PREFACE.

THE extreme difficulty of obtaining a complete set of the Acts of the General Assembly, unless at a very exorbitant price, has long rendered a new and more compressed edition most desirable. Several years ago, the matter was brought under the notice of the Assembly, who appointed a committee with the view of considering whether this important object might not be attained. This committee was again and again renewed; but although it is believed that some progress was made in obtaining subscribers to the intended work, nothing effectual was accomplished.

Impressed with the importance of having the Acts of the Church in a form accessible, not merely to Kirk-Sessions and other Judicatories, but also to the Office-bearers of the Church individually, and her Members in general, and encouraged by the countenance so generally given to their Book of "Styles," THE CHURCH LAW SOCIETY have ventured to undertake the publication of a new edition of the Acts.

At a meeting of the Society, held in May 1842, a committee, consisting of the Rev. Mr Petrie of Kirkwall, Dr Cunningham of Edinburgh, Mr Pitcairn of Cockpen, Mr Omond of Monzie, and Mr Wood of Westruther, with Mr James Crawford, jun., W.S., and Mr William Wood, Accountant, was appointed for the purpose of taking the necessary steps for carrying the work into execution. The committee immediately entered on their labours; and having succeeded in completing the work, the Society has now the satisfaction of presenting, in one volume, the Acts of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, from 1638 to 1842, inclusive.

As the proceedings of the Assembly do not constitute any part of the law of the Church, and as a republication of them would have swelled the work to an inconvenient size, and added very largely to the expense, these have been omitted in the present edition ; and, in the Acts themselves, all mere matters of form have been avoided, such as the Royal Commission, the Sovereign's Letter, with the Assembly's Answer, the Commission for discussing Affairs referred to them, and the Commission for managing the Royal Bounty. In regard to these, however, nothing of importance is omitted. The Royal Letter and Answer are always given when circumstances connected with the particular time, or with the communications themselves, appear to invest them with more than usual interest. The special Addresses to the Throne, of which there are many, are printed with scarcely an exception. Any change in the terms of either of the Commissions annually appointed by the Assembly is uniformly noticed. In the earlier Acts, the names of the Ministers and Elders appointed as Commissioners are generally given, also in a few cases in subsequent years, where, from particular circumstances, their insertion may be interesting. Notices are occasionally given, from the Abridgment of the Proceedings, of important discussions which took place in the General Assembly.

In regard to the many Overtures which appear among the printed Acts of the original edition, care has been taken in each case to ascertain whether an Act was ultimately passed on the subject ;—if so, reference is made accordingly, and the Overture is not printed ; but where the Overture does not appear to have been enacted, the fact is stated in a note, and the Overture itself is given at length.

Copious Indices have been appended to this Edition, which it is hoped will add much to its value, as the want of these has long been felt. Besides a Table of Contents, which appears at the commencement, there is a full Index of Matter, an Index also of Proper Names, with Lists of Royal Commissioners, Moderators, Clerks, Procurators, and Agents, from 1638 to the present date.

In passing through the press, the work has been compared with the Assembly's copy of the Acts, the use of which was kindly granted, and all possible care has been taken to secure accuracy. It is earnestly hoped, therefore, by those who have undertaken the work, that it will meet with the approbation of the Office-bearers and friends of the Church; and that it will not only be found a valuable acquisition in the conduct of the business of our Ecclesiastical Judicatories, but that it will be instrumental in making the history and actings of the Church of Scotland more generally known and better understood.

THOMAS PITCAIRN,
Convener of Committee of Church Law Society.

THE
OF
THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE SOLEMNE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE KIRK OF SCOTLAND, INDICTED BY THE KING'S MAJESTIE, AND CONVEENED AT GLASGOW, THE 21 OF NOVEMBER, 1638.

TO THE READER.

It were long, neither do we now intend, to represent, what, in the beginning, by the mercies of our God and the ministerie of his faithfull servants, was the Reformation of this Kirk; what purity of doctrine and worship; what order, what authority, and what unity continued for many years, by the prayers and labours of Ministers and Professours; what novations and corruptions have been introduced upon us of late, in the time of our division and defection, by such as have ever been enemies to the crosse of Christ, and who have minded earthly things; how manifold and how comfortable experience we have at this time of the care and compassions of our Lord and Saviour, preventing the utter ruine of religion, and the horrible vastation of this Kirk, by looking upon the afflictions of his people, by hearing their groanes, mocked by the world; and by moving the heart of our gracious and dread Sovereigne, the King's Majestie, to convene a free nationall Assemblie, for redressing the wrongs done to religion, and what undeniable testimonies and notable manifestations of the divine presence and assistance of Christ, have accompanied this meeting and whole work. "Whoso is wise, and observeth these things, will see the loving-kindnesse of the Lord."

For the present, it seemed necessarie that such of the Acts and Constitutions of the Assemblie as are of most generall concernement should be published in print; the correct writing of so manie copies as were called for not beeing possible to be exped in due time, and the Kirk having resolved upon this course in former times, which, had it been keepeed, our defection, through the almost invincible ignorance of the proceedings of this Kirk, had not proven so dangerous and deplorable.

In these Acts and Constitutions speciall regard was had to our nationall Confession of Faith, as it was at first and diverse times after professed, and is now of late sworn and subscribed, that all men's mindes, who delight not to cavill, might rest satisfied in the true meaning thereof, found out by the diligent search of the ecclesiastick registers. Our care was also rather at this time to revive and bring to light former laudable acts, then to make anie new acts, reflecting as little as might be upon the Reformation of other Kirks, and choosing to receive our directions from our own Reformation, approved by the ample testimonie of so manie forein Divines ; according to the example of the venerable Assemblie at Dort, where speciall caution was, that the 30 and 31 article of the Confession of the Belgick Kirks, touching ecclesiastick order, should not be examined by strangers, there being a difference touching that point amongst reformed Kirks. So manie as were present can beare witness that all the members of the Assemblie were manie times called on, and required to propone their doubts, and to give their judgements of everie article, before it was inacted, that everie one might receive satisfaction, and from the full perswasion of his minde, might give his voice ; wherein the unanimitie and harmonie was the more admirable, that manie parting from their pre-conceived opinions, which had possessed their mindes, did most willinglie receive the light, which did now unexpectedly appear from the records of the Kirk.

That this extract shall stop the mouthes of the malicious is more than we can promise, or should be expected. We know there be some incendiaries, who would, with great joy and content of minde, seek their lost penny in the ashes of this poore Kirk and kingdome ; and we have already found, that our labours, and the grounds whereupon we have proceeded, before they be seen, are misconstrued by so many as findes their hopes blasted, and are come short of their earthly projects ; but our comfort is, that we have walked in the truth of our hearts, as in the sight of God. That the adversaries of the Kirk have not transformed themselves into angels of light, nor can say they are doing God service, but are seen in their colours, and do seek themselves, and that so many as have erred before, not knowing the order and constitutions of this Kirk, will, as obedient children to their mother, speaking plainly and powerfully of old, and now, after long silence, opening her mouth again, and uttering her minde in a free Assembly, hear her voice, and with that reverence that bescemeth under the supreme Majestie of Christ, obey her directions, that being all of one minde, peace may be upon us, and upon the Kirk of God ; and the God of peace and love may be with us.

ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Act Sess. 6, Glasgow, November 27, 1638. Act for trying the Registers.

The testimonie of the committy, for tryall of the Registers, subscribed with their hands, being produced, with some reasons thereof in another paper, and publickly read, my Lord Commissioner professed that it had resolved him of sundry doubts, but desired a time to be more fully resolved.

The Moderatour desired that if any of the Assembly had any thing to say against the said testimonie for the books, that they would declare it, and finding none to oppon, yet he appointed the day following, to any to object any thing they could say ; and if then none could object, the Assembly would hold the Registers as sufficiently approved.

Act Sess. 7, November 28. Act approving the Registers.

Anent the report of the Assemblie's judgement of the authority of the books of Assembly, the Moderatour having desired that if any of the Assembly had any thing to say, they would now declare it, otherwise they would hold all approved by the Assembly.

The Commissioner his Grace protested that the Assemblie's approving these books, or any thing contained in them, be no wayes prejudiciall to his Majestie, nor to the Archbishops and Bishops of this kingdome, or any of their adherents, because he had some exceptions against these books. My Lord Rothes desired these exceptions to be condescended on, and they should be presently cleared, and protested that these books should be esteemed authentick and obligatorie hereafter.

The whole Assemblie all in one voice approved these books, and ordained the same to make faith in judgement, and outwith in all time comming, as the true and authentick Registers of the Kirk of Scotland, conform to the testimonie subscribed by the Committie, to be insert with the reasons thereof in the books of Assembly: Whereof the tenour followeth :—

We, under-subscribers, having power and commission from the General Assembly

now presently convey'd and sitting at Glasgow, to peruse, examine, and cognosce, upon the validity, faith, and strength of the books and registers of the Assembly under-written, to wit: A register beginning at the Assembly holden the twentieth day of December, 1560, and ending at the fourth Session of the Assembly holden the twenty-eight of December, 1566.

Item, another register beginning at the General Assembly holden the second day of June, 1567, and ending at the fourth Session of the Assembly holden at Perth the ninth day of August, 1572, which register is imperfect and mutilate in the end, and containeth no leaf nor page after that page which containeth the said inscription of the said fourth Session, which two registers bears to be subscribed by John Gray, scribe.

Item, a register of the Assembly holden at Edinburgh the seventh day of August, 1574, and ending with the twelfth Session, being the last Session of the Assembly, 1579.

Item, another register beginning at the Assembly holden at Edinburgh the tenth of May, 1586, and ending in the seventeenth Session of the Assembly holden in March, 1589.

Item, another register, being the fifth book and greatest volume, beginning at the Assembly holden in anno 1560, and ending in the year 1590.

Having carefully view'd, perused, and considered the said registers, and every one of them, and being deeply and maturely advised as in a matter of greatest weight and consequence, do attest before God, and upon our conscience declare to the world and this present Assembly, that the saids foure registers above expressed, and every one of them, are famous, authentick, and good registers, which ought to be so reputed and have publick faith in judgement and outwith, as valid and true records in all things, and that the said fifth and greatest book, beginning at the Assembly 1560, and ending 1590, being margined by the hand-writs of the Clerk and reviser of the registers, cognosced and tryed, and agreeable to the other foure registers, in what is extant in them, ought also to be free of all prejudice and suspicion, and received with credit. And in testimonie of our solemne affirmation, we have subscribed these presents with our hands.

Sic subscribitur,	Master Andrew Ramsay.	Master John Adamson.
Master John Row.	Master Robert Murray.	Master Alexander Gibson.
Master James Boner.	Master Alexander Peerson.	Master Alexander Wedderburn.

Reasons proving the Five Books and Registers produced before the Assembly to be authentick.

The books now exhibited unto us under-subscribers, which we have revised and perused by commission from the Generall Assembly, are true registers of the Kirk: to wit, five volumes, wherof the first two contain the Acts of the Assembly from the year of God 1560 to the year 1572, all subscribed by John Gray, clerk. The third from the year of God 1574 to the year 1579. The fourth from the year of God 1586 to the year 1589, at which time Master James Richie was clerk, who hath frequently written upon the margine of the saids two last books, and subscribed the said margine with his hand-writing. And the fifth book, being the greatest volume, containing the Acts of the Generall Assembly from the year of God 1560 to the year 1590, which agreeth with the foresaid other foure books and registers, in so far as is extant in them, and further recordeth what is wanting by them, passing by what is mutilate in them, and which, with the two volumes produced by Master Thomas Sandilands, from the year 1590 to this present, maketh up a perfect register.

I. For the first two volumes subscribed by John Gray, albeit it be not necessar in such antiquitie to proove that he was clerk, seeing he designes himself so by his subscription, yet the same is manifest by an act mentioned in the third book, in the time of Master James Richie, who succeeded him in the said office, and his hand-writ was acknowledged by sundry old men in the ministry.

II. The uniformitie of his subscriptions through both volumes, evident by ocular inspection, above the ordinarie custome of most famous notars, delivers the same from all suspicion, in facto tam antiquo.

III. There be many coppies, specially of general acts, yet extant, which do not debord from the saids registers, but are altogether agreeable thereto.

IV. It is constant by the universal custome of this kingdome, that all registers are transmitted from one keeper to his successour, and so comming by progresse and succession from the first incumbent to the last possessour, are never doubted to be the registers of that judicatorie whereof the last haver was clerk; and, therefore, it is evident that these books, comming successively from John Gray, Master James Richie, and Master Thomas Nicolson, who were all clerks to the Assembly, into the hands of Master Robert Winrame, who was constitute clerk-depute by the said Master Thomas Nicolson, (as his deputation, here present to show, will testifie,) are the undoubted registers of the Assembly; likeas Alexander Blair succeeded the said Master Robert in his place of clerkship to the assignations and modifications of ministers' stipends; and during Master Robert his lifetime was his actual servant, and so had the said books by progresse from him, which the said Alexander is readie presently to testifie.

V. The two registers of Master James Richie, albeit not under his own hand, yet are frequently margined with his own hand-writ, and the same marginal additions subscribed by him, which hand-writ is seen and cognosced by famous men, who knoweth the same, and is evident, being compared with his several writings and subscriptions yet extant.

VI. The said registers are more perfect, lesse vitiated, scored, and interlined, than any other authentic and famous registers of the most prime judicatories within this kingdome.

VII. Master Thomas Sandilands, in name of his father, who was late clerk, by dimission of Master Thomas Nicolson, hath produced a volume, which proveth the saids two registers of Master James Richie to be sufficient records; because that same volume is begun by that same hand, whereby the said Master James Richie his registers are written, and is subscribed once in the margine by Master James Richie his hand, and is followed forth, and continued in the same book by Master Thomas Nicolson, who succeeded him in the place, and was known by most men here present to be of such approven worth and credit, that he would never have accomplished a register which had not been famous and true; and whereof the hand-writ had not then been known to him sufficiently.

VIII. That register produced by Mr Thomas Sandilands, and prosecuted by Master Thomas Nicolson, proves the first part of that register to be true and famous, and that first part being by ocular inspection of the same hand-writ with Master James Richie's registers, and subscribed in the margine with the same hand-writ, proveth Richie's two books to be good records, and Richie's registers doth approve Gray's books, by the Act of Assembly before written; specially considering the same hath come by progresse and succession of clerks in the hands of Alexander Blair, now living, and here present.

IX. The compts anent the thirds of benefices between the Regent for the time and the Assembly, in the second volume, p. 147, are subscribed by the Lord Regent's own hand, as appeareth; for it is a royall-like subscription, and there is no hand-writ in all the book like unto it, and beareth not sic subscribitur, which undoubtedly it would do, if it were a coppie.

X. Master James Carmichell was commanded by the Generall Assembly 1595, Sess. 9, in the book produced by Master Thomas Sandilands, to extract the generall acts forth of their books; and it is evident that these books are the same which he perused for that effect, because he hath marked therein the generall acts with a crosse, and hath designed the act by some short expression upon the margine, which is cognosced and known to be his hand-writ by famous and worthy persons; which is also manifest by the said Master James his hand and subscription, written with his own hand, in the last leafe of the said books; as also acknowledged in the said book, produced by Mr Thomas Sandilands, wherein the said Master James Carmichell granteth the receipt of these, with some other books of the Assemblee's.

XI. The registers produced are the registers of the Assembly, because, in anno 1586, the Assembly complaineth that their registers are mutilate; which hath relation to Richie's third book, which is lacerat and mutilate in divers places, without any interveening of blank paper, or any mention of hic deest.

XII. If these were not principall registers, the enemies of the puritie of God's worship would never have laboured to destroy the same; which notwithstanding they have done, as appeareth by the affixing and battering of a piece of paper upon the margine, anent a condition of the commission not to exceed the established discipline of this Kirk, subscribed by the clerk, book 3, p. 147. And the blotting out the certification of the excommunication against Bishop Adamson, book 4, p. 30, who, in his recantation, generally acknowledgeth the same; but which, without that recantation, cannot be presupponed to have been done, but by corrupt men of intention to corrupt the books, which were not necessary, if they were not principall registers.

XIII. In the Assembly 1586, the Church complained upon the Chancelour his retention of their registers, and desired they might be delivered to their clerk, which accordingly was done; as a memorandum before the beginning of the first book, bearing the redeliverie of these foure books to Master James Richie, clerk, proporteth, which clearly evinceth that these foure books are the registers of the Assembly.

XIV. The said fifth book and greatest volume is also marked on the margine with the hand-writ of the said Mr James Carmichell, (which is cognosced,) who was appointed to peruse the books of the Assembly, as said is, and would not have margined the same by vertue of that command, nor extracted the generall acts out of it, if it were not an approbation thereof as an authentick and famous book.

XV. The said fifth volume doth agree with the other foure books in all which is extant in them, and marketh the blanks, which are lacerate and riven out of the same; and compleateth all what is lacking in them.

XVI. In the Book of Discipline pertaining to Master James Carmichell, subscribed by himself and Master James Richie, there are sundry acts and passages quoted out of the said fifth great volume, saying, It is written in such a page of the book of Assembly, which agreeth in subject and quotations with the said fifth book, and cannot agree with any other; so that Master James Carmichell, reviser of the Assembly books, by their command, would not alledge that book, nor denominate the same a book of the Assembly, if it were not an authentick famous book.

XVII. Though the corrupt nature of man hath been tempted to falsifie particular evidents, yet it hath never been heard that any whole register hath ever been counterfeited; neither can it bee presupponed that any will attempt that high wickednesse, seeing the inducements answerable to that crime can hardly be presupposed.

XVIII. It is certain, and notour to all these who are intrusted with the keeping of the publick records of the kingdome, that the same are never subscribed by the clerk, but only written and filled up by servants, and most frequently by unknown hands, yet they and the extracts thereof make publick faith, and the same are uncontrovertedly authentick registers; and when the most publick registers of the kingdome shall be seen, and compared with these registers of the Assembly, it shall be found that these other registers of the most soveraigne judicatories ever unsubscribed, are more incorrect, oftner margined, scored, and interlined, made up by greater diversitie of unknown hand-writs, than these books of the Assembly, which, by special Providence, are preserved so entire, that, in the judgement of any man acquainted with registers, they will manifestly appear at the very sight to be true, famous, and authentick.

XIX. The fame and credit of ancient registers in this kingdome is so much revered, that if any extract be different or disconforme from the register, that extract, albeit subscribed by the person who, for the time, had been of greatest eminence in the trust of registers, will be rectified conforme to the register, and have no force, so far as it debordeth therefrom; although the registers be written with an obscure, unknown hand, and unsubscribed.

Act Sess. 12, December 4. The six late prtended Assemblies condemned.

Ancient the report of the committic for trying the six last pretended Assemblies, they produced in writ sundrie reasons clearing the unlawfulness and nullitie of these Assemblies, which were confirmed by the registers of the Assembly, the books of Presbyteries, the King's Majestie's own letters, and by the testimonie of divers old reverend ministers standing up in the Assembly, and verifying the truth thereof. The Assembly, with the universall consent of all, after the serious examination of the reasons against every one of these six pretended Assemblies apart, being often urged by the Moderatour to informe themselves throughly, that without doubting, and with a full perswasion of minde, they might give their voices, declared all these six Assemblies of Linlithgow, 1606 and 1608, Glasgow, 1610, Aberdeen, 1616, St Andrews, 1617, Perth, 1618; and every one of them, to have been from the beginning unfree, unlawfull, and null Assemblies, and never to have had, nor hereafter to have, any Ecclesiasticall authoritie, and their conclusions to have been and to bee of no force, vigour, nor efficacie; prohibited all defence and observance of them, and ordained the reasons of their nullitie to be insert in the books of the Assembly; whereof the tennour followeth:

Reasons annulling the pretended Assembly holden at Linlithgow, 1606.

I. From the indiction of it. It was indicted the 3d of December, to bee kept the 10th of December, and so there was no time given to the Presbyteries far distant, neither for election of Commissioners, nor for preparation to those who were to be sent in Commission. The shortnesse of the time of the indiction is proved by the Presbyterie books of Edinburgh, Perth, and Hadingtonn, &c.

II. From the want of a lawfull calling, to these who went to that meeting, seeing they were not at all elected by their Presbyteries, but were enjoyned to come by the King's letters. This also is proved by the foresaids books of the Presbyteries, and by his Majestie's letters.

III. From the nature of that meeting, which was only a private meeting or convention for consultation to be taken by some persons of sundry estates written for, as the King's letters and the Presbyterie books do acknowledge.

IV. From the power of these ministers who were present, their Presbyteries did limitate them, First, That they should give no suffrages in that meeting as a Generall Assembly. Secondly, That they agree to nothing that may any wayes be prejudiciall to the acts of the Generall Assemblies, or to the established discipline of the Kirk. Thirdly, That they should not agree to resolve or conclude any question, article, or mater whatsoever, the decision whereof is pertinent and proper to a free Generall Assembly. Fourthly, If any thing be concluded contrary thereunto, that they protest against it. These limitations are clear by the Presbyterie books.

V. The acts of this meeting were not insert in the book of Assemblies, as is evident by the register.

VI. The next pretended Assembly at Linlithgow, 1608, doth acknowledge the Assembly, whereof Master Patrick Galloway was Moderatour, to have been the last immediate Assembly preceeding it selfe, and that Assembly whereof he was Moderatour was the Assembly holden at Haly-rood-house, 1602; so they did not acknowledge that meeting at Linlithgow, 1606, for any Assembly at all. This is clear by the registers of the Assembly, 1608, in the entrie thereof.

Reasons for annulling the pretended Assembly at Linlithgow, 1608.

I. Manie of the voters in that pretended Assembly had no lawfull commission from the Kirk, to wit, forty-two noble men, officers of estate, counsellours, and barrons, also the bishops, contrare to the act of Dundie, 1597, and one of their caveats. The noble men were as commissioners from the King, the bishops had no commission at all from the Presbyteries, for every Presbyterie out of which they came had their full number of commissioners besides them, as the register of the Assemblies beareth.

II. In a lawfull Assembly there should be none but Commissioners from Presbyteries, Burghs, and Universities, and but three ministers at most, with one elder, Commissioners from every Presbyterie, according to the act made at Dundie, 1597. But in that pretended Assembly there were foure ministers from the severall Presbyteries of Edinburgh and Cowper, five from the Presbyterie of Arbroth, as the roll of the said pretended Assembly beareth; whereas there were no ruling elders sent from Presbyteries, according to the Book of Policie and act of Dundie.

Reasons for annulling the pretended Assembly at Glasgow, 1610.

I. The Commission of the pretended Commissioners to that meeting was null. 1. Because the election of them was not free, seeing they were nominate by the King's Letters, as the Presbyterie books of Edinburgh, Perth, and Hadingtoun, declare. And the Bishop of St Andrews, in his letter to some Presbyteries, required them to send such Commissioners as the King had nominate, assuring them that none other would be accepted. This the Bishop's letter, registrat in the Presbyterie books of Hadingtoun, doth cleare. 2. And whereas there were no ruling elders sent from the Presbyteries to that pretended Assembly, as the roll of Commissioners sheweth, yet there were moe ministers from sundrie severall Presbyteries then three, as five from Brechen, five from Arbroth, five from Kirkenbright, seven from the Presbytery of Argyll, foure from the Presbyterie of Cowper, foure from Linlithgow, foure from Pasley, foure from Hammiltoun, foure from Drumfreis, foure from Dunkell, as the register of that Assembly beareth.

II. There were thirtie voters of noblemen and barrons, beside the pretended Bishops, who had no commission from any Presbyterie. In the fourth Session of this pretended Assembly, it is plainly said, That the noble men and barrons came to it by the King's direction.

III. The voting of the commissioners was not free; for, by the King's letter to the Assembly, they were threatned, and it was declared that their consent was not needfull to any act to be made there: The King might doe it by his own power, yet they were allured to vote by a promise that their good service in so doing should be remembered and rewarded thereafter.

IV. The principall acts which were made were set down verbatim in the privie conference, which chiefly consisted of the King's Commissioners and pretended Bishops, and only read to be ratified in the Assembly.

V. Sundrie ministers then present doe now declare, that they knew the ministers who voted the wrong way to have received their present reward, and that money was largely dealt unto them.

Reasons for annulling the pretended Assembly at Aberdeen, 1616.

I. There was no election of a Moderatour; but that place usurped by the pretended Bishop of Saint Andrews, as the register beareth.

II. The indiction of that pretended Assembly was but twentie dayes before the holding of it; so that the Presbyteries and Burghes could not be prepared for sending their commissioners; which caused the absence of many Presbyteries and fourtie-foure Burghes.

III. There were twentie-five noblemen and gentlemen voters without commission from the Kirk. Mr William Struthers voted for the Presbyterie of Edinburgh, yet had no commission therefrom: The commission being given by that Presbyterie to other three, as the said commission, registrat in the books of the Presbytery, beareth; and whereas there should be but one commissioner from every burgh, except Edinburgh, to the Assembly, at this pretended Assembly there were two commissioners from Glasgow, two from Cowper, two from St Andrews; whereas there were no ruling elders having commission from their Presbyteries at that Assembly.

IV. When the acts of that pretended Assembly were written, the Bishop of St Andrews, with his own hand, did interline, adde, change, vitiate, direct to be extracted or not extracted as he pleased, as the scrolls themselves seen doe show; wherefore the clerk did not registrat the acts of that Assembly in the books of Assemblies, as may be easily seen by the blank in the register left for them remaining unfilled.

The nullitie of the pretended Assembly at Saint Andrews, 1617.

I. There is no mention of it in the register of the Assemblies, and so no warrand for their Commissions, their Moderatour, or Clerk.

II. The indictment of it was so unformall, that, as the scroll declareth, a great part of the Commissioners from Synods, Burrows, and gentlemen, would not be present.

III. The King's Majestie, in his Letter to Perth's Assembly, acknowledgeth it was but a meeting wherein disgrace was offered to his Majestie.

IV. The former corruptions of the foure preceeding Assemblies had their confluence in this and the subsequent Assembly.

Reasons for annulling the pretended Assembly holden at Perth, 1618.

I. The Assembly was indicted but twentie dayes before the holding of it; and all parties requisit received not advertisement, as appeareth by their absence. The untimeous indicting of it is cleared by Presbyterie books.

II. There was no election of the Moderatour, as was accustomed to be in lawfull Assemblies: The Register cleareth this.

III. No formall election of their new clerk.

IV. There were five whole dyocies absent, viz., Orkney, Cathnes, Rosse, Argyll, and Isles, and many Presbyteries had no commissioners there, as the Register of that pretended Assembly beareth.

V. There were nineteen noblemen and barrons, eleven bishops, that had no commission from the Kirk. Whereas the act for constitution of Assemblies ordaineth every burgh to have but one commissioner, except Edinburgh, which may have two, (Act at Dundie, 1597;) yet in that pretended Assemblie, Perth had three commissioners, Dundie had two, Glasgow had two, and St Andrews had two: Of the burghes there were thirtie-six absent, and for ruling elders, there were none at all with commission from their Presbyteries. All these things are cleared by the records of that pretended Assemblie.

VI. The commissioners from some Presbyteries exceeded their number prescribed in the Act at Dundie, 1597; for the Presbyterie of Arbroth were foure commissioners, and foure for the Presbyterie of Aughtercardour, besides these that were heard to vot having no commission at all, and some who had commission were rejected, and were not enrolled, but others put in their place without commission.

VII. The pretended Bishops did practise some of the articles to be concluded there before the pretended Assembly in Edinburgh, St Andrews, and other cathedrall churches, by keeping festivall dayes, kneeling at the communion. Thus their voices were prejudged by their practise of these articles before condemned by the Kirk, and therefore they should have been secluded from voicing.

VIII. In all lawfull Assemblies the voicing should be free, but in this pretended Assembly there were no free voicing; for the voicers were threatned to voice affirmative, under no lesse pain nor the wrath of authoritie, imprisonment, banishment, deprivation of ministers, and utter subversion of the state: Yea, it was plainly professed, that neither reasoning nor the number of voices should carie the matter away, which is qualified by the declaration of many honest, old, reverend brethren of the ministry now present.

IX. In all lawfull Assemblies, the grounds of proceeding were, and used to be, the Word of God, the Confession of Faith, and acts of former Generall Assemblies. But in this pretended Assembly, the ground of their proceeding in voicing was the King's commandment only, for so the question was stated: "Whether the five articles, in respect of his Majestie's commandement, should passe in act or not," as the records of that pretended Assembly beareth. Where it is declared, that for the reverence and respect which they bear unto his Majestie's royall commandements, they did agree to the foresaids articles.

X. Many other reasons, verifying the nullitie of all these Assemblies, were shoven and proven before the Assembly, which needeth not here to be insert.

Act Sess. 13, December 5, 1638. Against the unlawful Oathes of Intrants exacted by the Prelates.

The six Assemblies immediately preceeding, for most just and weightie reasons above specified, being found to be unlawfull and null from the beginning, the Assembly declareth the oathes and subscriptions exacted by the prelates of intrants in the ministerie all this time bypast (as without any pretext of warrand from the Kirk, so for obedience of the acts of these null Assemblies, and contrare to the ancient and laudable constitutions of this Kirk, which never have been nor can be lawfully repealed, but must stand in force) to be unlawfull, and no way obligatorie. And in like manner declareth, that the power of Presbyteries, and of Provinciaall and Generall Assemblies, have been unjustly suppressed, but never lawfully abrogate. And, therefore, that it hath been most lawfull unto them, notwithstanding any point unjustly objected by the Prelats to the contrare, to admit, suspend, or deprive ministers respective within their bounds, upon relevant complaints sufficiently proven; to choose their own Moderatours, and to execute all the parts of ecclesiasticall jurisdiction, according to their own limits appointed them by the Kirk.

Act Sess. 14, December 6, 1638. Condemning the Service Book, Book of Canons, Book of Ordination, and the High Commission.

I. The Assembly having diligently considered the Book of Common Prayer, lately obruded upon the reformed Kirk within this realme, both in respect of the manner of the introduction thereof, and in respect of the matter which it containeth, findeth that it hath been devised and brought in by the pretended prelats without direction from the Kirk, and pressed upon ministers without warrand from the Kirk, to be universally received as the only forme of divine service, under all highest paines, both civill and ecclesiasticall; and the book it self, beside the popish frame and forms in divine worship, to containe many popish errors and ceremonies, and the seeds of manifold and grosse superstition and idolatric. The Assembly, therefore, all in one voice, hath rejected and condemned, and by these presents doth reject and condemne the said book, not only as illegally introduced, but also as repugnant to the doctrine, discipline, and order of this reformed Kirk, to the Confession of Faith, constitutions of Generall Assemblies, and acts of Parliament establishing the true religion; and doth prohibite the use and practice thereof, and ordaines Presbyteries to proceed with the censure of the Kirk against all such as shall transgresse.

II. The Assembly also taking to their consideration the book of Cannons, and the manner how it hath been introduced, findeth that it hath been devised by the pretended prelats without warrand or direction from the Generall Assembly, and to establish a tyrannicall power in the persons of the pretended bishops over the worship of God, men's consciences, liberties, and goods; and to overthrow the whole discipline and government of the Generall and Synodall Assemblies, Presbyteries, and Sessions formerly established in our Kirk.

Therefore, the Assembly, all in one voice, hath rejected and condemned, and by these presents doth reject and condemne, the said book, as contrare to the Confession of our Faith, and repugnant to the established government, the Book of Discipline, and the acts and constitutions of our Kirk, prohibits the use and practise of the same; and ordains Presbyteries to proceed with the censure of the Kirk against all such as shall transgresse.

III. The Assembly, having considered the book of consecration and ordination, findeth it to have been framed by the prelats, to have been introduced and practised without warrand of authority, either civill or ecclesiasticall; and that it establisheth offices in God's house which are not warranded by the Word of God, and are repugnant to the discipline and constitutions of our Kirk; that it is an impediment to the entrie of fit and worthy men to the ministry, and to the discharge of their dutie after their entrie, conforme to the discipline of our Kirk. Therefore, the Assembly, all in one voice, hath rejected and condemned, and by these presents doe reject and condemne, the said book, and prohibits the use and practise of the same, and ordaines Presbyteries to proceed with the censure of the Kirk against all such as shall transgresse.

IV. The Generall Assembly, after due tryall, having found that the Court of High Commission hath been erected without the consent or procurement of the Kirk, or consent of the estates in Parliament, that it subverteth the jurisdiction and ordinarie judicatories and Assemblies of the Kirk, Sessions, Presbyteries, Provinciaall and Nationall Assemblies; that it is not regulate by lawes civill or ecclesiasticall, but at the discretion and arbitrement of the commissioners; that it giveth to ecclesiasticall persons the power of both the swords, and to persons meerly civill the power of the keys and Kirk censures. Therefore, the Assembly, all in one voice, hath disallowed and condemned, and by these presents doth disallow and condemne, the said court, as unlawfull in it selfe, and prejudiciall to the liberties of Christ's Kirk and kingdome, the King's honour in maintaining the established lawes and judicatories of the Kirk; and prohibits the use and practise of the same, and ordaines Presbyteries to proceed with the censures of the Kirk against all such as shall transgresse.

After the serious discussing of the severall processes in many Sessions, from Sess. 14, (which are in the Clerk's hands, and needeth not here to be insert,) the following sentences were solemnly pronounced, after sermon by the Moderatour, in the Assembly of Glasgow, Sess. 20, December 13, 1638.

Sentence of Deposition and Excommunication against Mr John Spottiswood, pretended Archbishop of St Andrews; Mr Patrick Lindsay, pretended Archbishop of Glasgow; Mr David Lindsay, pretended Bishop of Edinburgh; Mr Thomas Sidserfe, pretended Bishop of Galloway; Mr John Maxwell, pretended Bishop of Rosse; Mr Walter Whytfoord, pretended Bishop of Brechen.

The Generall Assembly having heard the lybels and complaints given in against the foresaids pretended bishops to the Presbyterie of Edinburgh, and sundry other Presbyteries within their pretended dyocies, and by the saids Presbyteries referred to the Assembly to be tryed; the saids pretended bishops being lawfully cited, oftentimes called, and their procuratour, Doctour Robert Hammiltoun, and not compearing, but declining and protesting against this Assembly, as is evident by their declinatour and protestation given in by the said Doctour Robert Hammiltoun, minister at Glasfoord; which, by the acts of Assembly, is censurable with summar excommunication; entered in consideration of the said declinatour, and finding the same not to be relevant, but, on the contrare, to be a displayed banner against the settled order and government of this Kirk; to be fraughted with insolent and disdainfull speeches, lies, and calumnies, against the lawfull members of this Assembly; proceeded to the cognition of the saids complaints and lybels against them; and, finding them guiltie of the breach of the cautions agreed upon in the Assembly holden at Montrose anno 1600, for restricting of the minister voter in Parliament from ineroaching upon the liberties and jurisdiction of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamie, and excommunication, specially for receiving of consecration to the office of Episcopacie, condemned by the Confession of Faith, and acts of this Kirk, as having no warrand nor fundament in the Word of God; and by vertue of this usurped power, and power of the high commision, pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God, and for sundrie other haynous offences and enormities, at length expressed and clearly proven in their processe, and for their refusall to underly the tryall of the reigning slander of sundrie other grosse transgressions and crymes laid to their charge: Therefore, the Assembly, moved with zeal to the glorie of God and purging of his Kirk, hath ordained the saids pretended bishops to be deposed, and by these presents doth depose them, not only of the office of Commissionarie to vote in Parliament, Councill, or Convention, in name of the Kirk, but also of all functions, whether of pretended Episcopall or ministeriall calling, declareth them infamous: And likewise ordaineth the saids pretended bishops to be excommunicate, and declared to be of these whom Christ commandeth to be holden by all and every one of the faithful as ethnicks and publicanes; and the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced by Mr Alexander Henderson, Moderatour, in face of the Assembly, in the High Kirk of Glasgow; and the execution of the sentence to be intimat in all the Kirks of Scotland, by the pastours of every particular congregation, as they will be answerable to their Presbyteries and Synods, or the next Generall Assembly, in case of the negligence of Presbyteries and Synods.

Sentence of Deposition and Excommunication against Mr Adam Ballantyne, pretended Bishop of Aberdeen, and Mr James Wedderburn, pretended Bishop of Dumblane.

The Generall Assembly, having heard the lybels and complaints given in against the foresaids pretended Bishops of Aberdeen and Dumblane, to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and sundry Presbyteries within their pretended dyocies, and by the saids Presbyteries referred to this Assembly to be tryed: The saids pretended Bishops being lawfully cited, often-times called, and not compearing, proceeded to the cognition of the complaints and lybels against them, and finding them guiltie of the breach of the cautions agreed upon in the Assembly holden at Montrose, anno 1600, for restricting the minister voter in Parliament from encroaching upon the liberties and jurisdictions of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamie, and excommunication, specially for receiving consecration to the office of Episcopacie, condemned by the Confession of Faith, and acts of this Kirk, as having no warrand nor fundament in the Word of God; and by vertue of this usurped power, and power of the high commission, pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God, and for sundry other haynous offences and enormities, at length expressed, and clearly proven in their proesse, and for their refusall to underly the tryall of the reigning slander of sundry other grosse transgressions and offences laid to their charge: Therefore, the Assembly, moved with zeal to the glorie of God and purging of the Kirk, hath ordained the saids pretended Bishops to be deposed, and by these presents doth depose them, not only of the office of Commissionary to vot in Parliament, Councell, or Convention, in name of the Kirk, but also of all functions, whether of pretended Episcopall or ministeriall calling, declareth them infamous: And likewise ordains the saids pretended Bishops to be excommunicate, and declared to be of these whom Christ commanded to be holden by all and every one of the faithfull as ethnicks and publicans, and the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced by Mr Alexander Henderson, Moderatour, in face of the Assembly, after sermon, in the High Kirk of Glasgow; and that the execution of the sentence be intimat in all the Kirks within this realme, by the pastours of every particular congregation, as they will be answerable to their Presbyteries and Synods, or the next Generall Assembly, in case of the negligence of Presbyteries and Synods.

Sentence of Deposition agaiust Master John Guthry, pretended Bishop of Murray; Mr John Grahame, pretended Bishop of Orkuay; Mr James Fairlie, pretended Bishop of Lismoir; Mr Neil Cambell, pretended Bishop of Isles.

The Generall Assembly having heard the lybels and complaints given in against the foresaids pretended Bishops, to the Presbyterie of Edinburgh, and sundry Presbyteries within their dyocies, and by the saids Presbyteries referred to this Assembly to be tryed: The saids pretended Bishops being lawfully cited, often-times called, and not compearing, proceeded to the cognition of the complaints and lybels against them; and finding them guiltie of the breach of the cautions agreed upon in the Assembly at Montrose, anno 1600, for restricting of the minister voter in Parliament from ineroaching upon the liberties and jurisdictions of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamie, and excommunication; and especially for receiving consecration to the office of Episcopacie condemned by the Confession of Faith, and acts of this Kirk, as having no warrand nor fundament in the Word of God, and by vertue of this usurped power, and power of the high commission, pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God; and for their refusall to underly the tryall of the reigning slander of sundrie other grosse transgressions and offences laid to their charge: Therefore, the Assembly, moved with zeal to the glorie of God and purging of this Kirk, ordaines the saids pretended Bishops to be deposed, and by these presents doth depose them, not only of the office of Commissionarie to vote in Parliament, Councel, or Convention, in name of the Kirk, but also of all functions, whether of pretended Episcopall or ministeriall calling: And likewise, in case they acknowledge not this Assembly, reverence not the constitutions thereof, and obey not the sentence, and make not their repentance, conforme to the order prescribed by this Assembly, ordaines them to be excommunicated, and declared to be of these whom Christ commandeth to be holden by all and every one of the faithfull as ethnicks and publicanes; and the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced upon their refusall, in the Kirks appointed, by any of these who are particularly named, to have the charge of trying their repentance or impenitencie, and that the execution of this sentence be intimate in all the Kirks within this realme, by the pastours of every particular congregation, as they will be answerable to their Presbyteries and Synods, or the next Generall Assembly, in case of negligence of the Presbyteries and Synods.

Sentence of Deposition against Maister Alexander Lindsay, pretended Bishop of Dunkell.

The Generall Assembly having heard the complaint and lybel given in against Mr Alexander Lindsay, pretended Bishop of Dunkell, to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and sundry Presbyteries of his dyocie, and by the Presbyteries referred to this Assembly to be tryed, the said pretended Bishop being lawfully cited, often-times called, and not compearing, but by a letter of excuse submitting himself to the Assembly, proceeded to the cognition of the complaint and lybell it selfe against him, and finding him guiltie of the breach of the cautions agreed upon in the Assembly holden at Montrose, anno 1600, for restricting the minister voter in Parliament from encroaching upon the liberties and jurisdictions of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamie, and excommunication, especially for receiving consecration to the office of Episcopacie, condemned by the Confession of Faith and acts of this Kirk, as having no warrand nor fundament in the Word of God, and by vertue of this usurped power, and power of the high commission, pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God: Therefore, the Assembly, moved with zeal to the glory of God and purging of this Kirk, hath ordained the said Mr Alexander to be deposed, and by these presents deposeth him, from the pretended Episcopall function, and from the office of Commissionarie to vote in Parliament, Councell, or Convention, in name of the Kirk, and doth suspend him from all ministeriall function: And providing he acknowledge this Assembly, reverence the constitutions of it, and obey this sentence, and make his repentance conforme to the order prescribed, continueth him in the ministerie of St Madoze: And, likewise, if he acknowledge not this Assembly, reverence not the constitutions of it, and obey not the sentence, and make his repentance conforme to the order prescribed by this Assembly, ordains him to be excommunicat, and declared to bee one of those whom Christ commandeth to bee holden by all and every one of the faithfull as an ethnick and publicane; and the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced, upon his refusall, in the kirks appointed, by one of these who are particularly named to have the charge of trying his repentance or impenitencie; and that the execution of this sentence be intimate in all the kirks within this realme by the pastours of every particular congregation, as they will be answerable to their Presbyteries and Synods, or the next Generall Assembly, in case of the negligence of Presbyteries and Synods.

Sentence of Deposition against Master John Abernethie, pretended Bishop of Cathnes.

The Generall Assembly having heard the lybell and complaint given in against Mr John Abernethie, pretended Bishop of Cathnes, to the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and sundry Presbyteries within his dyocie, and by the saids Presbyteries referred to this Assembly to be tryed, the said pretended Bishop being lawfully cited, often-times called, and not compearing, but by his letter of excuse upon his sicknesse, proceeded to the cognition of the complaint and lybell it selfe against him, and finding him guiltie of the breach of the cautions agreed upon in the Assembly holden at Montrose, anno 1600, for restricting the minister voter in Parliament from encroaching upon the liberties and jurisdictions of this Kirk, which was set down with certification of deposition, infamie, and excommunication, specially for receiving consecration to the office of Episcopacie, condemned by the Confession of Faith and acts of this Kirk, as having no warrand nor fundament in the Word of God, and by vertue of his usurped power, and power of the high commission, pressing the Kirk with novations in the worship of God: Therefore, the Assembly, moved with zeal to the glorie of God and purging of this Kirk, hath ordained the said Mr John to be deposed, and by these presents deposeth him, from the pretended Episcopall function, and from the office of Commissionary to vote in Parliament, Councell, or Convention, in name of the Kirk, and doth suspend him from the ministeriall function: And providing he acknowledge this Assembly, reverence the constitutions of it, and obey the sentence, and make his repentance conforme to the order prescribed by this Assembly, will admit him to the ministerie of a particular flock : And, likewise, in case he acknowledge not this Assembly, reverence not the constitutions of it, and make his repentance conforme to the order prescribed by this Assembly, ordains him to be excommunicate, and declared to be one of these whom Christ commandeth to bee holden by all and every one of the faithfull as an ethnick and publicane ; and the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced, upon his refusall, in the kirks appointed, by one of these who are particularly named to have this charge of trying his repentance or impenitencie ; and that the execution of this sentence be intimat in all the kirks within this realme, by the pastours of every particular congregation, as they will be answerable to their Presbyteries and Synods, or the next Generall Assembly, in case of the negligence of Presbyteries and Synods.

Act of the Assembly at Glusgow, Sess. 16, December 8, 1638, declaring Episcopacie to have been abjured by the Confession of Faith, 1580, and to be removed out of this Kirk.

The Assembly, taking to their most grave and serious consideration, first, The unspeakable goodnesse and great mercy of God, manifested to this nation, in that so necessarie, so difficult, and so excellent and divine work of reformation, which was at last brought to such perfection that this Kirk was reformed, not only in doctrine and worship, but also, after many conferences and publick reasonings, in divers nationall Assemblies, joynd with solemne humiliations and prayers to God, the discipline and government of the Kirk, as the hedge and guard of the doctrine and worship, was prescribed according to the rule of God's Word, in the Book of Policie and Discipline, agreed upon in the Assembly 1578, and insert in the register 1581, established by the acts of Assemblies, by the Confession of Faith, sworn and subscribed, at the direction of the Assembly, and by continuall practise of this Kirk. Secondly, That by men's seeking their own things, and not the things of Jesus Christ, divers novations have been introdneed, to the great disturbance of this Kirk, so firmly once compacted, and to the endangering of religion, and many grosse evils obruded, to the utter undoing of the work of reformation, and change of the whole forme of worship and face of this Kirk. Thirdly, That all his Majestie's subjects, both ecclesiasticall and civil, being, without consent of the Kirk, commanded to receive with reverence a new Book of Common Prayer, as the only forme to be used in God's publick worship, and the contraveners to be condignely censured and punished, and after many supplications and complaints, knowing no other way for the preservation of religion, were moved by God, and drawne by necessitie, to renew the Nationall Covenant of this Kirk and kingdome, which the Lord since hath blessed from heaven, and to subscribe the Confession of Faith, with an application thereof, abjuring the great evils wherewith they were now pressed, and suspending the practise of all novations formerly introduced, till they should bee tryed in a free Generall Assembly. Lastly, That some of his Majestie's subjects, of sundrie ranks, have, by his Majestie's commandement, subscribed and renewed the Confession of Faith, without the former application, and that both the one and the other subscribers have subscribed the said Confession of Faith in this year, as it was professed, and according to the meaning that it had in this kingdome when it was first subscribed, 1581, and afterward ; the Assembly, therefore, both by the subscription of his Majestie's High Commissioner, and of the Lords of Secret Council, September 22, 1638, and by the acts of Councel, of the date foresaid, bearing that they subscribed the said Confession, and ordaining all his Majestie's liedges to subscribe the same, according to the foresaid date and tennour, and as it was then professed within this kingdome ; as likewise, by the protestation of some of the Senatours of the Colledge of Justice, when they were required to subscribe, and by the many doubtings of his Majestie's good subjects, especially because the subscribers of the Confession, in February 1638, are bound to suspend the approbation of the corruptions of the government of the Kirk till they be tryed in a free Generall Assembly ; finding it proper for them, and most necessary and incumbent to them, to give out the true meaning thereof, as it was at first professed, that all his Majestie's subjects, in a matter so important as is the publick Confession of Faith, so solemnly sworn and subscribed, may be of one minde and one heart, and have full satisfaction to all their doubts, and that the posteritie afterward may be fully persuaded of the true meaning thereof, after earnest calling upon the name of God, so religiously attested in the said Confession, have entered into a diligent search of the registers of the Kirk, and books of the Generall Assembly, which the greatest part of the Assembly had not seen before, and which, by the speiall providence of God, were preserved, brought to their hands, and publickly acknowledged to bee authentick, and have found that in the latter Confession of the Kirk of Scotland: We professe, that we deteste all traditions brought into the Kirk without or against the Word of God, and doctrine of this reformed Kirk. Next, we abhorre and deteste all contrarie religion and doctrine, but chiefly all kinde of Papistry, in generall and particuler heads, as they were then damned and confuted by the Word of God and Kirk of Scotland, when the said Confession was sworn and subscribed, anno 1580 and 1581, 1590 and 1591. Thirdly, That we deteste the Roman Antichrist his worldly monarchie and wicked hierarchie. Fourthly, That we joyn ourselves to this reformed Kirk in doctrine, faith, religion, and discipline, promising and swearing, by the great name of God, that we shall continue in the doctrine and discipline of this Kirk, and defend the same, according to our vocation and power, all the dayes of our life.

But so it is that Episcopall government is abhorred and detested, and the government by ministers and elders, in Assemblies, Generall and Provinciall, and Presbyteries, was sworn to and subscribed in subscribing that Confession, and ought to be holden by us, if we adhere to the meaning of the Kirk when that Confession was framed, sworn to, and subscribed; unto which we are obliged by the nationall oath and subscription of this Kirk, as is evident by the acts of Generall Assemblies, agreed upon both before, at, and after the swearing and subscribing of the said Confession, in the years above mentioned, and the Book of Policie, agreed upon in the Assembly which was holden at Edinburgh, the twentie-foure of April and twentie-foure of October, anno 1578, insert in the register of the Kirk, by ordinance of the Assembly holden at Glasgow, 1581, and to be subscribed by all ministers that then did bear, or thereafter were to bear, office in this Kirk, by ordinance of the Assembly, holden the fourth of August at Edinburgh, 1590, and at Edinburgh, the second of July, 1591, but specially in the 2d, 3d, 4th, 6th, 7th, and 11th chapters of the said book.

The bishops being tollerat from the year 1572 till the Assembly holden in August 1575, and all this time the Assembly being wearied with complaints made against them, did enter in search of the office itselke, and did agree in this, that the name of a bishop is common to every one of them that hath a particular flock, over which he hath a particular charge, as well to preach the word as to minister the sacraments.

At the next Assembly, which was holden in April 1576, such bishops were censured as had not taken them to a particular flock. In the Generall Assembly convened in April, the year of God 1578, Sess. 4, intimation was made as followeth:—

“For so much as the heads of the policie being concluded and agreed upon in the last Assembly, by the most part of the brethren, certain of the brethren had some difficulty in the head de Diaconatu, whereupon farther reasoning was reserved to this Assembly; it is therefore required, if any of the brethren have any reasonable doubt or argument to propone, that he be ready the morrow, and then shall be heard and resolved.” In the 6th Sess. April 26, according to the ordinance made the day before, all persons that had any doubt or argument to propone were required to propone the same; but none offered to propone any argument on the contrare.

In the Assembly holden at Edinburgh in October 1578, it was shoven by the Moderatour thereof to the noblemen who were present, viz., my Lord Chancelour, the Earle of Montrose, my Lord Seaton, and my Lord Lindsay, “what care and study the Assembly had taken to entertain and keep the puritie of the sincere Word of God, unmixt with the inventions of their own heads, and to preserve it to the posteritie hereafter; and seeing that the true religion is not able to continue nor endure long, without a good discipline and policie, in that part also have they employed their wit and studie, and drawn forth, out of the pure fountain of God's Word, such a discipline as is meet to remain in the Kirk."

In the same Assembly, the special corruptions were set down, which they craved such of the bishops as would submit themselves to the Assembly to remove, with promise, that if the Generall Assembly shall finde farther corruptions in the said estate than hitherto are expressed, that they be content to be reformed by the said Assembly, according to the Word of God, when they shall be required thereto. "First, That they be content to bee pastors and ministers of one flock; that they usurpe no criminall jurisdiction; that they vote not in Parliament in name of the Kirk, without commission from the Kirk; that they take not up, for the maintenance of their ambition and riotousnesse, the emoluments of the Kirk, which may sustain many pastours, the schools, and the poore, but be content with reasonable livings according to their office; that they claim not to themselves the titles of lords temporall, neither usurpe temporall jurisdictions, whereby they are abstracted from their office; that they empyre not above the particular elderships, but be subject to the same; that they usurpe not the power of the Presbyteries."

The question being proponed by the Synod of Louthian, in the Assembly holden in July 1579, anent a generall order to be taken for erecting of Presbyteries in places where publick exercise is used, untill the time the policie of the Kirk be established by a law, it is answered, "The exercise may be judged to be a Presbyterie." In the Assembly holden at Dundie, in July 1580, Sess. 4, the office of a bishop was abolished by a particular act, as appeareth by the tennour of the act following:—

"For so much as the office of a bishop, as it is now used and commonly taken within this realme, hath no sure warrand, authoritie, nor good ground in the Scriptures, but is brought in by the foly and corruptions of man's inventions, to the great overthrow of the Kirk of God, the whole Assembly of the Kirk, in one voice, after libertie given to all men to reason in the matter, none opponing himself in defending the said pretended office, findeth and declareth the said pretended office, used and termed as is above said, unlawfull in the selfe, as having neither foundation, ground, nor warrand, in the Word of God, and ordaineth that all such persons as brook, or shall brook hereafter, the said office, shall be charged simply to dimit, quite, and leave off the same, as an office whereunto they are not called of God; and such like, to desist and cease from all preaching, ministration of the sacraments, or using any way the office of pastours, while they receive de novo admission from the Generall Assembly, under the pain of excommunication, to be used against them, wherein if they be found disobedient, or contradict this act in any point, the sentence of excommunication, after due admonition, to be execute against them."

In the same Assembly, holden anno 1580, Sess. 10, this article was appointed to be proponed to the King and Council, that the Book of Policie might be established by an act of Privie Council, while a Parliament be holden, at which it might be confirmed by a law.

The extent of the act made at Dundie was interpreted and explained in the Assembly holden at Glasgow, in April 1581, Sess. 6, as followeth:—

"Anent the act made in the Assembly holden at Dundie, against bishops, because some difficultie appeared to some brethren to arise out of the word [office] contained in the said act, what should be meant thereby, the Assembly, consisting, for the most part, of such as voted, and were present in the Assembly at Dundie, to take away the said difficultie, resolving upon the true meaning and understanding of the said act, declare that they meant wholly to condemne the whole estate of bishops, as they are now in Scotland, and that the same was the determination and conclusion of the Assembly at this time, because some brethren doubted whether the former act was to be understood of the spirituall function only, and others alledged that the whole office of a bishop, as it was used, was damnable, and that by the said act the bishops should be charged to dimit the same; this Assembly declareth that they meant wholly to condemne the whole estate of bishops, as they were then in Scotland, and that this was the meaning of the Assembly at that time."

The King's Commissioner presented to this Assembly the Confession of Faith, subscribed by the King and his household not long before, together with a plot of the Presbyteries, to be erected, which is registrate in the books of the Assembly, with a letter to be directed from his Majestic to the noblemen and gentlemen of the countrey, for the erection of Presbyteries, consisting of pastours and elders, and dissolution of prelacies, with an offer to set forward the policie untill it were established by Parliament. The King's letter, subscribed by his hand, to the noblemen and gentlemen, was read in open audience of the whole Assembly.

This Assembly ordained the Book of Policie to be insert in the register, by the act following:—

“For as much as travels have been taken in the framing of the Policie of the Kirk, and diverse suits have been made to the magistrat for the approbation thereof, which yet have not taken the happie effect which good men would wish, yet that the posteritie may judge well of the present age, and of the meaning of the Kirk, the Assembly hath concluded, that the Book of Policie, agreed to in diverse Assemblies before, should be registrat in the acts of the Kirk, and remaine therein ad perpetuam rei memoriam; and the coppies thereof to be taken to every Presbytery; of which book the tennour followeth,” &c.

Immediatly after the inserting of the Book of Policie, called there the Book of Discipline, the Assembly ordained that the Confession of Faith be subscribed, as followeth:—

“Anent the Confession of Faith lately set forth by the King's Majestic, and subscribed by his highnesse, the Assembly, in one voice, acknowledgeth the said Confession to be a true, christian, and faithfull Confession, to bee agreed unto by such as truly professe Christ, and have a care of religion; and the tennour thereof to be followed out efoldly as the samine is laid out in the said proclamation,” wherein that discipline is sworn to.

In the Generall Assembly, holden at Edinburgh in October, 1581, Sess. 10, Mr Robert Montgomery is accused for teaching that discipline is a thing indifferent. Sess. 23, the Assembly gave commission to the Presbyterie of Stirling to charge Mr Robert Montgomerie to continue in the ministerie of Stirling, and not to meddle with any other office or function of the Kirk; namely, in aspyring to the Bishoprick of Glasgow, against the Word of God and acts of the Kirk, under the pain of excommunication.

In the same Assembly, it is acknowledged that the estate of bishops is condemned by the Kirk; commission for erection of moe Presbyteries was renewed; and a new ordinance made for subscribing the Confession of Faith, and to proceed against whatsoever persons that would not acknowledge and subscribe the same.

In the Assembly, holden in April, 1582, there was a new commission for erection of Presbyteries where none was as yet erected. Mr Robert Montgomerie, pretending to be Bishop of Glasgow, was ordained to be deposed and excommunicat, except hee gave evident tokens of repentance, and promise to superseed; which he did not; and therefore he was excommunicat shortly after, according to the ordinance of this Assembly.

In the Generall Assembly, holden at Edinburgh, 1582, the Generall Assembly gave commission to some Presbyteries to try and censure such as were called bishops, for the great slander arising by their impunitie. Commission was given at this Assembly to present some articles to the council and estates, for approving and establishing, by their authoritie, the Presbyteries, the Synodall and Generall Assemblies. In the 19th Sess. the Assembly declared that no bishop may sit upon the counceill in name of the Kirk.

In the Assembly, holden anno 1586, these two articles were agreed upon:—First, “It is found that all such as the Scripture appointeth governours of the Kirk, to wit, pastours, doctours, and elders, may convene to the Generall Assemblies, and vote in ecclesiasticall matters. Secondly, There are foure office-bearers set down to us by the Scriptures; to wit, pastours, doctours, elders, and deacons; and the name of bishop ought not to be taken as it hath been in time of Papistrie, but is common to all pastours and ministers.”

In the Assembly holden anno 1587, Sess. 8, It was ordained that the admission of Mr Robert Montgomerie by the Presbyterie of Glasgow, suppose to the temporalitie of the bishoprick only, be undone and annulled with all possible diligence, to the effect slander might be removed from the Kirk. In Sess. 15, Mr Robert Pont shewed the King's presentation to the Bishoprick of Cathnes, and desired the judgement of the Assembly. The Assembly, in their letter to the King's Majestic, declared that they judged the said Mr Robert to be a bishop already, according to the doctrine of St Paul: But as to that corrupt estate or office of these who have been termed bishops heretofore, they found it not agreeable to the Word of God, and that it hath been damned in diverse Assemblies before.

In the instructions given to such as were appointed to wait upon the Parliament, it was ordained in the same Assembly, Sess. 17, That they be carefull that nothing be admitted prejudiciall to the liberties of this Kirk, as it was concluded according to the Word of God in the Generall Assemblies preceeding the year 1584, but precisely to seek the same to be ratified in the Assembly holden in March 1589, where the articles were made for subscribing the Confession of Faith with the generall band, it was ordained as followeth:—

“For so much as the neighbour Kirk in England is understood to be heavily troubled, for maintaining of the true discipline and government; whose grieves ought to move us: Therefore the Presbytery of Edinburgh was ordained to comfort the said Kirk in the said matter.”

In the Assembly holden 1590, when the Confession of Faith was subscribed universally de novo, a ratification of the liberties of the Kirk, in her jurisdiction, discipline, Presbyteries, Synods, and Generall Assemblies, and an abrogation of all things contrarie thereunto, was ordained to be sought both of the Council and Parliament. In the next session it was ordained that the Book of Discipline, specially the controverted heads, should be subscribed by all Ministers that bear, or hereafter was to bear, office in this Kirk, and that they be charged by the Presbyteries, under the pain of excommunication: Seeing the Word of God cannot be kept in sincerity, unless the holy discipline be preserved. The Presbyteries were ordained to get a coppie under the clerk's hand; there were sundrie coppies subscribed by the Ministers in the Presbyteries yet extant, as Hadingtoun, Dumfermling, &c., produced before the Assembly.

In the Assembly 1591, Sess. 4, the former act anent the subscription to the Book of Policie is renewed, and a penaltie imposed upon the Moderatour, in case it be not put in execution.

In the Assembly, 22d May 1592, Sess. 2, these articles were drawn up:—“That the acts of parliament made 1584, against the discipline, libertie, and authoritie of the Kirk, be annulled, and the samine discipline, whereof the Kirk hath been in practise, precisely ratified. That abbots, pryors, and other prelates pretending the title of the Kirk, be not suffered in time comming.” In the 11 Session the number of the presbyteries were given up, and insert in the Parliament immediatly following. The 5th of June 1592, The libertie, discipline, and jurisdiction of the true Kirk, in her Sessions, Presbyteries, Synodall and Generall Assemblies, is largely ratified, as the samine was used and exercised within this realme, and all the acts contrary thereto abrogat: The King's prerogative declared not to be prejudiciall to the same priviledges grounded upon the Word of God, the former commissions to bishops, 1584, rescinded, and all ecclesiastical matters subjected to presbyteries, according to the discipline of this Kirk. Anno 1595, The Book of Policie, with other acts, is ratified, and ordained to be printed.

It was also cleared that Episcopacie was condemned in these words of the Confession, HIS WICKED HIERARCHIE. For the Popish Hierarchie doth consist of Bishops, Presbyters, and Deacons, that is, baptizing and preaching Deacons; for so it is determined in the Council of Trent, in the 4 chapter, De sacramento ordinis, cant. 6. Si quis dixerit in ecclesia Catholica non esse hierarchiam divina ordinatione institutam, quæ constat ex episcopis presbyteris et ministris, anathema sit.* Bellarmine, likewise, in his book

* Censura propositionum quarundam ex Hibernia delatarum per sacram facultatem theologiæ Parisiensis facta.

De Clericis, cap. 11, saith, That there are three Hierarchies in the militant Kirk: The first of Bishops, the second of Priests, the third of Deacons, and that the deacons are also princes, if they be compared with the people. This proposition following, Hierarchia ecclesiastica constat ex pontifice, cardinalibus, archiepiscopis, episcopis, et regularibus, was censured by the Facultie of Theologie in the University at Paris as followeth, In ista prima propositione enumeratio membrorum hierarchie ecclesiasticæ seu sacri principatus, divina ordinatione instituti est manea et redundans atque, inducens in errorem contrarium determinationi sacre Synodi Tridentinæ: The proposition was defective, because it pretermitted the presbyters and deacons; it was censured as redundant, because it made the hierarchie to consist of the Pope, Cardinals, Archbishops, and Regulars; the Pope is not within the hierarchie; primats, metropolitans, and archbishops, but as they are bishops. Furthermore, this hierarchie is distinguished in the Confession from the Pope's monarchie. And howbeit this hierarchie be called the Antichrist's Hierarchie, yet it is not to distinguish betwixt the hierarchie in the Popish Kirk and any other as lawfull: But the hierarchie, wheresoever it is, is called his, as the rest of the Popish corruptions are called his: To wit, Invocation of Saints, Canonization of Saints, Dedication of Altars, &c., are called his, not that there is another lawfull canonization, invocation, or dedication of altars; whatsoever corruption was in the Kirk, either in doctrine, worship, or government, since the mystery of iniquitie began to work, and is retained and maintained by the Pope, and obtruded upon the Kirk by his authority, are his. A passage also out of the history of the Councell of Trent was alledged, where it is related that the Councell would not define the hierarchie by the seven orders: We have in our Confession of Faith the manifold orders set apart and distinguished from the hierarchie, but as it is set down in the canon above cited: We have in the Book of Policie, or Second Booke of Discipline, in the end of the second chapter, this conclusion agreed upon. Therefore, all the ambitious titles invented in the kingdom of Antichrist, and in his usurped HIERARCHIE, which are not of one of these four sorts, to wit, Pastours, Doctours, Elders, and Deacons, together with the offices depending thereupon, in one word ought to be rejected.

All which and many other warrands being publickly read, and particularly at great length examined, and all objections answered in face of the Assembly, all the members of the Assembly being many times desired and required to propone their doubts and scruples, and every one being heard to the full, and, after much agitation, as fully satisfied, the Moderatour at last exhorting every one to declare his minde, did put the matter to voicing in these termes: Whether, according to the Confession of Faith, as it was professed in the year 1580, 1581, and 1590, there be any other Bishop but a pastour of a particular flock, having no preheminance nor power over his brethren, and whether by that Confession, as it was then professed, all other Episcopacie is abjured, and ought to bee removed out of this Kirk. The whole Assembly most unanimously, without contradiction of any one, (and with the hesitation of one allanerly,) professing full perswasion of minde, did voice that all Episcopacie different from that of a pastour over a particular flock, was abjured in this Kirk, and to be removed out of it. And therefore prohibites, under ecclesiastical censure, any to usurpe, accept, defend, or obey the pretended authority thereof in time comming.

Act Sess. 17, December 10, 1638. The Assembly at Glasgow declaring the Five Articles of Perth to have been abjured, and to be removed.

The Assembly remembering the uniformity of worship which was in this Kirk before the Articles of Perth, the great rent which entered at that time, and hath continued since, with the lamentable effects that it hath produced, both against pastours and professors, the unlawfulness and nullitie of Perth Assembly already declared by this Assembly, and that in the necessarie renewing of the Confession of Faith in February 1638, the practise of novations introduced in the worship of God was suspended till they should be determined in a free Generall Assembly; and that in the same year, at his Majestie's command, some had subscribed the Confession of Faith as it was professed when it was first subscribed: For these causes, the Assembly entered into a diligent tryall of the foresaid articles, whether they be contrare to the Confession of Faith as it was meant and professed in the year 1580, 1581, 1590, and 1591.

And findeth that first in generall, in the Confession of Faith we professe, “ We willingly agree in our consciences to the forme of religion, of a long time openly professed by the King’s Majestie and whole body of this realme, in all points, as unto God’s undoubted truth and verity, grounded only upon his written Word, and therefore abhor and deteste all contrary religion and doctrine, but chiefly all kinde of papistrie in generall and particular heads, even as they were then damned and confuted by the Word of God and Kirk of Scotland, and in speciall, the Romane Antichrist, his five bastard sacraments, with all rites, ceremonies, and false doctrine, added to the ministration of the true sacraments without the Word of God, his cruel judgement against infants departing without the sacrament, his absolute necessitie of baptisme; and, finally, we deteste all his vain allegories, rites, signes, and traditions brought into the Kirk, without or against the Word of God, and doctrine of this true reformed Kirk, to the which we joyne ourselves willingly in doctrine, faith, religion, discipline, and use of the holy sacraments, as lively members of the same in Christ our Head, promising and swearing,” &c. And that these five articles are contrarie to the religion then professed, were confuted by the Word of God and Kirk of Scotland, or are rites and ceremonies added to the ministration of the true sacraments, without the Word of God, or nourish the Popish judgement against infants departing without the sacrament, or absolute necessitie of baptisme, or rites, signes, and traditions brought into the Kirk, without or against the Word of God, and doctrine of this true reformed Kirk.

And next, in particular, concerning festivall dayes, findeth that, in the explication of the first head of the First Book of Discipline, it was thought good that the feasts of Christmas, Circumcision, Epiphanie, with the feasts of the Apostles, Martyres, and Virgine Mary, bee utterly abolished, because they are neither commanded nor warranted by Scripture, and that such as observe them be punished by civill magistrats. Here utter abolition is craved, and not reformation of abuses only; and that because the observation of such feasts hath no warrant from the Word of God. In the Generall Assembly, holden at Edinburgh, anno 1566, the large Confession of Helvetia was approved, but with speciall exception against the same five dayes, which are now urged upon us. It was not then the popish observation only, with the popish opinion of worship and merit, which was disallowed, (for so the reformed Kirk in Helvetia did not observe them,) but simpliciter all observation. For this end was read a letter in Latine, sent at that time by some of our divines to certaine divines in these parts to this purpose. In the Assembly holden 1575, in August, complaint was made against the ministers and readers beside Aberdene, because they assembled the people to preaching and prayers upon certane festivall dayes, so that preaching and prayers upon festivall dayes was judged rebukable. It was ordained likewise, that complaint bee made to the Regent upon the town of Drumfreis, for urging and convoying a reader to the Kirk, with tabret and whistle, to read prayers, all the holy dayes of Christmas, upon the refusall of their own reader. Among the articles directed by this Assembly to the Regent, it was craved that all holy dayes heretofore kepted holy, beside the Lord’s day, such as Yoole day and saints’ dayes, and such others, may bee abolished, and a certain penaltie appointed for banqueting, playing, feasting upon these dayes. In the Assembly holden in April, anno 1577, it was ordained that the visitors, with the advice of the Synodall Assembly, should admonish ministers preaching or ministrating the Communion at Easter, or Christmas, or other like superstitious times, or readers reading, to desist under the paine of deprivation. In the ninth head of the First Book of Discipline, the reason is set down against Easter Communion. “ Your honours are not ignorant how supersticiously the people run to that action at Pascheven; as if the time gave vertue to the sacrament, and how the rest of the whole year they are carelesse and negligent, as if it appertained not to them, but at that time only.” And for this reason, other times were appointed by that book for that holy action. In the Assembly holden 1596, begun in March 1595, at which time the covenant was renewed, superstition and idolatric breaking forth in observing festivall dayes, setting out of bone-fires, singing carols, are reakedon amongst the corruptions which were to be amended; and the pulpits did sound from time to time against all shew of observing any festivall day whatsoever, except the Lord’s day.

Concerning kneeling at the Communion, findeth that in the Confession of Faith

prefixed before the Psalmes, and approved by our Kirk in the very beginning of the Reformation, we have these words—"Neither in the ministration of the Sacraments must we follow men, but as Christ himself hath ordained, so must they be ministred." In the large Confession of Faith, chap. 23, it is required as necessary, for the right ministration of the Sacraments, that they bee ministred in such elements, and in such sort as God hath appointed, and that men have adulterate the Sacraments with their own inventions, so that no part of Christ's action abideth in the originall puritie. The judgement of our reformers, who drew up the large Confession, was by cleare evidents shewed to be contrary to this gesture in the act of receiving the Sacrament. In the order of celebrating the Lord's Supper, prefixed before the Psalmes in meeter, "sitting and distributing by the communicants" are joined; as likewise by the second head of the First Book of Discipline, as nearest to Christ's own action, and to his perfect praetise, and most convenient to that holy action, and all inventions devised by man are condemned, as alterations and accusations of Christ's perfect ordinance. Ministers were enjoyned by act of Assembly, in December 1562, to observe the order of Geneva, that is, the English Kirk at Geneva, (where Master Knox had been sometime minister,) in the ministration of the Sacraments. This act was renewed in the Assembly holden in December 1564, where ministers are referred to the order set down before the Psalmes for ministration of the Sacraments; which is all one with the former, for that was the order of the English Kirk at Geneva.

In the Parliament holden anno 1567, it was declared that whosoever did not participate of the Sacraments, as they were then publickly administrat in this reformed Kirk, ought not to be reputed members of this Kirk. The act for the King's oath at his coronation, to maintain the due administration of the Sacraments, as they were then ministred, anno 1567, was ratified anno 1581; at which time the short Confession, adhering to the use of the Sacraments in the Kirk of Scotland, was subscribed, as also, anno 1592, after the second subscription to the Confession of Faith. In the Parliament 1572, an act was made against such as did not participat of the Sacraments as they were then rightly ministred; but the gesture of kneeling in the act of receiving putteth the ministration of the Sacrament used in this Kirk out of frame, whereby it is clear that whatsoever gesture or rite cannot stand with the administration of the Sacraments as they were then ministred, and were ministred ever since the reformation till the year 1618, must bee condemned by our Kirk, as a rite added to the true ministration of the Sacraments without the Word of God, and as a rite or tradition brought in without or against the Word of God, or doctrine of this reformed Kirk.

Concerning Confirmation, the Assembly findeth it to be comprehended in the clause of the Confession, where the five bastard sacraments are condemned. And seeing Episcopacie is condemned, imposition of hands by Bishops falleth to the ground. And in all the acts for catechising or examination before admission to the communion, no inkling of imposition of hands.

Concerning the administration of the Sacraments in private places, or private baptisme and private communion, findeth that, in the Book of Common Order set down before the Psalmes, it is said, "that the Sacraments are not ordained of God to be used in private corners, as charmers and socerers use to doe, but left to the congregation." In the Assembly holden at Edinburgh in October, anno 1581, the same year and Assembly that the Confession of Faith was subscribed, it was ordained, "that the Sacraments be not administrated in private houses, but solemnly according to good order hitherto observed." The Minister of Tranent was suspended at that time, for baptizing an infant in a private house; but confessing his offence, he was ordained to make his publick repentance in the Kirk of Tranent before he be released. Another minister was to be tried and censured for baptizing privately, and celebrating the Communion upon Pasch-day, at the Assembly holden in October 1580. Which acts and censures make manifest that our Kirk abhorred whatsoever fostered the opinion of the necessitie of Baptisme, and giving of the Sacrament as a viaticum.

All which, and many other acts, grounds, and reasons, being at length agitated, and, with much mature deliberation, pondered, and libertie granted to every man to speak his minde, what could be said further for the full satisfaction of all men.

The matter was put to voicing in these words, "Whether the Five Articles of Perth, by the Confession of Faith, as it was meaned and professed in the year 1580, 1581, 1590, 1591, ought to be removed out of this Kirk?" The whole Assembly all in one consent, one onely excepted, did voice that the Five Articles above specified were abused by this Kirk in that Confession, and so ought to be removed out of it; and, therefore, prohibiteth and discharge all disputing for them, or observing of them, or any of them, in all time comming, and ordains Presbyteries to proceed with the censures of the Kirk against all transgressours.

Act Sess. 21, December 17, 1638. Restoring the Judicatories of the Kirk.

Concerning Kirk Sessions, Provinciaall and Nationall Assemblies, the Generall Assembly considering the great defection of this Kirk, and decay of religion, by the usurpation of the Prelates, and their suppressing of ordinarie judicatories of the Kirk, and clearly perceiving the benefit which will redound to the religion by the restitution of the said judicatories; remembering also that they stand obliged, by their solemne oath and covenant with God, to return to the doctrine and discipline of this Kirk, as it was profest 1580, 1581, 1590, 1591, which in the Book of Policie, registrat in the books of the Assembly, 1581, and ordained to bee subscribed, 1590, 1591, is particularly exprest, both touching the constitution of the Assemblies, of their members, ministers, and elders, and touching the number, power, and authority of these members in all matters ecclesiasticall.

The Assembly findeth it necessar to restore, and, by these presents, restoreth all these Assemblies unto their full integritie in their members, priviledges, liberties, powers, and jurisdictions, as they were constitute by the foresaid Book of Policie.

Act Sess. 23, 24, December 17, 18. Reviving and ratifying several former Acts, &c.

Anent the report of the committie appointed for considering what constitutions were to be revived or made of new, they proponed the overtures following, which were read and allowed by the whole Assembly, or by them referred to the consideration of the severall Presbyteries.

I. Anent Presbyteries which have been erected since the year 1586, it seemeth needfull that they bee ratified by an act of this Generall Assembly, and that other Presbyteries shall be erected where they shall be found needfull, and especially now in the Synod of Lismore, according to the particular note given thereanent.

The Assembly ratifieth these Presbyteries since 1586, and erecteth those in Lismore, conforme to the note registrat in the books of Assembly.

II. Anent the keeping of Presbyteriall meetings, it is thought fit that they be weekly, both in sommer and winter, except in places farre distant, who, during the winter season, (that is, between the first of October and the first of April,) shall be dispensed with for meeting once in the fourteen dayes, and that all absents be censured, especially those who should exercise and adde, according to the act of Assembly 1582, at St Andrews, April 24, Sess. 12, and that some controverted head of doctrine bee handled in the Presbyterie publickly, and disputed among the brethren every first Presbyterie of the moneth, according to the act of Assembly holden at Dundie, 1598, Sess. 12.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

III. Anent the visitation of particular Kirks within Presbyteries, it is thought expedient that it be once every year, wherein a care is to be had, among other things necessary, that it bee tryed how domestick exercises of religion be exercised in particular families, and to see what means there is in every parish in landward for catechising and instructing the youth.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

IV. Anent the visitation of Kirks, Schooles, and Colledges, it is thought meet that the act of Assembly, holden at Edinburgh the 25 of June 1565, Sess. 2, be put in execution, that the Minister of the Parochin, the Principall, Regents, and Professours within Colledges, and Masters and Doctors of Schooles, be tryed concerning the soundnesse of their judgement in matters of religion, their abilitie for discharge of their calling, and the honesty of their conversation, as the act of Assembly at Edinburgh, June 21, 1567, Sess. 3, and the act of Assembly holden at Montrose, 1595, Sess. 9, do import; and this visitation of colledges to be by way of commission from the Generall Assembly.

The Generall Assembly alloweth this article.

V. Anent None-residents; it is thought necessary that every Minister be obliged to reside in his own parochin at his ordinarie manse, for the better attending of the duties of his calling, conforme to the acts of Assemblies, viz., act of Assembly at Edinburgh, March 24, 1595, Sess. 7; as also act at Edinburgh, December 25, 1563, Sess. 5; and Assembly at Edinburgh, December 25, 1565, Sess. 4; Assembly at Edinburgh, March 6, 1572, Sess. 3.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

VI. Anent the planting of Schools in Landward, the want whereof doth greatly pre-judge the growth of the Gospel, and procure the decay of religion. The Assembly giveth direction to severall Presbyteries for the setting of schooles in every landward parochin, and providing of men able for the charge of teaching of the youth, publick reading and presenting of the psalme, and catechising of the common people, and that means be provided for their intertainment in the most convenient manner that may be had, according to the abilitie of the parochin.

The Assembly alloweth and referreth the particular course unto the severall Presbyteries.

VII. Anent the late admission of Ministers by Presbyteries, and the choise of Moderatours, according to the ancient power of the said Presbyteries, the Assembly declareth they had power to doe the same, and ratifieth that what hath been done of late of that kinde upon warrantable grounds, that hereafter it be not called in question.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

VIII. Anent the competencie of Presbyteries and parochins, that some proportion may be kept both anent the number and distance of place, it would seem expedient that this Generall Assembly should appoint a Commission for every shyre where there is such necessitie, that the particular parochins and presbyteries within the bounds be duly considered, and overtures be these of the same commission given in to the Provinciaill Synods, and by them to the Generall Assembly, that there they may be advised and ratified.

The Assembly referreth this to the care of the particular Presbyteries.

IX. Anent the entrie and conversation of Ministers, it is expedient that the act of Assembly holden at Edinburgh, March 24, 1595,* Sess. 7, be ratified, and put in execution in every Presbyterie, and to that end that they get a coppie thereof under the clerk's hand, whereof the tennour followeth.

*Act Sess. 7, March 26, of the Assembly at Edinburgh, 1596.

“ Concerning the defections in the ministerie, the same being at length read out, reasoned, and considered, the brethren concluded the same, agreeing therewith; and in respect that, by God's grace, they intend reformation, and to see the Kirk and ministry purged, to the effect the worke may have better successe, they think it necessary that this Assembly be humbled, for wanting such care as became in such points, as is set down; and some zealous and godly brethren in doctrine, lay them out for their better humiliation; and that they make solemne promise before the Majestic of God, and make new covenant with him for a more carefull and reverent discharge of their ministerie. To the which effect was chosen Mr John Davidson; and Tuesday next, at nine houres in the morning, appointed, in the new Kirk, for that effect, whereunto none is to resort but the ministrie: the forme to be advised the morne in privie conference.

THE TENNOUR OF THE ADVISE OF THE BRETHREN, DEPUTE FOR PENNING THE ENORMITIES AND CORRUPTIONS IN THE MINISTERIE, AND REMEAD THEREOF, ALLOWED BY THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY HERE CONVEENED, 1596.

Corruptions in the Office.

“ Forasmuch as, by the too sudden admission and light tryall of persons to the mi-

* The apparent discrepancy in the dates is explained by the fact, that the year then commenced on 25th March. The Assembly began its sittings 24th March 1595, the above quoted was passed 26th March 1596.—Ed. 1843.

nistrick, it cometh to passe that many scandals fall out in the persons of ministers, it would bee ordained in time comming, that more diligent inquisition and triall be used of all such persons as shall enter into the ministrie.

“As specially these points: That the intrant shall be posed upon his conscience, before the great God, (and that in most grave manner,) what moveth him to accept the office and charge of the ministrie upon him.

“That it be inquired, if any, by solistation, or moyen, directly or indirectly, prease to enter in the said office; and if it be found that the solister be repelled, and that the Presbyterie repell all such of their number from voting in the election or admission as shall bee found moyeners for the solicester, and posed upon their conscience to declare the truth to that effect.

“Thirdly, Because by presentations, many forcibly are thrust into the ministry, and upon congregations, that utter thereafter that they were not called by God: It would be provided that none seeke presentations to benefices without advice of the Presbyterie within the bounds whereof the benefice is; and if any doe in the contrarie, they to be repelled as rei ambitus.

“That the tryall of persons to be admitted to the ministrie hereafter consist not only in their learning and abilitie to preach, but also in conscience, and feeling, and spirituall wisdom, and namely in the knowledge of the bounds of their calling, in doctrine, discipline, and wisdom, to behave himselfe accordingly with the diverse ranks of persons within his flock, as namely with Atheists, rebellious weak consciences, and such other, wherein the pastorall charge is most kythed, and that he be meet to stop the mouthes of the adversaries; and such as are not qualified in these points to be delayed to further tryall, and whill they be found qualified. And because men may be found meet for some places who are not meet for other, it would be considered, that the principall places of the realme be provided by men of most worthie gifts, wisdom, and experience, and that none take the charge of greater number of people nor they are able to discharge: And the Assembly to take order herewith, and the act of the provinciall of Louthian, made at Linlithgow, to be urged.

“That such as shall bee found not given to their book and studie of Scriptures, not carefull to have books, not given to sanctification and prayer, that studie not to bee powerfull and spirituall, not applying the doctrine to corruptions, which is the pastorall gift, obscure and too scholastick before the people, cold, and wanting of spirituall zeal, negligent in visiting of the sick and caring for the poore; or indiscreet in choosing of parts of the word not meetest for the flock, flatterers and dissembling at publick sins, and specially of great personages in their congregations, for flattery, or for fear, that all such persons bee censured, according to the degree of their faults, and continuing therein, bee deprived.

“That such as be slothfull in the ministration of the Sacraments and irreverent, as prophaners receiving the cleane and uncleane, ignorants and senselesse prophane, and making no conscience of their profession in their calling and families, omitting due tryall or using none, or light tryall, having respect in their tryall to persons, wherein there is manifest corruption; that all such be sharply rebuked, and if they continue therein, that they be deposed.

“And if any bee found a seller of the Sacraments, that hee bee deposed simpliciter: And such as collude with slanderous persons in dispensing and overseeing them for money, incurre the like punishment. That every Minister be charged to have a Session established of the meetest men in his congregation, and that Discipline strike not only upon grosse sins, as whoredome, bloodshed, &c., but upon sins repugnant to the Word of God, as blasphemie of God, banning, profaning of the Sabbath, disobedient to parents, idle, unruly ones, without calling, drunkards, and such like deboshed men, as make not conscience of their life and ruling of their families, and specially of education of their children, lying, slandering, and backbiting, and breaking of promises; and this to be an universall order throughout the realme, &c., and such like as are negligent herein, and continue therein after admonition, be deposed.

“That none falling in publick slanders be received in the fellowship of the Kirk, except his minister have some appearance and warrand in conscience that hee hath both a feeling of sin, and apprehension of mercie, and for this effect, that the minister travell with him by doctrine, and private instruction, to bring him hereto, and specially in the doctrine of repentance, which being neglected, the publick place of repentance is turned in a mocking.

“ Dilapidation of benefices, dimitting of them for favour or money, that they become laick patronages, without advise of the Kirk, and such like interchanging of benefices, by transaction and transporting of themselves by that occasion, without the knowledge of the Kirk, precisely to be punished: Such like, that setting of takes without the consent of the Assembly, be punished according to the acts; and that the dimitters in favours for money, or otherwise, to the effect above written, bee punished as the dilapidators.

Corruptions in their Persons and Lives.

“ That such as are light and wanton in their behaviour, as in gorgeous and light apparell, in speech, in using light and prophane companie, unlawfull gaming, as dancing, earding, dyeing, and such like, not beseeming the gravitic of a pastour, bee sharply and gravely reproved by the Presbyterie, according to the degree thereof: and continuing therein after due admonition, that hee bee depryved, as slanderous to the Gospel.

“ That Ministers being found swearers, or banners, prophaners of the Sabbath, drunkards, fighters, guiltie of all these, or any of them, be deposed simpliciter; and such like, lyars, detractors, flatterers, breakers of promise, brawlers, and quarrellers, after admonition continuing therein, incurre the same punishment.

“ That Ministers given to unlawfull and incompetent trades and occupations for filthy gain, as holders of ostleries, taking of ocker beside conscience and good lawes, and bearing worldly offices in noblemen's and gentlemen's houses, merchandise, and such like, buying of victuals, and keeping to the dearth, and all such worldly occupations, as may distract them from their charge, and may be slanderous to the pastorall calling, be admonished and brought to the acknowledging of their sins, and if they continue therein, to be deposed.

“ That Ministers not resident at their flocks be deposed, according to the acts of the Generall Assembly, and lawes of the realme; otherwise the burthen to be laid on the Presbyteries, and they to be censured therefore.

“ That the Assembly command all their members, that none of them await on the court and affairs thereof, without the advice and allowance of their Presbyterie. Item, That they intend no action civill without the said advice, except in small matters: and for remedying of the necessitie, that some Ministers hath to enter in plea of law, that remedie bee craved, that short processe bee devised, to bee used in Ministers' actions.

“ That Ministers take speeciall care in using godly exercises in their families, in teaching of their wives, children, and servants, in using ordinarie prayers, and reading of Scriptures, in removing of offensive persons out of their families, and such like other points of godly conversation, and good example, and that they, at the visitation of their Kirks, try the Ministers' families in these points foresaid, and such as are found negligent in these points, after due admonition, shall be adjudged unmeet to govern the house of God, according to the rule of the Apostle.

“ That Ministers in all companies strive to be spirituall and profitable, and to talke of things pertaining to godlinesse, as namely of such as may strengthen us in Christ, instruct us in our calling, of the means how to have Christ's Kingdome better established in our congregations, and to know how the Gospel flourisheth in our flocks, and such like others the hinderances and the remeeds that we finde, &c., wherein there is manifold corruptions, both in our companying with ourselves and with others; and that the contraveeners thereof be tryed, and sharply be rebuked.

“ That no Minister be found to countenance, procure, or assist a publick offender challenged by his own Minister, for his publick offence, or to bear with him as though his Minister were too severe upon him, under the pain of admonition and rebuking.

Anent Generall Assemblies.

“ To urge the keeping of the Acts anent the keeping of the Assembly, that it may have the own reverence and majestic.

“ The Assembly having heard the whole act read, most unanimously alloweth and approveth this article.”

X. Anent the defraying of the expenses of the commissioners to the Generall Assembly, referreth and recommendeth the same unto the particular presbyteries, and especially to the ruling elders therein, that they may take such courses whereby, according to reason and former acts of Assemblies, the commissioners' expenses to this Assembly, and to the subsequent, may be born by the particular parochins of every presbyterie, who sendeth them in their name and to their behalf, and for that effect, that all sort of persons able in land or moneys proportionally may bear a part of the burthen, as they reap the benefit of their paines.

The Assembly referreth this unto the care of the particular Presbyteries.

XI. Anent the repressing of Poperie and superstition. It seemeth expedient that the number and names of all the Papists in this kingdome be taken up at this Assembly, if it may be conveniently done, and if not, that it be remitted to the next Provinciall Assemblies, that it may appear what growth Poperie hath had and now hath through this kingdome, what Popish priests and Jesuits there are in the land; and that all persons of whatsoever state and condition be obliged to swear and subscribe the Confession of Faith, as it is now condescended upon by this Generall Assembly; that they frequent the Word and Sacraments in the ordinar dyets and places; otherwise to proceed against them with the censures of the Kirk, and that children be not sent out of the country without licence of the Presbyteries or Provinciall Synods of the bounds where they dwell.

The Assembly referreth this article to the severall Presbyteries.

XII. Anent order to be taken that the Lord's Supper be more frequently administrat both in burgh and landward then it hath been in these years bygone. It were expedient that the act at Edinburgh, December 25, 1562, Sess. 5, bee renewed, and some course bee taken for furnishing of the elements, where the minister of the parish hath allowance only for once in the year.

The Assembly referreth this to the consideration of Presbyteries, and declareth that the charges be rather payed out of that dayes collection, then that the congregation want the more frequent use of the sacrament.

XIII. Anent the entrie of ministers to the ministrie; the Assembly thinks expedient that the act holden at St Andrews, April 24, 1582, Sess. 7, touching the age of twenty-five years, be renewed, and none to be admitted before that time, except such as for rare and singular qualities shall be judged by the Generall or Provinciall Assembly to be meet and worthie thereof.

The Assembly approveth this article.

XIV. Anent mercats on Monday and Saturday within burghs, causing intollerable profanation of the Lord's day, by carying of loads, bearing of burthens, and other work of that kinde; it were expedient for the redresse thereof, that the care for restraining of this abuse be recommended by the Assembly unto the severall burghs, and they to bee earnestly entreated to finde out some way for the repressing of this evil, and changing of the day; and to report their diligence thereanent to the next Generall Assembly.

The Assembly referreth this article to the consideration of the burrows.

XV. Anent the profanation of the Sabbath-day in landward, especially for want of divine service in the afternoone; the Assembly ordaineth the act of Assembly holden at Dundie, July 12, 1580, Sess. 10, for keeping both dyets, to be put in execution.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XVI. Anent frequenting with excommunicat persons; the Assembly ordaineth that the act at Edinburgh, March 5, 1569, Sess. 10, to wit, “ that these who will not forbear the companie of excommunicat persons after due admonition, be excommunicat themselves, except they forbear,” to be put in execution.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XVII. Whereas the Confession of the Faith of this Kirk, concerning both doctrine and discipline, so often called in question by the corrupt judgement and tyrannous authoritie of the pretended prelates, is now clearly explained, and by this whole Kirk represented by this Generall Assembly concluded, ordained also to bee subscribed by all sorts of persons within the said Kirk and kingdome ; the Assembly constitutes and ordaines, that from henceforth, no sort of person, of whatsoever quality and degree, be permitted to speak or write against the said Confession, this Assembly, or any act of this Assembly, and that under the paine of incurring the censures of this Kirk.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XVIII. Anent voicing in kirk-sessions ; it is thought expedient that no minister moderating his session shall usurpe a negative voice over the members of his session, and where there is two or moe ministers in one congregation, that they have equall power in voicing, that one of them hinder not the reasoning or voicing of any thing whereunto the other minister or ministers, with a great part of the session, inclineth, being agreeable to the acts and practise of the Kirk, and that one of the ministers, without advice of his colleague, appoint not dyets of communion nor examination, neither hinder his colleague from catechising and using other religious exercises as oft as he pleaseth.

The Assembly referreth this article to the care of the Presbyteries.

XIX. Since the office of a diocesane or lordly bishop is alluterly abjured, and removed out of this Kirk, it is thought fit that all titles of dignitie, savouring more of Poperie than of Christian libertie, as chapters, with their elections and consecrations, abbots, pryors, deans, arch-deacons, preaching deacons, chanters, sub-chanters, and others having the like title, flowing from the Pope and Canon law only, as testifieth the Second Book of Discipline, bee also banished out of this Reformed Kirk, and not to bee usurped or used hereafter under ecclesiasticall censure.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XX. Anent the presenting either of pastours or readers, and schoolmasters to particular congregations ; that there be a respect had to the congregation, and that no person be intruded in any office of the Kirke contrare to the will of the congregation to which they are appointed.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XXI. Anent marriage without proclamation of bans, which being in use these years bygone, hath produced many dangerous effects ; the Assembly would discharge the same, conforme to the former acts, except the Presbyterie in some necessaric exigents dispense therewith.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XXII. Anent the Buriall in Kirks ; the Assembly would be pleased to consider anent the act of Assembly at Edinburgh, 1588, Sess. 5, if it shall be put in execution, and to discharge funerall sermons as savouring of superstition.

The Assembly referreth the former part of this article anent buriall in kirks to the care of Presbyteries, and dischargeth all funerall sermons.

XXIII. Anent the tryall of expectants before their entrie to the ministrie ; it being notour that they have subscribed the Confession of Faith now declared in this Assembly, and that they have exercised often privatly and publickly, with approbation of the Presbyterie, they shall first adde and make the exercise publickly, and make a discourse of some common head in Latine, and give propositions thereupon for dispute, and thereafter be questioned by the Presbyterie upon questions of controversie and chronologic, anent particular texts of Scripture, how they may be interpreted according to the analogie of faith, and reconciled, and that they be examined upon their skill of the Greek and Hebrew, and that they bring a testificat of their life and conversation from either colledge or presbyterie where they reside.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

XXIV. The Assembly having considered the order of the Provinciaill Assemblies given in by the most ancient of the ministrie within every province, as the ancient plateforme thereof, ordained the same to be observed conforme to the roll, registrat in the books of Assembly, whereof the tennour followeth.

XV. THE PROVINCIAL SYNOD OF THE ISLES.

All the Kirks of the North-West Isles, viz., Sky, Lewes, and the rest of the Isles, which were lyable to the Diocie of the Isles, except the South-West Isles, which are joynd to the Presbyteries of Argyll—to meet the first time at Skye, the second Twesday of May.

That the Minister of the place where the Synodall Assembly meets shall preach the first day of their meeting, and give timouse advertisement to the rest of the Presbyteries.

It is remembred, that of old, the Synodall Assemblies that were nearest to others had correspondence among themselves, by sending one or two commissioners mutually from one to another, which course is thought fit to be kept in time coming; viz., the Provincials of Louthian, and Mers, &c.; the Provincials of Drumfreis, Galloway, Glasgow, and Argyll; the Provincials of Perth, Fyfe, and Angus, &c.; the Provincials of Aberdein and Murray; the Provincials of Rosse, Caithnes, and Orkney. The commissioners for correspondence amongst the Synodals to be a minister and a ruling elder.

The Assembly recommendeth to the severall Presbyteries the execution of the old acts of Assemblies, against the break of the Sabbath-day, by the going of milles, salt-pans, salmond-fishing, or any such like labour, and to this end revives and renews the act of the Assembly, holden at Halyrudhouse, 1602, Sess. 5, whereof the tenor followeth:—

“The Assembly, considering that the conventions of the people, specially on the Sabbath-day, are verie rare in many places, by distraction of labour, not only in harvest and seed-time, but also every Sabbath, by fishing, both of whyte fish and salmond-fishing, and in going of milles: Therefore, the Assemblie dischargeth and inhibiteth all such labour of fishing, as well whyte fish as salmond fish, and going of milles of all sorts upon the Sabbath-day, under the paine of incurring the censures of the Kirk. And ordains the commissioners of this Assemblie to meane the same to his Majestic, and to desire that a pecuniall paine may be enjoyned upon the contraveiners of this present act.”

Act Sess. 24, December 18, 1638. Against Ministers who acquiesce not in the Sentence of Deposition.

The Assembly, considering the great necessity of purging this land from bygone corruptions, and of preserving her from the like in time coming, ordaineth the Presbyteries to proceed with the censures of the Kirk, to excommunication, against those Ministers, who, being deposed by this Assembly, acquiesces not to their sentences, but exercise some part of their Ministeriall function, refuseth themselves, and withdraw others from the obedience of the Acts of the Assembly.

Act Sess. 25, December 19, 1638. Against the civill Places and Power of Kirkmen.

The Generall Assembly, remembering that among other clauses of the application of the Confession of Faith to the present time, which was subscribed in Februarie 1638, the clause touching the civill places and power of Kirkmen was referred unto the tryall of this Assembly, entered into a serious search thereof, especially of their sitting on the bench, as Justices of Peace, their sitting in Session and Councill, their ryding and voting in Parliament; and considering how this vote in Parliament was not at first sought nor requyred by this Kirke, or worthy men of the ministerie, but being obruded upon them, was disallowed, for such reasons as could not well be answered, (as appeareth by the conference, holden at Halyrudhouse, 1599, which, with the reasons therein contained, was read in the face of the Assembly,) and by plurality of voices not being able to resist that enforced favour, they foreseeing the dangerous consequences thereof, in the Assembly at Montrose, did limitate the same by many necessare cautions; considering also the protestation made in the Parliament, 1606, by commissioners from Presbyteries, and Provinciall Assemblies, against this restitution of Bishops to vote in Parliament, and against all civill offices in the persons of pastors, separate unto the Gospell, as incompatible with their spirituall function, with the manifold reasons of that protestation from the Word of God, ancient Councils, ancient and moderne divines, from the doctrine, discipline, and Confession of Faith of the Kirk of Scotland, which are extant in print, and were read in the audience of the Assembly: Considering also, from their own experience, the bad fruits and great evils which have been the inseparable consequents of these offices, and that power in the persons of pastors separate to the Gospell, to the great prejudice of the freedom and libertie of the Kirk, the jurisdiction of her Assemblies, and the powerfull fruits of their spirituall ministric; the Assembly most unanimously in one voice, with the hesitation of two allanerly, declared, that as, on the one part, the Kirk and the ministers thereof are obliged to give their advise and good counsell in matters concerning the Kirk, or the conscience of any whatsoever, to his Majestie, to the Parliament, to the Councill, or to any member thereof, for their resolutions from the Word of God; so, on the other part, that it is both inexpedient and unlawful in this Kirk for pastors separate unto the Gospell to brook civil places and offices, as to be Justices of Peace, sit and decerne in Councill, Session, or Exchequer, to ryde or vote in Parliament, to be judges or assessors in any civill judicatorie: And, therefore, rescinds and annuls all contrarie Acts of Assembly, namely, of the Assembly holden at Montrose, 1600; which being prest by authority, did rather for an interim tolerat the same, and that limitate by many cautions, for the breach whereof the prelates have been justly censured, then in freedom of judgement allow thereof, and ordaineth the Presbyteries to proceed with the censures of the Kirk against such as shall transgresse herein in time comming.

Act Sess. 26, December 20, 1638. Against printing any thing relative to the Kirk of Scotland without warrant.

The Assembly, considering the great prejudice which God's Kirk in this land hath sustained these years bypast, by the unwarranted printing of lybels, pamphlets, and polemicks, to the disgrace of religion, slander of the gospell, infecting and disquieting the mindes of God's people, and disturbance of the peace of the Kirk; and remembering the former acts and custome of this Kirk, as of all other Kirks, made for restraining these and the like abuses, and that nothing be printed concerning the Kirk and religion except it be allowed by these whom the Kirk intrusts with that charge; the Assembly unanimously, by vertue of their ecclesiasticall authority, dischargeth and inhibiteth all printers within this kingdome to print any act of the former Assemblies, any of the acts or proceedings of this Assembly, any Confession of Faith, any protestations, any reasons pro or contra anent the present divisions and contraversies of this time, or any other treatise whatsoever which may concerne the Kirk of Scotland, or God's cause in hand, without warrant subscribed by Mr Archbald Johnston, as clerk to the Assembly and advocate for the Kirk; or to reprint, without his warrant, any acts or treatises foresaids, which he hath caused any other to print, under the paine of ecclesiasticall censures, to be execute against the transgressours by the severall Presbyteries, and in case of their refusall, by the severall Commissiones from this Assembly; whereunto also we are confident the honourable judges of this land will contribute their civill authority; and this to be intimat publickly in pulpit with the other generall acts of this Assembly.

Act Sess. 26, December 20, 1638. Against such as acknowledge not this Assembly.

The Generall Assembly ordaineth all Presbyteries and Provinciall Assemblies to convene before them such as are scandalous and malicious, and will not acknowledge this Assembly, nor acquiesce unto the acts thereof; and to censure them according to their malice and contempt, and acts of this Kirk; and where Presbyteries are refractarie, granteth power unto the severall Commissiones to summond them to compare before the next Generall Assembly to be holden at Edinburgh, the third Wednesday of Julie, to abide their tryall and censure.

Act Sess. 26, December 20, 1638. Appointing Presbyteries, Burghs, Universities, as also Kirk Sessions, to have a Copy of the Acts of the Assembly.

The Assembly, considering the acts and practise of this Kirke in her purest times, that the Commissioners of every Presbyterie, Burgh, and Universitie, were both ordained to take, and really did take, from the clerk, the whole general acts of the Assembly subscribed by the clerk, whereby they might rule and conforme their judicatorie themselves, and all persons within their jurisdictions, unto the obedience thereof; considering the great prejudices we have lately felt out of ignorance of the acts of Assembly; considering also the great necessity in this time of reformation, beyond any other ordinarie time, to have an extract thereof, the Assembly ordaineth be this present act, that all Commissioners from Presbyteries, Burghes, and Universities, presently get under the clerk's hand an index of the acts, till the acts themselves be extracted, and thereafter to get the full extract of the whole generall acts, to be insert in their Presbyteric books, whereby all their proceedings may be regulate in time coming. Likeas the Assembly recommendeth unto every Kirk Session, for the preservation of their particular paroch from the re-entrie of the corruptions now discharged, and for their continuance in the Covenant, anent doctrine, worship, and discipline now declared, to obtain an extract of these acts, especially if they be printed, seeing their pryce will no wayes then be considerable, as the benefite both of the particular parish and the interest of the whole Kirk, in the preservation thereof from defection, is undeniable, seeing Presbyteries are composed of sundry parochins, and so must be affected or infected as they are, as Provinciaill and Generall Assemblies are composed of Presbyteries, and so must be disposed as they are.

Act Sess. 26, December 20. In the Assembly at Glasgow, 1638, concerning the Confession of Faith renewed in Februar 1638.

The Assembly, considering that for the purging and preservation of religion for the King's Majestie's honour, and for the publick peace of the Kirk and kingdome, the renewing of that nationall Covenant and oath of this Kirk and kingdome, in Februar 1638, was most necessare, likeas the Lord hath blessed the same from heaven with a wonderfull successe for the good of religion, that the said Covenant suspendeth the practise of novations already introduced, and the approbation of the corruptions of the present government of the Kirk, with the civill places and power of kirkmen, till they be tryed in a free Generall Assembly; and that now, after long and serious examination, it is found that by the Confession of Faith the Five Articles of Perth and Episcopall government are abjured, and to be removed out of this Kirk, and the civill places and power of kirkmen are declared to be unlawfull: The Assembly alloweth and approveth the same in all the heads and articles thereof, and ordaineth that all Ministers, Masters of Universities, Colledges, and Schooles, and all others who have not already subscribed the said Confession and Covenant, shall subscribe the same, with these words prefixed to the subscription, viz., The article of this Covenant, which was at the first subscription referred to the determination of the Generall Assembly, being now determined at Glasgow, in December 1638, and thereby the Five Articles of Perth, and the government of the Kirk by Bishops, being declared to be abjured and removed, the civill places and power of kirkmen declared to be unlawfull, we subscribe according to the determination of the said free and lawfull Generall Assembly holden at Glasgow; and ordaineth, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, the said Covenant, with this declaration, to be insert in the registers of the Assemblies of this Kirk, Generall, Provinciaill, and Presbyteriall.

Act Sess. 26, December 20, 1638. Concerning the subscribing the Confession of Faith lately subscribed by his Majestie's Commissioner, and urged to be subscribed by others.

Seeing the Generall Assembly, to whom belongeth properly the publick and judiciall interpretation of the Confession of Faith, hath now, after accurat tryall, and mature deliberation, clearly found that the Five Articles of Perth, and the government of the Kirk by Bishops, are abjured by the Confession of Faith, as the same was professed in the year 1580, and was renewed in this instant year, 1638; and that the Marques of Hammiltoun, his Majestie's Commissioner, hath caused print a declaration, bearing that his Majestie's intention and his own, in causing subscribe the Confession of Faith, is no wayes to abjure but to defend Episcopall government; and that by the oath and explanation set down in the act of Council, it neither was nor possibly could be abjured, requyring that none take the said oath, or any other oath, in any sense which may not consist with Episcopall government; which is directly repugnant to the genuine and true meaning of the foresaid Confession, as it was professed in the year 1580, as is clearly now found and declared by the Generall Assembly: Therefore, the Generall Assembly doth humbly supplicate that his Majestie may be graciously pleased to acknowledge and approve the foresaid true interpretation and meaning of the Generall Assembly, by his royall warrand to his Majestie's Commissioner, Councill, and subjects, to be put in record for that effect, whereof we are confident, after his Majestie hath received due information from this Kirk, honoured with his Majestie's birth and baptisme, which will be a royall testimonie of his Majestie's piety and justice, and a powerfull meane to procure the heartie affection and obedience of all his Majestie's loyall subjects; and in the meantime, least any should fall under the danger of a contradictorie oath, and bring the wrath of God upon themselves and the land, for the abuse of his name and covenant, The Assembly, by their ecclesiasticall authority, prohibiteth and dischargeth, that no member of this Kirk swear or subscribe the said Confession, so far wreasted to a contrare meaning, under paine of all ecclesiasticall censure, but that they subscribe the Confession of Faith renewed in Februar, with the declaration of the Assembly set down in the former act.

Act Sess. 26, December 20, 1638. Concerning yearly Generall Assemblies.

The Assembly, having considered the reasons lately printed for holding of Generall Assemblies, which are taken from the light of nature, the promise of Jesus Christ, the practise of the holy Apostles, the doctrine and custome of other reformed Kirks, and the liberty of this nationall Kirk, as it is expressed in the Book of Policie, and acknowledged in the act of Parliament 1592, and from recent and present experience, comparing the lamentable prejudices done to religion through the former want of free and lawfull Assemblies, and the great benefite arysing to the Kirk from this one free and lawfull Assembly, finde it necessary to declare, and hereby declares, that by divine, ecclesiasticall, and civill warrands, this nationall Kirk hath power and liberty to assemble and convene in her yearly Generall Assemblies, and oftener, pro re nata, as occasion and necessity shall require: Appointeth the next Generall Assembly to sit at Edinburgh the third Weddinsday of Julie 1639; and warneth all Presbyteries, Universities, and Burghes, to send their commissioners for keeping the same; giving power also to the Presbyterie of Edinburgh, pro re nata, and upon any urgent and extraordinarie necessity, (if any shall happen before the dict appointed in Julie,) to give advertisement to all the presbyteries, universities, and burghes, to send their commissioners for holding an occasionall Assembly. And if, in the meantime, it shall please the King's Majestie to indiet a Generall Assembly, ordaineth all presbyteries, universities, and burghes, to send their commissioners for keeping the time and place which shall be appointed by his Majestie's proclamation.

Act Sess. 26, December 20. Ordaining an humble Supplication to be sent to the King's Majestie.

The Assembly, from the sense of his Majestie's pietie and justice, manifested in the publick indiction of their solemn meeting for the purging and preservation of religion, in so great an exigent of the extreame danger of both, from their fears arising out of experience of the craftie and malicious dealing of their adversaries in giving sinister informations against the most religious and loyall designes and doings of his Majestie's good subjects, and from their earnest desire to have his Majestie truly informed of their intentions and proceedings from themselves, who know them best, (which they are confident will be better beleaved, and finde more credite with his Majestie, then any secret surmise or private suggestion to the contrarie,) that they may gaine his Majestie's princely approbation and ratification in the ensuing Parliament to their constitutions, hath thought meet and ordaineth, that an humble supplication be directed to his Majestie, testifying their most heartie thankfulness for so royall a favour as at this time hath refreshed the whole Kirk and kingdome, stopping the way of calummie, and humbly supplicating for the approbation and ratification foresaid: That truth and peace may dwell together in this land, to the increase of his Majestie's glorie, and the comfort and quietnesse of his Majestie's good people: This the Assembly hath committed, according to the articles forsaid, to be subscribed by their moderatour and clerk in their name. The tennour whereof followeth :—

TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTIE, THE HUMBLE SUPPLICATION OF
THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY OF THE KIRK OF SCOTLAND,
CONVEENED AT GLASGOW, NOVEMBER 21, 1638.

MOST GRACIOUS SOVERAIGNE,

We, your Majestie's most humble and loyall subjects, the commissioners from all the parts of this your Majestie's ancient and native kingdome, and members of the Nationall Assembly, convened at Glasgow by your Majestie's speciall indiction, considering the great happinesse which ariseth both to Kirk and commonwealth by the mutuall embracements of religion and justice, of truth and peace, when it pleaseth the Supream Providence so to dispose that princely power and ecclesiasticall authoritie joyne in one, do, with all thankfulness of heart, acknowledge, with our mouthes doe confesse, and not only with our pennes, but with all our power are readie to witness unto the world, to your Majestie's never dying glorie, how much the whole kingdome is affected, and not only refreshed but revived, with the comfortable sense of your Majestie's pietie, justice, and goodnesse, in hearing our humble supplications for a full and free Generall Assembly: and remembering that for the present a more true and reall testimonie of our unfained acknowledgement could not proceed from us, your Majestie's duetifull subjects, then to walke worthie of so royall a favour, it hath been our greatest care and most serious endeavour, next unto the will of Jesus Christ, the great King of his Kirk, redeemed by his own blood, in all our proceedings, joynd with our hearty prayers to God for a blessing from heaven upon your Majestie's person and government, from the first houre of our meeting, to carie ourselves in such moderation, order, and loyaltie, as beseeemed the subjects of so just and gracious a King, lacking nothing so much as your Majestie's personall presence; with which had we been honoured and made happie, we were confident to have gained your Majestie's royall approbation to our ecclesiastick constitutions and conclusions, knowing that a truly Christian minde and royall heart inclined from above to religion and piety, will at the first discern, and discerning be deeply possessed with the love of the ravishing beautie and heavenly order of the house of God—they both proceeding from the same Spirit. But as the joy was unspeakable, and the hopes lively, which from the fountaines of your Majestie's favour did fill our hearts, so were we not a little troubled when wee did perceive that your Majestie's Commissioner, as before our meeting he did endeavour a prelimitation of the Assembly in the necessarie members thereof, and the matters to bee treated therein, contrarie to the intention of your Majestie's proclamation indicting a free Assembly, according to the order of this Kirk and laws of the kingdome, so, from the first beginnings of our sitting, (as if his Lordship had come rather to crosse nor to countenance our lawfull proceedings, or as we had intended any prejudice to the good of religion or to your Majestie's honour—which God knoweth was far from our thoughts,) did suffer nothing, although most necessarie, most ordinarie, and most undenyable, to passe without some censure, contradiction, or protestation: And after some dayes' debating of this kinde, farre against our expectation, and to our great grieffe, did arise himself, commanded us, who had laboured in every thing to approve ourselves to God, and to his Lordship, as representing your Majestie's person, to arise also, and prohibited our further meeting by such a proclamation, as will bee found to have proceeded, rather from an unwillingnesse that we should any longer sit, then from any ground or reason, which may endure the tryall either of your Majestie's Parliament or of your own royall judgement, unto which if (being convened by indiction from your Majestie, and sitting now in a constitute Assembly) we should have given place, the Kirk and kingdome, contrarie to your Majestie's most laudable intentions, manifested in former proclamations, and contrarie to the desires and expectation of all your Majestie's good people, had been in an instant precipitate in such a world of confusions and such depths of miserie as afterward could not easily have been cured. In this extremitie we made choise rather of that course which was most agreeable to your Majestie's will, revealed unto us after so many fervent supplications, and did most conduce for the good of religion, your Majestie's honour, and the weill of your Majestie's kingdome, then to give way to any sudden motion tending to the ruine of all; wherein wee are so far from fearing the light, least our deeds should be reproved, that the more accurately that we are tryed, and the more impartially our using of that power which God Almighty and your sacred Majestie, his vicegerent, had put in our hands for so good and necessarie ends, is examined, we have the greater confidence of your Majestie's allowance and rathabition; and so much the rather, that being in a manner inhibited to proceed in so good a work, we doubled our diligence, and endeavoured more carefully then before, when your Majestie's Commissioner was present, in every point falling under our consideration, to walke circumspectly, and without offence, as in the sight of God, and as if your Majestie's eyes had been looking upon us, labouring to proceed according to the Word of God, our Confession of Faith and Nationall Oath, and the laudable constitutions of the lawfull Assemblies of this Kirk; and studying rather to renew and revive old acts made for the reformation of religion in the time of your Majestie's father, of happie memorie, and extant in the records of the Kirk, which Divine Providence hath preserved, and at this time brought to our hands, then either to allow of such novations, as the avarice and ambition of men, abusing authoritie for their own ends, had without order introduced; or to appoint any new order which had not been formerly received and sworn to bee retained in this Kirk. In all which the members of the Assembly found so clear and convincing light to their full satisfaction, against all their doubts and difficulties, that the harmonic and unanimtie was rare and wonderfull, that we could not have agreed upon other constitutions except wee would have been found fighting against God. Your Majestie's wise and princely minde knoweth that nothing is more ordinary then for men when they doe well to bee evil spoken of, and that the best actions of men are many times misconstrued and misreported. Balaam, although a false prophet, was wronged; for, in place of that which hee said, "The Lord refuseth to give me leave to go with you," the princes of Moab reported unto Balak that Balaam refused to go with them. But our comfort is, that Truth is the daughter of Time, and although calummie often starteth first and runneth before, yet veritie followeth her at the heels, and possesseth herself in noble and royall hearts, where base calummie cannot long finde place. And our confidence is, that your Majestie, with that worthie king, will keep one eare shut against all the obloquies of men; and with that more wise king, who, when he gave a proefe that the wisdome of God was in him to doe judgement, would have both parties to stand before him at once, that hearing them equally, they might speed best, and go out most chearfullie from his Majestie's face, who had the best cause. When your Majestie's wisdome hath searched all the secrets of this Assembly, let us be reputed the worst of all men, according to the aspersions which partialtie would put upon us; let us be the most miserable of all men, to the full satisfaction of the vindictive malice of our adversaries; let us by the whole world bee judged of all men the most unworthie to breath any more in this your Majestie's kingdome, if the cause that we maintaine and have been prosecuting shall be found any other but that we desire that the majestie of God, who is our fear and our dread, be served, and his house ruled according to his owne will; if we have not caried along with us in all the sessions of our Assemblie a most humble and loyall respect to your Majestie's honour, which next unto the honour of the living God lyeth nearest our hearts; if we have not kepted ourselves within the limits of our reformation without debording or reflecting upon the constitution of other reformed Kirks, unto which wee heartily wish all truth and peace, and by whose sound judgement and Christian affection we certainly look to be approven; if we have not failed rather by lenitie then by rigour in censuring of delinquents, never exceeding the rules and lines prescribed and observed by this Kirk, and if (whatsoever men minding themselves suggest to the contrary) the government and discipline of this Kirk, subscribed and sworn before, and now acknowledged by the unanimous consent of this Assembly, shall not bee found to serve for the advancement of the kingdome of Christ, for procuring all due-tifull obedience to your Majestie in this your kingdome, and great riches and glorie to your crown, for peace to us, your Majestie's loyall subjects, and for terrour to all the enemies of your Majestie's honour and our happinesse; and if any act hath proceeded from us, so farre as our understanding could reach, and humane infirmitie would suffer, which being duely examined according to the grounds laid by your Majestie's father, of everlasting memory, and our religious progenitours, and which religion did forbid us to infringe, shall merit the anger and indignation wherewith wee are so often threatned. But on the contrare, having sincerely sought the glorie of God, the good of religion, your Majestie's honour, the censure of impietic, and of men who had sold themselves to wickednesse, and the re-establishment of the right constitution and government of this Kirk, farre from the smallest appearance of wronging any other reformed Kirk, we humbly beg, and certainly expect, that from the bright beames of your Majestie's countenance shining on this your Majestie's own kingdome and people, all our stormes shall bec changed in a comfortable calme and sweet sunshine, and that your Majestie's ratification in the ensuing Parliament, graciously indicted by your Majestie's proclamation to bee kepted in May, shall settle us in such a firmnesse and stabilitie in our religion as shall adde a further lustre unto your Majestie's glorious diademe, and make us a blessed people under your Majestie's long and prosperous reigne; which we beseech Him who hath directed us in our affaires, and by whom kings reigne, to grant unto your Majestie, to the admiration of all the world, the astonishment of your enemies, and comfort of the godly.

Collected, visied, and extracted forth from the Register of the Acts of the Assembly, by me, Mr A. Jhonston, clerk thereto, under my signe and subscription manuell.

A. JHONSTON, Cls. Eccl.

Edinburgh, the 12th of January 1639.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY,
HOLDEN AT EDINBURGH, 1639.

Sess. 8, August 17, 1639.—Master George Grahame his renouncing and abjuring of Episcopacie.

The which day there was given in to the Assembly, direct from Mr George Grahame, sometimes pretended Bishop of Orknay, an abjuration of Episcopacie, subscribed with his hand, which was publickly read in audience of the Assembly; and thereafter they ordained the same to be registrat in the Assembly Books, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, wherof the tenor follows:—

To all and sundry whom it effeirs, to whose knowledge these presents shall come, specially to the reverend and honourable members of the future Assembly to be holden at Edinburgh, the twelfth day of August 1639 years, Me, Master George Graham, some time pretended Bishop of Orknay, being sorry and grievd at my heart that I should ever for any worldly respect have embraced the order of Episcopacie, the same having no warrant from the Word of God, and being such an order as hath had sensibly many fearfull and evill consequences in many parts of Christendome, and particularly within the Kirk of Scotland, as by dolefull and deplorable experience this day is manifest, to have disclaimed, like as I, by the tenor hereof, doe altogether disclaime and abjure all episcopall power and jurisdiction, with the whole corruptions thereof, condemned by lawfull Assemblies within the said Kirk of Scotland, in regard the same is such an order as is also abjured within the said Kirk, by vertue of that Nationall Oath which was made in the years 1580 and 1581, promising and swearing by the great name of the Lord our God, that I shall never whiles I live, directly or indirectly, exerce any such power within the Kirk, neither yet shall I ever approve or allow the same, not so much as in my private or publicke discourse; but, on the contrary, shall stand and adhere to all the acts and constitutions of the late Assembly holden at Glasgow, the 21 of November 1638 last bypast, and shall concurre to the uttermost of my power, sincerely and faithfully, as occasion shall offer, in executing the said acts, and in advancing the work of reformation within this land, to the glory of God, the peace of the country, and the comfort and contentment of all good Christians, as God shall be my help. In testimony of the which premisses, I have subscribed thir presents with my hand at Breecknes in Stronnes, the eleventh day of February, the year of God 1639 years, before thir witnesses, Master Walter Stuart, Minister at Southronnaldsay, Master James Heynd, Minister at Kirkwall, Master Robert Peirson, Minister at Firth, and Master Patrick Grahame, Minister at Holme, my son.

Sess. 8, Aug. 17, 1639.—Act containing the Causes and Remedie of the bygone Evils of this Kirk.

The King's Majestic having graciously declared, that it is his royall will and pleasure that all questions about religion and matters ecclesiasticall be determined by Assemblies of the Kirk; having also by publicke proclamation indicted this free Nationall Assembly, for settling the present distraction of this Kirk, and for establishing a perfect peace against such divisions and disorders as have been sore displeasing to his Majestic, and grievous to all his good subjects; and now his Majestic's Commissioner, John Earle of Traquair, intrusted and authorized with a full commission, being present, and sitting in this Assembly, now fully convened and orderly constitute in all the members thereof, according to the order of this Kirk, having at large declared his Majestic's zeal to the reformed religion, and his royall care and tender affection to this Kirk, where his Majestic had both his birth and baptisme, his great displeasure at the manifold distractions and divisions of this Kirk and kingdome, and his desires to have all our wounds perfectly cured with a fair and fatherly hand; and although in the way approven by this Kirk, tryall hath been taken in former Assemblies before from the Kirk registers, to our full satisfaction, yet the Commissioner's Grace making particular inquiry from the members of the Assembly, now solemnly convened, concerning the reall and true causes of so many and great evils as this time past had so sore troubled the peace of this Kirk and kingdome, it was represented to his Majestic's Commissioner by this Assembly, that beside many other, the maine and most materiall causes were, First, The pressing of this Kirk by the Prelates with a Service Book, or Book of Common Prayer, without warrand or direction from the Kirk, and containing, beside the Popish frame thereof, divers Popish errors and ceremonies, and the seeds of manifold grosse superstitions and idolatry; with a book of canons, without warrand or direction from the Generall Assembly, establishing a tyrannicall power over the Kirk in the person of Bishops, and overthrowing the whole discipline and government of the Kirk by Assemblies; with a book of consecration and ordination, without warrand of authoritie, civill or ecclesiasticall, appointing offices in the house of God, which are not warranted by the Word of God, and repugnant to the discipline and acts of our Kirk; and with the High Commission erected without the consent of the Kirk, subverting the jurisdiction and ordinary judicatories of this Kirk, and giving to persons meereley ecclesiasticall the power of both swords, and to persons meerly civill the power of the keys and Kirk censures. A second cause was the Articles of Perth, viz., the observation of festivall dayes, kneeling at the communion, confirmation, administration of the sacraments in private places, which are brought in by a null Assembly, and are contrary to the Confession of Faith, as it was meant and subscribed anno 1580, and divers times since, and to the order and constitutions of this Kirk. Thirdly, The changing of the government of the Kirk from the Assemblies of the Kirk to the persons of some kirkmen, usurping prioritie and power over their brethren, by the way, and under the name of Episcopall government, against the Confession of Faith, 1580, against the order set downe in the Book of Policy, and against the intention and constitution of this Kirk from the beginning. Fourthly, The civill places and power of kirkmen, their sitting in Session, Councell, and Exchequer, their riding, sitting, and voting in Parliament, and their sitting in the Bench as Justices of Peace, which, according to the constitutions of this Kirk, are incompatible with their spiritual sanction, lifting them up above their brethren in worldly pomp, and do tend to the hinderance of the ministric. Fifthly, The keeping and authorising corrupt Assemblies at Linlithgow, 1606 and 1608, at Glasgow, 1610, at Aberdene, 1616, at St Andrews, 1617, at Perth, 1618, which are null and unlawfull, as being called and constitute quite contrary to the order and constitutions of this Kirk, received and practised ever since the reformation of religion; and withal laboring to introduce novations into this Kirk, against the order and religion established. A sixth cause is the want of lawfull and free Generall Assemblies, rightly constitute, of Pastors, Doctors, and Elders, yearly or oftner, pro re nata, according to the libertie of this Kirk, expressed in the Book of Policy, and acknowledged in the Act of Parliament, 1592. After which the whole Assembly in one heart and voyce did declare, that these and such other, proceeding from the neglect and breach of the Nationall Covenant of this Kirk and kingdome, made in anno 1580, have been indeede the true and maine causes of all our evils and distractions. And therefore ordain, according to the constitutions of the Generall Assemblies of this Kirk, and upon the grounds respective above specified, That the foresaid Service Book, Books of Cannons, and Ordination, and the High Commission, be still rejected; that the Articles of Perth be no more practised; that episcopall government, and the civill places and power of kirkmen, be holden still as unlawfull in this Kirk; that the above named pretended Assemblies, at Linlithgow, 1606 and 1608, at Glasgow, 1610, at Aberdene, 1616, at St Andrews, 1617, at Perth, 1618, be hereafter accounted as null and of none effect. And that for the preservation of religion, and preventing all such evils in time coming, Generall Assemblies rightly constitute, as the proper and competent judge of all matters ecclesiasticall, heereafter be kept yearly and oftner, pro re nata, as occasion and necessity shall require; the necessity of these occasionall Assemblies being first remonstrate to his Majestie by humble supplication, as also that Kirk-Sessions, Presbyteries, and Synodall Assemblies, be constitute and observed according to the order of this Kirk.

After the voycing of the act, (anent the causes of our bygone evils,) his Majestie's Commissioner consented verbally to the said act, and promised to give into the clerk in writ the declaration of his consent, and that he should ratifie this act in the ensuing parliament.

Sess. 18, Aug. 26, 1639.—Act approving an old Register of the Generall Assembly.

The whole Assembly, (upon the report made to them anent the old Register of the Assembly gotten from Mr John Rig,) all in one voice approved the said Register, and ordained the same to make faith in judgement and outwith, in all time coming, as a true and authentick Register of the Kirk of Scotland, conforme to the testimonie subscribed by the Committee, to be insert in the Books of Assembly, whereof the tenor followeth:—

We, under-subscribers, forsameikle as the late Generall Assembly, holden at Glasgow, gave power and commission to us to peruse, examine, and cognosce, upon the validity, faith, and strength of the Books and Registers of the Assembly, particularly set down in the commission given to us thereanent; according whereunto we did carefully view, peruse, and consider the saids Registers, and gave our testimony thereof under our hands, of the validity and sufficiency of the samine to the said Generall Assembly. And now, having a new commission given to us from the Generall Assembly now presently conveyed and sitting at Edinburgh, to peruse, examine, and cognosce upon the validity, faith, and strength of another Register of the Assembly, which was not set down and recommended to us by the said former commission, which Register beginneth at the Assembly holden at Edinburgh the sixth day of March 1572, and endeth at the Assembly likewise holden at Edinburgh 1573, we have carefully viewed, perused, and considered the said Register; and being deeply and maturely advised, as in a matter of greatest weight and consequence, do attest before God, and upon our consciences declare to the world, and this present Assembly, that the said Register above exprest is a famous, authentick, and good Register, which ought to be so repnted, and have publike faith in judgement and outwith, as a valid and true record in all things; and finds the same to be of the same hand-writ, and subscribed by the same clerk of the Generall Assembly, as divers of the said other Registers (formerly perused by us) are. And in testimonie of our solemne affirmation, we have subscribed these presents with our hands, at Edinburgh, the day of August 1639.

Act Sess. 19, August 27, 1639.—Act approving the Deposition of the Ministers by the Committees.

The Assembly, after the receiving of the whole reports from the committees appointed for revising of the processes and sentences, led, deduced, and pronounced before, and by the severall commissions granted by the Assembly at Glasgow, all in one voice approved the saids whole processes as orderly proceeded, and the whole sentences pronounced thereintill as just and lawful decrees, without prejudice of any favour that can be showne to any person or persons, against whom the said sentences are pronounced upon their supplications, or of justice to such as complain of their processe, and offers to reduce the same, upon whatsoever reason competent, by the constitution of this Kirk and kingdome, before the Generall Assembly, and the commissioners thereof, they being appointed for that effect.

Act Sess. 20, August 28, 1639.—Act anent receiving of deposed Ministers.

The which day the Generall Assembly, upon the report of the committees anent these who are deposed by Synods, Doe make this generall act, recommending to the Synods all these who are deposed before them for subscribing of the declinator, and reading of the Service-Book, and for no other grosse cause, That upon their true repentance and submission to the constitutions of this Kirk, and upon their purgation and clearnesse from any grosse faults laid to their charge in any new processe against them, they may be found by the Synods capable of the ministrie, when God grants them an ordinary and lawfull calling, by admission from the Presbyterie, either in the church they served in before, or in any other church.

Act Sess. 21, August 29, 1639.—Act anent the keeping of the Lord's Day.

The Generall Assembly recommendeth to the severall Presbyteries the execution of the old Acts of Assembly against the breach of the Sabbath-day, by going of Mylnes, Salt-Pannes, Salmond-fishing, or any such like labour; and to this end revives and renues the Acts of the Assembly holden at Halyrudehouse, 1602, Sess. 5, whereof the tenor follows:—

The Assembly, considering that the conventions of the people, specially on the Sabbath-day, are very rare in many plaeces, by distraction of labour, not only in harvest and seed-time, but also every Sabbath, by fishing both of white fish and salmond-fishing, and in going of mylnes: Therefore, the Assembly dischargeth and inhibiteth all such labour of fishing, as well white fish as salmond fish, and going of mylnes of all sorts upon the Sabbath, under the pain of incurring the censures of the Kirk; and ordaines the Commissioners of this Assembly to mean the same to his Majestie, and to desire that a pecuniiall paine may be enjoyned upon the contraveeners of this present act.

Act Sess. 22, August 29, 1639, à meridie.—Articles and Overtures approved by the Assembly.

That some Commissioners be appointed to visit and peruse the whole Acts of Generall Assemblies, and to marke such Acts as are for the use of the Kirk in general, to extract the same out of the registers, to the effect that after they be tryed, they may be printed according to the old acts of the Assembly at Edinburgh, March 7, 1574, Session 9.

The Assembly appoints the Presbyterie of Edinburgh to have a care of this article, and to report their diligence to the next Assembly.

That course may be taken for restraining of people from passing to England to marry, which is the occasion of great inconveniencies.

The Assembly alloweth this article, and recommends to the Parliament that they would appoint a pecuniall summe to be payed by the contraveeners.

That the acts furnishing expences to commissioners sent by the Presbyteries to the Generall Assembly, and sent in commission by Generall Assemblies, may be explained; and it be declared that all such commissioners whatsoever, by their stipends may be furnished by the kirks of the Presbyterie, according to the order set down in the act of the last Assembly, since the errand is common, and the benefit concerneth all; and that order may be taken, how that an expedient voluntarie course, thought fit by the Assembly, shall, by advise of Parliament, have the force of a law, for compelling these to pay who are stented, both for the last and this Assembly, and in time to come.

The Assembly allows this article, and referres the same to the Parliament.

That the Session-books of every Paroche be presented once a year to the Presbyteries, that they may be tryed by them.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

That the Act of the 38th Assembly at Edinburgh, October 24, 1578, Sess. 8, ordaining Ministers who are deposed to be charged, under the pain of excommunication, to dimit their places, that they may be unquestionably vacand, may now be renewed.

The Assembly alloweth this article, and remits the same to the Parliament.

The Assembly would revive or renew all former Acts of Assembly against Papists, and excommunicate persons, against haunTERS with them, and receivers of them.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

That an uniforme Catechisme may be appointed to be used throughout this whole Kingdome, in the examinations before the communion.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

That all ministers or intrants presented to kirks be tryed before their admission, if they be qualified for the places to which they are presented, besides the ordinary tryalls of expectants before their entrie to the ministric.

The Assembly alloweth this article.

Sess. 23, Aug. 30, 1639.—The Supplication of the Generall Assembly to the King's Majestie's Commissioner, concerning the Book called "The Large Declaration."

Wee, the members of this present Assembly, for our selves, and in name of the severall Presbyteries, Burghs, and Universities, for which we are commissioners, representing the great dishonour done to God, our King, this Kirk, and whole kingdome, by the book called "A Large Declaration," have here represented the same to your Grace, and have collected some amongst many of false, grosse, and absurd passages, that, from the consideration thereof, your Grace perceiving the intolerable evils fore-saids contained therein, may be pleased to represent the same to our gracious Sovereigne, and in our behalFs humbly to beseech his Majestie, so much wronged by the many foul and false relations, suggested and perswaded to him as trneths, and by stealing the protection of his royall name and authoritie to the patrocinie of such a book, to be pleased first to call in the said book, and thereby to shew his dislike thereof; next, to give commission and warrant to cite all such parties as are either knowne or suspect to have hand in it, and to appoint such as his Majestie knowes to be either authors, informers, or any wayes accessarie, being natives of this kingdome, to be sent hither to abyde their tryall and censure before the Judge Ordinary, and in speciall, Master Walter Balcanquell, now Deane of Durham, who is known, and hath professed to be the author, at least avower and maintainer of a great part thereof; that by their examplar punishment, others may be deterred from such dangerous courses, as in such a way to raise sedition betwixt the King and his subjects, God's honour may be vindicate from so high contempt, his Majestie's justice may appear, not only in cutting away such malefactors, but in discouraging all such under-miners of his throne, his loyall and loving subjects shall be infinitely contented to be cleared before the world of so false and unjust imputations, and will live hereafter in the greater securitie, when so dangerous a course of sedition is prevented, and so will have the greater and greater cause to pray for his Majestie's long and prosperous reigne.

His Majestie's Commissioner in Councill having received the said supplication, promised to impart the same to his Majesty, and to report his diligence therein.

The Supplication of the Assembly to his Majestie's High Commissioner, and the Lords of Secret Councill.

Wee, the Generall Assembly, considering, with all humble and thankfull acknowledgement, the many recent favours bestowed upon us by his Majestie, and that there resteth nothing for crowning of his Majestie's incomparable goodnesse towards us, but that all the members of this Kirk and kingdome be joyned in one and the same Confession and Covenant with God, with the King's Majestie, and amongst our selves: And conceiving the main lett and impediment to this so good a work, and so much wished by all, to have been the informations made to his Majestie of our intentions to shake off civill and dutifull obedience due to soveraignty, and to diminish the King's greatnesse and authoritie, and being most willing and desirous to remove this and all such impediments which may hinder and impede so full and perfect an union, and for clearing of our loyaltie, Wee, in our own names, and in name of all the rest of the subjects and congregations whom we represent, do now, in all humility, represent to your Grace, his Majestie's Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majestie's most Honourable Privie Councill, and declares before God and the world, that we never had nor have any thought of withdrawing ourselves from that humble and dutifull obedience to his Majestie, and to his government, which by the descent and under the reign of 107 kings is most chearfully acknowledged by us and our predecessors; and that we never had nor have any intention nor desire to attempt any thing that may tend to the dishonour of God, or the diminution of the King's greatnesse and authoritie: But, on the contrary, acknowledging our quietnesse, stabilitie, and happinesse to depend upon the safety of the King's Majestie's person, and maintenance of his greatnesse and royall authority, who is God's viecegerent set over us, for the maintenance of religion and ministration of justice, wee have solemnly sworn, and do sweare, not only our mutuall concurrence and assistance for the cause of religion, and to the uttermost of our power, with our means and lives, to stand to the defence of our dread Sovereigne, his person and authority, in preservation and defence of the true religion, liberties, and lawes of this Kirk and kingdome, but also in every cause which may concerne his Majestie's honour, shall, according to the lawes of this kingdome, and the duties of good subjects, concurre with our friends and followers in quiet manner, or in armes, as we shall be required of his Majestie, his Councill, or any having his authority. And, therefore, being most desirous to cleare ourselves of all imputation of this kinde, and following the laudable example of our predecessors, 1589, do most humbly supplicate your Grace, his Majestie's Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majestie's most Honourable Privie Councill, to enjoyn by act of Councill, that this Confession and Covenant, which, as a testimony of our fidelity to God, and loyaltie to our King, we have subscribed, be subscribed by all his Majestie's subjects, of what rank and quality soever.

The Act of the Lords of Councill at Edinburgh, Aug. 30, 1639, containing the Answer of the preceding Supplication.

The which day, in presence of the Lord Commissioner and the Lords of Privie Councill, compeired personally John Earle of Rothes, James Earle of Montrose, John Lord Lowdown, Sir George Stirling of Keir, Knight, Sir William Douglas of Cavers, Knight, Sir Henry Wood of Bonytoun, Knight, John Smyth, Burgesse of Edinburgh, Mr Robert Barclay, Provost of Irwing, Mr Alexander Henderson, Minister at Edinburgh, and Mr Archibald Johnstoun, Clerk to the Generall Assembly, and in the name of the present sitting Generall Assembly, gave in to the Lord Commissioner and Lords of Privie Councill the petition above written; which being read, heard, and considered by the saids Lords, they have ordained, and ordain the same to be insert and registrate in the books of Privie Councill, and according to the desire thereof, ordaines the said Confession and Covenant to be subscribed in time coming by all his Majestie's subjects of this kingdome, of what ranke and quality soever.

The King's Majestie's Commissioner's Declarations.

The which day his Majestie's Commissioner and Lords of Councill, after the receiving of the supplication of the Generall Assembly, anent the subscribing of the Covenant, having returned to the Assembly, his Majestie's Commissioner, in name of the Councill, declared, that he had received the supplication of the Assembly, desiring that the Covenant might receive the force of an act of Councill, to be subscribed by all his Majestie's subjects, that they had found the desire so fair and reasonable that they conceived themselves bound in duety to grant the same; and thereupon have made an act of Councill to that effect; and that there rested now the Act of Assembly. And that he himself was so fully satisfied, that he came now, as his Majestie's Commissioner, to consent fully unto it; and that he was most willing that it should be enacted here in this Assembly, to oblige all his Majestie's subjects to subscribe the said Covenant, with the Assemblies explanation. And because there was a third thing desired, his subscription, as the King's Commissioner, unto the Covenant, which he behooved to do, with a declaration in writ; and he declared as a subject he should subscribe the Covenant as strictly as any with the Assemblies Declaration; but as his Majestie's Commissioner, in his name, behooved to prefix to his subscription the declaration following, which no Scots subjects should subscribe or have the benefit of, no not himself as Earle of Traquair; the tenor whereof follows:—

“Seeing this Assembly, according to the laudable form and custome heretofore kept in the like cases, have in an humble and dutifull way supplicate to us, his Majestie's Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majestie's most honourable Privie Councill, that the Covenant, with the explanation of this Assembly, might be subscribed; and to that effect, that all the subjects of this kingdome by act of Councill be required to doe the same; and that therein, for vindicating themselves from all suspitions of disloyaltie, or derogating from the greatnesse and authoritie of our dread soveraigne, have therewith added a clause, whereby this Covenant is declared one in substance with that which was subscribed by his Majestie's father, of blessed memory, 1580, 1581, 1590, and oftner since renewed: Therefore, I, as his Majestie's Commissioner, for the full satisfaction of the subjects, and for settling a perfect peace in church and kingdome, doe, according to my foresaids declaration and subscription, subjoynd to the act of this Assembly of the date the 17th of this instant, allow and consent that the Covenant be subscribed throughout all this kingdome. In witnes whereof, I have subscribed the premisses.”

Likeas his Majestie's Commissioner read and gave in the Declaration following, of his consent to the act of the Assembly, August 17, anent the causes of our bygone evils:—

I, John Earle of Traquair, his Majestie's Commissioner in this present Assembly, doe in his Majestie's name declare, that notwithstanding of his Majestie's own inclination, and many other grave and weightie considerations, yet such is his Majestie's incomparable goodness, that for settling the present distractions, and giving full satisfaction to the subject, He doth allow, likeas I, his Majestie's Commissioner, do consent to the foresaid act, and have subscribed the premisses.

Likeas his Majestie's Commissioner read and gave in the Declaration following :—

It is alwayes hereby declared by me, his Majestie's Commissioner, That the practise of the premisses, prohibited within this Kirk and kingdome, outwith the kingdome of Scotland, shall never bind nor inferre censure against the practises outwith the kingdome. Which, when the Commissioner required to be insert in the register of the Kirk, and the Moderator in name of the Assembly refused to give warrant for such practise, as not agreeable with a good conscience, his Grace urged, that it should be recorded at least that he made such a declaration, whatsoever was the Assemblies judgement in the contrair. And so it is to be understood to be insert here onely recitative.

Act ordaining the Subscription of the Confession of Faith and Covenant, with the Assemblies Declaration.

The Generall Assembly, considering the great happinesse which may flow from a full and perfect union of this Kirk and kingdome, by joyning of all in one and the same Covenant with God, with the King's Majestie, and amongst ourselves, having by our great oath declared the uprightnesse and loyaltie of our intentions in all our proceedings, and having withall supplicated his Majestie's High Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majestie's honorable Privie Councell, to injoyne by act of councell all the lieges in time coming to subscribe the Confession of Faith and Covenant, which, as a testimony of our fidelity to God and loyaltie to our King, we have subscribed: And, seeing his Majestie's High Commissioner, and the Lords of his Majestie's honourable Privie Councell, have granted the desire of our supplication, ordaining by civill authority all his Majestie's lieges in time coming to subscribe the foresaid Covenant, that our union may bee the more full and perfect, We, by our act and constitution ecclesiasticall, do approve the foresaid Covenant in all the heads and clauses thereof, and ordains of new, under all ecclesiasticall censure, that all the masters of universities, colledges, and schooles, all schollers at the passing of their degrees, all persons suspect of Papistry or any other error, and, finally, all the members of this Kirk and kingdome, subscribe the same with these words prefixed to their subscription :—“The article of this Covenant, which was at the first subscription referred to the determination of the Generall Assembly, being determined, and thereby the Five Articles of Perth, the government of the Kirk by Bishops, the civill places and power of kirkmen, upon the reasons and grounds contained in the acts of the Generall Assembly, declared to be unlawfull within this Kirk, we subscribe according to the determination foresaid.” And ordains the Covenant, with this declaration, to be insert in the registers of the Assemblies of this Kirk, Generall, Provinciall, and Presbyteriall, ad perpetuam rei memoriam; and in all humility supplicates his Majestie's High Commissioner, and the honourable Estates of Parliament, by their authority to ratifie and injoyne the same, under all civill paines, which will tend to the glory of God, preservation of religion, the King's Majestie's honour, and perfect peace of this Kirk and kingdome.

August 30, 1639.—Act anent Appellations.

The Assembly appointed, That in all time hereafter no appellations should be leaping over either Presbyterie or Synod, but to ascend by degrees as from the Kirk-Session to the Presbytry, or from the Presbyterie to the Synod, and from the Synod to the Generall Assembly, except it be after the Synod be past, and immediatly before the Generall Assembly, or in the time thereof; and renews all former acts made to this effect.

Act anent advising with Synods and Presbyteries before determination in Novations.

The Generall Assembly, desiring that the intended reformation being recovered, may be established, ordains, That no novation which may disturbe the peace of the Church and make division be suddenly proponed and enacted; but so as the motion be first communicate to the severall Synods, Presbyteries, and Kirks, that the matter may be approved by all at home, and commissioners may come well prepared, unanimously to conclude a solide deliberation upon these points in the Generall Assembly.

Act anent Ministers Catechising, and Family Exercises.

The Assembly, considering that the long-awaited-for fruits of the Gospel, so mercifully planted and preserved in this land, and the reformation of ourselves and families, so solemnly vowed to God of late in our Covenant, cannot take effect except the knowledge and worship of God be caried from the pulpit to every family within each parish, hath, therefore, appointed that every minister, besides his paines on the Lord's day, shall have weekly catechising of some part of the paroch, and not altogether cast over the examination of the people till a little before the communion. Also, that in every familie the worship of God be erected where it is not both morning and evening, and that the children and servants be catechised at home by the masters of the families, whereof account shall be taken by the minister and elders assisting him in the visitation of every family; and, lest they fail, that visitation of the severall kirks be seriously followed by every Presbyterie, for this end among others. The execution and successe whereof, being tried by the Synods, let it be represented to the next Generall Assembly.

Scss. 24, Aug. 30, à meridie.—The Assembly's Supplication to the King's Majestie.

MOST GRACIOUS SOVERAIGNE,

Wee, your Majestie's most humble and loyall subjects, the commissioners from all the parts of this your Majestie's ancient and native kingdome, and members of the Nationall Assembly convened at Edinburgh by your Majestie's speciall indiction, and honoured with the presence of your Majestie's High Commissioner, have been waiting for a day of rejoycing and of solemne thanksgiving to be rendred to God by this whole Kirk and kingdome, for giving us a King so just and religious, that it is not only lawfull for us to be Christians under your Majestie's government, which sometime hath been the greatest praise of great princes, but also that it hath pleased your gracious Majestie to make known that it is your royall will and pleasure that all matters ecclesiasticall be determined in free Nationall Assemblies, and matters civill in Parliaments, which is a most noble and ample expression of your Majestie's justice, and we trust shall be a powerfull mean of our common happinesse under your Majestie's most blessed reign. In the mean while, we do most humbly, upon the knees of our hearts, blesse your Majesty for that happinesse already begun in the late Assembly at Edinburgh, in the proceedings whereof, next under God, we have laboured to approve ourselves unto your Majestie's vicegerent, as if your Majestie's eyes had been upon us, which was the desire of our souls, and would have beene the matter of our full rejoycing, and doe still continuë your Majestie's most humble supplicants for your Majestie's civill sanction and ratification of the constitutions of the Assembly in Parliament; that your Majestie's princely power, and the ecclesiasticall authority joyning in one, the mutuall embracements of religion and justice, of truth and peace, may be seen in this land, which shall be to us as a resurrection from the dead, and shall make us, being not only so farre recovered, but also revived, to fill heaven and earth with our praises, and to pray that King Charles may be more and more blessed, and his throne established before the Lord for ever.

The Assembly appoints the next Generall Assembly to sit at Aberdene the last Tuesday of July next, 1640 years; and warneth all Presbyteries, Universities, and Burrows, to send their commissioners for keeping the samine; and thereafter the Assembly was concluded by giving of thanks by the Moderator, and singing of a psalme, according to the custome.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY, CONVEENED
AT ABERDENE, JULY 28, 1640.

Sess. 2, July 29, 1640.

The Assembly having past the first day before they would make any act in attending of his Majestic's Commissioner—

This day the Moderator openly asked in face of the Assembly, if there was any Commissioner come from his Majestic; and finding there was none, the Assembly proceeded according to their liberties.

Overtures given in by the Committee appointed by the last Assembly, anent the ordering of the Assembly-House, which being read in audience of the Assembly, they approved the same.

I. The Assembly finds it expedient for the ordering of the house in all time coming, that the commissioners sit together unmixt, and that the places where they sit be railed about, or some other way divided from the seats of others, and that places be provided without the bounds of the commissioners' seats, to persons of respect who are not commissioners, and others according to their qualitics, as the magistrates of the town shall find most convenient.

II. Also, that the commissioners having received tickets from the magistrates of the burgh, at the delivery of their commissions, wherby they may have ready access to the Assemblie-house and place appointed for them, do keep the hour of meeting precisely, and whosoever comes after the time, or shall be found absent at the calling of the Rols, to be censured as the Assemblie sees fitting; and whatsoever Presbyterie, Burgh, or Universitie, shall not send commissioners, or commissioners sent from them doe not come at all to the Assembly, be summond unto the next Assembly, and censured as the Assembly shall find reasonable.

III. That foure persons of respect have warrant from the Assembly to injoyne that there be no standing, no din, nor disorderly behaviour; and if any shall disobey them, or direct his speech to any except to the Moderator, and that one at once, with leave first asked and given, to be rebuked publikely by the Moderator; and if he desist not, be removed out of the Assembly for that Session.

IV. That no motion come in unto the Assembly but by the committee appointed for matters of that nature; and if the committee refuse to answer the same, let it be proponed to the Assembly, with the reasons thereof.

V. That the minutes of ilk Session be read before their rising, and if the matter concerne the whole Kirk, let it be drawn up in forme and read in the begining of the next ensuing Session, that the Assembly may judge whether or not it bee according to their minde.*

Act anent the Demolishing of Idolatrous Monuments.

Forasmuch as the Assembly is informed, that in divers places of this kingdome, and specially in the North parts of the same, many idolatrous monuments, erected and made for religious worship are yet extant, such as crucifixes, images of Christ, Mary, and saints departed, ordaines the saids monuments to be taken down, demolished, and destroyed, and that with all convenient diligence; and that the care of this work shall be incumbent to the Presbyteries and Provinciaall Assemblies within this kingdome; and their commissioners to report their diligence herein to the next Generall Assemblies.

Act against Witches and Charmers.

The Assembly ordaines all ministers within the kingdome, carefully to take notice of charmers, witches, and all such abusers of the people, and to urge the acts of Parliament to be execute against them; and that the commissioners from the Assembly to the Parliament shall recommend to the said supreme judicatory the care of the execution of the lawes against such persons in the most behoovefull way.

Sess. 5, Aug. 1, 1640.—Act for censuring Speakers against the Covenant.

The Assembly ordaines, That such as have subscribed the Covenant and speakes against the same, if he be a minister, shall be deprived; and if he continue so, being deprived, shall be excommunicate; and if he be any other man, shall be dealt with as perjured, and satisfie publicly for his perjury.

Sess. 10, Aug. 5, 1640.—Act against Expectants refusing to subscribe the Covenant.

The Assembly ordaines, That if any expectant shall refuse to subscribe the Covenant, he shall be declared uncapable of a pedagogie, teaching of a school, reading at a kirk, preaching within a Presbyterie, and shall not have libertie of residing within a burgh, universitie, or colledge; and if they continue obstinate to be processed.

The Generall Assembly appoints the next Assembly to be in St Andrews, the third Tuesday of July 1641; and that the Moderator, in a convenient way, by the Secret Councill or otherwise, as may best serve, request the King's Majestie to send his Commissioner to the said Assembly. And if any exigent fall out, that the Presbyterie of Edinburgh give advertisement for an Assembly pro re nata.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AT ST ANDREWS AND EDINBURGH, 1641.

Sess. 1, July 20, 1641.

John Earle of Weymes, his Majestie's Commissioner, presented his Majestie's Letter to the Assembly, whereof the tenor followeth:—

CHARLES R.

TRUSTIE AND WELBELOVED, Wee greet you well. It is no small part of our royall care and desires, that the true reformed religion, wherein by the grace of God wee resolve to live and dye, be settled peaceably in that our ancient and native kingdome of Scotland, and that the same be truly taught, and universally received and professed by our subjects there of all degrees. For preventing of all division and trouble hereafter, wee did intend in our own royall person to have been present at this Assembly, but conceiving it to be unfitting to detaine the ministers from their particular charges till the time of our coming to the Parliament, we have resolved to make knowne unto you by these, and by our Commissioner, that in the approaching Parliament it is our intention, by our authority to ratifie and confirm the Constitutions of the late Assembly at Edinburgh, that they may be obeyed by all our subjects living in that our kingdome; and that we will take into our royall consideration by what meanes the churches belonging to our presentation, when any of them shall happen to vaik, may be best provided with well qualified preachers: Like as we are not unwilling to grant presentations unto such as in these times of trouble have entred into the ministerie, providing they have been examined by the Presbyteries, and approved by them. Because we want not our own feares of the decay of learning in that Church and kingdome, we intend also to consider of the best meanes for helping the schooles and colleges of learning, especially of divinity, that there may be such a number of preachers there, as that each parish having a minister, and the Gospel being preached in the most remote parts of the kingdome, all our subjects may taste of our care in that kinde, and have more and more cause to blesse God that we are set over them. And, finally, so tender is our care, that it shall not be our fault if the churches and colleges there flourish not in learning and religion; for which royall testimonie of our goodnesse, we require nothing upon your part but that which God hath bound you unto, even that you be faithfull in the charge committed unto you, and care for the soules of the people; that you study peace and unity amongst yourselves and amongst the people, against all schisme and faction; and that you not only pray for us, but that you teach the people, which we trust are not unwilling to pay that honour and obedience which they owe unto us, as his Vicegerent set over them for their good; wherein we expect you will by your example goe before them. Which hoping you will doe, wee bid you farewell. From our Court at Whitehall, the 10th day of July 1641.

Sess. 3, July 28, 1641.—Act approving the Overtures of the Assembly at Aberdene, for ordering the Assembly-House.

The overtures for ordering the Assembly-house, given in to and approved by the Assembly of Aberdene, the 29th July 1640, Act Sess. 2, were openly read, and again approved by this Assembly, and ordained to be kept the whole time thereof.

Sess. 5, July 30, 1641.—Act anent old Ministers bruiking their Benefices.

The Assembly having considered the supplication given in by Doctor Robert Howie, Provost of the New Colledge of St Andrews, whereby he craved that (notwithstanding of his dismissal of his charge) he should not be prejudged of his full provision and maintenance during his life time, the Assembly thinks it fit and necessary that his provision and maintenance should not be diminished, but that he should enjoy the same fully, as of before, during all the dayes of his lifetime, and craveth his dismissal to be only but a cessation from his charge, because of his age and inability; and declares that old ministers and professors of divinity shall not, by their cessation from their charge through age and inability, be put from enjoying their old maintenance and dignity. And recommends this and others the like things, concerning the estate of that Universitie of St Andrews, to the Parliament, and the visitation to be appointed from the Assembly and Parliament. And likewise, the Assembly being informed that the said Doctor Howie hath been very painfull in his charge, and that he hath divers papers which would be very profitable for the Kirk, therefore, they think fit that the said Doctor Howie be desired to collect these papers which doeth concerne and may be profitable for the use of the Kirk, that the samine may be showne to the visitors of the said Universitie.

Sess. 8, August 2, 1641, à meridie.—Act against sudden receiving Ministers deposed.

The Assembly ordaines, That ministers who are deposed either by Presbyteries, Synods, or Generall Assemblies, or committees from Assemblies, for the publike cause of the reformation and order of this Kirk, shall not be suddenly received againe to the ministerie, till they first evidence their repentance both before the Presbyterie and Synod within the bounds where they were deposed, and thereafter the samine reported to the next ensuing Generall Assembly.

Sess. 9, August 3, 1641.

The Overtures underwritten, concerning the Universities and Colledges of this kingdom, to be represented by the Generall Assembly to the King's Majesty and Parliament, being openly read, the Assembly approved the saids Overtures, and ordained them to be recommended to the Parliament.

First, Because the good estate both of the Kirk and Commonwealth dependeth mainly upon the flourishing of Universities and Colledges, as the seminaries of both, which cannot be expected unlesse the poore meanes which they have be helped, and sufficient revenues be provided for them, and the same well employed: Therefore, that out of the rents of prelaties, collegiat or chapter-kirks, or such like, a sufficient maintenance be provided for a competent number of professors, teachers, and bursers in all faculties, and especially in divinitie, and for upholding, repairing, and enlarging the fabrick of the colledges, furnishing libraries, and suchlike good uses, in every universitie and colledge.

II. Next, for keeping of good order, preventing and removing of abuses, and promoting of piety and learning, it is very needfull and expedient that there be a communion and correspondencie kept betwixt all the universities and colledges; and, therefore, that it be ordained that there be a meeting once every year, at such times and places as shall be agreed upon, of commissioners from every university and colledge, to consult and determine upon the common affairs, and whatsoever may concerne them, for the ends above specified, and who also, or some of their number, may represent what shall be needfull and expedient for the same effect to Parliaments and General Assemblies.

III. Item, That special care be had that the places of the professors, especially of professors of divinity, in every university and colledge, be filled with the ablest men, and best affected to the Reformation and order of this Kirk.

Sess. 10, August 4, 1641.—Act against Impietie and Schisme.

The Assembly, seriously considering the present case and condition of this Kirk and Kingdom, what great things the Lord hath done for us, especially since the renewing of our Covenant, notwithstanding our former backsliding and desertion; and if we shall either become remisse in the duties of piety, or shall not constantly hold and keep our religion, unto which we have bound our selves so straitly and solemnly, what dishonour we doe unto the name of God before men, who have their eyes upon us, and how great judgements we bring upon ourselves: Upon these and the like considerations, the Assembly doth finde it most necessary to stirre up themselves, and to provoke all others, both ministers and people, of all degrees, not only to the religious exercise of publike worship in the congregation, and of private worship in their families, and of every one by themselves apart, but also to the duties of mutuall edification, by instruction, admonition, exhorting one another to forwardnesse in religion, and comforting one another in whatsoever distresse; and that in all their meetings, whether in the way of civill conversation, or by reason of their particular callings, or any other occasion offered by divine providence, no corrupt communication proceed out of their mouth, but that which is good, to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers: And because the best means have been, and may still be despised or abused, and particularly the duetie of mutuall edification, which hath been so little in use, and so few know how to practise in the right manner, may be, upon the one part, subject to the mocking of ungodly and worldly men, who cannot endure that in others which they are not willing to practise themselves, and, upon the other part, to many errors and abuses, to which the godly through their weaknes may fall, or by craftinesse of others may be drawn into, such as are error, heresie, schisme, scandall, self-conceit, and despising of others, pressing above the common calling of Christians, and usurping that which is proper to the pastoral vocation, contempt or misregard of the publike means, idle and unprofitable questions, which edifie not, uncharitable censurings, neglect of duties in particular callings, businesse in other men's matters and callings, and many such others, in doctrine, charity, and manners, which have dolefully rent the bowels of other kirks, to the great prejudice of the Gospel.

Therefore, the Assembly, moved with the zeal of God against all abuses and corruptions, and according to their manifold obligations, most earnestly desiring and thirsting to promote the work of Reformation, and to have the comfort and power of true godlinesse sensible to every soul, and religion to be universally practised in every family, and by every person, at all occasions, doth charge all the ministers and members of this Kirk whom they doe represent, that according to their severall places and vocations, they endeavour to suppress all impiety and mocking of religious exercises, especially of such as put foule aspersions, and factious or odious names upon the godly. And, upon the other part, that in the fear of God they be aware and spiritually wise, that under the name and pretext of religious exercises, otherwayes lawfull and necessary, they fall not into the foresaid abuses; especially, that they eschew all meetings which are apt to breed error, scandall, schisme, neglect of duties and particular callings, and such other evils as are the works not of the Spirit but of the flesh, and are contrary to truth and peace; and that the Presbyteries and Synods have a care to take order with such as transgresse the one way or the other.

Sess. 14, August 6, 1641, à meridie.—Act anent Novations.

Since it hath pleased God to vouchsafe us the libertie of yearly Generall Assemblies, It is ordained, according to the Acts of the Assembly at Edinburgh, 1639, and at Aberdene, 1640, that no novation in doctrine, worship, or government, be brought in or practised in this Kirk, unlesse it be first propounded, examined, and allowed in the Generall Assembly; and that transgressors in this kinde be censured by Presbyteries and Synods.

Act Sess. 15, August 7, 1641.—Overtures anent Bursars and Expectants.

The Overtures underwritten, being openly read in audience of the Assembly, were approved, and declared by them to be Acts of the Assembly in all time coming to be observed respective, as the samine bears.

I. The Assembly thinks meet, for maintaining of bursars of divinitie, that every Presbyterie that consists of twelve ministers shall maintain a bursar; and where the number is fewer nor twelve, shall be joynd with these out of another Presbyterie where their number exceeds. Where this course is not already kept it is to be begun without longer delay; and every Provinciall is ordained to give an accompt of their number of bursars that is constantly to be entertained by their province, at the next ensuing Generall Assembly.

II. No expectant shall be permitted to preach in publike before a congregation till first he be tryed after the same manner, howbeit not altogether with that accuracie which is enjoyned by the act of the Assembly at Glasgow, 1638, which prescribes the order and manner of tryall that is to be kept with these who are to be admitted to the holy ministrie; and none so tryed shall preach in publike without the bounds of the University or Presbyterie where he past his tryalls, till he first make it known to the other Presbyteries where he desires to be heard, by a testimoniall from the Universitie or Presbyterie where he lived, that he hath been of an honest conversation, and past his tryalls conform to the order here prescribed: Which being done in the meeting of the Province or Presbyterie where he desires to be heard, he is to be allowed by them to preach within the bounds of that Province or Presbyterie, without any further tryall to be taken of him.

III. Expectants being educate in a colledge that was corrupt, or under a corrupt minister, if they themselves have been known to have been tainted with error, or opposite to our Covenant and the blessed work of Reformation within this Kirk, the same order is to be kept in admitting them to the holy ministry, or to any place in the colledges or schooles of this kingdome, that was ordained to be kept in admission of these ministers who fled out of the cuntry, and shew themselves opposite to our Covenant and Reformation.

Act Sess. 17, August 9, 1641.—Act against unlawfull Bands.

The Assembly, taking to their consideration the question proponed unto them concerning the Band, the copy whereof was presented before them from the Parliament, doth find and declare, that Bands of this and the like nature may not lawfully be made. By which declaration the Assembly doth not intend to bring any censure for what is past, and by the wisdome and care of the Committee of the Parliament is taken away, upon any person, who being required by the Moderator and the Clerk, shall, under his hand, declare before them, That as the Assembly doth finde that the subscribers are not astricted by their oath to the tenor of the said Band, so he findeth himself not to be astricted by his oath to the tenor thereof; but the intention of the Assembly is meerly to prevent the like in time coming.

Sess. 18, August 9, 1641, à meridie.—A Letter from some Ministers in England to the Assemblée.

Right Reverend and dear Brethren, now convened in this General Assembly: Wee most heartily salute you in the Lord, rejoicing with you in his unspeakable goodness, so miraculously prospering your late endeavours, both for the restoring and settling of your own liberties and priviledges, in Church and common wealth, (which we heare and hope he is now about to accomplish,) as also for the occasioning and advancing of the worke of reformation among ourselves; for which, as we daily blesse the highest Lord, sole Author of all our good, so doe we acknowledge your selves worthy instruments thereof. And for that (besides all other respects) doe, and ever shall, (by the help of God,) hold you deare unto us, as our own bowels, and our selves obliged to render unto you all due correspondence according to our power, upon all good occasions.

And now, (deare Brethren,) forasmuch as the Church of Christ is but one body, each part whereof cannot but partake in the weale and woe of the whole, and of each other part; and these Churches of England and Scotland may seem both to be imbarqued in the same bottome, to sink and swim together, and are so near conjoynd by many strong tyes, not only as fellow-members under the same Head Christ, and fellow-subjects under the same King; but also by such neighbourhood and vicinity of place, that if any evill shall much infest the one, the other cannot bee altogether free; or if for the present it should, yet in processe of time it would sensibly suffer also. And forasmuch as evils are better remedied in their first beginning then after they have once taken deep root; therefore, we, whose names are here under-written, in the behalf of our selves, and of many others, Ministers of the Church of England, are bold to commend to your consideration (being met together in this venerable Assembly) a difference of great concernment, which you may please (in brief) thus to understand. Almighty God having now, of his infinite goodness, raised up our hopes of removing the yoke of Episcopacie, (under which we have so long groaned,) sundry other forms of Church-government are by sundry sorts of men projected to be set up in the roome thereof; one of which, (amongst others,) is of some Brethren that hold the whole power of Church-government, and all acts thereunto appertaining, (as election, ordination, and deposition of officers, with admission, excommunication, and absolution of members,) are, by Divine ordinance, in foro externo, to be decreed by the most voyces, in and of every particular congregation, which (say they) is the utmost bound of a particular Church, endued with power of government, and only some formalities of solemne execution to be reserved to the officers, (as servants of the saids Church,) if they have any, or if none, then to be performed by some other members, not in office, whom the said Church shall appoint thereunto: And that every of the said particular congregations (whether they consist of few or many members, and be furnished with officers or not) lawfully may and ought to transact, determine, and execute all matters pertaining to the government of themselves, amongst and within themselves, without any authoritative (though not consulatory) concurrence or interposition of any other persons or churches whatsoever, condemning all imperative and decisive power of classes, or compound Presbyteries and Synods, as a meere usurpation. Now, because we conceive that your judgment in this case may conduce much, by the blessing of God, to the settling of this question amongst us; therefore, we doe earnestly intreat the same at your hands, and that so much the rather, because we sometimes hear from those of the aforesaid judgment, that some famous and eminent brethren, even amongst your selves, doe somewhat encline unto an approbation of that way of government. Thus humbly craving pardon for our boldnesse, leaving the matter to your grave considerations, and expecting answer at your convenient leasure, we commit you, and the successe of this your meeting, to the blessing of the Almighty, in whom we shall ever remain,

Your faithfull Brethren, to serve you in all offices of love.

London, July 12, 1641.

*The Assemblies Answer to the English Ministers' Letter.

Right Reverend and dearly beloved Brethren in our Lord and common Saviour Jesus Christ,

Wee, the Ministers and Elders met together in this Nationall Assembly, were not a little refreshed and comforted by the good report which we heard of you, and others of our Brethren of the Kirk of England, by some of our Ministers, who, by the good providence of our Lord, had seen your faces, and conversed with you. But now yet more comforted by your letters which we received, and which were read in the face of the Assembly, witnessing your Christian love, and rejoycing with us in God, for his great and wonderfull work in the reformation of this Kirk, and in the beginning of a blessed reformation amongst your selves, and that you are so sensible of your communion and fellowship with us, and to desire to know our minde and judgement of that which some Brethren amongst you hold concerning Kirk-government.

We doe with our hearts acknowledge and wonder at the great and unspeakable wysedome, mercie, and power of our God, in restoring unto us the truth and puritie of religion, after many backslidings and defection of some in this Kirk, and desire not only to confesse the same before the world, and all other Christian kirkes, but also doe pray for grace to walk worthy of so wonderfull a love; we have been helped by your prayers, in our weak endeavours, and you have mourned with us (we know) in the dayes of our mourning; and therefore is it that you doe now rejoyce and praise God with us. Neither are we out of hope, but the same God shall speedily perfect that which he hath begun amongst you, that your joy may be full; which is the desire of our soule, and for which we doe now pray, and in our severall congregations will be instant at the throne of grace, for this and all other spirituall and temporall blessings upon the Kirk and kingdome of England, by name, expecting the like performance of mutuall love from you, and others equally minded with you, for your parts, till a common consent may be obtained, even that you will recommend the Kirk of Scotland by name in your prayers to God. Thus shall we be as one people, mourning and rejoycing, praying and praising together; which may be one meane of the preservation of unity, and of many other blessings to us both.

We have learned by long experience, ever since the time of Reformation, and specially after the two kingdomes have been (in the great goodnesse of God to both) united under one Head and Monarch, but most of all of late, which is not unknown to you, what danger and contagion in matters of Kirk-government, of divine worship, and of doctrine, may come from the one Kirk to the other, which, beside all other reasons, make us to pray to God, and to desire you, and all that love the honour of Christ, and the peace of these Kirks and kingdomes, heartily to endeavour, that there might be in both Kirks one Confession, one Directory for publike worship, one Catechisme, and one Forme of Kirk-government. And if the Lord, who hath done great things for us, shall be pleased to hearken unto our desires, and to accept of our endeavours, we shall not only have a sure foundation for a durable peace, but shall be strong in God, against the rising or spreading of heresie and schisme amongst our selves, and of invasion from forraine enemies.

Concerning the different formes of Kirk-government, projected by sundrie sorts of men, to be set up in place of Episcopall hierarchie, which we trust is brought near unto its period, we must confesse, that we are not a little grieved that any godly ministers and brethren should be found, who doe not agree with other reformed Kirks in the point of government, as well as in the matter of doctrine and worship; and that we want not our own feares, that where the hedge of Discipline and Government is different, the doctrine and worship shall not long continue the same without change: yet doe not marvel much, that particular Kirks and Congregations which live in such places, as that they can conveniently have no dependencie upon superiour Assemblies, should stand for a kind of independencie and supremacie in themselves, they not considering that in a nation or kingdome, professing the same religion, the government of the Kirk by compound Presbyteries and Synods is a help and strength, and not a hinderance or prejudice, to particular Congregations and Elderships, in all the parts of Kirk-government; and that Presbyteries and Synods are not an extrinsecall power set over particular Kirks, like unto Episcopall dominion, they being no more to be reputed extrinsecall unto the particular Kirks, nor the power of a Parliament, or Convention of Estates, where the shires and cities have their own delegates, is to be held extrinsecall to any particular shire or city.

