offers him some food. He eats this and then makes his way to a tree, perhaps a hundred yards from the village. Under this he sits in deep abstraction, till about noon a child brings him some food and water. After partaking of this he moves a little so as to get the afternoon shade. He then sits in deep meditation until sunset, when he crawls into his hut and goes to sleep.

Sometimes he is joined by a few other old men under his tree. They hardly ever speak to each other, and if they say anything it is to make some obvious remark, as, "There is a dog." "Yes, it is a dog." "Oh." "Ah," and a further period of silence.

MADE HIMSELF AT HOME.

When He Got Through His Standing Was Unquestioned.

Robert Thorpe, an old Missouri stage driver, used to tell a story of how Anderson, the Jayhawker, got one of his recruits. The Anderson boys held up Thorpe's stage near Glasgow one day. Among the passengers was a raw-boned young Missourian who looked about as tough as the Jayhawkers themselves.

"Give me yer var'bles," Anderson demanded of the youth, as he went down the line.

"Ain't got none," answered the young squirrel hunter.

"Where ye goin'?"

"To join Anderson's Jayhawkers."

The leader sized him up a bit.

"Kin ye swim the Missouri river?" he asked him.

"Reckon so," the young man answered.

"Could ye kill a man?"

"Reckon so."

Anderson stepped forward and spat in the youngster's face. The youth bounded at the Jayhawker like a cat, caught him full in the face with a right swing and went down on top of him, kicking and clawing.

The Jayhawkers pulled the young demon off their leader, and he got up.

"You belong," he said. "Boys, give him a hawse!"—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Recognition Comes Slowly.

The late Alfred Russel Wallace, the codiscoverer with Darwin of evolution, had a hard row to hoe at first, said a physiologist.

"Poor Dr. Wallace had in fact such a very hard row to hoe that he couldn't afford to marry till he was sixty-three. When to balance matters he married a young girl of eighteen by whom he had a son and a daughter.

"I commiserated in London last summer with Dr. Wallace.

"It was too bad," I once said to him. "A man of genius like you, cramped with poverty till past middle life! It was too bad."

"My friend," Dr. Wallace replied, "always you will find the fire of genius takes a long, long time to make the pot boil."—Detroit Free Press.

Beauty and the Child.

"People who are pleasing to look at have no idea of their power over the young mind. It is an odd trait in the child's character that while he will positively adore an ugly, inanimate object, such as a battered wooden doll or the mere remnant of a horse, he will not forgive ugliness in a human being. It seems to outrage his sense of fitness."—Anonymous.

WHISTLER STORIES

Audacity and Sarcasm of the Eccentric Genius.

THE FAMOUS PEACOCK ROOM.

"Jimmie's" Offhand Hospitality, at His Patron's Expense, While Decorating It, the Clash It Led to and the Way the Artist Squared Accounts.

In Mrs. Alec Tweedie's "Thirteen Years of a Busy Woman's Life" she tells this story of Whistler, which she heard at first hand:

"The famous peacock room at Prince's Gate was a wonderful scheme of decoration, peacock's eyes on a gold ground being its principal motif. About the year 1880 the late Mr. Leyland, a wealthy shipowner and patron of the arts, had taken this grand new mansion and asked Whistler to decorate a room. Jimmy, poor and out at elbows as usual, jumped at the idea, but no terms were fixed upon. The work began. It was a prodigious undertaking, and the extraordinary and erratic little man gave it his whole time.

"Being at Prince's Gate all day and having the run of Leyland's house, Whistler had a hospitable way of inviting his friends to come and see the room and then he would ask them to stop to luncheon. This sort of thing, which began occasionally, ended in being an almost daily occurrence, and Jimmy used to hold a little levee every morning, when three, four or five people remained to luncheon. This became too much for Mr. Leyland, and his plan for putting an end to the campaign was a somewhat ingenious one.

"Jimmy one day entertained four friends. The meal not being announced, he rang the bell for the butler. 'When is lunch?' he asked.

"I have no orders for lunch," replied the man, with a stately air.

"Oh, no, of course," replied Jimmy, not in the least disconcerted. "We'll go along to such and such a hotel. Stupid of me to forget it!"

"But it was enough, and though he pretended not to mind and with that delightful impudence for which he was famous turned it off, he never forgave the incident and determined to pay Leyland out. From that day he took his own lunch in a little paper parcel and sat and devoured it when so inclined. On the next occasion Leyland came in to admire the peacock decorations about the usual luncheon hour.

