

ly noticeable in recent years. British interests are vested in a number of important railways including the following:—Peking-Hankow, Peking-Mukden, Tientsin-Pukow, Peking-Suiyuan, Shanghai-Hangchow-Ningpo, Canton-Hankow, Canton-Kowloon, Nanking-Canton connecting with the Hankow line, Pu-Hsin, etc. Since the employment of Mr. Hammond, British expert adviser, in May 1935, the construction of the Szechuan Railway has been reported as under contemplation. It is also reported that two-thirds of the proceeds from the Boxer Indemnity for the period 1922-1946, totalling £11 million, are to be applied to railway construction in China. Building and other materials to the value of £3,866,000 and funds to the total of £2.8 million are reported to have been already turned over for this purpose.

French interests are in the Tengyueh-Bhamo, the Tientsin-Pukow, Cheng-Tai (Shansi) and the Lung-Hai Railway. More recently French financiers, it is reported, have concluded a contract for the building of the Cheng-Yueh Railway to connect Chungking, the capital of Szechuan province, to Chengtu of the same province. Of the cost of construction estimated at St.$54.5 million the French side is to furnish St.$34.5 million.

Japanese interests are confined to a comparatively few railway lines, namely, the Peking-Hankow, Peking-Suiyuan, Chiaochow-Tsinan, and Nan-Shan Railways, the loans to these lines totalling only about St.$64 million. Japan also holds a contract for the construction of the Tientsin-Shihchiachuang Railway, 208 kilometers, at the estimated cost of St.$20 million.

Belgium and Holland also hold not unimportant interests in Chinese railways. The former is reported to have contracted in 1936 for a loan of 450 million francs for the extension of the Lung-Hai Railway. The United States also holds a considerable amount of railway loans, although there has of late been little activities on her part. More striking are the activities of German capital in recent years. In 1936 a German industrial group concluded a contract for St.$30 million loan for the Changsha-Kweiyang Railway. Building materials have also been furnished by Germany to the value of St.$10 million to speed up work on the new railway between Nanchang, in Kiangsi province, and Pinghsiang, in the same province. A German loan of St.$10 million was also contracted for in 1935 for the reconstruction of the railway bridge of the Peking-Hankow Railway across the Yellow River.

Financial Institutions

The first Japanese bank to enter the field was the Yokohama Specie Bank. It was followed by the Bank of Taiwan (Formosa), a semi-official institution chiefly charged with financial activities in Central and South China and further down to the South Seas. More recently the Bank of Chosen (Korea), the central issue bank for the peninsular colony and also active in Manchuria, has been steadily extending operations in the Yangtze region. The Japanese banks prior to July, 1937, were 11 in number, their localities extending from Tientsin, Tsinan, Shanghai, and Hankow.

FOREIGN TRADE

Since the Nanking treaty of 1842 China has been an open international market and a scene of keen international competition. China's recovery in 1929 of her customs autonomy led to a series of protectionist measures, with visible effects upon her foreign trade. Nevertheless, China has remained an attractive field for international traders. Competition is chiefly among the four countries of the United States, Japan, Germany, and Britain, these countries, combined, accounting for 60% of China's total imports.

Britain, thanks to her special position, led the list of importers for many years until she was first outstripped by Japan and next by the United States. The last named country, with the expansion of her heavy industries and her export capacity in general, climbed to the premier position in 1931 and has remained there since, although recessions have been in evidence more recently. Japan took the leading position in 1930, only to suffer drastic shifts in consequence of the virulent boycott movement that developed in the year following. Her position, however, had been steadily improving up to the military outbreak. Germany has been making striking gains in recent years, her position in 1937 approximating that of Japan. Britain's retrogression was in part due to the competition from Japan and also in part to the growth and development of cotton mills in China, resulting in her decreasing dependence on external supplies. This trend is expected to grow in the consumers' market for light industrial productions.

Trade with Japan

Japan's trade with China for 1937 resulted in exports in the amount of St.$156 million and imports to St.$94 million, representing approximately 5.6% and 3.8%, respectively, of the total exports and imports. In the fields of both exports and imports Japan proper accounted for 80 to 90% of the totals, Chosen (Korea) and Taiwan (Formosa) accounting for only the balance of 10 to 20%. Japan's trade with China began to follow a downward course after the year 1926, this trend being accelerated after 1929 until the bottom was touched in imports in 1937, with a total of St.$94 million, and in exports in 1934, with a total of St.$132 million. These poor showings were due mainly to the deteriorated economic conditions in the interior of China and to the intense anti-Japanese boycott carried on at Shanghai and elsewhere. The recovery of the export trade between 1934 and 1936 was explained by Japan's low exchange and by her low cost of production, which enabled her to surmount the prohibitive tariff wall and the boycott movement still lingering in the field.

A classification of Japan's trade with China by geographic divisions shows that in both exports and imports Central China, embracing the Yangtze basin as its center, accounted for more or less than 50% of the total, a situation which will no doubt be restored upon the return of peace. Next in importance in point of value was North China whose position had specially improved with the infiltration of Japanese political and other influences after the Manchurian incident of 1931. North China's share of Japanese export trade moved up from 30.4% of the total in 1929 to 36% in 1931, and further to 45.6% in 1937. Likewise, North China's imports from Japan advanced from 38.8% of the total in 1929 to 45.9% in 1931, and to 51.8% in 1937. Compared with those two parts of China, South China was far less important, accounting for only 1.1% of the total exports and 11.3% of the total imports. It should be noted, however, that the trade with South China is in no small part relayed through the port of Hongkong. Japan's trade with that port in 1937 resulted in exports and imports respectively to the amounts of ¥49.1 million and ¥5.3 million.

An analysis of Japan's trade with China shows that the bulk of exports consists in manufactures, while the imports from China are practically confined to raw materials required for manufacturing and foodstuff products. The exports to China, although extensive in variety, consist of items of lesser values. The aggregate total of those items which are credited with annual values above ¥900,000 make up only 53.2% of the total value of export. On the other hand, the import items each with an yearly value of above ¥1.3 million, combined, represent 79.3% of the total import figure, the tendency being in the concentration of trade in fewer varieties.