Our unanimous judgement and uniforme practice is, that, according to the order of the reformed Kirks, and the ordinance of God in his Word, not only the solemne execution of Ecclesiasticall power and authoritie, but the whole acts and exercise thereof, do properly belong unto the officers of the Kirk; yet so that in matters of chiefest importance, the tacite consent of the congregation be had, before their decrees and sentences receive finall execution, and that the officers of a particular congregation may not exercise this power independently, but with subordination unto greater Presbyteries and Synods, Provinciall and Nationall; which, as they are representative of the particular Kirks conjoyned together in one under their government; so their determination, when they proceed orderly, whether in causes common to all or many of the Kirks, or in causes brought before them by appellations or references from the inferiour, in the case of aberation of the inferiour, is to the severall congregations authoritative and obligatorie, and not consultatory only. And this dependencie and subordination we conceive not only to be warranted by the light of nature, which doth direct the Kirk in such things as are common to other societies, or to be a prudentiall way for reformation, and for the preservation of truth and peace, against schisme, heresie, and tyranny, which is the sweet fruits of this government wheresoever it hath place, and which we have found in ancient and late experience, but also to be grounded upon the Word of God, and to be conforme to the paterne of the Primitive and Apostolicall Kirks; and without which, neither could the Kirks in this kingdome have been reformed, nor were we able for any time to preserve truth and unity amongst us.

In this forme of Kirk-government, our unanimity and harmony, by the mercy of God, is so full and perfect, that all the members of this Assembly have declared themselves to be of one heart, and of one soule, and to be no lesse perswaded that it is of God, then that Episcopall government is of men; resolving, by the grace of God, to hold the same constantly all the dayes of our life, and heartily wishing that God would bless all the Christian Kirks, especially the famous Kirk of England, unto which in all other respects we are so nearly joyned with this divine forme of government. Thus having briefly and plainly given our judgement for your satisfaction, and desiring and hoping that ye will beleeve against all mis-reports, that we know not so much as one man, more or lesse eminent amongst us, of a different judgement, we commend you unto the riches of the grace of Christ, who will perfect that which he hath begun amongst you, to your unspeakable comfort. Subscribed by our Moderator and Clerk.

Edinburgh, August 9, 1641.

*The Assemblie's Answer to the King's Majestie's Letter.

Most gracious Sovereign,

Beside the conscience of that duetie which we owe to supreme authority, we are not only encouraged, but confirmed by the royall favour and princely munificence, expressed in your gracious Majestie's letters, which filled our hearts with joy, and our mouths with praise, to offer up our prayers with the greater fervencie to God Almighty for your Majestie's happinesse, our selves for our own parts, and for the whole Kirks of this your Majestie's kingdome, which we doe represent, to serve your Majestie in all humble obedience, our faithfull labours for preserving truth and peace amongst all your Majestie's subjects, and our example (according to your

Your Majestie's most humble subjects and faithful servants, the Ministers and Elders, met together in the venerable Assembly at St Andrews, July 20, and Edinburgh, July 27, 1641.

Act anent the Kirk of Campheir.

The which day a motion was made in the Assembly, that it seemed expedient for correspondencie that might be had from forraigne parts, for the weal of this Kirk, that the Scots Kirk at Campheir were joyned to the Kirk of Scotland, as a member thereof: which being seriously thought upon and considered by the Assembly, they approved the motion, and ordained Mr Robert Baillie, Minister at Cilwinning, to write to Mr William Spang, Minister at Campheir, and Kirk-Session thereof, willing them to send their minister, and a ruling elder, instructed with a commission to the next Generall Assembly to be holden at St Andrews, the last Wednesday of July 1642, at which time they should be inrolled in the books of the Generall Assembly, as Commissioners of the Generall Assembly of Scotland from the Scots Kirk at Campheir.

The Assembly appoints the next Generall Assembly to be holden at St Andrews, the last Wednesday of July next, 1642.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY, CONVEENED
AT ST ANDREWS, JULY 27, 1642.

Act Sess. 1, July 27, 1642.

The King's Letter to the Generall Assembly, presented by his Majestie's Commissioner, the Earle of Dumfermling, July 27, 1642.

CHARLES R.

In the midst of our great and weighty affaires of our other kingdoms, which God Almighty, who is privie to our intentions, and in whom we trust, will, in his own time, bring to a wished and peaceable conclusion, we are not unminndfull of that duetie which we owe to that our ancient and native kingdome, and to the Kirks there, now met together by their Commissioners in a Nationall Assembly. God, whose vicegerent we are, hath made us a king over divers kingdomes, and we have no other desire nor designe but to govern them by their own lawes, and the kirks in them by their own Cauons and constitutions. Where any thing is found to be amisse, we will endeavour a reformation in a fair and orderly way; and where a reformation is settled, we resolve, with that authoritie wherewith God hath vested us, to maintain and defend it in peace and libertie, against all trouble that can come from without, and against all heresies, sects, and schismes which may arise from within, nor do we desire any thing more in that kingdom, (and when we shall hear of it, it shall be a delight and matter of gladnesse unto us,) then that the Gospel be faithfully preached throughout the whole kingdom, to the outmost skirts and borders thereof; knowing that to be the mean of honour to God, of happinesse to the people, and of true obedience to us. And for this effect, that holy and able men be put in places of the ministry, and that schooles and colledges may flourish in learning and true pietie. Some things for advancing of those ends we did of our own accord promise in our letters to the last Assembly, and we make your selves judges, who were witnesses to our actions, while we were there in person, whether we did not perform them both in the point of presentations which are in our hands, and in the liberall provision of all the universities and colledges of the kingdome, not only above that which any of our progenitors had done before us, but also above your owne hopes and expectation. We doe not make commemoration of this our beneficence, either to please our selves, or to stop the influence of our royall goodnesse and bountie for afterward, but that, by these reall demonstrations of our unfained desires and delight to do good, you may be the more confident to expect from us whatsoever in justice we can grant, or what may be expedient for you to obtaine. We have given expresse charge to our Commissioner to see that all things be done there orderly and peaceably, as if we were present in our own person; not doubting but in thankfulness for your present estate and condition, you will abstaine from every thing that may make any new disturbance, and that you will be more wise then to be the enemies of your own peace, which would but stumble others, and ruine your selves. We have also commanded our Commissioner to receive from you your just and reasonable desires, for what may further serve for the good of religion, that, taking them to our consideration, we may omit nothing which may witness us to be indeed a nursing father of that Kirk, wherein we were born and baptized, and that if ye be not happy, you may blame not us, but your selves. And now what doe we again require of you, but that which otherwise you owe to us as your soveraigne Lord and King, even that ye pray for our prosperitie and the peace of our kingdomes, that ye use the best meanes to keep our people in obedience to us and our lawes, which doth very much in our personall absence from that our kingdome depend upon your preaching, and your owne examplary loyaltie and faithfulness, and that against all such jealousies, suspitions, and sinister rumors, as are too frequent in these times, and have been often falsified in time past, by the reality of the contrary events; ye judge us and our professions by our actions, which we trust, through God, in despite of malice, shall ever go on in a constant way for the good of religion, and the weal of our people, which is the chiefest of our intentions and desires. And thus we bid you farewell. Given at our Court at Leicester, the 23d of July 1642.

To our trusty and wel beloved the Generall Assembly in our Kingdom of Scotland, convened at St Andrews.

Act Sess. 3, July 29, 1642.—Act for bringing in of the Synode Books ycerly to the Generall Assemblies.

The Moderator calling to minde that which was forgotten in the preceeding Sessions, the examination of the Provinciaall books, caused call the roll of the Provinciaall Assemblies, and the Assembly finding very few provinces to have sent their books to this Assembly, notwithstanding of the ordinance of the former Assembly thereanent, for the more exact obedience of that ordinance hereafter, the Assembly in one voyce ordaines, That the books of every Provinciaall Assembly shall be brought and produced to every Generall Assembly; and that this may be performed, ordaines that every Clerk of the Provinciaalls either bring or send the said books yearly to the Generall Assemblies, by the commissioners sent to the Assemblies from these Presbyteries where the clerks reside. Which charge the Assembly also layes upon the said Commissioners, sent from the saids Presbyteries where the clerks reside, ay and whill some meanes be provided, whereby the clerk's charges may be sustained for coming with the saids books themselves; and that under the pain of deprivation of the clerk in case of his neglect, and of such censure of the saids commissioners, in case of their neglect, as the Assembly shall think convenient.

Act Sess. 5, Aug. 1, 1642.—Act anent the choosing of Kirk Sessions.

Anent the question moved to the Assembly, concerning the election of Kirk Sessions, the Assembly ordaines the old Session to elect the new Session, both in burgh and land. And that if any place shall vaik in the Session chosen, by death or otherwise, the present Session shall have the election of the person to fill the vacand roome.

Sess. 6, Aug. 2, 1642.—The Report of the Interpretation of the Act at Edinburgh, anent Tryall of Ministers.

The meaning of the foresaid act is, not that an actual minister to be transported shal be tried again by the tryalls appointed for trying of expectants at their entry to the Ministry, according to the acts of the Kirk; but only that he bringing a testimonial of his former tryalls, and of his abilities and conversation, from the Presbyterie from whence he comes, and giving such satisfaction to the parochiners Presbyterie whereto he comes in preaching, as the Presbyterie finds his gifts fit and answerable for the condition and disposition of the congregation whereto he is presented. Because, according to the Act of the Assembly, 1596, renewed at Glasgow, some that are meet for the ministry in some places are not meet for all alike; and universities, towns, and burghs, and places of noblemen's residence, or frequencie of Papists, and other great and eminent congregations, and in sundry other cases, require men of greater abilities, nor will be required necessarily in the planting of all private small paroches, the leaving of the consideration of these cases unto the judgement and consideration of the Presbyterie was the only intention of the act.

The Assembly approves the meaning and interpretation foresaid; and appoints the said Act, according to this interpretation, to stand in force, and to have the strength of an Act and Ordinance of Assembly in all time coming.

Act Sess. 7, Aug. 3, 1642.—Act anent the Order for making Lists to his Majestie, and other Patrons, for Presentations; the Order of Tryal of Expectants, and for trying the quality of Kirks.

Forsameikle as his Majestie was graciously pleased, in his answer to the petition tendred by the Commissioners of the late Assembly to his Majestie, to declare and promise, for the better providing of vaiking kirks at his Majestie's presentation with qualified ministers, to present one out of a list of six persons, sent to his Majestie from the Presbyteries wherein the vaiking kirk lyeth, as his Majestie's Declaration, signed with his royal hand at White-hall, the 3 of January last, registrate in the books of Assembly this day, at length beares. And suchlike, whereas the Lords of Exchequer, upon a petition presented to them by the Commissioners of the Generall Assembly, and the Procurator and Agent for the Kirk representing two prejudices; one, that gifts obtained from his Majestie of patronages of Kirks at his presentation, were passing the Exchequer, without the qualification and provision of a list, wherewith his Majestie was pleased to restrict himself; and the other, that some were seeking gifts of patronage of Bishop-Kirks, which are declared to belong to Presbyteries, to be planted by two acts of the late Parliament: The saids Lords have ordained that no signator, containing gifts of patronages from his Majestie, shall passe hereafter, but with a speciall provision that the same shall be lyable to the tenor of his Majestie's said declaration; ordaining also the Procurator and Agent of the Kirk to be advertised, and to have place to see all signators whatsoever, containing any patronage, to the effect they may represent the interest of the Kirk therein; as the said act, of the date the 27th of June last, registrate also in the books of Assembly this day, at length beares. Therefore, that the saids kirks which now are, or which were at his Majestie's presentation the said third day of January last, may be the better provided with able ministers when the samine shall vaik, The Assembly ordaines, that hereafter every Presbyterie shall give up yearly a roll of the ablest of their expectants to their Synods, and that the Synods select out of these rolls such persons whom they, in certain knowledge, judge most fit for the ministrick, and worthiest of the first place, with power to the Synods to adde or alter these rolls given by the Presbyteries as they thinke reasonable; and that the Synods shall send the rolls, made by them in this manner, to the next Generall Assembly, who shall also examine the rolls of the Synods, and adde or alter the same as shall be thought expedient. Which roll made by the Generall Assembly shall be sent to every Presbyterie, and that the Presbyterie, with consent of the most or best part of the congregation, shall make a list of six persons willing to accept of the presentation out of that roll of the Assembly, upon every occasion of vacation of any kirk within their bounds, and shall send the samine, together with a blank presentation, the which (if his Majesty be patron to the vacant kirk) shall be sent by the said procurator and agent to such as the Commissioners of the Generall Assembly, or in their absence the Presbyterie of Edinburgh, shall direct and think at that time most able and willing to obtain the presentation, to be signed and filled up by his Majestie's choise of one of the list. And if the vacant kirk be of a patronage disposed by his Majesty since the 3d of January, in that case, either the Presbyteries themselves shall send a list of six persons in maner aforesaid, with a blank presentation to the patron, to be filled up by his choise, and subscribed, or send the samine to the saids officers of the kirk, to be conveyed by them to the patron of the vaiking kirk, as the Presbyterie shall think most expedient. It is alwayes declared, that this order shall be without prejudice to the Presbyteries, with consent foresaid, to put actuall ministers upon the said list of six persons, to be sent to the patron of the said vaiking kirks, if they please. And, leas that the nomination of expectants by Presbyteries, Synods, or Assemblies, in their rolls or lists foresaid, be misinterpreted, as though the expectants, nominated in these rolls and lists, were thereby holden and acknowledged to be qualified, which is not the intention of the Assembly, who rather think, that in respect of this order, there should be a more exact tryall of expectants then before: Therefore, the Assembly ordaines, That no expectants shall be put on the rolls or lists above mentioned but such as have been upon the publike exercise, at the least by the space of half a year, or longer, as the Presbyterie shall finde necessary. And suchlike ordaines, That hereafter none be admitted to the publike exercise before they be tryed, according to the tryall appointed for expectants at their entrie to the Ministerie in the late Assembly at Glasgow, in the 24th Article of the Act of the 23d Session thereof, which tryall the Assembly appoints to be taken of every expectant before his admission to the publike exercise. And suchlike ordaines, That the samine tryall shall be again taken immediatly before their admission to the ministerie, together with their tryall mentioned in the advice of some brethren deputed for penning the corruptions of the ministry, approven in the said act of the Generall Assembly at Glasgow. And because that kirks of the patronages foresaids will vaik before the rolls and lists be made up by the Presbyteries, Synods, and Generall Assemblies, in maner foresaid: Therefore, in the interim, the Assembly ordains the commissioners of every Presbyterie here present to give in a list of the ablest expectants within their bounds the morn to the Clerk of the Assembly, that the Assembly may out of these rolls make a list to be sent to every Presbyterie, out of which the Presbyteries shall make a list of six persons, with consent foresaid, and send the samine, upon vacancie of any church within their bounds, together with a presentation to his Majestie, or any other patron, in maner foresaid. And because the Procurator and Agent of the Kirk cannot get sufficient information to the Lords of Exchequer anent the right and interest of the Kirk, and Presbyteries in kirks, whereof gifts of patronages may be presented to the Exchequer: Therefore, the Assembly ordaines, for their better information hereanent, that every Presbyterie, with all diligence, use all meanes of exact tryall of the nature and qualitie of all kirks within their bounds, as what kirks belong to the King's Majestie's patronage, what to other laick patronages, what kirks of old were planted by Presbyteries, and what by prelates and bishops, before the Assembly at Glasgow, 1638, what hath been the way and time of the change of the planting and providing of the kirks, if any have been changed, or any other thing concerning the nature and qualitie of every kirk within their bounds, and to send the same to the Procurator of the Kirk with all diligence.

Act anent Lists for the Kirks in the Highlands.

The Assembly considering that in Argyle, and in other places of the Irish language, here will not be gotten six expectants able to speak that language, and, therefore, the Assembly is hopefull, that in these singular cases, his Majestie will be pleased, for kirks vacand in the Highlands, to accept of a list of so many expectants as can be had, able to speak the Irish language. And the Commissioner's Grace promiseth to recommend it to his Majestie.

Overtures against Papists, Non-Communicants, and Profaners of the Sabbath.

The Assembly would draw up a supplication to be presented by the commissioners of the Presbyterie of Edinburgh to the Councell at their first meeting, for the due execution of the acts of Parliament and Councell against Papists, wherein it will be specially craved, that the Exchequer should be the intromettors with the rents of these who are excommunicate, and that from the Exchequer the Presbyterie may receive that portion of the confiscate goods which the law appoints to be employed ad pios usus.

II. Every Presbyterie would convene, at their first meeting, all known Papists in their bounds, and require them to put out of their company all friends and servants who are Popish within one moneth; also, within that same space, to give their children, sons and daughters, who are above seven years old, to be educate at their charges by such of their Protestant friends as the Presbyterie shall approve, and finde sufficient caution for bringing home within three moneths such of their children who are without the kingdom, to be educate in schooles and colledges at the Presbyteries sight, to finde caution, likewise, of their abstinence from masse, and the company of all Jesuits and priests.

III. That all, of whatsoever rank or degree, who refuse to give satisfaction in every one of the foresaid articles, shall be processed without any delay; but those who give satisfaction shall be dealt with in all meeknesse after this manner: The Presbyteries shall appoint such of their number as they shall find fittest to confer with them, so frequently as the Brethren are able to attend, untill the midst of October next, against which time, if they be not willing to go to church, they shall give assurance to go and dwell in the next adjacent university town, whether Edinburgh, Glasgow, St Andrews, or Aberdene, from November 1 to the last of March, where they shall attend all the diets of conference which the professors and ministers of the bounds shall appoint to them; by which, if they be not converted, their obstinacy shall be declared in the Provincial Synods of April, and from thence their processe shall go on to the very closure without any farther delay.

IV. That every Presbyterie, as they will be answerable to the next Generall Assembly, be carefull to doe their dutie in all the premisses.

V. That there be given presently by the members of this present Assembly, unto the Commissioners of the Presbyterie of Edinburgh, a list of all excommunicate Papists they know, and of all Papists who have children educate abroad, that they may be presented, together with our supplication, to the Councell, at their first sitting.

VI. That the Councell may be supplicate for an act, that in no regiment which goes out of the kingdom any Papists bear office, and that the colonell be required to finde caution for this effect before he receive the Councell's warrant for levying any souldiers; also that he finde caution for the maintaining of a minister, and keeping of a Session in his regiment.

Item, The Assembly would enjoyn every Presbyterie to proceed against non-communicants, whether Papists or others, according to the act of Parliament made thereanent. And suchlike, that acts of Parliament against prophaners of the Sabbath be put to execution.

The Assembly approves the overtures foresaid, and ordains Presbyteries to put the samine to execution with all diligence; and that the Commissioners of every Presbyterie give in a list of the excommunicate Papists within their bounds, and of Papists' children out of the countrey, to the clerk, that the same may be presented to the Councell by the Commissioners of this Assembly.

Act anent the joyning of the Presbyterie of Sky to the Synode of Argyle.

The Generall Assembly, having considered the whole proceedings of the Commissioners of the late Generall Assembly holden at Edinburgh, anent the reference made to them concerning the Presbyterie of Sky, together with the whole reasons pro et contra in the said matter, after mature deliberation, have ratified and approved, and by these presents ratifie and approve, the sentence of the saids commissioners thereintill. And, further, ordains the said Presbyterie of Sky, and all the ministers and elders thereof, to keep the meetings of the Provincial Assembly of Argyle, where they shall happen to be appointed in all time coming, suchlike as any other Presbyterie within the bounds of the said Province of Argyle uses to do; and that the samine Presbyterie be in all time hereafter within the jurisdiction of the said Provincial Assembly, without any further question to be made thereanent.

*Sess. 8, Aug. 3, post meridiem.—The Supplication of this Assembly to the King's Majestie.

To the King's most Excellent Majestie, the hearty Thanksgiving and humble Petition of the Generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, met at St Andrews, July 27, 1642.

Our hearts were filled with great joy and gladnesse at the hearing of your Majestie's letter, which was read once and again in face of the Assembly, every line thereof almost either expressing such affection to the reformed religion, and such royall care of us, as we could require from a Christian prince, or requiring such necessary duties from us, as we are bound to performe, as ministers of the Gospel and Christian subjects; for which, as solemne thanks were given by the Moderator of the Assembly, so do we all, with one voice, in all humility, present unto your Majestie the thankfulness of our hearts, with our earnest prayers to God for your Majestie's prosperity, and the peace of your kingdoms; that your Majestie may be indeed a nursing father to all the Kirks of Christ in your Majestie's dominions, and especially to the Kirk of Scotland, honoured with your birth and baptisme, promising our most serious endeavours, by doctrine and life, to advance the Gospel of Christ, and to keep the people in our charge in unity and peace, and in all loyalty and obedience to your Majestie and your laws. Your Majestie's commands to your Commissioner, the Earle of Dumfermling, to receive from us our just and reasonable desires for what may further serve for the good of religion here, the favours which we have received already, and your Majestie's desire and delight to do good, expressed in your letter, are as many encouragements to us to take the boldnesse, in all humility, to present unto your Majestie (beside the particulars recommended to your Majestie's Commissioner) one thing, which for the present is the chiefest of all our desires, as serving most for the glory of Christ, for your Majestie's honour and comfort, and not onely for the good of religion here, but for the true happinesse and peace of all your Majestie's dominions; which is no new motion, but the prosecution of that same which was made by the Commissioners of this your Majestie's kingdom in the late Treatie, and which your Majestie, with advice of both Houses of Parliament, did approve in these words:—"To their desire, concerning unitie in religion and uniformitie of Church government, as a speciall meanes of conserving of peace betwixt the two kingdoms, upon the grounds and reasons contained in the paper of the 10 of March, given in to the Treaty and Parliament of England, it is answered, upon the 15 of June, That his Majestie, with advice of both Houses of Parliament, doth approve of the affection of his subjects of Scotland, in their desire of having the conformity of Church government betwixt the two nations; and as the Parliament hath already taken into consideration the reformation of Church government, so they will proceed therein in due time, as shall best conduce to the glory of God, the peace of the Church, and of both kingdoms.—11 of June 1641." In our answer to a declaration sent by the now Commissioners of this kingdom, from both Houses of Parliament, we have not onely pressed this point of unity in religion and uniformity of Church government, as a meane of a firme and durable union betwixt the two kingdomes, and without which former experiences put us out of hope long to enjoy the puritie of the Gospel with peace, but also have rendered the reasons of our hopes and confidence, as from other considerations, so from your Majestie's late letter to this Assembly, that your Majestie, in a happy conjunction with the Houses of Parliament, will be pleased to settle this blessed Reformation, with so earnestly desired a peace in all your dominions; and, therefore, we, your Majestie's most loving subjects, in name of the whole Kirks of Scotland represented by us, upon the knees of our hearts do most humbly and earnestly beg that your Majesty, in the deep of your royall wisdom, and from your affection to the true religion, and the peace of your kingdoms, may be moved to consider that the God of heaven and earth is calling for this Reformation at your hands, and that as you are his vicegerent, so you may be his prime instrument in it. If it shall please the Lord (which is our desire and hope) that this blessed unitie in religion and uniformity in government shall be brought about, your Majestie's conscience, in performing of so great a dutie, shall be a well-spring of comfort to yourself, your memory shall be a sweet savour, and your name renowned to all following generations. And if these unhappy commotions and divisions shall end in this peace and unity, then it shall appear in the providence of God they were but the noyse of many waters, and the voyce of a great thunder, before the voyce of harpers harping with their harps, which shall fill this whole island with melodie and mirth, and the name of it shall be, "THE LORD IS THERE."

The Declaration of the Parliament of England sent to the Assembly.

The Lords and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, finding, to their great grief, that the distractions of this kingdome daily increase, and that the wicked counsells and practises of a malignant party amongst us (if God prevent them not) are like to cast this nation into blood and confusion, to testifie to all the world how earnestly they desire to avoid a civill warre, they have addressed themselves in an humble supplication to his Majestie for the prevention thereof; a copy of which their petition they have thought fit to send at this time to the Nationall Assembly of the Church of Scotland, to the intent that that Church and kingdome (whereunto they are united by so many and so near bonds and tyes, as well spirituall as civill) may see that the like minde is now in them that formerly appeared to be in that nation; and that they are as tender of the effusion of Christian blood on the one side, as they are zealous on the other side of a due Reformation both in Church and State. In which work, whilst they were labouring, they have been interrupted by the plots and practises of a malignant party of Papists and ill-affected persons, especially of the corrupt and dissolute clergy, by the incitement and instigation of bishops and others, whose avarice and ambition being not able to bear the reformation endeavoured by the Parliament, they have laboured (as we can expect little better fruit from such trees) to kindle a flame, and raise a combustion within the bowels of this kingdom; which, if by our humble supplication to his Majestie, it may be prevented, and that, according to our earnest desire therein, all force and warlike preparations being laid aside, we may returne to a peaceable Parliamentary proceeding, we do not doubt but that, by the blessing of Almighty God upon our endeavours, we shall settle the matters both in Church and State, to the encrease of his Majestie's honour and state, the peace and prosperitie of this kingdome, and especially to the glory of God, by the advancement of the true religion, and such a reformation of the Church as shall be most agreeable to God's Word. Out of all which there will also most undoubtedly result a most firme and stable union between the two kingdomes of England and Scotland, which, according to our protestation, we shall by all good wayes and meanes, upon all occasions, labour to preserve and maintain.

*The Assembly's Answer to the Declaration of the Parliament of England.

The Generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland having received a declaration sent unto them by the commissioners of this kingdome now at London, from the honourable Houses of the Parliament of England, expressing their care to prevent the effusion of Christian blood in that kingdome, and their affections to reformation both in Kirk and State, and having taken the same to such consideration as the importance of so weighty matters, and the high estimation they have of so wise and honourable a meeting as is the Parliament of England, did require, have, with universall consent, resolved upon this following answer:—

* Drawn up by Mr Alexander Henderson.—Ed. 1843.

I. That from the recent sense of the goodness of God in their own late deliverance, and from their earnest desire of all happiness to our native King and that kingdome, they blesse the Lord for preserving them, in the midst of so many unhappy divisions and troubles, from a bloudy intestine war, which is from God the greatest judgement, and to such a nation the compend of all calamities. They also give God thanks for their former and present desires of a reformation, especially of religion, which is the glory and strength of a kingdome, and bringeth with it all temporall blessings of prosperity and peace.

II. That the hearts of all the members of this Assembly, and of all the well-affected within this kingdome, are exceedingly grieved and made heavy, that in so long a time, against the professions both of King and Parliament, and contrary to the joynt desires and prayers of the godly in both kingdomes, to whom it is more deare and precious then what is dearest to them in the world, the reformation of religion hath moved so slowly and suffered so great interruption. They consider that not only prelates, formall professors, profane and worldly men, and all that are Popishly affected, are bad counsellours and workers, and do abuse their power, and bend all their strength and policies against the work of God, but the god of this world also, with principalities and powers, the rulers of the darknesse of this world, and spirituall wickednesse in high places, are working with all their force and fraud in the same opposition, not without hope of successe; they having prevailed so farre from the beginning, that in the times of the best Kings of Juda of old, and the most part of the Reformed Kirks of late, a thorough and perfect reformation of religion hath been a work full of difficulties. Yet doe the y conceive, that as it ought first of all to be intended, so should it be above all other things, with confidence in God, who is greater then the world, and he who is in the world, most seriously endeavoured. And that when the supream Providence giveth opportunity of the accepted time and day of salvation, no other work can prosper in the hands of his servants, if it be not apprehended, and with all reverence and faithfulness improved. This Kirk and nation, when the Lord gave them the calling, considered not their own deadnesse, nor staggered at the promise through unbelief, but gave glory to God. And who knoweth (we speak it in humility and love, and from no other mind then from a desire of the blessing of God upon our King and that kingdome) but the Lord hath now some controversie with England, which will not be removed till first, and before all, the worship of his name and the government of his House be settled according to his own will. When this desire shall come it shall be to England, after so long deferred hopes, a tree of life, which shall not only yeeld temporall blessings unto themselves, but also shall spread the branches so far, that both this nation and other Reformed Kirks shall finde the fruits thereof to their great satisfaction.

III. The commissioners of this kingdome, in the late treaty of peace, considering that religion is not only the meane of the service of God and saving of souls, but is also the base and foundation of kingdomes and estates, and the strongest band to tye subjects to their prince in true loyaltie, and to knit the hearts of one to another in true unity and love; they did, with prefacc of all due respect and reverence, far from arrogancy or presumption, represent, in name of this kingdome, their serious thoughts and earnest desires for unity of religion; that in all his Majestie's dominions there might be one Confession of Faith, one Directory of Worship, one publike Catechisme, and one form of Kirk Government. This they conceived to be acceptable to God Almighty, who delighteth to see his people walking in truth and unity, to be a speciall meanes for conserving of peace betwixt the kingdomes; of easing the King's Majesty and the publike government of much trouble, which ariseth from differences of religion, very grievous to kings and estates; of great content to the King himself, to his nobles, his court, and all his people, when, (occasioned to be abroad,) without scruple to themselves or scandall to others, all may resort to the same publike worship, as if they were at their own dwellings; of suppressing the names of heresies, and sects, Puritans, Conformists, Separatists, Anabaptists, &c., which do rent asunder the bowels both of Kirk and kingdome, of despaire of successe to Papists and recusants; to have their profession, which is inconsistent with the true Protestant religion and authority of princes, set up again, and of drawing the hearts and hands of ministers from unpleasant and unprofitable controversies to the pressing of mortification, and to treatises of true pietie and practicall divinity. The Assembly doth now enter upon the labour of the commissioners, unto which they are encouraged, not only by their faithfulness in the late treaty, but also by the zeale and example of the Generall Assemblies of this Kirk in former times, as may appeare by the Assembly at Edinburgh, December 25, in the year 1566, which ordained a letter to be sent to England against the surplice, tippet, corner-cap, and such other ceremonies as then troubled that Kirk, that they might be removed; by the Assembly at Edinburgh, April 24, 1583, humbly desiring the King's Majesty to command his ambassadour, then going to England, to deal with the Queen, that there might be an union and band betwixt them and other Christian princes and realmes, professing the true religion, for defence and protection of the Word of God and professors thereof, against the persecution of Papists and confederates, joyned and united together by the bloody league of Trent; as also, that her Majesty would disburden their brethren of England of the yoke of ceremonies imposed upon them against the liberty of the Word; and by the Assembly at Edinburgh, March 3, 1589, ordaining the Presbyterie of Edinburgh to use all good and possible means for the relief and comfort of the Kirk of England, then heavily troubled, for the maintaining the true discipline and government of the Kirk, and that the brethren, in their private and publike prayers, recommend the estate of the afflicted Kirk of England to God. While now, by the mercy of God, the conjunction of the two kingdomes is many wayes increased, the zeale of the Generall Assembly towards their happinesse ought to be no lesse; but, besides these, the Assembly is much encouraged unto this duetie, both from the King's Majesty and his Parliament joyntly, in their answer to the proposition made by the late Commissioners of the Treaty, in these words:—"To their desire concerning unity of religion, and uniformity of kirk government, as a speciall meanes for conserving of peace betwixt the two kingdomes, upon the grounds and reasons contained in the paper of the 10 of March, and given in to the Treatie and Parliament of England; it is answered, upon the 15 of June, That his Majestie, with advice of both Houses of Parliament, doth approve of the affection of his subjects of Scotland, in their desire of having conformitie of kirk government between the two nations; and as the Parliament hath already taken into consideration the reformation of kirk government, so they will proceed therein in due time, as shall best conduce to the glory of God, the peace of the Kirk, and of both kingdomes." And also severally; for his Majestie knoweth that the custodie and vindication, the conversation and purgation of religion, are a great part of the ductie of civill authority and power. His Majestie's late practise, while he was here in person, in resorting frequently to the exercises of publike worship, his royall actions in establishing the worship and government of this Kirk in Parliament, and in giving order for a competent maintenance to the ministry and seminaries of the Kirk, and his Majestie's gracious letter to the Assembly, (seconded by the speech of his Majestie's Commissioner,) which contains this religious expression:—"Where any thing is amisse, we will endeavour a reformation in a fair and orderly way, and where reformation is settled, we resolve, with that authority wherewith God hath vested us, to maintain and defend it in peace and liberty, against all trouble that can come from without, and against all heresies, sects, and schismes, which may arise from within"—all these doe make us hopefull that his Majestie will not oppose but advance the work of reformation. In like manner, the Honourable Houses of Parliament, as they have many times before witnessed their zeale, so now also, in their declaration sent to the Assembly, which not only sheweth the constancy of their zeale, but their great grief that the worke hath been interrupted by a malignant party of Papists and evill-affected persons, especially of the corrupt and dissolute clergie, by the incitement and instigation of bishops and others, their hope, according to their earnest desire, when they shall returne to a peaceable and parliamentary proceeding, by the blessing of God, to settle such a reformation in the Church, as shall be agreeable to God's Word, and that the result shall be a most firm and stable union between the two kingdoms of England and Scotland, &c. The Assembly also is not a little encouraged by a letter sent from many reverend Brethren of the Kirk of England, expressing their prayers and endeavours against every thing which shall be found prejudiciall to the establishment of the kingdome of Christ, and the peace of their soveraigne. Upon these encouragements, and having so patent a doore of hope, the Assembly doth confidently expect, that England will now bestirre themselves in the best way for a reformation of religion, and do most willingly offer their prayers and uttermost endeavours for furthering so great a work, wherein Christ is so much concerned in his glory, the King in his honour, the Kirk and kingdome of England in their happinesse, and this Kirk and kingdome in the purity and peace of the Gospel.

IV. That the Assembly also, from so many reall invitations, are heartened to renew the proposition made by the aforementioned commissioners of this kingdome, for beginning the work of reformation at the uniformity of kirk-government. For what hope can there be of unity in religion, of one Confession of Faith, one form of worship, and one Catechisme, till there be first one forme of ecclesiasticall government? Yea, what hope can the kingdome and Kirk of Scotland have of a firme and durable peace, till prelacie, which hath been the main cause of their miseries and troubles, first and last, be plucked up, root and branch, as a plant which God hath not planted, and from which no better fruits can be expected than such sower grapes as this day set on edge the kingdome of England?

V. The prelatieall hierarchie being put out of the way, the work will be easie, without forcing of any conscience, to settle in England the government of the Reformed Kirks by assemblies. For although the Reformed Kirks do hold, without doubting, their kirk-officers and kirk-government, by assemblies, higher and lower, in their strong and beautifull subordination, to be jure divino, and perpetuall; yet prelacie, as it differeth from the office of a pastor, is almost universally acknowledged, by the prelates themselves and their adherents, to be but an humane ordinance, introduced by humane reason, and settled by humane law and custome for supposed conveniencie; which, therefore, by humane authority, without wronging any man's conscience, may be altered and abolished upon so great a necessity, as is a hearty conjunction with all the Reformed Kirks, a firm and well-grounded peace betwixt the two kingdomes, formerly divided in themselves, and betwixt themselves by this partition wall, and a perfect union of the Kirks in the two nations; which, although by the providence of God in one island, and under one monarch, yet ever since the Reformation, and for the present also, are at greater difference in the point of kirk-government, which in all places hath a powerfull influence upon all the parts of religion, then any other Reformed Kirks, although in nations at greatest distance, and under divers princes.

VI. What may be required of the Kirk of Scotland, for furthering the work of uniformitie of government, or for agreeing upon a common Confession of Faith, Catechisme, and Directory for Worship, shall, according to the order given by this Assembly, be most willingly performed by us, who long extreamly for the day when King and Parliament shall joyn for bringing to passe so great, so good a work, that all warres and commotions ceasing, all superstition, idolatry, heresie, sects, and schismes being removed, as the Lord is one, so his name may be one amongst us; and mercy and truth, righteousnesse and peace meeting together, and kissing one another, may dwell in this island.

Act Sess. 8, August 3, 1642.—Overtures for Transplantation of Ministers, and Provision of Schools, ordained by the late Assembly at Edinburgh to be sent to Synods, and reported to this Assembly.

Act Sess. 11, Edinburgh, August 5, 1641.

These Overtures underwritten, anent the Transporting of Ministers and Professors to Kirks and Colledges, being read in audience of the Assembly, and thereafter revised by a Committee appointed for that effect, the Assembly appoints them to be sent to the severall Synods, to be considered by them, and they to report their judgements thereof to the next Generall Assembly.

I. No transportation would be granted hereafter without citation of parties having interest, (viz. the minister who is sought and his parish,) to hear what they can oppose, and the matter is to come first to both the Presbyteries, (viz. that wherein the minister dwells whose transportation is sought, and the other Presbytery to which he is sought, if the kirks lye in several Presbyteries;) and if the Presbyteries agree not, then the matter is to be brought to the Synod or Generall Assembly, (which of them shall first occur after such transportation is sought;) and if the Synod (occurring first) agree not, or if there be appeale made from it, then the matter is to come to the Generall Assembly.

II. A minister may be transplanted from a particular congregation (where he can onely doe good to a part) to such a place where he may benefit the whole Kirk of Scotland, because, in reason, the whole is to be preferred to a part, such as Edinburgh.

1. Because all the great Justice Courts sit there, as Councell, Session, Justice-Generall, Exchequer, &c., and it concerns the whole Kirk that these fountains of justice be kept clean, both in the point of faith and manners.

2. Because there is great confluence to Edinburgh, from time to time, of many of the chief members of the whole kingdome, and it concerns the whole Kirk to have these well seasoned, who (apparently) are to be the instruments of keeping this Kirk and kingdome in good temper.

That this may be the more easily done, the Assembly first recommends to Edinburgh, that some young men of excellent spirits may be (upon the charges of the said town) trained up, at home or abroad, toward the ministry, from time to time. Secondly, we meane not that all the places of the ministerie of Edinburgh be filled with Ministers to be transported by authority of this Act, but only till they be provided of one Minister (transplanted by the authority of the Assembly) for every Kirk in Edinburgh, and that the rest of the places be filled either according to the generall rules of transportation for the whole kingdome, or by agreement with actuall Ministers and their parishes, with consent of the Presbytery or Synod to the which they belong.

III. In the next roome, we finde, that it is a transporting of Ministers for publike good that Colledges (having the profession of Divinitie) be well provided of Professors.

Wherein the Colledge of Divinitie in St Andrews is first to be served, without taking any Professors or Ministers out of Edinburgh, Glasgow, or Aberdene, and then the rest of the Colledges would be provided for as their necessitie shall require; yet (in respect of the present scarcity) it were good for the Universities to send abroad for able and approved men, to be Professors of Divinitie, that our Ministers may be kept in their pastorall charge as much as may be.

Towns also wherein Colledges are, are very considerable in the matter of transportation.

IV. Also congregations where noblemen have chief residence are to be regarded, whether planted or unplanted, and a care is to be had that none be admitted Ministers where Popish noblemen reside, but such as are able men (especially for controversies) by sight of the Presbytery; and, moreover, it is necessary that such Ministers as dwell where Popish noblemen are, and are not able for controversies, that they be transported.

V. They who desire the transportation of a Minister should be obliged to give reasons for their desire; neither should any Presbytery or Assembly passe a sentence for transportation of any Minister till they give reasons for the expedience of the same, both to him and his congregation, and to the Presbytery whereof he is a member. If they acquiesce to the reasons given, it is so much the better; if they doe not acquiesce, yet the Presbytery or Assembly (by giving such reasons before the passing of their sentence) shall make it manifest that what they doe is not pro arbitrato, vel imperio onely, but upon grounds of reason.

VI. Because there is such scarcity of Ministers having the Irish tongue, necessity requires, that when they be found in the Lowlands they be transported to the Highlands; providing their condition be not made worse, but rather better, by their transportation.

VII. In the point of voluntary transportation, no minister shall transact and agree with any parish, to be transported thereto, without a full hearing of him and his parish before the Presbyterie to which he belongs in his present charge, or superiour Kirk judicatories, if need shall be.

VIII. The planting of vacant Kirks is not to be tyed to any (either Ministers or expectants) within a Presbyterie; but a free election is to be, according to the order of our Kirk and lawes of our kingdome.

IX. The chief burghs of the kingdome are to be desired to traine up young men of excellent spirits for the ministry, according to their power, as was recommended to Edinburgh; which course will in time (God willing) prevent many transplantations.

The Overtures underwritten, anent the Schooles, being likewise read in audience of the Assembly, they recommend the particulars therein mentioned, anent the providing of the maintenance for Schoolmasters, to the Parliament, and ordaine the rest to be sent to the Synods, to be considered by them; and they to report their judgements thereof to the next Generall Assembly, as said is.

I. Every parish would have a reader, and a schoole, where children are to be bred in reading, witting, and grounds of religion, according to the laudable acts, both of Kirk and Parliament, made before.

And where grammar schooles may be had, as in burghs and other considerable places, (among which all presbyteriall seates are to be reputed,) that they be erected and held hand to.

II. Anent these schooles, every minister, with his elders, shall give accompt to the Presbyteries at the visitation of the kirk; the Presbyteries are to make report to the Synode, and the Synode to the General Assembly, that schools are planted as above said, and how they are provided with men and means.

III. And because this hath been most neglected in the Highlands, Ilands, and Borders, therefore, the ministers of every parish are to instruct, by their commissioners to the next Generall Assembly, that this course is begun betwixt and then; and they are further to certifie, from one Generall Assembly to another, whether this course is continued without omission or not.

IV. And because the means hitherto named or appointed for schooles of all sorts hath been both little and ill payed, therefore, beside former appointments, (the execution whereof is humbly desired, and to be petitioned for at the hands of his Majestie and the Parliament,) the Assembly would further supplicate this Parliament hat they (in their wisdome) would finde out how meanes shall be had for so good an use, especially that the children of poore men (being very capable of learning, and of good engines) may be trained up, according as the exigence and necessity of every place shall require. And that the commissioners, who shall be named by this Assembly to wait upon the Parliament, may be appointed to represent this to his Majestie and the Parliament, seeing his sacred Majestie, by his gracious letter, hath put us in hope hereof, wherewith we have been much refreshed.

V. The Assembly would supplicate the Parliament, that for youths of the finest and best spirits of the Highlands and Borders, maintenance may be allotted, (as to ursars,) to be bred in universities.

VI. For the time and manner of visitation of schooles, and contriving the best and most compendious and orderly course of teaching grammar, we humbly desire the Assembly to appoint a committee for that effect, who may report their diligence to the next Generall Assembly.

The Overtures and Articles above written being reported to this Assembly, after reading and serious consideration thereof, the Assembly approves the same, and ordaines them to have the strength of an act and ordinance of Assembly in all time coming.

Sess. 11, August 5, 1642.—Act anent contrary Oaths.

The Generall Assembly, finding the inconvenience of contrary oaths, in trying of adulteries, fornications, and other faults and scandals, do, therefore, for eviting thereof, discharge Synods, Presbyteries, and Sessions, to take oath of both parties in all time hereafter, recommending to them, in the mean time, all other order and wayes of tryall used in such cases: And that there may be a common order and course kept in this Kirk of trying of publike scandals, the Assembly ordains the Presbyteries to advise upon some common order hereintill, and to report their judgements to the next Assembly.

Overtures anent Family Exercises, Catechising, keeping of Synods and Presbyteries, and restraint of Adulteries, Witchcrafts, and other grosse Sins.

The Committee supplicates the Assembly,

I. To urge the severall Synods and Presbyteries, especially these of the North, that Family Exercise in religion, visitation of the Churches, Catechising, keeping of the Presbyteriall and Provinciaall meetings, (both by preaching and ruling Elders,) be more carefully observed.

II. That the clerk at least subscribe every book before it come to the Assembly, and that every act be noted on the margent, for a directory of expedition.

III. That the Assembly would seriously studie, by all meanes and wayes, how to procure the magistrate's concurrence to curb and punish these notorious vices which abound in the land, especially in the northern parts.

The Assembly approves the Overtures foresaids, and ordains them to be observed; and, for the last, the Assembly, being confident of the readinesse of the Judge Ordinar to restrain and punish these faults, do therefore ordain all Presbyteries to give up to the Justice the names of the adulterers, incestuous persons, witches, and sorcerers, and others guilty of such grosse and fearfull sins, within their bounds, that they may be processed, and punished according to the laws of this kingdom; and that the Presbyteries and Synods be carefull herein, as they will answer to the Generall Assemblies. And because that witchcraft, charming, and such like, proceeds many times from ignorance, therefore, the Assembly ordains all Ministers, especially in these parts where these sins are frequent, to be diligently preaching, catechising, and conferring, to inform their people thereintill.

Sess. 11, Aug. 5, 1642.—Act against Petitions, Declarations, and such like, in name of Ministers, without their knowledge and consents.

The Generall Assembly being informed, that after the petition presented to the Lords of his Majestie's Privie Councell, by the noblemen, burgesses, and ministers, occasionally met at Edinburgh, the 31 day of May last bypast, had received a very gracious answer, there was another petition given in to their Lordships upon the day of June last, entituled, The Petition of the Nobilitie, Gentry, Burrows, Ministers, and Commons; which, as it was not accompanied with any one minister to the Lords of Privie Councell, so all the Ministers of this Assembly disclaimes and disavoweth any knowledge thereof or accession thereto. And the Assembly, conceiving that the King's Majestie himself, and all the courts and judicatories of this kingdom, may be deluded and abused, and the Kirk in generall, and ministers in particular, injured and prejudged by the like practises hereafter, do, therefore, prohibite and discharge all and every one to pretend or use the name of ministers to any petition, declaration, or suchlike, at any time hereafter, without their knowledge, consent, and assistance; and if any shall doe the contrary, ordaines Presbyteries and Provinciaall Assemblies to proceed against them with the highest censures of the Kirk.

Sess. 11, Aug. 5, 1642.—Act anent the Assemblies desires to the Lords of Councell, and Conservators of Peace.

The Assembly, being most desirous to use all, and to omit no lawfull meane or occasion to testifie their zeale by dealing with God and man, for furtherance of their desires of unity in religion, and uniformity of kirk government, and, considering the great necessity, that the Kirk and State contribute jointly their best endeavours to this happy end: Therefore, enjoynes the Moderator and the Commissioners from the the Assembly to supplicate, with all earnestnesse and respect, the Lords of his Majestie's Honourable Privie Councell, and likewise the Commissioners appointed by his Majestic and the Parliament for Conservation of the Peace, that they may be pleased to concur with the Kirk in the like desires to his Majesty and the Parliament of England, and in the like directions to the Commissioners of this kingdome at London for the time, that by all possible means, civill and ecclesiastick, this blessed worke may be advanced, and a happy settling betwixt his Majestic and his Parliament may be endeavoured, and the common peace betwixt the kingdomes continued and strengthened.

Sess. 11, Aug. 5, 1642.—The Assemblies humble desire to the King's Majestic for the Signator of L.500 sterling, and recommendation thereof to the King's Commissioner.

The Generall Assembly having received the report of the proceedings of the Commissioners of the late Assembly, and specially that his Majesty was graciously pleased, upon their humble petition, solemnly to promise and declare under his royall hand, his pious resolution and dedication of L.500 sterling, out of the readiest of his rents and revenues, to be employed yearly, on publike necessary and pious uses of the Kirk, at the sight of the Generall Assembly, as his Majestic's gracious answer of the 10 of January 1642, registrate in their books at his Majestic's own desire, for their further assurance of his Majestic's pious zeale, doth more fully proport. Likeas, being informed that his Majesty was graciously pleased to signe and send down to the Kirk the Signator of the said L.500 yearly, to have past the Exchequer, albeit the samine was not as yet delivered; and, considering his Majestic's pious directions to them by his Majestic's letter, to plant and visit the utmost skirts and borders of the kingdome, as most necessary for the glory of God, the good of the Kirk, and his Majestic's honour and service, which is only stopped by the want of charges for publike visitations; and withall to remonstrate to his Majestic, by his Commissioner, their just and necessary desires for what may further serve to the good of religion, whereunto his Majestic's Commissioner promised his best endeavours and assistance: Therefore, the Assembly doth most earnestly recommend to his Majestic's Commissioner to represent to his Majestic, with his best assistance, the humble and necessary desires of the whole Assembly, that his Majesty wil be graciously pleased to command that Signator, already signed by his royall hand, (or to signe another of the samine tenor, whereunto they delivered the just double to his Majestic's Commissioner for that effect,) to be sent to this kingdom, and delivered to the commissioners from this Assembly, who are to sit at Edinburgh, or to the Procurator of the Kirk, whereby his Majestic shall more and more oblige this whole Kirk to pray for a blessing from heaven upon his royall person and government.

Sess. 11, August 5, 1642.—The Assemblies Letter to the Commissioners of this Kingdom at London.

Right Honourable,

We have received your Lordships' letter, with the declaration of the Parliament of England, and have sent this noble bearer to his Majesty with our humble supplication, and to your Lordships with our answer, earnestly desiring unity of religion and uniformity of kirk government, to be presented by your Lordships and this noble bearer to the Honourable Houses of Parliament. Your Lordships will perceive by the enclosed copies, and by our desires to his Majestic's Honourable Privie Councell and Commissioners for the Conservation of the Peace, to joyn their best endeavours with his Majesty and the Parliament, and their directions to your Lordships, by our leaving our commission behinde us, to concur with them in all ecclesiastick wayes; and by our appointing publike prayers and a solemn fast through this Kirk, for the furtherance of this great work of reformation, and continuance of the common peace, that this unity in religion and uniformity of kirk government is the chiefest of our desires, prayers, and cares; whereunto, as we have been encouraged by the faithfull labors of the Commissioners of this kingdom in the late treaty, and continued and renewed by your Lordships, so we are assured that your Lordships will omit no lawfull mean, argument, or occasion, of seconding the same there, and advertising our commissioners at Edinburgh wherein they may further concur with your Lordships for the furtherance of the work, which tends so much to the glory of God, advancement of Christ's kingdom, increase of the honour and happinesse of our Sovereign, and the peace and welfare of these kingdoms, whereby your Lordships will oblige this Kirk more and more to pray for a blessing on your persons and travels, and to rest,

Yours in the Lord,

THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY.

St Andrews, Aug. 5, 1642.

A Letter from some Ministers of England.

Reverend and wel-beloved in our Lord and Saviour,

We received with much joy and satisfaction the answer which your Generall Assembly vouchsafed us to our letters of the last yeer. Some of us, in the name of our brethren, thought it then fit, by Mr Alexander Henderson, (a brother so justly approved by you, and honoured by us,) to return our deserved thanks; and we now further think it equall upon this occasion to make a more publike acknowledgement of such a publike favour. You were then pleased to give us fair grounds to expect that brotherly advice and endeavours which the common cause of Christ, and the mutuall interest of the united nations, command us now again to ask, if not to chalenge. We doubt not but your experience, together with your intelligence, abundantly informes you of our condition, what various administrations of providence we have passed through, and we still lye betwixt hopes and feares, a fit temper for working—the God of all grace enable us to improve it. As our hopes are not such as may make us fear, so neither doe our feares prevail to the casting away our confidence. Your own late condition, together with this declaration of ours present, may acquaint you with the certain, though subtil, authors and fomentors of these our confused conflicts, which we conceive to be the hierarchicall faction, who have no way to peace and safety but through the trouble and danger of others. Our prayers and endeavours, according to our measure, have been, and shall be, for the supplanting and rooting up whatsoever we finde so prejudiciall to the establishment of the kingdome of Christ, and the peace of our Sovereigne. And that this declaration of our selves may not leave you unsatisfied, we think it necessary further to expresse, that the desire of the most godly and considerable part amongst us is, that the Presbyterian government, which hath just and evident foundation both in the Word of God and religious reason, may be established amongst us, and that (according to your intimation) we may agree in one Confession of Faith, one Directorie of Worship, one publike Catechisme, and form of government; which things, if they were accomplished, we should much rejoyce in our happy subjection to Christ our head, and our desired association with you our beloved brethren. For the better effecting whereof, we thought it necessary not only to acquaint you with what our desires are in themselves, but likewise to you, that is, that what way shall seem most fit to the wisdom of that grave and religious Assembly, may be taken for the furtherance of our indeavours in this kind. We understand that our Parliament hath been beforehand with us in this intimation, and it cannot but be our duty, who are so much concerned in the businesse, to adde what power the Lord hath given us with you to the same purpose. This designe and desire of ours hath enemies on the left hand, and dissenting brethren on the right, but we doubt not, that as our hearts justifie us, that our intentions are right, and such as we conceive tend most to the glory of God, and the peace of the churches of the saints, so (by your brotherly concurrence in the most speedy and effectuall way you can find out) the work will, in God's due time, receive a prayed-for, hoped-for issue. We shall not need, by many arguments from mutuall nationall interest, (though we know you will not overlook them,) to inforce this request, the firme bond wherewith we are all united in our Lord Jesus Christ, we are assured, will alone engage your faithfull endeavours in this businesse. To him we commit you, with these great and important affairs you have in hand. Be pleased to accept of these as the expression of the mindes of our many godly and faithfull brethren, whose hearts we doubt not of, neither need you, though their hands, in regard of the suddenesse of this opportunity, could not be subscribed together with ours, who are

Your most affectionate Friends and Brethren in the Work of the Lord.

London, July 22, 1642.

Answer to the Ministers' Letter.

Right Reverend and beloved in the Lord Jesus,

By our answer to the declaration sent unto us from the Honourable Houses of Parliament, ye may perceive that your letter, which came into our hands so seasonably, was not only acceptable unto us, but hath also encouraged us to renew, both to the King's Majestie and the Houses of Parliament, the desires of the late Commissioners of this kingdome for unity in religion, in the four particulars remembered by you. We cannot be ignorant but the opposition from Satan and worldly men, in Kirk and policy, will still be vehement, as it hath been already, but we are confident, through our Lord Jesus Christ, that the prayers and indeavours of the godly in both kingdoms will bring the word to a wished and blessed issue. This whole nationall Kirk is so much concerned in that reformation and unity of religion in both kingdomes, that without it we cannot hope for any long time to enjoy our puritie and peace, which hath cost us so dear, and is now our chieftest comfort and greatest treasure: Which one cause (beside the honour of God, and the happinesse of the people of God in that kingdome, more desired of us then our lives) is more then sufficient to move us to contribute all that is in our power for bringing it to passe. And since we have with so great liberty made our desires and hopes known both to King and Parliament, it is a duety incumbent both to you and us, who make mention of the Lord, and are watchmen upon the walls of Jerusalem, never more to keep silence, nor to hold our peace, day nor night, till the righteousnesse of Sion go forth as brightnesse, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. And if it shall please the Lord to move the hearts of King and Parliament to hearken unto the motion, for which end we have resolved to keep a solemne fast and humiliation in all the kirks of this kingdome, the mean by which we have prevailed in times past, we wish that the work may be begun with speed, and prosecuted with diligence, by the joint labours of some divines in both kingdoms, who may prepare the same for the view and examination of a more frequent ecclesiastick meeting of the best affected to reformation there, and of the commissioners of the Generall Assembly here, that in end it may have the approbation of the Generall Assembly here, and of all the kirks there, in the best way that may be; we wish and hope at last in a nationall Assembly. Our commissioners at Edinburgh shall in our name receive and returne answers for promoting so great a work, which we, with our heart and our soule, recommend to the blessing of God. We continue

Your loving brethren and fellow-labourers.

Act for the Lord Maitland's presenting the Assemblie's Supplication to his Majestie, and for going to the Commissioners at London, with the Answer to the Parliament of England's Declaration.

The General Assembly, considering the necessity of sending some person of good worth and quality for to present their humble supplication to his Majestie, and to deliver their directions to the commissioners of this kingdom now at London, with their declaration to the Parliament of England, and answer to some well-affected ministers of that Kirk: And having certain knowledge of the worth, ability, and faithfulness of John Lord Maitland, one of their number, who, being witness to all their intentions and proceedings, can best relate their true loyaltie and respect to their Sovereign, and brotherly affection to the Kirk and kingdom of England therein: Therefore, do unanimously require his Lordship's pains, by repairing to Court and to London for the premisses, which hereby they commit to his diligence and fidelity, willing his Lordship to make account of his proceedings herein to their commissioners appointed to sit at Edinburgh.

Sess. 12, Aug. 5, post meridiem.—Commission for publike Affairs of this Kirk, and for prosecuting the desires of this Assembly to his Majestic and the Parliament of England.

The Generall Assembly, considering the laudable custome of this Kirk for to appoint some commissioners in the interim betwixt Assemblies, for presenting of overtures and prosecuting the other desires of the Kirk to his Majestic, the Lords of his Councill, and the Estates of Parliament; and taking to their consideration the present condition of the Kirk of England, with the declaration thereof sent down from the Parliament, and some reverend brethren of the ministry there, with their own answer to the Parliament and ministry, and their humble supplication to his Majestic for unity of religion and uniformity of kirk government. And withall, remembering their desires to the Honourable Lords of his Majestic's Secret Councill, and to the Commissioners appointed by the King and Parliament for Conservation of the Common Peace, that they would joyn their concurrence in their desires to his Majestic and Parliament, and directions to the Commissioners of this kingdom at London for the time. And likewise, considering their good hopes, from God's gracious favour to this island, that by his good providence he will in his own way and time settle this great work through this whole isle; and that it is both our earnest desire and Christian duty to use all lawfull means and ecclesiastick wayes for furtherance of so great a work, continuance of the common peace betwixt these nations, and keeping a brotherly correspondence betwixt these Kirks: Therefore, the Assembly thinks it necessary before their dissolving to appoint, and by these presents do nominate and appoint, Masters Andrew Ransay, Alex. Henderson, Robert Dowglas, William Colvill, William Bennet, ministers at Edinburgh, Mr William Arthur, minister at St Cuthbert, Mr James Robertson, John Logan, Robert Lighton, commissioners from Dalkeith to this Assembly; Masters Andrew Blackhall, James Fleeming, Robert Ker, commissioners from Hadingtoun to this Assembly; Masters George Hamilton, Robert Blair, Arthur Mortoun, David Dalgleish, Andrew Bennet, Walter Greg, John Moncreff, John Smith, George Gillespie, John Row, John Duncan, Walter Bruce, commissioners for the Presbyteries within the province of Fyffe; Mr David Calderwood, minister at Pencaitland, Mr John Adamson, Principal of the Colledge of Edinburgh, Mr John Strang, Principal of the Colledge of Glasgow, Mr David Dickson, Mr James Bonar, Mr Robert Bailie, Mr John Bell, Mr Robert Ramsay, Mr George Young, Mr Henry Guthrie, Mr Samuel Oustein, Mr John Robertson, minister at St Johnstoun, Mr John Robertson, minister at Dundie, Mr John Hume, minister at Eckills, Mr Andrew Cant, Mr William Guild, Mr Samuel Rutherford, Mr James Martin, Mr Alexander Monroe, Mr Robert Murray, Mr John Maclellan, Mr Andrew Doncanson, Mr Silvester Lambie, Mr Gilbert Ross, ministers; Marquisse of Argyle, Earles of Lauderdale, Glencarne, Kinghorne, Eglintoun, Weemes, Cassils; Lords Gordoun, Maitland, Balcarras, Sir Patrick Hepburne of Wauchtoun, Sir David Home of Wedderburne, Sir David Creightoun of Lugtoun, Sir David Barclay of Cullearnie, John Henderson of Fordell, M. George Winrame of Libertoun, Sir Robert Drummond, Sir William Carmichaell, John Binnie, Thomas Paterson, John Sempill, John Kennedy of Air, John Leslie from Aberdene, William Glendining, Provost of Kirkubright, John Colzear, ruling elders, with the concurrence of the Procurator of the Kirk; and grants to them full power and commission in this interim betwixt and the next Assembly, for to meet and convene at Edinburgh upon the 17 day of this moneth of August, and upon any other day, or in any other place, as they shall think convenient; and being met and convened, or any fifteen of them, there being alwayes twelve ministers present, with full power for to consider and performe what they finde necessary for the ministerie, by preaching, supplicating, preparing of draughts of one Confession, one Catechisme, one Directory of Publike Worship, (which are alwayes to be revised by the next Generall Assembly,) and by all other lawfull and ecclesiastick wayes, for furtherance of this great work in the union of this iland in religion and kirk government, and for continuance of our own peace at home, and of the common peace betwixt the nations, and keeping of good correspondence betwixt the Kirks of this iland. Like as, if it shall please God to blesse the prayers and endeavours of his saints for this blessed union, and that if either the Lords of Councill or Commissioners for the Peace shall require their concurrence at home or abroad, by sending commissioners with theirs to his Majesty and Parliament for that effect, or that they themselves shall finde it necessary; the Assembly grants full power to them, not only to concur, by all lawfull and ecclesiastick wayes, with the Councill and Conservators of the Peace at home, but also to send some to present and prosecute their desires and humble advice to his Majesty and the Parliament, and the ministerie there, for the furthering and perfecting of so good and great a worke. Like as, with power to them to promote their other desires, overtures, and recommendations of this Assembly, to the King's Majestie, Lords of Councill, Session, Exchequer, and Commissioners of Parliament for Plantation of Kirks, for common burdens, or conservation of the common peace, and to the Parliament of this kingdom, in case it fall out pro re nata before the next Assembly. And such like, with as full power to them to proceed, treat and determine in any other matters to be committed to them by this Assembly, as if the samine were herein particularly insert, and with as ample power to proceede in the matters particularly or generally above mentioned, as any commissioners of Generall Assemblies have had, and have been in use of before; they being alwayes comptable to, and censurable by, the next Generall Assembly, for their proceedings thereanent.

Sess. 13, Aug. 6, 1642.—A Petition from some distressed Professors in Ireland.

To the Reverend and Right Honourable the Moderator and remanent Members of the Generall Assembly of Scotland, convcened at St Andrews, July 1642,
The humble Petition of the most part of the Scottish Nation in the North of Ireland, in their own names, and in name of the rest of the Protestants there;

Humbly Sheweth,

That where your petitioners, by the great blessing of the Lord, enjoyed for a little while a peaceable and fruitfull ministerie of the Gospel, yet through our own abuse of so rich a mercy, and through the tyrannie of the prelates, we have been a long time spoiled of our ministers, (a yoke to many of us heavier then death,) who being chased into Scotland, were not altogether unusefull in the day of your need. And we having been since oppressed and scattered, as sheep who have no shepherd, now at last, the wise and righteous hand of the Lord, by the sword of the rebels, hath bereft us of our friends, and spoiled us of our goods, and left us but a few, and that a poor handfull of many, and hath chased from us the rest that were called our ministers, the greatest part whereof we could scarce esteem such, as being rather officers to put the prelates' injunctions in execution, then feeders of our souls; so that now being visited with sword and sicknesse, and under some apprehension of famine, if withall we shall taste of the sorest of all plagues, to be altogether deprived of the ministry of the Word, we shall become in so much a worse condition then any Pagans, as that once we enjoyed a better. Neither know we what hand to turn us to for help, but to the land so far obliged by the Lord's late rare mercies, and so far enriched to furnish help of that kinde; a land whence many of us drew our blood and breath, and where (pardon the necessary boldnesse) some of our own ministers now are, who were so violently plucked from us, so sore against both their own and our wills; yea, the land that so tenderly in their bosoms received our poor outcasts, and that hath already sent us so rich a supply of able and prosperous souldiers to revenge our wrong.

Therefore, although we know that your zeale and brotherly affection would urge you to take notice without our advertisement, yet give us leave, in the bowels of our Lord Jesus Christ, to intreat, if there be any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels of mercy, that now in this nick of time, when the sword of the enemy making way for a more profitable entertaining the Gospel, having also banished the prelates, and their followers, when our extremity of distresse, and the fair hopes of speedy settling of peace, hath opened so fair a doore to the Gospel, you would take the cause of your younger sister, that hath no breasts, to your serious consideration, and pity poore Macedonians, crying to you that ye would come over and help us, being the servants of the God of your fathers, and claiming interest with you in a common covenant, that, according to the good hand of God upon us, ye may send us ministers for the house of our God. We do not take upon us to prescribe to you the way or the number, but in the view of all, the finger of the Lord points at these, whom, though persecution of the prelates drew from us, yet our interest in them could not be taken away, wherein we trust in regard of several of them, called home by death, your bounty will superadde some able men of your own, that may help to lay the foundation of God's house, according to the pattern. But for these so unjustly reft from us, not only our necessity, but equity pleads, that either you would send them all over, which were a work to be paralleled to the glories of the primitive times, or at least that ye would declare them transportable, that, when invitators shall be sent to any of them, wherein they may discern a call from God, there may be no difficultie in their loosing from thence, but they may come back to perfect what they began, and may get praise and fame in the land where they were put to shame. Neither are you to question your power over us so to doe, or crave a president of your own practise in that kind, for our extraordinary need calling on you, furnisheth you with a power to make this a president for the like cases hereafter; herein if you shall lay aside the particular concernment of some few places, which you may easily out of your rich nurseries plant again, and make use of your publike spirits, which are not spent, but increases by your so many noble designs, you shall leave upon us and our posteritie the stamp of an obligation that cannot be delete, or that cannot be expressed,—you shall send to all the neighbouring churches a pattern, and erect for after ages a monument of self-denying tender zeale,—you shall disburden the land of the many outcasts, who will follow over their ministers,—and you shall make it appear that the churlish bounty of the prelates, which at first cast some of these men over to us, is not comparable with the cheerfull liberalitie of a rightly constitute Generall Assembly, to whom we are perswaded the Lord will give seed for the loane which you bestow on the Lord; yea, the day may come, when a Generall Assembly in this land may returne to you the first-fruits of thanks for the plants of your free gift. And although you were scant of furniture of this kinde your selves, or might apprehend more need then formerly, yet, doubtlesse, your bowels of compassion would make your deep povertie, even in a great tryal of affliction, abound to the riches of your liberalitie. But now, seeing you abound in all things, and have formerly given so ample a proof of your large bestowing on churches abroad in Germanie and France, knowing that you are not wearied in well-doing, we confidently promise to our selves, in your name, that ye will abound in this grace also, following the example of our Lord and the primitive churches, who alwayes sent out disciples in paires. But, if herein our hopes shall faile us, we shall not know whether to wish that we had died with our brethren by the enemy's hand; for we shall be as if it were said unto us, Goe, serve other gods! yet looking for another kinde of answer at your hands, for in this you are to us an angel of God, we have sent these bearers, Mr John Gordoun, and Mr Hugh Campbell, our brethren, who may more particularly informe you of our ease, and desire, that, at their returne, they may refresh the bowels of

Your most instant and earnest supplicants.

Commission to some Ministers to go to Ireland.

The Assembly having received a petition, subscribed by a considerable number in the North of Ireland, intimating their deplorable condition, through want of the ministerie of the Gospel, occasioned by the tyrannie of the Prelats, and the sword of the rebels, and desiring some Ministers, especially such as had been chased from them, by the persecution of the prelates, and some others, to be added, either to be sent presently over to reside amongst them, or declared transportable, that, upon invitation from them, they might goe and settle there, together with some particular petitions, desiring the returne of some particular Ministers who had laboured there before: All which the Assembly hath taken to their serious consideration, being most heartily willing to sympathize with every member of Christ's body, although never so remote; much more with that plantation there, which, for the most part, was a branch of the Lord's vine planted in this land. In which sollicitude, as they would be loath to usurpe without their own bounds, or stretch themselves beyond their own measure; so they dare not be wanting, to the enlargement of Christ's Kingdome, where so loud a cry of so extreame necessitie could not but stirre up the bowels of Christian compassion. And although they conceive that the present unsettled condition both of Church and State and Land, will not suffer them as yet to loose any to make constant abode there, yet they have resolved to send over some for the present exigent till the next Generall Assembly, by courses, to stay there four moneths allanerly: And therefore doe hereby authorize and give commission to the persons following, to wit, Mr Robert Blair, minister at St Andrews, and Mr James Hamilton, minister at Dumfreis, for the first four moneths; Mr Robert Ramsay, minister at Glasgow, and Mr John Maclelland, minister at Kirkudbright, for the next four moneths; and to Mr Robert Baillic, Professor of Divinitie in the Universitie of Glasgow, and Mr John Levistoun, minister of Stranraire, for the last four moneths; to repair into the North of Ireland, and there to visit, comfort, instruct, and encourage the scattered flocks of Christ, to employ to their uttermost, with all faithfulness and singleness of heart, in planting and watering, according to the direction of Jesus Christ, and according to the doctrine and discipline of this Church, in all things; and, if need be, (with concurrence of such of the ministers of the army as are there,) to try and ordain such as shall be found qualified for the ministerie, giving charge unto the persons foresaid, in the sight of God, that, in doctrine, in worship, in discipline, and in their dayly conversation, they studie to approve themselves as the ministers of Jesus Christ, and that they be comptable to the Generall Assembly of this Kirk in all things. And in case if any of the above mentioned ministers be impeded by sicknesse, or otherwise necessarily detained from this service, the Assembly ordaines the commissioners residing at Edinburgh for the publike affairs of the Church to nominate in their place well qualified men, who hereby are authorized to undertake the foresaid employment, as if they had been expressly nominate in the face of the Assembly. And this, although possibly it shall not fully satisfie the large expectation of the brethren in Ireland, yet the Assembly is confident they will take in good part at this time that which is judged most convenient for their present condition, even a lent mite, out of their own not very great plenty, to supply the present necessity; requiring of them no other recompence, but that they in all cheerfulness may embrace and make use of the message of salvation, and promising to enlarge their indebted bounty at the next Assembly, as they shall finde the worke of the Lord there to require. In the meane while, wishing that these who are sent may come with the full blessing of the Gospel and peace, and recommending them, their labours, and these to whom they are sent, to the rich blessing of the great Shepherd of the flock.

Sess. 13, August 6, 1642.—Act against slandering of Ministers.

The Generall Assembly, considering the malice of divers persons in raising calumnies and scandalls against ministers, which is not onely injurious to their persons, and discreditabie to the holy calling of the Ministerie, but doth also prove often a great prejudice and hinderance to the promoting of the Gospel: Doe therefore ordain Presbyteries and Synods to proceed diligently in processe against all persons that shall reproach or scandall ministers, with the censures of the Kirk, even to the highest, according as they shall finde the degree or quality of the scandal deserve.

Act anent ordering of the Assembly-House.

The Assembly, for better order in time coming, ordains the Act of the Assembly at Aberdene for ordering the House of the Assembly, to be kept hereafter punctually. And, for that effect, that the samine be reade the first Session of every Assembly.

Act for remembring in publike Prayers the desires of the Assembly to the King and Parliament, and indiction of a publike Fast.

The Generall Assembly being desirous to promote the great work of unity in religion, and uniformity in church government, in all thir three dominions, for which the Assembly hath humbly supplicate the King's Majestie, and remonstrate their desires to the Parliament of England, lest they should be wanting in any meane that may further so glorious and so good a work: Doe ordain, that not only the said declaration to the Parliament, and supplication to the King's Majestie, shall be accompanied with the earnest petitions and prayers of the whole brethren, in private and publike, for the Lord's blessing thereunto, according to the laudable custome of our predecessors, who, in the year of God 1589, ordaines that the brethren, in their private and publike prayers, recommend unto God the estate of the afflicted Church of England; but, having just cause of fear, that the iniquities of the land, which so much abound, may marre this so great a work, doe also ordain a solemne Fast to be kept on the second Lord's Day of September, and the Wednesday following, throughout the whole kingdome, for the causes after specified:—

I. Grosse ignorance, and all sort of wickednesse, among the greater part, security, meer formality, and unfruitfulnesse among the best, and unthankfulnesse in all.

II. The sword raging throughout all Christendome, but most barbarously in Ireland, and dayly more and more threatned in England, through the lamentable division betwixt the King and the Parliament there, tending to the subversion of religion and peace in all the three kingdomes.

III. That God may graciously blesse the supplication of the Assembly to the King's Majesty, and their motion to the Parliament of England, for unitie in religion and uniformity of kirk government, and all other meanes which may serve for the promoting of so great a worke, and advancement of the Kingdome of Christ every where.

IV. That God may powerfully overturne all wicked plots and designes of Antichrist and his followers, and all divisive motions against the course of reformation, and the so much longed for union of the King and Parliament.

V. That God may blesse the harvest.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY,
CONVEENED AT EDINBURGH, 1643.

Sess. 1, Aug. 2, 1643.—The King's Letter to the Generall Assembly presented by his Majestie's Commissioner, Sir Thomas Hope of Craighall, Knight, his Majestie's Advocate.

CHARLES R.

Trustie and welbeloved—We greet you well. The time now approaching for the holding of the General Assembly of our Kirk of Scotland, and we having appointed Sir Thomas Hope, our Advocate, to be our Commissioner there, we thought good to present him there with these our letters, and to take this occasion to minde you of the duty which you owe to us, your Sovereigne, and to the peace of that our native kingdome. How far we have lately extended our grace and favour towards satisfaction of your humble desires there is not any amongst you but may well remember; and, therefore, in this conjuncture of our affairs, it is but reasonable that we expect from you such moderation in the dutifull proceedings of this Assembly, as may concurre with our princely inclinations and desires to preserve that Kirk, and that our kingdome, in peace; having wel observed that alterations in points of religion are often the inlets to civill dissensions, and the hazard, if not overthrow, of both Kirk and kingdomes: Therefore, of our great affection and speciall tendernesse to your peace, (who of all our dominions are yet happie therein to the envy of others,) we conjure and require you, in the fear of God, and obedience of us, his vicegerent, that your endeavours and consultations tend onely to preserve peace and quietnesse among you. And so we bid you farewell. Given at our Court at Oxford, the 22d day of July 1643.

To our right trusty and welbeloved Counsellour, Sir Thomas Hope, Knight, our Advocate-Generall, and our Commissioner at the Generall Assembly of the Kirk in our Kingdome of Scotland, and to the rest of the said Assembly now convened.

Sess. 2, Aug. 3, 1643.—Overtures anent Bills, References, and Appeales.

I. That all bills whatsoever, of particular concernment, whereunto all parties having interest are not cited, should be rejected.

II. That all bills be first presented to the inferiour judicatories of the Kirk, who may competently consider of them, and from them be orderly and gradatim brought to the Assembly, according to the order prescribed for appellations in the Assembly of Edinburgh, 1639, in the 24th Sess. August 30.

III. That the said act of Assembly, 1639, anent appellations, be also extended to references.

IV. In appellations and references, of particular concernment, if all parties having interest have been present in the inferiour judicatorie when the appeal and reference was made, then there is no necessitie of citation. But in case of their absence, citation of parties is so necessar, that if it be wanting appellations and references should not be received.

V. That, conform to former acts of Assemblies, appellations post sententiam be made within ten dayes after the sentence, and otherwise not to be respected.

The Assembly ordaines thir Overtures to be given to the severall committees for their direction.

Sess. 3, August 4, 1643.—Act for Election of Professours to be Commissioners to Assemblies by Presbyteries.

The Assembly thinks, if Professours of Divinitie in Universities be Ministers, that they may be chosen commissioners to the Generall Assembly, either by the Presbyterie as Ministers, or by the Universitie as Professours of Divinitie.

Sess. 4, August 5, 1643.—The Petition of the distressed Professours in Ireland for Ministers.

To the Reverend and Honourable Moderatour, and remanent Members of the Generall Assembly of Scotland, convened at Edinburgh, Aug. 1643, The humble Petition of the distressed Christians in the North of Ireland,

Humbly Sheweth,

That whereas you were pleased the last year to take notice of our petition, and conceived so favourable an act in our behalf, from our hearts we blesse the Lord God of our fathers, who put such a thing as this in your heart, to begin in any sort to beautifie the house of the Lord amongst us: doubtlesse you have brought upon your selves the blessing of them who consider the poor; the Lord will certainly deliver you in the time of trouble. We trust no distance of place, no length of time, no pressure of affliction, yea, nor smiling of prosperity, shall delete out of our thankfull memories the humble acknowledgement of your so motherly care, in drawing out your breasts, yea, your souls, to satisfie the hungrie; although we have been beaten with the sword, bitten with famine, our own wickednes correcting us, our backslidings reproving us, yet we have not so farre forgotten the Lord's ancient love but that our hearts were brought to a little reviving in the midst of our bondage, by the ministry of these who at your direction made a short visit amongst us. We know you did not conceive it expedient at that time to loose any for ful settling here, till the waters of the bloody inundation were somewhat abated, and probability might be of some comfortable abode, which we, through the Lord's revenging hand pursuing our enemies, and the vigilancie of your victorious army, is in a great measure attained unto. Whatsoever might have detained some of these whom ye directed to us, whose stay made our expectation prove abortive, we shall ascribe it to our own abuse of such treasure, and want of spirituall hunger, occasioned justly through the want of food; and yet that same disappointment, together with your faithfull promise of enlarging your indebted bountie, which is put upon record in all our hearts, hath made us conceive the seed of a lively expectation, that you will now no more put your bountie and the means of our life into the hazard of such frustrations, but will once for all bestow an ample and enduring blessing. And of this we are so much the more confident, because our former suit was not denied but delayed; only we fear, if a new delay be procured, till all things be fully settled, that the observing of winde and clouds shall hinder both sowing and reaping; and, in the meantime, the prelates and their faction may step in and invest themselves of their old tyrannie over our consciences, who, if they once shall see us possessed of our inheritance, those Canaanites dare not offer to thrust us out. By all appearance, if the Jesuites had any hope to finde welcome amongst us, they had provided us fully ere now with their poysoned plants. Our hearts abhorre the checking or suspecting of your proceedings, yet it is lawfull to learn sometime from our enemy; but in this you have begun before, not only to do, but also to be forward a year ago, and thereby have ingaged your selves to perfect your own beginnings, and bring us out of our orphan condition. We are fallen in your lap. This ruine must be under your hand; you cannot pretend want of bread or cloathing; you must be healers. We have chosen you ecurators to your little young sister that wants breasts. There is none on earth to take her out of your hand; for we will not, nor cannot hide it from your honours and wisdomes that we want bread, and must not only, as before, have a bit for our present need, but also seed to sow the land.

It is therefore our humble and earnest desire, that you would yet again look on our former petition and your own obligatorie act, and at least declare your consent that a competent number of our own ministers may be loosed to settle here, and break bread to the children but lye fainting at the head of all streets; which although it may be accounted but a restoring of what we lost, and you have found, yet we shall esteem it as the most precious gift that earth can afford. When they are so loosed, if they finde not all things concurring to clear God's calling, it will be in their hand to forbear; and you have testified your bountie. But oh, for the Lord's sake, do not kill our dying souls, by denying these our necessar desires! There are about twelve or fourteen waste congregations on this nearest coast, let us have at least a competent number that may erect Christ's throne of discipline, and may help to bring in others, and then shall we sing, that the people who were left of the sword have found grace in the wilderness. We have sent these our brethren, Sir Robert Adair of Kinhilt, Knight, and William Mackenna of Belfast, merchant, to attend an answer from you, who have attained that happinesse to be lenders and not borrowers, and to present the heartie longing affections of,

Your most obliged, and more expecting brethren and servants.

Sess. 6. August 8, 1643.—Acts for subscribing the Covenant.

The Generall Assembly, considering the good and pious advice of the commissioners of the last Assembly, upon the 22 of September 1642, post meridiem, recommending to Presbyteries to have copies of the Covenant, to be subscribed by every minister at his admission; doth, therefore, ratifie and approve the samine; and, further, ordaines that the Covenant be reprinted, with this ordinance prefixed thereto, and that every Synod, Presbyterie, and Paroch, have one of them bound in quarto, with some blank paper, whereupon every person may be obliged to subscribe; and that the Covenants of the Synod and Presbyterie be kept by their Moderatours respectivè; of Universities by their Principalls; of Paroches by their Ministers, with all carefullnesse. And that particular account of obedience to this act be required hereafter in all visitations of Paroches, Universities, and Presbyteries, and in all trialls of Presbyteries and Synod books.

The Generall Assembly, considering that the Act of the Assembly at Edinburgh, August 30, 1639, injoyning all persons to subscribe the Covenant, under all ecclesiasticall censure, hath not been obeyed: Therefore, ordaines all ministers to make intimation of the said act in their kirks, and thereafter to proceed with the censures of the Kirk against such as shall refuse to subscribe the Covenant. And that exact account be taken of every minister's diligence hereintill by their Presbyteries and Synods, as they will answer to the Generall Assembly.

Sess. 7, August 9, 1643.—Act for Searching Books tending to Separation.

The Generall Assembly, considering the recommendation of the commissioners of the late Assembly at St Andrews, upon the 12 of May last, to every minister within their severall bounds, especially to ministers upon the coasts, or where there is harbourie and ports, to try and search for all books tending to separation; and finding the same most necessar, do therefore ordain that recommendation to have the strength of an ordinary act of Assembly; and that every minister be carefull to try and search if any such books be brought to this countrey from beyond seas; and, if any shall be found, to present the samine to Presbyteries, that some course may be taken to hinder the dispersing thereof; and earnestly recommend to the civill inagistrates to concurre with their authoritie in all things for effectuall execution hereof.

Approbation of the Proceedings of the Commissioners of the last Assembly.

The Generall Assembly, having heard the report of the committee appointed to consider the proceedings of the commissioners of the late Assembly at St Andrews, after mature deliberation, and serious consideration thereof, findes the whole acts, conclusions, and proceedings of the saids commissioners, contained in a book and register, subscribed by Master Andrew Ker, their clerk, and by Master David Lindsay, Moderatour, and Master James Hamilton, clerk to the said committee, to declare much wisdom, diligence, vigilancie, and every way commendable zeal and fidelitie, in doing and discharging every thing according to their commission.

Sess. 8, August 10, 1643.—Propositions given by the Commissioners of the Parliament of England to a Committee, to be presented by them to the Assembly.

We, the Commissioners appointed by both Houses of the Parliament of England, desire your Lordships, and the rest of this reverend committee, to represent to the reverend the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland that we are commanded—

To acknowledge, with all thankfulness to God, their zeal for purging and reforming religion, and care not only to prevent the growth, but utterly to extirpate the reliques of Popery; and also the great blessing of Almighty God upon their so constant and faithfull endeavours thus for establishing them in truth and peace, together with their labour of love to procure the like happinesse to our Church and nation.

To give them an account of their earnest desire and endeavour to see the same work promoted and perfected among our selves; which, though it hath been opposed and retarded by the industrious malice of the Popish, Prelaticall, and Malignant partie, yet, through God's goodnesse, it hath so far prevailed as to produce the removeall of the High Commission—the making void the coercive power of the prelates and their courts—the ejection of the bishops from the House of Peers—the turning out of many scandalous ministers; besides that they have passed and presented to his Majestie diverse bills, viz., for the suppressing of innovations—for the more strict observation of the Lord's Day—against pluralities and non-residencie—for the punishment of the scandalous clergie—for the abolition of Episcopacie—and the calling an Assembly,—the true copies of which we herewithall deliver. Which bills, through the under-mining of the Papists, Prelates, and their party, (the constant enemies of reformation,) have not yet obtained his Majestie's royall assent. And yet considering the urgent necessity of purging and settling the Church, (as hath been often pressed and presented to the Parliament of England by pious and frequent exhortations and declarations from that reverent Assembly,) they have been constrained, by an ordinance of both Houses, to call an Assembly of divines and others, now sitting, to consider and prepare what may conduce thereunto; which, by the assistance of some godly and learned divines sent from this nation, (as is earnestly desired,) we hope may, through the blessing of God, bring it to perfection.

And yet, notwithstanding, to let them know that by reason of the prevailing of the Papists, Prelaticall faction, and other malignant enemies to this so much desired reformation, (all of them being now in arms against the Parliament,) these hopefull beginnings are likely not onely to be rendred ineffectuall, but all the former evils, superstitions, and corruptions, (which for the present, through the blessing of God, are in a good measure removed,) to be re-introduced by strong hand; which, if once they should take root again in the Church and kingdome of England, will quickly spread their venome and infection into the neighbour Church and kingdome of Scotland; the quarrell of the enemies of this work being not so much against the persons of men as the power of godlinesse, and purity of God's worship, wheresoever it is professed. Both Houses do, therefore, desire that reverent Assembly to lay seriously to heart the state and condition of their sister Church and kingdome, and not only by their prayers to assist in these straits, but also, by such seasonable and effectuall means as to them shall seem meet, to further and expedite the present aid and assistance demanded by both Houses.

And, lastly, to make known unto them that we are designed and sent by both Houses of Parliament to the Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland, to propound to them, and consult with them concerning such things as may conduce to our own reformation, and our so much desired conjunction with this Church, which they have more fully expressed in a declaration of their own, which herewithall we present.

WILLIAM BOND, Secr. Commis.

August 10, 1643.

A Declaration of the Lords and Commons in the Parliament of England, to the Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

The Lords and Commons in Parliament, acknowledging, with humble thankfulness to Almighty God, the disposer of hearts, the Christian zeal and love which the Generall Assembly of the Churches of Scotland have manifested, in their pious endeavours for the preservation of the true reformed Protestant religion from the subtle practices and attempts of the Popish and Prelaticall party, to the necessary reformation of Church discipline and government in this kingdome, and the more near union of both Churches, do earnestly desire that reverent Assembly to take notice that the two Houses of Parliament, fully concurring with them in these pious intentions, for the better accomplishment thereof, have called an assembly of diverse godly and learned divines, and others of this kingdome, unto the city of Westminster, who are now sitting and consulting about these matters. And likewise have nominated and appointed John Earle of Rutland, Sir William Armine, Baronet, Sir Henry Vane the younger, Knight, Thomas Hatcher and Henry Darley, Esquires, Committees and Commissioners of both Houses to the kingdome and states of Scotland, who, beside their instructions in matters concerning the peace and commonweal of both kingdomes, have received directions to resort to the Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and propound and consult with them, or any commissioners deputed by them, in all occasions which may further the so much desired reformation in ecclesiasticall matters in this Church and kingdome, and a nearer conjunction betwixt both Churches. In performance whereof, Master Stephen Marshall, and Master Philip Nye, ministers of God's Word, and men of approved faithfulness and abilities in their function, both members of this assembly of divines here congregated and sitting, are appointed to assist and advise the same committee in such things as shall concerne this Church. And the two Houses do hereby recommend the committees and divines afore mentioned to the reverent Assembly of the Church of Scotland, to be by them received with favour, and credited in those things which they, or any three or more of them, shall propound to them.

It is likewise desired, that that reverent Assembly will, according to their former promise and resolution, send to the Assembly here such number of godly and learned divines, as in their wisdom they think most expedient for the furtherance of this work, which so much concerns the honour of God, the prosperity and peace of the two Churches of England and Scotland; and which must needs have a great influence in procuring a more safe and prosperous condition to other reformed churches abroad. And that their endeavours may be more effectuall, the two Houses do make this request to them, with their authority, advice, and exhortation, so far as belongs to them, to stir up that nation to send some competent forces, in aid of this Parliament and kingdome, against the many armies of the Popish and Prelaticall party and their adherents, now in arms for the ruine and destruction of the Reformed religion, and all the professors thereof. In all which they shall do that which will be pleasing to God, whose cause it is, and likewise safe and advantageous to their own Church and kingdome, who cannot securely enjoy the great blessings of religion, peace, and libertie in that kingdome, if this Church and kingdome, by the prevailing violence of that partie, shall bee brought to ruine and destruction.

A Letter from some Brethren of the Ministerie in the Kirk of England to the Assembly.

REVEREND AND BELOVED,

The experience which we have had of your forwardnesse in receiving, and faithfulness in weighing our former addresses, hath given us abundant encouragement to take hold upon this present opportunitie of breathing out something of our sorrowes, which your love and our necessity command us to represent to your consideration and compassion. Much we know we may commit to the wisdom and fidelity of our brethren these messengers, to impart unto you concerning our miserable condition, and unto them shall leave the most. Your own nationall, but specially Christian interest, will not permit you to hide your eyes from the bleeding condition of your poor distressed brethren in England, should neither letters nor messengers be sent unto you; but messengers coming, we should at once neglect our selves, should we not thus a little ease our burdened hearts by pouring them out into your bosomes, and seem ungratefull to you, of whose readinesse to suffer with us, and do for us, we have had so great and ample testimonies.

Surely if ever a poor nation were upon the edge of a most desperate precipice, if ever a poor church were ready to be swallowed up by Satan and his instruments, we are that nation, we are that church. And, in both respects, by so much the more miserable, by how much we expected not a preservation onely, but an augmentation also, of happiness in the one, and glory in the other. We looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time of healing, and behold trouble! Our God, who in his former judgements was a moth and rottenesse, (and yet had of late begun to send us health and cure,) is now turned into a lion to us, and threatens to rend the very cawle of our hearts; from above he hath sent a fire into our bones, and it prevails against us; from our own bowels he hath called forth and strengthened an adversarie against us, a generation of brutish, hellish men, the rod of his anger, and the staff of his indignation, under whose cruelties we bleed, and, if present mercy step not in, we die. "Righteous art thou, O Lord, and just are all thy judgements!" But, O the more then barbarous carriages of our enemies, where ever God gives any of his hidden ones up into their hands, we need not expresse it unto you, who knows the inveterate and deadly malice of the Antichristian faction against the members of our Lord Jesus! And it is well we need not expresse it unto you; for in truth we cannot. Your own thoughts may tell you better then any words of ours, what the mercie of Papists is toward the ministers and servants of our Lord Jesus Christ. But the Lord knows we are not troubled so much with their rage against us, or our own miseries and dangers; but that which breaks our hearts is, the danger we behold the Protestant religion, and all the reformed churches in at this time, through that too great and formidable strength the Popish faction is now arrived at. If our God will lay our bodies as the ground, and as the street under their foot, and poure out our blood as dust before their fury, the wil of the Lord be done. Might our blood be a sacrifice to ransom the rest of the saints or Church of Christ from Antichristian fury, we would offer it up upon this service gladly. But we know their rage is insatiable, and wil not be quenched with our bloods—immortall, and will not die with us—armed against us, not as men, but as Christians, but as Protestants, but as men desiring to reform ourselves, and to draw ourselves and others yet nearer unto God. And if God gave us up to be devoured by this rage, it will take the more strength and courage (at least) to attempt the like against all the Protestant and Reformed churches. In a deeper sense of this extream danger, threatening us and you, and all the churches, then we can expresse, we have made this addresse unto you, in the bowels of our Lord Jesus Christ, humbly imploring your most fervent prayers to the God that hears prayers; who (should we judge by providences) seems to be angry with our prayers, (though we trust he doth but seem so, and though he kill us, yet will we trust in him,) Oh, give us the brotherly aide of your re-inforced tears and prayers, that the blessings of truth and peace which our prayers alone have not obtained, yours conjoynd may. And give us, reverend and much honoured in our Lord, your advices what remains for us further to doe, for the making of our own and the kingdome's peace with God. We have lien in the dust before him, we have poured our hearts in humiliation to him, we have in sincerity endeavoured to reform ourselves, and no lesse sincerely desired, studied, laboured the publick Reformation; neverthelesse, the Lord hath not yet turned himself from the fiercenesse of his anger. And be pleased to advise us further what may be the happiest course for the uniting of the Protestant partie more firmly, that we may all serve God with one consent, and stand up against Antichrist as one man, that our God, who now hides himself from his people, may return unto us, delight in us, scatter and subdue his and our enemies, and cause his face to shine upon us. The Lord prosper you and preserve us, so that the great work of these latter ages may be finished to his honour, and our own and the Church's happinesse, through Christ Jesus.

Sess. 9, August 11, 1643.—Act against Burialls, and hinging of Honours, &c. in Kirks.

The Generall Assembly, considering the great abuse of burying within kirks where- in God's publick worship is exercised, notwithstanding diverse acts of this Kirk, prohibiting the same; and that through toleration thereof, other abuses, in hinging of pensils and brods, affixing of honours and arms, and such like scandalous monuments in the Kirk hath crept in: Therefore, for remedy hereof, do hereby ratifie and approve the former acts and constitutions made against burials in kirks; and inhibites and discharges all persons, of whatsoever qualitie, to burie any deceased person within the body of the kirk, where the people meet for hearing of the Word and administration of the Sacraments; and also inhibites them to hing pensils or brods, to affixe honours or arms, or to make any such like monuments to the honour or remembrance of any deceased person, upon walls, or other places within the kirk where the publick worship of God is exercised, as said is.

Sess. 10, August 12, 1643.—Act anent reposition of Ministers deposed by Superiour Judicatories.

The Generall Assembly, considering that sentences of superiour judicatories of the Kirk should stand effectuall, whill they be taken away by themselves, and that they should not be made void and ineffectuall by inferiour judicatories: Therefore, discharges all Provinciall Assemblies to repon any minister deposed by the Generall Assembly; and all Presbyteries to repon any ministers deposed either by Generall or Provinciall Assemblies; and declares and ordains that all such sentences of reposition by these inferiour judicatories, respectivè, shall be null in themselves; and that the sentences of deposition by the superiour judicatories, respectivè, shall stand valid and effectuall notwithstanding thereof.

Sess. 11, August 14, 1643.—Act against Masters who have Servants that Prophane the Lord's Day.

The General Assembly declares, that the acts made against salmond-fishing upon the Sabbath, or against any other labour upon the Lord's day, to be not only against servants who actually work, but also that the samine should be extended against masters whose hired servants they are.

Sess. 12, August 15, 1643.—Act for preparing the Directorie for the Worship of God.

The Assembly, considering how convenient it is that all the ministers of the particular kirks within this kingdome, in their administration keep unity and uniformity in the substance and right ordering of all the parts of the publick worship of God, and that all the particular kirks, by the same unity and uniformitie, testifie their unanimous consent against all schisme and division, unto which these times, through the working of Satan and his instruments against the propagation of the Gospel of peace, are so inclineable; doth ordain that a Directorie for Divine Worship, with all convenient diligence, be framed and made ready, in all the parts thereof, against the next Generall Assembly, to be held in the year 1644. And for this end, that such as shall be nominate by this Assembly shall, immediatly after the rising of the Assembly, set themselves apart (so far as may be) from their particular callings, and with all diligence and speed go about this so publick, so pious, and so profitable a work. And when they have brought their endeavours and labours about this Directorie to an end, that it be put into the hands of the commissioners of the Generall Assembly to be revised, and thereafter by them sent in severall copies to all the particular Synods, to be held in April and May, that the samine being reported with their consent, or with their observations, notes, and animadversions to the Generall Assembly, it may in end, after their full triall and approbation, by order and authority from them, be received and practised by all the ministers and particular kirks. And for preserving of peace and brotherly unity in the mean while, till the Directorie, by universall consent of the whole Kirk, be framed, finished, and concluded, the Assembly forbiddeth, under the pain of the censures of the Kirk, all disputation by word or writing, in private or publick, about different practices in such things as have not been formerly determined by this Kirk, and all condemning one of another in such lawfull things as have been universally received, and by perpetuall custome practised by the most faithfull ministers of the Gospell, and opposers of corruptions in this Kirk, since the first beginning of reformation to these times; and doth exhort and command that all endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, that all beginnings of separation, all scandall and division, be by all means avoided; and that against envying, and strife, and faction, and glorying in men, every one go before another in the duties of love, and so fulfill the law of Christ; that continuing in one spirit and one minde, and fighting together through the faith of the Gospell, we may mutually aide, strengthen, and comfort one another, in all pastorall and Christian employments, better resist the common adversaries, edifie one another in the knowledge and fear of God, and the more acceptably, and with the greater blessing, serve the Lord, who hath done so great things for us.

Propositions from the English Commissioners presented this day to the Assembly.

We, the Commissioners appointed by both Houses of the Parliament of England, being commanded by them (as we have already declared) to desire the reverend Assembly of Scotland seriously to lay to heart the present estate of their sister Church and kingdome of England, and not onely to assist with their prayers in their straits, but also, by such reasonable and effectuall means as to themselves shall seem meet, to further and expedite the assistance now desired by both Houses from the kingdome of Scotland, and a more strict union with them; have thought fit, in pursuance of the commands received from both Houses of Parliament, to communicate to this Assembly the paper which to this purpose we have lately delivered to the honourable Convention of Estates in this kingdome, that so this reverend Assembly might be the better enabled to contribute their best assistance toward the furthering and expediting of the same. Wherein we assure our selves of their ready and willing affections, considering the great service they may do to God, and the great honour may redound to themselves, in becoming the instruments of a glorious reformation, not onely through this Iland, but from thence possibly to be spread to other Churches, now oppressed under the Antichristian bondage, and tyrannic of the Popish and Prelaticall faction. We will not say there lies any obligation upon this Church and kingdome to comply with the desires of the two Houses of Parliament, though we might call to minde that God, by the hand of the Church and kingdome of England, did once reach forth assistance and aid unto this nation, and hath since used them as a help to that blessed reformation it now enjoys. And who knoweth whether the wise providence of God hath not suffered this Church and kingdome to be tempted thereby, to make them the more sensible of the present miseries of their brethren, and likewise given them a good issue with the tentation, that they might be made a means of our deliverance? We shall not need to offer any grounds of prudence to invite them hereunto, who have already prevented us in the acknowledgement of what might be said of that kinde, in the advice presented by the commissioners of the Generall Assembly, July 6, 1643, unto the Convention of Estates, expressing, as one remedie of the present dangers of this Church and kingdome, their earnest desire of renewing the league and association with England, for the defence of religion against the common enemy, and of further extending the same against Prelacie and Popish ceremonies, for uniformity in externall worship, and church government. And we hope that the same God who hath put these desires into the hearts of both kingdomes, will make use of this present opportunity to knit them both to himself and each other in a most strict and durable union, and thereby the more firmly to establish truth and peace in both nations. Howsoever, this which we have done, in discharge of our duty, will afford the comfort of a good conscience in our greatest distresses, and give us ground to expect deliverance some way or other, from the manifold wisdome and power of God, who, though men and means fail, will not cast off his people, nor forsake his inheritance. We have onely this to adde further, that we are commanded by both Houses to let this reverend Assembly know, that it is their earnest desire, that what other propositions may be thought fit to be added and concluded by this Assembly, whereby the assistance and union betwixt the two nations may be made more beneficiall and effectuell for the securing of religion and libertie, should be offered to us, and taken to our speedy consideration.

The Paper before mentioned delivered, August 12, to the Convention, and this day to the Assembly.

We, the Commissioners appointed by both Houses of the Parliament of England, are, by our instructions, commanded to put their brethren of Scotland in minde, that the Popish and Prelaticall faction that began with them about the year 1638 and 1639, and then intended to make way to the ruine of the kingdome of England by theirs, have not abated any part of their malice toward the nation and Church of Scotland, nor are at all departed from their designe of corrupting and altering religion through the whole Iland, though they have inverted the manner of their proceeding, conceiving now that they have an easier way to destroy them, if they may first prevail over the Parliament and kingdome of England. In which respect it is the desire of both Houses that the two nations may be strictly united, for their mutuall defence, against the Papists and Prelaticall faction, and their adherents in both kingdomes, and not to lay down arms till those their implacable enemies shall be disarmed, and subjected to the authority and justice of Parliament in both kingdomes respectively. And as an effectuell mean hereunto, they desire their brethren of Scotland to raise a considerable force of horse and foot for their aide and assistance, to be forthwith sent against the Papists, Prelaticall faction, and Malignants, now in arms in the kingdome of England.

And for the better encouragement of the kingdome of Scotland to this necessary and so much desired union, we are, by both Houses of Parliament, authorized to assure their brethren, that if they shall be annoyed or endangered by any force or army, either from England or any other place, the Lords and Commons of England will assist them with a proportionable strength of horse and foot to what their brethren shall now afford them, to be sent into Scotland for the defence of that kingdome. And they will maintain a guard of ships at their own charge upon the coast of Scotland, for the securing of that kingdome from the invasion of Irish rebels or other enemies, luring such time as the Scottish army shall be employed in the defence of the kingdome of England. And to the end that nothing might be wanting in the Parliament and kingdome of England to facilitate this work, (wherein the true reformed religion, not onely in these two kingdomes, but throughout all Europe, is so highly concerned,) we are farther authorized to consider with their brethren, the Estates and kingdome of Scotland, of what other articles or propositions are fit to be added and concluded, whereby this assistance and union betwixt the two nations may be made more beneficiall and effectuall for the securitie of religion and libertie in both kingdomes.

All which being taken into the serious and Christian consideration of the Right Honourable the Lords and others of the Convention of the Estates of Scotland, we hope there will not need many arguments to perswade and excite them to give their consent, and that with all convenient speed, to these desires of both Houses of the Parliament of England; seeing now they have so fully declared, as by what they have done already, so, by what they are yet desirous to do, that the true state of this cause and quarrell is religion, in the reformation whereof they are and have been so forward and zealous, as that there is not any thing expressed unto them by their brethren of Scotland, in their former or latter declarations, which they have not seriously taken to heart, and seriously endeavoured to effect, (notwithstanding the subtle, malicious, and industrious oppositions,) that so the two kingdomes might be brought into a near conjunction in one form of Church government, one Directoric of Worship, one Catechisme, &c., and the foundation laid of the utter extirpation of Popery and Prelacie out of both kingdomes; the most readie and effectuall means whereunto is now conceived to be, that both nations enter into a strict union and league, according to the desires of the two Houses of Parliament.

And to induce the perswasion of this, (if there were cause,) we might observe, that, in the many declarations made by the Generall Assembly or States of Scotland to their brethren of England, there have been sundry expressions, manifesting the great necessitie that both kingdomes, for the securitie of their religion and liberties, should joyn in this strict union against the Papists, Prelats, and their adherents—as also in the endeavour of a near conjunction between the Churches of both nations; the apprehension and foresight of which hath caused the Popish and Prelaticall faction, in forreigne parts as well as in his Majestie's dominions, strictly and powerfully to combine themselves to the hinderance of this so necessary work, and the universall suppression of the true Protestant religion in Europe; a course not much different from that which they took in the year 1585, when the wisdom and zeal of this nation to counter-myne so wicked a conspiracie, and from the due sense of the mutuall interest of these two kingdomes, in religion and libertie, found a necessity of entering into a league of this nature, as well considering that thereby no lesse safetic might be expected to both nations then danger by forbearing the same. And though we doubt not but in so necessary and so good a work many difficulties may arise to interrupt and retard the same, yet we are as confident, that the heartie and brotherly affection of this nation to the Parliament and kingdome of England will easily break through them; and the rather because, in the like cases of difficultie and danger, not only at the time of the league above mentioned, but before, and likewise since, when any opportunity hath offered it self particularly, during the sitting of this present Parliament, the kingdome of England hath been very forward and ready to lay to heart the dangers of the kingdome of Scotland as their own, and to decline no means within the reach of their power for the redresse or prevention of the same.

Sess. 13, August 16, 1643.—Recommendation to Presbyteries and Universities ament Students that have the Irish Language.

The Assembly, considering the lamentable condition of the people in the Highlands, where there are many that gets not the benefite of the Word, in respect there are very few preachers that can speak the Irish language; do, for remeid thereof, think good, that young students who have the Irish tongue be trained up at colleges in letters, especially in the studies of divinitie; and, to this effect, recommend to presbyteries and universities to preferre any hopefull students that have the language aforesaid to bursaries, that they, by their studies, in proesse of time, attaining to knowledge, and being enabled for the Ministerie, may be sent forth for preaching the Gospel in these Highland parts, as occasions shall require.

Sess. 14, August 17, 1643.—The Letter from the Assembly of Divines in the Kingdome of England.

To the Right Reverend the Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Right Reverend and dearly beloved in our Lord Jesus Christ,

We, the Assembly of Divines, and others, called, and now sitting by authority of both Houses of Parliament, to be consulted by them in matters of religion, have received from the Honourable House of Commons a speciall order, (dated the 3d of this instant August,) recommending it to us to write a Letter to the Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland, taking notice of the pious and good expeditions to this Church and State, certified in the late answer of the Commissioners of the Generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, from their meeting at Edinburgh, the 17th of July 1643. And, further, to desire them to possesse the people of that kingdome with our condition, and to encourage them to our assistance in this cause of religion. And having, with that order, received and read the said answer directed to the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England, we cannot sufficiently expresse the great content and comfort unto which it hath raised us in the midst of the sad and calamitous condition under which we lie.

It is no small refreshing to our mourning spirits to finde, that yet our God hath not left us wholly comfortlesse, nor cast us so far out of his sight, as having made us sick with smiting, that should be verified of us, " Lover and friend hast thou put far from us," and that no man should turn aside to ask how we do; but that we finde so many of the churches of Christ, and, above them all, our dearest brethren of Scotland, so far to take to heart our extremities, as to sit in the dust with us, and so to look upon our adversities, as being themselves also in the body.

And, as we cannot render thanks sufficient unto our God, for remembering such mercie in the midst of so much wrath, so we embrace, with all chearfulness, this opportunitie of thankfull acknowledgement of the great debt which your love doth continually lay upon not us alone, but upon this whole kingdome, in the free and full expressions of your care, piety, and zeal, and of like affections of that whole nation, to assist and concurre with the Parliament here, by all good and lawfull means, for settling of religion in godly unity and uniformitic throughout all his Majestie's dominions, against all the designes, power, and malice, of bloudie Papists and the Prelaticall faction, with all their malignant adherents, the common enemies of reformation, truth, and peace.

We are likewise much ingadged to the great vigilancie and travels of the honourable Convention of the Estates of Scotland, in contributing their brotherly advice, and for their readinesse to give assistance for recovering and settling the peace of this kingdome, against the devices, power, and practices of the enemies of religion and the publick good, whereof some hints are given in that answer, and of which, we doubt not, but the Honourable Houses of Parliament will be so sensible as to give such a return as becomes them; for they, better knowing than we do the depth of the evils under which this nation now groaneth, and the further dangers imminent, will be more able to value and improve the great affection and wisdom of their brethren, in points of so high and generall concernement, for the safetie and glory of the King's Majestie, and of all his kingdomes, and are more fit to take notice of advices of that kinde in reference to the civil state; which, therefore, we wholly leave with them.

But as for the many prudent, pious, and seasonable admonitions which concerne our Assembly, the good Lord reward (for we cannot) seven fold into your bosomes all the good, which you have laboured to procure unto the house of our God; and blessed be his name, who hath put such a thing as this into the hearts of our Parliament, to cleanse the House of the Lord of all the uncleannesse that is in it, by impure doctrine, worship, or discipline.

Nor can we, in the depth of all our sufferings and sorrows, withhold our hearts from rejoicing in the wonderful goodnes of God toward this kingdome, in that he hath let us see the gracious fruit of your effectuall prayers and teares, as well as of our own endeavours this way, in bringing together this Assembly, although in a very troublous time, whereby we may have better opportunity more fully to poure out our soules jointly and together to our God, for healing of this now miserable Church and nation; to consider throughly for what more especially the land mourneth; and how we may be most usefull to our great God and Master, Jesus Christ—in contributing somewhat to the vindicating of his precious truth, many wayes corrupted, through the craft of men, that have lyen in wait to deceive—in the seeking out of a right way of worshipping our God, according to his own heart—in promoting the power of godlinesse in the hearts and lives of all his people, and in laying forth such a discipline as may be most agreeable to God's holy Word, and most apt to procure and preserve the peace of this Church at home, and nearer agreement with the Church of Scotland, (highly honoured by us,) and other the best reformed churches abroad, that so, to the utmost of our power, we may exalt him that is the only Lord over the Church, his own house, in all his offices, and present this Church as a chast virgin unto Christ.

It is a timely and savourie prayer which you have put up at the throne of grace, touching the due managing of the proceedings in this Assembly, and that with straight intentions we may all seek the truth in everything, which, by the blessing of God upon our labours, must needs produce all those blessings which your worthie commissioners mention. And now, for your comfort as well as our own encouragement, we desire you to take notice of the gracious answer of the God that heareth prayer unto your fervent cryes. For beside our own particular addresses and secret vows to our God to be faithfull, (with disdain of all baits of avarice and ambition,) it hath pleased the Divine Providence so to direct both the Honourable Houses of Parliament, to take care of preventing all obliquitie in our proceedings, and to stop the mouthes of all that watch for their and our haltings, and are apt inaliciously to traduce both, (as if we were so restrained by them in our votes and resolutions, as to be bound up to the sense of others, and to carry on private designes in a servile way,) that the Houses have tendered to us, and we have all most readily taken a solemne and serious protestation, in the presence of Almighty God, to maintain nothing in this Assembly, touching doctrine, but what we are perswaded in our consciences to be the truth; nor in matters of discipline, but what we conceive to conduce most to the glory of God, and the good and peace of his Church; which doth not only secure the members against fettering of their judgements or votes, but engage them to the use of all freedome becoming the integrity of conscience, the weight of the cause, the gravitie and honour of such an Assembly. It is likewise a great consolation, that our God hath put it into your hearts to designe some godly and learned brethren to put in their sickles with us into this harvest, which is so great, and requires so many labourers; for which, as we heartily return thanks, so we earnestly pray the Lord to open a way to their timely coming hither, and do assure them of all testimonies of respect, love, and the right hand of fellowship, who shall undertake a journey so tedious, and now so perillous, to joyne with us in the work, when it shall please the Honourable Houses of Parliament to invite them thereunto.

It remaines that we should now spread before you our calamities, dangers, and fears of further evils, not only drawing toward us, but even threatning you also, and crave your compassionate aids in all wayes becoming the servants of Jesus Christ. But your commissioners have so fully declared your certain knowledge and deep sense of them, that they have left us no room for inlarging our selves in this particular to brethren so full of bowels and zeal. And they have sufficiently intimated unto the Honourable Houses that you are well aware how often the common enemies of both kingdomes have consulted together, with one consent, to cut off both the one and the other from being a nation; and that the tabernacles of Edom, and the Ishmaelites of Moab, and the Hagarens, Geball, Ammon, and Amalek, the cursed Papists, and their implacable and bloody abettors here, do still retain the same malice, and carry on the same designe against religion and perfect reformation even in your kingdome, happily rescued from their former tyrannies, as well as in this of scorched England, now in the furnace; only they have varied the scene, pouring out all their fury upon us at the present: that so having once troden us under, as mire in the streets, they may afterward more easily (which God avert) set their proud and impure feet upon your necks also. Wherefore, with the good leave and favour of the Honourable Houses of Parliament, we shall now spare the further exciting of you to that which we doubt not of your forwardnesse, by all lawfull and meet means, to promote with all your might; namely, the possessing the good people of that kingdome, (of whose willing minde and readinesse you have already given ample testimony,) touching our condition, and to encourage them to our assistance in this cause of religion.

And now, remembring without ceasing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, with all due acknowledgments of the precious effects of your prayers, we most humbly and earnestly desire that the same breathings of the Spirit in you may still continue, and (if possible) more frequently and fervently ascend to your God and our God, not only for removall of outward pressures and the visitation of the sword, that hath already learned to eat much of our flesh, but also for the speciall assistance and protection of the Father of lights, in this great work unto which we are now called, and wherein we already finde many and potent adversaries; that seeing the plummet is now in the hands of our Zerubbabels, all mountaines may become plains, and they may bring forth the capstone of the Lord's house with shouting, crying, Grace, grace unto it; and that how weak and contemptible builders soever we be, the Lord would enable us to build with them, that none may have cause to despise the day of our small beginnings, nor to stop our progresse in the work which he hath given us to do. And as for us, who cannot but take notice of the extraordinary employments unto which you are called in your great Assembly, now also sitting, God forbid that we should sin against the Lord, in ceasing to pray for you, that the Lord may enable you to be wise master-builders, preserve your peace alwayes by all means, and make you stedfast, unmoveable, alwayes abounding in the work of the Lord, to the praise of the glory of his grace, and to the further benefit and comfort of the whole Church of God, but more especially of this our afflicted ark, now wasted into the midst of a sea of miseries, and tossed with tempests, untill our wise and gracious God, by the furtherance of your prayers and brotherly endeavours, shall cause it to rest upon the mountains of Ararat, which may take away our fears, as well as put an end to our present sufferings, and give you to rejoyce with us, that now mouru for us.

Subscribed by your most loving brethren, highly prysing the graces of God in you, and that are your servants for Jesus' sake, in the name of the whole Assembly.

The Result of the Debates and Consultations of the Committees of the Convention of Estates and Generall Assembly, appointed to meet with the Commissioners of the Parliament of England.

August 17, 1643.

The Committees of the Convention of Estates of Scotland, and of the Generall Assembly, being appointed to meet with the Commissioners of the two Houses of the Parliament of England, upon the papers delivered in by the said commissioners unto the Convention of Estates, and unto the Generall Assembly, upon the 12th and 15th of this instant, 1643, concerning the desires of both Houses for a near and strict union to be entered into by the two kingdomes. And it being declared at the said meeting with what sensible affections the Generall Assembly and Convention did receive the desires above mentioned, and how beneficial it would be for the more firme settlement of the said union, that a Covenant should be entred into by both nations; and this forme thereof being by all the foresaid persons taken into most serious debate and consideration, and agreed unto; it was thereupon resolved by them, that it should be presented to the Generall Assembly, to the Convention of Estates of Scotland, and to the two Houses of the Parliament of England, by their respective committees and commissioners, that it might with all speed receive their respective resolutions.

The League and Covenant above mentioned, being sent with the Commissioners of this Assembly to the Parliament of England, and Assembly of Divines in that kingdome, to be received and approven there, is to be printed at the return thereof.

*Approbation of the League and Covenant above mentioned.

The Assembly, having recommended unto a committee appointed by them to joyn with the Committee of the Honourable Convention of Estates, and the Commissioners of the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England, for bringing the kingdomes to a more near conjunction and union, received from the aforesaid committees the Covenant above mentioned, as the result of their consultations; and having taken the same, as a matter of so publick concernment and of so deep importance doth require, unto their gravest consideration, did, with all their hearts, and with the beginnings of the feelings of that joy which they did finde in so great measure upon the renovation of the Nationall Covenant of this Kirk and kingdome, All with one voice approve and embrace the same, as the most powerfull meane, by the blessing of God, for settling and preserving the true Protestant religion, with perfect peace in his Majestie's dominions, and propagating the same to other nations, and for establishing his Majestie's throne to all ages and generations; and, therefore, with their best affections, recommend the same to the Honourable Convention of Estates, that being examined and approved by them, it may be sent with all diligence to the kingdome of England; that being received and approven there, the same may be, with publick humiliation, and all religious and answerable solemnities, sworn and subscribed by all true professors of the reformed religion, and all his Majestie's good subjects in both kingdomes.

Sess. Ult., August 19, 1643.—The Assemblie's humble desires to his Majestie anent the Lists for Presentations, with a Recommendation to Presbyteries.

The Assembly, considering the difficultie of obtaining six able and well qualified persons, to be put into a list to his Majestie, for every vaiking kirk at his Majestie's presentation: Therefore, do most earnestly recommend to his Majestie's Commissioner to represent their humble desires to his Majestie, that he would be pleased to accept of a list of three; as also, conform to the desire of the last Assembly at St Andrews, that his Majestie would be pleased to accept of any one qualified man who shall be able to speak the Irish language, for kirks vaiking in the Highlands; which the Commissioner's Grace promised to do with the first conveniencie.

And withall, his Grace representing to the Assembly that he conceived his Majestie had already done more, and yet would do more, for satisfaction to the desires of this Kirk anent patronages, nor any other patron—and, therefore, that it were convenient that all other patrons were earnestly desired to follow his Majestie's example—and the Assembly, thinking it very necessary that some generall course were set down for providing and planting of vaiking kirks, whereby all occasions of contests and differences amongst patrons, presbyteries, and paroches may be removed: Therefore, the Assembly recommend to every Presbyterie to consult and advise upon the best wayes and means for effectuating hereof, and to report the results of their consultations hercintill to the next Assembly.

Commission for Ministers to go to Ireland.

The Generall Assembly, having received a Petition, subscribed by a very great number in the North of Ireland, intimating their deplorable condition, through want of the ministry of the Gospel, occasioned by the tyrannie of the prelates, and the sword of the rebels, and desiring some ministers, especially such as had been chased from them by the persecution of the prelates, and some others to be added, either to be sent presently over to reside among them, or declared transportable, that upon invitation from them they might go and settle there; together with a letter from the Vicount of Airs to that same effect: All which the Assembly hath taken to their serious consideration, being most heartily willing to sympathize with every member of Christ his body, although never so remote, much more with that plantation there, which, for the most part, was a branch of the Lord his vine planted in this land. In which sollicitude, as they would be loath to usurpe without their own bounds, or stretch themselves beyond their own measure, so they dare not be wanting to the enlargement of Christ's kingdome, where so loud a cry of so extreme necessity could not but stir up the bowels of Christian compassion. And although they conceive that the present unsettled condition both of Church and State in that land will not suffer them (as yet) to loose any, to make any constant abode there, yet they have resolved to send over some for the present exigent, till the next Generall Assembly, by courses, to stay three moneth allanerly. And, therefore, do hereby authorize and give commission to the persons following, to wit, Master William Cockburne, minister at Kirkmichell, and Master Matthew Mackaill, minister at Carmanoch, for the first three moneths, beginning upon the 8 of September next; Master George Hutchison, minister at Calmonell, and Master Hugh Henderson, minister at Dalry, for the next three moneths, beginning the 8 of December; Master William Adair, minister at Air, and Master John Weir, minister at Dalserfe, for the third three moneths, beginning the 8 of March 1644; and Master James Hamilton, minister at Dumfreis, and Master John Macelellane, minister at Kirkubright, for the last three moneths, beginning the 8 of June, the said year, 1644; to repair unto the North of Ireland, and there to visit, instruct, comfort, and encourage the scattered flocks of Christ; to employ themselves to their uttermost, with all faithfulness and singleness of heart, in planting and watering, according to the direction of Jesus Christ, and according to the doctrine and discipline of this Kirk in all things. And, if need be, (with the concurrence of such of the ministers as are there,) to try and ordain such as shall be found qualified for the ministry; giving charge unto the persons foresaid, in the sight of God, that in doctrine, in worship, in discipline, and in their daily conversation, they study to approve themselves as the ministers of Jesus Christ, and that they be countable to the Generall Assembly of this Kirk in all things. And in case of any of the above mentioned ministers be impeded by sicknes, or otherwayes necessarily detained from this service, the Assembly ordaines the commissioners residing at Edinburgh for the publick affairs of the Kirk, to nominate in their place well qualified men, who hereby are authorized to undertake the foresaid employment, as if they had been expresly nominate in the face of the Assembly. And this, although possibly it shall not fully satisfie the large expectation of their brethren in Ireland, yet the Assembly is confident they will take in good part at this time that which is judged most convenient for the present condition, even a mite out of their own not very great plentie to supply the present necessity; requiring of them no other recompence but that they, in all cheerfulness, may embrace and make use of the message of salvation, and promising to enlarge their indebted bonntie at the next Assembly, as they shall finde the work of the Lord there to require. In the mean while, wishing that these who are sent may come with the full blessing of the Gospel of peace, recommends them, their labours, and these to whom they are sent, to the rich blessing of the great Shepherd of the flock.

Act against Ministers haunting with Excommunicate Persons.

If any minister haunt the company of an excommunicate person, contrair to the lawes of this Kirk, the said minister, for the first fault, shall be suspended from his ministerie by his Presbyterie during their pleasure; and for the second fault be deprived. And in case the Presbyteries be negligent herein, the Provinciaill Assembly shall censure the Presbyterie thus negligent.

Act anent an Order for using Civill Execution against Excommunicate Persons.

The Assembly, taking to their consideration an article in the heads and propositions sent to the Assembly held at Edinburgh, in August 1573, by the Lord Regent's Grace, and allowed by that Assembly, whereof the tenour followes: "It is resolved that the executions of the sentence of excommunication against persons excommunicate, after the space of fourtie dayes past, shall be presented to the Lord Thesaurer, or his clerk, who thereupon shall raise letters, by deliverance of the Lords of Session, to charge the persons excommunicate to satisfie the Kirk, and obtain themselves absolved, under the pain of rebellion; and, in case they passe to the horne, to cause their escheits be taken up, and also to raise and cause execute letters of caption against them; and these to be done at the King's Majestie's charges:" do ratifie and approve the said article. And, farther, that the intention of the said article may be the better effectuate, doth also ordain, that every Presbyterie cause send to the Procurator or Agent of the Kirk the foresaid execution, that is, an minute or note of the sentences of excommunication within their bounds, bearing the time and cause thereof; and that under the hands of the Moderatour or clerk of the Presbyterie, or of the minister who pronounced the sentence; that the samine may be delivered to his Majestie's Thesaurer, Advocate, or Agent, to cause letters of horning and caption be raised and execute, and other diligence to be used against the excommunicat persons in manner foresaid, and that all other civill action and diligence may be used against them warranted and provided by Acts of Parliament or Secret Councill made thereanent: And that particular account be craved hereof in every Generall Assembly.

*To the King's Most Excellent Majestie, the humble Answer of the Nationall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland.

Although the many and ample testimonies of your Majestie's royall favour and bountie towards this Kirk and kingdome, be living and lasting monuments to hold all your Majestie's good subjects, and us most of all, in remembrance of that duty which we owe to your Majestie, our great benefactour, never, by any length of time, to be deleted out of our minds; yet, when we remember even of conscience we owe honour and subjection unto your Majestie, as our dread soveraigne, as well in your Majestie's absence as presence, we finde our obligation to be religious, and thereby much increased; and, therefore, have we at this time, in all our consultations and conclusions, of which some have been of more than ordinary weight and concernment, in answer to certain propositions made unto us by the Commissioners of the Houses of Parliament of your Majestie's kingdome of England, and some reverend divines assisting them, fixed our eyes and thoughts upon your Majestie's honour and happinesse, with no other and with no lesse intention, than if we had been honoured by your Majestie's royall person in our Assembly. And in like manner, have given such instructions to some ministers and others, to be sent unto the Assembly of Divines now in England, as, next unto the honour of God, and the good of religion, may most serve for your Majestie's preservation, and the peace of your kingdomes; concerning which, the commissioners of the last Generall Assembly have so fully exprest their humble thoughts and desires, in their supplication and remonstrance sent unto your Majestie, that we need not adde any thing, and your Majestie's times and affairs forbid all repetition. We do onely, in all humilitie, beseech your Majestie to judge of us and our proceedings by the nature and necessity of our vocation, and the rules prescribed in the Word of God for our direction, and not by uncertain rumours, and ungrounded reports of such men as have not the fear of God before their eyes. And do earnestly pray to God Almighty, in whose hands are the hearts of kings, to incline your Majestie's heart to the counsells of truth and peace, to direct your government for the good of your people, the punishment of malefactours, and praise of well-doers; that this fire of unnaturall and unchristian warre being extinguished, the people of God, your Majestie's good subjects, may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godlinesse and honestie.

*The Answer of the Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland to the Declaration of the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England.

The Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland, having received a declaration from the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England, by their committees and commissioners now residing here, have thought good to make knowne unto the Lords and Commons in Parliament, that all the members of this Assembly, and others well-affected here, do, with most thankfull respects, take speciall notice of the expressions which they have been pleased to make in the aforementioned declaration, not only concerning their approbation of the desires and endeavours of the Generall Assembly of this Kirk for the reformation of the Church of England, and the union of both Churches in religion and church government, but also concerning the resolution of both Houses, fully to concurre with them in these pious intentions. With the same thankfulnesse and due reverence, they acknowledge the high respects expressed towards them by both Houses, in directing unto them their committees and commissioners, assisted by two reverend divines, and in desiring some of the godly and learned of this Kirk to be sent unto the Assembly sitting there.

The Assembly doth blesse the Lord, who hath not only inspired the Houses of Parliament with desires and resolutions of the reformation of religion, but hath advanced, by severall steps and degrees, that blessed work; by which, as they shall most approve themselves to the reformed churches abroad, and to their brethren of Scotland, so shall they most powerfully draw, even from heaven, the blessings of prosperity and peace upon England. And as it is the earnest wish of their brethren here, that the true state and ground of the present difference and controversies in England may be more and more cleared to be concerning religion, and that both Houses may uncessantly prosecute that good work, first and above all other matters, giving no sleep to their eyes, nor slumber to their eyelids, until they finde out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob, whose favour alone can make their mountain strong, and whose presence in his own ordinances shall be their glory in the midst of them; so it is our confidence, that the begun reformation is of God, and not of man; that it shall increase, and not decrease; and that he to whom nothing is too hard, who can make mountaines valleyes, crooked things straight, and rough wayes smooth, shall lead along and make perfect this most wonderfull work, which shall be remembred to his glory in the Church throughout all generations.

And lest, through any defect upon the Generall Assemblies part, the work of reformation (which hitherto, to the great grief of all the godly, hath moved so slowly) should be any more retarded or interrupted, they have, according to the renewed desires of both Houses of Parliament, and their own former promises, nominated and elected Mr Alexander Henderson, Mr Robert Douglas, Mr Samuel Rutherford, Mr Robert Bailzie, Mr George Gillespie, ministers of God's Word; and John Earle of Cassills, John Lord Maitland, and Sir Archbald Johnstoun of Waristoun, ruling Elders, all of them men much approved here; with commission and power to them, or any three of them, whereof two shall be ministers, to repair unto the Assembly of Divines and others of the Church of England, now sitting at Westminster, to propound, consult, treat, and conclude with them, and with any committees deputed by the Houses of Parliament, (if it shall seeme good to the Honourable Houses, in their wisdom, to depute any for that end,) in all such things as may conduce to the utter extirpation of Popery, Prelacie, heresie, schisme, superstition, and idolatrie—and for the setting of the so much desired union of this whole island in one forme of church government, one Confession of Faith, one common Catechisme, and one Directorie for the Worship of God, according to the instructions which they have received, or shall receive from the commissioners of the Generall Assembly, appointed to meet at Edinburgh from time to time, with the Assemblies power for that end. And as the Generall Assembly doth most gladly and affectionatly receive, and fully trust the committees and divines sent hither, so do they hereby commend the aforementioned commissioners, not only to the like affection and trust of the Assembly there, but also to the favour and protection of both Houses of Parliament.

And, for the further satisfaction and encouragement of their brethren in England, the whole Assembly, in their own name, and in name of all the particular churches in this kingdome whom they represent, do hereby declare, That from their zeal to the glory of God and propagation of the Gospell, from their affection to the happinesse of their native King, and of the kingdome of England, and from the sense of their own interest in the common dangers of religion, peace, and libertie, they are most willing and ready to be united and associated with their brethren in a nearer League and Solemne Covenant, for the maintenance of the truly reformed Protestant religion against Popery and Prelacie, and against all Popish and prelatiack corruptions in doctrine, discipline, worship, or church government, and for the settling and holding fast of unity and uniformity betwixt the kirks of this island and with the best reformed churches beyond sea. Which union and covenant shall, with Gods assistance, be seconded by their co-operating with their brethren in the use of the best and most effectuell meanes that may serve for so good ends; for the more speedy effectuating whereof, to the comfort and enlargement of their distressed brethren, (whose hope deferred might make their hearts to faint,) the whole Assembly, with great unanimity of judgement and expressions of much affection, have approved (for their part) such a draught and forme of a mutuall League and Covenant betwixt the kingdomes as was the result of the joint debates and consultations of the commissioners from both Houses, assisted by the two reverend divines, and of the committees deputed from the Convention of the Estates of this kingdome, and from the Generall Assembly: Expecting and wishing the like approbation thereof by the Right Honourable the Lords and Commons in Parliament, and by the reverend Assembly there, that thereafter it may be solemnly sworne and subscribed in both kingdomes, as the surest and straitest obligation to make both stand and fall together in that cause of religion and libertie.

As the Estates of this kingdome have often professed, in their former declarations, the integritie of their intentions against the common enemies of religion and libertie in both kingdomes, and their great affection to the brethren in England, by reason of so many and so near relations, so doubtlesse now, in this time of need, they will not fail to give reall proof of what before they professed. "A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversitie." Neither shall the Assembly, or their commissioners, be wanting in exhorting all others to their duty, or in concurring, so far as belongeth to their place and vocation, with the Estates now convened, in any lawfull and possible course which may most conduce to the good of religion and reformation, the honour and happinesse of the Kings Majestie, the deliverance of their brethren of England from their present calamitous condition, and to the perpetuating of a firme and happy peace betwixt the kingdomes.

*The Assemblies Answer to the Right Reverend the Assembly of Divines in the Church of England.

Right Reverend and dearly beloved,

As the sufferings of Christ abound in you, so our heartie desire to God is, that your consolations may much more abound by Christ. The perusing of your letter produced in every one of us such a mixture of affections as were at the laying of the foundation of the Second Temple, where there was heard both shouting for joy and weeping aloud. We rejoiced that Christ our Lord had at last in that land created a new thing, in calling together, not as of before, a prelatiack convocation, to be task-masters over the people of the Lord, but an assembly of godly Divines, minding the things of the Lord, whose hearts are set to purge the defiled house of God in that land; yet this our joy was not a little allayed by the consideration of the sad and deplorable condition of that kingdome, where the high provocations of so many years, the hellish plots of so many enemies, in a nick of time, have brought in an inundation of overflowing calamities. We know you are patiently bearing the indignation of the Lord, because you have sinned against him, till he throughly plead your cause, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon, who now laugh among themselves, while you are fed with the bread of tears, and get tears to drink in great measure, being on the mountains, like the doves of the valleyes, all of you mourning, every one for his iniquitie.

It is now more nor evident to all the Kirks of Christ with what implacable fury and hellish rage the bloud-thirsty Papists, as Babylon without, and the prelatie faction, the children of Edom, within, have adjoynd to themselves many malignant adherents, of time-serving Atheists, haters of holinesse, rejecters of the yoke of Christ, (to whom the morning light of reformation is as the shadow of death,) have begun to swallow up the inheritance of the Lord, and are not easily satisfied, in making deep and long furrowes on your backs. We cannot say that the loudnesse of your cry surpasseth the heavinesse of your stroake; but though "the Lord hath delivered the men, every one into his neighbour's hand, and into the hand of his king, and they have smitten the land," yet "the rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous;" this cloud shall speedily passe away, and a fair sunshine shall appear.

As for us, though your extreame calamitie did not threaten the ruine of our religion, peace, and liberties, as it doth most evidently, we would hate our selves, if we did not finde our hearts within us melting with compassion over you; you are engraven on the tables of our hearts, to live and die with you; we could desire that our heads were waters, and our eyes a fountain of tears, that we might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of the Lord's people; so calamitous a condition of any of the Kirks of Christ could not but be very grievous unto us; how much more shall not we stoup and fall down in the dust to embrace our dearest brethren of England, to whom we are tied in so near and tender relations. When we were but creeping out of the deep darknesse and bondage of Popery, and were almost crushed with the fury of forreigne invaders, joynd with intestine enemies, pretending the name and warrant of authority, as now your oppressours do, then did the Lord, by your fathers, send us seasonable assistance against that intended and begun bondage, both of soul and body; the repayment of which debt the Divine Providence seemeth now to require at our hands. And whereas, of late, through our security, we had fallen into a wofull relapse, and were compassed about with dreadfull dangers on all hands, while we aynd at the recovery of our former puritie and libertie, then we wanted not the large supply of your fervent prayers, and other brotherly assistance of that nation, while those who are now your malignant enemies would have swallowed us up.

These strait bonds of your ancient and late love do so possesse our hearts, that, when the motions of the Commissioners of the Honourable Houses of Parliament, and your letters, did challenge our advice and aid for defence of religion and advancement of reformation, our smoaking desires for a more strict union and uniformitie in religion betwixt both the nations did break forth into a vehement flame, in such sort, as when the draught of a League and Covenant betwixt both kingdomes for defence of religion, &c., was read in open audience, it was so unanimously and heartily embraced, with such a torrent of most affectionate expressions, as none but eye or ear witnesses can conceive; whereof the two reverend livines sent from you to us, being then present, no doubt, will give you an account. Neither was it so onely with us; but also the Honourable Convention of Estates here, with the like harmony of affectionate expressions, did entertain the same; so that we hope to be reall and constant in prosecuting the contents of this covenant. When we, in our straits, fled to the Lord, and entred in covenant with him, he owned us and our cause, rebuked and dissipated our enemies, and hitherto hath helped us, and blessed our enterprises with successe from heaven, notwithstanding our great weaknesse and unworthinesse. We trust in the Lord, that as once it was prophesied of Israel and Judah, so shall Scotland and England becom one stick in the hand of the Lord; they shall ask the way to Sion, with their faces thitherward, saying, "Come, let us joyne our selves to the Lord in a perpetuall covenant, that shall not be forgotten;" and so shall it come to passe, that the Lord's Jerusalem in this island shall be a cup of trembling, and a burthensome stone to all their enemies round about. Though now it be the time of Jacob's trouble, the Lord will deliver him out of it. Reverend and dear brethren, we conceive your case, and of all the faithfull in that land, to be no other then of a woman crying, travelling in birth, and pained till she be delivered. The great red Dragon (under whose standard the sons of Belial are fighting) is your arch-enemy. This cannot but be a time of fear and sorrow; but when the male-childe shall be brought forth, the pain shall cease, and the sorrow shall be forgotten. We are very confident in the Lord, that you will be faithful to Jesus Christ, in the work committed to you by him, in all his ordinances, and taking neither foundation, corner-stone, nor any part of the rubbish of Babell, to build the city that is called, "The Lord is there;" but, measuring all with the golden reed of the sanctuary, you may more closely be united to the best reformed Kirks, in doctrine, worship, and government, that you may grow up in him in all things which is the Head, even Christ.

And now, reverend and dear brethren, though we know that you abound in all gifts and graces, the Spirit of Jesus Christ being plentifully powred out upon you, yet, according to your desire, and the motion made by the Commissioners of the Honourable Houses of Parliament, to testifie our hearty sympathie with you in the work of the Lord, we have nominate and elected some godly and learned of this Church to repair to your Assembly. We doubt nothing of your hearty embracing them in the Lord, and their diligent concurrence with you in advancing that great work.

Not onely the common danger we are under, but the conscience of our duty to his suffering people, layeth bonds on us frequently to present you, and that blessed work of reformation in your hands, to the throne of grace, that the God of all grace, who will call you into his eternall glory by Christ Jesus, after that you have suffered a while, may make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.

*The Assemblie's Answer to the Reverend their beloved Brethren, Ministers in the Church of England.

Reverend and Beloved,

We acknowledge, with thankfulness to God, that this is one of the good blessings bestowed upon our Kirk of late, and a pleasant fruit of our free Assemblies, that a way is opened for keeping communion with our sister kirks abroad, and correspondence with you, our dear brethren, in whose joy and sorrow we have so near interest, and whose cause and condition we desire to lay to heart as our own.

All your former letters were most acceptable, and full of refreshment unto us, being taken as the earnest of a more full and constant fellowship, longed after and hoped for; and this your last, although full of sadness and sorrow, yet accounted of us all most worthy of our tenderest affection and best respects, both for your cause who sent it, and for these worthy witnesses which did attest it; wherein as you have given unto us no small evidence, not only of your love, but also of trust and friendly respect, by choosing to poure out your grieved souls in our bosome; so we shall wish, and God willing endeavour, that you may really finde some measure of brotherly compassion in our receiving thereof. For these your sad expressions of deep sorrow, being, as you have given us to conceive, but a part of your complaint, and a lamentation lesse then the causes doth require, cannot but melt every heart wherein there is any the least warmnesse of the love of Christ and his saints; and what childe of the Bridegroom's chamber can hear the voice of so many friends of the Bridegroom lamenting for the evils which have befallen Christ's bride in England, in the very night before her expected espousalls, and not sit down and mourn with them, except his heart be fallen asleep and frozen within him? This pitifull condition of our sister Church in England hes matter enough, we confesse, to move, yea, to rend our bowels.

If we should weigh this your heavie grief in the scales of common reason, we behoved either to stand aloof from your plague, as men astonished, or sink down in heavinesse, and be swallowed up of sorrow; but when we ponder your sad condition in the ballance of the sanctuary, we finde that nothing hath as yet befallen unto you, save that which hath been the exercise of the saints in former times, who have been made to sit down for a while in the shadow of death, before the day of their deliverance. We finde nothing but that which may be a fit preparation for a comfortable outgate from all your troubles. What if it was necessary, in the wise dispensation of Almighty God, that a people in great estimation for wisdom and power, such as England, should be thus farre humbled as you declare, to the end that your deliverance may be seen hereafter to be of the Lord, and not of your selves? What if the Lord would not draw back his hand from the wine-presse wherein you now lye, till he should draw forth from you these pitifull expressions of your low estate, and so provide himself salves against the day to come, that he may have the greater and purer glory in your salvation, and your gloriation may be in the Lord alone? Dear brethren, comfort yourselves in the Lord; this sowing in tears doth promise a reaping in joy, and who knoweth how soon he will give to you who are mourners in Zion beauty for ashes, the oyle of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heavinesse; that you may be called the “trees of righteousnesse, the planting of the Lord, that he may be glorified.”

Though weeping be in the evening of this begun reformation and purging of the Lord's house among you, yet in the morning, when the discovered filthinesse and sweepings of the temple shall be orderly cast out, joy shall come with thanksgiving and praise. Though a fire be kindled in the land, yet it is not to consume any of the mettall; for the Lord is sitting down as a refiner amongst you, and especially to purifie the sons of Levi, that he may have a more pure oblation of spirituall worship and service in all his holy ordinances, throughout all the land, which is no token of wrath, but of loving-kindnesse towards you. No wonder that Satan doth thus rage, as you relate, foreseeing his casting out; no wonder he stirre up all the children of disobedience, and kindle their naturall malice against the children of God, with the inspiration of hellish fury; no wonder the spirit of Antichrist be mad, when the morsell half swallowed down is like to be pulled out of his throat, the fat morsell of the rich revenues of England; no wonder he be cruell against you, the servants of Christ, who are consuming him by the breath of the Lord's mouth.

You do well to expect no mercy, if Papists and Prelatsp revail over you, neither desire we to deceive our selves with hopes to be free from what their power and malice can do against us; for they will not do to us, if they get the upper hand, as we have done, and must do, if God bring them low again under us, as they were before, for we and they are led by the contrary spirits of Christ and Antichrist. We have laboured, and must labour, for their conversion, but they (except in so far as God shall bridle them) will not rest without our destruction; for their fury against our persons is much more fierie than our zeal is fervent against their abominations. Let them follow the spirit of lying and murdering, wee must take us to our refuge, and joyne our selves, with all that are sensible of the danger of the reformed religion, in prayer and supplication. “The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge.”

Now for advice, what can we say to you who are upon your watch-tower, wherein is the spirit of wisdom and counsell, who lye thus, as humble disciples, under the Lord's foot, who did never forsake them that sought him. Go on, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, against all opposition, without fear of whatsoever dangers, to purge the house of the Lord, to repair the breaches thereof, to set up all his ordinances in their full beautie and perfection, to the uttermost of your power, according to the pattern of the Word of God, and zeal of the best reformed Kirks; and let these two kingdomes be knit together, as one man, in maintaining and promoting the truth of the Gospel; let us enter in a perpetuall covenant, for our selves and our posterity, to endeavour that all things may be done in the house of God according to his own will, and let the Lord do with us what seemeth good in his eyes. “Only wait upon the Lord, be of good courage, and he shall strengthen your heart." Let your hands be ever at your Master's work, and hold your faces resolutely to his cause. "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quite your selves like men, be strong; for ye shall see the salvation of the Lord," and your labour shall not be in vain.

Commission of the Generall Assembly for these that repair to the Kingdome of England.

The Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland, finding it necessary to send some godly and learned of this Kirk to the kingdome of England, to the effect under-written; therefore, gives full power and commission to Master Alexander Henderson, Master Robert Douglas, Master Samuel Rutherford, Master Robert Bailzie, and Master George Gillespie, ministers; John Earle of Cassills, John Lord Maitland, and Sir Archbald Johnstoun of Waristoun, elders, or any three of them, whereof two shall be ministers, to repair to the kingdome of England, and there to deliver the declaration sent unto the Parliament of England, and the letter sent unto the Assembly of Divines now sitting in that kingdome; and to propone, consult, treat, and conclude with that Assembly, or any commissioners deputed by them, or any committees or commissioners deputed by the Houses of Parliament, in all matters which may further the union of this island in one forme of kirk government, one Confession of Faith, one Catechisme, and one Directorie for the Worship of God, according to the instructions which they have received from the Assembly, or shall receive, from time to time hereafter, from the commissioners of the Assembly, deputed for that effect. With power also to them to convey to his Majestie the humble answer sent from this Assembly to his Majestie's letter, by such occasion as they shall think convenient; and suchlike to deliver the Assembly's answer to the letter sent from some well-affected brethren of the ministry there. And, generally, authorizes them to do all things which may further the so much desired union and nearest conjunction of the two Churches of Scotland and England, conform to their instructions aforesaid.

Reference to the Commission anent the Persons designed to repair to the Kingdome of England.

The Assembly having, this day, approven the nomination made by the commissioners of the late Assembly of persons to repair to the Synod of Divines in England; and having, of new, elected and nominated all the same persons, except Master Eleazar Borthwick, who is now with God; therefore, gives power to the commissioners to be appointed by this Assembly for the publick affairs of this Kirk to nominate and appoint any other whom they shall think meet in his place. And, suchlike, the Assembly refers to the said commission to consider whether it be convenient to send now at this present time to the kingdome of England all the persons appointed to go thither, and to designe the persons whom they think meet to go at this present occasion, to determine the time of their dispatch, and to give unto them their instructions. And, further, in case of sicknesse or death of any of the persons appointed for that employment, or in the case of any other necessary impediment of their undertaking the samine, gives power to the said commission to nominate others in their place, if the commission shall finde it convenient.

Commission for the Publick Affairs of this Kirk.

The Generall Assembly, considering the laudable custome of this Kirk in appointing commissions betwixt Assemblies for the publick affairs of the Kirk, and the commendable practice of the late Assembly at St Andrews, in appointing their commission for prosecuting that blessed work, for uniting the Kirks of this island in religion and kirk government, by all lawfull and ecclesiastick wayes, for continuance of our own peace at home, and of the common peace betwixt the two nations, and for other good ends, as at length is exprest in that commission: And finding that the painfull endeavours and proceedings of that commission, unanimously approvén in this Assembly, though they have much advanced that glorious work of unity in religion and government, yet hes not brought the samine to full perfection and a finall accomplishment: And the Assembly being now much animate and encouraged to prosecute that work by the Parliament of England their bills past against Episcopacie, and sundry other corruptions, and the good hopes of a Solemne Covenant betwixt the nations; and conceiving that in thir times of danger there may be some occasions for conveneing the Assembly before the time indicted for their next meeting: Therefore, the Assembly, finding it necessary to appoint a new commission, by these presents, nominates and appoints Mr Andrew Ramsay, Mr Alexander Henderson, &c., &c., to meet at Edinburgh the 21 day of August next, and upon any other day thereafter, and in any other place, they shall think good; and gives and grants unto them, or any fifteen of them, there being twelve ministers present, full power and commission to consider and performe what they finde necessary, by praying and preaching, by supplicating his Majestie and all the judicatories of this kingdome, by declarations and remonstrances to the Parliament of England, to the Synod of Divines in that kingdome, by informations, directions, instructions to, and continuall correspondence with, the commissioners now designed by this Assembly to go to the Synod of Divines in England, or by any other lawfull ecclesiastick wayes, for furtherance of this great work, in the union of this island in religion and kirk government, and for continuance of our own peace at home, and of the common peace betwixt the nations, and keeping of good correspondence betwixt the kirks of this island: With power also to them to concurre with the Lords of Councill, Commissioners of Peace, or with the Honourable Estates, assembled in Convention or Parliament, or with their committees and commissioners, in prosecuting this good work at home or abroad, by all ecclesiastick wayes. And, suchlike, with power to them to prevent the dangers contained in the remonstrance presented unto the Convention of Estates by the commissioners of the late Assembly, in June last, and to prosecute the remedies of these dangers contained in another remonstrance presented by the saids commissioners to the Convention the 6 of July last, by admonitions, directions, censures, and all other ecclesiastick wayes: And, further, in case thir brethren of England shall agree to the Covenant betwixt the kingdomes, the draught and frame whereof is now so unanimously approvén in this Assembly, gives also unto the persons foresaid, or the quorum above written, full power and authoritie to command and enjoyn the samine to be subscribed and sworn by all the members of this Kirk; and that in such order and manner, and with such solemnities, as they shall think convenient for so great and glorious a work; and to send their directions to Sessions, Presbyteries, and Synods, for execution of their orders thereanent: And with power to proceed against any person whatsoever that shall refuse to subscribe and swear the said Covenant, with all the censures of the Kirk, or to refer the tryall and censures of such delinquents to Presbyteries or Synods, as they shall think convenient. And, suchlike, gives unto the persons foresaids power and libertie to call a Generall Assembly pro re nata, in case they shall finde the necessity of the Kirk and this great work to require the same: With full power also to them to give answers, in name of the Assembly, to all letters sent to the Assembly from the kirks of Holland, Zealand, or any other forraigne reformed kirks: And, further, gives power to them to promote the other desires, overtures, and recommendations of this or of any former Assemblies to the King's Majestie, Parliament, or Convention of Estates, to the Lords of Councill, Session, Exchequer, Commissioners of Parliaments, for Plantation of Kirks, for the Common Burdens, and for Conserving the Peace. And, suchlike, gives as full power and commission to them to treat and decerne in any other matters referred, or to be referred, to them by this Assembly, as if the samine were hercin particularly insert. And, generally, gives unto the persons foresaids, or the quorum above mentioned, full power and authoritie to do and performe all things which may advance, accomplish, and perfect the great work of unity of religion and uniformity of kirk government in all his Majestie's dominions, and which may be necessary for good order in all the publick affairs of this Kirk, untill the next Assembly, ne quid detrimenti capiat Ecclesia. With ample power in all matters, particularly or generally above mentioned, as any other omission of Generall Assemblies hes had or been in use of before; they being always countable to, and censurable by, the next Generall Assembly, for their proceedings thereintill.

The Generall Assembly appoints the meeting of the next Generall Assembly to be at Edinburgh, the last Wednesday of May, in the year 1644.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY, CONVEENED
AT EDINBURGH, 1644.

Die Jovis penult. Maii. Sess. 2.—The Letter from the Presbyterie with the Army in England to the Generall Assembly.

Right Reverend,

Having the opportunity of the sitting of this Venerable Assembly, we thought our selves obliged to render some accompt of the estate of our affairs. It hath pleased the Lord to exercise us since our outcoming with many straits and difficulties, yet in the mids thereof he hath wonderfully upheld and carried us through. The depth of his wisdom hath suspended us for a time from any great action, to make us walk humbly before him, and to keep us in a continuall dependance upon himself: And yet he hath, by his own power, scattered before us the great Popish army, and much diminished the number thereof, so that they do not now appeare against us in the fields, that all may learne to trust in God, and not in man. It was farre from our thoughts and intentions to have come this length, at that instant when the course of Divine Providence pointed out our way unto us, which led us on, by some long and speedie marches, to joyne with my Lord Fairfax and his sonne their forces. The city of York, wherein a swarme of obstinate Papists have taken sanctuary, is blocked up; now and then God favoureth us with successe in some enterprises about it, and wee look for more, if the time be come which he hath appointed for the deliverance of this people.

Our soules do abhorre the treacherous attempts of our disnated countrey men that have endeavoured to make their native kingdome a seat of warre, and our bowels within us are moved to think upon the maine mischiefs, if not tymeously prevented, that may follow upon the unnaturall warres there, like unto these under which this kingdome hath groaned for a long time. We have found none more malicious and cruell against us than these of our own nation, and we measure those at home by these here. "Cursed be their rage, for it is fierce; and their anger, for it is cruell." The present danger calls upon all to lay out of their hands what ever may hinder their haste; as one man to come together for saving the vineyard, that the wilde boares would lay waste, and taking the foxes that would destroy the vines. You are, right reverend, now set upon the highest watch-tower, from whence you may discover the dangers that threaten on all coasts; and wee need not put you in minde to give warning to the watchmen in their severall stations to rouse up the people from their too great security, to call them to unfeigned humiliation, and to stirre them up to wrestle with God by prayer, that hee would preserve truth and peace at home against the machinations of malignants; that hee would prepare the people here, and make them more fit to embrace the intended reformation; and that hee would command these unnaturall and bloody warres to cease, that religion and righteousness may flourish through the three dominions. Praying God to send upon you the Spirit of truth, who may lead you in all truth, we remaine,

Your loving brethren, the Presbyterie of the Scottish Army in England.

Master ROBERT DOUGLAS, Moderator, in their name.

Middlethorp, Maii 20, 1644.

The Petition from the Distressed Christians in the North of Ireland.

To the Reverend and Honourable Moderator and remanent Members of the Generall Assembly of Scotland, convened at Edinburgh, in May 1644, The humble Petition of the Distressed Christians in the North of Ireland,

Humbly sheweth,

That whereas your former enlarged bounty and our present overflowing straits would require a gratefull acknowledgement of the one, and a serious representation of the other, our case is such, as neither can be expected at our hands, being stricken with astonishment, and full of the furie of the Lord. We are these, indeed, who have seen affliction by the rod of his wrath; so that it were more fit we had a cottage in the wilderness, amongst the owles to mourn out our imbittered spirits, then that by word or writ we should compeere before any of his people; although you cannot be wearied in wel-doing, yet we shall no way think it strange, if now you shall give over any more care of us, seeing the Lord hath testified against us, and the Almighty hath afflicted us. Your judgement is with the Lord, and your reward is with God, not onely for your two years' visiting and watering a barren vineyard, but also for your zeale and care to have your reformation spread amongst other opprest and borne down churches, whereof you have given an ample and famous testimony in sending hither that blessed League and Covenant, which wee much desired and longed for, as, by our petitions to the Church and State of our native kingdome, is knowne unto you; which hath had a wished and gracious successe, by the favour and blessing of God accompanying the pains of these to whom the tendering thereof was intrusted by you. And we, conceiving a chief part of our miserie to consist in our want of opportunitie to joyne our selves with the people of God in the foresaid League, esteeming our selves rejected of God, and unfit to be joynd in any comfortable fellowship in the Gospel with them, when the said League and Covenant was presented to the regiments, wee made bold to lay hold upon the opportunity, (though afflicted abjects,) and cheerfully and unanimously joynd our selves thereunto; that if wee perish in our misery, wee may die a covenanted people; and, if our miserable life be prolonged, we may finde shelter and refreshment under the shadow thereof in our fierie trials, confidently expecting from the Lord, by our neerer conjunction with you than of before, an accomplishment of what is agreed into the Covenant, which ye bountifully expressed before we were one with you, to your never-dying commendation. We are nothing shaken in our minds with the odious aspersions of sedition, combination against the King, and overthrow of municipal laws, &c., (wherewith our Covenant is branded,) nor with the threats of these who should be comfortable to us in our troubles; but are the more encouraged to beleve that God shall raise up the Tabernacle of David that is fallen, and repair the breaches thereof; for, since we covenanted with God, and united our selves together, our dying spirits have revived, and we sing like these who have come forth from their graves, for God hath had mercy on Jacob: In testimony whereof, he hath opened the bowels of the churches of Holland, who were strangers to us, and yet dear brethren, and tender sympathizers with us in our afflictions and sorrows, who, when these who were left of the sword were in danger to dye by famine, did plentifully relieve us in our straits, not onely by comfortable encouragements to walk humbly with God, and wait for him who hides his face from the house of Jacob for a season; but also by their rich supply in victuals, and others necessar for our relief and comfort, which we humbly desire our Lord to repay seven-fold in their bosome, and become your supplicants to joyne with us in a gratefull acknowledgement of their singular favours. And upon the heels of these favours, you have continued your unparalleled compassions in keeping your forces, and enabling them, together with the other forces, for avenging the cruell murders and effusion of Christian blood in this and, notwithstanding of your owne multiplied difficulties. The Lord hath begun to delight into us, and in a day of salvation hath helped us, (so happy are the people who are in covenant with God.) We are these (indeed) who may justly be burnt up for our unfruitfulnesse in the dayes of our plenty, and stubbornesse in the dayes of our affliction, which hath brought us so low, that where we once enjoyed a blessed plenty, we must now beg of the crumbs that fall from your table. Wee cannot dissemble, but, so farre as we can discern our owne hearts, we would preferre the joyfull sound of the Gospel to our much wished peace and precious lives. But it may be discerned your consultations of before have been guided by the Spirit of the Lord; in that when wee twice, in our forward hasting desires, begged the present loosing and planting of some ministers amongst us, you judged it more convenient to supply us by turnes, as foreseeing that our captivity was likely to endure. Our hopes are so far revived, that we trust to see the day when he shall take the cup of trembling out of our hands, and put it in the hands of them that afflicted us.

And, therefore, if you account us fellow-partners of the purchased inheritance, yet again suffer our necessitie to plead with you, that as it hath been by the committee of bills already advised that a competent number of ministers may be gifted to us by your commission, when they shall see the calling cleared, the same may be granted as a testimony of your confidence and expectation of our delivery; and, in the mean time, some others may be sent by turnes, to keep in the dying lives of above twenty-foure desolate congregations, who are in danger to perish for want of vision; and although we do professe we count not our selves worthy of such favours, yet as we have resolved to dye with the cry of hope in our mouthes to the Lord's throne; so, in obedience of the use of the means by him appointed, we stretch out our hearts and our hands to you for help, and have sent our brother, William Mackenna, merchant at Belfast, to attend what answer it shall please the Lord, by you, to returne unto

Your distressed Brethren and Supplicants.

Junii 3, 1644, ante meridiem, Sess. 5.—Act for the present Entrie of the new erected Presbyterie at Biggar.

The which day, anent the supplication subscribed and given in to the Generall Assembly, by the Ministers and Ruling Elders of the kirks of Biggar, Skirling, Brochton, Glenquhome, Kelbocho, Culter, Lamyngtoun, Symontoun, Covingtoun, Quothquen, Welstoun, and Dolyhingtoun, making mention, That the Generall Assembly at Edinburgh, in August 1643 years, by their act, of the date of the twelfth day of the samine moneth and year, did, upon good grounds, and after tryall, and hearing of all parties to the full, erect a Presbyterie seat at Biggar, to consist of the kirks above written; and granted to their Presbyterie full power of jurisdiction, and exerceing discipline, with all other liberties and priviledges belonging to any other Presbyterie; but suspended the entrie and possession of this new erected Presbyterie during the pleasure of the Assembly: And, therefore, desiring the said Generall Assembly to ordaine and appoint the entrie and possession of the foresaid Presbyterie at Biggar now presently; and to declare, that it is their pleasure, that the entrie and possession thereof shall be no longer suspended, as the supplication proports. Which supplication being read in audience of the Generall Assembly, and thereafter the commissioners from the Presbyteries of Lanerk and Peebles, and all others having entresse to oppose the desire foresaid, being publickly called, and the saids commissioners for Peebles and Lanerk, personally present, being at length heard in what they could say or alledge therein; and the said supplication, and desire thereof, with the alledgeances and objections made against the samine, being taken to consideration by the Assembly, and they therewith being fully and ripely advised—The Assembly, after removing of the parties, and after consideration of the premisses, and voycing of the foresaid desire, ordaines the entrie and possession of the foresaid Presbyterie of Biggar, consisting of the particular kirks above mentioned, to begin now presently; and appoints and ordaines all the Ministers and Ruling Elders of the foresaid kirks above specified, whereof the said Presbyterie consists, to meet and conveene as a Presbyterie, with all conveniencie, at the said kirk of Biggar, which is the place and seat of the samine Presbyterie. And the Assembly refers to the Commissioners to be appointed by them for the Publick Affairs of the Kirk, to determine to what Synod this the said new erected Presbyterie shall be subordinate; as also to prescribe the order and solemnities that shall be necessar for entring and possessing the Ministers and Elders in the said Presbyterie.

Junii 3, 1644, Sess. 6.—Act concerning the Declaration subscribed by the Scottish Lords at Oxford.

The Generall Assembly, having received a copy of a declaration, made and subscribed at Oxford, sent unto them from the Honourable Convention of Estates, and having seriously considered the tenour thereof, doth finde the same to be a perfidious band and unnaturall confederacy, to bring this Kirk and kingdome to confusion, and to be full of blasphemies against the late Solemne League and Covenant of the three kingdomes, of vile aspersions of treason, rebellion, and sedition, most falsly and impudently imputed to the Estates, and the most faithfull and loyall subjects of these kingdomes: And, seeing it is incumbent to the Assembly to take notice thereof, and to stop the course of these malicious intentions, in so farre as concernes them, declare, that the subscribers of this or the like declaration or band, or any that have been accessory to the framing, or that has been or shall be accessory to the execution thereof, deserve the highest censure of the Kirk: And, therefore, gives power to the Commissioners of this Assembly appointed for the Publick Affairs to proceed against them to the sentence of excommunication, unlesse they make humble confession of their offence publickly, in such manner and in such places as the Commission shall prescribe; or, otherwise, to refer the tryall and censure of such delinquents to Presbyteries or Synods, as they shall think convenient. And, when the sentence of excommunication shall be pronounced, discharges Presbyteries or Synods to relax any from the sentence without the advice of the Generall Assembly or their commissioners, nisi in extremis. And, in respect of the atrocitie of this fact, the Assembly, in all humility, do seriously recommend to the Right Honourable the Estates of Parliament to take such course as the persons that shall be found guilty may be exemplarily punished, according to the merit of so unnaturall and impious an offence: And that some publick note of ignominie be put upon the declaration and band it self, if their Honours shall think it meet.

Act against the Rebels in the North and South.

The Generall Assembly, considering the just sentence pronounced against the principall actors in that rebellion in the North and South, by ordinance of the commissioners of the late Assembly, and finding it most necessary that such as assisted or joynd with them in that impious and unnaturall fact be likewise censured; therefore, ordains Presbyteries and Synods respectivè to proceed against them with the highest censures of the Kirk, if they give not satisfaction by publick repentance; and, when the sentence of excommunication shall be pronounced, the Assemblie discharges the said judicatories to relax any of them from the sentence without the advice of the Generall Assembly or their commissioners, nisi in extremis; to whom also the saids Presbyteries and Synods shall be answerable for their diligence in the premisses, as they shall be required. And the Assembly doth humbly recommend to the Honourable Estates of Parliament to take such course as the persons that shall be found guilty may be exemply punished, according to the merit and degree of their offence.

Act against Secret Disaffecteds of the Covenant.

The Generall Assembly, understanding that divers persons disaffected to the Nationall Covenant of this Kirk, and to the Solemne League and Covenant of the three kingdoms, do escape their just censure, either by their private and unconstant abode in any one congregation, or by secret conveyance of their malignant speeches and practises; therefore, ordains all ministers to take speciall notice when any such persons shall come within their paroches, and, so soon as they shall know the same, that without delay they cause warn them to appear before the Presbyteries within which their paroches lyes, or before the Commissioners of this Assembly appointed for Publick Affairs, as they shall finde most convenient; which warning the Assembly declares shall be a sufficient citation unto them; and, als, that all ministers and elders delate to the saids judicatories, respectivè, every such disaffected person, although without their own paroch, so soon as they shall hear and be informed of them. And the Assembly ordains the said commissioners not only to proceed to tryal and censure of such disaffected persons, but also to take a special account of the diligence of ministers, elders, and presbyteries herein, respectivè.

Act for sending Ministers to the Armie.

The Assembly, understanding that ministers are not duly sent forth to the regiments of the army, neither such as are sent duly relieved, which neglect falleth out oftimes by reason of questions among Presbyteries interested in the regiments; therefore, for remedy hereof, thinks it convenient that this order be kept hereafter:—That a list be made of three ministers by the colonels, or in their absence the chief officers of every regiment, with advice and consent of the Presbyterie at the army, and sent to Presbyteries here, or, if the list be of ministers in divers Presbyteries, to the commissioners of the General Assembly, that they may appoint one out of that list to be sent to the regiment, to attend them for performing ministeriall duties three moneths; and that the relief of ministers already sent, or to be sent hereafter, shall be in the same manner. And the Assembly ordains ministers who shall be thus appointed by Presbyteries, or the commissioners of the Assembly, respectivè, to repair to the armie with all diligence, under the paine of suspension; and humbly recommends to the Honourable Estates of Parliament to provide some way whereby these ministers may have due and ready payment of their allowance, from the time of their going from their charges here. And it is declared, that this order shall be also kept for sending forth of ministers to the regiments in the second expedition.

Renovation of the Commission for the Publick Affairs of the Kirk.

The Generall Assembly, considering that the Commissioners appointed by the last Assembly, upon the nineteenth day of August 1643 years, the last session thereof, to sit at Edinburgh for the Publick Affairs of the Kirk, have not yet fully perfected that great work for unitie of religion and uniformitie of kirk government in his Majestie's dominions; and that now, in respect of the present condition of affairs in this kingdom, their proceedings cannot be examined at this time; therefore, finding it necessary that the said commission be renewed unto the commissioners therein mentioned, and to the persons after named, now thought fit to be added, for the better expediting of the businesse, do hereby appoint the persons particularly nominate in the said commission, viz, Masters Andrew Ramsay, &c., &c.,* to meet at Edinburgh upon the fifth day of this instant moneth of June, and upon the last Wednesday of August next, the last Wednesday of November next, and upon the last Wednesday of February next, and upon any other day, or in any other place, they shal think meet; giving and granting unto them, or any fifteen of them, there being twelve ministers present, full power and commission to prosecute the said work of unitie in religion and uniformitie of kirk government in all his Majestie's dominions, and to do and performe all things particularly or generally contained in the said commission of the preceding Assembly, or in an act of the said Assembly upon the said 19 day of August, intituled, "A reference to the Commission ament the persons designed to repair to the Kingdome of England;" and to treat and determine therein, and in all other matters referred unto them by this Assembly, siclike, and as freely, as if all these were herein expressed, and as the persons nominat in the said former commission might have done, by vertue of the said act and former commission, at any time by-gone, and with as ample power as any commission of former Generall Assemblies hath had or been in use of before, they being alwayes comptable and censurable for their whole proceedings hereintill by the next Generall Assembly.

* Seventy ministers and fifty-three elders are named in this commission.—Ed. 1643.

Renovation of the Commission granted to the Persons appointed to repair to the Kingdome of England.

The Generall Assembly, finding that the great work of unity in religion and uniformity of kirk government in all his Majestic's dominions is not yet perfected, do therefore renew the commission granted for that effect by the preceding Assembly, unto the persons appointed to repair to the kingdome of England, upon the 19th day of August 1643, in the last session thereof, giving and granting to the persons therein mentioned the same power to do all and every thing particularly or generally contained in the said commission, in the same manner, and as fully, as if the same were herein expressed, and as they might have done at any time bygone, by vertue of the former commission.

The Assembly's Answer to the Presbyterie with the Armie.

Reverend and loving Brethren in the Lord,

We received yours of the 17th and 20th of May, and were much refreshed with the knowledge you gave unto us therein of your sense of our condition here, and of the Lord's dealing with your selves there in your straits and difficulties. We rejoyce exceedingly to see you make such a blessed use of the Lord's delays, for your further humiliation and dependance upon him. That sanctuary your enemies and the enemies of your God hath taken shall not save them. You have found by experience in your marches and maintenance, that events are not ordered by the propositions of men, but by the providence and purpose of God. There is a time for every purpose under heaven, and the cup of the Amorites must be filled; which being now full of every abomination, yea, of the blood of the saints, the cry whereof cannot but be heard in heaven and answered on earth, presageth no lesse to us, than that the Lord's time of his deliverance of his own, and destruction of his enemies, draweth near.

We are not unsensible of your present estate, and by the Lord's grace shall be careful, both here and with our congregations at home, to make all take the same to heart. As for our condition here, remembred with such pious affection by you, we doubt not but ye have heard what the Lord hath done for us; these happy beginnings of the Lord's scattering our unnaturall enemies in the North gives us confidence of his assistance in the midst of difficulties against these that assault us in the South. It is nothing with the Lord to help, whether with many or with them that have no power.

The security of this nation, indeed, is great. It is our part to blow the trumpet to give warning to the people, and to rouse them from that fearfull condition which threatneth so much desertion. And to this end, we have enjoyned a solemne fast, the causes whereof, being more particularly considered by our commissioners here, will no question be sent unto you, that, if the Lord please, you may joyne with us there in that action.

Wee have set down an order to be kept hereafter for sending ministers unto the armie, which the clerk will send herewith unto you. Now, the Lord our God, in whose name his people go forth against his enemies, help and assist them, and cover their heads in the day of battell, and be their refuge; and blesse your travels and endeavours for the good of their souls and his own glory.

Sess. 7, June 4, 1644.—The Letter from the Commissioners at London to the Generall Assembly.

Right Honourable, Reverend, and beloved in the Lord,

It was the earnest desire of our hearts to have come unto you at this time, and to have brought with us the desireable fruits of our weighty employments and labours, to our common rejoycing in the mids of so many troubles, both here and there; but our Lord, in his wisdom, hath not judged it fitting that this should be the time of our oyfull harvest, and of bringing our sheaves, to be matter of sacrifice to himself, and of shouting to us. Both nations, as yet, doe but go forth weeping and bearing their precious seed; yet are we confident through Jesus Christ, that as it is a seed-time, if the labourers (although other men before us have laboured, and we are entred into their labours) prove faithfull unto the end, the harvest shall come in due time, and in great plenty.

The Common Directory for Publick Worship in the Kirks of the three kingdomes is so begun (which we did make known to the commissioners of the Generall Assembly) that we could not think upon any particular Directory for our own Kirk, and yet is not so far perfected that wee could present any part thereof unto your view; for, although wee have exhibited unto the grand committee (which is composed of some of the members of both Houses, and of the Assembly, with our selves) the materials of the publick prayers of the Kirk, the method of preaching, and the order of administration of both sacraments, and have the Catechisme in hand, yet are they not thoroughly examined by the committee, nor at all by the Assembly or Parliament, which we cannot impute to any neglect or unwillingnesse, but to the multiplicity and weight of their affairs, by which they are sore pressed, and above their power.

The Directory for Ordination of Ministers (which, upon the extreme exigence of this Kirk, was much pressed by the Parliament) is agreed upon by the committee and Assembly, and some dayes past is presented to both Houses, but hath not yet passed their vote. The Assembly hath been long in debate about the officers and government of the Kirk, (concerning which we offered the two papers which wee drew up, according to the practice of our own and other reformed kirks, and so neere as we could conceive to the minde of the Generall Assembly, and did send to the commissioners of the Generall Assembly,) and hath passed many votes about the one and the other, but hath not brought their thoughts to such ripenesse and perfection that they could think upon the publishing of them, or presenting them to your sight; nor is it in their power to do so without warrant of Parliament. Your wisdome will consider that they are not a Generall Assembly, but some select persons, called by authority to give their advice in matters of religion—that they walk in a way which hath not been troden by this nation before this time—that many things seeme new unto them, and cannot obtain their assent till they see them clearly warranted by the Word of God—that matters of the government of the Kirk have been much controverted here, and the prejudices against presbyteriall government are many and great—that the two extremes of Prelacie and Independencie, which latter is the generall claime of all sects and sectaries, have prevailed most in this Kirk, and no other thing known by the multitude but the one or the other—that such as look toward the government of the reformed kirks finde a mighty party within and without opposing them—and that reformation and uniformitie must, therefore, be a work so full of difficulty, that the hand of the Most High God, which is now begun to be stretched out in this land, must bring it to passe.