"You will have some lunch, won't you?" Whistler said. Leyland looked surprised.

"Up jumped Jimmy, fetched his bag and proceeded to untie his parcels, saying: 'It's all right, old chap; have no anxiety. It is my lunch, not yours, and you are heartily welcome to it.'

"When the work was accomplished which had taken so long Leyland wished to pay the bill and asked the artist what was his figure. 'I have worked a whole year and more,' Whistler said. 'I consider my services are worth £2,000 a year, therefore the figure is £2,500, from which you can deduct the few hundreds you have given me on account.'

"Leyland was horrified. 'Preposterous,' he said, 'perfectly preposterous!'

"Jimmy looked at him and drew himself up to his full height, which was not great. 'I beg, Mr. Leyland, that you will accept as a gift the entire work of my life for the last year and a quarter. I can compromise nothing.'

"Once again Whistler scored and Leyland paid. Whistler's thanks to his patron afterward took the form of painting a life size portrait of him as a devil with horns and hoofs."

Sir E. J. Poynter, P. R. A., says the New York Sun, told in an interview how when he was studying in Paris for three or four years there was one little artistic group called "Trilby."

He says:

"My companions were Whistler, Du Maurier, Val Prinsep, Lamont, Thomas and Armstrong. Of course Du Maurier altered the thing a good deal, but his picture of studio life was in the main a truthful representation of our life at that time. Trilby herself, I believe, was a pure product of the author's brain.

"In many ways the most remarkable man among us was Whistler. If he had only had energy there is no knowing to what height he might have soared, but he was incurably lazy. I remember visiting him once at a nursing home in Paris. He had been working a little on a study in pink variations. It was exquisite from the extraordinary sense of color it displayed. This was his great gift. He excelled every painter ever known in purity and delicacy of coloring. He rarely finished any work, but he loved to pretend, just for fun, that his unfinished studies were perfect works of genius. Then he would chuckle when people took him at his word and declared that the very incompleteness of the sketches constituted their great artistic merit."

Two Sided Paper.

One of the most extraordinary newspapers on record is a weekly published in the little town of Grumingen. As the place is too small to support more than one paper the Wochenblatt is the official organ of the two local political parties, the Liberals and the Socialists. Half the pages are written by members of each party, an arrangement that seems to satisfy both sides.

The first hour of the morning is the ruler of the day.—Henry Ward Beecher.

"and my papa would, too, but he doesn't know any." —Kansas City Star.

Significance of the Ring.
The signet ring and seals were used in Bible times as pledges of different kinds from owner to owner in business transactions. The "Gimmel," or wedding ring, also of Bible times, was a cunningly devised affair in two sections, and at the ceremony one was given to the bride and the other to the groom. This ring has been reproduced at several weddings in recent years as an odd fancy.

Ireland's Coney Island.
Coney Island is a good old Irish name, which will be news to a vast majority of people who visit that part of the greater city. Brooklyn news papers have asserted the name was adopted from small animals which made their homes in the sand. But the will of Viscount Charlemont, who died last summer, aged eighty-three, directs that he shall be buried at Coney Island, Lough Neagh, Ireland, and provides an annuity for the upkeep of the "old tower," which had been in the possession of his family many generations. —New York Post.

The Duchess' Philosophy.
The old Duchess of Cleveland invited a relative to her husband's funeral and told him to bring his gun with him when he came, adding, "We are old, we must die, but the pheasants must be shot." —Sir Algernon West's Reminiscences.

SCORPION STINGS.

They Kill Thousands of Persons Yearly in Mexico.

QUICK WORK OF THE POISON.

The Venom of the Deadly Species, Unless Prompt Treatment Follows the Bite, Will End the Life of the Victim in Twelve or Fourteen Hours.

Four thousand persons are reported to die each year in Mexico from the stings of scorpions.

There are several varieties of scorpions in Mexico, some of them exceedingly venomous and others little feared in the neighborhood of Tepic the virulent Centurus gracilis abounds, but it is little known about the more northern state of Sonora. It is one of the most venomous creatures in the world.

In the small city of Durango scorpions are perhaps more plentiful and more dangerous than anywhere else in the republic. Here the climate is humid and torrid—it is in the "tierra caliente"—and it is estimated that more than 150,000 scorpions are killed each year, with no appreciable effect on their numbers.

A scorpion resembles a diminutive lobster. Some specimens are eight inches long, though the average length is from two to four inches. The claws closely resemble a lobster's; with them the scorpion crushes its prey after disabling it by means of a sting.