Amongst the exports to China the machinery group is the most important, although its value represented only 14% of Japan's total exports in 1937. The bulk of the machinery exported to China consists in cotton spinning and weaving equipment, indicating the growth of the same branch of industry in China. But since the exports of spinning and weaving machinery are chiefly for the Japanese managed mills in China, Japan's bid for the free machinery market there has been chiefly in the lines of electrical and other apparatus, representing comparatively modest values. China's total imports of machinery for 1936 amounted to St.$59,955,000, of which Japan's share was 28.1%, ranking first above Britain, Germany and the United States. However, taking the imports of machinery other than spinning and weaving equipment, China's total imports for the same year amounted to St.$46,008,000, of which Japan accounted for only 12.0%, ranking below Britain, Germany and the United States. As importer of iron and steel products from Japan, China, is important after Manchoukuo, although the imports from Japan represented only 17.8% of the total imports for China, Japan's position in this particular line being third after Germany and Britain. The most important item after iron and steel products is cotton goods, although China as consumer of Japanese cotton goods is far less important than she used to be formerly, this change being due to the development of the industry in China. However, as exporter of cotton goods to China, Japan still occupies the leading position among all countries. Of China's total takings in these lines Japan accounts for 70.2%. In printing and other varieties of paper China and Manchoukuo offer important markets for Japanese produce. Japan has been meeting with competition from Germany, Sweden and Canada. In marine products China is the most important market for Japanese goods, which practically monopolize the market there.

Among the imports from China raw cotton is the most important. Japan's demand has steadily grown in the past few years with the result that she is today the best customer for Chinese cotton. However, Japan's imports of cotton from China still amount to only about 2.7% of the total purchase. It will be many years yet before China as supplier of cotton to Japan will replace any of the other export countries like Egypt, India and the United States. In iron ore China supplies 29% of Japan's imports. To put the whole trade situation in a nutshell, from the standpoint of China, Japan is her best customer for raw cotton and iron-ore. As exporter to Japan, China occupies an exclusive position with regard to hides, leather, bran, beef, animals' hairs and bristle. Japan is also no unimportant market for Chinese hemp. From the Japanese standpoint, the exports to China include not a few items accounting for values up to 20 and 30% of their respective export totals. As high percentages are also seen in imports from China with respect to their respective totals. The mutual dependence of the two countries is thus well indicated.

Shipping

As pioneer in China waters, Great Britain naturally takes the leading position in the shipping business of China. Japan's position, second only to that of Great Britain, roughly dates only from 1900.

By the Chefoo Treaty of 1876 concluded between Britain and China both coastwise and inland navigation became open to all foreign shipping. By the Sino-British Treaty of 1902 British (and therefore all foreign) steamship owners acquired the right to lease warehouses and jetties on the banks of all waterways.

However, the countries actually engaged in internal navigation are 15 in number; namely, Belgium, Denmark, France, Japan, Italy, Mexico, Holland, Norway, Peru, Portugal, Spain, and Switzerland. Of these countries, the following 9 countries represent the major shipping interest: Britain, Japan, the United States, Norway, Holland, Denmark, Portugal, France, Italy.

In the number and tonnage of vessels Britain predominates the shipping business of China. The vessels entered and cleared from Chinese ports both in domestic and in foreign trade in the year 1936 were 228,818, in number, with a total of 145,019,018 gross tons. Of these numbers the vessels under the British flag were 48,154 in number, 57,345,515 gross tons, while those under the Japanese flag were 17,911 in number, 24,913,576 gross tons. Norway came third with a total of 2,160 vessels, 4,547,527 gross tons, with the United States as her close rival with 3,973 vessels, 3,771,479 gross tons.

Japan's shipping activities in China waters began to grow about the year 1900, this trend continuing as a whole until 1930, when a serious set-back was suffered in consequence of the anti-

Japanese boycott movement. For some years Japan had maintained a position second only to prior to the military outbreak in July, 1937, Britain.

Airways

The importance of air service not only for commercial but also for military purposes began to be emphasized in China after the Manchurian incident of 1931 and the subsequent hostilities at Shanghai in the following year. "Aviation for the salvation of the country" was adopted as a slogan for the movement set afoot then. But with her heavy industries still in a state of infancy, China has been wholly dependent on other countries for the development of airways. In commercial aviation the United States and Germany have been the heaviest suppliers, while in military aviation the influences of the United States, Britain and Italy have been predominant.

Japan, despite her geographical advantage, had up to the military outbreak of 1937 been practically shut out of China as far as aviation was concerned. The only enterprise was seen in the Hui Tung Kung Ssu which was formed as a joint undertaking of Japanese and Chinese capital with the object of opening regular air service between North China and Japan. The capital of St.$5 million was equally taken up by the two countries, China chiefly offering property assets and Japan aircraft and technical staff. The company inaugurated its service by regular flights between Peking, Chengte (Jehol), Kalgan, Chinchow and Dairen. The service between Japan and North China air ports was planned for the second stage of development when the hostilities broke out in North China to bring about wholesale changes in the situation.

Cotton Spinning and Weaving

as the first line of modern industry on which she entered. Through the initial stage of development Britain maintained a position of pre-eminence, which, however, was later yielded to the native and Japanese interests. The comparative positions of Britain, China and Japan prior to the hostilities were as follows.

The total Japanese spindles replaced in operation in North China by April 1938 was 400,000, which was distributed as follows: Tientsin 230,000, Tsinan 63,000, Shichichuang 29,800, and approximately 57,000 in Shansi province. In the latter province the Shanghai Cotton Spinning Company has taken over the management of three native establishments with a total of 24,500 spindles, together with a weaving mill with 300 units of machinery.

For the rehabilitation of the Japanese owned mills at Tsingtao, which were all destroyed by the Chinese soldiers, it is proposed to make under the first plan the following installations: spindles 355,000, mules 32,000 and looms 7,100. These numbers have been allotted among 5 companies.