There was also presented to the Assembly a new Paraphrase of the Psalmes in English meeter, which was well liked of, and commended by some of the members of the Assembly; but because we conceived that one Psalmes Book in all the three kingdomes was a point of uniformity much to be desired, we took the boldnes (although we had no such expresse and particular commission) to oppose the present allowing thereof till the Kirk of Scotland should be acquainted with it; and, therefore, have we now sent an essay thereof in some Psalmes. We have also sent another specimen in print, done by some ministers of the city. Your wisdome hes to consider whether it be meet to examine them by your commissioners there, that their judgements be sent up unto the Assembly here, both about the generall of uniformity in this point, and about the particular way of effecting it, whether by either of these two, or by any other paraphrase, or by changing some expressions in the books now in use, which is aymed at by the first of these two.

As we cannot but admire the good hand of God in the great things done here already, particularly that the Covenant (the foundation of the whole work) is taken—Prelacie and the whole train thereof extirpated—the Service-Book in many places forsaken—plain and powerful preaching set up—many colledges in Cambridge provided with such ministers as are most zealous of the best reformation—altars removed—the communion in some places given at the table with sitting—the great organs at Paul's, and of Peter's in Westminster, taken down—images, and many other monuments of idolatry, defaced and abolished—the Chappel-royal at Whitehal purged and reformed—and all by authority, in a quiet manner, at noon-day, without tumult; so have we from so notable experience, joyned with the promises of the Word, sufficient ground of confidence that God will perfect this work against all opposition, and of encouragement for us all to be faithfull in the work of God, which is carried on by his mighty hand, that no man can oppose it, but he must be seen fighting against God. It is unto us no small matter of comfort, that we have heard of no minister of the Gospel (except such as the Kirk hath rejected) joyning with the Malignants there in their ungodly and unnatrall afflicting of that kingdome, while they are endeavouring the relief of the afflicted in this kingdome; and we pray and hope, that they may carefully keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and walk worthy both of their holy calling and of the great work which the Lord is working by his own weak servants in Kirk and Policy.

Be pleased to receive a letter from the Assembly, unto which you will return such an answer as shal seem good unto your wisdom, and withall (which is our humble desire) some word of your thankfull acknowledgement of the respect and favours done by them unto us.

We have, at all occasions since our coming hither, acquainted the commission with our proceedings, and, by the help of God, shall be industrious in obeying your directions and theirs during our abode here, which, through the power and blessing of God bringing the affairs of his own Church to a peaceable and blessed successe, wee wish may be for a short time, and unto which your fervent prayers, through Christ, may be very effectuell; which, therefore, is the humble and earnest desire of

Your affectionate fellow-labouring and fellow-feeling brethren in the work of the Lord,

The Letter from the Synod of Divines in the Kirk of England to the Generall Assembly.

in Jesus Christ,

The blessing and comfort of that inviolable union which our gracious God hath vouchsafed to both Churches and nations, gave us opportunity, the last year, to breath out some of our sighs into your compassionate bosomes; and such have been the soundings of your bowels, as have offered violence to heaven by your effectuell fervent prayers, and brought many sweet refreshings to our languishing spirits, by your pious and comfortable letters, in answer to ours.

This makes us studious of all means of acknowledging your tender sympathie, and of laying hold on all opportunities of repairing again to the same streams of consolation; for which end, as we cannot but confesse that, in the midst of those boysterous waves wherein we have been daily tossed, wee have met with many gracious and unexpected encouragements, so we must needs renew our former mournings, and rend our hearts afresh unto you, with greatest instance for all the assistance that your prayers, tears, learning, piety, and largeness of heart, can possibly contribute to your poor afflicted and still conflicting brethren: And this we the rather beg of you, who, having been first in the furnace of affliction, and are come out of great tribulation, are meekest to commiserate, and best able to comfort others in any trouble, by the comforts wherewith you your selves have been comforted of God.

It was in our desires to have presented to your Venerable Assembly some of our dearest respects in writing, by that eminently learned and much honored Commissioner of yours, the Lord Waristoun; but his departure hence was so sudden to us, and unexpected by us, that we could not have time (as his Lordship can inform you) to tender by him such a testimony of our brotherly and intimate affections, as may, in some measure, suite with your manifold and most affectionate expressions toward us, when our sighings were many, and our hearts faint. For such hath been your love, that no waters can quench it, and such the undertakings of the whole kingdome of Scotland, through your furtherance, that we already begin to reap the fruits of all that piety, prudence, and valour, which at this day render your nation worthily renowned in the Christian world; and us exceedingly straitned and restlesse in our selves, untill God please to open a way for our endeavours to make some more answerable returns.

Toward this, our thoughts and hopes were to have made, ere now, some proceedings of our Assembly legible in yours. But such are the continued distractions which lye upon our spirits, by means of the sad and bleeding condition of this kingdome, as have cast us much behinde our own expectations, and hindred that expedition, which the necessities of this nation, and the desires of our brethren abroad, do earnestly call for at our hands.

Sometimes, through God's goodnesse, wee have a prosperous gale; sometimes, againe, we saile, like Paul and his company, "very slowly many dayes." And even then, when wee draw near "the fair havens," some contrary windes put us out into the deep again. We walk in paths that have hitherto been untrodden by any Assembly in this Church. We therefore are inforced to spend more time in our inquiries, and in seeking of God a right way for us, that at length we may put into that highway, the way of holinesse, wherein wayfaring men, though fools, shall not erre. And we will wait upon our God, (before whom we have been this day humbling of our souls,) untill he lead us into all these truths which we seek after; and we shall labour to be yet more vile in our own eyes, as finding, by experience, that it is not in man to direct his way.

Those winds, which for a while do trouble the aire, do withall purge and refine it; and our trust is, that, through the most wise Providence and blessing of God, the truth, by our so long continued agitations, will be better cleared among us, and so our service will prove more acceptable to all the Churches of Christ, but more especially to you, while we have an intentive eye to our peculiar protestation, and to that publick sacred Covenant entred into by both the kingdoms, for uniformity in all his Majestie's dominions.

Which work we carry on (against what ever difficulties are cast in our way) with more ease and comfort, by the great sedulity and seasonable assistance wee daily receive from your Noble and Reverend Commissioners sitting among us. Their prudence will (we doubt not) sufficiently furnish you with more particular information touching our affaires. And here, we cannot but acknowledge that the assiduous presence of these our learned and highly esteemed brethren among us, and their free and faithfull contributing of their counsels to us, doe oblige us much to a double duty, the one of thanks, which we now heartily render to you, for sending to us such excellent helpers; the other of request, which wee earnestly make for their continuance with us, untill the work bee brought up to the finishing cubite.

Now, the great Master-Builder (without whose Almighty concurrence the builders labour but in vain) accomplish and perfect all his own glorious work in your hands, and in ours also, to his own glory, the peace and edification of all the churches, and the comfort of our selves over all our travels and sufferings.

Your most affectionate brethren and servants in the Lord, by the direction, and in the name of this whole Assembly,

The Generall Assemblie's Answer to the Right Reverend the Assembly of Divines in the Kirk of England.

Right Honourable, Right Reverend, and most dearly beloved in our Lord,

We do thankfully acknowledge your respectfull remembrance of us by your letters at all occasions, and not a little rejoyce to see that happie correspondence and Christian communion so sweetly entertained amongst us, which is so acceptable in the sight of the Lord, especially when kept and entertained betwixt kirks and kingdomes about affairs of highest and most publick concernment and interest. We have nothing more in our desires than to entertain that harmonious correspondence, that Christian sympathic and compassion, that sounding and re-sounding of bowels, which well beseemeth kirks and nations, united by a Solemn League and Sacred Covenant, for mutuall endeavours, by all lawfull means, to a further unitie in that faith once delivered to the saints, and greater uniformitie in divine worship, discipline, and government, according to the paterne.

The case and condition of your bleeding kingdome is no lesse sensible to us than if our selves were in affliction with you, but we trust all is working to your best, and to our Lord's glory; that some of you hes fallen, it is to try you, purge you, and make you white. If the Lord by those means be with that reformation of his ordinances, bringing also amongst that other reformation of hearts and lives, should it not be welcomed with all joy, although it bee upon the expence of blood and lives? The Lord will turn the bygone rage of man to his glory and your spiritual good, the remnant of rage will he restraine. The Lord delivereth his owne by degrees—"he is with them in trouble, and delivereth them, and honoureth them." He who hath been sensibly with you hitherto, and upholden you in your trouble, will, we trust, yet deliver you and honour you. The more ye sow in teares, the greater shall be your harvest of peace and joy, when the Lord, according to the dayes wherein he hath afflicted you, and the years wherein yee have seen evill, shall make you glad, and his work to appeare unto you, and his glory unto your children, and the beautie of the Lord your God to be upon you, and shall establish the work of your hands; yea, even establish the work of your hands.

We should prove both unthankfull to God and unfaithfull to men, did wee not hold out unto you the Lord's gracious and powerfull dealing with us in the like condition, and comfort you with the consolations wherewith wee our selves have been comforted. We were involved in the like difficulties; we had the strong opposition of highest authoritie set over two powerfull kingdoms, beside this of ours; and the unhappy providence of our wickedly-wise and wary Prelates had done what in them lay to make the ministry of this land sworn enemies to the intended reformation; so that we walked in a very wilderness, in a labyrinth, and as upon deep waters, wherein not onely did our feet lose footing, but also our eyes all discovering or discerning of any ground; yea, wee were ready to lose our selves; yet the Lord hath graciously rid us, and recovered us out of all these difficulties, and set our feet upon a rock, and ordered our goings. The experience we have had in our own persons, affordeth us confidence and hope concerning your affaires, and we trust this hope shall not be disappointed; it is our duty to hope upon experience, and it is the Lord's word and promise that such an hope shall not be ashamed. It cannot choose but beget confidence in you, when yee shall consider, that ye have seen before your eyes your neighbouring ship of this Kirk and kingdome, having (as it were) loosed from your side, in the like or self-same storme, notwithstanding all tossing of windes and waves, yet ("not by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord of Hosts") to have arrived safe and sound to the port and harberie; yea, and to have dared to put out again unto the storm, to contribute her weak endeavours for your help.

We acknowledge your impediments to be great and many—the sufferings of your brethren, the people of God, cannot choose but both damp your spirits and divide your thoughts. Your walking in an untroden and unknown way, must put you (though never so willing to go on speedily, yet) to take time and leisure to ask for the right way: and ye want not the opposition of some amongst your selves, to whom, notwithstanding, we trust the Lord will reveale his truth in his own time. Neverthelesse, (much honoured and dear brethren,) go on courageously against the stream of all opposition; every mountain in the way of Zerubbabel the Lord shall make plain, and as many of you as are perfect be thus minded, that forgetting the things that are behinde, and looking to the things that are before, you presse hard towards the mark, as having before you not onely the prize of the high calling and recompence of reward, but also at the end of this race, these two precious pearls and inestimable jewels of truth and unity, and all the reformed churches beholding and looking on, not onely as witnesses, but also being ready to congratulate and embrace you.

We were greatly refreshed to hear by letters from our commissioners there with you, and by a more particular relation from the Lord Waristoun now with us, of your praiseworthy proceedings, and of the great good things the Lord hath wrought among you, and for you. Shall it seem a small thing in our eyes that the Covenant (the foundation of the whole work) is taken—that that Antichristian Prelacy, with all the traine thereof, is extirpate—that the door of a right entrie unto faithful shepherds is opened—many corruptions, as altars, images, and other monuments of idolatry and superstition, removed, defaced, and abolished—the Serviec-Book in many places forsaken, and plaine and powerfull preaching set up—the great organs at Pauls and Peters taken down—that the Royall Chappell is purged and reformed, sacraments sincerely administrate, and according to the paterne in the mount—that your colledges, the seminaries of your Kirk, are planted with able and sincere professors—that the good hand of God hath called and kept together so many pious, grave, and learned divines for so long a time, and disposed their hearts to search his truth, by their frequent humiliations, continuall prayers, and learned and peaceable debates? Should not all and each one of these stir up our souls to blesse the Lord, and render both you and us confident, that he who hath begun the good work will perfect it, and put the cope-stone upon it, that the beauty of a perfected worke may shine to all nations, and we may say and shout, “Grace, grace unto it”—that the time may be when full liberty and leasure shall be to all the builders of the house of God, to give themselves, with both their hands, to the building up and edifying the people of God in these things that belong to life and godlinesse, to the making of them wise to salvation, and thoroughly furnished to every good work, and when the Lord shall delight to dwell more familiarly, and to work more powerfully in and by his throughly purified ordinances—that you, afflicted and tossed with tempests and not comforted, shall have your stones laid with fair colours, your foundations with sapphires, your children shall be taught of God, and shall have great peace, and no weapon framed against you shall prosper, and every tongue that riseth against you in judgement shall bee condemned—that the Lord will awake as in the ancient dayes, as in the generation of old—that the redeemed of the Lord shall come unto Zion with singing, and sorrow and mourning shall flee away?

And as we are confident that the Lord, who heareth prayer, and hath promised to guide his servants into all truth, will bring your labours to a comfortable conclusion; so do all the reformed Kirks, and the Kirk of Scotland above all others, extreamly long for the taste of the fruits of their pious labours and continual pains; and, so much the more, that we have suspended some materiall determinations amongst our selves, upon expectation of uniformity; and that, in the meane time, so many scandalous papers come to our view, and to the hands of the people here, for libertie of conscience, toleration of sects, and such practices as are contrary to the doctrine, government, and peace of all the reformed Kirks. For stopping and suppressing whercof, as we doubt not but your Wisedome, and the authority of the Honourable Houses of Parliament, will use some more effectuall means; so do we hope that your determinations shall carry such evidence of divine truth, and demonstration of the Spirit, that those unhappy clouds of darknesse shall be so scattered that they shall be no more gathered nor appear hereafter, to the dishonour of God, the prejudice of his truth, and the scandalizing of so many souls for which Christ hath dyed.

We doe, with hearty thankfulnessse, resent all the kindnesse and respect you have shown to our commissioners, and your high esteeme of them in love for the work's sake; although their presence here would be very comfortable unto us, very steedable to the publick, and necessar in respect of their great and important particular charges and stations; yet do we willingly dispense with all, yea, nothing shall be too dear unto us, so that this work be finished with joy, and Jerusalem made the glory and praise of the whole earth. Because of the house of the Lord our God, we will seek her good: For our brethren and companions' sake, we will now say, Peace be within her walls, prosperity within her palaces.

The Assemblie's Answer to their Commissioners at London.

Reverend and beloved Brethren,

It would have been the rejoycing of our hearts, and the lightning of our countenances, to have seen your faces, and injoyed your presence here with us, especially should yee have arrived unto us loaden with the spoils of Antichrist, the trophees of the Kirk of Christ, and the long longed-for fruits of your painfull labours; but seeing it hath pleased the Lord, whose interest in the businesse is main and principall, otherwise to dispose, it doth become us, with all humility, to submit to his good pleasure, with faith and patience to attend his leasure, for he that belêeveth maketh not haste, and with more frequency and fervencie in prayer seek to him who will be sought for these things, and having begun the good work will perfect it, and double the benefit, by bestowing it in a more seasonable time unto us.

We have not been a little refreshed with your letters sent unto us and the commissioners of the preceding Assembly, and with these from the Reverend Synod of Divines, the answer whereof you will be pleased to present unto them; by all which, and more particularly by a full relation from the Lord Waristoun, a faithfull witness and a fellow-labourer with you there, we see and acknowledge that, by the Lord's blessing, the progresse of the work is already more than we can overtake in the course of our thankfulness, that your labours are very great, your pains uncessant, your thoughts of heart many, that ye endure the heat of the day; but being confident of your patient continuance in wel-doing, and that your labours shall not be in vaine in the Lord, we have renewed your commission, and returned the Lord Waristoun unto you, according to your desire, that ye may prosecute that great work which the Lord hath blessed so farre in your hands.

When the ordination and entry of ministers shall be conformable to the ordinance of God, there is to be expected a richer blessing shall be powred out from above, both of furniture and assistance upon themselves, and of successe upon their labours; for which end, as our earnest desire is that the directory for it may be established, so doe we exceedingly long to see the Common Directory for Worship perfected, which may prove an happy meane of that wished for uniformity in the Kirks of the three kingdoms, shall (we trust) direct by all rocks of offence and occasions of stumbling, and shall remove all these corruptions wherewith the Lord's sacrifice and service hath been defiled.

That point concerning a change of the Paraphrase of the Psalmes in meeter, we have referred to the commissioners here, whose power and commission, granted by the preceding Assembly, we have renewed and continued.

That there be difficulties concerning kirk government, we think it not strange, for these reasons you lay out before us; yet because the minds of men are still in suspense upon the successe of the determination of that reverend Assembly, on the one hand, and upon the successe of the warre on the other, which doth not a little faint heir hearts and feeble their hands, both you and we must be instant with God and man for a finall determination of all these debates, and a happy and speedy conclusion of this great affaire, so much concerning his own glory and the good of his Kirk. 'Now the Lord lead you in all truth, and give you understanding in all things.'

Fratres in Domino plurimum colendi,

Quæ anno superiore Ecclesiarum Zelandicarum nomine, missæ sunt ad nos Literæ, ut eas communis totius Ecclesiæ vestræ Belgicæ voluntatis testes fuisse interpretaremur, effecit benevolentia vestra tot tantisque officiis nobis spectata; quam sententiam nobis confirmarunt ea quæ copiose clarissimus Eques D. Archibaldus Jonstonus Varistonus in foro supremo Judex, a reliquis tum Ordinum tum Ecclesiæ hujus Regni Delegatis Londino non ita pridem remissus, in hac ipsa Synodo Nationali de eximio vestro erga nos studio commemoravit; præsertim quanta fide, quam sollicita diligentia nostram, vel Domini potius nostri Jesu Christi causam, quæ nunc Londini agitur, et promoveritis, et promovere etiamnum satagatis. Quo in negotio, ex iis, quorum ab eo recitata audivimus nomina, de propensa reliquorum voluntate et cura, ut conciliandæ Ecclesiarum Britannicarum unionis felicitur suscepta consilia, vestra ope et opera prosperum mature sortiantur exitum, minime obscura fecimus indicia. Sunt hæc tam illustria benevolentiam vestræ testimonia, et in omnium bonorum oculis adeo perspicua, et eorum memoria nulla unquam delere poterint oblivia. Laboris autem et jam impensi et porro suscepti ad controversias in Synodo Londinensi suborientes felicitur expediendas et decidendas nequando pœniteat, ex eo quem per divinam jam benedictionem fructum cepistis, optima quæq. in posterum sperare consentaneum est.

Hiis tam honorificæ beneficiorum vestrorum commemorationi a D. Varistonio factæ supervenerunt ex partibus Hiberniæ aquilonaribus Literæ multorum Chirographis subsignatæ; qui singularis gratiæ in illam Ecclesiam divinitus effusæ, ex quo tempore in societatem fœderis trium unitorum sub Rege nostro Regnorum admissi sunt, mentione facta, hujus inquirunt divinæ benedictionis amplissimum nuper habuimus testimonium, Sanctorum in Belgio liberalitatem eximiam; qui nobis, ignotis licet et peregrinis, fratres se nostri amantissimos, et malorum nostrorum sensu tenerimo compunctos aperte demonstrarunt. Pauculos enim nos gladio superstites, et fame propediem interituros, omnibus extremis circumventos, in ipso articulo sublevarunt; nec tantum oratione ad consolationem composita nobis animos confirmarunt, hortantes ut humiliter incedentes Deum liberatorem expectemus, qui non nisi ad breve tempus faciem suam a domo Jacob abscondere solet, sed subsidio insuper opulento cum annonæ, tum aliarum rerum ad nostram in tantis angustiis relaxationem et solatium necessariarum, copiose nos refocillarunt. Tantam munificentiam cum supplices a Deo contendimus, ut septuplam ipsis in sinum rependat, tum demisse vos etiam atq. etiam rogamus, ut in tanti beneficii agnitione Ecclesiis Belgicis, nobiscum gratias agatis. Hæc illi. In quo quidem officio si illis desimus, in nos pariter et illos graviter peccemus.

Agnosimus igitur illustrissimorum et potentissimorum Hollandiæ, Zelandiæ, aliorumque Ordinum Belgicorum tam eximiam beneficentiam; quibus non conniventibus modo et permittentibus (quod ipsum non vulgare beneficium habendum esset) sed authoribus etiam, modumque et rationem præscribentibus, exemplo quoque præeuntibus, in subsidium fratrum nostrorum Hibernensium collecta per Ecclesias facta ad ipsos mature deportata sit; agnosimus piorum in iisdem Ecclesiis Belgicis tam expromptam voluntatem et liberalitatem; agnosimus tantum beneficium non in ipsos magis fratres nostros, quam in illorum persona in nosmetipsos esse collatum: Vosque (fratres reverendi) obnixè rogatos volumus, ut quemadmodum nos ad omnem grati animi significacionem prompti semper erimus, ita qua vobis potissimum ratione commodum videbitur, illustrissimis et potentissimis ordinibus nostro nomine gratias agatis; populo autem Christiano curæ vestræ commisso tum publicè universo, tum privatim singulis, ut occasio tulerit, demonstratis quam honorifice de ipsis sentiamus, et quanti faciamus tam eximiam benevolentiam et charitatem, qua in Ecclesiarum Hibernicarum consolatione viscera nostra refocillaverunt. Quæ autem vestræ fuerint partes, fratres charissimi, quam pio studio et labore, quam assidua diligentia tantæ charitatis semen in segetem et maturam tandem messem provexeritis, cum nos libentes agnosimus, tum res ipsa loquitur, et fructus opimus abunde testatur. Imprimis autem (quod caput est) tantæ gratiæ authorem et largitorem nos una cum Ecclesiis Hibernicis laudamus et celebramus; comprecantes ut in vos universos, in Ecclesias a Domino vobis commissas, in illustrissimos Belgii vestri Ordines Spiritum suum copiose effundat, ut quemadmodum in Rep. vestra adversus hostem potentissimum defendenda, et inter tantas bellorum moles indies amplificanda, in Evangelii luce et veritate incontaminata contra inferorum portas in vestris Ecclesiis propugnanda, atque inde latius propaganda, immensa Dei vobis excubantis potentia, multiformis sapientia, et eximia beneficentia, per universum terrarum orbem hactenus celebrata est; ita bonis omnibus vos deinceps cumulare pergat idem fons omnis bonitatis, ut frementibus religionis et libertatis vestræ hostibus, sapientiæ et optimarum artium juxta ac armorum triumphorumque gloria inter nobilissimas gentes Resp. vestra fœderata quotidie magis emineat, Ecclesia sacrorum puritate, et cœlestis veritatis splendore perspicua refulgeat; eoque prospere vobis cedant vestra prudentissima et saluberrima consilia, quibus certissimum ad fœlicitatem publicam compendium vos capessere demonstratis, nec vobis tantum consultis, sed de vicinis etiam Ecclesiis solliciti, qua opera, qua consilio opibusque vestris eas sublevatis et confirmatis omnes, et quasi de specula universis prospicientes de periculis imminentibus commune facitis, et ad ruinam ab hostibus dolose machinatum mature præcavendam armatis.

Ergo quod anno superiori, veluti signo dato, Reformatas omnes Ecclesias, missis ex Zelandia literis commonuistis, ut cum impostores, Jesu nomen impudenter ementiti, cæterique Antichristi satellites, quo securius in populum erroribus Pontificiis fascinatam grassari, et puriores Christi Ecclesias funditus extirpare queant, artissima conjuratione sociati ad impia consilia patranda sese accinxerunt; ita Ecclesiæ quoque Reformate sine mora consilia in medium alacriter conferant, et animos ac vires conjungant, ut perniciosam sibi omnibus intentatam in hostium capita retorquant; ni fecerint, tam pudendæ ignaviæ excusatione apud posteritatem carituri, consilium non minus prudens et fidum, quam fœlix et salutare libenter et tum agnovimus et nunc ipso etiam eventu comprobamus.

Principio autem ad hoc consequendum necessarium videtur, ut sine mora, convolemus omnes ad Deum nostrum clementissimum, qui postquam Ecclesiarum Reformatarum mores minime, reformatos multis annis longanimitate sua pertulisset, ferulam primum, mox etiam gladium vibratum interminatus, tandem rubentem, et madidum suorumque sanguine calentem et spumantem, per regiones plurimas jam diu circumtulit; in nos denique reliquos nunc intentat, nisi mature resipuerimus, et de domo ipsius amplius purganda, de gratia Domini nostri Jesu Christi pluris facienda, de cultu Dei ipsiusque institutis religiosius habendis, de Sabbatho ejus sanctificando, a quo nimium oculos nostros avertimus, et de moribus, ad pietatis normam componendis magis, serio quam hactenus, a nobis factum est, nobiscum statuentes cum populo, Dei sub Nehemia, Josia, reliquisque piis gubernatoribus, religioso fœdere percusso, tanquam firmissimo vinculo, Deo obstricti, nos inter nos, arietis adversus hostes universimus, ut avertat Deus, jam fumantem et capitibus nostris imminentem iram, quam peccata nostra plurima et maxima, adversus nos provocarunt et accenderunt.

Non tantum nobis deferimus, nondum eos renovato cum Deo fœdere, et votis nuncupatis, dignos edidimus fructus, ut nostrum exemplum vobis proponere libeat: Quod tamen experti sumus, de Dei erga nos gratia, quod gratitudo erga Deum, quod gloria ipsius a nobis flagitat, celare non audemus. Quæcunque nostra male merita sunt in conspectu Dei et hominum; certe ex quo die nos de religioso fœdere cum Deo, et inter nos inuendo cogitavimus, a portis inferorum revocari, et res nostræ omnes in Deum nostrum, necessario conjectæ melius habere cœperunt, et fœliciore hactenus succésu processerunt. Quod si de fœderis hujusmodi religiosa societate coeunda, (quod rerum vestrarum et religionis in Britannia, nostra ex fœdere nuper inito perburgandæ et stabiliendæ commodo fieri possit,) vestræ prudentiæ visum fuerit cogitare, et ex consilio eorum quorum interest statuere, ac cum aliis Reformatis Ecclesiis agere, (pro ea qua apud omnes valetis gratia,) ut eandem vobiscum incant rationem, non subium est, per Domini ac Dei nostri benignissimi Jesu Christi, in Ecclesias suas gratiam, fore, ut non modo, quod certissimum adversus impudentia mala perfugium unno superiore missis ex Zelandia literis denunciastis, Ecclesiæ Reformate arietioris societatis vinculo inter se unitæ ad hostium conatus, impetusque frangendos corroborentur et confirmentur; sed disjecti etiam lapides domus Dei, per Germaniam exrudere et cineribus redivivi recolligantur, ac gloriosum Domini nostri templum ibidem instauretur; et purioris religionis Professores in istis Ecclesiis, per resipiscentiam ad eum qui percussit eos, reversi, et quod nullis canescat sæculis fœdere Domino nobiscum coadunati, malis, sub quorum pondere tot annos gemiscunt, tandem subleventur. Qui dies longe optatissimus si per Dei gratiam semel illuxerit; de consiliorum communione inter Reformatorum Ecclesiarum Synodis per Legatos et literas concilianda iniri possit ratio, per quam Ecclesiæ hostes compescantur, hæreses opprimantur, et schismata resarciantur, pax cum Deo, et inter Ecclesias firma conservetur, et gloriosum Dei opus in Evangelio per orbem terrarum propagando, et Antichristi regno abolendo promoveatur. Quod ut optandum, et sperandum, piis et prudentibus vestris meditationibus, ut bonum semen fœcundissimo solo commendamus.

Vestræ Dignitati, et Fraternitati addictissimi, Pastores et Seniores Nationalis Synodi Scoticanæ, et nostro omnium nomine ac mandato.

Ordinance concerning Bursars.

The Assembly, understanding that the overture for maintaining bursars, in the Assembly holden in the year 1641, upon the 7th of August, Sess. 15, is never yet put in practice; do, therefore, ordain Presbyteries to put the same in practice with all diligence, and to make account thereof to the next Assembly.

Ordinance for uplifting and employing Penalties contained in Acts of Parliament upon Pious Uses.

The Assembly, understanding that the executing of some laudable Acts of Parliament, made against non-communicants and excommunicate persons, and of divers other acts containing pecuniary pains for restraining of vice, and advancing piety, is much neglected by the slownesse of Presbyteries and Ministers in seeking execution thereof: Therefore, ordains Presbyteries and Ministers respective to be diligent hereafter by all means in prosecuting full and exact execution of all such acts of Parliament, for lifting the said penalties contained in the same, and for faithful employment thereof upon pious uses, and that every Presbyterie report their diligence here-in yearly to General Assemblies.

An Overture concerning Promises of Marriage made by Minors to those with whom they have committed Fornication.

Forsameikle as it is found by experience, that some young men being put to colleges by their well-affected parents, that they may be instructed in the knowledge of arts and sciences, to the intent they may bee more able for publick employments in the ecclesiastick and civill state, that the said children hes committed fornication; and the woman and her friends hes seduced the foresaid schollers, being minors, to make promise of marriage to the party with whom they have committed fornication; and thereupon intends to get the benefite of marriage with the said young men; not onely without the consent of their parents, but to their great grief, and to the great appearance of the ruine and overthrow of their estate; which may be the ease of noblemen and gentlemen's children, as wel as of these of other estates and degrees within the kingdom. Wherefore, if the Assembly think it expedient, it would be declared that all such promises be made null and of none effect, especially where the maker of the promise is minor, and not willing to observe the samine, because his parents will not consent, but oppose and contradict, threatning to make him lose not onely his favour, but both blessing and birthright. This ordinance shal not onely be very expedient for many good civill causes, but is very consonant and agreeable to the Word of God, and will be very comfortable to many godly parents, who otherwise may be disappointed of their pious intentions, and have the comfort they expected turned to an heavy and grievous crosse.

The Generall Assembly thinks it convenient at this time to delay any determination in the matter above written untill the next Assembly, that in the meane time every Presbyterie may take the same to their serious consideration, and report their judgements to the Assembly.

Act concerning Dissenting Voices in Presbyteries and Synods.

The Assembly thinks it necessar, if any member of Presbyteries or Synods shall finde in matters depending before them that the Moderator shall refuse to put any thing of importance to voices; or if they finde any thing carried by plurality of voices to any determination which they conceive to be contrary to the Word of God, the acts of Assembly, or to the received order of this Kirk, that in either of these cases they urge their dissent to be marked in the register; and if that be refused, that they protest as they would desire to be free of common censure with the rest; and the Assembly declares the dissenters to be censurable, if their dissent shall be found otherwise nor they conceived.

Act concerning the Election of a Moderator in Provinciall Assemblies.

The Generall Assembly, understanding that some Provinciall Assemblies in choosing their Moderator tye themselves to these persons who have been before named and designed in particular Presbyteries, which is against the libertie of the Provinciall Assembly; therefore, discharges Presbyteries to make any such nomination hereafter; and ordain Provincials, in their first meeting, to elect their Moderator, and to make their own list for that effect without any such prælimitation.

Act for keeping of the Fast by the Congregations in the Towne where the Assembly holds.

The Assembly judge it most necessar and comely, seeing the first day of the meeting of Generall Assemblies is, by the landable practicc of this Kirk, a day of fasting and humiliation, for craving the Lord's blessing to that meeting, that not onely the members of the Assembly, but that all the congregations also of the town where the Assembly holds, be so exercised; and that publick worship be in all the kirks thereof that day for that effect.

The Generall Assembly appoints the meeting of the next Assembly to be upon the last Thursday of May, in the yeer 1645, at Edinburghe.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY, MET OCCASIONALLY AT EDINBURGH, JANUARY, 1645.

Sess. 2, Die Jovis, January 23, 1645, post meridiem.—The Letter from the Commissioners at London to the Generall Assembly.

Right Honourable, Reverend, and beloved in the Lord,

As we are not without the knowledge, so are we not without the feeling, of the distresses of our native countrey, and of the troubles of our dear brethren, specially that the hand of the Lord is stretched out against you, not only by invasion from without, of the basest of the children of men, but also by the unnaturall treachery of some within, who have dealt perfidiously in the Covenant and cause of God: "They hisse and gnash the teeth, they say, We have swallowed her up; certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it: the Lord . . . hath caused thine enemy to rejoyce over thee, he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries." Yet (saith the Lord, who is "thy Maker and thy husband, the Lord of Hosts is his name, and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel,) . . . for a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee; for this is as the waters of Noah, . . . the Covenant of my peace shall not be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." When the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid, the Priests and Levites sung together in praising and giving thanks to the Lord, "Because he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever." And we hope at this time, upon the coming of our Reverend brethren, and the sight of that which they bring with them, the noise of the shout of joy shall be louder than the noise of the weeping of the people. This we may say, that not many years ago many of us would have been content to have losed our lives, that we might have obtained that which the Lord, if not in a miraculous, yet in a marvellous and mercifull Providence, hath brought to passe in this iland in these dayes, which many before us have desired to see, and have not seen. God forbid that it should seeme a small thing in your eyes which is done here already, as it is expressed in a paper from the Parliament, and letters from the Assembly. Ye are best acquainted with the tentations and difficulties which ye meet with there, which are also very sensible unto us; and when we consider how the Lord hath carried on his work here at the first taking of the Covenant, and since, against much learning and contradiction, against much policie, power, and all sorts of opposition, (such as reformation useth to encounter,) we are ravished with admiration of the right hand of the Almighty. For our part, we may confidently avouch in the sight of God, and before you, whom next unto God we do respect and reverence, and to whom, as your servants, we are accountable, that in all our proceedings we had first of all the Word of God before our eyes for the rule—and for our patern the Church of Scotland, so much as was possible—and no lesse (if not more) then if all this time since we parted from you we had been sitting in a Nationall Assembly there, and debating matters with our brethren at home. Where we were not able to get every thing framed to our minde, we have endeavoured, as much as we could, to preserve our own reformation and practice, of which our brethren will give you account in the particulars, we hope, to your satisfaction. That an uniformitie in every thing is not obtained in the beginning, let it not seem strange. The levelling of the high mountain of Prelacie, the laying aside of the Book of Common Prayer, the Directory of Worship, concluded in both Houses of Parliament, and the principal propositions of Church government passed in the Assembly, all of them according to the Solemne League and Covenant, the greatest of all, are three or foure witnesses to prove that the Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad, and which make us "like them that dream;" and we are sure, that not onely the reformed Kirks, but the Papists will say, the Lord hath done great things for them.

All that we desire is, 1. That the Directory of Worship may be returned by our brethren with all possible expedition, that it may be published here, and put in practice, as that which is extremely longed for by the good people, and will be a remedy of the many differences and divisions about the worship of God in this kingdome, especially in this place. If there be any thing in it that displeaseth, let it be remonstrate upon irrefragable and convincing reason, otherwise ye will in your wisdome give approbation to it. 2. If there be any particular differences among some brethren, which are not determined, but passed over in silence in the Directory, and yet hinted at in the letter from the Assembly, we hope that in your wisdome ye will so consider of them, that they may be layde aside in due time, and that in the mean while, till the Directory be concluded and put in practice, there be no trouble about them, for that were as snow in summer, and rain in harvest. We know nothing of that kinde that all of us who love unitie, order, and edification, may not perfectly agree in, without scandall or disturbance: And we beseech the Lord to keep that Kirk free of such sects and monsters of opinions, as are daily set on foot and multiplied in this kingdome, through the want of that church government by Assemblies, which hath preserved us, and we hope, through the blessing of God, shall cure them. 3. Because nationall Assemblies cannot frequentlie conveene, we humbly desire that such a Commission may be settled, as we may at all occasions, til the work be finished, have our recourse unto, for our direction and resolution; for we know both our own weaknesse and the greatnesse of the work, wherein we can promise no more but to be faithfull in obeying your commandments, as in the sight of God, whom with our souls we pray to grant you his Spirit to guide you into all truth. And thus continue Your humble and faithfull servants,

LOUDOUN.

Direct.—For the Right Reverend the Generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland.

The Letter from the Synode of Divines in England to the Generall Assembly.

Right Honourable, Right Reverend, and dearly Beloved in the Lord Jesus,
“As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country.” We, your brethren, yet remaining in the furnace of affliction, and still labouring in the very fire, have at length, by the good hand of God upon us, attained so far toward the mark at which we all aime, that we shall now send you by two of your reverend and faithfull commissioners, Mr Robert Baillie and Mr George Gillespie, (our much honoured brethren,) some good news of that great work after which your zeal for truth and peace hath so much thirsted, and for which you “have not loved your lives unto the death.”

Our progresse therein hath not been so expeditious as was desired and expected. This, unto such as either know not or consider not the weight and greatnesse of the work, nor the manifold difficulties which have occurred to obstruct our proceedings in this day of darknesse and calamity, (too sad to be expressed,) hath been like unto “hope deferred, which makes the heart sick.” Howbeit, we trust, that when their desire (namely, that which we have prepared, and are further in travell with) shall come unto them, it will be, through God, a tree of life, as, to our great comfort and encouragement, we already perceive it to be to both the Honourable Houses of Parliament.

Touching the severall papers brought to us from your honourable and reverend commissioners, by the hands of the committee appointed to treat with them in matters of religion, (one of the papers being given in the 10th of November 1643, concerneth the severall sorts of Church-Officers and Assemblies; another, bearing date the 24th of January 1643, concerneth Congregationall Elderships, and Classical Presbyteries; the other, being presented the 15th of August last, representeth the necessity of making greater speed in settling the intended uniformity in religion, according to the late solemne Covenant,) we hold it our duty, in regard both of the arct and inseparable union which the Lord hath happily and seasonably made between you and us, and of your indefatigable and inestimable labour of love to this afflicted kingdom, to give your Lordships and the rest of that Venerable Assembly some brief account.

Concerning one Confession of Faith, and forme of Catechisme, we make no question of a blessed and perfect harmony with you. The publick doctrine held out by our Church to all the world, (especially when it shall be reviewed, which is in great part done,) concurring so much with yours, may assure you of your heart's desire in those particulars, so soon as time and opportunity may give us liberty to perfect what we have begun.

The chief reason of laying aside the review of our publick doctrine, after the happy and much desired arrivall of your reverend commissioners here, was, the drawing up and accelerating of a Directory for Worship, and of a Forme of Church Government; in both of which we stood at a greater distance from other reformed churches of Christ, and particularly from yours, (which we very much honour,) with whom our solemne sacred Nationall Covenant requireth us to endeavour the nearest conjunction and uniformity, that we, and our posterity after us, may, as brethren, live in faith and love, and the Lord may delight to dwell in the midst of us.

Nor have our labours therein been frustrate; for we have perfected and transmitted a Directory for Worship to both Houses of Parliament, where it hath received such acceptance that it is now passed in both the Honourable Houses of Parliament; which we hope will be to the joy and comfort of all our godly and dear brethren in all his Majestie's kingdoms and dominions.

We have not advised any imposition which might make it unlawfull to vary from it in any thing; yet we hope all our reverend brethren in this kingdom, and in yours also, will so far value and reverence that which, upon so long debate and serious deliberation, hath been agreed upon in this Assembly, (when it shall also passe with you, and be settled as the common Publick Directory for all the Churches in the three kingdoms,) that it shall not be the lesse regarded and observed. And albeit we have not expressed in the Directory every minute particular which is or might be either laid aside or retained among us, as comely and usefull in practice; yet we trust that none will be so tenacious of old customs, not expressly forbidden, or so averse from good examples, although new, in matters of lesser consequence, as to insist upon their liberty of retaining the one or refusing the other, because not specified in the Directory; but be studious to please others rather then themselves.

We have likewise spent divers moneths in the search of the Scriptures to finde out the minde of Christ concerning a Forme of Church Government, wherein we could not but expect the greatest difficulty. For our better progresse herein wee have, with all respect, considered the severall papers of your honourable and reverend commissioners touching this head, and do with all thankfulnessse acknowledge their great zeal, judgement, and wisdom expressed therein; as also the excellent assistance and great furtherance of your reverend commissioners in this great work, which now, through God's goodnesse, is very near to a period also.

In pursuit whereof we made a strict survey and scrutinie of every proposition, that we might finde it agreeable to and warranted by the Word of God, in a method of our own, without resting upon any particular modell or frame whatsoever already constituted. What we have performed, and how farre we have proceeded therein, we leave to the information of your reverend commissioners, who have been eye and ear witnesses of all that hath past, and we doubt not but you will shortly receive a satisfactory answer from hence, so soon as it shall be passed in the Honourable Houses of Parliament.

And now, right honourable and right reverend brethren, let it not seem grievous that we have thus long delayed the satisfying of your earnest and just expectation. It is the lot of Jerusalem to have her walls built in troublous times, when there are many adversaries. Nor let it offend, that (albeit we acknowledge the many great and inestimable expressions of your love, zeal, and helpfulnesse, unto us every way in the day of our distresse, to be beyond all that we can in words acknowledge) we professe plainly to you, that we do most unwillingly part with those our reverend and dear fellow-labourers, your commissioners, whom now you have called home to render an account of their employment here; which hath been so managed both by them and the rest of their honourable and reverend colleagues as deserveth many thanks, and all honourable acknowledgement, not onely from us, but from you also.

Give us leave to adde, that the long experience we have had of the great sufficiency, integrity, and usefulness of them all, in the great work of Christ, our common Lord and Master, inforeeth us (next to our greatest sute, for the continuance of your fervent prayers) to be earnest suiters, not onely for the continuance of these excellent helpers, Mr Alex. Henderson, and Mr Sam. Rutherford, yet remaining with us, but also for the speedy return hither of our reverend brethren that are now going hence, for the perfecting of that work which yet remains. And this sute, we trust, you will the rather grant, because of the great and joint concernment of both Churches and kingdoms in these matters.

Now, the Spirit of wisdom and of all grace rest upon you in all your great consultations; as at all times, so especially now, when you shall be gathered together in the name of the Lord Jesus, for the further building up and polishing of his Church; and cause the fruit of all your labours to be to the praise and glory of God, and the comfort and rejoycing of the hearts of all the Israel of God: He reward all our dear brethren of that sister Church and Nation manifold into their bosome all the labours, love, and sufferings which they have afforded, and still do cheerfully continue, for our sakes and the Gospel's, in this distracted and bleeding kingdom—suppresse all commotions and bloody practices of the common enemy, in both, yea, in all the three kingdoms—set up the Throne of Jesus Christ, and make all the kingdoms to be the Lord's, and our Jerusalem to be a praise upon earth, that all that love her and mourn for her may rejoyce for joy with her, and may suck and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolation.

Subscribed by your most loving brethren, and fellow-labourers in the work of the Lord, in the name of this whole Assembly, Direct.—To the Right Honourable and Right Reverend, the Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland, these present.

Sess. 5, January 28, 1645, post meridiem, Die Martis.—Approbation of the Proceedings of the Commission of the two preceding Assemblies.

The Generall Assembly, having heard the report of the committee appointed to consider and examine the proceedings of the Commissioners of the two last Generall Assemblies, viz., of the Assemblies held in Edinburgh in the yeers 1643 and 1644; and after mature deliberation, and serious consideration thereof, finding that the whole acts, proceedings, and conclusions of the said Commissioners, contained in a book and register subscribed by Master Andrew Ker, their clerk, and by Master George Leslie, moderator, and Master William Jaffray, clerk to the said committee, declare much wisdom, diligence, vigilance, and commendable zeal; and that the saids Commissioners have orderly and formally proceeded in every thing according to their commissions: Do, therefore, ratifie and approve the said whole acts, proceedings, and conclusions of the Commissioners of the two Assemblies aforesaid.

Sess. 10, February 3, 1645, Die Lunæ, post meridiem.—Act of the Generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, for the Establishing and putting in Execution of the Directory for the Publick Worship of God.

Whereas an happy unity and uniformity in religion amongst the Kirks of Christ in these three kingdoms, united under one Sovereigne, hath been long and earnestly wished for by the godly and well-affected amongst us—was propounded as a main article of the large treaty, without which band and bulwark no safe, well-grounded, and lasting peace could be expected—and, afterward, with greater strength and maturity, revived in the Solemne League and Covenant of the three kingdoms, whereby they stand straitly obliged to endeavour the nearest uniformity in one forme of Church Government, Directory of Worship, Confession of Faith, and Forme of Catechising—which hath also, before and since our entering into that Covenant, been the matter of many supplications and remonstrances, and sending commissioners to the King's Majestic, of declarations to the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England, and of letters to the Reverend Assembly of Divines, and others of the ministerie of the Kirk of England—being also the end of our sending commissioners, as was desired from this Kirk, with commission to treat of uniformitie in the foure particulars afore mentioned, with such committees as should be appointed by both Houses of the Parliament of England, and by the Assembly of Divines sitting at Westminster—and, beside all this, it being, in point of conscience, the chief motive and end of our adventuring upon manifold and great hazards, for quenching the devouring flame of the present unnatural and bloody warre in England, though to the weakning of this kingdome within itself, and the advantage of the enemy which hath invaded it, accounting nothing too dear to us, so that this our joy be fulfilled: And now this great work being so far advanced, that a Directory for the Publick Worship of God in all the three kingdomes being agreed upon by the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England, after consultation with the divines of both kingdomes there assembled, and sent to us for our approbation, that being also agreed upon by this Kirk and kingdome of Scotland, it may be, in the name of both kingdomes, presented to the King, for his royall consent and ratification. The Generall Assembly having most seriously considered, revised, and examined the Directory afore mentioned, after severall publick readings of it, after much deliberation, both publickly and in private committees, after full liberty given to all to object against it, and earnest invitations of all who have any scruples about it to make known the same, that they might be satisfied, do unanimously, and without a contrary voice, Agree to and Approve the following Directory, in all the heads thereof, together with the preface set before it; and doth require, decerne, and ordain, that, according to the plain tenour and meaning thereof, and the intent of the preface, it be carefully and uniformly observed and practised by all the ministers and others within this kingdome whom it doth concerne; which practice shall be begun upon intimation given to the severall Presbyteries from the Commissioners of this Generall Assembly, who shall also take speciall care for the timeous printing of this Directory, that a printed copy of it be provided and kept for the use of every kirk in this kingdome; also that each Presbyterie have a printed copy thereof for their use, and take speciall notice of the observation or neglect thereof in every congregation within their bounds, and make known the same to the Provinciaall or Generall Assembly, as there shall be cause. Provided alwayes, that the clause in the Directory, of the administration of the Lord's Supper, which mentioneth the communicants sitting about the table, or at it, be not interpreted, as if in the judgement of this Kirk it were indifferent and free for any of the communicants not to come to and receive at the table; or as if we did approve the distributing of the elements by the minister to each communicant, and not by the communicants among themselves. It is also provided, that this shall be no prejudice to the order and practice of this Kirk in such particulars as are appointed by the Books of Discipline and Acts of Generall Assemblies, and are not otherwise ordered and appointed in the Directory.

Finally, the Assembly doth, with much joy and thankfulnes, acknowledge the rich blessing and invaluable mercy of God, in bringing the so much wished for uniformity in religion to such a happy period, that these kingdoms, once at so great distance in the form of worship, are now, by the blessing of God, brought to a neerer uniformity than any other reformed Kirks, which is unto us the return of our prayers, and a lightning of our eyes and reviving of our hearts, in the midst of our many sorrows and sufferings, a taking away in a great measure the reproach of the people of God, to the stopping of the mouthes of malignant and disaffected persons, and an opening unto us a door of hope, that God hath yet thoughts of peace towards us, and not of evill, to give us an expected end. In the expectation and confidence whereof we do rejoyce, beseeching the Lord to preserve these kingdomes from heresies, schismes, offences, prophanesse, and whatsoever is contrary to sound doctrine and the power of godlinesse, and to continue with us, and the generations following, these his pure and purged ordinances, together with an increase of the power and life thereof, to the glory of his great name, the enlargement of the kingdom of his Son, the corroboration of peace and love between the kingdoms, the unity and consent of all his people, and our edifying one another in love.

Sess. 14, February 7, 1645, post meridiem.—Overtures for advancement of Learning, and good Order in Grammar Schools and Colledges.

I. That every grammar school be visited twice in the year by visitors, to be appointed by the Presbyterie and Kirk-session in landward parishes, and by the town-councill in burghs, with their ministers; and where universities are, by the universities, with consent alwayes of the patrons of the school, that both the fidelitie and diligence of the masters, and the proficiencie of the schollers in pietie and learning may appear, and deficiencie censured accordingly; and that the visitors see that the masters be not distracted by any other employments which may divert them from their diligent attendance.

II. That for the remedie of the great decay of poesie, and of abilitie to make verse, and in respect of the common ignorance of prosodie, no schoolmaster be admitted to teach a grammar school, in burghs or other considerable paroches, but such as after examination shall be found skilfull in the Latine tongue, not only for prose, but also for verse; and that after other trials to be made by the ministers, and others depute by the Session, town, and paroch for this effect, that he be also approved by the Presbyterie.

III. That neither the Greek language nor logick, nor any part of philosophie, be taught in any grammar school or private place within this kingdom to young schollers, who thereafter are to enter to any colledge, unlesse it be for a preparation to their entrie there; and, notwithstanding of any progresse any may pretend to have made privately in these studies, yet, in the colledge he shall not enter to any higher classe then that wherein the Greek language is taught, and being entred shall proceed orderly through the rest of the classes, untill he finish the ordinary course of four years; unlesse after due triall and examination, he be found equall in learning to the best or most part of that classe to which he desires to ascend, by overleaping a mid classe, or to the best or most part of those who are to be graduat, if he supplicate to obtain any degree before the ordinary time; and also, that there be found other pregnant reasons to move the Faculty of Arts to condescend thereto. And otherwise, that he be not admitted to the degree of Master of Arts.

IV. That none be admitted to enter a student of the Greek tongue in any colledge, unlesse after triall he be found able to make a congruous theame in Latine; or at least, being admonished of his errour, can readily shew how to correct the same.

V. That none be promoted from an inferiour classe of the ordinary course to a superiour, unlesse he be found worthy, and to have sufficiently profited; otherwise, that he be ordained not to ascend with his condisciples, and if he be a burser, that he lose his burse; and namely, it is to be required, that those who are taught in Aristotle be found well instructed in his text, and be able to repeat in Greek, and understand his whole definitions, divisions, and principall precepts, so far as they have proceeded.

VI. Because it is a disgrace to learning, and hinderance to trades and other callings, and an abuse hurtfull to the publick, that such as are ignorant and unworthy be honoured with a degree or publick testimony of learning; that, therefore, such triall be taken of students, specially of magistrands, that those who are found unworthy be not admitted to the degree and honour of Masters.

VII. That none who have entred to one colledge for triall or studie be admitted to another colledge, without the testimoniall of the masters of that colledge wherein he entred first, both concerning his literature and dutifull behaviour, so long as he remained there; at least untill the masters of that colledge from whence he cometh timely advertised, that they may declare if they have any thing lawfully to be objected in the contrary. And that none be admitted, promoted, or receive degree in any colledge, who was rejected in another colledge for his unfitness and unworthinesse, or any other cause repugnant to good order, who leaves the colledge where he was, for eschewing of censure, or chastising for any fault committed by him; or who leaves the colledge because he was chastised, or for any other grudge or unjust quarrell against his masters.

VIII. That none of those who may be lawfully received in one colledge, after he was in another, be admitted to any other classe, but to that wherein he was or should have been in the colledge from whence he came, except upon reasons mentioned in the third article preceding.

IX. That at the time of every General Assembly, the Commissioners directed thereto from all the universities of this kingdom meet and consult together for the establishment and advancement of pietie, learning, and good order, in the schools and universities, and be carefull that a correspondence be kept among the universities, and so farre as is possible an uniformitie in doctrine and good order.

The Generall Assembly, after serious consideration of the Overtures and Articles above written, approves the same, and ordains them to be observed, and to have the strength of an act and ordinance of Assembly in all time coming.

To the Honourable and High Court of Parliament, The humble Petition of the Generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland.

According to the constant and commendable practice of the Generall Assemblies of this Kirk, we judge it incumbent to us, Right Honourable, when the displeasure of the Almighty, and the extream danger of this Kirk and kingdome is so undenyably demonstrate to the eyes of the whole world, by the invasion, increase, and succeſſe of these barbarous Irishes, and treacherous countrey men joyned with them; not onely out of conscience of the trust committed unto us, to proceed with the censures of the Kirk against these who have joyned or shall happen to joyn themselves with these enemies of God and his cause, to appoint a solemne fast and humiliation through the kingdom, and to give warning to all the ministers and members of this Kirk of the dangers and duties of the time; but also, out of respect to your Honours, “who judge not for man, but for the Lord; who is with you in the judgement, and standeth in the congregation of the mighty,” humbly to present your Honours with our thoughts and desires concerning the duties which the exigency of this time expecteth from your hands.

The impunity of known incendiaries and malignants, as, by the course of Divine Providence, (permitting those who have formerly escaped the hand of justice to be the prime instruments of our present troubles,) it is held forth for a cause of the wrath which yet burneth more and more; so hath it been acknowledged before God, in our publick humiliations, to be a maine cause of God’s controversie with the land, and an accession to the guiltinesse of the cruelty, villany, and other mischiefs committed by them and their followers; and to lye still under the guilt after solemne confession were an high provocation of God, and an heavy aggravation of our sinne; and, on the one part, doth grieve the godly, discourage their hearts, and weaken their hands; on the other part, doth harden them who are already engaged, to persist in their unnaturall and bloody practices—heartneth others, who have not hitherto avowed their malignancy, openly to declare themselves—and is laid hold upon by the disaffected, who lye in wait to finde occasion, as fitting to work the people to an unwillingnesse of undergoing necessary burthens imposed for publick good.

Although the Lord hath shewn unto us great and sore troubles, and our heart may be broken with reproach, shame, and dishonour, put upon us by the vilest among men; yet hath he made known unto us the power of his working amidst these manifold troubles, bringing forward the much desired work of uniformity in worship and government to a greater perfection then was expected, (as your Honours and we did see the other day with joy of heart,) which is a testimony from heaven, that the Lord hath not left us in the fiery furnace, but dwelleth still in the midst of the burning bush, and should rouze up our drouping spirits to follow God fully, and quicken our slownesse to hasten and “help the Lord against the mighty.” In delay, there is perill of strengthening the arme of the intestine enemy, making faint the hearts of our neighbours and friends, and disabling us for reaching help unto those who are wrestling, against much opposition, to perfect the work of reformation. The reproach under which we lye almost buried, should be so farre from retarding proceedings, that it should intend the spirit into a higher degree of desire, and expedite the hand to speedier action for vindicating our own name, and “that Name which is above all names,” from the daily “reproach of the foolish.”

May it therefore please your Honours, in the zeal of the Lord, to proceed with some speedy course of justice against such persons as are known to have joyned themselves, either actually in arms, or by their counsell, supplies, encouragements, have strengthened the hands of the bloody enemies, whereby a cause of the controversie shall be removed, the land cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, the cruell and crooked generation disheartned, the fainting hearts of the godly refreshed, and their feeble knees strengthened; and cheerfully and unanimously to resolve upon, and put in execution, all lawfull and possible wayes of speedy and active pursuing and extirpating these barbarous and unnaturall enemies within the kingdom; whereby your thankfulness to God for promoting his owne work, and your endeavours of uniformity, shall be testified—your sense of the dishonour of this nation, and of the danger of delay expressed—and your conscience of the oath of God upon you manifested. We are confident of your Honours’ conscience and care, onely we exhort you in the Lord to unite your spirits, and accelerate your counsels and endeavours; and pray the Lord of Hosts to prosper your enterprises, according to the engagement of his name, interest of his work, and necessity of his people, to his own glory, the establishment of the King’s throne in righteousness, the comfort of his saints, and the conversion or confusion of enemies. “Be of good courage, and behave your selves valiantly, for our people, and for the cities of our God.” “Arise, and the Lord be with you.”

Overtures propounded by the Committee appointed by this Venerable Assembly, for ordering of the Bursars of Theologie, and maintaining of them at the Schools of Divinitie.

I. That every bursar have yearly payed him for his maintenance L.100 at the least.

II. That the said maintenance be taken forth of the Kirk penalties, according to the intention of the first act for maintaining of bursars.

III. That every Presbyterie, consisting of twelve kirks in number, maintain a bursar yearly at the University.

IV. And where the Presbyteries are fewer in number, that they joyn with other Presbyteries, to make up their number; and the superplus of the number to be ordered and disposed by the Presbyteries and Synods; and that their books bear records thereof.

V. That the Kirks of these Presbyteries be proportionally stented, according to the number of the Communicants in each Parochin.

VI. That the said maintenance be collected by the Moderatour of every Presbyterie by equall divided portions, and the one-half to be brought into the Winter Synod, and given to the said bursars, and the other half at the Summer Synod, to be sent unto them; and that the severall Synods take an exact compt hereof, and see that all be rightly done, and that their books bear the report hereof to the Generall Assembly.

VII. That the time of bursars’ abode at the Schools of Divinity exceed not foure years; which being expired, or in case before the expiring of the said time any be removed, either by death, or by some calling to a particular charge, another be presented to the said benefit.

VIII. That in case any prove deficient in payment of the said maintenance for the time to come, that it shall be carefully exacted by the Synods, and sent over to the Generall Assembly, to be disposed upon by them as they shall finde expedient, that no person may have benefit in their slacknesse and neglect.

IX. That all bursars of Theologie bring sufficient testimonies yearly from the Universities where they are bred, of their proficiencie and good behaviour; and that they be also ready to give a proof of their labours at the severall Synods, if it shall be required. And if they be found deficient, that they be denuded of the said benefit, and others more hopefull placed in their rooms.

The Generall Assembly approves these Overtures above written, and ordains the same to be observed in all time coming. And that Presbyteries (who have not already done it) begin and enter to the maintaining of their bursars, in manner foresaid, in this present year 1645. And recommends to Presbyteries to make choice of such for the burse as are of good report, inclined to learning, and have past their course of Philosophie; and to try their qualification before they send them to the Universities.

The Opinion of the Committee for keeping the greater Uniformitie in this Kirk, in the practice and observation of the Directory in some Points of Publick Worship.

I. It is the humble opinion of the Committee for regulating that exercise of reading and expounding the Scriptures read upon the Lord's day, mentioned in the Directory, that the Minister and people repair to the Kirk half an hour before that time at which ordinarily the Minister now entreth to the publick worship; and that that exercise of reading and expounding, together with the ordinary exercise of preaching, be perfected and ended at the time which formerly closed the exercise of publick worship.

II. In the administration of Baptisme it will be convenient that that sacrament be administred in face of the Congregation, that what is spoken and done may be heard and seen of all, and that it be administred after the sermon, before the blessing.

III. In the administration of the Lord's Supper it is the judgement of the Committee:—

1. That congregations be still tried and examined before the communion, according to the bygone practice of this Kirk.

2. That there be no reading in the time of communicating, but the minister making a short exhortation at every table, that thereafter there be silence during the time of the communicants' receiving, except onely when the minister expresseth some few short sentences, suitable to the present condition of the communicants in the receiving, that they may be incited and quickned in their meditations in the action.

3. That distribution of the elements among the communicants be universally used; and for that effect, that the bread be so prepared that the communicants may divide it amongst themselves, after the minister hath broken and delivered it to the nearest.

4. That while the tables are dissolving and filling there be always singing of some portion of a Psalm, according to the custome.

5. That the communicants both before their going to, and after their coming from the table, shall only joyne themselves to the present publick exercise then in hand.

6. That when the communion is to be celebrate in a paroch, one minister may be employed for assisting the minister of the paroch, or at the most two.

7. That there be one sermon of preparation delivered in the ordinary place of publick worship upon the day immediatly preceding.

8. That before the serving of the tables there be only one sermon delivered to those who are to communicate, and that in the kirk where the service is to be performed. And that in the same kirk there be one sermon of thanksgiving after the communion is ended.

9. When the parochiners are so numerous that their paroch kirk cannot contain them, so that there is a necessity to keep out such of the paroch as cannot conveniently have place, that in that case the brother who assists the minister of the paroch may be ready, if need be, to give a word of exhortation in some convenient place appointed for that purpose, to those of the paroch who that day are not to communicate; which must not be begun untill the sermon delivered in the kirk be concluded.

10. That of those who are present in the kirk where the communion is celebrate none be permitted to go forth whill the whole tables be served and the blessing pronounced, unlesse it be for more commodious order, and in other cases of necessity.

11. That the minister who cometh to assist have a speciall care to provide his own paroch, lest, otherwise, while he is about to minister comfort to others his own flock be left destitute of preaching.

12. That none coming from another paroch shall be admitted to the communion without a testimoniall from their own minister; and no minister shall refuse a testimoniall to any of his paroch who communicates ordinarily at their own paroch kirk, and are without scandall in their life for the time. And this is no wayes to prejudice any honest person, who occasionally is in the place where the communion is celebrate; or such as by death, or absence of their own minister, could not have a testimoniall.

IV. It is also the judgement of the committee, that the ministers bowing in the pulpit, though a lawful custome in this Kirk, be hereafter laid aside, for satisfaction of the desires of the reverend Divines in the Synod of England, and for uniformity with that Kirk, so much endeared to us.

The Assembly, having considered seriously the judgement of the committee above written, doth approve the same in all the articles thereof, and ordains them to be observed in all time hereafter.

Sess. 16, February 10, 1645, post meridiem.—Act of the Generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, approving the Propositions concerning Kirk Government and Ordination of Ministers.

The Generall Assembly, being most desirous and solicitous, not only of the establishment and preservation of the form of kirk government in this kingdome, according to the Word of God, Books of Discipline, Acts of Generall Assemblies, and Nationall Covenant, but also of an uniformity in kirk government betwixt these kingdomes, now more straitly and strongly united by the late Solemne League and Covenant; and considering, that as in former times there did, so hereafter there may arise, through the neernesse of contagion, manifold mischiefs to this Kirk from a corrupt form of government in the Kirk of England: Likeas the precious opportunity of bringing the Kirks of Christ, in all the three kingdoms, to an uniformity in kirk government, being the happinesse of the present times above the former; which may also, by the blessing of God, prove an effectuall meane, and a good foundation to prepare for a safe and well-grounded pacification, by removing the cause from which the present pressures and bloodie wars did originally proceed. And now, the Assembly having thrice read, and diligently examined the propositions (heremto annexed) concerning the Officers, Assemblies, and Government of the Kirk; and concerning the Ordination of Ministers, brought unto us as the results of the long and learned debates of the Assembly of Divines sitting at Westminster, and of the treaty of uniformity with the Commissioners of this Kirk there residing; after mature deliberation, and after tymous calling upon, and warning of all who have any exceptions against the same, to make them known, that they might receive satisfaction, doth Agree to, and Approve the propositions aforementioned, touching kirk government and ordination; and doth hereby authorize the Commissioners of this Assembly, who are to meet at Edinburgh, to agree to and conclude, in the name of this Assembly, an uniformitie betwixt the Kirks in both kingdoms in the aforementioned particulars, so soon as the same shall be ratified, without any substantiall alteration, by an ordinance of the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England; which ratification shall be timely intimate and made known by the Commissioners of this Kirk residing at London. Provided alwayes, that this act shall be no wayes prejudiciall to the further discussion and examination of that Article which holds forth, that the Doctor or Teacher hath power of the administration of the Sacraments as well as the Pastor; as also of the distinct rights and interests of Presbyteries and People in the Calling of Ministers—but that it shall be free to debate and discusse these points, as God shall be pleased to give further light.

The propositions of Government and Ordination, mentioned in the preceding act, are not to be here printed; but after the ratification thereof by the Parliament of England, they are to be printed by warrant of the Commissioners of this Assembly.

Sess. 18, February 12, 1645, post meridiem.

The Generall Assembly, after mature deliberation, having found it most necessary that this whole nation be timely warned and duly informed of their present dangers, and the remedies to be used, and duties to be done, for preventing and removing thereof; doth ordain this Warning to be forthwith printed and published, and sent to all the Presbyteries in this kingdom, as also to the Presbyteries that are with our armies. —And that each Presbyterie, immediately after the receipt hereof, take speedy course for the reading of it in every congregation within their bounds, upon the Lord's day, after the forenoon's sermon, and before the blessing; and that they give account of their diligence herein to the Commissioners of the Generall Assembly, who have hereby power and warrant to try and censure such as shall contemne or slight the said Warning, or shall refuse or neglect to obey this ordinance.

A Solemne and Seasonable Warning to the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burrows, Ministers, and Commons of Scotland; as also to our Armies without and within this Kingdom.

The cause of God in this kingdom, both in the beginnings and progresse of it, hath been carried through much craft and mighty opposition of enemies, and through other perplexities and dangers, God so disposing, for the greater glory of his manifold and marvellous wisdom and his invincible power, and for our greater tryall.

These dangers, both from without and from within, together with the remedies thereof, have been from time to time represented and held forth, in the many publick supplications of this Kirk and kingdom to the King, and in their many declarations, remonstrances, letters, acts, and other publick intimations; particularly, by a necessary Warning published by the Commissioners of the Generall Assembly in January 1643; and by the remonstrance of the same commissioners to the Convention of Estates in July thereafter, concerning the dangers of religion, and the remedies of these dangers; which warning and remonstrance at that time had, by the blessing of God, very good and comfortable effects. And now, the Generall Assembly itself, being by a speciall providence, and upon extraordinary occasions, called together, while God is writing bitter things against this land in great letters, which he that runs may read—and knowing that we cannot be answerable to God nor our own consciences, nor the expectation of others, if from this chief watch-tower we should give no seasonable warning to the city of God; while we think of these things, “for Sion's sake we will not hold our peace, and for Jerusalem's sake we will not rest;” trusting that God will give, though not to all, yet to many, a seeing eye, a hearing ear, and an understanding heart; for “who is wise, and he shall understand these things, prudent, and he shall know them; for the ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them; but the transgressors shall fall therein,” and “the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand.”

That which we principally intend, is to hold forth (so farre as the Lord gives us light) how this nation ought to be affected with their present mercies and judgements; what use is to be made of the Lord's dealings, and what is required of a people so dealt with.

Had we been timely awaked, and taken warning, either from the exemplary judgements of other nations, or from God's threatnings by the mouths of his servants amongst our selves; or from our owne former visitations, and namely, the sword, threatened and drawn against us, both at home and from abroad, but at that time, through the forbearance of God, put up in the sheath again, we might have prevented the miseries under which now we groane. But the cup of trembling before taken out of our hands, is again come about to us, that wee may drink deeper of it; and although, when these bloody monsters, the Irish rebels, together with some degenerate, unnaturall, and perfidious countrey-men of our own, did first lift up their heads, and enter this kingdome in a hostile way, it was looked upon as a light matter, and the great judgement which hath since appeared in it, not apprehended; yet now we are made more sensible, that they are "the rod of God's wrath, and the staffe in their hand," which hath stricken us these three times, is "his indignation." He "hath shewed his people hard things, and made us to drink the wine of astonishment." Take we, therefore, notice of the hand that smiteth us; "for affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground. There is no evil in the city" nor countrey "which the Lord hath not done;" he it is that "formeth the light, and createth darknesse; who maketh peace, and createth evil;" he it is that hath given a charge to the sword, "so that it cannot be still;" he it is that hath his other "arrows ready upon the string to shoot at us," the pestilence and famine.

In the next place, let us apply our hearts to know, and to search, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things, and to understand the language of this present judgment, and God's meaning in it; for though the Almighty "giveth not an accompt of any of his matters," and hath "his way in the sea, and his path in the deep waters," which cannot be traced; yet he is pleased, by the light of his Word and Spirit, by the voice of our own consciences, and by that which is written and ingraven upon our judgement, as with the point of a diamond and a pen of iron, to make known in some measure his meaning unto his servants. "God hath spoken once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth not;" therefore, now hath he made this rod to speak aloud the third time, that we may "hear the voice of the rod, and who hath appointed it;" that which the rod pointeth at is not any guilt of rebellion or disloyaltie in us, as the sons of Belial do slander and belye the Solemne League and Covenant of the three kingdoms, which we are so farre from repenting of, that we cannot remember or mention it without great joy and thankfulness to God, as that which hath drawn many blessings after it, and unto which God hath given manifold and evident testimonies; for no sooner was the Covenant begun to be taken in England, but sensibly the condition of affairs there was changed to the better; and though a little before, the enemy was coming in like a flood, yet as soon as the Spirit of the Lord did lift up the standard against him, from that day forward the waters of their deluge did decrease.

And for our part, our forces sent into that kingdom, in pursuance of that Covenant, have been so mercifully and manifestly assisted and blessed from heaven, (though in the mids of many dangers and distresses, and much want and hardship,) and have been so farre instrumentall to the foyling and scattering of two principall armies; first, the Marquesse of Newcastle his army; and afterward, Prince Rupert's and his together; and to the reducing of two strong cities, York and Newcastle, that we have what to answer the enemy that reproacheth us concerning that businesse, and that which may make iniquitie it self to stop her mouth. But which is more unto us than all victories, or whatsoever temporall blessing, the reformation of religion in England, and uniformity therein between both kingdoms, (a principal end of that Covenant,) is so far advanced, that the English Service-Book, with the Holy-Dayes, and many other ceremonies contained in it, together with the Prelacy, the fountain of all these, are abolished, and taken away by ordinance of Parliament, and a Directory for the Worship of God in all the three kingdoms agreed upon in the Assemblies, and in the Parliaments of both kingdoms, without a contrary voice in either; the government of the Kirk by Congregational Elderships, Classical Presbyteries, Provincial and National Assemblies, is agreed upon by the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, which is also voted and concluded in both Houses of the Parliament of England: And what is yet remaining of the intended uniformitie is in a good way; so that, let our lot fall in other things as it may, "the will of the Lord be done." In this we rejoyce, and will rejoyce, that our Lord Jesus Christ is no loser, but a conquerour; that his ordinances take place, that his cause prevaieth, and the work of purging and building his temple goeth forward, and not backward. Neither yet are we so to understand the "voice of the rod" which lyeth heavy upon us, as if the Lord's meaning were to pluck up what he hath planted, and to pull down what he hath builded in this kingdom, to have no more pleasure in us, to remove our candlestick, and to take his kingdom from us; nay, before that our God cast us off, and the "glory depart from Israel," let him rather consume us by the sword, and the famine, and the pestilence, so that he will but keep his own great name from reproach and blasphemy, and own us as his people in covenant with him. But "now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing," we will believe "that we shall yet see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living:" We will not cast away our confidence of a blessed peace, and of the removing of the scourge and casting it in the fire, when the Lord hath by it performed "his whole work upon Mount Sion and Jerusalem," much more will we be confident of the continuance of the blessings of the Gospel, "that glory may dwell in our land." "This is the day of Jacob's trouble, but he shall be saved out of it:" And the time is coming, when a new song shall be put in our mouths, and we shall say, "This is our God; we have waited for him, and he hath saved us." Though the Lord smite us, it is the hand of a father, not of an enemy; he is not consuming us, but refining us, that we may come forth as gold out of the fire. "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast downe, but not destroyed." We know assuredly there is more mercy in emptying us from vessel to vessel, then in suffering us to settle on our lees, whereby our taste should remain in us, and our sent not be changed.

These things premised, we come to the true language of this heavy judgement, and to the reall procuring causes thereof. "For the transgression of Jacob is all this, and for the sins of the house of Israel." God is hereby shewing to great and small in this land their work and their transgression, that they have exceeded. "He openeth also their care to discipline, and commandeth that they return from iniquity." We leave every congregation in the land, every family in every congregation, and every person in every family, to examine their own hearts and wayes, and to mourn for congregation-all, domesticall, and personall sinnes: Cursed shall they be who have added fuel to the fire, and now bring no water to extinguish it, who had a great hand in the provocation, and bear no part in the humiliation.

Let every one commune with his own conscience, and repent of his, even his wickednesse, and say, What have I done? We shall here touch only the nationall sinnes, or at least more publick ones then those of a family or congregation, which we also intend for chief causes of a publick fast and humiliation. If, among our nobles, gentic, and barons, there have been some studying their own private interests more then the publick, and "seeking their own things more then the things of Christ, or oppressing and defrauding the poorer sort and the needie, because it was in the power of their hand;" and if, among our ministrie there have been divers time-servers, "who have not renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, whose hearts have not been right before God, nor stedfast in his Covenant," who have been secretly haters of the power of godlinesse, and of mortification; shall not God search all this out? "who will bring to light the hidden things of darknesse, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts." In these also leaving all men to a judging and searching of themselves, there are many other provocations which are apparent in all or many of this nation, from which, "though they wash with nitre, and take much sope," yet they cannot make themselves clean. "Because of these the land mourneth," and at these the sword striketh.

As, first, The contempt, neglect, and disesteem of the glorious Gospel; our unbelief, unfruitfulness, lukewarmnesse, formality, and hardnesse of heart, under all the means of grace; our not receiving of Christ in our hearts, nor seeking to know him and glorifie him in all his offices. The power of godlinesse is hated and mocked by many to this day, and by the better sort too much neglected, and many Christian duties are not minded; as, "the not speaking of our own words, nor finding of our own pleasure upon the Lord's day;" holy and edifying conference, both on that day, and at other occasions; the instructing, admonishing, comforting, and rebuking one another, as Divine Providence ministreth occasion. In many families, almost no knowledge nor worship of God to be found; yea, there are among the ministers who have strengthened the hearts and hands of the profane more then of the godly, and have not taken "heed to the ministrie which they have received of the Lord to fulfill it."

Next, God hath sent the sword to avenge the quarrell of his broken Covenant; for, besides the defection of many of this nation under the Prelats from our first nationall Covenant, a sinne not forgotten by God, if not repented by men as well as forsaken; our latter vows and Covenants have been also foully violated, by not contributing our uttermost assistance to this cause, with our estates and lives; by not endeavouring with all faithfulness, the discovery, triall, and condigne punishment of Malignants and evil instruments; yea, by complying too much with those who have not onely born armes, and given their personall presence and assistance, but also drawn and led on others after them in the shedding of our brethren's blood; therefore is our sinne made our punishment, and "we are filled with the fruit of our own wayes." These horns now push the sides of Judah and Jerusalem, because the carpenters, when they ought and might, did not cut them off; and yet to this day the course of justice is obstructed. The Lord himself will execute justice if men will not. But, above all, let it be deeply and seriously thought of, that our Covenant is broken by the neglect of a reall reformation of our selves and others under our power; let every one ask his own heart what lust is mortified in him, or what change wrought in his life since, more then before the Covenant? Swearing, cursing, profanation of the Lord's day, fornication, and other uncleannesse, drunkennesse, injustice, lying, oppression, murmuring, repining, and other sorts of prophanesse, still abound too much both in the country and in our armies; yea, there is no reformation of some members of publick judicatories, which is a great dishonour to God, and a foul scandall to the whole nation.

Thirdly, We have not glorified God according to the great things which he hath done for us, nor made the right use of former mercies; since he loved us, (a nation not worthy to be beloved,) he hath made us precious and honourable, but we have not walked worthy of his love: We "waxed fat and kicked," "forsaking God who made us, and lightly esteeming the rock of our salvation." And this great unthankfulness filleth up our cup.

Fourthly, Notwithstanding of so much guiltinesse, we did send forth our armies, and undertake great services presumptuously, without repentance, and making our peace with God, like the Children of Israel, who, trusting to the goodness of their cause, minded no more, but "which of us shall goe up first."

It is now high time, under the feeling of so great a burden, both of sinne and wrath, to humble our uncircumcised hearts, to put our mouth in the dust, if so be there may be hope, to wallow our selves in ashes, to clothe our selves with our shame as with a garment; to justifie God's righteous judgements, to acknowledge our iniquitie, to make our supplication to our Judge, and to seek his face, that he may pardon our sinne, and heal our land. The Lord roareth, and shall not his children tremble? The God of glory thundereth, and "the Highest uttereth his voice, hailstones and coales of fire;" who will not fall down and fear before him? The fire waxeth hot, and burneth round about us, and shall any sit still and be secure? The storm bloweth hard, and shall any sluggard be still asleep? This is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of blasphemy; who will not take up a lamentation? Let the watchmen rouze up themselves and others, and strive to get their own and their people's hearts deeply affected, and even melted before the Lord: Let every one turn from his evill way, and cry mightily to God, and give him no rest till he repent of the evill, and smell a savour of rest, and say, "It is enough." He hath not said to the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me in vain. Wee do not mourne as they that have no hope, but we "will bear the indignation of the Lord, because wee have sinned against him, untill he plead our cause, and execute judgement for us." And what though our candles be put out? so that our sun shine: What though our honour be laid in the dust? so that God work out his own honour, yea, our happinesse out of our shame. In vain have we trusted to the arm of flesh; in the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel. No flesh must glory before him, but "he that glorieth must glory in the Lord."

These duties of humiliation, repentance, faith, amendment of life, and fervent prayer, though the principall, yet are not all which are required at the hands of this nation, but men of all sorts and degrees must timely apply themselves to such other resolutions and actions, as are most suteable and necessary at this time; which that all may the better understand, and be excited and encouraged to act accordingly, let it be well observed, that the present state of the controversie and cause is no other but what hath been formerly professed before God and the world, that is, the reformation and preservation of religion, the defence of the honour and happinesse of the King, and of the authority of the Parliament, together with the maintenance of our lawes, liberties, lives, and estates. We are not changed from our former principles and intentions, but these who did fall off from us to the contrary party have now made it manifest, that these were not their ends when they seemed to joyn with us; "Therefore are they gone out from us, because they were not of us." And as our cause is the same, so the danger thereof is not lesse, but greater then before, and that from two sorts of enemies. First, from open enemies, we mean those of the Popish, Prelaticall, and Malignant faction, who have displayed a banner against the Lord and against his Christ in all the three kingdoms, being "set on fire of hell," and by the speciall inspiration of Satan, who is full of fury, because he knowes he hath but a short time to reigne. The cockatrice before hatched is now broken forth into a viper. The danger was before feared, now it is felt—before imminent, now incumbent—before our division, now our destruction is endeavoured—before the sword was fourbished and made ready, now the sword "is made fat with flesh, and drunk with blood," and yet it hungreth and thirsteth for more. The Queen is most active abroad, using all means for strengthening the Popish, and suppressing the Protestant party; insomuch, that Malignants have insolently expressed their confidence, that her journey to France shall prove a successfull counsell, and that this island, and particularly this kingdome, shall have a greater power to grapple with, before the next summer, then any which yet we have encountred with. The Irish rebels have offered to the King to send over a greater number into both the kingdomes. The hostile intentions of the King of Denmark, if God be not pleased still to divert and disable him, do plainly enough appear from his own letters, sent not long since to the estates of this kingdome. In the mean time, the hellish crue, under the conduct of the excommunicate and forefaulted Earle of Montrose, and of Alaster MacDonald, a Papist and an outlaw, doth exercise such barbarous, unnaturall, horrid, and unheard of cruelty, as is above expression; and (if not repressed) what better usage can others, not yet touched, expect from them, being now hardened and animated by the successe which God hath, for our humiliation and correction, permitted unto them; and if they shall now get leave to secure the Highlands for themselves, they will not onely from thence infest the rest of this countrey, but endeavour a diversion of our forces in England, from the prosecution of the ends expressed in the Covenant of the three kingdoms, toward which ends, as their service hath been already advantageous, so their continuance is most necessary.

The second sort of enemies from which our present dangers arise, are secret Malignants and Dis-Covenanters, who may be known by these and the like characters—their slighting or censuring of the Publick Resolutions of this Kirk and State—their consulting and labouring to raise jealousies and divisions, to retard or hinder the execution of what is ordered by the publick judicatories—their slandering of the Covenant of the three kingdomes, and expedition into England, as not necessary for the good of religion or safety of this kingdome, or as tending to the diminution of the King's just power and greatnesse—their confounding of the King's honour and authority, with the abuse and pretence thereof, and with commissions, warrants, and letters, procured from the King by the enemies of this cause and Covenant, as if we could not oppose the latter without encroaching upon the former—their whetting of their tongues to censure and slander those whom God hath honoured as his chief instruments in this work—their commending, justifying, or excusing the proceedings of James Grahame, some time Earle of Montrose, and his complices—their conversing or intercommuning, by word or writ, with him, or other excommunicate Lords, contrary to the nature of that ordinance of Christ, and to the old Acts of Generall Assemblies—their making merry, and their insolent carriage, at the news of any prosperous successe of the Popish and Malignant armies in any of these kingdomes—their drawing of parties and factions, to the weakning of the common union—their spreading of informations that uniformitie in religion and the presbyteriall government is not intended by the Parliament of England—their endeavours, informations, and solicitations, tending to weaken the hearts and hands of others, and to make them withhold their assistance from this work.

Let this sort of bosome enemies, and disaffected persons, be well marked, timely discovered, and carefully avoided, lest they infuse the poyson of their seducing counsels into the mindes of others; wherein let ministers be faithfull, and Presbyteries vigilant and impartial, as they will answer the contrary to God, and to the Generall Assembly, or their commissioners.

The cause and the dangers thereof being thus evidenced, unlesse men will blot out of their hearts the love of religion and the cause of God, and cast off all care of their countrey, lawes, liberties, and estates, yea, all naturall affection to the preservation of themselves, their wives, children, and friends, and whatsoever is dearest to them under the sun, (all these being in the visible danger of a present ruine and destruction,) they must now or never appear actively, each one stretching himself to, yea, beyond his power. It is no time to dally, nor go about the businesse by halffes, nor by almost, but altogether zealous: "Cursed be he that doth the work of the Lord negligently, or dealeth falsly in the Covenant of God." If we have been so forward to assist our neighbour kingdomes, shall we neglect to defend our own? Or shall the enemies of God be more active against his cause than his people for it? God forbid. If the work, being so far carried on, shall now miscarry and fail in our hands, our own consciences shall condemne us, and posterity shall curse us; but if we stand stoutly and stedfastly to it, the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in our hands, and all generations shall call us blessed.

Let ministers stir up others, by free and faithfull preaching, and by admonishing every one of his duty, as there shall be occasion; and if it shall be the lot of any of them to fall under the power of the enemy, let them, through the strength of Christ, persevere in their integrity, choosing affliction rather than sin, glorifying God, and not fearing what flesh can do unto them.

Let our armies beware of ungodlinesse and worldly lusts, living godly, soberly, and righteously, avoyding all scandalous carriage, which may give occasion to others to think the worse of their cause and Covenant; and remembering that the eyes of God, angels, and men, are upon them: Finally, renouncing all confidence in their own strength, skill, valour, and number, and trusting only to the "God of the armies of Israel," who hath fought, and will fight for them.

Let all sorts, both of high and low degree in this kingdome, call to minde their Solemne Covenants, and pay their vows to the Most High; and, namely, that article of our first Covenant, which obligeth us not to stay nor hinder any such resolution as by common consent shall be found to conduce for the ends of the Covenant, but by all lawfull means to further and promote the same; which lyeth as a bond upon people's consciences, readily to obey such orders, and willingly to undergo such burdens as by the publick and common resolution of the Estates of Parliament are found necessary for the prosecution of the war; considering that the enemy cannot be suppressed without a competent number of forces, and forces cannot be kept together without maintenance, and maintenance cannot be had without such publick burdens; which, however, for the present not joyous but grievous, yet it shall be no grief of heart afterwards, even unto the common sort, that they have given some part of their necessary livelihood for assisting so good a work. It is far from our thoughts that the pinching of some should make others superfluously to abound. It is rather to be expected of the richer sort that they will spare and defalk, not only the pride and superfluity both of apparell and diet, but also a part of their lawfull allowance in these things, to contribute the same as a free-will offering, beside what they are obliged to by law or publick order, after the example of godly Nehemiah, who, for the space of twelve years, while the walls of Jerusalem were abuilding, did not eat the bread of the governour, that he might ease by so much the people's burthens and bondage.

In our last Covenant there is another article, which (without the oblivion or neglect of any of the rest) we wish may be well remembered at this time, namely, that we shall assist and defend all that enter into this League and Covenant, in the maintaining and pursuing thereof, and shall not suffer our selves, directly or indirectly, by whatsoever combination, perswasion, or terror, to be divided and withdrawne from this blessed union and conjunction, whether to make defection to the contrary part, or to give our selves to a detestable indifferency or neutrality in this cause: According to which article, men's reality and integrity in the Covenant will be manifest and demonstrable, as well by their omissions as by their commissions; as well by their not doing good as by their doing evil: "He that is not with us is against us, and he that gathereth not with us scattereth." Whoever he be that will not, according to publick order and appointment, adventure his person, or send out these that are under his power, or pay the contributions imposed for the maintenance of the forces, must be taken for an enemy, Malignant, and Covenant-breaker, and so involved both into the displeasure of God and censures of the Kirk, and no doubt into civil punishments also, to be inflicted by the State.

And if any shall prove so untoward and perfidious, their iniquitie shall be upon themselves, and they "shall bear their punishment." Deliverance and good successes shall follow those who, with purpose of heart, cleave unto the Lord, and whose hearts are upright toward his glory. When we look back upon the great things which God hath done for us, and our former deliverances out of several dangers and difficulties, which appeared to us insuperable, experience breeds hope; and when we consider, how, in the midst of all our sorrows and pressures, the Lord our God hath given us a naile in his holy place, and hath lightened our eyes with the desirable and beautiful sight of his own glory in his temple, we take it for an argument that he hath yet "thoughts of peace," and a purpose of merey toward us; "though for a small moment he hath forsaken us, yet with great mercies he will gather us." He hath lifted up our enemies, that their fall may be the greater, and that he may cast them downe into desolation for ever. Arise, and let us be doing; "the Lord of Hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge."

Act against Lykwakes.

Whereas the corrupt custome of lykwakes hath fostered both superstition and profanitie through the land, this present Assembly discharges the same in time coming; and appoints Presbyteries to take speciall care for trying and censuring the transgressors of this act within their severall bounds.

Act recommending to Sessions to have the printed Acts of Assemblie.

The Generall Assembly, considering how necessar it is that every session in a parish have the Acts of the Assembly for their use, doth therefore seriously recommend to every parish and session to buy the printed Acts of the Assembly: And ordains Presbyteries to crave account hereof from every minister, before their going to Provinciaall Assemblies: And likewise, that every Provinciaall Assembly crave account from Presbyteries in their trials, if every session be so provided, and that they try the diligence of Presbyteries and ministers used for that effect.

Sess. Ult., February 13, 1645, post meridiem.—Act for censuring the Observers of Yule-day, and other superstitious dayes, especially if they be Schollars.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their consideration the manifold abuses, profanitie, and superstitions, committed on Yule-day, and some other superstitious dayes following, have unanimously concluded, and hereby ordains, That whatsoever person or persons hereafter shall be found guilty in keeping of the foresaid superstitious dayes, shall be proceeded against by Kirk censures, and shall make their publick repentance therefor in the face of the congregation where the offence is committed: And that Presbyteries and Provinciaall Synods take particular notice how ministers try and censure delinquents of this kinde, within the severall parochines. And because schollars and students give great scandal and offence in this, that they (being found guilty) be severely disciplined and chastised therefor by their masters: And in case the masters of Schools or Colledges be accessorie to the said superstitious profanitie, by their connivance, granting of libertie of vacance to their schollars at that time, or any time thereafter, in compensation thereof, that the masters be summoned by the ministers of the place, to compeir before the next ensuing Generall Assembly, there to be censured according to their trespasse; and if schollars (being guilty) refuse to subject themselves to correction, or be fugitives from discipline, that they be not received in any other schoole or colledge within the kingdom.

Act for encouragement of Schollars to Professions in Schooles.

In respect of the paucitie of men fit and willing to professe Divinitie in the schooles, by reason that few frame their studies that way, the Generall Assembly thinks it fit, that the Provincials diligently consider and try who, within their bounds, most probably may be for a profession in the schooles, and report their names to the following Generall Assembly, that such may be stirred up and encouraged by the Generall Assembly to compose and frame their studies, that they may be fit for such places.

Act for restraining Abuses at Pennie Brydals.

The Generall Assembly, considering the great profanitie and severall abuses which usually fall forth at pennie brydals, proving fruitful seminaries of all lasciviousnesse and debaushtrie, as well by the excessive number of people conveened thereto, as by the extortion of them therein, and licentiousnesse thereat, to the great dishonour of God, the scandall of our Christian profession, and prejudice of the countrey's welfare: Therefore, they ordain every Presbyterie in this kingdome to take such speciall care for restraining these abuses flowing from the causes foresaid, as they shall think fit, in their severall bounds respectivè; and to take a strict accompt of every minister and session of their obedience to the ordinance of the Presbyterie thereanent, at the visitation of every parish kirk in their bounds.

Act discharging Deposed Ministers to be reponed to their former places.

The Generall Assembly, considering the manifold prejudices redounding to the Kirk in generall, and private congregations in particular, through the restoring of ministers once deposed to the same places wherein they formerly served; as also, how derogatorie it would prove to the weight of that sentence of deposition; Do therefore ordain, that no minister deposed shall be restored again into that place where formerly he served.

Renovation of the Commission for the Publick Affairs of the Kīrk.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their consideration that, in respect the great work of uniformitie in religion in all his Majestie's dominions is not yet perfected, (though by the Lord's blessing there is a good progresse made in the same,) there is a necessity of renewing the commissions granted formerly for prosecuting and perfecting that great work; doe, therefore, renew the power and commission granted for the publick affairs of the Kirk by the Generall Assembly, held in St Andrews in the year 1642, upon the fifth day of August, post meridiem, Sess. 12th; and by the Generall Assembly, held in Edinburgh in the year 1643, upon the 19th day of August, Sess. ult.; and by the late Generall Assembly, held at Edinburgh in the year 1644, upon the third of June, Sess. 6, to the persons afternamed, viz., Mr Andrew Ramsay, Mr Alexander Henderson, Mr Robert Douglas, Mr William Colvil, Mr William Bennet, Mr George Gillespie, Mr John Oswald, Mr Mungo Law, Mr Robert Lawrie, Mr John Adamson, Dr John Sharp, Mr George Leslie, Mr Andrew Fairfowle, Mr David Calderwood, Mr Andrew Blackhall, Mr James Fleeming, Mr Robert Ker, Mr John Macghie, Mr John Dalzell, Mr Andrew Stevenson, Mr Robert Lauder, Mr James Robertson, Mr Patrick Sibbald, Mr Robert Carson, Mr Alexander Spittal, Mr Alexander Dickison, Mr James Smith, Mr John Gibbison, Mr James Symson, Mr Ephraim Melvill, Mr Alexander Somervell, Mr Robert Eliot, Mr George Bennet, Mr Robert Blair, Mr David Forret, Mr Arthur Mortoun, Mr Samuel Renovation of the Commission to the Persons appointed to repair to the Kingdom of England for prosecuting the Treaty of Uniformitie in Religion.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their consideration that the treaty of uniformity in religion in all his Majestie's dominions is not yet perfected, though by the Lord's blessing there is a good progresse made in the same, Do, therefore, renew the power and commission granted to the persons formerly nominate by the two preceding Assemblies, and by their Commissioners sitting at Edinburgh, for prosecuting the said treatie of uniformitie with the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England, and the Reverend Assembly of Divines there, or any committees appointed by them; giving unto them full power to do all and every thing which may advance, perfect, and bring the said treatie to an happy conclusion, conforme to the former commissions granted to them thereanent.

Right Reverend, and welbeloved in the Lord Jesus,

Amidst the manifold troubles in which this kingdome hath been involved, and under which it still laboureth, we greatly rejoyced when it was testified unto us by our reverend brethren, and under your hands in your letter, and these papers by them presented to us from you, what progresse you had made in the much desired work of uniformitie; and acknowledge that the same hath comforted us concerning our work and toile of our hands, and seemeth to us as an olive branch, to prognosticate the abating of the waters which overflow the face of the earth.

When we consider that you have walked in pathes unusuall, which have not been haunted by travellers there as the publick way, though pointed out as the good old way by the reformed Kirks, we do not wonder that you have carefully adverted, in every step, to set foot upon sure ground. When we behold that strong and high tree of Episcopacie so deeply rooted by continuance of time, not lopped of the branches, and the "stumpe of the root left in the earth, with a band of iron and brasse," but pluckt up by the roots; we do confesse that the carpenters, though prepared, have a hard task, requiring time to hew it down and root it up. And when we call to minde how much the Service-Book hath been cryed up, as the only way of God's worship, how many thereby have had their wealth, and how difficill it is to forgoe the accustomed way, we admire the power and wisdom of the good God who hath prospered you in your way, and led you this length, through so many straits, and over so many difficulties, in so troublous a time.

We do for our part not only admit and allow, but most heartily and gladly embrace the Directory of Worship, as a common rule for the kirks of God in the three kingdoms, now more straitly and firmly united by the Solemne League and Covenant; and we do all, in one voice, blesse the Lord, who hath put it in the hearts, first, of the reverend, learned, and pious Assembly of Divines, and then of the Honourable Houses of Parliament, to agree upon such a Directory as doth remove what is none of Christ's, and preserve the purity of all his ordinances, together with uniformity and peace in the Kirk; only we have thought necessary to declare and make known that the clause in the Directory for the administration of the Lord's Supper, which appointeth the table to be so placed that the communicants may orderly sit about it, or at it, is not to be interpreted as if, in the judgement of this Kirk, it were indifferent for any of the communicants not to come to and receive at the table; or as if we did approve the distributing of the elements by the ministers to each communicant, and not by the communicants among themselves; in which particulars, we still conceive and beleve the order and practice of our own Kirk to be most agreeable and sutable to the Word of God, the example of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the nature of that heavenly feast and table. Nevertheless, in other particulars, we have resolved and do agree to do as ye have desired us in your letter—that is, not to be tedious of old customs, though lawfull in themselves, and not condemned in this Directory, but to lay them aside for the nearer uniformitie with the Kirk of England, now nearer and dearer to us than ever before; a blessing so much esteemed, and so earnestly longed for among us, that rather than it faile on our part, we do most willingly part with such practices and customs of our own as may be parted with safely, and without the violation of any of Christ's ordinances, or trespassing against scripturall rules or our solemne Covenants.

We do, in like manner, agree to and approve the propositions touching kirk government and ordination; and have given power to our commissioners who are to meet in Edinburgh, to agree to and conclude in our name an uniformitie therein, betwixt the kirks in both kingdoms, so soon as the same shall be, without any substantiall alteration, ratified by an ordinance of the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England, according to our act of approbation sent to our commissioners with you.

As for the returning of our commissioners, though the counsel and assistance of our reverend brethren might be of good use to us in these difficult times, and their particular stations and employments importune the stay of these who are come unto us, and the returne of these who stay with you; yet, preferring the publick good, and looking upon the profit that may redound unto all by their continuing with you, we have satisfied your desire, and renewed their commission; praying God they may (as we are confident they shall) prove answerable to our trust, and to your expectation.

Concerning one Confession of Faith and Forme of Catechisme, we apprehend no great difficultie; and to that which remains to be perfected in the matter of kirk government we do beleieve, and both you and we know by experience, that there is no word impossible with our God. "He that hath begun a good work among you, will also perform it" of his good pleasure. Go on, in the Lord your strength, and "the Spirit of truth lead you in all truth; the God of all grace and peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting Covenant," and by him "hath called us unto his eternal glory," "make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you," and by you, and among you, "that which is well pleasing in his sight," "stablish, strengthen, settle you," "through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Edinburgh, Feb. 13, 1645.

TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTIE,
THE HUMBLE REMONSTRANCE OF
THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY OF THE KIRK OF SCOTLAND,

MET AT EDINBURGH THE 13TH DAY OF FEBRUARY 1645.

As our record is on high, and our consciences within us bear us witnesse, so the many former supplications and remonstrances to your Majestie from this Kirk and kingdome, our solemne Covenants, and the whole course of our proceedings from time to time, in the prosecution of this cause, do make known to the world, and we trust also to your own conscience, our loyaltie and faithfull subjection, and how far our intentions are from the diminution of your Majestie's just power and greatnesse; and, although the successe of many of our humble addresses to your Majesty hath been such as did frustrate our desires and hopes, yet this hath not blotted out of our hearts our loyaltie, so often professed before God and the world; but it is still our souls' desire, and our prayer to God for you, that your self and your posterity may prosperously reigne over this your ancient and native kingdome, and over your other dominions: And now, as we have published a solemne and free Warning to the Noblemen, Barons, Gentlemen, Burrows, Ministers, and Commons of this kingdome, concerning the present affliction of this nation, and their sins procuring the same; so, when we call to minde, that God accepteth not the persons of men, and that the greatest are not to be winked at in their sins, we assure our selves that the best and most reall testimony which we can give at this present, of the tendernesse and uprightnesse of our affection to your Majestie's true happinesse, is this our humble and faithfull representation of your Majestie's great and growing dangers, and the causes thereof; of which, if we should be silent, our consciences would condemne us, and "the stones themselves would immediatly cry out."

The troubles of our hearts are enlarged, and our fears increased in your Majestie's behalfe, perceiving that your people's patience is above measure tempted, and is like a cart pressed down with sheaves, and ready to break, while, as beside many former designs and endeavours to bring desolation and destruction upon us, (which were—and we trust all of that kinde shall be—by the marvellous and mercifull providence of God discovered and disappointed,) our cuntry is now infested, the blood of divers of our brethren spilt, and other acts of most barbarous and horrid cruelty exercised, by the cursed crew of the Irish rebels, and their complices in this kingdome, under the conduct of such as have commission and warrant from your Majestie. And, unlesse we prove unfaithfull both to God and to your Majestie, we cannot conceale another danger, which is infinitely greater than that of your people's displeasure: Therefore, we, the servants of the Most High God, and your Majestie's most loyall subjects, in the humility and grief of our hearts, fall down before your throne, and in the name of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ, who shall judge the world in righteousnesse, both great and small, and in the name of this whole nationall Kirk, which we represent, we make bold to warn your Majestie freely, that the guilt which cleaveth fast to your Majesty and to your throne is such as, (whatsoever flattering preachers or unfaithfull counsellours may say to the contrary,) if not timely repented, cannot but involve yourself and your posterity under the wrath of the ever living God, for your being guiltie of the shedding of the blood of many thousands of your Majestie's best subjects—for your permitting the masse, and other idolatry, both in your own family and in your dominions—for your authorizing, by the Book of Sports, the profanation of the Lord's day—for your not punishing of publick scandalls, and much profanenesse in and about your court—for the shutting of your eares from the humble and just desires of your faithfull subjects—for your complying too much with the Popish party many wayes, and, namely, by concluding the cessation of armies in Ireland, and your embracing the counsels of those who have not set God nor your good before their eyes—for your resisting and opposing this cause, which so much concerneth the glory of God, your own honour and happinesse, and the peace and safetic of your kingdomes—and for what other causes your Majesty is most conscios, and may best judge and search your own conscience, (nor would we have mentioned any particulars, if they had not been publike and knowne.) For all which it is high time for your Majesty to fall down at the footstool of the King of Glory, to acknowledge your offence, to repent timely, to make your peace with God through Jesus Christ, (whose blood is able to wash away your great sinne,) and to be no longer unwilling that the Son of God reign over you and your kingdoms in his pure ordinances of church government and worship. These things if your Majesty do it shall be no grief of heart unto you afterward; a blessing is reserved for you, and you shall finde favour with God, and with your people, and with all the churches of Christ: But if your Majesty refuse to hearken to this wholesome counsell, (which the Lord forbid,) we have discharged our own consciences; we take God and men to witnesse that we are blamelesse of the sad consequences which may follow, and we shall wait upon the Lord, who, "when he maketh inquisition for blood, will not forget the cry of the humble." In the mean while, beseeching your Majesty to take notice that we are not staggering or fainting through diffidence of the successe of this cause and Covenant of the three kingdoms, unto which, as God hath already given manifold testimonies of his favour and blessing, so it is our stedfast and unshaken confidence that this is the work and cause of God, which shall gloriously prevail against all opposition, and from which, with the assistance of the grace of God, we shall never suffer our selves to be divided or withdrawn, but shall zealously and constantly, in our severall vocations, endeavour with our estates and lives the pursuing and promovng thereof.

That which we have concluded concerning uniformity in religion between both kingdoms, is to be humbly offered to your Majestie from the Commissioners of this kingdom for your royall consent and ratification. Although your Majestie was not pleased to vouchsafe us the presence of your Commissioner, according to the supplication of the commissioners of the preceding Generall Assembly, yet we have proceeded with as much respect to your Majestie's honour, and as much remembrance of our duty, as if your royall person had been present in the mids of us: And we shall still continue our prayers for you, that God would graciously incline your heart to the counsels of truth and peace, and grant unto your Majestie a long and happy reign, that we may live under you a peaceable and quiet life, in all godlinesse and honestie.

The Assemblie's Answer to their Commissioners at London.

Reverend and beloved Brethren,

These sweet fruits of your long continued labours in the work of the Lord entrusted to you, brought to us at this time by these two of your number, whom you were pleased to send, were received by us with no small joy and rejoycing, as being, in great part, the satisfaction of our souls' desire, in that so much longed for, so much prayed for happy uniformitie of these kirks and kingdoms; and an evident demonstration to us that the Lord hath not, even in this time of his seen and felt displeasure, so covered himself with the cloud of his anger, that our prayers should not passe through.

The great and main difficulties through which the Lord hath carried this work, as we do acknowledge, ought mainly to be made use of for the praise and glory of his power, who is the great worker of all our works for us; so your overcoming of them is to us no small demonstration of your zeal, wisdom, and faithfulness, which, without great injurie, both to the Lord the prime worker, and to you his instruments, we cannot but acknowledge, hath been much manifested in the whole managing of this work in your hands.

The full answer to all the particulars you write of in your letters, we leave to the relation of those that come from you, and are now appointed to return to you; and as with much thankfulness we acknowledge your fidelity in what ye have done already, so we have again renewed your commission for the continuance of your employment there, for the perfecting of the work so happily begun; for the furthering whereof, as we shall not be wanting in our prayers to God for his blessing upon your labours, so, for your help and assistance, we have appointed a commission to sit at Edinburgh, to which at all occasions you may have your recourse, as the exigence of the work shall require.

How satisfactory that Directory of Worship, presented to us by our brethren from you, was to us, we leave it rather to their relation at their return, being ear and eye witnesses to the manifold expressions of our joy and gladnesse, then offer to represent it to you in a letter. The act herewith sent, and ordained to be prefixed unto the Directory, will sufficiently declare our hearty approbation of it. Our judgement also concerning the propositions of Government and Ordination, and our earnest desire to have the work of uniformity promoted and perfected in that particular also, will appear to you by the other act which herewith you will receive. Our zeal and desire to have that work fully closed with so much harmonic as becometh the work of God, will appear to you in our resolution and answer to that particular, in the point of excommunication, concerning which you write.

These particular differences hinted at in the Assemblie's letter, for uniformitie with that Kirk so much endeared to us, we have resolved to lay aside, and have taken course for preserving harmonic amongst our selves, whereof our brethren will give you more particular account. Anent your desire of Mr Alexander Henderson his attending the treatie, we are confident ere this you have received our resolution.

Amidst the many difficulties wherewith it pleaseth the Lord to presse us, as we thought it necessar to publish and send forth a Warning to all sorts of persons in this Kirk and kingdom, concerning the present affliction of this nation, and their sins procuring the same; so we thought it incumbent to us in duty, as the best testimony which we can give at this present to his Majesty, to remonstrate unto him faithfully the great and growing dangers his Majesty is now under, and the causes thereof. This remonstrance we have sent to you, to be presented to his Majesty, by such means, and at such time, as you who are there upon the place shall judge fittest.

And now, dear brethren, go on with cheerfulness in the work of the Lord. Let no discouragement or opposition make your heart to faint, or your hands wax feeble. Perswade your self the Lord's hand shall still be made known toward his servants, and his indignation against his enemies. Remember the work is his, who useth not to begin, but also to make an end, and is abundantly able to supply all your need, according to the riches of his glory. Be confident, therefore, of this thing, that he who hath begun this good work by you, will also, in due time, accomplish it to his own praise. To his gracious assistance we heartily recommend you.

Subscribed, in name of the Generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, by the Moderator of the Assembly.

Postscript.—It is earnestly desired that the Directorie for Worship be sent to Ireland, and that you recommend to the Honourable Houses of the Parliament to think upon the best way for the establishment and practice of it in that kingdom. And that the like course may be taken with the government, and other parts of the uniformity, so soon as they shall be agreed upon.

Edinburgh, Feb. 13, 1645.

Recommendation to Presbyteries to consider Matters formerly referred to them.

The Generall Assembly recommends to Presbyteries to consider these matters, referred to their consideration by preceding Assemblies; and to report their judgement therein to the next Assembly.

The Generall Assembly appoints the meeting of the next Assembly to be at Edinburgh, the first Wednesday of June, in the year 1646.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY, MET AT EDINBURGH, JUNII 3, 1646.

Sess. 2, Edinburgh, Junii 4, 1646.—The King's Letter to the Assembly, presented by Mr Robert Douglas, Minister at Edinburgh.

CHARLES R.

Right trusty and wel-beloved, we greet you well. Having lately written to our Houses of Parliament at Westminster, and the Commissioners from our kingdom of Scotland at London, and likewise to the Committees of Estates of that our kingdom, shewing our great sense and grief for the sad effects which have flowed from the unhappy differences betwixt us and our subjects, with our reall resolutions to comply with the desires of our Parliaments of both kingdoms, and those entrusted by them for settling of truth and peace in all our dominions: And now being informed of your meeting, we have thought fit hereby (since we could not conveniently send a Commissioner) to give you the same assurances; and withal, that it shall be our constant endeavour to maintain religion there as it is established in doctrine, worship, and church government, and leave no good means unassayed for settling an universall peace in that our native and ancient kingdom, with the reformation of religion, and settling peace in England and Ireland: And after the return of an answer to our late message to our Houses of Parliament here, we shall more particularly acquaint you or your Commissioners with our further resolutions. In the mean time, we seriously recommend our selves and the distracted condition of our kingdoms, to your most earnest prayers to God in our behalf, expecting from you faithfulness in your severall charges and callings, with that loyaltie and obedience which becometh the ministers of the Gospel. We bid you very heartily farewell. From Newcastle, the 28th of May, 1646.

Direct.—For our right trustie and wel-beloved, the Moderatour and other Members of the Generall Assembly of the Kirk of our Kingdom of Scotland.

Sess. 4, Junii 6, 1646, ante meridiem.—Act concerning the Registers and Acts of Provinciall Assemblies.

The Assembly recommends to Provinciall Assemblies that hereafter they cause read all their acts before the dissolving of every Assembly; and that their registers be written formally, and in a good hand-writing, with the severall leafes or pages thereof marked by ciphers, according to their number.

Sess. 7, Junii 11, 1646, ante meridiem.—Act concerning the Publike Satisfaction of Married Persons for Fornication committed before Marriage.

The Generall Assembly, understanding that in many places the publike scandalls of fornication committed before marriage are not taken notice of and removed by publike confession, according to the order of this Kirk; therefore, for remedie thereof, do ordain, that all married persons under publike scandall of fornication committed before their marriage, (although the scandal thereof hath not appeared before the marriage,) shall satisfie publicly for that sin committed before their marriage, their being in the estate of marriage notwithstanding, and that in the same manner as they should have done if they were not married.

Sess. 10, Junii 13, 1646, ante meridiem.—Ordinance for Excommunication of the Earle of Seafort.

The Generall Assembly, having taken to their serious consideration that perfidious band made and contrived lately in the North, under the name of An humble Remonstrance against our Nationall Covenant, and the League and Covenant of the Three Kingdoms; which tendeth to the making of division and fomenting of jealousies within this and between both kingdoms, to the prolonging of these unnaturall warrs, to the impeding of the intended uniformitie in religion, and to the subversion of all the happie ends of our Covenants. And finding that George Earle of Seafort hes not only most perfidiously himself subscribed the said wicked band, contrary to his solemn oaths in the Covenants aforesaid, and most arrogantly owned the same, under his owne hand-writing, in his letters to the Committee of Estates, and to the Commissioners of the preceding Assemblies; but also hes seduced and threatned others to subscribe that divisive band, and to joyne with him in prosecution of his treacherous and wicked designs, therein masked with the pretences of religion and libertie, boasting also the pursuance of that his remonstrance against all deadly the opposers thereof, whether King or Parliament. And having also considered another wicked and treacherous band of union which the said Earle formerly entred into with that excommunicate rebell James Grahame, after the sentence of forfeiture and the dreadfull sentence of excommunication were pronounced against him, obliging himself therein, under solemn oaths, to joyne with that defaulted rebell against this kirk and kingdome, and to oppose all their publike resolutions for pursuance of the happie ends of our said Covenants. All which, with his vile reproachfull aspersions, and most false calumnies against this Kirk and State, and their publike and lawfull endeavours and resolutions, with his other wicked and perfidious practices, at length discovered in the proclamation of the Committee of Estates, and the declaration of the Commission of the Assembly against the said perfidious band and remonstrance, being gravely pondered and considered; together with his base treachery to the Estates, being intrusted by them with ample commission, and encouraged and enabled for discharging thereof, with mony, ammunition, and arms, in a good measure; notwithstanding whereof, contrary to that great trust reposed in him, it is notor that not only he did not joyne with the forces raised for the defence of this kingdom, but rather, on the contrary, actually joyning himself and his forces with that excommunicate rebel, James Grahaime, and these unnatural bloody rebels, his followers, did beleager Innernesse, a towne garrisoned by the Estates for the defence of that part of the country. And the Assembly having also found that fair means have been used for reclaiming of the said Earle from that wicked and perfidious course, by publike declarations and proclamations, and particular letters sent to himself from those that had power in that behalf; and that notwithstanding thereof, and of summons direct against him, to answer to the premisses, often called, he doth not appear, but still remains obstinate in his wicked courses; and, after mature deliberation, having found his frequent fearfull and grosse perjuries, his perfidious and wicked conspiracies, by band and oath, with the publike enemies of this kirk and kingdom, and his other treacherous and wicked practises, so contemptuously and pertinaciously persisted into, to be haynous offences against God, and high contempt of all ecclesiastical and civil authority: Therefore, the Assembly, moved with the zeal of God, do, without a contrary voice, decerne and ordain the said George Earle of Seafort to be summarly excommunicate, and declared to be one whom Christ commandeth to be holden by all and every one of the faithfull as an ethnik and publicane, and appoints the sentence of excommunication to be pronounced by Mr Robert Blair, Moderator, in the East Kirk of this citie, upon the next Lord's day, being the 14th of this moneth; and that thereafter publike intimation be made thereof upon a Sabbath day, before noone, in all the kirks of this kingdom, so soon as advertisement shall come unto them.

Enormities and Corruptions observed to be in the Ministry, with the Remedies thereof.

ENORMITIES.

The first and main sin, reaching both to our personall carriage and callings, we judge to be, not studying how to keep communion and fellowship with God in Christ, but walking in a naturall way, without imploying of Christ, or drawing vertue from him, to inable us unto sanctification, and preaching in spirit and power.

IN OUR LIVES.

1. Much fruitlesse conversing in companie, and complying with the sins of all sorts; not behaving our selves as becomes the men of God.
2. Great worldlinesse is to be found amongst us, minding and speaking most about things of this life, being busied about many things, but forgetting the main.
3. Slighting of God's worship in their families, and therefore no cordiall urging of it upon others; yea, altogether a wanting of it in some, if it be credible.
4. Want of gravity in carriage and apparell, dissolutenesse in haire, and shaking about the knees, lightnesse in the apparrell of their wives and children.
5. Tippling and bearing companie in untimous drinking in tavernes and ale-houses, or any where else, whereby the ministerie is made vile and contemptible.
6. Discountenancing of the godly, speaking ill of them, because of some that are unanswerable to their profession.
7. The Sabbath not sanctified after sermons, which maketh people think that the Sabbath is ended with the sermon.
8. There are also to be found amongst us who use small and minced oaths.
9. Some so great strangers to Scripture, that except in their publike ministerie, though they read many things, yet they are little conversant in the Scripture, and in meditation thereof—a dutie incumbent to all the people of God.

IN OUR CALLINGS.

1. Corrupt entry into the ministrie in former times, and following the course of defection, though forsaken, yet never seriously repented; as also present entering into the ministry as to a way of living in the world, and not as to a spirituall calling.

2. Helping in and holding in of insufficient and suspected men, who favour the things of this life, and keeping the door straiter on them whom God hath sealed then upon these who have lesse evidence of the power of grace and holinesse.

3. Partiality in favouring and speaking for the scandalous, whether ministers or other persons, teaching them how to shift and delay censures.

4. Silence in the publike cause, not labouring to cure the disaffection of people, not urging them to constancie and patience in bearing of publike burdens, nor to forwardnesse in the publike cause, whereby Malignants are multiplied; yea, some are so grosse herein, that even in publike fasts little or nothing is to be heard from them sounding this way.

5. Some account it a point of wisdome to speak ambiguously; some incline to justify the wicked cause, uttering words which favour of disaffection, and all their complaining of the times is in such a way as may steal the hearts of people from liking of good instruments in this work, and consequently from God's cause; yea, some reading publike orders are ready to speak against them in their private conference.

6. Idlenesse, either in seldome preaching, as once in the Lord's day—or in preparation for publike duties, not being given to reading and meditation; others have but fits of paines, not like other tradesmen, continually at their work.

7. Want of zeal and love to the conversion of souls, not being weightied with the want of successe in reclaiming of sinners, nor searching in themselves the cause of not profiting, preaching ex officio, not ex conscientia officii.

8. Self-seeking in preaching, and a venting rather of their wit and skill then a shewing forth of the wisdome and power of God.

9. Lifelesnesse in preaching, not studying to be furnished by Christ with power, and so the ordinance of God reacheth not to the conscience; and heereto belongeth the not applying of the doctrine unto the auditory and times.

10. The indiscreet curing of the indiscretion of pious people and ministers, whereby godlinesse hath gotten a deep wound, and profanitie hath lifted up the head, contrary to that wise and gracious order set forth in the Generall Assemblie holden at Edinburgh, 1641.

11. Little care to furnish our armie, either abroad or at home, with ministers; one of our grievous sins, and causes of our calamity.

12. Last, it is to be feared that ministers in secret are negligent to wrestle in prayer for a blessing to be poured out upon their labours, contenting themselves with their publike performances.

REMEDIES.

1. First, That Presbyteries make great conscience to have all vacant places within their several bounds filled with godly and able men, where ever they be to be found; and that under pretence of being a helper, or second to another, none be taken in but such as are able for the same charge.

2. Whereas it is known, that private tryall in Presbyteries are for the most part perfunctorious, the brethren are hereby exhorted to be more serious and faithfull heerein, as they will be answerable to Christ, the Chief Shepherd; and, in a way previous thereto, that brethren be free in loving admonition one of another secretly, from time to time; and that whosoever keeps not the Presbyterie or Synod, after grave admonitions, may come under further censures.

3. That accuracie be used at visitation of kirks, and that the elders, one by one, (the rest being removed,) be called in, and examined, upon oath, upon the minister's behaviour in his calling and conversation.

4. That course be taken to divide congregations in parts, and, by the help not only of elders in their severall parts, but of neighbors also, the evils and neglects of persons and families may be found out and remedied.

5. That every minister be humbled for his former failings, and make his peace with God, that the more effectually he may preach repentance, and may stand in the gap, to turne away the Lord's wrath; runing between the porch and the altar, sighing and crying for all the abominations of the land.

6. Speciall care would be had that all ministers have their conversation in heaven, mainly minding the things of God, and exercising faith for drawing life out of Jesus Christ, the fountain of life, arming themselves thereby with power against the contagion and wickednesse of the world.

7. Care would be had of godly conference in Presbyteries, even in time of their refreshment; and the Moderator is to look to it that good matter be furnished thereto.

8. It is also very necessary for every minister that would be fruitfull in the work of the Lord, to bring home the Word of God to his own heart and conscience by prayer and meditation, both before and after publike ordinance.

9. Use would be made of the roll of the parish, not onely for examination, but also for considering the severall conditions and dispositions of the people, that accordingly they may be admonished, and particularly prayed for by the ministers in secret.

10. It is very expedient that ministers have more communing among themselves, for their mutual stirring up and strengthening of their hands in the Lord's work, and rectifying of these who are not incorrigible.

11. That ministers in all sorts of companie labour to bee fruitfull, as the salt of the earth seasoning them they meet with, not only forbearing to drink healths, (Satan's snare, leading to excesse,) but reprovng it in others.

12. All ministers would be carefull to cherish the smoaking flax of weak beginnings in the wayes of God, and ought courageously to oppose all mockers and revilers of the godly.

13. As at all times, so specially now, when the Lord is calling us all to an account, it becomes the ministers of Christ, with all diligence and faithfulness, to improve their ministerie to the utmost, to be instant in season and out of season; yea, even frugally to imploy their time in private, in reading of and meditating on Scripture, that the Word of God may dwell plentifullic in them.

14. That the providing the armies with ministers be preferred to any congregation, and these who are appointed to attend the same and are deficient, be, without delay, severlie censured, according to the act of the Generall Assembly; and that all ministers, not only in publike pray for our armies, specially these that are to encounter with the bloody enimie within the land, but also continually bear them up before the Lord, that their lives being reformed, their hearts and hands may be strenghtned, and their undertaking at last blessed of God with successe.

15. That beside all other scandals, silence or ambiguous speaking in the publike cause, much more detracting and disaffected speeches be seasonable censured; and to this effect, all honest-hearted brethren would firmlic unite themselves in the Lord, the younger honouring the elder, and the elder not despising the younger.

16. And, finallie, both for the corruption of the ministerie, and remedies thereof, we refer the brethren to the act of the Generall Assemblie at Edinburgh, 1596, revived in the late Assemblie at Glasgow, 1638, to be found in the printed act concerning the same.

The Generall Assembly ordains the enormities above specified to be tryed and restrained, and that the remedies thereof for that purpose be seriously observed and practised; recommending, especially to Presbyteries and Provinciall Assemblies, that use be made of the same in visitation of kirks and tryall of Presbyteries.

Approbation of the Proceedings of the preceding Assembly.

The Generall Assembly, having heard the report of the committee appointed to consider and examine the proceedings of the commissioners of the late Generall Assembly, holden at Edinburgh in the year 1646; and after serious consideration thereof, finding that the whole acts, proceedings, and conclusions of the said commissioners, contained in the register subscribed by Mr Andrew Ker, their clerk, and by Mr Robert Ramsay, Moderator to the said committee, do declare much wisdom, diligence, vigilancie, and commendable zeal; and that the said commissioners have orderly and formally proceeded in every thing, according to their commission: Do, therefore, ratifie and approve the said whole acts, proceedings, and conclusions, of the commissioners of the said Assembly.

Sess. 11, June 15, 1646, post meridiem.—Act for Joyning of the Presbyteries in Orkney and Zetland to the Provincial of Cathnes.

The Generall Assembly, considering that the Presbyterie of Kirkwall, in Orkney, and the Presbyterie of Scalloway, in Zetland, have never met in any Provincial Assembly, wherethrough great abuses and disorders are there committed: Therefore, the Assembly hereby joyns the said two Presbyteries to the Provincial of Cathnes and Sutherland, and appoints all the ministers and elders of the said Presbyteries hereafter to meet at the said Provincial Assembly, and to have place to reason and vote therein as members of the said Provincial. And sicklike, ordains the said two Presbyteries to be of subordinate jurisdiction to the said Provincial Assembly; declaring hereby, that the said Provincial shall consist of the Presbyteries of Cathnes, Sutherland, Orkney, and Zetland, in all time coming. And appoints them to meet only once in the year, in respect of their great distance and interjection of seas; and that the first meeting be at Thurso, in Cathnes, upon the third Tuesday of August next, and thereafter as shall be appointed by the said Provincial Assembly.

Sess. 14, June 17, 1646, post meridiem.—Act concerning Expectants Preaching in Publike.

The Generall Assembly discharges any person to preach in publike under the name and notion of an expectant, or under any other pretence whatsoever, except such as shall be tryed and found qualified according to the acts of the Generall Assembly; recommending to Presbyteries and Provincials to take special notice thereof, and to censure the transgressors accordingly.

Act for Censuring the Complyers with the Publike Enemies of this Kirk and Kingdom.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their serious consideration the great and scandalous provocation and grievous defection from the publike cause, which some have beene guiltie of, by complying with the rebels, the publike enemies of this Kirk and kingdom—and judging it a dutie incumbent to them to bring such notorious offenders to publike satisfaction, that the wrath of God may be averted, and the publike scandall removed; Do, therefore, require, decern, and ordain, that such as after lawfull tryall shall be found to have been in actual rebellion, and to have carried charge with the rebels—to have accepted commissions for raising horse or foot unto them—to have been seducers of others to joyn in that rebellion—to be the penners or contrivers of James Grahame's proclamation for indicting a pretended Parliament, or of any other his proclamations or declarations—to have beene prime instruments in causing publish the said proclamations and declarations; that all and every one of such offenders shall humbly acknowledge their offence upon their knees, first before the Presbyterie, and thereafter before the congregation upon a Sabbath, in some place before the pulpit; and in the mean time, that they be suspended from the Lord's Supper; and in case they do not satisfie in manner foresaid, that they be processed with excommunication. And likewise ordains that such as shall be found to have procured protections from the rebels—to have execute their orders—to have invited them to their houses—to have given them intelligence—to have drank James Grahame's health, or to be guilty of any other such grosse degrees of compliance, shall acknowledge their offences publicly before the congregation, and be suspended from the communion ay and whill they doe the same. And further, decernes and ordains, that all persons in any ecclesiastick office, guiltie of any degrees of complýancé before mentioned, shall be suspended from their office and all exercise thereof, for such time as the quality of the offence and condition of the offenders shall be found to deserve: And the Assembly hereby declares, that the Presbyteries have a latitude and libertie to agreadge the censures above specified, according to the degrees and circumstances of the offences; and gives, in like manner, the same latitude and libertie to the Commissioners of this Assembly for Publike Affairs, who have also power to try and censure the offenders in manner above exprest, and to take account of the diligence of Presbyteries thereintill.

Act concerning James Graham's Proclamation.

The Generall Assembly, having considered a copie of a proclamation, published by order of that excommunicat traitor James Graham, for indicting of a pretended parliament, and finding the same to be full of blasphemies against the Solemne League and Covenant of the three kingdoms, and of vile aspersions of treason, rebellion, and sedition, most falsly and impudently imputed to the Estates, and most faithfull and loyall subjects of this kingdome; Doe, therefore, declare, that such as have been prime instruments of the publishing of that or the like proclamation and declaration, deserve the highest censures of the Kirk, unless they make humble confession of their offence publicly, in such manner as is prescribed by this Assembly; and humbly recommends to the Committee of Estates to take some course for their exemplary civill punishment, and that some publike note of ignominie be put upon that proclamation, as their Honors shall think meet.

Sess. Ult. Junii 18, 1646, ante meridiem.—Act against loosing of Ships and Barks upon the Lord's Day.

The Generall Assembly, understanding how much the Lord's day is profaned by skippers and other seafaring men, do, therefore, discharge and inhibite all skippers and sailers to begin any voyage on the Lord's day, or to loose any ships, barks, or boats, out of harbery or road upon that day; and who shall doe in the contrary hereof shall be censured as profaners of the Sabbath; recommending to Presbyteries, and others whom it may concerne, to see both the acts of Assembly and Parliament, made for censuring and punishing profanation of the Lord's day, to be put in execution against them.

Act anent Children sent without the Kingdom.

Whereas divers children have been sent without the kingdom to be bred abroad, and have been, or in time coming may be, exposed to the temptations of seducers, and drawn away from the truth established and professed within this Church, to errour of Poperie, or other sects and heresies: Therefore, the Assembly ordains, that the parents or friends of children and minors shall, before they send them without the kingdom, first acquaint the Presbytery where they reside, that they may have their testimoniall directed to the Presbytery or classe within the kingdom of France, or England, or Ireland, and at the time of these children's return from any of the said kingdoms, to report ane testimoniall from the Presbytery or Synode where they lived without the kingdom, of their breeding there, and to shew the same to the Presbytery within the kingdom who gave them a testimoniall at their way-going. Likeas, the Assembly ordains all Presbyteries to try if any children have been sent to Popish schooles or colledges without the kingdom; and if any be found, that their names be given to the Presbytery or commissioners of the Assembly, that the same may be presented to the Honourable Lords of Secret Councell or Committee of Estates, that their Lordships may be humbly desired by their authority to recall them, that after return to this kingdom a course may be taken, according to the former ordinances of Generall Assemblies for their breeding in the true religion.

Overtures presented to the Assembly.

I. That correspondence be kept among Presbyteries constantly by letter, without prejudice of personall correspondence when need requires, whereby one Presbyterie may understand what many are doing, and they may be mutually assisting each to other.

II. That for the better breeding of young men to the ministerie, who are not able to furnish themselves in charges to attend in the universities, that the Presbyteries where they reside appoint some to direct their studies.

III. That it be recommended to all the Universities to condescend upon the best overtures for the most profitable teaching of grammar and phylosophy; and as they may meet at the commission of the Generall Assembly to make the matter ripe for the next Assembly.

The Assembly approves these overtures, and recommends accordingly.

IV. That to the intent the knowledge of God in Christ may be spread through the Highlands and Islands, (for in lack whereof the land hath smarted in the late troubles,) these courses be taken: 1. Let an order be procured, that all gentlemen who are able, at least send their eldest sons to be bred in the inland. 2. That a ministerie be planted amongst them, and for that effect, that ministers and expectants who can speak the Irish language be sent to imploy their talents in these parts, and that the kirks there be provided as other kirks in this kingdome. 3. That Scots schools be erected in all parishes there, according to the Act of Parliament, where conveniently they can be had. 4. That ministers and ruling elders that have the Irish language be appointed to visit these parts.

The Assembly approves this overture, and recommends this purpose to further consideration, that more overtures may be prepared thereanent against the next Assembly.

V. That for keeping the Universitie pure, and provoking the Professors of Divinitie to greater diligence, each professor in the Universities of this Church and kingdom bring with him, or send with the commissioner who comes to the General Assembly, ane perfect and well written copie of his dictates, to be revised by the Generall Assembly, or such as they shall appoint for that work ilk year.

The Assembly continues the determination of a constant and perpetuall order herein untill the next Assembly; but, in the mean time, desires the Professors of Divinity to present to the next Assembly their dictates of Divinity, wherof the Professors present are to give intimation to the Professors absent.

VI. The great burdens intrants undergoes when they enter the ministry, which holds many of them long at under, would crave the Assemblies judgement and authority, that ministers' manes and stipends may be all made free to the intrant.

The Assembly refers and recommends to the Commissioners for Publike Affairs to seek redresse in this matter from the Honourable Estates of Parliament, and to consider of some fitting overtures to be presented to their Honours for that effect.

Renovation of the Commission for the Publike Affairs of the Kirk.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their consideration that, in respect the great work of uniformity in religion in all his Majestie's dominions is not yet perfected, (though by the Lord's blessing there is a good progresse made in the same,) there is a necessity of renewing the commissions granted formerly for prosecuting and perfecting that great work; Doe, therefore, renew the power and commission granted for the publike affairs of the Kirk by the Generall Assemblies, held in St Andrews in the year 1642, and in Edinburgh, 1643, 1644, and 1645, unto the persons following, viz., Masters Alexander Henderson, Robert Douglas, William Colvil, William Bennet, George Gillespie, John Oswald, John Adamson, William Dalgleish, David Calderwood, James Fleeming, Robert Ker, John Dalzell, James Wright, John Knox,

The Assemblie's Letter to the Right Honorable the Lords and Commons in the Parliament of England, assembled at Westminster.

Right Honourable,

The report of the great things which the Lord hath done for your Honours hath gone forth into many lands, and it becometh us least of any, either to smother or extenuate the same. We desire to be enlarged in the admiration of the power and mercie of God the author, and to diminish nothing of that praise that is due unto you as instruments. When the Lord set your Honours upon the bench of judgment, both the Kirk and Commonwealth of England were afflicted with intestine and bosome evils, the cure whereof could not but be very difficult, because they were not only many, but, for the most part, universal and deeply rooted, sheltred under the shadow of custome and law, and supported with all the wisdom and strength of the Malignant and Prelaticall partie, who rather chose to involve the land in an unnaturall and bloody warre, then to fail of their ambitious and treacherous designes against religion, the priviledges of Parliament, and the lawes and liberties of the kingdom; neither hath that miserable crew been wanting to their owne ends, but for many years together hath desperatly pursued their resolutions in arms, and was likely to have prevailed, if the Lord had not put himself in the breach, and furnished you with much patience, wisdom, courage, and constancy, in the midst of many difficulties and distresses, and at last, with so glorious and triumphing a successe, that the enemy hath fallen every where before you, and there is none left to appear against you. These things, as they be the matter of our refreshment and of your glory, so doe they lay a strong obligation upon your Honours to walk humbly with your God, and to improve the power he hath put into your hands, for the advancement of the Kingdom of his Son, and bringing forth of the head-stone of his house. The slow progresse of the work of God hath alwayes been the matter of our sorrow, which is now increased by the multiplication of the spirits of errour and delusion, that drown many souls into perdition, and so strengthen themselves, that they shall afterward be laboured against with more pains then successe, if a speedy and effectuall remedie be not provided. And, therefore, as the servants of the living God, who not onely send up our supplications daily for you, but have hazard our selves in your defence, we do earnestly beseech your Honours, in the bowels of Jesus Christ, to give unto him the glory that is due unto his name, by a timous establishing all his ordinances in the full integritie and power thereof, according to the League and Covenant. As long as the Assembly of Divines was in debate, and an enemy in the fields, we conceived that these might be probable grounds of delay, which being now removed out of the way, we do promise to our selves, from your wisdom, faithfulness, and zeale, the perfecting of that which was the main ground of our engagement, and a chief matter of consolation unto us, in all our sad and heavy sufferings from the hand of a most cruell enemy. We know that there is a generation of men who retard the work of uniformity, and foment jealousies betwixt the nations, studying, if it were possible, to break our bands asunder; but we trust, that he that sits in the heavens will laugh, and that the Lord shall have them in derision, that he shall speak to them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure, and notwithstanding of all that they can do, set his King upon his holy hill of Sion, and make these nations happy in the sweet fruits of unity in truth and peace. The Searcher of hearts knows that we desire to hold fast the band of our Covenant as sacred and inviolable; being perswaded that the breach of so solemne a tye could not but hasten down upon our heads a curse and vengeance from the righteous Judge of the world, and involve these kingdoms in sader calamities then they have yet seen; and we abhor to entertain any other thought of you; nay, we are confident that your Honours will seriously indeavour the prosecution of all these ends designed in the Covenant, and the bringing these nations unto the nearest conjunction, both in judgement and affection, especially in these things that concern religion, which, without all controversie, is the readiest and surest way of attaining and securing the peace and prosperity of both kingdoms.

The Assemblies Letter to the Right Honorable the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Councell of the City of London.

Your late and seasonable testimony given to the truth of the Gospel, and your affection to the peace of the kingdoms, manifested in your humble Remonstrance and Petition to the Honorable Houses of Parliament, hath so revived the remembrance of your former faith and zeal, and proclaimed you the worthy seed of so noble ancestors in that famous city, as we cannot but acknowledge, with all thankfulness, the grace of God bestowed on you, and stirre you up to take notice how, since you were precious in the Lord's sight, you have been ever honourable; the Lord hath loved you, given men for you, and people for your life. What an honour was it in the dayes of old, when the fire of the Lord was in Zion, and his furnace in your Jerusalem, (even in Queen Marie's dayes,) that there were found in you men that loved not their lives unto the death? What a glory in after times, when Satan had his throne, and Antichrist his seat in the midst of you, that there were still found not a few that kept their garments clean? But the greatest praise of the good hand of God upon you hath been in this, that amidst the many mists of error and heresie which have risen from the bottomlesse pit, to bespot the face and darken the glory of the Church, (while the Bride is a making ready for the Lamb,) you have held the truth, and most piously endeavoured the setting of Christ upon his throne. We need not remember how zealous you have been in the cause of God, nor how you have laid out your selves and estates in the maintenance thereof, nor how many acknowledgements of the same you have had from the Honourable Houses, nor how precious a remembrance will be had of you in after ages, for your selling of all to buy the pearl of price. We only at this time do admire, and in the inward of our hearts do blesse the Lord for your right and deep apprehensions of the great and important matters of Christ in his royall crown, and of the kingdoms in their union, while the Lord maketh offers to bring our ship (so much afflicted and tossed with tempest) to the safe harbour of trueth and peace. Right memorable is your zeal against sects and sectaries; your care of reformation, according to the Word of God, and the example of the best reformed Churches; your earnest endeavours and noble adventures for preserving of the rights and priviledges of Parliament, and liberties of the kingdoms, together with his Majestie's just power and greatnesse; and your high profession, that it is not in the power of any humane authority to discharge or absolve you from adhering unto that our (so solemnly sworn) League and Covenant, or to enforce upon you any sense contrary to the letter of the same; besides your other good services done unto the Lord and to us, in the strengthening of the hands of the Reverend Assembly of Divines, and of our Commissioners, in their asserting of the government of Christ, (which, the more it be tried, will be ever found the more precious truth,) and vindicating of the same from the usurpation of man, and contempt of the wicked. These all, as they are so many testimonies of your pietie, loyaltie, and undaunted resolution to stand for Christ, so are they, and shall ever be, so many obligations upon us, your brethren, to esteem highly of you in the Lord, to bear you on our brests before him night and day, and to contribute our best endeavours, and to improve all opportunities for your encouragement. And now, we beseech you in the Lord, Honorable and wel-beloved, go on in this your strength, and in the power of his might who hath honoured you to be faithfull: "Stand fast in that liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free;" and in the pursuance of this truth, we are confident, as you have, so you will never cease to study the peace and neerer conjunction of the kingdoms, knowing that a three-fold cord is not easily broken. Now, the Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved and honoured you, and given you everlasting consolation and good help through grace, comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work.

The Assemblies Letter to the Right Reverend the Assembly of Divines in the Kirk of England, assembled at Westminster.

Much Honoured and Right Reverend,

Amongst other fruits of this our precious liberty, after such dissipation by sword and pestilence, to meet again, we account it not the least to have the opportunity of making a publike declaration of our earnest affection to all our brethren of that nation, and especially your selves of the Reverend Assembly at Westminster. When we were lately in a very low condition, we may say that our own sufferings and fears, although imbittered with the sense of the Lord's displeasure against our lukewarmnesse and unfaithfulnesse, yet they did not so take up our heart but that room was left to congratulate with the Lord's people there in all their successes, and to condeole with them in all their dangers; and if at any time any here seemed to be more jealous then godly jealousy would allow, we know not how it can be imputed to any thing else, but to the vehemencie of ardent affection, and impatient desire to have our brethren there and us joyned neerer to Christ, and neerer to one another in all his ordinances, and especially in Presbyteriall government, so well warranted by the Word, and approven by experience of our owne and other reformed Churches, wherein your long and unwearied endeavours have been blessed with a large increase, which hath yet proved still a seed unto a further and more glorious expected harvest. There could not be wished by mortall men a fairer opportunity then is cast in your laps, being invited and charged by so high an authority, to give so free and publike a testimony to those truths, which formerly many of the Lord's precious ones, by tongue and pen, by tears and blood, have more privately asserted. The smallest of Christ's truths (if it be lawfull to call any of them small) is of greater moment then all the other businesses that ever have been debated since the beginning of the world to this day; but the highest of honours and heaviest of burdens is put upon you, to declare out of the sacred records of divine truth what is the prerogative of the crown and extent of the scepter of Jesus Christ—what bounds are to be set between him ruling in his house, and powers established by God on earth—how and by whom his house is to be governed—and by what wayes a restraint is to be put on these who would pervert his truth, and subvert the faith of many. No doubt, mountains of oppositions arise, and gools of difficulties open up themselves in this your way; but you have found it is God that girdeth you with strength, and maketh your way perfect and plain before you, who hath delivered, and doth deliver, and will yet deliver. We need not put you in minde that as there lyeth at this time a strict tye on all, so in a speciall manner both you and we are engaged to interpose our selves between God and these kingdomes, between the two nations, between the king and the people, for averting of deserved wrath, for continuing and increasing of a well-grounded union, for procuring as far as in us lyeth a right settling of religion and church government; that when we shall sleep with our fathers, the posterity here and abroad may be reaping the fruits of our labours.

We are fully assured of your constant and sedulous promovng of this blessed work, and of the Lord's assisting and carrying you on therein; and are confident that your late experience and present sense of the great danger and fearfull confusion flowing from the rise and growth of sects and sectaries not suppressed, hath stirred up in your hearts most fervent desires and carefull endeavours for remedying the same, wherein we exhort you to continue and abound, knowing that your labours shall not be in vain in the Lord, to whose rich grace we commend you and the work in your hands.

Recommendation to Presbyteries and Provinciall Assemblies.

I. The Assembly recommends to severall Presbyteries and Provinciall Assemblies to consider the interests of particular congregations, in the calling and admission of ministers, with all these questions that usually fall out upon that occasion; and to report their opinions to the next Assembly, with some fit overtures for preventing all contests in that matter.

II. The Assembly recommends to Presbyteries and Provinciall Assemblies to consider all the matters referred by preceding Assemblies to the consideration of Presbyteries, and to report their opinions therein to the next Assembly.

Act for a Publike Fast before the next Assembly.

The Assembly, having considered an Act of the Assembly, 1644, Sess. Ult., enjoynng a publike fast to be kept in all the kirks of the city where the General Assembly holds, upon the first day of the meeting of the Assembly; and finding some inconveniences therein, therefore, at this time, untill the matter be further considered, appoints a publike fast and humiliation for the Lord's blessing to the meeting of the next Assembly, to be universally observed in all the congregations of this Kirk, upon the Sabbath next except one preceding the said next Assembly; the exercises for the members of the Assembly at their first meeting being still observed, according to the ancient and laudable practise of this Kirk, this appointment notwithstanding.

The Assembly appoints the meeting of the next Generall Assembly to be at Edinburgh upon the first Wednesday of August, 1647.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY, CONVEENED
AT EDINBURGH, 1647.

Sess. 2, August 16, 1647, post meridiem.—Act allowing the Half of the Ministers in the Presbyterie of Zetland only, with their Ruling Elders, to keep the Provincial Assembly.

The General Assembly, understanding that the whole members of the Presbyterie of Zetland, adjoynd to the Provincial of Caithnes and Sutherland upon weighty considerations by the preceding Assembly, cannot be present at the meetings of that Provincial, without great prejudice to the particular congregations within that Presbyterie, and many other inconveniences—that isle being of great distance from land, and the passage from and to the same being uncertaine and dangerous; Doe, therefore, declare and ordaine, That the whole ministers and elders of the Presbyterie of Zetland shall not be tyed hereafter to come to the meetings of their said Provincial; but that the half of the number of the ministers, with their ruling elders, shall be onely obliged to keep the meetings of the said Provincial Assembly in time coming.

*Sess. 15, August 20, 1647, ante meridiem.—A Declaration and Brotherly Exhortation of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland to their Brethren of England.

The conscience of our dutie to God obliging us to give a testimony to his truth, and to the kingdom of his Sonne Jesus Christ, now so much resisted and opposed by many, and so little owned by others—the laudable custome and example of correspondency between neighbouring churches, exhorting, encouraging, and (in case of publike scandal) admonishing in love one another, as well as single brethren ought to admonish one another in love, in the case of private offence—our nearer relation and more special affection to our brethren of England, making us to sympathize with them in their danger and affliction as our own, both kingdomes being united as one entire body in one Covenant, for pursuing the common cause and ends therein expressed—yea, common reason and experience itself teaching us that we have no cause to conceive our religion, the liberties of this Church, or our selves, to be in a condition of safety when ever the enemies of our religion and liberties are growing to a prevalency in the neighbour kingdom. Any one of these considerations, much more all of them together, cry aloud upon us to break our silence in this present juncture of affaires; yet we hope to expresse our selves both concerning the present dangers and present duties, as in a conscionable and brotherly freedome, so in a fair and inoffensive way; for we have no pleasure nor purpose to provoke any person or party whatsoever, nor to encrease, but to endeavour the allaying and composing of the present unhappy differences. If any shall offend at our discharging our conscience and doing our duty, yet we shall rather chose to take our hazard of that, then of displeasing God by neglect of duty. But we hope better things then to be misunderstood or misinterpreted by such as desire a candid interpretation of their own actions or expressions.

First of all, whatsoever the present discouragements, difficulties, or dangers are, or whatsoever for the future they may be, we cannot but commemorate, to the glory of God, and we doubt not it shall be remembred to his glory in the Church throughout all ages, how great a salvation his mighty hand and outstretched arme hath wrought for these three kingdomes—how he stirred up the spirits of his people in this kingdom ten yeares ago, to begin to shake of the yoke of Prelaticall tyrannie, and of Popish ceremonies obruded upon us, contrary to the lawes of God and men—how he led us on from so small beginnings, and from one degree to another, till we were united in a National Covenant—how he gave us a banner to be displayed for the truth, and so blessed us in the prosecution of that Covenant, that the King's Majesty was graciously pleased, upon the humble petitions of his loyal subjects in this nation, to indict a General Assembly and Parliament, for healing the grievances of Church and State respectively, as likewise to grant his royal consent for confirming and ratifying by acts of Parliament our National Covenant, and the government and liberties of this Church. After which the new troubles raised against us by the malice and treachery of our enemies did occasion the first expedition of this nation into England, (upon which followed the calling of the Parliament there, and the large treaty,) and, in the issue, the return of that army was with an olive branch of peace, and not without the beginnings of a reformation in England; in which work, while the Parliament was interrupted and opposed, and a bloody war begun with great success on that side which opposed the Parliament and the begun reformation, from whence also did accrew great advantage to the Popish party, (whereof the cessation of arms concluded in Ireland may be in stead of many testimonies,) commissioners were sent hither from both Houses, earnestly inviting and perswading to a nearer union of the kingdomes, and desiring assistance from this nation to their brethren in that their great distresse; and this, by the good hand of God, produced the Solemne League and Covenant of the three kingdomes, to the terrour of the Popish and Prelatical party, our common enemies, and to the great comfort of such as were wishing and waiting for the reformation of religion, and the recovery of just liberties. And although, for the conjunction of the kingdomes in Covenant and armes, (being a speciall means tending to the extirpation of Popery, and strengthening the true reformed religion,) this kingdome hath been invaded and infested by the bloody Irish rebels, aided and strengthened by some degenerate and perfidious countreymen of our owne; although, also, in England there were not wanting incendiaries, who, hating and envying nothing more then the union of the kingdomes in such a Covenant, were very vigilant to catch, and active to improve, all occasions of making divisive motions, and creating nationall differences; yet God hath been graciously pleased to break our enemies' strength at home, when it was greatest, and to guide us through these jealousies and differences, fomented by disaffected persons, between the kingdomes; so that, in stead of a splitting upon these rocks, (the thing hoped for by our enemies,) there was a peaceable and friendly parting; since which time God hath further blessed our army at home, to the expelling of the enemy out of our own borders. Nor can we passe in silence the happy progresse which hath been made in the reformation of the Church of England. He that hath brought the children to the birth, can also give strength to come forth; and he whose hand did cast out Prelacie and the Book of Common Prayer, (although strongly rooted in standing lawes,) and who inclined the Parliament of England to owne no other church government but the Presbyterial, (though it be not yet fully settled according to the Word of God and the example of the best reformed churches,) can as easily incline, when he thinks good, both the king and them, and the body of that kingdome, to a thorow and perfect reformation. He that made the Assemblies and Parliaments of both kingdomes to agree upon one Directory for the Publike Worship of God, can also, when he will, make an agreement in the other parts of uniformitie, Confession of Faith, Form of Church Government, and Catechisme; in all which there hath been also a good progresse made in the reverend and learned Assemblie of Divines through the good hand of God so long upon them.

Having now seen so much of God, both in the beginning and progresse of this his great work, and his hand having done so wondrous things for his people in their greatest extremities of danger; and having discovered and defeate the plots of enemies, making them fall even by their own counsels, these things we resolve to keep still fixed in our hearts, and as memorials before our eyes, that remembring the works of the Lord, and the years of the right hand of the Most High, we may neither want matter of praises and thanksgivings, nor experience to breed hope. Although the building of the house of the Lord in England be not yet after so long expectation finished, and now also the work ceaseth, yet we doe from our hearts blesse the Lord for the laying of the foundation, and for so much progresse as hath been made in the work; having still confidence in the Almighty, to whom nothing is impossible or too hard, that every mountaine which doeth or shall stand in the way shall become a plaine, and that the head-stone shall be brought for with shoutings of joy, "Grace, grace unto it."

Neverthesse, we are also very sensible of the great and imminent dangers into which this common cause of religion is now brought by the growing and spreading of most dangerous errors in England, to the obstructing and hindering of the begun reformation, as namely, (beside many others,) Sociniaisme, Arminiaisme, Anabaptisme, Antinomianisme, Brownisme, Erastianisme, Independency, and that which is called (by abuse of the word) Liberty of Conscience, being indeed liberty of error, scandall, schisme, heresie, dishonouring God, opposing the truth, hindering reformation, and seducing others; whereunto we adde those Nullifidians, or men of no religion, commonly called Seekers: Yea, we cannot but look upon the dangers of the true Reformed religion in this island as greater now then before, not onely for that those very principles and fundamentals of faith which, under Prelacy, yea, under Popery itself, were generally received as uncontroverted, are now, by the scepticisme of many sectaries of this time, either oppugned or called in question; but also, because in stead of carrying on the reformation towards perfection, that which hath been already built is in part cast down, and in danger to be wholly overthrown through the endeavours of sectaries to comply with many of the Prelaticall and Malignant, and even the Popish party; and their joyning hand in hand, and casting in their lots, and interweaving their interests together in way of combination against the Covenant and Presbyteriall government; yea, the unclean spirit which was cast out, is about to enter againe, with seven other spirits worse then himselfe, and so the latter end like to be worse then the beginning.

We are extremely sorry that we have cause to aggravate these evils from the crying sin of breach of Covenant, whereof if we should hold our peace, yet, according to the Word of the Lord, other nations will say, and many among them do say, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this people? and what meaneth the heat of this great anger? and they answer one another, "Because they have forsaken the Covenant of the Lord their God." We would not be understood as if we meant either to justify this nation, or to charge such a sin upon all in that nation. We know the Covenant hath been in divers particulars broken by many in both kingdomes—the Lord pardon it and accept a sacrifice; and we doe not doubt but there are many seven thousands in England, who have not onely kept themselves unspotted, and retained their integrity in that businesse, but doe also mourne and groane before the Lord for that sin of others; yet we should but deny our own sense and betray the truth, if we should not resent so great a sinne and danger, as is the breach of a solemne Covenant, sworn with hands lifted up to the Most High God; which breach, however varnished over with some colourable and handsome pretexts, one whereof is the liberty and common right of the free people of England, as once Saul brake a covenant with the Gibeonites, "in his zeal to the Children of Israel and Judah;" yet God could not then, and cannot now, be mocked; yea, it is too apparent and undeniable, that among those who did take the Covenant of the three kingdomes, as there are many who have given themselves to a detestable indifferency or neutralitie, so there is a generation which hath made defection to the contrary part, persecuting, as far as they could, that true Reformed religion, in doctrine, worship, discipline, and government, which by the Covenant they ought to preserve against the common enemies—hindering and resisting the reformation and uniformity which by the Covenant ought to be endeavoured—preserving and tolerating those cursed things which by the Covenant ought to be extirpate, heresie and schisme—encroaching upon, yea offering violence unto the rights, priviledges, and authority of magistracie—protecting and assisting such as by the Covenant ought to have been brought to condigne triall and punishment—and persecuting those who by the Covenant ought to be assisted and defended—endeavouring also a breach in stead of a firme peace and union between the kingdomes, so that there is not any one article of the Solemne League and Covenant which hath not been sinfully and dangerously violated before God, angels, and men. Now, if a Covenant for the preservation and reformation of religion, the maintenance and defence of liberties, was justly thought a fit and excellent mean, not only to strengthen and fortifie the kingdomes against the common enemy of the true Reformed religion, publike peace, and prosperity; but also, "to acquire the favour of Almighty God towards the three kingdomes of England, Scotland, and Ireland;" as is expressed in the Ordinance of the Lords and Commons for the taking of the Covenant, dated February 2, 1643; surely, then, the authors and chief instruments of the breach of that Covenant are to be looked upon as those who strengthen the hands of the common enemy, and provoke the wrath of Almighty God against these kingdoms: Yea, if this Covenant was the "soveraigne and only meanes of the recovery" of these embroiled bleeding kingdoms, as is expressed in the Exhortation of the Assembly of Divines to the taking of the Covenant, approved and ordered to be printed by the House of Commons, the despising, refusing, and casting aside of that remedy must needs render the disease much more desperate. And if by the Declaration of both kingdoms joyned in arms, anno 1643, such as would not take the Covenant were declared "to be publike enemies to their religion and countrey, and that they are to be censured and punished as professed adversaries and Malignants," who seeth not now a strange falling away from these first principles and professions among these who either magnifie and cry up, or at least connive at and comply with such as have not taken the Covenant, yea, are known enemies to it, and cry down such as are most zealous for it?

In this case, while in the neighbour kingdom, the staves of beauty and bands, covenant and brotherhood, are broken by many, the horne of Malignants and sectaries exalted, the best affected born down, reformation ebbing, heresie and schisme flowing; it can hardly be marvelled at, by any person of prudence and discretion, if we be full of such feares and apprehensions as use to be in those who dwell near a house set on fire, or a family infected, especially being taught, by the sad experience of these Prelatical times, how easily a gangrene in the one-half of this island may spread through the whole; knowing also the inveterate and insatiable malice of the enemies of this cause and Covenant against this Church and kingdome; which we cannot be ignorant of, unlesse we would shut our eyes and stop our ears.

Our present purpose leadeth us to touch somewhat of the proceedings of the army in England this summer, so far as religion is therein concerned. As we are confident divers have gone along with them in the simplicity of their hearts—and we presume not to judge the thoughts and intentions of any, it being God's owne prerogative to bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and to make manifest the counsels of the hearts—so it cannot be denied, that upon these passages and proceedings hath followed the interrupting of the so much longed-for reformation of religion, of the settling of Presbyteriall government, and of the suppressing of heresies and dangerous errors, (which works the Parliament had taken in hand,) the retarding and delaying the relief of Ireland, the sowing of the seeds of another war in England, the strengthening of the hand of the Malignant and Episcopall party, the weakening and wounding both of magistracy and ministry; in all which, whether the army be blamelesse and innocent from ministring occasion to so great evils, or whether there be not cause for them to repent and do the first works, and to practise more of that love, moderation, and meeknesse of spirit, and of that zeal against Malignants and Prelatical persons, which they have from the beginning professed, and the want whereof (when suspected in others) they did so much censure; or whether there be such a thing among them as adjoining with those against whom, and against those with whom the Covenant was taken;—we leave them in all these to the search and examination of their own consciences, that they may stand or fall unto God. For our part, we cannot conceive how the proposals of that army for settling of a peace, do in point of religion consist with the Solemn League and Covenant, or with the propositions of peace formerly agreed upon by both kingdoms; there being so considerable omissions of divers materiall desires contained in those former propositions, concerning the abolition of Prelacy—concerning the injoyning of the taking of the Covenant by all his Majestie's subjects, under such penalties as the Parliaments should agree upon—concerning the settling of religion in England and Ireland according to the Covenant, in such manner as both Houses of Parliament shall agree on, after advice had with the Assembly of Divines concerning the settling of uniformity between the Churches of God in both kingdoms, according to the Covenant, in such manner as shall be agreed on by both Houses of the Parliament of England, and by the Church and kingdome of Scotland, after advice had with the divines of both kingdoms—also concerning an act of Parliament to confirm the calling and sitting of the Assembly of Divines: All which, with some other particulars concerning religion, expressed in the former propositions, if they should now be omitted in the settling of a peace, the progresse already made, not only in the Assembly of Divines, but in the Houses of Parliament in set-ling Presbyteriall government, with the Confession of Faith, yea, the Directory of Publike Worship, (though agreed upon by the Assemblies and Parliaments of both kingdomes,) shall be but so much lost labour. But, beside these omissions, it may be justly doubted, whether there be not in these proposals of the army somewhat for Episcopacy and against the Covenant; for we cannot understand the eleventh proposall in any other sense, but that it supposeth the continuance of the ecclesiasticall office of Bishops or Prelats, as well as of any other church officers, and taketh no more from the Prelats but coercive power or jurisdiction, extending to civil penalties, which, indeed, belongeth to no ecclesiasticall officers. In the twelfth proposall, we do not see how it can avoid or shun the toleration of Popery, superstition, heresie, schisme, profaness, or whatsoever works of darknesse shall be practised by such as dispise the publike worship of God in the Church, and have the most unlawfull and wicked meetings else where, under a profession of religious duties, exercises, or ordinances. From the thirteenth proposall, we can make no other result, but that in stead of enjoyning the taking of the Covenant, under such penalties as the Parliaments in their wisdoms shall agree upon, the former ordinance of Parliament, enjoyning the taking of it is desired to be repealed; and then what may be the danger of those that have taken, or shall take, an oath of that kinde, not enjoyned nor ratified by authority, we leave it to be judged by those who know best the lawes of that kingdome.

One thing more we cannot passe, that whereas, in the armie's declaration or representation to the Parliament, dated June 14, 1647, they mention their brethren of Scotland as having proceeded in the vindication and defence of their just rights and liberties, much higher then that army hath done; we are necessitated to say this much for clearing of these proceedings in this nation reflected upon. They of this Church and kingdom who joyned together and associated themselves in this cause, first by humble petitions, and afterwards by covenant, were so far from slighting or breaking that Covenant which was taken, that it was the special visible character by which the friends of the cause were distinguished from the enemies thereof, and they were so far from crying down the ministry and ecclesiasticall Assemblies, or from disobeying any orders or commands of Parliament, that a Generall Assembly of the Church and a Parliament were two chief heads of their petitions and desires at that time, when they had neither; and when they had obtained a Generall Assembly and Parliament, they chearfully submitted to both respectively.

And now the dangers of religion in this island being so great, as there hath been lately a solemne humiliation throughout this land, upon occasion of these great and growing dangers; so, we cannot but still look upon them as matters of frequent prayer and humiliation to our selves, as well as our brethren in England, there being much sin in both kingdomes procuring all this evill, and justly deserving these and heavier judgements. And as we desire, in the first place, to be humbled for our own sins, and the sins of this nation, so we trust our brethren will be willing to be put in minde of the necessity of their humiliation and repentance for the nationall sins of that kingdome; which we shall wish rather to be sadly considered by them then expressed by us. One thing we are confident of, that God hath had a speciall controversie against his people of old, for the sin of a broken Covenant, and unwillingnesse to be reformed and purged according to the word of the Lord; and that till these sinnes were acknowledged and repented his controversie did not take an end. We are no lesse confident, that the godly and well-affected will, in tendernesse of conscience, timely search out, weigh well, mourn for, and study to remove, all the causes of the Lord's present controversie against that nation. What the Honourable Houses of Parliament have to be humbled for, and to reform or amend, they have been (and we trust still are) put in minde by such as are ambassadours to them in Christ's stead, at their solemne humiliations. For our part, as we have alwayes mentioned them in our prayers, with thanksgivings also in their behalfe, so we now must humbly beseech the Lord to direct and blesse them, and in their present difficulties to keep them by his grace from all sinfull compliance, especially from establishing iniquity by a law; to shew them why he contendeth with them, that the true cause of his controversie may be removed, and that the glory of his name, the kingdome, crown, and scepter of his Son Jesus Christ, with his word, lawes, ordinances, trueth, ministers, may be yet more set by in their eyes, that they also may finde a further performance of the word of the Lord: "Exalt her, and she shall promote thee;" and "Them that honour me, I will honour."

We shall now, by the mercies of God, and in the bowels of Jesus Christ, earnestly beseech all those, of whatsoever quality or condition, in England, who have entred into the same League and Covenant with us, and especially the Houses of Parliament, the city of London, and Assembly of Divines, that, with sound humiliation, fervent prayer, and making sure their peace with God, they may joyne all care, faithfulness, and zeal, to hold fast the profession of their faith without wavering, against the many heresies and errors of these times; that they may, according to their places and callings, endeavour to the utmost of their power to prevent or hinder the laying aside or slighting of the Covenant, the re-establishment of Episcopacy, and the toleration of Popery, Prelacy, heresie, schisme, superstition, or prophannesse, and not suffer themselves, directly or indirectly, by whatsoever combination, perswasion, or terrour, to be divided and withdrawn from that blessed union and sacred Covenant, either to the contrary side, or to a neutrality in this cause, which so much concerneth the glorie of God, the good of the kingdomes, and the honour of the King; but all the dayes of their lives zealously and constantly continue therein, against all opposition, and promote the same according to their power, against all lets and impediments whatsoever; which things both they and we have solemnly, and in the sight of God, sworn unto. And as we desired them to rest confident of the constancy of their brethren in this nation, in adhering to that Covenant, in all the articles thereof, which we shall, by the grace of Christ, (without which we are nothing,) sincerely, really, and constantly, pursue and promote, so far as concerneth our places and callings—using our utmost endeavours towards the suppression of those errors which have so dangerously hurt religion in this island; so, we expect confidently the like of our brethren in England united in Covenant with us, and that what ever they may have cause to fear, or be called to suffer, yet the Lord will so strengthen them by his grace, as that they may be able to say, "All this is come upon us, yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy Covenant." And here is the wisdom and patience of the saints, to choose affliction rather than iniquity, to do duty in the worst of times, and to trust God with events, and in so doing, to hope to the end, and wait upon the Lord, untill he plead their cause, and execute judgement for them; so shall they be more purified, and not made blacker, (as, alas! some are,) but whiter in times of tryall.

More particularly, we do desire that Presbyteriall government may be settled and put in practise throughout that kingdom, according to the Word of God and example of the best reformed churches; for without this we know no other proper and effectuell remedy against the present dangers of religion there, or for purging the Church from scandals, which are destructive either to sound doctrine or to godlinesse; and herein we are confident the experience of all the reformed churches will bear witness with us. Nor do we doubt but in England also time and experience will more and more commend, not only the beautifull order, but the great utility, yea, necessity of this government, and dispell all the clouds of aspersions and prejudices which it lieth under among such as know it not, who ought, therefore, to beware of speaking evill of the things they understand not. Yet we would not have our zeal for Presbyteriall government misunderstood, as if it tended to any rigour or domineering over the flock, or to hinder and exclude that instructing in meeknesse them that oppose themselves, which the apostolicall rule holds forth; or as if we would have any such to be intrusted with that government as are found not yet purged, either from their old profannesse, or from the Prelaticall principles and practises, which were but to put a piece of new cloath into an old garment, and so to make the rent worse; or to put new wine into old bottles, and so to lose both wine and bottles. Yea, who knows whether this may not be one of the causes (and not the least) why the present reformation succeeds the worse, even because of so little repentance, either for the profannesse or Prelaticall errors and corruptions of divers who have acted in it; nevertheless, the right hand of fellowship is to be given to all such as bring forth fruits meet for repentance, whatsoever their former errors or failings were. And to our great joy, we understand that there are many learned, able, godly, and prudent ministers in that kingdome, fit to be employed in that government, together with such able and pious men as are to be joynd with them in the capacity of ruling elders. It shall be a part of our prayers, that the Lord of the harvest may send forth many more labourers in that kingdome, where the harvest is so great and the labourers so few proportionably; and in the meane while, that such as he hath already thrust out may not be unemployed, as to the point of discipline and government.

Nor, lastly, doth our zeal for the Covenant and Presbyteriall government abate or diminish any thing at all from our loyalty and duty to the King's Majesty, although incendiaries and enemies spare not to reproach this Church and kingdome with disloyaltie. Yet such calumnies will easily be repudiate by all who will examine the whole course of the publike proceedings in this nation in referenee to the King, and particularly the Declaration of the Parliament of this kingdome, dated January 16, 1647. Wherefore, passing all such calumnies, which cannot but be hatefull to God and good men, we do clearly and candidly professe, that the Covenant and Presbyteriall government are so far from hindering or excluding our duty to the King, that it is thereby very much strengthened and supported; for our giving to God what is God's, doth not hinder us, but help us, to give unto Cæsar what is Cæsar's. And we earnestly wish his Majestie's royall heart may be graciously inclined to the just desires of his good subjects in both kingdomes, and to that happy settlement of truth and peace, religion and righteousnesse, which may be as well for the establishment of his own throne as for the good of his people.

Now the Prince of Peace himself grant his afflicted people, tossed with tempests, and not comforted, a safe and well grounded peace, bring light out of the present darkness, and order out of all these confusions—give unto all who are waiting for the consolation of Israel “good hope through grace, comfort their hearts, stablish them in every good word and work,”—make his cause to triumph at last over all opposition, and the enemies foot to slide in due time; and so put a new song of praise in the mouths of his people. Amen.

Sess. 19, August 24, 1647, ante meridiem.—Act for observing the Directions of the Generall Assembly for Secret and Private Worship, and mutuall Edification, and for censuring such as neglect Familie Worship.

The Generall Assembly, after mature deliberation, doth approve the following rules and directions for cherishing piety, and preventing division and schisme, and doth appoint ministers and ruling elders in each congregation to take special care that these directions be observed and followed; as likewise, that Presbyteries and Provinciall Synods enquire and make tryall whether the said directions be duly observed in their bounds, and to reprove or censure (according to the quality of the offence) such as shall be found to be reproveable or censurable therein. And to the end that these directions may not be rendered ineffectuall and unprofitable among some, through the usuall neglect of the very substance of the duty of family worship, the Assembly doth further require and appoint ministers and ruling elders to make diligent search and enquiry in the congregations committed to their charge respectively, whether there be among them any family or families which use to neglect this necessary duty; and if any such family be found, the head of that family is to be first admonished privately to amend this fault; and, in ease of his continuing therein, he is to be gravely and sadly reprov'd by the session; after which reproof, if he be found still to neglect family worship, let him be, for his obstinaey in such an offence, suspended and debarred from the Lord's Supper, as being justly esteemed unworthy to communicate therein till he amend.

*The Directions of the Generall Assembly for Secret and Private Worship, and mutuall Edification, for cherishing Piety, for maintaining Unitie, and avoiding Schisme and Division.

Besides the publike worship in congregations, mercifully established in this land in great purity, it is expedient and necessary that secret worship of each person alone, and private worship of families, be pressed and set up; that with nationall reformation the profession and power of godlinesse, both personall and domestick, be advanced.

I. And, first, for secret worship, it is most necessar that every one apart and by themselves be given to prayer and meditation, the unspeakable benefit whereof is best known to them who are most exercised therein. This being the meane whereby, in a special way, communion with God is entertained, and right preparation for all other duties obtained; and, therefore, it becometh not only pastors within their severall charges to presse persons of all sorts to performe this duty morning and evening, and at other occasions, but also it is incumbent to the head of every family to have a care that both themselves and all within their charge be daily diligent herein.

II. The ordinar duties comprehended under the exercise of pietie, which should be in families when they are convened to that effect, are these: First, Prayer and praises performed, with a speciall reference as well to the publike condition of the Kirk of God and this kingdome as to the present case of the family, and every member thereof. Next, Reading of Scriptres, with catechizing in a plaine way, that the understandings of the simpler may be better enabled to profit under the publike ordinances, and they made more capable to understand the Scriptres when they are read; together with godly conferences, tending to the edification of all the members in the most holy faith, as also admonition and rebuke upon just reasons from these who have authoritie in the family.

III. As the charge and office of interpreting the holy Scriptures is a part of the ministerial calling, which none (howsoever otherwise qualified) should take upon him in any place, but he that is duly called thereunto by God and his Kirk; so in every family where there is any that can read, the Holy Scriptures should be read ordinarily to the family; and it is commendable that thereafter they confer, and by way of conference make some good use of what hath been read and heard; as, for example, if any sin be reprov'd in the word read, use may be made thereof to make all the family circumspect and watefull against the same; or if any judgement be threatned, or mentioned to have been inflicted in that portion of Scripture which is read, use may be made to make all the family fear lest the same or a worse judgement befall them, unlesse they beware of the sin that procured it; and, finally, if any duty be required, or comfort held forth in a promise, use may be made to stirre up themselves to imploy Christ for strength to enable them for doing the commanded duty, and to apply the offered comfort; in all which the master of the family is to have the chif hand, and any member of the family may propone ane question or doubt for resolution.

IV. The head of the family is to take care that none of the family withdraw himself from any part of family worship; and seeing the ordinar performance of all the parts of family worship belongeth properly to the head of the family, the minister is to stirre up such as are lasie, and traine up such as are weak to a fitnessse for these exercises. It being alwayes free to persons of qualitie to entertain one approved by the Presbytery for performing family exercise; and in other families where the head of the family is unfit, that another constantly residing in the familie, approved by the minister and session, may be employed in that service, wherein the minister and session are to be countable to the Presbyterie. And if a minister by divine Providence be brought to any family, it is requisite that at no time he convey a part of the family for worship secluding the rest, except in singular cases, specially concerning these parties, which (in Christian prudence) need not, or ought not to be imparted to others.

V. Let no idler who hath no particular calling, or vagrant person, under pretence of a calling, be suffered to perform worship in families, to or for the same; seeing persons tainted with errors, or aiming at division, may be ready (after that manner) to creep into houses, and lead captive silly and unstable souls.

VI. At family worship a speciall care is to be had that each family keep by themselves; neither requiring, inviting, nor admitting persons from divers families, unlesse it be these who are lodged with them, or at meal, or otherwise with them, upon some lawfull occasion.

VII. Whatsoever hath been the effects and fruits of meetings of persons of divers families in the times of corruption or trouble, (in which cases many things are commendable, which otherwise are not tolerable,) yet when God hath blessed us with peace and the purity of the Gospel, such meetings of persons of divers families (except in the cases mentioned in these directions) are to be disapproved, as tending to the hinderance of the religious exercise of each family by itself, to the prejudice of the publike ministry, to the renting of the families of particular congregations, and (in progresse of time) of the whole kirk, besides many offences which may come thereby, to the hardning of the hearts of carnall men, and grief of the godly.

