LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

This list of abbreviations used in Experiment Station Record has been prepared in response to repeated requests, and has become necessary with the increased field covered by the Record. The number of periodicals from which abstracts are now made, some of them quite regularly and others only occasionally, includes some 1,600. These come from many countries and represent at least ten different languages. Some of them are journals issued at regular intervals, others are annuals, proceedings and transactions of societies and other organizations, reports of standing committees, State and municipal officers and institutions, while still others are public documents issued occasionally.

In general, the abbreviations used are those which have been quite commonly employed by others, although there are some departures. A simple form of abbreviation has been adopted, sufficiently full to suggest the title of the publication to one familiar with the literature. The aim has been to make the reader in a measure independent of any key, so far as the more common periodicals are concerned. There are many publications, however, which are less familiar to most readers, and hence a list giving the full title will be helpful in looking up articles in the original. The plan has been to follow the order of words as they appear in the full title, omitting unnecessary words. Brevity has been sought, but not to the extent of sacrificing clearness.

The orthographical usages of the various languages have not been followed strictly. In some cases long, composite words have been split up in making the abbreviations, for the sake of brevity and clearness. So much variation exists in the capitalization of important words in the title, even among journals in the same language, that it has been thought best to adopt the plan of capitalizing the principal words in all cases, regardless of the usages of the individual journals or the countries from which they are issued. This simplifies the abbreviations, at the same time giving rather more prominence to the words, and it removes a constant source of error in proof reading. The same rule has been followed in the full title, the principal words being capitalized, as is customary with publications issued in English.

In connection with the full title, the place of publication has been given where this could be ascertained or was found to be regular. Where there are two or more publications with similar titles, the place of publication of each is indicated in brackets as a part of the abbreviation, and this is also done in some other cases to better identify the periodical.

There is considerable confusion in the serial publications of some institutions, successive numbers appearing under slightly changed titles, or possibly as a new series. The occasional reports, bulletins, and leaflets of foreign institutions give, perhaps, the most trouble, owing to lack of consistency in the title. For example, a line of work will be reported one year from an agricultural college by a county council, apparently as one of the latter's publications, and the next year from the agricultural department of the university with which the college is affiliated; or a series of botanical investigations will be issued for a time by the botanical department of an experiment station, and then suddenly change to the botanical department of the technical museum in the same town, making it uncertain whether both series of publications should be retained on the list or one substituted for the other. There are certain anomalies, moreover, such as the issuing of a bulletin in the island of Jersey with a French title but the contents uniformly in English. Established journals change their names, or the spelling of important words, as in the German, and new periodicals are being added constantly. These things add to the difficulties of preparing a list for publication.

It is recognized that a set of abbreviations could hardly be made which would meet with universal approval or not be open to just criticism. The chief claim which can be made for this list is that the abbreviations are consistent in the main, as applied to different periodicals, and are used consistently in the Record. The list in its present form represents to some extent a revision of the abbreviations which have been in use in the past, some changes having been made now which in the absence of any published key did not seem wise heretofore.

To aid in making up abbreviations for new periodicals and to preserve consistency, a list of the abbreviations used for the principal words which occur commonly throughout the list has been added.