In Shanghai arrangements have been made to transfer the native owned mills under the management of the Japanese Trade Association. The units of equipment involved in these deals are as follows: spindles 540,400, mules 42,198 and looms 4,887.

For the development of cotton resources in North China a new enterprise is to be launched in the form of the North China Cotton Company chiefly through the investment of the Hsing

Chung Kung Ssu and three other Japanese companies, with a capital of ¥8 million. The company will be engaged in extensive lines including warehousing, cotton purchase and sale, improvement of species, etc.

Tobacco Manufacturing

The tobacco manufacturing business in China was first taken up by the British-American Tobacco Company, to be followed by a number of native factories, the total number in the field for 1936 being given at 45. Except, for the Nanyang Bros. Tobacco Company, the native enterprises are all on a modest scale, the British and American interests being predominant. The British and American investments and their loans to affiliated enterprises for 1936 were returned at $28,320,538. Japanese activities in this field have in the past been solely represented by the Toa Tobacco Company, which has just entered the North China market.

Coal Mining

Coal is the most important among the mineral products of China, the total output for 1933 reaching 19.2 million tons and for 1934 exceeding 20.6 million tons. Taking individual mines, the majority are being operated on a small scale, those credited in 1932 with annual outputs above 100,000 tons being only 33 in number. These mines, with an aggregate total output of over 11.5 million tons, accounted for 62% of the total for the year in question. Of these mines, furthermore, 7 are under the control of foreign capital, their aggregate output making up 39.3% of China's total output. Among the foreign interests vested in coal mining those of Britain are predominant, the Japanese coming second in importance in point of amount. Japan's investment, however, amounts only to one-sixth of the British figure. Among the mines under the joint enterprise of native and foreign capital the Kailan Mining is the leader with an annual output estimated between 4 and 5 million tons and second is the Chung Foo, an Anglo-American enterprise, with an yearly output of approximately 1.1 million tons.

Among the Sino-Japanese enterprises the Lu Tai Mining Company is the most important, accounting annually for between 700,000 and 800,000 tons. Japanese capital is also invested in the Po Tung and Hsu Hua Companies, although their production is hardly important. It is understood that Japanese interests are also affiliated with the Lincheng, Taili, and Cheng-feng Coal Mining Companies, in Hopei province, although no details are obtainable.

Under the first period of the current Japanese plan in the regions of North China the following objectives are to be achieved: (1) Urgent development of Tatung coal to the extent of some 700,000 tons per year, with the object of securing the supply of boiler coal; (2) Doubling the transport capacity of the Peking-Suiyuan Railway for the transportation of coal from Tatung; (3) Development of the Kailuan coal mine for coking purpose at Japanese foundries; (4) 20 to 30% increase of output at the coal mines along the Peking-Hankow Railway such as Chingsing, Lincheng, Liuhokou, etc.; (5) Transference and development of the Shichingshan Iron Works for local consumption of coking coal; (6) Rehabilitation of coal mines in Shantung province.

Iron Ore Enterprises

The Japanese interests in this field of metallurgical industry are far more extensive, Japan in fact being the best and almost exclusive market for China's iron ore. It is believed that in this particular field there are scarcely any Chinese enterprise of importance but is greater or less affiliated with Japanese capital.

China's total reserves of iron ore are estimated by the geological section of the Industry Ministry at 323 million tons, of which a major proportion is found in North China, the Yangtze basin being credited with only 34.6% of the total. The total output for 1934 amounted to 1,360,000 tons, of which the major mines accounted for 950,000 tons and the small scale enterprises for 410,000 tons, the latter being for the most part located in the Yangtze region.

The most important among the enterprises in which Japanese capital is interested is the Lu Tai Mining Company, which operates the Kinling mine in Shantung province, accounting for 80% of the total production in North China. In the Yangtze region the Tayeh, Tangtu, and Fanchang mines are under contract to supply ores to Japanese foundries. The Hsiangpishan mine in Hupeh province holds the contract to supply 150,000 tons of ore to Japan each year. The Lungyen mine in Chahar is to be operated under the joint enterprise of Sino-Japanese capital.

The Chinese managed foundries are only two, namely, the Liuhokou and the Paochin Iron Works with rated output capacities of 100 and 25 tons per day respectively.

Plans are being worked out by Japanese stationed in North China with a view to development of resources in Chahar, Hopei, Shansi, and Shantung provinces, although it will be some time before adequate equipment is ready for operation. The first steps will be seen in the restoration of the Lungyen mine and the Shichingshan iron works, the supply of ore to Japan being the first objective. The above iron foundry will be placed under the management of the Japan Iron Manufacturing Company, the estimated output being 80,000 metric tons per year.

For the development of iron resources in Central China the Hua Chung Iron Company was formed in April 1938, with a capital of ¥10 million as a joint undertaking of the Hsing Chung Kung Ssu which is a subsidiary of the South Manchuria Railway Company, Japan Steel Tube Company, Asano Iron Works, Nakayama Steel Works, Ogura Steel Works, Chujitsu Jitsugyo Koshi. The Company is to engage in development of iron reserves in Anhwei and Kiangsu provinces along the Yangtze river.

Power

The Japanese power enterprises in North China are chiefly in the hands of the Hsing Chung Kung Ssu. The existing power plants are in Tientsin, Peking and Tungchow with output capacities of 30,000, 32,000 and 8,000 k.w. respectively. Their aggregate capacity is to be raised to 100,000 to 150,000 k.w. over a period of 5 years. A number of lesser enterprises in East Hopei have been placed under the control of a new Sino-Japanese company. In the autonomous Mongolian area along the Peking-Suiyuan Railway line a new company is to be created to take over the power and current establishments at Kalgan, Tatung, Suiyuan and Paotou.

Salt

As a subsidiary of the North China Development Company a new salt manufacturing corporation is to be formed with a capital of ¥10 million. The Japanese companies to share in the enterprise are the Oriental Development, Asahi Glass, Tokuyama Soda, Toyo Soda, Dai Nippon Salt Industry, etc. For the first period of the program an yearly output of 1 million metric tons is aimed at.