VIII. On the Lord's day, after every one of the family apart, and the whole family together, have sought the Lord (in whose hands the preparation of men's hearts are) to fit them for the publike worship, and to blesse to them the publike ordinances, the master of the family ought to take care that all within his charge repair to the publike worship, that he and they may joyne with the rest of the congregation; and the publike worship being finished, after prayer, he should take an account what they have heard, and thereafter to spend the rest of the time which they may spare in catechising and in spirituall conferences upon the Word of God; or else (going apart) they ought to apply themselves to reading, meditation, and secret prayer, that they may confirme and increase their communion with God; that so the profit which they found in the publike ordinances may be cherished and promoved, and they more edified unto eternall life.

IX. So many as can conceive prayer ought to make use of that gift of God; albeit these who are rude and weaker may begin at a set form of prayer; but so as they be not sluggish in stirring up in themselves (according to their daily necessities) the Spirit of prayer, which is given to all the children of God in some measure. To which effect they ought to be the more fervent and frequent in secret prayer to God, for enabling of their hearts to conceive, and their tongues to expresse, convenient desires to God for their family. And, in the mean time, for their greater encouragement, let these materialls of prayer be meditated upon, and made use of as followeth:—

Let them confesse to God how unworthy they are to come in his presence, and unfit to worship his Majestic; and therefore earnestly ask of God the Spirit of prayer.

They are to confesse their sins, and the sins of the family, accusing, judging, and condemning themselves for them, till they bring their souls to some measure of true humiliation.

They are to pour out their souls to God, in the name of Christ, by the Spirit, for forgiveness of sins, for grace to repent, to believe, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly, and that they may serve God with joy and delight in walking before him.

They are to give thanks to God for his many mercies to his people, and to themselves, and especially for his love in Christ, and for the light of the Gospel.

They are to pray for such particular benefits, spirituall and temporall, as they stand in need of for the time, (whether it be morning or evening,) as health or sicknesse, prosperitie or adversitie.

They ought to pray for the Kirk of Christ in general—for all the reformed kirks, and for this kirk in particular—and for all that suffer for the name of Christ,—for all our superiours, the King's Majesty, the Queene, and their children—for the magistrates, ministers, and whole body of the congregation whereof they are members, as well for their neighbours absent in their lawfull affaires, as for those that are at home.

The prayer may be closed with an earnest desire, that God may be glorified in the comming of the kingdome of his Son, and in the doing of his will; and with assurance that themselves are accepted, and what they have asked according to his will shall be done.

X. These exercises ought to be performed in great sinceritie without delay, laying aside all exercises of worldly businesse or hinderances, notwithstanding the mockings of Atheists and profane men; in respect of the great mercies of God to this land, and of his severe corrections wherewith lately he hath exercised us. And, to this effect, persons of eminency (and all elders of the kirk) not only ought to stir up themselves and their families to diligence herein, but also to concurre effectually, that in all other families where they have power and charge the said exercises be conscionably performed.

XI. Besides the ordinary duties in families, which are above mentioned, extraordinary duties, both of humiliation and thanksgiving, are to be carefully performed in families, when the Lord by extraordinary occasions (private or publike) calleth for them.

XII. Seeing the Word of God requireth that we should consider one another to provoke unto love and good works, therefore, at all times, and specially in this time, wherein profanitie abounds, and mockers, walking after their own lusts, think it strange that others run not with them to the same excesse of riot, every member of this Kirk ought to stir up themselves, and one another, to the duties of mutuall edification, by instruction, admonition, rebuke, exhorting one another to manifest the grace of God, "in denying ungodlinesse and worldly lusts, and in living godly, soberly, and righteously in this present world," by comforting the feeble-minded, and praying with or for one another; which duties respectively are to be performed upon speciall occasions offered by divine providence; as namely, when under any calamity, crosse, or great difficultie, counsel or comfort is sought, or when an offender is to be reclaimed by private admonition, and if that be not effectually, by joyning one or two more in the admonition, according to the rule of Christ, "that in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word may be established."

XIII. And because it is not given to every one to speak a word in season to a wearied or distressed conscience, it is expedient that a person (in that case) finding no ease after the use of all ordinary means, private and publike, have their addresse to their own pastour, or some experienced Christian; but if the person troubled in conscience be of that condition, or of that sex, that discretion, modestie, or fear of scandall, requireth a godly, grave, and secret friend to be present with them in their said addresse, it is expedient that such a friend be present.

XIV. When persons of divers families are brought together by divine providence, being abroad upon their particular vocations, or any necessary occasions, as they would have the Lord their God with them whithersoever they go, they ought to walk with God, and not neglect the duties of prayer and thanksgiving, but take care that the same be performed by such as the company shall judge fittest; and that they likewise take heed that "no corrupt communication proceed out of their mouth, but that which is good, to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace to the hearers."

The drift and scope of all these directions is no other but that, upon the one part, the power and practice of godlinesse among all the ministers and members of this Kirk, according to their severall places and vocations, may be cherished and advanced, and all impietie and mocking of religious exercises suppressed; and, upon the other part, that under the name and pretext of religious exercises, no such meetings or practices be allowed, as are apt to breed error, scandall, schisme, contempt or misregard of the publike ordinances and ministers, or neglect of the duties of particular callings, or such other evils as are the works not of the Spirit, but of the flesh, and are contrary to truth and peace.

Act against such as withdraw themselves from the Publike Worship in their own Congregation.

Since it hath pleased God of his infinite goodnesse to blesse his Kirk within this nation with the riches of the Gospel, in giving to us his ordinances in great purity, liberty, and withall a comely and well-established order: The Assembly, in the zeal of God, for preserving order, unitie, and peace in the Kirk, for maintaining that respect which is due to the ordinances and ministers of Jesus Christ, for preventing schisme, noysome errors, and all unlawfull practices, which may follow on the people's withdrawing themselves from their own congregations, doth charge every minister to be diligent in fulfilling his ministerie—to be holy and grave in his conversation—to be faithfull in preaching, declaring the whole counsell of God—and as he hath occasion from the text of Scripture, to reprove the sins and errours, and presse the duties of the time, and in all those to observe the rules prescribed by the Acts of Assembly; wherein if he be negligent, he is to be censured by his own Presbytery. As also, ordains every member in every congregation to keep their own paroch kirk, to communicate there in the Word and Sacraments; and if any person or persons shall hereafter usually absent themselves from their own congregations, except in urgent eases, made known to and approven by the Presbytery, the ministers of these congregations whereto they resort shall, both in publike by preaching, and in private admonition, shew their dislike of their withdrawing from their own minister; that in so doing, they may wnesse to all that heare them their due care to strengthen the hands of their fellow-labourers in the work of the Lord, and their detestation of any thing that may tend to separation, or any of the abovementioned evils; hereby their own flock will be confirmed in their stedfastnesse, and the unstable spirits of others will be rectified. Likeas, the minister of that congregation from which they do withdraw shall labour, first by private admonition, to reclaim them; and if any, after private admonition given by their own pastour, do not amend, in that case the pastour shall delate the foresaid persons to the session, who shall cite and censure them as contemners of the comely order of the Kirk; and if the matter be not taken order with there, it is to be brought to the Presbytery; for the better observing whereof, the Presbyteries at the visitation of the severall kirks, and Provinciall Assemblies in their censure of the severall Presbyteries, shall enquire hercanent; which inquire and report shall be registrate in the Provinciall books, that their diligence may be seen in the General Assembly.

Sess. 22, August 26, 1647, post meridiem.—Approbation of the Proceedings of the Commission of the preceding Assembly.

The Generall Assembly, after mature deliberation, do ratifie and approve the whole Acts and Conclusions of the Commissioners of the preceding Assembly for Publike Affaires now tryed and examined; declaring that they have proceeded therein with much zeal, wisdome, vigilance, and according to their Commission.

Sess. 23, August 27, 1647, ante meridiem.—Approbation of the Confession of Faith.

A Confession of Faith for the Kirks of God in the three kingdomes, being the chiefest part of that uniformity in religion, which, by the Solemne League and Covenant, we are bound to endeavour; and there being accordingly a Confession of Faith agreed upon by the Assembly of Divines sitting at Westminster, with the assistance of Commissioners from the Kirk of Scotland; which Confession was sent from our Commissioners at London to the Commissioners of the Kirk met at Edinburgh in January last, and hath been in this Assembly twice publikely read over, examined, and considered; copies thereof being also printed, that it might be particularly perused by all the members of this Assembly, unto whom frequent intimation was publikely made to put in their doubts and objections, if they had any; and the said Confession being, upon due examination thereof, found by the Assembly to be most agreeable to the Word of God, and in nothing contrary to the received doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of this Kirk; and, lastly, it being so necessary and so much longed for that the said Confession be, with all possible diligence and expedition, approved and established in both kingdoms, as a principal part of the intended uniformity in religion, and as a special means for the more effectual suppressing of the many dangerous errours and heresies of these times: The Generall Assembly doth, therefore, after mature deliberation, Agree unto and Approve the said Confession, as to the truth of the matter, (judging it to be most orthodox, and grounded upon the Word of God;) and also as to the point of uniformity, agreeing, for our part, that it be a common Confession of Faith for the three kingdomes. The Assembly doth also blesse the Lord, and thankfully acknowledge his great mercy, in that so excellent a Confession of Faith is prepared, and thus far agreed upon in both kingdomes; which we look upon as a great strengthening of the true reformed religion against the common enemies thereof. But lest our intention and meaning be in some particulars misunderstood, it is hereby expressly declared and provided, that the not mentioning in this Confession the severall sort of ecclesiasticall officers and assemblies shall be no prejudice to the truth of Christ in these particulars to be expressed fully in the Directory of Government. It is further declared, that the Assembly understandeth some parts of the Second Article of the Thirty-One Chapter only of Kirks not settled or constituted in point of government; and that although in such kirks a synod of ministers and other fit persons may be called by the magistrate's authority and nomination, without any other call, to consult and advise with about matters of religion; and although likewise the ministers of Christ, without delegation from their churches, may of themselves, and by vertue of their office, meet together synodically in such kirks not yet constituted, yet neither or these ought to be done in kirks constituted and settled; it being always free to the magistrate to advise with synods of ministers and ruling elders, meeting upon delegation from their churches, either ordinarily, or being indicted by his authority occasionally and pro re nata, it being also free to assemble together synodically, as well pro re nata as at the ordinary times upon delegation from the churches, by the intrinsical power received from Christ, as often as it is necessary for the good of the Church so to assemble, in case the magistrate, to the detriment of the Church, withhold or deny his consent; the necessity of occasionall Assemblies being first remonstrate unto him by humble supplication.

Sess. 25, August 28, 1647, post meridiem.—Act for Revising the Paraphrase of the Psalmes brought from England, with a Recommendation for Translating the other Scripturall Songs in Meeter.

The Generall Assembly, having considered the report of the committee concerning the Paraphrase of the Psalmes sent from England, and finding that it is very necessary that the said paraphrase be yet revised; therefore, doth appoint Master John Adamson to examine the first fourty Psalmes, Master Thomas Craufurd the second fourty, Master John Row the third fourty, and Master John Nevey the last thirty Psalmes of that Paraphrase; and in their examination they shall not only observe what they think needs to be amended, but also to set downe their own essay for correcteing thereof; and, for this purpose, recommends to them to make use of the travels of Rowallen, Master Zachary Boyd, or of any other on that subject, but especially of our own Paraphrase, that what they finde better in any of these works may be chosen; and, likewise, they shall make use of the animadversions sent from Presbyteries, who, for this cause, are hereby desired to hasten their observations unto them, and they are to make report of their labours herein to the Commission of the Assembly for Publike Affaires, against their first meeting in February next. And the Commission, after revising thereof, shall send the same to Provincial Assemblies, to be transmitted to Presbyteries, that by their further consideration the matter may be fully prepared to the next Assembly; and because some Psalmes in that Paraphrase sent from England are composed in verses which do not agree with the common tunes, therefore, it is also recommended that these Psalmes be likewise turned in other verses which may agree to the common tunes; that is, having the first line of eight syllabs, and the second line of six, that so both versions being together, use may be made of either of them in congregations as shall be found convenient. And the Assembly doth further recommend, that Mr Zachary Boyd be at the paines to translate the other Scripturall songs in meeter, and to report his travels also to the Commission of Assembly, that, after their examination thereof, they may send the same to Presbyteries to be there considered untill the next Generall Assembly.

Act recommending the Execution of the Act of Parliament at Perth, for uplifting Pecuniall Paines to be employed upon Pious Uses, and of all Acts of Parliament made against Excommunicate Persons.

The Generall Assembly doth seriously recommend and ordaine, that Presbyteries diligently endeavour, that the ninth Act of the Parliament holden at Perth anno 1645, concerning the uplifting of pecuniall paines to be employed upon pious uses, may be put to due execution within their severall bounds; and also, that the Acts of Parliament against excommunicate persons, especially the twentieth Act of the Parliament in March last, be also carefully execute; and that they cause use all diligence to that effect, and account hereof shall be required in Provincially and Generall Assemblies.

Sess. 26, August ult. 1647, ante meridiem.—Act discharging the importing, venting, or spreading of erroneous Books or Papers.

The Generall Assembly, considering how the errors of Independency and Separation have (in our neighbour kingdome of England) spread as a gangræn, and do daily eat as a canker, in so much that exceeding many errors, heresies, schismes, and blasphemies, have issued therefrom, and are sheltered thereby; and how possible it is for the same evils to invade and overspread this Kirk and kingdome, (lying within the same island,) by the spreading of their erroneous books, pamphlets, lybels, and letters, and by conversing with them that are infected with these errors, except the same be timously prevented; Doe, therefore, in the name of God, inhibit and discharge all members of this Kirk and kingdome to converse with persons tainted with such errors; or to import, sell, spread, vent, or disperse such erroneous books or papers: But that they beware of, and abstain from books maintaining Independencie or Separation, and from all Antinomian, Anabaptisticall, and other erroneous books and papers; requiring all ministers to warne their flocks against such bookes in generall, and particularly such as are most plausible, insinuating, and dangerous: And to try carefully from time to time if any such bookes be brought into this countrey from England, or from beyond seas, (which is especially recommended to ministers on sea coasts, or towns where any stationers are,) and if any shall be found, to present the same to the Presbyterie, that some course may be taken to hinder the dispersing thereof: And hereby all Presbyteries and Synods are ordained to try and processe such as shall transgresse against the premisses, or any part of the same. And the Assembly also doth seriously recommend to civill magistrates, that they may be pleased to be assisting to ministers and Presbyteries in execution of this act, and to concur with their authority in every thing to that effect.

Act for Debarring of Complyers in the First Classe from Ecclesiastick Office.

The Generall Assembly declares and ordaines, That no person who is guilty of compliance in the first classe mentioned in the Act of the preceding Assembly, shall be received in any ecclesiasticall charge untill the evidence of his repentance before the Presbyterie and congregation be reported to the Synode to which he belongs, and to the Generall Assembly, and their consent obtained for his bearing office. And if any such person be already received unto the eldership of any particular congregation, yet he shall not be admitted to be a member of any Presbyterie, Synode, or Generall Assemblie, untill (upon the evidence of his repentance) the consent and approbation of these judicatories respectively be obtained thereto.

Act for Pressing and Furthering the Plantation of Kirks.

The Generall Assembly, considering how the work of provision, plantation, convenient dividing, dismembring, better uniting or enlarging of parish kirks, is hitherto foreslowed, to the great prejudice of many ministers, many good people, and hinderance of the work of reformation, doth therefore ordaine, That all Presbyteries have speciall care that the present opportunity be diligently improved by all their members, as need is, before the Commission for Plantation of Kirks, as they would not be found censurable for neglect. And that every Presbytery send in to the next Generall Assembly the names of all their parishes, with declaration which of them have ministers, which not; what is the largenesse of the bounds; commodious or incommodious situation of each parish kirk; what is the number of communicants; what kirks are under patrons, what not; who are the severall patrons; what is the nature and quantitie of the present provision, or possible ground of further provision for competent maintenance where the same is not sufficiently provided already: As also, what parishes are united or disunited, or bettered already, and in what measure, by the said commission; that the Generall Assembly being acquaint therewith, may doe accordingly, both for censuring neglecters and finding out overtures for better furtherance of the work for time to come. Moreover, it is hereby ordained, That the next ensuing Provincially Synodes crave account of the severall Presbyteries their diligence, and presse that they have it ready in writ to present to the Provincially Synodes in April next to come, that so all may be in readinesse, and the full account made at the next Generall Assembly.

Act for Censuring Absents from the Generall Assembly.

The Generall Assembly, considering the absence of many commissioners in this and other preceding Assemblies, and that many of those present have gone from the Assembly before the dissolving thereof; therefore, for remedie hercof in time coming, doth ordaine, that hereafter every commissioner from Presbyteries and Universities who shall be absent from the Assembly without a reasonable excuse notified to the Assembly, or who being present shall go from the Assembly before the dissolving thereof without a licence, shall be suspended by the Assembly untill the Provincially Synode next thereafter following.

Renovation of former Acts of Assembly for Triall and Admission of Expectants to the Ministerie.

The Generall Assembly doth hereby renew and confirme all former acts and ordinances for triall and admission of expectants to the ministry, especially the articles thereanent allowed by the Generall Assembly, 1596, and approven in the Assembly at Glasgow, 1638—the thirteenth article concerning the age of intrants to the ministry, and the twentie-fourth article concerning the triall of expectants, of an Act of the said Assembly at Glasgow, Sess. 23—and the Act of the Assembly at St Andrews, 1642, Sess. 7, concerning lists for presentations from the King, and the trial of expectants, &c.; ordaining Presbyteries to observe the same carefully in all time coming.

Sess. 28, Eodem die, post meridiem.—Renovation of the Commission for Prosecuting the Treaty for Uniformity in England.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their consideration that the treaty of uniformity in religion in all his Majestie's dominions is not yet perfected; therefore renews the power and commission granted by preceding Assemblies for prosecuting that treaty, unto the persons after named, viz.: Master Robert Douglas, Master Samuel Rutherford, Master Robert Baillie, Master George Gillespie, Ministers; and John Earle of Lauderdaill, John Lord Balmerino, and Sir Archibald Johnstoun of Waristoun, Elders, authorising them, with full power, to prosecute the said treaty of uniformity, with the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England, and the Reverend Assembly of Divines there, or any committees appointed by them; and to doe all and every thing which may advance, perfect, and bring that treaty to an happy conclusion, conforme to the commissions given thereanent.

Renovation of the Commission for the Publike Affaires of the Kirk.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their consideration, that in respect the great work of uniformity in religion in all his Majestie's dominions is not yet perfected, (though by the Lord's blessing there is a good progresse made in the same,) there is a necessity of renewing the Commissions granted formerly for prosecuting and perfecting that great work; doe, therefore, renew the power and Commission granted for the Publike Affaires of the Kirk, by the Generall Assemblies held in St Andrews, 1642, and at Edinburgh, 1643, 1644, 1645, and 1646, unto the persons following, viz.: Masters Alexander Casse, Samuel Douglas, Robert Knox, William Penman, James Guthrie, Robert Cuninghame, David Fletcher, Robert Lawder, Andrew Stevenson, Robert Davidson, David Calderwood, James Fleming, Robert Ker, James Fairlie, Oliver Colt, Patrick Sibbald, Andrew Ramsay, John Adamson, Robert Douglas, William Colvill, George Gillespie, Mungo Law, Andrew Fairfoul, George Lesly, Robert Lawrie, Alexander Spittle, Alexander Dickson, John Hay, Thomas Vassie, Ephraim Melvill, Patrick Scheill, Alexander Simmervail, George Bennet, Alexander Levingstoun, Robert Murray, Alexander Rolloek, William Menzies, Alexander Ireland, John Friebairn, George Murray, Henrie Guthrie, William Justice, Robert Wright, Henrie Livingstoun, James Hammiltoun, George Gladstanes, Bernard Sanderson, Andrew Lawder, George Rutherford, John Levingstoun, George Hutcheson, John Bell, Hugh Mackaile, John Nevey, Matthew Brisbane, John Hammiltoun, Allan Ferguson, David Dickson, Zachary Boyd, Robert Ramsay, Robert Baillie, James Nasmith, Francis Aird, Robert Birnie, Thomas Kirkaldie, Evan Cameron, Robert Blair, Coline Adam, George Hammiltoun, Samuel Rutherford, Alexander Colvill, John Ramsay, James Martein, William Levingstoun, Thomas Melvill, John Smith, Frederick Carmichael, Patrick Gillespie, Alexander Moncreif, John Duncan, James Sibbald, Walter Brnee, George Pittillo, Andrew Affleck, John Barclay, Thomas Peirson, William Rait, David Strachan, Andrew Cant, William Douglas, John Forbes, George Sharp, William Chalmer, Joseph Brodie, Alexander Simmer, Gilbert Anderson, William Smith, Ministers; and Archibald Marques of Argile, John Earle of Crawford, Alexander Earle of Eglintoun, William Earle of Glencairne, John Earle of Cassils, James Earle of Home, James Earle of Tullibairdine, Francis Earle of Bukleuch, John Earle of Lawderdaill, William Earle of Lothian, James Earle of Finlatour, William Earle of Lanerk, James Earle of Callendar, Archibald Lord Angus, George Lord Brichen, John Lord Yester, John Lord Balmerino, James Lord Cowper, John Lord Barganie, Sir Archibald Johnstoun of Waristoun, Sir John Hope of Craighall, Arthur Areskine of Scotiscraig, Alexander Fraser of Phillorth, Frederick Lyon of Brigton, James Mackdougall of Garthland, Sir William Cockburne of Langton, Sir Andrew Ker of Greinheid, Sir Hugh Campbell of Cesnock, Sir James Levingstoun of Kilsyth, Sir Thomas Ruthven of Freeland, Sir Gilbert Ramsay of Balmayne, John Henderson of Fordell, Walter Dundas, younger of that ilk, Sir William Scot, younger of Harden, Sir Lodovick Gordoun, Master George Winrhame of Libertoun, Alexander Levingstoun of Saltcoats, John Brisbane of Bishoptoun, Sir Robert Douglas of Tulliquhillie, James Pringle of Torwoodlie, Sir James Nieolsons of Coldbrandspath, William Ker of Newtoun, William Forbes, younger of Lesly, John Kennedy of Carmucks, Robert Arbuthnot of Findowrie, Alexander Brodie of Letham, Master Robert Narne, younger of Strathurd, Master James Schoncir of Caskeberrie, James Ruchheid, Lawrence Hendersone, James Stewart, David Douglas, John Jaffray, George Porterfield, John Semple, John Kennedy, William Glendinning, Master John Cowan, John Mill, Elders; giving unto them full power and commission to doe all and every thing for prosecuting, advancing, perfecting, and bringing the said work of uniformity in religion in all his Majestie's dominions to a happy conclusion, conform to the former Commissions granted by preceding Assemblies thereanent: And to that effect, appoints them, or any seventeen of them, whereof thirteen shall be ministers, to meet here in this city, in the afternoon at four hours, and thereafter upon the last Wednesdayes of November, February, and May next, and upon any other day, and in any other place, they shall think fit. And further, in case delinquents have no constant residence in any one Presbyterie, or if Presbyteries be negligent or overawed, in these cases the Assemblie gives to the persons before named full power of censuring compliers and persons disaffected to the Covenant, according to the Acts of Assemblie; declaring always and providing, that ministers shall not be deposed but in one of the quarterly meetings of this Commission, with full power to them to treat and determine in the matters aforesaid, and in all other matters referred unto them by this Assemblie, as fully and freely as if the same were here particularly expressed, and with as ample power as any Commission of any former Generall Assemblies hath had or been in use of before, they being alwayes for their whole proceedings countable to and censurable by the next Generall Assembly.

Desires and Overtures from the Commissioners of Universities, and the Assemblie's Answer thereto.

I. The Commissioners of Universities represents to the Assembly, First, That the Overtures of the Assembly, 1643, for the visitation of schools, and the advancement of learning, are very much neglected.

The Assembly recommends to Synods to take account of the observation of these Overtures.

II. That it were good to exhort all the Universities to be careful to take account of all their schollers on the Sabbath-day of the sermons, and of their lessons of the Catechisme.

The Assembly approves this Overture, and recommends accordingly.

III. That all the Universities be exhorted to send their commissioners instructed with answers to the Overtures agreed upon by the commissioners of Universities, and which from this meeting of their commissioners, shall be communicate to them, and this to be, when their commissioners come in Februar or March to the commission of the Kirk.

The Assemblie recommends to Universities to be carefull hercof.

IV. That the Overtures concerning the providing of Bursars for Divinity be recommended to Presbyteries and Synods, and that they report their diligence to the next Assembly.

The Assembly allows this Article, and recommends accordingly.

Sess. Ult., September 1, 1647.—The Assemblie's Letter to their Countrey men in Poleland, Swedland, Denmarke, and Hungarie.

Unto the Scots Merchants and others, our countrey people scattered in Poleland, Swedland, Denmark, and Hungary, The General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland wisheth grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

Althoich this Kirk of Scotland, whiles spoiled of her liberties under the Prelatical tyrannie, had much difficultie and wrestling to preserve the true reformed religion from being quite extinguished among ourselves; yet, since the mighty and outstretched arme of the Lord our God hath brought us out of that Egypt, and hath restored to us well constituted and free national Synods, it hath been our desire and endeavour to set forward the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the purity of his ordinances, not only throughout this nation, but in other parts also, so far as God gave us a call and opportunity, and opened a way unto us. And among other things of this nature, we have more particularly taken into our serious thoughts the sad and lamentable condition of many thousands of you our countrymen, who are scattered abroad, as sheepe having no shepherd, and are, through the want of the meanes of knowledge, grace, and salvation, exposed to the greatest spirituall dangers, whether through ignorance, or through manifold tentations, to errors and false religions, or through the occasions and snares of sinne.

We have therefore thought it incumbent to us to put you in minde of the one thing necessary, while you are so carefull and troubled about the things of the world; and although we do not disallow your going abroad to follow any lawfull calling or way of livelyhood, yet, seeing it cannot "profit a man, although he should gain the whole world and lose his own soul;" and seeing you have travelled so farre, and taken so much pains to get uncertain riches, which cannot deliver in the day of the wrath of the Lord, and which men know not who shall inherit; we doe, from our affection to the salvation of your immortal souls, most earnestly beseech and warn you to cry after knowledge, and lift up your voyce for understanding, seeking her as silver, and searching for her as for hid treasures, and so play the wise merchants, in purchasing the pearl of price, and in laying up a sure foundation for the time to come, by acquainting your souls with Jesus Christ, and by faith taking hold of him whose free grace is now offered and held out to sinners, excludng none among all the kindreds of the earth who will come unto him. God forbid, that you should let slip the time and offers of grace, or neglect any warning of this kinde sent to you in the name of the Lord. We shall hope better things of you; and that knowing the acceptable time and the day of salvation will not alwayes last, but the Lord Jesus is to be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the Gospel, you will the rather bestirre yourselves timely, and with all diligence to seek the Lord while he may be found—to endeavour that you may have among you the ordinary means of grace and salvation—to pray that God would give you pastors according to his heart, who shall feede you with knowledge and understanding—to consult also and agree among yourselves, with consent of your superiors, under whom you live, (whose favour and good will, we trust, will not be wanting to you in so good and necessary a work,) for setting up the worship of God and ecclesiasticall discipline among you, according to the form established and received in this your mother Kirk, and for a way of settled maintenance to pastors and teachers; which if you do, our commissioners, appointed to meet from time to time, in the intervall betwixt this and the next Nationall Assembly, will be ready (upon your desire made known to them) to provide some able and godly ministers for you, as likewise to communicate to you our Directory for the Publike Worship of God, and our Form of Ecclesiasticall Government and Discipline, together with the Confession of Faith and Catechisme.

And, in the meane time, we exhort you that ye neglect not the worship of God in secret and in your families, and that ye continue stedfast in the profession of that faith in which ye were baptised, and by a godly, righteous, and sober conversation adorn the Gospel; and with all, that distance of place make you not the lesse sensible of your cuntry's sufferings, both in respect of the just judgements of God for the sinnes of the land, and in respect of the malice of enemies for the common cause and Covenant of the three kingdoms, of which happie conjunction, notwithstanding we do not repent us, but by the grace of God shall continue faithful and steadfast therein.

This letter we have thought fit to be printed and published, that it may be with the greater ease and conveniency conveyed to the many several places of your habitation or traffique. Consider what we have said, and the Lord give you understanding in all things. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

Edinburgh, August 31, 1647.

Act concerning the Hundred and Eleven Propositions therein mentioned.

Being tender of so great an engagement by Solemn Covenant, sincerely, really, and constantly to endeavour, in our place and callings, the preservation of the Reformed religion in this Kirk of Scotland, in doctrine, worship, discipline, and government—the reformation of religion in the kingdomes of England and Ireland in doctrine, worship, discipline, and government, according to the Word of God and the example of the best reformed Kirks—and to endeavour the nearest conjunction and uniformity in all these, together with the extirpation of heresie, schisme, and whatsoever shall be found contrary to sound doctrine; and, considering withall, that one of the speciall means which it becometh us in our places and callings to use in pursuance of these ends, is, in zeal for the true Reformed religion, to give our publike testimony against the dangerous tenets of Erastianisme, Independencie, and which is falsely called Liberty of Conscience, which are not only contrary to sound doctrine, but more speciall lets and hinderance, as well to the preservation of our own received doctrine, worship, discipline, and government, as to the work of reformation and uniformity in England and Ireland. The Generall Assembly, upon these considerations, having heard publickly read the 111 following Propositions,* exhibited and tendered by some brethren who were appointed to prepare articles or propositions for the vindication of the truth in these particulars, Doth unanimously approve and agree unto these eight generall Heads of Doctrine therein contained and asserted, viz. 1. That the Ministry of the Word and the Administration of the Sacraments of the New Testament, Baptisme and the Lord's Supper, are standing Ordinances instituted by God himself, to continue in the Church to the end of the world. 2. That such as administer the Word and Sacraments ought to be duly called and ordained thereunto. 3. That some Ecclesiasticall Censures are proper and peculiar to be inflicted only upon such as bear office in the Kirk; other censures are common, and may be inflicted both on Ministers and other Members of the Kirk. 4. That the censure of Suspension from the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, inflicted because of grosse ignorance, or because of a scandalous life and conversation, as likewise the censure of excommunication, or casting out of the Kirk flagitious or contumacious offenders, both the one censure and the other is warrantable by, and grounded upon, the Word of God, and is necessary (in respect of divine institution) to be in the Kirk. 5. That as the rights, power, and authority of the Civill Magistrate are to be maintained according to the Word of God, and the Confessions of the Faith of the Reformed Kirks; so it is no lesse true and certaine that Jesus Christ, the only Head and only King of the Kirk, hath instituted and appointed a Kirk Government distinct from the Civill Government or Magistracie. 6. That the Ecclesiasticall Government is committed and intrusted by Christ to the Assemblies of the Kirk, made up of the Ministers of the Word and Ruling Elders. 7. That the lesser and inferiour Ecclesiasticall Assemblies ought to be subordinate and subject unto the greater and superiour Assemblies. 8. That notwithstanding hereof, the Civill Magistrate may and ought to suppress, by corporall or civill punishments, such as, by spreading error or heresie, or by fomenting schisme, greatly dishonour God, dangerously hurt religion, and disturbe the peace of the Kirk; which Heads of Doctrine (howsoever opposed by the authors and fomenters of the foresaid errors respectively) the Generall Assembly doth firmly beleieve, own, maintaine, and commend unto others, as solide, true, orthodoxe, grounded upon the Word of God, consonant to the judgement both of the ancient and the best Reformed kirks. And because this Assembly (through the multitude of other necessary and pressing businesse) cannot now have so much leisure as to examine and consider particularly the foresaid 111 Propositions: Therefore, a more particular examination thereof is committed and referred to the Theologicall Faculties in the four Universities of this kingdome, and the judgement of each of these Faculties concerning the same is appointed to be reported to the next Generall Assembly. In the meane while, these Propositions shall be printed, both that copies thereof may be sent to Presbyteries, and that it may be free for any that pleaseth to peruse them, and to make known or send their judgement concerning the same to the said next Assembly.

* Not that they are to be heer printed, but because they being to be printed severally, this Act is to be prefixed to them.

Desires and Overtures presented from Presbyteries and Synods, with the Assembly's Answer thereunto.

It is humbly presented to the Assembly, that the children of many of the ordinary beggars want baptisme, themselves also living in great vilenesse, and therefore desire that some remedie may be provided for these abuses.

The Assembly doth seriously recommend to Presbyteries to consider of the best remedies, and to report their opinions to the next Assembly.

That all students of philosophie at their entry, and at their lawreation, be holden to subscribe the League and Covenant, and be urged thereto; and all other persons as they come to age and discretion, before their first receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

The Assembly approves this Overture.

Whereas divers ministers want manes and gleebes, and others have their gleeb so divided in parcells, or lying so farre from their charge as the ministers are thereby much prejudged; we desire that this Generall Assembly will recommend it to be helped by the Parliament or Committee for Planting of Kirks, in the best manner that their Lordships can advise.

Whereas divers kirks were incommodiously united in corrupt times, we desire that the same be now dismembered and adjoynd to other kirks, or erected in kirks by themselves alone, and when the present incumbents agrees thereto, we desire the same to be recommended to the Parliament and Committee for Plantation of Kirks: provided alwayes, that the present ministers, who have laboured and indured the heat of the day, may enjoy the benefit of such parcells as are taken from them during their life.

The Assembly doth approve these two articles, and recommends to the Commissioners for Publike Affaires to assist any interested in the particulars for prosecuting the same before the Honourable Estates of Parliament, or the Commission appointed by them for Plantation of Kirks.

Recommendation to Presbyteries and Provincial Assemblies to consider and report on Matters formerly referred to them.

The Generall Assembly doe yet againe recommend to Presbyteries and Provincial Assemblies to consider all matters formerly referred unto them by preceding Assemblies, and desires that their opinions concerning the same be reported in writ to the next Generall Assembly.

It is this day appointed that the next Generall Assembly shall meet at Edinburgh, the second Wednesday of July, 1648.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY, CONVEENED
AT EDINBURGH, JULY 12, 1648.

Sess. 1, July 12, 1648, post meridiem.—The Letter from the Synod of Divines in England to the Generall Assembly.

Jesus Christ,

As we have great cause to blesse God for the brotherly union of these two nations in the common cause of religion and liberty, and for that good hand of blessing which hath accompanied the joynt endeavours of both in the prosecution thereof: so we cannot but be sadly and deeply sensible of those many obstructions and difficulties wherewith God, in his wisdom, hath seen good to exercise his servants in both kingdoms in the carrying on of that work wherein they stand so much engaged. Herein he hath clearly manifested his own power, wisdom, and goodnesse, for our encouragement to trust him in the managing of his own work, and our utter inability to effect it of our selves; thereby to train us up to a more humble and faithfull dependency upon him to do all, when we by our own wisdom and strength can do nothing. Our perplexities, we must confesse, are and have been many; and yet in the midst of them all we cannot but thankfully acknowledge it as a token for good, and that which hath been, and still is, a great comfort and refreshing to our hearts, that God hath given you wisdom timely to foresee approaching dangers, but especially to behold, as the steadfastnesse of your faith, in that both formerly you have been and at present are able to trust God in straits, and to appear for him in greatest dangers, so your eminent faithfulness and integrity, in your firm adhering to your first principles, and chiefly in your constancy and zeal for the preservation and prosecution of the Solemn League and Covenant, so religiously engaged in by both kingdoms; in your vigorous pursuance whereof, with much thankfulness to God, we are very sensible, more particularly of your steering so steady and even a course between the dangerous rocks of prophanesse and Malignancie on the one hand, and of errour, schisme, heresie, and blasphemy on the other hand; as also of your constant desires and endeavours to preserve the peace and union between the two nations, so nearly and so many wayes united. In all which we humbly acknowledge the merey and faithfulness of God, in guiding you so graciously hitherto; and through his assistanee we shall still be ready to afford you the best help and encouragement of our prayers and praises to God on your behalf; having this confidence, that he who hath already vouchsafed you and us so many blessed pledges of his favour, will, in his own time and way, accomplish his own work, which so much concerneth his own glory and his people's good. To his most gracious protection and guidance in these doubtful and dangerous times we humbly commend you and all your holy endeavours, and rest.

Westminster, June 7, 1648.

Sess. 4, July 15, 1648, ante meridiem.—Act concerning Commissions from Burghs.

It is resolved by the Generall Assembly, untill the matter concerning commissioners from burghs be further thought upon, that, in the mean time, according to the ordinary practise, no commission to the Generall Assembly be admitted from burghs, but such as shall be consented to and approved by the ministry and sessions thereof, the persons elected being always elders.

Sess. 6, July 18, 1648, ante meridiem.—Act concerning the Examining of the Proceedings of the Commissioners of Assemblies.

The Generall Assembly renews and revives the Act of the Assembly holden at Bruntland, anno 1601, concerning the examination of the proceedings of the Commission of the Generall Assembly, tenour whereof follows: "The Assembly hath ordained, that in every Assembly to be convened in all time coming, such as shall happen to be appointed commissioners from the Generall Assembly, to endure whill the Assembly next thereafter, shall give an account of their proceedings during the whole time of their commission in the beginning of the Assembly, before any other cause or matter be handled, and their proceedings to be allowed or disallowed as the Assembly shall think expedient."

Sess. 7, July 18, 1648, post meridiem.—Approbation of the Proceedings of the Commission of the preceding Assembly.

The Generall Assembly, having examined the proceedings of the commission of the preceding Assembly, especially their declarations, remonstrances, representations, petitions, vindication, and other papers, relating to the present Engagement in war, do unanimously finde, that in all their proceedings they have been zealous, diligent, and faithfull, in discharge of the trust committed to them; and, therefore, ratifie and approve the whole proceedings, acts, and conclusions, of the said commission; and particularly their papers relating to the said Engagement, and their judgement of the unlawfulness thereof; appointing Mr John Moncrieff, Moderator, pro tempore, to return them hearty thanks, in name of the Assembly, for their great pains, travells, and fidelity, in matters of so great concernment to the cause of God and to this Kirk, amidst so great and many difficulties.

Sess. 10, July 20, 1648, post meridiem.—Approbation of the Larger Catechisme.

The Generall Assembly, having exactly examined and seriously considered the Larger Catechisme agreed upon by the Assembly of Divines sitting at Westminster, with assistance of Commissioners from this Kirk, copies thereof being printed and sent to Presbyteries for the more exact tryall thereof, and publick intimation being frequently made in this Assembly, that every one that had any doubts or objections upon it might put them in; do finde, upon due examination thereof, that the said Catechisme is agreeable to the Word of God, and in nothing contrary to the received doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of this Kirk, a necessary part of the intended uniformity in religion, and a rich treasure for increasing knowledge among the people of God; and, therefore, the Assembly, as they blesse the Lord that so excellent a Catechisme is prepared, so they approve the same as a part of uniformity; agreeing, for their part, that it be a Common Catechisme for the three kingdoms, and a Directory for catechising such as have made some proficiency in the knowledge of the grounds of religion.

Sess. 11, July 21, 1648, ante meridiem.—Act against sudden admitting Deposed Ministers to particular Congregations.

The Generall Assembly, considering the danger of sudden receiving of deposed ministers at this time when Malignancy is likely to spread; therefore, finding it necessary, untill the ends of the Solemn League and Covenant be settled and secured, to restrain the suddenness of admitting deposed ministers to particular charges, do ordain that notwithstanding any license to be granted for opening the mouths of deposed ministers, yet they shall not be actually admitted to any particular congregations without consent of the Generall Assembly; declaring, for such as have already their mouths opened before the time, that if any calling to a particular charge offer unto them before the next Assembly, it shall be sufficient for them to have the consent of the commissioners of this Generall Assembly.

Sess. 14, July 25, 1648, ante meridiem.—The Assemblies Answer to the Paper sent from the Committee of Estates of the 24th July.

The Generall Assembly, having considered the paper of the 24th July, delivered to them from the Conference, and having compared it with the other paper of the 17th of July, presented from the Honourable Committee of Estates whereunto it relates, and with the declaration lately emitted by the Committee to the Parliament and kingdom of England, finde that it is supposed by their Lordships that we may be satisfied in point of the security of religion according to the Covenant, notwithstanding of the present Engagement in war; the Assembly do, therefore, in answer to the said paper, declare,—

That we see no possibility of securing religion, as long as this unlawfull Engagement is carried on, religion being thereby greatly endangered.

1. Because none of the just and necessary desires of the commission of the late General Assembly for securing religion have been granted or satisfied. More particularly, it was represented to the High and Honourable Court of Parliament, that for securing of religion it was necessary that the Popish, Prelaticall, and Malignant party be declared enemies to the cause, upon the one hand, as well as sectaries upon the other, and that all associations, either in forces or counsels, with the former as well as the latter, be avoided. That his Majesty's concessions and offers concerning religion, sent home from the Isle of Wight, be declared by the Parliament to be unsatisfactory;—that before his Majesty's restitution to the exercise of his royall power, assurance be had from his Majesty, by his solemn oath, under his hand and seal, for settling religion according to the Covenant;—that their Lordships should keep themselves from owning any quarrel concerning his Majesty's negative voice;—that the managing of the publike affairs might be entrusted only to such persons as have given constant proof of their integrity, and against whom there is no just cause of exception or jealousy, and that there might be no engagement without a solemn oath, wherein the Kirk ought to have the same interest they had in the Solemn League and Covenant; all which are more particularly expressed in the papers given in by the commission of the late Assembly to the Parliament, notwithstanding the Engagement hath been carried on without satisfaction to these and the like desires, and so without giving security in the point of religion, but with great and manifest danger to the same.

2. As the happy union of the kingdoms, by the Solemn League and Covenant, hath been justly looked upon as a speciall means for preserving and strengthening the true Reformed religion in this island, so it is no lesse weakened and hurt by endeavouring a breach between these kingdoms; which, howsoever disclaimed, is yet manifest, from the reality of the publike proceedings in this Engagement, and namely, from the neglect of endeavouring a treaty between the kingdoms for preventing of war and bloodshed, as was earnestly desired—from their associating and joyning with known Malignants and incendiaries, and such as have been declared enemies to this cause—from their entering the kingdom of England with an army, upon the grounds of the declaration of the Parliament, which cannot but infer a nationall quarrel against the Parliament and kingdom of England—and from their garrisoning the frontire towns of that kingdom.

3. The Engagement is carried on by such means and ways as tend to the destroying of religion, by ensnaring and forcing the consciences of the people of God with unlawfull bands and oathes, and oppressing the persons and estates of such as have been most active and zealous for religion and the Covenant. All which is strengthened and authorized by acts of Parliament, appointing that all that do not obey, or perswade others not to obey, the resolutions of Parliament and committee, anent this Engagement, or who shall not subscribe the act and declaration of the 10th June 1648, imposed upon all the subjects, shall be holden as enemies to the cause and to religion, and have their persons secured, and their estates intromitted with.

4. The Engagement is carried on, not without great enroachments upon the liberties of the Kirk, as we are ready to clear in many particulars.

Wherefore, the security of religion, and carrying on of the present Engagement being inconsistent, we do propose, for the necessary security and safety of religion, that all the dangers thereof may be taken to consideration, and amongst the rest the said Engagement, as one of the greatest, which yet being established and authorized by act of Parliament, we leave it to their Lordships to think of what remedies may be provided for redressing grievances which flow from such acts and ordinances. This we are sure of, the publike desires of the Kirk will abundantly witnesse for us that such things as were necessary for the security of religion were in due season represented, and yet not granted by them that had greater power and authority at that time, when it was much more easie to give satisfaction therein then now; so that the blame cannot lye upon the Generall Assembly or their commissioners, that religion is not secured.

Sess. 18, July 28, 1648, ante meridiem.—Act and Declaration against the Act of Parliament and Committee of Estates, ordained to be subscribed the 10th and 12th of June, and against all new Oathes or Bands in the common Cause, imposed without consent of the Church.

The Generall Assembly, taking to consideration a Declaration and Act of Parliament, of the date 10th of June 1648, highly concerning religion and the consciences of the people of God in the land, and one act of the Committee of Estates, of the date 12th of June 1648, both published in print, whereby all subjects are ordained by subscription to acknowledge as just, and oblige themselves to adhere unto the said Act and Declaration, containing an obligation upon their honours and credits; and, as they desire to be, and to be holden as lovers of their country, religion, laws, and liberties, to joyn and concur with their persons and estates in the assistance of the execution and observation of the Acts and Constitutions of this Parliament, as the most fit and necessary remedies of the bygone and present evils and distractions of this Kirk and kingdom, and for the preservation of religion, laws, and liberties, and of his Majestie's authoritie; with certification, that such as refuse or delay to subscribe the same shall be holden as enemies and opposites to the common cause, consisting in the maintenance of the true Reformed religion, of the laws and liberties of the kingdom, and of his Majestie's authority. Which subscription the Assembly cannot otherwise look upon then as a snare for the people of God, to involve them in guiltinesse, and to draw them from their former principles and vows in the Solemn League and Covenant; for that subscription were an approving of some Acts of Parliament which they have never yet seen nor known, they not being all published—were an agreeing to Acts of Parliament highly concerning religion and the Covenant, made not only without, but expressly against, the advise of the Kirk—were an acknowledging of this present Engagement in war, in all the means and ways for promoting the same, to be the most fit and necessary remedies of the bygone and present evils; whereas so many petitions to the Parliament, from committees of war, synods, presbyteries, and paroches, have made it appear that they are no way satisfied therewith in point of conscience—were an ascribing of a power to the Parliament, to declare these to be enemies to the true religion whom the Kirk hath not declared to be such, but rather friends—were an approving of an act made for the restraining the liberty of printing from the Kirk; yea, and of all the acts of the Committee of Estates, to be made in time coming, till March 1650, which by Act of Parliament are ordained to be obeyed—were an allowing of Acts for securing of the persons, and intromitting with the estates, of such as themselves shall not obey, or perswade others not to obey, resolutions concerning this Engagement, and for protecting persons under Kirk censures; and so an infringing and violating of the liberties and discipline of the Kirk, established by the laws of the land, and sworn to in the Nationall Covenant to be defended, under the pains contained in the law of God. And in all these, such as do subscribe do binde themselves, not only to active obedience in their own persons, but to the urging of active obedience upon all others, and so draw upon themselves all the guiltinesse and sad consequences of the present Engagement; yea, such as are Members of Parliament, and have in the oath of Parliament sworn not to vote or consent to any thing but what, to their best knowledge, is most expedient for religion, kirk, and kingdom, and accordingly have reasoned against, and dissented from, divers Acts of this Parliament. These, by the subscription of this act, cannot eschew the danger of perjury, in obliging themselves to active obedience to these acts, which according to their oath they did judge unlawfull. Neither can the 38th Act of the Parliament, 1640, wherein such a kinde of band was enacted to be subscribed, be any precedent or warrant for subscribing of this act; for it plainly appears by the narrative of that act omitted in this band, how great a difference there is between the condition of affairs then and now. Then the King's Commissioner had left and discharged the sitting of the Parliament—then the Parliament, for sitting, was declared traitors, and armies in England and Ireland prepared against them—then not only the acts, but the very authority of Parliament, was called in question—then Kirk and State were united in the cause against the Malignant party—then nothing was determined in Parliament in matters of religion without, much lesse against, the advice of the Kirk: but, beside that, it was not thought expedient by the State that that band should be pressed through the kingdom. The case now not only differs from what was then, but is in many things just contrary, as is evident to all who will compare the two together. And, therefore, the Generall Assembly, professing all tender respect to the High and Honourable Court of Parliament, and Committee of Estates, but finding a straiter tye of God lying upon their consciences, that they be not found unfaithfull watchmen, and betrayers of the souls of these committed to their charge, Do, unanimously, declare the foresaid subscription to be unlawfull and sinfull. And do warn, and in the name of the Lord, charge all the members of this Kirk to forbear the subscribing of the said Act and Declaration, much more the urging of the subscription thereof, as they would not incur the wrath of God and the censures of the Kirk. And, considering how necessary it is, that, according to the eighth desire of the Commissioners of the Assembly to the Parliament, the Kirk might have the same interest in any new oathes in this cause as they had in the Solemn League and Covenant, and what dangers of contradictory oathes, perjuries, and snares to men's consciences, may fall out otherwise: therefore, they likewise enjoyn all the members of this Kirk to forbear the swearing, subscribing, or pressing of any new oathes or bands in this cause, without advise and concurrence of the Kirk, especially any negative oathes or bands which may any way limit or restrain them in the duties whereunto they are obliged by Nationall or Solemn League and Covenant; and that with certification as aforesaid. And such as have already pressed or subscribed the foresaid Act and Declaration, the Generall Assembly doth hereby exhort them most earnestly in the bowels of Christ, to repent of that their defection. And ordains that Presbyteries, or in case of their negligence, or being overawed, the Provinceall Synods, or the Commission of the Assembly, which of them shall first occur, and in case of the Synod's negligence, that the said Commission be carefull to proceed against and censure the contraveners of the act, according to the quality and degree of their offences, as they will be answerable to the Generall Assembly; and that, therefore, this act be sent to Presbyteries to be published in the severall kirks of their bounds.

Sess. 19, Eodem die, post meridiem.—Approbation of the Shorter Catechisme.

The Generall Assembly, having seriously considered the Shorter Catechisme, agreed upon by the Assembly of Divines sitting at Westminster, with assistance of Commissioners from this Kirk, doe finde, upon due examination thereof, that the said Catechisme is agreeable to the Word of God, and in nothing contrary to the received doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of this Kirk; and, therefore, approve the said Shorter Catechisme, as a part of the intended uniformity, to be a Directory for catechising such as are of weaker capacitic.

Act discharging a Little Catechisme, printed at Edinburgh, 1647.

The Generall Assembly, having found in a little Catechisme, printed at Edinburgh, entituled, "The A. B. C. with the Catechisme: that is to say, an Instruction to be Taught and Learned of Young Children," very grosse errors in the point of Universall Redemption, and in the number of the Sacraments; therefore, doe discharge the venting or selling of the said Catechisme of the foresaid impression, or of whatsoever other impression the same be of, and all use thereof in schools or families; inhibiting also all printers to reprint the same, and recommends to Presbyteries to take speciall care that this act be obeyed.

*Sess. 21, Ult. July 1648, post meridiem.—A Declaration of the Generall Assembly, concerning the present Dangers of Religion, and especially the unlawfull Engagement in War against the Kingdom of England, together with many necessary Exhortations and Directions to all the Members of the Kirk of Scotland.

It cannot seem strange to any that considereth the great trust that lyeth on us, comparing the same with the eminent dangers wherewith the cause of God is environed in this land, if at this time we declare our sense thereof, and warn the people of God from this watch-tower of the present duties incumbent to them. Our witness is in heaven, and our record on high, that we do not this from any disrespect to the Parliament, whom we have honoured and will ever honour, and also obey, in all things which are agreeable to the Word of God, to our Solemn Covenants, and to the duties of our callings—nor from any disloyalty or undutifulnesse to the King's Majesty, to whom we heartily wish, and to his posterity after him, a happy reigne over these dominions—nor from any factious disposition, or siding with this or that party whatsoever—nor from any contentious humour about light or small matters—nor from any favour to or compliance with sectaries, against whose cursed opinions and ungodly practises we have heretofore given ample testimony, and are still obliged by Solemn Covenant to endeavour the extirpation of heresie and schism; but from the conscience of our duty when the glory of God, the kingdom of his Son, his Word, ordinances, government, covenant, ministry, consciences of people, peace and liberties of the Kirk, are encompassed and almost overwhelmed, with great and growing dangers.

How freely and faithfully the servants of God of old have rebuked sin in persons of all ranks, not sparing kings, states, nor kingdoms, the Scripture maketh it most plain to all that look thereon. Neither want we domestick examples, if we look back a little upon the behaviour of our zealous ancestours in this Kirk, who not only in their sermons severally, with great gravity and freedom reprov'd the sins of the time, but more especially in the Kirk judicatories, plain and downright dealing was most frequent and familiar, as appears in the Assemblies holden in June and in October 1582, in October 1583, in May 1592, in May 1594, and in March 1595. And not only the General Assembly by themselves, but also by their commissioners, faithfully and freely laboured to oppose all the steps of defection; as at other times, so in the year 1596, wherein four or five severall times they gave most free admonitions to the King, Parliament, and Councell, with a protestation at the last before God, that they were free of their blood, and of whatsoever judgement should fall upon the realm; and that they durst not, for fear of committing high treason against Jesus Christ, the only Monarch of his Kirk, abstain any longer from fighting against their proceedings with the spirituall armour granted to them of God, and mighty in him for overthrowing all these bulwarks set up against his kingdom: And in their declaration then emitted to the kingdom, they shew that it was a main design to have the freedom of the Spirit of God, in the rebuke of sin, by the mouth of his servants, restrained; and, therefore, they warne all pastours of their duty in applying doctrine and free preaching. Like as the Assembly, 24th March 1595-6, reckons up amongst the corruptions of the ministry, to be censured with deprivation if continued in, the not applying their doctrine against the corruptions of the time, which was renewed in our late Assembly at Glasgow, 1638. What hath been done since that Assembly is in recent memory, and the papers to that purpose have been published in print, and are in the hands of all. Therefore, being warranted by the Word of God, and encouraged by the forementioned examples, as after exact examination we have approv'd the proceedings of the Commissioners of the last Generall Assembly, and specially their declarations, desires, representations, remonstrances, supplications, vindication, and other papers, relating to the present Engagement in war, wherein they have given good proof of their fidelity, wisdom, and zeal, in the cause of God, so we finde our selves necessitate to make known unto all the people of God in this nation our sense concerning the dangers and duties of this present time.

The cry of the insolencies of this present army, from almost all the parts of this kingdom, hath been so great that it hath gone up to heaven, and if we should be silent we could not be reputed faithfull in the performance of our duty. We do acknowledge that it is incident unto all armies to be subject unto some disorders, and the ministers of the kingdom have not been deficient in former times to represent the same as they come unto their knowledge, calling for the redresse of them at their hands who had power; but the commissioners of this present Assembly from the severall provinces, have exhibited great variety of abominable scandals, and heinous impieties, and insolencies, committed by persons employed in this service, whereof we think fitting here to give you a touch.

As if liberty had been proclaimed to the lusts of lewd men, these that have been employed in very many places of the land have used horrible extortion of moneys at their pleasure, and beside the taking of victuals as they would for their own use, they have in severall places wilfully destroyed the same, and have plundered many houses, taking all away they could, and destroying what they could not carry away. In this great oppression and spoil of goods, as the sufferers were many, so choise hath been made of those who petitioned the High and Honourable Court of Parliament for satisfaction to their consciences before the Engagement, or who were known to make conscience of the worship of God in their families, on whom they might exercise their raging wrath and unsatiabie covetousnesse. Nor stayed their rage here; but as though the war had been against God, publick fasts have not only been neglected, but profaned by riotous spending and making merry—divine worship hath been in many parts disturbed—some ministers and people impeded from coming together, others scattered when they were met—some taken out of kirks in time of worship, others apprehended at their coming out at the kirk doors, and carryed away. Besides these, ministers in performing the worship of God have been menaced, contradicted, not without blasphemous oathes; yea, their persons in pulpit assaulted, not to speak of the spoiling of their goods, taking, beating, carrying away their persons, and detaining them for a time. And, finally, that which exceeds all the rest, and is more immediately and directly against God, there hath also been many cruell mockings of his worship, and horrid blasphemies; and it is not to be marvelled that such insolencies have been committed, since there hath been admitted upon this service some Papists, some bloody Irish rebels, some Non-Covenanters, and very many fugitives from Kirk discipline; finally, even those who have been upon the late rebellion, and these not only common souldiers but commanders, besides many voluntiers, who have no speciall command and trust.

Besides all these, the liberties of the Kirk have been grievously encroached upon,—

1. By emitting Declarations from the Parliament and Committee of Estates, containing severall things highly concerning religion, without the advice or consent of the Generall Assembly or their Commissioners, which was a ground of protestation to divers Members of Parliament, who have been most zealous and active in the cause.
2. The article of religion, as expressed in the Declaration of Parliament, hath in it many dangerous expressions, which are particularly instanced in the representation of the Commissioners of the Generall Assembly; and the same article of religion, in the late Declaration of the Committee of Estates to England, is more unsatisfactory than the former: like as in the said late Declaration there is a totall omission of some most materiall things, pretended to in the Declaration of Parliament as satisfactory in point of securing religion, viz., the clause concerning security to be had from his Majesty, by his solemn oath, under his hand and seal, that he shall, for himself and his successors, give his royall assent, and agree to such act or acts of Parliament and bills as shall be presented to him by his Parliaments of both and either kingdoms respectively, for enjoyning Presbyteriall Government, Directory of Worship, and Confession of Faith, in all his Majestie's dominions, and that his Majestie shall never make opposition to any of those, nor endeavour any change thereof; also the clause against association with any that refuse to take the Covenant is omitted. From all which it may appear in how great danger the liberties of the Kirk and even religion it self are left.
3. In the close of the Declaration of Parliament there is a new and unsound glosse put upon the Covenant and Acts of the Generall Assembly, contrary to the sense of the General Assembly itself, as is more fully expressed in the representation of the late Commission.
4. No redresse by the Parliament of certain injurys complained of to their Lordships by the Commissioners of the preceding Generall Assembly.
5. Endeavours to weaken and frustrate Kirk censures, by making provisions for securing the stipends of such as shall be censured for their concurring in or preaching for this present Engagement.
6. A misrepresentation of the proceedings of the Commission of the Generall Assembly, by the Parliament's Letter, of May 11, to the severall Presbyteries, endeavouring to incense them against the Commission of the late Assembly, and to preoccupie their Commissioners to this Assembly.
7. Whereas, there were many petitions presented to the High and Honourable Court of Parliament, from the Commissioners of the Generall Assembly, Synods, and Presbyteries, against the present Engagement, as stated in the Parliament's Declaration; yet, notwithstanding of the said petitions, and notwithstanding of many free and frequent warnings given by faithfull ministers in their sermons—notwithstanding also, that it was not unknown how much the generality of the well affected in the kingdom were unsatisfied in their consciences with the grounds and way of the said Engagement, yet good people are not only left unsatisfied in their and our desires, but compelled and forced either to sin against their consciences, or to be under heavy pressures and burdens. 8. Yea, in the late band, enjoyned to be subscribed by all the subjects of this kingdom, men are put to it to joyn and concur with their persons and estates in the advancement, furtherance, and assistance of the execution, obedience, and observation of the acts and constitutions of the late Parliament; and, consequently, as many as think the Engagement unlawful, shall binde themselves not only to obey for their own part against their consciences, but to inforce the same upon others who refuse; and so, not only be oppressed, but turn oppressours of others. 9. This all the subjects are required by the Act and Declaration of Parliament to subscribe, as they desire to be holden true lovers of religion; it being further affirmed in the said Act and Declaration, that the Acts and Constitutions of the late Parliament are the most fit and necessary remedies for preservation of religion; where the Parliament assume to themselves, without the advice and consent of the Assemblies of the Kirk, to judge and determine such things, wherein (if in any thing) the ecclesiastical Assemblies have undoubtedly a speciall interest, viz., who are to be holden lovers of religion, and what are the most fit and necessary remedies for preservation of religion: yea, it is ordained by the fourth act of Parliament, 1640, that for preservation of religion, Generall Assemblies rightly constitute, as the proper and competent judge of all matters ecclesiastical, be kept yearly and oftner, pro re nata. The Coronation Oath doth also suppose the antecedent judgement of the Kirk, as the proper and competent judge who are enemies to true religion, and who not; for his Majesty obliged himself by that oath, that he should be carefull to root out all hereticks and enemies to the true worship of God, who shall be convict by the true Kirk of God of the aforesaid crimes. 10. The General Assembly and their commissioners are now deprived of their liberty of printing, confirmed and ratified by act of Parliament, there being an inhibition to the contrary upon the printer, under the pain of death, by the Committee of Estates.

Whereas the desires of the commissioners of the last Assembly, for the safety and security of religion, and the right manner of proceeding to war, together with the supplications of Provinciall Assemblies and Presbyteries, all tending to the composing of the present unhappy differences, and to the begetting of a right understanding, have not produced the desired and wished for effect; but, on the contrary, our just grievances being still more and more heightned, iniquity established by a law, and that law put in execution, we cannot chuse but declare and give warning to all the people of God in this land, concerning the sinfulness and unlawfulness of the present Engagement, which may be demonstrate by many reasons, as, namely—

1. The wars of God's people are called the wars of the Lord, Numb. xxi. 14; 2 Chron. xx. 15. And if our eating and drinking, much more our engaging in war, must be for God, and for his glory, 1 Cor. x. 31. Whatsoever we do in word or deed, we are commanded to do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, and so for his glory, Col. iii. 17. The kingdom of God, and the righteousness thereof, is to be sought in the first place, and before all other things, Matth. vi. 33. It was the best flower and garland, in the former expeditions of this nation, that they were for God and for religion principally and mainly. But if the principall end of this present Engagement were for the glory of God, how comes it to passe, that not so much as one of the desires of the Kirk, for the safety and security of religion in the said Engagement, is to this day satisfied or granted? but, on the contrary, such courses taken as are destructive to religion. And if God's glory be intended, what meaneth the employing and protecting in this army so many blasphemers, persecutors of piety, disturbers of divine worship, and others guilty of notorious and crying sins? Again, how can it be pretended that the good of religion is principally aimed at, when it is proposed and declared, that the King's Majesty shall be brought to some of his houses in or near London, with honour, freedom, and safety, before ever there be any security had from him, or so much as any application made to him, for the good of religion? What is this but to postpone the honour of God, the liberties of the Gospel, the safety of God's people to an humane interest, and to leave religion in a condition of uncertainty, unsettledness and hazard, while it is strongly endeavoured to settle and make sure somewhat else?

2. Suppose the ends of this Engagement to be good, (which they are not,) yet the means and ways of prosecution are unlawfull, because there is not ane equall avoiding of rocks on both hands, but a joyning with Malignants to suppress Sectaries, a joyning hands with a black devill to beat a white devil; they are bad physicians who would so cure one disease as to breed another as evil, or worse. That there is in the present Engagement a confederacy and association in war with such of the English who, according to the Solemn League and Covenant, and Declarations of both Kingdoms, 1643, can be no otherwise looked upon but as Malignants and enemies of Reformation and the cause of God, is now made so manifest before sun and moon, that we suppose none will deny it; and 'tis no lesse undeniable, that not only many known Malignants, but diverse who joyned in the late rebellion within this kingdom, are employed, yea, put into places of trust; all which how contrary it is to the Word of God, no man can be ignorant who will attentively search the Scriptures; for we finde therein condemned confederacies and associations with the enemies of true religion, whether Canaanites, Exod. xxiii. 32, and xxxiv. 12, 15; Deut. vii. 2; or other heathens, 1 Kings xi. 1, 2; such was Asa his covenant with Benhadad, 2 Chron. xvi. to ver. 10; Ahaz his confederacy with the King of Assyria, 2 Kings xvi. 7, 10; 2 Chron. xxviii. 16 to ver. 23; or whither the association was with wicked men of the seed of Abraham, as Jehoshaphat's with Achab, 2 Chron. xviii. 3, compared with chap. xix. 2; also his association with Ahaziah, 2 Chron. xx. 35; and Amaziah's associating to himself one hundred thousand of the Ten Tribes, when God was not with them, 2 Chron. xxv. 7, 8, 9, 10. The sin and danger of such associations may further appear from Isaiah viii. 12, 15; Jer. ii. 18; Psal. cvi. 35; Hos. v. 13, and vii. 8, 11; 2 Cor. vi. 14, 15; and if we should esteem God's enemies to be our enemies, and hate them with perfect hatred, Psal. cxxxix. 21, how can we then joyn with them as confederates and associates, especially in a cause where religion is so highly concerned; and seeing they have been formerly in actual opposition to the same cause?

3. We are commanded, if it be possible, and as much as lieth in us, to have peace with all men, Rom. xii. 18; to seek peace and pursue it, Psal. xxxiv. 14. War and bloodshed is the last remedy after all the ways and means of peace have been used in vain. The intended war of the nine tribes and a half against the two tribes and half was prevented by a message and treaty of peace, Josh. xxii. The like means was used by Jephthah (though not with the like success) for the preventing of war with the King of Ammon, Judg. xi. The very light of nature hath taught heathens not to make war till first all amicable wayes of preventing bloodshed were tried; yet this war hath been driven on without observing any such method of proceeding, except by a message, wherein not so much as one breach was represented. Yea, though these two kingdoms are straitly united in Covenant, yet these who have carried on this war did not only neglect to desire a treaty, but also slight an offer of a treaty made from the Parliament of England upon the propositions of both kingdoms.

4. There are many clear and full testimonies of Scriptures against the breach and violation of covenants, although but between man and man, Psal. lv. 20; Rom. i. 31; 2 Tim. iii. 3; especially where the name of God was interposed in covenants by any of his people, Jer. xxxiv. 8, 10, 11, 18; Ezek. xvii. 18, 19. How much more the violation of a solemn covenant between God and his people, Lev. xxvi. 15, 25; Deut. xvii. 2, and xxix. 21, 24, 25; Jer. xxii. 8, 9; 1 Kings xix. 10; Dan. ii. 32; Hos. vi. 7. If, therefore, the present Engagement be a breach of our Solemn League and Covenant, then they who have before taken the Covenant, and have now joyned in this Engagement, must grant by necessary and infallible consequence, either that the Covenant itself which they took was unlawful, and such as they cannot perform without sin, (which yet they cannot professe,) or otherwise that the Engagement is unlawfull and sinfull, as being a breach of covenant, and so contrary to the Word of God. That the present Engagement is a breach of covenant, may appear by comparing it with each of the Articles, for it is against all the six Articles of the Covenant.

Against the first, because, instead of the preservation of the doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of this Kirk, there is not only a great quarrelling by those that do engage, at the present doctrine and free preaching, a disturbing of and withdrawing from the worship, and namely from the late solemn humiliation; but also a refusall of such things as were desired by the Commission of the late Assembly and Provinciaall Synods, as necessary to the preservation of the true Reformed religion; and we have just cause of fear that the reformation of religion, in doctrine, worship, discipline, and government, is not intended to be sufficiently maintained and preserved, when we finde such a limitation and restriction in the late Declaration of the Committee of Estates to the Parliament and kingdom of England, "That they will maintain and preserve the reformation of religion, doctrine, worship, discipline, and government, as is by the merey of God, and his Majestie's goodnesse, established by law among us;" but as there is no such limitation in the Covenant, so we have not had such proof of his Majesty's goodnesse, as to establish by law all that hath been by the mercies of God enacted in Generall Assemblies. As to the rest of the first article, concerning the reformation of England and Ireland and the uniformity, as there was some hopefull beginings thereof, and a good foundation laid during the late war against the Popish, Prelaticall, and Malignant party, so the state and ground of the war being now altered, and these chosen for confederates and associates in the war who are known enemies to that reformation and uniformity, how can the Covenant be kept in that point as long as such a war is carried on?

The second article is violated, because, instead of endeavouring to extirpate Popery and superstition, without respect of persons, (as exprest in the Covenant,) there is in the late Declaration of the Committee of Estates a desire of the Queen's return, without any condition tending to the restraint of her masse or exercise of Popery. We do also conceive there is a tacit condescending to the toleration of superstition and the Book of Common Prayer in his Majesty's family; because, as it was reserved by himself in his concession, brought home by the Commissioners of this kingdom, so these concessions were never plainly declared by the Parliament to be unsatisfactory to their Lordships—howbeit it hath been often and earnestly desired. Neither can we conceive how the clause concerning the extirpation of Prelacy can consist with endeavouring to bring his Majesty with honour, freedom, and safety, to one of his houses in or about London, without any security had from him for the abolition of Prelacy, it being his known principle, (and publicly declared by himself shortly after he went to the Isle of Wight,) that he holds himself obliged in conscience, and by his Coronation Oath, to maintain Archbishops, Bishops, &c. Can it be said that they are endeavouring to extirpate Prelacy who, after such a declaration, would put in his Majesty's hand an opportunity to restore it?

As for the third article, we cannot conceive how the preserving of the priviledges of Parliament, and asserting the King's negative voice can consist; and we are sorrowfull that, under the colour of the priviledges of Parliament, the liberties of the subjects are overthrowen, and the persons and estates of such as have been best affected to the cause and Covenant are exposed to most grievous injuries, crying oppressions. And whereas the duty in preserving and defending his Majesty's person and authority is, by the third article of the Covenant, qualified with and subordinate unto the preservation and defence of the true religion and liberties of the kingdoms; there is no such qualification nor subordination observed in the present Engagement, but, on the contrary, it is so carried on, as to make duties to God and religion conditional, qualified, limited; and duties to the King absolute and unlimited.

The fourth article of the Covenant is so foully broken, that they who were by that article declared enemies, incendiaries, Malignants, and therefore to be brought to condigne tryall and punishment, are now looked upon as friends and associates, and are the men who get most favour and protection, and sundry of them employed in places of trust in the army and committees.

For the fifth article, instead of endeavouring to preserve peace and union, a breach is endeavoured between the kingdoms, not only by taking in and garrisoning their frontier towns, but also entering the kingdom of England with an army, and joyning with the common enemies of both kingdoms, notwithstanding of an offer of a treaty upon the propositions of both kingdoms, made by the Parliament of England to the Parliament of this kingdom. And whether the way of this Engagement can consist with the large treaty between the kingdoms, we shall wish the Honourable Committee of Estates may yet take it into their serious second thoughts.

The sixth is also manifestly broken, for we are thereby obliged to assist and defend all those that entered into this League and Covenant, in maintaining and pursuing thereof, whereas the army now entered into England is to assist and defend many who have not entered into that League and Covenant: And for those who took the Covenant in that nation, and continue faithfull in it, what they may expect from this army, may be collected not only from their carriage towards their brethren at home, but also from that clause toward the close of the late Declaration of the Committee of Estates—"And that we will do prejudice or use violence to none, (as far as we are able,) but to such as oppose us, or such ends above mentioned." It cannot be unknown that many of the English nation who are firm and faithfull to the Covenant, and Presbyteriall government, do and will, according to their places and callings, oppose some of those ends above mentioned in that Declaration; as namely, the restoring both of King and Queen without any condition or security first had from them; and so by that rule in the Declaration they must expect to be used as enemies, not as friends. That sixth article is also broken by a departing from the first principles and resolutions, and by dividing and withdrawing from those that adhere thereunto, which hath been before cleared by the Commission of the late Generall Assembly in their declaration in March, representation, and other papers, published in print.

5. We leave it to be seriously pondered by every one who is truly conscientious, whether it be any ways credible or probable, or agreeable to Scripture rules, that the generality of all that have been most faithfull and cordiall to the Covenant and cause of God should be deceived, deluded, and darkened in this businesse, and that they who, for the most part, were enemies to the work of God in the beginning, and have never brought forth fruits meet for repentance, should now finde out the will of God more then his most faithfull servants in the land. And who that fears God will believe that Malignants are for the ends of the Covenant, and that they who are most instrumentall in this reformation are against the ends of the Covenant.

All which considered, as we could not, without involving our selves in the guiltinesse of so unlawfull an Engagement, yield to the desire for the army of ministers to be sent by us to attend them; so we do earnestly exhort, and in the name and authority of Jesus Christ, charge and require all and every one of the members of this reformed Kirk of Scotland—

I. That they search narrowly into the sins which have procured so great judgements and so sad an interruption of the work of God—that they examine themselves, consider their wayes, be much in humiliation and prayer, study a reall and practicall reformation—that they also mourn and sigh for the abominations of the land, and stand in the gap to turn away the wrath. Among all these fearfull sins, the violation of the Solemn League and Covenant would not be forgotten, but seriously laid to heart, as that which eminently provoketh the Lord, and procureth his judgements to be powred forth not only upon persons and families, but also upon states and kingdoms. Covenant-breakers, though in common things, are reckoned by the Apostle in that catalogue of the abominations of the Gentiles: But among the people of God, where his great name is interposed, the breach of covenant even in meaner matters, such as the setting of servants at liberty, provoketh the Lord to say, "Behold I proclaim a liberty for you (saith the Lord) to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine, and I will give the men that hath transgressed my covenant;" and (not excepting, but expressly mentioning princes) he adds, "I will give them into the hands of their enemies." The history of the Gibeonites, who surreptitiously procured the covenant made to spare them, and whom Saul some ages thereafter, in his zeal to the children of Israel and Judah, sought to slay, as being cursed Canaanites, evidenceth with what vengeance the Lord followeth covenant-breakers, whereof there wants not in prophane history also, both forreign and domestick, examples. Therefore, let all the inhabitants of the land, of whatsoever rank, seriously ponder how terrible judgements the violation of a covenant so recently, so advisedly, so solemnly made, and in so weighty matters, may draw on, if not timously prevented by speedy repentance.

II. That they so respect and honour authority, as that they be not the servants of men, nor give obedienece to the will and authority of rulers in any thing which may not consist with the Word of God, but stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made them free, and obey God rather than men.

III. That they carefully avoid the dangerous rocks and snares of this time, whereby so many are taken and broken.

Upon the one hand, the sowre leaven of Malignancy, where ever it enters, spoileth and corrupteth the whole lump, postponing religion and the cause of God to humane interest, what ever be pretended to the contrary, and obstructing the work of reformation and propagation of religion, out of false respects and creature interest. As this hath formerly abounded in the land, to the prejudice of the cause and work of God, so of late it is revived, spreading with specious pretences of vindicating wrongs done to his Majesty. We desire not to be mistaken, as if respect and love to his Majesty were branded with the infamous mark of Malignancy; but hereby we warn all who would not come under this foul stain, not only in their speech and profession, but really and in their whole carriage, not to prefer their own and the interest of any creature whatsoever before the interest of Christ and religion. The characters of these have been fully given in former declarations, specially in the declaration of the Commissioners of the Generall Assembly in March last, which we hold as here repeated; only adding this, that they ordinarily traduce kirk judicatures, as meddling with civill affairs, which as it is no new calumny, but such as hath been cast upon the servants of God in former times, so the whole course of proceedings doth manifestly confute the same.

Upon the other hand, sectarisme hath no lesse hindered the blessed and glorious work of reformation in our neighbour kingdom, against the venome whereof, lest it approach and infect this Kirk, we have need to watch diligently, to avoid all the beginnings and dangerous appearances thereof. The many faithfull testimonies from godly ministers in severall parts of England, against the vile errors and abominable blasphemies abounding there, as they are to us matter of rejoycing before the Lord; so they ought to be looked on as warnings to all sorts of people, especially that regard religion, to beware of Satan's snares, craftily set to catch their souls. And because such gangreens creep insensibly, all that love the honour of God and welfare of religion, would seriously consider the following points, both by way of marks to discern, and meanes to escape the danger of this infection—

1. Whosoever are misprisers of the blessed work of reformation established within this land, and do not show themselves grieved for the impediments and obstructions it hath met with in our neighbour kingdom, these are even on the brink of this precipice, ready to tumble down in this gulf whensoever occasion is offered; all, therefore, that love the Lord Jesus would stir up their hearts, in the light and strength of the Lord, highly to prize and thankfully to acknowledge what the right hand of the Most High hath done among us, as also to thirst fervently after the advancing and perfecting of the Lord's work among our neighbours.

2. Disrespect to the publik ministry and ordinances is a symptome of a dangerous inclination to that disease; and, therefore, as all Christ's ministers ought to stir up themselves to walk as becometh their high and holy calling, lest they be stumbling-blocks to the people of God; so also all the people of God ought most carefully to stir up themselves unto a precious estimation of the ordinances of God, and highly to esteem the stewards thereof for their work's sake—a duty at all times needfull, but now especially, when Sathan by all means endeavours the contrary.

3. Indifferency in points of religion, and pleading for toleration to themselves or others, how far soever different among themselves, is not to be forgotten among the characters of seetaries, and, therefore, ought the more carefully to be avoided and opposed by all who desire to hold fast the profession of their faith without wavering.

4. They who are glorying in and seeking after new lights, or, under the pretext of them, are self-conceited in singular opinions, or who affect new and strange expressions, are entering into the snare, "ready to be carried about with every wind of doctrine." And, therefore, albeit we ought always, as disciples of the Lord, to set our selves as in his sight, to be taught by his Spirit according to his Word, yet in this time, so fertile of errors, it becometh all the lovers of truth to hold fast what they have received, that no man take their crown.

5. Whosoever brings in any opinion or practise in this Kirk contrary to the Confession of Faith, Directory of Worship, or Presbyterian Government, may be justly esteemed to be opening the door to schisme and sects: And, therefore, all depravers or misconstrucers of the proceedings of kirk judicatories, especially the Generall Assembly, would take heed least, by making a breach upon the walls of Jerusalem, they make a patent way for sectaries to enter.

6. They who separate the Spirit from the Word, and pretend the Spirit, when they have no ground or warrant from the Word, are already taken in an evil snare: And, therefore, 'tis necessary to try the spirits, whether they are of God, for many false prophets are gone out into the world; "if they speak not according to the word, it is because there is no light in them."

Besides the former, these are also marks of a sectary: If any commend and recommend to others, or spread and divulge the erroneous books of sectaries, if any allow, avow, or use conventicles or private meetings forbidden by the Acts of the Generall Assembly, 1641 and 1647, last past—if any be unwilling, and decline to reckon sectaries among the enemies of the Covenant, from whom danger is to be apprehended—and (though we disallow the abusing and idolizing of learning to the patrocinie of error, or prejudice of piety) if any contemn literature as needlesse at best, if not also hurtfull to a minister.

When we thus expresse our selves for preventing the dangers of sects and schismes, it is far from our intention to discourage any from the duties of piety and mutuall edification, according to the directions of the last Assembly, published in print, and seriously recommended by them, or to give any advantage to Malignants and prophane persons, with whom it is frequent to cast upon all those who adhere to former principles, and cannot approve the present Engagement, the odious nicknames of Sectaries and Independents. For the better discovery of such prophane mockers, we give these marks and characters: 1. They do prophanely and tauntingly abuse the name of the Spirit, under that name deriding the work of grace and sanctification. 2. They esteem and speak of exercises of conscience as fancies or fits of melancholy. 3. They mock at family worship, and the means of mutuall edification so much recommended by the last Assembly, in their directions. 4. They do usually calumniate godly ministers, and professors who follow holinesse, with the names of Sectaries, or the like odious names, without any just cause. As we account all such to be enemies to the practise and power of godlinesse, so we do exhort all the lovers of truth to hold on in the way of holinesse, through good report and ill report, being stedfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as they know their labour is not in vain in the Lord.

IV. That they do not concur in nor any way assist this present Engagement, as they would not partake in other men's sins, and so receive of their plagues; but that, by the grace and assistance of Christ, they stedfastly resolve to suffer the rod of the wicked, and the utmost which wicked men's malice can afflict them with, rather than to put forth their hand to iniquity.

V. That they suffer not themselves to be abused with fair pretences and professions usuall in the mouths of those that carry on this designe, and often published in their papers, but remember that the foulest actions have not wanted specious pretences; and if they who killed the Apostles did both pretend and intend to do God good service, what marvell that they who engage against the Covenant pretend to engage for it. Neither is it to be forgotten, that after the first subscription of our Nationall Covenant, these who had the chief hand in managing publick affairs, and had subscribed the Covenant, especially the Duke of Lenox, and Captain Jones, then Earl of Arran, in the years 1581, 1582, 1583, 1584, when their designe was to subvert both the doctrine and discipline of this Kirk, yet gave great assurances, by promises and oaths, to the contrary. At the Assemblies 1598, 1599, 1600, it was declared, with many vows and attestations by the King, statesmen, and these ministers who were aspiring to Prelacy, that they intended no such thing as a change of the government of the Kirk, or an introducing of Episcopacy, yet they were really doing what they disclaimed and professed not to do. And suppose that some who have an active hand in carrying on the present publick affairs, have no design either to destroy religion or utterly to sleight it; yet the way they are on, and work they are about, as it is contrived, doth of itself, and in its own nature, tend to the endangering, if not to the utter subversion of religion; for it cannot be denyed, but the very undertaking of this war sets the once suppressed Malignants on work again, and successe therein puts them in a capacity to set up, according to their principles, abolished and abjured corruptions, which will be the more hardly hindered, considering his Majesty's propension, and professed resolution that way, especially seeing his Majesty's concessions (though it hath been often desired) have never been plainly declared unsatisfactory by the Parliament. And who in reason can think that any more then his Majesty's concessions sent from the Isle of Wight will be required of him, by them who thereupon have proceeded to this Engagement. The King's negative voice, (asserted in the papers of the Commissioners of this kingdom unto England, which are owned in the late Declaration to the Kingdom of England as the sense of this kingdom,) considered in relation to religion, makes the danger yet the greater and more palpable, yea, may reach further to shake and unsettle religion established in this land; if to the premises this be added, which is not only often declared but also demanded, that his Majesty be brought to one of his houses in honour, freedom, and safety, which may infer the admitting of his Majesty to the free exercise of his royall power, before security had from him for religion, or application made to him for the same, who sees not now what hazard religion runs, certainly greater then a good intention can salve?

VI. That they do not mistake or misunderstand the nature of the true Reformed religion, and of the government of Jesus Christ, as if thereby either the prerogative of kings, priviledges of parliaments, or liberties of burghs, and other corporations, were any wayes hurt or weakened; whereas indeed religion is the main pillar and upholder of civill authority or magistracie, and it is the resisting, and not the receiving, of the government of Christ, which hath overturned civill powers. If the throne be established by righteousnesse, (as we are plainly taught by the Word of God,) then it is overthrowne by unrighteousnesse and iniquity.

VII. That they beware of all things which may ensnare their consciences, as evil counsell, evil company, false informations, rash promises; and especially that they beware of taking any oathes, subscribing any bonds which may relate to the Covenant and cause of God, unlesse such oaths or bonds be approved by the Generall Assembly or their Commissioners for the Publique Affairs of the Kirk.

VIII. That they do not cast away their confidence nor sink into despair, because of the present dangers and difficulties, but live by faith, wait for better times, and continue stedfast, as seeing him who is invisible, firmly believing that such a course as is not of God, but against him, will come to naught.

IX. To remember that as the violation of the Covenant by some in England doth not set us free from the observation thereof; and as no laws nor authority on earth can absolve us from so solemn an obligation to the Most High God, (which not only hath been professed by this Kirk, but in a petition of the city of London, and in publique testimonies of many of the ministry of England;) so we are not acquitted and assoiled from the obligation of our Solemn Covenant because of the troubles and confusions of the times; but that in the worst of times all those duties, whereunto by Covenant we oblige ourselves, do still lie upon us; for we have sworn, (and must perform it,) concerning that cause and Covenant wherein we solemnly engaged, "that we shall all the dayes of our lives zealously and constantly continue therein, against all opposition, and promote the same according to our power, against all lets and impediments whatsoever." And if against all lets and impediments whatsoever, then the altering of the way of opposition, or of the kinde of impediments, doth not alter the nature or tye of the Covenant, but we are obliged to all the duties therein contained.

We do also exhort and charge, in Christ's name, the Prince of pastors, all the ministers within this Kirk, that in no wayes they be accessory to this sinfull Engagement, but in all their conferences and reasoning, especially in their publick doctrine, they declare themselves freely and faithfully, as they would eschew the wrath of God, due for a violated Covenant, and as they would escape the censures of the Kirk; and let all Presbyteries be watchful within their bounds, and carefully, wisely, and zealously to inflict ecclesiastick censures.

Finally, we exhort all civill judicatories, and every one intrusted with power to manage the present affairs, that they would seriously remember the strict account they are to give before the Judge of the quick and the dead—considering deeply how fearfull a thing it is to oppress the consciences of their brethren, either by pressing them to act where they finde no satisfactory warrant, or by putting heavy pressures upon them for not acting according to their injunctions; and especially that they offer not to insnare by new oaths or bonds those that make conscience of the great oath of their Solemn Covenant, and hitherto have proven faithfull and constant in promoting joyntly all the ends thereof.

If this our faithfull warning finde favourable acceptance, so that the grievous things already enacted be no more prosecuted and pressed, we shall blesse God, who reigns in the kingdoms and counceils of men; but if it fall out otherwise, (as God forbid,) we have liberate our souls of the guiltinesse of this sinfull way of Engagement, and of all the miseries that shall ensue thereby upon this Kirk and kingdom; and shall lament before the Lord that our labours have not as yet had the desired successe. In the mean time, we dare not cast away our confidence, but trusting in the name of the Lord, and staying upon our God, shall, by his grace and assistance, continue steadfast in our Solemn Covenants, and faithfull in all the duties of our calling.

Sess. 22, August 1, 1648, ante meridiem.—The Generall Assembly's Answer to the Paper sent from the Honourable Committee of Estates, of the date July 28, 1648.

The Generall Assembly, having considered the paper of the 28th of July, delivered to them from the Honourable Committee of Estates, do finde that the first part thereof, concerning the great offers made by the Parliament and Committee of Estates for the security of religion, is no other but what was fully answered in our last paper of the 25th of July, delivered to their Lordships, wherein it was plainly demonstrate, by theologicall reasons, (though their Lordships are pleased to call them politiek,) that the present Engagement is inconsistent with the safety and security of religion. Next, whereas it is affirmed in their Lordships' paper that these grounds and reasons are the same, which were fully answered before, we wish it had been instanced when and where they were answered, for we know no such thing.

Another reflection upon that former paper of ours is thus expressed: "That the Generall Assembly hath proceeded to such a declaration before they had, in an ecclesiastick way, from clear testimonies out of the Word of God or convincing of our consciences, demonstrate the unlawfulness of the undertaking;" where we can see no reason why it should seem so very strange to the Honourable Committee, that the Generall Assembly hath so proceeded to a declaration of their judgement concerning his businesse; for as it hath been no unusuall thing, but very ordinary, that approved Synods, both Provinciaall, Nationall, and Oecumenicall, have declared their judgement, without publishing the particular grounds and reasons thereof from Scripture, a work more proper for full tractates, then for synodiell decrees or canons;) so if their Lordships had been pleased to attend (for many attended not) the late Parliament sermons, mainly intended for their Lordships' information, and had, with nindes unprejudiced, hearkened thereunto, and searched into all the papers lately published in print by the commission of the last Assembly, they might have been, by the blessing of God, convinced from the Word of God of the unlawfulness of the present Engagement.

There are three things which may justly seem to us more strange; one is, that the Declaration of Parliament having given assurance in this manner, "we are resolved not to engage in any war, before the necessity and lawfulness thereof be cleared, so as all who are well-affected may be satisfied therewith;" yet now they have engaged in war without any such clearing of the necessity and lawfulness thereof, or satisfaction given to the well-affected.

Another is, that although there are so great professions and offers in the general to satisfy what can be desired for the security of religion, yet none of those particulars desired by the late commission of the Kirk for the security of religion have been granted. We shall here only give instance in one of those desires, which was, that his Majesty's concessions and offers concerning religion, sent home from the Isle of Wight, having been found by the said commission unsatisfactory and destructive to the Covenant, might be by the Parliament declared unsatisfactory to their Lordships.

In this great point, there hath been no satisfaction given, only it was lightly touched in one clause of the Parliament's Declaration, and so ambiguously expressed as might suffer many interpretations; and although this ambiguity was clearly laid open by the commissioners of the last General Assembly in their representation, yet to this day there hath been nothing published, neither by the Parliament nor Committee of Estates, to give any clearer satisfaction, by disclaiming those offers and concessions as unsatisfactory to the Parliament; so that this (if there were no more) gives us great cause to apprehend that there is a greater mystery latent in that business then yet appeareth.

A third thing which seemeth strange to us is, that their Lordships' desire of arguments from Scripture to prove the unlawfulness of this Engagement, was not propounded to the commissioners of the last Assembly, before the emitting of the Declaration of Parliament, and before the levies, (when it had been most orderly and seasonable,) but is now propounded after publick resolutions and declarations, yea, not till those resolutions are put in actual execution.

However, seeing their Lordships do now desire proofs from Scripture for the unlawfulness of the Engagement—

We answer, that as joyning and concurring in this Engagement is unlawfull to all the well-affected in this kingdom, their consciences being altogether unsatisfied in the lawfulness thereof; and as it is unlawfull in the manner of putting it in execution, being accompanied with so many injuries, oppressions, and crying abominations, and with so much persecution of piety; so it is unlawfull in the own nature of it, and as it is stated upon the grounds of the Declarations of Parliament and Committee of Estates. And this unlawfulness of the Engagement in itself we have demonstrate in the declaration herewith communicate to their Lordships, unto which we remit them for satisfaction in that point, and do not doubt but their Lordships may be convinced thereby of the evill of their way, and that it is so far from being a pious and necessary Engagement, (as their Lordships are pleased to call it,) that it is a most unlawfull and sinfull Engagement, to be repented of and forsaken by all that have any hand in it, as they desire to make their peace with God. And we heartily wish that their Lordships' subsequent proceedings may be reall testimonies that their calling for Scripture proofs was from a reall desire to be informed and edified.

As to their Lordships' other desire, of our demonstrating from the Word of God that the Kirk hath interest in the undertakings and engagements in war, and what that interest is, we had thought this point to be without controversie in this kingdom not only in respect of Kirk and State, their joyning and co-operating (each in their proper sphere) in the former expeditions of this kingdom into England, but also because the very conferences which have been between committees of Kirk and State concerning this undertaking and Engagement, doth plainly suppose an interest of the Kirk in such affairs.

If their Lordships mean any politick interest in such undertakings, we claim no such thing; if the meaning be of a spirituall interest, and so far as concerneth the point of conscience, there can be no doubt thereof made by such as do, with David, make the testimonies of the Lord their counsellors, Psalm cxix. 24; and consult with God as he used to do in undertaking war. It is also to be remembred, that Joshua and all the congregation of Israel were commanded to go out and in at the word of Eliezer the Priest, who was to aske counsell of the Lord for them, Numb. xxvii. 28. Hath not the Word of God prescribed to the Christian magistrate the rules of a lawful war; and doth it not belong to particular ministers, much more to the Assemblies of the Kirk, to declare the minde of God from Scripture for all sorts of duties, and against all sorts of sins? And if the present war be a case of conscience, and alledged to be the most fit and necessary means for preservation of religion, who seeth not that the Kirk hath an undoubted interest in resolving and determining such a case of conscience from the Word of God? This we shall only adde, that whereas in the Parliament's Letter to the Presbyteries three instances were adduced, by way of reflection upon the proceedings of the late commission, as meddling with civill matters, in which they had no interest, the commission did, in their printed vindication, so clear from scripturall grounds their interest in such things, as their Lordships might have been easily satisfied in that point. We shall here only mention one passage containing a good and safe rule for such cases. The duties of the Second Table, as well as of the First, as, namely, the duties between king and subject, parents and children, husbands and wives, masters and servants; and the like being contained in, and to be taught and cleared from the Word of God, are in that respect, and so far as concerneth the point of conscience, a subject of ministeriall doctrine, and in difficult cases a subject of cognizance and judgement to the Assemblies of the Kirk.

*Sess. 23, Eodem die, post meridiem.—A Declaration and Exhortation of the Generall Assembly of the Church of Scotland to their Brethren of England.

As the necessity of preserving a right understanding and mutuall confidence betwixt the churchees of Christ in both kingdoms constrains us, so the good acceptance and the suitable affections that the declaration of the last Generall Assembly met with in England from the lovers of the Covenant and present reformation, together with the many testimonies that have of late been given unto the truth in that land, invites and incourages us to make known unto our brethren there our sense of the present condition of publick affairs, so far as concerns religion and the point of conscience.

The dispensation of God, in ruling of the nations, and in the revolutions of his providence towards them, is full of wonder in all the earth; and we, who live in this island, have cause to look upon it with speeciall observation in regard of that which concerns our selves. For many generations these two kingdoms stood at odds, and were the instruments of many sufferings and calamities one to another, untill at last the Lord, having compassion upon both, did unite them under one king; which great and long desired blessing hath received such increase from our being united together in one League and Covenant, as doth adde much to the good and happinesse of both nations; therefore is it to be looked upon by all the lovers of truth and peace in these lands as a just ground of much thanksgiving and many praises unto God, even in the day of our greatest calamity and affliction, what ever befall, as we know no cause why we should forget so great a merey or repent of so good a work.

But as the common enemies of these kingdoms studied by all means to keep them from entering into that Covenant, so hath all their power and poliey now, for five years past, been employed to bring it to nought. As soon as it had being, the Popish, Prelaticall, and Malignant party, did bend all their forces against it; and when, by the mighty hand of God, they were scattered and brought to confusion, in their stead stood up in England a generation who have perverted the truth, and, by turning aside into error, have obstructed the work of reformation; and, by forsaking of the Covenant and forgetting of the oath of God, have brought a great reproach upon his name, and made the enemy to blaspheme; whose unthankfulness and unstedfastnesse, with the many provocations of these lands, hath provoked the Lord again to raise out of the dust the horn of Malignants, and to arm them with such power as is terrible to his people, and threatens his work with ruine. And, albeit we acknowledge our selves bound, and are still resolved to preserve and defend his Majesty's person and authority in the preservation and defence of the true religion and liberties of the kingdoms; yet it is unto us matter of very great sorrow and grief that so many in our land should so far joyn in Malignant designes, and that there should be found amongst us who have undertaken, and are now putting in execution, an unlawfull war for promoting their ends, and opposing and making void (so far as in them lies) the ends of the Covenant; neverthelesse, in this we cannot but rejoyce that they went not without a witness and a warning dissuading them to go.

And we desire our brethren in England to know, that as a very considerable number of the members of the Parliament did dissent from and protest against the proceedings of the major part in reference to this Engagement, so all the particular Synods and Presbyteries in this kingdom, excepting some few, who, by reason of their remotenesse and shortnesse of time, had not the opportunity, have most harmoniously joyned with and seconded the desires of the commissioners of the Generall Assembly, for preventing so unlawfull a war. And now the commissioners out of all the provinces convened in this Nationall Assembly, as after an exact examination they have unanimously approved the proceedings of the commissioners of the former Assembly against that Engagement, so have they emitted a declaration to all the people of God in this land, shewing it to be contrary to God's Word and to the Solemn League and Covenant. Neither have ministers only, by their preaching, and kirk judicatories, by their petitions and declarations, given testimony against it; but many others in this land also, by supplicating the High and Honourable Court of Parliament, for satisfaction to their consciences thereant; and when it could not be obtained, many have chosen rather to suffer the spoiling of their goods with joy, then to sin against God by complying with an evil course. And many of the officers of our former army, who are of speciall note for their good carriage and deserving in the cause of God, have rather choosed to quit their charges then to joyn in it; nay, the well-affected, both ministers and people, as they do bear testimony against it before men, so groan under it before God. So that this character may justly be put upon it by all who shall speak of it now or in after ages:—that as it is a foul breach of the Covenant, under a pretence and profession of being for the ends of the Covenant, so, being carried on against the consciences of the people, and contrary to the most harmonious and universall testimonies of many Presbyteries and Synods, that have been given against it, it is a sinning with many witnesses. A paralell will hardly be found in this or in any other land, wherein a publick sinfull course hath been carried on with so high a hand, against the consciences of the people of God, and against so many warnings of the servants of God, and generall opposition from the judicatories of the Kirk; which yet is the less to be wondered at, because the greatest part of those who have been most active in contriving and carrying on of the same were either once open enemies, or always secret underminers, or indifferent and neutrall in the cause of God.

But, whatsoever be the falling away of such, we shall desire and do expect that our brethren in England, who continue faithfull, may rest confident of the generality of all such of this kingdom as were at first active in promoting the Covenant and work of reformation, that they are also still faithfull in adhering thereunto, and walking after their former principles, do resolve to abide stedfast, and to hold fast the bands of brotherhood and union between these kingdoms. Neither are we lesse confident of the like resolutions and affections of our brethren in England. The many testimonies which the truth and cause of Christ, the Covenant, and Presbyteriall Government, have lately received from that cloud of witnesses of the ministry in severall provinces and counties of that kingdom, after the example of the worthy ministry of the city of London, against the errours of Independency, Anabaptism, Antinomianism, Arminianism, Socinianism, Familism, Libertinism, Sceptism, Erastianism, and other new and dangerous doctrines, spread and received amongst many in that nation; as they are unto us matter of great praise and hearty thanksgiving unto God, so also an evidence of the stedfastness of many in England, and a token for good, and a wide door of hope that the Lord will perfect his work, and bring forth the headstone of his house in that land. It shall be the wisdom of each nation to keep the golden path of truth and righteousness, betwixt the crooked and corrupt wayes of Malignants, upon the one hand, and Sectaries upon the other; and for each of the nations so to look upon another as to distinguish betwixt the prevalent part and the better part, and betwixt friends and foes.

We conceive it to be high time for both nations to search and try their ways, and turn again to the Lord, that he who hath wounded us may heal us, and he who hath broken us may binde us up. The sin of both hath been the departing from the rule of the Covenant, and that we did not trust God for the perfecting of his work, walking by the rule of piety, but took our selves to human policies, and endeavoured to carry it on by carnall and worldly means. For as Scotland did too much connive at and comply with Malignants, which is the immediate and nearest cause of all our present troubles and distractions; so England, neglecting to hold fast the truth, and to submit themselves to the government of Jesus Christ, so clearly held forth by the pious and learned Assembly of Divines, did connive at many abominable blasphemies and errors, and, complying with Sectaries, gave way to their wicked toleration. Neither is it the least part of the sin of both lands that they have more minded the outward then the inward reformation, the erecting of the outward fabrick of God's house, then the providing furniture for it, by advancing the power of the Gospel, that his glory may be seen in his temple. Because of these things is there great wrath from the Lord against these kingdoms, and his controversie shall be continued untill we really turn away from our crooked paths. Therefore, as we wish that none of this land may flatter themselves in their evill wayes, but repent and amend, so we desire our brethren of England to consider what hath been the bitter fruits of their slow progresse in and neglect of the work of reformation, and of their connivance at and complying with Sectaries, and to do no more so, but that whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven it be diligently done for the house of the God of heaven.

We trust that the Parliament of England will be wise to remember and consider the great mercies of God towards them, in delivering them from all their enemies, and the many opportunities put into their hands for advancing and establishing the work of reformation; for neglect whereof God hath now again threatened to lift up their enemies above them, that he may once more prove what they will do for his name, and for setling the order of his house. God forbid that they should run from one extrem to another, from compliance with Sectaries to compliance with Malignants, and hearken to terms of an unsafe and sinfull peace. We cannot but abhor the purposes of any who minde the subversion of monarchical government, which we heartily wish to be preserved and continued in his Majesty's person and posterity; and we do no lesse dislike the practises of those who deal so hardly with his Majesty's person, earnestly desiring that he were in the condition he was into by the advice of both kingdoms, before he was taken away by a party of Sir Thomas Fairfax army; nor are we against the restoring of the King to the exercise of his power in a right order and way. Yet, considering what great expence of blood and pains these kingdoms have been at for maintaining their just liberties, and bringing the work of reformation this length; and considering his Majesty's great aversnesse from setling reformation of religion, and his adhering still to Episcopacy, we trust that security will be demanded and had from his Majesty for religion, before he be brought to one of his houses in or neer about London, with honour, freedom, and safety. And considering of what importance the Solemn League and Covenant is unto all the interests of both kingdoms, concerning their religion, liberties, and peace, to make an agreement without establishing of it, were not only to rob these nations of the blessings they have already attained by it, but to open a door to let in all the corruptions that have been formerly in the Kirks of God in these lands, and all the abuses and usurpations that have been in the civill government, and again to divide these two kingdoms that are now so happily united and conjoynd; and, therefore, as we wish that all misunderstandings betwixt the nations, and betwixt the King and his people, may be removed, that there may be a happy and lasting peace, so that there may be no agreement without establishing and enjoyning the Covenant in all these three kingdoms; and that for this end God would give wisdom to all that are intrusted in the managing of publick affairs, that they may seasonably discover, and carefully avoid, all snares which may be laid either by Sectaries or Malignants, or both, under colour of a treaty of peace. And we are confident, through the Lord, that all the obstructions and oppositions by which his work has been retarded and interrupted in this island, shall not only be taken out of the way, but shall turn to the advantage and furtherance of it at last. The only wise God can and will bring about his holy purposes by unlikely, yea, by contrary means; and God forbid that either our brethren of England or our selves should give way to despondency of spirit, and cast away the hopes of that so much prayed-for and so much wished-for reformation of religion, and uniformity in all the parts thereof, according to the Covenant. And now it is our heart's desire and prayer to God, that amidst the many trials and tentations of these times, none of the servants of God and witnesses of Jesus Christ may be deserted or left to themselves, to comply either with the Malignant party upon the one hand, or with Sectaries upon the other. Brethren, pray for us, and the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, and settle you.

Sess. 24, August 2, 1648, ante meridiem.—Answer to the Letter of the Reverend Assembly of Divines in England.

Right Honourable, Right Reverend, and well-beloved in our Lord,

We cease not to give thanks to the Father of our Lord Jesus, by whose strength you keep the word of his patience now in these times, when many depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits; as also, that he who hath founded Zion hath been pleased, by our Covenant sworn to the Most High God, to lay the hopefull foundation of a glorious work in these three kingdoms, to unite his people therein, as one stick in the hand of the Lord.

We cannot but acknowledge, to the honour and glory of the Lord, wonderfull in counsell and excellent in working, that he hath strongly united the spirits of all the godly in this kingdom, and of his servants in the ministry, first, in the severall Presbyteries and Synods, and now in this nationall Assembly, in an unanimous and constant adhering to our first principles, and the Solemn League and Covenant; and, particularly, in giving a testimony against the present unlawfull Engagement in war; yet it seemeth good to the Lord, who hath his fire in Zion and furnace in Jerusalem, for the purging of the vessels of his house, to suffer many adversaries to arise, with violence to obstruct and stop this great and effectfull door which the Lord hath opened unto us. But we know that he openeth, and no man shutteth, and shutteth, and no man openeth; yea, he will cause them who say they are for the Covenant and are not, but are enemies thereto, and do associate with Malignants and Sectaries, to acknowledge that God hath loved us, and that his truth is in us and with us. And now, dearly beloved, seeing the Lord hath kept you together so many years, when the battel of the warrior hath been with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood, the Lord also sitting as a refiner to purifie the sons of Levi, and blessing you with unity and soundnesse in the faith, we are confident you will not cease to give a publick testimony for Christ, both against sectaries and all seducers, who prophecie lies in the name of the Lord, and against Malignants and incendiaries, (the Prelaticall and Popish faction,) who now again bestir themselves to hold up the rotten and tottering throne of Antiechrist, and are (whatever they pretend) the reall enemies of reformation; as also, that as the ambassadors of Jesus Christ, and his watchmen, you will give seasonable warning to the Honourable Houses of Parliament, that now (after the losse of the opportunity of so many years) they would, in their places, repair the house of the Lord, that lyeth so long desolate, and promote the work of reformation and uniformity according to the Covenant.

For if the Honourable Houses of Parliament had timely made use of that power which God had put in their hands for suppressing of sectaries, and had taken a speedy course for setting of Presbyteriall government, (a speciall and effectfull means appointed by God to purge his Church from all scandals in doctrine and practise,) then had not the insolencie of that party arisen to such a height, as to give occasion to the Malignants of both kingdoms to justifie and blesse themselves in their old opposition to the work of reformation, and to encourage one another to new and more dangerous attempts; neither had the Malignant party ever grown so strong in this kingdom if the sectaries had not been conuived at in England, for their prime pretence (for their present rising in armes) is, that they may suppress the sectaries, and vindicate the King from that base condition unto which he is brought by that party. Yet these do not wisely nor well, who, avoiding or opposing sectarisme, split themselves upon the rock of Malignancy, and by taking that party by the hand now, do own all the cruelty, bloodshed, and other ungodly and unjust acts, which they have done since the beginning of this reformation. And as we take thankfully your testimony of our steiring so steady and even a course between the dangerous rocks of Prophanesse and Malignancy on the one hand, and of error, schisme, heresie, and blasphemie on the other hand; so we trust ye will not cease to give testimony against both these evils, and represent the same to the Honourable Houses of Parliament, as you shall have fit occasion; and that you will gravely warne your dissenting brethren what a door they keep open for errors and heresies, by their tenet of Independency, whereby they leave no means of authoritative ecclesiastick suppression of errors, if an Independent congregation will please to own them. We also are confident that you will be remembrancers to that famous city of London, and the whole kingdom, of their engagement to the Lord, in the Solemn League and Covenant. Nor will we suffer our selves to believe that the well-affected in the Houses of Parliament, in the city of London, and throughout that whole kingdom, will agree or hearken to the motions of any such treaty of peace, as leaves out the best security for religion, the cause of God, and the Solemn League and Covenant. Thus desiring the continuance of your prayers to God for us, in this hour of temptation; and promising (through his grace and strength) to continue in prayers for you, we commit you to the infinite wisdom, power, goodnesse, and faithfulness of our blessed God and Father in Christ, in whom we are,

Your very loving and affectionate Brethren to serve you,
The Ministers and Elders conuened in the Generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland.

August 2, 1648.

Direct.—To the Right Honourable and Right Reverend the Assembly of Divines in England now assembled at Westminster.

Sess. 25, Eodem die, post meridiem.—The humble Supplication of the Generall Assembly to the Right Honourable the Committee of Estates.

Whereas the High and Honourable Court of Parliament and your Lordships were pleased to injoyne the subscription of a declaration and band, of the date June 10, 1648; and we having found, after such examination and tryall as is competent to the servants of God in an ecclesiastick way, that the same is a snare to the consciences of the people of God in this land, to involve them in guiltinesse, and to draw them from their former principles and vows in the Solemn League and Covenant, as doth more fully appear in our act concerning the same, herewith presented unto your Lordships: Therefore, from our zeal to the glory of God, and tender care of the souls committed unto us, and for our exoneration, as we do seriously exhort that your Lordships would be sensible of the guilt that you have already brought upon your selves and others, by injoyning and urging that subscription, so we do earnestly, and in the bowels of Jesus Christ, intreat that your Lordships would take such order and course as that it may be no further pressed upon the people of God throughout the land.

And because the people groan under the violence and oppression of officers and souldiers in their quarterings, or otherwise, throughout all the corners of the countrey, (which, as it hath ascended into the ears of the Lord of Hosts, so we doubt not but it is come to your knowledge,) we conceive it to be incumbent to us to represent the same to your Lordships, beseeching and obtesting you, that, as you would not desire that the Lord should visit because of these things, you would think upon an effectuall remedy for punishing and redressing what is past, and preventing the like in time coming.

And whereas, by an act and inhibition of your Lordships, the liberty of printing, being one of the Kirk's priviledges confirmed by Parliament, is restrained, therefore we intreat that the inhibition upon the printers may be taken off.

And now, having condescended upon a declaration to all the members of this Kirk, concerning present dangers and duties, we do, in all humility, offer the same to your Lordships, (together with our answer to the paper last sent to us from your Lordships,) professing in the sight of God (whose servants we are) that we have walked herein according to the rule of his Word, and have nothing before our eyes but his glory and the well of his people; and, therefore, intreat your Lordships, that you would seriously ponder the same without prejudice, and as you desire to be comforted in the day of your accompts, to make right use of the light that is holden forth therein from God's Word.

Sess. 26, August 3, 1648, ante meridiem.—Act for censuring Ministers for their Silence, and not Speaking to the Corruptions of the Time.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their serious consideration the great scandals which have lately encreased, partly through some ministers, their reserving and not declaring of themselves against the prevalent sins of the times, partly through the spite, malignity, and insolency of others, against such ministers as have faithfully and freely reprov'd the sins of the times without respect of persons; do, therefore, for preventing and removing such scandals hereafter, appoint and ordain, that every minister do, by the word of wisdom, apply his doctrine faithfully against the publick sins and corruptions of these times, and particularly against the sins and scandals in that congregation wherein he lives, according to the act of the Generall Assembly, 1596, revived by the Assembly at Glasgow, 1638; appointing that such as shall be found not applying their doctrine to corruptions, which is the pastorall gift—cold, and wanting of spirituall zeal—flatterers, and dissembling of publick sins, and especially of great personages in their congregations—that all such persons be censured according to the degree of their faults, and continuing therein be deprived; and, according to the Act of the Generall Assembly, 1646, Sess. 10, that, beside all other scandals, silence, or ambiguous speaking in the publike cause, much more detracting and disaffected speeches, be seasonably censured. As, therefore, the errors and exorbitancies of seccaries in England are not to be passed in silence, but plain warning to be given of the danger of so near a contagion, that people may beware of it, and such as neglect this duty to be censured by their Presbyteries; so it is thought fit and appointed by the Assembly, conform to the foresaid acts, that the main current of applications in sermons may run along against the evils that prevail at home, and namely, against the contempt of the Word—against all profanesse—against the present defection from the League and Covenant—against the unlawfull Engagement in war—against the unlawfull Band and Declaration of the date of the 10th of June, ordained to be subscribed by all the subjects, and other unjust decrees established by law—against the plots and practises of Malignants—and against the principles and tenets of Erastianism, which spread among divers in this kingdom: for the better confutation whereof, it is hereby recommended to the ministry to study that point of controversie well, that they may be the more able to stop the mouths of gainsayers. 'Tis also hereby recommended to the severall Presbyteries and Provinciaall Synods, that they make special enquiry and triall concerning all the ministry in their bounds; and if any be found too sparing, generall, or ambiguous, in the foresaid applications and reproofs, that they be sharply rebuked, dealt with, and warn'd to amend, under the pain of suspension from their ministry; and if, after such warning given, they amend not, that such be suspended by Presbyteries, and in case of their negligence, by the Synods, till the next Generall Assembly; but if there be any who do neglect and omit such applications and reproofs, and continue in such negligence after admonition and dealing with them, they are to be cited, and, after due triall of the offence, to be deposed—for being pleasers of men rather than servants of Christ—for giving themselves to a detestable indifferency or neutrality in the cause of God, and for defrauding the souls of people; yea, for being highly guilty of the blood of souls, in not giving them warning. Much more are such ministers to be censured with deposition from their ministry, who preach for the lawfulness, or pray for the success of the present unlawfull Engagement—or that go along with the army themselves—or who subscribe any bands, or take any oaths not approved by the Generall Assembly or their Commissioners—or by their counsel, countenance, or approbation, make themselves accessory to the taking of such bands and oaths by others. It is to be understood, that if any minister preach in defence of, or pray for successe to the sectaries in England, he is likewise to be censured by deposition; and this we adde, as a generall rule to be observed on both hands, but not as if we had found any of the ministry of this kingdom to be favourers of the sectaries in England.

And in case any minister, for his freedom in preaching, and faithfull discharge of his conscience, shall be, in the face of the congregation or elsewhere, upbraided, railed at, mocked, or threatened—or if any injury or violence be done to his person—or any stop and disturbance made to him in the exercise of his ministeriall calling, the Presbyterie of the bounds shall forthwith enter in processe with the offender, and whoever he be, charge him to satisfie the discipline of the Kirk by publick repentance; which if any do not, or refuse to do, that then the Presbyterie proceed to excommunication against him; in all which, Presbyteries and Synods are to give an account of their diligence, and the Assembly appoints this Act to be intimate in the several congregations of this Kirk.

Sess. 29, August 4, 1648, post meridiem.—Overtures concerning the Education of the Hieland Boys in the Province of Argyle.

This day, the Report following being made from the Committee concerning the Education of Hieland Boys in Argyle, viz. :—

The Committee, considering the Bill remitted by the Generall Assembly to us, concerning the Hieland Boys, (who are given up to be forty in number, of good spirits, and approven by the Province of Argyle,) do humbly think that four of them, who are ready for the colledge, should be recommended to the Universities to get burses one in every colledge. As for the rest of the forty, who are to be brought up at grammar schools, the Committee thinks that if the said boys should be scattered through the kingdom, they should lose the Irish language, and so the Assembly shall fail of their purpose to make them usefull for the Hielands. And, therefore, do humbly conceive that it were fitting that every congregation pay yearly forty shillings Scots for maintaining the said boys at schools in Glasgow, or in other places, where many of them may be together accepted of, and that the money be brought in yearly to the Generall Assembly by the commissioners of Presbyteries, and that Presbyteries augment or diminish the said proportion according to the ability of every congregation.

The Assembly, having considered the foresaid Report, approves the first overture, and recommends Colin Campbell to the University of Aberdeen, Duncan Campbell to Edinburgh, Patrick Campbell to Glasgow, Zachary Maccullum to St Leonard's Colledge in St Andrews: As also, approves the second overture, seriously recommending to Presbyteries that the said forty shillings be collected carefully and sent to Glasgow; and the ministers of Glasgow shall appoint some sufficient man in that town to receive the said collection from Presbyteries, and to take charge of the boording and entertainment of the saids boys in Glasgow, at schooles, and they shall send in the names of the boys, with a certificate of their proficiency, yearly to the Generall Assembly; and this collection shall only endure for the space of twelve years.

Sess. 30, August 5, 1648, ante meridiem.—Explanation of the Fifth Article of the Overtures concerning Appeals past in the Assembly, 1643.

The Generall Assembly, for clearing the sense of the fifth article of the overtures concerning appeals in the Assembly, 1643, Sess. 2, do declare, that if appellations post latam sententiam be not presented to the judicatory when the sentence is pronounced, the party shall then immediately after the sentence protest for liberty of appeal, as he shall see cause; and, accordingly, within ten days, shall give in his appeal in writ, under his hand, either to the judicatory or the Moderator thereof, otherwise the appeal is not to be respected.

Sess. 30, Eodem die, 1648, ante meridiem.—Act discharging Deposed or Suspended Ministers from any exercise of the Ministry, or meddling with the Stipend.

The Generall Assembly, considering that, according to the ancient practice and order of this Kirk, the censure of suspension and deposition of ministers is both ab officio and à beneficio, as is also acknowledged by the 20th Act of the Parliament, anno 1644; and that the continuance of suspended or deposed ministers in the exercise of the ministry, or in the possession of their stipend, hath been, and ought to be, accompted and censured as a great contempt of the authority and censures of the Kirk; considering also, that the continuance of deposed ministers in the possession of the stipend is a great prejudice and obstruction to the planting of the vauking kirk, and to the service of God there: Therefore, do declare and ordain, that whosoever, after the sentence of deposition pronounced against them, do either exercise any part of the ministeriall calling in the places they formerly served in, or elsewhere, or do possesse, meddle, or intromit with the stipend or other benefits whatsoever, belonging to these kirks they served at, they shall be proceeded against with excommunication; and if any suspended minister, during his suspension, either exercise any part of the ministeriall calling, or intromit with the stipend, that he be deposed, and after deposition, continuing in either of these faults, that he be processed with excommunication; but prejudice always to them of their stipend resting for bygone service, and of any recompence due for building or repairing of the manse, according to the ordinary practise. And the Assembly recommends to Presbyteries seriously to be carefull of the putting of this Act in execution.

Sess. 31, August 7, 1648, ante meridiem.—The Assemblie's Declaration of the Falshood and Forgerie of a lying scandalous Pamphlet, put forth under the name of their Reverend Brother, Master Alexander Henderson, after his Death.

The Generall Assembly of this Kirk, having seen a printed paper, intituled, "The Declaration of Mr Alexander Henderson, principall minister of the Word of God at Edinburgh, and chief Commissioner from the Kirk of Scotland to the Parliament and Synod of England, made upon his deathbed;" and taking into their serious consideration how many grosse lies and impudent calumnies are herein contained; out of the tender respect which they do bear to his name, (which ought to be very precious to them and all posterity, for his faithfull service in the great work of reformation in these kingdoms, wherein the Lord was pleased to make him eminently instrumental;) and lest through the malice of some, and ignorance of others, the said pamphlet should gain belief among the weaker sort, they have thought fit to make known and declare concerning the same as followeth:—

That after due search and tryall, they do finde, that their worthy brother, Master Alexander Henderson, did, from the time of his coming from London to Newcastle, till the last moment of his departure out of this life, upon all occasions, manifest the constancy of his judgement touching the work of reformation in these kingdoms; namely, in all his discourses and conferences with his Majesty, and with his brethren who were employed with him in the same trust at Newcastle; in his letters to the commissioners at London, and particularly in his last discourse to his Majesty, at his departing from Newcastle, being very weak and greatly decayed in his naturall strength. When he was come from Newcastle by sea to this kingdom, he was in such a weak, worn, and failed condition, as it was evident to all who saw him that he was not able to frame any such declaration, for he was so spent that he died within eight dayes after his arrivall; and all that he was able to speak in that time did clearly shew his judgement of and affection to the work of reformation and cause of God, to be every way the same then that it was in the beginning and progresse thereof, as divers reverend brethren who visited him have declared to this Assembly, and particularly two brethren who constantly attended him, from the time he came home till his breath expired. A further testimony may be brought from a short Confession of Faith under his hand, found amongst his papers, which is expressed as his last words, wherein, among other mercies, he declareth himself “most of all obliged to the grace and goodnesse of God, for calling him to believe the promises of the Gospel, and for exalting him to be a preacher of them to others, and to be a willing though weak instrument in this great and wonderfull work of reformation, which he earnestly beseecheth the Lord to bring to a happy conclusion.” Other reasons may be added from the levity of the stile and manifest absurdities contained in that paper. Upon consideration of all which, this Assembly doth condemn the said pamphlet, as forged, scandalous, and false; and further declare the author and contriver of the same to be void of charity and a good conscience, and a grosse lyar and calumniator, led by the spirit of the accuser of the brethren.

Act for taking the Covenant at the first receiving of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and for the receiving of it also by all Students at their first entry to Colledges.

The Generall Assembly, according to former recommendations, doth ordain, that all young students take the Covenant at their first entry to colledges; and that hereafter, all persons whatsoever take the Covenant at their first receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; requiring hereby Provinciall Assemblies, Presbyteries, and Universities, to be carefull that this act be observed, and accompt thereof taken in the visitation of Universities and particular Kirks, and in the tryall of Presbyteries.

Sess. 32, Eodem die, post meridiem.—Act concerning Presbyteries maintaining of Bursars.

The Generall Assembly, understanding that the frequent recommendation of preceding Assemblies for maintaining bursars is by many Presbyteries neglected; do, therefore, ordain Synods to crave accompt thereof from Presbyteries at every Provinciall meeting, which, with the Presbyteries' answer, shall be put upon record, that so the part both of Presbyteries and Synods, and their negligence or diligence in so pious a work, may be known, by the examination of the Provinciall books, to each Generall Assembly.

Sess. 35, August 9, 1648, ante meridiem.—Act for disjoyning the Presbytery of Zetland from the Provinciall Synod of Orkney and Cathnes.

The Generall Assembly, now, after exact tryal, finding that the Presbytery of Zetland cannot meet with the Provincial of Cathnes and Orkney, to which it was adjoyned by an act of the Assembly, 1646, Sess. 2; and that the allowance and dispensation granted in the preceding Assembly, for the halfe of their number to keep the meetings of the said Provinciall, cannot be observed in respect of the great distance of that isle by sea from the land, and the dangerousness of the seas there, and of the passage through them: Therefore, after hearing the parties interested, and serious deliberation of the matter, the Assembly doth hereby disjoyn the Presbytery of Zetland from the Provincial of Cathnes and Orkney, and declares, for these reasons, that the said Presbytery is to be hereafter subordinate immediately to the Generall Assembly; or which cause, their commissioners are to be sent to each Generall Assembly the more carefull, and it is hereby recommended to them, that they send to the next Assembly a particular information of the quality and condition of all their Kirks, according to the direction of the act of the preceding Assembly, Sess. 27, entituled, An Act for Pressing and Furthering the Planting of Kirks.

Sess. 38, Aug. 10, 1648, post meridiem.—Overtures for the Remedies of the grievous and common Sins of the Land in this present time.

The sins of the land, and the causes and occasions thereof, being considered, the following remedies of these sins were propounded:—

CIVILL REMEDIES.

For the present, untill the overtures are prepared to be presented to the Parliament, it is to be recommended to every congregation to make use of the 9th Act of the Parliament, 1645, at Perth, for having magistrates and justices in every congregation; and of the 8th Act of the said Parliament, against swearing, drinking, and mocking of piety, and all other Acts of Parliament for restraining or punishing of vice; particularly, for the better restraining of the sin of whoredom, that each magistrate in every congregation exact and make compt to the Session of fourty pounds for each fornicatour and fornicatrix, of an hundreth merks for each one of their relapse in fornication, of an hundreth pounds for each adulterer and adulteress, according to express Acts of Parliament, which is to be exacted of those who may pay it, and the discretion of the magistrate is to modifie it according to the ability or inability of each delinquent.

DOMESTICK REMEDIES.

1. Let care be taken of conscionable receiving of servants, that they have testimonials of their honest behaviour; and let all such as give testimonials take heed that these to whom they give them be free of scolding, swearing, lying, and such like more common sins, as well as fornication, adultery, drunkenness, and other grosse and hainous evils. Let the ordinary time of giving testimonials be in face of Session; and if an extraordinary exigent be, let it be given by the minister, with consent of the elder of the bounds wherein the person craving the testimoniall hath resided; if they have fallen or relapsed in scandalous sins, let their testimoniall bear both their fall and repentance.

2. Let care be had that the worship of God be practised, and discipline exercised in families, according to the Directory for Family Worship in all things, as was appointed in the Generall Assembly, 1647, especially in the minister's constant catechizing of the family, and in the performance of the duties of the Sabbath by all the members thereof.

3. Let persons to be married, and who have children to be baptized, who are very rude and ignorant, be stirred up and exhorted, as at all times, so especially at that time, to attain some measure of Christian knowledge in the grounds of religion, that they may give to the minister, before the elder of the bounds wherein they live, some accompt of their knowledge, that so they may the better teach their family and train up their children.

4. Let every family that hath any in it that can read have a Bible and a Psalm-Book, and make use of them; and where none can read, let them be stirred up to traîne up their children in reading, and use any other good remedie the minister and session can fall on.

GENERALL ECCLESIASTICK REMEDIES.

1. Let the remedies which were given at Perth, 1645, and are mentioned in the Generall Assembly, 1646, anent the sins of ministers, be put in execution.

2. Let suspension from the Lord's Sacrament be more carefully executed.

3. Let persons relapse in adultery, (or above,) quadrilapse in fornication, (or above,) or often guilty of other grosser scandals, be excommunicat somewhat more summarly nor in an ordinary processe, (except there be more nor ordinary signes, and an eminent measure of repentance made known to the Session and Presbyterie,) both for the hainousness of the sins, and continuance therein, and also for terrour to others; and these not to be relaxed from the sentence of excommunication without evidence and undeniable signes of repentance.

4. Let unpartiall proceeding be used against men of all quality, for their scandalous walking; and, in particular, for drunkennesse, swearing, and other scandalous sins. And this to be tryed at the visitation of kirks.

PARTICULAR ECCLESIASTICK REMEDIES.

AND, I. AGAINST IGNORANCE.

1. Let ministers catechise one day every week, (whereon also they may baptize and lecture or preach,) and let them preach every Lord's Day both before and after noon, according to former Acts of Generall Assemblies; let Presbyteries and Synods be very carefull of this, and let every Provinciall book contain an exact accompt thereof.

2. Let ministers examine all of every quality of whose knowledge they have no certain notice.

3. Let young persons be catechized by the minister from the time they are capable of instruction, and let them not be delayed till they be of age to communicat.

4. Let persons grosly ignorant be debarred from the communion; for the first and second time let them be debarred, suppressing their names; for the third time, expressing their names; for the fourth time, bring them to publick repentance; all this is to be understood of those that profit nothing, and labours not for knowledge; but if they be profiting in any measure, or labouring that they may profit, their case is very considerable, they ought to have more forbearance.

II. ECCLESIASTICK REMEDIES AGAINST PROPHANESSE.

1. Let ignorant and scandalous persons be put off, and kept off kirk-sessions.

2. Let every elder have a certain bounds assigned to him, that he may visit the same every moneth at least, and report to the session what scandalls and abuses are therein, or what persons have entered without testimonials.

3. Let all scandalous persons be suspended from the Lord's Supper.

4. Let the minister deal in private with them that are professing publick repentance before the elder of the bounds, thus to try the evidence of their repentance.

5. Let these who have fallen in fornication make publick profession of repentance three severall Sabbaths; who is guilty of relapse in fornication, six Sabbaths; who is guilty of trelapse in fornication, or hath once fallen in adultery, twenty-six Sabbaths; and these sins to be confessed both in one habite, viz., in sackcloth; quadrilapse in fornication and relapse in adultery, three quarters of a year; incest or murder, a year, or fifty-two Sabbaths, in case the magistrate do not his duty in punishing such crimes capitally. They that fall in fornication, or relapses therein, are first to confesse their sin before the session, and thereafter before the congregation; they that are guilty of greater degrees of that sin, and of the other sins mentioned in this article, are to confesse their sin both before the Session and Presbyterie, and there to shew some signes of repentance before they be brought to the congregation.

6. Some are to be rebuked at the time of catechizing, who deserve more nor a private reproof, and yet needs not to be brought to publick repentance.

7. It will be a good remedie against Sabbath-breaking by carriers and travellers, that the ministers where they dwell cause them to bring testimonials from the place where they rested on these Lord's Dayes wherein they were from home.

8. Let all persons who flit from one paroch to another have sufficient testimonials. This is to be extended to all gentlemen and persons of quality, and all their followers, who come to reside with their families at Edinburgh, or elsewhere; and let the minister from whom they flit advertise the minister to whom they flit if (to his knowledge) they be lying under any scandall.

9. Let ministers be free with persons of quality for amendment of their faults, and (if need shall be) let them take help thereto of some of the brethren of the Presbyterie.

10. Let the Presbyteries take speciall notice of ministers who do converse frequently and familiarly with Malignants, and with scandalons and prophane persons, especially such as belong to other paroches.

11. Let privie censures of Presbyteries and Synods be performed with more accuracie, diligence, and zeal.

12. For better keeping of the Sabbath, let every elder take notice of such as are within his bounds how they keep the kirk, how the time is spent before, betwixt, and after the time of publick worship.

13. Let no minister resort to any excommunicate person, without license from the Presbyterie nisi in extremis; and let ministers take speciall notice of such persons as haunt with excommunicats, and processe them.

14. Frequent correspondence betwixt Presbyteries is a good remedie.

15. At the visitation of each congregation let the session-book be well visited; and, for that effect, let it be delivered to two or three brethren seven or eight dayes before the visitation, that their report of it may be in readinesse against the day of visitation.

The Assembly allows of all these overtures and remedies of the sins of the land; and ordains all of them to be carefully and conscionably put in practice.

Act for examining the Paraphrase of the Psalms and other Scripturall Songs.

The Generall Assembly appoints Rouse' Paraphrase of the Psalms, with the corrections thereof, now given in by the persons appointed by the last Assembly for that purpose, to be sent to Presbyteries, that they may carefully revise and examine the same, and thereafter send them with their corrections to the Commission of this Assembly to be appointed for Publick Affairs, who are to have a care to cause re-examine the animadversions of Presbyteries, and prepare a report to the next Generall Assembly; intimating hereby, that if Presbyteries be negligent hereof, the next Generall Assembly is to go on and take the same Paraphrase to their consideration without more delay: And the Assembly recommends to Master John Adamson and Mr Thomas Craford, to revise the labours of Mr Zachary Boyd, upon the other Scripturall songs, and to prepare a report thereof to the said Commission for Publick Affairs, that after their examination the same may be also reported to the next Generall Assembly.

Overtures concerning Papists, their Children, and Excommunicate Persons.

The Generall Assembly, considering the manifold inconveniences that follow upon the sending of the children of noblemen and others of quality to forraign countries wherein Popery is professed, especially that thereby such children are in perill to be corrupted with Popery, and so corrupt these families and persons to which they belong, whereby that wicked root of damnable idolatry, error, and heresie, may again be occasioned to spring up and trouble many, and provoke the Most High God to wrath, and to cause his Majesty to leave this land to strong delusions to believe lies; therefore, they do, in the name of God, charge and require all the Presbyteries of this kingdom to observe and practise the rules and directions which are made in former Generall Assemblies, for preventing of the said fearfull inconveniences, and, namely the overtures against Papists, non-communicants, and profaners of the Sabbath, approven in the Generall Assembly held at St Andrews, in the year of God 1642, and the act anent children sent without the kingdom, made in the Generall Assembly at Edinburgh, anno 1646. And that they use all diligence for putting in execution the Acts of Parliament and Secret Councill made against Papists and excommunicate persons; and that they register their diligences thereanent in their Presbytery books, which are summarily to be recorded in the Synod books from time to time, that the Generall Assembly may see how these laudable acts are put in execution; which here are presented, with some necessary additions, in one view:—

1. That every Presbytery give a list of all excommunicate Papists they know to be within their bounds to the Commissioners of the Generall Assembly, and of all Papists, yea, of them also who professe to have renounced Popery, but yet have their children educated abroad, with the names of these children that are abroad, according to the fifth overture of the Generall Assembly, 1642.

2. That every Presbytery convene at their first meeting all known Papists within their bounds, and such as having professed to renounce Popery have their children abroad, and cause them finde sufficient caution for bringing home within three moneths such of their children as are without the kingdom, to be educated in schools and colledges at the Presbytery's sight, if they be minors: and to be wrought upon by gracious conference, and other means of instruction, to be reclaimed from Popery, if they be come to perfect age.

3. The parents, tutors, or friends of children and minors shall, before they send them without the kingdom, first acquaint the Presbytery where they reside, that they may have their testimoniall directed to the Presbytery or classe within the kingdom or dominion beyond seas whither they intend to send their children; and at the time of these children's return, that they report a testimoniall from the Presbytery or Synod where they lived without the kingdom, to the Presbytery who gave them a testimoniall at their going away, according to the act anent children sent without the kingdom, anno 1646.

4. That all Presbyteries give the names of such pædagogos as were abroad with the children of noblemen within their bounds, and diligently enquire whether these pædagogos do continue steadfast in the true religion, and continue in their service, or whither these pædagogos do either become corrupt in religion, or (continuing constant) are removed from their charge, and by whom they are removed; and that they signifie these things to the Generall Assembly from time to time, or their commissioners, that they may represent the same to the High Court of Parliament, Lords of Secret Counsell, or Committee of Estates, for such remedie as shall seem expedient to their Honours, for preventing of and purging the land from the plague of idolatrie.

5. That such parents, tutors, or friends, as either send away children to forraign parts infected with idolatry, without such testimonialls as aforesaid, or do not recall them who are already abroad within such time as is above prefixed, or do remove from them their Protestant pædagogos, (that they may the more easily be infected with Popery,) be processed, and, in case of not amending these things, be excommunicated.

6. That the names of such as are excommunicated for these or any other causes be sent in to the Generall Assembly from year to year, that (from thence) their names may be notified in all the kingdom, and that the Acts of Parliament and Secret Counsell may be put to execution against them, and all diligence used for that effect; and that by the effectuall dealing of the Generall Assembly, with the Parliament, Lords of Secret Counsell, or Committee of Estates, their Lordships may enact such further just and severe civill punishment on such excommunicants, for terror to others, as shall be found necessary for purging this covenanted land from all abominations.

Because persons addicted to idolatry will use all means for their own hardening in their superstitious and idolatrous way, even within the countrey; therefore, all known Papists, or persons suspect of Poperie upon probable grounds, are to finde caution before their Presbyteries for their abstinence from masse, and from the company of all Jesuits and priests, according to the second overture against Papists, made anno 1642; also Presbyteries are to presse them to finde such caution; and to observe what persons put their sons or daughters to such families as are tainted with Popery within the land, the same being a speciall mean to corrupt them with idolatry; and to cause such parents recall their children, or else proceed with the censures of the Kirk against them.

All which overtures, Presbyteries are seriously required and ordained to observe diligently, with certification, that they shall be severely censured, if they shall be found remisse or negligent in any of these points, which are so necessary for keeping of the Lord's house and people unpolluted with error, idolatry, or superstition.

Sess. 39, Aug. 11, 1648, ante meridiem.—Act for Prosecuting the Treaty for the Uniformity in Religion in the Kingdom of England.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their consideration that the treaty of uniformity in religion in all his Majestie's dominions is not yet perfected; therefore, renews the power and commission granted by preceding Assemblies, for prosecuting that treaty, unto these persons afternamed, viz., Mr Robert Dowglas, Mr Samuel Rutherford, Mr Robert Baillie, Mr George Gillespie, ministers; and John Earle of Cassills, John Lord Balmerinloch, and Sir Archibald Johnston of Wariston, elders; authorizing them with full power to prosecute the said treaty of uniformity with the Honourable Houses of the Parliament of England, and the Reverend Assembly of Divines there, or any committees appointed by them; and to do all and every thing which may advance, perfect, and bring that treaty to an happie conclusion, conform to the commissions given thereanent.

Act Renewing the Commission for the Publick Affairs of this Kirk.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their consideration that, in respect the great work of uniformity in religion in all his Majestie's dominions is not yet perfected, (though by the Lord's blessing there is a good progress made in the same,) there is a necessity of renewing the Commissions granted formerly for prosecuting and perfecting that great work; do, therefore, renew the power and Commission granted for the Publick Affairs of the Kirk, by the Generall Assemblies held at Saint Andrews, 1642, and at Edinburgh, 1643, 1644, 1645, 1646, and 1647, unto the persons following, viz.: Masters John Lawder, Andrew Wood, David Calderwood, Robert Ker, John Mackghie, John Knox, John Sinclair, John Adamson, Robert Dowglas, George Gillespie, James Hamilton, Mungo Law, John Smith, Robert Lawrie, George Lesly, John Weir, Robert Eliot, Alexander Dickson, Patrick Fleeming, Thomas Vassie, Ephraim Melvill, Hew Kennedie, Kenneth Logie, Alexander Levistoun, George Bennet, David Weems, William Row, Robert Young, William Menzies, John Friebairne, John Givan, Harie Guthrie, Andrew Rind, David Auchterlony, Samuel Onsteen, Thomas Henderson, Charles Archibald, Andrew Lawder, John Leviston, John Macklellan, Alexander Turnbull, William Foullerton, George Hutcheson, John Genell, Patrick Colvill, James Ferguson, Hew Peebles, John Hamilton, Alexander Dunlope, David Ephiston, David Dickson, Robert Baillie, Robert Ramsay, Patrick Gillespie, Patrick Sharpe, James Nasmyth, John Home, Evan Camron, Robert Blair, Sannuel Rutherford, David Forret, Robert Traill, Andrew Bennett, Walther Greg, John Macgill, younger, John Moncreiff, Fredrick Carnichaell, John Chalmers, John Duncan, Andrew Donaldson, William Oliphant, George Simmer, Andrew Affleck, Arthur Granger, David Strachen, Andrew Cant, John Row, John Paterson, Alexander Cant, John Young, John Seaton, David Lindsay at Belhelvie, Nathaniel Martine, John Annand, William Falconer, Joseph Brodie, Alexander Summer, William Chalmer, Gilbert Anderson, David Rosse, George Gray, Robert Knox, William Penman, James Guthrie, Thomas Donaldson, William Jameson, Thomas Wilkie, James Ker, John Knox, Andrew Duncanson, Ministers; Archibald Marques of Argile, Alexander Earle of Eglintoun, John Earle of Cassils, William Earle of Lothian, Archibald Lord Angus, William Lord Borthwick, John Lord Torphichen, John Lord Balmerino, Robert Lord Burly, James Lord Couper, Lord Kildubright, Alexander Lord Elcho, Sir Archibald Johnston of Wariston, Sir John Hope of Craighall, Arthur Erskin of Scotseraig, Sir John Moncreiff of that Ilk, Beaton of Creigh, Sir John Wanchhope of Nidrie, Sir Thomas Ruthven of Frieland, Sir George Maxwell of Netherpollock, Sir James Fraser of Brae, Sir James Hackact of Pitfirren, Sir William Carnichaell, younger of that Ilk, Walter Dundas, younger of that Ilk, Thomas Craigs of Ricarton, Mr George Winrain of Liberton, Sir Alexander Inglis of Ingliston, Alexander Brodie of that Ilk, Forbes of Eight, William Moore of Glanderston, John Ker of Lochtour, Alexander Pringill of Whitbank, Walther Scot of Whitslaid, John Craford of Crafordland, Sir John Chisly of Carswell, Robert Monroe of Obsteall, Cornwall of Bonhard, George Dundas of Dudingston, Sir James Stewart of Kirkfield, Mr Alexander Colvill of Blair, Mr Alexander Peirson, Mr Robert Burnet, younger, Mr Thomas Murray, George Potterfield, Mr James Campbell, James Hamilton, Lawrence Henderson, Mr Robert Barclay, Mr William More, Dr William Glendoning, Dowglas, James Sword, Gideon Jack, Mr Dougall Campbell, John Boswall, John Brown, William Brown, Robert Brown, and William Russell, Elders; giving unto them full power and commission to do all and every thing for preservation of the established doctrine, discipline, worship, and government, of this Kirk, against all who shall endeavour to introduce any thing contrary thereunto; and for prosecuting, advancing, perfecting, and bringing the said work of uniformity in religion in all his Majesty's dominions to a happy conclusion, conform to the former commissions granted by preceding Assemblies thereanent; and to that effect, appoints them, or any seventeen of them, whereof thirteen shall be ministers, to meet here in this city to-morrow, the 12th of this moneth, and thereafter upon the last Wednesday of November, February, and May next, and upon any other day, and in any other place, they shall think fit. Renewing also, to the persons before named, the power contained in the act of the Assembly, 1643, intituled, "A Reference to the Commission anent the Persons designed to repair to the Kingdom of England." And, further, in case delinquents have no constant residence in any one Presbytery, or if Presbyteries be negligent or overawed, in these cases the Assembly gives to the persons before named such power of censuring compliers and persons disaffected to the Covenant, according to the Acts of the Assembly: declaring alwayes and providing, that ministers shall not be deposed but in one of the quarterly meetings of this commission; and, further, authorises them, as formerly, with full power to make supplications, remonstrances, declarations, and warnings—to indict fasts and thanksgivings as there shall be cause—to protest against all encroachments upon the liberties of the Kirk—and to censure all such as interrupt this commission, or any other Church judicatory—or the execution of their censures—or of any other sentences or acts issuing from them; and with full power to them to treat and determine in the matters referred unto them by this Assembly, as fully and freely as if the same were here fully expressed, and with as ample power as any commission of any former Generall Assemblies hath had or been in use of before: Declaring also, that all opposers of the authority of this commission in matters intrusted to them, shall be holden as opposers of the authority of the Generall Assembly; and this commission, in their whole proceedings, are comptable to and censurable by the next Generall Assembly.

Sess. 40, August 11, 1648, post meridiem.—Exemption of Murray, Rosse, and Caithnesse, from the Contribution granted to the Boyes of Argyle, with a Recommendation to Presbyteries to make up what is taken of them by that exemption.

Concerning the overture and desire of the Commissioners of the Presbyteries of Murray, Rosse, and Caithnesse, for an exemption from that contribution of forty shillings, recommended for entertainment of the Irish boyes in Argyle; the Assembly, having considered thereof, and of their offer, in the name of the said Presbyteries, if that exemption be granted, do approve their offer; and, therefore, hereby exoner the said Presbyteries of the said contribution of forty shillings toward the entertainment of the boyes in Argyle; and ordains, for that exemption, according to the offer of the said Commissioners, that each Presbyterie of the said provinces entertaine one of the Irish language at schooles; and if any be found already fit for colledges, they shall maintain them at philosophic, and so forward, untill they be fit for the ministry. And because, by this exemption, the contribution for the boyes in Argyle will be so much lessened, therefore, the Assembly recommends to all other Presbyteries to think upon some way, how, by the charitable supply, that may be made up unto them.

Act concerning Collection for the Poor.

The Assembly, understanding that the collections for the poor in some kirks in the country are taken in the time of divine service, which being a very great and unseemly disturbance of divine worship, do, therefore, hereby inhibit and discharge the same; and ordains that the minister and session appoint some other way and time for receiving the said collections.

Recommendation for securing Provisions to Ministers in Burghs.

In regard that the stipends of many ministers in burghs are not secured unto them and their successors; therefore, the Assembly do seriously recommend to the honourable Commission of Parliament for Planting of Kirks to provide real and valide security of competent and honest meanes to the present ministers of burghs and their successors, where they are not sufficiently provided or secured already; ordaining Presbyteries to use all necessary diligence for prosecuting thereof before the said Commission for Planting Kirks.

The humble Supplication of the Generall Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, met at Edinburgh, August 12, unto the King's Most Excellent Majesty.

Albeit your Majesty, through the suggestions of evil men, may haply entertain hard thoughts of us and our proceedings, yet the Searcher of hearts knows, and our consciences bear record unto us, that we bear in our spirits these humble and dutifull respects to your Majesty that loyall subjects owe to their native Sovereigne, and that it would be one of our greatest contentments upon earth to see your Majesty reigning for the Lord, in righteousnesse and peace, over these nations: And, therefore, as we do bow our knees daily before the throne of grace on your behalf, and the behalf of your posterity, so we finde our selves, as heretofore, obliged faithfully and freely to warn your Majesty of your danger and dutie; wishing and hoping that the Lord will incline your royall heart, from the sence of the evil which hath befallen you through the slighting of former warning, to be more attentive unto this. We are very sensible of your Majesty's sufferings and low condition, and do not in the least measure approve, but from our hearts abhorre, any thing that hath been done to your Majesty's person, contrary to the common resolutions of both kingdoms: Yet it shall be your Majesty's wisdom in this, as in all that hath befallen you these years past, to read the righteous hand of the Lord, writing bitter things against you, as for all your provocations, so especially for resisting his work, and authorising by your commissions the shedding of the blood of his people, for which it is high time to repent, that there be no more wrath against you and your realms.

The commission of the preceding Assembly, whose proceedings are unanimously approved by this Assembly, having read your Majesty's letter of the date at Carisbrook Castle, December 27th, and perused your concessions, did finde some of these concessions destructive to the Covenant, and all of them unsatisfactorie; and did therefore emit a declaration concerning the same, least your Majesty's subjects in this kingdom should have unawares embarked themselves in an Engagement upon grounds not consisting with the good of religion, and the Solemn League and Covenant. For preventing whereof, they did also present most just and necessary desires unto the High and Honourable Court of Parliament of this kingdom; which, if they had been granted, might have, through the blessing of God, either procured (upon treaty) your Majesty's re-establishment and a solide peace, or laid open the expediencie and necessity of a lawfull war, and have united this kingdom therein for the good of religion, of your Majesty, and of your kingdoms. When the Parliament was pleased, without satisfaction to any of these desires, to go on towards the determining of a war upon the grounds contained in their declaration, as many of their own members, who have been faithfull in the cause of God from the beginning, did dissent from their proceedings, so most of all the Presbyteries and Synods of this kingdom, and the committees of war in severall shires, did, by humble supplication, represent to the Parliament how unsatisfied they were in their consciences concerning the present Engagement; notwithstanding of all which, the Engagement hath been carried on without clearing either of the lawfulness or necessity thereof. Therefore, we, having now examined the same by the rule of God's Word, and having found it unlawfull, as we have warned the whole kingdom of the danger thereof, so we hold it our duty also to warne your Majesty, as the servants of the Most High God, and in name of the Lord Jesus Christ, who must judge the quick and dead, earnestly beseeching your Majesty that as ye would not draw new guilt upon your Majesty's throne, and make these kingdoms again a field of blood, you would be far from owning or having any hand in this so unlawfull an Engagement, which, as it hath already been the cause of so much sorrow and many sufferings to the people of God in this land, who choose affliction rather then sin, so it tendeth to the undoing of the Covenant and work of reformation. As we do not oppose the restitution of your Majesty to the exercise of your royall power, so we must needs desire that that which is God's be given unto him in the first place, and that religion may be secured before the settling of any humane interest; being confident that this way is not only most for the honour of God, but also for your Majesty's honor and safety. And, therefore, as it was one of our desires to the High and Honourable Court of Parliament, that they would sollicite your Majesty for securing of religion, and establishing the Solemn League and Covenant in all your dominions, that your Majesty might know that what they intend on your behalf was with a subordination to religion; so we do now from our selves make this humble address unto your Majesty, intreating your Majesty, as you tender truth and peace, you would be pleased to suffer your self to be possessed with right thoughts of the League and Covenant, and of the proceedings of your Majesty's loyall subjects in relation thereunto, and give your royall assent for injoyning of it in all your dominions. If your Majesty had been pleased to hearken to our counsell hereanent some years ago, the blood of many thousands, which now lyes upon your Majesty's throne, might have been spared; Popery, Prelacy, idolatry, superstition, prophanesse, heresie, error, sects, and schismes, which are now grown to so great a height in England, might have been extirpate; and your Majesty sitting in peace in your own house, reigning over your subjects with much mutuall contentment and confidence. And if your Majesty shall yet search out and repent of all your secret and open sins, and after so many dear-bought experiences of the danger of evil counsell, be now so wise as to avoid it, and to hearken to us speaking unto you in the name of the Lord, we are confident by this means your Majesty may yet be restored, and a sure and firme peace procured. We take it as a great mercy, and as a door of hope, that God still inclines the hearts of all his servants to pray for your Majesty, and we would not have your Majesty to look upon it as a light thing, that you have been preserved alive, when many thousands have, by your means and procurement, fallen on your right hand and on your left hand. God forbid that your Majesty should any longer despise the word of exhortation, the riches of his goodnesse, forbearance, and long-suffering, not knowing that the goodnesse of God leads you unto repentance; for if your Majesty do so, as we are afraid, all counsels and endeavours for your Majesty's re-establishment shall be in vain and without successe, because of the wrath of the Lord of Hosts, who brings down the mighty from his throne, and scatters the proud in the imaginations of their hearts; so we shall mourn in secret for it, and for all the miseries that are like to come upon your throne and your dominions, and comfort our selves in this, that we have delivered our own souls. But we desire to hope better things, and that your Majesty will humble your self under the mighty hand of God, and be inclined to hearken to the faithfull advise of his servants, be willing to secure religion, and imploy your royall power for advancing the Kingdom of the Son of God, which will turn as well to the honour and happinesse of your Majesty, as to the peace and safety of your subjects.

Sess. Ult. August 12, 1648.—Act Discharging Duels.

The Generall Assembly, taking in consideration the many duels and combats that have been fought, and challenges that have been made, and carried and received, in this land of late; and, being sensible of the exceeding great offence that comes by so horrible and hainous a sin, which is a grosse preferring of the supposed credit of the creature unto the honour of the Most High God, and an usurpation upon the office of the magistrate, by private men's taking of the sword, and a high degree of murther both of body and soul, by shedding the blood of the one, and cutting off the other from time of repenting, and which doth ordinarily produce many wofull consequents; therefore, doth enact and ordain, that all persons, of whatsoever quality, who shall either fight duels, or make, or write, or receive, or with their knowledge carry challenges, or go to the fields, either as principals or as seconds, to fight duels and combats, that they shall, without respect of persons, be processed with the censures of the Kirk, and brought before the congregation two severall Lord's dayes; in the first whereof, they are sharply to be rebuked and convinced of the hainousnesse of their sin and offence; and on the next, to make a solemne publick confession thereof, and profession of their unfained humiliation and repentance for the same. And if the person guilty of any of the former offences be an elder or deacon, he is to be removed from his office; and whatsoever person, guilty of any of these offences, shall refuse to give obedience according to the tenour of this act, shall be processed to excommunication: Declaring always, that if any be killed at such duels, the killer shall be proceeded against by the Kirk as other murtherers.

Act concerning Deposed Ministers.

The Assembly, considering that divers ministers deposed for Malignancy, and complying with the enemies of this Kirk and cause of God, may be suited by, and hope to get entry in some congregation where a minister deposed for Malignancy hath been, and may be supposed to have put on the people a stamp and impression of Malignancy, and being by the act of the Generall Assembly, in anno 1645, past all hope of being restored to the place out of whilk he was cast; now also ordains and enacts, that no minister deposed for Malignancy and compliance foresaid, (when it shall fall out that he be put in a capacity of admission to the ministry,) shall enter into the congregation of any other minister who also hath been deposed for Malignancy and compliance, as said is.

The General Assembly not having now time to consider the references of preceding Assemblies, and the most part of Presbyteries not having sent their opinions in writ; therefore, do yet again recommend to Presbyteries and Provinciaall Assemblies to consider all matters referred by this or by any former Assemblies, and to send their opinions therein in writ to the next Generall Assembly.

The meeting of the next Generall Assembly is hereby appointed to be at Edinburgh, the first Wednesday of July 1649.

A. KER.

THE PRINCIPALL ACTS OF THE GENERALL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AT EDINBURGH, JULY 7, 1649.

Sess. 4, July 7, 1649, ante meridiem.—Approbation of the Proceedings of the Commissioners of the General Assembly.

The Generall Assembly, having heard the report of the committee appointed for revising the proceedings of the commissioners of the preceding Assembly; and finding thereby that in all their proceedings they have been zealous, diligent, and faithful, in the discharge of the trust committed to them; do, therefore, unanimously approve and ratifie the whole proceedings, acts, and conclusions, of the said commission; appointing Mr John Bell, Moderator, pro tempore, to return them hearty thanks, in the name of the Assembly, for their great pains, travail, and fidelity.

Sess. 6, July 10, 1649, ante meridiem.—Approbation of the Commissioners sent to his Majesty.

The Generall Assembly, having taken in serious consideration the report of the travells and proceedings of the commissioners sent to his Majesty, presented by them this day, together with the commission and instructions which were given unto them; do finde, by the report, that they have been very diligent and faithful in the discharge of the trust committed to them; and, therefore, do unanimously approve of their carriage, and return them hearty thanks for their great pains and travails in that employment.

Sess. 18, July 19, 1649, post meridiem.—Act discharging Promiscuous Dancing.

The Assembly, finding the scandall and abuse that arises thorow promiscuous dancing; do, therefore, inhibit and discharge the same, and do referre the censure thereof to severall Presbyteries, earnestly recommending it to their care and diligence.

Sess. 19, July 20, 1649, ante meridiem.—Act concerning the receiving of Engagers in the late unlawfull War against England to publick satisfaction, together with the Declaration and Acknowledgment to be subscribed by them.

The Generall Assembly, considering what great offence against God, and scandall to his people at home and abroad, hath arisen from the late unlawfull Engagement in war against England, whereby, contrary to the law of God and of nations—contrary to the Solemn League and Covenant—contrary to the petitions of almost the whole kingdom—contrary to the Declarations of the Judicatories of this Kirk—contrary to the protestations of a considerable part of the Parliament—contrary to the frequent and clear warnings of the servants of God in his name, not only an association in counsels and arms was made with malignant persons, who had formerly shewn their disaffection to the Covenant and cause, but an invasion of the neighbour nation was prosecuted; from whence flowed the oppression of the persons, estates, and consciences of many of the people of God in this land, the shedding of the blood of some, the losse and dishonour of this nation, and severall other inconveniences: And considering that the Commissioners of the last Generall Assembly have acquitted themselves faithfully, in ordaining to be suspended from the renewing of the Covenant, and from the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, such as are designed in their acts of date the 6th of October, and 4th of December last, referring the further consideration and censure of the persons foresaid to this present Generall Assembly: Therefore, the Generall Assembly, for removing of such offensees, and for prevention of the like in time coming, and for restoring of such as are truly humbled, do declare and appoint,—

I. That all those who have been guilty and censured as aforesaid, and withal do not, by their addresses to kirk judicatories, testifie their dislike thereof, and give evidences of their repentance therefor, that these be processed, and continuing obstinate, be excommunicated; but if withall they go on in promoting malignant designes, that they be forthwith excommunicated; as also, that all such persons guilty as aforesaid, who, after profession of their repentance, shall yet again hereafter relapse to the promoting any malignant designe, that these be likewise forthwith excommunicated.

II. That all these who have been guilty and censured as aforesaid, and desire to testifie their repentance, and to be admitted to the Covenant and Communion, shall, besides any confession in publick before the congregation, subscribe the declaration hereto subjoynd, of their unfained detestation and renunciation of that Engagement, and all other malignant courses contrary to the Covenant and cause, promising to keep themselves from such ways in time coming, and acknowledging, that if they shall again fall into such defection thereafter, they may justly be accounted perfidious backsliders, and breakers of the Covenant and Oath of God, and proceeded against with the highest censures of the Kirk.

III. That of these who have been guilty and censured as aforesaid, and desire now to testify their repentance, whosoever were formerly joyned in arms or counsell with James Graham in his rebellion, or who were generall persons or colonels in the late unlawfull Engagement, or who went to Ireland to bring over forces for that effect, or who have been eminently active in contriving of, or seducing unto the said Engagement, or whosoever above the degree of a lieutenant commanded these parties, that in promoting of the ends of the said Engagement shed blood within the kingdom, either before that army of Engagers went to England, or after their return, or who above the degree foresaid commanded in the late rebellion in the North; that none of these be admitted or received to give satisfaction, but by the Generall Assembly or their commissioners.

IV. That all the rest of these who have been guilty, or censured as aforesaid, may be received by the Presbyteries where they reside.

V. That all who have been guilty as aforesaid, before their receiving to the Covenant, shall make a solemn publick acknowledgement in such matter, and before such congregations as the Commission of the Generall Assembly or Presbyteries respectivè, shall prescribe, according to the degree of their offence and scandall given.

VI. That none of the foresaid persons be admitted or received as elders in any judicatories of the Kirk, but according to the Act of the Generall Assembly of the last of August 1647, against complyers of the first classe.

And because many have heretofore made shew and profession of their repentance, who were not convinced of their guiltinesse, nor humbled for the same, but did thereafter return with the dog to the vomit, and with the sow to the puddle, unto the mocking of God, and the exceeding great reproach and detriment of his cause: Therefore, for the better determining the truth and sincerity of the repentance of those who desire to be admitted to the Covenant and Communion, it is appointed and ordained, that none of those persons who are debarred from the Covenant and Communion shall be admitted and received thereto, but such as, after exact triall, shall be found, for some competent time before or after the offer of their repentance, according to the discretion of the respective judicatories, to have in their ordinary conversations given real testimony of their dislike of the late unlawfull Engagement, and of the courses and wayes of Malignants, and of their sorrow for their accession to the same, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly; and if any shall be found, who, after the defeating of the Engagers have uttered any malignant speeches, tending to the approbation of the late unlawfull Engagement, or the blood shed within the kingdome, for promoting of the ends of the said Engagement—or any other projects or practises within or without the kingdome, prejudiciall to religion and the Covenant, or tending to the reproach of the ministry or the civill government of the kingdom—or who have unnecessarily or ordinarily conversed with malignant and disaffected persons—or who have had hand in, or accession to, or compliance with, or have any wayes countenanced or promoted any malignant design, prejudiciall to religion and the Covenant: That these, notwithstanding their profession of repentance, be not suddenly received, but a competent time, according to the discretion of the judicatory, be assigned to them for tryall of the evidence of their repentance, according to the qualifications above mentioned. And the Generall Assembly ordains Presbyteries to make intimation of this act in the severall kirks of their bounds, so soon as they can after the rising of the Generall Assembly, that none pretend ignorance; and that Presbyteries make accompt of their diligence in prosecuting of this act to the quarterly meetings of the commission of this Assembly.

The Declaration and Acknowledgement before mentioned.

I, _____ after due consideration of the late warre against the kingdom of England, and having also considered the course pursued and promoted by the Earle of Lanerk, George Monro, and their adherents in and about Stirling, and by others in the late rebellion in the North, against all which, not only eminent testimonies of God's wrath have been given in defeating of them, but they were in themselves sinfull breaches of Covenant, and preferring the interest of man unto God; I doe, herefore, in God's sight professe that I am convinced of the unlawfulness of all these ways, as contrary to the Word of God and to the Solemn League and Covenant, not only in regard of the miscarriages of these that were employed therein, but also in respect of the nature of these courses themselves; and, therefore, professing my unfained sorrow for my guiltinesse by my accession to the same, doe renounce and disclaim the foresaid Engagement, and all the courses that were used for carrying on the same, either before or after the defeat of the Engagers, as contrary to the Word of God and Solemn League and Covenant, and destructive to religion and the work of reformation; and I doe promise, in the power of the Lord's strength, never again to own any of these or the like courses. And if hereafter at any time I shall be found to promote any malignant design or course, that I shall justly be accompted a perfidious Covenant-breaker and despiser of the oath of God, and be proceeded against with the highest censures of the Kirk. Likeas I doe hereby promise to adhere to the National Covenant of this kingdome, and to the Solemn League and Covenant betwixt the kingdomes, and to be honest and zealous for promoting all the ends thereof, as I shall be called thereunto of God, and to flee all occasions and temptations that may lead me into any the like snares against the same. Sess. 23, July 24, 1649, post meridiem.—To the High and Honourable Court of Parliament.

The Generall Assembly, Humbly Sheweth,

That, whereas we have seen and considered the act of Parliament abolishing patronages, and doe highly commend the piety and zeal of the Estates of Parliament in promoting so necessary a point of reformation; the Generall Assembly do humbly supplicate, that, beside the settling of the ministers' stipends, that the tythes mentioned in the said act may be affected with the burthen of pious uses within the respective paroches, conform to a draught of an act seen by the Commissioners of the late General Assembly before it passed in Parliament; and that the foresaid act may be made effectfull for the settling of ministers' stipends in kirks erected, and necessary to be erected according to the tenour of the act of Parliament; and, for this effect, that your Lordships will hasten the sitting of the commission for Plantation of Kirks, with all convenient diligence, and your Lordships' answer.

Sess. 27, July 27, 1649, ante meridiem.—A seasonable and necessary Warning and Declaration, concerning present and imminent Dangers, and concerning Duties relating thereto, from the General Assembly of this Kirk unto all the Members thereof.

The Lord, who chooses Jerusalem in a furnace of affliction, hath been pleased, since the beginning of the work of reformation in this land, to exercise his people with many trialls. All that desired to keep a good conscience were not long ago under many heavy and sad pressures from the insolency and oppression of a prevailing party of disaffected and malignant men, who, under a pretext of bringing the King to a condition of honour, freedom, and safety, did carry on an unlawful Engagement against the kingdom of England; and if the Lord had not been mercifull unto his people, they were like either to have been banished out of the land, or to have been kept in a perpetuall bondage in their consciences, persons, and estates. But he whose messengers those men had mocked, and whose word they had despised, did bring them down suddenly in a day, and restored liberty and peace unto his people,—a mercy and deliverance, which, as it ought to be remembered with thankfulness and praise, so may it engage our hearts not to faint in troubles and straites that do yet abide us, but to trust in the name of the Lord, who both can and will deliver us still out of all our afflictions.

Albeit we do now enjoy many rich and precious blessings, wherein we have reason to be comforted, and to rejoyce; yet it were to shut our own eyes if we should not see our selves involved in and threatned with many and great dangers at home and from abroad. It is matter of exceeding great sorrow to think upon the ignorance and profanity, the impenitencie and security, that abounds still in the land, notwithstanding all the gracious dispensation of the Gospel, and means of grace in such purity and plenty, that none of the nations round about us can boast of the like, and of all the long-suffering patience of the Lord, and of all his sharp rods wherewith he hath afflicted us from year to year, and of all the mercies and deliverances wherewith he hath visited us, and of our late solemn confession of sinnes, and engagement unto duties, sealed with the renewing of the Covenant and the oath of God, which some men have so far already forgotten, as to return with the dog to the vomit, and with the sow to the puddle: And many signes of inconstancy and levity do appear among all sorts and ranks of persons, who seem to want nothing but a suitable tentation to draw them away from their steadfastnesse; our army is not yet sufficiently purged, but there be still in it malignant and scandalous men, whose fidelity and constancy as it is much to be doubted, so is the wrath of the Lord to be feared upon their proceedings and undertakings, without a speedy and effectuell remedy.

That prevailing party of sectaries in England, who have broken the Covenant and despised the oath of God, corrupted the truth, subverted the fundamentall government by King and Parliament, and taken away the King's life, look upon us with an evill eye, as upon these who stand in the way of their monstrous and new-fangled devices in religion and government; and though there were no cause to fear any thing from that party but the gangrene and infection of those many damnable and abominable errors which have taken hold on them, yet our vicinity unto and daily commeree with that nation, may justly make us afraid that the Lord may give up many in this land unto a spirit of delusion to believe lies, because they have not received the love of the truth.

Neither is the Malignant party so far broken and brought low, as that they have abandoned all hopes of carrying on their former designs against the Covenant and work of reformation. Beside many of them in this kingdom, who are as foxes tied in chains, keeping their evill nature, and waiting an opportunity to break their cords, and again to prey upon the Lord's people, there be standing armies in Ireland, under the command of the Marquesse of Ormond, the Lord Inchqueen, the Lord of Airds, and George Munro, who, forgetting all the horrible cruelty that was exercised by the Irish rebels upon many thousands of the English and Scottish nations in that land, have entred into a peace and association with them, that they may the more easily carry on the old designs of the Popish, Prelaticall, and Malignant party; and the Lord of Airds and George Munro have, by treachery and oppression, brought the Province of Ulster and garrisons therein under their power and command, and have redacted our countrymen, and such as adhere unto the Covenant and cause of God in that province, unto many miseries and straits, and are like to banish the ministers of the Gospel, and to overturn these faire beginnings of the work of God, which were unto many a branch of hope, that the Lord meant to make Ireland a pleasant land.

But which is more grievous unto us then all these, our King, notwithstanding of the Lord's hand against his father's opposition to the work of God, and of the many sad and dolefull consequences that followed thereupon, in reference to religion and his subjects, and to his person and government, doth hearken unto the counsels of these who were authors of these miseries to his royall father and his kingdoms, by which it hath come to passe that his Majesty hath hitherto refused to grant the just and necessary desires of this Kirk and kingdom, which were tendred unto him from the Commissioners of both for securing of religion, the liberties of the subject, his Majesty's government, and the peace of the kingdome; and it is much to be feared that those wicked counsellours may so farre prevaile upon him in his tender yeers, as to engage him in a warre for overturning (if it be possible) of the work of God, and bearing down all those in the three kingdoms that adhere thereto, which if he shall doe, cannot but bring great wrath from the Lord upon himself and his throne, and must be the cause of many new and great miseries and calamities to these lands.

It concerns a nation thus sinfull and loaden with iniquity, and involved in so many difficulties and dangers, by timous repentance and unfained humiliation to draw near to God, and to wrestle with him in prayer and supplication, that our sin may be pardoned, and our iniquity done away; and that he would establish the land in the love of the truth, and inable every one in their station to do their duty boldly and without fear, and in a humble dependance upon the Lord, in whom alone is the salvation of his people. Every man ought, with all faithfulness and diligence, to make use of all these means that are approven and allowed of God, for preserving and carrying on of his work, and for securing and guarding the land against all enemies whatsomever, both upon the right hand and upon the left.

The spirit of error and delusion in our neighbour land, in the policie of Satan, hath veiled it self in many under the mask of holinesse, and is, in the righteous and wise dispensation of God, armed with power, and attended with successe; therefore, all the inhabitants of this land would labour for more knowledge and more love of the truth, without which they may easily be deceived, and led into tentation, and would learn to distinguish betwixt the shew and power of godlinesse. We know that there be many in England who be truly godly, and mourn with us for all the errours and abominations that are in that land; but it is without controversie, that that spirit which hath acted in the courses and counsels of these who have retarded and obstructed the work of God, despised the Covenant, forced the Parliament, murdered the King, changed the civill government, and established so vast a toleration in religion, cannot be the spirit of righteousness and holinesse, because it teaches not men to live godly and righteously, but drawes them aside into error, and makes them to bring forth the bitter fruits of impiety and iniquity, and therefore ought to be avoided. And not only are such of our nation as travel in our neighbour land to take heed unto themselves, that they receive not infection from such as are leavened with error, but these also who live at home, especially in those places where sectaries, upon pretext of merchandise, and other civill employments, ordinarily traffique and converse. Neither needs any man to be afraid of the power and successe of that party. They who have gadded about so much to change their way shall ere long be ashamed; the Lord hath rejected their confidences, and they shall not prosper in them. How farre they may proceed in their resolutions and actings against this kingdome, is in the hand of the Most High. If the Lord shall suffer that party to invade this land, it may be the comfort and encouragement of all the inhabitants thereof, that not only hath that unlawful Engagemēt against the kingdom of England been declared against and condemned both by Kirk and State, but also that these men can pretend no quarrell against us, unlesse it be that we have adhered unto the Solemn Leagne and Covenant, from which they have so foully revolted and backslidden; and that we have borne testimony against toleration, and their proceedings in reference to religion and government, and the taking away of the King's life. And, therefore, we trust, that in such a case none will be so farre deficient in their duty, as not to defend themselves against such unjust violence, and, in the strength of the Lord, to adhere unto their former principles with much boldnes of spirit and willingness of heart. In this certainly we shall have a good conscience, and the Lord shall be with us.

We are not so to have the one of our eyes upon the Sectaries, as not to hold the other upon the Malignants, they being an enemy more numerous, and no lesse subtile and powerfull nor the other, and at this time more dangerous unto us, not only because experience hath proven that there is a greater aptitude and inclination in these of our land to comply with Malignants then sectaries, in that they carry on their wicked designs under a pretext of being for the King; but also, because there be many of them in our own bowels, and for that they doe pretend to be for maintenance of the King's person and authority, and (which is the matter of our grief) because the King ownes their principles and wayes; which, if it be not taken heed unto, may prove a great snare, and dangerous tentation to many to side with them against the Lord's people and his cause. The constant tenour of the carriage of these in this land who stand for the cause of God, are undeniable arguments of their affection to monarchy, and to that royal family and line which hath swayed the scepter of this kingdom for many hundreds of yeers past. Albeit his Majesty who lately reigned refused to harken to their just desires, yet did they, with much patience and moderation of mind, supplicate and sollicite his Majesty for satisfaction in these things that concern religion and the Covenant, and were still willing, that upon satisfaction given, he should be admitted to the exercise of his power; and, whatsoever envie and malice objects to the contrary, were carefull to get assurance concerning the safety of his Majesty's person, when they brought their army out of England; and when, notwithstanding of that assurance, the prevailing party of sectaries were acting for his life, did, to the utmost of their power, endeavour by their commissioners that there might have been no such proceeding; and when their desires and endeavours were not successfull, did protest and bear testimony against the same. And, as both Kirk and State had testified their tender respect to his Majesty who now reigns, by their letters written to him whilst his father was yet living, so, no sooner did the Parliament heare of his father's death, but they did, with all solemnity, proclaim him King of these kingdoms; and after they had acquainted his Majesty by messages with their proceedings herein, commissioners were sent both from State and Kirk, instructed with power and commission to expresse the affection of this kingdome to monarchy, and his Majesty's person and government, together with their desires concerning the security of religion, and the peace of those kingdoms. And albeit the desires of both, which are now published to the world, with his Majesty's answers thereto, are such as are most just and necessary, yet the counsels of the Malignant party had so great influence upon his Majesty, that his answers are not only not satisfactory, but short of that which was many times granted by his royall father, and cannot be acquiesced unto, unlesse we would abandon the League and Covenant, and betray religion and the cause of God.