The body of a scorpion consists of several segmented joints, the last five or more narrowing down to form the tail, which curls up forward over the body and terminates in the sting. This businesslike appendage is a horny, sharp spine containing two little openings which connect with the venom gland within the shell of the last segment. In striking the scorpion gives the tail a rapid lashing motion forward in advance of the body and literally administers a hypodermic injection of poison, or rather several injections, for it usually stings repeatedly when it does strike.

In color scorpions vary according to environment. One ordinarily colorless or translucent will assume a brown or blackish shade in dark surroundings. Scorpions live in the cracks of the sun baked clay, under stones, in the chinks of the adobe huts and in the cracks in the plaster of old frame houses. They prey upon spiders and other night marauding insects. A spider stung by a scorpion may be observed undergoing convulsions before death just as animals or human beings do.

Unless sleeping cots are well screened and the supports immersed in cans of kerosene or carbolic acid—water evaporates too rapidly—the prowling scorpion may find its way beneath the bed covers and sting the restless child. By nature it is a nocturnal pest. In Mexico every one takes a peep in the toe of his shoe before dressing in the morning to assure himself that no undesirable citizen is hiding there.

Contrary to common belief scorpions never commit suicide by stinging themselves to death—at least not in Mexico. In fact, they seem immune to their own venom. Two well matched specimens will battle to death if confined in a jar, stinging each other repeatedly, yet the victor does not die. He tears his antagonist into small pieces with his claws and voraciously devours every trace of the vanquished foe. And the cannibal thrives on the diet.

Some scorpion bites cause little more than burning pain and numbness in the part affected for a few days. But the more poisonous varieties cause death, and that speedily, especially when they sting young children or debilitated old people. The lower classes of people suffer more than the well to do because of their custom of going about half naked most of the time.

In serious cases the local numbness and pain or burning extend over the body in a few hours. Then follows a feeling as of a ball in the throat, the victim clutching his throat as though choking on a foreign body. Prompt treatment at this stage will usually save life.

If not treated the mouth soon begins to froth and the eyes become reddened and hypersensitive to light. Within an hour or two the breathing grows shorter and more difficult, the body turns blue, the pulse fails and convulsions set in. The convulsions recur frequently during several hours, but complete relaxation usually ushers in the end.

Fortunately unconsciousness develops early, so that the victim does not suffer the tortures of one dying from lockjaw. The average time required for a scorpion sting to cause death is twelve or fourteen hours.

The treatment of scorpion sting consists of a free incision of the part to promote copious bleeding, then vigorous massage toward the bleeding center for half an hour or more. Stimulants—meaning drugs and not that pseudo stimulant, alcohol—are also necessary.

In villages where physicians are wanting the treatment is applied by "practitioners"—ignorant, self constituted healers, and many a poor carries horrible scars from the practitioner's crude surgery. Their reckless use of carbolic acid, iodine and similar poisons also accounts for many otherwise avoidable fatalities among victims of scorpion stings. —New York Sun.

Difficulties may surround our path, but if the difficulties be not in ourselves they may generally be overcome. —Lowell.

LABELED BY CARLYLE.

The Tag He Plastered Upon a Famous English Historian.

In the "Letters of Charles Elliot Norton" is this amusing epistle, which was written by Norton in 1873:

"The other day Froude said to me: 'It's a great shame that some one shouldn't keep a record of Carlyle's talk. He never fails to say something memorable or admirably humorous. Why, he called somebody the other day 'an inspired red herring.'"

"Pray," said I, "who is it that deserves such a label?" But Froude had forgotten. * * * Some days afterward I asked Carlyle to whom he had applied the phrase, but he had forgotten and said he trusted he was not to be made accountable for all the extravagant phrases he had uttered in talk—there would be "verra many to rise in judgment" against him—but he wouldn't disown "the inspired red herring."

I told all this to Forster, abusing Froude at the same time, much to Carlyle's amusement, which was increased when Forster broke out: "By heavens, my dear Norton, I heard that previous utterance, but I, too, have forgotten to whom it was fitted. Mrs. Forster will remember." But when we went to the drawing room Mrs. Forster could not remember, and Forster called down wrath on her and himself. The next morning the post brought me a note from him at breakfast time, which contained only the name Henry Thomas Buckle.

ENGLAND'S BLACK MEN.

They Are Remnants of the Ancient Blue Painted Britons.