JAPAN'S ECONOMIC PROGRAMS IN NORTH AND CENTRAL CHINA

China Economic Board

Keenly alive to the urgent need of the economic development of China, especially of the area under Japanese military occupation, Japan has been giving serious consideration on the subject.

A wool manufacturers' association has been formed at Kalgan with a capital of ¥8 million, with 8 Japanese companies participating. This company is charged with the exclusive purchase of wool in the autonomous Mongolian area as well as with the operation of the formerly state managed woolen mills at Peking and Suiyuan. It also plans to establish a plant at Tientsin for the manufacture of cloth by mixed use of the local and Australian wool.

The Kanegafuchi Spinning Company, beside establishing a carding plant at Kalgan, has taken over the management of the semi-officially managed woolen mill at Taiyuan. The Nippon Woolen Textile is also entering the North China field with new projects.

The Autonomous Mongolian Government has set up a plan for an increase of wool production, the main points being as follows: 20 to 30% increase per year of sheep and goats, at present numbering 5.3 million heads, by prohibition of slaughtering female and infant animals, and restriction of export of male animals; import of superior foreign species such as Corriedales; establishment of woolen mills in the Peking-Tientsin area; manufacture for export of camel's hair and cashmere.

The first step in the same direction was seen in the official plan to set up in Japan a central organ vested with broad powers to deal with all affairs relating to China, particularly in the field of economy. This plan, however, has not yet materialized, although it is tentatively known as the China Economic Board; and it will in all probability be developed along the same lines as the Manchuria General Affairs Board.

In order to collaborate with this proposed organ, it is also contemplated to create a Sino-Japanese economic council in Peking. According to the general plan so far revealed, this body of expert councillors is to develop economic plans for the so-called development companies and their affiliated enterprises, in collaboration with the authorities of the Provisional Government of Peking. But because of a number of considerations involved, these plans are still on the tapis.

Official Plans for Economic Revival and Development

The economic policy of the new Governments of Peking and Nanking has been revealed along the following lines:

For Agricultural Revisal.—A reform of internal taxes to relieve the burden on the farmers, development of the existing co-operatives, establishment of scientific agricultural stations to give direction to the end of developing waste land and to cotton cultivation.

For Industrial Development.—The import of foreign capital under the joint control of China and Japan, a control and direction of industries important from defense and other points of view, creation of competent organizations to be charged with the operation of basic lines such as communications, transportation, port administration, power, iron manufacture, coal mining, salt manufacture, a logical integration of existing foreign industrial interests and enterprises.

North China and Central China Development Companies

These companies have been established with Baron Seinosuke Goh, as Chairman of the organizing committee. The shares of the new companies, 350,000 for the North China, and 100,000 for the Central China Development Company, were offered for public subscription during July 3-5, 1938. The result was that the shares were over-subscribed by more than three times, indicating the general interest taken in the economic development of China.

North China Development Company.—The company is organized under the law of Japan. Its capital stock is ¥350 million, half of which is provided by the Japanese Government and the balance by public subscription, preference being given to the families of soldiers, alive or dead. Of the share borne by the Government approximately ¥150 million was offered in the form of property assets. The private shareholders are guaranteed by the Government a dividend of 6% per annum for a period of 9 years. The company has the privilege of issuing debenture bonds to the extent of 5 times as much as the paid up capital.

The company is to invest in, or provide capital for, the following lines: (1) major systems of transportation and port works; (2) major communications; (3) power generation and current distribution; (4) major mining enterprises; (5) salt manufacture and industries based on salt; (6) other lines in which coordinated development and management are required for the promotion of an economic development movement in North China.

Central China Development Company.—The company is organized and being developed along the same lines as its sister organization above mentioned. However, this company, though formed under the law of Japan, is to have its head office in Shanghai instead of Tokyo. The capital is ¥100 million which is equally shared by the Japanese Government and private shareholders. Although originally created through Japanese investments, both Manchoukuo and Chinese interests are to be offered the opportunity to participate in the enterprise, a policy not envisaged in the case of the North China Company. It may be inferred that the Central China enterprise is motivated less by political considerations.

North China Development Plan

The plan so far decided on for the economic development of North China falls in two parts. The first will be directed chiefly to the end of complementing the current five year industrial expansion plans of both Japan and Manchoukuo, and the second, to the economic development of North China resources on an independent account.

The whole plan may be outlined as follows: (1) the development of Tatung and Kailuan coal mines over a period of 4 years, to secure sources for the development of heavy industries in Japan and Manchoukuo; (2) improvement and development of North China railways and port facilities; (3) development of Changlu salt to provide an adequate supply for soda, rayon and glass manufacture in Japan; (4) agricultural developments by means of distribution of seeds, boring of wells for irrigation, scientific direction for the improvement of species, reorganization of cooperatives, and provision of credit facilities through the cooperatives; (5) under the second part of the plan, beginning in the year 1941, the development of mineral production, cotton, wool, forestry as well as cotton spinning and weaving, soda manufacture, etc.; (6) the second section of

NEW COMMERCIAL POLICY IN NORTH AND CENTRAL CHINA

One of the questions to which the Provisional Government of the Republic of China gave its earliest attention was the revision of the customs tariff. This procedure was urgently required for a twofold reason. In the first place, the tariff that had been in force under the regime of the Nationalist Government had been largely motivated by political considerations of which anti-Japanism was the most conspicuous feature. In some respects the schedule in force virtually amounted to a trade prohibition against Japan. Secondly, the prolonged undeclared war in China gave to North China a new position as an important factor in the so-called Yen bloc. With a new economic structure established on the continent of Asia, Japan was required to consider her balance of international payments not from her own individual standpoint alone but from that of the unit into which Japan, Manchoukuo and North China had been combined. Consequently, emphasis was laid on the need of industrial development and export activity in North China. The newly laid commercial policy of North and Central China called for a revision of the customs tariff with the least delay.