We hold it the duty of all who live in this land to wrestle with God in the behalfe of the King, that he may be recovered out of the snare of evill counsell, and brought to give satisfaction to the publick desires of Kirk and State; and in their places and stations, to use all endeavours with himselfe and others for that effect, and to be willing, upon satisfaction given, to admit him to the exercise of his power, and cheerfully to obey him in all things, according to the will of God and the lawes of the kingdom, and to do every thing that tends to the preservation of his Majesty's person, and just greatnesse and authority, in the defence and preservation of the true religion and liberties of the kingdomes.

But if his Majesty, or any having or pretending power and commission from him, shall invade this kingdom, upon pretext of establishing him in the exercise of his royall power, as it will be an high provocation against God to be accessory or assisting thereto, so will it be a necessary duty to resist and oppose the same. We know that many are so forgetfull of the oath of God, and ignorant and careless of the interest of Jesus Christ and the Gospel, and doe so little tender that which concerns his kingdom and the privileges thereof, and do so much dote upon absolute and arbitrary government for gaining their own ends, and so much maligne the instruments of the work of reformation, that they would admit his Majesty to the exercise of his royall power upon any termes whatsoever, though with never so much prejudice to religion, and the liberties of these kingdomes, and would think it quarrell enough to make war upon all those who for conscience sake cannot condescend thereto. But we desire all these who fear the Lord, and mind to keep their Covenant, impartially to consider these things which followes:—

1. That as magistrates and their power is ordained of God, so are they, in the exercise thereof, not to walk according to their owne will, but according to the law of equity and righteousnesse, as being the ministers of God for the safety of his people; therefore, a boundles and illimited power is to be acknowledged in no king nor magistrate; neither is our King to be admitted to the exercise of his power as long as he refuses to walk in the administration of the same, according to this rule, and the established laws of the kingdom, that his subjects may live under him a quiet and peaceable life, in all godlinesse and honestie.

2. There is ane mutuall obligation and stipulation betwixt the King and his people; as both of them are tied to God, so each of them are tied one to another, for the performance of mutuall and reciprocal duties. According to this, it is statute and ordained in the 8th Act of the 1st Parliament of King James the Sixth, "That all kings, princes, or magistrates whatsoever, holding their place, which hereafter shall happen in any time to raign and beare rule over this realm, at the time of their coronation, and receipt of their princely authority, make their faithfull promise by oath in the presence of the eternall God, that, during the whole course of their lives, they shall serve the same eternall God to the utmost of his power, according as he hath required in his most holy Word, contained in the Old and New Testament; and according to the same Word, shall maintain the true religion of Christ Jesus—the preaching of his most holy Word—and due and right ministration of his sacraments, now received and preached within this realm—and shall abolish and gainstand all false religion, contrary to the same—and shall rule the people committed to their charge according to the will and command of God, revealed in his Word, and according to the lovable lawes and constitutions received within this realm—and shall procure, to the utmost of their power, to the Kirk of God and the whole Christian people, true and perfect peace in all time comming, and that justice and equity be kepted to all creatures without exception." Which oath was sworn, first by King James the Sixth, and afterwards by King Charles at his coronation, and is inserted in our Nationall Covenant, which was approved by the king who lately reigned. As long, therefore, as his Majesty who now reignes refuses to hearken to the just and necessary desires of State and Kirk, propounded to his Majesty for the security of religion and safety of his people, and to engage and oblige himself for the performance of his duty to his people, it is consonant to Scripture and reason, and the laws of the kingdom, that they should refuse to admit him to the exercise of his government, untill he give satisfaction in these things.

3. In the League and Covenant which hath been so solemnly sworn and renewed by this kingdom, the dutie of defending and preserving the King's Majesty's person and authority is joynd with, and subordinat unto, the dutie of preserving and defending the true religion and liberties of the kingdoms; and, therefore, his Majesty standing in opposition to the just and necessary publick desires, concerning religion and liberties, it were a manifest breach of Covenant, and a preferring of the King's interest to the interest of Jesus Christ, to bring him to the exercise of his royal power, which he, walking in a contrary way, and being compassed about with malignant counsels, cannot but employ unto the prejudice and ruin of both.

4. Was not an arbitrary government and unlimited power the fountains of most of all the corruptions both in Kirk and State? And was it not a restraint of this, and for their own just defence against tyranny and unjust violence, which ordinarily is the fruit and effect of such a power, that the Lord's people did joyne in Covenant, and have been at the expense of so much blood, pains, and treasure these yeers past? And if his Majesty should be admitted to the exercise of his government before satisfaction given, were it not to put in his hand that arbitrary power, which we have upon just and necessary grounds been so long withstanding, and so to abandon our former principles, and betray our cause?

5. The King being averse from the work of reformation and the instruments thereof, and compassed about with malignant and disaffected men, whom he hearkens unto as his most faithfull counsellors, and looks upon as his best and most loyall subjects, we leave it to all indifferent men to judge, whether his Majesty, being admitted to the exercise of his power before satisfaction given, would not by such counsells endeavour an overturning of the things which God hath wrought amongst us, and labour to draw publick administrations concerning religion and the liberties of the subject, unto that course and channell in which they did run under Prelacie, and before the work of reformation; which we have the more cause to fear, because his royall father did so often declare that he conceived himself bound to employ all the power that God should put in his hands, to the utmost, for these ends; and that he adheres as yet to his father's principles, and walkes in his way, and hath made a peace with the Irish rebels, by which is granted unto them the full liberty of Popery.

6. It is no strange nor new thing for kingdoms to preserve religion and themselves from ruine, by putting restraint upon the exercise of the power and government of those who have refused to grant those things that were necessary for the good of religion and the people's safety. There have been many precedents of it in this and other nations, of old and of late. Upon these and other important considerations, it shall be the wisdom of every one who dwell in the land to take heed of such a temptation and snare, that they be not accessory to any such designs or endeavours, as they would not bring upon themselves and upon their families the guilt of all the detriment that will undoubtedly follow thereupon to religion and the Covenant, and of all the miseries and calamities that it will bring upon his Majesty's person and throne, and upon these kingdoms. Such a thing would in all appearance be the undermining and shaking, if not the overthrowing and destroying, of the work of reformation; and, therefore, whosoever attempt the same, oppose themselves to the cause of God, and will at last dash against the rock of the Lord's power, which hath broken in pieces many high and lofty ones, since the beginning of this work in these kingdoms—and it is unto us a sure word of promise, that whosoever shall associate themselves, or take counsell together, or gird themselves against God and his work, shall be broken in pieces.

It is not only joyning in armes with the Malignant partie, that all these who would keep their integritie has need to beware of, but also subtil devices and designs, that are promoted by fair pretexts and perswasions to draw men to dispense at least with some part of these necessarie desires that are propounded to his Majesty for securing of religion. After many turnings and devices, the foundation of the unlawfull Engagement was at last laid by his Majesty's concessions in the year 1648. Wherein, though many things seemed to be granted, yet that was denied without which religion and the union betwixt the kingdoms could not have been secured; and it is probable that such a way may be assayed again, and prosecuted with very much cunning and skill, to deceive and ensnare the simple. It doth therefore concern all ranks and conditions of persons to be the more warie and circumspect, especially in that which concerns the Nationall Covenant, and the Solemn League and Covenant, that before his Majesty he admitted to the exercise of his royall power, that, by and attour the oath of coronation, he shall assure and declare by his solemn oath, under his hand and seal, his allowance of the Nationall Covenant, and of the Solemn League and Covenant, and obligation to prosecute the ends thereof in his station and calling; and that he shall, for himself and his successours, consent and agree to Acts of Parliament injoyning the Solemn League and Covenant, and fully establishing Presbyteriall government, the Directory of Worship, the Confession of Faith and Catechisme, as they are approved by the Generall Assembly of this Kirk, and Parliament of this kingdom, in all his Majesty's dominions; and that he shall observe these in his own practise and familie, and that he shall never make opposition to any of these, nor endeavour any change thereof. Albeit the League and Covenant be despised by that prevailing party in England, and the work of uniformity, thorow the retardments and obstructions that have come in the way, be almost forgotten by these kingdoms, yet the obligation of that Covenant is perpetuall, and all the duties contained therein are constantly to be minded, and prosecuted by every one of us and our posterity, according to their place and stations. And, therefore, we are no lesse zealously to endeavour that his Majesty may establish and swear, and subscribe the same, than if it were unanimously regarded and stuck unto by all the kingdom of England; for his Majesty swearing and subscribing the League and Covenant will much contribute for the security of religion, his Majesty's happinesse, and the peace of his kingdoms.

As it is incumbent to all who live in this Kirk and kingdom to be watchful and circumspect, so it concerns these of the High and Honourable Court of Parliament and their Committees, in a special way, to see to their duty, and to be straight and resolute in the performance of the same. Their former proceedings is unto us a sufficient evidence and ground of hope, that they will not be wanting in any necessary testimony of dutie and loyalty that they owe to the King, by using all just and seasonable endeavours for obtaining satisfaction of his Majesty, that so he may be established upon his thrones. And we trust, that, upon the other hand, the sense of their obligation to God, and his oath that is upon them, will make them constantly to adhere to their former principles, resolutions, and desires, concerning religion and the Covenant, that reall satisfaction may be had thereanent, before the King be put in the exercise of his power; and that they will carefully provide for the safety of the kingdom, both in regard of intestine dangers, and in regard of invasion from without. It is not long since they, together with the rest of the land, made solemn publick confession of compliance with Malignants, carnall confidence, following of self interests, and hearkening to the counsell of flesh and blood, and did in a speciall way engage themselves to comply and seek themselves and their own things no more, to abandon the counsell of their own hearts, and not to rely upon the arm of flesh, and to purge judicatories and armies from profane and scandalous persons; and God forbid that they should so soon forget or neglect so necessary duties, and fall again into so great and grievous transgressions. We trust that they will seek the things of Christ, and not their own things—that they will hearken to his word, and not walk in the imaginations of their own hearts—that they will rely upon the arm of the Lord, and not upon the arm of flesh—that they will be wary and circumspect in discerning the dispositions and affections of those whom they put in trust; and that, seeing this kingdom hath so much smarted, and been so often deceived by compliance with Malignants, they will carefully avoid this snare, in regard of those who were upon the former unlawfull Engagement, and be tender in bringing in of such; and we cannot but exhort them, in the name of the Lord, to take notice of the oppression of the people and commons in the land, by the lawlesse exactions of landlords, collectours, and souldiers. We do not justify the murmurings and grudgings of those, who, preferring the things of the world to the Gospel and things of Jesus Christ, repine at necessary burthens, without which it is not possible that the land can be secured from invasion without, and insurrection within, or the cause and people of God be defended from enemies. It is the duty of every one who hath taken the Covenant willingly, and with a cheerfull minde, to bestow their means and their pains as they shall be called thereunto, in an orderly way. Yet should these to whom God hath committed the government take care that they be not needlessly burthened, and that none grind their faces by oppression, not only by making of lawes against the same, but by searching out of the cause of the poor, and by executing these lawes timously upon these that oppresse them, that they may find real redresse of their just grievances and complaints, and be encouraged to bear those burthens which cannot be avoided.

As the Parliament have begun, so we hope they will continue, to purge out all these from trust that are not of known integrity and affection to the cause of God, and of a blamelesse and Christian conversation, and that they and the officers of the army, in their respective places, will seriously mind, and speedily and resolutely goe about the removing from the army all malignant and scandalous persons, and also the removing of sectaries when any shall be found therein, that they may give real evi- lence that they did not deal deceitfully with God, in the day that they engaged themselves thereto.

Albeit we hope and pray that those who beare charge in our army will, from the remembrance of the Lord's goodnesse to them, and the honour that he hath put upon them, endeavour to carry themselves faithfully and straightly; yet it cannot be unreasonable to warn them to take heed of tentations, and to beware of snares that they be not drawn to indifferencie or neutrality in the cause of God, much lesse unto con- vivance at or compliance with the courses and designes of Malignants or Sectaries, but to stick closely by the same, and to be zealous against all the enemies and adver- aries thereof: And it concerns souldiers to be content with their wages, and to doe violence to no man, but as they are called unto the defence of the cause and people of God, so to behave themselves in such a blamelesse and Christian way, that their ca- sage may be a testimony to his cause, and a comfort to his people. So shall our armies prosper, and the Lord shall goe out with them.

But most of all, it concerns the ministers of the Gospel, whom God hath called to give warning to his people, to look to their duty. It is undeniably true, that many of the evils wherewith this Kirk and kingdome hath been afflicted in our age, have come to passe because of the negligence of some, and corruptions of others, of the ministry.

Whilst some fell asleep, and were careless, and others were covetous and ambitious, the evil man brought in Prelacy and the ceremonies, and had farre promoted the Service-Book, and the Book of Cannon, and the course of backsliding and revolting was carried on, untill it pleased God to stirre up the spirits of these few who stood in the gap to oppose and resist the same, and to begin the work of reformation in the land. Since which time, the silence of some ministers, and compliance of others, hath had great influence upon the backsliding of many amongst the people, who, upon the discovery of the evil of their way, complain that they got not warning, or that if they were warned by some, others held their peace, or did justifie them in the course of their backsliding. We can look upon such ministers no otherwise than upon those that are guilty of the blood of the Lord's people, and with whom the Lord will reckon for all the breach of Covenant and defection that hath been in the land. The priest's lips should preserve knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of Hosts. But such are departed out of the way, and hath caused many to stumble at the law; therefore hath the Lord made them contemptible and base before all the people, according as they have not kept his wayes, but have been partiall in his law. Because they have lost their savour, he hath cast out many of them as unsavoury salt; but such as have been faithfull, as he hath preserved them from the violence and fury of men, so hath he verified his word in their mouths, both against his enemies, and concerning his people and his work; and makes them see, though not all their desires concerning the Gospel, and the work of God in the land, yet very much of the fruit of their labour, by preserving the doctrine and all the ordinances of Jesus Christ in their purity, and adding in some measure thereto the power and life thereof. We doe, therefore, charge all the ministers of the land, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing in his kingdom, as in every thing to be ensamples of a good conversation, and to walk without offence, that the ministry be not blamed, so to take heed unto the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made them overseers—to declare unto them all the counsell of God, and to give them timous warning concerning every danger and duty—and to hold forth unto them the solid grounds of reall consolation, by which they may be encouraged and comforted in all their trials and afflictions, that they may be free of the blood of all men, and have this as a ground of rejoicing, even the testimony of their consciences, that in simplicity and godly purenesse, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, they have had their conversation in the world, and have exhorted, and comforted, and charged every one committed unto them, as a father doth his children. Especially, ministers are to be careful to be much in discovering the temptations, and pressing the duties of the times, that these who are under their charge may know what to avoid, and what to embrace and pursue. If all the watchmen in the land shall give warning, and blow the trumpet at once, it shall not be easie for enemies to prey upon the people of God. We know no cause why any whom God hath called to preach the Gospel should be afraid to speak boldly in the name of the Lord, since God hath given so manifest a testimony of his care and protection, in preserving them, these yeers past, who have striven to be faithfull to him who hath called them, from all the fury and malice of haters of the work of God, and of the kingdom of his Sonne Jesus Christ, who hath promised to be with his servants unto the end of the world.

Albeit the land be involved in many difficulties, and compassed about with great and imminent dangers, yet there is hope and ground of consolation concerning this thing. The Lord is in the midst of us, and we are called by his name;—our eares hear the joyfull sound of the Gospel, and our eyes see our teachers;—we behold the arm of the Lord stretched out daily in working salvation for his people, and answering their desires upon their enemies by terrible things in righteousness. Although we be but few in number, yet the Lord of Hosts is with us, and in the power of his strength we shall be able to prevaile;—although our land be filled with sin, yet we have not been forsaken of the Lord our God, but he hath alwayes had compassion upon us, and delivered us in all our distresses;—although some of understanding fall, it is but to try, and to purge, and to make white, even to the end, because it is yet for a time appointed:—although many cleave to us by flatteries, yet there be a remnant who keep their integrity, and the Lord shall doe good to these that be good ; but such as turn aside to crooked wayes shall be led forth with the workers of iniquity.

The Lord's people in England and Ireland, who adhere to the cause and Covenant, may be perplexed, but shall not despair ; they may be persecuted, but shall not be forsaken ; they may be cast down, but shall not be destroyed ; and although uniformity, and the work of reformation in these lands, seem not only to be retarded, but almost pluckt up by the roots, and the foundations thereof razed ; yet the seed which the Lord hath sown there shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward. "The zeal of the Lord of Hosts shall performe this."

Sess. 30, July 30, 1649, ante meridiem.—Act concerning Catechising.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their serious consideration the great darknesse and ignorance wherein a great part of this kingdom lyeth, together with the late solemn engagement to use all means for remedy thereof, doe ordaine every minister, with assistance of the elders of their severall kirk-sessions, to take course, that in every house where there is any who can read, there be at least one copie of the Shorter and Larger Catechisme, Confession of Faith, and Directorie for Family Worship. And doe renew the Act of the Assemblie, Augnst 30, 1639, for a day of weeklie catechising, to be constantly observed in every kirk ; and that every minister so order their cate-thetick questions, as thereby the people (who doe not conveen all at one time, but by turns, unto that exercise) may at every dyet have the chief heads of Saving Knowledge, in a short view, presented unto them. And the Assembly considering that, notwithstanding of their former act, these dyets of weekly catechising are much slighted and neglected by many ministers throughout this kingdome, doe, therefore, appoint and ordaine every Presbytery to take triall of all the ministers within their bounds, once at least in the halfe year, whither they be carefull to keep weekly dyets of catechising ; and if they shall finde any of their number negligent herein, they shall admonish for the first fault, and if after such admonition they shall not amend, the Presbytery for the second fault shall rebuke them sharply, and if after such rebuke they doe not yet amend, they shall be suspended.

Sess. 40, August 4, 1649, ante meridiem.—Commission for Publick Affaires.

The General Assembly, considering how necessary it is for preservation of religion in this kingdom, and prosecution of the work of uniformity in all his Majesty's dominions, that the Commissions formerly granted to that effect be renewed ; therefore, they doe renew the power and Commission granted for the Publick Affaires of the Kirk, by the Generall Assemblies, held in St Andrews, 1642, and at Edinburgh, 1643, 1644, 1645, 1646, 1647, and 1648, unto the persons following, viz., Masters Alexander Rollock, John Murray, Thomas Lundie, John Freebairne, George Murray, Harie Livingston, William Macjore, Hew Henderson, Samuel Austine, Gavin Young, David Laing, William Maxwell, John Macceleland, James Erving, Robert Ferguson, John Scot, Thomas Wylie, Hew Eccles, John Bell, John Nevoy, William Gutherie, John Hammiltoun, Hew Peebles, Alexander Dunlope, Harie Semple, David Dickson, Patrick Gillespie, James Durham, Robert Baillic, William Hammiltoun, Francis Aird, James Nasmith, Richard Inglis, William Summervail, Evan Cameron, Robert Blair, Samuel Rutherford, James Wood, John Macgill, elder, Alexander Balfoure, William Row, John Moncreife, Fredrick Carmichaell, Harie Wilke, William Oliphant, George Pitillo, John Robeson, James Thomsonsone, William Rate, David Campbell, Andro Cant, John Menzies, Andro Abereromby, Robert Sheyn, William Forbes, John Paterson, Duncan Forbes, William Chalmers, John Annand, William Falconer, Murdoch Mackenzie, Robert Jameson, Gilbert Marshall, John Dallase, William Smyth, Robert Hume, Thomas Swintoun, James Stratoun, John Douglas, James Gutherie, Thomas Donaldson, William Jameson, John Livingstoun, John Scot, Andro Dunkeson, John Dalzell, Arthur Forbes, James Fleming, James Robison, Hew Campbel, Robert Douglass, Mungo Law, George Leslie, John Adamson, James Hammiltoun, John Smyth, Hew Mackell, George Hutchison, Patrick Fleming, John Hay, Ephraim Melvill, John Row, Gilbert Hall, George Bennet, Kenneth Logie, Directory for Election of Ministers.

When any place of the ministric in a congregation is vacant, it is incumbent to the Presbytery with all diligence to send one of their number to preach to that congregation, who, in his doctrine, is to represent to them the necessitie of providing the place with a qualified pastor, and to exhort them to fervent prayer and supplication to the Lord, that he would send them a pastor according to his own heart; as also, he is to signifie that the Presbytery, out of their care of that flock, will send unto them preachers whom they may hear; and if they desire to hear any other, they will endeavour to procure them an hearing of that person or persons upon the sute of the elders to the Presbytery.

2. Within some competent time thereafter, the Presbytery is again to send one or more of their number to the said vacant congregation, on a certain day appoynted before for that effect, who are to conveen and hear sermon the foresaid day, which being ended, and intimation being made by the minister that they are to goe about the election of a pastor for that congregation, the session of the congregation shall meet and proceed to the election, the action being moderated by him that preached; and if the people shall, upon the intimation of the person agreed upon by the session, acquiesce and consent to the said person, then the matter being reported to the Presbytery by commissioners sent from the session, they are to proceed to the triall of the person thus elected, and, finding him qualified, to admit him to the ministry in the said congregation.

3. But if it happen that the major part of the congregation dissent from the person agreed upon by the session, in that case the matter shall be brought unto the Presbytery, who shall judge of the same; and if they doe not find their dissent to be grounded on causelesse prejudices, they are to appoynt a new election in manner above specified.

4. But if a lesser party of the session or congregation shew their dissent from the election without exceptions relevant and verified to the Presbytery, notwithstanding thereof, the Presbytery shall go on to the trials and ordination of the person elected; yet all possible diligence and tendernesse must be used to bring all parties to an harmonious agreement.

5. It is to be understood that no person under the censure of the Kirk, because of any scandalous offence, is to be admitted to have hand in the election of a minister.

6. Where the congregation is disaffected and malignant, in that case the Presbytery is to provide them with a minister.

*Sess. ult. Aug. 6, 1649, ante meridiem.—A Brotherly Exhortation from the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland to their Brethren in England.

The many and great obligations which lie upon us in reference to our brethren in England, who hold fast their integrity, and adhere to the Solemn League and Covenant, together with the desire which we have to testifie our sympathie with them in their afflictions, and to preserve, so far as in us lieth, that fellowship and correspondence that hath been entertained betwixt the Church of Scotland and England these years past, do call upon us and constrain us not to be silent in this day of their trouble and distress.

Albeit the Lord (who hath his fire in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem) hath now for a long time past afflicted these kingdoms with many and sharp rods, and that his wrath seems not yet to be turned away, but his hand stretched out still; yet in all this it becomes us, who live in these lands, to stop our mouthes, neither can any impute iniquity to the Most High.

It is rather a wonder that any mercy should be continued, and that England and Scotland are not cut off from being nations, seeing the backslidings and provocations of both has been so many and so grosse. Although the Solemn League and Covenant was sworne and subscribed by both, yet have many in both despised the oath of God, as appears by the late unlawfull Engagement against the kingdom of England, contrived and carried on by a prevailing party of Malignants in this land, and by the proceedings of the sectaries in England, in reference to religion and government.

We shall not insist upon what hath been the condition and carriage of the Lord's people in this land, in reference to the late unlawfull Engagement. As we desire to magnifie the power and loveing kindnesse of the Lord, who enabled all the judicatures of this Church, and a considerable part of the Parliament, and the body of the land, to dissent from, and bear testimony against the same, which made the House of Commons, in their Letter directed to the last General Assembly, or their commissioners, to declare that that Engagement could not be looked on as a nationall breach;

* Baillie says, that the draught of this exhortation "was Mr James Durham's; it did not so fully please as to pass, but was referred to the Commission to perfect."—Ed. 1843.

so we look upon it as a wonder of his wisdom and mercy, that he hath disposed and directed the same for the furtherance of his work in our hand, and purging his house amongst us. All this cometh forth from the Lord of Hosts, who is wonderfull in counsel and excellent in working. Neither was it the least part of the Lord's goodness to us in that day of our strait, that we were led in a plain path, and kept from compli-ance with Sectaries on the one hand, no less than with Malignants on the other. We have obtained this mercy to be steadfast to our old principles, in bearing free and faithfull testimony against their proceedings, both in reference to toleration and government, and the taking away of the King's life.

And as the danger and judgment which threatens the authors and abettors of these things doth affect our spirits with horrour, and maketh us desire that it may be given to them of God to repent; so we should conceive ourselves void of Christian affection and compassion toward those in England, who suffer for the truth and cause of God, if we were not very sensible of all their present troubles and calamities. It is no small grief to us that the Gospel and government of Jesus Christ are so despised in that land, that faithfull preachers are persecuted and cryed down, that toleration is established by pretext of law, and maintained by military power, and that the Covenant is abolished, and buried in oblivion. All which proceedings cannot but be looked upon as directly contrary to the oath of God lying upon us, and therefore cannot eschew his wrath when he shall come in judgement, "to be a swift witness against those that swear falsly by his name."

These things are the more grievous to us, because (beside many other wofull evils brought forth by them) they have interrupted the building of the Lord's house in England; the foundation whereof was laid by oath and Covenant with the Most High God, and followed for some years with many declarations and protestations of faithfull adhering thereto, and with great expense of blood and treasure; which things were to all the godly in these nations a branch of hope that the Lord would bring to perfection the work of uniformity (so far advanced in all the parts thereof) in these three kingdoms.

But the great obstructions and sad interruptions that have been made therein, by the strange and unexpected practises of many now in place and power in England, are to all the well-affected in both kingdoms, and in all the churches abroad, the matter of their sorrow and humiliation. And if there be any place left for admonition, we warn such as have forgotten the Covenant, and despised the oath of God, and turned aside to lies and error, to consider whence they are fallen, and to repent. Prosperity and success for a time are no warrantable evidences of a good cause, nor sufficient guards against the wrath of God. It is no good use of the Lord's mercy for such men, under pretext of liberty, to make both themselves and others slaves to corruption, and to make all men, both in Church and State, like the fishes of the sea, or the creeping things, that have no ruler over them. Are these things according to the Word of God, and the pattern of the best reformed churches? Or is that the endeavour to bring the three kingdoms to the nearest uniformity that may be in doctrine, worship, government, and discipline? Or is that the maintaining of the union betwixt the three kingdoms, when the straitest bond thereof is utterly dissolved and quite taken away, and the fundamentall government, by King and Parliament, wholly overturned? The just God, who is of pure eyes, beholds these things; and shall with no lesse fury and indignation break the horn of these men, than he hath broken the power, and brought down the pride of Malignants before them, if repentance prevent not.

Amidst those fears and griefes, it is unto us matter of rejoycing, that there be many in England who mourn for all these abominations, and labour to keep their garments pure, by refusing to comply with that course of backsliding, and by bearing testimony against the same. And we hope the expectation of such shall not be disappointed, but that the Lord will open to them a doore of hope for carrying on of his work, and making the lying spirit to passe out of that land.

And albeit many think no otherwise of the Covenant and work of reformation than as a mean to further their own ends; yet we are confident that none who hold fast their integrity have so learned Christ, but are carefull to make conscience of the oath of God lying on them; and we are sure (whatever be the base thoughts and expressions of backsliders from the Covenant) it wants not many to own it in these kingdoms, who (being called thereto) would seale the same with their blood.

Although there were none in the one kingdom who did adhere to the Covenant, yet thereby were not the other kingdom, nor any person in either of them, absolved from the bond thereof, since in it we have not only sworn by the Lord, but also covenanted with him. It is not the failing of one or more that can absolve others from their duty or tye to him; besides, the duties therein contained, being in themselves lawfull, and the grounds of our tye thereunto moral, though others do forget their duty, yet doth not their defection free us from that obligation which lyes upon us by the Covenant, in our places and stations. And the Covenant being intended and entered into by these kingdoms, as one of the best means of stedfastnesse for guarding against declining times, it were strange to say that the backsliding of any should absolve others from the tye thereof, especially seeing our engagement therein is not only nationall, but also personall, every one with uplifted hands swearing by himselfe, as it is evident by the tenor of the Covenant.

From these, and other important reasons, it may appear that all these kingdoms joyning together to abolish that oath by law, yet could they not dispense therewith; much lesse can any one of them, or any part in either of them, doe the same. The dispensing with oathes hath hitherto been abhorred as Antichristian, and never practised and avowed by any but by that man of sin; therefore, those who take the same upon them, as they joyn with him in his sin, so must they expect to partake of his plagues.

As we shall ever (God willing) be mindfull of our duty to the faithfull that adhere to the Covenant in England, having them alwayes in our hearts before the Lord, so we desire to be refreshed with their singleness and boldnesse in the cause of God, according to their places. This is the time of their triall, and the honre of tentation among them. Blessed shall they be who shall be found following the Lamb, and shall not be ashamed of his testimony. We know in such dark houres many are drawne away with the multitude, whom the Lord will againe purge and make white; and we doubt not but many such are in England, whom the bold and clear preaching of Christ may reclaim. Much, therefore, lieth upon the watchmen at this time, that their trumpet may give a certain and distinct sound, warning and exhorting every one, as those that must give account. And blessed shall those servants be, who shall be found faithfull in their Lord's house, distributing to his household what is meet for this season, and can say they are free of the blood of all men, having shewn them the whole counsell of God, being in nothing terrified of the threats of their adversaries. And blessed and happy shall that people be that walk in the light holden forth by them, and staye upon the Lord in this dark time, harkning to the voyce of his servants, and walking in the light of his Word, and not in the sparks of their owne kindlings, which will end in sorrow. How inexcusable will England be, having so foulie revolted against so many faire testimonies which the Lord Christ hath entred as protestations, to preserve his right in these ends of the earth, long since given unto him for his possession, and of late confirmed by solenne Covenant. Christ's right to these kingdoms is surer than that he should be pleaded out of it by pretended liberty of conscience, and his begun possession is more precious to him than to be satisfied with a dishonourable toleration. All that yet we have seen doth not weaken our confidence of the Lord's glorifying the house of his glory in these lands, and of his Son's taking unto him his great power, and reigning in the beauty and power of his ordinances in this island. His name is Wonderfull, and so also are his workes; we ought not therefore to square them according to our line, but leave them to him who hath the government laid upon his shoulder, all whose wayes are judgement, and whose ruling these kingdoms had never yet reason to decline. It is good for us to be stedfast in our duty, and therein quietly to wait and hope for the salvation of God. The word of promise is sure, (and hath an appointed time,) that "he that will come, shall come, and will not tarry." There is none hath cause to distrust the Lord's word to his people; it hath often, to our experience, been tryed in the fire, and hath ever come forth with a more glorious lustre. Let not, therefore, these that suffer in England cast away their confidence: they are not the first who have needed patience after that they had done the Lord's will; but let them strengthen the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees, and say to the fearfull in heart, "Be strong, fear not, behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompence: he will come and save you." Now the just shall live by faith, whereas these that draw back, or become lukewarm in the Lord's work, his soul shall abhorre them, and he shall spue them out of his mouth. But we perswade ourselves of better things of these our brethren in England, and pray that the God of peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, may make them perfect in every good work to doe his will, working in them that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for ever. Amen.

The Generall Assembly, considering that the contribution of forty shillings, for entertaining of Highland boyes at schools, in respect of the penury and great indigence of those parts, hath not taken the intended effect; therefore, in respect of the necessity and profitableness of so pious a work, the Assembly, in lieu of the said forty shillings, do appoint and ordain that there be an extraordinary collection at the kirk doors for that use one Sabbath in the year; and to that effect, that a certain Sabbath yearly be appointed and designed, whereupon that collection shall be gathered, intimation being made by the minister the Sabbath before to prepare for such a collection, and the necessity and usefulness thereof being laid out to the people for that end. And if the collection in any little private congregation shall be lesse then forty shillings, the session shall make up what wants of forty shillings; and where the collection is more, it is hereby specially inhibited and discharged that any part thereof be retained or interverted to any other use whatsoever: And these collections shall be sent to the persons formerly appointed to receive the forty shillings, that they may see the right distribution and employment thereof; recommending to Presbyteries to see this punctually performed, and accompt thereof shall be craved at Synods and Generall Assemblies. It is always to be remembered that the congregations exceed from the forty shillings are also exceed from this collection.

Commission for a Conference of Ministers, Lawyers, and Physitians, concerning the Tryal and Punishment of Witchcraft, Charming, and Consulting.

The Generall Assembly, taking to their serious consideration the growth of the sins of witchcraft, charming, and consulting, notwithstanding the frequent recommendations for restraining thereof, and remembering that the Generall Assembly, 1647, did propose a good way for the tryall and punishment of these sinnes, by appointing conferences with some ministers, lawyers, and physitians in that matter, which hath never yet taken effect; therefore, the Assembly doth appoint Masters Robert Dowglas, Robert Blair, Mungo Law, James Hammilton, John Smith, Robert Traill, George Leslie, John Hamilton, John Duncan, Samuel Rutherford, James Wood, John Leviston, James Guthrie, Andro Cant, David Calderwood, John Moncreiff, Frederick Carmichael, James Durbame, Patrick Gillespie, Robert Ker, Ephraim Melvill, ministers, to consider seriously of that matter, and to consult and advise therein amongst themselves, as also with Sir Archibald Johnston of Wariston, Clerk-Register, Mr Thomas Nicolson, his Majesty's Advocate, Mr Alexander Pierson, one of the Ordinary Lords of Session, Sir Lewes Stewart, Mr Alexander Colvill, and Mr James Robertson, Justice-Deputes, Masters Rodger Mowet, John Gilmoir, and John Nisbet, lawyers; and with Doctors Sibbald, Cunninghame, and Purves, physitians, severally or together, as occasion shall offer. And the Assembly earnestly requests, and confidently expects, from these learned and judicious lawyers and physitians beforenamed, their best endeavours and concurrence with their brethren of the ministric, for advise and counsell herein, and for conference in the said matter; and ordaine the said brethren to make report of the result of their consultations and conferences from time to time, as they make any considerable progresse, to the Commission for Publick Affaires; and the said Commission shall make report to the next Generall Assembly.

Recommendation for Maintenance of Schoolmasters and Precenters.

The Generall Assembly doe humbly recommend to the Parliament or Committee for Plantation of Churches, that whatever, either in paroches of burghs or landwart, was formerly given to the maintenance of these who were readers-precentors in congregations, and teachers of schooles, before the establishing of the Directory for Publick Worship, may not be, in whole or in part, alienat or taken away, but be reserved for the maintenance of sufficient schoolmasters and precentors, who are to be approven by the Presbytery; and Presbyteries are hereby required to see that none of that maintenance given to the foresaid uses, or in use to be payed thereunto, before the establishing of the Directory of Worship, be drawn away from the Church.

Act concerning Persons to be admitted Bursars.

The Assembly doe hereby ordaine, that none be sent to universities from Presbyteries, nor be admitted as bursars of divinitie, but pious youths, and such as are known to be of good expectation and approven abilities.

Reference to the Commission for Publick Affaires, for re-examining the Paraphrase of the Psalmes, and emitting the same for publicke use.

The Generall Assembly, having taken some view of the new Paraphrase of the Psalmes in meeter, with the corrections and animadversions thereupon, sent from severall persons and Presbyteries, and finding that they cannot overtake the review and examination of the whole in this Assembly; therefore, now, after so much time and so great paines about the correcting and examining thereof, from time to time some yeares bygone, that the worke may come now to some conclusion, they do ordain the brethren appointed for perusing the same during the meeting of this Assembly, viz, Masters James Hammiltoun, John Smith, Hew Mackail, Robert Traill, George Hutcheson, and Robert Lowrie, after the dissolving of this Assembly to goe on in that worke carefully, and to report their travels to the Commission of the Generall Assembly for Publick Affaires, at their meeting at Edinburgh in November; and the said Commission, after perusall and re-examination thereof, is hereby authorized with full power to conclude and establish the Paraphrase, and to publish and emit the same for publick use.

Letter to the King's Majesty.

Most gracious Sovereigne,

We, your Majesty's most humble and loyall subjects, the commissioners from all the Presbyteries in this your Majesty's ancient kingdom, and members of this present Nationall Assembly, having expected to finde at our meeting a gracious and satisfactory returne to those humble representations made to your Majesty at the Hague, by the commissioners of this Kirk, cannot but expresse our great sorrow and griefe, that your Majesty's goodnes has been so far abused, as that not only the just and necessary desires presented by them to your Majesty, which so much concerne the glory of God, your owne honours and happinesse, the peace and safety of your kingdoms, are utterly frustrated, as we perceive by the paper delivered in answer to them; but also this Assembly hath not received so much as any signification by etter of your Majesty's minde; which princely condescension had not wont to be wanting in your royall father to former Generall Assemblies, even in times of greatest distance. Our witness is in heaven, and record on high, that we are not conscious to ourselves of any undutifull thought or disloyall affection, that might have procured this at your Majesty's hands; and that, as we doe from our hearts abominate and detest that horrid fact of the sectaries against the life of your royall father, our late soveraigne, so it is the unfained and earnest desire of our soules, that the ancient monarchicall government of these kingdoms may be established and flourish in your Majesty's person all the dayes of your life, and be continued in your royall family, which, by divine Providence, hath, without interruption, reigned over us and our predecessors for so many generacions, since the time that we were a kingdom; and that there is nothing under the glory of God, and cause of our Lord Jesus Christ, for which we doe more heartily sollicite the throne of grace, or would more readily expose unto hazard all that is deare to us in the world, than for this. And now, though this very great discouragement might incline us to hold our peace at this time, yet the tendernesse and uprightnesse of our affection and love to your Majesty's happinesse, (which many waters cannot quench,) together with the conscience of our duty which our Lord and Master has laid upon us, in this our place and station, constraineth us, yea, and your Majesty's owne goodnesse and gracious disposition, whereof the late commissioners have given us so large a testimony, doth much encourage us, to renew our addresses to your Majesty in this humble, faithfull representation, both of the great and growing dangers to your royall person and throne, and of these duties which the Lord of Lords and King of Kings call for from you, as you would look to finde favour in his eyes, and to be delivered out of your deepe distresses.

Our hearts are filled with fears and troubles in your Majesty's behalf, when we look upon the sad calamities which have been already produced by such wayes and courses, as we perceive your Majesty is entred, and in danger to be further led away into, by the prevalency of evill counsell upon your tender age; particularly, your refusing to give satisfaction to the just and necessary desires of the people of God, for advancing the work of reformation of religion, and establishing and securing the same in your Majesty's dominions, which is nothing else but to oppose the kingdom of the Sonne of God, by whom kings doe reign, and to refuse that he should reign over you and your kingdomes in his pure ordinances of Church government and worship—your cleaving unto these men as your trustiest counsellors, who, as they have never had the glory of God, nor good of his people, before their eyes, so now, in all their wayes and counsels, are seeking nothing but their owne interests, to the hazard of the utter subversion of your throne, the ruine of your royall family, and the desolation of your kingdomes—your owning the practises, and entertaining the person of that flagitious man, and most justly excommunicate rebell, James Graham, who has exercised such horrid cruelty upon your best subjects in this kingdom, which cannot but bring upon your throne the guiltinesse of all the innocent blood shed by him and his complices—and, above all, that, which we cannot think upon without trembling of heart and horreur of spirit, your settling of late such a peace with the Irish Papists, the murderers of so many thousands of your Protestant subjects, whereby not only they are owned as your good and loyall subjects, but also there is granted unto them (contrary to the standing lawes of your royall progenitors, contrary to the commandment of the Most High God, and to the high contempt and dishonor of his Majesty, and evident danger of the Protestant religion) a full liberty of their abominable idolatry; which cannot be otherwise judged, but a giving of your royall power and strength unto the Beast, and an accession to all that blood of your good subjects wherewith those sonnes of Babell have made that land to swim.

We do, in all humility, beseech your Majesty to consider and lay to heart what the mouth of the Lord of Hosts hath spoken of all the attempts of people, nations, kings, and rulers, against the kingdom of his Son, that they imagine a vaine thing, and that he that sitteth in heaven will have them in derision, and vex them in his sore displeasure. Consider how he hath blasted and turned upside downe these yeares bypast, all the devices and plots of those men that now beare the sway in your Majesty's counsels—consider how the anger of God has been kindled, even against his dearest saints when they have joynd themselves to such men as he hateth and has cursed;—consider how severely he hath threatned and punished such kings as have associate with idolaters, and leaned unto their helps. Surely great is the wrath of God, whereof you are in danger; and yet the Lord, in the riches of his goodness, forbearance, and long-suffering, is waiting to be gracious to your Majesty. To-day, if ye will heare his voice, harden not your heart; but humble your self under the mighty hand of God, lamenting after him as for the iniquities of your father's house, especially the opposition against the reformation of religion and cause of God, the permitting and practising antichristian idolatry in the royall family itself, and the shedding of so much blood of the people of God, so also, for your owne entering to walke in the like courses in the beginning of your reign. It is high time to fall downe before the throne of grace, seeking to get your peace made with God through Jesus Christ, whose blood is able to wash away all your sins—to walk no longer in the council of the ungodly, nor cleave to such as seeke their own things and not the things of Jesus Christ, nor the welfare of your subjects and government—but to set your eyes upon the faithfull in your dominions, that such may dwell with you, and be the men of your counsellors—to serve the Lord in feare, and kisse the Sonne of God, by a sincere and cordiall contributing your royall allowance and authority for establishing in all your dominions the reformation of religion, in doctrine, worship, and government, as it is now agreed upon, according to the cleare and evident warrant of the Word of God, by the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, and the Generall Assemblies of this Church; and also, laying aside that Service-Book, which is so stuffed with Romish corruptions, and conforming your owne practise, and the worship of God in your royall family, to that Gospel simplicity and purity which is holden forth from the Word of God in the Directory of Worship; and not only to grant your royall approbation to the Covenant of these three kingdomes, (without which your people can never have from you sufficient security, either for religion or their just liberties,) but also your selfe to joyne with your people therein as the greatest security, under heaven, for your person and just greatness, and to cause all of them stand to it by your royall command, according to the practise of that gracious King Josiah, to whom we wish your Majesty in these your younger yeares, and this begining of your reign, to look as to an ensample and kingly portraict approven of God. These things if your Majesty do, as we are well assured that the hearts of all your good subjects in these kingdomes will be enlarged with all cheerfulness to embrace your person, and submit unto your royall government, so we darre promise, in the name of our Lord, that you shall finde favour with God, peace, and joy unspeakable and full of glory to your soule, and deliverance out of your sad afflictions and deep distresses in due time; but if your Majesty shall go on in refusing to hearken to wholesome counsels, we must, for the discharge of our conscience, tell your Majesty, in the humility and griefe of our hearts, that the Lord's anger is not turned away, but his hand stretched out still against you and your family. But we hope, and shall with all earnestnesse and constancy pray for better things from and to your Majesty. And whatsoever misconstruction (by the malice of those that desire not a right understanding and cordiall conjunction between your Majesty and this Kirk and kingdome) may be put upon our declaration, yet we have the Lord to be our witnesse, that our purpose and intention therein is no other but to warne and keepe the people of God committed to our care, that they runne not to any course which would bring upon themselves the guilt of highest perjury and breach of covenant with God, and could not but prove most dangerous to your Majesty and your government, and involve you in shedding the blood of those who are most desirous to preserve your Majesty's person and just right in all your dominions. And now, we doe, with all earnestnesse, beseech your Majesty that you will follow the courses of truth and peace; and that when there is a doore opened for your Majesty to enter to your royall government over us in peace, with the favour of God, and cordiall love and embracings of all your good subjects, you will not suffer your selfe to be so farre abused and misled by the counsels of men, who delight in war, as to take a way of violence and blood, which cannot but provoke the Most High against your Majesty, and alienat from you the hearts of your best subjects, who desire nothing more than that your Majesty may have a long and happy reign over them, and that they may live under you a peaceable and quiet life, in all godlinesse and honestie.

Your Majesty's most loyall subjects and humble servants, the Ministers and Elders conveened in this National Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland.

Edinburgh, August 6, 1649.

Presbyteries and Provincial Assemblies recommended to consider Matters referred to them.

The Generall Assembly, not having now time to consider the references of preceding Assemblies, and the most part of Presbyteries not having sent their opinions in writ; therefore, do yet againe recommend to Presbyteries and Provinciall Assemblies to consider all matters referred by this or by any former Assemblies, and to send their opinions therein in writ to the next Generall Assembly.

The meeting of the next Generall Assembly is hereby appointed to be at Edinburgh, the second Wednesday of July, 1650.

A. KER.

[The General Assembly met at Edinburgh on the second Wednesday of July 1650, according to the appointment of the Assembly preceding, but none of the Acts thereof have been printed.

The Assembly again met at St Andrews, July 1651, and, after sitting for a few days, adjourned to Dundee, in consequence of the arrival of Cromwell's army in Fife. At Dundee, however, the Assembly continued its sittings for three days only. Intelligence having been received that the enemy was marching towards Perth, the business was brought to an abrupt conclusion, and the members obliged immediately to disperse.

Another Assembly met at Edinburgh in July 1652, but against the lawfulness of this, as also of the Assembly of 1651, protestation was taken by several ministers, elders, and professors. Several documents connected with these two Assemblies are to be found in the Wodrow MSS. A small tract, entitled "Three Acts of the General Assembly, for promoting the Knowledge of the Grounds of Salvation, and observing the Rules of Discipline," was published in 1652, and will be reprinted in an Appendix to the present work.

An Assembly met at Edinburgh, July 20, 1653, concerning which, Mr Baillic thus writes to his friend Mr Calamy, minister at London:—"On the 20th of July last, when our Generall Assemblie was sett in the ordinarie tyme and place, Lieutenant-Colonell Cotterall besett the Church with some rattes of musquetiers and a troupe of horse; himself (after our fast, wherein Mr Dickson and Mr Dowglass had two gracious sermons) entered the Assemblie-house, and, immediately after Mr Dickson the Moderator his prayer, required audience; wherein he inquired, If we did sitt there by the authority of the Parliament of the Commonwealth of England? or of the Commanders-in-Chiefe of the English forces? or of the English Judges in Scotland? The Moderator replied, That we were ane ecclesiasticall Synod, ane spirituall court of Jesus Christ, which medled not with any thing evile; that our authoritie wes from God, and established by the lawes of the land yet standing unrepealed; that, by the Solemn League and Covenant, the most of the English army stood obliged to defend our Generall Assemblie. When some speeches of this kind had passed, the Lieutenant-Colonell told us, his order wes to dissolve us; whereupon he commanded all of us to follow him, else he would drag us out of the rowme. When he had entered a protestation of this unheard-of and unexampled violence, we did ryse and follow him; he led us all through the whole streets a myle out of the towne, encompassing us with foot-companies of musqueteirs, and horsemen without; all the people gazing and mourning as at the saddest spectacle they had ever seen. When he had ledd us a myle without the towne, he then declared what further he had in commission, that we should not dare to meet any more above three in number; and that against eight o'clock to-morrow, we should depart the towne, under paine of being guiltie of breaking the publick peace: And the day following, by sound of trumpet, we were commanded off towne under the paine of present imprisonment. Thus our Generall Assemblie, the glory and strength of our Church upon earth, is, by your souldiarie, crushed and trod under foot, without the least provocatione from us, at this time, either in word or deed. For this our hearts are sadd, our eyes runn downe with water, we sigh to God against whom we have sinned, and wait for the help of his hand; hot from those who oppressed us we deserved no evill."

It was again attempted to have an Assembly at Edinburgh in July 1654, but before it was constituted, the commander-in-chief of Cromwell's army gave orders to his soldiers to break it up.—Ed. 1843.]

THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AND BEGUN AT EDINBURGH, OCTOBER 16, 1690, AND ENDING THE 13th DAY OF NOVEMBER NEXT THEREAFTER.

Sess. 1, October 16, 1690, post meridiem.—The Meeting of the General Assembly, and the recording of their Majesties' Commission to John Lord Carmichael, for representing their Majesties therein.

This day, being a day of solemn fasting and humiliation, the General Assembly of the ministers and elders of this Church did, after sermons, (in the forenoon by Mr Gabriel Cuninghame, Moderator of the last General Meeting, and in the afternoon by Mr Patrick Sympson, Moderator of the preceding General Meeting,) convene in the Assembly-House at Edinburgh, according to the indiction of an act of the current Parliament, dated the 7th day of June last, and directions given by the late General Meeting of the ministers and elders of this Church; and after prayer, there was produced to them by a noble Lord, John Lord Carmichael, their Majesties' commission for his being their Majesties' High Commissioner and Representative to this General Assembly, dated at Kensington, the 10th day of October 1690, which was with all due respect publicly read; and Mr Gabriel Cuninghame, Moderator for the time, did, in the Assembly's name, represent to his Grace how great a mercy it was to this Church and kingdom that their Majesties had countenanced this Assembly with their authority, and honoured it with a representative of their royal persons, and the Assembly's great satisfaction with their Majesties' choice of a person so well qualified and so acceptable to this Assembly, to represent their Majesties therein. To whom his Grace was pleased to give this return, that it was his firm resolution, in the capacity wherein their Majesties had now put him, to lay out himself for their Majesties' service and the good of the Church. The Assembly appointed the said commission to be recorded in their books, ad futuram rei memoriam; the tenor whereof follows:—

Sess. 2, October 17, 1690, ante meridiem.—His Majesty's gracious Letter to the Assembly.

This session his Majesty's gracious letter direct to this General Assembly was publicly read and heard with great respect, and appointed to be recorded in the books of the Assembly; the tenor whereof follows:—

WILLIAM R.

Reverend, trusty, and well-beloved,

Our concern for the good of our ancient kingdom hath been such, that we have left nothing undone that might contribute to the making of it happy: And, therefore, having been informed, that differences as to the government of the Church have caused greatest confusions in that nation, we did willingly concur with our Parliament in enacting such a frame of it as was judged to be most agreeable to the inclinations of our good subjects; to which, as we have had a particular regard, in countenancing this Assembly with our authority, and a representative of our royal person, so we expect that your management shall be such as we shall have no reason to repent of what we have done. A calm and peaceable procedure will be no less pleasing to us than it becometh you. We never could be of the mind that violence was suited to the advancing of true religion; nor do we intend that our authority shall ever be a tool to the irregular passions of any party. Moderation is what religion enjoins, neighbouring churches expect from you, and we recommend to you. And we assure you of our constant favour and protection in your following of these methods, which shall be for the real advantage of true piety and the peace of our kingdoms. Given under our royal hand, at our Court at Kensington, the 10th day of October 1690.

By his Majesty's command,

MELVILL.

Direct.—To the Reverend, Trusty, and Well-Beloved, Ministers and Elders met in the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland at Edinburgh.

Sess. 4, October 18, 1690, post meridiem.—The Assembly's Answer to his Majesty's gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

Your gracious letter, direct to the ministers and elders met here in the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, was read and heard among us with all joy and thankfulness, that the rising and shining again of the royal favour upon this long afflicted and distressed Church could possibly inspire: For, as your Majesty's concern for the good of this your ancient kingdom hath indeed been such, as nothing can impair the happy state whereunto you have restored it, save the want of the due sense and understanding of so great a mercy; so we do most heartily acknowledge, that through your Majesty's care and kindness, the Church of Christ therein doth equally partake of the same blessing. It was the sad confusions, that differences as to the government of the Church had caused in this nation, that, according to your Majesty's first declaration for our relief, moved our gracious God to raise up and prosper you to be our glorious deliverer for effectuating the Re-establishment that we now enjoy; so that we are persuaded, that it is not more agreeable to the inclinations and conscientious persuasions of all within this kingdom, who are best affected to your Majesty's person and government, than it is acceptable to God, and will be your Majesty's perpetual peace and satisfaction. Nor are we less sensible of the particular regard your Majesty professeth towards us on this occasion, in countenancing this Assembly with your authority, and a representative of your royal person, for which we most humbly acknowledge your gracious favour; especially that it hath pleased your Majesty to fix your choice upon a person so well qualified and so acceptable to us. And now, great Sir, after so many and so great mercies and favours received from God and your Majesty, we hope we may with confidence assure you, that our management shall be such as your Majesty hath so just reason to expect, and shall never give you cause to repent of what you have done for us. The God of love, the Prince of peace, with all the providences that have gone over us, and circumstances that we are under, as well as your Majesty's most obliging pleasure, require of us a calm and peaceable procedure. And if, after the violence for conscience sake that we have suffered, and so much detested, and these grievous abuses of authority in the late reigns, whereby through some men's irregular passions we have so sadly smarted, we ourselves should lapse unto the same errors, we should certainly prove the most unjust towards God, foolish towards ourselves, and ungrateful towards your Majesty, of all men on earth. Great revolutions of this nature must be attended with occasions of complaint, and even the worst of men are ready to cry out of wrong for their justest deservings; but as your Majesty knows these things too well to give us the least apprehension of any impressions evil report can make; so we assure your Majesty, as in the presence of God, and in expectation of his dreadful appearance, that we shall study that moderation which your Majesty recommends, as being convinced that it is the duty that religion enjoins, and neighbouring churches do most justly expect from us; desiring in all things to approve ourselves unto God as the true disciples of Jesus Christ, who, though most zealous against all corruptions in his Church, was most gentle towards the persons of men; and to maintain as much as in us lies peace and concord with all the Reformed Churches: As likewise, to comply in all obsequious duty, with all that your Majesty enjoins for the real advantage of true piety and the peace of all your kingdoms. Heartily wishing that God, who has graciously brought back your Majesty's person in safety from your late, no less generous than dangerous expedition, for his cause and truth, with joyful success may still preserve your Majesty and our most gracious Queen, granting you long life, health, and prosperity, and may establish your throne, and bless your government, to the glory of his great name, the good of all his churches, and the welfare of all your people. Which shall ever be the earnest prayer of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects.

Signed in our presence, in our name, and at our appointment, by

HU. KENNEDIE, Moderator.

Eadem Sessione.—Appointment of a Diet to be kept by the Assembly for Prayer.

The General Assembly appoints Monday next, betwixt eight and twelve o'clock in the forenoon, to be set apart for prayer, by the members of this Assembly; and recommends to all the members to meet in the Assembly-House for that end, at eight o'clock in the morning.

Sess. 9, October 25, 1690, ante meridiem.—The Proceedings of the Assembly aenent Mr Thomas Lining and others.

The General Assembly having received a report from the Committee of Overtures, aenent two papers given in to the said Committee, and subscribed by Mr Thomas Lining, Mr Alexander Shields, and Mr William Boyd, who had followed some courses contrary to the order of this Church; whereby "The said Committee, out of their ardent desire of union in the Church, recommend to the Assembly the reading of the shorter of these two papers, in which the forenamed persons oblige themselves, after the exhibiting of the larger paper, (which they offer, as they profess, for the exoneration of their consciences,) and laying it down at the Assembly's feet, to be disposed upon as the Assembly should think fit, that they shall, in all required submission, subject themselves, their lives and doctrine, to the cognizance of the respective judicatories of this Church, and equally to oppose schism and defection in any capacity that they should be capable of. But the said Committee judgeth the reading of the larger of the said two papers in full Assembly to be inconvenient, in regard that though there be several good things in it, yet the same doth also contain several peremptory and gross mistakes, unseasonable and impracticable proposals, and uncharitable and injurious reflections, tending rather to kindle contentions than to compose divisions. Nevertheless, the said committee gives it as their opinion that the foresaid offer of the above named persons, their subjection and obedience to the authority of this Church in their respective judicatories, contained in the said shorter paper, should be entertained and accepted of by the Assembly, and they received into communion with this Church, according to their several capacities."

Likeas, the above named persons having appeared in presence of the Assembly, and judicially owned and adhered unto their shorter paper; and the Assembly having heard the above written report of the Committee of Overtures, concerning both the said papers, as also the said shorter paper read in their presence, the General Assembly, after mature deliberation, did unanimously, and without a contrary vote, approve the above written report and opinion of the Committee of Overtures, in the hail heads thereof; which being intimated to the forenamed persons, they acquiesced thereto. Upon all which, the following act was made:—

Act aenent Mr Thomas Lining and others.

Whereas Mr Thomas Lining, Mr Alexander Shields, and Mr William Boyd, have presented to this Assembly two papers, one containing the expressions of their purpose and promise of being subject to the authority of this Church as formerly constituted, and now restored, in its several judicatories, the other offered for the exoneration of their consciences; which paper, containing their submission and subjection, did, after the exhibition of the other to the Assembly, become binding upon them, according to the promise therein made. Likeas, after that other and longer paper had been read before the Committee of Overtures, it was exhibited to and received by the Assembly, together with the reasons from the said Committee why it should not be publicly read in full Assembly. Which reasons being duly considered, and the said other paper of submission and subjection publicly read, and judicially owned by the forenamed persons, in presence of the Assembly: the Assembly did conclude, by one single vote, that the foresaid longer paper should not be read; and that the abovenamed persons should be received into the fellowship of this Church, on the terms of submission and subjection contained in the shorter paper: And after passing of the said vote, and that they were gravely admonished by the Moderator to walk orderly in time coming, in opposition to all schism and division, it was declared to them by the Moderator, in the name of the Assembly, that the Assembly did receive them into the fellowship of this Church, to enjoy the privileges thereof, and perform the duties therein, whereof they are or shall be found capable. Whereupon, and at their desire, it was ordained that this act should be made, and an extract thereof given to them in good form. Follows the tenor of the said shorter paper:—

“ Right Reverend and Honourable,

“ With the greatest earnestness of longing we have desired, and yet with a patience perhaps to excess, we have waited for an opportunity to bring our unhappy differences (of which all parties concerned are weary) to a happy and holy close; and for this end, to have access to apply ourselves to a full and free General Assembly of this Church, invested with authority and power, in foro divino et humano, to determine and cognosce upon them. The want of which, an Assembly constituted in that vigour to which, through the mercy of God, this venerable national Synod hath arrived, hath been the greatest let and impediment of our composing these differences, in a way, wherein not only we, but all of the same sentiments, would acquiesce. Now, having obtained this much longed and long prayed for privilege, we cannot forbear any longer humbly to accost and address this venerable Assembly, with a free and ingenuous representation of our minds and desires. The scope of which is, to represent these things which have been most stumbling to us, for the exoneration of our consciences; and to declare our design, after we have exhibited our testimony against these courses, which we understand to have been corruptions and defections in this Church, and laid it down at the Assembly's feet to be disposed of as their Wisdoms shall think fit, that we shall, in all required submission, subject ourselves, our lives and doctrine, to the cognizance of the judicatories of this Church, and shall equally oppose schism and defection, in any capacity that we shall be found capable of. And here, by these presents, we bind and oblige ourselves faithfully to live in union, communion, and entire subjection, and due obedience in the Lord, to the authority of this Church, in her respective judicatories; as witness our hands at Edinburgh, the 22d day of October 1690.

“ THOMAS LINING.

Sess. 11, October 28, 1690, ante meridiem.—Act ament Ministers that observe not the Public Orders of the Church.

The Assembly recommends it to Presbyteries to take notice of all ministers within their bounds, whether the late conforming incumbents or others, who shall not observe fasts and thanksgivings indicted by the Church; or who shall be found guilty of any other irregular carriage, in administrating the Sacraments in private, or celebrating clandestine marriages, without due proclamation of bans, and to censure them accordingly.

VII.

Sess. 12, October 29, 1690, ante meridiem.—Act approving several Overtures.

This day, the Overtures following were read in presence of the Assembly.

1. Ament subscribing the Confession of Faith.

“ For retaining soundness and unity of doctrine, it is judged necessary that all probationers licensed to preach, all intrants into the ministry, and all other ministers and elders received into communion with us, in church government, be obliged to subscribe their approbation of the Confession of Faith, approved by former General Assemblies of this Church, and ratified in the second session of the current Parliament; and that this be recommended to the diligence of the several Presbyteries, and they appointed to record their diligence thereanent in their respective registers.”

2. Aneut Papists.

“That it be recommended to Presbyteries to take special notice what Papists are in their bounds, and that they take pains to reclaim them, and to advert how their children are educated; and if need be, to make application to the civil authority concerning them.”

3. Aneut Celebration of Marriage.

“That the celebration of marriage without due proclamation of bans, according to order, three several Sabbaths in the respective parishes, be discharged; and that it be recommended to Presbyteries to censure the contraveners.”

4. Against Profanation of the Sabbath.

“That it be recommended to Kirk-Sessions and Presbyteries carefully to put in execution the Acts of former General Assemblies against profanation of the Lord’s day, and particularly by unnecessary sailing and travelling.”

5. Aneut Markets on Saturdays and Mondays.

“That application be made to the Parliament, for altering all markets in royal burghs, and other places, on Saturdays and Mondays.”

The General Assembly, after mature deliberation, approves of these Overtures, and recommends and appoints accordingly; and ordains the same to be observed, and to have the force and strength of an Act and Ordinance of Assembly.

VIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act approving the Associations of Presbyteries.

The General Assembly allows and approves of the ministers of different Presbyteries their associating in Presbyteries, ay and until the vacancies of the said Presbyteries be filled; and declares them to have the authority and power of Presbyteries respectively; and that, notwithstanding that according to the old platform, the said ministers do reside in the bounds of different Presbyteries.

IX.

Sess. 15, October 31, 1690, ante meridiem.—Act against Ministers removing out of this Church.

The General Assembly does hereby appoint that no ministers, who have actual standing and absolute relations to any charge in the Church of Scotland, shall remove out of the kingdom, without the consent of the respective judicatories of this Church.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the Administration of the Sacraments.

The General Assembly, considering that the two Sacraments that Christ hath appointed under the New Testament, viz., Baptism and the Lord’s Supper, are his solemn ordinances, and seals of the covenant of grace, (which is held forth in the preaching of the Gospel,) and that in the use of them the parties receiving them are solemnly devoted and engaged to God, before angels and men, and are solemnly received as members of the Church, and do entertain communion with her; and that by the authority of this Church, in her former Assemblies, the private use of them hath been condemned: As also, that by allowing the private use of the same, in pretended cases of necessity, the superstitious opinion is nourished that they are necessary to salvation, not only as commanded duties, but as means without which salvation cannot be attained. Therefore, the Assembly hereby discharges the administration of the Lord’s Supper to sick persons in their houses, and all other use of the same, except in the public assemblies of the Church; and also, do discharge the administration of Baptism in private, that is, in any place, or at any time, when the congregation is not orderly called together to wait on the dispensing of the Word. And appoints that this be carefully observed, when and wherever the Lord giveth his people peace, liberty, and opportunity for their public assemblies. And ordains this present act to be publicly intimated in all the churches.

XI.

Sess. 24, November 11, 1690, post meridiem.—Act approving Overtures anent the Irish Bibles, &c.

This day the overtures following, anent the Irish Bibles, New Testaments, and Catechisms, were read in presence of the Assembly:—

“ 1. That a letter of thanks be written to these concerned, whether in this or our neighbour nation, for their care of and liberal charity towards the Highlanders of this kingdom, in their so liberally contributing for the said Irish Bibles, &c.; and that Mr David Blair be appointed to write the said letter in the name of this Assembly.

“ 2. The whole money so charitably contributed being expended, Therefore, and for making up of the same, and for defraying of the necessary charges of transporting the said Bibles, &c., to Scotland, it is thought most needful that there be an advance of one thousand pounds Scots, and that their Majesties' Privy Council be supplicated for as much of some vacant stipends of parishes where the King is patron as will make up the said sum for the ends foresaid.

“ 3. That it be recommended to the kirk-sessions, heritors, and others concerned in the Highlands, to see the Act of Parliament anent erecting of schools in every parish duly executed, and the funds established by law for the same made effectual.

“ 4. That it be recommended to the agent for the Kirk to receive the foresaid sum, and to disburse the same, at the sight of Mr John Law and Mr David Blair, for the said use; and also to receive the books above mentioned, being three thousand Bibles, one thousand New Testaments, and three thousand Catechisms, from London.

“ 5. That the several Synods who have Highland parishes in their bounds appoint one of their number to receive their proportion of the said Bibles, New Testaments, and Catechisms; and that, in order thereto, the ministers and elders having interest in the Highlands, present in this Assembly, shall meet and appoint some to receive these Bibles, &c., and proportion the number that each parish shall have thereof.

“ 6. That it be recommended to the ministers concerned in the Highlands to dispatch the whole Paraphrase of the Irish Psalms to the press. And if the principal copy can be recovered, to expedite the same; but that any other copy they have be revised by the Synod of Argyle, and, being approved by them, that the same be printed.”

The Assembly, having considered these Overtures, they approve thereof, and recommend and appoint accordingly.

XII.

Sess. 25, November 12, 1690, post meridiem.—Act anent a Solemn National Fast and Humiliation, with the Causes thereof.

The General Assembly, having taken into their most-serious consideration the late great and general defection of this Church and kingdom, have thought fit to appoint a day of solemn humiliation and fasting, for confession of sins, and making supplication to our gracious God to forgive and remove the guilt thereof; in order whereunto, they have ordained the confession of sins, and causes of fasting following, to be duly intimated and published; recommending it most earnestly to all persons, both ministers and others, that every one of us may not only search and try our own hearts and ways, and stir up ourselves to seek the Lord, but also in our stations, and as we have access, deal with one another in all love and tenderness, to prepare for so great and necessary a duty, that we may find mercy in God's sight, and he may be graciously reconciled to our land in the Lord Jesus, and take delight to dwell among us.

Although our gracious God hath of late, for his own name sake, wrought great and wonderful things for Britain and Ireland, and for this Church and nation in particular, yet the inhabitants thereof have cause to remember their own evil ways, and to loathe themselves in their own sight for their iniquities.

Alas! we and our fathers, our princes, our pastors, and people of all ranks, have sinned, and have been under great transgression to this day; for though our gracious God shewed early kindness to this land, in sending the Gospel among us, and afterward in our reformation from Popish superstition and idolatry; and it had the honour, beyond many nations, of being, after our first reformation, solemnly devoted unto God, both prince and people; yet we have dealt treacherously with the Lord, and been unstedfast in his Covenant, and have not walked suitably to our mercies received from him, nor obligations to him. Through the mercy of God this Church had attained to a great purity of doctrine, worship, and government; but this was not accompanied with suitable personal reformation, neither was our fruit answerable to the pains taken on us by word and work. We had much Gospel preaching, but too little Gospel practice; too many went on in open wickedness, and some had but a form of godliness, denying the power thereof; many also, who had the grace of God in truth, fell from their first love, and fell under sad languishings and decays; and when, for our sins, the anger of the Lord had divided us, and we were brought under the feet of strangers, and many of our brethren killed, and others taken captive and sold as slaves, yet we sinned still; and after we were freed from the yoke of strangers, instead of returning to the Lord, and being led to repentance by his goodness, the land made open defection from the good ways of the Lord; many behaved as if they had been delivered to work abomination; the flood-gates of impiety were opened, and a deluge of wickedness did overspread the land. Who can, without grief and shame, remember the shameful debauchery and drunkenness that then was? And this accompanied with horrid and hellish cursing and swearing, and followed with frequent filthiness, adulteries, and other abominations; and the reprover was hated, and he that departed from iniquity made himself a reproach or prey. And when by these, and such like corrupt practices, men's consciences were debauched, they proceeded to sacrifice the interest of the Lord Jesus Christ and privileges of his Church to the lusts and will of men—the supremacy was advanced in such a way, and to such an height, as never any Christian church acknowledged—the government of the Church was altered, and Prelacy (which hath been always grievous to this nation) introduced, without the Church's consent, and contrary to the standing acts of our National Assemblies, both which the present Parliament hath (blessed be God) lately found; and yet, nevertheless, of the then standing Ministry of Scotland many did suddenly and readily comply with that alteration of the government, some out of pride and covetousness, or man-pleasing, some through infirmity or weakness, or fear of man, and want of courage and zeal for God. Many faithful ministers were thereupon cast out, and many insufficient and scandalous men thrust in on their charges, and many families ruined, because they would not own them as their pastors.

And, alas! it is undeniable there hath been under the late Prelacy a great decay of piety, so that it was enough to make a man be nicknamed a fanatic if he did not run to the same excess of riot with others.

And should it not be lamented, for it cannot be denied, that there hath been in some a dreadful atheistical boldness against God, some have disputed the being of God and his Providence, the Divine authority of the Scriptures, the life to come, and immortality of the soul, yea, and scoffed at these things.

There hath been also an horrid profanation of the holy and dreadful name of God, by cursing and swearing. Ah! there hath been so much swearing and forswearing amongst us, that no nation under heaven hath been more guilty in this than we; some by swearing rashly or ignorantly; some falsely, by breaking their oaths, and imposing and taking ungodly unlawful oaths and bonds, whereby the consciences of many have been polluted and seared; and many ruined and oppressed for refusing and not taking them.

There hath also been a great neglect of the worship of God, too much in public, but especially in families and in secret.

The wonted care of religious sanctifying the Lord's Day is gone; and, in many places, the Sabbath hath been and is shamefully profaned.

The land also hath been full of bloody crimes, and cities full of violence, and much innocent blood shed, so that blood touched blood; yea, Sodom's sins have abounded amongst us: pride, fulness of bread, idleness, vanities of apparel, and shameful sensuality filled the land.

And, alas! how great hath been the cry of oppression and unrighteousness. Iniquity hath been established by a law; there hath been a great perverting of justice, by making and executing unrighteous statutes and acts; and sad persecutions of many for their conscience towards God.

It is also matter of lamentation, that, under this great defection there hath been too general a fainting, not only amongst professors of the Gospel, but also amongst ministers; yea, even amongst such, who, in the main things, did endeavour to maintain their integrity, in not giving seasonable and necessary testimony against the defections and evils of the time, and keeping a due distance from them; and some, on the other hand, managed their zeal with too little discretion and meekness.

It is also matter of humiliation, that when differences fell out amongst these who did own truth, and bear witness against the course of defection, they were not managed with due charity and love, but with too much heat and bitterness, injurious reflections used against pious and worthy men on all hands, and scandalous divisions occasioned, and the success of the Gospel greatly obstructed thereby, and some dangerous principles drunk in. And after all this, there were shameful advances towards Popery; the abomination of the mass was set up in many places, and Popish schools erected, and several fell to idolatry.

And though the Lord hath put a stop to the course of defection, and of his great mercy given us some reviving from our bondage, yet we have sad cause to regret and bemoan that few have a due sense of our mercy, or walk answerable thereto; few are turned to the Lord in truth, but the wicked go on to do wickedly. And there is found amongst us to this day shameful ingratitude for our mercies, horrid impenitency under our sins; yea, even among those who stand most up for the defence of the truth; and amongst many in our armies there is woful profaneness and debauchery. And though we profess to acknowledge there can be no pardon of sins, no peace and reconciliation with God, but by the blood of Jesus Christ, yet few know him, or see the necessity and excellency of the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; few see their need of him, or esteem, desire, or receive him as he is offered in the Gospel; few are acquainted with faith in Jesus Christ, and living by faith on him, as made of the Father unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; and few walk as becometh the Gospel, and imitate our holy Lord in humility, meekness, self-denial, heavenly-mindedness, zeal for God, and charity towards men; but as there is even until now a great contempt of the Gospel, a great barrenness under it, so a deep security under our sin and danger, a great want of piety toward God, and love toward men, with a woful selfishness, every one seeking their own things, few the things of Christ, or the public good, or one another's welfare; and, finally, the most part more ready to censure the sins of others than to repent of their own.

Our iniquities are increased over our heads, and our trespasses are grown up unto the heavens; they are many in number, and heinous in their nature, and grievously aggravated, as having been contrary to great light and love, under signal mercies and judgments, after confession and supplication, and notwithstanding of our profession, promises, and solemn vowing, and covenanting with God to the contrary.

Have we not, then, sad cause of deep sorrow and humiliation? and may we not fear, if we do not repent, and turn from the evil of our ways, and return to the Lord with all our hearts, that he return to do us evil, after he hath done us good, and be angry with us, until he hath consumed us?

Let us, therefore, humble ourselves by fasting and praying;—let us search out our sins, and consider our ways, and confess these and our other sins with sorrow and detestation;—let us turn unto the Lord with fasting and weeping, and with mourning;—let us firmly resolve, and sincerely engage, to amend our ways and doings, and return unto the Lord our God with all our heart, and earnestly pray that, for the blood of the Lamb of God, our sins may be forgiven, and our backslidings healed, and we may yet become a righteous nation, keeping the truth, that religion and righteousness may flourish, and love and charity abound, and all the Lord's people may be of one mind in the Lord; and in order to all these, that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified, and that the preaching of the Word and dispensing of the sacraments may be accompanied with the wonted presence, power, and blessing of the Spirit of the Lord;—that the Lord would preserve and bless our gracious King and Queen, William and Mary, and establish their throne by righteousness and religion, and grant to these nations peace and truth together; and for that end, bless and prosper his Majesty's councils, and forces, by sea and land, and these of the princes and states his allies, for God and his truth;—that inferior rulers may rule in the fear of God, and judges be clothed with righteousness; and that many faithful labourers may be sent out into the Lord's vineyard; and they who are sent may find mercy to be faithful and be blest with success;—that families may be as little churches of Christ; and that the Lord would pour out his Spirit on all ranks of people, that they may be holy in all manner of conversation, and God may delight to dwell amongst us, and to do us good.

And while we pray for ourselves, let us not forget our brethren in foreign churches, with whom, alas! we had too little sympathy; nay, let us pray that all the ends of the earth may see the salvation of God;—and that he would bring his ancient people of the Jews to the acknowledgment of Jesus Christ;—and that he would hasten the ruin of Romish Babylon, and advance the reformation in Christendom, and preserve and bless the Reformed Churches;—that he would pity his oppressed people, the French Protestants, and gather them out of all places whither they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day;—and that he would be the defence, strength, and salvation of any of his people who are in war or danger, by infidel or Popish adversaries, in Europe or America;—and, in particular, that the Lord would be gracious to Ireland, and sanctify to his people there both their distress and deliverance, and perfect what concerneth them;—that he would convert the natives there to the truth, reduce that land to peace, and appoint salvation for walls and bulwarks to Britain.

For all these causes and reasons, the General Assembly hath appointed the second Thursday of January next to be observed in all the congregations of this Church and nation as a day of solemn fasting, and humiliation and prayer; beseeching and obtesting all, both pastors and people of all ranks, to be sincere and serious in humiliation and supplication, and universal reformation, as they would wish to find mercy of the Lord, and have deserved wrath averted, and would obtain the blessing of the Lord upon themselves and posterity after them; and that the Lord may delight in us, and our land may be as married to him. And ordains all ministers, either in kirks or meeting-houses, to read this present act publicly from the pulpit, a Sabbath or two before the said day of humiliation; and that the several Presbyteries take care that it be carefully observed in their respective bounds. And where, in regard of vacancies, the day hereby appointed cannot be observed, the Assembly appoints the said humiliation to be kept some other day with the first convenient opportunity; and appoints the Commission of Visitation to apply to the Council for their civil sanction to the observation thereof.

The General Assembly does hereby declare all sentences past against any ministers, hinc inde, by any Church judicatory upon the account of the late differences among Presbyterians, from the year 1650 till the re-introduction of Prelacy, to be of themselves void and null, to all effects and intents: And, sicklike, the General Assembly hereby recommends to the respective Presbyteries to take care that such of these ministers, as are not otherways disposed of by the Church, return to the exercise of their ministry in their respective congregations: and also hereby recommends to the civil magistrate that the said ministers may have the legal maintenances and stipends where they served.

Sess. 26, November 13, 1690, post meridiem.—The Assembly's Letter to his Majesty.

May it please your Majesty,

The happiness we have had by your Majesty's influence, as an instrument in the hand of God towards us for good, and the countenance you have given us in holding this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland, doth encourage us to make application again to your Majesty; that as, in our answer to your gracious letter direct to us in the entrance of this Assembly, we engaged to your Majesty that in all things that should come before us we would carry with that calmness and moderation which becometh the ministers of the Gospel of peace, and which your Majesty did so effectually recommend to us; so now, in the close of this our Assembly, we presume to acquaint your Majesty, that, through the good hand of God upon us, we have in a great measure performed accordingly; having applied ourselves, mostly and especially, to what concerned this whole Church, and endeavoured, by all means ecclesiastical and proper for us, to promote the good thereof, together with the quiet of the kingdom, and your Majesty's satisfaction and contentment. And God hath been pleased to bless our endeavours, in our receiving to the unity and order of this Church some who had withdrawn, and now have joined with us and promised subjection; and in providing for the propagation of religion, and the knowledge of God, in the most barbarous places of the Highlands, which may be the surest way of reducing these people also unto your Majesty's obedience; and especially in regulating the ministers of this Church, after so great revolutions and alterations; for we have, according to the use and practice of this Church, ever since the first reformation from Popery, appointed visitations both for the southern and northern parts of this kingdom, consisting of the gravest and most experienced ministers and elders, to whom we have given instructions about the late Conformists, that none of them shall be removed from their places but such as are either insufficient, or scandalous, or erroneous, or supinely negligent; and that these of them be admitted to ministerial communion with us, who, upon due trial, and in a competent time for that trial, shall be found to be orthodox in doctrine, of competent abilities, of a godly, peaceable, and loyal conversation, and who shall be judged faithful to God and to the government, and who shall likewise promise to own, submit unto, and concur with it. We have also taken care, that all persons who shall be found to have received wrong, in any inferior judicatory of this Church, shall be duly redressed. Other things, which are not of so universal a concern, we have delayed till the next General Assembly. This account, great Sir, we look upon ourselves as obliged to give unto your Majesty, for that great goodness you have been pleased to express, in giving such countenance to this Assembly, and in appointing such a Commissioner to represent your royal person, who hath been in all his conduct in this affair most acceptable unto us. That God may bless your Majesty and our most gracious Queen with all blessings, which concern both this life and the life to come, is the earnest prayer of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most humble, and most obedient subjects and servants.

Subscribed in name, and at the appointment of the General Assembly, by

HU. KENNEDIE, Moderator.

XV.

Eadem Sessione.—Instructions to the Commission for Visitations on the South and North sides of Tay.

The following instructions to the Commission for Visitations on this side of Tay were read in presence of the Assembly:—

“ 1. That there be appointed by the Assembly a delegated number of the most experienced ministers and elders. This number to be forty ministers and twenty ruling elders, fifteen of them to a quorum, ten of these being always ministers; and that they, at their first session, choose their moderator and clerk; and for the sub-committee betwixt the quarterly meetings, nine to be the quorum, six of these being always ministers.

“ 2. That the work of this commission for visitations be to take to their cognizance all references and appeals, and other things, which being stated before this Assembly, shall by them be specially referred to the said commission to determine the same.

“ 3. That the commission give their opinion to all Presbyteries and Synods who shall apply to them for the same in difficult cases; and though Presbyteries shall not apply, yet, if the commission shall be informed of any precipitant or unwarrantable procedure of Presbyteries in processes, which may prove of ill consequence to the Church, the commission shall interpose their advice to such Presbyteries, to sist such procedure till either the Synod or next General Assembly take cognizance of it; if the said commission shall not find a present fit expedient to direct them for bringing the matter sooner to a right conclusion.

“ 4. That in discussing references, appeals, and bills, they take care to purge out all who, upon due trial, shall be found to be insufficient, supinely negligent, scandalous, or erroneous.

“ 5. That this commission shall have power of visiting any ministers within the bounds of any Presbyteries on this side of the water of Tay, as they shall find need; and that this power reach Presbyterians as well as others.

“ 6. That they shall be careful that none shall be admitted by them to ministerial communion, or to a share of the government, but such as, upon due trial, (for which the commission is to take a competent time,) shall be found to be orthodox in their doctrine, of competent abilities, having a pious, godly, loyal, and peaceable conversation, as becometh a minister of the Gospel, of an edifying gift, and whom the commission shall have ground to believe will be true and faithful to God and the government, and diligent in their ministerial duties; and that all who shall be admitted to the ministry, or shall be received to a share in the government, shall be obliged to own and subscribe the Confession of Faith, and profess their submission to and willingness to join and concur with the Presbyterian Church government.

“ 7. That they be very cautious of receiving informations against the late Conformists, and that they proceed in the matter of censure very deliberately, so as none may have just cause to complain of their rigidity; yet, so as to omit no means of information; and that they shall not proceed to censure, but upon relevant libels and sufficient probation.

“ 8. That this commission do not take on them to meddle with any thing not expressed in their commission; and that it be declared, that this commission is only given ad hunc effectum et pro presenti Ecclesie statu.

“ 9. That this commission be in all their actings accountable to and censurable by the next ensuing General Assembly.

“ 10. That this commission continue till the first of November next; and in case the General Assembly intervene, then this commission is to terminate at the meeting of this said Assembly.”

The General Assembly approves these instructions for the said Commission for Visitations on the south side of Tay; and ordains the same also to serve for the Visitors that are to be appointed for the north.

THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AND BEGUN AT EDINBURGH, MARCH 29, 1694.*

I.

Sess. I, March 29, 1694, post meridiem.—The recording of their Majesties' Commission to John Lord Carmichael, for representing their Majesties in this General Assembly.

This day, the General Assembly of this National Church being met and constituted, there was produced to them by a noble Lord, John Lord Carmichael, their Majesties' commission, under the Great Seal of the Kingdom of Scotland, nominating and appointing him to be their Majesties' High Commissioner and representative in this General Assembly: Which Commission was publicly read, with all due honour and respect; and the General Assembly appointed, and hereby appoints, the said commission to be recorded in the books of the General Assembly, therein to remain, ad futuram rei memoriam, whereof the tenor follows:—"GULIELMUS et MARIA," &c.

II.

Eadem Sessione.—Appointment of a Diet to be kept by the Assembly for Prayer.

The General Assembly appoints to-morrow, being Friday, betwixt nine and twelve o'clock in the forenoon, to be set apart for public prayer by the members of this Assembly; and recommends to all the said members to meet timeously in the Assembly-House for that effect.

III.

The General Assembly's Letter to his Majesty.

* The Assembly did not meet on the 1st of November 1691, the day appointed by the Assembly of 1690. In consequence of the proposed Commissioner being called to London to meet his Majesty on his return to Britain, a royal proclamation was issued, adjourning the Assembly to the 15th of January 1692, when it accordingly met, and sat till the 13th of February, on which day it was dissolved by the Earl of Lothian, Royal Commissioner. No day was named by the Commissioner for another Assembly, but the Moderator, before dissolving in the name of Jesus Christ, did, with concurrence of the members of Assembly, appoint the next meeting to be held at Edinburgh on the third Wednesday of August 1693. The Assembly, however, did not meet at that time, but the Privy Council, by order of the King, who was then abroad, issued a proclamation indicting a meeting to take place on the 6th of December following, which meeting was, in consequence of his Majesty being detained from Britain beyond expectation, farther adjourned by royal proclamation to the 29th of March 1694. The Acts of the Assembly 1692 were not printed.—Ed. 1843.

IV.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the giving in of Commissions.

The General Assembly, taking to consideration how inconvenient it is that the rolls of the Assembly should be made up when the Assembly is met and actually sitting, and how much time is unnecessarily spent thereby, and being desirous that for the future it may be remedied; therefore, the General Assembly doth hereby appoint, that, in time coming, the commissioners from Presbyteries and others shall give in their respective commissions to the clerk of the General Assembly the night at least before the first diet or meeting thereof, to the effect the rolls may be timeously made up, and that the commissions may be considered by the Assembly, without any interruption through the making of the rolls. And the General Assembly appoints that any such commissions as may happen to be undelivered before the said first diet, shall only be delivered in the intervals betwixt the after diets, and no ways in presence of the Assembly while actually sitting.

V.

Sess. 3, April 2, 1694, post meridiem.—Act anent the Representation of Presbyteries in the General Assemblies.

The General Assembly doth hereby enact and appoint, that, in all time coming, the representation of the several Presbyteries of this National Church, in its General Assemblies, shall hold proportion to the number of parishes in which there are or ought to be settled ministers within each Presbytery in manner following:—That is to say, that all Presbyteries consisting of twelve parishes, or under that number, shall send two ministers and one ruling elder; and that all Presbyteries consisting of eighteen parishes, or under that number, but above twelve, shall send three ministers and one ruling elder; and that all Presbyteries consisting of twenty-four parishes, or under that number, but above eighteen, shall send four ministers and two ruling elders; and, lastly, that all Presbyteries consisting of above twenty-four parishes shall send five ministers and two ruling elders to the General Assemblies. And it is hereby declared that collegiate kirks, where there used to be two or more ministers, are, so far as concerns the design of this act, understood to be as many distinct parishes.

And farther, the General Assembly hereby enacts, appoints, and declares, that no person shall be admitted members of Assemblies but such as are either ministers or ruling elders.

VI.

Sess. 5, April 4, 1694, post meridiem.—Act for the better regulating Transportations of Ministers, and Appeals thereanent.

The General Assembly, taking to consideration that designs of transportations are become too common to many parishes, and very troublesome to neighbouring congregations, and to church judicatories; therefore, the General Assembly hereby recommends to all parishes which are or may be vacant, that, before they design the calling of any minister already fixed in another congregation, they do first seriously essay and follow other means of providing themselves, if they can be found. As also, the General Assembly hereby recommends to all Presbyteries that they do not concur in any such call or design of transporting a minister from one congregation to another, unless, by due comparing of places and all parties concerned, the disproportion betwixt them and the greater good of the Church be manifestly evident.

And suchlike, when any such design of transportation is pursued, the General Assembly hereby ordains that all parties concerned therein shall debate, with such meekness and brotherly kindness as becometh parts and members of the same body of Christ, designing the good of the whole ; and that they represent their reasons and answers with due perspicuity and all possible brevity, and that they do not needlessly expatiate on things which concern not the true merit of the cause ; and the General Assembly hereby prohibits all lengthening of debates, by replies and duplies, unless the judicatory before whom the debate lies find it necessary for clearing some matter of fact, or because of some new matter that hath occurred, which could not be considered before.

And farther, to prevent unnecessary and contentious appeals in such matters, it is hereby declared and ordained, that, if both the competing parishes be within the bounds of the same Presbytery, in that case the decision and sentence of the Presbytery shall take effect and be obeyed. Or if the parishes be in different Presbyteries, but both Presbyteries within the same Synod, in that case, the decision and sentence of the Synod shall also take effect and be obeyed, seeing these respective judicatories are equally concerned in both parishes, and may be thought fittest to judge both of the disproportion of the parishes, and the suitableness and fitness of the person called for either of the places. Yet always allowing liberty to any person or parish, who think themselves aggrieved, to appeal to superior judicatories, to have redress by taking off the sentence, and censuring the respective judicatory complained of, if they be found to have malversed ; but with this certification, that if any be found unnecessarily to pursue appeals and complaints they shall be severely censured therefor.

VII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the giving in of Process, &c.

The General Assembly, considering how inconvenient it is that processes or other papers should be brought in in presence of the Assembly while it is actually sitting, without any previous acquainting the moderator or clerk therewith ; doth, therefore, hereby enact and appoint, that all processes or other papers be delivered to the clerk in the intervals betwixt the diets of the Assembly's meetings ; declaring, that such as shall be otherwise delivered shall be laid aside for that diet.

VIII.

Sess. 7, April 6, 1694, post meridiem.—Act anent Appeals.

The General Assembly of this National Church, for preventing some mistakes that have happened about appeals, doth hereby appoint, that any appeals made in writing under the appellant's hand, with the reasons thereof, in presence of the judicatory appealed from, shall be extracted by the appellant in due form from the records of the said judicatory, and produced to the judicatory appealed to at the discussing thereof, with a citation of the parties-defenders therein, either apud acta, if they be present when the appeal is made, or a separate citation if they be absent.

And because, by the former practice, parties not instantly giving in their subscribed appeals at the time of the sentence were allowed verbally to appeal, and protest for liberty to give in their subscribed appeals, with the reasons thereof, within the space of ten days thereafter ; and because that before the said space the said judicatory may happen to be up, therefore, it is hereby appointed and ordained, that all parties who have, immediately after sentence, verbally appealed and protested as aforesaid, shall, within the said space of ten days, give in their said subscribed appeals, with the reasons thereof, to the clerk of the judicatory appealed from, notwithstanding it may be up before that time. And, likewise, that they shall, within the same ten days, intimate their said appeal, with the reasons of the same, to the moderator of the said judicatory, and leave an authentic copy thereof with him. Which appeals and reasons are hereby allowed to be registered by the clerk, and summons to be directed by him for citing the parties-defenders thereupon ; and extracts thereof, with the citation foresaid, are appointed to be produced by the appellants, at discussing, to the judicatory appealed to; and the General Assembly hereby appoints the clerk to intimate to the said judicatory, at their first meeting thereafter, that such appeals were given in to him in the intervals of their meetings.

And suchlike, the General Assembly hereby appoints that all defenders in appeals, who insist in discussing thereof, shall produce extracts of the said appeals and reasons to the judicatory appealed to. And, lastly, the General Assembly hereby declares that any appeals or insistings thereanent otherwise made shall be rejected.

IX.

Sess. 9, April 10, 1694, post meridiem.—Act anent Lecturing.

The General Assembly of this National Church, considering how necessary and edifying it is that the people be well acquainted with the Holy Scriptures, doth, therefore, recommend to the several Presbyteries that they endeavour that the ministers within their respective bounds shall, in their exercise of lecturing, read and open up to the people some large and considerable portion of the Word of God; and this to the effect the old custom introduced and established by the Directory may by degrees be recovered.

Sess. 10, April 11, 1694, post meridiem.—Act anent Probationers.

The General Assembly of this National Church hereby appoints that no Presbytery shall admit any person to trial, in order to preaching, but such as are of sound principles, and of a sober, grave, prudent, and pious behaviour, and of whom they have ground to conceive good hopes that they shall be useful and edifying in the Church. And for this end it is hereby appointed, that such persons shall produce, before the Presbyteries who admit them to trial, sufficient testimonials from the ministers of the parishes where they lived, and from the Presbyteries in whose bounds they reside, and also from the Professors of Divinity where they may have attended the profession for some time. And if the said persons come from a place where there is no Presbytery yet constituted, according to the legal establishment, they shall produce testificats from the next adjacent Presbytery, who are to inform themselves concerning their principles and behaviour, and to testify of them accordingly.

And suchlike, the General Assembly hereby appoints, that when such persons are first licensed to be probationers, they shall oblige themselves to preach only within the bounds or by the direction of that Presbytery which did license them; and they shall also, by promise and subscription, engage themselves that they shall be subject to the Presbytery that did license them, or to any other church judicatory, where in providence they shall have their abode, for shorter or longer time, and that they shall follow no divisive course; and this their engagement shall be inserted in the body of their licence. And farther, the General Assembly appoints that when they are removing from that Presbytery which did license them, they shall carry with them an extract of their licence, and a testimonial from the Presbytery of their carriage, which they are to present to the Presbytery to which they come, or at least to some minister therein, before they preach within that bounds; and which minister is not to employ them, except in his own pulpit, until he give notice thereof to the Presbytery at their next meeting, and have their allowance. As also, it is hereby appointed that the said Presbytery to which the said probationers so come, shall require the same subjection and orderly carriage from the said probationers, during their abode in that bounds, to which they were engaged to the Presbytery by which they were licensed; and if they go to any place where a Presbytery is not yet constituted according to the legal establishment, they shall be obliged, before they preach in that bounds, to make their address to the next adjacent and legally erected Presbytery, to whom they shall be subject, and by whom they shall be directed as aforesaid.

And in case the said probationers malverse in doctrine or conversation, they shall be accountable to and censurable by the foresaid respective judicatories, as they shall see cause; and if the said probationers refuse subjection, or prove contumacious to such censure, whether of reproof, suspending the exercise of their licence, or of recalling the said licence, intimation shall be made thereof by the said judicatory to the neighbouring judicatories, or where they shall understand the said probationers are, that so none may employ them to preach, nor their after irregularities be imputed to the Presbyteries that did license them, or where they afterwards had their abode.

It is always hereby expressly provided and declared, that the foresaid probationers are not to be esteemed, by themselves or others, to preach by virtue of any pastoral office, but only to make way for their being called to a pastoral charge.

XI.

Sess. 13, April 13, 1694, post meridiem.—Act approving Overtures anent a Commission of the General Assembly, and Instructions thereto.

This day the following overtures and instructions were read in presence of the General Assembly. The tenor whereof follows:—

“ 1. It is overtured to the General Assembly, that there be a commission appointed by this General Assembly, to meet and take such affairs under their consideration as the General Assembly shall think fit to commit to them.

“ 2. That out of this commission there be a certain number specially appointed by the General Assembly, as a committee to go to the North, with power to the commission to add any more of their number as they think fit.

“ 3. That this commission consist of fifty ministers and twenty-five ruling elders, fifteen to be the quorum, of whom ten to be ministers.

“ 4. That out of this commission, fifteen ministers and five ruling elders, besides these ministers and ruling elders of the North who shall be named in the foresaid commission, be appointed as a committee, as said is, to go to the North; thirteen of which committee to be the quorum, of whom seven to be of these commissioners who are on the south side of Tay, and of these seven five at least to be ministers; and that the said committee have the same power on the North side of Tay as the commission itself.

“ 5. That the General Assembly appoint the first meeting of this commission, and that the meeting be before the members go out of town after the Assembly ends; and that the commission do appoint their own after-meetings, and likewise the time when the said committee should meet in the North.

“ 6. That this commission may receive into ministerial communion such of the late conforming ministers as, having qualified themselves according to law, shall apply personally to them one by one, duly and orderly, and shall acknowledge, engage, and subscribe upon the end of the Confession of Faith as follows, viz. :—

“ ‘ I, _____, do sincerely own and declare the above Confession of Faith, approved by former General Assemblies of this Church, and ratified by law in the year 1690, to be the confession of my faith; and that I own the doctrine therein contained to be the true doctrine, which I will constantly adhere to; as likewise, that I own and acknowledge Presbyterian Church government of this Church, now settled by law, by Kirk-Sessions, Presbyteries, Provincial Synods, and General Assemblies, to be the only government of this Church, and that I will submit thereto, concur therewith, and never endeavour, directly nor indirectly, the prejudice or subversion thereof; and that I shall observe uniformity of worship, and of the administration of all public ordinances within this Church, as the same are at present performed and allowed.’

“ And the commission is to have special regard to their ministerial qualifications. And if any of the said ministers so applying, or any other ministers within this Church, of what persuasion soever, shall be accused or informed against of any scandal, error, supine negligence, or insufficiency, then the said commission shall make inquiry thereinto, cite parties, lead witnesses, take depositions, and do every other thing that may clear the matter of fact informed against them, and report the same, and their diligence therein, to the next General Assembly. Providing always, that if any be accused of gross uncontroverted scandals, and these clearly proven, in that case the commission shall proceed to determine as they find cause: As it is likewise expected of all Presbyteries in this kingdom, that they will use that discretion in their behaviour and government, as that (during the continuance of this commission) in all processes against any ministers, they advise with their respective Synods, or in case of urgent necessity, consult with the said commission. As also, that the General Assembly require all Presbyteries and Synods, in their admitting or receiving any to ministerial communion, that they oblige them to take and subscribe the above acknowledgment: And that during the said time, neither this commission, or any other judicatory of this Church, do take advantage to censure any minister whatsoever, for not having qualified himself in the terms of the Act of Parliament 1693, intituled, ‘ Act for settling the Quiet and Peace of the Church ;’ as likewise, that the said commission and all other judicatories are to take care, that if any shall be found to have maliciously or calumniously accused any minister, they shall be condignly censured, according to the order and practice of this Church. As also, that the Assembly ordain, that none of these ministers who are not presently in charge be received into ministerial communion but by the said commission, or by that Presbytery or Synod of the bounds in which they now reside.

“ 7. That this commission and committee foresaid shall be careful to settle elder-ships and plant ministers in vacant congregations on the North side of Tay, either by ordaining well qualified expectants (who shall be bound at their entry to subscribe the said Confession of Faith, with the acknowledgment above expressed) or by transporting ministers, who shall be called by any vacant congregation therein, (the Presbytery to which they belong being first applied unto,) requiring all ministers who shall be so called to give obedience to these sentences of transportation; with power likewise to the said commission, to receive any appeals that shall be made in any process of transportation of a minister from one Synod to another, (which appeals may be from any such Presbytery to the Synod or commission, which of these two shall first happen to sit,) and to determine finally therein, as they find cause.

“ 8. And seeing there are diverse processes led before several judicatories of this Church against Mr John Hepburn, which, by references thereant, lie before this Assembly, that, therefore, the General Assembly do remit these processes to the consideration of the said commission. And it being informed that several aspersions are laid on the ministers and judicatories of this Church by some persons, as if the said ministers and judicatories had receded from the known principles thereof, in relation to the constitution and government of the Church, contained in the Confession of Faith, though the contrary thereof be evident, not only by the ministers of this Church their owning of and adhering to the said Confession, wherein these principles are contained, but also by the whole course of their ministry; that, therefore, the General Assembly require the said commission to take all due pains to inform, convince, and satisfy any such persons of their mistakes, that they may be reclaimed.

“ 9. That such references and appeals as the General Assembly cannot overtake to determine, and shall be particularly remitted to the said commission by the Assembly, the same shall by the said commission be taken to consideration, cognosed upon, and finally determined as they see cause.

“ 10. That this commission do not take on them to meddle with any thing not contained in their commission; and that in all their actings they be accountable to and censurable by the next ensuing General Assembly.

“ And, lastly, that this commission continue till the second Tuesday of April 1695, or the meeting of the next General Assembly, which soever of these two shall first happen.”

All which overtures and instructions above set down being maturely considered, the General Assembly of this National Church hereby approve thereof; and recommends and appoints according thereto in all points.

XII.

Sess. 13, April 14, 1694, post meridiem.—Act anent Processes against Ministers.

The General Assembly doth seriously recommend to all the Presbyteries of this Church, to proceed in all processes against ministers with all due circumspection and prudence, and that they consult their respective Synods, or, in case of urgent necessity, the Commission of this Assem^y therein. And the General Assembly hereby requires, that no judicatory of this Church do take advantage to censure any minister whatsoever, for not having qualified himself in the terms of the act of Parliament, 1693, intituled, “Act for settling the Quiet and Peace of the Church;” and this act to endure only till the second Tuesday of April 1695, or the meeting of the next General Assembly, which of the two shall first happen.

XIII.

Sess. 14, April 16, 1694, post meridiem.—Act against Profaneness.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into serious consideration how much God is dishonoured by the impiety and profaneness that aboundeth in this nation, in profane and idle swearing, cursing, Sabbath-breaking, neglect and contempt of Gospel ordinances, mocking of piety and religious exercises, fornication, adultery, drunkenness, blasphemy, and other gross and abominable sins and vices; and how much it concerns the honour and glory of God that the same be restrained and suppressed, and that virtue and godliness be encouraged; and also what may be the remedies of these detestable sins; doth, therefore, exhort and require, that ministers, and all who fear God, have on their hearts a deep, humbling, and soul-affecting sense of these evils, and be much in prayer and supplication before God on this account; and that all the ministers of this Church preach plainly and faithfully against these vices, and denounce the threatened judgments of God against such evil-doers, and deal earnestly and much with their consciences, to bring them to a conviction and sense of their sin and danger. As also, the General Assembly appoints that Church judicatories do faithfully exercise Church discipline against all such scandalous offenders, with that gravity, prudence, and meekness of wisdom, as, by the blessing of God, may prove an effectual mean of reforming and recovering the guilty, and of preventing the like sins in others.

And farther, the General Assembly requires that care be taken in the receiving of servants, that they have testimonials of their honest and Christian behaviour; and that the same be required of all others who flit and remove from one parish to another.

And also, the General Assembly appoints, that the ministers and elders in each congregation take care that the worship of God be performed in the several families thereof; and if any family be found which neglecteth this necessary duty, the head of that family is to be gravely, seriously, and earnestly admonished, until he amend his fault; and recommends to ministers and kirk-sessions, that none be ruling elders who make not conscience of this necessary and unquestionable duty; and that no grossly ignorant and scandalous person be admitted to the Lord’s Table.

And likewise the General Assembly recommends to all ministers and kirk-sessions, that they carefully apply to the several magistrates of their bounds that the acts of Parliament against profaneness may be put in execution, and particularly the act of Parliament, June 15, 1693, intituled, “Act against Profaneness.”

And, lastly, the General Assembly ordains that this present act be publicly read and intimated in all churches.

XIV.

Eadem Sessione.—Act appointing some Ministers for the Supply of the North.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into consideration the many vacancies in this Church by north the Water of Tay, and the paucity of ministers in these parts, who are in any condition to give supply without their own congregations; and also having before them the petitions of several noblemen, gentlemen, and magistrates of burghs living in these parts; therefore, the General Assembly have ordained, and hereby ordain, that the Synods besouth Tay shall send north the number of sixteen ministers, according to the proportions after mentioned, for supply of the vacancies within the Synods of Angus and Mearns, Aberdeen, Murray, Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness: That is to say, that there be two sent to supply the vacancies of Angus and Mearns, including the kirk of Rattray; four to supply the vacancies within the town and province of Aberdeen; six to supply the vacancies within the Synod of Murray; and four to supply the vacancies within the Synods of Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness: And ordains that the Synods of Fife, Perth, Lothian, Merse and Teviotdale, Glasgow, Galloway and Dumfries, do send to the north for that effect the ministers after named, viz. from the Synod of Fife, Mr Thomas Russell at Kennoway, and Mr James Hadow at Coupar; from the Synod of Lothian, Mr John Frazer at Glencorss, Mr Donald Campbell at the Queensferry, Mr Robert Livingstoun at Liberton, in the Presbytery of Biggar, and Mr Robert Colvill at Baro; from the Synod of Perth any one of their number to supply the congregation of Rattray; from the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale, Mr George Guthry at Oxnam, and Mr John Dysart at Langton; from the Synod of Glasgow, Mr James Brisbane at Kilmalcolm, Mr Andrew Tait at Carmunnock, Mr John Glasgow at Kilbirnie, Mr Duncan Campbell at Roseneath, (or any other for him having the Irish tongue, whom the Presbytery of Dumbarton shall appoint,) and Mr Andrew Rogers at Galston; from the Synod of Galloway, Mr John Murdoch at Crossmichael; and from the Synod of Dumfries, Mr William Somervell at Traquair, in all sixteen, who are hereby ordained to repair to the Commission of this General Assembly, to meet at Edinburgh against the eighteenth day of April instant, and receive directions from the said Commission, to go to such particular Synods in the north as it shall direct, and thereafter to be advised by the ministers, residing in these respective Synods, to what particular congregations they shall apply themselves. And likewise, the General Assembly ordains that the said ministers make all diligence (with the Lord's assistance) to be at the respective places to which they are to be sent against the first Sabbath of June next, where they are to continue for the space of three months; at which time the General Assembly doth hereby ordain the above written Synods of the south to send a new supply to the north, of as many ministers more, (if need require,) to continue for the second quarter; and so forth quarterly, ay and until the sitting of the next General Assembly; and that according to the proportion underwritten, to wit, from the Synod of Fife, three; from the Synod of Perth, one; from the Synod of Lothian, four; from the Synod of Merse, two; from the Synod of Glasgow, four; from that of Galloway, one; and from that of Dumfries, one. But, with this provision, that, according as the vacancies in the north shall be filled, and the necessity of supplies grow less, the remotest of the said Synods shall be first eased. And farther, because the Synod of Glasgow, Galloway, and Dumfries, are not to meet in their respective Provincial Assemblies before the expiring of the first quarter of the above appointed time; therefore, the General Assembly doth now nominate and appoint the ministers after named to be sent north, in manner after mentioned, from these three Synods, for the second quarter, viz. from the Synod of Glasgow, Mr John Laury at Auchinleck, Mr Archibald Hamilton at Cambuslang, Mr Alexander King at Bonhil, and Mr David Meldrum, preacher: from the Synod of Galloway, Mr Andrew Ewart at Kells; and from the Synod of Dumfries, Mr George Boyd at Glencairn.

And the General Assembly recommends to the respective Presbyteries to take care to supply the kirks of these ministers; and also of such as are upon the Commission to meet at Edinburgh, and of these that are upon the committee that is to go to the north during their absence, and that in a more punctual way than other vacancies.

XV.

Eadem Sessione.—Recommendation anent Vacant Stipends.

The General Assembly, finding it necessary for support and propagation of the work of the Gospel, to send a considerable number of ministers from the remotest parts of this kingdom to the Synods in the north, which doth require a necessary expense; and it being found in law, that such as so serve vacant congregations merit and ought to be maintained out of the stipend during the time that they serve, which certainly is the most proper and preferable pious use a stipend can be applied to; therefore, the General Assembly doth humbly desire their Majesties' High Commissioner, that he would, in the Assembly's name, apply to their Majesties for a general recommendation to the Lords of Privy Council, Lords of Treasury and Exchequer, Lords of Session, and other judges whatsoever, in favour of such as shall, by order foresaid, serve vacant congregations, that they may have access for maintenance out of the vacant stipends during the time they serve.

XVI.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Intrusion upon Kirks.

The General Assembly, being informed that there are divers churches intruded upon by several persons in a most illegal and unwarrantable manner, doth, therefore, recommend to the Commission of this Assembly, which is to meet at Edinburgh, and to the committee for the North respective, to make inquiry thereinto, and to apply to the Lords of Privy Council to declare the intrusion; to the effect the kirks intruded into may be orderly planted with their Lordships' assistance.

XVII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Exercise and Addition, Privy Censures, and Bursars of Theology.

The General Assembly doth earnestly recommend to the several Presbyteries within this Church to set up the use of exercise and addition; as also, that of privy censures, conform to the ancient practice of this Church; and appoints their diligence therein to be recorded in their respective registers. And suchlike the General Assembly hereby recommends to the several Presbyteries, that they be careful to keep and maintain bursars of theology, conform to the ancient practice and the acts of former General Assemblies made thereanent.

XVIII.

Sess. 15 et ult. April 17, 1694, post meridiem.—Commission of the General Assembly for some Commissioners to meet at Edinburgh.

And suchlike, the General Assembly fully empowers and authorises the said commissioners, and their quorum foresaid, to consider, cognosce, and finally determine, as they shall see cause, in all references, appeals, and other matters, that have been or shall be particularly remitted to them for that effect, by any act or order of this Assembly, all which are holden as herein expressed; and specially to proceed and cognosce in every thing contained in and conform to the overtures and instructions thereanent, approven by the General Assembly upon the thirteenth day of April instant, intituled "Overtures anent a Commission of the General Assembly, and Instructions thereto," as full and freely as if the same were in these presents at full length inserted and set down; likeas, the General Assembly hereby prohibits the said commissioners to meddle in any other matter not herein contained; declaring also, that in and for all their actings the said commissioners shall be accountable to and censurable by the next General Assembly of this Church. And, lastly, the General Assembly hereby declares that this commission shall continue till the second Tuesday of April 1695 years, or the next meeting of the General Assembly, which of these two shall first happen.

XIX.

Eadem Sessione.—Commission of the General Assembly to a Committee for the North Side of Tay.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into consideration how requisite it is, in the present juncture, that there be a committee appointed for the North side of Tay, for such affairs as the Assembly sees fit to commit thereto; doth, therefore, by these presents, nominate and appoint Mr William Crichton, minister at Falkirk, &c. &c.; together also with any others that shall be added to them by the said commission which is to meet at Edinburgh, out of their own number, to be a committee of this General Assembly for the North side of Tay, to the effect after expressed; with full power and commission to the said persons or their quorum, which is hereby declared to be any thirteen of the said committee, of whom shall be of the commissioners who are on the South side of Tay, and of these seven five at least to be ministers, to meet and convene at such time and place as the foresaid other commission, which is to meet at Edinburgh, shall appoint, for their first meeting; with power to the said committee and their quorum foresaid to appoint their own after diets and places of meeting as they shall see convenient; as also to chuse their own moderator: And suchlike, the General Assembly hereby fully empowers and authorises the said committee, and quorum thereof aforesaid, to consider, cognosce, and finally determine, in all references, appeals, and other matters, that have been or shall be particularly remitted to them for that effect, by any act or order of this Assembly, all which are holden as herein expressed; and specially to proceed and cognosce in every thing contained in and conform to the overtures and instructions thereanent, approven by this Assembly upon the thirteenth day of April instant, intituled, "Overtures anent a Commission of the General Assembly and Instructions thereto," as fully and freely as if the same were, in these presents, at full length inserted and set down; likeas, the General Assembly hereby prohibits the said committee to meddle in any other matter not herein contained; declaring also, that in and for all their actings the said committee shall be accountable to and censurable by the next ensuing General Assembly of this Church. And, lastly, the General Assembly hereby declares that this commission shall continue till the second Tuesday of April 1695 years, or the meeting of the General Assembly, which of these two shall first happen.

XX.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the Irish Psalms.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into consideration that there is a complete paraphrase of the whole Psalms in Irish metre, approven and emitted by the Synod of Argyle, who understand the Irish language, conform to an act of the General Assembly, 1690, together with a translation of the Shorter Catechism of this Church in Irish, bound with the said Psalms in one volume; and the General Assembly, understanding that in some parts of this National Church, where preaching and prayer are used in Irish, the Psalms are sung at the same diet in a different language, whereby an uniformity in the worship of God is marred, and many of the people deprived of the benefit of praising God in a known tongue: Therefore, as the General Assembly doth hereby appoint that this incongruous way of worshipping God shall be hereafter forborne, so they do recommend to all congregations and families who worship God in the Irish language to make use of the said paraphrase therein; and also to make use of the foresaid translation of the Shorter Catechism, as an uniform mean of catechising the people.

XXI.

Eadem Sessione.—Act against fixing in the Lowlands of Preachers who have the Irish Language.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into consideration that the Highlands of Scotland are deprived of many preachers who have the Irish language, contrary to divers acts of former General Assemblies, which is occasioned, in a great part, by the fixing of such as have the Irish language in congregations within the Lowlands: Therefore, the General Assembly doth hereby seriously recommend to all Presbyteries, that they fix no such preachers or intrants as have the Irish language in any congregations within the Lowlands of Scotland, without the consent of, and a testimonial from the Presbyteries in the Highlands where they formerly resided; and this act to continue till such time as the Highlands shall be competently provided with ministers.

The next General Assembly of this National Church is to be held at Edinburgh the first Thursday of April 1695 years.

The Assembly being closed, the members were dismissed with prayer, and singing of the 122d Psalm, and pronouncing of the blessing.

III.

Eadem Sessione.—Act appointing Mr John Bannatyne to officiate as Clerk till Friday next.

The General Assembly, considering that through the decease of Mr Robert Park, advocate, their clerk's place is now become vacant; therefore, they, by an unanimous vote, made choice of Mr John Bannatyne, minister of the Gospel at Lanark, and one of their own number, to officiate as clerk until Friday next.

The General Assembly appoints to-morrow, being Wednesday, betwixt nine and twelve o'clock in the forenoon, to be set apart by the members of this Assembly for public prayer to the Almighty God, for his countenancing and directing this Assembly in the matters that shall come before them, and recommends to all the said members to meet in the Assembly-House timeously for that effect.

V.

Sess. 2, December 18, 1695, ante meridiem.—Appointment of another Diet for Prayer.

The General Assembly being met, this diet was spent in prayer, according to the appointment made yesterday thereanent; and, further, it was agreed to that the members of this Assembly should meet again to-morrow for public prayer; and, accordingly, it was recommended to all the members to meet in the Assembly-House to-morrow, immediately after sermon, for the effect foresaid.

VI.

Sess. 3, December 19, 1695, ante meridiem.—A Diet spent in Prayer.

VII.

Sess. 4, December 20, 1695, ante meridiem.—The recording of his Majesty's Commission to John Lord Carmichael, for representing his Majesty in this General Assembly, with the Commissioner's and Moderator's Speeches.

This day, the General Assembly of this National Church being met, and Mr Patrick Simson chosen Moderator, and Mr John Bannatyne clerk, there was produced to them by a noble Lord, John Lord Carmichael, his Majesty's Commission under the Great Seal of the kingdom of Scotland, nominating and appointing him to be his Majesty's High Commissioner and representative in this National Assembly, which Commission was publicly read with all due honour and respect; and the General Assembly appointed, and hereby appoints, the said Commission to be registered in the records of the General Assembly, therein to remain, ad futuram rei memoriam, the tenor whereof follows:—"GULIELMUS," &c.

After reading of which commission, Mr Patrick Simson, moderator, did, in the Assembly's name, represent to his Grace how great a mercy it was to this Church and kingdom, that his Majesty had called and countenanced this National Assembly with his authority, and honoured it with a representative of his royal person, who, by his former prudent conduct in two former General Assemblies, hath rendered himself most acceptable to this Assembly to represent his Majesty therein.

Whereupon his Grace, his Majesty's High Commissioner, delivered himself as follows:—Right Reverend, and you the remanent members of this Assembly, you are now met in this Assembly conform to the King's appointment; and his Majesty having honoured me to be his Commissioner, I am warranted to give you all assurance of his Majesty's resolution to maintain Presbyterian government in this Church, and to evidence his fatherly care for its welfare. His Majesty expects that at this time you will chiefly make it your work to regulate matters of order and discipline amongst yourselves. It is the King's great regret that there are so many churches vacant within this kingdom, which obviously suggests that it would be your best work, as indeed it would be most acceptable to his Majesty, that you should apply yourselves principally to the restoring the Gospel to such churches; and, in doing of this, you may be very assured of his Majesty's countenance and authority. It is also evidently convenient, and likewise expected, that if good men apply to you to be assumed, you will receive their applications with all charity and moderation.

I hope the good Spirit of God shall direct you in these matters to the best advantage; only I recommend to you to mind your business closely, without heats and unnecessary contentions, and to make all the dispatch you can to bring this Assembly to an happy issue, both for the Church's good and his Majesty's satisfaction.

VIII.

Sess. 5, December 23, 1695, post meridiem.—Act anent Commissions to the General Assembly.

The General Assembly hereby recommends it to the several Presbyteries of this National Church to keep an uniform method, as near as may be, in granting commissions to the members of the General Assembly, and not to insert particular instructions in their commissions; and, for the better attaining the end foresaid, the General Assembly gives the form after inserted for a directory:—

At the day of years. The which day the Presbytery of did, and hereby do, nominate and appoint Mr minister at Mr minister at and ruling elders, their commissioners to the next General Assembly of this Church, indicted to meet at the day of next to come, or when or where it shall happen to sit; willing them to repair thereto, and to attend all the diets of the same, and there to consult, vote, and determine, in all matters that come before them, to the glory of God and the good of his Church, according to the Word of God, the Confession of Faith, and agreeable to the constitutions of this Church, as they will be answerable; and that they report their diligence therein at their return therefrom. Extracted by me.

IX.

Sess. 6, December 24, 1695, post meridiem.—Act anent Trafficking Priests, and the Education of young Noblemen, Gentlemen, and others, Children of Popish Parents.

The General Assembly recommends to all Provincial Synods, Presbyteries, and Kirk-Sessions within this National Church, to take particular notice of trafficking Papists, and appoints lists to be taken up of their names and given to the Privy Council, with an address for executing the laws against them; and the General Assembly recommends to Presbyteries to advert to the education of young noblemen, gentlemen, and others, children of Popish parents, and to put the 7th act of the General Assembly, 1690, thereanent, in execution.

X.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Quakers.

The General Assembly of this National Church, for prevention of the growth of these abominable heresies of the Quakers, do recommend to all Provincial Synods, Presbyteries, Ministers, and Kirk-Sessions, to use all proper means for reclaiming them; and in case of their obstinacy, to proceed against them with the censures of the Church, and especially against the ringleaders, that are traffickers for seducing of others.

XI.

Sess. 7, December 25, 1695, post meridiem.—An Overture and Act anent Novations.

The General Assembly of this National Church, having heard an overture brought in from the Committee for Overtures, that no new acts relating to the doctrine, worship, or government of this Church, be made until they be first transmitted to the several Presbyteries of this National Church; which, being considered, the General Assembly recommends it to the members of this Assembly to discourse upon the said overture with their respective Presbyteries, that the next General Assembly may be the more ripe to determine anent the conveniency thereof; and, in the mean time, the General Assembly hereby revives the acts of the former Assemblies made thereanent, and particularly the 13th act of the Assembly 1639, and 14th act of the Assembly 1641.

XII.

Sess. 12, December 31, 1695, post meridiem.—Act approving Overtures anent a more expedite and certain way of planting the North with fixed Ministers.

The General Assembly of this National Church, having considered the overtures underwritten, which were at two several diets publicly read over in open Assembly, and examined, and any members that desired were allowed to have doubles thereof, to the effect they might be perused by them, and intimation was made to give in their objections, if they had any, to a committee appointed for that end; and, last of all, upon the day and date hereof the said overtures were again a third time publicly read in presence of the General Assembly, as also the additional overtures annexed thereto, the tenor of both which follows:—

“ 1. That, for the more expedite planting of ministers on the North side of the Water of Tay, the Assembly nominate a commission of some of the most experienced ministers and elders to meet at Edinburgh, and there to sit monthly, from time to time, until there shall be settled on the said North side of Tay twenty-two ministers of some considerable standing and experience, now belonging to the Presbyteries on the South side of the said Water.

“ 2. That when any of the parishioners of the said North shall call any of the following ministers, they may, without sending any commissioner to prosecute the same, send the said call approven and concurred with by the Presbytery of the bounds, to the moderator of the said commission, who, for greater expedition, shall cause double the call and attest the copy, and send the same with the reasons of the desired transportation, in a letter to the moderator of that Presbytery to whom the minister called doth belong.

“ 3. That the moderator of the said Presbytery, upon the receipt of the said letter, shall be obliged to transmit the said call, with the reasons thereof, to the minister called, and shall cause summon the said minister and the parish he belongs to, the next Sabbath, in the ordinary way, to appear before the said Presbytery, and answer the call and reasons; and if the ordinary time of the meeting of the said Presbytery shall fall not to be within eleven days, then the moderator shall call a Presbytery pro re nata against that time.”

4. That the Presbytery at their said meeting shall, without any delay, consider and determine the process of the said call thus brought before them, and if they shall not at the same time transport the minister called to the said parish he is called unto, they be obliged to transmit the said call, reasons and answers, and the Presbytery's determination, to the said commission, against the first ensuing diet thereof; providing there intervene ten days betwixt and the said diet, and shall summon the said minister called, and his parish, to appear before the said commission, to answer finally thereunto.

5. That the said commission, at Edinburgh, do thereupon without any delay, consider and determine the said process, and that whether the said minister and his parish thus summoned do appear or not.

6. That when the said commission or Presbytery pass a sentence of transportation, it shall be obeyed by the minister transported, against the time limited in the act of transportation, under the pain of suspension, which he is to lie under until he obey, and which censure the Assembly doth require the said commission to inflict upon him who doth disobey.

7. That there be forty-four ministers of some considerable experience, fit to be transported to the North, nominated by this Assembly, in manner following, of which the one-half shall, upon calls as above, be transported by virtue of this act.

8. 9. That out of these Presbyteries who furnish two, one of the said two shall be transported, and but one; and so proportionally where the Presbytery furnishes more, making up of all, twenty-two to be actually transported.

10. That the foresaid number of forty-four, out of which only twenty-two are to be transported, shall be furnished by the following Presbyteries, viz., by the Presbytery of Chirside two, one of which is to be actually transported; by the Presbytery of Earlston two, one of which is to be actually transported; by the Presbytery of Jedburgh two; by Melrose or Selkirk two; by Dunbar two; by Dalkeith none, having already given one; by Linlithgow two, one of which is to be transported; by Peebles two, one of which is to be transported; by Biggar two, one of which is to be transported; by Dumfries two, one of which is to be transported; by Lochmaben two, one of which is to be transported; by Kirkcudbright two, one of which is to be transported, having given one already; by Ayr two, one of which is to be transported, having given one already; by Irvine two, one of which is to be transported, having given one already; by Hamilton two, one of which is to be transported; by Lanark two, one of which is to be transported; by Glasgow two, one of which is to be transported, having given one already; by Paisley two, one of which is to be transported; by Dumbarton two, one of which is to be transported; by Cupar two, one of which is to be transported; by Kirkaldy two, one of which is to be transported; by Dunfermline two, one of which is to be transported; all which make up the above-named number, out of which the half is to be transported to the North, after the way and manner above expressed.

11. That of these forty-four out of the Presbyteries above named, the half of them be appointed to go North, by way of mission to the several provinces they shall be allotted unto, so as to be there against the first Sabbath of March next, and to stay there three months, exercising their ministry according to the appointment of the Presbyteries unto which they come; and the other half to go North, after the same manner, and to stay the same length of time, against the first Sabbath of June next, and that these of them who have not been in the North already go first.

12. That the brethren from the North do meet among themselves, and proportion these twenty-two among the several provinces of Angus and Mearns, (comprehending Rattray parish,) Aberdeen, Moray, and Caithness, and that they concert among themselves out of which of the above written Presbyteries they will have their quotas, and that they do this before the nomination of the persons to be transported.

15. That the General Assembly declare, that these parishes thus to be vacated by transportation, when they shall after come to be settled with another minister, that the said minister shall be declared not transportable from that parish without their consent, and unless he have unsupportable grievances therein.

16. That the Assembly name two or three out of each Synod on the South side of Tay, to meet with the brethren of the North, to concert the names of the above forty-four ministers, and to present the same to the Assembly, to be by them nominated and appointed.

Additional Overtures for a more Expedite Planting the North.

1. It is overtured that the Presbytery of Irvine be exempted from any being nominated to be transported, but not excused from quarterly supplies.

2. That besides the brother of the Presbytery of Dalkeith who is transported already, they send one to the North in mission.

3. That the Presbytery of Dumfries, because of the particular circumstances they are in, have the Presbyteries of Penpont and Middlebie to help them, and that two fit persons be named out of these Presbyteries, and not above one out of any one Presbytery of the three.

4. That in the nomination of the commission one at least out of every Presbytery be named, who send two of the forty-four above mentioned.

5. That the suspension to be inflicted, in the case above expressed, be taken off by the Synod of the bounds, or next Assembly, if they find insuperable difficulties arising in the minister transported his obeying the sentence; and providing they immediately nominate another fit person who shall effectually supply the other's room.

6. That out of St Andrews Presbytery two be named and added to the number.

7. That all these Overtures are condeseended to only for the present exigent, and that this shall be no precedent for after times, but in case there be any transportations pursued afterward, that they shall proceed in the ordinary course, and not otherwise.

All these above-written Overtures, both principal and additional, being maturely considered, the General Assembly of this National Church, by an unanimous vote, did, and hereby do, approve the same, and recommends and appoints according thereto in all points.

XIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act ament Testimonials.

The General Assembly appoints all probationers who apply to Presbyteries, to bring not only sufficient testimonials, but also a letter from a known person to the Presbytery, and that the Presbytery write to them from whom the testimonials come, (if need be,) to know the verity thereof.

XIV.

Sess. 16, January 3, 1696, ante meridiem.—Act ament the Supply of Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into their serious consideration the many vacant churches, and great desolations that are in the bounds of Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness, do therefore appoint, that there be sent in mission to the said bounds of Sutherland, Ross, and Caithness, the ministers and probationers after mentioned, in manner and to the effect under expressed, viz., Mr Robert Duncanson, minister, from the Provincial Synod of Argyle, who is declared already transportable, and upon a call to be transported, in case the commission shall see cause, to whom that matter is hereby referred; as also, that such as have the Irish language in Lowland congregations be sent in mission, and, upon calls, transported by the commission, and that in the same way that other ministers are appointed to be transported to the North; and, farther, that Messrs Thomas and Hector Frasers, probationers, (who were formerly appointed,) go there, and Mr Hugh Duff be sent to that Presbytery to pass his trials, in order to be settled there, and such other probationers that have the Irish language as the Synod of Argyle can spare.

The General Assembly of this National Church, having heard the report of a committee of their own number, appointed to revise, consider, and examine the actings and proceedings of the Commission for Visitations on the North side of Tay, appointed by the General Assembly, 1690, beginning the 14th day of November 1690, and ending the 30th of October 1691 years, inclusive of both days; as also, the actings and proceedings of the commissioners appointed by the General Assembly, 1694, to meet at Edinburgh, beginning the 18th April 1694, and ending the 5th day of April 1695, inclusive of both days; and, after serious and mature consideration thereof, finding that the whole acts, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said commissioners, contained in the register thereof, do evidence much wisdom, diligence, vigilancy, and commendable zeal; and that the said commissioners have orderly and formally proceeded in every thing according to their commissions and instructions; therefore, this General Assembly did, and hereby do, unanimously ratify and approve the said whole acts, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said commissioners appointed by the said General Assemblies, 1690 and 1694 years.

XVII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act approving the Proceedings of the Committee for the North, appointed by the General Assembly, 1694.

The General Assembly of this National Church, having heard the report of a committee of their own number, appointed to revise, consider, and examine the actings and proceedings of the committee of the North, appointed by the General Assembly held at Edinburgh in the year 1694, beginning the 14th day of June, and ending the 29th day of August next thereafter; and, after serious and mature consideration thereof, finding that the whole acts, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said committee, contained in the register thereof, subscribed by Mr William Maekie, clerk thereto, do evidence much wisdom, prudence, diligence, vigilancy, and commendable zeal, and that the said committee hath orderly and formally proceeded in every thing according to their commission and instructions; therefore, this General Assembly, by an unanimous vote, did, and hereby do, ratify and approve the said whole acts, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said committee appointed for the North, contained in the said register.

XVIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act recommending to Ministers to Preach Catechetical Doctrine.

The General Assembly of this National Church, considering how necessary and edifying it is that the people be well acquainted with the fundamental principles of the Christian religion, do, therefore, recommend to the care of ministers, that besides their ordinary work of catechizing, they also preach catechetical doctrine, at such times, and in such manner, as they shall find most conducive for the edification of their flocks.

XIX.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Recommendations for Charity.

The General Assembly appoints that no minister, kirk-sessions, or elders, give recommendations for charity to any without the bounds of their own parishes, nor Presbyteries without the bounds of their Presbyteries, nor Provincial Synods without their bounds; and that any recommendations so to be given within their respective bounds shall be for a definite time.

XX.

Eadem Sessione.—Commission of the General Assembly for some Commissioners to meet at Edinburgh.

The General Assembly of this National Church, considering the many vacant churches on the North side of Tay, and having laid down a way for a more expeditious planting of ministers therein, doth, therefore, by these presents, nominate and appoint Messrs John Dysert, minister of the Gospel at Coldingham, &c. &c., to be commissioners of the General Assembly to the effect after expressed, with full power and commission to the said persons, or their quorum, which is hereby declared to be any fifteen of the said commissioners, whereof nine are always to be ministers, to meet and convene within the Assembly-House at Edinburgh, upon the first Tuesday after the dissolution of this General Assembly, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, and afterwards to meet the first Wednesday of every month, and oftener as they shall see needful, during the continuance of this commission; and the General Assembly requires all the members of this commission to attend punctually the first meeting thereof, and all the quarterly meetings thereafter, and which commissioners, at their first and quarterly meetings, are to take into their consideration the particular affairs recommended to them by the General Assembly, and the monthly and quarterly meetings to consider the transportations of the twenty-two ministers from the South to the North, with power also to the said commissioners to choose their own moderator and clerk. And suchlike, the General Assembly fully empowers and authorises the said commissioners, and their quorum foresaid, to consider, cognosce, and finally determine, as they shall see cause, in all references, appeals, and other matters, that have been or shall be particularly remitted to them for that effect, by any act or order of this Assembly; all which are holden as herein expressed. And, finally, to proceed and cognosce in every thing contained in, and conform to the overtures and instructions thereanent, approved by this General Assembly upon the last day of December last, entitled, "Act approving Overtures anent a more expeditious and certain way for Planting the North with fixed Ministers," as fully and freely as if the same were in these presents at full length inserted and set down. This commission is also to correspond with the State for appointing fasts and thanksgivings as occasion falls out, and to specify the causes thereof. Likeas, the General Assembly hereby prohibit the said commissioners to meddle in any other matter than what is herein contained; declaring also, that in and for all their actings the said commissioners shall be accountable to and censurable by the next ensuing General Assembly of this Church; and, lastly, the General Assembly hereby declares that this commission shall continue till the meeting of the next General Assembly of this National Church.

XXI.

Sess. 18, January 4, 1696, ante meridiem.—Act against the Atheistical Opinions of the Deists, and for establishing the Confession of Faith.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into their serious consideration, that, in many places, not a few, of Atheistical principles, who go under the name of Deists, and for the time refuse the odious character of Atheist, maintain and disseminate pernicious principles tending to Scepticism and Atheism; and that there is no small ground to fear the spreading of that gangrene through this land, where (as it is credibly informed) there are not wanting active factors for Satan, and his kingdom of darkness, who make it their great business to overturn and ridicule true and pure religion, Do, therefore, seriously recommend to, and enjoin the ministers of the Gospel, where there is any apparent hazard of such a contagion, to warn and guard the Lord's people against that infernal course, and to detect the abominableness of the tenets of those men, such as the denying of all revealed religion, the grand mysteries of the Gospel, viz. The doctrine of the Trinity—the incarnation of the Messiah—his satisfaction to justice—salvation through Him—justification by His imputed righteousness to them who believe on His name—the resurrection of the dead—and, in a word, the certainty and authority of Scripture revelation; as also, their asserting that there must be a mathematical evidence for each purpose, before we can be obliged to assent to any proposition thereanent, and that natural light is sufficient to salvation. It is also hereby required that authors, who treat well of those subjects, be named to the people, in order to perusal; as likewise, that ministers deal seriously with the seduced, and such as are mostly in hazard to be perverted; but especially with seducers and imposters, that, after sufficient instruction and admonition, these be proceeded against as scandalous and heretical apostates used to be; and, in general, the Assembly doth discharge all ministers, and other members of this Church, to publish or vent, either by speaking, writing, printing, teaching, or preaching any doctrine, tenet, or opinion contrary unto, or inconsistent with, the Confession of Faith of this Church, or any article, part, or proposition therein; and appoints that all such as contravene this act, or any part thereof, be censured by the Church according to their demerit.

XXII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Students.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the danger that ariseth to the Church and to the souls of people, and the contempt that may be brought on the ministry, by licensing or ordaining young men, without sufficient proof of their piety, gravity, prudence, sobriety, orthodoxy, and learning, do, therefore, appoint, that strict inquiry be made into all these qualifications of such as are offered to Presbyteries, in order to passing their trials, and that such be rejected who have not sufficient testimonials from universities of their good behaviour and proficiency; (and that the usual school-degrees be inquired after, though not made a necessary qualification,) or, at least, should not be found to have retrieved their lost time at schools by after diligence; as also, that such as are esteemed to be vain, or imprudent, or proud, or worldly-minded, by the generality of sober intelligent persons, who converse with them, shall be kept back from that sacred work.

In order to the education of young men for the ministry, it is recommended to Professors in Divinity, that they require of such students as they employ in any exercises, testimonials from universities where they have studied, and places where they have lived.

The General Assembly, considering how necessary it is that they who declare the oracles of God to others should themselves understand them in the original languages, do require that none be licensed to preach, or ordained to the ministry, unless they give good proof of their understanding the Greek and Hebrew; and the General Assembly recommendeth to all candidates for the ministry to study also the other oriental languages, especially the Chaldaic and Syriac, so far as they can.

It is also recommended that they be tried not only in the great controversies of religion, but also in the controversies concerning the government and discipline of the Church.

XXIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Irregularities.

The General Assembly do seriously recommend it to all Synods and Presbyteries, that they advert to the many irregularities committed by vagrant unfixed ministers, many of whom are lying under ecclesiastical censures, to the great scandal and hinderance of the Gospel, and tending to the rending of churches and congregations; and prudently to proceed to take such course anent them as the circumstances of the case and time requires; and appoints Presbyteries, where any great difficulty occurs, in cases of this nature, to consult their Synods, or the commission appointed by this Assembly thereanent, before they proceed to any further censure.

XXIV.

The General Assembly's Letter to his Majesty.

May it please your Majesty,

As we do adore the infinite goodness and mercy of God towards Britain and Ireland, in setting your Majesty King over us, and in working by you so great deliverance for us; so we do from our hearts bless God, for mercifully preserving your sacred person, in midst of so many dangers as you have been exposed to by sea and land, and in granting such success to your arms the last campaign.

We do also, with humble gratitude, acknowledge your Majesty's many royal favours to this Church, and that not only under the shadow of your protection, and with the countenance of your Majesty's authority and laws, we may peaceably meet together in a National Assembly; but that your Majesty hath honoured us, to send as your commissioner to represent your Majesty's royal person among us, the Lord Carnichael, a person of known and approved integrity and loyalty to your Majesty, and who hath been formerly, and still, is most acceptable to us all.

We do humbly beg and confidently hope, your Majesty, as appointed of God to be the nursing father of his Church, will continue your royal favour and protection to us, and command the vigorous execution of your good laws, against all ungodliness and unrighteousness, that our land may be thoroughly reformed from vice, and purged of whatsoever doth offend.

We do sincerely profess, that next to our duty to God and our Lord Jesus Christ, it is our desire to approve ourselves dutiful subjects to your Majesty, and it shall be our endeavour, by doctrine and example, in our several capacities to promote your Majesty's honour and service in the Lord among the people.

That Almighty God may bless and long preserve your royal person, direct and prosper your councils and government, grant you always dutiful and loyal subjects, faithful and victorious armies and navies, give you the hearts of your subjects and necks of your enemies, that religion and righteousness may flourish in your days, that you may be a repairer of the breaches and builder of the house of God, and the restorer of the peace and liberty of Europe, is, and shall be, the incessant prayer of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

XXV.

Eadem Sessione.—Act continuing the Supplies of Preaching for the North, conform to the Act of the General Assembly, 1694.

The General Assembly, considering that the vacancies on the North side of the river of Tay have increased greatly since the sitting of the last General Assembly; as also, the paucity of ministers in these parts, and having before them several petitions from noblemen, gentlemen, burgesses, and others, living in these parts, craving that the Assembly would increase the supply of these bounds, and promising that they should give all due encouragement to such as the Lord, by this Assembly, shall be pleased to direct to them; therefore, the General Assembly have ordained, and hereby ordains, the ordinary supplies for the North to continue till the next General Assembly, conform to the 14th Act of the last General Assembly, entitled, "Act appointing some Ministers for the Supply of the North;" and recommends to Presbyteries and Synods, that the same be made effectual, these named, and formerly appointed to be sent from the several Presbyteries, by way of mission, being always sustained as a part of the said supply; and, lastly, the General Assembly exempts the province of Perth, in their present circumstances, from all supplies to the North.

XXVI.

Eadem Sessione.—Act Declaring the Appeals made to this Assembly from the Committee of the Assembly, 1694, for the North, to be fallen from and null.

The General Assembly, considering that they had, upon the second day of January instant, caused call these persons who had appealed from, protested against, and declined the committee appointed for the North by the late General Assembly, to have compeared before the last day of this Assembly, to prosecute their said appeals and protestations, and answer for their declinaturs, with certification if they compeared not, to prosecute the same before that time, their said appeals and protestations should be declared to be fallen from, void and null. And now finding that the said persons have not compeared before this Assembly for the effect foresaid: Therefore, the General Assembly do hereby declare all the said appeals to be deserted, fallen from, void, and null, to all intents and purposes, because they have not been insisted in before this Assembly.

XXVII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act and Sentence of Suspension against Mr John Hepburn.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into their serious consideration the references made to them concerning Mr John Hepburn, minister, and having often caused call the said Mr John to have compeared before this Assembly, conform to the citation given him thereanent, to answer to these things wherewith he is charged, but he not compearing, the General Assembly, upon the 25th day of December last, appointed a committee of their own number to consider the whole process led against him, and make report; which committee did, upon the 3d day of January instant, bring in some overtures thereanent, and the said report, together with an extract of the process and depositions of witnesses led against him; as also his own confession being considered, the General Assembly found that several articles were sufficiently proven against him, and therefore were of the judgment, that though the said Mr John Hepburn deserved the highest censure of the Church, yet to manifest all tenderness and willingness to reclaim him, they did appoint that in case Mr John Hepburn would oblige himself under his hand, to walk orderly in all time coming, and embrace a call when offered to him, and oblige himself to attend the charge he should be fixed to, and submit himself to the respective judicatories of this Church, and forbear after this to preach or exercise any other part of his ministry without the consent of the said judicatories, in that case the Assembly declared they should let all processes led against him fall; but in case he either appeared not before this Assembly, or should not oblige himself as aforesaid, then the General Assembly appointed him to be suspended from the office of the ministry, with certification that he should be deposed by the Synod of Dumfries, if he should be found to contravene the said act of suspension, with which sentence the said Synod shall acquaint all other Presbyteries within this National Church. Likeas, in case the said Mr John shall be deposed, the General Assembly did appoint that the whole process led against him shall be printed, that all men may see the moderation and justice of the several judicatories that had occasion to process him; and in case that the Assembly should suspend him, and he submit thereunto, that it should be free for the said Synod or Presbytery of Dumfries to take off the said sentence upon his application and desire of the same, and embracing the terms above specified; and, upon the day and date hereof, the said Mr John Hepburn being again thrice publicly called at the most patent door of the church where the Assembly was sitting, and not compearing, the General Assembly, being well and ripely advised with the whole premises, did, and hereby do, actually suspend the said Mr John Hepburn from the exercise of his ministry, and appoints these presents to be intimated by the minister who is to preach in the New Church of Edinburgh the next Lord's Day; as also, that the sentence be afterwards intimated in all the parish churches within the Provincial Synods of Glasgow, Ayr, and Dumfries.

The next General Assembly of this National Church is to be held at Edinburgh upon the 2d day of January 1697 years.

The General Assembly being closed, the members were dismissed with prayer, singing of the 85th Psalm, from the 6th verse to the end, and pronouncing of the blessing.

THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AND BEGUN AT EDINBURGH THE 2d DAY OF JANUARY 1697.

I.

Sess. I, January 2, 1697.—The recording of his Majesty's Commission to the Lord Carnichael, for representing his Majesty in this Assembly.

This day, the General Assembly of the ministers and elders of this National Church being convened, there was produced to them by a noble Lord, John Lord Carmichael, his Majesty's commission under the Great Seal of this kingdom, nominating and appointing him to be his Majesty's High Commissioner and representative in this National Assembly, which was publicly read in their audience, with all due honour and respect; and the General Assembly appointed, and hereby appoints, the same to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, therein to remain, ad futuram rei memoriam, the tenor whereof follows:—"GULIELMUS," &c.

 II.

Eadem Sessione.—His Majesty's gracious Letter to the General Assembly.

The said day his Majesty's High Commissioner produced his Majesty's most gracious letter directed to this Assembly, which was publicly read in their hearing, with all due respect, and appointed to be registered in the books of this Assembly, the tenor whereof follows:—

WILLIAM R.

Right Reverend and well-beloved,

We greet you well. The proceedings of the last General Assembly were very satisfying to us, which hath encouraged us to allow and countenance your meeting now. We have chosen our right trusty and well-beloved counsellor, John Lord Carmichael, to represent our royal person, and bear our authority as our Commissioner, in this Assembly. We have sufficient experience of his fidelity to us, and of his ability and fitness for discharging this trust. The present juncture of affairs will not allow of your sitting long; therefore, you are to lose no time in doing what is most necessary for suppressing and restraining of vice and profanity, and in planting of vacant churches with pious and moderate ministers. This will be acceptable to us, and in doing which, you shall have all necessary concurrence and assistance. As we have done formerly, so we do now upon this occasion assure you that we are resolved to maintain Presbyterian Church government in that our kingdom of Scotland; and therefore we expect, that in all matters that come before you, you will proceed and conclude with calmness and moderation, which is the duty of all, especially in church meetings. We leave what further is necessary to our Commissioner, whom we have fully instructed. And so we bid you heartily farewell.

Given at our Court at Kensington, the 24th Day of December 1696, and of our reign the 8th year.

By His Majesty's Command,

TULLIBARDINE.

For the Reverend, trusty, and well-beloved Ministers, and Elders, met in the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, at Edinburgh.

 III.

Sess. 3, January 4, 1697, ante meridiem.—Act for bringing in and enrolling the Names of all Probationers for the Ministry, and Students of Divinity.

The General Assembly, for several weighty causes, hereby enacts and appoints that the commissioners from the several Presbyteries within this Church bring in an account to the General Assembly yearly of all the Students of Divinity who have passed their trials, in order to the ministry, from one Assembly to another; as also, of all others who have not passed trials, that have an eye to the holy ministry, and do attend the lessons of the several Professors of Divinity in the Universities, and perform the exercises enjoined them there; that a roll may be made of them, and their names read in open Assembly, and recorded in the registers thereof.

IV.

Sess. 4, January 6, 1697, ante meridiem.—The General Assembly's Answer to His Majesty's gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

We, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland, are very sensible of our happiness in your Majesty's being satisfied with the proceedings of the last Assembly, and in being pleased to signify so much by your gracious letter directed to us; and we are no less sensible of your Majesty's goodness, in giving your royal countenance to our meeting at this time, being the very same time unto which it was indicted at the close of the last Assembly: and your Majesty's reiterated choice of the Lord Carmichael to represent your royal person among us, who hath on all occasions manifested an untainted fidelity unto your Majesty, and constant kindness to this Church, is a fresh proof of your Majesty's tender care of us. We reckon it our bounden duty so to consider the present juncture of your affairs, as that our being long together may not be any way prejudicial unto the same, and therefore shall dispatch what is presently necessary with all application, delaying other things to a more convenient season; and we hope your Majesty shall never find any Assembly of the Church of Scotland uneasy on that head. Sir, as we cannot but lament the abounding of impiety and profanity in this land, so we must acknowledge your Majesty's Christian care, in enacting good laws for suppressing the same; the vigorous execution of which we humbly beg, as that which will highly tend to the exalting of the glory of God, and to the establishing of your throne; and we, for our parts, shall use all ecclesiastic means proper for us, that may be conducive thereunto. We have, through the good hand of God upon us, made some considerable progress in planting vacant congregations, and we do look upon it as the chief part of the work which we have to do at this time, to make further advancements therein, by encouraging all pious and serious persons to join with us in the work of the Gospel, and by facilitating their settlement in places where they may be most useful, and where there is greatest need of them. We beg leave on this occasion, to acknowledge your Majesty's royal bounty bestowed on this Church since the last Assembly, for defraying the public charges of the same, which we shall be careful to apply to the uses your Majesty designed it for.

May God always preserve your sacred person from all both secret attempts and open violence of execrable men; may you have a long and prosperous reign over these nations; may your forces have success both by sea and land; may your people's love and fidelity answer the manifold obligations you have laid upon them; and, after a fulness of earthly blessings here, may you for ever wear a crown of glory that fadeth not away; which are the sincere prayers of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

W. CRICHTON, Moderator.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Overtures concerning the Discipline and Method of proceeding in Ecclesiastic Judicatories, offered to the Assembly by a private hand.

The General Assembly, having heard the Report of a Committee of their own number for overtures anent the "Overtures concerning the Discipline and Method of proceeding in Ecclesiastic Judicatories in the Church of Scotland," now produced in their own presence, appoints the same to be sent as overtures, from private hands, to the several Presbyteries within this National Church; and ordains the said Presbyteries to send their animadversions and observations thereupon to the commission to be appointed by this Assembly, betwixt and the first of August next; and appoints the said commission to prepare the said overtures against the General Assembly, to be brought in thereto as overtures; and appoints the Commissioners from Presbyteries to take copies of the said overtures from George Mossman, the Assembly's printer, for the end foresaid.

VI.

Sess. 5, January 7, 1697, ante meridiem.—Act anent these Ministers who have not obeyed the appointment of the last Assembly concerning the Mission to the North.

The said day, in presence of the General Assembly, the committee for overtures reported, that, according to the appointment of this Assembly, they had been taking trial how the act of the late Assembly concerning the mission of some ministers to the North was observed, and had called the Presbyteries and persons concerned to have compeared before them; and that as to Mr James Thomson, Mr John Sandilands, Mr Robert Edgar, Mr Andrew Rodgers, Mr John Paisley at Lochwinnoch, and Mr Donald Campbell, there were defences made for them; and the said committee were of opinion, that they were not censurable in respect of their defences, which were held forth in presence of the Assembly; and the General Assembly having considered the same, they find it necessary that exact obedience be given to the Assembly's acts; and, therefore, though the persons above named have not been found censurable, yet the General Assembly appoints the respective Presbyteries to whom they belong to see them fulfil their mission, and, in case the Presbytery find sufficient ground to exonerate them, it must be done with this special provision, that the Presbytery provide another fit person in their room, as they will be answerable, and that their mission be fulfilled betwixt and the first of August; it being always understood as the mind of this Assembly, that they are liable to calls and transportations, as these on the first mission, except one be already transported out of their Presbytery.

And the General Assembly having heard the report of the Committee for Overtures anent Mr James Stirling and Mr William Steel, who, though they went to the North, did not stay their full time, and Mr Joseph Drew, who did not at all go North in mission, according to the appointment of the last Assembly; they being called and all absent, and not sending their excuses, and likewise the defences made for them, for their not giving obedience, being considered, as also the opinion of the said Committee for Overtures finding their defences irrelevant,—the General Assembly appoints the said Mr James Stirling and Mr William Steel to fulfil their mission betwixt and the first of August next; and as to Mr Joseph Drew, because he hath not as yet been in the North, appoints him to repair to the Province of Moray, and there stay and exercise his ministry for four months betwixt and the said time.

VII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Family Worship, and censuring Ruling Elders and Deacons who neglect the same.

The General Assembly, considering how necessary a duty it is that the worship of God, and calling upon his name, be daily performed in all families, do recommend it to ministers and elders in each congregation to take care thereof, and it being the duty of all ruling elders and deacons to be exemplary herein, the Assembly renews and confirms the act of Assembly, 1694, made against profaneness, recommending that none be ruling elders who make not conscience of this unquestionable duty; and do likewise appoint, that in case any elders or deacons shall neglect to worship God in their families, by themselves, or others appointed for that effect, that they be seriously admonished to amend, and, if need be, rebuked for the same; and if, notwithstanding of admonitions and rebukes of the minister and other elders, any elder or deacon continue obstinate in their neglect, that such elder or deacon be removed from his office by the Presbytery; and appoints this act to be read in all the churches yearly;

as also the said 13th act of the Assembly, 1694, against profaneness, and that upon the first Sabbath of May.

VIII.

Sess. 6, January 8, 1697, post meridiem.—Act for punctual Obedience to Appointments of Ministers to supply Vacant Churches.

The General Assembly, considering how much it is the duty of all the ministers of this Church to give punctual and exemplary obedience to all the acts and appointments of the Assemblies thereof, and particularly that, in the present exigency of the Church, wherein there continues so considerable a number of vacancies, ministers appointed by the General Assemblies, or their authority, to labour for some time in these corners of the Church, where the vacancies are most numerous, ought exactly to obey the same, at and during the time of their appointment, and that their neglect herein is very prejudicial to the interest of the Gospel, and discouraging to the ministers who are settled in these parts; do, therefore, in the fear of the Lord, obtest and beseech all ministers to be diligent and faithful in their performance of what is appointed them; and do appoint that in case any minister shall not exactly and timeously perform their respective appointments, particularly in going to the North, that they shall be suspended from the exercise of their ministry for the space of three months by their respective Presbyteries, so soon as they begin to neglect this duty: And the General Assembly do require the Moderators of the several Presbyteries to move and propose to the Presbyteries to proceed to inflict the censure above appointed without delay; and in case any Moderator shall neglect and delay the performance of his duty hereby required, that the said Moderator be suspended from the exercise of his ministry, by the next ensuing Synod of the bounds, for the space of three months; and in case that inevitable impediments fall providentially in the way of ministers, thus appointed for supplies, that cannot but free the minister of any neglect, that the Presbytery he belongs unto record the same in their registers, and produce them to their Synod at their next meeting, to be by them judged; but withal, the Presbytery in that case shall be obliged to send another under the same certifications; but so soon as he applies to the Presbytery, and offers obedience, the Presbytery shall be obliged to take off the act of suspension. And the General Assembly appoints their churches to be supplied daily, or at least two Sabbaths of three, during their absence, and the ministers appointed to make these supplies, in case of their neglect, are to be Presbyterially rebuked, and that inserted in the records of the Presbytery; and that Synods do particularly enquire anent, and see to the execution of this act, and make report to the next ensuing Assembly.

IX.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the Method of passing Acts of Assembly of general concern to the Church, and for preventing of Innovations.

(Commonly called the Barrier Act.)

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the overture and act made in the last Assembly concerning innovations, and having heard the report of the several commissioners from Presbyteries to whom the consideration of the same was recommended, in order to its being more ripely advised and determined in this Assembly; and considering the frequent practice of former Assemblies of this Church, and that it will mightily conduce to the exact obedience of the Acts of Assemblies, that General Assemblies be very deliberate in making of the same, and that the whole Church have a previous knowledge thereof, and their opinion be had therein, and for preventing any sudden alteration or innovation, or other prejudice to the Church, in either doctrine or worship, or discipline, or government thereof, now happily established; do, therefore, appoint, enact, and declare, that before any General Assembly of this Church shall pass any acts, which are to be binding rules and constitutions to the Church, the same acts be first proposed as overtures to the Assembly, and, being by them passed as such, be remitted to the consideration of the several Presbyteries of this Church, and their opinions and consent reported by their commissioners to the next General Assembly following, who may then pass the same in acts, if the more general opinion of the Church thus had agree thereunto.

X.

Sess. 7, January 9, 1697, ante meridiem.—Overture for punctual sending of Commissioners to General Assemblies, and their Attendance during the Sitting thereof.

(An Act relative to this subject was passed in 1698.)

XI.

Sess. 8, January 11, 1697, post meridiem.—Act against Profaneness.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into their most serious consideration, that notwithstanding of the weighty commands and dreadful threatenings contained in the Scriptures of truth, and the many laudable Christian laws of this nation, and the acts of the General Assemblies of this Church against all impiety and profaneness, yet the open outbursts of wickedness are not restrained, but God is daily dishonoured and provoked, the profession of Christianity discredited, and the pernicious infection of ill example disseminated and spread abroad by the abounding scandals of profane and idle swearing, cursing, Sabbath-breaking, profane withdrawing from and contempt of Gospel ordinances; yea, opposing the dispensing of them, by hindering the planting of churches, and discouraging the endeavours of others for calling and fixing a faithful Gospel ministry among them, mocking of piety and religion, and the exercises thereof, fornication, adultery, drunkenness, excessive tippling, Deism, blasphemy, and other gross abominable sins. And whereas, not only did the General Assembly, by their act April 16, 1694, recommend to all ministers and kirk-sessions carefully to apply to the several magistrates of their bounds for putting the acts of Parliament against profaneness in execution; but likewise, this current Parliament hath, by their acts, entituled, "Against Profaneness," June 15, 1693, June 28, 1695, and October 9, 1696, declared that ministers, kirk-sessions, and presbyteries, shall, by themselves, or others in their name, have good interest to apply for and pursue the execution of the said acts; and albeit execution is ordained to pass at the instance of any person whatsoever, yet, it being especially incumbent upon ministers and Church judicatories to hold hand thereto, Therefore, that this National Assembly may not be wanting to their duty, in contributing their utmost endeavours for bearing down and punishing of all immorality and wickedness, they do, in the first place, in the awe and dread of the great God, who will not hold them guiltless that break any of his commandments, beseech, warn, and obtest, all the people of this Church and nation, to break off their sins by repentance, and seriously, in the fear of the Lord, to apply themselves to a sober, conscientious, Christian, and circumspect walk, in all manner of conversation, as becomes the professors of the glorious Gospel of the blessed God, and of that religion which is pure and undefiled, and as they would not incur the heavy displeasure and just indignation of the Holy One, in being excluded for ever from seeing his face in peace, and pull down his temporal judgments upon themselves and upon the land. And, next, they do require all the ministers of this Church freely and faithfully to preach against the fore-mentioned enormous sins, as the crying sins of the time, that people may be brought to a conviction and sense of their heinousness and danger, and may refrain, not only for fear, but from conscience. And, farther, they do appoint that Presbyteries and Kirk-sessions do faithfully and impartially exercise church discipline against all such scandalous offenders, and use all suitable means, in dealing with their consciences, to bring them to unfeigned repentance and reformation; and they seriously recommend to Ministers and members of Kirk-sessions, from a true zeal for God, to hold hand to the delating, informing against, and punishing of all profane transgressors, without respect of persons, by civil punishments, conform to the acts of Parliament made in that behalf, and that they record their diligence in their session-books, that the same may be seen by their Presbyteries, who are hereby required to make inquiry therein at their visitations; and lest any may be found backward in performing their respective duties, from an unwillingness to displease or disoblige persons of note, who may happen to be guilty, the General Assembly earnestly exhorts all ministers and elders, and all Christians, to remember that in this matter they have to do with the great and terrible God, whose honour is to be preferred, and whose wrath is to be feared, before all other considerations whatsoever; and they overture, that whatever minister or member of session be found faulty in neglecting to pursue the foresaid scandals in their stations, the said minister or member of session be complained of and censured by the Presbytery for the first fault, and that the censure be recorded; and that the second negligence be delated to and censured by the Synod; and that for the third neglect they be censured by the Synod with suspension, to be recorded in the Synod register. And albeit the General Assembly hath full confidence in the integrity and zeal of all honest Christian magistrates, and that they will with firmness and resolution make conscience of the obligations of their office, and faithfully discharge the trust committed to them by God, and the supreme authority of this nation; yet because a slackness or backwardness may fall out in some particular places, and there hath been hitherto a most lamentable defectiveness in putting the laws against profaneness into execution, and some have refused to give deputations and commissions for that end, to persons who have been duly nominated and presented to them: Therefore, the General Assembly doth recommend to each minister or kirk-session who shall find cause to complain of a magistrate for negligence in executing the said laws, or for refusing deputation and commission to such persons as are duly elected and presented to them, (from parishes where there is no ordinary magistrate residing,) conform to the above mentioned act of Parliament, October 9, 1696, that they acquaint their Presbyteries therewith; and that the said Presbytery having used all previous means in dealing with the consciences of the said magistrate without any good effect, do, with the kirk-agent, thereafter pursue the said negligent or refractory magistrate before the Lords of Council or Session, according to the foresaid acts of Parliament. And, lastly, that these presents be read in all churches within this kingdom twice a-year from the pulpit, to wit, upon the first Sabbaths after Whitsunday and Martinmas yearly.

XII.

Sess. 8, January 11, 1697, post meridiem.—Commission to some Ministers and Elders for Planting Vacant Churches in the North, and some other particular Affairs committed to them by the General Assembly.

The General Assembly of this National Church, considering the many vacant churches on the North side of Tay, and that the last Assembly had laid down a way for a more expeditious planting of ministers therein, which hath not yet had the full effect desired; doth, therefore, by these presents, nominate and appoint Messrs Alexander Colden, Minister of the Gospel at Dunse, &c., &c., to be commissioners of the General Assembly, to the effect after mentioned, with full power and commission to the said persons, or their quorum, which is hereby declared to be any fifteen of the said commissioners, whereof nine are always to be ministers, to meet and convene within the Assembly-House at Edinburgh, the first day after the dissolution of this Assembly, at ten of the clock in the forenoon, and afterwards to meet the first Tuesday of every month, and oftener, as they shall see needful, during the continuance of this commission; and the General Assembly requires all the members of this commission to attend carefully the meetings thereof, especially the quarterly meetings, which are hereby declared to be their meetings, on the first Tuesdays of March, June, September, and December, and that at the least one out of every Presbytery be present then; with power to the said commissioners, or their quorum, to choose their own moderator and clerk. And suchlike, the General Assembly fully empowers and authorises the said commissioners to consider, cognosce, and finally determine, as they shall see cause, any calls and processes of transportation, of any of the forty-four ministers nominated to go North by way of mission, by the last Assembly, and that in the same way and manner, and with the same powers granted to the commission of the last General Assembly, in relation to the said forty-four ministers then nominated, whether these of them who have already obeyed their mission, or these who have it to fulfil, or these who are or shall be named in their room, in case of inevitable impediment of their fulfilment of the same, as is already provided by a former Act of this Assembly: And likewise to proceed and cognosce in every thing contained in and conform to the instructions to be given unto them by this Assembly, as fully and freely as if the same were in these presents at full length inserted and set down: And also to consider, cognosce, and determine, in all references, appeals, and other matters, that have been, or shall be particularly remitted to them for that effect, by any act or order of this Assembly, all which are holden as herein expressed. This commission is also to correspond with the State anent fasts and thanksgivings, as occasion falls out, and to specify the causes thereof; and likewise to give advice and assistance to any Synod or Presbytery in difficult cases, as they shall be applied unto by them: And the Assembly do hereby prohibit the said commissioners to meddle in any other matter than what is contained herein; declaring also, that in and for all their actings, the said Commissioners shall be accountable to and censurable by the next ensuing General Assembly of this Church. And, lastly, the General Assembly hereby declares that this commission shall continue till the meeting of the next General Assembly of this National Church.

XIII.

Sess. 9, January 12, 1697, ante meridiem.—Act and Recommendation anent Ministers to the Army.

The said day there was presented to the General Assembly a letter from the Right Honourable the Viscount of Teviot, Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's forces within this kingdom, desiring them to fall upon some way how the said standing forces may be provided with preachers, and until that be obtained, that they seriously recommend to the respective ministers and church-sessions where they are, or shall be ordered to quarter, to provide them with convenient seats for hearing with the said congregations, and to inspect and notice them as they do other parishioners during their abode there, and assuring that care shall be taken that they attend ordinances, and walk inoffensively; and desiring that the General Assembly would be pleased to recommend to such as they appoint to manage their affairs in the intervals of Assemblies, to notice how this is performed; as the said letter, dated the 11th of January instant, and signed by the said noble Lord, in itself bears: Which letter being read and duly considered, the General Assembly unanimously did, and hereby do, recommend to the respective ministers, kirk-sessions, and others concerned, where any of the said forces are or shall be ordered to be quartered, to provide them with convenient seats for hearing with the said congregations, and to inspect and notice them as they do other parishioners during their abode there, and, if need be, to apply to the commanding officers, for taking care that inferior officers and soldiers attend ordinances, and walk inoffensively. And, farther, the General Assembly hereby recommends and refers to the commission appointed by this Assembly, during the continuance thereof, to take notice how this is performed; and likewise recommends to the said commission to fall upon all expedient ways competent for them, how the said forces may be provided with preachers, and, upon application, to settle ministers in regiments belonging to this kingdom.

XIV.

Eadem Sessione.—Act appointing some Ministers to go for the Supply of the North quarterly, until the next Assembly.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into consideration, that albeit there hath been a good progress made in settling of vacancies be-North the Water of Tay, yet by reason of emerging deaths of some, and legal deprivation of others of the late conform ministers, who had till then possessed their churches, many vacancies are at present in that part of this Church, and the ministers who are settled there are not in a condition to supply the same in a suitable manner: Therefore, the General Assembly have ordained, and hereby ordains, that the Synods be-South Tay after named shall send to the bounds of the Synods of Angus and Mearns, Aberdeen, Moray, Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness, and Presbyteries of Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld, within the Synod of Perth, the number of eighteen ministers quarterly, according to the proportions after named: viz., that three be sent to supply the vacancies in the Presbyteries of Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld; three to supply the vacancies of the Synod of Angus and Mearns; five to supply the vacancies of the Synod of Aberdeen; five to supply the vacancies of the Synod of Moray; and two to supply the vacancies of the Synod of Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness: And the Assembly ordains these above supplies of eighteen ministers to be sent quarterly by the Synods after named, according to the following proportions, to wit, that from the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale, there be sent quarterly three; from the Synod of Lothian four; from the Synod of Dumfries one; from the Synod of Galloway one; from the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr five; from the Synod of Fife three; and from the Presbyteries of Stirling and Dunblane, within the Synod of Perth and Stirling, one: And likewise the Assembly doth ordain, that these three ministers who shall go in supply from the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale, shall supply the vacancies in the Synod of Angus and Mearns; that of the four who shall go from the Synod of Lothian, two shall go to the bounds of the Synod of Aberdeen, and the other two to the Synod of Moray, as the Synod of Lothian shall determine; that the one who shall go from the Synod of Dumfries shall go to the Presbyteries of Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld; that the one who shall go from the Synod of Galloway shall go to the said Presbyteries of Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld; that the five who shall go from the Synod of Glasgow shall go one of them to the said Presbyteries of Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld, three of them to the Synod of Aberdeen, and one of them to the Synod of Moray, as the Synod of Glasgow shall determine; that the three who shall go from the Synod of Fife shall go two of them to the Synod of Moray, and one of them to the Synods of Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness, as the Synod of Fife shall determine; and that the one who shall go from the Presbyteries of Stirling and Dunblane shall go to the bounds of Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness. And farther, because it is necessary that the said supplies who shall go there for the first quarter, be there sooner than the next ordinary meetings of the Synods; therefore, the Assembly have nominated, and hereby nominate, the ministers after named, to repair to the bounds of the Synods after mentioned, to supply the vacancies there, and that they be there against the first Sabbath of March next, viz., from the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale, Mr Alexander Lauderat Mordington, &c., &c. And the Assembly ordains, that the brethren above mentioned, and such who shall be hereafter nominated by their respective Synods for the succeeding quarters, do repair to the respective bounds, as above set down, against the respective times allotted to them, and to be directed by the Presbyteries and ministers residing in these respective Synods they repair to, as to what particular congregations they shall apply themselves unto. And the Assembly doth farther ordain the above written Synods in the South to send to the places, and in manner above mentioned, a new quarterly supply of as many ministers more, to continue for the second quarter, beginning the same the first of June next, and so forth, quarterly, ay and until the sitting of the next General Assembly. And the Assembly recommends to the respective Presbyteries to take care to supply the kirks of these ministers who shall be sent North for supplies with daily preaching, at least two Sabbaths of three: And the Assembly doth likewise ordain these ministers sent in supply to the North to get and produce to their own Presbytery a testimonial from the Presbyteries within the bounds where they did supply, of their having fulfilled their appointment, and of their carriage and behaviour during their abode in these bounds.

 XV.

Sess. 10 et ult. January 12, 1697, post meridiem.—Approbation of the Proceedings of the Commission appointed by the late General Assembly.

The General Assembly of this National Church, having heard the report of a committee of their own number appointed to consider, revise, and examine the actings and proceedings of the commissioners appointed to meet at Edinburgh by the late General Assembly, and after serious consideration thereof, subscribed by Mr John Moncrief, clerk thereto; do evidence much wisdom, prudence, and diligence; and that the commission hath orderly and formally proceeded in everything according to their commission and instructions. Therefore, this General Assembly, by an unanimous vote, did, and hereby do, ratify and approve the said whole actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said commissioners, contained in the said register thereof, beginning the seventh day of January 1696, and ending the third day of December thereafter now last bypast, consisting of an hundred and eighteen pages.

 XVI.

Eadem Sessione.—Act approving Overtures aent and Instructions to a Commission for the more full and expeditious Planting of the North.

This day the following Overtures and Instructions were read in presence of the General Assembly; the tenor whereof follows:—

1. That when any parish on the North side of Tay, or of the town and Presbytery of Perth, and Presbyteries of Auchterarder and Dunkeld, in the Synod of Perth, shall call any minister belonging to any parish on the North side of Tay, they may, without sending any commissioner of their own parish to prosecute the same, send the call approven of and concurred with by the Presbytery of the bounds to the Moderator of the Commission of this Assembly; who, for greater expedition, shall cause double the said call, and attest the copy, and send the same, with the reasons of the desired transportation, in a letter to the Moderator of that Presbytery, to whom the minister called doth belong.

2. That the Moderator of the said Presbytery, upon the receipt of the said letter, shall be obliged to transmit the said call, with the reasons thereof, to the minister called, and shall cause summon the said minister and the parish he belongs to, the next Sabbath, in the ordinary way, to appear before the said Presbytery, and answer the said call and reasons thereof.

3. That if the Presbytery, after they have maturely considered the affair, shall not grant the desired transportation, the agent for the Kirk, or any person who shall under his hand be deputed by him, (who is hereby authorised for that effect,) may appeal from the said Presbytery and their sentence to the Synod of the bounds, or the next quarterly meeting of the Commission which shall first happen; and thereby the said Presbytery shall be obliged to transmit the said call and whole process, with their sentence and reasons of the same, to the Synod or quarterly meeting of the Commission which shall first happen, and cite the minister called and parish he belongs to, for that effect, which Synod or Commission are hereby empowered in that case to judge the said cause, and determine therein as they shall judge reasonable.

4. And if, when the Synod hath considered such a process, and yet do not transport the minister called, that there may lie an appeal by the agent for the Kirk, or his depute, in manner above, to the Commission of this Assembly, whereby the Synod shall be, and hereby is obliged to transmit the whole affair to the next quarterly meeting of the Commission, and to cite all parties concerned.

5. That when any such process cometh thus before the Commission, they shall finally determine the same, nor shall these processes go to any ensuing Assembly either by reference or any other way.

6. That the minister transported by any of the above judicatories, in the manner above, shall obey the said sentence with certification, conform to former acts of Assemblies.

7. That seeing the Assembly hath by their act determined and ordained, that the number of eighteen ministers shall be sent quarterly to the North, from the Synods in the South, the Assembly doth recommend to these several Synods to send likewise an equal number of probationers to the North, especially those who have had their birth there, and that these stay six months; and the Assembly recommends it to the Commission to take care that the several Synods and probationers do effectually answer the same, as they will be answerable to the next Assembly.

8. That all ministers and probationers who shall be sent to supply the North shall not only labour in preaching of the Gospel, but likewise in visiting and catechising the people, in such method as the Presbytery of the bounds shall direct.

9. The Assembly do require the several Presbyteries on the South side of Tay to forbear to settle any probationers within their bounds who had their birth on the North side of Tay, at least until the meeting of the next Assembly; and do require the Presbyteries on the North side of Tay to exhort and stir up the people in their bounds to call probationers who may be settled amongst them, with more ease to themselves, and less difficulty to the Church; and the Assembly do recommend it to the Commission to see due obedience given hereunto.