Practically every Englishman is Anglo-Saxon by blood, but there still are, according to scientists, one or two corners in England where there are colonies directly descended from the ancient Britons, the blue painted men who, according to the history books, inhabited England before the Anglo-Saxons killed them off.

If you came across them you would at once notice something curious about them. They do not look like Englishmen at all. They are short, as swarthy as Spaniards, with very narrow heads and with curiously cut profiles.

There are whole villagefuls of these modern ancient Britons, though the villages are very few and very out of the way. It is this out of the wayness that has kept them so distinct from the country people around them.

Some of these villages have not even had road communication with the rest of the world till comparatively recent times.

One of these curious colonies is at Dunsford, in Surrey, Bedfordshire, too, has some villages of "black men." —London Tit-Bits.

Confusion.

Three ladies as they shot in an observation car Californiaward through the superb scenery in the world fell to talking about dogs.

"I don't know a thing about dogs," said the first lady. "They're all just dogs to me. If I have a preference, though, it's for the cob."

"Cobs are nice—so affectionate," agreed the second lady. "But I'm no dog sharp either. Still, I must say my choice of a dog would be a mustang. They're such good watch dogs, aren't they?"

"I don't know one dog from another," said the third lady. "I just divide them into big dogs and little dogs. I'm very fond of a hackney, though—I mean, of course, for a lap dog." —Chicago Record-Herald.

Her Superior English.

James Ross and his daughter Janet from Canada visited relatives in Chicago recently. Day after day Janet and her father went sightseeing, always together.

Janet's aunt, noticing this, one day suggested that she let her father go downtown alone some time, jokingly adding: "Men do not like to have women always tagging along."

"Aye, ahnty, but he wants me," explained Janet earnestly. "He canna thole to stir out o' the house his lane. Ye wadna believe hoo fast he is ony where w'oot me. Ye see, father ta'ks sic braid Scotch that stranger folk dinna ken what it's a' about, an' I nae tae gang w' him tae dae the conversin.'" —Everybody's.

Not So Dutiful.

"Where will Mrs. Dobs go now that both her daughters are married to her son-in-law's house in Birmingham or to that of her son-in-law in Leeds?"

"One wants her in Birmingham, and the other wishes she would go to Leeds."

"What dutiful sons-in-law!"

"I beg your pardon. The one in Birmingham wants her in Leeds; the one in Leeds wants her in Birmingham." —London Tit-Bits.

The Basis of Society.

The wealth and strength of a country are its population, and the very best part of that population are the cultivators of the soil. Independent farmers are everywhere the basis of society as well as the true friends of liberty. —Andrew Jackson.

Fine.

Judge—Thirty days. Prisoner—Oh, please don't send me to jail, your honor. Judge—Well, then, I'll make it $30. How's that? Prisoner—Fine.—Buffalo Express.

Wrong Again.

"There is nothing new under the sun," quoted the Sage. "How about the antique furniture?" asked the Fool. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

Which are you

The optimist and pessimist May everywhere be found: The optimist ne'er fails to see The good which may abound.

The pessimist will always find A reason to complain; No matter if the day is bright Or clouds give forth their rain.

The optimist with proof will say That Whitcomb's bread and cake, Are quite superior to that Of any other make.

The pessimist would rather starve Than eat good bakers bread; He would complain if all the wheels Did not turn in his head.

The Banquet Bread that Whitcomb makes Is popular indeed; His Whipped Cream Pies and fresh Eclairs Supply a long felt need.

WHITCOMB'S

WEYMOUTH AND EAST BRAINTREE

—Have you the welfare of the Town at heart? Vote early Monday.

—Dr. John F. Welch, the second oldest practicing physician in Quincy, died at his home in that city Monday, aged 59. Dr. Welch was born in Boston, but when a young man, came to Weymouth, where he became a clerk in the drug store of Francis Ambler, whose daughter, Miss Emma Ambler, he later married. From Weymouth he went to New York City and graduated from Bellevue hospital in 1880.

Besides his widow a daughter, Miss Marjorie Welch and a son, Ambler Welch, a member of the staff of the Brockton Times survive him.

—Go-to-the-polls-day next Monday.

—A daughter was born a few days ago to Mr. and Mrs. Maurice L. Cleary. (nee Julia Sullivan)

—William Lonergan has been visiting friends in New York city.

—Miss Edna Johnson has returned from a visit to her sister in Milford.

—Selectman Henry M. Storms of East Braintree has a clear field for reelection, Mr. Ludden having withdrawn as a candidate.