1st Customs Change.—After about a month's study on the subject, the Peking authorities announced on January 21, 1938, a provisionally revised tariff which went into effect the next day. The main principles embodied in the new system were explained to be as follows:

- (1) Manchoukuo and the Kwantung Leased Territory shall be treated as foreign countries; that is to say, (A) Duties shall be imposed on exports to Manchoukuo and the Kwantung Leased Territory; (B) Duties shall be levied on imports from the above mentioned countries.
- (2) Of the articles mentioned in the export and import customs tariff hitherto in force the rates will be changed on what are considered to be the most important for the relief of the general population and also for the stabilization of their life.
- (3) The surtax on income shall be abolished; but a levy of 5 per cent. shall be made on the taxable amount for the benefit of the war devastated area.

The above change covered 80 articles of major importance. The import duties were generally reduced by half on those of daily the plan to be worked chiefly with a view to complementing the second and third industrial expansion plans of Japan and Manchoukuo.

necessity such as cotton goods, sugar, marine products, porcelain ware, printing and wrapping papers. A one-third cut was made in the rates on rubber goods and rayon yarn. With regard to materials required for reconstructive undertakings the duties were abolished on rock drilling and crushing machinery and those on Portland cement, fertilizer and timber were reduced by 50 per cent.

In the field of export, the duties were temporarily abolished on cotton, iron ore, old iron, scrap iron, while the rates were cut by 50 to 65 per cent on pigs' bristle, wool and hemp.

The new tariff was enforced in the area over which the jurisdiction of the Peking regime extended. Meanwhile, the old customs rates were being adhered to in Central China.

Transference of Shanghai Custom Administration.—With the development of the front at and around Shanghai, the need of establishing an effective control over the Shanghai Maritime Customs office was felt to an increasing extent. This was required not only from the consideration of closing the channel of custom revenue for the Chiang Kai-shek regime but also because of the urgent necessity of controlling the import of arms, ammunition and war materials in general. The Japanese Consul-General at Shanghai proposed to the Customs Administration that the customs revenue should be deposited at the Yokohama Specie Bank and the Japanese official staff should be increased. The first point of proposal proved objectionable.

This matter was then transferred to Tokyo where the British Ambassador and the Japanese Foreign Vice-Minister entered into negotiations in early March 1938. An agreement was formally reached on May 2 and 4 days later, on May 6, the Shanghai Customs Administration was turned over to the Renovation Government, which appointed its own superintendent to displace the representative of the Nationalist Government. The actual administration and direction of the Maritime Customs which had hitherto been in British hands now passed to the new Nanking authorities.

The revenue from the Maritime Customs has always been the best form of security in China. The foreign loans and indemnities secured on this basis amount to £52,438,901 in sterling, $57,722,363 in gold, and $3,353,493,016 in silver, all these outstanding obligations being completely redeemable in the year 1960. Of these amounts the foreign loans are £25,710,885 in sterling and $28,990,150 in the U. S. currency.

The main points on which the British and the Japanese Governments reached an agreement were as follows:

- (1) The revenue from the Maritime Customs shall be disposed of in the following order; first, the current expenditures and customary payments will be met from the customs receipts and then the balance will be turned to the service of foreign loans and indemnity payment. The share to be borne by the Shanghai Maritime Customs is to be determined each month on the basis of the gross receipts at all the customs offices in the country.
- (2) The Japanese loan of the year 1931 as a capital fund for the redemption of the Boxer Indemnity and Japan's share of the same indemnity payments are to be treated on the same basis with the other foreign obligations.

The most important point is that the new regime has assumed responsibility for all the loan contracts concluded by the previous regimes in legitimate ways, thus evincing its determination to respect the rights and interests of third countries in China.

Customs Stations Under the New Regime

The revenue from customs levies made up 40 to 50 per cent of the country's total income under the regime of the Nationalist Government. The new regime of China has taken over the customs stations at Chihwangtao, Tientsin, Weihaiwei, Tsingtao, Shanghai, Hangchow, Chenkiang, Wuhu, Nanking. The revenue from these sources is estimated to make up anywhere from 40 to 50 per cent of the total customs revenue of the country. The receipts at the Maritime Customs of Shanghai represented in 1937 a total equivalent to 41 per cent of the total maritime customs revenue and in 1936 as much as 45 per cent of the total.

Second Revision of the Anti-Japanese Customs Tariff.—The Renovation Government of China, in collaboration with the Provisional Government authorities of Peking, instituted a new customs tariff as effective from June 1, 1938, throughout North and Central China. Needless to say, the primary object of the second revision of the tariff was the adjustment of anti-Japanese features. The outstanding points in the new schedule are as follows:—

- (1) The import duties are based upon those in force at the year 1931 when China recovered its customs autonomy, only slight changes being made therein. For the economic relief of the population in the war devastated areas the provisional rates introduced by the Peking authorities are adopted with regard to 20 articles of daily necessity.

(2) The export duties are fixed at the same rates as those adopted by the Peking authorities on January 22, 1938. The interport rates followed those adopted at Shanghai in November 1937.

The adoption of the rates enforced in 1931 clearly indicates that the second tariff revision was only a step toward a further and more complete revision of the tariff. The tariff adopted in 1931 was based on a commercial policy against Japan. In fact, it was since the adoption of these discriminate rates that Japan, as the leading exporter to China among all countries, had to yield her position to the United States of America.

Policy as Seen in the New Rates.—The new import rates in comparison with the preceding schedule are shown below with regard to leading articles.

Revised Import Tariff (%)

	New Rates	Old Rates
Cotton cloth (grey)	10	25
Rayon yarn	30	60
Rayon goods	35	80
Wool knitting material	25	70
Sugar	20	220
Fish and shell-fish	12.5	20
Tinned food-stuffs	15	30
Wheat flour	Free	20
Agricultural machinery	Free	5
Iron	10	15

In addition to flour and agricultural machinery, the list of free admission temporarily includes the following:—

- (1) Rock drilling machinery, coal and iron mining machinery, cranes, conveying vehicles, accessories and parts of mining machinery; (2) blast furnaces, rotary kilns, open hearth furnaces, reverberatory furnaces, rolling mills, ore-dressing and refining machinery, accessories and parts; (3) seeds for cultivation; (4) serum vaccine.