10. That the Commission do from time to time consider, and take all the amicable and obliging ways to facilitate the settling of the vacant parishes in the northern bounds above specified; and as often as they shall think it fit, that they send a delegated number of the most experienced of their own members, to these parts or any corner thereof, to join with and assist the Presbyteries in these bounds, to facilitate the planting of these vacancies, and to deal with the heritors and others concerned for that effect, and that they report from time to time their diligence herein, that the Commission may proceed accordingly.

11. That this Commission, as often as they shall see cause, do apply to the Government or any magistrate for their countenance of and concurrence with the judicatories of the Church, in what the law allows, particularly for settling vacant congregations.

12. That the Commission have power to settle Presbyteries in Caithness, Orkney, and Zetland, so soon as any competent number of ministers shall be settled there, and to give them such instructions at their first erection as shall be needful for the good of these bounds.

13. That all Presbyteries be very deliberate in their proceedings with any of the late conforming ministers, either in proceeding against any of them, when accused of gross uncontroverted scandals, or proceeding in order to their reception into the government, on their applications in the Terms of the Acknowledgment, settled by the Assembly, 1694, and take the advice and assistance of some of the neighbouring Presbyteries, and of the Commission. And that the Commission and all other judicatories in their proceedings, as to reception of any into the government, do exactly keep by the method and the terms of the above mentioned act of the General Assembly, 1694, particularly the sixth overture and instruction to the Commission appointed by that Assembly.

All these overtures and instructions above written, being maturely considered, the General Assembly of this National Church did, and hereby do, approve of the same, and recommends and appoints according thereto in all points.

XVII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act against the Deists, &c.

The General Assembly recommends to all ministers and church judicatories to observe and put in execution the 21st act of the late General Assembly, entitled “Act against the Atheistical Opinions of the Deists,” and for Establishing the Confession of Faith.

The next General Assembly of this National Church of Scotland is to be held at Edinburgh upon the second Tuesday of January, 1698.

The General Assembly being closed, the members were dismissed with prayer, singing the 133d Psalm, and pronouncing of the blessing.

THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AND BEGUN AT EDINBURGH, JANUARY 11, 1698.

I.

Sess. 1, Edinburgh, January 11, 1698.—The Recording of his Majesty's Commission to the Lord Carmichael for Representing his Majesty in this Assembly.

This day, the General Assembly of the ministers and elders of this National Church being convened, there was produced to them by a noble Lord, John Lord Carmichael, his Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal of this kingdom, nominating and appointing him to be his Majesty's High Commissioner and Representative in this National Assembly, which was publicly read in their audience with all due honour and respect, and the General Assembly appointed, and hereby appoints, the same to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, therein to remain ad futuram rei memoriam, the tenor whereof follows:—“GULIELMUS,” &c.

II.

Eadem Sessione.—His Majesty's gracious Letter to the General Assembly.

The said day, his Majesty's High Commissioner produced his Majesty's most gracious Letter directed to this Assembly, which was publicly read in their hearing with all due honour and respect, and appointed to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, the tenor whereof follows:—

WILLIAM R.

Right Reverend and well-beloved,

We greet you well. We are so well satisfied with your proceedings at the last General Assembly, that we agree to your meeting now, though another time had been more convenient for our affairs. And we have again made choice of our right trusty and entirely beloved Councillor, John Lord Carmichael, to be our Commissioner, of whose fidelity and zeal for our service we have had experience on former occasions, and who we know will be acceptable to you; and we doubt not but you will act in such a manner in this Assembly, as that we shall have new reason to be satisfied with you; and we do renew our assurances of our protection and countenance to the Presbyterian government, now settled in the Church of Scotland.

You know it is our inclinations, and we do recommend to you, to assume the Episcopal ministers, whose lives and doctrine do render them useful to the Church; and likewise, the planting the Churches in the North with the most prudent and pious of your ministers; and that you send some of your number who are best qualified to preach in the remote Highland parishes where ministers are not provided, and where there appears to be so much need of a reformation, both from Popery and profanity, in all which, we expect to hear of your care and performance; and so we bid you heartily farewell.

Given at our Court at Kensington, the fifth day of January 1697-98, and of our reign the ninth year.

By his Majesty's command,

TULLIBARDINE.

To the Right Reverend and well-beloved, the Ministers and Elders, Commissioners of the General Assembly of the Church of our ancient Kingdom of Scotland.

III.

Sess. 3, January 13, 1698.—The General Assembly's Answer to his Majesty's gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

The satisfaction your Majesty vouchsafes to signify by your most gracious letter to this Assembly, with the proceedings of the former; your Majesty's renewed assurances of your protection and countenance to the Presbyterian government now settled in this Church, and your having agreed to our meeting at this time, when so many other weighty affairs call forth and employ your royal care, do lay such obligations on us to our duty, as we shall endeavour better to express our sense thereof in the course of our actings, than now we are able to do by words.

Nor is it one of the least testimonies of your Majesty's fatherly regard to this Church, that as you have formerly recommended and encouraged the suppressing and restraining of all vice and profanity, so your Majesty doth now testify a special concern for planting a well qualified ministry in those places that want it, and that you are pleased to excite us to a cheerful management of all the matters that lie before us by the continued choice of the Lord Carmichael to represent your royal person now again in this Assembly, whose unblemished faithfulness and steady zeal to your Majesty's service, joined with a constant good affection to this Church, have always very signally, and to us most obligingly appeared.

The General Assembly is still ready to assume such ministers as served under the late Prelacy, whose lives and doctrines render them useful in the Church, and who apply to them in the terms and methods proposed by former Assemblies, and shall recommend the same to inferior judicatories.

In the planting of the North, such progress as could be attained hath been made since the last Assembly; and to proceed in this good work, and provide for the remote Highland parishes, we reckon an important part of our present duty, and do resolve to apply ourselves thereto with that diligence, and so to demean ourselves therein, and in our whole conduct, through Divine assistance, that we trust this Assembly shall not prove unworthy of the continuance of your Majesty's favourable opinion of us.

That the great God, by whom kings reign, may daily multiply his best blessings upon your royal person and government, is, and shall be the most sincerely affectionate and fervent prayer of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders, met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Signed in our presence, in our name, and at our appointment, by

GEO. MELDRUM, Moderator.

IV.

Eadem Sessione.—To his Most Excellent Majesty, the humble Address of the National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

May it please your Majesty,

As the commissioners of the former Assembly, under a just sense of duty, did address your Majesty upon your happy auspicious arrival to these your kingdoms, so we, the present representatives of this National Church, do now, for ourselves, and in name of that Church which we represent, with most humble adorations and thankful praises to our good God, acknowledge his inestimable mercy to us in sending your Majesty to be our deliverer and restorer, (a blessing never to be forgotten by us nor our posterity,) in conducting and preserving your Majesty through the long tract of a most just and necessary, but most hazardous war, (undertaken to assert and vindicate the oppressed liberties of Christendom,) whilst you were exposed to the most open and formidable dangers, in keeping you safe in the hidings of his own power, and in returning you to your loving and longing people, adorned with the best of triumphs, (the effect of your deep wisdom as well as of your matchless valour,) a solid and honourable peace.

No expressions can reach the fulness of our loyal hearts upon this great occasion, nor that sincere joy that is raised in us by the hopes of your Majesty's applying yourself, with Christian princely vigour, to maintain that holy religion, (given us by the God who hath called, upheld, and established you,) to curb the enormities of a debauched and profligate age, and to quell the monsters of profanity and atheism, that have dared so boldly to bid defiance to heaven and all that is sacred. From these doth arise our greatest danger, lest wrath be upon us from the God of heaven; in subduing these a yet higher pitch of courage, steady resolution, and true greatness of mind is required, than in overcoming the greatest armies in the field of battle. This noble achievement seems to be reserved for your Majesty, as the peculiar glory of your now peaceful reign, both by your authority and royal example to render piety and virtue in the eyes of the world (as indeed they are in themselves) the true point of honour, and all impiety and vice (though in persons of most elevated quality and station) matter of infamy and disgrace, without which no effectual reformation of degenerated manners can ever be expected.

May the divine Majesty, of whom is the salvation of kings, (who hath done wonders for you, and wrought wonders by you, whose great and happy instrument you are,) long preserve, richly bless, and prosper your Majesty, and render you no less illustrious in all the arts of peace than you have been in these of war; and when he shall have served his own great and gracious ends by you in this world, may you be translated to inherit the glories of that kingdom of purity and peace that can never be shaken. So we pray, with the most fervent affection of dutiful and sincere hearts, who are,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Signed in our presence, in our name, and at our appointment, by

GEO. MELDRUM, Moderator.

Sess. 6, January 15, 1698, ante meridiem.—Act and Declaration for Vindication of the Church of Scotland from the Calumny of Thomas Gipps, Rector of Bury, in a Sermon preached by him.

The General Assembly of this National Church, being informed that the Presbyterians (particularly those of Scotland) are charged, in a sermon preached by Thomas Gipps, Rector of Bury, in England, now printed and published, as corrupters of the Word of God, with design to support the people's power in setting up ministers over themselves, and that this corruption is made by them, in Acts vi. 3, by causing it be printed, "Whom ye may appoint over this business," instead of "Whom we may appoint;" and, therefore, the General Assembly do unanimously declare, that, as they allow no power in the people, but only in the pastors of the Church, to appoint or ordain church-officers, so they disclaim the above mentioned error of the press, if any such be found in any Bibles printed in this nation; and do declare they do not own any other reading of that text to be according to the original, but "Whom we may appoint," &c. Nor do they know, nor can learn, that ever any in this nation did publicly use or apply that text to prove the people's power in ordaining their ministers.

VI.

Sess. 8, January 18, 1698, post meridiem.—Act for punctual sending of Commissioners to the General Assemblies, and their Attendance during the Sitting thereof.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the overture transmitted by the last Assembly to Presbyteries, anent punctual sending of commissioners to General Assemblies, and their attendance during the sitting thereof; and having heard the report of the several commissioners from Presbyteries, to whom the consideration of the same was recommended, in order to its being more ripely advised and determined in this Assembly—the General Assembly do appoint Presbyteries to choose their commissioners for the General Assembly a competent time before the sitting thereof, at least forty days, and that each General Assembly appoint a committee of censures to cognosce upon the dates of commissions, and the attendance of those commissioned; to the end that such Presbyteries as do not make their election in due time, as likewise, such commissioners as do not attend duly from the beginning, and through the whole diets of the General Assembly, and the committees which they may be put upon, not having a relevant excuse, may be censured as the General Assembly shall think fit. And, lastly, the General Assembly recommends to Presbyteries to choose such ruling elders to be their commissioners as may attend, and seriously to exhort them when chosen to make conscience of attending upon General Assemblies; and recommends the punctual observance of Act 4th, General Assembly, 1694, anent the giving in commissions, and making up the rolls, the night before the Assembly meet, or the next morning, for which purpose the clerk is to attend in the Assembly-House at that time.

VII.

Sess. 12, January 21, 1698, post meridiem.—Act anent the Deficients in supplying the North.

The General Assembly, having inquired how the 6th Act of the last Assembly, anent those ministers who had not obeyed the appointment of the Assembly, 1696, concerning the mission to the North, was observed; and Mr Joseph Drew, minister at New Monkland, being heard, his excuse for not going (hitherto) was sustained; but he is appointed to fulfil the time of his mission, conform to the said act, and if there be any inevitable impediments in his way, appoints the Presbytery of Hamilton to send one in his room, and that the commission see this done. And, farther, refers to the commission to see the Presbytery of Paisley fulfil the time of the mission of their two ministers, conform to the said act of the last Assembly. And, lastly, refers to the said commission to inquire how the supplies appointed by the last Assembly were sent up; and, likewise, to see that any supplies that shall be appointed by this Assembly be punctually sent from the several Synods, and to censure the deficient.

VIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act approving Overtures for Planting of the North.

Seeing the mission of the forty-four ministers hath so far come short of the designed transportation of actual ministers from the South to the North, and the necessity of that country continues, the Assembly declares that twelve ministers shall be transported from the South to some of the following posts, (which are either considerable in themselves, or by reason of their circumstances, necessarily to be speedily supplied,) now vacant; three of the said ministers to the province of Angus and Mearns, to any of the posts following, viz., Montrose, Brechin, Meigle, Elliot, Longforgan, Farnell, or Fetteresso; six of them to the province of Aberdeen, to any of these posts following, viz., New and Old Aberdeen, Peterhead, Foveran, Rathven, Mortlach, Boyndie, Upper Banchory, Oven, or Old Meldrum; and three to the province of Moray, to any of these posts following, viz., Inverness, Elgin, Duffus, or Keith.

That in order to the above end, the Presbyteries in the foresaid provinces endeavour to get ordinary calls; and in case these parishes above mentioned shall neglect to give the same, the Assembly declares that calls by the Presbytery of the bounds to which any of these places belongs, shall be sustained as sufficient, the said Presbytery attesting that there are probable grounds that the people will submit to the ministry of the minister so called, when settled among them. And the person thus called is to be loosed and transported according to the method proposed by the last Assembly, in the Overtures contained Act 16; only where it is granted by the last Assembly, that such calls should be pursued by the kirk-agent, or his deputies, this Assembly allows also a commission from the parish or Presbytery calling, to be sufficient to any other person whatsoever to pursue the said transportation. And the General Assembly does seriously recommend it to the ministers of the North to use all tenderness and caution, as to the seats of Universities, the actual residences of noblemen, and principal royal burghs, and that before they proceed to moderate a call to any of these twelve ministers thus to be transported, they consult with some of the most prudent and experienced men in the same Synod to which the minister called belongs. And, on the other hand, the Assembly seriously recommends to these Presbyteries, Synods, and Commission, who shall have occasion to judge in any of these transportations, that they consider the clamant condition of the North. And that in effect, the competition betwixt the parishes called from and called to be not reckoned, but between the parish called from and the necessitous condition of the North; and that they consider the many disappointments the North hath met with already.

4. The Assembly further declares, that these twelve ministers thus to be transported are to be taken out of the Synods after mentioned, viz., five of them out of the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr, four of them out of the Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, two of them out of the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale, and one of them out of the two Eastern Presbyteries of the Synod of Fife, viz., the Presbyteries of Cupar and St Andrews.

5. That the Assembly nominate twenty probationers to go immediately to the North, and these probationers born in the North to be named in the first place; and to help to defray the charges of their journey thither, that they be allowed each of them one hundred merks out of the King's gift for defraying the public expenses of the Church, besides the allowance given by Act of Parliament to preachers in vacant congregations; and to these who go to Orkney two hundred merks; and that five of these be sent to supply the vacancies of the Synod of Aberdeen, four of them to supply the vacancies of the Synod of Angus and Mearns, four of them to supply the vacancies of Moray, two of them to supply Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness, and two to Orkney, and three of them to supply Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld vacancies, and all of them to continue in the North for twelve months. And it is hereby referred to the commission to be appointed by this Assembly to consider and determine what probationers are to go to these respective provinces above mentioned, together with the time of their stay and abode in each province. Which twenty probationers are hereby obliged to accept of calls, whether popular or Presbyterial, when presented to them by the Presbyteries of any of the said provinces, with certification, if they refuse the same, the Presbyteries within whose bounds they are called shall have power to take their licence from them until the next Assembly.

6. This Assembly doth hereby continue the former supplies of the North, by the Synods of the South, granted by the fourteenth Act of the last Assembly, defaulting only three ministers of the eighteen formerly allowed, five of which are to supply Aberdeen province, four to supply Moray, three to supply Angus and Mearns, one to supply Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness, and two to supply Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld; unto which supply the Synods expressed in the foresaid act are liable in the way and manner therein expressed. And because there are three of the number taken down, the Synods of Duffries and Galloway, with the Presbyteries of Stirling and Dunblane, are exempted from the said supply.

7. It is overtured, that a numerous commission be appointed by this Assembly, with power to them to divide themselves into as many committees as they shall see fit; and to send them to any parts of this Church, South or North; which commission is to meet quarterly, and when or where they shall see cause. And that all the members thereof shall give punctual attendance at the said quarterly meetings, and an exact account to be taken of the absentees therefrom.

8. That it be recommended to some to name and draw up a list of the members of the said commission, and to draw up instructions to be given unto them.

That the said committees be appointed by the general commission have power to visit the bounds they are sent unto, and to receive complaints from Presbyteries, and redress grievances of particular ministers or Presbyteries, and to inflict censures, and to do every other thing competent to visitations. The Presbytery of the bounds where the said committee shall come being always to be reckoned members thereof, while within their bounds.

The General Assembly approves of the overtures above written.

IX.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the Printed Overtures concerning the Discipline and Method of Proceeding in Ecclesiastic Judicatories, offered to the last Assembly by a private hand.

The General Assembly, having heard and considered the opinion of the commission of the last Assembly, dated the 5th day of January instant, anent the overtures concerning Church discipline, and the method of proceeding in Ecclesiastic Judicatories; as also having heard the report of a committee of this Assembly's own number appointed to consider the same; the General Assembly thinks fit to appoint, and hereby appoints, Mr Gilbert Rule, Principal of the College of Edinburgh, Mr William Dunlop, Principal of the College of Glasgow, Mr Robert Wylie, minister at Hamilton, Mr George Meldrum, and Mr William Crichton at Edinburgh, Mr John Veitch, Mr Andrew Cameron, and Mr George Barclay, Ministers; Sir James Stewart, his Majesty's Advocate, Adam Cockburn of Ormiston, Lord Justice-Clerk, and Sir Colin Campbell of Aberuchle, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, Ruling Elders, to be a committee for considering the said overtures, and the animadversions made thereupon, and compare them with the Word of God, Books of Discipline, and Acts of the General Assemblies of this Church, and to consider what is wanting, or to be added thereto, or altered therein, and to set out a new edition of the said overtures, that the several Presbyteries may have opportunity to animadvert thereon, and appoints them to send their judgment thereanent to the commission of this Assembly, who are to prepare the same against the next General Assembly.

Eadem Sessione.—Approbation of the Actings and Proceedings of the Commission appointed by the late General Assembly.

The General Assembly, having this day had reproduced in their presence the register of the actings and proceedings of the commissioners appointed by the last Assembly; and having heard a report of a committee of their own number, appointed to revise, consider, and examine the same, with their observations thereupon, all the members of the said commission were removed; and the General Assembly having seriously considered the said report and answers made by the members of the commission to the said observations, and finding thereby that the whole actings, proceedings, and conclusions of the said commissioners, contained in the register thereof, subscribed by Mr John Moncrieff, clerk thereto, consisting of one hundred and sixty-eight pages, do evidence much wisdom, prudence, and diligence; and that the said commission have proceeded orderly and formally in every thing, according to their commission and instructions, and that the said register is very accurate: Therefore, this General Assembly, by an unanimous vote, did, and hereby do, ratify and approve the said whole actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said commissioners, contained in the said register thereof, beginning the 13th day of January 1697, and ending the 5th day of January instant, inclusive of both days.

XI.

Sess. 13, January 22, 1698.—Recommendation anent Subscribing of Synod Records.

The General Assembly recommends to all Synods for hereafter to take care that their registers be completely filled up always before the sitting of the General Assembly; and that the proceedings of every Synod be signed both by the moderator and clerk thereof; and, lastly, appoints the Synod books, thus filled up and subscribed, to be timeously produced to the General Assembly yearly, in order to their being revised.

XII.

Sess. 14, January 24, 1698, ante meridiem.—Commission to some Ministers and Elders for Planting Vacant Churches in the North, and some other particular Affairs committed to them by the General Assembly.

The General Assembly of this National Church, considering that there are yet many vacant churches on the North side of Tay, as likewise that there are several weighty affairs which this Assembly cannot now overtake: Therefore, the General Assembly finds it needful that there be a commission granted to some ministers and elders for planting these vacant kirks, and doing what other affairs shall be referred to them; and for that end do hereby nominate and appoint Mr Andrew Cameron, minister of the Gospel at Kirkeudbright, &c. &c., to be commissioners of the General Assembly, to the effect after mentioned, with full power and commission to the said persons, or their quorum, which is hereby declared to be any fifteen of the said commissioners, whereof nine are always to be ministers, to meet and convene within the Assembly-House at Edinburgh the first day after the dissolution of this Assembly, at ten of the clock in the forenoon, and afterwards to meet the first Wednesdays of March, June, September, and December, and oftener, where or when they shall see needful, during the continuance of this commission; and the General Assembly requires all the members of this commission to attend punctually the meetings thereof, with power to the said commission to choose their own moderator and clerk: And suchlike, the General Assembly fully empowers and authorises the said commissioners, or their quorum, to consider, cognosce, and finally determine, as they shall see cause, in every thing contained in and conform to the instructions given unto them by this Assembly, as fully and freely as if the same were in these presents at full length inserted and set down; as also, to consider, cognosce, and finally determine, in all references, appeals, and other matters, particularly remitted to them by any act or order of this Assembly, all which are holden as herein expressed: And the General Assembly do hereby prohibit and discharge the said commissioners to meddle in any other matter than what is contained herein; declaring also, that in and for their actings they shall be accountable to and censurable by the next ensuing General Assembly of this Church. And, lastly, declares that this commission shall endure until the meeting of the next General Assembly.

2. That this commission, as often as they shall see cause, apply to the government, or any magistrate, for their countenancing of and concurrence with the judicatories of the Church, in what the law allows, particularly for settling vacant congregations, and redressing any grievances which may fall out.

3. That when any of the ministers who served under the late Prelacy, whose lives and doctrines may render them useful to this Church, do apply for reception unto the government, the General Assembly, in prosecution of the assurances given to his Majesty, in their letter written to him, do empower and recommend to this commission, and the other judicatories of this Church, that they be ready to receive them, according to the thirteenth paragraph of the sixteenth act of the last General Assembly.

4. That this commission, in disposal of his Majesty's gifts to this Church, do particularly take care that the encouragement granted by this Assembly to the probationers who are to go to the North to preach be rendered effectual; and that they cause defray the extraordinary charges that several ministers of the North have been at, in carrying on the planting of the North, and other public affairs of the Church there; and for defraying the charges of such ministers or probationers as shall yet be sent to Orkney, or other remote places of the North.

5. That if the commission shall see cause to appoint committees upon occasion for visitation of particular kirks and Presbyteries, or trial of persons, then the said committees as to trials may proceed usque ad sententiam, but no farther; but that in that case they report their procedure to the commission, who are to pass sentence as they shall see cause.

6. This commission may likewise, on the desire of any Presbytery or Synod, send committees for assisting them in visitation of kirks within their bounds, which committees may be assisting to the said Presbyteries or Synods, either in processes and censures, if need be, or in redressing the grievances of particular ministers or parishes within their bounds.

7. The commission are to cognosce, and finally determine, in all references made to them by this Assembly, and in all appeals for transporting ministers to the North, which shall be orderly brought unto them, according to the overtures thereanent, passed in this Assembly.

9. The commission is to give advice and assistance to any Synod or Presbytery in difficult cases, as they shall be applied unto by them for that effect.

XIV.

Eadem Sessione.—Act appointing some Ministers to go for the Supply of the North, until the next Assembly.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into their consideration that there are yet many vacancies in the North, and that the ministers which are settled there are not in a condition to supply the same in a suitable manner; therefore, they have ordained, and hereby ordain, that the Synods be-South Tay after named shall send to the bounds of the Synods of Angus and Mearns, Aberdeen, Moray, Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness, and the Presbyteries of Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld, within the Synod of Perth, the number of fifteen ministers, every four months, according to the proportions after mentioned, viz., that two be sent to supply the vacancies of Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld; three to supply the vacancies of the Synod of Angus and Mearns; five to supply the vacancies of the Synod of Aberdeen; four to supply the vacancies of the Synod of Moray; and one to supply the vacancies of the Synods of Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness: And the Assembly declares, that these above supplies of fifteen ministers be sent every four months by the Synods after mentioned, according to the following proportions, viz., that from the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale there be sent three each four months, and that to the Synod of Angus and Mearns;—the Synod of Lothian shall send four, two of them to Aberdeen, and two of them to Moray, as the said Synod of Lothian shall determine;—that the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr shall send five, viz., one to Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld, three to Aberdeen, and one to Moray;—that the Synod of Fife shall send three, one to Perth, one to Moray, and one to Caithness, Ross, and Sutherland, as the said Synod of Fife shall determine: And further, because it is necessary that the said supplies who shall go for the first four months shall be there sooner than the next ordinarily meeting of Synods, therefore, the Assembly appoints the Presbyteries after named to send a minister to the bounds of the Synods after mentioned, to supply the vacancies there, and that such as shall be by them appointed be there against the first Sabbath of March next, viz., the Presbyteries of Chirnside, Jedburgh, and Selkirk, within the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale, to send each of them one to supply the vacancies in the bounds of the Synod of Angus and Mearns; that these five nominated already by the Synod of Glasgow to go in March, do go to their respective posts, and that these appointed by the Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale to go in March, do go to their respective posts appointed them; and, lastly, from the Synod of Fife, the Presbytery of Cupar to send one to Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness; the Presbytery of Dunfermline and Kirkaldy to send one to Moray; the Presbytery of St Andrews to Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld; but in case that any of the said Synods have already appointed their supplies according to the Act of the last Assembly, and if, in obedience thereunto, any Presbytery have already nominated the persons who are to go, then, and in that case, the Assembly doth hereby homologate and ratify the said appointments and nominations, and hereby ordains all such, as either are already appointed, or shall be hereafter appointed, by Synods or Presbyteries for this or the succeeding four months' supply, that they repair to the respective bounds as above set down against their respective times allotted unto them, and be directed by the Presbytery and ministers of the respective Synods they repair to, as to what particular congregations they shall apply themselves unto, and that for the space of four months above mentioned, viz., from March to July next: And the Assembly doth farther ordain the above written Synods in the South to send to the places and in the manner above mentioned, a new supply of as many ministers more, to continue from the first of July next till the first of November following, and so forth, aye and until the sitting of the next General Assembly; and the respective Presbyteries are to take care that their kirks be supplied according to the fourteenth Act of the last General Assembly: And, lastly, the Assembly ordains these ministers sent in supply to the North to catechize and do all appointed by the former Acts of Assembly, under the certifications contained in the said acts, and that they get and produce to their own Presbytery a testimonial from the Presbytery within the bounds where they did supply, of their having fulfilled their appointment, and of their carriage and behaviour during their abode in these bounds; and the Assembly also declares that these named by the Synods or Presbyteries in this supply who may be upon the commission, this shall be no excuse for them to elude the said appointments.

Sess. 1, January 20, 1699.—The Recording of his Majesty's Commission to the Lord Carmichael, for representing his Majesty in this Assembly.

This day, the General Assembly of the ministers and elders of this National Church being convened, there was produced to them by a noble Lord, John Lord Carmichael, his Majesty's commission, under the Great Seal of this kingdom, nominating and appointing him to be his Majesty's High Commissioner and representative in this National Assembly, which was publicly read in their audience, with all due honour and respect; and the General Assembly appointed, and hereby appoints, the same to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, therein to remain ad futuram rei memoriam, the tenor whereof follows:—"GULIELMUS," &c.

II.

Eadem Sessione.—His Majesty's gracious Letter to the General Assembly.

The which day his Majesty's High Commissioner presented his Majesty's most gracious Letter directed to this General Assembly, which was publicly read in their hearing, with all due honour and respect, and appointed to be recorded in their registers, the tenor whereof follows:—

WILLIAM R.

Right Reverend and well-beloved,

We greet you well. We have thought fit to allow and countenance your meeting at this time, that you may have the opportunity to do what is necessary for promoting religion, and regulating order and discipline. And we do again earnestly recommend to you to fall upon effectual methods for planting vacant churches with pious and learned ministers, which is so necessary for suppressing error and immorality; in the doing whereof you shall have from us all due encouragement and assistance. We have again chosen our right trusty and entirely-beloved councillor, John Lord Carmichael, to be our Commissioner, and to represent our royal person in this Assembly. And as we have sufficient experience of his fidelity to us, and of his abilities and fitness to discharge this trust, so we know that he is acceptable unto you. We have fully instructed him in all things that we think needful, and therefore you may give him entire trust and credit. We are well satisfied with your proceedings in the former Assembly, and we doubt not but your management in this will be suitable to our expectation. We leave what further is necessary to our Commissioner; and we assure you of our royal protection and assistance in all your concerns. And so we bid you heartily farewell.

Given at our Court at Kensington, the 7th day of January 1698-9, and of our reign the 10th year.

By his Majesty's Command,

SEAFIELD.

To the Right Reverend and well-beloved Ministers and Elders, met in the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

III.

Sess. 4, January 24, 1699, post meridiem.—The General Assembly's Answer to his Majesty's gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

The renewed testimonies of your Majesty's care and concern for this Church, so amply signified by your gracious letter, are received by us with all satisfaction and acknowledgment, and cannot but engage us to double our diligence in prosecuting the duties of promoting religion, order, and discipline, planting of vacant churches, and suppressing of error and immorality, which your Majesty particularly recommends, with the most obliging assurances of all due encouragement and assistance.

What your Majesty recommended to the last Assembly, as to the planting of the North, hath been minded by them, and their commission and committees empowered for that effect, to the remotest parts of the kingdom, and even to the Isles of Orkney and Zetland, with a considerable progress: And we are firmly resolved to continue our best endeavours for accomplishing so good and necessary a work; nor can we omit to notice that your Majesty's royal bounty did very seasonably contribute to make our labours in that matter more easy and effectual.

Nothing can be more rejoicing to us than to see your Majesty's zeal against error and immorality, which makes us presume to beg for your renewed commands to those concerned, that your excellent laws against profanity (that to our great grief still grows) may be put to vigorous execution, without exception. And we earnestly pray and hope that God, who preserved your Majesty during a long and dangerous war, and blessed your conduct and valour with the conclusion of a happy peace, will still support and assist your royal endeavours in reforming the manners of this profligate age, and preserve you till that great work be accomplished.

We do also acknowledge the good choice that it hath pleased your Majesty to make of the Lord Carmichael to represent your royal person in this Assembly, whose faithfulness to your Majesty, as well as his kind affection to us, do render him most acceptable.

That your Majesty's reign may be long and happy; that all your subjects may continually make suitable returns of duty and gratitude for all the labours and dangers you have undergone for their tranquillity; and that truth and peace may ever flourish in your days, are, and shall be, the fervent prayers of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Signed in our presence, in our name, and at our appointment, by

GEORGE HAMILTON, Moderator.

IV.

Eadem Sessione.—Act Annexing some Parishes to the Presbyteries of Stranraer and Wigton.

The General Assembly, having heard and considered the opinion of the Committee for Overtures, did by their vote disjoin the parishes of Ballantrae and Colmonell from the Presbytery of Ayr, and annexes them to the Presbytery of Stranraer; and likewise disjoins the parishes of Kirkmabreck, Kells, Dalry, and Carsphairn, from the Presbytery of Kirkcudbright, and annexes them to the Presbytery of Wigton, which Presbytery of Wigton may meet at Minnygaff frequently, and this without prejudice to the Presbyteries of Ayr and Kirkcudbright, or any others concerned, to be heard against the continuation of this alteration, at the next or any other ensuing General Assembly; and it is appointed and declared, that this act, as to the said disunion and annexation, shall commence at the first day of March next to come: And the General Assembly ordains the ministers of the respective parishes above named, so disjoined and annexed, to be advertised hereof, and to give obedience thereto, as they will be answerable; and that letters be written to the Presbyteries concerned for that end.

V.

Sess. 5, January 25, 1699, post meridiem.—Act anent Proclamation of Banns.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the overtures passed in the last Assembly, dated the 24th day of January 1698, entitled, "Overtures anent Proclamation of Banns;" the tenor whereof follows:—

The General Assembly, being informed that several abuses have crept in, in the way and manner of proclaiming the banns of persons to be married, do, for preventing the same, overture and declare, that before any proclamations be made, the names and designations of the persons to be married, and their parents, tutors, or curators, if they any have, be given up to the minister of the bounds in which any of them live and reside, that thereby it may be known if their parents and friends give consent thereto; and that the minister being satisfied herein, order the proclamation to be made three several Sabbaths, which, when made, shall be immediately before divine worship begin in the forenoon, and the persons to be proclaimed, their names and full designations, such as they are designed by in writs or contracts of marriage, be fully and audibly expressed, and that where there are more churches collegiate in the place or town, the proclamations be made in all and every one of the churches within the city or town where they or any of the persons to be married reside; and this to be attested to the minister that marries them; with certification of the censures of the church against the transgressors herein.

And the General Assembly having heard the report of the several commissioners from Presbyteries now present, to whom the consideration of the said overture was recommended, in order to its being more ripely advised and determined in this Assembly; and finding that the several Presbyteries were satisfied therewith: Therefore, this General Assembly, by their vote, unanimously did, and hereby do, approve of the said overtures, and appoints the same to have the full force and strength of an Act of the General Assembly in all time coming; and, that none may pretend ignorance, appoints the same to be intimated in all the parish kirks of this kingdom.

VI.

Sess. 6, January 26, 1699, post meridiem.—Act of the General Assembly anent a solemn National Fast and Humiliation.

The General Assembly, taking into their serious consideration that the many grievous and most heinously aggravated sins and abominations abounding and still continuing in this land, have procured and drawn from the hands of the just and holy Lord the lamentable stroke of dearth, and unseasonable weather in seed-time and harvest, which, as it hath reduced many families of the nation already into great straits, so, if mercy prevent not, threatens dreadful famine. As likewise considering the sadly distressed state of some of the Reformed Churches abroad under grievous persecution, and the dangerous condition of others of them, which loudly call for our humbling ourselves for our own sins, and for sympathy with others, and frequent prayer for ourselves and them; have, therefore, thought it a necessary and seasonable duty to set apart, and hereby do set apart and appoint the day of March next, being Thursday, for solemn humiliation and prayer, that God would pardon our sins, turn away and avert his wrath from this and other churches—command deliverance for his afflicted people under persecution—bless and preserve our King, under whose government we enjoy so much peace and tranquillity, and liberty of Gospel ordinances, dispensed with purity and freedom—that God may continue the same with us, and bless the Gospel with success—grant a seasonable seed-time, and bless the seed with increase, that the poor may be satisfied with bread;—obtesting and beseeching all ranks of persons to search and try their ways, and, by unfeigned repentance and reformation, turn to the Lord with all their heart, that the Lord may return to us, and have mercy upon us and the land: And it is most seriously recommended to all ministers to be very explicit and particular in the acknowledgment of the national and epidemic crying sins, especially those that seem to abound in the respective places where ministers serve. And the General Assembly ordains all ministers to intimate this publicly from the pulpit a Sabbath or two before the said day of humiliation. And, lastly, the General Assembly appointed, and hereby appoints, Mr William Dunlop, Mr George Meldrum, Mr John Law, Mr Thomas Wilkie, Mr Gabriel Semple, Ministers; Mr John Campbell, brother to the Earl of Argyle, Sir John Riddel of that Ilk, Sir Thomas Kilpatrick of Closeburn, and John Alexander of Blackhouse, Ruling Elders; to apply to the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council for their civil sanction to the observation of the said fast, and leaves it to their Lordships to name the day of the month of March for the said fast.

Sess. 9, January 30, 1699, ante meridiem.—Act against Profaneness.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the overtures against profaneness, passed by the last Assembly, January 24, 1698, Sess. 15, and having heard the report of commissioners present from the several Presbyteries of this National Church, to whom the consideration of the said overtures were recommended; and the General Assembly being well and ripely advised thereanent, did, by their vote, and hereby do, approve of these overtures after mentioned, whereof the tenor follows:—

1. The General Assembly, considering the lamentable growth of profanity, ignorance, and irreligion, that is too manifest in this land, and the woful decay of the life and power of godliness, with the small success of the Gospel, that is to be observed every where at this time, the General Assembly, in a deep sense of these things, and for the remedying of them, do, in the first place, in the awe and dread of God, beseech, exhort, and require all ministers, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and our gathering together unto him, that they take heed to themselves and to their doctrine, and endeavour to be ensamples to the people in all piety, purity, and holiness, and in all manner of conversation.

2. That they be frequent and fervent in secret prayer for themselves and the people committed to them, joining sometimes fasting with prayer. And the General Assembly recommends to ministers and elders in their several parishes, and ministers in their several presbyteries, to meet sometimes together in their parishes and presbyteries respectively, for private fasting and prayer, and conference anent the state of the Church, and that part of it in which they have special interest, with respect to the growth or decay of godliness, and success of the Gospel therein.

3. That Presbyteries be more accurate in managing their privy censures, and that a day be set apart for that purpose only, and spent in fasting and prayer together.

4. That Presbyteries be very cautious in admitting intrants to the ministry, and be accurate and exact in the trial, not only of their literature, but of their piety, prudence, and former godly conversation and walk.

5. That ministers be painful in catechising, frequent in visiting of families, and in private personal conference with those of their charge about the state of their souls, and that ministers be more frequent in administration of the Lord's Supper, and always edifying in their converse and discourse; and that they deal with heads of families to engage them to piety, and a care to reform their families, and to set up and to keep up the worship of God therein; and, in particular, that ministers endeavour, by all prudent and gaining Gospel methods, to engage persons of honour and power to fall in love with holiness, and reckon it, as indeed it is, their greatest honour; and that, in dealing with such of them as are vicious, an humble and yet holy boldness and zeal be used in admonishing them, in order to their recovery; and that herein Presbyteries appoint some others of their number to concur with the minister of the place as may be most for edification.

6. The General Assembly recommends to the Kirk Sessions and Presbyteries the vigorous, impartial, and yet prudent exercise of Church discipline against all immorality, especially drunkenness and filthiness, cursing and swearing, and profaning the Lord's Day, which too much abound; and that they apply to the magistrate for the execution of the good laws made against immorality and profaneness.

7. That seeing it is observed, that in burghs, especially those of greatest resort, as Edinburgh, many sit too late in taverns, especially on the Saturday night, and men of business pretend they do it for relaxation of their minds, through which some neglect the public worship on the Lord's Day in the forenoon, and others attend the worship drowsily; therefore, the General Assembly recommends to all ministers where such sinful customs are, to represent to the people, both publicly and privately, the sin and evil thereof, and to call them to redeem that time, which they have free from business, and to employ it for converse with God about their soul's state, and in preparation for the Sabbath, which will yield more delight than all sensual pleasures can do.

And the General Assembly beseecheth and exhorteth all magistrates of burghs to be assistant to ministers in inquiring into and reforming such abuses.

And suchlike, the General Assembly revives the act of the General Assembly, dated the 11th January 1697, Sess. 8, entitled, "Act against Profaneness," and approves of the overture therein contained, anent censuring such ministers and members of sessions as are negligent in pursuing scandals.

And the General Assembly recommends and enacts the punctual observation of the said acts and overtures, and obedience thereto by all Presbyteries, ministers, elders, and sessions, as they are concerned in their several stations, as they will be answerable.

VIII.

Sess. 10, Eodem die, post meridiem.—Act against Popery.

The General Assembly taking into consideration the overtures against Popery, passed in the last Assembly, January 24, 1698, the tenor whereof follows:—

1. That ministers study Popish controversies more.
2. That all due endeavours be used to unite Protestants amongst themselves, seeing the adversaries get advantage by our division.
3. That ministers endeavour faithfully to watch the flock committed to them, and by public preaching, and private instruction and conference, to prevent apostasy that way.
4. That ministers deal wisely and convincingly with the consciences of those that have fallen to Popery and other corrupt principles, for their recovery.
5. That when other means are ineffectual, Presbyteries would proceed to Church censures, when they see it may be for the edification of the Church.
6. That according to the acts of former General Assemblies, and acts of Parliament, the names of Popish priests and Jesuits, and trafficking Papists, and of those who have sent their children to Popish colleges and countries, be given in to each Provincial Synod, and by them transmitted, as Act, Charles II., Parl. 3, cap. 6.
7. That the General Assembly apply to the Privy Council for the vigorous execution of the laws against Papists, particularly seminary priests, Popish schoolmasters, mistresses, governors, and pedagogues, and Popish meetings; and for seeing to the raiing up of Popish youth in the Protestant religion; in all which, some inferior magistrates are justly complained of, as very defective; and that the said address be presented by such as the General Assembly shall appoint.

And the General Assembly having heard the opinion of the commissioners from the several Presbyteries concerning the said overtures, and finding that there was no objection made against any thing therein contained; and that application being made to the Lords of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, conform to the seventh paragraph of the said overtures, their Lordships were graciously pleased to emit a proclamation thereupon against Papists; and the General Assembly being well and ripely advised anent the premises, they by their vote unanimously did, and hereby do, approve of the said overtures, and appoint the same to have the full force and strength of an act of the General Assembly, and to be observed in all time coming, and ordain application to be made to the civil magistrate, conform to the said seventh paragraph, as often as need requires.

IX.

Eodem Sessione.—Act anent Planting of the Highlands.

The General Assembly took into their consideration the overtures passed in the last General Assembly, January 24, 1698, Sess. 15, entitled, "Overtures for Planting the Highlands;" the tenor whereof follows:—

1. That ministers and probationers who have the Irish language be sent to the Highland parishes, and that none of them be settled in the Low Country till the Highland places be first provided.

2. That ministers and ruling elders who have the Irish language be appointed to visit these parts.

3. That where in any Highland congregation many understand English, and there used once a day to be a sermon in English, Presbyteries be careful to supply them sometimes by preaching in English; and that they catechize them who understand not, by an interpreter, when they cannot get one to preach to them in Irish; and that those, whether ministers or probationers, who have somewhat of the Irish language, but not a facility to preach in it, be sent to these places for the ends foresaid, that by converse they may learn more of the language, and ability to instruct therein.

4. That English schoolmasters be erected in all Highland parishes, according to former acts of Parliament and General Assemblies; and for this end, the General Assembly recommends to their commission to address the King and Parliament, to take such course for this, and other pious uses, in the more northern Highland places, as is granted to these of Argyle, and that as they shall think fit.

5. That it be recommended to Presbyteries and Universities to have a special regard in the disposal of their bursaries for educating such as it is hoped may be useful to preach the Gospel in the Highlands; and that the commission address the Lords of the Treasury, and recommend the same to the Town Council of Edinburgh, and other patrons, for this end.

And the General Assembly, having heard the report and the opinion of the commissioners present from the several Presbyteries anent the said overtures, did, by their vote, and hereby do unanimously approve thereof, and appoint and recommend according thereto; with this addition, that the Presbyteries of Dumbarton, Dunblane, Auchterarder, Dunkeld, Inverness, Abernethy, Aberlour, Tain, Dingwall, Dornoch, and Caithness, are hereby enjoined to have bursars who have the Highland language, if they can be had, and that the universities where such students are be wrote to, to give an account what students having that language they know of, that deserve encouragement; and that they recommend them to any of the above Presbyteries, and that care be taken that any so to be recommended be piously disposed, and of sound principles.

X.

Sess. 11, January 31, 1699, ante meridiem.—Recommendation to Presbyteries and Synods anent Schools.

The General Assembly, considering that there are many good laws and acts of Parliament, and acts of General Assemblies, for erecting schools in every parish, and ways laid down for maintaining thereof, and being informed that, notwithstanding thereof, there are several parishes, even in the Lowlands, that want schools; therefore, the General Assembly did, and hereby do, recommend to the several Presbyteries within this National Church to use their endeavours that schools be erected in every parish within their respective bounds, conform to the acts of Parliament and General Assembly; and it is recommended to Synods to make particular inquiry how this recommendation is observed.

XI.

Sess. 16, February 3, 1699, ante meridiem.—Overtures for Planting the North, with the approbation thereof.

The which day there was read in presence of the General Assembly the overtures underwritten, which were transmitted to the General Assembly by their Committee for Overtures, and upon the 31st of January last read in open Assembly, and the consideration thereof remitted to the said Committee, and any persons that had any thing to offer thereanent were desired to attend that Committee, and represent the same to them; the tenor of which overtures follows:—

1. That any of the twenty probationers appointed by the last General Assembly, who have not obeyed in going North, or not stayed in the North twelve months, but returned from it without the allowance of the Presbytery of the bounds where they were sent, shall, upon the desire of that Presbytery to the Presbytery where they now reside, be sent back to fulfil the twelve months.

2. That when any one of those who were born on the North side of Tay is licensed by any Presbytery on the South side of Tay, he be sent North by that Presbytery within four months after his licensing, and it be remitted to the Commission to appoint the place to which he should go, and the time of his stay; and that no probationers born on the North side of Tay be settled in any congregation as minister be-South Tay, until the next General Assembly, unless they be of those who have been twelve months in the North, according to the appointment of the last General Assembly; but such who, during the twelve months of their mission, having received no call from any congregation in the North, are declared free to come South, and accept of an orderly call from any congregation in the South side of Tay; it is also allowed to the town of Edinburgh, that if they call any North country probationer, he may be settled in that city, notwithstanding of this overture.

3. And the General Assembly hereby discharge any Presbytery on the South side of Tay to settle any probationer born on the North side of Tay within the fore-said time, except in the cases above excepted; with certification that the Presbytery shall be censured by the Commission or General Assembly; and the probationer so settled is hereby declared, ipso facto, transportable, and that the Commission of this Assembly appoint him immediately to repair to the North, and any place thereof they think fit, as an extraordinary supply, and if a call be given to him, the Commission transport him to the North.

4. It is overtured that other twenty probationers be sent this year to the North also, and of these twenty, as many as can be had of such who were born on the North side of Tay, and that they be sent in the proportion following, viz., three to the Presbytery of Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld; six for the province of Angus and Mearns, because there are most vacancies there; four to the province of Aberdeen; three to the province of Moray; two to Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness; and two to Orkney; and that there be a committee of one or two out of each Synod to nominate these twenty probationers, or the same referred to the Commission.

5. That these probationers so nominated go how soon possible without delay to the places to which they are sent, and to stay in the North for twelve months; and it is hereby referred to the commission to be appointed by this Assembly, to consider and determine of the provinces they should go to, and of the time of their stay and abode in each province.

6. That for the encouragement of each probationer who shall be thus sent, and to help to defray the charges of his journey, the General Assembly do allow, out of the King's gift for defraying the public expenses of the Church, to those who go to Perth, Auchterarder, and Dunkeld, 40 pounds each one; to those who go to Angus, 50 pounds; to those who go to Aberdeen, 100 merks; to those who go to Moray, 80 pounds; to those who go to Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness, 100 pounds; to those who go to Orkney, 200 merks.

7. That these probationers be obliged to accept of calls, whether popular or Presbyterial, when presented to them by the Presbyteries of any of the said provinces; with certification, if they refuse the same, the Presbyteries within whose bounds they are called shall have power to take their licence from them until the next Assembly; yet that it be recommended to all Presbyteries not to make use of a jus devolutum for the planting any congregation till all other means be essayed.

8. That, besides these probationers, there be sent from the Synods of the South some actual ministers for the supply of the North; and seeing diverse places of the North are better planted than formerly, the number of these ministers to be sent for this year for each four months be eleven, in manner after following, five to Angus and Mearns, four to Aberdeen province, two to Moray, out of the Synods following, viz., from the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale two, to the province of Angus; out of the Synod of Lothian three, two to Aberdeen, and one to Moray; out of the Synod of Glasgow four, two to Angus, and two to Aberdeen; out of the Synod of Fife two, one to Moray, and one to Angus, and if the Commission find it needful to send one to Caithness, they be empowered to send one from the Synod of Lothian for the months of April, May, and June, and one from the Synod of Glasgow for July, August, and September.

9. That when an orderly call is designed to any minister on the South side of Tay, by any of the places privileged by the 8th act of the last General Assembly, yet vacant, the process of transportation may be carried on after the same manner prescribed in the said act; and the Assembly renews the recommendation mentioned in the said act to all judicatories, who shall have occasion to judge in any of these transportations; and that they have a special respect to those places privileged by the Assembly when they represent any call, seeing ministers are freed from the fear of Presbyterial calls.

10. That in regard of the vacancies of the town of Aberdeen, and that place is so considerable, and of such influence on the Northern parts, the General Assembly recommends to the Synods of Lothian and Glasgow, that at least one of their supplies each quarter for the province of Aberdeen be a grave and experienced man, suited for the supply of the town of Aberdeen; and that when the town of Aberdeen presents a call to a minister before any church judicatory, they have a special and tender regard to the planting of that place; and likewise, the General Assembly doth recommend to and appoint Mr William Moncreiff, minister at Largo, to go and supply the town of Aberdeen for the months of April and May, and this over and besides the ordinary supply of that Synod.

11. That Mr Hugh M'Henry and Mr John Macculloch be sent to Angus or Perth, and have the allowance for their journey out of the King's gift.

12. That it be referred to the Commission to send Mr Robert Burnet to Angus after May next.

13. That seeing it is regretted by some who are sent as supplies, that they have much toil in travelling betwixt the vacant parishes of the Presbyteries of Strathbogie and Presbytery seat of Moray: Therefore, the Assembly recommends to the united Presbyteries of Turriff, Fordyce, and Alford, to take care of the supplies of these vacant parishes, with the concurrence of Mr William Chalmers, minister at Gartly, until the next General Assembly; but that the planting of these vacant parishes be with the consent and concurrence of the Presbytery of Moray, seeing the Presbytery of Strathbogie is within the bounds of the province of Moray: And that it be recommended to the Commission to send up one probationer more, if they have need; and if any difficulty arise in planting parishes, it be referred to the Commission.

14. That it be recommended to Presbyteries to be careful that the allowance granted by the act of Parliament to them who supply the North be punctually paid; and that the Presbytery be careful to provide commodious places for ministers and probationers, where they may reside when sent to supply any parish, seeing they are to stay there for some time ; and to catechize the people according to the 16th act of the General Assembly, January 12, 1697, Sess. 10 et ult., paragraph 8.

15. That it be recommended to the Synods of Dumfries, Merse, and Glasgow, to supply the Presbyteries of Wigton and Stranraer with ministers and probationers, and that they be careful to send such as, for prudence and piety, may be judged fittest for that country ; and that it be recommended, in particular, to Mr John Good, minister of the Gospel, to go to Galloway, in case that he be not shortly settled in a parish elsewhere.

And the General Assembly having duly and maturely considered the said overtures, they, by their vote, unanimously did, and hereby do, approve of the same, and recommends, refers, and appoints, according thereto, in all points.

XII.

Sess. 17, Feb. 3, 1699, post meridiem.—Approbation of the Actings and Proceedings of the Commission appointed by the General Assembly, 1698.

The General Assembly having this day had re-produced in their presence the register of the actings and proceedings of the commissioners appointed by the last Assembly, and having heard the report of a committee of this Assembly's own number, that were not members of the said Commission, but appointed to revise, examine, and consider the said register, with their observations thereupon, all the members of the said Commission were removed, and Mr James Hutcheson was chosen Moderator, and Mr David Ewing Clerk, pro tempore, (the Moderator and Clerk of this Assembly being members of the said Commission, and therefore removed ;) and the General Assembly, having seriously considered the said report and answers made by the moderator and other members of the Commission to the said observations, and finding thereby that the whole actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said commissioners, contained in the register, subscribed by Mr John Moncrieff, clerk thereto, beginning at page 169, and ending at page 354, do evidence much wisdom, prudence, and diligence, and that the said Commission have proceeded orderly and formally in everything, according to their commission and instructions, and that the said register is very accurate ; therefore, this General Assembly, by an unanimous vote, did, and hereby do, ratify and approve the said whole actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said commissioners, contained in the said register thereof, beginning January 15, 1698, and ending January 18, 1699, inclusive of both days ; and the members of the Commission being called in, the same was intimated to them, and the moderator gave them the thanks of this Assembly for their good service, and then the moderator and clerk of this Assembly took their place.

XIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent subscribing the Confession of Faith.

The General Assembly recommends to all Synods and Presbyteries to inquire what ministers or probationers, or schoolmasters, within their respective bounds, have not subscribed the Confession of Faith, conform to former acts of the General Assembly, as the confession of their faith ; that those who have not done it may be put thereto, and thinks it necessary that there be a new impression of the Confession of Faith in folio for that end.

XIV.

Sess. 18 et ultima, February 4, 1699, ante meridiem.—Commission by the General Assembly to some Ministers and Elders, for Planting of vacant Kirks in the North, and other Affairs referred to them.

The General Assembly of this National Church, considering that there are yet many vacant churches on the North side of Tay, as likewise that there are several weighty affairs which the said Assembly cannot overtake; therefore, the General Assembly finds it needful that there be a commission granted to some ministers and elders for planting these vacant kirks, and doing what other affairs shall be referred to them, and for that end do hereby nominate and appoint Mr Andrew Roger, minister at Galston, &c. &c., to be Commissioners of the General Assembly, to the effect after mentioned, with full power, &c. (The powers granted to the Commission are the same as in 1698.)

XV.

Eadem Sessione.—Instructions to the Commission appointed by the General Assembly for Planting the vacant Churches in the North, &c.

1. That this Commission do what in them lies to render effectual the overtures passed the last Assembly, for the more speedy planting of the North, and exercise all the power that is committed to them for that effect, except in so far as they are, or shall be altered by this Assembly; and that they cognosce and finally determine in all references made to them by this Assembly, and in all appeals for transporting ministers to the North, which shall be orderly brought in to them, according to the above or any other overtures passed in this Assembly.

2. That this Commission, as often as they see cause, apply to the Government, or any magistrate, for their countenancing of and concurrence with the judicatories of the Church, in what the law allows, particularly for settling vacant churches, redressing any grievances which may fall out, and that they correspond with the State anent fasts and thanksgivings, as occasion requires, and to specify the causes thereof.

3. That when any ministers, who served under the late Prelacy, whose lives and doctrines may render them useful to this Church, do apply for reception to the Government, the Assembly do empower and recommend to this Commission, and the other judicatories of this Church competent, that they may be ready to receive them, according to former acts of the Assembly.

4. That this Commission may dispose of his Majesty's gifts to this Church, and in the disposal thereof that they do particularly take care that the encouragement granted by this Assembly to the probationers who are to go to the North to preach be rendered effectual; and that they cause defray the extraordinary charges that several ministers of the North have been at, in carrying on the planting of the North, and other public affairs of the Church there; and for the defraying the charges of such ministers or probationers as shall yet be sent to Orkney, or other remote parts of the North.

5. That this Commission, on the desire of Presbyteries or Synods, or as they shall see cause, may appoint committees upon occasion, for visitation of particular kirks and Presbyteries, or trial of persons, and do all things proper for any visitation, who are to act in conjunction with the Presbytery of the bounds; and that they proceed to censure as they see cause.

6. The Commission is to give advice and assistance to any Synod or Presbytery applying to them in difficult cases.

7. That this Commission inquire who are defective in sending supplies to the North, and see them fulfil their mission, and that they endeavour that the supplies appointed by this Assembly be made effectual, under the certifications contained in acts of prior Assemblies thereanent, and, for this effect, that each Synod and Presbytery send in quarterly to the Commission an account of the names of the persons they appoint for supplies, and the places to which they are sent; and that another double thereof be each four months sent to the Presbytery or Province to which they send.

8. That this Commission shall have power to add to or alter the instructions given to the Presbyteries of Orkney and Zetland, as they shall see cause, particularly with reference to transportation of ministers, because of the sad circumstances that some ministers there are in; that they be ready to give advice and assistance to these Presbyteries as they are required, because they have not Synods in these bounds.

XVI.

Eadem Sessione.—Overtures for promoting the Knowledge of God in the Highlands, and for rendering the Act made Sess. 10 of this Assembly the more effectual.

1. That each Presbytery give up yearly to the General Assembly a distinct account of probationers and students of divinity within their bounds who have the Irish language.

2. That inquiry be made what ministers are settled in the Lowlands who have the Irish language, that they may be sent on supply to vacant and Highland places; and if they get orderly calls they be transported to the Highlands.

3. That seeing a great number of Bibles have been, on the charges of diverse charitable persons in England, and some in Scotland, translated and printed in the Irish language, and sent down to this kingdom to be dispersed, chiefly for the use of the poor, and many of them are not yet distributed, and diverse parishes in the Highland parts have gotten none of them, it be recommended to Mr David Blair, Mr William Crichton, Mr John Law, Mr Gilbert Rule, Mr George Meldrum, Mr John Moncreiff, Mr George Hamilton, Moderator, and to the Earls of Sutherland and Tullibardine, the Lord Aberuchill, and Laird of Grant, to inquire how many of these Bibles, whether printed in the Roman or Irish character, are already distributed, and how, and to whom, and how many do yet remain, and to make distribution of them to different parts of the Church, in such proportion as may be most for edification; and that they be delivered and distributed by the order of any three of this committee, on sufficient receipt by the receiver, and that Presbyteries and ministers of each parish be careful of the due distribution of what is received, and an account thereof sent to the next General Assembly.

5. That seeing it is informed there were 1000 pounds Scots given by the Lords of his Majesty's Treasury for binding of these Bibles, and other charges anent them, it be recommended to the foresaid committee, or to the commission, to inquire to whom that money was given, and on what terms, and how employed; and if there be any of it yet remaining, after the defraying of the charges foresaid, that it be allotted for the help of a fund for a new impression.

6. That it be recommended to the Synod of Argyle to translate the Confession of Faith of this Church, and the Larger Catechism, in the Irish language, the Lesser Catechism and Psalms being translated already in that language; and that they exactly notice any typographical errors which may be found in the late impression of the Bible in the Highland language, that they may be amended in a new impression.

12. And that these committees visit the kirks, manses, glebes, and, if need be, perambulate the parishes, and consider how they may be more commodiously divided or annexed; or where there is need of new erections, and how the same may be most conveniently accomplished.

13. And that they visit the schools within the said bounds, and endeavour to get schools erected, according to the act of Parliament, where they are not; and apply to those who have the care and charge of disposing of the King's gift out of the Bishopric of Dunkeld, or any other gift his Majesty may grant to other places for that end, that where it is needful they may have more schools in one parish, where it is large and spacious, than those provided by act of Parliament.

14. And that they do all and every thing proper for a committee for visitation to do, and to report their diligence to the next General Assembly, and from time to time to the commission appointed by this Assembly, who are hereby empowered to give them advice on all occasions, and to draw the several commissions to the respective committees, to the effect above specified, and appoint the time and place of their first meeting respectively; with power to the commission to add such of their number as they shall think fit; with power also to the above mentioned committees to choose their own moderators and clerks, and to appoint the diets and places of their after-meetings.

15. That the King be addressed for the effect of his royal munificence, in favour of the more northern Highland places, as he hath done to the Synods of Argyle and Perth; and the concurrence of the nobility and gentry concerned be desired for this end.

The General Assembly having several times heard and considered the above-written overtures, they by their vote unanimously did, and hereby do, approve thereof; and appoints, refers, and recommends, according thereto, in all points.

Sess. 12, February 14, 1700, post meridiem.—Act anent a Solemn National Fast and Humiliation.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into their serious consideration the many dreadful tokens of the Lord's anger, evidenced particularly in the continued pinching dearth, (notwithstanding of a favourable harvest, and relief thereby in some measure,) whereby the number of the poor and their necessities have been and are greatly increased;—the great and unusual sickness and mortality which hath gone over all the land, and doth yet in part continue;—the rebukes from God on the nation, in disappointing several undertakings to advance the trade and wealth thereof, and particularly in several cross providences that the African and Indian Company's Colony in America hath met with, notwithstanding of the many fervent prayers made in their behalf;—and by a stupendous burning, within these few days, of so considerable a part of Edinburgh, the capital city of the kingdom;—and, lastly, under all these, by the woful heart-plagues of impenitency and security: And considering that all the judgments we groan under are the sad effects and bitter fruits of our heinous sins against God, such as the fearful backslidings and persecutions of the late times, mentioned in our former causes of humiliation, and not yet sufficiently mourned for, our continued unfaithfulness to God, notwithstanding of our Solemn Covenants and Engagements, and many professed resolutions to the contrary; the Atheistical and execrable principles, subversive of all religion, so much vented and spread amongst us—the gross immoralities of uncleanness of all sorts, drunkenness, swearing, Sabbath-breaking, and unrighteous dealing among men, and that amongst persons of all ranks and qualities, and these abounding and continued in, notwithstanding of many endeavours used to reclaim and reform transgressors—the excessive prodigality and profuseness of some, when others are afflicted with so much want and poverty—the great slighting of Christ, offered in the Gospel, and not receiving of him in our hearts, and walking worthy of him in our lives and conversations—the great contempt and despising of church discipline—the froward opposition in many places to the planting of churches and the progress of the Gospel—our ungrateful forgetfulness of the merciful and signal deliverances that God hath wrought for us, and our repining at God's afflicting providences, instead of submitting to his mighty hand lifted up against us: And the Assembly, likewise considering the deplorable state of the reformed Churches in France, Piedmont, the Palatinate, and other places, where our brethren, and the reformation among them, are either brought to desolation and ruin, or are in extreme danger, by cruel and long continued antichristian persecution; which, instead of abating upon the late peace of Europe, the great benefit of which we enjoy, hath, on the contrary, greatly increased: Therefore, the General Assembly, under the serious and deep sense of the above mentioned sins and judgments, hath thought fit to set apart a day for solemn fasting and humiliation, and the exercise of repentance and unfeigned purposes of amendment, which they appoint to be kept upon the day of March next to come, being the Thursday of the said month, over this whole Church and kingdom; beseeching and obtesting all the Lord's people, sincerely and seriously to prepare themselves thereto, as in the sight of the holy and jealous God, lest either carelessness, formality, or sinister ends, turn our performances into sin, and, by adding to the provocation, draw upon us yet more dreadful strokes; and that they make more particular confession of the fore-mentioned sins and all others, with a deep sorrowing for and hearty detestation of the same; as also, with humble submission to, and acceptance of, the punishment of our iniquities in the judgments above mentioned, or any others that may be peculiar to congregations or particular persons: And that every one, in the most sincere and unfeigned manner, resolve and vow amendment, both of themselves and others, as may be incumbent upon them, whether as magistrates or ministers, or otherwise, in their respective stations: And that all and every one do, in like manner, resolve and vow the bringing forth fruits meet for repentance in their after lives, carriages, and administrations; — that fervent application be made and continued in to the throne of grace, through our Lord Jesus Christ, for the pardon of sin to each particular person, and to the whole land;—that earnest prayers and supplications be made that the Lord would graciously return to us in Gospel ordinances, and by the breathings of his Spirit render them more savingly successful;—that our rulers and ministers, and all others, may be directed and animated to more effectual and vigorous endeavours for discouraging, suppressing, and punishing, all ungodliness, and for reforming both themselves and the land without exception;—that our King may be long continued a happy instrument for God's glory, and for the benefit and comfort of this nation;—that he may be blessed and preserved in his person and government, and all wicked designs and contrivances against either may be discovered, prevented, and confounded;—that all dissension, jealousy, and discord, may cease, and we all become one in the Lord;—that bowels of compassion may be drawn forth for relief of the poor and needy, and proper means effectually used for recovering them from idleness and want, and reducing them to labour and order;—that the spring and seed-time may be blessed;—that God would countenance and bless, and bring to a happy issue, all just and lawful designs and endeavours for advancing the trade of the nation; and be graciously pleased to preserve, protect, and prosper, those who are lately gone from us upon the great national concern of a plantation abroad, and that the same may, through the Divine blessing and favour, prove a happy and successful mean for propagating the Gospel, and converting the heathen in those parts;—and that the ministers sent from this Church may be supported and strengthened for their work, and ever encouraged in the Lord against all difficulties, and we refreshed with a comfortable account of them, and all with them;—that our brethren in captivity anywhere may be comforted and relieved; that losses both at home and abroad may be sanctified, and also made up unto those who most immediately suffer by them. And, lastly, that our Protestant brethren of the neighbouring churches under persecution, may be supported and refined in the furnace, preserved faithful in adhering to the truth, and in the Lord's good time delivered.

Some members of the Assembly being appointed to apply to the Lords of his Majesty's Privy Council for their Lordships' civil sanction to the Fast, and for naming the day, did, upon the 16th day of February 1700, report, that their Lordships had granted their civil sanction, and named the 28th day of March next, being the last Thursday of that month, for the said Fast, and ordered a Proclamation to be emitted thereant.

Sess. 13, February 15, 1700, ante meridiem.—Letter from the General Assembly to Mr Alexander Shields, Mr Francis Boreland, Mr Archibald Stobo, and Mr Alexander Dalgleish.

Reverend and dearly beloved Brethren,

We, the ministers and elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland, are much refreshed with the account given us, by the Commission of the preceding Assembly, of your ready submission and willingness to undertake the hazardous but honourable service upon which they sent you, and with what we have heard since our meeting, by letters of November 9, from one of yourselves to some of our number, of your being got safe forward in your voyage the length of Mountscrat; that, through the mercy of God, you were then still alive and most of you in health, though dangerous sickness had afflicted you and many of your company by the way, and carried some off by death.

At your setting out, you could not but reckon upon losses and difficulties, but we heartily bless our God with you, that they have not been sorer and greater. We would not omit this occasion, offering at the very time of our sitting, to assure you, our dear brethren, that you are much upon our hearts, and the hearts of all the godly in this Church, who cease not to pour out fervent prayers at the throne of grace in your behalf, and in the behalf of the great Gospel work in which you are engaged.

We have with sorrow heard of the distresses that came upon our countrymen who went before you, and therein cannot but be sensible of the displeasure of the righteous Lord, justly gone forth against them and us, for our and their iniquities, as loudly calling us all to humiliation and reformation, to dependance on and trust in the Lord.

We doubt not but you are endeavouring to improve so bitter and astonishing dispensations to the same blessed ends, both upon your own spirits and those of your people, and so as not to faint under the chastisements and rebukes of Providence, but to encourage yourselves in the Lord your God, who, though he smite for sin, yet will return in mercy to a penitent reforming people. He will, according to his promise, make the ends of the earth to see his salvation, and we hope will yet honour you and this Church, from which you are sent to carry his name among the heathen. We are likewise exceedingly grieved to consider that there was so much profanity and irreligion observable in the company that you went with, which we fear doth in great measure continue, and is a heavy burden and grief of heart to you; yet it is comfortable to hear that there are serious and godly persons among you, whom we desire, together with you, to encourage in the Lord, and that you may persevere in your joint endeavours for reclaiming the rest; in order to which, we hope these here shall not be wanting, by taking all suitable care for the future, both with respect to those who may hereafter be sent to you, and by sending requisite instructions from hence for strengthening your hands.

We have appointed a day of solemn national humiliation and prayer to be set apart in this your mother church, for several weighty causes, and, among the rest, upon your account, and have ordered that continual mention be made of you in public prayers; and we hope that, through the mercies of our gracious God, you being safely arrived in Caledonia or to any happy settlement, where God, in his providence, shall direct, you have not omitted the instructions given you by the late Commission, of keeping a day, together with all the people there, for solemn prayer and fasting, bewailing former sins, renewing baptismal engagements, and, with the greatest seriousness, dedicating yourselves and the land unto the Lord: And that you do not neglect to pray daily for the Church of Scotland by name, and to pray for and stir up the people under your charge to be dutiful and loyal to our and their Sovereign Lord, King William.

We know the Commission hath given you such farther instructions as may be of use in the various exigencies of your work, and expect you will be careful, by every occasion, to transmit an account of your whole state to the Commission, we resolve to leave for your and other affairs, who, we doubt not, will acquaint you from time to time, as occasion may offer, of what may be further condescended on for your encouragement.

And now, dear brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might; to whose rich grace and tender mercies we commend you, and his honourable work in your hands, earnestly praying that you may be preserved, directed, and supported by Him, and not terrified through any amazement, but established in your duty, and your labours crowned with success.

Signed in the name, and at the appointment, of the National Assembly of the Church of Scotland, by

D. BLAIR, Moderator,
JO. BANNATYNE, Clerk.

Directed—To the Rev. Mr Alexander Shields, Mr Francis Boreland, Mr Archibald Stobo, and Mr Alexander Dalgleish, the Ministers sent by the Commission of the former Assembly to the African and Indian Company's Colony in Caledonia, in America, or wherever they are.

Recommended to the care of the Directors of the said Company.

Sess. 14, February 15, 1700, post meridiem.—Act of the General Assembly, and Reference to the Commission thereof, in favour of the Presbyteries of Caithness, Orkney, and Zetland.

The General Assembly, considering that the brethren of the Presbyteries of Caithness, Orkney, and Zetland, are but few in number, and that they cannot conveniently meet in a Synod for mutual advice and assistance, do, therefore, continue the advices and instructions given to the said Presbyteries at their erection, and refers to the Commission of the General Assembly at Edinburgh, to add to or alter the same, as they shall find cause; and empowers the said Commission to give advice and assistance to the said Presbyteries, or any of them, as they shall be applied unto or find needful; and to determine in all references, appeals, or petitions, made or to be made to them by the said Presbyteries, or any minister or parish within the bounds of the said three Presbyteries: And, particularly, to be assisting in purging and planting kirks, and in application to the civil magistrate for repairing and building kirks and manses, and settling of schools in these bounds; and likewise, to send probationers to the said Presbyteries, and give them the allowance appointed by the last Assembly and Commission thereof, upon application for that effect; and, in general, to do all things needful, with respect to the said Presbyteries, that other commissions might have done, or that was committed to them by former Assemblies.

VIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Approbation of the Actings and Proceedings of the Commission appointed by the General Assembly, 1699.

The General Assembly, having this day had reproduced in their presence the register of the actings and proceedings of the Commissioners appointed by the late Assembly, and having heard the report of a committee of this Assembly's own number, that were not members of the said Commission, but appointed to revise, examine, and consider the said register, with their observations thereupon, all the members of the said Commission were desired to remove, and Mr John Lawrie was chosen Moderator, and Mr Thomas Russell, Clerk, pro tempore, the Moderator and Clerk of this Assembly having been members of the said Commission, and therefore removed; and the General Assembly having seriously considered the said report, and answers made by the Moderator of the Commission, and other members thereof, to the said observations, and finding thereby that the whole actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said Commissioners, contained in the registers subscribed by Mr John Bannatyne, Clerk thereto, beginning the sixth day of February last, and ending the thirty-first of January last, do evidence much wisdom, prudence, diligence, and faithfulness, and that the said Commission have proceeded orderly and formally in the things that came before them, according to their commission and instructions; therefore, this General Assembly, by their vote did, and hereby do, ratify and approve the said actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said Commissioners, contained in the register thereof; and the members of the Commission being called in, the same was intimated to them, and the Moderator gave them the thanks of this Assembly for their good service; and then the Moderator and Clerk of this Assembly did again take their places.

IX.

Sess. 15, February 16, 1700, ante meridiem.—Act aenent Revising of the Registers of Church Judicatories.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the overture transmitted by the late General Assembly to Presbyteries, concerning the revising of the registers of Church judicatories, and having heard the same several times read in their own presence; as also having heard the report of the Committee for Overtures concerning the opinion of Presbyteries thereanent; and the General Assembly considering the great import to this Church that all its registers be exact and well kept, do require all Provincial Synods and Presbyteries to be careful in revising of the registers of the judicatories under their immediate inspection; and that they appoint a competent number of the most fit and experienced ministers for that work; and when they find nothing to challenge in any register, they give the same the attestation following, viz. :—

“The Provincial Synod of _____ having heard the report of those appointed to revise the Presbytery book of _____, and having heard their remarks thereupon, and the said Presbytery’s answers thereto; and it having been inquired by the Moderator if any other had any complaints to make against the actings of the said Presbytery, and nothing appearing censurable, ordered the Clerk to attest this in their Presbytery book.”

And so for the registers of Provincial Synods and Kirk-Sessions, mutatis mutandis; but if there be anything truly censurable in the said book, and in itself material, with respect to discipline, that it be recorded as censured, both in the Synod book and attestation.

X.

Ealem Sessione.—Act anent Schoolmasters, Chaplains, Governors, and Pedagogues.

And it is hereby appointed that an account be given in every half year to the Presbytery by ministers, what schoolmasters, chaplains, governors, pedagogues, are in their respective parishes; and the General Assembly recommends to Masters of Colleges to take care and use their authority for the same ends, that the delinquents may be proceeded against by their respective Presbyteries, and censured upon clear evidence of their guilt.

XII.

The General Assembly of this National Church, taking into consideration how requisite it is that some ministers and elders be appointed for visitation of kirks on the North side of Tay, and discussing such affairs as this Assembly shall think fit to refer thereto; doth, therefore, by these presents, nominate, commission, and appoint, Mr Patrick Cumming, minister at Ormiston, Mr John Stirling at Greenock, Mr Hugh White at Larbert, Mr James Haddow, Professor of Divinity at St Andrews, Mr James Ramsay at Eyemouth, Mr Samuel Charters at Inverkeithing, Mr Joseph Drew at New Monkland, and Mr Andrew Brown at Spott, Ministers; Walter Stewart of Pardovan, and James Pringle of Buckholm, Ruling Elders; to be a commission of this Assembly for the effect foresaid, and appoints them to have their first meeting in the church of Dundee, upon the second Wednesday of June next, at two of the clock in the afternoon, and then to proceed through the provinces of Angus and Mearns, Aberdeen, Moray, and Ross. And the said Commission are hereby appointed to make inquiry what growth Popery makes in these bounds; and in case they find trafficking Papists or Priests, and Jesuits, in any of these bounds, that they apply to the magistrates of the place for execution of the laws against them. And the General Assembly exhorts and requires the said Commission to act deliberately in all their procedure, and for that end to stay a competent time in each province they come to, as the exigency of the bounds requires; and the Presbyteries of the several bounds are desired and required to prepare any business they have to be cognosed by the said Commission; and for that end to cite parties, in the name of the said Commission, to appear before the same, thereby to gain time. And in case the Commission find it convenient, that any of the brethren of the Presbyteries, in whose bounds they shall be for the time, concur with them to visit the bounds of the next Presbytery, that then, upon the Commission's desiring the same, the said Presbytery, in whose bounds they are, are hereby required to nominate some of their number to join with the said Commission in visiting the neighbouring Presbytery, and that they discuss all references and appeals that shall be remitted to them by this Assembly; and the said Commission are prohibited to meddle in any thing but what is hereby committed to them.  XV.

Sess. 17, February 19, 1700, ante meridiem.—Act anent Scandalous and Contumacious Persons.

The General Assembly took into their consideration the overture transmitted to Presbyteries by the late General Assembly, concerning scandalous and contumacious persons; and having heard the same read in their own presence, as also the report of the committee for overtures thereanent, and concerning the opinion of Presbyteries thereupon; the General Assembly did, by their vote, and hereby do, allow Presbyteries, if they find cause, to send in to the General Assembly, or Commission thereof, the names of scandalous persons, of whatever quality, guilty of gross immoralities, and contumacious to church discipline, with a full extract of the process, that they may proceed against them as they see cause.

 XVI.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the Method of making Overtures and Acts of the General Assembly.

The General Assembly took into their consideration the overtures transmitted to Presbyteries by the late Assembly, concerning the method of passing overtures and Acts of Assembly; and having heard the said overtures read in their own presence, as also the report of the committee for overtures thereanent, and concerning the opinion of Presbyteries thereupon; the General Assembly did, by their vote, and hereby do, enact and appoint, that when any thing of public concern and great weight is proposed to the General Assembly, to be passed as overtures or acts, for a standing rule to the Church, after the first reading, it be delayed till the next day of the Assembly's sitting, and lie on the table, to be seen and considered by all the members; and likewise, when any thing is passed as overtures by the General Assembly, it is ordained that all and every Presbytery read them publicly in their Presbyterial meeting once before the first meeting of the Synod next after the General Assembly, and consider of them; and that this be recorded in their Presbytery Book, and inquired into by their Synods in visiting Presbytery Books; as also, it is hereby recommended to all Presbyteries to send in an account of their judgment and opinion thereanent, with their Commissioners, to the General Assembly, in writing, but as briefly as may be, and the overtures to be printed after the Acts; and, lastly, it is hereby enacted and appointed, that each minister and kirk-session have a copy of all the printed Acts of the General Assembly, and that inquiry be made into this at Presbyterial and Synodical censures, and their diligence recorded.

The General Assembly took into their consideration the overture transmitted to Presbyteries by the late Assembly, against the printing of any paper to be presented to church judicatories without allowance; and having heard the said overtures in their own presence, as also the report of the committee for overtures thereanent, and concerning the opinion of Presbyteries thereupon, the General Assembly did, by their vote, and hereby do, prohibit and discharge any person or persons to presume to print any petition, address, appeal, reasons, or answers, or any part of any process, to be brought in to the General Assembly, or any other church judicatory, without leave given by the respective judicatories before whom the same is in dependence; with certification that no respect shall be had thereto, in case they contravene this by reading or considering the same.

 XVIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act Regulating the Reception of such as come off from Popery.

The General Assembly took into their consideration the overture transmitted to Presbyteries by the late Assembly concerning Papists, and having heard the same read in their own presence, as also the report of the committee for overtures thereanent, and concerning the opinion of Presbyteries thereupon: The General Assembly did judge, that a private acknowledgment of a Papist renouncing that religion verbally, is not sufficient to admit them to church privileges; and, therefore, appoints that the reception of any that comes off from Popery to the communion of this Church be the deed of a church judicatory, and that they subscribe the Confession of Faith as the confession of their faith.

 XIX.

Sess. 18, February 19, 1700, post meridiem.—Commission by the General Assembly to some Ministers and Elders, to meet at Edinburgh, for Planting Vacant Kirks in the North, and other Affairs referred to them.

XXIII.

Sess. 19, February 20, 1700, ante meridiem.—Commission to some Ministers and Elders for visiting the Presbytery of Middlebie.

The General Assembly, having heard the report of the Committee for Overtures, anent the grievances represented by the commissioners from the Presbytery of Middlebie, judged, that in regard the grievances of the said Presbytery are so exceedingly great, it is expedient that a committee should be appointed to go thither against the end of July to consider these grievances, and to do what they can for remedy thereof; and that betwixt and that time the Synod of Dumfries, either by themselves or committee, do what they can to remedy these grievances; and that, accordingly, if they obtain any good effect, the said Presbytery is to advertise the Committee of this Assembly not to come. And the General Assembly does hereby declare, that there shall be no transportations from that Presbytery till the next General Assembly, without their own consent, upon any calls to be given; but it is always declared that this is without prejudice of any processes already commenced. And the General Assembly nominates and appoints Mr Gabriel Semple, minister at Jedburgh, Mr John Bannatyne at Lanark, Mr George Mullekine at Moffat, Mr Matthew Reid at Northberwick, Mr Alexander Orrock at Hawick, Mr Nicol Edgar at Hobkirk, Mr James Guthrie at Irongray, and Mr Robert Blair at Holywood, Ministers; the Lairds of Falnash and Whitelaw, Ruling Elders; to be members of the said committee, to meet at Langholm the last Wednesday of July next, with the members of the said Presbytery of Middlebie: And the said committee are hereby empowered to choose their own moderator and clerk, and to proceed against all persons guilty of gross immoralities, according to the Acts of the General Assembly, and order and discipline of this Church, and to endeavour to remove the grievances of the brethren of the said Presbytery; and in order thereunto to visit the said Presbytery in the usual manner, and endeavour to obtain the assistance of persons of interest and quality in these parts, to render the actings and proceedings of church judicatories the more effectual; and this committee is to be accountable to and censurable by the next General Assembly.

 XXIV.

Sess. 20, February 20, 1700, post meridiem.—Act for rendering effectual the Supplies of the North.

The General Assembly does hereby declare that all former acts for rendering effectual the supply of the North with ministers, not expressly rescinded, shall be in full force; and refers to the Commission to see to the execution thereof.

 XXV.

Overtures transmitted by the General Assembly, held in the year 1700, to the several Presbyteries within this National Church, that they may consider the same, and send their opinion thereant to the next General Assembly, who may pass the same in Acts, if the more general opinion of this Church agree thereunto.

[These Overtures relate to "Commissioners to the General Assembly, and their subscribing the Confession of Faith," also to "Citations in Cases of Transportation of Ministers." They were passed into standing laws in 1704.]

 XXVI.

The next General Assembly of this National Church is to be held at Edinburgh, the 19th day of February 1701.

The Assembly being closed, the members were dismissed with prayer, singing the 122d Psalm, from 6th verse to the end, and pronouncing of the blessing.

THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AND BEGUN AT EDINBURGH, THE 19th DAY OF FEBRUARY 1701.

I.

Sess. 1, February 19, 1701.—The recording of His Majesty's Commission to William Earl of Annandale, for representing his Majesty's Royal Person in this Assembly.

This day, the General Assembly of the ministers and elders of this National Church being convened and constituted, there was produced to them by a noble Lord, William Earl of Annandale, his Majesty's commission, under the Great Seal of this kingdom, nominating and appointing him to be his Majesty's High Commissioner and representative in this National Assembly, which was publicly read in their audience, with all due honour and respect; and appointed to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, therein to remain ad futuram rei memoriam, the tenor whereof follows:—
“GULIELMUS,” &c.

II.

Eadem Sessione.—His Majesty's gracious Letter to the General Assembly.

The which day his Majesty's High Commissioner presented his Majesty's most gracious Letter directed to this General Assembly, which was publicly read in their hearing, with all due honour and respect, and appointed to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, the tenor whereof follows:—

WILLIAM R.

Right Reverend and well-beloved,

We greet you well. The proofs we have had of your affection to our person and government, and of your good conduct and management in the last and former Assemblies, gives us full confidence of your meeting at this time in the same good disposition. We think it not necessary, on this occasion, to repeat the assurances we have often given you of our resolution to maintain the government of the Church, as it is now established, not doubting but you are sufficiently convinced of it; as also of our readiness to countenance and protect you in your endeavours to preserve the purity of the Christian doctrine, to promote piety, and settle good order in the Church. We have thought fit to appoint our right trusty and entirely-beloved cousin and councillor, William Earl of Annandale, to represent our royal person in this Assembly, whose abilities and fitness to discharge this trust will (we doubt not) render him acceptable unto you; him we have fully instructed in what may be further necessary, and therefore you may give him entire trust and credit. So, recommending to you calmness and unanimity in your proceedings, and the avoiding unseasonable questions and debates, which you must be sensible may be of bad consequence in this juncture, we bid you heartily farewell.

Given at our Court at Kensington, the 7th day of February 1701, and of our reign the 12th year.

By his Majesty's Command,

RO. PRINGLE.

To the Right Reverend and well-beloved, the Moderator, Ministers, and Elders, of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

III.

Sess. 4, February 24, 1701, ante meridiem.—The General Assembly's Answer to His Majesty's gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

The renewed and repeated evidences of your Majesty's tender care and concern for this Church, so fully signified in your gracious Letter, have been received and entertained by us with all satisfaction and thankful acknowledgment. And we do further acknowledge the signal proof we have lately had thereof by your Majesty's giving the royal assent, in this last session of Parliament, to the acts therein made for ratifying and further confirming our Confession of Faith, and the present established Presbyterian government of this Church, for the more effectual preventing of the growth of Popery, and for suppressing profaneness and immoralities; all which do lay a new obligation on us to endeavour the preserving of the purity of the Christian doctrine, the promoting of piety, and the settling of good order in the Church, which we acknowledge to be already our duty, according to the trust committed to us by our great Lord and Master Jesus Christ, the only Head of this Church, and in doing whereof your Majesty is pleased to assure us of your royal protection and countenance. We are resolved also, by the grace of God, and through his strength, to observe that calmness and unanimity in our proceedings, which do so much become us in the station wherein God has placed us, and which your Majesty recommends unto us; and to avoid unseasonable questions and debates, which we are all convinced and persuaded would be a matter of bad and dangerous consequence at all times, and especially in this juncture.

The Earl of Annandale, whom your Majesty has made choice of to represent your royal person, and to give countenance and protection to this Assembly, is, for his fitness and abilities, as also for the good offices he has done this Church, in the other honourable stations wherein he hath been employed under your Majesty, very acceptable.

Give us leave, great Sir, to take notice, that the last Assembly having given commission to some ministers of their number to travel to the most northern parts of this your ancient kingdom, the islands of Orkney and Zetland, for planting churches, and advancing the knowledge of God amongst that people, they have, in a good measure, executed the same; and we are sensible of the favour of your Majesty's bounty for promoting so good and necessary a work, and which we know will not be wanting to advance and render it complete.

That your Majesty's reign may be long and prosperous; that you may be guided and directed of God, in the great and weighty affairs of your government, and that your councils and undertakings may be still successful for preserving and defending the Reformed religion, and the Protestant interest at home and abroad, are the earnest and fervent prayers of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Signed in our presence, in our name, and at our appointment, by

THO. WILKIE, Moderator.

IV.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the Overtures transmitted by the last General Assembly to Presbyteries.

(This Act appoints the said overtures to be re-transmitted.)

V.

Sess. 8, February 27, 1701, ante meridiem.—Approbation of the Actings and Proceedings of the Commission of the last General Assembly, appointed to meet at Edinburgh.

The General Assembly, having had this day reproduced in their presence the register of the actings and proceedings of the Commissioners appointed by the late General Assembly to meet at Edinburgh, and having heard the report and observations of a committee of this Assembly's own number (that were not members of that Commission) appointed to revise, examine, and consider the said register, all the members of the said Commission (whereof the Moderator was one) were desired to remove, and Mr James Hay being chosen Moderator pro tempore, it was desired by him, that if any persons had any thing to object against the conduct or proceedings of the said Commission, they might propose the same; and the Assembly having heard all that was represented to them thereanent, together with the answers made thereto by the Moderator and other members of the said Commission; and having seriously and maturely considered the same, and finding by the said report that the whole actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said Commissioners, contained in the said register, subscribed by Mr George Meldrum, Moderator, and Nicol Spence, under-clerk of the said Commission, beginning the 21st day of February 1700 years, and ending the 18th of February current, do evidence much wisdom, prudence, diligence, and faithfulness, and that the said Commission have proceeded orderly and formally in the things that came before them, according to their commission and instructions; therefore, this General Assembly, by their vote, did, and hereby do, ratify and approve the said actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said Commissioners, contained in the register thereof; and the members of the Commission being called in, the same was intimated to them, and the Moderator gave them the thanks of this Assembly for their good service, and then the Moderator of this Assembly took his place.

VI.

Sess. 13, March 4, 1701, ante meridiem.—Act anent the Supply of the North with Ministers and Probationers.

The General Assembly, taking into consideration that there are yet some vacant kirks in the North, did, and hereby do, enact and appoint that four actual ministers be sent, in manner after mentioned, for supplying thereof, from the first of April next till the next General Assembly; two whereof to be sent to the united Presbyteries of Dundee, Meigle, and Forfar; one to the united Presbyteries of Brechin and Aberbrothwick; and one to the province of Moray, to be proportioned as follows:—viz. the Provincial Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale to send one actual minister quarterly, to supply the province of Moray; the Provincial Synod of Glasgow and Ayr to send one actual minister quarterly, to supply the united Presbyteries of Dundee, Meigle, and Forfar; the Provincial Synod of Fife to send one actual minister quarterly, to supply the united Presbyteries of Brechin and Aberbrothwick; the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale, with the Synod of Perth and Stirling, to send one actual minister quarterly, to supply the united Presbyteries of Dundee, Meigle, and Forfar, viz.: Merse and Teviotdale for the first three quarters, and Perth and Stirling for the last quarter. And because the foresaid Synods cannot now meet to send up the first three months' supply timeously, therefore, the General Assembly do hereby appoint the said first three months' supply to be made as follows:—viz. by Mr Walter Allan, minister at Colinton, for the Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale; by Mr Francis Finlayson, minister of Kilmarnock, for the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr; by Mr Patrick Tullidolph, minister at Ferry-Port-on-Craig, for the Synod of Fife; and by Mr William Millar, minister at Chirnside, for the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale. And such-like, the General Assembly do hereby enact and appoint that seventeen probationers be sent North; of which two to the united Presbyteries of Dundee, Meigle, and Forfar; two to the united Presbyteries of Brechin and Aberbrothwick; four to the province of Moray, two of them having the Irish language, three to Ross and Sutherland, all of them having the Irish, three to Caithness, one to Orkney; and two to Zetland. And it is hereby declared, that the said probationers are to be sent on the same terms, and with the same encouragement given to probationers sent by former Assemblies and their Commissions. And what further relates to the nomination, and other things requisite to this mission of probationers, the General Assembly refers the same to their subsequent commission.

VII.

Sess. 13, March 4, 1701, ante meridiem.—Act disjoining the Provincial Synod of Angus and Mearns from the Synod of Aberdeen.

The General Assembly, having heard the opinion of the Commission sent by the last Assembly to the provinces of Angus, Mearns, and Aberdeen, anent the affair after mentioned; and finding that there are now a competent number of ministers legally settled in the said provinces, do therefore appoint them to meet in time coming, in two distinct Synods, in their usual places of meeting, according to the Act of the General Assembly held in the year 1638, entitled, "Act anent the Order of the Provincial Assemblies in Scotland, according to the Presbyteries therein contained;" and that the next meeting of the Synod of Aberdeen be at the time and place appointed at their last sederunt. And as to the Synod of Angus and Mearns, the General Assembly does hereby appoint their first meeting to be at Dundee, upon the third Tuesday of April next, and that the Synods after named send the following number of ministers as Correspondents to the Provincial Synod of Angus and Mearns, viz.; the Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale two, the Synod of Perth and Stirling three, the Synod of Fife four, and the Synod of Aberdeen two, and this correspondence to continue till the General Assembly shall see cause to alter it.

VIII.

Sess. 14, March 4, 1701, post meridiem.—Recommendation to Synods anent maintaining Bursars of Theology having the Irish Language.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the great scarcity of probationers having the Irish language to supply the vacancies of the North Highlands, notwithstanding there are several young men who might be useful in these places if they had due encouragement to prosecute their studies; therefore, the General Assembly recommend to the Synods after mentioned, that they maintain bursars of theology having the Irish language, besides the usual Presbytery bursars, and that out of the ministers of the said Synods their own proper money, and that this be done as follows: viz., That the Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale, the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale, the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr, the Synod of Argyle, the Synod of Perth and Stirling, and the Synod of Fife, each of them maintain one bursar; the Synods of Dumfries and Galloway one; and the Synods of Angus and Mearns and Aberdeen one: And it is recommended to the foresaid Synods to proportion the quota of the maintenance to be given to the said bursars among themselves, which is at least to be ten pounds sterling, the one-half whereof to be collected and advanced at every Synod, beginning at the next ensuing Synod; and that the said Synod books bear an account of their diligence in the same, and that each of the said bursars continue four years at the profession of theology, as other bursars do; and it is hereby recommended to all Presbyteries, that they search out for any such well qualified young men who have passed their course of philosophy at some university, and send in their names to the Commission of the General Assembly, with sufficient testimonials, that they may be by them recommended to the said Synods; and the foresaid act to continue during the Assembly's pleasure: And for enlarging of the said funds, the General Assembly renews and revives the 9th Act of the General Assembly, 1699, "Anent Planting of the Highlands."

IX.

Sess. 14, March 4, 1701, post meridiem.—Act for a Solemn National Fast and Humiliation.

The General Assembly of this National Church, laying seriously to heart the many tokens of God's displeasure that are gone forth against this land; as the many years of dearth and scarcity that we have been under whereby many have perished, the land greatly impoverished, and the number of the poor vastly increased; the amazing and astonishing rebukes against and blasting of the undertaking of the African and Indian Company of this nation, for advancing the wealth and trade thereof, and relief of the poor, and that in a great measure from the visible and immediate hand of God, though by that undertaking there was a fair prospect of spreading the Gospel amongst infidels, together with the loss of many of our countrymen, and even some of our dear and worthy brethren in the ministry, and of a great part of the nation's treasure and substance; as also, the stupendous wasting fire in the city of Edinburgh, whereby its best buildings have been laid in ashes, and many families reduced to extreme poverty; considering also the many sad and great calamities which threaten not only this, but all other reformed and Protestant Churches, from the present alteration of the state of Europe so lately fallen out, whereby the hands of the implacable enemies of our religion seem to be greatly strengthened, and occasion given for executing their wicked designs, in order to the ruin of the reformed religion and Protestant interest; by all which the reformed and Protestant Churches everywhere, and more eminently in these nations, together with our brethren in the United Provinces of the Low Countries, are sadly threatened: And the Assembly, considering that our holy and gracious God doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men, nor doth he without cause threaten his people with such sad things; we have therefore too good ground to infer, that our sins must be great and heinous in the sight of God, which is also obvious to every discerning eye, the land being filled with wickedness and abominations, violences and disorders amongst persons of all ranks and degrees, for whose sins our holy and jealous God may justly contend with us, which are so much the more aggravated, that they are against so many solemn repeated vows and engagements unto and Covenants with our God, which have been openly violated and broken by persons of all ranks, and treated with public contempt, indignities, and affronts, the particulars of which are too many to be here inserted; but having been by other Assemblies largely and particularly enumerated in causes of fasts by them emitted, especially 1690 and 1700: This Assembly thereto refers, in so far as they quadrate with our present circumstances, and recommend to ministers to give an account of the same; yet one thing farther is greatly to be lamented, that though the Lord hath been for many years calling to weeping and to mourning, and public national fasts have been from time to time appointed, that we might truly humble ourselves before God, confess our sins, repent of and turn from them, by renewing our engagements unto God, and covenanting with him for that end, yet the most part have instead thereof given themselves over to jollity and wantonness, few having fasted unto the Lord, and returned to him with all their hearts.

Upon all these considerations, this Assembly have thought fit to set apart a day for solemn fasting and humiliation, and the exercise of sincere and unfeigned repentance, and for serious, fervent, and earnest prayer to the throne of grace, which they appoint to be kept upon the twenty-fourth day of April next to come, being the last Thursday of the said month: And do hereby earnestly obtest, and in the bowels of our Lord Jesus Christ, exhort and beseech all people and of all ranks, suitably to prepare themselves for so solemn a work, to deal unfeignedly and sincerely with the Lord in this matter, to put away the evil of their doings, and flee unto Christ, the Mediator of the New Covenant, and seek in and through him to be reconciled unto God, to take on sincere resolutions and engagements, that henceforth they will be the Lord's, humbly depending upon him for grace to perform accordingly, that they may earnestly and vigorously set about sincere and thorough reformation of their lives, as they would themselves find mercy in the day of the Lord, and have the present strokes upon the land removed, and judgments threatened averted. And for that end, we recommend to all ministers within this Church, that they be plain, full, and free, in holding forth the evil of the sins that abound, according as they are enumerated in the Causes of Fasts above specified, and what sins else may be peculiar to any congregation, to the end that they, and all who sincerely love our Lord Jesus Christ, may earnestly apply to the throne of grace, that a spirit of grace and supplication and of sincere and unfeigned repentance may be poured out upon the inhabitants of the land, and for a day of the Mediator's power upon the hearts of many, making them a willing people, that so they may flee to him, and make application of his blood for the purging and pardoning of their sins;—that the Lord would shine upon us in Gospel-ordinances, and by the powerful enlivening breathings of his Spirit, make them more successful for the enlargement of the kingdom of Christ, and destroying Satan's kingdom, that in some places so much prevails, even by witchcraft, sorceries, &c. ;—that of his great bounty, and in pity and compassion to this poor land, he would give seasonable weather, and thereby prevent the return of scarcity and dearth, and that he would also avert the other sad and heavy judgments which threaten us for our sins;—that the Lord would deliver such of his poor churches or people as are already under the feet of cruel enemies, and protect others that are in great and imminent hazard; and, for that end, break the power of their enemies, make their wrath to praise him, defeat their counsels, and turn them into foolishness, that all may know that he whose name alone is Jehovah is the most high over all the earth;—that God would preserve and protect our King, bless him in his person and government, animate him more and more with true heroic courage and zeal for the defence of the true religion and Protestant interest;—that he would direct his councils, and those of other Protestant princes and states, to such measures as may, at this juncture, be for the glory of God, the preservation of the true religion and Protestant Churches, and the peace of Europe;—that piety may flourish in this land, and effectual ways may be fallen upon for that end, and both magistrates, ministers, and others in their stations, animated vigorously to prosecute them, for suppressing the sins and immoralities that abound in the land; and for restraining idleness and vagabonds, being the occasion and nursery of much sin and wickedness, and for reducing these to order, labour, and industry, and supplying the necessities of indigents; and that this Church may yet prosper, both peace and truth still flourish in her, so as the Lord may yet take delight in us, and glory may dwell in our land, and have her habitation there.

Sess. 15, March 5, 1701, post meridiem.—Act Condemning the Book, entitled, An Apology for M. Antonia Bourignon.

The General Assembly, taking into their serious consideration a reference made by the Commission of the late General Assembly sent to Angus, Mearns, Aberdeen, &c., anent Doctor George Garden in Aberdeen, alleged to be the author of a book entitled, “An Apology for M. Antonia Bourignon,” with an abbreviate made by the said Commission of the errors contained in the said book, they did appoint a committee of their own number to consider that affair, and to compare the said abbreviate with the foresaid Apology, and to bring their report and opinion to the General Assembly anent the whole; and the General Assembly having this day heard the report and opinion of the foresaid committee, and also having heard read in their presence an abbreviate and abstract of several errors excerpted forth of the said Apology by the foresaid committee; and having likewise had produced in their presence the said book itself, the General Assembly found the same to contain a mass of dangerous, impious, blasphemous, and damnable errors; and, therefore, by their unanimous vote did, and by these presents do, condemn the said book called “An Apology for M. Antonia Bourignon;” and for preventing the spreading of the said errors therein contained, the General Assembly did, by their unanimous vote, and hereby do, seriously recommend to all Synods and Presbyteries within this National Church, and particularly to the Synods of Aberdeen and Perth, to advert to, and inquire anent the spreading of the said errors, and to use all effectual means for preventing the same, conform to Acts of former Assemblies made against spreading of errors, and particularly the Act of the General Assembly, anno 1647, entitled, "Act discharging the Importing, Vending, or Spreading of Erroneous Books and Papers." And, moreover, the General Assembly recommend to the said judicatories, that in perusing of the said book, and inquiring anent the spreading of the errors therein contained, any thing found to fall under the 11th Act of the fifth Session of the current Parliament, or under any other Act of Parliament made against blasphemy, &c., be represented to his Majesty's Advocate, to the effect the said laws may be put to due execution.

XI.

Sess. 15, March 5, 1701, post meridiem.—Sentence of Deposition against Dr George Garden in Aberdeen.

The which day, the General Assembly of this National Church, taking into their consideration the proceedings of the Commission of the late General Assembly appointed for visiting the bounds of Angus, Mearns, Aberdeen, Moray, and Ross, and finding a process raised by the said Commission against Dr George Garden in Aberdeen, and a sentence of suspension passed by them against him upon weighty grounds, with a reference of him for further censure to this Assembly, to which he was cited by order of the said Commission; all which the foresaid sentence does at more length bear, and the Assembly having caused call the said Dr George Garden, several times at the most patent door of the church, and he not comparing, they entered upon the serious consideration of the particular grounds of the said sentence of suspension, and of the whole proceedings of the said Commission in that affair; and did, likewise they hereby do, find that he has not only given great ground to suspect his being tainted with dangerous and blasphemous opinions, in causing a certain book called "An Apology for M. Antonia Bourignon" to be bound, and selling the same, and causing it to be sold by others for his use, and recommending the perusal thereof, without giving a caveat against the errors contained therein, and that he refused to disown his being the author of that book, when questioned thereupon by the said Commission; and that he likewise declined to give a positive answer, when asked by them if he judged M. Antonia Bourignon to have been divinely inspired as she pretends, but also that he hath given clear and evident proof of his being led away with the spirit of error and very gross delusions, and infected with impious, blasphemous, and damnable error, by declaring openly before the said Commission, that the said Apology, as to the bulk of the book, did represent the great end of Christianity, which is to bring us back to the love of God and charity, and further declared, that the essentials of Christianity are set down in the said book, and that the accessories contained therein are not contrary thereto; and further he added, that he had a high esteem of the writings that go under the name of M. Antonia Bourignon, because they represent the essentials of Christian religion, and direct us to a Christian temper, with more force and vigour than many writings of this age he had seen, and for her singular sentiments, they ought not to be reckoned heresies, for they contradict no article of the Christian religion; and further, he subjoined that her sentiments tended to unite Christians in their differences, and to promote the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and on that account he values them, and heartily embraces them, and that the design of the apologist, in representing the accessory sentiments of M. Antonia Bourignon, was to vindicate them from the misrepresentations of others, that the world may know what they are; yea, he had the confidence to carry it so high before the said Commission, as to say he counted it his honour to be singled out for owning the principles of M. Antonia Bourignon, which have such a tendency to promote Christian love and charity: The Assembly also finds, that the writings which go under the name of the said M. Antonia Bourignon are fraught with impious, pernicious, and damnable doctrines, as they are represented in the very Apology, that exhibits to the world an epitome of them in the fairest dress; such as, 1mo, The denying of the permission of sin, and the infliction of damnation and vengeance for it. 2do, The ascribing to Christ a twofold human nature, one of which was produced of Adam before the woman was formed, the other born of the Virgin Mary. 3tio, The denying of the decrees of election and reprobation, and the loading of those acts of grace and sovereignty with a multitude of odious and blasphemous aspersions, particularly wickedness, cruelty, and respect of persons. 4to, That there is a good spirit and an evil spirit in the souls of all men before they are born. 5to, That the will of man is unlimited, and that there must be in man some infinite quality whereby he may unite himself to God. 6to, The denying of the doctrine of Divine prescience. 7mo, The assertion of the sinful corruption of Christ's Human Nature, and a rebellion in Christ's Natural Will to the Will of God. And, 8vo, The asserting a state of perfection in this life, and a state of purification in the life to come; that generation takes place in Heaven; that there are no true Christians in the world, and several other errors contained in the said book; upon which grounds, together with his contumacy in not appearing before this Assembly, the General Assembly of this National Church, after mature deliberation, being moved with love to the truth of God, and zeal for his glory, as also an earnest desire for purging this Kirk of error and heresy, and every thing that is contrary to sound doctrine, did, and hereby do, ratify and confirm the sentence of suspension passed by the said Commission against the said Dr George Garden; and further did, and hereby do, in the name and authority of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Head and King of the Church, and the only Lord and Lawgiver of the same, according to the power entrusted by him to them, and his peremptory command, actually depose the said Dr George Garden from the office of the ministry, prohibiting and discharging him from exercising the same, or any part thereof, in all time coming, under pain of the highest censures of the Church, appointing public intimation to be made hereof from all the pulpits in the Synod of Aberdeen, after sermon in the forenoon, upon such a Lord's day as the said Synod shall appoint.

XII.

Sess. 15, March 5, 1701, post meridiem.—Approbation of the Actings and Proceedings of the Commission sent by the last Assembly to Zetland, Orkney, and Caithness.

The General Assembly, having this day had reproduced before them the register of the actings and proceedings of the Commissioners sent by the late General Assembly for visitation of the bounds of the Presbyteries of Zetland, Orkney, and Caithness; and having heard the report and observations of a committee of this Assembly's own number, appointed to revise, consider, and examine the said register, with the answers made thereto by the Moderator and other members of that commission, they were removed; and the General Assembly having seriously and maturely considered the same, and finding by the said report that the actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said commissioners contained in their register now produced, subscribed by Mr James Hart, Moderator, and Mr John Sandilands, Clerk thereto, beginning upon the eighteenth day of April last, and ending the twenty-fourth day of June thereafter, consisting of 190 pages, do evidence the great pains and diligence of the said commissioners, and the great danger they were exposed to in their voyage by sea, and likewise the fatigue they had by land, in travelling to accomplish the design they were sent on, and that they have proceeded orderly and formally in the things that came before them, according to their commission and instructions, and thereby given proof of their wisdom, prudence, faithfulness, and zeal: Therefore, this General Assembly, by their vote, unanimously did, and hereby do, ratify and approve the actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said commissioners contained in their register; and the members of the said commission being called in, the premises were intimated to them, and the Moderator, according to appointment, gave them the thanks of this Assembly for their good service.

XIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Approbation of the Actings and Proceedings of the Commission sent by the last Assembly to Angus, Mearns, Aberdeen, Moray, and Ross.

The General Assembly, having this day had reproduced before them the register of the actings and proceedings of the commissioners sent by the late Assembly, for visitation of the bounds of the Presbyteries in the provinces of Angus, Mearns, Aberdeen, Moray, Ross, and Sutherland; and having heard the report and observations of a committee of this Assembly's own number, appointed to revise, consider, and examine the said register, with the answers made thereto by the Moderator and other members of that commission, they were removed; and the General Assembly having maturely considered the same, and finding by the said report, that the actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said commissioners, contained in their register now produced, subscribed by Mr Patrick Cumming, Moderator, and Mr Hugh White, Clerk thereto, beginning upon the twelfth day of June last, and ending upon the twenty-second day of August thereafter, consisting of 190 pages, do evidence much wisdom, prudence, diligence, zeal, and faithfulness; and that the said commissioners have proceeded orderly and formally in every thing according to their commission and instructions: Therefore, this General Assembly, by their vote, unanimously did, and hereby do, ratify and approve the actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said commissioners, contained in the register thereof; and the members of the said commission being called in, the same was intimated to them, and the Moderator, according to appointment, gave them the thanks of this Assembly for their good service.

XIV.

Sess. 18, March 7, 1701, ante meridiem.—Act against Persons who shall be Irregularly Licensed or Ordained.

The General Assembly, upon report of their committee for overtures, did, by their vote, and hereby do, enact and declare, that any persons who shall for hereafter receive either licence or ordination from any of the late Prelates, or any others not allowed by the authority of the Church, shall be incapable of ministerial communion for the space of three years simpliciter, and even after that time, ay and until the Presbytery to which he shall apply be satisfied concerning his repentance.

XV.

Sess. 20, March 8, 1701, ante meridiem.—Commission to some Ministers and Elders for Planting vacant Kirks, and other Affairs remitted to them.

The General Assembly, considering that there are yet some vacant Churches on the North side of Tay, as likewise that there are yet several weighty affairs which this Assembly cannot overtake; do therefore find it needful that there be a commission granted to some ministers and elders for planting these vacant Churches, and doing what other affairs shall be referred to them; and for that end do hereby nominate, commissionate, and appoint Mr Robert Elliot, minister at Kinglassie, &c., &c., to be Commissioners, &c., with full power, &c., (the powers granted to the Commission are the same as in the corresponding acts of the three preceding years.)

XVI.

Eadem Sessione.—Instructions by the General Assembly to their Commission.

1. That this commission, as often as they shall see cause, apply to the Government, or any magistrate, for their countenancing of and concurring with the judicatories of the Church, in what the law allows, and for putting the laws in execution against profaneness, regulating the poor by providing maintenance and labour for them, and particularly anent settling vacant congregations, and redressing any grievances which may fall out.

2. That, when any of the ministers who served under the late Prelacy, whose lives and doctrines may render them useful to this Church, do apply for reception into a share of the government of the Church, the General Assembly do empower and recommend to their Commission to receive them, according to the 13th paragraph of the 16th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1697: And that the said Commission be careful to get due information from the Presbyteries where the said person applying does, or did officiate, and for the time resides.

3. That this Commission, in disposal of his Majesty's gifts to this Church, do particularly take care, that the encouragement granted by the General Assembly, anno 1699, to probationers who are to go North to preach, be rendered effectual; and that they cause defray the extraordinary charges that several ministers of the North have been at in carrying on the planting of Churches, and other public affairs of the Church there.

4. The said Commission is to cognosce and finally determine in all references already made, or to be made, to them by this Assembly, and in all references and appeals for transporting ministers to the North, which shall be orderly brought before them, according to the overtures made thereanent by the General Assembly, anno 1699.

5. This Commission is also to correspond with the State anent fasts and thanksgivings, as occasion requires, and to specify the causes thereof.

6. This Commission is to give advice and assistance to any Synod or Presbytery in difficult cases, as they shall be applied unto by them for that effect: As also, this Commission is empowered to proceed according to the 7th Act of the General Assembly, 1700, made in favour of the Presbyteries of Caithness, Orkney, and Zetland.

7. This Commission is empowered to inquire how ministers transported by former Assemblies and their Commissions, or by this General Assembly and their Commission, have obeyed, or shall obey, and, in case of disobedience, that they suspend the disobedient persons for three months, and, in case they do not obey after these three months are elapsed, that then they be deposed simpliciter, and this particularly to be applied in the case of Mr David Pitcairn, formerly transported from Creich to Forres, if he disobey.

8. This Commission is to give all due encouragement and assistance to any proposals that may be made to them anent endeavours for reformation of manners, and for the effectual curbing of profanity; and that they apply in a competent manner to the Government for that end.

9. This Commission, or their Moderator, in the intervals of the Commission, are empowered to receive calls legally proceeded in, and to transmit the same to the respective Presbyteries interested; and, in case of references or appeals to the said Commission, that they proceed and finally determine therein, according to the former acts of Assemblies for expediting transportations to the North.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the 24th Act of the General Assembly, 1700, "For rendering Effectual the Supplies of the North," do declare the same to stand still in full force, and refers to the Commission to see to the observation thereof.

XVIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act against Intruders into Kirks.

The General Assembly appoints Presbyteries to send in to the Commission an account of such ministers or preachers as intrude into parishes, that application may be made to the Government for removing them according to law.

XIX.

Eadem Sessione.—Recommendation anent the more frequent Administration of the Lord's Supper.

The General Assembly recommends to Presbyteries to take care that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper be more frequently administered within their bounds, and that the number of ministers to serve thereat be restricted, so that neighbouring churches be not thereby cast desolate on the Lord's Day.

XX.

Eadem Sessione.—Act against Abuses at Likewakes, Penny-Bridals, and Promiscuous Dancing.

The General Assembly did, and hereby do, revive the act of the General Assembly, 1645, against Likewakes, as also the act of the said Assembly for restraining Abuses at Penny-Bridals, and likewise the act of the General Assembly, anno 1649, discharging promiscuous dancing; and appoints the said acts to be read in churches before the congregation, and that Synods inquire at Presbyteries concerning their diligence anent the observance of the said acts, and recommends to Presbyteries to have their thoughts upon what further may be necessary for suppressing and preventing abuses at such occasions, and give their opinion thereanent to the next General Assembly.

XXI.

Overtures transmitted by the General Assembly, held in the Year 1701, to the several Presbyteries within this National Church, that they may consider the same, and send their Opinion thereanent in Writing to the next General Assembly, who may pass the same in Acts, if the more general Opinion of this Church agree thereunto.

[These Overtures are, 1. Anent Scandalous Persons turning Popish; 2. Protestants marrying Papists; 3. Anent Excommunication; 4. Anent irregular absolving of Scandalous Persons; 5. Anent Students passing Trials; 6. Against Profaneness, with a Reference to the Commission thereanent. The greater part of these appear to have been passed into Acts in 1704.]

XXII.

The next General Assembly of this National Church is to be held at Edinburgh the sixth day of March, in the year 1702.

The Assembly being closed, the members were dismissed with prayer, singing the 132d Psalm, from the 11th verse to the close, and pronouncing of the blessing.

THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AND BEGUN AT EDINBURGH, MARCH 6, 1702.

I.

Sess. 1, Edinburgh, March 6, 1702.—The Recording of his Majesty's Commission to Patrick Earl of Marchmont, Lord High Chancellor of this Kingdom, for Representing his Majesty's Royal Person in this Assembly.

This day, the General Assembly of the ministers and elders of this National Church being convened and constituted, there was produced to them by Patriek Earl of Marchmont, Lord High Chancellor of this kingdom, his Majesty's Commission, under the Great and Privy Seals thereof, making and constituting him his Majesty's High Commissioner and Representative in this National Assembly, which Commission being publicly read with all due honour and respect, the General Assembly did, and hereby do, appoint the same to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, therein to remain ad futuram rei memoriam, whereof the tenor follows:—
“GULIELMUS,” &c.

II.

Eadem Sessione.—His Majesty's gracious Letter to the General Assembly.

The said day, his Majesty's High Commissioner presented his Majesty's most gracious Letter directed to this General Assembly, which was publicly read with all due honour and respect, and is appointed to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, the tenor whereof follows:—

WILLIAM R.

Right Reverend and well-beloved,

We greet you well. The full satisfaction we have had from the proceedings of the former Assemblies does very much encourage us to countenance your meeting at this time, and as we take this occasion to renew to you the assurances we have often given you of our resolutions to maintain the government of the Church as it is now established, so we recommend to you calmness and unanimity in your proceedings, and that you will carefully avoid such disputes as may in this juncture be improven to the disturbance of the peace of Church and State, especially after the late attempt that has been made towards the subversion of both, of which we know you have the same sense with our other good subjects, which has sufficiently appeared in the several addresses presented to us.

We have appointed our right trusty and right entirely beloved cousin and councillor, Patriek Earl of Marchmont, our Chancellor, to represent our royal person in this Assembly; his experience and fidelity, which have appeared in the several eminent trusts discharged by him, as they have made us choose him, so we doubt not but they will render him acceptable to you. We have instructed him fully with our mind in every thing needful, and, therefore, recommending to you to give him entire trust and credit, we bid you heartily farewell.

Given at our Court at Kensington, the 23d day of February 1701-2, and of our reign the thirteenth year.

By his Majesty's command,

HYNDFORD.

Direct.—To the Right Reverend and well-beloved, the Moderator, Ministers, and Elders, of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

III.

Sess. 3, March 9, 1702.—Act anent the Production of Synod Books to the General Assembly.

The General Assembly appoints that all the Synod books not as yet produced be brought to the next meeting, and that in time coming all Synod books be punctually brought in, and presented to the General Assembly yearly, in the beginning thereof, according to the ancient laudable custom.

IV.

Sess. 5, March 11, 1702.—Appointment of the General Assembly anent a Commission, and drawing Instructions thereto.

His Majesty's High Commissioner having represented to the General Assembly the sad and melancholy news he had received from Court this morning, of the indisposition and dangerous state of health of the King's Majesty, his master, our gracious Sovereign, was under, and how inconvenient it might prove if any sudden account of his Majesty's death (which God avert) should happen to come during the sitting of this Assembly, and that, therefore, it was his Grace's opinion and desire (though it was resolved this Assembly should have had due time to go through their affairs deliberately and with leisure) that now they should with all expedition dispatch such necessary business as was in dependence before them, and likewise fall upon some method to keep a public and established course of discipline and order in the Church, whatever might fall out. The General Assembly, taking into their serious consideration what was thus represented by his Majesty's High Commissioner, and being convinced of the inconveniences that may arise, if, during the sitting of this General Assembly, and at this juncture, any such account of the King's death (which the Lord, in mercy, prevent) should come to hand, and yet how necessary it is that there be a public and established course of discipline and order kept up in this Church by a judicatory, consisting of such members as may make up an equal representation thereof, whatever, at the pleasure of Almighty God, may fall out; do, therefore, nominate and appoint these following, viz., Mr Charles Gordon at Askirk, Mr John Stirling, Principal of the College of Glasgow, Mr William Crichton at Edinburgh, Mr James Brown at Glasgow, Mr John Anderson, jun. at St Andrews, Mr Thomas Blackwell at Aberdeen, Mr Alexander King at Elgin, and Mr Thomas Wilkie at Canongate, Ministers; the Lord Advocate and Laird of Megginch, Ruling Elders; to be a committee to retire instantly for nominating ministers and elders to be members of a Commission of this Assembly and National Church, and also for drawing up of instructions to the said Commission, and report to this Assembly so soon as possible: And it is recommended to the said committee to nominate, in the first place, all those old and experienced ministers yet alive that were ministers in the year 1661; and, next, all those of most experience and ability, with a just proportion and representation from the several Presbyteries of this Church, and bring in the draught of a Commission, and instructions, accordingly.

V.

Eadem Sessione.—Act and Recommendation anent Ministers' Stipends, &c.

There being brought in to the General Assembly the following overture from the committee for overtures, the same was voted and approven, and the General Assembly did, and hereby do, recommend and appoint according thereto; the tenor whereof follows:—

Overtured that recommendation be made by the General Assembly to the Commission of Parliament for Plantation of Kirks, &c., for giving due dispatch and encouragement to all processes for modification and locality of stipends, that so ministers may have a suitable maintenance and a competency for communion elements, and ready access thereto; and that it be recommended to the several Presbyteries to send in an account to the Clerk of the General Assembly, or Agent for the Kirk, of such parishes in their bounds as either want legal stipends, or want decreets for their stipends and communion elements, and to send therewith an account of the state of such parishes, and of the church, manse, and glebe thereof; and, likewise, it is over-tured to the General Assembly, that in all transportations in time coming, previous inquiry be made if there be a legal stipend, and a decret therefor, in the parish craving the transportation.

 VI.

Sess. 5, March 11, 1702, post meridiem.—The General Assembly's Answer to His Majesty's gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

Your royal letter, expressing your full satisfaction with the proceedings of our former Assemblies, and the renewed assurances your Majesty is pleased to give us of your resolution to maintain the government of the Church as now established, are accepted by us with all thankfulness, and lay upon us the deepest obligations to use our best endeavours to perpetuate to this Church so great a blessing.

We have hitherto, through the favour of God, behaved with all possible calmness and unanimity, and do hope, through the same Divine grace and assistance, and with that due respect we owe your Majesty, to avoid everything that may be improven to the least disturbance, or give any advantage to your Majesty's and our adversaries.

The great concern of the Protestant religion, now in such visible hazard from the attempts of common enemies, doth certainly oblige us not only to be aware of all unseasonable diversions, but also to give your Majesty, whom God hath so eminently raised up to be its great protector, as well as our gracious deliverer, all the assurances of our most hearty and dutiful concurrence and service.

The Lord High Chancellor, whom your Majesty hath been pleased to appoint to represent your royal person in this Assembly, hath not only approven himself to your Majesty, by his fidelity in discharging these eminent trusts wherewith he hath been so deservedly honoured; but was so constant and faithful a partaker in our late sufferings, and hath ever since appeared so true a friend to this Church, that your Majesty's choice is to us most acceptable: and we are hopeful, through the blessing of God, and the countenance your Majesty is pleased to give us, to dispatch the affairs of this Assembly to your Majesty's entire satisfaction.

But, while we are dispatching this return, we have the surprising and most afflicting news of your Majesty's dangerous condition, by reason of sickness, which not only prevents the design we had of an humble address of duty and affection to your Majesty, for adhering to and maintaining your Majesty and your most rightful government over us against all adversaries, but obliges us to betake ourselves wholly to most earnest supplication to God for your Majesty's preservation; and that it may please Him, of his infinite mercy, to this and all the churches of Christ, to restore you to perfect health, and yet to bless us with your long and prosperous reign, for the good of all your dominions.

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders, met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Eadem Sessione.—Commission to some Ministers and Elders for Planting Vacant Kirks, and other Affairs remitted to them.

The General Assembly, considering that there are yet some vacant churches on the North side of Tay, as likewise several weighty affairs which this Assembly cannot overtake, doth, therefore, find it needful that there be a commission granted to some ministers and elders for planting these vacant churches, and doing what other affairs shall be referred to them; and for that end, do hereby nominate, commissionate, and appoint, Mr William Mitchell, minister at Dundee, &c. &c., to be commissioners of this General Assembly, to the effect in Act IV., and before and after mentioned; with full power to the said persons, or their quorum, which is hereby declared to be any fifteen of the said commissioners, whereof nine are always to be ministers, to meet and convene within the Assembly-House at Edinburgh the first day after the dissolution of this Assembly, at ten hours in the forenoon, and afterwards to meet the first Wednesdays of June, September, December, and March, and oftener when and where they shall think needful and convenient; with full power to the said Commission to choose their own moderator. And suchlike, the General Assembly fully empowers and authorises their said commissioners, or their quorum, to receive, consider, cognosce, and finally determine, as they shall see cause, in everything contained in and conform to the instructions given by the General Assembly, held in the year 1701, to their Commission, which are hereby renewed and holden as expressed; and this Commission is appointed to proceed according thereto, as fully and freely as if the said instructions were in these presents at full length inserted and set down; and farther, they are by these presents empowered to cognosce upon, and determine in all references and appeals made to this Assembly from any inferior judicatory of this Church, and particularly, in such references as were made to this Assembly by the late Commission of the General Assembly, 1701, of the affairs that were by them left undiscussed, and such other particulars as have been tabled before this Assembly, and not as yet determined; and to be careful to send some to supply vacant churches in the North; and, generally, with power to the said Commission to advert unto the interest of the Church on every occasion, and that the Church do not suffer or sustain any prejudice which belongs to them to prevent, as they will be answerable to the next General Assembly. And they are hereby strictly prohibited and discharged to meddle in any other matters than what is herein contained. Declaring also, that in and for all their actings they shall be accountable to and censurable by the next ensuing General Assembly of this Church. And, lastly, declares, that this Commission shall continue until the meeting of the next General Assembly.

VIII.

The next General Assembly of this National Church is to be held at Edinburgh the tenth day of March, in the year 1703.

This Assembly being closed, the members were dismissed with prayer, singing the 46th psalm, from the beginning to the 6th verse, and pronouncing of the blessing.

ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN ON HER ACCESSION TO THE THRONE
BY THE COMMISSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, EDINBURGH,
MARCH 13, 1702.

May it please your Majesty,

As we were greatly afflicted with the sad account we had of the death of our late Sovereign, King William, of ever blessed and glorious memory, by whom and under whose happy government, through the favour of God, we enjoyed many signal blessings, so we desire heartily to bless God for his having set your Majesty, a true Protestant Queen, upon the throne to rule over us.

And we humbly tender your Majesty our hearty thanks for the early and full assurance which your Majesty is pleased to give in your gracious letter to your Privy Council, of your firm resolution during the whole course of your reign, to protect all your people of this kingdom, not only in their laws and liberties, but also in their religion, and in the established government of this Church, both which we are persuaded are founded upon the Word of God, and, therefore, most dear and precious to us.

We farther presume to assure your Majesty, that we do own and acknowledge your Majesty's title to the crown as most undoubtedly lawful and rightful; and that in our places and stations we will assert and maintain the same to the utmost of our power, against all pretenders whomsoever, and will use our best endeavours with the people committed to our charge, to keep and preserve them in their duty and loyalty to your Majesty.

Our constant and fervent prayer to God shall be, that he may preserve and bless your royal person and government, guide and direct all your counsels, and still more and more endue your Majesty with all Christian and royal gifts and graces, that so your reign may be long and every way happy and prosperous over us, and your people, under you, may enjoy peace and truth, the greatest of blessings, to the glory of God, and your Majesty's entire satisfaction.

BEGUN AT EDINBURGH, MARCH 10, 1703.

I.

Sess. 1, March 10, 1703.—The Recording of the Queen's Commission to James Earl of Seafield, Lord High Chancellor of this Kingdom, for representing her Majesty in this Assembly.

The General Assembly of the ministers and ruling elders of this National Church, being convened and constituted, there was produced to them by James Earl of Seafield, Lord High Chancellor of this kingdom, her Majesty's commission, under the Great and Privy Seals thereof, making and constituting him her Majesty's High Commissioner and representative in this National Assembly; which commission being publicly read, with all due honour and respect, the General Assembly appointed the same to be recorded in their registers, ad futuram rei memoriam, the tenor whereof follows:—
“ANNA,” &c.

II.

Eadem Sessione.—Her Majesty's gracious Letter to the General Assembly.

Her Majesty's High Commissioner presented her Majesty's most gracious Letter directed to this General Assembly, which was publicly read, with all due honour and respect, and is appointed to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, the tenor whereof follows:—

ANNE, R.

Reverend and well-beloved,

We greet you well. The time appointed by our proclamation, dated the 5th day of February 1703, for the sitting of the General Assembly now approaching, we have made choice of our right trusty, and right well-beloved cousin and counsellor, James Earl of Seafield, our High Chancellor, to be our Commissioner to this Assembly, of whose fidelity, sufficiency, and zeal for our service, we have had good experience on several occasions, and especially he having been very acceptable to a former Assembly.

We earnestly recommend to you to be solicitously careful of what may advance the interest of the Reformed Protestant Religion, and for suppressing the growth of Popery. We renew the assurance given by us for protection of the Presbyterian government, as that which we find acceptable to the inclinations of our people, and established by the laws of the kingdom. We are confident that you will act in this Assembly so as we shall have new reasons to be satisfied with you and your conduct; and that you will carry so with others of the Reformed Protestant Religion, albeit differing from you in forms of Church policy, that by your meekness and charity they may be the more inclined to live peaceably and dutifully under us, and in brotherly love and respect towards you and the Established Church; wherein, if they fail, we shall recommend to our Privy Council to proceed diligently in censure against such delinquents; but we hope better things of them. We likewise recommend to you the placing of well qualified ministers amongst the remoter Highlanders and Islanders, we looking upon that as the greatest and best mean of rooting out the Popish errors, immoralities, and profanity; and withal, we shall give directions to our Privy Council for the exact application of our royal authority and laws to these good ends; and so we bid you heartily farewell.

Given at our Court at St James's, the 5th day of February, and of our reign the first year, 1702-3.

By her Majesty's command,

TARBAT.

Directed—To the Reverend and well-beloved, the Moderator, Ministers, and Elders of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

III.

Sess. 4, March 13, 1703, ante meridiem.—The General Assembly's Answer to the Queen's gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

After the afflicting death of our late Sovereign, King William, of ever blessed and glorious memory, by whom, and under whose happy government, through the favour of God, we enjoyed many signal blessings never to be forgotten; your Majesty's happy succeeding in the throne of this your ancient kingdom, was a most comfortable relief; and since your accession to the crown of your royal ancestors, the ministers of this National Church have constantly, both in their public and private addresses to God, heartily blessed and praised his holy name for setting over us your Majesty, a Protestant Queen, to be a nursing-mother to this Church.

And we do offer to your Majesty our humble and hearty thanks, for allowing to us the countenance and protection of your royal authority in this National Assembly; and that your Majesty hath been pleased, in your gracious letter to us, (which was received and read with all duty, honour, and respect,) to refresh and encourage us, by renewed assurances of your protection of the Presbyterian Government of this Church, so happily established, as agreeable to the Word of God, which we are persuaded will endear you more and more to the hearts of the generality of them who fear God, and are truly faithful to your Majesty's interest and government in this land.

Your Majesty's entrusting the Earl of Seafield, the Lord High Chancellor of this your ancient kingdom, to be your Majesty's Commissioner to represent your royal person in this Assembly, is very acceptable to us, he being of approved ability, fidelity, and loyalty, and of whose kindness this Church hath had good experience.

We bless God, who puts it in your royal heart, and bless you in the name of the Lord, that you recommend to us, that which is so much our duty, to be solicitously careful of what may advance the interest of the Reformed Protestant Religion, and for suppressing of the growth of Popery, and the placing of well qualified ministers amongst the remoter Highlanders and Islanders, which your Majesty is pleased to say, on good grounds, that you look upon as the greatest and best mean of rooting out the Popish errors, immoralities, and profanity. We shall endeavour to apply ourselves to these things as our great work, and do humbly supplicate your Majesty, according to your gracious promise, that it may be recommended to your Majesty's Privy Council, and all inferior magistrates, that your good laws may be exactly applied for these good ends, and vigorously executed, especially against Popery and immorality.

Your Majesty also is pleased to recommend to us to behave with meekness and charity toward those of the Reformed Religion, albeit differing from us in forms of Church policy. We own meekness and charity to be the duty of all, especially of pastors and office-bearers in the church of Christ, and shall, through grace, follow after these things as we have hitherto done. But we wish that all the differences were merely about Church policy, (though even for this we be sorry,) and that there were no difference about our confession of faith towards God, and our duty towards your Majesty.

We are encouraged by the law of the land, and do rely on your Majesty's gracious promises, that all practices and endeavours which tend to the subversion or prejudice of the established government of the Church, shall be discouraged and restrained; and it shall be our endeavour, by the grace of God, so to act in this Assembly, that we may approve ourselves to God and to your Majesty, and to give such new proofs of our duty and loyalty, that your Majesty may never have cause to repent of your royal favour showed to this Church.

That God may long preserve your sacred person, direct and prosper your councils, make you a blessing to your own people, and a defence to all the reformed churches; that, while war continueth, God may bless your forces, and those of your allies, both by sea and land, with success; that in due time you may be a blessed mean to restore the peace of Europe; and that religion and righteousness may flourish in your days, is and shall be the prayer of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Sess. 7, March 18, 1703, ante meridiem.—Commission to some Ministers and Elders for Planting Vacant Kirks in the North, the Highlands and Islands, and other Affairs remitted to them.

The General Assembly, considering that there are yet some vacant churches on the North side of Tay, and in the Highlands, as likewise several weighty affairs which this Assembly cannot overtake, do therefore find it needful that there be a commission granted to some ministers and elders for planting these vacant churches, and doing what shall be referred to them, concerning the Highlands and Islands, and other matters; and for that end, do hereby nominate, commission, and appoint, Messrs Thomas Thomson at Old Machar, &c., to be commissioners of this General Assembly, to the effect before and after mentioned; with full power to the said persons, or their quorum, which is hereby declared to be any twenty-one of the said commissioners, whereof fourteen are always to be ministers, to meet and convene within the Assembly-House at Edinburgh, the first day after the dissolution of this Assembly, at ten hours in the forenoon; and afterwards to meet the first Wednesdays of June, September, December, and March, and oftener, when and where they shall think needful and convenient, with power to the said Commission to choose their own Moderator; and suchlike, the General Assembly fully empowers and authorises their said Commissioners, or their quorum, to cognosce and finally determine, as they shall see cause, in every affair referred, or to be referred to them, and to do every thing contained in, and conform to the instructions given to them by this General Assembly. And, finally, with power to the said commission to advert to the interest of the Church on every occasion, and that the Church do not suffer or sustain any prejudice, which belongs to them to prevent, as they will be answerable to the next General Assembly; and they are hereby strictly prohibited and discharged to meddle in any other matters than what are herein committed to them; declaring also, that in and for all their actings they shall be accountable to and censurable by the next ensuing General Assembly of this Church. And, lastly, declares that this Commission shall continue until the next meeting of the General Assembly.

V.

Eadem Sessione.—Instructions by the General Assembly to their Commission.

That this Commission, as often as they shall see cause, apply to the Government, or any magistrate, for their countenancing of and concurring with the judicatories of the Church, in what the law allows, and for putting in execution the laws against Popery and profaneness, and seeking redress of grievances, particularly the contempt of the censures of the Church inflicted upon scandalous persons, and for settling vacant congregations, and regulating the poor, by providing maintenance and labour for them, and to meet when the Parliament sits.

2. That when any of the ministers who served under the late Prelacy, whose lives and doctrines may render them useful to this Church, do apply for reception into a share of the government of the Church, the General Assembly do empower and recommend to their Commission to receive them, according to the 13th paragraph of the 16th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1697; and that the said Commission be careful to get due information from the Presbyteries where the said person applying does or did officiate, and for the time resides.

3. That this Commission, in disposing of her Majesty's gift to this Church, do particularly take care that the encouragement granted by the General Assembly, anno 1699, to probationers who are to go North to preach, be rendered effectual; and that they cause defray the extraordinary charges and expenses that several ministers of the North have been at in carrying on the planting of churches, and other public affairs of the Church there.

4. The said Commission is to cognosce, and finally determine in all references already made, or to be made, to them by this Assembly, and references and appeals for transporting ministers to the North and the Highlands and Islands, which shall be brought before them, according to the overtures made thereanent, anno 1699; and that transportations to any parish in these places, whether privileged by former Acts of Assemblies or not, be carried on, and that in the most expeditious way.

5. This Commission is also to correspond with the State anent fasts and thanksgivings, as occasion requires, and to specify the causes thereof.

6. This Commission is to give advice and assistance to any Synod or Presbytery in difficult cases, as they shall be applied unto by them for that effect; as also, this Commission is empowered to proceed according to the 7th Act of the General Assembly, 1700, made in favour of the Presbyteries of Caithness, Orkney, and Zetland.

7. This Commission is empowered to inquire how ministers transported, or to be transported by the General Assembly, or their Commissions, have obeyed, or shall obey; and in case of disobedience, that they suspend the disobedient persons for three months; and in case they do not obey after these three months are elapsed, that then they be simpliciter deposed.

8. This Commission is to give all due encouragement and assistance to any proposals which may be made to them anent endeavours for reformation of manners, and for the effectual curbing of profanity.

9. That the said Commission shall see to the effectuating, whatever shall be by this Assembly committed to them, concerning the Highlands and Islands and vacant churches in the North; for erecting schools, and what else may tend to the encouragement of religion and advancing of reformation in these places.

VI.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the better Attendance of Members of the Commission.

The General Assembly, considering that the affairs referred by them to their Commission are of great moment and importance to the Church, do therefore require and ordain the members thereof to give all due attendance thereon, as they will be answerable and do hereby enjoin the several Presbyteries to send up such of their number as are members thereof to each quarterly meeting of the same; and do ordain the clerks of the Commission to record lists of the absents from each quarterly meeting, and from the meetings in time of Parliament, (without a reasonable excuse,) or who shall go away therefrom without leave first obtained, and send an extract of their names to the respective Synods, who are impartially to inquire into the reasons of their absence, and to censure them as they shall see cause, and make report thereof to the next General Assembly. And to this effect, that the clerks of the Commission do lay before that Assembly the lists of these absents; and the General Assembly recommends it to Presbyteries to supply the charges of the ministers who are members of this Commission, during their attendance thereon.

VII.

Sess. 8, March 19, 1703, post meridiem.—Approbation of the Actings and Proceedings of the Commission of the General Assembly, anno 1701.

The visitors of the commission-book made report, that they had revised the records of the Commission of the Assembly, anno 1701, wherein they found that the Commission had been at great pains and diligence in the many and weighty affairs referred to them, and gave in their observations upon the said book; and the moderator having been a member of that Commission, removed from the chair, and Mr Alexander Hastie, at the desire of the Assembly, did moderate pro tempore. Then the General Assembly took under consideration the proceedings of the said Commission contained in their book, subscribed by Mr Thomas Wilkie, Moderator, and Nicol Spence, Sub-Clerk; and having heard the visitors' remarks thereon, together with the moderator of that Commission and members thereof, their answers thereto, it was put to the vote, Approve the proceedings of the said Commission, or not; and it carried in the affirmative: Therefore, the General Assembly did, and hereby do, approve of the actings and proceedings of the said Commission of the General Assembly, anno 1701, and appoints their clerk to attest the same at the end of the register of the said Commission.

VIII.

Sess. 9, March 22, 1703, ante meridiem.—Address of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland to the Queen.

May it please your Majesty,

The entire confidence we repose in your Majesty's stedfast zeal for the true Protestant religion, and in the renewed gracious assurances we have from your Majesty to maintain and protect the Presbyterian government of this Church, as at present established, with the sense of the duty we owe to God, and to his Church in this nation, and to your Majesty, our undoubted and rightful sovereign, do embolden us in pursuance of those Christian ends recommended to us by your Majesty in the beginning of this Assembly, to lay before your Majesty, in all humble duty, those things that endanger the safety, and obstruct the success of religion, and trouble the quiet and peace of this Church and kingdom.

We humbly crave leave to represent to your Majesty, that our reformation from Popery was by Presbyters, whereby the Presbyterian government, in an equal parity, without any superiority among them, was at that time settled. And for this constitution and Church government the constant persuasion, zeal, and concern of the ministry and people of this National Church, is sufficiently known to your Majesty and to the world, God having always signally blessed the Presbyterian government of this Church and the discipline thereof, for the suppressing of profaneness, and curbing of error in this your ancient kingdom.

Upon these considerations at the late happy Revolution, and for remedying of the many evils we had suffered, and preventing the like in time coming, the claim of right did declare against Prelacy, as a great and insupportable grievance and trouble to this nation, and for Presbyterian parity in this Church; and by the acts of Parliament thereon ensuing Presbyterian government is settled, as agreeable to the Word of God, and most conducive to the advancement of true piety and godliness, and the establishing of peace and tranquillity; and, therefore, to be the only government of Christ's Church within this kingdom.

And of this Government, as well as of the true Protestant religion, we have, through the infinite mercy of God, under the protection of our late Sovereign Lord King William, and of your sacred Majesty, enjoyed the peaceable and comfortable possession, with much concord and tranquillity.

Notwithstanding whereof, it is our extreme sorrow that we find ourselves constrained to represent to your Majesty, for your gracious help and relief, 1st, The extraordinary growth of Popery, and bold and insolent trafficking of Popish priests and Jesuits in several parts of this kingdom; and that not only by secret practices, but by avowed keeping of mass-meetings and houses, and insulting of some of our ministers, and daring even to set up schools, to the corrupting and poisoning of youth, and many other unaccountable attempts, as if in a Popish country, to the great dishonour of God, the violation of your Majesty's good laws, the increase of disaffection to your royal Government, and the grief and disquiet of the hearts of your faithful subjects.

2dly, Though we acknowledge ourselves to be unquestionably bound as Christians, and more especially as ministers of the Gospel of peace, to maintain charity and forbearance toward those who peaceably differ from us, and contain themselves within the just limits of sobriety and reason, yet we cannot but complain of the disorders of some of the Episcopal clergy, who, with a few of their abettors that have given as little evidence of their affection to your Majesty's Government as to the Established Church, transgress your laws by preaching, though not qualified to your Majesty's Government—by despising sentences of deprivation by the Privy Council, and deposition by Church judicatories—by invading settled churches—by intruding into vacant churches—and by irregular baptizings and clandestine marriages, and several other gross abuses; all which tend to the weakening and frustrating the good ends of discipline, the increase of licentiousness and irreligion, and the spreading of error and doctrine contrary to our Confession of Faith, ratified in Parliament.

And of these things we have, in the sincere discharge of our duty to God and your Majesty, drawn up a particular condescendence to be given in to your Majesty's Privy Council, whereof we have transmitted just doubles to your secretaries for your Majesty's better and more full information.

3dly, We must also regret the abounding of immorality and profaneness, notwithstanding the clear light of the Gospel that we enjoy, and the many laudable laws that have been made to restrain them.

These being the heads of our grievances, wherein your Majesty sees how much the glory of God, the purity of religion, the obedience to your laws, the honour of your Government, and the peace and quiet of this Church and kingdom are concerned, we do, in all humility, most earnestly entreat that your Majesty will be pleased, in your royal wisdom and goodness, to appoint that the laws against Papists may be executed with vigour by all the officers of the law, in all parts of the kingdom; and that all unwarrantable and illegal attempts of dissenters against the established government of this Church, and the peace of the kingdom, be punished and prevented according to law; and that a proclamation in your Majesty's name be issued out for that effect; and for the strict execution of the laws against immorality and profaneness in persons of all ranks; and that all magistrates and officers of justice give due and ready assistance as law ordains, for making the sentences and censures of the Church and its judicatories effectual.

That God may long preserve your Majesty for the defence of the true Protestant religion, the comfort of all the churches of Christ, and the welfare and prosperity of this Church and kingdom, shall be the constant and fervent prayers of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Signed in our presence, in our name, and at our appointment, by
GEO. MELDRUM, Moderator.

Sess. 9, March 22, 1703.—Act approving some Overtures concerning the Planting of Vacant Churches in the North, the Highlands and Islands, and supplying thereof with Ministers and Probationers, and promoting Religion and the Knowledge of God in these places.

2. When any congregation in the Highlands shall call any minister, having the Irish tongue, settled in the Lowlands, that the commission be empowered to consider the affair, and determine therein as they shall see cause; and special regard is to be had to former acts of the General Assemblies thereanent.

3. That, during the vacancy of the kirks of the town of Aberdeen, the Synods of Lothian and Tweeddale, Glasgow and Ayr, supply the same quarterly, per vices, till the next Assembly; and that Mr Henry Shaw, minister of Cockburnspath, formerly appointed, do go thither against the first day of April next, from the Synod of Lothian, for the first quarter.

4. That the case of Brechin, and speedy planting thereof, be recommended to the special care of the Commission; as also, the planting of the vacant kirk of Inverkeillour and others, within the province of Angus and Mearns.

5. That the Presbytery of Dunkeld be declared to have the same privilege with the North and Highlands; and that the punctual supplying of the vacancies therein be recommended to the Synod of Perth and Stirling. And, particularly, that the Presbytery of Perth take the burden of supplying of two of these vacancies until the next Assembly; and that it be recommended to the Commission to send thither probationers having Irish, when called for, particularly one to the parish of Weem.

6. That the Commission be appointed and empowered to give all due encouragement to any proposals made, or to be made, anent erecting schools and libraries in the Highlands, and apply to the Government thereanent, as they shall see cause.

7. That the Commission be empowered, as they shall find convenient, to send some ministers having Irish, and others, to visit and supply the vacant kirks in the Highlands, and stay there for some time, especially in the summer season, and to catechise the people, and be at pains with them, to concur in advancing a reformation; and, in order thereunto, to encourage the erecting of schools, and endeavour to prevail with parents to send their children to be taught to read; which ministers are, from time to time, to send an account of their diligence and success, and of the state of the country they are supplying in, to the Commission, especially anent Papists, that application may be made to the Government thereanent.

8. That the Commission be empowered, when they get notice of students having Irish, fit to be entered on trials for the ministry, to recommend such students to Presbyteries, in order to pass; and when they pass, to send them to the Highlands, with the ordinary allowance: And this may prevent their being settled in Lowland congregations.

The General Assembly having heard and considered the overtures above written, they did, by their vote, and hereby do, approve thereof, and enact, ordain, and recommend according thereto in all points.

X.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Reception of Converts from Popery.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the 18th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1700, entitled, “Act anent Regulating the Reception of such as come off from Popery,” which appoints, that the reception of any that comes off from Popery to the communion of this Church should be the deed of a Church judicatory, do now declare, that by judicatories in the said act is not meant any below a Presbytery.

XI.

Eadem Sessione.—Act for supplying and preserving the Registers and Papers belonging to the General Assemblies, Committees, and Commissions thereof.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the great loss the Church hath sustained by the burning of several of their registers and some papers, in that dreadful fire which happened in the Lawnmarket of Edinburgh, upon the 28th day of October 1701, do, for making up that loss, as far as may be, and for the better preservation of their registers in time coming, enact and appoint that there be two authentic copies thereof, both subscribed by the Moderator and Clerk, one copy whereof to lie in the Clerk's custody, and the other copy to be sealed, and laid in some secure place in the New Church of Edinburgh, or where the General Assembly or Commission shall appoint: As also, that a subscribed extract of the proceedings of each General Assembly be sent, a little after the rising thereof, to the several Synods within this Church, to be by them recorded in a book; and all this to be done upon the public charges of the Church. And recommends to such persons as have any of the old registers or papers belonging to the General Assembly, Commissions, or Committees thereof, in their custody, to deliver up the same to the Clerk of the Assembly, to be by him kept for the public use of the Church; and that Ministers and Presbyteries be at pains in dealing with persons for that effect; and it is recommended to the Commission to gratify those who shall bring in to their Clerk any of the papers or registers foresaid, as they shall find such persons deserve.

XII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the Overtures concerning Church Discipline.

The which day, the Committee appointed by this Assembly for considering the printed overtures concerning the methods and forms of procedure in ecclesiastical judicatories, reported that they found that the committees appointed in the years 1698, 1699, 1700, and 1701, having received the remarks of some Presbyteries upon the said overtures, they compared the same with these overtures, and had made their own observations, deleting many superfluous overtures, amending others, and sometimes adding; and that the said Committee of this Assembly, having read part of the said overtures, with the observations and alterations of the said Committees, 1698, 1699, 1700, and 1701, do judge their remarks pertinent and judicious, and were of opinion that a committee should be chosen out of the bounds of the Synods of Lothian, Glasgow, and Fife, or any others the General Assembly shall please, yet to revise the said printed overtures, with the remarks, and cause transcribe and reprint them, with the alterations and additions, leaving out all superfluous overtures, sentences, and words; and that they be appointed to revise the two other chapters concerning Synods and General Assemblies, their Committees, and Commissions, not yet printed, and add the same to the printed overtures, and present the whole to the Commission of this Assembly, at their quarterly meeting in June next, that they may cause print and transmit the same to the several Presbyteries within this National Church, that the said Presbyteries may send in their opinions thereanent to the next General Assembly; which report being heard and considered by the General Assembly, they unanimously agreed thereunto, and accordingly nominate the Rev. Mr George Meldrum, Moderator, Mr William Crichton, Mr George Hamilton, Mr John Law, Mr David Blair at Edinburgh, Mr George Barclay at Uphall, Mr Robert Wylie at Hamilton, Mr John Stirling, Principal of the College of Glasgow, Mr Thomas Linning at Lesmahagow, Mr Archibald Hamilton at Cambuslang, Mr John Anderson, Principal of the Leonardine College of St Andrews, Mr John Anderson junior, minister there, Mr James Haddow, Professor of Divinity there, and Mr Hugh White at Larbert, Ministers; the Right Honourable Sir Hugh Dalrymple of Northberwick, Lord President of the Session, Sir James Stewart of Gutters, her Majesty's Advocate, Sir Colin Campbell, one of the Senators of the College of Justice, and Adam Cockburn of Ormiston, Ruling Elders; to be a committee for the effect foresaid; and the General Assembly refers to their Commission to name the time and place of the said committee's first meeting.

XIII.

XIV.

The next General Assembly of this National Church is to be held at Edinburgh, the 16th day of March 1704.

BEGUN AT EDINBURGH, MARCH 16, 1704.

I.

Sess. 1, March 16, 1704.—The Recording of the Queen's Commission to William Lord Ross, for representing her Majesty in this Assembly.

The General Assembly of the ministers and ruling elders of this National Church, being convened and constituted, there was produced to them by William Lord Ross, her Majesty's commission under the Great Seal of this kingdom, making and constituting him her Majesty's High Commissioner and representative in this National Assembly; which commission being publicly read, with all due honour and respect, the General Assembly appointed the same to be recorded in their registers, ad futuram rei memoriam, the tenor whereof follows:—"ANNA," &c.

II.

Eadem Sessione.—Her Majesty's gracious Letter to the General Assembly.

Her Majesty's High Commissioner presented the Queen's most gracious Letter directed to this General Assembly, which was publicly read, with all due honour and respect, and is appointed to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, the tenor whereof follows:—

ANNE, R.

Right Reverend and well-beloved,

We greet you well. The satisfactory accounts we have had of your good conduct and management in the last Assembly, give us full confidence of your meeting at this time in the same good disposition. And we doubt not but you will improve this opportunity to do what may be further necessary for promoting the true reformed Protestant religion; and we earnestly recommend to you to take effectual methods for planting of vacant churches with pious and learned ministers, which is so necessary for suppressing of error and immorality; in the doing whereof, you shall have from us all due encouragement and assistance. We have thought fit to appoint our right trusty and entirely-beloved conneillor, William Lord Ross, to represent our royal person in this Assembly, whose abilities and fitness to discharge this trust will, we doubt not, render him acceptable to you. We have fully instructed him in what may be further necessary, and therefore you may give him entire trust and credit. So, recommending to you calmness and unanimity in your proceedings, and the avoiding unseasonable debates, which you must be sensible will be of bad consequence in this juncture, we bid you heartily farewell.

Given at our Court at St James's, the 29th day of February 1704, and of our reign the 2d year.

By her Majesty's Command,

CROMARTY.

Directed—To the Right Reverend and well-beloved, the Moderator, Ministers, and Elders, of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

III.

Sess. 3, March 18, 1704.—The General Assembly's Answer to the Queen's gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

We bless God for his goodness in giving to us your Majesty, a Protestant Queen, to reign over us, and we judge it our duty to offer to your Majesty our humble and hearty thanks for the good effects of your government, and all the favour showed to this Church; and, more particularly, for giving your royal assent in the last Session of Parliament, to the act for ratifying the Protestant Religion, and Presbyterian Government of this Church, and for your late gracious and most seasonable letter to your Council, for ordering the redress of our grievances, as to Popery and immorality, and other disorders, and restraining all attempts against the present legal constitution of this Church; as, likewise, that we are now again, with your Majesty's countenance and favour, met in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ in a National Assembly, under your Majesty's shadow and protection.

Your Majesty's entrusting the Lord Ross to be your Commissioner to represent your royal person in this Assembly, is very acceptable to us, he being of known and entire fidelity and loyalty to your Majesty, and of whose kindness this Church hath great confidence.

Your Majesty's gracious letter to us was received and read with all due honour and respect, and we do acknowledge you recommend nothing to us but what is our duty; and we bless God, who puts it in your royal heart to excite us to improve this opportunity to do what is necessary for promoting the true Reformed Protestant Religion; and, in order to that, the planting vacant churches with pious and learned men, graciously promising your Majesty's encouragement and assistance therein, and we shall endeavour to apply ourselves thereto, as our great work.

And withal to study, by the grace of God, calmness and unanimity, and to shun, as hitherto we have done, unseasonable debates, which (as your Majesty is pleased to express it) would be of bad consequence in this juncture.

Now that God may long preserve your sacred person to reign over your people, as a blessing to them, and a defence to all the Reformed Churches, and make you in due time a blessed mean of restoring the peace of Europe; and that, while war continueth, God may prosper and bless your forces, and those of your allies, for the above mentioned ends, both by sea and land, with success; and that religion and righteousness may flourish among your people in your days, is, and shall be, the prayer of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Signed in our presence, in our name, and at our appointment, by

THO. WILKIE, Moderator.

IV.

Sess. 7, March 23, 1704, post meridiem.—Act Joining the Presbyteries of Caithness, Orkney, and Zetland, in one Synod.

The General Assembly, having heard and considered an overture transmitted to them from the Committee for Overtures, for reviving the act of the General Assembly, 15th of June 1646, adjoining the Presbyteries of Orkney and Zetland to the Provincial Synod of Caithness, after reasoning thereabout, and some amendments made thereupon, they did, by their vote, and hereby do, unanimously approve of the said overture. And, accordingly, for the more orderly managing of affairs in the Presbyteries of Orkney, Caithness, and Zetland, and restraining and correcting of abuses that have fallen, or may hereafter fall out in these places, do hereby revive the foresaid Act of Assembly, dated the 15th of June 1646, entitled, "Act for Joining the Presbyteries of Orkney and Zetland to the Provincial of Caithness ;” and do appoint their diets of meeting to be upon the first Tuesday of June yearly, during the continuance of this act, and their first meeting to be and begin upon the first Tuesday of June next, 1704, in the town of Thurso in Caithness ; and do appoint and ordain the Synod of Aberdeen to send one, and the Synod of Ross and Moray each of them two ministers, and the like number of ruling elders, to correspond with the said Synod, at their first meeting only : And the Assembly does ordain the said Synod to inquire diligently into the state of affairs in Zetland ; and, in particular, that at the first meeting they do consider, cognosce, and determine, in the two processes against Mr Hugh Leigh and Mr John Cumming, referred by the Presbytery of Zetland to this Assembly ; which two processes the General Assembly do hereby remit and refer to the said Synod : And the General Assembly does hereby declare that this present act shall obtain and stand in force, ay and until the same be recalled by a subsequent General Assembly, and that notwithstanding of the Act of Assembly, the 9th of August 1648, disjoining the Presbytery of Zetland from the said Synod : And the General Assembly does also declare, that, notwithstanding of this present annexation, the Presbytery of Dornoch shall still continue to meet and act Presbyterially with the Presbytery of Ross, as formerly : And the Assembly appoints letters to be written to the Synod intimating the premises to them.

V.

Sess. 8, March 24, 1704, ante meridiem.—Act anent Lecturing and Expounding the Holy Scriptures.

The General Assembly do hereby appoint and ordain the several ministers of this Church to observe the 9th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1694, “ Anent Reading and Expounding of the Scriptures in their Congregations ;” and recommends it to Presbyteries, at their privy censures, to inquire how the said Act has been observed by the several brethren within their bounds : And ordains an account of their diligence thereanent to be inserted in their Presbytery books, and likewise recommends to Synods, at their privy censures, to inquire how Presbyteries have observed the said recommendation.

VI.

Sess. 10, March 27, 1704, post meridiem.—Act anent Commissioners to the General Assembly, and their Subscribing the Confession of Faith.

The General Assembly, for the better ordering of elections of their members in time coming, appoints and ordains that all commissions to ministers and ruling elders from Presbyteries, Universities, and Royal Burghs, to subsequent Assemblies, bear that they have subscribed the Confession of Faith of this Church, according to the 11th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1700 ; and suchlike, that no minister or elder be nominated and commissioned to be a member of the General Assembly of this Church, by any Presbytery, Burgh, or University, but such as usually reside in or have a relation to the Presbytery, Burgh, or University, they are commissioned from.

VII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Citations in cases of Transportations of Ministers.

The General Assembly, to prevent rabbling of messengers by the people, and horrid profanation of the Lord’s Day, which frequently falls out in cases of transportations, when the defending party and parish are to be summoned, appoints and ordains, that the minister himself being summoned apud acta at the Presbytery, or if absent, by the Presbytery’s letter, to be present at the day appointed for hearing the cause ; he also be ordered to intimate out of the pulpit to heritors, elders, and others concerned in the parish, that there is such a call and such a transportation designed ; and if any of them have a mind to defend their right to their minister, they are to be present at the Presbytery on such a day, and ready to make their defences ; for which cause, the General Assembly ordains the call, with the reasons thereof, to be given or transmitted to the minister, to be by him communicated to them : And the General Assembly does appoint this method of citations in cases of transportations to be observed only where the Presbyteries concerned shall see cause to take that course, in which case, they hereby declare the citation so given to be a valid citation, but that it shall be optional to the Presbytery to follow this course, or do it by their officers as formerly.

VIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Scandalous Persons turning Popish.

The General Assembly, considering that some persons when challenged for scandal do turn Popish, or pretend to do so to avoid censure, do, therefore, enact that the Church proceed to the censure of excommunication against such after all the due pains taken to reclaim them prove ineffectual ; and appoints this present act to be intimated in all the churches within this kingdom.

IX.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Excommunication.

The General Assembly, considering that the sentence of excommunication is much despised, and that persons do continue to converse unnecessarily and familiarly with such as lie under that sentence, as if they were not excommunicated, do, therefore, enact and appoint that the sentence of excommunication being first intimated throughout all the churches within the Presbytery where the said sentence was pronounced, if the person continue obstinate, that then the Presbyteries give an account thereof to the Synod, who are to appoint the like intimation to be made in all the churches within their bounds ; and if, notwithstanding of this and other due means used to reclaim them, they shall continue obstinate, in that case, the Assembly appoints an account of their names, and sentence passed against them, to be brought by the said Synod to the General Assembly, that they may appoint intimation thereof to be made through all the churches of the kingdom : And the Assembly does appoint that at the foresaid respective intimations ministers do take occasion to hold forth the sad state and condition of excommunicated persons, and that they inform the people how to carry towards them.

X.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Students passing Trials.

The Assembly does appoint that strict notice be taken of such as pass their trials in order to the ministry, and, for that end, do ratify and revive all former acts of Assembly made in relation thereunto, and, in particular, the article allowed by the General Assembly, anno 1596, and approved in the General Assembly at Glasgow, 1638, article 13, session 7, renewed ultimo Augusti, 1647, session 27, anent the age of such ; as also, the 10th act of the General Assembly, 1694, and the 22d act of the General Assembly, 1696 : And do further ordain, that the catechetical trials be not perfunctoriously gone about, and that Presbyteries do appoint some of their number to examine them, in their own presenee, upon the several heads of divinity and government of the Church, and to know what reason they can give of their faith and sentiments in these matters, and if they can answer some principal objections, and that previously to all other parts of their trials ; and that this be not done hastily, but that a particular competent time be allowed for that purpose ; and that there be a trial also given to probationers of their gifts as to lecturing, and the General Assembly does hereby require and enjoin that the several Synods at their privy censures make strict inquiry how the Presbyteries within their bounds have observed this and other acts of Assemblies made to this purpose.

XI.

Eadem Sessione.—Act against Profaneness, with a Recommendation to the Commission thereanent.

The General Assembly, for the more effectual restraining of profaneness and immorality, and obtaining the exact execution of the laws against them, do hereby recommend to the Commission to be nominated by them, that they appoint some of their number with the clerk, to draw up an abstract of all the Acts of Assemblies to that purpose, both before and since the late Revolution, which being revised and approved by the Commission at their quarterly meeting in June, may by them be ordered to be printed, together with the abstract of the acts of Parliament against profaneness, in a small volume; and each Presbytery is hereby enjoined, twice a year at least, at diets appointed in hunc effectum, to read these, and to inquire at each minister what is done by him for the execution thereof; and every Synod is hereby ordained to take a strict account of the diligence and faithfulness of Presbyteries therein: And the General Assembly hereby likewise recommends to all Presbyteries to think seriously what may be further needful for restraining of wickedness, and advancing of piety and the kingdom of Christ in the nation, and send in their overtures concerning the same to the next General Assembly, who may take these into their serious consideration, and make this their chief and first work.

XII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Preaching or Disseminating Erroneous Doctrine.

The General Assembly, for vindicating the truths of God professed in this Church, and for suppressing of errors, do hereby discharge all persons to preach or disseminate any erroneous doctrine opposite to any head or article of the Confession of Faith of this Church; and, particularly, discharges the venting any Arminian or Socinian errors; and do ordain the respective judicatories of this Church to advert to any who shall teach or vent such errors, and proceed to censure them therefor, as shall be found just and requisite for suppressing the same: And more especially, the General Assembly does hereby recommend to the Synod of Fife to take heed to Mr James Grahame at Dunfermline, that he contravene not this act.

XIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act for bestowing Bursaries upon Students having Irish.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration that now, through the merey and goodness of God, most of the Lowland Presbyteries be-South Tay are competently planted, and that the promoting of knowledge, religion, and civility, in the Highlands is the common concern of this National Church, do therefore enact and appoint, that the one half of all the bursaries of the Presbyteries be-South Tay, including that part of the Synod of Perth that lies be-North Tay, be paid in to collectors to be appointed by the respective Presbyteries of Glasgow, Edinburgh, and St Andrews, which Presbyteries are to be accountable to their respective Synods concerned for what money they receive, the one half thereof to be applied for the education of such youths as have the Irish language, in philosophy and divinity, at the Colleges of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and St Andrews, and the other half to be disposed of to Lowland bursars, or such other pious uses as the respective Synods shall think fit; and for this end, the Synods of Glasgow, Galloway, and Dumfries, are to pay their bursaries to a collector to be appointed by the Presbytery of Glasgow, and under their inspection accountable to their Synods; in like manner, the Synods of Merse and Lothian to the Presbytery of Edinburgh; the Synods of Fife, Perth, and Stirling, to the Presbytery of St Andrews; and this to begin at October next, and to continue for four years, or longer, as the General Assembly shall see cause. That to the Synod of Argyle (who have a gift of vacancies for training youth) a certain small number of the bursaries payable to the collector to be appointed by the Presbytery of Glasgow be allotted, and all the rest for the other Highlands, and none are to have the benefit of any of the said bursaries, but such as bring a testimonial or recommendation from the Synods respectively to which they belong, bearing their having been examined by that Synod, and the Synod's good hopes of them as sober youths, piously inclined, and well affected to the government of the Church and State, and that they have the Irish language, and being good proficients in the Latin, and such as they judge may in due time prove able ministers of the Gospel or schoolmasters; and that they have obliged themselves to employ their talents in these services in the Highlands, either within the bounds of the Synods recommending them, or some others by their allowance, and that these testimonials be recorded with their names, and reported to each General Assembly: And further, the General Assembly does hereby renew the 8th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1701, entitled, "Recommendation to the Synods anent Maintaining of Bursars having the Irish Language;" and appoints the said act to be observed until the General Assembly see cause to recall the same.

XIV.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Erecting Schools in the Highlands.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration that the planting and propagating of religion in the Highlands is a work of charity to perishing souls there, and of great importance to this Church and nation, to which every one in their station, especially ministers of the Gospel, ought, with much cheerfulness and forward zeal, to afford their best endeavours and assistance; and being informed of the good inclinations of many, and their willingness to contribute for so good a work, and that the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr have made a laudable progress therein, this Assembly, for their parts, (until further advances be made in that noble and Christian design,) declare themselves willing to concur, as the matter and its success shall open unto them, and do, in pursuance of what is recommended to them by her Majesty's gracious letter, agree that there be a voluntary contribution made, by way of subscription, in each Presbytery within this kingdom, and that in like manner they gather up by subscriptions, or otherwise, from noblemen, gentlemen, and other charitably disposed persons, within their respective parishes, and in those that are vacant, by the Presbytery's direction and order, what they can get for erecting schools and educating youths in the Highlands and Islands, where the same is not provided for already; and that what is collected in the Synods of Glasgow and Ayr, Dumfries and Gallo-way, be sent in to the Presbytery of Glasgow;—that the Synods of Lothian and Tweeddale, Merse and Teviotdale, send in their collections to the Presbytery of Edinburgh;—that the Synods of Fife, Perth, and Stirling, send in their collections to the Presbytery of St Andrews;—the Synods of Angus and Mearns, and Aberdeen, to the Presbytery of Aberdeen;—and the said Presbyteries of Glasgow, Edinburgh, St Andrews, and Aberdeen, are to take care to secure what of the contributions comes to their hands, and to be accountable to their respective Synods; and the management and disposal of what is so collected is hereby recommended to the Commission of the General Assembly; for which end, Synods or Presbyteries who receive what is collected are appointed to send an account thereof quarterly to the foresaid Commission. But the other Presbyteries concerned in the Highlands and Islands are to have the management of the collections made within their own bounds, as they shall find most effectual for attaining the said design, and to be accountable to their own Synods; which way of management is to continue till the next Assembly; and Synods are desired to send in their opinions concerning the promoting and further carrying on of the said design to the next Assembly: And the Assembly further recommends it to their said Commission, as they shall find needful and convenient, to apply to the Parliament, Lords of her Majesty's Privy Council, and those in the Government, for their concurrence and assistance in this matter, and for interponing their authority for getting the said schools erected, and obliging parents to put their children thereto, and for making the said design effectual: And, lastly, it is recommended to the Presbyteries and Synods concerned in the Highlands, to send in to the Commission an account of what parishes have or want schools, and the reasons of their wanting thereof, and what places do most need, and are most convenient for erecting schools in; as also to send in an account of such students as are hopeful, whom they would have supplied, and this without prejudice of schools in every parish, appointed by act of Parliament, and of the royal gifts in favour of the Highlands: And the General Assembly recommends to the Commission to cause reprint and disperse the reasons and motives for carrying on the said design.

 XV.

Sess. 11, March 28, 1704, post meridiem.—Act approving the Actings and Proceedings of the Commission of the General Assembly, anno 1703.

The General Assembly, having this day had reproduced in their presence the registers of the actings and proceedings of the Commission appointed by the last Assembly; and having heard a report of the committee of their own number, who were not members of the said Commission, appointed to revise, examine, and consider, the said register, with their observations thereupon, and the answers made thereto by the moderator and other members of the said Commission, the members of the said Commission were removed, and Mr John Bannatyne was chosen moderator pro tempore, the Moderator of this Assembly having been a member of the said Commission; and the General Assembly having maturely considered the said report and answers, do find that the whole actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said Commission, contained in two registers thereof, subscribed by Mr George Meldrum, Moderator, and Mr John Dundas, Clerk, do evidence much wisdom, prudence, zeal, and diligence, and that the said Commission have proceeded orderly and formally in every thing, according to their commission and instructions; and, therefore, this Assembly, by an unanimous vote, did, and hereby do, ratify and approve the whole actings, proceedings, and conclusions, of the said Commission, contained in the said two registers of the same, beginning the 24th day of March 1703, and ending the 2d day of March current, inclusive; and the members of the Commission being called in, the same was intimated to them, and the Moderator gave them the thanks of this Assembly for their good service done to this Church; and then the Moderator and Clerk to this Assembly took their places.

 XVI.

Sess. 12, March 29, 1704, ante meridiem.—Act and Recommendation anent Regulation of the Commission of the General Assembly.

Seeing, by the instructions brought in from Presbyteries to this and preceding Assemblies, it appears to be the desire of several Presbyteries that there be some just and equal representation of the several Synods and Presbyteries upon the Commission; therefore, the Assembly, not having time now to adjust that matter, appoints the several Presbyteries to consider seriously upon it, and to send in their advice thereanent to the next ensuing General Assembly; particularly as to what number of persons out of each Synod or Presbytery are fit to be upon the Commission; how the persons shall be nominated and chosen at the Assembly, and how they may be obliged to attend duly upon the diets of the Commission when it meets; and to consider of the best methods for supplying their charges with preaching, and defraying their expenses, or concerning any other thing needful to the said regulation; and, in the meantime, that the Commission to be appointed by this Assembly may the more regularly proceed, and effectually execute their commission and instructions, the Assembly recommends it to the several Presbyteries to be careful to send in at least one of their number to attend the diets of the said Commission, and to supply the charges of such with preaching, and to furnish their necessary charges and expenses when attending, as said is: And that the Assembly may be in the better case to regulate this and other things of importance, the General Assembly does recommend it to Presbyteries to choose the wisest and most grave and experienced of their number to represent them in the next Assembly.

XVII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent Libraries in the Highlands.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration that there is a project set on foot by some piously inclined persons in this and the neighbouring nation of England, for erecting libraries in the Highlands of this kingdom, and that good advances have been made therein, do declare their approbation of that design, and appoints a letter of thanks to be written to the Society in England for Propagating Christian Knowledge, and to others who have given their concurrence and assistance in this matter; and the General Assembly empowers the Commission to apply to the Lords of her Majesty's Privy Council or Treasury for their assistance, in order to the bringing down of the said books from England, and transmitting the same to the places under written, at which they are to be fixed in this kingdom. And the said Commission is hereby empowered to give their best advice and assistance for making this project effectual. And, lastly, they are to use their endeavours for getting a new impression of the Bible in Irish; and the General Assembly renews the recommendation of the Assembly, anno 1699, to the Synod of Argyle, for translating the Confession of Faith, and Larger Catechism, in the Irish language, with a vocabulary of the most necessary and useful terms in divinity; and likewise renews the 22d Act of the General Assembly, anno 1694, concerning the use of the Irish Psalms and Shorter Catechism. And the General Assembly does agree that one of the said libraries be fixed at Dumbarton, two in the Presbytery of Dunblane, three in the province of Ross, one in the Presbytery of Sutherland, two in the Presbytery of Caithness, one in Orkney, one in Zetland, four in the province of Moray, four in the Presbytery of Dunkeld, and twelve in the Synod of Argyle, including the Western Isles, in such places as the respective Synods and Presbyteries of these bounds shall agree upon.

XVIII.