—Oscar K. Wilder who has been confined to his home on Allen street since Christmas, is now much improved and will be about again as soon as the weather permits.

—Mrs. Edward Boudron of Allen street is ill with an attack of pneumonia.

—Mr. and Mrs. Edgar H. Bolles have been spending a few days at New London Conn., the guests of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Curtis, formerly of East Braintree.

—Miss Elsie Pray, a teacher in the Taunton schools, was home over the holiday on a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Pray.

—Mrs. Francis of Beverly has been spending a few days with her daughter, Mrs. W. H. Clapp.

—Benjamin Delorey has been home from Worcester on a visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Simon Delorey.

—Miss Adelaide White and Mr. Asa Bourke were married Sunday evening by Rev. J. B. Holland, pastor of the church of the Sacred Heart. The bride's sister, Miss Eva White, was bridesmaid and the groom's brother, Mr. Phillip Bourke, was best man. A reception followed the ceremony, at the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Dorrick White of Commercial street. Mr. and Mrs. Bourke will reside in this town.

—Lot Lohnes and Frank Fay attended the house auction at Madison square gardens, New York. Mr. Lohnes purchased Dorothy C. 2-194 brm. 10, by the Patcher Boy dam Ltd Tell by Axtell L. and Mr. Fay the chg. Golden Hoover 4 by Hoover dam Gold Coast by Omega.

—Mr. Nathaniel F. Hunt died at his home on Quincy avenue, East Braintree, Sunday, aged 76. He had been in poor health for sometime. He is survived by his widow. Mr. Hunt was a member of the boards of selectmen, overseer of the poor, assessors and highway surveyors in Braintree from 1894 to 1899 and was for many years previous tax collector. He was a charter member of the old Weymouth band.

—The Union Literary Circle met at the home of Mrs. Alice Cook, Tuesday evening, February 24th. The subject of the winter's study—Russia—was taken up by Mrs. Eleanor Holmes, who gave an account of the history of the 16th and 17th centuries with their horrible cruelties, and the welding together of the different provinces in the growing nation. A second paper was given by Miss Emma F. Thayer on the Lakes and Rivers of Russia.

Why Collections Are Large.

A pious old lady of our acquaintance devotes the proceeds from the eggs her hens lay on Sundays to the church. Fortunately for the church nearly all her hens are Sabbath-breakers.

Children Need Protection.

Because they have less resisting power, children are more susceptible to all kinds of disease germs than older persons. This is why every child should be early taught to avoid the habits which lead to infection. It is little short of a criminal risk to allow a child to work or play in a room or yard that is not clean as it can be made.

$100 REWARD, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

When public endorsement is made by a representative citizen of Weymouth, the proof is positive. You must believe it. Read this testimony. Every sufferer of kidney backache, every man, woman or child with kidney trouble will do well to read the following:

A. B. Sanborn, 8 Williams Ave., Weymouth, Mass., says: "There is no doubt in my mind about the good work of Doan's Kidney Pills in cases of kidney complaint. This remedy certainly proved good in my case. The statement I gave some time ago was true."

Mr. Sanborn is only one of many Weymouth people who have gratefully endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills. Paint or Not.

Is a horse worth more or less after feed?

Hay and oats are high today; shall I wait today and feed him tomorrow?

That's how men do about painting their houses and barns and fences. Paint has been high for several years; and so they have waited. Some are still waiting.

Their property drops a trifle a year and the next job of paint creeps-up, creeps-up, creeps-up; it'll take more paint by a gallon a year; they don't save a cent, and the property goes on suffering.

FOR SELECTMAN AND OVERSEER OF THE POOR FROM WARD FIVE

A. FRANCIS BARNES

To the Voters of Weymouth:

When our present system of Town government was inaugurated it was deemed necessary that each section of the town should have representation, with a town as widely separated as ours, it is just as necessary today. Under these circumstances and appreciating the well-known spirit of fair play shown in town affairs we ask your support for A. Francis Barnes for Selectman and Overseer of the Poor; a man who is young, energetic and capable of serving the town well. He has always been interested in town affairs and served with credit on these Boards in 1910-11-12, and was undoubtedly the choice of the majority of the town last year, as he carried his own Ward (South Weymouth) also Weymouth and North Weymouth; being elected Overseer but defeated for Selectman by a few votes, thus leaving this section without a representative. Mr. Barnes has the endorsement of his associates on these Boards and was the unanimous choice of our Ward Caucus.