It will be seen that the new tariff aims at the revival of agricultural activity and fostering of the heavy industrial development by Japanese capital. Japan's sugar industry, which had been suspended in China under the previous system, was given a chance to revive.

The Tariff Revision and Third Countries.—The revision of the customs tariff called forth no protest on the part of third countries interested in trade with China, even expressions of approval having been heard in some parts of the world. It is obvious that Japan has reason to expect a further revision of the current schedule.

In the first place, the situation is made complicated because of the enforcement of the new tariff side by side with the schedule followed by the Nationalist Government. But this situation is expected to change with the development of new political and economic conditions consequent on the progress of the war. With the fall of Canton on October 21, and of Hankow on October 25, 1938, the new regime has placed under its control the best part of the custom maritime zone, making its complete unification a matter of simplicity.

Great misgivings are evidently seen on the part of third countries with regard to the policy by which the new system may be directed. Whereas the revision of the customs tariff made it clear that there would be no discrimination against third countries as far as the new system goes, there seems to persist vaguely apprehensive thoughts as to the possibility of some political factors being projected into the situation. However, the prevailing opinion in Japan is that excepting certain lines calling for special protection by legal procedure, Japan will be in a good enough position to compete with any countries in China on an equal basis.

At any rate it should be noted that there has been considerable change in the comparative positions of countries with regard to their trade with China since the outbreak of the hostilities. This change, however, is not to be attributed to the political or to the military situation of the country only. For instance, one great handicap now imposed on the external trade is the monetary policy followed by the new regime. The unfavourable and non-cooperative attitude maintained by European and American banks toward the new currency is providing to an increasing extent an obstacle in the way of external trade development, because the Chinese banks in the area under the jurisdiction of the new regime have ceased to deal in foreign exchange transactions.

THE CURRENCY STABILIZATION OF NORTH CHINA

The stabilization of currency was one of the gigantic tasks North China had to undertake soon after the new Peking regime had been ushered in. The process of currency stabilization is still in progress: the goal is almost within sight but still remains to be attained. The problem that North China faces is more complicated and difficult than what the young Empire of Manchuria has experienced, because of the peculiar conditions under which the country is called upon to handle the situation practically upon its own account. Japan which might have extended more substantial and effective aid has been hampered under the war time conditions. Japan has kept her hands full because of her own pressing need of expanding productive capacity within the country, her emergency economic and commercial policy to control the balance of international payments despite the heavy import of war materials, and because of a series of drastic measures that had to be enforced against the possibility of infla-tionist conditions. In these circumstances, North China has been tackling her own financial problem with but limited support from outside, and her problem is made more difficult because of the many political and international factors that have to be taken into consideration.

Conditions Before the War

Tientsin has always been the economic center of North China. Tientsin's external trade in 1936 amounted to St.$190 million and ranked second after Shanghai whose trade in the same year was St.$917 million. Tientsin has in the past accounted for 60 per cent of North China's total external trade.

Chinese Banks.—The banking institutions of Tientsin were for the most part controlled by financial interests in Shanghai. There were 28 native banks of which only 10 represented local financial interests, the others being affiliated with banks in the south. Of the aggregate paid up capital of St.$234 million the former group accounted for only St.$15 million. There were also 4 other banks affiliated with North China interests, but their combined capital was hardly above St.$40 million.

The great bulk of the currency circulated in North China had been issued by the three state-managed institutions, namely, the Central Bank, the Bank of China, and the Bank of Communications. The amounts of notes issued by these banks as on July 10, 1937, were in that order St.$32,343,000, St.$115,161,000 and St.$55,841,000. The Hopei Bank, a semi-official organ for the province of Hopei, had also issued its own notes to the amount of St.$50 million. In addition, the East Hopei Bank, which had been the financial organ for the East Hopei Autonomous Government while it was in existence, had been converted into a commercial institution after the above local regime had been fused with the Provisional Government at Peking. This bank, now transferred from Tangshan to Tientsin, has its own notes in circulation to the amount of St.$6 million.

These banking institutions had operated mostly as brokers and organs for tapping the local capital resources. The surplus capital collected at Tientsin was transferred to Shanghai and invested in real estate, bonds and otherwise, thus making material contributions to the combine of the Nationalist regime and the Chekiang financial clique. In July 1937, the month immediately preceding the China war, the total deposits at the native banks of Tientsin amounted to St.$122 million and the loans and advances to St.$68 million, the balance of St.$50 million being held in Shanghai to the credit account of the Tientsin banks.

Foreign Banks at Tientsin

The foreign banks in Tientsin had always taken an unique position as actual leaders in the external trade operations of North China. The leading parts had been taken by the American, British and Japanese institutions. Japan's banking activity in China dates from the year 1899 when the Yokohama Specie Bank opened its branch at Tientsin. Since more than half the total trade of Tientsin was with Japan, the Yokohama Specie Bank had always played an important part in the exchange market.

Conditions Immediately After the Military Outbreak

Old Yuan Currency in Circulation.—The circulation of old Yuan currency just prior to the outbreak of the war, though not known exactly, was roughly estimated to be between St.$340 and 350 million, which was distributed as follows—St.$240 to 250 million in the Peking-Tientsin area and Hopei Province, St.$60 to 70 million in Shantung Province, and St.$30 million in Shanai Province. The military outbreak was followed by a heavy exodus of capital from Tientsin to Shanghai. There also set in a strong movement to hoard currency in general. In addition, the moratorium partially enforced by the banks led to a sharp shrinkage of commercial activity. In these circumstances, the circulation of currency contracted to a striking extent, though the exact data are still unobtainable. It is therefore believed in some quarters that the circulation of the old Yuan notes after the military outbreak was only around St.$150 million, instead of St.$300 to 350 million as was generally thought.