Sess. 13, March 30, 1704, ante meridiem.—Act against Schism and Disorders, and anent Mr John M'Millan and Mr John Hepburn.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration that, notwithstanding this Church doth adhere to her former doctrine, worship, discipline, and government, yet some, under a pretext of zeal, do separate and withdraw from communion with her; do, therefore, enjoin all Presbyteries and Synods to censure such persons who do, within their bounds, carry on divisive courses, and that they vigorously use all suitable means for reclaiming misled people, and for the preventing the growth of schism; and that the Commission of the General Assembly shall give their assistance in this good work to the several judicatories, as need shall require: And the General Assembly, having also considered a petition and reference of the Presbytery of Kirkeudbright, concerning Mr John M'Millan, who exercises the ministry in Balmaghie, and other places, after his being deposed, and the report of a committee appointed by them to consider that affair, bearing that they, having heard the whole process of the Presbytery against him, and deliberated thereon, gave it as their opinion, that he (being cited to this Assembly, by the said Presbytery of Kirkeudbright, apud acta, for contumacy, in contravening their sentence of deposition) be called, and if he appear not, that the Assembly refer this affair to their Commission, who shall cause cite Mr John M'Millan to compare before them, and do therein as they shall see cause. And Mr John Hepburn being delated by the Presbytery of Kirkeudbright for preaching in the kirk of Balmaghie, in their bounds, without being desired by them; yea, even when another was appointed by them to preach there, and for employing the deposed Mr John M'Millan to preach for him at Orr; and several other Presbyteries bringing in complaints against the said Mr John Hepburn of his disobedience to the act of the General Assembly, anno 1699, reponing him to the exercise of his ministry, in his not corresponding with nor being a constituent member of the Presbyteries of Dumfries or Kirkcudbright, as the said act requires; and by preaching in several Presbyteries, both in vacant and planted parishes, without the respective Presbytery's allowance; and baptizing children coming from several parishes, without testimonials from the ministers of these parishes, or their sessions: Therefore, the General Assembly refers also the affair of the said Mr John Hepburn to their Commission, and empowers and enjoins them to cite him before them, and take trial of the disorders he is charged with, and proceed against him with the censures of the Church, as they shall see cause; and, if need be, that they send a committee into the bounds of Dumfries and Galloway for both these affairs, and visiting these bounds, which Committee shall concur with the respective judicatories there, in cognoscing of any schism or immoralities that may have fallen out, and of error and insufficiency in any that may be delated on that account; which overture and act being read and considered, the Assembly did, by their vote, approve thereof; and Mr John M'Millan being accordingly three several times publicly called at the door, and not comparing, therefore the General Assembly referred and appointed, according to the said act in all points.

 XIX.

Eadem Sessione.—Commission to some Ministers and Elders for Planting Vacant Kirks in the North, the Highlands and Islands, and other Affairs remitted to them.

The General Assembly, considering that there are yet some vacant churches on the North side of Tay, and in the Highlands, as likewise several weighty affairs which this Assembly cannot overtake, do, therefore, find it needful that there be a Commission granted to some Ministers and Ruling Elders for planting these vacant churches, and doing what shall be referred to them, concerning the Highlands and Islands, and other matters; and, for that end, do hereby nominate, commission, and appoint, Mr Hugh Anderson at Cromarty, &c., &c., to be Commissioners of this General Assembly, to the effect before and after mentioned, with full power to the said persons, &c., &c. [The powers granted to the Commission are the same as in the preceding year.]

 XX.

Eadem Sessione.—Instructions to the Commission.

1. That this Commission, as often as they shall see cause, apply to the Government, or any magistrate, for their countenancing of and concurring with the judicatories of the Church, in what the law allows, and for putting in execution the laws against Popery and profaneness, and seeking redress of grievances, particularly the abuses or disorders committed contrary to the established Presbyterian government of this Church, the contempt of the censures of the judicatories thereof, inflicted on scandalous persons, and for settling vacant congregations, regulating the poor, by providing maintenance and labour for them, and to meet when the Parliament sits.

2. [Same as in 1703.]

3. That this Commission use their utmost diligence for getting payment of the money gifted by the Queen's Majesty for defraying the public charges of the Church; and, in disposing thereof, they are particularly to take care that the public debts of the Church be first paid; the encouragement granted by the General Assembly, anno 1699, to probationers who go North, or to the Highlands to preach, be rendered effectual; and that they cause defray the extraordinary charges and expenses that ministers of the North have been at, in carrying on the planting of churches, and other public affairs of the Church there.

4. [Same as in 1703.]

5. [Same as in 1703.]

6. That this Commission give advice and assistance to any Synod or Presbytery in difficult cases, as they shall be applied unto by them for that effect: As also, this Commission is empowered to proceed according to the 7th Act of the General Assembly, 1700, made in favour of the Presbyteries of Caithness, Orkney, and Zetland; their Synod being to meet only once in the year, and so cannot give them all the assistance that is necessary.

7. [Same as in 1703.]

8. [Same as in 1703.]

9. [Same as in 1703.]

10. That the Commission apply to the Parliament for getting a Commission for plantation of kirks and valuation of teinds, and another Commission for visitation of schools and colleges, and to use their utmost endeavours to make the design thereof effectual, particularly for preventing or redressing any corruption that may be found in doctrine or manners, and whatever may have a tendency thereto.

11. That the Commission have a special respect to the 9th Act of the General Assembly, 1703, entitled, "Act approving some Overtures concerning the Planting Vacant Churches in the North, and Highlands and Islands, and supplying thereof with Ministers and Probationers, and promoting Religion and the Knowledge of God in these Places." And the Commission are hereby empowered to proceed according to these overtures, in so far as they shall find needful.

XXI.

Eadem Sessione.—Act against Popery, and for sending in the Names of all Papists to the Clerks of the Privy Council.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration the growth of Popery, and that it is incumbent on them to do all they can for suppressing thereof, do appoint Presbyteries to send in lists to the clerks of her Majesty's Privy Council, conform to the Acts of Parliament and proclamations of Council thereanent, of all Papists within their bounds; and that these lists be particular as to the names and designations of the persons who entertain them, and contain the places where they are entertained, and where they preach, and hear and say mass, and that they be particular as to the evidences, by giving the names and designations of the witnesses; and, in respect that ministers, when they come to deal with Papists, in order to bring them off from their errors, are by them and their friends abused and maltreated, and violence offered to their persons, the General Assembly do hereby appoint their Commission to apply to the Government to provide for the security of ministers who undertake this work, that they may be protected from violence and injuries.

XXII.

Eadem Sessione.—Recommendation against Protestants Marrying with Papists.

The General Assembly recommends to ministers to be at pains to dehort their people from marrying with Papists, and hold forth the dangerous effects thereof; and the General Assembly do hereby instruct their Commission to apply to the Parliament for an act discharging such unequal marriages, and recommends to the several Presbyteries to think upon some overtures that may tend to prevent such marriages.

XXIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act appointing Presbyteries to send in their Opinions concerning some Overtures transmitted in the year 1698.

The General Assembly do hereby appoint the several Presbyteries to send in to the next Assembly their opinions in writing, according to the 16th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1700, anent the printed overtures, concerning the method and form of the procedure of the judicatories of the Church against scandalous persons, formerly transmitted by the Commission of the General Assembly, 1698, and subjoined to the Acts of the Assembly that year.

XXIV.

Sess. 14, Eodem die, post meridiem.—Act in favour of the Kirk of Campvere.

The General Assembly, having heard a representation made to them by Sir Andrew Kennedy of Clowburn, Conservator of the Scots Privileges in the Netherlands, and ruling elder, commissioned from the Consistory of the Scots Kirk of Campvere, in Zealand, bearing that there were several propositions concerning the said Kirk, given in to and approved by the General Assembly, anno 1642, which are yet standing recorded in the Consistory books there, and in respect the registers of the General Assembly were destroyed by fire, therefore, craving to the effect after mentioned; the General Assembly having considered this request, and finding the said propositions just and reasonable, do hereby, of new, enact and authorise the propositions after mentioned, and appoints them to be contained and inserted in the registers of this Assembly, the tenor whereof follows:—“St Andrews, August 6, 1642, Sess. 13.—Propositions concerning the Kirk of Campvere, given in to the Assembly from the Committee of Overtures. Since it has pleased the Assembly to join the Scots Kirk at Campvere with this Kirk, it were not amiss that the moderator should call for the minister of it, Mr William Spang, to direct him, in the name of the Assembly, to observe henceforth that order in the outward worship of God, and exercise of discipline, as is here received by law and practice. 2do, That since the Assembly condescendeth that commissioners from that Kirk of Campvere shall come but now and then, as commodiously they may, that they are not hereby to plead a continual exemption, but must resolve to come to the Assembly every third year at least, with a ruling elder. 3tio, That whatsoever difficulty shall occur in the exercise of discipline, which the session there shall find too difficult for them, that they acquaint the Presbytery of Edinburgh, or commissioners from the General Assembly, with the same, to receive counsel and advice from them. 4to, That an act may be made for the payment of the expenses of the minister’s coming hither at the Assembly’s command, lest the losses sustained will make him and the ruling elder afterwards more unwilling to come so long a journey. These propositions were read and approved by the Assembly, and Mr William Spang, minister at the said kirk, and commissioner to this Assembly, promised to endeavour, by the Lord’s assistance, to obey the directions there mentioned. Extracted forth of the books of the General Assembly, by me, Sir Archibald Johnston, clerk thereto. (Sic subscribitur) A. JOHNSTON, Cls. Eccl.” Follows the attestation of the Consistory of Campvere. “That this is the true and full extract of the above written acts, as contained in this our said register, is, after reading and comparing of the same by the Consistory of this staple Church, attested in their name, at their appointment, and in their presence, at Campvere, 5th March 1704, by John Chalmers, minister and session-clerk.” And, 2do, The said Sir Andrew Kennedy, conform to a particular instruction given to him by the said Consistory, farther craved, that the said General Assembly would be pleased to empower and authorise all Commissions of this, or the subsequent Assemblies of this Church, to act, cognosce, advise, and determine, in all affairs belonging to the said Kirk and Consistory of Campvere, that shall be proposed to, or pursued before them, as their immediate superior judicatory. The General Assembly having considered the premises, do hereby empower and authorise the foresaid Commissions in manner as above craved, and appoint their clerk to record the same in their books; and, farther, the said Sir Andrew Kennedy craved, conform to his instructions thereanent, that the expense of their commissioners to the Assemblies may be paid them by the public. The Assembly, having considered this desire, do recommend it to the said Consistory of Campvere to pay the charges of their own commissioners out of their own stock, until this Church be in a better capacity to assist them.

 XXV.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent preparing a Form of Process, and the Overtures concerning Church Discipline.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration that all the former endeavours about the bringing the printed Overtures of Discipline to a period, have not had the desired effect; do, therefore, nominate the Rev. Mr Thomas Wilkie, their Moderator, Messrs William Crichton, John Law, George Meldrum, George Hamilton, David Blair, William Carstairs, and Charles Gordon, Ministers; the Lord President of the Session, the Lord Advocate, Lord Halcraig, and Lord Tillycoultry, Ruling Elders; as a committee, to meet and continue together until they have concerted and agreed upon a form of process for regulating the procedure of Church judicatories for the future, and recommends to them to have the same in readiness against the next Assembly; and, for that end, to prepare it against the quarterly meeting of the Commission in June next; that it being revised by them, may be transmitted to the several Presbyteries for their opinions thereanent, to be reported to the next Assembly; and the said Commission are appointed to name the diets and place of the said committee's meeting: And, farther, the Assembly considering that albeit the printed Overtures for Discipline be not so succinet as need were, yet that the same, as now amended, may be very useful, do, therefore, recommend to the Commission to cause again revise the said whole overtures, with the amendments, and cause reprint and transmit the same to the several Presbyteries, that their opinion thereanent may be reported to the next Assembly, who are to order what is to be done therewith as they shall think meet.

 XXVI.

Sess. 15 et ultima, March 31, 1704, ante meridiem.—Act anent a Fast.

The General Assembly, considering the present unseasonableness of the weather in seed-time, with many other weighty grounds and causes of fasting and humiliation before God, do judge it fit that a day be set apart for that solemn duty; but considering that much of the seed-time might be over before a fast could be obtained in one day, through the whole nation, and that the case of the country is different in the several bounds of Synods and Presbyteries; therefore, they most seriously and earnestly recommend it to the several Synods and Presbyteries within this National Church, to appoint and set apart a day for prayer and fasting within their respective bounds, and to condescend upon the causes thereof, suitable to the present circumstances of affairs, both at home and abroad, and the special circumstances of their several bounds, and that this be done as soon as can be: And the General Assembly recommends to ministers, to be most serious in holding forth to their people the grievous sins of this land, and the tokens of God's displeasure because of them, expressed many ways, and particularly by the unseasonableness of the weather in seed-time, and exhorting them to fervent prayer, and serious repentance and reformation; and, that the said humiliation and fast may be more speedily and seasonably gone about, the General Assembly appoints the several ministers, members of this Assembly, to acquaint their Presbyteries of this appointment, that ministers and people may have time to prepare themselves suitably for such a solemn work, and orders these presents to be printed, that copies thereof may be in readiness for the commissioners from the several Presbyteries to take along with them.

 XXVII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act anent the Registers of the Church.

The General Assembly, considering the prejudice the Church sustains through the loss of the registers thereof, and being informed that some of them, and other papers that may be useful for the Church, are in the hands of several persons both in this and our neighbour nation in England, do renew the recommendation contained in the 11th act of the General Assembly, anno 1703, and empowers their Commission to do according thereto.

 XXVIII.

Eadem Sessione.—Act recommending Presbyteries to consider Proposals anent Schools, &c.

(See the 5th Act of Assembly, 1705.)

 XXIX.

The next General Assembly of this National Church is to be held at Edinburgh the last Thursday of March, 1705 years.

This Assembly was concluded with prayer, singing the 48th Psalm, from verse 7th to the close, and pronouncing the blessing.

Collected and extracted from the records of the General Assembly, by

Jo. DUNDAS, Cls.

OVERTURES CONCERNING THE DISCIPLINE AND METHOD OF PROCEEDING IN THE ECCLESIASTICAL JUDICATORIES OF THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND: TRANSMITTED TO THE SEVERAL PRESBYTERIES TO BE FARTHER CONSIDERED, AND THEY TO SEND IN THEIR OPINIONS THEREANENT TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, OR COMMISSION THEREOF.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE EDITION OF 1705.

The first three chapters of these Overtures being drawn up by a private hand, and printed in the year 1696, the General Assembly held the year following appointed what was then printed thereof to be sent to the several Presbyteries, ordaining them to send their animadversions and observations thereupon to the Commission of that Assembly; and some Presbyteries having accordingly sent in their observations, several General Assemblies nominated committees for considering the said overtures, and animadversions made thereupon, and to compare them with the Word of God, Books of Discipline, and Acts of the General Assemblies of this Church, and to consider what was wanting in, or to be added to the said overtures; which committees having had many meetings thereupon, and made some progress in their work, the same is now printed, and ordered to be transmitted to the several Presbyteries, according to the act of the General Assembly, anno 1704. But the reader would remember that these overtures were never read in the General Assembly, nor any of the Commissions thereof, only revised by committees, so that the same is not to be looked upon as the deed of the Church of Scotland, nor any judicatory therein; and yet it may be very useful for advice and direction, though not as a binding rule, and no doubt it will have weight with many, as having come through the hands of so many learned, judicious, grave, and pious ministers, who have been at great pains in that matter; but as to the two last chapters, concerning Synods and General Assemblies, &c., they were never before in print nor transmitted, and so the opinions of Presbyteries were not given thereupon; and besides were not so narrowly examined by the Committees as the other chapters were, so that it can only be looked upon as coming from a private hand.

Seeing there are several things wanting in the overtures now printed, to make the same a complete Book of Discipline, Presbyteries are entreated to continue in adding and amending, and to send their thoughts thereanent in writing to the Clerk of the General Assembly, in order to the perfecting of this work.

CHAPTER I.

GENERAL DIRECTIONS.

SECT. 1.—Of the right Manner of Constituting of Church Judicatories.

1. The members constituent of Church judicatories are ministers and elders, called ruling elders, and in parochial sessions deacons are admitted, with respect to their special care and oversight of the poor of the parish.

2. Each meeting of a judicatory is to be begun with solemn prayer, calling upon God in Jesus Christ, in whose name they are to act; and this is to be done by the last Moderator, and in his absence by the preceding; or if none such be present, it is to be done by the eldest minister present for the time, who shall thereafter ask the votes, who shall moderate.

3. These ministers and elders met in order to the constituting themselves a judicatory are to elect a Moderator and a Clerk, and to have attending them a beadle or officer, one or more.

4. The time and place of meeting in ordinary of Church judicatories are to be such as were appointed by the former meeting, except pro re nata the Moderator do call the same, in doing whereof, he should take all the advice of his brethren, (which the circumstances can allow,) and for the reasonableness and necessity of his so doing he is to be answerable.

5. After prayer, the Clerk is to call the rolls, and mark the sederunt.

SECT. 2.—Of the Moderator of a Church Judicatory.

1. Every ecclesiastical judicatory is, for order, to elect from among themselves one to be their Moderator or preses, except in kirk-sessions, where there is but one minister, who moderates ex officio.

2. Seeing he is called frequently to exercise the power of order, as solemn public ecclesiastical prayer, authoritative exhortation, rebuke, direction, &c. The Moderator is always to be a minister.

3. In respect of the prejudice that hath arisen, and may arise to the Church, by the constancy or long continuance of this work in one man's hands; therefore, there ought to be frequent changes and elections of fit persons to be Moderators.

4. The Moderator when chosen is to look on himself as the mouth of the meeting, and, therefore, is to act, do, and speak accordingly; otherwise he is censurable by them.

5. The Moderator is to take care that decency and order be exactly observed, as that the members keep in their seats, that but one speak at once, that the younger give way to the elder to speak first, that none speak but to the Moderator, nor without his leave, that none interrupt another in speaking, that there be no private conferences among the members, but that all be attentive, serious, and grave, minding that the things of Christ and his Church are in hand, and that they act in his name; and no modesty of the Moderator, nor partial respect, nor fear of displeasing, is to hinder him from noticing and rebuking any failure herein.

6. He is to acquaint the judicatory of all the affairs that lie before them, and may, for dispatch, lay before them the method to expedite them most conveniently; in order to which, the clerk is to give him a list, or note of business from the minutes, and in all or any other thing he speaks to the judicatory, it is always to be with submission to them, and if they think fit.

7. It is his part, before any thing go to the vote, to ask the judgment of a competent number of members, in order to bring the matter to a clear state; and before the vote be stated, to ask if any other member hath any new thing to offer in the affair, to the end that all debate, after the vote is begun, (which is nowise to be admitted of,) may be prevented.

8. If the affair or question in hand be of that weight and difficulty that the members shun to speak or to propose any overture in the affair, then the Moderator himself may propose an overture, and ask the judgment of the brethren concerning it, thereby to hasten the dispatch of affairs.

9. When the members are giving their judgment concerning any overture proposed, though he should hear the objection made against it, yet he should desire the objectors to make a better; but though they have no new overture, the weight of the objection is to be considered.

10. He should likewise restrain the members from deviating to matters alien from the present affair, and should keep them close to the business, obliging them to use few words, to gain time; in all which it will be needful the Moderator himself should be a good example to others.

11. If anything happen to be spoken impertinently by any member, the Moderator is prudently to divert it, and if that cannot be, then calmly to resent the same, according to its demerit, to prevent greater heat.

12. After a matter hath been reasoned and debated on all hands, it will frequently be fit that the Moderator, in few words, resume the question, and the arguments which have been adduced on either hand, with these answers which were given; and in so doing, be faithful, without giving them any bias to that which is his own sentiment, (he having done that in the debate,) thereby to ripen and prepare the members for a more clear vote.

13. When a single member asks the vote of a judicatory, and others do oppose, it is not to be granted, unless one or two more concur in the desire.

SECT. 3.—Of Clerks to Church Judicatories, and their Registers.

1. Every Church judicatory ought to have a clerk of their own election, and either of their own number, or some other fit person, who is to give his oath de fideli.

2. The Clerk is to be a person of a Christian walk and conversation, and entire credit and reputation for fidelity, of prudence, and able to keep the secrets of the judicatory, of competent ability and dexterity, a good hand of writing, his records being to be preserved for after ages.

3. The Clerk is always to have at every meeting lying on the table a fair Bible, the Confession of Faith, the printed Acts of the General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland; and in Presbyteries, he ought to have the Synod's Acts; and in Kirk-Sessions, such acts of Presbytery and Synod as may concern the Session, together with his minute-book.

4. The register and minute-book being the records of that judicatory, he is to be answerable for them, that therein be nothing recorded but what he did by the order and direction of the Moderator, as the mouth of the judicatory.

5. In the minute-book, (which should be a bound book, and not loose sheets of paper,) the Clerk, at every meeting, and in presence thereof, is to record the names of the members of that sederunt, and mark the absents, except in Synods and General Assemblies, where it is enough to mark the absents; to read the former minutes, and minute the resolutions and determinations of the present meeting as he shall be ordered; and in affairs of any moment or difficulty, he is to read what is minuted before the meeting proceed to any other business.

6. In the fair register, the Clerk is to extend in ample form, and record all the acts, votes, and resolutions of the judicatory, after they are revised by order of the judicatory, and that without any interlinings, blanks, or blottings of words or pages; and that this register be paged, and have a large indexed margin.

7. That registers of all Church judicatories may be better preserved, it were fit that every Session deliver their fair register in to the Presbytery every ten years, and every Presbytery, theirs and the Sessions' into the Synod every fifteen years; and that the Synod every twenty years order all these, and their own fair register, to be laid up in the public library of that university which is next adjacent to them, where they may be safely kept from accidents, for the future benefit of the Church: And that the Church may not want the present benefit of them, let doubles be taken, collated, and attested, whereof one to be sent to the university as aforesaid, and the other to be kept in the Clerk of the judicatory's hands. But it is to be considered upon whose expenses this is to be done.

SECT. 4.—Of Proceedings in all Church Judicatories, and the Members' Behaviour therein.

1. After the judicatory is constituted, the Clerk is to call the roll, and those who were formerly absent are to be censured at the discretion of the judicatory, if their excuse, when heard, be not found relevant; also the absents for the time are to be marked, or such as come sero, or who, being once present, do not attend till the diet be ended, in order to a censure such as the judicatory thinks fit.

2. The Moderator (if the meeting be occasional pro re nata) is to narrate the occasion, and cause of the same.

3. If it be the ordinary time of meeting, it seems most expedient to begin with reading over the minutes and acts of the last meeting, both to know if the same were rightly recorded, and to refresh the memory of the members with what was done.

4. If there were any references from the last meeting to this, these ordinarily come to be the first under consideration, and expedited, unless such necessary emergents come to be discussed which cannot admit of delay.

5. As for any new matter that may come before a Church judicatory, great caution should be used that it be fitly brought thither.

6. When any business is moved in a judicatory, whether by petition or information, the judicatories are, in the first place, to consider, whether the matter in its circumstantiated case be proper at present for them to enter upon, and whether it be regularly and orderly brought in, and whether it be proper for them to discuss it themselves, or prepare it for superior judicatories, and should endeavour to narrow their work as much as with the edification of the Church they can, especially as to the head of scandal.

7. Nothing ought to be admitted by any judicatory as the ground of a process for censure, but what hath been declared censurable by the Word of God, or some act or universal custom of this National Church, according to some special rules given thereant, Chap. II. Sect. 6th and 7th.

8. In proceeding in all causes wherein there is any person or party concerned, the judicatory is to see that, before they proceed, the person be duly sisted before them, by a legal timeous citation, the execution of which summons is to be returned by the beadle, and the person called at the door.

9. And sometimes it may be fit that the party be privately spoken to, before any public citation be given, or process begun, for their better gaining; if the party appear not, there ought to be a second, and then a third, citation, given by Sessions and Presbyteries, either personally, or left at their dwelling-house, before the judicatory declare the person contumacious; unless the party be cited to appear before a superior judicatory by reference or appeal: In which case, there is not that need of so many citations before the superior judicatory; the party having actually appeared before the inferior judicatory, and by them cited apud acta before the superior, or having been contumacious before the cause was brought before the superior judicatory.

10. All citations apud acta are peremptory, and infer contumacy, if not obeyed.

11. If the person do not appear on the third citation, or upon a citation apud acta, and no relevant excuse of absence adduced, though in that case he be censurable for contumacy, yet it were fit the judicatory proceed to the trial of the scandals delated against him before they censure him for contumacy.

12. If the party appear, then the Moderator is to inform the person of the occasion of his being called.

13. There seems to be no need of accusers or informers in ecclesiastical processes; so that the party, if cited, is to answer the judicatory in what is laid to his charge, yet so, that if the person cited be found innocent and acquitted, those who informed the judicatory ought to be noticed, for either their calumny or imprudence, as the judicatory shall find cause.

14. If there be need of witnesses, a list of their names ought to be given to the defenders, some time before their compareance, and they ought to be timeously cited to give evidence, and if they refuse, after three citations given, and executions returned, may be proceeded with as contumacious, or application made to the civil magistrate, that he may oblige them to appear.

15. Before the witnesses be judicially examined, the accused person is to be called, and if he appear, may object against any of them, and if the objection be relevant, and made evident to the judicatory, the witnesses are to be cast; but a person's being the delator or informer doth not hinder him to be a witness, except in the case of pregnant presumptions of malice at the person accused.*

16. Though there be no relevant objection, yet the witnesses are solemnly to be purged of malice and partial counsel.

17. The witnesses are to be sworn and examined in the presence of the accused party if he please; and he may desire the Moderator to propose such questions to the witnesses as may tend for his exculpation, which, if the Moderator think pertinent, are to be proposed; but no accused person is to interrupt or speak during the time of deposition.

18. If the party accused do, before probation, offer grounds of exculpation, to be proven by witnesses, the Moderator and Clerk, if required, are to give warrant to cite the witnesses upon the party's charges; the relevancy of the offered exculpation being first considered and sustained by the judicatory, which, in the first place, is to be discussed; and if the exculpation be fully proven, as to the substance of the scandal, all further proof of the libel or accusation must there sist; as if the libel be special as to the time and place of a fact, and the accused clearly prove alibi; but if the substance of the scandal be once deponed upon, there can be no place for exculpation, unless it be as to some extenuating or alleviating circumstances not inconsistent with the depositions already taken.

19. If witnesses cannot subscribe their names to their depositions, the Moderator is to subscribe the same.

20. After the depositions are ended, the parties being removed, the members of the judicatory are to reason the affair calmly, speaking always to the Moderator, one after another, without interrupting one another; using no reflecting language to or of one another, nor too long harangues or digressions.

21. And as it frequently falls out for a judicatory to appoint committees of their own number for several affairs, so they would be diligent in calling them to an account, and either approve or censure them for their actings.

SECT. 5.—Of the closing of all Church Judicatories.

1. After the judicatory hath ended the affairs they met for, they are (if they have time) to read over their minutes.

2. The time of their next meeting is to be appointed and published.

3. The Moderator is to give orders to the clerk and beadle to prepare the affairs committed to them against the next meeting.

4. The roll of the members is to be called, and again absentees marked.

5. The Moderator closeth the meeting with solemn prayer and thanksgiving.

* Nota.—This, after advice, is found to be the opinion of judicious lawyers.

CHAPTER II.

OF THE PROCEEDINGS AND METHODS OF KIRK-SESSIONS.

SECT. 1.—Of the Constitution of this Judicatory.

1. This judicatory being the lowest, and which is in every parish, consists of one minister or two, and a competent number of ruling elders, and the deacons of that parish and church are to be present, and have a decisive vote only in matters belonging to their own office, having attending them a clerk and a beadle.

2. All the elders of that church or parish are members of the session, and ought to attend all the meetings thereof, it not being a judicatory made up of delegates.

3. If there be but one minister there, he is Moderator ex officio, and constant out of necessity.

4. Though an elder being once so ordained makes him to be so during life, unless he be censured with deposition, or demit his office, and the demission accepted by a judicatory, yet where there are plenty of persons fit to be elders, and plenty of elders, the actual exercise of the office, as to constant attendance on the session, &c., may be limited for a time, and others take their turn. When an elder changes his residence, he may officiate as an elder in that parish where he comes to, if duly called thereto by the kirk-session, who are to intimate his name to the people, and have their tacit consent thereto, but not otherwise. Annual elections ought to be rectified, and that new elections of elders, expressed in cases of great necessity, should only be within the compass of four years, and that especially in burghs, where there are plenty of persons to choose upon.

SECT. 2.—Of the Election and Constituting of Elders and Deacons.

1. In case there be no eldership in the parish, the election is to be managed by the Presbytery, by a list given in to them, made up by the heads of families, out of which the Presbytery (if the church be vacant) is to try and elect, and, if planted, the minister, with the Presbytery's assistance.

2. Even where there is a minister and elders in a congregation constituting a session, there may be need of more elders to supply the places of some who may be removed by death, or otherwise.

3. It doth most particularly belong to the session to look among the masters and heads of families, and others, (they not being menial servants,) for some persons fit to be elders, being such as are of greatest prudence, gravity, and interest, in the parish.

4. These ordinarily may be expected to be best had from amongst the deacons of the parish, the qualifications of that office not only fitting much for this, but the experienced deacons having, by being present at the session, a further fitting of them for the office of an elder.

5. It will fall out that sometimes it will be fit and necessary that the minister and present elders do, in a prudent and private way, try the inclination of the judicious of the people, especially the heads of families, and of those quarters of the congregation to which the elders wanting belonged, thereby to prevent the elders naming and bringing to public those persons who may be unacceptable, where others can be had, and the edification of the congregation would therein be studied.

6. When the kirk-sessions have agreed on the nomination, wherein they would endeavour to be unanimous, the persons nominated are to be spoken to and dealt with to accept of the office, before their names be brought into public, wherein great tenderness and earnestness should be used, it being frequent with many modest and most fit persons to be most hardly and difficultly prevailed with.

7. Though it may be supposed that none will be named to this purpose but such who will be of competent knowledge, yet examination and trial would be taken of his knowledge in the grounds and principles of religion, in cases of conscience, and about the government, discipline of the Church, and duties of elders, and that before the session, or two or three elders.

8. When there is hope of success therein, if the session judge it fit, the minister, on the Lord's day after forenoon's sermon, is to intimate to the congregation the necessity of more elders, and the session's nomination, and may desire any person that hath any objections against any of the persons named to make the same either to the session, or any member thereof, betwixt and such a day.

9. When the day cometh wherein the objections are to be brought in, the session must meet, and have the elect elders' edict returned, [for which there is to be an interval of nine free days, as in other edicts,] and the beadle is to intimate at the door, if there be any objectors they may appear; if none, then the day is appointed to admit these elders, and the minister is to be condescended upon who is to admit them.

10. When the day is come, it were very fit that the minister choose to preach on such a subject as might relate to that work, showing the duties of elders and people to them.

11. After sermon is ended in the forenoon, the minister is to show the people that he is going about to admit some more elders, and to tell them of all the orderly steps which they have taken preparatory, and that now nothing impedeth his going on.

12. Then the minister calling up the persons chosen to be elders by name, and they standing together in some conspicuous place, as conveniency will allow, are to be interrogated concerning their orthodoxy, and to be taken solemnly engaged to adhere to and maintain the doctrine, discipline, worship, and government, of the Church, and to lay themselves out, both by their example, and in the office of elders, to suppress vice, cherish piety, and exercise discipline faithfully and diligently.

13. Then [the elders chosen still standing up] the minister is next by solemn prayer to set them apart in verbis de presenti.

14. After prayer, the minister is to speak to them now as elders, encouraging them to faithfulness, and threatening, if negligent. 2dly, He is to direct a word of exhortation to the people, showing them their duty to the elders, and exhorting them to obedience in the Lord, and to strengthen their elders' hands.

15. The same method should be followed in the election and ordination of deacons that is in elders, mutatis mutandis.

SECT. 3.—Anent Marriage.

Due caution should be used to observe the acts of the General Assembly anent proclamation of banns,* and inquiry anent forbidden degrees, the persons desiring marriage being single and free persons, and anent the consent of all concerned.

SECT. 4.—Of the Admission of Infants to Baptism.

1. Children born within the verge of the visible church, of parents one or both professing the Christian religion, have a right to baptism.

2. It being the duty of Christian parents to devote their children to God by baptism, and to covenant for their education in the faith of Christ, no other sponsor is to be taken unless the parents be dead or absent, or grossly ignorant, or under scandal not removed, such being unfit to stand as sponsors in transacting a solemn covenant with God, in which cases the parent is to be required to provide some fit person, and if it can be, one related as a parent to the child should be sponsor.

3. In cases of children exposed, whose baptism, after inquiry, cannot be known, the session is to order the presenting of the child to baptism, and the session itself is to see to the Christian education of the child.

4. It were fit that the parent speak to the minister of the parish the day before the child be offered to baptism.

SECT. 5.—Of Admission to the Lord's Table, and debarring from it.

1. Seeing none should be admitted to the Lord's Table who are ignorant or scandalous, therefore, they are to be prepared for it by catechising, and instruction in the principles of religion in their younger years; before the first admission of any to partake thereof, the ministers should inquire into and take trial of their knowledge of the principles of the Christian religion, and, particularly, of the nature, uses, and ends, of this ordinance of the Supper.

2. Due care also ought to be used that none be admitted to partake of the Lord's Supper who are of a scandalous life; and for this end, the minister is to inquire at and consult with the elders, especially those of the bounds, whether they know that person to be guilty of any scandal, and that they own and submit to and ordinarily attend the ordinances of Christ, public and private worship of God, and use the other means of knowledge.

3. At the first admission of any to the Lord's Supper, ministers should put the person to be admitted in mind of their parents' engagements for them in baptism, and put them explicitly and personally to renew their baptismal covenant to be the Lord's, and to live unto him, and serve him all the days of their lives.

4. When any who liveth in one congregation desireth to partake of the Lord's Supper in a neighbouring congregation, they may and ought to be allowed the same by reason of the communion of saints, if they bring sufficient testimonials of their knowledge and conversation from the minister of their own parish, or from two elders, in the absence of the minister.

5. It were fit when any one removeth from one parish to another, that their testimonials bear account, whether they have partaken of the Lord's Supper; and it were fit for this, that there were a record kept of those who are admitted to the Lord's Supper.

SECT. 6.—Of proceeding with Drunkards, Swearers, Profaners of the Sabbath, and such like Scandalous Persons.

1. The members of the session are wisely to consider the information they get, and consult with the minister even before the same be communicated to others, that thereby the spreading of the scandal may be prevented, that the same may be removed by a private admonition, according to our Saviour's rule, Matthew xviii. 15, &c., which, if amendment follow, it is the far best way of gaining and recovering a lapsed brother.

2. It may fall out that even one single act of either drunkenness, swearing, cursing, or profaning of the Sabbath, may be clothed with such aggravating circumstances, as may found a process, and even bring the parties guilty under the censure of the lesser excommunication, and to appear before the congregation before a relaxation; the weight of all which is to be duly pondered.

3. But in ordinary in all such kind of offences where the frequency makes the crime turn scandalous, the guilty for the first fault should be spoken to in private by the minister or an elder, and admonished; and on promise to amend, the session should sist there.

4. And on the second lapse the person should be called before the session, and if proven, may be there judicially rebuked; where the session, on promise to amend, may again sist.

5. But if they amend not after that, the session should orderly proceed till they inflict the censure of the lesser excommunication, and there leave them till amendment.

6. If the guilty person lie under the censure of the lesser excommunication a considerable time, and yet continues frequently relapsing into those vices of drunkenness, swearing, &c., it may be constructed such a degree of contumacy, and so aggravate the crime, as to found a process of the highest censure of the greater excommunication, which is to be so inflicted as may tend to the reclaiming of the guilty person, or to the edification of the Church.

SECT. 7.—Of Processes for Uncleaness, Fornication, and Adultery.

1. In delations about uncleanness, it is usual, that when the thing is put to the strictest trial, all that can be proven are but presumptions of guilt or scandalous behaviour, and not the act of uncleanness, which should oblige the kirk-session to be very cautious how to admit the public entering a process without good warrant.

2. Many of those actions which give occasion to the raising a scandal of uncleanness, are such as are not themselves alone publicly censurable, but to be passed by with a private rebuke or admonition.

3. Yet some of those actions which come under the name of scandalous behaviour may be so lascivious and obscene, and clothed with such circumstances, as may be as offensive as the act of uncleanness itself, and as censurable.

4. When an unmarried woman brings forth a child, or if married, and her husband notoriously absent for any considerable space besides the ordinary time, it being that which ordinarily is known, gives good ground to a kirk-session for a process against her; after she is cited before the session, and appeareth, she is to be interrogated who is the father of that child; and though in other cases the divulging of a secret may be very imprudent, and indeed the raising of a scandal, yet in this case, where there is a child whereby there is an undeniable scandal, and the keeping secret of the father a ground of greater offence, and of suspecting many innocent persons if she discover not the father, she is to be looked upon as contumacious.

5. Prudence may sometimes require that the person she nameth to be the father of the child be informed thereof, and spoke to privately; if he deny the same, he is seriously to be dealt with to confess the same; if he still deny, then the session is to cause cite him to appear before them.

6. In this process, when the delated father compeareth he is to be interrogated, and if he deny he is to be confronted with the woman, and the presumptions as particularly held forth as possible; and if, after all this, he deny, though the woman's testimony can be no sufficient evidence, yet one witness and sometimes only presumptions, such as frequenting her company, or being solus cum sola in loco suspecto, in suspect postures, and such like, which he cannot disprove to the satisfaction of the session, may so lay the guilt upon him as to bring it to his oath of purgation; and that the form of an oath be prescribed.

7. In taking this oath for purgation all tenderness and caution is to be used, nor is the session to press any man thereto, nor is it to be taken in any case but this, when the presumptions are so great, that they create such jealousy in that congregation and session that nothing will remove the suspicion but the man's oath of purgation, and when his oath will indeed remove the scandal and suspicion; in all other cases this oath is in vain, and so should not be admitted, and never but by advice of the Presbytery.

8. This oath for purgation being to be taken judicially, and a part of a process, is to be before a kirk-session; and if it be found needful, it may be intimated to the congregation, that such a person hath taken such an oath, and so is declared clear of the alleged scandal.*

9. Yet so, if the case be extraordinary, and the edification of the congregation require, the kirk-session may, with advice of the Presbytery, commission the minister to take it in the face of the congregation, the members of the session being present; or rather, the oath being taken before the session, the party may be obliged to be present in the congregation, and may be put publicly to own his purging himself by oath.

10. After the delated father hath purged himself by oath, the woman is to be dealt with to give the true father; and if, after all serious dealing, and due diligence, she give no other, she is to be censured according to the quality of the offence confessed by her, without naming the person delated by her; the judicatory reserving place for further censure, upon further discovery.

11. If the woman who hath brought forth the child doth declare she knoweth not the father, alleging she was forced, as in the fields, by a person unknown, or any the like; in these cases great prudence is to be used, the former behaviour of the woman exactly searched into, and she seriously dealt with to be ingenuous; and if she hath been of entire fame she may be put to it to declare the truth on oath, but not without the advice of the Presbytery; and if the woman confess she was not forced, but doth not know the man, nor whether married or unmarried, the same censure is to be inflicted upon her as in the case of adultery.

12. If a person do voluntarily confess uncleanness, and if there be no child, and the case be brought to the kirk-session, the session is to inquire what presumptions there are of the truth of the thing confessed, or what may have moved the person to make that confession, whether it floweth from disquietness of mind, or from sinister design, as when a man suing to a woman for marriage is denied, and for revenge, or to obtain his desire, spreads the report that he hath been guilty with her, they are to be dealt with accordingly.

13. If it be found that there is no ground for the confession, and that it is false, the person confessing is to be censured as defaming himself, and likewise as a slanderer of the other party, and withal application is to be made by the session to the civil magistrate, that he may be punished according to law.

14. If there be need of witnesses, the directions, Chap. I. Sect. 4, are to be minded.

15. When persons guilty of uncleanness live one in one parish, and another in another, the process against them and censures are to be before the session of the parish where the woman liveth.

16. If a scandal of uncleanness be committed transiently, as if persons having their fixed residence in one parish do commit uncleanness in another parish, or perhaps in the fields, or at fairs or markets, in these cases they are to be processed and censured where their ordinary abode is, except the place of their abode be at a considerable distance from the place where the scandal was committed, and the scandal be most flagrant where it was committed.

17. When there is a scandal of uncleanness, whereof several persons are guilty, living in different parishes, the session where the scandal is committed is to acquaint the other sessions where any of the persons reside, who are ex debito to cause summon these persons to appear before that session where the scandal is to be tried.

18. When a person is convicted of a scandal by a session of another congregation than his own, and the censure of the lesser excommunication inflicted, the session is to send an account thereof to that session to which he belongs, but there is no need of any other sentence of his own session to fix the censure on him, but only a public intimation thereof to be made in his own parish.

19. When a person is censured and absolved from his scandal in another congregation than where he lives, he is to bring a testimonial of his absolution, which is to be intimated to the congregation he lives in, if the scandal be also flagrant there, otherwise it will be sufficient to intimate the same to the session.

20. With respect to scandals, whose grossness makes it necessary to bring the persons guilty oftener than once before the congregation, it is overtured, that after they are convicted before the session, that it be judicially declared to them that they have rendered themselves incapable of communion with the people of God, in the Supper of the Lord, and that they are not to be allowed to be sponsors themselves in the baptism of their children till the scandal be removed; and that they be appointed to appear in public to be rebuked for their sin, whether they appear penitent or not, conform to the institution, 1 Tim. v. 20.

21. After a public rebuke the minister and elders be at further pains in instructing the minds of scandalous persons, if ignorant, in endeavouring to convince their conscience, and to bring them to a due sense of their sin, and to an engagement and serious resolution against all known sin, and to the performance of all known duty.

22. That the session, upon satisfaction with their knowledge and sense of their sin, do admit them to the public profession of their repentance, in order to absolution.

23. If, after taking pains on them for some competent time, for their instruction and conviction, they still remain grossly ignorant, insensible, and unreformed, the sentence of lesser excommunication is to be publicly pronounced against them, from which they are not to be relaxed, nor admitted to make public profession of their repentance in order thereto, till the session be satisfied with their knowledge, seriousness, and reformation.

SECT. 8.—Of Processes which natively begin at the Kirk-Session, but are not to be brought to a final determination by them.

1. There are some processes which do natively begin at the kirk-session, which, for the atrocity of the scandal, or difficulty in the affair, or general concern, the kirk-session having frequent meetings of the Presbytery to have recourse to, do not determine of themselves.

2. Such are the scandals of incest, murder, adultery, trilapse in fornication, schisms, and separations from the public ordinances, processes in order to the highest excommunication, and continued contumacy, error, and heresy, vented and made public by any of the congregation.

3. The kirk-session, receiving information of such gross scandals, are to weigh the same, according to the rules and directions prescribed them in processes which are their peculiar province.

4. And when the session finds good ground for a process, they are to deal with the guilty to confess that which now cannot be hid nor amended, till satisfaction be made to the Church, which, when done, the session is to refer the same for advice, and to send their reference extracted to the Presbytery.

5. But where there is no confession the session is not to proceed to lead probation, by witnesses or presumptions, till an account of the affair be brought by a reference to the Presbytery, and the Presbytery do thereupon commission and appoint the session to proceed and lead probation; and after probation is led, the Presbytery is again to be advised with, who may appoint the session to inflict what censure they see cause.

6. When persons censured for these grosser scandals do apply to the kirk-session for relaxation, they may both be privately conferred with, and likewise their acknowledgments heard before the session; but they ought not to be brought before the congregation in order to their absolution, nor absolved, but by advice and order of the Presbytery.

SECT. 9.—Of the Privy Censures in the Sessions.

1. In every kirk-session there ought to be, twice in the year, privy censures (as they are called) of the members of the session.

2. At the meeting preceding the same all the members should be warned to be punctually present that day.

3. Seeing the ministers undergo their privy censures in the Presbytery, and that generally there is but one minister in the session who must be moderator, therefore the ministers are not to undergo this privy censure before the session, but only the elders, deacons, clerk, and beadles.

4. The moderator of the session is to cause the clerk read the roll of the members, and beginning at the beginning of the roll, they are one by one after another to be removed, and then the rest of the members are, by the moderator, to be inquired concerning the walk and conversation of the person removed, concerning his diligence and prudence in his station; and whatever any have observed and been informed, worthy the noticing, is freely, and with love and tenderness, to be communicated. Privy censures of the members of a session, as also of a Presbytery, if rightly managed, may be of great use; but we think our Lord's rule, in Matth. xviii., is strictly to be observed in this matter, so that no member or members of a session or Presbytery should inform these judicatories of any thing against another member, until they have first given him private admonition or reproof, a competent time before, and that has proven ineffectual.

5. The session is to judge of all informations concerning the member removed, and, as they judge him deserving, either only the private admonition or reproof of the minister alone, or any one of the elders alone, or of the moderator, in name of the session, coram, as the weight of the matter, the edification of the party, and comfort of the session or congregation requireth, is to be done with all love, tenderness, and freedom.

6. If nothing be observed needful to be amended, but an account from all hands of the faithfulness, prudence, and diligence, of the member removed, then he is to be exhorted to go on, and encouraged, and God to be blessed on his account. And the moderator, when he is called in, to express the session's satisfaction and comfort therein.

7. After all the elders have thus been removed, one after another, and each one after he hath been called in, and got the mind of the session concerning him, and set in his place, the deacons, one after another, are to undergo their censures.

8. Next after the deacons, the clerk of the session is to be removed, and the members inquired concerning his carriage, and the session-books, and other registers of births, baptisms, and burials, should be seen to be exactly kept and put in readiness for the Presbytery, when called for by them.

9. The beadle or officer should likewise, in the same manner, be inquired after, and either admonished or encouraged, as need requireth.

10. Here also the kirk-treasurer's accounts may be taken in, and the whole session put in mind (if need be) of all the duties of their charge, and of the rules of order, when met in judicatories.

CHAPTER III.

OF THE PROCEEDINGS AND METHODS IN PRESBYTERIES.

SECT. 1.—Of the Constitution of this Judicatory.

1. This judicatory is made up and consists of the pastors and elders of a number of particular parochial congregations, associated together for their mutual help and comfort.

2. The number of congregations whose overseers make up a Presbytery are not determined, ten or twelve, rather more than fewer, as the adjacency of the congregations, their compactness and easiness in travelling, will most ordinarily and conveniently allow.

3. And seeing the minister's office and power doth include that of elders, though it is necessary when they can be had that ministers act in conjunction with them, because of the Divine precept and warrant, yet if, by no fault of the ministers, elders be wanting, they may warrantably exercise Presbyterial jurisdiction there without them.

4. In the meetings of judicatories at the time and place appointed by the former meeting, (unless some sufficiently known stop or hinderance intervene,) any who meet are a quorum, they not being under three ministers; yet it is very expedient that, in this case, matters of importance be referred to a subsequent more frequent meeting; but in meetings pro re nata, it is necessary that more than the one half of the ministers of that meeting be present to make a quorum, and all the members to be advertised.

SECT. 2.—Of Licensing Probationers or Preachers.

1. It is the proper and peculiar work of the Presbytery to look out for, admit to trial, judge and determine thereof, and license probationers and preachers, and the rules laid down thereabout by the acts of the General Assembly under-written are to be observed, particularly the 22d Act of the General Assembly, anno 1696, Anent Students; the 10th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1694, Anent Probationers; the 13th Act of the General Assembly, 1696, Anent Testimonials; and 10th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1704, Anent Students passing Trials, and the several acts therein mentioned.

2. It would be very contributive to the licentiate's advantage, that every student of theology were some time attending the public profession of divinity in some university, before they entered on their trials.

3. And all such who have been attending any such professions ought to produce testimonials of their behaviour and proficiency at that profession, from those Professors of Theology under whose inspection they were, else not to be admitted; and Professors of Divinity should take care to give testimonials to none for their entering on trials in order to the ministry, but such as, with full freedom, they can declare to be in their judgment fit for the same.

4. In case a student of theology could not have the occasion of attending a public profession of divinity at the university, it were fit he did undergo private trials of his proficiency in all the parts of divinity, by examination, and also have some homilies in presence of two or three members of the Presbytery before he enter on his public trials before the Presbytery.

5. The Presbytery, before they enter any on their trials, are to observe the act of Assembly, requiring twenty-five years of age to a minister, the rather because, after they obtain a licence to preach, they use sometimes to be very soon called to the ministry, unless in case of more than ordinary ripeness of parts and prudence.

6. That the trials of a student, in order to his being licensed, do consist in ordinary in these seven parts: 1. The homily; 2. A lecture on a whole chapter; 3. The common head in Latin, with his maintaining the orthodox doctrine in his thesis, in a dispute; 4. The extemporary trials of his knowledge in interpreting the original languages, of sacred chronology, of ecclesiastical history, especially of our own Church, answering extemporary questions of the meaning of hard places of the Scripture, on heads of divinity, polemic or practical, or cases of conscience, on Church government and discipline; 5. The Presbyterial exercise, both making and adding; 6. The lecture, to be the trial immediately preceding the popular sermon; and, 7. The popular sermon, both which are to be in the pulpit, before the people.

7. Immediately after the close of each of these exercises, the moderator is to inquire the judgment of the Presbytery concerning the student on trial, his acquitting himself in that part of his trials, which is to be managed prudently: but if the Presbytery be not satisfied in any piece of his trials, they are to stop there, and either refer him back to his further studies, or give him the same piece of trial again on a different subject, the main of the design being only to have their judgment, whether what is done be so satisfactory as to be admitted for a proof of his fitness to be licensed.

8. When the Presbytery are satisfied with all the pieces of his trials, before they grant him the licence, he is, by the moderator, to be gravely admonished of the weight of the work, and exhorted to a suitable deportment; and, likewise, he is solemnly to promise due obedience to that Presbytery, and other judicatories of the Church; he is to give satisfaction of the orthodoxy of his principles; not only as to the doctrine, but as to the discipline, worship, and government of this Church, and is to subscribe the Confession of Faith, according to the acts of the General Assembly.

9. When he hath been approven and gotten the intimation of his licence, and it be recorded in the Presbytery book, it were fit that he were appointed to preach two or three Sabbaths, one diet at a time, in the audience of and in conjunction with some minister of the Presbytery, before he preach in vacant parishes, (if any there be,) or get an extract of the licence; and he to be indulged, in case of bashfulness, as to his appearance in eminent places.

10. No probationer is to receive any call from a vacant congregation to be minister thereof but from the hands of the Presbytery under whose inspection he is at the time, nor to accept thereof but by their advice, and regard is chiefly to be had to the Presbytery where the vacant parish is; and if more calls than one at once come to a probationer, and these presented by his own Presbytery, he is to follow their advice in closing with or rejecting any of them.*

11. That each bursar of divinity bring yearly testimonials from the professor under whom he is studying, of his punctual attendance and good proficiency, and that he be tried yearly by the Presbytery whose bursar he is.

SECT. 3.—Of Vacant Congregations, and Planting thereof.

1. Vacant congregations are under the peculiar care of the Presbytery of the bounds, both for their present supply and for their planting with a minister.

2. The orderly and ordinary way of supplying a vacant congregation with preaching is and ought to be by the order and desire of the Presbytery, and no other; and the minister that preaches in vacant kirks ought to keep session for the exercise of discipline, to have one diet of catechising, and to visit the sick.

3. That it be recommended to the eldership, or any other within the parish, to be cautious whom they invite to preach, even when occasional unforeseen opportunities offer, and for this to take the advice of the neighbouring ministers, and that in this they study the harmonious consent of the elders, in order to the preserving the peace of the Church.

4. The Presbytery, as they would send the fittest of the probationers to the vacant parish to preach, so, as need requireth, and the Presbytery conveniently can, they are to send ministers of their own number to preach and to baptize the children. If the vacant congregation want an eldership as well as a minister, the Presbytery is to endeavour the appointing of an eldership among them, who may facilitate the congregation's getting a minister.

5. The Presbytery would require the eldership of that parish to meet frequently to consider the circumstances of the parish, and to prepare them for giving a call; and they are to be exhorted to seek God's counsel and direction therein, and to lay a matter of so much concern to their souls seriously to heart, and to attend the Presbytery, to give an account thereof from time to time.

6. The Presbytery should endeavour, by all means, to prevent the vacant parishes calling a minister from another congregation where he is happily fixed and useful; transportations being often a great grievance, and seldom to be practised.*

7. If the eldership of a vacant congregation do, by their commissioner, acquaint the Presbytery that they not only have had their thoughts on a person to supply their vacancy, but have communicated the same to the heritors and other heads of families, and do judge it may be probable that the person will be generally (or to the most part) acceptable, and if the Presbytery be satisfied with the person they design to be minister, then the Presbytery is to proceed.

8. The Presbytery is then to appoint one of their number to preach on a Lord's Day in that vacant congregation, and after forenoon sermon to intimate to them that the Presbytery, considering their circumstances, require the elders and heads of the families, especially the heritors, to meet at the church on such a day, in order to the nominating and electing a fit person to supply their vacancy; and they are to be exhorted to continue in prayer and dependence on God for further direction therein, and to lay a matter of so much concern to their souls seriously to heart.

9. And, indeed, sometimes where difficulties arise in a vacant parish, hindering the plantation thereof, it were very requisite to have some day set apart for solemn fasting and prayer, by order of the Presbytery, which is to appoint one or two ministers to preach then to them.

10. In nominating the time for the parish to meet to elect a minister, such time should be given as not only all the heritors who live within the parish, but those who have interest therein, may have timely advertisement, that the call may be as unanimous as may be.

11. When the day is come, the minister whom the Presbytery hath appointed to moderate at the election (having ended sermon, which he is to have to that congregation, and dismissed the same, except the heritors, elders, and heads of families) is to open the meeting with prayer, and then signify unto them the occasion of their meeting, and his hope that they have been seeking God for light in so weighty a matter.

12. When one (and sometimes, but rarely, more than one) is named before there be any vote, the moderator is to inquire if any there present have any objections to make, and the objections are to be calmly heard and answered, and the affair cleared, to ripen it to a vote.

13. Though a plurality of heritors and elders will always be thought to be the voice of the meeting, and in law and reason is so counted, yet it is most desirable to have the universal consent of the heads of families, and this ought to be endeavoured.

14. And the moderator and electors are wisely to consider, that, though the objections which any of the heads of families may make against the person whom the electors have named, in order to election, may in themselves be frivolous, and of small moment, yet the weight they have with the prejudicated persons, and the quality of these persons, and their influence in the congregation, are duly to be pondered, and if found considerable, great tenderness is to be used, especially at a time when some other person may be got, against whom neither objection nor aversion can be alleged.

15. If there be no objections against the person named, or, notwithstanding of all that is objected, the plurality of the heritors refuse to delay the affair, and that the objections made seem rather to proceed from the greater favour the objectors have for another, than from any real aversion to or objection against the person himself, the moderator may put the matter to a vote.

16. But after all the reasonings, and especially where there hath been any altercation, it is very fit that the moderator not only give a word of exhortation, but by solemn prayer immediately before the vote prepare them for it, it being not only fit at all such times, but experience teaching that it greatly tendeth to calm men's spirits who have any awe of God on them, and to clear them of the dregs of private affection and interest.

17. The vote thereafter being taken and carefully marked, the moderator is to pronounce the mind of the meeting, and if it be carried that a call be given to any person named; the call being drawn up is to be read and signed in the presence of the moderator, and attested by him; follows the Form of a Call:—

18. “We, the heritors and elders of _____ being destitute of a fixed pastor, and being most assured by good information and our own experience of the ministerial abilities, piety, literature, and prudence, as also of the suitableness to our capacities of the gifts of you _____ preacher of the Gospel, or minister of _____ have agreed, with the advice and consent of the parishioners of the parish foresaid, and concurrence of the reverend Presbytery of _____ to invite, call, and entreat, likeas we, by these presents, do heartily invite, call, and entreat, you to undertake the office of a pastor among us and the charge of our souls. And, further, hoping that upon mature deliberation ye will find this our call, which is carried on with so great sincerity, unanimity, and order, a clear call from the Lord, we do, upon your accepting thereof, sincerely promise you all dutiful respect, faithfulness, encouragement, and obedience, in the Lord, in our several stations and relations. In witness whereof,” &c.

19. After the call is signed, the moderator is to propose to the meeting that they appoint one or two of their meeting, and that by a commission under their hands, or the hands of the moderator and clerk, not only to present the same to the Presbytery for their approbation and concurrence, but also to prosecute it.

20. If there hath been any considerable aversion manifested, or objections made against the call, the Presbytery is then prudently to weigh the whole affair, wherein the most universal edification of the congregation is to be studied.

21. If the Presbytery find any ground to demur their concurrence, they are to deal prudently with those who were for the call, and rather delay than altogether at first to stop and refuse concurrence, lest, by endeavouring the universal satisfaction of the people of that parish, they disgust the plurality thereof; and a meek and gaining way of prudent reasoning and convincing their consciences, rather than the authoritative condemning their designs, is to be studied, and particularly the proportion of the person's gifts, in relation to the place unto which he is called, is to be considered.

22. If the Presbytery find the call legally and orderly proceeded in they are to record the same, and their clerk is to signify it at the foot or back of the call, and (if need be) to appoint one of their number to concur with the commissioner of the parish in prosecuting the said call.

23. If the person called be a minister in another charge, then the Presbytery is duly to consider the reasonableness of the transportation desired, and if that be not to them evident and clear they are not to concur in that call.

24. If the person called be a probationer, and present in the Presbytery, he ought to be removed during the Presbytery's consultation about the relevancy of the call, and called in again when it is appoven; and if appoven, the call is by the moderator of the Presbytery to be delivered to him coram, with a suitable exhortation to take the same to his mature consideration.

25. If the person called be a probationer under the inspection of another Presbytery, the commissioner of the parish, with one from the Presbytery, (if the Presbytery think fit to send one,) are to apply to that Presbytery where the probationer resides, and present them the call, and ask their concurrence in offering it to the person called, which that Presbytery are without delay to do.

26. On acceptance of the call, the probationer is to repair to that Presbytery to which he is called, and there, by their direction, to preach frequently to the parish to which he is called, at least thrice, before he be ordained, and, in the meantime, enter upon his trials in order to ordination; in going about whereof, the rules are to be followed prescribed, Chap. III. Sect. 4.

27. If the person called be a minister settled in another congregation, then the commissioners of the vacant parish, and, if need be, the Presbytery, is to appoint one to concur with the vacant parish, who are to proceed with applications to the Presbytery to which he belongs, as is required, Sect. 6, "About Transportation of Ministers." And though the minister called be unfixed to any parish, or hath got an act of transportability, yet he is only to receive the call through the hands of the Presbytery of the bounds where the parish calling is; and in this case, there is no need of a process of transportation, nor summoning parties, but only serving an edict, and proceeding to admission in the usual manner.

28. If the parish be remiss and backward, and will not call a minister, at least the greater part be, then, as the law hath wisely fixed the jus devolutum in the Presbytery as to the benefice, so may the Presbytery, by their power from Christ, give a mission to a particular person, and ordain him to labour in the work of the ministry among that people, to reclaim and feed them, wherein great tenderness is to be used, and all other means essayed to prevent its coming thereto.

SECT. 4.—Of the Ordination of a Minister.

1. On a probationer's so far acceptance of the call of a parish as that he is content to submit himself to the Presbytery of the bounds, to undergo his trials in order to ordination, he is, by that Presbytery by whom he is ordained, to be tried as when he was licensed—see Chap. III. Sect. 2, except the homilies; and it is referred to the prudence of Presbyteries whether it be most convenient that the lecture and popular sermon be appointed him at the same time.

2. In the meantime, during the passing of his trials before the Presbytery, he should be ordered to preach frequently to that congregation whose pastor he is to be, not only to give them the greater opportunity of the knowledge of his gifts, and satisfaction with him, but to give him, by converse with them, the better acquaintance with the temper and manner of the people he is to undertake the charge of.

3. If the probationer hath been a stranger to that Presbytery, he being now to be ordained, his whole carriage and conversation in times past is now more narrowly to be searched into, which may be known not only by his testimonials from the university in which he took his degrees, from the Professor of Theology of his carriage under him in the study of theology, from the Presbytery where he was licensed to preach, from that Presbytery where he last resided, and under whose inspection he was, but likewise by other ways, as they in prudence shall see cause.

4. If nothing appear, either in the person or congregation, to the Presbytery, but what is promising that his labours will be useful among them, and his trials ended, the Presbytery are to send one of their number to preach to that congregation, and after the forenoon sermon to intimate unto them that the probationer who is called to be their minister, his edict was now to be served, which edict being read, the minister is to desire the people to notice the same; and after reading, a copy of the edict is to be affixed to the most patent door of the church, by the church beadle thereunto appointed, that none may pretend ignorance. Of this edict the tenor follows:—"This Presbytery having received a call from this parish to Mr A. B., preacher of the Gospel, to be their minister, and finding the same orderly proceeded, and the said Mr A. B. having undergone all the parts of his trial in order to his ordination, and the Presbytery, upon the whole, judging him qualified to be a minister of the Gospel, and fit to be pastor of this congregation, have resolved to proceed, unless something occur which may justly impede the same; and, therefore, do hereby give notice to all persons, especially the members of this congregation, that if they, or any of them, have any thing to object why the said Mr A. B. should not be admitted pastor here, they may repair to the Presbytery, which is to meet at the day of ; with certification, that if no person object any thing that day the Presbytery will proceed without further delay."

5. The Presbytery meeting (as it was appointed to meet) to receive the execution of the edict, which ought to be ten free days after the serving of the same, that thereby none may pretend ignorance for want of time, the minister appointed to preach in the vacant congregation is to give an account of his diligence, and the edict to be returned indorsed; and then the Presbytery finding that to be the day appointed to bring in any objections against the person to be ordained, the officer or beadle is three several times, at the most patent door, to give notice, that if there be any there who have any thing to object against his being their minister, they may then come and do it to the Presbytery; with certification as in the edict.

6. If there come any objections, the Presbytery are prudently to weigh them, considering what sort of persons they come from, and on what design, and wherefore they were delayed till the affair came to that length, as well as the nature of the objections; and if the Presbytery find themselves obliged to delay procedure, till a process about these things be orderly had, and if then the person be found innocent and acquitted, those who inmed the judicatory ought to be noticed for their calumny or imprudence, as the judicatory shall find cause.

7. If there be no objections, or those brought be found of no weight, the Presbytery is to name a convenient week-day for the brethren to meet, to ordain him whose edict is thus served at the church of the congregation to whom he is to belong; but here there needs not ten days delay, since that hath been granted already after the serving of the edict.

8. The ordination is to be intimated to the people from the pulpit, inviting all to be present, and telling them that they are to set apart that day as a fast unto that parish, to be by them observed with more than ordinary supplication, for the assistance and blessing of God upon the ordinance of Christ, and the labours of his servant, then to be set apart for their good, a work of so great concernment, and a sermon to be suitable to the purpose.*

9. The congregation and all being thus met, the sermon ended, and prayer after sermon, wherein the special work of the day is again to be remembered, the minister who moderates in the action doth from the pulpit, in a discourse, show the occasion of the day's meeting; that the Church being vacant, a call given to such a person there present, and his edict served and returned, without any relevant objection, and the call orderly proceeded in all its steps, as is above prescribed, the same was come to that issue that he was now to be ordained to be their minister.

* Nota.—This eighth paragraph referred to the consideration of the General Assembly, anent the day of the ordination of a minister, whether that or another day should be the day of the fast.

10. Then the minister calls on the person to be ordained, who stands up in the face and audience of the congregation, and doth answer, expressis verbis, these following questions, or others to the same purpose. 1mo, If he himself doth believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, and the truths therein contained, to be the Word of God. 2do, If he doth own and will adhere to the Confession of Faith and Catechisms of this Church, and doctrine therein contained, founded on and consonant to the Holy Scriptures. 3tio, If he will be faithful and zealous in maintaining all the truths of the Gospel, the unity of the Church, and peace thereof, against all error and schism whatsoever, notwithstanding of what trouble and persecution may happen. 4to, If he doth likewise own and will adhere to the worship, discipline, and government, of this Church, as founded on and consonant to the Holy Scriptures. 5to, If he hath been led in his designing the work of the ministry, by a single and sincere love to God, and design to glorify him in the Gospel of his Son, and not by filthy lucre, and the motives of worldly gain, as the great inducement to him to the ministerial work. 6to, If he engage to be diligent and assiduous in praying, reading, meditating, preaching, administering the Sacraments, catechizing, and exercising of discipline, and in performing all other ministerial duties towards the people committed to his charge. 7mo, If he resolves to own his ordination to the holy function of the ministry, and to continue in duty, notwithstanding of any trouble that may arise in the Church hereafter, the people's adherence to this call is to be taken for granted, seeing by their presence they countenance the ordination.

11. The minister moderating in the action and brethren being satisfied with the answers of the person to be ordained, he is, in a few words, to speak to the people of that congregation, reminding them of their having called him to be their minister, that the affair had orderly proceeded, and that there had been no objection made against the same; and that now their coming and staying to be witnesses to the action, and that their universal silence was to be looked upon as their constant adherence to their call to have him to be their minister, and to their engagements therein contained; at which time it were fit also that the ministers preaching should take occasion to put the people in mind of their duty.

12. Then, after a little pause, whereby the universal silence of the people may be discerned, the minister who moderates in the action doth bespeak the person to be ordained, showing him, that seeing he designs to serve God in preaching the Gospel, and that this congregation has given him a call, and the Presbytery was to ordain him minister of that congregation, he was to satisfy the Presbytery and the congregation in the following questions.

13. 1st, If he accepts of the call given him by that congregation, and resolves and engages, through grace, to perform all the works of a faithful minister among them. 2dly, If he will willingly and humbly, in the spirit of meekness, submit himself unto the admonition of his brethren, and the discipline of the Church. 3dly, If he will take care that he himself and his family walk unblameably, be examples to the flock, and adorn the Gospel by their conversation.

14. The brethren being satisfied with the answers and engagements, the minister actor is to come from the pulpit to the place where the person to be ordained and brethren are, he kneeling, and the brethren standing, the actor, as mouth of the brethren, in their Master's name and authority, doth in and by prayer set him apart (not only he who moderates in the action, but all the brethren that conveniently can, laying their hands upon his head) to the office of the ministry, invoking God for his blessing, to this effect:—"Thankfully acknowledging the great mercy of God, in sending Jesus Christ for the redemption of his people, and for his ascension to the right hand of God the Father, and thence pouring out his Spirit, and giving gifts to men, apostles, evangelists, prophets, pastors, and teachers, for the gathering and building up of his Church; and for fitting and inclining this man to this great work; to entreat Him to fit him with his Holy Spirit, to give him (who in his name is thus set apart to his holy service) to fulfil the work of the ministry in all things, that he may both save himself and the people committed to his charge."

15. The prayer to this purpose being ended, the minister who moderates in the action is to take the person ordained by the right hand, saying unto him, "We give unto you the right hand of fellowship, to take part of the ministry with us;" and likewise all the ministers of the Presbytery, the heritors and elders of the parish present, should take him by the right hand, as a testimony of their acceptance of him as a minister of that congregation.

16. Then the minister who moderates in the action returning to the pulpit, doth first exhort the person who is now ordained to consider the greatness of the office, the diligence, labour, and painfulness required, encouraging him to diligence and faithfulness, and showing him the hazard and prejudices that will attend negligence and unfaithfulness, both to himself and people, in this and the life to come.

17. Then, 2dly, He is to exhort the people to carry themselves dutifully, kindly, and respectfully to their minister, as unto the messenger of God, and according to their solemn promise contained in their call to their minister, and to accept of his message, in receiving of Christ Jesus as he is offered in the Gospel, and giving obedience to his will therein revealed, and which the actor in his brethren's name under whose inspection the parish is, is to enjoin them to.

18. Lastly, The minister actor is by solemn prayer to commend the minister whom they have ordained, and his flock, to God's grace, and, singing a psalm, he is to dismiss the congregation with pronouncing the blessing.

19. The clerk of the Presbytery is to record the day and place of the ordination, with the name of the minister who did moderate in the action, and text he preached from, and the sederunt of the members present, and may give extracts of the minister's ordination when required.

20. That all such things as relate and are essential and peculiar to ordination, be omitted in admitting of ministers formerly ordained. 2do, That all the questions in paragraph 10th may be resumed, and the minister to be admitted desired to declare his consent and adherence to his former answers and engagement at his ordination. 3tio, The questions in the 13th paragraph, anent his relation to the particular congregation to which he is to be admitted, may be proposed as in the overture. 4to, That expression in paragraph 15th, of giving him the right hand of fellowship, and taking him to a part of the ministry, may be omitted, seeing he is received therein before at his ordination.

21. The manse, and office-houses thereto belonging, are, by the Presbytery's appointment, to be visited and valued by faithful and skilful workmen, at the sight of some of the Presbytery, that the condition and value thereof may be known and recorded, lest afterwards it be pretended that the said minister at his entry found them sufficient, and so should be obliged to leave them much better than at his entry; and, upon the other hand, if a free manse, should be obliged to leave it in good repair.

22. Seeing calls bear a promise of all due encouragement to ministers, it may be fit, that at the ordination or admission, or rather before, the Presbytery desire the decreet of locality of the parish to be produced, or if it cannot be done, and that there be no decreet or act securing the stipend, that the heritors give in a subscribed account of their just quotas of the stipend of that parish, which are to be recorded by the Presbytery, that there may be as little debate as possible afterwards about that affair.

SECT. 5.—Of Transportations in general, and the Grounds and Reasons thereof.

1. Seeing every minister is an officer of the Church universal, it cannot be denied but he may be transported from one place to another, upon good and weighty grounds.

2. No minister ought at his own hand to transport himself in ecclesiâ bene constitutâ, et statu ejusdem pacato, seeing he is not sui juris, and at his own disposal.

3. It belongs, therefore, properly to that Presbytery whereof he is a member to manage his transportation, and grant it if they see cause.

4. The end of all transportations is the glory of God, and the greater good of the Church, both which should be expressly eyed by those who crave them, and the judicatories which grant them.

5. In the case, therefore, of transportations, the first step is to see that the call be legally proceeded in, and approved by the Presbytery in whose bounds the vacant parish is, and that there be a commission from the parish to some fit person to deliver and prosecute the call before the Presbytery where the minister desired resideth; and if the minister called do belong to another Presbytery, and if it be desired, the Presbytery may also send one of their number to signify their consent.

6. No call drawn up to any settled minister, desiring his transportation to another congregation, is to be received by him or entertained till it come to him by his own Presbytery.

7. If the commissioners of the vacant parish come to prosecute the transportation in the interval of the ordinary diets of the Presbytery, and their necessity urgent, and distance great, they may apply to the moderator of the Presbytery, that he may call a Presbytery pro re nata.

8. Upon which application the moderator may call a Presbytery, but till it meet, he is not to receive the call offered, or the reasons thereof, or transmit, either to the minister called, or to the parish he belongs unto, or to cite any of them to appear till the Presbytery meet and consider the call, and determine the relevancy of the same.

9. The Presbytery being met, the commissioners who are to appear to prosecute the transportation, are (by a supplication delivered to the clerk of the Presbytery) to acquaint the Presbytery with their desire, and that they may be heard.

10. The Presbytery receiving a supplication, intimating that there is a call to one of the brethren of that Presbytery, are, without making any needless delays, to call the persons applying before them, and inquire for their commission to represent that parish who desires the minister.

11. If the commissioners have not a written commission, under the hands of the heritors and elders of the vacant parish, or the clerk of their meeting, the Presbytery may refuse to hear them any further, or to receive any call from them; and, in that case, there can be no access to these pretended commissioners, their either appealing or complaining to the next Synod.

12. If they have a written commission, and which the Presbytery sustains, they are to offer the call, and reasons of the same, in writing to the Presbytery, craving that the call may be delivered to the minister desired, and that the reasons may not only be weighed by the Presbytery, but delivered to the minister, and sent to the parish where he doth now reside, that they, within a competent time, may answer the same.

13. The Presbytery, on sustaining their commission, is immediately to receive the call they offer, and read and consider the same; and at the same diet to give their judgment thereanent, as to the relevancy of the same, so far as at present appears to them, in order to the bringing the same to farther consideration; so that it doth not preclude either the Presbytery, or any member thereof, or the minister desired, or his parish, of any just exceptions against the relevancy of the call, which they may after in process adduce.

14. If the Presbytery shall find weight in the reasons, they are then instantly, at least at the same diet, without needless delay, to deliver the call by their moderator to the minister desired to be transported, who is to receive the same out of the moderator's hands, and likewise the reasons of the call; and to be summoned apud acta, to compare before the Presbytery at their next meeting.—See Act 7th, General Assembly, anno 1704.

15. Providing always there be ten days given to the minister and parish where he is, to prepare themselves to answer the reasons of the call.

16. If the minister called be absent from the Presbytery, then the ruling elder from that parish, if present, is to get the call and reasons delivered to him, and to be apud acta obliged to deliver the same to the minister, if at home, within twenty-four hours.

17. If both be absent, the Presbytery is to send the call and reasons to the minister, to be delivered to him by the Presbytery's officer, or one appointed for that effect, who is, before witnesses, to deliver the same to the minister, and to give him a citation to appear at the diet prescribed by the Presbytery. If the minister be not at home, that he cannot be personally summoned, then the call, reasons, and copy of the citation, are to be left at the minister's dwelling-house.

18. The Presbytery is likewise to cause cite the heritors and elders of the parish from which the transportation is desired, by issuing out summons, under the moderator or clerk of the Presbytery's hands, directed to the Presbytery officer, who is thereupon obliged to make due intimation thereof, by reading the same audibly at the most patent door of the church of that parish, immediately after the forenoon sermon, when the people are coming out of the church, and thereafter by affixing a copy of the summons on the said door before witnesses.

19. If the officer meet with any molestation or opposition, in his endeavouring to execute the summons, from any of the parish, the summons, notwithstanding, are to be reckoned executed, providing the minister himself had previous knowledge of the call and appointment. But, by the 8th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1704, it is appointed, that the minister himself being summoned apud acta, at the Presbytery, or, if absent, by the Presbytery's letter, to be present at the day appointed for hearing the cause, he also intimate out of the pulpit, to heritors, elders, and others concerned in the parish, that there is such a call, and such a transportation designed, and if any of them have a mind to defend their right to their minister, they are to be present at the Presbytery on such a day, and ready to make their defences; for which end the call and reasons are to be given or transmitted to the minister, to be by him communicated to them. But this method of citations is only to be observed where the Presbytery concerned shall see cause to take that course; and it is in the option of the Presbytery to follow this course, or do it by their officers as formerly.

20. The minister, on his receiving a call and reasons for his transportation, is forthwith to convene the kirk-session, and communicate the same to them, whereby both heritors and kirk-session may have time to consider and answer the reasons of the call.

21. The Presbytery, in appointing the diet for a minister and parish to make their answers to a call, are to consider the minister's circumstances, as if he be not at home, and hath urgent affairs, which may fall out to be by appointment of the Church.

22. The parish who are cited may appear by some of their heritors and elders, and, to avoid confusion, not above seven at most, but these need no commission in writing, because they are defendants, and, being cited, they ought to be heard.

23. The Presbytery meeting at the diet appointed to cognosce upon the process of transportation, are to enter upon it—1. By reading of the minutes of the last meeting, ordaining parties to be cited; 2. By calling for the summons issued to the kirk-officer to summon the parties; and, if they find the summons indorsed and duly executed, then, 3. They are to order the officer to call in the parties.

24. If any of the parties be absent, and excuses made, the Presbytery are to judge the reasonableness of the same, and either proceed or delay the affair as they find cause.

25. But if all parties be present, the moderator acquainting them of the reason of their being called, desireth them to be silent during reading of the following papers which belong to the process, and so the Presbytery doth proceed—1. By causing read the call given to the minister desired; 2. By reading the reasons given in with the call for the transportation craved; 3. By reading both the minister's and parishioners' answers to the reasons, if they have any, in writing; if not, by hearing these defendants' answers by word, as they themselves think fit.

26. After reading these papers, the moderator of the Presbytery is to inquire at the pursuers if they have any thing farther to add to the reasons of their call, or any thing to reply to the minister's and parishioners' answers; and if they have it, to allow them to do it by word, but not by writing; and after they are heard without interruption, the defendants are allowed to reply to them, being to speak last, without any replying or farther discourse, to prevent needless altercations.

27. If the pursuers desire a delay to the Presbytery's proceeding, or if any of the reasons or answers on which much of the weight of the affair does depend, require the probation of some matter of fact, then, in these necessary cases, the Presbytery may delay determining the process till next meeting, to receive sufficient information in the matter of fact alleged: But if no such reason for a delay be, the Presbytery is to proceed to deliberate upon the whole affair, all parties being removed.

28. If the affair be intricate, and reasons on both sides weighty, after the Presbytery hath among themselves reasoned hinc inde, it may be fit, before the question be put to a decisive vote, to call in both parties, and again inquire if they have any new matter to offer, which hath not fallen under consideration in the case; and likewise, that so momentous a case may be the more conscientiously gone about, it will be fit that a minister of the Presbytery pray to God (all parties being present) that the judicatory may be guided of God in their determination, and thereafter (parties being removed) the question is to be put, "Transport or not," and all the members are to give their vote distinctly, which are to be marked by the clerk, and a member or two taking notice of the right marking of the same.

29. If much of the weight of the affair, and that part which doth most straiten the Presbytery, in giving their judgment, lie on the minister who is to be transported, his own sentiment, he may be called before the Presbytery alone, or before two or three of their number, and dealt with to gain him to a contented submission to their intended sentence, to prevent his being crushed by it.

30. And the Presbytery, when they are going to transport any minister for the greater good of the Church, are to be tender and condescending to the minister as to the time when he is to remove, or to clothe their sentence with alleviating circumstances.

31. After sentence is passed, and all parties called in, the moderator is to show them the care the Presbytery has taken to do justly in their proceedings, and to entreat them all to a cheerful submission to the sentence which is to be read to them by the clerk, who is to record the same, and the whole process, and to give extracts thereof to those who demand it.

32. If any party appeal, in the case of transportation, before the final sentence, upon alleged injury received, the Presbytery not being conscious of the same, may proceed to determine the affair notwithstanding.

33. All Presbyteries should endeavour not only a speedy determining a process of transportation, but should always determine it themselves without referring the affair to the Synod, it being a duty that the Presbytery is called to, to give their judgment in the affairs that come before them, and nothing but insuperable hesitation of their judgments, as to point of light, should occasion it.*

SECT. 6.—Of Parochial Visitations by the Presbytery.

1. It is the duty of the Presbytery to visit every congregation within the same, by solemn visitations, which are either ordinary and in course, or extraordinary, pro re nata.

2. The ordinary, whereby every congregational church is visited, ought to be once a year if it can be attained, or at least this ordinary visitation should be going round all the parishes in order, till they be visited, before others be revisited in ordinary.

3. The Presbytery is to appoint the day when the visitation is to be, and cause intimation be made by the minister of the parish from the pulpit, immediately after the forenoon sermon on the Sabbath, ten days preceding the day for the visitation, requiring the heritors, elders, and whole congregation, to be present that day to hear sermon; and after that sermon, the heritors, elders, and heads of families, do attend the Presbytery, to acquaint them with the state of that kirk and congregation in every point; and particularly, if any of them have any certain knowledge of any thing amiss in their minister, elders, deacons, precentor, session-clerk, schoolmaster, or beadle, that they bring the same to the Presbytery.

4. The session registers are to be produced to the Presbytery before the visitation, and given to some brethren to be revised, and they to report at the visitation.

5. The minister of the parish in all ordinary visitations is to preach that day before the Presbytery, on his ordinary text or subject he hath been preaching upon to the people.

6. The sermon being ended, the Presbytery constituted, the minister's doctrine he had in his sermon is first to be considered, as in the Presbyterial exercise.

7. The Church Bible, Confession of Faith, Acts of the General Assembly, acts and proclamations against profaneness, and other acts and papers relative to the Church, the session registers, and poor's box, are all to be called for, produced, and laid before the Presbytery.

8. The Presbytery at the entry on the visitation, having removed the minister and all belonging to the congregation, are to cause read over their actings at the last visitation of that congregation, and see if what was then recommended or ordered hath been made effectual; and, if need be, to call in any party for information, or for censure in case of neglect.

9. If nothing arise therefrom to divert the Presbytery from the orderly method, all parties being removed, the Presbytery are to call in the eldership and heads of families, and to inquire at them concerning their minister, and with all gravity and authority to charge them to declare the truth, in the following and such like questions:—

10. The questions inquired by a Presbytery concerning a minister may be these, and such like: 1mo, Hath your minister a Gospel walk and conversation before the people, and does he keep family worship, and is he one who rules well his own house? 2do, Keeps he much at home at his ministerial work, or doth he occasion to himself distractions and unnecessary diversions therefrom? 3tio, Preacheth he sound doctrine, so far as you understand? 4to, Does he preach plainly, or is he hard to be understood for his scholastic terms, matter, or manner of preaching? 5to, Doth he faithfully reprove sin, especially such as most prevail in that parish? 6to, What time of day doth he ordinarily begin sermon on the Sabbath, and when doth he dismiss the people? 7mo, Spends he in his sermon too much time in repetition of what he had before? 8vo, Doth he visit the people and families, at least once a year, in a ministerial way, teaching and admonishing from house to house, and doth he visit the sick when it is needful, and pray over them? 9no, Does he lecture and preach in the forenoon, and preach again in the afternoon on the Lord's Day, and that both summer and winter? 10mo, Does he read a large portion of Scripture in public, and expound the same, as is enjoined by the Acts of the General Assembly? 11mo, Does he preach catechetic doctrine ordinarily in the afternoon? 12mo, Does he administer the Sacrament of Baptism in an orderly way, when the congregation is convened, or does he it privately? 13mo, Doth he frequently catechize his parishioners, and administer the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper to them, and is he careful in keeping from that holy ordinance all who are known to be scandalous, grossly ignorant, or erroneous? 14mo, Hath he weekday sermons, and at them collections for the poor? 15mo, Hath he a competent number of elders, and hath he deacons in the parish distinct from elders? 16mo, If there be a magistrate in the parish for punishing vice, according to Act of Parliament? 17mo, Doth he read ternly the acts against profaneness from the pulpit? 18mo, Does he keep sessional meetings frequently, and is he impartial in the exercise of discipline against offenders, and is the session's diligence thereanent recorded in a book? 19no, If there be frequent meetings of the members of session for fasting and prayer, according to the 7th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1699?

11. After these questions are asked, the minister is to be called in, and encouraged or admonished as the Presbytery doth see cause.

12. If any thing censurable, and which may occasion a process against the minister, be informed by any, then the Presbytery is to proceed according to the directions given, Sect. 7 of this same Chapter.

13. Then the elders and deacons being removed altogether, the minister and congregation be inquired concerning them, by the following and such questions:—1*mo*, If the session be rightly constituted, and all the elders and deacons duly admitted, according to the Acts of Assemblies? 2*do*, Do they all attend Gospel ordinances and diets of the session duly? 3*tio*, Are they grave, pious, and exemplary in their lives and conversations? 4*to*, Do they worship God in their families? 5*to*, Are they diligent, careful, and impartial, in the exercise of their offices? 6*to*, Do the elders visit the families within the quarter and bounds assigned to each? 7*mo*, Have the elders subscribed the Confession of Faith? 8*vo*, Have the elders their distinct bounds assigned them for their particular inspection? 9*no*, Are they careful to have the worship of God set up in the families of their bounds? 10*mo*, Are they careful in calling for testimonials from persons who come to reside in the parish? 11*mo*, Does the session always appoint a ruling elder to attend Presbyteries and Synods?

14. After these questions, the eldership being called in, the Presbytery do commend, exhort, admonish, or reprove, as they think needful.

15. Then the precentor, schoolmaster, and clerk of the session, who in country congregations are generally one and the same, and after them the beadle, being removed, the Presbytery is to inquire at the minister, session, and heads of families, concerning their conversation, their exemplary walk, fidelity and diligence in their offices, and the Presbytery are thereupon to proceed as the matter requireth.

16. After all these inquiries, the Presbytery removing the heads of families, the ministers and elders are to be inquired concerning the congregation, with these and such like questions:—1*mo*, Doth the body of the people attend ordinances duly and timeously, and stay till the blessing be pronounced? 2*do*, Are they diligent in improving the means of knowledge, and are they growing therein? 3*tio*, Are they submissive to public and private exhortations, and to the discipline and censure of the Church, by admonitions and reproofs, as need requires? 4*to*, Do they, by their words and actions, manifest a suitable respect to their minister and respective elders, and are they encouraging to them in their work? 5*to*, Are they careful to educate their children and servants, as well as increase themselves in the knowledge of God? 6*to*, What success hath the Gospel and labours of ministers and elders among them in convincing and converting, and building them up in their most holy faith? 7*mo*, If there be any scandals, or other vices among them, and if on the growing hand? 8*vo*, What seeds of heresy, schism, or division is among them? 9*no*, How the Lord's Day is observed?

17. The Presbytery having got from the minister and elders an account of the spiritual state of the congregation, and calling in the congregation, the moderator is to direct to the body of people a word of admonition, rebuke, exhortation, or encouragement, as their need requireth.

18. Then the minister, heritors, session, and heads of families, being present, the Presbytery is to inquire after the state of the church, as to its fabric, the seats therein, and division of the same, the churchyard dykes, the utensils of the church, communion cups, cloths; the minister's manse, if it be in repair, the glebe and stipend; the salary of the schoolmaster, precentor, session-clerk and beadle, and how the communion elements are provided; and inquiry is to be made how much the stipend is, of what nature, how paid, and if there be a decreet of locality therefor.

19. If any of these be not in that order they should, the Presbytery are to deal with the heritors and others, on whom the law layeth the providing and repairing these, that they may provide the same, and are prudently to render them willing to the work, without running needlessly to the last remedy the law alloweth, unless necessity require.

20. The Presbytery are likewise to inquire before all, anent the state of the poor, and whether there be any mortification and legacies for the poor, schools, or other pious uses, and how these are secured and their interests paid, applied, and discharged, and whether the collections at the church door and the poor's money be rightly employed, and be competent to their sustenance, and if need be, the parish exhorted to enlarge their charity, or provide some other way for the poor.

21. Occasional visitations of a parish are made by the Presbytery pro re nata, and according to the weight of the emergency which doth occasion the visitation; the whole Presbytery, or such a delegated number as the Presbytery think fit, do attend the visitation.

22. All the actings and proceedings of the Presbytery at a visitation are punctually to be recorded, and if by delegates, a report made at next meeting of the Presbytery, and recorded both in the Presbytery and Session books.

SECT. 7.—Of Censuring of Ministers.

1. All processes against any minister who hath the charge of a congregation are to begin before the Presbytery to which he belongeth, and not before the kirk-session of his own parish.

2. The credit and success of the gospel, (in the way of an ordinary mean,) much depending on the entire credit and reputation of ministers' sound doctrine and holy conversation, no stain thereof ought lightly to be received, nor when it comes before a judicatory ought to be negligently inquired into, or when found evident, ought to be slightly censured.

3. And because a scandal committed by a minister hath on these accounts many aggravations, and once raised, though it may be found to be without any ground, yet it is not easily wiped off; therefore, a Presbytery should exactly ponder by whose information and complaint it comes first before them, and a Presbytery is not so far to receive the information as to proceed to a citation of a minister, or any way begin the process until there be, 1. Some person who under his hand gave in the complaint, and undertake to make out the libel. 2. Or, at least, do before the Presbytery undertake to make it out, under the pain of being censured as slanderers. Or, 3. That the fama clamosa of the scandal be so great, as that the Presbytery, for their own vindication, see themselves necessitated to begin the process without any particular accuser; but the Presbytery, in this case, should be careful first to inquire into the rise, occasion, broachers, and grounds of this fama clamosa.

4. All Christians ought to be so prudent and wary in accusing ministers of any censurable fault, as that they ought neither to publish nor spread the same, nor accuse the minister before the Presbytery, without first acquainting some of the most prudent of the ministers and elders of that Presbytery, yea, and the minister himself, if they can have access thereto, and their advice got in the affair.

5. Upon such a complaint brought before a Presbytery, the Presbytery having cited the minister, if he be absent, and if the scandal alleged be some one act, is to endeavour to draw the minister to a confession, whereby he doth most glorify God.

6. If the minister do confess the fact, and if it be of a scandalous nature, censurable in others, as uncleanness, the Presbytery, whatever be the measure of his penitence, even in his confession, and that to the conviction of all, is instantly to depose him ab officio, and to appoint him in due time to appear before the congregation where the scandal was given, for the removal of the offence by the public profession of his repentance.

7. If a minister accused of any scandal, and cited to appear before his own Presbytery, do absent himself by leaving the place and be contumacious, without making an excuse or pretext, he is to be held as confessed, and not only deposed and censured instantly with the lesser excommunication; but if, after some time, he do not return and subject himself to the censures of the Church, he is to be proceeded against till he be censured with the greater excommunication.

8. If the minister accused do appear and deny the fact, in the Presbytery's proceeding to find the truth of the matter, all the circumstances are to be exactly canvassed, and the reputation of the witnesses and their hability be regarded, and duly considered.

9. If the matter laid to the minister's charge be unsoundness and heterodoxy in his doctrine, then great caution should be used, and the knowledge and understanding of witnesses much looked unto; and withal, if the errors be not gross and striking at the vitals of religion, and if they be not pertinaciously stuck unto, and industriously and maliciously spread with a visible design to corrupt, and that the errors are not spreading among the people; then lenitives, admonitions, instructions, and frequent conferences, are to be tried to reclaim without cutting off, and the advice of other Presbyteries sought; and unless the thing be doing much hurt, Synods and Assemblies are to be advised with in the affair.

10. If the libel and complaint brought against a minister be a multitude of things laid together, as several acts of negligence, and other unsuitable actions, the Presbytery, in proceeding therein, are to have a Presbyterial visitation of that parish to which the minister belongs, and at the said visitation are first to see if any of these things now laid to the minister's charge were committed prior to the last Presbyterial visitation of that parish; and whether they were then laid to his charge; and if they were not, it should be tried how they come to be laid to his charge now.

11. If the Presbytery find these things laid to his charge to be committed since the last visitation, or find a satisfying reason wherefore they were not then tabled, they are to inquire what diligence hath been used in acquainting the minister with the offence taken at the first of these things committed by him, and how far the minister hath been guilty of giving offence, after he knew offence to be taken.

12. It should likewise in this case be inquired, whether any of the complainers did first in a prudent, private way, inform any of the neighbouring ministers of some of these things committed by their minister, who is now challenged, before these offences came to be so many as to merit a public and solemn trial? And accordingly the Presbytery is to judge.

13. If the Presbytery find upon trial the complaint to resolve on the minister's having committed such acts of infirmity or passion, as, considering all the circumstances, may be either remedied and the people satisfied, and no such offence taken, or at least remain, so as to hinder the minister's profiting the people, and that the offence was taken by the minister's own people only or mainly, then the Presbytery is to take all prudent ways to satisfy and reclaim both minister and people, and do away the offence.

14. When he hath given the Presbytery and people satisfying demonstrations of his penitency, he is to be relaxed from the said censure of the lesser excommunication without proceeding any step to the taking off the sentence of deposition at that time.

15. But before a minister deposed for scandalous carriage can be restored to the exercise of the ministry, there should not only be evident a deep sorrow for sin, but an eminently and exemplary humble walk and edifying conversation, so apparent and convincing, as hath worn out and healed the wound the scandal gave; and hath likewise created in the minds of the godly an earnest desire to have him rendered useful again.

16. Immediately on the back of a minister being deposed by the Presbytery, the sentence is to be intimated in his congregation, the church declared vacant, the planting thereof with another minister hastened, and never delayed on the expectation of his being reponed, it being almost impossible that ever he can prove useful in that parish again. See Act General Assembly, February 13, 1645, Sess. ult. thereant; as also, Act August 2, 1641, Sess. 8, against sudden receiving deposed ministers.

SECT. 8.—Of Appeals from a Kirk-Session to the Presbytery.

1. When an appeal is brought from a kirk-session to a Presbytery, the Presbytery is to consider, whether the cause is of that nature as it behoved at length to have come to the Presbytery by the course of discipline, before the final determination thereof, as if it be in a process of alleged adultery, or such like. Then the Presbytery, to save themselves time, may fall upon the consideration of the affair without insisting much upon the bene or male appellatum, though it seem to be preposterously appealed.

2. But if the cause be such as the kirk-session are the competent and proper judges of even to its ultimate decision, and if there hath been no cause given by the kirk-session by their breaking the rules of an orderly process, either by the course of the process, or by the incompetency of the censure, the Presbytery is not to sustain the appeal.

3. If the Presbytery do not sustain the appeal, and find there hath been some fault, passion, or culpable mistake in the appellant, the Presbytery is to inflict some censure, such as a reproof before the Presbytery, or appoint an acknowledging of their precipitancy before their own session, or such like, on those appellars they find to have been litigious and malicious, thereby to prevent unnecessary appeals; and that besides remitting them back to the session, either to stand to the censure of the session, if it be already inflicted, or to sist themselves during the process if it be depending.

4. If the appeal be sustained, and yet upon proceeding on the cause, the Presbytery find the appellant censurable, it is always to be minded, that whatever censure be inflicted, to remove the offence the Presbytery hath taken, yet the appellant, if found guilty, isto undergo a censure, either before the kirk-session or congregation he belongs to, such as the Presbytery think he deserveth, else Presbyteries will be always troubled with appeals.

5. If, on the other hand, on trial of the process, the Presbytery find the kirk-session hath unwarrantably proceeded, either in contributing to the raising of a scandal, or inflicting a censure, without a sufficient cause, and thereby the appellant lesed, the Presbytery is not only to assoilzie the appellant, but to take such ways as may be proper and effectual to vindicate the appellant's innocency, and wipe off the scandal taken at him.

6. Herein the Presbytery is to exercise great prudence, doing justice to the innocent, yet so as not to weaken the kirk-session's authority in that congregation, if in justice it can be avoided.

7. But such an emergent may very well occasion the Presbytery's giving the minister and elders of that session suitable injunctions and rules to walk by, or private admonitions, or to call for a repeated visitation of their session register.

8. If the appellant do not give in his appeal, with the reasons thereof, to the moderator or clerk of the Presbytery, within the space of ten days after his appeal, and be present to prosecute it the next Presbytery day thereafter, his appeal should ipso facto cease, and the appellant be held as contumacious, and so proceeded against by the kirk-session.

SECT. 9.—Of References made by the Kirk-Session to the Presbytery.

1. The kirk-session having the opportunity of frequent Presbyteries, do oftentimes make references to the Presbytery, which references are sometimes for advice only, sometimes they are of the cause or process itself, and the full judgment thereanent is entirely referred to the Presbytery.

2. These references for advice are sometimes made, that thereby the kirk-session may get more light in the affair, and sometimes that the opinion which they have may be fortified by the advice of the Presbytery, as persons of greater judgment and weight, whereby the kirk-session's determination may be the more regarded.

3. These references for advice reserve always the cause in the hands of the kirk-session, and they only sist their proceeding to a sentence till the advice be had.

4. Sometimes a kirk-session referreth a cause or process entirely to the Presbytery to be finally determined by them, and that the kirk-session doth, either because they find difficulty in point of light, as to what they should do, or because, though they be clear as to what should be done, yet some prudential consideration makes them think it not convenient that they should be the doers themselves.

5. The Presbytery receiving any such references are to give the best advice and assistance they can to the session, thereby to fortify and support their authority, for the bearing down of all disorders; and if the Presbytery find that their passing sentence or censure will have the greatest weight and most true influence, then they are to do it, though the censure be to be intimated in that congregation the kirk-session belongeth to, and the satisfaction taken there if it be a matter of scandal.

6. But sometimes it will fall out, that the Presbytery, even when the reference is to determine entirely, will find it fit to refer back the determination of the affair to the kirk-session, that the sentence may be their act, which should only be done, when it will be more obliging, or for the credit of the session, that the kirk-session pass the sentence; and then likewise the Presbytery should give their opinion as to what the sentence should be.

7. All references being supposed to be matters of moment to the kirk-session, should not only be minuted in the kirk-session register, but should be transmitted in writing to the Presbytery, and by the Presbytery clerk the production thereof when presented should be recorded, as likewise the Presbytery's return.

SECT. 10.—Of Censuring such Scandals which are so gross, that the Kirk-Session does not absolve from, as of Adultery, &c.

1. The Presbytery being informed of a reference from a kirk-session by the minister or ruling elder from that session concerning such a scandal, is to inquire what steps have been taken by the kirk-session already in the affair, if all that are requisite for them preparatory to the Presbytery's cognisance, and if so, then the Presbytery is to allow the party to be summoned before them.

2. Sometimes it will fall out that the process is so clear, as in case of a judicial confession of adultery, that the kirk-session will summon the delinquent [when he is before them] apud acta to appear before the Presbytery, without previous acquainting the Presbytery; but where there is any difficulty, the kirk-session should inform the Presbytery, and take their advice before a party be summoned before them.

3. When the party or parties appear before the Presbytery, if they confess and profess repentance, then the Presbytery having gravely rebuked the party or parties, is to prescribe the time of the parties' public appearance in that congregation where the process began, the scandal being there to be taken away, or remit them to the session to receive orders thereanent.

4. That the delinquents be appointed to remove the scandal in the congregation where the offence is most flagrant, rather than in the place where it was committed, if it be not public there, and that intimation of the removing thereof be made in other places, if the judicatory shall find it needful.

5. Besides the rebuke which the Presbytery gives to the confessing penitent at their first appearance before them, it is frequent and very useful that the Presbytery appoint the penitent party to wait on some one or two of the ministers of the Presbytery, who may in conference lay sin home to their consciences, and likewise, in private draw more of the sense which the person hath of their sin, than they can expect in words in public, and this is to be renewed as they find need.

6. If the party cited before the Presbytery deny the fact, then the Presbytery is to follow these rules in their proceeding, given Chap. I. Sect. 4, Chap. II. Sect. 6, &c.

7. Yet the Presbytery may either lead the probation before themselves, or remit it to the kirk-session, as in prudence they will find most convenient.

8. The Presbytery is to give advice to the kirk-session in anything they commit to them in such an affair, especially as to the absolution of the party.

9. That it would be fit in case of adultery that the scandalous person do appear before the Presbytery before absolution.

SECT. 11.—Of a Process in order to the highest Censure of Excommunication.

1. Since there is a distinction betwixt the greater and lesser excommunication, it seems that whatever has been the cause of the first process, yet ordinarily all processes that are in order to the highest censure are to be for obdurate contumacy; and where there is no obdurate contumacy, the lesser excommunication needs only have place; yet in some very extraordinary cases, the Church hath summarily excommunicated persons guilty of notour atrocious scandalous sins, to show the Church's abhorrence of such wickedness.

2. Even where there hath been a scandal committed, and contumacy by not appearing, it should be considered, if the fact hath been proven or not; if not proven, then the scandal hath not weight, and only the simple contumacy is to be proceeded against, wherewith it were hard to go a greater length than the lesser excommunication.

3. If the scandal hath been proven, and the censure of the lesser excommunication intimated, as in the preceding overtures, Chap. I. Sect. 6, it seems most reasonable that there be no farther proceeding, unless the scandal be of such an heinous nature, as that offence is not removed from tender Christians, and that it is spreading and infectious, as in heresies; in which cases, a contumacy is to be proceeded against, in order to the greater excommunication.

4. The kirk-session having brought the process to an intimation of the censure of the lesser excommunication; and finding it will not be sufficient, they are to refer the affair to the Presbytery, bringing their whole proceedings before the Presbytery, that the Presbytery may thereby have a clear and full view of the whole affair.

5. The Presbytery finding the kirk-session hath orderly proceeded, and that the affair is so weighty as to enter on the process, they are to cause their officer to cite the scandalous person.

6. If the party appear, then the Presbytery is to proceed in the inquiry at the accused about the scandal alleged; if he deny it, then they are to proceed to lead probation as in other cases.

7. But if the party appear not, but contemn the citation, the Presbytery causeth renew the same until he hath continued three citations, and after the three citations, that he be cited out of the pulpit, and for the further conviction of all concerned; the judicatory may proceed and inquire into the presumptions or probation of the guilt, and this to be done although the delinquent be absent.

8. Then the Presbytery doth order the minister of the congregation, next Sabbath after forenoon's sermon, to acquaint the congregation what proceeding the kirk-session first, and then the Presbytery, had made in the affair, and how contumacious the party was, and that the Presbytery intendeth to proceed to the highest censure, and the minister is gravely to admonish the party, if present, to repent and submit himself to the discipline of the Church, threatening him, if he continue impenitent, that the Church will proceed; yea, though he be absent, the minister is to acquaint the people that the Church requires him to repent and submit, as is above said, under the fore-said certification.

9. The minister of the parish is to intimate to the congregation after the forenoon's sermon, the dangerous condition the impenitent person is in, how loath the Church is to cut him off from the society and privileges of the faithful, and therefore to admonish that person to repent, amend, and submit to the discipline of the Church, in which there should be three public admonitions, and a Presbytery should intervene betwixt each admonition, and if, after all, that person continue impenitent or contumacious, the same is to be represented to the Presbytery, who are thereupon to appoint three public prayers, in which the minister is to show the congregation, that they are exhorted to join with him in prayer for the scandalous, impenitent, or contumacious person, which he is solemnly and seriously to put up to God, humbly begging that he would deal with the soul of the impenitent, and convince him of the evil of his ways.

10. These public prayers of the Church are to be put up three several Sabbath days, both to show the Church's tenderness towards their lapsed brother, their earnestness to have him reclaimed, and likewise to create a greater regard and terror of that dreadful censure, both in the party and in all the people.

11. If, after all, the scandalous person make no application, but continue impenitent, the Presbytery is then to appoint the minister of that congregation to intimate the same, and to show the Presbytery's resolution to proceed upon such a Sabbath as they shall name, for pronouncing that dreadful sentence.

12. That day being come, it were fit the minister did preach a sermon suited to that solemn occasion, or at least after sermon, the minister should show the congregation what he is going about, introducing the narration of the process, with a discourse concerning the nature, use, and end of Church censures, particularly that of the greater excommunication, if he hath not done it fully in his sermon.

13. Then narrating all the steps of the process in order, showing the Church's faithfulness and tenderness towards the scandalous person, and declaring his obstinate impenitency, and that now, after all other means were used, there remained only that of cutting the scandalous person off from the society of the faithful, and intimating the Church's warrant and order to him so to do.

14. And before the minister pronounce the sentence, he is to pray, and desire all the congregation to join with him therein, that God would grant repentance to the obstinate person, would graciously bless his own ordinance, and make the censure effectual, both to edify others, and to be a mean to reclaim the obstinate sinner.

15. Then after prayer, the minister is with great gravity and authority to pronounce the censure, showing his warrant from our Lord's command, and the Apostle Paul's direction, and recapitulating the Presbytery's warrant in obedience thereunto, and resuming the scandalous and obstinate person's behaviour whom he is to name. He then, in our Lord and Master Christ's name and authority, doth (in verbis de presenti) excommunicate and exterminate him out of the society of the faithful, debarring him from their privileges, and in the words of the Apostle, delivering him over to Satan.*

16. If, after prayer, and before the censure be pronounced, the scandalous person do make any public signification of his penitency, and of his desire to have the censure stopped, the minister, upon any apparent seriousness in the scandalous person (which he showeth to the congregation) may thereupon delay pronouncing the censure, till he report to the Presbytery at their next meeting, who are then to deal with the scandalous person as they shall find cause.

SECT. 12.—Of Presbyterial Exercises.

1. It is a part of the work of a Presbytery to begin every meeting with a sermon by one or two of the brethren, appointed by the former meeting of the Presbytery for that effect, and his text assigned him by the Presbytery, which is called a Presbyterial Exercise.

2. The half of the time allowed for this exercise is ordinarily to be taken up in the explicatory and analytic part of the sermon, and in answering textual and critical questions and difficulties; the other half of the time allowed is to be taken up in raising of observations and doctrines from the text; one of which at least is to be methodically handled, the first whereof is called Exercise, and the other Addition.

3. When Presbyteries have probationers on their trials, and they come to have that part of their trials called the Presbyterial Exercise, they will, and may allot to one of them to have the exercise and the other the addition; or when there is but one probationer, one of the brethren of the Presbytery to have the other.

4. After the exercise is over, and the Presbytery met in their own meeting place, and the meeting constituted, the censure of the exercise they have heard useth always to be the first work of the Presbytery.

5. After the censures have passed round, the Moderator may resume the whole to the admonishing and encouraging of the brother, as the cause requireth.

6. Besides the above exercise they used in Presbyteries frequently to have Common Heads, as they are called by the brethren of the Presbytery, in Latin, with disputes; but if it be coram populo, it should be in the vulgar language.†

7. The Presbyteries are for these exercises to choose some portion of Scripture, and proceed orderly from verse to verse.

SECT. 13.—Of Privy Censures in the Presbyteries.

1. In every Presbytery, at least twice a-year, and ordinarily before each Synod, there ought to be privy censures.

2. It were fit that before any thing be brought to the Presbytery concerning any member in the privy censure, there were previous use of more private admonition, except in the case of open and gross scandals; and when any offers to inform the Presbytery of any thing censurable in another, he is to be inquired whether he has privately and in a brotherly way spoken to the member anent whom he offers to inform, in order to his amendment; and at these privy censures none are to be present but members, who are all to undergo the same.

3. In the censure of the Moderator who hath served (as is ordinary) since the last Synod, his public behaviour as a Moderator is under the Presbytery's consideration and censure, where, after he is removed, his carriage is inquired after, and the judgment of every member inquired, not only for his sake, but for instruction to those who succeed him in the office, and after he is again called in he is to be encouraged, thanked, or admonished, as they find cause.

4. After the Moderator each of the brethren, one after another, are to be removed, and but one at once; and the Moderator is to inquire the judgment of each member, and to take their report of their brother's carriage and behaviour, either in relation to his charge or otherwise, according to the trial at the visitation of the parishes by the Presbytery, and then he is to be called in, encouraged, commended, or reprehended, as they see fit, and he set in his place again.

5. After the ministers and ruling elders the Presbytery clerk is to pass these censures, and the Presbytery book again is to be inspected, and some nominated to revise the minutes, (whereof the Moderator is to be one,) if the same be not already done, that the fair clean register may be filled up, and ready to be presented to the Synod at their next meeting.

CHAPTER IV.

OF THE PROCEEDINGS AND METHOD IN PROVINCIAL SYNODS.

SECT. I.—Of the Constitution and Opening of this Judicatory.

1. The Synod or Provincial Assembly is a Church judicatory immediately superior to the Presbytery, and consists of several Presbyteries met together for their mutual help and comfort, and for managing the affairs of public concerns within their bounds.

2. The number of Presbyteries is not determined, but the National Assembly hath made them up of such adjacent Presbyteries as might most conveniently meet together.

3. All the ministers within the bounds of these Presbyteries do personally meet with a ruling elder from every parish, who are ordinarily those elders that were chosen by the Kirk-Session of every congregation to attend the respective Presbyteries the half year preceding the Synod.

4. The Synods do meet in ordinary twice every year, at such set times as are usual.

5. The last moderator, in the morning before the Synod, doth preach a sermon to the members suited to the occasion, and after sermon doth intimate to all the members that they immediately repair to the Synod-house, which is ordinarily some room or convenient place of the church.

6. When they are met the last moderator doth open the meeting with solemn prayer, then he causeth the clerk to make up the rolls, beginning to call the members by their several Presbyteries.

7. In doing this, it is usual to change the order of the roll every Synod, so that the Presbytery that was first called in the roll in the former Synod is now called last, and that which was in the second place is now called first.

8. The clerk calling the ministers according to the roll of the last Synod is to inquire at every minister, when he hath answered to his name, who is the ruling elder elected by the Session of that parish to attend the Synod, and his name is to be enrolled, whether he be present or absent; as likewise, at the end of calling each Presbytery the clerk is to inquire what ministers are ordained and settled within that Presbytery since the last Synod, and enrol them; and though the minister of a parish be not present, yet the ruling elder for that Session is to be called for and enrolled.

9. But to gain time, the roll of each Presbytery may be presented to the clerk by the moderator of the Presbytery, with the ruling elders therein inserted.

10. Then the moderator acquainteth the Synod that their work is to choose a new moderator, and to facilitate the same, he proposeth to the Synod a list of two or three, out of whom they may choose one to be moderator, and any member of the Synod may add more to the list.

11. When the list is agreed unto, then those persons named therein are called upon, and their own votes are required whom they would have to be moderator, and each of them giving his vote is instantly removed during the time of the members' voting.

12. When the vote is past, the last moderator causeth call in the brethren which were removed, and intimateth to the minister elected that he is chosen moderator, who thereupon doth immediately take the chair.

13. The new moderator being in the chair, he first (if there be a clerk to be chosen) proposes the election of one thereby to constitute the judicatory, but if the Synod have a fixed clerk, and he present, they proceed to their business.

14. The rolls thus made up and called over, and absentees marked, the moderator calls for the correspondents from the neighbouring Synods, and their commissions being read, they are to be enrolled as members having vote; then the moderator proposeth the appointment of committees of the Synod for the preparing of business for them, and these are ordinarily named in the first Session of the Synod.

15. In the committees for overtures and bills there ought to be one at least out of each Presbytery within the bounds of the Synod, to help each committee with the knowledge of the state of those Presbyteries, seeing affairs may come before them belonging to each of them.

16. It is most requisite that the correspondents from other Synods be chosen members of the committee of overtures, seeing there they may be most useful.

SECT. 2.—Of the Committees of Synods.

1. A Synod being a judicatory consisting of a multitude of members, generally above 100, and some above 200, it is very necessary that they have committees of their own number to prepare matters to them, and to lop off unnecessary work, for the gaining of time, and to hinder heats by public debates.

2. These committees are only to prepare and report to the Synods, and, therefore, any affair tabled before them, though by them rejected, may be brought in in full Synods, yet so as the member who bringeth in the affair be sure to have very much reason or necessity for so doing.

3. All Synods may have the following committees for facilitating their work; 1. A Committee for Overtures; 2. A Committee for Bills, References, and Appeals; 3. Committees for revising Presbytery-books, who are to meet at such times and places as the Synods shall appoint.

4. The moderator of the Synod useth always to be both a member and moderator of the committee of overtures, and the Synod clerk attends that committee; all other committees choose their own moderator and clerk.

5. Though these committees be no judicatories for decision, yet they are in a judicial way constituting themselves with a moderator and clerk, passing their opinions and reports by the plurality of votes, but they do not take depositions of witnesses, nor examine them upon oath, unless thereto particularly empowered by the Synod.

6. What matters any of them do prepare for the Synod, their moderator or clerk do report it to the next Session of the Synod, and the same ought to be given in writing.

7. Each committee is to consist of ministers and ruling elders.

8. These committees may, upon occasion to facilitate their work, subcommit any part of their work that lieth before them to a few of their own number.

9. These committees may likewise advise with one another in weighty affairs, even before they make their report to the Synod, thereby the more to prevent debates in affairs when laid before them.

SECT. 3.—Of the Proceedings of the Committees for Overtures.

1. This Committee in General Assemblies is counted the greatest Committee, and in Synods it useth to consist of some of the brethren of greatest experience.

2. Before it are to be tabled all things which are desired by any Presbytery of the Synod, or member, to be made acts and orders in the Synod, for regulating any part of the discipline, for preventing of abuses in either discipline, worship, or government of the Church.

3. And the consideration of the state and condition of the whole Church, within the bounds of the Synod, is their work, how either to prevent any hazard thereto, or forward the good thereof, in promoting piety.

4. The overtures which come from any Presbytery are to be considered in the first place, before the overtures of the particular members.

5. This Committee is duly to consider what provision is made already by any acts, either of General Assemblies or of the Synod, concerning any thing proposed, and if a suitable remedy be already fallen upon, and care taken by the Church before, then the Committee is there to rest, and practise what was the determination of the Church in that case, and not needlessly to multiply acts and orders, which imply either an ignorance of what hath been enacted, or culpable negligence in not putting the acts in execution.

6. It is much to be desired and pressed that any overture which is made may be given in writing, to facilitate the Committee's proceedings therein.

7. Though there be some out of every Presbytery in this Committee, yet any other member of the Synod ought to be admitted to deliver in any other overture he hath to make.

SECT. 4.—Of the Proceedings of the Committees for Bills, References, and Appeals.

1. This Committee being met, and having constituted themselves, chosen their moderator and clerk, are to receive all such references and appeals, petitions or addresses, which any Presbytery or person hath, and desire to be brought in before the Synod, which they are distinctly to read and consider, in order to their preparing them to the Synod.

2. They are to be careful to lop off all unnecessary work and business from the Synod, and, therefore, if they can so dispatch such work themselves, as to satisfy or silence the appellars by their advice and counsel, they may do it.

3. The references which are regularly brought before a Synod must be, for ordinary, by the Presbyteries, and not from church-sessions immediately, and these references are either for advice and counsel, or of process for decision.

4. If the reference be for advice, the committee is to consider the weight of the case; and withal, if they can satisfy and give such light to the Presbytery who are referring the affair for advice, so as that they acquiesce therein, then there is no need of bringing it in to the Synod.

5. But if both the Presbytery referring, and the committee, find it fit to take the Synod's judgment in the affair, they are to bring it in before the Synod, but yet so prepared, as that they represent it with an overture, giving their opinion in the case, thereby to facilitate the Synod's work; and this is no prelimitation of the Synod's judgment.

6. If the reference be of a process for the Synod's deciding the same, the committee is to consider, first, how it comes before them; for in this and all other references and appeals from a Presbytery to a Synod, the extracts thereof out of the Presbytery books are first to be produced, else it is not to be regarded.

7. The committee are to consider if the parties concerned were by the Presbytery summoned to appear before the Synod, to answer the process, in order to decision, and if cited, they are to be called and heard.

8. In these references, as also in appeals from a Presbytery to a Synod for decision, wherein two or more parties are concerned, all the committee's proper work is to see that all the steps of the proceedings are regular, and, if they find it so, they are to lay it before the Synod, without giving any other judgment than that the affair cometh orderly before the Synod.

9. If the committee find an appeal unreasonable in itself, as to the matter, though as to the form it be orderly, they are prudently to deal with the appellars to withdraw the appeal, lest they come to be censured for the same, and to prevent their own being exposed, and the Synod needlessly taken up; wherein, if they prevail, they do good to all concerned.

10. Such prudent care may and ought this committee to take of what petitions, whether of complaints or for charity, come before them, as if they see need to present any of them to the Synod, they may therewith propose some overture that may facilitate the Synod's work, which is always to be done with great submission to the free judgment of the Synod itself.

SECT. 5.—Of the Proceedings of the Committees for the Examination of the Presbytery Books or Registers.

1. It is a part of the Synod's work to revise the registers of the Presbyteries within their bounds; and because it cannot be done in a full Synod, therefore it is fit that each Presbytery book be referred to a small committee of four or five ministers, and one or two elders, to revise and examine; and that these be out of other Presbyteries than that to which the book doth belong.

2. This committee is exactly and diligently to read over all the sederunts of the Presbytery, since the last time the book was revised and marked by the Synod clerk, and are to have their animadversions, if they be considerable, in writing, to give in to the Synod; and they are to notice whether the Presbytery book be signed by their moderator and clerk, according to the 11th Act, General Assembly, anno 1698.

3. If they find their remarks material, they are to acquaint the moderator of that Presbytery, that thereby they may get what satisfaction they can, before they give in their animadversions to the full Synod.

4. In their revising, they are not only to notice what they think amiss in any of their proceedings recorded, and that whether as to matter or form, but likewise to see if everything proper and fit to have been recorded be there exactly set down.

5. And they are likewise to notice, by what is recorded, if the Presbytery be guilty of any omissions, particularly in not following out processes, or other affairs, unto a suitable period.

6. This committee is to notice, if by the book it appear that the Presbytery hath been diligent and punctual in obeying all the acts and orders of the General Assembly and former Synods.

7. This committee is to give their report to the Synod of their having perused the said register, and their remarks are to be read, and the Presbytery heard thereanent, and then removed; and here the privy censures of that Presbytery useth to be made by the Synod, (as in section 7th following,) who do thereupon approve or censure the Synod as they see cause, and record the same, according to the 9th Act of the General Assembly, 1700.

SECT. 6.—Of the Synod's Proceedings in Processes.

1. All processes brought before the Synod use to come in to the same, by the moderator or clerk of the committee for bills, references, and appeals, reporting from the said committee the process which was first brought before them.

2. These processes may be brought in either, 1st, by a bill and petition; or, 2dly, by a reference from the Presbytery; or, 3dly, by an appeal from a Presbytery by any party lesed.

3. Sometimes a person or parish, particularly in cases of transportation of a minister sought, will think they have ground to complain to a Synod of the Presbytery's procedure, when they have not appealed from them, and address the Synod to interpose their authority, for either the more speedy dispatch of the depending process, or to put it into another channel.

4. Here the Synod may upon this take a cognition of the Presbytery's procedure in the process, and, if they find that the Presbytery have unduly retarded the process, or in some preliminary gone out of the ordinary road, to the prejudice of the complainers, they are to endeavour to convince the Presbytery thereof, and to give directions how to proceed for the future.

5. And sometimes, if they find the Presbytery tenacious, and find ground to jealousy their future conduct, the Synod may adjoin to the Presbytery a certain number of correspondents from neighbouring Presbyteries to assist them in that process, and require them to call for these correspondents.

6. And if the affair be pressing, sometimes a Synod, though they will not take it presently or immediately out of the Presbytery's hand, yet will appoint a Synod pro re nata, or entrust that power to call a Synod pro re nata in the hands of the moderator, with the advice of some few, to secure the dispatch of the affair.

7. But more frequently affairs and processes come from Presbyteries to the Synod, by references, or sometimes for advice only, and sometimes the decision of a process is by the Presbytery itself referred to the determination of the Synod.

8. A Presbytery will sometimes think it fit to refer for advice some weighty difficult case, and the Synod are seriously to perpend all the circumstances of the affair; and will find it fit, even after the committee of bills have brought the case to the Synod, to refer the more full consideration of all the circumstances to some select experienced brethren.

9. And with them the Presbytery concerned may use a greater freedom in laying out the intricacies of the affair, which prudence might hinder to bring before the open and full Synod, unless the most prudent members of the Synod thought it necessary.

10. In many of those cases wherein prudence is to have the chief place in determining, it should be found many times fit to give the advice rather in a private than in a public way.

11. If the reference come from the Presbytery for decision, then the Synod followeth the same method in considering and determining the process as in the processes which come in before them by appeals.

12. The Synod's first step is to see what the committee hath said to it, however, though they are not to give in their judgment in causa, yet as to its lying orderly before the Synod, they may, else they should lay it before the Synod, but cum nota, the Synod then causeth the appeal to be read, whereby it is seen who are the parties, and how they are sisted before them.

13. So the parties are called, who compearing, both the Presbytery appealed from, and the adverse party to the appellers, (if there be any,) use to object against the appeal itself, and allege that it is male appellatum, and is not in the terms of the 8th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1694, &c.

14. This ordinarily brings in a preliminary debate, which frequently obligeth the Synod to a decision of the question, bene or male appellatum, wherein the Synod used to sustain the appeal, even though no direct act of injustice be done, the appellers being either delayed in getting the Presbytery's sentence beyond what was necessary, or getting another (and not in their opinion so equal a) sentence as they in justice desired, this being thought a sufficient reason for an appeal.

15. Sometimes the Synod will sustain the appeal cum nota, where they proceed to the cause, remembering the precipitancy or other informality.

16. The Synod having sustained the appeal, they proceed to hear the process ab ovo, reading all the papers hinc inde, before they allow the parties to speak viva voce.

17. After all which, if there be written answers given to the appellers' reasons, they are given in with the appeal, the Synod useth frequently, without hearing it, to fall to the consideration of the cause.

18. But if answers be not given in, or that some new matter hath risen to clear the affair, both the appellars, and then the Presbytery and others concerned, are heard viva voce in the cause.

19. The moderator ought here to keep them close to a hearing and reply, without giving them leave to duple, and consume the Synod's time.

20. When the Synod come to deliberate and determine, the parties are removed; and here the Presbytery appealed from are reckoned parties: and if the process be of a transportation of a minister, sought to a place where there is more than one minister, all those who are to be colleagues to the minister, if he be transported, are looked upon as parties, but not the rest of the Presbytery to which he is sought, though they concurred in the call.

21. The Synod, if the affair be of a great weight and intricacy, useth, after they have debated and deliberated thereon, to call in the parties to see if they have any thing further that is new to say, before they come to a decision, and then causeth one of the members pray for light and guidance of God in their vote, which, when done, and parties removed, they come to a decision by vote.

22. If the affair be a transportation of a minister, and both the parishes where he is, and that to which he is sought, be within the bounds of the same Presbytery or Synod, in that case, the sentence of these judicatories should take effect and be obeyed; seeing these judicatories are equally concerned in both parishes, and may be thought fittest to judge both of the disproportion of the parishes, and the suitableness of the person called for either of these places; yet there is liberty of appeal to superior judicatories allowed to any who think themselves lesed, in order to have redress, by taking off the sentence, or censuring the judicatory complained of, if they be found to have malversed; but if any be found to appeal or complain unnecessarily they should be severely censured. See the 6th Act, General Assembly, anno 1694.

SECT. 7.—Of the Privy Censures of Presbyteries.

1. It is a part of the Synod's work to keep a watch over one another, and for that end to have privy censures of Presbyteries each Synod, and ordinarily at the close of the Synod, or when the report anent the Presbytery book comes in.

2. At these censures the Synod useth to remove all persons, except the members of the Synod, from being present, that the members may speak the more freely; and that because several things come there to be inquired into which are not fit to bring to public, at least till maturely considered.

3. At these censures each Presbytery are removed by themselves, and all its members present, both ministers and elders, beginning at the Presbytery which was first called in the roll during that Synod.

4. The moderator of the Synod doth likewise remove with his own Presbytery, and the last moderator of the Synod belonging to another Presbytery doth take the chair.

5. When the Presbytery is removed, the moderator of the Synod useth to inquire at the Synod, if any have heard of the behaviour of that Presbytery, or any member thereof, that it was in any thing offensive, either in their personal walk or doctrine, or in the exercise of any part of their ministerial office, or in the exercise of Church discipline in Kirk-Sessions or in the Presbytery. These, and such like things, the moderator doth not only inquire in general of the whole Synod, but he doth more particularly inquire by name at some of the brethren of the Presbyteries next adjacent to the removed Presbytery.

6. At this time it is usual and proper to the Synod to call for the committee's report, which was appointed for the revising the register of that Presbytery, inquiring at the moderator of that committee what they have observed censurable in their book or register? What is not recorded which should have been inserted? What is recorded which is irregular or unsuitable?

7. According as the Synod finds these reports, so their moderator doth behave to the Presbytery when called in; if nothing but a savoury report of it, and of their diligence, faithfulness, and harmony, amongst themselves, and successfulness in the work of the Gospel, then the moderator doth, in the Synod's name, encourage and commend them, bless God on their account, and exhort them to go on in their Master's service.

8. If there hath been any thing informed which is any way amiss, the moderator doth inform the Presbytery called in thereof; and if it be any thing alleged to have been done in or by the Presbytery itself, then the moderator of that Presbytery useth to answer, informing the Synod of that affair, which, if it take off the accusation, the Synod rests satisfied.

9. But if the Synod do not rest satisfied, then, after a full hearing, the Synod gives their opinion and orders to that Presbytery, as the case requires.

10. If the accusation concern any particular member of the Presbytery or session, then the moderator of the Synod doth inform the Presbytery thereof; and the moderator of the Presbytery having given an answer, showing their diligence in it, or ignorance of it, do receive the Synod's advice and instructions how to behave themselves.

11. Here, likewise, in this case, first, the person accused hath liberty and occasion to answer for himself, though the case be not taken by the Synod to be determined, but only inquired into, that thereby they may know what care the Presbytery has taken therein.

12. At their privy censures, likewise, the minutes of the former Synod's censures of that Presbytery are to be read, thereby to see if any thing was committed to them, and their diligence called for.

13. The moderator of the Synod doth likewise inquire at the Presbytery called concerning the state of that Presbytery—what vacancies are therein—what diligence they are using to get them supplied—what difficulties the Presbyteries meet with in their endeavours to plant church vacancies;—how frequent the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is administered in the congregations in their bounds—and what bursars of theology they do entertain—how the acts and orders of the Assemblies, especially of the immediately preceding General Assembly, are put in execution—what number of Papists or other heretics are in their bounds, and what means are used to suppress and prevent the same—what discipline is exercised against profaneness and scandalous persons, especially those of any note and quality? and such like questions; and according as the censures are, so the Synod doth either commend, advise, admonish, or rebuke and censure.

14. After the first Presbytery hath passed their censure, and they set in their places, then the next, and so round, every Presbytery is removed, the rest judging and censuring.

SECT. 8.—Of the Closing of the Synod.

1. All affairs which lie before the Synod being considered, before they dissolve they take notice of the attendance of those sent by them to attend other Synods, and of correspondents from other Synods to them, and makes choice of persons to correspond again with other Synods; and then the whole minutes of all the sederunts of that Synod are read, and the moderator ordered to see that the clerk fairly record their acts and proceedings in the register, which the moderator is to sign, and the clerk likewise, and the same ordered to be presented to the next General Assembly, according to the 11th Act of the General Assembly, 1698.

2. Then the Synod doth nominate and appoint the time and place of meeting to the next Synod.

3. The roll of all the absentees are marked and recorded, in order to be censured by the next Synod.

4. The moderator doth close the Synod with solemn prayer and thanksgiving.

CHAPTER V.

OF THE PROCEEDINGS AND METHODS IN GENERAL ASSEMBLIES.

SECT. 1.—Of the Constitution and Opening of this Judicatory.

1. The General Assembly is a judicatory superior immediately to all Synods, and, being National, is the supreme ecclesiastical judicatory in this National Church.

2. The time and place of meeting of the General Assembly is such as was appointed by the former, except when they meet pro re nata, or that the supreme magistrate do call the same to consult therewith.

3. This judicatory is constituted of ministers and elders delegated from each Presbytery within the Church, each Presbytery being allowed to commission two, three, four, or more, proportionally to the largeness of the Presbytery, so that they delegate not less than a sixth part, nor more than a fifth part of the ministry, according to the 5th Act of the General Assembly, 1694.

4. Each of the universities of the kingdom used to commission one of the professors or members of their university, being either a minister or ruling elder, who is thereby likewise a member of the Assembly.

5. The day before the Assembly meet, the commissioners nominated are to give in their commissions to the clerk of the Assembly, that thereby the roll of the members may be drawn up against the time they meet, according to the 8th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1698.

6. The day of meeting being come, the members being met, the moderator of the last Assembly doth preach to the Assembly a sermon suited to the occasion, after which he doth from the pulpit intimate to the members of the Assembly to repair to the Assembly-House.

7. When the members of the Assembly are met in the Assembly-House, the last moderator doth take the chair, and open the Assembly with prayer.

8. After prayer, the moderator ordereth the clerk to call the rolls, and begins with the Synod which in the former Assembly was called in the second place, leaving the Synod which was then first called now last, by which rotation the equality is better preserved.

9. At the calling of each Presbytery the commission is read, and in case there be any difficulty in any commission, or controversy concerning it, it is referred to a committee of controverted commissions to try and report.

10. Their commissions being read, their next work is to choose a moderator, which they fall to do immediately that same session, if some particular contingent reason move them not to delay.

11. The moderator is chosen out of a leet made up by the old moderator, naming three of the Assembly, with freedom to any member of the Assembly to add if the Assembly think fit.

12. When the leet is agreed to, those named in it are removed, and as they remove, do give their votes in election of some one or other of those upon the leet.

13. The votes being carefully marked, on whom by majority of votes the election doth fall, he is declared moderator; and he and the others being called in, the old moderator doth declare the minister chosen to be moderator, and calling him to the chair, he doth immediately take his place.

14. The new moderator being now in the chair, his first work is to mind the Assembly to choose a clerk, if there be not a fixed one; and then to choose their committees, which useth to be done that same first session, especially the committee for overtures, and another for bills, references, and appeals.

15. It hath been the laudable custom of the Assemblies at their first sederunt to set apart the next day for prayer in the Assembly-House, for a blessing on their meeting and actings, and to adjourn the Assembly for two or three days, that both prayer may be gone about, and committees may sit, in the meantime, to prepare the work for the Assembly.

16. In adjourning the Assembly from one session to another, it should always be done so as that time may be allowed for committees to meet to prepare business for the Assembly, that no session be without work prepared for them.

17. The moderator, before the rising of the Assembly, doth not only intimate the time of the meeting of the next Assembly, but likewise of the several public committees, and the beadle or officers do publish the same at the door of the Assembly-House.

SECT. 2.—Of the Committees of the General Assembly.

1. The General Assembly consisting of so great a body of members, and the affairs which come before them being of the greatest and most universal concern to the whole Church, makes committees very necessary.

2. And though committees have no negative over the Assembly, yet no business ought to come in directly to the Assembly till it be proposed to and prepared by some committee to whom it properly belongs.

3. The ordinary committees used in Assemblies are, 1. The Committee for Overtures; 2. The Committee for References, Bills, and Appeals; 3. The Committee for Elections and Commissions; 4. The Committees for Revising Synod Books and Registers, and of Commissions of General Assemblies; 5. A Committee for Censuring of Absentees, and nominating Ministers to preach before the King or Queen's Commissioner if present.

4. The moderator of the Assembly is always moderator of the Committee of Overtures, and the principal clerk of the Assembly doth attend it; and the other committees doth choose their moderator and clerk, but the sub-clerk of the General Assembly doth attend the Committee for Bills, &c.

5. As the Assembly finds its business, so it may, for dispatch of the same, commit the preparing of any particular affair to a new committee to be appointed by the Assembly, and that sometimes even after the business hath been tabled before the Assembly by some committee, when the Assembly finds difficulty therein.

6. And likewise, any committee of the Assembly may sub-commit any overture or affair which comes before them to a few of their own number, to prepare it for their own more easy consideration and preparation of it for the Assembly.

7. It is very reasonable and frequent in important and difficult cases for the Assembly, after they have first heard an affair brought before them from a committee, to remit it back to the same committee, and to desire any of their members, who are diffculted as to their judgment therein, to repair to that committee, that they may there debate the matter freely, with less danger and more decorum, than to altercate and debate in plain Assembly.

8. As the judgment and opinion of a committee which they may propose in any affair they prepare for the Assembly, is nowise to preclude the Assembly from its full freedom, so it doth not even tie up the votes and judgments of those members of the committee who voted for giving such opinion to the Assembly, to continue in the same sentiments, if the reasonings in plain Assembly do convince them to be of another mind, seeing they may receive further and new light, and walk conform thereunto.

9. All committees of Assemblies are to consist of members of several Synods, and in the more numerous committees some out of every Synod.

10. All committees of Assemblies are to consist both of ministers and ruling elders.

11. All reports from committees are to be given in to the Assembly in writing.

SECT. 3.—Of the Proceedings in the Committee of Overtures.

1. This being the most considerable committee of the Assembly, some of the most prudent members fittest for foresight and deliberation of what is fit to be brought to the Church as an act, rule, and constitution, are to be nominated in this committee.

2. The first work of this committee, in ordinary, ought to be the inquiry into the opinion and judgment of the several Presbyteries, as to what passed in the last preceding Assembly as to overtures, that thereby the several Presbyteries of the Church might have opportunity to consider ripely of the same, and send their opinion to the Assembly.

3. If this committee find they have not sufficient information from their own members, which useth to be one at least from every Presbytery in the Church, the committee is to call for more members out of every Presbytery, thereby to know exactly the sentiments of the Presbyteries as to those overtures passed in the last preceding Assembly.

4. If this committee find the plurality of the Presbyteries against any of the overtures passed by the former Assembly, the committee cannot prepare that overture to the Assembly, to be by them passed as a binding rule and constitution to the Church. See the 9th Act of the General Assembly, 1697.

5. But if this committee, by the opinion of the Presbyteries sent by their commissioners, find light how to solve their objections, or to explain or alter the overtures made, so as it may appear to them that the overture may pass when amended, and the matter seem of weight and use, this committee may prepare the same to the Assembly as a new overture, to be by them passed and transmitted again to the several Presbyteries for their consideration.

6. If the committee in this inquiry find that many Presbyteries have neglected to take under their consideration these overtures made the last Assembly, that is not to hinder the committee to proceed in preparing these overtures into acts, to be considered and passed in the Assembly; and if the committee shall find those Presbyteries who took the same under their consideration to be for them, and that the major part of the Presbyteries be for it, they are to report the same, but the number of members of each Presbytery should be seriously considered.

7. If the committee in this inquiry find the smaller number of the Presbyteries who have considered the overtures to be against passing of the same, though the committee thereby are not bound to sist from preparing the same into acts, yet they should and ought deliberately to consider the weight of the reasons which induced these (though smaller) number of Presbyteries to be against the overtures, which may induce them likewise to lay aside thoughts of the same.

8. It belongs likewise to this committee to consider all overtures for new acts and rules to be brought in before them by any Presbytery, or other particular persons, and to prepare the same for the Assembly as overtures.

9. It belongs also to this committee to make inquiry how the acts of former Assemblies have been obeyed and put in practice, and to make overtures thereanent.

10. It belongs to this committee to hear and consider the general grievances of the Church, and to propose to the Assembly remedies for the same.

11. And in effect, the state of the Church is under the consideration of this Committee, and what is fit to be done by the Assembly, in order to the advantage of the Gospel, is to be by this committee proposed to the Assembly.

SECT. 4.—Of the Proceedings of the Committees for Bills, References, and Appeals.

1. This committee being very considerable, some of the most prudent members, fittest for discipline, and most accurate in the punctual exercises thereof, and known in all the forms of proceeding, are to be nominated on this committee.

2. This committee makes no work to themselves, but only receives all references or appeals, or petitions, and bills directed to the Assembly.

3. These references come properly from the several Synods, whether for advice or of a process for decision; in managing and preparing whereof, this committee are to act as hath been directed in the Committee of Bills in Synods, in relation to other references from Presbyteries, Chap. IV. Sect. 4.

4. And such likewise should be this committee's method in preparing appeals, which most properly come from Synods to the Assemblies, as is there directed.

5. But as appeals are allowed from a Presbytery to a General Assembly, in case it fall out to meet before the next Synod of that bounds, so references may be admitted to the General Assembly from the Presbytery, in the same case of the Assembly's intervening.

6. Yet neither appeal nor reference from a kirk-session to an Assembly, per saltum, is to be admitted.

7. This committee uses to cause enrol affairs and to consider the same, according to the order of tabling thereof, (except in some extraordinary cases;) which is a great ease to those concerned, and prevents debates anent preference in discussing affairs; and, besides, it frees parties of much needless attendance.

8. As the committee in Synods, so much more in Assemblies, ought to study to lop off all unnecessary business from the Assembly, which they may do when they find either some gross escape in bringing the affair to the Assembly, or of no need, use, or advantage to bring the business to public, by dealing with the parties concerned to let it fall, and to satisfy them privately in the committee; but if those concerned will not be persuaded to lay it aside, the committee should transmit the same with their opinion to the General Assembly.

9. This method will have frequent success in laying by many idle, impertinent bills, petitions, and addresses to Assemblies, which, if publicly read, would necessitate the Assembly to inflict censures on the addressers, and which is therefore better prevented.

10. In petitions and addresses it may facilitate the Assembly's work, and nowise impeach upon their freedom, for this committee to give their opinion what answer the same should have; and either hint the reason of their opinion in the written report the committee makes, or for their moderator to show the same to the Assembly speedily to give them light.

11. When this committee hath prepared any affair to the Assembly, it is the part of the moderator, or clerk of the committee, to acquaint the Moderator of the Assembly thereof, before it be brought in plain Assembly; and all processes or other papers to be considered by the General Assembly, should be delivered to the clerk in the intervals betwixt the diets of the Assembly's meeting, according to the 7th act of the General Assembly, 1694.

SECT. 5.—Of the Proceedings of the Committees for Synod Books, and the Commissions of former Assemblies.

1. It being a part of the General Assembly's work to visit Synod books, the Assembly useth in the beginning to call for these books from the commissioners of the Presbyteries in the bounds of the said Synods, and appoint a committee of some few brethren out of other Synods to revise the several books.

2. These Committees are carefully to observe the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th directions given to the committees of Synods for revising Presbytery books, Chap. IV. Sect. 5.

3. And the General Assembly being the greater and more solemn judicatory, these committees are to be more cautious as to what they bring publicly before the Assembly of their animadversions; imprudent publishing whereof, in any thing which may be otherwise remedied, being always prejudicial to the Church; and, therefore, the members of the Synod to whom the work belongs, moderator and clerk, or such of them as can be had, should be present at the revising of their book, or at least heard as to any remarks that may be made, before the same be brought into the General Assembly.

4. Seeing there can be no private censures of Synods in a General Assembly, the commissioners being from Presbyteries, not Synods; and that only a small number of the members of a Synod are present, these committees may bring in their report so soon as they are ready to the Assembly, and not leave them all to the close of the Assembly.

5. It is likewise a part of an Assembly's work for revising of the records of the commissioners appointed by the former Assembly; or of any other Assembly not yet approved, and that committee is to proceed as the other above committee, taking still the more narrow inspection, as they are of more universal concern and greater weight.

SECT. 6.—Of the General Assembly's Methods of Proceedings.

1. The General Assembly being constituted, and its committees having prepared the work for it, they fall to prosecute the same in full Assembly, whereof the Moderator doth first give an account of what the Committee of Overtures have prepared for the Assembly.

2. Yet so, as likewise daily bills and processes, prepared by the Committee of Bills, and affairs from other committees, may be called for, and brought in according to the weight and necessity of these affairs, and conveniency of the Assembly.

3. When any thing is proposed by the Committee of Overtures, in order to its being made an act, rule, and constitution of the Church, the Assembly uses deliberately to weigh and reason the equity, conveniency, and expediency of the proposal.

4. If the Assembly be clear in these, it is to be considered whether any former Assembly hath determined any thing concerning that matter, and if there be any act already made, then it is not only needless but inconvenient to multiply acts.

5. Yet so, that if the acts be obsolete, the renewing thereof, with any new amendment or addition, may be proper for the consideration of the Assembly.

6. In renewing any act of the former Assemblies, the Assembly is duly to consider the circumstances of the Church at the time when it was made, which may be called for the act in that dress in which it passed; and if the present circumstances of the Church do not quadrate with the former, the act, if it be found necessary to be revived, is to be renewed in such a manner as may best suit the present exigency and juncture.

7. Due consideration of all the circumstances of the Church, and ordering all their acts, with a reference thereunto, is absolutely necessary for a faithful and prudent Assembly, and will require alterations in methods and rules of prudence, without any imputation of unfaithful receding from the commendable practice of predecessors.

8. What is proposed in the form of an act from the Committee of Overtures is to be considered by the Assembly, and that not only whether it be reasonable or not, but whether it was proposed and passed by the former Assembly as an overture, and by them committed to the consideration of the several Presbyteries of this Church.

9. And if it was remitted or not, the Assembly is not only to inquire if the Committee of Overtures did distinctly try at the brethren of all the different Presbyteries of the Church what their Presbyteries' opinion was therein; but though the committee hath done that, yet the Assembly is at least to give leave and opportunity to the commissioners from any Presbytery to inform the Assembly of the judgment of their Presbytery in the affair.

10. In the Assembly's making the calcula whether the more general opinion of all the Presbyteries hath been for the overtures passing into an act, no other consideration is to be had of those Presbyteries who neglected to consider the overture at all, or to instruct their commissioners thereanent, than to look on them as non liquets; and so, likewise, in case any Presbytery do not send their commissioners to the Assembly, or that they be not present.

11. When the Assembly hath made the computation, that it find that the plurality of the Presbyteries, who have taken the overtures under consideration, do relish the same, yet if any considerable number of Presbyteries do not only not relish it, but if some of them be stiff and peremptory in their dislike or refusal, the Assembly is wisely to consider whether the grieving a fewer number of Presbyteries may not be more prejudicial to the Church than the pleasing a greater number, and rather delay the passing an act that may be grievous to some.

12. And this is to have the greater weight if the overture desired to be made an act may without considerable prejudice be delayed, and that the Assembly find that those Presbyteries who are reluctant be unclear in point of light; an Assembly being always called to be compassionate to tender consciences.

13. Though the Assembly find no such difficulty from the opinion Presbyteries generally give, yet it is to be considered if any encroachment hath arisen, or be by any proposed, which hath not occurred to the several Presbyteries, if it be found to be material, the act is to be delayed or laid aside, though they have the consent of the several Presbyteries to pass it.

14. That even albeit the instructions of the commissioners from the several Presbyteries be to pass the overtures, yet these instructions, which are negative, are to have greater weight with commissioners than those that are positive; and commissioners in this are to walk according to their own light, their votes being personal.

15. Though no such difficulties do occur on the reading of the act, or be by any proposed, yet the Assembly should, for the greater solemnity, and to evidence the full deliberation, after reading one day, let the act proposed and debated lie on the table till another sederunt, according to the 16th act of the General Assembly, 1700, that nothing of precipitation may be alleged in the Assembly's exercise of their power.

16. If the act pass nemine contradicente, that unanimity is to be marked and recorded by the clerk.

17. No such act is to pass without a solemn and distinct vote, by calling the full roll of the Assembly.

18. If an overture be proposed to be transmitted to the several Presbyteries, the Assembly is to take it under their serious consideration, and to deliberate upon it with the same concern as if it were to pass for a standing and binding rule, and that the rather, because, when once an overture is passed in an Assembly, it will be reputed to be in some measure the judgment of the Church, and the Church will meet with the same reflections as if it were made an act.

19. In considering these overtures, the Assembly should make them as complete and clothed with all the provisions, limitations, explications, or restrictions, that they would desire the act itself to have, that after it hath been remitted to the consideration of the several Presbyteries, and returned approved to the ensuing Assembly, it may not be found in any part defective, and therefore tempt that Assembly either to lay it wholly aside or add some new thing to it, which had not been remitted to the consideration of the Presbyteries, which is always to be carefully seen to.

20. These overtures passed in the Assembly are always to be printed, that thereby they may be published, and in the title to bear not only the title they are to bear when acts, drawn from the subject-matter, but that they are overtures remitted to be considered by Presbyteries.

21. It may fall out that overtures are made in an Assembly that come not from the Committee of Overtures, as when an overture hath been made in the Committee of Overtures, and by them rejected, and yet the proposers resolve to know the Assembly's mind thereanent, or when any member, on occasion of any affair which lieth before the Assembly, doth, when it occurreth, mention a new overture as relating to the subject in hand. In this last case the Assembly ought to remit it to the consideration of the Committee for Overtures without any farther debate about it.

22. But if the former fall out, the Moderator of the Assembly, upon the overtures being proposed which were rejected in the committee, is to give account of the reasons which moved the committee so to do, which, if they satisfy the Assembly, the proposer is to acquiesce, but if they do not satisfy, and that any member of the Assembly second the overture, it is to be maturely weighed.

23. Though no committee have a negative, yet the Assembly in this case will find it fit to remit the farther consideration and preparation of that overture for the Assembly, either to the Committee of Overtures, or to a particular committee whom for that end they may appoint.

24. The Assembly, in their proceeding concerning any process which is brought from the Committee of Bills, doth follow the same method which Synods take, Chap. V. Sect. 6; and so likewise they may do when the process comes by a reference, as is directed in that same section.

25. The Assembly will sometimes, on occasion of any complaint of the remiss execution of any act of former Assemblies, find it sufficient that the moderator, in the name of the Assembly, do exhort all to amend what is neglected, without making any new act thereanent, unless what is complained of be growing and of dangerous consequence.

26. If acts be neglected, and growing to a disuse, that danger is both to be prevented and remedied by fortifying the former, not only by a renewal, but by adding more severe censures.

27. A General Assembly may have business frequently laid before them by the King or Queen, either communicated to them by the King or Queen themselves, or by a letter, or by their High Commissioner, representing their royal person and authority in the Assembly.

28. If by a letter, which is to be opened and read with all honour and respect in plain Assembly, and then the Assembly uses to remit the consideration or answering of the same to the Committee of Overtures, or to nominate a particular committee for that effect, which usually brings in a draught thereof to the Committee for Overtures, and they use to prepare it farther, and transmit it to the General Assembly.

29. When the committee brings in the draught of an answer to the King's or Queen's letter to the Assembly, it is there considered and amended, if need be, and, being passed by a vote, is signed in plain Assembly by the Moderator in their presence and name, and at their appointment, and this as soon as can be.

30. If, on the consideration of the said letter, the Committee of Overtures bring in any overtures in answer to the contents of that letter, they are considered by the Assembly ut supra.

31. And so, likewise, are any affairs which are laid before the Assembly by the supreme magistrate, or the High Commissioner.

32. And it falleth out frequently that letters from other persons or judicatories, and sometimes from foreign churches or divines, doth furnish work for the Assembly's consideration, which are all to be suitably pondered and discussed.

33. The Assembly hath likewise frequent occasions to address and make representations, and give several recommendations to the King or Queen, and some civil judicatories, and those in the government.

34. In these and all other their actings the Assembly are to be very exact and cautious, and keep within their own proper sphere, not meddling with things that do not belong to them in an ecclesiastical manner.

SECT. 7.—Of the Commissions appointed by General Assemblies.

1. It is very ordinary for Assemblies to find a necessity to remit several processes which come before them to a Commission, either for their weight craving greater time to deliberate, or because of some circumstance in the affair requiring some delay, or because the Assembly find it not convenient to stay together so long as to overtake them all. But it should be considered, if it may not be more expedient, that the Assembly determine in cases of appeals from Synods where they have been unanimous in their sentence, than to refer the final decision to a Commission, who may be of a smaller number than the Synod.

2. The Commissioners of the General Assembly can never have the power of the Assembly lodged in them, as to making acts, in any case, though they may have the ripening and preparing of rules and constitutions for an ensuing Assembly.

3. It is frequent that they have the ultimate and final determination of processes for transportation of ministers, for censures, or such like, communicated to them from the Assembly, and from whose sentence in these there is no appeal to the ensuing Assembly, though a complaint may be tabled before the next Assembly, against the Commission's proceedings, for which the Commission may be censured, if the Assembly find they deserve it.

4. All such Commissions ought to consist of ministers and elders, not only out of the different parts and Synods of the Church, but some out of every Presbytery, that there may be no ground of complaint, that some parts of the Church are not represented therein.

5. These Commissions use to be ordered to meet monthly, both for dispatch of affairs, and likewise ne quid detrimenti Ecclesia capiat, or any emergency, yet so as the more weighty and considerable business use to be delayed till their quarterly meetings; and it is generally thought fit that their power continue till the meeting of the ensuing Assembly. And no Commission ought or can be granted by an Assembly to continue any longer than till the meeting of the next Assembly.

6. The Commission of the General Assembly is always not only to be subject to the censure of the next ensuing Assembly, but likewise the proceedings and register of their actings are to be cognosed by a committee of the ensuing Assembly, that upon their report, the Assembly may approve or annul their actings, though no particular complaint be made by any person lesed by them.

7. The Commission, in affairs committed to them for decision, are to proceed in the same method and way which Assemblies take in trying and judging any affair.

8. It is the frequent work of Commissions to take care to see that due regard be had, and obedience given, to the actings and resolutions of the former Assemblies, particularly the last.

9. They are frequently required to give advice, and sometimes assistance to Synods and Presbyteries, in urgent and difficult cases, and sometimes for that end, to send some of their number to several parts of the Church, as they are allowed to do by the Assembly who did commission them.

10. If the Assembly do not appoint their moderator and clerk to attend them in these stations, they may nominate their own moderator and clerk.

11. All such Commissions are to be diligent and careful to keep within the bounds of their Commissions, though sometimes, on extraordinary occasions, they have given advice, or done some act of necessity for the present good of the Church, and which could admit no delay, which an ensuing Assembly hath approved of.

12. But herein Commissions should take care and be sure that it be in materia necessaria, and that their resolution be clearly the known mind of the Church; and that therein they take all the advice they can get of their brethren, and judicatories of the Church, though not of their number.

SECT. 8.—Of the Closing of the General Assembly.

1. All the affairs which the Assembly could overtake being brought to a close, some few brethren are to be nominated to assist the moderator and clerk in revising the minutes and proceedings of that Assembly, before the same be recorded in their registers, and to determine what of their acts are fit to be printed, and to give orders thereanent; and then the moderator causeth read the minutes of the last sederunt, which being done, he may discourse to the Assembly concerning the good Providence of God, that brought them together, and in allowing them the countenance and protection of the supreme magistrate, and this he is to signify the Assembly's sense of, and then the moderator is to exhort the brethren to faithfulness, loyalty, and diligence in their station, and such like.

2. The moderator having understood the mind of the Assembly, as to the particular time and place of the next Assembly's meeting, he doth, in their name, represent the same to the King or Queen, or their Commissioner, if present, and, upon their agreeing thereto, it is to be recorded by the Assembly's order.

3. Then the moderator closeth the Assembly with solemn prayer, singing of Psalms, and pronouncing of the blessing.

THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AND BEGUN AT EDINBURGH, MARCH 29, 1705.

I.

Sess. 1, March 29, 1705.—The Queen's Commission to William Marquis of Annandale, produced and ordered to be Recorded.

The General Assembly of the ministers and ruling elders of this National Church, being convened and constituted, there was produced to them by the Right Honourable

William Marquis of Annandale, principal Secretary of State, her Majesty's commission, under the Great Seal of this kingdom, appointing him her Majesty's High Commissioner and representative in this National Assembly; which commission being publicly read with all due honour and respect, the General Assembly ordained the same to be recorded in their registers, the tenor whereof follows:—"ANNA," &c.

II.

Eadem Sessione.—Her Majesty's gracious Letter to the General Assembly.

Her Majesty's High Commissioner presented the Queen's most gracious letter directed to this General Assembly, which was publicly read with all due honour and respect, and is appointed to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, the tenor whereof follows:—

ANNE, R.

Right Reverend and well-beloved,

We greet you well. We are very well satisfied with the accounts we have had of the dutiful and moderate proceedings of former Assemblies, and, therefore, we do most willingly countenance your meeting at this time. We doubt not but you will improve this opportunity for promoting of piety and religion, discouraging vice and immorality, and preserving good order in the Church, in all which you shall have our hearty concurrence.

We do earnestly recommend to your care the planting of the vacant Churches with pious and learned ministers, especially in the Highlands and Islands. And it will be worthy of your serious consideration, to make a right distribution of those libraries which have been so piously mortified for the Churches in those parts. We have ordered the charges of transporting them to be paid out of our Treasury, and nothing shall be wanting on our part for encouraging so pious a design. We have appointed our right trusty and entirely beloved cousin and councillor, William Marquis of Annandale, to represent our royal person in this Assembly, whose abilities and fitness to discharge this trust will (we doubt not) render him acceptable to you. Him we have fully instructed in what may be further necessary; and, therefore, you may give him entire trust and credit. We doubt not but you will proceed with your usual moderation and unanimity; and assuring you of our firm resolutions to maintain the established government of the Church, we bid you heartily farewell.

Given at our Court at St James's, the 9th day of March 1705, and of our reign the 4th year.

By her Majesty's Command,

SEAFIELD.

Directed—To the Right Reverend the Moderator, Ministers and Elders, of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

III.

Sess. 3, March 31, 1705.—The General Assembly's Answer to the Queen's gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

We have received with all thankful acknowledgments the expressions your Majesty is pleased to make in your gracious letter, of your satisfaction with the proceedings of our former Assemblies, and the assurance you give us of your royal favour and countenance in our present meeting, which do not only oblige us, but we trust, through the blessing of God, shall enable us to improve this opportunity for the great and good ends proposed.

Your Majesty's zealous concern for the promoting of piety, and the preserving and securing of the true Protestant religion every where, and even to all after ages, with your royal care to discourage vice and immorality, will be the perpetual glory of your reign and memory; so that we cannot but in our station, and by the means proper for us, with all sincerity, and in obedience to our great Lord and Master, endeavour to follow so great an example, and, for that end, to preserve in this Church the good order to which your Majesty is pleased to promise us your hearty concurrence.

We shall observe your Majesty's recommendation for planting of vacant Churches, especially in the Highlands and Islands, with learned and pious ministers; not doubting but that your Majesty will continue the encouragement that hitherto you have given us in that work, by contributing to the building and reparation of Churches, and settling legal provisions where the same are found wanting; nor shall we be less careful of the right distribution of those libraries which have been so piously mortified for the use of this Church, and which your Majesty so graciously promises to assist.

The choice your Majesty hath been pleased to make of the Marquis of Annandale to represent your royal person in this Assembly, after the experience we have had both of his sufficiency and fidelity to your Majesty, and his good affection toward this Church, is not only to us most acceptable, but a very particular and obliging proof of your Majesty's regard to all our concerns, which do most especially oblige us to give him that trust and credit which your Majesty requires.

Your Majesty having been pleased to give us all assurances of your firm resolution to maintain the established government of this Church, we shall ever study to testify our grateful sense of the same, and shall observe that moderation and unanimity your Majesty expects.

That God may long preserve your Majesty for the good of all your people, the maintaining of the true Protestant religion, and the protection and comfort of all the Churches of Christ, and that he may still prosper your arms against all your enemies, specially that grand enemy both of religion and righteousness, who supports an usurper against your Majesty, and would impose upon us a Popish successor, to the subversion of our holy religion, and the ruin of this your ancient kingdom, and that a Protestant may always sit on the throne, which (we bless God) your Majesty expresses so much concern for, shall be the earnest and constant prayer of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Signed in our presence, in our name, and at our appointment, by

W. CARSTAIRS, Moderator.

Sess. 6, April 4, 1705, post meridiem.—Act concerning the Method and Form of Procedure of Judicatories of the Church against Scandalous Persons.

With respect to scandals, the grossness whereof makes it necessary to bring the persons guilty oftener than once before the congregation, the General Assembly does hereby appoint and ordain, that after such persons are convicted before the Session, it be judicially declared to them, that they have rendered themselves incapable of communion with the people of God in sealing ordinances, and that they be appointed to appear in public to be rebuked for their sin, whether they appear penitent or not, conform to the institution, 1 Tim. v. 20. And it is hereby referred to the respective judicatories of the Church concerned, to determine how often such delinquents shall appear in public, as they shall find it to tend most for edification; and the General Assembly ordains, that after a public rebuke, the ministers and elders be at farther pains in instructing the minds of the scandalous persons, if ignorant, in endeavouring to convince their consciences, and to bring them to a due sense of their sin, and to an engagement and serious resolution against all known sin, and to the performance of all known duty; and that the Session, upon satisfaction with their knowledge and sense of their sin, do admit them to the public profession of their repentance, in order to absolution; but if, after taking pains on them for some competent time for their instruction and conviction, they still remain grossly ignorant, insensible, and unreformed, the ministers and elders are to advise with the Presbytery of the bounds, and if the Presbytery shall see cause, that then the sentence of lesser excommunication be publicly pronounced against them in face of the congregation, from which they are not to be relaxed, nor admitted to make public profession of their repentance in order thereto, till the Session be satisfied with their knowledge, seriousness, and reformation. And, lastly, the General Assembly ordains, that the names of such as are under the foresaid censure of lesser excommunication be publicly read out the Lord's day immediately preceding that upon which the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is to be administered.

Sess. 7, April 5, 1705, post meridiem.—Act concerning Schools and Bursaries, and for Instructing Youth in the Principles of Religion.

The General Assembly, considering how much it will tend to the increase of Christian knowledge and learning, and the advantage of true piety and religion, that schools and colleges be duly regulated, and bursaries rightly bestowed; do therefore appoint and ordain, that ministers take care to have schools erected in every parish, conform to the acts of Parliament, for teaching of youth to read English, that the poor be taught upon charity, and that none be suffered to neglect the teaching of their children to read; and suchlike, that in no parish the minister recommend youth to be taught Latin upon charity in any grammar school; but after examining the said child or children in presence of three or four members of the Session, as to their promptitude and dexterity in reading and competent skill in writing, as to their virtuous inclinations, and as to the hopefulness of their proficiency, and that none be received in grammar schools to be taught Latin upon charity, but upon such recommendations; and also, that each Presbytery appoint a committee of their number yearly to examine the poor scholars in the grammar schools, and such within their bounds as go to colleges with an eye to bursaries, and suffer none to proceed but such as are very forward and good proficient and of good behaviour, and that ministers recommend none to bursaries but such as are so qualified; and the General Assembly does hereby recommend to regents and masters of colleges, that no person, especially bursars, be laureated, but upon a clear evidence of sufficiency of their learning and good behaviour after strict examination. And suchlike, recommends it to masters in universities, and all other instructors of youth, that they be careful to instruct their scholars in the principles of the Christian reformed religion, according to the holy Scriptures, our Confession of Faith, or such books only as are entirely agreeable thereto. As also, recommends it to professors of theology, that they take very particular notice of the piety and Christian carriage of their students, and that their testimonials to Presbyteries for entering men on trials for the ministry, bear their knowledge of the persons recommended, as to their moral and pious carriage, as to their progress in their studies and their promising parts, and of their good affection to the government of Church and State, and that the professor does truly judge the person fit for the service of the Church, and Presbyteries are enjoined to receive none upon testimonials from professors but who are so attested.

VI.

Sess. 7, April 5, 1705, post meridiem.—Act concerning the Regulation of the Commissions of the General Assemblies, and the Attendance of Members thereon.

The General Assembly, having heard and considered the opinions of the several Presbyteries, in relation to the regulating of the Commissions of the General Assemblies, returned to them in obedience to the 16th Act of the last Assembly, did, in pursuance thereof, after full reasoning and mature deliberation, agree as follows, viz.:—The General Assembly, considering how much it concerns the good of the Church, that any commissions which may be found needful to be granted by this and subsequent General Assemblies be duly regulated; do, therefore, appoint and ordain, that in time coming the whole Presbyteries of this National Church be equally represented in Commissions, and that their representation be proportional to the number of ministers that are in each Presbytery, the old ministers who were ordained before the year 1662 being always supernumerary; and suchlike, that two or three of the members of the General Assembly in each Synod be appointed as a committee to name the members of the Commission, and that the whole representatives of Presbyteries in the several Synods at the Assembly do meet by themselves, and name their respective members of the said committee; and it is hereby declared, that it shall be free to any member of the Assembly to attend the said committee if they think fit. And the General Assembly does appoint the expenses of the said commissioners to be borne and defrayed by the several Presbyteries which they represent, according to the number of the days of their attendance, and that their Presbyteries take care to supply their charges with preaching during their absence, upon the account foresaid; and that such as shall be absent from the said Commissions, or diets of the same, without a reasonable excuse, represented to and admitted by the Commission, be censured by their respective Synods; and that the Clerk of the Commission send lists of these absentees to the several Synods for that end, according to the 6th Act of the General Assembly, held in the year 1703.

VII.

Sess. 10, April 9, 1705, ante meridiem.—Sentence of Deposition against Mr John Hepburn.

The General Assembly took into their serious consideration the libel raised at the instance of John Blair, agent for the Kirk, against Mr John Hepburn, minister of the Gospel, before the Commission of the late General Assembly, and by them referred to this Assembly—his confessions of the chief articles thereof, contained in his answers subscribed with his hand—his judicial acknowledgments before the said Commission—all which were read before this Assembly; as also, his judicial acknowledgments before this Assembly: And, in particular, finding that he asserted that communicating with persons scandalous made those that communicate with them guilty of unworthy communicating—that he neither has dispensed the Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper to others, nor partaken thereof himself, for more than sixteen years—that both at Galston, Fenwick, Loudon, and Calder, which are all planted parishes, he has preached, without warrant or invitation from the ministers thereof, and has baptized children in some of them without testimonials from the ministers or elders, and has also married persons in those and other places without orderly proclamation—that he did intrude into the parish of Balmaghie, after the late minister thereof, Mr John M'Millan, was deposed, and accused the Presbytery who deposed him of rashness and precipitancy in their sentence, and declared that he thought himself obliged to testify against it both by word and deed: And that he also owned, that in that same place he asserted that the Church of Scotland had gone off the foundation, and acknowledged also his intrusion in Kirkeconnel, and several other vacant parishes;—and that he also owned, that as to the substance, he said that the ministers clapped people's heads, and profaned the Sacrament, by giving it to drunkards, swearers, &c.;—and that, if they got not another religion, they and their religion would go to the bottomless pit;—he acknowledged that he called the oath of allegiance to the Queen's Majesty, as taken by ministers, a black oath, and that it was the highest act of Erastianism, and beyond other encroachments and compliances since the Revolution;—he confessed that he admitted a man belonging to another planted congregation to a public profession of repentance, and thereafter allowed him to hold up his child in baptism, and that without the sentence or concurrence of any session or other judicatory:—all which are contrary to his ordination engagements to an orderly walk. And the General Assembly, also finding that the said Mr John has been guilty of a continued tract of such erroneous, seditious, and divisive doctrines, and schismatical courses, and that he obstinately continues therein, refusing to be reclaimed, notwithstanding the long forbearance, the mild and gentle methods, and great pains that have been used by this Church in their former Assemblies and Commissions; inasmuch as he was in the year 1694 processed;—and was by the General Assembly, in the year 1696, found to deserve the highest censures of the Church; and yet, to manifest all tenderness to him, and willingness to reclaim him, that Assembly made very condescending offers to him, which he having slighted, was suspended, with certification, that if he contravened that sentence, he should be deposed;—then the General Assembly, in the year 1699, upon his application, and his professing a regard to the judicatories of this Church, his promising to confine his ministry within the parish of Orr, and to entertain a correspondence with the ministry of this Church, did take off that sentence, and enjoined him to an orderly walk, and to subjection to the judicatories of this Church;—and to correspond with the Presbyteries of Dumfries and Kirkeudbright; with certification, that not only new disorders, but even the grounds of former processes, should be led against him. All which promises Mr John Hepburn having broken, this process was raised and pursued against him before the Commission of the late Assembly, who (after near a twelvemonth's dependence, much forbearance, and many condescending offers made to him) found the libel both relevant and proven, but yet delayed sentence, and renewed their injunctions to an orderly walk, to try yet again the said Mr John his obedience and subjection to the judicatories of this Church; at length, finding all to have no effect or influence upon him, did refer the whole affair to this Assembly. The General Assembly, considering all these things, and finding that the said Mr John Hepburn continues obstinate and self-willed, and being about to proceed to a final determination in this affair, after serious and mature deliberation, parties were called in, to join in prayer to God for light and direction how to judge in this so important and weighty a matter; and prayer being ended and parties removed, the General Assembly did, by their vote, depose the said Mr John Hepburn; likeas they hereby do, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, the alone King and Head of the Church, and by virtue of the power and authority committed by him to them, actually depose the said Mr John Hepburn from the office of the holy ministry, prohibiting and discharging him to exercise the same, or any part thereof, in all time coming, under the pain of the highest censures of the Church; and appoints this sentence to be publicly intimated from the pulpit of the New Church of Edinburgh, the next Lord's Day, after the forenoon sermon, by the minister that preaches there, and afterwards, with all convenient diligence, in the Kirk of Orr, and in all the remanent churches within the bounds of the Synods of Glasgow, Galloway, and Dumfries; and ordains the Presbytery of Dumfries to declare the Kirk of Orr vacant so soon as they can; and appoints extracts hereof to be sent to the several Presbyteries of these bounds for that end: And recommends it to all the brethren present in this Assembly to intimate this sentence of deposition in their respective Synods; and parties being called in, this was intimated to them.

Sess. 11, April 9, 1705, post meridiem.—Act approving the Actings and Proceedings of the Commission of the General Assembly, anno 1704.

(The terms of this Act are similar to the corresponding Act of the preceding year.)

IX.

Sess. 12, April 10, 1705, ante meridiem.—Act against Profanation of the Lord's Day.

The General Assembly, taking into their serious consideration the great profanation of the Lord's Day, by multitudes of people walking idly upon the streets of the city of Edinburgh, Pier and Shore of Leith, in St Ann's Yards, and the Queen's Park, and in diverse places of the West Kirk parish, and on the Links of Leith, and other places, especially about Edinburgh, and that by persons of all ranks, many whereof are strangers, as the same hath been represented to them by the commissioners from the Presbytery of Edinburgh, in the name and by the appointment of that Presbytery; and considering, also, what hath been represented by several brethren anent the profanation of the Lord's Day in other places of the nation, by unnecessary travelling, and otherwise; and the General Assembly being deeply sensible of the great dishonour done to the holy God, and of the open contempt of God and man, manifested by such heaven-daring profaneness, to the exposing of the nation to the heaviest judgments; therefore, they do, in the fear of God, earnestly exhort all the reverend brethren of the ministry, and other officers of the Church, to contribute their utmost endeavours, in their stations, for suppressing such gross profanation of the Lord's Day, by a vigorous and impartial, yet prudent exercise of the discipline of the Church, and by holding hand to the execution of the laudable laws of the nation against the guilty, in such way and manner as is allowed and required by law; and because the concurrence and assistance of the civil government will be absolutely necessary for the better curbing and restraining this crying sin, the General Assembly do hereby appoint their Commission to be nominated by them to address the Right Honourable the Lords of her Majesty's Privy Council, that their Lordships may be pleased to give such orders, and take such courses for restraining those abuses, as they, in their wisdom, shall judge most effectual.

X.

Sess. 12, April 10, 1705, ante meridiem.—Recommendation concerning the Observation of the Directory for Worship.

The General Assembly hereby seriously recommends to all ministers and others within this National Church, the due observation of the Directory for the Public Worship of God, approved by the General Assembly held in the year 1645, Sess. 10.

XI.

Sess. 12, April 10, 1705, ante meridiem.—Act anent Bursaries.

It being desired by several brethren that the 13th Act of the General Assembly anno 1704, entitled, "Act for bestowing Bursaries upon Students having Irish," might be explained in these heads: 1mo, Whether by that act the one-half of the bursaries be south Tay be disposable by the respective Presbyteries, or by the Synods only? 2do, If that act reaches bursaries presently current, or only such as were vacant at the date of that act? The General Assembly, as to the first, do declare, that the disposal of all these bursaries is only in the power of the Synods, and not of the Presbyteries. And as to the second, the General Assembly leaves it to the discretion of the several Synods to order this matter as they find convenient; and, for that end, recommends it to the said Synods to take an account from their respective Presbyteries, what bursars they have in their bounds, and at what time these burses will fall vacant, and that the Presbyteries be joined two and two, for making one Lowland burse of their two halves, appointed by the foresaid act for that end; and in case there be an odd Presbytery in a Synod, that that Synod dispose of that odd Presbytery's half to such pious uses as the Synod shall think fit.