The Circulation of Japanese Gold Notes.—A contrasting situation was seen with regard to the Japanese gold yen notes which began to circulate to an increasing extent in North China, though the exact amount in circulation in 1938 is a matter of general conjecture. The circulation of these notes prior to the military outbreak was estimated around ¥4 million only, ¥3 million in the Bank of Chosen (Korea) notes and ¥1 million in the Bank of Japan notes. This circulation has been substantially inflated since the military outbreak chiefly in the form of the Bank of Chosen currency. The Bank of Japan notes and the Manchuria Central Bank notes have also increased in volume to a considerable extent.

Foreign Exchange

Yuan currency had externally maintained its stability at the sterling, gold dollar and yen exchange rates of 1s. 2½d., U. S.$30, and ¥103, respectively, but began to fall with the collapse of the Shanghai market. In early March 1938 the exchange rate was as low as 1s. 1¼ d. At mid-February the Tientsin branch of the Bank of China, the only exchange bank in North China, suspended all transactions in foreign exchange. Thus the old Yuan currency in North China, technically speaking, severed all its relationship with foreign currency.

The Federal Reserve Bank of China

When a monetary war was decided upon against the Chiang Kai-shek regime a plan was developed for the establishment of a central banking institution for North China. On February 11, 1938, an organizing meeting took place at Peking and approved the plan of establishing the Federal Reserve Bank of China, along the following lines:

Capital St.$50 million to be equally shared by the Government, on one side, and Chinese Banks, on the other, the initial capital payment being St.$25 million. The capital payment on the part of Chinese banks, in silver in each instance, was allotted as follows: Bank of China St.$4.5 million, Bank of Communications St.$3.5 million, East Hopei Bank St.$0.5 million, and 4 other Hopei banks each St.$0.8 million.

An outstanding feature of the proposed bank was that its official staff was to be composed of all Chinese, from President down to clerks, the Japanese side being represented only by a supreme advisor.

Relationship with Japan.—The first capital payment of St.$12.5 million on the part of the Provisional Government, it was decided, should be provided in the form of an advance by 3 Japanese banks, namely, the Industrial Bank, the Bank of Chosen and the Yokohama Specie Bank. These banks each undertook ¥3 million and, in addition, the amount of ¥3.5 million in silver was provided by the Bank of Chosen. With the above capital payment of ¥9 million silver holdings of about ¥2 million and ¥3 million were taken over from the Yokohama Specie Bank and the Central Bank of Manchou respectively, while the remainder of ¥4 million was set up as a fund for the current exchange transactions with Japan.

The Foundation of the Bank.—The silver reserves held by the Chinese banks in North China aggregated about St.$60 million. Following the monetary reform of 1936 the Commission on Reserve against Currency Issuance set up its branch at Tientsin and it was arranged that the silver reserves of the banks should be held in each case in the name of this local division of the Commission. On February 7, 1938, however, the Provisional Government appointed a commission for the custody of silver in the Peking-Tientsin area and placed all the silver holdings under its control.

The Federal Reserve Bank was planned to operate along the following lines:—currency issue; discount of notes and securities issued or guaranteed by the Government; discount of commercial paper; discount and advances against security, claims and mortgage; advances on current accounts; purchase of gold, silver and foreign currency; custody of gold, silver and other valuables; ordinary deposits; exchange.

Against the issuance of notes the Bank is to hold reserves in the form of gold, silver, foreign currency, or certificates of deposits in foreign currency to the extent of not less than 40 per cent. of the issue amount, and, in addition, reserves in the form of state bonds, government securities, certified or guaranteed notes to the extent of not more than 60 per cent. of the issue amount.

The Federal Reserve Bank in Business

Chaotic conditions had prevailed in the market of North China before the Federal Reserve Bank entered the field. The paper currencies in circulation were more than 30 in kinds. The situation had even worsened after the military outbreak. Banks in Shantung and Shansi provinces, operating as organs for the local warlords, had closed their doors with the flight of military chieftains. The Peking branch of the Central Bank of China had become inoperative because of the flight of its directors. Under these circumstances, the financial conditions of some banks were anything but sound, and their currency notes should have been assessed on their individual credit basis. However, "in accordance with the principle of preventing any violent change in the economic life of the country," all bank notes were decided to be given an equal treatment as a temporary measure. And all these notes were fixed at par with the gold Yen note. The exchange of the Japanese currency, however, for some time prevailed below par, the local market quotation being St.$50 to 96 for ¥100. The opening of the Federal Reserve Bank set for March 1, 1938 was postponed for 10 days. On March 8 the exchange rate of the Yen note recovered its parity with the Yuan. On March 10 the Bank was opened to business.

Displacement of Old Yuan Notes

The first steps toward the reform of the monetary system were seen in two legal measures taken for the displacement of old notes and for the prevention of any move likely to cause disturbance to the economic life of the country. The plan for the former purpose was in main as follows:

(1) The Federal Reserve Bank notes shall be the national currency, all payments being made in the same money, although the circulation of the old notes will be recognized temporarily; (2) The Tientsin, Tsingtao, Shantung notes issued by both the Bank of China and the Bank of Communications, and the notes issued by both the Hopei and the East Hopei Bank shall be permitted to circulate for a period of one year, their exchange being temporarily at par with the national currency; (3) The "southern" notes issued by the Central Bank of China, the Bank of China and the Bank of Communications shall be permitted to circulate for a period of 3 months, their exchange value being temporarily at par; (4) the notes other than mentioned above shall be left in circulation for a period of 3 months, special arrangements being made with the issues of certain local banks; (5) the notes mentioned under (2), (3) and (4) shall be recalled from circulation by order.

It was also arranged that the withdrawal of the old notes should be made by their respective issue banks.

For the stabilization of the money market the following rules were enforced: (1) no export of silver without official authorization; (2) no transaction in paper currency or exchange for speculative purposes; (3) no false propaganda regarding financial matters.

About this time a Japanese banking syndicate was organized with the membership of 15 banks in Japan and concluded with the Federal Reserve Bank a contract for ¥100 million credit, which was set up as an exchange fund, although there will hardly be any occasion, it is thought, to draw on this fund for some time to come.

Foreign Banks Against the New Currency.

On March 10, 1938 the foreign banks in Tientsin held a meeting and decided not to accept the new currency. Their proposal that they would accept it on the condition that the Federal Reserve Bank would sell foreign exchange had been turned down. This attitude was taken because the new bank was awake to the possibility of its sales of foreign currency leading to an influx of Yuan currency from the south to undermine the position of the new note. The refusal of the foreign banks to accept the new note had serious effects upon foreign trade, since the importer had technically no means of converting the new currency into foreign currency for remittance abroad.

In the following months the exchange market of North China became extremely complicated, although most of the developments perhaps may be regarded as phenomena under transient conditions. An outstanding instance was seen in the movement of foreign trade. While the new currency was quoted by steadily lower rates by the foreign banks which followed the movement of the Shanghai money market, the local rates being sometimes even working off below the level in the southern market. For instance, the quotations at the Tientsin market on June 14, 1938 were as low as 7/16d. and U.S.$16%. Under this condition of the market there developed a marked tendency of export exchanges concentrating in the hands of foreign banks.

Recall of Old Yuan Notes and Ban on Southern Currency

With regard to the bank notes for which a period of one year was set for circulation and those for which a period of 3 months was set, as described above, the issue banks themselves and the Federal Reserve Bank were to recall them through various channels. What were recovered by the issue banks were either to be exchanged with the new currency or transferred to the south. The Federal Reserve Bank laid down the following lines with regard to the old Yuan notes which it was to recover by its own operation.

(1) They should be presented to the issue banks in exchange for silver; (2) to be turned to the purchase of foreign currency; and (3) to the recovery of property.

As for the southern bank notes the Provisional Government issued an order prohibiting their circulation after June 11, 1938, as previously mentioned. The notes thus banned were (1) the "southern" notes of the Bank of China, that is, those other than bearing the issue marks of Tientsin, Tsingtao, Shantung, Yentai, Weihaiwei, Lih sien, Tsinan; (2) the "southern" notes of the Bank of Communications, that is, those other than bearing the marks of Tientsin, Tsingtao, Shantung, Tsinan, Yentai, Lungkow, Weihaiwei; (3) the notes of 13 other banks specified. All these notes had up to June 10, 1938 been convertible into the new national currency either at their respective issue banks or at the Federal Reserve Bank, although the amount actually presented for exchange is still unobtainable.

Adjustment of Auxiliary Notes.—On June 1 an order was issued with the object of adjusting the situation regarding bank notes in smaller denominations and other forms of auxiliary currency. The circulation of these notes is estimated to be not more than St.$30 to 40 million, but their varieties are as numerous as their issue banks. These notes are to be displaced by small denomination notes of the Federal Reserve Bank on the following principles: all bank notes of denominations less than 10 cents may remain in circulation for a period of 3 years and are changeable for the time being at par with the corresponding lesser notes of the Federal Reserve Bank; acceptance of these old small denomination notes should not be refused, provided the amount is not in excess of 100 times as much as the denomination in each case; (3) all banks shall cease to issue notes in small denominations after June 1, 1938 and shall make the recovery of the existent smaller notes as ordered by the Government.

Devaluation of Old Yuan Currency in North China

The monetary policy of the new Peking regime entered on its third phase on August 8, 1938 when the value of the so-called "northern" notes or the old Yuan notes as well as the old notes in lesser denominations circulating in North China were reduced by 10 per cent. In other words, these notes are to be exchanged with the Federal Reserve Bank notes at the rate of St.$90 for 100. The newly fixed rate of exchange is applicable to the notes of the Bank of China and the Bank of Communications and, with regard to the notes in small denominations, is also applicable to all except those of the Hopei Bank and the East Hopei Bank. The measure was intended to put an end to the circulation, as was officially stated, of "the old currencies having affiliations with the Chiang Kai-shek regime."

The main and immediate occasion for this procedure was the collapse of the external position of the Yuan note at the Shanghai market in early August, 1938. The Nationalist Government, under the pressure of increasing financial difficulties, announced that after August 8 there would be no allotment of foreign currency for any import unless specially authorized. When the circulation of the Southern currency was banned on June 11, 1938 its relationship with North China was broken off, technically speaking, but, as a matter of fact, the movement of the exchange market of Shanghai had always been followed, as before, by the foreign banks in Tientsin. In these circumstances there had developed a contradictory condition, as already mentioned, with regard to North China's external trade, the export exchanges concentrating in the hands of European and American banks. Another point to be considered was that as far as the general public of North China was concerned, there had been no change in the position of the Old Yuan currency, whether of the north or of the south, even after the circulation of Southern money had been suspended, with the result that the depreciation of Yuan currency at the Shanghai market had always an immediate effect on the commodity market of North China, forcing up the prices there.

The discount rate of 10 per cent as against the nominal discount rate of more than 40 per cent at ¥56 1/2 in Shanghai was evidently from the consideration to prevent any violent change in the economic life of the country, as officially explained, and perhaps also because of the fact that although the official discount in Shanghai was so low, the exchange rate actually current in Shanghai at the time was around ¥90 or a discount of 10 per cent, due to the inflation of Yen money.

It is also almost safe to expect this discount rate will be followed by further cuts since the Yuan currency, whose external position is now supported only by the exchange operations of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation on behalf of the British interests, is certain to follow a downward course with the continuous withdrawal of the Chinese fighting front.

It is also indicated that the Federal Reserve Bank will shortly take definite steps in two directions to the end of strengthening its external position. First, the adoption of a link system as is practised in Japan since early 1938, where the import of raw materials is controlled by linking it with the export of their manufactures. Second, the inauguration of foreign exchange transaction by setting up a new fund for which already the reserve of St.$10 million in foreign currency has been built up since it opened its business in March, 1938.