XII.

Sess. 12, April 10, 1705, ante meridiem.—Act concerning the Libraries for the Highlands, Islands, &c.

And the General Assembly does hereby empower the foresaid committee to do every thing necessary toward the management of that whole affair, which may tend most for obtaining the ends for which these libraries are designed, and that until the next General Assembly, to whom they are to be accountable; and, particularly, to cause print several copies of the rules for ordering the said libraries, agreed upon by the last Assembly, and transmit the same to the Presbyteries concerned: And seeing that besides the seventy-seven libraries above mentioned, there are some presses of books not methodized and sorted, that the said committee digest them in order, and distribute them to such places as have most need, and therein a special regard is to be had to the remote Isles; and that they cause bind such of the books as are not bound, inspect the said libraries, compare them with the catalogues, and, if they find cause, to exchange some from parochial to Presbyterial libraries; and it is hereby recommended to them, that upon arrival of these libraries, they send an account thereof to

Mr Vigerus Edwards and Andrew Bell at London, and that they write letters of thanks to the donors.

XIII.

Sess. 13, April 10, 1705, post meridiem.—Commission to some Ministers and Elders for Planting Vacant Kirks in the North, the Highlands and Islands, and other Affairs remitted to them.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration that there are yet some vacant churches on the North side of Tay, and in the Highlands and Islands, as likewise several weighty affairs which this Assembly cannot overtake; do, therefore, find it needful that there be a Commission granted to some ministers and ruling elders for planting these vacant churches, and doing what other affairs may be referred to them; and for that end, do hereby nominate, commission, and appoint their reverend brethren, Messrs William Crichton, minister at Edinburgh, &c., to be Commissioners of this General Assembly, to the effect before and after mentioned, with full power to the said persons or their quorum, which is hereby declared to be any twenty-one of the said Commissioners, whereof fifteen are always to be ministers, to meet and convene within the Assembly-House at Edinburgh, the first day after the dissolution of this Assembly, at ten hours in the forenoon, and afterwards to meet the first Wednesday of June, second Wednesday of November, and last Wednesday of March next, and oftener, when and where they shall think needful and convenient, with power to the said Commission to choose their own moderator: And suchlike, the General Assembly fully empowers and authorises their said Commissioners, or their quorum, to cognosce and finally determine as they shall see cause, in every matter referred, or that shall be referred to them, by any act or order of this Assembly, and to do every thing contained in and conform to the instructions given them by this Assembly, and likewise in all affairs referred to the Commission of the late Assembly, not as yet discussed. XVI.

Sess. 14, April 11, 1705, post meridiem.—Recommendation concerning Students of Theology, and Intrants to the holy Ministry.

The General Assembly, considering the great unity and concord that, by the blessing of God, is amongst the office-bearers in God's house, the desirable and comfortable harmony between Church and State in this kingdom, wherein the glory of God, the success of the Gospel, and the firmness of our happy establishment, are so deeply interested; and considering, likewise, that nothing can be more effectual for securing these blessings, and advancing these ends, than that the preachers of the Gospel commend themselves to God and the consciences of all men by their piety, prudence, literature, and peaceable behaviour, principles, and disposition, and good affection to the government of Church and State: Therefore, the General Assembly did, by an unanimous vote, and hereby do, seriously recommend it to the several Presbyteries of this Church to keep a watchful eye upon all students of theology, and to be careful that none be licensed to preach, or admitted to churches, but such as shall give evidence of their orthodoxy, by signing the Confession of Faith approved by former General Assemblies of this Church, and ratified by law in the year 1690, as the confession of their faith, of their good affection to the government of Church and State, of their peaceable principles and disposition, by engaging to observe good order, in conjunction with, and a due subjection to, the judicatories of this Church; and of their literature, by abiding a strict trial; and shall own the Presbyterian government of this Church to be agreeable to and founded on the Word of God; and promise never to endeavour, directly or indirectly, the prejudice or subversion thereof, according to former acts of Assembly thereanent.

XVII.

Sess. ult., April 12, 1705.—Act concerning a Solemn Fast and Humiliation.

The General Assembly, considering the great dangers which threaten the Protestant religion, both at home and abroad, the long continuance of a wasting and desolating war, and how much the safety and welfare of this Church and kingdom does depend upon the preservation of her Majesty's person and government, the conduct of her councils, and the deliberations and determinations of the ensuing session of Parliament; and considering that sin and wickedness do abound, to the provoking of the holy God against these nations, do judge it fit that a day be set apart for solemn prayer, fasting, and humiliation before the Lord, on these considerations; but seeing the same cannot be obtained through the whole nation in one day before the time appointed for the sitting down of the Parliament, and that, in regard of the season of the year, diverse parts of the country may be in different circumstances; therefore, the General Assembly does hereby seriously recommend to the several Synods and Presbyteries within this National Church at their first meeting, to consider upon the premises, and to appoint and set apart a day for solemn public prayer, fasting, and humiliation, in all the churches within their respective bounds, upon the accounts foresaid, and other reasons contained in the causes of former fasts appointed by the General Assembly and Commissions thereof, with a special regard to the present circumstances of affairs both at home and abroad; and that this may be the sooner done, and the more solemnly gone about, it is hereby recommended to the brethren present to acquaint their Synods and Presbyteries hereof as soon as they can; and the moderators of the respective Presbyteries are hereby ordained, if need be, to call the same pro re nata, as soon as these presents come to their hand, in order to their concerting the said fast. And the General Assembly recommends to the ministers to be most serious in holding forth to their people on that occasion the grievous sins of this land, and the tokens of God's displeasure because of them, expressed many ways; to exhort all ranks of people to serious repentance, reformation, and fervent prayer to God, that he would preserve her Majesty's person, direct her councils, and bless her forces by sea and land with success, in defence of the Reformed Protestant religion and the just liberties of Europe; that he would guide and direct the Parliament of this kingdom to such determinations as may be most for the advancement of religion, and the peace and welfare of these nations, and bless the season of the year. And the General Assembly appoints these presents to be printed, and copies thereof to be sent to the several ministers within the kingdom.

XVIII.

Sess. ult., April 12, 1705.—Act concerning the Buying and Observation of the Acts of the General Assembly.

The General Assembly, taking into consideration that there is a great neglect in calling for the Acts of the General Assemblies of this Church, so that the said acts not coming to Presbyteries and Sessions, they are not acquainted with what is thereby laid upon them; therefore, it is hereby recommended to the several Presbyteries and Kirk-Sessions who want the acts of former General Assemblies, to furnish themselves therewith, and appoints the agent for the Kirk in all time coming, after every Assembly, so soon as the acts thereof shall be printed, to transmit as many copies of the same to every Presbytery within the kingdom as will serve them and each parish within their bounds; and ordains that both Presbyteries and Sessions, at their first meeting after receiving the said acts, cause read the same, at least so many of them as are of public concern, and which relate to themselves, in order to their observing thereof; and all this to be upon the charges of the several Presbyteries and Sessions: And Synods are enjoined to inquire at Presbyteries how this act is observed, and cause mark their diligence thereanent in their books. And, farther, appoints the agent for the Kirk to send to the several Presbyteries some copies of the overtures lately printed, concerning the Discipline and Method of Procedure in the Judicatories of this Church. And, lastly, appoints the Commissions of the General Assembly to use their endeavours that this act be made effectual and duly observed by those concerned.

The General Assembly, to the end that ensuing Assemblies of this Church may with greater facility expedite the affairs that shall come before them, do hereby recommend to all the Presbyteries within this National Church, in their instructions to their commissioners, carefully to distinguish betwixt what they propose as overtures to be transmitted by the General Assembly to the several Presbyteries in order to their being passed into acts; and those things which are only matter of complaint, or grievances to be presently redressed, or things wherein they desire to be advised; that overtures and matters of advice may be given in to the Committee for Overtures, and the rest to the Committee for Bills, References, and Appeals, and yet in matters of weight, these two committees may advise with one another.

And the General Assembly recommends it to Presbyteries to take special care that all the schoolmasters within their bounds be such as have subscribed the Confession of Faith, and that Presbyteries do visit all the public grammar schools within their bounds by some of their number appointed for that effect, at least twice every year; and also appoints Synods, at their privy censures, to inquire at Presbyteries how they have obeyed this recommendation. The General Assembly recommends it to the respective Presbyteries in the Lowlands who are appointed to contribute for bursaries, to be bestowed on Students having the Irish language, that they pay the same punctually, conform to the Acts of Assembly thereanent.

Sess. ult. April 16, 1706.—Act concerning the Libraries, and containing some additional Instructions by the General Assembly to their Commission.

The General Assembly empowers their Commission to receive any delations or references that shall be made to them by the respective judicatories of this Church, in matters of schism and disorder, and not only to assist judicatories by their advice in such cases, but also to pass sentence and finally determine therein, as they shall see cause.

And the Commission are appointed to take care that the precepts already drawn by the preceding moderators of the Assembly, or Commission thereof, for payment of any sums out of the money gifted by her Majesty for defraying the public charges of the Church, be paid, and that, in the first place, before others that may be granted afterwards.

The Presbyteries of Edinburgh, Linlithgow, and Dalkeith, are appointed to supply one diet of preaching before the Parliament, and the Commission to supply the other diet by naming and appointing ministers out of other Presbyteries, and the Synod of Lothian and Tweeddale are to adjust the diets of the three Presbyteries above named in their bounds.

The Commission is to require a full and clear account from the committee, to whom the disposal and distribution of the libraries was recommended, anno 1705, how they have distributed the same, and from the agent, how he hath obeyed the orders of that committee anent the sending of these libraries and Irish Bibles to the respective places appointed.

And to call for an account from the respective Presbyteries of their receipt of their proportion of these Bibles and libraries, and how they have disposed of them according to the order of the General Assembly, 1705, and their said committee, and appoints the said Presbyteries to send these accounts to the commission or committee to be appointed by them for this affair, and that these accounts be sent in writing, subscribed by the moderator and clerk of the Presbytery; and ordains the commission to take care that the account of all these be recorded in a particular register for that purpose; and the General Assembly hereby recommends it to their commission, or their said committee, which they are hereby empowered to appoint for that effect, to distribute the eleven boxes of books lately sent down from England, and any libraries or books that shall be sent down betwixt and the next Assembly, to such places of this Church and nation as have most need, and may best answer the design of the donors.

The General Assembly hereby recommends it to their Commission to inquire into the state of the Highlands and Islands, how they are planted with ministers, and of the remaining Paganish customs among them, and of the increase of Popery, and how they are provided with schools, what places most need help in these matters, and what encouragement these may expect who incline to enter into a society for erecting and maintaining charity schools, for educating poor and indigent children.

And the General Assembly appoints all the Synods and Presbyteries concerned in the Highlands and Islands to send in accounts thereof to the commission, who are hereby ordained to prepare overtures thereanent, and give in the same to the next Assembly, to whom the said commission and others concerned are to be accountable for their diligence and management in the premises.

XIX.

Sess. ult. April 16, 1706.—Act concerning a Solemn National Fast and Humiliation.

The General Assembly, considering this nation's unthankfulness for, and unfruitfulness under the Gospel, and how sin and wickedness doth abound every where in the land, and profaneness and Popery, and other gross errors, increase and grow, and the great danger the Protestant religion and the Reformed Churches are in, through the sad distress and grievous persecution of some of them, and the dangerous condition of others, the continuance of a bloody war, the decay of trade, and impoverishing of the nation; and, likewise, considering how much the welfare and safety of this Church and nation dependeth on the preservation of the Queen's Majesty's person, and the conduct and success of her councils, and the result of the treaty now on foot, concerning the Union of both kingdoms of Scotland and England: Upon these and diverse other weighty considerations, the General Assembly find it their duty to call all ranks of persons, in this Church and nation, to solemn fasting and prayer, and to humiliation and reformation, beseeching and obtesting all and every one to search and try their ways, and turn unto the Lord, and to seek his face and favour.

And the General Assembly recommends to all the ministers of this Church, that with due prudence and zeal they do, in their preaching, reprove and warn of, and in prayer confess and acknowledge, the national and epidemical crying sins, both of former and present times, particularly enumerated in the causes of former public fasts, especially in the years 1690, 1700, and 1701, and those chiefly which abound in the respective places where the ministers labour.

And the General Assembly recommends and appoints that fervent prayers be poured out to God, that he would, of his abundant grace and mercy, grant to all an humbling sight and sense of former and present sins, and give repentance for and remission of them, for the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour; and that God would continue the Gospel with us, and bless it with more success, and that it would please him graciously to put a stop to the growth of profaneness and Popery, and other errors, and that magistrates and ministers, and every one in their due place, may be directed and animated to more effectual and vigorous endeavours for discouraging, suppressing, and punishing, Popery and profaneness, and all error and ungodliness, and for reforming themselves and the land; and that all schism, division, dissension, and discord, may cease, and we may all become one in the Lord.

That God would long preserve and eminently bless our gracious Sovereign the Queen, direct her councils, and bless and prosper her forces, and those of her allies, by sea and land, in defence of the Reformed Protestant religion, and just liberties of Europe.

And that God would pity and relieve such of his Churches and people as are under the cross, and suffering for the truth, and support and establish them, and refine them in and bring them out of the furnace, and that he would preserve his Churches which are in danger, and would defeat all designs against the Reformed Churches and Protestant religion, and that God would bless the season of the year, that there may be food for man and beast.

And, lastly, that God would mercifully and graciously direct such as are commissioned both in this and the kingdom of England, for treating about a Union of both kingdoms, that all may be done to the glory of God and good of this Church, and all her Majesty's dominions.

And the General Assembly appoints the said fast and humiliation to be observed in all the parishes on this side of Tay upon the 23d day of May next, and in those on the other side of Tay upon the 6th day of June also next; and do appoint the Rev. Mr William Carstairs, Principal of the College of Edinburgh, Mr George Meldrum, Professor of Divinity there, Mr John Stirling, Principal of the College of Glasgow, and Mr George Anderson, Professor of Divinity at Aberdeen, Ministers; and Sir James Agnew of Lochnaw, Sheriff-Principal of Galloway, Ruling Elder; to apply to the Lords of her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, for their civil sanction to this fast.

XX.

The next General Assembly of this National Church is to be holden at Edinburgh, the second Tuesday of April 1707, being the eighth day of that month.

This Assembly was concluded with prayer, singing of the 72d Psalm, from verse 16 to the close, and pronouncing of the blessing.

Collected and extracted from the Records of the General Assembly, by

Some overtures concerning the ministerial visitation of families, being, according to an appointment of the late Assembly, prepared by their Commission, and transmitted to this Assembly; and having been considered by the Committee for Overtures, and again brought to this Assembly, and considered by them, they did, and hereby do, transmit these Overtures to the several Presbyteries within this National Church, that they may send their opinion thereant to the next Assembly; and appoints the Clerk to send a written copy of the said Overtures to each Presbytery for that end.

V.

Sess. 5, April 12, 1707.—Act anent Schools in every Parish, and a Contribution thereant.

The General Assembly, considering how much it would contribute to the advancement of religion, and the propagating of Christian knowledge, if a sufficient number of schools could be got erected and maintained through the kingdom, and being earnestly desirous for their part to do what in them lies to forward so good a work, do therefore enact and appoint in manner following: And, first, as to the lands that are of her Majesty's property, that application be made by the Commissions of this and subsequent Assemblies to the Lords of her Majesty's Treasury and Exchequer, for obtaining her Majesty's proportion of what is allowed by law for erecting of schools in parishes, according to her valued rent; and as to other heritors in parishes where schools are not settled according to law, Presbyteries are hereby appointed to use all suitable endeavours to get schools erected and maintained in parishes conform to the Acts of Parliament, and if that succeed not, that they apply to the Commissions of Assemblies, and give them an account of their diligence, who are hereby empowered to give all the assistance in this matter, by applying to the Government, or any other ways that is competent to them, and as to places where parishes are so wide and spacious, that they require more schools than one in each parish; the General Assembly does hereby renew and continue the 14th Act of the General Assembly, held in the year 1704, entitled, "Act anent Erecting Schools in the Highlands," in its whole heads and clauses, and appoints the same to take effect until the Assemblies of this Church shall think fit to alter that act, and the General Assembly earnestly recommends it to the several Presbyteries to see the same put in due execution, and recommends it to the respective Synods and Presbyteries within this Church, to send distinct accounts to the Commission of this Assembly, betwixt and their meeting in August next to come, what parishes in their bounds have or want schools, and what are the reasons why they want the same, what places do most need them, and what is the extent of those parishes that are spacious, and stand in need of more schools than one, and what are the places in each parish that are most convenient for fixing these schools at, one or more. As also, that they send an account of the names of such students as are hopeful, and whom they could recommend for teaching the said schools; and the Commission is hereby ordained to put these accounts in order, and record the same in their books; and suchlike, the General Assembly does hereby appoint Presbyteries to deal earnestly with the patrons of such parishes as are or shall fall vacant, to apply the vacant stipends towards this so charitable and pious a use; and the Assembly hereby instructs their Commission to give all the encouragement and assistance they can to such who incline to enter into societies for erecting and maintaining of charity schools for educating of poor and indigent children, and to use their utmost endeavours to get such societies erected in the several corners of the country; and that they consider what farther encouragement can be given by the judicatories of this Church to the foresaid societies, and report overtures concerning the same to the next General Assembly; and, in like manner, Synods and Presbyteries are hereby strictly enjoined to inquire diligently what is become of the money already subscribed for, and collected in the several Presbyteries, for erecting schools in the Highlands, in pursuance of the foresaid Act, 14th General Assembly, 1704, and that they deal with such as have been deficient, yet to do what they can in so good a work, and that they report their diligence herein to the Commission of this General Assembly, betwixt and their said meeting in August next. And, lastly, the General Assembly does hereby appoint the several Presbyteries to give a particular account to the next Assembly, how former acts anent a school in every parish, the visitations thereof, and other things mentioned in these acts are observed, and recommends it to subsequent Assemblies, from time to time, to appoint a particular committee to receive the reports of Presbyteries in that matter, and prepare the same for the ensuing General Assemblies, who may do therein as they shall see cause.

VI.

Sess. 5, April 12, 1707, ante meridiem.—Act anent the Advancement of Learning.

The General Assembly, for the better advancement and encouragement of learning, do hereby recommend it to the Commissioners, directed to the several universities of this kingdom to subsequent Assemblies of this Church, that at the time of every General Assembly they do meet and consult together, and prepare overtures to be laid before the Assembly, for the establishment and advancement of piety, learning, and good order in the Schools and Universities, and that they be careful to keep a correspondence amongst the Universities for these good ends.

VII.

Sess. 5, April 12, 1707, ante meridiem.—Act anent Ministers publishing of Books, &c.

The General Assembly hereby appoints the several Presbyteries to take special notice of any book or pamphlet that shall be framed or contrived, printed or published, by any minister of this Church, and examine if there be any thing therein contrary to the doctrine, worship, discipline, or government, or prejudicial to the rights, privileges, or unity of this Church, and that they censure such as shall transgress herein, according to the demerit of the cause.

VIII.

Sess. 6, April 14, 1707, post meridiem.—Act for suppressing of Popery, and preventing the growth thereof.

The General Assembly, taking into their serious consideration the lamentable increase of Popery in divers places of this nation, which they look upon as a sad judgment from the Lord, and matter of humiliation to all that love the truth, and though it were uncharitable to conclude that God is most displeased with those ministers and congregations which are most assaulted and shaken by these temptations, yet it is surely matter of humiliation to them; and, therefore, the General Assembly recommends to them to be frequent and serious in fasting and prayer to God, for restraining these winds of seduction. And besides what was recommended on this account in the eighth Act of the General Assembly, 1699, which is hereby renewed, it is moreover recommended, 1mo, That if there be any vacant churches in those parts that are infested with Popery, all due care and diligence may be used to plant them with able, pious, prudent, and learned ministers. 2do, That where there are ministers already, they do frequently commune with, and inquire at their elders of the case of the people, and of the danger they may be in, and of the trafficking of seducers amongst them, that they may the more timely counterwork them; and sessions are ordained to report their diligence in this matter to their respective Presbyteries. 3tio, That Presbyteries where Popery increaseth do at each meeting confer anent their danger thereby, and what their duty is, and what endeavours may be used against this seduction, and record their success; or, if the defection be growing, 4to, That the Synod in which these Presbyteries are, do at every Synodical meeting inquire concerning the state of those parts as to the growth of Popery, and give what assistance they can against these abominations; and for this end, 5to, That they sometimes send ministers, one or more, that are well acquainted with these controversies, to assist the ministers of the bounds, not only to confer with the seduced, but also for establishing others; especially persons of more influence and authority in the bounds. 6to, Where the parish is great, that there be probationers sent to assist the minister in preaching, that he may have the more time for travelling up and down among the people; but Presbyteries are to take special care that this be not improved for ease and sloth. 7mo, For making this anent probationers practicable and useful, the General Assembly approves of the overtures of the Commission of the late General Assembly, dated the 11th of November last by-past, transmitted by the said Commission to the several Presbyteries; and in prosecution thereof, appoints and ordains that some probationers known in the Popish controversies be sent to those parts of the nation where Popery does most abound; to travel among the people under the inspection, and at the direction of the Presbyteries of the bounds, and show them the errors of the Church of Rome, and danger of the same; and to instruct them in the principles of the true reformed Protestant religion—and more especially in wide and spacious parishes, where ministers cannot be so frequently with their people; and that there be a contribution made amongst ministers, according to their stipends, for encouragement of those probationers in that work; and that ministers deal with persons who are charitably and piously inclined, to contribute also for so good a work. And it is hereby recommended to all Presbyteries, that they be more careful of transmitting lists of Papists to the Clerks of Privy Council termly, with particular informations according to the acts of the General Assembly, Parliament, and Council thereanent; and it is likewise recommended to all Church judicatories to apply to the civil magistrates within their bounds for ex-cutting the laws competent to them in these matters; and where the concurrence and assistance of supreme judicatories are requisite, the Commissions to be appointed by this and subsequent General Assemblies are hereby enjoined to name a committee of some of their number, from time to time, to prosecute the same according to law, and to manage the said missions and contribution; and, farther, to render effectual the overtures and act of the said late Commission, dated the 13th day of the said month, made for the better raising of the said contribution and managing of the same; and for beginning this so good a work, the General Assembly does, according thereto, 1mo, Desire each minister, who has not already done the same in compliance with the said act of the Commission, yet to advance a quarter of a year's centesima of their stipend for one year, and recommends it to the brethren, who are members of this Assembly, to advance their proportion presently, if they can conveniently do it. 2do, Agrees that each probationer to be missioned be allowed two hundred merks for half a-year. 3tio, That these probationers be under the inspection of the Presbyteries of the bounds to which they go, and that they join with the minister of the parish, sometimes assisting him in preaching, as said is, and in informing of the people in reference to the truth; and the General Assembly appoints great care to be taken in choosing fit and able young men to be sent on this design, and for that end, seriously recommends it to all the Presbyteries to send accounts of such from time to time to the said Commissions or their committees; and these young men are hereby enjoined, before they go on in their mission, to spend at least a month in some of the universities in studying the cavils of the Popish missionaries, and the fittest way of dealing with the people; and the General Assembly hereby empowers the said Commissions or their committees to give suitable advices and directions to these young men as to their conduct in their work. And the Synods and Presbyteries in the South are hereby desired to send in their contributions to the Commission of this Assembly, or the committee to be chosen by them for management thereof, as said is; and those in the North to the Presbyteries to which these young men are sent, as soon as it is possible, that the same may be paid to the young men. And, farther, the General Assembly appoints their Commission to draw up a distinct account of the lamentable circumstances of those places where Popery most prevails, in order to move people to contribute to so pious a work: and, seeing it may be difficult to get probationers having the Irish language for all these Highland places which may need this assistance, the General Assembly appoints that such probationers who have not the Irish language shall preach that half of the day in which the minister useth to preach in English, and shall be assistant to him in dealing privately with those who have only English; and, in like manner, the Assembly recommends that some fit books be dispersed among the people for their information, and appoints that special care be taken to excite and keep the people intent on practical godliness, and to show how Popery is destructive thereto; and ministers are obtested to beware of self-confidence in the management of this work, or of leaning to their own abilities and gifts, but that they do all with special dependence on God through Christ, and with prayer to him for ability and skill to manage the work aright, and to bless it with success. And, lastly, as the rolls and names of Papists are to be given up to the Clerks of Privy Council yearly, so it is hereby appointed and ordained, that at every Synod the names of the Papists within the several parishes of their bounds be given in to the clerk of the Synod, that their increase or decrease may be the better known, and suitable provision may be made for recovering the seduced, and preventing the seduction of more, and that the several Synods do transmit these lists of Papists yearly to the Commissions of Assemblies, and the said commissioners are hereby instructed and enjoined to take care that the above particulars and the acts of Assembly made thereant be strictly observed and put into due execution, and that they do apply to the Government, as need shall require, for protection and assistance to such as shall be sent in mission as aforesaid.

IX.

Sess. 8, April 16, 1707.—Act approving the Actings and Proceedings of the Commission of the General Assembly, anno 1706.

(In similar terms to the corresponding Acts of preceding years.)

X.

Sess. 9, April 17, 1707.—Act concerning the Synod of Orkney, and Erecting another Presbytery there.

The General Assembly, having heard the report of their Committee for the Affairs of the Church in the North, the Highlands, and Islands, to whom the petitions for the Presbyteries of Zetland, Orkney, and Caithness, were referred, and also having heard the commissioners from these Presbyteries at this Assembly, they did, and hereby do, appoint the act of the General Assembly, dated the 11th day of April 1706, concerning the more convenient meeting and greater ease of the Provincial Synod of Caithness, Orkney, and Zetland, to continue and stand in force in all time coming, without disjoining the Presbyteries of Zetland or Caithness therefrom, or annexing the Presbytery of Sutherland thereto; and seeing that but few of the Presbytery of Zetland can conveniently attend that Synod, and that there are therein but two Presbyteries besides, so that in some cases that meeting cannot do the work of a Synod, and there being eighteen ministers in the Presbytery of Orkney, the General Assembly did, and hereby do, divide and erect the same into two Presbyteries, viz., the ministers of the parishes in the mainland and south isles of Orkney, with a ruling elder for each minister in one Presbytery, to have their meeting for ordinary at Kirkwall, and to be called the Presbytery of Kirkwall; and the ministers of the North Isles, namely, Rousay, Egilshay, Westra, and Papa, North Ronaldshay, Sanday, Eday, and Stronsay, and Shapinshay, with a ruling elder for each minister in another separate Presbytery, to have their meeting for ordinary in the isle of Eday, and to be called the Presbytery of the North Isles; and in cases of weight and difficulty, the General Assembly appoints one of the ministers of Kirkwall, and the ministers of Evie and Deerness, to correspond with the said Presbytery of the North Isles, and meet therewith; and do hereby ordain the Presbyteries of Caithness, Kirkwall, the North Isles, and Zetland, to bring yearly their books to the Synod of Orkney, to be by them revised; and because the brethren of the Presbytery of Zetland are at great charges and trouble in attending the said Synod, and some of them at more than others of them, the Assembly appoints the brethren of the said Presbytery to go to the Synod by turns, and to bear equal burden in public matters; and ordains letters to be written to the Presbyteries in these bounds intimating the premises to them, and that the Synod of Ross and Orkney keep a mutual correspondence, as is usual in other Synods.

XI.

Sess. 11, April 18, 1707.—Act approving a Form of Process in the Judicatories of the Church with relation to Scandals and Censures.

The General Assembly, having this day, and at several former diets, had read in their audience the overtures concerning a Form of Process in the judicatories of this Church with relation to scandals and censures, which were transmitted by the late General Assembly to the several Presbyteries for their judgment thereupon, and having maturely considered the said whole overtures, with the remarks and observations of Presbyteries made upon the same after full reasoning, both in committees and open Assembly, upon the several particulars contained in the said Form of Process, the General Assembly did, by their votes, nemine contradicente, and hereby do, ratify and approve the foresaid Form of Process as now amended in the whole heads and articles thereof, and appoint and ordain the same to be observed and practised by the respective judicatories of this Church as an act and ordinance of Assembly and as fixed binding rules and directions in the whole matters therein contained, except the 7th, 8th, and 9th paragraphs of the fourth chapter, and what concerns the pressing of the Oath of Purgation—as to which the General Assembly supersedes at this time to enjoin the observation thereof as positive standing rules; but they did, and hereby do, unanimously recommend to the several Presbyteries and other judicatories of the Church, that they regulate themselves according to the advice therein insinuated, as they shall find to tend most to edification; the tenor of which Form of Process follows.

THE FORM OF PROCESS IN THE JUDICATORIES OF THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND, WITH RELATION TO SCANDALS AND CENSURES.

CHAPTER I.

Concerning Church Government, Discipline, Scandals, and Censures in general.

1. Our Lord Jesus Christ hath instituted a government and governors ecclesiastical in his house, with power to meet for the order and government thereof; and to that purpose, the Apostles did immediately receive the keys from the hands of their Lord and Master Jesus Christ, and did use and exercise the same upon all occasions, and Christ hath from time to time furnished some in his Church with gifts for government, and with commission to exercise it when called thereunto, and has promised his presence to be with them to the end of the world.

2. It is agreeable to, and founded on the Word of God, that some others besides those who labour in the word and doctrine be Church governors, to join with the ministers of the Word in the government of the Church, and exercise of discipline and oversight in the manners of the people, which officers are called ruling elders; as also, that the Church be governed by several sorts of judicatories, and one in subordination to the other, such as Kirk-Sessions, Presbyteries, Provincial Synods, and General Assemblies.

3. Church discipline and censures for judging and removing of offences are of great use and necessity in the Church, that the name of God, by reason of ungodly and wicked persons living in the Church, be not blasphemed, nor His wrath provoked against his people, that the godly be not leavened with, but preserved from the contagion, and stricken with fear, and that sinners who are to be censured may be ashamed, to the destruction of the flesh, and saving of the spirit in the day of the Lord Jesus.

4. Nothing ought to be admitted by any Church judicatory as the ground of a process for censure, but what hath been declared censurable by the Word of God, or some act or universal custom of this National Church, agreeable thereto; and the several judicatories of this Church ought to take timeous notice of all scandals; but it is judged, that if a scandal shall happen not to be noticed in order to censure for the space of five years, it should not be again revived, so as to enter in a process thereanent, unless it be of an heinous nature, or become again flagrant, but the consciences of such persons ought to be seriously dealt with in private, to bring them to a sense of their sin and duty.

5. These Assemblies or Church judicatories before mentioned have power to convene and call before them any persons within their own bounds, whom the ecclesiastical business which is before them doth concern, either as party, witness, or otherwise, and to examine them according to the nature of the affair, and to hear and determine in such cases as shall orderly come before them, and accordingly dispense Church censures.

6. If a person be charged with a scandal, who lives within the bounds of another parish, the kirk-session of the parish where that person resides should be desired to cause cite that person to answer before the session in whose bounds the scandal happened, and the same course is to be followed in such cases by the other judicatories of the Church, seeing, for order's sake, they should not presume to exercise their authority without their own bounds.

7. The minister of the Word being in office above that of the ruling elder, cannot be liable to the censure of the kirk-session, but to the superior judicatories of the Church.

CHAPTER II.

Concerning the entering of Processes, Citation of Parties and Witnesses, and taking Depositions, and anent Fugitives from Discipline.

1. Members of kirk-sessions are wisely to consider the information they get of scandals, and consult with their minister thereanent, even before the same be communicated to others, that thereby the spreading of the scandal may be prevented, and it may be removed by private admonition, according to our Lord and Saviour's rule, Matth. xviii. 15, which, if amendment follow, is the far better way of gaining and recovering a lapsed brother, whereas the needless spreading of a scandal does sometimes harden the guilty, grieve the godly, and is dishonourable to religion.

2. When any business is moved in a Church judicatory, whether by information, petition, or otherwise, they are, in the first place, to consider, whether the matter in its circumstantiated case, be proper for them to enter upon, and whether it be orderly brought in, and proper for them to cognosce and discuss it themselves, or prepare it for superior judicatories, and should endeavour to shorten their work as much as with the edification of the Church they can, especially as to the head of scandal, but still, on all occasions, the office-bearers in the house of God are to show all prudent zeal against sin.

3. In proceeding in all causes where there is any person or parties concerned, the judicatory is to see that, before they proceed, these persons or parties be duly sisted before them by a legal and timeous citation in writing, bearing its cause, either at the instance of a party complaining, or, at least, by order of the judicatory; and, if they be residing within the parish, the same may be upon forty-eight hours' advertisement, and the execution of the summons bearing its cause, and made before two or three witnesses, inserted, is to be returned by the beadle or officer in writing, and the persons cited called at the door; and this is especially to be observed by Presbyteries and other superior judicatories of the Church.

4. Sometimes it may be fit that the party be privately spoken to before any citation be given, or process begun, for their better gaining, in which case, the minister is to exercise his own discretion, and take the concurrence of elders and others with him; but if the party cited as above appear not, there ought to be a second and then a third citation given by the order of the sessions and Presbyteries, either personally, or left at their dwelling-house, before the judicatory declare the person contumacious, unless the party be cited to appear before a superior judicatory, by reference or appeal, in which case there is not that need of so many citations before the superior judicatory, the party having actually appeared before the inferior judicatory; and being cited apud acta to appear before the superior, and the same marked in the minutes, or having been declared contumacious before the cause was brought before the superior judicatory.

5. All citations apud acta are peremptory, and if instructed, infer contumacy, if not obeyed.

6. If the person do not appear on the third citation, or upon a citation apud acta, and no relevant excuse adduced and verified, though in that case he be censurable for contumacy, yet it may be fit the judicatory proceed to take cognition, either by examining witnesses upon oath, or by other documents, of the verity of the scandals delated against him, before they censure him for contumacy.

7. If the party appear, then the moderator is to inform the person of the occasion of his being called, and to give him, if desired, a short note in writing thereof, with the names of the witnesses that are to be made use of.

8. There seems to be no need of accusers or informers in ecclesiastical processes, where the same are not raised at the instance of a party complaining formally, but the party, if cited by order of the judicatory, is to answer the judicatory in what is laid to his charge; yet so, that if the party cited be found innocent and acquitted, those who informed the judicatory, whether the party require it or not, ought to be noticed for either their calumny or imprudence, as the judicatory shall find cause.

9. If there be witnesses to be made use of in the process, a list of their names ought to be given to the defenders some time before, or at least at their compearance, and the witnesses ought to be timeously cited to give evidence, and, if they refuse after three citations given, and executions returned, may be proceeded with as contumacious, or if judged needful, after the first or second citation, application may be made to the civil magistrate, that he may oblige them to appear.

10. Before the witnesses be judicially examined, the accused person is to be called, and the relevancy of the libel discussed, and if the defender compear, he may object against any of them, and if the objection be relevant, and made evident to the judicatory, the witnesses are to be cast; but a person's being the delator or informer doth not hinder him to be a witness, except in the case where he formally complained for his own interest, or of pregnant presumptions of malice against the person accused.

11. Though there be no relevant objection, yet the witnesses are solemnly to be purged of malice, bribe, or good deed done, or to be done, and of partial counsel.

12. The witnesses are to be sworn and examined in the presence of the accused party, if compearing, and he may desire the moderator to propose such questions or cross questions to the witnesses as may tend for his exculpation, which, if the judicatory think pertinent, are to be proposed; but no accused person is to interrupt the witnesses, or speak during the time of deposition.

13. If the party accused do before probation offer grounds of exculpation to be proven by witnesses, the moderator and clerk, if required, are to give warrant to cite the witnesses upon the parties' charges, the relevancy of the offered exculpation being first considered and sustained by the judicatory, and if the exculpation be fully proven as to the substance of the scandal, all further proof of the libel and accusation must there sist, and the defender is to be assolizied; as if the libel be special as to the time and place of a fact, and the accused more pregnantly allege and clearly prove alibi; but if the substance of the scandal be once sustained and deponed upon, there can be no place for exculpation, unless it be as to some extenuating or alleviating circumstances, not contrary to, but consistent with, the depositions already taken.

14. If witnesses cannot subscribe their names to their deposition, the clerk is to mark that they declare they cannot write, and the moderator is to subscribe the same, whether they can subscribe or not.

15. After the depositions are ended, the parties being removed, the members of the judicatory, at the same or some after diet thereto appointed, are to advise the cause, and there and then to reason the affair calmly, speaking always to the moderator one after another, without interrupting one another, using no reflecting language to or of one another, nor too long harangues or digressions.

16. If any person or persons under process for scandals abscond, they should, after being called before the judicatory, and not compearing, be cited first from the pulpit of the parish where the process depends, and where they reside, and if they do not thereupon appear before the judicatory, before whom the process depends, they are by order of the Presbytery to be cited from the pulpits of all the kirks within their bounds, to compear before the Presbytery; and if they do not then compear, they are to be declared fugitive from church discipline, and the same intimated in all the kirks within the bounds of the Presbytery, desiring, that if any knows of the said fugitives, they may acquaint the minister or elder of the bounds thereof; and the Presbytery are to sist there until they get further notice of these persons.

CHAPTER III.

Concerning Swearers, Cursers, Profaners of the Lord's Day, Drunkards, and other Scandals of that nature.

1. It may fall out that one single act of drunkenness, or breach of the Lord's Day, disobedience to parents, or of swearing, cursing, scolding, fighting, lying, cheating, or stealing, may be clothed with such circumstances as may be a just ground of process immediately, and even bring the persons guilty under the censure of the lesser excommunication and suspension from the benefit of the sealing ordinances, and require their appearance in presence of the congregation to be rebuked, before relaxation; but the weight of this is duly to be pondered, and Church judicatories, and members thereof, are to consider whether the private admonition of persons alleged and found guilty of the above scandals, if not clothed with such circumstances, or the bringing them to public, will tend most to edification, and proceed accordingly.

2. But ordinarily in all such offences, the guilty, for the first fault, should be spoken to in private by the minister or an elder, and admonished; and on promise from a sense of guilt to amend, they may sist there.

3. But if the person relapse, he should be called before the session, and if found guilty, may be there judicially rebuked; where the session on promise, from a due sense of sin to amend, may again sist.

4. But if the person amend not after that, the session should orderly proceed, unless repentance appear, and due satisfaction be offered, till they inflict the censure of the lesser excommunication and suspension from the benefit of the sealing ordinances, under which the censured are to lie, till amendment and reformation.

5. With respect to scandals, the grossness whereof makes it necessary to bring the persons guilty oftener than once before the congregation, the rules prescribed by the fourth Act of the General Assembly, anno 1705, are to be followed.

6. If the guilty persons continue in this condition, or lie under the censure of the lesser excommunication a considerable time, and yet be found frequently relapsing in these vices they are censured for, it may be constructed such a degree of contumacy, and so aggravate the crime as to found a process of the censure of the higher excommunication, which is to be inflicted or not, as may tend most to the reclaiming of the guilty person, and edification of the Church.

CHAPTER IV.

Concerning the Sin of Fornication, Adultery, and Scandalous Carriage tending thereto.

1. In delations about the sin of uncleanness, it falls frequently out, that when the matter is put to the strictest trial, all that can be proven is but presumptions of guilt or scandalous behaviour, and not the act of uncleanness, the same being a work of darkness; and therefore this should oblige the kirk-session to be very cautious how to admit the public entering a process without good warrant, where there is not a child in the case, unless the scandal be very flagrant.

2. Many of these actions which give occasion to the raising a scandal of uncleanness are such as are not themselves alone publicly censurable, but to be passed by with a private rebuke or admonition.

3. Yet some of those actions which come under the name of scandalous behaviour may be so lascivious and obscene, and clothed with such circumstances as may be as offensive as the act of uncleanness itself, and as censurable.

4. If a married woman, whose husband hath been notoriously absent for a considerable time, beyond the ordinary time that women use to go with child, be found with child, this also may give ground to a kirk-session for a process against her; but in this case, judicatories should be prudent in considering well all circumstances, and whether or not the person hath been always of entire fame before, as also how the public fame now runs.

5. When an unmarried woman is known to be with child, the same gives ground to a kirk-session for a process against her, and after she is cited before the session and appeareth, she is to be interrogated who is the father of that child, and though in other cases the divulging of a secret may be very imprudent, and, indeed, the raising of a scandal; yet in this case, where there is a child, whereby there is an undeniable scandal, and the keeping secret of the father a ground of greater offence, and of suspecting many innocent persons, if she discover not the father, she is to be looked upon as contumacious.

6. Prudence may sometime require that the person she nameth to be the father of the child be informed thereof, and spoken to privately, and if he deny the same, he is seriously to be dealt with to confess; but if he still deny, then the session is to cause cite him to appear before them.

7. In this process, when the delated father compeareth, he is to be interrogated, and if he deny, he is to be confronted with the woman, and the presumptions as particularly held forth as possible, and all along, there should be private treating with him, in all meekness, charity, and seriousness, and if, after all this, he deny, though the woman's testimony can be no sufficient evidence against him, yet pregnant presumptions, such as suspicious frequenting her company, or being solus cum sola in loco suspecto, or in suspected postures, and such like, which he cannot disprove to the satisfaction of the session, may so lay the guilt upon him, as to show him that there appears no other way of removing the scandal, but his appearance to be publicly rebuked therefor: If he will not submit himself to be rebuked as above, it perhaps may be more for edification, that a true narrative of the case be laid before the congregation, and intimation given, that there can be no further procedure in that matter till God in his Providence give further light, and to sist there at the time, than that an oath be pressed, and upon refusal, proceed to the higher excommunication; but if the person accused do offer his oath of purgation, and crave the privilege thereof, the Presbytery may (if they shall judge it for edification and removing of the scandal) allow the same, which may be to this purpose: "I, A. B., now under process before the Presbytery of

, for the sin of _____, alleged to be committed by me with C. D., and lying under that grievous slander, being repute as one guilty of that sin, I, for ending of the said process, and giving satisfaction to all good people, do declare, before God and this _____, that I am innocent and free of the said sin of _____, or having carnal knowledge of the said C. D.; and hereby call the great God, the judger and avenger of all falsehood, to be witness and judge against me in this matter if I be guilty; and this I do, by taking his blessed name in my mouth, and swearing by Him who is the great judge, punisher, and avenger, as said is, and that in the sincerity of my heart, according to the truth of the matter and mine own conscience, as I shall answer to God in the last and great day, when I shall stand before him to answer for all that I do in the flesh, and as I would partake of his glory in heaven after this life is at an end."

8. In taking this oath for purgation, all tenderness and caution are to be used, nor is the session to press any man thereto, but they are to deal with him and his conscience as in the sight of God, and if he offer to give his oath, the judicatory are to accept it or not as they shall see cause, and then to proceed to remove the scandal with the advice of the Presbytery, as may be most to edification; but this oath is not to be taken in any case but this, when the presumptions are so great that they create such jealousy in that congregation and session, that nothing will remove the suspicion but the man's oath of purgation, and when his oath will probably remove the scandal and suspicion, in all other cases this oath is in vain, and so should not be admitted, and never but by advice of the Presbytery.

9. This oath for purgation is to be taken either before the kirk-session or Presbytery or the congregation, as the Presbytery shall determine, and if the oath be taken before the session or Presbytery, it is to be intimated to the congregation that such a person hath taken such an oath, and the party may be obliged to be present in the congregation, and may be put publicly to own his purging himself by oath, and so be declared free from the alleged scandal.

10. After an end is made as above with the delated father, the woman is to be dealt with to give the true father; and if, after all serious dealing and due diligence, she give no other, she is to be censured according to the quality of the offence confessed by her, without naming the person delated by her, the judicatory reserving place for further censure upon further discovery.

11. If the woman who hath brought forth the child doth declare she knoweth not the father, alleging she was forced, as in the fields, by a person unknown, or any the like reason; in these cases great prudence is to be used, the former behaviour of the woman exactly searched into, and she seriously dealt with to be ingenuous; and if she hath been of entire fame she may be put to it to declare the truth as if she were upon oath, but not without the advice of the Presbytery, and no formal oath should be taken; and if the woman confess she was not forced, but doth not know the man, whether married or unmarried, the same censure is to be inflicted upon her as in the case of adultery.

12. If a person doth voluntarily confess uncleanness, and if there be no child, and the case be brought to the kirk-session, the session is to inquire what presumptions there are of the truth of the thing confessed, or what may have moved the person to make that confession, whether it floweth from disquietness of mind, or from sinister design, as when a man suing to a woman for marriage is denied, and for revenge, or for to obtain his desire, spreads the report that he hath been guilty with her, they are to be dealt with according as the presumptions upon search are found, or not.

13. If it be found that there is no ground for the confession, and that it is false, the person confessing is to be censured as defaming himself, and likewise as a slanderer of the other party; and withal application is to be made by the session to the civil magistrate that he may be punished according to law.

14. If there be need of witnesses, the directions formerly mentioned, Chapter II. are to be followed.

15. When persons guilty of uncleanness live one in one parish and another in another parish, the process against them and censures are to be before the session of the parish where the woman liveth, or where the scandal is most notour.

16. If a scandal of uncleanness be committed where neither party resides, as if persons having their fixed residence in one parish do commit uncleanness in another parish, or perhaps in the fields, or in the time of fairs or markets, in these cases they are to be processed and censured where their ordinary abode is, except the place of their abode be at a considerable distance from the place where the sin was committed, and the scandal be most flagrant where it was committed.

17. When there is a scandal of uncleanness, whereof persons are guilty living in different parishes, the session where the sin was committed is to acquaint the other sessions where any of the persons resides, who are ex debito to cause summon these persons to appear before that session where the scandal is to be tried.

18. When a person is convicted of scandal by a session of another congregation than his own, and the censure of the lesser excommunication is inflicted, the session is to send an account thereof to that session to which he belongs; but there is no need of any other sentence of his own session to fix the censure on him, but only a public intimation thereof to be made in his own parish.

19. When a person is censured and absolved from his scandal in another congregation than where he lives, he is to bring a testimonial of his absolution, which is to be intimated to the congregation he lives in, if the scandal be also flagrant there; otherwise, it will be sufficient to intimate the same to the session, and the same is to be done in the case of the profession of repentance, where there has been a sentence of the lesser excommunication.

CHAPTER V.

1. All persons who judge themselves leas'd by the procedure or sentence of a kirk-session, may appeal to the Presbytery, by declaring and protesting at passing of the sentence, and should thereupon, according to the eighth act of the General Assembly, 1694, give in the appeal, with the reasons thereof, in writing, to the moderator or clerk of the session, within the space of ten days after the time of appealing, and procure extracts thereof, and present the same to the next meeting of the Presbytery thereafter, if there be a competent time, at least ten free days betwixt the time of appealing and the meeting of the Presbytery, and should then insist in the appeal, wherein, if the appellant fail, the appeal, ipso facto, falls and becomes null, and the appellant is to be held as contumacious, and proceeded against accordingly by the kirk-session.

2. When an appeal is brought from a kirk-session to a Presbytery, the Presbytery is to consider whether the cause is of that nature as it behoved at length to come to the Presbytery by the course of discipline, before the final determination thereof, as if it be in a process of alleged adultery, or such like, then the Presbytery, to save themselves time, may fall upon the consideration of the affair without insisting much upon the bene or male appellatum, though it seem to be preposterously appealed.

3. But if the cause be such as the kirk-session are the competent and proper judges of even to its ultimate decision, and if there hath been no cause given by the kirk-session, by their breaking the rules of an orderly process, either by the course of the process, or by the incompetency of the censure, the Presbytery is not to sustain the appeal.

4. If the Presbytery do not sustain the appeal, and find there hath been some fault, passion, or culpable mistake in the appellant, the Presbytery is to inflict some censure, such as a reproof before the Presbytery, or appoint an acknowledging of their precipitancy before their own session, or such like, on those appellers they find to have been malicious and litigious, thereby to prevent unnecessary appeals; and that beside remitting back to the session to stand either to the censure of the session, if it be inflicted already, or to sist themselves during the process if it be depending.

5. If the appeal be sustained, and yet upon proceeding on the cause the Presbytery find the appellant censurable, it is always to be minded that whatever censure be inflicted to remove the offence he hath given to the Presbytery, yet the appellant, if found guilty, is to undergo a censure, either before the kirk-session or congregation he belongs to, such as the Presbytery thinks he deserves, else Presbyteries will be always troubled with appeals.

6. If, on the other hand, on trial of the process, the Presbytery find the kirk-session hath unwarrantably proceeded, either in contributing to the raising of a scandal, or inflicting the censure without a sufficient cause, and thereby the appellant leas'd, the Presbytery is not only to assoilzie the appellant, but to take such ways as may be proper and effectual to vindicate the appellant's innocence, and wipe off the scandal taken at him.

7. Herein the Presbytery is to exercise great prudence, doing justice to the innocent, yet so as not to weaken the kirk-session's authority in that congregation, if in justice it can be avoided.

8. But such an emergency may very well occasion the Presbytery's giving the minister and elders of that session suitable injunctions and rules to walk by, or private admonitions, or to call for a visitation of their session register.

9. The same method is to be followed in appeals from Presbyteries to Synods, and from Synods to General Assemblies.

10. An appeal being made by parties, should sist the execution of the sentence appealed from, only while the appeal is duly and diligently prosecuted, and may thereby be determined; otherwise not unless the judicatory appealed to receive the appeal, and take the affair before them; and in that ease the judicatory appealed from is to sist until the appeal be discuss'd.

CHAPTER VI.

Concerning Processes which natively begin at the Kirk-Session, but are not to be brought to a final determination by them.

1. There are some processes which natively begin at the kirk-session, which, for the atrocity of the scandal, or difficulty in the affair, or general concern, the session having the opportunity of frequent meetings of the Presbytery to have recourse unto, do not determine of themselves, such as scandals of incest, adultery, trilapse in fornication, murder, atheism, idolatry, witchcraft, charming, and heresy and error, vented and made public by any in the congregation, schism and separation from the public ordinances, processes in order to the highest censures of the Church, and continued contumacy; but the kirk-session, having received information of such gross scandals, they are to weigh the same according to the rules and directions prescribed them in processes which belong to their peculiar province, and if they find good ground for a process, they are to deal with the person accused to confess that which cannot now be hid nor amended till satisfaction be made to the Church, which, when done, the session is to refer the case, and send an extract of their procedure thereanent to the Presbytery.

2. When there is no confession of the scandals above mentioned, the session are not to proceed to lead probation, by witnesses or presumptions, till an account of the matter be brought by reference to the Presbytery as aforesaid; and the Presbytery do thereupon appoint the session to proceed and lead probation; and after probation is led, the same is to be brought to the Presbytery, who may inflict what censure they see cause.

3. Sometimes it will fall out that the process is so clear, as in a case of judicial confession, that the kirk-session may summon the delinquent when before them apud acta, to compare before the Presbytery, without previous acquainting them thereof; but where there is any difficulty the kirk-session should inform the Presbytery, and take their advice, before a party be summoned before them.

4. When the party or parties compare before the Presbytery, if they confess and profess repentance for their sin, then the Presbytery having gravely rebuked, and seriously exhorted the party or parties, are to determine the censure, and prescribe the time and place of the parties their profession of repentance publicly in the church of that congregation where the process began, the scandal being there to be taken away, or remit them to the session to receive orders thereanent.

5. It is thought more fit that the delinquents be appointed to remove the scandal in the congregation where the offence is most flagrant, especially if they reside there, rather than in the place where it was committed, if it be not public there, and that intimation of the removing thereof be made in other places, if the judicatory shall find it needful.

6. When persons censured for these grosser scandals do apply to the kirk-session for relaxation, they may both be privately conferred with, and likewise their acknowledgments heard before the session; but they ought not to be brought before the congregation, in order to their absolution, nor absolved, but by advice and order of the Presbytery.

CHAPTER VII.

Concerning Processes against Ministers.

1. All processes against any minister are to begin before the Presbytery to which he belongeth, and not before the kirk-session of his own parish.

2. The credit and success of the Gospel (in the way of an ordinary mean) much depending on the entire credit and reputation of ministers, their sound doctrine and holy conversation, no stain thereof ought lightly to be received, nor when it comes before a judicatory ought to be negligently inquired into, or, when found evident, ought to be slightly censured.

3. And because a scandal committed by a minister hath, on these accounts, many aggravations, and once raised, though it may be found to be without any ground, yet it is not easily wiped off; therefore, a Presbytery should exactly ponder by whose information and complaint it comes first before them, and a Presbytery is not so far to receive the information as to proceed to the citation of a minister, or any way begin the process until there be, first, Some person who, under his hand, gives in the complaint, with some account of its probability, and undertakes to make out the libel; 2do, Or at least do, before the Presbytery, undertake to make it out, under the pain of being censured as slanderers; or, 3tio, That the fama clamosa of the scandal be so great as that the Presbytery, for their own vindication, see themselves necessitated to begin the process without any particular accuser; but the Presbytery in this case should be careful, first, to inquire into the rise, occasion, broachers, and grounds of this fama clamosa.

4. All Christians ought to be so prudent and wary in accusing ministers of any censurable fault, as that they ought neither to publish nor spread the same, nor accuse the minister before the Presbytery without first acquainting the minister himself, if they can have access thereto; and then, if need be, some of the most prudent of the ministers and elders of that Presbytery, and their advice got in the affair.

5. If there shall be ground found to enter in a process against a minister, the Presbytery should first consider the libel, then order him to be cited, and to get a full copy, with a list of the witnesses' names to be led for proving thereof, and a formal citation, in writing, is to be made, either personally, or at his dwelling-house, bearing a competent time allowed to give in answers to the libel, and his just defences and objections against witnesses, at least ten free days before the day of compearance, and the citation should bear the date when given, and the names of the witnesses to the giving thereof; and the execution bearing its date, with the names and designations of the witnesses, should be made in writing, and signed by the officer and witnesses, which being accordingly returned, he is to be called, and if he compear, the libel is to be read unto him, and he is to be inquired, if he has any answers to give in to the libel, that they may be read and considered, in order to the discussing of the relevancy; and if the Presbytery find the same, and that there is cause to insist, they are to endeavour to bring him to a confession, whereby he may most glorify God; and if he confess, and the matter confessed be of a scandalous nature, censurable in others, such as the sin of uncleanness, or some other gross scandal, the Presbytery (whatever be the nature of his penitency, though to the conviction of all) are instantly to depose him, ab officio, and to appoint him in due time to appear before the congregation where the scandal was given, and in his own parish, for removing the offence by the public profession of his repentance.

6. If a minister be accused of any scandal, and cited to appear before his own Presbytery, and do absent himself, by leaving the place, and be contumacious, without making any relevant excuse, after a new public citation and intimation made at his own church when the congregation is met, he is to be holden as confessed, and to be deposed and censured instantly with the lesser excommunication; but if, after some time, he do not return and subject himself to the censures of the Church, he may be proceeded against till he be censured with the greater excommunication, if the judicatory see cause for it.

7. If the minister accused do appear and deny the fact after the relevancy is found, the Presbytery proceeding to probation, and to find the truth of the matter, all the circumstances are to be exactly canvassed, and the accused heard to object against the witnesses. As also, he should be allowed to be present at the examination, and modestly to cross-interrogate, and then the reputation of the witnesses and their habilitie duly regarded, and the examinations considered; if, after consideration of all these, the judicatory shall find the scandal sufficiently proven, they are to proceed to censure, as advised in the ease of confession in paragraph 5th.

8. If the matter laid to the minister's charge be such practices as, in their own nature, manifestly subvert that order, unity, and peace, which Christ hath established in his Church, or unsoundness and heterodoxy in doctrine, then great caution should be used, and the knowledge and understanding of witnesses much looked unto; and, withal, if the errors be not gross, and striking at the vitals of religion, or if they be not pertinaciously stuck unto, or industriously spread with a visible design to corrupt, or that the errors are not spreading among the people, then lenitives, admonitions, instructions, and frequent conferences, are to be tried to reclaim without cutting off, and the advice of other Presbyteries sought, and unless the thing be doing much hurt, so as it admits of no delay, the Synod or General Assembly may be advised with in the affair, and the same intimated to the minister concerned.

9. If the libel and complaint brought against a minister be a multitude of smaller things laid together, as several acts of negligence or other unsuitable actions, the Presbytery, in proceeding therein, are to make a Presbyterial visitation of that parish to which the minister belongs, and at the said visitation, are first to see if any of these things, now laid to the minister's charge, were committed prior to the last Presbyterial visitation of that parish, and whether they were then laid to his charge, and if they were not, it should be tried how they come to be laid to his charge now.

10. If the Presbytery find those things laid to his charge to be committed since the last visitation, or find a satisfying reason wherefore they were not then tabled, they are to inquire what diligence hath been used in acquainting the minister with the offence taken at these things when first committed by him, and how far the minister hath been guilty of giving offence after he knew offence to be taken.

11. It should likewise, in this case, be inquired, whether any of the complainers did first, in a prudent private way, inform any of the neighbouring ministers of some of these things committed by their minister, who is now challenged, before these offences came to be so many, as to merit a public and solemn trial, and accordingly the Presbytery is to judge.

12. If the Presbytery find, upon trial, the complaint to resolve on the minister's having committed such acts of infirmity or passion, as, considering all the circumstances, may be either amended, and the people satisfied, and no such offence taken, or at least not to remain so as to hinder the minister's profiting the people, and that the offence was taken by the minister's own people only or mainly; then the Presbytery is to take all prudent ways to satisfy and reclaim both minister and people, and do away the offence.

13. But before a minister deposed for scandalous carriage can be restored to the exercise of the ministry, there should not only be convincing evidences of a deep sorrow for sin, but an eminent and exemplary humble walk and edifying conversation, so apparent and convincing as hath worn out and healed the wound the scandal gave.

14. Immediately on the minister's being deposed by the Presbytery, the sentence is to be intimated in his congregation, the church declared vacant, the planting thereof with another minister hastened, and never delayed on the expectation of his being reponed, it being almost impossible that ever he can prove useful in that parish again.

CHAPTER VIII.

Concerning Processes in order to the Censure of the greater Excommunication.

1. Since there is a distinction betwixt the greater and the lesser excommunication, it seems that whatever have been the causes of the first process, yet ordinarily all processes that are in order to the greater excommunication are to be grounded on manifest contumacy, or obstinate continuance in scandalous practices; and where there is no manifest contumacy or continuance as aforesaid, the lesser excommunication needs only have place; yet in some extraordinary cases, the Church, according to Scripture warrant, hath summarily excommunicated persons guilty of notour atrocious scandalous sins, to show the Church's abhorrence of such wickedness.

2. Even where there hath been a scandal delated, and contumacy following, by not appearing, it should be considered whether any scandalous practice hath been proven or not; if not proven, then only the simple contumacy is to be proceeded against, for which it were hard to go a greater length than the lesser excommunication.

3. If the scandal hath been proven, and the censure of the lesser excommunication intimated, as in Chapter III., it seems most reasonable that there be no further proceeding unless the scandal be gross, or of an heinous nature, or that it is spreading and infectious, as in heresies or schism in the Church, in which cases contumacy is to be proceeded against in order to the greater excommunication.

4. The kirk-session having brought the process to an intimation of the censure of the lesser excommunication, before they inflict the same they are to refer the affair to the Presbytery, bringing their whole proceedings before the Presbytery in writing, that the Presbytery may thereby have a clear and full view of the whole affair.

5. The Presbytery finding the kirk-session hath orderly proceeded, and that the lesser excommunication is not sufficient, and that the affair is so weighty as to oblige them to enter on the process, they are to cause their officer to cite the scandalous person.

6. If the party appear, then the Presbytery is to proceed in the inquiry at the accused about the scandal alleged and libelled, and if he deny it, then they are to proceed and lead probation as in other cases.

7. But if the party appear not, but contemn the citation, the Presbytery causeth renew the same until he hath got three citations, and after the three citations he is to be cited out of the pulpit; and, for the further conviction of all concerned, intimation is to be made that the judicatory will proceed and inquire into the presumptions or probation of the guilt; and this is to be done although the delinquent be absent.

8. Then the Presbytery is to order the minister of the congregation next Sabbath, after forenoon sermon, to acquaint the congregation what proceedings the kirk-session first, and thereafter the Presbytery, had made in the affair, and how contumacious the party was, and that the Presbytery intended to proceed to the highest censure; and the minister is gravely to admonish the party (if present) to repent and submit himself to the discipline of the Church, threatening him, if he continue impenitent, that the Church will proceed; yea, though he be absent, the minister is to acquaint the people that the Church requires him to repent and submit as above said, under the foresaid certification.

9. There should be three public admonitions, and a Presbytery should intervene betwixt each admonition; and if, after all, that person continue impenitent or contumacious, the same is to be represented to the Presbytery, who are thereupon to appoint public prayers thrice to be made, in which the minister is to exhort the congregation seriously to join with him in prayer for the scandalous impenitent or contumacious person, which he is solemnly to put up to God, humbly begging that he would deal with the soul of the impenitent, and convince him of the evil of his ways.

10. These public prayers of the Church are to be put up three several Sabbath days, a Presbytery (where its meetings are more frequent, once a month at least) intervening betwixt each public prayer, both to show the Church's tenderness towards their lapsed brother, their earnestness to have him reclaimed, and likewise to create a greater regard and terror of that dreadful censure, both in the party and in all the people.

11. If, after all, the scandalous person makes no application, but continues impenitent, the Presbytery, after prayer, is to pass sentence, and appoint a minister to intimate the same, and to show the Presbytery's resolution to proceed upon such a Sabbath as they shall name, for pronouncing that dreadful sentence solemnly in face of the congregation, unless either the party, or some for him, signify some relevant ground to stop their procedure.

12. That day being come, it were fit the minister did preach a sermon suited to that solemn occasion, or at least after sermon the minister should show the congregation what he is going about, introducing the narrative of the process with a discourse concerning the nature, use, and end of Church censures, particularly that of the greater excommunication, if he hath not done it fully in his sermon.

13. Then narrating all the steps of the process in order, showing the Church's faithfulness and tenderness towards the scandalous person, and declaring his obstinate impenitency; and that now, after all other means were used, there remained only that of cutting off the scandalous person from the society of the faithful, and intimating the Church's warrant and order to him so to do.

14. And before the minister pronounce the sentence he is to pray, and desire all the congregation to join with him therein, that God would grant repentance to the obstinate person, would graciously bless his own ordinance, and make the censure effectual, both to edify others, and to be a mean to reclaim the obstinate sinner.

15. Then, after prayer, the minister is, with great gravity and authority, to pronounce the censure, showing his warrant from our Lord's command, and the Apostle Paul's direction, and recapitulating the Presbytery's warrant, in obedience thereunto, and resuming the scandalous and obstinate person's behaviour, whom he is to name; he, therefore, in the name and authority of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ doth, in verbis de presenti, pronounce and declare him or her excommunicated, and shut out from the communion of the faithful, debarring that person from their privileges, and, in the words of the Apostle, delivering that person over to Satan; which sentence is to be intimated according to the 9th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1704.

16. If, after prayer, or before the censure be pronounced, the scandalous person do make any public signification of his repentance, and of his desire to have the censure stopt, the minister, upon apparent seriousness in the scandalous person, which he showeth to the congregation, may thereupon delay pronouncing the sentence, till he report to the Presbytery at their next meeting, who are then to deal with the scandalous person as they shall find cause.

17. After the pronouncing of this sentence, the people are to be warned that they hold that person to be cast out of the communion of the Church, and that they shun all unnecessary converse with him or her; nevertheless, excommunication dissolveth not the bonds of civil or natural relations, nor exempts from the duties belonging to them.

18. Although it be the duty of pastors and ruling elders to use all diligence and vigilance, both by doctrine and discipline respectively, for preventing and purging out such errors, heresies, schism, and scandals, as tend to the detriment and disturbance of the Church; yet, because it may fall out, through the pride and stubbornness of offenders, that these means alone will not be effectual to that purpose; it is therefore necessary after all this to employ the aid of the civil magistrate, who ought to use his coercive power for the suppressing of all such offences, and vindicating the discipline of the Church from contempt.

CHAPTER IX.

Concerning the Order of Proceeding to Absolution.

1. If, after excommunication, the signs of repentance appear in the excommunicated person, such as godly sorrow for having incurred God's heavy displeasure by his sin, occasioned grief to his brethren, and justly provoked the Church to cast him out of their communion, together with a full purpose of heart to turn from his sin unto God through Christ, and to reform his life and conversation, with an humble desire of recovering peace with God and his people, and to be restored to the favour of God and light of his countenance, through the blood of Jesus Christ, and to the communion of the Church; and the Presbytery upon his application be satisfied therewith, and judge that he ought to be absolved, and thereupon give warrant for his absolution, he is to be brought before the congregation, and there also to make free confession of his sin and sorrow for it, to call upon God for mercy in Christ, to seek to be restored to the communion of the Church, promising to God, through grace, new obedience, and more holy and circumspect walking, as becomes the Gospel, and that this appearance before the congregation be as often as Church judicatories shall find may be for edification and trial of the professing penitent's sincerity; and being satisfied in this, then the minister and congregation are to praise God, who delighteth not in the death of a sinner, but rather that he should repent and live; as also for blessing the ordinance of excommunication, and making it effectual, by his Spirit, to the recovering of this offender, to magnify the mercy of God through Jesus Christ, in pardoning and receiving to his favour the most grievous offenders, whensoever they unfeignedly repent and forsake their sins; but before the minister proceed to absolution, he is to pray with the congregation to this effect: "That the Lord Jesus Christ, Prophet, Priest, and King of his Church; who, with the preaching of the Gospel, hath joined the power to bind and loose the sins of men; who hath also declared, that whatsoever by his ministers is bound on earth shall be bound in heaven; and also, that whatsoever is loosed by the same shall be loosed and absolved in heaven, would mercifully accept his creature N., whom Satan of long time hath held in bondage, so that he not only drew him to iniquity, but also so hardened his heart that he despised all admonitions; for the which his sin and contempt, the Church was compelled to excommunicate him from the society of the faithful; but now, seeing the Holy Spirit, by his grace, hath so prevailed, that he is returned and professeth repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, that it may please God, by his Spirit and grace, to make him a sincere and unfeigned penitent; and, for the obedience of our Lord Jesus Christ unto death, so to accept of this poor, believing, and returning sinner, that his former disobedience be never laid to his charge; and that he may increase in all godliness, so that Satan in the end may be trodden under foot by the power of our Lord Jesus Christ; and God may be glorified, the Church edified, and the penitent saved in the day of the Lord."

2. Then shall follow the sentence of absolution, in these or the like words:—"Whereas thou N. hast, for thy sin, been shut out from the communion of the faithful, and hast now manifested thy repentance, wherein the Church resteth satisfied, I, in the name of the Lord Jesus, before this congregation, pronounce and declare thee absolved from the sentence of excommunication, formerly denounced against thee, and do receive thee to the communion of the Church, and the free use of all the ordinances of Christ, that thou mayest be partaker of all his benefits, to thy eternal salvation."

3. After this sentence of absolution, the minister speaketh to him as to a brother, exhorting him to watch and pray, and comforting him as there shall be cause; the elders embrace, and the whole congregation holdeth communion with him, as one of their own; and the absolution should be intimated in all the Churches where the excommunication was intimated.

XII.

Sess. 12, April 19, 1707, ante meridiem.—Commission to some Ministers and Ruling Elders, for considering and discussing several Affairs referred to them.

The General Assembly, taking into consideration that there are several weighty affairs which they cannot overtake, do, therefore, nominate and appoint their reverend brethren, Messrs William Crichton, minister at Edinburgh, &c. &c.; to be commissioners of this General Assembly to the effect after mentioned, with full power to the said persons or their quorum, which is hereby declared to be any twenty-one of the said Commissioners, whereof fifteen are always to be ministers, to meet and convene within the Assembly-House at Edinburgh, the first day after the dissolution of this Assembly, at ten hours in the forenoon; and afterwards the first Wednesday of August, November, and March, and oftener, when and where they shall think needful and convenient, with power to the said Commission to choose their own Moderator: And such like, the General Assembly fully empowers and authorises their said Commissioners, or their quorum, to cognosce and finally determine, as they shall see cause, in every matter referred, or that shall be referred to them, by an act or order of this Assembly, except it be otherwise remitted to them, and to do every thing contained in, and conform to the instructions to be given to them by this Assembly, and to advert unto the interest of the Church on every occasion, that the Church and present establishment thereof do not suffer or sustain any prejudice which they can prevent, as they will be answerable; and they are hereby strictly prohibited and discharged to meddle in any other matters than what are committed or referred to them as above mentioned; and in all their actings, they are to proceed according to the acts and constitutions of this Church, and do nothing contrary thereto, or to the prejudice of the same; declaring that in and for all their actings they shall be accountable to and censurable by the next General Assembly, as they shall see cause; and this Commission is to continue and endure till the next General Assembly; and members are required to attend the diets of the Commission, and the absentees ordered to be noticed, according to the 17th Act of the late Assembly.

XIII.

Sess. 12, April 19, 1707, ante meridiem.—Instructions to the Commission of the General Assembly.

1. That the Commission, as often as they shall see cause, apply to the Government, or any magistrate, for their countenancing of and concurring with the judicatories of the Church, in what the law allows, and for putting in execution the laws against Popery and profaneness, and seeking redress of grievances, and abuses and disorders, committed contrary to the established doctrine, worship, discipline, and Presbyterian government of this Church, the contempt of the censures of the judicatories thereof inflicted on scandalous persons, settling vacant churches, and regulating the poor, by using endeavours for providing maintenance and labour for them.

2. [Same as in 1703, 1704, and 1705.]

3. [Same as in 1704 and 1705.]

4. [Same as in 1705.]

5. [Same as in 1703, 1704, and 1705.]

6. The said Commission are empowered to give advice and assistance to any Synod or Presbytery in difficult cases, as they shall be applied unto by them for that effect.

7. The said Commission are empowered to give all due encouragement and assistance to any proposals which may be made to them about endeavours for reformation of manners, and for the effectual curbing and suppressing of profaneness and vice.

8. The Commission are appointed to take special care to keep and maintain unity in the Church upon all emergencies, especially amongst the ministers thereof; and to gain such as separate therefrom; and to suppress error and schism in this Church, and prosecute the authors and spreaders of books and pamphlets tending thereto, as is by another act recommended to Presbyteries, and to take notice how any who have been censured by preceding Assemblies or Commissions thereof have carried; and to take off the said censures, or proceed to further censure, as the said Commission shall see cause; and further, the General Assembly does hereby renew the first paragraph of the 18th Act of the late General Assembly, concerning Schism and Disorders, and appoints the same to stand as an instruction to this Commission.

9. That the Commission endeavour to make effectual whatever hath been by this or preceding Assemblies agreed upon, concerning the erecting of schools in the North, the Highlands, and Islands, and what else may tend to the advancement of religion and reformation in these places; as also to give all due assistance and encouragement for propagating the knowledge of God and our Lord Jesus Christ in these and foreign parts of the world.

10. That the Commission have a special respect to the 9th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1703, concerning the Planting of Vacant Churches in the North, the Highlands, and Islands, and supplying thereof with ministers and probationers; and the Commission are hereby empowered to proceed according to the said act in so far as they shall find it needful.

11. Seeing there is not a full report made to this Assembly concerning the libraries, Irish Bibles, Psalm-Books, and Catechisms, and about the state of the Church in the Highlands and Islands, and the remaining idolatrous, Pagan, and Popish superstitious customs in some places there—the General Assembly recommends to this Commission to prosecute the instructions given thereanent by the Assembly, anno 1706, to their Commission, and to use all means in their power for extirpating these idolatrous and superstitious practices; and to take care that the charges of any who have been employed about the same be reimbursed out of the money given by her Majesty for these ends.

12. The General Assembly hereby empowers their Commission to give all due assistance to the several Universities and Colleges, when any minister is called to any office therein, and to receive appeals and references, and finally to determine in the same.

XIV.

Sess. ult., April 21, 1707.—Act concerning Planting of the Highlands, and maintaining Bursars, &c.

The following overtures were brought in from the Committee, to whom the consideration of the state of the Church in the North and Highlands was remitted, viz., 1^{mo}, That it be inquired how the 9th and 16th Acts of the General Assembly, anno 1699, and the 9th Act of the General Assembly, 1703, are observed. 2^{do}, That inquiry should be made what bursars there are having the Irish language, and how the acts made concerning them are obeyed, particularly the 13th and 14th Acts of the Assembly, 1704; and 5th and 11th Acts of the General Assembly, 1705. 3^{tio}, That at each Assembly, the names of the Irish bursars be called for, and an account thereof given in to the Clerk; as also, what hope there is of their being useful in this Church: Which overtures being considered by the General Assembly, they did, and hereby do, approve thereof, and empowered their Commission to put the same, and the acts therein mentioned, in execution, and to take the same under consideration at their first meeting after the rising of this Assembly.

XV.

Sess. ult., April 21, 1707.—Act against Innovations in the Worship of God.

The General Assembly of this Church, taking into their serious consideration that the purity of religion, and particularly of divine worship, and uniformity therein, is a signal blessing to the Church of God, and that it hath been the great happiness of this Church, ever since her reformation from Popery, to have enjoyed and maintained the same in a great measure, and that any attempts made for the introduction of innovations in the worship of God therein have been of fatal and dangerous consequence: Likeas, by the 5th Act of the Parliament, anno 1690, and 23d Act of the Parliament, 1693 years, and the Act lately passed for security of the present Church Establishment, the foresaid purity and uniformity of worship are expressly provided for; and being well informed, by representations sent from several Presbyteries of this Church, that innovations, particularly in the public worship of God, are of late set up in some places in public Assemblies within their respective bounds, and that endeavours are used to promote the same, by persons of known disaffection to the present Establishment both of Church and State; the introduction whereof was not so much as once attempted, even during the late Prelacy; and considering also that such innovations are dangerous to this Church, and manifestly contrary to our known principle, (which is, that nothing is to be admitted in the worship of God but what is prescribed in the Holy Scriptures,) to the constant practice of this Church, and against the good and laudable laws made since the late happy Revolution for establishing and securing the same, in her doctrine, worship, discipline, and government; and that they tend to the fomenting of schism and division, to the disturbance of the peace and quiet both of Church and State: Therefore, the General Assembly being moved with zeal for the glory of God, and the purity and uniformity of his worship, doth hereby discharge the practice of all such innovations in divine worship within this Church, and does require and obtest all the ministers of this Church, especially those in whose bounds any such innovations are or may happen to be, to represent to their people the evil thereof, and seriously to exhort them to beware of them, and to deal with all such as do practise the same, in order to their recovery and reformation; and do instruct and enjoin the Commission of this Assembly to use all proper means, by applying to the Government or otherwise, for suppressing and removing all such innovations, and preventing the evils and dangers that may ensue thereupon to this Church.

 XVI.

Sess. ult., April 21, 1707.—Act concerning the Scriptural Songs.

The General Assembly, upon Report of their Committee for Overtures, who were appointed to receive the report of those named to put in order the remarks of Presbyteries upon the version of the Scriptural Songs, finding that but very few Presbyteries have sent in their remarks upon these Songs, and that even those who have made any remarks upon them, judge the said version not yet fit for public use; do, therefore, recommend it to the several Presbyteries to be careful yet to revise the said Songs, and transmit their opinion thereanent to the next Assembly; and, in the meantime, appoints those who were nominated by the Commission of the late General Assembly to revise these Songs at Edinburgh, yet to meet, and again revise the same, and report to the next General Assembly; and adds Mr John M^rBride to that Committee.

 XVII.

Sess. ult., April 21, 1707.—Act concerning the Revising the Overtures about the Method of Procedure in Ecclesiastical Judicatories.

The General Assembly, considering that the large Overtures concerning the discipline and method of procedure in ecclesiastical judicatories in the Church of Scotland, transmitted by the General Assembly, anno 1705, to Presbyteries, may be very useful to ministers and judicatories, and deserve yet to be farther considered by Presbyteries, in order to complete a method and form of procedure in ecclesiastical judicatories; do, therefore, recommend it to the several Presbyteries to compare the said large Overtures with the Form of Process approv'n in this Assembly, and report to the General Assembly from time to time their judgment, as to what is yet wanting and necessary to be added to both these overtures, that the same may be suppli'd, by adding to either of them, until this Church arrive at a complete system of rules in their proceedings in matters of discipline.

 XVIII.

Sess. ult., April 21, 1707.—To the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, the humble Address of the Ministers and Elders of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

May it please your Majesty,

When we consider the many and great advantages that we enjoy under your Majesty's happy Government, we look upon ourselves as obliged, in the conclusion of this our meeting, to renew those sincere acknowledgments of them which we did with all humility lay before your Majesty when we came first together. We cannot, without the deepest sense of gratitude, call to mind the tender and affectionate care which your Majesty hath expressed towards us in this juncture; for, in your royal goodness, you have not only honoured us with a representative entirely and deservedly acceptable to us, whose prudent and obliging management upon this occasion hath justly increased our esteem of him and confidence in him; but your Majesty hath also been concerned to preserve Christian unity and harmony amongst us, by manifesting a pious care not to straiten us in any thing wherein your Majesty did judge our principles were concerned. We have such grateful impressions of this your Majesty's wise and tender management, as will not only influence ourselves to a firm and steady loyalty, but put us upon using our utmost endeavours, in our stations, to maintain and promote it amongst all in whom we have an interest, in which we crave liberty to assure your Majesty that we shall not be wanting; for we cannot but acknowledge that we are under the highest obligations, not only as subjects, but as Protestants, to be constant and fervent in our addresses to the Sovereign God, that He would richly bless, long preserve, and prosper your Majesty, whose zeal for maintaining of our holy religion, and restoring to their just rights those that have been unjustly oppressed for adhering to it, hath been, in the course of your glorious reign, manifested to the world, and which, to our great joy, hath signally appeared in your Majesty's most gracious answer to the late address of our brethren, the distressed and persecuted Protestants of France.

May the great God, in his infinite merey, make your Majesty an illustrious instrument, not only to procure a firm peace to Europe, but to restore the ruined Zion of our Redeemer, in the dominions of that haughty monarch, who hath impiously gloried in his having razed it even to the foundation thereof; that the Almighty may be always your strength and defence; that he may always compass your royal person "with his favour as with a shield;" that he may long continue you to be a guardian to the Protestant churches, and liberties of Europe, a blessing to your loving people, and possess your Majesty at last of glory, honour, and immortality, is, and shall be, the fervent prayer of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Signed in our presence, in our name, and at our appointment, by Jo. STIRLING, Moderator.

XIX.

The next General Assembly of this Church is to be holden at Edinburgh, upon the third Thursday of April 1708, being the 15th day of that month.

This General Assembly was concluded with prayer, singing the 133d Psalm throughout, and pronouncing the blessing.

THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AND BEGUN AT EDINBURGH, APRIL 15, 1708.

I.

Sess. 1, April 15, 1708.—The Queen's Commission to David Earl of Glasgow produced, and ordered to be Recorded.

The General Assembly of this Church being constituted, there was produced to them, by the Right Honourable David Earl of Glasgow, her Majesty's commission, sealed with the Seal ordained to be kept and used in Scotland, in place of the Great Seal of Scotland, appointing him her Majesty's High Commissioner and representative in this Assembly, which Commission being publicly read with all due honour and respect, the General Assembly ordained the same to be recorded, the tenor whereof follows:—"ANNA," &c.

II.

Eadem Sessione.—Her Majesty's gracious Letter to the General Assembly.

Her Majesty's High Commissioner presented the Queen's most gracious Letter directed to this General Assembly, which was publicly read with all due honour and respect, and is appointed to be recorded in the registers of this Assembly, the tenor whereof follows:—

ANNE, R.

Right Reverend and well-beloved,

We greet you well. The full and satisfactory accounts we have had of your good conduct and prudent management in the last and former Assemblies, give us full confidence of your meeting now in the same good disposition, and that you will improve this opportunity to do what may be further necessary for promoting religion, discouraging profaneness and immorality, and preventing the growth of Popery. For these ends, we recommend to you to continue your care for providing for such churches as are still vacant with pious and learned ministers, in which you shall not want our concurrence and assistance. We have again chosen our right trusty and entirely beloved cousin and councillor, David Earl of Glasgow, to be our Commissioner, and to represent our royal person in this Assembly. And as we have sufficient experience of his fidelity to us, and of his ability and fitness to discharge this trust, so we know that he is acceptable to you. We have fully instructed him in all things we think needful; and, therefore, you may give him entire trust and credit. We cannot but acknowledge our satisfaction with the zeal and affection the ministers have shown at this juncture to our person and government, upon the appearance of an invasion by our enemies; and we doubt not of your being all in the same good disposition, and that ye will encourage the people in their loyalty to us, and in abhorrence of this design, which will subvert our religion, and all that is dear to us. We again assure you of our firm resolution to maintain the government of the Church of Scotland as it is by law established, and to protect you in the free enjoyment of all the rights and privileges that by law you are possessed of. And, not doubting but you will act in such a manner in this Assembly, as that we shall have new reasons to be satisfied with you, we bid you heartily farewell.

Given at our Court of St James's, the 16th day of April 1708, and of our reign the 7th year.

By Her Majesty's Command,

DAVID NAIRN.

III.

Sess. 3, April 17, 1708.—The General Assembly's Answer to the Queen's gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

We received your gracious letter with all dutiful respect, to our great joy and satisfaction; and we should be unaccountably defective in gratitude as well as duty to your Majesty, if we had not all the good disposition to manage ourselves answerably to what your Majesty expects, and is pleased to recommend to us. We look upon it as a signal blessing, which we earnestly pray God may long continue to us, that we have a Sovereign upon the throne that doth so constantly excite and encourage us to a zealous concern for true religion, and for preventing the growth of Popery, and discouraging profaneness and immorality, which we hope shall ever more and more oblige us in our stations, and by all methods proper for us, to make the best improvement of the present opportunity, which the late circumstances we were in do make so valuable, for promoting pure Christianity and a holy practice, and possessing all that we have any influence upon with a just abhorrence of Popery, and all its errors and superstitions, for the effectual suppressing whereof we must and do still rely upon your Majesty's royal authority, to cause put the good laws against the same to due execution. A pious, learned, and faithful ministry is, under God, the great support of our holy faith, and so necessary a mean for the advancing of the great end of the Gospel, that we are resolved, through Divine assistance, to continue our endeavours, to which your Majesty doth so religiously encourage us, to have all vacancies planted with such a ministry, being persuaded that your Majesty, in your royal wisdom, will be careful to discourage the opposition made to us in several places, by some that are not more disaffected to our Church constitution than to your Majesty's royal person and government. We have had such proofs of the sufficiency, firm loyalty to your Majesty, and good affection to this Church of the Earl of Glasgow, that as he is most acceptable to us, so we, with all thankfulness, acknowledge the obliging proof that your Majesty hath given of a kind regard to us in honouring this Assembly with such a representative of your royal person, to whom we shall give that entire trust and credit which your Majesty requires. It cannot but animate our zeal for your Majesty's person and government, that you are pleased to take notice, with so much goodness, of the affection and loyalty shown by the ministers of this Church in the late juncture, of the appearance of an invasion from your Majesty's enemies, when certainly it was their duty, and their plain and visible interest, to oppose and witness against an attempt so injurious to your Majesty, and your royal crown and dignity, and so destructive to our peace and our religion and liberties, and that threatened no less than the involving your Majesty's dominions in confusion and ruin; and, therefore, we find ourselves obliged, under the most sacred ties of duty and gratitude to your Majesty, our only rightful and lawful Sovereign, to encourage more and more the people under our care in their loyalty to your Majesty, and firm adherence to the present happy establishment. The renewed assurance which your Majesty is pleased to give of your firm resolution to maintain the Presbyterian government of this Church, as by law established, and to protect us in the enjoyment of all our rights and privileges, is to us most acceptable, and shall ever be obliging upon us to manage ourselves so as to witness our sincere and deep resentment of this blessing of your royal favour. That the God of heaven may prevent your Majesty always with the best blessings of his goodness, and ever guide your Majesty by His counsel, till, after a long and happy reign upon earth, He crown you with glory in heaven, is the earnest prayer of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Sess. 5, April 20, 1708.—Act against Popery.

The General Assembly, having under consideration what was represented to them by brethren from diverse corners of this Church, of the growth of Popery, and what may be the dangerous consequences thereof to the Church and Protestant religion, do seriously and earnestly recommend to ministers of the Gospel, that in their sermons and catechisings of the people under their charge, they use all due care and diligence in informing them of the abominable errors of the Church of Rome, and instructing them in the truths of the Reformed religion, and faithfully warning them of their danger from Popery.

V.

Sess. 9, April 23, 1708, post meridiem.—To the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, the most Humble, Faithful, and most Dutiful Address of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

May it please your Majesty,

We, your Majesty's most faithful and most loyal subjects, the ministers and elders of the General Assembly of this Church, have had so many marks of your royal favour, and are so happy in having such a Sovereign, that we should be enemies to ourselves, and regardless of all that ought to be dear to us, as men and as Christians, as well as unaccountably undutiful to your Majesty, if we were not earnest in our prayers to God for your Majesty's preservation, and for the stability of your throne, and if we had not the utmost abhorrence of the late no less bold than mischievous attempt that was made by the French monarch to invade this kingdom with an armed force, on design to assist a Popish Pretender in usurping the sovereignty of your Majesty's kingdoms, which you govern by a most unquestionable title, a title that we, in our stations, and by all means proper for us, are resolved ever to maintain with a firm and unbiassed zeal.

We both admire, and thankfully acknowledge, the wonderful goodness of the overruling God, in confounding the contrivances of your Majesty's declared enemy against your royal person and government, and for the subversion of the Reformed religion, and of the civil liberties, not only of these nations, but of Europe.

As we tremble at the thoughts of the calamities and bloody confusions that we were upon the brink of being involved in, so we shall ever preserve a thankful remembrance of the seasonable disappointment of our too well grounded fears, which, under the merciful God, we owe to your Majesty's wise conduct, the watchful and prudent care of his Royal Highness, the Lord High Admiral, and the fidelity and diligence of those that were employed by your Majesty for our defence and safety by sea and land.

Whatever encouragement, Madam, that French and Popish enemy might have had from this part of Britain, or elsewhere, we, for our part, cheerfully embrace this opportunity of declaring to the world, that all of the communion of this Church are so sensible of the blessings that, by the Divine favour, they enjoy under the government of your Majesty, their only rightful and lawful Sovereign, and of the many advantages of the late happy Revolution, of which the settling the crown upon your Majesty and Protestant successors is none of the least; they have so great a concern for the Protestant interest, and such an abhorrence of Popery and tyranny, and know so well the many dismal and lamentable instances of French government, that they have an equal detestation of the counsels of Versailles and pretensions of St Germain's.

That all attempts against your royal person and government may have no other effect than the firmer establishment of your throne, the greater security of the Protestant succession, and a deeper sense in your subjects of the happiness they enjoy under your Majesty's wise administration—and that such success may attend your Majesty's arms, and those of your allies, as shall set just limits to the exorbitant power of France, give a solid and lasting peace to Europe, and a comfortable relief and security, by the favour of God, to all the Protestant Churches at home and abroad; and that the gracious God may ever guide your Majesty by his counsel, till, after a long and happy reign upon earth, He crown you with glory in heaven, shall be the earnest prayers of,

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

April 23, 1708, post meridiem.—Act for suppressing Schism and Disorders in the Church.

The General Assembly, finding that there are several disorderly practices in sundry parts of this Church, to the great dishonour of God, and prejudice of the Church; therefore, they strictly enjoin and peremptorily appoint all the Presbyteries and Synods to take particular notice of all their members, preachers, or others under their inspection; and if they find any ministers or others to fall into irregularities or schismatical courses, that they duly call them to an account, and censure them, according to the merit of their fault, even to deposition of ministers and elders; and to apply to the Commission for their advice, as they shall see cause, and report their diligence herein to the next Assembly. And, in particular, the General Assembly hereby refers the disorders and schismatical courses of Mr James Farquhar, minister of Tyrie, and Mr John McNeilie, probationer, entirely to the Commission to be appointed by this Assembly; hereby empowering the said Commission to call these persons before them, and to censure them as they shall be found to deserve.

VII.

April 24, 1708.—Act concerning a Solemn National Thanksgiving.

The General Assembly of this National Church, considering what a surprising deliverance the gracious God hath been pleased, in his infinite goodness, to bestow upon us in this land, in particular, from a threatened invasion of cruel enemies, whereby, according to the unchangeable course of Popery and tyranny, by which this invasion was managed, we were inevitably to lay our account, not only with the scattering of our families and spoiling of our goods, but also the violent invading of our persons and consciences, by methods of cruelty worse than fire and faggot, as the known massacres of Paris, in the year 1572, and of the Protestants in Ireland, in the year 1641, and the continued cruelties used against the Protestants in France, especially since the year 1685, can testify and witness to the world; and that God did thus graciously appear for us when we were unworthy of the least kind regard from him, being a people laden with iniquity, and that have not rendered unto God according to his benefits: We, from a dutiful sense of this signal care, and seasonable appearance of Divine Providence for this Church and nation, cannot but look upon it as our duty to lift up our souls in blessing the God of our salvation for this and all his other wonders of mercy that he hath wrought for this Church and nation, and to call all persons in this National Church to give to the infinitely wise God the glory of his free goodness, taking shame and confusion of face to ourselves, because of our highly aggravated iniquities, and searching and trying our ways, and turning again to the Lord, from whom we have deeply revolted—repentance, reformation, and showing mercy to the poor, being the best evidences of thankfulness for the great mercies of the infinitely holy God, and the only way to secure a continuance of our blessings. The General Assembly doth likewise call and seriously exhort all persons of this Church to join with their thanksgiving earnest prayers to God, that he would turn us to himself in his dear Son, our only propitiation, and to one another in ways of truth, justice, and holiness; that he would bless and preserve our gracious Queen, in whose life, under him, our peace and safety are so much bound up; that he would graciously direct all her councils, and give such success to her arms, and those of her allies, by sea and land, against the common enemy, as shall, through his blessing, bring these desolating wars to an end, that shall be for his own glory, and the comfort and joy of all sincere lovers of truth and righteousness; that he would preserve his Gospel to us in its purity while sun and moon endure; that he would compassionate our distressed Protestant brethren abroad, and deliver them from the oppression of their cruel enemies; that God would assist the ministers and other members of this Church, and judicatories thereof, to acquit themselves so faithfully to God, and dutifully towards her Majesty's person and government, as may more and more engage her Majesty to be propitious and favourable to this Church, in its worship, discipline, and government, and give all encouragement to the orderly exercise thereof, in its several judicatories; that he would, in his compassion, give seasonable weather, and crown the year with his mercy; and, above all, that he would give us grace to fear him and his goodness, inclining our hearts to obey his voice, that he may not be provoked to turn and do us hurt, after all the great good he hath done us. And the General Assembly appoints the said thanksgiving to be observed in all the parishes within this National Church upon the first Thursday of June next, being the third day of that month.

VIII.

Sess. 12, April 26, 1708, post meridiem.—Commission to some Ministers and Ruling Elders, for considering and discussing several Affairs referred to them.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration that there are several weighty affairs which they cannot overtake; do therefore nominate and appoint their reverend brethren, Messrs William Carstares, Principal of the College of Edinburgh, Moderator, &c., to be Commissioners of this General Assembly, to the effect after mentioned, with full power to the said persons, or their quorum, which is hereby declared to be any twenty-one of the said Commissioners, whereof fifteen are always to be ministers, to meet and convene within the Assembly-House at Edinburgh, the first day after the dissolution of this Assembly, at ten hours in the forenoon, and afterwards the first Wednesday of July, last Wednesday of September, first Wednesday of December, and first Wednesday of March next, and oftener, when and where they shall think needful and convenient; with power to the said Commission to choose their own moderator. And suchlike, the General Assembly fully empowers and authorises their said Commissioners, or their quorum, to cognosce and finally determine, as they shall see cause, in every matter referred, or that shall be referred, to them by any act or order of this Assembly, except it be otherwise restricted, and to do every thing contained in, and conform to the instructions to be given to them by this Assembly, and to advert unto the interest of the Church on every occasion, that the Church and present establishment thereof do not suffer or sustain any prejudice which they can prevent, as they will be answerable; providing this general clause be not extended to particular affairs or processes before Presbyteries and Synods, that are of universal concern to or influence upon the whole Church. And the said Commission are hereby strictly prohibited and discharged to meddle in any other matters than what are committed or referred to them as above mentioned; and in all their actings they are to proceed according to the acts and constitutions of this Church, and do nothing contrary thereto, or to the prejudice of the same; declaring, that in and for all their actings they shall be accountable to and censurable by the next General Assembly, as they shall see cause; and this Commission is to continue and endure till the next General Assembly, and members are required to attend the diets of the Commission, and the absentees ordered to be noticed, according to the 17th Act of the Assembly, 1706. And for the better attendance of members on the Commission, the General Assembly prohibits the Presbyteries of Edinburgh, and other Presbyteries within twelve miles thereof, to meet any of the days appointed for the meetings of the Commission.

IX.

Sess. 12, April 26, 1708.—Instructions to the Commission of the General Assembly.

1. [Same as in 1707.]
2. [Same as in 1703, 1704, 1705, and 1707.]
3. [Same as in 1704, 1705, and 1707.]

4. [Same as in 1705 and 1707.]
5. The said Commission is to apply to her Majesty for the civil sanction to fasts and thanksgivings, as occasion requires, and to specify the causes thereof.
6. [Same as in 1707.]
7. [Same as in 1707.]
8. The Commission are appointed to take special care to keep and maintain unity in the Church upon all emergencies, especially among the ministers thereof, and to gain such as separate therefrom, and to suppress error and schism in this Church, and prosecute the authors and spreaders of books and pamphlets tending thereto, as is by other acts recommended to Presbyteries; and to take notice how any who have been censured by preceding Assemblies, or Commissions thereof, have carried, and to proceed to farther censure, as the said Commission shall see cause. And further, the General Assembly does hereby renew the first paragraph of the 18th Act of the General Assembly, 1706, concerning schism and disorders, and appoints the same to stand as an instruction to this Commission.
9. That the Commission endeavour to make effectual whatever hath been by this and preceding Assemblies agreed upon, concerning the erecting of schools in the North, the Highlands, and Islands, and what else may tend to the advancement of religion and reformation in these places, as also to give all due assistance and encouragement to any proposals that may be made for propagating the knowledge of God and our Lord Jesus Christ, in these and foreign parts of the world, and to apply to and correspond with the Lords of Council and Session about this design; and, if need be, to address her Majesty thereanent; and to write to Presbyteries, from time to time, to excite charitable persons in their bounds to contribute towards that design, and Presbyteries to return accounts of their diligence in that matter to the said Commission. And, further, it is referred to the Commission to use their endeavours for putting in execution the 5th Act of the late Assembly, entitled, "Act anent a School in every Parish, and a contribution thereanent;" as also the 8th Act of that same Assembly, entitled, "Act for Suppressing of Popery, and Preventing the Growth thereof;" and likewise the 15th Act of that Assembly, entitled, "Act against Innovations in the Worship of God."

10. [Same as in 1707.]

11. That the said Commission receive and consider any representations or references that shall be made to them by Presbyteries, and others concerned, about large and spacious parishes, and use all means proper to them for obtaining new erections in such parishes, or stipends to collegiate ministers in the same.

12. Seeing there is not a full report made to this Assembly concerning the libraries, Irish Bibles, Psalm-Books, and Catechisms, and about the state of the Church in the Highlands and Islands, and the remaining idolatrous, paganish, and Popish superstitious customs in some places there, the General Assembly recommends to this Commission to prosecute the instructions given thereanent by the Assembly, anno 1706, to their Commission, and to use all means in their power for extirpating these idolatrous and superstitious practices; and to take care that the charges of any who have been employed about the same, be reimbursed out of the money given by her Majesty for these ends.

13. The General Assembly hereby empowers their Commission to give all due assistance to the several universities and colleges when any minister is called to any office therein, and to receive appeals and references, and finally to determine in the same.

X.

Sess. 13 et ult., April 27, 1708.—Act and Recommendation concerning Ministerial Visitation of Families.

The General Assembly, finding that overtures concerning the ministerial visitation of families have been transmitted to the several Presbyteries within this National Church for their opinions thereanent, and that the plurality of the Presbyteries who returned their opinions about the same have consented to the passing of these overtures in manner after mentioned; and the General Assembly, judging that what is therein proposed may be of great use to the ministers of the Gospel, though not as binding rules, yet as a help to them when they go about that necessary work of family visitation; therefore, this General Assembly did unanimously, and hereby do, recommend the same as such to the several ministers of this National Church, the tenor whereof follows:—

“Seeing, for the faithful discharge of ministers’ work, they ought, besides what is incumbent to them in the public congregation, to take special care and inspection of the particular persons and families under their oversight and charge, in order to which, it hath been the laudable custom of this Church, at least once a year, if the largeness of the parish, bodily inability in the minister, or other such like causes, do not hinder, for ministers to visit all the families in their parish, and oftener, if the parish be small, and they be able to set about it.

“For the more uniform and successful management of which work, although in regard of the different circumstances of some parishes, families, and persons, much of this work, and the management thereof, must be left to the discretion and prudence of ministers in their respective oversights, yet these following advices are offered and overtured as helps in the management thereof, that it may not be done in a slight and overly manner.

“1. First of all, it seems needful that ere a minister set out to this work he should labour to have his own heart in a suitable frame for it, by exciting in himself the love of God, and the desire of the salvation of his people’s souls, and the sense of the weight of the charge given him, to watch for souls as one who must give an account, and of the difficulty of this part of his work in particular; for perhaps it may be found no less difficult to apply to particular families, and persons therein, teaching and warning every one, than it is to dispense the word in common in the public congregation.

“2. That such a time in the year be chosen for such ministerial visitation, as the families whom he visits may be best at leisure to meet with him, when they may be expected at home, and least incumbered with affairs; and it were fit, that when a minister designs to visit any part of his parish, intimation thereof should be made either in public from the pulpit, or some other way, that they may order their affairs so that he may have opportunity to meet with them at home.

“3. It is fit when a minister designs to visit any part of the parish, that he be accompanied with the elder of the bounds, and that before they go forth to the work they may confer together concerning the state and condition of the persons and families of these bounds, that the minister may be able to speak the more suitably to their condition, and as may be most for edification.

“4. When they enter a house or family, after a short account of the design of the visit, and expression of their wishes and desires for the blessing of God upon the family, and that, above all, their souls may prosper, it were fit to take an account of the names of the family, parents, children, and servants, and to inquire for certificates from them who are lately come to the parish, and to mark them in their book or roll for catechising; and to take notice who can read, and of the age of children when capable to be catechised.

“5. After the minister has got an account of the persons dwelling in the family, he may speak to them all in general of the necessity of regeneration, and the advantages of serious religion and godliness, of piety towards God, and justice and charity towards man.

“6. And next, more particularly, to the servants, of their duty to fear and serve God, and to be dutiful, faithful, and obedient servants, and of the promises made to such, commending to them the reading of the Scriptures as they can, and prayer in secret, and love and concord among themselves; and, in particular, a holy care of sanctifying the Lord’s Day.

“7. The minister may apply his discourse to the children as they are capable, with affectionate seriousness, showing them the advantage of knowing, loving, seeking, and serving God, and remembering their Creator and Redeemer in the days of their youth, and honouring their parents; and to remind them how they were dedicated to God in baptism; and when of age, and fit, and after due instruction of the nature of the covenant of grace and the seals thereof, to excite them to engage themselves personally to the Lord, and to desire and prepare for, and take the first opportunity they can of partaking of the Lord's Supper; to be especially careful how they communicate at first, much depending thereon, (and such of the servants as are young are to be exhorted hereto in like manner,) exciting them also to daily reading of the Scriptures, and to secret prayer, and sanctifying the Lord's Day.

"8. After the minister has spoken to servants and children, he should speak privately to the master and mistress of the family about their personal duty toward God, and the care of their own souls' salvation, and their obligation to promote religion and the worship of God in their family, and to restrain and punish vice, and encourage piety, and to be careful that they and their house serve the Lord, and sanctify the Lord's Day; and after this, it may be fit to exhort masters to take care that God be worshipped daily in the family, by prayer and praise, and reading the Scriptures. Secundo, Concerning the behaviour and conversation of the servants, and their duty towards God and man, and how they attend the worship of God in their family; how they attend the public worship on the Lord's Day, and how they behave after sermons; if any of them be piously inclined; if they make conscience of secret prayer and reading the Scripture. Tertio, If there be catechising and instructing the ignorant and weak; if due care be taken in educating the children; and, particularly, if they be put timeously to school, and how they profit thereat; and how the Lord's Day is spent after sermons in the family, and in secret; in all which the minister may mix in suitable directions, encouragements, and admonitions, as he shall see cause, and most for edification.

"9. It may be useful to inquire who have Bibles, and to encourage them who are able to get a Bible of their own, and to make diligent and religious use thereof; and to commend to parents and masters of families to have the Confession of Faith, Catechisms, and other good books, for instruction in faith and manners.

"10. If any be tainted with errors or given to vice, they should be particularly dealt with and spoken to, either privately or before others, as may be most for edification; and all are to be exhorted that are in the family to watch and edify one another, and to carry toward any that walk disorderly according to the rule, Matthew xviii. 15.

"11. As the minister is to exhort all in the family to peace and love among themselves and their neighbours, so, if there be any difference and division, either in the family or with the neighbours, the minister should endeavour to remove the same, and to make peace, and excite to follow it with all men as far as possible.

"12. It may be also inquired at those who received tokens to communicate the last season for it whether they have made use of them or not; and those who have communicated may be inquired privately how they have profited thereby, and excited to remember and pay their vows to the Lord.

"13. If there be any in the parish who keep not church communion with us, whatever their motives be, ministers ought to deal with God for them, and with themselves, in such a way as may be most proper to gain them, and exoner our own consciences before God and his people, waiting if God peradventure will prevail with them; who can tell but our making them sensible of our tender love and affection to their persons, especially to their souls, giving them all due respect, and doing them all the good we can, yet still discountenancing their sin, may in the end be blessed of God for their good. Jude 22, 23; 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25.

"Seeing there is need for all this of much prudence, zeal for God, and love to souls, and affectionate seriousness, all this should be carried on with dependence on God, and fervent prayer to Him, both before a minister set forth for such work, and with the visited, as there shall be access to, and opportunity for it."

XI.

Sess. 13 et ult., April 27, 1708.—Act concerning Ministers and Probationers having the Irish Language as to their Settlement.

The General Assembly does hereby discharge all the Presbyteries of this Church for the future to concur with any call or design of settling any minister or probationer having Irish in any congregation in the Lowlands, unless such persons have been for a year at least in the Highlands supplying vacancies, and no call offered to them; and in that case, Presbyteries are allowed to settle them, but with this condition, that so soon as a call comes from any Highland parish needing one having the Irish language, that such persons shall be transported.

And the General Assembly hereby renews all former acts made anent planting the Highlands, and refers it to their Commission to take care that the same be put to due execution.

XII.

Sess. ult., April 27, 1708.—Act for the better Observation of the Lord's Day.

Forasmuch as ministers from diverse parts of this National Church do represent that there is a general profanation of the Lord's Day, by travelling thereupon, carrying goods, driving cattle, and other abuses, to the great scandal of religion, and manifest breach of many good laws, and acts of Parliament and General Assemblies; which the General Assembly of this Church being desirous to prevent, in so far as is competent to them, therefore, they did, and hereby do, appoint each Presbytery within this Church to nominate two or three of their number to attend the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, at their first circuit that falls to be in their bounds, and to represent to their Lordships the profanation of the Lord's Day by the foresaid wicked and sinful practices: And the General Assembly does seriously recommend to the said Lords of Justiciary to take such effectual courses as they in their wisdom shall think fit to restrain and punish the foresaid abuses, which the Assembly will acknowledge as a singular service done to God and his Church: And they do in the meantime enjoin all the ministers of this Church from their pulpits to advertise their people among whom such practices are, of the great hazard their immortal souls are in by such courses, and that if they continue therein there will be a necessity to represent to the Lords Justices all transgressors of the laws made against profaning of the Sabbath, and warn them to abstain therefrom in time coming: And, further, the General Assembly enjoins ministers and church judicatories to take care that former acts of Assembly made against breach of the Lord's Day be observed, and not only to proceed with ecclesiastical censures, but to apply to the justices of the peace in their bounds, and other magistrates, for putting in execution the good laws already made against the breach of the Sabbath and other immoralities.

XIII.

Sess. ult., April 27, 1708.—Act, Overture, and Recommendation, concerning Probationers and Intrants to the Holy Ministry.

The General Assembly, considering that it is of great importance and advantage to this Church that none be licensed to preach the Gospel as a probationer, or be settled in the ministry, but such as are duly qualified for that holy work: Therefore, the General Assembly does seriously recommend to all Presbyteries the punctual observance of all the acts already made concerning probationers or intrants to the ministry: And, farther, the General Assembly transmits it as an overture to the several Presbyteries, that, before any Presbytery receive any upon trial, in order to his being licensed, they appoint three or four of their number privately to converse with him, and to take trial of his knowledge in divinity, and particularly the modern controversies; and of what sense and impressions he has of religion upon his own soul; and that they make report of their diligence herein before the Presbytery admit him to the probationary trials. And, in regard there may be in Presbyteries different sentiments as to men's sufficiency for the ministry, even upon the second trials, and that it cannot but weaken the hands of intrants when their sufficiency is contested, even in the Presbytery that ordains them; and that it may occasion division if the Presbytery shall proceed to ordain notwithstanding of the protestations of their brethren on the head of insufficiency; the Assembly transmits as an overture, that in this case, the Presbytery shall refer the whole affair to their respective Synods, and that the Synod shall appoint some of their number to examine coram the intrants whose abilities and fitness are thus questioned, and give directions to the Presbyteries in such cases as they shall see cause: And, lastly, the General Assembly recommends the strict observance of these things to the several Presbyteries until the next Assembly, and appoints Presbyteries to be careful to give their remarks thereupon, that the same may be turned into a standing act and constitution of this Church, if the Assembly shall see cause.

XIV.

Sess. ult., April 27, 1708.—Recommendation for preventing competing Calls.

The General Assembly recommends it to the several Presbyteries to think upon some overture to prevent competitions of calls; and in case of such competitions, how to prevent their coming to superior judicatories; as also, an overture to prevent the giving of a second call by a different parish to any minister or probationer, during the dependence of a prior call from another parish or parishes, and process thereupon, and until the first call and process be discussed.

XV.

Sess. ult., April 27, 1708.—Act and Reference concerning the Publishing a Version of the Scriptural Songs.

The General Assembly do instruct and appoint their Commission maturely to consider the printed version of the Scripture Songs, with the remarks of Presbyteries thereupon; and, after examination thereof, they are hereby authorised and empowered to conclude and establish that version, and to publish and emit it for the public use of the Church, as was formerly done on the like occasion, and when our version of the Psalms was published in the year 1649; and seeing there are many copies of the said version lying on the author's hand, it is recommended to ministers and others to buy the same for private use in the meantime.

XVI.

Sess. ult., April 27, 1708.—Act concerning the larger Overtures, about the Method of Procedure in Church Judicatories.

The General Assembly, finding that many Presbyteries have not as yet returned their opinion about the large overtures concerning the method of procedure in ecclesiastical judicatories, which were transmitted to them by former Assemblies; they do hereby, of new, require the several Presbyteries forthwith to take these overtures under their consideration, and send in their opinions about the same to the Commission of this Assembly, to be by them prepared against the next Assembly.

XVII.

Sess. ult., April 27, 1708.—Act appointing the Diet of the next General Assembly.

The next General Assembly of this Church is appointed to be held at Edinburgh upon the second Thursday of April, 1709 years, being the fourteenth day of that month.

This General Assembly was concluded with prayer, singing of the 124th Psalm throughout, and pronouncing of the blessing.

JOHN DUNDAS, Cls. Eccl. Scot.

[The following Acts, in the Original Edition, are appended to those of 1708, not having been inserted in their proper place.]

Sess. 5, April 20, 1708, post meridiem.—Acts concerning the Proposals about Propagating Christian Knowledge, Suppressing Popery, Erecting Schools, &c.

The General Assembly does resolve, that they will appoint a committee to receive reports from Presbyteries, how the 5th Act of the General Assembly, 1707, entitled, "Act anent Schools in every Parish;" and the 8th Act of that same Assembly, entitled, "Act for Suppressing Popery, and Preventing the Growth thereof," have been obeyed, and to receive reports from the several Presbyteries as to what advance is made in their bounds, in the subscriptions towards the design of propagating Christian knowledge, and in the contributions of the quarter centesima, for encouragement of such as shall be sent in mission to those places where Popery abounds; and the Assembly earnestly recommends to and enjoins the several Synods and Presbyteries to see to the punctual execution of these two acts, and do ordain an account of their diligence herein to be inserted in their books: And that committee, when named, are hereby empowered to act and manage in these matters, under the inspection and by the direction of the Commission to be appointed by this Assembly.

ACT OF THE COMMISSION OF 1708.

At Edinburgh, the 28th April 1708, post meridiem.

The Commission of the General Assembly, taking into consideration what is referred to them in their instructions by the late General Assembly, concerning the propagating of Christian knowledge; and finding that diverse of their number, and some others, were named by the said Assembly for that end, and for other affairs specified in two acts of the same Assembly, but the times and places of their meetings not having been concerted, this Commission appoints the same to be within the Assembly-House, the last Thursday of each month, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, and oftener, as the said Committee shall think fit; and they are from time to time to report an account of their diligence to this Commission.

THE PRINCIPAL ACTS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY, HOLDEN AND BEGUN AT EDINBURGH, APRIL 14, 1709.

I.

Sess. 1, April 14, 1709.—The Queen's Commission to David Earl of Glasgow produced, and ordered to be Recorded.

The General Assembly of this Church being constituted, there was produced to them, by the Right Honourable David Earl of Glasgow, her Majesty's commission, sealed the 11th day of April current, with the Seal ordained to be kept and used in Scotland in place of the Great Seal of Scotland, and of the same tenor with former commissions, appointing him her Majesty's High Commissioner and representative in this Assembly; which commission being publicly read with all due honour and respect, it is by order of this Assembly recorded in their books, ad futuram rei memoriam.

III.

Sess. 3, April 16, 1709.—The General Assembly's Answer to her Majesty's most gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty, &c.

IV.

Sess. 4, April 18, 1709, ante meridiem.—Act concerning People's Behaviour in time of Divine Worship.

The General Assembly, considering the great reverence and holy fear that is owing to the infinitely glorious and holy God by his rational creatures, especially when they are employed in acts of immediate worship, such as prayer and praise; do, therefore, seriously recommend it to persons of all ranks, that, considering in whose presence they are, and with what deep humility the glorious God is to be adored by sinful men, they would forbear bowing, and other expressions of civil respect, and entertaining one another with discourses, while divine worship is performing, and holy ordinances are dispensing; and that as to this matter, people carefully observe what is enjoined in the first head of the Assembly's Directory for the Public Worship of God in this Church, entitled, "Of the Assembling of the Congregation, and their Behaviour in the Public Worship of God;" and ordains this to be intimated in the several congregations of this Church.

V.

Sess. 4, April 18, 1709, ante meridiem.—Act concerning Planting the Highlands, and Probationers having the Irish Language.

The General Assembly, considering that several probationers who have lived in the Highlands in their childhood, but through disuse have lost much of the Irish language, yet upon application thereto have soon recovered it, and have been very useful, and that some probationers, who, in their younger years, have lived in the Highlands, and had the Irish language, and can still speak it, do, notwithstanding, excuse themselves from preaching in that language, whereby the acts of Assembly are eluded; therefore, and in order to the more effectual planting of the Highlands, the General Assembly does appoint and ordain that when any Presbytery is to take a young man under trial, who hath lived for some time of his younger years in the Highlands, or where the Irish language is generally spoken, they write to that Presbytery in whose bounds he hath lived the said time, to make inquiry whether such a person hath the Irish language, or might soon acquire it, and upon report that he hath it, or may soon acquire it, that he be sent to supply in the Highlands, as one that hath the Irish language; and if the Presbyteries receiving such men on trials shall neglect the premises, and settle any in these circumstances in a congregation having only the English language, the Assembly certifies such Presbyteries that they shall be censured, and the person so settled shall be transportable to any Highland congregation that shall call him, and shall be liable to be sent as a supply to the Highlands, notwithstanding any such settlement; and the General Assembly does empower their Commission to be named by them to receive complaints from any Presbytery or parish in the Highlands, who shall find themselves leased in this matter, and to put this present Act in execution in all points.

 VI.

Sess. 5, April 19, 1709, post meridiem.—Act and Recommendation for furthering the Design of propagating Christian Knowledge.

The General Assembly, taking into their serious consideration the instructions given by the last Assembly to their Commission, to give all due assistance and encouragement to any proposals to be made for propagating the knowledge of God and our Lord Jesus Christ in the North, the Highlands, and Islands, and foreign parts of the world; and that the said Assembly had appointed a Committee to receive in reports from Presbyteries of the advances made in the subscriptions for promoting the foresaid design, and to act and manage in that matter under the inspection and by the direction of the foresaid Commission; and the General Assembly having heard the report of the said Commission, that there are now very considerable advances made in the said subscriptions; and her Majesty having, by her royal proclamation, dated the 18th day of August last bypast, with the advice of her Privy Council, approven of and recommended the foresaid charitable design, and declared her resolution to grant her letters patent for erecting the subscribers into a society and corporation for managing that affair; and the General Assembly, considering that the glory of God, and the advancement of the kingdom of Christ, in the eternal salvation of the immortal souls of people, are deeply interested in this truly pious and glorious design, and that the zeal and forwardness of others, both in England and the United Provinces, in carrying on such a work, hath been blessed of God with wonderful and comfortable success; does, therefore, with all earnestness, beseech and exhort all the people of this National Church to contribute their best endeavours, in their stations, to promote this noble and excellent undertaking; and, particularly, that in zeal for the glory of God, and in pity and compassion toward many thousands in this Church and nation, especially in the Highlands and Islands, who live in barbarity and ignorance, and toward so great a part of the world as is this day perishing for lack of knowledge, they would cheerfully embrace this precious opportunity of honouring the Lord with their substance, and making to themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness. And the Assembly does seriously recommend to the ministers and elders of this Church to go through their respective parishes on such days as the several Presbyteries shall appoint, and receive and collect subscriptions for or contributions of money from such persons whose hearts God shall incline thereunto; and that ministers take occasion, on a Sabbath before they begin this work, to read and intimate this act from the pulpit to their respective congregations, and to exhort, excite, and stir up their people to subscribe or contribute, according to their ability, on this occasion. And the Assembly does hereby recommend to the several Presbyteries within this Church to be careful to promote the taking subscriptions and making collections for the end foresaid, within their respective bounds, so soon as conveniently can be; and where parishes are vacant, that they appoint some of their number to preach, and intimate this act, and join with the elders of such parishes, if any be, or with such of the heritors or parishioners as will assist in taking subscriptions and making collections as is above expressed; and that the several Presbyteries do, without delay, call for and take in reports from all the ministers within their bounds, containing a particular account of the subscribers, and sums subscribed for, and money collected in each parish, and send an extract thereof, subscribed by their moderator and clerk, to the Clerk of the Commission of this Assembly; and thereafter, upon advertisement from the said Commission, send in the principal subscriptions and money collected, to be delivered to any person whom the Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge, when constituted, shall appoint to receive the same, upon his receipt thereof. And the General Assembly does hereby instruct and empower their Commission to be appointed by them, to promote by all proper means the foresaid glorious design of propagating Christian knowledge; and appoints the agents of the Church to dispatch printed copies of this act to all the Presbyteries of this Church, for the ends foresaid.

VII.

Sess. 5, April 19, 1709, post meridiem.—Act concerning the Better Attendance of Members on the General Assembly.

The General Assembly, finding that some Presbyteries send not their full representation to General Assemblies, and that some commissioners from Presbyteries do not attend conform to their commissions, does, therefore, strictly enjoin all the Presbyteries of this Church to send their full representation to Assemblies; and that they make choice of such as are able to attend, and whom they have reason to believe will give due attendance: And with respect to such as are chosen commissioners to General Assemblies, who wholly absent themselves from the Assembly, the Clerk of the Assembly is hereby appointed to send their names to their several Presbyteries and Synods; and the Assembly ordains, that for the first fault they be censured by their Presbytery, and that the censure be recorded in their Presbytery books; and for the second fault, that they be censured by the Synod of their bounds, and the censure recorded in their Synod books; and that for the third fault they be suspended by their respective Synods or Presbyteries, conform to the Act, Session 27, ult. August 1647, entitled, "Act for censuring Absentees from the General Assembly." And in case it shall happen that any of the persons chosen to represent Presbyteries shall fall sick, or have any other lawful excuse for not attending the Assembly, the General Assembly appoints, that in due time they acquaint the moderator of their Presbytery therewith, and the moderator is hereby empowered to call a meeting of the Presbytery pro re nata, in order to make choice of other fit persons in their room; and if the Presbyteries or Synods shall find cause to sustain the excuses offered by their said commissioners, the Assembly ordains that what is offered by way of excuse be also recorded in their books; and as to such persons as shall withdraw from Assemblies before the dissolution thereof, the Clerk of the Assembly is ordained to send an account thereof to their Presbyteries, that they may, as they see cause, admonish them therefor.

VIII.

April 25, 1709.—Act concerning a Fast.

The General Assembly, being sensible of the many evident signs of God's displeasure against this land, manifested by the unseasonableness of the weather, especially in seed-time, with the sad effects thereof in the present dearth and threatened scarcity, and the great loss of flocks and cattle in divers parts of the land, and by many spiritual plagues on all ranks, justly inflicted upon us by an holy and righteous God, for our great and manifold sins, committed against the clearest Gospel light, and most solemn engagements and deepest obligations to the contrary; and notwithstanding of the many signal mercies and remarkable deliverances that God hath been pleased to bless us with, the forgetting of which, and our unanswerableness thereto, is none of the least of our transgressions, does judge it necessary that a day be set apart for solemn prayer, fasting, and humiliation, before the Lord, for the causes above mentioned: And the General Assembly, finding it convenient at this time to refer it to the several Synods and Presbyteries, to name a day for this solemn duty, does ordain them, as soon as possible, to set apart a day for solemn public prayer, fasting, and humiliation, in all the churches within their respective bounds, upon the accounts foresaid: And the General Assembly recommends it to all the ministers of this Church to be most serious in holding forth to their people on that occasion the heinous sins of this land, both of the former and present time, and for their direction therein, they are hereby referred to the causes of former public fasts, especially in the years 1690, 1700, and 1701; and to exhort all ranks of persons to flee to Christ for peace and pardon, and to unfeigned repentance, thorough reformation, and fervent prayer to God, that he would be graciously pleased to pour out the Spirit from on high upon persons of all ranks, bless his ordinances with more success, remove all our distempers, heal our breaches, defeat all designs tending to the disturbing of the public peace, either by foreign invasion or intestine broils in favour of a Popish Pretender; that he would preserve and bless the person of our gracious sovereign the Queen, direct her councils, and favour her forces by sea and land with success, so as that this long, bloody, and expensive war, may issue in such a peace as shall be for the interest of the reformed religion, and for the relief and restitution of distressed Protestants in France and elsewhere, and of the just liberties of Europe, that he would bless the season, and crown the year with his goodness. And the Assembly ordains these presents to be read by all the ministers of this Church, from their pulpits, upon the Lord's Day before the day appointed by their respective Synods or Presbyteries for the observation of this fast; and for this end, that these presents be printed, that copies thereof may be in readiness for the commissioners from the several Presbyteries to take along with them.

 IX.

Sess. 12, April 26, 1709, ante meridiem.—Commission to some Ministers and Ruling Elders, for discussing several Affairs referred to them.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration that there are several weighty affairs which they cannot overtake, does, therefore, nominate and appoint their reverend brethren, Messrs Thomas Vernour at Balmaelellan, &c., &c., to be commissioners of this Assembly to the effect after mentioned, with full power to the said persons or their quorum, which is hereby declared to be any twenty-one of the said commissioners, whereof fifteen are always to be ministers, to meet and convene within the Assembly-House here at Edinburgh, the first day after the dissolution of this Assembly, at ten o'clock in the forenoon; and afterwards, the first Wednesdays of August and January next, and oftener, when and where they shall think needful and convenient, with power to the said commissioners to choose their own moderator. And suchlike, the General Assembly fully empowers and authorises their said commissioners, or their quorum above mentioned, to cognosce and finally determine as they shall see cause, in every matter referred or that shall be referred to them by any act or order of this Assembly, except it be otherwise restricted, and to do every thing contained in and conform to the instructions to be given them by this Assembly, and to advert unto the interest of the Church on every occasion, that the Church, and present establishment thereof, do not suffer or sustain any prejudice which they can prevent, as they will be answerable; providing this general clause be not extended to particular affairs or processes before Presbyteries or Synods, that may not be of universal concern to or influence upon this whole Church: And the said commissioners are hereby strictly prohibited and discharged to meddle in any other matters than what are committed or referred to them as above mentioned; and in all their actings they are to proceed according to the acts and constitutions of this Church, and do nothing contrary thereto, or to the prejudice of the same; declaring, that in and for all their actings they shall be accountable to and censurable by the next General Assembly as they shall see cause, and this Commission is to continue and endure till the next General Assembly, and members are required to attend the diets of the said Commission, and absentees therefrom ordered to be noticed, according to the 17th Act of the General Assembly, 1706; and for the better securing of a quorum and attendance of members on the Commission, the General Assembly prohibits the Presbytery of Edinburgh, and other Presbyteries within twelve miles thereof, to meet any of the days or weeks appointed for the meetings of the Commission; and such of the members of these Presbyteries as are of the Commission are required all of them to give punctual attendance on the diets thereof, and Presbyteries at a greater distance, who have four or more members on the Commission, are to take care that at least two of them attend each diet of the Commission.

April 26, 1709.—Instructions to the Commission of the General Assembly.

1. That the Commission, as often as they shall see cause, apply to the government or any magistrate, for their countenancing of and concurring with the judicatories of the Church in what the law allows, and for putting in execution the laws against Popery and profaneness, and seeking redress of grievances, and abuses, and disorders, committed contrary to the established doctrine, worship, discipline, and Presbyterian government of this Church, the contempt of the censures of the judicatories thereof inflicted on scandalous persons; and that they assist Presbyteries and Synods in planting vacancies as they shall be applied to by them.

2. That when any of the ministers who served under the late prelacy, whose lives and doctrine may render them useful to this Church, shall apply for reception unto a share of the government thereof, the General Assembly do hereby empower and recommend to their Commission to receive them, according to the thirteenth paragraph of the 16th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1697, and that the foresaid Commission be careful to get due information from the Presbyteries where these persons applying did or do officiate, and for the time reside.

3. That the said Commission use their utmost diligence for getting payment of the money gifted by the Queen's Majesty for defraying the public charges of the Church, and in disposing thereof, they are to take care that the public debts of the Church be first paid, according to an act passed in this Assembly thereanent, and to the instructions given to the Commission of the General Assembly, anno 1706, which are hereby renewed; and that the encouragement granted by the General Assembly, anno 1699, to ministers and probationers who go North, or to the Highlands and Islands, to preach, be rendered effectual; and likewise, that the said Commission cause defray the extraordinary charges and expenses that Presbyteries and ministers have been at, particularly in these places, in carrying on the planting of Churches and other public affairs of the Church there.

4. And the foresaid Commission is hereby empowered to cognosce and finally determine in all references already made or to be made to them by this Assembly; and in references and appeals for transporting ministers to the North, the Highlands and Islands, which shall be brought before them, according to the overtures made thereanent, anno 1699; and that transportations to any parishes in these places, whether privileged by former acts of Assembly or not, be carried on, and that in the most expeditious way, providing that the Commission do not meddle with sentences of Synods, excepting causes particularly referred to them.

5. The said Commission is to apply to her Majesty for the civil sanction to fasts and thanksgivings, as occasion requires, and to specify the causes thereof.

6. The said Commission is empowered to give all due advice and assistance to any proposals that may be made to them about endeavours for reformation of manners, for the effectual curbing and suppressing of profaneness and vice.

7. The Commission is empowered to give all due assistance to any Synod or Presbytery in difficult cases, as they shall be applied unto by them for that effect.

8. The Commission is appointed to take special care to keep and maintain unity in the Church upon all emergencies, especially among the ministers thereof, and to gain such as separate therefrom, and to suppress error and schism in this Church, and prosecute the authors and spreaders of books and pamphlets tending thereto, as is by another act recommended to Presbyteries; and to take notice how any who have been censured by preceding Assemblies, or Commissions thereof, have carried, and to proceed to further censure, as the said Commission shall see cause. And further, the General Assembly does hereby renew the first paragraph of the 18th act of the General Assembly, 1706, concerning schism and disorders, and appoints the same to stand as an instruction to this Commission; and that they take notice of what misrepresentations may be made, either at home or abroad, of the doctrine, worship, or constitution of this Church, and that they take all decent and proper methods for the vindication thereof.

9. That the Commission endeavour to make effectual whatever hath been by this and preceding Assemblies agreed upon concerning the erecting of schools in the North, the Highlands, and Islands, and what else may tend to the advancement of religion and reformation in these places, as also to give all due assistance and encouragement to any proposals that may be made for propagating the knowledge of God, and our Lord Jesus Christ, in these and foreign parts of the world, and to apply to and correspond with the Lords of Council and Session about this design; and, if need be, to address her Majesty thereanent; and to write to Presbyteries from time to time to excite charitable persons in their bounds to contribute towards that design, and to correspond with the Society in Scotland for Propagating Christian Knowledge, when the same shall be established, in order to advance the said pious design; and Presbyteries are appointed to return accounts of their diligence in that matter to the said Commission. And further, it is referred to the Commission to use their endeavours for putting in execution the fifth Act of the Assembly, 1707, entitled, "Act anent a School in every Parish, and a Contribution thereanent;" as also the eighth Act of that same Assembly, entitled, "Act for Suppressing of Popery, and Preventing the Growth thereof;" and likewise the fifteenth Act of that same Assembly, entitled, "Act against Innovations in the Worship of God."

10. That the Commission have a special respect, so far as the present circumstances require, to the ninth Act of the General Assembly, 1703, concerning the Planting of Vacant Churches in the North, the Highlands, and Islands, and supplying thereof with ministers and probationers; and the Commission is hereby empowered to proceed according to the said Act, in so far as they shall find it needful.

11. That the said Commission receive and consider any representations or references that shall be made to them by Presbyteries and others concerned, about large and spacious parishes, and use all means proper for them for obtaining and rendering effectual, and preserving new erections in such parishes, or stipends to collegiate ministers thereto.

12. Seeing there is not a full report made to this Assembly concerning the libraries, Irish Bibles, Psalm-Books, and Catechisms, and about the state of the Church in the Highlands and Islands, and the remaining idolatrous Pagan and Popish superstitious customs in some places there, the General Assembly recommends to this Commission to prosecute the instructions given thereanent by the General Assembly, anno 1706, to their Commission, and to use all means in their power for extirpating these idolatrous and superstitious practices; and to take care that the charges of any who have been employed about the same be reimbursed out of the money given by her Majesty for these ends.

13. The General Assembly hereby empowers their Commission to give all due assistance to the several Universities and Colleges, when any minister is called to any office therein, and to receive appeals and references, and finally to determine in the same.

XI.

Sess. 12, April 26, 1709, ante meridiem.—Act for erecting Public Libraries in Presbyteries.

The General Assembly, considering how much it might tend to the advancement of learning, that public libraries were settled, at least one in every Presbytery, and many pious and charitably inclined persons having contributed toward that good design; and the Assembly being desirous to encourage and promote the same, does hereby earnestly recommend it to such of the Presbyteries of this Church as have not received any of the books sent for that end from England, to contribute amongst themselves, in order to lay a foundation for a library at each Presbytery seat; and also endeavour to procure collections in their several parishes, of more or less, according as their parishioners are able and willing to give and bestow for that end; and the General Assembly refers it to their Commission to use all endeavours to forward the execution of what is hereby recommended; and Presbyteries who have got a share of these libraries are desired to send accounts to the Commission of their receipt of them, where they are fixed, how they have observed the rules sent with these libraries, and what improvements they are making of them, and other things relating to the said libraries, enjoined to them by acts of former Assemblies and their Commissions.

XII.

Sess. 12, April 26, 1709.—Act against Bourignonism.

The General Assembly, understanding that the dangerous errors of Bourignonism, already condemned by this Church, do, notwithstanding, abound in some places of this nation; does, therefore, earnestly recommend it to Presbyteries to use all effectual means to prevent the spreading of these and other errors, as is enjoined by the 10th Act of the General Assembly, held anno 1701, and other acts therein mentioned; and, further, does hereby instruct their Commission to use all suitable endeavours for that purpose; and, particularly, if there be any meetings of such as are tainted with these errors, that care be taken to suppress the same.

XIII.

Sess. 13, April 26, 1709, post meridiem.—Act concerning the Larger Overtures about the Method of Procedure in Church Judicatories, and other Overtures mentioned in the 13th, 14th, and 16th Acts of the General Assembly, 1708.

The General Assembly, finding that many Presbyteries have not as yet returned their opinions as to the overtures and recommendation concerning probationers and intrants to the holy ministry, and the recommendation concerning competing calls, contained in the 13th and 14th Acts of the last Assembly, nor their remarks upon the larger overtures, concerning the method of procedure in ecclesiastical judicatories, which were transmitted to them by former General Assemblies; does hereby, of new, require and enjoin the several Presbyteries forthwith to take under their consideration the said larger overtures, especially the Second Chapter, Sections first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and ninth thereof; and Chapter Third, Sections first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, twelfth, and thirteenth of that Chapter; and also the said other overtures and recommendations, and send in their opinions about the same to the Commission of this Assembly, against their meeting in August next; and the General Assembly recommends it to Presbyteries to take the methods which they shall judge most effectual, either by appointing diets in hunc effectum, or committees, to consider the said overtures, and report to the Presbyteries: and, to the end that the Assembly may be in the better case to consider these and other things of importance that may come before them, the General Assembly recommends it to Presbyteries to choose the wisest and most grave and experienced of their number to represent them in the next Assembly.

XIV.

Sess. ult., April 27, 1709.—Act concerning Bursaries.

The General Assembly, having inquired how Synods and Presbyteries have obeyed what is enjoined by the 13th Act of the General Assembly, held anno 1704, entitled, “Act for bestowing Bursaries upon Students having Irish;” and, finding that some Synods and Presbyteries have been deficient in that matter, and judging it needful to continue the said act for some time, did, and hereby do, enjoin the several Presbyteries yet to collect and pay in their proportions of money for maintaining bursars in manner prescribed by the said act for hygone years; and Synods are appointed to see this done, and to record their diligence in this matter in their books, and bring an account thereof to the next General Assembly; and the General Assembly renews and revives the said act, and appoints the same to stand and be in force until the next Assembly; and, in the meantime, refers it to their Commission to think upon and prepare some overtures for the right application and management of the foresaid bursaries for the future, and report the same to the next General Assembly.

XV.

Sess. ult., April 27, 1709.—Act concerning Ministers deposed or suspended, and Probationers silenced.

The General Assembly, considering that Church judicatories and congregations are and may be imposed upon by ministers deposed or suspended, and probationers whose licences are taken from them and declared null, for irregularities and misdemeanours, to the great prejudice of the interests of religion; does, therefore, appoint the several Synods and Presbyteries of this Church to send accounts from time to time to the Clerk of the General Assembly, of all ministers who are or shall be deposed or suspended, and probationers who are or shall be silenced by them: And the clerk is hereby ordered to lay the same before the General Assembly, or Commission thereof, at their first meeting after it comes to his hand, that due and proper methods may be used to make the same publicly known to all concerned.

XVI.

Sess. ult., April 27, 1709.—Act appointing the Diet of the next General Assembly.

The General Assembly of this Church is appointed to be holden at Edinburgh, upon the last Wednesday of April next, 1710 years, being the twenty-sixth day of that month.

This General Assembly was concluded with prayer, singing of the 48th Psalm, from the 10th verse, and pronouncing of the blessing.

Collected and extracted from the Registers of the General Assembly, by Jo. DUNDAS, Cls. Eccl. Scot.

Sess. 1, April 26, 1710.—Act appointing the Queen's Commission to the Earl of Glasgow to be Recorded.

The General Assembly of this Church being constituted, there was produced to them, by the Right Honourable David Earl of Glasgow, her Majesty's commission, sealed at Edinburgh the 25th day of April current, with the seal ordained to be kept and used in Scotland in place of the Great Seal of Scotland, and of the same tenor with former commissions, appointing him her Majesty's High Commissioner and representative in this Assembly; which commission being publicly read with all due honour and respect, it is by order of this Assembly recorded in their books, ad futuram rei memoriam.

II.

Her Majesty's gracious Letter to the General Assembly, presented April 26, 1710.

ANNE, R.

Right Reverend and well-beloved,

We greet you well. We have made choice of our right trusty and well-beloved cousin, David Earl of Glasgow, to represent our royal person in this Assembly, having had many proofs of his fidelity to us, and his affection to the Church of Scotland, and other good qualities for discharging that trust, whom we have instructed in what we thought necessary for the present exigency; and, therefore, you may give entire trust to him. The experience we have of the calmness, decency, and orderly procedure in former Assemblies, very acceptable to us, and suitable to the prudence and wisdom of so great and reverend a meeting, does not suffer us to doubt, that you will at this time go on in the same way, and that you will proceed still to plant vacant churches with learned, diligent, and pious ministers; to promote religion and holiness, suppress vice, profanity, and impiety; and prevent the growth of Popery and Atheism. We take this occasion to repeat to you the assurances of our royal protection, for maintaining you in the full possession of your rights and privileges, as by law established. And so we bid you heartily farewell.

Given at our Court at St James's, the 29th day of March 1710, and of our reign the 9th year.

By Her Majesty's Command,

QUEENSBERRY.

III.

Sess. 3, April 28, 1710.—The General Assembly's Answer to the Queen's most gracious Letter.

May it please your Majesty,

We have so dutiful a sense of your Majesty's great goodness to us, in continuing to countenance our Assemblies by your royal authority—in being graciously pleased to give us repeated assurances of your protection and favour, and to maintain us in the full possession of our rights and privileges—in your tender care to prevent any thing that may disturb our peace and harmony, and to disappoint the designs of such as would either divide or make us uneasy, and in the many other great advantages that we enjoy under your wise and benign administration—that we look upon ourselves to be under the greatest obligations, cheerfully to embrace every opportunity of testifying our untainted loyalty and true affection to your Majesty's person and government. We can with confidence affirm, that we, and all the ministers of this Church whom we represent, will, upon all occasions, witness in our stations a sincere and constant zeal for your Majesty's honour, and the stability of your throne.

We do thankfully acknowledge that it is a particular instance of your Majesty's royal favour to us, that you have been pleased to make choice of the Earl of Glasgow to represent your royal person in this Assembly. His steady faithfulness to your Majesty, and the many proofs we have had of the wisdom and kindness of his management upon several other occasions, when he was clothed with his present high character, cannot but make him most acceptable to us, and oblige us to give him that entire trust and respectful regard that your Majesty expects we should, and he justly merits.

It is with no small joy that we find that the peaceable and calm procedure of former Assemblies is so acceptable to your Majesty, which cannot but engage us to be concerned to go on in the same way, that your Majesty may have full satisfaction in our management.

The just sense, Madam, that we ought to have of the infinite goodness of our God, in bestowing upon us the most valuable blessing of revealed religion, of the infinite love of our Redeemer, who came into the world to be the propitiation for our sins, and to destroy the works of the devil, and of the worth of the immortal souls of men, doth oblige us to acknowledge with all thankfulness to God the blessing we enjoy of being under the government of so religious a Sovereign, and heartily to fall in with what your Majesty so piously recommends to us, in using our utmost endeavours, in our stations, to promote religion and holiness, suppress vice, profanity, and impiety, prevent the growth of Popery and Atheism, and provide vacant churches with learned, diligent, and pious ministers.

And we crave leave upon this occasion to assure your Majesty, that we abhor all principles that stain the glory of the reformed Christian religion, and all opinions that have a tendency to shake the excellent and solid foundation upon which your Majesty's just title to the supreme government of your dominions, and the security of your throne in a Protestant succession, against all Popish Pretenders, are happily established.

May the God of heaven long preserve your Majesty, for the comfort and safety of all your good subjects, for the advantage of the Protestant interest both at home and abroad, and for a public blessing in the world; may he continue the peace of your dominions, and always crown your arms by sea and land with such success, as your Majesty may be in a capacity signally to contribute to the procuring a solid and safe peace to Europe, and such relief to distressed Protestants in France, Silesia, and elsewhere, as may answer your Majesty's known pious inclinations, and our earnest prayers and desires; and may your Majesty, after a long, peaceable, and happy reign, upon earth, be possessed of a crown of glory, righteousness, and life, in heaven.

May it please your Majesty, your Majesty's most faithful, most obedient, and most humble subjects, the Ministers and Elders met in this National Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Signed in our presence, in our name, and at our appointment, by

WILL. MITCHEL, Moderator.

Sess. 6, May 2, 1710.—Overtures anent Trying and Licensing Probationers for the Holy Ministry.

(An Act on this subject was passed in 1711.)

V.

Sess. 7, May 3, 1710.—Act and Recommendation concerning Soldiers under Scandals.

The General Assembly, finding that there are several references made to them by inferior judicatories of this Church, concerning soldiers under scandals, who refuse to submit to the discipline of the Church for removing the said scandals; for remedy thereof, they did resolve that this matter should be represented to the Right Honourable the Earl of Leven, Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's forces in Scotland; and did, and hereby do, appoint and ordain ministers, kirk-sessions, and Presbyteries, to apply to the magistrates of the bounds, and also to the commanding officer on the place, from time to time, as need requires, and crave that both officers and soldiers may be obliged to submit to the discipline of the Church according to law, and her Majesty's gracious proclamations against profaneness; and if this shall be refused or delayed, the Assembly do appoint that the matter be laid before the Commission of the General Assembly, that they may do further therein what the law directs.

And the Earl of Leven being present in the Assembly, the moderator, at the Assembly's desire, and in their name, did earnestly entreat his Lordship would assist and countenance the Church in this matter, and would give such orders as his Lordship should find most effectual, for bringing officers and soldiers to give all due submission and obedience to the censures of the Church. His Lordship was pleased to assure the Assembly, that as he was glad of any occasion to serve the interests of this Church, so he would take care to give all necessary directions in this matter.

VI.

Sess. 10, May 6.—Act for a Solemn Fast.

The General Assembly, taking into their serious consideration the many evidences of God's displeasure and fearful symptoms of approaching judgments, the great and crying sins of the land, atheism, irreligion, Popery, many errors and dreadful delusions, with immoralities of all kinds, are come to a great height, and that all these sins are heinously aggravated, as being committed by a professing people in a reformed land, against the clearest light of the glorious Gospel, and innumerable mercies that God hath been pleased to bless us with: And, notwithstanding of the many excellent laws made against these evils, and the royal proclamations which our most gracious Sovereign, out of a true zeal for the glory of God, has emitted, and that our woeful security under all these evils, plainly hold forth that many spiritual plagues are inflicted on us by a righteous and jealous God: Therefore, the General Assembly do judge it the duty of this Church, and of every person therein, to lay these things to heart, and to be humbled for them; and do appoint the second Thursday of July next to be set apart for solemn fasting and humiliation in all the churches within this land; and the General Assembly recommends to all the ministers in this Church to be free and faithful in holding forth to their people the heinous sins both of the former and present times, and in exhorting all ranks of persons to flee to Christ for peace and pardon, and to unfeigned repentance, reformation, and fervent prayer to God, that in his great goodness He would be pleased to pour down the Spirit of grace and supplication upon persons of all ranks, bless his ordinances with more success, remove all distemper, heal our breaches, defeat all designs of our restless adversaries, tending to the breaking of the public peace by open force, or secret contrivances, preserve and bless the person of our Sovereign, and direct her councils, and that the Lord of Hosts would continue to favour her forces by sea and land with success, so that this long, bloody, and expensive war, may issue in such a peace, as shall be for the glory of God, the interest of the Reformed religion, the relief of the distressed Protestants in France and elsewhere, the perpetual peace and prosperity of these lands, and for the honour of our Sovereign the Queen's Majesty, in this and all succeeding generations; and that the Lord would bless the season, and crown the year with his goodness: And the Assembly ordains these presents to be read by all the ministers of this Church from their pulpits, with grave and serious exhortations suitable to the occasion; and that public intimation hereof be made the Lord's Day immediately preceding the day appointed for observation of the said fast.

VII.

Sess. 10, May 6, 1710.—Act for the due Observation of the Fast now appointed by the General Assembly, and of Fasts and Thanksgivings which may be hereafter appointed.

The General Assembly, considering that by the 6th act of this Assembly, they have, for the weighty grounds and causes therein specified, appointed a solemn fast to be observed through this whole Church; and that it much concerns the honour of God and good of this Church, that the same be duly and religiously observed; do, therefore, recommend it to all the ministers of this Church, that with due prudence and zeal they do, in their preaching, reprove and warn of, and in prayer confess and acknowledge, the epidemical crying sins both of former and present times, highly aggravated by the violation of our solemn covenants and engagements, and many professed resolutions to the contrary: And the General Assembly does beseech and obtest people of all ranks to be sincere and serious in humiliation and supplication, and universal reformation, as they would find mercy of the Lord, and have deserved wrath averted, and would obtain the blessing of the Lord on themselves, and their posterity after them. And because it is much for the glory of God, and peace and welfare of this Church, that fasts and thanksgivings, whether appointed by the Church or the supreme magistrate, for just and necessary causes, be duly observed: Therefore, the General Assembly enjoins all the ministers and members of this Church religiously to observe all such fasts and thanksgivings, lest, by their contempt thereof, they provoke a holy and jealous God, and bring on this Church desolating and unavoidable judgments; and the General Assembly appoints Presbyteries and Synods to take particular notice of the due observation of this act, and ordains these presents to be intimated, together with the foresaid act for the fast, in all the congregations of this Church

VIII.

Sess. 10, May 6, 1710.—Act concerning Bills or Petitions for Charity.

The General Assembly does enact and declare, that in all time coming, no petitions for charity shall be transmitted to nor regarded by the General Assembly, unless the petitioners produce therewith ample testimonials as to their life and conversation, and recommendations from the Synod or Presbytery of the bounds where they reside, bearing such persons to be truly objects of charity.

IX.

Sess. 11, May 8, 1710.—Act for suppressing Bourignonism.

The General Assembly, finding by instructions from several Presbyteries to their commissioners, that the gross heresies and errors going under the name of Bourignonism are greatly prevailing in the bounds of several Synods in this National Church; they (as a remedy against the same) do appoint all ministers in whose parishes the foresaid errors do abound to preach most particularly and faithfully against the same; and that all Presbyteries in whose bounds the foresaid errors do prevail do oblige all schoolmasters, teachers, governors of youth, and chaplains within their province, to subscribe the Confession of Faith, as the confession of their faith; and if any of the foresaid persons refuse to do the same, that thereupon the Presbytery declare the said persons incapable of such offices, and apply to the heritors and heads of families concerned, in order to their discharging the said persons from the foresaid offices; and in case of their refusal to comply therewith, that the Presbytery do send up the names of the foresaid persons refusing to subscribe the Confession of Faith, unto the Commission of the General Assembly, together with the names of the parishes and families in which they reside, that so the said Commission may proceed against all such persons as they shall see cause. And all Presbyteries, in whose bounds there are any societies of Bourignonists, avowedly professing these principles, and dispersing the books containing the same, are hereby ordained to send in to the Commission of the General Assembly an exact and full account of the particular leading persons of the said societies, together with the names and errors of the books they are dispersing; and the said Commission is enjoined to take such measures as they shall judge most convenient for the effectual suppressing of the same; and they are hereby also instructed to apply to the Government for hindering of incorrect, false, and spurious translations of the Bible, to be spread abroad: And, lastly, the Assembly recommends to the professors of divinity within this National Church to make a full collection of the errors of Antonia Bourignon, and of such other errors as do reflect upon the nature, person, and offices of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to write a confutation of the same.

X.

Sess. 12, May 9, 1710.—Act concerning Bursaries and Students having Irish.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration, that now, through the mercy and goodness of God, most of the Lowland Presbyteries are competently planted, and that the promoting of knowledge, religion, and civility in the Highlands, is the common concern of this National Church; do, therefore, enact and appoint, that the one-half of the whole bursaries of all the Presbyteries within Scotland, the whole to be applied for the education of such youths as have the Irish language, in philosophy and divinity at the Colleges of Glasgow, Edinburgh, St Andrews, and Aberdeen, and that the same be paid to collectors to be appointed by the Presbyteries of Glasgow, Edinburgh, St Andrews, and Aberdeen, (which Presbyteries are to be accountable to their respective Synods concerned for what money they receive; and, for this end, that the Synods of Glasgow, Galloway, and Dumfries, pay in their bursaries to a collector to be appointed by the Presbytery of Glasgow, and under their inspection accountable to their Synod; in like manner, the Synods of Merse and Lothian to the Presbytery of Edinburgh; the Synods of Perth, Fife, and Stirling, to the Presbytery of St Andrews; and the Synods of Angus, Aberdeen, Moray, Ross, and Orkney, to the Presbytery of Aberdeen; and the other half to be disposed of to Lowland bursars as Presbyteries shall see cause, conform to the acts of the Assembly; and this to begin the first day of October next to come, and to continue for four years or longer, as the General Assembly shall see cause: And it is hereby declared, that the respective Synods to which the said bursaries do belong shall have the choice and presentation of the said Irish bursars; and that no person shall have the benefit of either Highland or Lowland bursaries but such as bring a testimonial or recommendation from their Synods respectively, bearing their having been examined by their Synod, and the Synod's good hopes of them as sober youths, piously inclined, and well-affected to the government of Church and State; and that they are good proficients in the Latin, and are such as they judge may in due time prove able ministers of the Gospel or schoolmasters; and if they be presented to Irish bursaries, bearing that they have the Irish language, and have obliged themselves to employ their talents in these services in the Highlands, either in the bounds of the Synods presenting and recommending them, or some other by their allowance: And the Assembly appoints the foresaid testimonials to be recorded, together with the bursars' names, and to be reported to each Assembly. And further, the General Assembly hereby renews the eighth Act of the Assembly, 1701, intituled, "Recommendation to Synods anent maintaining Bursars having the Irish Language," and the eleventh Act of the Assembly, 1705, entitled, "Act anent Bursars," and appoints the said acts to be observed until the General Assembly see cause to recal the same.

The General Assembly having had transmitted to them from their Committee for Overtures the representations of the Irish students in the College of Edinburgh, referred to said committee by the Assembly, upon Monday the first instant; and having heard an overture of the said committee, bearing that they were informed that some of the said students do want bursaries, and others of them who have recommendations in their favour have been greatly disappointed, and much discouraged in the prosecution of their studies; and, therefore, did overture, that the General Assembly should refer to and empower their Commission to be appointed by them to inquire how former recommendations about students have been observed, and to take care that the foresaid students be provided of bursaries, and have all due encouragement to prosecute their studies. The General Assembly having considered this overture, they do refer and empower according thereto in all points; the said students being always qualified in the terms of this act, and other acts above narrated.

XI.

Sess. 13, May 10, 1710.—Representation of the Society in Scotland for Propagating Christian Knowledge, with an Act and Recommendation thereupon.

The General Assembly, having heard and considered the representation of the Society in Scotland for Propagating Christian Knowledge, bearing that the said Society being established by her Majesty's letters patent, according to the desire of former General Assemblies, and commissions and committees thereof, and a nomination of the members of the said Society, made out of the subscribers, then brought in; and having met in a general meeting, made choice of a president, treasurer, secretary, and committee, in the terms of the said letters patent; and considering the trust reposed in them, and how much the glory of God is concerned in the matter, as also that our gracious Queen, and likewise the General Assembly, and other judicatories of this Church, and many charitable and piously inclined persons of all ranks, have showed their zeal for promoting the great design of the said Society, and many have contributed liberally for that end.

And the Society being desirous faithfully, diligently, and impartially, to discharge the said trust so as may most advance the said design, and be to the satisfaction of all good Christians, especially such as are contributors, found it needful, in the first place, to use all proper means to procure subscriptions and contributions, and to secure the same upon interest; and in order to this letters have been, since the beginning of November last, twice written to the several Presbyteries, and once to the Synods, anent the observation of what was recommended by the sixth act of the late General Assembly, and desiring that the said contributions might have been brought into the Society's treasurer; as also, letters have been written to the Justices of the Peace at their Quarter Sessions, and to the Magistrates of Burghs through Scotland, entreating their concurrence and assistance in promoting this good work in their several stations, according to her Majesty's pleasure, expressed in the said letters patent, copies whereof were transmitted with all the said letters: And though some reverend Presbyteries and ministers have showed a commendable concern in this matter, yet there is no account of any diligence from others, which, it is like, has fallen out through forgetfulness or some mistakes; and to remove the same the Society agreed unto, and caused print and disperse, a scheme of their designed management; and, therefore, craving in manner therein mentioned. The General Assembly, in compliance with the desire of the said Society, and for encouraging that pious and worthy design of propagating the knowledge of Christ, did, and hereby do, enjoin the exact observation of the said 6th Act of the late Assembly, where the same is not yet done, and appoints the several Presbyteries to see the same done, and to return to the secretary of the Society a report of their diligence, in the terms of the letters sent to them, as soon as they can.

And that the Society may the better know how to employ the interest of their stock when the same comes in, the General Assembly does hereby recommend to the several Synods concerned in the Highlands and Islands to inquire what parishes do need more schools than one, and how many they need, what is the extent of those parishes in length and breadth? As also, what ministers have more churches or places of public worship than one? And whether these churches do stand in different islands or not? And if there be a school for every kirk or island? Or any person in these places to teach children to read? Or any catechists? As also, in what place Popery abounds most? And where catechists will be needful? And the Assembly appoints Synods to send an impartial and true account of the above particulars to the secretary of the said Society, subscribed by their moderator and clerk, as soon as they can; and at furthest betwixt and the first day of April 1711, that the same may be laid before the Society and their committee, that they may have the whole matter before them, in order to the disposing of the annual rents of their stock, where it is most needful.

And that this work may not be retarded, the General Assembly does seriously exhort all ministers and other charitable persons, whose hearts God has inclined to favour this excellent design, that they forthwith put their contributions in the hands of the treasurer to the Society, that the same may be laid out upon interest, seeing the Society cannot dispose upon any of their stock, but only the annual rents thereof.

And that there may be the greater plenty of fit instruments to be employed on the said design, in the terms of her Majesty's letters patent, the General Assembly have, by the 10th Act of this Assembly, appointed, likeas they hereby do appoint, that the one-half of the whole bursaries of all the Presbyteries in Scotland be bestowed on hopeful and pious students having the Irish language for the space of four years, conform to the tenor of the foresaid Act. And the General Assembly does hereby enjoin and require the several Synods of this Church to see all the foresaid appointments put in due execution, and that they report an account of their diligence herein to the General Assembly, from time to time. And, lastly, the General Assembly does hereby appoint and ordain the commissions to be named by this and subsequent Assemblies, and likewise the whole Synods and Presbyteries within this Church, to give all due encouragement, countenance, and assistance, to the said Society, or those employed by them, as they shall be orderly applied to for that effect from time to time.

XII.

Sess. 13, May 10, 1710.—Act for preserving the Purity of Doctrine.

The General Assembly, considering that the purity of doctrine is a signal blessing to the Church of God, and that it hath been the great happiness of this Church, ever since her reformation from Popery, to have enjoyed and maintained the same; and that the avoiding all expressions in matters of faith, contrary to the form of sound words, tends not a little to preserve the said purity which is so desirable: And it being informed that in some places some expressions are used, and opinions as to some points of religion vented, which are not agreeable to our Confession of Faith and Catechisms, and the known sentiments of the greatest lights and most famous Gospel ministers wherewith this Church has been blessed: Therefore, the General Assembly does discharge all persons to vent any opinions contrary to any head or article of the said Confession and Catechisms, or use any expressions in relation to the Articles of Faith not agreeable to the form of sound words expressed in the Word of God, and the Confession of Faith and Catechisms of this Church, which are most valuable pieces of her reformation. And the General Assembly does hereby further enact, that no minister or member of this Church presume to print or disperse in writing any Catechism, without the allowance of the Presbytery of the bounds and of the commission; and the Presbytery is hereby appointed to lay any such Catechism before the commission ; and the General Assembly does enjoin and require Synods and Presbyteries carefully to advert to the observation of this act, and that they notice he transgressors thereof.

XIII.

Sess. 13, May 10, 1710.—Overtures for Regulating the Calling of Ministers.

Considering that the debates and contentions among those who claim votes in calling ministers, are ordinarily occasioned upon the account of their different inclinations, as to the person to be called. To prevent all such debates, it is overtured that the Assembly recommend to the several Presbyteries, when any parish is vacant, to take care to adjust all differences as to persons' rights to vote in a call to that parish, and to make up a list of the voters, and that all this shall be done before the Presbytery order the moderating a call ; 2do, Considering the great inconveniences of admitting proxies to compare before Church judicatories, and that it is contrary to the ancient and laudable practice of this Church, particularly in calling ministers, and that any person having a vote may signify his mind by a writ to the respective judicatories, which should be held as valid as if he were personally present to vote : Therefore, it is overtured, that the Assembly recommend to all judicatories of this Church not to admit proxies to vote and plead before them.

The General Assembly having heard and considered the foresaid overtures, they do transmit the same to the several Presbyteries of this Church, and appoints them to send in their opinion thereabout to the next General Assembly, that the said Assembly may turn the same into an act and standing rule of this Church, if the majority of Presbyteries agree thereto.

XIV.

Sess. 14 et ult., May 11, 1710.—Commission by the General Assembly to some Ministers and Ruling Elders for discussing several Affairs referred to them.

The General Assembly, taking into their consideration that there are several weighty affairs which they cannot overtake ; do therefore nominate and appoint their reverend brethren, Messrs Thomas Vernour at Balmaelellan, &c., to be commissioners of this Assembly, to the effect after mentioned, with full power to the said persons, &c. (The powers granted to the Commission are the same as in 1709.)

XV.

Sess. 14 et ult., May 11, 1710.—Instructions by the General Assembly to their Commission.

1. That the Commission, as often as they shall see cause, apply to her Majesty, or any inferior magistrate, for their countenancing of, and concurring with, the judicatories of the Church, in what the law allows, and for putting in execution the laws against Popery and profaneness, and seeking redress of grievances, and abuses, and disorders, committed contrary to the established doctrine, worship, discipline, and Presbyterian government of this Church, the contempt of the censures of the judicatories thereof, inflicted on scandalous persons ; and that they assist Presbyteries and Synods in planting vacancies, as they shall be applied to by them.

recommend to their Commission to receive them, according to the thirteenth paragraph of the 16th Act of the General Assembly, anno 1697; and that the foresaid Commission be careful to get due information from the Presbyteries, where these persons applying did, or do officiate, and for the time reside.

4. That the said Commission use their utmost diligence for getting payment of the money gifted by the Queen's Majesty for defraying the public charges of the Church; and in disposing thereof, they are to take care that the public debts of the Church be first paid, according to an act passed in the last Assembly thereanent, and to the instructions given to the Commission of the General Assembly, anno 1706, which are hereby renewed; and that the encouragement granted by the General Assembly, anno 1699, to ministers and probationers who go North, or to the Highlands and Islands, to preach, be rendered effectual; and, likewise, that the said Commission cause defray the extraordinary charges and expenses that Presbyteries and ministers have been at, particularly in these places, in carrying on the planting of churches, and other public affairs of the Church there.

5. And the foresaid Commission is hereby empowered to cognosce and finally determine in all references already made or to be made to them by this Assembly, and in references and appeals for transporting ministers to the North, the Highlands, and Islands, which shall be brought before them, according to the overtures made thereanent, anno 1699; and that transportations to any parishes in these places, whether privileged by former acts of Assembly or not, be carried on, and that in the most expeditious way; providing that the Commission do not meddle with sentences of Synods, excepting causes particularly referred to them.

6. That the said Commission appoint fasts and thanksgivings, as they shall see occasion, and specify the causes thereof, and apply to her Majesty for the civil sanction thereto.

7. The said Commission is empowered to give all due assistance to any proposals that may be made to them, about endeavours for reformation of manners, for the effectual curbing and suppressing of profaneness and vice.

8. The Commission is empowered to give all due assistance to any Synod or Presbytery in difficult cases, as they shall be applied unto by them for that effect.

9. The Commission is appointed to take special care to keep and maintain unity in the Church upon all emergencies, especially among ministers thereof; and to gain such as do separate therefrom, and to suppress error and schism in this Church, and prosecute the authors and spreaders of books and pamphlets tending thereto, as is by another act recommended to Presbyteries; and to take notice how any who have been censured by preceding Assemblies or Commissions thereof have carried, and to proceed to further censure as the said Commission shall see cause; and, further, the General Assembly does hereby renew the first paragraph of the 18th Act of the General Assembly, 1706, concerning schism and disorders, and appoints the same to stand as an instruction to this Commission; and that they take notice of what misrepresentations may be made, either at home or abroad, of the doctrine, worship, or constitution of this Church, and that they take all decent and proper methods for the vindication thereof.

10. That the Commission endeavour to make effectual whatever hath been by this or preceding Assemblies agreed upon, concerning the erecting schools in the North, the Highlands and Islands, and what else may tend to the advancement of religion, and reformation in these places; as also, to give all due assistance and encouragement to any proposals that may be made for propagating the knowledge of God and our Lord Jesus Christ in these and foreign parts of the world.

11. It is referred to the said Commission to use their endeavours for putting in execution the 5th Act of the Assembly, 1707, entitled, "Act anent a School in every Parish, and a Contribution thereanent;" as also the 8th Act of that same Assembly, entitled, "Act for Suppressing of Popery, and Preventing the Growth thereof;" and, likewise, the 15th Act of that same Assembly, entitled, "Act against Innovations in the Worship of God."

12. That the Commission have a special respect, so far as the present circumstances require, to the 9th Act of the General Assembly, 1703, concerning the planting of vacant churches in the North, the Highlands, and Islands, and supplying thereof with ministers and probationers; and the Commission is hereby empowered to proceed according to the said act, in so far as they shall find it needful.

13. That the said Commission receive and consider any representations or references that shall be made to them by Presbyteries and others concerned, about large and spacious parishes, and use all means proper for them, for obtaining and rendering effectual, and preserving new erections in such parishes, or stipends to collegiate ministers thereto.

14. Seeing there is not a full report made to this Assembly concerning the Irish libraries, Irish Bibles, Psalm Books, and Catechisms, and about the state of the Church in the Highlands and Islands, and the remaining idolatrous, Pagan, and Popish superstitious customs in some places there; the General Assembly recommends to their Commission to prosecute the instructions given thereanent by the General Assembly, anno 1706, to their Commission, and to use all means in their power for extirpating these idolatrous and superstitious practices; and to take care that the charges of any who have been employed about the same be reimbursed out of the money given by her Majesty for these ends. And the Commission is empowered to dispose upon any libraries that may come from England, and also the Bibles and Catechisms in Irish, that are here already.

15. The General Assembly hereby empowers their Commission to give all due assistance to the several universities and colleges when any minister is called to any office therein, and to receive appeals and references, and finally to determine in the same.

X.

May 22, 1711.—Act concerning Probationers, and settling Ministers, with Questions to be proposed to and Engagements to be taken of them.

The General Assembly, considering the great prejudice that may arise to this Church from the licensing too many probationers and persons not duly qualified, do, for preventing thereof, enact and appoint, that none be admitted to trials in order to be licensed, but such as have attended the profession of Divinity for six years, or have closely followed the study of Divinity, and of the languages, for that space at least, after they have past their course of Philosophy at the College, and made proficiency therein, in case their circumstances did not allow them to attend the profession, though it were to be desired that they should attend the profession of Divinity much of that time; but this shall not be extended to students having the Irish language, providing, that before any Presbytery license such students within the said six years, they first consult the General Assembly or Commission thereof, in the matter: And, further, the General Assembly do appoint and ordain that none be licensed in any Presbytery, except they have resided therein for the space of six years, or do produce to them sufficient testimonials from the Presbyteries in whose bounds they have last, or for the most part resided, bearing expressly, that it is the desire of these Presbyteries that those students should be entered upon trials; and such students as come from abroad shall produce satisfying testimonials from the Professors under whom they studied; and the time of their being abroad shall be accounted a part of the said six years; but none of these students shall be entered on trials for the space of a whole year after they come to Scotland: And the General Assembly does also appoint and ordain that the above space of six years being expired, and testimonials produced in manner foresaid, the Presbytery which is to take the trial of these students shall, before they enter them upon trials in order to be licensed, write letters to all the other Presbyteries within the Synod, acquainting them with their design; and at the next meeting of the Synod, they shall also acquaint the Synod thereof, and obtain their special advice and judgment in that particular: And the Assembly, considering that it is of great importance and advantage to this Church that none be licensed to preach the Gospel as a probationer, or be settled in the ministry, but such as are duly qualified for that holy work, they do seriously recommend to all Presbyteries the punctual observance of all acts already made concerning probationers and intrants to the ministry: And further, that before any Presbytery receive any upon trials, in order to his being licensed, they appoint three or four of their number privately to converse with him, and to take trial of his orthodoxy, knowledge in divinity, particularly the modern controversies, and other necessary qualifications for the ministry, and what sense and impressions he has of religion upon his own soul; and that they make report of their diligence herein before the Presbytery admit him to the probationary trials. And, moreover, the General Assembly, finding it inconvenient that the calls of parishes to probationers be lodged in their hands before their trials in order to ordination be over, and until the Presbytery be satisfied both as to their sufficiency and fitness for these parishes to which they are called; therefore, they do hereby discharge Presbyteries to put the call of any parish into the hands of the probationer called, and appoint them to keep the same still in their own hands, until the said probationer's trials be all over, and that the Presbytery be fully satisfied both as to his sufficiency and fitness for that parish: And the General Assembly, judging it fit that the same method should be followed in all Presbyteries as to the questions put to and engagements taken of probationers when licensed, and ministers when ordained or admitted; and that probationers and ministers should not only give sufficient proof of their piety, literature, and other good qualifications for the ministry, but also come under engagements to adhere to the doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of this Church, do therefore enact and appoint that the following Questions be put to all such as pass trials in order to be licensed, as also to such as shall be ordained ministers, or admitted to any ministerial charge or parish, and that they shall subscribe the Formula after set down, before they be licensed, ordained, or admitted, respectively: And the General Assembly hereby strictly prohibits and discharges the licensing, ordaining, or admitting of any who shall not give satisfying answers to these questions, and subscribe the Formula hereto subjoined.

QUESTIONS TO BE PUT TO A MINISTER ALREADY ORDAINED, AT HIS ADMISSION TO A PARISH.

You having been already ordained a minister of the Gospel of Christ, it is supposed that the usual questions were put to you, and that you did then declare, &c., (here the questions put to ministers at their ordination are to be repeated.) And then say, And do you not now consent and adhere to these declarations, promises, and engagements, and accept of, and close with the call to be minister of this parish; and promise, through grace, to perform all the duties of a faithful minister of the Gospel among this people?

FORMULA, TO BE SUBSCRIBED BY ALL SUCH AS SHALL PASS TRIALS, IN ORDER TO BE LICENSED, AND THAT SHALL BE ORDAINED MINISTERS, OR ADMITTED TO PARISHES.

I do hereby declare, that I do sincerely own and believe the whole doctrine contained in the Confession of Faith, approved by the General Assemblies of this National Church, and ratified by law in the year 1690, and frequently confirmed by divers Acts of Parliament since that time, to be the truths of God; and I do own the same as the confession of my faith: As likewise, I do own the purity of worship presently authorised and practised in this Church, and also the Presbyterian government and discipline now so happily established therein; which doctrine, worship, and Church government, I am persuaded are founded on the Word of God, and agreeable thereto: And I promise, that, through the grace of God, I shall firmly and constantly adhere to the same, and, to the utmost of my power, shall, in my station, assert, maintain, and defend the said doctrine, worship, discipline, and government of this Church, by Kirk-sessions, Presbyteries, Provincial Synods, and General Assemblies; and that I shall in my practice conform myself to the said worship, and submit to the said discipline and government, and never endeavour, directly nor indirectly, the prejudice or subversion of the same; and I promise, that I shall follow no divisive course from the present establishment in this Church; renouncing all doctrines, tenets, and opinions whatsoever, contrary to, or inconsistent with, the said doctrine, worship, discipline, or government of this Church.

XII.

Sess. 13, May 23, 1711.—Act concerning Students of Divinity, and others who go Abroad to Preach the Gospel.

The General Assembly being informed, that some have gone from this Church into other countries, and there take upon them to preach the Gospel, who have either been deposed from the ministry by the judicatories of this Church, for scandals they were found guilty of; or have pretended to a licence when they were not licensed; or who, upon their application to the judicatories of this Church, have not been admitted to trials; or, upon trials, have not been found fit and worthy to be licensed to preach—yet do retire to other countries where they are not so well known, in order to enter on trials; and after they are admitted in foreign places, do not recommend themselves by a holy life and ministerial conversation, to the reproach of the Church of Scotland where they were educated: Therefore, and for vindication of this Church, and to prevent as much as possible the evils that may arise from such practices, they hereby inhibit and discharge all young men educated in this Church, or students of divinity, to go to foreign places, and there offer themselves to trials for licence to preach the Gospel, and ordination to the holy ministry, unless they carry along with them sufficient testimonials from the professors of divinity under whom they studied, if they have attended the profession of divinity; and from the minister of the parish and Presbytery of the bounds where they resided; and Presbyteries are discharged to grant such testimonials, except upon due inquiry into the person's life and conversation, soundness in the faith, proficiency in studies, and abilities and fitness for the ministerial function: And appoints the Commission to acquaint ministers in foreign places, where such practices may fall out, with this act, and advertise them what testimonials they ought to receive.

XIV.

Sess. 13 et ult., May 23, 1711.—Act concerning the Inspection of Universities and Colleges.

XV.

Sess. 13 et ult., May 23, 1711.—Act concerning Preaching in Vacant Churches.
